PREFACE

This small book is not intended in any way to be a general cook-book. It is published with the hope of assisting those who have adopted, or who are working toward adopting, a meatless diet. The recipes are, with a few exceptions, not original, but have been taken from several different cook-books, magazines, and newspaper articles; tested and in many cases slightly changed.

Most of the recipes have all, and many, more than a meat value. Those which can be properly substituted for meat are as follows:—some of the soups, all of the nut recipes, the lentil recipes, the bean recipes, many of the vegetable recipes, and all the egg recipes. So surely no one can make the usual remark—“How can you find enough variety without meat?” The only difficulty one finds is, in choosing from the long list offered by nuts, grains, legumes, cheese and eggs.

The following is a very short outline of the different kinds, or classes of foods—and this at least, should be understood by every woman, before she can plan intelligently the day's menu.

Foods are divided into five classes:—proteids, carbohydrates, hydrocarbons, mineral salts, and water. The chief function of proteids is to build and repair tissues, and they alone can accomplish this. Proteids differ from the other classes of foods in that they contain nitrogen, without which life cannot be sustained. The principal articles of food from which the non-flesh eater can obtain proteids are eggs, milk, cheese, nuts, cereals, peas, beans and lentils.

Carbohydrates, or starches and sugars, furnish heat and energy. Starches can be found in cereals, potatoes, sago, tapioca, rice and macaroni, and sugars in foods such as cane sugar, maple sugar, honey, beets, sweet potatoes.

The hydrocarbons, or fats and oils, also furnish heat and energy, and also fat.

Anyone who contemplates giving up meat should study and understand these classes of foods and know in what articles of food proteids can be found. Thus, in any meal where one would ordinarily have meat or fish, there should be a dish in which either eggs, cheese, nuts, peas, beans or lentils is found. To illustrate, if a meal should be prepared the main course of which were to consist of potatoes, beets, and squash there would be no proteid, or proper meat substitute, and anyone would be justified in complaining of a "gone feeling," or of a "craving for meat" an hour or so afterwards.

Apart from the humanitarian standpoint, and apart from the hygienic standpoint, which cannot be reasonably contested, it is well known that meatless dishes with the same, and often higher food value than meat do not contain the injurious waste products found in all meats.

The economic aspect is one which must also be taken into consideration in these days of high prices, and there can be no question but that a properly chosen meatless diet, while having an equal nutritive value, is decidedly less expensive.

One common objection to eliminating meat from the diet is that it lowers the amount of protein in the food. Formerly an ordinary person was supposed to require 120 grams of protein in order to maintain good health and to sustain ordinary activity. Recent investigation however, has proved that the amount of protein taken into the body can be reduced to 40 grams with no injurious results and now eminent authorities universally agree that among civilized peoples the protein intake has been too excessive.

An objection to using nuts in the diet is often heard, viz:—that certain people can never eat nuts, finding they often disagree with them. It is safe to say that these people have eaten them raw and either during or after a hearty meal. Now, as can readily be seen by anyone who cares to study into food values, nuts are sufficiently nutritious to take the place of meat; therefore when they are eaten with meat and probably not thoroughly masticated, it is not strange that they cause discomfort and indigestion.

The following is quoted from "Starving America," by Alfred McCann:

"For every pound of beef consumed by man, ten pounds of corn are necessary to produce that pound of beef. A pound of beef will support one man for a given length of time, but the quantity of corn necessary to make the pound of beef would support more than ten men for the same length of time.

"When we eat the flesh of the animal we eat the end-products of the animal's life processes, urea, uric acid, etc., when we eat the grains and legumes, the nitrogen supply is just as great, even greater, and without the urea."

NOTE—The reader might infer that this book was written in the interests of certain manufactured products which are used in several recipes. This is not so, for they enter into so many recipes only for the reason that the writer considers them a very desirable adjunct to meatless dishes.

“ Then, craving leave, he* spake
 Of life, which all can take but none can give,
 Life, which all creatures love and strive
 to keep,
 Wonderful, dear, and pleasant unto each,
 Even to the meanest; yea, a boon to all
 Where pity is, for pity makes the world
 Soft to the weak and noble for the strong.
 Unto the dumb lips of his flock he lent
 Sad pleading words, showing how man, who prays
 For mercy to the gods, is merciless.

* * * *

While still our Lord* went on, teaching how fair
 This carth were if all living things be linked
 In friendliness and common use of foods,
 Bloodless and pure; the golden grain,
 bright fruits,
 Sweet herbs which grow for all, the waters wan,
 Sufficient drinks and meats.

* * * *

And through the land next day passed a decree:

* * * *

*Buddha.

*' Thus the King's will is :—
There hath been slaughter for the sacrifice
And slaying for the meat, but henceforth none
Shall spill the blood of life nor taste of flesh,
Seeing that knowledge grows, and life is one,
And mercy cometh to the merciful.' "*

“ A carnivorous animal is not an ideal animal, and never can be. The life of a carnivorous animal is a perpetual onslaught. Every meal is a murder. Eating is not the harmless activity it is to one who sits down to fruit and grains. The carnivore must kill somebody, or have somebody else do it for him, in order to eat. It cannot be otherwise. And an animal whose life is one unbroken succession of such necessities, whose stomach is the grave of hundreds and thousands and even tens of thousands of his fellow-beings, may be meritorious in other respects—may preach the Golden Rule, decry war, give money to missionaries, and rail at the rich, but so long as he continues to fill himself every few hours with the blood and vitals of others he is not only not an ideal animal, but has in reality no just claims on life.”

“Some say if animals are not used for food they will overrun the earth. In India the Hindus do not kill cows, but they are not overrun with them. The Hindus did not have any slaughter houses until the British Government established them. In the states that are still governed by the Hindu Rajahs, the wild animals and birds are protected by strict laws. But these states are not overrun by wild animals, nor are the inhabitants driven out by them.”

“But is not flesh-eating natural?” I hear it asked, ‘Does not man in his primitive, savage state make use of flesh naturally? Do not wild animals devour one another?’ Yes, but we are not savages, nor are we purely animals, and it is time for us to have outgrown this attendant-of-savage life-custom.

“And now to my individual reader this last appeal. Who creates this demand that brings to the shambles every year to die at man’s hand the more than a hundred millions of cattle, sheep and swine that are annually sacrificed for food? Every man, woman and child who eats the meat their carcasses supply. After the last word is said about the callous drover, the ranchman and the railroad, the butcher whose hands must drip with blood, the packer who grows rich out of his traffic, we come face to face with ourselves. But for us there would be no demand and no supply.”
