

Anti-Slavery Office,

New York, 20 March, 1862.

Dear May,

I have engaged the Cooper Institute for Tuesday evening. I will reserve it for Wednesday evening also, when I get Wendell Phillips's and Theodore Tilton's consent to speak, as I presume I shall. The Trustees of the Church of the Puritans have not met since my application was put ⁱⁿ ~~it~~, but members assure me that their action will be favorable.

It is well to ask Dr. Tyng to speak. The invitation should contain a careful explanation of the freedom of our platform—a distinct statement that in coming to it he need endorse nobody but himself. But there's not one chance in ten that he will consent to come, and that being so, I venture to remind you that the Rev. Robert M. Hatfield (a very eloquent Methodist and a noble fellow) was engaged to speak last year, when we concluded to hold no meeting. ~~Then~~ Should he not be invited again? Then I think Rev. James A. Thome of Cleveland would be a "trump" for us. He's a capital speaker, and very radical in his anti-slavery.

I confess I think it a mistake to invite Anna E. Dickinson on this year. She's too inexperienced, spasmodic and uncertain. We ought to bring into battle now, especially in New York, our proved guns and our heaviest - nothing less than 10-inch Columbiads. I'm sure that McKim, who likes Miss Dickinson well, will agree with me that we ought not to pay our money for her, or to give her time to speak this year, in view of the complicated issues to be met and the need of statesmen on our platform.

Remember we are to have but ^{public} two meetings. There's no need of a woman ^{now} as a test, and I would not put one on who is not the peer of our best speakers.
Mary Grew would be a fitter person than Miss Dickinson, by far.

Yours, truly,

Oliver Johnson

I take for granted that you agree this year, as you did last, to the 10 cent ~~per~~ admission fee for Tuesday evening.
