In Am. Steel & Wire Co. v. Copeland, 159 N. C. 556, 75 S. E. 1002, "evidence of the defendants as to the conversation with the agent of the plaintiff was not strictly competent at the time it was offered, because it was a declaration after the event, but it appears that the deposition of the agent was on file, in which he denied the contract as contended for by the defendants, but that this deposition was introduced by the plaintiff, and the declaration of the agent was competent to contradict his evidence contained in the deposition. His honor could have permitted the introduction of the evidence out of its order, in the exercise of his discretion, and, if his ruling was not on this ground, it is not reversible error, because the evidence was made competent by the introduction of the deposition."

"There is often difficulty in distinguishing between mere conversations, as the term is here used, and evidence of the fact and circumstances under which a contract was made and so characterizing it. Neither is competent to vary or contradict the writing. It must speak for itself, nothing being added and nothing taken from it, changing its meaning. But in case of uncertainty, it may be read in the light of circumstances forming, really, a part of it, and giving character to it. That does not include mere conversations respecting it. We will say, in passing, that one should appreciate that discussion and agreement, or understanding at the time of making a contract as to the import of a term used in it which is susceptible of double meaning, is not within the field of mere conversations, but is within that of characterizing circumstances." Pennsylvania.—"In such cases, where the parol evidence is sufficient to warrant a chancellor in reforming the instrument, it is admissible to contradict or vary the writing. Wherever the oral evidence furnishes this degree of proof, our courts in the exercise of equitable jurisdiction have reformed the writing so as to make it conform to the intention of the parties in the execution of this instrument. We have applied this doctrine, and permitted parol testimony to be introduced for the purpose of reforming both executory and executed contracts." Safe Dep. & Tr. Co. v. D. C. & C. Where the language used was: "Ten feet of said lot being reserved as a right-way," the court said: "The language used leaves us in doubt as to the real intention of the parties in that respect. But in such circumstances the trial court was at liberty to receive parol evidence showing the situation and conduct of the parties and the state and condition of the premises with a view to ascertaining the intention of the parties in using the language to be construed. . . . If it appeared from such parol evidence that the place in regard to which the language was used had a way over it already fixed by buildings or permanent inclosures, the language was rightfully construed to be a reservation of the way thus located, fixed and defined. Salisbury v. Andrews, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 250, 253; Washburn's Easements and Servitudes (4th Ed.), p. 277. Especially if it appeared that such way was thereafter for a long time used by the grantee of the easement and those claiming under him, the grantor acquiescing in such use. The state and condition of the premises, and the subsequent user, would show what the parties intended by the deed and would operate as an assignment of the way as effectually as if the location had been fixed by the deed." Insurance.—"The application is silent as to the kind of policy to be delivered, further than to state that the same is to be a 'G A D 20 Pay.' Now the evidence showing the representations of the agent and the character of the policy tendered was admitted by the court, and no cross-assignment complains of that ruling. But if the ruling were assigned as error, yet we would be unwilling to hold that the oral testimony was inadmissible, because it cannot be said that such testimony contradicts the written contract that the policy was to be a 'G A D 20 Pay.' That expression is not so unambiguous as to preclude oral evidence of its meaning. Very naturally some representations as to the nature of the policy to be delivered would be expected to be made, and proof of the same should be allowed, especially where such proof as we have just shown does not contravene any of the rules of evidence by contradicting the written application or contract." Misdescription in designating bank may be corrected by parol. Bullard v. Leach, 213 Mass. 117, 100 N. E. 57. See "Wills," p. 518.

"If the 20 shares of stock mentioned might, because of the different circumstances attending separate and different issues of its stock by the corporation mentioned, mean either one thing or another, there lurked in the contract a latent ambiguity as to what its subject-matter really was. If the description of the subject dealt with found in the terms of the contract might apply to more than one thing, this fact, and also a statement or representation so made as to identify the particular thing intended to be contracted about, may be shown by parol evidence, without any violation of the rule against admitting such evidence to vary or contradict the terms of a written instrument." In Sentinel Co. v. Smith, 150 Wis. 231, 136 N. W. 602, the defendant sought to prove that prior to the signing of the guaranty he had a conversation with plaintiff's agent in reference to its meaning, and that it was understood between them that liability would cease when Hull had purchased and paid for $500 worth of papers. This evidence was properly excluded. "If testimony such as was offered could be received in any case, it would not be receivable for the purpose of importing ambiguity into an otherwise unambiguous contract, but for the purpose of ascertaining the meaning of a contract which was ambiguous on its face or became ambiguous when applied to the subject with reference to which the parties contracted. Locality.—"It is not possible to lay down a general rule as to what changes shall require an exclusion of photographic representations of the locality, but the trial court with the photographs before it, and the witness who took them, ought to be conceded some discretion in admitting or rejecting them." To show age.—"Dress alone makes a great deal of difference in the appearent age of a person. The combination of dress and a photograph would be doubly deceptive. When employed, the plaintiff was six months below the age fixed by the statute. A photograph taken a year before, dressed as she was, with veil and flowers on her head, short white dress, white slippers and stockings, was no evidence of her appearance as to age when employed. The prejudicial character of the photograph is manifest." Dresch v. Elliott, 137 App. Div. 252, 122 N. Y. S. 14.

Wherever the introduction of photographs and diagrams serves to illustrate a question in the case or to throw light upon the transaction, it is permissible to introduce same in evidence. Sanchez v. S. (Tex. Cr.), 149 S. W. 124.

Not conclusive of true location, "and, if appellant believed that views taken from or directed to the point where he locates the culmination of the affray would show a material variance from those presented by the state, it was an easy expedient to procure them and place them in evidence by the side of those relied upon by the prosecution." S. v. Baker (Ia.), 135 N. W. 1097.

Sufficient testimony as to accuracy of photograph of scene of homicide. In brief, Works testified that he knew the position of the various objects referred to, and that the photograph reported them correctly. This was sufficient for the admission of the photograph in evidence. The fact that the photograph was not taken until some time had elapsed after the homicide was not a circumstance of sufficient weight to exclude it. Hughes v. S., 126 Tenn. 40, 148 S. W. 543.

834-43 Champion v. Kieth, 17 Okla. 204, 87 P. 845.

"Without the assistance of expert evidence, it is entirely logical and correct to say that the result furnishes no evidence of negligent treatment: but there doubtless are cases where evidence of a poor result alone would convince an expert that the treatment must have been improper, and in such cases we can see no reason for excluding the opinion based on such evidence, or in refusing to give weight to such opinion. The court does not draw the inference of negligence from the result, but from the evidence of the experts." Sawyer v. Berthold, 116 Minn. 441, 134 N. W. 120.

"The presumption against suicide is very strong—strong as the universal instinct for life—but it may be overcome by proof, just as the instinct for life, in individual instances, may be overmastered by a desire for death; and we perceive no reason in law or logic for saying that the fact of suicide cannot be established in law. The true rule thus is tersely stated by the Supreme Court of Wisconsin, in Agen v. Insurance Co., 105 Wis. 217, 80 N. W. 1020, 76 Am. St. Rep. 905: 'Where the reasonable probabilities from the evidence all point to suicide as the cause of death, so as to establish it, in the light of reason and common sense, with such certainty as to leave no room for reasonable controversy on the subject, a jury should not be permitted to find to the contrary, and have such finding stand as a verity in the case; but the question should be decided by the trial court as one of law.'" In Nat. Produce Dist. Co. v. Growers' Assn., 10 Ga. App. 338, 73 S. E. 606, "the general theory of the plaintiff's case was that the defendants contracted to act as their sales agents and to aid them in the distribution of their melon crops, by directing them how and where to ship and sell most advantageously, and that they breached this contract by negligently advising them, so that they shipped the melons to places where, on account of market conditions, a fair price could not be obtained. Evidence that the melons could have been disposed of at the initial point for sums largely in excess of the price at which these sales agents sold them at the places to which they directed the melons to be shipped had some relevancy toward establishing the negligence thus charged by the plaintiffs against the defendants; and the court did not err in admitting the testimony."

Bond to dissolve foreign attachment. "The bond in the case at bar is not an official bond, or a bond of indemnity, or a bond to insure the faithful performance of duty, or to secure a proper accounting by persons acting in fiduciary relations, and therefore the rule in this class of cases, that a judgment against the principal is conclusive against his sureties as to his misconduct, and failure to properly account, has no controlling force here. In the class of cases referred to the surety submits himself to the acts of his principal as a legal consequence of his suretyship because, as the courts have said, it was the intention of the parties to the undertaking to assume this liability. This rule applies to bonds of administrators and guardians, bonds of assignees for benefit of creditors, official bonds, bonds of indemnity, and other bonds of like character." In an action by an executor to recover bonds of deceased claimed by defendant, her husband, as a gift, it appeared that at the time the attorney went with defendant to the bank, "and when the bonds were transferred in his presence to box 158, the relation of attorney and client did not subsist between them. Afterwards he was employed as counsel for both deceased and defendant, and the transactions about which he testified were their joint business and the conversations took place in the presence of both. Under these circumstances he was a competent witness. Goodwin Gas Stove & Meter Company's Appeal, 117 Pa. 514, 12 Atl. 736, 2 Am. St. Rep. 696; Seip's Estate, 163 Pa. 423, 30 Atl. 226, 43 Am. "A question of evidence, to some extent, is a question of sound policy in the administration of the law. Sometimes it is necessary to weigh the probative force of evidence offered, compare it with the practical inconvenience of enforcing a rule to admit it, and decide whether, as matter of good policy, it should be admitted. Uniform conduct under the same circumstances on many prior occasions may be relevant as tending somewhat to show like conduct under like circumstances on the occasion in question. All relevant evidence, however, is not competent.'' Zucker v. Whitridge, 205 N. Y. 50, 98 N. E. 209, where there were four witnesses.

Burden of proof is on defendant to show that defect was without its knowledge. Harper v. R. Co. (Ia.), 143 N. W. 529.

"The liability of the defendant in this class of cases is statutory; and plaintiff can only recover upon proof of the defendant's failure to lawfully fence at the place where the animals killed came upon the right of way, as provided in section 3145, R. S. 1909. The burden of making this proof is undoubtedly upon the plaintiff, and his action fails, unless he makes out a prima facie case. He is required to prove, either directly or from physical facts and circumstances, that the animals entered the right of way at a place where the statute requires the fences or cattle guards to be erected and maintained, and that the statute had not been complied with. As stated, this need not be by direct testimony. Proper circumstantial evidence of sufficient probative force will support the burden of proof; but the same must show that the animals entered at a place on the right of way where the defendant was required to erect and maintain a lawful fence or cattle guards, and had failed to do so." A weak and inconclusive presumption. McCary v. Co. (Ala.), 62 S. 18.

Burden on defendant to show fire caused by operation of engine on a track, exemption from liability for fire caused on which it had secured by contract with plaintiff. Thomason v. R. Co., 122 La. 995, 48 S. 432.

"The reason for the rule, which places the burden upon a railroad company to rebut the presumption of negligence by proof of the condition of the engine and its proper operation, is that it has the means of producing the necessary evidence on the subject, and to require a plaintiff to prove the condition of the engine and the appliances used to prevent the escape of sparks would be practicaly a denial of justice." Missouri, etc. R. Co. v. Morgan & Bros. (Tex. Civ.), 146 S. W. 336.

"But this is a mere presumption of fact, and, when proof is offered of the condition and operation of the engine, the burden of proof is not shifted from the plaintiff to the defendant, but remains throughout the trial with the plaintiff. It is not required that plaintiff's prima facie case established in the manner referred to shall be rebutted by a preponderance of the evidence. Evidence of equal weight with that which grows out of the presumption of negligence, which the law implies from proof that the fire originated from sparks thrown by the railway company's engine, and other evidence offered by the plaintiff, will suffice." Circumstantial evidence. — Generally where it is shown that there was no fire on the premises before, and no probable cause for the fire except the locomotive, that the wind was blowing from the road to the grass, and that the fire broke out soon after the engine passed, these things are circumstances sufficient to justify the conclusion that the fire was communicated by the train. Jury may not know, without evidence, engines emit sparks which may be blown a given distance. St. Louis S. R. Co. v. McIntosh (Tex. Civ.), 126 S. W. 692.

"Testimony not limited to the particular engine which, according to the appellant's theory, was the only one which could have caused the fire in question. This testimony was unquestionably competent upon one issue. The railway company was taking the position that the barn was so far distant from the railroad track as that it would be impossible for sparks or cinders to be cast or carried so far from a locomotive. The testimony of the witnesses generally upon their observation in this respect was certainly competent and admissible to throw light upon this issue. The same remarks apply to the size of the cinders and sparks. This precise question was before this court in Kentucky Central Railroad Co. v. Barrow, 89 Ky. 638, 20 S. W. 165, where it was held competent to show that the engines running past the location of the fire were so managed as to be likely to set on fire objects not more remote than the property burned." In an "extremely close case on the facts, the court permitted some half dozen witnesses to testify to what the prosecutrix told them about all the details of the alleged offense, and all about the locality where the offense was alleged to have been committed—the condition of the ground and other things. What these witnesses testified to was nothing that they had any personal knowledge of; but the prosecutrix took them down to the place where she said the alleged offense occurred, and pointed out to them various objects, footprints in the sand, depression in the earth, cane trampled down, and grass, and told them, moreover, the details of the alleged offense. This was manifest and fatal error." Frost v. S., 100 Miss. 796, 57 S. 221.

"Ratification may be made by formal action, or by passive acquiescence; but in either event such facts must be established as will warrant the proper finding. In the present case the ratification relied on by appellee depends upon certain facts, and, as we view the record, these facts are for the jury. The burden will be on the plaintiff to show such acquiescence in, knowledge of, and adoption of, his services by the corporation as will warrant the jury, under instructions as to the law, in finding a ratification." Ground of order.—"If the decree appointing the guardian had expressly found the deceased unsound of mind, doubtless parol testimony would have been inadmissible because in contradiction of the record, but as a guardian may in this state be appointed for one who is an habitual drunkard, or a spendthrift, as well as for one who is unsound of mind, we think the rule should be that, where the record does not expressly state the ground for the appointment, parol testimony is admissible to show the reasons therefor. Of course, parol testimony should not be allowed to contradict a record; but, if the record is silent, parol testimony may be adduced to explain it." Cahill v. Cahill, 155 Ia. 340, 136 N. W. 214.

"That there was a mistake, and that it was mutual, must be shown by a very high degree of proof, as may be seen from the following expressions gathered from our own reports: The proof must be 'full, clear, and decisive,' 'strong, satisfactory, and convincing,' 'free from all doubt and uncertainty,' 'beyond fair and reasonable controversy,' 'beyond reasonable doubt,' such as 'entirely to satisfy the conscience of the court.' Carrying concealed weapons.—"Section 4 of the act, which created the offense for which this defendant was tried, expressly provides that the defendant may give evidence that at the time of carrying the pistol he had good reason to apprehend an attack, which evidence the jury may consider in mitigation of the fine or justification of the offense. It is true that the defendant in his testimony denied that he had carried a pistol as charged in the indictment; but the jury may have disbelieved that part of his testimony, and the fact that the jury convicted the defendant clearly indicates that they did not believe that part of his testimony. This fact, however, does not in any way destroy the relevancy of the above-stated testimony." Ward v. S., 4 Ala. App 112, 58 S. 788.

It is not "necessary that the party on whose behalf testimony is received, upon the promise of counsel to show its materiality subsequently, should afterward connect such testimony with the issues involved, by undoubted evidence. If sufficient evidence is offered to make it a fair question of fact for the jury to determine, such evidence should not be excluded; but if the subsequent evidence does not tend to connect such testimony with the issues involved, it should be excluded when the court is asked to do so at the close of all the evidence of the party offering such testimony." Collateral matters admissible under statute. Beard v. Beard, 66 Or. 526, 133 P. 795.

A question asked the assaulted party by the defendant, while testifying as a witness for the state, about a third party's having shot at him some time before the assault in question by the defendant, was properly disallowed by the court. That some other person, in no way shown to be connected with the commission of the offense for which the defendant was being tried, at some other place and time, had shot, or shot at, the party assaulted, was entirely irrelevant and immaterial. Walker v. State, 139 Ala. 56, 35 South. 1011." Collins v. S., 3 Ala. App. 64, 58 S. 80.

Where it was fully admitted by the defendant that the deceased was caught in the gearing, and that he died as a result of the injuries received thereby, and the only questions were whether the uncovered gearing constituted negligence, and whether, if so, the deceased was guilty of contributory negligence; it was improper to show the shocking condition of the body. "The evidence could only tend to excite the sympathies and, perhaps, the passions of the jury." West v. Bayfield Mill Co., 149 Wis. 145, 135 N. W. 478.

A witness, "after testifying to facts material to the case, stated that he had known the plaintiff for 30 years, and that his general character was good. The defendant then asked him the following question: 'Do you think a man that will go to a distillery and try to run another man away with gun and sticks and other weapons, and attend a lynching bee, and help lynch a man, is a man of good character?' This question was plainly incompetent, as it sought to inject into the case questions of fact utterly foreign to the issues in the case." Woodie v. Town of No. Wilkesboro, 159 N. C. 353, 74 S. E. 924. As said by Mr. Justice Allen in State v. Holly, 155 N. C. 485, 71 S. E. 450: "If one collateral question of this character can be raised and tried, the same rule would permit a hundred others. The authorities in this state are numerous and uniform that it is an error to allow such questions on the cross-examination of a witness as to character."

Code, 1895, §2937, it was not admissible to ask the plaintiff, on cross-examination, if the wife of the innkeeper did not warn her, on a certain occasion, to leave her jewelry in a safe of the hotel provided for the safe-keeping of the valuables of guests. "Ordinarily, evidence of other criminal transactions is not admissible. Some of the exceptions are when it shows 'a system of mutually dependent crimes,' or is 'evidence of guilty knowledge,' or bears upon the question of identity of the accused, 'or articles connected with the offense,' or where the evidence of other transactions tends to 'prove malice, intent, motive, or the like.' 524-55 Disease of sheep sold was "obvious and was discovered by the buyer himself, but it is clear that he did not know that the disease was dangerous and contagious, but was assured by respondent's agent that the sheep were all right; that their condition was the result of sand burrs in the hay or change of food, and that they were all right. Was this a concealment of a latent defect? The agent of respondent by his representations concealed from the appellant the latent deadly and contagious nature of the disease of which the jury might infer he had knowledge. Under such circumstances the agent committed a fraud upon appellant." Dale v. Co., 160 Mo. App. 314, 142 S. W. 745.

Question for jury whether the defendant had the right to accept positive statement and guaranty as to age of horse made by the plaintiff and rely upon it, rather than rely upon the statement made to him by his friend, especially in view of the fact that the owner of the horse, as the evidence shows, was an experienced dealer in horses. "This rule is based upon the presumption that the vendor has the property in his possession or under his control. In such case, if the vendee refuses to accept, the vendor may sell the property in the open market, and his damage would be the difference between what it sold for and the contract price. This rule also obtains in a contract to manufacture, as to such articles as have been already manufactured and ready for delivery where the contract is broken by the defendant. The rule rests upon the principle of the indemnification of the injured party for the injury he has sustained, and, ordinarily, the value in the market at the time and place of delivery under the contract furnishes the readiest, most direct, and fairest method of ascertaining the measure of this indemnity." A purchaser of shirts, "before acceptance, discovered the inferior quality of the shirts as compared to the samples, and immediately notified the seller of the fact, and that the shirts were held subject to the seller's order and directions as to disposition or shipment. While he placed the shirts in his store, he did not treat them as a part of his stock by selling any of them to customers. But when the seller absolutely refused to take the shirts back, or to give any directions as to disposition, and when the shirts were deteriorating in value by dust, the depredation of rats, etc., the purchaser sold them for the purpose of lessening the eventual damages. This conduct did not amount to an acceptance of the shirts, for when the purchaser at once notified the seller of their inferior condition and offered to reship them, and that they were held subject to the seller's order, he did all he could do; and when, after the refusal to rescind, the shirts were deteriorating in value, it was his duty to sell in order to diminish the damages." 699-60 In S. v. Teeter, 239 Mo. 475, 144 S. W. 445, the corroboration rested entirely upon statements alleged to have been made by defendant in the presence of the aunt of prosecutrix at whose home the entire courtship between defendant and prosecutrix was carried on. "The prosecutrix testified that the promise of marriage and seduction took place the second time defendant called upon her. This evidence itself is improbable and unsatisfactory. While it is possible for courtships to proceed at such a breakneck speed, it is certainly very unusual, and the fact that the prosecutrix yielded to defendant on such limited acquaintance tends more strongly to support the contention of defendant as to her previous unchastity than to corroborate her evidence that a promise of marriage was the means of bringing about the alleged seduction."

In So. Transp. Co. v. R. Co., 196 Fed. 548, the only evidence that there was improper steering was the fact that the sheer took place. "What caused it is not shown. Such sheers are often caused by other things than the mistakes of the helmsman. As in this case, it not infrequently happens that their real cause is a mystery. The barge was proceeding very slowly. It seems unlikely, under such conditions, that any probable negligence on the part of the man at the helm could have caused so rank a sheer."

Theft of a different animal at another time. Slaydon v. S., 102 Miss. 101, 58 S. 977.

In Meno v. S., 117 Md. 435, 83 A. 759, it was held improper to attempt to prove by witness that the accused had told him that he had performed operations on or treated other girls as showing a familiarity on the part of the traverser with what could be done to rid a woman of a child. Said the court: "There is a class of cases in which evidence may be given of other similar acts done by an accused, but this class of cases is restricted to where the several acts are connected together and form part of one entire scheme or transaction, so that one of the acts forms a basis for a reasonable and proper inference as to the purpose and intent with which the particular act was performed for which the accused was then on trial."

Exceptions limited.—Such testimony "is allowed, where a guilty intent must be shown, to meet the presumption of accident or mistake. Such is the case of passing counterfeit money, or of filing undervaluing invoices 'with intent to evade' the customs law, or of making false representations 'with intent' to obtain property thereby. When the government has proved that the defendant has passed a counterfeit coin, or has filed an undervaluing invoice, or has made false representations, the case is not fully made out. Every one of these things might be done innocently in one instance, but hardly in many instances. The exception ought not to be extended. Such testimony certainly prejudices the defendant even if the court charges the jury that it is admitted only to show intent. It is not needed in the case of a scheme to defraud. It would be impossible to find the existence of a scheme to defraud without finding also the fraudulent intent of the person who devised it. The moment the fraudulent scheme is established, there is no necessity for resorting to other transactions as in the excepted cases mentioned. No one can have an innocent intent in devising a fraudulent scheme." Marshall v. U. S., 197 Fed. 511, 117 C. C. A. 65.

Where no exceptions are made there is a legal presumption that none were intended. U. S. v. Lumb. Co., 202 Fed. 700, 121 C. C. A. 162.

Unconstitutionality must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt. East Shore Land Co. v. Peckham, 33 R. I. 541, 82 A. 487; S. v. Kofines, 33 R. I. 211, 80 A. 432, and cases cited.

"Every presumption is in favor of the validity of the legislative enactment; and, unless the court can clearly see that the act is contrary to the fundamental law, it ought not to declare it unconstitutional. If the court entertains a doubt, that is enough to determine the question in favor of the legislative act; for the rule is that the court must be clearly and strongly convinced of its unconstitutionality before it will be justified in declaring an act void." Herold v. McQueen, 71 W. Va. 43, 75 S. E. 313.

"Laws enacted by the legislature are presumed to be valid, and, even if defective because violative of some provision of the state constitution, are not void, although they may in a proper case be voidable; that is, upon complaint by a party whose rights are impaired by such statute." S. v. Blake, 241 Mo. 100, 144 S. W. 1094.

The court will take judicial notice of the fact that it is the custom of electric railway companies operating their cars in the public streets to equip them with fenders or some similar device, and that their object is the protection of the public engaged in ordinary business or travel upon the streets, whence arises a duty on the part of defendant. Love r. R. Co., 170 Mich. 1, 135 N. W. 963.

Evidence as to purpose of handhold properly refused.—"No testimony offered upon that question could have added to the knowledge already in the possession of each of the jurors. The use of the appliance is absolutely obvious. It is intended primarily as an aid to passengers in boarding and alighting from cars, but, when cars are crowded, it is frequently used by passengers to enable them to maintain themselves in a position upon the car which without its use would be impossible. It is intended for use by all who are invited to become passengers upon the cars of defendant. As, in its invitation to the public, no discrimination is or can be made by defendant in favor of those light in weight or against those who are heavy, it follows that defendants' equipment must be such as to reasonably meet the demands of all." Objection to answers and not to questions. Objecting party cannot speculate on what testimony will be and then move to exclude it. Robinson v. S. (Ala. App.), 62 S. 372.

"When a witness is being examined, and a question is put to the witness which calls for irrelevant or immaterial testimony, it is the duty of the party against whom such testimony is being offered to object to the question. If he fails to do so, and the answer of the witness to such question is responsive to it, although irrelevant and immaterial, then a motion of the party against whom such testimony is introduced to exclude such answer from the jury is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court, and the action of the trial court on such motion will not be reviewed." 350-1 St. Bd. of Education v. Remick (N. C.), 76 N. E. 627.

351-3 It was not intended by the Kentucky statute "that in an action of ejectment or of trespass to try title or to quiet title beween him and a third party, not the taxpayer or claiming through the taxpayer, that the sheriff's deed should be prima facie evidence of title, either of record or by adverse possession, in the person in whose name the property was sold, and thus render it unnecessary in such an action to prove title in him. On the contrary, in such an action, it is still necessary to prove in the taxpayer either a title of record or by adverse possession. Having proven such title in the taxpayer, all that then remains is to introduce the tax deed. This will be prima facie evidence of title in the purchaser by virtue of the tax proceedings." Burks v. Cox, 149 Ky. 106, 147 S. W. 737.

Admissible to show common source of title.—Skov v. Coffin (Tex. Civ.), 137 S. W. 450.

354-9 "The manifest purpose of this section [Ky. St., §4030] was to change the burden of proof, which was formerly upon the purchaser at the tax sale, and impose upon the taxpayer the burden of proving some fatal irregularity in the tax proceedings. Therefore all that is necessary on the part of the purchaser in a contest between him and the taxpayer, or any one holding under the taxpayer, is to introduce the tax deed. This makes out a prima facie case of title in him by virtue of the tax proceedings, and it then devolves upon the taxpayer, or one claiming through him, to show such irregularities in the tax proceedings as will avoid the sale. By such proceedings the purchaser acquires the title of the taxpayer, whatever it may be. Husbands v. Polivick, 128 Ky. 652, 96 S. W. 825, 29 Ky. Law. Rep. 890." Burks v. Cox, 149 Ky. 106, 147 S. 620-3 See Rucker v. Jackson (Ala.), 60 S. 139.

The evidentiary value of the circumstances essential to authorize the presumption that the missing conveyance had been made is derived chiefly from their tendency to show an acquiescence in the title asserted by the adverse claimant. But asquiescence presupposes knowledge on the part of the owner that opposing rights are set up by another; for how can it be said that one acquiesces in something of which he is ignorant: But knowledge may also be inferred from circumstances, such, for instance, as possession, coupled with open and notorious claim of ownership. It has been held, however, that actual possession of another is not necessary to an inference of knowledge and acquiescence sufficient to support the presumption of a conveyance." In an action to recover possession of a diamond ring which plaintiff alleged that the defendant unlawfully withheld from her, a witness for the plaintiff testified, in substance, that the plaintiff purchased the ring of him and paid for it, and that at the time it was delivered, by parol agreement between the plaintiff and defendant's intestate, Doughan, the ring was loaned to the latter; the title and ownership being retained by the plaintiff. He was not "a person interested in the event" of this action. "I think it must be regarded as the rule that a witness who might be disqualified may, by his own testimony, show the existence of conditions permitting him to testify concerning the acts of a deceased person. This question has been involved commonly in the case of an interested witness offered for the purpose of proving declarations of a deceased person in a conversation with a third party in which the proposed witness took no part; and, while it has been questioned whether the witness might, by his own testimony, establish his aloofness from the conversation, for the purpose of permitting him to testify concerning what was said by the deceased (Petrie v. Petrie, 6 N. Y. S. 831), this has repeatedly been allowed and sometimes apparently where the question was fairly raised. Lobdell v. Lobdell, 36 N. Y. 327, 332, 333; Stern v. Eisner, 51 Hun 224, 4 N. Y. "Where a railroad company has located its road across property, it is not proper for one owner to show what the company has paid as compensation for other property, because it must have the particular property, even if it costs more than its real value. There is also the element of damage to remaining property, differing in almost every case, and the amount paid furnishes no fair criterion of value. The company cannot prove what it has paid, because the sale is compulsory; and it could have forced a sale at a price to be fixed by a jury.'' Chicago, etc. R. Proof of value as basis of rates for services. — Proof of value as basis for establishing rates for public service must not be confined to mere addition of value of several parts of plant, nor to its cost alone, nor to what it might have been sold for if price influenced by excessive rates for service, nor to the cost of replacing it. "The original cost of construction, the amount expended in permanent improvements, the amount and market value of the bonds and stock, the present, as compared with the original cost of construction, the probable earning capacity of the property under particular rates prescribed by statute, and the sum required to meet operating expenses are all matters for consideration." Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466 (applying rule to carriers); Cedar Rapids W. Co. v. Cedar Rapids, 118 Ia. 234, 260, 91 N. W. 1081 (water rates); Cedar Rapids G. Co. v. Cedar Rapids, 144 Ia. 426, 120 N. W. 966 (gas rates). In such a proceeding value of goodwill of corporation which has a monopoly is not to be considered. Willcox v. Co., 212 U. S. 19, and Iowa cases cited supra. The value of property possessed without title may be shown, but not that held for future use if it will not be required for immediate extension of the plant. Cedar Rapids G. Co. v. Cedar Rapids, supra. Value is to be fixed as of day ordinance establishing rates enacted. Ibid. Value of pipe in ground is not to be fixed by evidence of cost of material on day in question. Its cost, the prices at which it ordinarily sold, in connection with existing price, is to be considered, allowance being made for deterioration. No added value results to pipes from being covered with pavement. Ibid. Value of services in promoting and organizing similar company, immaterial. Ibid. Cost of reproducing a plant is not a correct measure of its value for the purpose of determining justice of rates established for services; allowance should be made for depreciation in value. Bonds and stocks issued under unusual conditions, not a guide to its value. Knoxville v. Co., 212 U. S. 1. In such a case evidence of discounts given by company under contracts with patrons is irrelevant because the ordinance fixing rates does not contemplate giving them; and so of evidence of the effect of the ordinance without the limits of the city. Evidence of the earnings of the plant after ordinance took effect, admissible. Knoxville v. Co., supra.

Money expended from earnings in keeping up plant is not to be added to its original cost in fixing value. Knoxville v. Co., 212 U. S. 1.

Rates fixed by ordinance after investigation of data furnished by corporation, prima facie valid. Burden of showing excess of earnings over depreciation in any year has not been carried to capital is on corporation, contrary appearing from its books. Louisiana R. Com. v. Co., 212 U. S. 414.

In valuing property of public corporations as a basis on which to adjust charges for service each case must depend largely on its own special facts, and every element or circumstance which affects its value is to be regarded. "Neither the fair value of stocks and bonds, the cost of construction, nor the cost of reproducing the plant is absolutely controlling, but each should be regarded as a fact tending to show fair value." So. P. R. Co. v. Bartine, 170 Fed. 725. "If there is no other testimony in respect to the value of railroad property than the amount of stocks and bonds outstanding, or the construction account, it may be assumed that one or the other of these represents it." 621-2 Bouyer v. City, 4 Ala. App. 292, 59 S. 188; Zacuchny v. Lighterage Co., 157 Ill. App. 136.

"Practically conceding the action will not lie as one for slander of title, plaintiffs insist it may be treated as an action in the nature of trespass on the case; the essential fact being that the defendant maliciously asserted title to the ground by driving stakes, when he knew he had no title, for the purpose of preventing plaintiffs from selling, and succeeded in accomplishing the purpose. That is to say, his act alarmed Casey and prevented him from completing the sale, which had been negotiated with him. Without holding such an action will not lie, we hold it was not brought in this instance, which is plainly one for slander of title. The petition does not say setting the stakes out in itself prevented Casey from buying, but alleges, as will be observed by reading the conclusion, that said conduct, in connection with the verbal slander, broke up the sale. The allegation is 'that by reason of said false, defamatory, and malicious acts, representations, and statements so done and made by the defendant,' Casey was dissuaded from the purchase of the property, etc. The verbal slander is counted on throughout the petition as an essential part of the cause of action, and there was a futile attempt to make it good by evidence." Exception to bar of statute must be alleged. If it is not it will be presumed day on which offense alleged to have been committed is immaterial and prosecution not barred. Hollingsworth v. S., 7 Ga. App. 16, 65 S. E. 1077.

In Oliver v. S., 101 Miss. 382, 58 S. 6, a prosecution for unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors, etc. The day on which turned into court by the grand jury on the 15th day of March, 1911, and charged that the defendant, on the 15th day of February, 1911, in said county, did unlawfully sell vinous, spirituous, malt, alcoholic and intoxicating liquors, etc. The day on which the sale was actually made was not shown by the evidence; the witnesses simply stating that it occurred some time in February, 1911. The court: "Appellant claims that he was entitled to a peremptory instruction, for the reason that it was not shown that the sale occurred prior to the 15th day of February, 1911, the day laid in the indictment. 'The day on which the offense is charged to have been committed is immaterial, except in those cases where time is of the essence of the offense, or a necessary ingredient of its description; and hence, in a case not within the above exception, proof that the offense was committed either before or after the day laid in the indictment, but before the indictment was found and within the period prescribed by the statute of limitations, is sufficient.' In Hogg v. S. (Tex. Cr.), 146 S. W. 195, it was contended "that there was a fatal variance in the proof and the allegations in the information, in that the evidence shows that the cement stolen was the property of the City Lumber Company; and, further, that it shows the property was in the control and custody of Frank Machen, and therefore the information should have alleged ownership in the City Lumber Company, or in Frank Machen. We do not think these contentions are well taken. It is not questioned that C. H. Machen, in whom ownership was alleged, was the real owner of the property, and, though he might have been doing business under a given name, it was proper in the information to give the name of the real owner. Frank Machen was working for his brother, and had his peculiar duties assigned to him, but, inasmuch as C. H. Machen was in actual control and management of all the property, the fact that he, as yardman, had control of the property in the yard, was not that exclusive control and management of the property which rendered it essential to allege ownership in him."

Where it was claimed that the failure of defendant to pay $7.50 each month was a forfeiture of her rights under her contract, the court said: "In O'Fallon v. Kennerly, 45 Mo. 124, it was held that, where the other party received a payment after the forfeiture, the forfeiture was waived. Here, by the long-continued conduct of both parties, the provision for the payment of $7.50 each month was disregarded, and payments were repeatedly made at irregular intervals and of different amounts. The forfeiture was waived, and cannot be insisted on here." Randolph v. Ellis, 240 Mo. 216, 144 S. W. 483.

Voter, testifying to sustain his vote, is an interested party. Every voter, either for pure and patriotic motives, or for base and corrupt designs, is interested in sustaining his vote whenever it is attacked, and to that extent he is an interested party, and should not be allowed to profit by his attendance on court in order to testify and sustain his vote. This should be the rule in every contested election case where the contestants have absolutely no pecuniary interest in the case, and are acting as the representatives of a large body of the voters of a community, and who have assumed pecuniary obligations in connection with the case in other respects, which the statutes compel them to pay. After the jury had been charged and had retired, they returned, and on the request of the one of their number the mother was recalled to the stand for further examination on this subject. This examination was largely conducted by members of the jury, although the court and the prosecuting attorney did ask some questions. The counsel for the appellant was not denied the right of subsequent cross-examination, he expressly disclaiming any desire therefor, nor did he request the privilege of commenting on the additional evidence before the jury retired again. . . . If it rested in the discretion of the trial judge no complaint, can be effectively made in this court because the discretion was exercised in favor of allowing it." P. v. Ferrone, 204 N.
