What we propose to do, of course, is to take all these reports and then consolidate them into a report from the regional development branch. But these are the individual reports that have come to us. This is the grass roots study I made reference to. No final policy has been concluded, and I would say that the comments of the hon. members to the extent they want to make them will help in the formulation of the policy.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Chairman, I appreciate what the Provincial Treasurer has just said but, pursuing this point of order, can we have a set of them?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: A set?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, we will have a set over to your office right away.

Mr. MacDonald: Very good, because the set that was here—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Any member can have one. As a matter of fact, if they are available, may I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that we will have a set in the hands of each member as quickly as we can get them to the post office.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): Could I just speak to this? Could the Provincial Treasurer assure the House that we will not be dealing with this item tonight? I would agree with him that the department has not made policy, but I think there was a policy in having these created, and I think it is incumbent upon this House to take a look at what has been done and to regard what has been done in the light of the estimates that are now before us. Some of these reports were made three months ago. They could have been released; they could have been in the hands of members two or three months ago. And I think there is no reason why. I know the Minister is an intelligent man and I am sure he will recognize the importance of us knowing what is in these reports.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Pursuing this point of order, Mr. Chairman, could I ask the Minister, through you, if these reports have been available to the public prior to the tabling today. Could I ask the Minister if they have been available to the public prior to the tabling in the House?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, they have not. I can illustrate that by saying that—

Mr. MacDonald: Careful, careful!

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, not to my knowledge. One of the regional development conferences spoke to me two weeks ago, wanting to distribute it and I asked them to wait until we had tabled them in the House concurrent with the estimates. There may be one—I think maybe the Georgian Bay Development Council did publish theirs—but it certainly was on their own. The rest of them withheld publication until we concurred.

Mr. Young: Well, I think the member for Thunder Bay has a word.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Yes, I would like to refute what the Treasurer has just said. Before this House sat at 2.30 p.m., I got a call from the television station at the Lakehead asking me to comment on the report that was released. I said, "Well, it has not even been tabled yet," and he said, "Well, we have a copy, and we would like you to comment on it." So I think it was released in advance of its tabling in this House. Otherwise they would not have known about it and its contents. I was asked to comment on its contents before I had an opportunity to even read it.

Mr. Young: This was before it was tabled in the House, Mr. Chairman; this was my point.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Chairman, one further point. I asked the Minister a question—and I am not particularly interested in embarrassing him, although the situation, I think, has some potential embarrassment in it. Will the Minister leave regional development until the last item in consideration of the estimates so that copies which he is going to send over to us, can be perused, and we can perhaps give you some advice to guide you as you move towards shaping a policy on the basis of this great mass of information?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I think we can accede to that request, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Pitman: Good!

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: There is no problem. You see how easy we are to get along with?

Mr. Pitman: Do not carry it too far.

Mr. MacDonald: Do not spoil it, because at the moment your position is a pretty vulnerable and embarrassing one. I think you are taking the wisest way out of it.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Chairman, I would like to congratulate the Treasurer on his increase to the St. John Ambulance Association. As hon. members may be aware, I am chairman of my local branch committee, which is a group of citizens that attempts to assist the uniformed personnel of the two divisions that happen to be in the cities of Kitchener and Waterloo.

It is amazing the numbers of volunteer hours, the tens of thousands of hours, which these people spend at no remuneration to themselves and, indeed, at an actual cost. I do congratulate the Treasurer in seeing fit to be able to increase the grant to this association in order that its work may be developed even further.

Items 4 and 5 agreed to.

On item 6:

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, if I may ask of the Minister the question dealing with this item concerning the Royal commission on civil rights, does the Minister foresee the commission completing its findings this present year, because the vote this time is only $50,000 as opposed to $130,000 the previous year.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, Mr. Chairman, that is correct.

Mr. B. Newman: Right, thank you.

Item 6 agreed to.

On item 7:

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, would the Treasurer tell us what are the research and special studies which are projected under that vote?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: It actually covers most of the department's research programme. I do not know that I can say too much more about it other than that, unless the member wants some detail as to the members on the staff and so forth.

Mr. J. Renwick: Well, I would like the details of any projected special studies which are going to take place. There must have been some method by which the $132,000 was arrived at.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, while the Minister is collecting some information, if I might put a similar question, so that it will not have to be repeated. It occurred to me that item 7 might deal with the research studies that the Minister made note of in one of his speeches this past autumn. I recall reading that he had suggested there was a range, or a spectrum, I believe was the word he used, of 50 different research studies with considerable range of importance that were being funnelled into his department as a precursor to new policy. Perhaps if that is the same thing, then it would not be necessary to ask a further question.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I do not know that that is related to the question that was also touched upon by the hon. member for Riverdale. I think it is more in that context that this reference is made.

The $132,000 is made up of a grant of $2,000 to the Association of International Economics and Commerce Students, a grant of $2,000; the Ontario Economic Review, $27,000; the Ontario Statistical Review, $8,000; policy statements, $10,000; economics and statistical services publications, $25,000. Those are the publications. Under special studies are the Conklin project, University of Western Ontario, optimum size of municipalities, $15,000; and a study conducted by Professor Conway of York University, study for Ontario Development Corporation, use of provincial public organizations vs. private sector to finance development, $7,500; and then a range of other research projects which involve more than one branch, but which were co-ordinated at this level, $37,500. That makes up the total.

Mr. Nixon: Might I ask the hon. Treasurer where are the studies that he referred to in his previous speech, a range of 50 studies that were leading to new policy in his department—I just had occasion to read some of his recent speeches where those are accounted for?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes. Now I understand what the hon. member means. It is a long list.

Mr. Nixon: I do not want to hear the list. Is it under item 7 or is it in another part of the department for the development?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: It is under the next vote, 2402.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, since you may not be putting the statutory item by itself, that is the Minister's salary, I would like to take this occasion to ask some specific questions about the form of the estimates, and how we might perceive from studying them the federal increment in the cost that is put forward here.

Last year there was some confusion in various estimates whether or not, in fact, they were gross estimates including the complement from the federal government, or whether they were net. In fact, if they are gross estimates, we are asked to approve the expenditure of money that was already approved by the Parliament of Canada.

It was very difficult for us to determine in those departments where there is a federal component, where there are shared-cost programmes, just what the federal component was, and how much of the money we were voting actually came from our own consolidated revenue fund. I wonder if the Treasurer could advise me how we might solve that problem this year, since it has been brought to our attention in the Minister's Budget statement that this is of such great importance.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I do not know that the format of the estimates makes provision for what the hon. leader of the Opposition has pointed out. As far as I am aware, all expenditures are shown on a gross basis, whether they include the contribution of federal funds or not. But I do not think there is anything in the printed estimates format that would illustrate the component parts, or how much was federal and how much was provincial. In each circumstance I think we can provide this information as we go along.

Mr. Nixon: I would be glad if that is so. Last year we had some difficulty getting that information. I know the Treasurer has read with care the criticisms that the Smith committee levied at him and his predecessors in their accounting procedures. One of those was that in the public accounts, or in the estimates, it is impossible to tell what the federal component is in the budget that we are asked to approve.

Vote 2401 agreed to.

On vote 2402:

Mr. Sopha: Yes, I want to raise a point of order.

Mr. Chairman: Here again I would suggest we deal with it by items.

Mr. Sopha: Yes, I want to raise a point of order on this very matter. If you will follow with me in 2402, you will note that the elaboration underneath item 9, is not co-extensive with item 9.

For example—take 7, grants and special studies for regional development. If you turn the page you will see that the elaboration is the whole branch, if that is what you call it, of regional development, and 9 merely selects one item out of that branch, $481,000, if you are with me. So, conceivably—to use the word that youth employ—we might get into some kind of a hangup if, in discussing 9, we are talking about the $481,000 whereas the whole branch involves both the administration of that branch—which I want to say something about—and an expenditure of over $1 million. If you are with me, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Chairman: I would suggest perhaps it is not so much a point of order as a question of clarification.

Mr. Sopha: Whatever you want to call it.

Mr. Chairman: I think it is up to the member asking the questions to satisfy himself that he knows what the items are related to.

Mr. Sopha: Yes.

Mr. Chairman: So, if I may, I will proceed to call the items by number.

Item 1 agreed to.

Item 2 agreed to.

Item 3 agreed to.

Item 4 agreed to.

On item 5:

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, I want to say two things about that. I had better measure my words with care. In order to obtain the document entitled "The Propositions of the Government of Ontario to the Federal-Provincial Conference" you really had to know somebody around here, you had to have some connection to get one. The leader of the Opposition got one, perhaps two. The leader of the New Democratic Party got one. I had to go down the hall and use a special brand of influence to persuade the handing over of an additional copy.

Mr. MacDonald: A special brand of influence!

Mr. Sopha: I will not dwell upon that. I got one, in short, from the Prime Minister's office, so they must have been something in the order of collector's items. I could not tell in looking at the document—apart from the introduction of the Prime Minister—who prepared it. I assumed that this branch, the federal-provincial conference secretariat, prepared it, but then I was informed by a member of the cognoscente that I was in error, and it was prepared by the advisory committee. Is the Chairman able to tell me who prepared it?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: It was prepared in The Department of Treasury and Economics for the Prime Minister—

Mr. Sopha: So it is their verbiage.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, that is a fair conclusion. Yes.

Mr. Sopha: I assumed that it was so. I will restrain myself from making any comment upon the quality of the document. I will reserve that for another place.

Mr. Chairman: You would be out of order if you did.

Mr. Sopha: Would I really?

Mr. Chairman: If you were going to comment on the content of the report.

Mr. Sopha: That is an expenditure of public money. I had better tread warily here.

Mr. Chairman: —or on the merits of the report—

Mr. Sopha: Well, certainly. If I want to say the money was misspent in the preparation of that report—

Mr. MacDonald: Then prove it by a detailed analysis of the report.

Mr. Sopha: Certainly.

An hon. member: Let us lean back and listen to it, shall we?

Mr. Sopha: I have looked over the list of the representatives of the government of Ontario who travelled to Ottawa. And I do not want to be in any sense a killjoy, but I must say that I was really overwhelmed, in the light of the policies of retrenchment laid down by the Treasurer on Tuesday, at the number of people that it was felt necessary to transport to the nation's capital. Aside from the five or six Cabinet Ministers—and I just say in passing that if I had my choice about it I would have left about five of them home—but aside from those—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: You did not have any choice.

Mr. Sopha: No. I did not have the choice, but I have the freedom to make the complaint, here and now, about the large number of civil servants transported down to the nation's capital, which is only a couple of hundred miles away. Apparently they take 20 or 30 people down there and house them in the leading hotels, at great expenditure of the public money in an atmosphere of retrenchment—

Mr. B. Newman: It looked like an EMO exercise.

Mr. Sopha: Yes, retrenchment. On Tuesday afternoon he is telling us about how we have to tighten the purse-strings and we have to reduce expenditure. But it can be safely said that when the government of Ontario travels, it travels in first-class style.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: How many did you say?

Mr. Sopha: About a total of 20 people, I should judge. About 20 people were housed in the nation's capital; I have not completed reading the document in front of me. I also obtained that document to see who they were. And aside from perhaps seven or eight politicians, 12 to 14 other people, I should say, were taken down there. And when, as I did, you watch it on television, you find that the only participant is the Prime Minister of Ontario.

I question the necessity of having large batteries of civil servants in the immediate office. Certainly, the position is that the views of the government of Ontario have congealed by that time. The Prime Minister has been briefed. He is ready to state his policies, though I must say he gives himself leave to speak extemporaneously.

What is the necessity of going like an ancient warlord with all kinds of a train of satraps behind him, and putting up at the Chateau Laurier hotel or the Lord Elgin or the Skyline, and living high on the hog on the nation's capital? I really question that. But I well know from over ten years of experience, that this government in many ways engages in ostentatious and vulgar expenditure of public money. I know that. They go first class, and I dare say that if the Premier of Ontario, in the guise of the leader of one province of ten in this Confederation, journeyed to the nation's capital with a moderate and modest staff and some problem came up that vexed him, about which he had some uncertainty, and he was unable to glean the necessary information from his ministerial advisors who accompanied him, he has the telephone and he can call back to Queen's Park to the civil servants and have a discussion with them on the telephone.

But, really, to take 12 or 14 people to that Confederation committee room at public expense is, to me, certainly putting on the people of Ontario. Certainly putting them on and asking them to assume a lot. I am fortified in expressing those views. I fortified myself in the light of a notion that I have had for a long time about this. The working of this Confederation, and in part of the whole process, is that these provincial Premiers, when they meet with the central government, must perforce exude the atmosphere that a great feudal monarch is arriving on the scene. That is part of the stereo-typical process that they have to give the impression that it is a big wheel that has come to treat with the central government. That is really the reason for this.

Also, I am one of those offended that the leader of the Opposition is asked at the last moment. He is uncertain until fairly shortly before the conference begins, and the impression is given to the leader of the Opposition and the leader of the New Democratic Party that something of a concession is made to them.

An hon. member: They were on standby.

Mr. Sopha: Yes. Something of a concession is made. But I read with some amusement the column of Eric Dowd—and really I do not know any of these people—but I read Eric Dowd's column written as a preview of the opening of the great conference at Ottawa, and then the treating of the equal, sovereign states in the high and solemn conference. Eric Dowd is a very fine writer, very readable. The whole impression given of the fellows in the federal-provincial secretariat, as far as Mr. Dowd's report of his interviews with them, is nothing about matters of high policy, nor the dislocations of the federal system, the fiscal impairment and rearrangement of the geographic boundaries of the component parts and so on. The impression given is that they think it is a great thing.

Some chap by the name of Greathead, who I am sure is a very nice fellow though I do not know him, is telling Mr. Dowd: "Gee whiz. Oh boy. I can hardly wait, and it is so exciting to get down there to the nation's capital."

They are going to have a great time, but there is no discussion of what matters of high policy are going to be discussed, the great John coming down to rub elbows with the political leaders and soon to be managers of the sinews of this nation.

I am encouraged at the beginning of the estimates by the atmosphere of retrenchment and caring and saving money for the people of Ontario, and we carry out our responsibility if we focus upon some of the ostentation. I have been conscious of it—this is one example. I would hope—and I do not call for any reply—that the next time the Premier of Ontario goes to a great conference with Mr. Trudeau perhaps he could be asked to make do—you know really sacrifice—and make do with two or three advisors. Two or three would be quite adequate. A telephone and a credit card would be just about right to keep in touch with his government in Toronto.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): How many did Trudeau take to the Commonwealth conference?

Mr. Sopha: Do not get me started on that. That is another story.

An hon. member: You are against everything, including the Liberals?

Mr. Sopha: I exercise an independent point of view about most things, being a free man such as I am. I point to this because I was sorely offended by it; as far as I could see in front of the television cameras only two emissaries of the government of Ontario had anything to say—just the Prime Minister and the Attorney General. As far as I could see during the time, and I watched it fastidiously and very religiously, with great interest, only two of the emissaries had anything to say at all.

In the light of these things, I would hope that the heads of government—and where is a better place to start than dealing with matters of the highest policies—show the people of Ontario, that people engaged in the vital and necessary programmes for the well-being of our people, have a restraint which can be copied right from the top. A good place to start is to pare and stop—have a surcease—to this ostentation of American Express and Diners Club credit cards, such as is evidenced in this great migration to Ottawa to that conference.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I would like to take the opportunity—since the name of Ed Greathead has been mentioned in a way which might cast some doubt on the industry of that man or his attitude—

Mr. Sopha: I said no such thing. On a point of order, I said no such thing at all.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: You created that impression.

Mr. Sopha: I said I had read Mr. Dowd's column; on a point of order.

Mr. Chairman: The Minister is speaking; he has the floor.

Mr. Sopha: I am on a point of order. So that he does not distort this thing, I merely said that I read Mr. Dowd's column and I reported the impressions I got from that column as he quoted Mr. Greathead. I said nothing else more about Mr. Greathead, except that I had no doubt he is a very fine individual.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, the implication that I got—and I think everybody else that listened to the member's remarks got—was that his comment was about trifling things, nothing to do with the serious objectives we were pursuing at Ottawa. I just want the hon. member and this House to know that if Ed Greathead did not work 18 hours a day at least, if not 20, through those days that we were there, and perhaps for three months previous to that almost the same number of hours, then he did not work at all. But if there is any suggestion that he was not pursuing the serious objectives which we were pursuing, and assisting in a very valuable way, I would not want that impression to go abroad.

If the hon. member has any doubts about his seriousness and his abilities and his capabilities and his industry, let me put them at rest.

Mr. Nixon: I feel called upon to make some comments in this connection since I was there as an observer and my expenses were paid by this particular fund.

I had the impression myself that perhaps if there were too many people there, it was among the ministry. I had the further impression that at least one Minister was there who was not in the original line-up. But I must also say that having had an opportunity to see the staff backing up the Premier and the Ministers who were taking an active part in the operation, I have no doubts in my mind that their attendance was necessary under these circumstances. It was not a frivolous expenditure of public funds.

Now, in this I would like to back up my colleague from Sudbury by saying that his point is well taken. There are many frivolous expenditures of the type that might very well have been indicated by a press release or, let us say, a press comment in this connection.

Mr. MacDonald: Nonsense.

Mr. Nixon: I would further say that those people who belong to regimented parties, like the one on my left, should very well have been listening to the leader of the Liberal party in Canada last night, when he said the viability and strength of our party is because we can take differing opinions and we are quite prepared to state them publicly.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I am not going to dwell on this at great length, but there are one or two points I want to make. The ludicrous situation of one member of the Liberal party getting up and casting aspersions and then having his leader cut the ground from under him and end up by saying that there is some point in it—trying to be both sides of the question—it speaks for itself. One does not need to elaborate on it.

Now, then, Mr. Chairman, I just want to make a few comments on the general observations with regard to the conference.

Some of the comments made by the hon. member for Sudbury were a combination of ignorance and verbal ostentation. Anybody who made the comment, quoting in ignorance the implications that he happened to choose from Eric Dowd's article, simply does not know what Greathead was doing and what the staff was doing. I will join with the leader of the Liberal party and say they did a good job.

However, I would just like to say this, Mr. Chairman, if you want to go off on this rather cheap pursuit of how you are protecting the oppressed people of the province, every Liberal government, even Newfoundland and New Brunswick—small provinces—it is an interesting fact that you should absorb—

Mr. Sopha: If you multiply, you are all right—

Mr. MacDonald: Pursuing the exercise of your independence, you will be critical of them as you are critical of everybody, including your own party. Every Liberal government there had just as large a group.

Mr. Sopha: If you multiply together, it makes it right.

Mr. MacDonald: Right. Everybody is wrong except the hon. member for Sudbury. His leader is wrong; his party is wrong; everybody is wrong. His leader makes a decision with regard to office staff; he comes down and blasts it to the heavens.

Mr. Nixon: This is not the time to lecture the hon. member for Sudbury.

Mr. MacDonald: Is that right?

Mr. Nixon: Yes, it is right.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, may I through you thank the hon. leader of the official Opposition. This is not his time to lecture me.

Mr. Chairman: On Item 5.

Mr. MacDonald: Obviously this is not a vote we want to pursue because the Liberals are in an embarrassing spot on it.

Mr. Nixon: You are just out of order.

Mr. MacDonald: Sure it was out of order.

Mr. Sopha: And supported by every one of your members.

Mr. MacDonald: And the hon. member for Sudbury took us out of order. Now, let me try to get back to order, having been derailed by the Liberals on it. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask questions with regard to a couple of issues.

The Provincial Treasurer, as did the Prime Minister some time earlier, said that the government was making a grant now to the constitutional conference secretariat because they wanted it to be a genuine inter-provincial secretariat. Quite frankly, I am a little curious as to how the secretariat is going to change just because you are now making a grant? My impression is that the secretariat is overwhelmingly a federal secretariat.

If we are going to get a genuine representation of provincial points of view, I would like to ask a number of questions and having asked them I think the Provincial Treasurer can pick it up and elaborate without further questions.

Who is appointed, from the provincial point of view, or by the provinces, so that you get a balanced consideration of the studies of the agendas?

Mr. Sopha: Surely this is not in order in this vote?

Mr. MacDonald: Sure, it is in order.

Mr. Sopha: How can it be in order?

Mr. Chairman: This is the secretariat for the conferences and committees.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, the secretariat for the conference and the grant that is being made to it.

Mr. Sopha: How would what the federal government does be in order? Because that is an expenditure of federal money.

Mr. MacDonald: Perhaps I could repeat it so that the hon. member for Sudbury, if he was not listening, will get it.

Mr. Sopha: Please do. Although I listened to every word you said.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, perhaps you did not get it the first time, some people are slow learners.

For the first time this government is making a grant to underwrite the cost of the secretariat. Now the question is, how is it going to become a genuine federal-provincial secretariat because that grant happens to be made? Surely that is relevant to this estimate.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, the secretariat actually serves the conference, it works for the conference. We participate, we will have staff on the secretariat that serves the conference. One was seconded prior to, and during the last meeting in Ottawa, but we will have a permanent representative on that, maybe more as time goes on. Therefore, this is simply a matter of sharing the cost of this national conference situation. We will have full participation on it.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, it seems to me that the Provincial Treasurer has underlined the point I was trying to get at. You say we have one person who went up during the conference. We may have one permanently. Now from that, I conclude that up until now the secretariat has been basically a federal secretariat.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, that is right but that is about to change. The reason—I think I am correct—that the contribution is to go up from $10,000 to $40,000—is that the secretariat will do some travelling. They are about to meet in Toronto very shortly, I believe. The secretariat will be travelling.

New Brunswick has seconded one person this year to serve as secretary of the official languages subcommittee, for instance. They have given this man to the secretariat. Ontario will second a person this year to serve as secretary of one of the committees. This amount of money simply represents the value of what we think the extent of our contribution to this work will be.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, am I clear that the $40,000 is an outright grant of money for the operation of the secretariat and in addition to that, do you second, for a short term or for a permanent basis, personnel?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: This is our share over and above the secondments that I have made reference to; Ontario's accepted share or portion of the cost of operating the secretariat for the advantage of the conference.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, I just conclude briefly, Mr. Chairman. I was interested, in talking to a number of provincial people from various provinces during this conference, to find that there was a fairly widespread belief that the secretariat had been a federal secretariat rather than a balanced federal-provincial secretariat. The results, in a very subtle way, often were reflected in the shaping of agenda and in the conclusions of the studies and in the options the secretariat would pull from the studies—therefore, a pretty profound and effective influence.

While I do not want to set up any more of a confrontation between the federal government and the provincial governments than is necessary perhaps for a vigorous democratic exercise, I think if we are going to have an effective federal-provincial consultation in reshaping the constitution we must have meaningful participation in the secretariat and I would hope that the kind of thing that has been started this year is going to result in that.

The second point I wanted to raise was with regard to the Ontario advisory committee. Now, very briefly, I am going to thresh some old straw.

I wonder how long we must go on with this being such a secret organization? Nobody has an opportunity to share in its meetings or to benefit from its activities or its work, other than through published reports. Quite frankly, if the 40 proposals were a product of the Ontario advisory committee, it is about as thin a product as they have turned out for quite some time. On occasion they were literally restricted to one line, some 20 to 25 words in the centre of a page. That was proposal 17 or something of this nature.

If something is going to come from so formidable a battery of brains, as you have in the Ontario advisory committee, I'd hope it would be something more pretentious, something more valuable in terms of background to the specific proposals that were being advocated. But it is the whole operation of the advisory committee on Confederation which I raise. I had a chat with one member—and I think I can report this without any danger of his identification—one time I had a talk with him and said surely, if there is a feeling, on the part of some of these academics that they do not want to get involved in public debate over their views, they still want to present their views to the government, in the first instance, and through the government, to the politicians.

Is it not possible that at least the leaders of the Opposition parties or perhaps three people from each of the Opposition parties might be able to sit with the advisory committee?

All I am saying is, here is a body that is doing a continuing job. It seems to me that more people should be able to benefit from its work, and they are operating completely in secret as far as the general public is concerned, apart from periodic reports. In fact, even the first reports, I think, finally saw the light of day only because there were about two years of badgering at every estimate in which the issue was in order, and some in which it was not in order.

To sum up, to the Provincial Treasurer, is there any possibility that the government is going to change its mind with regard to the operation of this committee?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, Mr. Chairman. The committee was appointed in the first instance to serve the Prime Minister. I think that has been made clear here before. I do not know that I am altogether capable of commenting on whether the Prime Minister would consider a change in the format, if you wish. In general, however, I would say that there are times when you get something less than objectivity, unless you had it constituted the way that it is. Above and beyond that, I cannot say very much. I would suppose that when the Prime Minister felt it might be changed, then he would so inform the House. But I am not in a position to say what the Prime Minister may wish to do.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, if I could just make one point. Are we out of order?

Mr. Chairman: It would seem to me that the Prime Minister is the one who can answer your question.

Mr. MacDonald: All right. If so, the Prime Minister should be here. This is in the estimates of the Provincial Treasurer. We are dealing with his estimates.

Mr. Chairman: You will have an opportunity to—

Mr. MacDonald: I will not have an opportunity to deal with it. Well, maybe I shall, but it is certainly in order now, since we have this vote before us.

The only point I was going to make in conclusion and briefly, Mr. Chairman, is that if we cannot get any fuller public participation—public only in the sense of the involvement of this Legislature—I think this debate underlines the absolute necessity of a select committee to do a continuing job of work in this field.

All right. The Provincial Treasurer shakes his head. I invite anybody to take a look at the nature of the constitutional debate we have had this past week, we have one about every two years. In the second or third day, the government moved out en masse. There were only enough Cabinet Ministers to intervene for five minutes or so in the debate. So the constitutional debates, which are generously conceded to us periodically, simply are not an adequate vehicle for consideration of such important issues. There is no willingness nor desire on the part of the government to be here, other than when the leaders participated the first day. Since then, everybody has moved out, I submit that if we are going to come to grips, with a meaningful discussion, of the very serious issues involved in reshaping the constitution, it has to be in that kind of committee, since apparently we are going to be excluded from this point forward, as in the past, from the Ontario advisory committee proceedings.

Mr. Sopha: I would like to ask the Treasurer a further question. But before I do, I merely say to you that I am only carrying out what I think to be my responsibilities in conserving the public treasury and the public money. I am willing in response to my own conscience and its demands to accept any scolding I may get, from whatever quarter it may come. I was really surprised—I want to put on record my surprise—to learn today that those 40 propositions were written by this secretariat. I accepted the offering of the person who told me that they were written by the advisory committee. There was no authorship on them, and I was really surprised. I would like to ask the Treasurer, am I right in suspecting that there is not, on that secretariat, a lawyer versed in constitutional law?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: The members were all vetted—I guess that is a good word to use—by the advisory committee. The Attorney General and deputy Attorney General were involved. In other words, there was enough involvement in the selection of these people to ensure to those concerned that they were properly chosen. I think that is a fact, I do not think there was a man of the legal profession on there, but—

Mr. Sopha: I am speaking of what I call the secretariat; that might not be the term—the federal-provincial secretariat.

Mr. Chairman: I think you are talking about two different things.

Mr. Sopha: Yes, I think we are.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Oh, yes, that is right. All the propositions—that was your original reference—from our point of view were all vetted by The Attorney General's Department, which seems to remove the need for a constitutional lawyer.

Mr. Sopha: I am really surprised. I do not want to be prolix about this at all, but I have to say in all honesty that here is the etching that I will paint in—that I think the 40 propositions are pretty sad. I do not like the quality and I do not like the manner in which they deal with things. But I am going to reserve that speech for another day, when I will show my reasons for thinking that.

But I want to make this comment: Without extolling the virtues of the legal profession at all, to which I have the honour to belong, the lawyers since 1867 and since Oliver Mowat made his first attack on the federal House, have been on the firing line with the Constitution. They have been in the front trenches.

Over the years the lawyers have gleaned a great deal of knowledge about the workings of The BNA Act. In the light of that historic truth and the constitutional development, the judicial interpretation of The BNA Act, I do not see how that federal-provincial secretariat can really form a composite approach to the Constitution without that body of knowledge that a constitutional lawyer can bestow upon it.

Let me just leave it with this comment. We come to Section 38 or 39, the distribution of powers, and the distribution of powers is really where the constitutional lawyers have been down through the ages, battling in the Supreme Court of Canada, the judiciary committee of the Privy Council. Now here we will come to the pith and substance, a good constitutional phrase. I read the page and it is about money. That is all there is—for a page and a half they are talking about money. They are not talking about section 91 or 92 at all. One of my disappointments.

So I hope that in the future that secretariat—if that is what it is called, Mr. Greathead, who, I am sure, is a very worthy, intelligent, well-equipped individual—will have join them a person versed in constitutional law. I really do not see how you can make a sensible approach to the problem without such a person.

The other thing I want to say concerns this advisory committee, and to repeat my complaint that a couple of years ago the member for York South says it is as a result of cajolery and stimulation from this side that the Premier finally consented to publish a number of the papers. Eventually they came out in a red book, and one of the prize volumes in my library is one in which the Prime Minister of Ontario has inscribed his name in handing it to me with a nice comment. That will be a piece of Canadiana for me.

That book had three articles by Forsey on the advisory committee, whom I do not treat as a serious scholar any longer. Three articles in favour of the monarchy. Professor John Conway, chairman of the department of the humanities at York University, a distinguished Canadian scholar, a year ago December put in the hands of the secretariat advisory committee, an essay, a scholarly treatise, or whatever you want to call it. And it does not accord with Professor Forsey's dedication to the continuation of the monarchical system in Canada with all its loyalist symbols. It is a varying point of view.

But Professor Conway's article has never seen the light of day. Whoever forms the editorial board of that advisory committee is not going to allow it to be used for the dissemination of republican propaganda. I enquired about that. The Prime Minister eight months ago said here that he would look into it and see if, perhaps, it might not be published, as were the other articles, including one by Professor Forsey on constitutions of such places as Trinidad, Jamaica, Pakistan, and so on.

The Prime Minister's enquiry was not fruitful of any action because it has never been published. I am told that article, just to make the record complete, will be published privately by the University of Toronto press this spring.

So, what I really complain about is that the Prime Minister, having invited these scholars to come and sit on his committee, and they having devoted their time, talents and energies to the production of what they would consider fruitful work, I do not really see that the advisory committee or anyone else has the right to pick and choose, and to decide in the light of the present state of thought in this country, and present attitudes towards the continuation of the monarchical system, that they have the right to say we will publish all those in favour of Royalty and we will bury those that may call the monarchy into question.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I am sure the hon. member would want to be aware of the facts. Professor Conway's report was probably too late for inclusion in the first volume, and he has been asked if he would like it included in the second. He has said that he would prefer to have it published in a collection of Candiana to be shortly published by the U of T press.

Mr. Sopha: That is what I said.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: You said we excluded him; he chose the one for the other.

Mr. Sopha: Well, who published the first volume?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: His article was too late for the first volume. We are publishing another. We asked him if he wanted to be included in it, and he said no.

Mr. Sopha: Have you had a communication from him that says that, because I will take the trouble to dig out my communication from him.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: We have a letter.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I could ask some rather practical questions.

Mr. Sopha: Perhaps you would let me have a copy.

Mr. Pitman: I think the advisory committee was one of the wisest decisions that this government made at a very early point, in which the government of Ontario played a major role in getting this whole business of finding some proper relationship of English and French-speaking Canada. I wonder if the Minister could indicate how many meetings were held last year, of this advisory committee. Could you indicate what will be the agenda for the advisory committee in the coming year?

I do not see a very large sum of money on behalf of this. I am not too sure if $35,000 is a very large or small sum in comparison to what it was last year. I am wondering just whether the interest of the government is waning or whether it is increasing in regard to providing the people of Ontario with the wherewithal to be able to make some kind of sensible decision in this very complex area.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: It is certainly the intention of the government to continue this work. There is no question about that. The committee met eight times in plenary session, and a number of members met in committee.

Mr. Pitman: That was last year.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes. This work will continue—there can be no question about that. I think you have had some indication of the extent we are going to support the work financially. We have already talked about that. I can only assure you of the continuing interest and support of the government for this work.

Mr. Pitman: In other words, the committee will be as active in this coming year as it was in the past year.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Slightly more.

Mr. Pitman: Could the Minister indicate when this volume is expected—the second volume of papers on Confederation?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Not later than this summer, we hope. It may be available before the House rises; depending on how long we sit here.

Mr. Pitman: Is it the purpose of the government to see this as a continuing preparation for perhaps further Confederation of Tomorrow conferences, because I think this was one of the major thrusts and perhaps this is the only way we are going to be able to get out of this mess. Certainly when the federal government calls it, it tends to be a financial crisis and a confrontation; it seems to me when Ontario called the conference, it appeared to be a place where this tension did not exist.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, I can assure the member that Ontario is prepared to consider further meetings if they are felt necessary.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, I want to make another comment to leave it in focus. What bothers me is the impression left by the Premier that Professor Conway's article was to be published under the aegis of the government of Ontario. Now, the communication I had from Professor Conway certainly indicated to me—and I do not have it here with me—that he had rather given up on the hope that the government of Ontario, the advisory committee, would publish the article; some group at the University of Toronto was going to publish it.

As I say, it was put in the hands of the government in December 1967. I happen to know that as a fact. And it failed to be published. In midsummer, I asked the Premier in this House where it had got to, and he said he would look into it. I have not the propositions before me, but I read them so avidly and digested in round terms what they said, that I do recall the one about the monarchy—the continuation of the monarchy—which does not take first place with this government. It is about No. 13 or 14; the monarchy is never leading the way. It makes some reference to the fact that there is a variation of opinion in our province about the continuation of our monarchical connection. Well, the best way to elucidate on the variation of opinion, I would think would be to publish the work of a scholar written for the government to indicate that somebody has taken the trouble to articulate it in scholarly verbiage.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I just want to make sure once again that the hon. member understands this situation. Professor Conway was invited to submit this paper. As the member pointed out, it arrived in December, 1967, but the publication of the volume to which he refers was so far advanced by midsummer that it would not be included.

I want to make this clear. He was then asked if he wanted it to be included in another volume, and his letter on January 29 of this year, addressed to the deputy Minister, said:

I think it a very good idea to publish a second volume of background papers and reports. The public should be informed of the various conclusions members of the committee have come to.

This is the second invitation.

I am sorry my own essay cannot be included in the volume as I believe I told you it has been accepted for publication by the University of Toronto Press in a volume of essays to be brought out this summer.

Now, really, it has nothing to do with opinions about the monarchy on the part of Dr. Conway or Dr. Forsey. We have certain opinions about the monarchy, but surely the member is not implying that an opinion of Dr. Conway's would not be accepted because it is in variance with that of the government?

Mr. MacDonald: He did not imply it, he said it.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Certainly, if that is not clarified now, Mr. Chairman, I propose to you that it cannot be clarified.

Mr. Sopha: Well, why was it not handed to us when I enquired last summer? Why is it that the work, the product of this advisory committee, when a member of the Legislature asks, that somebody over there cannot say: "Look, we are not going to publish it in a book for a period of time, but here is a copy of it." Is that too great to request? Is that too forward?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Would the member not think it is appropriate to respect the wishes of Dr. Conway, who prefers to have it published in a book of essays by the University of Toronto Press? Would he not think that is an appropriate thing to do? We do.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if—

Mr. Chairman: We could go on indefinitely.

Mr. Nixon: Yes, we could go on indefinitely and I propose to make a small contribution to the debate at this time. Unfortunately, I missed the opening remarks by the member for Riverdale, but I am told on very good authority by the member for Sudbury that among his statements he said that it was the NDP's proposal that during these estimates a lengthy discussion of policy matters would be undertaken. In spite of that, the leader of the NDP a moment ago made some reference to the inclusion of Opposition representation on the advisory committee, whose vote is before us now.

Now, I do not want to let the occasion pass without first saying I do consider this a matter of policy, and that it could have been expressed on another occasion, and in fact in the case of the leader of the NDP it was. But I cannot let the occasion pass without concurring with his view expressed here, although to some extent out of order, which puts me, I suppose, in the same category.

But since you permitted the other statement, I would like to say that I can hardly credit that these propositions were put by the government to the constitutional conference as representing Ontario's views, when in fact the Legislature had nothing to do with them whatsoever, and it was not until after the propositions had been put forward that we had a chance to discuss them.

Now, the quality of these propositions has been criticized by the member for Sudbury, and I agree with his position there, definitely. But my point is this, and it is a matter of great importance and it has been brought forward in other debates and it should, I suppose, be stressed now, that if the subsequent deliberations of the committee, the advice they give the government and particularly the propositions as they may be printed and put forward as at least emanating from the province of Ontario, if these are going to have continuing validity and value, they must surely emanate as well from the Legislature, either through a committee that is established to work with the advisory committee or one that works independently of it.

Surely, if the propositions had been put to the Legislature previously, if we had had a chance to discuss them before they had been taken down to Ottawa, then the Premier of Ontario might well have said, "I do speak for Ontario because they had been discussed and approved or otherwise by this Legislature."

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Chairman, I want to get this clarified. I find it really very hard to believe that the propositions emanated from the advisory committee, a group of scholars. If this does need clarification, surely the Provincial Treasurer—

Mr. Sopha: That is not what we were told. They were written by the secretariat.

Mr. Nixon: The advisory committee or the secretariat.

Mr. Pitman: Well, a group of scholars who are honest would want this clarified because I am sure those propositions could not have come from that very learned group. Secondly, I wonder if the Provincial Treasurer could indicate whether there have been any changes in membership on this committee over the past year or since this was last discussed?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes. There have been two changes in membership due to the resignations of Mr. Magone and Dean Dillon. They have not been replaced yet. One resignation was through illness and the other for other reasons.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, just on a point of order. We are at item 5 and you are dealing item by item, as I understand it. If you would turn to page 177 you will see that the headings are much more appropriate for discussion.

Item 5 is federal-provincial conferences and committees, $80,000. If you turn the page to page 117, you see the $80,000 is subsumed under the total amount falling within that federal-provincial affairs. I think that before we move on, for example, to item 6, which is tax studies, $25,000, Mr. Chairman, the proper way to proceed is to deal heading by heading with the items on page 177, and the following page. It provides a proper scope for the discussion on the particular area of the estimate.

Mr. Chairman: I am not aware as to whether or not we have a problem here with the rules or the practice of the House. My guess is that the Chair is required to call these votes by number and item, but I can check with the Clerk and find if this freedom you suggest exists.

Mr. Sopha: That is the point I raised at the outset.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): Mr. Chairman, would it not be within your prerogatives to permit us to discuss the estimates under these headings on 177 and then put the votes as they appear on 176—

Mr. Chairman: Certainly, we can always go back and vote on the number—

Mr. MacDonald: May I remind you, Mr. Chairman, that up until a year or two ago we did not even consider the sub-estimates. We did that only to establish some order so that we would not be jumping back and forward. I think what is being proposed now is that you deal with the heads on page 177, as a more meaningful breakdown of this estimate than the sub-votes on page 176, but you end up by covering the same thing.

Mr. Chairman: I wonder if anyone from the government side would like to comment on this?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I see nothing wrong with it as long as the discussion is pertinent to one of the items under the vote that is being discussed, otherwise we will range all over the place.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We probably will anyway.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I will let that pass. I will not comment on that.

Mr. Chairman: We have not come to it. We will have handled this point, administration policy planning, and the summary, and we are in the process, I would judge, of concluding federal-provincial affairs.

Mr. J. Renwick: I can think of a couple of minor comments.

Mr. Chairman: If it is the consent of the House and if there is no objections that anyone wishes to make, then we will proceed that way.

Mr. Nixon: What way?

Mr. Chairman: Through the summary.

Mr. Nixon: And then go back to the vote?

Mr. Chairman: No, I will call the vote as a single number at the end.

The member for Riverdale.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, would the Minister tell me whether there is any ongoing expense to the government as a result of the Confederation of Tomorrow conference?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, the bills have been paid.

Mr. Sopha: What about the hotel bills?

Mr. J. Renwick: The point I was making is that I understand that there was some kind of continuing committee following on from that conference. Is that so or not?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: That may be. There was a suggestion that the members of that committee, who were in effect the first Ministers of the province, would get together at the call of the chairman, but that has never taken place.

Mr. Nixon: That was the only decision arrived at.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I do not think the idea was to arrive at decisions. If you were there, I do not think you would have recognized it for that purpose either. It was to deliberate, clarify, develop positions; I do not think it had any basis for decision making.

Mr. Sopha: It was a TV spectacular.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, it turned out to be. Indeed it did.

Mr. Sopha: The Premier came on and my four-year-old dived under the couch. What would you have done? What you did the other day?

Mr. Chairman: The member for Riverdale is speaking to federal-provincial affairs, is that correct?

Mr. J. Renwick: Yes, Mr. Chairman, on the advisory committee. Just what is the procedure by which it is convened or functions? Does it function by itself, or is it through the call of federal-provincial affairs branch that it assembles or does certain work?

What I am getting at is, is there a plan by which in the next year the federal-provincial affairs branch wants to have certain things covered by the advisory committee, or is it just a group of academics who are, as and when they decide themselves, meeting and dealing with topics that they themselves want to deal with?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: This is an ongoing process. Subcommittees meet or are available on call by the Prime Minister.

Mr. Chairman: Taxation and fiscal policy.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Chairman, in the past six years, we have been coming in the House to assess the estimates. We are starting out now for this year to look at the year 1967, in fact that is what we have here. I am wondering—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Those were public accounts.

Mr. Sargent: Yes, sir, that is what I mean. I do not know whether it is feasible, but it seems to me we are talking 1969-70 and we are looking at the 1967 figures. I believe that any giant corporation, Mr. Minister, such as General Motors can have their current statements available. I do not see any reason why, with the staffs and all the equipment and people you have, that you cannot have your 1968 figures available for this board of directors to assess.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: There is a very good reason, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Sargent: I would like to know why.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Because the fiscal year is not concluded until the end of this month.

Mr. Sargent: Change it to make it a calendar year, then.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: It could still have the same effect, depending on when you are discussing it in this House.

Mr. Sargent: I say very respectfully that in the seven years I have been here, Mr. Chairman, I have never seen one single vote changed by anything anyone has to say. The worst of it is we very diligently look into the estimates to find if there is any way we could get at the government (you have got these covered up pretty well) and I wonder what the good of it is, because nothing—not one single vote—is changed in all the time I have been here. It is kind of an exercise in futility.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I would be delighted, Mr. Chairman, if he would just say, "I will pass them all right now." I will be quite happy.

Mr. Sargent: I know you would. I am sorry I was late getting into the House but the Minister, I understand, introduced this study today, The Georgian Bay Region Development Council, and it is under this vote 6. Now how can we, at five minutes to midnight, talk intelligently (if I ever did), and know what you are talking about.

Mr. Chairman: Order, for a moment! I think I might, from the Chair, advise the hon. member that there were certain undertakings with regard to discussion of these reports, perhaps before he came to the House.

Mr. Sargent: Well, on this point, I think we have been talking about tax studies. It is pretty safe to say, Mr. Chairman, that today in the United States, President Nixon announced a tax cut of $4 billion, and progressively we have been on a spending binge for the last five years, which you acknowledge. You have got things up so high, and now you have an austerity programme; instead of cutting taxes, you add them on. So, I wonder what we are doing here. We are not going to change a single cent in this whole volume here.

Mr. Chairman: Might I intervene from the Chair and try to draw a distinction between what will be dealt with in the Budget debate and what we are dealing with here.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, I think we are talking about a tax study of $25,000, and so far as I understand it, it is under regional government. Will the Minister explain what his plans are for the $25,000?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, Mr. Chairman. It is anticipated that the branch will have an extensive involvement in tax structure reform at the provincial, federal-provincial and provincial-municipal levels over the next several years. Among the research projects that are being considered at this time—and particularly following the government's white paper, Budget paper "B", which I read in the House on Tuesday—are computerized quantitative assessment of federal taxes on Ontario's personal income tax revenue, options in respect of taxable income base, progressive schedule of income classes, tax rates. All of these things, you see, will be necessary if we are going to have—

Mr. Sargent: Who is doing the study?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: This is the taxation and fiscal policy branch of the department—

Mr. Sargent: Well, you are paying them already.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: —with outside assistance. This is set up to provide us with some expertise in this field. It has been suggested here from time to time that we should employ outside expertise that could be helpful to us. We would want advice on the integration of provincial personal income tax with other provincial-municipal taxes, that is, retail sales tax and property tax, welfare payments, guaranteed income policies, and so on. These were all outlined incidentally in Budget paper "B" on Tuesday. This is to start the implementation process now. We have indicated we cannot do these things for two years. If we do not get about the business now, the implementation process cannot be undertaken.

Another matter involves provincial capital gains and gift taxes, which was also discussed in Budget paper B. We need a quantitative analysis on new tax forms available to the province for personal income tax collection. It would involve a task force approach requiring accounting, legal services, investment and economic expertise. So, again, a proportion of this amount will be used for that.

We already have a task force which studied the Carter report when it first came down. We now have a task force ready to pursue that matter if there is some implementation of Carter to be undertaken shortly.

These are the things that we will use those funds for.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I would like to just follow up the last comment of the Treasurer. Is it the intention of the Treasurer, through this particular branch, to do his utmost to make certain that the provincial income tax, as he views it, will be identical so far as the base is concerned with the federal one? And what plans are being made for co-operation between the federal government and this branch, when the white paper comes down from the federal government, which I expect will be in June? In other words, it seems to me that you must indicate your willingness at that time to co-operate with them in working out a single identical tax base under The Income Tax Act.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I am sure the hon. member would appreciate, that the present federal base would hardly lend itself to what we are contemplating in terms of personal income tax.

Mr. J. Renwick: I understand that—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: And that again is one of the purposes for which this fund—and probably succeeding amounts of voted money—will be used.

As recently as today, in my office, it is fair to say that I had discussions with the Minister of Revenue (Mr. White) and his Deputy Minister leading into this situation. They are involved with us in this pursuit to.

Now, of course, it is important to discuss with the federal government as to whether we can harmonize a base and a reporting system with the federal government. This we must know. If we cannot, I think we also have to pursue it along these lines to develop a base and a structure system of our own. So really both pursuits will be undertaken.

Mr. J. Renwick: I understand the ultimate problem that you may have to agree to disagree. But I want to make absolutely certain that it is envisaged within the amounts provided in this estimate that that kind of co-operative activity is planned in advance and will take place when the white paper that the federal government proposes to issue comes down, and that this branch will be, between now and then, updating or refreshing their minds about whatever studies they have made on the Carter commission.

The next point, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask: Is it possible for the Treasurer's branch to begin to publish these studies that are made in these fields, rather than just the particular studies that we do receive as supplements to, for example, the Smith committee report? Is there any reason why the particular studies could not begin to emanate from your department as a series of tax studies in this complicated field?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: It would be imprudent, to say the least, to release studies of this kind until it had been determined as to whether they were compatible with the policy that would require to be developed. It might well be that after a policy had been developed in respect to them, they would find their way onto this table, but I doubt if it could just be regarded as something that would take place upon completion of a study. I think that the government would have a right to look at it to see whether policy determinations were involved. I think that would be the procedure.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I would like to come back—

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Brantford.

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): Mr. Chairman, regarding the same particular studies—are any studies being done in Ontario, at the moment, to provide a more equitable redistribution of income? It appears to me, from one of the reports put out by your department, that something like 80 per cent of the people get about 54 per cent of the income, whereas the 20 per cent get the other 46 or 47 per cent of the income. I just wondered if any of these studies are aimed to provide, shall we say, a more equitable redistribution?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I think it is quite possible to say yes. If you go back to Budget paper "B", and you cannot read into the remarks in Budget paper "B" that it is the intention of this taxation reform move to find a better way of distributing income through the income tax medium, then I would be sadly mistaken. That is to a very considerable extent the burden of the observations I made on Tuesday. Against that background then, it would seem to be nothing short of obvious that this whole matter requires to be studied so that we know how to implement it. That is what I have been putting on the record through you, Mr. Chairman; that is really the purpose of responding in this manner to the hon. member for Grey North.

Mr. Sopha: That is Grey-Bruce—Dry Gulch.

It being 6 o'clock, p.m., the House took recess.

On vote 2402:

Mr. Chairman: Order, we were on taxation and fiscal policy.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): In my opening remarks I asked the Minister if he would be good enough to give us the comprehensive options which were presented to the government as a result of the studies within his department, so that they could decide on their taxation and fiscal policy. I made the point during those remarks that I was not talking about the specifics of policy choices, but the area of the options that were available to the government. I would ask the Minister if this would not be an appropriate time for him to provide the House with the comprehensive options to which he referred in the course of his Budget remarks.

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Treasurer): Well, Mr. Chairman, I do not think I am prepared to make a commitment to do that tonight. These policy guide lines were developed for the policy decision making purposes of the Cabinet committee on policy development, that made policy decision. It was part of the policy making process. I am rather inclined to think that that is a policy function in its entirety and as a result I am not prepared to make a commitment to accede to the hon. member's request on that matter tonight.

Mr. Chairman: Economic planning!

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I am not talking about the Minister making any commitment to me at all, I am talking about opening up the debate so that we can understand what the options were that the government civil service of the province of Ontario made available to the Minister. Now, if he wants to play it close to the vest and say that they have decided what the policy is going to be but the rest of us in the province of Ontario are not going to understand the options that are open, that is his privilege.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes.

Mr. J. Renwick: But I am simply saying to him that that is not the way the government of this province should be conducted, because the comprehensive options which are available are matters which are of profound public importance and they are essential, they are essential if this routine that we go through in this Legislature is to be of any significance. I think that the government has got to be prepared to stand by the decisions which it made about the choices of options, and I reiterate and reaffirm the proposition. I am not talking about whether they decide to add two cents to the cigarette tax or five per cent to the liquor tax, or anything else; I am talking about the proposition where the ministry of the province was presented presumably through an information development procedure, which is outlined at considerable length in the review, of a procedure by which they are given options, and the Minister opted for:

- (a) A balanced budget;
- (b) For a curtailment of expenditures, which means a curtailment of programmes, and we will deal with that when we come to the Treasury Board;
- (c) No borrowing.

He opted for those positions. Now I want to know first of all whether or not there were in fact before the Treasury and before the government of this province, options in those terms from which they made their decisions or did they just, as a political matter, make their decisions? Now if they have valid options, then of course they as a government are entitled to make political judgments about the method by which they chose the option they selected, or the variations or the mix of the options, as they suggested.

That is fine but if the government in its statement to the province of Ontario says that there are comprehensive options available to the government, I want to know what those options are. I think we are entitled to know, I think it will facilitate the business of the House and I think it will ensure the fact that perhaps, somehow or other, the people of the province of Ontario may possibly participate in this kind of decision making process.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I would like to explain to the hon. member that the guidelines for options that were submitted to the Cabinet committee on policy were probably 90 per cent or better, the options that were dealt with in the Smith committee report and the report of the select committee.

I think it is quite appropriate for me to say, to you, Mr. Chairman, and through you to the committee, that we should discuss the options, or the policy options, that were chosen. They have been dealt with quite extensively in the Budget statement itself and in the white paper, but I see no purpose in submitting information that was provided to the Cabinet committee for policy making purposes, to this committee.

I do suggest to you that the preponderant number, probably as much as 95 per cent, of the options, were those that were proposed by the two committees to which I have made reference, the Ontario Committee on Taxation followed up by the work of the select committee. And within that total framework then there were all manner of options, some of which have been accepted for policy purposes, some of which have not, all combining to make up certain elements of the Budget statement itself, and more particularly, the white paper, or Budget paper B.

Now those are the subjects that can be debated, some of them more appropriately in the Budget debate, some of them—if they are relevant—as we go through these estimates. But I do not think, Mr. Chairman, I am prepared to table or make available to the committee the guidelines processes that were used. I do not think it is appropriate at all for me to disclose to the hon. member, the basis upon which our policies are determined.

Mr. J. Renwick: Well, Mr. Chairman, I think we are likely to be here a long time on this particular matter because it involves a fundamentally different viewpoint as to how the government is to operate. Now the Smith committee report is a public report—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: It is all there.

Mr. J. Renwick: That is right. Then we have the select committee of this Legislature and then we have a task force of this Minister's department where, in justification for the policy decisions which this government makes, he states that there were comprehensive options presented as a result of the study of the Smith committee report and of the select committee. Another point that I want to deal with very briefly, in consultation with officials of The Department of Municipal Affairs and the Department of Revenue, is that I would like to know who those officials were that the consultations took place with. The Minister says that 90 per cent of what was in the Smith committee report and the report in the select committee, constituted the options presented.

Well there was nothing in the Smith committee report, and there was nothing in the select committee report, which would indicate that the province of Ontario should give up the succession duty field. I am not arguing the merits one way or the other, I am talking about options and I am not arguing policy. There is nothing in either of those reports which would indicate that the government of the province of Ontario should decide that the corporation tax should be turned over to the federal government. No discussions whatsoever took place in those two reports about those items.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Have you read the Smith committee report?

Mr. J. Renwick: I have read the Smith committee report and there is no indication whatsoever; in fact, in the first volume, in the early pages of that report, they disclaimed any responsibility in the field of personal income tax or corporation taxes. That is what they specifically stated, and this was the point which I made over a year ago, that the government of Ontario was going this way, the federal government was going that way and they were leaving this great hiatus in between. And now the Treasurer opted yesterday for the abdication of these two fields.

Now I want to know whether or not, for example, one of the options that was made available to the government of the province of Ontario were the recommendations which were made almost 30 years ago by the Rowell-Sirois report. Because this is not a new problem; the problem has been around ever since Confederation, and was reiterated in the terms of reference of the Rowell-Sirois report.

Now I want to have this thrashed out right now. I am not arguing the policy that the government selected, I am arguing the question as to whether we here are entitled to the information about the comprehensive policy options which were made available to the government, and on which they based their decision. I think we are entitled to know that; I think we must know that if we are to have any useful function here.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: That is a matter of opinion.

Mr. J. Renwick: Well, all right then. You want the estimate discussion to be reduced to the way it was this afternoon by the member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) to the question of the kind of carpeting that you have got on your office floor.

What I want to have is a meaningful discussion. I want to know what the policies were that the government chose—I think it is a legitimate question, and I appeal to the Chairman. This is the kind of question which the Ministry, of course, refuses to answer.

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Why should they?

Mr. J. Renwick: Why shouldn't they? Because this is an assembly in which, as usual, the Minister of Energy and Resources Management wants to have the continuous closed shop of the Tory government.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: We will keep it up as long as you talk that way.

Mr. J. Renwick: What do you mean so long as I talk that way? This is not a place where my manners or your manners are in dispute. We are talking about the government of the province, and we are talking about whether or not you will provide us with the kind of information on which we can intelligently appraise, for the purpose of debate at the proper time in the Budget, the policies of this government.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): That is ridiculous!

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Well you know what the policies of this government are.

Mr. J. Renwick: We do not know what they were based on.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): You picked them out of thin air.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: This is a new theory of government.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I think all that one has to do is to read the bound volume that was circulated widely amongst the people of the province of Ontario of the speeches of the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) and of the Treasurer of the province of Ontario, talking about the fiscal nightmare and the financial jungle or vice versa, whatever the words were that they used at that time. What they were saying, and what they were doing was propagandizing the people of the province of Ontario.

An hon. member: That is nothing; they did not get away with it.

Mr. J. Renwick: And what has to be done is to make the point to us and to the people of the province of Ontario, that yes, there were valid choices available.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: You got them yesterday.

Mr. J. Renwick: Now, I am suggesting to the government that either they publish the valid choices or, as far as I am concerned and so far as we here are concerned, the government stands condemned on the proposition that they are engaged in a propaganda attack on the federal government.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Oh, that is going a little too far.

Mr. J. Renwick: That is not going too far at all.

Let us listen to the attitude of the government. The Minister of Mines (Mr. A. F. Lawrence) is not here; I wish he were. The Minister of Mines, talking on Thursday, February 27, said: "Yesterday's rumours coming out of Ottawa about the white paper indicate it will affect Ontario and 'we are worried about it.'" It is almost as if it is a foreign country that you are dealing with because you have carped so long at them—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: There are times it seems that way.

Mr. J. Renwick: —that they are not prepared to engage in any kind of dialogue.

But then listen to this: He has previously refrained from commenting publicly on suggested federal changes "but if stirring up public opinion against them might be effective, I think this is part of my job."

Now if that is the attitude of the Minister of Mines and if that reflects, as it has reflected for several months—

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): That is the Robarts policy.

Mr. J. Renwick: —the attitude of this government on the problem, then I want the people of the province of Ontario to know that you did have comprehensive policy options available to you. And you have to provide them to us.

Mr. MacDonald: In your own interests, you should provide them.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, this is getting very repetitive. I have pointed out and I will point out again, repetitive as it is, because the member has repeated himself three times though I understood him the first time, that we have had two exhaustive studies, first of all the Smith committee study, and then a select committee to study their recommendations.

I have pointed out to you that as much as probably 95 per cent of the options that were considered by the government are embodied in those reports, further amplified in Budget paper B, the white paper, which really sets out most of the pro's and con's leading to the policy decisions. The member made reference to succession duties. Smith wanted to change succession duties; it is in his report. But we made our decisions—

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): This is an indication that you—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Just let me finish, would you, please? I listened quite carefully to the hon. member.

We made our decisions, not based on the options that are referred to here rather loosely; we made our decisions following the Budget of the federal government on October 22, 1968. We made our decisions on that particular item because of the move that they made with respect to estate tax. That was what motivated that change.

Now surely it is fair to say that irrespective of policy guidelines, or what might be better described as a waiting process against the programme—the operational programme of the government—which helped us make our policy decisions in expenditure controls, has no relationship to what the hon. member is talking about here tonight at all. We propose to discuss the policies that have been decided upon and if you examine the Smith committee report, the select committee report, and Budget paper B, you have to isolate those decisions for yourself. But I say, Mr. Chairman, I have no intention of disclosing the policy making pursuits that the government employs for this purpose, and I do not think it is my part to do so.

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): Mr. Chairman, could I ask the Minister a couple of questions to elucidate aspects of his taxation fiscal policy?

Mr. J. Renwick: Is the member for Scarborough East going to continue on the same point or is he going off into a different one?

Mr. T. Reid: No, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. J. Renwick: Well, that is fine.

Mr. Chairman: The point has been made a number of times.

Mr. T. Reid: It is not the same point. It is an attempt to understand the Minister's views on economic policy so we can see where we are going. And the questions are quite brief, Mr. Chairman.

What is the Minister's view of a reasonable stability of prices for Ontario? And what is his view of a reasonable rate of inflation? He must have some ideal in mind.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I think possibly the hon. member, and other hon. members, have been here long enough to hear that statement policy before. I think there have been occasions when it has been suggested—and I may be out a little bit—that the growth factor of something on the order of 5½ to 6 per cent is a fairly sustainable rate of growth. When you break down the mix of real growth and inflationary or price growth then it becomes another story.

There is a limit to what the economy can stand in terms of strain, I am sure the hon. member is aware of that without asking the question. These things provide us with guidelines, the same type of guidelines that would direct anybody's thinking. Now, we have also indicated that we see some improvement coming in this factor, as far as inflationary processes are concerned, related to the economic aspect that the hon. member has made reference to. So, these are the sensible guidelines that are employed. I may be out a little, as far as today is concerned, but I think generally that is about the sensible approach that is pursued.

Mr. T. Reid: I thought I made my question quite clear. If the Minister could determine these things, would he like to have a 1 per cent inflation rate, a 1.5 per cent inflation rate for the provincial economy, or a 5 per cent inflation rate? In other words, what is his policy objective with regard to the rate of inflation in the province.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I suppose this is appropriate under this vote, but it seems to be a little away from the purpose of the estimates. Nevertheless, Mr. Chairman, I do not know that it is possible to make a precise statement on that at any given point in time. The objective can vary depending on the circumstances of the day. If the economy needs a little pump-priming, all right, you can stand a little inflationary pursuit, involved in deficit financing if you wish.

When you think about it, and I am sure the hon. member would concur with this, if inflation becomes a matter of concern, as it has, then probably a balanced budget is the way to arrest it. Now, I cannot get into any more of a finite argument or debate on it than that with the hon. member, but surely this is general enough.

Mr. T. Reid: Could the Minister again give the members of this House some idea of what he believes a reasonable goal of unemployment is in this province? In other words, Mr. Chairman, does the Minister have as an objective of his taxation fiscal policy, some goal of unemployment?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Full employment, no inflation.

Mr. T. Reid: Does the Minister agree?

Interjections by hon. members.

An hon. member: You have a captive labour force.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, to be more precise, we said before that 2 per cent is probably an optimum increase related to price or inflation. That is an optimum. Last year it was 3½ per cent, but we indicated in the budget papers and in the budget statement, we hope by next year to get down to 3.3 per cent. We doubt, though, whether we can get below that.

Mr. J. Renwick: That is 60,000 people.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: But we also outlined in our Budget statement what we think in terms of optimum employment, and what factual employment is likely to be. It is all in the Budget statement.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: They do not want to work.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): What was that?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: You would not know, you have never hired anyone in your life.

Mr. T. Reid: To continue with this, I am just trying to find out what the Minister's objectives and policy recommendations are. If

I understand his Budget—which I have read very carefully I assure him—and his statements now, he is saying that the main objective of his taxation fiscal policy is contained in his Budget, is an unemployment rate of no more than 2 per cent in 1969, and a price increase rate of 3.3 per cent. Is this your objective?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: We said that is what we hoped to achieve this year, 3.3 per cent; a decline of .2 per cent. That is what I said.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, I do not just happen to be one of the persons who believes that the committee of ways and means is a committee in which you discuss the policies of the government. I think we are entitled to elucidate, and extract from the government.

Mr. T. Reid: That is a pretty big switch around.

Mr. J. Renwick: It is not a very big switch around at all. I am simply saying, Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, I think we have the right to extract information and to question the Minister about what they are doing, not about their policy.

Mr. T. Reid: What do you think I am doing?

Mr. J. Renwick: But to seek information about it. Now I think this is very important from the point of view of the work of these estimates in the course of the next several months. I admit to a certain amount of concern about the fact that we are now going off on to one of these Liberal red herring tangents, which lead nowhere, when we are trying to elucidate a certain amount of information.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. Has the member—

Mr. J. Renwick: —on the point of order, I would like the Minister to rule as to whether or not the member for Scarborough East is in order in the line of questioning which he is pursuing in these particular estimates?

Mr. Chairman: Well, that is a very difficult question the member for Riverdale has posed. The thesis that he presented this afternoon was along the same lines and would, as far as I can see, have meant a much more expeditious handling of the estimates. But without wishing to stir up trouble, I think there were times when your leader went well beyond the limitations that you yourself have laid out. Now—

Mr. MacDonald: When, for example?

Mr. Chairman: I am just pointing out that—

Mr. MacDonald: When, for example?

Mr. Chairman: When we were discussing, I believe it was, the delegations or attitudes involved in the Confederation conference.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Chairman, I was commenting briefly on what the hon. member for Sudbury said and then I went on to ask specifics as to the operation and the role of the Ontario Advisory Committee on education.

Mr. Sargent: You wandered off—

Mr. MacDonald: I did not wander off. I wandered only to deal with the wanderings that one of your members had dealt with. Then I went back to two specifics as to what is the change in the secretariat, because of the fact that we have put in this money, and what exactly is the role of the Ontario Advisory Committee.

Mr. Chairman: I suggest if you do not indulge in imputing just what we are doing, you will not get yourself into so much trouble.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Chairman, if I could have a chance—

Mr. Chairman: Order please.

Mr. T. Reid: —on this point of order. I thought that the Minister and I were engaged in a very worthwhile debate. I thought this was part of the debate for the estimates of this department. I was trying to elucidate from the Minister information which I think is necessary to understand the taxation and fiscal system of this government—

Mr. J. Renwick: It is irrelevant.

Mr. Sargent: He just took the ball from the member for Riverdale.

Mr. T. Reid: And I ask for equal treatment.

Mr. Chairman: If I may, my submission to the committee is that the member for Riverdale was right. In other words, his questioning, as I understood it, was dealing with policymaking machinery and the exposition of the processes involved in policymaking. As I would understand his line of questioning, he is asking expressly what particular policies of the Minister were.

I find that the member for Riverdale has an excellent point, and it would certainly tidy up our deliberations here if we could stick to that discipline and if the questions be allowed to be opened to any length that members may wish when we are discussing the Budget itself.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I wonder if I might offer a proposal to you, Mr. Chairman. It seems to me that the examination of estimates is to elicit information and once the information is given in an answer I think that is about as far as it should be pursued. I do not think it should get involved in a philosophical debate following that, about what is a sustainable rate of growth or unemployment policy.

Once the hon. member gets whatever answer he is given, the debate process is over and I think I might say that to the hon. member for Riverdale. I have stated the position in that respect and he has his opinion, I have mine. But I think at that point it is not a debating society.

Mr. Lewis: Right—in the one instance you clarify—

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Chairman, on the same point of order I would like to assure the Minister that I have very simple questions to ask and I am sure he knows the answers. The answers are not always found, Mr. Chairman, in the Minister's Budget. He does not state explicitly the answers to the questions I am asking. I can assure you and I can assure the minister that I find this very helpful in understanding his policy and how he arrived at decisions—which is what the member for Riverdale is concerned with to some extent—and also, what some of those decisions are in fact. I will not pursue a point if the Minister feels he has answered that type of question.

I would only say, sir, that I could, of course, make a long speech in this House and I have made long speeches in this House, covering 55 pages at one go. I do not like that way of making my views known and the views of my party known. I much prefer debating and I consider this debate to be very much in order, sir.

An hon. member: What is the Legislature for, then?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I hope this will be a final and satisfactory answer to the hon. member.

We have said before, and I think it is fair to repeat, that the desirable combination of growth factors would probably be, if it is obtainable, something on the order of 5 to 5.5 per cent real growth and as low as 2 per cent inflationary growth, if that is an achievable goal. It has not been lately. I did say in Budget paper B or in the course of my remarks that we hope to move closer to it, not that much, but from 3.5 to 3.3, on the inflationary side.

Mr. T. Reid: Five to six per cent.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Exactly. We have moved that far. We also made certain comments in there on what we think our optimum position should be with unemployment. And I might say, just for the sake of the committee's information, that in this instance we are following federal policy as closely as we possibly can. I think our policy is almost identical there.

Mr. Sargent: You cannot go wrong then.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: That may be one place where we cannot go wrong, but I will tell you there are a number of others that are wrong.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Chairman, I have another short question. I would like each question to be judged on its merits. If it is out of order, fine.

What are the different types of unemployment in Ontario, according to the Minister's view, and how does the provincial-fiscal policy affect each of these kinds of unemployment?

An. hon. member: Very good question.

Mr. Chairman: Try and be consistent, I still feel that the first part of that question is out of order, if we are trying to direct ourselves to the machinery of the decision-making process as distinct from their results. But perhaps the Minister would like to comment.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I will, if the hon. member would repeat that again. I did not get it too well.

Mr. T. Reid: I will of course abide by your ruling. Could the Minister elaborate on the mechanism and the systems he uses to estimate the seriousness of the time lags involved of his taxation fiscal policies to achieve the provincial objective of his policies which he stated are a certain level of minimum inflation and certain level of minimum unemployment? What system has the Treasurer set up in the taxation fiscal policy part of his office, to get at the degree of seriousness of the time lags involved?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: There again, Mr. Chairman, it is very difficult to be specific about that. But all our continuing research, our day-to-day research, week-to-week if you wish, is directed at that. I cannot get into this thing by chapter and verse or specific terms. I suggest to the hon. member that, if he would like to think about it, he would almost be able to determine the processes he would use himself. But this research goes on all the time. It never stops. It relates to the day, or the week again, as I said before, or the month, but you cannot lay down anything specific today because there are a whole host of other considerations that bear a relationship to it or have an effect on it. So it must be a continuing research process.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Chairman, if I understand the Minister correctly, is he saying that he really does not know what the time lags are in terms of the impact of his fiscal taxation policy on unemployment and price inflation in this province?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, I am not saying that at all. Let us see if some of this information would be—the latest unemployment rate is down to 2.7 per cent on a seasonally adjusted basis. This is getting close to optimum in Ontario, so more stimulus, if you like, might easily get the economy overheated. This is a word we used in our Budget statement too. It is a fine balance at a certain point as to how far you go. You could affect the economy either way. But at 2.7 per cent the bulk of our unemployment is the variety that will always be with us and I think that must be recognized. I really do not know how to pursue this any differently, Mr. Chairman, but I think these must be the matters that determine the decision-making processes.

Mr. Chairman: Economic planning?

Mr. J. Renwick: Before we pass to economic planning, I want to reiterate very briefly the position which I have taken with the Treasurer's question. He referred to the fact that most of what we are talking about was in the Smith committee report or the select committee report. I am simply putting the proposition that once he has presented his Budget, and all the budgetary papers that he wants to present, we here, in order to inform ourselves for the purpose of adequately assessing the government's policy-making decisions, are entitled to know the "comprehensive policy options which were available to the government". I do not accept the proposition of the Treasurer that he is using other than rhetoric when he talks about "comprehensive policy options" if he is suggesting for one moment that the great bulk of what was in his Budget was in either the select committee report or in the Smith committee report.

The fact of the matter is that, so far as capital gains tax is concerned, it was not recommended by either the Smith committee report or the select committee report, and yet the Minister has provided for that. Neither of those reports recommended that the province give up the corporations tax, a tax field which, if properly exploited by this province, would provide a substantial amount of money.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: We did not propose to give it up, we proposed to have it centrally collected, which Smith recommended. We did not propose to give it up. If you examine our position, we want to retain our share of the revenue. We did not propose we give up corporation income tax. I ask the member, how could we?

Mr. J. Renwick: Well, as I understand what the distinction is I do not want to get into—

Mr. Chairman: Well, this is not the member's question.

Mr. J. Renwick: I simply want the Minister to correct me if I am wrong. I understood that what he said was that they would turn over the corporation tax field to the federal government on some negotiated basis. Is that correct? That is quite a different position from the position with—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No.

Mr. J. Renwick:—respect to the income tax where there may very well be a common collection basis. What page is the Minister referring to?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Page 59, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: I would point out we are drifting into the Budget physically now.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Chairman, I would like to try to keep the point of order of the member for Riverdale and ask the Minister the following question—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I would refer the member for Riverdale to the second paragraph under section 5 on page 59 of the budget.

Mr. T. Reid:—in the study prepared for the Ontario committee on taxation by James A. Johnson entitled "The Incidence of Government Revenues and Expenditures" on page 77, there is a table, table 5, entitled "Net Fiscal Instance of Government Revenue and Expenditures Programme, 1961". I would like to know if the branch in the Minister's department concerned with taxation fiscal policy is updating the research results from 1961 to 1966?

The reason I am asking this, Mr. Chairman, is that it seems to be very important for the Minister to know—even if he will not let the hon. member for Riverdale know—what the net fiscal incidence of the Ontario government's revenue expenditures programme is—or, if you like, taxation fiscal policies are, on the various income groups in this province. For example on the income group $7,000 to $9,999 and on the lower groups and the upper groups. As he knows the report by Mr. Johnson utterly condemns the burden of taxation and expenditure policy on the lower income groups in Ontario.

Mr. Chairman: We are getting well out of order again, I would suggest.

Mr. T. Reid: I would like to ask the Minister, Mr. Chairman, whether his department is looking at a more up to date measure of what is called the net fiscal incidence of government revenues and expenditures?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, of course, this is a continuing process and if this was not made manifest in the Budget that was presented in this House on Tuesday I do not know anything that was—

Mr. T. Reid: Not what you hope it to be, but what it actually is.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well we have moved toward that and I suggest that that is dealt with in here, too. We have indicated to the House on Tuesday the incidence of taxation as prescribed in the Budget for the upcoming year. It is broken down in there percentage-wise to show that it effects high income groups, and corporate levels, if you wish, much more than the low income groups. I might say now, and I am not trying to be political about this because it has been mentioned many, many times, if there was anything that made us aware of regressive taxation it was the two per cent social development tax imposed by the federal government.

Mr. T. Reid: If I could again ask the Minister my question, which he did not answer, because I think he may have shown his ignorance of the terminology I was using.

I asked him about what is called net fiscal incidence. I did not ask him just about the incidence of taxation, because he ought to know now the result of the expenditure programmes of his government on the people of Ontario. I suggest to him, through you, Mr. Chairman, that the incidence of expenditures really makes the lower income groups, and the middle income groups—$6,000 to $10,000—much worse off under his Budget for next year than they were previously. But he does not know that, because he has not bothered to do the studies.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Oh, Mr. Chairman, that is not correct, but we will let that ride.

Mr. Chairman: Economic planning?

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, just before we leave taxation and fiscal policies, the Minister was perfectly right. I had misunderstood the corporation tax proposition contained in the Budget. It does not alter my basic point, a disagreement between the Treasurer and myself as to the kind of information to which we are entitled here after the Budget has been presented in order that we can adequately assess the governmental decisions on budgetary policies. I leave that point.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, under this vote, will the Minister advise why economic planning and the—

Mr. Chairman: We are just coming to economic planning, is that the one you want to speak on?

Mr. Sargent: You are through taxation, are you?

Mr. Chairman: I believe so. All right, we are at economic planning.

Mr. T. Reid: No, taxation.

Mr. Chairman: You still have questions on it? The hon. member for Grey-Bruce had better wait.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Chairman, one of the background papers for the Ontario committee on taxation was prepared by Clarence L. Barber entitled "Theory of Fiscal Policy as Applied to a Province." On page 38 there is a statement concerning the dependency of economic growth in Ontario on an adequate and continuous supply of social capital.

I would like to ask the Minister about the objectives of his taxation fiscal policy and the mechanisms designed to measure their achievement within his department. Are these studies being done to show the degree to which economic growth, low rates of inflation and low rates of unemployment are dependent upon a very high rate of increase in social capital involving schools, hospitals, social welfare and the whole works? What studies are being done now to update the previous studies?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, Mr. Chairman, I would simply have to say that that is a continuing day-to-day function of the taxation and fiscal policy branch which we are examining right now.

Mr. Chairman: Economic planning—the member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: There seems to be some reason why economic planning and regional development is in this vote. In my opinion, it should be under The Department of Municipal Affairs. If we want to talk, Mr. Chairman, about the bad economic situation in Grey and Bruce counties and I asked the permission of the chair to talk about that I would not get very far tonight. But where are we going to talk about that if we are going to talk regional planning? Is this the place to talk about it?

Mr. Chairman: Probably not under economic planning but the scope of regional development would be wider.

Mr. Sargent: Does the Minister not agree that this is the baby of Municipal Affairs? Why have we got this slot here?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well it is here. I do not know that that is—

Mr. Sargent: It does not matter, it is all dollar bills but—

Mr. Chairman: Earlier in the day, before the member for Grey-Bruce entered the House, it was agreed that regional development would be the last item we would deal with and I would suggest it has a much wider scope than economic planning.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I am only taking a moment, but when we make reference to economic planning in this context, it is total economic planning, aggregate economic planning. When we come to analyzing the economic growth or the economic situation of Grey-Bruce, then this is a part of the studies undertaken by regional development.

Mr. Sargent: This is my very point.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, we agreed to leave discussion of that matter until later on under vote 2402. It was agreed to leave it so that some of the material that was tabled today could be studied.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, during the estimates I can find myself relating to all or the most of the topics one way or another but I find it difficult to relate to the economic planning. I find it equally difficult when I find the Treasurer making a statement about something called total economic planning. Perhaps he would give an explanation to the House as to the function of the economic planning branch of his department.

Mr. Chairman: I think not. I think an explanation as to what the estimate means is fundamental to our understanding of it.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I could recite a number of them, there are many here, and probably if I recite some of them they will exemplify what this branch does. For instance, in the natural resources field, the study being undertaken now, or in process, involving international trade in forest products, deal with Canada's trade liberalization policies with implications for the forest based industries; there is a study in process involving the current economic situation of Ontario's pulp and paper mills; a report prepared in support of policy decisions by the Ontario Water Resources Commission re pollution by pulp and paper mills; there is an appraisal of cost benefits, techniques and recreational programmes, and this was undertaken at the request of The Department of Lands and Forests. These are samples of what it has done. They are in preparation.

The study of Ontario's iron ore mining industry—a comprehensive study including an analysis on the impact of the mining tax within the industry; there is a review and assessment of recommendations presented in the report on the special committee on farm income in Ontario being prepared for study, and this will include an analysis of the implications of these recommendations and their possible effect on broader considerations bearing on the provincial economy. This is what we mean by the aggregate economy, if you wish, all matters that bear on that. A continuing review and analysis of Ontario's agricultural policies, in particular as they relate to farm productivity, farm consolidation and returns on factors of production, in close liason with The Department of Agriculture.

There are many more here, but this is a sample of what is being done. I do not know how far to go with it—more studies are related to water supply and demand in northern Ontario; a matter of a bridge from Kingston to Wolfe Island to Cape Vincent; the economic background of that, the economic potential for development in a broad area of such a bridge—that study is nearing completion—the trends in job families and educational achievement levels of the Ontario labour force—this is in draft form now—an analysis of industrial man-power requirements by skilled families, for education and training purposes—there is a host of these.

Productivity trends in Ontario and Canada for the 12 year period between 1952 and 1964—this will be an analysis of output and productivity changes which affected demands for labour, hence for training and education. These projections have been updated to 1966 and comparisons with United States trends have been made as part of our continuing studies on manpower requirements. This is an example of what is undertaken by this particular branch, on a continuing basis.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the Minister would furnish me in due course, I do not mean during the estimates, with a copy of the studies which he is referring to, and being undertaken in this branch.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes.

Mr. J. Renwick: I take it from the description of the topics that some of them would be initiated within the Economic Planning Branch, and others are obviously requested from other sources.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes.

Mr. J. Renwick: Could the Minister, at this point, give any indication of the number of other departments which are using the resources of the Economic Planning Branch for this kind of forward study and planning.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes. A good number of them are. I just do not have the precise number, but—

Mr. J. Renwick: The bridge fascinates me. Was that at the request of the member for Kingston and the Islands!

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, we must give him credit for initiating the idea that prompted the study. Yes, we will give him full credit for that. I presume he must have known that you were going to ask the question. But The Department of Highways and Department of Transport associate themselves with them. Most departments do in one way or another, some more than others, but the branch is available to all departments for assistance or direction in the field of economic planning and will undertake studies for any department where there is a proper relationship.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Scarborough East.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Chairman, would the Minister classify the Opposition Parties as departments of government for this purpose? So that we could have access to the research skills that you have in your department.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Brantford.

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): In terms of economic planning in your department, do you examine social goals in things like hospital beds, schools, and so on—the social necessities—and then decide to plan your economy to generate the necessary social capital, either through tax revenue or various other sources to be able to pay for these particular social needs? Is there any correlation between the social needs of our society and your economic planning?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes.

Mr. Makarchuk: Well, in that case, Mr. Minister, could you give us some indication as to your goals in terms of social needs and services in providing hospital beds, we will use that as one example. And could you, from the statistics that you have available, indicate to us when you are going to meet that particular goal? What year?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No. I do not think I can be that precise. Neither am I prepared to say that there is that much shortage of hospital beds now. We made it prior to the budget statement, or associated papers—look, you asked a question, let me pursue it. In certain health care areas we have been obliged to curtail our capital construction programmes for this year. But we work with The Department of Health, or will work with them, so they have associated facilities of their own with the Ontario Hospitals Services Commission or the facilities of the Health Insurance Registration Board. Now if there are any specific assignments related to economic planning that they would want us to do, we would be happy to undertake them.

Mr. Makarchuk: Mr. Chairman, let us move into another field. As an example let us take housing or places in universities and so on, there are many areas of social need. Now what I want to know is, are you looking at the areas of social need and deciding what you are going to do in the other sectors of the economy to ensure that you are able to provide either the housing or the places in universities?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, of course, we are looking at them and our plans are made manifest in those circumstances. They have been outlined again, as I say, in the papers which I presented to the House on Tuesday for the budget year. But it should be obvious, I think, to the member that these are matters—

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): It certainly is not in the budget—there's nothing obvious about it at all.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: —these are matters of study that are continuing all the time.

Mr. Peacock: Nothing obvious about it at all.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, why should it not be obvious? Because you are over there you think that it is not being done? This is an absolute fallacy.

Mr. Makarchuk: Mr. Chairman, you know you may have your plans but you cannot live in plans, you have to have houses to live in. What I want to know is when you are going to implement your plans to provide the necessary housing, to provide the necessary hospital beds or schools or whatever it is again in the social or the public sector? What we want to know is when you are going to put those plans into something tangible and solid, or when are we going to have the housing?

You can't live in a plan, you know that.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No. The function of this branch is to do the economic planning. The decision-making process, I would say, rests with the various departments of government who are responsible within the limits of the funds that could be made available to them through the budget.

Mr. Peacock: Well we are back, Mr. Chairman, to the point raised by the member for Riverdale. Just what is obvious about the links between this particular office of the Minister's department and the policy options that he talked about in his Budget statement, which he chose? There is to me absolutely nothing that is obvious at all about the provision in the Budget, by way of example, Mr. Chairman, of $55 million for investment in housing and the work of this policy planning branch. Nothing whatever.

Mr. Lewis: Make the connection for us.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: All right, we would be just delighted to do that, Mr. Chairman.

Let us get back to the functions of the economic planning branch that is under discussion now. This branch has been responsible in the first instance for bringing together the Ontario Housing Corporation and The Department of Municipal Affairs in the whole field of housing and urban affairs, the goals of the two and the recommendations to the government on the appropriate level of housing. These studies are carried on in co-operation with the department by this branch.

Now, the member made reference to our proposal to set up a fund which would make mortgages available. Surely it has been stated in this House often enough that one of the roadblocks in the way of providing housing is the difficulty of obtaining mortgages particularly at the present high cost. This is what prompted us to propose that we will set up a capital fund to be administered by the Ontario Housing Corporation for this purpose on a revolving basis. I have indicated it would probably be $50 million to start the fund and it may turn out that this is sufficient as it revolves; it may eventually be sufficient to take care of the requirements.

The figure is not firm, it is an example of what might be made available. Now, there again, if that is not dealing in adequate terms, following examinations through the economic planning branch and translating them into action to relieve the housing situation, I simply have to ask you, Mr. Chairman, what is?

Mr. J. Renwick: Well, that is what we want to find out, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I have told you.

Mr. J. Renwick: Well, the point which my colleagues, the members for Brantford and Windsor West are speaking about, is very clear. Is the economic planning branch accepting any responsibility for the assessment from the other side of the coin?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: What other side?

Mr. J. Renwick: In terms of social need in the province? The member for Brantford raised the question about housing. Now, we have had the Ontario Housing Corporation before us for two sessions in the standing committee on government commissions, and we will have them before us for a number of other sessions in order to answer questions which we have placed with them. But it is obvious, on the basis of the information which they have provided us with at the present time, that they have no conception of what the economic or social need for housing is in the province of Ontario. I am asking the Minister whether the economic planning branch is engaged in that kind of fundamental study as to the extent of the need, the social need, in the field of housing, in every one of its categories. And whether or not it is engaged in all the other aspects of housing, because it is perfectly clear that the Ontario Housing Corporation limits itself to a market operation in terms of (a) construction and, (b) rental or sale. It is totally involved in that context. Now, that is an entirely different thing to the social need for housing.

It seems to us that we have to ask the government; we have to ask this department; we have to ask this branch, to accept the responsibility of preparing, through the statistical centre and the information centre and all the resources which are available, a total assessment of the social need for housing. A total assessment of the kind and quality of housing available in the province of Ontario. A total assessment of what is happening to land costs and a total assessment of what is happening to building costs, in order that this department can come up with the basic information on which the government can finally come to grips with the question of that social need.

I am quite certain that the Minister can nod and say "yes, we understand that" but at the risk of taking a little bit of time, I am going to talk about the other matter.

The member for Brantford referred to hospital beds and an assessment by this branch, if it is a social economic planning branch, and not strictly an economic planning branch, in the non-human sense of that term, and whether or not there is an assessment of need in that area. Then I would like to say to the Minister, "Well, all right, in the fifth report of the Economic Council of Canada we have again that same question raised and that is the question of poverty".

Housing is an aspect of poverty in the province and I want to know whether or not the economic planning branch, renamed if necessary, the social economic planning branch, is concerned at all about the kind of fundamental research which would enable it to attack what the economic council claims to be the major problem in Canada, and that is, the incidence of poverty.

One has only to refer to the fifth report of the Economic Council of Canada in order to find statements such as this:

Statistics cannot adequately describe poverty, but used with care they are capable of furnishing important clues to the types of policies likely to be effective against poverty. It is evident from the incidence figures that income is more likely to be low when one or more of the following characteristics are present: (1) the head of the family has no formal education beyond elementary school; (2) the family lives in a rural area; (4) the head of the family is not a member of the labour force; (5) no member of the family worked during the year; (6) the head of the family is 65 years of age or over; (7) the head of the family is a woman.

Then you can get into the whole question of the level at which a person's money income permits that person to say that he is not a poor person.

Now, is this branch engaged in the kind of fundamental research which would enable it to attack what the economic council claims to be the major problem in Canada, and that is, the incidence of poverty.

I have spoken about housing and I have spoken about poverty. There is also the whole question, Mr. Chairman, of jobs. The Minister, each year that I have listened to the budgetary presentation in the House, has stated that the labour force is growing at a faster rate than the number of jobs available. We also have the very generalized statement made by the Prime Minister about the jobs for students during the coming summer.

Now, I want to know whether or not the economic planning branch is, for example, studying the problem of jobs, the availability of jobs in the province of Ontario and whether or not they are going to be adequate in terms of the projections of the population trends of the province.

I want to know whether or not this branch is making any study of the basic number of people, who can be called, for the want of a better term, hard-core unemployed persons.

Are any plans being made to re-absorb them if they wish to be re-absorbed and can accept that kind of training, back into the labour force.

Is this kind of fundamental social work being done in that department or are we restricting the activities of the department to things called "the census of manufacturers" or "the census of forestry". Is the government getting down to the gut problems of people's needs in the province of Ontario?

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Chairman, I have a similar series of questions to the hon. member for Riverdale, which I could put if the Minister would—

Mr. Chairman: Well, probably the hon. Minister could handle these both at the same time, if the member for Scarborough East wants to speak on the same point.

Mr. Lewis: Does the Minister not want to reply first?

Mr. Chairman: Well I would suggest it would be simpler if the Minister replied to both together.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, if there are a number of related questions I might as well reply to them all at once.

Mr. J. Renwick: No, we want to have a debate.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Oh, you want a debate. I did not think you wanted a debate. I thought you were just looking for information.

Mr. J. Renwick: We want to be able to extract more information, but it is very difficult.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well I am going to try and give you the information in much less time and much less words than you asked the question, if I may. Let me set out, if I can, the terms of reference for the economic planning branch, and then I will try and be a little bit more specific.

This expanded branch is now responsible, as I said before, for the aggregate analysis of the Ontario economy, including forecasting, the establishment of targets, and the identification of problem areas and bottlenecks. It is also responsible for the study of individual sections of the economy relating to the supply and distribution of specific resources both human and material. I emphasize human and material. And in that broad context I think follows most of the things that you made reference to, if not all of them. And the—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, I said, I think, most if not all of them, but I would say, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Brantford has a right to his opinion. The results of the sectoral studies will be fed back—

Mr. Lewis: He is much reassured.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, well, we get a little reassurance from you once in a while, I think it is only fair to give you some back.

The results of sectoral studies will be fed back into aggregate analysis, because an important decision made in areas such as industrial development, labour relations, resource development, education, or transportation, frequently has important applications for several areas of government concern, which the hon. member for Riverdale touched on. In research and policy liaison the branch will work closely with the taxation and fiscal policy branch, and with the regional development branch, again embracing many of the problems to which the hon. member made reference.

Now, we have now five professionals essentially on natural resources and transportation. We have three on manpower and social security and housing, and we have two on aggregate analysis and forecasting. I cannot sum up an answer for the hon. member any better than to give him this general information, because it embraces, I believe, all the things that he made reference to.

Now, with respect to the matter of employment—

Mr. Peacock: It does not show up in the policy.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: On page 49 of the Budget paper we mentioned large increases in employment in Ontario in 1969 could lead to slightly lower levels of average unemployment. The labour force will grow by a further 103,000 to reach a level of 3,037,000, and the expansion of economic activity will probably create about 105,000 new jobs so that average unemployment could drop from 3.5 to 3.4 per cent of the labour force.

I just simply say this to you, Mr. Chairman. This information came off the top of nobody's head. It was the result of studying by the economic planning branch and related branches.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Scarborough West, and then the member for Scarborough East.

Mr. Lewis: Well, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Chairman: The member for Scarborough—

Mr. Lewis: West, as a rule, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: West, and then East.

Mr. Lewis: We will move from West to East; I have no objections whatsoever, Mr. Chairman.

My problem, Mr. Chairman, through you to the Minister, is to comprehend what the estimable gentlemen in his department are doing. If there are five on aggregate analysis, or five on—what was the first, manpower analysis?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, natural resource development.

Mr. Lewis: Natural resource development, and three on manpower, social security and housing, I think he said, and two on aggregate analysis. One finds it difficult to envisage, to conceptualise, what they do in terms of the policy options which are enunciated by the government. One is loath to reflect poorly on the economic planning secretariat, but the gap between planning and reality is almost more than can be coped with.

Now let us take one of the obvious areas, Mr. Chairman, the area of housing, just in terms of what the government is prepared to do. If memory serves me, the government budgeted $62 million last year for direct investment in housing, used $19 million of it, and has this year budgeted $56 million. All right. The $19 million that the government used, of the $62 million last year, was 40 per cent less than it used the year before, and it has now again lowered the maximum figure.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it was elicited from the Ontario Housing Corporation last week, that the evident need, based on a survey in the province of Ontario today, is for 34,000 family and senior citizen units, and that the Ontario Housing Corporation presently has 7,000 units under construction—roughly 20 per cent, if that, of the total requirements.

Would the Minister like to explain to me, Mr. Chairman, how the economic planning of these reputable people in the economic planning secretariat can bridge the gap between 20 per cent and 100 per cent—between 7,000 and 34,000?

I want to comprehend how the studies that are done reflect on the options that are given. I want to understand how the Minister justifies the sense of priorities which he has apparently established, and calls economic planning.

Mr. Chairman, it may have been economic planning which would have been worthy of Adam Smith, conceivably edging into Ricardo, but in the middle of the twentieth century it is economic madness, it is not economic planning.

There is no planning in a department which falls 27,000 houses short in terms of construction starts, and then pretends that there is some basis for overall guide lines. And that is not even a basis of need, that is just on the basis of surveys, of some statistical data which we have on file in various municipalities.

And if it is that bad in housing, Mr. Chairman, then what must it be in university capital construction? What must it be in the area of hospital beds? What must it be in the field of poverty? What must it be in the analysis of the work force requirements?

Other than in romantic, highly rhapsodic and irrelevant terms, how can the Minister's planning secretariat relate to the day to day realities of the way human beings function, and the requirements they have in this society? That is what agitates us on this side of the House: the gap, the continuing gap, in the government between what it posits and what it produces.

The gap is absolutely overwhelming in the case of all these social areas. It is sad, indeed, to suggest that we now have an economic planning secretariat which appears to be so far behind the needs. Maybe the secretariat has to be increased in numbers. Maybe its terms of reference have to be altered. Maybe it should be working more closely with government departments. But in the context of the needs as this government itself has exposed them, this branch is almost impotent in terms of its effect on the "economic options." That is really what we are putting to the Minister, Mr. Chairman. A plea to understand how one relates to the other, and it is absolutely incomprehensible to the members on this side. I would like him to try to explain that to me, and then I have one other point I would like to raise with him.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member said that the branch was impotent, so I think I will just leave it that he said that. I think I will leave that alone.

Mr. Lewis: Well, all right, Mr. Chairman. You accept that your branch is irrelevant?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, I do not.

Mr. Lewis: Then I would like a defence of the branch, a stirring defence of the branch, by the Provincial Treasurer. The Provincial Treasurer knows how to rise to that, I have seen him do it in this House many times before.

I think it is a legitimate question, Mr. Chairman, in terms of the information that is elicited from this Minister in this department. When, on the one simple point that you are 80 per cent behind the requirement for houses—27,000 units short; obviously abortive in terms of the amount of money you are prepared to set aside—admitting yourself in your budget statement that you have cut off all kinds of social priority areas for the purpose of enhancing other areas, or for so-called financial austerity, we want to know, Mr. Chairman, where all this high-level intellectualized, profound, thoughtful, economic planning relates to the provision of houses. Just as simple as that.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Just as simple as that?

Mr. Lewis: Right.

Mr. Sargent: You want to give dialogue only on what you can answer!

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Oh, we will give you some dialogue. What would really help me to answer the question is if you would keep quiet.

Mr. Sargent: Thank you, dad.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Just a simple statement of fact.

Mr. Chairman, first of all I will go back and answer the hon. member this way. Is the hon. member proposing the Ontario government should assume unto itself, financially and otherwise, the total burden for housing in Ontario?

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I am asking the hon. member, I am not asking you.

Mr. J. Renwick: You can understand as clearly as I can.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, let him answer.

Mr. Peacock: Don't you even set a target?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: But you make reference to the total starts. I have already indicated to you one of the major roadblocks in the way of achieving housing starts in this province or anywhere in Canada. That is the lack of mortgage money.

An hon. member: So what are you going to do about it?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I have said that already. The lack of mortgage money, available funds. I stated in the Budget address that—

Mr. Sargent: Well, you have money to built these big monuments around here; these government buildings—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I will just take an aside here and say that that programme has been totally curtailed for the second year. There was nothing added to that complex last year or this year.

Mr. Sargent: It is about time.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No funds were provided for it.

Now, I will go back to the hon. member if I may. You will have your turn. First of all, we stated in the Budget address or paper that we have been able to obtain much-needed mortgage capital from private sources during the last year, substantial amounts. If we had not done that, had not been able to avail ourselves of some assistance from the private sector, the picture would have been much worse than it is. We cannot rely on that forever. We cannot rely totally on CMHC for the funds required. If we could, they would be much fatter. The picture would be substantially better. This is why, on the advice that we get from our economic planning branch of their studies and the close relationship to the taxation and fiscal policy branch, which is manifested in the Budget, we have decided to set up our own revolving mortgage fund. Because without mortgage money, I am here to suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, and to the hon. member that we will have problems meeting our housing demands.

This is one way we have attempted to do it. There are others. We have pleaded with the federal authorities for more funds from CMHC. Let me put it this way to you, Mr.

Chairman: Compare the rest of Canada with Ontario and you will see that the record of housing starts, short as it may be, is substantially better than any jurisdiction in Canada, substantially better.

Mr. Lewis: That does not provide the houses for 27,000-family and senior-citizen units presently on the list. And that is not need, that is just a survey of those who do not have any shelter that is adequate at all.

Mr. Chairman: The member is straying from the estimates.

Mr. Lewis: And the fact, Mr. Chairman, that there is a revolving mortgage fund has nothing to do whatsoever with direct investment in the housing market. Even if the federal government were half responsible, you would still be falling 30 or 40 or 50 or 60 per cent behind what you had guaranteed to undertake.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, we would not.

Mr. Lewis: Well, frankly, Mr. Chairman, I will divide it for him. If you divide 34 by two, you get 17 and you provided 7,000 of the 17,000, 7 of the 17,000 units so you are at least, in your own terms, 10,000 units behind: more than 50 per cent behind.

The point that I am making, Mr. Chairman—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order if I may. I think we have been rather generous with our debate on a subject that should really be debated on the estimates of the Minister of Trade and Development. Mr. Chairman, just hear out my point of order.

The economic planning branch, in its general terms—and I have explained its functions in some detail—is being used here as a vehicle to get into a full-scale debate on housing and I do not think it is appropriate.

Mr. Lewis: Well, Mr. Chairman, it was appropriate as long as the Minister was prepared to answer, then suddenly, it becomes inappropriate when another question is raised, in exactly the same area—

Mr. Chairman: Order. The rule as to appropriateness, I think, has to come from the chair and not as a result of an argument between two of the combatants.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, may I speak on the point of order which the Minister just raised?

Mr. Chairman: May I suggest to you that the discussion did get out of order on both sides of the House?

Mr. J. Renwick: That is precisely the point I want to say. I want to express to you, sir, that the discussion did not get out of order. What we are simply saying is that there is an economic planning branch of the government. There is a corporation which is an agency of the government, called the Ontario Housing Corporation.

The evidence before the standing committee on government commissions is perfectly clear that that corporation considers itself a builder, buyer or constructor of dwelling accommodations. It considers itself a landlord in the sense of renting within the market place. And we wanted to find out whether or not this branch of the government is the government which is dealing with the other aspects of housing. And the other aspects, Mr. Chairman, are very simply the question of need, the question of the cost of land, the question of the construction of houses, the question of the availability of capital and the question of whether or not the dispersal of housing can be done in such a way that people can be housed.

I believe that is quite appropriate within this branch unless the Minister says no, this branch does not engage in that kind of research. But he has indicated, in a marginal way, that, yes, it does touch on it and I am suggesting to you that the Minister's point of order should not be allowed because his point of order was simply that this was appropriately under Trade and Development. Our point is that it is appropriate only under this branch of the government and the only branch which is seized with the obligation of doing any kind of planning. They call it economic planning, we believe that it should be social economic planning.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Chairman, are you recognizing another speaker at this point?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, we are on a point of order. I do not—

Mr. Chairman: Let me put it this way. As far as the Chair is concerned, a criticism by anyone in the House relating to a breakdown in planning is relevant, if that is the criticism, and it can be answered by the Minister. The Chair does not quarrel with the proposition but, of course, the Minister is not a witness, he does not have to answer. It is up to him.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I introduced the specifics because I wanted to make it real, and not to argue in the abstract. Perhaps the Minister is right: there will be other times we can raise housing more specifically in Trade and Development. I think what I was trying to elicit, Mr. Chairman, was the relationship one to the other, and I fear, sir, on the basis of what has been given, that the economic planning secretariat is some abstract, rarified group of highly intelligent men whose usefulness bears no relationship to what the other government departments do. At least, not to what they are now producing. If that is the nature of the economic planning secretariat, Mr. Chairman, then I am rather sad that it has been emasculated in that fashion.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Scarborough East.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Chairman, I would like to return to a discussion of the economics of the planning branch, and to try and elicit from the Minister an understanding of what that branch is doing in the way of economic policy formation.

I think the Minister must realize that the whole basis of the theory that underlines economic planning is very shaky these days in economies such as the one in Ontario and indeed in North America. The gist of my remarks, Mr. Chairman, is whether or not, in the economic planning branch or the secretariat, there are detailed studies of the basic premises on which the Minister's Budget has been based. If he acknowledges the fact that his Budget is a tool of economic planning and I think he has acknowledged that fact, then I would suggest to him that the economic planning secretariat must be involved in basic and fundamental research, a great deal of which is not being done in Canadian universities because many of the economists are geared to an examination of problems in the United States. For example—

Mr. Chairman: That is your question, is it?

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Chairman, I would like to have fair treatment from you in this House. The member for Riverdale and the member for Scarborough West were on a very substantive issue as they defined it, and as you accepted it to be. They have debated this for over half an hour and I would like to have the same privilege in this House.

Mr. Chairman: Is the rest another question or another proposition?

Mr. T. Reid: I would like to elucidate an example as the hon. member for Scarborough West did in the area of housing, I would like to relate it to a couple of specific areas in the area of economic planning, and if you granted him that right and the hon. member for Riverdale the right to throw in examples, to elicit information from the Minister, I, sir, as a member of the official Opposition would also like to have that right in this House.

If I am out of order, they were out of order, and I do not think they were out of order.

May I continue, Mr. Chairman? Thank you.

Mr. Chairman: But we cannot stay in order, I would suggest to the members, if we allow a multiplicity of examples because that quietly turns our discussion, which is in order, into another kind of creature.

Mr. T. Reid: I suggest, sir, again, if you want to be arbitrary and use discretionary power and apply it unjustly in this House between the two Opposition parties, I would suggest, sir—

Mr. Chairman: Well, conclude your point.

Mr. T. Reid: Thank you very much. For example, Mr. Chairman, there is a considerable debate among professional economists in the so-called free enterprise economies, concerning the degree of built-in flexibility in the application of monetary and fiscal policies as well as other aspects of economic policy making.

Now if the Minister is not examining what is happening to other economies, if the Minister is not examining what has happened in the Ontario economy concerning the degree to which his policies result in a built-in type of flexibility, then I suggest, sir, that he does not really know the impact of his budget on economic growth in this province.

Another area which is pretty serious, I have mentioned it before, is the area of time lags, and I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that the Minister's Budget, which must have been based on advice from the economic planning branch, assumes certain characteristics about the time-lags involved in the impact of various aspects of his Budget. The big debate across this continent, sir, and in western Europe, in the European Common Market, in the European Free Trade Area, is almost the nature of these time lags, their extent, and the degree of their sensitivity to fiscal and budgetary policies—taxation policies.

Not only that, sir, his Budget assumes that there is in fact a substantial impact of his fiscal and taxation policies when that in itself is being questioned, as indeed it has been questioned at the federal government level. To summarize my type of questioning, sir, I would like to put it this way: At a time when the whole theoretical basis of the premises upon which this Budget has been based are open for debate among U.S. economists in particular, the Minister brings into this House a Budget based on those questionable premises.

The Minister brings in a Budget which is based on text books written five and seven years ago, not on the recent articles as coming out in American Economic Review for example, of which the federal government is very much aware. I suggest that the time-lag in his thinking is a very serious time-lag. And I suggest, sir, that the Economic Planning Branch is not feeding him the most relevant information on which he is basing his budget.

So I would like to ask the Minister to what extent have his senior economists been travelling around, not just to talk to their counterparts in Ottawa, but to go down to Harvard where a lot of the latest research is being done, to Chicago? Whether or not they are pursuing studies summarizing the latest review articles, questioning the very premises on which this Budget is based?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Lewis: It has not done the federal Liberals much good.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Not very much. I was just about to say that one of our senior economists spends I guess, about three-quarters of his time with the Economic Council of Canada, so I doubt very much if we are being fed information out of text books that are outdated. I might say we do not rely too much on text books at all.

I know the particular tendency on the part of the hon. member to place a great deal of other people's opinions on the record of this House but I suggest to you that we do not require to do that. We have, in my opinion, one of the finest economic, planning, taxation and fiscal policy branches that exists in Canada at any level of government and we are satisfied with the advice that we get.

Mr. Lewis: That is probably true and it is a pity no government department listens to them.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: They listen a great deal, we listen a very great deal. I am going to come back once more to the question of the hon. member for Scarborough West—and we are back again to housing.

The target proposed by the Economic Council of Canada for Canada was 200,000 starts—agreed? Ontario's target was 90,000. The private sector has, one way or another, provided for 73,000 starts, and the public sector 7,200 starts or a total of 80,200 starts achieved. This works out as I calculate it to about 89 per cent of Ontario's objective. The Economic Council's target is for total housing, not public housing only. Public housing, of course, is a partnership arrangement with the federal government. In this area it takes two to evolve the solution to the problem—we cannot do it alone. But we recognize the need for public housing. We are not in complete agreement, I might say, with the recommendations of the Hellyer task force. As a matter of fact we are not in sympathy with very many of them.

Mr. Lewis: They are building tasks instead of houses.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: But we have been building houses of course, and I want to emphasize it. It may be imperfect, but we think it is pretty good. There have been many studies in this branch that have led to the high priorities the government has been putting on housing and I repeat what I said a few moments ago—it has been heard in this House, it has been read in statements that we have submitted at federal-provincial conferences of Ministers of Finance, and this has been done the past two years—that we assign the highest priority—or one of the highest priorities as far as the economic well-being of Ontario is concerned—to housing. This has been stated very, very clearly and succinctly.

Unfortunately there have been times when staff and funds have tended to reduce some of the potential of what we might have liked to do, but I would just simply say to you, Mr. Chairman, and through you to the hon. member, that we have conducted with the Ontario Housing Corporation a full commentary on the Hellyer report. We have studied it thoroughly and again these branches are relating their efforts to this particular fundamental problem that you, quite appropriately, address yourself to.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, just to reply to the Minister, and thanking him for the figures, I will not dispute with him the Hellyer report—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I would rather not get into that.

Mr. Lewis: All right. That document is an absurdity, it is not relevant in this Legislature and it was predictable before they began their junket. There is nothing substantive in that; it is typical of federal Liberals.

But, Mr. Chairman, what the Minister is saying is that the private sector produced 73,000 of the 90,000 housing units and in all the apparatus, resources and substance of government you were not able to produce another 17,000 units. And to this day, by virtue of your Budget, you are not prepared to make the direct capital investment in financing those units, let alone what is required next year.

Now the simple proposition, Mr. Chairman, in terms of the priorities, is that the same Minister had no qualms whatsoever about maintaining the level of highway expenditures at exactly the same level as last year, or even higher than that. There was not the slightest possibility of a cut in that area in southern Ontario, where cuts could be made quite legitimately, but every possibility in the world of cutting housing which relates to sheltering people—human beings, not some inanimate objects.

If that is the sense of government priorities, Mr. Chairman, then it casts an extraordinary pall over the capacities of this economic planning secretariat. What kind of economic planning secretariat is it, Mr. Chairman, that provides options such that a Cabinet can choose highways over the construction of houses?

In terms of the Minister's own submission, in terms of what he is putting to the House, I simply cannot fathom what it is that motivates either this branch or, indeed, the Ministerial policy itself. He could not find the money to build an additional 10,000 homes, yet he can find all kinds of money for pretentious and lesser-priority items and horse racing—$1,800,000 again—but, Mr. Chairman, not sufficient direct capital investment for housing.

It seems to me it is too humiliating for the economic planning secretariat. I can imagine that the two men who are sitting in front of the Minister are fairly writhing in attempting to control their discomfort at the suggestion that in their planning choices they would put highways before provision of houses.

I want to come to the defence of the economic planning secretariat, Mr. Chairman —demeaned by the Cabinet, slurred, affectionately slurred by the Minister, obviously without integrity in the provision of services. Somebody has to defend these reputable gentlemen, and we in this party are prepared to come to their defense.

It is a simple proposition, Mr. Chairman, that the economic planning secretariat has probably made some of the studies to which the Minister alluded, it has probably given certain priorities, and the Treasury Board over there, whose priorities are as perverse as any set of priorities could be, rejects the information, and rejects the statistical data.

Some of the Ministers indeed, like the Minister of Trade and Development, would not know the significance—so as a result the economic planning secretariat is rendered some kind of frivolous appendage that is trotted in here at estimate time and then trotted out again for a Budget white paper.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: The member is getting ridiculous now.

Mr. Lewis: Well, do something for your economic planning secretariat and implement their recommendations rather than treating them that way.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. The Minister very badly misinterpreted one of the remarks I made.

My statement was that his Budget contained very questionable economic premises. I did not mean to say that his very highly skilled economists made that type of recommendation to him. For him to stand up in this House and to accuse me of slurring the ability, the professional competence, of his chief economist and his chief economic planner is a slap in my face that I do not appreciate.

His Budget has premises in it that are probably out of date. I dare say, sir, that if he would make the studies of his economists available to the members of the Opposition parties, his ignorance and the ignorance of the Treasury Board would become obvious to all.

Mr. Lewis: If you allow the chief economist to speak—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: If there was any sense of insult to the hon. member I apologize. I was not attempting to criticize his observations.

I was just reaffirming to you, sir, what we think of our economic planning people. I shall do it again, and again, as long as they are held in any type of contempt, or whatever you like to say, because you will be surprised to learn that we have a rather satisfactory partnership basis of working in The Department of Treasury between all our branches. Very satisfactory.

One observation, and that, I think, will do for this debate on economic planning and housing. I would like to propose to you, Mr. Chairman, that if we could pry loose some $35 million that is on Mr. Hellyer's desk, that belongs to us right now, we could get along with some public housing.

Mr. Lewis: If we could pry Mr. Hellyer loose.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, we cannot use Hellyer. We can use his money.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please!

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, may I ask of the Minister if his department is consulted when industry decides to move into a given area, because of the socio-economic impact? I specifically refer to the Ford move into Talbotville, because I wish to know if the department was consulted before Ford moved in there. May I have an answer?

Mr. Sargent: Economic planning.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, that is true, as a matter of fact all the economic branches were part of that very department at that time, so there was quite close liaison.

Mr. B. Newman: Did the department recommend to Ford that they move into the given area, or was this a choice that Ford Motor Company made on their own.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, I think it is fair to say, Mr. Chairman, that the Ford Motor Company made the choice of the area. From that point on, there were many discussions about the economic impact and availability of land, the availability of transportation, the availability of water and all those things associated with the decision in which the economic branch was involved.

Mr. B. Newman: Did the ministry department list various other areas that the Ford Motor Company could have moved to rather than simply say you must move to Talbotville?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I do not think we went that far. It is very difficult, I think, for the government to positively direct a company like Ford to go to any particular area of the province—

Mr. Lewis: Including Allied Chemical and Union Carbide?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: But, the particular area they chose was, for a variety of reasons, quite satisfactory.

Mr. B. Newman: Is the Minister prepared to follow some of the recommendations of the regional development councils concerning location of industry?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Did you say to consider the recommendations of the Ontario development council?

Mr. B. Newman: No, regional development councils.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Regional development? Yes, of course.

Mr. B. Newman: In the regional development council of the St. Clair region, specifically, one of the recommendations is that industry should not move into a given area. Now, an industry willing to move into an area—and I am going to use the town of Kingsville for an example—one of the recommendations of the study states specifically that the area is to be a dormitory, and a commercial centre—not for manufacturing. Were a manufacturer to come along and move into the Kingsville area, would your department recommend or suggest that it move into another area?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, that is a possibility, a distinct possibility. I think you might discuss this matter with the Ontario Development Corporation, they use some sensible guide lines for this purpose. I do not think that they are just simply categoric about a community that they want to move into. They have some criteria and some terms of reference for that purpose.

Mr. B. Newman: Well, I can understand that, but you said a while ago, Mr. Minister, that you would be willing to follow the recommendations of a development council. The recommendation is that industry should not move into a certain area, then you would come along and say to an industry: you are not to go in there, but you are to go into other areas that the regional development council specifies—and they name areas designated for manufacture now. I am referring specifically to the St. Clair regional development council.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, you asked if those recommendations would be considered, and I said of course they would. I am not in a position to tell you yet what decisions will follow because all these reports will be examined, the recommendations will be considered, and they will go to considerable length to making up the policy of the regional development branch.

Mr. B. Newman: But you would not specifically say to the industry, you must move into a given location.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: What we would say, in terms of the incentives that are offered, is that the incentives would only be available if the criteria that supports them are met.

Mr. B. Newman: But you would not necessarily follow the recommendations as laid down. Okay, thank you.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Not as specific.

Mr. Chairman: Administration?

Mr. Pilkey: Economic planning.

Mr. Chairman: I thought we had finished with that. Well, then the order would be Grey-Bruce and then Oshawa.

Mr. Sargent: I do not think it is fair for us to flog the Provincial Treasurer on the economy. I do not know how he got wearing this hat, but I understand that his estimates are up first so he can get away for a well deserved rest, I guess, after that two hour speech.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: That has something to do with it.

Mr. Sargent: I would like to ask the Minister whether there are tax credits and tax incentives through this branch for industry moving into a depressed or designated area.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, Mr. Chairman, there are no tax incentives that I am aware of. There are other incentives, of course, in terms of the equalisation of industrial opportunity programmes.

Mr. Lewis: They are not incentives, they are—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, they are incentives.

Mr. Sargent: For years we have been having these reports, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Lewis: They are handouts.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: They are the incentives we use. They are working, they are very effective.

Mr. Chairman: Would the member please continue on the economic planning branch. I think really that is trade and development.

Mr. Sargent: We are talking about planning, economic planning, and the whole motivation behind this is to get the have-not areas back in the ball game. We have been reading for years about Grey-Bruce, fifty-first and fifty-second lowest incomes. People get $2,000 a year total income from their farms up there. These areas need support, but we have been reading about this for years and nothing happens. So, if this is economic planning then why do you not give these people tax incentives and tax credits? You say to these industries specifically: "You go to the Grey-Bruce area to locate and you will get tax credits and tax incentive programmes".

If we are going to have really true planning to help out these economically distressed areas, this is the route we should take, Mr. Chairman. There is nothing, in my mind, ever happens. I could go through this book and quote you some glaring things you would not believe—that in this day of 1969, there are 700 families in one area who take in less than $2,000 a year.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: This should be under 2402, item 7.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: I think, Mr. Chairman, there should be some statement by the Minister that he will consider tax incentives and tax credits for my area, because we are the last on the economic scale in this great province. We talk about it but nothing is done about it. I am not so naive as to think that the Minister would not help out a member of the Opposition because it is a Liberal seat. I think these people, as Ontario people, should be recognized.

Mr. Pilkey: Mr. Chairman, does the economic planning branch consider the building of old age homes? Is there any planning in that regard? I want to make this point: homes for the aged are comparable to the question of housing that my colleagues have raised, and I understand that prior to the Treasurer bringing this Budget down, that the Minister of Social and Family Services stated that in 17 locations in the province of Ontario there would be a curtailment of the building of homes for the aged.

My question is: Is the economic planning branch in this field as they are in housing?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: As I tried to explain before, Mr. Chairman, it is fair, I think, to say that in the aggregate sense they would be; but in specific terms, no, I do not think so.

Mr. Peacock: Never bring your estimates in so close to the Budget.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I guess the member is right.

Mr. T. Reid: Could I ask the Minister, Mr. Chairman, if the economic planning branch of his department is engaged in a study of economic costs of air pollution—for example the fact that in areas of high pollution the people have to paint their houses more often, that the finish on their cars wears off more quickly, let alone the health hazards to productive members of the labour force perhaps dying five years earlier than they otherwise would? And if he is, Mr. Chairman, could he explain how the results of this research are reflected in his Budget?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, yes, we have very active studies under consideration in The Department of Health. There is nothing reflected in this Budget but there shortly will be—not only air pollution but a number of related matters are being considered by the branch right now.

Mr. T. Reid: Would the report, such as this report which is being done in The Department of Health, come to the economic planning branch of the Treasurer's Department for evaluation before it goes any further, before it finds its way to those people who chop programmes? In other words, is the economic planning branch really an economic planning branch or is it just another ad hoc approach in trying to unscramble some of the social-economic problems in this province?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I do not know that it will have to come in that sense. It will be a joint study, a joint study by the staff of the economic planning branch and the Health people. As a matter of fact, they met very recently to work out the study process on a point basis.

Mr. T. Reid: Well, Mr. Chairman, what happens if another department refuses to cooperate with this economic planning branch? Who decides?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I would answer that question by saying that the departments of this government do not refuse to co-operate, they do co-operate.

Mr. T. Reid: Oh!

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Do not say "oh", because I am very much aware of the extent of the co-operation that exists, very much aware of it.

Mr. T. Reid: But, Mr. Chairman, there is a question of final authority here. In other words, if the Treasurer of the province decides that there shall be co-operation among his economic planning personnel and people doing research in some other department, then co-operation takes place? Is it his decision? Or is it a Cabinet decision? Or is it an administrative decision within, say the upper echelons of the civil service?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, no, economic planning and other branches of The Department of the Treasury, I mentioned earlier, are available to all departments for assistance on any matters that have an economic relationship or otherwise to what they propose to do. And I have indicated the extent to which we take on assignments for departments on request, I have also indicated the type of aggregate studies we do which in effect involve all departments. And I simply say to the member that the relationship in terms of communication and co-operation is very great indeed. There is no question that more and more decisions are being considered that cannot be decided in isolation. Does it not become evident that where a decision involving this sort of thing is concerned, it involves one or more departments, two or more departments, to the extent that more than one department are involved—and it is probably a good way to say it—that the economic branch of the department that I administer at the moment can be a very great catalyst in doing this on a joint basis. It is being done more and more all the time and it will continue to be done. There is no lack of co-operation among departments in this area at the moment.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the Minister's full response to this; I think it is a very important question and I know he considers this to be important. But the words he has used in replying are quite interesting. He said the economic planning branch, the secretariat, "responds to requests" from other departments, that the economic planning branch is a "catalyst."

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: It can be in those circumstances.

Mr. T. Reid: This is good, I do not knock the Minister for this. But what I am concerned with is whether this economic planning branch is the nerve centre of economic planning in this province or whether it just responds. And if it does not just respond, does it initiate, does it have the power of initiation of research over the objections of another Minister in the Cabinet? Suppose, Mr. Chairman—and I know the Minister is following this very closely—suppose he is advised by the senior members in his economic planning branch that while there is a study being done, say, in The Department of Highways on the economic benefits, or why external economies as they are called, of highway development in certain areas, it is a very badly run study and is being done by, in their opinion, incompetent people, that the time for the results of that study to come in is too far away, and they advise him, "Look, if you want to make rational decisions on Budget allocations, we had better have a better study than the one being done." There is a direct conflict between the advice the Minister is receiving and his colleague, the Minister of Highways, and the research being done there. Who, Mr. Chairman, who in the government decides who has the last say? Is it really the Treasurer who says to the Minister of Highways, "Sorry, Minister of Highways, the research being done by you is not good enough, my boys are going to take over and co-operate with your department because we need better research and we need it faster?" Is the Treasurer the Deputy Premier of this province in terms of economic planning or is he just another member of a fragmented approach to the economic development of this province?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I regard that as a very good question. I have explained before the extent to which studies are not only initiated in the aggregate sense by the branches, I have indicated the extent to which co-operative studies are undertaken by The Department of Treasury and Economics. I would also draw your attention to what I think I observe, that studies in other departments will eventually reach our branches for information's sake and if some refinement is required that will be undertaken. But I do not think anybody has to—nobody in our government has to—say to another Minister who is undertaking some research in any field that, "You know, really, that is bad research, we will take it away from you and will do it properly ourselves," we do not do it that way. But the relationship as far as economic research or applied research, if you like, is concerned—and it is mostly applied research in the department—the applied research then can be translated into broader research in the branches of the department that I represent and that I administer. So I think that has to be the answer to the hon. member, I think that should be satisfactory.

Mr. T. Reid: Would the Minister apply that response to research being done by the Ontario Housing Corporation, by the Student Housing Corporation, by Ontario Hydro? In other words, there are commissions of this government, Mr. Chairman, which are independent, shall we say, to a much greater extent than a department, and I know since the Minister is interested in economic planning for the province as a whole, in an integrated sense—what happens if he feels that something is going wrong with the impact of, say, Ontario Housing Corporation, or even better in economic terms, Ontario Hydro, in terms of regional development, economic growth and so forth? Water resources is another one. What happens if he feels their policies and their research evaluating the impact of their policies on the economic development and growth in this province are inconsistent with the desires, his own views, shall we say, of economic developments in this province? Can he turn around and order a study from within his department about the economic impact of the policies of Ontario Hydro and the Water Resources Commission and so forth? In other words, what I am really asking, sir, is: Where is the final lever of power in terms of economic planning in this province? If it lies with the Minister I wish he would say so. If it does not then it exposes economic planning in this province as a complete fraud.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, Mr. Chairman, I do not think I want to talk about the final power. Probably the central responsibility for this rests with The Department of Treasury and Economics. I think that is a better way of saying it.

We, for instance, have a co-ordinating committee with Hydro, a committee of our people and theirs. But this is a co-operative, co-ordinated effect. I can think of few circumstances where the various agencies and commissions of government do not come to us and solicit our help when economic research and planning is concerned. Their research departments come to us for the economic planning that is required. In the broad sense of the word, there is no power element needed in this government because it is not done that way. It is done on a basis of either central responsibility for some things or separate responsibility that only the departments can undertake. But in that broad framework I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, there is much communication, much co-operation and I am not aware of any need for anyone to have central powers, as the hon. member has suggested.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Chairman, on this same line.

I would like to throw into this debate the instance that happened last summer and which I spoke about in this House a week ago, where the Minister's research people and The Department of Municipal Affairs both had their staffs working hard in Waterloo county to build up a synthesis to determine the kind of future which that county ought to have. After a great deal of study, when both these staffs were working hard and the Fyfe commission was ready to bring its report forward, the Minister of Trade and Development announces proudly one night that he has bought acres of land, three thousand acres, in the heart of that planning area and he is going to build a new town.

Now I know that this came as a shock to the Minister across the way. It came as a shock to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Here was an illustration of the very thing which the member for Scarborough East was talking about and I think here is a place where this kind of problem emerged.

Now we do not know what happened after that. As I said in the House I expect the next Cabinet meeting must have been a beaut. But who resolved that problem? Where is the centre of power?

Who set the Minister in his place and who is finally resolving that problem which the Minister of Trade and Development created? A problem where the staffs of the Treasurer and Minister of Municipal Affairs, as well as that of the Minister of Highways and the several other Ministers, had worked hard and, suddenly, another Minister came in and blew the whole thing sky high.

Mr. Chairman: Is the item carried?

Mr. Young: No, surely the Minister has an answer?

Mr. T. Reid: He doesn't understand.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, how did this matter of power get in here anyway? I do not know what prompted the hon. member to introduce it at all. But I guess it is fair to say that if there is a centre of power, it is the Cabinet itself or the Cabinet committee on policy.

I do not propose myself to be designated or regarded as having any central power. For all practical purposes, it is not needed and the matter the hon. member referred to now is past history. I do not propose to comment on that.

Mr. Pilkey: Mr. Chairman, I just want to follow through on this point for a moment.

If the economic planning council makes specific recommendations—and let us go back to this point that I raised earlier, the question of the additional facilities or homes for the aged—and the economic planning council outlines the specific need in this area, does the Minister, through you, Mr. Chairman, make the policy that they proceed with this? Or does the Minister that is in charge of that specific department make the decision to proceed? Or is it an entire Cabinet position, in terms of this policy?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, policy decisions are invariably Cabinet decisions.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, would the Minister, having alluded to it, inform the House who is on the Cabinet committee on policy? What is the Cabinet committee on policy? The Committee, the central Politburo where final power resides—who is on this committee?

An hon. member: The executive committee?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: The committee is headed by the Prime Minister—

Mr. Lewis: That is reassuring.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes it is. There is nothing more reassuring that I can think of. The Treasurer is on it and five other Ministers.

Mr. Lewis: Do you know them?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I know them very well. I know them intimately.

Mr. Lewis: Can you name them?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I can.

Mr. Lewis: Would you vouchsafe them to the House?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I can try. There is the Prime Minister; the Treasurer; the hon. Minister of Correctional Services, who just left his desk; the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Bales); the hon. Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Randall); and the hon. Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Wells).

Mr. Breithaupt: So that is what he does?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Oh, he does a great deal. More than you do right now, as a matter of fact. Maybe more than you are likely to do.

Mr. Lewis: I may say I was reassured at the outset; as the list went on, I became rather more anxious. The idea of a serious policy committee with the Minister without Portfolio and the Minister of Trade and Development is enough to cause an economic nightmare. The idea of a significant exchange is almost too much.

Mr. Chairman, just a reflection, if it may be permitted. I think what we have seen in this debate this evening is the triumph of the technocrats. The Ministry, the government, have finally come to the point where the managerial elite, the technocrats, have now moved in in very serious ways to the policy making areas. There is a lot of power that resides in that branch of that department. That comes pretty clear.

An hon. member: You mean Wells?

Mr. Lewis: But it is kind of fragmented at the moment, Mr. Chairman. One does not have the sense about an overall economic planning secretariat in that crucial term where you have an overall direction of policy, but one has at least a sense of some policy, and a gentle sorting out of fratricide between Ministers and between departments.

I want the Minister to know that when there is serious overall economic planning, he will not have any problems with this party in the House. Maybe the next time the estimates roll around in some of these areas we can get into tough-minded scrutiny of what the priorities are and what the realities are. Maybe then his economic secretariat will have been given the prestige that economic secretariats require in order to function.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: The peculiar thing about these economic people to whom you refer is that they have infinite stature all across this country except over there where you sit.

Mr. Lewis: No, Mr. Chairman, it is precisely that point—no one worries about their infinity. It is the finite aspects of their work we are concerned about. When you make that transfer for us in the House then our respect for them will exceed even what it now measures.

Mr. Chairman: Carried?

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Chairman, excuse me, we are not putting this vote. As I understand it, the Minister agreed to stand down this vote until we could come back to regional development, is that not correct?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, we agreed earlier, Mr. Chairman, that the regional development vote could be the last vote.

Mr. Chairman: That is right.

Administration, economic and statistical research.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Chairman, on the section administration, economic and statistical research, I would like to get from the Minister some idea of the problems that this branch of his department encounters in getting primary research data from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics in Ottawa.

I had the opportunity several summers ago of doing a research report for the Privy Council in Ottawa and had to deal with the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. I found it shattering to say the least, Mr. Chairman, to find that it was very, very difficult to get very important statistical information from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics because of The DBS Act. So I would like to ask the Minister first of all if he can give us some idea of the kinds of data—perhaps by some system of classification—that his department is not supplied with from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

In other words, Mr. Chairman, I know, because of my involvement with the Dominion Bureau of Statistics on a research study, that DBS will not make available to researchers for the federal government certain types of data. Thus, I would like to ask him whether DBS refuses to supply his economic and statistical research branch with certain types of data, and if so, could he give us some idea of the classification of that data?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I am advised that we do not have any more access than the federal government itself to certain classified statistical information but we have a number of inter-related committees dealing with probably everything else.

Mr. T. Reid: I realize it is difficult for the Minister to answer in detail the question I put to him but I would like, Mr. Chairman, to have at some future date—hopefully some time in the next couple of weeks, if at all possible—a statement from the Minister, perhaps just privately, if he might share with the New Democratic Party the detailed list of information perhaps that his Economic and Statistical Research Branch has requested from DBS and has been refused because of some peculiarities in the interpretation of The DBS Act. I think this is terribly important.

The significance of this question and the answer to it, Mr. Chairman, is simply this. If the Treasurer's economic and research branch personnel are unable to get certain kinds of information relating to the economic development and growth—and, indeed, even some of the social statistics that the hon. members for Riverdale and Scarborough West mentioned—if this research branch cannot get that data from DBS, then I suggest that we should really protest very strongly to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics and the federal government for a change in The DBS Act.

The reason it is so important, sir, is that the Minister has told us that he is getting into rational budgeting, capital budgeting, and the works. It is a very excellent statement, but the fact is that unless he has adequate statistical information on a massive basis to feed into his big hungry computers, he will not be able to make the best rational decisions about how to allocate very scarce funds in terms of the various priorities of the province. I would just like to say, sir, that for my part he and his researchers have my strongest support in getting after DBS, but I would like to have the facts on it.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Whatever facts we feel can be disclosed will be disclosed, but I would say this: We are not denied any information that we feel we need, or any information that we cannot produce ourselves. We feel we are being well served by DBS.

Mr. Peacock: It is a political problem and not one of DBS?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: It could be.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Chairman, may I suggest to the Minister that if DBS is collecting certain types of data, say relating to housing, or relating to poverty in Ontario, and the Minister has requested some of this—or perhaps it is even more subtle than this. He will not request it because he knows he cannot get it—and then he gets involved in a separate collection of this data—that to me is very, very expensive and should be placed on the agenda of this government for discussion at the next federal-provincial conference.

I think in the area of research there must be complete cooperation between the statistical collection agency of the federal government and what I gather to be the central statistical collection agency of this government, because without that type of cooperation research is useless.

Mr. Chairman: Ontario statistical centre.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I have no special knowledge in this area. I am very much indebted to the article "Development of Information Flows for Economic and Financial Policy Formulation" which appeared in the Ontario Economic Review at the end of last year. I have a number of questions I want to ask arising out of that article. I would ask the Minister if he could comment upon this development of the central information system and what progress has been made in establishing that system? And how does it differ from the way in which statistical information is presently gathered and analyzed and programmed for the purpose of his department?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, this relates to some extent to what the hon. member for Scarborough West spoke about. A great deal of this is obtained from DBS; probably all we require is obtained from DBS.

Mr. J. Renwick: I do not want to belabour it if the Minister is not familiar with it, but in this article by the executive director of this particular area he says:

An adequately specified central information system must be designed to meet the multiple needs of economists and statisticians concerned with the development of analytical techniques.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: This is precisely what the hon. member before you discussed.

Mr. J. Renwick: Well, he indicates that it must be designed, and I am wondering what it is about the present operation that requires redesigning in order to meet the requirements of a central information system. It may be that the member for Scarborough East spoke about the same thing but I just did not understand it in that context.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, it is like anything else. I think, Mr. Chairman, it is safe to say that it needs refining, it needs further sophistication and improving all the time. This is what the reference in that particular article is concerned about.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, on the amount of $410,000 for data processing; this is computer services, is it? It is systems and programming—charges for data processing, item 9—$410,000. Is this computerization?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, and all the systems—

Mr. Sargent: Is it book entries or is it charged back to a master programme?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: The amount referred to there is associated with the total amount of data processing systems work for the whole department, or departments—that amount is associated with that only.

Mr. Sargent: Well, the only point, Mr. Chairman, is that we have the same pattern you are trying to follow for regional government—to do away with duplication of services. That is the motivation for regional government. Is there a central fund of information so that statistics could be jointly processed across Canada through one bank instead of having duplication? You are spending $3 million here in this department for statistics. Is there no way you can trade information with Ottawa and save this $3 million expenditure here?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, I do not know that this is altogether relevant. This is associated with the cost of the services provided through this vote.

Mr. Sargent: For Ontario?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: This vote is for Ontario, yes.

Mr. Sargent: Well, it would seem to me, Mr. Chairman, that Ottawa would, if they were doing their job, have this information at their fingertips. If DBS is doing a job, they would have this information.

Mr. Chairman: Ontario statistic centre.

Mr. Sargent: Now just a moment. We are talking about $3 million in this section here and—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I might point out to the hon. member that these are the administrative costs, the staff.

Mr. Sargent: Yes, but who needs it? Who needs it?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: We need it; it is payroll.

Mr. Sargent: The point is—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: It is payrolling, it is pensions for the whole department, administrative data processing, the issuing of payroll cheques, deductions from cheques, pensions for instances.

Mr. Sargent: We are on different wavelengths. I am talking about—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: We are indeed.

Mr. Sargent: I am talking about the fact that the Ontario Statistical Centre—the budget is $400,000 for that chunk there; systems and programming $604,000; economic analysis is $194,000. To the average man on the street, the guy that carries a dinner pail—he is the fellow that we should be thinking of and he cannot sense any more in this than I can. So somewhere along the line, if you are talking about efficiency, there should be a trading of information back and forth between Ottawa and the different economies of this country. It seems to me you could—there is some dent you could put in $3 million by working with Ottawa.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Mr. Chairman, just a brief question in regard to data processing. Is this offered for the other departments or is this strictly for The Department of the Treasury?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: This is the cost for our department, as I mentioned before.

Mr. Deans: I am sorry, I must have missed your explanation.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: This relates to the cost for the service to our department.

Mr. Deans: I wonder if you indicate whether the increase of about 32 per cent over last year is in increased salaries or increased staff or where you get such a large percentage increase in that particular vote.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: It is associated with the use of the computer service centre; hardware is the technical term for it. As the service expands then the more it is required. As the government functions grow, the service requires to be expanded from time to time. This vote will always grow. I do not think it will ever stay static because, of course, the services demanded of it grow at the same time.

Mr. Deans: I can then assume it is because of expanding services and more people involved?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes. That is right.

Mr. Sargent: Do you rent computer services or do you own them?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: We rent these facilities.

Mr. Sargent: In all the operations of the government, how much money do we spend each year on computers?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: We would have to obtain that information. I would say to the hon. member there is a very large computer service in The Department of Highways. It is being consolidated more all the time but there are some computer facilities that I would suggest cannot be totally consolidated. To use Highways as an example, the computer facilities there are largely associated with engineering. So that they bear no relationship to some of the other computer functions.

Mr. Sargent: You cannot use their equipment?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes we can. If there is capacity there, we can assign certain programmes and other departments do, too. I forget how many departments use the computer at Highways.

Mr. Sargent: How about Education?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: They have their own. The function is centralized to the greatest extent possible at the moment although it is hopeful that it can be further centralized.

Mr. Sargent: Then it would be safe to say we spend maybe $5 million a year on computers in this operation here? I would like to ask you how many people have you displaced since you have installed computers? How many people have you laid off to take up the slack there?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I am bound to admit I just do not happen to have that figure at my fingertips here. It is true that computers replaced personnel but I would not have that information and I do not know whether it is safe to project a figure without more information. As you assumed, it was safe to say that it cost $5 million. We can get this information for you and make it available.

Mr. Sargent: Have your efficiency people in your planning, have they analyzed some way of—if this is a $6 million recurring cost from year to year—you cannot buy it; I imagine it is a straight lease or rental deal. But my information is that one computer can handle fantastic work loads, and so I would suggest that if you have more than one computer in the overall operation you have more than you need because you cannot keep one computer going. They have such a big capacity. So if you have a figure like $6 million a year in that area, then you probably have a lot of duplication.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Chairman, I have a question of the Minister. I understand that the Bank of Canada has been involved for a number of years in a very sophisticated computer model of economic growth for Canada and that this is broken down by regions and provinces. I was wondering, what is the relationship between this aspect of the Minister's operation and the work being done at the Bank of Canada? If there is a transfer of knowledge between the Minister's group of researchers and the researchers at the Bank of Canada, is the Minister purchasing the results of this research? Are his officials meeting with the Bank of Canada officials to discuss the relevancy of their computer programmes for forecasting in the Ontario economy to help him and his economists understand better the economic forces in Ontario, so that he can have a more rational allocation of scarce resources in his budget?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes. We are not purchasing anything from the Bank of Canada model that you made reference to, although we have engaged ourselves extensively with them in studying it and we are now going to produce our own, fashioned after the model that the Bank of Canada has developed.

Mr. T. Reid: The two models would likely be consistent, then, so there could be continuing co-operation

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Their model, incidentally, I am informed, is not broken down by provinces.

Mr. T. Reid: Is it a sector analysis so that you can accumulate into the provincial component?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, we have to develop our own, but we can use the same model technique.

Mr. T. Reid: I think you should talk to the Bank of Canada; talk to the people up there and tell them to—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I did. It was interesting. We went to see the Bank of Canada when we were at the federal-provincial conference.

Mr. T. Reid: Another question, Mr. Chairman, is this. There is an item of $37,000 for a statistical study and survey costs and I would like to know whether the survey costs are the costs of surveys run from within the Minister's department or whether these are contracted out to various institutions. If so, which institutions?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: It involves $6,000 to the information system data bank, $2,000 for geocoding, $4,000 for the census of forest and manufacturers, waste disposal $3,000, input-output tables $3,000, hydro, labour, management statistics $3,000, credit union $1,000, a central list of industrial establishments $5,000, small area statistics $4,000, coding for the retail sales tax branch $3,000, and other statistics $3,000, for a total cost of $37,000.

Mr. T. Reid: I would gather from the Minister's reply, then, that the costs of survey research were for research done by members of his department as opposed to that contracted out to, say, the survey centre at York University.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes.

Mr. Chairman: Systems and programming?

Mr. J. Renwick: Before we move on, perhaps this could be a place where the Treasurer could give me some assistance. The prior estimates showed a total in the government, as far as we could establish it, of $2,500,000-odd for data processing, listed in about seven departments; Agriculture $28,000; Attorney General $103,000; Health, something over $1,000,000; Lands and Forests $150,000; Provincial Secretary $37,000; Social and Family Services $7,000; and the Treasury $1,159,000. Is this the kind of processing operation that lends itself to a centralized operation in the government, or, of necessity, must data processing be decentralized into the particular departments?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Maybe I can answer it by saying that it is one of the terms of reference that has been assigned to the productivity improvement project, to look at this and determine the answer to the very question that you have raised.

Mr. Sargent: This efficiency survey that you are going to spend $300,000 on—this is part and parcel of this? You would analyze this area?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes.

Mr. Chairman: Systems and programming.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, could the Minister give us some indication of the types of surveys presently being carried out, statistical surveys being carried out, or new ones that are planned by the centre of statistics or by this particular area of his department?

The only ones that are referred to in this particular report are ones dealing with the census of manufacturers, the census of forestry, study on mortgage registration and a municipal assessment survey, which, of course, is very pertinent right now.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, those, combined with the list I just read out, that is it, yes.

Mr. Chairman: Systems and programming. Economic analysis. That would then carry vote 2402.

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): No, there is regional development.

Mr. Chairman: Oh correct; that is to be dealt with not at the end of this vote, as I understand it, but at the end of all your estimates, Mr. Treasurer?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well I stand corrected, I thought it was the intention to leave it until all the estimates were through, because of the time factor. I doubt if we have had time to look at those things yet.

Mr. Lewis: We have read eight of the ten.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: You have read the eight that are available?

Mr. Chairman: That brings us to vote 2403, general expenditures, disbursements; wait now, it should be finance executive, if we are following the summary at the top of page 179.

Mr. J. Renwick: I have some questions but I am not quite certain where the appropriate place to ask them would be. I would assume that this is probably the appropriate place for trying to get some information about the factors that enter into the decision of the government as to whether to borrow or not to borrow, and where they are going to borrow. For example, what the decision was in this present Budget as to whether they should or should not borrow in the market.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: This would come under taxation and fiscal policy branch, which we have just dealt with; which has just been voted—fiscal policy.

Mr. J. Renwick: Well I am very—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: What else?

Mr. J. Renwick: Well, I would assume that I can get to the points that I am interested in under the new bond issues, or studies and trends in public finance. I am looking at the heading "finance". Under this programme, all matters relating to cash flow of the public debt of Ontario are administered, including new bond issues, the servicing of existing debt and the management of certain capital aid corporations. I would assume that any remarks that I wanted to make in either, come under, what, public debt, or under finance executive and finance management?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I would suggest finance management.

Mr. Chairman: Can we clear off finance executive then? Agreed to?

Finance management.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, on this would the Minister explain to me, as a taxpayer, why, I say kindly, why you would travel on a junket to Germany to borrow money when the Hydro is borrowing money, they borrowed $75 million on New York market three weeks ago. Their credit is good in New York, but the province's credit is not good in New York. Now why do we take a junket over there when you could borrow in New York?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, Mr. Chairman, I will show you how totally inadequate that statement is—

Mr. Sargent: Well, we have to start some place.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: That is fair enough. Actually, we borrowed in New York for the Hydro account. Hydro cannot borrow on the United States market. It was an Ontario loan for Hydro purposes.

Mr. Sargent: Well, I must apologize. It said on the financial pages that Hydro was borrowing the money. I do not know.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: It is an Ontario Hydro Electric Quebec issue but it is the—

Mr. Sargent: No, it is Ontario Hydro.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Ontario Hydro, I should say, Ontario Hydro Electric Commission issue, for all practical purposes but it is borrowed on the credit of consolidated revenue fund of the province of Ontario.

Mr. Sargent: All right, then why did you go to Germany if you could borrow in New York?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, the province went to Germany for its own capital requirements in the amount and to the extent that was proposed in the Budget of a year ago, the equivalent of $100 million, for all practical purposes. The reason we went to Germany for our purposes was to take some of the pressure off the Canadian capital market—

Mr. Sargent: I am talking about the American market.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, I agree you are. And for the same purpose we financed our Hydro requirements in the New York market.

Mr. Sargent: Now come on, that does not make any sense at all.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Now just let me pursue this. We borrowed for Hydro purposes in both the American market, the New York market, and the Canadian market. You will observe that the New York loan was followed very shortly by a Canadian loan, a matter of some short weeks after. But, the purpose of our going to Germany was twofold. First of all, it reduced the pressure on the domestic capital market, let me put it that way, and secondly, we borrowed at very favourable rates.

Mr. Sargent: Better than New York?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: We announced the rates in the House.

Mr. Sargent: I would just like to know.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, by something on the combined order of three quarters of 1 per cent, to 1 per cent better.

Mr. Sargent: And repayable in what money?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Repayable in Deutschmarks.

Mr. Sargent: And if there is a rise in the economy it will be a darned expensive loan then, if they have a rise in the economy. Sometimes it makes you wonder who won the war. I think it is degrading that you would have to go to a nation like that, when we have this great economy of ours down here to the south of us that controls about 90 per cent of our corporate wealth here anyway.

You go to Germany when you could borrow money in the United States, saying that it would deplete the money market, which is ridiculous. The amount of money you borrowed in Germany will pay the interest for 45 days on our debt, so after another 45 days you go back for another trip. Our debt is $1.5 million a day in interest that we are are paying now.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is not being either reasonable or sensible when he says that.

Mr. Sargent: I think it is ridiculous to take a junket like that.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: If the member will recall again the observations made in the recent Budget statement, we have so ordered our capital requirements, our cash and liquid reserves, to the point where Ontario does not have to go to the capital market at all in the next Budget year.

Mr. Lewis: That is what you have said.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: It is not just what we say, it is true. As far as our budgetary position is concerned we say that we cannot perceive the necessity of going to the capital market again.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): I thought you needed a billion dollars for Hydro.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I said "the province of Ontario account."

Mr. Nixon: The Minister just said a moment ago that they were the same thing.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, yes, but the hon. leader of the Opposition heard the Budget too. In this way we clear the decks for Hydro's continuing substantial requirements.

Mr. Nixon: But you go to borrow for Hydro?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I am talking about the Canadian market.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, to clarify this situation, we are talking about finance management under this, and the Minister makes a statement that a $50 million loan he received in Germany would deplete the money market in New York.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: There is a limited number of times you can go to New York for money.

Mr. Sargent: Oh, it is not only New York, there are 48 states down there, there is Los Angeles, we have offices all over the states down there.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: They are short of money themselves.

Mr. Sargent: I think this is a misleading statement. When the Minister has this $3 billion debt, he tells the House that a $60 million loan would affect the money market in this area. It is ridiculous to make a statement like that.

Mr. E. A. Winkler (Grey South): The member for Grey-Bruce should be the financial adviser.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I do not propose to answer that question because the hon. member does not understand.

Mr. Sargent: I certainly do not, and a lot of people are as stupid as I am.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I am interested in the procedures the Minister follows when he does decide to borrow. I assume from his earlier remarks that the actual decision to borrow does not fall under this particular branch, it falls under the preceding branch, or is made by the Minister.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, it is a moot question—

Mr. J. Renwick: Let me assume, for the moment, that the government were to decide that they were going to borrow for budgetary purposes. Then would it be this particular area which would decide or would recommend—not decide, but recommend—the market in which the borrowing would take place, and state what the options are that are available to the government in terms of borrowing—the Canadian market, or the New York market, or the European market? And would it be this branch of the government that would negotiate with you to carry out all the details that are involved in negotiating the loan? Is it personnel from one or the other of these areas, the finance executive, or finance management?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, Mr. Chairman, it is both. It would be in that instance, or related instances, the Deputy Minister and the comptroller of finances, who would provide the advisory services to the Minister to make those determinations, as to where to go for capital, when to go and the type and term of security, the rate of the coupon and the price and all those related matters that go with the bonds or debentures that are being sold.

Mr. J. Renwick: Would it be that same area that would make the assessment of what, if any, exchange risks were involved in borrowing in the European market in this last venture of the government?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes.

Mr. J. Renwick: As a matter of curiosity, why is it that Hydro itself cannot borrow in the New York market?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: The Securities Exchange will not permit it.

Mr. J. Renwick: Does the Minister know the reason for that? Again, as a matter of curiosity?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: They require the credit of the consolidated revenue fund of the province.

Mr. Nixon: What about Consolidated Edison? As a private company, could they not go to the New York market without having the backing of New York state?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: As a private corporation, they probably could. Hydro in itself is a different type of creature; its asset structure is not the same as a private utility corporation would be.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if any study has been done as to what would happen to Hydro's borrowing rate if in fact it were cut loose from the credit of the province?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: It would cost them a great deal more, in my opinion.

Mr. Nixon: Because surely they must have equivalent financial status now as any of the large private American power companies. They are much larger—their facilities, their in-plant facilities, their capital market, must be much larger than most of those private corporations.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, there is a difference. They are not a corporate structure.

As I say, the asset structure and liability structure of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario is not the same as a private corporation or a public corporation; it is different. I do not know just how to go into more detail on that, but the security for the loan is not vested in the Hydro-Electric the same as it would be in other circumstances.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, I recall when I was in civic politics that when the debenture debt of a municipality was 25 per cent of the total assessment, then we were, as you know, approaching insolvency, and the government will move in and take over. Does the Minister agree that is a pretty good guide line?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: It is for a municipality.

Mr. Sargent: Okay, what is the danger point so far as financing—our gross debt now is about $3 billion, roughly—what is the danger point that caused you to say it was a financial nightmare? How close were we to a financial nightmare some three months ago?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: In this context, we were neither close, nor are we likely ever to be.

I suppose the yardstick that might be applied here to the one that the hon. member is referring to, as far as municipal debt is concerned, is the most recent recommendation by the Smith committee on taxation—that our debt could reach the proportions of nine per cent of our gross provincial product. It is not even close to that yet.

The member probably recalls me mentioning—and I am very proud and happy to be able to mention it every year—our debt is not $3 billion, as the member points out. Our debt is something on the order of $1.7 billion, which—

Mr. Sargent: I am talking gross debt, not net debt.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, net is less than that. Net is in the order of $1.7 billion.

Mr. Sargent: Well, the Minister had better revise his books, because they say $3 billion in debt.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Oh, we have never said that. If the member points out where I can find that I will take him out for dinner. It has never been said; it is not true.

Let me point this out to you again, and I say I repeat it with great pride as far as the credit of Ontario is concerned, we can again this year retire our total debt, total debt, with eight months' revenue.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: A great province. Are you not all proud?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I am very proud of it.

Mr. Sargent: The Hydro debt is $500,000 a day in interest, that is a matter of record. You will probably want to change that one too, but that was in their statement.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: What does the member mean? I do not change anything; I only give the facts as I know them.

Mr. Sargent: I do not want to infer that, so I will take that back; I am sorry.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I wish the hon. member would.

An hon. member: Where are you going to put it?

Mr. Nixon: You change his statement.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Your usual expression is "snow job." Have you forgotten that one?

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, the Minister has had a rough time and I do not want to flog this point, but it is pretty well the key point in all this talk leading up to this Budget. When other economies are cutting taxes, we are increasing taxes.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Cutting taxes?

Mr. Sargent: Well, the news release in New York tonight is that Nixon is going to cut back $4 billion in taxes—take it off the surcharge tax.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: But we do not have a surcharge to take off.

Mr. Sargent: They had a 10 per cent surcharge down there, the Minister knows that. If he does not know that, he should know that.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I do, but I say to be consistent how can we do the same thing? How can we take off a surcharge if we do not have one?

Mr. Sargent: About the only thing you do not have here is the surcharge. The next thing you will be taxing will be the pill; that is what you will be getting to next.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Which one?

Mr. Chairman: Order, please!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: I think somewhere along the line you got to the point—you went along with the Opposition, all of us here who have previously said you should have a purchasing committee, which you did set up. Over the years we have been saying you should have an efficiency survey. And the only thing out of that efficiency survey we will ever hear about are things that you want us to hear.

But somewhere along the line, I think we will have—the Minister said 9 per cent of the gross national product. That is a completely unknown—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Gross provincial product.

Mr. Sargent: That is a completely unknown and flexible thing that you cannot gear financing to. I do not agree that that is the way to judge solvency or insolvency—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well now, Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I want to get into an extensive debate here. We relied on a committee of very, very knowledgeable people who studied this matter for four years—very knowledgeable in this field. For anyone to suggest that the gross provincial product is not capable of identification, of course, is an obviously absurd statement.

Mr. Sargent: It is an intangible.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I think, Mr. Chairman, I will let it go at that.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Minister questions concerning the financial management.

As the Minister knows, if his fiscal policy is to be successful it must be co-ordinated very closely with the debt management policy that he pursues given the constraint of the federal government's monetary policy. So the questions I have are these:

Could he give us some idea of the policy of his department concerning what might be called the length of term of new issues? There are various theories that in certain economic conditions you try to have more short term bonds as a proportion of your total borrowing. At other times you try to extend the length of term, and so forth. I was hoping the Minister might elaborate what his policy is in this regard, and to justify it in terms of his view of what is happening in the provincial economy over the next year or so. Perhaps the Minister could comment on that?

I have several questions, would the Minister like me to list them?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I think I would like to deal with this one and I do not know that it makes for a great deal of fixed or firm policy. I think maybe that I would say first, that the decision to go to a capital market—or what type of term you are able to develop—is largely associated with the availability of capital. Certainly it has been this last two or three years.

There was a time, I suppose, when capital was more readily available, that the borrower could have something more to say about the terms of the rates than he can today. These things are determined in the light of the circumstances of the day. In a very tight capital market, as I pointed out, the terms are more often set by the lender. If they see a rising cost factor, or a rising interest rate, they are probably going to propose either a short term, or a combination of short and medium term.

In other circumstances, long term money may be more readily available if they want to get it out at a reasonable rate of interest rate over a longer period of time. This is the situation. It is all related largely to the competitive factor of availability. This is another thing that took us into the European capital market—more readily available funds in that market at a better cost.

There are other considerations involved too. We would have to take some look at our refunding schedule, the extent to which we have to refund maturing loans x number of years ahead. That would all have to be co-ordinated. These are some of the considerations that would be involved.

Mr. T. Reid: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for that answer. I would like to also suggest that he perhaps should examine the effect of his mix on his fiscal policy and taxation policy. He might find that because he believes that the terms are set primarily by the lenders in today's capital market, that this is costing him something in terms of his fiscal and taxation objectives. I would like to suggest that this is what has happened recently in regard to some of his borrowings.

Another question, Mr. Chairman, is this. We hear a great deal about the need for co-operation between this government and the federal government in a number of areas. This government has certainly made its views known—that it thinks the federal government is going off on its own without adequate consultation in certain areas. I would like to see if this government would say the same thing about its debt management policy.

Does this government consult with the federal government finance Minister concerning the objectives of the debt management policy of the federal government? Or is this Treasurer charging off to Germany pursuing a different type of debt management policy than the federal government thereby sterilizing the efforts of the federal government to a certain extent in the achievement of national goals?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: May I answer?

We have, a number of times in my memory, disclosed a great deal of this information to the federal-provincial conference of finance Ministers at the request of the federal government.

Going back to the former Minister, the Hon. Mr. Sharp, the departmental people, through the Deputy Minister, make this available to the continuing committee at stated intervals. We disclose our position—present, short term and medium term—to them. There is close collaboration. We get a great deal of information in this respect from the Bank of Canada so that our collaboration is very close indeed.

Mr. T. Reid: Could I deduce from the Minister's remarks, Mr. Chairman, that his debt management policy for the next 12 months is consistent with the debt management policy of the federal government?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I could only assume it is. We were criticized very roundly by the federal Minister at the December federal-provincial conference of finance Ministers, and we took some exception to it. He was very critical of our debt finance management programmes and he strongly advised us that we should not have any more deficit budgets. I think we maybe set that consideration aside in this present Budget.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, the Minister in talking about the insolvency point used the figure nine per cent of the Ontario gross national product. Was nine per cent the safety figure? Is that right, nine per cent?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Of the gross provincial product recommended by the Smith Committee on Taxation.

Mr. Sargent: Right. So last year, using page 39 of your Budget, you said in 1967-68—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: What page are we on?

Mr. Sargent: Page 39, top of the page. Your percentage there was 8.7 per cent in 1968. In other words you were .3 per cent from insolvency. Is this right, or not?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I cannot go along with your arithmetic.

Mr. Sargent: How do you subtract 8.7 from nine per cent? So you are .3 per cent from insolvency in 1968, is that right?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I do not—

Mr. Sargent: I want you to answer this question.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: You do not want me to answer it.

Mr. Sargent: I want you to answer it, yes sir.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: You are making reference to the growth rate in the provincial product. You are not making any reference to the relationship of our debt to gross provincial product.

Mr. Sargent: All right, I will go one step further. You say that you have things all set now; the hopper is good now and our position now is 7.8 per cent. So the change now in 1968-69 is 7.8 per cent—at the top of page 39. So we are now at this point exactly $292 million in 1969 from insolvency.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, no.

Mr. Sargent: I am not a very good book-keeper, I do not know how else to read that. You tell us how we work this out.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: With great respect, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is referring to some unrelated figures. Actually the percentage of our debt to the gross provincial product now stands at six per cent—$1.7 billion gross debt, against about $27 million gross provincial product.

Mr. Sargent: Your gross debt on the back page is $4,355,000,00.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Where?

Mr. Sargent: On the back page—page 92.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, according to the table on page 89 your net debt as a percentage of the provincial domestic product has never dropped as low as six per cent.

Mr. Peacock: It is over seven now.

Mr. Lewis: Not according to your table; it has risen—not to the point of what one might call insolvency—but it has risen close to the nine per cent.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, no. It is the net debt figures you should always compare.

Mr. Lewis: That is what you have got on page 89—net debt as a percentage of provincial domestic product. Chart C6 suggests that in 1969 it is up over seven per cent.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: About six per cent over 1968.

Mr. Lewis: Agreed, and it is rising. Rising meteorically. In fact, we are obviously almost out of control.

Mr. Pilkey: A fiscal nightmare.

Mr. Lewis: The fact is, Mr. Chairman—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Talking about a nightmare—

Mr. Lewis: It is getting very late and we are not quite as concerned about the debt here—

Mr. Sargent: Will the Minister explain then—he says the net debt is $1.6 billion but the back pages says the gross debt is $4,355,000,000. Was this a misprint?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, no. That is the gross debt, but it is the net debt that—

Mr. Sargent: Oh, come on. I am talking about the gross debt. You said the gross debt was $1.7 billion.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: If I did I am wrong. It is the net debt—

Mr. Sargent: You cannot afford to be wrong when you are dealing with seven million people.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, may I say for all future reference purposes, whenever we make reference in this context to debt, it will be net debt.

Mr. Sargent. Then why do you print the gross debt at $4 billion to $5 billion here now? Why do you print it, then?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You are supposed to know that.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Do you not want that information too?

Mr. Sargent: Well, you do not want to hear it. You told me this was only half that. Tell me what you pay interest on? Do you pay interest on the net debt or the gross debt?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: We pay interest on the funded debt.

Mr. Sargent: Pardon me?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: The funded debt.

Mr. Sargent: You pay interest on the gross debt, do you not?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, on the debenture debt.

Mr. Sargent: Well, I always thought when you had a debenture debt of say $100,000 that is the gross debt, so you pay interest on the gross debt. Right?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: The gross debt involves debt against which there are no interest payments. Is that clear? No interest costs—

Mr. Peacock: It is getting late.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Chairman, this may be a convenient place to make a break.

Hon. Mr. Welch moves the committee rise and report certain resolutions and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report certain resolutions and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow morning we will continue with these estimates.

Mr. Speaker: For the information of Mr. Speaker, will there be a private members' hour?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Yes, at noon tomorrow there will be a private members' hour.

Hon. Mr. Welch moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 11:00 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, MARCH 7, 1969

The House met at 10.30 o'clock, a.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: This morning we have full galleries: In the east gallery, students from the Franklin Horner public school, in Etobicoke; in the west gallery, students from Chelmsford high school, in Chelmsford; and in both galleries, students from Chedoke public school in Hamilton. Later today we will be joined in the galleries by students from Thistleton middle school, in Rexdale, and Fenelon Falls secondary school, in Fenelon Falls.

We welcome these young people here so early on Friday morning.

Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Mines): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to table the 1968 review of The Ontario Department of Mines for the calendar year of 1968. The department construes this year's review as a salute to the mining industry, from the Ontario government and from The Department of Mines, for its remarkable achievement in increasing production by 12.2 per cent last year to a new peak of more than $1.3 billion.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): That's the effect of the new Minister.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: That, as just a side effect of the new ministry, follows on the heels of a 24.5 per cent increase in 1967, and we think this is a real achievement.

The development activity in many areas, as outlined in the review, gives us every reason to hope that the industry will continue to expand, in the year ahead and in the years ahead. I would recommend the review to the attention of all hon. members and any others who have a genuine interest in the financial well-being of our country. It contains a great deal of interesting information of prime importance.

As usual, we followed the procedure of dividing the contents into two separate sections. Part 1 deals with the industry itself, and part 2 contains information about the activities of the branches and officers of The Department of Mines. The book was designed for publication as quickly as possible after the close of the calendar year, in the belief that its practical value will be enhanced if the information it contains is still current and newsworthy.

I suggest to you, sir, that the preparation and production of such a comprehensive report, in a period of only a few weeks since the end of 1968—

Mr. Nixon: Very commendable!

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: —is a very noteworthy achievement—

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Who did the picture?

Mr. Nixon: That picture moves the Minister to No. 9.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: —and to the best of my knowledge is unmatched by any department in any government in Canada.

Mr. Nixon: In the world!

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

The hon. member for York South has a question from away back, of the Minister of Correctional Services, which I do not think has been asked. My date is February 6, but I do not think it is that old.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): How true your comment is.

To the Minister of Correctional Services: When staff members of the Burwash Industrial Farm have asked their local MPP to discuss conditions which they deem unsatisfactory, what justification is there for the superintendent's ban on such a meeting?

Second, if this meeting is to be banned, why was the Conservative candidate in the last provincial election permitted to hold a meeting within the institution after being requested by the local branch of the CSAO?

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the first question, it is the policy in the department that political meetings are not held on institutional property. Because of this, Mr. Kirby, principal of the school in Burwash village, wrote to Mr. Marsden, a member of the staff at Burwash, in reply to a request for the use of the school for a meeting, advising him that as it appeared in his view that the meeting was to be of a political nature he, Mr. Marsden, should get permission from the superintendent. Mr. Kirby's reply, Mr. Speaker, is fairly well in keeping with what has been our policy.

Incidentally, I should add that no further application to this moment has been made to the superintendent as a result of that letter, which, on the fact of it, would lead one to believe that the intention was in fact to use it for political purposes.

However, I recognize that a general policy in respect of the use of institutional property is difficult to apply to Burwash because of the fact that a large number of staff live on the property. Therefore, it is obvious that some change in rules must be made for use of meeting facilities for staff at this particular institution. For this reason, I am considering the problem with a view of revising instructions so as to clarify the use of the village facilities for meetings, either to discuss village problems or problems of staff conditions, if the members of the staff feel they require such discussion.

And I would think if they wanted to invite their local MPP to be present, there should be no objection providing the meeting is not of a political nature. In fact, as an MPP myself, I feel that not only is it the right of an MPP but his duty to meet his constituents if they invite him to do so.

I would, however, appeal to hon. members not to take this as an invitation to utilize institutional property for political purposes, keeping in mind that Burwash is a penal institution and that is very easy for actions which would be normal in any other setting to precipitate very serious repercussions in a penal setting.

However, in answer specifically to the first question, as explained at the outset of my remarks the superintendent has not received a request to this moment for the use of the school, following the principal's letter.

In answer to the second part of the question, Mr. Speaker, I am advised that after investigation—and I made sure a considerable amount of investigation went on since I got this enquiry—it was found that in March, 1967, the Conservative candidate, on the institution of one man, attended a private meeting of the local branch of the CSAO; and that at the end of the meeting he addressed them at their request. This was a private meeting of the local branch of the CSAO and I am advised that permission to invite the candidate was not sought from the superintendent or the assistant superintendent.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, by way of clarification, I am not exactly certain as to the local conditions. When the Minister refers to "village" conditions, are the village conditions or village problems within the institution property?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes. Burwash village actually consists of property of the Ontario government, occupied completely by staff members who administer the penal institution.

Mr. Speaker: My list of questions indicates that there are no further questions to be asked today unless someone has—

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if you would grant me the privilege to ask, through you, why a member of the House cannot have the courtesy of taped in-House proceedings in his office the same as the press has? I understand even most of the Treasury Board do not have this courtesy; I understand the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts), has it, which is rightfully so. Every member of the House should have the privilege to know what is going on in the House to find out if he should be here when he is in his office working. As the press has this courtesy, why can we not have it? I would like you to consider it.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): I do not think anyone would be here.

Mr. Speaker: I might advise the hon. member that there are a great many considerations and the situation is presently under discussion, both with The Department of Public Works and with the government, by Mr. Speaker. Due to the change in the official Opposition offices, the speaker which was in the office of the leader has been disconnected. In order to connect that, some decision has to be made with respect to other speakers. It is a matter which is under consideration. There are a great many considerations both ways. As the member for Peterborough says, it is possible that we might all decide to work in our offices rather than come in the House if we—

Mr. Sargent: That might be a good idea!

Mr. Speaker: I have no comment.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, to this point I may say that I have some sympathy with the position put by the hon. member. I do not think that it is feasible to expect every member of this House to be in his seat during the entire proceedings of the House. There are, sometimes, matters that are of more interest to certain members than others. Also, the mere fact that a man is not in his seat in this House does not mean that he is not doing his job.

As the sittings get longer and we sit longer hours, I know I personally find it necessary to be out of the House when I might prefer to be here. If you are able to keep some idea of what is going on here then you can come back and participate in the matters that are of particular interest to you.

As the Speaker said, this whole matter is under pretty close examination at the moment.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The twenty-fourth order, House in committee of supply; Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence in the Chair.

On vote 2402:

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Chairman, when the House closed last night, we had arrived at the point where some of the facts which the hon. Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton), gave the House did not agree with the publication of his Budget.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): He said he did not pay interest on his gross debt.

Mr. Sargent: Right. I would like to find out from the Treasurer what segment of our debt we are not paying interest on.

A further disturbing point to me: I asked the Treasurer, Mr. Chairman, if the interest on the debt that the Hydro owed, as stated in a Hydro release, was $500,000 per day and the Treasurer did not know that that was a fact. To have $500,000 a day going out in interest and to have the top man in our finance not knowing about this is a shocking situation.

We tried to establish, Mr. Chairman, the danger point we were at two months ago and the danger point today. The Treasurer said that the danger point was nine per cent of the provincial gross product and that his release in the Budget book stated that in 1968 our position was 8.7 per cent. That left a spread of .3 per cent from bankruptcy. Somewhere along the line, he does not agree with these figures. Either he is wrong or the book is wrong.

Our position point today is that we are 7.8 per cent of the provincial gross product or about $292 million away from bankruptcy. If these figures are not right, I think we should know the facts about where we stand.

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Provincial Treasurer): Mr. Chairman, I will try to clarify this again.

Mr. Sargent: You did not clarify it last night.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I thought I did, but I will try again. You make reference to a danger point. There was no reference last night to a danger point. We said that one of the guidelines was the relationship of net debt to gross provincial product and that the Ontario committee on taxation had recommended that it could safely rise as high as nine per cent of gross provincial product. Gross provincial product next year is indicated to be approaching $30 billion.

Mr. Sargent: It is $29 billion!

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I said approaching $30 billion. So that against that proposition—

Mr. Sargent: Are you sure it is taken off the page where you say $29 billion?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: It is $29.2 billion. All right, we will go down to $29 billion. I was trying to make it a little easier to calculate nine per cent of it, that is all.

Against that background, that nine per cent figure recommended or proposed by the Ontario committee on taxation, our net debt could sustainably be something on the order of $2.6 billion in their opinion. But, it is not; it is something on the order of $1.7 billion—substantially less than nine per cent.

Now, I refer to the comparisons the hon. member made last night and referred to again here today. On page 38 at the top of the summary he is making reference, first of all, to the gross provincial product and the increase in the gross provincial product that we foresee for the fiscal year ahead. The figures that he is using to reach the conclusions that he reached last night and reached again this morning have no relationship to debt whatever.

Mr. Sargent: Let us go back a point. We have said that in the municipal field if your debenture debt is 25 per cent of your total assessment then you are insolvent. This point too: You say now that nine per cent of the gross national—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Gross provincial!

Mr. Sargent: —gross provincial product is the position point that you have to watch, your target. All right, in a projection here you say that your position in 1968 is 7.8 of that nine per cent.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, Mr. Chairman, this is where I must correct the hon. member. This is what we forecast—an increase in the gross provincial product in the upcoming fiscal year to reach $29.2 billion. This is the increase. The gross provincial product. Incidentally, and I will say it for the hon. member's information, if he is not already aware of it—this is the value of the total production of goods and services in the province for the year. It is not—

Mr. Sargent: Do not talk down to me.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I am not talking down. I am trying to relate the comparison that you introduced yourself. It has nothing to do with assessment. The yardstick used by the municipal board for debt is related to the assessment of the municipality and they say 25 per cent is a proper ration between debt and assessment. There is no basis of comparison between that figure and what I am relating to you now. I am only using it to make a comparison. I am not talking down—

Mr. Sargent: All right, I do thank you. But getting back to the net debt—you say this is your guideline, your net debt position?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes.

Mr. Sargent: Last night I asked you the gross debt and you said the gross debt was $2.6 billion—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, I said it was over—

Mr. Sargent: Well it will be in Hansard.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: —over the $4 billion mark.

Mr. Sargent: We went to the back of the book and found on page 92 that our gross debt at this position is $4,355,000,000.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, but—

Mr. Sargent: You are out about $1.8 billion on that factor. Now, when we go back to 1968 we find that the gross debt then was $3.5 billion. We have an increase in gross debt of $800 million or 25 per cent in one year. When I go to the bank to borrow some money, if I owe the bank a lot of money and, I am one of the average small businessmen, the bank manager looks at my different operations and says "you are indebted to the bank X thousands of dollars." He takes my gross indebtedness not my net position.

Now why is the province different than any other business? In your share of operations you establish a net position by taking off your assets and you find your net position. Now who establishes your assets? What is this building worth? What it is listed at? Your auditors or bookkeepers can take any figure in the world and say our highways are worth "x" hundreds of millions worth of dollars and you can show a good net position. So getting back, Mr. Chairman, I say respectfully, I asked you to give me a figure of where the danger point was two months ago and how close were we to this financial nightmare?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, I am not going to attempt to make any comparisons with the basis upon which the hon. member obtains credit from the bank, but I would refer him again to page 92, the page from which he obtained the gross debt figures and the net debt figures. The net debt figure is arrived at by deducting revenue producing and realizable assets from gross debt. He made reference to highways and buildings. These are not included. These revenue producing and realizable assets could be disposed of, loans if you wish, offsetting the gross debt—debts that are owed to the province because of advances that are made.

So this is why, when we refer to debt in these terms, we refer to net debt. I think that may compare, if you like, with what you have already said yourself. Maybe this is collateral that we would use in the personal or private business sense, and it is taken into consideration, it is shown, incidentally, on table C.11, page 92—the same table to which the hon. member made reference. He will see starting in columns 3, 4 and 5, and then totalled in column 6—what I refer to as revenue producing and realizable assets. So, when you deduct those from the gross debt it produces a net debt figure.

Mr. Chairman: Financial management!

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Chairman, I have three or four questions I would like to ask the Minister, somewhat technical I think.

Would the Minister explain to me why it is that when Ontario Hydro borrows in the province of Ontario it borrows directly with the guarantee of the province, and when Ontario Hydro borrows in the New York market the province borrows and then lends the funds on the same terms to Hydro?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I explained last night that I believe it is a requirement of the Securities Exchange Commission in Washington.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, perhaps the Minister would make a note—and not during the estimates—and at some point, ask someone in his department to write to me and explain in more detail why that is so.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, I will be glad to do that, but I will explain, as I did last night, that in the United States they make their advances in terms of approvals by the Securities Exchange Commission, on the credit of the consolidated revenue fund of the province, not the assets, whatever they may be, of Hydro. I will be glad to have someone provide a little more detail on the reasons for it, but I can assure the hon. member that it is a regulation of the Securities Exchange Commission, and it is the only way we can borrow in the New York market.

Mr. J. Renwick: Again I am only surmising, and I surmise that what the Minister is saying is that whatever the appropriate Public Utilities Holding Companies Act, or other regulations are which the Securities Exchange Commission apply, in some way Ontario Hydro does not meet the requirements—the point that the leader of the Opposition made last night—as do, for example, Consolidated Edison or Niagara Mohawk. It is along that line that I would like to have the specific chapter and verse of why it is not possible for Hydro to borrow directly in the New York market, leading to the point in time where Hydro might very well borrow directly on its own account, so that the province would be freed of the contingent liability of the province by way of guarantee, or by way of direct borrowing and relending.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I will be glad to give you that information.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, would the Minister tell me when last the Ontario government borrowed in the Canadian market?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: The last direct loan for provincial account was in January, 1968, from the Canadian capital market.

Mr. J. Renwick: In the Canadian market?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes. Hydro borrowed last month from the U.S.

Mr. J. Renwick: Hydro borrowed. Yes, I was thinking of government itself for its own purpose.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: It was February, 1968, not January.

Mr. J. Renwick: I would like then to look at what the department does in terms of the relationship with the investment community. Is it a consistent group of investment bankers who have the privilege of underwriting the government of Ontario bonds on the New York market, or on the Ontario market, and what is that connection? Is it a traditional connection, or is there any change made from time to time in the particular investment banker who either heads the banking group or the group of bankers that composes the banking group?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: The Canadian banking group has been rather constant for a long period of time. There have been changes over the years, where I suppose it is fair to say other investment bankers have been admitted to the banking group, but on balance it has remained pretty consistent. The management of the banking group has remained the same over a rather protracted period of years in Canada.

In the United States it is different because some American investment bankers are involved, and some Canadian investment bankers who are situated in New York, are involved. It is a combination of American investment bankers and the Canadian investment bankers who are incorporated in the United States and who operate in New York.

Mr. J. Renwick: I would just like to pursue that a little bit, Mr. Chairman. I have not got either the prospectus or the newspaper advertisement on the province of Ontario domestic issue, but is it the same traditional connection that Hydro has in the investment market as the government uses? It is the same group. I notice, if it is the same group, that undoubtedly McLeod, Young, Weir, and Wood Gundy are in fact the leaders of the banking group. I assume they put the group together, is that correct?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, not altogether. For provincial issues the management group would involve the same group, but the management is just a little different. The provincial banking group, I suppose it is fair to say, is headed by one firm; the Hydro banking group is headed by another firm; but in total they are the same group.

Mr. J. Renwick: Could the Minister then specifically tell me who was the manager of the last Hydro issue in the domestic market and which firm was the manager of the banking group in the last province of Ontario domestic?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, in the case of Hydro it was McLeod, Young, Weir and Company Limited, and in the case of the province it was Wood Gundy Securities Limited. But the total group is the same, it is just a difference at the management level.

Mr. J. Renwick: When the province borrows either for Hydro or on its own account in the New York market, is the banking group as such the same as on this latest prospectus of the province of Ontario, namely: Drexel, Harriman and Ripley, First Boston Corporation, Solomon Brothers and Husler, A. E. Ames & Company Incorporated, Wood Gundy and Company Incorporated, Halsey, Stewart and Company Incorporated, Smith, Barney and Company, the Dominion Securities Corporation, and McLeod, Young, Weir Incorporated? Is that more or less a similar group that is used at all times for the province?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes. I am not aware of any changes that have been made in that group for quite some time but I would say that Wood Gundy and Company Incorporated are joint managers with Drexel, Harriman, Ripley Incorporated.

Mr. J. Renwick: Then in their financing in the New York market they use a joint management of the banking group and Wood Gundy is the New York offshoot of Wood Gundy in Canada and has a role to play in it.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Drexel is the principal manager there but Wood Gundy is associated with them as a co-manager, that is true.

Mr. J. Renwick: I would like to ask the Treasurer whether or not we have reached the point in a sophisticated investment market in Ontario or in Canada, or in New York, where you could go by way of bids on the government bonds. I have here the advertisement of the comptroller of the state of New York offering $81 million of the state of New York transportation capital facilities bonds, and it is done by public tender. The pertinent points, I think, are of interest in this particular discussion we are having.

The comptroller of the state of New York will sell at his office, at the state office buildings, 23rd floor, 270 Broadway, New York, New York, August 19, 1968, at 11.30 o'clock a.m. Eastern Daylight Time, $81 million state of New York transportation capital facilities serial bonds. Bidders will be required—

It gives particulars of the issue and the kind of bonds and the authority under which they are being issued under the laws of the state of New York. But the pertinent matter here is:

Bidders will be required to name the rate, or rates of interest which the bonds are to bear; such rates shall be multiples of fractions—Not more than one rate of interest may be named for any single maturity—Bidders may condition their bids upon the award to them of all, but not part, of the $81 million, and the highest bidder on the basis of all or none will be the one whose bid figures the lowest dollar interest cost to the state after deducting the amount of premium bid, if any.

No bid will be accepted for separate maturities; no bid will be accepted for less than the par value and so on. All proposals together with the good faith security must be enclosed in a sealed envelope addressed "Proposal for Bonds" and be directed to the comptroller of the state of New York—at the address which I gave, and so on.

The unqualified opinion of the Attorney General of the state of New York—The comptroller reserves the right to reject any or all bids. The successful bidder, or bidders, will be required to pay for the bonds upon delivery of the bonds by deposit in the Chase Manhattan Bank in the city of New York.

I must ask the Treasurer whether or not we have not reached the point where either Ontario Hydro in the domestic market in Ontario, or in the New York market, or the government of Ontario directly in the New York market for its own purposes or for Hydro purposes, or in the domestic market here, should not give serious consideration to offering those bonds by way of public bid and tender in the way in which the government of the state of New York raises funds.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, it is appropriate to say that this method of obtaining financing has been considered from time to time. It is the opinion of the government and the Treasurer that we are doing it in a most advantageous way as far as we are concerned. We accept advice on this from time to time and we are convinced that it is still the most advantageous way for us to conduct our borrowing.

That does not mean that it is not something that can be reviewed from time to time but I assure you, Mr. Chairman, and the committee, that we are convinced that it is the most advantageous way for us to conduct our borrowing.

I would say, too, by way of information to the hon. member that domestic borrowers in the United States are dealt with somewhat differently from the foreign borrowers—and Canadians are regarded as foreign borrowers. Most states make it a requirement by law that their utility issues particularly have to be sold by tender. That is the reason why it is done over there. Whether it is the most advantageous way or not I am not prepared to say but it is a matter of state law in certainly most states if not all of them.

Mr. J. Renwick: I realize that, I realize that the historical circumstances in New York, for example, led the assembly to pass the law in the state of New York that there would be competitive bidding on government bonds. In other words, that various investment bankers could join together in various groups in order to make their proposal on it. I am simply saying to the Treasurer that there is quite obviously no law to that effect in the province of Ontario, but I do not think that is the point.

The basic point is that the time has arrived where I think a very serious consideration must now be given to the proposition that competitive bidding for the bonds of the province of Ontario, with the fine credit rating that the province has, is an appropriate way in which this government can ensure that they have obtained the best deal that they can at the lowest cost to the province and the largest net proceeds of these issues to the province.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): Mr. Chairman, I just want to follow up on the point of the member for Riverdale. As I understand it, the point that the member for Riverdale is making is that first of all the province really is operating through a fiscal agent in terms of selling their bonds—maybe that is not the proper term. But a number of municipalities, at least, tender for their debentures, which are comparable to your bonds.

Has the province produced any study in terms of finding out whether the municipalities are better off tendering their debentures, which are comparable to your bonds, or going through a fiscal agent, which would be, I think, comparable to what you are doing? This is happening not only in New York but in many municipalities. They do tender. And as they tender to sell their debentures, there is a great disparity in terms of what some offers are compared to others. In other words, usually—and again depending on what the money market is like—you get a fairly good tender from, say, 10 or 12 people who are tendering for those debentures.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I can do no more than repeat what I have said to the hon. member for Riverdale, that we do study these things and consider them from time to time. Up to now we are convinced that we are doing it the most advantageous way.

We do not employ fiscal agents in that sense. The banking group, of course, is a group that, in the final analysis, buys our securities. They are not an agent. They are all major banking institutions, investment bankers, in the two jurisdictions. They do not represent us as an agent fiscally.

Mr. Pilkey: Well, they do purchase.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: They are the buyers. They actually buy them, that is true. But I can only say we are still convinced that it is more advantageous to do it the way we are doing it.

Now, this is not something that is ignored. We pursue it from time to time, and, I suppose it is fair to say that when we can be convinced that it is more advantageous to do it the other way, that will be given very careful consideration. The discussion is a good one, but I would like it to be assumed to some extent we are convinced it is most advantageous to do it this way or we would be doing it another way.

Mr. J. Renwick: Well, that is not the point.

Mr. Pilkey: Well, let me follow—

Mr. J. Renwick: The traditional method is not necessarily the best way.

Mr. Sargent: Well, on the other side of the picture, on the short-term cash flow you have, for instance, in the last auditor's statement taken off, you had $264 million cash on hand in the bank.

Some time ago I asked the Minister in the House if he would consider a parallel policy to the city of New York. They retain an investment firm to advise them on short-term cash flows and how to invest it. At this point you do not have a system like that in Ontario. I think it rates consideration. Would the Minister consider that?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I do not think we need to consider it, Mr. Chairman, because we have a fully constitutional branch—and we are discussing the functions of that branch now. That is the branch headed by the comptroller of finances, who advises the government and also engages in close collaboration with the suppliers of short-term capital.

The banking community as such advises the government through the comptroller of finances. So we are in receipt of this type of advice, I would say, on a daily basis; really on an hourly basis.

Mr. Sargent: Are you doing it?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Oh, of course we are. Management of our liquid reserves, Mr. Chairman, is a very important function of the financial comptroller's responsibility, and let me say it is done on an hourly basis.

Mr. Sargent: By professional people?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, who is more professional than the banking community?

Mr. Sargent: I say this kindly. If an economy like that of the city of New York finds it advisable to retain an outside investment firm to advise them on this—and that is the route they travel—why could we not get intelligent once in a while and do things like that?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I rather think we are employing, Mr. Chairman—I will try to emphasize this—all the expertise and advice that is available to us. The people who are in the business must be the best advisors; the judgment of the comptroller of finances in the advice he gives to the Treasurer is very, very important. The management of cash, I will repeat, continues on an hourly basis. These contacts are made from the comptroller of finances' office every day and as frequently as every hour.

Mr. Sargent: One more question and maybe this is not relevant, but could the Minister advise, insofar as the Canada Pension Plan fund is concerned—they rebate money to the province of Ontario which you loan out, is this true?

Could the Minister give me an idea of the net position of that? How much money has been distributed and where do we stand on those funds?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, we will have that information for you in a moment. It is not a rebate, we actually borrow the money from the government of Canada, in return for which we issue our debentures at frequent intervals.

Each month we provide them with a debenture in the total amount of what has been advanced to us for the period. We are able to obtain this money at the average rate of interest, or the going rate of interest, that is paid by the government of Canada on their bonds.

We, in turn, as the hon. member knows, make it available to school boards at the same rate, plus a fraction of a per cent to cover the cost of administration, and we in turn take their debentures. So the federal government is secured by the debentures we issue and we are secured by the debentures issued by the school boards to us.

This is one of the components that was referred to when we made reference to realizable and revenue-producing assets. This is a very big component of that matter to which I made reference a few moments ago.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I would like to just pursue very briefly the question of the relationship of the government with the Bank of Canada in terms of any discussions that they have.

As I understand it—the Treasurer can correct me if I am wrong—but my recollection is that the Porter commission in substance pointed out that the Bank of Canada has the authority to act as fiscal agent for the province, as well as for the federal government. I would like to know, in the first instance, what the reasons are—if there are reasons other than traditional ones—why the Bank of Canada is not used as a fiscal agent for the province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I would say, Mr. Chairman, through you to the hon. member, that the authority is probably there.

We recommended at the November conference of Ministers of Finance and the December conference of Ministers of Finance that the federal Minister give serious consideration to employing the Bank of Canada for that purpose and we were supported by the province of Quebec. Now, the authority may be there but it has never come to pass that this is done. We have recommended that it would probably be useful, not only to Ontario, but to all provinces.

It might be a very essential instrument to overview, if you like, debt control across Canada. We have proposed this on two separate occasions. I think the matter is probably under consideration at Ottawa, but we have not heard anything more about it as yet.

Mr. J. Renwick: I am pleased with the Treasurer's remarks. It may well be that my question was some hazy recollection of having seen some reference in the press to the very point. But I must emphasize, it seems to me in this hangup between the federal and provincial governments that the Bank of Canada in this particular field may have a very important co-ordinating role to play in the whole of the economy.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: We feel that way about it too.

Mr. J. Renwick: Yes, well, moving on from that lack of formal arrangement at the present time. Just to what extent do you, when you are planning to go to the market either for yourselves or for Hydro, co-ordinate your thinking with the Bank of Canada in terms of the overall demands made on the domestic capital market?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: An example of a recent experience, Mr. Chairman, was that the deputy Treasurer and myself visited with the governor of the Bank of Canada when we were in Ottawa in February. We maintain that liaison and contact with Mr. Rasminsky and his people on a continuing basis and we propose to continue it.

I agree there could be some real value in the co-ordinating ability of the central bank in this field, and that is why, of course, we proposed it to the federal Minister of Finance.

As I pointed out and as you pointed out, it has not been formally implemented yet, but we are certainly ready to lend the co-operation of the province of Ontario to such a co-ordinating feature.

Mr. Chairman: Finance and management? Securities control?

Mr. J. Renwick: Just before we move on, Mr. Chairman, there is another line of thought I would like to pursue with the Treasurer on this same question.

When the government decided to follow the lead of others and borrow in the western European market and made whatever investigations were taking place, they must have run up against the problem of whether or not they were going to be able to market the bonds of the province of Ontario on an underwritten basis or whether they were going to have to use an agency commission basis in order to market them. My conclusion is drawn from the answers which the Minister gave to the leader of this party, the member for York South (Mr. MacDonald), when he asked the questions, which is shown on page 1393 of Hansard, the questions were:

What are the net proceeds of the $64 million loan floated by the government of Ontario in Germany?

The answer of the Minister to the first part was that the final proceeds of the $64 million loan would be $62,492,181, or roughly $1.5 million less than the principal amount of the loan. The second part of the question was:

If there are commissions and other charges, what is the effective interest rate through to maturity on the net proceeds?

The Minister's answer was:

6.67 in the case of the private placement of 90 million Deutschmarks, and 6.98 in the case of the 150 Deutschmarks public issue.

The point of my remarks is simply to ask the Treasurer whether or not he anticipates, even with different traditions in the European market, that having introduced the bonds of the province of Ontario into that market on the broad scale that was indicated by the number of persons who formed the group who were engaged to distribute the bonds, whether he anticipates that in fact the government will, in due course, be able to get a better rate having regard to the then existing interest rates structure, by having the bonds underwritten in that market rather than to have to employ agents to sell on a commission arrangement?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: There is no real difference in terms of the underwriting that the hon. member makes reference to than there would be any place else.

The banking group is substantially larger in Europe than it would be in Canada or in the United States. I think I would attribute this largely to the extent that there are banks outside of Germany itself who are in possession of Deutschmark balances. They are brought into the banking group whether they are western German bankers or not. But, it is a large banking group. In terms of underwriting, however, the management of the banking group buy it from us just the same as the management of any one of the Canadian or United States syndicates, if you wish.

Incidentally, we deal only in this instance with the Deutschebank whom we have chosen to be our banking management. So we have no contact with the other banks ourselves, none whatsoever. The Deutschebank looks after all the internal arrangements. They have certain standards as far as charges are concerned that are characteristic of the whole European capital market, just the same as we have certain ones in Canada and there are certain situations in the United States.

So I think the significant thing to look at, as far as the German loan is concerned, is the net cost. And the net cost that I have made reference to in reply to the question of the leader of your party some days ago, is still a very favourable net cost.

So I think that this is the—

Mr. J. Renwick: Yes, I understand.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton:—this is the significant thing that we have to concern ourselves about.

Some of the matters that I make reference to, Mr. Chairman, we have no way of changing. They are standards that are uniform in the European capital market, just the same as they are here and the same as they are in the United States.

Mr. J. Renwick: Well, if I could just make one brief comment then.

I was under a misapprehension. I had understood that in the sale of the bonds in the European market it was not an actual outright purchase by the banking group managed by the Deutschebank and, therefore, it was distinct from the method by which Drexel, Harri-man and Ripley and Wood Gundy and Company Incorporated, that banking group in New York, bought outright the bonds and resold them.

I had the impression that in west Europe and the United Kingdom you were engaging, through the Deutschebank as the principal person, a network of persons who were going to sell the bonds on an agency basis for commission. I am pleased to hear that I was wrong.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, it seems that the Minister is doing a pretty smooth job of glossing over his position at this point and the general acceptance of the situation has changed fantastically.

The public was geared to having a catastrophic situation whereby we were going to be all in the poor house, and so on. But the motivation of PR got the television cameras in here and everything was hunky-dory the next day. Because you had taken the old policy that if you cannot beat them, you will confuse them. I think that—

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Well, your leader will try to confuse them next week.

Mr. Sargent: That policy works, because believe me, Mr. Chairman, I am, as always, confused.

An hon. member: So you will never beat him now.

Mr. Sargent: So—that is right.

It is all right for the Minister to stand here, Mr. Chairman, and laud his department heads; what a great team they are. But they have got us in a pretty shaky position.

We cannot find out how close we were to that shaky position because when I mention the fact, he deals in GNP—it is an intangible.

The hon. Minister of Correctional Services—they all got a big joke out of that. They may know all the answers of the intricacies of finance. I do not.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Sargent: I think we should make our laws so even the average guy can understand them. But the way you guys juggle things back and forth, no one knows what in hell is going on. I do not know.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I am not juggling anything.

Mr. Sargent: You did not know last night and if the hon. Provincial Secretary (Mr. Welch) had not adjourned the House you would have been in real trouble. You did not know the answers last night.

Mr. Nixon: Yes, he was saved by the bell.

Mr. Sargent: You were doing some great stick handling. You had the boys in front there going.

However, in the Provincial Auditor's report of 1967-1968—we are going back to the only official document we have of the status quo we find out during the year—I am quoting page 36. He says:

During the year the province issued debentures in the amount of $723 million and redeemed debentures in the amount of $109 million for a net increase in funded debt of $614 million.

Now in finalization and summary, that is an increase of 20 per cent in funded debt in 1967-1968.

The picture presented today, Mr. Chairman—the 1968-1969 situation—is that we increased our debt from $3.5 billion to $4.3 billion, an increase of probably $8 million—an increase of $800 million, I am sorry. An increase of 25 per cent.

Now the hon. Treasurer talks about net position, but I am wondering, when does pay day come? Here we have an increase of 20 per cent the year before last, 25 per cent last year. Where are we going this year? What is our funded debt position going to be come 1970? Is there not a ceiling some place where we can do these things?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I am lost, I do not see the relationship, Mr. Chairman, he has lost me.

Mr. Sargent: I will make it pretty simple. You jumped the debt position 20 per cent a year ago; 25 per cent last year. Now what is it going to be this year? The gross debt position at the end of this year?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: It is shown again on page 92. It is forecast in the Budget papers, the bottom line.

Mr. Sargent: You have increased it 25 per cent.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, let us not talk about the gross debt, let us talk about net debt, because that is really all that matters.

Mr. Sargent: I know it is embarrassing to talk about those things.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: It is really all that matters; net debt is what matters. The net debt has increased, yes. And it is all there.

Mr. Sargent: I know it is all there. I say it has jumped 20 per cent last year, and 25 per cent this year, now what is it going to jump next year?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: We have a balanced Budget. I indicated to the House when I presented my Budget, that in the provincial account we do not anticipate requiring going to the capital market as such, at all.

Now, I go back and mention that within the framework of non-budgetary funds these transactions take place all the time. They have to show in gross terms, but they also show in net terms. Because what we put out on the one hand, and secure to a lender, we also get back on the other hand secured by the borrower to us.

Mr. Sargent: Well, you cannot borrow yourself out of the poor house, and that is what you are trying to do.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): We are not in the poor house.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Let me pursue this for just a moment. How can you possibly say that we are borrowing ourselves out of the poor house when we have been able to order our position to the extent that we do not have to go into the public capital market next year at all?

Mr. Sargent: Are you talking net debt?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: There is no other debt to talk about.

Mr. Sargent: The per capita net debt, then, increased from $199 million to $231 million and is that a net position?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes.

Mr. Sargent: All right, how much is it going to increase per capita debt, then, next year?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Let me do some arithmetic that may be appropriate. The per capita debt, of course, is the total net debt divided by the number of people in the province. Now, if we eliminate or reduce our borrowing requirements and the population increases, the net debt, per capita, should go down.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Oh, but they do not use the pill.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: It should come down.

Mr. Chairman: Securities control.

Mr. Sargent: One more question here, on the stumpage charges in the timber situation.

Mr. Chairman: That is very difficult to take—

Mr. Sargent: Who sets the percentages? We are talking finance management, are we not? Who sets the policy on what you will charge the people here with the timber rights? Is this not set by Treasury board? Who is it set by? The Minister of Lands and Forests? He does not set those rates, what you charge for timber rights.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: It has nothing to do with the vote.

Mr. Sargent: Is it not finance management we are talking about? $8 million?

Mr. Chairman: It is the Budget I would suggest to the hon. member.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, just a thought in this regard, and a question for the Treasurer. The exchange takes one back to previous years when the member for Woodbine would join with the then Provincial Treasurer in attempting to fend off the reactionary financial views of the Liberal Party in this Legislature, and we are getting back to it again. Mr. Chairman, I want to express to you, sir, that the Provincial Treasurer should not be corrupted by this absolute fixation on the debt, without any comprehension that governments incur debts, and that debts are valid, and that budget financing and budget balancing it not some kind of fetish before which everyone must bow.

Mr. Sargent: He will take your advice.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): You have operated on credit all your life; what are you talking about?

Mr. Lewis: There is no easier way to destroy the economy than to be preoccupied with this kind of fact, and there is no question that is precisely what Benson is doing at the federal level.

Mr. Nixon: Do you not think it is our function to enquire into the debt position?

Mr. Lewis: It may be the function to enquire into the—

Mr. J. Renwick: Of course you mention it but you do not keep on about it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, if ever there were a dialectic it is what the leader of the Opposition is now advocating, because I must say, sir—

Mr. Nixon: I am advocating free discussion.

Mr. Lewis: Well, that is fair enough, we are not in any sense—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: It is fine with me.

Mr. Nixon: It is incredible that you would attack a member who was putting forward his views.

Mr. Lewis: Oh no, not attacking the member, making the point, Mr. Chairman, that—

Mr. Nixon: Oh, that is it.

Mr. Lewis: —that in the field of financing, or provincial expenditures, if this government ever fell into the trap of Liberal governments across the country, with their preoccupation with a balanced budget at the expense of developing a productive economy, then we all go down the drain, and one has to understand that.

Mr. MacDonald: It just proves that the Liberals are more Tory than the Tories.

Mr. Sargent: On a point of order. The position of this party, as I understand from my leader—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. Sargent: We are concerned with the debt load for the taxpayer and the debt load—

Mr. Chairman: Order. You may put the question afterwards but that is not a point of order.

Mr. MacDonald: Do not take up other people's debating time. Your leader wants to hear a pointed recitation of views, not your instructions.

Mr. Chairman: Can we leave the commentary and get back to the estimates?

Mr. Lewis: You are quite right, Mr. Chairman. Your indulgence is appreciated. I wanted to ask the Treasurer, in this rare spirit of equanimity, about the private loan which he talked about, the 90 million Deutschmarks, the first one. Have you a list of the private placement with Deutschebank?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: The private placement is somewhat different. In that instance, too, we only dealt with the Deutschebank. They distributed that one all themselves. They did not form a syndicate of a banking group for that first loan. We were advised to undertake a private placement, in the first instance last year, to become identified on that capital market. It was our first venture in that capital market.

Mr. MacDonald: Establishing our credit.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Establishing our credit, and we did it. The first venture, the private placement, accomplished that very well. It was put out, I think, in small-denomination bonds, and given widespread distribution through the facilities of the Deutschebank. It identified us on that capital market. It sold quickly and has been trading at a premium ever since, so it made it easier for us, then, to get into a public issue in this last round because we had established ourselves on that market. That is the reason we did it, but the Deutschebank, in this instance, handled that all themselves. So the banking group was not employed.

Mr. Sargent: On this point, Mr. Chairman, may I say that—

Mr. Chairman: I wonder if you will let the member—

Mr. Sargent: On this particular point, I want to say this.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Scarborough West.

Mr. Lewis: If the Treasurer were to request from the Deutschebank a list of the principal placees, would that be given to him?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, it probably could be. The 30,000 certificates that went out each had a value of 5,000 Deutschmarks, the equivalent of $1,250, which permitted the issue to be taken up by small investors, out of savings accounts, and so on. Whether they would disclose that information to us or not, I do not know. The bank has many branches in Germany, as our banks have here, so they would distribute it through their own banking system, to their own accounts, their own customers—small people using their savings accounts, if you like, to purchase the securities that would yield them more interest, and they were put out in those small denominations for that purpose.

Mr. Sargent: The shocking situation is that we have in this economy of ours hundreds of millions of dollars being built downtown in business developments by banks and insurance companies. We go across to Germany. Twenty-four years ago they were bombed off the map; there was not a shot fired in this country, we never suffered a bit of war. We go there to borrow money. I think it is degrading that we cannot go on our own market for money.

Mr. Chairman: That is a commentary.

Mr. Sargent: Well, it is all right.

Mr. Chairman: Order please! Will we stick to the vote?

Mr. Lewis: The reason I was wondering about the placement list—albeit it might be difficult, given the subsequent trading to which you allude—is that I have a very strong feeling that a goodly number of the $1,250 portions might well have been absorbed by the American subsidiary companies operating in Europe, not to mention companies of the Krupp kind. I would be interested to know on what basis the Ontario economy is shoring itself up again in the interests of corporate concerns, not all of them entirely palatable, from outside this province, and I am not certain that the Minister would not subscribe to that in certain ways. He might be a little concerned about it too, and I think there would be value in finding out just who these magnates are, other than the small people, who purchased in any quantity, that first issue.

Mr. Nixon: Only little German farmers.

Mr. Lewis: No, I do not think they were little German farmers, I suspect they were fairly major concerns.

Mr. Chairman: Securities control?

Mr. Lewis: Might the Minister try just out of curiosity to make an enquiry, and if it showed some major interest, reveal it to the House, or privately?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I do not know whether that would be altogether possible. I have very grave doubts whether the Deutschebank, or any bank in Germany or in Canada, would want to disclose the names of their customers or their patrons. I do not think it is of as much concern as the hon. member mentioned.

I suppose it is fair to say that while there is a different relationship between Canada, probably, and the United States in certain terms, the same thing can happen there. We have no assurance as to whether little people buy our bonds or whether a goodly portion of them are taken up by institutional investors in the United States just the same as they are in Canada. But the very nature of this private placement and the size of the certificates that are put out were really to effect widespread distribution through the Deutschebank branch system to get as much identification on the market as possible. This was their advice to us. We think it was good advice, and we took it for that reason.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): Mr. Chairman, I was going to ask the Treasurer if this did not cause him to wonder about the inability of the province of Ontario to satisfy its capital needs from within the province because of this chasing of capital needs in western Europe? Surely, Mr. Chairman, this must have occurred to the Treasurer.

One of the reasons he had to go overseas to western Europe to find funds there, to find acceptance of provincial issues there, rather than finding acceptance for them here in the province of Ontario, is that some of the very same contributors to the difficulties we find in placing provincial issues in the province of Ontario, are the same corporate entities that have contributed so much to the favourable position in western Europe, which has permitted him to go there to find the moneys that he needs to finance the government operations in this province.

There has been movement away from the province of Ontario at the behest of the U.S. money managers, and there may well have been a redirection from Ontario into western Europe for more favourable conditions, which resulted in the United States government's setting down its guidelines which, even though they were not ultimately applied to Canada, still find western Europe a more favourable place in which to invest the surplus funds of United States corporations.

Why cannot we, Mr. Chairman, in this province find the means of retaining more of the surpluses of these corporations that operate within Ontario, to finance this very requirement?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, we were motivated by different requirements from those the hon. member has made reference to. We were motivated first because of the availability of convertible Deutsch marks in the West German and European capital market at a very favourable rate of interest. As a matter of fact it has already been indicated, I think, to the House that our last venture will result in the saving of some $600,000 in interest alone per year.

Mr. MacDonald: If they do not revalue.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: If they do not revalue. If they do revalue, we have a good built-in hedge because the favourable interest rate will offset revaluation either totally or to such an extent that we are still no worse off if revaluation takes place. Revaluation is not the policy of the government of the day; we know that the people of West Germany do not want revaluation so we have that in our favour. In all honesty, however, we cannot exclude it as a possibility; but the very favourable cost of the money offsets the possibility of revaluation. I do not know that there is anything wrong with the province of Ontario undertaking to go abroad for funds for more favourable interest rates and costs in the first instance, also recognizing the pressure that is on not only the domestic capital market but the North American continental capital market. It seems to me that it is providing a little bit of leadership when we can broaden the base of our capital sources. Ontario is second only to the federal government in this particular field.

I can agree with what the hon. member said previously about balanced budgets, surplus budgets, and deficit budgets; I think those decisions have to be taken in the light of the economic circumstances of the day. I think, Mr. Chairman, we have proven that we are not afraid to budget for a deficit if we think the economy of our jurisdiction needs it.

In these particular circumstances, again, whether the hon. member agrees with us or not, we think it is a desirable thing this year to work for a balanced Budget. The same considerations motivated us to make that decision this year as motivated us to decide to have a deficit Budget in previous years, so I think it is fair to say that we try to recognize these things whether it is perfection or not. But certainly they are all taken into consideration in the light of the circumstances of the day.

Mr. MacDonald: You may have miscalculated.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Not always. I recall very well what the hon. member for Woodbine used to say, and while I seldom agreed with him I agreed with him on this point, and I think he agreed with me on this point. As I recall it, I think he did; I am quite confident he did.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, what concerns me about what is emerging is that the Ontario government then becomes part of the grand design, sort of a well-meaning pawn of international finance. That is what happens to the Ontario government, and they are supported in it by members of the Treasury board who feel very comfortable in that position, as you indicated to the Cabinet committee on policy last night. One need only note the Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Randall) and the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Grossman), two of the most rabid continentalists that the government has among its numbers—and what happens then is that American-controlled corporations own and control the Canadian economy with our own money—and that is particularly true of the Ontario economy. Certainly it is, because the money they derive from within the country for their own financing is their basic source of wealth; so they own and control us with our own money. We are then forced into the American market to make certain direct loans at appreciable interest rates; and when that does not appear to be appropriate because we do not want to put all of our capital borrowing in one area, we are then off into the west European market, which has been similarly influenced, not to say directed and controlled by international corporations, primarily American controlled subsidiaries, and we are part of a pawn, we are part of a—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Is the member's party becoming isolationist?

Mr. Lewis: Isolationist to this point, Mr. Chairman, that why in God's name is it not possible for this government to demand certain degrees of corporate behaviour and certain degrees of corporate financing, which will be sufficient for us to fund ourselves from within our own economy?

Why not? Why are we always the willing pawns of the international corporate game which is the state we are perpetually in, whether it is Hydro off to New York or the government off to the Deutschebank? No one denies the validity of borrowing on the international market but only when one has exhausted one's internal capacities. And one takes some exception to the fact that because we are controlled and owned by external forces anyway, we do not make certain demands of them which would give us our own financing and indigenous terms, rather than send us running around the world in this desperate chase for funding?

Mr. Sargent: I am glad you agree with me.

Mr. Lewis: On that point I agree with you entirely, if that is in fact what we are agreeing on, and I wonder, Mr. Chairman, whether the Minister might not occasionally examine that. If memory serves me correctly, sir—I can stand to be corrected, I wanted to come back to it—in 1964 (I think that is the last year for which figures are available) only five per cent of the capital inflow for direct investment in Canada actually came as capital inflow from the United States. All the rest, 95 per cent, was indigenously produced.

Given these factors—given the fact that the 95 per cent is indigenously produced but the ownership remains outside—it seems to me that it is a pity we have to continually go outside even for further government funding.

I, for one, resent it and I think the members of the New Democratic Party, as the session evolves, will be able to make reference to the fact that not only are we playing into their hands in terms of the borrowing on the market as you have indicated, but even in terms of our own economy, by what we are handing out to American corporations in other government programmes. We have become one of the rarest, most precious exploited financial tools of international corporate financing.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We are doing pretty well here.

Mr. Lewis: I do not see why you should lend yourselves to that when we can create it internally.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Because we believe trade keeps peace.

Mr. Peacock: Some of the customers for those bonds in Germany are probably getting ODC loans in this province.

Mr. Lewis: That is right, Mr. Chairman. If—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, we are wandering all over the place here. I have indicated what motivated this but I cannot let these observations just pass like that.

I am not one who believes that the capital market of the world should not be employed. I am not one who believes that we should not, of course, do what we can to encourage more investment in debt securities by our banking community in Ontario and in Canada.

Mr. J. Renwick: And the individuals in this province.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: But I still submit to you, Mr. Chairman, that as long as we can obtain our capital requirements in an offshore market as advantageously as we have appeared to have done in West Germany, I think it is fair to say we will be employing those capital markets. We are not the only jurisdiction that has done it. The government of Canada has seen fit to do it. Many of the provinces of Canada have seen fit to do it, and I might point out to you the strongest economic nationalists in Canada have been urging that we borrow abroad so that capital coming in is debt and not ownership. This is debt capital; it is not equity capital as the hon. member has been trying to point out. It is debt capital and there is a very great difference.

Mr. Lewis: Well, yes, I appreciate—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well you did not imply there was any difference, in your remarks. It was a red herring and I call it that.

Mr. Lewis: It is not a red herring because there is every—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, it is.

Mr. Lewis: There is every possibility, Mr. Chairman, that we are giving away money through EIO, handing it over to American corporate interests, and then paying these same interests for our borrowing in Germany.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: That is not the context in which you were speaking before.

Mr. Lewis: It is all a part—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: It is not.

Mr. Lewis: I do not see how you alter the two. No, I do not see how you—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You were implying that they had control of our economy.

Mr. Lewis: Well, of course, I am implying they have control of our economy.

Mr. Chairman: Order please.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I would like the hon. member to tell me how anyone can gain economic control of a jurisdiction through debt securities.

Mr. Lewis: I did not say that, Mr. Chairman, I did not say that. You may be borrowing for the purpose of debt funding on the German market, the point I was making in overall corporate terms is that the same people to whom you are paying interest in Germany may well be the same people to whom you are giving forgiveness loans in Ontario. It is entirely possible through ODC because—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is what you implied.

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of Revenue): You have changed gears a little.

Mr. Lewis: Oh there is no changing of gears, Mr. Chairman, it is a simple proposition that the Ontario government has put itself in the position where it is necessarily subservient to the international corporate market—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Subservient is a bad word.

Mr. Lewis: —whether that market works in the direct investment or the debt area. Now, Mr. Chairman, the question then arises in terms of—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is a Machiavellian approach.

Mr. Lewis: Well, it may be Machiavellian, it is nothing compared to the government. Mr. Chairman, the question then arises, at two minutes to 12, why in the government's financial management policy it is not possible to borrow at an equally favourable rate of investment in Ontario? Why is it necessary to have so mismanaged the economy provincially that one has to go for the borrowing in Germany? Why should the rate of productivity be so much greater than we are able to achieve here? And one comes back, Mr. Chairman, to the principal argument that somewhere—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Do you want an answer?

Mr. Lewis: Yes, there is plenty of time for an answer, you have a full minute. Somewhere it comes back to the question of the nature of the internal financial management and your refusal to come to terms with the corporate investment in this society.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: It is 12 o'clock and I simply answer that by saying this situation is not confined to Ontario. It is confined to the whole North American continent.

Mr. Lewis: What do you do with it all?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: We are doing the best we can to live with it.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I was just going to send the hon. leader of the Opposition a note. He will admire this statement. The late C. D. Howe was a pretty sensible man, and he said he did not really care about the nationality of a dollar: Neither do I.

Hon. Mr. Grossman moves that the committee of supply rise and report progress and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report progress and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

THE MUNICIPAL ACT

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth) moves second reading of Bill 6, An Act to amend The Municipal Act.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, the bill that I intend to direct myself to at this time is dealing with the matter of empowering municipalities to impose rent control at their discretion. I think at this time that the question is not now between whether or not we ought to have rent control. The question now appears to me to be the determination of how we ought to implement this rent control.

This bill permits the municipalities of the province of Ontario, wherever they feel it necessary, to impose some form of rent control. We believe that the only people capable of making a judgment as to the validity of rent control in any specific areas are those municipal politicians who operate and live in that particular section of the province.

This very basic premise was completely ignored during the debate a week ago Thursday in the private bills committee when the city of Ottawa came before us and requested permission to establish rent control. The representatives of the city of Ottawa established, at least to my satisfaction and obviously to the satisfaction of nine other members of that committee, the need in their municipality to have permissive legislation of this kind.

While I recognize the inadequacies of the Ottawa bill and some of the problems that might have been inherent in the manner in which they drafted the bill, I still believe that in their good judgment they felt the necessity to have such a bill in order to protect the people of their municipality.

And I was quite disturbed by the attitude taken by the government members and two of the Ministers who appeared at that meeting on that day, in that they did not deal with the merits of the Ottawa situation at all, but rather with some misguided conception of what rent control really is and their opposition to controls of any type. I would also go so far as to say that I was a little disappointed that more of the members of the Tory party who represent metropolitan areas that are facing the problems of ever increasing rents, were not present at that meeting in order to support the Opposition in an attempt to have this bill passed.

It is not only the city of Ottawa that has requested this kind of legislation; Woodstock has come out in favour of rent control, Scarborough has indicated a desire for rent control, the city of Hamilton is presently studying the whole matter of rent control and it has been proposed by at least one of their councillors that it is necessary in that area. The city of Toronto had considerable discussion a year or a year and a half ago about rent control, indicating that they felt it was perhaps necessary at this time. The federal task force on housing indicated that there was certainly a need for landlords to have to justify rent increases. And so to come before this House and request the passage of a bill of this type does not seem to me to be out of order, in the context of what is taking place across this province.

I think I should make it abundantly clear at the outset that this rent control that I propose and that is proposed by this party, is an interim measure. It is not intended to solve the housing crisis. It is not intended to be a lasting piece of legislation, but rather it is intended to be a stopgap measure to combat a social problem that has inflicted great hardship on many segments of the community over the last five or six years. It has reached the proportions in many communities, in the last two years, of denying them the opportunity to a decent standard of living.

I am sure we would all agree that were there enough houses in this country for everyone to be able to afford one, then inflated rentals would be a thing of the past. We would no longer require this kind of control. And when that day arrives no doubt this rent control would be completely disregarded.

In fact, even when we reach that enviable position we perhaps might require only rental review agencies that would have power to publicize unwarranted increases and bring to the public's attention unscrupulous landlord practices. I would say, in dealing with unscrupulous landlords, that these are not the majority, I recognize that. I recognize that the majority of landlords deal fairly with their tenants.

But, unfortunately, there are some landlords who own a great deal of property and who have really no relationship between themselves and their tenants. As was stated in the private bills committee, they sit in Florida and thumb their noses at the municipalities which are attempting to get some kind of reconciliation between tenant and landlord.

It is to these people that I direct this kind of legislation. The landlord who deals fairly with his tenant need fear nothing from this legislation, because he will be able to go before any rental board or agency and justify his particular rental.

I would say, though, that there are a number of points in favour of rent control at this time. I think first we have to recognize that decent accommodation within one's ability to pay is an absolute prerequisite for living in this country.

I would suggest that any person who is working for a living should be able to acquire accommodation large enough for his family, in decent surroundings, so that his children will not be forced out into the streets and to live in accommodation that has not reached a state of dilapidation and decay. It is a basic necessity of life and it appears that the private sector is not capable of dealing with this and therefore the public sector must take steps to relieve the difficulty.

At the moment we all recognize that there is not nearly sufficient accommodation and therefore the rents have increased well beyond the ability to pay.

I would point at this time to a little article which indicates just what has happened in relation to the cost of living. It indicates that shelter costs have increased much faster in Ontario than the general cost of living. The cost of living has gone up six per cent between January, 1967, and 1968, while the shelter index went up 8.6 per cent—considerably more than the general cost of living.

I think we must insure that the term "rent" really implies all of the moneys paid by the tenant to the landlord, including security deposits. As I have said before in this House, the way to overcome that, of course, is to eliminate the security deposit altogether. But it must also include such things as cleaning charges and the many other extras, parking and such, that people are forced to pay for over and above what is stated as being the rent.

I think we would find that if these payments did come under the rental structure, then landlords would be forced to face the problem of setting a fair and equitable rent, as opposed to using them as an extra method of garnering revenue over and above what is reasonable to expect on their investment.

I think there have been many cases publicized in the last year or year and a half that give a clear indication that the effort required to determine a fair rental level in any community would be well worth while in terms of the many residents who today are paying rents far, far in excess of their ability. I think the saving, not only in monetary terms, but in terms of physical and mental suffering on the people who are presently being forced to spend considerably more of their income than they can reasonably afford, would pay dividends to the community as a whole.

I also believe that, after having established a fair rent, we should not fit into it some method of pre-determining increases on a yearly basis. And we should recognize the right of the tenant to appear before any rent control board and to contest any rent increase.

It would be undesirable to allow automatically and annually a specified percentage increase. It is not inconceivable that a proposed increase may well be within the ability to pay and, in fact, be a realistic increase in terms of increased costs to the owner, but it would be better not to build this in. Rather allow the tenant to appear before the rental control board to state his case and to allow the landlord to justify his rent increase.

I am sure that in a short time the landlords would raise rents only in accordance with need. A fair profit margin would be established which would allow them to receive a good return on their investment without inflicting hardship on the community at large.

A rental review board which, out of necessity, must go along with any rental control legislation, would base its judgment as to whether or not an increase was acceptable on both cost and demand criteria. The cost criteria are fairly simple and straightforward. It should be possible to compute an index of apartment maintenance costs, including municipal taxes, labour costs and other incidental costs to the apartment owners, on a city-wide basis, particularly in smaller cities. Perhaps in the city of Toronto it might be necessary to do it on a basis of community, rather than city, but, generally speaking, it should be done on a city-wide basis, thereby arriving at a fair rental for accommodation.

Of course, in establishing a rent some guarantee would have to be provided regarding the services that one could reasonably expect for the rent that was paid. Otherwise we would find that there would be a few landlords who would simply cut back on the heating and lighting and servicing and maintenance of the buildings and would effectively increase their rents that way.

As far as the demand criteria are concerned, I think it is a very obvious thing. One must take into consideration the number of apartments and the number of persons who are seeking them. We cannot allow apartment owners, because they own great complexes, and because the major apartments are in the hands of so few people, to up their rents without any consideration for the numbers of people who must have accommodation.

Together with the establishment of this temporary control, we must of necessity, as I said, come up with a tenants' bill of rights, establishing tenure and giving legal protection to the tenants, otherwise the threat of eviction may well be used to deter the tenant from protesting rent increases.

One final thought in this particular area is that perhaps the matter of control should not be placed on a selective basis. There have been suggestions made that we put controls on selectively on a variety of different kinds of buildings in accordance with the luxury of their appointments.

I think this would work to the detriment of the lower and middle income groups, because, quite obviously, what would then happen would be that the luxury apartments would become abundant and the lower and middle-income apartments would then fall off and there would be fewer of them. So we would have to establish rentals for all apartments, including luxury.

I would like to draw the attention of the House to two or three increases that have been forced on the people in the Hamilton area. I have raised them before in this House during my discussion on the tenants' bill of rights. On Hamilton Mountain, for example, on the east end of the mountain there were apartment dwellings where the increase was in the neighbourhood of $50 per month. The increase could not be justified; it was obviously for the purpose of evicting the tenants, thereby enabling the landlord to bring in a different kind of tenant and establish a rental on a luxury basis. And in another instance, together with one of the other members of the House. I attended a meeting of fixed income dwellers, old-age pensioners many of them, where their rentals had been increased two and in some cases three times over the last year, unjustifiably. And yet they have no place to go. It is unfortunate indeed that we should subject our elderly to this kind of tenure.

It is very difficult to describe the need for rent control without getting into the other area of assuring tenants' rights and making sure that tenants do have some guaranteed rights in the community. I was intrigued by the Attorney General's (Mr. Wishart) statement that he was going to implement some of the recommendations of the Ontario Law Reform Commission. I am delighted to hear this. I am just not too sure exactly which ones he is intending to recommend. The law reform commission itself indicates quite clearly, and I quote from page 123:

That the fundamental and legal basis of rent control is to prevent the speculative and unwarranted and abnormal increases in rents that would result from an unnatural competition of too many tenants bidding for too few apartments.

And of course, the economic and social hardships that this causes. The prime purpose of rent control is to make it possible for tenants to find and to keep decent apartments at reasonable rents. There are rent controls in many parts of the world; there is a form of rent control in the province of Quebec. It is not perhaps the best, it is what is known as a conciliatory rental review—

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of Revenue): I wish the member would tell us about the experience of those countries where rent control has been tried.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): We will, as a matter of fact.

Mr. Deans: We probably will in time, it is getting on.

In Quebec it does not work that badly, actually. It is not an overall rent control; it permits the tenant to come before a review officer and to request that he investigate the rent increases; and if it is found to be unwarranted he has the power to reject it. I suggest that this is not an unreasonable thing in today's society under the present conditions.

Hon. Mr. White: That is not what the hon. member's bill says.

Mr. Deans: Well, no, my bill does not say anything other than that; it says that municipalities should have the right to establish rent control and does not in any way dictate how it should be done. At this time I am trying, for the benefit of the House, to tell how it might be done. It could well be necessary in this province that all the most common forms of rent control measures would be encompassed in any particular Act of general legislation—the first permitting the courts to deal with any matter of eviction and unreasonable demand for rent; the second, perhaps the rent freeze method in some areas, and this was in effect some time ago; and the third, of course, the fair rent legislation which permits an appeal of rental and assures a fair return to the landlord.

I would say that this is a very necessary thing, the landlord must have a fair return on his investment and no one denies that. I want to be sure that this is abundantly clear, that we do not expect landlords to pay out of their pocket in order to ensure that people have decent accommodation. We expect a fair return.

Now, unlike many in this House I do not happen to believe that the law reform commission rules out rent control.

An hon. member: What is a fair return?

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): That is what we would like to know, what is a fair return?

Mr. Deans: It was suggested in one report, as eight per cent; perhaps ten per cent is a fair return, maybe twelve. I think this can be determined without too much difficulty. As I was saying, I think the law reform commission does not in any way rule out the need for rent control; it deals with two elementary steps, two steps that might be taken along the way towards it: the establishment of a rent review officer and the rental review board. I do not object to this; I do not think it will solve the problem but I do not object to the establishment of these two things initially.

I do feel though, that in order to give this rental review officer and rental review board some power, some backing, it is necessary that the municipalities have the right, if in event they find they are not able to do it by gentle persuasion, to impose a control of some type. I think this would put a few teeth into the legislation that perhaps may come from the Attorney General, and in so doing it would assure that the municipalities in their efforts to deal with the social problem, had some way of leveraging. I think we have noticed that persuasion, gentle persuasion, has on occasion worked but not for very long. And I do not think it will work very well in this particular instance.

Mr. Speaker, I notice my time is about up. I do not want to take any more time on this particular matter. I was going to read into the record the recommendations of the law reform commission but I am sure every member in this House has these recommendations, starting on page 135, ending on page 137. I just would suggest that No. 9 is perhaps the most important one, the one that is most necessary of all—the recommendation that said that if these measures do not prove sufficient to secure just rents, introduction of a more stringent and compulsory system of control should be considered. I suggest that not only should it be considered, but that in any legislation drafted it should be part of the legislation, thereby giving the municipalities something with which to work. Thank you.

Mr. J. A. Belanger (Prescott and Russell): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity today to speak on private member's bill No. 6. First let me clear up some misunderstandings about the issues of rent control and whether the Ontario government is going to get into that so-called business.

The Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. McKeough), according to a newspaper report in the London Free Press on February 19 of this year, flatly denied any plans by his department for rent controls. And this denial also included a mention that there were no such plans by the government either. This same denial came later, as recorded in the Globe and Mail, Friday, February 28 of this year, from The Attorney General's Department, which stated that The Attorney General's Department is presently drafting legislation to deal with rents. And this legislation, according to the Attorney General, is being based on the report of the Ontario Law Reform Commission inquiry into landlord-tenant law.

The report of the law reform commission, Mr. Speaker, proposes that there be rental review officers who would mediate in tenant-landlord disputes and publish their findings in an effort to keep rental increases reasonable.

Please note—and I wish to stress this point—that nowhere is there any indication of rent control as the hon. member for Wentworth suggested there should be.

Mr. Deans: I beg your pardon, Mr. Speaker; has the member read page 137, item 9?

Mr. Belanger: We already have a so-called Act respecting rent control. It is an Act which came into force in 1953—

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Oh really, the Minister threw that out the other day.

Mr. MacDonald: He says it is going to be repealed.

Mr. Belanger: And it is an Act with an original that goes back to wartime emergency as did similar Acts in Britain and New York.

Mr. Lawlor: The member's research department does not know what is going on in his own—

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Very embarrassing!

Mr. Belanger: This Act empowers only those municipalities which had regulations known as wartime leasehold regulations.

Mr. MacDonald: The Minister said he is going to repeal that Act.

Mr. Belanger: It has not been repealed yet—and made under the authority of The Leasehold Regulations Act, 1951, to create rental authority and provide for the administration enforcement of the wartime regulations.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. members to the left of this speaker will give this speaker the courtesy that their speaker had a few moments ago.

Mr. Belanger: The two cities which have been contemplating rent control most recently, Ottawa and Windsor, have shown no interest in the 1953 Acts, because as a solicitor from Windsor put it:

The legislation is unclear, and the city would soon be in lawsuits that would drag on for years without the situation being resolved.

As a matter of fact, The Department of Municipal Affairs officials have already indicated the possibility of the 1953 Act being repealed.

Mr. Deans: He says it is definitely going to be repealed.

Mr. Belanger: Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, the overriding argument against rent controls is the fact that they are self-defeating. When an investment in rental accommodation does not bring the return available from alternative investments, money goes elsewhere and the supply of rental property dries up. And that,

Mr. Speaker, is the last thing that this province could possibly want, the last thing that any sensible person would want.

Mr. Lawlor: A little ingenuity might solve it, though.

An hon. member: What is the alternative?

Mr. MacDonald: Machiavellian is the word for it!

Mr. Belanger: It has been only in the last few years that the supply has been somewhat short of demand. For example, in Metropolitan Toronto in the mid-sixties, up to about 1965, the demand was considerably short of the supply. Landlords resorted to all sorts of gimmicky to lure prospective tenants. So-called free trips to Florida, broadloom throughout, and free hi-fi's and many other extras were offered to those who would sign leases for two or three years. Well, we know what happened.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): That must be in Lower Slobovia.

Mr. Belanger: By 1966 the supply had dried up somewhat, mainly because investors in apartment buildings were not getting a good return so they were putting their money into other things. This created a slowdown in apartment construction. Meanwhile, the demand continued and soon caught up with the supply.

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): That is the Li'l Abner school of economics.

Mr. Belanger: Thus rents skyrocketed. This is well illustrated by the number of apartment starts in the Toronto area: in 1964, 16,700; in 1965, 21,131. Then, because of the lack of demand, there were only 11,531 apartment starts in 1966. By 1967, the demand had caught up and there were 21,212 apartments started, and in 1968, there were over 28,000. This tremendous increase in construction is once again causing a flood on the market, and according to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, there are four times as many vacancies in January, 1969, as there were in January of last year.

An hon. member: People cannot afford the rents.

Mr. Pilkey: The member has missed the point entirely.

Mr. Belanger: The vacancy rate was reflected in a 42 per cent decline in apartment building in January of this year, when building of only 1,134 suites was undertaken. Last year more than 2,000 were started.

An hon. member: Get more German money!

Mr. Belanger: Simply stating facts.

Mr. Makarchuk: Rip Van Winkle woke up!

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Deans: The fault lies with the government. It needs a more progressive housing policy.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Belanger: If we do permit rent control, we will put ourselves not only into the rent control business but we will have to accelerate our subsidization of housing.

Mr. Deans: And we will provide accommodation—

Mr. Belanger: It only stands to reason that if we tell a landlord he can only charge $150 for a specific type of apartment, and a builder cannot or will not build for that price, then we have got to step in and provide homes for those people whom we have just put out into the street.

Mrs. M. Renwick (Scarborough Centre): What about the ones that are already—

Mr. Belanger: Yes, this is specifically what rent control would do here today.

Just before I sit down, Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote from an article which appeared March 1 of this year in the Financial Post, and I quote from it even though the editors have jumped the gun and accused this government of wanting to get into the rent control business. We forgive them, though, for what they said in the very next breath is of very great importance. And I quote:

Rent control experience in Britain and in New York, both with their origins in wartime emergency, show that controls woefully intensify rather than ameliorate housing problems. Not least of the outrages bred by controls is the practice of extorting key money and the renting of "furnished flats" with the furniture represented by broken-down stuff that even charities wouldn't accept. Human nature being what it is, rent control always brings with it racketeering.

And of equally great significance is a remark attributed to the hon. member for Sarnia (Mr.

Bullbrook) by the February 27, 1969, edition of the Toronto Daily Star. He said, in part:

But I caution that this type of legislation can go from rent control to wage control to price control and total control.

Mr. Lawlor: He voted for it, though.

Hon. Mr. White: That is what NDP want.

Mr. Pilkey: That would be bad, that wage control would be bad.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You would not like that, eh?

Mr. Pilkey: Oh no, terrible.

Mr. Belanger: As an elected member of this Legislature, I intend to do everything in my power to protect our people, and that is why I wish to go on record, Mr. Speaker, as opposing private member's Bill No. 6.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, when I rise today to support this bill for rent control, to enable municipalities to impose it, as I do so I see evidence of a desperation on the part of people who are trying to find housing that they can afford to pay for, and still have something left over for their own food and clothing; desperation on the part of those who are wondering what is going to happen when they are evicted because of the rent increases that have been put in, not five per cent or ten per cent, but 50 per cent; desperation on the part of all kinds of people who are trying to do something positive about solving the shortage of low-cost shelter by constructing more of it; and my own personal desperation after watching this government do nothing but say no, time after time after time when somebody tries to come in with a solution to really solve the situation.

I want to give a few examples of this. We have heard time after time about people wanting to build houses here. "You cannot build houses here." "No, you cannot have a sewage plant there." "No, you cannot have a commuter service here." "No, you cannot borrow money there." "No, you cannot approve a plan of subdivision because it is premature." "No, you cannot merge with that municipality." "No, no, no, no!" But nothing in the way of a sensible, reasonable alternative.

This government has been the most frustrating, negative, unimaginative government I could ever imagine in dealing with solving the crisis in low-cost housing in this province. Never an alternative, just no.

What we all know is that you cannot solve low-cost housing and provide a solution to that problem with high-cost land. It is not the cost of the building of the houses themselves that is the problem, it is the high cost of land. So why has not the government gone to the root of the problem? Why has it not done something to help these people who are trying to get land opened up for development and get the supply in excess of the demand?

I want to give you some examples of just how frustrating people around this province, who are trying to do something to solve this crisis, have been finding it.

Last Friday I was at a hearing chaired by the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin (Mr. Root), where the people were seeking approval for a sewage plant to serve the new hospital in Richmond Hill and two school additions, plus 400 acres of land to be developed by clients of Mr. Hollis Beckett. The government stated very specifically it was to be understood that even though that plant was located at a point where it might service ten times the area of land, the government policy and directive given to the Ontario Water Resources Commission was no more than the 400 acres of land served by Mr. Hollis Beckett's clients.

What sort of long-term programme is that to solve the housing crisis in an area? If they are going to approve package plans which the Ontario Water Resources Commission considers are terrible, why would they approve a plant just to serve 400 acres instead of ten times that amount in that area? No solution, no hope given to the people in the area that really need housing—the people in the area that have houses that need more sewage—that they are going to be able to get services for their homes.

Example two: Pickering Township last year stated that they want to be able to merge with Metro Toronto for several reasons: 1. They are in desperate financial straits; 2. They need more services and they are absolutely stopped in development.

But it is no, no, no, and when the government provides an alternative it does nothing to assure—if it was Pickering—that it will have a solution to its problems. All it says is, "You can merge with all the other municipalities around you which are in the same plight. You can all be miserable together." No solution, just continued frustration.

Example three: People recognize that in this area of Toronto and the area close to the lake we can only expand in two directions. We do not have the normal areas available to a developing city in the heart of a country where you can expand in a 360-degree circle, and as a result we have a comparative shortage. But when people come forward and say they want to have commuter service not only to serve a narrow band east and west of Toronto, but to serve a whole, full semi-circle and thus help eliminate the shortage of land in this high-cost land that we have for development, the government says no, they cannot have commuter service; no, they cannot have plants.

Mr. L. M. Reilly (Eglinton): When did they say that?

Mr. Deacon: Look in the Budget that just came out. No expansion of GO north—no money for that. A few hundred thousand dollars would expand and open up an area to the north of Toronto and make it accessible and therefore practical for people to commute into this city and thus greatly increase the potential of the amount of land available for development. But no—it is always no. Never any encouragement or anything to alleviate the problems that are faced by these municipalities in getting access in transportation.

And to meet this shortage of low-cost land to build on so we can get low-cost housing, we have to see this government recognize the important role it has to play, a role that no private person can play—they cannot put in the sewers, and municipalities cannot put in sewers that are going to affect another municipality. We have an Ontario Water Resources Commission that can do this. But look at the Budget coming forward this year and no increase in the Ontario Water Resources Commission budget—nothing to open up and make that commission do the job it was intended to do.

It does not need to have financial agreements and contracts with municipalities in order to raise its money. Its money comes because it is guaranteed by the province, or provided by the province to the Ontario Water Resources Commission. But it is always no, no, no, you cannot get on with the development until you sign up an agreement for 10, or 15 or 40 years in order to finance this thing.

They do not seem to understand the basic role of Ontario Water Resources Commission would be to give a tremendous expanse of new area in which housing could be built, land which is not now low cost. By means of their legislative powers of assessing land that is ready for development they could be sure that this land gets on the market, and by getting the supply of land in excess of demand, that is land on which housing may be built, we will see the prices come down so we can get low-cost housing.

Mr. Speaker, I support this bill because it is a bill of desperation. It enables those who are in desperate situations—these cities—to bring in rent control. We know that is not the answer. Here is a housing report from Glasgow: “Eighty-four per cent of the housing done by public housing.” It is the worst housed city in the world, probably, certainly in the civilized world. Conditions like that, we know, arise when there is not free open supply in excess of demand. Here is Stockholm—it is supposed to be the ideal city—but is short of places to build and opportunities for people to go in and get housing. You wait eight years for your apartment building, or your house, in Stockholm unless you want to pay $2,500 under the table.

We know this is not the answer by rent control but at least if municipality after municipality said we have to put in rent control, maybe this government would at last wake up to its role, and perhaps then we will see some real solution to the housing problem.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Speaker, the other day in the private bills committee the bill came forward from the city of Ottawa in this matter.

Firstly may I say that curiously enough, however you may construe it, the member for Carleton East (Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence) of the Tory party, and the member for Ottawa East (Mr. Morin)—the member for Ottawa East going out of his way possibly because he lives in Ottawa—voted for the Ottawa bill and the balance of the Tory members voted against it. Why is it that in the crunch, when it really comes home, when the roosters come to roost, they go for the bill? I daresay that the Tory members, had it been a Metropolitan Toronto bill in the Metropolitan Toronto area, might have found it conducive to their charms and best interests so to do, too.

I find that particular division, based simply on the fact it happens to affect their electoral chances, as a most invidious way of carrying on government over there. May I say that the member for Prescott and Russell came forward to this House this morning with a very variegated mess of misinformation. I mean it is appalling for us to have sat on the committee just a few days ago and listened to a conflict, as I took it, involving the position as set forth by the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, who was there, who even stated categorically—in what I would think was in line with general Tory tradition—that he was totally opposed to rent control. On the other hand, the Attorney General of the province sought to draw our teeth—in his usual benign manner, I am sure in the best faith in the world—to the fact that, “Please do not move on this thing in this way. We have it under consideration and in the fullness of time we will bring forward in the Legislature in some form. Of course, I cannot even begin to intimate the nature of the beast, but some time we will bring forward some kind of rental control, and we would trust it would be in this session.” So just where do you boys stand on this particular matter? Certainly he ran directly contrary to what the Minister of Municipal Affairs had to say under this heading.

Departing from that particular area, shortly afterwards, walking down Bay Street, I met a fellow lawyer who then proceeded to accuse people like myself of causing the increase in rental by raising our voices against it. In other words the argument being that by us thumping away almost in Stygian darkness in the Legislature here—thumping away and asking for rental control—this was some kind of an encouragement to landlords to anticipate its possibility and to increase rentals.

Mr. MacDonald: Sounds like a Machiavellian plot!

Mr. Lawlor: That is a very strange argument. If members of the Legislature are not too forward with various proposals for reform, to say the least, in any area, then that is to be taken as a device whereby those who refuse the reform can go forward with the very thing about which reform has to be initiated. There is very little point in speaking about anything if that were the case.

It is an irrational, cross-eyed argument. We will come to another one in a moment, raised by the member for Sarnia, the business about going on from one step to another, that one control breeds another. That again is strictly illogicality. I suppose it is like saying that if you eat porridge you are almost certain to go for filet mignon, or that one leads to the other, necessarily speaking. So—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The hon. member can do better than that.

Mr. Lawlor: In any event there are a number of arguments brought forward here as to why rent control, being one of them, leads on to another. I suggest, for instance, the area of building restrictions. On the whole, where control has been initiated and well accepted it is seen that it is absolutely crucial and necessary to the interests and social good of any area, and that they have not necessarily led on from one another. As a matter of fact, after some refinement they have been able to cut back and see where they are really crucial and where they are not. In the first case, they usually try to cover the heavens and find that they have gone too far.

One of the arguments that is often used is that it is fine in wartime when there are other controls initiated, but that it is not a necessity in time of peace. One of the reasons I am a socialist is precisely that argument of necessity. When people who are not of my ilk talk about necessity they tend to consider that only wartime makes for beneficial social reform and the movement of government interference into various areas. They think that that is the only kind of overwilling necessity which has any stringency.

People like myself, however, are convinced that wherever human need is very great and aggravated—as has been indicated from the Liberal side—when people are being afflicted to the extent that they are, and it is known to all of us in this House, then it is the duty and necessity of government to do something.

That is what governments are for. That is what they are all about and if they do not do that, then they fail in their responsibility. In effect, they connive with the continuation of unnecessary suffering in the community. Because of certain prejudices and predilections that you people over there have, that is precisely what you do.

Let us go to another argument that was used here a moment ago. If controls were placed on rents, then the investment portfolios, finances and other institutions would be diverted into other areas of the economy and the second condition of the command would be worst than the first.

You do not have to have the ingenuity of an infant to be able to figure that if you graduated it and built into the new leases a certain escalation clause, or freed a new building from control, that those devices would meet the need and might even stimulate the building and provision of apartments. I have not seen any argument used against that particular point of view. Therefore, how can it be argued, as the member for Prescott and Russell (Mr. Belanger), did that the whole theory is self-defeating. Obviously it is not self-defeating if there is a way out. That is just a pure throwback piece of business that can have very little validity in an argument in this House.

The committee appointed by this government—I am sure with some degree of care as to who they will get so that they will not have upsetting individuals around—the law reform commission, has come forward with a number of recommendations. They see the need in the second volume of their work, the appendices, and they set out elaborate statistical data. They have come down very hard and said there is no question in their minds whatsoever that rental controls of some kind are necessary. They start off by saying that a rental review officer ought to investigate and review rentals. If that does not work—

Mrs. M. Renwick: That is about two years too late.

Mr. Lawlor:—he comes on to the next stage and says—and this is just the way he puts it—then a rental review board that would have investigatory, persuasive and publishing powers would try to bring them to heel. We moved beyond that. This is the position we had some time ago, but malingering over the whole affair, as you have done, causes these aggravations to become overwhelming. You have to move to rental control, and Leal says so, so that within the degree of your own—

Mr. Speaker: Might I interrupt the hon. member for a moment? Up to date now today we have kept very well on our timing. He is about to go into the next member's time. Would he please bring his remarks to a conclusion shortly?

Mr. Lawlor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I say, this is not a straight black-and-white proposition even within your own ranks, and I would ask you who sit in the back benches, who have good will in this matter, to bring all the pressure you can to bear on your own government.

Mr. H. J. Price (St. David): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased this morning to have the opportunity of participating in this debate on rent control. I find myself in opposition to the bill. This subject of rent control is a form of price control which has been engaging the attention of man since the dawn of time. In the few minutes we have to discuss rent control this morning it is not likely that we will find the complete solution to this real and vexing problem.

Rent control has never been, and never will be, the answer to high rents. I think the statement of the hon. Attorney General at a recent meeting of the private bills committee neatly summed up the situation. The hon. Attorney General stated that rent control probably would result in a shrinkage of capital in the housing market thus aggravating the very situation we are endeavouring to correct. If we were to introduce rent control I fear this is exactly what would happen. I readily agree that high rents are a matter which should concern every member of this Legislature. We must endeavour to find the solution.

While I agree that price controls are essential during wartime, it would not, I feel, be a measure which would be congenial to the public at large in a time of relative prosperity. High rents are presenting a problem to a wide variety of our citizens, including young working people, young married couples, students and senior citizens, to mention a few. What is needed is to find and introduce more capital into housing. We need a housing accommodation co-ordinating committee made up of representatives from churches, unions, life insurance companies, and other interested groups.

I am confident that with this kind of co-operation we could find and channel ample new funds into housing thus going a long way towards solving the difficulties. The agencies I have mentioned are in a very real sense involved, but they seem to be loath to channel funds into housing, when it calls for management and operation of housing projects. They should be encouraged to sit down with government officials to study rent and housing problems which are facing us. These agencies have funds available. If they are really interested in helping the housing and the renting crisis they should be willing to co-operate with us.

Another source of capital not fully explored is the possibility of housing bonds offering a tax free inducement to the buyer in which corporations and individuals could invest. This would provide additional funds to relieve the shortage which is causing high rents today.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer to page 69 of the Ontario law reform commission interim report on landlord and tenant law, 1968, which reads as follows:

Suspicion of rent gouging and profiteering, however is not alone enough to justify controls. It is essential, that so drastic a measure not be undertaken unless it is certain that the welfare of our society demands it. One of the factors which has made rent control acceptable to persons normally unsympathetic to such controls has been the conduct of lessors. It has been seriously questioned whether they maintain a reasonable degree of self-control in light of their advantageous bargaining position. On the other hand, however, if they are the victim of a general inflationary trend they ought not to be made the scapegoats for a universal economic malaise.

Mr. Speaker, I hope I have offered some workable alternatives to rent control which have the support and blessing of this House. I think my recommendations are worthy of further consideration.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Mr. Speaker, in rising to support the resolution of the hon. member for Wentworth, I want to state that I feel I am fortunate to be the last speaker because I have an opportunity to reply to some of the nonsense that has come forward from those that would oppose this bill.

One of the most nonsensical statements is that imposing rent control will discourage people from creating new units. On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that one of the reasons we are in such a dire plight with reference to housing units is that the high cost of living prevents people from saving money. It is savings that are subsequently invested into new housing units in the way of mortgages.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if we did have rental control so that the people would not have to put almost their last cent out in order to pay for the existing, shoddy housing accommodation, they would be able to save a few pennies. This money would be invested by the banks in new housing units. I would suggest to you that rent control will give this province an opportunity to raise the necessary capital to expand its housing stock. Then, perhaps, the worthy Treasurer of this province will not have to be going over to Europe to try to raise money. This nonsense that rent control is going to decrease housing units is absolute nonsense. It is so old-fashioned that only this government would subscribe to it.

I point out another thing to you, Mr. Speaker. Those who can recall rental control during the war will know that one way that housing accommodation was increased was that people put up new housing accommodation because at the time it did not come under the rental control. When you put up a new housing unit you could then charge a basic rental. That was one way of trying to circumvent the rental regulations at the time. So I would suggest to you that if we did have rent control there would be a large number of new housing units going up because people would feel that putting up new units would be the only way they could get high rentals.

Third, Mr. Speaker, a statement was made about landlords. One of the things I find out is that the new apartments are usually put up by developers who calculate what it would cost to make that building economically feasible. Then these large apartment developers give their tenants leases. This is at least one thing we can say in their favour—if anything can be said in their favour—and I imagine that all those who do belong to UDI, Urban Development Institute. It is when these apartments are sold to someone else, who is there not as a developer but simply to gouge, that we run into difficulty. They will not give leases and they just raise the rent almost month after month, or at least quarter after quarter. Do they ever gouge the tenants! These are the people that we have to guard against.

True, they may be small in number, if that is what this government wants us to believe. We will even go so far as to say: "Fine, we will accept your statement they are small in number but even with that small number, it is too great for our liking." There are too many of them, even though they may be, relatively speaking, small in number in ratio to the population of this province. And this is what we have to do. It is about time that people did have a few dollars left over to buy something else in life besides a roof over their heads. And we, this party, support the resolution.

Mr. Speaker: It now being 1.00 o'clock, private members' hour has expired.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on Monday we will resume the Budget debate with a contribution from the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nixon). With what time might be left, we will go back into the estimates. I believe the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Grossman) will be submitting his estimates to the House. We will sit Tuesday and Thursday nights next week.

An hon. member: Is there a rule we start at 2.30 o'clock?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I do not know if some special time has been laid on for this. The bell may go ten minutes early again, if the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha), does not object, in order that we may get his leader on television on time. In any event, may I suggest that the members come in as soon as the bell goes on Monday so that we may start exactly on time.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Will there be a private members' hour on Monday?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: No. Well now, I do not know. Yes, there will be, excuse me. So probably that will occupy the whole afternoon. There will be a private members' hour Monday afternoon.

Mr. Speaker: Before I put the motion to the adjournment of the House, I would like to acquaint the members of the proposed changes in the orders of the day and the procedure of the House on Monday and Tuesday, so that if there is any objection this would be the time to raise it and not after the event.

On Monday the House will go in, I hope, exactly at 2.30 and there will be television for the duration of the speech of the leader of the Opposition and the adjournment of the debate by the member for York South (Mr. MacDonald). Thereafter we will return to the order paper as we did on Tuesday last, beginning at the commencement of the normal orders for the day.

The same procedure will be in effect on Tuesday, when the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party, the member for York South, will be giving his Budget address. We will endeavour to have the House sit exactly at 2.30 and we will again go direct to the hon. member's speech and then come back to the normal course of business of the House. If there are any objections, any points of order or personal privilege, with respect to these two matters I would suggest that now would be the time to raise them rather than at a later time.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask the Prime Minister if, in view of the indication he gave that The Treasury Department estimates will not be continued next week, the Treasurer will be present on Monday and Tuesday during the addresses of the leader of the Opposition and the member for York South?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, there are two comments I would like to make. I do not think the Treasurer will be here on Monday. As I hear this routine, it appears to me there will be very little point in going into estimates on Monday, so we will go to the order paper and deal with bills in that interval between the time that the leader of the Opposition finishes and the private members' hour starts.

Mr. Peacock: The point is, the Treasurer will not be here?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: No, he will not.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): Will we be continuing with the question period?

Mr. Speaker: We will go back to the introduction of our guests that we have in the galleries, then petitions, motions and so on, just as we did the other day. In other words, the order of proceedings in the House will be exactly the same as normal after the two addresses have been completed on Monday and Tuesday.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to strain the patience of the House, but I wonder if I could ask the Prime Minister whether it is intended we go on with Correctional Services on Tuesday. We will now delay the Treasury estimates for next week?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, the Treasurer is going to be away for a few days. I will give you notice when his estimates are to be resumed.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Wear a blue shirt for television and a pickaxe for me.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

The House adjourned at 1.05 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, MARCH 10, 1969

The House met at 2.30 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The second order, resuming the adjourned debate on the motion that Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair and the House resolve itself into the committee on ways and means.

ON THE BUDGET

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, as the members rush to take their places at this somewhat early calling of the House, I want to recall to you, sir, that the Treasurer's (Mr. MacNaughton), Budget statement brought before the Legislature just a week ago must be considered, in the light of statements that both he and the Premier of Ontario (Mr. Robarts), have been making for the last six months, and, in some regard, for the last two years.

I know that you, sir, will recall the Budget two years ago—that was in our Centennial year—in which it was proudly announced by the Premier sitting opposite me that there would be no new taxes and, in fact, that our services would expand by an amount approaching 20 per cent in the total Budget costs. While this seemed to be a good way to mark a Centennial year, it seemed an even better election-year Budget in which everything was in great shape, milk and honey, no problems, not even any real criticism of the government of Canada.

Now, immediately following that election, in which my friends opposite were very successful in being returned to office, as you recall the next Budget increased taxes enormously. There was also some considerable complaint that the government of Canada was not meeting its main responsibilities in funding programmes that are essential to the progress of this province. But, it was not until this fall that the real programme of anxiety was brought before the people of Ontario, and to some extent, those of us here in this House.

I well recall the shock with which I read the speech made by the Provincial Treasurer in which he—not the leader of the Opposition, but the Provincial Treasurer—said that we were approaching a situation that he called a "fiscal nightmare". Now that phrase has been used many times, but surely it is the bellwether, the symbol of the government's programmes during the last few months.

More and more there has been an indication that the government of Canada was not fulfilling its rightful responsibilities in meeting the costs of our growing programmes here. Now, we on this side, Mr. Speaker, as Liberals, and in the official Opposition, have been calling to the attention of the House and to everyone who would listen, that it has been 25 years during which the Conservative administration has been bringing new programmes into the service of the province. Admittedly many of them good programmes, but programmes which cost money, real money. And it is this expansion of programmes, much faster than the expansion of a reasonable tax base could possibly occur, which has brought us to what the Treasurer said was practically ruin.

Then, of course, last week's Budget changed that situation dramatically. We were told that while some services were going to be cut back, still the government of Ontario was going to meet its commitments; it was going to raise taxes certainly, but not in a way which would have any dramatic impact, or regressive impact, on the people of this province, and best of all, and most surprising of all, our Budget was going to be balanced.

Now this, in view of the statement that had been made—sometimes I had thought without any kind of personal control at all both by the Treasurer and the Premier, when they were meeting their counterparts at federal-provincial conferences. I tell you, this reminds me of the old story of the boy who cried wolf. The government sitting opposite has a credibility gap which it must now shoulder. After saying that the circumstances in this province were so bad financially, they then presented us with a balanced Budget.

Now I think, Mr. Speaker, that it would be useful if we examined the role that is played in our budgetary transactions in this province by the government of Canada, because we believe in confederation. As a matter of fact, everyone here believes in the future of the programme that has brought us successfully through our first century as a nation. We also know that while we have had shared programmes in the past, there is a considerable pressure to abandon these programmes and let the provinces and the government of Canada go their own way.

Well now, let us see what it entails when we look at the Budget that we have before us. Our largest single source of revenue, our share of the income tax pie, amounts to $712 million for the coming year. Now in addition to that we get, I believe, 75 per cent of an abatement on the estate taxes that are also collected by the government of Canada. This means that we have $734 million that will be coming in the form of a cheque, addressed to the Provincial Treasurer, without any strings attached and which can be used to fund our provincial programmes.

Now I suppose it is because I am the leader of the Opposition that I am particularly sensitive that the electors know where the money comes from, that pays for our programmes here. We are very proud of our schools. We think they could be better, but we are proud of what has been established here, particularly since the war. Our highways—I see the Minister of Highways (Mr. Gomme), in his place today—while there is criticism—let us say that even in his own area up until recently they have been inadequate—still we know that we have built a magnificent highway, the Macdonald-Cartier Freeway, from one boundary to the other and that we have made a lot of progress.

My point is this: That a large share of the funds that buy these facilities come to us from our agreement with the government of Canada and without the responsibility of this government opposite to levy the taxes to pay for them.

But I have just begun this story, Mr. Speaker, because I have told you that there are $734 million that come to us, sort of from our rich uncle Ben Benson up there in Ottawa, which are used to fund our programmes. But if you examine the Budget statement that has been read to the House by the Provincial Treasurer, you will find that for the first time—and I suppose this is in response to the criticisms levied by our Royal commission on taxation—the federal involvement in all of our programmes is listed as a separate item.

And as I look at the Ministers in the front row over there I know the Minister of Social and Family Services (Mr. Yaremko), sitting on the end, gets a large share of the funds that he uses through a federal-provincial shared cost programme. The Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Randall) is absent, but in housing we know that Mr. Hellyer's disbursement of funds, through CMHC and other sources, finances a great deal of the effort to mitigate the housing difficulties that we experience here. The Minister of Education (Mr. Davis) gets the largest share of all—and I will talk about that in a moment—and even the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Stewart) receives significant funds. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Bales), through manpower training, the Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Brunelle) to a lesser extent, the Minister of Energy and Resources Management (Mr. Simonett), through the development of our resources, is on the receiving end of a federal shared cost programme. The Minister of Mines (Mr. A. F. Lawrence) assures me that he gets no federal money.

But the total, and it has been very difficult to determine the total until this year, is another $200 million, and that is a conservative figure not a ball park figure. So we are in a position where, besides the $734 million with no strings attached, there is another $200 million for shared cost programmes. But you know, not all of these programmes appear—and this is where the Minister of Education straightens his tie because there is a special budgetary item of, I believe, $176 million which is the federal contribution towards paying half the cost of post-secondary education that comes under the Minister of Education's jurisdiction. This does not come as direct federal aid to education because of constitutional problems of which we are aware, particularly in the province of Quebec. But still the money comes down here.

I have taken the trouble to add these various funds together and they approach $1 billion. Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like you to compare that with our total budget, which is under $3 billion, and it means that the government of Canada funds close to 40 per cent—about 37.5 per cent—of the Budget that we vote here in the Legislature.

Now the Premier and others may be prepared to say that this is an insignificant contribution towards the retention of the strength of confederation, but I, for one, am prepared to say that I am glad that in this Budget the Treasurer, who unfortunately is not with us today, took the bull by the horns and at least tried to set our financial house in order, so that our programmes were not growing so much faster than our tax income. I congratulate him for this because this is quite an accomplishment.

I personally, am not a believer in a balanced budget for its own sake. There is another phrase which appeals to me more, a balanced economy. But surely as a politician, and most of us here are politicians, we know that the people back home, whether in large cities or in rural areas, have been crying for a reduction in programmes so that at least they could see an end to ever increasing taxes.

An hon. member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nixon: I am not at all sure that this accomplishment is going to be worth the paper it is written on when we see just how the Treasurer went about it. I do want to draw to your attention, sir, that in achieving this balance, the decision was made to cut what my friends opposite sometimes rather condescendingly call, soft services. I refer to the fact that our hospital programme in general has been reduced by a very serious amount indeed. And, as is usual, the government opposite tried to pin this problem on the government of Canada, which has reduced its grant for sharing hospital expansion. The fact remains, however, that these hospitals are controlled by the Ontario Hospital Services Commission, they must submit their budgets to that commission, and the decision to slow down the rate of expansion in these facilities was made by the government sitting opposite. Now already the word postponement has taken on a particularly important meaning with regard to this stand-fast Budget, this balanced Budget, this Conservative Budget. The postponement of a number of programmes, I would suggest to you, sir, is going to reflect in the reduction of important—I would say, essential—services in many communities. This is going to mean that all of us in this Legislature are going to receive severe criticism in the next few months.

Already two communities have had to accept the decision made by this government that there will be no further assistance for the expansion of their homes for the aged. I refer to the city of Brantford and the city of Niagara Falls. In at least one case, the construction had already begun before the cut-back came, and the municipality and the county will continue with the expansion entirely at their own expense.

Hospital expansion, as I have already mentioned, is going to be a continuing and serious problem in communities like Metropolitan Toronto, where there are already lengthy and serious waiting lists for anything but emergency procedures. Psychiatric facilities—particularly those for research—have been cut back, and those of us who in the past year have visited Ontario hospitals know how serious a matter this is. Too many of our citizens, perhaps including many members of this House, have tended to put this terrible problem out of their minds. They hear about it from time to time in speeches by the hon. members when the vote comes before the Legislature. But, for many people here, the problem of caring for the mentally ill is something that is another family's difficulty, somebody down the street, somebody around the corner, and not ours.

I feel that the deliberations of the health committee last week—while they were questionable in their value at least on some circumstances—brought to public view, once more, the important concern that those professionals who are dealing with the problem of mental health on a day-to-day basis must face. And this, of course, was another area that was seriously cut back by decision of the Treasurer and the Prime Minister of Ontario. I would say that the cutting of these community services, and those attendant particularly upon the facilities for emotionally disturbed children, are going to reflect on the general attitudes of this administration. If it is true that $400 million was cut from the projected budget requirements, then it appears that a large share of these cuts came from those who are least powerful and least in a position to respond to government programmes and criticize them. It is up to us in this House to see that the criticisms are put forward and that some steps can be taken to restore these cuts. I believe the answer is very well before us.

There are two other budgetary cuts that I want to refer to, Mr. Speaker, before getting on to another subject. One is the fact that our housing programme is still largely funded with federal money. The Minister of housing, the Minister of Trade and Development who is responsible for housing in this administration, takes a lot of the headlines. But the funds, which are to be used to buy land which when serviced should relieve the high costs of at least this aspect of housing development, still come from Ottawa.

There is one area, which I think is particularly important where our Budget does cut our own efforts. That is the effort that is headed by the Minister of Energy and Resources Management—the Ontario Water Resources Commission. Unless the water resources commission gets into the business of installing the services in an effective and progressive way in land which can be used in large urban areas for housing development, then we will never get the costs down to the level where an ordinary man receiving employment and salary from $5,000 to $10,000 or $12,000, can ever expect to own such a lot and construct his home upon it.

Last year I was startled to find, in looking at the public accounts, that $50 million which was voted in this House for the expansion of the OWRC facilities went unused and went back into the coffers of the government. No wonder the decision was made to restrict OWRC expenditure this year, because they apparently are not properly set up with a modern administration that can make these funds available to municipalities and others so that the expansion of serviced land, which is in such short supply in our community, can be mitigated. I think this is a serious matter. I believe that, rather than cutting back on the funds available to them, we should improve the organization and set as a standard policy renovation of the view with which the OWRC has been tied down. I believe that they must have the prime responsibility to service land with water and sewage services so that part of the problems associated with the housing crisis in Ontario can be done away with once and for all.

A moment ago, Mr. Speaker, I was drawing to your attention the fact that health services received the brunt of Budgetary cuts, and while the government opposite has a tendency to blame the government of Canada for these cuts, it is surely here where the solution lies; that is, to put back in the general train of community development, the hospitals, homes for the aged and so on. The solution lies with the federal government's Medicare programme which has been rejected by the government of Ontario.

When I am talking about this, Mr. Speaker, I would like to recall to your mind that the Premier of Ontario, sitting opposite, said in the House just a few days ago that he was not against the principle of Medicare itself and that he felt that a properly composed insurance programme is something that would be in the best interests of our citizens. Now, with that statement I am completely in accord, but where we part company is where the gentleman sitting opposite is prepared to say that we in Ontario have the best of all possible schemes and, in fact, must not and should not participate in federal Medicare. I think the inflexibility lies right here in this government and particularly with the leader of the government.

He, or his advisors, have told the House that Ontario already has coverage in medical insurance right here in the province, of something over 94 per cent, which would be tantamount to saying that we have universal coverage in Ontario. We have very close to it, and I believe that we could achieve this federal requirement if we decided that we would go for the federal programme. I think that the programme would be comprehensive enough so that we would be able to take part in federal Medicare, and all that remains is for the government opposite to pass legislation or regulation, which will prohibit any company offering medical insurance from making a profit on such an insurance.

We know that we have several large establishments outside OMSIP which are offering these insurance programmes—PSI is one of them, the county co-operative movement is another one; I happen to belong to that one myself—and if we were to examine the flexibility in the federal programme that has been found by other provincial governments, notably B.C. and Alberta, there is not a doubt in my mind that we could live up to the four minimum requirements which would permit us to go into federal Medicare and all the advantages that that would entail. It would not change our system here dramatically. It might be an embarrassment to some of the private insurance companies which are still either making a profit on medical insurance itself, or the ancillary package of insurance that often goes with it.

I believe, however, that it would be well within the principle of Medicare that the Premier of Ontario himself accepts, that we could move into a programme, living up to the four minimum requirements of federal Medicare without disrupting our system as it is at present constructed and operating. I personally believe in government-operated medical insurance. The Premier sitting opposite does not, and if he prefers to have a spectrum of carriers, I am saying to him, sir, through you, that this is a part of the flexibility of the federal plan and there is no reason it cannot become a part of our plan.

The only reason I am putting this forward is that if we were to accept federal Medicare and be accepted by the federal government in Medicare we would receive during the next fiscal year $170 million in assistance, which should be spent on reducing premiums, or eliminating them, or at least in my view, funding those medical services which have been cut out of the present Budget. And I say this with great sincerity. The flexibility is there and I would challenge the Prime Minister and his Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) who may even now be conferring with his federal counterparts, to examine this flexibility to see whether or not what I say is true. I believe that it is, that we can adapt ourselves to the federal requirements, and come out of this programme by July 1 this year since we have missed the opening date for 1969, with a participation on federal Medicare which will restore those aspects of medical facilities that have been cut from the present Budget. I believe that this is something that can be accomplished and that must be accomplished, and would, in fact, restore a more progressive life to a Budget which is in every aspect regressive, stand-punt and based on retrenchment.

Now, Mr. Speaker, any Budget that is a balanced Budget accomplishes this position by cutting its costs—and I have already referred to some of those cost cuts—and by increasing the tax take. In Ontario the Treasurer has been able to increase the tax income this year by $180 million. I suppose as politicians examined where these increases in taxes occurred, they thought there was a certain deftness, a political deftness, in the way this was accomplished. After all, most people are prepared to say, "Well, higher taxes on liquor and cigarettes, expensive meals, hotel and motel accommodations; people have a choice whether or not they are going to spend those funds, and therefore they have a choice as to whether they will pay the tax". I think the fact remains, however, that where last year 19 cents out of every dollar we raised in tax funds came from the sales tax, this year it has been increased to 21 cents. And whether or not you believe people should buy liquor, smoke cigarettes or buy expensive meals, the Treasurer knows that $100 million extra is going to be paid by the man on the street. I almost called him the little man but my friend, the member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha), says there are no little men in Ontario and it is a point well taken. The point is that this tax is still as regressive as it ever was; the largest increases in our tax amounts will come from the average citizen, the man with an income below $8,000, and this is the regressive feature that we have been critical of in past years and are again criticizing this year. We must realize that if the tax income goes up by $180 million, that is about $100 per household and perhaps over a period of 12 months it is not going to be a serious matter, but still it means that the spiral of taxation continues to move upward in this province of opportunity, this banner province that leads the economy of the rest of the nation.

I think it might be well for us to recall that we have four main sources of taxation: the income tax, which I have already mentioned, collected by the government of Canada; the sales tax which goes up by about $100 million this year, and at five per cent, part of it at 10 per cent, will net $630 million; corporation income over $400 million; gasoline tax more than $350 million; and then we get down to what I suppose C. D. Howe and some other politicians would call the small potatoes, but all of which add up to close to $3 billion.

It is interesting to recall that we in this province have one source of revenue which is a very important one, which is not in fact a tax; it is a monopoly. We have a law passed in this House that will permit only the government to sell liquor. We handle that monopoly very well indeed. We buy the raw material cheap, water it down and sell it dear. This year we intend to make $190 million in that particular business. So you can see that the formation of a Budget has this flexibility. We can look to the government of Canada for changes in the tax base, we can look to our basic regressive taxes—and these have been increased this year—and we have also increased the take on the liquor business as we have in most years in recent history.

The one tax increase which I think should be severely criticized is the decision to levy the five per cent sales tax on production machinery. It is much too easy to say: "Oh, well, that's really a corporation tax, the wealthy manufacturers will look after that and they should be paying more tax." We know, of course, that the $38 million that this tax will net the government will be passed on in toto to the consumer. If anything, it will result in an increase in prices well beyond just the payment of the tax. The normal pricing by the manufacturers—and even the government of Ontario does this from time to time—is to round off the new price to the next highest five cents or ten cents so that they make a little profit as well as pay the new tax.

While we are looking at the federal example, I am sure there are Ministers opposite who recall the famous federal Budget in 1963 when a tax of this nature was levied at the federal level on production machinery.

It was not five per cent, I must admit, it was 11 per cent. And it was not long until those who were concerned with the economic livelihood of our nation convinced the federal government—a Liberal government admittedly—that this tax was not in the best interests of the nation. Over a series of months it was reduced and, I am glad to say, finally abolished.

I would think that while this tax will fall very heavily on the consumer, it is the Minister of Trade and Development and the Minister of Labour who might also be very much concerned about its effect. As the costs of production go up, our position as an export market or as an export producer is going to be jeopardized. There are those, more expert in economics than I, who are prepared to predict that this tax in the long run will cost us money—and a great deal of money—and together with that, the availability of jobs. To back up my argument I need only quote the recommendations in volume three of the royal commission on taxation, which I read before going to bed each evening. I read to you, on page 228, Mr. Speaker, as follows:

We recommend that the present exemptions from sales tax be reviewed and revised so that all purchases of machinery, equipment and other goods that enter into the direct cost of manufacturing and producing will be exempt.

Now, the Royal commission—and we paid a lot of money for their advice—considered their position for four years. The Royal commission recommends not only retaining the exemption but expanding it in the manufacturing area so that it would relieve the cost to the consumer and improve our position as a manufacturing province.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when it comes to cost cutting, I think the government made a serious error in approaching health services. The villain of the piece is surely education. Once again, it is expanding tremendously. While we on this side favour the provision of the best facilities that we can possibly afford, it seems to be generally understood—even by the Treasurer—that it is in this department and those branches that come under the direction of the Minister of Education, that costs can be pared. There, we can reach a new level of efficiency which seems to have gone by the board in recent Budgets.

I happen to come from a rural part of the province and we, of course, are following with a great deal of interest the decisions made by the new county boards of education. These boards are duplicating the facilities that had been offered by The Department of Education as far as inspection and supervision are concerned. We now find that each county, independent of each other and apparently independent of any guidance from the department, is undertaking to hire staff from a pool that was employed by The Department of Education until January 1 of this year.

I well remember the Minister in a speech last year saying that all of those who would be replaced or displaced by the new statute would, he expected, find employment with the new county board. Well, of course, it has come to pass that those officials at the county level have all been taken on in some new capacity with the county board system. The only difference is that their salaries have gone up—usually by a figure approaching $10,000. Where an inspector or a supervisor would be making $15,000 a year ago, he is now making $22,000 to $25,000 plus.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce); More than a Cabinet Minister!

Mr. Nixon: The Minister of Education is shaking his head. He must surely be aware that a large percentage of these officials is making more money than he does. While I would be quick to say they may be worth it, the fact remains we are duplicating, on a county to county basis, this involved procedure in supervision and inspection without any guidelines from the Minister of Education whatever.

Mr. Speaker, the members sitting opposite are very sensitive to this. As a matter of fact, it even crept into the Treasurers' Budget statement. He shook his finger at the television camera or somebody on this side—and said if the county school boards do not improve their situation we may set up a budgetary review board. He says this at least a year after Parkinson's law has been acting. Everybody who was available was hired at new and increased salaries and all these new people had their own staff. So, we will find that any budgetary review board that might be set up in the years that lie ahead will have to fire people. It would have been better if the Minister of Education had set reasonable guidelines—not only for salaries but for the positions that might very well have been filled at the county level. We do not know what the future holds for education other than increasing costs.

The Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. McKeough), is imposing a network of regional government across the province, and at least on the authority of the Royal commission on taxation, these regions should have something to do with the governance of education.

We know that some of the county boards are already planning centralized administrative facilities to house the gentlemen who have been hired to administer the matter. We can see that we have set in motion a vast spending machine particularly involving those who never get into the classroom to instruct the students. These men are well above the principals who are on the firing line in modern education. They are at the level where they hand down dicta and opinions, confer with the regional offices of The Department of Education and then perhaps go one step beyond that and talk to the Minister and his staff here.

I would say that education is dissolving into a bureaucratic nightmare. Its expenses are not returning dividends in excellence in education. It is in this particular area where efficiencies and cost cutting should have attracted the budgetary attention. There is a great deal of duplication, of course, in these educational facilities. It was told by a taxpayer in the Lakehead—and I talked to them on several occasions—that there are three separate and distinct educational television facilities to train young people in the uses of television both at the technical school level and at the university and at the community college level. Surely an approach that was predicated on providing good facilities, but providing them efficiently, would have put these facilities together so that the Lakehead would have been well served by one good system rather than three which perhaps were incomplete in themselves.

There is another example of waste and poor planning. Perhaps it does not involve too many dollars, but it comes from Huron county, the constituency of the hon. Treasurer himself. My informants in that area, particularly the member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Gaunt), tell me that Huron county undertook in their wisdom to build a separate building for assessment purposes and their county assessment staff would use those facilities. The cost was something like $160,000 and the ribbon was just cut on this building—probably by the Treasurer himself—when he came down here to Toronto, to say that they were going to do away with county assessment and actually move all these assessors into Toronto where they would be employees of the provincial government and they would go out with the wisdom of the government sitting opposite and impose the assessment on the local communities.

I believe that surely some effort at rationalizing the plans that are coming forward is required. The taxpayers, I suppose, greet a balanced Budget with approval but they are certainly not going to greet the continued waste of their funds in this particular way with approval when there are enough members of the Crown sitting opposite so that their new approach to municipal government, to education, to assessment, to regional development can be co-ordinated in such a way that it will be better and more efficient rather than worse and less efficient, which is the way it appears when we look at the announcements as they come from the other side.

Mr. Speaker, my first session in this Legislature was in 1962. The Premier was new to his job then as well and one of the most interesting speeches that I heard from the other side was one that predicted a complete revamp of the provincial tax system with heavy emphasis on municipal grants. It was said then, of course, that nothing could be done in this direction until the Royal commission on taxation, which was appointed in that year, had brought down its report. Well four years later this report came before the Legislature and still, in this particular Budget, we are told that a revamping of the grants for the municipalities will be postponed.

Last year one of the recommendations was picked right out of the report—that is, the recommendation for the basic shelter exemption—and used as an election promise. It was put before the Legislature a year ago and we have now seen it in operation for a full year. This was the only attempt at reform that was meaningful, and taken separate and by itself it has not been effective in meeting the needs at the municipal level. I would say that its cost of $111 million was in fact that much overtaxation of the people of this province, that their alternatives, which were available a year ago and which are available now, would have been a means whereby this sort of assistance through tax credits would have been made available to the local taxpayer rather than the cumbersome and inefficient method that was adopted by the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

It is true that we, on this side, voted for a programme which was designed to give some effect, however small and however short-lived, to the local taxpayers. But we did not vote in favour of this cumbersome bureaucracy which has been set up, I estimate, at a cost of $7 to $8 million to administer these funds.

But we are talking about general reform of these grants that should give the municipalities an opportunity, for the first time, to make some decisions themselves and make meaningful that phrase "local autonomy" that is heard so frequently on both sides of this chamber. We know that the promise in the white paper that accompanied the Budget last week—to pay 60 per cent of the costs of education locally rather than 50 per cent—is a step in the right direction.

Our programme, on this side, is on a phased basis to take over even a larger share of these costs and to tie them in with unconditional grants so that the municipalities, whether they are amalgamated into larger regions or not, will in fact have some decisions to make at the local level without their freedom of action being impinged upon by the Minister sitting opposite who may have pet programmes—whether they are regional jails or regional health centres or regional welfare or some other aspect. The local citizens who are elected to serve in municipal councils must have the responsibility finally—and once again, they have not had it for a long time—to make some of the important decisions which I believe will result in efficiency.

Regional government, of course, is a very touchy issue indeed. It has been discussed in this Legislature and certainly advocated from the Opposition for a good long time. That is why, when the government moves to bring forward some manifestations of regional government, we cannot oppose them holus-bolus, we must look at what the proposals are. But one of the weakest links in the programmes that have been put forward by the municipal affairs expert and by the Premier himself, has been their assurance that local taxpayers and local elected officials will have some decisive role to play in what form the new regional government will take.

Now I believe the government has reneged on that position, that they are prepared to impose their own views. The worst example is at the Lakehead where they are not going to permit the citizens to have a plebiscite on whether or not the proposals should go ahead. Now the Lakehead is, of course, a special circumstance where two historic cities have grown side by side, almost with equal populations and with certain backgrounds that they feel make them somewhat different. I believe the future of those two cities is in amalgamation but I believe as well that this future will be jeopardized if the decision is going to be made irrevocably by a junior Minister 1,200 miles away rather than by the citizens who live in that part of Ontario and who have chosen to live there and who feel that they have a role to play on the decisions that have so much to do with their own future.

So I would say, Mr. Speaker, that regional government is something of great concern to all of us, whether we come from the rural areas and that we insist that those people at the local level must have a more meaningful voice before decisions are imposed upon them from this level of government.

I have already said that when regional governments do come into existence in those areas where they will be an advantage or where certain amalgamations make the municipal governments, let us say, more efficient, more realistic in their size, in their jurisdiction, that we should leave the responsibilities for assessment with them, particularly at the regional level. I do not look forward to the time when an army of assessors will be added to the payroll of the provincial civil service already numbering close to 60,000.

If we are going to regionalize the responsibility of government, then the regions must have autonomy, they must have the basis to pay for their responsibilities, and this is surely what they are chiefly concerned with. I do not want to miss this particular occasion, Mr. Speaker, without referring to the development of northern Ontario which did not feature in any prominent way in the Budget that was presented to us just a week ago.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Lost and forgotten!

Mr. Nixon: The decision to impose a special mining tax on our natural resources was greeted, I think, even by those industries concerned, with some equanimity, particularly since the net result of the tax would be $8 million. This is a token only, but it may in fact set the stage for using our natural resources as a better basis for the funding of provincial programmes and particularly those programmes which should be carried on in the northern part of the province.

I have felt for a long time that our plans, or the plans set out by the government opposite, to foster northern development, have had too many political overtones to be modern and efficient. The most recent announcement came just at the time of the last provincial election when the Premier sitting opposite sensed that he was losing northern support, and—I believe it was in Port Arthur—he made the announcement that there would be a grand new programme, expansion of funds, that would be funnelled into northern development.

Mr. Sopha: I do not think he ever had very much support from the north.

Mr. Nixon: Well it is even less now than it was then.

Mr. Sopha: Indeed!

Mr. Nixon: And I am quite prepared to say since the last Liberal administration—

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Just as we sit over here and the hon. members sit over there!

Mr. Nixon: The last Liberal administration has not been in office in the province for some years, perhaps there was a time when politics was plied by them in this same way; but that was a quarter of a century ago. I believe very strongly that the funds that should be made available to northern economic development and the development of our natural resources, should be administered by a development board, on which all the elected members from the north, whether NDP, Liberal or Progressive Conservative would have a role to play.

Criticism has been levied against this proposal, saying, "You are a northern separatist". I do not believe that is so. I do believe, however, that the decisions associated with northern development can much better be taken by those people from the north with proper economic advice, and by those people who are in the north, rather than the Ministers who have their head office down here in Toronto. This is a small thing, perhaps, but surely those citizens who have chosen to tie their families and their lives to the northern way of life, and particularly with the development of natural resources, want to believe that those who make the decisions affecting them, are not 500 or 600 miles away, that their offices are in the northern community, and that the decisions are made by those people who have some background in and sympathy for special northern problems.

Frankly, I am not prepared to admit that the Minister of Mines, for example, sitting with his feet up before the fire at his home in Rosedale in Toronto, is capable of that sort of knowledge. He is a great fellow, and his picture in the mining report looks very good—he has a mining hat on, and so on—but I am convinced, Mr. Speaker, that northerners must have a much greater part to play in the decisions that affect themselves. And while I am talking about an attitude of separatism, I get to the other aspects of this Budget that were, in fact, contained in the white paper read after the Budget, which gives me some considerable anxiety. I read the speech over very carefully after listening to the Treasurer so that I would not have missed any of his meaning. But I believe that his announcement that Ontario will have a separate income tax, is not a threat; I believe it is an irrevocable decision. I believe in the mind of the Premier and of the Minister of Revenue (Mr. White) it is the cornerstone of a new fiscal approach for Ontario. And I would say that, because of that belief, I am particularly anxious; that it is, in fact, a statement of a policy of fiscal separatism, much more dangerous to our national unity than any bomb in a mailbox down in Montreal.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nixon: We in this province have the advantages of the leading economy in Canada, and even when you compare it with many of the industrialized northern states, we are in a great position to attract new industry and new people. But, if we are going to use this preferred position to build a brick wall, a fiscal wall around our province, with the idea that we can handle our own affairs, and that our responsibilities to Canada come somewhere down the list of priorities, then I would say to you, Mr. Speaker, that we on this side will oppose that attitude with all the force at our command.

The first announcement of a separate income tax was backed up by the second, that there should be, and would be, in Ontario a capital gains tax, whether or not this is imposed by the government of Canada. To show how symbolic this was, the Treasurer went on to say that if, in fact, we impose it separately, it will only be nominal in amount, and I suppose be there just to say that we have a progressive system. Because I do not believe that a capital gains tax can be a part of any province's system, without regard to its effect across our nation. I subscribe to the recommendations of the federal Royal commission that capital gains should be taxed not as they are taxed in the United States, but that they should be taxed as an income from any other source, and this I would predict and I believe and would urge, would be a part of the fiscal policy of the government of Canada.

But I would like to read to you, sir, some quotes from those more learned in these matters than I. This comes from the Toronto Daily Star, March 5 this year, under the heading: "Ontario Income Tax Plan Cited as a Threat to Canadian Unity", and I quote from the article:

Creation of a provincial income tax as advocated by Ontario Treasurer Charles MacNaughton, could seriously endanger federal control over Canada's economic policy, Douglas Sherbaniuk, Director of the Canadian Tax Foundation, said last night. Sherbaniuk said, "A provincial income tax would mark a return to the tax confused pre-war years of the 1930's and could weaken Canada's economic unity."

I believe that the comments made by this gentleman, and reflected, by the way, by both Mr. Smith and Mr. Carter, the chairmen of the two Royal commissions on tax matters advising the federal government and the provincial government would indicate that the policy pronouncements last week are historic; that these pronouncements, in fact, spell the beginning of a fiscal provincialism, and fiscal separatism, that is bound to weaken our national unity.

Now, at this stage, when I have brought this to the attention of the House before, there have been interjections from the gentlemen opposite saying, "Do you not believe in Ontario first?" And I would say, sir, that I do believe that we in this House have to accept our responsibilities to the province first, except where our responsibilities as Canadian citizens must take precedent. And it is in this case that they do, because we must not lead the other provinces away from the strength that must exist with the government of Canada if, in fact, they are going to continue the programmes which will strengthen our unity, and, more than anything else, pay for equality of opportunity.

There have been politicians at both the provincial and federal level who have said that shared-cost programmes will have to be done away with, since it is not possible for provinces to co-operate with the government of Canada, or vice versa. I do not believe this. I believe that as long as we are a confederation, as long as Canada exists, that we will have a group of shared cost programmes that will change in their importance and in their intentions. Right now these programmes feature health services, hospitalization and certain other programmes, but it will not be long, I predict, before the emphasis comes on a guaranteed minimum income as a goal not just for people in Ontario, but for people right across Canada. I believe the emphasis in shared-cost programmes will move towards a coming to grips with the problems of pollution, which in many provinces simply cannot be faced because there is not enough money, and in some provinces such as this one, cannot be faced because there is insufficient leadership.

The third area where shared-cost programmes are bound to come in the future will be in the area of education finance. We already receive close to $200 million from the government of Canada in support of our education programmes in this province, but I believe there will soon be an improvement in this situation which will allow us to spend at least some of these funds in areas below the post-secondary level. I look forward to this. I believe that Canada must have such programmes if we are going to do away particularly with that last area of inequality of opportunity, and that is in education.

So, Mr. Speaker, I would say in closing my remarks, that I want to put the government in full possession of our position, that we will not vote in support of any programmes which we believe will tend to weaken the unity of our nation. We have heard the Prime Minister sitting opposite say that he believes in a strong central government but—and after that word comes his objections which in fact erode, and continuously erode, the powers that I believe must continue to be in the hands of the government of Canada. In my view we are embarking upon a dangerous road indeed when we attempt to set up a tax system that simply is putting aside once and for all the requirement of co-operation, a spirit which I know exists in the minds of the government opposite, and in the minds of the government in Ottawa which has a common goal, and that is the establishment of a tax system that is fair for all. By "all" I mean all of the citizens of our country, which cannot be achieved if we in Ontario use that selfish, unco-operative approach which has manifested itself in the announcements by the Treasurer last week.

So, Mr. Speaker, with these thoughts in mind I move, seconded by Mr. Sopha, that the Treasurer's motion that Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair and the House resolve itself into the committee on ways and means, be amended by adding thereto the following words:

That this House regrets that the government:

1. Has adopted policies which greatly impair the provision of services to our people in vital areas of health, welfare, housing, education and agriculture;
2. By its refusal to join in the national Medicare plan has deprived the people of Ontario of adequate standards of health care, as well as financial benefits to them as taxpayers;

3. Has seriously disrupted the efficient operation of local government, and especially has failed to give an adequate voice to citizens of local municipalities and their representatives before deciding upon far-reaching changes in municipal government and administration;

4. Has again postponed necessary reforms in our provincial tax structure retaining inequitable grants reflected in unfairly high local taxes;

5. Has failed to put forward a co-ordinated policy to deal with the growing problem of regional disparity and poverty in Ontario;

6. Has announced policies amounting to fiscal separatism which will lead to the creation of disharmony in the operation of the federal system, rather than seeking accord and accommodation to the end that the citizens of Ontario, together with the people of other provinces may enjoy the benefits of a fair and equitable system of taxation.

Mr. MacDonald moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the members would like to know that earlier today we had as our guests, in the east gallery, students from Franklin Horner Public School, Etobicoke and from Hillsdale Public School in Oshawa; and in the west gallery, students from Willowdale Christian School in Willowdale, and folk from the North York University Women's Club in Willowdale.

Introduction of bills.

Hon. D. A. Bales (Minister of Labour): Before the orders of the day, sir, I would like to advise the members of the House that a memorandum of agreement has been signed between Ontario Hydro and the Canadian Union of Public Employees, Ontario Hydro, Local 1000.

The agreement has been completed this afternoon and is subject to ratification by the membership of the local. The agreement itself is to be placed before the executive board of the local later this afternoon, and will subsequently be submitted to the membership at large. That, however, will take a little time.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have two questions of the Minister of Health.

1. What action is the Minister going to take to assist in the settlement of the strike involving the teachers of the Hamilton and District School of Nursing?

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, I have been requested to meet representatives of this school within the next two days. In the meantime this is a matter between The Department of Labour and the parties concerned. I believe The Department of Labour is more deeply involved in it than The Department of Health.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, would it be in order if I were to ask the Minister of Labour if he has any special knowledge of this?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Speaker, I would simply say that one of our conciliation officers has been endeavouring to assist the parties and will continue to do so.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister of Health answer a question?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member may not ask questions at this moment. The leader of his party, the official Opposition—

Mr. Sargent: It is regarding the nursing situation.

Mr. Speaker: Well the hon. member will have an opportunity, if he has placed his question, to ask it. If he has not placed his question, he does not ask it at this time.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have another question for the Minister of Health which I believe is left over from two or three days ago if you will permit it.

Is the Department of Health undertaking an assessment of the findings of the medical science research report from Ottawa General Hospital to the Royal Canadian College of Physicians and Surgeons which evidently reveals new information on the long-term effects of water fluoridation?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, this report came out of a paper which was read before a scientific body by the doctor in question, Dr. Posen, of Ottawa, who is a very highly regarded and recognized specialist in his field. I have not yet had an opportunity to read the scientific paper, nor has my staff had that opportunity. When we have done so, we will be in a better position to answer the question more fully.

Mr. Nixon: A supplementary question: Is the Minister aware that a major American magazine, the Saturday Review, last week had a full article assessing the report from Ottawa, and that it is going to be incumbent, I would say, on this Minister to have some fairly professional reactions to it, since it is going to stir interest across the United States?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I did personally read the article in the Saturday Review, but it was pointed out by the editor of that magazine that John Lear is their scientific correspondent or scientific reporter. I can hardly come to any definitive decision on such a deeply involved and complicated matter on the basis of an assessment by the scientific editor of a newspaper.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have two questions held over from last week, Nos. 831 and 832, to the Minister of Health.

The first: What percentage of physicians, serving OMSIP subscribers, bill OMSIP directly?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: According to the volume of claims, Mr. Speaker, 90 per cent.

Mr. MacDonald: The second question is: What are the principal differences between the coverage provided under OMSIP and under the London Life plan for the Ontario civil service?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, OMSIP, of course, is purely a physicians' services insurance bill.

The programme that is provided after negotiation with the public service of Ontario is a package deal. It includes basic life insurance for the employees, supplementary life insurance for employees, supplementary life insurance for dependents, basic surgical-medical benefits and supplementary medical expenses.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, my question was with particular reference to the differences on the medical coverage. Would the Minister clarify that?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I think, on the basic coverage there is no difference.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Does the Minister want to think that over?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Perhaps I should elaborate on that a little. I believe, at least to the best of my knowledge, optometric benefits are not provided under the public service programme and I question if the dental-surgical procedures permitted under OMSIP are provided under the public service programme.

Mr. Ben: Better take it as notice.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Does London Life pay chiropractors?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, if the Minister would care to take it as notice, I would like a detailed explanation as to the difference in medical coverage. I know there are other elements in the package deal that London Life gives, but the medical differences—

Mr. Sopha: Is the member not a member of London Life?

Mr. MacDonald: No.

Mr. Sopha: I am, I am a member.

Mr. MacDonald: I have a question of the Minister of Labour, Mr. Speaker. The Toronto Telegram, Saturday, page 2, final edition, reports an accident in which three men were injured when the cable supporting a hoisting elevator broke on a construction job and they dropped eight floors. Yet, according to the same Telegram news report, the accident was never reported to the workmen's compensation board.

Is the Minister investigating this allegation of failure to live up to the requirements of The Workmen's Compensation Act?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to have the matter investigated. I will let the member know.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I have question of the Minister of Transport.

Is the Minister prepared to require better lights for snowmobiles as a result of the recommendation to that effect by the coroner's jury investigating the death of a snowmobile operator at Bradford last week?

Hon. I. Haskett (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated to the House on February 26 last, our staff is carrying out a continuous and detailed examination of the operation of motorized snow vehicles—and this includes the adequacy of existing equipment—for a period of one full season, and in light of this experience they will examine and review the legislation to ascertain if practical improvements can be made.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, if I may ask the Minister a supplementary question: Would the Minister not consider making some changes immediately so as to prevent any further deaths as a result of insufficient lighting on the snowmobiles?

Hon. Mr. Haskett: Mr. Speaker, I think my answer was complete.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Humber.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, before asking the question, I just want to welcome back to the House the hon. Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs (Mr. Rowntree), who happens to be my member. I am happy to say he is looking well and the rest did him good.

Mr. Speaker, I have two questions that were carried over from March 6, to the Minister of Health, questions No. 842 and 844. No. 842 reads as follows:

1. How many students were employed during 1968 by the health insurance registration board?

2. How many students have been hired by HIRB for summer employment during 1969?

3. Were students who were employed last year given an opportunity for further employment this summer?

4. Is it true that applications are no longer being received for summer employment by HIRB?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, 168 students were employed during 1968 by HIRB. 159 students have been hired by HIRB for summer employment during 1969. Yes, they were given preferential consideration because of related experience. Yes, we have more applications now than we can handle and all vacancies are now filled.

Mr. Ben: As a supplementary question, in the light of what the Prime Minister said in trying to provide summer employment for students, may I ask what caused the large decrease in the number that were required for HIRB for summer employment?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I have not studied the new math, but according to the old math, there is a difference of nine, and in my view that is not a considerable difference, in the light of the number hired—168 and 159.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, considering that the number of people available for employment is increasing, I would say that such—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member is asking questions, not making comments.

Mr. Ben: Question No. 844, carried over from March 6, Mr. Speaker:

In view of the responsibility of the Minister of Health for Ontario Hospital Services Commission, which regulates ambulance services in the province, is the Minister planning to request that a member of his staff attend the hearing on March 12 which will investigate that a Metro ambulance driver refused to take to hospital a woman he thought was dead?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, my staff will attend this hearing on March 12.

Mr. Ben: Perhaps the Minister will make a report on the outcome.

Mr. Speaker, the next question is question 849, of the Minister:

Has the Minister engaged anyone else to help Mr. Sedgewick in the Brockville hospital investigation?

Is the Minister doing any personal investigation of this matter?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, no!

Mr. Ben: That is about par for the course. Mr. Speaker, the last question of this hon. Minister—I think there is one more here.

Mr. Speaker: I have one from the hon. member of the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Ben: May I ask it now?

Mr. Speaker: This is the time; this member has the floor today.

Mr. Ben: Of the Minister of Municipal Affairs: With reference to report No. 12 of the Toronto city council, why is the province not complying with the city's request, as the federal government is, regarding payments to the city, which would allow the city to meet its obligations to Metro?

Mr. Speaker: That is the end of the question as has been approved by Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Ben: Thank you.

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, report No. 12 from the Toronto city council has not yet reached my desk. I understand that it goes to the city council this Wednesday and presumably if it is approved by the city council it will find its way in due course to my desk and I will be glad at that time to give the member an answer.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Now ask the balance as a supplementary!

Mr. Ben: Will the Minister accept a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Yes.

Mr. Ben: The letter he refers to, which is referred to in report No. 12, mentions that three letters have been directed to the Minister's department since 1967 on this topic. May I ask why he has to wait for the latest letter when he has already received three?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Had the hon. member asked me about letters which I have already received, I would have been in a position to answer, but he has asked me about a report which I have not yet received.

Mr. Ben: In light of this, Mr. Speaker, would the Minister accept a supplementary question?

The fact that he used the words that the city has for a couple of years been asking the department to make its payments to the city on time so it could meet its obligations to Metro—why does it not make its payments in time, as the federal government does?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: We believe that we do make them in time, and I would be glad to give the member a full report of just how we do make them. The city of Toronto is asking for something which would obviously have to be done for every other municipality in the province. We believe we are doing it equitably now and for good reasons it has not been changed.

Mr. Ben: Well, they do not think there is anything equitable about it.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of Energy and Resources Management: Has the Minister received the report on the investigation undertaken into the reported dumping of 150,000 gallons of hydrochloric acid into Hamilton Bay during the week of February 14, by the Steel Company of Canada?

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Mr. Speaker, the answer is, yes.

Mr. Deans: Will the Minister accept a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Yes.

Mr. Deans: Will he make the report available to the House?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: No.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Essex South.

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question from the other day of the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, a five part question.

1. When did The Department of Municipal Affairs rule that for drainage purposes—that is, municipal drains—a conservation authority is a municipality?

2. Why was this programme effected?

3. What is the estimated cost to conservation authorities?

4. Does the Minister now believe that if conservation authorities are municipalities that they should be relieved of municipal tax burdens?

5. Was the Minister of Energy and Resources Management (Mr. Simonett) consulted with this change in the policy of your department?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, the member's question—I am sorry I was not able to discuss it with him ahead of time. We have made no such ruling and I am really not clear as to the import of the question because there is no such ruling in existence. The member may be referring to the amendments which were passed by this House at the last session. The Drainage Act amendments of 1968 which made it clear that certain lands owned by municipalities or highways or railways or conservation authorities were not eligible for grants from either our department or from federal ARDA. That is perhaps what he means but this was a matter of legislation not a matter of ruling.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Mr. Speaker, a question of the hon. Minister of Energy and Resources Management.

What authority does Hydro have to estimate meter readings when in fact some of these estimates are 500 per cent over the amount actually used by the consumer?

Will the Minister take immediate steps to refund grossly overcharged users of hydro who were forced to pay estimated bills or be forced with hydro cutting off their power?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, Ontario Hydro estimates electrical consumption only in those cases where the normal practices to obtain the meter reading have failed.

For example, if a meter reader cannot gain entry into a premise with an indoor meter to obtain the reading, a meter reading card is left. The customer is asked to read the meter, record the information on the card and mail it to the area office. Estimated bills are issued only in cases where cards are not returned. This is fairly common practice with all electrical utilities. It must be admitted that the present strike situation has caused some disruption in the normal meter reading and billing schedules, thus increasing the number of estimated bills.

Unless there are unusual circumstances it is generally possible to predict, with reasonable accuracy, energy use from past billings. Any under or overcharge is corrected on the next billing. It is not the policy of Ontario Hydro to disconnect a customer's service for the non-payment of an estimated bill that is in dispute. If the estimated bill is in dispute, the area office will make every effort to obtain an actual reading. An adjustment is then made on the estimated bill.

Before any service is disconnected, a reminder notice is sent followed by a final notice and personal visit. This procedure provides ample opportunity for customers to discuss billing matters. If the hon. member would be good enough to supply me with the details of the circumstances to which he refers, I would be pleased to arrange to have the matter investigated.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Yorkview has a question of this Minister from last week, perhaps he would ask it.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Speaker, the question is: How accurate is the charge made by William Robertson, executive director of the Marina Operators Association in a telegram of March 6, 1969, that only three units are ready to pump out boat tanks in the province of Ontario, and will adequate facilities be available by the opening of the boating season to effectively meet the demand arising from the legislation requiring boats with sleeping accommodations to have toilets with holding tanks instead of discharging sewage into the water?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, I do not have a copy of Mr. Robertson's charge but for the information of the hon. members we have received assurance from 70 marine operators in Ontario that they will have pump-out stations in operation this season. It is our objective to have adequate facilities available by the opening of the boating season.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Thunder Bay.

Mr. J. E. Stokes: (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Lands and Forests.

Will the Minister adjust the moose hunting season for 1969 so that residents will be allowed two weeks hunting before open season for non-residents?

Hon. R. Brunelle (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member for Thunder Bay, seasons for moose hunting have already been announced and bookings are already being made. The closing season for non-residents is November 15 and for residents one month later, December 15, which means that residents will be allowed one extra month of hunting over the non-residents.

Mr. Stokes: Would the Minister accept a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Yes.

Mr. Stokes: Has he received any representations from fish and game hunters in northern Ontario to have the season opened two weeks earlier for residents, when they will have an opportunity to get a moose ahead of the non-resident hunters?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, I do not recall having received any. There may have been some. At the same time I would like to mention that this is a sort of controversial question and there are many who feel that it should not be permitted. However, this subject of open season is under constant review and we will be pleased to look into it the next time seasons are changed.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peterborough.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could direct a question to the hon. Minister of Labour.

In view of the statements of the Toronto Board of Education in regard to the firing of Miss Fiona Nelson, would the human rights commission investigate the hiring and firing policies of the Toronto Board of Education as it affects freedom of speech in the province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Speaker, this matter is beyond the jurisdiction of the Ontario Human Rights Commission. As I am sure the hon. members are aware, the code deals with discrimination in employment on grounds of race, colour, creed, nationality, ancestry and place of origin. It does not cover this particular matter.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Attorney General.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I wish to advise the hon. members that charges have today been laid and warrants issued respecting certain returning officers who acted as such in the provincial general election in the fall of 1967.

The charges relate to acts arising from the financial operation of their offices, which acts are alleged by the Crown to have been fraudulent. The facts upon which the charges are based in no way relate to the election aspects of their duties and these proceedings would in my view have no prejudice whatsoever to the validity of any election results. It was to provide that assurance which, in part, compelled me to make this statement.

These charges arise from an investigation which I directed in August of last year when I was advised by the assistant chief electoral officer of irregularities which came to light in the course of routine audits following the election. The Ontario Provincial Police force has been in charge of that investigation which is continuing. Certain facts have thus far been established which necessitate the laying of these charges but it is possible that more charges may be laid against other persons as the investigation proceeds. I assure the House that the investigation will extend into any area of the province where the police consider it appropriate and necessary to pursue the matter, but at this moment it has been directed at the Metropolitan area.

I realize the proper concern which this subject will raise in all of the hon. members, Mr. Speaker, but I do ask that they understand my inability to elaborate or go into extensive details as the matter is still under investigation and people are now charged before our courts.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Social and Family Services): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Spence) asked question number 801 last week. The question was:

Does The Department of Social and Family Services set the admission policy to homes for the aged? 2. Is an individual refused admission to homes for the aged if he has convalescent hip fracture, heart disease or diagnosis of cancer?

The answer, Mr. Speaker, which is lengthy because I think it sets out a general situation, is as follows: The department does not set admission policies for the municipally operated homes for the aged. However, this matter is governed by section 13 of The Homes for Aged and Rest Homes Act. Relevant clauses of subsection 1 of section 13 of the Act read as follows:

(c) Who is over the age of 60 years and who requires bed care and general personal nursing services but does not require care in a hospital.

(i) A statement in the prescribed form certifying that the applicant is eligible for admission to a home or joint home under clauses A, B, C or D, and signed by the physician of the home or joint home.

Moreover these subsections have been interpreted for us by an eminent advisory committee on geriatrics, as follows:

No person should be admitted to a home or maintained in a home whose health or well being might be considered as being in jeopardy, because a home does not, and should not, supply the treatment services or facilities of a hospital.

The policy directive on this particular aspect has been given in greater detail for physicians and administration of the homes for the aged. Inherently unstable conditions or terminal situations are therefore not recommended for admission or care in a home. This is in the interest of the person himself because the home is not equipped to provide the intense medical care required. Home committees and boards of management rely, of necessity, on the qualified medical practitioners who serve as home physicians.

These latter dedicated professional men rely on the guidelines I have outlined and meet together informally at least once a year. What is, in effect, a general policy has been found acceptable by the majority of home physicians, who bring to bear their own professional and clinical judgment in individual cases. This division between domiciliary care such as our homes for the aged offer, and the regular full scale health care of a hospital or health setting was also acceptable to the select committee on aging a few years ago. On the basis of this approach our homes for the aged provide the best available domiciliary care for the greatest number of residents.

In answer to the second part of the question, therefore, if any of the conditions set forth by the hon. member for Kent are stabilized and are—in the opinion of the home physician—suitable for care in a home for the aged, these applicants may be admitted. Hon. members will, however, appreciate that heart disease and cancer may be difficult to diagnose in terms of their episodic nature (i.e.: blood pressure up today—more manageable the next, and so on). This is strictly the decision of the physician on the spot. Likewise, the stabilized hip fracture condition may, under ideal circumstances, allow the afflicted individual to be admitted to a home for the aged.

In view of the hon. member's interest I will ensure that the consulting physicians stand ready to visit any area if invited.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent): May I ask the Minister a supplementary? If I understand your remarks, it is up to the home physician to say whether these people are eligible for admission to homes. Is that right?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: If they meet the criteria as laid down in the general directive and he makes a judgment on the spot.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

ONTARIO CO-OPERATIVE CREDIT SOCIETY

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary), in the absence of the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin (Mr. Root), moves second reading of Bill Pr2, An Act respecting Ontario Co-operative Credit Society.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

CITY OF LONDON

THE PREPAID HOSPITAL AND MEDICAL SERVICES ACT

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs) moves second reading of Bill 22, An Act to amend The Prepaid Hospital and Medical Services Act.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words about this particular bill.

The whole matter of bringing the drug plans under the same legislative umbrella as hospital and medical services is very necessary. I hope it is an indication from the government that they intend to include the drug areas within the scope of the programmes that are available to the people of this province at the present moment, namely OMSIP and Ontario Hospital. I hope they will make available to the people, within the scope of those programmes, the drug plans necessary to have a fully comprehensive medical care programme.

There is no question that it is a necessity in this province at this time. The cost of drugs is far beyond the reach of the majority of the fixed and low income groups, as the Minister is, I am sure, aware. If the Minister could assure us that this would be the next step in the programme of developing a medical health programme for the people of this province, we would certainly be delighted on this side of the House.

Mr. Speaker: Is there any other member who wishes to speak to this before the Minister replies? The hon. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: This is enabling legislation which requires drug plans on a prepaid principle to be registered with and supervised by the department. It would also enable any other plan to extend itself into that field. That is all I can say.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE MATRIMONIAL CAUSES ACT

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General) moves second reading of Bill 66, An Act to amend The Matrimonial Causes Act.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, a word or two on this Act. I have three thoughts on this bill.

One of them has to do with the general costs of litigation in the province, which we are always prating that we wish to reduce. The bill, I think, unquestionably will have the effect of increasing the cost to litigants. The cost is being borne by the provincial government at this time and I suppose the validity of the argument the other way is that it is being paid for one way or the other, but in a range of services here I would think that it might be a retrograde step to that extent.

I wonder, in principle on this bill, whether the Attorney General has considered wiping out the official guardian's report entirely as being a routine formal matter which is not highly regarded except in the kind of cases where the official guardian's report is really a prerequisite to the determination of the actual divorce or other matter under review. In other words, the only time it seems to me that it is a practical matter in the courts to require the official guardian's report as to the condition and care of infants, is where there is a custodial quarrel.

In cases where there is some quarrel of this nature, the report is requisite, valid and necessary and probably the parties themselves should pay for it, but in the wide range of cases where it increases the task of the official guardian's office substantially, they have to make all kinds of investigations. I suggest that some thought be given in the future and possibly even through the passage of this bill, as to the validity of the remarks I am making as to both the load of administrative chores that is involved in submitting these reports. The Supreme Court judge has a report of the official guardian that has been filed, and the counsel—if there are two counsel and the case has not been tried ex parte—simply acknowledges that it is filed and that is pretty much the end of the matter in a goodly number of cases, maybe 60 per cent or higher. It is in the rest of those cases where the welfare of infants is very much at stake that the report is really necessary.

My third point, Mr. Speaker, is that if the House is going to make the alteration required under The Matrimonial Causes Act, I would like to know and this is not so much in the nature of a question, which I can ask in another place, so I will put it rhetorically—whether the Attorney General's office has envisaged the full impact of the alteration being made.

I would like to refer to section 1 of subsection 5 of The Infants Act which covers all actions for custody, not just actions for divorce. I notice in your note adversion is made to divorce only, but the Act as it is being amended here today would affect custody matters and also rights of access to the children, and that these would fall outside the discretion of the judge as it presently exists. It would make the payment of costs of official guardian's reports mandatory upon whichever litigant finally requested and desired and bore the burden of the costs in the eventualities of the action.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I could not hear the hon. member on that last sentence—he said, “would make the costs mandatory upon—” and then I did not get the rest of it.

Mr. Lawlor: I am sorry. Upon the individual for whose benefit the full report was obtained. In other words what I am saying is that I wonder really if you wanted the thing limited to divorce actions only, or in certain cases only did the Minister really intend to extend the provisions of this amendment, making the costs to be borne by the parties here, and not by the provincial government, even in cases of actions having to do with access to children, and thirdly in the whole realm of custody actions?

If that was the intent, fine; all I can suggest to you is, that is what you have achieved. Let us not achieve things we did not intend, or intend things we did not achieve. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker: Is there any other member who wishes to speak to this before the Minister replies? The hon. Attorney General has the floor.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I should just like to make a few brief remarks and I appreciate again the comments of the hon. member, which are thoughtful. First of all I would admit promptly and immediately that I think this will increase the costs of the proceedings in divorce actions to the litigants, or at least to one of the litigants.

If the action is such that it comes within the area where legal aid is granted, those who cannot afford it will not be damaged in that way by the increase of costs. The great majority of actions, I submit, are carried on by persons who are well able to pay the costs in their divorce proceedings. They should pay rather than having the province pay through carrying the costs of the official guardian, who in turn pays The Children's Aid Society, which does the investigation for them.

We have thought about the effects, but I think there is perhaps $700,000 or $800,000 involved here, in costs, not all of which will be passed on to litigants because in those areas where proceedings, as I say, are sifted through our legal aid programme, the province will still be picking up a substantial portion of that amount.

As to the second point, Mr. Speaker, I must say that I think the hon. member is not talking to the principle of this bill, but I was glad to have his suggestion when he said, "Have you thought about removing the official guardian entirely?" This bill does not attempt or consider that, or suggest that in any way, but it does say that the cost of the official guardian in these investigations shall be paid by the petitioner when he files a report.

So, we are really a bit off the principle here when we discuss this, but it is a useful thought to consider, and perhaps having said that, I might leave it at this time. It is something that has, I think, certain merits for consideration, but the principle of our present Act, if I could just stay on this for a moment, that where there are children under the age; named in the Act; involved in a separation; breakup of a marriage; in a divorce proceeding; in a dissolution of a marriage, that in every such case there shall be the investigation and that report being filed, the judge may read it and make himself aware of the character, the ability of the parents, their attitudes, the ages and educational status of the children and all the circumstances surrounding them. It is quite a substantial report and I think it is of very great value but in any case, it is not contemplated to change that situation in this bill.

Now as to the third point—the effect it may have on litigants—again, bringing it back to costs—I have noted the hon. member's remark about section 1 of subsection 5, The Infants

Act. It is to be noted that the costs are at the discretion of the judge and he may seek to make any disposition that appeals to him on the facts that come before him. So I think I need say nothing more on this matter, than that.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE DESERTED WIVES' AND CHILDREN'S MAINTENANCE ACT

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves second reading of Bill 67, An Act to amend The Deserted Wives' and Children's Maintenance Act.

Mr. Lawlor: A few brief remarks on this, Mr. Speaker, if you will. I do not think it is a breach of the accord that exists between myself, Mr. Speaker, and the Attorney General to mention that I did slip into the seat beside him the other day and make mention of this bill, as to the effects when he abolishes subsection 2 of section 2, which is the purpose of this bill, to wipe out the amount of money to provide for the support and maintenance of a child, which has been up to now limited at a maximum of $20 a week irrespective of the financial condition of the father, if he happens to be the deserting spouse, or for that matter, of the mother. When he does that, he throws the whole weight back and I think he will agree that the first subsection of the bill is too restrictive in the scope allowed to the discretion of the judge in awarding these costs, because it directs it against the husband only.

No mention is made of the role of a wife here who, in some circumstances in modern life, may be a darn sight better off than her husband. At least some contribution may go towards the total, the overall care and maintenance of the child from, say, the wife, if she happens to have custody of the children and is in extremely good financial circumstances over against the husband, who may not be in nearly as good circumstances. At least for periods of time one party may be in a better position than the other. The whole intent—I think the Attorney General will agree with me, Mr. Speaker—of this Act is to see that the children are well looked after, no matter who pays. I have suggested to him that perhaps it would be in order to widen the scope of the wording so that while judges, as everyone admits these days, do take the circumstances of both spouses into consideration, I suggest, have no formal power or jurisdiction with which to do so under the wording of your existing legislation. It did not matter so much as long as subsection 2 was there. It may matter to some extent now.

Mr. Speaker: Is there any further comment before the Minister has the floor? The hon. the Attorney General.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, again I appreciate the thoughtful consideration which has been given to this matter, and I did appreciate his speaking to me earlier about this proposed amendment and his thoughts on it.

I think that in our jurisprudence, as it has been established, the judge has power, and I think this has been carried out in some cases. The courts do take into account the financial ability of both parents. I think the thought is worthwhile that if we found there is a lack of this power, then we would have to move perhaps in another bill or another amendment to provide it. But I am aware and I am sure the hon. members are aware that the courts have exerted this power and have called upon both parents as the circumstances indicated to support the children. I think our whole jurisprudence accepts the fact that both parents have a responsibility, financial and otherwise, with respect to the children.

In doing this, I might say, we were simply implementing a recommendation made by Mr. McRuer. Perhaps I should have thought more deeply—but Mr. McRuer in considering this matter, made a recommendation. It is number 248, at page 1290 of his report and he simply said:

The limitation of $20 per week maximum that a father may be ordered by a magistrate or juvenile court judge to pay for the maintenance of a child should be removed.

And he refers to where he made that recommendation at page 570—I think that is in the second volume—of his report No. 1.

We have been taking some pride in accomplishing the implementation of these recommendations and I hope one day to be able to say to the House that we have well over the 200, or up to the 300 mark. This was just one of those that we felt was a simple one to pick up and get before the House as promptly as possible and it is exactly what the right hon. gentleman recommended.

But I am glad to have the thought that you offered.

Mr. Lawlor: I believe in preventative medicine.

THE JURORS ACT

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves second reading of Bill 68, An Act to amend The Jurors Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE JUDICATURE ACT

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves second reading of Bill 69, An Act to amend The Judicature Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves second reading of Bill 70, An Act respecting The Department of Justice.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the principle of this bill establishes the department or at least it grows on the establishment a year ago. One thing that I particularly wanted to mention briefly in passing, is what has stuck in my mind from the debate last year about Mace, when the Attorney General indicated he did not have the authority to direct the police commissions as to the use of any particular weapon or method, he could make recommendations but nothing involving anything beyond that.

My feeling is that this amendment might very well have set out in a much clearer way, that we consider the Attorney General as the top official directing the affairs of the police forces across the province. We believe in their autonomy under their own police commissions—and this is a changing aspect—but I feel that there should be in this House, as the repository of the power, one person who is responsible for the activities, responsible in the broad sense for the activities of the police and the police commissions that govern them. I feel something is wrong when the Attorney General and Minister of Justice can, and does say in the House, that he does not have the power to instruct the police to do thus, or perhaps not to do certain things. Autonomy is one thing, but responsibility is what I am looking for and I would feel this is still a flaw in the organization of The Attorney General's Department, or, at least, his concept of his responsibilities as its first Minister.

Mr. Speaker: Is there any other member who wishes to speak? The hon. member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Speaker, they come too fast and furious for one, you know. When the flood gates are let loose there is no end of expurgation.

This is a very interesting Act which brings in a whole slew of chapters in the Metro area, and which we discussed during the estimates last year at some length, as to precisely what the purpose of the Attorney General's office was, what its functions were.

If you remember at that time—and this Act seeks to embody it—he was raised in some rather mysterious way; he was deified above the heads of other members of Cabinet, and he had to perform a two-fold function which, I notice in a speech by the hon. Attorney General to the New Brunswick section of the Canadian bar, in February of 1966, he finds, to say the least, ambivalent and which may even be conflicting. He is a man who is torn asunder with his responsibilities. Now he has put it down in black and white so that we can all refer to it to his detriment whenever a provincial judge goes off the rails. And when we think he should be beholden to this House in a way that other Cabinet members are not, and even against, possibly, the more partisan position of his own government on occasion, when seeking to play down or to obviate a certain difficulty that has occurred, he must rise above that, he must transcend the immediate partisan issues and give straight advice to the House in a sovereign way which is very difficult to do, I suggest, and as McRuer says in the course of the report, requires a little tight-rope walking.

Well, I have seen this occur in my brief time in this House on a number of occasions. I thought you straddled the rope rather well. Sometimes you have to sit on it, you know, if your legs are straddled, but—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member would permit. Is the hon. member going to suggest that by some language in a statute, or by not presenting a bill to define the responsibilities and powers of the Attorney General, that this dual role could be obviated, or that somehow he could direct the Attorney General to be non-political, non-partisan in certain matters? Does he think he could accomplish that in a statute? I would be glad to know if he would tell me how to go, if he wants me to accomplish that.

Mr. Lawlor: Well, I am not much of a pragmatist, but it would have to rely on the individual case, nevertheless. That is what the very high-minded—and in some cases terribly idealistic—Mr. McRuer precisely recommends, as I read them, and I think the hon. the Attorney General well knows that. You know, in that speech to which I referred he talks about the plight of being an Attorney General, what a nest of vipers it is, and he quotes from a Mr. John Collier, a lawyer, who called himself Amicus Curiae, and wrote as follows: "He is only to be considered as the servant of the servants, the curse of the Israelites." And it is the Attorney General who recognizes the sign on his forehead that he quotes against himself in this regard. There is much more of interest in this speech, by the way, touching this very duality—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I might say to the hon. member that those remarks and I think, perhaps, some of what Mr. McRuer has set forth, I found in a very lengthy and complete treatise by Professor Edwards, of the University of Toronto, and he uses that expression, the "tightrope walker," and torn asunder, and so on. So it is all there, they are not my original thoughts and I would not want to take credit for them.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): They are academically pure, are they?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Quite pure.

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, and may I say that I have been trying to get that. That book has been stolen from the library and you are the only one who has a copy.

Well, I had much more to say on this but I think the main thrust of my remarks could be saved for the committee of the whole House in the way of questioning on the various paragraphs.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say, too, that the library I had, I gave up as part of the change of making room for members opposite, so I have no place to find books or even to return them, if I still have them.

Mr. Speaker: Is there any further discussion?

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, I was absent from the House. It has been my intention, of course, to speak to the various bills on the order paper emanating from The Department of the Attorney General. I was in the law library preparing some notes in connection with the private members' hour, but I would just like, if I might, to suggest that it would be nice to know what orders we are going to. Are we on The Department of Justice bill now, sir?

It is terrible to be popular, I suppose, or not popular. Mr. Speaker, in connection with this bill, I am concerned with two things, and the first is that my notes are all downstairs in my desk. That is the first concern that I have. My first point. It was section 8, I believe sir, that caused me concern. No, I am sorry, the functions and responsibilities of the Minister under section 5, and subsection (c) of section 5. Perhaps my friend from Lakeshore has mentioned this, but I am not at all content with the generalization there, "shall superintend all matters connected with the administration of justice in Ontario."

As I recall the hon. Mr. McRuer in his report dealing with the obligations, functions and responsibilities of this department, made no mistake in directing to the hon. the Attorney General that he has, of course, a responsibility for the direction of law enforcement throughout the province. Now, I invite the hon. the Attorney General to perhaps interrupt me at this stage. The position that I take is that he has not clothed himself in this statute, with sufficient power. The notes that I do not have with me are records of Hansard where the Attorney General has replied to myself and others in this House, in connection with the use of Mace, and in connection with the alleged autonomy of various police departments in the province of Ontario.

This has caused me great concern, because I think it should be understood, unequivocally, in some statutes established by this Legislature, that the Attorney General, without fetter or restriction, has the right to direct the police forces of this province. And then he can come back to us here, and we can have a day in court with him, so to speak. And I am not at all happy—

Mr. Speaker: For the benefit of the hon. member I might point out that this point was raised by his leader a little earlier in this debate.

Mr. Bullbrook: Oh, that is fine. I apologize to you, sir.

Mr. Speaker: No, no, I just thought the hon. member should know.

Mr. Bullbrook: No, I realize that you must restrict me, but that was the prime concern that I had with this bill, and basically this is the essence of my position, or the essence, I believe, of the position of this party, that we would like to see introduced into this legislation less general, less ambiguous words than "shall superintend all matters connected with the administration of justice."

I do believe under the present Police Act and I believe under The Police Commission Act, that the legal position taken by the Attorney General in this House has been wrong. I regret that I cannot specify to you and to the other members of this House the foundation for that position, since I do not have these statutes before me at the present time. But I do take the position that you do have control over local police commissions, under The Ontario Police Commission Act. I do not think there should be any reticence on the part of the hon. the Attorney General that if he is not happy with Mace, that he direct the police forces of this province that they shall not use it in the future.

Because I, as one citizen of the city of Sarnia, do not want to find that my Attorney General is disclosing to me in the House some features of this weapon that might have adverse and long-lasting effects upon me, and find that my chief of police has an arsenal of it at home. This is what I look for as one member of the House. I look for protection. That is basically my position, sir, with respect to the principle of the bill, I do not think anybody can take issue with it. As I understand it, it attempts to codify what has grown up to be a common law position in connection with The Department of the Attorney General. I invite the Attorney General's comments to my general remarks.

Mr. Speaker: Is there any other member?

Mr. J. Renwick: I would like to make a brief comment. Any ambiguity that the hon. member for Sarnia would find in the functions assigned to the Attorney General would certainly be removed by the fourth heading of his functions. I just admire the Attorney General, who is going "to perform the duties and has the powers that belong to the Attorney General and Solicitor General of England by law or usage, so far as those duties and powers are applicable to Ontario, and also shall perform the duties and have the powers that up to the time The British North America Act, 1867, came into effect belonged to the offices of the Attorney General and Solicitor General in the provinces of Canada and Upper Canada, and which under the provisions of that Act, are within the scope of the powers of the Legislature."

I can only admire the directness and specificity of the functions which the Attorney General is going to assume under this bill. I assume that when we come into the committee of the whole House to deal with that clause, he will be able to give us a precise and accurate list of the duties he is going to perform. I am particularly interested whether or not he is now going—as the Attorney General in England does—to appear in the courts on behalf of the Crown in the right of the province of Ontario in matters which come within the purview of his functions. Or, is he going to consider that he will not have to appear in the courts because of this limited language, “so far as those duties and powers are applicable in Ontario”?

I think quite seriously the Attorney General could do something about the ambiguity, the indirection and the lack of precision of that particular area of the functions which he is going to take under the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Any further discussion before the Minister? The hon. Attorney General has the floor.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I am almost overwhelmed by this admiration expressed by the hon. member for Riverdale in those wide terms of that subsection.

I should point out at once to the hon. member that in drafting this bill, we followed again very closely the recommendations of the hon. Mr. McRuer. He will find exactly the language of subsection (c) on page 952 of his report, No. 1, volume 2. The subsection (d) to which the member for Riverdale has referred, is exactly the language set forth in Mr. McRuer's recommendation. And Mr. McRuer, in setting forth those recommendations, was quoting, I think, with very great approval from The Newfoundland Act. He said:

The Newfoundland Act which is modelled on the other Act in force in the provinces prior to 1952, serves as a useful precedent. For convenience we quote in full the relevant section—

And then he quotes it, and I think he quotes it with approbation. Bear in mind, in Britain you have the Attorney General who has time perhaps to go to court and take cases in the civil side at least, because there is a Solicitor General and a Home Secretary in that government and they divide all the activities in that country which the Attorney General of the province of Ontario encompasses within his office.

At Ottawa, you have the Attorney General and Minister of Justice, and you have a Solicitor General. The Solicitor General has under his hand the RCMP, his police force. And he has the administration of the Exchequer Court, and the Supreme Court of Canada. In Ontario you do not have a Solicitor General to take care of police matters or to look after administration of courts.

The Attorney General must not only have the administration of justice, be a prosecutor and defend the rights of the Crown as well as the rights of the public, but he has the police to carry out the investigation of crime. He must appear in that role as well as the role of prosecutor, the defender of the public, see to the administration of the courts, that they are maintained and that they operate. The duties of Solicitor General, Attorney General, Minister of Justice and, in Britain, Home Secretary, are wrapped up in one, in the hands of the Minister of Justice and Attorney General in Ontario.

When I came to this office just under five years ago, there were all those Acts—of Consumer Protection, The Securities Act, Real Estate and Business Brokers, Used Car Dealers and Bailiff. They were all in the office of the Attorney General. Fortunately they are now administered under another department.

As to the main question raised here by the leader of the Opposition and by the hon. member for Sarnia, particularly, the question as to whether the Attorney General should control the police.

Mr. Bullbrook: Direct them.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, yes, direct them. I would take that word, but if you direct them, you pretty well control them. I must say that considerable thought was given to inserting such a power in this Act. It is to be borne in mind that the Attorney General has operated without any departmental Act. Actually, there is no Department of the Attorney General at this moment, he is simply named as an official of the government. There is no such thing as a Department of the Attorney General.

Mr. MacDonald: He has a pretty free hand.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He is free, yes, to a degree, bearing in mind that he must walk the tightrope.

Mr. MacDonald: And sometimes fall off among the vipers.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I never used that expression, that is someone else's.

We came to the conclusion, and I think perhaps it may put at rest the minds of some of the hon. members, to say to you that I propose to present amendments to The Police Act, wherein will be found the power to direct the police and perhaps control them in certain directions. Presently our Police Act does provide for direction and control of police forces and it is done by our Ontario police commission. It reports to the Attorney General and is responsible to him. The Attorney General, of course, reports to the Legislature as the responsible Minister of the government.

The weapons that police may carry, the equipment they may wear, the training they are to receive, the standard to which they achieve in all these matters is done presently under The Police Act. I think it is properly there that I would provide the direction and control—particularly on the matter of equipment or weapons.

I do not think the Attorney General should be able to say to a police force: "You are not to wear a revolver or a billy". Chemical Mace is a weapon and there will be and are other weapons; no doubt, that would be involved. I do not think it is up to the Attorney General to place that matter directly under his hand. In The Police Act you will find set out at length the powers and responsibilities of the Ontario Police Commission. One of them is to govern the police forces of this province—the municipal forces and the Ontario provincial police force—and to report to the Attorney General and this House on their conduct performance and the carrying out of their responsibilities. That Act I feel is the proper place to add the present powers, very similar to what you have suggested might be added in The Department of Justice Act. That is, the power to deal not only with this particular weapon, Mace, but all weapons. We are moving to that and you will—I think I may say to you—have deal with it this session. I think that is the place for it.

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Attorney General would permit a short question?

As I understand what you are saying, it is all right for the Ontario Police Commission to direct unilaterally and specifically as far as an armament arsenal is concerned but it is not all right for The Department of Justice or Attorney General to do so. I do not follow that.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I was not saying that exactly. I perhaps should have made it plain that neither the Attorney General nor the Ontario Police Commission has this power at this moment. The Ontario Police Commission has certain powers if inspecting, advising and regulating. Neither the Attorney General nor the Ontario Police Commission have the power to say—we checked this when this matter first arose some months ago—use or do not use a weapon or equip or do not equip yourself with this. We are seeking that power and I shall bring forward to hon. members—I think in appropriate language and legislation—that power which I trust the House will then give to what I think is the proper body.

Mr. Bullbrook: That is the nub of the point, if I might, Mr. Speaker, ask the—

Mr. Speaker: Order please!

Mr. Bullbrook: —ask the Attorney General—

Mr. Speaker: Order:

The agreement has been here that in order to deal with these things satisfactorily all the members speak to the bill and then, the Attorney General or the Minister having carriage of it replies to it, and unless we follow that, we are going to be into an interminable debate. I have allowed the hon. member again to ask a question which he has already placed to the Attorney General, and he had a reply. Now if the hon. member has a question which is something else again and which he would like to ask, and not a reiteration of the previous question, I will give him the floor; otherwise, I will put the motion.

Mr. Bullbrook: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. Of course, your ruling is quite correct.

The fact of the matter is that I thought the Attorney General had brought to the attention of the House, something of which they were not aware. That is, he intended to bring in new legislation dealing with the very matter that I had brought up. I wanted to ask, if I might be permitted a question of the Attorney General, how do you rationalize the distinction? Why should this power be vested in the Ontario Police Commission rather than in you, a member of this House and a Minister of the Crown and directly responsible to us?

Mr. Speaker: I would rule the hon. member out of order because that has not been introduced into the House. It is not in this bill and when it is introduced, then I think it is a proper question of the hon. member to ask on the second reading.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE FINES AND FORFEITURES ACT

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves second reading of Bill 71, An Act to amend The Fines and Forfeitures Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Clerk of the House: The third order, House in committee of the whole; Mr. A. E. Reuter in the chair.

THE EVIDENCE ACT

House in committee on Bill 1, An Act to amend The Evidence Act.

Sections 1 and 2 agreed to.

Bill 1 reported.

THE DAMAGE BY FUMES ARBITRATION ACT

House in committee on Bill 23, An Act to amend The Damage by Fumes Arbitration Act.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2:

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Mines): Mr. Chairman, I move that subsection 2 of section 6 as contained in section 2 of the bill be amended by striking out "Minister of Mines" in the 12th line and inserting in lieu thereof "Minister of Health".

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Chairman, I was going to ask the Minister just what is the significance of that change?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Mr. Chairman, the significance of this amendment is that it is the wish of the government to change the administration of the Act from The Department of Mines to The Department of Health.

Section 2, as amended, agreed to.

On section 3:

Mr. D. Jackson (Timiskaming): Mr. Chairman, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Makarchuk), that section 3 be amended by adding thereto the following subsections:

Section 3, subsection 2: The provisions of this Act, The Damage by Fumes Arbitration Act may not be waived in whole or in part by any person.

Section 3, subsection 3: Any and all waivers that are presently in force shall be null and void as of the date that this Act comes into force.

Speaking to this amendment, Mr. Chairman, to cover a waiver that is presently in a number of deeds of property transfers from this government to the general population, we have extended the bill to cover a wider field of damage from different sources. And yet we allow a very, very unfair waiver to exist and to go on existing in deeds that are granted by this government on Crown land that is sold in Crown land sales. I spoke to this last year and I pointed out what I thought were the unfair provisions of that waiver. This amendment will remove that waiver from present deeds and will prevent its being inserted in any deeds in the future.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Chairman, would the hon. Minister tell us about the terms of that order-in-council back in 1941 or 1942 that requires that all grants from the Crown of lands in a state of nature be subject to this easement, the easement for sulphur fumes?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Not being part of the administration, Mr. Chairman, in 1942 when—

Mr. Sopha: I am not denying that—

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: —when that order-in-council was passed, I can merely say that when two of the hon. members brought the question up in the estimates of The Department of Mines last year, I must admit that was the first that I had heard of it. I have checked into the matter since then. It is simply a question today in relation more to private contracts than it is to public policy in respect of Crown grants. And, of course, I am not too sure even with the wording of this particular amendment which is before the House right now, if what the the hon. member is attempting to achieve would be achieved. If it is, I would suggest that it would affect a great number of private contracts but might have some surprising effects—under those circumstances certainly, because I do not think enough thought has been put into it or even into the wording by the hon.

member, that the amendment would be acceptable to the government.

Mr. Chairman: Might I just say to the hon. member that I do not think the motion as it is, is quite in order because section 3 reads:

This Act comes into force on the 1st day of January.

And the hon. member wants to add certain other subsections.

I think perhaps what he wanted to do was to add another section so that sections 3 and 4 should be renumbered sections 4 and 5.

Mr. Jackson: Mr. Chairman, speaking to this point, I think the whole intention of this amendment—knowing full well that I cannot amend a government bill—was to bring to the attention of the Minister and of this government the unfairness of the waiver that now exists.

Mr. Chairman: May I say to the hon. member that I am not at all suggesting that his amendment and the concept thereof is not proper; I am suggesting that he should not be amending section 3, but he should be renumbering the sections and adding a new section 3 and renumbering the present 3 and 4, numbers 4 and 5. Then the motion would be proper.

Mr. Jackson: Mr. Chairman, I will accept that.

Mr. Chairman: Fine!

Mr. Jackson: I would just like to ask a question of the Minister. He says this will affect a great number of people. Does he not believe that the ones that are affected will be affected in a beneficial way? The only persons that can possibly be hurt by this amendment are the companies that have got off scot-free for a number of years because of this waiver.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: No, I did not say it would affect a great number of people; I said it might possibly affect a great number of private contracts. I think the implication of this particular amendment has not really been thought through by the hon. member or his friends. I am saying that the implications of it may be much wider than he would suspect and that in any event I think the legislation under The Pollution Control Act, and specifically the legislation which is going to be administered in the area by The Department of Health henceforth will more than cover those releases in certain deeds in the Sudbury area and around any of the smelting areas that now exist.

I know what the hon. member is after here and I have some sympathy for his point of view, but I would suggest that the implications of the actual wording in the amendment are such that I do not really think he has thought them out.

Mr. Jackson: I will accept any rewording that the Minister wishes to make to accomplish the same purpose that he has already recognized as being my purpose.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. leader of the Opposition?

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, I am interested to hear the exchange between the Minister and the hon. member who proposed the amendment. Part of the amendment seems to set out a very good principle indeed and the Minister has indicated that he sees some validity in the purpose. I might only say that if the Minister could make some further accommodation, even moving towards the removal of these special provisions, then it would be certainly an improvement in the present legislation. Otherwise if the Minister is not going to offer the possibility of such a change we would simply content ourselves with supporting the amendment as it now stands.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, I am not making myself clear. I am suggesting that the general legislation relating to air pollution administered by The Department of Health, and especially the expansion that is going to take place in the administration of that Act in certain mining areas in the north, I would think, more than covers the purpose attempted to be covered by this particular amendment, the implications of which, I think, are much wider than the hon. member realizes.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, perhaps in the circumstances, since it is 5 o'clock, the Minister might very well take this matter up with the member for Timiskaming to see whether it is possible, when this section comes again before the committee of the whole House, to make an appropriate amendment to meet the point. I make the suggestion simply because of the lack of precision in what the Minister has had to say in the problem that the amendment raises. He uses the phrase, for example, "surprising results" and yet I do not know any clear way in which I can appreciate what those results would be. If that suggestion would be acceptable it would give an opportunity for consultation about the matter.

Mr. Chairman: Does the hon. Minister care to comment on the suggestions?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: No, I thought I had made my position quite clear.

Mr. Chairman: Then I have a motion before me; the committee has a motion before them and the Chairman is not going to anticipate that the motion will carry or be defeated. Therefore I think the proper wording should be included. I would suggest that the motion should read:

That section 3 be amended by substituting the following and that present sections 3 and 4 be renumbered 4 and 5.

Is this agreeable?

Those in favour of the motion of the hon. member for Timiskaming will please say, aye.

Those opposed will please say, nay.

In my opinion the nays have it.

Call in the members.

The hon. member for Timiskaming has moved that section 3 be amended by substituting the following:

Section 3(1), The provisions of this Act, The Damage by Fumes Arbitration Act, may be waived in whole or in part by any person.

Section 3(2), Any and all waivers that are presently in force shall be null and void as of the date this Act comes into force.

And that the present sections 3 and 4 be renumbered 4 and 5.

All those in favour of the motion of the hon. member for Timiskaming will please rise.

All those opposed to the hon. member's motion will please rise.

Clerk of the House: Mr. Chairman, the ayes are 38, the nays 47.

Mr. Chairman: I declare the motion lost. Section 3 stands as part of the bill.

Section 4 agreed to.

Bill 23 reported.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves that the committee of the whole House rise and report certain bills without amendments, one bill with amendments and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed, Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of the whole House reports one bill without amendment, and one bill with amendment, and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

GOVERNING BODIES OF UNIVERSITIES

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East) moves second reading of Bill 19, An Act to provide for the governing bodies of universities.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, may I say how pleased I am that there are so many members in the House to participate in this debate and I expect they will still be here at ten after six or so?

This bill, An Act to provide for the governing bodies of universities, reconstructs the governing bodies of universities, replacing boards of governors and senates with one governing council having democratic representation of undergraduate and post graduate students, faculty members, alumnae, who would include the public community and the administrative staff, and including other appointed and ex officio members representing governmental links.

This Act, sir, would abolish the boards of governors and senates of Ontario universities. That is to say, it would abolish the present two-tier system of government which belies the principle that a university is a collectivity—a community of scholars—and it would replace this two-tier system with a single system, a one-tier system of government which would reflect the principle that our universities are a collectivity.

I should point out, Mr. Speaker, that as a bill which will never see the light of second reading—since it is introduced by a member of the official Opposition—the purpose of this bill is basically to stimulate discussion on some of the main and essential issues affecting our universities today. I believe, sir, that it is time that we started talking here, in this Legislature, about issues that are relevant to social change and reform which are now being reflected in our universities. I would fully support amendments to this bill if they could be proven to be in line with university reform.

I hoped that this bill would provoke a constructive debate, as it has already, concerning the need for reform in our universities. I should point out that this bill has been circulated widely to university presidents, to university senates, to university students and to student council leaders for their opinions. And I hope that when I introduce this bill again next year it will be substantially revised to include their constructive suggestions. It is, I suppose, Mr. Speaker, somewhat like The Engineers Act, Bill 48, which, when it was introduced by the government, was introduced for the purpose of provoking productive discussion as opposed to trying to impose a single solution on a very complex problem.

I should also like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that this bill, Bill 19, and its companion Bill 11—establishing the universities commission and abolishing The Department of University Affairs—are based on my remarks in this Legislature almost a year ago. In my reply to the Minister of University Affairs' (Mr. Davis) introduction of estimates, I outlined what I considered to be a constructive alternative strategy to the question of university affairs and reform in this province. The two bills grew out of my remarks at that time.

As I have noted, when I introduced the bills—at least noted publicly if not in this House—Bill 19, the one before this House today, assumes the enactment of Bill 11, which establishes the universities commission and abolishes The Department of University Affairs. The reason for this, sir, is that, as I stated last year in this House, it is necessary that the government, that the legislators, establish unequivocally the principle of free and autonomous universities. That is to say, to free the universities of direct penetration of their internal affairs by this government.

That is the purpose of Bill 11. By abolishing The Department of University Affairs, you abolish the ability of a Minister of the government, of a politician, to try to influence by innuendo, to try to influence by direct action and discussion, what takes place in the internal affairs of individual universities. For example, I simply point out that the Minister of University Affairs, by referring to myself as the member from York University, has intimidated my position at York University. Whether or not he meant it, the fact is that by making that statement in the House, he made, I am sure, people involved with York University very nervous about having a teaching member M.P.P. on their faculty being labelled by the Minister of University Affairs as speaking for that institution in this province.

So I would like at this time to make it quite clear that I have submitted a request to York University requesting a full-time leave of absence, so the type of intimidation engaged in by the Minister of University Affairs will have no effect on decisions at York University. I refused to offer my leader my resignation as the university affairs critic in response to such pressure by a politician on the other side of this House.

Now, I would also like to state that one of the basic principles of this bill which I have submitted is to make The University Act a public Act, and this view, I believe, is being supported by the member for Windsor West (Mr. Peacock) from the New Democratic Party. It is a view that is denied by the present Minister of University Affairs. I would like to suggest, sir that the crises on our campuses in Ontario will not just go away. The crises are public crises. They are no longer the preserve of the university. This bill is designed as a small step towards solving those crises, or, as I prefer to say, defusing the crises on the campuses of Ontario's universities. It is a recognition on the part of the official Opposition, and I would hope on the part of the New Democratic Party, of the public responsibility of government for constructive reform in our universities.

The situation on the university campuses is explosive. It is potentially destructive in Ontario. The question of the reform of the internal exercise of power and decision making within our universities is an immediate issue. The universities of this province cannot, by themselves, solve the basic questions about how they are to be governed from within. The government of Ontario must act now to defuse the explosion on our university campuses.

The present division of powers within each university, between the senate and the boards of governors, is artificial, inefficient and expensive, and belies the concept that the university is, in fact, a collectivity, as expressed by Dr. J. A. Corry when he was president of Queens University. It is my view, sir, and the view of the Liberal Party, that unless the government of Ontario acts now we are faced with chaos within our universities. An unhealthy polarisation is taking place, a battle between entrenched and undemocratic boards of governors and student radicals. It is becoming more and more entrenched board power versus student power. Both sides, by their extremism, provoke extremism in the other. Victory by either side, sir, will ruin our universities. Victory by either side is unacceptable to the voters and taxpayers of this province.

I believe that my bill, or some modification of it, will prevent that destructive confrontation which is already becoming evident at many campuses at Ontario's universities. This bill calls for positive action by the government of Ontario. The government simply cannot stand at the edge of the shore and try to tell the tide of unrest to go back. It will not go back. Reform is needed, and reform is needed now. This bill, if you like, is a complicated solution to an extremely complicated and dangerous problem. It must be debated fully and openly by all concerned. There are no simple solutions to violence on university campuses.

This theme that I am proposing, sir, that the polarisation is in fact taking place on university campuses, is supported by a number of observations which I cannot, of course, go into in depth. I would like to talk about what I call the entrenched board of governors power, the extremism within the boards of governors of Ontario universities. Not all boards of governors and governors are extremists, but there are within each university board of governors I suggest, an extreme element that is as dangerous to the internal harmony, to the internal collectivity, of our universities, as the extreme and destructive student radical.

And I would say, sir, as I have already said in this House, as an example of what I mean by extreme destructive board of governors' power, the remarks made by George Drew. George Drew is on the board of governors of the University of Toronto. He was put there by the Conservative Premier of this province. And this is the same man who in recent months pulled out a 1936 anti-communist speech and labelled all student radicals as part of an international communist conspiracy.

I refer the members to pages 716 and 717 in Hansard, where I support that he made the statement. His slander and intolerance is only equalled by the intolerance of the few, the very few, student destructivists who say that every member of every university board of governors is a vicious, exploiting capitalist. I suggest, sir, that that type of intolerance by members of board of governors at closed meetings and open meetings, and that type of extreme statement of intolerance by a very few student destructivists, as I call them, has no place in a community which is designed to pursue academic excellence.

To show you how minutely entrenched power can cause an unhealthy situation on the campuses, sir, I would like to refer to what might be called a hypothetical situation, but which illustrates the type of power that a board of governors has still on many university campuses across this province. I refer simply to a few extreme members of boards of governors who treat the university as their toy hobby, who because of the power of their personal and corporate purses can force, hypothetically in this example a full-blown football team on a new university.

Not really force perhaps, but decide without consultation with anyone else in that university that that university is to have a semi-professional football team. Without consulting with the people concerned with student life on that university, just overnight, out of their private pockets, they say, "Here's the money provided you use it to finance a semi-professional football team." This is, of course, a hypothetical example but this type of thing can still happen so easily in a university. And that is what is meant by an arbitrary board of governors. That is what is meant by the use of the purse by certain members on the board of governors to pervert the purpose of an institution. It is a small example but I think a fairly significant example.

I need only refer the members also to what might be called the blackmail tactics used by the Minister Without Anything from Scarborough North. He has said, you know, that students must not rebel against society, they must not make their views known about society and how bad they think it is, because if they do the capitalists will not hire them for summer jobs. Well, I suggest that a Minister of the government should not go around making such stupid statements.

That is one side of the polarization and to that extent the student radicals are correct. The other side of the polarization we all know has to do with the extreme student destructivists, if you like. The dramatic destruction of the computer at Sir George Williams is perhaps an example of that type of destruction. But I should point out, that what the students are saying about our society—excluding a few students who are advocates of violence if necessary—is very positive in the sense it does offer alternative reforms. It is very true that they do condemn many of the values that exist in our society and they are very idealistic.

But I say that the violence that can take place and which I believe is building up in our society and also in our universities particularly, has no place on university campuses. That destruction and the advocacy of it, I feel, will be blamed on all students. That is, when there is a destructive act on a university campus, because the members of boards of governors have the power to promote and propagandize their views, and supported by certain Ministers of the government, that the destruction of university property on our campuses will be blamed on all students, not just the extreme students, in the same way that George Drew has labelled the students as being part of an international conspiracy. That is not just, sir, and that must not come about.

What really worries me is that if this polarization takes place between the extreme element on boards of governors, between extreme students, and perhaps even extreme faculty members, this will disrupt our universities. What I am saying, sir, is that this government by taking positive action, by insisting that university Acts be public bills and not private bills, by suggesting reform which would include all members of the university community on the single governing council as proposed in my bill, that would defuse the explosion building up on our campuses. It will undercut those extreme student destructivists and the arrogant members of certain boards of governors who treat the university as their toy hobby.

If we open up our universities to this type of participation by all members of the university community, I suggest that we will have gone a long way—not the full way but a long way in knocking out the props of the student destructivists and the often ancient and not relevant members of some boards of governors.

What I am fearful of—the government not providing this type of leadership—is a repetition of the riots that took place in the Middle Ages. Let me tell you, sir, and members present, something about those riots. This is when “the town” turned “on the gown”. This is when the citizens, and in our day, the taxpayers, turned upon our universities and this is what they did in an historical example. The famous battle of St. Scholasticus in Oxford originated in a tavern quarrel.

Some students disapproved of the wine at the inn near Carfax and when the innkeeper responded with stubborn and saucy language, they threw the wine and vessel at his head. The innkeeper's friends urged the innkeeper not to put up with such abuse and they rang the bell of St. Martin's Church. A mob assembled, armed with bows and arrows and other weapons. They attacked every student that passed and fired at the chancellor who retorted by ringing the bells of St. Marys and a mob of students assembled. The battle royal raged until nightfall but resumed the next day when the mob defeated the students, ravished their halls, slaying and wounding wherever they went.

I suggest, sir, that if we allow the destructive element to build up on our campuses, that “the town” might react in this violent way. In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, destructive student power—

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence (Carleton East): I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if I could ask a question—

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make my remarks; I am sure the member will have his—

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence: I am not speaking on the bill, I just have a short question, if I might.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I would like to finish my remarks. If we had started at five o'clock I would be most delighted to debate.

Destructive student power versus entrenched board power is not the way to bring about reform in our universities in Ontario. This Act is designed to undercut the argument of the extreme student power advocate. It is also designed to undercut the power of extreme elements on boards of governors. The minimum requirements for each Ontario university are spelled out in this Act, Mr. Speaker, which creates a single governing council for each university. A great deal of diversity is still possible on how each university governs itself, which a close reading of the Act will make clear. But at least the basic principles of participation of all members in the governments of our universities will be right.

The basic composition of the governing council is spelled out in detail. I believe the passing of this bill would defuse the destructive explosion building up on the universities. And, finally, Mr. Speaker, to show you how strongly I believe that destructive tendencies and violence are building up in universities, I would like to close by quoting Dag Hammarskjöld in his book “The Light and the Rock”. This is what he said:

We all know how, when moved by fear, people may act against what others see as their own best interest. We know how, when people are afraid, they may act even against their own fundamental will. We have seen how, when influenced by such actions, the course of events may take on aspects of inexorable futility to the point where out of sheer weariness, no resistance to the gravitation into open conflict any longer seems possible. This is a constantly repeated pattern of tragedy.

I suggest, sir, that what Dag Hammarskjöld said of the world could, unless appropriate action is taken by this government, in this province be true on our university campuses.

Thank you.

Mr. J. R. Smith (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise to oppose the bill introduced by the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. T. Reid). I have been interested this afternoon to sit and listen to his speech and to realize in what direction the Liberal movement in this country is now moving, into a dogmatic position, as that in the federal House. And I might say that if this bill was passed and imposed upon our universities it would be nothing more than placing them in a straitjacket.

I was very pleased that the member was perhaps more or less backing down his introductory remarks about the merits of the bill and this might very well be because of the little support it has received from academic circles in this province. When the Spinks commission, which was established to study the development of graduate programmes in Ontario universities, submitted its recommendations in 1966 for the universities of Ontario this idea as presented in this bill was unanimously rejected by all parties of government, by the universities, by the public and by the press.

The principle of central control which was embodied in this recommendation was recognized as not being in the best interest of higher education. The details of inter-active development that were proposed, however, were accepted at the time in principle and many have been implemented in the intervening period. In the future, there will be much more closer interaction within the university system. Nevertheless, this should not be construed as a move towards regimentation of these institutions. Each university in Ontario has been and should continue to be different. The government is desirous of encouraging diversity in academic patterns, course offerings, style of operation and the patterns of governing under which each university operates in response to the civic needs of the community in which it finds itself.

The introduction of a bill of this nature would prevent the healthy development of self-government which is so essential to the welfare of these institutions.

The hon. member for Scarborough East has, on many occasions, Mr. Speaker, supported the view that members of the academic community, including the students, should have a greater say in determining their own destiny. The introduction of this bill runs directly contrary to those sentiments. Obviously, some of the features proposed by this bill are generally accepted. In particular, it appears to be patterned after many of the features proposed for the Ontario College of Art. The report—

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): No, I cannot understand why the member is against it.

Mr. J. R. Smith: The report of the commission sponsored by the Canadian Association of University Teachers and the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada, entitled "University Government in Canada" sparked a general review by the universities of their methods of governing. While this report was released and subsequently, the point was made on numerous occasions that the universities should have the opportunity to initiate reforms from within, not from Queen's Park. The government has always supported this stand.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): Yes, but it has got to change.

Mr. J. R. Smith: As the Minister of University Affairs (Mr. Davis) stated in a recent address in Windsor:

Ontario, governments, particularly, must safeguard against any harmful intervention in university affairs which would have detrimental effects upon their true role in our society.

Surely this, in itself is reason enough to insist that the universities should undertake the major responsibility for carrying out their own reforms. It was precisely in appreciation of this basic requirement to safeguard the universities' rights of self-determination that the government of Ontario has pursued the policy of reform being initiated from within the university community.

Looking into the future, then, it becomes obvious that collective decisions must be made in the spirit of full co-operation, in order to determine the pattern of future needs in higher education. No single group within our educational institutions—be it faculty, students, or governors; or of our society, be it government, the institution itself or the public at large—can afford to overlook the needs of any of the others. Each helps in its own way to counterbalance the other.

Recently, Mr. Speaker, we have had two bills before the private bills committee, one regarding the McMaster University in Hamilton and also, one from Carleton University in Ottawa. When presented, both had the unanimous support of those committees. Each was distinctively different, each had major reforms and yet, they suited the particular needs of those institutions. It was a kind of uniform structure for all universities. This bill presumes that all universities in Ontario are at the same stage of development, that they have the same background and that their needs are the same.

Mr. Speaker, I would maintain that all universities in this province are very different in spite of the fact that they do obtain a substantial support from the province of Ontario. I would say that they are conscious of the responsibilities they have to the public of this province as represented by the government. We feel that each of us is best aware of how they can develop a governing structure suitable to the internal needs of the university and, at the same time, responsible to the public.

Mr. Speaker, I sincerely think that each university can best determine the kind of governing structure that it needs to satisfy not only the internal requirements of university management but also to respond effectively to the requirements the public place upon it. There was a particular situation recently at McMaster University where the students demanded to play a certain role in the government of that institution. And that was provided for in the McMaster private bill.

In the introductory letter by Dr. Thode at McMaster, he stated:

In essence, McMaster has decided to continue their two-tier board-senate system with strong emphasis on close liaison between the two bodies. The senate will be the supreme academic body and the board will devote itself primarily to the roles of controlling university's financial operations and of liaison within the larger community. While retaining overall de jure sovereignty, the senate retains the right to nominate and the board its authority to appoint all academic personnel including the president. Provision is made for each body to elect six members to the other and to express its views on any matter of university concern. There will also be established, several joint committees to deal with matters that have important implications for the entire university. It is anticipated that such close co-operation will provide many of the benefits that are cited by proponents of a single governing body.

Mr. Speaker, this was the result of two and a half years of study by all levels of the university community at McMaster. It was very interesting to the private bills committee that the bill had the unanimous support of all the members of that committee. I know that some of the members of that committee might have been disappointed because there were no dissidents or radicals there to oppose the bill. They just did not appear because they were unanimous.

Mr. Speaker, McMaster students have said they do not at present want a place on the board of governors of McMaster University and that is one of the reasons why they do not have a place on the board of governors. But they want a place on the senate. What is the point of thrusting a single tier of government on universities such as McMaster? The choice should come from the universities.

It should not be imposed upon them by a big brother government at Queen's Park. I feel that the university ought to determine its structure remembering the concern for their academic community and the interests of the province at large. McMaster has demonstrated a large responsibility to all the province and an even more immediate responsibility to the people of Hamilton. They must define the way in which they are going to respond to this. They have to find a way themselves of satisfying both of them with a structure that is reasonable.

In conclusion, I feel that universities should have their own individual personalities as long as this personality satisfies two needs—the public interest and the private personality of the individual community. Each university should be permitted to develop in its own way with the responsibility to the province for the economic use of provincial funds and the responsibility for the needs of the people. The university should also satisfy the specific needs of that particular university and this particular stage of development.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by congratulating the member for Scarborough East in bringing this bill before this House.

We have had at least two debates on university government this year, both of them in private members bills. As the member for Windsor West (Mr. Peacock) has indicated, this is scarcely a proper and appropriate forum for such a debate to take place.

I would hope that this is what can be called the official business of the role of students in our universities.

I must say that I was particularly disheartened by the comments of the member for Downsview (Mr. Singer) the other night in his conclusion of the Throne Debate when he said:

We feel that university administration has tried to understand the demands of the students and has met them more than half way.

I would hope that this represents the more forward looking policy of the Liberal Party in trying to create a more effective response to the needs of our society in this particular area.

Mr. Speaker, I think before I turn to the bill itself, perhaps it is worthwhile to remind ourselves of what the function of the university is. The purpose of the university really, is to serve the needs of mankind, not in a narrow local sense but in the international sense. It does so through its efforts to preserve those things of the past which have made us more humane and more civilized. It transmits those things to the present generation and recognizes the right of that generation to reject or accept and, of course, to seek our new horizons of knowledge for future generations.

The question of university government, I think, revolves around the whole problem of what kind of an atmosphere can be created in which these activities can best take place.

In past centuries it has not been inappropriate for the church to have control where the faculty were expected to accept the tenets of a particular church or a particular sect before they were allowed in university, before they were allowed to do research in that university, indeed before they were allowed to participate in any way.

Today, I think, our society expects that participation and dialogue in an atmosphere of freedom are the bases on which those activities can best take place.

Then we come directly into the problem which the member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. J. R. Smith), I think, alluded to—the whole question as to how you can impose “freedom”. The whole question of academic freedom, I suppose, as expressed in the right of the university to carry on its own affairs without interference from governmental institutions. This clashes with our own responsibilities as legislators here in this Chamber for ensuring that the educational system of this province provides those things which we believe to be necessary—equality of educational opportunity, for example—and of course to ensure that the taxation of the people of Ontario is best used at the post secondary level. Thus, in a sense, there is a direct confrontation of two principles—and I think we have to seek out some kind of balance.

First and most important I would want to say that this party would view with the greatest sympathy all of the matters which the member for Scarborough East (Mr. T. Reid), has brought forward: the need for greater student participation; the need for a more meaningful activity on the part of faculty within the university administration; and also the need for some kind of responsible way by which the community can have its influence upon the university.

At the same time I think this party would take the point of view that guidelines established by this Chamber should be put in a more general fashion; that it is very difficult, if not impossible, to suggest that a university such as the University of Toronto, with some 20,000 students; with a number of church affiliated colleges; with a great many faculties—really a multi-university, should have the same number in its governing body and should have the same kind of governing body as, let us say, a small non-sectarian university which may only have two or three thousand students.

Perhaps we ought to admit that the member for Scarborough East and I are created by our circumstances. He has participated in a very large multi-university. I have participated in a very small university. For that reason I find it very difficult to see the small university being governed by the same structure which he sees as being quite acceptable and appropriate for the large universities, such as York University.

If I might just take one or two areas. I was also delighted to hear him say that this will be brought forward again next year, and I would hope this might be a developing dialogue which will take place year after year and which I think could be helpful to universities right across this province so I shall take one area—the role of students.

This particular bill suggests that the council could have six to eight students, yet I was interested in the private members bill—when the Carleton bill came before the committee, to see that it was possible there, because of the way in which students were being fed into the governing structure, it was possible that maybe 20, 25 or even 30—although quite unlikely, but nevertheless a much larger number of students could actually eventually find their way into the Senate of that university.

I would immediately accept the problem that the member for Scarborough East brought up in relation to the dichotomy of the Senate and the board of governors. Although the board of governors is usually expected to look after financial matters, in essence they do make decisions which may seriously affect the academic matters which the Senate itself has to deal with.

At McMaster they tried to solve this by a committee between these two bodies in which they hoped to interpret the thinking of one, to the other and it seems to me that that was a very natural and acceptable way of dealing with it in that particular setting.

One of the things that I am sure the member who put forward this resolution would realize is that most of the decisions are not made in the Senate at all. They are made in Senate committees and one of the problems I see in this bill is the lack, perhaps, of structuring the students into the real guts, the real nuts and bolts, of the administration of a university. Possibly that might be a subject to which he might turn himself.

Another problem that I see, is the lack of any structuring of taking decisions to the students or to the general student body about matters taking place in the Senate or the board of governors. You have six or eight students on that board of governors who can be mere tokens and who can, indeed, be effectively separated from the general student body. I would suggest that possibly this might also be another direction which could be explored in the future.

As well as this, of course, I think that the faculty role has not been, perhaps, as clearly defined as it might be. This is a community of scholars, and faculty are a very important part of that community. In some universities the senate is entirely made up of faculty. That is true of the university of which I happen to be a part.

For one thing, the administration are taking part in the teaching role, and they are therefore regarded as faculty. In some cases the board of governors are entirely business oriented. In some universities they are representative of a very wide community, and, once again at the university which I happen to be part of, the board of governors do not represent the corporate elite, as I think one would narrowly define it.

And so, there is, I think, a problem of flexibility and I am wondering whether we cannot, in this Legislature, in discussion of this bill, both this year and in ensuing years, decide among ourselves on what could be called a number of guidelines.

One, I think, has been suggested by the member. First the guideline of openness. I notice, for example, that he suggests both the senate or at least the general council, would have its meetings completely open to the public. I think this is an important development. The concept that the things that are being talked about in what is essentially a public institution, should be completely open. The minutes should be printed, they should be distributed, and there should be every opportunity for both students, faculty and the general public to know what is going on.

I think that is a guideline.

I would hope, as well, that we would find a more effective way of representing the public, than through the member of Parliament, the MPP and the mayor of the community.

I do not think, I just do not think that we, as legislators, can devote the necessary time to this kind of activity. I do not think that in many cases we have the information, the knowledge and the interest to be concerned about the university and the way in which people who are a part of boards of governors, or a part of a general council should be.

I think that the other guidelines which have been suggested by this bill have some very important things to say to us—that the students and the faculty should have an effective role. Perhaps it might be suggested that the committee on education and university affairs, might turn itself to the discussion and the examination of the bills which affect the universities throughout this entire province.

Would it not be worthwhile to have the administration, representation from the students, from the faculty, come before that committee? Would it not be worthwhile for us to look and see whether, in the light of the discussion that has taken place here, whether the bills which we see before us really do represent the degree of openness and the degree of participation and dialogue which we think is important and necessary in today's Ontario?

Now, I do not want to bring before this House any spectres of burning buildings and chaotic universities, but I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that we have a responsibility. We have the responsibility of seeing that the work in our universities is carried on in an atmosphere of freedom, and if that freedom does not exist, then we as a Legislature take some responsibility.

Mr. Speaker: There are three speakers still, one from each party. The hour is five minutes to six. I am just wondering how the House would wish to deal with these in order that everyone who is on the list should have a fair dealing. I have no objection, provided the House wishes, to sitting on and giving each member five minutes. But we only have five minutes left.

The hon. member for Sarnia (Mr. Bullbrook), then, has the floor and we will see—

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): If you wish, Mr. Speaker, I am directed, of course, by yourself.

Mr. Speaker: I am directed by the House, but it hardly seems right if we have a list of three more speakers to just have one of them.

An hon. member: Would it be in order for somebody to call 6.00 o'clock?

Mr. Bullbrook: I am content.

Mr. Speaker: If it is agreeable to the House, yes. It being 6.00 o'clock, then, the private members' hour has expired.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow the leader of the New Democratic Party will make his contribution to the Budget Debate. We will have the same routine as we had today. When he has finished we will go to estimates of The Department of Correctional Services. We will also sit tomorrow night.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 5.55 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, MARCH 11, 1969

The House met at 2.30 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion that Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair and that the House resolve itself into the committee on ways and means.

ON THE BUDGET

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, the most important feature of any Budget is its impact on the average taxpayer, that great majority of taxpayers who are struggling along on an income that may range anywhere up to about the $6,000 bracket. Down through the years this government has tended to load the average taxpayer, and inequitably so, because with much less frequency, if at all, have they placed that load on other sectors of the economy.

Last year, you will recall, Mr. Speaker, the average taxpayer in the province of Ontario sustained perhaps the biggest wallop in our history. There were taxes increased on gasoline and on tobacco. There were increases in hospital and medical premiums. There were increases in fishing licences and hunting licences and car licences. There were increases for entry to provincial parks and camping fees. All of this added up to something in the range of $125 to $150 for the average family. Indeed, depending on their spending pattern, it sometimes averaged some $200 to $300.

In short, there has been an aggravation of the situation down through the years, such a great aggravation that there have been repeated investigations as to the plight of the average taxpayer.

Some years ago, when it was recognized that this plight had become a very serious one, doctor Carter in Ottawa was called in with a whole battery of consultants to examine the average taxpayer's condition, and in a Royal commission report the prescription was made that he was carrying too much of the burden, and that burden should be shared by other people in society.

That was not good enough—some five years ago, doctor Smith was called in by the province of Ontario and with his battery of consultants they too reviewed the plight of the average taxpayer and indicated that there was too much pressure on him.

That was not good enough. So doctor White, who sits here today, was brought in with his battery of consultants to second-guess doctor Smith and make some recommendations with regard to what should be done.

In other words, for seven years the plight of the average taxpayer has been studied, studied, studied and restudied. Then to top it off, now doctor MacNaughton comes in with his prescriptions.

And what are they? Well, two more years of study. No relief yet. Indeed, to make matters even worse, there are going to be more taxes, and in return for the heavier tax load they are going to get fewer services.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the average taxpayer in the province of Ontario is a pretty tough fellow. He can take a lot. He can survive despite what this government has done. He can survive even for the next two years. I venture the prediction, Mr. Speaker, that he is going to survive long enough to be around to throw this government out, for not having done something to meet his problem. From the point of view of the average taxpayer this is a thoroughly unsatisfactory Budget.

Something could have been done this year and it was not. We need not have had the kind of massive cuts in services to people that this government is proposing, yet we are going to have them. The tax load could have been redistributed more equally throughout society, but there has been little more than a gesture in that direction. The long-suffering taxpayer should not have to wait for promises, promises, for another two years before he gets some relief.

How could this be done, Mr. Speaker? That is a fair question and I want to turn my attention to it. The Provincial Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton) explained that in all of that excruciating process that presumably went on behind the scenes, some $400 million were cut off the departmental estimates.

Some of that $400 million—my guess is some $50 to $75 million of it—was administrative fat, accumulating inevitably by an ageing government. Let us have no illusions, there is a lot of that administrative fat there and you do not need to take our word for it.

The government itself has conceded that the problem continues by the appointment of what is euphemistically referred to now as PIP—that projectivity improvement project—to try to achieve greater efficiency in the government's administration.

That still leaves us, Mr. Speaker, with over $300 million of a cut in departmental estimates. Translated into something that is meaningful for the people of the province of Ontario, it means that there is going to be a cut back in the services to the people. The government itself says that this is regrettable because it concedes that these services are all in what the government chooses to describe as priority areas. But the significant thing, Mr. Speaker, is that they are not high enough in priority, as far as the Tories were concerned, to avoid getting the axe in terms of this Budget.

We in the New Democratic Party disagree with this. We do not accept the proposition that when there has to be retrenchment, that retrenchment should be focused wholly, indeed almost exclusively, in what is known as the soft services—the cut back in serving the needs of the people themselves.

Adlai Stevenson, in one of his very wise statements, said:

Something that is of assistance to the other fellow is an extravagance, but something that is of assistance to yourself is a necessity.

When a government, for example, is referring to cutback on forgiveness loans to industry, even though it is in a period of retrenchment, but it is refusing to cutback on a $1.8 million handout to horse breeders (when a great chunk of it goes to those barefoot boys by the name of E. P. Taylor) then I suggest that they have not got the right kind of priorities. It is time we take a look at exactly what this cut back is going to mean in the lives of all of the people of Ontario, and particularly for that average taxpayer who is carrying an even heavier burden than he has carried down through the years.

The government is proposing cut backs in health. There is going to be a freeze on hospital construction at a time when, for example, in the Metro area, we have the plans all laid out for the extension of hospitals to do something about those long waiting lists. There is going to be a postponement in building a system of convalescent hospitals, which would ease the burden on our high-cost general hospitals. The brakes are going to be put on doctor training programmes at a time when we have a desperate shortage of doctors. In northern Ontario, and other outlying communities where they have not got doctors, they are going to have to struggle along without this vital service.

There is going to be a cutback on medical research, which is capable of doing something to relieve human suffering and to save human lives. There is going to be a cutback on subsidies to the Ontario Hospital Services Commission, with the result that the load is being transferred to the premiums, which is beyond the means of people who are in the lower income group, and particularly people who happen to be on fixed income. Tragically there is going to be a cutback in grants to psychiatric hospitals at a time when we have known for years—that half of the people in our hospital beds are suffering from mental illness. Therefore, there is a desperate need to come up with the medical solutions.

In this same connection, there is a postponement of the establishment of a genuine programme to cope with the needs of emotionally disturbed children. The New Democratic Party, through the efforts of the hon. member from Scarborough West (Mr. Lewis), and others, forced this government to face up to the need for meeting the needs of emotionally disturbed children so that they could be treated in their youth, and not have to live warped and twisted lives that are not capable of a normal existence.

All of these are the cutbacks, Mr. Speaker, which I suggest are unnecessary. I will show you in a few moments why they are unnecessary.

There is going to be a cutback on housing, that area which is perhaps the most shocking failure in our society today. Last year this government gave some indication of what it considered to be the objective which must be met. It brought in, a Budget with, an appropriation of $62 million as its contribution, in addition to the mortgage money available from CMHC and elsewhere.

What do we find now, Mr. Speaker? We find that last year the government spent not $62 million but $19 million. What more dramatic underlining of the failures of this government! The government has to confess that it spent only $19 million of a $62 million appropriation. But this year we are going to triple it, says the Provincial Treasurer; we are going to spend $57 million. In short, this year, they are going to be doing less than they set as their objective a year ago.

We in the New Democratic Party, Mr. Speaker, say that this is hopelessly inadequate. This government has got to do something about getting out and building houses instead of talking about houses. Investment in houses is just that—an investment—which for the most part will come back in terms of rents over the years. In addition to the money that the government has now appropriated, there is no reason why this government should not be raising $50 to $75 million and, if necessary, floating a bond issue through the Ontario Housing Corporation with the backing of the credit of the Province of Ontario. Get out and build houses and quit complaining about the lack of them!

There is going to be a cutback, Mr. Speaker, in services to senior citizens. Because the private insurance companies could not provide medical coverage for people within the means of those on the incomes of many of our senior citizens, the government established OMSIP. But they recognized that they would have to subsidize it—to assist those who were in this particular economic plight.

They did so, but they refuse to do it for hospital coverage, even though last year they increased, very sharply, the premiums on the Ontario Hospital Services coverage. Now the government indicates that they are going to cut back on their proposed increase in grants from 70 per cent to 80 per cent for the building of senior citizens homes across the province of Ontario.

I had a visit a few days ago—as did many others, I am sure, in this Legislature—from people in the Niagara Peninsula, with regard to the Dorchester Manor, a proposed senior citizens home for which there are petitions from the community, for where there is support from the municipalities, and yet you cannot get this government to move. Mr. Speaker, there are Dorchester Manors dotted all across the province of Ontario, and it is about time this government faced this urgent need instead of cutting back.

There is a cutting back, Mr. Speaker, on education. This becomes somewhat more complex to analyze. There is a lower level of increases than we have had for many many years in terms of the grants for education. In spite of the fact that the Ontario Municipal Association, the Ontario Association of Mayors and Reeves, and the Opposition parties in this Legislature, backed by the majority of people of the province, have said that during the 28th Legislature of the province of Ontario we should be moving to an 80 per cent take-over of the cost of education by the provincial government, this government is going to do nothing now.

Indeed, they promise that they will start in 1971 and they will complete, by 1974, a take-over of only 60 per cent of the cost of education. That is not adequate, Mr. Speaker.

The great problem when we come to discuss universities, Mr. Speaker, is that this is an area in which there has been a massive expenditure of money in years gone by. And there are some people who now wonder whether or not we in the province of Ontario, got into too great a proliferation of universities across this province. But, Mr. Speaker, it is too late to lament that. That was a decision of this government, if, indeed, it really was a decision. Because one of the problems of this government is that it announces now, builds now and sometime later it starts to plan.

Some of the chickens are coming home to roost. Admittedly, you have large budget increases but they are not enough to meet what universities feel are desperately necessary. There is not, for example, an ample increase made available under the university formula, which is only five per cent this year as compared to ten to 15 per cent in the last two years. There is not enough to allow for the normal expansion of budgets to meet salaries and other operational costs in the university.

Mr. Speaker, I think this is exceedingly dangerous, because we recognize today that universities have become the focal point for protest and the ferment in our society. This kind of a restriction on programmes is going to be an invitation for that protest to be shared not only by students who reflect it in the most militant fashion, but by university faculties who in York and Toronto and many other universities have been announcing this year their contemplation of strikes if they cannot get a better deal on salaries.

So we are inviting a dangerous kind of situation, quite apart from the economic folly of cutting back now so that we do not get the full return on the investment that we have already made.

Overall, Mr. Speaker, without going into further detail, all of this is regrettable. These are Tory priorities. The average family is going to be carrying a heavier tax burden in many of these areas on which I have touched and is going to be getting less for the taxes that it has already paid.

Mr. Speaker, we in the New Democratic Party do not take the approach of the Liberal Party which has been to criticize the cutbacks, but to provide no alternative other than in the instance of health. We are not going to put ourselves in the contradictory position, when every estimate comes up this year, arguing that you, the government, were wrong by cutting back when we have not presented you with an alternative.

Therefore, it is my intention in this debate to indicate why there should be no cutbacks, and why there could have been an alternative in terms of the funding.

That leads me, Mr. Speaker, to turn to the question of taxes. The government have indicated that they are going to raise this year some $180 million more in taxes than they raised last year, and two-thirds of this revenue is going to come from the corporate sector. For the first time in many years you have an increase in taxes on the corporate sector. I suggested it could, and should have come a year ago, what you have had is the average taxpayer carrying that burden without it being shared equitably in the corporate sector.

So generally speaking, we do not have any objections to the tax increases that the government has made. I say "generally" because I would like at a later date, for example, to examine the validity of the tax on machinery. I think there is a very good case to suggest that you are defeating your own purpose.

But generally speaking, these tax increases, if anything, are belated. They should have come many years ago, not only because of the revenue they would have produced, but because of the greater equity that they would have introduced into our tax structure.

But having said that, Mr. Speaker, I ask the question, why did the government stop where it did? When you finally are moving to introduce equity? Why do you suddenly become so cautious, or shall I use the term, so conservative?

I want to suggest to you a half a dozen areas where there is more tax revenue that this government could have gotten. For example, we could have raised more revenue in the corporate tax field. I know the government always argues that we cannot get out of step with the rest of the nation. If our corporation tax gets higher than any of the other provinces for any great length of time, it is going to result in the redistribution of industry.

But it is as certain, Mr. Speaker, as we are here today, that if the province of Ontario will move to get this revenue, and in so doing introduce equity by increasing corporation taxes, the province of Quebec would welcome it and would move too, because their need, if anything, is greater than ours for more tax revenue.

So this is a bogeyman, the proposition that you are going to be getting out of step.

Mining taxes: I listened to the Provincial Treasurer in his belated laments about the inequity of the mining taxes, and the fact that the mining companies had not been carrying their share. Then he gave us, a five-minute dissertation on what was going to be done to correct it. And then the letdown, Mr. Speaker. At the end of it what is going to be the net increase in the mining taxes? $8 million.

Well, Mr. Speaker, the government has been raising $17 million, they are now proposing to raise $8 million extra, for a total of $25 million, from our resources that are owned by the people of the province of Ontario, and that this year will be producing about $1.25 billion.

So this government, on behalf of the people of the province of Ontario who own those resources, are going to get $25 million out of $1,250,000,000. This is fair? This is equity? All I need to do is to remind you, as we have done so often, that one company in this province, International Nickel Co., after they had paid their taxes last year, had in excess of $140 million in profits. One hundred and forty million dollars for International Nickel alone, and $25 million from the whole industry for the people of the province of Ontario.

Forestry resources: Each year I watch the widening margin between the money that this government raises from the forest industry and the money that The Department of Lands and Forests spends, for the most part, on the forest industry. Next year, the figures are $36 million income and $63 million expenditure.

Not all of that is spent on the forest industry; I concede. Some of it is on parks and so on. But the proposition that the people of the province of Ontario should be dipping into their pockets, that the average taxpayer should be shelling out to assist in the subsidizing and the servicing of the forest industry when we are not even getting enough revenue in to cover it, is an intolerable proposition that this government continues to tolerate.

Personal income tax: I listened to the Provincial Treasurer rise during his Budget speech and blow his little propaganda trumpet and say—no, this was in the Throne Debate last December that he blew his little propaganda trumpet. He said that we are not going to do what they are doing in Ottawa, those bad boys up in Ottawa, where they tax the poor and do not tax the rich, and they cut off the social development tax at $6,000. We are not going to do that kind of thing.

Now is the time to put their action where their words have been. Why do we not have a surcharge on income tax, beginning at the $6,000 level, so that we will get equity in the tax structure, which presumably the government wants—I wonder? But, presumably, in light of the Minister's words, they want it and at the same time would get more revenue. But, no, they would not do that.

Sales tax: I was interested in noting the extension of the sales tax in a minor way, but once again the government halts. There were many areas that the Smith report suggested should be covered in the sales tax, but the government is not going to move into those as yet. I shall have a few words a little later on the sales tax when I am discussing tax reform.

Capital gains: The government has said for years that we cannot have a capital gains tax in the province of Ontario if there is not one elsewhere. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, we can, and should, have capital gains tax now on the speculative profits made in land, not only for the revenue it would raise but for the help it would contribute to our housing problem.

If the government say they cannot do that in the province of Ontario alone, may I remind them that they cut the rug out from under themselves. They have now said on capital gains that they are going to move on it even if the federal government does not in two years from now. In short, Mr. Speaker, as the Carter commission reminded us, there is $5 billion worth of wealth in this country, and a good portion of it—40 or 50 per cent of it in the province of Ontario—is carrying no tax load at all. This government continues to refuse to raise their taxes. I suggest to you that they could, and should have done so in this Budget.

I have given you a number of options. I am not suggesting that all of those options need be exercised this year, but some of them could have been exercised. I suggest to you—without trying to put figures on them, because it is very difficult in the Opposition, on a few days' calculation to come up with a figure—that it would have been very possible for this government to have raised taxes the equivalent of the $300 million cutback in services and thereby avoided the cutback in services.

Indeed, it is certain that a few years from now, if we are going to establish equity in our tax structure, when the government is increasing its revenues in the years to come, they will raise from these very sources that I have mentioned—not $300 million, but $500 million or $1 billion, or in five or ten years from now $1.5 billion. Why do you not start now instead of leaving it until later?

There is another aspect of the government's approach that I want to touch on briefly, Mr. Speaker. The conventional wisdom today is that we must have a balanced Budget. I suppose it is not surprising that a Tory government is going to accept that conventional wisdom and do everything possible, no matter what the cost, to have a balanced Budget. They did so; but I ask the question—why no deficit at all this year?

I would agree that deficits are not something that you should seek consciously and deliberately if they can be avoided. I would say that down through the years this province many times has had deficits that were unnecessary because this government refused to raise money from some of its friends in the corporate world to avoid those deficits.

The result is that we have built a debt, and the burden of carrying that debt today which is in excess of what it should have been. But having said that, I am not one who is going to put the balancing of the Budget as a priority over meeting desperate human needs of the people of the province of Ontario.

Again, Mr. Speaker, let us put into perspective the data being given to us by experts who have examined the whole situation. Our debt in the province of Ontario today is seven per cent of the gross provincial product. Our per capita debt is less than it was back in the early 1960s.

Our net debt position is one which could be eliminated by eight months of our revenue, and I will say to any man, including the hon. member from Owen Sound, who is constantly talking about what the businessman would do, that any businessman who is not in debt beyond eight months of his revenue, does not consider himself to be seriously in debt. Indeed, the Smith committee said that you could go to nine per cent of the gross provincial product and still be in a completely manageable situation.

There are a lot of economists who argue that nine per cent is an arbitrary ceiling, but let us accept the nine per cent as being the level where you would get into a dangerous position. We are at seven per cent.

Next year the gross provincial product in the province of Ontario is going to increase by something over $2 billion, and even at our present low level we could have gone into debt approximately $150 million and kept that present debt level still below any dangerous proportion. You would have had $150 million to meet some of these needs of the people, which in Tory priorities are going to be cut out.

So I return now, Mr. Speaker, to the basic question. How can you avoid the cuts? I suggest you can avoid the cuts in three ways. The first one is that you can exercise some of the options on new tax revenues which I have drawn to your attention. Second, Mr. Speaker, we can do it by becoming part of the national Medicare plan and accepting the $175 million that is waiting for us to pick up in Ottawa today.

We now know that the plan under the guidance of the Liberals at Ottawa is flexible enough that the government in British Columbia has been able to keep private carriers on a so-called non-profit basis. Why does this government not operate that way? Why do they not, indeed? Perhaps I am beating this drum a bit too hard, Mr. Speaker. Maybe the Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) is now in the process of negotiating this in Ottawa. I hope he is, because it is a ludicrous proposition that a government in the province of Ontario should be complaining about not having money when they are refusing to accept $175 million that is there for the taking. They can reshape our medical coverage to meet Ottawa's demands, even though I think it would result in poorer Medicare. So there is the second area where more revenues could have been raised—Medicare.

The third way is a manageable deficit of $150 million if it is necessary to make certain that we do not have this kind of cutback in services.

In short, Mr. Speaker, as Tony Westall, formerly of the Globe and Mail, now of the Toronto Star, pointed out in an article the other day, what this Budget reveals is a "fiscal fraud." For quite some months this government has been on a propaganda tirade—that is not an exaggeration—a propaganda tirade about the unmanageable budgetary position in the province of Ontario. Now they have proven that it could have been managed very easily.

Indeed, it could have been managed without restoring to Tory cutbacks in basic services to the people. I give this government fair warning now that with every power that is at our disposal here in the Opposition in the Ontario Legislature we are going to fight to have these cutbacks removed so that we can provide the necessary services to the people of this province. If they are carrying a heavier tax load, at least they are going to get something for the taxes that they are paying.

Let me turn to a final comment on the Budget itself, Mr. Speaker. This is, in a sense, something of a speculative comment, but I suggest to you that there is solid ground for the speculation. I want to suggest that this government may well have presented us with a Budget which is founded on a basic miscalculation.

What we have been presented with is a Budget which is not expansionary, but a Budget which is contractionary, a Budget which is based on a low real output rate. It is operating on the assumption that the productivity rate in the province of Ontario is going to be a real output rate of 4.5 per cent.

May I remind you, Mr. Speaker, that the Canada Economic Council, in specifying the level of economic development needed in Canada to be able to meet our needs and to provide enough jobs, says that we must have a productivity rate of 4.5 per cent for the nation as a whole. If we are only aiming at 4.5 per cent in the province of Ontario, it simply means that with the low growth areas included in the picture, the national productivity rate is going to be less than 4.5 per cent, and we are going to be in a contractionary period in spite of all the claptrap we hear from Tories, including Mr. Stanfield, and others of the inflationary threat.

Indeed, just let me document it briefly in passing. I was interested to see in the paper last week a quotation from a very reputable body of economists, the National Institute of Economic and Social Research in London, England, which does a continuous study of the economies of most of the countries in the western world. Their comment with regard to Canada was this:

The productivity gains achieved in 1968 are unlikely to be repeated, and further, any tightening of monetary or fiscal policy in Canada could well mean a real output growth for 1969 of less than four per cent.

That statement was made before there was another tightening of monetary policy through an increase of the interest rate to seven per cent a few weeks ago.

In other words, there is very good reason to believe that we are going to have a contraction and that this Budget is aiming at a contraction at a time which could have very serious and dangerous consequences. Indeed, the government's rather cautious pattern of growth, far below the province's potential, is underlined by the fact that the government is willing to tolerate an unemployment rate of 3.5 per cent.

There was a time back in the mid-1950s—and economists will confirm this—that an unemployment rate of 2.5 per cent was a desirable and achievable objective. But this government has foresworn that kind of thing. It is concentrating more on inflation rather than unemployment, in spite of the growing body of expert economist advice that the social costs from inflation are much less than the social costs from unemployment.

That is, particularly true in Canada, Mr. Speaker, because once again experts like Mel Watkins, and others who are engaged in a continuous study of the Canadian economy, remind us that what can be done by Canadian governments to cope with the problem of inflation is relatively ineffective. Whatever governments may do is more than cancelled out by the whole impact of the American economy that we are so closely integrated with. That is true of the federal government. How much more true it is, then, of any provincial government! In short, a government budget which is preoccupied with inflation instead of focusing on unemployment is missing the real point.

May I suggest, Mr. Speaker, as has been pointed out by the economists, that a one per cent cut in the unemployment rate means an increase in the gross product of some four to five per cent. Translated into dollars that simply means that a one per cent decrease in the unemployment rate produces $1 billion more wealth in Canada. And $1 billion more wealth in Canada means close to $0.5 billion more wealth in the province of Ontario itself. $0.5 billion more wealth in the province of Ontario is a broader tax base through which you can maximize your revenues, instead of reducing them.

Another point—the government's whole rationale for getting out of the capital markets in Canada and going to the capital markets in Europe (but even that, they are going to foreswear this year, so they tell us) is for the purpose of leaving the capital markets for the private sector of the economy. Mr. Speaker, there is reason to believe, once again, that the private sector of the economy may not use the capital market enough to fill the gap that has been deliberately left by the government.

There is an increasing tendency for capital in industry to be drawn from the Canadian scene and to be attracted, for reasons that I will not go into now, to the European scene.

It raises the whole question of the relative balance between public investment and private investment. This government has deliberately said, "We are withdrawing; we are cutting back in our services; we are not going to expand our housing programme. We are going to withdraw from the capital investment field to leave it for the private investors." This at a time when, as Galbraith warned us years ago, the desperate need in the modern society is not for the things that the private sector will give us, where there is a profit—the desperate needs in a modern society is for public services that only a government is going to give—the low-cost housing which is not profitable; the reforestation to rebuild our natural resources; the recreational facilities; the parks; the anti-pollution programmes.

All of these things are not going to be done by the private sector of the economy. They have to be done by this government and yet, the government is withdrawing.

To conclude this aspect, Mr. Speaker—by using the $175 million in Medicare money that is available, by using some of the tax options which I have listed, by accepting a modest manageable deficit (if indeed it becomes necessary), we could have avoided the cut back in high priority services to our people. We could have provided to the taxpayer a greater return for their unprecedented tax load. We could have cushioned against the drop in our wealth production and assured productivity levels which would have maximized our revenues and avoided the waste of having tens of thousands of people unemployed. We could have done all those things, but we have not, and that is why this is a thoroughly bad Budget from the point of view of the average person.

Mr. Speaker, let me turn from the Budget itself to the question of the white paper and tax reform. The government has added to the tax load and as a sweetener they said, "Two years from now we will relieve you, we will take some of the pressures off by finally establishing a greater degree of equity into our tax structure." I was rather interested in going back to proposals which we in the New Democratic Party put in my Throne debate speech last December here in this Legislature. Let me read you a couple of paragraphs:

In our opinion, the ideal tax is one which places most stress on reformed and broadened income and wealth taxes and de-emphasizes property taxes, sales taxes, flat rate premiums and other regressive forms of taxation.

And a little later:

There are strong arguments for continuing to collect a fair share from corporate surpluses particularly when the large proportion of them—

That is, the corporate surpluses

—go across the border and if untaxed, simply benefit either foreign shareholders or foreign governments at the expense of the Canadian taxpayer.

These were the basic propositions we made last fall in the presentation of a whole blueprint for tax reform and an equitable tax mix.

That being the case, Mr. Speaker, obviously we welcome the government's white paper and its proposal to move towards some tax reform. On the argument as to whether or not the government is bluffing, for example, when they propose that two years from now they are going to establish their own income tax, let me say flatly, right here and now, I am not going to engage in this speculation. It is irrelevant as to whether or not the government is bluffing. The point we have got to recognize is that the people are getting weary of federal-provincial feuding over their money, the people's tax money.

Mr. Speaker, I have an equal regret that there is a new dimension being added to this feuding between the federal and provincial governments. It is being added by the provincial Liberal Party. It spent a good deal of its presentation on the Budget yesterday with the leader of the Opposition trying to rationalize and explain how much of this government's money came from that beneficent uncle, Ben Benson, up in Ottawa. What a fatuous kind of analogy, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): The federal treasury pays one-third of the budget of Ontario.

Mr. MacDonald: Ben Benson is not handing back some money that is his. He is handing back money that was raised from the people of the province of Ontario and the country as a whole. Having paid the taxes, the people expect the federal and the provincial governments to sit down and to use it to meet their services—cut out the feuding, instead of adding another dimension to the feuding.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, I would agree that we should avoid the balkanization of this nation. I would agree that in our fiscal policies we should seek the kind of co-operation which is going to have an integrated approach, taking into account the whole tax load imposed upon the people. But, Mr. Speaker, if the federal Liberals are going to say to the provinces, go and raise your own money, the provincial Liberals cannot complain when the governments do precisely that.

Heaven help me that I should find myself defending the Tory government, but when they are right, I will defend them. And on this occasion, they are right.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): So seldom—

Mr. MacDonald: It is a good thing that I do not have to come over, there is too much between us—

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): All righteousness will win in the end!

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Right. It is a good thing, in our view, that Ontario is taking a lead on tax reform. Indeed, a year ago, we told this government to stop stalling and waiting for Ottawa to get at its tax reform, because if there is anything slower than a Tory government, it is a federal Liberal government. Get at the proposition of tax reform from the point of view of the province of Ontario, because you have a great deal within your own control. If the province of Ontario moves, it will force Ottawa to get moving. In fact, that is precisely what the Toronto Daily Star (I think it is a Liberal paper) said in its lead editorial the day after the Ontario Budget. It said the main import of the Budget was that Ottawa had to get going on its tax reform because Ontario had started to move. If Ontario can come up with a progressive, equitable base for income tax—and we shall do our level best to make certain that they do—then there is some prospect that the Liberals in Ottawa might be persuaded to come up with a more equitable one than they are now contemplating. Because, I repeat, the Liberals can be more Tory than the Tories when it comes to fiscal policy at the Ottawa level.

What the average taxpayer wants is a tax system that is as fair as possible, as quickly as possible, and stop the delay. He does not want to live on promises any longer. The soundest foundation upon which to build unity in this country is an equitable financial basis that will meet the needs of the people across this country and give them some equality of services. Fiscal separatism is what we heard again yesterday.

Mr. Speaker, that is a propaganda slogan that is about as sterile and as bankrupt as the Prime Minister's (Mr. Robarts) propaganda slogan about a Machiavellian fraud in reference to Medicare. I hope both of them are cleared out of the way so that we can get on with the job.

While I welcome this tax reform, Mr. Speaker, I do not think we should have any illusion that it is the answer to all our inequities as some of the friends in the press—friends of the Tory government—have presented to the people of the province of Ontario. I want to draw your attention to this, to a few examples—the capital gains tax. The government said that it is contemplating the U.S. model.

We have a lot of this country that is being Americanized but there is one further thing I do not want to see Americanized and that is our tax structure. I suggest that what we want is not a capital gains tax on the U.S. model, but a capital gains tax on the Carter commission model, namely, that a dollar is a dollar. Therefore a dollar of capital gains will be taxed as a dollar of income, and not treated as a sort of special little reserve on which there will be a lighter tax, if it is a gain, than on the regular income.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, what this is is mere tokenism. The government itself said that if we cannot get Ottawa to move, or if the other provinces do not move, what we can do can be purely nominal. Well, I am very fearful, because once again, I repeat, the prospects of getting the federal government at Ottawa to move on some genuine tax reform in view of the flat statements from many spokesmen, including Prime Minister Trudeau that they are opposed to a capital gains tax, is not a very optimistic prospect. Therefore, this government is very well protected against action. If Ottawa is not going to move, they are not going to move, except as a mere token gesture to the principle of capital gains.

Secondly, the government already states in its Budget statement that if we get an effective capital gains tax, then we can trade the inheritance tax off against it. In other words, there will not be any great accumulation of wealth if we have an effective capital gains tax and, therefore, we will emulate what has been done out in Alberta—refund all the province's share of inheritance tax in the fashion that some of the western provinces are doing—to create a tax haven.

Mr. Speaker, there is interesting illogic there. If there is any great accumulation of wealth at the inheritance level, the capital gains tax was not effective. So, you keep the capital gains tax and do not, at this early stage when you are only talking about blueprints, indicate that you are going to trade the inheritance tax off for a capital gains tax. That is the second weakness.

The third weakness is the whole question of the sales tax, Mr. Speaker. We in the New Democratic Party initially opposed the sales tax because it is a regressive tax. Its major impact is on those who have the least capacity to pay, and its impact on those with ability to pay is marginal.

Some economists who have always argued that you can make a sales tax more progressive; I will not say a progressive tax, but you can make it less regressive, let us put it that way, by extending it to services. Particularly those services used chiefly by those who have a capacity to pay. In this way you will get a wider tax base, a more equitable tax base, and you will get more revenue.

The fascinating thing, Mr. Speaker, is that I find on page 70 in the government's white paper on tax reform, this rather interesting warning, that as far as the sales tax is concerned, to the extent that Ontario finds it necessary and desirable to derive additional revenues from sales taxation, therefore it must come primarily through rate increases, not a widening of the base of the tax.

Now, what does that mean, Mr. Speaker? Simply, that we have fair warning from this government right now, that a year or two years from now, the average taxpayer is going to be gouged with an increase to six or seven or eight per cent on the sales tax on an inequitable basis, instead of moving to get some equity, some progressivity into the sales tax base. I give you fair warning, Mr. Speaker, that this is an issue that we will come back to and fight.

In short, what we have is a white paper which is a blueprint for tax reform. But it has many deficiencies. The New Democratic Party is in favour of tax reform and we will fight for it, but we are also going to fight to make certain that some of those deficiencies are removed.

There are two other very great weaknesses, Mr. Speaker, in this white paper. The first one is that there is no solution at all to the crisis on the municipal front. And this really is incredible.

For ten years now the province of Ontario has become increasingly obsessed with the crisis on the municipal front, the crushing burden of property taxes. Yet, even in a blueprint for tax reform, what does the government have to offer? We will remove, they say, some more of the pressure when we have some revenues available. We have seen their reluctance to raise revenues in the areas which would make it equitable.

They are not going to reach 60 per cent of the cost of education until 1974. There is no rationalization of the grants structure, only some statement to the effect that there will be more unconditional grants so that the municipalities will be free to spend them as they see fit.

We in the New Democratic Party say this is not good enough, the government has not met one of the major needs in the province of Ontario—the crisis of the municipal front and real relief for the property tax.

We have pioneered in this Legislature the question of a municipal foundation programme which can and will do this. This is not a new concept. We already have it operating in the province of Ontario as far as education is concerned. It is in operation in the province of Nova Scotia. Why will not this government move to say to the people of the province of Ontario that they are going to remove the inequities between the tax capacity of varying municipalities, that they are going to assure a minimum level of services, and we are going to assure a tax burden that will be more or less equal across the province of Ontario based on the equalized assessment.

But there is no pattern. It is a vague kind of a programme even though we have lived so long with this kind of crisis. Combined with this, Mr. Speaker, is another point—the tendency of the government to move towards the growing paternalism in its whole attitude towards the municipalities.

The Provincial Treasurer at one stage in his budget warned that they were considering setting up a budget bureau to be watching like a hawk how each of the municipalities decides to spend its money.

We already have the Ontario Municipal Board, which supervises the municipalities with regard to capital expenditures. We now have the threat of a budget bureau which is going to second guess the municipal fathers who are elected to do a job on behalf of their people—second guess it on behalf of this government.

In short, Mr. Speaker, to put it in the vernacular, big daddy at Queen's Park is threatening to wield the big stick.

I listened with interest to a controller in the city of Hamilton on TV on Sunday, a man who is well known for his Conservative associations, say that he certainly did not want to see the OMB and its restrictions on municipalities at the capital level matched by this sort of gestapo—that was not his term—but this careful watching over and usurping of the rights of elected people at the local municipality.

A greater paternalism regrettably, Mr. Speaker, is coming at a time when the municipalities in the province of Ontario are growing up in the sense that we are moving towards regional government. We will have larger units that are more viable economically to assume their responsibilities and to fulfil the local autonomy which had to be taken over by Queen's Park, in many instances because the local municipalities simply could not do a job. Now they are growing up, but they are growing up under the threat of living under the paternalism of Queen's Park.

This government decries Ottawa for its attitude of no consultation, of not sharing the tax burden fairly, and at the very same time they are decrying that attitude with regard to Ottawa they are exercising it with regard to the municipalities in the province of Ontario.

Do you really mean it? Why do you not practise what you preach? Why is there not consultation with the municipalities? This government decries the federal government pre-empting tax fields, like the social development tax, but what does this government do in this Budget, Mr. Speaker? They have pre-empted the motel and the hotel tax field after the city of Toronto has been trying to expand its inflexible and narrow tax base by seeking that tax for quite some years. Why do they not practise what they are preaching?

This government, for example, says nothing about its willingness to share that basically equitable tax, the income tax, with the municipalities, even though the Smith committee indicated that this should be considered in the light of the inequity of property taxes. But there is no suggestion that they are going to do it. In short, Mr. Speaker, this government is not willing to grapple with the problem and solve it, even though they are presenting blueprints which the people are kidded into believing are going to provide the real answers. They are an illusion, not reality.

We have before us a Liberal amendment. I would like to have seen it stronger. But it is an expression of opposition to what this government has done and therefore we are going to support it, with the exception of the last clause which is an elaboration of this propaganda slogan about "fiscal separatism". We cannot live with that; I indicated my views earlier.

May I have one further word of explanation, Mr. Speaker? We in this House live with an archaic set of rules which, for reasons that completely mystify me, permit a sub-amendment to the main amendment on the Throne Speech but deny it on the Budget, the other omnibus debate. Why? I defy anybody to give any rational explanation.

I think it is time, perhaps with your intervention, Mr. Speaker, that the unanimous approval of the House should supersede our archaic rules. I think I am quoting one of your earlier observations when I say it is time that we break out of this archaic strait-jacket. Therefore, I want to move a sub-amendment, seconded by the hon. member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick), that the amendment be amended by eliminating section 6, and by substituting for it the following:

This House regrets that the government has, by its misguided schedule of cut-backs, its refusal to call upon additional and more progressive revenue sources, its delay and superficiality in implementing genuine tax reforms, and its paternalistic attitude to the municipalities, failed in its prime obligation to minimize the tax burden upon the ordinary citizen of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: While I appreciate the submission made by the hon. member for York South, the rules of the House do not allow at this time a second amendment to this particular amendment by the official Opposition. If there is any expression of opinion by any other party of the House, I would be glad to receive it. Otherwise, the motion is out of order and, of course, will not be received or put to the House.

Mr. Reilly moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: At the moment our guests in the galleries are: In the west gallery, from Leaside high school, and in both galleries from Moorefield Public School. Earlier this afternoon we had—and perhaps still have in the Speaker's gallery—students from Durham College of Applied Arts and Technology, Oshawa; and in the east gallery, students from Frank Oke Vocational School, Toronto, and in the west gallery students from John C. Althouse Public School, Islington.

Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present to the House the following reports:

The annual report for 1968 of the Centennial Centre of Science and Technology.

The public service superannuation fund auditor's report for the year ended March 31, 1968.

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence from the standing private bills committee, presented the committee's ninth report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee begs to report the following bills without amendment:

Bill Pr5, An Act respecting the town of Burlington.

Bill Pr29, An Act respecting the city of Peterborough.

Bill Pr34, An Act respecting the town of Mississauga.

Your committee begs to report the following bill with certain amendments:

Bill Pr23, An Act respecting Maimonides Schools for Jewish Studies.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE INSURANCE ACT

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Insurance Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to reduce the cost of life insurance by removing the prohibition in Ontario law which prevents an insurance agent from advising a holder of insurance as to methods to reduce his cost by changing the insurance.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Premier now that the Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) has returned from Ottawa.

Can the Prime Minister report on the continuing discussion with the government of Canada regarding Medicare?

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I have no reports to make to the House other than that some discussions have taken place.

Mr. Nixon: I would like to ask the Attorney General if he can tell the House how many charges have been laid and how many charges are pending in Ontario with regard to delinquency in the payment of the property tax rebate?

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot. I do not have that information.

Mr. Nixon: I wonder if there is any way that it can be gathered. It will surely be of some interest in the next few weeks and we would like to know just how the statute has been received across the province.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I may be able to get some information. We do not ordinarily get the statistic of charges laid. Perhaps we can get something close to the figure, but I do not have that information.

Mr. Nixon: Perhaps the information might be available more conveniently through The Department of Municipal Affairs.

I have another question of the Attorney General, Mr. Speaker: Can the Minister explain the delay in the investigation and laying of charges against the provincial returning officers, which was announced yesterday?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, there was no delay in this investigation. I wish to emphasize that, but I would not do the leader of the Opposition the disservice of taking any implication from his question because I fully understand that he is not aware of the background of this matter.

I may tell him, however, that the nature of the offences was financial. The investigation necessarily involved a review of the audits in the various offices with a subsequent police investigation of the books and interviews with the individual witnesses, of which there were a large number. This was all initiated immediately it came to our attention. The investigation was by its nature very time-consuming but I reiterate, there was no delay either in the investigation, in its inception, the way it was carried on or the laying of the charges after it was completed.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Dipping more deeply into the pork barrel.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. leader of the Opposition has a question from the other day of the Minister of Education, and the hon. member for Peterborough has a similar question which perhaps he would place after the leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Nixon: Oh yes, Mr. Speaker, that has been pending for two or three days.

Does the Minister intend to make a statement to the House concerning his appointment of a committee on the aims, objectives and needs of post-secondary education in Ontario? It was rather fully reported in the Globe and Mail some days ago.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister enlarge on the report in this morning's Globe and Mail that he has decided to appoint a committee to study post-secondary education? What groups will be represented on the committee? Will Doctor Wright be the chairman? Why is the committee using the contracting out system of examining the educational system and when can a report be expected?

Hon. W. G. Davis (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, I recall some few weeks ago I indicated to the member for Peterborough, and perhaps the leader of the Opposition, that it was our intention to move ahead with this study commission. There had been certain discussions leading up to the decision as to just how it would function and the terms of reference. I would say that the story that appeared in one of Toronto's leading metropolitan papers a few days ago, was somewhat speculative in nature. I shall be making a statement on this in the very near future.

Mr. Nixon: Was it incorrect or just speculative?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would say that like a lot of speculative stories there is a certain germ of some things that may happen and some things that may not happen.

Mr. Pitman: May I ask a supplementary question?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peterborough.

Mr. Pitman: If it is intended Dr. Wright should be the chairman of this committee, I am wondering whether his name has been placed either before the committee of the presidents or the Ontario council of university faculty associations?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think really this is a matter that I shall deal with when I make some further statement with respect to the proposed commission.

Mr. Nixon: We will watch the papers.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Humber has a question of the Prime Minister.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the hon. Prime Minister.

How many students were deprived—

Mr. Speaker: Sorry, how many Ontario students.

Mr. Ben: Sorry, how many Ontario students were deprived of summer employment by foreign students on tobacco farms in the province?

Secondly, what action is being taken to assure Ontario students that they will receive job priority in the tobacco industry this summer?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I would say that it is impossible to state how many Ontario students were deprived of summer employment by foreign students on tobacco farms in the province. I really do not know whether there were any.

The problem, of course, with this type of summer employment is that it is not really very popular with our Ontario students and we have had a great deal of trouble making sure that the farmers who want this labour have people there.

I have some statistics here that might help you understand. There were requests filed with The Department of Agriculture for 2,500 students from foreign countries. The Department of Agriculture only enrolled 1,100, so the difference would be 1,400 jobs that would be available for Ontario students. On the broad picture, we think that everyone who was prepared to accept this work was given an opportunity to do so.

The problem with this is that the farmer has a great interest in seeing that his crops are harvested, and this is the responsibility of The Department of Agriculture and Food. The Minister of Agriculture and Food has to ensure that the labour is there.

As I say, it is not the type of work that our students particularly like, and thus you cannot always depend upon an indication that people want jobs when the jobs are available. Very often the people are not there.

I do not think we need be unduly concerned about the fact that jobs were taken from Ontario students under this programme. I would say in connection with the whole question of student employment—and I have made several comments about this in the House in the last few weeks—I would hope within a relatively short time to be able to lay before the House just exactly what we are proposing to do.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, will the Prime Minister accept a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Yes.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, what prompted this question was the remark that was in the paper and which the Prime Minister repeated. Namely, that the Canadian students or Ontario students are not inclined towards this type of work.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Right.

Mr. Ben: I would ask, Mr. Speaker, where does the Prime Minister get his information that would bring him to this conclusion? It surely is not a bed of roses picking tobacco but—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order! The hon. member has asked his question. Now it is up to the Prime Minister to reply.

Mr. Ben: There is another part of the question. Surely the Prime Minister is not intimating that Ontario students no longer have the backbone for picking tobacco—

Mr. Speaker: Order! That is not appropriate.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I think we can quite easily establish the fact that this is not number-one priority work for students. In other words, if they can get something else this is going to be last on the list as far as they are concerned. That is one element in this matter. The other thing is, we must take into consideration the needs of the farmer, because he must have an assured supply of labour. Otherwise this whole thing can be completely disastrous as far as he is concerned, because the crops when matured do not sit in the field waiting for somebody to pick them.

This is the problem and I cannot give any specific statistics, but I think the experience the Minister of Agriculture and Food has had and the farming industry itself has had, indicates that this is not number-one priority work. So that if there is a chance of doing something else this work does not get done, and we are attempting to ensure that the farmer has the labour he needs when he needs it.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Premier of Ontario.

Will the Premier give any assurance that a grant for a rest home in Essex county will be given consideration by the Treasury Board?

Does the Premier not believe that a rest home, urgently needed, should have priority over a $13 million pavilion at the Canadian National Exhibition grounds on Lake Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that I am being put in the position of "when I stopped beating my wife" in the latter part of that question. I would simply say that this government has a lot of projects covering practically every facet of human activity. As far as the rest home in Essex county is concerned, it was in January of this year, I believe, they made application. It was pointed out to them at the time that statistically they have 26 beds per 1,000 of population 60 years of age or over and the provincial average is 27. Therefore, it was felt that this project would not be given immediate approval.

You ask if it will be reconsidered by Treasury Board. In actual fact, this decision is not made by Treasury Board. It is made by those people who are concerned with provision of this type of help to older people and we have to have some standards by which we approve these projects. Otherwise we would probably get into severe imbalance in the provision of these facilities in different parts of the province.

In regard to the latter part of the question, I would like to make it clear that when this figure of $12 or $13 million is used, it refers to the total cost of the project as we presented it. This will not all come out of this year's budget. I believe the current budget has an amount of about $1 million in it for this project, and it probably will be spread over at least three fiscal years. In other words, the $13 million will not be raised in one fiscal year. It will be spread over a period of time.

We think it is a perfectly proper project, otherwise we would not have embarked upon it. I suppose, really, to follow the reasoning contained in this question, we would have some really odd comparisons made in how we might choose to spend the funds. As I say, we have a wide range of activities and projects in the government that we must support and we think that this one is completely justified. We do not think that this project will in any way endanger the ultimate approval of a rest home in Essex county or, indeed, in any other part of the province.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park has a question of the Prime Minister?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: The implication was politics of the worst kind.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): What! Politics in this Chamber? You would not ask us to play that?

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I am just recognizing it, I am not commenting.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, well, thank you.

Mr. Shulman: I have a question of the Prime Minister in several parts.

Were Dr. J. K. Reynolds, chief executive officer in the Prime Minister's office, and members of his family occupying the guest house at Upper Canada Village during the May 18, 1968, holiday weekend?

Did they have a supply of firecrackers and detonate them up against the guest house?

Was this the cause of the fire in those premises?

What was the cost of repairing the buildings, and what amount was received, if any, from the insurance coverage?

Did the fire marshal, or his officials, make an inspection of the premises and the damage?

Did the fire marshal or his officials prepare a report subsequently?

Was it sent to the commission?

Was general manager Peacock requested or persuaded by Dr. J. K. Reynolds to cover up this report?

Why did the general manager or other officials withhold such report from members of the St. Lawrence Parks Commission until forced to produce it by demand of the commission members?

Will the Prime Minister table this report?

If not, why?

Will the Prime Minister inform the House fully of all the circumstances, and explain why the incident is not mentioned, for the information of the Assembly, in the current annual report of the commission for the year ending December 31, 1968?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, it does seem to me that this is a proper question to be placed on the order paper and I ask that it be placed there and it will be answered in due course.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I understand the Prime Minister's request.

I have a question for the Provincial Secretary.

Mr. Speaker: We are proceeding by Ministers. The hon. member has a question of the Minister of Health which he might now place.

Mr. Shulman: Yes, I have a question of the Minister of Health, Mr. Speaker. It is all related to one matter and it is in four parts:

How much is Mr. Joseph Sedgwick being paid by The Department of Health to act as consultant in the Brockville inquiry?

Why did the department not use one of the government's own lawyers?

Why did the department feel the necessity to have a lawyer representing it in hearings before the health committee?

Does the Minister not have confidence in the integrity of the committee?

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Joseph Sedgwick's bill will no doubt be rendered when he has performed the service. I believe those matters are all discussed, if not arranged—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: I gather the hon. Minister will be pleased to proceed with his answer if he is given the courtesy of a hearing.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, matters of this kind, as I understand it, are arranged with The Attorney General's Department. The department could not use one of our own solicitors because one of the two unfortunately is ill in hospital and our remaining solicitor is already overworked. We asked the lawyer to hold a watching brief in order that we would have an objective overall view.

The fourth part of the hon. member's question, sir, does not merit a reply.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, on a point of clarification—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member has no right to ask a point of clarification on a question which he has not asked. The hon. member for High Park has the floor. Has he a supplementary question?

Well, if the hon. member wishes to raise a point of order, he may, but he said a point of clarification.

Mr. Trotter: It is a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Minister said Mr. Sedgwick had a watching brief, and we were informed at the last meeting that Mr. Sedgwick wants to cross-examine, which is more than a watching brief.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: He is a doctor. He does not understand legality.

Mr. Lewis: He understands more about the law than about medicine.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member for High Park has no more questions of this Minister, I believe?

Mr. Shulman: I was about to ask if the Minister would accept a supplementary question on the first part of my question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member wishes to ask a supplementary question with respect to the Minister's answer to the first part of his question. The Minister says he would hear it.

Mr. Shulman: Am I to understand from the answer, Mr. Speaker, that Mr. Sedgwick has been hired without knowing what his fee is going to be?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I answered that question, I think, quite clearly.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Attorney General has a point of order?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am not certain it is a point of order. Perhaps it is. My colleague in his answer stated that the Attorney General had been consulted about the supplying of counsel to The Department of Health. I think this is a part of the answer, and I would simply state that the reason that we did not supply counsel from The Attorney General's Department in this particular case was that a civil servant in the employ of The Department of Health was being, we expected, questioned before the committee.

We felt that we might appear to be defending the department if we supplied our counsel, and we felt it wise not to have even that suggestion or appearance by providing counsel from The Department of the Attorney General.

Mr. Shulman: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the Attorney General is not aware that his department has supplied counsel to the committee and apparently in that case they felt it would be quite impartial.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is an entirely different matter. We certainly wish to supply counsel to the committee so that it might have advice and counsel in questioning. We did not wish to have the appearance even of defending a colleague's department.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member any further supplementary question? The hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside has a question of the Minister of Health?

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside): In the new hydro generating station at Court-right, the solid particles prevented from escaping as air pollutants will be dumped eventually into a large, dry lagoon. What measures are being taken to prevent these pollutants from being blown by the wind over the surrounding area?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, the dry ash will be dumped into the lagoon in wet condition and will be kept wet. When the lagoon is filled it will be sodded and a new lagoon started.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville has a question of the Minister of Transport?

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, the question of the Minister of Transport reads as follows:

Why will the Minister's department not honour temporary licence suspensions as ordered by judges in various courts in the province and upheld by Mr. Justice W. J. Henderson of the Ontario Supreme Court on February 8?

Under what authority is Mr. R. H. Humphries, registrar of motor vehicles, ignoring The Criminal Code in this matter?

Hon. I. Haskett (Minister of Transport): The Highway Traffic Act, in sections 20, 21, 21b and 21c, provides for mandatory driver licence suspensions in the event of convictions under The Criminal Code for criminal negligence, driving while intoxicated, driving while ability impaired, dangerous driving, failure to stop at the scene of an accident and driving while disqualified, respectively. Under The Criminal Code, the court has authority to prohibit a person from driving a motor vehicle during any period not exceeding three years. Under the criminal code, the court has no authority to suspend a driver's licence. The authority to suspend a driver's licence is under The Highway Traffic Act. The two authorities are separate and stand alone.

In the specific case referred to, the mandatory licence suspension was applied according to the law as contained in section 21 of The Highway Traffic Act. It is true that Mr. Justice Henderson upheld the decision of the provincial judge as regards the criminal code prohibition, however, I understand he made no finding respecting the validity of the mandatory licence suspension applied under The Highway Traffic Act.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, if I may ask a supplementary question of the Minister. On November 21 I had asked the following question:

Will the Minister amend The Highway Traffic Act to permit a wider use of the discretionary powers as a result of the question of the legality of the wise decision of magistrate Joseph P. McMann in giving an intermittent licence suspension to a man who pleaded guilty to an impaired driving charge.

At that time the hon. Minister mentioned that this involved an offence under The Criminal Code of Canada, section 223, and not The Highway Traffic Act.

Which is the right answer, Mr. Speaker? May I have an answer, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister, I presume from his silence, feels that both questions asked by the hon. member have been properly answered by him. The member for Parkdale has a question of the Minister of Tourism and Information?

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Speaker, the question is for the Minister of Tourism and Information. Can the Minister indicate if there is any truth to the Canadian Press wire story of March 10 that:

The Ontario government's decision to levy a five per cent tax on hotel accommodations, and a ten per cent charge on meals and liquor is part of a plan to put Ontario's and Quebec's tourism industries on a closer footing, Gabriel Loubier, Quebec's Minister of Tourism, Fish and Game, said today.

If so, is involvement by Ontario in such a plan not disadvantageous to our tourist business, that is, would it not make us less competitive?

The second part, Mr. Speaker. Is the story correct when it states:

He, (Mr. Loubier) said he met with James Auld, Ontario's Minister of Tourism, last November and received assurances that Ontario would adopt a policy of fair play and loyal competition.

If so, would the Minister comment on what is meant by this statement?

Hon. J. A. C. Auld (Minister of Tourism and Information): Mr. Speaker, I cannot comment on the first part of the story because I have not seen what Mr. Loubier said, although I have written asking for information on this. I would just say that it is correct that I and some of the officials of my department met with Mr. Loubier and some of his officials in November. We discussed a number of things, including the joint promotional programmes which Ontario and Quebec and, in some cases, the Canadian government travel bureau have.

He spoke to me about the unfavourable comments he was receiving, in Quebec from his hotel industry about their tax. I said to him that I hoped we would not have one, but I was not as optimistic last November that we would not have one as I had been a couple of years before.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. Minister has not checked with Mr. Loubier as to what he said when he promised the House, through you, Mr. Speaker, that after seeing what Mr. Loubier did say that he would comment, then the inference—as I point out, Mr. Speaker—in this report is that there appears to have been a deal.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member would let it rest as a question, which is what it is at this time.

Mr. Trotter: I want to know if it is going to be answered, I think this is extremely serious, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has asked if the hon. Minister would do so, and we will wait for the hon. Minister's answer.

Mr. Trotter: I might ask, as a supplementary, the Minister should know whether or not he made a deal with the Minister of Tourism in Quebec?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is not asking a question he is making a comment.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I must comment on that. That is totally ridiculous. The hon. member knows that the Treasurer sets the Budget policy of this province. I make deals with no one in any field other than tourist promotion, as I have mentioned.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peterborough has a question from the other day to the Minister of University Affairs, and one to the Minister of Education. He might place them now.

Mr. Pitman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the hon. Minister—will the Minister investigate the circumstances of the firing of Mrs. Fiona Nelson by the Toronto Board of Education?

In view of the board chairman's statement that if her principal had not hired her late in the season, she would have been rejected, would the Minister investigate the hiring practices of this board?

Hon. Mr. Davis: We had a letter from Mrs. Nelson, I believe it arrived on Friday, requesting a board of reference. There are some uncertainties relating to the facts of the situation which we have not, as yet, been able to determine. When we have made this determination, I will be in a position then to decide whether, in fact, a board of reference may be granted.

Mr. Pitman: The Minister did not say whether he has found out if the Toronto board has complied with section 17 of The Schools Administration Act, indicating to Mrs. Nelson exactly what her terms of contract were last spring? This would, I think, refer to whether she would get a board of reference or not.

Hon. Mr. Davis: As I say, there are certain facts that are not yet firmly established and which we are endeavouring to establish before I can make this determination.

Mr. Pitman: I wonder if the Minister would comment on the second question. Is it acceptable to The Department of Education that a board should reject a teacher because of what comments she has made about a board while a private citizen? Is this acceptable to the Minister of Education as a hiring practice in the jurisdiction of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I do not think it really relates to a hiring practice. I do not think any of us in this House object to the free expression of opinion on various situations. As I say, the question of whether a board of reference is granted does not relate to that particular situation; it relates, I think, as to whether she may or may not be on a probationary contract. This is what we are endeavouring to determine at this point.

Mr. Pitman: My second question, Mr. Speaker, is somewhat hoary with age, I am afraid. Would the Minister clarify newspaper remarks that he will call in the police if students create disturbances in any Ontario university? What will be the responsibilities of (a) the university authorities; (b) the Minister, (c) the Attorney General's office in making this decision. What would the Minister describe as constituting disorder?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure, really, what paper or what news report the hon. member for Peterborough is referring to. I did see one or two reports myself and, in that I had not made any statement or any speech on the subject for at least a few days, the only thought that came to me was that perhaps this originated with a certain radio programme that was aired about a week ago last Sunday. I asked for some indication as to what in fact was on the tape as to what I did say and—as I read the information here—one of the discussants, if this is the term that can be used. I would point out that it was not the one who convinced me that shoes were a necessity in this particular jurisdiction with its particular climate. This referred to, I think, a question placed by one of the people on this panel with respect to Sir George Williams.

One panelist said, "What measures is the province or your department taking to prevent it happening, if it did get started here?"

This was the same type of situation they were referring to as at Sir George Williams. I believe that I said (and I always find when I read answers or hear tapes that sound all right when you are saying these things, the number of dangling participles and what not one discovers in what one said), and I—

Mr. MacDonald: The Minister gets worried too, eh?

Hon. Mr. Davis: And I said it depends on the type of situation. I said at Windsor—because this was shortly after Windsor—and I have said on several occasions before, that neither government, nor university nor the public can tolerate destruction or violence of this kind. We have to resort to the laws and those who enforce them, and it was my own personal point of view that if this situation—relating it to something comparable to Sir George Williams—did occur in this province, that this would be the reaction to that type of situation.

There was no reference to my calling in police because I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that I have the statutory authority to do so. There was no reference to the administration. And while the Attorney General does a very excellent job, in my view, in maintaining law and order in this province, there was no reference to the Attorney General in this particular situation, either.

Really, it was no different from what I said at the University of Windsor and, I think, on two or three other occasions over the past six or eight months. But it became somewhat loosely translated, I guess, as it appeared in the press.

Mr. Pitman: I am very pleased, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister has allayed some of the fears of students in the province. My supplementary question would have been simply, would he regard this order as a peaceful demonstration in view of the fact that he said destruction, I think. I suspect that that question is perhaps not—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I used the term destruction; I used the term violence; and I think we all understand what that means. The Minister has been involved in many peaceful demonstrations which have become, to a degree, part of our way of life. I do not think that these will disappear from the scene, whether they are university students, or high school students, or any other segments of the public. I said to a group of students, the other day, that in educational matters the only person I find now who cannot demonstrate in these situations or protests, probably is the Minister himself.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Education. When will the new grant regulations be available for school boards in the province? The second is, does the Minister expect the per capita grant to be increased?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the grant regulations are very complicated; they do not relate specifically to per capita grants per se. I hope that the grant regulations will be available to the board very shortly, and at this time I shall endeavour to make some explanation to the members because there will be some alterations.

However, I have also said to the trustees and to the directors' association that they should look at their budgets very carefully this year, that they can anticipate that the amount of support will not be significantly increased and that they should budget accordingly.

Mr. B. Newman: Would the Minister expand on what he refers to as shortly?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Shortly, Mr. Speaker, I would think in this instance means within the next six or seven days, perhaps.

Mr. B. Newman: May I ask of the Minister a supplementary question? Does the hon. Minister recognize the additional cost to many municipalities in the province as a result of the delay in receiving the new grant regulations?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, after a very careful check with some areas that have raised this point, we question whether there is any real cost increase as far as the municipalities are concerned.

Mr. B. Newman: May I ask, as a supplementary, Mr. Speaker, is the Minister prepared to make a grant equivalent to the additional cost to those municipalities that may be involved in this additional cost?

Hon. Mr. Davis: No.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough East has a question of this Minister from the other day and one today.

Mr. T. Reid: (Scarborough East): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The first question to the Minister of Education is: What steps are being taken immediately by the Minister of Education to update the curriculum in grades 7 and 8 in connection with the study of the uses and abuses of tobacco, resulting from new evidence supplied by the Donwood Foundation that 90 per cent of people using tobacco become hooked?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I have not really seen the new evidence supplied by the Donwood Foundation but I would say that as perhaps the hon. member well knows, in the health education aspect in the intermediate division, grades 7, 8, 9 and 10, there are curriculum materials and so on available and suggestions to the teachers regarding all aspects of healthful living, including the hazards of smoking. In fact, we have introduced this in grades 4, 5 and 6.

We point out the wisdom of introducing this matter to children during these early years of their lives as the needs are determined by the individual teacher. This is already built into the curriculum, Mr. Speaker, at the present time. Of course, as more up-to-date information becomes available, whether it is from the Donwood Foundation or any other research group, that is statistically correct and is helpful in these situations through the programme consultants. This further information is also made available to the boards throughout the province.

Mr. T. Reid: May I ask the Minister a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker?

Is the Minister aware that in the curriculum outline of his department for grade 9 that the discussion of smoking comes under loss of appetite?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am quite aware of it because I think it is not unrelated to it. The fact is that it is mentioned and it is there to be covered.

Mr. T. Reid: I take it that is one of the hazards of smoking then?

Hon. Mr. Davis: There are some who would say this.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I would request the Minister to watch "News Magazine" this evening and comment on the views expressed there.

The second question is: In view of the statement in the Globe and Mail of March 6 that a grade 2 teacher in a Toronto school has to leave her job when she is four months pregnant, what steps if any is the Minister going to take to protect the rights of women in the teaching profession?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, there is protection already, as perhaps the hon. member is fully aware, in the legislation under Section 35: "a board may provide for maternity leave for a teacher not exceeding two years for each pregnancy and specify when such leave shall be taken."

This change took place, Mr. Speaker, I believe in 1965 or 1966. It was done after very thorough study of other jurisdictions, including other provinces, as to what the policies would be there, because I think there are two rights here that are involved. There is obviously the right of the teacher but there is also, I guess, the concern that one must have with the new arrival within the family and so it is felt that providing for the maternity leave of two years, this would supply or provide ample opportunity for the new mother to be with the child and still go back if she so desired into the teaching profession.

There has been some difficulty, of course, determining as to what should be the point of departure. I am no expert in this field, Mr. Speaker, however, I think there is some sense in trying to have the date coincide, say, with the end of a particular term, that is, Christmas or the mid-term break we are coming to, or, of course, the end of June.

I think a number of boards endeavour to do this. There are some boards which are now discussing—and it is only, I gather, in the discussion stage, I am not fully conversant with this—that perhaps one way of arriving at this would be through the consultation of the physician of the individual teacher perhaps in conjunction with the physician of the board as to what would be an adequate or a reasonable date for determination of when the leave of absence should take place.

Mr. T. Reid: Would I be correct in deducing from the Minister's remarks that he personally does not believe it is bad for young children to see a pregnant woman teaching in a school?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am not going to get involved on this discussion. I think that one anticipates that we all exercise, and hopefully the member himself, some degree of reasonableness in all these situations, and to set down any hard and fast rule to me of course is not really too worthwhile.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Lakeshore.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): A question of the Minister of Education:

Is the Minister aware that Peter K., a student at Welland Eastdale Secondary School, has been expelled, as he claims without just cause, and according to The Schools Administration Act without redress or appeal?

Will the Minister consider intervening on behalf of Peter K.?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, as with all these questions that relate to students and teachers, my information, of course, must come from sources that I cannot specify being within the department, so I must pass on information that I have available to me.

I understand that the student in question, Peter K., was in fact suspended last October by the principal under the authority of The Schools Administration Act. I also understand that suspension would have been lifted except there was no, shall we say, acceptance by the student as to the rules governing the particular school.

In February, I understand this young man again requested, or at least requested perhaps the first time, I am not sure, the suspension be terminated and the new Welland county board of education reviewed the request and informed him in a letter dated February 21 that the suspension would be continued, but pointed out in this reply to him that under the Act the parents do have the right to appeal the suspension.

I would assume the board is now awaiting some reaction from the parents of this young man as to whether they intend to appeal the suspension.

Mr. Lewis: All the facts are wrong on that case.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I just say I am giving the information available to me.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Lawlor: May I ask a supplementary question?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member for Lakeshore has a supplementary question.

Mr. Lawlor: If the parents, Mr. Speaker, are unwilling to initiate an appeal, and the lad himself is interested in having his case reviewed, then is there any procedure whereby he can have it so reviewed?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I would assume that if the parents do not wish to enter an appeal upon the suspension, that the student can once again take this matter up with the principal of the school.

Mr. Lewis: The Minister had better investigate the principal.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park has a question of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management, from yesterday.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management: In view of the International Joint Commission's statement last week that the situation in the St. Marys River between Lakes Huron and Superior was:

—unsatisfactory because of the discharge of waste materials (particularly oils, phenols, wood chips and iron) from two large Canadian industries, namely, the Algoma Steel Corporation, Limited, and Abitibi Paper Limited —does the government intend to take any action to insure speedy compliance on the part of these two companies with the IJC objectives?

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Mr. Speaker, the answer is "yes". Staged programmes already under way will be followed closely to see that they are carried out on schedule.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, will the Minister allow a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Yes.

Mr. Shulman: What is the schedule?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I cannot give the hon. member the schedule, but it is a schedule agreed upon by the industries and the Ontario Water Resources Commission. I could get the member that schedule if he would like it.

Mr. Shulman: Yes, please.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside has a question of this Minister, transferred from the Minister of Health.

Mr. Burr: A question of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management:

What increase in the temperature of the St. Clair River will result from the reported 500,000 gallons per second drawn out of and returned to the river for cooling purposes at the new generating station at Courtright near Sarnia?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, the circulating water system for Lambton generating station, when completed and operating at full capacity, will circulate approximately 8,900 imperial gallons per second, not 500,000 gallons per second as stated in the question.

It is estimated that the overall effect of that discharge of warm water to the river will not exceed one-quarter of one degree Fahrenheit temperature rise for the normal river flow.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Parkdale has a question of the Minister of Trade and Development.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Speaker, my question is as follows:

Why did the Minister ignore the directors of the Canadian National Exhibition, the council of the city of Toronto, the government of Metropolitan Toronto, the Toronto harbour commissioners and the federal government with respect to the Ontario government's plan for the construction of a proposed $13 million pavilion on the Canadian National Exhibition grounds?

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): Well, Mr. Speaker, I am glad the hon. member asked this question. It will give me an opportunity to clear up perhaps the misunderstanding that appeared in the press this morning.

I would just like to say that the department has worked in close consultation with the directors of the Canadian National Exhibition, the government of Metro Toronto, the city council and the Toronto Harbour Commissioners throughout this project.

1. In March of 1968 the director of special projects of the department, Mr. Ramsay, was appointed to the survey and planning committee of the CNE. This committee included Metro, city and CNE representatives.

2. On April 18, 1968, the department as a member of the technical sub-committee of the survey and planning committee of the CNE authorized a special Master Plan Study of the CNE. Metropolitan Toronto, the CNE and the harbour commission were members of this committee.

3. Meetings were held at intervals throughout the summer.

4. Prior to the Prime Minister's speech on August 16, 1968, discussions were held with the president and general manager of the CNE and the chairman of the survey and planning committee as to the province's intentions with respect to the CNE. At the same time assurances as to landfill were received from the general manager of the harbour commission, Mr. E. B. Griffiths.

5. The province hired architects and designers on September 24, 1968 to carry out the project. Thus for approximately six months before it had even hired its architects and designers, the province had worked closely with the CNE, the harbour commission and Metro on the development of its project.

6. Minutes of meeting of survey and planning committee held on Wednesday, October 2, 1968, in the Queen Elizabeth Building, Exhibition Park, Toronto, show that among those present were the chairman and 14 other people including myself and Mr. Ramsay, and I will not read their names. I quote from the minutes:

The chairman then invited the hon. Stanley Randall to speak on behalf of the province of Ontario. Mr. Randall explained in detail the growing interest the province has in the Canadian National Exhibition and its future, and outlined plans that are now being formulated and which include special land fill and the new Ontario government building on this land. Mr. Randall said it is hoped this will be ready for opening in 1971.

He went on to say that before doing this, however, it was necessary to have assurance from everyone that the government is on the right track, and this is being included in the development plans of the Canadian National Exhibition. Referring to the new land fill Mr. Randall stressed the fact that the bottom of the lake belongs to the provincial government and therefore any land fill which goes into the lake becomes the property of the provincial government.

Those are the end of the minutes.

Also on October 2, 1968, Mr. G. H. Sheppard, Mr. L. C. Powell, Dr. J. K. Reynolds, and the hon. S. J. Randall met to discuss plans for the Ontario Pavilion at the CNE with the Prime Minister.

7. Contact report:

Time: 9.30 a.m. Wednesday, November 27, 1968.

Location: Committee Room No. 3 City Hall.

Present: Metro, T. Thompson, chairman; W. Wronski. Province, J. W. Ramsay, T. Foster. Harbour Commission, J. Jones, L. Marse. CNE, L. C. Powell. CNR, R. V. Doty. City of Toronto, R. Spaxman (observer).

Discussed: 1. Conceptual form of Ontario Pavilion 71 as illustrated by photos of scale model. 2. General endorsement and enthusiasm of water-related structure and sheltering land-fill islands. 3. Mr. Jones, harbour commission saw no difficulty in relationship to Western Gap with (O.P. 71) land-fill, since it does not extend as far into the lake as the CNE master plan. 4. Meeting necessary with Craig, Zeidler & Strong and harbour commission to exchange technical information and establish: (a) configuration of islands; (b) type of land-fill material; (c) scheduling of land-fill; (d) cost.

8. Throughout January, February and March further meetings of a technical nature were held with the fire marshal and the harbour commission as required.

9. On January 31—I met with the mayor and the harbour commission. The mayor was shown details of Ontario's proposed CNE pavilion.

10. On February 25, I again met with mayor Dennison and controller Margaret Campbell and two city officials and I outlined the province's plans.

11. On February 26, the final approval to the project was given by Cabinet. So, I think we have met with the people that I think the hon. member is concerned with.

Mr. Trotter: The Minister was quoted in the paper as saying they had not met, that is where I got—

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, I think that the reporter asked me the question, "Are all the details of the building known to these people", and I said, "no", they would not be known to the people. The plan was known but not the details of the building until we had a chance to get it approved through Cabinet which was done a week ago last Wednesday.

Then we had all these officials you are referring to, in at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon, at a meeting before the publicity meeting last night with the journalists at 8.30.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Speaker, if the Minister would permit a supplementary question, I would like to know this. This $13 million building that is going up, is it part of an overall plan for the waterfront? Have you any definite plans for the waterfront?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, we have a number of plans that are not entirely related to the exhibition itself and the $13 million I might say is in connection with landfill and buildings. It includes the entire concept of the government complex building at the CNE and in conjunction with that will be other plans which I hope will be unveiled shortly with the harbour commission.

Mr. Trotter: Is there any indication that the federal government will pay part of this?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, I would hope so. I think the federal government was somewhat at sea as to what they could do at the CNE grounds until somebody came up with a plan and said this is what we are going to do, this is the price tag, will you make a contribution?

I think right now, the federal government have an opportunity to look at it and say, well if this is the way you are going, we can participate. I think after yesterday's presentation that the federal authorities will have a chance to examine it and decide where they can fit.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): My, the city of Toronto does well from the beneficence of the federal government.

Hon. Mr. Randall: How about Montreal?

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order! Both members are out of order.

The hon. member for High Park has a question from March 5 of the Attorney General which apparently has never been asked, number 830.

Mr. Shulman: Yes sir. Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Attorney General.

Whereas the application for legal aid on behalf of Douglas Woods, the man who was convicted of theft after being induced to commit a crime by two police officers, was refused on the grounds that there was no hope of winning an appeal, and whereas the appeal has now been won, would the Attorney General please explain the refusal this week to accept Mr. Woods' application for legal aid?

Part two. In the Attorney General's opinion, is this not a miscarriage of justice?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think the explanation perhaps, Mr. Speaker, is that under the present legislation a certificate could not be granted retroactively. That, generally, would be the explanation, but the committee, of course, acted I think in good faith in exercising its discretion. They have no right to grant a certificate retroactively under the present legislation.

As to whether this is a miscarriage of justice or not, I would say there is no question of that. The case was taken to appeal. Woods did have counsel. He did succeed. Conviction was set aside and, therefore, no miscarriage of justice.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, would the Attorney General accept a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Attorney General will argue with me inasmuch as the legal aid people made the mistake in the first place in believing the appeal could not succeed, and inasmuch as obviously they were wrong, we now know that, perhaps regardless of legislation, would you intervene to see that he has his legal costs paid because he has no money? Would you not agree with me it would be unfair for this man to remain in debt because the legal aid made an error?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I think I would agree with the hon. member to this extent that I think the situation is one which needs correction. I am looking at the legislation. I do not think I am going to intervene at all to see that this counsel is paid. I really have not any intention of that.

I might say that we have discussed this with the officials of the legal aid committee, and I recognize that in this legislation is a situation which probably should be corrected.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has a question of the Minister of Labour from yesterday.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Labour.

Has the Minister received a petition signed by the women cleaners of the Ontario Hospital at 999 Queen Street, West, Toronto, in which they complain that they are not receiving payment equal to that of the men doing the same work in that hospital? Has the Minister investigated this complaint and what action will be taken?

Hon. D. A. Bales (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I would advise the hon. member that I received a complaint from these persons. The matter is under investigation and will be dealt with under the provisions of The Employment Standards Act.

Mr. Shulman: Will the Minister let us know when the time comes, or when he has completed his investigation?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Yes, Mr. Speaker. When the matter is complete, I will see that the hon. member knows the results.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has a question of the Provincial Secretary.

Mr. Shulman: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I finally come to the end of the list. To the Provincial Secretary:

Will the Provincial Secretary please explain the 15 transfers of liquor licences by the Holiday Inn Hotels on December 1, 1968, from itself to itself?

Why were these licence transfers not reported until March 8, 1969?

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, I am advised that on December 1, 1968, Commonwealth Holiday Inns of Canada Limited notified the liquor licence board of the province that shares of its capital stock had been issued from its treasury, and this internal arrangement required them to notify the board. The 15 transfers listed in the Liquor Licence Board of Ontario licence activities for the week ending March 8, 1969, reflect this particular transaction.

The second question, Mr. Speaker, goes back to a related question the hon. member raised in the last session, or the first session of this Parliament. In the interval between notification of this fact in December and the actual approval of the transfers there had to be certain discussions and calculations of the necessary transfer fees. The completed transfer applications were considered by the Liquor Licence Board of Ontario on Thursday, March 6, 1969, at which time approval was given with an effective date of December 1, 1968.

Mr. Shulman: Will the Minister accept a supplementary question? Was the licence really transferred from itself to itself, or from somebody to somebody?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, if I could repeat it again, there was an internal matter with respect to the company, and the liquor licence board required this issuing of new capital to be brought to their attention. Therefore, although it was internal so far as the corporation was concerned, it did require technically a transfer from itself to itself, although the new self was a much more expanded self than prior.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, before the order number is called by the Prime Minister, I wonder if I could direct a question to him, sir.

In view of the relative success, Mr. Prime Minister, of the television coverage of the Legislature in the last week or ten days crowned, today, has the Prime Minister any further intentions about the use of television for this Legislature in the immediate future or in the long run?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I necessarily make the assumption that it was such a tremendous success, particularly today. I think what we need to do now is to assess what has happened. This was entered into in the nature of an experiment, and we now must assess whether it has been successful. I think this will require some discussion and consultation with the networks themselves.

It is a very expensive process, I am led to believe, not for us, but for those who are doing the televising and I am quite certain there will be all kinds of ideas advanced as to what might be done in the future as the result of this experiment on these three occasions. When we have these ideas I would be quite happy to discuss them with the members of the House in order that we might decide what, if any role, television has to play in the House in the future.

It is a little difficult at this stage of the game to say even whether the CBC or CTV will want to come in the chamber again.

Mr. MacDonald: Further to this point, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask the Prime Minister if he would convene rather quickly whatever he feels would be the appropriate body because I do not know whether the Prime Minister is aware that the Speaker has received a further request from CFTO. I am aware of it because a copy was sent to myself, to the leader of the Opposition, and I presume to the Prime Minister, requesting coverage of some particular debate.

In other words, there is a continuing interest in spite of, or because of, the coverage we have had so far, on the part of at least one network, therefore, some indication of a desire to continue. I would think some early resolving of this for our own guidance, as well as for theirs, would be useful.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The 19th order; House in committee of supply; Mr. A. E. Reuter in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF CORRECTIONAL SERVICES

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): The Department of Correctional Services' annual report for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1968 was tabled in the House on March 6. It outlines activities during the year and I hope hon. members have had an opportunity to study it in detail. The chart illustrating the facilities for adult female offenders is still at the printers and copies will be made available shortly. However, the programme for female offenders is explained in the annual report.

I shall not take up the time of the House to review the contents of the annual report. However, I should like to bring hon. members up to date on some of the developments within the department since the end of the previous session of this Legislature. I shall also outline highlights of new programmes which we are planning to initiate this year.

In my estimates' speech last year I indicated the department's intention to construct a new reception and assessment centre for juveniles. Hon. members will be pleased to learn that property has already been acquired in Oakville for this purpose, and the final stage of working drawings is nearing completion. This centre will serve all training schools in the province.

It will accommodate 120 boys and girls. Immediately following adjudication in Juvenile and Family Court, all youngsters will be placed in this unit, where a complete physical and personality appraisal will be carried out by a team of professional staff to determine which facility will best meet the individual child's needs.

Construction of a new training school for boys has begun on a site on the outskirts of Sudbury. This interdenominational school will accommodate 120 boys in a "cottage type" setting. The facilities will include academic and vocational classrooms and shops, a gymnasium and an interdenominational chapel. The school is the first to be established to serve northern Ontario and will facilitate visits by parents and relatives. This also will be the first interdenominational and bilingual training school in Ontario.

Plans are well under way for the introduction of pilot projects in family counselling at two residences previously used by staff members at Grand View School for girls at Galt and at White Oaks Village for boys near Hagersville. Renovations are being made to equip these homes for visits by parents of wards at these schools. These arrangements will permit the staff to provide more intensive and concentrated family counselling, with the aim of helping the family make appropriate adjustment prior to the ward's release on placement to his or her own home in the community.

During the past year, we have continued to provide learning and experience through new media. For example, under the direction of Mr. Lee Scott, the head teacher at Sprucedale School, Hagersville, the young students produced a film. The students performed as actors, writers, directors, editors, etc., and learned how to work individually and as a team.

This film provided a valuable learning experience for the boys. The film will be shown at the annual meeting of the Canadian Congress of Corrections to be held in June.

During the summer months last year, boys from Pine Ridge School, Bowmanville, and Sprucedale School, Hagersville, participated in a variation of the Outward Bound programme. On these outings, they learned the fundamentals of camping, canoeing, cliff rescue, water safety, practical survival techniques, boating, map reading, and so on.

Most important, the boys learned to meet many individual challenges and to work together as a team. The trips also strengthened rapport between the boys and staff who accompanied them. To quote from an essay by one boy:

I have gotten to know the staff better, and the boys too. Boys and staff I hated at the school are now my buddies or friends.

I have learned how to stick things out until you have finished them.

Another boy wrote:

I learned when you start something you don't stop until you are finished, or it will take a lot longer than you expected. There are other things like teamwork. I didn't think a bunch of training school boys could get together and do something worthwhile and have it turn out so well.

Over the past year, we have continued to develop a good working relationship with universities and the communities in which the schools are located. Universities have been a valuable source of part-time professional staff. In addition, students from universities and community colleges have received field training, and have carried on research in training schools.

Many of our staff are actively involved in community service clubs and other agencies. In this connection, I would pay special tribute to those service clubs and private organizations which have participated in our programmes and the involvement of our wards in community activities.

On July 1, 1968, The Correctional Services Act—which consolidated eighteen Acts into one—was proclaimed law. It was not possible to proclaim sections of the Act which require amendments to federal legislation. To this date, these federal amendments have not been made law, although sections 19 and 20 of our Act are provided for in Bill C-150 which is now before the House of Commons and has received second reading.

These sections provide for temporary absences from adult correctional institutions of selected inmates for medical or humanitarian reasons, or to assist in other ways in their rehabilitation. They will permit us to allow selected inmates to leave the institution during the day to work in the community, or to further their academic or vocational training.

While awaiting federal legislative action, we have proceeded to initiate a pilot programme in the belief that these changes will be made.

We have, through a somewhat cumbersome procedure, which I shall explain in a moment, arranged for a number of young men serving sentences in four different correctional institutions in the province to participate in academic programmes at community educational institutions. These young men have attended high school or university classes during the day and returned to the correctional facilities at night.

We have learned much from this experiment. Although it was necessary to remove one student from this programme, we are very pleased with the over-all results to date. Most of the young men have responded well. Not only have some of them achieved outstanding academic marks, but their general deportment has clearly indicated the great potential of this programme and its value as an additional tool in rehabilitation and as a new bridge for offenders back into the community.

As I mentioned earlier, a somewhat cumbersome procedure was required to put this pilot project into effect. It is necessary under present legislative powers for us to seek the approval of the national parole board in the case of each person considered for this programme. However, this red tape will be eliminated as soon as we are able to proclaim sections 19 and 20 of The Correctional Services Act. I would like to make it clear that the national parole board has been most co-operative in assisting us in this worthwhile venture. The Solicitor General, the Hon. George McIlraith, has also been most co-operative in meeting with us to discuss matters of mutual concern.

Mr. Chairman, within three months we shall introduce a new system of incentive allowances for inmates. At present, every reformatory inmate, regardless of length of sentence, receives a gratuity of $2 per month, up to a total of $20, upon release. This present system of gratuities has often been misinterpreted. A false impression has developed that this is the only form of assistance provided. In actual fact, the amount of the gratuity has very often been supplemented by additional funds and/or clothing, work tools, and so on, when such is recommended by our after-care personnel. This gratuity has not, in the past, been earned. It has simply been provided as a matter of course.

Last year, I indicated in this House that I felt a new system should be initiated and that studies were proceeding with this in mind. A decision has been made. The present system has outlived its usefulness: It will be abolished.

This new incentive allowance—

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): How much?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —which will be available to all prisoners in reformatories, training centres, clinics, forestry camps and industrial farms, will take the form of graded rates of allowance. A portion of each inmate's incentive allowance will be placed in a savings fund and this money will be turned over to him upon his release; the remainder will be available to him for purchase, within the institution, of tobacco, some confectionery items, and so on. At present, tobacco is issued to prisoners without charge. Non-smokers receive a sum of money in lieu of tobacco, which is placed in trust and turned over to them upon release.

The new weekly incentive allowance will approximate, and in some cases exceed, similar provisions in other jurisdictions. Experience in other jurisdictions has indicated that remuneration of the kind contemplated, no matter how small the amount, plus the privileges which go with it, have a significant meaning for the inmate, and that such incentives tend to improve inmate attitudes and the general over-all climate of institutions.

Mr. Shulman: How much is the remuneration?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If the hon. member will control the exuberance of his verbosity—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I learned that, incidentally, while sitting in this Chamber, from a gentleman by the name of Mitchell Hepburn.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): A great leader!

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In keeping with the department's statement of purpose, the main aim of the new system is to foster positive attitudes. Experience has proven that this approach to improving attitudes is psychologically sound and in the interests of rehabilitation.

I would make a clear distinction here—Mr. Chairman, I want to make this quite clear—between the incentive allowance which we plan to introduce and a system of payment of wages for work done by inmates. Industries operated within our correctional institutions do not produce goods for sale on the open market. In addition, some institutions are geared solely to providing academic and vocational training. There will be no attempt to equate the incentive allowance with wages in the outside community.

The details are being worked out and graded rates of allowance will be finalized shortly. The maximum rate will be approximately $5 a week. The decisions as to advancement from one grade to another will be the responsibility of a special rating board in each institution.

As mentioned previously, we have not sought to equate the incentive allowance with wages in the outside community. However, I look forward to the day when inmates in our correctional institutions will be performing full-time work and earning standard wages—paying for their maintenance in institutions, contributing to the support of their families, and paying taxes. This incentive allowance programme is a step towards that ultimate goal. Another step in this direction will be instituted with the introduction, on a broad basis, of the live-in, work-out programme provided for in sections 19 and 20 of our Correctional Services Act, which I mentioned earlier.

At present the major sanction against unacceptable behaviour in our adult institutions is the loss of good conduct remission. This means that many inmates serve longer periods of time than they might otherwise, with the attendant additional cost to the taxpayer.

While we do not intend to do away with forfeiture of good conduct remission for serious misbehaviour, we are convinced that the incentive allowance system will improve attitudes and reduce unacceptable behaviour. Fewer losses of good conduct remission would, of course, also reduce costs to the taxpayer.

Most important in human terms, this new programme will provide another positive rehabilitative tool in meeting our major objective of helping offenders to make a satisfactory adjustment in preparation for their return to the community.

Mr. Chairman, as hon. members know, the department last year assumed full responsibility for the operation of the 35 county and 2 city jails. Twenty-seven of these jails pre-date Confederation. A task force of senior officials is engaged in an on-going review of the needs of these jails and in recommending repairs and priorities for replacement. Immediate, necessary repairs and improvements are being made in most jails.

On October 29, 1968, I announced that planning would begin immediately for replacement of the Carleton county jail, Ottawa, with a modern regional detention centre. I also announced that, based on the recommendation of the task force, priority would be given in the replacement programme, to five other areas. These areas are: Halton and Peel, Hamilton, London, the Niagara region, and Metropolitan Toronto.

The assumption of responsibility for the operation of the jails has reduced the need to plan on the basis of strict county boundaries. Further study was required on the plans for the Quinte regional detention centre as a result of this change and because the original tenders on this centre were higher than had been anticipated.

The Department of Public Works has re-examined these plans and made some alterations, having regard for this department's plan to utilize the minimum security facilities in this institution for live-in, work-out programmes. It is expected that re-tendering for this unit will take place shortly.

In January of this year, I had the very great privilege and honour of participating with the Hon. Madame Georges P. Vanier and Prime Minister John Robarts, at the official opening of the new Vanier centre for women at Brampton.

This centre replaces the old Andrew Mercer reformatory on King Street in Toronto. The combination of the new facilities and the programme which employs the therapeutic community concept, places the Vanier centre for women in the forefront of correctional institutions and programmes in this field.

The most recent edition of the newsletter of the Elizabeth Fry Society contained this statement: "Indeed, the Vanier centre is a unique prison in Canada and probably in the world."

I know all hon. members will share my pride in the leadership Ontario is providing in this field.

Mr. Chairman, several other current developments are worthy of at least brief mention.

Drawings have been completed for a new gymnasium to serve the Burwash industrial farm and construction is expected to start this spring.

A new recreation building has been completed at the Monteith industrial farm and training centre. This project was built by training centre students and selected prisoners from the industrial farm at this complex and provided valuable on-the-job training and experience in bricklaying and carpentry for the young men who worked on this project.

Architects have been appointed for the Maplehurst complex, near Milton. The first projects to be built on this site will be a reformatory and a training centre. The Maplehurst detention centre, which will replace the local jails in Halton and Peel counties, will also eventually be built on this site. This reformatory will replace the existing reformatory at Mimico, which will, in turn, be converted into enlarged clinics for the treatment of alcoholics, drug addicts, and sexual deviates. The training centre will also help to further reduce the inmate population at Guelph reformatory. It will provide accommodation for 200 young offenders who require a more secure setting than the one now in existence at Brampton.

Recently, I informed the House about plans for use by Sheridan College students of the vocational welding shop facilities at the training centre at Brampton. We are very pleased that this multiple use of facilities could be arranged. We look forward to the day when we will be able to extend this usage and to make reciprocal arrangements for inmates of correctional institutions to attend classes in various community educational facilities throughout the province.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, the past year has been one of considerable progress and I look forward with optimism to the expansion and development of new and soundly based programmes to meet our responsibilities and the needs of the province in this complex and demanding field of human concern.

I cannot praise too highly the hard work, dedication and esprit de corps exhibited by personnel throughout our correctional system in their efforts towards achieving the department's goals. They work in a difficult field and under tremendous pressure and I want to publicly express to them my appreciation and that of my Deputy Minister.

Much credit is also due to the many community organizations and agencies and the committees associated with the department for their interest, co-operation and active participation in our work.

I hope that hon. members will concur with the programmes outlined and give their approval for the funds necessary to continue and expand our progressive work.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the short remarks that the Minister made with regard to his estimates and I will try to be brief as well.

The hon. Minister of Correctional Services is, I might say, one of the real backbones of his party and he religiously attends the sessions. On a number of occasions he has added to the crossfire with his witty remarks.

I am happy that the Minister has taken some of my recommendations of last year and has slowly integrated them into his overall plans.

Before I begin my prepared remarks I wish at this time to pay my regards to the fine work the officers and staff of the correctional services are doing. In my remarks I do not wish to convey to anyone that they are not doing their best, considering the facilities supplied.

Because the report of The Department of Correctional Services has been in my hands for only a few days, I am not going to attempt the detailed analysis of its contents that was the theme of my opening speech last year. Rather, I want to address myself to a few general introductory remarks and then proceed to a commentary on some aspects of addiction, which I have been concerned with to an increasing extent throughout the year, as I have seen society become ever more dependent on drugs of various kinds.

But first, briefly, to the report. In the area of staff training and development, the importance of which I emphasized last year in relation to society's goals, I am still disappointed at the low enrolment in relation to the total number of people employed by the department. I think that it is incumbent upon the Minister, perhaps by a letter sent out over his signature, and individually addressed to every member of the department, to stress that society's values are changing, and that only by continuous updating in aims as well as techniques of correction, can staff members hope to transmit the positive rehabilitative values that are at the core of correction.

The Minister did not dwell on this matter at much length, and I would hope that he would amplify, during his later comments, the scope and extent of the key training programmes, the ones that shape the direction of staff philosophy. I want to know if there are any artificial barriers to participation in courses that might usefully be removed, provided staff members are keen to learn. It seems to me that if a staff member is motivated to ask what makes prisoners act as they do, then he or she should be able to get some positive guidance without too much formality.

The courses ought to be easy to come by, and they ought not to absorb any out-of-pocket expenses on the part of the would-be learner. In fact, there ought to be bonuses, if there are not already, in which proficiency in active duty is complemented by willingness to capture the overview on corrections through internal educational opportunities. I would like a comment on this point.

Turning to the professional services division, and particularly to education, the rather odd thought occurred to me that if the remarkable progress recorded in the report with regard to teaching techniques is reflected in the actual changed atmosphere in the classrooms, and if, in fact, perhaps the more adventurous and "challenged" teachers have been attracted from community schools to work within this department, perhaps some of the ideals of the Hall Dennis Report may well bear more fruit here, in this setting, than in the community where other pressures are at work against the full implementation of that report. At any rate, it's an intriguing thought.

There is a line in the corrections report, on page 14, which says, and I quote (just as it quotes from Hall Dennis):

Genuine efforts are beings made to improve motivation, broaden the curriculum and to use educational materials that are meaningful to students. In all these areas, the teachers are constantly reminded of just how significant education can be, when it serves as a key to reach and rehabilitate students.

I am also impressed by the balance that is apparently being achieved between academic and vocational work in the adult institutions. I suspect that the reason for this breakthrough is the absence of an establishment of people with a vested interest in maintaining the status quo in education. I get the feeling that the barriers to innovation outside corrections would be professional ones, rather than educational ones. Here you are shielded from some of the forces that are restricting our community educational framework, even as the cost soars.

I hope the Minister will make a note to comment later on one aspect that is not mentioned this year, and that is the contribution of visitors to the educational programme. Since it is obvious that inmates' travel is restricted, for perfectly legitimate reasons, to what extent is an understanding of the world to which these people must return fostered by regular visits of speakers and others from outside? Are such visits encouraged within the educational programme? How would someone willing to offer his services, say, in giving a talk on his trade or profession, fit into this apparently enlightened pattern of discovery that the report outlines?

On libraries, the point that interested me was that now you have taken over the county jails, as of July 1, 1968, you have also taken over their libraries and have proceeded to modernize them. Would the Minister please table a comparative list of the old and new library books in one specific instance in a county jail, so that we may have an idea of what is now available? I attach some importance to this, since books are obviously tools for shaping the attitude of mind of inmates in what might be extremely formative periods of their lives. Without pretending to pose as experts in this field, I think it would be useful for us to look at these titles with a layman's eye, and I trust that the Minister will cause this to be done.

In the recreational programme, I was disappointed to see that scouting does not hold a stronger place in what seems to be a very varied pattern of activity. Could this be because scouting itself is undergoing such an internal change, with the traditionalists in conflict with those who would hold the boys at any cost? Has the department decided that the most worthwhile elements in scouting are being lost in the movement's feverish effort to update itself? I would appreciate a comment on this in due course.

I will say nothing on the chaplaincy this year, beyond noting that my criticisms of May 28, last, seem to have been well taken.

With regard to treatment services, I am sure that ongoing records will prove of great value. The report, quite properly remarks that evaluation is an ongoing process. However, the Minister is well aware of our concern that these most useful records do not fall into the wrong hands. The member for Scarborough East (Mr. T. Reid), has a similar question on the order paper in respect of the education data centre.

Will the Minister, therefore, assure this House that adequate precautions exist to prevent these valuable, but highly subjective records from falling into the wrong hands? One can imagine that, in this situation, blackmail would be possible in later life.

At one time, during the Education Estimates I believe, last year, the Minister of Corrections expressed some disbelief that the setting down of these records on to the computer would make much difference. But, of course, it makes them more mobile, and so very easy to copy at high speed, silently and under the very noses of supervisory personnel.

Since the Attorney General has stated that these records are not privileged in any way, as medical dossiers might be privileged, our concern has increased. We should like the Minister to make a statement about his attitude to the security of his evaluation records, and also the proper uses to which he thinks they ought to be put.

I cannot end this rapid review of the report proper without commenting on the minimum security for forestry camps. The idea of using conservation practice, not only as a possible trade, but also as a vehicle for natural learning of man's place in nature, is immensely appealing. We are delighted that the latest such camp to open has been named Camp Oliver, in honour of Mr. Farquhar Oliver, who was MPP for Grey South for over 40 years.

I am sure that this distinguished member of the Legislature must find it entirely fitting that his service to Ontario is being commemorated in this fashion.

Mr. Chairman, I want to turn to the subject of addictions, and I would like the Minister of Correctional Services and his staff members who are auditing this session, to appreciate that what I have to say is directed just as much to other levels of jurisdiction as to our own. To the federal officials concerned with The Criminal Code, as well as to our own officials in the Attorney General's and other departments, I would say: "If the cap fits, wear it"; because it is impossible to talk about this subject without crossing jurisdictional boundaries at every turn.

Let us concede right away that the safety of society is our first concern. We have to get addicts out of positions where they can harm others: the drunken driver from behind the wheel for example. It is also obvious that a man desperate for a shot of heroin is going to be more prone to armed robbery than one who has not to find that kind of black-market money. So I am not advocating any compromise of law and order.

But let us also concede that the real villains of all this business are the traffickers associated with organized crime. They are making money out of misery, and they should be hit hard.

The other approach to trafficking reduction is to make it unprofitable by continually reviewing, in the light of new medical knowledge, just what ought to be on the narcotics list, what ought to come under The Food and Drug Act, and so on.

These lists should be capable of being reviewed by order-in-council, the governments concerned acting on the advice of a skilled professional technical panel. Were this machinery in operation today, there is little doubt that we would see a more effective approach to the problem of tobacco addiction, in spite of the powerful lobbies which, having got a head start, seek to maintain the status quo.

However, today we are faced with mounting evidence that tobacco is far more harmful when smoked in excess and I say, in excess, than are some of the other materials which are presently illegal. I wonder in passing what would have happened if Sir Walter Raleigh had puffed at marijuana rather than tobacco, which he could just as easily have done?

There is a report in this morning's Globe and Mail which substantiates the fact that tobacco is an addictive drug, and I want at this point to read it into the record of this House:

An expert on addiction and its treatment stated flatly yesterday that tobacco turns smokers into addicts.

Dr. Gordon Bell, president of Donwood Foundation, quoted statistics to the American Women's Club of Toronto to support his statement: Out of 100 persons using alcohol, 5 acquire an uncontrollable desire; out of 100 using tobacco, "90 become hooked."

The founder of the Bell Clinic said that tobacco creates to some degree acute intoxication and the chronic accumulative effects are frightening. However, because smoking tobacco does not impair the smoker's ability to drive or react anti-socially, it is not considered a problem.

Dr. Bell said there is reason to believe that marijuana is less addictive than alcohol as "users of marijuana could discontinue its use. How dangerous is it? Can it be used safely in the home? And the odds are that no permanent damage will result from the experience. Driving would be impaired.

"But people should not be too upset about this vapour-trail to happiness. They should be more upset about tobacco smoking and its accumulative effect."

Dr. Bell suggested that addicts need some cause to work for, if they are to leave their needs for drugs. However, he said, there is reason for concern in the dangerous use of LSD, solvents and glue.

Members may also have seen the report in tonight's Toronto Daily Star, in which Dr. Norman Delarue gave out new statistics on tobacco's effects to the board of trade dinner last night. Dr. Delarue, who is a cancer specialist and assistant professor of surgery at the University of Toronto, called cigarettes "the mask of death", and said that they are killing people faster than any pestilence, plague, war or famine in world history.

Cancer of the lung kills 50,000 people a year in North America, and the rate of increase has now surpassed predictions made in 1960—figures which were not believed at that time. But even lung cancer, in terms of the actual numbers affected, has proved to be one of the lesser evils of cigarette smoking. The incidence of bronchitis and emphysema has reached epidemic proportions, Dr. Delarue says, and the death rate from these diseases—now running at 25,000 a year—will soon be higher than that from lung cancer.

Dr. Delarue also says that the difficulty of giving up smoking has been over-emphasized, and one wonders by whom? How much is "suggestion" being invoked to imply that it is a pretty hopeless business giving up? Certainly, it would be to the advantage of the tobacco industry to undertake a word-of-mouth campaign of this kind at regular intervals. Do we know whether this is happening, and can we, in fact, find out?

What I am getting at is that corrections begins, not with the Minister I am now primarily addressing, but rather with his colleague, the Minister of Education (Mr. Davis), who has consistently refused to acknowledge his liability in this regard, and who has not updated the curriculum in this area—why, must for ever remain a big question mark.

And what about the Minister without Portfolio, the member for Scarborough North (Mr. Wells), who is supposedly looking after youth matters? Is he doing anything at all by way of an educational campaign among youth? Perhaps he could make a few definitive speeches on the matter. We are clearly plagued by the curse that Sir Walter Raleigh, by his legendary action, has bestowed upon us.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. In these estimates, do we not have to stick to the estimates or can we go off on any variation that has nothing whatsoever to do with the estimates?

Mr. Chairman: I might say to the hon. member's point of order that it has seemed to me during the hon. member's remarks that he could more properly be making those remarks in what we know as the Budget Debate rather than in the debate on the estimates. We have not yet come to the Budget Debate, as such.

The hon. member does seem to be relating some of the points to the matter of correctional services but the matters he has brought up should be corrected before people become offenders. Is this correct?

Mr. Ruston: The addiction thing that we are working on in this, is where they end up in our hon. member's institutions.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member is still speaking about correctional services?

Mr. Ruston: Right. The accident of history is with us. But we might well have seen a situation in which little boys were branded with a criminal record for having been caught puffing a regular cigarette. That cannot happen now, not because we have compassion for the young, but because too many people have a stake in the success of the tobacco industry, including the Treasurer of this province, who uses the tax from this product to balance his Budget.

Just as last year, when I posed the dilemma of the moral values of society as a whole continually altering the goals of correction, so today I want to stress once more that we cannot expect corrections to take in people, as it were, clothed in sin and turn them out purged and wholly virtuous. The best we can do is to match them to society's norms, which is like taking a run at a freight train. The closer you get to it, the faster it seems to be moving and the higher it looks.

Impending revisions to our liquor legislation are obviously necessary on civilized grounds alone. It ought to be possible for reasonable people to sip a vermouth at a sidewalk cafe, or pick a wine by the vintage. It seems reasonable to sell beer in grocery stores as they have done for years in Quebec. But all these reforms assume a concurrent programme of consumer education. We hate to admit that perhaps the reason we have been slow to adopt some of these civilized European customs is that we do not have the background to drink in moderation. Perhaps we are afraid of ourselves, like a small boy let loose at the refrigerator.

It seems to make sense then, that if we are to tax liquor more highly, most of this revenue ought to go into education, and, in this context, I would call the bright and friendly self-service liquor stores now being experimented with as truly educational. We are apt to equate education with literature and films, whereas a government pilot project for a sidewalk cafe on Yonge Street might teach people the social way to drink and turn them away from hole-and-corner establishments where the waiter stands over you with your next glass of draught beer, waiting for you to finish the one you have. Discrimination and taste can be taught in drinking, and probably by example.

We are told that young teenagers get into a great deal of trouble drinking beer and driving around, drag-racing and so on, usually in the company of young girls. Only this weekend, we had a tragedy in Metro Toronto which fell into the category of the "uneducated show-off". All of which leads me to suggest that we are not getting at the root cause of the liquor and drug problem, which is more complex than we are willing to admit. It is a combination of young people having too much time on their hands, too much money in the form of cash and too little encouragement to experience the possibilities that life affords in other directions. A government summer employment programme—a pioneer programme of the kind that the leader of the Opposition has advocated on several occasions in this House—would give youth a new opportunity to work in the open air for Tourism, for Lands and Forests, and for Highways, and would reduce the psychic dependence on "kicks" which seems to be so big in teenage life today.

Class distinction plays a big part in the effectiveness of recovery from alcoholism. There is no doubt that when a wealthy man can go to a private clinic to "dry out" in privacy, and to consult with specialists ranging from physicians to psychologists, all of whom are resident and at hand, he can go a long way towards recovery through his pocketbook alone. Everything can be made just right for his rehabilitation.

But it is a very different story when withdrawal from alcohol is made at the public expense. I suspect the corners we cut are the very subtleties that make all the difference between a truly understanding approach, and a superficial drying-out exercise unaccompanied by therapy of any kind. The public approach is crude, in part because the people who must use it do not have the necessary background to relate to other possible modes of life. On the other hand, the executive with a bottle in his desk can be counselled successfully to seek his release from tension in other, less anti-social ways, like hitting a golf ball extra-hard.

Now there is very little evidence to suggest that alcohol's accessibility as such is a factor in alcoholism. In Canada, British Columbia is first in the statistics, with 2.58 per cent of alcoholics over the age of 20. Ontario comes next, with a percentage of 2.50. But in terms of actual numbers, because of our greater population, Ontario comes first. Yet our liquor laws are more rigid than those of Quebec, where alcoholism is not the problem it is here.

So it seems to be affluence rather than access which affords us the correlation. This is borne out by an overall increase in alcoholism in Canada of 46.37 per cent in the ten years between 1951 and 1961. That's an increase, Mr. Chairman, not a gross percentage. Problem drinkers account for 39.5 per cent of this group. Alcohol addicts who do not cause problems to anyone but themselves total 43.2 per cent—that's the largest figure. Those who are really ill with chronic alcoholism amount to some 17.3 per cent.

Most of the last-named groups do not stay alive too long. They perish from cirrhosis of the liver, or delirium tremens, or Korsakoff's psychosis, and then they become mere statistics through which it is possible to check the accuracy of the so-called Jellinek formula for determining the incidence of alcoholism in the community.

Of course, alcoholism is the problem that it is simply because we are a society on the move, and it has proven impossible to keep drinking drivers off the road. Even with the extensive policing we have today, far too many people get behind the wheel too soon after they have imbibed, and the results are often tragic, as on that recent occasion when seven young theology students, returning to Toronto from a hockey game at South River, were struck by a car driven by a man who had just come from a beverage room and had literally "hit the road", all over the road, and ended up on the wrong side, in a head-on collision with the youths. He died in the impact, taking two of the students with him and maiming four more. They are still in the hospital with severe internal injuries, and their future is a big question mark.

Now the student society of Emmanuel College of Victoria University in the University of Toronto is spearheading the drive for compulsory breathalyzer tests for impaired drivers, and I want to take this opportunity, from the floor of the provincial Legislature, of endorsing that campaign, and urging the federal government to move with speed on this urgent problem.

It seems to be that Corrections must focus sharply on the third party involvement that is characteristic of drinking while driving. The other focus, I suggest, ought to be on the forces which lead people to drink: loneliness; the lack of personal fulfillment; the inability to relate to other people except in the grossest physical sense; the perhaps unreasonable pressures of work and expectation upon a person; and the debt problems that come through attempting to maintain too high a standard of living, just to keep up with the Joneses.

It strikes me that the Minister of Corrections must be subjected to a great deal of gratuitous advice on the subject of treatment, from sources that are narrowly motivated. What I do not want to see happen are the proposed reforms of the Provincial Secretary (Mr. Welch), which are long overdue, confused and distorted through muddled thinking, or by a deliberate muddying of the waters.

That is why I think we must give a clear lead to Corrections counsellors not to use their captive audiences or individuals as vehicles for views which might be at variance with the best interests of the individual under treatment. In alcoholism, as in all else, we must think of personal welfare and rehabilitation as soon as we have satisfied the prior public need for protection, which, of course, we have done by the time the subjects of treatment are in Mimico.

The other big issue is the prevalence of medicine-cabinet drugs and the daily pill-taking in adult society. The children see this as a regular pattern of activity on the part of the parents. The member for Scarborough East has a "Little Nurse" kit which can be bought at any toy shop, and which has a variety of sugar pills and capsules which look just like the real thing. It is so easy to graduate from the toy to the actual pharmacy prescription—quite apart from the danger of the child filling up her toy kit from the bathroom cabinet, with potentially tragic results.

If we are conditioning the oncoming generations by habituation, then it seems we are asking the ultimate drug offenders to bear the burden of society's guilt—the burden of all of us. Trafficking is something else, but consumption alone must excite our compassion. These people are, to a great extent, the scapegoats for our collective guilt in this matter. The fact that we personally have been able to resist the temptation to indulge to excess, does not release us from our having failed to educate society to the wide spectrum of satisfying alternatives to addiction.

In this respect, the addiction problem and the "minority lack of opportunity" situation—Indians, Negroes, Puerto Ricans in the States—have a lot in common. We say underprivileged peoples are not ready for emancipation, yet we deny them the means to make themselves ready.

Similarly, we condemn the alcoholic, even as we hold back from making drinking a simple social exercise which would not invite excesses. There was not much excess at Expo '67, yet there was the right atmosphere for individual choice.

Of the 50,644 convictions shown on page 100 of the current corrections report, over half—27,427—were for offences against The Liquor Control Act. This is the measure of our failure to educate. We are already too late, in a sense, once a conviction has been registered.

The Alex G. Brown Memorial Clinic, like Oxford University, is the home of lost causes. Nevertheless, like Oxford, nobody is suggesting it be done away with. It seems to be doing excellent work, within its sphere of influence, which, of course, is too small ever to lick the problem. We have, then, to think in terms of individual rehabilitation, since the act of conviction itself ought to have satisfied society's collective guilt complex.

Individual counselling is obviously good in these circumstances; but how far can group psychotherapy go without begging all the questions?

We have the same problem, I suspect, at Penetang, where the "naked in a box" experiment in group psychotherapy is proceeding. Insofar as these experiments cause people to shed their inhibitions and relate to each other in a meaningful way, they are good.

But when it comes to matching the individual once more to the imperfect society in which we live, group psychotherapy may persuade the individual to lower his own standards—yes, even the criminal can be thought of in terms of "lowering" his standards—in order to make a better match with the environment to which he must return.

I see a real danger in group psychotherapy actually undermining higher individual values in the interest of adjustment to the environment to which the inmate must return. If to say that "the saint must be soiled for Jarvis Street" is an exaggeration, it still expresses what I am trying to say.

I admit I do not know the answer, but I am certainly aware of the problem posed by conflicting goals. The consensus that emerges from group psychotherapy may, indeed, be the wrong answer for the individual in these circumstances, which is why I urge that this technique be used always with individual welfare in mind, rather than with the moulding premise.

Aversion therapy, in which physical discomfort and suggestions are related, is a repugnant form of treatment, which cuts across all the accepted norms of civil liberties. If we regard these techniques as mere tools in the hands of psychiatrists and psychotherapists, we may be abdicating our responsibility. As watchdogs of the individual as well as the community, we may well be allowing individual spiritual values to perish for what we believe to be the common good.

A barrage of electric shocks and insulin shots, which changes the electro-chemical composition of the body, also changes the personality of the individual. The man or woman who comes out is, literally, not the same person as the one who went in.

Now, how far can we take this in the treatment area? Are we talking now about lobotomies in the public interest—about actual surgery on the worst cases? If not now, how much longer will it be before this is seriously proposed? We might be paying much too high a price for a smooth and easy-going society, if the price of our placid existence is the destruction, by electrical and chemical means, and eventually by surgery, of individual personalities.

The Minister and his staff will know that all these things are possible now, and only the lack of public sanction deters the experimenter from going ahead with "cures" along these lines.

Once again, we are brought back, as in so many other areas, to the thinking of Justice McRuer. The best thing this government ever did was to bring down that report, and, thank goodness, we have the assurance of more to come. I hope that the commission will look at the legal aspects of treatment within institutions as a function of civil liberties, and I would remind the House that these liberties do not entirely perish in confinement.

I wonder if it would be possible for Dr. Richard Steffy, who is the person most responsible for pushing back the frontiers in these more controversial areas at the Alex G. Brown Memorial Clinic at Mimico, to give a talk to members of the Legislature, or at least to the committee members concerned, about his philosophical approach to some of these ethical difficulties? In particular, we want to know the details of the "sensitivity sessions" that have been developed for staff members.

What does the five-week course involve? Most of all, who sets the direction, the goals? Are they individual-oriented, or do they subordinate the welfare of the individual to external considerations?

In the short time I have at my disposal, the most effective way to make my points without becoming overly technical is to carry the situations to extremes—to reduce them to absurdity. But I hope I have succeeded in touching the principal bases.

If I must be critical of the Alex G. Brown Institute, it must be to say that the public relations programme has not reached the members of this Legislature, nor, I believe, the public at large.

Interest in the problem of addictions in relation to the criminal and in relation to where society is moving is, I think, of great interest today. I trust that the institute will not push ahead and leave us all behind, because that is the way to misunderstanding. We must be kept in the picture, and two pages in the annual report are not enough.

I want to end these opening remarks by commending to members' attention, the excellent new edition of the Time-Life book "The Mind" by John Rowan Wilson. Dr. Wilson is an English surgeon, novelist and medical journalist who has been serving as assistant editor of the British Medical Journal since 1962.

His chapter on "Manipulations of Mentality" is the best exposition I have seen in this area, and I commend it to all who would understand the nature of the problem we are up against. Thank you.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, it is a great pleasure to have the opportunity to speak to you again, after so many months.

I understand the very serious attack that the Minister has been under from the Liberal benches this afternoon and I think in consideration of the rough time that he has had perhaps I should give him a few compliments because I know he does not get many unsolicited bouquets.

I think everyone in this House agrees, Mr. Chairman, that there is no question that this Minister has accomplished more in his department than the five men who preceded him in the same position. There is no question, Mr. Chairman, that this Minister has brought the department forward some ten or 15 years into the twentieth century in the brief time that he has had this responsibility, but before you—

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): Do not hold your breath.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am waiting for the other shoe to drop.

Mr. Shulman: Of course, we all know, Mr. Chairman, that the five members who have preceded this Minister, as the Minister of this department, did absolutely nothing. We are also aware that when this Minister took his position, his department was some 100 years behind the time and so, we do agree, he has brought the department forward some 15 years.

This is really the tragedy that this department is in now, he has given the illusion of progress. He has been able, by making a gesture here and making a gesture there, to delude his own party, many people in the Legislature, other parties and the public, into thinking that his department is carrying out a modern programme. It is not. It is the worst in North America.

Well now, let me just give an example. We heard a great deal today about when the federal government does this, then we will do that. When they pass a certain law then, we will start to have a workout programme. We will have people go to work during the day and come to jail at night, or go to school during the day and meanwhile, we are just going to have a little pilot programme.

We could pay a little more serious attention to his remarks, Mr. Chairman, had he not said exactly the same thing last year in reference to this miserly six cents a day which was being allotted to the prisoners. He says, "Well we have to wait until the federal government changes the legislation. We know $2 a month is not a proper amount. We know there should be incentive payments. We know there should be payments for work but we have to wait until the federal government makes their change".

Well somehow, Mr. Chairman, that was not true and today, we have the Minister getting up and with great pride saying: "Well we are going to do something now. We are not going to pay them two dollars a month anymore. We are going to pay them up to $20 a month. We do not have to wait for the federal government to make the change. We are going to start it in three months."

So there is just about as much truth in what he said last year on that matter as there is in his matter. He could modernize the situation today if he so wished. He could pass the legislation right here to bring us up into a proper, modern, penal system if he so wished or perhaps he does wish and perhaps he is not able to persuade that antediluvian Cabinet, which he has sitting around and behind him, particularly behind him at the moment.

I would like to give you an example—

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of Revenue): I would rather you had not said that.

Mr. Shulman: Perhaps I was flattering the Minister when I said antediluvian. I will retract that, hon. Minister of Revenue.

Mr. Chairman, I have the front page of the Toronto Evening Conservative here. This is from November 13, 1968, and we have a huge picture from "School to Jail" and underneath it says, "Day paroles, a new life". There is a happy picture of a young man and his wife, Christina, leaving Don Jail and off to class at Victoria College. There was a great deal of publicity given to this prisoner and his name, which is here in full, Stanley Dobleowski; this again sums up one of the major faults of this Minister and his department. It is the false piety.

You may recall, Mr. Chairman, last year on occasion, members in this House would get up and say, "What is happening to the poor prisoners or the poor prisoner who you have up in Burwash, who you are going to deport without giving a hearing"? If the name of that prisoner was mentioned, the Minister would rise in high dudgeon and say, is that not terrible, releasing the name of this poor prisoner so that his relatives back in Italy will read the Toronto Evening Conservative and they will know what is being done to him here in Ontario?"

What do we have when the Minister has something he wants to publicize, which he thinks will give him kudos, good publicity—and this Minister is good at that—he is better than possibly anybody else in the Cabinet—then we see huge pictures, huge publicity, articles everywhere with the name, with the picture of the prisoner. He does not seem too worried when that type of thing occurs. But I do not care about that; if he wants his personal publicity and he thinks that will help him to be promoted in the Cabinet, fine, good luck. I have no real complaint provided he does what he is talking about.

Now with great publicity, and great announcements, we are going to start a pilot programme. That pilot programme, to begin with, involved some six poor prisoners who were allowed to go to school; perhaps it has been expanded now, perhaps it is a few dozen. What disturbs me about this, Mr. Chairman, is that—

Hon. Mr. White: What disturbs me is that you are contemplating running for leadership of your party.

Mr. Shulman: That I am sure, would disturb the hon. Minister of Revenue.

What disturbs me, Mr. Chairman, is that we are so far behind here. This type of programme was begun in 1913 in other jurisdictions. I took the trouble of looking this up, this great new programme which was announced here in Ontario in the last few months. I was rather curious to see what other jurisdictions have done. I have here a review of the work furlough programme in California.

California is one of the states that is rather new to this programme and according to the tax digest of the fourth quarter of 1968, they have been carrying out this programme for 15 years only. So they are quite new to it and I would not say that they are one of the pioneers. Actually, the pioneer was Wisconsin and I quote:

The first legislation to authorize work relief programmes in county jails and similar institutions was enacted by the Wisconsin State Legislature in 1913.

We are only 55 years behind the times here in Ontario and actually, I suppose, perhaps this department is not too bad, comparably. The department I had last year, finance, was at about the same stage compared to more modern jurisdictions' legislation. But it goes on; actually we are more than 55 years behind the time:

Actually, before the Huber law was passed in 1913, a New Hampshire sheriff was carrying out the same programme of releasing prisoners to work in the community by day and to serve time nights and week-ends in the jail.

We have one dozen prisoners who will go out in this great pilot programme and have their picture taken; they go to school and they come back at night. It is very interesting to look and see what other jurisdictions are doing.

In California, which has had this programme for some ten or 15 years, during this past year had 5,900 prisoners carrying out this programme. It makes a rather sad comparison with our programme. These 5,900 prisoners are going out to work and they are not being paid some $5 a week, $20 a month.

They are being paid the going rate in industry and the results that flow from this are not just the simple one of rehabilitating the prisoner, of getting him into a work standard so that when he leaves, instead of returning to crime, he will continue his work. It has so many other good side effects that it amazes me that even the Conservative government took 25 years to think about it.

Because in addition to this first major result, the prisoner's earnings are divided between himself, between the state and between his family. The major portion goes to the family as a result of which these families, many of which—perhaps most of which—end up on welfare in Ontario, are allowed to continue to exist independently with the prisoner's earnings.

To take one example, and I am quoting now. There are so many here but I will quote the top one, the first one which is Butte county in California:

Of the amount earned by a prisoner over a period of two years—total earnings of $21,157—$9,600 went to his family, which is adequate to keep the family reasonably well and off welfare, $2,700 was retained by the prisoner for use in buying minor luxuries, $2,100 went towards payment of fines that the prisoner had incurred when he was first sentenced, $6,600 was returned to the county.

Here we have one of the major differences between a modern programme and an Ontario Conservative programme. The Ontario Conservative programme uses up our taxes to keep people in these holes; a modern progressive socialist programme uses them productively, returns them—

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): Socialist?

Mr. Shulman: Yes, it is a socialist programme. I know you do not like that word.

Mr. Yakabuski: Is California socialist?

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): That which has to do with people.

Mr. Shulman: Yes, that is what socialism means, it is to improve the lot of people. Conservatism means keeping things the way they are.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Like California?

Mr. Shulman: Now, to have to explain these things to the Minister who did not know what socialism was! The great advantage here is that the programme pays for itself. Here is a prisoner, and the cost of maintaining a prisoner who is not doing this is $3.50 a day, who instead of costing the state or the county $2,000 over that period of time, brought in $6,600. He was paying for the whole system of justice. He was maintaining his own dignity. He was keeping his family, instead of their being forced to go on charity. This is a progressive system. This is what we could do here if our Minister was to understand the need, and if, more important, because I think he does understand the need, if our Minister was able to persuade his Cabinet.

Mr. B. Gilbertson (Algoma): You would have us all in there.

Mr. Gisborn: There are not enough of them around to persuade.

Mr. Shulman: Some of you would be better off in jail. You would get a very good education there.

I have had an opportunity of visiting a number of jails run by this government, and it is a sad travesty of what a jail programme should be. There have been steps forward, I would not deny this to the Minister. The Vanier Institute is a great step forward. Ingleside, where certain favoured prisoners have been fortunate enough to go in the past, was a great improvement over Mercer.

But the majority, perhaps all of our male prisoners, are still treated in a way that would have embarrassed progressive jurisdictions 50 or 75 years ago.

It is not just the system of going out to work, and the reason I have spent so much time on that particular aspect is because the Minister has taken so much credit for his 12 boys whom he sent to school. He should have been embarrassed that we do not have 10 or 15 or a higher percentage of our prisoners being rehabilitated outside of the prisons, not these very few who have been carefully chosen.

Surely, mistakes are made in these programmes, and there is the odd one who will abuse it. But it is very low.

Of the 5,900 prisoners who last year were out in this programme in California, less than one per cent had to be taken off the programme because of abuse of it—abuse of various forms, alcohol, not going to work, coming late, going home to see their family, a wide variety of abuses, some minor, some major. But less than one per cent of the people involved abused the programme.

We could do the same thing here. We do not have to be running these homosexual factories, which is what they are in so many cases. We do not have to be teaching people to be criminals, which is what you are doing every day at Guelph.

They go in innocent kids, they come out and they know all the tricks. How many people are you rehabilitating at Guelph? Ten per cent? Five per cent? I doubt if it is that many. They go in innocent, the majority of them, some 90 per cent of them. They are not taught any trade, and what a sad thing for those who are taught a trade. They are not allowed to complete it. They are not allowed to get their licence. How many plumbers, how many barbers do you turn out? You do not turn out any because your programme is incomplete, your programme is inefficient, your programme is conservative. You go through the motions at Guelph.

You have a course in welding, you have a course in barbering. You do not give the prisoners scissors, mind you, they might cut each other's throats, but you go through the motions. But the majority, some 90 per cent of the boys in Guelph do not even go through the motions. They are put to work shovelling manure, cutting grass, working in the kitchen folding, tailoring things which they have no hope whatsoever of ever doing when they get out. Making licence plates at Millbrook. What a waste! What an embarrassment it should be for every one of you across the floor.

Mr. Gilbertson: Do you mean to say we have no work programme?

Mr. Shulman: That is what I mean to say. Your work programmes are an embarrassment. Your work programmes involve practically everybody in those institutions—and I am referring primarily now to Guelph and Millbrook and Burwash—they involve practically everybody in those institutions, and that is what they are. They are work programmes to keep the men busy, to keep them quiet, until you can get their time completed and get them out on the street again.

Maybe the Attorney General will not be too competent and you will not have them back too fast.

What you should be doing and what you always pay lip service about, is rehabilitating. You do not do it. You know you do not do it. The prisoners know you do not do it. You are now starting a programme of research. I am delighted with that, but you are going to be shocked when you do your studies.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Exploit the prisoners too, you know. There is exploitation there.

Mr. Shulman: Well, of course there is exploitation.

Mr. Lawlor: They raise Holsteins for beef and twist arms to get the laundry services done for other government institutions.

Mr. Shulman: I thank the hon. member for Lakeshore for his assistance. I should explain that the two of us travelled about together seeing this 18th century way of handling those innocents who cannot vote and who are caught in the Conservative jails. For a great deal of what I say today I am indebted to the member for Lakeshore for his brilliance and erudition in drawing out from the jailers and from the prisoners on our visits.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): The jailers could understand it better than some of you could.

Mr. Lawlor: You know they send back a report of everything you say.

Mr. MacDonald: They have had time to read Aristotle.

Mr. Lawlor: Do you trickle away your life reading these nice little reports?

Mr. Gisborn: Show of the week, the best show of the week.

Mr. Shulman: I have here the Globe and Mail for November 7, 1968, and I am glad the Minister is not backward in sounding his own horn since someone has to do it. I see here he was speaking at the Toronto Optimist Club, and I guess that is the only group he could really tell it to. He told the Toronto Optimists how a person will soon be able to go to jail in Ontario and never miss a day's work. I presume that what finally happened was that this programme, which was begun in 1913 in the various states, was finally copied and sent to the Minister and he decided that it was time. He got a kudo here from the John Howard Society, and I am always glad to give the Minister a compliment, so I am going to read this.

Mr. Lawlor: The Optimists changed their name afterwards.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I must have fooled them, too.

Mr. Lawlor: They call themselves the Pessimists now.

Mr. Shulman: Yes, the Minister is always pretty good at presenting an air of progress. I would never take that away from him. However, he had a kudo from the John Howard Society and I am always glad to give the Minister a compliment, so I will read it into the record.

Further evidence of the progressive attitude of the Department of Correctional Service's Minister, Alan Grossman, has recently come to light—

I wonder how it came to light.

—with the launching of the province's live-in work-out programme.

Unfortunately no one is yet living-in and working-out, but the programme has been launched, anyway. The way it was launched was by a series of speeches by the Minister.

Mr. Gisborn: The John Howard Society is waiting patiently.

Mr. Shulman: The John Howard Society is not entirely pleased with the Minister, I may say. There are so many areas where we lag behind. One of them, an important one, if we are really seriously interested in rehabilitating outside of the work programme, is the matter of allowing visits.

I will have a great deal to say on that during the estimates, so perhaps I will just settle at the moment for one sentence. This system whereby prisoners, as a form of punishment, are sent to jail or reformatories far from their homes is a form of retribution that turns them to bitterness, drives them to crime, and is a shame for this government.

I have letter after letter begging me to have them transferred to jails or reformatories near their homes. The Minister replies—I will read some of his letters later on—I am sorry, we do not think the ability to visit is an overriding factor. Unless there is illness in the family, we are not going to transfer them. That is what the Minister says. That is what this progressive Minister says. He would not be Minister long in any American state. Even in Mississippi you could not hold your job, Mr. Minister.

Well, I could not believe—

Mr. MacDonald: Just shows how low we are getting.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): Could not get any lower than that.

Mr. Shulman: I could not believe that Ontario was a model. I had the opportunity to go around and see some of the jails, some of the prisons, and I thought there had to be a better way. We know there is a better way in foreign countries. We know there is a better way in Sweden, for that matter in all of Scandinavia, in England. But do we have to go so far?

Last November I travelled down to the States to their prisons to compare what they are doing with what we are doing and I went to Joliet. Joliet is a prison for hard-core offenders, the real toughies, and seeing the programme in Joliet makes me weep for Ontario because they are so far ahead of us in this difficult environment in solving their problems.

A prisoner would be so much better off in Joliet, with all their racial problems, and all the other matters that you have in Chicago and Illinois, he would be better off there than in our best model male prison, the best model male reformatory in this province, because they are actively interested in rehabilitation and they are doing something about it.

I brought back a great deal of material from Joliet, and I may say my first surprise was before I ever got to the prison. I went to the city of Joliet to have a hair cut and my barber—barbers are talkative down there, too—my barber said what are you doing down here, where are you from? I told him I was going down to Joliet to see what the prison was like and he said, "I graduated from Joliet." I said, "Oh, that is nice." He said, "I mean as a barber, they taught me there, I took the examination in Joliet and I passed. Over half the barbers in this area are graduates of Joliet and some 150 in Chicago."

This was a little intriguing because they do not give examinations in our prisons, in our reformatories, to allow people to go out and begin this type of work. You cannot become an engineer or a doctor, or a processor, or an IBM operator, or a licensed mechanic. You can go through the motions, there will be some teaching, but you will not get a licence.

So as a result of this talk, I got his graduation picture. This particular barber was very proud to present it to me. He graduated just a few months before he had the opportunity to clip me and this was on May 22, 1968. At that time 29 inmate student barbers, 13 from Statesville and 16 from Joliet were examined by the Illinois Department of Registration Education and of the 29, 24 passed the master barber test and off they went to become barbers.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Is that the day you lost your watch?

Mr. Shulman: I am delighted that the Minister of Trade and Development made that contribution.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: May I ask the hon. member if he asked the barber how long the course took?

Mr. Shulman: I will come to that in a moment. The Minister of Trade and Development has made an interjection asking whether this was the day I lost my watch. I am glad he made that interjection because this sums up the view of the Treasury benches. They believe that once a man has been to jail he cannot be rehabilitated. The Minister is right under our system.

You send them into Grossman's jails and you will not rehabilitate them, I am sure of it. But send them down to a preventive system where these men are going to be given a proper training and they can be rehabilitated, you will not have to worry about your watch.

This prison takes the prisoners anywhere from sentences, I believe, of two years and up, which means they all serve a minimum of one year, whereas in Guelph, it is quite true, the sentences are often shorter. However, there are some people in there, of course, many people who have been in more than a year.

The course takes all of six weeks, to train a barber, and you wait another three weeks for a notice of the outcome of the test. So when those men left the prison they went out and were able to earn a living. They did not have to depend on the few dollars in their pockets and the charity of the half-way houses. Here, no matter what was done, there was no real possibility of going out and earning a trained living. They go back to whatever they were doing before, whatever racket they were in, because they do not know anything better. The superficial knowledge that they gain in these courses at Guelph, Burwash and Millbrook, is absolutely useless—you cannot earn a cent with that.

For the Minister to present the defence, which I presume he is going to from this question which he just suggested, that there is not time, is just not true. Most of these courses take a maximum of three months.

What courses are available? There is a long list of them here. The Minister of Correctional Services in Illinois is a very progressive man and he has taken steps to get the co-operation of industry, because industry is just as interested as the state in not having these people go out and become thieves again.

He approached the Volkswagen Company and the company has set up a whole shop, right in Joliet. I had the pleasure of visiting in the shop and seeing cars repaired. They actually teach men to be licensed auto mechanics, specifically using the Volkswagen as the basic car. The guards also bring in their own cars of every make, which the prisoners work on for pay; let me say for pay that is a little better than the Minister is going to pay them even now.

As a result, these men can take the examinations and become auto mechanics. And Volkswagen have had this course at Joliet now for three years. In their advertising, and this is what they do for the inmates at Joliet, this is one of the things that Volkswagen says:

The course offered is one of general repair and once a man is employed by a Volkswagen dealer, he may continue his schooling in the many other courses available, that is engine repair, transmission repair, as well as management training.

They may get up to $10,000 a year as a shop foreman. And, furthermore, Volkswagen went further than that and said: When you leave prison, if you have graduated from our course, we will do our best to place you.

And they are placing these men and these men are not coming back to prison. This is what we could do here but it does not just take Volkswagens, it does not just take our industry—government can do so much too.

What about our education system as compared to theirs?

An hon. member: How is it?

Mr. Shulman: Well, our educational system is sad. In Joliet, they have set up—

Mr. D. M. De Monte (Dovercourt): We might just question whether it is relevant.

Mr. Shulman: Is there a question from the member for Sarnia? He was mumbling there. Oh, I am sorry, he was talking in his sleep. If the member for Sarnia is questioning whether this is relevant, I hope he understands the relevancy of improving our system of correctional institutions.

Mr. Bullbrook: I want to introduce the member to the member for Dovercourt.

Mr. Shulman: Oh, the member for Dovercourt was quoting the member for Sarnia.

Mr. Bullbrook: And I was quoting the member for High Park.

Mr. Shulman: I can understand the Liberals' inability to understand the relevance of this matter.

Mr. Bullbrook: The member takes himself too seriously.

Mr. Shulman: But, Mr. Chairman, I know you understand the relevance of this matter, and even if no one else in the government benches does, I am sure that afterwards you will explain it to the Minister and to the member for Sarnia.

The educational system at Joliet is an adequate one. Not only have they been teaching public school and high school there for some 25 years, but beginning in 1957 they got the co-operation of Northwestern University and they are now teaching a university course which will lead to degrees. They started in 1957 with 12 students. They have now expanded that so that they have taken a total of 440 students in a total of 34 courses at the present time.

The classes have been in English, history, philosophy, psychology, political science, sociology, anthropology and speech, leading to a degree and scholarships. Those who complete the courses satisfactorily are allowed scholarships which allow them to continue in universities outside, to get practical training in the various fields.

It gives an example of one man here, James Williams, a two-time loser, who took the mathematics course in 18 months, as a result of which he was given a scholarship when he left Joliet, which allowed him to be accepted by the California Institute of Technology as a junior student with all costs paid. As a result, this man is going back into society as a useful member of society. He is not going to be a three-time loser. Here is a progressive sensible system, one which we could do here. The University of Toronto would co-operate, all universities in Ontario would co-operate. It just takes someone to go in and ask, someone to go in and initiate it, and this is where I criticize this department, and this is where I criticize this Minister. There are so many other courses, dozens of them. I have here details on the data processing course, and the one on typewriter repair which takes only a few weeks and allows them to go out and begin immediately as does the one on barbering.

Here is one in a slightly different field and this one appeals. It shows a little imagination on the part of the warden, and this warden deserves a lot of credit. This is a man of brilliance. He started an arts programme. We have some art in our reformatories, in our jails. The prisoner is allowed, I believe, up to $5 worth of material a month and I will have something to say about the Alex G. Brown, a model institution in that field, very shortly.

But whenever he does paint, nothing comes of it. It so happens, when you have a large body of men with time on their hands, there is ability there and this ability can be nurtured and brought forth, and that is what they have done here in Joliet. They recognized early, some 20 years ago, that many of the prisoners had valuable ability in the field of art and they said, "Fine, we will give you all the materials you want to buy"—no artificial limitation, the way we have here in Ontario reformatories—"If you want to spend money on that instead of tobacco, good luck to you. Go ahead and we will have an art show."

This is an annual affair which is open to the public at Joliet, in Illinois every year and has been fantastically successful. Last year's show which was on May 26, attracted some thousands of visitors; 2,700 paintings were up for sale; 15,000 visitors attended at the prison from 12 noon to 5 p.m. At the end of the day $22,000 had been taken in all, of which money was divided among the prisoners who had organized the show and who had painted the paintings.

This money they could use either toward their eventual rehabilitation or toward buying art works or anything they liked, in prison, anything that would help them. What a sensible, sensible project. These prisoners worked all year long for this show and they were proud of it, they were happy with it. They were being rehabilitated and that money was going toward rehabilitation.

What about the prison itself? We heard so much last year and I swallowed this last year because I did not know any better. When we complained about these horrible jails, the Minister got up and said, "Well the jail was built 100 years ago and there is no way of putting Johns into the cells, the walls are three-foot thick and you just cannot do anything with them." I was silly enough to believe him. Well I found out better.

I went down to Joliet and I hope the Minister will go down to Joliet. They have kept one cell. It looks like it is from the Don jail. There is a cell with a pail in a corner, a little tiny cubicle with a cot along the side and the thick, thick walls and no toilet, of course, but slop pails. Nobody is in the cell because they keep that to show how in the old days, before the war—they mean the First World War—prisoners were kept.

I said, "Have you ever been to Ontario's jails and seen how we keep them now?" The warden did not believe me. He said, "Why do you not do something about it?" I said, "Well, our Minister says there is nothing you can do about it, the prisons were built 100 years ago. It is not possible to do anything with them and there is no money." He said, "We did not have any money and this prison was built in 1867, but we solved the problem."

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I hope the hon. member can quote all these statements I am alleged to have made.

Mr. Shulman: We will be delighted to find them for you.

Mr. Chairman, I will explain. I am sorry. If the Minister is suggesting—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I think you are trying to paraphrase.

Mr. Shulman: Is the Minister suggesting that these improvements could have been made and he has not made them when he knows how? I would be interested to hear that.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I guess you were not listening to my speech.

Mr. Shulman: All right, Mr. Chairman—

It being 6 o'clock, p.m., the House took recess.

ESTIMATES, THE DEPARTMENT OF CORRECTIONAL SERVICES (Continued)

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): Mr. Chairman, you will recall before the supper hour that, as we were having our pleasant discourse, we were interrupted rudely by the members on my right who unfortunately are no longer here—

Interjections by hon. members.

An hon. member: Where are the members of your party?

Mr. Shulman: —and the Minister from the far right. The member to my right unfortunately did not understand the relevance of looking into the improvement of conditions in our jails.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): They took the member seriously; he said he could handle it alone.

Mr. Shulman: And the Minister was a little upset and suggested I had misquoted. We will come to that in a moment.

Before I go on though to the problem which we were discussing, I have here a book called "Trade Time" from the Stateville Vocational Prison School in Illinois, and this lists the various courses that can be completed following which a prisoner can go out and use these courses to earn a living.

I will just read them. Library and visual aid, toolroom, drafting, machine shop, brick-laying, welding shop, printing and lithography, advanced printing, radio and television repair, automotive mechanics, automotive maintenance of small motors, automotive body and fender repair, woodworking, refrigerating and air-conditioning, typewriter and office machinery repair, and sign painting.

These, of course, are in addition to the academic courses which are similar to our school courses.

I was relating to you how, in Joliet, one cell is kept as a museum, which is exactly the same, as hundreds of cells in our Don Jail and hundreds of cells—I guess thousands of cells—in jails across this province. This is a cell that is dark, with no toilet facilities, with no table, with just a bed. This one had a mattress, but I have been in cells in our Ontario jails that did not even have that amenity.

And the warden of Joliet prison expressed amazement to me that prisoners could be kept in that type of cell in this day and age and he explained that this was a museum that was kept open to the public to show what forms of cruelty, what forms of punishment were used in former uncivilized times.

He had not been to Ontario to see what we do here. I may say there was absolutely no difference between that museum cell of theirs and cells which we are using at the present time for prisoners.

And when I expressed amazement that he had been able to make these changes in his ancient prison, over 100 years old, and with no money, he explained how it was done. He said:

There is no reason in the world that these improvements cannot be made in your own jurisdiction. Because these walls are so thick, there is a great deal of space to work with. And you do not need a great deal of money because you can use prisoners' labour.

That is exactly what we did, we called all the prisoners together, wing by wing, and said this is the way it is now, do you want it to continue or shall we improve it? In Joliet they are impressed with our efforts to rehabilitate them. They know we are sincere. The prisoners threw their efforts in and not only did we have individual talents of every type in the prison, but because we have all these courses, plumbing, carpentry and so forth, we were able to train the people we needed, that we were short of.

We took these old cells and literally pulled their guts out, put in new plumbing, doubled each one in size, so that now every cell in Joliet has a toilet, a sink, a bed, a table and a desk, with artificial light, of course, so that prisoners can study in their cells. They can read and they can write.

Talking about writing, just let me digress. For some strange reason, the prisoners in our Ontario reformatories are allowed a very restricted number of letters—I believe it is one a week.

And once again, we come back to this matter of rehabilitation. There is no need to restrict the number of letters a prisoner sends out. If ever someone needs contact with the outside world, it is a prisoner—particularly in our Ontario jails where they are not allowed free access to visitors as they are in more enlightened institutions.

The complaint has been that some of the prisoners become inveterate letter writers and send letters out by the dozen, but in actual experience this is not true. Less than one in a thousand has become a problem in letter writing.

Here is one restriction that could be changed today, Mr. Chairman, if the Minister wanted to, which would improve the morale of the prisoners tremendously and at no great cost. If you must censor the letters, fine, put an extra censor on to read the extra mail that goes out. There is no reason why the prisoners should not be allowed to communicate. This would be a very important factor in rehabilitation.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): I wish the member would deal with the telephones they installed. Has he seen those?

Mr. Shulman: No, I have not seen any telephones in any of the cells I have had the privilege of visiting.

Mr. Sopha: Visitors have to talk to inmates through telephones.

Mr. Shulman: Ah, yes, well, of course, once again this is the old—

Mr. Sopha: The greatest assault on human dignity.

Mr. Shulman: —antiquated philosophy. Avoid contact, keep the prisoners away from their families, keep the prisoners away from their relatives, and this—

Mr. Sopha: This is the tyranny of electronics.

Mr. Shulman: This is the wrong attitude. What we should be doing is getting those prisoners in contact, not keeping them away.

There are jails in this province where the prisoners and visiting relatives cannot even see each other. A type of screening is used so that the prisoner can see out to see who is visiting him, but the visitor can only see a shadow—can just see the prisoner's face.

I know of two of those. One of them I mentioned here last year and the Minister said he would see if something could be done about it. Another one I just visited a short while ago in exactly the same situation. The whole attitude is wrong.

What I am saying is: prisons are a fading idea in other jurisdictions—they are trying to get rid of the prisons. Here in Ontario we are about to embark on a programme of building regional centres.

Goodness knows how many regional centres. Goodness knows how much money is going to go into all those regional centres. First of all, we should be doing something—fast—something you are not going to have to wait 20 years for, and I understand you have a 20-year programme to get all these regional centres built because you cannot get the money out of your Cabinet.

What you should be doing now is renovating the old ones, making them liveable, making them habitable, and a great deal could be done. The Don is the outstanding example of where a tremendous amount can be done with a reasonable amount of money.

At least put water in the cells; at least put toilets in the cells; at least put in facilities so the prisoners can write and can sit down and read. You can do this with prison labour; you can do this with prison instruction; bring in a master mechanic to oversee it; bring in an architect to oversee it; but it is not necessary to spend millions and millions of dollars, and more importantly, to wait the 20 years that you are going to have to wait for your programmes.

But the disturbing thing about the whole programme is that the concept is wrong. While in other areas we are getting rid of this type of prison; while we are trying to bring the prisoner out of the prison, here we are thinking in a programme of building prisons—very true. There are going to be regional centres where ultimately—goodness knows when, with the present Minister—there will be a reasonable number of people going out to work, and a reasonable number of people going out to school. I presume this will be up in the thousands in due course, but the whole philosophy is wrong, and the Minister knows it.

I have a book here called "Modern Advances in Criminology"; it was published here in Toronto in 1964-1965, and I read from page 5:

The whole concept of the institutional control of leisure time, nights and weekends, rather than of the total banishment to prison, promises more effective community protection from certain types of criminals and reduces the proportion of offenders who have to be so banished.

Attendance centres, detention centres, the citizenship training programme in Boston, the weekend imprisonment in Belgium and in Scandinavia, and similar correctional developments are examples.

This is what we should be working on—methods of keeping the prisoner in contact with the world, in contact with his family, but controlling his leisure time so he will not get into the various difficulties which, unfortunately, these prisoners have gotten into.

Incidentally what type of prisoners can be used for this work-out programme? It is not just those convicted of innocuous offences like non-support or driving with a revoked licence. In California, they have put on this programme of sending to work every day prisoners convicted of narcotic violations, burglary, armed robbery and even sex crimes—and it has worked. It just points out the individual potential for adequate performance on his work furlough programme, regardless of what the crime was that was committed.

Now I am going to come to a subject upon which the Minister and I disagree absolutely, and yet it is vital to any programme of rehabilitation; it is sex.

Last year I rose in this House and suggested to the Minister that we would not get any adequate programme of rehabilitation unless some arrangement was made for conjugal visits. The Minister—I may not be quoting him exactly—was quite in disagreement with this. In fact he found the whole idea disgusting—I believe that was the word he used. I entered a bill to that effect earlier in this Legislature, and the one paper that reported it stated "Shulman advocates sex life for prisoners."

Of course, this is not the situation at all. The prisoners are having a sex life; they are having a homosexual life and they are going to consider having a homosexual life. There is nothing more debilitating to morale for a normal male than to be forced to get his sexual satisfaction that way.

We have to have an adequate programme of either allowing the prisoners to visit at home or allowing their wives to visit them. Otherwise, the homosexuality in your prisons, in the prisons of all jurisdictions which are run in this way, will remain rampant. I look at what happens here in the Ontario prisons, and it sickens me. We had a situation in Burwash just a few weeks ago where five prisoners raped—that is the only word—another prisoner, a male. The response of the department was to call in the police and lay charges against these prisoners. They were then transferred to a jail, where again they are not in individual cells, where again they are mixing with other prisoners, where again their appetites are not going to be suppressed, where again other prisoners—perhaps innocent prisoners in a jail, people who have not been convicted—are going to suffer as a result of this. What an archaic outlook.

It all comes back, not that you are not treating the homosexuals correctly in the prisons—I do not think you are treating anybody correctly in the prisons—but that your programme is no good. You have to do something about this very, very serious problem. You cannot just shove it under the rug and say from the time you are convicted until the time you come out, you are not going to have any sex. It is not possible. They are going to have it in prison, one way or the other, and all you are doing is producing homosexuality, some of which will persist after they leave the prison and return to ordinary home life. It is unnecessary. It is not as though this is a wild new idea. It has been tried, time and time again.

I have a wonderful book here; I am sure even the Minister will accept its validity. It is the "Law of Criminal Correction", just published last year and written by a group of very eminent men, Saul Reuben, president of the National Council on Crime and Delinquency; Henry Whihoffan, professor of law at the University of New Mexico; George Edwards, the commissioner of police in Detroit, formerly justice of the Supreme Court of Michigan and Simon Rosenzweig, member of the New York Bar. The first edition was published in 1963, and a revised edition was published last year.

What they are doing is drawing from experience all over the United States, all over the world in fact. This is what they say—and it is such common sense—about contact with the outside world, and here is where the Minister has made his most serious error:

Prison administration support of a corrective treatment help inmate welfare in an institutional morale by keeping inmates in touch with the outside world through radio and television and newspapers, motion pictures, magazines and books. Even more important is the personal relationship derived from visits by family and friends and from correspondence. The denial of wholesome relationships with one or more helpful persons in the world outside the prison is cruel, punitive and a violation of psychological rights. Such conditions of mental duress can be as devastating to the inmate as physical punishment.

Then it describes some of the more backward atmospheres where prisoners must only talk through a telephone or across a barrier, and it goes on:

In a few institutions, the prisoner and visitor sit together in a comfortable atmosphere without any barrier or across the table from each other.

Let me tell you how they solved this problem in Joliet, that of visitors smuggling in contraband, which is the reason for the maintenance of isolation. Every visitor who arrives there is searched, regardless of who they are.

I arrived at the prison, where you go past a machine that gives a clink if you are carrying a weapon. After you are past the machine, a guard searches you from top to toe. You are forced to leave everything in your pockets that might be of contraband use inside the prison, such as a lighter, even cigarettes, and then you pick them up on your way out. This is the answer. When the visitor is allowed in, he is allowed contact with the prisoner he is visiting. This is a more sensible way of doing it. But they go on:

The most liberal country in regards to visits permitted within the prison is Sweden. In open institutions, lengthy visits are permitted each Sunday, unsupervised in the cell. Prison cells in Sweden, unlike those in the United States, have solid walls and doors. Several other countries permit conjugal visiting of this kind, among them Chile, Argentina and Mexico.

In several countries certain categories of prisoners are allowed to have their families live with them. The wardens explain the practice very simply: these policies support family life and morale. In the United States, about one half of the persons committed on felony convictions are married. Although it is usually said that such a plan would be contrary to the mores in this country, the statement is not self-evident. Family life is as cherished here as elsewhere, rather it appears that visiting before spouses and visiting in general is part of a trend toward more relaxed supervision, especially for minimum-custody prisoners.

As prisons improve in their classification methods and they are able to provide better physical facilities, visiting would probably become more informal for many prisoners. In federal prisons handshaking, embracing and kissing by immediate members of the family may be permitted within bounds of good taste. The California adult authority now has tacitly permitted in two institutions extended private visits by spouses, during which sexual contact may be occurring. Perhaps the better solution for the United States is the expanded use of prisoners' furloughs home, next discussed.

Well, they are coming to grips with the problem. There is a problem and our ignoring it is not going to make it go away. It is just going to go off in the channel, which we really do not want.

You should do one of two things. You should either allow conjugal visits, or you should allow furloughs home for good behaviour. And there is nothing wrong with it if we get away from the concept that this nation has held for so many years, that prisons are for punishment. If they are for punishment, then everything I have said is invalid. But if they are really for rehabilitation, if it is not just lip service that you have been giving to it all this time, then check the major problems.

Do not pretend, which is what you have been doing. Do not pretend by making a gesture, in allowing a few prisoners to go to university, because you are not even touching the problem. I am sure that you and your deputy are aware of this; I am aware that you are both highly versed in the problems. If it is a matter that you cannot convince the Cabinet, then get up and say it and we will criticize you no more; we will understand you are doing your best. But if you do not understand the problem, then we are going to have to continue to badger you and be asking you to do something, because your prison system here is the worst.

What improvements can be made, what should we do? I have another great book here that has just been published. It is called, "The Crime of Punishment." It was written by Carl Meninger, M.D., who has spent a lifetime studying this very problem. He must have been in Ontario because the prisons he describes, and scenes he describes, and the abuses that he describes in this book come straight out of our jails.

Case after case that he mentions here, we have similar cases in Ontario. And he says here, in his final chapter:

Way back in 1870, a hundred years ago, a group of remarkable men set down a statement of 22 principles for the running of prisons. And here are four of them:

1. Reformation, not vindictive suffering, should be the purpose of the penal treatment of prisoners.

2. The prisoner should be made to realize that his destiny is in his own hands.

3. Prison discipline should be such as to gain the will of the prisoner and conserve his self respect.

4. The aim of the prison should be to make industrious free men rather than orderly and obedient prisoners.

This is where we have gone wrong, because the first aim—and the wardens will confess this to you—is to produce orderly and obedient prisoners. Their great fear is a riot, because it brings down public complaints. MPP's come visiting and there are questions in the House. Of course, it is important, we do not want riots in the prisons, but that should be a secondary consideration. The important thing should be to rehabilitate these men so that they do not come back time, and time, and time again, which is what is happening now.

So, get them out of the prisons. The ones you have to keep in, treat like human beings. Teach them a trade that they can use when they go out to earn a living. One more thing, which is really what Meninger wrote his book about, is a thing called the "diagnostic centre". This is where we have failed, again in Ontario.

Let me quote from Dr. Meninger:

In my opinion the most promising improvement in recent years is the diagnostic centre. Most prisons have reception wings or units where a certain amount of diagnosis is carried on, but there are only a few reception centres operated as separate and distinct facilities, and not all of these serve as a candidate's reception and diagnostic centre does.

Facilities of this type combine personality evaluation, social investigation, psychological testing, industrial and vocational appraisal and guidance or assignment, and many other functions. In other words, a group of social scientists, including psychiatrists, psychologists, social workers, and others, are permitted to make an unpressured examination of the offender and of the situation in which his offence was generated and executed.

His personality assets and liabilities are carefully appraised and compared to the assets and liabilities of the social environment in which he has lived. In Kansas sentences have already been pronounced when the prisoner is referred to the diagnostic centre for study, but the sentence can be, and frequently is, changed by the judge when there are indications that a better disposition might be made, one which would offer more towards the prisoner's rehabilitation and society's safety.

He goes on to explain that as a result of this study each prisoner is put in the slot where he is most likely to be rehabilitated. Compare that to Guelph. Six weeks ago the member for Lakeshore and I drove to Guelph. We went down to the detention cells and to each prisoner in those cells and we said, "Why are you down here?" They explained the particular infraction of the regulations that had brought them down here. In answer to, "What do you do when you are in the prison?" it was revealed that not one of those prisoners was taking a trade. They were all working, working at some foolish work, work to pass the time, something to keep them busy.

We said, "How did you happen to be doing that?" They said, "The first day we came to Guelph they explained to us what the various things were that were available and they asked which we would like to do." Three of those prisoners had expressed a wish to do one of the various things and they said, "We are sorry, that is filled up, there is only room for ten in there and that is all filled." So, they put one into the kitchen peeling potatoes, or they put another into the laundry carrying the clothes.

So here this little effort at Guelph and at other institutions—a gesture is all it is; it cannot compare to a true diagnostic centre. Mr. Minister, if you really seriously want to do anything about rehabilitation, forget about one of your regional centres and take that money and hire the staff you need and put them in a proper diagnostic centre. It will save you an awful lot of clients over the next 10 or 20 years, far more than the finest and most beautiful regional detention centre in the world. This is one thing we need; this is where you have fallen down.

Let me say a word now about staff. The Minister is fortunate; he has a dedicated staff. This has become very obvious as we have gone around the province. From the Deputy down, I have the impression that practically everybody is doing their best, but you do not train them properly. You are training them in the wrong way; you are training them towards holding the prisoners. There are one or two exceptions, let me say, but basically they are a good group of people.

They do not get enough money, the pay is too low, as is true of so many departments in government. You cannot hope to attract the professional types which you need to really put into use a practical rehabilitation programme, unless you change your priorities. Put a little more into staff—hire the psychologists, the psychiatrists—but the money you are willing to pay is so inadequate that it is impossible to get an adequate staff; it is out of the question.

Why should they not go over to Buffalo where they can get twice as much? Why should they not go to other jurisdictions? Of course, they are not going to stay here. You have got to pay more. If you cannot get the money out of Treasury, divert it within your own department; this is a prime need.

I have spoken for longer than I had expected but I want to say that a diagnostic centre is not a rare thing. I have here a book from Dr. Arthur Hoffman, a state criminologist. How many criminologists do you employ by the way?

Dr. Hoffman is a state criminologist in Illinois who set up a diagnostic centre for that state and tremendous work has been done there. Tremendous help has been given to their Attorney General in cutting down the number of people who return.

In conclusion, let me say through you, Mr. Chairman, to the Minister, gestures are not enough, you have not really scratched the surface, you have not even tickled the surface.

If you really seriously want to solve this problem and not just want to get a few nice clippings in the press, make the changes you have to make, get rid of your prisoners. I do not really think you want them; treat them more humanely; allow them to have proper visiting, more frequent visiting; allow them to write letters; allow them conjugal visits; allow them to go out and work; allow them to go to school; allow them furloughs home; you are not going to have more crimes.

Sure, you will have a few people complaining that you are coddling the prisoners—those horrible things they did and look what they are doing now, they are coddling them—but this should not be your interest. Your interest should be to cut down the rate of crime in this province and you are the one man who can do it. You can do it by treating the prisoners in a way that will rehabilitate them, not just keep them locked away like vegetables. Thank you.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Mr. Chairman, the two hon. members who have just spoken are entitled to have dealt with some of the questions they presented to me.

First, I want to thank the hon. member for Essex-Kent (Mr. Ruston) for the complimentary remarks with which he started off his address on these estimates. I must say that I have always found him to be constructive in his criticism.

I must say that when he has had some matters which concerned him about some of our institutions, he has brought them to my attention, and I have done everything I could to satisfy him that if they were not being done in the proper fashion, they would be corrected. That is the kind of criticism I think a responsible member not only should engage in, but it is his duty to engage in it.

He has asked some questions, and the hon. member for Essex-Kent, in asking his questions, did not engage in any gross exaggerations or, as one of the hon. members opposite sometimes put it, in hyperbole to make his point. He asked some questions about staff training and he stated he was a little concerned about the fact that there was a low proportion of our staff who were taking staff training.

I would refer him to page 13 of the annual report. I am sure he will see that there is a total of over 700 of our staff engaged in some sort of training in addition to those in in-service training.

He also asked whether visits are encouraged, especially in relation to education. I would advise the hon. member that—and he would find this, too, in the annual report, page 61—it is indicated that over 4,000 visitors visited during the year. In connection with education, I would also be pleased to advise him that we invite speakers from the community and, especially at our women's institutions, use volunteers who are interested and responsible and, of course, knowledgeable in these matters.

We also have speakers from unions, from management, from art galleries and various facets of our community visit various of our institutions to explain those matters and lecture at the institution to the staff and the inmates on those matters which it is deemed advisable to make them knowledgeable.

He also asked the specific question about just how effective or to what extent the changeover in our takeover of the county jails produced more books for the county jail libraries. Am I right, is this what the hon. member asked?

I have a list here and, to date, since taking over the county jails, there have been 4,265 new books issued to the county jails. I might also state that all of our institutions, jails and reformatories have been supplied with catalogues of books in various languages, French, German, Polish, Finnish, Estonian, Hungarian and so on. I am sure he will find this list very informative. I will send this over to the hon. member.

There is also a list of books which are provided to the inmates. There are two catalogues, one which has a psychedelic cover manufactured by one of the inmates.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. member also concerned himself—and quite properly, if he is worried about this particular subject—about the confidentiality of clinical records. That is, he was concerned about whether these are made available to people to whom they should not be made available. I want to assure him that these are definitely kept confidential.

The department's policy is that no data from such records are released without the written consent of the inmate and, in some cases, only because of a court order. As a matter of fact, I think it was last year or two years ago, I was served three or four times with subpoenas to deliver up some records because the lawyer who was defending a client in a murder case insisted on our department making available the social history evaluation by the clinical staff of our department for the help of his client.

We refused to deliver them up, because in our view this could upset the whole purpose of our treatment programme. Obviously, if it becomes apparent to the inmates that this could become public property the whole programme would lose its value. However, in this particular case, a Justice of the High Court called—I do not remember his name, I do not think it is important—and he said he hoped he would not have to issue an order but he would do so if it were necessary. He asked us if we would consent to have someone come down from the department and make the records available in his chambers, where the Crown and the defence attorney could look at the records and decide whether, in fact, some of it should be produced.

I am merely pointing this out in order to establish just how we stand about keeping these records confidential.

In this respect we have had some difficulties. There is even within the department—

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Did the Minister comply?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I complied with that order. I mean, it was a Justice of the High Court.

Mr. Ben: It was not appealed?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well—I am advised it was a county court judge. I think when a man is defending someone on a charge of murder that if the county court judge feels it is important enough, particularly when the records are not being made public and they are being considered within the judge's chambers—in a case like that, I think it is understandable that we should make an exception. In any case, if the judge had issued an order, certainly as a Minister of the Crown, I am not going to disregard the court order. I would not do it.

Mr. Ben: May I ask the Minister a question? On this very important point, do I understand that simply because a judge ordered the Minister to do something which he had deemed in his own conscience and in keeping with the philosophy of his department, to be wrong, the Minister did it without taking it to a higher court? Is that his philosophy? "We won't do it, but if we do it we will do it in secret and won't tell anybody"?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The first question the hon. member asked was whether I would feel it incumbent upon me to produce such a file if a judge ordered it. My answer is yes.

Mr. Ben: Without taking it to appeal?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: My answer is yes. I am not a lawyer and perhaps my colleague, the Attorney General, may disagree with me. I do not know. The member has asked me my opinion and I have given it.

Mr. Sopha: Did the Minister ask the Attorney General at the time?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes. As a matter of fact, I am reminded, I spoke to the Deputy and I think I spoke to the Attorney General at the time. That is right.

Mr. Sopha: And the Attorney General advised you—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It was his view that under the circumstances I should do this.

Mr. Ben: And he told you to reveal those records?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is right.

Mr. Ben: My goodness! Pretty soon you will be selling them like you sell licence registrations.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, we do not sell them. The hon. member asked a question and I gave him an honest answer.

Mr. Sopha: That pair will never get a badge for defending civil liberty.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: My son, just today, passed his bar examinations. I presume he will take those cases, rather than his father. I am not qualified to do it.

I was beginning to point out, when the hon. member stood up on his feet and asked a question, that this has been a problem within the department because there are even professional people within the department who feel that some of our non-professional people should not even be able to look at these records.

For this purpose, in September, 1968, a staff committee was appointed to examine this question and recommend policy which will provide maximum safeguards for the inmates and society within the framework of existing legislation. The committee included representatives of the professions of law, medicine, psychology and social work. The final report is expected to be in the hands of the Deputy Minister about the middle of this month.

The hon. member asked about the aversion therapy that is being carried out for pedophiles. I think he asked whether Doctor Steffy would be made available for questioning by members of the Legislature. I am sure that if we asked Doctor Steffy to appear before the committee on correctional services he would be pleased to come. If the Chairman requests that, that can be arranged.

The hon. member for Essex-Kent also referred to the fact that he did not think there was enough information coming out of the A. G. Brown Memorial Clinic, that there was not enough reaching the public at large, and I agree wholeheartedly with him. But there is not a thing I can do about it. We have done all we can. We have even an annual conference on addictions to which are invited world-famous lecturers. All the members of the Legislature are invited every year to attend this. Quite frankly, I do not remember seeing anyone there. I hope some of them have been there and I just missed them.

We have done all we can. In this respect I recall the former leader of the Liberal Party, now Senator Thompson, who, and I was very appreciative of what he said, thought that the department was doing a tremendously difficult job and not getting enough credit for it. He even suggested (if you go back in Hansard you may even find it, and I am sure you will) that if necessary we hire a public relations firm. I remember he even mentioned that he would not mind if we got—I think he said—McKim and Co. to do the job, because he thought we should allow the work that was being done to be better known to the public. There is nothing we can do about it. We do everything we can to let the public know what is going on in our institutions.

Now I suppose I should thank the hon. member for High Park for the kind remarks he started to make. As I mentioned, I was waiting for the other shoe to drop—

Mr. Sopha: If you were, you are the most naive person present.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I was waiting for the other shoe to drop. It dropped of course.

I would say that the very, very faint praise—very faint praise coming from the member for High Park—considering his usual type of criticism—is a complete endorsement of the work of this department. I cannot think of it any other way.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): That is the kind of logic we expect from you.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Now he also suggested that we give an illusion of progress and that we—in fact the exact words he used were that we were deluding people. Now he is in fact suggesting—

Mr. MacDonald: Can you not quote some of your thank-you letters?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Oh, I could quote a lot of them. He is, in fact, suggesting that we are deluding such experts as the Elizabeth Fry Society, the John Howard Society, the Canadian Association of Corrections and most other knowledgeable people in the corrections field in this country.

As a matter of fact, if he has followed the correctional journals in the last four or five years, he will have noticed that, whereas a few years ago these correctional people stressed the view that more responsibility should be taken by the federal government, more of this work should now be taken over by the provincial government because, as they put it:

Because of the progress made in the province of Ontario, these views are changing and there are many aspects of this work they now feel should not be taken over, but that some of the work being done by the federal government should be taken over by the provinces.

So, if I am in fact deluding people, I am deluding some pretty good experts. Now he also made—

Mr. Ben: You are very good at it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He said that we keep passing the buck to the federal people, that we say: "We cannot do this until the federal people pass certain law". Now I do not know why this is so difficult to understand. I pointed out last year and the year before, that for five years we have been making representations to the federal government.

Mr. Shulman: You said the same thing about the money you were paying them.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, no. I think if the hon. member goes into Hansard he will find out that we wanted to have it as part of the same programme. To be fair, we were asking the federal government to pass this legislation and we wanted to put into effect legislation here which, in conjunction with enabling federal legislation, would allow us to do the things the hon. member was talking about.

The federal government, now has, as I pointed out in my opening remarks, a bill before the House of Commons, and we cannot do these things except in the cumbersome fashion I mentioned in my opening remarks.

Mr. Shulman: You have gone ahead and raised the pay—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, because we know this bill is going to be passed.

Mr. Shulman: You mean to say, that you are doing something illegal.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It is in second reading and it will be three months before we put this into effect. In the meantime, we are setting up the machinery for it.

Mr. Shulman: Are you suggesting that if this bill is not passed you will not raise the prisoners' pay?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well that may be possible, because it may be difficult.

Mr. Shulman: It is yes or no, are you going to break the law?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: This is a hypothetical question; the fact is it has received second reading in the House of Commons and it will be passed.

Mr. Shulman: It is exactly the same situation—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It is not the same situation. We need this legislation. If you will read those two sections of The Correctional Services Act, for which we voted, which was unanimously passed by this House—we have held up the proclamation of those two sections 19 and 20, because we cannot legally put them into force until we get federal legislation which is now forthcoming.

That was fairly simple I thought and I think it is fairly simple to the hon. member too, but I think he was deliberately trying to confuse the issue.

Now there is one thing that does bother me particularly. That is the suggestion that this arrangement we had made with this young man in Don Jail to go to university during the daytime and come back to Don Jail at night, that we used it for publicity purposes.

This is absolutely not so. He was warned personally that one of the conditions of allowing him to do this was that he was not to speak to any newspapermen.

Mr. Shulman: He did not.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He did. He not only spoke to them, but he posed for a picture.

Mr. Shulman: He was walking out of the jail.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Oh well, we put all sorts of restrictions at the jail to make sure the newspapermen could not get to him. But they got to him. An enterprising newspaperman got to him and we did not—

Mr. MacDonald: Maybe he is like the Minister—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —and we did not have anything to do with that at all. In fact, we were much upset at it and let me point out—

Mr. MacDonald: He fights off publicity all the time.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, I do not fight off publicity, but where it is not good for the rehabilitation of the inmate, we would never do such a thing.

Let me point out too this was something like the situation in Brampton, where we have these young boys going to the local schools. A newspaperman got wind of that at least two months—I think it was two months before this became public and we pleaded with him not to make this public.

We pleaded with him and he agreed to it, but he said: "If I find out that there is any possibility of this getting out, I am not going to be able to hold this. As a newspaperman I cannot do this".

Well then we prevailed upon him to give us an agreement that before he would do that, he would advise us. Two months later he advised us. He said: "I have been tipped off that there is a radio man locally who has heard about this and he is going to break the story". We therefore issued a press release so that we could get the story clear and there would be no misunderstanding about what was happening; so there would not be a garbled story.

Mr. Ben: You mean you did not give him a scoop after he said—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Pardon?

Mr. Ben: You mean you did not give him a scoop after he said he would do you the favour of sitting on the story.

Mr. Shulman: He will not trust you again.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, he put this story in when he thought he should and at that time we knew he was going to do it and we issued the press release at the same time.

In our view, we are moving faster in this jurisdiction than any other jurisdiction on the whole North American continent.

Mr. Shulman: That is self delusion.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Faster than any other jurisdiction in the whole North American continent.

Mr. Sopha: Too bad the television is not here for the commercial.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): That is right.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I think in respect of the Vanier Centre for women that would probably be true, and I quoted the Elizabeth Fry Society in that respect.

There is always this bugaboo coming up every session about the licence plates being a make-work project which does not teach anybody anything. The same question is asked, the same answer is given, and I suppose we will have to do it again.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): It is just an inadequate answer.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In the first place, I think the licence plates are made by most of the jurisdictions in the United States, probably even Illinois too. I do not know.

Mr. Shulman: Wrong, wrong. They will not allow it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am not wrong.

Mr. Shulman. They will not allow it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, all right, we will talk about Illinois in a few moments. The licence plates are made at Millbrook where we have the very difficult cases, where we send those who will not take any instructions at any institution.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Aside from the sex cases, those are the behavioural problems that get to Millbrook from every other institution.

Mr. Ben: May I ask the Minister a question at this point?

Would he give us the figures for the number of alcoholics, drug addicts, and others that are in there at the present time?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If the hon. member will give me a chance—drug addicts, sex deviates, arsonists, and the escape risks and the ones who are behavioural problems in the other institutions.

Mr. Ben: Aside from the last category, how many of the others—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Which others?

Mr. Ben: The ones I think to be slightly abnormal. The pedophiles, the drug addicts, the alcoholics.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: As of March 2, there were, in Millbrook: behaviour problems 64, sex deviates 61, drug addicts 27, escape risks 45, arsonists 15.

Mr. Shulman: Your very figures belie what you just said.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: They do not belie it at all. If the hon. member will just give me a chance to make my case. There is nothing wrong with making licence plates. A lot of these people need to learn good work habits. They have to learn what the chances are. When they get out of that institution, they are going to be employed in factories.

They are going to have to get up in the morning, they are going to have to learn to do a morning's work, that they get so much time out for lunch, and they are going to have to go back in the afternoon and work. And when they do a day's work, they are tired, they have supper, have a couple of hours of recreation and go to bed. These are good work habits.

Mr. Shulman: Would the Minister allow a question? Can these prisoners not learn the same good work habits by going into a machine shop, and learning how to use machine tools, or to work on a car, as they can by going in and punching licence plates?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, I thought I made it quite clear, Mr. Chairman, that this has been tried with most of these people. They will not take instructions from anyone. Every sanction has been tried against them to keep them within the discipline of an organization. They will not take instructions from a correctional officer; they will abuse a correctional officer. They abuse the rules, they abuse the regulations and they have to go into our only maximum security institution.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): You abuse them. The overwhelming majority at Millbrook are amenable people.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Of course, I am talking about the behavioural risks, the danger risks, the arsonists, and so on. And certainly the sex deviates.

Mr. Ben: Oh, come on—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Just a moment, please. The fact is we do not have any place to keep sex deviates at this time, except in a maximum security institution. I have pointed out to the hon. members that we are making arrangements in this changeover of the whole system, at the Maplehurst centre and the Mimico clinics, to provide for all of the sex deviates to go to Maplehurst.

We have to have our priorities, so the ones we are dealing with now are the ones that are the greatest danger to the public, the pedophiles. These are the ones that are being treated, that are brought out of Millbrook in the last portion of their sentences and are being treated. This is the priority. Of course, we would rather have the sex deviates at a clinic, and this is what is going to be provided for them. We cannot do all this overnight. We have to, as I say, look after our priorities.

Mr. Ben: You said that in 1965, too.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Of course, 1965. Well, this is 1969. There are a lot of other things we have done since 1965, a lot of other things.

I think I have already dealt with the matter of attempting to get cheap publicity. I do not think the hon. member used this word, but I know that I could take some lessons from the hon. member in modesty and aversion to publicity. I do not think he should have brought this up.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Let us get to Joliet, this great haven.

Mr. Shulman: It is not a cure haven.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It is the place where they cure everybody. It has the most modern system in the world.

Mr. Shulman: I think it is a good place compared to your institutions.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What the hon. member did is an old trick. I have done this circuit. I have been around—

Mr. Shulman: What did you learn?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What have I learned? I learned that there are some places where they have some programmes which we might try and some which we are already doing. I have seen a lot of places where they could very well try some of the things which we have been doing, and they have not been thinking about for years.

I do know this, that whereas we have, in our statement of purpose, aimed towards the objective of having no institution which will accommodate more than 200, these same so-called progressive jurisdictions, are presently building institutions to hold 2,000-3,000 people.

Mr. Shulman: There is nothing inherently evil about that.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There is. Yes, there is. It just proves the hon. member has not done his research. I have been to Scandinavia, too, and the year I was there—I think it was three or four years ago—they had just completed a prison for, I think it was 2,000 or 2,500 people. Any responsible person in corrections will tell you publicly that it is the worst thing in the world to have a large institution. This is our problem with Guelph.

Mr. Ben: They are probably all capitalists.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Because where you have large institutions, there is, of course, apt to be a preoccupation with security. This is the big problem, and our problem is to attempt to reduce the size of the institutions.

Mr. J. Renwick: The Minister is not comparing Guelph with the institutions which you have referred to.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No. I was talking about the matter of size.

Mr. J. Renwick: It depends entirely upon the internal organization as to how it operates.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I was talking about the fact that we had an objective which we are working towards, and rather successfully, to reduce the size of institutions. Other jurisdictions have not even thought about it because it is too costly. And comparing one jurisdiction with another can be very, very tricky.

Mr. J. Renwick: The member for High Park was very selective.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I know he was selective. He chose a very good one in Illinois.

Mr. J. Renwick: You said he chose the correct one.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Let me tell you about Illinois. You see, what he did was choose one institution in the state system of Illinois, but forget all the other institutions. I would compare—

Mr. Sopha: What is this, a tour of American prisons?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Our Brampton training centre would compare very favourably with Joliet or any other institution. I think we have now five training centres similar to Brampton.

Mr. Sopha: You are wasting our time.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am not wasting anyone's time. The hon. member was giving the impression that Illinois had great progressive programmes which we do not have here.

Mr. Shulman: Obviously the Minister did not hear my speech. Perhaps he would like me to repeat it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, do not bother. I heard it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There was an obvious attempt to give the impression that the whole state of Illinois was doing this. In the first place he talked about—

An hon. member: You were not listening.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I was listening. In the first place he talked about Joliet, which is a state prison, and then he said they keep an old cell, an old jail cell. A jail is not a state reformatory. This is what the hon. member was doing—he kept confusing jails and reformatories in the minds of his listeners, not those of us who are aware of what is going on.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: This is what he was doing. He said that they kept an old jail cell to show what jails were like before.

Mr. Shulman: This was in Joliet.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In Joliet, which is a reformatory.

Mr. Shulman: I wish you were as good at your job as you are at semantics.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The hon. member said a jail cell. He could go into our institutions that have individual cells.

Mr. Shulman: They all have individual cells.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Of course, we have individual cells and if he thinks that lavatory service is a great and important thing, they have them in our individual cells. The hon. member need not bother. I got his point.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order.

Mr. D. H. Morrow (Ottawa West): Sit down. You have made your point.

Mr. Shulman: I would not want him to be misled or to mislead the House. The point I made was that there was no longer a single cell in all of Joliet which does not have the amenities of water, a toilet, a table, and lighting. The warden of that place pointed out that it was all done by their own individual labour within the reformatory, the jail, the prison, call it what you will. You have not done it here.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We have it in Millbrook.

Mr. Shulman: You have not done it in the old buildings where you could have done it right here in the city.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Neither has Illinois. Well, now, am I hearing differently? The hon. member just said he was pointing out that it was only in Joliet.

Mr. Shulman: I went to three of the prisons in Illinois.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Just a moment!

Mr. Shulman: Joliet consists of a complex of—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I have been in Cook County jail.

Mr. Sopha: On a point of order! It is very interesting to hear that the prisoners in Joliet have more amenities by way of private accommodation than members of the Ontario Legislature.

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): Talking about carpets, now toilets—how about hot and cold running chambermaids.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I could read to the hon. member, but I will not bother, about an investigation now being held in the Cook County jail which I saw myself—I do not want to criticize other jurisdictions; they have their problems. Of course, the hon. member could go to some jurisdiction and say they have a good programme in this particular area and then compare it with some programme in our own jurisdiction—

Mr. Shulman: You should compare us with the best and not the worst.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Will the hon. member please let me finish! I listened to him for over half an hour. We are moving towards not only equalling, but exceeding, the best.

Mr. Shulman: You are too slow.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We took over the jails in July, 1968, and the hon. member is talking about making some changes. We have been making changes in those jails ever since we took them over.

Mr. Shulman: Inadequate changes; merely gestures.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: This is a fruitless discussion.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please! Perhaps we could permit the hon. Minister to reply to the points raised by the two lead-off speakers. Let him answer the question, then we will get on with the estimates. The hon. Minister, please.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, let me repeat that the same discussion about the jails went on last year. It was said we were going to take them over; we took them over. We have 35 county and 2 city jails; 27 of them pre-date Confederation. We are carrying on a programme of renewal, replacement and renovation. It is being carried on actively now. There are many jails in this province which, since July, 1968, have had a lot of money put into them. New ones are planned in some of the areas and, as far as we know, we are the only jurisdiction in North America (aside from, perhaps, one or two of the small Maritime provinces), of any reasonable size, which has taken the forward step of taking over all the county jails. No state in the American union has done this, in spite of the pressure from all correctional people there for 50 years. We have taken them over to integrate them into one system.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Sure, because they were in such a deplorable state.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, it is the same on the other side.

Mr. Chairman, I think that deals with most of the questions that were asked.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, since we last discussed the Minister's estimates, I have observed the innovation that was earlier referred to—some comment has been made by my friend for High Park about it—and that is the innovation introduced into the jails of the method of communication between visitors and the inmates.

One observes now that when wives and those permitted to come and visit people in custody—and they appear to be a very restricted group—apparently there has to be either a relationship by marriage or by blood. I have never quite understood that aspect of the regulations, but certainly the number of people to whom an inmate may be exposed from outside of the jail is severely limited.

However, one observes that when they come, they observe their relative or husband through a glass partition and communicate with them with an instrument that resembles a telephone. Of course, the impact upon me is at least twofold. In the first place, it is the tyranny of technology. Somebody in the civil service, in the Minister's department, was captivated by the introduction of technology and decided with a capital G and a capital T that it would be a Good Thing to introduce it. The other side of the coin is the assault on human dignity, the dehumanization and depersonalization of the inmate and the person on the outside who has not committed any offence at all.

Look at it from the point of view of the indignity heaped upon the innocent person outside. It assaults one's sense of reason and humanity when one conjectures in the mind of the person—the mother, the sweetheart, the wife, the child, who has committed no offence against the law at all—to go into a public institution, a government institution, and be asked to speak to the person they have come to see through a telephone while looking at him. That, of course, is part of the creeping process throughout society of the tyranny of technology, which inflicts itself upon all of us.

Then the second aspect of it, of course, is the impression given one of the importance of the institution. The institution is all, and the individual is nothing; he recedes into unimportance compared to the regulations, the designing of the device, its installation, its becoming part of the bricks and mortar, the institution. In other words, those who work for the Minister see the institution as being all important. It must be terribly efficient; it must function in an orderly manner. The Minister is going to get up and say—I am not even inviting a reply from him; I am merely reporting what I see as I make those frequent visits to the jail. He is going to get up and say it is in the name of holy security—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, I am not.

Mr. Sopha: —that he puts this glass partition between the two and they address each other through the telephone instrument. But again it is the pre-eminence of the institution. That is what we do with individuals: we bring them into the institution and impress upon them the importance of the institution in their lives; they are subject to the institution, and when they come into one of the jails they are subject to that brick fortress in which he keeps them and to all his staff and the organization. That, too, is part of the process of the assault on human dignity. There is the true impact. I thought it was an abomination when I saw this thing introduced. A couple of years ago, it was another little device. Somebody in the civil service in that department dreamed up that everybody who comes to see an inmate has to sign a name.

You know, I said to my friend from Huron-Bruce that you had to sign your name to see a person, and I thought if I have the time and the courage to go there as counsel—it would take more time than courage—I might refuse to sign my name and then talk to Mr. Grossman about deprivation of the right to see my client. That would be an interesting conflict, because the right to see your client is a pre-eminent right in the law to Mr. Grossman's regulation. If I refused to sign my name and said, "To hell with you; I am not signing your book. Now you take the steps, Mr. Governor, to prevent me from seeing my client."—but I have not got the time to engage in those nice questions of civil rights. I am too busy here to do it.

The last thing I want to tell you, the last indignity was that when I was told—let me carefully say and let us underline it in Hansard that it was not the governor of the district jail in Sudbury who told me; it was not that excellent servant, Mr. Farquhar. He did not tell me. I was told by a governor of a jail—and I did not say district jail this time, you see, because I do not want them to track me—a governor of a jail told me that when they put in their infernal electronic devices, those devices of communication between the visitor and the prisoner, they offered to tap them if he wanted. It was a sort of an option, like getting power steering on your car. Yes, offered to tap them so that the governor and those who worked under him could listen in on the conversation, and he, being an honourable man, refused.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Who made the offer?

Mr. Sopha: The people installing them at the behest of your department.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, that is wrong.

Mr. Sopha: It is an option throughout Ontario. Maybe in Huron they tap them and in this other one I am not identifying they do not. So you had better watch out what you say if you do not know you are tapped, that you are wired to the governor's office. For all I know maybe in some of them they have got loud speakers for listening. But in all seriousness—I just illustrate, and the Minister will say I use hyperbole; of course I do—it shows the little concern for the dignity of the individual; how they trifle with dignity in the whole piece.

If he but had the sense—and I am not calling for any reply from him—he would give the order tomorrow to rip those glass partitions out, take out all those telephones and toss them in the garbage can—

Mr. Ben: Sell them second-hand.

Mr. Sopha: —and do what the member for High Park said, build a sitting room—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Oh, I thought the member meant search them.

Mr. Sopha: —and the visitors could come to see the people incarcerated in an institution, let them sit down in human dignity and have their conversations within the time limited. And if he was really sensible, if he was really progressive and far-seeing, while they were visiting them he would offer them a cup of tea.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, Mr. Chairman, I must deny right off the bat that our staff thinks more of the institution than they do of the people in their care. This is entirely wrong. It is entirely different from the approach which the whole department has been taking, and it is against everything they have been taught.

Now, in respect of the telephone system, I should tell the hon. member I agree with him. We are not happy with them. As a matter of fact, if he would only visit some of the jails we have been renovating recently, he would find a new system in effect.

We are testing some of the systems. With regard to signing your name, he must remember we are still running a penal institution, a penal system. I do not think you could do this without knowing the person who is coming into the institution.

As a matter of fact, the hon. member referred to the member for High Park, taking some of his advice. You will recall the hon. member for High Park said that when he went in to Joliet, everyone was searched and had everything removed from their pockets.

We do not do that. You walk into our institutions and you walk out of them. The least we can do is ask you for your name so we know who is going into the institutions in case something does happen.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister, during his reply, mentioned an institution in Scandinavia which has just been completed with a population of 2,000 or 2,500. I wonder if he would identify that? Where is it?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, I cannot remember the name of it. I will find out for the hon. member because I brought home some pamphlets.

Mr. Young: And the other question in connection with that: What is the internal organization of that institution? Does the Minister recall whether it is broken down into smaller community groups within the large institution, or is it simply one of these monstrosities that have been talked about all evening?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, honestly, Mr. Chairman, I cannot recall. I have visited so many institutions that one gets mixed up in my mind with another. I will tell the hon. member one of the problems. You get a picture of Scandinavia and you know they are very progressive in many areas, so that you cannot imagine they would do some of these things. I was shocked at one building—I think it was in Sweden—miles away from—

Mr. MacDonald: When was it built?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, now it would probably be about ten years old. It was about four or five years ago I was there. It was built 40 or 50 miles, if I recall, from the city. And there was a tremendous outcry at the time because they were going to build it near the city—I think it was Stockholm. The people in Stockholm said they did not want this kind of institution near the city. So much for the progressive approach. It depends on what is happening at the time.

And they were forced to go out and build it away out some place where they should not have, which is, I presume, what happened in Canada in some of these instances when these problems were faced.

But the hon. member knows they have a different approach, their mores are different. For example, the hon. member mentioned homosexuality. When I visited a training school in one of the Scandinavian countries—and I cannot remember the name of the country and even if I did I do not think it is important to mention here anyway, because, as I say, they have their ideas—there was some situation in one of the training schools which I thought was rather strange.

I asked the supervisor if he was not afraid of homosexual activity amongst the youngsters. He said: "Why, of course not, why should we be? This is part of the experience of growing up."

So to compare jurisdictions can be a very deceiving thing. It does not really give you a true picture.

Mr. Young: This is a boys' institution?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: This is a boys' training school. As a matter of fact, I will tell you something about one of the adult institutions, a very old prison in one of these countries, where some of the cells are open and they visit each other.

I asked the same question and he said: "Well, we do not concern ourselves with that. That man's morality is his own business. If he wants to visit the inmate down the corridor, that is his own business."

Well, of course, the hon. member will appreciate that, aside from the fact that their mores are different than here, that would also lend itself to reducing the security problem in that institution because there is more permissiveness in this area. And these are some of the problems we have to consider when you are comparing one jurisdiction with another.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, through you to the Minister, I was wondering, was there a surplus of money left over last year from the Minister's estimates? Was he looking for some things to do to spend some money?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That sounds like a trap.

Mr. Shulman: Yes, it is.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I do not fall into traps too easily.

Mr. Shulman: I was wondering because I have here a little book which this department put out, not to members of the Legislature, but to every member of the staff of The Department of Correctional Services, called: "Excerpts from Legislature of Ontario Debates".

The first session of the 28th Legislature, 1968, Tuesday, May 28, Wednesday, May 29 and Thursday, May 30, printed by The Department of Reform Institutions. I was wondering, what was the purpose of distributing this particular book?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The purpose of that is precisely what we have been talking about here for years. We do this every year. I think it is a good thing for the staff and it went to every member of the staff of the department. I think it is a good thing for them to know what is going on in this Chamber tonight.

I think they should hear, they should read about the debates, what concerns the members of the Legislature, what their Minister is answering on their behalf, and what people are saying about what is going on in their institutions. I am sure the hon. member will agree this is a good thing. It was not a matter of surplus money, there is money for this in the estimates.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, what disturbs me is the letter that went with this particular book, which went out to every member of The Department of Correctional Services. I quote from it:

This is of particular interest, as it will show the attitude towards the duties and responsibilities of the staff by various members of the Legislature.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I do not think that is any different, Mr. Chairman, from what I have said. I think they should know this. I think if the hon. member finds something to criticize in the institutions—I do not know if that is precisely what was in the letter sent out—but if it was, I see nothing wrong with it.

There is nothing wrong with letting the members of the staff know what the members of the Legislature feel about the way they are operating the institutions. This part of the educative process of the staff, in the change in the approach, and hoping that some of them will change their attitudes, they have to know that people are interested, that people are watching, that they are listening. I do not see anything wrong with that.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, could the Minister tell me what this cost and whether it was a total reprint of the debates, or was there some extract made?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We made sure it was a total reprint.

Mr. Shulman: And what was the cost?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I will get that for the hon. member, we do not have it here.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, there was some discussion last year about members of the Legislature visiting various institutions, and perhaps I should not criticize the Minister's attitude at all because some of the Ministers on that side of the House do not like their institutions visited at all.

But you may recall at the time I asked the Minister whether the remarks of the members were to be written down or if there were reports to be made back to the department. So let me ask the Minister again so there will be no misunderstanding, is there any special procedure that is followed when a member of this Legislature visits one of the institutions?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am sorry, what was the hon. member's specific question?

Mr. Shulman: Does the Minister have a certain procedure—has he told his staff, for example, it is important that prompt and accurate information be relayed to the inspection and jails branch as soon as the member has left? Would he have said anything like that, for example?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes, I think there is something like that in the institutions. We would like to know what comments were made and what criticisms were found in the institutions.

Mr. Shulman: Well, Mr. Chairman, last year I asked this type of question and the Minister certainly led us to believe that nothing of this sort took place. Now, perchance, a copy of the instructions finally fell into our hands and I hardly think it is the duty—and perhaps the Minister will disagree with me—I hardly think it should be the responsibility or the duty of any of your jail personnel to be writing down any conversations which we, as members, have in that jail and reporting it back to you.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Conversations with whom? With staff?

Mr. Shulman: With prisoners or with staff. Specifically with prisoners.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, let us clear that up. They have Hansard from last year and this is where the confusion arises. This is Hansard from May 30, 1968, at page 133, I am quoting the hon. member for High Park:

Mr. Shulman: I would like to ask the Minister a question. I was quite amazed when I visited last weekend to one of the institutions to find that a letter had been sent to this institution and presumably to the others under the control of this Minister, stating that if members of this House visited and questioned prisoners, that guards were to listen and to write down what the members of this House had asked the prisoners and to report it back to the department.

I would like to ask the Minister what is the purpose of this particular surveillance?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the hon. member quote such a letter to me.

Mr. Shulman: Is the Minister denying there is such a letter?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I would like to see the letter.

Mr. Shulman: Is the Minister denying there is such a letter?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, how can I deny something the existence of which I do not know? I do not know whether it exists or not. I would like to know if such a letter exists.

Mr. Shulman: I can assure the hon. Minister there is such a letter.

What the hon. member is talking about is two different things. If he is talking about instructions to staff to listen to conversations that members have with inmates then that is entirely irrelevant. No such instructions were issued, certainly not with my knowledge, and I am certain this would not have happened.

They are asked to report back any incidents as a result of the visit of any MPP and to let us know what criticisms they may have had of the institution. I think that is quite within the purview of the Minister to know what is going on in one of his institutions.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, let us just get this straight. I have the letter, which I will read in a moment, and it is worded in such a way that either—

Mr. Ben: What is the date?

Mr. Shulman: Dated November 3, 1968. It is worded in such a way that either interpretation could be made. But the interpretation that is being made, at least by certain jail governors, is that as soon as the MPPs leave, the prisoners, who have been interviewed by those MPPs in private, are called down and asked "What were you asked? What did you say?" This goes into the report which goes to the Minister.

I, for one, think this is highly uncalled for, improper and should be stopped immediately. I will read the letter and it certainly is open to interpretation both ways—or, perhaps, misinterpretation.

Re visits to the jail by members of the Provincial Legislature.

I am sorry; it is dated October 30, 1968. I saw it on November 3, 1968. It was up on the bulletin board.

Mr. Ben: They were keeping it a secret.

Mr. Shulman, In the governor's office, but he was absent. Anyway, it is a long fairly lengthy letter and I could not copy it all. I copied down points five and six.

5. The governor or the officer in charge in my absence will advise the administrator by phone and follow with a complete written report.

6. It is important that prompt and accurate information be relayed to the inspections and jail branch as soon as the member has left.

(signed) D. W. Simmons.

Now may I suggest, inasmuch as this letter is slightly ambiguous, that I trust the Minister will explain. I am not sure why he wants a surveillance at all. If it is necessary as soon as we leave you know about it, I presume this is so in the next jail in the nearby area which we are visiting can be alerted. If you have to have that alert (red alert, I guess we will call it), I will not argue too much with you. But will you please make sure that the jail governors cease calling the prisoners down and questioning them as to any conversations which we have had.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, first I would point out the hon. member is referring to what he claims is a letter. It was not a letter, but it was dated October 28.

Mr. Shulman: This one is dated October 30.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: All right. But the hon. member will keep in mind that he asked the question in May. In other words, what he is talking about now is something which occurred after May, 1968. So it bears no relationship to his question at that time. I am advised by my officials here that what happened was that this was a paper discussed at a meeting of the governors of the jails in Toronto. They discussed numerous matters at this meeting. The hon. member has read out two portions of that. This was apparently posted at that jail by the governor. It was apparently written by the governor.

Mr. Shulman: Who is governor Simmons?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: This was apparently written by the governor and I am advised that this was just a matter for discussion at the governor's conference—

Mr. J. Renwick: Visits of the members of the Legislature!

Mr. Shulman: Do you mean the governors decide? This is interesting.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, no. This was a—

Mr. MacDonald: Correction.

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—seminar for the governors in Toronto.

Mr. Shulman: Who gave the seminar?

Mr. J. Renwick: Who submitted the paper?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We did! We were training—

Mr. J. Renwick: On the visits of the members of this Legislature—

Mr. Lawlor: Is this a result of a new visiting activity?

Mr. J. Renwick:—that the governors of a jail have a seminar to discuss the visits of the members of this Legislature to their institutions.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We have an annual meeting of the governors.

Mr. J. Renwick: And you spend your time discussing the visits of the members of the Legislature?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, it concerns all visitors.

Mr. MacDonald: It does not surprise me.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It concerned all visitors. As a matter of fact, what we were doing was pointing out that the MPPs had special privileges, which other visitors do not.

Mr. J. Renwick: Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, the Minister would read the whole of the document into the record.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: All right.

Peel County Jail regulations, procedures and instructions—

This is what the hon. member is reading. This is dated October 28, 1968:

Re Visits to the jail by members of the Provincial Legislature.

1. Everyone unknown to you, including members of the Provincial Legislature, must properly identify himself. On being admitted, all visitors must sign the jail visitor record except those that are visiting prisoners and they must sign the prisoners' visitors record.

2. A prisoner's file will not be available to any visitor except on the authority of the administrator of jails.

3. Specific questions may be answered as to information normally given out to persons (prisoner's name and why he is being held).

4. Psychological or psychiatric reports are not to be made available. If a question arises, refer them to the Minister of Correctional Services. It will be in order to state that psychiatrists do visit the jail when necessary.

5. The governor or the officer in charge in my absence will advise the administrator by phone and follow with a complete written report.

6. It is important that prompt and accurate information be related to the inspections and jail branch as soon as the member has left.

7. When such a visit occurs I expect everyone to be courteous and to use common sense. Of course, this is expected at all times.

This is signed by the governor.

Now, let me correct what I said a few moments ago. This was the governor's interpretation of the decision taken at the seminar, and he posted it.

Mr. Young: Mr. Chairman, this is policy—that whenever members visit, that immediately a phone call comes through to the appropriate authorities, giving details? Then this other investigation takes place later and the correspondence follows. This is policy of the department.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The policy of the department is that if there is any occurrence about which the MPP makes an issue—to let us know about it.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the Minister would permit me a question. For the sake of clarification, are you saying that the governors established this policy?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I said that there was a seminar. I think we have one annually, or a semi-annual seminar at which we have the governors. The hon. members will keep in mind that we have just taken over some, I think, 800 additional staff and it is most difficult to get them all to accept the new approach and to integrate them into the system. We have these seminars twice a year. This was a discussion that was held at the seminar and my deputy advises me that as a result of this seminar, apparently, the governor posted this as his interpretation of what went on at the seminar.

Mr. Bullbrook: Am I not correct in assuming from what you read—to me, it is absolutely reprehensible that a conference of governors should be discussing visitation by members of the Legislature. But I cannot understand this, Mr. Chairman. The governors have themselves decided that after the visitation they will report elsewhere, is that right?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, no.

Mr. Bullbrook: To their superiors?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No. Firstly, I should point out to the hon. member that prior to the governors coming into the system they did not really have to allow an MPP into the jail if they did not want to. You can appreciate that.

This was a decision of policy. I am not saying that what he said was not, in effect, the policy of the department. This is the policy of the department—they are to report back the results of any discussions they had with an MPP when he visits the institution.

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Chairman, why the need for such great expedition? Why? Why is it so absolutely necessary that after a member makes a visitation—as you say, it is of absolute necessity and paramount importance—they get this documentation back to your department forthwith? Why? I am interested in this. Let me finish if I might.

I take no great personal issue with your department, but why this great need? If Jim Bullbrook walks into the county jail at Sarnia and visits his good friend the governor and discusses things with a prisoner, why should that governor (Fraser) have to get it back to your department forthwith? What do you anticipate Jim Bullbrook is doing there?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What we anticipate is the possibility that if you allow too much time to elapse, the information, the questions which you may raise two weeks later—or a week later—may have become entirely garbled. The department wants it when it is fresh because a lot of things change; inmates are moved out, things of that nature. The MPP was there today; he raised this question, let us know about it. If it is something that should be changed we will change it. If the MPP asks why is this done, we will say, "Since you were there, this has been changed because you asked about it". If not, we will be able to say this is what happened at that time.

In other words we want it as expeditiously as possible. There is nothing sinister about this.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, we are getting a mile off the mark here. The accusation that was raised by the hon. member for High Park was that the regulations of The Department of Correctional Services required governors and all employees of prisons and reform institutions to eavesdrop, in effect, on conversations between inmates and MPPs who visited and to report these conversations.

To date he has not produced any evidence that this is the instruction of the department, but it does not concern me whether he has or not. What I want to know is does the department, in fact, as he alleges, instruct eavesdropping of conversations between inmates and members and are the inmates compelled to report and are they brought down?

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman; what is the point of order?

Mr. Ben: I just point out the accusation the member made.

Mr. Shulman: At no point, and at no time did I allege anyone was eavesdropping; let us get that straight. Apparently the member for Humber as usual has been mixed up.

Mr. Ben: I am not mixed up.

Mr. Shulman: So let him make his own alleging. What I alleged and what—

Mr. Lawlor: He is the most mixed up member in the Legislature.

Mr. Shulman: Well, we cannot help that.

Mr. Ben: Why do you not go and see a psychiatrist?

Mr. Chairman: Order! Would the hon. member for High Park state his point of order?

Mr. Shulman: On the point of order—but first I must express my deep sympathy to the member for Brant (Mr. Nixon) for whom, daily, we shed a tear. However on the point of order—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Shulman: May I finish my point of order before you start your point of order?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The hon. member for Humber was quite correct and I read this into the record. He asked last year—

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, may I finish my point of order before he starts his point of order?

Mr. Chairman: Well I thought you had finished, but the hon. member for High Park may finish. I had asked him to and I thought he had.

Mr. Shulman: On this point of order I wish to say I did not at any time suggest there was eavesdropping. What I did say was that after members had left, the prisoners involved were called down and asked what had transpired between them and the member. And the Minister himself, in his last comment, when he was saying why they had to have an immediate response, said that two or three days later, a prisoner may have been transferred.

In other words he admitted tacidly, right there, that in effect the prisoners are questioned. I think this is very, very wrong.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member has made his point. The hon. Minister has a point of order?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, that is another—well I cannot think of anything—it is a Shulmanism. That does not mean we want to know because a prisoner may be transferred. For example, suppose the hon. member had raised a question about the treatment of a prisoner and we want to find out whether, in fact, this is what had occurred.

It has nothing to do with what the hon. member said to the prisoner. We want to know if that happened before the prisoner goes—whether he is released or discharged—it has nothing to do with listening in on a conversation.

As a matter of fact, that is the import of what the hon. member asked last year, and which he asked again, stating that members of the House visited and questioned prisoners, that the guards were to listen and to write down what the members of this House had asked the prisoners—now if that is not eavesdropping I do not know what is.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order please! I would point out to the members of the committee that the Chairman has not yet been given the opportunity of calling vote 401. The hon. member for Sudbury carried on with his speech before I called it.

Now vote 401 of the estimates is broken down by departmental activities. Is it the wish of the committee that we deal with vote 401 under these various activities, or do you wish to have a wide ranging debate on 401 in its entirety?

Mr. Sopha: The latter.

Mr. Chairman: Carry on.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Sopha: May I rise—

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Sudbury was up first.

Mr. Sopha: Fine, thank you. Well then, on this subject of the visit of members of the Legislature, may I enquire through you of the hon. Minister what is all this fuss about the member for Sudbury East (Mr. Martel) visiting his constituents in Burwash? He represents—and I am glad he does—the people employed and resident in that farm and he would be remiss in his responsibilities if he was not attuned to their desires. So what is all the fuss about?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There is no fuss. As a matter of fact, that is precisely what I said. I said that because of the particular situation at Burwash village, I would think it was not only the MPP's right, but his duty.

Mr. MacDonald: When you revised and made an exception for your programme that is what you said.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I said that as far as visiting his constituents was concerned, it was not only his right but his duty if they wanted to see him. What I did say was that if it was a political meeting in one of the institutional buildings—if he wanted to speak on institution property—he would have to get permission from the superintendent who, if he felt it was a political meeting, would refuse it. But it had nothing to do with visiting the village and the people in the village.

Mr. MacDonald: Just let me complete one point and then you can carry on. Just to show you how the Minister is, in a very nice fashion, confusing this issue. Mr. Chairman, when the hon. member for Sudbury East—who has been sick for a week but will be here tomorrow and can carry on the battle himself—first made the request, he offered to have the Minister come to the meeting.

The Minister has a letter to prove that he offered. I think it was a letter, or in a personal conversation with the Minister. So the Minister is now giving second thought to the charge that it was going to be a political meeting—which was the excuse for banning it by the governor—because he recognizes his position as wholly indefensible.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, I was the one who raised it in the absence of my colleague from Sudbury East. The members of his own party were silent and I raised this.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member is quite correct. Carry on.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. member for Sudbury East will be here tomorrow and when he gets up he does not need to be crowded into—

Mr. Chairman: Does someone want the floor?

Mr. Sopha: Well I wanted to complete this. I am being deprived of free speech here.

Mr. Chairman: All right, the hon. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The hon. member for Sudbury East, I recall, said he would be very pleased to have me come up and talk to certain members of the staff, whom he alleged were dissatisfied with the working conditions. Now this has nothing to do with the fact that permission was asked by some member of the staff to the principal of the school on government property, on institutional grounds, to hold a meeting.

The principal then wrote a letter to the gentleman who had requested the use of the school and said that, in view of the fact that this appeared to be a meeting of a political nature, he had better ask the governor's permission. The governor was never asked permission after that. And I pointed that out in my answer to the hon. member for East York.

Mr. Sopha: The whole thing has been distorted. Now, properly, under this vote, we are discussing the rights of members of this Legislature to call on these institutions. All right. Now, we come to an even more intimate exercise of the rights in respect of the member for Sudbury East visiting his own constituency. And I am not emphasizing the holding of a meeting. The NDP love to hold meetings.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There is no problem.

Mr. Sopha: Let them then. There is no problem with me there. But, what I am concerned about is that, he tells me, you took the grocery store away from Burwash.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is another story. We are talking about visits.

Mr. Sopha: Just a moment. That supports my thesis of the importance of the institution. The institution must be run in an efficient, orderly, corporate-management fashion. Now, I know that institution very well, and somebody in your department—you are probably not even aware of these decisions, they are made down in the lower echelons—decided that the store at Burwash should be closed.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am fully aware of that.

Mr. Sopha: Now, to get a loaf of bread, a case of Coke or a package of cigarettes, these people have to travel five or six miles into Estaire. And if they forget to get them, when they go into Sudbury to shop. Now, why should not the member, in order to redress those grievances, have free access to the institution. And if, in the carrying out of his responsibilities according to the dictates of his own judgment, he wants to meet with people, then what is the necessity of getting permission from the person correctly called the superintendent—not the governor, as you say—in that institution. Why cannot he go into that school, that building no longer used as a school because the children have moved to Estaire school?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: They have not moved yet.

Mr. Sopha: They have not? Oh, I thought they had. They are going to.

Or the church, or any place else convenient, to meet with the residents of Burwash. Those people are voters, constituents of his, and it only blurs the issue when the Minister gets up and talks about political overtones and gives all sorts of sinister implications to the exercise of democratic rights, the carrying out of responsibilities of a member.

If the hon. member for Sudbury East wants to do that, he is not Shulman snooping, trying to get something on you. He is carrying out, in the way he does things, his political responsibilities.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Nobody refused the hon. member for Sudbury East, nor did I even say that he would have to ask anyone's permission.

Mr. Sopha: Well, what was it? It was in the Sudbury Star that you announced that he would have to get permission.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, I do not know; I never saw the Sudbury Star. The whole question arose from a question of the hon. member for York South, who asked, presumably on behalf of the member for Sudbury East, why some of the employees—the hon. member for Sudbury East never came into it if I recall—could not have a meeting at the school. It had nothing to do with the hon. member of this House at all.

Mr. MacDonald: My question?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes, as I recall.

Mr. MacDonald: The Minister is wrong.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, does he have it there?

Mr. MacDonald: I do not have it, but I know why the hon. member for Sudbury East could not hold the meeting with his constituents.

Mr. Sopha: My colleague from Sudbury East has told me this himself, and I want to say here that I am very grateful to my colleague that he showed such concern for Burwash. Because when my friend from Nickel Belt had responsibility for Burwash, I sort of had to share responsibility with him, listening to complaints of your custodial officers.

Mr. G. Demers (Nickel Belt): Not at the time.

Mr. Sopha: But now the member for Sudbury East has an affinity for these things and gladly handles them.

Mr. Demers: I had to follow you to repair your mistakes.

Mr. Sopha: Oh yes, indeed. I admit that, because none of us are perfect.

Mr. Demers: Except you.

Mr. Shulman: To complete the point I started to bring up when all sorts of other members became interested.

It might be of some interest to you, sir, that when I was visiting jails, because of the exigencies of time, it was usually necessary to visit three or four in a day and I usually picked a Saturday or a Sunday, because the Legislature was not meeting. I try to visit three or four, snooping, as the member for Sudbury has suggested, to try to improve the lot of both the prisoners and employees of the hon. Minister. And, because there are so many places to be visited, I usually visit jails within a reasonable geographic distance of each other, travelling from town to town. I thought it might be of some interest to you, sir, that the same routine always occurs. When I arrive at the first jail, there is considerable surprise—surprise is the word—and there is usually a delay of about 15 minutes while, I presume, there is some consultation occurring within as to what should be done with this visiting Martian. Ultimately I get in and I am shown through the jail, and the governor or whoever is on duty—usually not the governor, because it is the weekend—is usually very courteous and very helpful with information. Then I proceed to the next jail, which is possibly 50 miles away, but never at the second, third or fourth jail is there ever any delay. For some reason—and I presume it is because my secretary has sent them a copy of my itinerary—they are always expecting me when I arrive at the other jails in the area.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Has the hon. member never heard of the grapevine of the penal system?

Mr. Shulman: Yes, I certainly have, and this, Mr. Chairman, is the real reason why the governors must report within five minutes of the member leaving the jail. It is so that the Minister or his staff—whoever is on duty at those horrible hours on weekends—can get on the phone to the other jails and say, "Look out, somebody is coming; clean up the roof, or whatever you have to do. Here he comes; get the governor there and make sure the right answers are given."

This is the reason, this is why it is so wrong, and this is why the Minister should rescind this order, because it is only going to redound to his embarrassment. You are going to have innocent, simple members, like some of our Liberal members, coming down there who really are not snooping at all. They just want to see what a jail looks like, and really it is a shame that they should be lumped in with we snoopers. So, could I suggest to the Minister that perhaps when you send out your next directive you list the members of the Legislature who have to be spotted as they go around the province, and perhaps the others could be allowed to visit in peace?

Mr. Chairman: Vote 401. The hon. member for Sudbury.

Mr. Sopha: In an age that loves statistics, I often wonder if any follow-up was ever made in respect of the success of the very extensive Alcoholics Anonymous programmes in the institutions. One realizes readily that, whatever the intensity of the attachment to the programme in the institution, there is at least a geographic separation from alcohol, and I wonder whether any statistics were ever compiled of people after they were released from the institutions to ascertain what numbers exhibit a permanent rescue by the programme.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am advised that there is no follow-up.

Mr. Sopha: You cannot give us any idea of how effective it is?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Apparently not. I do not know; it is worthwhile now that the hon. member has mentioned it. I will go into it a little deeper. It may very well have something to do with the usual problem you have when a person has been discharged from the penalty which the law has placed upon him, that once he has been discharged you cannot follow him up unless he volunteers. But it may very well be, I imagine, that people who are involved in the sort of programme Alcoholics Anonymous is involved in, that they may be prepared to give us this information. I will go into that further; it is worthy of consideration.

Mr. Sopha: Supposing a pilot project is started, and you identify, say, 25 people who have been in your custody for two years and have attended the meetings, then follow them for periods of one, three, five and ten years, to ascertain what success has been achieved.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: As I say, the suggestion is a worthwhile one, and I will go into it.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, I have been popping up and down like a popinjay. I would like to let the Minister know that I for one, who has visited a considerable number of these jails, take severe exception to having my conversations with prisoners reported or my conversations with a fellow member. I think there is a certain confidential relationship there. We should feel perfectly free to speak among ourselves without having eavesdropping from your side of the fence, and the same with our conversations with prisoners. I take the severest kind of exception—I cannot put it too strongly to you—that if we interview prisoners and then you come down after we leave and dredge up the prisoners and force these prisoners to give to you the information that they have given to us, it is undermining—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We never said that. I never said that.

Mr. Lawlor: Does the Minister deny that is the policy?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I do deny that is the policy. I said we ask our staff to let us know about any complaints or any comments made about the operation of the institution or the treatment of its inmates, and I distinctly said here on a number of occasions that we did not ask them to report to us any conversation or expect them to even listen in to any conversation between a member of the Legislature and an inmate.

Mr. Lawlor: Let me be crystal clear about this. Does the Minister mean to say that it is not the department policy to interrogate prisoners who have been questioned by us after we leave?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Definitely and positively not. If the hon. member could produce such a case, I will take the necessary action to see that disciplinary action is taken.

Mr. Lawlor: Very good.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Humber.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Chairman, first of all I am glad we got that cleared up because it was I who accused the hon. member for High Park of making that innuendo and asked him to substantiate it. He denied having made such an innuendo, and I am glad that it is cleared up.

Now, there are a lot of questions I would ask, getting back to vote 401, if I may, with your permission, Mr. Chairman.

First of all, Mr. Chairman, under maintenance there are a lot of expenditures which total $321,000 and I would like to know specifically what these expenditures were for. Now, Daisons Publications Limited—what was that expenditure for, who is the president of that company? Did the hon. Minister have occasion to take a trip to Europe with the president of that firm?

Then Might Directories Limited—what was the expenditure there? And what use does the department have for Might Directories? Is that located in the Minister's riding? National Cash Register, $40,000. Was that a lot of cash registers? I will start with those three questions.

Mr. Chairman: Would the hon. member point out where he is finding those figures on the estimates?

Mr. Ben: Item S5, Department of Reform Institutions, in the public accounts.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member is dealing with the previous year's public accounts.

Mr. Ben: Well, that is right.

Mr. Chairman: Perhaps we could bring out the questioning pertaining to these estimates and relate them to public accounts if the hon. member wishes. But we are not debating the public accounts of the previous year at this time. We are debating the estimates for this year.

Mr. Ben: I think, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Chairman: Perhaps I misunderstand the hon. member.

Mr. Ben: No, perhaps I may all of a sudden have had a lapse of memory, but I was always under the impression that in voting moneys we could always look back to the public accounts to determine how much was spent the previous year so that we would be satisfied that the amount which was voted this year is the proper amount.

Mr. Chairman: Perhaps the hon. member could direct questions to determine whether or not similar amounts have been spent, but he outright questions—

Mr. Ben: Well, perhaps I was guilty of not having a preamble to my question. I wanted to get back to vote 401, I apologize to the Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: Well, we will take a preamble on it.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Chairman, I am looking at determining whether—

Mr. Chairman: Is the member talking about maintenance?

Mr. Ben: I am talking about maintenance, that is correct. It comes under vote 401.

Mr. Chairman: Item 3?

Mr. Ben: Which would include the main office.

Mr. Chairman: Right.

Mr. Ben: I am curious about some of the expenditures that were made last year and I want to know what they were for so that I can satisfy myself that they should be voted tonight.

Mr. Chairman: Assuming they are in that item.

Mr. Ben: I assume that they are in that item, the $388,000.

Mr. Chairman: Item 3, vote 401.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to answering certain questions of the hon. member, I just want to know whether we are going into the public accounts and going over all the expenditures of last year.

I think it is quite in order, if I recall the procedures here, to ask why a figure has been increased or decreased. But to go back all over last year's estimates again, we are going to be here for three months just on these estimates.

Mr. Chairman: This was the point I was trying to bring forth, that the hon. member has assumed, for example, that Might Directories is included again this year in the $388,000, but we do not know that. I think the hon. member should direct a specific question to the Minister: Is Might Directories expenditure, as in last year's public accounts, included in this year's estimates? Or what is included in the estimates?

Mr. Ben: Mr. Chairman, the only opportunity that the hon. members, other than those who sit on the public accounts committee, have of looking into the operations of a particular department to determine whether or not the Minister is living up to his own billing is when the estimates come up.

Now, for instance, in this particular instance, last year there was an expenditure of $321,000 for maintenance under the main office vote. This year we find an amount of $388,000—an increase in excess of $60,000. That's over 20 per cent.

Surely, Mr. Chairman, I should be entitled to determine how the money was spent last time. I am curious, for instance, why $40,000 was spent for National Cash Register. That buys a lot of cash registers. The answer could be, Mr. Chairman, they set up a course in one of the institutions to teach girls how to work at a check-out counter of Loblaws or Dominion or Steinbergs, and I would be very interested in knowing that.

As far as Might Directories are concerned, I do not know. Are they running elections in the correctional institutions now? Do they need a voters' list? I do not know. But surely I am entitled to find out why these amounts are being spent, especially in view, as I say, of an increase in excess of 20 per cent.

Mr. Chairman: I think the hon. member is entitled, as he suggests, to determine from the hon. Minister the reason for the increase in the total estimated expenditures as compared to the previous year, but I do not believe the hon. member can investigate the previous public accounts without specific questions on this year's estimates.

And he may direct a question to the Minister of what accounts for the increase. Is a similar expenditure in this year as was made the previous year? That sort of question would be in order.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Chairman, I assure you—everyone else is whispering to me—that this is the procedure we have followed for years now. It is custom and usage in this House—even the hon. Minister acknowledges that we have questioned the operation or the expenditures for the previous fiscal period that have been available to us.

Unfortunately as it works out, it is a year back. It is not last year's, it is a year previous. We are always one year behind. If we cannot question it, why are they given to us? Why do we spend all the money to put all these figures together and give them to us?

Mr. Chairman: Well, I think the hon. member may bring out the answers to the problems he has, but he may not debate the public accounts for the previous year.

Mr. Ben: I am not debating.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. Minister did not come here prepared to give details on last year's expenditures, he is here to present his estimates for this year.

Mr. Ben: You want to bet?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I obviously do not have—

Mr. Ben: We always have in the past, we have always asked about those expenditures.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Surely the hon. member would not expect my staff to come prepared with the details of last year's expenditures, plus this year's expenditures?

Mr. Ben: We are not in a position to question the Minister on them, because they have not as yet been finalized because the fiscal period does not end until the end of this month.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, to make it clear; for the year 1968-69, surely the hon. member would not expect my staff here to be prepared with the figures of the expenditures of 1968-69 and 1969-70, which we are discussing here?

Mr. Ben: I am sorry, I apologize through you, Mr. Chairman, to the hon. Minister. I am referring to the fiscal year ended March 31, 1968, which figures we were given in this bound volume in the usual blue Tory colour. This is the only period I can refer to, it is the only period that to date is audited, I imagine, and published.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am having enough trouble, Mr. Chairman, I can tell you right now, with the new system which the Treasury Board put into effect in our new estimates, trying to explain the expenditures as they are in their present estimate, 1969, the money we are asking for, without going back two years to try and tell the hon. member what the expenditure in each item was for.

Mr. Chairman: Why does the hon. member not ask the hon. Minister for details of this year's estimated expenditure of $388,000?

Mr. Ben: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry but I insist on my prerogative as a member of this Legislature, who was a member at the time the funds were voted for the 1967-68 fiscal year, to know how those funds were spent.

Mr. Chairman: Well I must rule —

Mr. Ben: Surely I am entitled to know whether this Minister properly spent those funds.

Mr. Chairman: I must rule that type of question out of order. That type of question is out of order. We are dealing with these estimates only.

Mr. Ben: When do we get an opportunity to ask these questions?

Mr. Chairman: Any such questions would be out of order, dealing with the previous public accounts.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Humber has gone to specific items. I wish to do so too, but for the moment, the debate, as I understand it, is free-wheeling and I would like to return to that aspect of the debate.

Mr. Ben: Excuse me, I thought I was dealing on a point of order. I have not finished with it. I have not even had an answer. I thought you were rising to speak to this particular point.

Mr. Chairman: No, the hon. member did not rise on a point of order, but the Chair ruled that the debate of last year's public accounts would be out of order in the estimates committee.

This is the committee of supply. We are dealing only with the estimates for the year before us which is 1969-70. During the discussion, if any member wishes to relate this year's estimates to similar expenditures in the previous Public Accounts, this would be in order or to ask the Minister to substantiate a 20 per cent increase or some such similar figure.

But to ask the Ministers to explain expenditures in the previous Public Accounts would be out of order in this committee.

Mr. Ben: Well, Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as I wish to contest your ruling, I want to make sure that we have the point down, in its proper perspective so we will know what is being challenged.

It is my contention that, as a member who is being asked to vote funds—the taxpayers' money—to the Minister of the Crown, I have the right to determine that he spent the last sum voted to him properly—that it was justifiable. Because, if he has been spending money in the past unjustifiably, then I feel that I am entitled to deprive him of funds this particular time.

I also say to you, Mr. Chairman, that in the past it has always been the practice to relate the estimates to the last public accounts that are available to us.

Mr. Chairman: To relate them, I will agree—

Mr. Ben: Yes, and in the past it has always been the practice to ask the Minister what particular expenditures were for. I have done it in the past and I say that is custom and usage and therefore, if we understand the point, I do challenge the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. Chairman: What is the hon. member saying?

Mr. Ben: I am saying that I have the right to ask the hon. Minister a question touching on the purpose of an expenditure as recorded in Public Accounts for the last fiscal period reported to this House.

Mr. Chairman: Well the Chair has a rule that any discussion or debate on the public accounts for the last fiscal period is out of order.

Mr. Ben: I do challenge the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. Chairman: Specific questions relating to those Public Accounts, unless they are related to this year's estimates—

Mr. Ben: I am so doing. I pointed out to you, Mr. Chairman, that it is not the last fiscal period because we never have it. We are always two years behind. Our fiscal period ends March 31 so that we have not yet received an accounting from the auditor or the Public Accounts for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1969.

It still has not ended. And always we have had before us the Public Accounts for the period two years back and it has been the practice to so correlate our estimates—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to set a precedent which you may not want to live with, but the information for which the hon. member has asked has been provided for me because the accountant happened to have it. I would be prepared to give it to him, but I just do not want to put Mr. Chairman in a position wherein he may be faced with this all during the estimates.

Mr. L. A. Braithwaite (Etobicoke): Mr. Chairman, I think you should rule on this point.

Mr. Ben: It is a point and I think that we should get this thing settled.

Mr. Chairman: Well, the Chairman's point is simply this: that the committee of supply does not sit to debate the Public Accounts of a prior period. The members of the committee of supply, I believe, should be at perfect liberty to refer to any previous public accounts in detail and to relate those Public Accounts to this year's estimates.

But, we are dealing with the estimates for this fiscal period, 1969-70 and if the questions are directed to the hon. Minister by way of information relative to this year's estimates, then I believe they should be in order.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, may I just comment on this? I think that the manner in which you have presented it is correct. The proposition of debating the Public Accounts of two years ago it seems to me is an impossible one.

But, with respect, if the hon. member for Humber wants to relate any specific expenditure that is in the Public Accounts for the year April, 1967, to March 31, 1968, then he could ask a question as to what is the relationship, how come there has been a significant change or something of that nature. That way, you are not debating the public accounts of two years ago, but relating them. That, I think, is what you said and I agree with it.

Mr. Nixon: Well, Mr. Chairman, if I might comment on the point that has been raised, I am sure you will recall even in your own term as Chairman, the frequent occasions on which the references to the Public Accounts have been made.

Perhaps in your mind they have always been related to estimates that are presently before us. I am sure that it is the custom, however, to refer to the thick book of Public Accounts when discussing the estimates and the relationship is inherent in the very fact that the two are discussed together.

Mr. Chairman: Well, I think the hon. leader of the Opposition is correct. For example, the hon. member for Humber was talking about maintenance, which is item 3 under vote 401. Now his question was pertaining in one example to Might Directories expenditure which appeared in, I think, the 1968 public accounts book he has before him. Now the hon. member is not even aware of the fact that there is any expenditure to Might Directories under the current estimates. He does not know that.

Mr. Nixon: Well, he is asking if there is.

Mr. Chairman: Well, he did not ask that question though.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Chairman, I want to point out that I concur with the statement that was made by the hon. member for York South.

Mr. Chairman: Well, where do we differ then?

Mr. Ben: We differ that when you were discussing the matter with me, you were implying that asking a question is a debate. I find a distinction—

Mr. MacDonald: Can we write off the last ten minutes—

Mr. Ben: You see I suggested that I can ask the hon. Minister what he spent the money for, but I cannot start discussing whether the money was properly or improperly spent because that then would be a debate.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I do not think it could be improperly—

Mr. Chairman: Well, perhaps we could deal with it this way. We are dealing with the estimates for the 1969-1970 fiscal period. We are dealing with vote 401. We are having a free wide-ranging debate on vote 401. We are not restricting the members to any particular item within the vote. Now the hon. member for Humber had risen and asked certain questions pertaining to maintenance, which is item number 3 under vote 401. Will he pursue his questioning and we will determine whether he is out of order.

Mr. Ben: If I get the answer, then I cannot attack this expenditure—that would be a debate. But I want to know what it was spent for, that is all. Then, I will go further.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I have the information. I will be pleased to give it to the hon. member, but as I say I do not want to go against your ruling.

Mr. Chairman: No, but what was the hon. member's specific question?

Mr. Ben: What were the expenditures involved? For instance, Daison Publications Limited. What did we get for $6,000? Might Directories—what did we get from them—and National Cash Register?

Mr. Chairman: That sort of questioning, in the view of the Chair, is not in order.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Ben: I am sorry. Let it go on record I challenge the ruling.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, surely it is not necessary for us to have to challenge your ruling, but if the member wishes to pursue this, I will support him in it. Surely the nit-picking approach that has been taken, particularly by the NDP, is one that is, I would say, going to waste the time of the Legislature.

Mr. MacDonald: Perhaps we can have time out for a Liberal caucus.

Mr. Nixon: The hon. Minister says he has got the answer. Let us have the answer and let us get on with the business.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Ben: The NDP say government is not answerable to the elected representatives. Let us get that on the record.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, go on.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. MacDonald: Better get a psychiatrist—

Mr. Chairman: Order. The Chairman has made a ruling regarding the debating of the previous public accounts. Now the hon. member had asked a specific question to the hon. Minister. It may, or may not, be related to this year's estimates. I will permit the hon. Minister to provide the answer, but I do not want this to be taken as any precedent that we can debate the public accounts of a previous year.

Mr. Shulman: The Chair has been challenged—do you ignore it?

Mr. MacDonald: He has reiterated his challenge—

Mr. Chairman: Well, all right, the Chairman has made a ruling. All those in favour of the Chairman's ruling will please say "aye"; those opposed will please say "nay". In my opinion the "ayes" have it. Call in the members.

The Chairman has ruled that prior public accounts may not be debated per se in the committee of supply.

An hon. member: That was not the point.

Mr. Ben: Point of order. The question was that you denied me the right to ask a question of the Minister, not to debate it.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member is out of order.

The Chairman has ruled that the public accounts of a prior period may not be debated in the committee of supply.

Those in favour of the Chairman's ruling will please rise—

Mr. Shulman: Point of order, before you take a vote.

Mr. Chairman: Point of order.

Mr. Shulman: Before you take the vote, I request that the member for Sarnia (Mr. Bullbrook) take his seat. He was present when the bells began to ring and we have been instructed by the Clerk in our lessons that any member who is present when the vote is called must be present in the chair at the vote.

Mr. Chairman: The Chairman has put the question to the committee.

Those in favour of the Chairman's ruling—

Mr. Shulman: You have not ruled on my point of order, Mr. Chairman:

Mr. Chairman: There is no point of order.

Mr. Shulman: There is a point of order. You cannot take the vote until all the members are present who were present when you first called the vote.

Mr. Chairman: I rule there is no point of order.

Those in favour of the Chairman's ruling please rise; those opposed to the Chairman's ruling will please rise.

Clerk of the House: Mr. Chairman, the "ayes" are 51, the "nays" are 17.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, I challenge that count. I wish you would get the advice of your advisors. The rules of this House state that—

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. Shulman: —a vote may not be taken if a member who is present when the vote is called leaves and is not present when the vote is taken. He must vote.

Mr. MacDonald: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. There are two things I did not get involved in a moment ago. I think there is a double complication. Once the vote has been started, no point of order can be called. However, no vote can be called and be in order if a member who is in the House vacates the House to avoid voting.

An hon. member: Who is not here?

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. member for Sarnia.

Mr. Nixon: Well, do you know why he left the House?

Mr. MacDonald: I do not know why he vacated.

Mr. Chairman, the rules of the House, as taught to the members in sessions called by the Clerk of the House for the benefit of new members, are to the effect that when a vote is called, the member in the House at that time should stay for the vote.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: How you resolve that conflict, I do not know.

Mr. Chairman: Speaking to the point raised by the hon. member—

Mr. Sopha: May I speak to the point of order before you rule?

Mr. Chairman: I am not going to rule. I want it clarified.

The Chairman is not aware of any member who was in his seat—

Mr. MacDonald: Your attention has been drawn to one.

Mr. Chairman: This is the information I request. Who was the hon. member?

Mr. Shulman: The hon. member for Sarnia was in his seat when the bell began to ring and when you called the vote.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Sarnia was in his seat, it has been suggested, when the bell called but he did not take his seat for the vote. Is this the suggestion?

Mr. Shulman: Yes.

Mr. Chairman: And the suggestion is that the rules require that he take his seat.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, that is the rule—

Mr. Sopha: With respect to the point of order.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman—

An hon. member: One at a time.

Mr. Sopha: No, the statement of the member for York South was articulated with even greater clarity than the statement of the member for High Park, and Hansard will bear me out. The member for York South made a definite accusation that the member for Sarnia was in his seat and left the House, to use his words, "to avoid the consequence of voting on this challenge." He has made a serious charge impugning the honour of an hon. member, and he should either establish with evidence that this is so or withdraw it.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, the Liberal Party is so confused, they have obviously got to indulge in some tactic—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: The issue before you, Mr. Chairman, is the rule—

Mr. Sopha: Do not waffle.

Mr. MacDonald: —of the House that a member who is in his seat when the vote is called, must be here to vote.

Mr. Sopha: That is not what you said. That is not what you said.

Mr. MacDonald: That is precisely what I said.

Mr. Sopha: All right.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence (Carleton East): Mr. Chairman, it strikes me that this interpretation could become ridiculous. It would mean that the House could not vote until we chased around and dragged out some member from somewhere.

Mr. MacDonald: Are you suggesting that some of the rules of the House are ridiculous?

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence: No, but it would mean that we could never vote. If I understand it, it would mean that we could never—

Mr. MacDonald: I raised one this afternoon—

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence: May I finish my remarks? I may be confused; I may be wrong, but it strikes me that the application of the interpretation—

Mr. MacDonald: An intelligent one.

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence: —made by the leader of the NDP would result in this fact, that this House could never come to order and vote unless it had chased some member around the city to try and find him.

Mr. MacDonald: All I can say is that if the hon. member for Carleton East thinks that the rules of the House become rather absurd on occasion, I agree with him. But those are the rules of the House, and I am trying this afternoon to get us to escape from one which has no rationality at all. So perhaps we are a victim of living with these archaic rules.

Mr. E. A. Winkler (Grey South): Mr. Chairman, on the same point, may I say that this—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Chairman: We will hear them one at a time. The hon. member for Grey South.

Mr. Winkler: This decision has been made. I do not think that there should be any more debate. These extraneous political speeches are unnecessary.

Mr. MacDonald: This is not an extraneous debate.

Mr. Winkler: It is so, and you know it.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Humber.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Chairman, I must agree that the rules of the House have always stated that if a member is in his seat when the division bell rings, he is obliged to vote. And there is a point on record where the Sergeant-at-Arms was sent to bring about the attendance of a recalcitrant member at the point of a sword. But I do not think that is the point here. Let the hon. member for High Park swear that the member was in his chair, because nobody has substantiated his allegations.

This is the point before us—he made a charge that the hon. member was in his chair and left the House to avoid voting, and that is casting aspersions on the hon. member. There is not another member in this House who has substantiated the allegations of the hon. member for High Park, that in fact the member for Sarnia was in his seat at the time the bell rang. Not one. And this, to me, is the point.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Chairman, on this point of order. I wonder if I might just refer to the rules of the House as supplied to every member in this House at the time that he takes his seat. On page 85, under Divisions, it states quite clearly:

Every member who is in the House when a motion is put from the Chair is required to register his vote on it. But a member who was not in the House when the motion was put and enters subsequently is not allowed to vote.

That is the rule.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He was out before the motion was put.

Mr. Deans: That is the rule.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please. It is the opinion of the Chairman that this matter of raising the points of order is developing into a debate, and the Chairman is going to apply rule 106, which reads as follows: "When members have been called in preparatory to a division, no further debate is to be permitted".

Mr. Chairman: Vote 401.

The hon. member for Humber.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Chairman, will the hon. Minister please tell us how he proposes to spend the $388,000 which he is asking this House to vote under the caption "maintenance"? What are the expenditures that he proposes to make? Who will they be paid to and in what amounts?

Mr. Chairman: I think the hon. member has now posed a proper question.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I disagree with you, Mr. Chairman. How can I tell him with whom we expect to spend the money when we have not even been voted the money?

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Obviously, first we get the money, and most of the money is spent on tenders. The tenders have not gone out yet, because we have not got the money. I can answer the question as to what we want the money for.

Mr. Ben: Right.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Printing of stationery, advertising, rental of equipment, purchase of equipment, furniture, personnel services—the usual thing for the maintenance of a head office.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister is bringing disgrace upon this House when he makes his asinine statement that he does not know what he is going to spend it on because he has not got it yet. Surely, one of his clerks must have sat down with a pencil and paper—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I did not say that. I did not say I did not know what it was going to be spent on. The hon. member had included in his question, with whom I was going to spend the money, and I could not tell him that. He did ask that. Of course, he is entitled to know on what we are going to spend it.

Mr. Ben: Well, give us what you can answer.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I gave you the answers.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please. The Chairman recalls that during the discussion of the estimates in previous years a similar type of question was usually answered by the respective Ministers suggesting to the committee that, last year we spent so much on this and so much on that, that this year you were going to spend 20 per cent more, or were going to spend less.

And I think that roughly the details of the total expenditure may be given in estimated form, related to possibly the previous expenditures of a prior period. Now this, I think, is what the hon. member for Humber is getting at in the first place, but his questions were not put in that manner.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, the answer to that question is that there is an increase of $31,200 over the estimates of last year. And accounted for as follows: increase in staff training and development courses, conferences and conventions—$12,300; replacement of furniture and equipment—$8,500; increase in purchase of books $4,400; furniture for additional staff—$3,500; general price increases—$2,500; with a total of $31,200, which is what the excess is in this year's estimates over last year's estimates.

Mr. Sopha: That is more than 7.5 per cent.

Mr. Chairman: Does the hon. member for Humber have another question?

Mr. Ben: Yes, I do. Mr. Chairman, if I may, on the same point, I would like to know a little more specifically, what kind of printing does the department anticipate having to buy. I would like to know, for instance, are they anticipating buying cash registers?

Do they, in fact, buy cash registers—because they spent $40,000 a couple of years ago, in the last fiscal period, for cash registers? In regard to furniture, what kind of furniture? Is he going to put it up for tender, is he going to buy at the market price?

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Steel or aluminum?

Mr. Ben: I might even be interested in that, to find out whether he is supporting the lumber industry of this country or the bauxite industry of Jamaica, Mr. Prime Minister?

Mr. Chairman: Would the hon. member direct his specific questions to the hon. Minister?

Mr. Ben: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister is asking us to vote $388,000. Would he please tell us what he desires that $388,000 for?

Surely he must know, or at least his staff have advised him that they need X thousands of dollars to replace the furniture that was outdated, or destroyed in a prison, that he needs Y thousands of dollars to print brochures to teach a particular course to the girls in Ingleside or some other place. That he needs Z number of dollars to buy typewriters to replace typewriters that have gone out of service. Surely we are expected to be able to ask him. "What do you want this money for?"

Hon. Mr. Grossman: All I can tell the hon. member is we are having difficulty, as I said earlier, because the estimates are made up differently this year. They are made up by programme, and the $380,000 is divided into various programmes, so we would have to go into every programme and every item that is needed for those programmes. That is why it is a difficult question to answer just off the bat. That is why I can give him what the increase is for, the amount that is required by way of increase. But I cannot give him specifics, because the estimates are divided into programmes. He might address a question to the Treasurer of the advisability of going back to the old system of the estimates, because it is making it difficult for a Minister to answer this question in this way, the way that the hon. member requires it.

Mr. Chairman: Well, the estimates are, I would point out, divided in the estimates book, under the various programmes by activities. There is a maintenance item in each one of those programmes. I do not know whether the Minister has the information for the individual programmes or not.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well the individual programmes, sir, are in the estimates book—five programmes.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Chairman, I want you to understand that I am not trying to go on to the previous question. But I have enquired from my colleagues here with reference to the public accounts of this province, and I have been told that they have not as yet, that the standing committee has not as yet, sat down to go into the public accounts for the fiscal period ending March 1, 1969—as is only natural because the period has not ended.

Therefore, neither I nor the standing committee on public accounts know how the money was spent during the current fiscal year—that is, the one ending March 31, 1969. Therefore, to me, it sounds rather ridiculous for the Minister to suggest that all he should do is to explain what the additional moneys are for this year—i.e. the money above what was spent last year.

Because we do not know how the money was spent last year, we do not even know how much of the money was spent last year. Now, for the Minister to get up in this House and say: "Well, the way the accounts are, the different departments, I cannot tell you what the money is for"—it just make one incredulous.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, I cannot tell. When the hon. member wants to know how much of it is for furniture, how much of it is for rugs—this is what I presume the public accounts committee is for, to go into those kind of nitty-gritty details.

I will tell him this, that the $388,000 is accounted for as follows—as he can see in the estimates book: $31,000 for general administration; $72,500 for professional services; $109,000 for administrative and financial services; $119,500 for personnel services; $56,000 for information services. And that is as far as I can go in respect of detail. If he wants to get beyond that, I think the public accounts committee is the place for him.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Chairman, all I can say in reply to that is to assure the hon. Minister—and this may come as a shock to him—but I believe to my knowledge, and I stand to be corrected, that everybody who has been elected to this honourable House can read.

We, therefore, can read, and I would like to believe that all of us have read exactly what the Minister has read out. But does that tell us what the $119,500 you are asking for under the caption: maintenance for personnel service is for? And should we just give it to you in blank because you say you need $119,000 for that?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, does the hon. member seriously suggest that I should tell him in one of these programmes, for example, in maintenance for general administration, that we plan on buying 114,000 fountain pens, 12,000 pencils, 1400 pads of paper, and all this sort of thing?

Mr. Ben: If, in fact, you know that, the answer is yes.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, of course I do not know that and I would not have that information.

Mr. Ben: Well, you must know what you need $119,500 for instead of $119,000 or instead of $118,000. Surely your advisers there have said to you: "Mr. Minister, we do need, under personnel services, so much money for pencils and typewriter ribbons, paper etc."

Surely they have said to you: "Mr. Minister, we need so much money for the replacement of desks, etc". Otherwise, from whence, Mr. Minister, through you Mr. Chairman, do you get these figures?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is what the public accounts committee is for.

Mr. Ben: Oh come on, the public accounts committee is to find out what you spend it for, but we are supposed to vote it to you and you do not want to tell us what you want it for. Boy, oh boy, this government has really flipped its lid.

Mr. Chairman: On vote 401?

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, will the Minister tell us the amount that is allocated to research in his department and where in the estimates it can be located?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Under professional services. Do you want to know the precise figure for research? I take it the hon. member wants to know that?

Mr. J. Renwick: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am advised it is $116,900.

Mr. J. Renwick: Where is that item?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It is included in the professional services programme on the same page.

Mr. J. Renwick: Is that under vote 401?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes.

Mr. J. Renwick: Well it must be in order then. I wanted to ask the Minister what contribution his department is making toward this difficult question of sentencing by the courts. I notice in the annual report that there are a substantial number of statistics about the incidence of offences and the number of persons sentenced, and the classifications of sentencing.

I would like the Minister, if he would, to tell us whether his department in terms of the correctional services, the rehabilitation services, which he prides himself on, is making any contribution back through the system to the point in the system where the sentencing takes place, so that the courts when passing sentence, may have the benefit of the results of this penal institutional system which the Minister administers.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The hon. member is speaking about financial contribution, because there are other contributions. Members of staff attend seminars and conferences on this. If the hon. member is referring to a financial contribution—

Mr. J. Renwick: No, I was thinking more in terms of the research programme of this department and whether or not any part of it deals with the impact upon the sentencing system in this province.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Only in so far as the $30,000 grant to the centre of criminology would contribute to any studies they make in this field.

Mr. J. Renwick: Then I do not know. I suppose in modern terms this is called the interface between two departments—between the Attorney General's department and the system of the administration of justice and your department. There is a point at which a person is sentenced and at that point the person comes under the custodial care of your department, and whatever services you then provide for him until such time as he returns to society.

What bothers me is that there appears to be no research facility in the province, that I am aware of, relating what happens to a person after he has entered custodial care, been released from custodial care and returns to society, in terms of the kind of research which would be of assistance to those who are sentencing in the courts.

I think I have raised this matter in different contexts from time to time, but I happen to be one who disagrees with the proposition that only judges should pass sentence in courts. I want to know whether or not there is any close co-operation between your department and The Department of the Attorney General in terms of studying and assessing and making a contribution toward the difficult question of sentencing. Otherwise, we are going to perpetuate a system by which over a long period of time people are tried—the trial of any person in the court takes a considerable amount of time—and the man or woman comes up for sentencing and, apart from a pre-sentence report procedure, the sentences take place very quickly without any adequate consideration, without any understanding of what has happened to other persons who have been sentenced and gone through the framework that the Minister administers.

I want to know whether or not the Minister plans, under his research programme, any definitive way in which an assessment and an evaluation can be made of the sentences which are passed and what the impact of those sentences is on the persons who come under his care and what the ultimate result is in terms of the return of that person to society.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I can only say that Professor Hogarth of the centre of criminology is presently engaged on a study of this nature, and they get the paramount of financing through our grant and grants from the Attorney General's department. We are constantly engaged in discussions with the centre of criminology in an exchange of information.

I might also say to the hon. member that we have made further advances in setting up a proper system of the collection of information as between the federal government and the provinces, which will go a long way towards this struggle. The specific matter of research on sentencing I think, by and large, is in the hands of the centre of criminology at this particular time with our assistance and co-operation. We are also doing some research under our own director of research, but not specifically in this particular area.

Mr. J. Renwick: In a very primitive way, do the judges of the high court, for example, or the provincial judges ever visit your institutions in a routine way—I do not mean a casual visit, but in a planned way—in order that they can have some assessment even at that level of what happens to the person whom they sentence in the courts to your institutions? Or is it just this blind face that falls between the sentencing procedure and what happens to the person when he enters your institution?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: As far as the adult courts are concerned, there are a number of seminars a year—five seminars a year—in which our staff engages. The Deputy Minister particularly participates in these seminars. We have set up a system of visiting our institutions, and we have also set up the same system with the juvenile and family court judges, who have been visiting our institutions. We also discuss matters with them along the same lines so that they will understand the results of their sentencing. I think this is what the hon. member is driving at. This is one of the things that did concern me in the earlier years in this department, that there did not seem to be this kind of communication between the judges and our department.

In other words, the judges were sentencing in many instances without the knowledge of the result of their sentencing—just what kind of an institution the offender was going to, what the programme was, and so on.

Quite often, for example, you will go into a court now and you will find our charts, our adult institution charts. If it is in the juvenile and family court they will have our training school charts showing the structure and the system and the programmes in effect at the various institutions. And we have just recently—as a matter of fact, just a few weeks ago—finished a visit of many of the judges to our institutions, and I am just being reminded that on page 60 in our annual report reference is made to this particular programme and, as a matter of fact, a photograph I am told of one such visit.

Mr. Sopha: Of course, all of us—and it is raised in the very opposite way by the member for Riverdale—at the other end of the process have many times been perplexed and bewildered by the difference in the length of sentences given for the same crime in different courts by different judicial officers and the geographic differences in sentences given in various parts of the province.

Down in the Prime Minister's home town right now they are having a terrible thing about shoplifting. I do not think that is sub judice; I think that has been resolved. It has been decided by a couple of magistrates, apparently, that shoplifters in London, so far as they are concerned, are going to suffer imprisonment. Now there may be more shoplifters in London than there are in more law-abiding parts of the country, for all I know.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Vested interests.

An hon. member: They are trying to keep up with the Robarts, I would say.

Mr. Sopha: It may be that the quality of the goods in the affluent society of London is more attractive to those who divest other people of property. However, that is merely an illusion and does not get to the heart of the matter, which has been discussed in this House every year for the decade that I have been here. That is the problem of making some advance toward the establishment of the principle of making the punishment fit the offender, rather than fit the crime. Punishment ought to fit the criminal, to change the words of Gilbert and Sullivan. Often one is successful, I am saying through you to my good friend, the Attorney General, in getting the ready and sympathetic ear of a court—none of this is funny, I say to the Minister of Correctional Services, it is not humorous—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What vote is it on?

Mr. Sopha: You get a sympathetic court and, if time is available, you are able to acquaint that court in somewhat detailed fashion of the characteristics of the offender before it. I had a very recent case involving a petty appeal and, in a leisurely and unhurried atmosphere with the aid of a psychiatrist, one was able to make the judicial officer aware of the peculiar characteristics of this offender. And something was done in that sentence, with the co-operation of this department, that may lead, one is hopeful, to the rescue of that unfortunate individual. I must say his family is more unfortunate than he is; it is difficult to evoke sympathy for a crime of that nature.

But that is merely an illustration of the larger problem raised by the member for Riverdale. One asks oneself when do we ever take a step on the way to progress of establishing some uniformity in sentences in this province and put the matter in the hands of perhaps some independent tribunal. So far as I am aware in all I have ever read, the California experiment has been a success, where sentencing is done by an independent body from the courts entirely. They are people who are trained in criminology and correctional techniques. We should not hesitate to borrow from successful techniques that have been employed elsewhere. But, still we stumble on in the same old traditional ways here where the lawyer, frequently, is put in the position of feeling that he is doing the utmost service to his client if he escapes being tried by a judge known for his severe sentences.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): I wonder if I might ask the hon. member a question? It seemed to me that I read in the paper yesterday of a sentence in the state of California of 99 years. Was that given by the tribunal that the members speaks of?

Mr. Sopha: That was not in California. That was in another state.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Wrong estimates, too.

Mr. Sopha: It was in the state of Tennessee. The other side of the nation. That distracted me from my point, which was, that frequently lawyers manage their cases so they will escape being tried by particular judicial officers. I have even heard, from a reliable authority, that many lawyers in the city of Toronto try to avoid, at all costs in certain types of crime, coming before the Attorney General's old pal, Tupper Bigelow. Oh, yes.

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): What has this to do with vote 401 of this department?

Mr. Sopha: Well, it has to do with the reform and rehabilitation of these people.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Bring it up with the Attorney General.

Mr. Sopha: I will tell the Provincial Secretary that is exactly what is wrong. If the Provincial Secretary is not concerned about the high rate of recidivism in this country, there are people who are. Most of the people that this Minister gets in Burwash, designed exclusively for them or operated for them, are people he has had in before, not once but often two, three or four times.

That is what we are concerned about—seven, eight, nine hundred of them in Burwash at all times, recidivists, supported at public expense. Many of them escaping and being tried in the Sudbury courts.

If you go there every day you will see Mr. Volsetta dealing with the Minister's charges who escape. The Minister has gone one better, he was not content with the escapees, now he has laid criminal charges or invited the police in. He is now going to burden the Sudbury courts with the trial of alleged crimes in his institution.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is entirely erroneous.

Mr. Sopha: It is not erroneous at all. The Minister sent for the police; it was he who sent for the police.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is erroneous.

Mr. Sopha: It is not erroneous at all.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: On a point of order—

Mr. Sopha: Let him wait. On a point of order, do I not have the right to make my remarks?

Mr. Chairman: Order. The hon. Minister has risen on a point of order.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In the first place, Mr. Chairman, what the hon. member has been talking about is very interesting. There may be some things which he is talking about with which I may agree, but that really has nothing to do with my estimates, except in a very, very indirect fashion.

In respect of his last statement, which was repeated by the hon. member for High Park before and I did not make mention of it, I was hoping it would pass, it is a matter which is not only sub judice but the information they have given to this House is completely erroneous. We did not lay any charges at all.

Mr. Sopha: You sent for the police.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, if somebody wants to lay a charge in one of our institutions, do we not have to bring in the police so they can lay the charge?

Mr. Sopha: A demonstration of failure.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Does the member not think we should obey the law?

Mr. Sopha: It is a demonstration of your failure; the failure of the operation of your institution; you are such a colossal failure that you had to send for the Ontario Provincial Police to correct your failures. That is the painting on the wall that we see.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, for a man who professes to be in favour of rehabilitation—

Mr. Sopha: Yes, that is the mark of your rehabilitative procedure, a total failure. Now you have to call on the Attorney General's legion to assist you.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Sopha: Well, all right, if it offends some; I submit to you that this is entirely relevant and it has always struck me, in ten years of membership, that as soon as somebody gets up and starts to make a contribution to improvement, invariably he is out of order. But, if you stand in your place and speak in a droll and commonplace manner on banal things, you are always in order here.

We are very concerned about the rate of recidivism. I put it before you tonight, one approach we might make is that somebody initiate some studies of experiments elsewhere in order to ascertain the value of the establishment of some other system of sentencing offenders. Sentencing should be based entirely, entirely, on the personal needs of the offender and on nothing else.

As Mr. Justice Laidlaw said, 15 years ago in the Wooller case which is most oft quoted when you go before the courts on a question of sentence, "retribution and punishment are no longer entitled to much notice." Rehabilitation and deterrents are the two factors, and especially rehabilitation, based on the belief, my final words, that there is no human being who is so completely beyond the pale that society and especially those charged with the administration of a department as this, finally give up upon his possible reform.

Mr. Chairman: On vote 401?

The hon. member for Riverdale.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I want again to draw to the attention of the Minister and to the attention of the Attorney General that every time we debate this question of sentencing, there comes a point at which it ceases to be the responsibility of either one of them to provide any effective interchange; either of information on a very primitive level, let alone the kind of concentrated research work which is required to find out what effect the sentences have, in terms of either deterrents or rehabilitation, on the persons who have been sentenced. Now, Mr. Chairman, if the Minister in his report refers to the project on the study of recidivism, then I think that that kind of a study has got to be related directly to the sentencing procedures in the courts.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I agree with that.

Mr. J. Renwick: Now, the Minister drew my attention to page 60 of his report where a certain number of the juvenile and family court judges were visiting the training schools which come under his jurisdiction. I know of no instance where there has been any planned manner by which the judges of the high court of this province visit the institution.

There has been no planning, even on that primitive level, of understanding what takes place. I know, also, of no basic study in this province, about sentencing. There are no books.

There are thousands, literally thousands, of books available, but there are no books available which provide any guidance to counsel who has to speak to a sentence to be imposed in the courts of the province, so that he can draw to the attention of the judge who is going to impose the sentence, the likely effect, in the circumstances of the particular individual, of the sentence that will be passed.

What happens? You can go into any court, and you can hear anyone, any counsel standing up and mumbling the same trite phrases, in mitigation of sentence before the court. The judges do not have, at their disposal, a collection of studies which indicates to them the way in which they should impose their sentence; nor do the lawyers in this province; nor do the counsellors, and the social workers or others who are involved in this problem in the juvenile and family courts.

I have taken this from the point of view of the Attorney General. But, I simply say that its impact bears entirely upon The Department of Correctional Services. It is what happens in those institutions and what happens to the persons when they leave those institutions, from which the knowledge can be gained that will permit us to totally revise the sentencing procedure of the courts. I adopt what the hon. member for Sudbury says as to the structure of it, but you cannot simply re-structure the sentencing system without, at the same time, having the basic research done as to what happens to the people who go through this Minister's system.

I have given up a long time ago ever expecting it to be done at the federal level, so far as the federal penitentiaries are concerned. But, certainly with the information and the number of institutions under this Minister's control, I would like to see next year a very substantial amount of money voted under the estimates of this Minister for the purpose of carrying out that kind of a study.

Until we totally re-orient the system of punishment in this province, we are going to perpetuate this interminable expense and cost. I adopt almost totally one of the sentences in the opening part of the report in the statement of purpose, which says "Inherent in all of the department's operations is the principle that what serves no useful purpose should be discarded".

And I am suggesting that there is a very substantial amount of the Minister's department which, if the money was spent on research, and the kind of research that I have been talking about, could be discarded, and in substitution for it a system which will be rehabilitative, which will be deterrent, which will enable a person to return to this society, and which will enable that person not only to return to this society but not get on the treadmill of returning through the system.

This is the kind of thing that this department has to start basically with. Or are we going to be going on year after year looking at the estimates of his department in terms of the institutional structure which has become such a common framework for him to present his estimates within?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member not agree that this is precisely what we are doing? We are first, contributing a grant towards the centre of criminology so that they can carry on this work. We have, for the last four or five years, set up an increasingly progressive programme of visits by the judiciary to our institutions.

We have sat in with them at their seminars. I was a member of the first conference on sentencing, probably the first non-judicial person at the conference, because I appreciated precisely what the hon. member has stated. He is quite right. Sentencing has a great bearing on rehabilitation.

Now we have just recently—my Deputy has sent me a note—we have just recently sent some information along to Chief Justice Gale on the clarification, and so on, on certain sentencing matters. We have to be careful of this because I do not have to tell the hon. member, who is a lawyer by profession, that the judiciary guards its privileges very carefully and is not too easy to approach by someone who is not a member, neither a lawyer nor a judge.

But we have found a great deal of co-operation where we have spoken to the judges on these matters, and I think what the hon. member was referring to as a primitive type of research, that is, visiting institutions, is most important.

I think it is more important than some of the lofty research that is done by some people—without in any way downgrading the need for this kind of research. But I think the first thing the judges should do is see the institutions and study the programmes which are in effect so that they will understand what they are doing.

I have even sat on the bench with a couple of judges on several occasions to find out for myself. There were things I had to say to some of the judges with whom I had a personal rapport, so it was not a matter of a sort of formal approach to a discipline which sometimes does not look too kindly upon an "outsider" giving advice.

We are very conscious of it in this department. We have discussed certain matters with the Attorney General. We have an ongoing inter-departmental committee. They meet constantly. What the hon. member has referred to is something that has been concerning us, and I think we are approaching this at a fairly rapid pace. Now, not rapid enough to satisfy myself, and I am sure not the hon. member, or anyone else, but we are doing it as quickly as time will permit, having regard for everyone's duties. But let me close by saying I agree with the general principles outlined by the hon. member.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, I think this deserves a final comment and that was certainly quite a commentary by one of the Lieutenant-Governor's advisers that was made about his humility in approaching a member of the judiciary of this province, by one, he said, who was neither a judge nor a lawyer.

I would suggest to him that judges in this province, if they ever were, are not beyond communication, and he might well drop some of the attributes of Uriah Heep and go up and look them in the eye and say whatever he has to say to them. They are servants of the public, the same as many other people in other areas of the public domain.

Now the other thing to be said is there was quite a shift in the Minister's attitude. Originally it was: what has this got to do with my department? A simple answer is that surely he must be concerned about the bitterness which resides within the individual and depresses his spirit when he is in his institution doing two years less a day for passing a bad cheque, and then runs into the next fellow who has come in doing six months for the same offence—one quarter of the time for the same crime.

Indeed, the Attorney General had a magistrate, as they then were, who has now departed this life, sitting not far from Toronto, who apparently believed in the maximum for everybody that came before him. Everything the Code allowed he heaped upon them, and there are many like that.

The Minister of Correctional Institutions need not look to the Attorney General in order to get assistance in this matter of sentencing which is immediately, vitally, intensely related to rehabilitation of the offender, because I suspect the Attorney General does not know how many servants he has out in the province who believe in stiff sentences and how many, on the other hand, are inclined to be moderate and lenient.

He has not the vaguest idea, but out there in the province he has some individuals who are no doubt before the judicial officers in a great variety of cases asking for heavy sentences. On the other hand, no doubt he has got many very humane individuals who are very moderate about it.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, might I suggest the hon. member leave this to the Attorney General's estimates when I will have an opportunity perhaps to answer it. I do not think I have in my colleague's estimates.

Mr. Sopha: All right, I will leave that point. I made that point. I nailed that point down by saying that in my view he cannot get help from the Attorney General. But it is of crucial importance in the operation of this department and the expenditure of public money.

I am going to suggest tonight that the place to do it is in the grant to the centre for the study of criminology, which is a meagre, pitiful $30,000, and they might well be commissioned with much more adequate funds than that to make a study of this system in other jurisdictions.

I have mentioned California—no doubt there are other jurisdictions where this is employed. I suspect that in Europe it has fairly widespread use. But this is a plea in retrospect—the time is long past for commencing this system in Ontario, even for a limited period of time to see how it works out.

We know that the present system we employ is hopeless; that it contributes to failure; that we have individuals going in again. Let me refer to another—I have had so many personal experiences—let me refer to another type; the type of individual who does not want to go to the Minister's institution because he will not learn a trade. The member for High Park adverted to that. I have had personal experience—

An hon. member: They want to go to Kingston.

Mr. Sopha: Yes, they want to go to Kingston—where the individual on a charge of armed robbery asked the judge when he sentenced him to two less a day to increase it. He said give me four so that I can go to Kingston and continue my trade.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The hon. member does not really believe that, does he?

Mr. Sopha: What?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That that is the reason the man asked to go to Kingston.

Mr. Sopha: I have no doubt about it at all. I have no doubt.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is not the reason.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Now that we are getting statutory revisions here you will find there will be no more requests with this.

Mr. Sopha: Do not bother me with this trivia.

An hon. member: Do not confuse him with the facts.

Mr. Sopha: I will put the facts of this case.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Sopha: Will you keep quiet until I can put them? Is that asking too much of you?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, for all this period of time I think it is.

Mr. Sopha: This individual was engaged in taking a welding course at the CVT in Sudbury when he fell into trouble. He fell into it with two other companions, whom I suspected were the initiators of this scheme to rob a restaurant. He was daily attending the welding course at CVT.

He told me pending the trial that he was very anxious that he go to an institution where he might complete that course. The day he came to trial, when the judge sentenced him to two years less a day, he got up and said: "Would you increase that to four years, because I am probably going to go to Burwash and I cannot continue that course."

And the judge said properly: "I have passed the sentence, that completes the matter." And of course they led him away. Within two or three days—a very short space of time—he escaped from Burwash. I saw him in the Sudbury court.

When Magistrate Falzetta, as he then was, asked him why he escaped, he said: "In this very courtroom I asked the judge to give me four years so I could go to Kingston. The reason I escaped is that I now know you will give me enough that I will go to Kingston and be able to take the course".

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Do not believe everything you hear.

Mr. Sopha: I have no doubt at all—the Attorney General can shake his head all he wants, the Minister can sneer all he wants about it—but I have no doubt at all about the veracity of those facts. That is what these people who have experience of the institutions think about them; that is the knowledgeable attribute that they have about the type of institutions that you run.

Well, that is the kind of thing that we are delighted to share with the member for Riverdale, because he knows whereof he speaks. That is the type of thing we want to correct on this side. We want to see this province make some major advance toward rehabilitation by the employment of this device of making the punishment fit the criminal and be adjusted to his peculiar and personal attributes.

This is one way of doing it and the Minister can talk all he wants—he falls into that same banal, commonplace, repetitive phraseology that we hear coming from those Treasury benches over there—that it is the best in the universe. Everything is always the best in the universe.

If this Minister says it, he says it in the light of knowledge that the recidivist rate in this province is among the highest in the western world.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is not true.

Mr. Sopha: Among the highest in the western world!

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Where did you get that from?

Mr. Sopha: Far higher than the United Kingdom. And another statistic—there are more people per capita in jails in Ontario—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In Canada.

Mr. Sopha: In Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In Canada.

Mr. Sopha: Ontario leads the way in convicting people—we are leaders in the nation.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We have more people in Ontario, that is the important thing.

Mr. Sopha: Leaders in the nation—on a per capita basis. Somebody said—was it the member for High Park or my colleague from Windsor—that it was far higher than the province of Quebec. I put the statistics on the record last year to demonstrate that.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I wonder why.

Mr. Sopha: Well, the convictions and jailing of people in this province—and I measure my words carefully—under The Liquor Control Act, are a national disgrace. They are a disgrace, and you know the first person, Mr. Chairman, who agrees with that? The Minister of Correctional Services. He is on record as having said that. Ontario leads the way in the numbers in their jails.

I beg leave to say to you, sir, that these comments have been put forward constructively tonight where they should be put forward—not in the Attorney General's estimates. I do not want to talk to the Attorney General about it at all, until the Attorney General comes in the House and demonstrates to us, that which he has never done. He has never demonstrated at any time that he has in his department any system of uniformity of sentences. He has none.

I know he has none. As far as the operation of his lieutenants are concerned, he does not know what is going on. He does not know what is going on. He would not have the vaguest idea of what kind of sentences Clay Powell was asking for Myer Rush. He would not have the vaguest idea because nobody would tell him.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Perhaps you could wait for my estimates so that I might have an opportunity to reply.

Mr. Sopha: Nobody would tell him what they were going to ask for Myer Rush, and I am not commenting on the sentence he got. The Attorney General would know when Clay Powell or Rendell Dick told him, or when he read it in the paper.

But he does not participate in any real sense at all in the prosecution of criminal offenders in this province. That is done by people in his department and I will be the most surprised person in the House if he suddenly comes in this year, gets up in that high and mighty fashion tonight and for the first time in his career, announces to us that he has got some policy about the retrieval of human beings through the device of uniformity of sentence and sentencing according to their personal needs for rehabilitation.

Mr. Chairman: Is vote 401 carried?

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Mr. Chairman, Vote 401 is the Minister's advisory council. I see by the estimates it seems to be down some, and I was wondering how active this group is? Are they really spending enough time on this? What is the situation on that?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: This is a very active committee, Mr. Chairman. This gives me an opportunity to pay tribute to that committee; they have provided me with a considerable number of reports when I have requested them to do some research on the advisability of a particular type of programme, I suppose as many as four or five reports a year. They are very active.

Mr. Ruston: Mr. Chairman, on the same point, I was wondering though, since his estimate is down, if they are as active as they have been in the past and will it be possible for these reports to be made available to the members of the Legislature?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Did the hon. member say in his view that the expenses for this committee were down?

Mr. Ruston: From the last year's estimates, yes.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What were they in last year's estimates?

Mr. Ruston: $31,000.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am told this is again caused by the new programme. Last year's estimates included all of the committees, and this year specifies just for the Minister's advisory committee on the treatment of the offenders. As far as the reports are concerned, those are privileged to the Minister. They are not made public.

Mr. Ruston: How about staff training and development? Last year your estimate was $232,000. What is the amount for this year on staff training and development?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: $277,000.

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): Mr. Chairman, I want to get back to research briefly. Could the Minister indicate what are the terms of reference or the aims or objectives of the major research projects that are being financed by his department?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I will have that in a moment.

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): Mr. Chairman, in the interim might I pose a question to the Minister relating back to the topic raised by my colleague.

I know some of the gentlemen who sit on this advisory committee, and I think they are very fine gentlemen and doing wonderful work on behalf of the citizens of this province. But I would ask of the Minister, have there been any new appointments to this advisory council in the past few months or are there any vacancies? And further, are they on a per diem basis and has this per diem basis been increased since the inception of this council? What is the amount of payment for their work?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The per diem allowance is $35, and I think that was increased last year from I think it was $20 or $25.

Mr. Paterson: Is that plus expenses?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Plus expenses.

In answer to the hon. member's question about research projects. A major project which the research branch has undertaken is the setting up of a systems and operations programme using computer facilities. This will allow for quick and easy access to offender statistics and departmental programmes and will be of great value to the department as a whole, as well as to the research branch.

Ongoing evaluation of two types of treatment methods within the training school system. A programme of behaviour modification using positive reinforcement techniques. Proposed research to evaluate the effectiveness of halfway houses. At the University of Ottawa, under the direction of Doctor Tadeusz Grygier, a study of personality changes in correctional treatment, and a study concerning the factors associated with recidivism after release from the Brampton training centre.

A follow-up study of men who received corporal punishment in our institutions during 1951 to 1955. A preliminary examination of educational adjustment within the training school and after graduation. A broad study of training school students including events that precipitate admittance to training school, and community reaction to children who have graduated.

A study of the correctional officer—the recruitment process, selection criteria, in-service training, staff training course, duties, and attitudes towards rehabilitation (in co-operation with The Department of Civil Service personnel research branch). A study of attitude change of inmates as a function of sensory deprivation at Trent University. (I hope you do not ask me to explain that one!) A study concerning affiliative tendencies under anxiety arousing circumstances which might assist in identifying those inmates who would best benefit from group therapy and those who would best benefit from individual therapy. This is being done at the University of Waterloo.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Riverdale.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I would like to move on to another area involved in what I assume is professional services. Is the Minister giving any consideration to the question of the rights of people who are within his institutions? I think it has been traditionally correct to say that when a person is sentenced and is in custody, he immediately loses all his rights. I think that is true in the Minister's institutions.

I am thinking, for example, of the study which is being made of the election law at the present time. Is the Minister giving consideration to appearing before that committee and suggesting that persons in custody in his institutions should be given the opportunity to vote in provincial elections? I am thinking about the question of whether or not he is giving consideration to any relaxation in this and what are the dangers involved in relaxing this inhibiting method by which prisoners are restricted in the amount of mail that they may send out from the institutions?

I am thinking about the internal punishments administered within the institutions of the Minister and whether or not there is any method by which a person subjected to punishment in a secondary sense, within the institution has any outlet by which he can appeal or get relief from punishments which, to him, may appear either severe or unjust or improper? Is there any review procedure being established within the institution?

Those are three areas that I use to illustrate the point, which seems to me essential at this time, that the Minister begin to give consideration as to what are the rights of people in his institutions. Or do we accept the outmoded, outworn and ancient view that a person sentenced by a judge in a court, in the province of Ontario, is automatically deprived of all his rights? Or are you, as part of your rehabilitative procedures, going to provide a person with at least some semblance of the dignity of a person who is entitled to certain rights when he is subjected to custody within your institutions.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: First, Mr. Chairman, I would think that the rights, if you call them that, of an inmate in an institution are inherent in the statement of purpose which we have. I think in general this states that he be treated in a humane fashion. Nothing will be done which retards rehabilitation, and anything being done just as a matter of course without proving its usefulness will be done away with.

As far as I can recall, we have never given any thought to the effect of a prisoner losing his voting rights. I presume this is the only reason the hon. member would ask it in so far as its effect on his attitude which, of course, concerns us—a great deal. The whole matter of attitude is an important point in rehabilitation. I must honestly say that, as far as I can recall, we have never discussed this at all.

I will tell the hon. member that the matter of censoring mail has bothered me from the first day of taking this job—it is a difficult task. It is the most difficult problem to resolve, because there are a great number of problems involved. I think I have gone into this before, the question of whether a letter which is going out may cause a great deal of trouble for someone else or even for the inmate himself. The well known “Dear John” letter—the hon. members know what that means.

There are various things which could happen which are on the positive side, if one could call it the positive side, in so far as retaining censorship is concerned. I am still not satisfied that it is absolutely necessary I must tell you that there is some disagreement amongst the staff. We have been debating this and I think there may be some changes, but I cannot guarantee that.

Mr. Shulman: Why only one letter every two weeks?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There are two letters a week. I do not know where the hon. member gets that one every two weeks. And an inmate can have special extra letters if there is a good reason for it. This is fairly generous.

Mr. Shulman: Why should they be restricted?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, in a penal institution, you have to have some sort of organization, some sort of discipline, and everybody just cannot do everything they want to. You have only so many staff, too, and if you are going to censor letters you are going to have to have the staff to censor the letters.

This is another good reason, of course, for reconsidering this, but the fact is that why not 50 letters a week, you know, if you want to put it that way. There has to be some sort of rule making it possible to handle the machinery of the operation of the institution.

I think that is fairly generous, two letters a week, plus any additional letters which he feels are absolutely necessary. It is not difficult to convince the staff—if he wants to write a special letter for a special reason they let him do that generally. This might be increased, I cannot guarantee that.

I might say over and above all this, we have discussed with Mr. Justice McRuer some of these matters, the general aspect of the rights of an inmate and some other aspects of it. Out of this may very well come some changes, I am not too sure. I am not unmindful of the fact that the hon. member for High Park does not really feel that inmates have any rights at all. He has made this public statement. I do not know whether he still remains with his statement or not, but he has pointed out that in his view they did not have any rights.

I do not know, beyond what I have told you, if there is anything I can add to that. It does concern us insofar as these matters which I have mentioned to the hon. member.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, would the Minister give consideration next year to including in the statistics which he publishes with his report, the classifications and nature of the punishments which are meted out in his institutions, so that we can have some opportunity of finding out whether or not there should be an appeal procedure?

I happen to think there should be. I think there should be. I think that if you are in custody in an institution where there is a tendency for the one person in charge of the institution to dominate the discipline of that institution that punishments can be meted out which verge upon unreasonableness and can cause injustices.

For whatever it is worth, I think there should be some method by which a person who is in one of the institutions should have a procedural method of appeal. Then a good part of the Minister's concern about the mail might very well disappear.

Of course, the other item which I guess gets lost in Hansard never gets any consideration; the suggestion was put forward a year ago, that at least the person who is in an institution should have the right to communicate in uncensored form with the member of the Legislature for the riding which that person comes from. That was one suggestion that was put forward.

Of course, there is always hanging over the whole operation the question of whether or not the government is ever going to move and to make provision for an ombudsman, who, in one of his functions—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: There is always the consideration of every department of government.

Mr. J. Renwick: I would be glad to yield the floor to the Prime Minister. I did not catch a single word of what he said.

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of Revenue): That is the member's fault.

Mr. J. Renwick: Does the member for London South want to come into the debate too?

We wait until 25 minutes to twelve, before the member for London South wants to open his mouth and come into this debate.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Riverdale has the floor.

Mr. J. Renwick: What we are trying to get at? The member for London South thinks these things are very humorous—

Hon. Mr. White: No, I think the member is very humorous.

Mr. J. Renwick: And the Prime Minister is obviously not interested in the topic. Now let us get down to what I am talking about and let us make it perfectly clear that, in the way in which this government operates its reform institutions or its correctional services, they think that the person who is sentenced has no rights. And I am saying to the Minister—

Hon. Mr. White: As a matter of fact, the issue is proved by the fact the member has only four of his own members there.

Mr. Nixon: What does that prove?

Mr. J. Renwick: What has that got to do with 'it'?

Mr. Nixon: The member for London South is getting over-defensive.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. J. Renwick: I am simply asking whether or not the Minister is giving any consideration to studying, to restoring to persons who are in custody in his institutions some area of his rights in terms of his dignity, in terms of his inherent dignity, and in terms of the rehabilitation procedures which he is carrying out?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, Mr. Chairman, this is the whole purpose of our system and I do not know whether the hon. member really believes that we treat the inmates in such a fashion that they feel they are not dealing with people who care about them as human beings. Our whole purpose is to restore to them their human dignity.

As a matter of fact, you just have to go to some of the institutions, like the Brampton training centre where they have a somewhat therapeutic community—they have their own committee and they bring recommendations, some are recommendations which have been adopted by the department.

As far as the question of censoring is concerned, I do not know what the hon. member means by that. Does he mean that we should not look at the letter which goes to an MPP? Because we do not touch a letter which goes out, in any way, shape or form. The censoring he refers to is that the letter is perused. Letters coming in and going out are perused and are left untouched. I hope he understands that.

And I agree with the hon. member that it would be much better for the dignity of the inmate in our efforts to rehabilitate him if we could do without the censoring. Of course, there is a reduction of someone's dignity if he has to have every letter looked at.

But saying that does not mean that it is that simple to put into practice, because there are a lot of manipulative people looking for an opportunity to use these things for their own ulterior purposes, and it is a very difficult problem. In respect to the right of review, they always, of course, have the right to write the Minister. And the hon. member may rest assured that if the letter in any way, shape or form, leads me to believe it is worthy of an investigation, a real investigation—because I get many, many letters—then it is investigated.

Aside from the fact that there is a possibility of some abuse somewhere down the line, which is most unlikely but could happen, I say generally speaking, the inmates in our institutions, our wards and our charges, are used in a very, very humane fashion, and I want to make that very clear. Because this is the whole purpose—I repeat—the whole purpose of our system, to try and give each person back his dignity.

The restraints we put upon this dignity are put into effect, not because we like to do it, but only because it appears necessary in running a correctional system. Insofar as various institutions are concerned, different systems are in effect. The same policy does not apply in all institutions. It depends upon which institution you are in, because of the fact that you have minimum security, medium security, and maximum security.

There are all sorts of programmes—a tremendous number of programmes going on in the province, and all designed to give back a great deal of dignity to the inmate in the institution.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Sudbury.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister says—while I watch these phrases roll out of him—that the chief purpose, no, the sole purpose of our institutions is the rehabilitation of the individual.

Well, one wonders about his dedication to the principle when one sees him evading the responsibility for ascertaining the causes of the bitterness that the people come to him with, the bitterness residing in the cynicism with life, and with the process that has sent them there. And it is not solved—it is really not solved—by this Minister and the Attorney General arguing whether it is relevant. I leave that.

In response to the point raised by my friend, I have often wondered, in the realm of human rights, whatever happened to that one of privileged communications between solicitor and client, in connection with censorship.

The individual is still a client; he may be subject to appeal. He goes into the institution and he wants to make a communication to his solicitor, so that hoary privilege of the common law—indeed the only privilege that really exists, the privacy between solicitor and client—goes completely out of the window, as those communications arrive in the office with the censor marks upon them. It might be helpful if they are censored, but perhaps the censor could add some comments to it by way of assistance to the prisoner and his client, through his own experience.

But the member for Riverdale, again, is dead right. Mr. McRuer might well look at some of the interferences in this area of these institutions with the rights of individuals—and that might be an early one—so that all a prisoner need do, in short, is to say to his custodial officer, “I want to write a letter to my lawyer and my member of Parliament,” and perforce the letter goes forward completely untampered by anybody in the institution. These ought to be two areas where there is complete and free communication.

But one gets the feeling each year in discussing these things—I make no apologies to anyone, for this is the area I earn my living in, and I have a responsibility to lay out the benefits of my experience before this House and be judged upon their worth. I am content to run that risk—that this affable Minister will, compliantly and in very friendly fashion, say these things will be looked after—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I have never been called affable before.

Mr. Sopha: —they will be looked at, and nothing is ever done. No progress is ever made, but we are assuaged by his winsome ways, year after year, of appearing to agree with us.

Well, all right, there are two areas. We will look next year and see if that privilege between solicitor and client has been restored without the hindrance of the custodial officers, and we will see if those plate glass windows disappear from the institutions.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I have never said that they would.

Mr. Sopha: Well, we will see if they do.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: All the offenders are going to be home free.

Mr. Sopha: I beg your pardon, whatever you say is always very important.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I said, then we would not need any custodians at all.

Mr. Sopha: Well, that is what Mr. Frost said. Now we have retrogression in the Conservative Party.

Let me comment on that very briefly. Mr. Frost always said, “You need not bother about these people. All we have to do is to require people to be good and, if they are bad, we will get the police after them.” And we have gone full cycle—the present Prime Minister appears to agree with that thesis.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: That is not what I said at all.

Mr. Nixon: How about saying let us adjourn.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, because this is so interesting—

Mr. Nixon: I knew you were interested in it. Every one of your comments indicates how interested you are.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I am sitting here enjoying the debate. This is a supreme example of the way you handle the estimates.

Mr. Nixon: Well, are you punishing us, or what?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor Walkerville): Is 11 o'clock not late enough?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I am sitting here listening.

Mr. Nixon: He is obviously enjoying it.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: We are sitting here doing the listening, so what is your objection?

Mr. Nixon: My objection is that it is a quarter to 12, and I think we should call it a day.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Oh, well, come on. Let us go on and hear some more—the hon. member for High Park.

Mr. Shulman: I would not want to leave the Prime Minister disappointed. Mr. Speaker—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I am never disappointed.

Mr. Shulman: You may have a great disappointment coming, Mr. Prime Minister.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I did not hear that last quip.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Prime Minister, I am beginning to worry a bit about you. I have a letter I would like to read now, Mr. Chairman.

This letter came from Burwash, and the reason I am beginning with this particular letter is because of the comments of the Minister in reference to censorship, and may I say I am not bringing it up because of the complaint of the prisoner in this letter.

Interjection by hon. member.

Mr. Shulman: I am referring to censorship. Is censorship under this vote, or the next vote. If it is under the next vote, why have we been discussing it all this time.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Discussing what?

Mr. Shulman: Censorship.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Are we discussing censorship?

Mr. Shulman: Have you not been discussing censorship?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am asking the hon. member, I did not think he was discussing censorship.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: They have been discussing and we have been listening.

Mr. Shulman: I would like to discuss censorship, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: I understood the hon. member for High Park to refer to matters pertaining to reformatories, and I just want to point out that it does come in the next vote. Now, if it is censorship generally—

Mr. Shulman: The matter I am referring to is censorship.

Mr. Chairman: You are quite in order then.

Mr. Shulman: I have a letter here from an inmate of Burwash, which came out through the back door, and this is the reason I am bringing this letter up. Not because of the complaint that is involved in this letter—this may or may not have any merit, Mr. Chairman—but in reference to the fact that the Minister may have certain thoughts as to what his policy on censorship is, but once it filters down to his various institutions, I am convinced that his governors are following up his policy, which he is stating here in the House. Anyway,

Dear Mr. Shulman:

I am an inmate of Burwash reformatory writing about a situation that has been bothering a lot of us for some time now.

The date on this is October 20, 1968.

As you probably know, this institution is divided into several camps, the main camp holding approximately 300 inmates. Two of the outside camps hold 40 inmates each, and have televisions. You can probably understand that not everyone that wants to, can go to the outside camps. What we would like to know is, why do these privileged 80 inmates have television and we do not.

Now here is the point.

We have tried to write to you about this before, but the superintendent would not let the letters go out. So this one is going out the back door. Also some of us have asked the superintendent if we could pool our money and rent televisions while the hockey season is on, but he would not go for this either.

You are known to be a fair and just man, unlike the present Minister—

I had better repeat that, I do not think the Minister heard it.

—unlike the present Minister, and we are hoping that you could spare a little time to come up here and look into the situation for us.

signed—

Perhaps I should not mention the name of the inmate; he might have some difficulty.

Mr. Chairman, the reason I am bringing this up is not in relation to television, which does not impress me as a terribly serious complaint, but because obviously the censorship that the Minister describes and the ensorship that the inmates have to undergo are very different matters.

Now, I am asking the Minister, will he instruct his governors or his superintendents of these various institutions that in future, on any matter, regardless of the subject that an inmate wishes to write to an MPP, that there will be no censorship—and by censorship I mean restriction of the right to send such a correspondence?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, Mr. Chairman, that is the situation right now. That is precisely their instructions, and they know it. So, I do not have to issue any such directive.

I am little surprised. The hon. member says he had to receive a letter through the back door. Incidentally, he is being an accessory to someone breaking the regulations, someone could really get into trouble. I am glad he did not read the name.

An hon. member: Charge him.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Now, will the hon. member please tell me whether he has found any difficulty getting letters through the front door? The hon. member has had a great deal of correspondence with inmates at the institution, why would he feel that he has to have one of them through the back door?

Mr. Shulman: Well, perhaps the Minister will realize the significance of the ones which I did not receive; I would not know about them. I am sure the Minister would agree with me on that. Of course, I am aware of the ones I get through the front door.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I take strong exception to that. I take strong exception, not only to the implication, but to the charge that any of the superintendents disobey instructions, particularly in respect of this very important matter.

And if the hon. member would care to lay it on my desk, I will investigate it and he will have to take the consequences of the investigation. Is he prepared to stand up and take responsibility for making that charge against the governor, against the superintendent?

Mr. Shulman: Will the Minister give me his assurance there will be no disciplinary action against the prisoners?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I do not know why, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member—any hon. member in this House—would think that the Minister would take any kind of disciplinary action against any inmate in any institution for having written a letter of any kind to anybody. Unless he broke the rules of the institution without good cause.

Now if this man had found the only way he could get his letter out was this way, of course he would not be punished. But if, in fact, he did this just in a mischievous manner—which I strongly suspect he did, then he would be punished because he has broken the rules and he has broken a very important rule.

I strongly doubt that this happened. There is no necessity for it. There are hundreds of letters coming out from Burwash and all sorts of letters to MPPs. The hon. member for Sudbury East gets a lot of them. The hon. member for High Park himself must. I do not know how many he has. He has a regular machine for letters. He sends them to me without even signing them. His secretary signs them for him. I doubt if he reads most of them.

Mr. Sopha: I get a fair number.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: So how in the world can you suggest that there was somebody holding them back? It is really unworthy of a member of this House to make such a suggestion; it really is. We have people having a difficult time operating these institutions.

Now insofar as the TV is concerned, so the hon. member will not take credit, as he has attempted to do in some of his letters, when something is done for an inmate he answers their letters in such a manner that what comes back to us, is that he in fact, was the one responsible for this—let me tell him that as of today—before I heard his question—all of the inmates have TV available to them and they are going to be connected tomorrow night. Now I presume the hon. member will send a letter back and say, see we got you TV.

Mr. Sopha: Do you mean to say the inauguration was the infliction of the member for York South on them?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No it was not connected at all.

Mr. Shulman: I had already contacted an inmate earlier this week, telling him I would raise it in the House and I could assure him that he would have television before the week was out.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 401; the hon. member for Lakeshore was on his feet.

Mr. Lawlor: Well I want to diverge a bit in this debate from what has been discussed at the moment. I wanted to give a bit of a résumé of what happens at the beginning of a sentence in, say, Guelph Reformatory and then to turn to the end of the sentence, when he comes to after-care treatment.

The whole area of what happens to people released from our jails and prisons very much concerns me. So I kind of want to go from alpha to omega in a sweep and leave out much in between and then come back as we reach the various heads under the estimates. But I wonder whether I really want to do that tonight and—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Now, Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, I suggest the hon. member is on Vote 402. He is now talking about a specific programme, the rehabilitation of the adult offenders and this comes in vote 402. If we are going to keep any semblance of order we have to stick to some order. He is really on vote 402.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 401?

Mr. Lawlor: Very well, I am quite prepared to get launched on this. Let us take the position at Guelph Reformatory—the hon. member for High Park and myself have visited Guelph Reformatory, to take a case in point.

I take it as the case in point because this is where in southern Ontario the first offenders go, to be parceled out in the rather arbitrary and sometimes cruel way in which it is done there. But sticking to Guelph itself, I think it is fair to say—and this a rather nebulous thing—that irrespective of when you go there, the atmosphere of that place is directly detrimental to any type of rehabilitation whatsoever.

I think the Minister himself indicated this afternoon that he regrets that somewhat. I think he feels the oppressive, repressive, restrictive, punitive dragooning almost quasi-military atmosphere that surrounds Guelph. It is no place to even begin the process of rehabilitation and that is precisely the place in this province where they are supposed to begin.

The prisoners in the institution—one is struck by this immediately upon going in the door—the prisoners have a general air of resentment and embitterment and this is just the contrary psychological attitude that you are seeking to engender. I say that you regret this institution yourself. You did not bring it into being, the buildings have been there for a long time. Somewhat ameliorative steps have been taken over the years.

In other words, the prison population has been reduced to where it stands at about 780 at this time and I understand that your intention is to continue to reduce that prison population at Guelph. But in the meantime, and in between, all you are doing there, as far as I can see, is breeding future crime.

It is very hard to put your finger on why that is. I suspect it has something to do with the guards and yet, they seem to be a humane enough lot when you are talking to them. There is a general air of oppression, nevertheless, throughout the building. The sheer size is, of course, the chief contributing factor, apart from this training of guards.

If such is the case of the 700-and-some-odd prisoners who occupy this place constantly, if that is the situation, then I would suggest that your very first and highest priority, even higher—and I am prepared to debate this with you—than your proposed new reformatory, where you are going to place short-term recidivists to the number of 200 and no more, as you say in your annual statement, that an even higher priority than doing that, would certainly be to take care of the recidivists, since Guelph created them.

In other words, if you are going to get rid of recidivism, it is not by dealing with recidivists in the second institution, but by doing something in the atmosphere in the first so there will not be recidivism at least to the extent and degree that is taking place in this province.

Now last year the debate about Guelph took the form of some rather malicious interior goings on there. I remember we tried to tie the Minister down, Mr. Chairman, on the running of a gauntlet. It looks as though that whole situation has been cleaned out and we hear no further reports and our recent visitation gave no indication of any vindictiveness or that particular kind of viciousness operative within the reformatory itself.

Perhaps, then, we do serve some function. We have a strong belief that this will not take place in that institution or any other institution in the province again and will not, provided that the members in this House are willing to take a sufficient interest to see that it darn well does not. That is our role as I see it.

The curious thing about the guard situation at Guelph is the way you train the guards. Now are the guards throughout the rest of the province being exposed to the curious twist in the psychology at Guelph? You set forth in your annual report that it is crucial, that it is the centre of your whole rehabilitative programme that there be a good healthy association and inter-relationship between guard and prisoner.

I suggest at Guelph there is no such relationship. Then this is double damned, you know, and condoned by the fact that you send all of the guards of Ontario to fester in this attitude and they go out to their institutions, although curiously enough, the contamination does not seem to take too well, because the guards, as we found them in other institutions—Millbrook even—seem to be rather more nonchalant, give-and-take types of fellows. The feeling of discipline and rigidity is not half as great, where there are human beings.

But that other institution does breed a certain attitude and mentality—whether it is reflected off resentful young prisoners down to older guards, or back the other way, by way of impositions, restrictions, cutting off of privileges and keeping them always under the thumb, including the business of mailing and the reception of visitors. All these things working together in that initial, primary-stage institution can do nothing but poison the whole atmosphere of this province with respect to the criminal population of the future. You are doing little to alter it and that is the nub and the focus of your first intent.

Break up that institution, spread it out, give a greater area of custodial care. How many people at Guelph, for instance, participate in your vaunted programme of group counselling and therapy where human beings can talk to each other and get it off their chests, for the first time in their lives, probably? Not very many. You may reply you cannot lead a horse to water, but on the other hand the whole atmosphere of the institution is detrimental to any such give and take communication.

The place is a fake, and I think you should get rid of it. Thank heavens the whole guard situation is being moved out of there, according to your report, to Toronto to, I think probably, Mimico, which lies within my bailiwick. The training will be done in closer rapport with the university facilities—criminology, psychological care, sociological studies, bringing people into rapport in a way which is completely, as far as I can see, lost in that particular institution.

That is the beginning of the thing. You are going to have to move in there rather rapidly to break up that complex—the place is a festering sore—and retrain your guards there in an atmosphere which will lead to rehabilitation. It will avoid such a heavy load on the purse of this province with respect to welfare cheques for the families and with respect to the continued reinstalling and looking after prisoners in our institutions. It is away out of hand. The initial institution, the primary focal institution, in the whole thing is disarranged and disarranging.

Swinging to the other end of the thing with respect to the after-care treatment, you know we discussed in the House in private members' hour the problem of bonding. I just wonder what this Minister has done, if anything, with respect to those men who come out of these institutions in lamentable condition, coming out with a maximum of $20 when a room in Toronto costs $13, $15 to $17 a week. If a fellow wants a drink after his long incarceration or to spend any money at all on food and clothing and shelter, he is going to be broke in a week at the most. He is thrown out on to the general public—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We do not send a man out with $20 when he looks as though he will need more assistance.

Mr. Lawlor: We will get to that when you give your specific assistance items. But it is certainly not very extensive and that is the basic figure which many receive. They get to some of the half-way houses in some cases, but by and large they are thrown back on the population, and in a most indefensible way. They cannot get a job in many factories in this province because they have a blanket bonding situation and if it is discovered about a man working in a factory, in welding or anything he might have picked up at a reformatory or training school, he is instantly dismissed.

The position of the insurance companies up to this time has been an instantaneous, automatic refusal to consider bonding at all, and it is only lately—the Minister shakes his head—but again I come back to him—it is only lately, I say, due to Larry Pennell up in Ottawa that overtures have been made to the insurance companies—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You do not think I had anything to do with it?

Mr. Lawlor: Are there ongoing consultations between yourself and the insurance companies at the present time?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There certainly are.

Mr. Lawlor: Very good, I was not aware of this at this level. I know federally they are working at it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: And they started before Larry Pennell.

Mr. Sopha: Please, Mr. Justice Pennell.

Mr. Lawlor: If that is the case, I know at the federal level they have set up some machinery for discussion.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Lawlor: The thing has not gone very far yet at a federal level. I would like to hear the Minister explain just what they are doing in this area. I know the discussions at the federal level are very tentative. The federal government, the Liberals, have rejected the business of a fund being set up by the government as a blanket fund. Apparently they are not prepared to accept that, but they are prepared to put some pressure on the insurance companies to grant bonds after careful screening which, I suppose, is some kind of a start. But when you note that—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please! The member for Lakeshore has the floor.

Mr. Lawlor: I mentioned factories throughout the province refusing to take people on staff because of criminal records. I mentioned department stores and clerical businesses, the whole range of secondary industry of that kind, where—for instance, Eaton's, I understand, has an application form on which you have to make disclosure as to whether you are bondable or whether you had a previous criminal record. There are people excluded, I believe. I tried to check that this afternoon, I am not sure, but the other great department store in this city does the same thing.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Try Hazen Argue.

Mr. Lawlor: You are cutting down the future range of a person's possibilities. He is driven back, I am suggesting to you, from industry into the commercial field. He cannot get a job where there is any handling of money; the banks will not touch him, the financial houses will not touch him. Who will touch him? How can he rehabilitate himself, particularly if he is a white-collar individual? He is driven down to menial tasks; he will not face those menial tasks. He thinks: "If this is what society wishes to do to me, then I can make an easier living at crime. If I have a half an ounce of it, I can be a 14-story man and I am simply not going to put up with this. If I have to pay penalties for it then I will revert, I will take my chances."

I am saying that the after-care seems to me to be terribly inadequate, so much so that it is almost designed to put a man back into a life of crime when there is no reason for it. Legislation can be passed in this House saying that industry and companies may not demand such disclosures on the part of individuals and that they may not demand a bonding situation. If you cannot negotiate that then the government, as with the automobile fund, should set up some funding to cover such individuals. You may exclude certain ones; on the other hand you may include a great many more. They will be protected, industry will be protected, by this government.

I suggest that the loss in that fund would be absolutely minimal once it was set up, and it will obviate a great social ill. It will obviate sending them back, because they are driven by economic necessity into crime due to the failure to provide such facilities and services.

That is the alpha and omega of my remarks for the nonce under this particular heading. Under vote 401, though, Mr. Chairman, I have a number of particular and specific remarks to make. If there are other members who wish to speak, I will make them at some other time, otherwise I will make them now.

Mr. Nixon: This would be a good time to leap in.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, I would like to come to the matter of salaries, which I had hoped to leave until tomorrow, but I guess we have time tonight.

An hon. member: The member has already spoken to that.

Mr. Shulman: We on this side have been complaining that salaries in this department, particularly of professional workers, are far too low, which is why the Minister is having problems in staffing his psychology, psychiatry and other social work departments.

I received a letter here fairly recently which points up the errors that are made in setting the salaries as well as—

Mr. Sopha: How does the letter begin?

Mr. Shulman: "Dear Dr. Shulman"—as well as the low salaries and the inequities in salaries. It is from Lucerne, Quebec.

Dear Dr. Shulman:

I am enclosing a copy of a letter which I sent to the Honourable Mr. Allan Grossman, Minister of Correctional Services. As I do not expect he will take any action, perhaps you will look into it.

There is the copy of a letter addressed to "Mr. Grossman" dated September 13, 1968, and I will read it in full because it spells out the problem.

I have just received two circulars advertising for social workers to join your Department of Correctional Services and work at one of the juvenile training schools.

One position offers a salary range of $7,500 to $9,000, the other, a supervisor's position, offers $10,000 to $12,000 and asks for at least four years of acceptable social work training. "Acceptable" meaning at least two years in psychiatric or medical social work with supervisory responsibilities.

I know your deep interest in developing an effective Department of Corrections. However, I find the salaries being offered to a social worker, compared to a psychologist, are extremely disturbing.

In order to document my extreme concern about your salaries, I refer you to the Hansard report on the estimates of the then-called Department of Reform Institutions, May 28 to May 30, 1968.

On page 169 of that report—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: All original thought here.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if you could keep the Prime Minister in order so that we could at least get some reasonable debate going here without his constant interruptions.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Shulman: Because of the interruptions, Mr. Chairman, I will start this letter again. It is dated September 13, 1968. I think it is quite important that I get the letter in its total context to the Minister. I would not want these interruptions to throw him off.

Dear Mr. Grossman:

I have just received two circulars advertising for social workers to join your Department of Correctional Services and work at one of the juvenile training schools.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, is it not possible to keep the Prime Minister in order?

Mr. Sopha: I thought maybe he was intercepting the Minister's mail.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please!

Mr. Shulman: We are having a very serious debate tonight.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please!

The member for High Park has the floor.

Mr. Shulman: Thank you.

Dear Mr. Grossman:

I have just received two circulars—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You know, that is the third time the member has called me "dear" tonight.

Mr. Shulman: I want to make it very clear, Mr. Chairman, that the "dear" is in quotation marks.

Dear Mr. Grossman:

I have just received two circulars advertising for social workers to join your Department of Correctional Services and work at one of the juvenile training schools.

One position offers a salary range of $7,500 to $9,000, the other, a supervisor's position, offers $10,000 to $12,000, and asks for at least four years of acceptable social work training. "Acceptable" meaning at least two years of psychiatric or medical social work with supervisory responsibilities.

I know your deep interest in developing an effective Department of Corrections. However, I find the salaries being offered to a social worker compared to a psychologist are extremely disturbing.

In order to document my extreme concern about your salaries, I refer you to the Hansard report of the estimates of the then-called Department of Reform Institutions May 28 to May 30, 1968.

On page 169 of that report, following numerous questions about staff shortages and salaries being paid to professionals, you quoted the salary range for psychologists "As of October 1, 1968, the salary range for psychologists will be $11,943 to $14,349. These are starting salaries, they run up a category from $12,692 to $15,445."

Just before this remark, you said that your director of social work is in constant touch with schools of social work. Later you corrected yourself and said director of psychology.

The point I wish to make in this letter refers to the huge gap between starting salaries of two professional groups, both requiring a master's degree as minimum qualifications and both in serious shortage across the province.

As a person with a master's degree and presently working in the correctional field in a private agency in Ontario, I could be easily interested in a position with your department. However—

Mr. Demers: Signed: "John Brown, Ph.D."

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): The member is not supposed to be talking, he is not even in his own seat.

Mr. Shulman: I continue:

However, knowing that a professional colleague with the same training would be receiving over $4,000 a year more than myself, I find it impossible to even consider making an application.

This letter is for your information and I hope early reconsideration of the salary ranges for professional social workers.

Yours sincerely,

(signed) Richard F. Ramsey, B.A., M.Sw.,
McGill University, 1965.

Hon. Mr. White: Would the member mind reading that again?

Mr. Shulman: Not all, Mr. Chairman, I would be glad to. "Dear Mr. Grossman—"

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I did not want to interrupt the hon. member because I did not want him to read it all over again, but again I appeal to you as Chairman, to keep some semblance of order. This comes under the second vote, Vote 402. It does not belong in the main office vote at all. It is for the rehabilitation of the adult offenders, where we have salaries for social workers and all the others.

Mr. Shulman: Are you making a ruling?

Mr. Chairman: No. The Minister may be correct, but the debate under this item has been permitted to wander so far that I could not control it at the moment if I wanted to.

Mr. Shulman: Well, will the Minister make any comment as to why there would be these discrepancies in salaries?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member knows perfectly well that I have not anything to do with the setting of salaries. This is done by the civil service commission in negotiation with the civil service association and the government.

Mr. Shulman: Am I to understand that the Minister has made no representations about the salaries within his own department?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I did not say I did not make any representations nor did I say I did.

Mr. Shulman: Well, did the Minister?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: This would be a matter which is not a matter for public debate. What I discuss with my Cabinet colleagues is strictly a matter of confidence. All I am saying is, it does not come within the purview of my department. I would like to get $100,000 a year for each one of my correctional officers, let me put it that way. There is not that much money, so the salaries are set for the government as a whole in the various classifications by the civil service commission.

Mr. Shulman: Well, let us pursue this salary matter a little more, Mr. Chairman. How many psychologists, social workers and psychiatrists, in that order, is the Minister short at the present time in his department?

Mr. Grossman: It does not make any difference.

Let me put it this way, Mr. Chairman. We take all the qualified social workers and psychologists that we can get. I do not think this is going to be the answer to the problem of rehabilitation. This has been said before and said by the hon. member's colleague, the member for Beaches-Woodbine (Mr. Brown); he does not think much of professional staff for helping people in this kind of difficulty.

What we need are good, trained, regular staff, good, trained, correctional officers. Some good, trained professionals to train the correctional officers and all the others. In other words, a good approach and a good attitude.

But we will take any psychologists or any other professional help that the hon. member can produce for us. Now if he is talking about competing with others for salaries and so on, there is always some other place where you can get a little more money. But what we want in our work are dedicated people who are prepared to work for the salary schedule laid down by the civil service commission.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, I have not had an answer to my question but I will go on to the next one. How many psychologists, social workers and psychiatrists are you short of at the present time in your department?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I will get the information for the hon. member. I will give it to him tomorrow.

Mr. Shulman: All right. What is the starting salaries for psychologists, social workers and psychiatrists in your department?

Mr. Chairman: Has vote 401 been carried?

An hon. member: Not yet.

Mr. Chairman: How did we get to 402?

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Chairman: I have not the slightest idea, sir. Vote 401 has not been carried.

Does the hon. Minister have an answer for the question?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There are about 20 categories here. Does the hon. member want me to read them all?

Mr. Shulman: Just have the one category for psychiatrists, which will—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Psychiatrist I—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Just table it and let him read it himself.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Psychiatrist I, starting at $294.50 to $328.

Mr. Shulman: A week, a month, a year?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Starting at $294.50 a week to $328 a week. Psychiatrist II, $349.25 a week to $392.75 a week. It goes all up—the rate of salary range here—the highest I see begins at $454.25 a week and goes to $519.50 a week. And that is not hay, even for a Cabinet Minister.

Mr. Shulman: It is overpayment for a Cabinet Minister, but not too good for a psychiatrist.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Is a psychiatrist not a medical doctor?

Mr. Shulman: He is a medical doctor plus six more years.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Would the hon. member like me to tell what his colleague for Woodbine-Beaches thinks about medical doctors?

Mr. Shulman: Sure, go ahead, tell me what he thinks if it will make you happy.

Mr. J. Renwick: What has that got to do with the estimates?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, he is making a big fuss about not having enough psychiatrists and psychologists and so on. This is not going to save assistants.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 401!

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, I am not clear. Would the hon. Minister please explain to me why some men start at $300 a week and some start at $500 a week? What is the difference between a psychiatrist I and psychiatrist V?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Qualifications, experience and the particular work they will be expected to do.

Mr. E. Dunlop (York-Forest Hill): I am amazed that the member cannot observe the reasons when he has been going the rounds of the mental hospitals. He simply wants to take up the time of the House.

Mr. Shulman: This system is very difficult to understand.

Mr. Dunlop: Apparently. Apparently for you.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please!

Would the hon. member indicate where he is on vote 401?

Mr. Shulman: I am on salaries of staff.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He is on vote 402, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Shulman: It is vote 401, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 401 is main office staff, and the hon. member is not on that.

Mr. Shulman: Are there no social workers in the main office?

Mr. Chairman: Let us stick to vote 401.

Mr. Shulman: Well I think I am on vote 401.

Mr. Chairman: No, that is for the institutions.

Mr. Shulman: All right!

Mr. Chairman: On vote 401?

Mr. Shulman: Why is the grant to the centre of criminology so low and how many criminologists do you have on staff?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We consider everybody in our system to be a criminologist.

Mr. Shulman: Including the cook?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, that is the way we feel about it—from correctional officer to cook and the laundryman and right up to our Deputy Minister.

Mr. Lawlor: That is a bit ridiculous.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No it is not ridiculous.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It is not ridiculous. The hon. member for Lakeshore himself was talking about the need for rapport and understanding between the inmate and the guards, as he called them, the correctional officers. These are the people who are going to do the most valuable work. They are criminologists in my view.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, I would like to know how many criminologists in the technical, internationally accepted sense of the word are on the staff of this department?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Sorry, I did not hear the hon. member's question.

Mr. Shulman: The question is, Mr. Chairman, how many criminologists—and by criminologists I mean, using the term technically in the internationally accepted term—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What is that?

Mr. Shulman: Someone who has been trained in the institute of criminology to do the work in the prevention of crime through The Department of Reform Institutions.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, I think that is a very vague question, Mr. Chairman, and it would be impossible to answer it. I do not know what he would mean by a centre of criminology or criminological institution. It is meaningless. It is a meaningless question.

Mr. J. Renwick: I imagine it rules out the cook.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, why is there such a small allotment given to the centre of criminology?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Oh, it is a matter of opinion of what is small and what is large. Some people would think $30,000 was a lot of money. Some people apparently think it is not enough. I mean, the hon. member would have to ask me a more specific question.

Mr. Shulman: All right. Why is less than one per cent of your budget, less than one-twentieth of one per cent of your budget allotted to the study of criminology?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Because we have to divide up the money that is available to us in various ways. We just do not give them a percentage of our budget. You could say the same thing about giving a percentage of our budget to the Elizabeth Fry Society or the Salvation Army. That proposition is ridiculous.

We gave them a grant of $30,000 because we felt this was a sufficient grant for our department, having regard for all the circumstances. They get another grant from The Department of the Attorney General. I think altogether they get about $100,000. They operate on more than this. This is the grant from our department. I think it is a very generous grant.

Mr. Makarchuk: Surely, Mr. Chairman, considering that you are now spending over $43 million, you could well afford to put more than $30,000 into trying to prevent or decrease or cut down this particular expenditure. It seems to me that your priorities are all cockeyed if you are only going to spend $30,000 in order to prevent the thing. In the meantime, you will go ahead and spend something like $43 million or $46 million to sort of continue the similar situation.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I do not know where the hon. member would get the idea that this $30,000 is all we are spending on rehabilitation. All the money is being spent for rehabilitation. This is a grant to a particular institution which is doing a certain amount of research and there are other institutions which get grants, not only from my department, but from other departments. To suggest that we do it on a percentage basis would be just ridiculous.

Mr. Sopha: Could I say a word to the hon. Minister? What depresses me is that he does not appear to understand what criminology is. You see, he says, everybody in the staff including the cook and everybody in the institution is a criminologist.

An hour ago he and the Attorney General were singing a chorus, joined once for one refrain by the Provincial Secretary, in which they ruled out entirely the attitude of the prisoner when he came to the institution as a result of his treatment in the courts. They all joined in one chorus and said, as they are prone to do, they said—

Hon. Mr. Welch: That is nonsense.

Mr. Sopha: —they said, what has that got to do with these estimates? They all joined in. That is what I found so offensive from that triumvirate at that time. Now he turns around and says: "We are all criminologists." Well, the answer is, he does not know. Criminology also deals—for his information—with the sentencing policy of the courts.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I agreed with that.

Mr. Sopha: That is in the body of knowledge and I want to, before we go home, I want to make it clear that when we are talking about rehabilitation and the emphasis the Minister puts on rehabilitation in his department, we will reach that goal much more quickly if we do not have to suffer those mischievous interventions from the Attorney General and the Provincial Secretary as we did earlier. It is about time they were told.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order, order.

The hon. member for Cochrane South has the floor.

Mr. Ferrier: Mr. Chairman, I would like to know the number of full-time chaplains that this department employs, how these chaplains are appointed and what particular duties are expected of them?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There are 17 full-time staff chaplains on active duty in The Ontario Department of Correctional Services, and three vacancies. Two applications are at present being processed. The hon. member can stop me when he thinks he has enough information. One hundred per cent of the staff chaplains have now been professionally upgraded to chaplain 2 positions, by virtue of training courses planned and executed by the department in co-operation with the department of university extension. University of Toronto.

An hon. member: That is far enough.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: All but one of the staff chaplains, who is disqualified by lack of a university degree but has served for many years with the chaplain services, have been approved by the Canadian Council of Churches to work in public institutions. The department has successfully pioneered and sponsored the co-operative training for the specialized ministry in connection with both Roman Catholic and Protestant chaplains. Another first, I may add, for this province.

In addition to the full time staff, the department values the services of 20 part time chaplains, and the weekly ministry in county district and city jails of some 300 denominational clergy and commissioned officers of religious organizations. This past year, the Salvation Army continued its invaluable ministry in all our adult institutions, and a grant of $33,500 was made to this organization in recognition of such services. Does the hon. member want more?

Mr. Ferrier: I am all ears.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In recent years, the training of clergymen for the specialized ministry in corrections has not, until now, been undertaken by the theological colleges and seminaries in the Dominion of Canada. In the last three years the theological colleges have selected students to study under one of our senior trained chaplains, in one of our units in their last academic year of training. To meet the need of pastors, chaplains and theological students, The Ontario Department of Correctional Services, in co-operation with the Toronto institute for clinical pastoral training, extension department university of Toronto, has organized clinical pastoral training at both the Ontario Training Centre in Brampton and the reformatory in Mimico, and has offered the following courses: (a) Seminars in inter-personal relationships and corrections. (b) Seminars in group dynamics for chaplaincy personnel and related professional workers. (c) Clinical pastoral training for clergy in related professions. (d) Intern chaplaincy. (e) Seminars and supervision for field supervisors of theological students.

These course were attended by 121 students. Since 1963, The Ontario Department of Correctional Services has, by lending its facilities and its trained staff, sponsored this training for the specialized ministry in correction. This total of 121 students have benefited from these courses and at present, applications from additional students are being accepted for a 12-week summer course at the Ontario Training Centre in Brampton. This centre has been uniquely recognized in that it is now accredited by both the association for clinical pastoral education, United States of America, and the Dominion-wide Canadian Council for supervised pastoral education.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 401. The hon. member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: I would like to direct the hon. Minister's attention to item 4, Minister's advisory council, on the treatment of the offender. In your report there are 10, I am sure, very estimable citizens, of whom we know a goodly number. I would like to know what this council really does.

Before I ask that, though, perhaps I could ask the Minister, have you ever visited Joliet? You see the very low sum in any one year for this particular council; does this council make recommendations to you? Does it travel around. Does it know conditions? Do you pay for it? The travelling expenses would not permit going very far.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: They can go wherever they think or deem necessary.

Mr. Lawlor: Have they ever gone outside this country to the United States to visit?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Some of its members have.

Mr. Lawlor: Some of its members have. Have they ever gone as a body, as far as you know?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Not entirely. As a matter of fact, I am just as happy that they have not because it would be very costly for 10 of them to be travelling around the world. They, within their own committee, have specialists in certain areas and these will usually take whatever trip is necessary to get the information that the committee is seeking.

Mr. Lawlor: How many individuals in the last year, for instance, have visited institutions outside this country. Do you know?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I could not give the hon. member that information, obviously. It is the sort of detail you would not have on hand. All I can tell the hon. member is that they are a very well qualified group. They have visited institutions, studied systems, done a lot of reading and a lot of work in the field of correction. They are experts in the field.

Mr. Lawlor: That is great. I am not satisfied with the running of your department, and you have got this very highly qualified body, a number of them I know personally. I am just wondering what they do. Whether they urge you, spur you on to greater efforts. Do they make recommendations? How do they qualify in particular in this regard?

Mr. J. Renwick: They are all criminologists.

Mr. Lawlor: They are all criminologists, yes.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, in the first place, about two hours ago I answered this question, I think, for the hon. member for Essex-Kent. I explained matters. I explained what they did with their reports. For the hon. member's benefit I will explain it again.

It is obvious to me that there is a filibuster going on, but I will be glad to give you information until the cows come home. Mr. Chairman, I have just been handed a note saying that in the last study, which MACTO prepared for me on the recommendations regarding the incentive allowance, members of the committee visited 22 jurisdictions. As I said earlier, the reports are to the Minister and they are privileged to the Minister.

Mr. Lawlor: How often does this advisory council meet?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Two days every month.

Mr. Lawlor: Have they, on any occasions, out of their own initiative made recommendations. Or is this just an acceptable thing in your department that they should so initiate recommendations to you as to reforming?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: They have, on some occasions, initiated their own recommendations, but in most instances have, at my request, reported to give me advice on what they would advise in respect of a particular programme. For example, the matter of censoring letters, I think, I am not too sure. I think I gave them this one. I think I have a report on it. I asked them to do some work on this incentive allowance. There are many others. The matter of taking over the county jails. Over a period of years they have done a tremendous work. For the amount of work that they have done for this province, I cannot speak too highly of them; they deserve all the credit in the world. If there is any committee that is doing a job just as public-spirited citizens, it is this group.

Mr. Shulman: I would like to ask the hon. Minister about the model penal code which has been drawn up, the fourth section of which has to do with the treatment of criminals after they have been convicted. Has any effort been made by his department to take advantage of this model penal code and to co-ordinate the treatment under the suggestions in the code with our Ontario system?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Who has written a modern penal code?

Mr. Shulman: Not modern, a model penal code. It was set up by the committee of the state Legislatures.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I do not know, I have read so much material I could not honestly answer the hon. member. We read a tremendous amount of material, a great deal of it from the Canadian Corrections Association, and generally speaking we follow their recommendations.

As a matter of fact in some instances, we go beyond it. For example, the Canadian Correctional Association has given an ideal complement for an institution, I think, as 400 and something. Ours is 200.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, before I leave that I wonder if the Minister would mind getting a copy of the model penal code. There may be some suggestions there which would be of benefit to him.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Of course. We may have it in our library. If we have not, we will see that we get one.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, during my preliminary remarks I made some comments about visiting institutions and specifically conjugal visiting. Would that some under vote 401?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: All these questions have been under 402, really, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Shulman: I am sorry. Did you answer yes or no?

Mr. Chairman: No.
Vote 401 agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Chairman, before we get into vote 402, I must say I have been delighted with this very brilliant examination of the functions of the department tonight.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the committee rise and report a certain resolution and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed, Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report a certain resolution and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow I would like to go to the order paper. Perhaps I might draw particular attention to orders 15, 16 and 17 on today's order paper. Then I would like to go to the committee of the whole House. There are certain private bills I would like to put through the committee and into the position of third reading in order that they may have Royal assent because they involve various activities in the province that perhaps the sponsors of these bills would like to get on with. If there is any time after that we will return to these estimates. On Thursday we will come back to these estimates.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the Premier when he intends to return to the Constitutional debate?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: We will have to see where some of these other matters go first, but I would hope to give at least 24 hours notice before we return to that debate.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 12.45 o'clock a.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 12, 1969

The House met at 2.30 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before the proceedings of the House commence this afternoon, I would like to express my own personal sorrow and that of my colleagues in the death of a member of our press gallery, Arthur Brydon, who died yesterday.

Arthur had been here for a good many years. He first came in 1955 and then left for a few years. He reported the Norris commission on labour relations on the Great Lakes, and he came back in 1966 as chief of the Globe and Mail bureau here in the gallery.

We all had opportunities to know this man personally. He was a journalist for whom I had a great respect. I found out over the years that he could hold a confidence when it was necessary to discuss some things that could not necessarily be put on the record. I found his reporting to be fair, honest and true; and I shall miss him, not only as a professional newspaperman doing his duty in this gallery, but as the personal friend he had become to me. On behalf of my colleagues and all of us I would just express our sympathy to his wife and family.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition, I would join with the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts), in making some remarks about the late Mr. Brydon. It is true, everything that has been said about his competence as a journalist and the fact that he was able, from his position in the press gallery, to, I suppose, as well as evoking statements making news, get some of his own ideas across in discussion.

I have always felt that the germ of ideas that have come from Mr. Brydon have shown up perhaps in my speeches, and speeches that I have heard on other sides of the House as well. I think he had a true feeling for democracy in the legislative process. His ready wit always went down very well, sometimes when things were a bit edgy otherwise.

We on this side, certainly, had great respect for his journalistic ability and his great humanity, and we shall very sorely miss him.

I want to extend our condolences to Mrs. Brydon and the family.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Speaker, I would like to join with the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nixon), and the Prime Minister in these words out of respect for Arthur Brydon. He was a very perceptive reporter. I was honoured to be included amongst those who were friends of his. I had known him since about the time of the Norris inquiry.

I think that one of the things which struck me very much about Arthur Brydon that he was able to bring a certain note of the whimsical into some of the writings which he contributed to the Globe and Mail.

I remember particularly that he referred at one time to the member for Riverdale as a noted television cartoon figure, Roger Ramjet. It was that kind of delightful perceptive knowledge which endeared him to those of us who knew him well. To those members of this caucus who did not have the opportunity to know him that well, they have, nevertheless, formed in the short time that they were able to meet with him, a sense of the extreme high quality and excellence of his craftsmanship which he brought to his profession.

We here join in wishing our warmest sympathy to his widow and to the members of his family.

Mr. Speaker: In our galleries today, we have visitors, in the east gallery from King Senior Public School in King City, and Millbrook High School in Millbrook, and in the west gallery from Wilson Heights Junior High School. Later in the west gallery we will have visitors from McDougall Central Public School in Parry Sound.

Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE CORPORATIONS TAX ACT

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of Revenue), moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Corporations Tax Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, this bill gives effect to the changes which were announced by the Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton) on March 4, details of which may be found on page 31 of the Budget statement. I am quite prepared to read those to the House if the members so desire, but I suspect that is not necessary.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Premier. Can the Premier confirm a meeting announced by the government of Quebec involving Quebec, Manitoba and Ontario in a discussion of off-shore mineral rights; and second, does Ontario agree with the position expressed by Quebec that all natural resources belong to the province whether off-shore or not?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: In answer to the question, I believe I was asked something about this the other day. As you may recall, it was last November when the Prime Minister of Canada made some proposals concerning the off-shore boundaries of the provinces, particularly in relation to Ontario, that is Hudson Bay and James Bay.

Just recently he wrote to me, and I presume to the other two provinces concerned in this matter, and enclosed maps. It has been suggested that we get together to examine the proposition that the federal government has made. We will take part in this meeting.

I might point out, of course, for the information of the members, that this will not be the first time that Quebec, Ontario and Manitoba have got together to discuss this. It was discussed during the time that Mr. Lesage with the Prime Minister of Quebec, and when Mr. Roblin was the Premier of Manitoba.

As far as the second question is concerned, I would not really like to declare at this stage of the game that I either agree or disagree. There are some rather tricky legal matters involved here, although it may be that the provincial position is fairly clear.

In trying to establish really what Hudson Bay was, in fact, we did get some legal opinions to the effect that it is not an international water, it is an inland water. But I would not commit this government to a position one way or the other at this stage.

I want to look over the proposals, examine them and then we will come to a conclusion of what we think is right on behalf of the people of this province.

Mr. Nixon: By way of clarification, Mr. Speaker, was it not a part of the original federal proposal that the part of Hudson Bay and James Bay actually enclosed by the three provinces would, in fact, be shared by the three provinces, and only that area to the north—that is in the northwest territories enclosure—would accrue to the government of Canada?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: No, Mr. Speaker. I think the member is confusing some propositions that we developed as provinces, that were not even presented to the federal government. We drew some lines out into the bay, and reached some tentative agreements. The federal government under some statute or other, can change the boundaries of the provinces with the consent of the provinces themselves. At one time we thought that we might make the proposition to the federal government until we went to work on drawing some lines. But that proposition was never made to the federal government.

The federal government has now come back with another proposal which has no relationship to that first proposal at all.

Mr. Nixon: Does the federal proposal draw lines or share productivity?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: What the federal proposal does is to draw a very jagged line, so many yards or miles off the coast. In other words, the present boundary is, I believe by statute, the low water mark of Hudson Bay and James Bay, and would then be the low water mark, I suppose, of Hudson Straits and perhaps Ungava Bay, but we would have no concern in that.

The proposal made by the government of Canada just moves that line off shore, a certain distance, as they have done on the east and west coasts.

Then there is some proposal that revenue from anything underneath might be shared in some proportion to be agreed upon by the provinces, but it is all in the nature to date of a proposal.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Timiskaming has a question of the Prime Minister.

Mr. D. Jackson (Timiskaming): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A question for the Prime Minister.

Which departments of the government are responsible for fire safety inspections and the enforcement of fire safety standards in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: It is quite a list. The fire marshal's office and The Department of Justice are responsible for approving new construction financed by the province such as hospitals, schools, welfare buildings, and are the advisors on fire safety to other departments.

The Department of Labour is responsible for safety measures, including fire safety in industrial commercial buildings.

The liquor-license board and The Department of Tourism are responsible for enforcing The Hotel Fire Safety Act, depending upon whether the hotel is licensed by the liquor control board or not.

The Ontario Hospital Services Commission is responsible under the terms of The Public Hospitals Act for enforcing fire regulations in the maintenance of hospitals.

There are similar responsibilities under various branches of The Department of Social and Family Services. For example, under The Charitable Institutions Act and The Homes for the Aged Act, The Department of Health enforces fire regulations under The Nursing Homes Act. The Department of Tourism and Information is responsible for fire regulations under The Theatres Act, and The Department of Public Works is responsible for Ontario government-owned buildings.

The prime responsibility for fire safety in the province rests with the municipalities. The Municipal Act and Planning Act give municipalities the authority to enact fire safety bylaws. In addition, The Fire Marshals Act gives municipal fire chiefs and fire inspectors the authority to inspect buildings for fire hazards within their own area.

Perhaps I might table this or send a copy of it to the hon. member if he would like the details.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Sarnia wish to place his question to the Minister of Transport?

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

In view of the present established state of the law, why are officials of The Department of Transport seizing licences where part-time driving privileges are permitted by the courts? Should not the department wait for a final judicial review of the legal validity of such part-time driving privileges?

Hon. I. Haskett (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there is a mandatory suspension required under The Highway Traffic Act upon conviction of certain Criminal Code offences. This provision is not presently under review by the courts. Therefore, The Department of Transport has no alternative but to apply the provisions of The Highway Traffic Act.

The language of The Highway Traffic Act, in sections 20, 21, 21b, 21c, is such that the suspension is automatic and in effect whether the licence is seized or not. An appeal from the decision of the hon. Mr. Justice Henderson dealing with the discretionary powers of prohibition of the court under the Criminal Code has been filed by the Attorney General.

Mr. Bullbrook: Would the Minister accept a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker?

Are you not agreed that the seizing of the licences by your departmental officials is really an invasion on the equity in justice as dispensed by the individual member of the court?

Hon. Mr. Haskett: Mr. Speaker, I stand by the clear and unequivocal answer I gave to the original question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Thunder Bay has a question for the Minister of Energy and Resources Management; and the Minister has answers, I believe, to questions asked the other day.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Yes. What action does the OWRC plan to take to stop Zenmac Mines from allowing raw tailings to escape into Lake Superior at its zinc concentrator operation at Selin, Ontario?

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Mr. Speaker, Zenmac Metal Mines Limited operates an approved tailing impoundment, the effluent from which is monitored on a regular basis. Raw tailings are not allowed to escape to Lake Superior. The company has taken appropriate steps to maintain control and reduce suspended solid level which recently approached the commission's objective.

Mr. Stokes: Will the Minister accept a supplementary?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Yes.

Mr. Stokes: Is the Minister aware that there is about 100 tons of raw tailings sitting on the ice in the bay at Lake Superior at the present time?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, no I am not aware of that, nor are OWRC. As I said earlier, this has been checked periodically and we are not aware of it at this time.

Mr. Stokes: Will the Minister check into it at this time?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Yes, I will.

I have an answer to a supplementary question from the member for High Park (Mr. Shulman).

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park is not in his seat so I presume we will have to hold that.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: May I put it on the record, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Yes, I think the hon. Minister said he would either send it to the member or give it in the House, and perhaps since the member is not here he might send it to the member.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Might which?

Mr. Speaker: You might send it to the member.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Thank you.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Hamilton East has a question.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is of the Minister of Lands and Forests:

With what company or companies of land developers is The Department of Lands and Forests negotiating to acquire park lands at the Fifty Point project at Winona?

Hon. R. Brunelle (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member for Hamilton East, The Department of Public Works do all the negotiating for land purposes for our department. We understand that someone has optioned this land in question, but we are not aware of those who hold these options.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. Previous questions regarding this particular park and progress in negotiations have been answered by the Minister of Lands and Forests. Why the refusal of a direct answer in this particular case?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the member would mind repeating the question?

Mr. Giborn: My question is that several questions have been asked in the last few months regarding this particular project of the Minister of Lands and Forests in regard to negotiations to acquire land, and we have received answers. Why not an answer to this particular question from the Minister of Lands and Forests rather than the reference to The Department of Public Works?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: As I mentioned to him, all land acquisition is done by The Department of Public Works and as I mentioned to him about a month ago when he posed a similar question, I told him at that time that the price of land being asked for was very high and it was very difficult to recommend to the parks integration board the acquisition of land at such a high price.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Parkdale is now in his seat and he has a question of the Minister of Trade and Development.

Mr. J. Trotter (Parkdale): Yes, Mr. Speaker, this is a question of the Minister of Trade and Development.

Will the Minister comment on a statement made by Toronto officials as reported in the early edition of the Toronto Daily Star today to the effect that the provincial government's unilateral decision to build a pavilion on Toronto's waterfront will slow down the overall development of the Toronto harbour area?

And is it true that fill will be diverted from the outer harbour to the provincial government building?

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): Mr. Speaker, I think the officials quoted were Captain Hawkins, who is director of the development of the Toronto Harbour Commission, and our own Mr. Jim Ramsay, director of my special projects department. Fill is going to be diverted from the outer harbour project for the provincial government project.

The article, I might say, further quotes Captain Hawkins as saying that the Toronto outer harbour project is well ahead of schedule and he did not expect the delay to be a serious factor.

Going back to 1964, there was quite a diversion here for the CNE, and despite it the outer harbour project, according to Captain Hawkins and the harbour officials, is well ahead of schedule so we do not expect any problems.

Mr. Trotter: Well, Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. I would like to ask the Minister whether in actual fact no extra work is taking place on the Toronto harbour, except that instead of diverting fill in the outer harbour it is now being put where this proposed building is likely to be. Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, I think they will be doing the fill job in both areas. Let us say they are getting 50 loads a day out of the outer harbour, they will probably divert 20 of them to our project here. We think that between the two we can complete the project as scheduled.

Mr. Trotter: But there is no extra work being done really in the overall situation as far as this year goes. Is that not correct? It is just an announcement?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We have not got started on the project yet. We expect to have our first truckload of fill down there by the end of this month, so we have made the announcement and the job is now underway. The contract was let with the harbour commission, I might say, so I think if the member waits for a few days he will see that the extra work will be taking place down at the new CNE centre.

Mr. Trotter: Well I hope so, but I doubt it.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We will send the member a photograph of the first activity.

Mr. Trotter: Do that.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wentworth.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I wish to rise on what may be a point of privilege, it may be a point of order. I am not too sure.

Today, I submitted to your office two questions. They were both rejected. I can well understand perhaps why you rejected the question in regard to the government's hiding the result of the inquiry into the dumping of the acid into Hamilton Bay, but I am very, very concerned about your turning down the question that I asked in regard to the need to assure a decent income level for the blind.

I was wondering if you could tell me your reason for your ruling.

Mr. Speaker: I would certainly be delighted to tell the hon. member. The word "decent" does not express, to me at least, any income level at all. "Decent" is not an adjective which is normally associated with income levels.

If the hon. member would use words which would indicate what he meant in monetary or economic terms, then I think the question is perfectly all right. I have no objection to the word "decent", but it did not mean anything as far as I am concerned.

Mr. Deans: May I enquire, sir, if "reasonable", then, would have been more acceptable?

Mr. Speaker: "Reasonable" might have been acceptable, yes.

Mr. Deans: I then fail to see the difference between the—

Mr. Speaker: I see a great difference because "decent" does not express anything as far as income level goes. If it were standards of living that might be different because "decent" would be—

Mr. Deans: No, but it is, sir—

Mr. Speaker: No, it is income level.

Mr. Deans: Income level and standard of living are related.

Mr. Speaker: Yes, but it is the income level that we are talking about at the moment. The hon. member has put the two of them together. It should have been a very simple thing because I usually try to help the office staff by suggesting something and I did suggest something, but—

Mr. Deans: I was not in my office.

Mr. Speaker: But the hon. member was not available perhaps, or we would have had no difficulty.

My problem was that the word "decent" normally is not associated with an income. It might be with a standard of living. I have no objection to that.

If the hon. member wants a reasonable answer to his question, he must make his question intelligible to the people at the other end. It might have been intelligible the way he put it. If I had been at the other end it would not have been to me. So therefore, I thought the best thing was to have it clarified.

Mr. Nixon: What happened to the old pipeline?

Mr. Deans: It makes a great deal of difference, Mr. Speaker, because then I have to try to reason out whether or not what I am asking is intelligible to you rather than to the Minister to whom I am directing it.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Social and Family Services): The member for Scarborough Centre has a question.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member for Scarborough Centre wishes to place her question, the Minister is now in his seat.

Mrs. M. Renwick (Scarborough Centre): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A question of the Minister of Social and Family Services.

How does the Minister see "categorized" for purposes of "income" under The General Welfare Assistance Act a recipient in receipt of a cash gift of about one dollar a week, or approximately four dollars a month for the department's purposes? In the Minister's view, would it be correctly defined under section 11 (11 q) on page 9 of regulations to The General Welfare Assistance Act where small gifts are not to be included as "income"?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, the determination of what constitutes a casual gift is left to the local welfare administrator. While an amount as small as mentioned, received irregularly, might well be considered a casual gift, the very nature of its being paid regularly each month might raise some doubt after a period of time in the mind of an administrator as to whether it is what is considered in the layman's language as a gift or regular income. The good judgment of the administrator in each case, I trust, would prevail, and I would hope the tendency would be to lean in favour of the recipient.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Would the Minister accept a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. M. Renwick: I would like to ask if the Minister would see that it might be correct then to put it under this particular section if it were for a matter of months say rather than a matter of years; if the small cash donation was a matter of months, Mr. Speaker, rather than a matter of years. Could I have clarification of the Minister?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, I do not think that the question was in terms of months or years. As my friend, the Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) would say, "Many a mickle makes a muckle"; and it depends on how much time was involved. The individual case would have to be determined. If the hon. member has a special case in mind I would be very glad to check into the matter.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, at resumption of these sittings after Christmas, I mentioned that this government was deeply concerned about the growing problem of student unemployment; and this was raised by the hon. member for Humber (Mr. Ben) this week.

I said at that time that a Cabinet committee had been established to help deal with this problem, and that in due course I planned to lay before this House the details of a programme to promote the expansion of summer job opportunities for students in all parts of the province.

Before proceeding to put the plan before the House, I would like to spend a moment or two to explore the dimensions of the situation that we see facing us in this area.

Last year, there were more than 600,000 students enrolled in our universities, our colleges and our secondary schools, and we estimate that about half of that number were in the market for summer jobs of some kind or another and for varying periods. Despite the fact that Ontario employers provided summer jobs for over 270,000 people, more than 54,000 university, college and secondary school students were not able to find jobs. This means that about 17 per cent of those students who sought work last summer had to go without jobs because there simply were not enough jobs to go around.

Of those who had to remain jobless, about 8,100 were from universities and colleges. A similar number had completed their secondary school education and planned further studies. And 37,000 were still enrolled in secondary school.

This year, we expect the number of students seeking summer work to increase by at least 10 per cent to a total of 357,000. We expect the largest increase will be in university and college students. About 20 per cent more of them will be looking for summer jobs this year than last.

It is clear that unless substantially more is done this summer to expand employment opportunities, at least 60,000 of our young people could experience the frustration of a jobless summer this year. I think we can expect the social and economic implications associated with this rising rate of student unemployment will grow proportionately.

There is no doubt in my mind that this problem will be with us for some time to come. There are a number of factors at work which indicate that student unemployment will continue to rise unless a conscious effort is made by both private and public sectors to combat it.

The number of students in our educational institutions continues to increase; the rate of student retention is rising; the proportion of unskilled and semi-skilled jobs available is shrinking; and, finally, summer jobs still represent the major source of income for those students who must help pay their way through university or college.

Certainly, if part of the cost of higher education is to remain with the student—as I believe it should—then he must be given the opportunity to help pay for his studies. And it is important that the public—employers, homeowners and parents—should be made aware of the serious dimensions of this problem, because recognition and delineation of the problem is the first step that one must take to solving it.

As I mentioned earlier in the session, we do not believe that the answer lies in “manufacturing” or “creating” jobs for students in the government service. However, we do believe that as an employer we should set a good example by hiring as many students as can be meaningfully and usefully employed by government departments.

This year, the departments of the government will be hiring about 6,400 students for the summer. In addition, about 1,600 summer jobs will be provided by our various boards and commissions, bringing the total to just over 8,000. This number represents about one student for every ten permanent employees, a ratio that we hope other employers will use as a guideline.

I also mentioned earlier this year that we have been working closely with the federal department of manpower and immigration in an effort to develop an effective system of matching students with summer jobs. Rather than duplicating the job placement facilities of the federal government, we have co-operated with them in arranging for students to be registered and placed in the following manner:

(a) University and college students will be put in touch with prospective employers through the facilities of student placement offices which will be on campus;

(b) Secondary school students will be pre-registered by the federal Department of Manpower and Immigration in their schools, and then placed with employers through the facilities of local Canada manpower centres.

In addition to our role as an employer and our efforts to develop an efficient placement system, we also feel that we should help to expand summer job opportunities for students in the private sector, particularly for post-secondary students who are more in need of job opportunities to help them finance their further education. With this in mind, we have developed a public education campaign which was launched earlier this week with the mailing of an information kit and a letter from me to the presidents of more than 300 employer associations across Ontario.

I have also met personally with a number of major employer associations and have asked them to support this campaign by encouraging their members to hire more students this summer. I understand that some of these associations plan to mount their own campaigns directed towards expanding summer job opportunities in their particular industry.

Next week, I plan to send out letters of personal appeal to the presidents of more than 30,000 Ontario companies in a wide range of industries. These letters and accompanying literature will bring facts about student unemployment to the attention of potential employers, and ask them to review their particular situation to see if they can do a little more this summer.

Next week, we plan to discuss this problem with trade union leaders in an effort to enlist the support and cooperation of organized labour.

Towards the end of March, we will begin to extend this activity with newspaper advertising which will be aimed at motivating the business and industrial community to hire more university and college students this summer. We plan to present the features of the university and college students that are most appealing to employers, namely, their capacity to learn, their eagerness to produce quality work, and the possibility of their return to their employer when they graduate.

It is our aim to try to convince employers that students are a good investment. In fact, the theme of the campaign is: “Hire a student this summer. The most important investment you’ll ever make”.

Additional newspaper and radio advertising will be directed to homeowners and small employers as we approach the summer months. In addition, we shall be asking the news media to support this campaign as a public service.

It is clear that if we are going to be successful in dealing with the problem of student unemployment we must find out more about it. We must know what industries are providing summer jobs now, and where job opportunities can be expanded in the future. We should know more about those students who are unsuccessful in finding summer jobs, and why they are unsuccessful.

In this connection we plan to develop, over this next year, much more extensive and reliable information about the extent and nature of student employment and unemployment.

In the meantime, I am confident that by working with the federal government, by working with employers, by working with homeowners, we can go a long way towards helping our young people to help themselves.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, on a matter of clarification, it is implicit in what the Prime Minister said that there will be no placement facilities under the direction of that Cabinet committee at all.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: No, Mr. Speaker, we went into this very carefully and, as you know, the federal government has a pretty sophisticated set-up which really extends all across the province for placement purposes. By coordinating our programme with theirs we can use their facilities and avoid that duplication.

Mr. Nixon: Did the research as carried out by the Cabinet committee turn up the number of jobs available for students in the government service in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we have been aware of this for some years. I have pointed out the number of jobs that we have provided. We will hire every student who can be employed, as I say, meaningfully.

We do not think it is a good thing for either the government or the student to engage in simply a make-work situation. But every department, of course, has been alerted to look over its functions and activities in the summer time in order that we may uncover all the job opportunities there are in the government service. We intend to do this, and we have been doing this for quite some years. What is new here is the extension into the private sector.

It occurred to us that if every employer in the province was aware of the problem; if he made an effort to even employ two or three—you do not have to employ a great number of students—but if you get enough employers aware of the problem and they are prepared to do what they can within their own framework, little though it may be, if you get enough employers we can go a long distance towards making sure that those who want to work—the students—will have work to do.

Mr. Nixon: Should these young people apply for provincial government jobs through Canada manpower or how should they approach the government of Ontario? The government is bound to be the biggest employer of young people—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, it may be the biggest in terms of the number placed with a single employer.

Mr. Nixon: Right!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: The applications will come through the Canada manpower recruiting centres that we have, but they will also come in as they have done for many, many years. I can recall when I was Minister of Education that we dealt with a whole flood of applications for jobs from all parts of the province. No doubt that will continue to go on.

Mr. Nixon: It would be wise, then, if they applied directly to the various Ministers.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, we will put it all together wherever they apply. That is the point.

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Speaker, I see the hon. Attorney General is in his seat. I wonder if he would permit the question that I have lodged with you?

Mr. Speaker: Yes, we are still before the orders of the day, the hon. member may place it.

Mr. Bullbrook: To the hon. Attorney General.

Other than establishing the occupation of a field for constitutional purposes:

What interest of justice is served by appealing the decision of Mr. Justice W. J. Henderson relative to part-time driving privileges?

Does the Attorney General agree with the position taken by The Department of Transport, notwithstanding the present established position of the law relative to part-time driving privileges, seizing convicted persons' licences where such part-time driving privileges have been given?

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, I have had little time to consider this, but I can quickly answer the first part of the question. Certainly the interest of justice that is being served on the appeal is to have the law clarified and settled on that point as to whether that is the way the Criminal Code should be interpreted and if that power exists. There is a clear interest in getting that clarified.

As to the second matter, it is a matter of policy, I take it from the way I heard the question, which falls within the ambit of my colleague, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Haskett).

If the hon. member wanted any further clarification on that I would have to have time to look at these sections together.

Mr. Bullbrook: I wonder if the Attorney General would entertain a question in connection with the first part?

Since the field has been occupied under sections 20 to 22 of The Highway Traffic Act, could not the purposes of the courts relative to part-time driving privileges be advanced by a pure amendment to The Highway Traffic Act now permitting such part-time driving privileges?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: This is the sort of thing I would like to study. There is no question but what the province has the jurisdiction to deal with the qualification of drivers on its highways in the control of traffic.

I think it would perhaps be possible to amend the Act, but whether that should be done—I should certainly want to study that before I said how far the amendment should go. That is a matter of policy, which I should like to study and perhaps discuss with my colleague before I give an opinion on it.

Mr. Bullbrook: I was wondering if the Attorney General would entertain one more question. It seems to me the purpose in asking these questions, Mr. Speaker, is that the present state of the law, as shown by Mr. Justice Henderson's decision, is that these provincial judges do have this power.

I am wondering why the Attorney General would not comment on the seizure of licences by The Department of Transport after the exercising of the discretion by the provincial judge. It seems to me it is an invasion, by the administrative part of government, on the judicial function.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It is a neat point, Mr. Speaker. I think a certain section of The Highway Traffic Act gives the provincial judge the power to adjust that suspension—

Mr. Bullbrook: It gives the Minister power.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, it gives it to the Minister. What we are dealing with here, let us distinguish that, was a decision by a provincial judge on a section of the code—a conviction perhaps for impaired driving or something of that sort. The code says: the justice dealing with that case may, upon conviction, prohibit the—

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Prohibit!

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Prohibit the driving for any period. The provincial judge said "I shall prohibit for a period", and within the period he gave a period of relief for certain daylight hours. Mr. Justice Henderson upheld that on appeal. We are appealing to have that clarified, and that deals only with a section of the code, I think that was the first part of the question. I think it is well that that should be clarified.

The further question was, first of all, do you agree with the pursuit of this driver? The Highway Traffic Act says there is an automatic suspension if you are convicted under that section of a federal Act, the Criminal Code. The law is there. There is no discretion. The suspension is automatic. So my colleague, I presume, feels he must follow it since it is the law. It is in our Act, in the provincial Act and he must follow it.

My hon. friend says, do you not think we ought to somehow amend our Act to bring these things together. I would like to study that. I think that is fair.

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I hesitate to take the time of the House, but if I might on a point of order, I was absent from the Chamber last night after the division bells had ceased ringing. Comments were made in connection with my absence. I do not intend to take issue with either person who made the comments.

The comment, however, made by the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald), did impute my motives. I would suggest that those comments were entirely out of order and I refer you, sir, to page 26 of "Lewis" and page 456 of "May", 17th edition, relative to the imputation of motives that are not avowed in the House previously.

However, I would ask you on a point of clarification what really constitutes a division in this House, because I had the opportunity, Mr. Speaker, looking at "Lewis", page 128, section 13, and if I might read it to you. Divisions, 106:

When members have been called in preparatory to a division, no further debate is to be permitted.

107 (a) Upon a division, the ayes and nays shall not be entered upon the minutes unless demanded by five members, and on questions of adjournment of the House, or other debate, the members only shall be entered.

(b) On the question being put, every member in the Chamber with the exception of the Speaker must record his vote.

The problem that I have as one member of this House is, what technically constitutes a division? It seems to me as you read here when members have been called in preparatory to a division no further debate is to be permitted. That seems to me to infer that a division is the recording of the votes of the House after the division bell, so called, has ceased ringing, and that if we are in our seats at that time then we are obliged to vote.

On the other hand, section 107 (a) says:

Upon a division the ayes and nays shall not be entered upon the minutes.

That anticipates that a division is actually calling for the ayes and nays. Going further:

On the question being put every, member in the chamber with the exception of the Speaker must record his vote.

That anticipates to me that the division really is after the division bells have ceased ringing. I ask you to clarify for me perhaps—certainly not today, I do not anticipate that—what in your mind constitutes a division; whether a division is at the time of the taking of the ayes and nays, or when the motion is put before the House subsequent to the bells having been rung.

Mr. Speaker: I believe that the incident to which the hon. member refers took place while this House was sitting as committee of the whole House. Mr. Speaker was not present although he had access to a verbal report of the proceedings—verbatim report.

I will be glad to take the hon. member's question under advisement, but it appears to me that the hon. member is directing himself probably to the wrong area of inquiry, because so far as the division is concerned, the procedure of the House at that time was not particularly interested in division. It was the taking of the vote that counted, and the taking of the vote is that upon which the rules are based.

If the hon. member has read the rules, it is abundantly plain what happens. But I am sure I will be able to produce something which will be of assistance to him and to all of us, because these questions arise from time to time and it is well that we might have our minds refreshed from Mr. Speaker's rulings on the proper procedures.

So, as the hon. member suggested, it will take a little time to consult the authorities and see if we can get something which will be of assistance to us all.

Orders of the day.

THE TOBACCO TAX ACT, 1965

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of Revenue) moves second reading of Bill 78, An Act to amend The Tobacco Tax Act, 1965.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to read the recommendations of the Royal Commission on Taxation with respect to The Tobacco Tax Act. I believe their findings eventually are based on the political viability of such a tax, and it says that:

While it cannot be based on any reasonable grounds, still it is obvious that the citizens of the province are prepared to accept it as a tax.

And that they—at that stage when it was at a level of six per cent I believe—said that it could even be raised.

Well, in the last year, because of the budgetary periods, the tax on tobacco, as I understand it, has gone from two per cent to six per cent and now to eight per cent, two increases within the 12 months.

I want to comment on the fact that cigarettes were, at the time of the six per cent levy, providing 88 per cent of the income from the tobacco tax. Now, with this two per cent increase the Minister of Revenue (Mr. White) is predicting that the income will rise by another $16 million.

I suppose it is easy for members on all sides to say that this is readily received and accepted by the citizens. Somebody has said that smokers would still rather pay than quit. I had thought, with the two per cent increase announced overnight, that there would be a good many smokers around the province who would say: "Well, that is it. I have been thinking I should quit, and now this is enough perhaps to make me decide to do so."

However, there does not seem to be any particular report of that, and when I contacted the tobacco marketing board which is very active in my own constituency, they said that the only effect they noticed was the price per pound on the auctions at the tobacco market dropped three cents the first day and a further two cents the subsequent day.

Whether or not it has regained its original price, which was quite advantageous compared with previous years, I am not in a position to say.

I think, however, that those people in this Chamber and in the community who are prepared to say that this increase in tax is acceptable because people should not smoke anyway, are thinking that this government is using the increase in tax and the tobacco tax itself as some kind of a lever to make the citizens decide, for their own good, to stop smoking.

I say that if this is the case it is unacceptable. It is obviously being used as a source of revenue, and considerable revenue if the reaction is going to be as predicted by the Minister responsible for the bill that is before us today.

On the other hand, we cannot lose sight of the fact that one half of the price of tobacco in the form of cigarettes is made up of federal taxes in excised form, and we all recall the circumstances that are recounted once again in the report of the Royal commission when the federal government raised the tobacco tax by a fairly large amount.

I think it was an overnight six to eight cent increase which brought about a considerable amount of smuggling of tobacco because it was worthwhile for those people who are interested in these projects to get them over from the American side where the tax is something less than half what we pay here and to bootleg them on the side.

I do not suppose this increase is going to bring into being any extensive resumption of smuggling. It is, however, going to extract from the community $16.5 million which is paid probably in the same amounts by smokers whether they are affluent or otherwise. As a matter of fact, the increase in tax does not apply to the $2 cigars that some of my colleagues pass around from time to time, and the tax is left at the original level on cigars and pipe tobacco.

I think in quoting from the Royal commission, one of the interesting observations that was made, from page 280, is as follows and I quote:

Over the whole scale of incomes, that tax [that is the tobacco tax] is bound to be broadly regressive.

I think this is accepted. There is no doubt it is the man in the street who pays 90 per cent of the $16.5 million; he will pay 90 per cent of the $16.5 million increase, and its regressive features are very apparent in that connection.

We, on this side, cannot support the increase in the tax, even though there is every indication that the community is prepared to accept it without particular complaint. It is simply a package in the increase in sales tax in general, and they are in the same family which is extracting from the average citizen a very large new imposition of taxation which we feel is regressive in nature.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I must tell you that the Liberal Party is not in a position to vote for this bill on second reading.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, in a range of taxes here having to do with commodity taxes, the prevailing policy of the Tory government remains as ever the same.

In Elizabethan times the only great range of tax which was imposed was sumptuary taxes of all kinds—luxury taxes and taxes directed against sinful behaviour so that through the taxation system you may twist men's morals more to your liking.

This is, I suggest, an illegitimate ground for tax and I shall have Smith bear me out in a moment. The weight of sin in liquor, the weight of sin in tobacco, the weight of sin under the amusement tax and dancing late at night and so on, falls heavily upon the heads of the sinners as this government sees them.

It seems to me, a somewhat outmoded approach to the problems of taxation. But where the nub comes, as has been mentioned by the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nixon), lies in the smuggling.

We are beginning to reach a level of taxation in the tobacco field where the government is going to encourage smuggling from other jurisdictions in a widespread way so that it is presently undermining, or reaching the point of undermining, I think, its own tax levies in this regard. There is a marginal utility in this as in everything else, and they probably have stepped over the line. We will have to watch it very closely.

I think some of the remarks Smith at page 281 Volume 3 has a wider application than just to the tobacco tax, although it is directed specifically to that tax. He says:

The criterion of equity provides no support for a discriminatory tax on tobacco, such expenditures on tobacco bear no constant relationship to individual incomes.

The tax on this habit cannot be justified by the principle of ability to pay.

He goes on, jumping down a little further, saying:

People need not smoke and can avoid the tax by abstinence, but that is irrelevant to a discussion of the justification for imposing a tax. To describe tobacco as a luxury begs the question. How can luxuries be usefully defined? Why are not all luxuries taxed? Discussions of these and similar questions though diverting, are unhelpful in supporting a tax.

It is suggested that in light of the evidence concerned with smoking and with health problems, the government should discourage the use of tobacco through taxation, but even if the health hazard were irrefutably proved, we could not support a tax on the ground of controlling human behaviour.

Taxes on tobacco, after all, are imposed first and foremost to raise revenue, and it would be anomalous to levy what is intended to destroy its own base.

From that point of view there is a good deal to be said to scouting at least in the most delicate way any further imposition on the tax. I think, speaking for this party, that for the nonce and time being, we will not oppose the passing of this bill.

Mr. J. R. Breithaupt (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, I believe that in this situation it is worthwhile to add certain comments to those made by the leader of the Opposition.

Once again this government has seen fit to impose a range of tax increases on consumption goods. I would remind the members of this House that the total increase of the sales tax revenues in this year will be from 19 per cent of last year to 21 per cent of the total provincial governmental revenue. This is the sort of example of tax increase which we find regressive and, therefore, most repulsive as some attempt is made to bring about a far more equitable system of taxation than that which we have now.

The day after the Budget, my friend and colleague, the member for Port Arthur (Mr. Knight), showed me a package of cigarettes which he had purchased, and while the increase in taxation was two cents on that package, in fact the price increase was five cents to him.

My friend and colleague, the member for Essex-Kent (Mr. Ruston), mentioned a situation whereby certain large volumes of cigarettes were charged out by manufacturers and jobbers the day before the increase in taxation. If they were delivered they would take the benefit of any value change without tax increase, but if the tax on tobacco was not increased they would then be able to do the paper work and get these items back for future delivery at convenient times.

This is the sort of approach in taxation that we think is most inequitable—this idea of taxes on consumption goods being used as game to increase the provincial revenues. While giving certain asides as to value judgment on the items being taxed, it is surely a means of only attempting to fool some of the people some of the time in this kind of situation.

We regret very much the taxes of this sort have been increased and that the burden of this taxation increase finds itself in the form of a sales tax. While the amounts of revenue to be increased in all of the taxes we are discussing this afternoon will be some $180 million, in fact the burden of these increases in taxes—by coming through a sales tax change—are going to be in regressive areas.

Once again, the persons with modest incomes who in finding certain areas of pleasure or relaxation are paying the taxes, and more can be said about that as the amendments to The Retail Sales Tax Act are debated.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that changes in this tax form are regressive, that they will be used further to increase prices of items beyond the basic amount of increased tax. I further suggest, Mr. Speaker, that as a result, this tax should be opposed by the House and hon. members should vote against the same.

Mr. Speaker: Is there any further discussion? The hon. Minister has the floor.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, I am not able to accept the proposition that this is a regressive tax. When economists use that word, they are referring to an unavoidable tax, and one can conjure up all kinds of illustrations of regressivity, whether one is talking about property taxes or less progressive income tax structures.

The reason the property tax is regressive is because the property holdings of less prosperous citizens represent a larger proportion of their incomes than for the wealthier class. That word "regressivity" is used in its full and correct meaning in describing the imperfections and the disadvantages of property taxes, and so on.

This is an entirely different situation. It may be that an average income earner smokes the same amount as a more prosperous citizen, but surely he can avoid the imposition of this tax by smoking less or by rolling his own cigarettes or some such thing.

So I think it is not appropriate to call this a regressive tax as such. That is the reason, I suspect, that the member for Lakeshore has been able to announce that his caucus is supporting this particular increase and in doing so, of course, he is keeping the faith. He is keeping the faith because he was one of the members of the select committee that supported the recommendation to be found on page 250, which reads as follows:

There are several arguments in favour of this tax.

That is, the tobacco tax.

It is clear, simple, certain and easy to administer. Perhaps most important is that there is wide public acceptance that tobacco should be an object of taxation, and any reasonable increase in the tax rate is likely to yield more revenue to the province.

I say the member for Lakeshore supported that select committee recommendation. If my memory serves me correctly, the Liberals did too. I am a little bit surprised that they would not be voting for this particular bill today on the strength of that previous assertion.

Now then, sir, a couple of interesting aspects have been mentioned by the Opposition speakers. In the matter of smuggling, you will recall when the American cigarette prices were much lower than Canada, certainly smuggling, particularly at the border points, was a very real consideration. I remember very well in those years Canadian cigarettes cost 25 cents and a package of Chesterfields in Detroit cost a dime or a little more when bought in cartons. It was a great impetus to smuggling along the border.

No such impetus exists today, certainly not of the same magnitude, because one buys a package of cigarettes in downtown Detroit at 35 or 40 cents for 20 cigarettes. The premium paid by the Canadian smoker in Windsor is much smaller than it used to be.

So far as neighbouring Canadian jurisdictions are concerned, I point to page 28 of the Treasurer's (Mr. MacNaughton's) Budget statement in which he says:

I would like to mention at this point that I propose to bring our tobacco tax rates on cigarettes directly into line with those already existing in Quebec and Manitoba.

So, the smuggling aspect, I think, will not be difficult administratively. It is not a meaningful problem as I see it.

The leader of the Opposition has mentioned that tobacco prices in auction decreased fractionally the day after this announcement was made. One would have to embark on a very extensive economic study to see what other variables were at work there.

The imposition of this tax in the past has not resulted in any long-term decrease. I remember well when the federal government increased its tax radically—about 1950, if I remember correctly—and it nudged some number of smokers, of whom I was one, from ready-mades, I think is the term we used to use, ready-made cigarettes into tailor-made cigarettes. I hope I am remembering my terminology properly.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Roll your own!

Hon. Mr. White: Roll your own!

I was one of those who bought one of the big five-length machines, but after a month or two I must confess I went back and regained my previous habit. So I think, Mr. Speaker, that whatever temporary interruption there may be in revenues, they will not be long-lived, and I think that that particular objection has very little merit.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that sums up my rebuttal to the remarks made by the members opposite. The tax on each cigarette purchased by a consumer is increased from three-tenths of a cent, to four-tenths of one cent, effective March 5, 1969. This will produce $16.5 million in revenue.

The very fact that it has had rather wide public acceptance, as the leader of the Opposition acknowledged, is the intuitive assessment on the part of taxpayers, that this is a very appropriate source for this substantial amount of revenue.

Mr. Speaker: The motion by Mr. White is for second reading of Bill 78.

Mr. Nixon: No. I would like the ayes and nays.

Mr. Speaker: There is a dissenting voice. I heard the dissenting voice.

The House divided on the motion for second reading moved by hon. Mr. White, which was agreed to on the following vote:

Clerk of the House: Mr. Speaker, the "ayes" are 71, the "nays" 21.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE RETAIL SALES TAX ACT, 1960-1961

Hon. Mr. White moves second reading of Bill 79, An Act to amend The Retail Sales Tax Act, 1960-1961.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, I am going to make some brief introductory remarks to elaborate on the intent of this bill. Then with the permission of the House I will conclude the debate by rebutting any arguments that are offered—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: I will keep my introductory remarks of this bill as concise as possible.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. Minister might let the Opposition quiet for a moment before he proceeds.

Order!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister has the floor.

Hon. Mr. White: The vote did not indicate that.

I will keep my introductory remarks on this bill as concise as possible, recognizing many of the comments associated with the bill were made by the Treasurer when he presented his Budget on March 6. A few words of explanation will clarify the intent of the revisions contained in this amendment.

A significant change involves the repeal of The Hospitals Tax Act, and its integration with The Retail Sales Tax Act. This integration was recommended by both the Smith and the select committees. It will simplify the work of the vendors because some of them have had to comply with the two statutes in the past, and this nuisance will be eliminated in the future.

It will be better for the vendors who are affected, and better for the administrators, more efficient both for us and for them. All of the provisions in The Hospitals Tax Act will be contained in The Retail Sales Tax Act, with two exceptions. The provision for annual licencing at the cost of $1, and the $1 maximum on the tax on entertainment will be discontinued.

The amendment to the Act will require one permit only for each vendor under The Retail Sales Tax Act.

Under The Hospital Tax Act, many forms of entertainment are currently enjoying exemption from the tax. Exemptions are provided for events held by various organizations and associations for recreational, religious, charitable, educational and other purposes. Exemptions are also extended from time to time to theatrical or musical performances where the performers and management are residents of Canada. Hon. members will recall both the select and Smith committee recommended these exemptions from tax should be terminated.

The bill before the House provides for the discretionary power for these exemptions to continue, but in line with the recommendations referred to, it is proposed that the exemptions be reviewed during the next 12 months with the object of phasing out each one at an appropriate time, but not later than March 31, 1970.

Where the purpose of a particular exemption has a special merit, then it is appropriate that the subsidy being provided from public funds be by grant rather than by exemption from tax. Those members who were on the select committee will recognize this very important principle that special benefits be provided regularly, overtly, in full view of public scrutiny, by way of a grant rather than having a tax exemption, whether we talk about property tax exemption or some other tax exemption embedded in a statute or embedded in a practice beyond the view of the citizens and tax payers.

The bill will give effect to the principle of differential rates under The Retail Sales Tax Act, and will result in three categories of sales—exempt sales, sales subject to 5 per cent tax, and those subject to 10 per cent tax. The 10 per cent rate now applicable under The Hospital Tax Act will be extended under this bill to include the consumption of all liquor, wine and bottled beer, whether or not entertainment is provided.

Retail sales of these products will be taxed at the 10 per cent rate, which will also apply to all meals, including take out meals, if a meal ticket exceeds $2.50. In recognition of the rise in the price of meals in recent years, the tax on meals from $1.51 to $2.50 inclusive will be withdrawn, thereby removing the tax completely on meals up to and including $2.50.

The net effect of these changes should provide approximately $42 million in additional revenue for the fiscal year 1969/70.

Under this bill, the exemption on production machinery will be removed April 1, 1969. This exemption has caused many problems in interpretation, and as the additional tax may be written off, usually over a period of years for federal and provincial income tax purposes, the net increase in tax by the removal of the exemption will be less than the amount of the tax we expect to derive from this source. For the fiscal year 1969/70, we anticipate this change will yield an additional revenue from the sales tax.

Mr. Nixon: That is the net effect, $38 million.

Hon. Mr. White: That is the additional revenue from the sales tax.

Mr. Nixon: Not reduced by the other?

Hon. Mr. White: Not reduced. The reductions are shown in those other categories.

The bill makes provision for a definition of services and the tax on telephone and telegraph services will be brought under that provision, instead of being embraced in the definition of tangible personal property, as is the case at present.

We anticipate, at this time, to limit the extension of the tax on services to transient accommodation. This is a service tax in most jurisdictions of North America, and we propose to follow the approach commonly used elsewhere in Canada and the United States in applying this tax. This change will be effective April 1, 1969, and should produce $13 million in the coming fiscal year.

This, Mr. Speaker, is a brief condensation of the legislative changes contained in this bill.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, in dealing with the basic situations governed by this bill, of course, many of them deal only, with the changes which are required in order to transfer responsibilities from the Treasurer to the Minister of Revenue. These need not be discussed as they are mechanical, and as they simply allow what has heretofore been a small colony to achieve independent status as a Ministry in itself.

It would appear, Mr. Speaker, that if we look at the various changes which are proposed and set out for us in the résumé of the Budget, that in these six areas of taxation change there are some areas with which we definitely have issue.

The Treasurer has suggested that some $180 million of new revenue was going to be achieved through the various taxation changes that he has brought to pass, an amount which the leader of the Opposition has referred to as equaling some $100 per household in the coming year.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that in these tax changes which are proposed we once again come up with the question of regressivity. In the approach that this government has had to those who wish to smoke or drink, to those who wish to go to an entertainment, or to a movie, to operate a boat or various other pleasures, this seems to me to smack of what the Globe and Mail referred to in its comments on the liquor changes as "brown paper baggery", and this is "brown paper baggery" at its worst.

I think that a government which increases its revenues in these areas only because the willing camel is able to bear slightly more of the load, is moving to cause tax changes which must be regressive in that sales taxes basically are regressive. As I have stated in the comments in the second reading of the previous bill with respect to tobacco tax, certainly this government has opted strongly in favour of taxation changes in sales tax as this amount of share in the revenue of the province increases from some 19 per cent to some 21 per cent.

It may well be, Mr. Speaker, that the decisions made to raise revenue from these areas are based solely on the desire for an increased amount of money. But they do hit in their approach at areas of relaxation and areas of leisure activity which I believe are regrettable.

In the approach to transient accommodation and in the approach to continuing the effect of the hospitals tax, I suggest Mr. Speaker, that the government is being unfortunately influenced by the amount of revenue that they can get from this tax, rather than attempting to change some of the taxation approaches to encourage tourism or entertainment or the arts in one form or another.

By foregoing that amount of revenue, we could develop sufficient interest in various performing art functions, in the use of live musicians, in various types of entertainment, in the development of, to a point, a form of tax haven in this area. If this were done I suggest it would be a high-paying proposition because any revenue lost would be more than overcome by increased amounts which tourists would spend in our jurisdiction, and by increased amounts which would accrue to the provincial revenue because of the expenditures which they would make on items which we otherwise would have taxed.

Now, we have noted the rate differential in tax, we have noted the approach with respect to the increased exemption in the amount of meals to the value of $2.50, and the leader of the Opposition has spoken on this item in his reply to the budget address which the hon. members heard on Monday.

There are, of course, certain areas in this bill and in the changes which it proposes that we find most unfortunate. They deal specifically with the decision to impose a tax upon production machinery.

It was interesting to me, Mr. Speaker, to note that there were those not only in this Legislature, but in the press, as they reported the terms of the Budget, who suggested that much of this added revenue was going to come from the pockets of the businessman.

I think that it is apparent to any of us who have looked into the economic results of this form of taxation that the changes that the corporations are going to have in the tax burden that they must assume are going to be passed on to the ultimate consumer.

Mr. Speaker, we note that these changes which had been proposed and which were in effect under the federal legislation, have been removed. When in the Budget papers the Treasurer refers to the removal of a substantial grey area of doubt on page 27 of his statement as we had it presented to us, I suggest that, in fact, there was no substantial grey area of doubt in this case.

Surely the matter is clear. If we are to impose taxation, we are only fooling ourselves if we presume that this form of tax increase is going to be otherwise dealt with, than to be passed on.

Business men have already written, I think, to many members of this House. I have received certain letters from persons who have entered into contracts and who are attempting to compete in world markets in the production of various forms of equipment. The burden of these communications is that this form of tax is a most unfortunate one. It is one which goes, albeit to a small degree, to impinging upon what is otherwise our ability to compete in world markets.

Surely any form of taxation, any form of government intervention which unnecessarily complicates the selling potentialities that the hon. Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Randall), has, is an unfortunate tax.

We can do much better than this, and this kind of an approach which will be passed on and is not coming out of any magical source of revenue is one which we will oppose.

Mr. Speaker, on the taxation changes that have been proposed, as we have said, there are many areas which are only mechanical, but the ones which are most important deal, I think, with the imposition of the transient tax and the continuation of the hospital tax, when we might do better by considering avoiding these taxes and receiving far greater sums through increased tourism; and in the second part by the imposition of these taxes on production machinery, which of course, will be passed on.

The legislation which has just received second reading takes some of the pleasure out of smoking. In this bill we deal with changes in amusement taxes and in admissions to the local theatre that will no doubt be changed. In these three areas, we believe that this government has unfortunately failed to come up with a proper approach to attempting to increase taxation without imposing an unfair burden on those persons who are least able to pay.

It is, of course, apparent that the most fair and equitable form of increased taxation can only result from some form of changes in income taxes, if these be required to raise increased revenue. To make the changes in the form of retail sales tax amendments, I suggest, is indefensible. The simple fact that it is an easy tax to change, and to take the simple approach that the willing horse will continue to bear the burden is not good enough. As a result, Mr. Speaker, we in the official Opposition will oppose this bill.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Speaker, in rising to join this debate, may I say that my remarks are going to be long, involved, dull as you can possibly make them and difficult in places. If others feel that they wish to withdraw from this particular form of torture, please let them do so. I am in a forgiving spirit, but I intend to go into this rather thoroughly today. May I say, too—

Mr. Bullbrook: What constitutes a forum?

Mr. Lawlor: We have got a strong Liberal contingent. It is always nice to lecture to the Liberals.

May I say, Mr. Speaker, at the inception, let us get something straight between ourselves and the Minister of Revenue—for us who sat on that committee all summer. What we predicted would start has begun. The Minister now says: "You fellows went for it; either we did it in an enlightened way or I pulled the wool over your eyes. Or we had a stalking horse—camouflaging the thing—but we gave you the syrup, the bitter pill and we sugar-coated it." You can use all the phrases in the world, but I want it clearly understood hic et nunc that I do not feel in the least bound by any decision, recommendation, overall policy, conclusion, or any other thing that I took, or we did, last summer.

An hon. member: Do not compromise either.

Mr. Lawlor: As a member, in both capacities it seems rational and fair at this time of the day or night, that we would have reached those conclusions. That is, that both now and then seem rational. Then I shall abide by them and, as in the case of the tobacco tax, I shall throw some light and come down in that direction. On the other hand, if the decision appears to be questionable, I do not want to be held for the crimes of my lurid youth for the rest of my life. I may have had a moment of weakness last summer—a dizzy spell, stayed up too late the previous night with the Minister of Revenue. But now as I come to that precise issue, in the cold light of day, on further reflection and consideration, a new wisdom may have set in. Please do not toss in our teeth, time after time, the business that: "You agreed."

I do not care whether they did or not. I am not going to agree today, and may not agree tomorrow. It is not a question of any flippancy in this regard. I feel that it is obnoxious to have your freedom thus restricted. As a private member of this House, I served one function in the committee, to the overall benefit of the province, one would trust. That was one function or capacity that was performed at one time. I suggest that I perform a different function or capacity, standing here this afternoon, particularly when most of the things before were never deeply discussed, much less agreed upon.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): The member is bifurcating himself.

Mr. Lawlor: We live half-lives, you know—even you.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The member must have a guilty conscience, because no one here seems to have brought up the matter.

Mr. Lawlor: The hon. Minister has been intimating and shuffling around over the issue for days, and he raised it this afternoon, right off the bat, the first time he got up in a major debate. Here he is with his lasso, that he is twisting around over his head, and we can see it coming—he is going to catch you in this noose. I am not going to be caught in the noose. I am sure my Liberal friends over there are not going to be caught in any of his nooses, either. He can do what he likes.

I was saying that this was particularly so when what we are being faced with here this afternoon in a number of these headings were not things we achieved in committee at all. It is action that ran directly counter to a good deal of the thinking in the committee and to our final proposals in that committee. Members who permit themselves a rather easy latitude as in the way they have gestated through the task force, the work of our committee in area after area.

Hon. Mr. White: It the hon. member will permit, I claim the same privilege that he has claimed.

Mr. Lawlor: I extend it to the Minister.

Hon. Mr. White: I am changing my mind, on second thought.

Mr. Lawlor: That is your third thought, in that case. This bill, which is a very intricate bill, has no one principle, Mr. Speaker. It has at least four separate and distinct principles under completely different heads of taxation, and the matter must be dealt with thus diversely. I have to address myself to the four heads, of course, the whole area of tangible personal property taxation, and in this area the Minister has produced—and this is one of the grave defects—he has gone overboard in the direction of double taxation in a number of areas.

If I may just illustrate that particular point—and the most overt example of it. It is written right in, sticking up like a sore thumb in the middle of the Act on one point here, but it goes further than that. The whole taxation of production machinery is a pyramiding tax. It is a tax which involves, maybe double—add it up—maybe by the time it turns over, it could go into more than double taxation. But in any event it goes into double taxation.

In section 5 paragraph 24, of his tax, the Minister says the purchase of tangible personal property to provide a taxable service is not exempt from the tax imposed by this Act, and then he goes on to say that no taxable service is exempt from tax imposed by this Act, by reason of the fact that the tangible personal property used in providing the taxable service is tangible personal property in respect of which a tax has been imposed.

There it is as clear as a bell. Usually he is a little better than that. Usually you can get it under wraps a little bit better, so that it is hard to see just where the double taxation feature comes into play. But this is almost scandalously venal in its frankness. In any case I pointed out to the Minister—I am most interested to see how he receives that—that particular point and the whole matter as to the position of double taxation.

The second field—and really there are four fields I am going to deal with—is the amusement tax that was called, by a misnomer, the hospital services tax which was imposed many years ago, I believe in 1948. It only lasted two years with respect to hospitals. After that time, they found that the tax did not even begin to meet the need. It was a drop in the bucket as far as hospitals were concerned. It went into general revenues and the hospitals had to be financed in a completely different way, but it would show the certain purblindness even in 1948, thinking they could use an amusement tax to finance hospital construction.

The second area has to do with transient accommodation, and the third area is production machinery. The final area is taxation on the purchase of beer, liquor and meals over the sum of $2.50.

I would point out that this Act does give a very much broader definition, as perforce it must to be effective, of the term purchaser against The Retail Sales Tax Act. Also, I would have the legal members in the House peruse the definition of sale. It has a much wider application, too, and I am just wondering if it is definite enough.

Taking the first point of reference, namely the amusement tax, there are a number of features about this tax that are bothersome to say the least. As everyone knows, or soon will know, this tax is a graduated one. It starts at 76 cents, and the six cents is against 76 cents. Then it goes up until it reaches 90 cents. There are four or five stages.

Over 92 cents it then goes to a ten per cent base, and you enter a differential field here. Smith did not recommend the differential. He thought the tax on amusements ought to be on the same level as the five per cent sales tax on all other sales. He could not see the reason for discriminating and placing a special imposition upon men's amusements, but I made remarks upon a Puritanical instinct which was quite evident in this Legislature at an earlier time today.

The graduated feature of the tax I suggest, ought to have been scrutinized more carefully and possibly altered. In other words, what has been done here was that instead of using a good deal of intelligence in revamping the old Hospital Tax Act, it has just been, by-and-large, taken over holus-bolus into the sales tax without too much aversion, not balancing out the various imperfections and possibilities of the previous statute, and perpetuating stupidities of various kinds. Since they were going to do a job on it, it might have been evened out and made sensible at that time.

As I say, most economists do take exception to the differential feature in the staging of the tax as it is being done here. I wonder, when the Minister comes to reply, what justification he felt there was for this particular move at this time, and under that heading, in order to anticipate his remarks, I would like to mention what Smith has to say on it, at 287:

In our view, the major objection to the present hospitals tax is that it is blatantly discriminatory. It discriminates broadly against one class of expenditures, a class that incorporates a large portion of those events that comprise the formal culture of our society. Indeed, the existing tax laws of the province are such that a strange anomaly results.

I would like the Minister to straighten me out if I am wrong. We have not had a great deal of time to spend working over this bill's niceties, so I could be off the rail here and there. But coming to these strange anomalies of which he speaks and which we, I thought, were trying to rectify, my contention is that you are perpetuating the same anomalies under your revision here today.

Indeed, the existing tax laws of the province are such that strange anomalies result.

A book containing the libretto and score of an opera such as the Barber of Seville, can be purchased free of tax. A record of the same opera attracts the five per cent sales tax, but a live performance by a company such as the Met can be enjoyed only after paying the ten per cent hospitals tax. Video tapes of that performance could be broadcast and enjoyed in thousands of homes free of any tax.

Now they have altered that. They have not brought it before us yet, as far as I can see, but they are going to start the taxation of video tape.

But a movie of it, shown in a cinema would be taxable if the price of admission were more than 75c.

The present hospital tax is discriminatory in another sense. The wide range of exemptions create obvious inequities. Canadian theatrical or musical performances can be enjoyed without tax.

Again, you perpetuated that. You have written it out in identical wording into your Act, and that is all to the good.

I am not opposed to giving a preferential position to Canadian talent. Do not misunderstand me on that score.

Canadian theatrical performances can be enjoyed without tax, but not those of foreign artists unless the proceeds are used for charitable, religious or educational purposes.

A tax is paid to see daredevil car drivers unless their performance is part of a recognized grandstand show. Old "Satchmo" may blow his horn to an untaxed nightclub audience, but he may not sing. If he does sing, the first ten dollars the patrons spend will be taxed.

Hon. Mr. White: All of those anomalies are being eliminated.

Mr. Lawlor: I think not. In any case, some things are not being and I will come to them in a moment.

At "a concert performance, his audience is taxed whether he sings or not."

I think that is probably eliminated. I do not see it repeated.

The various degrees of professionalism of hockey teams may be explored to determine whether tax will be charged, or if it has been collected, whether it will be refunded. The whole business of amateurism, the protection of amateur theatre, amateur sport, etc., seems to me to be left in a most questionable condition under the new wording. Well, we will come to that in a minute when we come to that clause or the wording "or otherwise".

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Lawlor: We will come to the text on it and thrash it out then.

A one dollar admission charge for an evening movie is taxable, a 75-cent matinee ticket for the same movie is not. They do not change that.

An hon. member: All of those arguments are—

Mr. Lawlor: Oh, administrative reasons is it now?

Although many of these inequities could be removed by a rationalization of the statute, we think that the exemptions testify to a realization of the unfairness of taxing certain forms of entertainment at the high rate of 10 per cent.

He goes on in his conclusion as indicated:

But we reject the notion that a special tax should be levied on certain forms of amusement and entertainment levied at a rate higher than is applicable to most consumer expenditures. The tax is unfair. The exempting of many events similar to those that are taxed makes it inexcusable. In our view expenditures made for amusement and entertainment should be taxed under the general sales tax like any other consumer expenditure.

It seems to me there is a great deal of validity in what the man says under that head.

May I take particular exception to a very specific point, Mr. Speaker. The Minister, under The Sales Tax Act, in swinging The Hospital Tax Act into that statute, has reserved to himself personally—and in effect this is what the score is—absolute discretionary powers of determining who falls in and who falls out of certain categories. This is applicable with respect to the performances under the amusement tax sections of this new bill, section 6. Actually it reads—and we will come to the point we were discussing a moment ago—

—where special circumstances exist—

Whatever on earth that means—

—whether of a religious, charitable, or educational nature or otherwise, the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council may, upon the application of the vendor made to the Minister at least ten days before the tax would otherwise be paid, exempt the purchaser from the payment.

Let us take it in two steps. The first step that I am concerned with just for a moment is who the government may exempt through the discretion of the Lieutenant-Governor. A lawyer reading this will say that "or otherwise" is ejusdem generis; it is in the same category, the same sort of thing.

I am suggesting that that would not give them power to go out and exempt amateur events of various kinds. Nor as far as I can see is there any other section that gives you that permission. Certainly not as encapsulated into the new Bill and carried over from the old. They must be doing that under "or otherwise" business and I question sincerely their right to do so, as it is neither a religious, charitable nor educational enterprise.

Maybe they could put the odd one under the educational head, but then again I suspect that many of the theatricals being put on these days could scarcely be defined as educational except in an indirect and obverse sense.

The second point about their discretion is that when they come down to refunding, in subsection 3 of the reimbursement provisions, and in subsection 4, where he, as the Minister, solely and entirely—no Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council any longer—has absolute discretionary powers to exempt under that section.

I suppose, government has to be run one way or another, but it seems to me that the range of clunking down hard runs against the concepts of democracy, the concepts of McRuer that the Minister ought to be subject to an appeal of some sort from the Minister; at least be given a hearing, an argumentation, as to the validity of it one way or the other. But he does this in the secrecy of his own heart and that is a rather arbitrary way and though Smith takes no exception to it, as such, I feel that we, as members of the Legislature, not only should point it out but perhaps spend a few moments, as I have, railing against it.

I would like to, in some extent, on this issue mention that I do not think the range of exemptions has been obviated at all. It bears out this discretionary point. At 282, Smith says:

The taxes payable on the price of admission to such amusements as cinemas, theatres, sporting events, and concerts, a number of exemptions limit the generality of the tax. Events sponsored by a wide range of religious, educational, charitable, or community organizations.

I do not know how he managed to work that "or community organizations" in there——may be attended free of tax as may amateur athletic events and exhibitions and grandstand performances presented by such organizations as the Central Canada Exhibition Association, the Royal Agricultural Winter Fair Association, and the Canadian National Exhibition.

Whether a particular event qualifies for exemption is left to the Treasurer's absolute discretion.

Similarly, a theatrical or musical performance in a place of amusement may be exempt if the performers and the managers are Canadian. In this connection it has become departmental practice to exempt performances by Canadian companies even if foreign guest performers take part.

I would like to know what has been done under the present situation to rectify the more invidious features of these exemptions, and whether the Minister does not feel that the kind of discretion that is being imposed on his shoulders on this occasion is, perhaps, too onerous for him to bear, if not diametrically opposed to the civilized institutions we support.

That, basically, is my presentation so far as the amusement tax is concerned. On the whole I feel that Smith is perfectly right, that the differential feature is questionable, simply as a differential feature, and that, as he recommends, The Hospital Tax Act be repealed and all expenditures for amusements and entertainment be taxable under the sales tax, with all kinds of moves to eliminate these anomalies and discrepancies that have been pointed out here in the last few minutes.

As to transient accommodation, it is one of the areas under the sales tax that we discussed and that offers the opportunity to the government to move in on services. The selection of this particular head is curious when one can think of any number of others that have not been touched upon at all.

In other words, I, of course, have given some thought to the sales tax touching the service called advertising and the business of some form of tax in the service of real estate brokers; that of the stock exchange people. But transient accommodation—the motels and hotels who allow people to stay, having more than four people staying there for a period of less than a month—has been singled out for special treatment, and the rest ignored.

Of course, they were not nearly as powerful a lobby before us at the time. I will never forget the impact made by the stock exchange people. They did not have any contrary delegation, of course, to oppose their designs. For the moment I think I have said enough about this. I think we should turn our attention in due course to that field and have a thorough investigation made.

I notice that New York, since that time, has imposed a tax in face of all their blandishments and threats to move it off to New Jersey.

But to return to the point. The transient accommodation does have—as my hon. friend from Kitchener (Mr. Breithaupt) has indicated—adverse effects upon the tourist industry. I wonder if the dollars flowing to this province through tourists would not well repay the abnegation and elimination of this particular tax. It is an irritant, and for all the benefits you are going to derive from it I suspect that that tax, too, should be severely stunting.

Now to come to the big head of the day—production machinery. Mr. Speaker, I intend to use four authorities. These are, perhaps, the most formidable mustering of authorities and I am not going to apologize for taking the time of the House because this is the crucial nub of this bill. Whatever else one can bow one's head before, on administrative grounds or otherwise, production machinery is going to take a great deal of explaining from the Minister. The authorities I wish to use are Smith, Kenyon Poole, Carter, and John Due—Due being the international and recognized authority on this subject. That being the case, I suppose I may as well get started.

The imposition is made in section 5, paragraph 8. No mention, of course, is made of production machinery; it simply deletes the provisions of the present Retail Sales Tax Act and amendments thereto and brings production machinery under the base.

To be fair to the Minister, I think one thing should be clearly understood by this House before getting into the niceties of this thing. This is that while there is no question in the world that to tax production goods, the whole range of production goods, would be a most regressive, invidious, and backward move in tax policy, there may be some simulacrum of sense in taxing that one area of production goods called production machinery, equipment and parts. That is a very narrow field where I suppose some argument is that the cascading effect is perhaps not as great.

Certainly I would think that the Minister would agree after our deliberations. I mean there are certain things we can all accept in common, I would trust, and the universal feeling under this head is that the taxation of production goods is insensible, retrogressive and regressive of the interests of the economy. I would trust that the Minister would have no visions of moving into that particular area.

Smith says at 227 that he thoroughly opposes, as do all the major economists. True, to some extent he mixes up production goods with production machinery and seems to address the same remarks to both, but then he also segregates. He talks about it specifically in paragraph 67. He talks pretty generally in paragraph 66. He says:

It is not administratively practical, however, to make the exemption of intermediate or producers' goods complete. Ontario exempts all goods that become physical ingredients or proponent parts of finished retail goods.

In addition, all machinery directly used in production is presently exempt. But items sold to producers that do not become embodied in the final product, such as office equipment, motor vehicles, building materials, and some non-production machinery, are taxable.

It has been suggested that perhaps one-fifth of the sales tax revenue comes from the sale of such non-exempt goods to producers. In principle, all goods purchased by business firms should be treated uniformly.

May I pause at this point, Mr. Speaker. You see, the task of the committee was that Ontario, under its sales tax, specifically sets out that production machinery and equipment would not be taxed. The reverend Treasurer, by a little niggling here and there, has gradually been taxing more and more of things which are generally considered in the industry as production machinery and production equipment, and there have been quarrels with the manufacturers' association.

So the thing has resided in the high and lonely discretion of the Treasurer up to this time, and now flees to another head, which I do not think is any more sensible or discerning. The Treasurer has encroached and overlapped with the federal people in this field and brought some things under taxation which he ought not to have done—I mean by any rational discernment—and exempted other things which he ought not.

This is invidious to industry because it places different competitors or competitors within the same industry, often in variance with one another, in an unfair competitive position. Its impact on the international economy is similarly disastrous so far as marketing goods and in knowing what equipment machinery is subject to tax, and to add other duties, and the range of those taxes.

So there are complications at the national, at the provincial, and at the international level which are involved. But it goes beyond that.

The Treasurer has an Act, he has certain contour lines laid down. He ignores or avoids the application of those contour lines within his own Act so he trespasses over them to other territories, which leaves business in a state of indetermination as to what tax they pay and which one they do not, and all the administrative nonsense that arises out of that.

So he said let us bring ourselves under the tutelage of big brother. The federal government has an excise Act, a sales tax Act. Let us bring ourselves in this regard into conformity with them so that business enterprises will at least know with some degree of forecasting and determination what kind of equipment is going to be taxed when they buy it in the production process.

Did we do that under this bill? No, we did not. We went off on another tangent. We are now ignoring the federal situation competely, deciding that the the problem is such an irritating issue in trying to ferret out and set aside and allocate which one is which and which is taxable and which is not.

In a brusque gesture of contempt one evening the Minister of Revenue, looking over his shoulder at the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts), said, "Let's throw the gauntlet at them. Let's cover the field. Bring them all under the tax and then we will not have any further trouble." Except that the dislocation, as far as the federal government is concerned, remains as bad or worse.

There is no accommodation between the two parties at all. The business community, I guess, not left too much in the dark at the provincial end; they just have to pay the tax. But they have to have their accountants determine for them whether or not the tax is payable at the federal level over against the provincial. And while it may remove some area of doubt, at the same time it is not the source of rational and discriminatory judgment that we sought to make in committee.

Having said that the Act itself, the principle, whatever the dislocations administratively speaking are, the thing at its heart is bad. It is said to be bad by everybody who has anything to do with it and not least by Smith. So I return to the text:

In principle, all goods purchased by business firms should be treated uniformly. The provision of office equipment, motor vehicles and building materials affects the cost, and consequently the retail price of goods sold by manufacturers, just as much as did the direct costs of raw material and production machinery. The major difficulty in providing complete exemption from producers' goods is administrative complexity.

In particular, many currently taxed producer goods are sold at retail to consumers as well as to producers. There would, therefore, be great difficulty in distinguishing purchases made by manufacturers for production and those made for personal use. Effective enforcement would involve high administrative costs.

The result, however, is, that in addition to the pyramiding effect of the tax on the non-exempt portion of the cost of production, there is a doubling of tax upon the sale of the product to the extent that taxes again collected on the portion of the price equal to such previously taxed cost.

And then he goes on:

In addition to Ontario, the province of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island exempt production machinery generally. Quebec provides a partial exemption.

I must confess that, if you have looked through John Due's book on sales tax, and seen what Quebec has done under the heading, you cannot help dismiss the taxation of production as being a most self-defeating ordinance.

Quebec provided a partial exemption and Newfoundland, Saskatchewan and British Columbia provide no exemptions. The Ontario provisions exempt:

Machinery and apparatus and parts thereof as defined by the Treasurer that, in his opinion, are to be used by the purchaser thereof directly in the process of manufacture or production of tangible personal property for sale or use.

What an omniscient man we have in our Treasurer, and now in our Minister of Revenue, that with all the intricacies of production apparatus he can tell, with the finesse and nicety not given to entrepreneurs themselves who know the industry, where the weight falls, to tax or not to tax.

Retail sales tax regulation No. 22 also defines machinery and apparatus and parts thereof as those that come in direct contact in the manufacture and production of tangible personal property for sale, but not including certain general classifications listed in the regulation. Numerous rulings and arbitrary decisions are required to be made as to taxability as there are many purchasers that do not easily fit into the listed categories.

The tendency is in those fringe areas to tax rather than to exempt. We think that the definition should be expanded so that at least the following classifications of machinery and apparatus and the parts thereof are exempt: Laboratory testing equipment, machine shop equipment, machinery repair and maintenance equipment, handling equipment for use during production process, and small tools supplied employees without charge for use in production.

It goes on in that vein.

One could go on for quite a bit more with Smith in this particular heading, but even following his recommendations in this regard as to what ought to be taxed, certainly certain exemptions should have been considered but, because of the economic consequences which are well known to the Minister of not so exempting the impact will fall on the consumer. It will mean again the old business that has been discussed time after time here, that the tax on the machine will be added into the cost of production. Then it will be rounded to the next dollar so that there will be an increase in that, with its inflationary impact. It's self-defeating in its whole economic consequence. To thump this point home, let me quote from a man who was hired as an economic consultant by the Smith committee, and by whom a number of brochures have been produced, a Mr. Kenyon E.

Poole. Kenyon Poole's tract on a sales tax study is an excellent piece of work that the man has done. It thoroughly damns what the Minister is doing, even in the restricted area that I mention.

Hon. Mr. White: Just one man's opinion!

Mr. Lawlor: I will read it for for the Minister so that he can size it up this afternoon and know just how iniquitous he is being in imposing this tax.

The Ontario Retail Sales Tax provides that tangible personal property purchased for the purpose of being processed, manufactured in, fabricated into, attached to or incorporated into tangible personal property for sale is exempt from tax. The Ontario provision on direct use follows that of the federal government in some indirect use; but as to what, in fact, is direct use it certainly does not. The Ontario provision, since the tax, is defined as applying to tangible personal property; sales of real estate are excluded from the tax. Materials consumed are extended directly in the process of manufacture; production of tangible personal property for sale is exempt from tax; moreover, machinery and apparatus used directly in the manufacture of tangible personal property for sale are exempt. In general, provisions restricting exemptions of producer goods to direct-use-physical-ingredient and the like weaken the logic of excluding producer goods from the tax. The only argument in favour of taxing producer goods is the need for revenue, without regard to equity or to the economic consequences.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): That is the argument they are using.

Mr. Lawlor: May I just repeat that? Those words should be emblazoned across your brow, sir.

The only argument in favour of taxing producer goods is the need for revenue.

The government has just proven to us, here the other day, with their ostentatious and sometimes questionable cut-backs — largely questionable in fields of service to the people of this province—that revenue is not their chief consideration in this regard.

What on earth the chief consideration is escapes me, but if it is not revenue then the only argument in favour of taxing producer goods is the need for revenue without regard to equity or to economic consequences. It would be preferable to get the revenue from a higher state of tax on final goods, or by limiting exemptions that make little or no sense.

I am trying to not be the devil's advocate, but a fair lawyer before the courts. It is always wiser to crow if there happens to be on the same page an argument in favour of someone else just to mention it in passing. He goes on to say here:

However, an important justification for including some producer goods may be found, as it has in Ontario, in the compliance and administrative problems involved in excluding.

So much for the moment from Kenyon Poole. At the end of his book he is beginning to sum up his recommendations and on page 97 he says:

An implication of the otherwise very discernible procedure integrating the federal and provincial sales taxes.

That is what I thought we are trying to do, and which is a commendable thing to seek to do. An integration process would to a considerable extent eliminate staff and administrative difficulties, and save the people of this province a good deal of money in the process. He goes on:

By the same token taxability, where exemption or exclusions ought to be granted, would likewise create curious distortions under a federal-provincially aligned sales tax system. Great care would thus have to be taken to eliminate producers from the sales tax where the personal property involved is a physical ingredient, merely a catalyst, directly used in production, or machinery not directly used. Not only does violation of this principle create haphazard tax shifting and incidence, thus creating distortions of resource use domestically, but it also raises total production cost with adverse effect on the nation's balance of trade position. The ideal policy with respect to exemptions may be expressed as follows:

Every effort should be made to maximize the scope of exclusion of producer goods from tax, while exemptions of tangible consumer goods and services should be handled to a minimum. Most of Ontario's present exemptions, except for food, accomplish little by way of contributing to equity among income groups, and are hardly worth the administrative costs they entail. However, the food and children's clothing exemptions are, as they stand, that gratuitous boon to thousands of families who are quite able to pay the tax.

So much for Poole under this particular head.

Carter says, in the 5th volume of the Royal Commission on Taxation, page 69, and again, Mr. Speaker, I apologize for reading at this length.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Is the member going to end up rescuing the government again?

Mr. Lawlor: I assure the member that will not be so.

Mr. Sopha: There are quite a number of us waiting.

Mr. Lawlor: How could the member ask that, Mr. Speaker? Here I am, inveighing against this distorting tax—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lawlor: Carter says:

When taxes are levied on producer goods—that is goods used in the production and distribution of consumer goods and service—the effective tax burden is borne between different goods and services, because the relative importance of the tax on producer goods in final selling prices is not constant. Taxing producer goods will, if the tax is passed on, result in higher consumer prices, reduce the sales of goods and services provided by capital-intensive methods relative to the sale of goods and services produced by labour-intensive matters. If the tax on producer goods is not passed on in higher consumer prices, the expected rate of return on capital-intensive projects will be reduced. In either case, the value of Canada's future output is likely to be reduced.

On the other hand, and here the Minister of Trade and Development is always talking about our great trade potential, the Minister of Revenue is working directly contrary to the best interests of the other Minister. I think it is detrimental enough to the best interests; you do not have to add to the load. This is what has happened here. In either case, the value of Canada's future output is likely to be reduced.

On the other hand, the exemption of producer goods raises difficulties. In those cases where such goods can be either consumed directly by individuals, or used to produce other goods and services, he gives us a range of three different kinds of goods, and splits them up and gives his various reactions to each of them in turn. I was going to go through it in detail but decided I will not. The overall effect is, in part, a rejecting and jettisoning of this sort of tax. I will just read the final paragraph on the next couple of pages.

Finally, even if it were administratively feasible, it is argued that the wide exemption of producer capital goods would mean a narrowing of the tax base and therefore a substantial loss of revenue. However, we consider that an increase in the tax rate on consumer goods, either with or without the widening of the base, for consumer taxation, would be preferable to the general taxation of producer capital goods. Furthermore, such an increase would be partially offset by the removal of tax on tax effects. Exempting producer capital goods would make it possible to attain a greater uniformity of tax burden on consumers, or to achieve any desired departure from that uniformity with a greater precision. To reduce the hidden tax element on imports and import-competing goods, and to reduce or eliminate the distorting effect on the choice of production methods, we therefore recommend that the exemption of all production machinery and apparatus should be restored immediately.

I would have thought that that was pretty conclusive. I shall wind up this piece of rodomontade today by quoting from John F. Due, "Provincial Sales Taxes", the book that everyone quoted from in this particular regard. Objections to taxing other producer goods, on page 82 of his book issued by the Canadian Tax Foundation:

There are several objections to the taxing of these producer goods. Since their costs enter into the costs of the finished products, they are to a certain extent being subjected to multiple taxation, in the same manner as they would if ingredients were taxed. The basic reason for freeing materials from tax is the fact that their cost enters into the cost of the finished product. And the same justification for exempting them applies to other producer goods as well. Failure to exempt these goods causes the same type of pyramiding as is encountered with manufacturers' sales tax. A tax upon industrial and farm equipment is an artificial penalty upon replacement of old equipment and upon modernization and business expansion. It places a discriminatory burden on the firms in the province, in competition with firms in provinces such as Ontario.

He is speaking of the Quebec situation.

—which provides exemption of various producer goods. The position of Canadian exporters relative to those of other countries is weakened. Some firms can shift the tax more easily than others, and it thus, in part, rests in an inequitable burden on the onus of the firms.

These, Mr. Speaker, are the various arguments that I would bring forward in order to seek to persuade the government not to engage in this fallacy; not to go forward with the tax which, in the best and most authoritative opinion that we can muster, is retrogressive. It is not so much retrogressive, it is just stupid over against what has been said. We never did discuss it, as I say, in committee, so we cannot be hung up on prior commitments. On the other hand, it quite escapes me why the government would feel it wise or even feasible to launch into this particular area.

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak against Bill 79 I would like to discuss two areas. One is to throw additional information upon the instance of the sales tax and its regressive nature. For this, I would like to refer to the Royal Commission on Taxation, volume II, page 246. This is the Carter report, sir; this is table 6-2, effective tax rates for the total tax structure for 1961.

It can be argued of course, as the Minister knows, that 1961 is almost nine years past, and therefore the statistics might not be too relevant. But I suggest that until new statistics become available we must work on the basis of these 1961 figures.

Second, the relative comparison of the figures, I think, will probably stand up over quite a long time. If one looks at the provincial and local tax section of this table, labelled sales and excises, one finds the following instance of that type of taxation. One finds that people in the under-$2,000 income category paid 8.2 per cent of their income into sales and excise taxes at the provincial levels across Canada. For the income group $2,000 to $2,999, the instance is 4.5 per cent. For the income group $3,000 to $3,999, the instance is 4.6 per cent. For the family income class $4,000 to $4,999, the instance is 4.3. For $5,000 to $6,999, it is 4.7. For $7,000 to $9,999, it is 4.5. For $10,000 and over it is three per cent.

The argument is a very simple one, and that is that the incidence of taxation via the sales and excise tax at the provincial level in Canada is not equitable; it is not a fair tax.

For example, one finds, at the extreme, the under-$2,000 family income category pays over eight per cent of their income in this type of tax, whereas the $10,000 and over group pays only three per cent. That is what Carter means by a regressive type of tax.

The Minister notes that these are 1961 figures. I would remind him that the Ontario retail sales tax was announced by the Treasurer in his budget statement of March 9, 1961, and was enacted, with some amendments, to become effective on September 1 of that year. What this means is that in 1961 in these figures, the Ontario contribution to a national regressive sales tax at the provincial level was not fully felt. I therefore argue, on the Minister's own terms, that the increase in regressiveness of the taxation system of Ontario would make Ontario's relative position today worse, in terms of the regressivity of that tax, than it was in 1961.

I think this should be underlined repeatedly by members of my party and by members of the New Democratic Party when we discuss increasing various types of sales taxes.

There is another general issue, and it is found on pages 33 and 34 of Kenyon Poole's study, entitled The Retail Sales Tax, an Economic Study, prepared for the Ontario committee on taxation, which the Minister is very much aware. To underline again this point of regressivity as one increases these taxes, even though one attempts to reduce them somewhat in the differential sales tax mechanism, I think what Poole says is significant in this debate. He says this:

It is useful to call attention to the implications on the effect of the tax on the distribution of income on the direction in which shifting of the tax occurs. It could be imagined that regardless of how the tax is shifted the after tax distribution of income remains about the same.

In other words, the distribution of income of consumers might prove to be not greatly different from that of the productive agent. The fact that the bulk of consumers are also workers lends support to this view.

What Poole is concerned with is what is called technically the question of backward or forward shifting of the sales taxes. But Poole goes on to say:

Nevertheless three important points make this a somewhat too easy solution.

What he means by this is that to assume that the after-tax distribution of income is not very much different, if at all different from the distribution of income before the new taxes are imposed, must be modified. He says this:

First, to the extent that profit receivers and bond-holders are in the upper bracket and wage earners are in the lower, the distribution of backward shifting is important for after-tax distribution of income.

Second, wealth-owners living off their capital are unaffected by backward shifting.

Third, frictional unemployment attributable to reduced output in the taxed industries effects the wage-earner more than it does the salary worker or management.

What Poole is concerned with is—and he goes on, later on on page 34, to explain this in greater detail—that while the intention of an increase in the sales tax is to tax consumers of the commodities, what can happen in fact, depending on general economic conditions and the state of the particular industries, is that the tax is shifted backwards to the productive factories.

Now I would like the Minister to spend some time in his reply to the Opposition's comments telling us whether or not he thinks the increases in the various sales taxes will result in backward or forward shifting, and if he has any idea of what the consequences would be. I suggest it is very important to have some idea of whether the shifting will be backwards or forwards. If it goes backwards, sir, then the redistribution of income is away from the lower and middle income group and in favour of those who are profit receivers, bond holders and high management people.

I think he should try to explain to us something about the incidence of the shifting as a consequence of increases in retail sales taxes.

The second aspect of Bill 79 which I would like to argue against, sir, is the application of the retail sales tax on production machinery. For this I would like to refer to general theory and also to a specific manufacturer in Ontario. Carter, that is the Royal Commission on Taxation, volume five, on page 80, notes as follows in his discussion of producer goods:

With the exception of certain kinds of goods [which he elaborates], all raw materials, partly manufactured goods, machinery equipment, apparatus parts and supplies should be exempt from tax when purchased for the production of taxable goods and services, or for the production of goods and services exclusively exempt from sales tax.

So Carter again comes down very strongly against this type of tax and particularly, I believe, on this tax as applied to production machinery.

As the Minister knows, in Appendix E of that volume, Carter divides what he calls producer goods into three broad categories. One of those categories, his second category, is producer capital goods used in manufacture or production but not in distribution. Again Carter recommends the exemption of these production goods. By the way, Mr. Speaker, this recommendation is developed for taxes at all levels.

We find Carter justifying his conclusion on page 189 of this volume in which he refers to:

The taxation of category two, production goods, does entail significant tax on tax in consideration of international competition.

So Carter is concerned, Mr. Speaker, with the problem of forward shifting of the tax on production machinery and also the question of the competitive position of the industries which are affected by this tax. And these industries tend to be, of course, those which are capital-intensive rather than labour-intensive.

Finally, quoting from Carter on page 190:

It has been said that the taxing of production machinery and apparatus impairs our international competitive potential and has a disincentive effect on the expansion, mechanization and modernization of production facilities.

Carter on that page, the Minister knows, goes into further detail in supporting that contention.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister will perhaps heed some of the theoretical arguments which Carter places in his way on this particular issue.

As the Minister also knows, in Poole's study again, near the beginning, page two, the author comes out very strongly for the same position as Carter. And again, Poole comes out on the two levels, Mr. Speaker. He comes out against this type of tax on capital-intensive goods, to use the formal terminology:

On the grounds that it is both inequitable and inefficient and leads to pyramiding of the tax.

I will not go through that quotation any further, the Minister knows where it is on page two.

The theory then, Mr. Speaker, is, I think, important because unless the Minister can refute the premises of the theory against the tax on investment goods and on production goods, then I think the premise of his tax, the basic premise of his tax, must remain questionable.

The issue is a simple one. Economic theory holds that if you want to increase the productive capacity of your economy you should give incentives for the accumulation of real capital, because that is what produces goods and services. Or as some economists talk about it, sir, it is called reproducing capital. For a government to tax this type of reproducing capital is to fly in the face, I believe, of the principle of equity, because of the possible backward shifting; and to impair the ability of other industries to compete on an international basis, because of the forward shifting.

Perhaps the Minister could follow this argument with me. It seems that some people would like to argue that a tax on producer goods, capital goods, is bad because it results in a redistribution of income away from lower income groups. In other words, the tax is passed on either to people who are wage earners or to people as consumers. Yet at the same time they refer to the inability of these industries to compete internationally because they have to raise their prices to pass on the tax.

What bothered me, on theoretical grounds at least, is that the people who make that argument cannot have it both ways. In other words, if a manufacturer is afraid of his international position then he perhaps has to keep his prices lower to compete and thereby absorb the tax to some extent himself rather than trying to pass it on to the consumer, because the consumer will shift from his goods to the goods of some other producer.

But I suspect it is possible to argue both ways at once in this if you analyze the effect of this tax on an industry by industry basis in Canada and Ontario.

In other words in some industries, perhaps those which are in a more monopolistic position in the Ontario economy, will be able to shift the tax forward or shift it backward, leaving their profits at the same level or close to the same level. But if that industry in Ontario is in a highly competitive position on an international scale, in other words there are imports of similar goods from the U.S. which are not subject to this type of tax and which for other reasons might have lower cost of production, things are different. So I think what the Minister would have to examine are those industries for which the increase in the sales taxes for which he has been primarily responsible are, I believe, inequitable; and in other areas where the result is that certain industries are less able to cope with international competition.

In this last regard, Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote from a letter to my colleague, the member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. B. Newman), from the president and general manager of Auto Specialties Manufacturing Company (Canada) Limited in Windsor. I think this is a very good letter. It is very closely argued and I would like to give the Minister the advantage of hearing the brief that was attached to the letter and addressed to the "Honourable Charles MacNaughton". It is dated March 5, 1969. I think this letter should be in the records of this Legislature. The letter is from D. S. Wood, the executive vice-president and manager of the Automotive Parts Manufacturers' Association of Canada. The letter reads as follows, Mr. Speaker:

In the papers accompanying the 1969 province of Ontario Budget, in the section headed foreign demand, you make the statement that "One of the major sources of growth in the provincial economy in 1958 was foreign demand for Ontario-manufactured goods and natural resources. The main customer for our products is the United States . . ."

Automotive exports continued to be the mainstay, registering an increase of 50 per cent during 1968. The continued export growth of Ontario motor vehicles and parts has resulted in a dramatic shift in the structure of Canadian exports. Motor vehicles and parts have become the largest single export commodity, surpassing both wheat and pulp and paper.

To continue—

Mr. Deans (Wentworth): For whose benefit is the member reading it?

Mr. T. Reid: The Speaker's benefit.

Mr. Deans: What is the purpose? He has a copy, too.

Mr. T. Reid: These two quotations, Mr. Speaker, are from the hon. Treasurer's Budget statement. The letter continues as follows; the person who wrote the letter is Mr. Wood:

The sales tax that you announced in your 1969 Budget speech is to be applied on April 1 to the tools of production and this jeopardizes this export growth. The automotive parts manufacturing industry must sell in the highly competitive United States market. We must meet United States' prices for our products. A sales tax on production equipment is accepted by all economists as an inhibiting factor; it inhibits growth, it inhibits necessary renovation. Both growth and renovation are necessary in the automotive parts manufacturing industry if only to keep pace with our United States competitors. It therefore inhibits our opportunity to make employment.

Mr. Wood continues:

You state that the tax on production machinery and equipment will raise additional revenue of some $38 million and add: We feel that the withdrawal of this exemption will remove a substantial grey area of doubt and the administrative inconvenience both to the government and the private sector.

Mr. Wood continues his comments:

$38 million is a high price to pay for removing a grey area which indeed was easily removable by simply adopting the federal government's administrative procedures that have been tried and proven over the years. It is a price that will probably be more than counterbalanced by the loss in corporation taxes which would otherwise accrue from a healthy and competitive industry. In short, it will create revenue on the one hand that will be more than removed by the other. It does not make economic sense. Our industry is deeply concerned about this provincial government move into a tax field only recently vacated by the federal government; vacated because it was proven to be uneconomic and inhibitive. We are concerned for many of our parts manufacturers who are heavily committed to capital expenditures for equipment which will not arrive until after April 1. As we are a major part of the automotive industry which is undoubtedly most directly involved in the effect of this tax, we have been asked by our members to arrange an interview with you.

What my colleague, the member for Kitchener, said about the tourist industry I think is true also in a number of other industries, although perhaps to a lesser extent—that the loss in revenue to this government or governments generally on a lower rate of growth in this very vital sector will cut into the increased revenue resulting from the new tax. And if you really netted it out you would probably find that one should subtract from the $38 million a figure that might amount to a loss in corporation tax revenue of anywhere up to $15 or $18 million. So the true net effect of the imposition of this tax on those firms which will be affected in terms of international competition, could well result in a realistic increase of something much less than $38 million.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to conclude my remarks by repeating that I hope the Minister will be able to quote economists, as opposed to taxation experts, in support of the tax on production machinery. In theory it is wrong. If he is concerned with economic growth, a lower rate of inflation, a higher rate of employment, in this province, it is wrong to put a tax on investment goods on production machinery. That can only result in a lower rate of growth than would otherwise be the case and I suggest that this will affect the government's revenue adversely as a consequence.

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): Mr. Speaker, I cannot let this go by without passing a few remarks concerning the principles that are embodied therein.

One matter that is of concern to me that has not been raised by any of the previous speakers is the matter of the consolidation of The Hospitals Tax Act within the embodiment of the retail sales tax. I am afraid there might be some grey areas as a result of this consolidation that possibly the hon. Minister might clarify for the edification of the House and the people of the province.

I refer specifically to the principles as embodied in section 1 of the Act concerning admission, that is, entry, into places of amusements and the subsection 7(a) definition of places of amusement. I do recall the hon. Minister's indication that certain exemptions were available.

In looking at subsection (a) this includes a phrase that an athletic contest or other performance is stated or held and an admission is charged, and the tax might apply thereon. I relate this particular principle to a number of areas of public or private amusement or recreation. It is this definition that I would like to speak on and possibly have clarified by the hon. Minister in his winding-up comments. I could relate this specifically to the game of golf. Is a golf course, as such, a place of amusement or is it a recreational activity?

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): A place where they seek skill but never find it.

Mr. Paterson: Is it an athletic endeavour which is embodied in the Act?

Mr. Ben: No, it is a frustration.

Mr. Paterson: Is it a performance or an exhibition? One would suppose it would depend on who is playing and with whom he is playing.

I did have the presence of mind to submit a note to the hon. Minister to try and seek a clarification on this matter.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): The Minister shoots in the low 200's.

Mr. Paterson: He did indicate to me that an annual membership in a club for recreational activity was not taxable and that he would seek further clarification as to whether daily rates paid by, I assume, the great masses of our population were taxable or not. I trust that I will receive this information.

This same principle I am trying to enunciate could apply to any number of recreational or amusement-type activities in our province. I trust that the Minister can comment on this particular matter.

The second area of concern to me is the principle of imposing the five per cent tax on transient accommodation. This tax, along with the amusement tax, increased liquor and the removal of the gas tax exemption for pleasure craft, is seriously going to affect our tourist industry in this province. It is going to affect not only the tourist industry but the convention industry on which many of our larger hotels rely.

I think, as a result of this, it is going to be passed back to municipalities from those who attend these conventions and ultimately the taxpayer to a nominal degree. There is the factor of travelling salesmen, representatives of companies paying this tax; this cost will go into the basic selling cost of wholesalers and manufacturers, and ultimately this will no doubt reflect at the consumer level.

I think, due to the seasonal nature of our tourist industry as such, that room accommodation already is slightly higher in our province than in many areas to the south of us due to the nature of our climate and so forth. This additional burden of taxation may diminish the returns to our province.

I might also seek a clarification from the Minister on the principle of taxing meals at $2.50. I would assume that if one person picks up the tab for five $1 meals this would apply on the total amount. Thus the little man is not really exempt, as was suggested the other day.

Hon. Mr. White: No. If it is on one check, it is taxable.

Mr. Paterson: The strange part to me is all these factors, especially those included in this particular Bill, have been initiated by the Treasury Board on which the Minister of Tourism, no doubt, plays a very prominent role. I feel that in due course he is going to come under very severe criticism for his activities and the imposition of these further costs and detriments to our tourist industry.

Possibly the major area of concern, which not only affects many people in my riding but the whole province, is that of the imposition of tax on production machinery. Possibly at this initial stage we could look on it only as a tax on industry itself. This again is going to be a built-in cost at the very basic level of our economy, and it will no doubt soon be reflected in higher prices to our citizens and eventually lessen the competitive nature of the industry in world markets. I would hope it would not but it possibly could lead to layoffs in many of our industries.

It is these three basic matters that are of concern to myself and my colleagues and I, too, will not vote for this bill.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a few comments toward this Bill 79. I am one of whom the Minister of Revenue cannot say that I have gone along with any tax increase he has given. Until this government has shown me ways in which they have tried to cut down their administrative expense, I will oppose any tax increase which they try to bring in.

First of all, I would like to look at this matter of the five per cent tax on production machinery. It just does not make common sense.

A year ago I spoke on the sales tax to adjuncts to machinery. Now they have added insult to injury and have imposed or are trying to impose, a five per cent sales tax on all production machinery. If the Minister took a moment to consult the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Stewart), down here under the press gallery, he would not think of putting tax on the production machinery on a farm. He would not tax the sow before she had her litter of pigs, or the ewe before she dropped her lamb; but the profit as a result from this is what you should be looking at for tax.

The same thing applies in production machinery. You are going to drive people out of business. This is definitely going to be an inhibiting factor, both for the expansion of industry and for bringing in new industry. Anyone using a little bit of basic common sense could see this. Right away you look at the short term effects of it. In effect, you are going to maim or kill the goose that has been laying the golden egg.

Specially, I would like to speak about the brief which you received from the automotive parts manufacturers. They have pointed out here that they are the largest single producers of export trade of secondary manufactured goods. Since the Canadian-U.S. auto pact has come into being they have created 15,000 new jobs in the province of Ontario; so much so that in my own locality, four out of seven working people are employed in some section of the automotive industry.

We have companies in our area which were relatively small before they got into the position where they could compete with U.S. companies for the production of auto parts. Now we have our tire factories—Uniroyal, Goodrich, General Spring, DERNERS, BOWERS—all competing with U.S. firms on a production basis and producing enough—let me cite as an example—padded dashes in the city of Kitchener—to supply three times the number of cars manufactured in all of Canada. Where are they going? They are going to the United States.

These people cannot properly compete with U.S. markets if the Minister is going to hamper them with additional taxes on their production equipment. It does not make sense.

Mr. S. Apps (Kingston and the Islands): What about the ten per cent federal tax?

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): They took it off. You are away behind; you were back in woods for a couple of years.

Mr. Good: Exporting is one of the things that we in Ontario have been able to build up over the past number of years. In Ontario since the establishment of the Canada-U.S. auto trade pact, it has been estimated that over 200 plants and expansions have been built and that this has resulted in $450 million worth of capitalization and $15,000 new jobs. Now you are willing to jeopardize this continued expansion to get your five per cent sales tax on production machinery. I am not a political economist but to me, using plain common sense, it just does not add up.

Mr. G. W. Innes (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I would like to support further the remarks of the member who has just spoken. It is in respect to the five per cent tax on machinery.

The Minister of Trade and Development has indicated to us in this House several times the great benefit the federal free trade agreement of 1965 has been to the automotive industry in this province. Certainly, any tax imposed by this government will force work to the U.S.A., due to economy and undesirability of the economics involved.

Several firms in my area will suffer unduly from the five per cent tax on production machinery and equipment and certainly it is very regressive. I need only read a portion of a letter which I have received from one of the large tool companies in my riding which briefly states the position of a company which will be subjected to this tax, if implemented. It mentions the tax imposed by the federal government and the persuasion that was brought on the federal government to remove this 12 per cent tax. It goes on to say:

It is evading the issue when the Provincial Treasurer says that the five per cent tax will only amount to some two and a half per cent since the tax becomes a deductible item from gross profits.

Secondly, if this tax is administered, as was the federal tax, then it will cause very considerable clerical work, both in the plant and in government supervision. All of us maintain two rooms for the repair of tooling and manufacture of new tooling and equipment. It will be necessary for elaborate records to be kept, not only of each toolmaker's time to determine what proportion of his time is spent on new tooling, subject to tax, or repair, presumably not subject to tax, but also usage records of all incoming raw material.

Very frequently the same material is used for component production, not taxable, and tooling, presumably taxable. This will all add up to our cost. I would also expect that the tax inspectors will have to be employed to check on all our records. Whilst I also deplore all other increases in tax, particularly in the doubling of the capital tax together with the addition of this to corporation tax, I recognize that some increase in revenue is required. However, the singling out of production equipment will only lead to a reduction in investment and force more work south of the border.

To be very brief, Mr. Speaker, I certainly hope the Minister recognized the implications of this tax and for these reasons, I indeed hope that he will join with the leader of the Opposition in voting against this tax.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, there are not too many new points that could be brought up in this particular discussion. However, I shall try to stress some that I think ought to be stressed, particularly with reference to the tax on manufacturing of machinery.

I cannot but help recall the speech of the hon. member for Sudbury, when he grappled with the problems of northern Ontario and the crying need in that particular area for secondary industry. The Prime Minister and the Treasurer almost echoed his words. Therefore, if they agree, as they appear to agree with the statements—or, I should say, the plea—made by the member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha), one would think that perhaps they might even give a financial inducement to people who would settle up north and bring in manufacturing equipment to set up these secondary industries.

But what do they do? They put a tax on it. I have mentioned earlier in this session, Mr. Speaker, the large forgiveness loans that were made to certain corporations, extremely large corporations, whose incomes were in the tens and, in fact, hundreds of million dollars net. It occurred to me that the majority of these loans were in the area known as southern Ontario, the stretch from the Ottawa River right through to Sarnia. But there were very few, I think there were only about five or six out of all of those that were given, that were for northern Ontario. To me it was a sort of sin that not enough consideration was given to the northland and that more industry was not settled in that particular area.

From my point of view, the imposition of this tax is not going to help us to get any more industry up there. In fact, it may hamper it. I find it a deplorable method of raising funds because, to me, it is basically at the expense of the north.

Further, Mr. Speaker, I cannot but help recall what happened in the province of Saskatchewan, because of the fact that the hospitals tax is now being merged, so to speak, with the sales tax.

After the CCF government came into power in Saskatchewan, they had at that time, I believe, a one or a two per cent sales tax. If my memory serves me correctly Mr. Speaker, it was a one per cent sales tax. They immediately changed the name of that tax to the education tax and increased it to three per cent.

A few years later, Mr. Speaker, they changed the name of that tax to a hospital tax and increased it to five per cent. If my memory again serves me well, it ended up being a six per cent tax. I may be incorrect in that the first change of name goes to a hospital tax and subsequently to an education tax. But the fact remains that their justification for raising the taxes was labelling it with a name to tug at the heart strings, so to speak.

I ask myself what devious scheme has this Minister in mind to enable him to increase the sales tax by simply subsequently labelling it with a new name? Are we going, in a year or two, to find that the sales tax has been changed to a hospital tax? And this Minister telling us from now on all the moneys gathered under this new hospital tax is going to go to subsidize OMSIP or HIRB or Ontario Hospital Commission to construct new hospitals? Is he then going to increase it to about seven or eight per cent? Or is he going to change the name to education tax and again increase it to seven or eight per cent and say all this money is now going to be used for education? I do not know, but certainly I am extremely suspicious.

I cannot but recall when the Minister was introducing his Budget and he made the statement that there was not going to be an increase in the sales tax. He was greeted with desk thumping from all the government benches. But then when he stated that the hospital tax was going to be done away with—merged, it was—with the sales tax; and there was going to be an adjustment of the tax, and an increase in revenues was going to be brought about—my goodness there was absolute dead silence. I think the Minister at that time must have thought he was walking through a morgue.

So I am extremely suspicious of the conduct of this government. We on this side have always considered sales tax to be regressive, because it is always the little man who suffers. Just as when they raise the taxes on cigarettes and liquor, which some deem to be vices. There are others in the community who get their only enjoyment out of life in having a cigarette or a drink. Whether we approve of that or not does not make any difference.

Now we are going to find that—we have already—found that we are going to suffer in this regard. I am just wondering what else is going to be brought under sales tax.

For instance I note in this bill, Mr. Speaker, as has already been mentioned by my colleague the hon. member for Essex South (Mr. Paterson), that golf courses are not covered. I notice also that miniature golf courses are not covered. I notice that pinball arcades are not covered. I was sitting here trying to figure in my own mind where the Minister drew the distinction.

First I was of the opinion that the amusements were essentially spectator items, such matters as football games or concerts or the like, where a person is taxed as a spectator. If the person participated himself, like playing golf, he was not taxed. That is the only way I can justify it. Certainly I would consider a pinball arcade a place of amusement, it certainly is in many places. The Minister of Correctional Services says that it is! Maybe it is. The Attorney General does not agree with him, and that is for certain.

I also would just like to express my concern that this sales tax operates under the law of diminishing returns, which is the point the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. T. Reid) was dwelling on, and is going to reduce income to the government not increase it.

There is, Mr. Speaker, one other point I wanted to mention, and that is the tax on hotel accommodation. If there was ever a display of a dog-in-the-manger attitude by any government, it was by this government. I recall when Donald Summerville was the mayor of this city. I had the pleasure of sitting on council with him when Toronto tried to obtain power from this Legislature to impose a tax on hotel accommodation used by transients, and this government said—

An hon. member: They were saving it for themselves!

Mr. Ben: They were saving it for themselves, even though they would not use it.

As far as hotel tax is concerned, I am not going to argue the pros and cons of it, Mr. Speaker, but I think it was mealy-mouthed and dog-in-the-manger for them to deny to the city of Toronto for four years—for five years—the revenue that they are now going to be getting, because it has turned out to be lost revenue. There is no way of getting it back, and I say shame to the government that would adopt such an attitude. I hope the people chuck them out.

Mr. Speaker: Are there any further members who wish to speak to this? Then perhaps the next member would adjourn the debate, it is near the hour of six.

Mr. Deans: I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will resume this debate and go on to the next tax bill on the order paper. Then there are some bills for the committee of the whole House, and we will go eventually to the estimates of The Department of Correctional Services.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): That will be Thursday evening?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Probably!

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

The House adjourned at 6.00 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, MARCH 13, 1969

The House met at 2.30 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Today we have with us in the east gallery students from the Elia Junior High School; Downsview, and Blantyre Public School, Scarborough; and in the west gallery, members of Humber Valley Women's Progressive Conservative Association, from the York West riding. We also have with us in Mr. Speaker's gallery, the members of the Northwestern Ontario Association Chambers of Commerce who come down each year to remind the members of this House of the existence of that great part of Ontario, and I am sure that the members, even if the Ministers are not, are very happy to see them with us today.

Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present to the House the 63rd annual report of the Ontario Municipal Board for the year ended March 31, 1968.

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence from the standing private bills committee presented the committee's tenth report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee begs to report the following bills without amendment:

Bill Pr7, An Act respecting Bobier Convalescent Home.

Bill Pr 13, An Act respecting the City of Kitchener.

Your Committee would recommend that the following Bill, having been withdrawn, be not reported:

Bill Pr4, An Act respecting the Borough of Scarborough.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE PUBLIC FINANCE COMPANIES INVESTMENTS ACT, 1966

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to repeal The Public Finance Companies Investments Act, 1966.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The Act to be repealed requires companies raising money from the public for investment to furnish certain information to the registrar under The Loan and Trust Corporations Act. The necessary information is now furnished and supplied to the department under The Securities Act and the regulations thereunder, and the repeal of this legislation will avoid the duplication of returns by companies involved.

THE CREDIT UNIONS ACT

Hon. Mr. Rowntree moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Credit Unions Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: This might be described as a housekeeping bill. It updates certain sections of the Act to conform with present day operating practice.

THE LOAN AND TRUST CORPORATIONS ACT

Hon. Mr. Rowntree moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Loan and Trust Corporations Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: This amendment, Mr. Speaker, removes the requirement that 90 per cent of the authorized capital stock of the corporation must be subscribed for and paid in prior to increasing of capital stock. However, effective control is not lessened since the provision requiring shareholders' ratification and the assent of the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council are retained.

THE ONTARIO PRODUCERS, PROCESSORS, DISTRIBUTORS AND CONSUMERS FOOD COUNCIL ACT, 1962-1963

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food) moves first reading of bill intituled,

An Act to amend The Ontario Producers, Processors, Distributors and Consumers Food Council Act, 1962-1963.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Stewart, this bill simply provides for remuneration and expenses to the members of the food council.

THE MUNICIPAL ACT

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Municipal Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, this bill would permit officers and employees of municipal corporations be elected as members of a council of that corporation.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Why will it cost Ontario $5 million more than is presently being paid, to carry out the assessment of property in the province?

Would the Minister predict the same increase in cost if the assessment were carried out on a regional basis?

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the additional expenditure of $5 million is required to bring the assessment function in the province to an acceptable standard in a reasonable period of time.

I think by way of background, I might say that the cost to the municipalities in the province at the present time is estimated to be $15 million. The Smith committee recommended really a carrot and stick approach, and our costing of that proposal came to a total cost of some $26.2 million.

We feel we can do it as a province for $20 million which, of course, is cheaper than that which was suggested by the Smith Committee. I think really, what I have said answers the second part of his question.

Mr. Nixon: If I might ask the Minister, Mr. Speaker, inherently why should it cost more? Are you going to need more people to carry out the assessment than there are at present? Why is that so?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Well, I think the hon. member is aware that the function has not moved ahead very quickly. If we are to get on with the job in the next three or four years we are going to have to bring the staff up to strength. Assessment offices have been traditionally understaffed and there have not been enough qualified assessors. They have not been offered enough money, probably by the municipalities that they were working for. We propose to get on with this job and if we are going to do it in a reasonable period of time, three or four or five years, we are going to have to accelerate the pace.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order that I would like to raise at this moment, if you will permit me. I was interested to read in this afternoon's Toronto Daily Star a heading as follows: "Committee Will Urge End of Religion in Schools".

The Prime Minister may recall my having put a question to the Minister of Education two weeks ago, in which I asked him about the report of the MacKay committee. He said he had it in his possession, that it was at the printers and that he would give it to the Legislature when it was convenient.

Well, I do not know whether he has given it to the press. I suppose an enterprising journalist, that is the phrase that is usually used in this connection, has dug it out but the recommendations are here and very important. They are ones that concern this House, I suppose as much as they concern anyone.

I wonder if there is any explanation for the expanding—I would not call it policy—but let us say, the expanding custom that we hear about these important matters from several of the Ministers in the press before we hear about them in this House.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe the Minister is prepared to table it. The reason he did not table it was that he told you there were not enough copies to make them available to the members. Where that report came from I do not know but—

Mr. Nixon: Well the Toronto Star—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: We get lots of leaks in other directions too. I can only assure the leader of the Opposition that it is not the policy of this government to make such a document public although this is done in many other instances in this House. The use of the press by members of this House is not unknown, but all I am saying is that I can assure you that it is not the policy of the government to do this. I suppose the report is in the hands of the committee which drew it up, or in the hands of the staff of that committee, and the report is in the hands of the printer.

Now it may have leaked out from any one of these places but the point is that we cannot table it here until we have a sufficient number of copies to make one available to all members of the Legislature. I rather expected it was going to be done this afternoon, but I do not see the Minister here. Maybe he will be in before the sessions are over.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. leader of the Opposition has a question from yesterday apparently of the Minister of Health. I do not think it has been asked.

Mr. Nixon: Yes, it is a matter of some concern. I felt that the Minister of Health had put me off somewhat the last time I mentioned this, but in the matter of the continuing strike of teachers at the Hamilton district school of nursing, is the Minister making any effort to assist in the solution of the strike through the Ontario Hospital Services Commission? I think budgetary matters are concerned here.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, this is primarily a matter between the hospital and The Department of Labour, but we have advised The Department of Labour that we are ready to help in whatever way we possibly can, both through the department and through the hospital services commission.

Mr. Nixon: Might I ask the Minister if he is prepared to assist, by the provision of funds, to at least meet part of the salary demands, which cannot be met under the present budgeting circumstances controlled by OHSC?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, since I have absolutely no personal knowledge with the issue in dispute, I would not be presumptuous enough to anticipate what might be necessary.

Mr. Nixon: Might I ask the Minister, Mr. Speaker, if he has knowledge of the substantial number of students who are in danger of losing a full year of their education as nurses if this is not resolved immediately?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I have full knowledge of what is at stake.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Thunder Bay has a question of the Prime Minister.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Prime Minister.

Will the Prime Minister prevail upon the Ontario Research Foundation to undertake a study on the feasibility of a steel complex for the processing and manufacturing of steel in northwestern Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware that such a request has ever been made either to the Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Randall), under whose jurisdiction the research council comes, or to the research council itself. I do not know what would be involved. I would be quite happy to take it up with the Minister, and he could consult with the research council to find out whether they feel there is research they could do that might be valuable in this regard. I will speak to him about it, but no request has been made of them to date.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wentworth has a question of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Will the Minister explain the reason for his decision not to make public the result of the inquiry into alleged dumping of acid by Stelco into Hamilton Bay?

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Mr. Speaker, the staff of Ontario Water Resources Commission maintains a continuing surveillance over provincial waters and frequently reports on matters similar to the one raised by the hon. member. These reports are part of the administrative procedures within my responsibility, and I do not think it appropriate that the Legislature should spend time each day on matters of administrative routine within a Minister's responsibility.

I am, of course, always willing to answer specific questions.

Mr. Deans: May I, Mr. Speaker, by way of a supplementary question, enquire of the Minister if he does not feel that the polluting of the water of Hamilton Bay is a public matter, not a private matter for his department?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Polluting the water is a public matter, but reports to the Ministers are private matters.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park has a question of the Minister of Labour.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): Mr. Speaker, is the Canadian Manufacturers Association correct in its confidential March 3, 1969, bulletin, in which it states that the Ontario director of employment standards has requested an individual application from each firm in Ontario that wishes to allow its employees to celebrate Dominion Day on Monday, June 30, this year, instead of the official holiday, which is on Tuesday, July 1?

Will the Minister agree with me that, considering the huge number of companies in Ontario, a tremendous amount of unnecessary paper work will ensue if this requirement is enforced?

And will the Minister avoid this unnecessary work by giving blanket permission?

Hon. D. A. Bales (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in reply to questions from the hon. member, I would say that the bulletin is correct. It reflects accurately the position of the director of The Employment Standards Act, which is in accord with section 2 of the regulations under that Act.

In reference to the second part, the answer is "no." I cannot agree with the member on this point. This will not impose an undue burden on the employers, and my department will be equipped and ready to handle the matter.

The third part: Again the answer is "no." This work is not unnecessary. The possibility of workers suffering from exploitation would be greater if blanket permission were given.

Mr. Shulman: Will the Minister allow a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Yes.

Mr. Shulman: Inasmuch as this was brought to me by a workers' organization, perhaps the Minister would explain how this could cause exploitation if Dominion Day was celebrated on the Monday instead of the Tuesday?

Hon. Mr. Bales: It depends, Mr. Speaker, on the arrangements that are worked out. Normally, if the employee works on July 1 he would receive time and one-half for the work he performed at those rates under the changes in The Employment Standards Act. Under the provision of the regulations some alternative arrangement can be worked out depending upon the individual circumstances for an industry and their employees.

Mr. Shulman: Could the Minister not impose a blanket rule that would save all this work?

Hon. Mr. Bales: No, there are too many individual situations.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Rainy River has a question of the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister planning to establish a township or town at Shebandowan where the Inco mine is located?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, this matter has been before the Cabinet committee on town sites and no decisions have been made as yet.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Will the Minister accept a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Yes.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Is he aware that at the present time the miners in the area are buying the cottages and building houses in the area, and there is going to be another Ear Falls situation pretty soon if some action is not taken?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I thank the member for that bit of information. We are aware of some activity.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sarnia.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): A question of the Minister of Municipal Affairs, in two parts:

1. In view of the continuance of the tax shelter programme, would the Minister consider amending paragraph 6 of regulation 219/68 of The Residential Property Tax Reduction Act, 1968, to afford to tenants reciprocal rights of set-off now enjoyed by landlords?

2. Would the Minister not agree that such reciprocal rights may well lead to an extreme reduction in litigation resulting from such statutes?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, our experience has indicated that the great majority of inquiries by tenants to our information officers in the past have related to eligibility and amount of entitlement. Under the present system officers of my department are in a position to advise tenants of their entitlements and rights.

If the proposal of the hon. member were carried out, many tenants might well take precipitous action and find themselves facing litigation or even eviction over an error in the right or amount of the offset which we really are not in a position to advise them about.

In regard to the second part of the question, the member may well be right. The amount of the present kind of litigation might decrease. However, there would no doubt be an increase in litigation alleging non-payment of rent.

Mr. Bullbrook: I am wondering if the Minister would consider this, in view of his response to my first question. Is the landlord not in the same position—as far as possible litigation at the present time under the regulations—as the tenant might well be if you afforded him this reciprocity?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, the landlord really only has the one right of setoff, that of unpaid rent.

Mr. Bullbrook: I do not think that is really a direct answer, because he is exactly in the same position contractually as the tenant is. That is the entire purpose of the relationship.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Riverdale.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Speaker, I have a series of related questions for the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

1. Is the Minister aware that the corporation of the city of Toronto has applied to the Ontario Municipal Board for approval to issue debentures in order to raise money to begin purchasing properties in the Trefann Court urban renewal area?

2. Is the Minister aware that the city gave evidence at the OMB hearing that it intended to purchase as many properties as it could and that purchases would not be limited to vacant properties and sub-standard properties?

3. Is the Minister aware that on November 6, 1968, the council of the city of Toronto officially withdrew the redevelopment plan approved by council on February 9, 1966, and at the present time has no plan for the area?

4. Is the Minister aware that the Trefann Court Residents Association, representing some 75 per cent of the 77 owner-occupiers, opposed the city's action, maintaining that a redevelopment plan should be developed before any purchases take place, and that they feel this is the only way in which both owners and tenants will be protected?

5. How does the government's policy of citizen participation fit in with this action on the part of the city?

6. Will the Minister exercise the discretion conferred on him by section 20(4) of The Planning Act and withdraw his approval given in January, 1969, under section 20(3) of that Act on the grounds that since the enactment of the city's bylaw number 22827, designating the area of a redevelopment area, on April 14, 1966, the city has made no progress. And will the Minister not grant any further approval until a new bylaw has been enacted by the city council and until a redevelopment plan has been worked out with full citizen participation?

7. If not, why not?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, I think the first thing that should be said in reply to the member's statement is that it should be borne in mind by all members of the House that in urban renewal projects it is the municipality—in this case, Toronto—which is the principal party in the undertaking, rather than the province or for that matter the federal government.

In reply to the first question, yes, I am aware of the applications to the Ontario Municipal Board. In fact, one of our staff was subpoenaed to appear before the board by the solicitor acting for the Trefann Court residents association. As a matter of fact, I understand that there was a subpoena being waved around for the Minister of Municipal Affairs, but he was successful in avoiding it. So it was never served.

In reply to the second question, I was not aware of the particular evidence the city gave. I do not think, in my capacity, that there is any requirement for me to be made aware of it, particularly in view of the initial remarks which I made as to the principal responsibility being with the city. The municipality has the authority to acquire land within the designated area. This authority was secured under section 20(3) of The Planning Act on November 3, 1966.

In reply to the third part of the question, the answer is yes. We were advised by the municipality of this on November 13, 1968. We were also advised that the municipality was preparing a new plan in full consultation with the residents of the area.

My replies to the other parts of the question are:

4. Generally speaking, I am aware of the concerns of this group of people on this point, and also of the different opinions of other people having substantial interests in the area. I have met a number of these groups. My staff have met with them also on other occasions.

5. As far as I know the city is involving the citizens of the area in the preparations of the plans for urban renewal. In terms of provincial policy, I will not recommend financial participation by the province unless I am satisfied that there has been adequate citizen involvement.

6. Based on developments to this point in the area, I am not prepared to withdraw the designation made in November, 1966, and confirmed in January, 1969, in my letter to the municipalities.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York-view.

Mr. Young: I have a question, Mr. Speaker, for the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

How does the Minister reconcile the statement in Budget paper B, page 64, that the provincial take over of the assessment function will represent a saving to municipalities of approximately $15 million, allowing a corresponding reduction of provincial grants, with the Toronto Daily Star report of his speech in Oakville on Tuesday stating that costs of assessment will be shared by regional government and Queen's Park?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, on receiving the hon. member's question I went over the speech referred to, and I am unable to find any reference to a sharing of costs by the province and regional governments and I do not recall making any such statement. If I gave this impression to a reporter it was not intended. I think the words on page 64 stand and that is certainly my impression.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I will send a copy of the report.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I have it.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Niagara Falls has a question of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management.

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management. What consultation took place with the International Joint Commission concerning the stoppage of water flow over the American Falls at Niagara?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, during the past several months detailed consultation has taken place involving the Hydro Electric Power Commission of Ontario, the power authority of the state of New York, the government of the province of Ontario and the state of New York, and the governments of the United States of America and Canada.

Hon. members may be interested to know that the basis of the agreement reached is that the American Falls be de-watered by building a coffer dam, and that the additional flow of water by way of the Horseshoe Falls will be made available for hydroelectric generation. This additional power will be shared equally by the two power authorities and a sum of money contributed by each towards the cost of the work on the American Falls, the amount to be contributed to be in relation to the value of the power produced.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw your attention to question 20 appearing on the order paper. I answered this question in the House. The answer is to be found on page 1433 of Hansard, and I would therefore ask that this be removed from the order paper, and the order be discharged.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I would just like to make some comments about the question of pollution and the changes we anticipate making here in the administration. There is no doubt that in all industrial countries today one of the major problems facing them is the problem of pollution, and pollution abatement—environmental management as it is called in some circles.

While very substantial progress has been and is being made in these fields, the government proposes to make certain organizational changes to strengthen the machinery available to administer expanded or expanding programmes. Accordingly, I wish to familiarize hon. members of changes which are being planned and which will be implemented in the near future.

The present programme related to water and air pollution are administered, for the most part, by The Department of Health and the Ontario Water Resources Commission, although other departments and agencies are involved in these activities in varying degrees. Responsibility for the air pollution abatement programme and for supervision of the disposal of refuse is vested in The Department of Health. The Ontario Water Resources Commission is the principal government agency involved in water supply, sewage treatment and the abatement of water pollution.

Bringing certain of these functions together under one Ministry would result in greater co-ordination and efficiency in the total environmental management programme. Accordingly, it is the intention that legislation will be introduced in this session to accomplish this. The appropriate staff of The Department of Health and of the Ontario Water Resources Commission will be brought directly under the Minister of Energy and Resources Management, thus greatly expanding the functions of that department in the field of environmental management and pollution abatement.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Shulman: You are making it worse.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Just wait for it, wait for it.

It is the government's long-run intention to make the Minister of Energy and Resources Management responsible for all pollution abatement programmes, including air pollution, and, at an opportune time, perhaps, soil pollution. The Minister of Health will, of course retain paramount responsibility for human health and the two departments will collaborate closely.

It is intended that the staff of the Air Pollution Control Service will work in close collaboration with the energy branch of The Department of Energy and Resources Management and that this closer relationship will improve the performance of both the branches. It is also intended that The Damage by Fumes Arbitration Act and the staff involved in the programme under the Minister of Mines will also be transferred to the Minister of Energy and Resources Management and subsequently incorporated in the air pollution control branch.

The Ontario Water Resources Commission in the past has carried out dual functions. On the one hand, it has operated as a quasi-judicial agency, holding public hearings and dealing with such policy consideration as rates. On the other hand, it has dealt with the supervision of a highly technical operating staff specializing in all aspects of water supply and pollution control.

One of the problems that inevitably arises in any such agency with dual roles is the difficulty of acting in an impartial manner when ruling on disagreements or differing points of view as between technical matters and policy considerations. The government proposes to separate and clearly define these two functions. The Ontario Water Resources Commission will continue to be responsible for the holding of public hearings, resolving disputes, and considering rate structures and wherever the public interest is involved in matters of water management and pollution abatement.

This will include such matters as municipal sewage treatment, municipal water supply, regional water or sewage schemes, and industrial pollution. It is intended that the commission will, where necessary, examine witnesses, including appropriate provincial officials and that the public will be encouraged to participate in such hearings to the greatest possible extent.

The operating staff of the commission will be transferred to the civil service and report to the Minister of Energy and Resources Management through the Deputy Minister. In doing so, the staff of the commission, as presently defined, will be working in close collaboration with the staff of the conservation authorities branch and I anticipate that a much closer relationship in water management on a river valley basis will result.

When making this announcement, I would be remiss if I were not to say a word in tribute to the accomplishments of the Ontario Water Resources Commission during the 13 years since it was formed. Its original conception and subsequent development and functions must be regarded as one of the most forward-looking and productive operations ever undertaken by this province. The government's task in establishing the new departmental administration and thus updating the work and relationships of the commission would have been impossible but for the solid basis which has been laid by the commission and its staff.

The government, of course, is of the view that all its functions should be reviewed and scrutinized periodically and that organizational changes should be undertaken where these are desirable to ensure that we are carrying out our responsibilities to the people of Ontario, in the light of changing requirements, as efficiently and expeditiously as possible.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, two matters for clarification if the Premier will permit. If the Ontario Water Resources Commission and its staff is going to become a branch of the Minister's department, will it lose its commission status if they are all employed as public servants?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: No, I think perhaps the member misunderstood me. We are separating the two functions. The commission and all its quasi-judicial and policy-making functions will continue as it has done in the past. But that portion of the staff of the Water Resources Commission—the technical aspect of it; the people who are doing the surveys and planning the plants and operating in many cases, because more and more are they coming into the operation of these plants across the province—will be brought into the department, but the commission will continue to function as a commission.

Mr. Nixon: Two other matters:

How does the Premier explain moving the jurisdiction of the Sulphur Fumes Arbitration Board from the Minister of Mines (Mr. A. F. Lawrence) to the Minister of Health last week and then moving it from the Minister of Health to the Minister of Energy and Resources Management this week?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: It is very, very simple, Mr. Speaker. It was moved from the Minister of Mines to the Minister of Health because the Minister of Health is in charge of all air pollution. Having got the whole field together under the Minister of Health we are now making another move from there to some place else.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The 15th order; resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading of Bill 79, An Act to amend The Retail Sales Tax Act, 1960-1961.

THE RETAIL SALES TAX ACT, 1960-1961

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, yesterday before the adjournment of the House I was going to take a few moments to discuss the situation in regard to the taxing of production machinery.

I am sure that the Minister of Revenue (Mr. White) did not intend to mislead the public in indicating that this was, in effect, a tax from corporations and mining companies. In actual fact this is not going to be that. This tax is going to be taken directly out of the pockets of the consumers of this province.

In the press release that was handed out on the day of the Budget, there were indications that from corporation and mining companies an amount of $105.7 million was to be raised, while from the consumers an amount of $75.3 million was to be raised.

If we take a look at the actual effect on this province—and the economy of this province—of the imposition of this five per cent retail sales tax on production machinery, I am sure the Minister would agree that those figures are not accurate. This $38.2 million should actually have appeared under the heading of “from consumers” as opposed to “from corporation and mining companies”, because there is no doubt that if not all, at least by far the major portion of the $38.2 million, will be passed on from the producer to the consumer.

Mr. G. A. Kerr (Halton West): The same as the corporation tax.

Mr. Deans: Exactly. It is the same, and we must stop this. The unfortunate part, of course, is that it becomes a pyramiding tax.

Mr. J. W. Snow (Halton East): Are you against corporation taxes?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: I would draw to the attention of the members that the proper way to conduct a debate is for the members to address another member through Mr. Speaker, and I would ask that they do that and that the hon. member who now has the floor will proceed with his speech.

Mr. Deans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

What is obviously going to happen is that when this tax is levied on the production machinery manufacturer, he will pass it on to the manufacturer of the finished product. But in passing it on, he will add to it—as is always the case—a percentage for profit, a percentage for administration costs, and so on. Instead of passing on the five per cent he is more likely to pass on five and a half or even six per cent to the next lower level, or the next level up, whichever way you look at it. Then this person, having had to pay that, will add that to the price of the finished product, and the consumer will then have to pay not only more for the finished product but an increasing burden of sales tax on whatever it is he is going to buy.

So what you have done, in effect, is you have gone to the consumer for more money in a very subtle, underhanded way. If you had to raise the money, any honest tax move would have been to go to the people who are going to have to pay and to levy it on them. But, no. This government, in an effort to make it appear for public consumption that they were trying to bring about an equitable tax structure, decided that they would go on the outside and, on the surface, let the consumers of this province, the people who live in the province, feel that they were getting some tax from the corporation level. This is just not the case.

What I would suggest is that if you have to raise this money, read the speech of the hon. member of York South and take something out of the book that he put forward—the many tax areas that we have not yet begun to exploit—and let us move into those, rather than putting an ever-increasing burden on the consumer of this province and rather than hiding behind the gloss, the front, that you put on the budget of last week of attempting to make it appear that you are trying desperately to save the consumer money, when in actual fact you are charging him more—more than you would have done had you levied it directly upon him.

We will oppose this tax; we will oppose any effort to put on the consumers of this province any additional hidden taxes of this kind.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, if I may make a few comments on this tax. I would like to start out by saying that I will not talk at any length, because this has been fairly well hammered out by all members on both sides of the House.

However, I would like to point out that, even though we may derive $38 million from the levy of this tax, there may be an adverse result. It could result in unemployment in certain areas of the province, especially in my area, which has been able to benefit so much by the auto trade pact. A lot of the industry had contemplated expansions and now, with this additional burden—especially if the industry is the type that is fairly marginal—they may have second thoughts on the plant expansion and, as a result, may forego that.

It likewise puts the industries at an unfair competitive advantage with their counterparts across the border. Why should a manufacturer have the product made in the province of Ontario when he can have it made over in the States at a more reasonable figure—and that figure could be the difference between the cost of the production machinery, especially when the runs may not be as great as they would be over in the U.S.

The cost for the production machinery is only going to be passed on, as the hon. member has just mentioned, to the consumer. So you can see this five per cent tax on production machinery will have a multiplier effect. It will have a real multiplier effect; the five per cent may have the effect of increasing unemployment in an area.

The industries in my own community are so concerned over this that they have already started to send communications to the various members. However, the fact is that the government has moved so fast that they have not had time to really get together and organize in a fashion that they could have really expressed their opposition to this tax.

Yesterday the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. T. Reid) made mention of Auto Specialties Manufacturing Company in the city of Windsor, which registered strong objection. He made mention of M.G.M. Brakes Limited in Windsor, which also made strong objection. He mentioned the Automotive Parts Manufacturers Association who likewise have objected. And today the hon. member for Essex South (Mr. Paterson) received a letter from a manufacturer in his riding, S.K.D. Manufacturing Company, which registers very strong objection. One of the paragraphs in the letter reads:

We have been thinking of expanding, but this additional tax on the equipment which we will have to purchase, because it is not available in Canada, will be a serious deterrent to our final approval of any new expansion project.

Mr. Speaker, if the Minister wished to raise $38 million more, I think he could have found better ways of doing it than putting this tax on production machinery.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent): Mr. Speaker, I just want to add a few words about this Bill 79. I do not want to re-echo what has been said many times, but I must say this bill is another blow to the tourist industries of the province of Ontario. I must say that last year, Mr. Speaker, the gas tax was placed on the people of the province of Ontario; also, admission fees to parks have increased, and the fishing licence was placed on the fishermen of the province. Now this year, the same government taxes motel rooms, hotel rooms and also increases the tax on meals ten per cent up to $2.50.

I would say this is another blow to the tourist industries of this province, and I have been contacted quite a number of times because it is a great concern to them. Also I am quite concerned about this tax on manufacturing machinery, which has been brought to the Minister's attention a number of times since this debate has started.

In this province, the government has designated over 200 municipalities as slow growth areas; in my own riding, there are some villages that are designated as slow growth areas. We are making a great effort to encourage industries to come into these places, create work and build these municipalities up. With this tax on manufacturing machinery, they may change their mind and they may reconsider locating in these slow growth areas.

Of course, this five per cent sales tax on manufacturing machinery adds to the spiral of inflation and it goes down and nits the little man, because this machine that is taxed is added on to the finished product.

As my colleague from Windsor-Walkerville has said, this car parts deal means a tremendous thing to the province of Ontario, if we listen to the Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Randall), who outlined to us last year the amount of money derived through that car parts deal. I for one would not want anything to happen. If anything happened to that deal I would say the province of Ontario, and maybe Canada, would be in a very difficult position.

So, Mr. Speaker, I will have to vote against this bill. I think there are other areas where the Minister could have added a tax, if taxes were needed, to get the $38 million.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Windsor West has the floor.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, just to help break the monotony—

An hon. member: You are not capable of that, I can assure you.

Mr. Peacock: No, I was according the Speaker that privilege.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a few brief remarks about three aspects of this bill. The first is that I think the bill should have brought under its head the taxation of tobacco in the province, rather than the Minister bringing in an amendment to The Tobacco Tax Act and continuing that Act in existence. I say this, Mr. Speaker, because under The Retail Sales Tax Act, we can see the impact of the rate of tax upon the wide class of goods that are purchased by consumers, but it is not nearly so visible, not nearly so easily calculated in the case of The Tobacco Tax Act.

I think the Minister has, under The Retail Sales Tax Act, through the use of the differential tax rate, the means of bringing that commodity under the umbrella of this Act, so that it will be treated in the same class as any other taxable good. If he feels that it ought to carry a higher rate of tax, it should be stated clearly in terms of the effective rate of tax, which he could do by use of the differential tax rate.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, the bill represents the cardinal effort of this government to move into an area where the federal government has either vacated some tax room—in this instance the extension of sales tax on to producer goods, the federal government has withdrawn from that area—or where the province can rely on the federal tax itself to accommodate the increases that Ontario wants at the expense of Ottawa and cannot get by voluntary agreement.

It is using within this Act the tax on producer goods and on motel accommodation, both of which can be offset by deductions from the federal corporate income tax, payable by the provincial retail sales tax payers, to arrogate to itself revenues that it could not get by agreement from Ottawa.

Thirdly, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to repeat many of the arguments that have been used by other members to oppose the extension of the retail sales tax to production machinery producer goods, other than to say that the province's target for productivity advance in the coming years is going to be adversely affected by this tax. A target that is already too low if this province is to make the contribution it must make to the achievement of an overall national productivity goal.

It is a goal that must be achieved if our exports are going to continue to advance as they have over the last few years, particularly those exports that are now moving to the top of the list of goods sold abroad by Canada.

Exports in the manufacturing area, automobiles, trucks and parts, moved into the first position, I believe, in the latest period for which the Dominion Bureau of Statistics has reported on Canada's export performance. They are leading the traditional exports of wheat, flour newsprint and timber.

While a great deal of attention has been focused on this particularly buoyant export field, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of other manufacturing areas in our provincial economy which, while they do not enjoy the same large export market or the same high level of efficiency and productivity as the motor vehicle manufacturing industry, stand on the threshold of a movement into wider export markets. And their opportunities to make that move will be inhibited by the imposition of this tax.

There are other industries, Mr. Speaker, which, under the long-term protection of our tariff, have failed to keep up with similar industries in the United States and abroad. And any motivation they may have had to modernize and equip themselves to serve the Canadian market or the Ontario market will also be inhibited by the extension of this tax on to producer goods.

I want to ask the Minister since he has entered on to the taxation of elements of the production process, why he did not extend the retail sales tax to the purchase of all of the other elements in the production process—electricity, natural gas, materials themselves that enter into the production of goods; a tax on the other costs, on payroll costs and, perhaps, on the overhead costs.

He may bring himself to do that but why has he picked out, at this time, that one element of the production process for this kind of discriminatory tax treatment? Why has he picked out solely the producer goods category and excluded or continued the exemption on all of the other elements of the production process?

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, there is simply no rationale for it at all. Had he wanted to raise large amounts of revenue by a tax on the production process, he might well have levied it on the materials themselves. Surely these represent a consumer transaction though not at the retail level.

They are a consumption transaction and might well have been more logically picked out to be taxed rather than the producer goods that are now to be taxed. I want to ask the Minister to state why the producer goods category was selected for the extension of the sales tax and not all of the other elements of the production process.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Niagara Falls.

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, one has to repeat what has already been said to try to make his point in connection with this bill, An Act to amend The Retail Sales Tax Act, simply because it affects the riding that I come from and we are not too pleased about the sales tax on motel and hotel rooms.

I recall, not too many years ago, that the city of Hamilton came to the committee on private bills with a similar bill for the city of Toronto. The private bills committee did not approve of that bill because they did not think a sales tax ought to be imposed on the people of Toronto or the conventioners who come here. It did not make good sense or good business at that time; it did not appear to be the right thing to do.

This new Minister finds himself wrestling—he has a tiger by the tail, I would say. You could almost reverse that and have that, too. This is a serious problem. It affects a lot of small business people in my area, especially the small tourist camp operators, the small motels that operate only for 100 days of the year. Through this bill you have made them taxpayers for the province of Ontario; tax collectors I should say.

This hardly seems to be the right type of an imposition on small business people who have limited staff—to make them bookkeepers for the province of Ontario. I believe that this is a wrong step. It is not going to encourage the tourists to come to Canada, and we need the tourist dollar, we need the American dollars in this province.

Because of the many tourist establishments in the city of Niagara Falls, and many other areas along the border and in the province too, that this bill is going to offend many of our taxpayers. I cannot see how we can possibly support them on this one issue alone. If we were to debate and discuss the many amendments in this bill, Mr. Speaker, we would be here for three days.

But I say to you, in no uncertain terms, that the people of Niagara Falls will be contacting this Minister and telling this government that the time has come when they should take into consideration the people affected in this particular type of business before they pass legislation such as this.

This bill is an imposition on people who can hardly bear the load, and I do not think it makes for good public relations. It also does not make for good business.

There is a meeting this evening, Mr. Speaker, pertaining to this very Act, in the city of Niagara Falls, and I will be there. They are not at all happy with this government and I am sure this was impressed upon the Minister. He has many establishments in his city that look to the tourists who come into London. I think he has done a great injustice to the travelling public of the province of Ontario; he is going to discourage many of them from coming to this particular area for that purpose.

Someone made a statement in connection with this bill saying that it was collusion between the province of Quebec and the province of Ontario. Both provinces want to impose a similar tax so that no matter where people go, the governments will get it. But I can only say that when the election rolls around they are going to get it right in the neck. The public is not going to stand for it.

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside): Mr. Speaker, I wish to register my opposition to this Bill 79, especially as it affects the taxing of production machinery.

If this were merely a squabble between the provincial and the federal tax collectors, I and most other taxpayers just could not care less, but this is more than an academic matter. It may affect everybody in the automotive parts industry, and their families as well.

Recently, exports of automotive parts have increased in a very encouraging fashion because Canadian production capabilities have enabled us to compete successfully with the American parts manufacturers. A tax on production machinery either will inhibit purchases of new and superior machinery or will increase the selling price of the product.

Because our American competitors are not being subjected to such taxes, they will obviously be able to quote better prices for their products, causing Ontario to accept a smaller share of the market. Even a small cut-back on sales would reduce production and employment, increase welfare payments, reduce income tax receipts and reduce purchases of consumer goods and would offset a part, perhaps even a large part of the province's financial gain through this tax.

If the Minister of Revenue's hope for $38 million income from a tax on production machinery is realized, there would probably be a corresponding loss of about $20 million in federal and provincial corporation taxes, of which Ontario's share would be about $6 million and the federal government's share about $14 million. This is based on the supposition that no decrease in sales of production machinery would result and that the sales and export of automobile parts would not be reduced.

If, however, Mr. Speaker, there should be a significant loss of exports, then the net advantage to the province might be quite small indeed. For that reason among others I must oppose this bill.

Mr. Speaker: Is there any other member who wishes to speak to this bill before the Minister?

The hon. member for Riverdale.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Speaker, I rise to reinforce, to the best of my ability, the statements which have been made by many other members on the Opposition benches in opposition to this bill which the Minister of Revenue has brought in.

But it is much more fundamental than that because it is the first illustration that we have had, in specific terms, of the end of concern of this government for the whole structure of the federal system of government in Canada. I charge this government with a deliberate scuttling of the long-drawn-out, difficult, awkward, tedious discussions which have led, in the international field, to the decisions of the Kennedy Round on the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

Let me just put this clearly on the record for the Minister. What we are talking about, Mr. Speaker, is the removal of the exemption which appears in paragraph 38 of section 5 of The Retail Sales Tax Act and, in substantially the same language, has existed from the time this tax was originally imposed in 1960 or 1961. The exact wording of that exemption at the present time is:

Machinery and apparatus and parts thereof as defined by the Treasurer that in his opinion are to be used by the purchaser thereof directly in the process of manufacture or production of tangible personal property for sale or use.

When the Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton) introduced this proposed tax change in the province, what did he say? We have only to look at page 27 of the Treasurer's statement on the introduction of the Budget and we find a statement which can be only categorized as fatuous, meaningless and administratively wrong. I quote from page 27 the following from the Treasurer's report.

The second aspect of retail sales taxation concerns the existing schedule of exemptions. Again, we have studied this area thoroughly. We have reviewed the practices in other jurisdictions—

And I assume he means by "other jurisdictions" the federal jurisdiction, the jurisdiction of the federal government of Canada——and examined the fairness of various options in terms of the overall equitable tax structure which we hope to develop.

I state in parenthesis that the Treasurer refused to disclose what the so-called comprehensive range of options which were presented to him in any of the areas related to tax changes, let alone in relation to this particular tax change. And the Treasurer goes on:

As a result I now propose to remove the existing exemptions for machinery and equipment used in the production of goods and the provision of taxable services. The existing exemption on machinery for use in farm production will be continued.

I am quite aware that the taxation of production machinery is a major move by this government, but I hope to explain why, after much consideration, we have decided to do so.

We all waited with great expectation for the Treasurer to give the reason, and what what was his reason?

We feel that the withdrawal of this exemption will remove a substantial grey area of doubt and administrative inconvenience both for the government and the private sector. We also consider this extension of the tax base a fair and equitable one.

And he gave no reasons for that expression of opinion on his part.

As you will realize this additional tax on corporations will become an allowable expense under corporation income tax, which is automatically shared by the federal and provincial governments to the extent of some 40 per cent by the federal government and 12 per cent by the Ontario government.

As my colleague the hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside has said, if it were only that kind of a dispute we would not be terribly interested in the problem——which is automatically shared by the federal and provincial governments to the extent of some 40 per cent by the federal government and 12 per cent by the Ontario government. The effective date for the removal of the exemption will be April 1, 1969. The tax will apply to all deliveries on or after that date. The expected yield in the next fiscal year is estimated at about $38 million.

The only reason, Mr. Speaker, that the Treasurer gave in substance, was this statement about removing a substantial grey area of doubt and administrative inconvenience both for the government and the private sector. Well, the Minister, Mr. Speaker, is well aware of the purpose of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. He is well aware of the great expectations which the Kennedy Round opened, for the freeing of international trade. He was also well aware, or should have been aware, of the extremely difficult problems which were involved in negotiating tariff decreases in the international markets, by the countries which are concerned about international trade.

The removal of those barriers after those lengthy negotiations was finally achieved. And what happens? In comes the Treasurer of Ontario to take up the whole of the benefits which the government of Canada had tediously worked out in order to improve the efficiency of the industrial complex of Canada and particularly of this province. In order to allow this province to have the advantages of reduced costs for machinery which is becoming more and more complex, which is subject to a high degree of obsolescence, and which is an essential part of the rationalization of the Canadian economy, so that the Canadian economy can stand on its own feet and compete successfully in the internal market of Canada and in the foreign markets.

This is but one example of this government's absolute insistence that the province of Ontario will continue to be nothing but a branch plant economy. There is no question whatsoever that this government is not concerned about improving the industrial efficiency of the province of Ontario. It has immediately levied an additional five per cent tax when it should have been moving in every way possible to facilitate not only the import of modern equipment into Canada for the purpose of improving its productive capacity, but also to stimulate the development in Canada of the machinery production industry, to enable it to become (a) more efficient, (b) up-to-date in terms of the technological developments and the rapid technological change which is taking place, and (c) to be rapidly and effectively able to deal with the rapid obsolescence of machinery in a rapidly changing society.

Let me just quote, not a particular view on the topic, just an explanatory statement of what the government of Canada had attempted to do in this field. This was a statement that was made some time ago, and I quote, Mr. Speaker, from the monthly review of the Bank of Nova Scotia, which is about as sophisticated a regular statement on the affairs affecting the economy of this country as is published regularly in Canada.

It is dated April 1968, and the substance of the remarks should certainly have been available to the task force which was working out the budgetary changes that were going to take place, and it should certainly have been in the mind of the Minister of Revenue, who was one of the persons with whom the task force directly consulted in working out, and I quote again, "the so-called comprehensive range of options which were open to this government."

And I am going to quote, Mr. Speaker, at some length, because it is absolutely essential that this be documented and brought home to this government. I substantiate, with this document and with my other comments, the charge that I have made against this government, regardless of whatever flow there may have been of concern about the confederation in this country up to and for a very short period following the Confederation of Tomorrow Conference and which has now ebbed to the point where this little autarchic empire which this government believes it is building in the province of Ontario, is going to result in the kind of high cost, inefficient, industrial plant which could only be attributed to the modern version of a feudal state.

Mr. Speaker, the review to which I have referred is explanatory of the government of Canada's activities in this field. It had this to say—and I do not intend to quote the whole of it, but the pertinent parts relating to this particular topic:

The first of the Canadian tariff cuts agreed to as part of the Kennedy Round, came into effect at January 1 this year pending parliamentary approval.

That was referring to January 1, 1968. And I might just interpose that parliamentary approval had to be subsequently obtained through the new government which came into office in Ottawa in June of last year.

Such approval will now have to be sought in the next Parliament, but the initial cuts have been confirmed by order-in-council. The most important aspect of the new tariff changes was the introduction of an entirely new programme for machinery used by manufacturing and service industries, including first a general lowering of rates, and secondly, provision for the full remission of duties when the machinery is not available from production in Canada. In introducing this particular programme, the Canadian government was seeking to achieve a significant reduction in capital equipment costs, and thereby to encourage more efficient and competitive industrial development in this country.

As a further aid to this objective it was also possible for the Canadian government to use the overall reduction in machinery tariffs, in substantial payment for tariff concessions being made by other countries.

It goes on:

The Kennedy Round agreement and its introduction should provide substantial potential benefits for Canadian industry. These benefits, in turn, should complement very closely a number of other measures which the federal government has undertaken in recent years to foster a stronger industrial base.

Mr. Speaker, I will skip a portion of the review, but one of the quotations is:

The Canadian authorities gave major emphasis in these negotiations to tariff cuts which would lower costs, particularly for machinery and equipment.

It refers to the obvious fact that any change in tariff structure requires an adjustment of industry to the change in that tariff, but it goes on to say:

An essential part of this process of adjustment and of meeting the challenge of changing technology is the increasing use of more complex and costly equipment. The new machinery programme to which we have now turned should assist such technological change and also facilitate a general lowering of industrial costs.

Most countries have recognized in their tariff arrangements the importance to industry of obtaining the best equipment at a reasonable cost. In addition because of the highly specialized character of machinery development, and the fact that much of it tends to flow out of new technological progress, most countries must depend to a considerable degree on imports.

It then goes on, Mr. Speaker, to make some further comments and states:

Under the new programme which came into effect on January 1, 1968, duties on a broad range of machinery not available from production in Canada will be completely remitted.

Protection is still provided for domestic machinery producers but at somewhat lower rates. At the same time the application of tariffs has been made more flexible. The programme involves regrouping a number of tariff items under one heading covering the major share of machinery used by Canadian manufacturing and service industries.

Agricultural machinery, which accounts for around 28 per cent of total machinery imports is not included—because it moves freely in any event—nor are certain other types of machinery for particular end uses, accounting for a further 27 per cent.

I emphasize, Mr. Speaker:

The remaining 45 per cent of imports, however, covers a very broad range, including general purpose machinery; construction equipment, such as power cranes; materials handling equipment; metal working machinery, such as machine tools, drills, and so on; control equipment, and various types of special industrial machinery, as for example, pulp and paper machinery and such service industry equipment as laundry, dry cleaning and vending machines.

Tariffs under the new heading are now 2.5 per cent British preferential and 15 per cent most favoured nations, with provision for remission of duty when this is in the public interest and the machinery imported is not available from production in Canada. This compares with previous rates on most machinery now coming under the new programme of ten per cent British preferential, and 22.5 per cent most favoured nations, for machinery of a class or kind made in Canada, and a free British preferential and 7.5 per cent most favoured nations for that ruled not made in Canada.

Then, Mr. Speaker, it goes on to refer to the administrative changes the federal government instituted in order to provide for the working out of the details of this substantial tariff change, and points out that the federal government established a machinery and equipment advisory board to make certain that the industrial corporations in the province and in Canada would be able to be informed and to have the full advantage of the changes in the rates which were affected as a result of these negotiations. It goes on to say:

The more flexible and pragmatic approach under the new programme is expected to bring definite benefits to both users and producers of machinery.

Along with the change in administrative approach, the other key aspect of the new programme is that it involves an overall reduction in tariffs on imported machinery. To indicate what this means, the new tariff item covers annual imports which ran close to $700 million in 1966 out of total machinery imports of over $1.5 billion. By far the largest came from the most favoured nations countries. It is expected that over half of the machinery included in the new item will qualify for remission and thus come in free of duty.

In recent years, between 60 and 65 per cent of the machinery now coming under the programme was designated as a class or kind not made in Canada. For much of the most favoured nations imports, the duty has dropped from 22.5 per cent to 15 per cent, thus—

And I emphasize this, Mr. Speaker——the average rate of duty for all imports is expected to be around six per cent to seven per cent, compared with previous average incidence of about 12.5 per cent.

I emphasize again:

Altogether it is estimated that for purchasers of imported machinery, this will mean a reduction in machinery costs of at least $45 million per annum. The new machinery programme, of course, has important implications for the Canadian producers of such capital equipment. On the one hand, there will be a number of benefits, not least the fact that duties will apply as soon as production capability is available in this country. On the other hand, the degree of tariff protection, though remaining substantial, has been considerably reduced and—

I emphasize again, Mr. Speaker——will force a downward adjustment in prices of Canadian machinery in cases where full advantage has been taken of the previously higher rates.

Meanwhile, the tariffs which other countries apply on their imports of machinery will gradually be coming down, and this should open up at least some new export opportunities. The international market for machinery, however, is highly competitive, and the Canadian industry thus faces a major challenge in adjusting to the new conditions.

Not surprisingly, the greatest strength generally is found in those parts of the industry—that is the machinery producing industry—producing for resource and primary industries, notably pulp and paper, mining and electric power.

On the other hand, Canada relies on imports for almost its entire supply of textile machinery and for a major share of the machinery used in chemical processing. Its machine tool industry also is very small. Coming in between are certain types of general purpose machinery, materials, handling equipment and packaging facilities.

Mr. Speaker, I think we here are entitled to know in the Minister's reply on the second reading of this bill, which includes this exemption, what the range of options were that were presented in this field, and of which he must be quite privy. We are entitled to know—and I notice, of course, as is the custom, that none of the other Ministers affected by these matters ever participates in the debate—what the Minister of Trade and Development believes is the effect of the movement by this government into what they obviously consider to be a little private vacuum into which they can move with great expedition.

I would like to know whether or not there was any consideration or consultation—the much-vaunted desire by this government for cooperative consultation with the federal government—or how much consultation took place with the federal government on the question of the introduction of the five per cent tax, which was going to vitiate for practical purposes the 6.5 per cent reduction in tariff that was achieved through the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade in the Kennedy Round.

I want to know where this fits in this strange world in which this government can speak in platitudes about its concern for Confederation. But, as the government of the province that has the major part of the industrial machinery and the industrial complex of Canada at the present time, it persists in making certain that this government will become nothing but an adjunct of a policy of continentalism, which will so intermesh this economy with the American economy that we will be inextricably bound and unable to extract ourselves from it.

I want to know from the Minister how he can possibly justify imposing this additional burden, as the member for Windsor West said in his remarks, upon the industrial manufacturing and service industries of this province, which play a major part, a significant part—and in the eyes of this government, the sole part—in increasing the productivity of the province of Ontario and providing for that much-wanted increase in the gross provincial product, of which this government takes pride.

Mr. Speaker, I want the Minister to tell us why this government, in terms of the productive capacity of this province, always settles for second best. Why does the government persist in the view that the capacity of this province is to provide for a growth rate of 4.5 per cent, when the government well knows that the Confederation requires an annual rate of growth of 4.5 per cent. Yet, this heartland of the ability of this country to increase its productivity, to increase its ability to provide for the services of the society, which we all need and expect, insists that this province can only achieve 4.5 per cent rate. And it makes a point of imposing this kind of tax, which will depress this economy and will prohibit it from both flourishing within its present context—adapting itself to the necessary changes in technology which are inherent in the modern equipment and machinery which is required—and which will make certain that the province of Ontario remains the preserve of the parent companies to which the Minister of Trade and Development—obviously with the agreement of all his colleagues and obviously with the agreement of the Treasurer and the Minister of Revenue—believes is the only fate that we can have here for the economic base of the province of Ontario.

I repeat, I charge that the members of this government stand stripped of all the platitudes, of all the soothsaying, of all the mythology which they have tried to create in this province that they are concerned about the federation. They are not concerned about the federation. They are concerned about their own petty little empire. They are concerned about perpetuating the second rate in this province. I say to the Minister, Mr. Speaker, that if he has any sense, if he has any judgment, if he has any wisdom, he will reverse the decision to impose this tax. And I say to him, Mr. Speaker, that if he does not, this amongst other things will be one of the basic and fundamental ingredients as to why this government and its tenure in office will come to an end.

Mr. Speaker, there will be some who say “How can one possibly say this about the Tory government? After all, this change was only introduced as the Treasurer said, “to eliminate”—if I can now find the page—“a substantial grey area of doubt and administrative inconvenience both for the government and the private sector.” Well, if that was the option open to the Minister then I think he had better give serious consideration to changing the advice which he receives, to face up to the implications and to obligations which this government has, not only to the people of the province of Ontario but in its much vaunted concern about the continuance of the federation.

I simply end up, Mr. Speaker, I will repeat it on other occasions—I have used it before and I will repeat it again—Harold Innes, in a brilliant essay about the economic history of Ontario, ended up with these words:

The strength of Ontario measures the strength and the weakness of the federation. An empire has its obligations as well as its opportunities.

Mr. Speaker, I demand, we here demand, and I am quite certain the members of the Liberal caucus demand—and I am also quite certain that the measure of the number of people who have spoken on this side of the House on this item, must reflect a very substantial concern which lies in the hearts and in the minds of the backbenchers of the Tory party—that the government withdraw this tax.

Otherwise, it stands condemned, as I say, to scuttling the long-drawn-out tedious, difficult negotiations for the reduction in tariffs which would have been undertaken whether there were a Liberal government at Ottawa, whether it were a Conservative government at Ottawa, or whether it were a New Democratic Party government at Ottawa, for the purpose of making certain that we could have, in this province, a modern, efficient, effective, industrial enterprise that would permit us to begin to achieve so many of the things which this Tory government for many years has denied to us and denied to the people of the province of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: Is there any other member who wishes to speak to this bill? The hon. Minister.

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of Revenue): Well, Mr. Speaker, I have listened with very great interest to some of the comments and criticisms and evaluations of the measures contained in this particular taxing bill, and with your permission I am going to go through them chronologically and attempt to meet the points of criticism that have been offered.

I was interested, as one might expect, to hear the Liberal members speak about the regressivity of taxes on snowmobiles and cigarettes and other items which we consider to be discretionary purchases, and as a matter of fact, a form of luxury purchase. I did explain in the debate on the tobacco tax bill that this is a misuse of the word regressivity and the misuse that we witnessed in the debate yesterday was compounded when the hon. member for Kitchener (Mr. Breithaupt) got up and talked about the regressivity of taxing snowmobiles, and so on.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): He was quoting the Smith report. Does the Minister not accept anything they say?

Hon. Mr. White: Now, sales taxes as such are regressive—

Mr. J. R. Breithaupt (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. My comments had nothing to do with snowmobiles at all. My comments dealt only with the fact that certain taxes were being imposed in certain areas; it so happens that gasoline for snowmobiles is one, and I have no quarrel with the imposition of that. I was not referring to snowmobiles.

Hon. Mr. White: I made a note of it at the time, Mr. Speaker, and I think Hansard will show that I am right.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: Now, dealing with the regressive or progressive nature of sales taxes: They certainly are regressive if they are applied evenly and without credit rebate on all goods, particularly essential goods. The sales tax becomes reasonably progressive if there is a wide area of exemption for food and children's clothing and so on. It can be made more perfectly progressive by using credits instead of exemptions. That is a point that the select committee dealt with, and one that will undoubtedly be considered very carefully in the future. As a matter of fact, we go part way towards that by attempting to broaden the base of the sales tax. The Treasurer has also forecast that an effort will be made to make sales taxes even more progressive by gearing them to a personal income tax, whether that should be collected by the federal government or by the province.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Production machinery is regressive enough.

Hon. Mr. White: Well, I will be dealing with that—just a minute now, do not say that too quickly—I will be dealing with that in a minute.

The next speaker dealt with the room tax, so-called—the five per cent sales tax on transient accommodation—and my notes indicate that he referred to the idea of having reached the point of diminishing returns. I think this is incorrect.

In November, I think it was, the Ontario Chamber of Commerce came before Cabinet and they urged us not to impose this particular tax. They cited some stories—shall I say some illustrative reports—that were intended to prove that such a tax would bear very heavily on their industry. That same month, strangely enough, there was a meeting of directors of retail sales tax from all over Canada, and I asked the representative from Quebec if there had been any decrease in tourist business in that province since the imposition of the retail sales tax on hotel rooms. He said there had not been, that there had been a regular progressive increase in the industry which was not interrupted by the imposition of the tax. He did point out that the high figure in 1967 was sometimes compared unjustly with the more normal year of 1968. If that extraordinary year of Expo were removed, then there has not been any setback to the industry as a result of this tax.

At any rate, I did say to the Ontario Chamber of Commerce and to the newly elected president of the hotel association, "If you can marshal statistical evidence to the contrary, we would be very glad to have it, because no such evidence has been forthcoming to date."

I was rather hoping, as a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, that there would be a more rigorous presentation from some members opposite, particularly those who specialize to a degree in economics. But no such rigorous presentation was forthcoming.

Mr. Nixon: I have not heard anything of significant rebuttal from the Minister.

Hon. Mr. White: Now we find a variety of criticism coming from the opposite side dealing with the removal of the exemption of the sales tax on certain classes of production machinery, which, by the way, constitute only four-elevenths of all production machinery acquired. In other words, in order to get the exemption in the past, the item had to enter directly and immediately into the production of goods. And so, if you put a conveyor track around your plant, that has always been taxable—and, in the past, seven-elevenths of all such equipment was taxable.

Mr. Nixon: The Smith committee said they should be exempt too.

Hon. Mr. White: This tax simply eliminates the other four-elevenths. I was hoping, Mr. Speaker, that some effort might be made by the hon. member for Scarborough East to quantify the effect of this, as I myself have done.

Mr. Peacock: The Minister has the staff.

Hon. Mr. White: We took total sales of manufactured goods produced in this province as a proportion of capital, and we found that for every $110,000 worth of annual investment in machinery and equipment, annual sales amounted to $1 million. If one deducts the seven-elevenths already taxable, this leaves the value of newly taxable machinery and equipment in 1969-70 at $40,000. This is for every $1 million in sales. The sales tax—the five per cent on $40,000—amounts to $2,000 for every $1 million of annual sales, you understand. The amount of the sales tax depreciated on a five-year straight line basis would be $400 in the first year, the reduction in corporate income tax due to the depreciated sales tax component of the price of production machinery, is $.52 \times $400$ or $208, leaving a net additional cost of $192. This $192 to $1 million in sales works out to one-fiftieth of one per cent.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Who did that for the Minister? Who compiled it?

Hon. Mr. White: I prepared the illustration, and an economist in the Treasury department put in the figures for the province of Ontario.

Mr. Lewis: Maybe the Minister would like to share some of that information with the Opposition.

Hon. Mr. White: Share what? It took only about five minutes. What is the member talking about? I am sharing it with the members now. It is the kind of a thing I should have thought you might have attempted.

Mr. Nixon: It is not very good, anyway.

Hon. Mr. White: In other words, Mr. Speaker, if all of the increase in the cost of this tax were put over onto the consumer, it would be less than one-fiftieth of one per cent. But, of course, all will not be passed on.

Mr. Deans: More than that will be passed on.

Hon. Mr. White: Some significant proportion, in certain industries at any rate, will rest with the owners of capital. That is the reason my hon. friends, the members from Windsor and Essex county are getting a flurry of letters from boards of directors and managers, because some portion of the total cost will rest with the owners of capital. So the one-fiftieth or one per cent is very much higher, I suspect, than the actual case will be. If this rests evenly with the owners of capital and with the consumers, then the proportion will be about 1/100th of one per cent.

The hon. members opposite have taken what I would consider to be a very extreme stand, having in mind that the amount of additional tax being realized is very small, starting with $38 million from the withdrawal of the exemptions on the four-elevenths of production equipment and machinery, which was previously not taxable, and $13 million from the extension of the sales tax to hotel rooms. That total of $51 million, must be decreased by about one million dollars, which is the decrease in our own provincial corporation income tax returns. You will see that there is a lag in the decrease in the corporation tax because, while the sales tax comes down in the year of acquisition, the decrease in the corporation tax is spread through the subsequent fiscal years as depreciation is claimed.

The member for Riverdale, who was not interested enough to remain for this debate—

Mr. Peacock: He will be right back.

Hon. Mr. White: —asked what the options were. Well, every possible alternative was considered. To get the same $50 million would have necessitated a two percentage point increase in personal income tax. I would be glad to know if the members of the NDP would have urged that course of action. Or, alternatively, it would necessitate a two-point increase in the corporation tax, and I am wondering if the members of the Liberal caucus would urge that course of action, having in mind that our gross receipts are substantially more than the net cost to the industry.

The automotive industry is being particularly aggressive in this matter, I would judge, because of the submissions that have been received by my hon. friends opposite, and we ourselves. We think that this tax will not impede the very great progress that those aggressive and able business men have made, as evidenced by the percentage increase in automobile exports, which were up 50 per cent during 1968 versus 1967. Incidentally, the exportation of vehicles only was 33 per cent, and so it will be seen that the exports of parts was considerably more than the 50 per cent, and perhaps 70 or 80 per cent. It is a computation I have not made. So we think that this will not be a serious inhibition to their continued progress.

Mr. Speaker, this production tax has been in effect for years in the other manufacturing provinces of Canada. I am surprised that was not mentioned too. For instance, it has been in effect in British Columbia since 1958, where production machinery of all sorts is taxable, and where consumables are also taxable.

In Saskatchewan, it was first effective about 1934, although it may have been turned over on a tax-rental basis for some years during wartime. In that province, where the tax has been in existence for, one might say, decades, all production machinery is taxable. Consumables are taxable, and in the province of Quebec, where the tax has been in effect for years, production machinery is partially taxable. The eight per cent applies to everything acquired. The proportion of products shipped out of the province of Quebec is used to reclaim a portion of the tax paid. I tried without success to get the figures, and I think they are not available.

My own educated opinion is that no more than three-eighths of their product will be exported. Therefore, the net tax chargeable to Quebec acquisitions will be five per cent, or perhaps a little more; certainly I think not less than the net tax here in Ontario. They also apply the tax to catalysts, and to consumables.

These four provinces—British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Quebec and Ontario—account for 90 per cent of the production of manufactured goods in these provinces.

Mr. Lawlor: Have you read John Due on Quebec? In his "Provincial Sales Tax" he just riddles it as slowing down economy growth.

An hon. member: Is the member quoting Nova Scotia again?

Hon. Mr. White: Now, just a minute.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Mines): What else did the bank letter say?

Hon. Mr. White: I have the figures here, Mr. Speaker, showing the proportion of manufactured goods in each of these provinces. Ontario accounts for 51.9 per cent of all the manufactured goods in Canada; Quebec accounts for 28.4; British Columbia 8.3, and Saskatchewan about one per cent. This totals approximately 90 per cent. In other words, the withdrawal of this particular exemption on four-elevenths of the production equipment and machinery in this province will put us in the same position as the other manufacturing provinces of Canada. In my opinion this will have no adverse effect so far as our domestic competitive position is concerned. I will deal with the international aspect a little later.

At any rate we have had some number of critics say that all of this tax would bear on the consumer because it would all be passed on. I have pointed out to you that if this were, in fact the case, the increase would be less than one-fiftieth of one per cent.

We have had other members say, however, that suppliers and manufacturers of one kind or another will find it impossible to have this passed along to their customers, and therefore their growth will be inhibited. I think the member for Lakeshore was suggesting that a minute ago.

Mr. Peacock: Do you think General Motors is going to accept this price increase?

Hon. Mr. White: Well, you cannot have it both ways, can you? You cannot have it both ways in aggregate. In point of fact, the proportion of this particular increase which will be passed on will depend on the characteristics of the industry. I should think that the automobile companies themselves will pass on virtually all of the cost which comes to them as a result of this increase because that is an "oligopolistic" market, over which they have very considerable control over their prices. On the other hand it may be—

Mr. Lewis: How much will it mean on the price of a car?

Hon. Mr. White: On the other hand the automotive parts suppliers are selling into a "monopsonistic" market, and they will have to absorb a proportion, I suppose, of the tax.

Mr. Lewis: You are saying that you have just increased car prices; that is what you are saying?

Hon. Mr. White: No, I am not saying that at all. The hon. members, including your seat-mate, have pointed out that some number of companies in the industry will not be able to pass the tax on.

Mr. Lewis: Sure, GM will not accept the tax that is passed on with supplies.

Hon. Mr. White: Whatever proportion is not passed on because of the "monopsonistic" characteristics of the automobile industry itself, obviously will not be passed on to the consumer, but will be left with the owners of capital in the supplier enterprises.

Mr. Lewis: But where it can be passed on, it will be.

Hon. Mr. White: Where it can be, it will be. I am not going to argue economics with you, if you want a lesson turn to your seat-mate.

Mr. Lewis: You just said we—

Hon. Mr. White: I said if all the costs were paid out it would be less than one-fiftieth of one per cent, but obviously this is not going to happen.

References were made to the pyramiding of this tax, the idea being that if you increase a particular element of cost by, let us say, $1, at some future stage the price to the consumer will be something more than that $1. In point of fact, if there is an increase in labour costs, corporations I think very often take the opportunity of moving their prices forward to accommodate that labour increase, or the increase in costs of raw materials, or the increase perhaps in taxes in the increased return to their own shareholders.

But, certainly, in a market where competitive forces are at work, the increase in cost of $1 here will not necessarily result in the increase of the sale price in the amount of $1. Now, I do not mind going into that in greater detail, I mean there is a great deal more that can be said but I suspect that will do, at least for the moment.

I have given very great consideration to this aspect and I have come to the conclusion that the final price will increase by no more than the increase in this particular cost. I go beyond that and say that the increase in this particular cost is in no way different than the increase in any other cost, whether that be a labour rate increase, or an increase in corporation tax. So to have some member of the NDP arguing in favour of other additional corporation income tax, and against this particular tax makes no sense at all in my opinion.

Mr. Lewis: It is argued in the context of the redistribution of income.

Hon. Mr. White: In the past, as a matter of fact, there have been certain inherent inequities, because large numbers of enterprises in this province have always had to pay the tax on the production equipment and machinery which they have acquired. As I mentioned earlier, we have been collecting the tax on seven-elevenths of all the production machinery and equipment acquired. So wholesalers, and others, have paid this tax on everything they have bought for their plants. In spreading this on to the other four-elevenths, it not only greatly simplifies the administration, it not only greatly reduces the administrative costs for ourselves and for the taxpayer, but I think it makes more equitable the tax which has applied in the past to a wide variety of production equipment, and machinery.

The hon. member for Lakeshore gave a lengthy speech which I enjoyed listening to and which was helpful in some regards. I have dealt with several of these items, and I would now like to deal with several additional matters which he mentioned. He dealt at some length with the anomalies in the exemptions which had been provided in The Hospital Tax Act. He also pointed out that these exemptions were coming into The Retail Sales Tax Act.

But as I spelled out in my opening remarks in this debate yesterday, this is for a transitional period and these exemptions are going to be eliminated during the next 12 months and not later than March 31, 1970.

We did not want to, and in fact, we could not, withdraw the exemptions immediately. To give one example, the Stratford Shakespearean Theatre has had its tickets printed, its brochures printed, ticket agents throughout North America provided with prices, and such like, for many weeks. For us now to say, this sales tax applies to all sales after April 1 would have been tremendously disruptive and not at all fair.

By the same token it was thought unwise to set a date in the fall, for instance, because winter fairs and fall fairs are making their plans now. A wide variety of benevolent organizations have made plans for more ambitious undertakings and we did not want to interfere with that. For that reason we are dealing with each of these exemptions separately in the next 12 months with the objective of eliminating all such eruptions by the end of March next year.

That will meet the recommendation of the Smith committee and the select committee. And, of course, those meritorious organizations which require and deserve public support can be given grants and these grants can be subjected to the scrutiny of legislators and the scrutiny of the public at large.

The member for Lakeshore questioned if the Minister had the power to exempt these particular groups of taxpayers, and I would like to read a legal opinion that I have acquired. I draw your attention to the following provisions of The Retail Sales Tax Act, section 39, subsection 1:

For the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this Act, according to their true intent and of supplying any deficiency therein, the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council may make such regulations as are considered necessary and advisable.

Subsection 2:

Without limiting the generality of subsection 1, the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council may make regulations—

This is paragraph f.

—providing for relaxing the strictness of this Act relative to the incidence or collection of tax hereunder in special circumstances where, without relaxation, inconvenience or hardship might result, including cases involving the purchase of tangible personal property at bazaars and rummage sales.

I would also draw your attention to section 9 of The Department of Revenue Act, which provides for the remission of tax under special circumstances.

My hon. friend quoted, or rather misquoted or misinterpreted Mr. Justice McRuer. Mr. Justice McRuer did not say that the Minister should not have these discretionary powers. But he did say that the Minister should be fully responsible for the exercise of discretionary powers in the matter of tax forgiveness or tax exemption, and that he should not be able to thrust this responsibility onwards to a judge, or somebody else, standing at some distance from the Legislature.

As a matter of fact, I was surprised and very interested in the enthusiastic support that this proposition got from legislators with whom I discussed the matter, and I came to the conclusion that even the Opposition wanted to see the Minister with the power and the responsibility so that they could call upon that Minister to stand up and defend his actions.

Mr. Lawlor: I wanted a review, too. I wanted consultations—

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, the member for Lakeshore dealt with production machinery and I have described the situation in other provinces. I have attempted to discuss the possible effect on prices if all or if part of this increased cost were passed down to consumers. Here is an idea that I will mention for my hon. friends' philosophical consideration.

Is it possible that the more highly developed industries—those that are advancing very rapidly from a technological point of view, and which use a disproportionately large share of capital—call upon the public purse directly or indirectly, immediately or eventually for public expenditures? For instance, it is undeniable when the Ford Motor Company located its plant at Talbotville, the public purse was called upon to provide the water, to provide the highway connections, to provide the schools for the children of the employees and to provide the hospitals, sewers and everything else. So that is one illustration of what I mean.

Very often one finds a correlation between capital intensity and the potential for pollution. I am thinking of a chemical industry—

Mr. Peacock: The lack of planning your land use.

Hon. Mr. White: I remember years ago, when rather an extensive addition was planned by the Imperial Oil Company in Sarnia involving tens of millions of dollars, if I remember correctly—the number of additional employees was less than a dozen.

Of course, the public has assumed the responsibility of retraining the people who would otherwise perhaps have engaged in the operation of that addition and so, the idea occurs to me that there may be a philosophical rationale in looking to some fractional, and I must say it is very small premium from the capital intensive industries, vis-à-vis the labour intensive industries. I have no answer to that.

Mr. Lawlor: A misuse of your taxing power. There are other more proper ways.

Hon. Mr. White: I have no answer to that. The member for—

Mr. Lawlor: What answers have you got to the range of authorities from Poole to Carter? Does it not bother you at all?

Hon. Mr. White: No. It is a matter that I have thought of very thoroughly. As a matter of fact, I think perhaps those very distinguished economists may not have been in full possession of the most current facts.

Mr. Peacock: They are not as much in need of money as you are.

Hon. Mr. White: The member for Lakeshore made reference to the need for applying all taxes uniformly to different industries. I have tried to point out how, by eliminating the exemption on the four-elevenths, we are now getting a degree of uniformity in a way that was not the case before—

Mr. Lawlor: You call that seven-elevenths legitimate?

Hon. Mr. White: Yes, it is legitimate. I will send you the working papers on that. The administrative economies were dealt with by him and we visualize a very substantial increase in efficiency within our department; of course, on the part of the taxpayer, too.

Mr. Peacock: At the expense of productivity in industry?

Hon. Mr. White: As a matter of fact, ceteris paribus, it will be possible to reduce our staff in that branch by about a third. This is not my intention because of the select committee's recommendation that the audit staff be increased to provide more frequent audits. I, myself, would like very much if it were possible to increase the frequency of audit, which now ranges from about three years to about nine years to a period not longer than two years.

At the present time we charge back for 36 months and I would like to see that period of time reduced to 24 months. This may not be possible. It is a matter that we are investigating very carefully, both the tax administrators and the sales tax branch. We have a very wide experience in the administration of tax enforcement of these regulations and legislation. Professor John Allan of McMaster, who was the economic consultant to the select committee on taxation, is studying the optimum frequency of audit and the optimum number of auditors.

I would hope that the very great increase in the efficiency which will flow from this change will make it possible for us to increase the efficiency of audit for all taxpayers.

I have dealt briefly with the claim that sales taxes are regressive, but I point out to the hon. member that we have a differential rate in three categories—zero tax on a certain range of goods and services, a five per cent tax and a ten per cent tax. This range is intended to make the sales tax much more progressive than it otherwise would be. That is why I am so astonished to hear the Liberal comment that the tax on expensive meals, for instance, is regressive because, of course, it is exactly the opposite. It is very progressive.

The differential rate, the exemption, the inclusion now of additional services, more particularly the hotel service, the fact that consumption is very directly related to income—all of these features make the sales tax more progressive than it otherwise would be.

We have applied the retail sales tax to the production equipment which was previously exempt because it is productive, efficient and competitive. Those are the reasons—it is productive, efficient and competitive.

Mr. Lewis: And lucrative.

Hon. Mr. White: The point was made by one or two speakers that this tax may force business out of Canada. I do not think this is going to happen. The amount of money is relatively small, and the fact that it has been in effect in the other major manufacturing provinces, and apparently well accepted, leads me to think that this will not give us a great deal of difficulty internationally.

We have a letter here from some of the other jurisdictions, pointing out that there is no evidence that the imposition of the tax interfered with their exports to other countries. I have one here from British Columbia which seems to have been mislaid. I will not be bothered reading it but I ask you to accept that assurance.

If it should happen that this or municipal taxes or some other such impost did make Canadian industry non-competitive, I should think that that would be best remedied at the federal level. At the present time, of course, the federal government has a three per cent surcharge on corporation income and if it were found that increased costs of whatever kind across this country of ours were leading to some international uncompetitiveness, I suppose that that is the level of government at which redress should be sought.

The member for Windsor West suggested that tobacco should be under The Retail Sales Tax Act rather than under the separate tax. Before he was a member here, as a matter of fact, it did come under the retail sales tax. It was only a few years ago that that change was made and it was made for the administrative efficiencies which it has brought to the government and to the vendors of cigarettes, and was very popular with the industry. As a result, on January 1, 1966, this tax came out of the retail sales tax and into the tobacco tax.

It had been pointed out that some small vendors sold only cigarettes which were subject to the retail sales tax, because, of course, chocolate bars and such like are less than 21 cents, so by removing them from the retail sales tax these businesses could not have any taxable sales. It also was a very great help to enforcement. Having the wholesale and a few large retail chains collect, there is less opportunity to evade the taxes. As a consequence, Mr. Smith in his report, on page 281, volume 3, said:

Collection at the wholesale level has greatly improved administration, removing many vendors from the list of retail sales tax collectors since the only taxable commodity they handled was tobacco.

That I think will answer the suggestion that the hon. member put forward. I think I have dealt with nearly every point that has been raised, Mr. Chairman, except the comments—which, I observe, were seriously intended but which I think are completely inappropriate and which I refuse to answer.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, would the Minister permit a question? If in fact that is the case, that the reduction in tariff duty on the basis of the GATT agreement would amount to $45 million per year, and the Minister has increased it by $38 million—most of the $45 million, or a good part of it, being in Ontario—then how has he improved the situation? How has he supported the international agreement so carefully negotiated?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Did the CCF in Saskatchewan think of that when they imposed it?

Hon. Mr. White: The purpose of tariffs 100 years ago was to raise revenue. The purpose of tariffs in more recent decades has been to decrease international trade, to keep out the products—the primary or secondary manufactured products, or raw materials, in fact—from other countries, to give a special inducement to domestic producers.

This introduces diseconomies because of the advantages which flow from comparative advantage and absolute advantage in world trade. For governments unilaterally to destroy comparative or absolute advantage is to decrease the standard of living within their own importing country and in the exporting country. Now here again we are getting into a very complicated economic area. There is no more relation between an imposition of a domestic tax here in Ontario and the GATT treaty than there is between an increase in the municipal tax at Exeter and the tariff on ping-pong balls in Biafra.

Now the hon. member for Riverdale broached this subject and went on to imply or to state that we were destroying Confederation. I reply to him by paraphrasing the remarks of the leader of the NDP (Mr. MacDonald) as contained in his speech of March 11, 1969, which was the day before yesterday, on page 2073, where he stated that:

The soundest foundation on which to build unity in this country is an equitable financial basis.

I have tried to point out to you how these changes are more equitable and how they conform more closely to the taxing provisions in the other provinces of Canada.

The soundest foundation on which to build unity in this country is an equitable financial basis that will meet the needs of the people across this country and give them some equality of services. Fiscal separatism is what we—

Meaning the NDP—

—heard yesterday.

Meaning from the Liberal leader.

Mr. Speaker, he went to say that that is a propaganda slogan that is sterile and bankrupt and I would apply these words of the leader of the NDP to the extraordinary presentation from the member for Riverdale.

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): Mr. Speaker, a point of clarification from the Minister's statement. As I understand it, he said that $38 million will amount to one-fiftieth—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member does not have a ministerial statement upon which to ask a point of clarification. This is a debate and the rules of this debate as adopted in this House are that the members all have the opportunity to speak and then the Minister presenting the bill has the opportunity of rebuttal. I would rule the member out of order.

An hon. member: He accepts questions.

Mr. Makarchuk: A point of order, Mr. Speaker, the Minister gave us some figures, and on checking them back they are not accurate.

Mr. Speaker: I have ruled the hon. member, and his question, and his point of order, out of order.

Mr. Lewis: Well if the few Ministers that accept questions—

Mr. Speaker: The motion is by Mr. White for the second reading of Bill 79. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

In my opinion I hear a dissenting voice, and in that event, as many as are in favour of the motion will please say "aye". As many as are opposed will please say "nay". In my opinion the "ayes" have it.

Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion for second reading moved by hon. Mr. White, which was agreed to on the following vote:

In connection with vote 402, I should point out to the committee that if they will refer to page 40 of the estimates book, there are programme activities described there. The first three sections—that is, general administration, care of adult offenders, the treatment and training of adult offenders—have to do with reformatories and provincial jails. But the aftercare of adult offenders has to deal with aftercare parole, and so on. Perhaps we could restrict our discussion along those lines. If this would be agreeable to the committee and if that is what the hon. Minister wishes, we will proceed then with vote 402.

The hon. member for Humber.

Clerk of the House: Mr. Speaker, the “ayes” are 54, the “nays” 30.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE HOSPITALS TAX ACT

Hon. Mr. White moves second reading of Bill 80, An Act to repeal The Hospitals Tax Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Clerk of the House: The 19th order; House in committee of supply, Mr. A. E. Reuter in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF CORRECTIONAL SERVICES

On vote 402:

Mr. Chairman: The hon. Minister.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Mr. Chairman, I just want to make a correction. The other evening during the discussion of my estimates I gave some information to the House. In reading the transcript there is a correction I wish to make. It is not of very great import but I would just as soon have it correct on the record.

I stated that MACTO visited 22 jurisdictions in the course of arriving at its recommendations. Actually I should have said MACTO studied and/or visited 22 jurisdictions in arriving at its recommendations regarding the incentive allowance.

Mr. Chairman: When we completed our deliberations the other evening we had passed vote 401 and there had been considerable discussion which had been ranging on to vote 402.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Mr. Chairman, on this aftercare of adult offenders, I note from looking at that particular item that the Salvation Army, the John Howard Society, and the Elizabeth Fry Society, Toronto and Ottawa, are specifically mentioned. But there is no mention of the St. Leonard's House or the Inn of Windsor, one being for male and the other for female offenders; these are halfway houses. These are very essential institutions in the rehabilitation, if I may put it that way, of former clients of the Minister of Correctional Services. Since it is now called Correctional Services, I hate to use the word inmates; what are we going to call them now?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Just call them releasees.

Mr. Ben: Releasees. Now what do you call the people you have in your custody at the present time?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Inmates or students, depending upon their age.

Mr. Ben: First of all, Mr. Chairman, I point out that much has been written on the importance of halfway houses such as the St. Leonard's House or the Inn of Windsor, which is a proposed halfway house.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): It is affiliated with St. Leonard's.

Mr. Ben: It is affiliated with St. Leonard's, the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville informs me. I am surprised that there is not a grant under this item for either the St. Leonard's House or the Inn of Windsor. Looking through the estimates, Mr. Chairman, I may have missed it, but we did look for them with care; we cannot find any grants to these institutions. Would the Minister please comment?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The grants to the halfway houses, including St. Leonard's House, are handled by The Department of Social and Family Services. You will find them under the grants of that department.

Mr. Ben: I am gratified to hear that, Mr. Chairman, and as long as they get the money I am not going to start splitting hairs as to who should give it to them. But inasmuch as I should think the services they render are to a great degree rehabilitational or correctional, may I ask out of curiosity why these particular grants were put under The Department of Social and Family Services rather than your department?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, it comes under the category of a hostel and The Department of Social and Family Services has money set aside for hostels. It is a matter of administration and I suppose it could be handled by our department. I cannot recall at the moment but there is a possibility that some of the halfway houses do not necessarily confine themselves to releasees from correctional institutions. That may be one of the reasons.

Mr. Ben: If I may please pursue this. Has the Minister any idea what amount has been granted for this purpose by that department?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In the year 1965-66 the figure for St. Leonard's House was $7,312.91; in 1966-67, $11,575.26; and in 1967-68, $39,378.90; a very substantial increase.

Mr. Ben: I thank the Minister for the figures but I wish he had not used the word, substantial, because in relation to the work it is doing I would say it is far from substantial.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Aside from whether or not I think it is substantial, I said a substantial increase. I am sure the hon. member will agree that an increase from $11,000 to $39,000 is a substantial increase.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, that substantial increase also leads you to believe that there must have been a substantial amount of work done by the association. What disturbs me, Mr. Chairman, is that the Minister does not recognize the work that St. Leonard's House does. Social and Family Services recognize it because the grant comes under The Charitable Institutions Act, but the recognition does not come from your department and they are dealing primarily with people who have served apprenticeship in your department and are now out in the world. I think it behooves you, Mr. Minister, to see that the grant comes from your department rather than Social and Family Services. Recognize the work they do.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, that is a rather interesting proposition. In the first place, it is all out of the same pocket; it all comes from the government. In the second place, I have no objections and I know the Minister of Social and Family Services (Mr. Yaremko) would have no objections. In fact, we have talked about the possibility in the past. We did not think it was important so long as they get the funds, but it is rather interesting to note that some people in the Opposition will say there is a stigma attached to an association with The Department of Correctional Services, and now the suggestion is that we should take something out of Social and Family Services and bring it into Correctional Services.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Do not look at us when you say that; we know whereof we speak.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Sudbury East.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Mr. Chairman, I want to go back to straighten the records before I get into what I want to say on the correctional institution in Burwash and the problems confronting the people in that community.

I want to go back to Hansard of March 7, in which the Minister made the following statement:

Mr. Speaker, in answer to the first question it is the policy of the department that political meetings are not held on institutional property.

Because of this, Mr. Kirby, principal of the school in Burwash village, wrote to Mr. Marsden, a member of the staff at Burwash in reply to a request for the use of the school for a meeting.

Mr. Chairman: I must point out to the hon. member that as the Chairman pointed out to the committee at the beginning of our deliberations, we would deal with the programme activities. And the hon. member for Humber did start out on aftercare and parole under the fourth programme. The hon. member is dealing with reformatories.

Mr. Martel: I am going to deal with parole as well, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: Could we deal with the parole branch under this particular activity and then go back to the other?

Mr. Martel: I would still like to straighten the records out, Mr. Chairman, before I get involved in this.

Mr. Chairman: Has the hon. member done that? Has the hon. member completed that portion with reference to—

Mr. Martel: Not at all, Mr. Chairman, I have not completed it because all I have done is quote the Minister so far. I am afraid the House was being misled at this point because the Minister was well aware that I was not going into Burwash to a political meeting, Mr. Chairman. The Minister was well aware that I wrote him a letter on January 22 in which I invited him to attend a meeting in Burwash with me to discuss the problems confronting the people in the town of Burwash, and in that letter I suggested to the Minister, and I quote:

Your careful consideration and help in this situation would be very greatly appreciated and I hope you will be able to find time to accept my invitation to visit Burwash with me.

He is quite aware, as well, that this was no political meeting. And if we are going to get involved in political meetings, then I suggest the Minister should not allow Conservative candidates to use the facilities of the school to make political speeches to the civil service association during a political campaign, and then to turn around and deny a member of this Legislature on the pretext that it is a political meeting when he knew full well it was not.

To use this as an excuse for denying me the right to see the people who invited me to come in to discuss their problems is a real sham on his department. I am wondering what they have to hide in Burwash, and I would like this matter straightened out before we go any further.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member is confusing matters here. His letter on January 22 did not talk at all about meeting at any particular place. During the course of some comments which he made he talked about some the members of the staff being unhappy about certain conditions, and on page 2 of the letter, which I presume he has before him, in the second paragraph, he states:

I must once again urge that someone be allowed to maintain some sort of confectionary, so as to give the residents easy access to such things as cigarettes, refreshments, etc.

I would be more than delighted to visit the area with you so that we could in a very constructive manner attempt to eliminate the dismay that has set in.

There is no reference in the first place—

Mr. Martel: Go down to the final paragraph.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The final paragraph reads:

Your careful consideration and help in this situation will be very greatly appreciated and I hope you will be able to find time to accept my invitation to visit Burwash with me.

It was very kind of the hon. member, of course, to ask me to visit one of my own institutions with him. I can assure him I will be very glad to call him when I get to Burwash if he wants me to call him for any particular reason to visit Burwash when I am there. He will appreciate the fact that we now have, I think, some 82 institutions under the jurisdiction of my department. It is most difficult to visit them all when I would like to—but, to get to the particular point: He merely asked me to visit Burwash with him to discuss some of these matters, and at that time there was no question about whether this was to be a special meeting or what the nature of the meeting would be, or anything of that nature.

Mr. Martel: Right, Mr. Chairman, I also took the liberty, when I returned to the House, to discuss a possible visit with the Minister, some time later. The point I am making is that the Minister was fully aware that the people in Burwash wanted to discuss their problems through the correspondence I had had given. Where the idea of a political meeting came from is a hoax, and the Minister is aware of this. There was never any suggestion of a political meeting by anyone. In fact, Mr. Chairman, if I might go so far, the people who contacted me are dyed-in-the-wool parties; they were not going to invite me to a New Democratic meeting, I am sure.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Martel: I am sure they were not going to invite me to one of their political meetings. The only member that they have ever seen fit, to date, to invite in there was the Conservative candidate in the last election.

An hon. member: Did he come out?

Mr. Martel: If this is the case the school facilities can be used for a political meeting for a Conservative candidate. How in the world do you deny a member of this Legislature to visit with the people in there? Under the pretext that it is a political meeting?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, the hon. member is really just inviting me to put on to the record again—at the waste of some extra time, I think—what I mentioned in the House the other day when his leader asked this question. I explained this in quite some detail and, I thought, to the satisfaction of his leader. I explained the precise position we were in with regard to having political meetings on government property, particularly when that government property is connected with a penal institution. It had nothing to do at all with the matters which the hon. member discussed with me in his letter. This was another matter that came up, about a particular meeting, which some of the members of the staff wanted to hold, and apparently they did ask the principal whether they could have this meeting.

Mr. Martel: Legal permission?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It will save time, Mr. Chairman, if I read exactly what went on during the discussion between his leader and myself.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Mr. Chairman, are we talking about a political meeting, or a meeting to discuss problems?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is what I am trying to find out. That is precisely what I am trying to find out.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Is the hon. member asking me whether I, in fact, refused to come up and have a meeting with him and members of the staff on government property; or is he asking me whether, in fact, the superintendent refused to let someone have a meeting, because in his view it was a political one?

Mr. Martel: Right. Now where did he get that idea?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: This is exactly what we were discussing the other day, and I repeat it again here.

My answer to the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) was, "It is the policy of the department that political meetings are not held on institutional property." Because of this—

Mrs. M. Renwick (Scarborough Centre): Who said it was a political meeting?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The master question, if the hon. members will please give me the opportunity to answer it so we will get a clear understanding—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Kirby, the principal of the school, which is on government property, on institutional property—

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): What is sacred about that?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —asked about someone wanting to have a meeting at the school.

Mr. Martel: This is somebody who is a member of Parliament.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The principal wrote—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Please. Because of this policy that we do not allow political meetings, Mr. Kirby, principal of the school in Burwash village, wrote to Mr. Marsden, a member of the staff at Burwash, in reply to a request for the use of the school for a meeting. He advised him that, as it appeared in his view, Mr. Kirby's view, that the meeting was to be of a political nature, he, Mr. Marsden, should get permission from the superintendent. Mr. Kirby's reply, Mr. Chairman, was fairly well in keeping with what has been our policy—I am quoting my comments on that date—and here is the point, and I would like the hon. member for Sudbury East to keep it in mind. Incidentally, I gave this answer on Friday, March 7, and I should add that no further application at this moment has been made to the superintendent as a result of that letter which, on the face of it, would lead one to believe that the intention was in fact to use it for a political purpose.

Mr. Lewis: Boy, oh, boy, that is a non-sacred area.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Now, just a moment, it is not a non-sacred area.

Mr. Lewis: It was the Minister who intimated that—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I never intimidated any meeting. I know nothing about the intention of someone having a meeting there for that purpose, and I add that for the benefit of the hon. member, and other hon. members, who may not have been here on that occasion.

However, I recognize that a general policy in respect of the use of institutional property is difficult to apply to Burwash because of the fact that a large number of staff live on the property. Therefore it is obvious that some change in rules must be made for the use of meeting facilities for staff at this particular institution. For this reason I am considering the problem with a view to revising instructions so as to clarify the use of the village facilities for meetings, either to discuss village problems, or problems of staff conditions, if the members of the staff feel they require such discussion.

I would think if they wanted to invite their local MPP to be present, there should be no objection providing the meeting is not of a political nature. In fact, as an MPP myself, I feel that not only is it the right of an MPP, but it is his duty to meet his constituents if they invite him to do so.

I would, however, appeal to hon. members, not to take this as an invitation to utilize institutional property for political purposes, keeping in mind that Burwash is a penal institution, and it is very easy for actions which would be normal in any other setting, to precipitate very serious repercussions in a penal setting. I do not see what objection the hon. member can take to that.

Mr. Martel: Certainly, I have plenty of objections, Mr. Chairman. First of all, I would like to know where someone got the idea it was a political meeting?

This was not Mr. Kirby's decision as I am told. I am advised that Mr. Kirby had given consent for the use of the school, and that he was instructed to change his ruling on the granting of the school to the citizens of Burwash for me to go in and visit with them.

The point is, Mr. Chairman, where in the world would he dream this up—if it were Mr. Kirby, and I have my doubts, because I have had the occasion, over the last four or five days, to speak to a good number of people. I have my doubts it was Mr. Kirby's decision, because these people maintain it was the superintendents decision, and not Kirby's.

But more important, on what grounds, if it were Mr. Kirby, would he make this assumption that it was a political meeting.

How can they second guess the odd hundred people who wanted me to come in, and I know the number. By what divine knowledge would one man know that I was coming in for political reasons? This is the point, Mr. Chairman, that grates me to no end—that someone on his own decides I am coming in for political reasons.

I know that you do not have a political meeting there, because I have had one with residents of Burwash, and that meeting was held in a school in Wahnapeetae, so I know the rule quite well about a political meeting in Burwash.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I thought that was pretty clearly explained here. I have seen a copy of the letter when this question was raised by the hon. member's leader. I have seen a copy of the letter that Mr. Kirby wrote to Mr. Marsden, telling Mr. Marsden that, in his view, it was going to be a political meeting. How Mr. Kirby arrived at that, I do not know; I was not there.

I did not discuss this with Mr. Kirby, but the fact remains that if it was not going to be of a political nature, why did not Mr. Marsden then carry out the suggestion of Mr. Kirby, the principal, to go to the superintendent and say, "This is not a political meeting, therefore, may we have permission?" Perhaps the superintendent would have approved of it. The fact is that after they got this letter from Mr. Kirby, the principal, they did not ask for permission. That is why I said in my answer, "on the face of it it would appear that Mr. Kirby's decision that it was going to be of a political nature appeared to be a correct one," because nobody questioned it, nobody went to the superintendent and asked for permission.

Mr. Martel: That was questioned in the House here but we will ask again. The only reason we have not asked, or the people of Burwash have not asked, is that they are waiting until we get this cleared up down here, because the invitation still stands. We want it cleared by the Minister that we are entitled to have a meeting in there with them. The request will be made very promptly.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Is the hon. member asking me what the policy is again? I am sorry, I could not hear the hon. member.

Mr. Martel: No. I am just saying that the Minister made reference to the fact that Mr. Marsden has not made another request to hold this meeting. I am saying that Mr. Marsden has not made the request until I could get back to the Legislature to find out what the answer would be to the question, which the leader of the New Democratic Party raised last Friday. But there will be a request made, I would say within the next 24 hours, then, for the use of the school so I may meet with the residents of that part of my constituency.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I thought, Mr. Chairman, I made that crystal clear in my statement. I said meetings not of a political nature—of course permission should be granted. If, in fact, the superintendent does not grant permission after you have satisfied him of the nature of it, then it is a matter for head office and it is a matter for me to clarify. But apparently the superintendent has not refused it, because apparently it has not yet gone to his level.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Chairman, I am told by the people who contacted me that it was the superintendent who vetoed the meeting and not Mr. Kirby at all.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Does the hon. member not believe me when I say I read a copy of the letter which Mr. Kirby sent to Mr. Marsden asking him to go and talk to the superintendent? I have seen the letter. What the hon. member has heard from some other people, I am not in a position to pass judgment on, I can only deal with those matters which are before me.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Would the Minister table the letter?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Oh, yes, I would be very glad to do that. If the hon. member wants the letter tabled, I would be very pleased to do it.

Mr. Lewis: Has the Minister got the letter—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, I had a copy made, apparently—

Mr. Lewis: One would want to know on what basis—I think the member for Sudbury East puts it very well—on what basis Mr. Kirby arrived at that conclusion, because the moment you put the onus on the employee to go to the superintendent with the undercurrent implicit that there is a political motive. You then make everyone in the institution concerned about holding any meeting at all, and that is exactly what happened with the member for Sudbury East.

It happened, Mr. Chairman, because in the Minister's institutional framework generally there is much unease about the expression of civil servant discontent, because there is so much of a closed nature in those institutions. If you want to free it you would have a very nice flow of discussion because what the member for Sudbury East was about was a perfectly legitimate political duty and it need never have been construed by Kirby or anybody else as a political motive, except on the previous performance of Tory political candidates, but never on any other basis. There is a sort of contagion of conspiracy in these institutions, that is why this kind of thing happens.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, that is just utter nonsense. I know what the hon. member for Scarborough West is referring to—about all kinds of freedom for discussion and so on. He has no idea what things are like in attempting to run a correctional service, he just has no conception.

As far as holding meetings at Burwash is concerned—I am speaking from memory, I could be corrected and I will be, I am sure, if I am wrong—there have been other meetings of a like nature in Burwash where they have discussed often their working conditions. This is precisely what the branch is there for. They meet in Burwash, they meet in the hall in Burwash—

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): With a member?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, just a moment. In the first place, the hon. member for Scarborough West was not talking about seeing a member. He was suggesting, he was implying—

Mr. Lewis: I was talking about it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If the member will just give me an opportunity. He was, in fact, saying that the members of the staff did not have freedom of speech to discuss their working conditions.

Mr. Lewis: No, I did not say that at all.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I have told the member for Sudbury East what the policy of the department is. I have explained to him that there is a grey area here which is difficult to resolve and I am sure if he wants to be fair he will appreciate that. Now, how some particular member of the staff construed that this might have political overtones, at this moment escapes me.

But he will also appreciate the fact that having, as I said, some 80-odd institutions, some local autonomy, some local responsibility must be given to the staff at the institutions. We cannot possibly deal with everything at head office. So somebody at some stage decided that there were possibly some political overtones.

Because of this he says, "You better go and ask the superintendent's permission for this meeting." Presumably, Mr. Kirby did not feel—and I only presume this—presumably he did not feel he wanted to take this responsibility because of some of the things perhaps he heard. After all, the hon. member for Sudbury East said people were talking to him about it. So he wanted to make sure he was in a clear position, and he told Mr. Marsden, "go and get the permission of the superintendent." Now after that nothing happened.

The hon. member's suggestion that Mr. Marsden or anybody else would get into any difficulty because they went to the superintendent to ask for a meeting, is entirely wrong, it does not do justice to the way our institutions are operated. The branch has had meeting after meeting over the years at the institutions to discuss working conditions.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Sudbury East was on his feet.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Chairman, the interesting part in all this is that the Marsdens had mailed letters out as they had received permission from Mr. Kirby to use the school. But, once the letters were received, the superintendent in Burwash said, "no." This is the implication. It was only after the letters were mailed out, advising the people in Burwash that I would be coming in on March 7, that the use of the school was denied. It was not a decision by Mr. Kirby.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I did not say it was a decision by Mr. Kirby—the hon. member says this is implied.

Mr. Martel: The Minister is saying that the people should have gone to Mr. Silcock to get permission. They had permission from the principal, and it was only after the notices were delivered that the permission was withdrawn.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, perhaps, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Martel: From Mr. Silcock.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, perhaps because of what was in the notices, Mr. Kirby came to the conclusion it might have political overtones and because of this he asked Mr. Marsden to go and ask the superintendent for his permission. What was wrong with that? He had some concern about this. Now, the hon. member has implied, he did not charge, he implied that the superintendent had in fact already denied them the use of the hall. Is that what he is saying?

Mr. Martel: After the principal had granted it, yes.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, if this is what the hon. member is saying, this is something I will have to investigate. My information is that no official request was made of the superintendent for the use of the hall after the letter from Mr. Kirby.

Now, upon what someone else has told the hon. member, he must appreciate, I cannot take any action. If he is prepared to make this charge, I will ask the superintendent anyway, whether this fact is true, which I doubt very much.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I want to come back to this. There is almost a phobia that has been created in the atmosphere of correctional services around politicians, particularly politicians of Opposition parties, entering the institutions, reviewing the conditions in those institutions, and engaging in examination of those institutions. The whole reaction, which to me is almost paranoid, about Opposition members doing what is a very reasonable political function, has filtered right down through the entire institutional framework. The Minister likes nothing more than to rally the troops at some point in the debate—it will happen again—in defence of his civil servants against the assaults of Opposition members. That is the way the department is treated. But let Opposition members try to find out what is happening within those institutions, let them come unannounced, let them make certain charges, let them attempt to find certain facts; things have to be cleared ahead of time, all the difficulties in The Department of Correctional Services are thrown up to us—such as how tough it is to run the department and how abusive it is for the civil servants, and how, therefore, the Minister has to exercise restraint. I am really suggesting, Mr. Chairman, that the Minister would have a far freer time in the management of his institutions if he gave a wholesale invitation to every member of the Opposition to behave as he saw fit.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: To what?

Mr. Lewis: To behave as he saw fit in the entry or non-entry of his institutions.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, is that not precisely what I have done?

Mr. Lewis: No.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, Mr. Chairman, I doubt if there is any other jurisdiction in Canada which issued the invitation which I did, three or four or five years ago, to all members of the Legislature—

Mr. Lewis: Right, and subsequent qualifications—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Just a moment—to visit any of our institutions without notice of any kind. And certainly the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Shulman), and the hon. member for Lakeshore (Mr. Lawlor), have taken advantage of that on numerous occasions. So how you can possibly say that we restrict their movements, that we restrict their freedoms?

Mr. Lewis: There are certain qualifications.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, of course there have to be qualifications. You cannot go into the confidential files. Of course there have to be qualifications, and the hon. member, either deliberately or unwittingly, is attempting to equate the situation in Burwash with other institutions. Either he does not know the particular situation in Burwash—Burwash is a village composed entirely of staff of the institution. It is all within institutional grounds. If we had to build an institution like that today this would not be necessary, but whenever it was built—perhaps 30 years ago, 40 years ago—these people were so far removed from any built-up area that you had to provide them with homes there—very well subsidized homes, I should tell the hon. member for Sudbury East. They are being treated very well.

That is very different from any other institution that we have. Here is a place where there is a large penal institution, and some of our tougher customers are there, too. And within the grounds of this institution are all of these villagers who are members of the staff. Now this is not quite the same as any other penal institution that we have. You just cannot have the same rules apply.

For instance, we would not be giving some of the benefits to other institutions that we give to the villagers of Burwash merely because of the fact that they are not as close to a built up area as others are. We will go into that later—I am sure the hon. member for Sudbury East is going to raise some of these questions—but to try to equate this with all of our other institutions and to suggest that this department is restricting the movement of the members of this Legislature is utter nonsense. They get more freedom of movement than probably any other jurisdiction in North America, let alone Canada.

Mr. J. Renwick: In the world.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Maybe the world. I have asked this question. I have told the hon. members that I have been the circuit and have asked these questions, and I do not know of any other jurisdiction where the head of the department has given this invitation to the members—and that invitation still applies, it still goes on. The members are still going in and getting all the freedom they can expect within such an institution.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Scarborough Centre.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, we have heard the Minister speak about political meetings, and then we hear him then draw to political overtones. I would like to ask the Minister very clearly, Mr. Chairman, and for our clarification, if the staff workers in this particular institution wanted to speak to the member for Scarborough East (Mr. T. Reid), about staff problems, about problems of unpleasantness either with this government or working for the government—does the Minister define that as a political meeting?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That, I think, was the only real, legitimate question that has been asked to this moment, on this whole problem, because it is very germane, and it is a very difficult question to answer. I will tell the hon. member quite frankly that we have discussed this. I have put myself in the position of a local MPP, and asked about this because it is a different situation in other institutions. Suppose they want to discuss working conditions. I really do not know whether this would be considered as having sympathetic overtones or not; I do not know. This is a matter which I was thinking about when I said we will have to review the policy in respect of Burwash village.

Quite frankly, I would think that because there is a structure and a setup, there is machinery for the staff to air their grievances. There is a branch there of the Civil Service Association of Ontario. The machinery is set up that any complaints or any grievances brought to that branch can be brought to the headquarters of the CSAO which will then take them up with the civil service commission. This is the machinery that is set up for this purpose, the same as it is in private organizations where there is organized labour represented in that organization.

Now, it is a question; I have not answered it yes or no because quite frankly, at this moment, I do not know. I would just hope, as I mentioned earlier, that the hon. members will consider—take the hon. member for Sudbury East because he is involved in that particular area—the implications of any kind of meeting that he may be attending and that it may spill over into the morale of the staff within a penal institution and even possibly involve inmates.

An hon. member: So that is your position?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is the point.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Scarborough Centre.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I would like to pursue this a little further. I would like to define, with the Minister first of all, that there is a village within this institution, a village of people—of how many inhabitants? The member for Sudbury East says 750—and this is a village where these people must be able to speak freely with their member of Parliament or we are suppressing a very important function of democracy.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: About 700, that is correct. I have agreed to that.

Mrs. M. Renwick: They must be able to bring their sitting member of the legislative assembly, Mr. Chairman, to this village where they are residents, even if it does fall within one of the provincial institutions.

The Minister has said, Mr. Chairman, that grievances can be aired through a structure. But every citizen in this province has to have some way of being able to communicate with their sitting member of Parliament beyond any structure that is woven around their place of work. To me, Mr. Chairman, these people were being denied the freedom of speaking with their member of Parliament collectively, and this of course is a very serious infraction.

I think that the Minister also has to take into consideration that for the first time these constituents have had a member of the Opposition as their provincial member of Parliament, and for the first time they had a public voice that is going to, in all likelihood, be made publicly critical of the government whereas the tendency for any sitting government member would be to deal with this sort of matter privately. I would like to say that I am concerned greatly if these people do not have a voice publicly through their sitting member of Parliament.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am not too sure that the hon. member is correct in saying that Burwash always has been represented by a member of the government.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Well, I stand corrected on that, but certainly not for some time, Mr. Chairman. I only went by the word of the member for Sudbury East, when he said that they had not had an NDP member represent them before.

But, shall we just say then, Mr. Chairman, it has been some time since an Opposition member has represented those constituents, and this is a deliberate attempt on the part of the superintendent, or whoever made that final decision, to muzzle those constituents.

Mr. Lewis: For many years before the renaissance, they had no one there.

Mrs. M. Renwick: The superintendent did not say so.

Mr. Young: Mr. Chairman, I think what the Minister has said about freedom of members of the Legislature has some validity. Some of us have been into his institutions from time to time, and perhaps Burwash is one where I visited without the Minister's knowledge—not inside part of your institution, but inside another part; however, you never got that word. Now, Mr. Chairman, the fact is that I know the general situation in that area, and what the Minister said a while ago I think has some validity in respect to the grey areas. Whenever a member of the Legislature comes into a situation like that, how do you keep politics out of it? That is the question in the Minister's mind, you see.

Mrs. M. Renwick: You cannot.

Mr. Young: You likely cannot.

Mrs. M. Renwick: You cannot. And why should you? It is a political decision.

Mr. Young: And a politician is a politician. And if a politician goes into a situation like that he is going to be conscious of the votes that are there, whether he is a New Democrat or a Conservative or anything else.

Mrs. M. Renwick: And the problem is there.

Mr. Young: And the problem is there. If he solves it it is going to help him a bit, perhaps, politically. If he does not solve it, it will be perhaps just the opposite way.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Somehow or other I get very few solutions from this.

Mr. Young: But the fact is that politics are going to enter into that kind of a situation regardless, some sort of politics.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Freedom of speech is a solution.

Mr. Young: Now, Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to get back at the nub of this problem. And let us look at it. The nub of the problem is that the people in Burwash village arranged for a meeting. That is number one. They had the school arranged for. That is important to remember. Then, having arranged for it they invited their local member of provincial Parliament in to meet with them. That is number two. Two steps. The hall was secured then the invitation to the member was given. This is as I understand it. Now, once somebody realized that this was not a member of the Conservative Party, that somebody woke up.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is the hon. member's view.

Mr. Young: Well, somebody may have become conscious that a New Democrat won this election and not a Conservative. And so it was a New Democrat coming in—a member of the Opposition, let us put it that way. And then suddenly the wheels began to turn, and at that point—after the hall was secured, the school secured, after the invitations had gone out, then the knowledge came that this particular person, this Opposition member representing these people was to come—at that point politics began to enter into it. There would have been no politics if it had been the member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Demers). No politics at all, it just would not have happened. He would have come and there have been no fuss.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I would doubt that.

Mr. Young: Well, all right. The fact as I see it—this is my point of view and I am representing my point of view and the point of view, I think, of a good many of us in this House—is that if the member for Nickel Belt had been invited, there would have been no cancellation of the meeting.

Mrs. M. Renwick: And there would have been no public—

Mr. Young: The fact is that once this knowledge came then the wheels started to turn, and then the cancellation came. It became a political meeting, because the member of the Opposition was there instead of a member of the government. That is the difference between a political meeting and a non-political meeting. And I think we have to recognize that fact. And it may well be that the member for Sudbury East would have made some political kudos out of this if he had been able to solve the problem.

Naturally, the people would have been grateful. But how do you disassociate that kind of thing from a meeting where people invite the member to solve a problem for them? I think this is the situation. Not after the letter was written to which the Minister refers, but before. In other words, this letter came after the hall had been secured and after the invitation—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I still repeat to the hon. member that as far as I am concerned, and from the knowledge that I have available, permission to use the hall was not denied.

Mr. Young: All right. Then, Mr. Chairman, I think the member for Sudbury East is now in the clear and that the meeting can go forward. This is what I understand.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If it is not in the nature of the kind of political meeting—

Mr. Lewis: What is wrong with a political meeting?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I will tell you what is wrong with it to begin with. I have to concern myself with this thing. The only thing different about this, the only reason I am giving it any consideration at all, is because of the nature of the particular area. Because otherwise there is no problem, you are not allowed to have partisan political meetings on government property.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): What is a partisan political meeting.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is the policy of the government.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. Well then, how did the Conservative candidate in the last provincial election get in?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I do not know, I will have to find out—it may be that at that time somebody decided that if it is an election campaign—

Mr. Makarchuk: Was it political?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Was he at the hall?

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Was he in at the hall, or was he at the village? Well, do you want me to hear the hon. member for Sudbury East? Who has the floor, Mr. Chairman?

It being 6.00 o'clock, p.m., the House took recess.

ESTIMATES, THE DEPARTMENT OF CORRECTIONAL SERVICES (Continued)

On vote 402:

Mr. Chairman: The hon. leader of the Opposition.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I do not know whether the discussion on the use of the facilities at Burwash has been completed or not and if it has not, I would not want to intrude in that. Because I was expecting it to continue, and for you to go over the details just once more beginning with the letter. But I did want to bring to the attention of the Minister—

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Do you get the point?

Mr. Nixon: You were successful and there was complete capitulation, is that it? Anyway, Mr. Chairman, there is one matter in the after-care of the adult offender, if that is one area, that we can discuss under vote 402 at this time—

Mr. Chairman: I wonder if I might say to the hon. member—

Mr. Nixon: Yes.

Mr. Chairman: —to the hon. leader of the Opposition. Before we started this afternoon we had agreed, I think, amongst the committee, that vote 402 was divided into two sections more or less. It was suggested that we would keep the after-care of adult offenders, which includes paroles, under one discussion and then continue the general discussion under reformatories, provincial jails, etc. So if we could leave that portion until later, sir.

Mr. Nixon: I certainly agree with that.

Mr. Chairman: We are on vote 402 generally. The hon. member for Wentworth is on his feet.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I do not want to shock the Minister, and what I have to say really is not derogatory in any way. As the Minister knows, I have an interest in two jails in the area from where I come. One is the Hamilton Barton Street jail and the other is Milton.

An hon. member: What do you mean an interest?

Mr. Deans: Well, an interest in that I have visited both on at least a couple of occasions and had a look through them and—

An hon. member: No conflict of interest?

Mr. Deans: No, no conflict of interest. I would like to ask first of all whether or not you have a programme that will somehow get rid of both of those monstrosities. Particularly, for the moment, the one at Milton; but equally obnoxious is the one on Barton Street in Hamilton. Before I go on to say more, I wonder if the Minister could tell me whether he might be going to get rid of it within ten years—either one or both?

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Hamilton and—what is the other one?

Mr. Deans: The one at Milton.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, insofar as Hamilton is concerned, I think the hon. member appreciates the fact that this is one of the five which have been named as having the highest priority. In the meantime there have been a considerable number of renovations which have been taking place—I do not know whether they are completed or not yet—in the Hamilton jail. Has the hon. member been there since the renovations took place?

Mr. Deans: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I could not really tell him just about when Hamilton is going to be rebuilt. All I can tell him is that the first that is going to be done is the Ottawa jail. Where Hamilton comes after that—it will have to take its place in respect of what is recommended after the Carleton jail gets under way and having regard for what the task force reports should be the next one. At this moment, they have not done so.

Mr. Deans: I wonder if I might ask the Minister, considering the conditions at Milton for a moment, the last time I was there—it was a number of months ago as you are aware—the conditions were intolerable and you did do some work on it. I recognize this, but I am curious to know whether or not that jail now serves a useful function or whether it would not be possible to perhaps use the Hamilton Barton Street jail and eliminate that jail altogether. The one at Milton is a dungeon quite frankly.

Mr. G. A. Kerr (Halton West): Not as bad as Hamilton.

Mr. Deans: Oh it certainly is, in my opinion. It is a matter of where you come from.

Mr. Kerr: We have a good staff at Milton now.

Mr. Deans: Nonsense. No, the member for Halton West indicates that the most humane personnel are at Milton rather than at Barton—

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): You mean the humane society.

Mr. Deans: I would have to differ from you, because the reason I rose really was to pay some tribute to the governor at Barton Street jail. It is my opinion that, considering the facilities there, the staff and the governor of Barton Street jail are to be commended. There is probably no better staff in the province of Ontario than the staff in the Hamilton Barton Street jail. The facilities are atrocious and the opportunity for education and the opportunity really for them to do any work in the way of rehabilitation is almost non-existent.

But taking those things into consideration I believe that Governor O'Neil has done an excellent job with that archaic dungeon that he works in. He has undertaken a complete refurbishing of it, if that is what you can call what you do to a jail—painting and cleaning it up and generally making it as reasonably liveable as one could expect—and I say—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Our department.

Mr. Deans: I say, well your department under his prodding, I think you would agree. But anyway I want to pay public tribute to him. I think that here is a gentleman who very rarely gets the accolades of the public. He deserves them. He has done a tremendous job in that area and I want to make sure that he is recognized properly. But the best recognition you could give him would be to tear the place down and build him some place half decent to work with.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I can only repeat that Halton and Peel, including Hamilton, are among the five which I named on October 29 last. Halton and Peel, Hamilton, London, the Niagara region and Metropolitan Toronto. These are the ones that will be regional detention centres.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): When?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: First we will do the Carleton County one and the Quinte one. There are priorities—I would like to build them all next week. In the meantime there are already, as the hon. member for Wentworth has pointed out, considerable amounts of renovations in many of these jails. I agree with him in the work that the governor is doing, and I might say this applies to most, if not all, of the governors of all the jails who have been—as I said here in this Legislature—doing a good job under very difficult circumstances.

Mr. Deans: Just one final word on this. I was wondering just what was being done in the way of providing better rehabilitation services and educational facilities in those two jails that I mentioned. Now in Milton there is nothing—I think you would agree with—there is absolutely nothing in the way of rehabilitation or educational service. In Barton it is almost as bad.

What could be done in that area? Could we not bring some better form of educational programme into the jail, with properly trained personnel to provide a better rehabilitation atmosphere and try to get those people back into society, into some useful function?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, the first thing we have to remember is that local jails are at the moment just holding places. In the first place we have people awaiting trial, who in many instances are found innocent. There is no programme for these people.

Insofar as the other is concerned they are all short termers and anyone with a sentence of more than 30 days usually moves out of the local jail into one of the reformatories so that they can take advantage of the programmes in effect in the reformatories.

Mr. Shulman: You have people sitting in those jails for months awaiting trial and awaiting appeal. Some of them for close to a year.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Certainly the hon. member will appreciate that a person awaiting trial cannot be incorporated into the correctional system. If he is awaiting trial he is still, in the eyes of the law, an innocent man.

Mr. Shulman: Many of them have already been convicted and are awaiting appeal.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If they are convicted and awaiting appeal they are in exactly the same position by law. I think the Attorney General will bear me out—he is nodding his head, he agrees. I can tell the hon. member that a person who has applied for an appeal is still in the same position as a person who is innocent—even though he has been convicted, he is treated in exactly the same way.

When we have the new regional detention centres there will be more activities which they can take advantage of if they want to, but it will be strictly voluntary of course, because they will be treated as innocent people until they have been sentenced. In the meantime, I repeat—anyone who has a term of longer than 30 days is taken out of the local jail as quickly as possible and taken into a reformatory, which is one of the reasons we were glad to integrate the whole county jail system into the correctional system generally.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Halton West was on his feet previously.

Mr. Kerr: I just want to clarify a point. Possibly the hon. member for Wentworth misunderstood me. I just said that the staff at Milton is now more humane. I was not necessarily making any comparisons with any other jail or institution. I am just saying that recently the staff has improved and there has been, in spite of the situation there, some renovation and a great deal of improvement in the staff.

I do not mind the hon. member for Wentworth coming into Halton once in a while and inspecting our jail—by invitation or otherwise—because I think the record will show in Hansard that I have raised the point of the Milton jail on a number of occasions since 1963.

Mr. Deans: Have you been in the jail?

Mr. Kerr: Yes, I have been there lots of times to see clients. As the hon. Minister said,

Mr. Chairman—and he has promised me on a number of occasions—Halton and Peel are high on the priority list. I do not know how Quinte snuck in there since last year, we were after Ottawa last year, but we will wait as long as it is completed this year.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Sudbury East.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Well, Mr. Chairman, we will not get back to Burwash. Before getting into the main comments, I would like to ask the Minister two questions—possibly he could answer these—with respect to matters I raised last year. One was, have any facilities been set aside now for the young single men who are working in Burwash to do their social drinking—which they did not have last year and which I was promised would be looked into? Secondly, has his department decided that pertinent information should go on the record so that the guards or the custodial officers could see it?

The reason I raise this again is that, Mr. Ford—who was transferred to Sudbury in this little schmozzle recently at Burwash—suffered from epilepsy and this apparently was not on his card and he got to the jail house in Sudbury and went three weeks without pills and as a result suffered two seizures on March 1, 1969. If the pertinent information, as I requested last year, was put on the cards—so the custodial officers would know the type of prisoner they were watching—this sort of thing would not happen.

Before I get into the main portion, I was wondering if the Minister could answer those two questions.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Let me say in respect to the first matter which the hon. member raised last year, the regulations for the department have been in the process of being rewritten now, I think, for about three years. The hon. member may think that this is a long time for regulations but they are very detailed, very complex, and you have to take into consideration the various problems in the various institutions to make sure that the general regulation applied to all the institutions will not have other implications of a disadvantageous nature.

The regulations have now been completed. We just this week received from the federal government approval for some matters which required federal government approval before we incorporated them into the regulations—they should be going to Cabinet perhaps next week or the week after that. I have to be careful how I say this because until my colleagues in the Cabinet approve of it and it becomes government policy, I cannot put myself into a position to say that I have recommended certain things. All I can say to the hon. member is that the matter he has raised has been taken into consideration.

Mr. Martel: Well I hope for the sake of those men who work there that this will be given top consideration.

Now, I want to get to the treatment of the residents of Burwash themselves. I might say, Mr. Chairman, that the residents living in Burwash are not what you would call the most contented people in the world. In fact, they are very, very dissatisfied with the treatment they are receiving from this department. Their complaints deal with a wide range of problems. Unfortunately, because I could not get to the meeting last week, I do not have them all, but I have seven or eight.

Mr. D. M. De Monte (Dovercourt): The member should ask them to write him.

Mr. Martel: One of the main areas is the condition of the road the residents must use from the time they leave Highway 69 till they get in to where the houses are. I have been over this road on three or four occasions and to say it is deplorable would be putting it mildly. In winter, according to one of the letters I have received, here is how they describe it:

Snow blocks the road in winter. In spring and early summer the unpaved road breaks up and is almost impassable, later on in the summer the roads are choked with dust when it is dry or full of potholes when it is wet.

It is unfortunate that government equipment could not be sent in there more frequently to keep these roads in top condition, because the residents are being forced to use that four or five miles of road to do every bit of shopping and so on for their everyday living.

Another area which is of vital concern to them, and the Minister and I have exchanged considerable correspondence over this, is the matter of the general store which was closed. Now I realize that the Minister is going to say that it is policy to close this store. However, the sales which the Minister will use to show that it was not worth while keeping open hardly describe the picture at all.

The residents in Burwash are paid every two weeks, as I understand it, and there is no place for them to have their cheques cashed, and consequently they have to travel to Sudbury to have them cashed. As everyone knows, the banks do not open until ten, and the one store that was in existence closed at 11.30 in the morning.

Now, if you went into Sudbury to cash your cheque, and then returned the 25 miles in order to do your shopping, you would get back in Burwash in time to see the store closed—so the sales were going to be reduced. Certainly this is the reason why. I do not know of any other place of 750 residents where you could not get a cheque cashed, and it seems to me that that sort of service should be forthcoming for the residents there, regardless of whether they have cars or not.

You can go to any small community and get a cheque cashed and if this was the case then a small store could do a pretty thriving business. It is unfortunate when you have residents who have had to take the train 25 miles to buy six loaves of bread. The Minister might argue that there are all kinds of cars there, but the men use their cars to get to work and consequently the housewives are left without a method of conveyance back and forth to Estaire or to Sudbury. Even to Estaire it is a 15 mile round trip.

This certainly adds to the problems of the housewives in Burwash, and this is just another of the facilities that have been taken away from the residents in Burwash without them having any opportunity to discuss it. I am told that many of the people who went there in the beginning had certain privileges which have since been taken away from them. One of the privileges was a barber's shop, and apparently this has been removed as well without negotiation. They had a shoe repair store, and this too has been taken away.

I am wondering how the Minister can justify, or attempt to justify, that his employees in Burwash can be happy when all the facilities that were there, which enticed people there, have been taken away one by one without any discussion. And to say that they can discuss it possibly with the civil service is, as far as the residents are concerned, a lost cause, because it is hard to discuss with your employer, who at the same time is your representative.

I think it is high time that the Minister—if he intends to have employees that are happily employed and expects them to do the type of job that is necessary for them to do, and working under adverse conditions—realizes the need to put back some of these facilities. And I do not think the gimmick that they have cars—as I said, it is just too far, and too many of the guards have to take their cars to work with them, leaving the housewives without cars. Consequently most of them have had to go into the purchase of deep freezes, which adds to the cost of living that these people already have in that locality.

The other area of concern to the residents there is the ever-decreasing recreational opportunities in Burwash. As I understand it, the facilities get increasingly worse, the roof is leaking and it has reached a point of complete deterioration. Now, in all justification, Mr. Minister, I cannot understand how you expect these people to be happy in conditions like this.

This is why I invited you to come to Burwash with me and to discuss these matters, because you would have to see it first hand. You have to remember that when you are in Burwash the drive to Sudbury might be 25 miles one-way but we have roughly seven months of winter in that part of the country—tremendous snow storms starting in October and running to on in April—and it is not like jumping in your car here in Toronto and going 20 miles.

I think it is time that the Minister looked into some of these matters. Just to show you the type of treatment these people are receiving—and I know that people are going to jump on this and say it is right to do so—they have their own post office there and they used to be able to put a postcard or a birthday card in the post office without the postage and it was delivered into someone's box, but even this has been withdrawn from them. Now this is pretty small potatoes.

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): That is federal.

Mr. Martel: Oh, cute. There came the pollutant.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Well if I could not do any better than you are doing right now, I would resign.

Mr. Martel: If I could not do any better than you do as a Cabinet Minister, I would resign.

Mr. Deans: Now there is an idea, why do you not? Why do you not resign?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: You have never been there.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Martel: When they get so desperate that they put pollutants in your hand, they are scraping the bottom of the barrel. The last point of this treatment of the residents,

Mr. Chairman, is the medical attention that the people here are receiving.

As I understand it, they even have difficulty getting a pill in an emergency now, and although the Minister has denied this as well, the residents must know that even in an emergency there has been difficulty getting medical treatment, and this is another complaint of the residents in the Burwash area.

I am going to leave that portion, and I will come back to the parole portion, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: On vote 402, the hon. member for Essex-Kent.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): I was just going to remark that this comes up under "county jails." Previously the county jail in Kent county was in Chatham, and I see the grand jury report says that about the only thing that the prisoners complained of was the lack of books for the library. I wonder sometimes, opening all the mail for members of the Legislature, whether we should not send all the surplus books to the jails. There might be some good reading material for these people; it is an idea. Otherwise the grand jury report was very well received, and so I just thought I would pass that along.

One thing that is bothering some of the municipalities is the charge now for holding prisoners. I notice here in the Windsor Star, one man pointed out it could be costly on weekends. Assume that a prisoner is arrested on Saturday night, appears before a provincial judge on Monday morning, and requests the postponement of his trial so he can secure legal aid. Is the $12-a-day charge going to be made on the municipality where he was arrested until the man comes to trial? This is something that some of the municipalities, in setting out their budgets, are a little confused about as they have not had this before. The county jails took care of this. So they are a little worried about that, the unknown.

Twelve dollars a day does seem a little high. In Kent county, for instance, the jail is 119 years old, but we have a nice new home for the aged where you can stay for $8 a day, so the costs just do not seem to jibe.

An hon. member: Maybe they have better meals there.

Mr. Ruston: Well, maybe they do have better meals. I do not think it is a better bed.

An hon. member: That is a good question.

Mr. Ruston: On jails in Windsor, I was wondering, through you, Mr. Chairman, about the registry office next to the jail there. There have been rumours for some time that probably there will be a new registry office built in the city of Windsor, and I wonder if this building could not be used for an annex to the jail, as probably a women's division, and probably for some administration. I would just throw that out, and you can maybe think about it in the future, because I think it has some merit, being so close to the other jail.

Mr. Chairman: Does the hon. Minister wish to reply?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes, Mr. Chairman, in all fairness I would reply to the member for Sudbury, who asked some very pointed questions.

First, he said the staff are all very satisfied. I do not agree with that, of course. I would not doubt that there are some who are dissatisfied; I would doubt that with pretty close to 4,000 employees we cannot find perhaps in many institutions some who are dissatisfied. I think this is natural. I can understand, too, that having had certain privileges over many years and having lost these privileges, there would be some dissatisfaction with this. I can understand that. But there is a very good reason for this, a very good reason.

As far as the road grading is concerned, I have heard this quite often and I am advised that the road is constantly being graded. We have our own equipment there and there is a constant grading of the roads. The previous member for that riding constantly pressured me for new roads and better roads and I was under the same pressure at that time. It was just a matter of the cost of it and where to put your priorities, and quite frankly, I must say again at this time, that there is no intention of building a new road.

The cost is tremendous. We made a survey of the Burwash roads on at least two occasions in order to arrive at an estimate. I think it was about two years ago that a survey indicated a cost of approximately $350,000 to pave six miles of road. Under the date of June 23, 1967, my Deputy Minister wrote to The Department of Public Works requesting a survey be made in order to update those estimated costs. The recent survey was made and we were advised that the cost, at that time, would be approximately $165,000 to pave just 2.5 miles of road from the entrance to the junction of the institution's village roads at the post office.

I say quite bluntly that if I can get $350,-

000 additional from the Treasury, or even $165,000 more, there are other priorities I would rather use it for in my department than in paving these roads in Burwash, even though we would like to have better roads there.

Mr. Martel: Could they not be kept better, though?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am advised they are being constantly graded. I remember the previous hon. member always complained about the conditions of the roads. I will be going to Burwash, I hope—I keep promising myself, every two or three months that I am going to get to Burwash, and then we have more institutions that need some attention. I have already been to Burwash, I think, three times—as a matter of fact the last time I looked at the roads, while I was not too happy with their condition, I still could not justify spending a tremendous amount of money.

Mr. Martel: I am not saying that, I mean everyday upkeep.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It will take a lot of money. The hon. member mentioned the closing of the personnel store which is obviously a great source of irritation, from what he tells me.

I think the position should be made very clear—that this personnel store was set up very many years ago when roads in this area were very bad, when few of the staff had cars. I do not know how many years ago that would be, probably 30 or 40 years ago, maybe 50; when, in fact the staff village at Burwash was quite isolated—this no longer pertains. A decision to close this store dates back to September, 1967, when a directive was issued to all institutions in our department advising that no further sales of government property in any form would be made to institution employees or any public servants.

I would like to advise the hon. members that this goes beyond just the very fact of providing a service per se. There are other implications which can arise from the trafficking, and I do not mean anything illegal. I mean the engaging in the sale of merchandise between the institutional staff and the institution. There have been many instances across the United States when this has caused a great deal of trouble. As a matter of fact, the hon. member might be surprised if I tell him, and this is not just necessarily in Burwash, about the number of letters we used to get from inmates who had some very strange stories to tell as to what their view was of a member of the staff bringing some provisions out of the departmental store.

There was no use trying to explain to that inmate that this was paid for by the member of the staff. To him it had connotations which went far beyond any semblance of truth. There are other implications. If I recall, three or four years ago the hon. member for Yorkview, or perhaps it was the hon. member for Riverdale, raised the question of the sale of leather goods which were made by inmates at one of our institutions to members of the staff. As a matter of fact, it was, I think, that occasion which caused me to go into the whole subject and regretfully, as a result of that, it was decided to eliminate this whole business.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): That was a completely different situation.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I know it was different, but other implications arose from this. It was a good thing to have inmates making things which they could sell and which they were encouraged to make by members of the staff and which the staff purchased from them. But there was always the implication that they were not paying a fair price for it.

The same thing applied in some institutions in respect of staff purchasing provisions from government stores, and it was decided in the interests of a better, a cleaner operation, that all of this cease. I think it was a good decision. I think it is best to keep this whole thing separated, so nobody misunderstands and no irregularities can creep in. As the head of the department, I am pleased that this is in effect and working well now.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Cleanest possible operation—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Pardon?

Mr. MacDonald: The cleanest possible operation is to do nothing.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: This is not a matter of just doing nothing, because there is a very good alternative for the staff at Burwash. The Burwash personnel store was closed on November 30, 1968. It was allowed to continue its operation until the new industrial block was completed, at which time the store's building which housed both the institutional stores and personnel store was to be demolished. This building, a wooden frame construction, was also in a very deteriorated condition; it presented an extreme fire hazard and with the closing of the personnel store at that time instructions to raze the building were issued.

It is important to realize—and the hon. member said I would mention this and I am going to mention it because I think it is germane to the whole discussion—it is important to realize the monthly sales at the former personnel store averaged out at approximately $20 per month per employee, which—

Mr. Martel: They cannot cash a cheque.

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—which makes it obvious that the staff had, for some time, been in the practice of shopping for the main purchases outside of Burwash. Now the hon. member has entered a new element into it tonight and I just mentioned that to my deputy who is sitting here. I said, here is a new element; he never mentioned cheques at any other time.

Mr. Martel: I have been speaking to these people. It is all coming to light.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I do not know what the hon. member expects. I do not know really whether this is such a great hardship, that they cannot cash a cheque. In the first place if they are going to go into town to do their purchasing it seems to me they will be able to cash a cheque there.

Mr. Martel: They had to go to town to cash a cheque.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If they are going into town to do their purchasing they would cash their cheques there, would they not?

Mr. Chairman, the fact is we have to have as much as possible, a standard for the whole system. The hon. member should also know that there were some complaints from other institutions about staff complaining about special privileges given to the Burwash staff.

Mr. Lewis: You just lectured me this afternoon about the special position of Burwash.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is right, and that is why we are retaining those things which we think are necessary to keep at Burwash because of their special position. I have just pointed out that they are obviously doing their shopping outside of Burwash, anyway.

Mr. Martel: They have to.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If their average purchasing was $20 per month per member of the staff, they must have obviously been doing most of their purchasing outside.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Let me finish the other questions asked. I should point out, too—for the benefit of the hon. member for Scarborough West—one of the great advantages they do have, of course, is the fact that they are getting very heavily-subsidized living accommodations. The hon. member knows that. I think it is worthwhile pointing this out because we do not like to take privileges away from staff which they have had for years.

On the other hand, I think if we had wanted to we could have properly raised their rent in accordance with the conditions to date. Living accommodation is rented to employees at a gross rental established by the civil service commission, less a percentage discount determined by such factors as:

1. Whether or not the employee is requested to live on the property.
2. The degree of private use and access.
3. The degree of privacy.
4. The type and size of the dwelling, and so on.

The average rental paid by employees for family units, that is, houses and apartments, is $38.58 per month, and for single quarters $13.79 per month. I think this is perfectly good evidence that in those matters in which we feel they require some special consideration because they are living in a special situation in a village composed completely of staff, we do give them special consideration, and that is pretty darn good special consideration.

Mr. Martel: Where else could they live.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: They could live in Sudbury, but since they are required to live there we are giving them this special accommodation and for the rents that I have mentioned, which is a pretty good advantage.

In respect, Mr. Chairman, of the medical situation, the practice of having the institution doctor look after the staff at Burwash and their families again dates back to the days when the village was very isolated. There were no other doctors in the vicinity and there were no medical service plans. With the advent of better roads, medical insurance claims, and so on, the need for this service was less apparent, and the institution staff medical plan was discontinued in 1967 for two reasons:

1. Because, of the commencement of the provincial employees group medical insurance plan which provides adequate medical insurance coverage to all staff and dependents.

2. Because we were one doctor short and the only doctor on staff felt that the volume of work was too much and it was all he could do to take care of the needs of the inmate population.

In fact, the doctor considered resigning, and he advised us of this, if it was necessary for him to continue to service the staff. He has remained with us and has, of course, agreed that he would be able to treat any emergency that should arise. I am sure if there is something very necessary by way of an emergency in respect of pills or medication of any kind which the doctor can provide and is necessary in an emergency, he will do it. This is what he has agreed to do, and if the hon. member can give me any evidence otherwise I would be very glad to look into it.

With respect to some of the questions the hon. member for Essex-Kent has asked. He asked about the jail at Chatham and the books. I do not know whether he recalls that the other night I sent him a list of the numbers of books which have now been provided by the department to all the jails—I think they numbered well over 4,000 and this is increasing almost weekly. I am sure he will find that all of the jails, if they are not already well supplied, will be amply supplied in a matter of weeks. Is it an ongoing thing which we just started when we took over the jails.

Now, insofar as the lockup prisoners are concerned, I think I had better read to the hon. member what the position is in this respect, as I understand there was some confusion in the minds of some of the members of the local municipalities in respect of this matter and we attempted to clear it up in a letter to them.

For the benefit of the hon. member I should advise that upon transfer of responsibility for certain aspects of the local administration of justice to the province, section 374 and other related sections of The Municipal Act were repealed.

Section 374 of The Municipal Act referred to charges for lockup facilities levied against the local municipalities by the county.

Section 14 of The Department of Correctional Services Act in effect, replaces that section, the difference being simply that charges for lockup services previously paid to the county by local municipalities will now be paid to the province.

I think that is eminently fair; since we took over the jails we should be getting the same revenue from those municipalities which do not have lockups and which were formerly paying the county.

For those hon. members who do not clearly understand what a lockup prisoner is—and there is a great deal of confusion about this—I have found this on the part of many and I hope the hon. members will not think I am talking down to them—there is a great confusion between the terms “penitentiary”, “reformatory”, “jail”, training centre”, “training schools” and “lockups”.

A “lockup” prisoner is a prisoner lodged in a jail by the police pending his appearance before a justice of the peace or magistrate. Upon being duly remanded or sentenced, a person ceases to be a lockup prisoner, and the responsibility for his maintenance becomes that of the province. He is now going into the jail after having been looked after in the lockup and when brought into the jail, he becomes a responsibility of ours.

Since an appearance before a justice of the peace or magistrate is mandatory within 24 hours of arrest, the cost involved never exceeds a one day charge per prisoner.

Mr. Ruston: What is the standard?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am advised that it still all occurs within 24 hours. The justice of the peace is provided and he is transferred within the 24 hours or immediately after the 24-hour period, so the same thing applies. If the hon. member can find any evidence otherwise I would be glad to look into that.

The per diem charge to municipalities will be equivalent to the department's average per capita cost of maintaining correctional institutions as calculated in our financial statements for the fiscal year ending March 31 of the calendar year for which the charges are levied. If the hon. member is interested I would be glad to read to him a letter which was sent out to all of the clerks and clerk-treasurers of the municipalities. Would he like me to read it and put it on the record or would he like me to send it over to him to examine?

Mr. Ruston: Mr. Chairman, I already have a copy of that. It is probably the same one dated November 28, 1968?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is right.

Mr. Ruston: Yes I have a copy of that.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That explained the system to the local municipalities. As far as the Windsor jail being combined with the registry office is concerned, I think they are using this in some other fashion—I think they said the registry for the women's section. I would have to look at it again. The last time I was in Windsor I had a hard time getting into the jail. I did get in but I do not remember what it was like. All I can say is that when the task force looks at it I will ask them to keep this idea in mind—perhaps it is feasible but we will have to await the report of that task force.

Mr. Chairman: On vote 402; the hon. member for Sudbury East.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Chairman, it is interesting to note that the Minister said that there were a few people that might be unhappy. The petition which I sent to him contains 250 names which included 95 families. Now this is a pretty good cross section of the total population of 750 that are rather unhappy.

Now the situation with the store—and the point that the Minister cannot seem to understand—if the residents had no way of cashing a cheque in Burwash then this meant they had to go to Sudbury. So, they cashed the cheque in Sudbury, but how could they get back to Burwash to shop, when the store in Burwash closed at 11.30 in the morning. They could not get a cheque cashed at the bank until 10.00 and they would have to be back in Burwash for 11.30 to do their shopping.

I mean you are killing it all along the way. The other interesting point, Mr. Chairman, is that many of these guards are working overtime and the Minister has to agree.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What about their days off duty?

Mr. Martel: I am coming to this. The majority of them have difficulty getting a day off, I am told, because the jail is understaffed and there is a great deal of overtime being paid. Even when the husbands are there they have to use their cars to get to places like Camp Bison, or just to get to the prison in Burwash itself. It means the men must use cars, and if a women runs out of a box of soap, what is she going to do. There is no public transit, how is she even going to get a box of soap to finish her washing? Does she travel 25 miles to get a box of soap?

There is just no store for her to make these purchases.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There is still a canteen which is run by the staff, I understand, and these small items I think are kept at the canteen. They can look after themselves in this respect. Again I tell the hon. member we cannot make any more exceptions than we have already provided for, because of the difficulties involved in running a department of this size. Incidentally, he has not mentioned the fact they do not have to go to Sudbury, there are stores in Estaire—what is that, five miles away?

Mr. Martel: Eight miles.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, I have heard three, I have heard five and now I have heard eight. I guess I will have to travel it myself.

Mr. Martel: The interesting part again though, Mr. Chairman, is that if the husband has the car at work, how is the housewife going to get to Estaire? Is she going to walk. We are fairly hardy in the north, you know, but this is stretching it to extremes.

The Minister has not mentioned the other things, he talks about privileges but this is a privilege these people went there with, that you have taken away from them, the same as the barber that you have taken away from them. It is an extreme condition, it is unique to the whole reform institution of which he is Minister. And therefore, because of its uniqueness, they should maintain the privileges which they were hired on to go there. These are the privileges that they went there under and now you are taking them away one at a time without even negotiating them—just telling them, arbitrarily, this is gone. Now, if this is the way to keep those people who are 25 miles away from the nearest city happy, it is sure a strange way of doing it.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask of the Minister when he plans on settling the problem of the employees at the Essex county jail.

When the jails were taken over on January 1, 1967, Mr. Chairman, the employees were working under a different type of a contract from what they have now. They have lost a lot of their fringe benefits and some of the wage increases that they were going to get from the municipality, and they have been negotiating with the department now I understand for well over 12 months without any satisfaction.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I have some of the facts that are involved in this particular situation. I do really think it is a proper matter for discussion in respect of my particular estimates. This is a matter which is taken up at the civil service commission level; it has to do with salaries, wages, fringe benefits and this sort of thing, and this is handled as a matter of general government policy, and I cannot really deal with it. It is being dealt with at the civil service commission level.

Mr. Lewis: This a brief footnote to my colleague, the member for Sudbury East; when was the Burwash Industrial Farm—is that what it is called?—when was it built?

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It was opened, I am advised, about 1913.

Mr. Lewis: There were some largely inaudible, incomprehensible and irrelevant interjections from one of the Minister's colleagues, I could not hear very well—1913? And why was it built in that area of the province?

Mr. Martel: The Minister would like to know.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I have some information which might be helpful. I would think from what I have in front of me here, that probably the theory at the time was that you opened them where the inmates could do a lot of forestry work, and this was a good place for it. And this is the reason it was built there, I guess.

Mr. Lewis: There was considerable hardwood available in that section of the province, I take it, then, in 1913.

I asked the question, Mr. Chairman, to make, I hope, the simple point that the essential problem with the speciality of Burwash and all the difficulties that flow from that, is its location in the province.

Mr. Chairman, if one talks about an enlightened correctional system, then the Minister does not encourage it. If he did, the Minister would not come in, estimate after estimate, year after year and allow the perpetuation of an isolated community whose amenities become evermore abstract from the people who live in that village and whose conditions internally for the residents are equally untenable, not only by the nature of the building they inhabit but by their own geographic isolation and the removal from other civilized centres in the vicinity.

What one is saying, Mr. Chairman, is that God only knows this Minister has, within his capacity in this department, the privilege of relocating his correctional centres.

There are reasonably modern methods in corrections, the Minister will grant me. It is not necessary in the year 1969 to perpetuate the absurdity of Burwash as a correctional service. I see no reason why one cannot relocate within the general geographic vicinity, still allowing people to maintain their jobs and livelihood in a more enlightened, more humane and more relevant kind of centre.

It attests to the paucity of thinking on the part of government that the only kind of centre that can be envisaged is this particular conglomerate which works against the residents and works against the people who serve them. And that is essentially at the root of all the Minister's problems.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I would let the hon. member's comments go without comment except that it may suggest that we are not aware of this, and that there is something we can do about it right away and yet are not doing about it. Of course, this is the problem with Burwash and I think I said the other day, the first day of my estimates, that if we were going to build it today we would not build it there. Perhaps what we have to do is accelerate what we are doing now, reducing its size.

As a matter of fact, there were three camps at Burwash at one time, now there are two. We are building forestry camps out of Burwash. The trouble is that there has been a great deal of taxpayers' money invested in many of these institutions. At Millbrook—there is a great deal of money invested in Camp Bison. I remember when I was there this was a relatively new building. I do not know what this cost it must have cost many millions of dollars. And you just do not throw the taxpayers' money down the drain that way.

Again it is a matter of priorities. We need a lot of new jails. We need a lot of new regional detention centres. We need some new training schools. We need all sorts of things. And having regard for these priorities, we carry out a programme which is designed in the overall to accomplish what we want to do.

We have reduced the population at Guelph 300, we have reduced the population of Burwash 200, and all I can say is I agree with the member in respect of the problem, the location of Burwash. But we cannot start tomorrow and rebuild everything, because it would cost hundreds, literally hundreds of millions of dollars. We are doing it at a pace which I think the hon. member cannot say is too slow, having regard for the financial ability of the people to pay for it.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, it is certainly not too slow having regard for the correctional concept which this department advocates. Within that context, it is entirely acceptable and one could predict its slow evolution. But that is where we part company.

The investment of the tens of millions of dollars in these non-functioning institutional monoliths, destructive of the people in them and of those who work there as well, is an inheritance not only from this government but of previous governments. But, Mr. Chairman, the terms the Minister uses, "the jails," "the training schools," "the camps," the terms themselves, reveal a corrections mentality that suggests that that is the environment where rehabilitation of the offender takes place.

It seems to me that in very short order it would be possible to effect around the province of Ontario a number of community settings of very small cottage units—I do not like the word cottage—even smaller than that—which are in some ways now available, and in other areas could be very quickly constructed to revolutionize the correctional system. In very short order, certainly in very short order—in a matter of 18 months; a year to 18 months.

The simple proposition is that when a government such as this government mis-manages finances in the way it does; seeks so many distorted priorities, implements so much absurdity through its budget and through some of the tax bills which we were viewing this afternoon, of course one has to think in terms of total reconstruction.

The money would be available to you. This is not the estimate to discuss it in, obviously, but even within the limited funds you now have, it is possible to transform radically your whole correctional field, except for the absolutely irretrievable tie which the department has for what was ancient and self-defeating.

Until you are ready to revolutionize your entire corrections environment, then you will always feel stifled about the proposition of never having enough money, or feeling that a change will take decades, or feeling that it will cost tens of millions of dollars. It need not cost tens of millions of dollars at all. We have enough experience in this Legislature to know that certain government departments which have put out millions of dollars for buildings supposedly to treat people, can achieve the same thing in other ways at one-tenth of the cost, providing one has a different conceptual framework.

Now it may be that the Minister is having trouble with his own Treasury Board, I am willing to concede that there is probably resistance from the Minister of Energy and Resources, whose capacity to view this field would be non-existent. But there are others in the Treasury benches who might support the Minister if he put this toughly enough and vigorously enough and told them that ultimately one saves money if there is not this absurd reliance on the present structure.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Dovercourt was trying to get the floor before.

Mr. De Monte: Mr. Chairman, to the Minister, through you, I notice from looking on page 100 of the report that of the offences for which people were committed to the city, county and district jails, 27,427 were committed for offences under The Liquor Control Act, and 4,201 were committed under The Highway Traffic Act. My question is, did these people committed spend one day in the county jails for which the cities were required to pay?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Many of these municipalities have their own lockups, as the hon. members knows. The City of Toronto, for example, Hamilton, I believe. Many of them have their own lockups, so if they spend one day they spend it in the local lockup. I do not know whether I have understood the question completely. Is he asking me whether, in fact, some of them have to spend that day in the county jail instead of the local lockup?

Mr. De Monte: I imagine the majority of them would, would they not?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Not necessarily, not the majority. Some of them do because the local municipality, not having a lockup, will rent the space, as it were, from the county jail, and there is a section set aside for this purpose. Of course, when the regional detention centre programme is set up and goes into effect, this will all be improved because of the structural nature of the centre.

Mr. De Monte: I was wondering, Mr. Chairman, does the Minister have the number of people that were locked up for these offences in the jails under his jurisdiction, or lockups under his jurisdiction?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The hon. member will find this on page 103 of the annual report, in which it shows the number committed during the year for indictable offences, and all of the other information he is requiring.

Mr. De Monte: You are referring to the non-indictable offences, I take it—being locked up for non-indictable offences? No? But the point is this, Mr. Minister—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I know that if you read the report—here you are, the number of non-indictable offences in the second column on the same page.

Mr. De Monte: Yes, I see that. But the point is this, Mr. Chairman, of the people locked up—and we do not know how many were really locked up for these offences in the institutions under the Minister's control—only 4,977 were sent to jail for any length of time. I am wondering if, and perhaps this is not the time to discuss this, but I am wondering if a better bail system were instituted at the police stations where police sergeants could give bail, we could not cut down the costs of these lockups for these offences such as drunk offences, and driving offences, for which the person is being locked up for an offence that is not basically criminal, more or less a moral offence. I was wondering whether he has discussed this with the persons concerned so that we could cut down the cost for the lockups.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, this has been discussed and I would be quite happy—the more improvement there is in the bail system, of course. It is better for more reasons than just cutting down of expense of keeping them in an institution. I think the hon. member will agree, as a lawyer, that the bail system has been liberalized considerably in the last year or so, and I look forward to a further liberalization, while it is not within my jurisdiction.

And I am sure the hon. member appreciates this. There is a more intensive look being given at the whole bail system, and more bail is being granted where it appears it should be granted and could be granted without any risks involved.

Mr. De Monte: I am glad for the Minister's remarks, Mr. Chairman, but time and time again you go down to the lockups in the city hall and the magistrates courts, and you see men who have been locked up for a day or a week because they have been drunk. I know this is not the Minister's department but the point is this, the cost involved in locking these people up must be quite high in his department, and could be probably cut down if we changed the philosophy of the bail magistrates and the police so that these people could be let out on their own bail, not any bail.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Would the hon. member discuss this under the estimates of The Department of the Attorney General?

Mr. Chairman: I recognize the hon. member for Scarborough Centre unless she wishes to yield the floor to one of the other three or four hon. members who were up.

Mrs. M. Renwick (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Chairman, I would like to go back to the comments of the member for Sudbury East when he mentioned that the men were having difficulty getting a day off in the institution. I would like to ask the Minister, is the institution some number of positions vacant at the present time?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: My deputy advises that we are practically up to strength at this present time.

Mr. Young: What is practically?

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, having been concerned about a provincial institution this last week that government are running with a vacancy of eight posts that were quite important posts, I would like to ask how many positions are vacant and in what capacity these people would be operating?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am waiting for my deputy to get this information.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I have a second question if the member from Brantford will allow me. I would like to go back to this afternoon, to when the Minister was discussing the halfway houses, the St. Leonard's House and so on, and ask if you have a figure on the number of persons who passed through those halfway houses this past year for rehabilitation.

Mr. Chairman: I think that this properly comes under the after-care of adults and offenders, parole, etc., and we had agreed to discuss this under one grouping if the hon. member will save it until then.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I do not think that will be a question for my estimates anyway. The Department of Social and Family Services, which provides the grants, will probably be getting this information from the halfway houses, because they pay—it is paid on a per diem, so they can figure that out very easily.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, then I would like to say with all respect to the Minister, are you really saying that rehabilitation is not your concern, it is the concern of the Minister of Social and Family Services?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Of course, that is not what I am really saying. We have a rehabilitation staff and we do a great deal of rehabilitation and after-care work. We do a great deal of it, but there are private halfway houses which co-operate with us and we co-operate with them and they do the work which they feel they are able to do, and that does not mean that we are not interested. We are a great deal interested in them. If we were not, they would not be getting grants from the government.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Well, Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out to the Minister that part of my work in the last session and certainly more in this session will be asking for the government to work more closely with private agencies because the private agencies are very often working under severe hardship. They are working under skimpy funds in many cases, or short staffed and losing their good staff. And I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that as Minister of Correctional Services, the number of people who are being successfully rehabilitated through any form whatsoever in the province are his concern, even if the money is in fact coming from another department.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I am afraid I just cannot let that go by either. I was answering the hon. member the question as to numbers. I do not have those numbers. I think I mentioned the other day—if I did I will repeat it and if I did not, I will now say it—that we are much interested and we are now carrying on research with halfway houses and their effectiveness and the different kinds of halfway houses so that we can, in fact, establish just what the hon. member is referring to—just what is the most effective way in which we could carry on our after-care service and rehabilitation service generally.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask then, is that part of that service, part of that research? Will it be considered how many of these people are second offenders and how many were successfully rehabilitated? Will it actually find out how much good has come from these halfway houses?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I would hope so.

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): Mr. Chairman, on page 98 of the report the Minister indicates that 615 prisoners were released from jails on the payment of fines. Obviously this is a pretty sad commentary on our so-called equality before the law, because it seems to me these people were in jail because they did not have the money. Could the Minister indicate what the average length of stay was in jail for these people and how many people are in jail right now because they could not pay their fines? Also, would the Minister consider the possibility of providing some type of employment for these people so when they are in jail, they could possibly work their fines off, either in factories or through some arrangements made by his department, so that they do not have to remain in the jails for a period of time simply because they do not have the money?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, that is The Attorney General's Department.

Mr. Chairman: I would think that is so.

Mr. Makarchuk: Mr. Chairman, at least the Minister could give me the figures, then. How many people are in jail right now who are there because they could not pay their fines, and what is the average length of stay in jail?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I do not know. I do not see, Mr. Chairman, how I would have those figures. If a man does not pay a fine in the court, he is committed to the institution and all we have is a warrant of committal. I am advised that the warrant of committal does state that it is in lieu of the fine.

Mr. Makarchuk: The Minister does indicate in his report the number of people who are discharged on payment of fines last year, which was 615 people. What I want to know is whether somewhere, in his pile of figures, he may have an idea as to how many people are in jail right now because they could not pay their fines.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We do not have that, but I think the hon. member has raised a good point. I will give that same serious consideration by way of trying to compile those figures so we could have them in our report, in future.

Mr. Young: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the Minister has the figures that the member for Scarborough Centre asked for a moment ago?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There are five vacancies at Burwash.

Mr. Young: The establishment is—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It is 308.

Mr. Young: And only five vacancies at the moment. Well, Mr. Chairman, that looks like a fairly good record then—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It does not look like they are unhappy there.

Mr. Lewis: They have no superintendent—

Mr. Young: It may be that the figures the Minister gave us for housing and the rent they are paying may have some bearing on this, and I think that is an inducement which is justified here, and a good inducement. I am wondering though, Mr. Chairman, through you, whether or not these people have not a real grievance, in the sense that when they came there and now they are locked in by low rents and so on. Perhaps they have some real interest in their jobs—I presume they have—but when they came there they had these services, the ability to buy certain commodities right there on the premises. Now that has been done away with.

I wonder if there is not some real justification for allowing a private individual to start a store on a basis on which any other merchant would start one. There may not be enough customers there, I do not know, but you can see all kinds of small corner stores in cities, small stores out in the country areas where populations are smaller than this. Would it not be possible for a private person to move into a situation like that, pay his normal rent and have a chance to provide services? This may have been explored by the Minister, but this was the question which I think the hon. member was trying to get at.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Sudbury East, I think, did raise the question of this possibility. There were some implications in this with which we had to concern ourselves. I cannot recall what all of them were. I think one of them was what repercussions there would be to bringing in someone to operate a store on government property to compete with, say, the store in Estaire, where there is a store run by a taxpayer who is paying taxes and who would be in competition with a store on government property.

Mr. Young: You would charge him rent!

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There is the other implication too. As I mentioned earlier, I am happy that we are not involved with any of these kinds of transactions within a penal system, even though we are talking about the staff, because there are other implications I would rather not discuss. Someone may take this as a personal affront and I do not want to give any particular person, any particular member of the staff, the impression that I feel they would abuse it. It is just better, we feel, in a correctional institution, to avoid all of this kind of commerce.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 402?

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): Mr. Chairman, I do not want the vote to pass, and I am sure it will not, without my indicating to the Minister that I do not agree, I do not accept at all, his proposition that the matter of the adjustments asked by the employees of the Essex county jail in Windsor are not properly before this committee. They may not be properly before the committee insofar as the staff relations branch of the Treasury Board, as the collective bargaining agent on behalf of the government, in its relationship with that particular group of employees, and the efforts of the two sides—the government as employer and the employees in their association—to work out differences which still exist between them as a result of the transfer of the county jail employees to the provincial payroll on January 1, 1968. But I do want to say to the Minister that, recognizing that the responsibility for the collective bargaining aspect of this problem rests with the staff relations branch of the Treasury, the Minister himself cannot slough off the implications for morale and staff commitment to their jobs insofar as they are affected by the lingering on of these outstanding issues.

I want to raise these matters when we come back to the Treasury Department estimates, Mr. Chairman, but on this other aspect, I wish to remind the Minister that while the particular collective bargaining relationship may be one coming under the aegis of The Treasury Department, the failure of that relationship to satisfy the needs of the employees for equity, security and commitment to their employment is one which is his direct responsibility. Insofar as those objectives are not satisfied, it is the Minister's responsibility to go to the Treasury Board to see if there are ways in which they can be worked out monetarily.

I am speaking somewhat in the abstract when I put that to the Minister. I have gone into the calculations used by the Treasury Board to establish the compensation which the board felt would be appropriately paid to certain groups of employees in the former county and municipal jail staff, following the transfer. In the case of the transfer of the Essex county jail employees to the provincial payroll, while an overall resolution of the problem may have been achieved, there are nonetheless individual employees in that jail, as I am sure there are in many other jails around the province, who as individual employees did not receive particular recognition for the coverages, the fringe benefits, which they themselves lost. Insofar as that loss has not been made up—it has not been satisfied monetarily or in any other way—wherever that deficit still remains, then surely the Minister has to take it into account in assessing the morale of his staff, and their capacity for carrying out the work which he assigns to them.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, of course it would concern me. I did not say it did not concern me; I said the particular question the hon. member asked was properly a question which has to be answered by the Minister answering for the civil service commission.

We make our representations to the civil service commission. We let them know that some of our employees feel that in the calculation of the changeover, they were not properly dealt with. You have to be a statistician, you have to be an economist, you have to be an expert in this sort of thing to calculate the benefits that they derive from the changeover, and balance that off against any losses they may have had in benefits as against their previous contract.

We are not in a position to do this. There are people in the department of the civil service commission who are experts at calculating these things. We just have to take their word for it—if they have seen how we calculated everything here, and we say that they have been treated exactly evenly, or they are ahead $150, or they are behind $110 or something of that nature.

As a matter of fact, the hon. member says he imagines there are quite a few across the province. I rather imagine that most of the jail employees had tremendous increases as a result of being taken over by the province, because they are about up to the level of the highest. So I do not think that holds true. Of course, that is not my concern or responsibility. All I am telling the hon. member is that I am not in a position to do anything other than what we have done, and that is, bring it to the attention of those who have the responsibility for calculating all of these benefits, and leave it to their experience and ability to come up with the right answer.

Mr. Chairman: The member for High Park.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Minister one or two brief questions about some of the specific jails and reformatories under his control.

We will start with the Perth provincial jail which I had the opportunity to visit fairly recently. One of the first complaints which I have noticed is that visitors can see the prisoners but not vice versa. The set-up has been made in such a strange way that the light goes in only one direction, so the prisoners cannot see who is visiting them.

I complained about another jail last year where there was a similar situation, and I want to know what, if anything, you are doing about this particular problem?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Again, all I can answer to the hon. member is that all of these matters are being considered by the task force covering all of the jails, and I also must advise the hon. member that there are certain jails which are going to be closed. I do not know whether or not Perth is one of them at the moment; this will be recommended by the task force.

So where he is saying that there is no action being taken? It may very well be that that particular jail is going to be one of those which is going to be closed up. On the other hand, if it is not, then the task force is looking at all these. There might already have been a considerable amount of renovating taking place, as is presently the situation at many of the jails.

Mr. Shulman: Oh, yes. One year ago we raised this very point. It is not going to take a great deal of expense. All it needs is a saw to cut out those peculiar bars that you put in there so that the prisoners can see their visitors. Why can you not do that now; this is not a matter of money, it is a matter of a simple change? You could do that tomorrow if you issued the instruction—you could do it yourself; in fact it might be good exercise for you!

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Ask whether the hon. member is referring to Perth county or Perth town.

Mr. Shulman: The jail is provincial. I am sorry, I missed one, I guess; when I was going through; I am describing the Perth provincial jail. It is the one near Stratford.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Stratford?

Mr. Shulman: Yes.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 402?

Mr. Shulman: Oh, it is too late. I have got several hours' work here concerning jails. Are we getting anything more on this problem? Are you going to look into this specific problem?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Every jail is being looked at—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please!

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If the hon. member is going to give me a list of jails, he might as well save himself the trouble; we are looking at every jail.

Mr. Shulman: But you said that last year.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is right, and we have been inspecting a lot of jails. There are 35 county and two city jails.

Mr. Lewis: Tell us what they look like.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am told here that the estimated costs of the projects have been approved at this jail. They are going to point the exterior jail walls, $600; install visiting facilities, $2,000.

Mr. Shulman: When is this going to be done?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Install floor covering, $900; install protective corridor screens, $800; and the total estimated cost of planned projects in that particular jail is $4,300.

Mr. Shulman: When are you going to do it?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I imagine shortly, because they are working in all the jails.

Mr. Shulman: Before next year's estimates? All right, there was one he did not mention in that in reference to Perth provincial jail near Stratford—the doctor's office, which is a disgrace. It consists of a bare chair and table, nothing else; no possible facilities for doing a proper examination.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There are a lot of jails like that.

Mr. Shulman: I know there are a lot of jails like that.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: And we are fixing them up.

Mr. Shulman: All right.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: And in respect of the task force, I am also advised that the inspection of all of these jails to see what needs to be done is influenced by our medical director visiting every jail in the province to report on matters of this nature.

Mr. Shulman: Here is another matter which has to do with policy and refers to the doctor up in Perth. For some reason there is a very funny set-up where he gets paid $15 for the first prisoner he examines and then $3 for each subsequent one. Because of this rather intriguing piecework basis, Mr. Chairman, the doctor is not anxious to come out to the jail until there are a number of prisoners piled up for him, because it is hardly worthwhile to come out and see two prisoners when he gets paid only at the rate of $9 a prisoner.

Apparently it takes very little time for those examinations and he likes to work on a massive basis. Now, this is obviously wrong. If an examination is worth $15 for one prisoner, it is not worth $3 for the next. Why is this peculiar arrangement set up?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am advised that all the arrangements and the arrangements made with the doctors at the county jails were worked out by our medical director with the particular doctors, and presumably this is the way they want to work it. I cannot give any advice as to whether the doctor is prepared and perhaps prefers to work this way; I do not know. But the medical director went out and negotiated this with the local doctor. I have just been handed a note that this was negotiated with that particular doctor at the doctor's request. That is probably the only way we could get a doctor in there.

Mr. Shulman: The problem in this circumstance is that the doctor is not coming out every time a prisoner is admitted.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: All we can do is get the medical services which are available in the particular area. We have a great number of problems at local jails because there are not all the doctors available that we would like. There are doctors who do not want to come in and give the service that we require, and we are glad to get any doctor to come in under a situation like this. We are just as happy he comes this way rather than not come at all.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It is not a question of money at all.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please! The member for Port Arthur.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, I have not finished.

Mr. Chairman: I caught the eye of the member for Port Arthur. We can come back to you.

Mr. R. H. Knight: (Port Arthur): Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Shulman: How can I lose the floor, Mr. Chairman?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please!

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, if the Chairman wants the House to enter a state of disarray then he is inviting it. The member has the floor and he has not given up the floor. He is engaged in an exchange with the Minister; he has the right to finish that exchange.

Mr. Ruston: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I take strong exception to that. In this area I have noticed for the last two hours the Chairman has been facing that way and there is very little opportunity for anyone sitting here to get the eye of the Chairman. I think it is time the Chairman did turn around and give someone else the opportunity.

Mr. Shulman: I will be perfectly happy to yield the floor to the member for Port Arthur if you will allow me to finish Perth jail and I would be only too glad to yield to him.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Knight: I will yield to the hon. member, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Shulman: The other matter I wanted to ask about is in reference to the Perth jail, Mr. Chairman; in relation to the toilet and water facilities. This is not one of the things the Minister mentioned in his list of things that are going to be done at that jail. There are no toilets in cells, there are no water facilities in cells. In fact, I am embarrassed to tell you that the cells are a replica of the dungeon maintained in Joliet, which I told you about to show how people were kept in that area in prehistoric days. Why can you not do something in that jail? Since obviously you are not going to tear it down, why cannot you do something, if necessary with prisoner employees—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It is not obvious that we are not going to tear it down.

Mr. Shulman: If you are going to tear it down so you are going to tear it down. If you are not, it is not proper to keep human beings in the way you are keeping them there, in dungeons with no water facilities. So I am going to ask you now—are you going to do anything about that particular problem?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We just took the jails over last July, 37 of them, and we are moving as fast as we can.

Mr. Shulman: Yes, but what is disturbing is you have just read the list of things your task force says are going to be done in that jail, and you have not mentioned one of the essential things—and this is one of the essential things—which is treating these people like human beings.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: This is what the task force reported needs to be done immediately.

Mr. Shulman: And this needs to be done immediately. Send your task force back to take another look.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I imagine a lot of things have to be done.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Port Arthur.

Mr. Knight: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. The matter I am concerned with at this moment, and which I would like to broach the Minister on, is the matter of notoriety—which I think becomes the major obstacle to the rehabilitation of any prisoner—and I wonder if it would be acceptable to discuss this under this particular vote?

Mr. Chairman: I am not sure what the member means by notoriety.

Mr. Knight: Notoriety, the bad reputation that the prisoner gains through press and news reports and so forth that lasts with him all the days of his imprisonment and comes back to haunt him when he is back in the free world. I think his biggest difficulty in getting a job is being able to face friends and being able to be a real man again. It is notoriety, and I am interested in knowing what programmes or what advancement this department is having in this phase of rehabilitation.

Mr. Chairman: I feel that the member would be more in order under the next vote which specifically deals with rehabilitation.

Mr. Knight: Of juveniles.

Mr. Chairman: No, no. We have split this vote in two.

Mr. Knight: Oh, I see. Thank you.

Mr. Chairman: This brings us back to the member for High Park.

Mr. Shulman: Well, let us go to the Middlesex County jail. Mr. Chairman, the Middlesex County jail needs a stove. They have a very serious problem in that they do not have a stove and because they do not have this stove they are being forced to prepare their food under very strange circumstances. Apparently they have made numerous requests for a stove. Could the Middlesex County jail get a stove?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, with all due respect, I think it is a complete waste of time of this House for the hon. member to bring in individual cases in each jail. As I said there are 37 jails we took over; we have people covering all of the jails, examining and deciding what needs to be done in each jail, and this is not just window dressing, there is action taking place.

There must be 12 or 15 jails at the moment having work done in them. I have been in a half dozen of them myself, and there is no use going into every little item because every little item in each one of these jails is not going to be fixed; it would be impossible to do all of this, and it would be foolish to do it in some instances because some of them are going to be replaced in the foreseeable future, so I think it is wasteful of the time of the House to go into things like whether this particular jail is going to get a stove, and that sort of thing.

Incidentally, I have just been told we have already bought one and it is in there.

Mr. Shulman: It is four months since I have been there. I am delighted that things are happening.

An hon. member: Would the stove have been there if you had not gone, though?

Mr. Shulman: Well, perhaps that has some effect. I hope so, Mr. Chairman. The other thing that I found rather odd—there is a huge sign which you will run into at the Middlesex County jail which says “visiting—male inmates, 2 to 4 p.m., female inmates, 4 to 4.30 p.m.”

Would the Minister explain to me, why the restricted time for females to have their visitors?

Mr. Chairman: On vote 402?

Mr. Shulman: Wait, please, I have asked a question.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: This may have something to do with the physical structure of that jail—when the male inmates are being visited and when the female inmates are being visited—it may have something to do with the particular structure of the jail. I could not tell the hon. member that. If he wants this information we will make a note of that and I will let him have the information.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, to carry on with Middlesex County jail, I find disturbing again—I hope the Minister has a list of things they are doing in Middlesex—but once again there are no toilets available and once again we have these terrible dungeons which we have talked about so many times. Is it in the Minister’s plan to do something about the water system in the Middlesex County jail?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I can just answer as I have before, Mr. Chairman, that we are doing everything we can with the money available to fix up the old jails until the time they are going to be replaced.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Minister, through you, why radios are forbidden in the Middlesex County jail?

Mr. Lewis: They would not want any modern technological devices in there.

Mr. Shulman: Is the Minister going to answer that question?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It may again have something to do with a particular aspect of that particular jail.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, I am sure even the Minister realizes the foolishness of that answer.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I would hope, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member would realize the foolishness of asking me most of these questions on really unimportant matters on 82 institutions, most of which we have just taken over a few months ago. Having regard for the answer I have given him earlier, it is going to be impossible to answer these kind of questions in detail.

If he is asking me whether it is the policy of the department that no institutions have any radios the answer is no.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, first of all I must reply to this. This may be an unimportant matter to the chief guard but it is very, very important to the prisoners who are in these jails and have nothing to do. Many of them, as he knows, are on remand or on appeal, or have not been convicted, and a radio or a television set is a very, very pleasant way of passing the time of day. For him to say it is unimportant and to slough it off like that is completely unreasonable.

However, we know where he stands. Let us go on to something more essential. Perhaps in talking of defending the indefensible, which is what he is doing constantly, I am coming to Peel County jail. I had not really intended to visit that jail because a good job was done by the grand jury who visited the jail, examined it, and made their report on October 7, 1968. This report, which I have here, begins, “It is hard to express the utter distaste this monstrous anachronism arouses” and it goes on describing this horrible, horrible place.

Finally, I will not take the time of the House to read the whole report, it is similar to many others—there is one thing which it says here which I found very disturbing, not just the fact that this occurred but the fact that the Minister’s department would attempt to defend this. One prisoner suspected of suffering from hepatitis was confined for the good of the other prisoners in the detention cell. Actually this is a dungeon. There was no light. It was in the lowest level of the building and it was explained ordinarily vegetables were stored in this cell. Obviously there are no isolation facilities other than this cell.

What do we find in the paper a few days later? I have here the Oakville Record for November 6, 1968, and the heading is “Investigation Into Peel Jail Proves Grand Jury Report False”, and I quote:

A report that a prisoner suffering from hepatitis was placed in what was described as a dungeon without light in a Peel County jail has been described as false by the Provincial Department of Correctional Services following its investigation of the case.

The case was originally reported last month by a grand jury in its report submitted to Mr. Justice Stewart at the sessions of the Supreme Court.

Inspector Harry Hughes of The Department of Correctional Services said that certain charges in the grand jury report were found to be untrue. He said the cell where the hepatitis victim was placed was larger than normal. It had a window which allowed in fresh air and light. He said the cell had a high ceiling.

Hughes said the investigation revealed that the officer in charge did all he could in the situation. He pointed out the prisoner told him of his illness at 2.30 a.m.

The officer accepted the prisoner's statement and felt he had to segregate him from the other convicts. He then put him in the best cell that was available. During the day a doctor came to see the prisoner and he was transferred to a hospital.

Well, the member for Lakeshore and I were rather curious as to how a grand jury could see a jail cell that looked like a dungeon and the department get up and say it is a great huge cell with lots of light. We went and we looked at that cell and the grand jury had told the truth and the department again had defended the indefensible by glossing over the truth—I could use a stronger word.

This room, if one can use that word, is nothing more or less than a dungeon. It is in the basement. It is true there is a window, a little window similar to the window that Jean Val Jean had in that great movie they made about a prison in Paris, high up, the size of an envelope, a little light filters through. This room is nothing more or less than a dungeon. We expect better from this department. We do not expect you to get up and lie and defend things like this. We expect the truth.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Now the member is using the word "lie".

Mr. Lewis: That is an appropriate word for the circumstance.

Mr. Shulman: The Minister should accept the truth and do something about it, not try and gloss it over for the sake of the public.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Do something about what?

Mr. Shulman: We are talking about the cell in the cellar of the Peel county jail. And let me tell you some more about the Peel county jail; I am sure you will not want to hear it, but this is what we saw, this is not in the grand jury report.

In these cells, in these dungeons that they have, they have bare metal beds, no mattresses; no plumbing. The kitchen is too small and is downstairs. The staff want to shift it upstairs where the food is stored but they cannot do that because the stove is too small. The result is the prisoners get their food cold.

Another thing which occurs there and which I find difficult to undersand is that no tobacco is given to sentenced prisoners unless they have cash themselves to purchase it and they are limited to a pack daily. Would the Minister please explain, in addition to these other things, why this particular aggravation is further visited on the prisoners at that particular jail?

Mr. Chairman: Is vote 402 agreed to?

Mr. Shulman: Whoa, I have asked a question, Mr. Chairman, please.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I have a hard time keeping up, these charges are flying so fast.

Mr. Shulman: They are not charges.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: While I am trying to get an answer to one question, the hon. member is throwing another. What particular—

Mr. Shulman: I am asking about the Peel county jail, and to make it easy for the Minister, Mr. Chairman, I will give him the questions one at a time.

What is being done about the dungeon in the cellar?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, earlier I mentioned that on a number of occasions in this House I have announced that this particular jail was one of those high on the priority list for replacement. I visited this jail four or five weeks ago. There are many changes which should take place in the meantime.

As a matter of fact, we had some ideas of our own on the subject and some changes are going to be made. For example, the hon. member raises the question of mattresses and beds. One of our institutions is now in the process of manufacturing new beds and mattresses for all of the jails. I have been told that the new beds have already been delivered to the Brantford jail. All these things take time.

Mr. Shulman: Well, does it take time to buy mattresses? Why can you not buy mattresses for those metal cots. Do they have to lie on metal cots until the department can manufacture mattresses? Does the Minister not have the money to buy mattresses?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Because we want to buy mattresses that fit the beds we are making now for all of the jails, so we will not have to replace mattresses shortly too.

Mr. Lewis: Do not ever let the people fit the bed, be sure that the beds fit the people.

Mr. Shulman: Am I to understand you are unable to buy mattresses of the proper size at the present time, is that what the Minister is saying?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If we bought the mattresses that are going to fit the new beds we are manufacturing, they might not necessarily fit the beds which are in the jails at the present time. Now is that fairly clear?

Mr. Shulman: Well, inasmuch as you have manufactured some mattresses, could you please take the trouble to take the mattresses out of the jails where you have sent the new mattresses and the new beds and send them down to Peel county so these men do not have to lie on the concrete or on the steel frames. Is this too much to ask?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: All these things are being attended to, Mr. Chairman, in all of the jails.

Mr. Shulman: We will see next year. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask through you to the Minister, why do we have peculiar tobacco regulations in this particular jail? When I say "peculiar" I mean different from the other jails. No tobacco is issued to any prisoner after sentence unless he has the money to purchase it; and they are limited to one pack a day.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That regulation, of course, is in existence in all jails; you have to buy your own tobacco.

Mr. Shulman: I believe the Minister stated the other day that tobacco is issued to every prisoner—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In the reformatories.

Mr. Shulman: And this does not apply to jails?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No. We just took over the jails.

Mr. Shulman: Well, how long does it take to make a change like that? Do you need a task force to advise you on that?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Does the hon. member suggest that after we take over the jails and when we are considering a major change, we change something temporarily and then make another change later?

Mr. Shulman: Well, Mr. Chairman, it is very difficult to understand this Minister, but let us come back to Burwash—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It has already been provided for in the estimates, we are now talking about. So all inmates will be looked after in that fashion.

Mr. Shulman: When will that go into effect, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In about three months.

Mr. Shulman: Thank you.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The member was not listening to my speech yesterday.

Mr. Shulman: I paid very good attention to it, I found it most enjoyable.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to come back to Burwash and add just a few words to what my colleague, the member for Sudbury East had to say about that institution.

I have a copy here of a certain Toronto newspaper dated February 24, 1969, and it lists the number of the complaints of the guards up at Burwash and there are one or two of them I find rather intriguing and I would like to ask the Minister about them.

One of the guards, by the name of William Courier, objected that employees at penal institutions living in single quarters are dismissed if they take liquor into their residences.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The hon. member for Sudbury East asked that question earlier and got an answer.

Mr. Shulman: Well, I am sorry I missed that. Would the Minister mind answering it again?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Would the hon. member just wait for a couple of days and read it in Hansard? It was a rather lengthy answer. The hon. member for Sudbury East, I think, was quite happy with the answer.

Mr. Lewis: He was positively delirious.

Mr. Shulman: All right, let that go.

I am sorry I missed the comment of the member for Sudbury East. Did he also go into the matter of the guards' complaints—specifically the complaint of Mr. C. A. Edwards—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Shulman: I was away for 45 minutes, the hon. member has been away for 45 days.

The complaint of guard C. A. Edwards that he ran into trouble with the security sergeant when he went into a Sudbury bar and had a drink, because the lady who was sitting at the table with him later turned out to be the wife of an inmate at Burwash. If that has been covered already, I will not belabour it, but if it has not—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, it has not.

Mr. Shulman: Well then, will the Minister please explain to me this interesting regulation?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Would the hon. member not think that it is the responsibility of the staff of a correctional institution to do his best to see that a member of the staff does not associate, particularly in a matter of this nature, with the wife of an inmate; does he not appreciate what this could cause? Surely he would think this would be the responsibility of the sergeant or anyone else in the institution to ask questions about this?

Mr. Shulman: Well, I am sorry, perhaps the incident appeared more serious to you than to me. As I understand the circumstances—as it is reported here in the Telegram, the guard went in without knowing of any connection whatsoever, had this drink, and subsequently was called in and questioned rather closely about it, because someone recognized this woman.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: All they did was warn the man.

Mr. Lewis: What a reversal.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is not a reversal at all. They found this had happened and he was warned that this was not the proper thing for him to do; and it is not a proper thing for him to do. Now, what would you expect the officer at the institution to do?

Mr. Shulman: I do not wish to belabour it. I do wish to belabour something at Burwash though, and that is a matter which you have been saying is sub judice, and it is no longer sub judice, thank goodness.

A few weeks ago a rather shocking incident occurred at Burwash and perhaps now it is no longer sub judice, you will be willing to talk about it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am not willing to talk about this matter.

Mr. Shulman: It was thrown out today.

Mr. Lewis: The charges were dismissed.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Two men were acquitted but there are still other cases pending. If the member wants to take the responsibility that is his business.

Mr. Shulman: I am not talking about two men, I am talking about Steven Ford and I am going to talk about—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, I am just trying to tell the hon. member, I am advised by my staff that even if he refers to the two who were acquitted, it relates to the case that is before the courts, and I think perhaps the hon. member for Riverdale will bear me out that it should not be discussed. If the hon. member wants to discuss it, he may discuss it, but I certainly, in my position, do not intend to discuss it at all.

Mr. Shulman: But this case has been dismissed; it is dismissed, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: Order please. If there is any case that is before the courts that has not been decided and completely taken care of, even though one or two persons involved may have been acquitted, it is the opinion of the Chair that the whole matter is before the courts and is sub judice and should not be discussed in this House.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, may I explain, that a certain individual was charged with a certain crime. His case was heard before the courts and was dismissed. Are you suggesting that, because someone else was charged with a similar crime, that we cannot discuss this case.

Mr. De Monte: If it is on the same fact.

Mr. Chairman: I am suggesting to the hon. member that, in discussing the matters of these two particular individuals, that there may be points discussed that could relate to the other individuals involved in this particular case.

Mr. Shulman: I have no intention of talking about what is before the court.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: They have all been charged with the same offence. These two gentlemen may still be called as witnesses, for all you know.

Mr. Shulman: Will you let me commence. If I say anything that is sub judice please interrupt me. I am not going to discuss the case at all. What I am going to discuss is what happened to this man in that jail as a result of an accusation that has been made against him, in that reformatory, and the punishment that was meted out to him. Nothing else. The fact that he was put into the hole, and that he was convicted without a trial.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What is "the hole"?

Mr. Shulman: "The hole" is the punishment cell, for your information.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Why do you not say that?

Mr. Shulman: He was put into the hole.

An hon. member: Why dignify it?

Mr. Shulman: It cannot be dignified. This man was punished without trial, subsequently has been found innocent, and he has been, to my mind, badly maltreated. I want to know what steps the Minister is going to take to see that amends are made. I would like to read the letter from Mr. Ford which outlines it so very well.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I am only going to answer to this extent. This case has been mentioned a number of times in such a manner as to give the impression that we, in fact, laid charges, which we did not do. One inmate wished to lay charges against some other inmates.

To do this, obviously the institutional staff had to bring in the police so the man could lay his charges, and I am told that none of them was punished, they were segregated. The hon. member wants to call the segregation, "a hole", giving the impression to the public that old stereotype idea about throwing them into some dirty, filthy old hole, with rats scurrying all over them. They were segregated and there was no punishment handed out to them.

Mr. Shulman: Now, may I read the letter, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Chairman: What is the date of the letter, prior to today?

Mr. Shulman: The letter just arrived today.

Mr. Chairman: I was wondering if it contained evidence or anything that had to do with the case, which case is not completed?

Mr. Shulman: No, it has nothing to do with the case.

Mr. Chairman: If the hon. member assures the committee that it has nothing to do with the case then he may proceed.

Mr. Shulman: Thank you.

Dear Dr. Shulman:

I am writing you concerning the treatment I received at Burwash Reformatory in connection with the charges which I wrote to you about last month. Because of these charges of indecent assault, it has hurt my name by slander.

I have went to court for them and the charges were dismissed against me. And now I am pushing for a law suit against the institution.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, would that not be considered sub judice.

Mr. Shulman: Well, he has not started the law suit. If he starts the law suit then it will be sub judice.

I cannot express in words how this whole thing has hurt me and a lot of other people, like my mother, and father, and my wife to be.

My parents are going to write and ask if something cannot be done in the way of a parole in amends. I would like to thank you and Mr. Martel for helping us in this case. I would be very grateful if you would write the Attorney General and see if something could be done in connection with what was done to me.

I also have a letter that came today, from his mother, and this is Mrs. George Ford, in Peterborough. It is a fairly lengthy letter which explains briefly how her son was originally charged with stealing two pairs of pants. How he admitted this as such, was committed to jail, and subsequently had this incident occur in the reformatory which I will not discuss because of the other cases that are coming up, but there is one line here which worried me:

After this accusation was made, and my son denied this completely, and he has always admitted the truth whether he has been in trouble or not, he was put into the hole. Whatever place in the prison that is, I do not know, that is what he and his friend told me. He was there for twenty-some days. Then he was taken to Sudbury, Ontario, to stand trial and the case was dismissed and he was found not guilty.

Can something not be done in the way of amends for what he has gone through in this last month. Will the department be willing, because of him obviously having been mistreated in this way, to make some amends in the form of shortening his sentence or giving him a parole, because the original crime of stealing two pairs of pants was surely not that serious.

I am raising this point on behalf of this particular man, and I will discuss the whole aspect of the other matter in the Attorney Generals' estimates after the other cases have been settled. But, I am raising this point on behalf of this particular man and on behalf of the other man who was acquitted yesterday. Are you prepared to make some amends, regardless of whether you laid the charges, or whether the police laid the charges, or whoever laid the charges?

Certainly the prison system leaves something to be desired when this type of thing can occur. This man has obviously had an injustice done to him. Are you willing to do something about it?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, this happens in the courts quite often. A man is charged with an offence, he is held in a jail pending trial, he is kept in maximum security if he is charged with a serious offence, and sometimes he is in a jail for months.

Mr. Shulman: This was a punishment cell.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Just a moment. What do you mean, a punishment cell? It is a maximum security cell, that is all it is. The hon. member for Sudbury East, I think, visited the inmate. Did he find any cruel or unwholesome conditions except the fact that the man was segregated.

Mr. Martel: No.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, all right, there is your answer. He was just segregated. This giving the impression all the time that we put men into some hole, and throw bread and water into them every three or four days—

Mr. Shulman: Was he in the punishment cells?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Listen, listen. Now, the man was not charged by us. We are required, when a man is charged, particularly for his own protection, to keep him in segregation until he is tried, and this is what we did in this case. There is nothing we can do about it, any more than society does for a man if he is charged with an offence and he spends six months in a jail waiting trial. Perhaps in some cases much longer than that and there have been cases, and then he is acquitted. Well, of course, there has been an injustice in a case like that, but there is an injustice and you cannot do anything about it.

Mr. Shulman: But you can in this case.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You mean by parole?

Mr. Shulman: By shortening his sentence.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am sorry, we cannot shorten his sentence. When he is ready for parole, the parole board will take everything into consideration they feel needs to be taken into consideration, for the man's rehabilitation.

Mr. Shulman: Well, I will make it easy for the Minister.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Presumably, if a man appeared before the parole board, he would bring this in as a factor as to why he thought he was entitled to parole. If the parole board thought, in their good judgment, that this was a good reason to give him parole, then it would be entirely up to the parole board.

Mr. Shulman: It is not entirely up to the parole board at this moment. I am asking the Minister, and I am making it very, very easy. Considering the circumstances, will he make a recommendation, that is all I am asking him for, to the parole board that because of these circumstances the man be paroled? Yes or no, it is very simple.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The answer is: I will not interfere and it might have been much happier for everyone concerned if the hon. member had not used the man's name.

Mr. Shulman: You have him taken to jail in Sudbury; you have his name splattered all over the press in six papers and you tell me not to use his name. What hypocrisy!

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I did not—

Mr. Shulman: What hypocrisy. You don't understand one thing but you certainly understand the other.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I did not have anything to do with it at all. If you want to help the rehabilitation of any inmate, of any prisoner, do not blazon his name all over the newspapers and all over—

Mr. Shulman: It has already been all over the newspapers. I see you are not supported by your own party but you are supported by writers to the right, who do not understand it either.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Because the hon. member for Port Arthur was raising this question earlier and that is precisely the answer I was going to give him. Anybody who really has rehabilitation of prisoners at heart will not give them undue publicity; will not put them on television; will not put them on radio; will not blazon their names all over the front pages—

Mr. Shulman: But you lay charges against them.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We laid no charges. I have told the hon. member that 40 times. We laid no charges against the man.

Mr. Shulman: All right, let us bring it down to its simplest form, Mr. Chairman. This man has been falsely charged regardless of who charged him. I asked the Minister very simply, will he make amends by making a recommendation to the parole board, and he says, "no". Not only does he say "no", he says, "You are hurting the man because you mentioned his name." What false hypocrisy and where does he get his support? Let us go on to another jail.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order, order!

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, what is the Minister advocating? That the man just disappears back into the obscurity of the correctional system and that no one knows what happened to him?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I would say that you should let the man disappear into society so that everyone will not know that he served a term.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Lewis: By allowing your system to be violated by the law, you have invited—

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mr. Lewis:—you have invited them to—

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The hon. member has even identified the location of the mother.

Mr. Chairman: Will the hon. Minister and the hon. member for Scarborough West please take their seat. The hon. member for Port Arthur has risen on a point of order.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, I would like to try to settle the dispute over the name business. I just wonder whether the hon. member for High Park—

Mr. Chairman: What is the point of order?

Mr. Knight:—in using the man's name—

Mr. Chairman: Order! What is the point of order?

Mr. Knight: Well, the point of order is to settle this dispute.

Mr. Chairman: This is not a point of order. The hon. member is out of order. The hon. member for Sudbury East has risen; was the hon. member for Scarborough West finished?

Mr. Lewis: No, I was not quite finished.

Mr. Chairman: All right, proceed.

Mr. Lewis: I wanted to make the very simple point, Mr. Chairman, that in the opinion of this party it is because of the nature of the correctional institutions which the Minister runs that these incidents occur. They might as well have been perpetrated by the department itself because of the nature of the services it provides.

Mr. R. M. Johnston (St. Catharines): Shocking!

Mr. Lewis: Never mind shocking. That the Minister would not permit a situation—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I agree with the hon. member that if we did not have correctional institutions these things could not happen in correctional institutions.

Mr. Lewis: That is a nice tauntology.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is exactly what the hon. member said.

Mr. Lewis: It may secure the Minister's conscience, Mr. Chairman, but it does not affect mine when you—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You have a great conscience.

Mr. Lewis: It is a very simple proposition, Mr. Chairman, a very simple proposition. The Minister should be going to bat in a pretty fierce way for the men who were thus charged and for the elimination of the incident that was involved. It should be his department's role, it seems to me, to make sure that the conditions do not exist which engender such events, rather than to facilitate the bringing in of the law—the laying of charges, the besmirching of reputation, all the injustice that followed from it. It was the department that facilitated the blazoning of the man's name, not a member in this House.

As a matter of fact, there is no better place, Mr. Chairman, to raise a name than in this House because no one listens to what you say.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I can just imagine the self-righeous NDP members getting up here, if we had not called the police in and this man had written a letter saying, "Dear Doctor Shulman, I want to lay a charge against the five men and they will not let me do it. What in the hell is happening to these institutions?"

The hon. member for Scarborough West would get up in a high dudgeon, with the usual self-righteousness, and say, "What kind of Minister of the Crown is that, that he allows this thing to go on; a man wants to lay a charge and he is not able to do it. You are hiding things down there. If a man wants to lay a charge let him do it." And the hon. member for High Park would be the first one to get up and say it.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. E. A. Winkler (Grey South): Down, boy, down.

Mr. Lewis: The Minister is not doing badly; make a good member of the Opposition. He is doing well. I like your practicing for the art for which you will soon be employed. Mr. Chairman, there is a qualitative distinction in our mind of the kind of "Dear Doctor Shulman" letters that are written. We are capable of making that distinction and what we are saying to you in this instance and—

Mr. Winkler: That is a matter of opinion.

Mr. Lewis: I am not going to be diverted by the rhetoric in this instance because I have been guilty of that myself on many occasions.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Precisely.

Mr. Lewis: Precisely.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You are too good at it—

Mr. Lewis: I am just going to reassert the proposition, Mr. Chairman. That is, the Minister should be pretty uncomfortable about some of the things that occur in his institutional environment.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Of course, I am.

Mr. Lewis: Is the Minister's department moving in for the defence at the trial? Has the Minister's department been called? Has it offered to act in defence at the trial? Has it offered to come before the court and say that this is not the way one treats this particular act; this is not a therapeutic response to what occurred in my institutional environment?

Mr. Chairman: Order, please!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Knight: I am not a member of the legal profession, but if this debate is not prejudicial to whatever case is still going on in relation to the matter, I do not know what it is.

Mr. Chairman: I find nothing prejudicial to any particular case in what the member has said.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It is prejudicial to me.

Mr. Lewis: It may be prejudicial to the Minister, in which case, it is warranted. Obviously we are not going to get very far; the Minister has a fixed position on this.

Mr. R. M. Johnston: Then forget it.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, I am coming to the point where I am—

An hon member: If you cannot change it, then keep quiet.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please, order. Could we have fewer interjections than we have been having and let the hon. member proceed.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, maybe they are valid, the positions that have been put by certain members of the Liberal party. While I disagree with them, I can understand precisely from what they stem, they would make a very legitimate area for debate. But the position that this government is taking on this kind of issue—we in this party entirely repudiate it.

It may be very pleasant in these comfortable pews on a Thursday night to dismiss what takes place in an institutional environment as being boring or offensive or irrelevant to government. But it is not boring, offensive or irrelevant to this party in the Legislature and the Minister should be in there fighting.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You have all the conscience.

Mr. Lewis: The Minister should be in there fighting for all of his violated inmates instead of making adolescent comments about conscience.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: Never mind, it is not a question of conscience. If it were a question of conscience one assumes it would have been decided some time ago.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Sudbury East.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mr. Martel: Mr. Chairman, when that voice in the wilderness quits over there, I will start.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Sudbury East has the floor.

Mr. Martel: It is rather interesting to hear the Liberal comments, Mr. Chairman, in that of the six young men I have had occasion to interview—three of them used their only phone calls to get to me to go, in the last week and a half, to the jailhouse in Sudbury. The time I spent with these three men left me somewhat dismayed at some of the things that apparently transpired.

Two of these men have already been released after spending a good deal of time in lockup on charges which people admitted they were really not involved in. I want to thank the Minister by the way, for advising me that one was released; I appreciated that a great deal. But there are some circumstances, Mr. Chairman, around this whole mess that have left me considerably disturbed after speaking to three of the men, and a fourth who phoned me on Tuesday, just before I left home, hoping that I could come in and see him as well.

The thing that disturbs me, Mr. Minister, is the fact that it took four days from the time the alleged incident occurred until these men were put in segregation, so to speak. Why there was a four-day delay I do not know and neither do the men in question. But they were greatly disturbed. I am also disturbed by the fact that there were 14 men in that corridor when this alleged incident occurred, Mr. Chairman, and none of the 14 apparently saw anything happen. The fact that the man who is laying the charges is apparently a homosexual, leaves me somewhat disturbed.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, may I appeal to the hon. member to avoid going into these details; they really are sub judice, and they should not be discussed.

Mr. Martel: I agree with the Minister. The only problem, Mr. Chairman, is that after months of torment for two of these young men, they have been released, and there are still four awaiting charges.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: May I suggest to the hon. member, he is not going to affect the situation now anyway. After this case is disposed of, if the hon. member wishes to raise these questions with me, and if he is dissatisfied with some of the actions that occurred, I will be very glad to deal with them as it will be my responsibility, either on the floor of this House, or outside.

But I think at this particular moment that it would be better if we did not discuss it. As a matter of fact, I can argue that the infrequency of this sort of thing is an evidence that the system is working fairly well. I would suggest that, well, I am just asking the hon. member in all fairness, in the interests of justice that he not discuss it at this stage.

Mr. Chairman: Yes, well if the hon. member was referring to the situation as had been discussed here a few minutes previously, certainly he should not refer to it in total.

Mr. Martel: All right, fine. Well, at least then I have the knowledge that I can discuss this with the Minister after, because as I say there are some things in the case which I will not refer to which have disturbed me greatly and I have written the Minister a letter in the last day with respect to the interview I had with three of the men.

I would like to ask the Minister on the issue of paroles, as I understand it—are we able to discuss paroles at this time, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Chairman: No, I believe if the hon. member will recall, I am not sure if he was in his seat, but we have decided that we will deal with vote 402, under the general heading of provincial jails, reformatories, and complete that portion, and then go on to after-care of adults and paroles, which is part of vote 402. So if we can restrain ourselves from discussing parole at this time until we have finished the rest of it.

Mr. Martel: Fine. There are a couple of issues I would like to raise with regard to Burwash then. I have had considerable complaint about such treatment as the following: a man being taken to Sudbury for a medical operation on his hand, and two and a half hours from the time he left the institution he was operated on and was back in the institution.

If this is the case, this man was in no condition to be transported, a few minutes after an operation, 25 miles back to the institution. I would certainly like to see this sort of thing eliminated, so that there was proper treatment and time for, let us say, convalescing and operation room—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: This will all be in the—

Mr. Martel: Well, there are apparently two doctors there now, am I right?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If he was taken to the hospital it is the doctors at the hospital and the doctors at the institution who between them would be responsible for this. If the hon. member has a specific case in mind, if he would like to bring it to my attention I will get a report from the doctors.

Mr. Martel: Yes, it is in regard to a man who had a hand operation. I would just as soon not give his name.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, if the member will give me his name.

Mr. Martel: Right. With regard to the other question, it is something I do not like to do because I have always tried to defend the men in the institution there because I know many of the guards and know them personally. However, there is a case of an apparent attempted stabbing incident, where seven men were confined and within a matter of time they were released. I would like to know how seven men could be held responsible for an apparent stabbing and then, because of a lack of evidence, be released later on. It seems to me that this is a pretty sham way of treating seven prisoners, that they be thrown in jail and kept in confinement for a time and then released for lack of evidence on a supposed stabbing incident.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is another situation, Mr. Chairman, with which I am not familiar, nor are my officials around the table here familiar with the particular incident. If you draw it to my attention I will be glad to answer the hon. member's question.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for High Park.

Mr. Shulman: I think I should say a word about the Waterloo county jail. I do not think we have reached that one yet. I have here the Globe of September 17, 1968, and the heading is rather lurid: "Accused tells court he took murder rap to escape county jail. Kitchener. Henry Joseph"—by the way, do you mind me mentioning prisoners' names when quoting from newspapers, Mr. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If you want to do it, go ahead.

Mr. Shulman: Thank you.

Kitchener. Henry Joseph Dietrich, 45, testified yesterday that he pleaded guilty to non-capital murder two years ago because he could not stand the Waterloo county jail any longer. Dietrich pleaded guilty at his trial after an inquest had ruled in 1945 that a shooting death was accidental.

Dietrich was cross examined yesterday by a Crown Attorney H. D. "Do you mean to say that you would rather be sentenced to life by pleading guilty to non-capital murder than spend another week or two in the county jail?" Mr. Dockman asked. "That is the way it appeared to me at that time," answered Dietrich. "I was there nine and a half weeks and was under extreme pressure. There are better jails."

And it goes on to explain in some detail the rather unpleasant situation in the Waterloo county jail. I want to ask the Minister, in the light of the fact that prisoners in that jail would rather plead guilty to a murder accusation than spend another week or two in the Waterloo county jail, what changes are being made in the Waterloo county jail in your long list?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to answer the question based on such a ridiculous statement made by some inmate who said he would rather get a life sentence than spend two weeks in some jail. All I can tell the hon. member is what I have told him before. All of the jails are being looked at and repaired.

Mr. Shulman: Well the Minister was good enough a few minutes ago, Mr. Chairman, to read me a list of the things that are being done to the Middlesex county jail. Would he mind telling me what is on the books for the Waterloo county jail?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, except that this can go on for a long, long time.

Mr. Shulman: Is it a long, long list?

Mr. O. F. Villeneuve (Glengarry): It is costing the province a lot of money.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Projects approved but not completed: repair jail eavestroughing $289. Equipment purchases and installations since December 31, 1967: kitchen equipment, chest freezer, deep fryer, toaster, etc., maintenance equipment including tools, paint, etc. Approved and ordered but not yet received: library supplies, office equipment, corridor and cell equipment, beds and mattresses, laundry equipment. Total estimated cost of planned purchases $3,313. Total expenditures to date $1,102. There is about $6,000 work being done there.

Mr. Shulman: Thank you Mr. Minister. Now I would like to come to one of the show institutions—I think it is a show institution—the Alex G. Brown Clinic. Are you fairly proud of that one?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes.

Mr. Shulman: Well, let us come to the Alex G. Brown Clinic, which I had not visited until reasonably recently, actually in the last few months. I think to explain the situation, although it is a long letter, perhaps I should read it into the record so the Minister will understand how I happened to go down there. This is a letter I received from a prisoner on October 8, 1968. The prisoner's name is E. A., and it is addressed to the Hon. Dr. M. Shulman:

Dear Dr. Shulman: I am a patient at the D.A. Clinic of the Alex G. Brown Memorial Clinic at the Mimico Reformatory. Two and a half months ago I was transferred from Millbrook Reformatory for the last three months of my definite time. My sentence is six months definite and three months indefinite. Also while at Millbrook I was granted parole in principle. My tentative release date of parole in principle if further acted upon is October 27, 1968.

My first two months at the clinic were quite beneficial; active in hobby work, chairman of the patients' committee, participant in patient organized toastmaster's club, active in sports. In short, sir, I feel I responded to treatment insofar as opportunities afforded. The above mentioned facts are—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It does not sound much like a punitive system to me.

Mr. Shulman: Perhaps the hon. Minister would let me finish, Mr. Chairman. Wait until the other shoe drops, if I can quote your words.

The above mentioned facts are applicable to most of the other patients in this clinic and this letter is a reflection then not only of my own feelings but also the prevalent feelings of all the patients.

I make this last statement as chairman of the patients' committee and for the purpose of acquainting you with facts that we feel are unjustified. For a number of years there has been an alcoholic clinic and a separate, but adjacent, drug addict clinic in Mimico Reformatory. All addicts are originally sent to Millbrook. They are screened there for the purpose of possible treatment at the clinic. They have always been told by the screening clinician what is expected of them at the clinic with one exception. It is this exception that I write you about.

None of the present addict population of the clinic were informed that they would be transferred to the alcoholic clinic.

These are the drug addicts.

This transfer is to take place this Saturday, October 12, 1968. May I say at this point that real hostility exists between the alcoholic population and the supervisors and the drug addicts and their supervisors. They do not want us over there and our feelings are the same.

These feelings would normally be resolved between adults at maturity. The difficulty, however, arises out of the unique three-way situation that exists in clinics here, that is, patient, custodial staff and treatment staff. All of us patients feel that after having made certain rather painful gains that all could be negated by a move to a hostile environment.

The superintendent spoke to us as regards the move today and while he did imply that we are being sacrificed for the sake of convenience he was adamant in his decision in favour of the drug addicts integrating with the alcoholics regardless of the consequences.

In closing, sir, may I say that I am interested in treatment for myself and for the other patients here and if I were able to talk this over with a psychologist this letter might not be necessary. But unfortunately, and much like others here, I have had nothing but an initial interview with the social worker since my arrival here some two and a half months ago, and although I have made repeated requests to either see the social worker again or see a psychiatrist or psychologist there is no one available.

Please reply at your earliest convenience. I would appreciate your looking into this matter now because of the urgency of the matter. Respectfully,

And this is signed by nine patients from the drug addict clinic.

Well, I went out to Alex G. Brown and went through the clinic and I found some rather surprising things. The first thing that disturbed me was seven addicts had been moved before their treatment process had been completed—this was last October—and the staff agreed that this might very well interfere with the treatment that they were receiving but because of construction programmes which were under way this was necessary.

My first question to the Minister is—why in the world are you spending thousands of dollars to renovate the drug addict building when you have plans to tear it down next year?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In answer to the first question, Mr. Chairman, I am advised that because of the changes made there was some dissatisfaction on the part of some of the patients at first, but after the programme was in effect for about three months, they were completely satisfied with the new system.

I have here a letter from Mr. Glinfort, the superintendent, dated August 14, 1968, to the Deputy Minister:

Dear Sir: Due to the very urgent need in the clinic for office space as well as space for individual and group counselling, it is respectfully requested that authorization be given to move the patient population from the DA clinic to the Alex G. Brown clinic, which would allow conversion of the total DA clinic building counselling and administrative offices. The advantages of such a move are manifold.

1. Conversion of dormitories, etc., could be made by our own staff at a nominal cost probably not exceeding $200 to $300, in addition to the cost of installing telephones. This would immediately make available three large and two smaller offices with more space to spare which could be partitioned off later.

2. The alternative, such as renting other space nearby or acquiring portable temporary office buildings as in Guelph staff college, would seem to be far more expensive. This move would immediately free the four supervisors now on duty in the DA building, which would help to relieve the immediate great pressure on supervisory staff.

3. Integration as far as housing is concerned for the DA patient population has for some time been advocated by the treatment staff. There is little doubt that the therapeutic arguments for integration are many and valid.

The move would allow far more economical use of space and personnel. For example, it would make possible the concentration of various filing systems which are now located in two different buildings and thus make information available easier and quicker.

Elimination of the trial beds now located in the DA clinic would not reduce the total bed capacity of the clinic as four additional beds can be added to each dormitory in the AGB in an emergency, and in an emergency one of the day rooms in the number two annex can be converted into a temporary dormitory.

Normal capacity after eliminating the beds in the DA clinic would be 104-72 in number two annex and 32 in the AGB with a possibility in an emergency to increase this figure to 120. The average daily population is between 65 and 75. The highest number housed on any one day in the clinics since April 1, 1966, was 112 on November 28, 1967. The day before the count it was 96 and the day after down to 105.

In the fiscal year, on April 1, 1966, to March 1, 1967, the highest count on any one day was 89, which was on November 1, 1966, and this year the count has not exceeded 90. It is my considered opinion, and that of the clinic staff, that the advantages of the suggested move far exceed any possible disadvantages.

At the present time we are finding it practically impossible to provide staff with the most necessary place in which to carry out the treatment programme. When the vacation season is over in mid-September this problem will become critical. I therefore respectfully request authorization to carry out the suggested move as soon as this can be done with the least possible upset for the patient population.

Yours sincerely,

E. K. Glinfort, Superintendent.

I am advised there is some dissatisfaction in the earlier stages but now it is working very smoothly.

Mr. Shulman: That is a very good answer and satisfies my problems there. However, there is a more serious problem in relation to the Alex G. Brown clinic. I have here the schedule which is set up for treatment of the drug addicts and for some reason—I guess someone set this up some time ago—but the schedule is set up for a 30-day programme so that addicts who are all sent there for 90 days, repeat the programme three times.

Now, is there any explanation for that, and if there is not why in the world do you not change your programme around so that it is set up over a 90-day period instead of a 30-day period?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, can the hon. member tell me whether his documentation shows that the 30-day treatment is duplicated three times?

Mr. Shulman: Yes, that is what it says.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: But does it show that the same treatment takes place every 30 days?

Mr. Shulman: Well it shows the same things—Tuesday, 9 a.m., arts and crafts—it is exactly the same as the set-up on the 90-day schedule.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: For a 30-day schedule?

Mr. Shulman: Yes. But the prisoners are sent for 90 days.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am told they could have, for example, group therapy every Thursday morning and there is nothing wrong with that schedule as it exists.

Mr. Shulman: Yes, but there is something wrong with seeing the same movie three times; the movie that is shown to rehabilitate them and—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: They would not be seeing the same movie three times. I would suggest—this is a rather technical matter—that the hon. member send that along with his comments and we would be very glad to send him out a letter and give him what the views are of the subject.

Mr. Shulman: Well I do not wish to press the Minister, but will he look into this matter?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes.

Mr. Shulman: And get the situation cleaned up?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If the hon. member will send me what he has and his comments on it, if he wishes to make any, we will give him the answer to it.

Mr. Shulman: Well you have heard my comments on it already. There is one other thing here; arts and craft play a very large part in this schedule. In fact, it is something which they do every day except Thursdays, unfortunately they are limited to five dollars worth of material for 30 days for an alcoholic and five dollars worth of material for 90 days for the drug addicts.

I think perhaps the reason this whole problem arose is that the alcoholic is only there for 30 days and the drug addict is there for 90 days. Is this why this difficulty arises to the drug addicts? Well anyway you can look at that. But in any case they should be allowed more than five dollars worth of material, because if they use that up the first week the rest of the time they sit there for the next 85 days or 80 days with no material available. Does the Minister wish to make any comment on this?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I think I had better look into that detail. All I can tell you is that the administrator of the adult male institutions is Dr. Harry Hutchison, who is in front of me now and who is an expert in the forensic sciences and in this particular work also, and if there is a programme going there, under his direction—particularly under Mr. Glinfort—it must be a pretty good one and we have had nothing but compliments about it.

Mr. Shulman: I do not wish to criticize this individual. I am just saying that even the best individuals sometimes make mistakes or are not aware of certain things that can occur in institutions.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Doctor Hutchison said that we are looking into giving more and more arts and crafts. That is, through the payment of prisoners which we have been talking about these last few days. There will be incentive allowances and more arts and crafts involved.

Mr. Shulman: You are not going to restrict them to five dollars, in future, is that it?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Five dollars a week.

Mr. Shulman: Five dollars a week from now on. I see. If they have money available is there any reason why they cannot buy more material?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, I do not imagine that this is what is happening. I am—

Mr. Shulman: Well that is the situation now.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I cannot imagine why they do not have sufficient material. I will look into that; they should have sufficient materials.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 402?

The hon. member for Scarborough Centre.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, two questions on policy. I wonder if the Minister would describe the function of the punishment cell at Burwash? The purpose they serve, Mr. Chairman—I am trying to get at the purpose these cells serve, as far as the Minister is concerned.

Mr. Chairman: I think the hon. Minister replied earlier, they were not punishing cells.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I think what the Minister objected to was the member for High Park calling them, "the hole" and asked him why he did not call them punishment cells. I stand to be corrected if that is—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I do not think I said punishment cells. But, do not think, Mr. Chairman, there is anything too much wrong with calling them punishment cells anyway. Sometimes they are used as a means for disciplinary measures. Sometimes they are used for the protection of the inmate himself. Sometimes the inmate will ask to be put into segregation; sometimes he just feels he needs to get away from the others. There are various reasons for segregation. You have to use them in all institutions. I am sure they need them in hospitals as well. I do not know really what the hon. member is driving at. But this is what they are used for.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask if they are any different from the other cells, as far as being less desirable to be in, by the inmate? I am trying to get at the fact that when the Minister answered in the Ford case that the people concerned were segregated, were they in fact segregated into punishment cells? Is that, in fact, the way of the institutions, assuming they are guilty before they ever get to trial? Is there no other way of segregating your prisoners except into these punishment cells?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, we have detention cells and we have segregation cells. Depending upon the circumstances, either one or the other is used. Some are called—this is the punishment cell—solitary confinement; the amenities of which depend on the particular cells I suppose. If the hon. member is talking about these particular men we were talking about earlier, I am told they were not put in what is known as "solitary confinement" or punishment cells. They were put in open cells. They did not have the solid door. You have to segregate an inmate sometimes if he becomes violent and, of course, those kind of cells would be so designed so that the inmate could not do any damage to himself or the cell, if he becomes very violent.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to say to the Minister that this is what I wanted to know because I think the Minister would agree that the morale of an institution is a very important part of the institution and that if—when difficulties arise such as the homosexual charge and the stabbing charge that the member for Sudbury East brought out, prisoners are removed and in fact put into what are considered or are inferior cells as a form of guilt, before they are even taken to jail and tried, it is very undermining to the morale.

I wanted the Minister's assurance that this is not what happened to those five men or is not what happened with the people in the stabbing case or is not what happens to prisoners when they are under a shroud of suspicion of any sort; immediately plucked out and segregated, as much as to say you are guilty until we get you into a court for you to prove your innocence.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, that is not the kind of cell these people are put into. They would be put into the kind of open cell I was talking about, the kind of cell which some inmate may ask from time to time that he would like to be placed in, for fear that he is going to do something to himself. There is no stigma attached to it insofar as the inmate population or inmate sub-culture is concerned.

Mr. Chairman: Anything further under vote 402?

Mr. D. Jackson (Timiskaming): Well, Mr. Chairman, through you to the Minister, is it not true that these punishment cells in some of your jails—and I have been in several of them, as a visitor I can assure you—but is it not true that they have no windows? Is it also not true that the door is a solid door with a small opening in it, in many of them? Is it not true that there is absolutely no mattress on the bed; it is a bare spring and in some cases, there are no blankets?

Is it also not true that there are no toilets or wash basins in them, that in order to wash they have to use a basin that is given to them daily and for their other necessities they have what we used to call a thunder mug, which they have to dump and scrub out each day?

I am a little surprised when the Minister says these are not punishment cells, that they are segregation cells because they are very definitely punishment cells. I am a little more surprised after all we have gone through with Bills 73 and 74 and how the Minister relented on his bill in that case, and yet, in our prisons we are actually putting people through the same procedures that they put animals through in Riverdale Zoo, we segregate them into little cells—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Is the hon. member talking about jails or reformatories?

Mr. Jackson: What is the difference?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, there is a difference. The hon. member, I think, was talking about jails.

Mr. Jackson: Are the reformatories worse?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I would suggest that the hon. member visit some of the reformatories and then compare them with jails and then perhaps his criticism would be more of an educated nature.

Mr. Shulman: Your punishment cells in Guelph are as bad as anywhere in the world.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Oh, no, they are not.

Mr. Jackson: One of my experiences took place at Monteith and if you go into Monteith you will find that they have six segregation cells which they use for punishment and very happily, they use them very seldom. But nevertheless, these cells are just as I have described. They have a doctor that goes in—or the doctor supposedly goes in—and examines those men on a regular basis to make sure that they do not suffer mental defects or mental problems because of the segregation.

Yet, for 20 days you put a man that has not been convicted of any crime into a cell that is basically for punishment and you punish him before he is even convicted.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Are you talking about Monteith?

Mr. Jackson: Yes, I am.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, in Monteith we are not happy with the segregation cells, what you call the punishment cells and we do not keep anybody in there for 20 days. If the hon. member can give me some documentation or some evidence of that I will be pleased to look into it. I would doubt it very much. We are not happy with them. Some changes are going to have to be made at Monteith in these particular cells.

Mr. Jackson: Is the hon. Minister saying that the cells that these other prisoners were held in for 20 days, are different from Monteith?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes.

Mr. Jackson: That they have windows?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Oh, yes.

Mr. Jackson: They have doors?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Oh, yes, quite different; they are open to begin with.

Mr. Jackson: They have mattresses on the beds?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: They have mattresses, yes.

Mr. Jackson: Mr. Chairman, may I ask, before I sit down, when the Minister is going to do something about Monteith? When you are going to tear out those cells and put in decent confinement places for these men?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We are working on it—this matter is being attended to at the present time.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Minister, is the only difference between the punishment cells and the segregation cells in Burwash the fact that the one door is solid and the other is open? And do they all have washing and washroom facilities?

Mr. Shulman: We are going up there next week so give us a good answer.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am advised that all of the cells have toilet facilities in them. The difference between the so-called punishment cells and the segregation cells is that the punishment cells have a door between the cells and the corridor, and the segregation cells do not. Does that answer the hon. member's question?

Mrs. M. Renwick: Yes, I can appreciate, Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the second door when people have been put in punishment, but what I was trying to get at was, is the only difference in the cell restricted to the door that is on the cell—that one is a solid door and one an open type of door? Or if the segregation cell has an opening, what size would that be?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I think the best thing would be for the hon. member to visit them.

Mrs. M. Renwick: I will in time.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: As far as I am concerned, I visit so many of these places they begin to meld in my mind. I cannot remember what I saw in one place as against another. The hon. member for High Park writes notes on these things, and he comes in here and he has all the details. I do not keep them all in mind.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Are you suggesting that the hon. member for High Park is more efficient?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I think if I were going to attack the member for High Park, I would make these notes so that I could attack him, but I cannot carry all the details of all the different institutions in my mind. I would suggest that I would invite the hon. member for Scarborough Centre to visit Burwash and all the other institutions and get a fair idea of what the system is like. Some are better than others because some are more modern, and, of course, our design and our aim is to improve all those which need improvement, and eliminate all those which should be completely eliminated.

Mrs. M. Renwick: I would just like to assure the Minister, and for the record, that I hope in my career that I will visit the jails and institutions in Ontario both for men and women.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, what bothers me about this course of the debate, this discussion this evening in the estimates, is that there have been a number of items raised in relation to the amenities that persons in custody are entitled to. There have been a number of question raised as to the quality and character of equipment that is available to them; there have been a number of questions raised about many other aspects of the Minister's department. I recognize, and I think we all recognize, that it will take him some time to deal with the jail situation. What I cannot understand is why the Minister has not published, by way of regulation under the principal statutes which he operates, the regulations which provide for public knowledge of the basic ingredients of the care and treatment and training of individuals.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Was the hon. member not here when I explained that?

Mr. J. Renwick: I am sorry, no I was not.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I explained earlier that the regulations have taken a considerable amount of time to formulate. I think we have been working on them for about three years. There is a tremendous amount of work involved. I said earlier that we had to formulate regulations so that they would apply in a general way to all the institutions, and make sure that they did not have any particular implications for any particular institutions which were not applicable. And when they were all finished, as they have been, we had to get federal approval for some of the regulations which were just forthcoming—I think I said this earlier this week.

This will now go to Cabinet, and the regulations will be published very shortly. It is the end of a very mammoth job and no one can really appreciate the problems involved in writing these regulations. They went back and forth between our department and officers of the Crown; and so on, and so on, and it was a tremendous job. It has just been completed and, as I say, we will have these regulations shortly, and of course they will be published.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, do they deal with the area of dress, and regulation, and personal deportment of the prisoners? Are these matters dealt with in the regulations? Is there still going to be a substantial residuary function which the members of his staff in the institutions are going to pre-empt to themselves, or is it going to be so clearly stated that the inmates in the institutions are going to have a clear idea of what they are entitled to, and what the limitations are upon the guards within the institutions, and the public will know—in the same way, for example, as the regulations published for The Department of Education are available to the public—about the governing sets of detailed rules and regulations that will govern those institutions?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The hon. member, of course, is asking for a value judgment. What he may feel is not satisfactory, we may feel is, I think all we can do in a case like that is wait until the regulations are published. I think he will be happy with them, and if he is not, why, of course, he will be quite at liberty, and it will be his right, to complain and ask that they be changed. I should add that in addition to the regulations, we are designing a pamphlet for every institution, to be given to an inmate, so that he will know what is expected of him and he will know what particular duties he is expected to perform and also know what rights he may have, such as visiting, and letters, and so on, which I think is helpful to the whole system.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, I would like to move to a different topic under this vote. This has to do with Millbrook, and being transferred from Millbrook to the Alex G. Brown clinic for treatment of drug addicts. To come back to that, I had better wait until the Minister can hear because I think it may be of some interest to him. Are you ready?

Perhaps it would be easier than explaining the situation, to read the letter which sets it out quite well. This is dated September 25, 1968, it is from Millbrook, and it is addressed to:

Dear Dr. Shulman:

The choice of directing my particular problem to you is in view of your professional medical background and the perceivable zeal which you undertake in championing those in adverse situations.

My struggle for coherency may suffer somewhat due to various enigmatic situations confronting me. I am serving a five-month sentence and am allocated to a cell wing that is ostensibly for drug addicts, totalling 15 in all. Ten of these inmates, including myself, all have convictions for possession of hard drugs, and the remaining five have convictions for possession of marijuana.

To date all ten of the hard drug users and three of the marijuana users have appeared before a representative of the A. G. Brown drug clinic for admittance to the treatment, and all the drug users were denied admittance and the three marijuana smokers were accepted. The remaining two of the marijuana group have yet to appear before the representative.

Before I go on, this seems very odd, because of course—as I understand it—but perhaps the Minister has a different understanding—marijuana smokers are not necessarily addicts at all. In fact, marijuana, I happen to know, is a non-addictable drug, so why in the world would you give preference to marijuana smokers instead of drug addicts in taking people into the Alex G. Brown clinic? Perhaps you would like to answer that question before we proceed.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: My officers tell me that we do not treat marijuana smokers at the clinic unless they are involved in some other addictions.

Mr. Shulman: Perhaps I should read the rest of this letter then.

At present, there are approximately seven at the drug clinic, and I understand that only one is a genuine drug addict.

Frankly, sir, I was given to understand that Queen's Park was given a grant from Ottawa to assist in the maintenance of the drug clinic, solely for the treatment of rehabilitation of drug addicts. I would like to quote from another noteworthy incident:

Dr. Hutchison of Queen's Park, in reply to a letter from one of the rejects here, concerning the prevailing preferences of selecting exclusively the marijuana crowd, stated that he had no knowledge of any marijuana user being at the clinic and stressed that they had no facilities or treatment for this group.

This is truly a paradoxical statement. It appears that there is a lack of communication between the two branches of your department.

The majority of us here have been to the clinic previously. However, there are many others that were there three, four, or even five times, and I understand that statistically the results were more favourable with each subsequent admittance.

He goes on, but the rest of it is not relevant so that is why I read this part about Dr. Hutchison. Is it possible that Dr. Hutchison is not aware of what is occurring in the Alex G. Brown clinic?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In the first place, Dr. Hutchison is in charge of Millbrook and the clinic so he would know what is going on in both of these institutions in respect of this matter—such as the matter of drug addicts and marijuana smokers and so on. Is the hon.

member, suggesting that the marijuana smokers say that there have been other marijuana smokers treated in a manner which he was not?

Mr. Shulman: No, no, no. This man is not a marijuana smoker; this man is a drug addict. What he was complaining of is that of the large number of people in these wings—some 15—these drug addicts had been rejected for admission to Alex G. Brown and the marijuana smokers had been admitted which, if correct, seems a little odd. I do not know at this point if it is correct, although I will investigate it further.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, there may have been other factors involved which was why they may not know anything about it. In fact, there were if they went to the clinic.

Those who remained may have been people who, I presume, the staff felt were not properly motivated and were not considered suitable for treatment at the drug clinics. If a man is not well motivated, and you know there is no use attempting to treat a man who does not want to be treated, there is no point in sending him to the clinic.

Mr. Shulman: I would not argue that with the Minister, but I am asking—and perhaps he has already answered it—is the Minister suggesting that marijuana smokers as such are not being treated at the Alex G. Brown clinic? In other words, unless they are also addicts on top? I will not go out there tomorrow and find the Minister was not correct?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Dr. Hutchison says that is the case.

Mr. Shulman: That is the case as far as you are concerned. Thank you. All right, we will go out and take a look.

I would like to go on to another matter, and this is a very serious matter.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You mean the others have not been serious?

Mr. Shulman: This is also a very serious matter because this is not a matter of waiting for the Treasurer to give you money, it is a matter of policy. I received a number of letters on this particular matter and perhaps it would be easier, Mr. Chairman, if I just read one of the letters as an example.

Mr. Chairman: This is still on vote 402—general?

Mr. Shulman: Still on vote 402, general, and this has to do with the treatment of prisoners in the jails and reformatories. I have a large number of letters on this very matter and I have had considerable correspondence with the Minister on this matter and I will also read some of his answers, because they lay the situation out very well.

This letter is dated January 11, 1969. It is also from Millbrook and reads as follows:

Dear Sir:

I am writing you this letter with the hope that you will be able to assist me in receiving a transfer closer to my home which is London, Ontario. My mother is not in the best of health and I would like very much to be closer to home where my relatives could keep me informed personally of any change in her condition and where I could occasionally receive visits from her.

I have approached the administration on this matter and was informed that a transfer was not possible for at least three months because of a charge I had of possession of an offensive weapon.

I can assure you this charge sounds far worse than any intent I was suspected of having. My record proved that I was never disciplined for this type of charge before. Also I find it very hard to make any effort of rehabilitating myself in a place that is filled with people with no intention of doing so. Believe me it is hard to get on the right road at Millbrook.

I would appreciate very much any effort you may have in this matter.

I wrote to the Minister asking if something could not be done to get Mr. T. moved to an institution closer to his home and the Minister replied as follows on February 7:

Dear Dr. Shulman: Re: L.R.T.

This is to acknowledge your letter of January 27 re the above named who is presently at the Millbrook Reformatory.

In your letter you advise that this man would like to be transferred to an institution in the London area because of the illness of his mother. Our departmental policy does not permit the transfer of inmates solely for the purpose of visiting. Only in those cases where it is determined it is essential to the health of a close relative, and this must be supported by a statement from the attending physician, is consideration given to a request for transfer.

You will realize that there are many within our system whose elderly parents are not in the best of health who could make similar requests. To grant permission would negate our whole programme of classification.

Sincerely yours,
Allan Grossman

Mr. Chairman, this is one of a number of similar requests, and subsequent requests were answered as follows from the Minister:

Dear Dr. Shulman:

May I refer you to my letter of such and such a date with reference to our policy regarding transfer for the purpose of visiting.

So I have abandoned writing letters to the Minister on this subject, and this is where the Minister is making a very, very serious error. If he is not just paying lip service, and if he seriously is interested in the rehabilitation—and many of us on this side of the House have grave doubts on that matter—but if he is seriously interested in the rehabilitation, surely he will agree with all the foremost international authorities. I have them all here in a very large volume called “The Law of Criminal Correction”, and I would be happy to quote them to him if he so wishes. He says, “Spare me,” so I will spare him.

But all of these authorities are agreed that the visiting of relatives and friends to inmates is one of the most, in fact, the most important factor in rehabilitation. For the Minister to take the attitude that he will not transfer prisoners to a prison or reformatory where it will be more convenient for them to receive their families’ visits, where it will be possible for them to receive their families’ visits, is completely ignoring the whole problem of rehabilitation.

I am asking the Minister here in the House, will he please reconsider this policy and change it because it is a bad one. It hurts the families, it hurts the prisoners, and it drives them toward crime.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, in the first place the hon. member has oversimplified the case. He is, in effect, treating this particular case as if it were an ordinary case—there is a sick mother, and it would be nice to let this man visit with his sick mother. As I attempted to outline in my letter, every inmate in an institution would like to do this, to pick the place he would like to go to, particularly if he is in Millbrook.

Millbrook is a maximum security institution and in this particular case this man has a behavioural problem. He was there because he had a behavioural problem in the other institutions. Naturally he would like to find a way to get out of there, and if he can use a sick mother, whom he may not have seen—for all the hon. member knows—for months or years he will do so. Merely because a man makes a request of this nature it does not mean that ipso facto we are going to grant that request.

We look into the files of this man, take a look at what his past has been like; take a look at what his probable motivation is, whether there is any point in granting his request on the basis of this. This man was reviewed, and surely the hon. member can see that you cannot grant all these requests merely because they are asked.

Again I would point out, without going into too much detail, he was at Millbrook because he was a behavioural problem.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, I could accept this very well, except that it is very easy to get out of Millbrook—you just have to become a behavioural problem. Last year we had dozens of cases where people in Millbrook broke the rules, became behavioural problems, and the Minister then proceeded to transfer them all over the province.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I think the hon. member will also notice that they do not want to get out of Millbrook, because even Millbrook is preferable to a jail where there are no activities, and the jail is in fact a greater punishment for them. So this is not as simple as the hon. member attempts to point out. If a man wanted to get to his mother he would not consider breaking out to get to another jail, because he obviously would not necessarily get to a jail near his mother.

I am just asking the hon. member not to oversimplify the case. We know what the files of these prisoners tell us; they tell us a story. We can see why there is a particular reason in some instances to grant a request and why to refuse a request. In this case, there was ample reason in the opinion of the staff for refusing it, and I can see by reading just what I have in front of me that there was a good reason for it.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, the Minister has very carefully muddied the waters. The point I made was not that he could get out by portraying behavioural problems but that Millbrook was not the be-all and end-all for behavioural problems; you send them to jails all over the province. There is no reason—if the problem is security—why this man could not have been sent to a jail near his home where he could see his elderly mother. What bothers me is not that you refuse this individual but the policy which you state in the letter: "Our departmental policy does not permit the transfer of inmates solely for the purpose of visiting."

Just to underline this—and let us get away from Millbrook—let me read you another one, and this one is from Burwash:

Dear Dr. Shulman:

I am writing you about the possibility of being transferred to Mimico Reformatory, if it is possible. I could then be able to be closer to my wife, who at the present time has been trying to visit me every two weeks but being on welfare she has trouble making ends meet and after paying the rent it is very, very difficult for her to raise the money to come up here to visit me.

I am trying to do my best to straighten myself out and anything in the way of your attention to this problem would help me because it is a constant worry for my wife and family. As I am here and not seeing them I am constantly worried and unable to think of anything else.

Now, I wrote the Minister about this and he wrote me back a two-line letter, again saying the policy is not to allow transfers for purpose of visiting. And here is, I think, a reasonably clear cut case—and there are others, I can read them if you wish—and I think the Minister perhaps is oversimplifying the problem. Visiting should be a major factor, more important I think than security, more important than any of the things he has mentioned—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If a man wants to visit his mother and he is that kind of a person, he should not be winding up in Millbrook as a behavioural problem. He is the kind of person who would not co-operate with anyone. He cannot be trusted anywhere except under maximum security, complete maximum security.

In any case, as was mentioned earlier, under the new system of compassionate leave, when we get the new legislation into effect, if a man can be trusted to make visits to his home he will make visits to his home. Now, it is apparent that a man who is a group 1 behavioural problem in Millbrook Reformatory would not be so trusted anyway. And being near his home—

Mr. Shulman: I am speaking of another case in Burwash.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I know, but all you have to do is grant a few of these on the basis of this kind of request and we would have hundreds of them right across the system.

Mr. Shulman: And why not?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, if the hon. member cannot see the answer to that—we would have a whole system of travelling back and forth across the province. The hon. member was concerning himself with the programmes in the institutions—how are we going to carry on programmes in the institutions when we are having a bus system travelling right across the province because this inmate wants to visit his mother, another wants to visit his sister, another wants to visit his brother? Most of these people are not the kind of people who want to visit brothers and sisters and mothers.

Mr. Shulman: No one is talking about sisters and brothers, we are talking about wives and mothers. And really this is what boils down the difference between the Minister and I; he is worried about transporting the prisoners around the province, I am interested in the rehabilitation. You can try the rehabilitation programme just as well at Mimico Reformatory as you can in Burwash Reformatory.

To suggest that we are not going to transfer the prisoners down because this might suggest others would ask for the privilege—what is the Minister interested in? Is he interested in detention and security or is he interested in rehabilitation? He wants to have it both ways. He gets up and he wants to give the lip service to the rehabilitation but when it comes down to the nitty-gritty, to the brass tacks, he backs away and says, "My God, are we going to start transporting dozens or hundreds of prisoners around the province?"

And he says "back and forth"—nobody is talking about back and forth. The prisoners should be sent in the first place to the area closest to where their families are so their families can visit them if—and I do not believe the Minister is—if he is interested in rehabilitation.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: How are we going to carry out a programme? Suppose a man is in a particular programme in a particular reformatory and the place nearest to where he wants to visit does not have any kind of a programme of that nature at all?

Mr. Shulman: Let me answer that one for the Minister. First of all, I have seen the Minister's programmes and they really are so inadequate that very few prisoners profit from them.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, that is a matter of opinion.

Mr. Shulman: Sure, it is a matter of opinion; it is the opinion held by everyone who goes in that less than ten per cent of the people in the reformatories are taking programmes that are of any value to them. Secondly, how much value do you think a programme will be to a man who is bitter and unhappy in not seeing his wife? Here is a man whose wife is on welfare and cannot afford to travel to visit him and you say, "We are not going to move that man because it might give an idea to other people." Do you think he is going to get anything out of a programme under those circumstances in Burwash when his wife is down here?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We move some of them; we move people whom we think should be moved, having regard for all of the circumstances. That is all I can tell the hon. member. Some will not be moved under any circumstances.

Mr. Shulman: I will agree that some prisoners cannot be moved, but the policy is what I am worried about. The policy is set out here in a letter and the policy is a bad policy. It does not lead to rehabilitation, it leads to crime.

Mr. Chairman: On vote 402?

Mr. Shulman: On vote 402 I have another little matter to bring up, or two.

This matter again is a matter of policy.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member would permit, perhaps this would be a good time before we have a "Dear Morty" letter again, when I might move that we rise and report.

Hon. Mr. Welch moves the committee of supply rise and report progress and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report progress and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, before moving the adjournment of the House, it is the intention to go to the order paper tomorrow and do legislation, and also work in the committee of the whole House. Then at 12.00, of course, it will be the private members' hour.

Hon. Mr. Welch moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 11:15 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, MARCH 14, 1969

The House met at 10.30 o'clock, a.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: This morning in the west gallery we have students from Wilcox public school, in Toronto. Later today in the east gallery there will be students from Oakdale junior high school, in Downsview, and from Walter Perry public school, in Scarborough.

Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Hon. W. G. Davis (Minister of Education and University Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table the reports of the Ontario College of Art and The Department of University Affairs. I have also placed on the desks of the members a report which I am sure is of some interest to all members of the Legislature. It is the report of the committee on religious education in the public schools of the province of Ontario, 1969.

As the members will recall, this committee had as its chairman the Hon. J. Keiller Mackay, one of our most distinguished jurists, a former Justice of the Supreme Court of Ontario, a former Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario and, until recently, chairman of the province of Ontario Council of Arts. To his long record of distinguished public service, Mr. Mackay has added another dimension through his work as chairman of this committee.

He has had associated with him a number of other outstanding citizens from the legal and academic communities whose interests extend or have extended across the whole spectrum of our society. It is a great tribute to the public-spirited attitude of these citizens that they were willing to undertake at considerable sacrifice in time, both personal and in terms of family and financially, the task of helping us to resolve some of our problems in the areas with which the report deals.

These members are Dr. Mary Q. Innis, who acted as vice-chairman, Mr. M. Paul Forestell of Welland, Mr. Marsh Jeanneret, His Honour Judge Harry Waisberg, and Mr. John W. Whiteside. Mr. B. W. Monday was secretary of the committee and for the second time has rendered valuable service in the work of an important committee.

During the period of its deliberations the committee lost two of its original members through the retirement of Mr. W. S. Martin in 1966 by reason of ill health, and Dr. F. C. A. Jeanneret who was vice-chairman of the committee until his death in 1967. These were great losses which made the task of the remaining members and their replacements all the more difficult. I should like to take this opportunity to pay tribute to the dedication and devotion of all those who were associated with the committee in its attempt to find reasonable solutions to what was admittedly a difficult assignment.

During the course of its deliberations the committee gave every opportunity and encouragement to all those individuals, groups and organizations, who had opinions to express, to present them to the committee in public hearings. Several hearing were held in different parts of the province. The result was that 141 briefs were received and considered.

Consultations were held with a number of authorities who had experience or who were knowledgeable about the matters with which the committee dealt. Visits were made to the different types of schools in our province and, of course, to other jurisdictions. I think it can be truly said, Mr. Speaker, that every relevant viewpoint has been sought and every possible solution considered.

I have had an opportunity to read the report and have been impressed by its content, research, and by the forthright nature of its recommendations. The intention is to make the report available to the groups and organizations which presented briefs and which are broadly representative of the society, to the educational authorities, and to the general public, and to encourage full consideration and discussion of the recommendations. The department will undertake immediately a consideration of the proposals and will wish to have the advice and assistance of the groups to which I have referred.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the committee has made a real contribution towards the ultimate improvement of programmes in the whole area covered by its terms of reference. I am gratified by the thorough study and imaginative suggestions which are evident in the recommendations and which characterize the report as a whole.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I have a rather brief statement to make.

I undertook with the members of the House to keep them informed as to the progress of the discussions between the department and the universities with respect to our teachers' colleges. I am pleased to indicate to the House today—and there will be a statement made by Dr. Dunton, I gather, at roughly the same time—that guidelines have been established between the universities and the department for the integration into the universities of our teachers' colleges.

There are certain general conditions, that I will mention very briefly, that are set out in these guidelines. They include conditions relating to buildings and facilities, to capital and operating grants, the admission of students, the structure of the teacher education facility and of its advisory committee, staffing questions, certification and curriculum.

It is proposed that the land, buildings and facilities of an existing teachers' college adjacent to a university will be transferred to the university. Planning and construction of new buildings required to provide teacher education in a university will be done by the university, in the same manner as with other university facilities.

The intention is that operating costs shall eventually be paid on a formula basis as is done at present with other operating grants to universities. However, the formula system will not be introduced until the universities have had some experience with the operation of its teacher education facility. In the meantime, the funds, both capital and operating, required for teacher education will be paid 100 per cent by the government of Ontario, through The Department of University Affairs.

Each university will have an advisory committee to advise the senate or other appropriate university bodies on the teacher education operation. The advisory committee will comprise persons named, in part by the Minister and by the university, and by any other bodies that may be provided for in each agreement. The individual agreements will also specify the matters with which the advisory committee will deal; staffing policy and curriculum are likely to be included.

The university will be free to admit to the teacher education programme any student who satisfies the normal academic admission requirement set by the university.

There is no need for a uniform organizational structure for the teacher education facility throughout the province, this is set out in the guidelines. Whether there will be a college or a faculty of education, or some other structure, will be a matter for decision by the university concerned, in consultation with The Department of Education.

All entirely new appointments to the teacher education facility in a university will be made in accordance with the procedures of the university concerned. However, the initial appointment of the head of the facility will be made in consultation with The Department of Education, and all existing members of the teaching staff of a teachers' college who wish to join the faculty of the university, following integration, will be continued in employment by the university for a minimum period of four years. Provision is made to protect the salary and pension rights of teachers' college staffs after integration. If at the end of four years a former member of the staff of a teachers' college does not continue on the university faculty, The Department of Education will use its good offices to attempt to secure alternative employment for him.

Members of the teaching staff at a teachers' college integrated into a university may be encouraged to take study leave to enhance their academic qualifications, and The Department of Education will make an agreed contribution to provide financial assistance for staff members to whom study leave is granted.

The guidelines further record the Minister's right to grant Ontario teaching certificates to graduates of a teacher education programme, and to prescribe the conditions requisite for certification. However, the universities will establish their own programmes of teacher education at both the elementary and secondary level, subject to the ordinary procedures for new programme approvals.

I should also add, Mr. Speaker, now that the general guidelines have been established and agreed to between the department and the universities, that will be moving ahead with discussions with individual universities over a period of the next months and probably over the next two or three years. I should make it clear that, because of the necessity to maintain a flow of teachers, the economic conditions involved and certain practical considerations, we cannot anticipate that all teachers' colleges will be transferred within the next two or three weeks. It will be done on a staged basis over a period of months and perhaps over two or three years.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Could the Minister advise how much consultation there will be with the various teacher affiliates on this new structure? In devising courses and so on, how it will run and how much say will the teachers' association have?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think I understand the question from the hon. member. It is the intention that, as the individual universities integrate the teachers' college into their institutions there will be representatives from the teaching profession on the advisory committee.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. leader of the Opposition has a question of the Minister of Trade and Development, from the other day.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I do not have a copy with me.

Mr. Speaker: I will be glad to send it down to you.

Mr. Nixon: Yes, if you would not mind.

Mr. Speaker, notice of this question was given the Minister, I believe yesterday, and it is as follows: Why does the Ontario Student Housing Corporation call for tenders on the so-called, "design-build" programme basis, which according to architects may not be in the best interests of quality and efficiency?

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): Mr. Speaker, The Ontario Student Housing Corporation undertakes the development of student housing using the developer proposal method as it has been found that this technique has produced well designed high quality residences at prices substantially below the cost of residences prior to 1966.

In 1966 the average cost per student bed in the province of Ontario was well in excess of $7,000; the average cost today under the builder proposal technique as used by the Ontario Student Housing Corporation is $5,000, including facilities such as dining rooms, kitchens and lounges, even though costs throughout the construction industry have accelerated substantially in the last three years. The corporation has not reduced the standards requested by the universities, either in sizes of the residences or in the quality of the structural, mechanical or electrical systems. The corporation has maintained a lower level of costs for these residences consequently allowing a greater number of residences to be constructed so that a greater number of students would be able to afford to attend universities and live in these residences.

The builder proposal technique allows participation not only of the contractor, but also of architects and consulting engineers throughout the design stage, and in fact all proposals issued by the corporation have resulted in a considerable number of proposals being submitted by outstanding professional teams of contractors, architects and consulting engineers.

The corporation has received support and favourable comment from architects participating in builder proposals as to the results that we have achieved since 1966.

The corporation utilizes the services of consulting architects and engineers throughout the development and construction phases to ensure performance of the contractor to our specifications.

The supervision of all projects is undertaken by the corporation through its technical staff and by the continuing use of consulting architects and engineers. The corporation also requires that the consulting architects and engineers of the contractor produce certificates that the residences have been built in accordance with the approved plans and specifications, prior to the corporation accepting the structures from the contractor and turning them over to the university.

The builder proposal method is not a new technique and is being used today throughout Europe, the United States of America and Canada, not only by governments but also by institutions, industry and commerce.

However, as in any system, there may be ways of improving it, and the corporation has met with professional groups in the past such as the Ontario Association of Architects, and will continue to meet with these groups to review their comments and find new and better ways of developing residences at the most economical prices.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question, if the Minister will permit.

What about the conflict of interest that develops when the architect is actually working for the construction company rather than in this case, Ontario Student Housing Corporation, which is the owner or the builder of the facility?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, that is a conflict of interest; but also I would say that the sophistication of building techniques today mean that many construction companies have their own professional architects and consulting engineers. We have been asked what the fees have been insofar as paying these people that are within a construction group. We submitted figures to the professional architects. They have checked them out and they find that there is no cut in the fees that are being received by the contractors; but what the professions would like to do is make sure that everything that is being built today goes to them first and they act as the management on the job while the building is going up. There is a conflict of interest I think between the professions, not necessarily with the housing corporation.

Mr. Nixon: Does the Minister in fact employ two levels of architects, those who are actually designing for the builders and another group that works for him as the responsible Minister of the government, so that there are architects at two levels checking on each other? Is that the way it works out?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We could use either method. We want to make use of all the professional services that are available. If it is an architectural firm without any contractor attached to it, they feel that all the work should go through it, and it should in turn find the contractor. We say that the building techniques today are changing and we also have developed a sophistication ourselves with our own staff of the housing corporation similar to Central Mortgage and Housing. I think it is unfair for them to say, as one said the other day, that we have got to wait for a housing corporation building to fall down before we get some changes made. I pointed out to them that the only building I know of that fell down in the last ten years was built at Eglinton Avenue along the lines they are talking about. So far, no Ontario Housing Corporation building has ever collapsed and I do not think ever will.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, one last supplementary question. Would the Minister say that he accounts for the reduction in costs per unit from $7,000 to $5,000 because of the fact that the building is not channelled through the normal architectural facility?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, not necessarily. We checked out some costs from private architects and found they are much higher. But they too have learned that they have to sharpen their pencils and now they are right down to the crunch. They are coming in and looking for business and we are talking with them almost on a monthly basis. In fact, I talked with professional architects here this week and my people are quite prepared to give them an opportunity to work for the housing corporation if they can show they can save us some money and get on with the job.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Health, in three parts.

1. Is the Minister aware that the Ontario College of Nurses has advised Grace graduate nurses that in order to qualify for the writing of nurse registration examinations, a Grace graduate nurse: (a) must have been employed in nursing for five years immediately prior to taking the exam; (b) must be currently employed in Ontario; (c) if she does not pass the examination the first time, she will not be allowed to re-write the examination?

2. Does the Minister agree with these rules set out by the Ontario College of Nurses?

3. If not, what steps will the Minister take to ensure that arbitrary rules, such as the ones outlined above, are withdrawn, and that Grace graduate nurses may write their examinations under conditions similar to those spelled out in sections 8 and 9 of the regulations under The Nurses Act?

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker: 1. Yes, I have had several letters advising me of the situation.

2. No, I heartily disagree with the rules as set out.

3. I have apprised the college of my views on this regulation and have urged them to give immediate and urgent reconsideration to this decision.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Waterloo North has a question from the other day of the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Municipal Affairs, in four parts:

1. Due to the many problems which have resulted from the delay of Dr. Fyfe's report on the Waterloo county area government system, would the Minister advise the House as to whether or not he has now asked for completion by a specific date?

2. Is the Minister aware that this delay has affected the internal operations of Kitchener, Waterloo and surrounding municipalities?

3. Does he believe the results of the Waterloo South—the word Wellington should be in there, it was omitted somewhere—land use study will have further complicating effects on the report?

4. Will this delay affect the government's original decision to have regional government in effect by 1971 in the area?

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is no, I have not asked Dr. Fyfe to have his report completed by a specific date. I do not think that is practical. He obviously, I believe, would like to have the report done as quickly as he can.

I have asked him on two or three occasions to complete his work as quickly as possible and I will continue to do that, but I do not think, in the interests of the people involved and in the scope of the work involved, it is a good idea to hold a shotgun to his head and say he must have it done by such-and-such a time if he cannot have it done. There really is no control over how fast someone writes something.

I would hope, and I will continue to urge, that it be done as quickly as it can be. He is aware of that and I think is making every effort to write it and get it done.

In reply to the second part of the question, I am sure that there has been some effect on municipal operations in Kitchener-Waterloo and the surrounding municipalities. It is difficult to assess the measure of such effect and the specific causes involved. Certainly the municipalities, so far as I am aware, have not been advised by me or by any branch of government to defer or forget about any essential work on the basis of the report not being completed.

On the third part, the land use study to which the member refers involves The Department of Highways, The Department of Treasury and Economics, and the community planning branch of my department. The study involves the municipalities and the planning boards in the area. There is specific work being undertaken by the Waterloo county area planning board in preparing the basis for an official plan for the whole area.

All these studies are going to have a great influence on the form and distribution of development in the areas under study. Certainly, in our study of Dr. Fyfe's recommendations, when they are received, I can assure the member that we as a department, and as a government, will take the results of the Waterloo South study and the other studies very much into account in whatever determination we finally make but these studies are not delaying the production of Dr. Fyfe's report in any way.

Finally, on the last part of the question, I indicated to the House on December 2 that we should be in a position, if all goes well, to have legislation ready within 12 to 14 months after receipt of the report and that would still be our intention.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Algoma-Manitoulin has a question of the Premier.

Mr. S. Farquhar (Algoma-Manitoulin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Premier this morning, as follows:

Has the provincial government received a request from the federal government concerning the subsidizing of ferry services between Tobermory and South Baymouth, and between Meldrum Bay on Manitoulin and Blind River on the north shore, and the services for Cockburn Island?

Since intra-provincial ferries are simply highway links, is the provincial government prepared to take over the entire cost—or a portion of the cost—of this operation consistent with its responsibilities concerning the ferry service between Prince Edward County and Adolphustown? If so, will the Premier give the House assurance that action will be forthcoming for the current tourist year?

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have had some correspondence between the federal government and ourselves concerning the subsidizing of the two ferries running to Manitoulin Island and the matter is presently under negotiation.

In the second question we have once again, Mr. Speaker, a statement of facts in a question which are not necessarily correct, inasmuch as the question is worded "since intra-provincial ferries are simply highway links".

I would like to point out to the hon. member that the federal government has been subsidizing these two ferries for an indefinite number of years, so it is not simply a question of this government trying to avoid any responsibility that it may have. This responsibility for subsidy to Manitoulin Island has been accepted by the federal government for a good many years and the gist of their correspondence to us, is that they want to get out of this subsidization. This may be a perfectly logical position for them to take, but it may be one that this government will not necessarily accept out of hand.

I might say that in the final part of the question—"will we give the House assurance"—well certainly, the ferries have to operate. But once again, Mr. Speaker, I point out to you that in our negotiations with Ottawa we not only have to compete with the government of Ottawa, which is trying to improve its position vis-à-vis Ontario, but we have to compete with the Opposition in this House, because this question obviously is designed to put the position of the federal government—

An hon. member: Exactly.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: —and I am getting very, very tired of it. Every time we—

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): The Premier looks tired.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Nixon: The Premier's government reflects his tiredness. The statement is unworthy of the Premier.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: It is not the least bit unworthy of me. I am becoming very, very tired of having to fight this Opposition on every dispute we have with Ottawa.

Now here it is. Just read the question and analyze how it has been written. It could have been written by someone from the federal government, putting their argument. Now it is time we settled down in this Chamber right here and started to protect the interests of the province of Ontario.

Mr. Nixon: That is the attitude—"I am all right Jack," let somebody else pay.

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member is endeavouring to ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Farquhar: Could I ask the Premier a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker? Since I will not be allowed on this occasion to enter into a debate on the matters that he has raised? I will have to do that—

Mr. Nixon: Well the Speaker did not call him to order.

Mr. Farquhar: —do that at a later date. I simply want to ask him—in view of the extreme concern on the Island and the shore, which the member for Algoma shares with me—how soon, or if, in the near future, we are going to be able to get reaction from the provincial government that will relieve the tension that is existing there right now with respect to the forthcoming tourist year?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I think I could make this assurance, my little outburst has nothing to do with the facts of this particular case. It is obvious that this government—

Mr. Nixon: Completely out of order!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: It is obvious that this government is not going to leave Manitoulin Islands cut off, without ferry service; and I make that assurance to—

Mr. Nixon: Much as the government would like to.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: —that assurance to the hon. member, and to the people who live on the island and the people who want to visit it.

Mr. MacDonald: How about Pelee Island?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Pelee Island is another question. Here again we have a ferry service, and I might say that I am conducting a survey—if I am going to answer this question—I am conducting a survey of what ferry services are subsidized by the federal government in the other provinces of Canada. I think this is information we should have when we are being asked to take over from the federal government a subsidization that the federal government has assumed for many, many years.

We are quite prepared to negotiate with the federal government. I have been in touch with Mr. Hellyer personally and there is no animosity between us on the question, but I just do not like to always have to fight this group as well as the federal government.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): The Prime Minister need not apologize for his outburst.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

The hon. member for Sarnia has the floor.

Mr. Bullbrook: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker!

Are you going to permit the hon. Prime Minister and other Cabinet Ministers, in replying to us, to impute motives to the Opposition when they ask such questions? Because as I understand the rules of this House, if I might continue—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

Mr. Bullbrook: As I understand—

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Bullbrook: As I understand the rules of this House, imputation of motives, unless those motives have been previously avowed, are completely out of order.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

I would point out to the hon. member that questions as submitted and approved by me obviously are intended to impute motives to the government, otherwise the questions would not have point, and I have allowed them. Therefore, I think it is quite proper that an answer in similar vein should be given. I would propose to continue to allow that type of question to be asked and the answer of similar vein to be given.

If the hon. members do not wish that then the question period loses all its impact, in my opinion.

Mr. Lewis: What about these lackeys of foreign powers taking up the time of the House?

Mr. Farquhar: Mr. Speaker, may I speak further to the point of order?

I simply want to say that the last answer I got from the Premier was the answer I was looking for. I am perfectly satisfied. Thank you very much.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough West has a question from the other day of the Minister of Social and Family Services.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Lewis: Designed in my own office, by my own hand, Mr. Speaker.

To the Minister of Social and Family Services: Is there any truth to the contention by recipients of mothers' allowance presently resident in the Warden Woods low rental housing project that the reduction in their February rent by virtue of the basic shelter exemption will now be reclaimed in one or more installments by the family benefits branch of the Minister's department over the next few months?

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Social and Family Services): Mr. Speaker, the fact that the person who asked the question was the author of the question makes it a very easy one to answer, which is as follows:

Recipients of family benefits resident in the Warden Woods housing projects will be permitted to retain the basic shelter exemption grant payments to the extent that the amounts actually paid for shelter by the recipient during the year exceeded the amounts approved in their allowances for shelter. Where there is no excessive amount paid by the recipient the amounts will be recovered by one or more installments over the next few months.

This is similar to the previous question and answer I gave on December 10, 1968.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask a supplementary, Mr. Speaker?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Yes.

Mr. Lewis: Is the Minister aware that his colleague, the Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Randall), subsequent to his answer on January 2, 1969, wrote to all the people about whom he speaks saying that he was pleased to confer this benefit upon them, and subsequently the Minister's department is reclaiming it from them? How does the Minister reconcile departmental policy?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Wherever the recipients of those letters paid rent in excess of that budgeted, as I said, they will be permitted to keep it. No person will be paid twice.

Mr. MacDonald: Scrooge was a generous soul compared to the Minister!

Mr. Lewis: Another supplementary: Why is the basic shelter exemption given by one department, being used to fund another government department? Was that the meaning of the legislation?

An hon. member: That is right!

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Our regulations apply to everybody in the province of Ontario, regardless who the landlord is.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Hamilton East has a question from the other day of the Minister of Labour.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Labour: When will Bill 35, The Operating Engineers Act assented to April 14, 1965, be proclaimed?

How many charges have been laid for violation of The Operating Engineers Act, 1953, chapter 282, from April 1965 to date?

Hon. D. A. Bales (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question, the regulations are currently being completed and I expect that the Act will be proclaimed within the next few weeks.

As to the second part, there have been nine prosecutions, and convictions were registered in eight cases.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury East has a question of the Minister of Education.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Education: Will the Minister investigate the ETV programming as it is being shown at the present time on some TV stations to ensure a two or three minute break between programmes so that classes can move in or out of a television room, or a TV set can be moved to another classroom during such a break rather than interfere and lose part of the programme itself, as is presently the case?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, this matter is, of course, being considered by the branch. We face a very practical problem of time being quite expensive and trying to get as much actual programme material into the amount of time available to us. The actual break is one minute and 50 seconds at the present time. We feel that when the transmission facilities become available to us as a provincial jurisdiction, together with an increase in the number of television receivers or recorders within the system, this problem will then disappear.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health has an answer to a question.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) asked a question concerning OMSIP and EGIP a few days ago and I undertook to get him further information.

Employees group insurance plan entitlement to medical services insurance is dependent upon participation in the basic life insurance programme. OMSIP has no such requirement. OMSIP provides all necessary medical services, certain specified dental and surgical procedures, and refraction by either a physician or optometrist.

EGIP does not provide all necessary medical services. Exceptions are found in obstetrical care, caesarian sections, well-baby care, periodic health examinations. It makes no provision for dental or optometric care. EGIP, however, does pay 100 per cent of the OMA fee schedule; OMSIP pays 90 per cent of the 1967 schedule.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, you may recall that in 1967 a committee of senior officials was appointed to enquire into matters dealing with conflict of interest of public employees.

This inquiry arose originally as a result of an Alderman Collins in my own city of London who got into some difficulty as far as the city council there was concerned as a result of a potential conflict of interest. Then the hon. member for Riverdale, in another debate, raised the question of conflict of interest of members of boards of governors of universities; so this eventually got into a rather broad study.

The terms of reference for the committee were as follows:

1. The consideration of the best interests of the public in having any employee of a municipality or a local board serve as a member of a municipal council or of any local board, and to determine appropriate safeguards in respect of conflict of interest.

2. The means by which the knowledge and abilities of an employee of a municipality or local board may in the public interest be made available in elective or appointive office.

3. The extent to which other persons presently disqualified by statute should be permitted to participate in public office, and to determine appropriate safeguards respecting conflict of interest.

4. The consideration of the application of these matters to governing bodies of the universities.

5. Such other matters as may be pertinent to the inquiry.

Today I would like to table the report of this committee. I will make this available to all the members of the House.

I might point out that this is a very difficult area, indeed. It has been studied by select committees of this House, it has now been studied by this committee. There have been changes in the legislation over the years and it is very difficult to arrive at black and white solutions to these problems that are fair to everyone involved. On page 53 of the report, within two or three pages there is a summary of its recommendations set out in tabulated order.

What I would really like to do with this report is refer it to the Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. McKeough), to the Attorney General and Minister of Justice (Mr. Wishart), and any other Minister whose portfolio might be involved. And I hope that during the course of this session we will be able to produce a piece of legislation which, I would have to say from the beginning probably will not touch all the bases or be perfect within its four corners for all the various opinions that are held by people in this regard, on the other hand that is no reason why we cannot press on with some approach to the problem, so that when the legislation comes here we will debate it. It can then be sent on to a committee of this House where members of the public who might be interested can make representation.

I hope in this way we will be able to produce a piece of legislation which will embody the recommendations of this report plus some consideration by the public.

As I say, the whole matter was studied by the select committee dealing with The Municipal Act some years ago and there were many public representations made at that time and the Ministers involved with this report will have the benefit of the report of that committee. But I think the time has come when we had better stop seeking 100 per cent perfection and produce a piece of legislation, even though it may not satisfy everybody concerned.

Mr. Nixon: On a point of clarification, I thought in the remarks just at the end of the Premier's statement that he was suggesting that a select committee might re-examine this matter once again. It appears that the recommendations from the committee tabled today are somewhat similar to those of the select committee on The Municipal Act and I would not think we would have to go through the procedure much more often.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: The whole burden of my remarks is that even though we will not get perfection, we can take the results of these two committees and produce a piece of legislation and see how it works out.

Mr. Speaker. Orders of the day.

TOWN OF BURLINGTON

Mr. D. H. Morrow (Ottawa West), in the absence of Mr. Kerr, moves second reading of Bill Pr5, An Act respecting the town of Burlington.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

BOBIER CONVALESCENT HOME

Mr. H. Worton (Wellington South), in the absence of Mr. Spence, moves second reading of Bill Pr7, An Act respecting Bobier convalescent home.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

MAIMONIDES SCHOOLS FOR JEWISH STUDIES

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville), in the absence of Mr. Singer, moves second reading of Bill Pr23, An Act respecting Maimonides Schools for Jewish Studies.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

CITY OF PETERBOROUGH

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale), in the absence of Mr. Pitman, moves second reading of Bill Pr29, An Act respecting the city of Peterborough.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

TOWN OF MISSISSAUGA

Mr. R. D. Kennedy (Peel South) moves second reading of Bill Pr34, An Act respecting the town of Mississauga.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, on a point of information, I wonder if I can ask the Premier if it has been decided that Parliament will not proceed with Pr13?

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Oh no! We are just holding it up to have a look at it.

Mr. Nixon: The vote went against the government in the bills committee, and I—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: This has happened before.

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs): We wanted to take it up with Ottawa.

Mr. Nixon: I see, yes—take it up with the backroom boys in London.

Clerk of the House: The fifth order, House in committee of the whole; Mr. Reuter in the chair.

THE MILK ACT, 1965

The House in committee on Bill 17, An Act to amend The Milk Act, 1965.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Would the Minister explain the necessity for section 2 of the bill?

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): First of all section 2 and section 1 go together to a certain degree. The amendment gives the board the authority to make regulations in section 1. The regulations that were made and filed because of The Regulations Act are now deemed to have been made under The Milk Act as amended by section 1 of this bill, and declares that the regulations were deemed to have been filed as on the date on which they were actually filed under The Regulations Act.

If the hon. member will recall the discussion and debate on the second reading of this bill, he will recognize that it was a technicality flowing from a judgment that had been handed down—I should say an expression of opinion of one of the justices of the court. He said that what the board had done was quite in order but they should have done it by order rather than by regulation. The Regulations Act provides that when a board makes a regulation it has to be filed under The Regulations Act. We are simply validating this, but section 2 in no way interferes with the right of anyone to challenge the making of such a regulation.

Mr. J. Rewick: My problem, Mr. Chairman, is simply that it appears, as far as I can tell, to only have a retrospective effect, and is not retroactive in the sense of affecting persons rights prior to the enactment of this bill. Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I am not a lawyer and this is a technicality, but I have been assured that there is no reason whatever in section 2 of this bill to interfere with the right of anyone to challenge the authority of the milk board—or to make regulations.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Might this be a suitable time for the Minister, who is not a lawyer, to explain to me and some others who are not lawyers what the difference between a regulation and an order actually is?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Under The Regulations

Act, all regulations have to be filed; that is, published in the Gazette, and published in the House paper of the Ontario Milk Marketing Board, The Milk Producer. When this legislation or the Act was passed in 1965 and the milk board was finally appointed, so that everyone would know what they were doing by way of decisions they were making, it was decided that rather than file them as orders, as is the case in some jurisdictions, particularly the United States, that they be filed as regulations.

Under The Regulations Act there is no choice but to file those decisions publicly. This was the decision that they reached, and they have stuck by that decision ever since. I think this is a very sensible arrangement because it gives all producers the opportunity to know what the regulations really are.

Mr. Nixon: That sounds very helpful.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I think so.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Essex-Kent.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Mr. Chairmen, when section 2 of this bill went into the agriculture committee I was under the impression that the wording was "shall be deemed to have been made under The Milk Act, 1965, as amended by this Act", and then the wording was "and shall have the same force and effect as if filed on that date". That was the wording which I was under the impression was being put in that day; but I see this is not so. Now I may be wrong, but I thought I was very careful in writing down what they proposed that day. Was this changed in the meantime?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Here again, I am not a lawyer, Mr. Chairman. The words that I used that day—and I wrote that amendment out myself—when they came to legislative counsel they decided that the changing of some of those words would not affect the principle of what we were doing but it would be legal terminology; and that was why there were one or two words changed. It has no bearing on the principle on which we voted that day.

Mr. Ruston: Well, it may not, and I have no legal background either, as you might know. But I know in the discussion that day, the solicitors who were present representing some of those involved and interested in it seemed to have some disagreement between their opinion and the opinion of solicitors for The Department of Agriculture and Food.

That is why I am just wondering if there may be some difference in it. It just seems a little strange that would come up now—that the change would be made—because I was under the impression that that is the way it would be that day.

Section 2 agreed to.

Mr. Nixon: Before the bill is reported, I think it would be well to point out as an aftermath to our previous debate on second reading that sending this bill to committee and amending it to some extent did not in fact result in the dissolution of milk marketing in the province as was predicted by the Premier. He said it would fall on its face.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): I am delighted that it worked out so well. Sometimes I am happy to be wrong.

Bill 17 reported.

THE PREPAID HOSPITAL AND MEDICAL SERVICES ACT

House in committee on Bill 22, An Act to amend The Prepaid Hospital and Medical Services Act.

Sections 1 to 7, inclusive, agreed to.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, before the bill is reported, I wonder if the Minister can indicate to what extent the use of this bill is expected in the next few years, dealing with insurance covering drugs?

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): I cannot estimate that, but there is one plan—and I believe we call it the Windsor plan—which will go into operation at once.

Bill 22 reported.

THE MINING ACT

House in committee on Bill 24, An Act to amend The Mining Act.

Sections 1 to 5, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 6:

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Mines): Mr. Chairman, on section 6 I would like to move an amendment, please. I move that the present section 6 be deleted and that the following be substituted therefor:

6. This Act comes into force on the first day of April, 1969.

Mr. Chairman, the reason for this amendment is pretty obvious. We want to make it clear in the Act the effective date for it. We have now cleared the way administratively with the new form and the new facilities so that these departures from past procedures in The Mining Act will be available to the public and therefore we feel if we set out the date right in the amendment this will facilitate the services to the public.

THE COUNTY JUDGES ACT

House in committee on Bill 50, An Act to amend The County Judges Act.

On section 1:

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): In respect to section 1, I move that subsection 2 of section 1 of the bill be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

Subsection 2 of section 2 is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

2. Two junior judges may be appointed for the county court for the regional municipality of Ottawa-Carleton and of each of the counties of Essex and Wentworth.

The amendment, Mr. Chairman, substitutes the proper name of the new municipality.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, on section 1, and I hesitate to mention this particular subject, but does the initiative for the expansion of the judiciary come from here or from the Minister's counterpart in Ottawa?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well the initiative insofar as the number of judges is concerned comes from us, the province, as the administrators of justice. Federal Parliament has the power of appointment of Supreme Court judges, district and county court judges, but as to the administration and the judges we need and all the other facilities that we need to supply—courthouses, staff, sheriffs, all the officers—all the administration is a part of the provincial jurisdiction.

So when we find that we need more judges, either in the Supreme Court or in the county or district courts, we make requests to Ottawa to appoint additional judges as required. That is why these bills must go through, so we can make a request as a government request to Ottawa.

Mr. Nixon: Is there parallel legislation in Ottawa or is it just a provision of the constitution?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think that the Minister of Justice at Ottawa must then obtain legislation to appoint the judges. I believe this is the way he proceeds.

Mr. Nixon: But legislation would be similar?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, there is The Judges Act—which covers, I think, all judges—supreme court, superior court, our county and district courts, and I think it also deals with the exchequer court and the Supreme Court of Canada—and that is the federal Act which sets up the number of judges who shall be appointed in certain areas in certain provinces. My understanding is that the Minister of Justice, when he receives our legislation, must then amend his Act.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): That is what happens when lawyers do these things.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I might direct a question, through you, to the hon. Attorney General. It has just come to my mind. I understand the need for the amendment that the Attorney General has just proposed, but what will they call that court? And second: For example, as we go on we are going to appoint 14 junior judges for the county of York, and they have jurisdiction in connection with Metropolitan Toronto; now, will the court in question be called the court of Ottawa-Carleton? There is a technical difficulty that comes to my mind, perhaps I am missing the point entirely—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think it is a rather technical point. We call it a region, a regional government, a combination of counties; so I do not think we would be far wrong if we said it was still a county court. The Act creating the region states it is deemed to be a county.

Mr. Bullbrook: Just for the sake of mental gymnastics and not attempting to waste time unduly, but the jurisdiction, as far as the county of York is concerned, relates to Metropolitan Toronto. Will the court in question here continue to be the county court of the county of Carleton, having jurisdiction over those affairs within the regional municipality of Ottawa-Carleton? I am just wondering really as to the technical propriety of the amendment we are really considering now, because we are appointing judges—“Two junior judges may be appointed for the regional municipality of Ottawa-Carleton”—and yet they will not be judges of the regional municipality of Ottawa-Carleton, they will be judges of the county court of the county of Carleton, I would think.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Those are mental gymnastics, I think, all right. I think the judges will be able to serve the area.

Mr. Bullbrook: I hope so.

THE PARTNERSHIPS REGISTRATION ACT

House in committee on Bill 60, An Act to amend The Partnerships Registration Act.

On section 1:

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): I suppose it is section 1. I am under paragraph 17; 16 takes up the bulk of it and then 17 the rest.

I am still somewhat concerned, Mr. Chairman, about the appointment of a registrar of partnerships. With the introduction of the computers, this central registry for partnerships, limited and otherwise, is tentatively, and for the time being at least, set up in the city of Toronto at the city registry office. The proliferation of posts is what is bothering me.

Can the registrar of the city of Toronto not carry out this function? It should not be a very onerous one. It is all going to be computerized and be run through with a few girls rather quickly I suspect; and to set up a whole new registry seems to be pushing it pretty hard, particularly as the facilities already exist and are being set up down at the new city hall building. Does the Minister really feel that he has to go this far?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I think it is patent in the bill that there is provision there for the appointment of a registrar of partnerships if the volume of the work—the detail attached to it when we bring in partnership registration across the province—should be so large that such an office were needed. We would have the provision there to do it. But then subsection 2 of 17 indicates, I think, our intention that until such an official registrar of partnerships is appointed, we will continue to carry on allowing and expecting the registrar of deeds—actually, we call him the registrar now—to do that work as he does now for Toronto.

Speaking of computers, we are moving to that and anticipating that in connection with our personal property security and other features which require registration. We will not reach that perhaps for a year or two years. But this is just a safeguard to make sure that if the volume should become so great, we might need somebody to be specialized in that field.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, may I just say in reply, and comment on this, that this is most reassuring. I had taken it that you were going forward, but the fact that you will watch the volume and not appoint unless it is absolutely necessary is fine.

THE COMMISSIONERS FOR TAKING AFFIDAVITS ACT

House in committee on Bill 61, An Act to amend The Commissioners for Taking Affidavits Act.

On section 1:

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I move that subsection 1 of Section 1 of the bill be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

Subsection 4 of section 2 of The Commissioners for Taking Affidavits Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

The head of every municipal council, the reeve of every town, every deputy reeve and every comptroller and alderman of a municipality is ex-officio commissioner for taking affidavits in the county, district or regional municipality in which a municipality is situate.

I might say, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment provides for the case where a municipality is in a regional municipality and not a county or district.

Motion agreed to.

Section 1, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 2 and 3 agreed to.

On section 4:

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Attorney General if in fact there are affidavits that have been taken by the people referred to in section 4, which now would be regularized by this section?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That would be the purpose and intent of that section.

Mr. Nixon: They have been under the impression that they have these powers?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The section ends with the words:

Shall be deemed to have always been ex-officio commissioners.

That would validate any actions they have taken as commissioners for the taking of oaths.

Sections 4 and 5 agreed to.

On section 6:

Mr. Nixon: Does the Attorney General have any thoughts at all about instructing those who are in fact made commissioners for taking affidavits under this bill and the provisions therefor so they know what the responsibilities are in this regard?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I must confess, no, I have not thought about any special instruction. Persons who receive their commission understand at the time they get it what the requirements are. Perhaps some special instruction as to how solemn an oath is and how they should be properly taken might be useful. I will give that some thought and see what we might do.

Mr. Nixon: I might just add that as I understand it, under the provisions of the Act we are amending, all of us as members of this House have this responsibility. I might just suggest to the Attorney General that there may be those present, myself included, who are not perhaps completely aware of the ramifications of this responsibility and how in fact it is used.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am glad to have the thought and will see what may be done.

CONSOLIDATION AND REVISION OF THE STATUTES

House in committee on Bill 62, An Act to provide for the Consolidation and Revision of the Statutes.

Sections 1 and 2 agreed to.

On section 3:

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, on second reading, I raised the point about the wording of section 3. I know it is traditional and sanctified by time but that does not in the least make it not wrong. If you can read the wording here, I suggest that in future revisions that it be perused and possibly altered. It gives Warner Cox Alcombrack and Arthur Norman Stone extremely wide powers indeed, I suggest to the Attorney General.

I will not read the first part of the section. "The commissioners may alter the numbering and arrangements of any enactment . . ." Well that is fine. "And may make such alterations in language and punctuation as a requisite to obtain a uniform mode of expression . . ." Well again, that is fine. "And may make such amendments as are necessary to bring out more clearly what is deemed to be the intention of the Legislature or to reconcile seemingly inconsistent enactments . . ."

Now I find that most objectionable that we should delegate off to public servants, however learned in the law and what not, the power to make such amendments. I suggest that is a very questionable thing to do. If there are reconciliations to make—if the enactments are not, on the face of them, by golden rule or any other rule of interpretation reconcilable on their face—it is certainly not the job of any delegated body or entity from this Legislature to set up the reconciliations.

If sections clash then it is our job to amend them, to bring them into line. And while you may point out this has happened for well over a century, since these revisions have been coming down, I would ask you to give that your circumspection; I am not moving an amendment on it simply because it is hoary. I do not think that as lawyers it is our duty to shift off the responsibility that we bear in this regard by simply saying we trust these men, we know of their intrinsic trustworthiness.

The point is that there are some people who may come after them who may be slipshod, or may actually have a cause to serve which would permit them to use this wording. After all, we lawyers turn immediately to the statutes, we take them as verity, at their face value. We do not check back as to whether alterations have been made against the very wording of the original Act.

No one man or group of men of this kind has the time or wisdom to do that. It must be brought before a body of contentious legislators who will bring it out in the litmus paper of debate, and again I would ask the Attorney General to consider that.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I would like to speak very briefly to it, and point out that there are some statutes which will be omitted because they were passed as a transitional thing, and they have been replaced by legislation as the ten years went along. There are clerical errors, of course; I know the hon. member is not concerned about that. But there is a need to take out in the revision certain statutes which have become obsolete by virtue of later legislation.

I think the most reassuring statement I can give is that when this work is done, when this work is ready for approval by the Legislature, it will be brought forward. And I should make the hon. members aware that a confirming statute will be necessary in 1971 to make this work official. In considering any changes or omissions that will be brought to the attention of the members, they will be able to say, "This should not have been omitted; it should have been kept in", if that were their opinion. But I think the persons in charge of the revision will be able to inform myself, or the Attorney General of the day, so that he may satisfy the House that the revision is proper.

Section 3 agreed to.

Sections 4 and 5 agreed to.

On section 6.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, just one question on 6: I noticed that the wording, "unrepealed" and "unconsolidated" comes up. Would the Attorney General care to comment as to what that phraseology might mean? It comes up later in the bill but it is also under the schedules.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am looking for the words "unrepealed" and "unconsolidated". Are those the words the hon. member used?

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, those are the words. I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, it is more in section 8, I guess, although when I was going over the statutes I noticed in 6(b) the words "repealed". "superseded" and "consolidated". Then it comes down and says and "not consolidated" in the last line. That is spelled out a little bit more in section 8 where they say "any reference in an unrepealed and unconsolidated Act".

Mr. Chairman: Section 6(b) does not use the term "unconsolidated". In section (b) it says, "are not consolidated".

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I understand, Mr. Chairman, that there are certain Acts that are not of public interest, such as university bills; that sort of thing which is not consolidated. They are appended to the revised statutes, as the hon. member knows. I know he is most familiar with that setup of our revised statutes. Those Acts are of no public interest particularly when unrepealed and unconsolidated and appended to the revision.

Mr. Lawlor: A further question to the Attorney General, Mr. Chairman. The Attorney General says, "of no public interest", again. Does the Attorney General, with a neatly perusing staff, I trust, look at that and make sure that it is not of public interest? It very often strikes me that there are Acts lying in some limbo, to be dragged out at the behest, usually of the Crown, when some poor devil is in a state of affliction, and his lawyer, did not know they existed. I would trust again that we would get assurance that Acts which have a public import in that sense of the term do get consolidated.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, with the consent of the committee I would like to revert to section 5. I had confused appendix "A" with schedule "A" and I did want to ask the Attorney General a couple of questions on section 5. You got by it before I recognized the mistake I had made.

Mr. Chairman: Is the hon. member suggesting the chairman was going too quickly?

Mr. J. Renwick: No, Mr. Chairman, section 5 refers to appendix "A" which is what I wanted to comment about. Section 6 refers to schedule "A", and I made the mistake of assuming that my remarks were pertinent under section 6.

Mr. Chairman: Would the committee consent to reverting to section 5 under the circumstances?

You have the consent of the committee. The hon. member may direct questions.

Mr. J. Renwick: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. My question to the Attorney General refers to this appendix "A" of the revised statutes which provides for:

Certain imperial Acts and parts of Acts relating to property and civil rights that were consolidated in the Revised Statutes of Ontario 1897, volume 3, pursuant to chapter 13 of the Statutes of Ontario (1902), that are not repealed by the Revised Statutes of Ontario (1960)—

And I assume that would be 1970 in the new revision—

—and are in force in Ontario subject thereto.

That quotation, Mr. Chairman, is simply the heading of appendix "A".

Those statutes which my colleague, the member for Lakeshore, referred to on second reading of the bill, are five Acts. One is the Act commonly known as The Habeas Corpus Act. The second one deals with monopolies. The third one deals with champerty and the fourth and fifth deal with real property, commonly known as quia emptores and The Statute of Uses.

In looking at the origin of this particular appendix, and it is a little bit lost in antiquity in this province, I notice that in 1902, chapter 1 of the statutes provides for the revision of the statute law. That Act repealed a large number of old imperial statutes to the extent that they were in force in the province of Ontario, and those statutes are listed in the schedule to that chapter 1 of the statutes of 1902.

Then in the same year, by chapter 13, there is an Act respecting the imperial statutes relating to property and civil rights incorporated into the statute law of Ontario. And in reading the preamble to that particular statute, Mr. Chairman, it refers again to the antiquity of these statutes that were repealed in this session, and then goes on to state:

Whereas it is expedient to include in such consolidation certain statutes of the present session passed in substitution or amendment of certain of the said imperial statutes.

Somewhere within the framework of those two statutes and out of the discarding and repealing of many old statutes, these five statutes were selected for perpetuation in the consolidated statutes of the province of Ontario. My question to the Attorney General is whether or not the commissioners could in this particular instance look particularly at appendix "A" to see first of all whether it is now adequate to give effect to matters which are included, or formerly were included, in the statute law, whether it is now necessary that those statutes be repeated, and whether or not it would be possible to translate them into relatively more relevant language—particularly the two or three difficult statutes—and fourthly, whether or not there is room for the inclusion of other statutes as part of the imperial statutes in force in the province of Ontario.

I think the import of my remarks is simply, could these now not become statutes enacted by this Legislature and avoid this incorporation by reference of these imperial statutes into the law of the province of Ontario? For example, The Habeas Corpus Act or the Magna Carta. It would seem to me that the historic nature of that language would permit it to be enacted directly by this province as a statute.

The application and extent of the next Act—the one concerning monopolies and dispensations with penal laws—is one which almost defies either interpretation or application in the existing situation in the province of Ontario. Maybe it could be recast into language which would be clear and unmistakable as to its import and application.

Presumably the Act respecting champerty could be directly included as a statute in the consolidation, and presumably the statute of quia emptores and the statute of uses could also be included directly within the consolidation, rather than carrying them forward only by an appendix, which is not an area in the consolidation that one usually refers to in looking up questions of applicable or pertinent statute law.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I think the suggestions put forward are very meritorious. I might say we had considered this to some extent and the advice we took was from the law reform commission. Our advice from them was that we might leave these until they complete their study—they are doing a particular study in the field of property law, of all property. They suggested we might leave these till that report had been received.

However, I think perhaps it is certainly clear that some of these Acts in appendix "A" do not relate to property alone and as this work will certainly be proceeding through next year, I am quite prepared to consider the possibility of either amending these sections, if you would let them pass. I am sure we could make that amendment in time as we perhaps change our approach, we could make those amendments in time to enable that work to be done in a different manner.

We did take advice on this. The law reform commission felt that we might leave them for this revision, but I think there is perhaps merit if we can get to a change which would bring them directly into our laws that would be better than leaving them in these appendices.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, just two other points that I would like to comment on in the same appendix.

I am glad to hear that the Attorney General would give consideration to the suggestions and bring in whatever necessary amending legislation would be required to change this Act a year from now if it made sense to do so.

I am rather curious that in the incorporation in the statutes in appendix "A" there is no mention, for example, of the Bill of Rights, which was passed—if my historical recollection is correct—in 1689—

Mr. Lawlor: 1688!

Mr. J. Renwick: My colleague, the member for Lakeshore, advises me that it was in 1688 that it was passed—and there may be similar statutes related to this whole question of rights of citizens. I do not know what the status, for example, of the petition of right, which—again deferring to my colleague, the member for Lakeshore—I believe was 1628. And I do not understand why references to those statutes—which in my studying were part and parcel of Magna Carta—should not be included, because they would have become part of the laws of Upper Canada in 1792.

But in any event, in the consideration which is given by the commission to this particular appendix "A", they may well consider that there were other statutes affecting the rights and liberties of the people which should be included in the consolidation.

My last point is that I simply ask the House to note the importance of this appendix in relationship to the position in the province of the relationship of landlord and tenant. For example, this right of distress we find as long ago as the reign of Henry III in part of the statutes of this province the provision that it is agreed that none "from henceforth shall take any revenge or distress of his own authority". And of course that is the point which we have been making and which the law reform commission is finally dealing with—this whole question of people taking the law in their own hands.

I make that point both because of the modernity of the statute but also because people do not realize that part of the statute law of the province of Ontario preserves certain of these ancient rights and liberties. I would like to see the appendix "A" not only revised in modern understandable language, and brought into the consolidation as such, but the statutes dealing with the rights and liberties of people up to the time of the incorporation of the province of Upper Canada reviewed, and all of them, if necessary, included or re-enacted as part of the laws of this province.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree moves that the committee rise and report.

Mr. Chairman: I wonder if the hon. House leader would allow the Chairman to put section 6 which I feel has been carried?

Section 6 agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Then section 5 has not yet been put.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed, Mr. Speaker in the Chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of the whole House begs to report certain bills without amendments and certain bills with amendments and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in this private members' hour we shall deal with resolution No. 14 standing in the name of Mr. Apps and shown on page 9 of the order paper.

NOTICE OF MOTION

Clerk of the House: Private member's notice of motion No. 14 by Mr. Apps:

RESOLUTION: That a department of youth should be created to deal with the social the problems of our youth.

Mr. S. Apps (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I rise to introduce the following resolution:

That a department of youth should be created to deal with the social needs and the problems of our youth.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the hon. member to first put his motion before the House by moving his resolution.

Mr. Apps: Mr. Speaker, I move resolution No. 14, standing in my name, which has just been read.

Mr. Speaker, I introduce this motion with the understanding that the social needs in that definition include physical needs as well. I move the resolution that this department should have its own Cabinet Minister, and

I do so with some regret because I had hoped that a resolution of this nature at this time would not be necessary. The key resolution of the Ontario Legislature's select committee on youth was as follows:

The select committee recommends that a separate provincial department of youth with its own Cabinet Minister should be formed at the earliest convenience of the Legislature.

The reasons for this recommendation, which was passed unanimously by all members of the committee, are well documented in the report and I do not intend to dwell at any great length going over them again at this time. I will say now, however, that I have no reason to change my mind from what I believed when the recommendation was made, first of all in the interim report of the Legislature in June, 1966, and again in the final report in 1967.

In my own view this recommendation was the key to the successful implementation of a large number of the recommendations outlined in the report, and in this connection I would like to quote a small section of the report found on page 18 of the Youth Report:

The select committee, in its interim report to the Legislature in June, 1966, unanimously recommended the formation of a provincial department of youth with its own Cabinet Minister, and since that time the committee has not changed its mind, and reiterates its recommendations, which are based on two and a half years of study and deliberation.

During this time the committee was made aware of the need for a separate government department devoted to youth requirements, and this will be necessary to establish the many proposals outlined in the report and to ensure a wider participation by youth in the life of the community. The preponderance of evidence from the submission backs up this recommendation and is shown in later pages.

As I have already indicated, Mr. Speaker, I see no reason for changing my mind from what the report indicated at that time. To my knowledge there are only three arguments against the recommendation, none of which I feel is valid.

First of all, people have suggested that you should not create a department for a certain section of people such as youth, that it segregates them, that this could lead to segregating them from the rest of the populace and lead to a breakdown in communication and give certain special status to those under 25. Mr. Speaker, I do not think anybody needs to say at this time that there is now a certain lack of communication between the young people of this province and those of us in the older generation. I feel that a department of youth would not lead to extending this lack of communication but would do a great deal to improve it. Youth should receive a great deal more attention than they are getting at the present time. Many of the programmes would certainly carry over to a later age and there would be a co-ordination of those programmes.

The second objection is that there are too many departments already in the government and it would not be wise to add another. It seems to me that since the recommendation came down a couple of years ago, there have been two additional departments created in this government—Financial and Commercial Affairs, and The Department of Revenue. The question in my mind is, are they more important than having a focal point, a department for youth in this province? As far as I am concerned, although these two departments may certainly be needed, I still feel that a department of youth is needed just as much, maybe more.

Third: Other departments already in existence can carry out the recommendations made. I realize that many of these departments are working very hard to do a job for the young people of this province. I do not think they are getting enough support and I do not think their efforts are adequate. I feel that there must be one Minister whose sole responsibility is to examine the problems of youth, originate and carry out the needed programmes, press diligently in other areas which are not directly his responsibility and show the way in co-ordinating their activities. I will have a lot more to say about this shortly.

One of the most obvious needs is to bring together in one department these various activities concerning youth and recreation which are now spread over many. First of all, the athletic commissioner is under The Department of Labour. Nobody really knows why this office is under The Department of Labour other than the fact that this was a pretty handy spot to put it at one time. There is no question of the fact that the commissioner does a good job within the scope with which he is limited. I feel he could do a much better job and I feel his activities could be expanded, but they have not been.

The community centre grants are under The Department of Agriculture and Food. I think at one time there was very good reason for this, because many of these grants were made to county fairs, and so on, to help them implement the facilities that they needed. However, a great many of these grants now are going to community centres and so forth. I had the pleasant opportunity, a few days ago, of presenting to the city of Kingston a grant of $40,000 to help build two arenas, and it comes from The Department of Agriculture and Food. We are very happy to receive the money, but I feel they should be co-ordinated in a department that will look after the needs of the youth in the community.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Do not tell me the cheque went through the hon. member?

Mr. Apps: If the leader of the Opposition would like to know, the cheque was given to me and I presented it to the mayor. There was no publicity whatsoever.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Shame!

Mr. Apps: All right, look at it and see.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): The member does not have to worry about being recorded—

Mr. Apps: I see that. Needless to say, the cheque was very well received because it did help in the building of these facilities. My only regret was the fact that it was not a larger sum.

The youth and recreation branch is now in The Department of Education and the Ontario Council for the Arts is now in The Department of Education. I think many of our training schools, which deal with very young people, are now in The Department of Correctional Services—which, by the way, I think, has improved a great deal; I think everybody in this House will share that opinion with me. But I feel that these things could be incorporated within a new department of youth.

I was rather encouraged the other day when the hon. Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Wells) made a speech on what has been done in connection with the implementation of the recommendations by the select committee on youth. I would like to read just a little bit about what was said at that time, found on page 4:

In addition, the government recognized that our services in regard to youth are so important that there would be an advantage in having a body that would meet at regular intervals to discuss youth matters specifically and co-ordinate the total approach of the government.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Apps: No, I am not. To continue:

Accordingly the Prime Minister has established an inter-departmental committee on youth, made up of representatives of a number of departments whose programmes directly affect the young people of this province. With the exception of myself, as chairman of the committee and a member of the Prime Minister's staff, who acts as secretary, all the members of the committee are drawn from the operating branches of the department. This means that the members have intimate knowledge of, and day-to-day experiences with, the programmes and with the problems of our young people. The advantage of this choice of membership had been readily apparent at our meetings.

The thought comes to me, and I may be a little bit irreverent in this, about who makes the final decisions as to the policies and principles that are going to be followed in connection with the young people? Are the department officials going to make them, or are the responsible Ministers going to make them?

As far as I am concerned, although this may be something which would prove very good, yet I feel that we are at too much the lower level. I feel that this committee should be made up of the Ministers involved who are in a position to press forward, making certain that the ideas that are formed in this committee are put into active legislation.

Second, on page 5 it was indicated that the formation of a youth and recreation branch would be implemented within The Department of Education. This is a step forward. I hope this is the beginning of, ultimately, a Department of Youth. I was encouraged, to some extent, by that, but my encouragement was somewhat dampened when I looked at the estimates for the year 1969-70 and saw how they compared with the estimates of the former years, to determine to what extent at least they were providing more to implement many of the recommendations that certainly would be forthcoming from the interdepartmental committee.

Although it is somewhat difficult to accumulate the estimates because they are in different areas, I find the following information: In 1968 and 1969 the total expenditure for the youth branch, Ontario fitness programme, community programme, leadership camps, programme of recreation and non-profit camps, was $2,756,000, and in 1969-70 the same amount of expenditure proposed is $2,707,000.

As I say, my encouragement was sort of dampened by the figures that were shown from the 1969-70 estimates. I think that this points out even more clearly that unless there is some responsible Cabinet Minister in a position to promote the programmes designed for the youth of this province, we are not going to get too far in many of those programmes, good as they may be.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Who would the hon. member nominate?

Mr. Apps: Well, I am glad the hon. member brought that up. I would like to dispel any thoughts on behalf of the Opposition over there that I am interested in being a Minister of youth in this Legislature because I am not. I will tell you why; I am too old and there are many young people on the government benches who would do a very capable job, if just given the opportunity.

An hon. member: Where?

Mr. Apps: So let us not hear any more about that.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): The hon. member has not got anybody on his party's benches.

Mr. Apps: Mr. Speaker, one of the things that concerns me a great deal is the physical fitness of the young people of this province. I would like to go back and quote again from page 23 referring to what the select committee said at that time:

The physical fitness of our youth requires energetic promotion and a planned policy that can be implemented throughout the province for school-age and after-school-age youth. This is not being done adequately by any one existing department of government. Sound physical education programmes in elementary and secondary schools are found in relatively few places in Ontario and most elementary schools lack gymnasiums and qualified health education teachers are in short supply.

Army statistics have revealed the extent of physical and mental disabilities among Canadian youths, and the Canadian public has been shocked to learn that nearly half the young men examined for induction into the army during the war 1939-45, had been found to be physically or mentally unfit. Another fact, not so well known but equally significant, is that at small cost and within a short time, close to 50 per cent of those rejected could be rendered capable of at least limited service. There is little evidence to indicate that the Canadian youth is in better physical condition today.

Mr. Speaker, we have several physical fitness programmes within the province of Ontario. We have the Duke of Edinburgh awards, we had the 5BX plan by the RCAF, we had the Centennial physical fitness plans and many other unco-ordinated plans. It would appear to me that the time has come when someone, somewhere, preferably a department of youth with its own Minister, would sit down and decide what we wanted and work out a co-ordinated programme to obtain the results that are desired. I think we need a better physical fitness programme throughout the province and I feel the department of youth would certainly go a long way to help design such a programme and carry it through.

In Australia, every Wednesday afternoon, I understand, is set aside for physical fitness activities where everybody in the schools goes out and participates in some form of sporting activity in a physical fitness programme. I think that the results they have shown in many of the international athletic competitions indicate that this is certainly a help to them in the field of recreation, which is becoming more and more important because we are advised there will be more time for recreation as the years go by—because a shorter working week, automation and so on will mean that there will be many more hours of recreation available for the people of this province. Again, may I quote just a short passage from the select committee on youth, found on page 96, which says:

What is recreation anyway? It has been defined as refreshing the body or mind, diversion, amusement, any pleasurable exercise or occupation. Recreation, then, is that part of our activity that is connected with free time, more commonly called leisure time. The eight-hour work day has particularly focused attention on recreation as a necessary part of daily life in a well-ordinated society.

Further on:

There are implications for youth here that as adults they will have more leisure time than any previous generation. This means it is more urgent than ever before the young people acquire, in their youth, skills of healthy recreation in order to be able to use their skills in a satisfying and effective manner during the balance of their lives.

I think The Department of Education is doing its best in this regard. Then I go again and look at the estimates for this year as compared with last year and under programmes of recreation in 1968-69, we find $1,290,000 which we are improving in 1969-70 to the extent of $30,000 for a total of $1,320,000. I do not think that is enough. The reason for it is that no one in government is really responsible for the recreational needs of our people. There are many departments in government that have something to do with it, but it is such a small part in the percentage of their main functions, that as a result these programmes, I feel, really get shuffled off to the side. Sure, you have so much money, go and spend it. But there is no one to my knowledge really who is actively trying to co-ordinate a form of recreation in the province.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Apps: Mr. Speaker, I do not mind interjections from the opposing parties here. I sat here very diligently over the last few weeks and I have listened as carefully as I could to many of their talks. I would appreciate it if they would listen to me, because I am thinking seriously. I am thinking seriously because I believed in this two years ago, I believe in it now, and if I have any criticism of the government, it is criticism in a constructive way. I am trying to point out to them and, for that matter, to the Opposition, that I feel that more should be done in these fields for the young people of this province.

Now, we ran across facilities. People need facilities, young people need facilities. In many cases we do not know the facilities we have, we do not know whether they are being used to the full extent. We do not know what we are aiming for, really.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! In order that the hon. member may complete his remarks in reasonable time, I would advise him there are two minutes left of the time allotted to him.

Mr. Apps: Mr. Speaker, I understood I had 20 minutes and the other speaker on our side—

Mr. Speaker: Your 20 minutes will be up in two minutes.

Mr. Apps: Mr. Speaker, I was just trying to point out to you that the Conservative Party had 30 minutes allocated in this debate and—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member had 20 minutes to speak in the introduction of this and then the other speakers have the floor.

Mr. Apps: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I shall try to go on as fast as I can.

I would like to say further on sports activities in the province of Ontario, that certain grants are being made and the athletic commissioner is doing a good job. I do think his activities should be expanded more than they are. But there is no way in which young people can really communicate directly with a responsible man unless it is the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts). I feel that a Minister would be of great help in this regard.

I would like to speak on other problems of youth—for instance, the drinking problem, and how easy it is to get. What we should do about it? What is the experience in other areas? Whether we should lower the drinking age to 18 or not. What research is being done on the effects of this in other areas.

I would like to speak about health, about the problem of smoking, and smoking in public schools. Everybody really knows now through the doctors this is harmful. Are we doing anything about it? Is there anyone here who keeps saying to himself: "This is one of my jobs, I have to do it"? I do not think so.

There is the problem of glue-sniffing. I have a letter here from a minister in Kingston who is very concerned with the results of glue-sniffing and other kinds of activity among the very young people in this province. He does not know where to go. Is there anyone he can go to about this? Is there anyone here who would do something about it?

Mr. E. A. Winkler (Grey South): "Dear Dr. Shulman".

Mr. Apps: Other speakers will talk about welfare and delinquency. Do the police have a youth training bureau for training police particularly to deal with the young people of our province? On the problem of employment, the Prime Minister has come up with a programme to try and help the employment of young people, of students. Would it not be better to say to a department of youth and the Minister, "This is your job. You work on this all this year. Co-ordinate the activities of the departments here, find out how many jobs are available, and continually go out to private industry and say to them, 'We need to have so many jobs for young people during the summer'." I think this is an important aspect that the Minister of youth could do.

Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I have no more time because I have a lot here that I would have liked to have said. However, I would like to conclude by saying—

Mr. Speaker: I would point out to the hon. member that the committee is sitting as a House, Mr. Speaker is in the chair, the hon. member is now over his time allotment. Will he please bring his remarks to a conclusion?

Mr. Apps: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I will.

I have tried to outline a few of the arguments; I have many others. I think a start has been made with the youth and recreation branch, and I commend the government for it. But I do not think this goes far enough; I think more work should be done and it should ultimately end up with a Department of Youth. There are pressing problems among the young people in our province. We need somebody they can go to who is responsible. Every young person is important. We need their youth, their enthusiasm, and most of all we need their best efforts.

I maintain a department of youth would make a great contribution to the youth of this province. It will indicate to the young people that we are prepared to designate a Minister of the Crown whose responsibility it will be to adequately promote the welfare of the young people of this province, to institute new programmes and provide active and vigorous leadership, and I think most important of all, we would be in a position to do something about it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Mr. Apps), has outlined for us three basic reasons why he feels that there should be a department of youth within the government. I hope in the course of my remarks to deal with these three reasons from the opposite point of view.

First of all, before I do, I want to say to the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands that I would feel much more comfortable with him as Minister of youth than some of his colleagues along the front row. I think—

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): And even the young ones in the second row, too.

Mr. Gaunt: Yes, even the young ones.

As a member of the youth committee, I was one of those people who signed the report in respect to the recommendation to establish a youth department and portfolio within the government. Indeed, the recommendation was signed by all of those members on the committee from all parties. However, perhaps at this point I could hang my hat on the rationale of my friend, the member for Lakeshore (Mr. Lawlor), when he said that perhaps it was in a moment of weakness, perhaps it has changed things in that we have now had time to reflect—

Mr. Lewis: Is the member repudiating his position?

Mr. Gaunt: And finally he said that essentially we play a different role in this House than we do on a select committee. However, Mr. Speaker, the main reason for changing my stand on this recommendation is that I have now had a chance, and my party has had a chance, to assess and view in retrospect the government's attitude towards this recommendation.

Mr. Lewis: The federal Liberals do not want it.

Mr. Gaunt: The government attitude and response to youth has become more apparent to me, Mr. Speaker. The government very quickly shuffled off this recommendation into the dark recesses of the Cabinet minds. It generated very little public discussion when the report was released, indeed it did not evoke a response from the Prime Minister, as I recall it, or any of the leading Cabinet Ministers on the front bench. So I take it that the role and the function of youth within society does not hold a very high priority with this government.

The government, as far as I am concerned, never intended the recommendation to become a reality and has not changed its mind. I think this is reinforced by the fact that the Minister without Portfolio from Scarborough North recently made a rather lengthy statement on what was being done in the youth branch within The Department of Education and he enunciated, in effect, the establishment, more or less, of youth councils within that particular branch. I think what he was trying to say to the youth committee and to the member for Kingston and the Islands was that this government does not believe we should have a youth department, a youth portfolio. The member for Kingston and the Islands used that in a different way. However, I am firmly persuaded, Mr. Speaker, that that was the thrust and the essence of what the hon. Minister without Portfolio had to say.

Mr. Speaker, the voting age in this province could have been reduced 25 years ago, had the government of that day, a Conservative government may I add, allowed a resolution to come to vote at that time. I suppose the import of it was very much similar to what the hon. member for Yorkview (Mr. Young) put forward in his bill on February 21. However, the government did not allow it to come to a vote and consequently nothing happened. It is against this background—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Same as Ottawa.

Mr. Gaunt: Well, I have some words to say about that, too, but at the moment I am dealing with this particular resolution and I am sitting in this particular forum, and so I am going to address myself to this province, Mr. Speaker. It is against this background that this resolution, in my opinion, becomes purely mechanical. It is very limited, and it is very restrictive in its approach. It is a form of tokenism; it is not even a gesture, Mr. Speaker, it is a jest.

Mr. Apps: The member does me an injustice by speaking like that.

Mr. Gaunt: Mr. Speaker, if I may respond to that, I do not mean to say that in any personal way. I am addressing myself to the government. I know full well that the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands is very sincere in proposing this resolution. I do not take that away from him and I would not impugn his motives for a moment. I am addressing myself to the government and to the government policy.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We can feel the lash already.

Mr. Gaunt: I want to suggest that a department of youth perhaps would not be the best move, for three reasons, and if I may, Mr. Speaker, I would like to enunciate them for you at this time.

The resolution, in my opinion, reflects an adult consensus that something should be done about youth. Consequently, part of the problem seems to be in applying an adult analysis to a youth culture. That is the first point.

The second point: The resolution implies a patronizing and paternalistic approach which is bound to evoke a response of frustration and even disdain from young people. One of the failures of the youth committee, in my opinion, was the fact that it failed to establish a dialogue with young people. It failed to establish a communication with young people, and essentially the report consisted of adults talking to youth.

Surely the adult role is to provide support and not domination. Young people have shown that they have high ideals and worthwhile aspirations. The gut issue, Mr. Speaker, is, that either we give young people a creative role in society or we do not. We expect a great deal from our young people, but I have always maintained that the major stress among young people stems from lack of place or role in society.

The third point I want to come to, Mr. Speaker, is that all the government departments are set up on the basis of function, not age. The hon. member for Kingston and the Islands dealt with this. As far as I am concerned I think there is some validity in saying that if one sets up a department of youth then, similarly, departments of middle age, and old age and even infancy have some validity. The point is that all of the present government departments are now constituted on the basis of function.

Frankly, I would shudder to think of some of the Ministers in the front row becoming the Minister of youth, for instance. The thought of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management (Mr. Simonett), or even my friend, the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs (Mr. Rowntree), becoming the Minister of youth would drive shivers up my spine. With respect, gentlemen, you just do not project the image.

What the government needs to do is tear down the walls that have shut young people out. If all the departments concerned with youth—and there are a number of them in the government with certain functions in respect to young people—would try to establish more meaningful support insofar as young people are concerned, I think a great deal could be accomplished.

And then I come to the gist of my remarks, Mr. Speaker, when I say that this government should lower the voting age to 18 forthwith—at this session, if it is serious about sucking young people into the mainstream of society where they can become full participants. The most powerful message that this government could address to young people in this day and age is to say, "We want you to vote at 18," but I suggest that they are not going to do this. There has been very little response.

I was interested to note just a few weeks ago that the Prime Minister made a statement to the effect that the government was considering lowering the voting age. I think on one other occasion he also made some type of statement suggesting that they were going to wait for the select committee on election law before they did anything about this particular matter, or considered it in a very serious way. And so, I suggest to you that now is the time. We could do it in this session, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, the government's attitude can be summed up very briefly, and it has not changed in the last 25 years.

Mr. Speaker: I would direct the hon. member's attention to the clock. His time is up. Would he please draw his remarks to a conclusion.

Mr. Gaunt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I will draw my remarks to a close very quickly. Mr. Speaker, I think the reasons are compelling. I think that young people should have a place, a role in our society. We have many pressing problems. We were directed, more or less compelled, into the position of recommending a department of youth because of the sins of omission and commission of this government in respect to directional services, correctional services, education, driver education and so on. The real solution lies in giving young people a vote at 18, and I suggest that this government do it immediately. It would be a big step in achieving, Mr. Speaker, Canada's second century unlimited.

Mr. J. L. Brown (Beaches-Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to congratulate the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands on presenting this resolution and acknowledge the kind of deep disappointment and despair that lies behind the necessity, some three years after the commission on youth for it to have to come as a private member's motion.

Without doubt, this particular member has worked very hard, very long and very constructively on behalf of youth. He did it under the assignment of his government, as a function for his particular party. He did it well. I can remember being before that commission myself and the respect and attention which we received as well as the sincerity with which he was undertaking his work. I can feel with him the kind of despair that leads him, three years later, to acknowledge that it is not going to happen. It was never intended to happen, it is not going to happen in the future.

At the same time, I cannot support the resolution. In saying that, and after a great deal of searching to see whether or not there was some way to support the resolution, I come to the conclusion that I cannot as much as I am in sympathy with the work and the intent behind it. I think we first have to look at the dreadful situation that is presently the case as far as youth is concerned in the government of Ontario.

One of the great problems, of course, is that the service to youth is a fragmented service, divided between a great many departments, and there are reasons—and I will just very hastily outline them—why this is particularly unfortunate. The fragmentations have the result of fragmenting the child himself, because many of the children who have their special needs brought before community services have more than one need. There are many children with multiple needs, and these multiple needs fall into various jurisdictions of government, and the child, by the fact of his need, becomes fragmented.

Secondly, this fragmentation carries down into the services that are a reflection of the legislation that is set up within the various departments, so that we have services fragmented as well; and we add to the fragmentation of the individual, the fragmentation in the services of the professional groups.

Getting away from the human element and the waste of the limited resources that we have to meet these problems, we find that the duplication that results through the various departments dealing separately with aspects of children's problems, produces a high administrative cost. There is a great deal of duplication in the administration of services to children.

There is no reason why the five administrative structures that we now have could not be one administrative structure. In fact, it would be a great deal more economical, efficient and effective if that were true. There is a great duplication in the use of professional and consultative services and the costs reflect this duplication. There could be not only saving in the costs reflected in the use of professional and consultative services, but there would certainly be a more efficient use of these services which are in short supply at the present time.

Let us take for a moment the departments that are now dealing with youth directly—I was rather chagrined to hear that The Department of Agriculture and Food also has its hand in there. I am going to talk about the main departments that deal with youth, and to look at the inappropriateness of the departments in carrying out these functions.

The Department of Social and Family Services obviously should not be dealing with youth. It has failed over the many years of its operation, even with the changing of its name, the changing of Ministers and the changing of the staff within the organization. It has failed, first of all, to grasp the real problem in that particular area. The social problems, the neglect, the nature of the modern problems of youth have been missed by this department. There is no indication, either, in what the department is doing today or what it is proposing for tomorrow, that it somehow is going to catch up. Youth is not being well served in The Department of Social and Family Services and it would be well to see that the services this department offers were administered by some other department.

We all know how inappropriate The Department of Correctional Services is in terms of serving the modern needs of youth. I would say, without doubt, that there should be no child under 16 within this particular department's jurisdiction, and that we should immediately see that all children under the age of 16 be served by some department other than this one.

The Attorney General's Department is not providing even basic minimally adequate service to children. The juvenile courts are archaic. We should do away with juvenile courts. We have no need for them. They have lost their function, and are no longer relevant. This is not the way to deal with the inability of a child to adjust or with the deviant behaviour of our children. This department would well do away with its services to youth.

And when I say that they can well give up their services to youth, it is because they are functioning inadequately. It would not only be good for the youths themselves, it would be good for these particular departments, and it would be good for the government.

The Department of Health should give up its services to all those children who do not have an organic or a medical problem. It is inappropriate that The Department of Health, under a medical model, attempt to solve the problems of youth which are related to problems of learning, problems of communication, problems of adjustment. This is not the proper department to do that.

So we say, looking at these four major departments that deal with youth, that we are left with only one other department. Here, I would suggest, is where the services for youth should be focused and organized, and that is The Department of Education. When I say that, I am quite aware that the Minister of Education (Mr. Davis) has a great deal on his hands. He has a very large department. He is well extended over a broad field. But let us face the fact that he has the only department that has established, within it, contact with children at an early age throughout the entire province. He has the only social structure that can reach out and touch every family and every child in the province at an early age, and whether we like it or not, or whether it is too big or not, we must face the fact that this is one department that could gather to it all these services that the other departments I have talked about are failing to do.

So I would suggest that The Department of Education assume the responsibility for youth, primarily because it has the responsibility traditionally, to provide for the children of the community, for educational training in terms of content, of specific knowledge, social adjustment, human adjustment, how to work with people, and how to work with one another. This is the charge the department has from the community, and because of this it could very well take on functions that are now inadequately carried out by these other departments.

It would require a certain amount of reorganization within The Department of Education, and I think a certain amount of reorganization within that department is long overdue. There is no doubt that it has a very fine record, and I do not criticize that record. At the same time, a very casual glance at how the services in that department are organized indicates, very easily, that there needs to be a reorganization.

The reorganization, of course, must start at the fundamental level of its responsibility, and that is the level of teacher training. It is a crime that the amount of money we are spending in the province of Ontario today on behalf of education should produce, as a consequence, the level of teaching staff that we have. It is incredible, it is a crime, it is a shame. It should not be allowed. Besides, it is a waste of good money. The quality of what happens within our educational institutions depends on the quality of the training our teachers get, and there needs to be an immediate revamping of that training.

I think one important function of this department is the training of teachers, and they should see to it as quickly as possible. Another important function—I am now talking about how this department could be subdivided—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is now talking in the time allotted to the last speaker. If the last speaker, the member for Scarborough West, is agreeable, the hon. member may continue.

Mr. Lewis: I would be more than agreeable.

Mr. Brown: I will draw my remarks to a close, thank you. I was simply going to suggest that there are a number of functional divisions within The Department of Education that could be made and that would make it possible to bring children under a certain age under the jurisdiction of The Department of Education, rather than having the services fragmented in The Department of Social and Family Services, The Department of Health, The Attorney General's Department, and Correctional Services.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, the report of the select committee on youth was submitted, I guess, some three years ago. It has already been discarded by the government. One might call it, I suppose, death at an early age.

The member for Kingston and the Islands will be waiting breathlessly to see how another colleague on his committee reacted over the interim. My feelings parallel, perhaps even more vigorously, those of the member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Gaunt). I am pleased to stand and say in retrospect that I indicated a year ago, Mr. Speaker, that this report's special recommendations should be virtually repudiated in their entirety; that the report of the select committee was never designed to do other than obscure the requirements of youth in this province.

Those of us who were initiated in those early years were drawn in by this devious plot very well executed by the first Minister and his colleagues. And the results of that report reflect the inappropriateness of the committee ever having been established. I have always felt some considerable embarrassment in having been associated with some of its recommendations. Indeed, sir, it is the greatest put-on, I suppose, since the leader of the Opposition contrived to pull Judy LaMarsh into the leadership race.

I must say also, Mr. Speaker, that like lambs led to the Cabinet dining table, the committee then took a number of members of the Cabinet with them and a number of members of the House as well, and the result in the interim, sadly, has been that very little has taken place in the area of services to youth. And in all those obvious compartments where something might have been effected, there has been continuing obstinacy, continuing refusal on the part of the government to indulge in action. Not that they could not have done so. There were some pretty eminent members of the Cabinet who might have been involved.

The other night the Provincial Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton) revealed to us that there is a Cabinet committee on policy, and on that committee, incredible though it may seem, sits the Minister without Portfolio, one of the eminence gris of the youth report. Indeed, the Minister of Correctional Services sits on that committee, surrealistic though that may appear, Mr. Speaker, and one would assume that given the vested interest of the Minister without Portfolio in the select committee on youth and the obvious support from his other younger, more agile, more enthusiastic colleagues, that something would have come of its recommendations.

The reality, of course, is that regardless of all the efforts put in by the member for Kingston and the Islands, it never was, and it never will be the intention of government to take those recommendations seriously—certainly not the principal recommendations. That is why they are now sufficiently irrelevant to be repudiated. Indeed, if one goes through the summary of recommendations in the select committee on youth, department by department, one finds, as I am sure with some abject humiliation the member for Kingston and the Islands has noted, that every single serious recommendation put forth by the select committee has been rejected, or abandoned, or treated indifferently by the government. Every single recommendation.

Hon. T. L. Wells (Minister without Portfolio): That is not true.

Mr. Lewis: The Minister without Portfolio, dignifying the "without portfolio" portion of his portfolio, made a speech in which there was an announcement of some committees around the province to conduct a sort of liaison with youth and with the Legislature—a friendly exercise in colonial condescension towards youth, but not very productive in terms of specific legislation in the various government departments.

Hon. Mr. Wells: More productive than any NDP programme.

Mr. Lewis: Not at all productive in those terms.

There were points made, Mr. Speaker. They asked for documentation. In the lavish time remaining I will give that documentation. The report made certain recommendations in the area of guidance and counselling. They have been totally discarded. It made recommendations in the area of universities granting certain undergraduate facilities leading to a degree in education; totally discarded. The community use of school facilities throughout the province has never been pursued. Auxiliary education services—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: The members reveal their views by their interventions.

The auxiliary education services which were to encompass children with various problems were completely discarded. All immigrant education was to be placed under The Department of Education and was ignored by the government. All the recommendations regarding Indian education were ignored by the government. All the recommendations relating to mental health care, and the juvenile defender, and moving this preposterous anachronism called Correctional Services into another department were ignored by the government. Mr. Speaker, there is not a thing of qualitative content in this report—and certainly The Department of Youth was not a qualitative recommendation, but the others were. There is not a single thing that one can look to that was, in any sense, accomplished over the last three years.

Therefore, what the resolution of the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands means, is a blanket indictment from him, as a member of the government, of the activities of all the Cabinet Ministers in the interim. That is really what it means. I suppose that is unfortunate, and I would recommend to the Prime Minister, who is in a sufficiently congenial mood to accept the recommendation almost without examination, that he accept the restructuring proposed by my colleague from Beaches-Woodbine (Mr. Brown) and reorganize his Cabinet accordingly. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The private member's hour has now expired.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on Monday we will go back to the order paper. There are some second readings I would like to call; plus bills in committee which will include the private bills; then, of course, the private members' hour, and no night session.

An hon. member: No estimates?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I do not think we will have time to reach them.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 1.00 o'clock, p.m.

Securities Act, bill to amend, Mr. Shulman, on second reading	2337
Motion to adjourn, Mr. Welch, agreed to	2347

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, MARCH 17, 1969

The House met today at 2.30 p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: In the east gallery today we have the 5th Trafalgar Scout group from Oakville; the 1st Sandown Land Rangers from Scarborough; and members of the 1st North Pelham Scouts from Ridgeville.

Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Motions.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister), seconded by hon. Mr. Wishart, moves that the provincial auditor be authorized to pay the salaries of the civil service and other necessary payments pending the voting of supply for the fiscal year commencing April 1, 1969, such payments to be charged to the proper appropriations following the voting of supply.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we have no particular objection to the motion, other than to point out that it is normally brought to the House a bit closer to the point when the government is going to need the money. What are they afraid will happen between now and the end of the fiscal year?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, it was at the request of the provincial auditor. For his own mechanical reasons he asked that this vote come a little early in order that they may set up their accounting procedures.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

The hon. member for Eglinton?

Mr. L. M. Reilly (Eglinton): Before the orders of the day, Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw to the attention of the members this colour combination which is on their desks—it is a candy combination. You will notice that the green candy is emblematic of Ireland and its people.

Perhaps the licorice requires a little explanation. Some members may think in terms of this representing a snake; really, it is not. What is represented here today is a whip. I understand that licorice has often been used from the standpoint of medicine. It was my wife's idea that the combination would be symbolic of friendly Irish criticism.

I do not know the purpose of the leprechaun on the desk here, Mr. Speaker, unless this is a subtle reminder from my wife that my hair should be restyled.

And in my desk today I found this—I suppose it is meant to be a blackthorn stick. I am not sure, Mr. Speaker, of the origin, and my associates in the caucus office apparently were sworn to secrecy. However, if you would be good enough to use it for the remainder of this day I would be glad to present it to you now through the pageboy.

Mr. Speaker, may I take this opportunity to pay respect to all the people of Ireland and Irish people wherever they may be, and particularly to my own Irish parents, for what they have done for me.

I have cards here from various parts of the province but I have two that I would like to bring to the attention of the members. One is signed, "Love, Lynné"—that is my daughter Lynne.

For you on St. Patrick's Day
A very special little gem
Imported from Killarney
For you alone, that precious stone
Pure, imported blarney.

The second one is from my wife, who is sitting up in Mr. Speaker's gallery right now, Mr. Speaker. It is entitled "An Irishman's Prayer":

May you be blessed with faith
May you be blessed with friends
May you be blessed with love
May you be blessed with peace.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to send these blessings to all members of the Legislature.

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I would say, in rising to wish the people of Ireland and of Irish descent congratulations on one of the best days of the year, that the hon. member for Eglinton, I think, has kissed the original blarney stone and does not need any substitutes.

My mother was a Harrington. Her parents came directly from the Emerald Isle; and for what they gave to her, and what they gave to me, I would like to thank her and all the Irish people. It is truly a day, Mr. Speaker, when there are only two kinds of people in the world, those who are Irish and those who wish they were Irish.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I too would like to join in this great debate. I noticed, looking through the text of the Dail Eireann the other day, that the quality of debate in the Irish Legislature was very low.

They were passing a bill on one occasion, making an imposition upon the future, and one of the more rhetorical Irish members got up and said he was against it. He went on at great length; and somebody said it was for the purposes of posterity that this was being done, and he said, "What on earth has posterity ever done for us?". The other members figured it out, and when some began to laugh at him he went into a lengthy explanation right in the text of their Hansard, in which he said he did not mean "our ancestors", he meant those "who came immediately after us".

I suppose a few words of verse might be in order today, and I can think of some lines from Chesterton that may have some appositeness in more senses than one. They run somewhat like this:

The folk that live in Liverpool
 Their hearts are in their boots
 And they go to hell like the lambs they do
 Because the hooter hoots.
 Where men may not be dancing
 But wheels may dance all day
 Where men may not be smoking
 But only chimneys may.
 But I come from Castlepatrick
 And my heart is on my sleeve
 But a lady stole it from me
 On St. Gallowglass's eve.
 The folk that come from black Belfast
 Their hearts are in their mouths,
 And they see us making murders
 In the meadows of the south.
 They think a plough's a rack, they do
 And cattle calls are creeds,
 And they think we are burning witches
 When we are only burning weeds.
 But I come from Castlepatrick
 And my heart is on my sleeve,
 But a lady stole it from me
 On St. Barnabas' eve.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. leader of the Opposition—

Mr. J. Root (Wellington-Dufferin): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I would think that it might be well to confine it to one from each party, as is normal. However, with a tie such as that I am sure no one could resist.

Mr. Root: Well, Mr. Speaker, on this St. Patrick's day I could not let the opportunity pass without bringing greetings from two municipalities which carry the name of Erin. This morning I was talking to the editor of the Erin Advocate. Incidentally, he is the third generation of the Hull family that has published that fine paper. He said: "With that tie on, you had better bring greetings from Erin."

Now Erin is one of the beauty spots in the province of Ontario, up in the headwaters of the Grand and the Credit Rivers where the air is fresh, the water is pure, the grass is green, the ladies are most beautiful and I bring you greetings from Erin township and Erin village.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I hate to refer to business this afternoon, but I do have a question for the Attorney General.

Is the Attorney General aware that Waterloo Crown attorney William Morrison has refused to prosecute 13 property tax rebate cases in the Galt area saying that: "The court should not be used as a collection agency"? What action does the Minister intend to take in this matter?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wentworth has a similar question which he might place at this time.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Yes, Mr. Speaker, to the Attorney General.

Is any action contemplated against Crown attorney William Morrison of Galt for his actions in refusing to prosecute 13 persons charged under the Residential Property Tax Reduction Act?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Attorney General would give the member for Eglinton a chance to raise a point of order that I think he was rising on?

Mr. Reilly: I am sorry to have to revert back, Mr. Speaker, but I just wanted to say one thing before we went into the orders of the day.

Mr. Speaker: We do not go into orders of the day until after the questions.

Mr. Reilly: There was just one thing further about Irishmen's day, and I thought I should bring it to your attention. It was generally restricted to the members who are Irish, but now I find that our own Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) is invading our field—he had some green trilliums presented to him today and I thought I should bring it to your attention.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): It is the only thing over there that grows.

Mr. E. A. Winkler (Grey South): One more thing than over there.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, in replying to both the questions, I sought to get in touch with the Crown attorney and I was not able to reach him. Since the questions were received a very short time ago I will take them as notice and answer tomorrow.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, a question to the hon. Minister of Health. Can the Minister inform the House if John Walker, director of forestry for the Ontario Paper Company of Thorold, is involved in the research, writing or preparation in any way of the Royal commission's report on pollution in Haldimand county; and if so, to what extent?

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I cannot answer this question because this report has already been submitted and I have no idea who was involved in the preparation or the research other than the members of the commission. The commission did not give me that information and I know of no commission which has had to give such information in the past. I therefore regret I cannot answer the question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister, which has been redirected from the Minister of Education (Mr. Davis), in view of his enforced absence this week with the OEA convention.

Further to the Minister of Education's reply last Tuesday regarding the firing of Mrs. Fiona Nelson by the Toronto Board of Education, have the "uncertainties of the facts of the situation" been cleared up? And can the Prime Minister advise the House whether a board of reference will be granted?

Mr. Nixon: I would say, before the Prime Minister replies, Mr. Speaker, that I had a similar question that was not referred to the Prime Minister but I want to associate myself with this question. I had asked the Minister if, in fact, he was prepared to give a decision on the granting of a board of reference.

Mr. Speaker: I would point out that the redirection was by the member for York South, not by Mr. Speaker or his staff.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I do not find it necessary to speak for my Ministers, but in view of the fact that the Minister of Education is otherwise engaged this week, I obtained some information from him. He tells me that, as he indicated to the House, he had received a letter from Mrs. Nelson. He subsequently wrote to her and also wrote to the Toronto Board of Education. He has not yet received a reply to those communications. As soon as he has done so, he will inform the House as to what course of action he plans to take. But at the moment it is in a state of exchange of information.

Mr. MacDonald: I have a second question, Mr. Speaker, in two parts, for the Minister of Health.

First, who are the members of the Ontario government's pesticide advisory committee?

Second, will the Minister comment on the reports carried in the March 11 issue of Farm and Country that the board has never been asked for advice or suggestions on really important questions, and that members have either resigned or threatened to resign because the board has been denied any meaningful role?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, since I have not yet read this report I have sent for the newspaper. I will therefore take this question as notice and will answer it tomorrow for the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Parkdale has a question for the Prime Minister.

Mr. Trotter: Yes, Mr. Speaker, the question is as follows:

Can the Premier indicate how many meetings have been held between the government and the Metro executive committee this year to discuss fringe municipalities around Metro, in the application of regional government principles to them? Has the Premier attended any of them and will such future meetings be open to the public?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, there has only been one meeting so far as the government is concerned. There have been other meetings but the government has not been involved.

The Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. McKeough) attended one meeting at the invitation of those who arranged the meeting. There are no further meetings planned. I have not attended any meetings.

I noticed that report in the paper this morning. I have not been at any meetings, and we do not have conduct of the meetings. Inasmuch as there are no meetings planned, the final question has no significance, really.

Mr. Trotter: A supplementary question, if I may, Mr. Speaker. If such meetings are being held, would the Premier encourage that they be held in public? It is obvious that this concerns the area and these deals seem to be made before the public knows about it.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make it completely and absolutely clear that this government is not indulging in any deals of any kind. So let us not leave the imputation that there are any deals being made behind closed doors, or behind anyone's back. There are meetings being arranged by various groups, and the government really has no part in these meetings. As I say, the Minister of Municipal Affairs was invited to attend one such meeting.

I do not know what power we have to tell these people how they will meet or when they will meet or the circumstances under which they will meet. I can only assure the members of this House that this government is not making any deals. We have made it very clear in our submissions to this House in dealing with the matter of regional government, that complete discussion and knowledge, particularly knowledge by the people involved of what is going on is, in our opinion, an essential ingredient of the whole process. On anything that we have anything to do with, we will keep that objective in mind.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside was on his feet a moment ago.

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside): A question for the Minister of Health, Mr. Speaker: Is the Minister aware of a recent report to the Royal Canadian College of Physicians and Surgeons advising that the use of fluoridated water in dialysis baths of artificial kidneys is dangerous?

If so, has the Minister drawn the attention of hospitals in Ontario to that report?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I believe I answered a similar question put by the hon. leader of the Opposition, I think on March 6.

In answer to the second part of the question: I have not drawn this to the attention of the hospitals because this grew out of a paper delivered by a member of a hospital staff and scientific papers are usually available to hospitals as readily as they are to The Department of Health. Indeed, we get our information of this kind from the scientists who are out in the field, and therefore the hospitals have access to the same information.

Mr. Burr: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister a supplementary question?

Is the Minister aware of the fact that this warning was made in February, 1965, in the archives of internal medicine, in a study by University of Rochester scientists under a grant from the United States Public Health Service?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wentworth.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Labour.

Have representations been made by the Hamilton and area milk distributors to be excluded from the overtime section of the new Employment Standards Act? If so, with what results?

Hon. D. A. Bales (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question, I am not aware of any representation made by the Hamilton and area milk distributors, but there were meetings between my officials and representatives of the Ontario Milk Distributors Association. At those meetings, the Ontario association asked that their wholesale and retail drivers be excluded from the overtime pay provisions of The Employment Standards Act.

A review is being carried out as to the hours of work in the various centres across the province, and when that is complete, then a decision will be made.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, would the Minister accept a supplementary question?

Has his department contacted the various unions involved and asked for submissions from them as to their opposition or compliance with the request?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Speaker, it is not a question of contacting people, but to make a survey as to what is going on in this particular area throughout various centres in the province, and it is on that information that we will reach a decision.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park has a question from the other day of the Minister of Lands and Forests.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): Yes, Mr. Speaker, in three parts.

Has The Department of Lands and Forests investigated complaints about entry regulations at the Pinery Provincial Park, which were forwarded to the Minister by the hon. member for London South (Mr. White) on February 19, 1969, in the form of a letter from one of the hon. member's constituents, Mr. T. K. McNamee?

When will the Minister inform the hon. member for London South of the results of the investigation?

What action is being taken to solve these problems?

Hon. R. Brunelle (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member for High Park, the answer to the first question is yes; to the second part, a letter was sent to the hon. member for London South on March 11; to question number three, additional fees are levied to cover the cost of supplying winter facilities, and the winter fee structure will be reviewed prior to next winter season. I hope to have a better arrangement than the one we presently have.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has a question of the Minister of Transport also.

Mr. Shulman: Yes. In view of the statement in the March, 1969, news bulletin of the Civil Service Association of Ontario denying the statement in Department of Transport circular number 69-7 that the new policy, which might involve dismissal if an employee loses his licence to drive, had been discussed with the CSAO and had their acceptance, will the Minister withdraw that circular?

Will the Minister change this policy?

Hon. I. Haskett (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, CSAO's March bulletin appears to deny that the department had discussed the content of its circular No. 69-7 with the association prior to releasing the same.

The bulletin quoted from Mr. MacNee's letter of Feb. 17 to Mr. Bowen, but deliberately omitted this portion of that letter—and I read,

In the first place, this notice was discussed with the CSAO through the normal procedures. The director of personnel, Mr. J. Arber, contacted Mr. Keating, who is the CSAO official who handles The Department of Transport matters. He explained what was intended by the notice, and pointed out to him that they were reluctant to proceed without the CSAO being fully aware of the intent. Mr. Keating assured Mr. Arber that it would be entirely in order to proceed. Since I would not presume to interfere with the internal operations of the CSAO, I did not see fit to question the authority of Mr. Keating to give us such an undertaking.

Since writing this letter to Mr. Bowen, the general manager of the association, our Deputy Minister has had no reply.

Accordingly, my statement given to the House a month ago, when the member for High Park first raised this question, still stands.

Mr. Shulman: Does the Minister intend to answer my second question?

Hon. Mr. Haskett: In view of my reply to the first portion, Mr. Speaker, it does not apply.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question then?

Will the Minister change the original policy, since it has caused so much dismay among the CSAO and the general public?

Hon. Mr. Haskett: Mr. Speaker, I think that was inherent in my first reply too.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Transport.

Will the Minister order an immediate investigation into the ferry service between Howe Island and St. Lawrence Park Beach, east of Kingston, to determine the adequacy of the safety features of this service in view of the catastrophe that occurred on the ferry at 9 o'clock last evening?

Hon. Mr. Haskett: Mr. Speaker, this unfortunate accident on the ferry running between St. Lawrence Park Beach and Howe Island is presently being investigated by the Ontario Provincial Police. However, this privately operated ferry service is under the authority of the federal Department of Transport, which is responsible for the safety regulations, and inspectors of the federal DOT are now making an investigation.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Thunder Bay.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Lands and Forests.

Has the department made an inventory of the allowable cut in Algonquin Park?

Will the allowable cut by present operators ensure a continuous operation?

Is it the government's intention to terminate the timber licenses on March 1, 1979, in multiple use zone six, comprising 1,175,000 acres; as well as multiple use zones one to five, comprising 448,000 acres as stated in the provisional master plan for Algonquin Park? If not, why not?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member for Thunder Bay:

1. Allowable cuts have been calculated for all areas within Algonquin Park.

2. The purpose of allowable cuts is to ensure continuous production, although the level of production from a particular area may fluctuate from time to time.

3. The provisional master plan is presently under very active review and until this is completed, the replacement of timber licenses by volume agreements prior to March 1, 1979, is definitely not settled.

4. If they are not terminated and replaced the volume agreement by March 1, 1979, it will be because the thorough review of the provisional master plan has indicated that this is not the best solution to this matter.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South might perhaps wish to ask his question of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management from the other day, and there is a similar question I believe from the member for Wentworth.

Mr. MacDonald: My question from Friday, Mr. Speaker, was with regard to the OWRC's report on Stelco's alleged dumping of 150,000 gallons of hydrochloric acid waste into Hamilton Bay,

1. Did the report confirm that in fact, this did happen?

2. If so, what conceivable explanation was there for such an anti-social act at this stage in the public's fight against pollution?

3. If so, what punitive or corrective action does the government intend to take?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member for Wentworth would please place his question now too?

Mr. Deans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also have a question in the same area. Is any legal action contemplated as a result of the investigation into the dumping of acid by Stelco in Hamilton Bay?

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the first part of the question: Stelco's report to OWRC stated that the spent pickle acid was discharged to a holding lagoon over a period of three days where the wastes were diluted by a factor of at least 2,000 to 1 before entering Hamilton Bay.

The second part of the question: The acid had to be disposed of and the only practical way to do this was to first dilute the acid and subsequently dispose of it in a large body of water so that eventual dilution would be safe.

We might say that the waters in the Hamilton Bay were tested by the staff of OWRC and no trace of the acid was detectable. Stelco has been advised that in future the circumstances surrounding such decisions should be first discussed with the commission's staff prior to taking any action in order that we can be sure that all reasonable alternatives for disposal were considered.

In answer to the third part and to the member for Wentworth, this matter is being reviewed and if sufficient evidence is available, charges will be laid.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Cochrane South.

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management.

Will Ontario Hydro take steps to install a sluice gate on the Sandy Falls dam on the Mattagami River in order to better control the water level during the spring run off?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, Ontario Hydro has no plans at present for installing a sluice gate at the Sandy Falls dam on the Mattagami River. During large floods there would be no substantial benefit in reduced levels at Timmins through the installation of sluice gates at Sandy Falls, as it is, the eight and a half mile river reach between Sandy Falls and Timmins, which is the bottleneck in passing large floods rather than the dam itself.

Sandy Falls dam was constructed in 1911. In addition to the power house, the discharge facilities consist of an overflow spillway some 700 feet long. After the large flood in 1947, and particularly after the largest flood on record in 1960, Ontario Hydro made intensive studies of any measures that might be taken to reduce flood stages.

It was found that it was the river itself, rather than the dam, that determined the levels at Timmins during large floods, and that only insignificant improvement would result if sluiceways were added to the dam. Of more benefit were five main storage reservoirs upstream from Timmins, four of which are maintained and operated by Ontario Hydro, which can be operated to impound the peak of the flood. It was computed that this storage reduced the flood level at Timmins by over four feet during the 1960 flood.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Timiskaming.

Mr. D. Jackson (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy and Resources Management.

In view of the high unemployment rate in northeastern Ontario, and in view of the Prime Minister's statement that only a nucleus of key men would be hired from outside the area:

(a) will the Minister move immediately to prevent the importation of 23 workers from Mont Joli, Quebec, by the sub contractors Messrs. Bijou and Rice to work on the Ontario Hydro Lower Notch project at Cobalt?

(b) will the Minister further instruct both prime and sub-contractors to hire all workers, other than key workers, through the local Canada Manpower office as long as workers are available from that source?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, as this question had to do with labour I transferred it to the Minister of Labour on Friday last. Perhaps he has the answer. I am not sure.

Mr. Jackson: Well, Mr. Speaker, on that point I must disagree with the Minister. It is not involved with labour. It is directly involved with the letting of contracts to these persons.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member may disagree with the Minister if he wishes, but the Minister has taken that action and he is entitled to do so. Was the hon. Minister of Labour listening to that particular exchange?

Order please!

Was the hon. Minister of Labour listening to the reply by the Minister of Energy and Resources Management?

Hon. Mr. Bales: I heard it generally but—

Mr. Speaker: Has the question been transferred to your office?

Hon. Mr. Bales: The hon. Minister gave me a copy of it on Friday and I was looking into it, but I have not got any further information on it yet.

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. Minister take it as notice then today?

Mr. Jackson: Mr. Speaker, does the Minister accept it as part of his department?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Speaker, it is a question—as to whether it really comes within our department or not.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Timiskaming will probably be able to get to the bottom of it when a Minister does bring in an answer.

Orders of the day.

THE APPRENTICESHIP AND TRADESMEN'S QUALIFICATIONS ACT, 1964

Hon. D. A. Bales (Minister of Labour) moves second reading of Bill 56, An Act to amend The Apprenticeship and Tradesmen's Qualifications Act, 1964.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, to speak on the principle of this amendment is going to be a little hard because the principle of The Apprenticeship and Tradesmen's Qualifications Act has been dealt with at some length and we have to now deal with just a minor change.

I have read the changes in the amendments and it is pretty hard to determine just exactly what the Minister is trying to do. I might give my impression and if it is incorrect the Minister, of course, will say so.

I take it that the changes in the wording in section 2 itself—that is section 2 of section 10—are just to clarify or change the intent. Now we know under the old Act that section 3 has a specific intent, inasmuch as it gives some protection to those who were working at the trade before certification was brought in.

Now what I am concerned with in this section is the term "that no person other than an apprentice or person that has a class that is exempt from this section, or a person referred to in subsection 3". Now we know exactly what that means, but nowhere in the Act, or nowhere in the regulations can I find others exempt.

I have looked at all of the regulations covering the various trades and also the general regulation, and it does not spell out what it means by "others who are exempt". Now I might take it to mean that if someone who is working in an industry, in an industrial plant, that is fabricating some materials that are then shipped out and handled and erected by the tradesmen—let us say the sheet metal trades, who are under the certification—then they would be certified.

But those handling it in the industrial plants under the same firm would be exempt. I would take it that is one exemption.

Now I wish the Minister would explain exactly what he means, because I cannot make very much sense out of the changes. The explanatory note tells us that these provisions are designed to clarify the intent of the Act as to the persons who may work in, or be employed in, a certified trade. The one specific change I notice in the addition of 2(a) is that the same onus is placed upon the employer or any person with the intent of employing a person in a certified trade as subsection 2 places upon a person seeking employment in that particular trade. My question to the Minister in regard to this amendment is: Is that the real intent of this change?

Mr. Speaker: Is there any other member who wishes to speak? The hon. member for Timiskaming.

Mr. D. Jackson (Timiskaming): Yes, Mr. Speaker. My opinion of this whole Act was first of all that it was to protect the public; and secondly to protect the tradesmen who work in the trade. I am bothered by the thought that, although he is tightening up the Act to bring everyone under the control of it, he is forgetting that we must have adequate inspection in order to fulfill the requirements of the bill or the object of the bill.

And one of the things that is sadly lacking in most industry today is adequate inspection, especially by government inspectors. No matter how much this bill is tightened up, unless we provide adequate inspection it will not serve any useful purpose. I would like the comments of the Minister on that.

Mr. Speaker: Any other member who wishes to speak before the hon. Minister of Labour?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Speaker, in reference to the matters that have been raised, this bill is meant to clarify the original bill as it is presently in force. Under this, we are placing additional onus on the employer to insure that all persons working in certified trades possess the required qualifications.

At the present time, the onus is on the employee and we are laying greater stress on the employer. There have been cases involving The Apprenticeship Act where the onus was not on the employer and for that reason matters were thrown out. It is simply a strengthening of the existing legislation and it is not dealing with the other matters that were raised by the hon. member for Brantford.

But under this bill the employer will be subject to additional requirements as provided in section 2(a) of the amendment. For that reason we want to bring it in to strengthen the whole arrangement.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Clerk of the House: The 11th order, committee of the whole House; Mr. A. Carruthers in the chair.

CONSOLIDATION AND REVISION OF STATUTES (Continued)

House in committee on Bill 62, An Act to provide for the consolidation and revision of the Statutes.

Section 7 agreed to.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Mr. Chairman, I thought we had reverted back to section 5, and that section 6 had carried but that the Chairman had gone back to section 5. Just before we rose on Friday he marked that section 6 had carried, but section 5 had not.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): Section 5 had carried.

Mr. Ben: It had not carried on Friday, but section 6 had. I believe one of the members on the government benches wanted to go back to section 5.

Mr. Chairman: The bill is initialled, that is all I have to go by.

Mr. Ben: All right, I was under the impression that section 5 had not been carried and section 6 had; and we had gone back to section 5 because it had been missed by some member.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I am under the impression that section 5 had carried, but I am not objecting if Mr. Chairman wishes to permit discussions on 5.

Mr. Ben: I mention this, Mr. Chairman, not to discuss the matter but merely as a point of order.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Just keeping us straight.

Mr. Ben: I do not wish to discuss it, but I think it should be carried in a proper manner.

Section 5 agreed to.

Sections 8 to 13, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill 62 reported.

CONSOLIDATION AND REVISION OF REGULATIONS

House in committee on Bill 63, An Act to provide for the consolidation and revision of the Regulations.

On section 1:

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Mr. Chairman, under this bill, my remarks are apposite, I believe, but directly on point. I have two points I wish to make to the hon. Attorney General under the regulations. As the consolidation and revision are going through, it might just be the opportunity to include in the substance of the bill the possibility of reviewing the regulations more often; not just the five-year basis which I previously mentioned. By way of the type of committee that the former Chief Justice McRuer placed before us, a scrutiny committee of this Legislature would review these regulations from time to time.

My second point has to do with the Canadian Bill of Rights. If the hon. Attorney General will advert to it on occasion he will see a section I noticed when I was looking through it at the weekend. This section gives the Attorney General for Canada wide review powers over these regulations—I think it is section 3—and gives him a sort of scrutiny that ties in very much with the Act setting up The Attorney General's Department. It concerns this whole regulation business, which is very loose at the edges and warped at the seams at the present time.

We as members of this Legislature, with the burden of responsibility, the type of work we have to do, simply have not time to make a thorough review of these regulations in the interim period of a decade. So in one way or another perhaps, some consideration might be given to this particular intent.

And I want to correct a misimpression left by the hon. member for Downsview (Mr. Singer) and certain interjections he made on second reading of this bill, that there is consolidation year by year of all the regulations that have been passed, to indicate which ones are in effect, and which ones we may advert to in capsulated form (except that one of the publishing houses does issue one for their own purposes; but the cost is quite excessive.) For the purposes of this House, we have not that at our disposal and I suggest that that might be done again through your department, sir.

Thank you very much.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I think the remarks of the hon. member are very apropos. I might have interjected when he started to speak that I have legislation in preparation implementing the recommendations of Mr. McRuer for a committee of review, and other things.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Oh good!

Hon. Mr. Wishart: So I am really in a way anticipating what I hope may be government policy but that is as far as I can go at the moment. I have the legislation drafted and I would carry out and implement the McRuer recommendations.

Mr. MacDonald: Why does the Attorney General need legislation to set up a committee?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not know. The legislation does have that in it, I can reveal that. So I think we will get to the things that the hon. member suggests.

THE MATRIMONIAL CAUSES ACT

House in committee on Bill 66, An Act to amend The Matrimonial Causes Act.

On section 1.

Mr. Lawlor: On second reading, I never did get a clear explanation, at least as clear as I would desire, as to this amendment of The Matrimonial Causes Act.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It is the title I could never figure out.

Mr. Lawlor: If you have ever been in a matrimonial quarrel you would know what it is all about.

We do not like to use the word "conflict", instead of the word "causes". The explanatory note, Mr. Chairman, first of all, refers to divorce, and divorce only. And, of course, The Matrimonial Causes Act itself is, in section 6, subsection 2, concerned solely with the dissolution of marriage.

Section 7, which is being amended, had previously left to the discretion of the judge the question of costs of the official guardian. The point I had brought up previously had to do with The Infants Act, and the contention, or at least the clarification I am seeking, has to do with the inter-relationship between these two statutes, and whether bringing this new section into being also imposes the same or similar responsibility upon other kinds of actions, apart from divorce: Namely custody proceedings as a whole; and second, access proceedings, where parents wish to have access to their children.

The reason I ask the question is contained in section 1, subsection 5, of The Infants Act, which refers over to and incorporates by reference, in effect what you are doing under The Matrimonial Causes Act. If that is the intent of the Attorney General, Mr. Chairman, fine—and all to the good. It is not what the explanatory note has indicated; it is not what has been pointed to, particularly during the debate of this section. If I just may read subsection 5 in order to seek to bear out my point.

On an application under this section, the court may require the official guardian to cause an investigation to be made and to report to the court upon all matters relating to the custody, maintenance and education of the child, in which case section 6 of The Matrimonial Causes Act applies mutatis mutandis, and the court may make an order for the payment of the official guardian's costs.

Now you can see that last clause, if this legislation is brought into being, obviously is brought under The Infants Act of necessity, because the reference is made that The Infants Act will be governed by the Act that you are dealing with now. But then The Infants Act goes on and leaves the whole matter discretionary again, and I would suggest that either of two things are in order here. Either The Infants Act is not meant to be encompassed by this present legislation, in which case you are going to have to do something about The Infants Act so to indicate. Or, if it is meant to be encompassed, then the last clause of subsection 5 of The Infants Act is clearly out of order, because it is no longer a discretionary matter upon the judge. The costs are going to be paid by the petitioner, so far as you have this set up at the present time. So I say there is an internal conflict that the department may not have been aware of. If they are aware of it, more power to them—but they have also created certain ambiguities.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I must confess that I was not aware of the relationship to The Infants Act; perhaps I should have been. But having heard the hon. member, I do not believe that the requirement to pay the disbursements at the time of filing the report would apply in the same manner under The Infants Act.

When it says that the provision shall apply mutatis mutandis, I take it to mean with those changes which are necessary, having regard to the other section, or the section which is related. This amendment, as indeed was the language of section 7, which is being amended, speaks distinctly of a party to an action for divorce or an annulment of a marriage. The amendment also says the petitioner in an action for divorce shall pay the disbursements incurred by the official guardian, and the official guardian shall not file his report until such disbursements shall be paid.

I would think that this is not one of the mutatis mutandis areas at all. It is specifically related to the petitioner in an action for divorce, who is the only person who would have to pay those costs. I do not think it would relate to The Infants Act situation, where the requirements of the report, the investigation that has been carried out, and so on, I think, would apply. I believe this section and this amendment are specifically related to the petitioner in an action for divorce.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, may I thank the hon. Attorney General for his reply.

If, as was indicated at the beginning of the Attorney General's remarks, some attention had not been paid to The Infants Act, I would request that perhaps you would take it up with the officers of your department, because I am sincerely convinced that there could possibly be misinterpretations and conflicts in this area.

While one refers specifically, I do not know how you can avoid the wording, in which case, if the official guardian is brought in under The Infants Act, then section 6 of The Matrimonial Causes Act will apply. And there are two different things here. On one side of the fence there is the disbursements that have to be borne by the petitioner, willy nilly. But there is the second clause in section 1 of Bill 66 before us, the question of the costs of the court. Now the petitioner may, in the last analysis, not really bear that at all. They will be picked up in the costs, and whichever party is found to be the party at fault will bear the weight of these extra costs. This seems to work out very well in the way that things work out in The Infants Act, and if such is the case, then a simple amendment to The Infants Act may be in order in this regard.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I have noted it, Mr. Chairman, and I shall follow it through and look into it.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Sections 1 to 4, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 5:

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, there are a number of things about section 5 which raise questions.

First of all, at 952 the former Chief Justice McRuer set out a precedent modelled on the Newfoundland Act with numerous clauses, some of which have been adopted verbatim, some which have been altered slightly. If you run through "the functions", and while I do not suspect necessarily nefarious purposes in these subtle little alterations all the way through—I would certainly like to know, in several instances here, what they are all about. Why the change in wording, is there a question of the weight falling hither or yon in this particular regard? Because this is a very delicate statute.

I think the Attorney General will agree with me that if this Act is to have any bearing, thrust, weight or direction at all, and really mean anything, those nice relationships which he enjoys with his colleagues in the Treasury Bench or will not enjoy after this Act is passed, depend upon the right wording, where his responsibility lies and to whom he is really beholden. I mean, the clear designation of this bill is that you are raised again, above all your other colleagues, and no one, simply no one—not the Prime Minister of this province, not the Treasury bench, not the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council, no one can tell you in the exercise of the political discretion that you employ in your office as Attorney General, what to do.

It has been pointed out that, historically, the Labour government of Great Britain fell because they precisely attempted, in the Ross-Campbell case, to bring such pressure upon the Attorney General of the day. Lord Simon and other authoritative law lords, subsequent to him, have pointed out that these subtle pressures exerted upon an Attorney General, are the very things that will undermine his own office and could very well, in a single instance, undermine a whole government in the operations of their powers.

So I question sub-clause (a) touching the office of the Minister, as the law officer of the Executive Council. But that is not what the model Act states—"He shall be official legal advisor of the Lieutenant-Governor and the legal member of the executive council."

You see the nice shift in wording here. I think you are the official legal advisor of the Lieutenant-Governor and you may also be the law officer of the Executive Council, but does that place you under their thumb? Are you to be influenced by them? Is it not your task just to be in the opposite direction, your telling them what the direction and purport of the law is? This seems, in other words, to bring you too much in cahoots with your colleagues, to make you too much the victim or if not the victim, at least the emissary of their will, rather than the reverse which is what McRuer has called for. It is your will and your determination and judgment that shall be eminent and shall be operative in the circumstances of reaching decisions. They must listen to you; otherwise the whole position here has very little direction, has very little meaning.

Now, running through the rest of this section, again under this heading of your dual capacity and the trickiness of the dual load that you are under. I was going to advert to your old speech which I had mentioned on an earlier occasion where you, rather jocular in some ways, admit the delicacy of the issues before us this afternoon.

But take (e):

The Attorney General shall advise the government upon all matters of law connected with legislative enactments and upon all matters of law referred to him, by the government.

I would like the Attorney General to tell me today who the government is. I had almost fallen into the trap of making a long dissertation in the realm of political science asking, what is a government? I want some direction on this. I looked up Ernest Barker's book "Reflections on Government" and you know, this Legislature is not a government! It seems there is some doubt about it, that the executive council may or may not be the government.

Is the government the whole apparatus? I mean, the civil service and the rest of the apparatus that rule peoples lives? This is a term which I suggest to you is extremely vague and I do not like it. Barker says at page 46:

A Parliament exists in order to discuss and enact laws and in order to discuss and guide the general conduct of executive government but, it does not exist in order to govern and if it assumes a character of a government, it will be going beyond the generality of the status which it has and traspassing on the sphere of the particular—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I would like to ask the hon. member, if he would permit, what he was speaking of in that quotation?

Mr. Lawlor: I was speaking of the role of Parliaments as being governments. He said they are not and he says, "They are not the executive government"—

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Well, who was suggesting that they were?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He was reading from "Alice in Wonderland."

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think there is no question.

Mr. Lawlor: Only one person went through the looking glass here recently, and that is the Minister of Correctional Services. You may stand corrected.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think the section to which the hon. member for Lakeshore is referring is clear.

Mr. Singer: Well if it was, why a debate?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It is the language of McRuer. I do not think it has been changed there. Although I have not got Mr. McRuer's volume before me, he—

Mr. Lawlor: It is on 953.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He speaks of advising the government.

Mr. Lawlor: Well, his wording on page 5—953, is as follows, it is a little difficult from yours again, why this change: "he shall advise the heads of several departments of government". The hon. Minister says, "he shall advise the government."

It is not McRuer's wording and I suggest it is very dubious wording and I will go beyond that. You see, I think that the hon. Minister's advice in the last analysis, I suppose is to the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council. But I feel too, and this is not clear in these functions, that you are beholden to this House, the whole House, not just the party that happens to be sitting in the seats of the mighty, but the whole legislative assembly, because we are supposed to be as an entity governing in the best interests of the whole people.

McRuer's thrust is that the hon. Minister, raised to this status, is fairly non-partisan. You are trying to find in a state of serenity the true weight of an issue. Some political storm blows up and we have to discuss it. The very fact that the hon. Minister is placed in a position of relative neutrality in this regard should obviate the issues somewhat. The hon. Minister could stand up in all honesty and forthrightness, without being in the secretive position that maybe some of his colleagues would be, and state to this House, in an open way, in a way that is perhaps a degree beyond controversy, the real shape of the issue.

This is the problem in this whole bill, as to whether one can achieve what McRuer thinks is possible to achieve. The hon. Minister certainly is trying and I give him high points for it, but are we really carrying it out? Since this Legislature, under politically scientific definition, is not the government and since this Legislature is at least one of the bodies, like I suppose the first Sovereign body, to which you are beholden, and to whom you are giving these explanations in this lofty capacity, that some kind of advice or some kind of role vis-à-vis this body ought to be written into this statute. No provision is made for it at all, although you could construe the Newfoundland Act as giving greater weight to the kind of remarks that I am making.

It is about preserving the integrity of this Legislature when in times of crisis or in times of political quarrel where people may be in prison or there may be trials touching political matters, and it could very easily happen, you as an independent solitary voice can speak with moderation and the requisite wisdom in the matter, and we would not be able with good reason to say to you: "Oh, you are under a political ban, you are behind the left field fence in the bleachers; that you could not possibly speak the truth in the matter, or even attempt to do so because it would be to your own detriment and the detriment of your government". This is what we are trying to preserve you from.

Now, the bill as it comes before us, does not really effect that purpose and I suggest that the wording, subtle as it may be here and there, is designed advisedly not to do so. In effect, it throws you back into a Cabinet portfolio position where you are among your peers and not in any position of advising over against them. To the extent that it can be interpreted as doing that, then the legislation becomes nugatory and we may as well forget all about it because it is not achieving the purpose it was intended to achieve.

If such is the case, then I would ask for a review. I have no specific amendments to make under this heading. I simply raise my voice in what is admittedly a very vague and nebulous bill—and perforce so. But it does not need to be as obtuse and as difficult to interpret as this particular piece of legislation appears to me to be.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I listened with interest as I always do to the comments of the hon. member for Lakeshore. I do not know—the longer he speaks the more confused I get. He talks about a world really where we would not need any government. That would be the world when the Attorney General would be able to come in here and shed his political mantle completely, ignore from whence he came—

Mr. Lawlor: The member is back from down south. He is all suntanned.

Mr. Singer: All right, I kept quiet when the member was talking, and if he wants to talk I will sit down and let him talk on again.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Or if he wants to go south!

Mr. Singer: The member for Lakeshore has been ranting and raging on three or four bills. He talks and talks and talks and he finally comes to the penultimate conclusion in each one of them that he has no amendments but he is not sure he likes the way the bill is drafted. And then he ends up by voting for it.

Now, I wish he would come in here in his philosophical approach—it is a very interesting one, and it is not quite the legislative approach, Mr. Chairman. If he has intelligent comments, either criticizing or in supports of these bills, then I would like to hear them. But he ends up as he always does in his remarks. It is very difficult for two of us to talk together.

Mr. Lawlor: I am quite prepared to speak all afternoon if it will keep the member for Downsview quiet.

Mr. Singer: Oh no, the member will not keep me quiet. I have come back with new energy and I am good for quite a while now, so the member can just sit and listen to me now.

Mr. Chairman: Perhaps we could get on with section 5.

Mr. Singer: I am trying, Mr. Chairman, but these noisy fellows there do not have too much to say in debate, so they say it while they are sitting down—sound and fury signifying nothing.

The end effect is, Mr. Chairman, as I was indicating, what the hon. member for Lakeshore seems to believe we can have certain designated members of this Assembly who would suddenly stop being politicians. They will become statesmen and they will—yes, there are three of them pointing to themselves over there and they are bowing and accepting all the plaudits. I just do not believe it. And I do not believe that you are going to be able to embody these theories in a statute.

Mr. Lawlor: Well, that is what it is all about.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The hon. member for Downsview has five minutes to think that one over.

Mr. Singer: I do not know why it is, Mr. Chairman, I seem to worry the member for Lakeshore so much. He cannot let me get four words off without some pointless interjection, but he apparently enjoys it, so let him rant on. It does not bother me at all.

Mr. Lawlor: The member is a beautiful target.

Mr. Singer: As I was saying, Mr. Chairman, the object embodied or attempted to be approached in this section 5 is a theory that my colleague, the member for Sudbury, and I, have been advancing through all these ten years that we have both been here. And at least it is a good thing that we begin to see some of these principles now embodied in a statute.

Whether they are meaningful or not, I have grave doubts. They are here. And I do not think the nit-picking or the pettifogging indulged in by the hon. member for Lakeshore—changing a comma or changing a phrase—is going to change one single bit of the intent that is in this section 5.

Mr. Lawlor: What inhuman kind of self restraint does the member think I am capable of?

Mr. Singer: All we can hope, Mr. Chairman, is that the hon. Attorney General and his successors—some of his predecessors have not quite been able to do it and on occasion I wonder about the hon. gentleman who occupies the office presently—will try and do the things that are set up in these various subsections of section 5.

For instance, subsection (h) says that the Minister of Justice shall conduct and regulate all litigation for and against the Crown. Now, there were two questions this afternoon posed by two hon. members, the same in content—one by my leader and one by one of the third socialist party over there—to the effect that a particular Crown attorney refused to accept certain charges laid under the statute administered by the Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. McKeough).

Mr. MacDonald: The Liberals are the second Conservative Party; we are the third socialist.

Mr. Singer: Now, if you read subsection (h) very closely, one would have thought that the Attorney General could have and should have been investigating this sort of thing a long time ago, and that the responsibility for the administration of this particular statute should never really have been under the control and the aegis of the Minister of Municipal Affairs. The Attorney General should have long since worried about the enforcement of prosecutions of those landlords who refused to pay the rent rebate.

Now, there were two questions pointed in that direction this afternoon. The Attorney General took them as notice and said he is going to investigate. But if you recall I posed a question to the Minister of Municipal Affairs based on information given to me by a practising solicitor in the city of Toronto. The Minister of Municipal Affairs chose to table it.

I used it when we were in the Throne debate and we have not had any reaction from the Attorney General. And I made some very serious charges. I suggested and I charged on the basis of the information I had, that someone was telling justices of the peace in the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto not to accept information and complaints unless they had been approved of by some official of The Department of Municipal Affairs.

Now, read subsection (h). I would have thought that the Attorney General, or the Minister of Justice as his name is going to be, would have been most concerned about that state of affairs, and would have chosen to rise in his place immediately he had notice of it. And there has been notice of it on the order paper in my question and in remarks that I made in this House ten days ago. But nothing!

Hopefully the problem is going to go away and the Minister of Municipal Affairs is going to be allowed to fiddle around with prosecutions under this statute passed by this Legislature and the Attorney General is going to sit idly by and do nothing.

So what I am suggesting, Mr. Chairman, is that merely putting these words in a statute is going to be completely meaningless unless the Attorney General believes that he is given a job to supervise the conduct of litigation for and against the Crown. Now I am not sure that he believes that, or his officials believe that.

Another example—I notice the hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Stewart) is now in the House. Now there has not been a department in the last two or three years that has had worse legal advice than The Department of Agriculture and Food, and he has accepted it each time.

He let one bill die on the order paper; he has had to beat a retreat on another one and amend it, so that it would have some basic principles of fairness and equity in it; he has one bill now before the House in which he shows that he apparently did not bother consulting anybody—except some lawyer in his department, maybe.

One would have thought, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. Attorney General and/or Minister of Justice would concern himself with being all of the law. Now that is, in essence, what section 5 is supposed to mean. I am just not convinced, Mr. Chairman, that the Attorney General really is going to do this, even though the statute seems to imply that this is going to be his function. I am not nearly so worried with the exact phraseology as I am with the approach that is going to be taken by the individual gentlemen who occupy the office from time to time.

We would like to see, Mr. Chairman, all legal advisers of the government consolidated and under the control of one Cabinet Minister, and that is what we have been talking about for these 10 years. Now this statute says that, but I do not see any change coming about because each new department seems to have its own legal advisors.

If you look in the advertising columns of the daily papers you will see from time to time individual departments and individual branches and individual segments advertising for new lawyers. Each little legal empire is being built up and there may be 15, 18, 20, 25 of them, and things have not changed a bit. McRuer comes in with three, nicely-bound volumes and a whole bunch of principles and we all pay lip service and salaam and bow down; we pass a few more statutes and very little changes.

Mr. Chairman, what I would like to see is some kind of assurance—and I do not know how you built it in with words—but some kind of assurance that this section is going to be meaningful rather than meaningless.

I suppose, Mr. Chairman, that is really the concern I have with section 5, that there is going to be a consolidation of legal advice and legal attention and legal direction within government, and it is going to be under the supervision of one Minister of the government; that we do not go out and hire outside lawyers. And this has been another one of my concerns, to buy and sell a piece of real estate, as is still being done. There is no reason for that and it happens in a multitude of departments.

It would seem to me that there should be someone from The Attorney General's Department, not from the legislative counsel's department, but from The Attorney General's Department, at every meeting of every committee that has to deal with the bill, because it should be the Attorney General's advisors or assistants, or employees, who are concerned about common principles.

What we see are 26 or 28 different sets of principles as we look at these statutes. Maybe this is going to be the beginning of a change. I am skeptical about it, Mr. Chairman. The words are there and there is no point in indulging in endless philosophical discussion about whether a comma should be changed. The words are here, Mr. Chairman, but it is my feeling, it is my very strong feeling, that the words do not mean anything unless there is some desire on the part of government to do something about the words.

Mr. MacDonald: We have now heard the ranting and raving, let us get back to the substance of the bill.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. Attorney General.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I suppose I could agree to some extent with what has been said—that no words, no matter how carefully they were set forth, could perhaps make all the changes that one might anticipate could be made. I think no matter how you drafted a Department of Justice or Attorney General's Act, unless you went so far as to remove him from certain functions altogether, you would still have him in a dual capacity.

Under our system he is an elected person. He is a member of the government. By government I mean the executive council with the Lieutenant-Governor, the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council. He has that character, come what may, and until you removed him from going to the electorate, which would be one way of removing his political character, he is going to have a political character.

As I pointed out in the debate in second reading of this bill, he not only is an Attorney General in this province, he is solicitor-general, as well as the Minister of Justice, and he is a Home Secretary—if you want to compare him with the office in the British government. One can only set forth in the best and clearest possible language, the guidelines to his duties and responsibilities, and then trust that he will carry them out. And then this House—which perhaps is not the government, in the sense that parliament is not the government—would see that he did his duties. It would make it very apparent to the public and to the members of the House if he were not doing his duty.

That, I think, is perhaps the best safeguard that one has beyond the language. But the hon. member for Downsview uses this bill a little unfairly in his criticism. He says the words are there, then he takes the occasion to recite some situations which it is designed to correct; for instance, the bringing of all law people from the various departments under the one head of the Attorney General, but he says we do not see it happening. He is pretty premature and anticipates very early before we get the bill through committee—

Mr. Singer: I would be very happy to apologize if my suspicions were badly founded.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: —to say that it is not happening. I could hardly have expected it would happen before we get the bill through committee. So I thought he was anticipating rather severely, when he starts to criticize and to say this, in effect, will not happen.

Take subsection (h) of section 5, which has been referred to, "He shall conduct and regulate all litigation"—and, I think, the important words—"for and against the Crown".

Surely that indicates that he must be impartial; he must legislate, prosecute, litigate, against the Crown, as well as for the Crown. And even before this Act, I think hon. members can recall cases of prosecution against Crown servants, Crown agents, Crown officials, judges even, where it became the Attorney General's duty to act in an impartial way, regardless of the fact that he was in that dual sense a member of government. This makes it clear that he must do that and I think the words are valuable that he must act for and against the Crown, and as I say it would be up to the House to hold him to an impartial attitude if he did not so act.

I undertook today to answer the question that was asked by two hon. members and which the hon. member for Downsview took occasion to be critical about. And I will not answer it at this moment, but I have some thought in that the cases referred to are not strictly prosecutions by or on behalf of the Crown; they are private informations sworn by private persons against individuals. True, they follow the terms of an Act passed by this Legislature but the informations are laid by individuals against other individuals and they touch upon financial responsibility in the sense of collection of a debt.

There is quite a difference between that type of thing and the prosecution for an offence where one has broken a law that is criminal or of a quasi criminal nature and there are many cases where one could show that distinction.

That is—

Mr. Singer: The BNA Act is federal and anything else is provincial.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is all I would say about the matter at the moment.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the Attorney General a question?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, if I might just say this: I just want to touch upon that at the moment. I undertook to answer the questions tomorrow. I do not really propose to say anymore at this time but I will certainly be glad to hear the hon. member's question.

Mr. Singer: I wonder if the Attorney General is seriously espousing the theory that where this Legislature has passed a statute and said that a certain group of people, in this case the landlords, must pay to another group of people, the tenants, a sum of money once a year and in the event that they do not, certain penalties shall be attended on that lack of performance in accordance with the provisions of The Summary Convictions Act, that he does not feel that he has the duty and responsibility to see that the provisions of that statute are enforced?

If he feels not, if he feels it is a private matter, then what is the point of our putting any sanctions in any of our provincial statutes? I just do not understand the Attorney General's reasoning on this at all.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, I will not say any more. I will perhaps give a full and complete answer tomorrow. I do recall a similar Act—I think it was The Master and Servant Act—where wages were not paid or something of that sort, prosecution could be taken—and was often taken—by the wage earner against his employer for failure to pay. The Crown was seldom involved in those, if ever. They were prosecuted before what was formerly a magistrates court, on a private prosecution.

But to go on with this, Mr. Chairman. There are very few changes in the language, which Mr. McRuer offered in his recommendation. He was, as I said on second reading again, quoting with aberration the Newfoundland Act, which was modelled on other Acts in turn, and I do not think that leaving out the words of reference to the Lieutenant-Governor, the advising of the Lieutenant-Governor, detracts in any way from the stature of the Attorney General.

The only changes that we have seen fit to make were those that were peculiar to our own province. We added the registry and land titles offices, but did not add the control of police forces. We debated that on second reading, which some Attorneys General at least do not have, but I did, I think, assure the House that that would appear in other legislation, namely The Police Act—

Mr. Singer: It is already there.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, it would be more clear at least, I think, after what I propose to bring to the House very shortly. I think we are, in effect, implementing a recommendation that Mr. McRuer has made, and I think the changes we have made were necessary simply to meet our own circumstances. Perhaps some of them were improvements on the language there, instead of saying "he shall be charged with, he shall have the superintendence of", we say "he shall superintend, shall conduct, shall advise, shall superintend". This is simply more concise and clear language in my view, and I have nothing more to add. I would hope that this Act will result—and it is one of the objectives—in bringing under one head, the law officer of the Crown, all the lawyers who serve government in any department.

I have referred to section (h) and other sections that bear along the same line. It is true that different occupants of the office might take a different view one from another, but I think the clear definition of duty and responsibility is a guide that will be valuable to anyone who fills the office of Attorney General and Minister of Justice. As I say, if he does not, the definition is clear before every member of this House, who can rise in his place and show the duty, show the responsibility, call the Minister to book, bring it to his attention, make it a public matter to say, "This duty you should perform, and in my view it has not been properly performed." I think for that reason alone the Act would be of great value.

Mr. Singer: Well, Mr. Chairman, I listened to what the Attorney General said but I just cannot let pass the theory he has advanced about offences created by a provincial statute being perhaps, or even probably, matters between citizen and citizen.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is just in passing.

Mr. Singer: Well, it was not in passing. I think it touches very seriously on the philosophy that the present Attorney General brings to bear on these problems.

He says that the questions that were raised this afternoon, he undertook to investigate—and I am sure he will. He is a man of his word, and he will come back with an explanation. But I made the point earlier, Mr. Chairman, that it is at least four weeks ago since I gave a question to his colleague, the Minister of Municipal Affairs, which the Minister has not answered. He chose to put it on the order paper. And I dealt with it two weeks ago towards the end of the debate on the Speech from the Throne. At that time, in no uncertain language, I charged the Minister with direct interference with the course of administration of justice.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The Minister of Municipal Affairs?

Mr. Singer: That is right, and I would have thought that the guardian of all the legal rights in the province of Ontario having heard that, would have taken the trouble to find out what the story was. Either it was as I said, or it could be presented in a different way. If the remarks that I presented and the charges that I made were—and I think they were—in fact authentic, then I would have thought that the Attorney General could not have waited to come back into this House and say: “I am sorry, somebody other than the Attorney General has been instructing justices of the peace about the administration of justice, and it is obvious they have no right to do it and I put a stop to it.”

That is the way I read this section 5. And I say that, to my mind, this is the way the administration of justice in this province should have been conducted even without the passage of section 5. That is why, Mr. Chairman, when I hear this long and involved explanation that perhaps it is something as between citizen and citizen, because the repository of all sanctions against criminal offences is not here, but in another place up in Ottawa, then the Attorney General raises in my mind again the very serious doubts that I have about whether or not the reassertion of these principles—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member will permit. I hope he is not attributing to me a statement that justice sits up in Ottawa. I did not say that. I have never suggested that. I do not know where that expression came from, but let me make it clear it is not mine. I never suggested that justice sits on her throne in Ottawa.

Mr. Singer: Well, perhaps I did not explain it sufficiently clearly. What I meant, Mr. Chairman, was this: As I listened very carefully to the Attorney General, it seems to me he indicated that unless there was a criminal offence or something that came under aegis of the powers of the federal government in section 91 of The British North America Act, that you could probably attribute everything else, including the actions done by his colleague, the Minister of Municipal Affairs, to some matter that concerns citizen and citizen, which really was not something—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is quasi criminal.

Mr. Singer: Well, all right, and when I interjected at that point and talked about the provisions of The British North America Act and the powers over criminal law, the Attorney General did not see fit to correct me. If I have misinterpreted his remarks—and I hope I have—then I apologize. But I think it should be made abundantly clear that when either this Minister or any one of his many colleagues stands up and says, “Here is a statute, and this is the view of the government of Ontario. To ensure that its provisions are going to be carried out we have attached certain sanctions to it. We have this power because this is not a criminal statute.” We have no power to pass a criminal statute here. But we say to landlords, “Give back a rental rebate.” And if they do not they are going to be punished. What could be more obvious, Mr. Chairman?

To listen this afternoon to the Attorney General saying perhaps it is really a matter between citizen and citizen, I just find this completely abhorrent. I say that when we have a statute here—and I do not care which one—in this book or any of the other books upon the shelf, where this Legislature has said this statute must be enforced, and if people do not do what the statute provides they are going to be punished in a certain way after the facts have been proved, it is the job of this Minister, the Attorney General and the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General of the province of Ontario, to see that that is carried out. And when he hears even a whisper that one of his officials is holding up that process—in this case the question was, was a Crown attorney holding up that process, and in the case I referred to earlier, it was my charge that one of his colleagues was holding up that process—then I would think that the first one to man the ramparts is and must be and should be the Attorney General. When a matter sits for four weeks before this Legislature, without even a murmur from the Attorney General, then I question that the words in section 5—even if the words in section 5 were “create attention to”—would be meaningful, are going to have any effect on him.

Now the Attorney General says I was unfair in saying we have not done it until now. I would suggest that those principles, as outlined there—even long before Mr. McRuer wrote them down in his book—most lawyers felt, were guidelines for anyone charged with the administration of justice in this province.

Section 5 agreed to.

On section 6:

Mr. Lawlor: A few words on section 6; we have partially debated it, Mr. Chairman.

It has to do with just what role lawyers in other departments have under the McRuer recommendations and with respect to the office of the Attorney General as the chief officer of the Crown. May I say before making mention of McRuer's actual recommendation under this head—that a separate and distinct legislative branch be set up in The Attorney General's Department, which is not done under this legislation—that there is one other point which is not under this legislation that may very well fall under this particular head. I commend the Attorney General for omitting McRuer's recommendation to the effect that it be made one of the statutory provisions that the Attorney General must be a member of the bar of Ontario. That has been deliberately omitted, and it is very good that it should be so omitted.

As to the omission of, in effect, a new branch: There are five branches presently, I believe, under The Attorney General's Department. The proposal is to set up a new branch called the legislative branch of the department. The work of the legislative branch—and I will not read them in full to save time in this debate—is contained in recommendations 5, 6 and 7. Seven is quite a lengthy recommendation of the McRuer committee; that is it states that all legislation of government will come under review and be presented to the legislative branch of The Attorney General's Department.

It will not sift, particularly, for social policy; that is the problem of the individual Minister. But that it will be sifted with respect to legal policy and to the preservation of human rights. And whether or not that is the intention of this section under discussion at the moment, for all it says is that he may designate an employee in any department or agency to be an employee of The Attorney General's Department.

My question to the Attorney General is, what is the intent of the section? What are their plans with respect to bringing the other lawyers throughout the government apparatus under the Attorney General's head and under his general supervision; and how far has he gone thus far?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The section gives the power to bring the law people in other departments within the ambit, and under the direction and, I think I would use the word, control, of the Attorney General, so that there would be uniformity, continuity, exchange of views, opportunity for study, discussion, advancement, perhaps, of a group of lawyers. And we would not have parcels of lawyers carrying on in one department without any relation to another.

The member for Downsview mentioned where there had been some views that had been given and had to be reviewed. The purpose of that section would be to bring in one law officer under whose control would come the lawyers who advise the government. Under this Act, the Attorney General would be responsible to see that that advice was given correctly and he would be responsible for it to the government and to this House.

Mr. Lawlor: But you do not set up a legislative branch as such.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Not as such at the moment. In my own view, I do not think that is particularly necessary. I think that under the language of this section we can achieve the result which is desirable.

Mr. Lawlor: But with those employees; how far have you gone thus far? For instance, in The Department of Agriculture and Food, would they remain physically located within The Department of Agriculture and Food and in immediate rapport with their own Minister; and would they only come forward to you on occasion? Or would they actually be members of your department, physical located elsewhere?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The physical location would be, perhaps, the most important thing to concern ourselves with, but I think they would certainly be under the direction and control of the Attorney General. He could say to a lawyer in another department, "Exchange your position, come meet with me, discuss with me, these matters; discuss with the Attorney General, or discuss with the deputy Attorney General, or the staff, these matters on which you are acting." I would think that perhaps in the actual working out of these things there would still be situations where lawyers would become expert, perhaps, in matters of highways, matters of public works, acquisition of property, that sort of thing. But they would, pursuant to this Act, be the lawyers of The Attorney General's Department.

He would see that their conduct, their approach, particularly their advice, would be under the control and direction of the Attorney General. And they would be part of a body of lawyers in the government. I would draw your attention to one other thing: That the language of section 6 is, "may designate", and it is the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council that has that power.

It would be necessary to convince, therefore, my colleagues in cabinet, as we refer to it to make these changes. But the word, "may", was deliberately used also, because there are some lawyers, or some persons in the legal branch that one might not want to designate. I do not want to expatiate on that at the moment, but there is that possibility.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, on section 6. Section 6 is, I think, an intelligent section. I think it is good, I think it is long overdue. I am concerned about the permissiveness of the word "may", as against the mandatory provisions of the word, "shall". That is the argument that we have been putting forward for many, many years here. But I would like to have heard from the Attorney General this afternoon some sort of time schedule on this. I would like to know when he anticipates that we are going to have all the lawyers, or most of them, directed by the Attorney General.

I would have liked to have heard him say that when new young graduates come in out of law school that they will be hired, not by a particular department, but they will be hired by the Attorney General and assigned by him or by his officials, by his Deputy, to a particular department. They might spend a year in agriculture, another year in education and another year in the companies branch, so that hopefully we would have, as we should have, in this province, and we do not have now, the best legal advice there is available within the boundaries of the province of Ontario.

This has been the great failure that we have been complaining about for these many years. But there is no such time scheduled. And I would have liked to have heard him expand—and this is the only time really that we get this opportunity, when we go through this thing in committee of the whole House—I would have liked to have heard him expand along the line that there would be common opportunities for promotion and you may move a solicitor from grade to grade and perhaps up the line in another department.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I mentioned promotion.

Mr. Singer: Perhaps I was not listening that closely. But this is the sort of thing that I think is so important. And then I would hope that before too many years have gone by, whoever occupies the office of Attorney General will be able to stand up and say without a doubt we have the best legal advisors in the province of Ontario. No Attorney General has ever been able to make that statement up till now, and with the greatest respect for my hon. friend, I do not think he can make that statement today. This should be the objective lying behind this Act and particularly behind section 6 of the Act.

Section 6 agreed to.

House in committee on Bill 79, An Act to amend The Retail Sales Tax Act, 1960-1961.

Sections 1 to 4, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 5:

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Chairman, I move that clause 10 of section 5 be deleted.

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of Revenue): I would like to speak—

Mr. Chairman: May I put the motion first—

Hon. Mr. White: I would like to speak before the motion is put.

Mr. Chairman: I would like to put the motion first. The member for Riverdale moves that clause 10 of section 5 be deleted.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I would just like a very brief word on the amendment which I have introduced.

The arguments in favour of the deletion of this section were put at length and in detail on the second reading of the bill. You will recall, Mr. Chairman, that they were in substance that the impact of this tax on production machinery would mean that the economic capacity of the province of Ontario and its productive capacity would be affected and would be affected adversely.

When you synopsise all the arguments which were put by many members in Opposition, that is the net effect of it and I do not intend, nor do I believe that there is any need, to repeat in detail the arguments which were put.

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): Mr. Chairman, I would like to say that the view of the official Opposition is very similar to that of the hon. member for Riverdale. We discussed this section at length, as he noted, last Wednesday and Thursday, and our conclusion is that it will adversely affect the productive ability of the Ontario economy to produce goods and services which in turn, of course, Mr. Chairman, will have an adverse effect on the number of jobs available in the Ontario economy for people looking for jobs.

We disagree with the premise of the tax and we disagree with the effect the Minister assumes it will have on the economy. We will therefore support the motion put by the hon. member of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Chairman: Does the hon. Minister wish to reply?

Hon. Mr. White: Yes, I would like to say a word, Mr. Chairman.

I quite understand the objections that are being posed, but I think that if the hon. gentlemen will reconsider, they will conclude, as I have, that the administrative efficiency not only for government but, much more important, for the enterprises in this province—is one of several reasons why this change is not undesirable.

The other very important aspect is that the amount of revenue which we anticipate—something like $38 or $39 million—is a gross figure with substantial reductions to complete the net weight of the tax when one considers the decrease in corporation tax which will come about as a result of charging sales tax into the expenses of a company's income and expense statement.

I gave certain figures the other day to show the magnitude is small, Mr. Chairman, and I thought from the bafflement and the look of surprise on the face of the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Lewis) that had the NDP had the foresight to make a comparable arithmetical evaluation, they might have taken quite a different stand. I am wondering now if the hon. member for Scarborough West had an opportunity to speak to the deputy leader, indeed if they are speaking these days. I just do not know what the pecking order is in that caucus at the moment.

Mr. J. Renwick: It is perfectly clear.

Hon. Mr. White: At any rate, let me run through those figures again—it will take only a minute.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): Tell us what it will be reduced by—the Minister did not tell us on second reading.

Hon. Mr. White: It will be reduced by 52 per cent over the term of the life of the asset. It will be reduced by 52 per cent for those corporations in that marginal tax bracket. It does not mean, of course, that they have to pay that amount on all of their earnings. In fact their earnings might be rather modest to incur that 52 per cent marginal tax.

Mr. Peacock: Would the Minister permit a question, Mr. Chairman? Did he give us on second reading the amount by which the $38 million would be reduced?

Hon. Mr. White: Let me run through this if I may and then I will answer any questions the hon. members have.

To refresh the memories of the hon. members, for every million dollars in sales, there is acquired in this province $110,000 in annual investment in machinery and equipment. The value of the newly-taxable machinery and equipment, however, in 1969-70, will be approximately $40,000, because, of course, a great deal of equipment and machinery has been taxable ever since retail sales tax was imposed in this province.

And this works out to a sales tax per million dollars of sales of $2,000. If this is depreciated over a five-year period on a flat depreciation basis, it is $400. The reduction in corporate income tax due to this application of Retail Sales Tax is .52 times $400, which is $208, leaving the net increase in cost of $192, which is something less than one-fiftieth of one per cent of sales.

I would like to run through a further series of figures for you, Mr. Chairman. I have not used them before, although they do make my case stronger. That is the same computation if one excludes construction machinery and equipment, which was included in the figures I have given to this point.

If those are excluded and one considers only manufacturing production equipment and machinery—which is to say a direct, as opposed to indirect computation—then one finds that annual sales of $1 million are correlated with annual investment and manufacturing machinery and equipment of $45,000, the value of newly-taxable machinery and equipment, 1969-70, is $27,000.

The sales tax paid as result of removal of exemption is $1,350, which is to say five per cent of $27,000. The amount of sales tax depreciated for purposes of corporate income tax will be $270. The reduction in corporation income tax due to the depreciated sales tax component of the price of production machinery, .52 times 270 is 140—and then one arrives at an average annual net burden to a firm of $130, compared to the larger and more conservative figure that I used the other day.

So, because of the administrative simplicities for enterprises in this province, because it is going to produce a substantial sum of revenue for us, and we see this as an appropriate source, I would hope that the amendment posed by the NDP deputy leader would not be supported by the other hon. members of this House.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, the Minister forces me to make one comment. Regardless of whether or not the tax burden may be redistributed in the sense that it will be a deductible expense for corporate tax purposes or for income tax purposes, and therefore will be subject to a 52 per cent benefit to the corporation because of the way the tax is being redistributed, that does not alter one iota the fact that the reductions under the general agreement of tariff and trade in the Kennedy Round have provided an absolute reduction of $45 million in costs for those who import machinery for the purpose of using that machinery in production across Canada, of which a substantial part of the $45 million would be an absolute reduction in costs in the province of Ontario.

No matter how the Minister cuts it, the fact of the matter is that this was introduced into this budget for the purpose of raising substantial additional amounts of revenue, and the Minister is going to raise that revenue at the expense of the economic efficiency of the industrial plant of the province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. White: Well, Mr. Chairman, I hear what my hon. friend is saying and I have discussed the effect of this particular increase in tax with an increase in corporation tax and we can in no way differentiate the economic effects, whether that is moved forward to the consumer or backward to the shareholder, or some such division in the burden of the imposition of the additional tax.

My hon. friends opposite have been less than friendly to free enterprise in this province and they have urged us time and time again to increase corporate taxes, and indeed, taxes of every kind bearing on business, so this latter day conversion is not particularly impressive to me and I am hopeful that the Liberals, who have been somewhat friendlier to the private sector of this economy, will not be distracted by these high-flown phrases signifying very little.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister seems to be losing his touch with reality if he is suggesting that we on this side are going to support him in the imposition of this tax. We have certainly made it clear to him and to the House on two occasions already that we feel it is a seriously retrogressive move on the part of the Ministry; that there have been examples at the federal level; that I was the one who brought this before the House, which indicated that while they imposed an 11 per cent tax of this type in 1963, it had to be withdrawn in successive stages, because they found it had a retrograde effect on the economy.

It seems strange that when there is this most recent example, and the recommendations of the Royal Commission itself—which said not only should this exemption be maintained, but should be broadened in the manufacturing area of our economy—that the Minister should lead the government into removing this exemption when it is obviously going to have serious repercussions in the province, and even beyond that.

Now if the Minister is under any impression that we are going to support him in the amendment that is now before the House, I hasten to disabuse him. I think he is leading the government into making a serious error which, in the long run—and by that I mean in the next three years—is going to cost more than the new tax can possibly raise, which is estimated to be $38 million in connection with this tax.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, I would like to take exception to the remarks of the hon. Minister so far as we are concerned over here.

The hon. Minister, I think, well knows that there is considerable differentiation in the incidence and direction of this tax. So far as corporation taxes are concerned, there is not any clear statistical evidence one way or the other. They are still in some limbo of doubt as to where the weight of the tax finally falls. The feeling is, and the Smith recommendations went in that direction, a 50-50 split as between passing it forward and passing it back.

Now there has not been, so far as I know, any greater studies. The economists themselves are of two minds about the issue. That is not true about the kind of tax touching producing machinery, as in this instance. The overwhelming weight of economic opinion came out very heavily against this tax—I went to some lengths to cite authorities under this head. Kenyon Poole, who is within this jurisdiction and was the advisor to the committee, and who has written an ample work on the subject and is the foremost authority, came out very heavily against imposition of the tax.

I think there is a severe differentiation so far as we are concerned. We know and you know, of a mathematical certainty, where the weight of this tax is going to fall—except, perhaps, in a certain restrictive range of industry which cannot pass it on. The bulk of this tax will fall on the heads of the consumers without peradventure of a doubt—and the Minister knows it! To confuse the two issues does him less than intellectual credit in this particular regard.

An hon. member: It will be pyramiding!

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, the tax itself its inflationary in its tendency. It is pyramiding in its effect, and his arguments are pettifogging in political intensity. It also makes for vertical integration in industry—which we did not get into in the second reading. But that element is involved in this tax. It is a thoroughly bad tax. I do not see how you can find it to be defensive at all. I am surprised you brought it before the House at all and I think we have no alternative but to vote strongly against it.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Chairman, may I just comment on these remarks briefly.

I may have been misunderstood, or perhaps I did not make myself clear, when I referred to the effect of any tax being borne by a business enterprise. So far as I can determine, there is no difference between a dollar of property tax paid by a corporation, a dollar of sales tax paid on the acquisition of machinery, or a dollar of corporation tax paid. Now that is the point I was trying to make earlier.

I am fully aware that there will not be a perfect correlation between the acquisition of capital goods and the profitability of an enterprise, although I think one will find a strong, positive correlation, notwithstanding the fact that it will not be perfect. That is the only point I was trying to make earlier—the burden of the taxation will depend entirely on the supply and demand curves, on the shape that those curves take in a particular industry.

If an enterprise is selling into world markets where the price, we will say, is fixed by enormous quantities of world demand, in all likelihood the burden of this tax will have to go backwards.

On the other hand, in those oligopolistic industries in Canada where the producers have a degree of control over the price structure, some—and maybe a great deal—of the burden will go forward. It is going to depend on the nature of every one of these industries. But I would point out, Mr. Chairman, to the hon. members who have shown themselves so distressed about this tax, we are talking about $38 or $39 million in a gross provincial product of nearly $30 billion.

Mr. J. Renwick: You are talking about a very low rate of productivity in this province.

Hon. Mr. White: So we are talking about something fractionally more than one thousandth of one per cent of the total value of goods and services in this province.

Mr. Nixon: You can relate it to anything.

Hon. Mr. White: I think we will find, Mr. Chairman, when we get into discussion with corporation managers, that they would rather be paying the $39 million gross than to have to pay a comparable net amount of revenue through an increase in corporation tax where, in order to realize that net of $38 million, a larger gross corporation tax would have to be paid.

Now I point out to my hon. friends that this tax is not charged against the performance of the company entirely in the year of acquisition of these capital assets. These assets are capitalized with the "tax-in" on the asset side of the asset and liability section. They are charged off over the life of the asset. I have used the figure five years but that is a conservative figure and I think seven years or eight years would have been better. But in order not to overstate my case, I have used this average life of five years. Let us—

Mr. J. Renwick: They have to pay the tax.

Hon. Mr. White: Let me elaborate then, for the sake of clarity. If a company acquires a $100 machine which was not previously taxable and which now is taxable, they will have to pay $105 including the tax. This will be the value of the asset established in the books of the company and in the annual reports of the company. Assuming a five-year, 20 per cent flat rate depreciation each year, $1 of the $5 tax will be depreciated together with $20 of the $100 "tax-out" figure. So, while we realize this cash revenue in our next fiscal year and while it must be paid by the private sector in the next fiscal year, at least it is not a large shock to the financial statements of the company. I think that this is a matter of some importance.

Mr. Lawlor: It is all deductible from the federal government.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Windsor West.

Mr. Peacock: Mr. Chairman, the Minister has risen to speak on this clause today and introduced a new defence of his efforts to raise $38 million in revenue by the extension of this tax to production machinery, which he did not offer, as he might have, in his introductory remarks on second reading, to the effect that the increase in prices that might be passed on would be an even smaller amount if the construction machinery component were taken out of the calculation he had used in second reading. Now does this indicate that construction machinery is going to be covered by the extension of the sales tax to production goods?

Hon. Mr. White: It has always been taxable.

Mr. Peacock: It has always been taxable; it just happened to creep in by error into his calculation last week.

Hon. Mr. White: No, it was not an error. This is the definition from DBS, and production equipment and machinery includes that particular class of equipment.

Incidentally, I must point out that I was talking for 35 or 45 minutes the other day. I had additional data that I could have used and did not use; some of it I will make available to the members today, and indeed I have.

If one takes out the construction machinery—which actually is not necessary, theoretically at any rate because, of course, it all ends up in the cost of the consumer products—then one ends up with a smaller impost per million dollars of sales. So, I think that I was correct in presenting the conservative series of figures to the House last week.

Mr. Peacock: Fine. Mr. Chairman, my reason for asking it was I was beginning to wonder just on what the Minister had based his calculation of receipts from this extension of the sales tax, the amount of $38 million. He used the word "net" a few moments ago in answering the member for Riverdale. Is the $38 million, in fact, the net proceeds after the offsets against corporation tax payable by the purchasers of these producer goods that he is now going to tax under The Retail Sales Tax Act? Or is it the gross amount that the retail taxpayers will be able to charge against the corporation income tax that they are liable for in future years?

Hon. Mr. White: The gross is $38 million and the net is $37 million, and the reason that corporation taxes will only decrease by one million dollars is because, of course, we only account for 12 of the 52 points of corporation tax and because the expense of the new tax will be written off over the life of the asset. I have used five years, but in point of fact it will be longer than that five years on average, I feel quite sure.

Mr. Peacock: The $38 million is extra revenue, then, for the province of Ontario?

Mr. Chairman: The member for Riverdale has moved that clause 10 of section 5 be deleted.

Those in favour of the motion will please say "aye"; those opposed will please say "nay".

In my opinion the "nays" have it.

Call in the members.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of the motion by the hon. member for Riverdale will please rise.

All those opposed to the motion will please rise.

Clerk: Mr. Chairman, the "ayes" are 33, the "nays" are 42.

Mr. Chairman: I declare the motion lost.

Section 5 agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Welch moves that the committee of the whole House rise and report certain bills without amendment, and beg for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of the whole House begs to report certain bills without amendment and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

THE SECURITIES ACT

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park) moves second reading of Bill 53, An Act to amend The Securities Act.

Mr. Shulman: The purpose of this bill is to require that companies in this province notify their shareholders when they make any significant change in their business or their affairs which could materially affect the value of those shares.

This bill is obviously necessary and it is going to be supported, I am sure, by all parties in this House. It is modelled on a bill that was passed in the United States in 1934, and it is quite a mystery to me why we in the Opposition have to be proposing such a bill, since the government has had 25 years' opportunity to bring in these regulations, and still has not done so.

To illustrate the necessity of such a bill I can mention companies extending all the way from penny dreadfuls like, Bunker Hill and Windfall, up to our best corporations, Canadian Breweries, Consolidated Dennison, Clairtone, and Windsor Raceways. In every one of these companies we have seen abuse by the directors of the power that they have as a result of being directors with a complete lack of attention to the rights of the shareholders. We have seen cases where the directors, for their own personal advantage, had deliberately withheld news until they could take personal profits, or prevent personal losses, before they gave their shareholders news which they had in their possession.

Last year we raised in this House, from the Opposition side—on a number of occasions, the question of Clairtone, which is an outstanding example of how unscrupulous management can take advantage of the shareholders.

In Clairtone hon. members may recall, last year, on July 8, the two entrepreneurs who had control of the company sold their stock at a very substantial price, a very high price. Exactly one month later, when they issued their report, they revealed that sales and earnings had dropped disastrously. The stock collapsed, and has never recovered. But, prior to releasing this news, these two men sold out all of their holdings, and they took a huge sum of money out of the market.

Outside of the shareholders who did not have the advantage of knowing this, who could have also sold, what about those poor people who happened to buy that stock, and who were literally robbed? That is the only word you can use, they were robbed by these men, because our legislation in this province is totally inadequate.

You do not have to go to Clairtone. One of the most successful companies in this province is Consolidated Dennison, and Consolidated Dennison, from the beginning to end, has been an embarrassment to the government, if the government can be embarrassed and unfortunately this is difficult.

Way back some years ago this was a penny dreadful, it was sold over the phone at 29 cents a share. To the amazement of everyone they struck a huge uranium deposit—and did the shareholders make money as a result of this? Unfortunately no, Mr. Speaker, because the people who were running the market at that time, thought—"well we do not want these shareholders making all this money, we'll just spoil them"—so they kept the news back. They went on the phones, and they bought back all this stock, or as much of it as they could get that they had sold over the phone to the public.

They bought it back at 50 cents and after they had bought it back they released the news. The stock ultimately rose to $70, and you would think with having made all of this money, having made the millions that they made, and these men made millions and millions that they would at least become honest with their wealth, but they have not, even yet.

I have the Toronto Daily Star of last August 9 here, and the heading is Lack of Detail on Profits of Dennison Mines. They have changed the name Consolidated Dennison to Dennison, and the article goes on to explain that the statement which they issued was a useless document; that is the word that is used here. One analyst called the Dennison statement "a useless document" because he said:

Unless some kind of profit breakdown is given, you are clueless. Even if they do not tell what investments were sold, they should break down profit sources, then at least we have an idea of the state of their mining operations.

So, after all these years they are still playing the same tricks. They are not letting their shareholders know what is going on.

If we pass this bill, this abuse would stop. If we had the legislation that any other western country has, any country in Europe or North America, this could not occur here. We have here the very worst, the most non-existent security legislation of any western country.

Through Windsor Raceways, we have heard a great deal from Earl Rowe our ex-Lieutenant-Governor in the paper recently. He is now involved in the racing business, and we see that he is unhappy with the people that control Windsor Raceways, because they marched into the board of directors meeting one day last year, and wanted to merge Windsor Raceways with a company that was owned by the president, which was not doing well. If the directors had agreed, they could have gone ahead and carried this out, and the shareholders would not have even known about it, until it was a fait accompli.

Windfall—we do not have to think back too far to Windfall. We have members in this House who were personally involved in that matter where a core was taken out of the mine, which at a casual glance was obviously of no value. And yet this news was held back from the public, and from the shareholders, for a significantly long time, while stock was sold and people were swindled.

Mr. Speaker, we need proper security legislation in this province.

I rose in the House last year, during the estimates, and I read at some length from a little book that I have here, called, "Timely Disclosures—the American Stock Exchange Experience". It showed how over the last 35 years, the United States has developed a proper system to protect the shareholders of their companies. As a result of this, the United States is probably the safest place in which to buy stock, you at least know you are going to get a fair shake. I say this here, if you buy Ontario stock, you are a sucker. This is why foreign money does not come here any more, because you do not get a fair shake, and it is because this government has not brought in proper legislation.

You do not know what the companies are going to do, whether it be the highest priced companies on the Toronto Stock Exchange, or whether it be the little "pennies", that trade over the counter. The directors run these companies for their own personal advantage, that do not care about shareholders, whether they are Canadian shareholders, or foreign shareholders.

This is why, across the United States, and in England, advisory service after advisory service says, "stay away from Canada—specifically stay away from British Columbia, but also stay away from Ontario, because you do not know what is doing. All you are doing is playing "craps", you are not investing."

Well what happened here last year, was that we in this party made a great plea to the government to wake up, to do something about this particular problem, and they moved as much as this government ever moves. I have here the Globe and Mail for October 1, 1968, and we see an announcement that the Toronto Stock Exchange, and the Ontario Securities Commission has set new guidelines for "timely disclosures" by firms. In effect they did everything we asked them, except that they did not make it into a law. They said, "Please, in future, would you please let your shareholders know what is going on, we would really appreciate it, it would be very nice of you and we do not want to push you too much, but these are guidelines, and we think it would be nice if you followed them". Why do they not put this into legislation?

The Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs (Mr. Rowntree), has it, in his power, within a day, to carry this out. He does not have to follow my Act; we have Acts drawn up from the SEC. I presented one of the 1934 Acts here a few months ago. The United States now has moved significantly further, we find now in the last few weeks, and I have here again, the Globe and Mail for last July. Now the New York Stock Exchange has gone significantly further. They have now required that any company that is listed on the New York exchange must notify their shareholders, not after something has been done but after a proposal has been made that has gone beyond the immediate insiders.

There, in addition to this, and of course tied together, they have proper insider laws which we do not have here. Here we have pious hopes, corruption and theft. It is honest theft, legal theft, you can do it quite properly by Ontario laws; you are not going to go to jail, but it is nothing short of theft. Outside of the individuals who get robbed, the bad thing about this is that we, everyone of us in Ontario, is being robbed because money—finances—are being forced out of this province. As a result we have the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) having to go over to Germany and borrow money there, in marks which ultimately he is going to have to pay back in marks at a revalued rate. Money is not coming into Ontario anymore and the reason it is not coming in is because of our bad security legislation.

I just have a few moments left, Mr. Speaker, and I would like to digress just for a moment to comment on this private members' hour.

There was an article in last week's Globe and Mail that called it a "farce" and that is what it is. We are talking to hear ourselves heard; nothing is going to happen.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is not the prerogative of the leader of this House, the Prime Minister or the leaders of any party, to make agreements which will take away our rights. It is your job to protect those rights and last week I raised a matter in this House as to votes in the private members' hour and I quoted suitable precedents. You replied to me that you hoped the motion would not be put again and that the leaders, in their wisdom, would work things out.

The leader of one of the parties is not prepared to work this out and I am now appealing to you, as the holder of our rights in this House. I am quite confident that this bill is going to receive the support of all three parties. I am quite confident if it was put to a vote it would pass unanimously in this House and, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I would just point out to the hon. member that in this debate he should be speaking to this bill and he is not now. He is speaking to a point of order which he raised some time ago, so perhaps he would come back to the subject matter of this bill.

Mr. Shulman: I am completing my remarks on this bill, sir, and in reference to the vote on this bill I wish to point out to you that there very well may be a motion put; I hope not today, but in subsequent days after you have time to consider the matter.

I am saying that we must have the right to vote on these bills. This is one of our rights. It is written down in the rules of the House and it is your duty to preserve our rights regardless of what party you come from. As such, sir, I am going to complete my remarks by appealing to you that not this week but next week, when this matter comes up again—and I assure you it will come up again—that you follow the rules of this House. Thank you, sir.

Mr. A. K. Meen (York East): Mr. Speaker, in rising to discuss the bill before us now I must say at the outset that the hon. member for High Park may be in for a bit of a surprise inasmuch as I do not propose to support his bill.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): That is a nice buttoniere the member has there.

Mr. Meen: Yes, speaking to the buttoniere, I might just observe that although I am Anglo-Saxon Protestant of English background, I happen to have been born on March 17 and I think I am entitled on that basis to wear this buttoniere.

Coming back, to the bill, Mr. Speaker, I noted with some interest that subsection 2 of his proposed section 129(a) details (a) through (g) almost word for word the statement of the commission policy of the Ontario Securities Commission issued in September jointly with the Toronto Stock Exchange.

Mr. Shulman: Exactly word for word.

Mr. Meen: No, with respect, Mr. Speaker, it is not exactly word for word but it is essentially word for word and it certainly conveys the same intent, except that it adds to it a one month period plus ten days for the disclosure of this information. And to whom does the bill say the disclosure would be made? It says it would be made to shareholders. I ask rhetorically, what about the public, for goodness sakes? It is the public who really need to know this, the proposed purchasers.

The hon. member referred to Clairtone and the deal-off on those shares. Well that disclosure was not made to the public. The shareholders already knew it and I would suggest that this bill would not have accomplished anything in this case.

Mr. Shulman: The shareholders certainly did not know it.

Mr. Meen: Furthermore, the one month period plus ten days would have permitted these insiders—short of the insider trading regulations being applicable to them—to deal these shares off in any event without being in breach of the Act.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Will the member move an amendment?

Mr. Meen: The hon. member mentioned also in his opening remarks that this bill is patterned after the United States Statute of 1934. The people in the States found that that statute per se was ineffective. It really did not do what they set out to accomplish. As he said, they set up a pattern of other regulations within which their trading must be conducted. And the setting up of their timely disclosure rules really accomplished the end they sought, not so much the bill they introduced and passed in 1934, which was abortive.

What I am suggesting now is that the timely disclosure rules, as promulgated in September of 1968, by the TSE and by the Ontario Securities Commission really accomplishes everything that the hon. member would want and, indeed, what we would all want. I do not quarrel with the intent—

Mr. Shulman: It is not a law; it is a pious wish.

Mr. Meen: I do not quarrel, Mr. Speaker, with the intent of either this bill or of the regulations now used and enforced by the securities commission. Indeed, they can enforce them. They can suspend dealings of the stock either temporarily or permanently. They can accomplish all kinds of—

Mr. Shulman: Does that get the shareholders' money back?

Mr. Meen: They can accomplish all kinds of control over a company by this method. If they are required to notify their shareholders as well, it seems to me that you are just adding another burden to the administrative lot of a company without accomplishing a comparable benefit. And any time you add a burden without a benefit you are being pretty foolish in the eyes of the law and of the public, for that matter too.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that it would impose a real and distinct danger if disclosure had to be made regardless, as this bill would so require. I can give the hon. member and the members of this House a good example of what could have happened if this Bill 53 had been law or if in the future it were to become law. There was a major Ontario company not long ago that had a coalfield out in B.C. It was a very large coalfield but they did not have a market for that coal and their stock was consequently trading at a rather low figure.

However, the directors of that company were able to negotiate a big deal with a foreign country. That foreign country, as it happened, was prepared to pay a better price to us here in Canada for that product than they were prepared to pay in another country in which they were negotiating a similar kind of deal.

One of the stipulations which they imposed in Ontario in making the contract with this country was that for a period of six months following the date of that contract there was to be no disclosure whatever to anyone; not to the shareholders, not to the public. And if there had been any sort of leak of that information, the deal was dead, and that company would have been right back in the doldrums. It would have continued without a contract because this foreign country needed six months in order to negotiate the deal in the other country.

So the directors of this company, realizing their dilemma, went to the Ontario Securities Commission, outlined the whole business and said to them, "What do we do? You have your insider trading rules; you tell us we must make disclosure because this is a very significant contract we have negotiated. It is obviously going to influence upwardly the value of our stock on the market?"

They were told that in the circumstances, since to disclose it would be to abrogate the entire contract, that they would be allowed to not disclose it. They were permitted to keep it as a secret among themselves on the understanding and on their undertaking that there would be no insider trading of that stock.

The stock exchange watched all of these tradings and they then watched the shares in that company very carefully during that period, in order to make sure that there was no trading by these people or by anyone to whom this information might be leaked. As it turned out—

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question on that point? Was the request made by a Canadian company as a result of the intervention of a foreign company for the purpose of taking over that Canadian company?

Mr. Meen: Mr. Speaker, the answer to that is no. This was a foreign company seeking to purchase only at market price a certain asset that this company had. They wanted to buy the coal. They were to get a contract to mine the coal and to ship it out to the designated shipping port of this particular country. I point out that this is, I think, a first class example of the inflexibility that a bill of this sort would impose. The securities commission would not have been able, in any way, to have given them authority to do otherwise. They would have had to disclose it according to the bill or whatever revisions that were made. And, of course, there would have been no deal; it would have been right back where it started.

As it turned out, they were able to keep this secret. The contract went ahead, and I understand that six-month period has now expired. There is a good example. The insiders made no profit. It is a good example of where tight control by the OSC and the Toronto Stock Exchange and the exercise of discretion by intelligent, experienced men can really accomplish something that would otherwise have been insurmountable.

I will not take too much longer, Mr. Speaker, because we are rather short of time, but one of the statements which is incorporated in the bulletin of September, 1968, by the OSC reads as follows:

The commission recognizes that there may be cases where disclosure might occasion harm to the company which might outweigh any possible damage to shareholders by withholding the information.

Where this arises, management should take every possible precaution to ensure that no trading whatsoever takes place by any insider or individual who are associated with the company and who may be in possession of the confidential information.

That is part of their statement; it is a very broad statement indeed.

And, apropos the release made last September, and to which the hon. member referred in his quotation from the Globe and Mail, I have here a quotation—and I will read, with your permission, Mr. Speaker, a part of it—from the New York Times, of October 2, in which they say:

The Ontario Securities Commission and the Toronto Stock Exchange declared today that investor-owned companies have an obligation to prevent "insiders" with confidential information about a company, from buying or selling its stock before the information is made public.

In Washington, David Ferber, solicitor for the Securities and Exchange Commission, said that that agency had no such requirement on its books now. Mr. Ferber, an expert on disclosure policy, called the new Canadian rule an interesting idea that might be worth looking into.

So, Mr. Speaker, in short, I feel that this bill introduced today for second reading is rather naive in its limited scope. It strikes me as being retrogressive. It goes back to the 1934 American Act which they found did not work. It is not progressive, and consequently I cannot support it today.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to commend the member for High Park for having brought forward this attempt at improving and correcting a situation which has been a very sad and serious weakness of the investment industry, that whereby insiders can steal from shareholders and the public, who do not have the information available to these insiders.

Unfortunately, the bill as it is drafted is, I am afraid, naive and is just going to impose another obstacle that those three per cent—who always try to find a way around any regulations—will surely find a way around. But it will just frustrate the 97 per cent who are responsible, who are looking towards their shareholders' best interest and who are trying to do a job that is constructive.

One of the points that has bothered me over the years is the fact that we have not really got to the root of the problem under which these insiders continue to steal and continue to get away with it. The penalties are a matter of a few days or a few months in prison, at the worst. In many cases there are fines which are not anything close to the money they have gained, whereas someone who has stolen money from a bank, who is no more of a criminal than these people, can often find himself behind the bars for not weeks, not months, but years for stealing a few hundred dollars.

I concur with the idea of disclosure, of actual changes in control, actual acquisition or disposal when firms have a firm deal and there is a firm deal or option on assets, an actual board approval of changes in stock split. But anyone who is familiar with the complicated negotiations which go on in any change in a corporation's structure, recognizes that all types of situations arise which will not be in the best interests of the shareholders to disclose.

And our principle here is to try to prevent stealing by insiders from the general public, the investing public and from the shareholders of companies. That is what we are after doing and we do not want to throw the baby out with the bathwater in any bills we bring in.

So I suggest we should look at the major problems we now have where they now arise. For example, I have indicated that the proposed changes in control of companies would be difficult for anyone to know. Who, for example, knew who would end up with control of Great West Life a few weeks ago? There are all sorts of surprise offers and moves for taking over companies and it is difficult to know the outcome of these offers.

They will cause wild gyrations in the market action. And a shareholder, and actually insiders, are often badly hurt by these rumoured changes in control. The same is true of proposed acquisitions and disposals. I know one company with which I was connected had in one year over 27 negotiations at various stages for every deal that we completed. If we had ever disclosed everything that we had entered and started to work on, there would have been absolute chaos.

It takes a long time to come to an agreement in principle even, and for boards to come to a point where they will approve in principle, subject to shareholders' concurrence. But in all of these cases, the problem was to be sure that there were no insiders using information to the disadvantage of the ordinary shareholder or the investing public.

On the matter of earnings projections, some managements are honestly very pessimistic in their outlook; they are very conservative. I know one executive whom I always discount—whose earnings will be considerably over that which he indicates to the general public when he discloses, because he is just naturally a conservative individual.

And I know of another merchandise official whose estimates I always discounted to a great deal on the low side because he was always proved to be very optimistic. This is not a matter of these men having any dishonest purpose. It is a matter of their basic characteristics. So I think any legislation that attempts to actually legislate, by regulation, these disclosures of a probable nature, are most dangerous and could be far worse than the illness they are trying to cure.

At the present time, in the United States, there is a form 8K, which requires that material facts be disclosed after they have taken place. It asks that these facts be disclosed within ten days of the month end. Sometimes, it could be forty days, virtually, after a significant event had taken place. The timely disclosure cannot be regulated, because it is such a matter of judgment. You cannot put into regulations what a magistrate can base his decisions upon. It is the timely disclosure that is the point that we are really after.

The value of a form 8K, similar to the SEC's form, is that it helps build up a file on the company's record, and that information, together with information that might come to light if something of a bad nature takes place, something of untoward nature in the way of bad market action, and suspicion of insider profiteering, that dossier that has been built up by the form 8K would be of some help, and it is a form that I think that our Ontario Securities Commission should adopt.

For, after all, insiders are now required to report their change in stock holding, and why not have at the same time, the report on the changes in material fact that have taken place within the company? It would be of some assistance in building up a record, but I would very much go against any regulation requiring that probable events be recorded.

A very significant move that I suggest the Ontario Securities Commission be given, which the Securities Exchange Commission now have, which I think would really help deal with this problem of insider profiteering, would be the right to take action against insiders when information indicates they have been profiteering at the expense of the investing public.

Now in the SEC case—because of a law in the States, they take action to take out an injunction against a firm repeating something they had already done that is wrong. And the courts have the right to impose penalties based upon that conviction or that injunction. That is what happened in the Texas Gulf case. But we in Canada have a different basis of law and a way of operation of our courts, and in this case I think it is important that legislation be brought in to give the Ontario Securities Commission the right and the responsibility of taking action on behalf of shareholders.

It is not feasible in our country in the relation between crime and lawyer, to expect an individual shareholder—even if he has 1,000 shares of a 1,000,000-share company—to take action on behalf of himself and the other shareholders to recover moneys that have been, in effect, stolen by insiders.

If a shareholder has 1,000 shares in a 1,000,000-share company and if it is $100,000 the insider has taken, it only means $100 to the shareholder who wants to sue. It just is not feasible. That is why, in our situation—where we do not have our lawyers, thank goodness, taking cuts with a client, or having deals with a client, for the success in any of these cases—where we have a situation that the Ontario Securities Commission be given the right and the responsibility of taking action where information is uncovered by the securities commission shows that insiders have made profits at the expense of the general public.

This is the way that I think we should be moving. Add to our disclosure form something similar to an 8K, but then add to the powers of the securities commission the responsibility of taking action on behalf of the shareholders who have suffered against the insiders. In this way we are not going to be frustrating the 97 per cent of responsible business leaders who are trying to help build our economic community on a sound and forward-looking basis, and we can frustrate and cause great concern among those three per cent who have been unscrupulous in the past. Mr. Speaker, I conclude by regretting that despite the good intentions of the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Shulman), I do not support his bill because of his naïve approach to the solution of the problem.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I take it from the remarks of the member for York Centre that he agrees with the principle of the bill introduced by my colleague from High Park, as it is set out in the first subsection of the bill, and he disagrees with some of the itemized particulars of what constitutes a material change.

Mr. Speaker, the first subsection provides that:

Where a material change or development occurs in the affairs of a corporation, the directors shall cause a notice giving the particulars of the change to be sent to each registered shareholder as soon as practicable, but not later than the tenth day of the month immediately following the month in which the change occurs.

If I understood the member for York Centre clearly, he is not in disagreement with the principles of it, but he does disagree with the enumeration of the changes or developments that are included within the ambit of the first subsection of the bill as listed in subsection 2.

I think I would like to come back to the remarks of the member for York Centre after I have endeavoured to deal with the member for York East, who I am sorry does not appear to be in his chair—oh, I see he is in the House.

The member for York East made the statement that The Securities Exchange Act of 1934, to which my colleague the member for High Park referred, was not an effective Act so far as requiring changes to be notified to investors in companies. I would simply like to point out to the member for York East that again, unless I misunderstood the import of his remarks, he could not have been more incorrect. To take the last part of the special study of the securities markets, which was carried out in the years leading up to 1963, and was without a doubt the most thorough-going study of the exchange markets in the United States that had taken place since the '30s. That report re-emphasized and restated the fundamental, essential necessity for disclosure as the basis on which investor protection could be achieved in the United States.

I would simply quote two very brief reports. The very form to which the member Disclosure is the cornerstone of federal securities regulations. It is the great safeguard that governs the conduct of corporate management in many of their activities. It is the best bulwark against reckless corporate publicity and irresponsible recommendation in the sale of securities.

And he goes on in the report to indicate that it seems strange in the United States that the very protections, which are available to listed securities, are not available to over-the-counter security holders.

He goes on then to say that investors in all exchange-listed securities are afforded protection both by statute and by rules of various of the exchanges. The Exchange Act requires full information about an issuer to be disclosed in a publicly filed application for registration before securities of the issuer may be issued for trading on an exchange, and requires the information to be kept current by subsequent periodic and current special reports. The very form to which the member for York Centre referred, form 8K, is the form that is designed under the provisions of The Securities Exchange Act of 1934 to be complied with by companies. For the member for York East to suggest that in some way or other in the United States they have departed from the statutory requirement of the filing of periodic reports where material changes have taken place is, as I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, simply incorrect.

I do not know the details of the particular case that the member for York East referred to, but I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that here is the fundamental problem in the securities legislation of the province of Ontario. We faced up to it in some degree after a series of financial disasters, which were about to destroy the financial markets in the province of Ontario. But there is still the hangover, the remnant of the view, that somehow or other public disclosure is unwise, that people somehow or other should not have information conveyed effectively to them about the companies in which they have invested their money or are about to invest their money. And I take that to include all persons who may be a part of what is called the public so far as securities law is concerned.

This is where the member for York Centre says very much the same thing. He said that somehow or other it is done for the protection of the investor, that he is not given information, and this is the old theory of the club that, yes, we know best, and that therefore in the fullness of time we will disclose to the shareholders and to other investors and to the public what we have done, because if we disclose it to them earlier than when we think best, it will be unwise. That was the substance and the point at which the member for York Centre and the member for York East agreed, because the group that was going to buy the particular asset in Canada—the coal mine to which he referred—was able, because of the lack of statutory requirement, to pull that kind of a game on the company from which they proposed to acquire the coal mine. Then the people from whom they were going to acquire the coal mine could go to the Ontario Securities Commission and start to play the game of the private club again.

That surely is what we have been about in the Legislature over a number of years—to get away from that private deal. I doubt if there is a lawyer in the House who has dealt with the securities commission in the earlier years following the war, who was not aware that in an appropriate situation, with responsible respected citizens of the community, you could go and have a cosy talk with the then chairman of the commission, Mr. Lennox, and he would say, "Oh, yes, in that case . . ."; and he would write you out, in his own hand, a little note saying, "Yes, you do not need to comply." We have come so far from that proposition that I am simply saying it is very discouraging to hear the member for York East and—in a rather more sophisticated way—the member for York Centre adhere still to the proposition that somewhere or other there should not be statutory requirement for full, plain and complete disclosure about investor affairs.

Now, I am quite prepared to argue the proposition as to whether something that is proposed is the kind of thing that should be disclosed or not. That is the problem for the directors; that is not the problem for you and I or anyone else to speculate about, because it is very clear that if the Act requires that there be a disclosure—a prompt disclosure, a timely disclosure—to the shareholders or the investing public or publicly made by any company about any material change or any material development in the affairs of that company, then it is up to the directors to scratch their heads as much as they want to come to the conclusion whether some event or some development requires them to comply. That is their obligation; not for you and I nor anyone else to speculate about the semantics of the particular event that may take place.

And it is strange that the member for York Centre and the member for York East used the same language. They talked about the bill of the hon. member for High Park being naïve. This is always the distinction that is made, that the public—the naïve, unwashed public from whom the money is derived that is going to be invested in these companies in some way or other—is not quite as sophisticated as the corporate managers in the society, and that the corporate managers are not only interested in making an effective profit, sometimes for themselves and sometimes for their companies, but they really had this obligation to protect the little guy in the public who is thinking that he should know about his company, to protect him against his own naïveté.

I simply get concerned about any regression in this assembly from the proposition that we have got to have full, true and plain disclosure. And if in any company, whether it is a listed company, a company which is traded in the market place, or whether it is a company which has secured money from the investment community by way of bonds, debentures or other forms of indebtedness, then this Legislature has got to impose a statutory obligation in clear, unmistakable terms, as The Securities and Exchange Act of 1934 does—and, as it was found in this special study, is still an effective provision—so that the directors of companies, the Ontario Securities Commission, the Toronto Stock Exchange, the investment dealers association, the broker-dealers association and all persons will understand that the principle is firmly established, not just in the special circumstances that are now outlined in our Securities Act, but that in all circumstances, if there is a material exchange or a material development in the affairs of a company, that the shareholders are entitled to know about it promptly. I take it from what my colleague, the member for High Park, said when he limited his bill to the shareholders, he was really saying that in that sense the information disclosed will go directly to the whole of the public.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. G. R. Carton (Armourdale): Mr. Speaker, this is the second time that I have been last up on the private members' hour, and I am going to request the next time that I get in a little early, because I find two things. I find (a) that I do not have much time; and (b) that mostly, everything has been said, but with a different connotation.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Sit down then!

Mr. Carton: No, Mr. Speaker, I am not sitting down. I would like to educate a few of the members, particularly on my side, because we are not used—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Carton: We are not used to these money matters. We are a working man's party.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Carton: And we are not like the sophisticated investors that are prominent in the New Democratic—I mean the Liberal Party.

Mr. Speaker, at the outset, I would like to point out, just by way of general remarks, that insider trading, timely disclosure, amalgamations and mergers, and conglomerate studies are all part and parcel of the same problem. The whole area is in a state of flux, and this includes the United States, it includes England, and it includes, of course, the Province of Ontario.

Mr. Shulman: But Ontario is fluxing much slower than everywhere else.

Mr. Carton: The proper disclosure, sir—and this is the crux of the matter—serves to supply investors and potential investors with information which was requisite to making a reasoned investment decision, and it helps to prevent or curtail the spread of rumours. It avoids the creation of unusual and often damaging market activity.

Without such a flow of corporate information, it is very doubtful that today's high level of public confidence in the securities markets, and broad ownership of stock would have occurred. Disclosure helps create the climate of growth and it follows, therefore, that it is in a corporation's vital self-interest to describe its operations meaningfully and accurately.

Confidence in the equity market is based on the availability of the best possible information on which to make reasoned investment decisions. And I would point out, sir, that the hon. member for York Centre carved the heart of Bill 53 which we are debating today. And notwithstanding the word of doctor Renwick, the heart has still not been put back.

You and I know, sir, that listing agreements refer to the release of specific items of information. But there are other numerous and varied corporate actions or developments not specifically dealt with, and with all due respect to the member for York Centre, I think that these are matters that should be brought to the attention of the investing public as quickly as possible. I am talking, for example, about new mineral or oil discoveries, new product developments, major technological breakthroughs, takeover bids, stock splits, merger negotiations, corporate acquisitions, and so on.

Also, Mr. Speaker, bad news should be disclosed just as promptly and as fully as good news. To withhold adverse news is most damaging to shareholder relations and the public's regard for listed securities.

As I mentioned earlier, corporate disclosure and insider trading are closely related. The doctrine that insiders cannot trade on inside information has its roots in the common law of the 19th century, although needless to say it was not too well developed.

What is insider information? Suffice to say it is an extraordinary and rare piece of information; they type of information which, if generally known, would have an immediate and a substantial impact on the price of a companies security.

The subject of timely disclosure of corporate information has presently taken on a new dimension in the United States. This is because of the Texas Gulf case and because of the Meyer Levinskies and the securities "crap" rolling.

This section 10(b) 5 that was mentioned here is strictly a fraud rule. My understanding of the Texas Gulf case, and the majority opinion, is that this case extends this fraud rule even further; to the effect that it still applies even where the company and insiders are not buying or selling securities.

Now, as I said, sir, this is a fraud rule. But the main thing is that this rule, even in the United States, does not provide a precise guide in making decisions about disclosure. In other words, the Texas Gulf case illuminates the problem, but it does not provide any guidance whatever.

When should the information be disclosed? What information should be disclosed, as the hon. member for Riverdale pointed out. This is a question of judgment which the corporation itself must exercise to see that shareholders and investors are promptly informed. It is simple to say that the policy should be based on the premise that all companies should disclose as quickly as possible news about corporate developments. Yet there are situations where "timely disclosure" becomes untimely, as for example in merger negotiations.

Timely disclosure benefits everyone—the public, the listed companies and the auction market—for two main reasons, and this is the crux of the matter. Timely disclosure works in the world of real time. Corporate developments are disclosed at the time of, or shortly after, the happening not, as proposed in Bill 53, on the 10th of the month following.

Second, timely disclosure requires prompt dissemination of information through the news media so that all investors are placed on an equal footing, not just the shareholders.

I will not take the time, sir, to go into the policy guidelines of the Toronto Stock Exchange and the Ontario Securities Commission. The hon. member for High Park has mentioned, and it was borne out by the member for York East, that the wording of Bill 53 was taken almost verbatim from the September 1968 Ontario Securities Commission policy release.

But what I would like to point out is that there has been to date a tendency to talk about disclosure problems in abstract and legalistic terms, without getting into the area of the more difficult operational problems. They are not routine problems by any stretch of the imagination, and frequently today there are many questions that are asked and there are no ready answers from the exchanges and the commissions.

Incidentally, as I understand it in England there is no legislation on this particular matter. They have certain codes that are looked after by the banks in London, but there is no legislation. And as I understand it, if the exchanges and the commissions, which are the pulse of this whole thing, continually review their rules, if they continually look at their policies relating to disclosure, if they continually look at their listing agreements with the whole objective—and this is today's debate, the meat of it—with the whole objective of developing new principles and practices through responsible self regulatory actions rather than through government action as suggested by the introduction of Bill 53, a solution is possible.

There are questions to be identified and answered concerning proper disclosure, questions which are puzzling corporate management, lawyers, analysts and others. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, my training comes to the forefront here, because the tendency of legal counsel is to become cautious. And where you are cautious there is less likelihood of jumping into dangerous waters; and this is particularly true when matters are in a state of uncertainty. There is some confusion, there are some doubts; and in the minds of those who are experts in this field it will be many months and perhaps years before clear cut, legal guidance on corporate disclosures can be fully determined. In the meantime, corporate life must go on.

There is presently an educational process taking place in the administration of the timely disclosure policies of the OSC and Toronto Stock Exchange. They are trying to help the companies gain an understanding of and sensitivity to their disclosure obligations, while at the same time developing techniques in handling these difficult situations.

In my humble opinion sir, in closing, the marketplace is the most sensitive barometer. It will disclose any unusual activity triggered by corporate information leaks; and events having an immediate and significant effect on the marketplace should be administered by the Toronto Stock Exchange and by the Ontario Securities Commission, where proximity to the market and sensitivity to its needs permit them to act quickly and flexibly. And if need be, Mr. Speaker, as mentioned by the member for York East, the iron fist of the velvet glove can be brought to bear quite forcibly.

Succinctly, sir, I oppose Bill 53, which means legislation, in favour of my foregoing arguments, which mean education.

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will return to the order paper to deal with some legislation, and then carry on with the estimates.

Hon. Mr. Welch moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6.00 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, MARCH 18, 1969

The House met at 2.30 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: This afternoon we are very pleased to have a great many visitors. In the east gallery we have the York North Progressive Conservative group; and in the west gallery, the 1st and 2nd Guide Company from Alliston and students from Ukrainian School of Queen Olga in St. Catharines.

In order that we might be aware of our visitors tonight, because we are going to have many visitors tonight, we are going to have the Queen City Chapter of Eastern Star in Toronto, the York Centre Young Liberal Association and constituents from Scarborough North riding with us at the evening session tonight.

Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Mr. Meen, from the standing private bills committee, presented the committee's 11th report, which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee begs to report the following bills without amendment:

Bill Pr31, An Act respecting the county of Welland.

Bill Pr35, An Act respecting the University of Windsor.

Your committee begs to report the following bills with certain amendments:

Bill Pr16, An Act respecting the borough of East York.

Bill Pr33, An Act respecting the city of Windsor.

Your committee would recommend that the following bill be not reported:

Bill Pr36, An Act respecting the city of Ottawa.

Your committee recommends that the time for presenting reports by the committee be extended to Thursday, March 27, 1969.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I wonder if I might draw your attention to the fact that we have another group of visitors.

Mr. Speaker: The other group will be suitably introduced at another time.

Mr. MacDonald: Fine!

Mr. Speaker: The honour of introducing them is given to the Minister under whose aegis they are here.

Presenting reports.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE CONSERVATION AUTHORITIES ACT, 1968

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Conservation Authorities Act, 1968.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister just explain briefly the intent of the bill?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, they are just minor amendments, just housekeeping; we are changing three sections. I think when the bill is presented the members will see they are very minor changes.

THE HOSPITAL LABOUR DISPUTES ARBITRATION ACT, 1965

Hon. D. A. Bales (Minister of Labour) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Hospital Disputes Arbitration Act, 1965.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Speaker, The Hospital Labour Disputes Arbitration Act was first passed in 1965, and we now seek approval for changes, which are essentially designed to complement or strengthen the original intention of this legislation.

First, the definition of hospital will be expanded to include nursing homes.

Second, recent developments have indicated the need to include central power, laundry or heating plants for hospitals within the definition of "hospitals," for the purpose of compulsory arbitration.

Finally, the 35-day waiting period between the end of the conciliation process and the appointment of a board of arbitration would be reduced to seven days.

THE ONTARIO HERITAGE FOUNDATION ACT, 1967

Hon. J. A. C. Auld (Minister of Tourism and Information) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Ontario Heritage Foundation Act, 1967.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, the object of the amendments is to broaden the objects of the foundation to include property of recreational, aesthetic or scenic interest, as well as historic or architectural interest. Another change to subsection 2—it is complementary to subsection 1—permits support by the foundation of projects of organizations having other principal functions than that of the foundation.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food has a statement.

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): Mr. Speaker, in the interests of clarification and in view of the telegrams over the signature of the Ontario Humane Society directed to members of this Legislature, I should like to document the sequence of events which led up to a meeting which is called for Wednesday, March 19.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is making a point of order.

Mr. Sopha: There is at least one question from this side of the House about this, to your knowledge, and I submit that question ought to be put to indicate the interest of this party.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member who placed the question will at the appropriate time be given the opportunity to place the question. At the moment, the hon. Minister is making a statement. If by chance he answers the question at this time, then he can refer to that when the question is put.

Mr. Sopha: On a point of order, I want to submit to you that within the rules of the House it is perfectly proper for a member of this side of the House, before the orders of the day, to indicate that he has directed a question to this Minister. I want to say that within the rules of order, in my view it is very presumptuous of this Minister to get up at your behest—

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): He is trying to jump the gun.

Mr. Sopha:—and to begin to make a statement when he is fully aware that an hon. member on this side of the House has directed a question to him on the matter that is germane to that statement.

Mr. Speaker: It would appear to me that both the hon. member who has placed the question and the hon. member who has raised the point of order should be happy enough to have their question answered, that they would not quarrel with the method used for answering.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Let me finish.

Mr. Sopha: Cut out the lectures.

Mr. Speaker: Did I hear correctly? I hope I did not. The Speaker's position here is one where he must endeavour to maintain order and an even hand. And that is what the Speaker has been trying to do. The hon. Minister is quite entitled to make a statement with respect to his department and the questioner has every right to ask his question.

It would be obvious to any of us here in the House that the hon. member who asked it was interested, and his interest will be shown. It will not be cut down, so far as I can see, by any statement which is read by the Minister. The Minister can then either answer the question, as I have mentioned, or suggest that it had been answered by his statement. The hon. Minister has the floor to continue with his statement.

Mr. Sopha: Well, let the dognapper go on.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, if I may begin again. In the interests of clarification and in view of telegrams over the signature of the Ontario Humane Society directed today to the members of the Legislature, I should like to document the sequence of events which led up to a meeting we have called for Wednesday, March 19, with the independent humane societies and SPCAs that are affiliated with the Ontario Humane Society.

As the members of this Legislature will recall, on Wednesday, February 19, 1969, I introduced Bill 73, An Act to Regulate the Procurement and to Provide for the Welfare of Animals Used in Teaching and Research.

The following Thursday, February 27, a meeting was convened in the Cabinet office, 2nd floor of this building, for the purpose of discussion with members of the executive of the Ontario Humane Society relative to Bills 73 and 74. This meeting lasted two and a half hours, and was attended by Mr. Basil Capes, president of the Ontario Humane Society; Dr. Scollard, a member of the board of the Ontario Humane Society; Mr. Russell Payton, Q.C., honorary solicitor and member of the board; and Mr. Michael Spearing, the society's solicitor. Joining me as representatives of this government were the Attorney General and Minister of Justice (Mr. Wishart), and the Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond). We were attended by Mr. Everett Biggs, Deputy Minister of Agriculture and Food; Dr. K. McDermid, associate director of our veterinary services branch; Mr. John McMurchy, of our legal branch, and Mr. R. W. Carbert, associate director of information.

Mr. Sopha: The other side was outnumbered there.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: We had a very useful and informative meeting, during which the Ontario Humane Society officials set forth their specific objections to these bills, and proposed suggested amendments. But at no time did the president of the Ontario Humane Society suggest the bills be withdrawn.

Following this meeting, I received at my office, letters from several of the affiliated humane societies across this province expressing a desire to meet with me and present their opinion and suggestions. For example, I quote from a letter of March 4, over the signature of D. M. Egner, president of the London Humane Society:

We should be very glad to have the opportunity of discussing these serious problems with you at any time.

And I quote again from a letter dated March 7 from Mr. A. Ignatieff, president of the Ottawa Humane Society, which is, I understand, the oldest such society in Canada, dating back to 1888:

We have prepared a brief and I am asking that you grant the society an opportunity to appear before you to present our views.

From a letter dated February 27, 1969, over the signature of Mrs. Alice Summerville, of the Toronto Humane Society:

We certainly would appreciate the opportunity to make representations to you and anything you can do to assist us will be very much appreciated.

After having received these requests it became quite clear that it would be impractical and impossible for us to meet separately with each of the affiliated societies, and so in telephone conversations with these persons it was suggested that a meeting be scheduled as soon as possible to enable these affiliates to present their views on the proposed legislation. They agreed.

We therefore, on Friday, March 14, made plans for such a meeting to be held in committee room M2-59-1, in the MacDonald Block at 2.30 p.m., tomorrow, Wednesday, March 19, 1969. Mr. Robert Carbert, our associate director of information called the president of each of the affiliated organizations, or in their absence the secretary, on Friday afternoon, informing them of the meeting and asking them to delegate two or three of their senior elected representatives to attend on behalf of their organizations. On Monday, Mr. Carbert confirmed these arrangements by wiring to each of these affiliated societies as follows:

A MEETING OF ELECTED REPRESENTATIVES AFFILIATED SOCIETIES SPCA, TORONTO, WEDNESDAY, MARCH 19, 2.30 P.M., MACDONALD BLOCK, QUEEN'S PARK EAST, FOR THE PURPOSE OF DISCUSSING BILLS 73 AND 74. ATTENDANCE OF TWO OR THREE OF YOUR SENIOR ELECTED REPRESENTATIVES DESIRED.

(signed) Wm. A. Stewart

I can assure the House that this meeting was organized in good faith for the purpose of affording these affiliated societies an opportunity to meet with us and express their opinions on the proposed legislation—Bills 73 and 74.

On Saturday night, March 15, at 10.00 p.m. I had a long distance telephone call at my home from Mr. Basil Capes, president of the Ontario Humane Society, asking why the Ontario Humane Society and its branches had not been invited to the meeting.

Mr. Sopha: That was a good question.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Indeed it was. I explained to Mr. Capes that his organization had been the very first that we had consulted with after the introduction of the legislation, and we had been given to understand that he and the members of his board of directors were representing the Ontario Humane Society in that useful and productive meeting, which had been held on February 27. However, I pointed out to him that we had called this second meeting at the request of some of the affiliated societies. And I might add, Mr. Speaker, that I had many requests from other societies other than those to whom I referred specifically in these comments.

When I arrived in my office on Monday morning at 8.00 a.m., I was surprised to learn that efforts had been made over the weekend to organize a boycott of this meeting. In conversations with at least two of the affiliated organizations, a telegram was read to us, which had been sent from the office of the Ontario Humane Society on Friday afternoon, at approximately the same time as our associate director of information was telephoning the affiliates informing them of the meeting. I read a transcript of that wire as it was dictated to us:

ONTARIO HUMANE SOCIETY AND ITS BRANCHES HAVE NOT BEEN INVITED, REPEAT HAVE NOT BEEN INVITED, TO ATTEND THE MEETING CALLED BY THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE FOR WEDNESDAY, MARCH 19. WE FEEL THIS IS A DELIBERATE AND OBVIOUS ATTEMPT TO DIVIDE THE HUMANE MOVEMENT AND TO CREATE INTERNAL DISSENTION AND WEAKNESS. WOULD YOU BE WILLING, IF OPINION IS UNANIMOUS, TO BOYCOTT THE MEETING? ALTERNATIVELY WOULD YOU AGREE TO ONLY ATTEND THE MEETING PROVIDING REPRESENTATIVES OF THE ONTARIO HUMANE SOCIETY AND ITS BRANCHES ARE PRESENT?

(signed) Basil Capes

However, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Capes had not advised me in his telephone call of Saturday evening that he had sent this telegram the day previous. On Monday, we received one wire, from the secretary of the South Waterloo Humane Society, signed by Mrs. E. Harris:

REQUEST YOUR REPLY BY RETURN IF POSSIBLE WHY DELEGATES OF ONTARIO HUMANE SOCIETY AND BRANCHES NOT INVITED TO MEETING WITH YOU ON MARCH 19.

We replied to this wire as follows:

MARCH 19 MEETING CALLED AS A RESULT OF REQUESTS FROM SEVERAL AFFILIATES WHO WISH AN AUDIENCE WITH THE MINISTER. HAVE EARLIER MET WITH THE PRESIDENT AND EXECUTIVE OFFICERS OF THE ONTARIO HUMANE SOCIETY.

(signed) Wm. A. Stewart

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Until this morning, this has been our sole communication relative to this meeting, which will continue as scheduled.

Today in the mail I received a form letter dated March 17, on letterhead of the Ontario Humane Society, and over the signature of the general manager, Mr. T. I. Hughes. In his letter, Mr. Hughes says—and I quote:

Even now, no attempt has been made by any government department to meet with this society to discuss the details of Bill 73 and to hear any proposals we might have for solving the problem without seriously weakening and ultimately destroying the humane movement in Ontario as we now know it. Indeed, as you now know from a telegram you received a few hours ago, the Minister of Agriculture continues to disregard our views by deliberately excluding the Ontario Humane Society from a meeting with our affiliated societies to discuss Bill 73.

Mr. Hughes writes this paragraph despite the fact that no less than three Cabinet Ministers met for two and a half hours with the president and senior elected officers of the Ontario Humane Society in the cabinet room on Thursday afternoon, February 27, and I can table the notes that were made at that meeting.

However, it is not my intention to become involved in a debate with Mr. Hughes over his interpretation of our intent in calling this meeting. I merely want the members of this Legislature to know that we place a great deal of value on the opinions of those officers who are elected by the members of the more than 20 independent affiliated humane societies and SPCAs across the province. Having discussed the matter fully with the Ontario Humane Society, we now wish to hear the opinions of these other organizations who have asked to be heard which is their democratic right.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, may I enquire—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Wentworth, on a point of order?

Mr. Deans: No, Mr. Speaker, may I enquire, by way of clarification, whether or not the Minister intends now to invite the Ontario Humane Society to be present since that was the question I had before the Minister at this time?

Mr. Speaker: Well if that is the question the hon. member has, then he will ask it at the appropriate time.

Mr. Deans: Well, that was not exactly the question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has said that is the question he had, so that when the appropriate time comes, he may ask that question.

Mr. Deans: I cannot ask that question. I do not have that question before the House, and I want to know whether or not they are going to be invited.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour has guests.

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Speaker, a study team representing the General Council of Trade Unions of Japan has been touring the United States and Canada and is present in the Speaker's gallery today. They are accompanied by Mr. Klein and Mr. White of the United Automobile Workers office, which has arranged the tour. I would, Mr. Speaker, with your permission, ask the representatives of the General Council of Trade Unions to rise so that the members of the House might welcome them.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Correctional Services has a statement.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce the appointment of Dr. Abgan Lynch as a member of the Training Schools Advisory Board effective April 1, 1969.

She will fill the vacancy that will occur with the retirement of Dr. John Martin Bennett, MA, PhD, who has served on this board with great distinction for 27 years, including two and a half years as its chairman. Dr. Bennett served The Department of Education of Ontario as a school inspector for 42 years. He is a member of the Toronto Public Libraries Board and has served on the Training Schools Advisory Board since 1942.

I would like publicly to pay tribute to Dr. Bennett for his outstanding service to the people of this province, the training school wards and this department.

Dr. Lynch has the following degrees: BA from Manhattanville College, New York; MA from the University of Toronto; LMS from the Pontifical Institute of Medieval Studies, and a PhD in philosophy from the University of Toronto. Dr. Lynch is a lecturer in medical ethics at St. Joseph's Hospital School of Nursing, St. Michael's Hospital School of Nursing and the Quo Vadis School of Nursing. She also lectures in philosophy at the University of St. Michael's College.

Dr. Lynch is a member of the National YWCA committee on membership and Christian emphasis. In the past she has served as chairman of education for the Catholic Women's League of Canada, Toronto archdiocese. She has also served on the provincial executive of the Girl Guides of Canada and as president of the Ursuline Parents Guild.

Doctor Lynch is married to Professor Lawrence E. Lynch, PhD., also of the University of St. Michael's College. They have three daughters and three sons. We are delighted, Mr. Speaker, that Doctor Lynch has accepted this appointment. With her background and varied interests, she will make a valuable contribution to the important work of this board.

The Training Schools Advisory Board, established in accordance with The Training Schools Act, reviews the progress of students in training schools and on placement in the community and makes recommendations to the Minister regarding transfer, placement and termination of wardship. The advisory board inspects the training schools annually and makes recommendations to the Minister with respect to the welfare of the students.

Mr. Speaker: Before the hon. member for York South places his questions today, I would like to advise the hon. member for Timiskaming that I have had a reply from the Minister of Labour stating that in connection with question 904, which was placed by the hon. member with the Minister of Energy and Resources Management and transferred by him to the Minister of Labour, that the Minister of Labour has looked into the question and it does not come within his departmental responsibilities.

I can only suggest to the hon. member that perhaps he might, if he wishes, consult with me or with the House leader and ascertain to whom this question should be directed, because I must confess I have no advice to give him on the matter.

Mr. D. Jackson (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to consult with you, but I would like to point out that the question will no longer be pertinent by the time that department makes up its mind. I might also add, Mr. Speaker, that maybe this is what they want.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South.

Mr. MacDonald: I have a question of the Attorney General.

1. Has the Attorney General received representations from individuals and organizations in Oshawa with regard to the Sunday operations of a groceteria called Sunnybrook Farms, on Simcoe Street?

2. Is it the Attorney General's intention to lay charges under The Lord's Day Act or to take any other action in light of these representations?

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Justice and Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, I received one request for consent to prosecute in November of last year to which I consented, and the procedure is under way. I understand that the hearing will be March 21 on that particular case.

One was received recently, to which I have also consented and that procedure is under way. I do not know the date when the hearing will be but both have been consented to and prosecutions are going forward.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Is the Minister going to prosecute all the grocery stores that remain open on Sunday?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wentworth has question 935 addressed to the Minister of Agriculture and Food, which perhaps he would now place.

Mr. Deans: I can see little purpose, Mr. Speaker, in asking a question he has already answered. I would like to ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member would ask his question and then he will be entitled to ask a supplementary.

Mr. Deans: Has the Ontario Humane Society been invited to attend the meeting on March 19 to discuss Bill 73? If not, why not? I know they have not; I know why not. Will you now invite them?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Is there another question on this same thing?

Mr. Speaker: Yes, there is another one from the hon. member for Algoma-Manitoulin (Mr. Farquhar).

Mr. Sopha: Is this not noblesse oblige?

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): I do not know, that is French.

Mr. Sopha: There is another question.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Normally Mr. Speaker notices that. The two questions were together, and I apologize to the Opposition members for not noticing it.

Mr. S. Farquhar (Algoma-Manitoulin): Mr. Speaker, there is no point in reading the question—the answer has been given to the extent that the Minister intends to answer.

Mr. Sopha: With presumptuous arrogance.

Mr. Farquhar: I simply would like to know, however, why he just does not invite the people who want to come. In spite of the detailed answer I got, I would just simply like to know why not.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well Mr. Speaker, despite my hon. friend from Sudbury's suggestion that I do not know what that statement meant, he meant I am not that well educated to know the meaning of those big words. But I can say this, that I appreciate his interest in the matter.

Mr. Sopha: I am on the side of the dogs. Is the Minister?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Very much so, very much so.

Mr. Sopha: How about his pal, the Attorney General. Is he?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Very much so — unequivocally. That is where we stand. But let me say, Mr. Speaker, that the question that was asked me—the question that was on my desk standing in the name of the member for Algoma-Manitoulin—is not quite the same as the question that was asked by the member for Wentworth. I wonder if I might read that question with his permission, or perhaps he would like to read it himself, because it has a different meaning, Mr. Speaker, than that other question, but I thought I might deal with both of them if the hon. members so desired.

Mr. Farquhar: Fine. Is the Minister aware that the board of directors of the Ontario Humane Society has been delegated to represent the humane movement in Ontario in negotiating amendments to Bills 73 and 74, and has the government invited a representative of the board of directors to the meeting that has been called to discuss the legislation on March 19, and if not, why not?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, in reply to both these questions I would say this: Yesterday morning when I learned that an attempt had been made to boycott the meeting which had been requested by the affiliated humane societies themselves, I had some of our staff try to contact the president of the association. His answering service, I believe, told us that he would not be available for the rest of the week.

So knowing the chairman of the board of the Ontario Humane Society, Mr. G. D. Jefferson, I called him at London and asked him if he was aware of this action that had been taken. He said he was not. He was not even aware that we were having this meeting. I told him that we were having the meeting and why it had been called and who was invited, and the reasons for the meeting being held.

I asked him if, in his opinion as chairman of the board of directors of the Ontario Humane Society, he would agree with the action that I had taken, and he said, "absolutely—you have done the right thing—and I would support you in what you have done."

Now I feel, quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, that the affiliated organizations having asked to come, in and meet with us personally, we should afford them this opportunity and this is what we have intended to do. But I want to again stress, as I did previously, that the first group with whom we met were the elected officials of the Ontario Humane Society.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question—a friendly one? Is this an open meeting?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No, this is not an open meeting.

Mr. Sopha: It is an audience, he appears on the balcony.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member for Essex-Kent has a question of this Minister.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Mr. Speaker, a question to the Minister of Agriculture and Food, Is the Minister aware that the Ontario Milk Marketing Board is promoting and selling group insurance through a special agent calling on producers? Is the Minister of the opinion that a marketing board should be selling insurance for a profit-making organization?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, in answer to that question, I am not positively aware that this is the case; however if the hon.

member says it is, it must be, however, if this is a decision reached by the Ontario Milk Marketing Board then I think it is their business to so carry on that business as they see fit.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Timiskaming has a question for the Minister of Energy and Resources Management.

Mr. Jackson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy and Resources Management. Is it correct that Ontario Hydro management are holding parties and giving dinners for the supervisory personnel for their activities during the strike situation? If so, does the Minister think that this is a proper expenditure of public funds?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, in some locations meetings are being held to explain to management staff the terms of settlement of the recent strike. Where these meetings are being held in the evening outside of normal working hours, dinner is being provided.

The answer to the second part: Of course Hydro is not spending public funds as there are no moneys voted by this legislation for the daily operation of Hydro. As far as this question is concerned—do I think that this is a proper expenditure of public funds—it is not public funds as I have said. It seems to me that this a good method of meeting with your personnel, especially if they are busy and you are trying to get a message across to them. I think this is something that is followed by business whether it be large or small I cannot see anything wrong with it unless it is overdone.

Mr. Jackson: On a point of clarification, Mr. Speaker, the Minister says this not public funds. Is his department not responsible for the operation of the Ontario Hydro and as such is he not responsible for the spending of public funds?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. member does not know this but we have nothing to do with the day to day operation of Ontario Hydro, nor has this Legislature.

Mr. Sargent: That is the trouble, no responsibility.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: There is only one vote here and that is for rural lines in the northern and northwestern part of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Windsor West has a question of the Minister of Trade and Development.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Trade and Development.

What is the number of family and senior citizens units under development for the Windsor area which are awaiting loan approvals by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, Ottawa?

For what period of time have the applications for loan approval been in the hands of CMHC?

What efforts has the Minister been making to obtain approval of these loan applications?

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member's question. No family and senior citizens developments for the Windsor area are currently awaiting loan approval by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. The last approval was for 400 senior citizens units and this was obtained on December 10, 1968. The corporation's latest family housing development of 200 units has not yet been sent to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for loan approval in view of the fact that some design revisions were required.

Mr. Peacock: Mr. Speaker, by way of a supplementary, could I ask the Minister generally, in respect to the applications which are in front of CMHC, what efforts has he been making to pry them loose?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We have been in touch with Ottawa almost on a daily basis and I learned yesterday that several million dollars worth of projects will be released very shortly. As soon as I get them I will be very glad to advise the House.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

The energy Minister made a statement to the House that he could not answer for Hydro. Now, why are we paying the member for Muskoka (Mr. Boyer) $10,000 a year, and giving him a black limousine to drive around in, if he cannot—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has no point of order.

Mr. Sargent: Well, why can he not answer Hydro questions in the House?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has no point of order. The questions are answered by the ministry, and—

Mr. Sargent: I am asking the Speaker why he cannot?

Mr. Speaker: I am pointing out to the hon. member that the questions are addressed to and answered by the ministry, and the hon. member for Muskoka is not a member of the ministry.

Mr. Sargent: He does not have to report?

Mr. Speaker: The Ontario Hydro reports, so far as reports are necessary, to this Legislature, through the Minister of Energy and Resources Management, who is the Minister who has been answering the questions.

Mr. Sargent: He just said he could not answer for the Hydro.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I did answer the question.

Mr. Sargent: I am asking you, Mr. Speaker, respectfully, why you cannot rule that the Minister for the Hydro can speak for the Hydro in the House?

Mr. Speaker: I have pointed out to the hon. member that the Minister for Hydro, as he puts it, is the Minister who has been making the answers.

The hon. member for Cochrane South has a question of the Minister of Trade and Development.

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Has the OHC received a petition from the town of Timmins requesting the construction of the approved 40 senior citizen units to proceed on a proposal basis so that tenders can be called for the construction of these units, and the necessary land can be acquired?

Is OHC prepared to cooperate with the town of Timmins in this way, in order that the existing need for that type of housing can be met as quickly as possible?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member's question. The town of Timmins passed a resolution on January 15, requesting 40 senior citizen units. Since that time Ontario Housing Corporation has been investigating the availability of suitable sites. As adequate sites could not be readily optioned, the corporation has decided, after discussion with the mayor and officials of Timmins, to advertise a builders' proposal call on March 20. In this way, the need should be met as quickly as possible, and I firmly believe that this is one way we are going to get the units into production.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Oxford has a question from yesterday of the Minister of Highways.

Mr. G. W. Innes (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Highways:

Will the Minister comment on the report in the Daily Sentinel Review of Thursday, March 13, 1969, to the effect that a spur national highway will be built from Highway 401 at Kitchener, due west to a point half a mile south of Sarnia, to link up with a U.S. highway terminating at Port Huron, Michigan?

Hon. G. E. Gomme (Minister of Highways): Mr. Speaker, before I answer this question, I think I should read an extract from the newspaper the member is quoting from. I do not read it the same way as he does. The report from Woodstock Thursday quoted William J. Pierce, communications director for Detroit Edison Company, as saying that he has been invited to discuss the proposed highway with federal government officials in Ottawa.

Mr. Pierce told the Record today he had been misunderstood by reporters during an interview in Woodstock. He said he had been invited to Ottawa not to meet with government officials, but to meet with Harold Danforth, Conservative member for Kent-Essex. The proposed highway he was talking about in Woodstock was simply a proposal by his company, and Mr. Danforth has expressed interest in discussing it.

Now, the report referred to by the hon. member is not inconsistent with the service which will be provided by Highway 402 linking up with Highway 401 and thence easterly.

However, absolutely no contact to The Department of Highways has been made by anyone from Michigan.

The Department of Highways of Ontario, of course, is responsible for the planning and construction of provincial highways. The report implies that this responsibility might be that of the federal government agency. I would also draw to the attention of the hon. member that no discussions have been entered into by any agency of the federal government with The Ontario Department of Highways regarding the feasibility of the route suggested.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wentworth has a question from yesterday of this Minister.

Mr. Deans: Yes, thank you, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Highways:

Has any decision been reached with regard to the Niagara escarpment scenic drive proposal, which was made to the department last June as a result of a feasibility study?

Hon. Mr. Gomme: Mr. Speaker, this proposal is being studied by a number of government departments, since they have some responsibility in this regard. A report is being provided to Cabinet, and I would imagine a decision will be forthcoming in the future from the office of the Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough East has a question from yesterday of the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that three Metro boroughs, including Scarborough, have expressed an interest in dispensing with their respective boards of control, will the Minister explain why it would be too late for such a move to take place, as he was reported to have said, according to the Globe and Mail of Wednesday, March 12?

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer is very simple. The last date for filing petitions for private bills was January 31.

Mr. T. Reid: If the Minister would accept a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Does not The Municipal Act, section 201 (2), provide for dispensing with the board of control, and therefore would it not be the Minister's opinion that any motion passed by council with a two-thirds majority may then dispense with the board of control of that municipality, requiring no change in The Municipal Act?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Yes, any council could go to the municipal board under that section at any time to dispense with the board of control, but there is no authority in The Municipal Act to set up an executive committee.

Mr. T. Reid: If at this time, Mr. Speaker, the Minister could clarify section 151, part 1 of Bill 11, which states that,

On and after the 1st of January, 1967, the council of each area or municipality shall be composed of (a) a mayor, (b) a board of control, if at any time the area or municipality has such a board.

Is this section not permissive rather than directive? In other words, is it not permissive, allowing the area or municipality to pass a bill to set up their council as described? And, assuming it to be permissive, would the Minister not agree then that no private Act would be needed to change this section?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Well, I would agree with the member's supplementary statement.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Health. I know he is not here, but for your information, sir, I would like to draw to your attention a typographical error in my question. It is pertinent to the substance. The second last word in the first question, in the second line—"last" should be substituted for "this," making it "this year."

Mr. Speaker: I am advised that we have some further visitors under the west Speaker's gallery. They are members of the 1st Mitchell Land Rangers. I am sure we are pleased to see them here this afternoon too.

Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The 22nd order, committee of the whole House; Mr. A. E. Reuter in the chair.

THE RETAIL SALES TAX ACT, 1960-1961

House in committee on Bill 79, An Act to amend The Retail Sales Tax Act, 1960-1961.

Mr. Chairman: We had passed section 5.

Sections 6 to 31, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill 79 reported.

THE HOSPITAL TAX ACT

House in committee on Bill 80, An Act to repeal The Hospital Tax Act.

Sections 1 to 3, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill 80 reported.

Hon. Mr. Welch moves the committee of the whole House rise and report certain bills without amendments and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of the whole House begs to report certain bills without amendments and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Clerk of the House: The 27th order, House in committee of supply; Mr. A. E. Reuter in the chair.

ESTIMATES, THE DEPARTMENT OF CORRECTIONAL SERVICES (Continued)

On vote 402.

Mr. Chairman: When we adjourned the committee proceedings at the last sitting, we were dealing with vote 402 and we were still on the general discussion of provincial jails, reformatories, etc.

The hon. member for High Park.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): Mr. Chairman, you may recall that we were discussing the individual jails in the province and one that was mentioned was the Alex G. Brown Institute. There was some question as to whether or not marijuana addicts were being sent to the institute for training, retraining, or unaddicting.

The Minister assured me at that time this is not the case. So I thought I would visit the Alex G. Brown clinic over the weekend. I paid my little visit there, and the Minister, I am sorry to say, is not correct. At the present time, I understand there are nine inmates there of whom four or five are actual true addicts; the others are marijuana smokers who have also taken other drugs.

I find that there have been, as the Minister stated, people sent there who took marijuana only, and no other drugs. If I could have a pageboy I will send the name of one of these people across to the Minister and he can confirm it himself. I am sending the Minister the name of one young lad who was sent in error, I hope, to the clinic a few months ago.

I can well understand that errors can occur, and I ask the Minister that he take steps in future to make certain that boys—and this is really a very serious problem—who are just smoking marijuana are not sent there. I had some opportunity on Sunday to talk to the correctional officers at the Alex G. Brown clinic, and they agreed with me that putting a lad like this in, the one whose name I have just given the Minister, is very bad.

They get in with heroin addicts and learn more serious forms of addiction; they are going to learn those particular tricks. And I would ask the Minister to ensure that in future this type of thing does not occur again. I hope he will give me such assurance.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Mr. Chairman, all I can say is, as far as my knowledge is concerned, and the knowledge of my Deputy who is in front of me, this is not the policy and does not occur. However, the hon. member has given me the name of someone. It may well be he is being treated for some other addiction. We will find this out and I will let the hon. member know.

Mr. Shulman: He is not being treated at the present time, he has been released.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I will find this out.

Mr. Shulman: I would like to go on to another matter, Mr. Chairman. I spoke at some length the other day about the problems of visiting in the institutions and the incorrect attitude of the Minister, in my opinion, towards the importance of this matter. There are a number of other minor irritations which are not nearly as important overall, but which are very important to the inmates concerned.

As an example of this, I would like to bring up the matter of dentists. On December 30, I received a letter from an inmate at Monteith, a Mr. W. S., who was having serious difficulty with his teeth and his gums. He had made numerous requests to see a dentist. Perhaps the simple thing would be to just read his letter:

Dear Mr. Shulman:

I am writing you a few lines to see if you could possibly do something for me about my teeth. I have seen a doctor and a nurse here about this problem, but according to the doctor in his diagnosis my symptoms are said to be pyorrhea. I have requested to see a dentist but I have no result at all. As a matter of fact, they told me no. I am doing a long term, two years as a matter of fact. I came in here in good health and I hope to get out of here the same way.

I would appreciate it very much if you could help to get me to see a dentist, because my face is very sore and I can't eat because my teeth and my gums are always bleeding.

Thank you very much for your time. I would appreciate it very much if you would answer this letter.

I answered him and I wrote the Minister asking—I did not think it was unreasonable—that the man be allowed to see a dentist.

This was not allowed. The Minister wrote back to me on January 14 that the case had been thoroughly investigated. I quote:

The medical officer at the institution examined this man on December 6 and diagnosed his condition as a mild case of pyorrhea gingivitis. The medical officer and our director of medical services are convinced that his condition will respond if the inmate follows the necessary directions.

Yours sincerely,
Allan Grossman.

It appears to be not unreasonable, Mr. Chairman, that institutions of this type should have the services of a dentist available. When an inmate develops a problem where he cannot eat and where his gums are bleeding, surely it is not an unreasonable request to allow a dentist to see him. If there is not a dentist available full time, as I can well understand, surely there is a dentist available within the area who works for the department and who can be brought in and can see the man.

So I raise this case now. It is obviously too late for this man, but for cases in the future surely you are not running such an inhumane place that when a man is in pain and sick you cannot arrange to have the proper specialist see him, whether it is a dentist, as in this case or whether it is a specialist in some other field in other cases. I have other cases if the Minister wishes, would he care to make any comment?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Did the hon. member read the letter?

Mr. Shulman: My letter or your letter?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: My letter to the hon. member.

Mr. Shulman: It is dated January 14, 1969, and marked confidential:

Dear Dr. Shulman:

On December 30, you wrote to me regarding a letter you had received from a W. S., an inmate of the industrial farm, Monteith, in which Mr. S. asked for your assistance in ensuring that he obtains the services of a dentist. This case has been thoroughly investigated. A medical officer at the institution examined this man on December 6 and diagnosed his condition as a mild case of pyorrhea gingivitis. The medical officer and our director of medical services are convinced that his condition will respond if the inmate follows the necessary instructions.

Yours sincerely,
Allan Grossman.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, what objection does the hon. member have to this reply?

Mr. Shulman: He still has not seen a dentist. You had your GP see him again, and he had seen him before. He had not seen a dentist. He has a dental problem. That is my objection.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Dr. Hutchison, in front of me, tells me that this is a medical problem.

Mr. Shulman: If pyorrhea is a medical problem, as a medical doctor I am very surprised. I know of no doctor who treats pyorrhea.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, the report I have here from the superintendent says this inmate was admitted to the industrial farm, Monteith, on transfer from the reformatory in Millbrook on November 29, 1968. He was medically examined on December 2, 1968, by Dr. C. D. R. Haskins, our medical officer, at which time he made no mention relevant to his teeth.

On December 6, he appeared on sick parade and was examined by Dr. H. B. Hall, who diagnosed his complaint as mild pyorrhea gingivitis with moderate gum retraction, as he failed to clean them adequately. At that time, Dr. Hall prescribed that our subject should undertake gentle brushing with RX Amosan after every meal. On December 9, 1968, he appeared on my interviews asking for a special letter to write to Dr. Shulman stating this suggested treatment was no good. The superintendent's report said:

I am enclosing copies of this inmate's medical report while at the Ontario Reformatory, in Millbrook.

It was signed Dr. D. B. Griggs, superintendent.

I must tell the hon. member that this is another one of those inmates who is a chronic complainer. No matter what you do for him, apparently, he is not satisfied; he likes to create problems by writing letters to people about how he is getting no attention.

All I can tell the hon. member is that, we have a medical practitioner there and the medical practitioner felt that this was the proper way to deal with it and that is the way it was dealt with.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, I took the trouble to phone one of the leading dentists in this city after this incident occurred, to find out what the proper treatment was for this condition. He advised me that if someone is having bleeding from the gums and if there is pain, as described in this letter here, the proper treatment is not at all what was prescribed. The proper treatment is packing of the gums, which is a treatment that cannot be done by a doctor.

It is a special treatment taught to dentists in school. I do not really object to the fact that the man had another treatment prescribed at first. What I do object to is that the man complained by writing to a member of this House, the member then wrote to the Minister and the Minister still refused to allow the man to see a dentist. As far as I know, his condition is still the same.

Surely in a condition like this it is not an unreasonable request, whether it comes to you from the family or the man or from a member of this House. If a member of this House asks you to let one of your unwilling guests see a dentist, you should be willing to let him see a dentist. It is as simple as that.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, it is not quite as simple as that. The hon. member knows perfectly well, as he is by no means unintelligent, that we have thousands of inmates who, if they felt all they have to do is ask for a doctor or dentist to come into the institution, they would do it. It would be impossible to handle. Many of them merely do it to create problems.

All I can tell him is that the doctor at Monteith made this judgment. I am not a medical man. I have to have confidence in the medical doctor who is at the institution. All the hon. member is saying is that the doctor at Monteith is incompetent. Now, I will write—

Mr. Shulman: Oh, my goodness, I did not say that.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Of course, the hon. member is suggesting that when an inmate tells me he is not satisfied with the kind of treatment he is getting from a medical doctor at one of the institutions, I should immediately override the advice of that medical doctor and say, "I do not have confidence in your opinion; someone has raised the question that this man should have an outside doctor or dentist. They do not agree with your prognosis; get somebody on the outside." Every day in the week I would be going over the head of a medical doctor at the institution, and I cannot do that.

The hon. member has, in fact, questioned the competence of this doctor to give a diagnosis in this case. So I will bring it to the attention of the doctor at Monteith and raise the questions which the hon. member for High Park has raised. I will say he disagrees with him and perhaps let him get in touch with the hon. member for High Park. Between them the two medical men can come to some conclusion.

I do not know how else you can run an institution—a department with 82 institutions. You have to have some confidence in somebody, and I am not in a position to contradict the opinion of the medical doctor on the premises.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Do you get a mechanic to plaster a wall?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, but I take the advice of the plasterers as to whether it needs plastering.

Mr. Martel: That is right! And you would get a dentist, would you not, to look at a man's teeth?

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mr. Shulman: First of all, Mr. Chairman, before we let the Minister get that on the record, I have not questioned the competence of the doctor at Monteith. Let us get that quite clear. All I am saying is that he is not a dentist.

I am sure every other doctor cannot be correct all the time. Because a doctor may make an error in diagnosis or may make—

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Once in a while.

Mr. Shulman: —or may make an error occasionally in treatment, it does not mean he is incompetent. I am not questioning the doctor at Monteith. I know nothing whatever of his competence. I do know that this prisoner needs a dentist. For some reason, which I cannot understand, the Minister is standing up on his hind heels saying we will not let him see a dentist, because if we let him see a dentist we are saying we do not have confidence in our doctor.

What nonsense. Surely we expect from the Minister who, we believe, is not unintelligent.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 402?

The hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, I realize that the member for High Park is very knowledgeable about this whole affair and I do think we owe him a lot. But I think this is an area where the uninformed people should have the chance to ask questions about their ridings insofar as penal reform and institutions are concerned. I have a few short things I would like to get across to the Minister.

We have this submission of the report of the Minister of Correctional Services, 1968. This is the bible, as it were, of the goings-on of that department. And if the veracity of the information here is no better than the Minister's dialogue with me over the years, Mr. Chairman—insofar as what he is going to do about regional jails—then I do not believe we can believe a word that is in this book. Because repeatedly he has been telling me, as a representative of the Grey-Bruce area, that he is going to do something about our jail conditions in our area. And I was in the jail Saturday and Sunday in Owen Sound—

An hon. member: Careful, Eddie.

Mr. Sargent: I was there as a guest.

An hon. member: A non-paying guest?

Mr. Sargent: As a guest. As a member of Parliament, I had a chance to make free entry and free exit.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We do not charge anybody.

An hon. member: That is important, free exit!

Mr. Sargent: And again, Mr. Chairman, I want to bring this matter before the House sometime—to shame the Minister into doing something about the jail we have there. There are 34 or 35 institutions like it across the province which are now provincial jails under his jurisdiction. They were built over 100 years ago and are giving the same punitive treatment today. In 1969 when we hope to put a man on the moon we are still treating people the same way, Mr. Chairman, as we did a hundred years ago. Every night these chaps go to bed at eight o'clock in a dark cell, 38 inches wide, eight feet long, and are kept there until six o'clock in the morning.

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): What does the member want, the Royal York Hotel?

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, the Minister should be jailed sometime to appreciate this.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Perhaps we should throw the cops in jail and put the convicts up at the Royal York.

Mr. Sargent: No, no, just a moment.

Mr. Martel: Sure, that just shows the integrity of that Minister.

Mr. Sargent: I think this is a shocking situation. They have a cot there with no mattress on it. All they have is a sanitary pot, in complete darkness, until six o'clock in the morning. They are locked up from eight o'clock at night. For ten hours they are locked up in the dark with nothing to read; they cannot talk, they cannot communicate.

Any normal person would tend to be mentally unstable after spending time in that institution. Repeatedly I asked the Minister what is going to be done about it, and he said we are going to take them over and build regional jails. I do not think the people who run these jails have a very nice set-up, having to deal with these conditions. I think it is a shocking situation, and a good example of how this government thinks.

I wanted to interview these prisoners yesterday, Mr. Chairman, and all the time I was there a guard stood by me and would not let me talk to the prisoner alone. So I interviewed about 12 prisoners and each time they stood by me. I asked the individual in the jail how things were going and if he had any beefs, and he winked at me—because when the guards were standing there he could not tell me the truth. So I got the governor to come up and I said, "What is going on here?" and he said "I cannot allow you to talk to the men alone without a guard being there." So how are we to find out exactly what is on the prisoner's mind?

There is one chap in there for 66 days. He has not been on trial, he cannot get bail. This is the Ontario government in 1969. So I repeatedly ask the Minister, what is going to be done about it? He guaranteed me six years ago in this very House that immediate plans were in hand to correct this.

Mr. Chairman, we have 35 such institutions across Ontario identical to that in Owen Sound. I think it is a shocking thing to have the Minister lead us on and say something is going to be done about it and nothing is being done about it. I will sit down for a moment and give the Minister a chance to answer.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member had been here the other night I would not have had to repeat this, although I suppose I would have to anyway because I repeated it last year. We just took over the jails in July, 1968. We pointed out that it was our intention to replace all of the old jails eventually. We also pointed out that it was impossible, it was unfair, to expect the taxpayers to have them all replaced within a very short period of time—overnight or in a year or two.

We have plans for regional detention centres, some of which are going to replace two and three and four old jails. We announced a priority programme. We announced the Quinte regional detention centre; if it has not gone to second tender yet, it is going momentarily. We did not like the cost of the first one and some changes had to be made in view of the work release programme we had in mind.

We pointed out that there were five which were going to get priority. Grey-Bruce is not one of them, because even though Grey-Bruce is, as he said, a pretty shocking place, so are most of the other 34 or 35 and some of them are in worse condition. I might tell the hon. member that priority is given to those, having regard to the condition and the number of prisoners they have to handle. These were the priorities which were set up.

I also announced that in the meantime we were going to take care of repairs, renovations and equipment in the other jails which it appeared were not going to be replaced within a reasonable length of time. And this is precisely what we have proceeded to do—Grey-Bruce, in fact, is one of those jails—and most if them either have had renovations done or are having them done at the present time.

Mr. Sargent: Oh, come on!

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If the hon. member would just contain himself, I will read him the list. Completed since December 31, 1967: Install shelving and floor tile clothing room, install stair treads, repair jail roof and drains, install—

Mr. Sargent: Will the Minister accept a question at this point?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, if the hon. member cannot wait—

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member has directed numerous questions to the hon. Minister, who is attempting to answer them now. Perhaps he will wait until the Minister has answered those questions.

Mr. Sargent: At this point it is very important I ask a question.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am sure it will be just as important if the hon. member will wait a minute.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Why does the Minister not let him ask it?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Install window screens, renovate the medical office, install tile floor chapel and admitting room. Equipment purchases and installation since December 31, 1967: Kitchen equipment—assorted handtools, etc., laundry equipment, maintenance equipment—floor polisher, etc., medical equipment. Inmate supplies, clothing, playing cards, etc., security equipment, office equipment and staff supplies.

Approved and ordered but not yet received as of this date—in other words, there is money in the estimates which has been approved previously and these have been on order—corridor—cell equipment, beds and mattresses, office equipment, more laundry equipment—a washer and dryer, kitchen equipment—electric stove, and other maintenance supplies.

That, I certainly think, Mr. Chairman, is evidence that we are doing what we can across this province, having regard for the fact that we took over all of these old jails in one fell swoop and I am sure the taxpayer can understand that we have to do this within reason, having regard for how much money is available. There are renovations being made in these jails right across the province and plans are well advanced for some of them to be replaced.

Now, the other matter which the hon. member has raised, and which I will answer if he likes, is about his visit to the institution. Would he like me to answer that now or does he have another one in connection with equipment?

Mr. Sargent: I would like to ask these questions now, Mr. Chairman. I am not talking about renovations, I am not talking about tile floors or floor polishers, I am talking about the principle of the punitive approach you have today in these institutions. Bearing in mind that some of the people in those places now are not guilty, they are in there before they are proven guilty, but you treat them like criminals in that they are held in these dungeon-like cells until they come to trial.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What would the hon. member suggest we do?

Mr. Sargent: I suggest that you take away those small, little narrow boxes they cannot sit around in, give them mattresses on their beds and give them decent plumbing and let them have some light so they can live like human beings.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I just told the hon. member that this is precisely the thing we are doing. He mentioned beds and mattresses; I told him that these were on order.

Mr. Sargent: The Minister told me this six years ago, the same old nonsense.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is not true, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, I tell you that it is true.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If the hon. member will get Hansard and read to me any statement I made of that nature I will be glad to apologize.

Mr. Sargent: That the whole matter was in hand; that it would be fixed up.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I was not the Minister six years ago and we did not even have any plans for taking over the jails six years ago. We just took them over in July of 1968.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, I know the Minister has a trying job in that department when the government will not give him the funds, but he should not say things unless he can back them up.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I will back up everything I say.

Mr. Sargent: He says it is unfair to taxpayers. Are these people not taxpayers? Is it not unfair to taxpayers that you are spending $15 million for lush offices for yourselves? Do you worry about floor polishers or toilets or your operations in here?

These people are human beings and the Minister says it is unfair to the taxpayers, but you spend $15 million for your lush set-up here and you call this democracy. I think it is time, Mr. Chairman, that the Minister got a more humane approach and visited those jails and spent a week there himself sometime.

Mr. Sopha: He is the man who has two offices, you know.

Mr. Sargent: Two lush offices, right.

Mr. G. A. Kerr (Halton West): Did the member visit the jail when he was mayor of Owen Sound?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Would the hon. member like to answer the question that was interjected? When the hon. member was mayor of that city, when it was under his control, what did he do for it? He did not put a dime into it. Why did he not when he was mayor?

Mr. Sargent: Thank you very much. As members probably know, it was a combined city and county jail.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, why did you not spend some money on it?

Mr. Sargent: We did, we took it over and we started to spend money on it. Being a municipality, we had no money and I came in here and I said this to the Minister, and he said, "Don't worry, we are going to build a regional jail."

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The hon. member did not give a damn what was happening to the inmates in that institution, and the only time they have been getting any attention is since the province took them over. Now they are getting some attention. And now that this province has taken them over you want us to go out and spend $200 million overnight, and you know that is impossible.

We are doing everything possible to give them a humane place to stay in, and we are doing everything possible to see that it is done as soon as possible, having regard for the money available. That is all I can tell the hon. member.

Mr. Sargent: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. The Minister has said that I do not give a damn about the people in those institutions.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I said you did not while you were there.

Mr. Sargent: Even though the institutions were taken over by the province as little as two years ago, and four years ago Hansard will show that the Minister promised us—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In July of 1968.

Mr. Sargent: No, no, Mr. Chairman, it is a matter of record that he kept telling us six years ago that this thing would be corrected, and the situation is still the same today and it will be the same ten years from now if we listen and believe this Minister.

Now I have never found the Minister unfair, but when he says I do not give a damn for these people, he is completely wrong—and every member of this House knows that is wrong.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes, but you would not put your money where your mouth is when you were mayor.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, I am saying very honestly we did not have the money. We had a tough time—we had to put in a sewage system.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is why we took over from you—so we could do it, and we are doing it.

Mr. Sargent: When?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We are doing it now.

Mr. Sargent: You are not doing it now.

Mr. Sopha: After they are in office 24 years.

Mr. Chairman: On vote 402?

Mr. Sargent: I am still speaking on this vote, Mr. Chairman. I am talking about the treatment of these jails.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member asked me another question. Will he give me a chance to answer it?

Mr. Sargent: Before you forget it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes, because I am writing down the questions and I cannot answer more than two or three at a time. He mentioned something about going into the institution—and this is the thing I am upset about more than anything else—the attempt being made to create the impression, by two or three members of this Legislature, that we carry out some sort of a Gestapo system in our institutions; that when the hon. member goes in we will not let him speak to any of the inmates.

I will ask him this—

Mr. Sargent: Alone!

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Alone, yes. I know what he is referring to. It is the policy of the department that nobody goes into the corridors unescorted, and that applies to me as well. When the Minister went into these institutions—

Mr. Sargent: I can believe that of you.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If the hon. member will just wait I will explain why. There is a great danger involved.

Mr. Sargent: You are taking your life in your hands.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There is a great danger involved and I will tell the hon. member that sometimes he may be taking his life in his hands if he goes into those corridors alone. I will also tell him there have been instances when prominent visitors—like the member for Grey-Bruce—have been used as hostages, which created a riot.

Mr. Sargent: Name one!

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Of course there have been. Let me ask the hon. member this—was he not offered by the governor of that jail the opportunity to interview any inmate in the governor's office; to go into that office and lock himself in with any inmate he wanted to talk to privately, but he would not allow him to go into the corridors unescorted, for his own safety? Was he given this offer by the governor?

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Was this reported immediately after this visit?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes, it was reported immediately after, and this is precisely the reason why I mentioned that the other day. So that when a member gets up in the House and makes such an accusation the Minister is in a position to find out what in the world did happen.

He told me today he was not allowed to interview any prisoner by himself. Is it not just as well that the governor is in a position to say, "He objected to this but I offered him my own office in which to interview the prisoner by himself." Is there anything wrong with the Minister being advised so that he can give an answer immediately?

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, in this way I cannot answer the Minister's question, because when I came down to the governor's office there was a heated exchange, as you will understand. He said, in fact, "You could use that desk there, and I could stand here, and you could interview the prisoner over there". I said, "I mean in private." It was Jim Stanton. He is doing a damn good job, and I have no complaint against the operation. I am complaining about the overall policy of the punitive approach.

I asked the guard, "These questions I ask the prisoner, will the governor question you afterwards?" And he said, "Yes, he will; he will question me about what you asked the prisoner".

Now I ask you, what chance—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Did the governor agree to that? And do you prefer to believe the inmate or the governor?

Mr. Sargent: The guard admitted to that. The guard said, "If the governor asks me what you asked the prisoner I have to tell him".

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If the governor would ask the guard that—

Mr. Sargent: He said the governor would ask him and the guard admitted to this. We are not getting any place because you have got your hackles up and you are not going to do a thing, anyway. We used to have a train in Owen Sound that was always late. So instead of running by a clock they put a calendar up. Give this to the Minister please. It is a calendar; he can wear it on his wrist watch. That is how far he is behind the times.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Is the name of one of your companies on it?

Mr. Sargent: No, that is a free ride. We have on page 90 of this report the number of inmates remaining in custody as of March 31, 1968—2,916.

Mr. Sopha: It leads the way in Canada.

Mr. Sargent: We lead the way in Canada. And we have a total staff here of 3,553, and we have 2,916 people in custody. Now that is a pretty healthy, efficient operation you are running there. It is one and a half staff per person remaining in custody.

Mr. Sopha: We have twice as many in jail as in the province of Quebec. The population is one-fifth more.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, for the information of the hon. member, he is referring to the number who are in reformatories, and he is referring to the staff which is covering reformatories, jails and training schools, which is entirely different.

Mr. Sargent: I am referring to page 90—number in custody in all operations.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, that is male and female institutions. Those people as per the time of this report, are in reformatories only.

Mr. Sargent: How many employees do you have? Is this right, 3,500 employees?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, let us get the full picture on the record. As of March 9, 1969, we had in our reformatories, industrial farms and training centres, clinics, female institutions and on parole, a total of 3,820.

We had in the training schools—

Mr. Sargent: Where is that in the report?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It is in the report; you will find it in the training school section. We had in the training schools as of March 9, this year, 1,434 and 2,125 on placement. I have not even referred to the jails here. I do not have a list of the jails. At this particular time, the jails themselves must take about 800 employees, because we took over about 800 employees when we took over the jails. So the hon. member is getting his figures confused.

Mr. Sargent: Then what is the ratio of staff to inmates?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It would depend upon the institution.

Mr. Sargent: I am asking overall.

Mr. Sopha: It is one and a half to one.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Hardly that. About 1 to 3, I am told, overall.

Mr. Sargent: That is one employee to 3 inmates.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: So that the hon. member will not fall into a trap, he must remember that we have to have three 8-hour shifts—24-hour duty.

Mr. Sargent: Finally, a young chap came to me. He had been released from one of your institutions; he had no money and he had the old trouble of getting a job because everybody knew he was an ex-con of one of your institutions. I asked him what he was trained for and he said he was trained to sew. That is all he was trained to when he went out into life after two years in one of your colleges.

Mr. MacDonald: We need good tailors.

Mr. Sargent: And I find other chaps who are trained to make licence plates. We do not have too many of these institutions around, where you go to get a job to make plates. You have a monopoly on the licence plate deal. And the tailors pretty well cannot use these chaps. I have this fellow's name on file, and I will give it to you. But you will have some answers for that one, too. He is a special case—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Does the hon. member want me to answer it for him?

Mr. Sargent: I do not know.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Hamilton East.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): Mr. Chairman, regarding this vote we are speaking on now—rehabilitation for adult offenders—the total amount to be spent is $32,721,000. It is a lot of money and it is a worthy expenditure. The Minister, a few hundred words back, answering the member for Grey-Bruce, impressed me in that a lot of work had been done in making improvements in the brick and mortar aspects of our institutions.

That was the start of the hon. member's complaint. I want to get back to this question of medical treatment for the adult offenders in the institutions. The member for High Park said in his opening remarks that this Minister has done a good job in his department over the years. But it is hard to see this, because the province—and I think we have to admit it—is far behind in up-to-date practices and treatments. But I have to admit, also, that a good job has been done.

But sometimes the attitude of the Minister makes me wonder. It is under some pressure that his impressions are given and he might not realize it. When he made the statement on the specific case related by the member for High Park that this was one of those chronic beefers, that you have those in the institutions, who long to write letters every day and make complaints, I would think those are the type of people that we have to give our attention to if we are going to carry out the main intent of this expenditure—rehabilitation of adult offenders.

If they are not given the kind of treatment in there, in regard to the future rehabilitation when they come out, it is not going to work. I am going to put it in this sense. The hon. member for High Park gave a specific case. I want to ask the question as to whether the inmates have a complete medical when they go in, including dental and otherwise, and if they have periodic dental inspection.

Everyone knows, in attempting to look after themselves physically, that dental care is one of the most important as far as their physical being goes. I go to my specialist twice a year, and it is a costly affair. He tells me each time that I had better smarten up because my gums are a little bit deteriorated, and if I do not keep up the treatment I am going to have trouble. To get back to the point I am trying to make, and that is the attitude of the Minister towards a person he would class as a chronic "beef", one that wants to write letters every day and to everyone he can think of. And those are the people, I think, we should give the attention to. I think they have got to be made to understand that if they want to write a letter every day with a grievance, that grievance should be looked at and should be paid attention to if we are going to bring them out of there with some feeling that there is someone that cares and that they are going to be prepared to take the future treatment under parole, or whatever we have in the future.

I do not think that the Minister should say that the kind we are happy with are those that are subdued and timid and withdrawn; that just sit there and accept their part in life. They alone are not the kind we are really concerned with. Those people have to be pulled out and made to understand that there is something different in this life for them. Those that beef every day, have got nothing else to do I would assume, other than the usual routine; they have got to have an understanding.

I think that every letter they want to write and every grievance they have got should be listened to, if we are going to carry out the programme that is set out in this large expenditure. I do not like the Minister's attitude that they are chronic beefers. I think we have to set up someone in the institution to listen to the chronic beeper. So that by the time he is ready to come out he has an understanding that, well, my beefing has got to someone and I now understand that there are some differences.

Now if we go on to the after-care of adult offenders and the amount of money that we are expending in hand-outs to the Salvation Army, John Howard Society, Elizabeth Fry and so on, that is not enough money in my opinion. Sometime or other we have to take a realistic look at the contribution we make to those groups. We have to tie that in with the job that is being done inside the institution, with that being done outside the institution and it has to be a joint programme closely related so that the overall expenditure does show some results in the long run.

So, as a main question, do the inmates get a regular dental inspection, on admission and periodically while they are in there, so that they feel they have some attention being given to them in regard to an important element of their health?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, I must tell the hon. member that they do not get dental inspection when they come in at every institution. I must also tell the hon. member that we do not have full-time medical men at every institution, either. That is one of our problems. Whether, if we could have a dentist at each institution, we should, is another matter. I am not too sure we should. Every person is examined by a medical man when he comes into an institution. If there is anything indicated that needs some attention which cannot be had in the institution, someone is brought in or the inmate is sent out. We have often taken inmates to a hospital, or brought in other doctors when it was indicated.

I must tell the hon. member, in referring to a particular situation at Monteith, that I think perhaps if I had a long time to think about it, I would not have expressed myself in the way I did about the man being a chronic complainer, because it could give the wrong impression. I must tell the hon. member too, I must admit that it is very difficult, sometimes, not to become cynical about these things.

The kind of person I am talking about, I should say, the chronic complainer, we have files and files and files on them and, of course, we would like to help them. We would like to help them become different persons so that they would not have these complaints, but there is only so much you can do in one day. When there are members who will accept the complaint just on the face of it and start a lot of correspondence going, there is a lot of time and energy expended on something which, apparently has been gone into before on numerous occasions with no very great degree of success.

As far as, Monteith is concerned, I am advised that the inmates are screened through the medical office because the dentist in the district, that is at Iroquois Falls, asked for this. He says he is too busy to see everybody. He is just too busy to see everybody and he wants it done the way it is done. He wants the doctor to look at the inmate, and if it is the doctor's view that he needs a dentist that is the time to get in touch with him.

Now, in this case it was the doctor's view that he did not need a dentist, and that does not mean that I am callous regarding any person's needs in the institution. The fact is I am in the position of saying that the doctor in the institution says he does not need to see a dentist.

Now if I only had that, or ten or 15 others, at any one time to deal with, I could deal with them and even then perhaps take a chance and say, "well, doctor, look at this again," "look at another one again," and perhaps I might ask the doctor to make an exception of this. But the hon. member must appreciate that I am dealing with thousands of inmates, thousands of them, right across the province. All some of them have to find out, is that all they have to do is write a letter of this nature, particularly if it is to a member of the Legislature, and in order for me to satisfy that member of the Legislature, I go over the doctor's head. This would not help, either for the discipline or for the rehabilitation in the institution.

The point I am making, perhaps not too well, is that I have to have confidence in somebody, and in medical matters I have to have confidence in the doctor at the institution. It will have to be a very serious matter before I take it upon myself to go over the head of the doctor, and, quite frankly, this is not the kind of case that seemed to be so terribly serious that I should go over the head of the doctor. It is the sort of thing that I think a doctor can give an opinion on. Now, if the hon. member for High Park does not think so, if he does not think the doctor should have given his opinion, then once again I repeat, it is a matter between two doctors.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, I did not say the doctor should not give his opinion. What I said was, that the Minister received what appeared to be a legitimate complaint and he should have had a dentist see the man. Do not change the words I said, please, Mr. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, Mr. Chairman, all I can say is, I receive all sorts of letters like this.

Mr. Shulman: Well, you should pay attention to them.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I do pay attention to them, but after a while you just make up your mind it is impossible, it is just impossible to call in a dentist or a doctor or to order other medication, merely because an inmate feels he wants it or needs it. You have got to take the advice of the medical man who is in charge of the institution and that is what we did in this case.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, first of all let me say that it is not often I disagree with the member for Hamilton East. But I must disagree with him on one thing. I do not think this Minister is doing a good job and if I gave that impression in my speech—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I wondered whether you would let that pass.

Mr. Shulman: If I gave that impression in my speech, I certainly want to correct it.

What I said was, he is doing a good job in comparison with the palaeolithic who preceded him in that job and a neanderthal like the Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond), or the Minister of Energy and Resources Management (Mr. Simonett), only in comparison to them, is he doing a good job. He is doing a terrible job.

However, to go on. The Minister cannot receive—

Mr. Gisborn: They both misunderstood me.

An hon. member: I agree with you.

Mr. Shulman: The Minister could not receive, from every member of this Legislature, I doubt, in total more than 200 letters a year if that. I represent my party in the department of reform institutions and I doubt if my secretary sends more than 20 letters in a year if that many, to the Minister about specific cases. Perhaps on the outside 30. Certainly it could not be more than that. Is it impossible for the Minister to answer the few dozen letters he receives from the members, to investigate them and to verify whether or not they are legitimate complaints and whether or not something should be done, instead—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Surely the hon. member does not think that the only letters I receive are from members of the Legislature. I get literally hundreds of letters, written by the inmates to me.

Mr. Shulman: And each and every one of them should require, some thought and some care.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: They do get some thought and some care.

Mr. Shulman: You have a responsibility to do your job.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: But, having regard for the information we have in the files, I have to make a decision on that basis. And on that basis, a medical decision of this nature, as far as I was concerned, as far as my officials were concerned, had to be left in the hands of the medical man at the institution.

Mr. Shulman: Well I do not wish to belabour this particular point but let me say again, you do not have a regular dental service. If a man is having a dental problem, regardless of what a doctor has said, if someone be it a member, be it the family or be it the inmate, writes a letter to the Minister requesting an opportunity to see a dentist, surely this is not an unreasonable request.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It is unreasonable having regard for the number of people we have in our care and the nature of a great many of them. It would just be utterly impossible.

I have just been handed a note by our director of professional services who states that the registrar of the Dental Academy agrees that although it would obviously be better if a dentist were available to diagnose all dental problems, the practicalities demand screening by available medical officers when a dentist is not readily available.

Mr. Shulman: No disagreement with you on that.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Is that what happened?

Mr. Shulman: There is no disagreement with that.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well is this not precisely what happened?

Mr. Shulman: That is not precisely what happened. The man did not get better because he could not get satisfaction. He wrote his member of Parliament, the member wrote you asking to see a dentist and you said, no. That is what happened.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Sudbury East.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Chairman, I want to go back to where we left off the other night because I have received certain other information that I am sure the Minister will appreciate and certain other complaints.

Before I start, I want to make reference to a letter that the Minister addressed to me saying that there were certain methods of communication of ideas and so on, as to the civil service, for discussion of change. In speaking to some of the residents at Burwash as recently as last night, Mr. Chairman, they tell me—and some of these are long time residents—that there has been no, just absolutely no method of communication for ideas with respect to parole or with respect to problems with the village. And, that this has been non-existent for years.

I might ask the Minister, if this did exist, why then were various services removed without discussing it with the people if there was an avenue of communication? That is one point.

The next point I would like to ask the Minister is, why the single men working in Burwash are not allowed to have a telephone in their room? I understand it has something to do with the prisoners getting at the telephones in the rooms. Well, Mr. Chairman, this is easily overcome. All you do is put a jack in the wall and the man removes his telephone and locks it up when he goes to work. But certainly, men who have been there for 15 years, certainly should not have to go to the church to see if they can make a phone call, as they are being forced to do at the present time. Certainly, the treatment of these people in Burwash, guards and people who work for this government, is just atrocious.

The next point—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Can we deal with that?

Mr. Martel: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The suggestion the hon. member makes is rather an intriguing one, sounds like a good idea. I think I said this about something he mentioned last year. As a matter of fact it is being considered in the new regulations.

I do not know why this could not be put into effect. The suggestion the hon. member makes is that the telephones could be put into a jack and pulled out, but, he obviously knows one of the reasons why it has not been permitted in the first place. I suppose at the time this rule was put into effect there were no such things as jacks. You had the phone affixed. I suppose, like a lot of other things in large institutions, particularly an organization like Burwash, some things which were put into effect years ago just have never been changed and should be changed.

Now what bothers me really, is the suggestion, or the statement, that there is a lack of communication. Does the hon. member for example, know whether this recommendation was ever made at the branch level?

Mr. Martel: It was discussed but it was turned down, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Turned down at what level?

Mr. Martel: Apparently with the superintendent. He just does not go along with the idea and apparently it was just thrown out the window, from the information I have received.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Because, I recall a short while ago—a year or so ago, when there was a discussion about the oil burners. They wanted to get away from the coal and this was brought up at the branch level and it was discussed. They now have oil burners. I am just wondering why this was not discussed. Perhaps it was. Perhaps it was found to be impractical. If the hon. member tells me that he has been told, by staff who have been there a considerable length of time, that this was discussed and was turned down, I will find out if in fact it was discussed and when and what happened to the suggestions, because, as I say, on the face of it, it appears like a good idea.

Mr. Martel: Well this is the whole point I am making, Mr. Chairman, there does not seem to be communication in Burwash. This is the thing that is disturbing the residents in Burwash, the communication between the people who work there and the Civil Service Association. Changes are brought about or are discussed or proposed changes that are discussed just seem to be non-existent. This is what they are so frustrated about. Things are withdrawn and they have no discussion or no communication whereby their position on these matters can be advanced. This is the problem in this area, Mr. Chairman, and this is what disturbs me so much.

We might have got away with some proper discussion on the store, if there had been discussion, but there was none, there was no dialogue between the residents who worked there and the fact that another service was being withdrawn. This is what is frustrating those people working for the department there.

The last point I would like to ask the Minister about is the material on the record. I mentioned it to him the other night after the House adjourned and he was going to look up the answer as to whether the material was now going on the records, as I had suggested last year, on the psychological makeup of the prisoners and so on. The Minister indicated to me that he would get the reply.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes, I think I did advise the hon. member that this had been done.

Mr. Martel: You were not sure.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Did I say I was not sure?

Mr. Martel: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I had the impression that I did not. In any case, here is the answer: Senior officials of the department met in June, 1968, to consider this proposal. It was a proposal of the hon. member. It was agreed that information relating to medical condition, and that relating to a history of violent acts, could be placed on the identification card in code. Checking with the superintendent on March 9, 1969, revealed that the following data on each inmate was placed on the cards carried by each correctional officer: Name, institution number, where sentenced, photograph—if convicted of an indictable offence—notations such as follows: escaped, and the particular year, wanted by the police, history of drug abuse, epilepsy, etc.

That is, any unusual conditions are recorded on the card, which the officer in charge of the inmate picks up when he assumes responsibility for the inmate. And, Dr. Hutchison adds, it is felt that this should be adequate for the purposes Mr. Martel had in mind. I might tell him that I would think so too; and I might also tell him that this is perfect evidence that we are pleased to accept any good, constructive ideas that we get from any source, particularly a member of the Legislature.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Mr. Chairman, there is no doubt that the rehabilitation of adult offenders is one of the two most important functions of this department, and that, together with the juvenile offender rehabilitation, there is no doubt that the $33 million that we are spending should be spent. I am just curious to know what results we are getting from the expenditure of this money.

Can the Minister indicate to me how many of the inmates presently in the institutions in Ontario are there for the second or third time and how many are first offenders, and if this is a decrease or an increase percentage-wise from last year, or how this measures up in terms of whether the rehabilitation is actually working, and whether the programme that you presently have is making any impact?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member will find this information on page 94, albeit not a comparison with the previous year, because this is the first year we have had this kind of detailed information. I should also tell the hon. members, Mr. Chairman, that there are very few jurisdictions in North America which give this kind of detail, and this kind of detail was first provided to the Legislature a few years ago so that we could have precisely this kind of discussion.

He will note the information there shows—no previous reformatory sentence, 58.4 per cent; one reformatory sentence, 14.6 per cent; two reformatory sentences, 7.4 per cent; three reformatory sentences, 4.4 per cent; and four or more reformatory sentences, 15.2 per cent.

I think you will find that this does not really add up to exactly the same figure as the number of inmates we have had. It is because there are a number of instances where the information has not been provided or is not available.

Mr. Deans: I am not going to fight with you for two or three per cent. What I want to know is, is there any way to compare this? It is very difficult to compare the programme you presently have with what went on in years gone by because of the takeover of the county system, but is there any way that we might compare this with what was previously within the jurisdiction of the Minister, in terms of the percentage of first and second offenders and whether or not the money that we are spending—the purpose that we are spending it on, the reason that we are spending it—are actually producing anything in terms of the reduction of the returns to penitentiary, and so on?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The hon. member is really referring to the question, do we have the kind of research that will provide this? He will recall that we set up a department of research for the first time, I think, maybe three or four years ago, and through this department of research this is what we are attempting to accomplish. It is not an easy thing, and at the moment I would say it is practically an impossible task, merely because we have an overlapping of jurisdiction.

We are now engaged with the federal government in a programme whereby, hopefully, we will have information funnelled, presumably to Ottawa, from all the various provinces and back, so that we will at least have some information to do this kind of research which will be required to bring out the true rates of recidivism. It is very difficult. I have been handed a quotation from the Third United Nations Congress on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders. I attended this meeting and I remember this was quite a subject for discussion, but I think just a couple of quotations from this will outline the difficulty.

In attempting to make a satisfactory assessment of the nature and extent of recidivism, one is immediately hampered by the lack of the reliable and comparable data needed.

And further:

Indeed there have even been frequent calls for the establishment of internationally agreed upon norms for a working definition of recidivism to assist in its measurement nationally, and to allow for meaningful international comparability.

It is a most difficult task. I think I mentioned the other day, too, that even comparing one jurisdiction with another has so many implications that it would not necessarily be accurate. However, in spite of the fact that it is a difficult task, I am looking forward to the day in the not-too-distant future when at least we on this continent can have some proper records that will help us arrive at just how fruitful the work is that we are doing. That is the purpose of research to a large extent. Are we spending our money in the right way? What are we accomplishing? And we can only guess at it now to a large extent.

We did some research out at the Brampton training centre—I think I mentioned this last year or the year before. We did it for a period of five years after the inmates left. This, of course, was on a voluntary basis. We got it from the RCMP figures. About 65 per cent of those who left the training centre at least had not been convicted of another offence—for at least five years after having left the Brampton training centre. But, as I say, it is most difficult.

There are other figures. I could give the hon. member examples on parole. This is, of course, not too difficult to get. What are the percentages of paroles granted across the continent? What is the percentage of success that they have on their paroles? This sort of thing is easily available. The hon. member will also appreciate that another one of the difficulties is that after a man has served his sentence he is free to go where he chooses and he does not have to provide you with the information. Some judges, as a matter of fact, recently have been adding probation to the tail end of a sentence, whereas probation is generally known as a sentence in place of imprisonment—now the thought is that they give a probationary period.

There is a difference of opinion, I believe I can say, in correctional circles as to whether this should be done or not. There is a view that the probation period should be added at the end of a sentence so that the person having left the institution would be subject to some sort of supervision. If that became the case, then we would be in a position to find out if, in fact, that person has really been rehabilitated. This would not necessarily prove it either; he may just be smart and stay out of trouble.

But obviously, in a general way, I must say to the hon. member that these figures that are thrown about by many people and sometimes by organizations who, in order to get public support for their work—worthy as their work may be—throw out some fantastic records of recidivism. I have heard the figure 80 and 82 per cent, and have never been able to nail it. I have tried for five years to nail down where that figure came from, and it is just impossible to do it. At least I have not been able to find it, nor have any members of my staff.

I do not know where they got this figure, because, obviously, if we have some 4,000 inmates in our institutions in any given day, and every year there was a rate of recidivism of 82 per cent, all the jails and institutions in this whole province would not hold all those who have been repeating over the last 20 years.

We have to be very careful, when we talk of the number of people in prisons, whether in Canada, or Ontario. I do not think anyone has ever said Ontario, I think they are talking about Canada generally in this respect—and they compare us with other jurisdictions. They say we have imprisoned more people than any other jurisdiction in the world.

But when we use figures we have to be very careful, because there are very many people who keep coming back for breaches of The Liquor Control Act, for example. In fact, I remember one man who had been in an institution 38 times in one year. So when you are using these figures you may be talking about 100 or 200 or 500 or 1,000 or 3,000 who are the ones who keep coming back. If that is the case, then the rate of recidivism in that particular group alone is high whereas generally it could be very low. I have tried to explain some of the things involved.

Mr. Deans: I can understand. I am pleased the Minister pointed this out; I had missed it as I went through them. In the group of the four or more reformatory sentences, there are more of that than any of the others with the exception of the "no previous" reformatory sentences. What special type of rehabilitation services are we presently undertaking to try to get to this very large group, this is 15.2 per cent of the total? Are we undertaking any special type of rehabilitation service to try and meet with their particular needs? There is obviously something drastically wrong with this group of people. How do we cope with this?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It is a good question but a most difficult one to answer. Some of these people—a great many of them—may have drug problems and they may have alcohol problems. It is most difficult. I should remind the hon. member—perhaps he was not in the House when this came out in the debates—that the hon. member for High Park mentioned some time ago the report of a select committee of this Legislature—I think it was in 1954—which went into the whole correctional system. As a matter of fact their recommendation, unanimously adopted by all the members of that committee, represented by all the parties in this House, was that we ignore 75 per cent of those people who come into our institutions in respect of rehabilitation; that they were not rehabilitative.

Mr. Deans: I do not believe it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It is in the report. I read it in the House.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We will get the report again. They said that 75 per cent—I think that was the figure—in their view were not subject to being reformed. Instead of wasting our time—if they did not use that term, that was the import of their suggestion—we should concentrate on the 25 per cent who are apparently reformable.

I do not agree with this. I will admit that sometimes one is tempted to come to that conclusion, but I do not agree with this. I would certainly hope that the proportion of those we can do something with is greater than 25 per cent, and we will have to try. Maybe they did not say 75 per cent; perhaps they said the larger group. I have an idea it was 75 per cent.

Mr. Shulman: You had to take that back last year.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I will get that report. I do not think I took it back last year either. The hon. member can, while he has a spare moment, ask for the Hansard. He is pretty quick at looking these things up.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 402?

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Does the Minister have a completion date for the regional jail at Quinte? I do not think that has been brought up.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am not too sure that it has gone to tender yet—it may have—so I cannot give the hon member the completion date. I think I did point out that we had called for tenders a year or so ago. The costs came in and they were much higher than we had calculated. We sent them back for further tenders, and then we had to make some changes in view of our decision to have a live-in, work-out programme.

The live-in, work-out programme is going to utilize the regional detention centre plan, so changes had to be made again. And it may very well be that tenders are out now. I would suggest that during the estimates of the hon. Minister of Public Works the member might ask him that.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Chairman, just one final question. I am curious, now that we are going to have the permanent licence plate in Ontario, as to what steps the department is taking to introduce some other occupational therapy, you might call it, into the Millbrook area, so that they will be able to be kept busy rehabilitating themselves?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, this is what the Trades and Industries Advisory Board is looking into right now. We appreciate we are moving away from at least the annual plates and that something—

Mr. Deans: We had hoped it was permanent.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am not in a position to say that.

Mr. Deans: The Minister has said it already.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The chairman of the Trades and Industries Advisory Board has been given this as a term of reference of fairly high priority, so we will be having an answer from him, I imagine, in a month or two.

Mr. Sargent: Will the Minister advise, Mr. Chairman, if he has any plans to increase the per diem rate of pay for people working in the institutions?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to be rough with the hon. member, but really we went over this the other day. Did he read the announcement in his hometown papers?

Mr. Sargent: If I knew I would not ask the Minister. I am sorry I cannot be here all the time when he is making a speech. I would like the information. Can the Minister not just tell me what I want to know?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We discussed it here.

Mr. Sargent: I am sorry, I would like to know the answer.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I do not mind standing here and answering; I was just thinking about the other members.

An hon. member: We do not mind.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You do not mind? Fine. The answer is, yes.

Mr. Sargent: How much?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: All inmates in reformatories, clinics, and forestry camps, and so on, are going to get an incentive allowance up to $5 a week, some of which they will be able to spend at a canteen and some of which will be put away for their release.

Mr. Sargent: What are the Minister's plans for training of people in county jails, say, over 30 days?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In county jails, if they are going to be over 30 days, we usually take them out of the county jail and bring them into the reformatory system—at least this will be so until the new regional detention centres are built.

Mr. Sargent: Does the Minister agree then that there should be nothing for them to do but play cards in county jails?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: All the member has to do is read my own speeches. I cannot think of anything more demoralizing than sitting around a county jail doing nothing. That is why we take them out of the county jails if their sentence is longer than 30 days. I may be anticipating what the hon. member is going to say when I say that we cannot do anything about someone who is awaiting trial; there is nothing we can do about it. The law says he must be kept awaiting trial and he must be kept at a maximum security institution. Obviously, if he is being charged with a serious offence, he has to be kept in maximum security. There are very few things even under our new regional detention centre plan we are going to be able to do with this kind of a prisoner. In the first place, you cannot force him to work. In the eyes of the law he is an innocent man, and aside from keeping his own cell clean, there is nothing else you can require him to do.

Mr. Sargent: Is the Minister going to upgrade their library?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I will read this again, if I have to.

Mr. Sargent: Do not bother — yes or no?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We have not only upgraded them, but it was pointed out that as of last Tuesday or Thursday, we had already placed almost 5,000 new books in the county jails, and more are coming.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Lakeshore.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether this has been mentioned before; if it has, I will look it up—as certain members should—in Hansard.

Item 5, a grant to the Sudbury board of education. It is not in the previous years, that I can discover. What is this $450,000?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am sorry, I was trying to listen to two people at one time. The $450,000 to—?

Mr. Lawlor: Sudbury board of education.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There is an addition to the school being built in the township of Wanup. Instead of us keeping our old school and them having difficulty paying for their new addition, the department has decided that we would help them build the addition to the school. Children of the staff at Burwash will be attending this school on some financial arrangements which have already been agreed upon.

Mr. Chairman, this is the discussion we get into every year about the report of the select committee. The select committee, in fact, just talked about a large number, they did not talk about 75 per cent.

Mr. Shulman: Ah, thank you very much, the Minister has to take it back.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: All right, the hon. member is also playing with words, because when he brought this to my attention last year—you will recall that there was some discussion between myself and the hon. member for High Park as to the fact that I had misinformed the House—that was the term he was using last year—regarding—

Mr. Shulman: I am a little more direct this year.

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—regarding the report of the select committee regarding the number of reformables and the number of unreformables, and at that time I said that it probably was in Hansard, as a result of being reported.

I have now had this Hansard looked up for me, and with your permission, sir, I would like to quote from page 399, Hansard, of March 8 of 1954, when the select committee report was being discussed. Mr. Stewart, who, of course, was the Progressive Conservative member on the Committee and the chairman, said, and I quote:

Mr. Speaker, we made a study of this, and the ratio—

If one should recall parenthetically, Mr. Chairman, when he says that we made a study of this, he is referring to the committee:

—the ratio between jail reformables is about 30 per cent as against 70 per cent who are not reformables. In our provincial institutions about 20 per cent are reformable, while the other 80 per cent are not.

Further on in the same Hansard, page 403, the Liberal representative on the committee, Mr. Oliver, who was leader of the Opposition, I think it does not make any difference, he was a member of the committee—he stated, referring to the reformatory system, and I quote:

They are dealing with 100 per cent of the institutional population. There are, I suppose, only between 20 and 25 per cent—

Mr. Sargent: That is one thing you can believe in there.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: To continue:

—20 and 25 per cent of that population whom it is possible to reform, yet our efforts are directed towards 100 per cent.

There was some criticism later on, as to why we should really put all that work into the whole 100 per cent. The representative from the CCF at the time, Mr. Grummett, at page 406 states:

The committee believes the institution at Burwash should be made an Ontario prison and those who are not reformable should be sent to that institution, so that officers attempting to reform men can concentrate their efforts on the 20 or 25 per cent who are reformable.

So the fact that it was not actually the figure quoted in the report, but the fact that the leaders of the three parties who were on the committee mentioned this, I think, was a fair reason for my feeling that I was speaking the facts.

Mr. Shulman: You are misquoting the report. I have got the report and it just does not say it.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 402? The hon. member for Lakeshore.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): The other day, in discussions of bonding, I addressed some remarks to the Minister, Mr. Chairman, and gave some cognizance to what they were doing at the federal level, particularly through Larry Pernell, as he then was Solicitor General, and the John Howard Society. They were trying to work out some formulae whereby the people could be rehabilitated into the labour market, and I pointed out the enormous range of activities and work that men were excluded from—which of course obviously has the effect of driving them back into crime simply in order to live at all.

The Minister during those remarks made a number of interjections, protesting, as I understood it, that they, and that he personally, were very much concerned on this issue. But as I understood him he had some kind of relation with the insurance companies—that they were seeking to work out bonding relations—but I have never brought him to any state of clarity on this. Would the Minister care to tell this House what steps he is taking, what decisions have been reached, if any at this state, with respect to this whole problem of having people bonded?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I have something prepared, Mr. Chairman, on this particular subject, and perhaps I might refer the hon. member to it: It is often assumed that anyone male or female, with a criminal record stands little chance of being issued a fidelity bond, but in general a bonding company rarely automatically refuses to bond an ex-inmate.

Mr. Shulman: That is not true.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: So far as The Department of Correctional Services is concerned, an aftercare officer for the department will approach an insurance company on behalf of the inmate considered to be a good risk. That is, we would assess the man in terms of his previous work record and dependability. This arrangement has worked satisfactorily for the last five years.

Mr. Shulman: Oh, that is not true. I gave an example to prove it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: However, it must be remembered that certain types of criminal records exclude some inmates from being bonded for certain positions. It must also be understood that bonding is not the total problem in job finding for this group of workers. Investigation has revealed that some inability to secure a bond and a job has been the result of an unsatisfactory work record, rather than simply because of a criminal record.

Blanket bonding is becoming prevalent as more and more companies call for bonding of such workers as delivery men, truckers and some warehouse employees, whether or not they are handling money. All insurance companies will not issue a blanket bond that will include an ex-inmate. Some will, however, examine the ex-inmate's record and present status, with a view to issuing an individual bond. The system we are using at the present time is working fairly well, although we are always looking for improvements.

At the present time we are investigating the practices carried out in other jurisdictions as well as working with the federal government, who are also interested in this situation.

We recently had a man visit our office to thank us for our assistance in helping him to obtain a bond. We had referred this man to a bonding company approximately two years ago. He obtained the bond and has been working regularly since that time. He recently has gone into business for himself. The man in question, at the time he applied had eight previous convictions, three of which were penitentiary sentences.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, I must confess some degree of disappointment with the reply of the Minister. I have spoken to high officials in the John Howard Society of recent date and I know in some publications made, I think, by Mr. Kirkpatrick—who was not the gentleman I was speaking to—of that society, that this remains an imminent and pressing and very grave problem for the John Howard Society and for anyone who is interested in rehabilitation.

So much so, that very searching and lengthy discussions went on in Ottawa about setting up a government bonding scheme whereby the government would subsidize the bonding of men. And I am sure in the literature of the John Howard Society, although I have not got it to hand, they speak of an automatic rejection, and that is within the past five years. In other words I am disappointed, Mr. Chairman, in the degree of complacency being displayed by the Minister under this particular head, that he brushes it aside as though things are working very well.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I said fairly well.

Mr. Shulman: They are not.

Mr. Lawlor: The point is that they are simply not. I think more far reaching discussions have to take place. If the insurance companies are not prepared to bond these individuals so that they can get back into jobs—not on a piece-meal, ad hoc, comme ci comme ça basis, but of a deliberate intent and in an overall way—then this government ought to move into the field again, if the insurance companies wish to abdicate it, and to see that adequate bonding is provided for people to take jobs and responsible positions in industry. It has been done in other jurisdictions.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Is the hon. member suggesting that we bond everybody?

Mr. Lawlor: I beg your pardon?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Is the hon. member suggesting by his comments “not to just bond them comme ci comme ça”, that they should be required to bond everybody that wants a bond?

Mr. Lawlor: No, but I would think that a good 85 to 90 per cent of people would be bondable—even those who have records with respect to the specific kind of offence, say larceny, a theft, breaking and entering—by the very fact that you place some kind of confidence in these individuals. Now a screening process would have to take place undoubtedly, but not the kind of exclusive screening process employed by bonding agencies in the business in order to make a profit and who will not take any element of risk, who eliminate the risk from the word “go”.

That, in effect, brings down upon your head the exclusion of a wide girth of individuals from the market. And really, in terms of what it would cost you in bonding, even for those who default, compared with what you are paying in welfare payments, in maintenance, in trying to subsidize the people in the community, in the recidivous rate that you breed by not having the proper book, in a hundred ways the cost to this government and to the people of this province; all this costs a good deal more, I suggest, than what it would be for the losses you would suffer. I see there are other jurisdictions, California being one of them, who have bonded them through government auspices, and who find that there is a negligible loss, an amazingly negligible loss that supervenes upon that.

One would think that there would be greater defalcations by individuals who were habituated to specific kinds of crimes. Curiously enough, it does not seem to be the case. I am suggesting that you go deeper into this issue, and the thing is to rehabilitate men into the community once they are out of the jail, not to sentence them twice for the same offence. This is what this government is doing.

This is the whole mentality, not just this government but throughout the country, the whole attitude and approach to criminal matters. You can very much alleviate the financial burden on the community, make men responsible and have them enter into the life of the community. But by artificially setting a bonding restriction and not wiping those restrictions out to the greatest extent possible—to a far greater extent than what you have attempted to do at present through the private bonding institution—seems to me to be derelict in your responsibilities.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 402. The hon. member for High Park.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to add a word on the bonding matter. The bonding is not working fairly well, it is not working at all. The Minister may recall, last year we brought a case into the estimates, Ron M. who had a record, who wanted to become a car salesman and was flatly refused by the bonding company on the basis that he had a record. Ultimately he got his bond only because after Ontario Automobile had refused to hire him another car company did take him on. The owner of that company put the bond up himself. And we made great efforts through the rehabilitation officer and through the department to have something done. This department did try to interfere with the bonding company, but they just would not listen. And something has to be done by government, because the bonding company are interested in one thing, and one thing only. They are not going to rehabilitate, they are interested in making money. And until government steps in and fills this void you are going to continue to force men back to crime who should receive bond and who should be in work, like selling cars, or other areas where they have to have a bond.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I just do not want to let the suggestion go by that we are complacent about the problem of bonding. If I were complacent about this I would not be engaged in meetings with the federal government and with the insurance companies. And I do not take it that insurance companies are not interested in the problem because they cannot make a buck out of it, or anything of that nature. There are just as many decent people in the insurance companies as there are elsewhere, and sometimes they will do something.

Mr. Shulman: No, we are not suggesting they are not.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: They are co-operating with us in an effort to find a solution—

Mr. Shulman: They did not co-operate with you last year.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —to the problem that is viable. The hon. member for Lakeshore suggested that in his view 85 per cent of these people could be bonded. I must say that this is a great credit to our department, because he is suggesting that 85 per cent of them—

Mr. Shulman: Could be, in spite of your department.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Nevertheless, do not put any ideas into the hon. member for Lakeshore's mind. He said 85 per cent of them were bondable which, in fact means that in his view 85 per cent of them who leave our institutions have been rehabilitated and could be bonded.

Mr. Lawlor: You are always fishing for compliments.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If we can just convince the insurance companies—

Mr. Lawlor: Get away from that complacency.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If we can just convince them that 85 per cent of the people who leave our institutions are bondable—

Mr. Lawlor: If you find the smallest sop to your wounds—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —we would be very happy. We are working with them, Mr. Chairman; we are having a fair amount of success. We want to continue our relationship with them. We think that we will come up with a better system than we have now. I am not suggesting the government is going to go into the bonding business.

Mr. Shulman: Well, more than 75 per cent—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes, I know what will happen if the government goes into the bonding business. If the government goes into the bonding business, everyone coming out of the institutions would expect as their right that they would be bonded by the government. And you know what can happen to that. There has to be a certain amount of good, common grey matter put into this thing.

Mr. Sargent: You can bond the trust companies.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You can be humane without being so soft-headed that you ruin the whole system. There are a lot of our people come out of our institutions whom I would not want on bond. There are a lot who should be bonded. There are a lot who are not being bonded who I think could be bonded, and this is what we are trying to accomplish. And we are working towards that.

Mr. Shulman: Well, they are not yet receiving the bonds.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: This is what we are trying to accomplish, and we are working towards that. The hon. member brought one case up last year where the releasee was having difficulty getting a bond.

Mr. Shulman: Not a difficult time, an impossible time.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: All right, an impossible time. He found one case. I hope the man is working out very well now, I hope he is all right.

Mr. Shulman: Yes, he is working out.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is fine. The fact that he was able to find one case—

Mr. Shulman: Would the Minister like me to give him some more cases?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, please do not write any more letters. Give my staff a chance to do some work for the department.

Mr. Shulman: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. The point of order is that the Minister is misleading the House. I deliberately said that I would bring one case in to illustrate the problem. If the Minister wishes—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I wondered when he was going to start with that one.

Mr. Shulman: If the Minister wishes in all these things for me to give a number of cases I would be only too happy to do so. And then he gets up and complains of waste of time in the House. We give individual cases to give examples of the problems. If the Minister wants a lot of cases we would be glad to supply them.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: I do not want to interrupt. Is the bonding clause through now?

Mr. Chairman: We are on vote 402. The hon. member may bring up any point connected with vote 402.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, I say with some sort of knowledge that I think your whole policy is one of degradation of a man who goes into your institutions. It is my considered opinion, after years of being in this business of dealing with people, that you are the only one I cannot convince of that. But I see in this item here you have industrial production and rehabilitation. Your second biggest item in revenue is 3,390,000 pairs of licence plates, which brought a revenue of $780,000. Multiply that by two, and you have about 7 million licence plates for about $700,000, so you are getting about 10 cents a plate.

Getting back to your income from your livestock, which was about $1 million—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Twenty-three cents a pair.

Mr. Sargent: Twenty-three cents a pair is the breakdown. I was 50 per cent close; that was half way there.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Closer than you have been for a long time.

Mr. Sargent: I always spoke well of you, too. The point I am making, Mr. Minister, is that somewhere along the line, if you would treat these people with dignity, it would help them to work towards coming out of there with some sort of a nest egg, some money to meet life with. But you in your grandiose generosity only give them $5 a week. That is a big deal.

And I think that somewhere along the line you have a great source of manpower there, thousands and thousands of man-hours to put to work for the economy. You have a closed shop, as it were, in controlled production. You could do a great job for these people; involve them in working towards incentives so that they would have money when they come out. And you could make money—go on the market place for 23 cents for a set of licence plates. They would cost you a dollar to buy them any place on the market place.

So if you could pass this cost on to the rightful place and make a decent profit, then you could do a better job of rehabilitation. This idea of giving stuff to The Department of Transport is lost in the shuffle anyway. I think you might look at a policy of dignity for these people and make it, income-wise, profitable for the whole operation. Any comments on that?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, but while I was looking at this page, Mr. Chairman, I might have mentioned that part of the industrial operations, where there were 445 dentures built and repaired, speaks something of what we do for some of our inmates—talking about looking after some of their dental work, which I think is very important.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, they are not for any of our correctional officers. These are for inmates and I thought that was an interesting comment I might make while I had this in my hand.

Mr. Sargent: Is there any reason why you cannot make this operation self-liquidating?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Do you mean you are suggesting that I go out and sell licence plates on the market?

Mr. Sargent: I suggest that you look at it from a business standpoint. You have all this great wealth of manpower that is going to waste, and you are giving it away for nothing. A man comes out of there and he has been taught to sew. I think that with all our technology and education we are bragging about in this province that you could draft that into your institutions and make it into an economic, self-liquidating unit. Now why can you not do that?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The hon. member is talking about setting up industries which will produce goods for outside sale and that we should pay the inmates a standard wage. Is that what he is talking about?

Mr. Sargent: No, there is a happy medium along the way somewhere to give a man a chance to make a nest egg for when he gets out.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I went into this the other day, Mr. Chairman, in talking about the incentive allowance. I said at that time I would make a clear distinction here between the incentive allowance which we plan to introduce, and a system of payment of wages for work done by inmates. Industries operated within our correctional institutions do not produce goods for sale on the open market.

In addition, some institutions are geared solely to provide academic and vocational training. There will be no attempt to equate incentive allowance with wages in the outside community. Further on I said, as mentioned previously, we have not sought to equate the incentive allowance with wages in the outside community. However, I look forward to the day when inmates in our correctional institutions will be performing full-time work and earning standard wages, paying for their maintenance in the institutions, contributing to the support of their families, and paying taxes. This incentive allowance programme is a step towards that ultimate goal.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, this is progress—you look forward to the day. But can you give me any realistic reason why, Mr. Chairman, that if an item costs you 23 cents to produce and the cost to the market place is $1.00, why would you sell it at less than the market cost?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We do not sell them outside the institution.

Mr. Sargent: Well, will you tell me why you would not do that?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: This is what we are looking into. This is what the Trades and Industries Advisory Board is doing.

Mr. Sargent: How can we afford to look into it forever? Let us do something.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: All right, if the hon. member suggests we are not doing it fast enough, I agree with him. I am never satisfied with the degree of progress we are making. I would like to make it a lot faster, like yesterday, except that it does take time, effort, money and people.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Hamilton Centre.

Mr. N. Davison (Hamilton Centre): Mr. Chairman, I would like to cite one case in my home town. I will not use any name, but it is a first offender. He was sentenced to Guelph for three months. He was allowed out after two months and he went back to his employer to find out if he could get his job back and his employer said "yes, I will certainly rehire you." So he had to go up to the police commission to get a license to go back on the job. He applied to the police commission—and the only decision they made was "well, come back in three months time and we will look at the case."

Now here is a young fellow, first offender as I say, he only had to serve two months, but now we are going to have to try to get him on welfare for the simple reason that the police commission will not give him a license. How are you going to rehabilitate a person like this?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Will the hon. member find out for me whether that gentleman went to our Hamilton after-care office to ask for the assistance of our after-care service, because I would be very much interested in this.

I often wonder every time I get a case like this, how come that somehow or other an after-care officer is not involved. And usually, when I investigate, I find out they did not want to have anything to do with the after-care officer or they did not go near anybody. If there is such a case I would be very much interested, if the hon. member would find that out for me.

Mr. Davison: Well, there is such a case.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, I am asking if he can find out whether that person went to our after-care office to which he was entitled to go, and I am sure he knew it was in existence, because our after-care officer would, I would hope, go to the police department and ask them about this. I cannot imagine the police doing this unless there is some other particular reason we do not know about, so if the hon. member will ask that and perhaps he might even give his name and confidentially we can see what we have on file.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 402? The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville, I believe, was up first.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, several years ago a suggestion had been made in the House to alleviate the shortage of farm labour; to use inmates from various institutions. Was that programme ever proceeded with, Mr. Chairman, and what was the result of it if it were undertaken?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There are two things involved here. First, this is also one of the terms of reference for the Trades and Industries Advisory Board which has on it representatives from the farming community. But in connection with that, these two sections of our Correctional Services Act are going to permit us to allow these inmates to go out for periods of time for reasons of rehabilitation. This will permit us to allow them to go out on farms during the period when they can be used on farms, where it will be useful and helpful for them to learn the farming operation.

Mr. B. Newman: Until now you did not have the authority? Is that right, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, we did not.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Humber—

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I would like to follow this. May I ask of the Minister if the community colleges are going to be used by his department in an attempt to train personnel for his institutions, and likewise even rehabilitation officers?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Is the hon. member referring to something I mentioned the other day where some of the students of the community college are coming into our welding shops, for example, at OTC, Brampton? Arrangements are being made so that hopefully they will be going to the community colleges—

Mr. B. Newman: Well perhaps not inmates, Mr. Chairman, I thought that custodial officers could be given upgrading programmes or take upgrading programmes at community colleges to enable them to operate more efficiently; even rehabilitative officers could be given courses at community college.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: They are doing that now. Whether they are doing it at community colleges I am not sure, but they are certainly doing it at universities. If the hon. member will refer to the annual report, there is quite a list of the additional staff training, and the courses they are taking at some of the universities.

Mr. B. Newman: What page is that, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am told it is on page 13. Correctional officers—29 of them from county jails—a total of 124 taking staff training courses—

Mr. B. Newman: What page is that, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Page 13. He will find down in the second section of that—does he have page 13 in front of him? Second section of that—certificate courses. Certificate courses, Corrections, McMaster University—115 members; certificate course in public administration—10; certificate course in criminology, University of Toronto Centre of Criminology—11.

There are other degree programmes. We have quite an extensive programme and I am advised that negotiations are presently going on with Sheridan College to provide such training on a fairly large scale.

Mr. B. Newman: That last item was the item I was primarily interested in, Mr. Chairman. I think that we should probably use our community colleges to an advantage, especially in this instance. Thank you.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Humber.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Mr. Chairman, through you to the Minister, I was looking over page 19 which deals with the recreational activities that are supplied to the inmates of the Minister in the various institutions and I was again struck by the dearth of such recreational facilities in perhaps the places where they are most needed. For instance, the Ontario reformatory at Millbrook, i.e., the Correctional Institute at Millbrook.

Now I understand that if you keep your inmates busy you have less of a security problem and I was under the impression that the last time I visited Millbrook they did have skating equipment—hockey skates for the inmates—and I also thought that there was an area out in the exercise yard which was flooded—or at least I was informed it was flooded—for the purpose of a rink.

In going over this I see that they do not have ice hockey at the Millbrook institution, although I notice that they have it at the Mimico reformatory and the training school at Brampton, at the clinics and the training schools at Burtch and Burwash, as a matter of fact even the ones at Fort William, Monteth and Rideau.

Now I would like to know why there is such a dearth of recreational facilities at Millbrook, where they do have—according to the Minister's own statement—the most difficult behaviour problems, or the behavioural inmates, but where two-thirds of the inmates are not behavioural problems and in fact are either pedophiles or alcoholics or sexual deviates. Why do they not have more recreational facilities for them?

For instance, badminton is something they could have there, or floor hockey. They could have volleyball, which is almost a universal game when it comes to dissipating energy. For that matter, they could even have lacrosse for the non-violent types. Would the Minister comment?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, Millbrook does not lend itself to any more activities than there are here because of the very nature of the building. The philosophy of the department at the time Millbrook was built, was that it was for the purpose of holding these problem people and it was not envisioned that they would require anything but maximum security holding. So the facilities are limited. This will be changed under the new programmes, as I mentioned earlier, with the changeover of one institution to another, Millbrook will become a regional detention centre. So that people who are now being held in Millbrook will not be the ones who will be held then.

I am informed however, that it does have baseball and why it is not in here—I will have discussion with one of my staff about it later—and I am also told that there is skating, when it is able to be flooded.

Mr. Ben: I was told they allegedly did flood it and use it for that purpose. But it has been over three years, Mr. Chairman, since this Minister had it brought to his attention that at least the Opposition realized the folly of creating Millbrook, that it was not serving the purpose because there were not sufficient inmates of the type the prison was designed for to keep it occupied, shall we say.

And it became obvious, I think, even to this Minister before I raised it that something had to be done about this prison and that is why people like pediophiles, alcoholics, drug addicts and the like were brought into the prison. Now for those, surely since they were not security problems, since they were not behavioural problems as inmates, surely for these people, facilities could have been supplied outside of the walls. There was a camp not too distant from the walls where they had short-term prisoners. I am trying to recall the name of that camp. Could the Minister help me?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Is the hon. member suggesting that we put the sex deviates out in that camp?

Mr. Ben: No. No, I am saying you could build athletic facilities outside the wall.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well the hon. member will appreciate that if we are going to change the aspect of the whole operation there, there is not much point in putting a lot of money into a building for this purpose. Because, within a reasonable time these people are going to be moved out of there to the clinics and so, there will not be any need for it. Certainly, we have an open institution, Durham Camp I think it is called, outside of Millbrook. That is an open institution and we would have to provide, for those inside Millbrook today, another maximum security area for recreational activities right next to or in connection with an open institution, which is not really feasible.

And if, as I say, we are going to make this major change very shortly—I had better not say very shortly, but in a reasonable time there is not much point in putting much money into this.

Mr. Ben: Well, Mr. Chairman, I think that perhaps we are not on the same wave length. I quite appreciate the Minister's dilemma. He does have some inmates in Millbrook who are either hardened criminals or security problems or both. But there are a large number of—the Minister gave us the figures on the first day of his estimates, indicating that approximately two-thirds of the inmates at Millbrook did not fall into the category of either hardened criminals or security problems. I believe about two-thirds were not in this category.

Now the Minister asks whether I would suggest that the sex deviates be permitted outside the wall for recreational purposes. Well, if my memory serves me correctly, Mr. Chairman, most of those that are classed as sex deviates or who were pediophiles, that is, child molesters. Now, either the Minister is admitting that he is keeping children in their institution—and I must say that I did find a 16-year-old in that institution when I visited—or he is suggesting that they would escape while they are having recreational period.

Mr. Chairman, the Minister has people in this institution that have no business being there. The prison was not designed for them. You have either nowhere else to keep them, and you brought them here, or else you have nobody to bring into this prison, of the type for which this prison was designed, so you brought these people in. Now you talk about rehabilitation. That seems to be your code for every year when the estimates come up.

You read to us or have it as a preface to your statement, what the objects of your department are. Surely then you should try to carry out these objects.

I grant you that the prison is small. It is extremely compact, but, surely you could obviate this handicap by giving those in the particular categories to which I have been referring, that is, to those other than a security problem or the hardened criminals, a greater recreational time allowance. You could have more periods of recreation. You talk about a baseball diamond and you say you have it. Fine, then you could give those particular inmates more time there.

Mr. Chairman, one of the activities that is listed there is hiking. I am not, for one minute, suggesting that you form a hiking club and start having them tramp over the fields of Durham county or to run in cross country races, but the fact is, there are still facilities and activities that they could pursue while they are still inside. I would ask the Minister to give more consideration to this.

Another thing that strikes me, Mr. Chairman, is that Mercer has so few facilities. I do not see a Vanier Institute listed so I take it for granted, perhaps I am wrong, then using the title of Mercer here you also include the Vanier Institute do you not?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, the Vanier Centre was not opened—

Mr. Ben: Oh, I see—it was not—when this period ended, alright.

But I am struck by the fact that Mercer had no more variety of recreation than did Millbrook and I think that they were intended to serve completely different purposes.

I would ask that the Minister give consideration to doing something for those.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I would like to tell the hon. member that really it is not the number of different sports, recreational activities they can engage in, it is how frequently they use the available recreational facilities and they do, I am advised, use them very frequently. So they have even at Millbrook, one, two, three, four, five, six—including the skating and baseball—seven activities and it depends how frequently they use them. I mean, you could have a wider range—I am not too sure if that would accomplish a great deal. The fact is that they do get a lot of recreation.

Mr. Ben: Well, if I may, Mr. Chairman. The reason I dwell specifically with Millbrook is that in Millbrook the reverse from the norm was the rule. In other words, it was not as a form of punishment that people worked in the license plate shop I referred to previously, or the laundry, but as a privilege. In other words, there was such a lack of things to do in Millbrook that the right to work was something that was sought by the inmates. The complaint to me was that they did nothing but wash floors, unless they could get into the license plate shop or into the laundry. What other activities did you have there?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: A tailor shop.

Mr. Ben: Or the tailor shop, there still was not enough work for all these inmates. The reason I suggest more strenuous, body contact sports.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Carpentry work.

Mr. Ben: Making bird houses or they were making at least some benches I think, or something else like that. In any case there was not enough work and I challenge your advisors to satisfy me that there was enough work to keep all the prisoners going eight hours a day daily, Saturdays and Sundays excluded. There just was not enough and it is for this reason that I suggest that there be more of these active activities, these strenuous activities which would sap some of the energy of these inmates and perhaps give them a new outlook on life. They might find that playing bridge is just as interesting as dealing from the bottom of the deck, who knows? They might even turn their talents into more acceptable courses.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 402. The hon. member for High Park.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, through you to the Minister, I am a little disturbed by the costs at Orangeville. I see that the cost for each inmate per day is some five times the average cost, and this particular jail stands out from all the others. I do not think there is anything that costs even half that, among the others. Can the Minister explain why these costs are so high?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I do not have to look at the report of the hon. member to see how many inmates they have, obviously the costs rise in adverse ratio to the number of inmates you have.

Mr. Shulman: But, Mr. Minister, that is not the explanation, because if we look at the costs—I do not see the number of inmates here in this table, but we do have the costs of the officers' salaries which are greater than certain other prisons where the costs are much less. For example, let us compare Orangeville, where the officers' salaries are $57,000 to Picton where the officers' salaries are $45,000, yet the cost is only half that, so presumably you have more inmates at Orangeville, so there must be some other explanation.

Or compare it to Goderich, or to Cayuga.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The total number of persons committed during the year at Orangeville was 168.

Mr. Shulman: Well how does this compare to Cayuga?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: 176 at Cayugal

Mr. Shulman: Well why is it such numbers differ from the cost—the cost at Cayuga is a third of what it is at Orangeville?

Mr. Sargent: Hogan's heroes.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The difference is that if the hon. member will take a look on page 103—the total days stay of the inmates—that tells the story. In Cayuga, while they only had 176 persons committed during the year there were 2,571 days stay of the inmates, and in Orangeville, there were only 988, and of course that would bring up the per capita cost for the inmates.

Mr. Shulman: Considering the small number of inmates at Orangeville, is there not another jail close by where you can send these people to?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: This is one of the recommendations we are going to get from the task force, as to which jails are going to be closed. In the not too distant future, before this House sits again, some of the jails which are in existence now will have been closed down.

Mr. Shulman: Obviously if you compare the cost per person, per day, in terms of guards it is quite uneconomical.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 402. The hon. member for Sudbury East.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Chairman, are we able to discuss parole now?

Mr. Shulman: Are we going into parole before—

Mr. Chairman: I might say that some little while ago, while I was absent from the Chair, I returned and we were on a wide range of discussion on parole at that time.

Mr. Sopha: It goes to show that you should not leave.

Mr. Chairman: Well if the member will now agree to restrict the parole until the end. About three quarters of an hour ago everyone was trying to get parole.

Is there anything further on provincial jails and reformatories? All right.

Does any member wish to take part on the debate on provincial jails and reformatories? The hon. member for High Park?

Mr. Shulman: I do. Before we leave that I have two or three minor matters to bring up. First of all Burtch. The matter of Burtch came up last year in some detail as to the terrible fire hazard there. What has the Minister done about that problem since then?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The new training centre which I mentioned last year which was going to build, has been completed. I think it is entirely of brick. Public works now are working on plans for complete renovation of the balance of the institution.

Mr. Shulman: Would the Minister give us a time or date when he expects that to be completed?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I would suggest that you talk to the Minister of Public Works during his estimates.

Mr. Shulman: Well, do you not talk to him?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The Department of Public Works are preparing a master plan for the replacement of all framework buildings at this institution. Construction is planned in four stages, first stage being kitchen and dining room facilities, and The Department of Public Works advised this master plan would be completed shortly. That is all I can tell the hon. member.

Mr. Shulman: When is this going to begin? When do the kitchen facilities begin? The first stage?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The Department of Public Works advises this master plan will be completed shortly.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, the other day I asked the Minister how many sociologists, psychiatrists etc., he was short. He was going to give me that answer. Does he have that available now?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Social workers, psychologists and chaplains—

Mr. Shulman: We asked for psychiatrists.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We do not have any psychiatrists on full-time complement. Whenever we need psychiatrists we call them in for consultation. Was it just psychiatrists the hon. member was asking about or social workers? We could take 20 within this range, either psychiatrists or social workers. We have room to take 20 social workers or psychiatrists.

It has something to do with the way the complement has been set with Treasury Board, this has something to do with the new policy of Treasury Board in which it says there is no use putting money in the estimates for a complement which you have been unable to fill in the last few years. Therefore, there is a complement of 20. You can fill them with social workers or you can fill them with psychiatrists if you wish.

Mr. Shulman: Has the Minister made a slip of the tongue? Does he really mean psychiatrists? Surely not.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am sorry—psychologists.

Mr. Shulman: Thank you.

Mr. Chairman: Has the hon. member for High Park finished?

Mr. Shulman: To pursue this psychiatrist problem—last year in the estimates there was quite a bit of discussion of the treatment of the mentally ill in the Don jail, and I understood the Minister at that time was not particularly proud of what was occurring at that jail. I would like to know what changes he has made in the lodging given to those mentally ill—in other words the cage they are kept in—and also what changes have been made in the mental examination?

As you know I brought a Private Bill in here requiring that prisoners that are referred for mental examination see a psychiatrist, instead of getting the one, two, three routine that they were getting at the Don jail. Have you made any of the changes that we requested?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: A fulltime medical secretary has been engaged in the Metropolitan Toronto Jail who has a separate office adjacent to the medical consulting rooms in the jail hospital. A part-time psychiatrist who is also on the part-time staff of the Queen Street Mental Health Centre has been appointed to examine, assess and treat inmates who have been referred to him for consultation by the medical officers of the jail.

He may also agree to psychiatrically assess inmates on his own time by direct arrangements with defence or Crown counsels, or with the court. Such arrangements are not within the purview of this department. The hon. member would appreciate that. The psychiatrist is a duly qualified medical practitioner in the province of Ontario, and holds a diploma in psychiatry from the University of Toronto.

A psychiatric ward in the new wing, consisting of ten private rooms, with private sanitary facilities, a common room, a private psychiatrists counselling room, and two utility rooms is in operation. For prisoners who do not medically adapt to private rooms, a large common observation room for ten, formerly called the hospital, which allows for interpersonal therapeutic relationships among inmates and staff is maintained in the older wing. The old observation ward is now used as an inmate dormitory.

The medical staff roster: Dr. William Henry Hills, full time. Does the member want the salaries?

Mr. Shulman: I might as well.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Might as well, the member might strike pay dirt. Dr. Hills, $21,500 per annum.

Mr. Shulman: That is an improvement.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He is a jail surgeon and a public servant. Dr. Osler B. Dickenson, three days weekly, $12,500 per annum, surgeon specialist, on the casual staff. Dr. Howard Robert Bernstein, three days weekly, $240 per week, industrial physician. Dr. Ida Kovacs, one and a half hours daily, $3,880 per annum, venereal disease physician. Dr. Gary Prince, 18 hours weekly, $50 for three hours, psychiatrist. At the Metropolitan jail we also have nine registered nurses full time. I guess all the member wanted to know was the Don jail, is that right?

Mr. Shulman: I am gratified, Mr. Chairman. The member for Lakeshore and I are pleased, if we do nothing else we have made one contribution towards the benefit of this department. But there is one thing that is not clear to me. If a prisoner is referred by a magistrate for a mental examination—and I would appreciate a straight yes or no answer—will he see a psychiatrist?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I will have to check that. I want to make sure before I give an answer to the hon. member. I will get that answer for him. But I want to point out to the hon. member, regardless of what the conditions were at the Don jail at any one time, we just took the Don jail over in July of 1968.

Mr. Shulman: And it was the fall of 1968 that the Minister was defending the conditions that we were complaining about.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I was defending the conditions under which people had to work, having regard to the staff available and everything else.

Mr. Shulman: The Minister was denying the charges we made.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, I do not remember what charges the hon. member made.

Mr. Shulman: They are the very things the Minister is changing now. Mr. Chairman, I cannot let this go by.

An hon. member: Out of order.

Mr. Shulman: It is not. I am talking on the Don jail, Mr. Chairman. Last year we complained bitterly about the conditions under which the mentally ill were confined there; the Minister defended it. I am delighted to find he has changed it and has made the improvements we suggested; let us not backtrack on that.

Mr. Sargent: I do not think the member for High Park should take credit for all the changes in the penal institutions.

Mr. MacDonald: He just took credit for one.

Mr. Sargent: We have been harping for years that the crux of this whole penology problem is lack of good psychiatric help. I would like to ask the Minister—

Mr. MacDonald: I have news for the hon. member. For years we harped about it, and the members of his side supported the government.

Mr. Sargent: I know. I will give the member full marks; I believe that.

But this is the question I want answered. How many institutions are there in Ontario without the services of a full-time psychiatrist?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We do not have full-time psychiatrists. And I will tell the hon. member something else: He does not have a full-time psychiatrist; no one has a full-time psychiatrist. They are too costly. When you need a psychiatrist, you go to a psychiatrist and you consult at so much an hour. When we need a psychiatrist, we get the use of psychiatrists.

Mr. Sargent: Do not give me a lecture on this. We have a mental institution in Owen Sound and we have trouble getting psychiatrists too, but we do get them, and I think getting psychiatrists is the most urgent need you have in your system. If we are doing anything in the field of technology, surely we can train psychiatrists. The Minister says cost is a factor? Money is no object to him in his department.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Who told the member that?

Mr. Sargent: Then the Minister admits he has an opening for 20 psychiatrists.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Is the hon. member suggesting that I said we had an opening for 20 psychiatrists?

Mr. Sargent: 20 psychiatrists or sociologists.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I was corrected; I meant 20 social workers or psychologists. There is a great difference between a psychologist and a psychiatrist—I think about $100,000 a year.

Mr. Sargent: All right, I thank the Minister.

Mr. MacDonald: The Minister will get in trouble for that statement.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Probably.

Mr. Sargent: The Minister says that he has a need for sociologists or people trained in the social services, and yet we have people coming out of the universities here who are graduates in sociology and they cannot get employment in this department. Now, the Minister told me last year in the debates here that there was ample work for these people, and they tried and there was no work for them. Now, who is running the store over there? Numerous times the Minister sits there and asks his department heads. I think we must get down to the nuts and bolts of what the Minister is trying to do in trying to rehabilitate these people.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If the hon. member will produce 20 social workers or 20 psychologists, we will hire them, if they are prepared to come with our department and if they are prepared to work for the salary which the civil service commission has laid out.

Mr. Sargent: I think we should have on the record here, Mr. Chairman, that in front of this House the Minister tells the House, tells his own government, tells the Opposition and everybody else, that he has a need for 20 important posts and he cannot fill them in this age of technology we have today?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is right.

Mr. Shulman: The salary is too low.

Mr. Sargent: And we have ads running in the American papers and in the English press every weekend advertising for help in this great province of Ontario.

We are spending $400 million in The Department of Education, and we cannot train people to run our own shop? There is something wrong with the Minister or the government. Who is wrong?

An hon. member: The government.

Another hon. member: Both of them.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I have the answer for the hon. member. The answer to his question was yes, all court referrals are examined by psychiatrists.

Mr. Shulman: Oh, that is wonderful; I am delighted to hear that, thank you. The reason they cannot get the social workers and cannot get the psychiatrists is they just do not pay enough money. We raised this earlier in the estimates and the Minister said it was not up to him, it was up to the civil service association. The Minister is never going to fill those posts until he puts the appropriate pressure on and votes the money and does whatever he has to do to raise the salaries up to the going rate. He has to compete with industry, he has to compete with other jurisdictions, and if he thinks he is going to get sociologists to come in for $12,000 a year, he is mistaken; he is not.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The fact is we have a great number of very well-qualified social workers now.

Mr. Shulman: Agreed, there are a great number of dedicated people.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is the kind we want.

Mr. Shulman: Yes, that is the kind you want, and you are 20 short. And the reason you are 20 short is because you do not pay enough money.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, everybody is 20 short; you know everybody is short.

Mr. Shulman: No, I will not accept that.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There is not a department of any government that is not short of professional staff, in any government any place in North America, and the hon. member knows that.

Mr. Shulman: I am sorry, that just is not true.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is true.

Mr. Shulman: I have had the opportunity of visiting different areas that are not short, and we can come back to Joliet again and go through that.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Does the member want to go through Joliet? Would the hon. member like to have a little discussion at 5.40 p.m. about Joliet?

Mr. Shulman: Okay.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I heard so much about Joliet the other day I decided to find out more about it; I made it my business because we took an awful shellacking the other day. We were told what a wonderful place this Joliet was; it was just about the last word in institutions. Let me tell the hon. member, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Shulman: I do not want the Minister misleading the House again. I pointed out a number of things about Joliet.

Mr. Chairman: Order. If the hon. member for High Park has risen on a point of order, would he please state his point of order?

Mr. Shulman: My point is I do not want the hon. Minister to again mislead the House about Joliet. I pointed out there was a number of great improvements that we could bring here. I did not suggest it was a wonderful place to live.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, all right. First, Mr. Chairman, I am now quoting from Menard Time, which is America's foremost prison newspaper, printed in Menard, which is a penal institution in the state of Illinois.

A new governor has just gone in there, a Republican governor, Governor Ogilvie—

Mr. Shulman: That is equivalent to Conservative.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is right, and he is going in to clean up the correctional system there. Let me tell the hon. member what he is going to do. He is going to follow the procedures that were followed here in this Conservative government.

Mr. Sargent: Well, he is in trouble.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The governor's special message to legislators calls for these changes in crime-fighting forces of the state. I will not go into all of them, I will only go into those that refer to corrections. Listen to this:

Consolidation of the Illinois youth commission—

I should point out that the youth commission runs the training schools, and I suppose we will go into that in just a minute.

Consolidation of the Illinois youth commission into a new department of corrections, which would run all state correctional institutions and would have the power to close down inadequate local jails,

Which we have done here already. We have had a correctional department taking in all of these things except the jails, and we have just taken in the jails as well, so we are ahead of Illinois 22, 23 years ago to start with.

Mr. Sargent: What about Joliet?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am getting around to Joliet; I will be there in a minute, Mr. Chairman. Just hang on.

Ogilvie's message pointed out that his proposal for a new department of corrections was based on a model Act proposed by the National Council on Crime and Delinquency.

We did not need this. We did this 23 years ago in this department.

Mr. Shulman: That is what I asked you about the other day; you never heard of it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Now we will go into the rehabilitation of Joliet, which the hon. member spoke about at great length here. He said, "I am not talking about the whole of Illinois, I am talking about Joliet. They have a wonderful system." By some peculiar happenstance, he went into a barber shop and sat down at a barber who happened to tell him that he learned his barbering in Joliet. The barber did a wonderful job and, therefore, they have a wonderful vocational training at Joliet. I think he made the point, wonderful vocational training, and so on. Let us talk about that. "We speak of rehabilitation," said Ogilvie, "but we provide only one vocational officer to 50 custodial officers at Joliet."

I should tell the hon. member our ratio—throughout the department—not in our best places like the Ontario Training Centre—the Brampton Training Centre—where I think it is probably 1 to 3—but in our whole system is 1 to 30. And this is Joliet, the showplace as the hon. member suggests—they have one vocational officer to 50—

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, may I rise on a point of order again?

Some hon. members: Sit down, sit down.

Mr. Shulman: May I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Chairman: Order! Will the hon. member please state the point of order?

Mr. Shulman: My point of order is that the Minister is once again misleading the House and he has deliberately ignored the comments which I made—that university and other staffs were giving vocational training and as such they are not on the staff and do not count in the figures. He is giving you false figures.

Mr. Chairman: I see nothing in the Minister's remarks which could be considered as out of order. It is just part of the normal debate. The hon. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Is the hon. member suggesting that we do not have advice from outside workers, that we do not work with universities? I just pointed out how we are working with universities. Our staff are taking courses at universities. We are working with Sheridan College. I told him the other day he should take it easy because I have gone the circuit, I have heard these stories, I have read all the wonderful brochures.

You know, in some Legislature in the United States somebody is getting up and holding up our annual report and saying, "here is what they do in the great province of Ontario, it is the greatest place in the world, why do you not do it down here?"

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I want to get this on record. "We speak of rehabilitation," said Ogilvie, "but we provide only one vocational officer to 50 custodial officers at Joliet”.

In fact it is backward even to call them custodial officers now. “We have given our state a halfway house programme and work release programme, but we have not given a full professional department to administer these programmes,” added Ogilvie.

I can give him lots more in this thing, but he mentioned Joliet the other day. I could also give him, if he would like, some other figures relating to Joliet and I am sure the hon. member would forego me this pleasure because he was doing a pretty good job of Joliet the other day.

On the success of parole: The United States Board of Parole, the percentage paroles granted, 37 per cent; the percentage violated, 29.8 per cent.

Alaska—well we will not bother about that.

Arkansas—76.26 per cent granted; 22.7 per cent success.

California—we have not got the number of paroles granted but there is 21 per cent violations.

Connecticut—granted paroles to 47 per cent of those eligible and 20 per cent violated.

Delaware—paroles granted, 38 per cent; paroles violated 36.8 per cent.

District of Columbia—granted, 30.9 per cent; paroles violated, 31.3 per cent.

Florida—I do not have the number granted—but 27 per cent violated.

Mr. Sargent: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, we are supposed to be talking paroles.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Just a moment. Suppose we just eliminate all the others and say Illinois—that great state which has Joliet—has granted 58 per cent of those eligible for parole and they have such a wonderful rehabilitation system that 35.4 per cent were violated.

Ontario—I will just read it out of the annual report on page 59 because the hon. member should have seen it there—our failure ratio is only 14.49 per cent—better than any of the states that I see here—against Illinois which has a violation of 35.4 per cent.

I wonder who treats their inmates in a more humane fashion? I wonder who does a better job on rehabilitation?

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, if I may, first of all the figures that the Minister has quoted as usual he does not understand. To explain this, to compare the parole violations in one jurisdiction that has one set of laws governing parole with another jurisdiction that has a different set of laws governing paroles, obviously is meaningless.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is what I was telling the hon. member about Joliet.

Mr. Shulman: Why did you not remember it from one day to the next? You just said the other day how meaningless it was when you go ahead and do exactly the same thing yourself.

Second, the figures he quoted about Illinois, I am quite sure, are correct; the figures about Joliet I am sure are a different story again. And again he did not understand that Joliet is one prison that happens to have a good rehabilitation programme. There are other areas that—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Why do you not compare it with our Brampton Training Centre?

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, we are here to try and—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Compare it with Brampton Training Centre.

Mr. Shulman:—pick up the better ideas from other jurisdictions and bring them here, not compare the worst things and be satisfied as a result. Now the Minister has said something about education and unfortunately in our reformatories there is no way to get a university degree.

In my opening remarks the other day I mentioned Joliet and I mentioned how men can graduate from there and get the university degrees and go on to do other work and I have another similar quotation here. This is from the Globe and Mail of September 20 last, from Zena Cherry’s column, and it is a very brief quotation. I would just like to read it:

This month Sweden has opened what it claims to be the world’s first university prison. It is in the ancient university town of Uppsala and is equipped—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It is Uppsala, I was there.

Mr. Shulman: Well you did not learn much:

—is equipped and entitled to award degrees of matriculation up—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I will tell you what I learned in a minute.

Mr. Shulman: To continue:

—up to Bachelor of Arts in almost any subject: Students have been selected from Swedish penitentiaries and will be relieved of regular prison duties. Officials say it may be the world's least expensive prison and least expensive university to run. It has a regular staff of only four and other teachers are brought in as needed. There are no guards whatsoever. How humane, how intelligent.

Now I am asking the Minister—and I have other examples here from other jurisdictions—do you have any plans for the near future as you like to say, meaning some time in the next 20 years, to bring in university courses in such a way that prisoners may take these courses and either complete them if they are in long enough or continue at university and get their degree as a result?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, the first thing I learned about Uppsala—as the hon. member should have learned, and he is doing exactly the same as he did about Joliet—Uppsala is a prison for long-term prisoners. The average term in our reformatories is between four and five months, and anybody who suggests that we can help them get a university education in four or five months is just being unrealistic.

Now insofar as helping anybody who is perhaps taking a university course to continue to take it, he knows the answer to that because we have already started that under the pilot project; and awaiting the new federal legislation under sections 19 and 20. Our live-in and work-out programme is going to permit us to allow anyone who can be trusted outside of an institution to continue their university education outside the institution and live in at night. So that is the simple answer to that one.

Mr. Shulman: I would like to follow along on that, please.

Mr. Ben: On a point of order.

Mr. Chairman: A point of order?

Mr. Ben: Mr. Chairman, I would like very much to join this debate but I have been looking through the estimates and I cannot find how much is being voted for Joliet.

Mr. Chairman: I would hardly think that constitutes a point of order. The hon. member for Port Arthur has been trying to get the floor for quite some time.

Mr. Shulman: Just to follow this live-in, work-out programme, would the Minister inform me how the earnings of the workers-out are to be apportioned. As you know in California I explained the other day how the earnings are divided between the state, between the families and the prisoner himself. How does the Minister intend to handle that particular problem?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The whole matter is now being studied to decide how much we will charge them for their keep. I cannot tell the hon. member what it will be now, but by the time the programme gets into effect I will have the figure.

Mr. Shulman: And what about the balance after you take off the keep?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, that is his.

Mr. R. H. Knight (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman, this is not a point of order.

Mr. Shulman: Who said it was a point of order?

Mr. Knight: Well I was recognized. You got up on a point of order.

Mr. Shulman: I did not get up on a point of order, I was questioning the Minister, I was completing my line of questioning.

Mr. Chairman: I gave the hon. member for High Park the privilege of speaking because he said he had one or two more minutes, and he wanted to clear up the one point. So that the hon. member for Port Arthur—

Mr. Shulman: I did not hear the answer, unfortunately.

Mr. Chairman: Would the hon. Minister repeat the answer?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Always depending upon how much the man is earning, first he will be charged for his keep at a certain figure which we will establish. If he is earning a certain amount, if we deem it necessary, we will put away for his release, a certain amount will be given to his family, and he will be paying taxes, whatever is required of a citizen on the outside, providing there are sufficient funds to do it.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Port Arthur.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, it is most difficult to get a word in edgewise here, but I would like to go back to something that the hon. Minister said a little while ago when he was telling us that only 14.9 per cent of paroles are violated. How does he reconcile this with the fact that according to his statistics on page 94, 42 per cent—

Mr. Chairman: May I respectfully point out to the hon. member that the hon. member was reading out from some tables pertaining to parole. We were not debating the item of parole in the estimates.

Mr. Knight: Well, the statistics are misleading to the House and the province if the report is not read, Mr. Chairman, and I think they should be clarified, while I have a point here.

Mr. Chairman: I would say that anything pertaining to matters of parole in any respect should be left until we come to that particular vote.

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Chairman, that always seems to apply to me but it does not seem to apply to anyone else.

Mr. Chairman: It applies to the committee.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. I respect your position, but you allowed the Minister to go on at some length about parole, and you nodded to me, "yes he was going to talk on parole." I said, "may we talk on parole," and you said, "yes we can."

Mr. Chairman: No, I—

Mr. Sargent: Well, you gave me the impression that we could Mr. Chairman. Now I think that when my colleague from Port Arthur wishes to speak on a point brought up on a point of order, he can make it a point of order, he can make it a point of order if he wishes to.

Mr. Chairman: Order please!

If the hon. member will recall, I pointed out some time ago, about one hour ago, that in my view we had gone on to parole in my absence, because, when I returned, there was some discussion on parole. But the hon. member straightened me out and insisted that we had not come yet to parole. Now, the only matter pertaining to parole that has been discussed were some statistics read out by the hon. Minister, which in my view is not debate on parole. Therefore, if there is nothing further on provincial jails and reformatories, we will move to parole. However, the hon. member for High Park is on his feet.

Mr. Ben: I rose simultaneously with the hon. member for High Park. Do you recall, you kept on looking to see whom you would recognize, and I said to you, he was talking so I sat down. The point about paroles did not arise until about 20 minutes later. In the interval every time he sat down I popped up, but the Minister beat me to it. Mr. Chairman, I want to go back to the very same point—

Mr. Chairman: Order! Would the hon. member for Humber indicate the portion of the estimates that he would like to discuss?

Mr. Ben: I want to deal with the psychiatrist which the hon. member for Grey-Bruce ended up discussing. I rose when he sat down. It has to do with the statement of the hon. Minister, still on the same point.

The hon. member for Grey-Bruce asked, who was running the store? The hon. Minister said that he would engage all the psychiatrists that they could get, that he would engage all the social workers that they could get, if—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Psychologists.

Mr. Ben: Oh, psychologists, "if they would accept the civil service rate," that is what he said. What irks me is that he did answer the question put by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce, he said that he, the Minister, is not running the store, but the Civil Service Association is running the store. That is, in essence, what you said, that you cannot get adequate staff because you do not set the salaries, but the civil service does. In other words, you admit that you are not minding the store that the hon. member for Grey-Bruce referred to.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well as long as the hon. member says, that is his interpretation of what I said, I have no objection to it, because it is not what I said, and not what I meant.

Mr. Ben: Well I do not know what you meant because you did not say what you meant. You said that the civil service set the pay scale.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It is very simple, when his party takes over this government, thirty or forty years from today, he will find out that every Minister would like to set the salaries for his own department but there would be chaos if he were permitted to do that. They would obviously, in the first place, be competing with each other for staff. Where my colleague, the Minister of Health, may offer $50,000 a year, I would offer $75,000; after all, it is just the taxpayers' money, you know, and it would be chaos. The point is that the only way you can run the store, as he calls it, is the way most civilized governments run it—a Civil Service Commission, who, through negotiation with staff and their representatives, decide upon certain salary schedules and this salary schedule is what goes. This is what applies, and I have nothing to do with that. I could, and I may, make representation to Treasury Board that I cannot get certain staff, and that I want more money for staff, but they have to take that into consideration in respect of all of the other demands they have. In this manner, they come to a conclusion with the Civil Service Commission and negotiate with staff as to what the salaries are. Therefore I do not have anything to say about it except to make a recommendation and then appeal to the Treasury Board if I feel so inclined.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Chairman, I just want to tell the hon. Minister that if he wants to overcome "Kaos," get "Smart."

It being 6.00 o'clock p.m., the House took recess.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, MARCH 18, 1969

The House resumed at 8 o'clock, p.m.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF CORRECTIONAL SERVICES (Concluded)

Hon. T. L. Wells (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Chairman, with your permission, I wonder, before you start on these estimates, if you could draw to the attention of the House that we have in the galleries tonight about 250 constituents from the riding of Scarborough North, many of them members of the Scarborough North Progressive Conservative Association.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Mr. Chairman, I would also like to bring to your attention there is a large delegation of young Liberals from York Centre riding in the east gallery.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Chairman, in the Speaker's gallery there is a delegation, mainly from the Riverdale riding, of the members of the Order of the Eastern Star.

Mr. Chairman: I am sure that all guests are most welcome to the House tonight.

On vote 402:

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Mr. Chairman, are we now on the paroles? I would like to get this over with, you know, so I—

Mr. Chairman: Order! Is there any further discussion on vote 402, other than paroles? The hon. member for High Park.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): A few brief matters, Mr. Chairman. I have been worried about another of the practices of this particular department, and rather than put it in my words, I could summarize it most easily by reading a letter from the customer of the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Grossman) who has sent it to me. This is dated November 19, 1968, and is a practice which apparently must be fairly common, because I have three letters from three different inmates on this particular problem.

This young lady has written to me to intervene on her behalf with the Minister about a certain problem, which I have already done. I will leave that portion of the letter out, but I will go ahead with the balance.

While you are speaking to the Minister I wonder if you would also mention the fact that letters are being sent out to members of families, fiancés, etc., who are listed as members to whom one may write. This has happened twice in my case. In two instances, the persons advised of my incarceration were unaware that I was even in trouble.

I could understand their being advised if it were a question of parole, etc., but only three weeks after one's arrival seems rather upsetting, especially when I had no intention of requesting assistance in any way from these people.

I am told this information comes from the parole board office.

Sincerely,
Kathy H.

I want to ask the Minister if he will see that this particular practice is desisted in, because obviously it can be a very severe blow to the morale if relatives are informed of a person being incarcerated who does not wish them to know so.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Is the hon. member, Mr. Chairman, referring to an inmate of an institution who has received parole, or is it prior to parole?

Mr. Shulman: Yes, she has only been in three weeks, and after this three weeks letters were sent to all the people who apparently were listed on her card as being relatives, either being informed that she was in or requesting certain information and mentioning, en passant, that she was in jail; and she was quite upset about this.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Apparently this is a form which is sent out to the names which are provided by the inmate for the purpose of getting information which would help the parole board arrive at a decision.

Mr. Shulman: But surely you are not thinking of parole three weeks after the person comes in.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am advised that the process starts as soon as possible so that by the time the person is eligible for parole they have accumulated as much information as possible.

Mr. Shulman: Well, this is reasonable. Then may I suggest to the Minister that he inform the inmates when you are having them list these names that these people will be advised if they are in jail, because this has come as quite a shock to at least three inmates who thought that at some subsequent date, after they have had a chance themselves to inform their relatives of the situation, this would go out. Instead of which, the relatives were informed by this form letter, with great embarrassment on both sides.

Could you, in future, inform the inmates that the relatives are being written to?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am advised, Mr. Chairman, that there are quite a few inmates who, when they are convicted and are committed to an institution, ask us not to let anybody know that they have been committed. Subsequent to that—presumably this may be one of those cases—when they have been asked to give us other information they have done so. Then a questionnaire went out asking for whatever information they could give us in respect of helping the board consider them for parole.

Mr. Shulman: The point I am making is that inmates are not aware that you are going to be writing to these people at this time. They thought perhaps this would occur a year later when they became eligible for parole. So would you please tell the inmates that you may be writing to these people immediately. That is all I am asking.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I assure the hon. member I will look into this practice and see if in fact there should be some change in it. I am not certain about the procedures of this particular aspect of the parole myself. I will look into it.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, I have another brief matter I would like to refer to.

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): You said that at 4 o'clock.

Mr. Shulman: Well, when I say brief I mean two or three days, so do not be in a rush, gentlemen.

I have a copy here of Time magazine, October 4, 1968, and they detail at some length, a new programme which was brought in in Colorado to try and improve the lot of convicts and also to help in getting them jobs after they leave prison.

I will not take the time of the House by reading this whole programme. The Minister, I am sure, is aware of it, but briefly it consists of taking teams of convicts from the state penitentiary at Cannon City.

Each team goes out with only one unarmed guard. They go on speaking tours throughout the states with a double purpose. First of all to warn others about the perils of crime; and second to tell of the routine in the prisons and of the work that is done there in an effort to get the support of the public for improvements in our prison system.

I certainly think we could well use that here. We are well aware that the Minister is making efforts to make improvements and with very little support, I believe, from his Cabinet, because we see what little improvements we do get. I was wondering if—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Be careful, you almost gave me a compliment.

Mr. Shulman: Not quite. Mr. Minister I wonder if you would study this programme and give it some consideration, because it appears to me to have great merit. I would like to point out that in the time this programme has been in effect, they have now spoken to some 750,000 Coloradians. They have sent out prisoners who have had very serious convictions, things like kidnapping, and there has not been one attempted escape. So it has worked out remarkably well in Colorado.

I am requesting that you give this programme some consideration.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I have read about it and am very much interested. I would like to study the results of their efforts a little longer before we attempt to put it into effect here.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Mr. Chairman, before leaving this vote I would like to say a word. I do not think too much has been said about the rehabilitation of female offenders, adult or otherwise. And to perhaps end this vote I feel it may be in order to inspire the Minister, if not to anything else, to greater and better things.

To forward a commendation, we have visited Ingleside and we were favourably impressed, I think I can fairly say, by the way in which female offenders are treated. They were able to dress in their own clothes. They had their rooms decorated in a very commodious fashion. They had dolls and various types of decor around which was completely civilized, and as a matter of fact the whole deportment of the institution was such as to be highly rehabilitative. Maybe so well was it laid out on the whole that many of the girls for the first time in their lives enjoyed half human surroundings and a decent atmosphere. Some of them did not want to leave.

Recently I had gone up and seen the opening of the Vanier Institute, and attended on that particular affair but was unable to go through the building—there were just too many people there. We will have to go on another occasion to see precisely whether you are carrying into the Vanier, in its plenitude, all the things that you attempted in the houses at Ingleside. I get the impression that there was a more restrictive atmosphere. There seemed to be dormitories and actually cells there. But I will give it a fair chance and we will wait and see what there is.

All I wish to say in winding it up: Is it the Minister's intention, and I sincerely trust that it is—you cannot duplicate the same situation with male offenders—but is it the Minister's long range intention to treat adult male offenders at Guelph in the same way? With respect to a place like Guelph, which you know I have inveighed against in this House and will continue to do so until the whole system is altered—is that the direction that you intend to somehow, analogously treat male offenders in the future, adult male offenders—in the same way. Because only under such circumstances, and in such surroundings, and with such a sense of human dignity, and with at least some kind of gesture towards civilization—which is wholly lacking, if I may say so, in the Guelph situation—only in this way, it seems to me, will you bring young people into states of mind which will make them amenable to the rules of society. Not to make them in any way knuckle under, because this would take any individuality out of them, but to make them into law-abiding human beings with a great personal initiative and a desire, when they leave the institution, to rehabilitate themselves.

Is it your intention to have the same breakdown, the same unit area, the same type of camaraderie that exists; the same access to communications media, the same right to comport our own lives as we see fit, to dress in a certain fashion, not to be regimented, all that freedom and the give and take that exists in the female institution?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I can tell the hon. member that is precisely our aim and that is why we have as our first goal to reduce the size of the institutions to no larger than will accommodate 200. That is precisely the point. I am sure he will find that not only is the programme going to be continued in Vanier that was in effect at Ingleside and at Mercer in the last number of years, but it will be extended.

And we will be able to improve upon it because of the physical surroundings. I take the liberty of sending to the hon. member this brochure—I do not know if he was at the opening, he would then have received one. This will explain precisely what is planned to be continued and expanded at Vanier Centre.

Mr. Shulman: Perhaps all the members should get one.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I did not want to be accused of wasteful printing again. If the hon. members are interested in this I would be very glad to send them all a copy.

Mr. Chairman: Is there anything further than after care and parole?

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): I should like to ask the hon. Minister to tell us, as of this moment, what is the percentage among female people in the institutions for which he has the responsibility of Indian women?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, Mr. Chairman, we would not have a breakdown that way. This may be, in files on social histories, I rather imagine for the purposes of the treatment staff, but I could not give him a breakdown on the basis of race, religion, colour, or anything of that nature.

Mr. Sopha: Well, may I ask it this way? Is there any improvement in the situation to which the hon. Minister confessed last year, that is, of the shame of the fact that a far greater proportion of Indian women are in our institutions than Indians represent in our population?

Mr. Shulman: It has not changed, just take a look at the institutions.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Does the hon. member mean are there fewer?

Mr. Sopha: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well if I do not have the figures, obviously I cannot tell him whether there are fewer or more. I can tell him this, we are very much concerned with the situation particularly as it exists in places like Kenora district jail and so on. I can also tell him that we have made some contact with the social worker from the Indian centre here in Toronto. We have had some discussions with her, and we have established a liaison with her concerning the problems of some of the Indian women who get into our institutions. We are hoping to be able to expand on this too.

Mr. Sopha: May I ask this additional question? Has any progress been made toward the implementation of a more humane policy of—as I suggest, and I will take the responsibility, of putting this adjectival phrase on it—of stopping putting people in jail for infractions against The Liquor Control Act?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, this again is a matter for the estimates of The Department of the Attorney General. I have nothing to do with what happens prior to them to being committed to our institutions.

I am sure the hon. member will know that I agree wholeheartedly that there are a lot of these people who should not be coming to our correctional institutions. I have said this publicly and I say it now, and I can say it without fear of clashing with any opinions within the government.

As the hon. member knows, we have set up detoxification centres and there is one, in fact, now in Kenora which presumably is reducing the Indian inmate population in Kenora district jail. Hopefully, this will prove to be successful, and hopefully, we will have a vastly increased detoxification system so that these people will not have to go through the courts and correctional institutions.

Mr. Sopha: One additional question: Has any progress been made with the federal government to persuade that government to take over the care or the responsibility for the custody of people in our institutions for periods longer than one year?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: This is, Mr. Chairman, a subject which is now under consideration—if it has not already come to its conclusions—of the Ouimet committee which will be reporting to the federal government. We should have this handed down, I am advised by my Deputy, within a couple of months.

I am not too hopeful that this is what they will recommend. As I mentioned earlier, I rather imagine that the recommendations are going to be the reverse. I think now—and I am giving only a personal opinion—that correctional people in this part of the country anyway have come to the conclusion that the provincial system will probably be a better system for handling some of these inmates than the federal system.

Not that we are anxious to have them. But I think they are more anxious for us to take over more responsibility than the federal government. However, as I say, this is a matter now under consideration by the Ouimet committee.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, permit me to say I have never understood why in the Constitutional debate that we have heard so far there has been a great reluctance, led by the leader of this government, to talk about areas where there might be a trade of jurisdiction, to define specific areas here this might occur.

The member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) shied away from coming down to specific areas. But it has always seemed to me to be a tremendous anomaly in the working of our constitutional system that the federal government which has responsibility for the criminal law, determines those types of misconduct for which people will go to jail.

No one will argue that the great majority of the people who are in our institutions are there for infractions of the Criminal Code, a federal statute.

It is a great anomaly to me that the federal government can define why people should go to jail, and then expect the people of the province to pay the cost of their incarceration. And they do that under the heading of the administration of justice in the province.

It strikes me that if you want to talk about new federalism, co-operative federalism, that perhaps the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) and the other Premiers when they are down in Ottawa, might suggest to the federal government that they start to take over the financial responsibility for those that the federal government order shall go to jail.

That accords with my a priori feeling of common sense in a working participatory or co-operative, or whatever other adjective you want, to put on an ideal form of federalism.

I am rather surprised at the Minister's answer tonight, Mr. Chairman, because for almost all of the ten years I have been here, if not all of them, I remember successive Ministers of Correctional Services, and Reform Institutions before that, saying that negotiations are going on with the federal government. And like a lot of other things in this country, those negotiations never seem to come to fruition, never crystallize in any action.

A few years ago all the talk was—and I followed this very closely—that the federal government would take responsibility for all people serving over one year. Well, according to the Minister's reply tonight, that no longer seems to be the mode. It is going to be some other arrangement.

Before sitting down I want to point out another anomaly. As I have said, the federal government determines what shall be proscribed conduct, and follow it with the jail sentence. The province pays for the custody, and yet it is the federal government that says when they will get out. If they are in more than a year, an application to get them out has to be made to the national parole board. Am I wrong in that?

I understood that the provincial parole board has jurisdiction over the indeterminate part of the sentence?

Hon. Mr. Crossman: It has nothing to do with the length of the sentence.

Mr. Sopha: That is right. Well, most of the jurisdiction then, or a substantial part of it, is with the national parole board. Whenever I try to get one out—that is fairly frequently—it is most often to the national parole board—

Hon. Mr. Crossman: They are on definite sentences.

Mr. Sopha: —parole board to which I write in respect of definite sentences.

So, here is a terribly mixed up criss-cross of jurisdictions. And being the centralist that I am, I am a centralist to this extent, that I am rather in a hurry to give the federal government responsibilities constitutionally that will cost that government money. Now is that being a good provincial centralist, I ask you?

I am willing to give it to them, and here is one area—the one they are sitting at around the table—that the provinces might well say to the federal government if you want that freedom to say what shall be proscribed in this country then you put up the money to keep these people in custody. I think that is only fair. I do not really see how the federal government could object to that.

But what do we ask, on behalf of the people of Ontario. Here in times of retrenchment and penury and cutbacks and all those other financial nightmares we are asked to vote $46,422,000 to take care of people that the federal government says shall go to jail. That, to me, seems to be part of this federal system that is awfully unfair and a tremendous burden upon the provinces.

I merely urge upon the Minister that we get back to the vogue of two or three years ago where we were of a mind that that government would take the responsibility for those in jail, for more than one year. Indeed, I firmly believe that section 91, setting out as it does, responsibility for the criminal law in this modern age, 1969 must be read in line with good principles of criminology that include rescue and rehabilitation, and that government should assume a good deal more of the burden. And in what better area, Mr. Chairman, can one logically argue that there ought to be uniform standards across the country. Why should custody of people meet with wide variations from province to province, from regions to regions?

Finally, sir, I cannot sit down without referring to the fact that I am perennially grieved that in Ontario, which always leads the way—if the Minister of Tourism and Information (Mr. Auld) gets up; Ontario is leading the way in his jurisdiction; the Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Randall) is leading the way; the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Stewart), of course, is always leading the way, according to the last word from Venus and Mars—

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): No, he is not!

Mr. Sopha: Well, Ontario is leading the way. It is always leading the way in the number of people in jail. Ontario per capita leads the way in the nation, 2.5 times the number in jail compared with our sister province of Quebec, Ontario has 2.5 times as many in the "crowbar hotels" across this province, and the population of Ontario, is over five compared to Quebec.

Well, it is not a statistic to be particularly proud of. In this great province of opportunity, there ought to be built into that slogan, the notion that people in Ontario have a greater opportunity to stay out of the hoosegow, or at least an equal opportunity with people in other provinces. But they do not.

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of Revenue): Tell us the criminal statistics.

Mr. Sopha: Well, do not speak up because Ontario leads the way in the numbers jailed for infractions of The Liquor Control Act, which will be of great interest to the Minister of Revenue bearing in mind the amount of money he gets from the sale of that nefarious substance.

Well, what are the figures? I always have them handy. Liquor convictions in 1966 in Ontario 56,290; Quebec 15,440.

An hon. member: A very sober lot.

Mr. Sopha: The moral of the story is they can hold the hootch, in Quebec.

Mr. Singer: You left, three zeros off the end.

Mr. Sopha: Now, those are just convictions for being drunk in a public place, which does not include the Legislature of Ontario. Those are just for that one offence. Four times the number of convictions in Ontario over Quebec.

Will the Minister of Tourism and Information put that in the next pamphlet?

No wonder it costs us $46 million in times of retrenchment. The member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Downer), who shares some responsibility in the rehabilitation of these people would appreciate what I meant. No wonder it costs that kind of money with the large numbers that we have going in. It is a disgrace to this province.

It is nothing short of a disgrace to go to the magistrate's court and the provincial judge's courts, as I do most Mondays and Fridays, and see the number of people that funnel through those institutions on their way to jail for infractions of The Liquor Control Act. People suffering economic dislocation who cannot pay the fine are trundled off to jail, a very discriminatory offence.

If you have some money in your pocket, you get drunk in a public place, you can pay the fine, and the police will probably take you home the same night. I have no personal experience, mind you, but I am told. If you have not got the money, of course, the law discriminates against you. You are put in and usually sentenced.

You know the way the formula goes—$10 and costs or five days the first time, $25 and costs or 30 days the second time; and the third time an automatic three months, no option of a fine. That is the system of jurisprudence that operates in this province.

Mr. Shulman: What has that got to do with reforms?

Mr. Sopha: It is nothing short of a disgrace.

An hon. member: You would not understand.

Mr. Sopha: It has something to do with the people for whom this Minister is responsible, and is one of the chief deficiencies.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I have been handling two departments' estimates here for three days.

Mr. Sopha: All right. The chief deficiency is the fallacy of the thinking here that the government can be divided into departments. That is the fallacy.

We live in a total environment and in a continuum and there really is no departmentalization of life in this province.

I have been waiting for a long time to make that point. Notwithstanding that the estimates in the government divide up into 22, it is all part of one protest, and—

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, can you not keep order?

Mr. Sopha: All right, I have just about reached the end of my remarks, and this, I must admit, is an annual refrain on my part, but it strikes at the very root of any feeling for humanity we might have as legislators. Some day, soon, before many years go past, we must put an end to this assault on human dignity, stop putting people in our jails and to the care of this Minister and his staff when they are really suffering from diseases either physical or sociological.

You would think that in a day and age when we are putting people on the moon, that social appreciation of the afflictions that affect other people would have caught up some distance, so that we could be accused of being more humane and civilized than we are.

It is incumbent upon all of us, Mr. Chairman, to call attention to these things, and these things are far more basic in our approach to a philosophy of this department than those technical matters from Joliet that the millionaire prattles away about day after day.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, while the hon. member has, of course, gone far afield, and he has given, as he said, his annual speech on this, I do not see anything wrong with that. If it is a good enough subject, let him give it. I agree, as I have said before, that as far as I am concerned there are a lot of these people who should not be sentenced to a penal institution. I agree with him on that, and I certainly agree wholeheartedly with him that the federal government should take more of the responsibility in this respect. I will certainly talk to my leader about it and tell him that he will have the support of the hon. member for Sudbury, hopefully his whole party too, when he goes to the federal government and says: "You make these laws, you take over the responsibility."

Because there are a lot of people listening today, I think that I would not want a wrong impression to go abroad here. What the hon. member is referring to is about the federal government taking over all those who have a sentence of over a year or more. There would be no sentence between six months and a year, and all those under six months would be in provincial institutions. This is actually part of the famous Fauteux report. I do not know how old that is now.

The trouble is that all that happened to the Fauteux report was that it was held up. The federal government did not do a thing about it all these years, and the provincial jurisdictions were afraid to go ahead in spending money on buildings and programmes when they did not know whether some of the recommendations of the Fauteux report were going to be implemented.

The hon. members will recall that this was the explanation I gave them, which they thought was an excuse at the time, as to why we stopped planning the new women's institution at that particular stage. Then another report came out from the federal government, I think it was by the late Mr. Favreau, that they were going to make some changes. Perhaps it was Cardin, I cannot recall.

So we stopped planning on the Mercer at that moment, because there was some talk about the federal government taking over some of this jurisdiction of the females.

This is what has happened to all of these reports—the Fauteux, the Archambault—and nothing has happened at the federal government level.

I agree with the hon. member there was a tremendous amount of confusion in respect of definite and indefinite sentences and the National Parole Board and the Ontario Parole Board and so on. We have done our best to eliminate this duplication.

We have, in the first place, asked the federal government at least at this stage to give us complete control of those inmates who are within our own institutions, so that we can eliminate the indefinite sentence. We would have one sentence so it does not confuse inmates, the public, legislators and sometimes the lawyers as well. And we have asked for this.

This is one of those things the federal Solicitor-General said he would take into consideration. We have asked them to equalize their statutory remission and ours. In fact we do not have it. They have agreed to this and it is going into effect. I think this is in the bill before the House of Commons.

We have done everything we possibly can to eliminate these confused areas.

I do not want anyone to have the impression that I have given as my opinion that we should have the control within our jurisdiction all of the people that the hon. member has said should be, in his view, the responsibility, financial and otherwise, of the federal government. I was merely stating to him what I felt was a growing opinion amongst correctional people. They felt there was not too much action coming from the federal government, and they were getting more action in the provinces, particularly in Ontario, if I may say so. And they have more hope that more progress will be made here.

I was only giving him, as I say, my opinion as to what their feeling was. I am not saying that the Ouimet committee will report this because I do not know that this is, in fact, what they will recommend. I do not know about the question on the other matter which the hon. member raised. It is repeated every year and I repeat it again.

I think there are too many people going to the correctional institutions, I wholeheartedly agree with him. He talks of the detoxification centre programme of this government as a step towards this, and hopefully this will be a better way of dealing with these people, as I have mentioned earlier.

Mr. Sopha: What I am saying in an age of radicalism is that I am willing to take the responsibility of saying what I think should happen with people picked up for being drunk. There should be no stopover in a magistrate's court at all. The process should be a revolving door. There is no necessity, in my view, for those people to come before a provincial judge—formerly called a magistrate—at all.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I believe this is what is happening in the detoxification programme.

Mr. Sopha: Right: The police pick them up, take them some place, sober them up, and let them go.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is precisely what the detoxification programme does.

Mr. Sopha: Happily, if they have a home to go to, they take them to the home.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: They are already doing that. The government has already started such a programme.

Mr. Sopha: Well, let us get it to catch on like wildfire, and in no time at all—

Mr. Singer: How many do you affect in that; three, four, five? How many a week?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is why you have to talk to the Attorney General (Mr. Wishart) about that.

Mr. Sopha: Well, let us get it to spread like wildfire across the province. We get them out of the magistrate's court entirely and then the magistrate, pardon me, the provincial judges, can get on with the trial of really important things. But it is bloody ridiculous—is that too strong a word—I say to my friend from Sarnia (Mr. Bullbrook). You go to magistrate's court in the morning and you will sit there for an hour while he deals with the drunks and the adjournments.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Everybody agrees with this.

Mr. Sopha: And by the time noon comes round people who are terribly inconvenienced finally have their cases called. I have always said, adjournments first, drunks second, QCs third.

Mr. Chairman: Order please!

The Chairman would like to determine if there is anything further on vote 402 other than after-care and parole. All right, the hon. member for Wentworth?

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Thank you.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out just exactly what is happening in the way of rehabilitation in the area of sex offenders.

It seems to me that the police right across this province are able, whenever a sex crime occurs, to go out and pick up all of the known sex criminals and lug them all in and pick out the one who committed the crime and have him sent away. And when he is sent away—as I understand it—what happens is that he goes into Millbrook and he stays there for whatever the length of his sentence may be, other than for the last six weeks. At that time he is moved from there to Brown's clinic in Mimico and he spends six weeks there receiving psychiatric help.

After that he is turned back out into society and he becomes one of the known sex criminals. Then the police at another point come around and pick him up and away he goes again.

I am kind of curious to know exactly what takes place during the time that he is in Millbrook, for example. Does he receive constant psychiatric assistance? If no, why not?

There is very little consolation to the parents of a child who has been attacked, or to a victim who has been attacked, to know that the police can find out who did it. It is very little consolation to them to know that the person is going to be put away for a period of time.

What we really need is a programme that will assure that we can do something in the way of rehabilitating these people. Perhaps what we have to do is to have the parole extended at the end; that if there are going to be paroles, have it extended with the proviso that they are going to spend a considerable length of that parole time under psychiatric care.

Mr. Chairman: Let us not get on to parole.

Mr. Deans: I realize, but that is part of the rehabilitation service, it is part of the whole programme, and I just wonder if the—

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): You cannot mention parole.

Mr. Deans: It happens, though, to be part of the in-reformatory care and out-of-reformatory care. I wonder if the Minister could tell me just what does go on at Millbrook? How much psychiatric assistance is there available there for these kinds of people who are sex criminals, and whether or not he is contemplating changing the system so that they will be under a more constant surveillance, and out of necessity go before psychiatrists and take psychiatric assistance and care?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I thought I had pretty well explained this the other day. However, there is some confusion here. The hon. member, in the first place, appears to be talking about the ordinary homosexual in the first instance and about pedophiles in the second.

Mr. Deans: I am talking about the whole area.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, there is no treatment programme to date for the homosexual as such. He is merely put in Millbrook which is a maximum security institution and I have explained the reason for that. I explained what we had programmed for Millbrook to become a regional detention centre; that eventually the clinics at Mimico were to be expanded, and this is being proceeded with now—they are being expanded, and there will be a total programme there for homosexuals generally.

In the meantime, we have to have some priorities, and the priority was given to the treatment of pedophiles because homosexuals are not necessarily dangerous to the public, as the hon. member will appreciate.

In fact, as everyone here knows, the federal government is considering changing the Criminal Code so that homosexuality, as such, is not going to be an offence. It is the paedophile who is the danger to the child, and it is the paedophile for whom we do have a programme, and it is not just six weeks.

We bring him out of Millbrook for the last five or six months of his sentence and he is taken to the clinic at Mimico. There is a treatment programme for him and it is rather a novel one. I do not know how successful it is, but he is being treated for his sickness. As I say, there had to be some priority and this is the priority given.

When we make the change-over to the clinics at Mimico all sex offenders will be taken there.

Mr. Deans: If I might enquire, how many psychiatrists do you have at Mimico at the moment who are engaged in this programme?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mimico?

Mr. Deans: Yes, at Mimico. How many psychiatrists are engaged in this programme at the moment?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I believe it is three part-time psychiatrists.

Mr. Deans: And how many patients would you have there at any one given time?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: About 75.

Mr. Deans: So, in actual fact then their contact with the psychiatrists would be minimal, there would not be—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There are other workers there besides psychiatrists.

Mr. Deans: I realize that.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There is all sorts of treatment, and therapy and so on. It is not all just a matter of psychiatry. There are all types of workers there.

Mr. Deans: In the case of Millbrook where they are going to be transferred from Millbrook to Mimico, what type of psychiatric programme is there at Millbrook?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There is none.

Mr. Deans: None at all? You were saying about the homosexuals, there is no treatment at all for them and so they go in and they just sit there and wait and they come out and they are exactly as when they went in.

It makes one wonder at the advisability of having them there at all if they are just going to go in and sit and come out. It just means they are not going to be in society for that length of time.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is right. But what can we do about that?

Mr. Deans: You have indicated that there will be a programme initiated in the not too distant future. Is it such a difficult and costly thing to initiate this programme now?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, everything is difficult and everything is costly anyway. As I said earlier, there has to be some priority. We gave the priority to those who are a greater danger to the public—the paedophile.

As far as the homosexual is concerned, I do not know how many we have at Millbrook. I think I mentioned earlier, 65 or so at Millbrook. That does not mean that 65 homosexuals are necessarily going to be the type of homosexual who are going to be considered by the sociologists or professional staff as being those who need treatment.

I mentioned the amendments to the Criminal Code, so apparently somebody is deciding it may very well be that these people are not treatable and so there would be no need, perhaps, to treat those people who do not want to be treated. I imagine, in fact I am pretty sure, there are some homosexuals who would like to be treated and to be cured if possible. But there has to be some priority.

The move at Millbrook requires half a dozen other moves which are in the process of being made now and which I explained, I believe, in detail last session.

Mr. Deans: Just one final thing on this. In the case of the people who come to the Brown clinic at Mimico for the five or six months as you mentioned—and I am pleased to know it is longer than I had thought—with the three part-time psychiatrists and the staff that is there, at the time they are released, from that time on is there any programme that assures that they will be constantly afforded the opportunity for psychiatric and other kinds of assistance, say, over an extended period of time.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Those who are on parole, of course, will be supervised. The hon. member will appreciate that unless they are on parole or are prepared to accept voluntary supervision there would not be any good in forcing them.

Mr. Deans: Would you then consider such a programme that might insist that everyone who is released has some period of parole during which they must maintain their contact with the assistance they require in order to maintain that they are helped?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: As I said, I am advised that there are quite a few who voluntarily accept such supervision. I mentioned earlier in the context of another discussion we had here, that the only way you could legally require them to accept your supervision would be either to change the law or have every judge put a probationary period at the end of their sentence, in which case they would be required to accept supervision.

Mr. Deans: Have you considered making representation along that line; along the line of having an extended parole period when sentence is completed? The sentence really serves only one useful purpose, as I can see it. It is to properly assess the amount of mental incapacity, or whatever it may be that those people have, and I think that the parole period is perhaps the most important period of all.

Mr. Chairman: We have strayed off the topic again and are getting into parole. Can we not keep parole until the next section?

Mr. Deans: It is a hypothetical thing for there is none right now. I am trying to ask if he would not consider it.

Mr. Chairman: Well, the question could be properly discussed when we are talking about after-care and parole.

Mr. Deans: It is very difficult, you see it is part of the rehabilitation. I will accept your ruling.

Mr. Chairman: The programme of activities is clearly defined in the estimates book. The hon. member for Port Arthur.

Mr. R. H. Knight (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman, my point had to do with after-care and parole.

Mr. Chairman: All right, the hon. member for High Park.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, I have here the public personnel review for 1969, which has just arrived today. There is an article in here which is on in-service training, which is called correction stepchild, and it lays out the amount of training which each correctional officer should receive after his initial training.

I would like to see how Ontario compares with the proper standards, how much training each correctional officer, each guard receives yearly, and I am not referring to his initial training. After that, what are the requirements?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In addition to the seminars and the correctional courses, the hon. member will find on page 13, the various courses they are engaged in and are encouraged to participate in as an incentive for promotion. I think you will find on page 13 a whole page of various departmental courses, certificate courses, degree programmes, and other conference seminars that they participate in from time to time.

Mr. Shulman: I have seen page 13 and I am aware that a number of personnel have taken these courses. What I am asking the Minister is, what is the requirement for every correctional officer annually? Or if you do not wish to take the courses, can you just take no training?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There is no required additional course for a correctional officer to take outside of his initial course. As I said, there are incentives for taking these other courses.

Mr. Shulman: The incentives, of course, are not requirements. May I suggest to the Minister that he is out of step again. According to Correction in the United States, Crime and Delinquency, volume 13, it is recommended that training of custodial officers should be considered of sufficient importance to warrant the budgeting of funds and the requirements that correctional officers take certain refresher training every year. May I suggest to the Minister that perhaps this is one other reform that he should bring into the department in the coming year or years, and would he consider that?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I think that this is a desirable objective as are most of these recommendations of correctional organizations and publications. It is a desirable objective.

Mr. Shulman: Well, are you going to do it?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, we cannot do everything overnight. We have set up these courses. Some of these courses are courses that were not in effect three or four years ago. There are a tremendous number of our people taking these courses. You just cannot do everything overnight.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Minister, this is something that you could do overnight. All you have to do is to set a requirement that every year every guard take, perhaps, one day, five days, a week?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, that sounds very simple except that we have probably 3,500 people who are spread over the vast area of the province of Ontario. This is one of the problems that we have even with our seminars. We have so many people on duty. Take so many people out of that institution you leave it short of staff. It is not as easy a problem as the hon. member suggests.

It is a lot easier around the city of Toronto, except that we do not have any reformatories around the city of Toronto. This is one of the reasons why some of the institutions should not have been built where they are. They should not have been located where they are located. However, as I said, it is a desirable objective, the same as there are a lot of other desirable objectives which will no doubt come into effect in the future.

Mr. Martel: Give the course in the institution.

Mr. Shulman: The member for Sudbury East is quite right. A lot of these courses can be taken in the institution. It sounds as though you are short-staffed, if this is what you are saying. You said before you were not, as far as correctional officers go.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We are building a new staff training college. We will be able to accommodate more at the new staff training college. Whether it is going to be sufficient to do the job as we would like to do it in a total programme is another matter. We are moving towards all these areas, and, as I say, there are so many priorities that—somebody was complaining about spending $46 million—we could use $46 million if we wanted to put all our programmes into effect at one time, even if we could get all of the staff, which is not going to be easy.

I have a note here—training is an on-going process and one cannot say—this is from Mr. Penfold, the director of our professional services. One cannot say that training is for a set period of time. Training should be going on all the time and is a process of interaction between supervisory and professional personnel. I am glad he reminded me of that because this is, I think, more important even than the refresher courses. Refresher courses are an important thing, but I think the best thing is the on-going training, which has been going on within the institution, between the staff.

Mr. Shulman: Of course, training on the job is essential, but I am sure the Minister is aware with the rapid changes that are occurring in the modern correctional thinking that you have to get your guards out of your jails, out of those reformatories, down to somewhere else where they can learn modern thoughts. They are not going to learn it sitting in there from their superior officers.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Quite!

Mr. Shulman: But you are not doing it, you are only doing it with some of the guards.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We are not doing it fast enough for the hon. member and not fast enough for me.

Mr. Shulman: Well, do it faster. You have the responsibility. I wish I had the authority instead of you. We would do it a little faster.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, I think it is not only the prerogative, but probably the duty of the Opposition to say, "You are not going fast enough," to push us to go faster. And I am telling the hon. member, a member of the Opposition, that as far as I am concerned I would like to go faster. We can only go so fast, with so many hours a day, with so much money, and with so much personnel. We are doing the best we can with what we have.

Mr. Shulman: Then, may I make a suggestion to the hon. Minister? Let us suppose the minimum per year is one week. Do not start with that, start with one day. Get your guards out for one day a year down to the Guelph training school, and at least give them a glimpse of what can be done. As you get more staff, as you get more money, speed it up.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Oh, I do not think that would work.

Mr. Shulman: Make it two days, do whatever you can afford, make a start. You have guards that have not gone back for 10 or 15 years for any refresher work at all. And they should, I am sure you will agree with me.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I do not think a one-day trip would do any good.

Mr. Shulman: Neither do I, but it is a start.

If there is no other member I have another matter I would like to bring up at some length. During my introductory remarks to the estimates I made a few remarks about the problem of homosexuality in prisons, and the Minister has not made any comment on that particular problem. There were a series of editorials written in the Daily Journal Record in Oakville over the past few months on the problem of homosexuality in our Ontario prisons, and also the archaic way in which we are treating our prisoners. This series is called "Revenge or Reform".

It is fairly lengthy and I shall not take the time of the House by reading all of these editorials. However, I am going to take one paragraph out of three of them because it summarizes the problem of homosexuality in our prisons and brings to the forefront the solution which I have suggested to the Minister, and which last year, in any case, he spurned, which is that of conjugal visits.

I would like to quote first of all from these editorials:

Our prisons too often are schools for crime for young criminals learning to be proficient in their trade. Are not our penal institutions a demonstrated failure? Over 70 per cent of the prisoners leaving jails today will return within five years. And 70 per cent of persons arrested have records of previous arrests.

A recent study revealed the average prisoner spent 15,840 hours in jail. Only 30 hours are spent on rehabilitation and such rehabilitation that does take place during the prison term is usually the result of the prisoner's own do-it-yourself project.

Truly the time is overdue for the public to demand that we introduce a more enlightened system of penology which is not based on revenge, but rather it shift stress from custodial problems to progressive correctional ideas. Punishment is a vengeance concept based on the principle eye for eye, tooth for tooth, but even when goodness has been replaced by wickedness in an individual we cannot deny that with enlightened treatment and guidance there is hope for redemption, regeneration and rehabilitation. It can be said that Canadian penal institutions as they now exist offer prisoners little hope of reform or reconstruction, although calling for a change in our system does not underline in a subterranean way the principles of law and order nor the principles of justice.

If we accept the belief that society cannot afford to waste one human being, one soul, then we find it unconscionable that we should be so reluctant to change and update a penal system that is based on revenge rather than restoring prisoners as rehabilitated members of society.

The chances of saving such an individual once he has been sent to prison is all but impossible because of the frightful sex problems in our "corrective institutions". It is known that the sex problems within our prisons are greatly responsible for the tension, the belligerence and discipline difficulties which prevail there.

Far worse, it is known that our prisons are centres of corruption, sending out thousands of men deformed for life by the sex practices forced upon them while incarcerated. Such studies that have been made show that homosexual practices in prison range from 60 per cent to over 90 per cent of the male inmates.

The book "New Horizons in Criminology"—in which the authors, Barnes and Peters, describe the struggle of inmates who go foraging for a girlfriend—is vivid in this problem. In many countries, this particular problem has been solved by permitting conjugal—

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Take it as read!

Mr. Shulman: I am trying to teach him, and also I am trying to teach the member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: Who needs it?

Mr. Shulman: Well, perhaps the member does.

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): He wants to hear it again himself!

Mr. Shulman: That is true, it is difficult for them to retain these matters so we have to repeat them.

Mr. Sargent: Why does the member not go into a room and talk to himself?

Mr. Shulman: Because, unfortunately, the Minister, unless we can convince the Legislature, is not able to make these changes. I am not sure he would not like to make them.

It is a shame the Liberal Party is not interested in reform in this particular area. When they do get up to speak, they say to the Conservatives, "Why don't you get in touch with the Liberal government in Ottawa and make these changes?" I often wonder why the Liberals here do not talk to the Liberals in Ottawa except at election time.

Mr. Sargent: We do not need them.

Mr. Shulman: They do not talk to you, that is what the problem is.

Hon. Mr. Randall: They have not been formally introduced.

Mr. Sopha: Why do you not take part of that million and make a model jail?

Mr. Shulman: To the member for Sudbury through you, Mr. Chairman—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: There are two millionaires in the House and they are both in the NDP. We learned as recently as Monday that the other guy has $2 million.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): The member is jealous.

Mr. Shulman: To the member for Sudbury through you, Mr. Chairman, I wish to assure him that in 1971 when I take over the portfolio of Minister of Correctional Services, I will be delighted to do that very project and at that time when the Conservatives are in Opposition I hope there are some Liberals still in the House to see this project carried out.

An hon. member: By that time the member will be in a straitjacket.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Wait until I read all the "Dear Dr. Grossman" letters to the Minister then.

Mr. Shulman: Yes, I will be looking forward to that. Well, now, to get back to the Oakville Journal Record. I quote:

In many countries this particular problem has been solved by permitting conjugal visits either in jail or under certain circumstances by brief furloughs by the prisoner to his family. Countries taking this modern and civilized approach include Sweden, England, Ireland, Denmark, Greece, Chili, Argentina, Colombia, Brazil, and Mexico.

In all of these countries the sex problem is not ignored, nor is it compounded by sending those with sex problems to jail when the need is for professional treatment, not punitive punishment. Such a civilized attitude would better serve society as well as the penal system and the individual himself.

Speaking on a programme in Brampton, a Reverend Libby, a young ex-prisoner who is now involved in the St. Leonard's programme, told how he had witnessed an inmate raped by seven other male prisoners. "He said, 'I learned more in six months about the sordid life than I have known in 19 years.'"

Along with being post-graduate schools for crime, Canadian prisons turn an innocent young man into a monster. Is it the purpose of prisons to create monsters, to create hardened criminals, or is it not the purpose of punishment to reform, reconstruct and rehabilitate?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, how are we going to get these people bonded?

Mr. Sargent: The member is hepped on sex.

Mr. Shulman: Well, I had hoped to get a better response from the Minister, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The member will.

Mr. Shulman: We have a serious problem which he prefers to ignore; and homosexuality in these prisons surely he should not ignore at this point after last week's horrible incident up in Burwash, where you end up sending men to jail for doing things which you are forcing them to do because of the circumstances in the reformatory.

Now, I say to the Minister again—I asked him last year—there is a very simple way that you can clear up this jungle that you have there and this is by permitting conjugal visits. It is not a question of allowing prisoners to have sex life, as one of the papers suggested, they are having their sex life anyway, but they are being forced into a homosexual life.

I suggest to you the civilized way, the way towards rehabilitation, if you are interested in rehabilitation—I am not convinced yet that you are—is to permit conjugal visits. Now, I ask the Minister, has he changed his view on this matter? Has he come into the 20th century?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Give them colour television sets, too.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I would be very pleased to give the hon. member my views on this. He knows that my views are that I do not agree with conjugal visits as he sees them, that is, the wife coming into the institution. I think it is one of the most degrading systems that anyone ever conceived.

Mr. Shulman: It is better than homosexuality.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Let me just tell about this. During his introductory remarks the hon. member for High Park advocated that we should consider the question of conjugal visits and I noticed that he changed his position a little from the bill which he has before the House now. He has apparently gone back again tonight.

Mr. MacDonald: What is the Minister's position?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I will tell you in a minute. In the bill he asked that wives be allowed to visit in prison. In his introductory remarks the other day, he added a rider, "or that the husbands should go out to visit the wives".

Now I know he did that, because he finally realized that our new Correctional Services Act is going to provide for this matter in a much more dignified way. This latter means that he has taken up our position, the position we have held for some time and the position which was incorporated into our new Correctional Services Act, which was just passed a few months ago here.

In this Act, Mr. Chairman, we make provision to grant leaves for humanitarian and rehabilitative purposes. We believe that it is degrading for a man and wife to come into a prison setting. We believe that family life is important, and we have already, in an Act in this Legislature for which the hon. member voted, made provision to permit men to go out to spend weekends with their families, not just their wives, but their families—it is the family which is important.

And the hon. member stepped into a trap when he read somebody else's editorial. He said that this is what they are doing in England, they are allowing conjugal visits. He is not quite up to date, we stay up to date, "More Love Outings from Jails." This is the position that is taken in England, the same position as we have taken in our Correctional Services Act.

I noticed this week, in this article from the U.K. that the Home Secretary has taken the same position we took some time ago, they are following us.

Mr. Shulman: All you have done is talk.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, I have not talked at all. The hon. member pretty well knows that there are two sections of our Correctional Services Act which require federal approval, which are now in the new bill before the House of Commons, have had second reading, and as soon as they become law, we proclaim our two sections and they become law. Let us not bring any red herrings into this.

Now the Home Secretary for the U.K., as I say, has taken the same position we took some time ago, before he did. The Home Secretary incidentally, the hon. member knows, is James Callaghan, the great Home Secretary of that great Socialist government in the United Kingdom. And he is quoted in this English newspaper that I am holding here:

Home Secretary James Callaghan disclosed last night, speaking in a Commons debate on prisons, that he will not allow wives to spend the night in jail with their husbands. "I do not believe it is possible to arrange for conjugal visits to take place in a way that would combine security with human dignity," he said.

This is precisely the position that I, and this government, took a few months ago when we passed the new Correctional Services Act. And further, I would like to read to the hon. members a letter which we received from Mr. A. M. Kirkpatrick, Executive Director of the John Howard Society of Ontario.

Mr. MacDonald: Dear Allan.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: To continue:
Honourable Sir:

In reading Hansard—

this is dated March 3, 1969 on the letterhead of the John Howard Society of Ontario and it is addressed to me—

—of February 10, I note that an amendment is proposed to The Department of Correctional Services, 1968, to provide for conjugal visits—

Of course, he is referring to the hon. member's private bill.

—I note from an article in the Globe and Mail of February 13, 1969, that this matter has also been raised in the House of Commons, in Ottawa.

It occurred to me that you might be interested in the views of our society in this regard and I thought I would pass them on to you in the hope that they might be of interest in the discussions which will, no doubt, arise concerning this proposal.

One of the great problems in prison is the development of sexual deviations due to lack of normal outlet and this results in the development of homosexual practices among some inmates. It must be remembered, however, that a number of inmates had undoubtedly had homosexual experience prior to their admission to the institutions.

Our view is that rather than recognizing conjugal rights as an institutional privilege, it is important to reinforce and develop the total family life including ties both with wives and children and, in fact, the broader community. From this point of view some other method of bringing this about would be more in keeping with the prison setting and the cultural and ethical and religious views of our contemporary society than conjugal visits.

It is recognized that only a small proportion of the men and women in prison have valid marital ties and that there would be a problem concerning single men and those without valid marital relationships. Some of these men might be promiscuous though others undoubtedly would be continent.

It would seem undesirable to encourage a system in which the needs of all did not receive consideration and this leads to the question as to whether conjugal visits should be considered to include relationships between unmarried persons. There is the further problem that wives might feel some sense of being conspicuous in quarters assigned for conjugal visits. It is also quite possible that this might create various tensions in the prison population, as well as between the couples concerned.

In thinking of the problem of maintaining family and community relationships, at a level which recognizes human dignity as an aid to eventual re-establishment and as more desirable than conjugal visits, our view is that a system of leaves might be worked out on a merit basis for inmates, married or unmarried, promiscuous or continent. This would allow them to make their own choice in these matters, but by returning them back into the community for their leaves would prevent the deterioration which often occurs in the prison experience and is far broader than that of homosexuality.

In this connection, we were pleased to note section 19 of The Correctional Services Act, which provides for temporary absence of the inmate for medical or humanitarian reasons, or to assist in rehabilitation. This provision should make possible the kinds of leaves we have in mind and with the second reading having been given to the federal bill C150, it would appear that this will be passed and enable the proclamation for this section of your Act.

Yours sincerely,

A. M. Kirkpatrick,
Executive Director.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this explains better than I can the position that I took in this place last year when we passed The Department of Correctional Services Act. It does the job in a much better way, and even those who have been allowing conjugal visits are now seeing the light and, as usual, Ontario is leading the way.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, I am delighted to see how Ontario is leading the way; as yet we have not had one single convict given this privilege. However, I am sorry that the Minister has not thought the problem through, as obviously he has not.

Of course, everyone agrees it is better to let the prisoners go out and visit with their families. No one would argue that, but that is not going to solve the problem.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Now he says—

Mr. Shulman:—solve the problem for the simple reason that even in an enlightened area like California, which has been using these furloughs for some 15 years, a maximum of ten per cent of the prisoners are allowed out.

The Minister, just a few minutes ago, talked about creating tensions in the prisons. What about the other 90 per cent who are not going to be allowed out because they are not going to be eligible for these leaves? I am quite confident that when we come back, a year from now, presuming the Minister has actually put this programme into effect, that far less than ten per cent of our prisoners are going to be given this particular privilege and everybody in the House knows it, including the Minister. That is why conjugal visits could take up the problem where furloughs leave off.

Sure, furloughs are great. I would like to have nobody in our prisons. I would like them all to be home with their families, so would the Minister, I hope—

Mr. Sargent: It is window dressing. That is all it is.

Mr. Shulman: —I hope, but it is not going to happen. You are going to get perhaps—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Trudeau's bill will take care of that.

Mr. Shulman: —get perhaps five per cent of your prisoners—

Mr. Sargent: It is a snow job again.

Mr. Shulman: For once the member is right, it is a snow job again.

Perhaps you are going to get ten per cent of your prisoners—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Will the hon. member tell me what percentage he thinks—

Mr. Sargent: It will take him five years to think about it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —what percentage of inmates he thinks have the kind of marital ties that would warrant a conjugal visit from a wife?

Mr. Shulman: One half.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: 50 per cent.

Mr. Shulman: Now may I read something—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Is that what he thinks?

Mr. Shulman: I am going to go a little further, Mr. Chairman—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What are you going to do about single men?

Mr. Shulman: Well, may I read something to you which may perhaps enlighten you on that?

Mr. MacDonald: Well, have you accepted Kirkpatrick's views? What are you going to do about it?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I have accepted the proposition that a person who has shown he is well motivated, is well behaved, will be allowed out.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He will be allowed out for visits and he can make his own choice.

Mr. MacDonald: Great.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You mean reverse—we should allow him, a single man, to make a choice?

Mr. MacDonald: You have got to be consistent, and deal with the whole problem.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Oh, then the hon. member has missed the point completely.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, this talk—

Mr. MacDonald: You are building a façade, as usual.

Mr. Shulman: —talking of missing the point, what the Minister has missed here is that among those 90 per cent who are not going to be getting the furloughs are the ones who are doing the rapes in your prison right now. And who are they going to be raping? They are going to be raping the same men, the young slight men, many of whom you will be giving furloughs. You are not going to solve your problem.

I would like to quote from the Globe and Mail for March 6, 1969. This is headed "Sex in Prison Called Desirable by U.S. Judge" and is a slightly more reasoned view of the matter than the Minister has taken:

A judge says that sex in jail between husband and wife is desirable to make a convict's future life worth living, "Otherwise, a prisoner won't be worth a damn," says Judge Raymond P. Alexander of Philadelphia Common Police Court. "We will still be sending monsters out into the community."

He said he would like some liberalization of normal sex relationships in prison involving married couples and also unwed inmates, if they have legitimate long term common-law relationships, backed up by sufficient evidence and not any phony set ups. Alexander went on: "Scandinavian countries permit this type of visit, so do jails in—" and he lists the countries again.

He said in an interview he is not too optimistic for quick approval, "but I am not disenchanted. I think in five years normal sex relations in special areas in prisons, properly supervised, will be the practice in many states."

Mr. Chairman, it is not—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The practice will be what we are going to put into effect here.

Mr. Shulman: I hope not, for the sake of the other states.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: And it will involve—

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, it is not degrading for the wives, because they do not come to cells. All of the countries that have brought in this reform—and it is a reform—have set up special quarters outside the prison itself on the grounds, where the wives can come without going through the staring or perusal of other inmates. There is a private entrance with a private guarded gate.

May I suggest that the solution the Minister has brought forth is not a solution. Once again, he is scratching the surface. He is making a pretence. Maybe he believes it—I do not know what his intellectual capacities are. I hope they are a little better than he is giving pretence to today, because this is not going to solve the problem—if he is seriously interested in solving the problem. Next year we are going to come back and we are going to find that something less than 10 per cent of his inmates have been given this privilege, and he is going to have the same homosexual problem that he has today.

Just to underline the extent of this problem, though I do not like to go to American sources too often, but they do not talk about this in Canada and we have to go to American sources. I have here the Wall Street Journal for February 25, 1969, and the heading is "The Jail Jungle."

Crowding idleness leads to homosexual attacks in county and city prisons. Youth is raped ten times.

Robert, a 20-year-old accused car thief and cheque forger should be in a county jail here, but even though Robert could not raise his $800 bail, Judge Alexander F. Barberr, Jr., set him free to await trial. Why? "This boy simply would not be safe in a prison," the judge explained. "Even if he is guilty it would be a greater crime to keep him in prison than to allow him to repeat his offence."

Judge Barberr so ruled because Robert, a slightly built youth, was a victim of homosexual rape several times, perhaps as many as ten times, while held in pre-trial custody here. Triggered by the disclosure of similar incidents, one involving a 17-year-old victim whose only crime was running away from home, a recent two-month investigation found that sexual assaults are epidemic.

This is not unique for this particular area. This is happening in every prison in the world where you isolate men and you do not find some solution.

Now, I am telling the Minister that the solution he has found is going to help a few men. It is not going to solve this problem. And we are going to have to come back and go through this again next year and the year after and he will make the charge, or his successor will make the charge. But it is going to come and you have got to bring your mind up to face this problem because you have not done it yet. Until you do, you are going to get up and say Ontario is leading the world while, in fact, you are talking beautifully and doing nothing.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 402. The hon. member for Sudbury East.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Chairman, I hope we can now get around to paroles.

Mr. Chairman: Is there anything further before we move to parole and after-care? All right. Vote 402 then. The three programmes of activity under general administration, care of adult offenders, treatment and training of adult offenders, is carried. We are now on after-care of adult offenders. The hon. member for Sudbury East.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Chairman, as I understand it and the Minister can correct me if I am wrong, our present parole system is such that a man in a provincial institution who is working time off towards parole, works his parole off much slower—or works the time off much slower—than he would if he were in a federal institution. In other words, a man from a provincial institution can escape, be charged with another crime, go to a federal institution, and still be out sooner than—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I discussed this earlier.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Chairman, what we are doing in essence is that we are creating a situation where it is more beneficial for prisoners to escape custody than to stay in a provincial institution. They are out sooner by committing a second crime than they are if they stayed in the provincial institution. What we are doing is we are making the job of those people involved in provincial institutions much more difficult. The prisoners are aware it is advantageous for them to escape, to be resentenced to a federal institution and get out sooner than—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The hon. member is reading my speech.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Chairman, maybe I am reading his speech, but I have had—I do not know how much—representation from custodial officers on this. When it is going to change, I do not know. Maybe because I was away ill when this was—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member like me to deal with that point? Actually he was here, I am sure, when I discussed that in the debate I had with the hon. member for Sudbury on statutory remissions. The hon. member will recall we discussed that.

I have, for about five years, or about four of those years, unsuccessfully asked the federal government to give us the right to institute the same statutory remission as is in effect for a person who gets a federal penitentiary sentence. I was successful finally, and in Bill C150, now before the House of Commons, we are getting the same system in our provincial institutions so that the statutory remission will apply to provincial inmates as well.

The problem is that the hon. member, being from Sudbury, is finding a lot of impatience perhaps on the part of some of the staff and some of the inmates—because they have heard about it in this place year after year. They have, because I have talked about it in this place year after year. I could show the hon. member the correspondence that I have read in this House in previous years with every Minister of Justice since I became Minister of this department. Finally, the present Solicitor-General—I suppose it is the Minister of Justice—put it into the new Bill C150. The time will be equalized and they will no longer have the excuse to say, as someone opposite said last week, that the reason they want to go to the federal penitentiary is because they can learn a trade there and they cannot learn a trade in the provincial institutions.

Mr. Sargent: Better treatment, too, better maintenance.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: And I am sure the hon. member for Sudbury East who is smiling, knows how phony that is. They were telling this to a judge for a long time, and the judge was taken in for a long time, and they got just enough of a sentence to send them to a federal penitentiary where, with statutory remission, which is a quarter of their sentence automatically taken off, they served less time than if they had not escaped. But the provincial judge got wise to this thing, and he settled that by giving them longer terms so it did not make it profitable. However, as I mentioned, this will now be changed after Bill C150 gets approval and that will give us the same statutory remission with our inmates.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 402. The hon. member for Sudbury East.

Mr. Martel: I am glad to hear the Minister make these statements. I must disagree with him, however; I was not in the House last week due to illness when this came up.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It was just an hour ago.

Mr. Martel: No. Now I would like to get on to another bit on parole. In my discussions with a good number of custodial officers they seem to have a great deal of difference with the parole board's contention that you do not advise a prisoner why a parole has been denied.

The Minister has given me some reasons in communication with him. However, I just cannot buy this, Mr. Minister, that in just telling a prisoner that his parole has been denied you are going to get better co-operation from the prisoner. The opposite, in fact, is occurring. Certainly there are some things where protection is necessary, to the family, as the Minister indicated in his latest correspondence to me. However, the great number of custodial officers I have spoken to find that where a prisoner has been denied a parole without reason, the prisoner becomes very sullen, much more difficult to handle, and invariably becomes a real problem.

He starts to wonder whether there is a family problem at home. The very thing that the Minister is saying he is concerned that they should not know, comes into the prisoner's mind, "Is there a problem at home? Is there no job waiting for me as I had anticipated." A whole host of things come to his mind and none of these make it easier for the guards who are working with these people because they do become sullen and they do become troublesome. Somewhere along the line these men are going to have to be given some indication as to why their parole is denied. Having taught for a good many years, I found that when you dealt with young men of 16, 17, 18, if you did not tell them why something was happening, you were asking for trouble. If it is this way with young people of 15, 16 and 17, I am certain that it is even worse when you are dealing with an adult who feels that he is entitled to know at least why he has been denied a parole.

The second part I want to discuss is the method under which paroles are given. I have two cases before me now. One is a prisoner in Burwash who, according to the custodial officer to whom I spoke during the last week is a model prisoner and holds a top position of trust in Burwash; he has been denied a parole. On the other hand, you have a man who broke into one of the houses on the property and shortly thereafter was given a parole.

How do you reconcile that this man has been denied a parole and not told why and another prisoner is given a parole after he has broken into a home? We come back to the same problem. If he does not know why his parole was denied, he becomes more embittered. I hope to take the case—I do not want to mention the young man's name, but I hope to take this case up with the Minister and probably the parole people, because the guards in Burwash, the custodial people, say he is in the most trusted position of all. Yet his parole has been denied.

I ask the Minister. If you take these two cases—one breaking into a home and then getting parole and another one in the highest position of trust and is denied a parole—what type of prisoner are you going to create? A happy one, he does not know why; or are you going to create one who becomes sullen who is going to be a problem in the long run?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I have to say—because it is a problem—that I question the propriety of members of my staff discussing government policy outside of the structure which is designed for the discussion of these matters. In fact—

Mr. Martel: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: All right, the hon. member can object to—

Mr. Chairman: Does the hon. member have a point of order?

Mr. Martel: Let him finish.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. Minister has the floor.

Mr. Sargent: Why is he so touchy about it?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: This is a matter of government policy as I said. When the hon.

member's party takes over 20 years from now and the hon. member for Grey-Bruce becomes a Minister—

Mr. Sargent: You are living on borrowed time—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: When he becomes a Minister he will expect that government policy shall be discussed within government circles and that civil servants should not publicly disagree with government policy outside the government circle—

An hon. member: They are people.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There is a recognized system, this is the tried way.

Mr. Sargent: These are the untouchables, these people, are they?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: This is the traditional system of our government, of the governments under which the British parliamentary system operates.

Mr. Shulman: What has this got to do with the—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The hon. member tells me that staff discussed with him—

Mr. Martel: Why not?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: They discussed with him the parole system and disagreed with the system of the parole board of this government. This, I do not think, is a proper subject for them to discuss outside the service.

Mr. Shulman: That is a problem between you and your staff—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: This is not so.

Mr. Martel: You cannot really mean that?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: This should be discussed with staff and if they have any recommendations to make they make them to the officials within the department.

Mr. Martel: They do not have a line of communication.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: However, that is in passing so that those people who have been discussing this within the department will know how we feel about this sort of thing.

Now as to the method of the parole. The hon. member has the right to ask this question. He has a right to question government policy, not a civil servant. This is our traditional form of government, that civil servants do not disagree publicly with government policy.

Mr. Singer: I thought you said the parole service was independent.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is another matter.

Mr. Singer: That is the point. You have always said they do not interfere; they have no opinions—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Of course, I do not interfere.

Mr. Singer: —no opinion and you do not interfere with them.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: They operate under a policy laid down by the government.

Mr. Singer: But they are not within it. You cannot have it both ways.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes, they are.

Mr. Singer: Nonsense!

Mr. Sargent: Who has got Viola off then?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: As far as giving the information as to why we do not give the reasons for refusal of parole, this is a very difficult subject. I agree with the hon. member it creates some hostility on the part of some inmates. I would say perhaps not quite as much as he thinks. Some of them may give the impression that they do not really know why they have been refused parole. The parole board assures me that generally speaking, when a person leaves the interview with the parole board he knows why he has been refused parole. I have explained this before. The hon. member has explained that he understands the reasons why we do not give the reasons for parole. We have obtained highly confidential information from people and this informational source would dry up if it was known that we divulged the source of our information. It may be that we got the information from the man's own family.

Mr. Shulman: You could give the results in categories.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We may have got it from his wife. We may have got it from his mother. It may be that because of something that is going on in his own home he should not be paroled. In some instances, if the parole board tells him this he may become more hostile and more dangerous than ever.

However, having said this, let me add that if we get down to much smaller correctional communities, for example, the Vanier Centre, it may very well be that we should consider that where you have a small therapeutic community is where staff is in constant everyday relationship and a better rapport develops between staff and inmate—they can prepare the inmate for whatever has to be told him. It could be told him quite bluntly.

I appreciate the fact that under present circumstances the inmate will sometimes feel that the superintendent who has talked to him before his visit to the parole board, and who said to him, I think that you might be ready for parole, you have behaved yourself and so on and then after having been refused, the inmate may feel the superintendent is to blame and create a lot of problems. This is a very difficult area.

On the other hand, we have the other problem I mentioned. We have the problem of the wife, perhaps at that particular time living with another man. If we let him go and he goes home and finds this out, something horrible may happen. It may be that he has threatened his wife during the course of his incarceration, through a letter or something of that nature, and if we give that as the reason for not paroling the man, it may very well make him more hostile to his wife. I am not too sure.

Mr. Sargent: You certainly are not.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am sure about the hon. member for Grey-Bruce, I can tell you that.

I am not too sure that we cannot try and experiment with giving this information. I am sure it cannot be done in a place like Burwash and it could not perhaps be done in a place like Guelph. On the other hand, we have a problem, too, even in this area. This is the kind of experimentation that if you try it, you may create problems in the other institutions. If you try it at Vanier or try it at some other small institution, where the staff has a better rapport with the inmates and the others find out, it could create a lot of trouble as the hon. member, I am sure, can appreciate. It is a very, very difficult area.

I can tell him the subject is not closed. At the moment, it is a very difficult problem to resolve. I think that perhaps during the year we may experiment with this, but I am afraid I will have to tell the hon. member it probably will not be in the kind of institution like Burwash because of its very size. Burwash and Guelph, as I have mentioned here before without any hesitation, are too large for the kind of correctional rehabilitation system we would like to operate. That is why we are reducing them as quickly as we possibly can.

In these areas there is not this kind of a relationship, you just do not have the time for it—the hon. member will know what I mean because he is closer to the picture up there than some other hon. members. You do not have that kind of situation where someone has established a relationship with an inmate—talked over all his problems—discussed his marital problems—and where the workers, correctional officers and the other staff in the institution have been discussing these problems and have prepared the man and got him to understand that this is for his own good and got him to accept the reason for his refusal which, when he is told, he will take in the proper fashion. It is most difficult and as I said, the subject is not closed.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 402? The hon. member for Sudbury East.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to go back to this point the Minister raised about people in his department not discussing with anyone else, other than government officials, changes which should be made.

I found it rather strange, in discussing problems with people at Burwash, how fearful they are of their job. I have it in writing and the Minister has it. I submitted him a copy in writing. But that is beside the point.

Mr. Chairman, what makes this department so sacred? There is no communication in Burwash between the ordinary workers there and the echelons in that institution; there is just no communication. They have complained about it over and over again but nonetheless, even if there were communication, how to bring about change that perhaps the government does not feel it wants, outside of, maybe, pressuring them into change by imposing systems which are, in many people's views, wrong? I cannot see why the Minister objects to people discussing these things.

We represent those people. We represent the taxpayers who pay dollars to keep these institutions going. In a real sense we have a say as to what should go on in those institutions. For the Minister to get up and say that no one in his department should discuss policy, I do see now where this policy has become so sacred that it cannot be discussed frankly and openly. I think it is wrong for the Minister to deny people this right.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We differ on the opinion of how our system of government is supposed to operate.

Mr. Martel: You are denying the people their democratic right.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: They have a democratic right to discuss anything they like, but as civil servants they do not have the right to differ with government policy in public. My Deputy Minister may disagree with some of the things, some of the policies that I have put into effect or I am maintaining—he may disagree—the place for him to argue is with me. But it is not his business to go out in public and say he disagrees with the policy of the government. That is the way this system is supposed to operate. If the hon. member does not understand that or disagrees with it, I cannot help it. That is my view of government and I am sure it is the view of anyone who understands this system of government.

Mr. Martel: Well, Mr. Chairman, I can appreciate the Minister not wanting the Deputy to disagree with him publicly. I mean, it would be foolish to have a Deputy Minister who is out opposing the Minister all the time and certainly I go along with that, but for other people who do not hold key positions to discuss problems, certainly they should have this right.

I cannot see why this government denies them the right to voice their opinion, and particularly in a place like Burwash where there is no communication, absolutely none. They have to discuss their problems with someone because apparently they have no one to discuss them with as it exists at the present time.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member feels that the channels of communication at Burwash or in any other department of government have broken down or are not as good as they should be, that is a proper subject matter for him to discuss. It is even a proper subject matter, I suppose, for a staff to discuss with him if they feel like it, because this is not a matter of government policy.

Government policy is that there is supposed to be good communication. I am not talking about that at all. I am saying they have no right to disagree publicly with government policy in public or to anyone else other than within the service.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Humber.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Mr. Chairman, I listened with interest to the Minister's statement that the smallness of institutions enables them to give better service. To me it seems a rather backward statement because it is not completely true and I challenge the Minister to prove it.

For example, Vanier that he is speaking of, what distinguishes it from old Mercer is not its size, but the fact that it is a cottage-type setting. What difference does it make whether you have ten cottages, 100 cottages, or 1,000 cottages, providing that each cottage in the hundred group or each cottage in the thousand group, gets the same attention as it would be in the ten group?

As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, perhaps the handicap or the liability in establishing this institution in a place like Brampton or away from a large city like Toronto or Kingston, university cities or towns, is that you have to keep them small because you do not have available as much skilled and trained staff as you would if you were located in the heart of a city, or on the outskirts of a city like Toronto or Kingston or another university town.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I agree with that.

Mr. Ben: Well then perhaps, Mr. Chairman, since the Minister has said that he does agree, perhaps a reappraisal ought to be made of disposing of the Mimico grounds, and perhaps this would be the place—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mimico is in the Metropolitan area.

Mr. Ben: Yes, it is in a Metropolitan area, but it a large tract of land in the Metropolitan area and if the criterion is having adequate staff—not simply five—but having a satisfactory ratio of staff to inmates, then perhaps what we ought to do is remain in the heart of the Metropolitan area because it has certain advantages, if for instance, we have enough land. If my memory serves me correctly—you can correct me any time—I think there are some 600 acres.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: But it is in a Metropolitan area. I do not know what point the hon. member is making.

Mr. Ben: The point I am trying to make is that maybe we should come back to the Metropolitan area with these cottage type institutions, because in the Metropolitan area we can draw on a larger reserve of staff—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: But with the cottage type we have them both, we have the best of both worlds. We have the cottage type system and it is in a Metropolitan area.

Mr. Ben: The area of Vanier?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Of course.

Mr. Ben: I think Toronto will be flattered to think that Brampton is in a Metropolitan area, but I do not think the Minister is going to be liked in Brampton when he implies that Brampton is in a Metropolitan area.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: As a matter of fact, we have had no difficulty at all in filling Vanier with good professional staff. As a matter of fact, we have a surplus of applications. And good professional staff, some of the best. It is proof of the fact that we are in there where we should be, Brampton is certainly part of the Metropolitan area, and so certainly is Mimico.

Mr. Ben: Well then, Mr. Chairman, we are discussing size and the Minister left the implication that Vanier was effective because of its size. If, Mr. Chairman, the Minister is correct and they have a waiting list of staff for Vanier then why has it not been expanded two- or three-fold? Why is it used only as a female setting? Why not transfer more of the people from Guelph into a cottage type setting; that is males, not females, but transfer more males from the Guelph type setting at Guelph Reformatory—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We have this in Brampton. We have the Brampton training centre.

Mr. Ben: That is a training school, yes.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, it is not a training school. It is the Brampton training centre for adult males, where we pick the best type from Guelph and they go to the Brampton training centre. As a matter of fact, we cannot fill it with suitable inmates. We have accommodation for 200 and there are only about 150 there. It is a completely open setting. I think the hon. member has the term wrong.

When I suggest “small” I am suggesting “small” in terms of the number of inmates. That is what I am talking about. Obviously, if you had a place with 500 people at Vanier it would not be as good a therapeutic community, as it is called, as we have there now, because the superintendent knows every inmate, and presumably every member of the staff knows every inmate. Once you start getting beyond 150, 200, 300 or 350 you lose this personal touch.

They now are able to establish the kind of rapport that gives them confidence in the staff. If the inmate gets the kind of letter from someone which is very disturbing, she would discuss it with members of the staff, and that sort of thing, which does not easily happen in a place like Guelph or Burwash or any other place which has a very large number of inmates, and where security sometimes becomes too much of a preoccupation.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Chairman, the Minister is not going to convince me that in a setting like that each member of the staff knows all the inmates. I will accept that in a cottage-type setting the staff that is responsible for the cottage does get to know the inmates intimately, and it is quite conceivable that they may know the inmates of three or four cottages. But to suggest that each member of the staff knows all the inmates, I think is asking us to swallow just a little bit too much.

But we are still getting away from it. The Minister corrected me in that it is called the Brampton training centre, not training school. I always looked upon it as a school because predominantly that is why they go there, that it is an educational institution.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It is vocational as well.

Mr. Ben: Vocational institution—I referred to it as a school for that reason.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: But we have to differentiate whether it is a training centre or is for juveniles.

Mr. Ben: All right.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is why we are thinking of changing the name from training centres, it is very confusing.

Mr. Ben: Then perhaps I was right in the first instance. At any rate the point I am trying to make—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: And I still think the superintendent of Vanier probably knows every inmate.

Mr. Ben: How many are there?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: About 90-odd.

Mr. Ben: Well, here is to the superintendent at Vanier.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Drink a good toast to him, he is a very good man, a tremendous operator.

Mr. Ben: The point I am trying to make, Mr. Chairman—and the Minister has already admitted it—it is not the size that is the criterion itself, but the staff per X number of inmates. I am suggesting that if he used a cottage-type setting there is not the same limitation on size as there was in a Mercer-type setting or a Guelph-type setting, or a Millbrook-type setting.

It is the ratio of staff to inmates that governs. I am also suggesting it is better to establish the units closer to a Metropolitan centre where there are university facilities such as at Windsor or Waterloo.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Which is what we are doing with every new building we are putting up.

Mr. Ben: Fine. I am gratified to hear that. If this is what is going on I am gratified to hear that, but I suggest that perhaps a mistake was made in removing Mercer, because I understand Mimico is going but the alcoholic clinic will remain, am I correct? Then perhaps Mimico should still remain and be turned into a cottage-type setting.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 402. The hon. member for High Park.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, before I go on to another matter here, I hope the Minister of Correctional Services will introduce himself to the Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) because it is interesting to find the two of them saying exactly opposite things on the same problem.

We have just had hearings in the health committee where we were trying to impress on that particular Minister the importance of keeping the same staff because he changes the staff in the wards every three weeks. Perhaps you might pass your words on to him; it might be of help to us in that department.

In any case, I want to come back to parole. I think one of the very serious problems that has arisen in the field of parole is one that was brought up last year at some length. This was in relation to the fact that there is no possibility of appeal from parole board decisions. Some of us on this side of the House are not convinced that all those decisions are wise ones.

I have a number of cases here, but once again, I shall take one as an example because this strikes me as summarizing the problem very well. This, from Burwash, came in just last week and reads as follows:

Dear Mr. Shulman: It seems that in utter desperation I am forced to write to you and ask for aid. I am incarcerated here at Burwash Industrial Farm and my sentence is six months definite and 22 months indeterminate.

My problem is I have been here almost a year now and my parole board refuses to grant me a parole. There were three of us convicted and sentenced for the same offence. We were all given the same sentence. The other two were released on parole at the end of the definite portion of their sentence. I was left behind. I cannot understand why. Since then I have taken and completed successfully the oil burner course offered by the institution. I then applied to the Ontario Parole Board numerous times for re-boards and have consistently received no action in return.

I have also applied to the National Parole Board for consideration. They inform me that because I am into the indeterminate portion of my sentence they have no jurisdiction. I even went so far as to write the Prime Minister. My letter was handed to the Solicitor-General and he informed me that no federal Minister could intervene.

My wife has contacted the sentencing magistrate and the MPP for our district and other officials that may have been in a position to help. All of this has been to no avail. We have been subjected to a form of buck passing which I am forced to find truly amazing. As for my attitude: all I want to do is go home, reunite my family, progress as well as I can in the oil burner service trade, and to try to provide as good a future as possible for myself and my family.

If it turns out that there is no way you can help me, perhaps you could at least offer some suggestions. Sincerely, Marcel R. L.

Well, Mr. Chairman, through you to the Minister, I say this is typical of many letters which I—and I am sure other members in this House—receive. For reasons which are completely incomprehensible to the inmate, he is being refused parole and he becomes embittered.

Perhaps there is a reason why they keep him in. Goodness knows I have given up writing to the Minister asking for the reason because we do not find out the reason. He says he does not know; he says he does not have the file. In any case we went through all that last year and he refused to answer our questions.

What it boils down to is this: We are not convinced the parole board is not making errors. This case could very well be one of them. What I am asking the Minister again —as I asked him last year—will be to bring in a system of appeal from parole board decisions.

Perhaps the Minister will recall last year when I asked him this that he said there is no other jurisdiction anywhere that has such a system. I would like to ask the Minister again—does he still hold to that view?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I do not know of any other jurisdiction, do you know of one?

Mr. Shulman: Well I am glad. I was hoping the Minister would give that reply. Yes, after the estimates last year I was rather interested to see whether the Minister was correct or incorrect, as he is more often—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: How could I be correct or incorrect when I said I did not know of one?

Mr. Shulman: You said you knew of none and I presume correctly you knew of none. But, there are many, and this shows the limit and extent of your knowledge in this particular field.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: This may prove I am stupid, but it does not mean that I gave you the wrong information.

Mr. Shulman: I agree with the Minister.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If I were brilliant, I would be a millionaire too.

Mr. Shulman: That is true. All right, Mr. Chairman, I wrote the National Council on Crime and Delinquency, 44 East 23rd Street, New York, on July 18, 1968—immediately after the estimates, as you may recall. I wrote them that the Minister of Correctional Services has stated that the decision of a parole board cannot be appealed, as far as he knew, in any jurisdiction in the United States or Canada.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It was not necessary to say that. You just had to ask them whether they did it.

Mr. Shulman: I thought I should just let them know that—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Why would you let them know that we have a stupid Minister here?

Mr. Shulman: I did not know you were that stupid at the time. I had not received the reply. In any case, to continue, Mr. Chairman, this is the reply I received:

This is not true of the United States. A parole board decision is certainly appealable in every jurisdiction. The chances of success vary depending upon the issue raised.

In quite a number of instances, parole board revocations have been reversed where due process of law was not followed or where the condition of parole was held to be invalid or not violated.

A parole board decision is appealable if the parole board is refusing to give consideration to the prisoner where the statute requires that it give such consideration.

And here is the key sentence:

A decision of the parole board may also be reviewed to be certain it has not abused its discretion.

This letter is signed by the Council for the National Council on Crime Delinquency—Mr. S. Buben.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Did they tell you who reviews it?

Mr. Shulman: The courts. In any case, I am not so—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Does that letter say that they were reviewing the fact that he was not given parole, or the fact that he was not considered for parole?

Mr. Shulman: Both, as I understand it; but they refer me to the Law of Criminal Correction and the last paragraph reads as follows:

I am enclosing for your information a circular describing the content of the Law of Criminal Correction. You will notice a chapter on parole. In it you will find a number of cases cited along the lines of my comments above. I trust they will be helpful to you.

I will reread that, in case there is some doubt in the Minister's mind:

A parole board decision is certainly appealable in every jurisdiction. The chances of success vary depending upon the issue raised.

Now this is a different matter:

In quite a number of instances, parole revocations have been reversed where due process of law was not followed or where the condition of parole was held to be invalid or not violated.

And then it goes on in the second paragraph:

A parole board decision is appealable if the parole board is refusing to give consideration to a prisoner when a statute requires it to give such consideration.

And then comes the key sentence, I believe:

A decision of a parole board may also be reviewed to be certain it has not abused its discretion.

Now we can come back to Marcel R.L. This very well may be the condition here. The parole board for frivolous reasons—or perhaps for no reason—has not granted a parole. What I am suggesting to the Minister is that there should be some level of appeal from parole board decisions.

I do not believe they should be in the courts. I believe the Minister could very well set up perhaps a board of some public spirited citizens. It could be a level of appeal from parole board decisions. Perhaps there could be a judge—but not through the courts—a judge sitting alone. There should be some second level to which a prisoner can appeal.

Now we went through all this last year and the Minister rejected this out of hand. I think he made an error. I am asking him to reconsider this particular decision because the parole board consists of human beings and they can make mistakes. When they make a mistake, it is a tragedy for the individual involved. I ask the Minister, please set up an appeal level. It is a necessary reform, it is an easy reform and it does not cost any money.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Chairman, I am afraid in this particular instance I have to accept, with great reservation, what has been said by the member for High Park. We, in this party, greatly fear setting up appeal tribunals that have as one of their members a member of the government side or go as high as into the government itself, because then you open yourself to favouritism.

In other words, the government's friends succeed on their appeals or the government's friends get paroled but if you happen to be connected with somebody who is not in the government, then you find your appeal—

Mr. Shulman: It is no different now.

Mr. Ben: This is exactly what prompted me to get up. There has been an endeavour to convince us that this was the decision made solely by the parole board. We may or may not accept what has been intimated to us. The fact is, as long as there is recourse to a government body by way of appeal, then there is the suspicion that the parole in certain, very delicate situations, was influenced by government intervention.

In Ottawa, when it came to immigration appeals, the Minister had a discretion and could overrule the immigration appeal board's findings. This led to considerable abuse. Both parties who have formed the government in Ottawa in the last decade have been accused of having favoured a certain unsavoury element in this country by using ministerial discretion to overrule immigration appeal boards and the present government, in its wisdom, saw fit to deprive the Minister of this discretion so that there would be no opportunity of anyone accusing the government of using its influence to overrule the decision of a judicial or partly semi-judicial body.

Now one could have a whole series of appeal tribunals without necessarily getting into the government level. By the government I mean elected officials.

Mr. Shulman: Well no one is suggesting it should be a board of elected officials.

Mr. Ben: Well all right—and an example of that is the Workmen's Compensation Board. People are apt to point to that as the epitome of justice, that you can appeal, appeal, appeal. The question then arises, are you having justice or are you giving justice by a continuous series of appeals from board to tribunal from the whole board, etc. and ad infinitum, each one called by a different name?

This is what also has to be taken into consideration. The best guarantee of fairness is getting a good parole board.

Mr. Shulman: Anyone can make mistakes no matter how competent they are.

Mr. Ben: Anybody can make mistakes. The Court of Appeal makes mistakes. Appeals were carried on to the Supreme Court of Canada and until not too recently they were taken right into the Privy Council, and they thought they never made a—

Mr. Lawlor: They never make mistakes!

Mr. Ben: They thought they never made mistakes and the difficulties we have now between the provinces and the federal government can be attributed to the mistakes that the Privy Council made in the interpretation of The British North America Act. Nobody is infallible but surely society—well aside from the speaker—but I am not going to brag about it, the—

An hon. member: I thought you meant the Speaker.

Mr. Ben: But the fact remain that in the conduct of human affairs we have to have a final determination of all our activities.

I am not going to pass judgment on the character of the appeal board. I have not had reason to question their judgment that much. I do not accept completely the decision in the McMillan case. They gave us some examples but I do not agree with the hon. member for Sudbury East that you should state the reasons why a parole is rejected.

There are too many instances where the one responsible for parole being rejected is the wife of the person seeking the parole. For example the Minister mentioned—and I myself have personal knowledge of at least a dozen of such instances—where the wife did not want the husband to come out of jail.

Now are we going to tell the inmate that? Or, for instance, let us suppose that the hon. member for High Park gets a request from the inmate to put in a good word to the hon. Minister, recommending—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He gets lots of them.

Mr. Ben: —recommending a parole, knowing they are such good friends—

Hon. Mr. Randall: A "Dear Doctor" letter.

Mr. Ben: —Dear Doctor—is the parole board going to say that the hon. member for High Park wrote to the parole board saying, no way, no way let this man out? All right. Those are just examples—

Mr. Shulman: I did not suggest that—

Mr. Ben: All right. Those are just examples that could arise. These are delicate situations. I know that I have received requests for recommendations and I have had to just refuse to make the recommendation. But I certainly would not want the parole board to notify the prisoner that a letter was received from the member for Humber where he pointed out that the prisoner had a very poor record and his wife does not like him and the neighbours have been complaining about him and the member does not know whether the inmate is the kind of guy that should go back into that environment.

So things are not as simple, in black and white, as the hon. member for Sudbury East would make them or the member for High Park. We do not want to extend bureaucracy. If the hon. member for High Park feels that the members of the parole board are incompetent and for that reason you need—

Mr. Shulman: No one suggested they were incompetent.

Mr. Ben: Well, all right. If they are not incompetent we have to trust to their good judgment in these matters.

Mr. Shulman: Will the hon. member accept a question?

Mr. Ben: Yes, absolutely.

Mr. Shulman: Am I to understand that the position of your party is that you are against having an appeal system for parole? Is that correct?

Mr. Ben: Yes, that is the position of our party in this matter. We see no need for it because this is not where a prisoner asks something as of right. This is not a right. There is no right to parole.

Mr. J. Renwick: Why is it not?

Mr. Ben: Because it is not. The judge imposed a sentence and society then determines whether or not the man has already been rehabilitated by the term he has served and it is society that decides, not the prisoner.

Mr. MacDonald: I venture to predict when your caucus discusses that, you will not have their support.

Mr. Ben: Well I do. You may venture the prediction but I took the pains to enquire, before I rose—

Mr. MacDonald: Good, if that is your position it is well that we all know.

Mr. Ben: And that is our position.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 402?

Mr. Shulman: Where do Conservatives stand?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, Mr. Chairman, first let me say that I do not know why anyone would feel that our parole board has not got a progressive approach and is not really—

Mr. Shulman: No one suggested that.

Hon. Mr. Grossman—is not really paroling everybody who it is indicated should be paroled. From the period of April 1, 1968, to January 31, 1969, 65 per cent of those who were eligible for parole were granted parole and the same applied in the previous year, 65 per cent in the last two years.

So I think the parole board shows that they are anxious to parole people where it is indicated that they should be paroled. Now just let me read something to the hon. member that we prepared on this, because we knew this question was going to be asked.

It is possible for any inmate, any member of his family, his lawyer, a friend, his employer, a member of our own staff, or any other person who knows him and is concerned about his future, to request the Ontario Board of Parole to review his case. Such a request may be made or repeated at any time during the person's sentence.

Let me say right at the beginning again, to put it on the record within the context of this discussion that we are the only parole board that I know of—and maybe the hon. member will find some other place, I do not think he will—where an inmate does not even apply for parole. Every inmate who is on an indeterminate sentence and whom our parole board may parole, is automatically and personally interviewed. Not by mail, as is done with the National Parole Board. He does not have to make application as is required by the National Parole Board.

Now these requests for review by any of these people I have mentioned, are given full and careful consideration by three members of the board. As the board consists of seven members, it is unlikely that the three members who review his case will be the same as the three who heard his case in the first place. This is the common practice of all parole boards, and no board to my knowledge—outside of the information that the hon. member for High Park has given me and I am still not sure that he has made a clear cut case as it appears on the surface, nor that we are talking about the same thing—has its review cases heard by some other independent body.

There appear to be good reasons for it to be done in this way. All parole decisions must reflect a co-ordination of a good many factors. The inmates' ability to learn, their insight and their motivation must be considered. The stage they are at in treatment must be considered. Their progress in furthering their education and taking a trade must be considered. Their future plans and the opportunities that exist to effect must be considered and finally, but by no means least, the person's attitude must be considered.

The timing of the parole process therefore becomes a matter of vital importance. No one passes through all of these stages at exactly the same pace. Such a review board would, therefore, have to have at its disposal all the information that was available to the parole board. Its decisions must reflect the same concern about co-ordinating all the factors involved and timing the release so that successful rehabilitation is likely to be the result.

Another matter that has not been mentioned here is that if we did have a review board such as the hon. member suggests, the terms of sentences in our institutions are so short that by the time the man's case could be reviewed and all the processes that would go into such a review could be handed over to such a review board—and he got his time in court, as it were, at the review board, he would probably be released, because his discharge date would have occurred.

Mr. Shulman: What about the case I just gave you?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I do not know about the case. As a matter of fact when I discussed the matter of parole with Mr. Justice McRuer, he expressed the opinion that a parole decision was very much like a treatment decision. All the factors that can contribute to such a decision must be considered and the persons best qualified to make this decision are the people who considered the information and developed the plan around it in the first place.

The setting up of a separate appeal board would immediately establish, in the minds of our inmates, that parole is a right. Parole is not a right. It must be earned, and the applicant for it must demonstrate that he is ready to complete it successfully. Obviously, if it is looked upon in any other way, the inmates would overlook the necessary changes that have to be made in their former way of life.

I think, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Humber made some of the points which I was going to make and has made them very well. I think in view of this—in view of the percentages of paroles which are granted we may have every confidence in the parole board. The setting up of a so-called review board would, I think, be not only impracticable, but would accomplish nothing.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for High Park.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, first of all let me make one thing quite clear—no one here is suggesting that the parole board is incompetent. What we are suggesting is they consist of human beings, and human beings are not always correct. Thus there should be an appeal board, so when decisions are not correct there is somewhere to go.

The member for Humber mentions the Workmen's Compensation Board. I have had many complaints about the Workmen's Compensation Board, but at least, they have had the common sense to realize that they are not always right. They get up and they say—we have the Minister of Labour reporting here, saying we are right 99.2 per cent of the time—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, they have a right to workmen's compensation if they have a legitimate claim.

Mr. Shulman: And they have a right to parole if again they have fulfilled the requirements of good behaviour and rehabilitation.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: They have no right at all.

Mr. Shulman: Just as much as they have a right to compensation—yes, they have.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, sorry.

Mr. Shulman: This is where the Minister and I part company.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You and I not only differ on this; you also differ with Justice McRuer.

Mr. Shulman: Well, I do not always agree with Justice McRuer. He has brought a great number of wonderful ideas down, but you said something and I am not sure if you are quoting Mr. Justice McRuer or not, but you suggested that if you set up a review board you will be suggesting to the prisoners that parole is then a right.

Why would that be suggesting that to them any more than the fact you have a parole board in the first place? It is exactly the same situation.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The hon. member knows the point I am making. He knows it is valid.

Mr. Shulman: No, I do not agree. All right, let us pursue this a little further.

In applying for parole do you allow prisoners, of course, as in a—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: They do not apply for parole.

Mr. Shulman: Well, when they come up for parole then—when their parole hearing—By the way, is the prisoner always present at his hearing?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes.

Mr. Shulman: All right. At a parole hearing, is the prisoner allowed to have counsel assist him?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No.

Mr. Shulman: Then may I suggest, once again, as I suggested the other day, that perhaps the Minister should read the model penal code. I have here the proposed American Law Institute Code. It contains this provision, and I quote:

A prisoner shall be permitted to advise with his own legal counsel in preparing for a hearing before the board of parole.

Of course, the reason for—

Mr. Ben: Would the hon. member accept a question?

Mr. Shulman: Sure.

Mr. Ben: Would you please tell me what, precisely, in the American constitution sanctifies everything the Americans do that makes it perfect?

Mr. Shulman: I am not suggesting that everything the Americans do is perfect. We certainly disagree with them violently in a number of their international adventures, but we are trying to take the best from Scandinavia, from the United States—

Mr. Ben: No one is saying this is not a good idea, but why always quote American sources as if they were holy writ.

Mr. Shulman: I am afraid that, once again, the member for Humber has missed the point.

Mr. Ben: You are always quoting the United States sources as if everything they do is the last word.

Mr. Shulman: Yes, I will quote anywhere that has a better idea than we have and in this case they have a better idea than we have.

We have been quoting from Sweden often. We quote from Saskatchewan—what is left after the Liberals have mangled things there. We quote from anywhere where things are done better than they are done in Ontario.

Mr. Ben: It is not, as I say, as if they are infallible.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, this can be settled very easily.

The hon. member believes that parole is a right of the inmate.

Mr. Shulman: Provided that he fulfills certain requirements. Those requirements are rehabilitation within the institution, good behaviour—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: One of the requirements is that he has satisfied the people who are on our staff that he is ready for rehabilitation.

Mr. Shulman: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: So that is the provision. Not that he thinks he is ready—

Mr. Shulman: Of course.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: But that “they” think he is ready.

Mr. Shulman: Of course.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Then how do you? If they have refused him parole, then that has been fulfilled, that is the point—

Mr. Shulman: That is what I am saying. They may have made an error and there should be a way of review.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is a matter of judgment. It is a matter of value judgment.

Mr. Shulman: Yes, it is a matter of judgment. Can they not make an error?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Then you are saying that he should put somebody else's value judgment in place of their value judgment.

Mr. Shulman: That is right, as an appeal, exactly.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let the prisoners be the judge!

Mr. Shulman: Well, we are on to a different point now. I wonder if the Minister would care to comment on the model penal code which is—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, the neanderthals are getting restless again.

I would like to come back to the—

Mr. E. A. Winkler (Grey South): We are here all the time.

Mr. D. Jackson (Timiskaming): You do not say anything.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, the member for Grey-Bruce and the member for Grey South have one thing in common: neither understands what is going on.

Mr. Winkler: You had better get with it, too.

Mr. Shulman: Now, Mr. Chairman, through you to the Minister. The model penal code has suggested that because parole is such an important thing that a lawyer be present with the prisoner before the board. I personally do not think that would be a good idea, but that he be allowed to consult with his counsel before appearing before the board so that he can be advised as to the best way to present his case.

I am suggesting to the Minister that this perhaps would be a good introduction—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I do not understand the hon. member. If there is an inmate in any of our institutions and he wants to see his lawyer, he can see his lawyer before, or after, or in between parole.

Mr. Shulman: The Minister well knows that practically all of these, or many of these, inmates do not have the finances to arrange to have a lawyer. What you should have is what other jurisdictions have, a paid service. We cannot get this through legal aid.

There should be someone who will advise the inmate of what is the best approach to take before the parole board.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What the hon. member is suggesting is sort of an adversary system. The same as there is in the courts.

Mr. Shulman: No I am not. I am certainly not.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: This is ridiculous.

Mr. Shulman: An advisory system, not an adversary system.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: This is ridiculous. A lawyer is not going to wind up being an adversary and the hon. member knows that.

Mr. Shulman: No I do not know that.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The lawyer, in the very course of his profession, is taught that he is supposed to do everything to get his client what his client wants.

Mr. Shulman: Out.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That he wants out.

Mr. Shulman: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Now is this, in his view, the best way to run a parole system? Where we have people who are qualified and who have been experienced in deciding just when this inmate is ready for parole, having regard for all of the circumstances, and would suggest that you make a sort of adversary system out of this thing? That is ridiculous.

Mr. Shulman: I am not thinking of an adversary system, but that is quite clear.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Of course, if you have a lawyer you are going to have that.

Mr. Shulman: It is very, very clear that some inmates are glibber than others and some inmates who are glibber get out, while others who do not speak well are going to be staying there, because they are less well able to present their case.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, these are probably the ones who get out a little sooner.

Mr. Shulman: I am not convinced.

Mr. Winkler: The doctors know them.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I think we have pursued this as far as we can. There is an obvious difference of opinion as to the right for parole and I have said that it is not the view of the government and it is not the view of Mr. Justice McRuer that the inmate has a right to parole. That is a matter of treatment—treatment by the staff.

The hon. member, in his view, says he has a right to parole, providing certain other things are involved. There is a difference of opinion here which will not be resolved tonight, or at any other time in the immediate future, Mr. Chairman, and there is no use pursuing it.

Mr. Shulman: I just want to ask one final question. Is the Minister then determined he will not give consideration to bringing in an appeal board?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I can see no point in it.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, the offender against society may not have the right to parole, but he certainly has the right to a fair chance once he has served his time. This is the point that concerns me, this stigma of notoriety that is attached to every offender against society, because we live in a society which will not allow an offender to forget.

I feel I can speak with some authority on this matter because I have been participating in the destruction of names and reputations through my profession for the past 15 years as a broadcaster, a news broadcaster. And I must say that even at this point I have not reconciled myself to the fact that I have had to be one of those to tell the society around about people who have committed crimes, because the follow-through has come later on when acquaintances of mine have left these institutions and tried to get a decent start in life once again.

I am sure that everyone in this House has at some time or another known people, acquaintances, who have been in the same type of situation. This stigma of notoriety seems to ride along with people wherever they go. It does not matter what they do or what they try to do, there are always those people who are suspicious, finger-pointing, rumour-mongering, nattering, spiteful type of people who, when they find out about someone who has committed a crime, even though he has done justice and served his time, they still help him to return behind those walls.

I think, Mr. Chairman, the figures from the annual review of this department indicate or bear up what I am saying. If these figures are correct, 41.6 per cent of the inmates in our institutions in this province right now are repeaters. And who knows how many of the remaining 58 per cent are there because of the influence from those other 41 per cent.

So I say that I think this is a matter that should be of great concern to this department. I am sure it must be. And I am wondering what new theories the department is evolving to help the ex-inmate to overcome the stigma, this horrible stigma of bad reputation, as it were, that carries on.

I would like to make a proposal, although it will certainly sound quite radical I am sure, and the proposal is that we release these people from institutions with a similar amount of fanfare with which we introduce them to the institutions.

In other words, instead of making a secret of the fact that Joe Blow has now served his time and is going back home to take up his place in society, let us be proud of the fact this man has done something pretty good here.

He has served time, he has been rehabilitated to the satisfaction of this department in which we in the province of Ontario must trust. So rather than treat it as a secret let us make a big deal out of it. I mean, his wife, his children, his immediate acquaintances, will receive him with open arms, will they not? And if this is not a hypocritical society, if this is a true, just and truthful society, then why should this man be made to feel that he has to go along very carefully and very quietly?

The experience I have had with a few of these people is that they have left this system, the system which is headed by the hon. Minister, to all appearances quite rehabilitated. Even their health looks good, and certainly their mental health. There are two fellows I am thinking of right now in the broadcasting profession. They were very anxious to get a new start. In one case a fellow went along for two years and all of a sudden someone in the TV station found out about his background and this started coming back to this particular fellow, and the first thing you know he recapitulated.

What he could not stand were the pointing fingers, the suspicious eyes and so forth. I think these inmates leave these institutions with this psychological problem, this feeling of guilt that society has not forgiven them. Sure they have been let out of prison, but they are still in it because notoriety is waiting for them at the gates to hound them the rest of the days of their lives.

So I think there is a sickness in our society that has to be cured, and I think it is in the hands of this department to set up programmes of education for the people, to change this whole attitude about the prisoner. After all, if the man has done justice, if he has served a certain period of time and he has been rehabilitated and we in society accept that, then surely to God we are going to give that man a fair chance.

We hear a lot of people screaming about discrimination against their race or their colour or their religion or whatever it may be in the society, but I doubt if anyone suffers greater discrimination than the ex-inmate in our institutions. And there is the man who needs help.

My feeling is that this is a very serious area and I would like to see this department launch programmes of education, a whole new attitude, and I think they should start by making it public when a man leaves one of these institutions. I think those in the profession which I serve, the news media, should attempt in some way to give equal attention to the accomplishment of these men after they have served their time and become rehabilitated, as we do when we talk about them as being offenders.

I make no apology for broadcasting news about offenders in the society or court cases. I do not think that our profession needs to apologize, it is a service that we render the public in notifying them that certain people have entered into this particular era of danger, of suspicion, or possible danger.

However, once they have served their time and they are rehabilitated to the satisfaction of this department, then I think we should follow through with integrity and try to do our fair share in helping to get them started again. I am wondering what new theories the Minister and his department may be working on along this line.

And I might just add in conclusion that I do not think the "Shulmanization" of the names of certain inmates in our institutions in this House by using the names of these prisoners in connection with certain suspicious actions and so on, albeit in letters to the hon. member, I throw no discredit on his intentions, but only on the act of reading letters and using the names of these people in this House. I do not think it does them a bit of good. I think it would be just as well to say "Joseph T." or "Bob J." or whatever the case may be, without using the names of those people.

Mr. Deans: Is that any worse than broadcasting it over the air?

Mr. Knight: I think the hon. member is present. He can speak for himself.

Mr. Deans: I am sure he can.

I wonder if I might just return for a moment, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, may I have an answer from the hon. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Port Arthur has asked my views on his suggestion. First, I must say that I agree with him that names have been bandied about too much in the past here, not to the benefit of the inmates, or their rehabilitation.

Mr. MacDonald: The Tories are in agreement.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, I am not in agreement here because certainly I do not think—

Mr. MacDonald: So far the Minister is.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —that we should publicize these people's names. It may be just as well to say now that there are thousands and thousands of people over the years who have been in our institutions and have disappeared into anonymity and have taken their place in society.

There must be, as I mentioned earlier, or we would not have enough institutions to contain them all, because we have 61,000 go into our institutions every year. Over a period of 21 years we would have 1,200,000 or something like that and we would not have room for them.

Lots of people find their way and one of the reasons is their anonymity. Actually, there are only a limited number of people who really know that a person has served time in an institution. Only a very limited number know.

Also the hon. member said something about "when we know he has been rehabilitated." It actually takes a long time before you find that out. We really cannot say when a person has left our institution that in our view he has been rehabilitated. We may think he is on the way, but this has to be proven after he is outside in society where he finds it quite difficult to become reoriented to outside society.

So we could not tell at that stage anyway, and I do not think it would be in his best interests if other people knew that he had served time in an institution, because—there is no doubt about it—it would be a stigma, as far as society, as we know it today, is concerned. It is a stigma in the eyes of many people that someone has even been in a mental institution. Many things are a stigma which should not be today.

As a matter of fact the hon. member may be surprised how strongly I feel about this if he looks up Hansard. About 10 or 12 years ago as a private member in this Legislature, I even took exception to the fact that people's names were mentioned as having been picked up before they were even charged. What a shellacking I got as a result of that statement, not only from the press, but from the then Attorney General, because I still think—no, I had better not say it now—I would just tell the hon. member how strongly I feel about the use of names when it is unnecessary to do that.
