

Michael Ernest Sadler
University College
Oxford

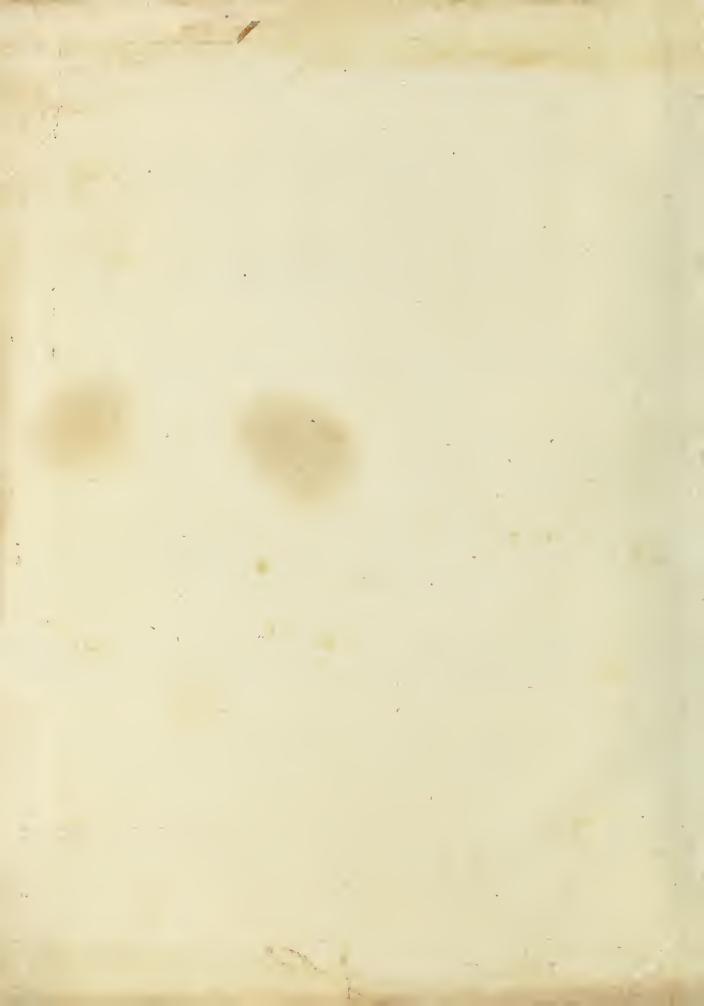

THE LIBRARY
OF
THE UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA
LOS ANGELES

GIFT of

THE LIBRARY

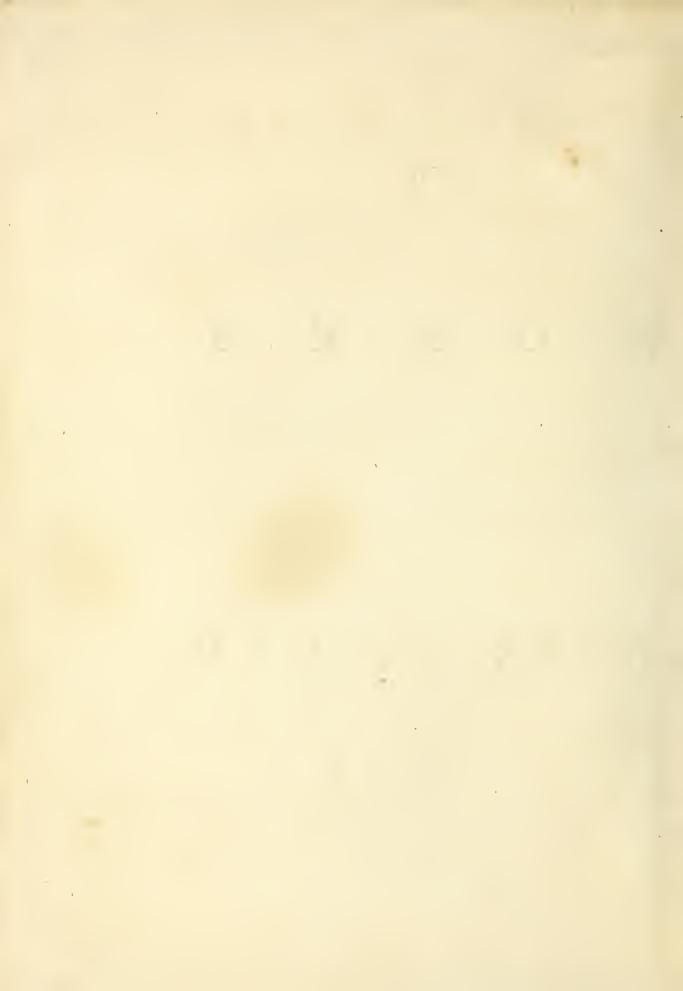

THE

WORKS

OF

ROGER ASCHAM.

1767

ENGLISH WORKS

OF

ROGER ASCHAM,

PRECEPTOR to QUEEN ELIZABETH:

CONTAINING,

- I. A REPORT of the Affairs of Germany, and the Emperor Charles the Fifth's Court.
- II. Toxophilus, or the School of Shooting.
- III. The SCHOOLMASTER, or perfect Way of bringing up Youth, illustrated by the late learned Mr. UPTON.
- IV. LETTERS to Queen ELIZABETH and others, now first published from the Manuscripts.

With Notes and Observations, and the Author's Life.

By JAMES BENNET,

Master of the Boarding-School at Hoddesdon in Hertfordshire.

LONDON:

Printed for T. Davies, in Russell-Street, Covent-Garden, And J. Dodsley, in Pall-Mall.

1767

TO

THE RIGHT HONOURABLE

ANTHONY ASHLEY COOPER,

Earl of Shaftesbury, Baron Ashley, Lord Lieutenant and Custos Rotulorum of Dorsetshire, F. R. S.

My LORD,

Aving endeavoured, by an elegant and useful edition, to recover the esteem of the publick to an authour undefervedly neglected, the only care which I now owe to his memory, mory, is that of infcribing his works to a patron whose acknowledged eminence of character may awaken attention, and attract regard.

I have not suffered the zeal of an editor so far to take posfession of my mind, as that I should obtrude upon your Lordship any productions unsuitable to the dignity of your rank or of your sentiments. Ascham was not only the chief ornament of a celebrated college, but visited foreign countries, frequented courts, and lived in familiarity with statesmen and princes; not only instructed scholars in literature, but formed Elizabeth to empire.

To propagate the works of such a writer will be not unworthy of your Lordship's patriotism: for I know not what greater benefit you can confer on your country, than that of preserving worthy names from oblivion, by joining them with your own.

I am,

My Lord,

Your Lordship's

Most obliged,

Most obedient, and

Most humble servant,

JAMES BENNET.

A LIST of SUBSCRIBERS.

TIS Grace John Duke of Argyle His Grace the Duke of Athol Richard Allen, Efq; Prior Park, 10 books Lawrence Aikenhead, Esq; Arthur Annesley, Esq; The Rev. Mr. Philip Allen, fellow of St. John's college, Cambridge The Rev. Mr. Allen of Eastwick The Rev. Mr. Abbot, A. M. fellow of St. John's college, Cambridge The Rev. Mr. Allen Mr. Burrage Angier Mr. Samuel Angier Mr. Thomas Attwood Mr. William Atkinson, surgeon Mr. Rupert Atkinson Anonymous

B. The Right Hon. Viscount Beauchamp,
Grosvenor-street
The Hon. Pat. Boyle, brother to the Earl of Glasgow
Sir Walter Blacket, Bart.
Sir —— Bennet, Bart. Scotland
The Rev. Edw. Barnard, D. D. head master of Eaton school
The Rev. Will. Brackenridge, D. D.
Sion college

The Rev. John Blair, chaplain to her Royal Highness the Princess-dowager of Wales

The Rev. Mr. Samuel Bulkeley

The Rev. Mr. Samuel Bulkeley Tho. Barrat, Efq; 6 books George Byam, Efq; George Bryant, Efq; William Burlton, Efq; Tho. Bowdler, Efq;

Edward Bacon, Esq; one of the lords commissioners for trade and plantations, and member for Norwich The Rev. Mr. James Bindly
Mr. John Bindly, jun. Aldersgate-street
Mr. John Bellington, of Hothesield in Kent

Mr. Tho. Busey, of Hothefield in Kent.

Mr. John Bladwell Mr. Bowen

Mr. Samuel Briel

Mr. Tho. Bromwich, Ludgate-Hill

Mr. William Bennet Mr. Tho. Otto Bayer Mr. Richard Brooke Mr. Baker, in the Strand Tho. Blackhall, Efq;

Mrs. Anna Maria Bagnall, Hatton-Garden

Mrs. Anne Byas Mrs. Harriot Bowdler Mr. William Bates

The Right Hon. Earl Cowper
The Hon. Henry Seymour Conway,

Grolvenor-street Henry Croasdale, Esq;

The Right Hon. the Lord Frederick Campbell

Tho. Cowflad, Efq; Tho. Carleton, Efq; Felix Calvert, Efq;

Grey Cooper, Eiq; of the Temple

John Cooper, Efq;

Mr. Will. Cowley, jun. Mill-Bank, Westminster

John Cale, Esq; 2 books Mr. Adam Cleghorn Mr. Francis Caryl

Mr. Robert Cawley, of the Strand, apothecary

Mrs. Margaret Calderwood of Polton

Mrs. Cochran Miss Cochran Miss Cowper

Mrs.

A LIST of SUBSCRIBERS.

Mrs. Catharine Collins, Hoddesdon Mr. Joseph Cotterel, jun. Archibald Cochran, Esq; Miss Harriot Cochran

D.

The Rev. Dr. Dalton, D. D.
The Rev. Mr. Drake, B. D. fellow of St. John's college, Oxford
James Durham, Efq, of Largoe, North

Andrew Douglas, Efq; Mr. Richard Dalton Mr. John Doughty

Mr. Dehulle, jun. Miss Esther Dehulle

E.

Sir Jeffery Elwes, 2 books

The Rev. Mr. Elliston, master of Sidney Sussex college, Cambridge James Egan, Esq. Queen-square, Ormond-street

George Egan, Esq; Queen-square, Ormond street

Mrs. Ewer

F

The Rev. Mr. Fowler, rector of Great Parndon in Essex Richard Falkner, Esq; Mount Falcon, in Ireland William Fraser, Esq; Rowland Frye, Esq; William Fielde, Esq; of Stansted Bury Paul Fielde, Esq; of Lincoln's Inn Mr. John Forbes, merchant Mr. John Fletcher Mr. George Fowler, Cornhill

Mr. William Frye

Mrs. Frye

G,

The Right Hon. the earl of Godolphin Sir Alexander Grant, Bart. Billiter-lane William Grant, M. D.

Edward Gardiner, Esq, of Pishoeberry, Hertfordshire

Charles Gardiner, Esq; of Ayot, Hertfordshire

Richard Gough, Efq; Thomas Gyll, Efq; John Gwilt, Esq; John Gilbert, Esq;

Mr. Green

Mr. Tho. Goodwin Mr. John Gomm

Mr. George Grisewood Rev. Mr. Gordon

Mr. Richard Gildart, jun.

Mr. Barnard Gold Mr. Robert Grifewood

Mr. Francis Garden, Pater noster-rove

Mrs. Gardiner Miss Gough

H.

Sir Tho. Harrison, knt. chamberlain of the city of London

Robert Harper, Esq; Lincoln's-Inn Tho. Hutchinson, Esq; of Hatfield

Woodhall, Hertfordshire

John Hamilton, Esq., of Bargainy, M.P.

William Harrison, Esq; Henry Hatsell, Esq; Adam Hamilton, Esq;

Basil Herne, Esq; John Hitch, Esq;

John Hatsell, Esa;

Will. Hammond, Esq; borough Mr. Will. Humphreys, merchant

The Rev. Mr. Samuel Hare, B. L. rector of Beauchampton

The Rev. Mr. Hey, fellow of Sidney

Suffex college, Cambridge Mr. John Hudgebout, 2 books

Mr. Oliver Humphreys, senior, 5 books

Mr. Oliver Humphreys, junior, 3 books Mr. Thomas Harvey of Newcastle

Mr. Nevile Henson Mr. John Hawkins

Mrs. Bridgett Houghton

Mrs. Hulbert Mr. John Hoole

Mr. A. W. Humphreys

Mrs. Mary Hinde, Rome-house, Chatham,

1.

Sir Convers Jocelyn, Bart. Charles Jennings, Esq; Mr. Richard Jones, Furnival's-Inn

K

SUBSCRIBERS. LIST of

The Rev. Mr. Kynaston

The Rev. Mr. Keate, rector of Hatfield

Mr. John Knight, merchant

Mrs. Frances King

The Right Hon. the Earl of Lincoln Sir Matthew Lamb, Bart. 2 books Henry Lyell, Efq; Saville-Row

Bibye Lake, Esq;

Stephen Law, Efq; Broxbourn Rev. Mr. John Lehunt, 2 books

Capt. Archibald Lundin

Mr. Lucas

Mr. Henry Long

Mrs. Lehunt, 2 books

St. John's library, Cambridge

M.

The Right Hon. the Earl of Macclesfield The Right Hon. the Lord Monson

The Hon. Charles Monfon

The Right Hon. Lord Charles Grevil Montagu

John Martin, Esq; Will. Mure, Esq; of Caldwall, M. P.

James Mitchell, Esq; 2 books

James Moate, Efq;

Tho. March, Elq; The Rev. Mr. Merrick

Mr. John Moncrieff

Mr. Frederick Maurer

Mr. Philip Margals

Major Roger Morris

Mr. James Morris

Mr. George Mercer

Mr. Joseph Mercer Mr. William Mercer

Mr. James Mercer

Mr. Douglas Mercer

Mr. George Mercer

Mr. Daniel Messman, junior

Mss. Martin

Miss March

N.

The Rev. Dr. Newcombe, dean of Rochefter, and mafter of St. John's college, Cambridge

Mr. Archibald Napier of Cheshunt

Mr. Alderman Niccoll of St. Alban's

Mr. Tho. Nicholls of Drayton, Shrop-

fhire

The Rev. Mr. John Norcross, rector of

Hothefield in Kent

Mr. Joseph Nixon

Mrs. Newcome Miss Nixon

O.

The Rev. Mr. Ofborne

Mr. Thomas Ord, St. Martin's Le Grand

Ρ.

The Rev. Dr. Powell, of St. John's,

Cambridge

The Rev. Dr. Paris, late master of Sidney Suffex college

William Poyntz, Efq; Old Burlington

Street, 2 books Philip Parfel, Efq;

George Prescot, Esq; member for Stockbridge

Mr. Kenrick Peck

Mr. John Pyle

Mr. Philip Palmer, junior

Mr. Henry Paulin

Mr. Johnson Pistor

Mr. Henry Pollard

Mr. John Proctor

Mrs. Pollen

Miss Pollen

The Right Hon. the Marquis of Rock-

The Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of Rocheiter

Nathaniel Ryder, Efq;

Mr. Samuel Richardson, 2 books

Mr. George Ringwood

The Right Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury, 20 books

The Right Hon, the Earl of Scarborough

Sir Simeon Stewart, Bart.

George Lewis Scott, Esq; commissioner of excise, Leicester-square

Alexander Strahan, Esq, D. LL. Suffolk-street

William

A LIST of SUBSCRIBERS.

William Sharpe, Efq; John Searanche, Efq; John Alexander Stainsby, Esq; John Shelly, Efq; Henry Spencer, Esq; Andrew Spankeman, Efq; Thomas Sheridan, Esq; Charles Stanhope, Elq; Andrew Stone, Elq; William Seymour, Esq; of the Middle Temple John Stevens, Efq; The Rev. Mr. Anthony Nourse Sanderson The Rev. Mr. George Stockwell The Rev. Mr. Thomas Salt The Rev. Mr. Walter Serocold The Rev. Mr. Summer, fellow of King's college, Cambridge Mr. Moses Smith The Rev. Mr. Thomas Smith Mr. James Searanche Mr. John Sleorgin, lenior Mr. John Sleorgin, junior Mr. William Smiton Dr. Ifaac Schomberg Edward Southwell, Esq; Mrs. Anne Singleton Mrs. Winifred Smart Mr. Scot

The Right Hon. the Earl of Thanet
Lady Agnes Trelawney
Sir Benjamin Trueman
Feines Trotman, Efq;
Rev. Mr. Taylor
Rev. Mr. James Trail, rector of St.
John's, Horfly-downe
John Turvin, Efq;
Mr. John Turner, 6 books
Mr. William Trinder, merchant, 2 books
Mrs. Parth. Traill, Hatton-Garden
Mr. Tuckfield
Mr. Randolph Tooke
Mr. John Till
Mr. Richard Till

Mr. William Tayleure Mr. Charles Tricquet Francis Vernon, Efq; James Vercheld, Esq; James Unwin, Esq; Castleyard Mrs. Vickers of Hoddesden The Right Rev. Dr. Hoadley, late Lord Bishop of Winchester The Right Rev. Dr. Thomas Lord Bishop of Winchester The Rev. Dr. Walker, vice-master of Trinity college, Cambridge The Rev. Mr. William Waterman The Rev. Mr. Wise, of Harlow The Rev. Mr. Willis, A. M. The Right Hon. Lord Sondes Charles Gregory Wade, Esq; of Drayton in Shropshire Nathaniel Wilkes, Esq; of Losts in Esfex, 20 books John Weyland, Esq; John Waters, Esq; Tho. Wilkinson, merchant, Crooked Lane Mr. John Welles, Boswell-court Mr. John Walsh Mr. Wigan Mr. Wilson, King's Street, Guildhall, 3 books Mr. Crook Wilson Mr. John Warrington Mr. Robert Woodefield Mr. Whalley Mr. John Worseley, of Hertsord Miss Rebecca Watson, New Norfolkftreet The Rev. Mr. Hugh Wyat Y. Hon. and Rev. James Yorke Hon. John Yorke Mr. Edward Younge, fellow of King's college, Cambridge Mr. Tho. Young.

THE

L I F E

OF

ROGER ASCHAM.

Toften happens to writers, that they are known only by their works; the incidents of a literary life are feldom observed, and therefore seldom recounted; but Ascham has escaped the common fate by the friendship of Edward Graunt, the learned maste: of Westminster school, who devoted an oration to his memory, and has marked the various vicissitudes of his fortune. Graunt either avoided the labour of minute inquiry, or thought domestick occurrences unworthy of his notice; or preferring the character of an orator to that of an historian, selected only such particulars as he could best express, or most happily embellish. His narrative is therefore scanty, and I know not by what materials it can now be amplified.

Roger Ascham was born in the year 1515, at Kirby Wiske, (or Kirby Wicke) a village near Northallerton in Yorkshire, of a family above the vulgar. His father John Ascham was house-steward in the family of Scroop, and in that age, when the different orders of men were at a greater distance from each other, and the manners of gentlemen were regularly formed by menial services in great houses, lived with a very conspicuous reputation. Margaret Ascham, his wife, is said to have been been allied to many confiderable families, but her maiden name is not recorded. She had three fons, of whom Roger was the youngest, and some daughters; but who can hope, that of any progeny more than one shall deserve to be mentioned? They lived married sixty-seven years, and at last died together almost on the same hour of the same day.

Roger having passed his first years under the care of his parents, was adopted into the family of Antony Wingsield, who maintained him, and committed his education, with that of his own sons, to the care of one Bond, a domestick tutor. He very early discovered an unusual fondness for literature by an eager perusal of English books, and having passed happily through the scholastick rudiments, was put, in 1530, by his patron Wingsield, to St. John's college in Cambridge.

Afcham entered Cambridge at a time when the last great revolution of the intellectual world was filling every academical mind with ardour or anxiety. The destruction of the Constantinopolitan empire had driven the Greeks with their language into the interiour parts of Europe, the art of printing had made the books easily attainable, and Greek now began to be taught in England. The doctrines of Luther had already filled all the nations of the Romish communion with controversy and differtion. New studies of literature, and new tenets of religion, found employment for all who were desirous of truth, or ambitious of same. Learning was at that time prosecuted with that eagerness and perseverance which in this age of indifference and dissipation it is not easy to conceive. To teach or to learn was at once the business and the pleasure of the academical life; and an emulation of study was raised by Cheke and Smith, to which even the present age perhaps owes many advantages, without remembering or knowing its benefactors.

Ascham soon resolved to unite himself to those who were enlarging the bounds of knowledge, and immediately upon his admission into the college, applied himself to the study of Greek. Those who were zealous for the new learning, were often no great friends to the old religion; and Ascham, as he became a Grecian, became a protestant. The reformation was not yet begun, disaffection to popery was considered as a crime justly punished by exclusion from favour and preferment, and was not yet openly professed, though superstition was gradually losing its hold upon the publick. The study of Greek was reputable enough, and Ascham persued it with diligence and success equally conspicuous. He thought a language might be most easily learned by teaching it; and when he had obtained some proficiency in Greek, read lectures, while he was yet a boy, to other boys who were desirous of instruction. His industry was much encouraged by Pember, a man of great eminence at that time, though I-know not that he has left any monuments behind him, but what the gratitude of his friends and scholars has bestowed. He was one of the great encouragers of Greek learning, and particularly applauded Ascham's lectures, assuring him in a letter, of which Graunt has preserved an extract, that he would gain more knowledge by explaining one of Esop's fables to a boy, than by hearing one of Homer's poems explained by another.

and

Ascham took his bachelor's degree in 1534, February 18, in the eighteenth year of his age; a time of life at which it is more common now to enter the universities than to take degrees, but which, according to the modes of education then in use, had nothing of remarkable prematurity. On the 23d of March following, he was chosen fellow of the college; which election he confidered as a fecond birth. Dr. Metcalf, the master of the college, a man, as Ascham tells us, meanly learned himself. but no mean encourager of learning in others, clandestinely promoted his election, though he openly feemed first to oppose it, and afterwards to censure it, because Ascham was known to favour the new opinions; and the master himself was accused of giving an unjust preference to the northern men, one of the factions into which this nation was divided. before we could find any more important reason of diffention, than that fome were born on the northern and fome on the fouthern fide of Trent. Any cause is sufficient for a quarrel, and the zealots of the north and fouth lived long in fuch animofity, that it was thought necessary at Oxford to keep them quiet by chufing one proctor every year from each.

He feems to have been hitherto supported by the bounty of Wing field, which his attainment of a fellowship now freed him from the necessity of receiving. Dependance, though in those days it was more common, and therefore less irksome than in the present state of things, can never have been free from discontent; and therefore he that was released from it must always have rejoiced. The danger is, lest the joy of escaping from the patron may not leave sufficient memory of the benefactor. Of this forgetfulness Ascham cannot be accused; for he is recorded to have preserved the most grateful and affectionate reverence for Wingsield, and to have never grown weary of recounting his benefits.

25

(3-

His reputation still increased, and many resorted to his chamber to hear the Greek writers explained. He was likewise eminent for other accomplishments. By the advice of Pember, he had learned to play on musical instruments, and he was one of the few who excelled in the mechanical art of writing, which then began to be cultivated among us, and in which we now surpass all other nations. He not only wrote his pages with neatness, but embellished them with elegant draughts and illuminations; an art at that time so highly valued, that it contributed much both to his same and his fortune.

He became master of arts in March 1537, in his twenty-first year; and then, if not before, commenced tutor, and publickly undertook the education of young men. A tutor of one and twenty, however accomplished with learning, however exalted by genius, would now gain little reverence or obedience; but in those days of discipline and regularity, the authority of the statutes easily supplied that of the teacher; all power that was lawful was reverenced. Besides, young tutors had still younger pupils.

Ascham is said to have courted his scholars to study by every incitement, to have treated them with great kindness, and to have taken care at once to instill learning and piety, to inlighten their minds and to form their manners. Many of his scholars rose to great eminence, and among them William Grindal was so much distinguished, that by Cheke's recommendation he was called to court as a proper master of languages for the lady Elizabeth.

There was yet no established lecturer of Greek; the university therefore appointed Ascham to read in the open schools, and paid him out of the publick purse an honorary stipend, such as was then reckoned sufficiently liberal: liberal: a lecture was afterwards founded by King Henry, and he then quitted the schools, but continued to explain Greek authours in his own college.

He was at first an opponent of the new pronunciation introduced, or rather of the ancient restored about this time by Cheke and Smith, and made some cautious struggles for the common practice, which the credit and dignity of his antagonists did not permit to defend very publickly, or with much vehemence: nor were they long his antagonists; for either his affection for their merit, or his conviction of the cogency of their arguments, soon changed his opinion and his practice, and he adhered ever after to their method of utterance.

Of this controverfy it is not necessary to give a circumstantial account; something of it may be found in Strype's Life of Smith, and something in Baker's Reflexions upon learning: it is sufficient to remark here, that Cheke's pronunciation was that which now prevails in the schools of England. Disquisitions not only verbal, but merely literal, are too minute for popular narration.

He was not less eminent as a writer of Latin, than as a teacher of Greek. All the publick letters of the university were of his composition; and as little qualifications must often bring great abilities into notice, he was recommended to this honourable employment not less by the neatness of his hand, than the elegance of his style.

However great was his learning, he was not always immured in his chamber; but being valetudinary, and weak of body, thought it necessary to spend many hours in such exercises as might best relieve him after the fatigue of study. His favourite amusement was archery, in which he spent, or, in the opinion of others, lost so much time, that those whom either his faults or virtues made his enemies, and perhaps some whose kindness wished him always worthily employed, did not scruple to censure his practice, as unsuitable to a man professing learning, and perhaps of bad example in a place of education.

To free himself from this censure was one of the reasons for which he published, in 1544, his Toxophilus, or the Schole or Partitions of Shooting, Shooting, in which he joins the praise with the precepts of archery. He designed not only to teach the art of shooting, but to give an example of diction more natural and more truly English than was used by the common writers of that age, whom he censures for mingling exotick terms with their native language, and of whom he complains, that they were made authours not by skill or education, but by arrogance and temerity.

He has not failed in either of his purposes. He has sufficiently vindicated archery as an innocent, salutary, useful, and liberal diversion; and if his precepts are of no great use, he has only shown by one example among many, how little the hand can derive from the mind, how little intelligence can conduce to dexterity. In every art practice is much; in arts manual practice is almost the whole. Precept can at most but warn against errour, it can never bestow excellence.

The bow has been so long disused, that most English readers have forgotten its importance, though it was the weapon by which we gained the battle of Agincourt, a weapon which when handled by English yeomen, no foreign troops were able to resist. We were not only abler of body than the French, and therefore superiour in the use of arms, which are forcible only in proportion to the strength with which they are handled, but the national practice of shooting for pleasure or for prizes, by which every man was inured to archery from his infancy, gave us insuperable advantage, the bow requiring more practice to skilful use than any other instrument of offence.

Fire-arms were then in their infancy; and though battering pieces had been some time in use, I know not whether any soldiers were armed with hand-guns when the Toxophilus was first published: they were soon after used by the Spanish troops, whom other nations made haste to imitate: but how little they could yet effect, will be understood from the account given by the ingenious authour of the exercise for the Norfolk militia.

"The first muskets were very heavy, and could not be fired without a rest; they had match-locks, and barrels of a wide bore, that carried a large ball and charge of powder, and did execution at a greater diftance.

"The musketeers on a march carried only their rests and ammunition, and had boys to bear their muskets after them, for which they were allowed great additional pay.

"They were very flow in loading, not only by reason of the un"wieldiness of the pieces, and because they carried the powder and balls separate, but from the time it took to prepare and adjust the match; so that their fire was not near so brisk as ours is now. Asterwards a lighter kind of match-lock musket came into use, and they carried their ammunition in bandeliers, which were broad belts that came over the shoulder, to which were hung several little cases of wood covered with leather, each containing a charge of powder; the balls they carried loose in a pouch; and they had also a priming horn hanging by their side.

"The old English writers call those large muskets calivers: the harquebuze was a lighter piece, that could be fired without a rest. The match-lock was fired by a match fixed by a kind of tongs in the serpentine or cock, which by pulling the trigger, was brought down with great quickness upon the priming in the pan; over which there was a sliding cover, which was drawn back by the hand just at the time of firing. There was a great deal of nicety and care required to fit the match properly to the cock, so as to come down exactly true on the priming, to blow the assess from the coal, and to guard the pan from the sparks that fell from it. A great deal of time was also lost in taking it out of the cock, and returning it between the singers of the left hand every time that the piece was fired; and wet weather often rendered the matches useless."

While this was the state of fire-arms, and this state continued among us to the civil war with very little improvement, it is no wonder that the long bow was preferred by Sir John Smith, who wrote of the choice of weapons in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, when the use of the bow still continued, though the musket was gradually prevailing. Sir John Hayward,

Hayward, a writer yet later, has in his history of the Norman kings endeavoured to evince the superiority of the archer to the musketeer: however, in the long peace of King James, the bow was wholly forgotten. Guns have from that time been the weapons of the English, as of other nations, and as they are now improved, are certainly more efficacious.

Ascham had yet another reason, if not for writing his book, at least for presenting it to King Henry. England was not then what it may be now justly termed, the capital of literature, and therefore those who aspired to superiour degrees of excellence thought it necessary to travel into other countries. The purse of Ascham was not equal to the expence of peregrination; and therefore he hoped to have it augmented by a pension. Nor was he wholly disappointed; for the King rewarded him with an yearly payment of ten pounds.

A pension of ten pounds granted by a king of England to a man of letters, appears to modern readers so contemptible a benefaction, that it is not unworthy of enquiry what might be its value at that time, and how much Ascham might be enriched by it. Nothing is more uncertain than the estimation of wealth by denominated money; the precious metals never retain long the same proportion to real commodities, and the same names in different ages do not imply the same quantity of metal; so that it is equally difficult to know how much money was contained in any nominal sum, and to find what any supposed quantity of gold or silver would purchase; both which are necessary to the commensuration of money, or the adjustment of proportion between the same sums at different periods of time.

A numeral pound in King Henry's time contained, as now, twenty shillings; and therefore it must be inquired what twenty shillings could perform. Bread-corn is the most certain standard of the necessaries of life. Wheat was generally sold at that time for one shilling the bushel: if therefore we take five shillings the bushel for the current price, ten pounds were equivalent to sifty. But here is danger of a fallacy. It may be doubted, whether wheat was the general bread-corn of that age; and if rye, barley, or oats, were the common food, and wheat, as I suspect, fuspect, only a delicacy, the value of wheat will not regulate the price of other things. This doubt is however in favour of Ascham; for if we raise the worth of wheat, we raise that of his pension.

But the value of money has another variation, which we are still less able to ascertain: the rules of custom or the different needs of artificial life, make that revenue little at one time which is great at another. Men are rich and poor, not only in proportion to what they have, but to what they want. In some ages, not only necessaries are cheaper, but fewer things are necessary. In the age of Ascham, most of the elegancies and expences of our present fashions were unknown: commerce had not yet distributed superfluity through the lower classes of the people, and the character of a student implied frugality, and required no splendour to support it. His pension, therefore, reckoning together the wants which he could supply, and the wants from which he was exempt, may be estimated, in my opinion, at more than one hundred pounds a-year; which, added to the income of his fellowship, put him far enough above distress.

This was an year of good fortune to Ascham. He was chosen orator to the university on the removal of Sir John Cheke to court, where he was made tutor to Prince Edward. A man once distinguished soon gains admirers. Ascham was now received to notice by many of the nobility, and by great ladies, among whom it was then the fashion to study the ancient languages. Lee archbishop of York allowed him an yearly pension; how much, we are not told. He was, probably about this time, employed in teaching many illustrious persons to write a fine hand, and among others Henry and Charles, dukes of Suffolk, the princess Elizabeth, and prince Edward.

Henry VIII. died two years after, and a reformation of religion being now openly profecuted by King Edward and his council, Ascham, who was known to favour it, had a new grant of his pension, and continued at Cambridge, where he lived in great familiarity with Bucer, who had been called from Germany to the professorship of divinity. But his retirement was soon at an end; for in 1548 his pupil Grindal, the master of the princess Elizabeth, died, and the princess, who had already some acquaintance with Ascham, called him from his college to direct her studies. He obeyed the summons, as we may easily believe, with readiness, and for two years instructed her with great diligence; but then being disgusted either by her or her domesticks, or perhaps eager for another change of life, he lest her without her consent, and returned to the university. Of this precipitation he long repented; and as those who are not accustomed to disrespect, cannot easily forgive it, he probably felt the effects of his imprudence to his death.

0

After having visited Cambridge, he took a journey into Yorkshire to see his native place and his old acquaintance, and there received a letter from the court, informing him, that he was appointed secretary to Sir Richard Morisine, who was to be dispatched as ambassador into Germany. In his return to London he paid that memorable visit to lady Jane Gray, in which he found her reading the Phædo in Greek, as he has related in his Schoolmaster.

In the year 1550 he attended Morifine to Germany, and wandered over a great part of the country, making observations upon all that appeared worthy of his curiofity, and contracting acquaintance with men of learning. To his correspondent Sturmius he paid a visit, but Sturmius was not at home, and those two illustrious friends never saw each other. During the course of this embassy, Ascham undertook to improve Morifine in Greek, and for four days in the week explained some pages of Herodotus every morning, and more than two hundred verses of Sophocles. or Euripides every afternoon. He read with him likewise some of the orations of Demostlenes. On the other days he compiled the letters of business, and in the night filled up his diary, digested his remarks, and wrote private letters to his friends in England, and particularly to those of his college, whom he continually exhorted to perseverance in study. Amidst all the pleasures of novelty, which his travels supplied, and in the dignity of his publick station, he preferred the tranquillity of private study, and the quiet of academical retirement. The reasonableness of this choice has been always disputed; and in the contrariety of human interests and dispositions, the controversy will not easily be decided.

He

He made a short excursion into Italy, and mentions in his School-master with great severity the vices of Venice. He was desirous of visiting Trent while the council were sitting; but the scantiness of his purse deseated his curiosity.

In this journey he wrote his Report and Discourse of the Affaires in Germany, in which he describes the dispositions and interests of the German princes like a man inquisitive and judicious, and recounts many particularities which are lost in the mass of general history, in a style which to the ears of that age was undoubtedly mellishuous, and which is now a very valuable specimen of genuine English.

By the death of King Edward in 1553, the reformation was stopped, Morifine was recalled, and Ascham's pension and hopes were at an end. He therefore retired to his fellowship in a state of disappointment and despair, which his biographer has endeavoured to express in the deepest strain of plaintive declamation. He was deprived of all his support, says Graunt, stripped of his pension, and cut off from the assistance of his friends, who had now lost their influence; so that he had NEC PRÆMIA NEC PRÆDIA, neither pension nor estate to support him at Cambridge. There is no credit due to a rhetorician's account either of good or evil. The truth is, that Ascham still had in his fellowship all that in the early part of his life had given him plenty, and might have lived like the other inhabitants of the college, with the advantage of more knowledge and higher reputation. But notwithstanding his love of academical retirement, he had now too long enjoyed the pleasures and sessivities of publick life, to return with a good will to academical poverty.

He had however better fortune than he expected, and, if he lamented his condition like his historian, better than he deserved. He had during his absence in Germany been appointed Latin secretary to King Edward; and by the interest of Gardiner bishop of Winchester, he was instated in the same office under Philip and Mary, with a salary of twenty pounds a-year.

Soon after his admission to his new employment, he gave an extraordinary specimen of his abilities and diligence, by composing and tranc 2 feribing fcribing with his usual elegance, in three days, forty-seven letters to princes and perfonages, of whom cardinals were the lowest.

How Ascham, who was known to be a protestant, could preserve the favour of Gardiner, and hold a place of honour and profit in Queen Mary's court, it must be very natural to inquire. Cheke, as is well known, was compelled to a recantation; and why Ascham was spared, cannot now be discovered. Graunt, at a time when the transactions of Queen Mary's reign must have been well enough remembered, declares, that Ascham always made open profession of the reformed religion, and that Englesfield and others often endeavoured to incite Gardiner against him, but found their accusations rejected with contempt: yet he allows, that suspicions and charges of temporization and compliance had fomewhat fullied his reputation. The authour of the Biographia Britannica conjectures, that he owed his fafety to his innocence and ufefulness; that it would have been unpopular to attack a man so little liable to censure, and that the loss of his pen could not have been easily supplied. But the truth is, that morality was never fuffered in the days of perfecution to protect herefy; nor are we fure that Ascham was more clear from common failings than those who suffered more; and whatever might be his abilities, they were not fo necessary but Gardiner could have eafily filled his place with another fecretary. Nothing is more vain. than at a distant time to examine the motives of discrimination and partiality; for the inquirer having confidered interest and policy; is obliged at last to omit more frequent and more active motives of human conduct, caprice, accident, and private affections.

At that time, if some were punished, many were forborn; and of many why should not Ascham happen to be one? He seems to have been calm and prudent, and content with that peace which he was fuffered to enjoy; a mode of behaviour that feldom fails to produce fecurity. He had been abroad in the last years of King Edward, and had at least given no recent offence. He was certainly, according to his own opinion, not much in danger; for in the next year he refigned his fellowship, which by Gardiner's favour he had continued to hold, though not resident; and married Margaret Howe, a young gentlewoman of a good family.

He was distinguished in this reign by the notice of Cardinal Poole, a man of great candour, learning, and gentleness of manners, and particularly eminent for his skill in Latin, who thought highly of Ascham's style; of which it is no inconsiderable proof, that when Poole was desirous of communicating a speech made by himself as legate, in parliament, to the Pope, he employed Ascham to translate it.

He is faid to have been not only protected by the officers of state, but favoured and countenanced by the Queen herfelf; fo that he had no reafon of complaint in that reign of turbulence and perfecution: nor was his fortune much mended, when in 1558 his pupil Elizabeth mounted the throne. He was continued in his former employment, with the fame stipend: but though he was daily admitted to the presence of the Queen, assisted her private studies, and partook of her diversions; sometimes read to her in the learned languages, and fometimes played with her at draughts and chefs; he added nothing to his twenty pounds ayear but the prebend of Westwang in the church of York, which was given him the year following. His fortune was therefore not proportionate to the rank which his offices and reputation gave him, or to the favour in which he feemed to ftand with his miftrefs. Of this parfimonious allotment it is again a hopeless search to inquire the reason. The Queen was not naturally bountiful, and perhaps did not think it necesfary to diffinguish by any prodigality of kindness a man who had formerly deferted her, and whom the might still suspect of serving rather for interest than affection. Graunt exerts his rhetorical powers in praise of Ascham's difinterestedness and contempt of money; and declares, that though he was often reproached by his friends with neglect of his own interest, he never would ask any thing, and inflexibly refused all prefents which his office or imagined interest induced any to offer him. Camden, however, imputes the narrowness of his condition to his love of dice and cock-fights: and Graunt forgetting himself, allows that Ascham was sometimes thrown into agonies by disappointed expectations. It may be eafily discovered from his Schoolmaster, that he felt his wants, though he might neglect to supply them; and we are left to suspect, that he shewed his contempt of money only by losing it at play. If this was his practice, we may excuse Elizabeth, who knew the domestick character of her fervants, if the did not give much to him who was lavifly of a little.

However he might fail in his economy, it were indecent to treat with wanton levity the memory of a man who shared his frailties with all, but whose learning or virtues few can attain, and by whose excellencies many may be improved, while himself only suffered by his faults.

In the reign of Elizabeth nothing remarkable is known to have befallen him, except that, in 1563, he was invited by Sir Edward Sackville to write the Schoolmaster, a treatise on education, upon an occasion which he relates in the beginning of the book. This work, though begun with alacrity, in hopes of a considerable reward, was interrupted by the death of the patron, and afterwards forrowfully and slowly finished, in the gloom of disappointment, under the pressure of distress. But of the authour's disinclination or dejection there can be found no tokens in the work, which is conceived with great vigour, and finished with great accuracy; and perhaps contains the best advice that was ever given for the study of languages.

This treatife he compleated, but did not publish; for that poverty which in our days drives authours so hastily in such numbers to the press, in the time of Ascham, I believe, debarred them from it. The printers gave little for a copy, and, if we may believe the tale of Raleigh's history, were not forward to print what was offered them for nothing. Ascham's book therefore lay unseen in his study, and was at last dedicated to Lord Cecil by his widow.

Ascham never had a robust or vigorous body, and his excuse for so many hours of diversion was his inability to endure a long continuance of sedentary thought. In the latter part of his life he found it necessary to forbear any intense application of the mind from dinner to bed-time, and rose to read and write early in the morning. He was for some years hectically severish; and though he found some alleviation of his distemper, never obtained a perfect recovery of his health. The immediate cause of his last sickness was too close application to the composition of a poem, which he purposed to present to the Queen on the day of her accession. To finish this he forbore to sleep at his accustomed hours, till in December 1568 he fell sick of a kind of lingering disease, which Graunt has not named, nor accurately described. The most afflictive flictive fymptom was want of fleep, which he endeavoured to obtain by the motion of a cradle. Growing every day weaker, he found it vain to contend with his diftemper, and prepared to die with the refignation and piety of a true Christian. He was attended on his deathbed by Gravet vicar of St. Sepulchre, and Dr. Nowel, the learned dean of St. Paul's, who gave ample testimony to the decency and devotion of his concluding life. He frequently testified his desire of that dissolution which he soon obtained. His funeral-fermon was preached by Dr. Nowel.

Roger Ascham died in the fifty-third year of his age, at a time when, according to the general course of life, much might yet have been expected from him, and when he might have hoped for much from others: but his abilities and his wants were at an end together; and who can determine, whether he was cut off from advantages, or rescued from calamities? He appears to have been not much qualified for the improvement of his fortune. His disposition was kind and social; he delighted in the pleasures of conversation, and was probably not much inclined to business. This may be suspected from the paucity of his writings. He has left little behind him, and of that little nothing was published by himself but the Toxophilus, and the account of Germany. The Schoolmaster was printed by his widow, and the Epistles were collected by Graunt, who dedicated them to Queen Elizabeth, that he might have an opportunity of recommending his fon Giles Ascham to her patronage. The dedication was not loft: the young man was made by the Queen's mandate fellow of a college in Cambridge, where he obtained considerable reputation. What was the effect of his widow's dedication to Cecil, is not known: it may be hoped that Ascham's works obtained for his family, after his decease, that support which he did not in his life very plenteoufly procure them.

Whether he was poor by his own fault or the fault of others, cannot now be decided; but it is certain that many have been rich with less merit. His philological learning would have gained him honour in any country, and among us it may justly call for that reverence which all nations owe to those who first rouse them from ignorance, and kindle among them the light of literature. Of his manners nothing can be faid but from his own testimony and that of his contemporaries. Those who mention him allow him many virtues. His courtesy, benevolence, and liberality, are celebrated; and of his piety we have not only the testimony of his friends, but the evidence of his writings.

That his English works have been so long neglected, is a proof of the uncertainty of literary same. He was scarcely known as an authour in his own language till Mr. Upton published his Schoolmaster with learned notes, which are inserted in this edition. His other pieces were read only by those sew who delight in obsolete books; but as they are now collected into one volume, with the addition of some letters never printed before, the publick has an opportunity of recompensing the injury, and allotting Ascham the reputation due to his knowledge and his eloquence.

AREPORT

REPORT and DISCOURSE

Written by ROGERASCHAM, of the Affaires and State of Germany and the Emperour Charles his Court, during certaine Yeares while the fayd ROGER was there.

AT LONDON

Printed by JOHN DAYE, dwelling over ALDERSGATE.

Cum Gratia & Privilegio Regiæ Maiestatis, per Decennium.

JOHN ASTELY to R. ASCHAM.

Now finde true by experience, which I have oft heard of others, and sometymes read my selfe: that men make no such accompt of commodities when they have them, as when they want them. I meane this by our friendly sellowshyp together at Cheston Chestey, and here at Hatfield her graces house: our pleasant studies in readying together Aristotles Rhetorike, Cicero, and Livie, our free talke mingled alwayes with honest mirth, our trimme conferences of that present world, and too true judgementes of the troublesome tyme that followed.

These commodities I now remember with some grief, which we then vsed with much pleasure, besides many other fruites of frendshyp that faythful good will could affourd. And these thinckynges cause me oft to wish, either you to be here with vs, or me to be there with you: but what wishyng is nothyng els but a vayne waylyng for that which will wanteth. I wil cease from wishyng, and seeke the true remedy for this fore: And that is whilest we meet agayne in deede, in the meane while to ease our desires with oft writyng the one to the other. I would in deede I had been partaker in your company, of that your pleasaunt absence out of your countrey: and because I was not, I pray you let me be partaker by your Letters of some fruite of that your iourney.

We heare of great sturres in those parties: and how the Emperour, a Prince of great wisedome and great power, hath bene driven to extreme shiftes, and that by the pollicie of mean men who were thought to be his open enemyes. I know you were wont in markyng diligently and notyng truely all such great affaires: And you know lykewise how defirous I am alwayes to read any thing that you write. Write therefore I pray you, that we your frendes beying at home may enioye by your B 2 letters a pleafant memory of you in that tyme whilest you be absent abroad. Farewell in Christ, from Hatsield x1x. Octobris 1552.

R. ASCHAM to JOHN ASTELY:

ALUTEM Plurimam in Christo Jesu. That part of your Letter from Hatsield, decimo nono Octob. renewing a most pleasaunt memory of our freudly fellowship together, and full of your wonted good will towardes me: I aunswered immediatly from Spires by Fraunces the Post: whiche letter if it be not yet come to your hand, ye might have heard tell of it in M. Secretary Cicels chamber in the Court.

As concerning the other part of your letter, for your wish, to have bene with me, in this mine absence from my Countrey: and for your request, to be made partaker by my letters of the sturre of these times here in Germany. Surely I would you had your wish: for then should not I now nede to bungle up yours so great a request, when presently you should have sene with much pleasure, which now peraduenture you shall read * with some doubt, lesse thynges may encrease by writing which were so great in doyng, as I am more asrayd to leave behind me much of the matter, than to gather vp more than hath sprong of the trouth.

Your request conteineth few wordes but comprehendeth both great and divers matters. As first the causes of the open invasion by the Turke: of the secret workying for such soddeyne brechesse in Italy, and Germany: of the fine setches in the French practises: of the double dealyng of Rome with all partes: then more particular why Duke Octavio, the Prince of Salerne, Marches Albert, and Duke Maurice brake so out with the Emperour, which were all so fast knit vnto hym as the bondes of affinitie, loyaltie, bloud, and benefites could assure him of them: Octavio being his Sonne in law, the Prince one of hys privy chamber, Marches Albert hys kynsman, and Duke Maurice so inhaunsed with honor and enriched with benefites by hym, as the Duke could not have wished greater in hope, then the Emperour performed in deede. Here is stuffe plenty to furnish well up a trimme history if a workeman hath it in handlyng. When you and I read Liuie together if you do remember, after fome reasoning we concluded both what was in our opinion to be looked for at his hand that would well and aduifedly write an history: First point was, to write nothing false: next, to be bold to say any truth, whereby is auoyded two great faultes, flattery and hatred: for which two pointes Cafar is read to hys great Prayfe, and Jouius the Ita-C. Cafar. lian to hys just reproch. Then to marke diligently the causes, counsels, P. Iouius. actes, and iffues in all great attemptes: And in causes, which is iust or vniust: in counseles, what is proposed wisely or rashly: in actes, what is done couragiously or fayntly: And of every iffue, to note some generall lesson of wisedome and warines, for lyke matters in time to come: wherin Polybius in Greeke and Phillip Comines in French haue done the Polybius. duties of wyse and worthy writers. Diligence also must be vied in kep-nes. yng truly the order of tyme: and describyng lyuely, both the site of places and nature of persons, not only for the outward shape of the Body, but also for the inward disposition of the Mynde as Thucydides Thucydides. doth in many places very trimly, and Homer every where and that al-Homer. wayes most excellently, which observation is chiefly to be marked in hym; and our Chaucer doth the same, very praise worthely: marke Chaucer. hym well and conferre hym with any other that writeth of in our tyme in their proudest toung whosoeuer lyst. Yet sometime higher and lower as matters do ryfe and fall: for if proper and natural wordes, in well ioyned fentences do lyuely expresse the matter, be it troublesome, quyet, angrey or pleasant, a man shal thincke not to be readyng but present in goyng of the same. And herein Liuie of all other in any toung, by Liuius. myne opinion carieth away the prayfe.

* With some doubt, lesse, &c.] That is, with some doubt less I should have magnified in my narrative things that were so great in real action.

Syr Thomas More in that pamphlet of Richard the thyrd, doth in most Tho, Morus. part I beleue of all these pointes so content all men, as if the rest of our story of England were so done, we might well compare with France, Italy, or Germany or in that behalfe. But see how the pleasant remembraunce of our old talk together hath caried me farther than I thought to go. And as for your request to know the cause and maner of these late sturres here ye shall not looke for such precise order now in writyng, as we talked on then. No it is not all one thing to know perfectly by reading and to performe perfectly in doyng. I am not so vnaduised to take so much upon me, nor you so unfrendly to looke for so much from me.

me. But that you may know that I have not bene altogether idle in this my absence, and that I will not come home as one that can fay nothing of that he liath fene and heard abroad: I will homely and rudely (yet not altogether disorderly) part prinately vnto you such notes of affaires as I prinately marked for my felfe: which I either felt and faw, or learned in fuch place and of fuch persons as had willes to seeke for, and ways to come by, and wittes to way the greatest matters that were to be marked in all these affaires. For no wieke almost hath past in the which there hath not commonly come to my hand for the most part of the notable thynges that have bene attempted in Turky, Hungary, Italy, Fraunce, and Germany. In declarying to you these thyings I will observe onely the first two pointes of our wont communication: that is to my writing I will fet forward nothing that is false, nor yet keepe backe any thyng that is true. For I playing no part of no one fide, but fittyng downe as indifferent looker on, neither Imperiall nor French, but flat English, do purpose with troth to report the matter, and seyng I shall lyue vnder fuch a Prince, as Kyng Edward is, and in fuch a Countrey as England is (I thanke God) I shall have neither neede to flatter the one fide for profite, nor cause to fear the other fide for displeasure. fore let my purpose of reportyng the trouth as much content you, as the meane handlyng of the matter may mislike you. Yet speakyng thus much of trouth, I meane not fuch a hid trouth as was onely in the brest of Monsieur d' Arras on the Emperours side, or in Baron Hadeck on Duke Maurice fide, with whom and with on other of his counseil he onely conferred all his purposes three yeares before he brake out with the Emperour: But I meane fuch a troth as by conference and common confent amongest all the Ambassadores and Agentes in this Court and other witty and indifferent heades befide was generally conferred and agreed upon. What better commoditie to know the trouth any writer in Greeke, Latine, or other toung hath had, I can not perceiue, except onely Xenophon, Cafar, and Phillip Comines: which two first worthy writers wrote their owne actes fo wifely, and fo without all fuspicion of parcialitie, as no man hitherto by mine opinion hath bornehimself so vprightly in writing the histories of others: The thyrd hauing in a manner the like oportunitie hath not deserued lyke commendations, at least as I suppose. England hath matter and England hath men furnished with all abilities to write: who if they would might bryng both lyke prayse vnto them selues, and like profite to others, as thefe these two noble men haue done. They lay for their excuse the lacke of leysure which is true in deede: But if we consider the great affaires of Cæsar we may judge hee was worthy to winne all praise that was so willing and wittie to winne such time when his head and his handes night and day were euer most full, would to God that these our men as they are ready to prayse hym were euen as willyng to follow hym, and so to wynne like prayse themselues.

And to keepe you no longer with my private talke from the matter itself, I will begyn at the fpryng of the matter from whence all these mischieses dyd flow, the which now hath so overflowed the most part of Christendome, as God onely from Heauen must make an end of this miserable tragedie, wherein these two great Princes take such pleasure still to play. In Religion and Libertie were fayd to be of many men The cause of the very causes of all these sturries: yet in myne opinion, and as the the sturres in matter itself shall well proue it, vnkyndness was the very sede, whereof Germany. all these troubles did grow. A Knight of England of worthy memorie Vnkyndnes. for wit, learning and experience, old Syr Thomas Wiat wrote to his fonne that the greatest mischief amongest men, and least punished is vnkyndnes: the greatest mischief truly and least punished also by any ordinary law and fentence, yet as I have fene here by experience, vnkyndnes hath fo wrought with men, as the meane were not affrayd to attempt their reuenge, nor the Emperour able to withstand their displease. vnkyndnes was onely the hoke, which Henry the French kyng hath vfed these late yeares to plucke from the Emperour and draw to hymselfe, so many Princes and great commodities as he hath: with this hoke bayted with money the bayte of all mischief, the French kyng hath not ceased, to angle at as many harts in Italy and Germany as he knew any matter of vnkyndnes to be ministred vnto, by the Emperour.

There be few Princes in all the Empire but if I had leyfure, I could particularly proue, and when I come home in our private talk I wil fully declare that some good big matter of vnkindnes hath bene offred vnto them by the Emperour. Yea Ferdinando his brother, Maximilian his nephew and sonne in law, the Duke of Bauarie and Cleues which have married his nieces have bene shrewdly touched therewith. Also the Papisticall Byshops as Mentz, Pamburge, Herbipolis, Saltzburge, and divers others have felt their part herein. Few Princes or States, Protestantes or Papistes, but have bene troubled therewith. But even as a quaterne in the begynnyng is a wanderyng disease in the Body vnknowne what it will turne vnto, and yet at last it draweth to certaine dayes and houres: even so these grieves in the whole body of the Empire dyd first worke secretly and not appeare openly, vntill this melancholy vnkyndnes did so swell in mens stomaches that at length in Insburgh it brast out into a shrewd sicknes, whereof the first sit was felt to be so daungerous, that if the Emperour and we had not more spedely chaunged the ayre, I am affrayed and sure I am we were wel affrayd then, the sicknes would have proved also to vs that were present with hym very contagious.

Well this grief growyng thus to certaine fittes, and I my felfe beyng not greatly grieued at the hart with it but had leyfure enough with small ieoperdy (I thanke God) to looke quietly vpon them that were sicke, because I would not be idle amongst them, I began dayly to note the workyng of this sicknes, and namely from the 19th of May 1552, when we ranne from Insburgh til the first of next January when the siege of Metz was abandoned. Neuertheles before I come to these ordinary dayes I will shortly touch how the Emperour beyng in peace with all the World 1550, when we came to his Court, had soone after so many enemyes as he knew not which way to turne hym.

The TURKE.

The brech with the Turke.

pire an. 1551. The Emperour hearyng what preparation the Turke had made the yeare before for Warre and specially by Sea, which must needes be agaynst Christendome, thought it better for hym to ende the Peace with some advantage, then that the Turke should begyn the Warre with too much strength, and therefore in Sommer 1550, he sent John de Vega Viceroy of Cicile and Andrea Dorea into Barbaria, who wan the strong towne of Affrica from Dragut Raies sometyme a Pirate and now the Turkes chief doer in all the affaires of Affricke and Mare Mediterraneo. This Court raised vp other rumors of this brech with the Turke how that this enterprice was made for Seripho sake, a hethen kyng, but the Emperours friend in Barbaria to whome Dragat Rayes had done great wrong. Yet men that knew the troth, and are wont also to say it, have told me that towne of Affrica stode so sit to annoy Spayne for the Turke when he list, that the Emperour was compelled to seeke by all meanes to obtaine it, much fearyng, lest when he was absent in Germany, the Turke would be too nigh and too homely a gest with hym in Spayne whensoever the Peace should be expired.

The whole story of winnyng Affrica ye may read when you list beyng wel written in Latin by a Spaniard that was present at it.

Affrica was earnestly required agayne by the Turke, and fayre promis'd agayne by the Emperour, but beying indeede not deliuered, the Turke for a reuenge the next yeare, first assaulted Malta and after wan Tripoly from whence the Turke may easely and soddenly whensoeuer hee list set vpon Cicelic, Naples, or any cost of Italie or Spayne, and most commodiously whatsoeuer the Emperour doth hold in Barbary: so that the gayne of Affrica is thought nothing comparable with the losse of Tripoly.

When Tripoly was belieged by the Turkes, Monsieur Daramont was fent Ambassadour to Constantinople from the French kyng: and ariuyng by the way at Malta, he was defired by the great master of the order to go to Tripoly, and for the Friendshyp that was betwene Fraunce and the Turke to treat for the Christians there. Daramont did so and had leaue of the Turkes generall to enter the Towne and talke with the Captaine. And by this meanes they within yielded, on this condition to part fafe with bag and baggage which was granted by the Generall. as foone as the Turkes entered the Towne they put old and young, man, woman, child to the fword, fauing two hundred of the strongest men to be their Galley flaues for euer. The generall beyng asked why he kept no promise made this answere. If the Emperour had kept faith with my master for Affrica I would not have broken with them of Tripoly, and therefore (fayth he) with christen men which care for no trothe promifes may justly be broken. This Turkish crueltie was reuenged this last yeare in Hungary, when lyke promise of lyfe was made, and yet all put to the fword, the Christians biddyng the Turkes remember Tripoly. To fuch beaftly crueltie the noble feates of armes be come unto betwixt the Christen men and the Turkes. And one fact of either fide is notable to bee knowen, yet horrible to be told and fouler to be followed: and it is pitie that mans nature is fuch as will commonlie commend good thynges in readyng and yet will as commonlie follow ill thynges in doyng.

An horrible fact.

The Baffa of Buda tooke in a skirmish a gentleman of the kyng of Romanes: for whose deliuery men for entreaty and money for his ransome were sent to Buda. The Bassa appointed a day to give them aunswere, and at time and place assigned, called for them and sent for the gentleman likewise. And soddenly came out two hangmen bare armed with great butchers kniues in theyr handes bringing with them certain bandogges musled kept hungry without meat of purpose: the Balla bad them do their feate: who commyng to the gentleman stripped him naked, and bound him to a piller, after with their kniues they cut of his flesh by gobbets and flang it to the dogges. Thus that poore gentleman fuffred grief great for the payne, but greater for the fpight: nor fo tormented in feelyng his fleshe mangled with kniues, as in fevng himfelf peece meale denoured by dogges. And thus as long as he felt any payne they cut him in collops, and after they let their dogges lofe upon him to eat up the refidue of him, that the grief which was ended in him being dead might yet continue in his frendes lookyng on. They were bad depart and tell what they faw, who ye may be fure were in care enough to cary home with them fuch a cruell message.

Not long after this, three Turkes of good estimation and place, were taken by the christen men: for whose raunsome great summes of gold were offred. Answere was made to the messenger that all the gold in Turky should not saue them. And because ye Turkes will eat no swines slesh, you shall see if swine will eat any Turkish slesh. And so likewise great bores were kept hungry, and in sight of the messenger, the three Turkes were cut in collops and thrown amongest them.

For these foule deedes I am not so angry with the Turkes that began them as I am sory for the Christen men that follow them. I talked with a worthy gentleman this day both for his great experience and excellent learnyng, Marc Anthonio d' Anula Ambassadour of Venice with the Emperour: who told me that the great Turke him self (Religion excepted) is a good and mercyfull, iust and liberall Prince, wise in makyng and true in performing any couenant, and as fore a reuenger of troth not kept. He prayed God to keep him long aliue: for his eldest sonne Mustapha is cleane contrary, geuen to all mischief cruell, false, gettyng Mustapha he careth not how vniustly, and spendyng he careth not how vnthriftely the Turkes what soeuer he may lay hand on, wilve in makyng for his purpose, and ready to breake for his profite all couenantes, he is wery of quietness and peace, a seeker of strife and warre, a great mocker of meane men, a fore oppressor of poore men, openly contemnyng God, and a bent enemy agaynst Christes name and Christen men.

The great

But to go forward with my purpose. The Turke beyng onest disclosed an open enemy to the Emperour, many means men began to be the bolder to put out their heades to seeke some open remedy for theyr private iniuries: Fraunce beyng at every mans elbow to harten and to help, whosoever had cause to be aggrieved with the Emperour. And first Octauio Duke of Parma, much agreed as nature well required with his Brech of Itasfathers death, and, besides that, fearing the losse not onely of his state, but also of his lyse, fell from the Emperour in the end of the yeare

Pietro Aloysio Farnesso sonne to Papa Paulo tercio Duke of Placentia: father to this Duke Octavio Duke of Parma which maried the Emperours Octavio. base daughter, and to Horatio Duke of Castro who of late had maried also the French kynges base daughter, and the two Cardinals Alexandro and Ramusio Farnese, was slaine men say by the meanes of Ferranto Gonzaga governour of Millan, by whose death the state of Placentia belonging then to the house of Farnessa came into the Emperours handes. The whole processe of this mans death is at length set out in the stories of Italie: my purpose is onely to touch it, because hereby rose such a heate betwixt the whole samely of Farnessa and Don Ferranto Gonzaga as hath stirred up such a smoke in Italy betwixt the Emperour and Fraunce as is not like to be quenched but with many a poore mans bloud, as Horace noteth wittely out of Homer, saying:

&quot;What follies so euer great Princes make:

&quot;The people therefore go to wrake."

Octavio beyng forest greeued with his fathers death and beyng best able to reuenge it was so feared of Gonzaga that he thought hym selfe neuer affured for Petro Luis death as long as Octavio his fonne should lyue: for men neuer loue when they have just cause to feare, but must nedes still mistrust without all hope of reconcilying whom they have before hurt beyond all remedy of amendes. And yet I heard a gentleman of Millan fay (who was fent hether to the Emperour by Gonzaga) that Octavio is such a Prince for good nature and gentle behaviour that he supposed there was not one in Italy but did loue hym except it were his maister Gonzaga. These two Princes beyng neighbours the one at Millan the other at Parma shewed small frendshyp the one to the other. But Octauio was euermore wrong to the worfe by many and fundry spites, but chiefly with dayly feare of hys life by poysoning: for the which fact certain persons in Parma were taken and layd fast. Neuertheles Octauios nature is fo farre from feekyng bloud and reuenge and fo geuen to pitie and gentlenes, that although they went about not onely to give away his state by treason, but also to take away his life by poylonyng, yea, and after that the deede was proued playnly on them, and fentence of death pronounced openly agaynst them, yet he gaue them lyfe and liberty which would have taken both from hym.

And when Monsieur Thermes earnestly told him that where the euill were not kept in with feare of Justice, the good should neuer lyue in suretie and quietnes: his aunswere was that he so abhorred the sheddyng of Bloud in others as he would neuer wash his handes in any: let his Enemies do to him the worst they could. Addyng, that he thought it his most honor to be vnlykest such for his gentlenes, which were misliked of all men for their crueltie: wherby he hath wonne that he which of good nature can hurt none, is now of right loued of all and onely hated of him whom no man in Italy for his cruelty doth loue. And this talk is so true that it was told in an other language but in the self same termes at an honorable table here in Bruxels by a Gentleman of Millan an agent in the court, a doer for Gonzaga, who the same tyme was prisoner in Parma.

And although Octauio by good nature was harmeles in not feekyng reuenge, yet he was not careles by good reason in feekyng hys remedy but made oft and great complaintes of his grieues to the Emperour, which which were not so hotely made, but they were as coldly heard; that at length Octauio sindyng least comfort, where of right he looked for most ayde, and seyng that displeasures could not be ended in Gonzaga nor could not be amended by the Emperour: then he, compelled agaynst his nature, turned his hate due to Gonzaga to reuenge this vndeserued vnkyndnes in the Emperour, euen as Pausanias dyd with Phillip kyng of Macedonie, who conqueryng with pollicie and power all outward enemyes, was slayne when and where he thought him self most sure of his dearest frend, for vnkyndnes, because Phillip ought and would not reuenge Pausanias on him that had done him a foule displeasure.

Octavio feyng what was done to his father even when hys graundfather was Byshop of Rome, thought, that now as his house decayed, so his ieopardy encreased. And therefore agaynst a desperate evill began to seeke for a desperate remedie, which was fet from Rome, a shop alwayes open to any mischief as you shall perceive in these few leaves if you marke them well.

Octavio complained to Julio tercio of the wronges of Gonzaga and of the vnkindnes of the Emperour, desiryng that by his wisedome and authoritie, he would now succor him or els not onely he should leese his life but also the Church of Rome should lose her right in Parma, as she had done before in Placentia. The Byshop gaue good eare to this talke, for he spied that hereby should be offered vnto him, a sit occasion to set the Emperour and Fraunce together by the eares. He thought the Emperour was to bigge in Italy, hauyng on the one side of Rome, Naples vnder his obedience, on the other side Siene, Florence and Genoa at his commaundement, besides Placentia, Millan, Monteserrato, and a great part of Piemount.

The Emperour beyng thus strong in Italy, the Byshop thought his own state to be his so long as it pleas'd the Emperour to let him haue it: and therefore if Parma were not left an entry for Fraunce to come into Italy, he might ouersoone be shut vp in present miserie when all outward ayde should be shut out from him.

The Popes counsel was that Octavio should put him selfe vnder the French kynges protection whom hee knew would most willingly receive him:

Fraunce.

him: Parma lying fo fit for the French kyng, when foeuer he would fet vpon the enterprice of Millan. This practice of the Pope Monsheur de Thermes the French kynges Ambassadours dyd vtter before the confistorie of Cardinals at Rome: prouing that the Pope, not the kyng his master, was the occasion of that Warre.

When Octauio with the whole house of Farnesia became thus French, the Emperour more fearyng the state of Millan then lamentyng the loffe of Octavio persuaded on his side the Byshop of Rome to require Parma as the Churches right, and to punish Octavio as the Churches rebell, promifing that he himself as an obedient sonne of the Church would ftretch out his arme and open his purse in that recourry of the Churches right: neuertheles the Byshop must beare the name of the warre because he might not breake peace with Fraunce. Thus Princes openly countenancing quietnes and privily brewyng debate altho they got others to broch it, yet God commonly fuffreth themselues to drinke most of the misery thereof in the end. The Byshop seying that he must either begyn the mischief or else it would not on so fast as he wished to haue it, fet lustely vpon it: and first cited Octavio, after excommunicated him, and shortly after besieged Parma ayded both with men Breach with and money by the Emperour: which thyng the French kyng began to stomach, thincking that the Emperour dyd offer him both wrong and dishonor in not suffring him beyng a kyng to help a poore man that fled to his ayde. And thus these two princes first helpyng others began by litle and litle to fall out themselues. And that the Pope dyd fet these two Princes together, a Pasquill made at Rome and sent to this Court doth well declare. And feyng that you so well understand the Italian toung and that if it were turned into English it would leese the whole grace thereof, I will recite it in the toung that it was made in-

Interlocutori PASQUILLO et ROMANO.

Hanno bel gioco il Re e l'Imperatore, Pasq. Per terzo il Papa, e giocano a Primiera.

Che v'è d'invito? Pasq. Italia tutta intera. Rom.

Chi ve l'ha messa? Pasq. Il coglion del pastore. Rom.

Rom.

Rom. Che tien in mano il Re? Pasq. Punto maggiore: Il Papa ha cinquant' vno e si dispera.

Rom. Cefar che Punto s'ha? Paſq. Si sta a Primera Rom. Che gli manca? Paſq. Danari a far favore Il Papa dice a voi, e vuol partito:
Cesar pensoso sta sopra di questo,
Teme a scoprir che di trovar non tenta.
Il Re dice, no, no, Scoprite presto,
Che io tengo Punto, a guadagnar l'invito;
I'ho i danari, e Cesar se gli aspetta.

¶ Tutti stanno a vedetta. Chi di lor dui guadagni. Rom. Il Papa? Pas. E suora Vinca chi vuol, lui perda, in sua malora.

¶ Lo Imperatore ancora Teme, tien stretto, e scopre pian le carte, E qui la sorte gioca più che l'arte.

¶ Metta questi in disparte. Stabilito è nel Ciel quello che esser dé, Nè giova al nostro dir, questo sarà, questo è.

The French kyng in the fommer, 1551, proclaimed warre against Charles kyng of Spayne, abusing that name for a sottlety to separate the whole quarrell from the Empire: when the Emperour would not be persuaded at Augusta that either the Turke would, or the French kyng durst make him open warre, or that any prince in Italy or Germany could be entifed to break out with him.

Monsieur Mariliacke the French Ambassadour at Augusta euen bare the Emperour in hand that such rumors of war were raysed of displeasure, and that his master intended nothing so much as the continuance of amitie, yea this he durst do, when many in the Emperours court knew that the warre was already proclaimed in Fraunce.

The Emperour blinded with the ouer good opinion of his own wisedome, likyng onely what himselfe listed, and contemnyng easely

all

all aduise of others (which selfe will condition doth commonly follow, and as commonly doth hurt all great wittes) dyd not onely at this tyme suffer him selfe thus to be abused: but also afterward more crastely by the Pope for the continuaunce of warre at Parma, and more boldly by Duke Maurice for his repayre to Inspruke, and not the least of all, now lately at Metz by some of his owne counsellours for the recourry of that Towne. But Princes and great personages whiche will heare but what and whom they list, at the length sayle when they would not, and commonly blame whom they should not: But it is well done that as great men may by authoritie contemne the good aduise of others; so God doth provide by right iudgement that they have leave in the ende to beare both the losse and shame therof them selves.

Thus ye fee how the Pope was both the brewer and brocher and also bringer of ill lucke to both these Princes, and as it came wel to passe dranke well of it him selfe both with expences of great treasures, and with the losse of many lyues, and specially of two noble Gentlemen, the Prince of Macedonia and Il Seign. Giovan Baptista di Monte his owne nephew: but the Popes care was neither of money nor men, so that he might set the two Princes surely together. And therefore was not onely content (as a man might say) to hasard Parma on the meyne chaunce: but to make the two Princes better sport and fresher game, set also even then Mirandula on a bye chaunce that mischief enough might come together.

Pope

Parma. Mirandula.

When the Princes were well in, and the one so lusty with good lucke that hee had no lust to leave, and the other so chased with leesyng, that still he would venture. Besides their playing in sporte for the Pope at Parma and Mirandula, they fell to it a good them selves in Piemount, Loraigne, Flaunders and Picardy, the French kyng robbyng by sea and spoyling by land, with calling in the Turke, and sturryng vp all Princes and states that had any occasion to beare any grudge to the Emperour. Of all their neighbours onely our noble kyng, and the wise senate of Venize would be lookers on.

And when the Pope faw they were so hote at it as he well knew as the one would not start in so great good lucke, so the other could not leave by so much shame of losse. And although it did him good to see them them fo lustely together; nevertheles he thought it scarce his surety that they should play so neare his elbow so earnestly, least if they fell to farre out, and the one should winne to much of the other, then he peraduenture would compell at length the Pope him felfe which began the play to kepe him sport afterward for that that he had in Italy. And therefore very craftely he gat them to play in an other place, and tooke vp the game for Parma and Mirandula, taking truce with Fraunce The Popes for certain yeares, and bad them make what sport they would farther practice. of in Loraigne and Picardy. And that they should lacke neither injurie nor spite in the Popes doynges, when the Emperour saw that, whether hee would or no, the Pope would needes fall in with Fraunce, then he defired the Pope that fuch bastilians and fortes of fence as were made about Mirandula when it was befiged might either be deliuered to hys mens handes, or els defaced, that the Frenchmen might not haue them, which request was very reasonable, seyng the Emperour had been at all the charge in makyng of them: but they were neither deliuered nor defaced, nor left indifferent, but so put into the French mens handes, that Mirandula now is made very strong to the French faction by Emperours money and the Popes falsehode.

This fact was very wrongfull of the Pope for the deede: but more spitefull for the tyme: even when Duke Maurice had wonne Augusta, euen then the Pope gaue vp the fiege of Mirandula, and fel in with Fraunce, that care enough might come vppon the Emperour together both out of Germany, and out of Italy at once. And even this day, 25th June 1553, when I was writing this place, commeth newes to Bruxells, that the Pope hath of new played with the Emperour more foule play at Siena, then he dyd before at Mirandula: for when the Emperour had bene at passing charges in kepying a great host, for the recouery of Siena, from December last vnto June: the Pope would needes become stickler in that matter betwene the Emperour, the French Kyng and Siena, promifing fuch conditions to all, as neither of the Princes should lose honour, and yet Siena should have had liberties. The Emperour, good man, yet agayne truftyng him who fo fpightfully had deceined hym before, difmissed hys hoste, which done Siena was left still in the Frenchmens handes: who thereby have such oportunitie to fortific it, as the Emperour is not like, by force, to recouer it. Piramus, Secretary to the Emperour, told this tale to Syr Phillip Hobby and the the Byshop of Westminster openly at the table: which Piramus is a Papist for his life. And beyng asked how he could excuse the Popes vnkyndnes agaynst his master the Emperour? hee aunswered smilyng, Julius tercius is a knaue, but the Pope is an honest man, which saying is common in this court. And although they will vnderstand both the spight of the Pope and the shame of their master, yet are they content stil to speake well of the Pope, though he neuertheles stil do ill to the Emperour. And thus to returne to my purpose how the Pope set the two Princes together, and shift his owne necke a while out of the halter, leauyng most vnsrendly the Emperour when he was farthest behynd hand: and how Oclauio for seare of Gonzaga, and vnkyndnes of the Emperour, sell with all hys samely to be French, I have briefly passed ouer for the haste I have to come to the matters of Germany.

The PRINCE of SALERNE.

HE Emperour beyng thus fet vpon by the Turke and Fraunce with open warre, and troubled by the house of Fernesia with so soddeyne breaches, and most of all encombred with the seare of the sturres in Germany which secretly were then in workyng: the Prince of Salerne also declared hym selfe an open enemy.

This Prince in this Court is much beloued for his gentlenes, and openly prayled for his wisedome, and greatly lamented for his fortune, who before tyme hath done so good and faythfull service to the Emperour: that I have heard some of this Court say, which love the Emperour well, and serve him in good place, that their master hath done the Prince so much wrong, as he could do no lesse than he dyd: who being so vniustly handled by his enemies, the Viceroy of Naples, and so vnkyndly dealt with all by hys master the Emperour, was driven by necessitie to seek an vnlawfull shift.

The Viceroy Don Pietro de Toledo, vncle to the Duke of Alua, and father in law to the Duke of Florence, vfed him felfe with much cruelty ouer the people of Naples, by exactions of money without measure, by Inquisition of mens doyngs without order, and not onely of mens doyngs, but also of mens outward lookyngs, and inward thinkyngs, viing

vfing the least suspicion for a sufficient witnes to spoyle and to kill whom foeuer he lysted. Men that had futes vnto him, had as leue bene away with the losse of their right, as have come to his presence to abyde his lokes and taunts: and (as I heard a wife gentleman of Italy fay) he gaue audience in fuch tyme and place, as he may easlyer in this Court speake with Monsieur d'Arras then he could in Naples with the Viceroyes Porter. And commonly he would not heare them whilest an hundred futers should come at once, and then the porter let them in by one and by one euen as he favoured, not as the matter required, commandyng them to be fhort, or els they should come short in, the next tyme. And fo mens futes were pulled from common law to private will, and were heard not in places open to justice but in private parlors, thit vp to all that came not in by fauour or money. And therefore judgements were allotted not as law appointed, but as the Viceroy listed. This fault (Cicero sayth) vndyd Cæsar, who drew the common law into his own house, and so in having other mens goods lost all mens hartes, and not long after his owne lyfe: for euen those that dyd help him pluck downe Pompey, dyd after kill him for pulling downe the lawes. So we fee that Princes not in gatheryng much money, nor in bearing ouer great fwing, but in keping of frendes and good lawes, lyue most merely, and raigne most furely: but such as gape alwayes for other mens goods commonly neuer enjoy the fruite of their owne: for they never cease to win by wrong, till at length they leese by right goodes, lyfe and all. And therefore it is notable that Dion in Plato writeth to Dionysius the Tyraunt, how Euripides in euery tragedy bringeth for some great vice one or other great Prince to ruine, and yet not one doth complaine thus:

Out out, alas alas, I dye for lacke of goodes.

But every one fingeth this fong:

Out out, alas alas, I dye for lacke of frendes.

For a Prince that will take mens goods when he lifteth without order, shall want mens hartes when he needeth without pitie: but in hauyng their hartes he shall neuer lacke their goodes, as the good Kyng Cyrus sayd to the rich Kyng Cræsus. And to have the peoples hartes, the next way is to be gentle to euery one, inft to all, and liberall to many, and especially to such as either by excellency of wit or good will in true seruice, do well deserve it. Also to set his chief ioy not on prinate pleasure, like Sardanapalus, but in common wealth, as we have example of Titus Vespasianus: and to thinke his treasure greatest, not when his coffers be fullest, Cræsus dyd, but when his subjectes be rich, as Cyrus dyd, and that through hys wisedome and care, as all prayse worthy Princes haue euer hitherto done. And what will the people render agayn to fuch a Prince: a-fmall fubfidy, with a great grudge? no, but their whole hartes to lone him, their whole goodes to ayde hym: their handes ready to defend hym whenfoeuer he shall haue neede. A Prince that thus doth lyue, and thus is loued at home, may be enuyed with much prayle, and hated with smal hurte of any power abroad.

Syr John

And therefore haue I heard wifemen discommend the gouernement in Fraunce, in making theyr people almost slaues, and from thence a common faying of some in England, That would have the people neither witty nor wealthy, when wit is the meare gift of God: fo that to wish men lesse wit that have it, is to count God Gates wish. scarce wise that gave it. And wealth of the people, as Scripture fayth, is the glory of a Prince and furety of hys raigne. But fuspition in all gouerning breedeth such sayinges, when wrong doth bear fuch fwynge as ill conscience doth always wish that men should lack either wit to perceaue or habilitie to amend what foeuer is done amisse. But God send such Achitophels better end then their counsels doth deferue, which would feme wife by other mens folly, and would be rich by other mens pouertie.

> To return to the Viceroy of Naples, the common opinion of those in this Court which have * private cause to say well on him, do speake. it boldly and openly, that he was fuch a one as neuer could content his couetousnes with money, nor neuer satisfie his crueltie with bloud: and fo by this foul mean many gentlemen in Naples have lost some theyr lyues, but more theyr liuynges, and almost all theyr libertie. And there be at this day as men fay here that know it, a good fort of thousandes Neapolitanes, named Foriensuti, who beyng spoyled at home by violence, robbed other abroad for neede, which comber so the passage betwixt Rome and Naples, as no man departeth commonly from Rome without company which cometh to Naples without robbyng.

* Perhaps it should be read, have no private sause.

The whole body of the kyngdome of Naples was so distempered inwardly with this miforder, with a little outward occasion it would easely have burst forth into a foule fore. A lesse matter then the rauishyng of Lucrece, a meaner ayde then the help of Brutus, was thought fufficient to have stirred up this inward grudge to open reuenge. But fee how God prouided for the Emperour and the quyet of that kingdome: for God, in takyng away one Spanyard, hath made Naples now. more strong, then if the Emperour had set 20 thousand of the best in Spayn there: for euen this last Lent 1553, Don Pietro de Toledo dyed at Florence, by whose goyng away mens hartes in Naples be so come agayne to the Emperour, as he shall now have lesse neede either to care for the fyne fetches of Fraunce, or to feare the great power of the Turke. A gentleman of this Court a true feruant to the Emperour, fayd merely in a company where I was, that his mafter the Emperour had won: more in Naples by the death of the Viceroy, then he had lost in Lorraigne by the forgyng of Metz.

But to my purpose. Not many yeares agoe divers in Naples made their complaint to the Prince of Salerne of their griefes, who was thought would be most willyng for his good nature, and best able for his authoritie, to seeke some remedie for them by way of intercession to the Emperour.

The Prince beyng here at Bruxels, humbly befought hys Majestie to pitie the miserie of hys poore subjectes: who by this sute gat of the Emperour, for hys cliantes, wordes without hope: and of the Viceroy for him selfe hatred without ende. The Prince yet alwayes bare hym selfe so wisely, that he could not without some sturre be thrust downe openly: and ridyng on his journey, he was once shot with a dagge secretly.

Thus he feyng no ende of displéasure in the Viceroy, no hope of remedy in the Emperour, when he saw the Turke on the sea, the French:

French Kyng in the field, Duke Maurice and the Marches vp, and a good part of Italy either rifen or ready to rife, thinkyng the tyme come of theyr most hope for helpe by the Princes, and of least fear of punishment by the Emperour, came forth to play his part also amongest the rest: who when slying first to the French Kyng, and after, by hys counsell as it is sayd, to the Turke, is compelled to uenture vppon many hard fortunes. And what success he shall have either of helpe in Fraunce or comfort of the Turke, or mercy of the Emperour, I can not yet write. But this last winter he hath lyen in the Ile of C10, and now I heare say this sommer he is on the sea with 63 gallyes of the Turkes at his commandement; what enterprice he will make, or what successe he shall have, when we shall heare of the matter, I trust, I shall, either by some private letter from hence, or by present talk at home, fully satisfie you therein.

¶ ALBERT MARCHES OF BRADENBURGE.

Marches Al- LBERT Marches of Bradenburge, in the begynnyng of his berts booke and the con- I flurre 1552, wrote a booke and fet it print, wherein he declared tents thereof. the causes of hys fallyng from the Emperour, wittely alledgyng common mifery as a just pretence of hys private enterprise, making other mens hurtes his remedy to heale his own fores, and common wronges hys way to reuenge private displeasures: shewing libertie to be lost, and Religion to be defaced, in all Germany, lamentyng the long captiuitie of the two great Princes: and all the dispossessions of hys father in law Duke Otto Henrick: fore enueying against the pride of the Spanyardes, and the authoritie of straungers, which had now in their Sore and just handes the feale of the Impire, and in their swynge the doyng of all complayntes, thynges, and at their commaundement all such mens voyces as were to be called the Imperiall Dietes: compellyng the Germanes in their owne countrey to vie straunge toungs for their private sutes, wherein they could fay nothing at all, or nothing to the purpose: vsing Camera Imperialis at Spires for a common key to open all mens coffers when they listed, and these were the chiefest points in Marches booke.

The Marches also fore enueyed agaynst Luice de Auila for writyng, The booke and agaynst the Emperour for suffring such a booke as Luice de Auila of Luice de wrote: wherein the honor of Germany and the Princes therof, and by name Marches Albert, who was in the first warres on the Emperours side, was so defamed to all the world: yea the Marches was so throughly chafed with this booke, that when I was in the Emperours Court, he offred the combat with Luice de Auila, which the Emperour, for good wil and wise respectes, would in no case admit.

Not onely the Marches, but also the Princes at the Diet of Passan this last yeare, made a common complaint of this booke. I knew also the good old Prince Fredericke Passane of the Rhene, in September last when the Emperour lay at Landaw beside Spires Toyng with his great army to Metz, complayned to the Emperour han selfe, and to his counsell, of a certaine spightfull place in that booke against him: the good Prince told me this tale hym selfe at hys house in Heldibirge, when I caried vnto him Kyng Edwardes letters, the Lord Ambassadour hym felfe beyng ficke at Spires.

And wife men fay that the Duke of Bauiere also is euili contented The Duke for that which is written in that booke agaynst hys father, when he of Bauiere vnkyndly deserved of the Imperials to have bene rewarded rather with prayse handled. and thankes then with any vnkynde note of blame and dishonour: of whom the Emperour in his warres agaynst the Langgraue and the Duke of Saxonie received fuch kyndnes, as no Prince in Germany for all respectes in that case was able to affourde hym: as first he had his whole countrey of Bauiere for a fure footyng place, to begyn the warre in: and had also both men and vittaile of hym what he would, and at length should have had that countrey hys onely refuge, if that in warre he had come to any vnderdele, as he was like enough to haue done. But it was Gods fecret will and pleasure to have the matter then go as it did: And for that cause men say Duke Albert of Bauiere that now is, that hath maryed the Emperours niece, was more straunge this last yeare to the Emperour, when he was driven to that extremitie to flye away on the night from Inspurge, and was more familiar with with Duke Maurice, and more friendly to the Princes confederate then els peraduenture he would have done.

And here a writer may learne of Princes affaires a good lesson, to beware of parcialitie either in flattery, or spight: for although thereby a man may please his owne Prince presently, yet he may perchaunce as much hurt hym in the end as Luis de Auila dyd hurt the Emperour his master in writyng of this booke.

Indeede this booke was not the chiefest cause of this sturre in Germany: but sure I am that many Princes in Germany were fore agreeued with it, as the Emperour wanted both they hartes and their handes when he stode in most nede of frendes.

Just reprehension of all vices as folie, vniust dealyng, cowardice, and vicious liuyng, must be frely and franckly vsed, yet so with that moderate discretion as no purposed malice or bent hatred may seeme to be the breeder of any false reproch, which humor of writyng followeth so full in Paulus Jouius bookes, and that by that iudgement of his owne frendes, as I have heard wise and well learned men say: that his whole study and purpose is spent on these pointes, to deface the Emperour, to slatter Fraunce, to spite England, to belye Germany, to prayse the Turke, to keepe vp the Pope, to pull downe Christ and Christes Religion, as much as lyeth in him. But to my purpose agayne.

The matters before of me briefly rehearfed, were at large declared in Marches Albertes booke: yet that you may know what fecret workyng went before this playne writyng and open doyng, and because the Marches part hath bene so notable in all this pastime, I will, by more particular circumstaunces, lead you to this generall complaintes.

There be at this day five Marchesses of Bradenburge: foachimus E-lector, Johannes his brother, who for civile service is Imperiall with might and mayne, and yet in Religion a Christian Prince, with hart, toung, and honesty of lyse: Doctour Christopher Monte, both a learned and wise man, our Kynges Maiestie servant, and his Agent in the affaires of Germany, hath told me divers tymes that this Marches Fohn and the Duke of Swaburg be two of the worthiest Princes in all the Empire, either in confidering wyfely, or executing courageously any affaire. The thyrd is Marches George, who dwelleth in Franconia, not farre from Noremberg. The fourth Marches Albert the elder, the mighty Duke of Prusia, hable, for his power, to cope with any Duke of Prusia. Prince, and 15 yeares together he dyd stoutly withstand, in continual warre, the strength of the Kyng of Pole. He hath so fully banished Papiftry, and fo furely established the doctrine of the gospell in Prusia, as no where hetherto in Germany is more diligently done; he loueth learning and honoreth learned men; and therefore, an. 1544, he founded a new Universitie in Prusia, called Mons Regius, bryngyng thether, with plentyfull thynges, excellent learned men in all tounges and sciences. He is vncle to this notable Marches Albert, and lackyng children hath made hym hys heyre, and hath already inueftured hym in the dukedome of Prusia. The fift is Marches Albert, of whom I purpose to write on: whose father was Cassimirus, descended from the Kynges of Pole; and for his noblenes agaynst the Turke, called Achilles Germanicus: and therefore might very well engender fuch a hoate Pirrbus. Marches Albert, in hys young yeares, as I haue heard wife men fay, was rude in hys maners, nor dyd not shew any token of towardnes likely to attempt any fuch affayres as in deede he hath done. It might be either for the lacke of learnyng and good bringyng vp (a great and common fault in great Princes of Germany) or els for his bashfull nature in youth, which propertie Xenophon wittely fayned to be in Cyrus Xenoph, a. at lyke yeares, judgyng bashfulnes in youth to be a great token of uer- xuew. tue in age.

the

Marches Albert is now at this day about 31 yeares old: of a good stature, neither very high nor very low, thicke without grosenes: rather well boned for strength, then ouerloded with sless his face fayre, bewtiful, brode, sterne, and manly: somewhat resemblying my Lord Marches of Northt, when he was of the same yeares; hys eyes great and rowlying, making his countenance chereful when he talketh: and yet when he geneth eare to other, he kepeth both a sadde looke without signe of suspicion, and also a well set eye without token of malice: and this behauiour I marked well in hym when I dyned in his company at the siege of Metz, in the County John of Nasjaus tent: hys voyce voyce is great, and hys wordes not many, more ready to here other than to talke hymfelfe. And when he talketh he so frameth hys toung to agree with hart, as speakyng and meanyng seemeth to be alwayes at one in hym: and herein he may be well called the sonne of Achilles, whom Homer wittely doth sayne to have such a free open nature: whose saying in Greeke is excellent, but beyng turned in the wrong side into English, it shall lesse delight you, yet thus much it signishest:

Who, either in earnest or in sport, Doth frame hymselfe after such sort, This thyng to thinck, and that to tell, My hart abhorreth as gate to hell.

Homer meaning hereby that a Prince of noble courage should have high hart, high looke, high toung, and high handes so alwayes agreeying together, in thinking, pretending, and speaking, and doing, as no one of these source should at any tyme be at iarre with an other; which agreeying together in they right tune, do make a pleasaunt melody in all mens eares both sweetest and loudest, called in English Honor, and most fitly in Greeke Tipis, the price and prayse of vertue.

And though the Marches be free to fay what he thinketh, yet he is both fecret in purpofyng and close in workyng what so ever he goeth about. Now very skillfull to do harme to others, and as ware to keepe hurte from hym selfe, yet first bet vnto it with his own rod: for in the former warres of Germany, beyng on the Emperours side, he fell into the handes of Duke John Fredericke of Saxony, which chaunce he is charged fore withall by Luice de Auila, and that with so spightfull and open a mouth, as moved the Marches to offer hym the combat, as I sayd before. He is now most courageous in hardest aduentures, most cherefull in present ieoperdy, and most paynefull in greatest labours: hauyng no souldier vnder hym, that can better away with heate and cold, or longer suffer hunger and thirst then he hym selfe. Hys apparell is souldier-lyke, better knowen by hys searce doynges then by his gay goyng: his souldiours feare him for his stoutnes, and loue him for his liberalitie: which winneth to him authoritie fit for a front Captaine, and worketh in them obedience due to good fouldiours.

This last yeare, a litle before hys agreement with the Emperour, hys souldiours, for lacke of money and meate, fell to mutinyng, and then fell the Marches fastest to hangyng, not hidyng hym selfe for feare, but comming abroad with courage, did protest that neither the proudest should make misorder without punishment, nor yet the poorest should lacke as long as either he had peny in hys purse or loase of bread in hys tent. And after this sort of outward behauiour and inward condition in Marches Albert, as I have marked his person my felse, and as I have learned hys doynges by such as by experience knew them well, and for their honesty would report them right, and now how he fell from the Emperour, I wil as briefly declare.

The Marches ferved the Emperour, as I faid before, in the former warres in Germany, agaynst the Lansgraue and the Duke of Saxony, where he lost some honour, and spent much money. The Emperour shortly after came downe hether to Bruxels, hauyng the Marches in hys company, who lookyng for a great recompence of hys costes, and receiung litle, and feyng hys honor not onely defaced in the field prefently when he was taken prisoner, but also defamed for euer by writing confirmed by the Emperours priviledge to grow abroad in the world, began to take the matter fo unkyndly, that he left commyng to the Court, and kept his owne house: rising every day very early: and writing all the forenoone very diligently, yet what he dyd no man knew: fo that his absence bred a talke in the Court, and his foddein and fecret study wrought a wonderfull gelousy of hys doynges in the Emperours head: for he knew the Marches to have courage enough to attempt matters ouer great; and therefore fent Monsieur Granduille vnto the Marches house, as of hym selfe, to grope out hys doynges, who declared vnto the Marches the Emperours great goodwil towards hym, shewing that his Maiestie was purposed to make hym a great perfonage, and to begyn withal, had in mynde to geue hym a goodly and profitable office in all hys mintes.

The Marches aunswered roundly and plainly to the first, that the Emperour could not make hym greater then he was, beyng Marches E 2 of Bradenburge: and as for the office in the minte, he faid smilyng, he vsed not often to tell his owne money, and therefore he thought not to make the accompt of others; and so made nothing of the Emperours offer: onely hee desired Grandeuill that the Emperour would geue him leaue to go home to his owne, which he obtained: and, at his departure, the Emperour gaue him a patent of 4000 crownes by the yeare: but the Marches was not well four myles out of Bruxels, when he sent the patent by post to the Emperour agayne, saying, his Maiestie might better bestow on some that had more neede of it. And indeede the Marches is as both to receive of hys frendes by beneuolence, as he is ready to take from hys enemies by violence, which commeth somewhat of to stout a courage.

Thus the Marches came home not best contented, as it may well appear: nor saw not the Emperour after, till he met hym at the siege of Metz. Casmirus, his father, and the Marches hymselfe were great spenders and deepe detters: the one for his stoutnes in warre, the other for hys lustines in youth. And therefore became quicke borrowers and slow payers, which thyng brought the Marches into such trouble as he had with the city of Noremberge, with his neighbours the Byshop of Herbipolis, and with his godfather the Byshop of Pamberge.

The Marches was no fooner come home, but these byshops, spying their tyme, when he had left the Emperours court, and had quite lost or much lessened hys frendship there, began to trouble hym with new suites for old debtes in Camera Imperiali, at Spires, where the Marches, because he lacked either fauour in the Court, or experience in young yeares, or good matter on his side, was alwayes wrong to the worst; and to stuffe vp his stomach with more matter of vnkyndnes against the Emperour, it is sayd, that letters from the greates in the Emperours Court were neuer lackyng at Spires, to helpe forward processe agaynst the Marches.

Shortly after this tyme began the siege of Madenburg, where Duke Maurice, by the Emperour, was appointed generall. The Marches, either weery of leesyng at home by sutes, or desirous to winne abroad by warre, or els purposing to practise some way to reuenge his displeasures, made him ready to serue against Madenburg with 500 horse.

And

And in the begynnyng of the Spryng of the yeare 1551, he fet forward, and in his way went to vifite Ernestus, his coufin, Duke of Saxony, brother to John Fridericke, then prisoner with the Emperour. The selfe fome tyme Lazarus Swendy was fent from the Emperour as Commiffary to Duke Ernestus, with earnest commandement that the Duke, and all his, should receive the doctrine of the Interim. And (that I may accomplish my purpose, which is to paynt out as truely as I can, by writing, the very image of fuch persons as have played any notable part in these affaires: and so you, beyng absent, shall with some more pleasure read their doynges) this Lazarus Swendy is a tall and a comely Lazarus personage, and beyng brought vp in learning vnder Oecolampadius at Swendy. Bafile, makyng (as it was told me by an honest man that was throughly acquainted with hym there) more account of his tall stature then of any bewty of the mynde, began to be wery of learning, and became defirous to beare fome bragge in the world: and fo made a fouldiour, mard a scholer, and because he would make a lusty chaunge from the feare of God and knowledge of Christs doctrine, he fell to be a peruerfe and bloudy Papist: euer at hand in any cruel execution agaynst the poore Protestantes, as commonly all such do which so wittyngly shake of Christ, and hys gospell. Such a commissary, you may be sure, would cruelly enough execute his office. Duke Erneflus told the Commissary, that he, hys landes and lyfe, were at his Maiesties commaundement: hys Maiesty knew how quietly he bare hym selfe alwayes, and therefore hys trust was, as he willyngly ferued the Emperour with true obedience, so he might as freely ferue God with right conscience: for he would rather leaue hys landes and goodes and all to the Emperour, and go beg with hys wyfe and children, then they would forfake the way of the Gospell, which God hath commaunded them to follow.

And marke how evidently God dyd declare both how much fuch a commission sent out abroad in Germany agaynst hym and hys worde dyd displease hym: and also how much the prayers and sighyng hartes of instead of in tyme prevayle with him: for as a man of much honesty and great knowledge in all the matters of Germany dyd tell me, assoone as this commission was once abroad, the practyses in Germany began to styrre, yet not so openly as the Emperour might have instead to withstand them, nor so covertly, but he had occasion enough enough to mistrust them: and thereby he both lacked help for open remedy, and wanted no displeasure for inward griefe.

Duke Erneflus, Marches Albert, and Lazarus Swendy fat at supper togethers: and as they were talkyng of the Interim, the Marches soddenly brast out into a sury, saying: "What deuill, will the Emperour neuer leave striuyng with God in defacyng true religion, and tossyng the world, in debarryng all mens liberties: addyng, that he was a Prince vnkynd to euery man, and kept touch with no man, that could forget all mens merites, and would deceive whomsoever he promised."

The Duke lyked not this hoate talke in hys house and at hys table, but fayd: " Cofin, you speake but merely, and not as you thincke," addyng much in the prayse of the Emperours gentlenes shewed to many, and of hys promife kept with all. "Well, (quoth the Marches) if " he had bene either kynde where men had deserued, or would haue " performed that he promised: neither should I at this tyme accuse "hym, nor you have fit here in this place to defend hym, for he pro-" mifed to geue me this house, with all the landes that thereto belong-" eth: but ye be affrayd, Cosin, (quoth the Marches) lest this talke " be to loud, and so heard to farre of: when indeede, if the Commis-" farie here be fo honest a man as I take hym, and so true to hys " master as he should be, he will not fayle to say what he hath heard; " and on the fame condition, Commissary, I bryng the goode lucke:" and drancke of vnto hym a great glasse of wine. Lazarus Swendyes talke then founded gently and quietly, for he was fore affrayed of the Marches. But he was no foner at home with the Emperour, but word was fent to Duke Maurice, that the Marches, who was as then come to Madenburg, if he would needes ferue there, should ferue without wages.

Ye may be fure the Marches was chafed a new with this newes, who already had loft a great fort of hys men, and now must leese hys whole labour thether, and all hys wages there, besides the losse of hys honor in takyng such shame of hys enemies, and receiving such vn-kyndnes of the Emperour.

The Marches was not fo grieued, but Duke Maurice was as well contented with this commaundement: for euen then was Duke Maurice fecretary practifyng, by Baron Hadeckes aduife, with the French Kyng for the sturre which dyd follow: and therefore was gladde when he saw the Marches might be made hys so easely, whiche came uery soone to passe: so that the Marches, for the same purpose, in the ende of the same yeare, went into Fraunce secretly, and was there with Shertly as a common Launce Knight, and named hymselfe Captaine Paul, lest the Emperours spials should get out hys doynges: where, by the aduise of Shertly, he practised with the French Kyng for the warres which sollowed after. This matter was told vnto me by John Mecardus, one of the chief preachers in Augusta, who beyng banished the Empire, when and how ye shall heare after, was sayne to stye, and was with Shertly the same yeare in Fraunce.

The Marches came out of Fraunce in the begynnyng of the yeare 1552, and out of hand gathered vp men, but hys purpose was not knowne, yet the Emperour mistrusted the matter, beyng at Insturg, sent Dott. Hasius, one of hys counsell, to know what cause he had to make such sturre. This Dott. Hasius was once an earnest Protestant, and wrote a booke on that side, and was one of the Palsgraue priny counsell: but, for hope to clime higher, he was very ready to be entised by the Emperour to forsake first his master and then God: by whom the Emperour knew much of all the Princes Protestants purposes, for he was commonly one whom they had vsed in all their dietes and prinate practises: which thyng caused the Emperour to seeke to have hym: that, by hys heade he might the easelyer overthrow the Protestantes, and with them, God and hys word in all Germany.

This man is very lyke M. Parrie, her graces cofferer, in head, face, legges, and bellye. What aunswere Hasius had I cannot tell, but sure I am the Marches then both wrote hys booke of complayntes agaynst the Emperour, and set it out in printe. And also came forward with banner displayed, and tooke Dillyug vpon Danuby, the Cardinall of Augustus towne, which Cardinal, with a few Priestes, sled in post to the Emperour at Inspurs, where he found so cold cheare, and so litle comfort, that forthwith in all haste, he posted to Rome.

Horsemen

Horsemen and footemen in great companies still gathered to the Marches: and in the ende of March he marched forward to Augusta, where the Duke Maurice, the young Lanfgraue, the Duke of Mechelburg, George and Albert, with William Duke of Brunfwycke, and other Princes confederate, met together, and besieged that citie, where I will leaue the Marches till I haue brought Duke Maurice and hys doynges to the fame tyme, and to the fame place.

¶ DUKE MAURICE.

Princes: the one Duke Yohn Fredericks bear Divided two Princes: the one Duke John Fredericke, borne Elector, who yet liueth, defender of Luther, a noble fetter out, and as true a follower of Christ and hys Gospell: the other hys kynsman, Duke George, who is dead, Knight of the order of the Golden Fleece, a great man of the Emperour, a mayntainer of Cocleus, and a notable piller of Papiftry.

John Frede-

Duke John Fredericke is now 50 yeares of age, fo byg of personage John Frede-ricke Duke as a very strong horse is scarce able to beare hym, and yet is he a of Saxony. great deale bygger in all kynde of vertues, in wifedome, iustice, liberalitie, stoutnes, temperancy in hym selfe, and humanitie towardes others, in all affaires, and either fortunes vsing a singular trouth and stedfastnes: so that Luice de Auila, and the Secretary of Ferrare, who wrote the story of the first warres in Germany, and professe to be his ernest enemies both for matters of state and also of religion, were so compelled by hys worthynes to fay the trouth, as though theyr onely purpose had bene to wryte hys prayse. He was fiue yeares prisoner in this Court, where he wan fuch loue of all men, as the Spanyardes now fay: They would as gladly fight to fet hym vp agayne, as euer they dyd to pull hym downe: for they fee that he is wife in all his doynges, iust in all his dealynges, lowly to the meanest, princely with the biggest, and excellyng gentle to all, whom no advertitie could ever move, nor policy at any tyme entice, to shrincke from God and hys word. And here I must needes commend the Secretary of Ferrare, who beyng a Papist.

Papist, and writing the history of the late warres in Germany, doth not kepe backe a goodly testimony of Duke Frederickes constancy toward God and hys Religion.

When the Emperour had taken the Duke prisoner, he came shortly after before the citie of Witemberg: and beyng aduised by some bloudy counsellours that Duke Frederickes death should, by the terrour of it, turne all the Protestantes from theyr religion, caused a write to be made for the Duke to be executed the next morning vipon a solemne scaffold, in the sight of his wyse, children, and the whole citie of Wittemberg.

This write, figned with the Emperours own hand, was fent ouer night to the Duke, who, when the write came vnto hym, was in hys tent playing at cheffe with his cofin and fellow prisoner the Lansgraue of Lithenberg, and readyng it aduisedly ouer, layd it downe quietly beside, and made no countenance at all at the matter, but sayd, "Cosin, take good heede to your game," and returning to his play as quietly as though he had received some private letter of no great importance, dyd geue the Lansgraue a trim mate.

The Emperour (I doubt not) chiefly moued by God; fecondly of his great wifedome and naturall clemency, when he vnderstode his merueilous constancie, chaunged his purpose, and reuoked the write; and euer after gaue him more honor, and shewed him more humanitie then any Prince that euer I haue read of haue hetherto done to his prisoner.

He is also such a louer of learnyng as his librarie, furnished with bookes of all tounges and sciences, passeth all other libraries which are yet gathered in Christendome: for my friend feronimus Wolfius, who translated Demosthenes out of Greeke into Latine, who had sene the French kynges librarie at Augusta, hath told me, that though in six monethes he was not able onely to write out the titles of the bookes in the Fuggers librarie, yet was it not so byg as Duke Frederickes was which he saw in Saxony. I thinke he vnderstandeth no straunge toung saue the Latine and a litle the French: and yet it is merueilous that my frend Johannes Sturmius doth report by writing, what he heard Phillip Melancthon at a tyme fay of this noble Duke: that he thought the Duke dyd privately read and write more every day then dyd both he and D. Aurifaber, which two were counted in all mens iudgment to be the greatest readers and writers in all the vniuerstie of Wittemberg.

And as he doth thus read with fuch diligence, euen so he can report with such a memory whatsoeuer he doth read, and namely histories, as at his table on euery new occasion he is accustomed to recite some new story, which he doth with such pleasure and vtterance, as men be content to leaue their meat to heare him talke: and yet he him selfe is not disdaynfull to heare the meanest, nor will ouertwhart any mans reason. He talketh without tauntyng, and is mery without scoffyng, deludyng no man for sport, nor nippyng no man for spight.

Two kyndes of men, as his preachers dyd tell me at Vilacho, he will neuer long fuffer to be in his house: the one a common mocker, who for his pride thincketh fo wel of his owne wit as his most delight is to make other men fooles, and where God of his Prouidence hath geuen small wit, he for his sport wil make it none, and rather than he should leefe his pleasure, he would an other should leefe his wit: as I heare fay was once done in England, and that by the fufferaunce of fuch as I am forry, for the good wil I beare them, to heare fuch a report: the other a priny whifperer, a pickthancke, a tale-teller, medlyng fo with other mens matters, as he findeth no leysure to looke to his owne: one fuch in a great house is able to turne and tosse the quietnes of all. Such two kynde of men, fayeth the Duke, besides the present troublyng of others, neuer or feldome come to good end them felues. He loueth not also bold and thicke skinned faces, wherein the meanyng of the harte doth neuer appeare. Nor fuch hid talke as lyeth in wayte for other mens wittes. But would, that wordes should be so framed with the toung, as they be alwayes ment in the hart.

A noble nature.

And therefore the Duke him felfe thincketh nothyng whiche he dare not speak, nor speaketh nothyng whiche he will not do. Yet hau-

yng

yng thoughtes grounded vppon wisedome, his talke is alwayes so accompanyed with discretion, and his deedes so attended vppon true dealyng, as he neither biteth with wordes, nor wringeth with deedes, except impudency follow the fault, which Xenophon wittely calleth the furthest point in al doyng, and then he vseth to speake home, as he dyd to a Spanyard this last yeare at Villacho, who beyng of the Dukes garde, when he was prisoner, and now preasyng to sit at his table when he was at libertie, because many nobles of the Court came that day to dine with the Duke, the gentleman husher gently desired the Spanyard to spare his rowme for that day for a great personage: but he, countenancyng a braue Spanish bragge, sayd, "Seignor, ye know me well" enough," and so sat him downe.

The Duke heard him, and preuentyng hys mans aunswere, sayd: "In deede you be too well knowen, by the same token the last tyme "you were here you tooke a gobblet away with you, and therefore "when you have dyned you may go without farewell, and haue leaue to come agayne when ye be sent for. In the meane while an honest man may occupy your place." But in remembryng so good a Prince I haue gone too farre from my matter: and yet the remembraunce of him is neuer out of place, whose worthynes is neuer to be forgotten.

Duke George of Saxony, a little before he dyed, hauyng no child, dyd difinherite Duke Henry his brother by his last wil, because he was a Protestant, and gaue away his whole inheritaunce to Ferdinando Kyng of Romaines.

But Duke John Fredericke, by force of armes, set and kept his cosin Duke Henry in his right: and he dying soone after left behynd hym two sonnes, Duke Maurice and Duke Augustus, who likewise in theyr youth were defended in theyr right by the wisedome and sorce of Duke John Fredericke. Duke Maurice was brought vp in Duke John Frederickes house, as if he had bene his owne sonne, and maryed the Lansgraues daughter.

After it came to passe that the Emperour attempted to establish Papistry in Germany with the sword, agaynst which purpose the Lansgraue F 2 and Duke John Fredericke armed themselues, not to resist the Emperour, as the Papistes say, but to kepe Gods religion vp, if any by violence would pull it downe, refusing neuer, but requiryng alwayes to referre them and theyr doctrine to a lawfull and free general councill, where truth and religion might be fully tryed in the hearyng of euen and * equal iudges, and that by the touchstone of Gods Canonicall Scriptures.

Duke Maurice in the begynnyng of his warres was suspected neither of the Lansgraue nor of Duke Fredericke, beyng sonne in law to the one and nigh kynsman to the other, and agreeyng in Religion with both. Yea, he was not onely not suspected; but as I heard skilful men say, he was ready with his counsell, and promised his ayde to helpe forward the enterprice, or else Hance Fredericke, being a Prince of such wisedome, would not have left at home behind him an enemie of such a force.

Francisco, Duke Maurice Agent with the Emperour, was asked, I beyng by at Augusta, how he could excuse his masters vnkyndnes towards John Fredericke who had bene fuch a father vnto him. He graunted that Duke Fredericke had bene great frend vnto him, and might haue bene a greater if he had would, and then lesse strife had followed then did. " And troth it is (fayd he) as Duke Fredericke kept " my master in his right, so afterward he put hym from part of his right, " when in his young yeares he chopped and chaunged landes with him " when he lifted: which thing my mafter complaynyng, could neuer ob-"tayne remedy therein. Kyndnes should rather haue kyndly encreased; "then fo unkyndly haue decayed, specially when the one was trusted " with all, and the other of fuch yeares, as he had neither wit to perceive "nor power to amend if any iniury were offred vnto hym. Troth alfo "it is that my master was brought vp in Dake Frederickes house: but "he hath more cause to complain on them that brought hym thether, "then to thanke fuch as brought him vp there, where he had alwayes " plentie of drinke, and as much scant of good teachyng to come to such " vertue and learnyng as dyd belong to a Prince of his state."

* Ev Your xal opolor, wordes alwayes used in Thueidides in decidyng common controversies.

Now, whether this talke was altogether true, or, an ill excuse was made to couer a foule fact, I cannot tell: but sure I am Francisco sayd thus. I have heard wise men say, that it is not lyke, that for such a private stryfe Duke Maurice would have so forsaken not only his frend and kinsman, but also his father in law, or would for the losse of a litle, or rather for the chaunge of a peece, have so hassarded his whole estate, which was once in the first warre all gone save Lypsia, and one other towne, beside the losse of love in whole Germany, and his good name amongest all Protestantes, in the middest of whom all his livyngs do lye.

Well furely there was some great cause that could sturre up so great Why Duke Maurice lest a stryfe, and that was, as wyse men and wel willyng on Duke Maurice hys dearest side, in mine opinion, haue truly judged, the soule vice of ambition. frendes and fell in with the Empe-

O Lord! how many worthy men hath this one vice beareft from rour. good common weales, which for all other respectes were most vnwor-Ambition, thy of that end they came vnto. My hart weepes for those noble men of England, whose valiantnes in warre, whose wisedome in peace, this realme shal want and wayle, and wish for in tyme to come, which of late, by this onely vice, haue bene taken from vs. Examples lesse for our grief, and as sit for this purpose, be plenty enough in other states.

Ouer many experiences do teach vs, though a Prince be wife, frout, liberall, gentle, mercyfull, and excellently learned; though he deserue all the prayse, that vertue, nature, and fortune can affourd him, yea, that wit it selfe can wish for, as we read that noble Julius Casar had, and that by the testimony of those that loued him not, neuertheles if the two soule verses of Euripides,

Do right alway, and wrong refraine, Except onely for rule and raigne.

If these verses, I say, do not onely sound well in his eare, but sincke deepe also in his hart, surely there is neither kindred, frendship, law, othe, othe, obedience, countrey, God, nor his owne lyfe, but he will haffard to leefe all rather then to purfue this foule vice: for Polynices, for whom this verfe was first made in Greeke, dyd fill not onely his owne countrey full of dead carcasses, but also whole Greece full of weepyng widdowes. And Cæsar, for whom the same verfe was turned into Latine, dyd not onely turn vpside down the goodliest common wealth that euer God suffred to stand vppon the earth: but also tossed the whole world with battayle and slaughter, euen almost from the sunne settyng vnto the sunne risyng. And dyd not stop to bryng souldiours to do mischief further then any man now dare iourney by land either for pleasure or profite.

But fee the fruite and end which this vngodly great growing bryngeth men vnto: both these Princes were slaine, the one by his brother, the other by his own sonne, of whom in lyse, nature and benefites would they should have taken most comfort of. But men that loue to clime to hye haue alwayes least feare, and therefore by reason fall most suddenly, and also fardest downe: yea, the very bowghes that helped hym vp will now whip him in fallyng downe: for who so in climyng trusteth when he is goyng vp any bough at all ouer much, though he seeme to tread neuer so surely vppon it, yet if he once begyn to slyp, the same selfe bough is reddiest to beat him that seemed before surest to beare him. Examples hereof be seene dayly and forgotten hereby.

An other mischief chaunceth commonly to these high climers: that they will heare no man so gladly as such which are euer hartenyng them to clime still. If wise and good men durst speake more freely then they do: great men should do both others and themselues lesse harme then they are wont to do. He hateth him selfe, and hasteth his owne hurt, that is content to heare none so gladly as either a soole or a flatterer. A wonderfull sollie in a great man himselfe, and some piece of miseric in a whole common wealth, where sooles chiefly and flatterers may speake freely what they will, and wise men and good men shal commonly be shent, if they speake what they should.

And how commeth this to passe: it is the very plague of God for great mens sinnes, and the plaine high way to their iust punishment.

And

ROGER ASCHAM.

And when God suffreth them so willingly to graunt freedom to form and so gladly to geue hearyng to flattery: but see when the great man is gone and hath playd his part, sooles and flatterers be did so the stage. Such line in all worldes, such laugh in all miseries: such Daui and Geta have alwayes the longest parties: and go out who shal, hey tary in place still. I know also many a good Mitio, which have played long partes, whom I pray God kepe long still vpon the stage. And I trust no man will be miscontent with my generall saying, except conscience do pricke him of his owne private ill doyng.

There be common wealthes where freedome in speakyng truth hath kept great men from boldnes in doing ill: for free and frendly aduise is the trimmest glasse that any great man can vie to spye his owne fault in: which taken away, they runne commonly so farre in soule doyng, as some neuer fray till they passe all remedy, saue onely to late repentaunce. And as I would have no flattery but wish for freedome: so in no wise do I commend ouermuch boldnes, or any kynd of rayling. But that libertie in speakyng should be so mingled with good will and discretion, as no great person should be vnhonourably spoken vppon, or any mean man touched out of order either for sport or spite: as some vnquiet heades, neuer contented with any state, are euer procurying either secretly with raylyng billes, or openly with tauntyng songes, or els some scoffing common play.

An other kynd of to bold talkers surpasse all these; selly rumors, who are called, and so will be, common discoursers of all Princes affaires. These make a great account of themselues, and will be commonly formost in any prease, and lustly without blushing shoulder backe others: these will needes seeme to see further in any secret affayre then the best and wisest counsellor a Prince hath. These be the open flatterers and priny missikers of all good counsellors doynges. And one common note, the most part of this brotherhode of discoursers commonly cary with them where they be bold to speake: to like better Tullies Offices then St. Paules Epistles: and a tale in Bocace, then a story of the Bible, and therefore for any Religion earnest setters forth of present tyme: with consciences confirmed with Machiauelles doctrine to thincke, say, and do what soeuer may serue best for profite or pleasure.

But

But as concernyng flatterers and raylers to fay mine opinion whether I lyke worse, surely as I have read sew men to have bene hurt with bitter poysons: so have I heard of as sew great men to have bene greatly harmed with sharpe talke, but are so ware therein, that commonly they wil complayne of theyr hurt before they seele harme. And flattery agayne is so sweete, that it pleaseth best when it hurteth most, and therefore is alwayes to be feared, because it alwayes delighteth. But in lookyng a-side to these hye climers, I have gone out of the way of mine owne matter.

To return to Duke Maurice, he faw that Duke Frederickes fallyng might be his rifyng, and perchaunce was moued with some old iniuries, but beyng of young yeares, and of nature full of desire and courage, he was a trimme pray for old practisers to be easily caryed away with fayre new promises, soundyng altogether to honor and profite, and so he forsoke his father and his frend, and became wholy the Emperours till he had brought both them into prison. Duke Fredericke was taken in the field, and so became the Emperours inst prisoner. Yet as long as the Lansgraue was abroad, the Emperour thought his purpose neuer atchieued, and therefore practised a new with Duke Maurice to get him also into his handes.

Duke Maurice with Joachim Elector of Bradenburge became meanes betwixt the Lanfgraue and the Emperour. Conditions both of mercy from the one, and of amendes from the other, were drawen out. Maurice and the Marches bound them selues sureties to the Lanfgraues children, for theyr fathers safe returne: for amongest the rest of conditions this was one of the chiefest, that he should come in no prison. And so at Hala in Saxony, he came boldly to the Emperours presence, who received him not very cherefully, nor gave him not his hande, which in Germany is the very token of an assured reconciliation.

The Duke of Alua made the Lanfgrane a supper, and called also thether Duke Maurice, and the Marches of Bradenburge, where they had great chere: but after supper it was told Duke Maurice and the Marches that they might depart, for the Lanfgrane must lodge there that night.

On the morrow, they reasoned of the matter wholly to this purpose, that the Emperour promised the Lansgraues person ought not to be kept. Aunswere was made that the Emperour went no further then conditions led him, which were that he should not be kept in euerlastyng prison. When I was at Villacho in Carinthia I asked Duke Frederickes Preacher what were the very wordes in Dutch, whereby the Lansgraue agaynst his lookyng was kept in prison. He sayd the sallacion was very pretty and notable, and tooke his penne and wrote in my booke the very wordes wherein the very controversie stode. Duke Maurice sayd it was,

Nicht in einig gefengknes. i. Not in any prison. The Imperials sayd no, but thus;

Nicht in ewig gefengknes. i. Not in euerlastyng prison. And how soon einig may be turned into ewig, not with scrape of knife, but with the least dash of a pen, so that it shall neuer be perceiued, a man that will proue may easely see.

Moreouer, Luice d'Auila in his booke doth reioyce that the Lansgraue dyd fo deceaue hyni felfe with his owne conditions, in makyng of which, as D'Auila fayth, he was wont to esteeme his owne wit aboue all other mens. Well, how so ever it came to passe the Langrave was kept in prison. And from that hour Duke Maurice fell from the Emperour, thinckyng hym felfe most vnkyndly handled, that he, by whose meanes chiefly the Emperour had won fuch honor in Saxony, must now be rewarded with shame in all Germany, and be called a traytor to God, and his countrey, his father, and his frend. And though he was greeued at hart, yet he bare all thynges quietly in countenance, purpofing though he had loft will yet would he not leefe his profite, and fo hidyng his hurt prefently, whilest some fitter tyme should discouer some better remedy, he went with the Emperour to Augusta, where, according to his promife, he was made Elector. Yet the same night after his solemne creation, two verses set uppon his gate might more greue hym, than all that honor could delight hym, which were thefe.

Seu Dux, seu Princeps, seu tu dicaris Elector. Maurici es Patrice proditor ipse tuæ.

After that he had gotten that he looked for, he gat him home into his countrey: from whence afterward the Emperour with no policie could euer bryng him, he alwayes alledgyng, the feare he had of some sturre by Duke Frederickes children.

Hitherto the Germaines much mislyked the doynges of Duke Maurice. But after that he had felt him felfe fo vnkyndly abused as for his good feruice to be made the betrayer of his father, he tooke fuch matters in hand, and brought them so to passe, as he recouered the loue of his countrey, and purchased such hate of his enemies, as the Spanyardes tooke theyr displeasure from all other, and bestowed wholly uppon the Duke Maurice: and yet he bare him felfe with fuch wit and courage agaynst them, as they had alwayes cause to feare hym, and neuer occafion to contemne hym: yea, if he had liued, he would fooner men thincke haue driven all Spanyardes out of Germany, then they should haue hurt hym in Saxony, for he had joyned vnto hym fuch strength, and there was in hym fuch pollicie, as they durst neuer haue come vppon hym with power, nor neuer should have gone beyond hym with wit. He had so displeased the Emperour, as he knew wel neither his landes nor his lyfe could make amendes, when 10 poundes of benefites which he was able to do, could not way with one ounce of difpleasure that he had already done: and therefore neuer after sought to feeke his loue which he knew could neuer be gotten: but gaue hym felfe wholy to fet up Maximilian, who beyng hym felfe of great power, and of all other most beloued for his worthynes in all Germany, and now viyng the head and hand of Duke Maurice and his frendes, and hauving the helpe of as many as hated the Spanyardes, that is to fay, almost all Protestantes and Papistes to in Germany, he should easely have obtained what foeuer he had gone about. But that bonde is now broken: for euen this day when I was writing this place, came word to this Court, that Marches Albert and Duke Maurice had fought, where the Marches had loft the field, and Duke Maurice had loft his lyfe: which whole battail, because it is notable, I would here at length defcrybe, fcrybe, but that I should wander to farre from my purposed matter: and therefore I in another place, or els some other with better opportunitie, shall at large report the matter.

Ye see the cause why and the time when Duke Maurice fell from the Emperour. And because he was so notable a Prince, I will describe also the maner how he proceeded in all these doynges, as I learned amongest them that did not greatly loue him. And because it were small gayne to flatter hym that is gone, and great shame to lye vppon hym that is dead, for pleasing any that be alyue, I so will report on hym as his doynges since my commyng to this Court haue descrued.

He was now of the age of 32 yeares, well faced, in countenance, complection, fauour and beard not much vnlyke to Syr Raffe Sadler, but fome deale higher, and well and strong made to beare any labour and payne. He was once (men fay) geuen to drinkyng, but now he had cleane left it, contented with small diet and litle sleepe in this last yeares, and therefore had a wakyng and workyng head: and became fo witty and fecret, fo hardy and ware, fo skillfull of wayes, both to do harme to others, and keepe hurt from hym felfe, as he neuer tooke enterprise in hand wherein he put not his aduerfary alwayes to the worfe. And to let other matter of Germany passe, even this last yeare, within the compasse of eight monethes, he professed hym selfe open enemy agaynst foure the greatest powers that I know vppon earth; the Turke, the Pope, the Emperour, and the French kyng, and obtained his purpose, and wan prayle agaynst them all foure: for he in person, and pollicie, and courage, dispatched the Turkes purpose and power this last yeare in Hungary. The Councell of Trent, which the Pope and the Emperour went fo The Pope. about to establish, he onely brought to none effect: first by open proteftation agaynst that councell, and after by commyng with his army to Insburge, he brought such feare to the Bishops there gathered, that they ran euery one farre away from thence, with fuch fpeed as they neuer durst hetherto speake of meeting there agayne. And how he dealt with the Emperour, both in forcyng him to flye from Insburge, The Empeand compellyng him to fuch a peace at Pallo, my whole Diarium shall rour. at full instruct you.

G 2

French kyng.

And of ail other he serued the French kyng best, who sayre pretending the deliuery of the two Princes captiues, and the maintenaunce of Religion and libertie in Germany, purposed in very deede nothing els, but the destruction of the Emperour, and the house of Austria: for what cared he for religion abroad, who at home not onely followeth none hymselfe prinately in his lyse, but also persecuteth the trouth in others openly with the sword. But I do hym wrong to say he followeth none, who could for his purpose be content at one time to embrace all: and for to do hurt enough to the Emperor would become at once by solemne league, Protestant, Papish, Turkish, and deuillish. But such Princes that cary nothing els but the name of bearing vp Gods word, deserue the same prayse and the same end that that Prince dyd, who semed so ready to beare vp the Arke of the Lord, and yet otherwise pursued Gods true Prophetes and his word.

Agayne, how much the French kyng cared for the libertie of Germany he well declared in stealyng away so vnhonorably from the Empire the City of Metz. But he thinkkyng to abuse Duke Maurice for his ambitious purpose, in very deede and in the end Duke Maurice vsed him as he should: for first he made hym pay well for the whole warres in Germany, as it is said, 200000 crownes a moneth: and after when the French kyng fell to catchyng of Cities, Duke Maurice tendryng the state of his countrey, brake of with hym, and began to parle with the good kyng of Romanes at Luiz, which thyng heard when the French kyng came within two myles of the Rhene, he straight way hyed more hastly, and with more disorder, for all his great haste, out of Germany, as they say that were there, then the Emperour beyng sicke without company, and pressed by his enemy, dyd go from Insburge.

And fee how noble Duke Maurice dyd, which for the loue of his countrey, durft fall from the French kyng before he atchieued any thyng agaynst the Emperour. And rather then Germany should leese her cities so by the French kyng, he had leuer hassard, both the leesyng of his enterprice, and also the leauyng of his father in law still in prison with the Emperour. But as he had wit to take money plenty of the French kyng, so had he wit also to furnish hym selfe so from home as he durst first fall out with the French kyng, and durst also after to set vppon

the

the Emperour, till he had brought his honest purpose to passe. For there is not almost any in this Court but they will say Duke Maurice did honestly in deliveryng his father by strong hand, which before left no sayre meane unprouced to do that humbly by intreaty, which after, he was compelled to bryng to passe stoutly by sorce. And I pray you marke well what he dyd, and then judge truly if any thing was done that he ought not to do.

For first he hym selfe with the Marches of Bradenburge most humbly Duke Mauby private sute laboured for the Lansgraves delivery, offryng to the Emperour, princely offers, and not to be refused: as a huge summe of grave delimoney: a fayre quantitie of great ordinaunce, certaine holdes of his, verysome to be defaced, some geven to the Emperour: and also personall pledges of great houses, for his good haberaunce all the residue of his lyfe.

After when this fute was not regarded, they againe procured all the Princes and states of Germany, beyng at the Diet at Augusta, an. 1548. to be humble intercessors for hym, offryng the selfe same conditions rehearsed before, addyng this more, to become sureties themselues in any bande to his Maiestie for his due obedience for tyme to come.

Thirdly by the Prince of Spayne Duke Maurice neuer left to entreat the Emperour, yea, he was so careful of the matter, that his Ambassadors followed the Prince euen to his shippyng at Genoa: who had spoken often presently before, and wrote earnestly from thence to his father for the Lansgraues deliuery, and it would not be. And wyse men may say it was not the wysest deede that euer the Emperour dyd, to deny the Prince this sate: for if the Prince had bene made the deliuerer of the two Princes out of captiuity, he had won thereby such fauour in all Germany, as without all doubt he had bene made coadiutor with the K. of Romaines his vacle, and afterward the Emperour. Which thyng was lustly denyed to the Emperor by the Electors, though he laboured in the matter so fore as he never dyd in any other before.

Fourthly this last yeare, a little before the open warres, Duke Maurice procured once agayne, not onely all the Princes and free estates of Germany, but also the kyng of Romaines, Ferdinand, Maximilian his sonne Kyng

Kyng of Boeme, the Kyng of Pole, the Kyng of Denmarke, the Kyng of Sweeden, to fend also theyr Ambassadours for this suite, so that at once 24. Ambassadours came before the Emperour together at Insburge. To whom when the Emperour had geuen very fayre wordes in effect conteining a double meaning aunfwere, and that was this: "That it dyd " him good to see so noble an Ambassage at once. And therefore so " many Princes should well understand that he would make a good " accompt of their fute. Neuertheles because Duke Maurice was the " chiefest partie herein, he would with speede fend for him, and vse his " head for the better endying of this matter." But Duke Maurice feying that all these Ambassadours went home without him, and the matter was referred to his prefent talke, who was neuer heard in the matter before, he wyfely met with this double meanyng aunswere of the Emperours with a double meaning replica againe, for he promifed the Emperour to come; and at last in deede came so hastly, and so hotely, as the Emperour could not abyde the heat of his breath: for when Duke Maurice faw that all humble futes, all quiet meanes were spent in vayne, and had to beare hym iust witnes therin all the Princes of Germany: first with close pollicie, after open power both wittely and stoutly, he atchieued more by force then he required by suite: for the Emperour was glad to condefeend (which furely in an extreme aduerfitie was done like a wife Prince) without money, without artillery, without defacyng of holdes, without receiuyng of pledges, to fend the Langraue home honorably accompanied with (at the Emperours charges) the nobilitie of Brabant and Flaunders.

This last day I dyned with the Ambassadour of Venice in companie of many wyse heades, where Duke Maurice was greatly praysed of some for his wit: of others for the execution of his purposes. "Well, sayth a lusty Italian Priest, I cannot much prayse his wit, which might have had the Emperour in his handes and would not." Loe such be these Machiauels heades, who thincke no man have so much wit as he should, except he do more mischief then he neede. But Duke Maurice purposyng to do no harme to the Emperour, but good to his father in law, obtaining the one pursued not the other. Yea I know it to be most true when we fled from Insburge so hastly, Duke Maurice sent a post to the good Kyng of Romanes, and bad hym will the Emperour to make no fuch speede, for he purposed not to hurt his person, but to helpe his frend, whereupon the Diet at Passo immediatly followed.

I commend rather the judgement of John Baptist Gascaldo, the Em-John Baptist perours man and the Kyng of Romanes generall in Hungary, who is Gascaldo. not wont to say better, or loue any man more than he should, specially Germaines, and namely Protestantes. And yet this last winter he wrote to the Emperour that he had marked Duke Maurice well in all his doynges agaynst the Turke, and of all men that ever he had sene, he had a head to forecast the best with pollicie and wit, and a hart to set vppon it with courage and speed, and also a discression to stay most wisely vppon the very pricke of advantage.

Marches Marignan told fome in this Court foure yeares ago that Duke Maurice should become the greatest enemy to the Emperour that euer the Emperour had: whiche thing he iudged (I belieue) not of any troublesome nature which he saw in Duke Maurice, but of the great wronges that were done to Duke Maurice, knowing that he had both wit to perceive them quietly, and also a courage not to beare them over long.

Some other in this Court that loued not Duke Maurice, and hauyng no hurt to do hym by power, went about to fay hym fome for spight, and therefore wrote these two spightfull verses agaynst hym.

* Jugurtham Mauricus prodit Mauricus vltra, Henricum, Patruum, Socerum, cum Cæsare, Gallum.

He that gaue me this verse added thereunto this his iudgement, "Well (sayth he) he that could finde in his hart to betray his frend Duke "Henry of Brunswicke, his nigh kinsman Duke Fredericke, his father in law the Lansgraue, his soueraigne Lord the Emperour, his conse- derate the French Kyng, breakyng all bondes of frendshyp, nature, law, obedience, and othe, shall besides all these deceaue all men, if at length he do not deceaue hym selfe." This verse and this sentence, the one made of spight, the other spoken of displeasure, be here com-

* The former distich was in the old edition corrupt, and still remains barbarous in the prosody: the same desect will remain in this, though it be reformed as I believe it was written, thus, Juguriham Maurus prodit, Mauricius ultra.

Duke Mau- mended as men be affectioned. For my part as I can not accuse hym for all, so will I not excuse hym for part. And yet since I came to this Court I should do hym wrong if I dyd not consess that which as wise heades as be in this Court haue judged on hym, even those that for countrey and Religion were not his frendes, that is, to have shewed hym selfe in all these affayres betwixt the Emperour and hym: first, humble in intreatyng, diligent in pursuyng, witty in purposing, secret in workyng, searce to force by open warre, ready to parley for common peace, wyse in choyse of conditions, and just in performyng of covenaunts.

And I know he offended the Emperour beyond all remedy of amendes: fo would I be loth to fee as I have once fene, his Maieftie fall fo agayne into any enemyes handes: lest peraduenture lesse gentlenes would be found in hym then was found in Duke Maurice, who when he was most able to hurt, was most ready to hold his hand, and that agaynst such an enemie, as he knew well would never love him, and should alwayes be of most power to revenge. If Duke Maurice had had a Machiavels head or a cowardes hart, he would have worne a bloudyer sword then he dyd, which he never drew out in all these sturres, but once at the Cluce, and that was to save the Emperours men.

Hitherto I haue followed the order of persons, whiche hath caused me somewhat to misorder both tyme and matter, yet where divers great affayres come together, a man shall wryte confusedly for the matter, and vnpleasantly for the reader, if he vse not such an apt kynde of partition as the matter will best affourde, "Whiche thyng (Plato sayth) "who can not do, knoweth not how to write." Herein Herodotus deferueth in myne opinion a great deale more prayse then Thucidides, although he wrote of a matter more confused for places, tyme and persons, then the other dyd.

In this point also Appianus Alexandrinus is very commendable, and not by chaunce but by skil doth follow this order, declaryng in his Prologue iust causes why he should do so. Our wryters in late tyme, both in Latin and other tounges, commonly consound to many matters together, and so wryte well of no one. But sec, Master Afley, I thinck-yng to be in some present talke with you, after our old wont, do seeme to forget both my selfe and my purpose.

For the rest that is behind I will vse a grose and homely kind of talke with you: for I will now, as it were, cary you out of England with me, and will lead you the same way that I went, even to the Emperours Court, beyng at Augusta, an. 1550. And I will let you see in what case it stode, and what thynges were in doyng when we came first thether. After, I will cary you, and that apace, because the chiefest matters be throughly touched in this my former booke, through the greatest affaires of two yeares in this Court. Yea, in order till we have brought Duke Maurice (as I promifed you) to ioyne with Marches Albert in besiegyng Augusta. And then, because priuy practises brast out into open sturres, I might better marke thynges dayly then I could And fo we will depart with the Emperour from Insburge, and fee dayly what chaunces were wrought by feare and hope in this Court, till hys Maiestie lest the siege of Metz, and came downe hether to Bruxels: where then all thynges were shut vp into secret practises. till, last of all, they brake forth into new mischiefes, betwixt the Emperour and Fraunce in Picardy, and also betwixt Duke Maurice and the Marches in hyghe Germany; which thynges, I trust, some other shall marke and describe a great deale better then I am hable to doe.

TOXOPHILUS,

The Schole, or Partitions, of Shooting.

Contayned in II Bookes.

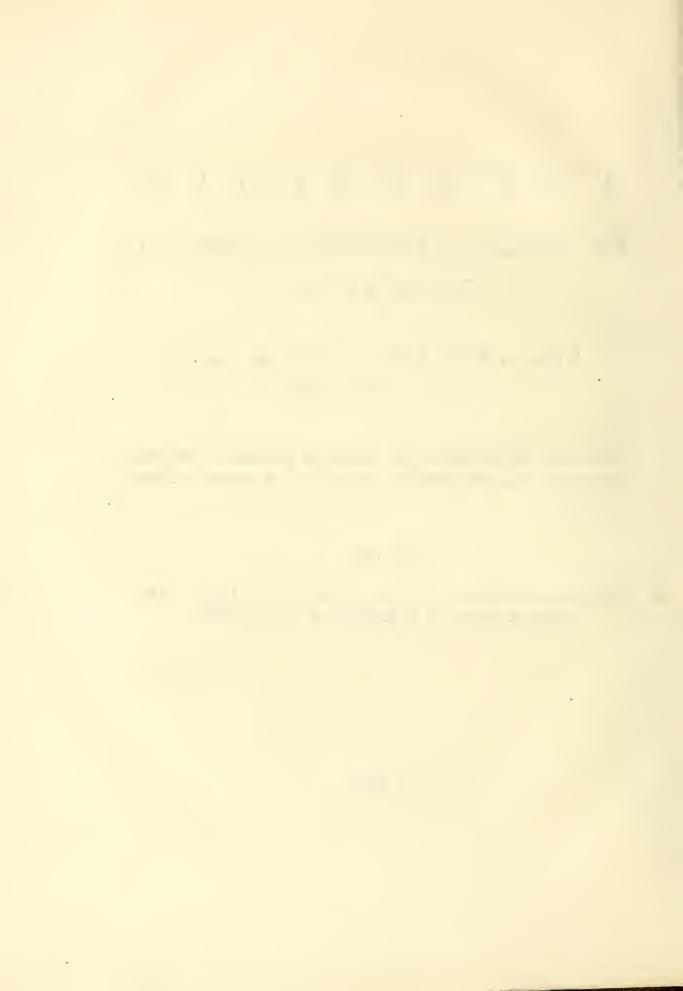

Written by R O G E R A S C H A M. 1544.

And now newlye perused.

Pleasaunt for all Gentlemen and Yomen of Englande. For theyr pastime to reade, and profitable for theyr use to followe both in warre and peace.

Anno 1571.

Imprinted at LONDON, in FLETESTREATE, neare to SAINT DUN-STONES Churche, by THOMAS MARSHE.

In Partitiones Sagittarias Rogeri Aschami, Gual-Terus Haddonus Cantabrigiensis * Regius.

Ars erit ex isto summa profecta libro.

Quicquid habent arcus rigidi, nervique rotundi,
Sumere si libet, hoc sumere sonte licet.

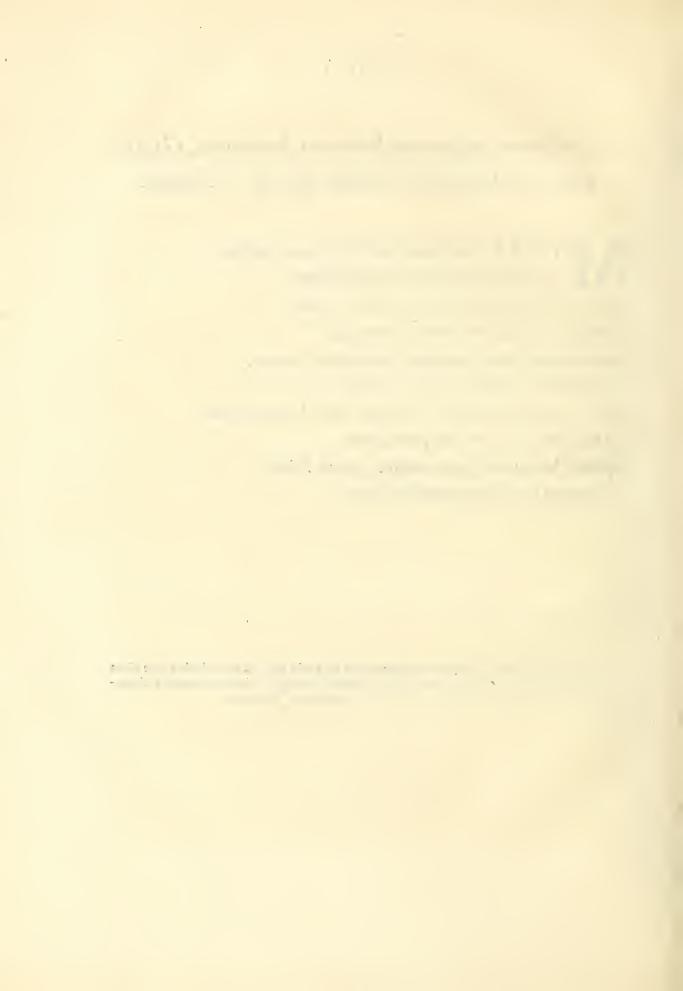

Aschamus est author, magnum quem secit Apollo,
Arte sua, magnum Pallas & arte sua.

Docta manus dedit hunc, dedit hunc mens docta libellum
Quæ videt ars, usus visa parata facit.

Optimus hæc author quia tradidit optima scripta.

Convenit hæc nobis optima velle sequi.

* Of King's College. Haddon was famous for his Latin stile, of which he has here given no shining specimen; but the first rude essays of authours compared with the works of their maturer years, are useful to shew how much is in the power of diligence.

To all the Gentlemen and Yomen of ENGLANDE.

IAS the wyse man came to Cresus the riche Kinge, on a time, when he was makinge newe shippes, purposinge to have subdued by water the out isles lying betwixte Grece and Asia Minor. "What newes "nowe in Grece?" fayth the Kingeto Bias. "None other newes but thefe," fayth Bias: "that the ifles of Grece have prepared a wonderful com-" pany of horsemen to over-run Lydia withal." "There is nothing under " heaven, fayth the Kinge, that I would fo foone wish, as that they durst " be so bolde, to meete us on the land with horse." " And thinke you," fayth Bias, " that there is any thinge which they would fooner wishe, " then that you should be so fonde, to meete them on the water with " fhippes?" And fo Crefus, hearing not the true newes, but perceyving the wyse mannes minde and counsell, both gave then over makinge of his shippes, and left also behinde him a wonderful example for al common wealthes to followe: that is, evermore to regarde and fet most by that thinge wherunto nature hath made them most apt, and use hath made them most fitte.

By this matter I meane the shooting in the longe bow, for Englishemen: which thinge, with all my hart I do wishe, and if I were of *authority, I would counsell all the gentlemen and yomen of Englande, not to chaunge it with any other thinge, howe good soever it seeme to be, but that stil, according to the olde wont of Englande, youth should use it for the most honest passime in peace, that men might handle it as a most sure weapon in warre. Other † stronge weapons, which both experience doth prove to be good, and the wisedome of the Kinges Majesty and his counsel provides to be had, are not ordayned to take awaye shooting: but that both, not compared together, whether should be better than the other, but so joyned together, that the one should be alwayes an ayde and helpe for the other, might fo strengthen the realme on all fides, that no kinde of enemye, in any kinde of weapon, might passe and go beyonde us.

* Authority is here used not for Power, but for Gredit or Influence.

† Fire-arms began about this time to be made, for the hand ordnance or great guns feem to have been near a century employed in war before hand-guns were much used.

For this purpose I, partlye provoked by the counsell of some gentlemen, partlye moved by the love which I have alwayes borne toward shootinge, have written this litle treatife; wherein, if I have not fatisfyed any man, I trust he will the rather be content with my doinge, because I am (I suppose) the first, which hath said any thinge in this matter, (and fewe beginninges be perfect, fayth wyfe men:) and also because, if I have saide amisse, I am content that any man amende it, or, if I have faid to litle, any man that will to adde what him pleafeth to it.

My minde is, in profiting and pleafing every man, to hurt or difplease no man, intending none other purpose, but that youth might be stirred to labour, honest pastime, and vertue, and as much as laye in me, plucked from ydlenes, unthrifty games, and vice: which thinge I have laboured onlye in this booke, shewinge howe fit shootinge is for all kindes of men; howe honest a pastime for the minde; howe holsome an exercise for the bodye; not vile for great men to use, not costly for poore men to sustayne, not lurking in holes and corners for ill men at their pleasure to misuse it, but abydinge in the open fighte and face of the worlde, for good men if it fault by theyr wyfedome to correct it.

And here I would defire al gentlemen and yomen to use this passime in fuch a meane, that the outragiousness of great gaminge should not hurt the honestye of shootinge, which, of his owne nature, is alwayes joyned with honestye: yet for mennes faultes oftentimes blamed unworthelye, as all good thinges have bene, and evermore shal be.

If any man would blame me, eyther for takinge fuch a matter in hande, or els for wrytinge it in the Englishe tongue, this aunswere I may make him, that when the best of the realme thincke it honest for them to use, I, one of the meanest sorte, ought not to suppose it vile for me to wryte: and thoughe to have written it in another tongue, had bene.

bene both more profitable for my study, and also more * honest for my name, yet I can thinke my laboure well bestowed, if with a little hindrance of my profite and name, may come any furtherance to the pleasure or commodity of the gentlemen and yomen of Englande, for whose sake I toke this matter in hand. And as for the Latine or Greeke tongue, everye thinge is so excellentlye done in them, that none can do better: In the Englishe tongue, contrary, everye thinge in a maner fo meanlye both for the matter and handelinge, that no man can do worfe. For therein the least learned, for the most part, have bene alwayes most readye to write. And they which had least hope in Latine, have bene most bould in Englishe: when furelye everye man that is most readye to talke, is not most able to write. He that will write well in any tongue, must follow this counsel of Aristotle, to speake as the comon people do, to thinke as wyse men do: as so shoulde everye man understand him, and the judgement of wyse men alowe him. Manye Englishe writers have not done so, but usinge straunge wordes, as Latine, Frenche, and Italian, do make all thinges darke and harde. Ones I communed with a man which reasoned the Englishe tongue to be enriched and encreased thereby, sayinge: "Who will not " prayse that feast where a man shall drincke at a dinner both wyne, ale " and beere?" " Truly (quoth I) they be al good, every one taken by him-" felfe alone, but if you put malvefye and facke, redde wyne and white, " ale and beere, and al in one pot, you shall make a drincke not easye " to be knowen, nor yet holfome for the bodye." Cicero, in folowing Isocrates, Plato and Demosthenes, encreased the Latine tongue after another fort. This way, because divers men that wryte, do not know, they can neyther folow it, because of theyr ignoraunce, nor yet will prayle it for over arrogancye, two faultes, seldome the one out of the others companye. Englishe writers, by diversity of time, have taken dyvers matters in hand. In our fathers time no thinge was read but bookes of fayned chevalrie, wherin a man by readinge shoulde be led to none other ende, but onely to manslaughter and baudrye. If anye man suppose they were good enough to passe the time with all, he is deceived. For furely vaine wordes do worke no fmall thinge in vaine, ignorant, and young mindes, especially if they be geven any thinge thereunto of their owne nature. These bookes (as I have heard fay) were made the most part in abbayes, and monasteries, a very likely and fit fruite of fuch an ydle and blind kind of lyving. In our tyme now,

* Honest is here used for honourable.

when every man is geven to know, much rather than to live wel, very many do write, but after fuch a fashion as very many do shoote. Some shooters take in hande stronger bowes, than they be able to * maintaine. This thinge maketh them some time to over shoote the marke, some time to shoote far wyde, and perchaunce hurt some that looke on. Other that never learned to shoote, nor yet knoweth good shaft nor bow, wil be as bufy as the best, but suche one commonlye + plucketh down a side, and crafty archers which be against him, will be both glad of him, and also ever redye to lay and bet with him: It were better for such one to fit down than fhote. Other there be, which have very good bow and shafts, and good knowledge in shootinge, but they have been brought up in fuch evill favoured shootinge, that they can neither shoote I fayre nor yet nere. If any man will applye these thinges together, shal not se the one far differ from the other. And I also, amonges all other, in wryting this litle treatife, have followed fome yong shooters, which both wil begin to shote, for a litle money, and also wil use to shoote ones or twife about the marke for nought, afore they begin a good. And therefore dyd I take this litle matter in hand, to asfay myfelfe, and hereafter, by the grace of God, if judgement of wyfe men, that loke on, thinke that I can do anye good, I may perchance cast my shaft among other, for better game. Yet in writing this booke, some man wil marveile perchance, why that I beyng an unperfect shooter, should take in hand to write of makyng a perfect archer: the same man, peradventure, wil marveile howe a whetstone, whiche is blunt, can make the edge of a knife sharpe: I would the same man should consider also, that in going about any matter, there be four things to be confidered, doing, faying, thincking, and perfectness: First, there is no man that doth fo well, but he can fay better, || or els fome men, whiche be now starke nought, should be too good: Again, no man can utter with his tongue, fo wel as he is able to imagine with his minde, and yet perfectures itselfe is far above al thinkinge. Then, seying that saying is one step nerer perfectnes than doing, let every man leave marveyling why my worde shal rather expresse, than my dede shall perfourme, perfect shootinge.

* To maintain is to manage.

+ To pluck down afide, I believe, is to shoot on one side into the ground.

Neither shoot gracefully nor exactly.

This passage is somewhat confused. The meaning is, that if from what men say we could infer what they do, we might think many to be good, whom we hear talking well, whom yet we know to be bad, because they live ill.

I trust no man will be offended with this litle booke, excepte it be fome fletchers and bowyers, thinkinge hereby that many that love shootinge shall be taught to refuse such noughtye wares as they would utter. Honest* fletchers and bowyers do not so, and they that be unhonest, ought rather to amende themselves for doing ill, than be angrye with me for faying well. A fletcher hath even as good a quarell to be angrye with an archer that refuseth an ill shaft, as a blade-smith hath to a fletcher that forfaketh to bye of him a noughtye knyfe; for as an archer must be content that a fletcher knowe a good shafte in every pointe for the perfecter making of it; fo an honest fletcher will also be content that a shooter know a good shafte in everye pointe, for the perfecter usinge of it; because the one knoweth like a fletcher howe to make it, the other knoweth like an archer how to use it. And seinge the knowledge is one in them both, yet the ende divers; furely that fletcher is an enemy to archers and artillery, which cannot be content that an archer knowe a shafte, as well for his use in shootinge, as he himfelfe should knowe a shafte, for his advantage in sellinge. And the rather, because shaftes be not made so much to be fold, but chieflye to be used. And seinge that use and ocupyinge is the ende why a shafte is made, the making, as it were, a meane for ocupyinge, furelye the knowledge in every point of a good shafte, is more to be required in a shooter than a fletcher.

Yet, as I fayde before, no honest fletcher will be angrye with me, seing I do not teache howe to make a shafte, which belongeth onlye to a good fletcher, but to knowe and handle a shafte, which belongeth to an archer. And this litle booke, I trust, shall please and profit both parties: for good bowes and shaftes shall be better knowen to the commodity of all shooters, and good shootinge may, perchaunce, be more occupyed to the profit of all bowyers and sletchers. And thus I praye God that all sletchers, getting their lyving truly, and all archers, usinge shootinge honestlye, and all manner of men that savour artillerye, maye live continuallye in healthe and merinesse, obeying theyr Prince as they shoulde, and loving God as they oughte: to whome, for all thinges, be all honour and glorye for ever. Amen.

ROGER ASCHAM.

* Fletcher is an arrow-maker. This vindication of the book against the sletchers is trisling and superstuous.

TOXOPHILUS.

1,4

A

The FIRST BOOKE of the SCHOLE OF SHOOTINGE.

PHILOLOGUS. TOXOPHILUS.

PHILOLO- TOU studye to fore, Toxophilus. Tox. I will not gus. I hurt myselfe over much, I warrant you. Рні. Таке heede you do not, for we physitions saye, that it is neyther good for the eyes in so cleare a sunne, nor yet holesome for the body, so soone Tox. In eatinge and after meate, to looke upon a mans booke. studyinge I will never followe any physicke, for if I did; I am sure I should have small pleasure in the one, and lesse courage in the other. But what news drave you hither, I pray you? Phi. Small news, trulye, but that as I came on walkinge, I fortuned to come with three or four that went to shoote at the prickes: and when I sawe not you amonges them, but at the last espyed you lookinge on your booke here. fo * fadlye, I thought to come and hold you with fome communication, left your booke shoulde run away with you. For methought by your waveringe pace, and earnest lookinge, your booke ledde you, not you it. Tox. Indeede, as it chaunced, my minde went faster then my feete, for I happened here to reade in Phedro Platonis, a place that entreates wonderfullye of the nature of foules, which place, whethir it were for the passinge eloquence of Plato, and the Greeke tongue; or for the highe and godlye description of the matter, kepte my minde so occupyed, that it had no leifure to looke to my feete. For I was readynge how some soules, beinge well feathered, siew alwayes about heaven and heavenly matters, other some havinge their feathers mouted away and droupinge, fancke downe into earthlye thinges. Put. I remember the place very well, and it is wonderfully fayd of Plato, and now I fee it was no marveile thoughe your feete fayled you, feinge your minde flewe fo faste. Tox. I am glad now that you letted me, for my heade akes with lookinge on it, and because you tell me fo, I am very forye that I was not with those good fellowes you spake upon, for it is a very fayre day for a man to shoote in. Pm. And, methincke, you were a great deale better occupyed, and in better company, for it is a very fayre day for a man to go to his booke Tox. All dayes and wethers will ferve for that purpose, and furely this occasion was ill loft. Риг. Yea, but cleare wether maketh cleare mindes, and it is best, as I suppose, to spende the best time upon the best thinges: and me thought you shotte verye well, and at that marke, at whiche everye good scholer shoulde most busilye fliote at. And I suppose it be a great deale more pleasure also to see a foule flye in Plato, than a fhafte flye at the prickes. I graunte you, shootinge is not the worste thinge in the world, yet if we shote, and time shote, we are not like to be great winners at the lengthe. And you know also we scholers have more earnest and weightye matters in hande, nor we be not borne to pastime and playe, as you knowe well enoughe who fayeth. Tox. Yet the fame man, in the fame place, Philologe, by your leave, doth admitte holesome, honest, and manerlye pastimes, to be as necessarye to be mingled with sadde matters of the minde, as eatinge and fleapinge is for the healthe of the bodye, and yet we be borne for neyther of both. And Ariftotle himfelfe ribus, 10. 6. fayth, that althoughe it were a fonde and a childishe thinge to be to earnest in passime and playe, yet doth he assirme, by the authority of the olde poet Epicharmus, that a man may use play for earnest matters fake. And in another place, that, as rest is for laboure, and mede-

* So ferioufly.

Arift. Pol. 8. 3.

M. Cic. in Off.

cines for healthe, fo is pastime, at times, for sadde and weightye stu-Phi. How muche in this matter is to be geven to the authoritye eyther of Aristotle or Tullye I can not tell, seinge sadde men may well enoughe speake merilye for a merye matter: this I am sure, whiche thinge this fayre wheate (God fave it) maketh mee remember, that those husbandmen whiche ryfe earlyest, and come latest home, and are contente to have theyr dinner and other drinkynges broughte into the fielde to them, for feare of loofinge of tyme, have fatter barnes in the harvest, than they which will either sleape at noone tyme of the day, or els make merye with theyr neighbours at the ale. And fo a fcholar that purpofeth to be a good hufbande, and defyreth to reape and enjoye much fruite of learninge, must till and sowe * thereafter. Our best seede tyme, whiche be scholers, as it is very tymely, and when we be yonge: fo it endureth not over long, and therefore it may not be let flippe one houre: our grounde is very harde, and full of weedes, our horse wherewith we be drawen very wilde, as Plato fayth. And In Phædre. infinite other mo lettes, which will make a thriftye scholer take heede howe he fpendeth his time in fport and playe. Tox. That Aristotle and Tullye spake earnestlye, and as they thoughte, the earneste matter whiche they entreate upon, doth plainlye prove. And, as for your hufbandrye, it was more + probablye tolde with apte wordes proper to the thinge, than thoroughlye proved with reasons belonginge to our matter. For, contrarywyse, I heard myselfe a good husbande at his booke once faye, that to omitte studye some tyme of the daye, and some tyme of the yeare, made as much for the encrease of learnynge, as to let the lande lye fome tyme falloe, maketh for the better increase of corne. This we fee, if the lande be plowed every yeare, the corne cometh thinne up: the ear is short, the grain is small, and, when it is brought into the barne and threshed, geveth very evill I faule. So those which never leave poringe on theyr bookes, have oftentimes as thinne invention, as other poore men have, and as small witte and weight in it as in other mens. And thus your husbandrye, me thincke, is more likethe life of a covetous fnudge that ofte very evill proves, then the labour of a good husbande that knoweth well what he doth. And furelye the best wittes to learninge must needes have much recreation and ceasynge from theyr booke, or els they marre themselves; when base and dompishe wittes can never be hurte with continual studye, as ye see in lutinge, that a treble minikin stringe must alwayes be let downe, but at fuch tyme as when a man must needes play, when the base and dulk stringe needeth never to be moved out of his place. The same reason I finde true in two bowes that I have, whereof the one is quicke of caste, | tricke, and trimme both for pleasure and profite: the other is a lugge flowe of caste, followinge the stringe, more sure for to last, then pleafant for to use. Now, Sir, it chaunced this other night, one in my chamber would needes bende them to prove their strengthe, but (I can-

* In order to it. † Faule or Fall, is Produce.

† Probably is speciously.

| Tricke or Tricksy, is neat, nice, elegant.

Ovid.

not tell howe) they were both lefte bente till the next day after dinner: and when I came to them, purpolinge to have gone on shootinge, I founde my good bowe clene * cast on the one syde, and as weake as water, that furelye, if I were a riche man, I had rather have spent a crowne: and as for my lugge, it was not one whit the worfe, but shotte by and by as well and as farre as ever it did. And even fo, I am fure that good wittes, excepte they be let downe lyke a treble flringe, and unbente lyke a good casting bowe, they will never last and be able to continue in studye. And I know where I spake this, Philologe, for I would not fay thus much afore younge men, for they will take foone occasion to studye litle ynoughe. But I saye it therefore, because I knowe, as litle studye getteth litle learning, or none at all, so the most studye getteth not the most learninge of all. For a mans witte fore occupyed in earnest studye must be as well recreated with some honest passime, as the bodye fore laboured muste be refreshed with sleape and quietnesse, or else it cannot endure verye longe, as the noble poete fayth:

+ What thinge wants quiet and mery rest, endures but a small while.

And I promise you shootinge, by my judgement, is the most honeste passime of all, and suche one, I am sure, of all other, that hindereth learninge little or nothinge at all, whatsoever you and some other saye, which are a great deale forer against it alwayes than you neede to be. Phi. Hindereth learninge little or nothinge at all! that were a marveile to me trulye, and I am sure, seinge you say so, you have some reason wherewith you can defende shootinge with all, and as for will, (for the love that you beare towarde shootinge) I thincke there shall lacke none in you. Therefore, seinge we have so good leysure both, and no bodye by to trouble us: and you so willinge and able to defende it, and I so readye and glade to heare what may be said of it, I suppose we cannot passe the time better over, neyther you for the ‡ honestye of your shootinge, nor I for mine own minde sake, than to see what can be sayed with it, or against it, and specialye in these days, when so many doth use it, and every man, in a maner, doth commune of it.

Tox. To speake of shootinge, Philologe, trulye I would I were so able, eyther as I myselfe am willinge, or yet as the matter deserveth; but seinge with wishinge we cannot have one nowe worthy, which so worthye a thinge can worthelye prayse, and although I had rather have any other

* Cast is warped. The word is still used by artificers.

+ If this line was fo translated when this treatise was first written in 1544, it is the oldest English hexameter that I remember.

‡ Honesty is Honour.

other to do it than myselfe, yet myselfe rather then no other, I will not fayle to fay in it what I can. Wherein if I fay litle, laye that of my litle habilitye, not of the matter itselfe, which deserveth no litle thinge PIII. If it deserve no litle thinge to be sayde of to be fayde of it. it, Toxophile, I marveile how it chaunceth than, that no man hitherto hath written anye thinge of it: wherein you muste graunt me, that eyther the matter is nought, unworthye, and barren to be written upon, or els fome men are to blame, which both love it and use it, and yet coulde never finde in theyr harte, to faye one good woorde of it, feinge that verye triffinge matters hath not lacked great learned men to fet them oute, as * gnattes and nuttes, and many other more like thinges, wherefore eyther you may honeftlye laye very great faulte upon men, because they never yet prayled it, or els I may iustlye take away no litle thinge from shootinge, because it never yet deserved it. lye, herein, Philologe, you take not fo much from it, as you geve to it. For great and commodious thynges are never greatlye prayled, not because they be not worthye, but because theyr excellencye needeth no man his prayle, havinge all theyr commendation of themselfe, not borrowed of other men his lippes, which rather prayse themselfe, in fpeakinge muche of a litle thinge, then that matter which they entreat upon. Great and good thinges be not prayled: "For who ever prayled "Hercules?" (fayth the Greeke proverbe.) And that no man hitherto hath written anye booke of shootinge, the faulte is not to be layed in the thinge which was worthye to be written upon, but of men which were negligente in doinge it, and this was the cause thereof as I suppose. Menne that used shootinge most and knewe it best, were not learned: men that were learned, used litle shootinge, and were ignoraunt in the nature of the thinge, and so fewe men have bene that hitherto were able to write upon it. Yet how long shootinge hath continued, what common wealthes hath most used it, how honest a thinge it is for all men, what kinde of lyvinge foever they followe, what pleafure and profite commeth of it, both in peace and warre, all maner of tongues and writers, Hebrewe, Greeke, and Latine, hath fo plentifullye spoken of it, as of few other thinges like. So what shootinge is, howe many kindes there is of it, what goodnesse is joyned with it, is tolde: onlye how it is to be learned and broughte to a perfectnesse amonges men, is not tolde. Phi. Then, Toxophile, if it be so as you do saye, let us go forwarde, and examine howe plentifully this is done that you

* The Gnat of Virgil, and the Nut of Ovid.

speake; and, first, of the invention of it, then what honestye and profite is in the use of it, both for warre and peace, more than in other pastimes; last of all howe it oughte to be learned amonges men, for the encrease of it. Which thinge if you do, not onlye I nowe, for your communication, but many other mo, when they shall knowe of it, for your labour, and shootinge itselfe also (if it could speake) for your kindnesse, will con you very muche thancke. Tox. What goode thinges men speake of shootinge, and what good thinges shootinge bringes to men, as my witte and knowledge will ferve me, gladly shall I saye my minde. But howe the thinge is to be learned, I will furely leave to fome other, which, both for greater experience in it, and also for their learnynge, can fet it out better than I. Piii. Well, as for that, I knowe both what you can do in shootinge, by experience, and that you can also speake well ynough of shootinge, for your learnynge: but go on with the first part. And I do not doubt, but what my desire, what your love towardes it, the honestye of shootinge, the profit that may come thereby to many others, shall get the fecond part out of you Tox. Of the first finders out of shootinge, divers C. Claudi- men diverslye do wryte. Claudiane the poete sayth, that nature geve anus in Hif- example of shootinge first, by the * Porpentine, which shoote his prickes, and will hitte anye thinge that fightes with it: wherebye men learned afterwarde did imitate the same, in findinge out both bowe and shaftes. Plin. 7. 56. Plinie referreth it to Schythes the fonne of Jupiter. Better, and more noble wryters, brynge shooting from a more noble inventour: as Plato, Calimachus, and Galen, from Apollo. Yet longe afore those days Genesis. 21. we do read in the Bible of shootinge expresslye; and also, if we shall Ni. de Lyra: believe Nicholas de Lyra, Lamech killed Cain with a shafte. So this great continuance of shootinge dothe not a litle prayse shootynge: nor

Galenus in exhor. ad

in Sympo.

in hymn.

that neyther dothe not a litle fet it out, that it is referred to the invention of Apollo, for the which pointe shootinge is highlye prayled of Galen; where he fayth, that meane craftes be first founde out by men or bonas artes, beaftes, as weavinge by a spider, and such other: but high and commendable sciences by Goddes, as shootinge and musicke by Apollo. And thus shootinge, for the necessitye of it, used in Adams days, for the noblenesse of it referred to Apollo, hath not bene only commended in all tongues and wryters, but also had in great price, both in the best common wealthes, in warre time, for the defence of their countrye, and of all degrees of men in peace time, both for the honestye that is joyned with it, and the profite that followeth of it. Pur. Well, as concerninge the findinge out of it, litle prayfe is gotten to shootinge therebye, feynge good wittes maye most easilye of all finde out a triflinge matter. But whereas you faye, that most common wealthes have used it in warre tyme, and all degrees of men may verye honestlye use it in peace tyme: I thincke you can neyther shew by authoritye, not yet prove by reason. Tox. The use of it in warre tyme, I will declare hereafter. And first, howe all kindes and fortes of men (what degree foever they be) hath at all tymes afore, and nowe may honeftlye use it, the example of most noble men very well doth prove.

Porcupine.

Cyaxares, the Kinge of the Medees, and great grand father to Cyrus, Herod. in kept a fort of Sythians with him onlye for this purpose, to teache his Clio. sonne Astrages to shoote. Cyrus, beinge a childe, was broughte uppe in Xen. in Insti. shootinge; which thinge Zenophon would never have made mention on, Cyri. 1. excepte it had bene fitte for all Princes to have used: seinge that Zenophon wrote Cyrus lyfe, (as Tullye fayth) not to flew what Cyrus did, Ad Quint. but what all maner of Princes, both in pastymes and earnest matters, Fra. I. I. ought to do.

Darius, the first of that name, and kinge of Persia, shewed plainlye howe fitte it is for a Kinge to love and use shootinge, which commaunded this fentence to be graven in his tombe, for a princelye memorye and prayfe.

> Darius the Kinge lyeth buried here, That in shootinge and rydinge had never pere.

Strabo. 15.

Agayne, Domitian the Emperour was fo cunninge in shootinge, that Suct. he coulde shote betwixt a mans fingers standing afarre off, and never hurte him. Commodus also was so excellente, and had so sure a hand in it, that there was nothinge within his reach and shote, but he would Herodia. I. hit in what place he would; as beafts runninge, eyther in the head, or in the harte, and never misse; as Herodiane sayeth he sawe himselse, or els he could never have believed it. Pні. Indeede you prayfe shootinge very well, in that you shew that Domitian and Commodus love shootinge, such an ungratious couple, I am sure, as a man shall not finde agayne, if he raked all hell for them. Tox. Well, even as I will not commend theyr ilnesse, so oughte not you to disprayse theyr goodnesse; and indeede, the judgmente of Herodian uppon Commodus is true of them bothe, and that was this: that befyde strengthe of bodye and good flootinge, they had no princelye thinge in them; whiche fayinge, methincke, commendes fhootinge wonderfullye, calling it a princelye thinge. Forthermore, howe commendable shootinge is for Princes: Themist in Themistius, the noble philosopher, shewethe in a certaine oration made to Theodofius the Emperour, wherein he dothe commende him for three thinges, that he used of a childe: For shootinge, for ryding of an horse well, and for feates of armes.

K 2

will

Herod, in Clio.

Orat. 6.

tag. 20.

Moreover, not onely Kinges and Emperours have been broughte up in shootinge, but also the best common wealthes that ever were, have made goodlye acts and lawes for it, as the Persians, whiche under Cyrus conquered, in a maner, all the world, had a lawe that their children shoulde learne three thinges onlye from five yeares oulde unto twenty, to ryde an horse well, to shoote well, to speake truthe alwayes and never Leo de stra- lye. The Romaynes (as Leo the Emperour in his book of sleightes of warre telleth) had a lawe that everye man shoulde use shootinge in peace tyme, while he was forty yeare oulde, and that everye house shoulde have a bowe, and forty shaftes, ready for all needes; the omittinge of which lawe (fayth Leo) amonge the youthe, hathe bene the onlye occasion why the Romaynes lost a great deale of theyr empyre. But more of this I will speake when I come to the profite of shootinge in warre. If I shoulde rehearse the statutes made of noble Princes of Englande in parliamentes, for the fettinge forwarde of shootinge, throughe this realme, and specially that acte made for shootinge the thirde yeare of the raigne of our most dreade Soveraigne Lord Kinge Henrye the VIII. I coulde be verye longe. But these fewe examples, speciallye of so greate men and noble common wealthes, shall stande in steede of manye. fuche Princes, and fuche common wealthes have muche regarded shootinge, you have well declared. But whye shootinge oughte so of itselfe to be regarded, you have scarcelye yet proved.

> Tox. Examples, I graunt, out of historyes do shewe a thinge to be fo, not prove a thinge why it should be fo. Yet this I suppose, that neyther great mens qualityes, beinge commendable, be withoute great auctoritye, for other men honestlye to followe them; nor yet those great

great learned men that wrote fuch thinges, lacke good reason inftlye at all tymes for anye other to approve them. Princes, beinge children, oughte to be brought uppe in shootinge, bothe because it is an exercise most holsome, and also a pastime moste honest: wherein laboure prepareth the bodye to hardnesse, the minde to couragiousnesse, sufferinge neyther the one to be marde with tendernesse, nor yet the other to be hurte with ydlenesse, as we reade howe Sardanapalus and such other were, because they were not brought up with outwarde honest painfull pastimes to be men, but cockerde up with inwarde noughtye ydle wantonnesse to be women. For howe fitte laboure is for all youthe, Jupiter or els Minos amonges them of Greece, and Lycurgus amonge the Lacedemonians, do shewe by theyr lawes, whiche never ordeyned anye Cic. 2. Tuf. thinge for the bringinge up of youth, that was not joyned with labour; Qu. and that labour whiche is in shootinge of all other is best, both because it encreaseth strengthe, and preserveth healthe most, beinge not vehement, but moderate, not overlayinge anye one parte with wearinesse, but foftlye exercifinge everye parte with equalnefle, as the arms and breaftes with drawinge, the other parts with goinge, beinge not fo painfull for the labour, as pleasaunt for the pastime, which exercise, by the Galen, 2. iudgment of the beste physitions, is most alowable. By shootinge also de Santuend. is the minde honeftlye exercised, where a man alwayes desireth to be best, (which is a word of honestye) and that by the same way, that vertue itselfe dothe, coveting to come nighest a most persitte ende, or mean standinge betwixte two extremes, eschewinge shorte, or gone, or eyther fyde wyde, for the which causes Aristotle himselfe sayth, that Aristot. deshootinge and vertue be very lyke. Moreover, that shootinge of all morib. other is the most honest pastyme, and that leaste occasion to naughtinesse is ioyned with it, two thinges verye plainly do prove, whiche be, as a man would faye, the tutors and overfeers to shootinge: daye light, and open place where everye man dothe come, the mainteiners and kepers of shootinge, from all unhoneste doinge. If shootinge fault at anye time, it hydes it not, it lurkes not in corners and huddermother: but openlye accuseth and bewrayeth itselfe, which is the next way to amendment, as wyse men do saye. And these thinges, I suppose, be signes, not of naughtinesse, for anye man to disalowe it, but rather verye plaine tokens of honestye, for every man to prayle it. The use of shootinge also in great mennes children shall greatly encrease the love and use of shootinge in all the residue of youth. For meane mennes mindes mindes love to be like great men, as Plato and Isocrates do saye. And that everye bodye should learne to shoote, when they be younge, defence of the common wealthe doth require when they be olde, whiche thinge cannot be done mightelye when they be men, excepte they learne it perfetlye when they be boyes. And therefore shootinge of all pastymes is most fitte to be used in childhoode: because it is an imitation of most earneste thinges to be done in manhode. Wherefore, shootinge is fitte for great mennes children, both because it strengtheneth the bodye with holfome laboure, and pleafeth the minde with honest pastyme, and also encourageth all other youthe earnestlye to followe the same. And these reasons (as I suppose) stirred uppe both great men to bringe uppe their children in flootinge, and also noble common wealthes so straitly to commaunde shootinge. Therefore seinge Princes, moved by honest occasions, have in all common wealthes used shootinge, I suppose there is no other degree of men, neyther lowe nor hye, learned nor leude, younge nor olde. * Pin. You shall neede wade no further in this matter, Toxophile, but if you can prove me that scholers and men geven to learnynge maye honestlye use shootinge, I will soon graunt you that all other fortes of men may not only lawfullye, but oughte of dutye to use it. But I thincke you cannot prove but that all these examples of shootinge broughte from so long a tyme, used of so noble Princes, confirmed by fo wyfe mennes lawes and judgements, are fet afore temporal men, onelye to followe them; whereby they maye the better and stronglyer defende the common wealth withall; and nothinge belongeth to scholars and learned men, which have another part of the common wealthe, quiete and peaceable put to theyr cure and charge, whose ende, as it is diverse from the other, so there is no one way that leadeth to them bothe. Tox. I graunt, Philologe, that scholers and layemen have divers offices and charges in the common wealthe, which requires divers bringing uppe in theyr youthe, if they shall do them as they oughte to do in theyr age. Yet as temporal men of necessitye are compelled to take fomewhat of learninge to do theyr office the better withall, fo scholars may the boldlyer borrowe somewhat of layemennes pastymes to mainteine theyr healthe in studye withal. And furelye, of all other thynges, thootinge is necessarye for bothe fortes to learne. Which thinge, when it has bene evermore used in Englande, howe much good it hath done, both old men and chronicles do tell: and also our enemies can bear us recorde. For if it be true as I have heard fave, when the Kinge of Englande hath bene in Fraunce, the Priestes at home, because they were archers, have bene able to overthrow all Scotlande. Againe, there is another thynge, which above all other dothe move me, not onlye to love shootinge, to prayle shootinge, to exhorte all other to shootinge, but also to use shootinge myselfe: and that is our late Kinge Henrye the eyghte his most royal purpose and will, whiche in all his flatutes generallye dothe commaund men, and with his owne mouth most gently did exhorte men, and by his great giftes and rewardes greatlye did encourage men, and with his most princelye example verye often did provoke all other men to the fame. But here you will come with temporall man and fcholer. I tell you plainly, fcholer or unscholer, yea if I were twenty scholers, I woulde thincke it were mye dutye, bothe with exhortinge men to shoote, and also with shootinge myselfe, to helpe to set forwarde that thinge which the Kinge his wysedome, and his counsaile, so greatly elaboure to have go forward: which thinge furelye they did, because they knew it to be, in warre, the defence and wall of our countreye; in peace, an exercise most holsome for the bodye, a pastyme most honeste for the minde, and, as I am able to prove myselfe, of all other moste sitte and agreeable with learnynge and learned men. Phi. If you can prove this thynge fo plainlye, as you speak it earnestlye, then will I not onelye thincke as you do, but become a shooter, and do as you do. But yet beware, I say, lest you, for the great love you beare towarde shootinge, blindly judge of shootinge. For love, and all other too earnest affections, be not for noughte painted blinde. Take heede (I fay) lest you prefer shooting afore other pastymes, as one Balbinus, through blinde affection, preferred his lover before all other women, although the was deformed with a Polyppus in her nose. And although shootinge may be meete some tyme for fome scholers, and so forth; yet the fittest alwayes is to be preferred. Therefore, if you will needes graunt scholers pastyme and recreation of theyr mindes, let them use (as manye of them do) Musicke and playinge on instruments, thinckinge most seemlye for all scholers, and most regarded alwayes of Apollo and the Muses. Tox. Even as I cannot denye but some Musicke is fit for learninge, so I trust you cannot choose but graunt, that shootinge is fit also, as Callimachus doth signifye in this Cal. hym. verse:

In Nic.

* Here feems to be some deficience in the copy.

-Both merie songes and good shootinge delighteth Apollo.

But as concerninge whether of them is most fitte for learninge, and scholers to use, you may saye what you will for your pleasure, this I am sure that Plato and Aristotle bothe, in theyr bookes entreatinge of the common wealthe, where they shewe howe youthe should be brought uppe in four thinges, in readinge, in writinge, in exercise of bodye, and singinge, do make mention of Musicke and all kyndes of it, wherein they bothe agree, that Musicke used amonges the Lydians is very ill for young men, which be studentes for vertue and learnynge, for a certaine nyce, softe, and smoothe swetenesse of it, whiche would rather entice them to noughtines, then stirre them to honestye.

An other kinde of Musicke, invented by the Dorians, they bothe wonderfully prayse, alowinge it to be very sitte for the studye of vertue and learninge, because of a manlye, roughe and stoute sounde in it, whiche should encourage younge stomakes to attempte manlye matters. Nowe whether these balades and roundes, these galiardes, pavanes and daunces, so nycelye singered, so sweetlye tuned, be lyker the Musicke of the Lydians, or the Dorians, you that be learned iudge. And whatsoever ye iudge, this I am sure, that lutes, harpes, all maner of pypes, barbitons, sambukes, with other instrumentes every one, whiche standeth by sine and quicke singeringe, be condemned of Aristotle, as not to be broughte in and used among them, which studye for learnynge and vertue.

Arift. Pol.

Pallas, when she had invented a pipe, caste it awaye, not so muche, sayth Aristotle, because it deformed her face, but muche rather because such an instrument belonged nothinge to learninge. Howe suche instrumentes agree with learninge, the goodlye agreement betwixt Apollo God of learninge, and Marsias the Satyr, defender of pypinge, dothe well declare, where Marsias had his skinne quite pulled over his heade for his laboure.

Muche Musicke marreth mennes maners, fayth Galen, althoughe fome men will faye that it dothe not so, but rather recreateth and maketh quicke a mannes minde, yet, methincke, by reason it doth as honye dothe to mannes stomacke, whiche at first receiveth it well, but afterward afterward it maketh it unfit to abyde any good stronge nourishinge meate, or els any holsome sharpe and quicke drincke. And even so in a maner these instrumentes make a mans wittes so softe and smothe, so tender and quaisye, that they be lesse able to broke stronge and toughe studye. Wittes be not sharpened, but rather dulled and made blunt, with suche sweete softnesse, even as good edges be blonter, whiche men whette uppon soft chalke stones.

And these thinges to be true, not onlye Plato, Aristotle, and Galen, Herod. in prove by authoritye of reason, but also Herodotus and other writers, shewe Clio. by plaine and evident example; as that of Cyrus, which, after he had overcome the Lydians, and taken their king Crefus prisoner, yet after, by the meanes of one Pactyas, a very heady man amonges the Lydians, they rebelled against Cyrus againe; then Cyrus had by and by brought them to utter destruction, if Cresus, beinge in good favour with Cyrus, had not heartelye defyred him not to revenge Pactyas faulte, in sheddinge their bloode. But if he would followe his counfaile, he might bringe to passe, that theye shoulde never more rebel against him. And that was this, to make them weare long kyrtils to the foote, like women, and that everye one of them shoulde have a harpe or a lute, and learne to playe and finge. Which thinge if you do, fayth Crefus, (as he did indeed) you shall see them quickly of men made women. And thus lutinge and finginge take awaye a manlye stomacke, whiche shoulde enter and pearce deepe and harde studye.

Even such another storye dothe Nymphodorus, an olde Greeke histo-Nymphod. riographer, write of one Sesostris King of Egypt, which storye, because it is somewhat longe, and very like in all pointes to the other, and also you do well enoughe to remember it, seinge you redde it so late in Sophocles Commentaries, I will now passe over. Therefore eyther Aristotle Comment. and Plato knowe not what was good and evill for learninge and vertue, and the example of wyse historyes be vainly set afore us, or els the minstressy of lutes, pypes, harpes, and all other that standeth by such nyce, sine minikin singeringe, (suche as the moste parte of scholers whom I knowe use, if they use anye) is farre more sitte for the womannishnes of it to dwel in the Courte among ladyes, than for any great thinge in it, which shoulde helpe good and sadde studye, to abide in the University amonge scholers. But perhaps you know some great goodnesse of suche fuche Musicke and suche instrumentes, whereunto Plato and Aristotle his brayne coulde never attayne, and therefore I will saye no more against it.

Phi. Well, Toxophile, is it not enough for you to rayle uppon Musicke, excepte you mocke me to? but to say the truthe, I never thoughte myselfe these kyndes of Musicke sitte for learninge, but that whiche I sayde was rather to prove you, than to defend the matter. But yet as I would have this forte of Musicke decaye among scholers, even so do I wishe from the bottom of my hart, that the laudable custome of Englande to teache children their plaine songe and pricke songe, were not so decayed throughoute all the realme as it is. Whiche thinge how profitable it was for all sortes of men, those knews not so well than which had it moste, as they do nowe which lacke it most. And therefore it is true that Teucer sayth in Sophocles:

Sophocles in Aicc.

* Seldome at all good thinges be knowen how good to be Before a man such thinges do misse out of his handes.

That milke is no fitter nor more naturall for the bringinge up of children than Musicke is, both Galen proveth by auctoritye, and daily use teacheth by experience. For even the little babes lackinge the use of reason, are scarce so well stilled in sucking their mothers pappe, as in hearinge their mother singe: Again, how sit youth is made, by learninge to singe, for Grammar and other sciences, both we dailye do see, and Plutarch learnedly doth prove, and Plato wyselye did allow, which received no scholer into his schole, that had not learned his song before. The godlye use of praysinge God, by singinge in the churche, needeth not my prayse, seinge it is so praysed throughe all the Scripture, therefore now I will speak nothing of it, rather than I shoulde speake to little of it.

Befyde all these commodities, truelye two degrees of men, which have the highest offices under the Kinge in all this realme, shall greatly lacke the use of singinge, Preachers and Lawyers, because they shall not, without this, be able to rule their breastes for everye purpose. For where is no distinction in tellinge glade thinges and fearful thinges, gentlenes and cruelnes, softness and vehementnes, and fuch like matters, there can be no great perswasion. For the hearers, as Tullie sayth, be much affectioned, as he is that speaketh. At his words be they drawen; if he stand still in one fashion, their mindes stande still with him: if he thunder, they quake: if he chide, they fere: if he complaine, they sorye with him: and sinally, where a matter is spoken with an apte voice for everye affection, the hearers, for the most part, are moved as the speaker woulde. But when a man is alwaye in one tune, like an humble bee, or els now in the top of the churche, now downe that no man knoweth where to have him: or piping like a reede, or roringe like a bull, as some lawyers do, which thincke they do best, when they crye lowdest, these shall never greatly move, as I have knowen manye well learned have done, because theyr voyce was not stayed afore, with learninge to singe. For all voyces, great and small, base and shrill, weake or soft, may be holpen and brought to a good point by learning to singe.

* These lines are written in imitation of the Senarius.

Whether this be true or not, they that stand most in nede can tell beste, whereof some I have knowen, which, because they learned not to singe, when they were boyes, were fayne to take paine in it, when they were men. If anye man should heare me, Toxophile, that would thincke I did but fondly to suppose that a voyce were so necessary to be loked upon, I would aske him if he thoughte nature a foole, for makinge such goodly instrumentes in a man, for well uttering his wordes, or els if the two noble orators Demostbenes and Cicero, were not sooles, whereof the one did not only learne to singe of a man, but also was not ashamed to learne how he should utter his soundes aptly of a dogge; the other setteth oute no point of Rhetoricke so fully in all his bookes, as howe a man should order his voyce for all kinde of matters.

Therefore feinge men, by speakinge, differ and be better than beastes, by speakinge well better than other men, and that singinge is an helpe towarde the same, as daylye experience doth teache, example of wyse men doth alowe, authority of learned men doth approve, wherewith the foundation of youth in all good common wealthes alwayes hath bene tempered: surely if I were one of the parliament-house, I woulde not sayle to put up a bill for the amendmente of this thinge; but because I am like to be none this yeare, I will speake no more of it at this time.

Tox. It were pitye truly, Philologe, that the thinge shoulde be neglected, but I trust it is not as you say.

Phi. The thinge

is to true, for of them that come dailye to the Universitye, where one hath learned to singe, six hath not.

But now to our shootinge, Toxophile, againe, wherein I suppose you cannot fay fo much for shootinge to be fitte for learninge, as you have spoken against Musicke for the same. Therefore as concerninge Musicke, I can be contente to graunt you your minde: but as for shootinge, furelye I suppose that you cannot perswade me, by no meanes, that a man can be earnest in it, and earnest at his booke to: but rather I thincke that a man with a bowe on his backe, and shaftes under his girdle, is more fitte to wayte upon Robin Hoode, than upon Apollo or the Muses. Tox. Over earnest shootinge furelye I will not over earnestlye defende, for I ever thought shootinge shoulde be a wayter upon learnynge, not a mistress over learninge. Yet this I marveile not a little at, that ye thincke a man with a bowe on his backe is more like Robin Hoodes fervaunte, than Apollos, feinge that Apollo himfelfe, in Alcestis of Euripides, which tragedye you redde openlye not longe ago, in a manner glorifyeth, fayinge this verse.

Eurip. in Alcest:

It is my wont alwayes my bowe with me to beare.

Therefore a learned man ought not to much to be ashamed to beare that fometime which Apollo God of learninge himselfe was not ashamed always to bear. And because ye woulde have a man wayte upon the Muses, and not at all meddle with shootinge; I marveile that you do not remember how that the nine Muses their selfe as soone as they were borne, were put to norse to a lady called Euphemis, which had a sonne named Erotus, with whom the nine Muses, for his excellent shootinge, kepte evermore companye withall, and used dailye to shoote together in the mounte Parnassus: and at last it chaunced this Erotus to dye, whose death the Muses lamented greatlye, and fell all upon theyr knees fore Jupiter theyr father, and, at theyr request, Erotus, for shootinge with the Muses on earth, was a made a signe, and called Sagittarius in heaven. Therefore you fee that if Apollo and the Muses eyther were examples indeede, or onlye fayned of wyfe men to be examples of learninge, honest shootinge may well enoughe be companion with PHI. Well, Toxophile, if you have no stronger dehonest studye. fence of shootinge than poetes, I feare if your companions which love shootinge flootinge heard you, they would thincke you made it but a triflinge and fablinge matter, rather than any other man that loveth not shootinge coulde be perfwaded by this reason to love it. Tox. Even as I am not so fonde but I knowe that these be sables, so I am sure you be not so ignorante, but you know what such noble wittes as the poetes had ment by fuch matters, which oftentimes, under the covering of a fable, do hyde and wrappe in goodlye preceptes of philosophie, with the true judgement of thinges. Whiche to be true specially in Homer and Euripides, Plato, Aristotle, and Galene, plainlye do shewe: when throughe all theyr workes (in a manner) they determine all controverfies by these two poetes, and such like authorityes. Therefore if in this matter I feenie to fable, and nothing prove, I am content you judge fo on me, seinge the same judgement shall condemne with me Plato, Aristotle, and Galene, whom in that errour I am well content to followe. If these old examples prove nothinge for shootinge, what saye you to these? that the best learned and fagest men in this realme which be now alive, both love shootinge and use shootinge, as the best learned bishops that be: amonges whom, Philologe, yourselfe knowe four or five, which as in all good learninge, vertue and fagenesse, they geve other men example what thinge they should do, even so by their shootinge they plainlye shewe what honest pastime other men geven to learninge may honeftlye use. That earnest studye must be recreated with some pastime, sufficientlye I have proved afore, both by reason and authoritye of the best learned men that ever wrote. Then seinge pastimes be lawfull, the most fittest for learninge is to be fought for. A pastime, sayth Aristotle, must be like a medicine. Medicines stande by contraryes; therefore, the nature of studyinge considered, the fittest pastime shall foon appeare. In studye every part of the bodye is idle, which thinge causeth groffe and cold humours to gather together and vexe scholers very much, the minde is altogether bent and sette on work: a pastime then must be had where everye part of the bodye must be laboured to separate and lessen such humours withall, the minde must be unbent, to gather and fetch againe his quickness withall. Thus pastimes for the minde onlye, be nothinge fitte for studentes, because the bodye, which is most hurt by studye, shoulde take no profite at all thereat. This knewe Erasmus very well, when he was here in Cambrige: which when he had been fore at his booke (as Garret our booke-bynder has verye oft told me) for lacke of better exercise, would take his horse, horse, and ryde about the market hill, and come againe. If a scholer should use bowles or tennyes, the labour is so vehement and unequal, which is condemned of Galene; the example very ill for other men, when by fo manye actes they be made unlawfull. Runninge, leapinge, and coytinge be to vile for scholers, and not fitte by Aristotles judgement: walkinge alone in the field hath no token of courage in it, a pastime like a fingle man that is neither fleshe nor fishe. Therefore if a man would have a pastime holsome and equal for every part of his bodye, pleafant and full of courage for the minde, not vile and unhonest to geve ill example to laye men, not kept in gardines and corners, not lurkinge on the night and in holes, but evermore in the face of men, eyther to rebuke it when it doth ill, or els to testifye on it when it doth well; let him seeke chieflye of all other for shootinge. Phi. Such common pastimes as men commonly do use, I will not greatly allowe to be fitte for scholers, seinge they may use such exercises very well Gal. de San- (I suppose) as Galen himselfe doth allow. Tox. These exercises, I remember very well, for I redde them within these two dayes, of the which fome be these: to runne up and downe an hill, to clyme up a tuend. 2.

longe powle, or a rope, and there hange a while, to holde a man by his armes and wave with his heeles, muche like the pastime that boyes use in the churche, when theyr master is awaye, to swinge and totter in a belrope: to make a fifte, and stretche out both his armes, and so stand like a roode. To go on a mans tiptoes, stretchinge out the one of his armes forward, the other backeward, whiche, if he blered out his tongue also, might be thoughte to dance anticke verye properlye. To tumble over and over, to toppe over tayle: to fet backe to backe, and fee who can heave an others heeles highest, wyth other much like: which exercises furely muste needes be naturall, because they be so childishe, and they maye be also holsome for the bodye, but surelye as for pleasure to the minde, or honestye in the doinge of them, they be as like shootinge as Yorke is foule Sutton. Therefore to loke on all pastimes and exercises holesome for the bodye, pleasaunt for the minde, comive for every man to do, honest for all other to loke on, profitable to be fet by of every man, worthy to be rebuked of no man, fitte for all ages, persons and places, onlye shootinge shall appeare, wherein all these commodities may be founde. PHI. To graunt, Toxophile, that studentes may at times convenient use shootinge as most holesome and honest pastime: yet to do as some do, to shoote hourelye, dailye, weekely, and in a manner the whole yeare, neyther I can prayfe, nor any wyfe man will allowe, nor you yourselfe can honestly defend. Tox. Surelye, Philologe, I am very glad to fee you come to that point that most lyeth in your stomache, and greveth you and others so muche. But I trust, after I have fayde my minde in this matter, you shall confesse your selfe, that you do rebuke this thinge more than ye neede, rather than you shall finde that any man maye spende by anye possibilitye, more time in shootinge then he oughte. For first and formost, the hole time is divided into two partes, the daye and the nighte: whereof the nighte maye be bothe occupyed in manye honest businesses, and also spente in much unthriftinesse, but in no wyse it can be applyed to shootinge. And here you see that halfe our time, graunted to all other thinges in a manner both good and ill, is at one swappe quite taken awaye from shootinge. Now let us go forwarde, and see howe much of halfe this time of ours is spent in shootinge. The whole yeare is divided into four partes, springe-time, sommer, faule of the leafe, and winter. Whereof the winter, for the roughnesse of it, is cleane taken away from shootinge: except it be one daye amonges twenty, or one yeare amonges forty. In fommer, for the fervent heate, a man may faye likewise; excepte it be some time against night. Nowe then springe time and faule of the leafe, be those which we abuse in fliootinge.

But if we consider howe mutable and changeable the weather is in those seasons, and howe that Aristotle himselfe sayth, that most part of rayne fauleth in these two times; we shall well perceive, that where a man would shoote one daye, he shall be sayne to leave of sour. Nowe when time itselfe graunteth us but a little space to shoote in, let us see if shootinge be not hindered amonges all kindes of men as muche other wayes.

First, younge children use not; younge men, for fear of them whom they be under, too muche dare not; sage men, for other greater busines, will not; aged men, for lacke of strengthe, cannot; riche men, for covetousnesse sake, care not; poore men, for cost and charge, may not; maisters, for theyr houshold kepinge, heede not; servauntes, kept in by theyr maisters, verye oft shall not; crastesmen, for gettinge of theyr lyvinge, very muche leysure have not; and many there be that oft beginnes, but, for inaptnesse, proves not; and most of all, which when they be shooters geve it over and list not: So that generally men everye where, for one or other consideration, much shootinge use not. Therefore these two thinges, straytnesse of time, and everye mans trade of lyvinge, are the causes that so fewe men shotes, as you may see in this greate towne, where as there be a thousand good mennes bodyes, yet scarce ten that useth anye greate shootinge. And those whom you see shoote the most, with how manye thinges are they drawen, or rather driven, from shootinge. For first, as it is manye a yeare or they begin to be great shooters, even so the great heate of shootinge is gone within a yeare or two: as you knowe diverse, Philologe, yourselse, which were some time the best shooters, and now they be the best students.

If a man faule ficke, farewell shootinge, maye fortune as longe as he lyveth. If he have a wrentche, or have taken colde in his arme, he maye hange uppe his bowe (I warrant you) for a feason. A litle blayne, a small cutte, yea a silve poore worme in his singer, maye keepe him from shootinge well enoughe. Breakinge and ill lucke in bowes I will passe over, with an hundred mo fere thinges, which chaunceth every day to them that shoote most, whereof the least of them maye compell a man to leave shootinge. And these thinges be so true and evident, that it is impossible eyther for me crastilye to fayne them, or els for you justlye to denye them. Then seeinge how manye hundred thinges are required altogether to geve a man leave to shoote, and any one of them denyed, a man cannot shoote; and seeinge every one of them may chaunce, and doth chaunce every daye, I marveile any wyse man will thincke it possible, that any great time can be spent in shootinge at all.

Phi. If this be true that you faye, Toxophile, and in very dede, I can denye nothinge of it, I merveile greatly how it channell, that those which use shootinge be so much marked of men, and oft times blamed for it, and that in a manner as much as those which playe at cardes and dyse. And I shall tell you what I hearde spoken of the same matter. A man, no shooter, (not longe ago) would defend playing at cardes and dyse, if it were honestlye used, to be as honest pastime as your shootinge: for he layed for him, that a man might playe for a litle at cardes and dysc, and also a man might shoote away all that ever he had. He sayde a payre of cardes cost not past two pence, and that they neded not so much reparation as bowe and shaftes, they would never hurte a mans hande, nor never weare his gere. A man should never slea a man with shooting wyde at the cardes. In wete and drye, hote and colde, they woulde never forsake a man, he shewed what great varietye there is in them for every mans capacity: if one game were hard, he might easily learne an other: if a man have a good game, there is great pleasure in it: if he have an ill game, the payne is short, for he may sone geve it over, and hope for a better: with many other mo reasons. But at the last he concluded, that betwixte playinge and shootinge, well used or ill used, there was no difference: but that there was lesse coste and trouble, and a great deale more pleasure in playinge, than in shootinge.

Cardes and Dyse.

Tox. I cannot denye, but shootinge (as all other good thinges) may be abused. And good thinges ungodly used, are not good, fayth an honourable bishoppe in an earnester matter than this is: yet we must be ware that we laye not mennes faultes upon the thinge which is not worthy, for so nothinge should be good. And as for shootinge, it is blamed and marked of men for that thing (as I have fayd before) which should be rather a token of honestye to prayse it, then anye figne of noughtinesse to disalowe it, and that is because it is in everye mans fight; it feeketh no corners, it hydeth it not: if there be never fo litle faulte in it, every man feeth it, it accuseth itselfe. For one houre spente in shootinge is more seene, and further talked of, than twenty nights fpent in dyfinge, even as a little white stone is seene amonges three hundred blacke. Of these that blame shootinge and shooters, I will saye no more at this time but this, that beside that they stoppe and hinder shootinge, which the statutes would have forwarde, they be not much unlike in this pointe to Wyll Sommer the Kinges foole, which fmiteth him that standeth alwayes before his face, be he never so worshipfull a man, and never greatlye lokes for him which lurkes behinde an other mans backe, that hurte him in deede.

But to him that compared gaminge with shootinge somewhat will I aunswere, and because he wente afore me in a comparison: and comparisons, sayth learned men, make plaine matters: I will surelye followe him him in the same. Honeste thinges (sayth Plato) be known from unhonest thinges by this difference, unhonestye hath ever present pleasure in it, havinge neyther good pretence goinge before, nor yet anye profite followinge after: which sayinge descryeth generallye, both the nature of shootinge and gaminge, which is good, and which is evil, verye well.

In Phedro.

Gaminge hath joined with it a vaine presente pleasure, but there followeth losse of name, losse of goods, and winninge of an hundred gowtye, dropsye, diseases, as everye man can tell. Shootinge is a paynfull pastime, whereof followeth health of bodye, quicknesse of witte, habilitye to defende our country, as our ennemyes can bear recorde.

Loth I am to compare these thinges together, and yet I do it not because there is anye comparison at all betwixte them, but thereby a man shall see how good the one is, how evil the other. For I thincke there is scarce so much contrariousness betwixt hotte and cold, vertue and vice, as is betwixte these two thinges: For whatsoever is in the one, the cleane contrarye is in the other, as shall plainly appere, if we consider both theyr beginninges, theyr encreasinges, theyr fruites, and theyr endes, which I will soone ridde over.

Pla. in Tim. The first bringer into the worlde of shootinge, was Apollo, which for his wysdome, and greate commodityes, broughte amonges men by him, was esteemed worthye to be counted as a God in heaven.

Dyfinge furelye is a bastard borne, because it is sayde to have two fathers, and yet both nought: the one was an ungratious God, called Plato in Pho-Theuth, which, for his noughtinesse, came never in other Goddes companyes, and therefore Homer doth despise once to name him in all his works. The other was a Lydian borne, which people for such games, and other unthristinesse, as bowlinge and hauntinge of tavernes, have bene ever had in most vile reputation in all storyes and writers.

The fosterer of shootinge is Labour, that companion of vertue, the maintegner of honestye, the encrease of healthe and wealthinesse, which admitteth nothinge, in a manner, into his companye that standeth not with vertue and honestye; and therefore fayth the olde Poete Epichermus verye pretelye in Zenophon, that God felleth vertue, and all other good Xen. de dict. thinges to men for labour. The nource of dyse and cardes, is weri- & fact. Soc. fome idlenesse, enemye of vertue, the drowner of youthe, that taryeth in it, and, as Chaucer doth fay verye well in the Parfons Tale, the grene path waye to hell, havinge this thinge appropriate unto it, that whereas other vices have some cloke of honestye, onlye idleness can neyther do well, nor yet thincke well. Againe; shootinge hath two tutours to loke upon it, out of whose companye shootinge never stirreth, the one called day-light, the other open place, which two kepe shootinge from evill companye, and fuffer it not to have to much swinge, but ever more kepeth it under awe, that it dare do nothinge in the open face of the world, but that which is good and honest. Lykewise, dysinge and cardinge have two tutours, the one named Solitariousnesse, which lurketh in holes and corners, the other called Night, an ungratious cover of noughtinesse, which two thinges be very inkepers and receyvers of all noughtinesse and noughtye thinges, and thereto they be in a manner ordayned by nature. For, in the night time and in corners, spirites and theeves, rattes and mife, toodes and oules, night crowes and poulcattes, foxes and * fournardes, with all other vermine, and noyfome beaftes, use most styrringe; when in the day-light, and in open places, which be ordayned of God for honest thinges, they dare not ones come, which thinge Euripides noteth very well, fayinge, Ill thinges the night, good thinges the daye doth haunt and use.

6 verye

Iph. in Tau.

Companions of shootinge, be providentness, good heede geving, true meetinge, honest comparison, which thinges agree with vertue verye well. Cardinge and dysinge have a fort of good felowes also, goinge commonlye in theyr companye, as blinde fortune, stumblinge chaunce, spittle lucke, false dealinge, craftye conveyaunce, brainlesse brawlinge, false forswearinge, which good fellowes will sone take a man by the sleve, and cause him take his inne, some with beggary, some with goute and dropsye, some with theste and robbery, and seldome they will leave a man before he come eyther to hanginge, or els some other extreme myserye. To make an ende, how shootinge by all mennes lawes hath bene alowed, cardinge and dysinge by all mennes judgementes condempned, I neede not shew, the matter is so plaine.

M 2

Therefore,

* Fournards, by others called Fumarts, are, I believe, what we now call more commonly Stoats.

Therefore, when the Lydians shall invente better thinges than Apollo, when slouthe and ydleness shall encrease vertue more than laboure, when the night and lurkinge corners geveth lesse occasion to unthristinesse, than light day and openness, then shall shootinge, and such gaminge, be in some comparison like. Yet even, as I do not shewe all the goodness which is in shootinge, when I prove it standeth by the same thinges that vertue itselfe standeth by, as brought in by gods, or god-like men, softered by labour, committed to the savegarde of light and opennesse, accompanyed with provision and diligence, loved and allowed by everye good mans sentence: even likewise do I not open halfe the haughtinesse which is in cardinge and dysinge, when I shewe how they are borne of a desperate mother, nourished in idlenesse, encreased by lycence of nighte and corners, accompanyed with fortune, chaunce, deceyte, and crastinesse: condemned and banished by all lawes and judgementes.

Chaucer.

For if I woulde enter to describe the monstruousnesse of it, I should rather wander in it, it is so brode, than have anye readye passage to the ende of the matter: whose horriblenesse is so large, that it passed the eloquence of our Englishe Homer to compasse it: yet because I ever thoughte his sayinges to have as much authoritye as eyther Sophocles or Euripides in Greeke, therefore gladlye do I remember these verses of his.

Hasardry is verye mother of lesinges, And of deceyte, and cursed sweringes. Blasphemye of Christ, mans slaughter, and waste also! Of catel, of tyme, of other thinges mo.

Mother of * lesinges.] True it maye be called so, if a man consider how many wayes and how many thinges he loseth thereby; for first, he loseth his goodes, he loseth his time, he loseth quicknesse of witte, and all good luste to other thinges; he loseth honest companye, he loseth his good name and estimation, and at last, if he leave it not, loseth God, and heaven and all: and, insteede of these thinges, winneth at length eyther hanginge or hell.

And

* I doubt whether our authour has not mistaken the sense of Chaucer, I rather take lesinges to be lies than losses.

And of deceyte.] I trowe, if I should not lye, there is not halfe so much crafte used in no one thinge in the world, as in this cursed thinge. What false dyse use they? As dyse stopped with quick silver and heares, dyfe of vauntage, flattes, gourdes to chop and chaunge when they lifte, to let the true dyfe fall under the table, and fo take up the falfe, and if they be true dyfe, what shift will they make to set the one of them with flydinge, with cogginge, with foystinge, with coytinge as they call it. How will they use these shiftes, when they get a plaine man that cannot skill of them? how will they go about, if they perceive an honest man have moneye, which lift not playe, to provoke him to playe? They will feeke his companye, they will let him pay noughte, yea, and as I hearde a man ones faye that he did, they will fende for him to some house, and spende perchaunce a crowne on him, and, at last, will one begin to faye: What my mafters, what shall we do? shall every man playe his twelve-pence whiles an apple roste in the fyre, and then we will drincke and departe: Naye, will an other faye, (as false as he) you cannot leave when you begin, and therefore I will not playe: but if you will gage, that every man, as he hath lost his twelve pence, shall sit downe, I am contente, for surelye I would winne no mannes moneye here, but even as much as would paye for my supper. Then speaketh the thirde, to the honeste man that thoughte not to playe, What? will you playe your twelve-pence? If he excuse him; Tush nian, will the other faye, sticke not in honeste companye for twelve-pence; I will beare your halfe, and here is my moneye.

Nowe all this is to make him to beginne, for they knowe if he be ones in, and be a lofer, that he will not flick at his twelve-pence, but hopeth ever to get it againe, while perhappes he lofe all. Than everye one of them fetteth his shiftes abroache, some with false dyse, some with fettling of dyse, some with having outelandishe silver coynes guilded, to put awaye at a time for good golde. Than if there come a thinge in controversye, must you be judged by the table, and than farewell the honest mans parte, for he is borne downe on every syde.

Nowe, Sir, befyde all these thinges, they have certaine termes (as a man woulde saye) appropriate to theyr playinge: whereby they will drawe a mannes moneye, but paye none, which they call barres, that surelye furelye he that knoweth them not maye foone be debarred of all that ever he hath, before he learne them. If a plaine man lofe, as he shall do ever, or els it is a wonder, then the game is so devilish, that he can never leave: for vaine hope (which hope, fayth Euripides, destroyeth manye a man and cittye) driveth him on fo farre, that he can never return backe, until he be fo light that he neede feare no theeves by the waye. Nowe if a fimple man happen once in his life to winne of fuch players, than will they eyther entreate him to keepe them companye whiles he hath loft all againe, or els they will use the most devilyshe fashion of all, for one of the players that standeth next him shall have a payre of false dyse, and cast them out upon the bourde, the honest man shall take them and cast them as he did the other, the thirde shall espye them to be false dyse, and shall crye oute harde, with all the othes under God, that he hath falfelye wonne theyr moneye, and than there is nothinge but houlde thy throte from my dagger; everye man layeth hande on the fimple man, and taketh all theyr money from him, and his owne also, thinking himselfe well, that he escapeth with his life.

In Suppli.

Curfed swerynge blasphemye of Christe.] These halfe verses Chaucer, in another place, more at large doth well set out, and very livelye expresse, sayinge.

Ey by Goddes precious hart and his nayles; And by the bloud of Christe, that is in Hales, Seven is my chaunce, and thine is cinke and treye, Ey Goddes armes, if thou falselye playe, This dagger shall thoroughe thine harte go, This fruite commeth of the beched boones two, Forsweringe, ire, falsenesse, and homicide, &c.

Thoughe these verses be verye earnestlye written, yet they do not halfe so griselye set out the horiblenesse of blasphemye, which such gammers use, as it is indeede, and as I have heard myselfe. For no man can write a thinge so earnestlye, as whan it is spoken with gesture, as learned men, you knowe, do saye. Howe will you thincke that suche surjousnesse, with woode countenaunce, and brenninge eyes, with staringe and bragginge, with hart redye to leape out of the bellye for swellinge, can be expressed the tenthe part, to the uttermost. Two men I heard myfelfe, whose fayinges be farre more grifelye, than Chaucers verses. One, when he had lofte his moneye, fware me God from top to the toe with one breathe, that he had loft all his moneye for lacke of fweringe: the other losinge his moneye, and heapinge othes upon othes one in anothers necke, most horrible, and not speakable, was rebuked of an honest man which stoode by for so doinge, he by and by, staringe him in the face, and clappinge his fifte, with all his moneye he had, upon the boarde, fware me by the fleshe of God, that, if sweringe would helpe him but one ace, he would not leave one pece of God unsworne, neyther within nor without. The remembraunce of this blasphemye, Philologe, doth make me quake at the hart, and therefore I will speake no more of it.

can

And fo to conclude with fuch gaminge, I thincke there no ungratiousnesse in all this world, that carieth a man so farre from God, as this fault doth. And if there were anye fo desperate a person, that would begin his hell in earth, I trowe he should not finde hell more like hell itselfe, than the life of those men is, which daily haunt and use such ungratious games. Pur. You handle this gere indeede; and I suppose, if ye had bene a prentice at such games, you could not have sayd more of them than you have done, and by like you have had somewhat to do with them. Tox. Indede, you may honestlye gather that I hate them greatly, in that I speak against them: not that I have used them greatly, in that I speake of them. For things be known divers wayes, as Socrates (you know) doth prove in Alcibiades. And if every man should be that, that he speaketh or wryteth upon, then should Homer have bene the best captaine, most cowarde, hardye, hastye, wyse and woode, fage and fimple: and Terence an oulde man and a younge, an honest man and a bawde: with such like. Surelye every man ought to praye to God dailye, to kepe them from such unthriftinesse, and speciallye all the youth of Englande: for what youth doth begin, a man will followe commonlye, even to his dying day: which thinge Euripides Adrastus, in Euripides, pretelye doth expresse, sayinge:

in Supplia -

What thing a man in tender age bath most in ure, That same to death alwayes to kepe be shall be sure.

Therefore

THE WORKS OF

Therefore in age who greatly longes good fruite to mowe, In youth he must himselfe applye good seede to sowe.

For the foundation of youthe well fet (as Plato doth faye) the whole bodye of the common wealthe shall flourishe thereafter. If the younge tree growe croked, when it is oulde a man shall rather breake it than ftreight it. And I thincke there is no one thing that crokes youthe more then such unlawful games. Nor let no man saye, if they be honestly used they do no harme. For how can that pastime which nevther exerciseth the bodye with any honest labour, nor yet the minde with any honest thinckinge, have any honestye joined with it? Nor let no man affure himselfe that he can use it honestlye: for if he stand therein, he may fortune have a faule, the thinge is more slipperye than he knoweth of. A man maye (I graunt) fit on a brante hill fide, but if geve never so little forward, he cannot stoppe, though he would never fo fayne, but he must needes runne head-long, he knoweth not how farre. What honest pretences vayne pleasure layeth daily (as it were entifementes or baytes, to pull men forwarde withall) Homer doth well shewe, by the Sirenes and Circe. And amonges all in that shippe, there was but one Ulyffes, and yet he had done to as the other did, if a goddesse had not taughte him; and so likewise, I thincke, they be easye to nomber, which passe by playinge honestly, except the grace of God fave and keep them. Therefore they that will not go to farre in playinge, let them folowe this counsell of the Poet:

Steppe the beginninges.

Phi. Well, or you go any further, I praye you tell me this one thinge: Doo ye speake against meane mennes playinge onlye, or against greate mennes playinge to, or put you any difference betwixte them? Tox. If I should excuse myselse herein, and say that I spake of the one and not of the other, I sear leaste I shoulde as fondlye excuse myselse, as a certaine preacher did, whom I heard upon a time speake against many abuses, (as he sayde) and, at last, he spake against candelles, and then, he searinge, least some men would have bene angrye and offended with him, Naye, sayth he, you must take me as I meane: I speake not against greate candelles, but against little candelles, for they be not all one (quoth he) I promife you: and fo everye man laughed him to Indeede, as for great men, and great mennes matters, I list not greatlye to meddle. Yet this I would wishe, that all great men in Englande had redde over diligently the Pardoners Tale in Chaucer, and there they should perceive and see, how muche such games stande with their worshippe, how great soever they be. What great men do, be it good or ill, meane men commonlye love to followe, as many learned men in many places do saye, and dailye experience doth plainlye shewe, in costlye apparell and other like matters.

Therefore, feinge that lordes be lanternes to lead the life of meane men, by their example, either to goodnesse or badnesse, to whether so ever they liste: and seinge also they have libertye to list what they will, I praye God they have will to list that which is good; and as for their playing, I will make an ende with this sayinge of Chaucer.

Lordes might finde them other maner of playe, Honest ynough to dreve the daye awaye.

But to be short, the best medicine for all fortes of men, both highe and lowe, younge and oulde, to put away such unlawful games is by the contrarye, likewise as all Phistiens do allowe in Phisicke. So let youthe, instede of such unlawful games, which stande by ydlenesse, by solitarinesse, and corners, by night and darknesse, by fortune and chaunce, by craft and subtiltye, use such pastimes as stand by labour: upon the day light, in open sighte of men, havinge such an ende as is come to by cunninge, rather than by craft: and so should virtue encrease, and vice decaye. For contrarye pastimes, must nedes worke contrarye mindes in men, as all other contrarye thinges do.

And thus we see, Philologe, that shootinge is not only the most holefome exercise for the bodye, the most honest passime for the minde, and that for all sortes of men: but also it is a most redye medycine, to purge the whole realme of such pestilent gaminge, wherewith manye times it is sore troubled, and ill at ease.

N

PHI. The more honestye you have proved by shootinge, Toxophile, and the more you have perfuaded me to love it, fo much trulye the foryer have you made me with this laste sentence of yours, whereby you plainly prove that a man may not greatly use it. For if shootinge be a medicine (as you faye that it is) it may not be used very oft, lest a man should hurte himselfe withall, as medycines much occupyed doo. For Aristotle himselfe sayth, that medycines be not meate to live withall: and thus shootinge, by the same reason, maye not Tox. You playe your olde wontes, Philologe, in be much occupyed. dalyinge with other mennes wittes, not fo much to prove your owne matter, as to prove what other men can faye. But where you thincke that I take away much use of shootinge, in lykening it to a medycine: because men use not medycines everye daye, for so should theyr bodyes be hurte: I rather prove daily use of shootinge thereby. For although Aristotle fayth that some medycines be no meate to live withal, which is true: yet Hippocrates fayth our dailye meates be medycines, Hippoc. de to withstand evill withal, which is as true, for he maketh two kindes of medycines, one our meate that we use dailye, which purgeth softlye and flowlye, and in this fimilitude maye shooting be called a medycine, wherewith dailye a man maye purge and take away all unlawful defires to other unlawful pastimes, as I proved before. The other is a quicke purginge medycine, and feldomer to be occupyed, except the matter be greater, and I could describe the nature of a quicke medycine, which thould within a while purge and plucke out all the unthriftye games in the realme, through which the common wealthe oftentimes is ficke. For not onlye good quicke wittes to learninge be thereby broughte oute of frame, and quite marred, but also manly wittes, eyther to attempt matters of high courage in warre time, or else to atchieve matters of weight and wysdome in peace time, be made thereby very quasye and faynte. For loke through all histories written in Greeke, Latine, or other language, and you shall never finde that realme prosper in the whiche fuch ydle pastimes are used. As concerninge the medycine, althoughe some would be miscontent, if they heard me meddle anye thinge with it: yet, betwixt you and me here alone, I maye the bold-Iyer faye my fantafye, and the rather because I will onlye wish for it, which standeth with honesty, not determine of it, which belongeth to authoritye. The medycine is this, that would to God and the Prince, all

med. purg.

all these unthriftye ydle pastimes, which be very bugges that the Psalme 90. meaneth on, walking on the night and in corners, were made selonye, and some of that punishment ordayned for them, which is appointed for the forgers and salfisyers of the King's coyne. Which punishment is not by me now invented, but long ago, by the most noble oratour Demostbenes, which marveileth greatlye that death is appointed for sal-Demost. Sifyers and forgers of the coyne, and not as greate punishmente ordayn-contra Lepted for them, which by their meanes forges and salfisyes the common wealth. And I suppose that there is no one thinge that changeth soner the golden silver wittes of men into copperye and brassye wayes, then dysinge and such unlawfull pastimes.

And this quicke medycine, I believe, woulde fo throwly purge them, that the daily medycines, as shootinge and other pastimes joyned with honest labour, should easelyer withstand them. Phi. The excellent commodities of shootinge in peace time, Toxophile, you have verye well and fufficiently declared. Whereby you have fo perfuaded me, that, God willinge, hereafter I will both love it the better, and also use it the ofter. For as much as I can gather of all this communication of ours, the tongue, the nofe, the handes, and the feete, be no fitter members, or instrumentes for the bodye of a man, than is shootinge for the hole body of the realme. God hath made the partes of men which be best and most necessarye, to serve, not for one purpose onlye, but for manye: as the tongue for fpeakinge and tastinge, the nose for smellinge, and alfo for avoydinge all execrementes, which faule out of the head, the handes for receiving of good thinges, and for puttinge of all harmfull thinges from the bodye. So shootinge is an exercise of healthe, a pastime of honeste pleasure, and such one also that stoppeth and avoydeth all noyfome games, gathered and encreased by ill rule, as noughtye humours be, which hurt and corrupte fore that parte of the realme, wherein they do remayne. But nowe if you can shewe but halfe so muche profite in warre of shootinge, as you have proved pleasure in peace, then will I furelye judge that there be fewe thinges that have fo manifolde commodities and uses joyned unto them as it hath.

Tox. The upper hand in warre, next the goodnesse of God, (of whom Mach. 5.3. all victory commeth, as Scripture sayth) standeth chieflye in three thinges: in the wiscome of the Prince, in the sleightes and pollicies of the cap-

N 2

taynes,

taynes, and in the strengthe and cherefull forwardnesse of the fouldiours. A Prince in his harte muste be full of mercye and peace, a vertue most pleafaunt to Christ, most agreeable to mans nature, most profitable for riche and poore; for then the riche man enjoyeth with great pleasure the which he hath: the poore may obtaine with his labour, that which he lacketh. And althoughe there is nothinge worse then * warre, whereof it taketh his name, throughe the which great men be in daunger, meane men without fuccour; riche men in feare, because they have somewhat; poore men in care, because they have nothinge; and every man in doubt and miferye: yet it is a civill medycine, wherewith a Prince may, from the bodye of his common wealthe, put off that danger which may faule: or els recover againe, whatsoever it hath loste. And therefore, as Isocrates doth faye, a Prince must be a warriour in two thinges, in cunninge and knowledge of all fleightes and feates of warre, and in havinge all necessary habilimentes belonginge to the same. Which matter to entreate at large, were over longe at this time to declare, and over much for my learninge to perfourme.

After the wifedome of the Prince, are valiant captaines most necesfarye in warre, whose office and dutye is to knowe all sleightes and pollicies for all kindes of warre, which they may learne two wayes, eyther in dailye folowinge and hauntinge the warres, or els, because wysedome boughte with stripes is manye times over costlye, they may bestow fome time in Vegetius, which entreateth such matters in Latine metelye well, or rather in Polyenus, and Leo the Emperour, which fetteth oute all pollicies and duties of captaines in the Greeke tongue verye excellentlye. But chieflye I would wishe, and (if I were of authoritye) I woulde counsell all the younge gentlemen of this realme, never to laye out of their hands two authors, Zenophon in Greeke, and Cæfar in Latine, wherein they should follow noble Scipio Africanus, as Tullie doth fay: in which two authors, befydes eloquence, a thinge most necessarye of all other for a captaine, they should learne the hole course of warre, which those two noble men did not more wiselye write for other men to learne, than they did manfully exercise in the field, for other men to folowe.

De Sen.

* War is an old word, still used in some counties for wirse, and Ascham supposes that war or hostility is so named because it is war or worse than peace.

The strengthe of warre lyeth in the fouldiour, whose chiefe prayse Obedience. and vertue is obedience towarde his captaine, fayth Plato. And Zeno-Plat. leg. 12. phon, being a gentyle author, most christianlye doth saye, even by Zen. Ages. these wordes, that that fouldiour which first serveth God, and then obeyeth his captaine, maye boldlye, with all courage, hope to overthrowe his enemye. Againe, without obedience, neyther valiant man, front Zen. Hipp, horse, nor goodly harnesse, doth any good at all: which obedience of the fouldiour toward the captaine, brought the hole empyre of the world into the Romaynes handes, and, when it was brought, kept it longer than ever it was kept in any common wealth before or after. And this to be true, Scipio Africanus, the most noble captain that ever Plutarchus, was among the Romaynes, shewed very plainly, what time as he went into Africke to destroy Carthage. For he resting his hoast by the way in Sicilie, a day or two, and at a time standinge with a great man of Sicilie, and lokinge on his foldiours how they exercifed themselves in kepinge of arraye, and other feates, the gentleman of Sicilie asked Scipio, wherein laye his chief hope to overcome Carthage? He aunswered, In yonder fellowes of myne whom you fee playe: And why? fayth the other; Because, sayth Scipio, that, if I commanded them to runne into the top of this high castle, and cast themselves downe backward upon these rockes, I am sure they would do it. Salust also doth write, Sal. in Cat. that there were mo Romaynes put to death of their captaynes for fettinge on their enemyes before they had licence, than were for runninge away out of the field, before they had foughten. These two examples do prove, that amonges the Romaynes, the obedience of the fouldiours was wonderfull greate, and the feveritye of the captaynes, to fee the fame kept, wonderfull strayte. For they well perceived that an hoast full of obedience, falleth as seldome into the handes of their enemyes, as that body falleth into jeopardye, the which is ruled by reason. Reason and rulers being like in office, (for the one ruleth the body of man, the other ruleth the body of the common wealthe) oughte to be like of conditions, and oughte to be obeyed in all maner of matters. Obedience is nourished by feare and love, feare is kept in by true justyce and equitye, love is gotten by wysedome, joyned by liberalitye. For where a fouldiour feeth righteousnesse so rule, that a man can do neyther wronge, nor yet take wronge, and that his captaine for his wysedome can maintaine him, and for his liberalitye will maintaine him, he must needes both love him and feare him, of the which procedeth procedeth true and unfayned obedience. After this inwarde vertue, the next good point in a fouldiour is to have and to handle his weapon well, whereof the one must be at the appointment of the captaine, the other lyeth in the courage and exercise of the souldiour. Yet of all wea-In Here, fur. pons, the best is, as Euripides doth faye, wherewith what least daunger of ourselfe we may hurte our enemye most. And that is (as I suppose) artillerie. Artillerie, now a dayes, is taken for two thinges: gunnes and bowes, which, how much they do in warre, both daily experience doth teache, and also Peter Nannius, a learned man of Louayn, in a certaine dialogue doth very well fet oute, wherein this is most notable, that when he hath shewed excedinge commodities of both, and some discommodities of gunnes, as infinite cost and charge, combersome carriage, and, if they be greate, the uncertaine levelinge, the perill of them that stand by them, the easyer avoidinge by them that stande farre of: and, if they be litle, the lesse both fear and jeoperdye is in them, befyde all contrarye wether and winde, which hindereth them not a litle; yet of all shootinge he cannot reherse one discommoditye. Phi. That I marveile greatly at, feinge Nannius is fo well learned, and fo exercised in the authors of both the tongues: for I myselfe do remember, that shootinge in warre is but smallye prayled, and that of divers captaines in divers authors. For first in Euripides, whom you so highlye prayfe (and verye well, for Tullye thinketh everye verse in him to be an authoritye) what, I praye you, doth Lycus, that overcame Thebes, faye as concerninge shootinge? whose wordes, as farre as I remember, be these, or not much unlike.

Eurip. in Herc. furent. What prayse hath he at all, which never durst abyde,
The dint of a speares point thrust against his syde.

Nor never bouldly buckeler bare yet in his left hande,
Face to face his enemies bront stiffelye to withstande,
But alwaye trusteth to a bowe, and to a feathered sticke,
Harnesse ever most sit for him whiche to slie is quicke,
Bowe and shaft is armoure metest for a cowarde
Which dare not ones abide the bront of battaile sharpe and harde.
But he a man of manhode most is mine assent,
Which, with hart and courage bould, sullie hath him bent,
His enemies loke in everye stoure stoutelie to abide,
Face to face, and soote to soote, tide what maye betide.

2.

Againe,

Againe, Teucer, the best archer amonge all the Grecians, in Sophocles Sophoc. in is called of Menelaus a bowe-man, and a shooter, as in villianye and Sia. Flag. reproach, to be a thinge of no price in warre. Moreover, Pandarus, the best shooter in the worlde, whom Apollo himselfe taughte to shoote, both he and his shootinge is quite contemned in Homer, in so much that Homer (which under a made fable doth alwayes hide his judgment of thinges) doth make Pandarus himselfe crye out of shooting, and cast his bowe away, and take him to a speare, makinge a vow, that if ever he came home, he would breake his flaftes, and burne his bowe, lamentinge greatlye, that he was fo fonde to leave at home his horse and chariot, with other weapons, for the trust that he had in his bow. Homer fignifying thereby, that men should leave shootinge out of warre, and take them to other weapons more fitte and able for the same, and I trowe Pandarus wordes be much what after this fort.

Iliad 5.

If chaunce ill lucke me byther brought, Ill fortune me that day befell, When first my bowe from the pynne I raughte, For Hectors fake, the Greekes to quell. But if that God so for me shape That home againe I maye ones come, Let me never enjoye that hap, Nor ever twife looke on the fonne, If bowe and shaftes I do not burne, Which now so evill doth serve my turne.

But to let passe all poetes, what can be forer sayd against any thinge, than the judgement of Cyrus is against shootinge, which doth cause his Persians, being the best shooters, to lay away their bowes, and take Zen. Cyr. them to fwordes and buckelers, speares and dartes, and other like hande Inft. 6. weapons. The which thinge Zenophon, fo wyse a philosopher, so expert a captaine in warre himfelfe, would never have written, and speciallye in that booke wherein he purposed to shewe, as Tullye sayth in- Epist. 1. ad deede, not the true historye, but the example of a perfite wyse Prince Q. Fra. and common wealth, excepte that judgement of chaunging artillery into other weapons he had alwayes thought best to be followed in all warre. Whose counsayle the Parthians did folowe, when they chased Plutarch. Antonye over the mountaynes of Media, which beinge the best shooters M. Ant.

of

of the worlde, lefte theyr bowes, and toke them to speares and morispikes. And these sewe examples, I trowe, of the beste shooters, do well prove that the best shootinge is not the best thing, as you call it, in warre. Tox. As concerninge your first example, taken out of Euripides, I marveile you will bringe it for the disprayse of shootinge, seeinge Euripides doth make those verses, not because he thinketh them true, but because he thinketh them sit for the person that spake them. For indede his true judgement of shootinge, he doth expresse by and by after in the oration of the noble Captaine Amphytrio against Lycus, wherein a man maye doubte, whether he hath more eloquentlye consulted Lycus sayinge, or more worthilye set oute the prayse of shootinge. And as I am advised, his wordes be much hereafter as I shall saye.

Eurip. in Herc. fur.

Against the wittie gift of shootinge in a bowe, Fonde and leude wordes thou leudlie doest out throwe, Which if thou wilte heare of me a worde or twayne Quicklie thou mayst learne how fondlie thou doest blame. First he that with his harneis himselfe doth wall about, That scarce is left one hole through which he may pepe out. Such bond men to their harneis to fight are nothinge mete, But sonest of all other are troden under fete. If he be stronge, his felowes faint, in whom he putteth his trust, So loded with his harneis he must nedes lie in the dust, Nor yet from death he cannot start, if ones his weapon breke, Howe flout, howe stronge, howe great, howe longe, so ever be such a freke. But whosever can handle a bowe, sturdie, stiffe, and stronge, Wherewith like hayle manie shaftes he shootes into the thickest thronge: This profite he takes, that standinge a farre his enemies he may spill, When he and his full safe shall stande, out of all daunger and ill. And this in warre is wyfedome most, which workes our enemies woo, When we shall be far from all feare and jeoperdie of our foo.

Secondarily, even as I do not greatly regarde what Menelaus doth faye in Sophocles to Teucer, because he spake it both in anger, and also to him that he hated; even so do I remember very well in Homer, that when Hestor and the Troyans would have set fyre on the Greeke ships, Teucer, Teucer, with his bowe, made them recule back againe, when Menelaus toke him to his feete, and ranne awaye.

Thirdlye, as concerninge Pandarus, Homer doth not disprayse the Hom. Il. 5. noble gift of shootinge, but thereby everye man is taughte, that what-soever, and howe good soever a weapon a man doth use in warre, if he be himselse a covetous wretche, a foole without counsaile, a peace breaker, as Pandarus was, at last he shall, throughe the punishment of God, saule into his enemies bandes, as Pandarus did, whom Diemedes, throughe the helpe of Minerva, miserablye slue.

And, because you make mention of Homer, and Troye matters, what can be more prayse for any thinge, I praye you, than that is for shootinge, that Troye could never be destroyed without the help of Hercules shaftes, which thing doth signifye, that, although all the world were gathered in an armye together, yet, without shootinge, they can never come to their purpose, as Ulysses, in Sophocles, very plainlye doth saye unto Pyrrbus, as concerning Hercules shaftes to be carried into Troye.

Nor you without them, nor without you they do ought.

Soph. Phil.

Fourthlye, whereas Cyrus did chaunge part of his bowmen, whereof he had plenty, in other men of warre, whereof he lacked, I will not greatlye difpute whether Cyrus did well in that pointe in those dayes or Zen. Cyri, no, because it is plaine in Zenophon howe stronge shooters the Persians Instit. 6. were, what bowes they had, what shaftes and heades they occupyed, what kind of warre theyr enemyes used.

But trulye, as for the Parthians, it is plaine in Phutarche, that, in Plut. in M. chaunginge theyr bowes into speares, they broughte theyr selfe into utter destruction. For when they had chased the Romaynes many a myle, throughe reason of their bowes, at the last the Romaynes, assumed of theyr slyinge, and remembringe theyr olde noblenesse and courage, imagined this way, that they would kneele down on theyr knees, and so cover all theyr body with theyr shieldes and targettes, that the Parthians shaftes might slide over them, and do them no harme; which thing when the Parthians perceyved, thinkinge that the Romaynes were forweryed with laboure, watche, and hunger, they layed downe theyr bowes, bowes, and toke spercs in theyr handes, and so ranne upon them; but the Romaynes perceyvinge them without theyr bowes, rose up manfullye, and flue them every mothers fonne, fave a fewe that faved themfelves with runninge awaye. And herein our archers of Englande farre passe the Parthians, which for such a purpose, when they shall come to hand strokes, hath ever redye, eyther at his back hanginge, or els in his next felowes hand, a leaden maule, or fuch like weapon, to beat downe his enemies withall. PHI. Well, Toxophile, feeinge that those examples, which I had thought to have been cleane against shootinge, you have thus turned to the high prayse of shootinge: and all this prayse that you have nowe sayde on it, is rather come in by me than fought for of you: let me heare, I praye you now, those examples which you have marked of shootinge yourselfe: whereby you are perfuaded, and thincke to perfwade other, that shootinge is so good in Tox. Examples furely I have marked very manye; from the beginninge of time had in memorye of writinge, throughout all common wealthes and empyres of the worlde: whereof the most parte I will passe over, lest I should be tedious: yet some I will touche, because they be notable, both for me to tell and you to heare.

And because the storye of the Jewes is for the time most auncient, for the truthe most credible, it shall be most fitte to begin with them. And althoughe I know that God is the onelye giver of victorye, and Mach. 1. 3. not the weapons, for all strengthe and victorye (fayth Judas Machabeus) commeth from heaven: yet surelye strong weapons be the instrumentes wherewith God doth overcome that parte, which he will have overthrown. For God is well pleased with wyse and witty seates of warre: as in meting of enemyes for truse takinge, to have privilye in * a bushmente harnest men layed for seare of treason, as Judas Machabeus did. Mach. 2. 14. with Nicanor, Demetrius captaine. And to have engines of warre to beat down cities withal: and to have scout watch amonges our enemyes to know theyr counsayles, as the noble captaine Jonathan, brother to Mach. 1.12. Judas Machabeus, did in the countrye of Amathie, against the mightye hoast of Demetrius. And, beside all this, God is pleased to have goodiye tombes for them which do noble feates in warre, and to have theyr images made, and also theyr cote armours to be set above theyr tombes, did cause to be made for his brethren Judas Machabeus and Jonathan, Mach 1.13 when they were slaine of the Gentiles. And thus, of what authoritye feates of warre, and stronge weapons be, shortlye and plainlye we may learne. But amonges the Jewes, as I begin to tell, I am sure there was nothinge so occupyed, or did so much good as bowes did; in so much, that when the Jewes had any great upper-hand over the Gentiles, the sirst thinge alwayes that the captaine did, was to exhorte the people to geve all the thankes to God for the victorye, and not to theyr bowes, wherewith they had slaine theyr enemies: as it is plaine the noble Jo-Jos. 13. such did after so manye kinges thrust downe by him.

* A bushment.] This word I do not remember elsewhere: perhaps it should be in ambushment.

God, when he promifeth helpe to the Ferves, he useth no kind of speakinge so much as this, that he will bende his bowe, and die his shaftes in the Gentiles bloud: whereby it is manifest, that eyther God Deut. 32. will make the Jewes shoote stronge shootes to overthrowe theyr enemyes, or, at least, that shootinge is a wonderfull mighty thinge in warre, whereunto the high power of God is likened. David, in the Pfal. 7. 63. Psalmes, calleth bowes the vessels of death, a bitter thinge, and, in an 75. other place, a mightye power, and other wayes mo, which I will let passe, because every man readeth them dailye: but yet one place of Scripture I must needes remember, which is more notable for the prayse of shootinge, than any that ever I redde in any other storye, and that is, when Saule was slaine by the Philistines, beinge mightye bow-Regum 1.31. men, and Jonathan his fonne with him, that was fo good a shooter, as the Scripture fayth, that he never shote shafte in vaine, and that the kingdome, after Saules death, came unto David: the first statute and Regum 2. 1. lawe that ever David made after he was Kinge, was this, that all the children of Israell should learne to shoote, according to a lawe made many a daye before that time, for the fetting out of shootinge, as it is written (fayth Scripture) in Libro Justorum, which booke we have not nowe. And thus we fee plainly what great use of shootinge, and what provision even from the beginninge of the worlde for shootinge was amonge the Yewes.

The Ethiopians which inhabite the furthest parte South in the worlde, were wonderfull bowmen: infomuch that when Cambyses King of Persse, being in Egypt, sent certaine embassiadours into Ethiope to the King O 2

Herodotus in Thalia.

there, with manye great giftes: the King of Ethiope, perceyvinge them to be espyes, toke them uppe sharpelye, and blamed Cambyses greatly for fuch unjust enterprises: but after that he had princelye entertayned them, he fent for a bowe, and bente it and drewe it, and then unbent it againe, and fayd unto the embassadours, you shall commende me to Cambyles, and geve him this bowe from me, and bidde him when any Persian can shoote in this bowe, let him set upon the Ethiopians: in the mean while let him geve thanckes unto God, which doth not put in the Ethiopians mindes to conquere any other mans lande.

This bowe, when it came amonge the Persians, never one man in fuch an infinite hoaft (as Herodotus doth faye) could styre the stringe, fave only Smerdis, the brother of Cambyfes, which styred it two fingers,. and no further: for the which acte Cambyfes had fuch envye at him, that he afterwarde flue him: as doth appeare in the storye.

Sefostris, the most mightye Kinge that ever was in Egypte, overcame a great part of the world, and that by archers: he fubdued the Arabians, the Jewes, the Affyrians: he went farther in Scythia than anye. man els: he overcame Thracia, even to the borders of Germanye. And, in token how he overcame all men, he fet uppe in manye places great images to his owne likenesse, havinge in one hand a bowe, in the other a sharpe headed shafte: that men might knowe what weapon his hoast Died. Sic. 2. used, in conqueringe so manye people.

Herod. in

Herod. in Clio.

Cyrus, counted a God amonge the Gentiles, for his noblenesse and felicitye in warre: yet, at the last, when he set upon the Massagetes, (which people never went without theyr bowe nor theyr quiver, neyther in warre nor peace) he and all his were flaine, and that by shootinge, as appeareth in the storye.

Herod. in Thal.

Polycrates, the Prince of Samos, (a very litle isle) was lord over all the Greeke feas, and withstode the power of the Persians, only by the helpe of a thousande archers.

The people of Scythia, of all other men, loved and used most shootinge; the hole riches and housholde stuffe of a man in Scytbia was a yoake of oxen, a ploughe, his nagge and his dogge, his bowe and his quiver: which quiver was covered with the skin of a man, which he toke or flue first in battaile. The Scythians to be invincible, by reason of theyr shootinge, the great voyages of so manye conquerours spente in that countrye in vaine, doth well prove: but speciallye that of Darius the mightye King of Persia, which, when he had tarryed there a great space, and done no good, but had forweavyed his hoast with travaile and hunger; at last the men of Scythia fent an embassadour with four Herod. in giftes, a byrde, a frogge, a moufe and five shaftes. Darius marveyl- Mlpom. inge at the straungenesse of the giftes, asked the messenger what they fignified: the messenger aunswered, that he had no further commandment, but only to deliver his giftes, and returne againe with all spede: But I am fure (fayth he) you Persians for your great wysedome can soone boult out what they meane. When the messenger was gone, every man began to fay his verdite. Darius judgemente was this, that the Scythians gave over into the Persians handes theyr lives, theyr hole power, both by lande and fea, fignifyinge by the moufe the earth, by the frogge the water, in which they both live, by the byrde theyr lives, which live in the ayre, by the fhaft theyr hole power and empyre, that was maintayned always by shootinge. Gobryas, a noble and wyfe captaine amonges the Persians, was of a clean contrarye minde, sayinge, Naye, not so, but the Scythians meane thus by theyr giftes, that except we gette us winges, and flye into the ayre like byrdes, or runne into the holes of the earth like myse, or els lye lurkinge in fennes and marishes, like frogges, we shall never returne home againe, before we be utterly undone with theyr fhaftes: which fentence fanke fo fore into theyr hartes, that Darius, with all speede possible, brake uppe his campe and gat himselfe homewarde. Yet how much the Persians themselves sette by shootinge, whereby they encreased their empyre so much, doth appear by three manifest reasons: first that they brought uppe theyr youth in the schole of shootinge unto twentye years of age, as divers noble Greeke authours Herod. in do fave.

Againe, because the noble Kinge Darius thought himselfe to be Zerlin Cyr. praysed by nothinge so much as to be counted a good shooter, as Strab. 11. doth appear by his sepulchre, wherein he caused to be written this sentence:

Darius

102

Strab. 15.

Darius the King lyeth buried here, That in shootinge and rydinge had never pere.

Plutarch in Angefila.

Thirdlye, the coyne of the Persians, both golde and silver, had the armes of Persia upon it, as is customably used in other realmes, and that was bowe and arrowes: by the which feate they declared how much they fet by them.

Suidas.

The Grecians also, but specially the noble Athenienses, had all theyr strengthe lyinge in artillerie: and, for that purpose, the citye of Athens had a thousand men, which were only archers, in dailye wages, to watch and kepe the citye from all jeopardy and fodaine daunger: which archers also should carye to prison and warde anye misdoer, at the commaundment of the highe officers, as plainlye doth appeare in Plato. And furelye the bowmen of Athens did wonderfull feates in Flato in Promany battels, but speciallye when Demosthenes, the valiant captaine, flue and toke prisoners all the Lacedemonians, befyde the citye of Pylos, where Neftor some time was lorde: the shaftes went so thicke that day, (fayth Thucidydes) that no man could fee theyr enemyes. A Lacedemonian, taken prisoner, was asked of one at Athens, whether they were stoute fellowes that were slaine or no, of the Lacedemonians? He anfwered nothinge els but this: Make much of those shaftes of youres, tagora.

Thucydid. 4. for they know neyther stoute nor unstoute: meaninge thereby that no man (though he were never fo floute) came in theyr walke that escaped without death.

Herod. in Polym.

Herodotus descrybinge the mightye hoast of Xerxes, especiallye doth marke oute, what bowes and shaftes they used, signifyinge that therein laye theyr chiefe strengthe. And at the same time Atossa, mother of Xerxes, wyfe to Darius, and daughter of Cyrus, doth enquire (as Aeschylus sheweth in a tragedye) of a certaine messenger that came from Xerxes hoaft, what stronge and fearfull bowes the Grecians used: whereby it is playne, that artillerye was the thinge, wherein both Europe and Asia in those days trusted most upon.

Æsch. in Perf.

> The best part of Alexanders hoast were archers, as plainlye doth appeare by Arrianus, and other that wrote his life: and those so strong archers, that they onlye, fundry times overcame theyr enemyes afore any other needed to fighte: as was feene in the battaile which Nearchus, one of Alexanders captaines, had befyde the ryver Thomeron. And therefore, as concerninge all these kingdomes and common wealthes, I maye conclude with this fentence of Plinye, whose wordes be, as I sup-Plin. lib. 16. pose, thus: " If anye man would remember the Ethiopians, Egyptians, cap. 36. " Arabians, the men of Inde, of Scythia, fo many people in the Easte " of the Sarmatianes, and all the kingdomes of the Parthians, he shall of perceive halfe the parte of the worlde to live in subjection, over-" come by the mighte and power of shootinge."

In the common wealth of Rome, which exceeded all other in vertue, noblenesse and dominion, little mention is made of shootinge, not because it was little used amonges them, but rather because it was so necessarve and common, that it was thought a thinge not necessarye or required of anye man to be spoken upon; as if a man should descrybe a great feast, he would not ones name breade, althoughe it be most common and neceffarye of all: but furelye, if a feaft, being never fo great, lacked breade, or had fewftye and noughtye breade, all the other daintyes should be unsaverye, and litle regarded, and then would men talke of the commoditye of bread, when they lacke it, that would not ones name it afore, when they had it: and even fo did the Romaynes, as concerninge shootinge. Seldome is shootinge named, and yet it didthe most good in warre, as did appeare verye plainlye in that battaile, which Scipio Africanus had with the Numantines in Spaine, whom he could never overcome, before he fet bowemen amonges his horsemen, by whose might they were cleane vanguished.

Againe, Tiberius, fightinge with Armenius and Inquiomerus, Princes Cor. Tac. 2. of Germayne, had one winge of archers on horsebacke, an other of archers on foote, by whose might the Germaynes were flaine downright, and so scattered and beate out of the fielde, that the chase lasted ten. miles; the Germaynes clame up into trees for feare, but the Romaynes did fetche them downe with theyr shaftes, as they had been birdes, in: which battaile the Romaynes lost few or none, as doth appeare in the historye.

But as I beganne to faye, the Romaynes did not fo much prayfe the goodnesse of shootinge, when they had it, as they did lament the lacke of it, when they wanted it, as Leo the V. the noble Emperour, dothe plainly testifye in fundrye places in those bookes which he wrote in Greeke, of the fleightes and pollicies of warre. PHI. Surelye of that booke I have not heard before, and how came you to the fight of it? Tox. The booke is rare trulye, but this last yeare, when Maister Cheke translated the sayde booke oute of Greeke into Latine, to the Kings Majestye, Henrye the Eyght, of noble memorye, he, of his gentlenesse, would have me verye oft in his chamber, and, for the familiaritye that I had with him, more than manye other, would fuffer me to reade of it, when I would, the which thinge to do, furelye I was verye defirous and glad, because of the excellent handelinge of all thinges, that ever he taketh in hande. And verilye, Philologe, as oft as I remember the departinge of that man from the Universitye, (which thinge I do not feldome) fo ofte do I well perceive our most helpe and furtheraunce to learninge, to have gone away with him. For, by the great commoditye that we toke in hearinge him reade privately in his chamber, all Homer, Sophicles, and Euripides, Herodotus, Thucydides, Zenophon, Ifocrates, and Plato, we feele the great discommodity in not hearinge of him, Aristotle and Demosthenes, which two authours, with all diligence, last of all, he thought to have redde unto us. And when I confider howe manye men be fuccoured with his helpe, and his ayde to abyde here for learninge, and howe all men were provoked and ftyrred up, by his counfayle and dailye example, howe they should come to learninge, furelye I perceive that fentence of Plato to be true, which fayeth: " that " there is nothinge better in anye common wealthe, than that there " should be alwayes one or other excellent passinge man, whose life " and vertue thoulde plucke forwarde the will, diligence, laboure, and " hope of all other, that, followinge his foot-steppes, they might come " to the same ende, whereunto labour, learninge, and vertue, had con-" veyed him before."

Sir John Cheke.

The great hinderaunce of learninge, in lackinge this man, greatly I should lament, if this discommoditye of ours were not joyned with the commoditye and wealth of the whole realme, for which purpose our noble Kinge, full of wysedome, called uppe this excellent man, full of learninge, to teache noble Prince Edwarde, an office full of hope, comforte, and solace, to all true hartes of Englande: for whom all Englande dailye doth praye, that he, passing his tutour in learninge and knowledge,

ledge, followinge his father in wysedome and felicitye, accordinge to that example which is set afore his eyes, maye so set oute and maintayne Gods word, to the abolishment of all papistry, the confusion of all heresye, that thereby be feared of his enemyes, loved of all his subjects, may bring to his own glorye immortal same and memory, to this realme, wealth, honour, and felicity, to true and unfained religion perpetuall peace, concord and unitye.

But to returne to shootinge againe, what Leo fayth of shootinge, amonges the Romaynes, his wordes be fo much for the prayle of shootinge, and the booke also fo rare to be gotten, that I learned the places by hearte, which be, as I suppose, even this. First in his sixte booke, as concerninge what harnesse is best: " Let all the youth of Rome be compelled " to use shootinge, eyther more or less, and alwayes to beare theyr bowe " and they quiver aboute with them, untill they be eleven yeares olde." For fithens shootinge was neglected and decayed amonge the Romaynes, many a battayle and fielde hath bene loft. Agayne, in the eleventh booke and fiftieth chapter, (I call that by bookes and chapters, which the Greeke book divideth by chapters and paragraphes) " Let your Leo. 11, 50. " fouldiours have theyr weapons well appointed and trimmed, but, " above all other thinges, regard most shootinge, and therefore let " men, when there is no warre, use shootinge at home. For the leav-" inge off onelye of shootinge, hath brought in ruine and decaye the " whole empyre of Rome."

Afterwarde he commaundeth agayne his captaine by these wordes.

"Arme your hoaste as I have appointed you, but especially with Leo. 18.21.

"bowe and arrowes plentye. For shootinge is a thinge of much

"mighte and power in warre, and chiesty agaynst the Saracenes and Turkes, which people hath all theyr hope of victorye in theyr bowe and shaftes." Besides all this, in an other place, he wryteth thus to his captayne. "Artillerye is easy to be prepared, and, in time of great nede, a thinge most profitable, therefore we ftraitelye commaund you to make proclamation to all men under our dominion, which be eyther in warre or peace, to all cities, bor rowes, and townes, and finally, to all maner of men, that every fere person have bowe and shaftes of his owne, and everye house be "fides

- " fides this to have a standinge bearinge bowe, and forty shaftes for " all nedes, and that they exercise themselves in holts, hilles, and
- " dales, plaines and woods, for all maner of chaunces in warre."

How much shootinge was used among the olde Romaynes, and what meanes noble captaynes and emperours made to have it increase amonges them, and what hurte came by the decaye of it, these wordes of Leo the Emperour, which, in a maner, I have rehearfed word for word, plainly doth declare.

And yet shootinge, althoughe they set never so much by it, was never fo good then, as it is now in Englande; which thinge to be true is very probable, in that Leo doth fay, " That he would have his Leo. 7. 13. " fouldiours take off their arrow heades, and one shoote at another, " for theyr exercise;" which play if English archers used, I thincke they should finde small playe, and lesse pleasure in it at all.

The greate upperhande maintayned alwayes in warre by artillerve, doth appear very plainlye by this reason also, that when the Spaniardes, Frenchmen, and Germaynes, Greekes, Macedonians, and Egyptians, eche countrye usinge one singuler weapon, for which they were greatlye feared in warre, as the Spaniarde Lancea, the Frenchman Gefa, the Germane Framea, the Grecian Machera, the Macedonian Sarissa, yet could they not escape but be subjectes to the empyre of Rome, when the Parthians, having all theyr hope in artillerye, gave no place to them, but overcame the Romaynes ofter than the Romaynes them, and Crass. & in kept battel with them many an hundred yeare, and slue the riche Crasfus and his fonne, with many a fout Romayne more, with theyr bowes; they drave Marcus Antonius over the hills of Media and Armenia, to his great shame and reproche; they slue Julianus Apostata, and Antoninus Caracalla; they held in perpetuall prison the most noble Emperour Valerian, in despyte of all the Romaynes and many other princes, which wrote for his deliveraunce, as Belfolis, called King of Kinges, Valerius Kinge of Cadufia, Arthabefdes King of Armenia, and manye other Princes more, whome the Parthians, by reason of theyr artillerye, regarded never one whitte, and thus with the Romaynes, I maye conclude, that the borders of theyr empyre were not at the funne ryfinge and Plutarch, in M. Anton.

Ael. Spart.

and funne fettinge, as Tullye fayth; but so farre they went, as artillerye would geve them leave. For, I thinck, all the ground that they had, eyther Northward, further than the borders of Scythia, or Eastward, further than the borders of Parthia, a man might have bought with a Paulus Dia. fmall deale of money, of which thinge furely shooting was the cause.

From the same country of Scythia, the Gothians, Hunnes, and Vandalians, came with the same weapon of artillerye, as Paulus Diaconus doth saye, and so berest Rome of her empyre by syre, spoyle, and waste, so that in such a learned city was left scarce one man behinde, that had learninge or leisure to leave in writinge to them which should come after how so noble an empyre, in so short a while, by a rabble of banished bond-men, withoute all order and pollicye, save onely P. Mela. theyr naturall and dailye exercyse in artillerye, was broughte to such thraldome and ruine.

After them the Turkes, having another name but yet the same people, borne in Scythia, brought uppe onely in artillerye, by the fame weapon have subdued and bereft from the Christen men all Asia and Affricke (to speak upon) and the most noble countryes of Europe, to the greate demynishing of Christes Religion, to the greate reproache of cowardyse of all Christianitye, a manifest token of Gods high wrath and displeasure over the sinne of the worlde, but specially amonges Christen men, which be on slepe, made druncke with the fruites of the flesh, as infidelitye, disobedience to Gods word, and herefie, grudge, ill will, strife, open battaile, and privy envye, covetousnesse, oppression, unmercifulnesse, with innumerable fortes of unspeakable daily bawdrye: which thinges furelye, if God holde not his holye hand over us, and plucke us from them, will bringe us to a more Turkishnes, and more beaftelye blind barbarousnesse, as callinge ill thinges good, and good thinges ill. Contemnynge of knowledge and learninge, fettinge at nought, and having for a fable, God and his hyghe providence, will bringe us, I fay, to a more ungracious Turkishnes, if more Turkishnes can be than this, than if the Turkes had fworne to brynge all Turkye against us. For these fruites furely must needes sprynge of such seede, and fuch effect needes folow of fuch a cause, if reason, truth, and God be not altered, but as they are wont to be. For furelye no Turkishe P 2 power power can overthrow us, if Turkiske lyfe do not caste us downe before. If God were with us, it buted not the Turke to be against us, but our unfaythfull finneful livinge which is the Turkes mother, and hath brought him uppe hitherto, muste needes turne God from us, because sinne and he hath no felowshippe together. If we banished ill lyvinge oute of Christendome, I am fure the Turke should not onely not overcome us, but scarce have an hole to runne into in his owne countrye.

Nota.

But Christendome now, I may tell you, Philologe, is much like a man that hath an itch on him, and lyeth dronke also in his bed, and though a theefe come to the dore, and heaveth at it, to come in and fleye him, vet he lyeth in his bedde, having more pleasure to lye in a slumber and fcratch himselfe where it itcheth, even to the harde bone, than he hath redinesse to rise uppe lustely, and drive him away that would robbe him and fleye him. But, I trust, Christ will so lighten and lift uppe Christen mens eyes, that they shall not sleepe to death, nor that the Turke, Christs open enemy, shall ever boast that he hath quite overthrowen us.

bus Turc.

But, as I began to tell you, shootinge is the chyefe thinge wherewith God fuffereth the Turke to punishe our noughtye lyvinge withall: the youth there is broughte uppe in shootinge, his privy garde for his own persoune is bowmen, the might of theyr shootinge is well knowen Casp. de re- of the Spanyardes, which at the town called Newecastle, in Illyrica, were quite flaine uppe, of the Turkes arrowes: when the Spanyardes had no use of theyr gunnes by reason of the raine. And now, last of all, the Emperours majestye himselfe, at the citye of Argier in Affricke, had his hoast fore handled with the Turkes arrowes, when his gunnes were quite dispatched, and stode him in no service because of the raine that fell, whereas in fuch a chaunce of raine, if he had had bowmen, furely theyr shotte mighte peradventure have bene a little hindered, but quite dispatched and marde it could never have bene. But, as for the Turkes, I am werye to talke of them, partlye because I hate them, and partlye because I am now affectioned even as it were a man that had bene longe wanderinge in straunge countries, and would fayne be at home to fee how well his own frendes prosper and lead theyr lyfe. And furelye, me thincke, I am verye merye at my hart to remember how how I shall finde at home in Englande, amonges Englishmen, partely by historyes of them that have gone afore us, againe by experience of them which we knowe and live with us, as greate noble feates of warre by artillerye as ever was done at anye time in any other common wealthe. And here I must nedes remember a certaine Frenchman, called Textor, that writeth a booke which he nameth Officina, wherein he weaveth up many broken ended matters, and fettes out much riffraffe, pelfery, trumpery, baggage, and beggery ware, clamparde up of one that would feeme to be fitter for a shop indede than to wryte anye booke. And, amonges all other ill packed up matters, he thrustes uppe in a heepe together all the good shooters that ever hath bene in the worlde, as he fayth himselfe, and yet I trowe, Philologe, that all the examples which I now, by chaunce, have reherfed out of the best authors both in Greke and Latine, Textor hath but two of them, which two furelye, if they were to reckon againe, I would not ones name them. partiye because they were noughtye persons, and shootinge so muche the worse, because they loved it, as Domitian and Commodus, the Emperours: partlye because Textor hath them in his booke, on whom I loked by chaunce in the booke-binders shoppe, thinckinge of no such matter. And one thinge I will saye to you, Philologe, that if I were dispofed to do it, and you had leyfure to hear it, I could fone do as Textor doth, and reckon uppe such a rabble of shooters that be named here and there in poetes, as would hold us talkinge whiles to-morrow: but my purpose was not to make mention of those which were fayned of poetes for theyr pleasure, but of suche as were proved in historyes for a truthe. But why I bringe in Textor was this: at last, when he hath rekened all shooters that he can, he fayth thus, Petrus Crinitus P. Crin. 3. wryteth, that the Scottes, which dwell beyonde Englande, be very excel- 10. lent shooters, and the best bowmen in warre. This sentence, whether Crinitus wrote it more leudlye of ignorance, or Textor confirmeth it more pivishlye of envye, maye be called in question and doubt, but this furelye do I knowe verye well, that Textor hath both redde in Gaguinus the Frenche historye, and also hath hearde his father or graunde father talke (excepte per chaunce he was born and bredde in a cloyster) after that fort of the shootinge of Englishmen, that Textor neded not to have gone so pivishlye beyonde Englande for shootinge, but might very soon, even into the first towne of Kent, have found such plentye of shootinge, as is not in all the realme of Scotlande againe. The Scottes surelye be good men of warre in theyr owne feates as can be: but as for shootinge, they neyther can use it for any prosite, nor yet will chalenge it for any praise, althoughe Maister Textor, of his gentlenesse, would geve it them. Textor needed not to have filled up his booke with such John Maj. 6. lyes, if he had redde the historye of Scotlande, which Johannes Major doth wryte: wherein he might have learned, that when James Stewart, first Kinge of that name, at the parliamente holden at Saint Johns towne, or Perthie, commaundinge under paine of great forsite, that everye Scotte should learne to shoote: yet neyther the love of theyr countrye, the feare of theyr enemyes, the avoydinge of punishment, nor the receyvinge of any prosite that might come by it, could make them to be good archers: which be unapte and unsitte thereunto by Gods providence and nature.

Therefore the Scottes themselves prove Textor a lyer, both with auctoritye and also daily experience, and by a certaine proverbe that they have amonges theyr communication, whereby they geve the whole prayse of shootinge honestlye to Englishmen, sayinge thus: that Every English archer beareth under his girdle twenty-four Scottes.

John Major But to let Textor and the Scottes go, yet one thinge would I wishe 6. Hist. Scot. for the Scottes, and that is this, that seeinge one God, one fayth, one compasse of the sea, one land and countrye, one tounge in speakinge, one maner and trade in lyvinge, like courage and stomache in warre, like quickenesse of witte to learninge, hath made Englande and Scotlande both one, they would suffer them no longer to be two: but cleane geve over the Pope, which seeketh none other thinge (as manye a noble and wyse Scottisse man doth knowe) but to fede uppe dissention and parties betwixte them and us, procuringe that thinge to be two, which God, nature, and reason would have one.

How profitable fuch an * attonemente were for Scotlande, both Johannes Major and Hector Boetius, which wrote the Scottes chronicles, do tell, and also all the gentlemen of Scotlande, with the poore communaltye, do well knowe: so that there is nothinge that stoppeth this matter, save only a few fryers, and fuch like, which, with the dregges of our Englishe Papistrye lurkinge amonges them, studye nothing els but to brewe battaile and strife betwixt both the people: whereby onlye they hope to maintaine theyr papisticall kingdome, to the destruction of the noble bloude of Scotlande, that then they maye with authoritye do that, which neyther noble man nor poor man in Scotlande yet doth know. And as for Scottishe men and Englishe men be not ennemyes by nature, but by custome; not by our good will, but by theyr own follye: which should take more honour in being copled to Englande, than we should take profite in beinge joyned to Scotlande.

* Attonement is Union, or the act of fetting at one:

Wales beinge headye and rebelling many yeares against us, laye wilde, untylled, uninhabited, without lawe, justice, civilitye and order; and then was amonges them more stealinge than true dealinge, more suretye for them that studyed to be nought, than quietnesse for them that laboured to be good: when nowe, thanked be God and noble Englande, there is no countrye better inhabited, more civile, more diligent in honest crastes, to get both true and plentifull livinge withall. And this felicitye (my minde geveth me) should have chaunced also to Scotlande, by the godlye wysedome of the most noble Prince Kinge Henrye the VIII. by whom God wrought more wonderfull thinges than ever by anye Prince before: as banishinge the bishoppe of Rome and heresye, bringinge to light Gods word and veritye, establishinge such justice and equitye throughe everye part of this realme, as never was seene afore.

But Textor (I beshrowe him) hath almost brought us from our communication of shootinge. Now Sir, by my judgemente, the artillerye of Englande farre exceedeth all other realmes: but yet one thinge I doubt, and long have surely in that point doubted, when, or by whom, shootinge was first brought into Englande; and, for the same purpose, as I was once in companye with Sir Thomas Eliot knighte, which surely for his learninge in all kinde of knowledge, brought muche worshippe to all the nobilitye of Englande, I was so bould to aske him, if he at any time had marked any thinge, as concerninge the bringinge in of shootinge into Englande: he aunswered me gentlye againe, he had a worke in hand, which he nameth, De rebus memorabilibus Angliae, which I trust we shall see in print shortlye, and, for the accomplishement of that booke, he had redde and perused over manye ould monuments of Englande, and, in seeking for that purpose, he marked this of shootinge in an excedinge olde chronicle, the which had no name, that what time as the Saxons came first into this realme, in kinge Vortigers dayes, when they had bene here a while, and at last began to faule out with the Britaynes, they troubled and subdued the Britaynes with nothinge so much as with theyr bowe and shaftes, which weapon beinge straunge and not seene here before, was wonderfull terrible unto them, and this beginninge I can thincke verye well to be true. But now as concerninge many examples for the prayse of Englishe archers in warre, surelye I will not be longe in a matter that no man doubteth in, and those fewe that I will name, shall eyther be proved by the historyes of our enemyes, or els done by men that now live.

King Edwarde the third, at the battaile of Cressie, against Philip the French King, as Gaguinus, the French historiographer, plainlye doth tell, slewe that daye all the nobilitye of Fraunce onlye with his archers.

Such like battaile also fought the noble black Prince Edwarde befide PoiEters, where John the French Kinge, with his sonne, and in a manner all the peres of Fraunce were taken, besides thirty thousand which that daye were slaine, and very sew Englishe men, by reason of theyr bowes.

Kinge Henrye the fifte, a Prince perelesse and most victorious conquerour of all that ever dyed yet in this parte of the worlde, at the battle of Agincourt, with seven thousand fightings men, and yet manye of them sicke, being such archers, as the chronicle sayth, that most parte of them drewe a yarde, slewe all the chevalrye of Fraunce, to the number of forty thousand and mo, and lost not past twenty-six Englishmen.

The bloudye civili warre of Englande betwixte the house of Yorke and Lancaster, where shaftes slewe of both sydes to the destruction of manye a yoman of Englande, whom foreine battell could never have subdued, both I will passe over for the pytisulnesse of it, and yet maye we highlye prayse God in the remembraunce of it, seinge he, of his providence, hath so knitte together those two noble houses, with so noble and pleasaunte a flowre.

The excellent Prince Thomas Howarde Duke of Norfolke, with bowemen of Englande, slewe Kinge Jamye with manye a noble Scotte, even brant against Floden hill, in which battell the stoute archers of Chefshyre and Lancashyre, for one daye bestowed to the death for theyr Prince and countrye sake, hath gotten immortall name and prayse for ever.

The feare onlye of Englishe archers hath done more wonderfull thinges than ever I redde in anye historye, Greke or Latine, and most wonderfull of all now of late, besyde Carlishe, betwixt Eske and Leven, at Sandyesikes, where the whole nobilitye of Scotlande, for feare of the archers of Englande, (next the stroke of God) as both Englishe and Scottishe men that were present hath tolde me, were drowned and taken prisoners.

Nor that noble acte also, which althoughe it be almost lost by time, cometh not behinde in worthinesse, which my singular good frende and maister Sir William Walgrave, and Sir George Somerset did, with a fewe archers, to the number, as it is sayd, of sixteen, at the turnpike besyde Hammes, where they turned with so fewe archers so manye Frenchmen to slight, and turned so manye out of theyr * jackes, which turne turned all Fraunce to shame and reproach; and those two noble knightes to perpetuall prayse and same.

And thus you fee, Philologe, in all countryes, Asia, Affricke, and Europe, in Inde, Ethiop. Egypt, and Jurie, Parthia, Persia, Grece and Italye, Scythia, Turkye, and Englande, from the beginninge of the world even to this daye, that shootinge hath had the chiefe stroke in warre.

Phi. These examples surely apte for the prayse of shootinge, not sayned by poetes, but proved by true historyes, distinct by time and order, hath delited me exceeding much, but yet methincke that all this prayse belongeth to stronge shootinge and drawinge of mightye bowes, not to prickinge and nere shootinge, for which cause you and many other doth love and use shootinge.

Tox. Evermore, Philologe, you will have some overthwarte reason to drawe forth more communication withal, but, neverthelesse, you shall perceyve if you will, that use of prickinge, and desire of nere shootinge at home, are the onlye causes of stronge shootinge in warre, and why? For you fee that the stronge men do not draw alwayes the strongest fhote, which thinge proveth that drawinge stronge lyeth not fo much in the screngthe of man, as in the use of shootinge. And experience teacheth the fame in other thinges, for you shall see a weake fmithe, which will with a * lipe and turninge of his arme, take uppe a barre of yron, that another man, thrife as stronge, cannot stirre. And a stronge man not used to shoote, hath his armes, breast and fhoulders, and other parts wherewith he should drawe stronglye, one hinderinge and stoppinge another, even as a dozen stronge horses not used to the cart, lettes and troubles one another. And so the more stronge man not used to shoote, shootes most unhansumlye, but yet if a strong man with use of shooting coulde apply all the partes of his bodye together, to theyr moste strength, then should he both drawe stronger than other, and also shoote better than other. But nowe a stronge man not used to shoote, at a girde, can heve up and plucke in funder many a good bowe, as wilde horses at a brunt doth race and plucke in pieces many a stronge carte. And thus stronge men, without use, can do nothinge in shootinge to any purpose, neyther in warre nor peace, but if they happen to shoote, yet they have done within a fhote or two, when a weake man that is used to shoote, shall serve for all times and purposes, and shall shoote ten shaftes against the others four, and drawe them uppe to the pointe every time, and shoote them to the most advantage, drawinge and withdrawinge his shafte when he list, marking at one man, yet letdryvinge at an other man: which thinges, in a fet battaile, althoughe a man shall not alwayes use, yet in bickeringes, and at overthwart meetinges, when few archers be together. they do most good of all.

* A Jack is a coat of mail.

Againe, he that is not used to shoote, shall evermore with untoward-nesse of houldinge his bowe, and nockinge his shafte, not lokinge to his stringe betime, put his bowe alwayes in jeopardye of breakinge, and then he were better to be at home, moreover he shall shoote very few fhaftes, and those full unhandfumly, some not halfe drawen, some to high and some to low, nor he cannot drive a shote at a time, nor stoppe a shote at a nede, but out must it, and very oft to evill profe.

* The word Lipe I never saw, and know not whether I understand it; if it be the same as leap, it may mean a jerk or sudden motion.

Shaftes.

Pні. And that is best, I trowe, in warre, to let it go, and not to Tox. No not fo, but some time to hould a shaft at stoppe it. the head, which, if they be but few archers, doth more good with the fear of it, than it should do if it were shotte with the stroke of Pнт. That is a wonder to me, that the fear of a displeasure should do more harme than the displeasure itselfe. Tox. Yes, ye knowe that a man which feareth to be banished oute of his countrye, can neyther be merye, eate, drincke, nor fleepe for feare; yet when he is banished in dede, he sleepeth and eateth as well as any other. And many men, doubtinge and fearinge whether they should dye or no, even for very fear of death, preventeth themselfe with a more bitter death, than the other death should have bene indede. And thus fear is worse than the thing feared, as is pretelye proved by the communication of Cyrus and Tigranes, the Kinges sonne of Armenie, in Ze-Cyroped. 3. nophon.

PHI. I graunt, Toxophile, that use of shootinge maketh a man drawe stronge, to shoote at most advantage, to kepe his gere, which is no fmall thinge in warre; but yet methincke that the customable shootinge at home, speciallye at buttes and prickes, make nothinge at all for stronge shootinge, which doth most good in warre. Therefore, I suppose, if men should use to go into the fieldes, and learne to shoote mightye stronge shotes, and never care for anye mark at all, they should do much better. Tox. The truthe is, that fashion much used would do much good, but this is to be feared, least that wave could not provoke men to use much shootinge, because there should be litle pleasure in it. And that in shooting is beste, that provoketh a man to use shooting most: for much use maketh men shoote both stronge and well, which two thinges in shooting every man doth defyre. And the chiefe maintayner of use in anye thinge is comparison and honest contention. For when a man stryveth to be better than an other, he will gladlye use that thinge, though it be never so painful, wherein he would excell, which thinge Aristotle very pretelye doth note, fayinge, " Where

"Where is comparison, there is victorye; where is victorye there is Arift Riet." pleasure: and where is pleasure, no man careth what labour or paine

" he taketh, because of the prayse and pleasure that he shall have in " doing better than other men."

Hefiod. in Op. et die.

Agayne, you knowe, Heftodus writeth to his brother Perfes, "that all craftesmen, by contendinge one honestlye with another, do encrease theyr cunninge with theyr substance." And therefore in London, and other great cityes, men of one crafte, most commonlye, dwell together, because in honest strivinge together, who shall do best, everye one maye waxe both cunninger and rycher. So likewyse in shootinge, to make matches to assemble archers together, to contend who shall shoote best, and winne the game, encreaseth the use of shootinge wonderfullye amonges men.

Phi. Of use you speake verye muche, Texophile, but I am sure in all other matters use can do nothinge, withoute two other thinges be joyned with it, one is a naturall aptnesse to a thinge, the other is a true waye or knowledge, howe to do the thinge, to which two if use be joyned as thirde selowe of them three, procedeth perfectnesse and excellencye: if a man lacke the first two, aptnesse and cunninge, use can do little good at all.

For he that would be an oratour, and is nothinge naturally fitte for it, that is to faye, lacketh a good witte and memorye, lacketh a good voyce, countenaunce and bodye, and other fuch like, yea, if he had all these, and knowe not what, howe, where, when, nor to whom he shoulde speake, surely the use of speakinge would bringe oute none other fruite but plain follye and bablinge, fo that use is the last and the least necessarye of all three, yet nothinge can be done excellentlye withoute them all three; and therefore, Toxophile, I myselfe, because I never knewe whether I was apte for shootinge or no, nor never knewe waye howe I should learne to shoote, I have not used to shoote: and so, I thincke, five hundred more in Englande do besyde me. And furelye, if I knewe that I were apte, and that you would teache me how to shoote, I would become an archer, and the rather because of the good communication, the which I have had with you this daye Tox. Aptnesse, knowledge, and use, even as you of shootinge. fay, make all thinges perfecte. Aptnesse is the first and chiefest thing, withoute withoute which the other two do no good at all. Knowledge doth encrease all maner of aptnesse both lesse and more. Use, sayth Cicero, is farre above all teaching. And thus they all three must be had, to do any thing very well, and if any one be away, whatsoever is done, is done very meanelye. Aptnesse is the gift of nature, knowledge is gotten by the helpe of other; use lyeth in our owne diligence and labour; so that aptnesse and use be ours and within us, through nature and labour; knowledge not ours, but comminge by other: and therefore most diligently of all men to be sought for. Howe these three thinges stande with the artillerye of Englande, a word or two I will say.

All Englishe men, generally, be apt for shootinge, and howe? Lyke as that grounde is plentiful and fruitful, which, without any tillinge, bringeth out corne; as, for example, if a man shoulde goe to the mill or market with corne, and happen to spill some in the waye, yet it would take roote and growe, because the soyle is so good; so Englande may be thought very fruitful, and apte to bringe out shooters, where children, even from the craddle. Love it, and yonge men, without any teaching, fo diligently use it. Again, likewise, as a good ground, well tylled and well husbanded, bringeth out great plenty of byg eared corne, and good to the faule: fo if the youthe of Englande, beinge apte of itfelfe to shoote, were taught and learned howe to shoote, the archers of Englande should not be onely a great deale ranker, and mo than they be; but also a good deale bigger and stronger archers than they be. This commodity should followe also, if the youthe of Englande were taughte to shoote, that even as plowinge of a good grounde for wheate, doth not only make it meete for the feede, but also ryveth and plucketh up by the rootes all thistles, brambles and weeds, which growe of their own accorde, to the destruction of both come and grounde: Even so should the teachinge of youthe to shoote, not only make them shoote well, but also plucke awaye by the rootes all other defyre to noughtye pastimes, as dyfinge, cardinge, and boulinge, which, without any teaching, are used every where, to the great harme of all youth of this realme. And likewise, as burning of thistles, and diligente weeding them out of the corne, doth not halfe fo much rydde them, as when the ground is falloed and tilled for good grayne, as I have heard many a good husbandman faye: even so, neither hote punishment, nor yet diligent diligent fearching out of fuch unthriftinesse by the officers, shall so thorowly weede these ungratious games out of the realme, as occupying and bringing up youth in shootinge, and other honest passime. Thirdly, as a grounde which is apt for corne, and also well tilled for corne; yet if a man let it lye still, and do not occupy it three or four yeare; but then will sowe it, if it be wheat, sayth Columella, it will turn into rye: so if a man be never so apt to shoote, nor never so well taughte in his youth to shoote, yet if he geve it over, and not use to shoote, truly when he shall be eyther compelled in warre time for his countrys sake, or else provoked at home for his pleasure sake, to saule to his bowe: he shall become of a fayre archer, a starke squyrter and dribber. Therefore in shootinge, as in all other thinges, there can neither be many in number, nor excellent in deede, excepte these three thinges, aptnesse, knowledge, and use, go together.

Pur. Very well fayd, Toxophile, and I promife you, I agree to this judgement of yours together, and therefore I cannot little marveile, why Englishe men bringe no more helpe to shootinge, than nature itselfe geveth them. For you see that even children be put to their own shiftes in shootinge, havinge nothinge taughte them: but that they may choose, and chaunce to shoot ill, rather then well, unaptlye soner then fitlye, untowardlye more easely then well favoredly, which thinge causeth many never begin to shoote, and mo to leave it off when they have begun: and most of all to shoote both worse and weaker than they might shoote, if they were taught.

But peradventure some men will say, that with use of shootinge a man shall learn to shoote; true it is, he shall learne, but what shall he learne? Mary to shoote noughtlie. For all use, in all thinges, if it be not stayed by cunning, will very easely bring a man to do that thing, whatsoever he goeth about, with much ilfavorednesse and deformitye. Which thingehow much harme it doth in learninge, both Crassus excellently doth prove in Tully, and I myselfe have experience in my litle shootinge. And therefore, Toxophile, you must needes graunt me, that eyther Englishe men do ill, in not joyning knowledge of shootinge to use, or els there is no knowledge or cunning which can be gathered of shootinge.

Tox.

Tox. Learning to shoote is little regarded in Englande, for this confideration, because men be so apte by nature they have a greate ready forwardnesse and will to use it, although no man teache them, although no man bidde them, and so of their own courage they runne hedlynge on it, and shoote they ill, shoote they well, great heede they take not. And, in verye deede, aptnesse with use may do somewhat without knowledge, but not the tenthe parte, if so be they were joyned with knowledge. Which three thinges be separate as you see, not of their owne kinde, but through the negligence of men which coupled them not together. And where ye doubt, whether there can be gathered any knowledge or arte in shootinge or no, surelye I thincke that a man, being well exercised in it, and somewhat honestlye learned withall, might foone, with diligent observing and marking the whole nature of floots ing, find out, as it were, an art of it, as artes in other matters have bene founde out afore, seeing that shootinge standeth by those thinges, which may both be thorowlye perceyved, and perfectly knowen, and fuch that never fails, but be ever certaine, belonging to one most perfect ende, as shooting straight and keeping of a lengthe bringe a man to hitte the marke, the chiefe ende in shootinge, which two thinges a man maye attaine unto, by dyligente usinge and well handeling those instruments which belonge unto them. Therefore I cannot see, but there lyeth hidde in the nature of shootinge an arte, which, by noting and observing of them that is exercised in it, if he be any thing learned at all, may be taught, to the great furtheraunce of artillerye throughe oute all this realme: and truely I marveile greatlye, that Englishe men woulde never yet feeke for the arte of shootinge, feeinge they be fo apt unto it, fo prayled of their friendes, so feared of their enemies for it. Vegetius would have maisters appointed, which should teache Vegetius. youthe to shoote fayre. Leo the Emperour of Rome sheweth the same Leo. 6. 5. custome to have been alwayes amongest the olde Romaines: which custome of teachinge youth to shoote, (fayth he) after it was omitted and litle hede taken of, brought the whole empyre of Rome to greate Strabo, 11. ruine. Schola Persica, that is, the schole of the Persians, appointed to bringe up youth, whiles they were twenty yeare olde, only in shootinge, is as notably knowne in historyes as the empyre of the Persians: which schole, as doth appear in Cornelius Tacitus, as sone as they gave over Cor. Tac. 2.

and fell to other idle pastimes, broughte both them and the Parthians under the subjection of the Romaines. Plato would have common maifters and stipendes, for to teache youthe to shoote, and, for the same purpose, De leg. 7. be would have a broade fielde neare everye citie, made common for men to use shootinge in. Whiche sayinge, the more reasonablye it is spoken of Plato the more unreasonable is their deede, which would ditche up those fieldes privatelye for their own profite, which lyeth open generallye for the common use: men by such goods be made richer, not honester, De Offic, 2. fayth Tullye. If men be perfuaded to have shootinge taughte, this authoritye which followeth will perfwade them, or else none, and that is, as I have ones fayde before, of King David, whose first acte and ordinaunce was, after he was Kinge, that all Judea should learne to shoote. If shootinge coulde speake, she woulde accuse Englande of unkindnesse and flothfulnesse; of unkindnesse toward her, because she beinge left to a little blind use, lackes her best maintainer which is cunninge: of slothfulnesse towarde their owne selfe, because they are content with that which aptnesse and use doth graunt them in shootinge, and will seek for no knowledge as other noble common wealthes have done: and the justlier shooting might make this complaint, seeinge that of sence and weapons there is made an arte, a thinge in no wyfe to be compared to shootinge. For of fence, almost in everye towne, there is not onely maisters to teach it, with his provosters, ushers, scholers, and other names of arte and schole, but there hath not fayled also, which hath diligentlye and * favouredlye written it, and is fet out in printe, that everye man maye reade it.

What discommoditye doth come by the lacke of knowledge, in shootinge, it were over long to rehearse. For manye that have been apte, and loved shootinge, because they knewe not whiche waye to houlde to come to shootinge, have cleane turned themselves from shootinge. And I maye tell you, Philologe, the lacke of teachinge to shoote in Englande causeth very many men to play with the Kinges actes, as a man did ones, eyther with the Mayor of London or York, I cannot tell whether, which did commaund by proclamation, every man in the citye to hange a lanterne, with a candell, afore his dore: which thinge the man did, but he did not light it; and so many bye bowes, because of the * acte, but yet they shoote not, not of evil will, but because they knowe not howe to shoote. But, to conclude of this matter, in shootinge as in all other thinges, aptnesse is the first and chiefe thinge, which if it be awaye, Aptnesse, neyther cunninge nor use doth any good at all, as the Scottes and Frenchmen, with knowledge and use of shootinge, shall become good archers, when a cunninge ship-wright shall make a strong shippe of a sallowe tree; or when a hufbandman shall become riche, with sowinge wheat on Newmarket heath. Cunninge must be had, both to set out and Cunninge. amend nature, and also to overfee and correct use, which use, if it be not led, and governed with cunning, shall soner go amisse, than straight. Use maketh perfitnesse in doing that thinge, whereunto nature maketh a man apt, and knowledge maketh a man cunninge before. So that it is not fo doubtful, which of them three hath most stroke in shootinge, as it is plaine and evidente, that all three must be had in excellent shootinge. Phi. For this communication, Toxophile, I am very glad, and that for mine own fake, because I trust now to become a shooter. And indede I thought afore, Englishe men most apt for shootinge, and I faw them dailye use shootinge, but yet I never found none, that would talke of anye knowledge whereby a man might come to shootinge. Therefore I trust that you, by the use you have had in shootinge, have fo thorowly marked and noted the nature of it, that you can teache me, as it were by a trade or way, how to come to it. graunt I have used shootinge metelye well: that I might have marked it well enough, if I had bene diligent. But my much shootinge hath caused me studye litle, so that thereby I lacke learninge, which should fet out the art or waye in anye thinge. And you know that I was never fo well feene, in the Posteriorums of Aristotle, as to invent and fearch out general demonstrations, for the settinge forth of any new fcience. Yet, by my trouth, if you will, I will go with you into the fieldes at any time, and tell you as much as I can, or els you maye stande some time at the prickes and loke on them which shoote best, and fo learne. PHI. Howe litle you have loked of Ariflotle, and howe much learninge you have lost by shootinge, I cannot tell, but this I would faye, and if I loved you never fo ill, that you have been occupyed in some what els besyde shootinge. But, to our purpose, as I will not require a trade in shootinge to be taught me after the subtiltye of Aristotle, even so do I not agree with you in this point, that you would have

* Favouredly is, I suppose, plausibly.

* The flatute:

8. 6.

have me learne to shoote with lokinge on them which shoote best, for fo I know I should never come to shoote metelye; for in shootinge, as in all other thinges which be gotten by teachinge, there must be shewed a way, and a path, which shall leade a man to the best and chiefest point which is in shootinge, which you do mark yourselfe well enough, and uttered it also in your communication, when you fayd there lay hid in the nature of shootinge a certaine waye which, well perceyved and thoroughlye known, would bring a man, without any wanderinge, to the best ende in shootinge, which you called hittinge of the pricke. Therefore I would refer all my shootinge to that ende which is best, and fo should I come the soner to some meane. That which is best hath no faulte, nor cannot be amended. So shewe me beste shootinge, not the beste shooter, which if he be never so good, yet hath he many a faulte, easilye of any man to be espyed. And therefore marveile not if I require to followe that example which is without faulte, rather than that which hath so manye faultes. And this way everye wyse man doth folowe in teachinge any maner of thinge. As Ariftotle, when he teacheth a man to be good, he fettes not before him Socrates lyfe, which was the best man, but chief goodness itselfe; according to which he would have a man direct his life. Tox. This way which you requyre of me, Philologe, is to harde for me, and to hye for a shooter to taulke on, and taken, as I suppose, out of the middest of Philosophie, to searche out the perfite ende of any thinge, the which perfite ende to finde out, Orat. ad Bru. fayth Tullye, is the hardest thinge in the world, the onlye occasion and cause why so many sectes of Philosophers hath bene alwayes in learninge. And although, as Cicero fayth, a man maye imagine and dreame in his minde of a perfect ende in any thinge, yet there is no experience nor use of it, nor was never seene yet amonges men; as alwayes to heale the ficke, evermore to leade a shippe without daunger, at all times to hit the * pricke, shall no phisitian, no ship-maisters, no shooter ever do; and Ariflotle fayth, that in all deedes there are two points to be marked, Arift. Pol. possibilitye and excellencye, but chieflye a wyse man must folowe, and laye hande on possibilitye, for feare he lose both. Therefore, seeinge that which is most perfect and best in shootinge, as alwayes to hit the pricke, was never feene nor hard tell on yet amonges men, but onlye imagined and thought upon in a mans minde, me thincke this is the wyfest counsell, and best for us to followe rather that which a man may come to, than that which is unpossible to be attayned to, lest justlye that fayinge of the wyse Ismene in Sophocles maye be verifyed on us.

* The prick, at other times called the white, is the white spot or point in the midst of the mark.

A foole is he that takes in hande he cannot ende.

Soph. Ant.

Pm. Well, if the perfite ende of other matters had bene as perfitelye knowne, as the perfite ende of shootinge is, there had never bene so many sects of Philosophers as there be, for in shootinge both man and boy is of one opinion, that alwayes to hit the pricke is the most perfite ende that can be imagined, so that we shall not neede greatly contende in this matter. But nowe, Sir, whereas you thincke that a man in learninge to shoote, or any thinge els, should rather wyselye folowe possibilitye, than vainly seke for perfite excellencye, surelye I will prove that everye wyse man, that wysely would learne any thinge, shall chieflye go about that whereunto he knoweth well he shall never come. And you yourselfe, I suppose, shall confesse the same to be the best way in teaching, if you will aunswer me to those thinges which I will aske of you.

Tox. And that I will gladlye, both because I thincke it is impossible for you to prove it, and also because I desire to heare what you can say in it.

PHI. The studye of a good phisitian, Toxophile, I trowe be to knowe all difeases and all medycines fit for them. * Tox. It PHI. Because, I suppose, he would gladly, is fo indeed. at all times, heale all diseases of all men. Tox. Yea, trulye. PHI. A good purpose surelye, but was there ever phisition yet amonge fo manye which hath laboured in this studye, that at all times could heale all diseases? Tox. No truly, nor, I thincke, never shall Phi. Then phisitions belike, study for that, which none of them commeth unto. But in learning of fence, I pray you what is that which men most labour for? Tox. That they may hit another, I trowe, and never take blow their felfe. PHI. You fay trothe, and I am fure every one of them would fayne do fo whenfoever he playeth. But was there ever any of them fo cunninge yet, which, at one time or other, hath not been touched? Tox. The best of them all is glad fometimes to escape with a blowe. in fence also, men are taught to go about that thinge, which the best of them all knoweth he shall never attaine unto. Moreover you that be shooters. I praye you, what meane you, when ye take so great heede to kepe your standinge, to shoote compasse, to loke on your marke so diligentlye, to cast uppe grasse divers times, and other thinges more you know better than I. What would you do then, I praye you? Tox. Hit the marke if we could. Phi. And doth every man go about to hit the marke at every fhote? Tox. By my trothe I trowe fo, and, as for myfelfe, I am fure I do. PHI. But all men do not hit it all times? Tox. No, trulye, for that were a won-Phi. Can any man hit it at all times? Tox. No man trulye. Phi. Then bylikely to hit the pricke alwayes is unpossible. For that is called unpossible which is in no mans power to do. Tox. Unpossible indede. Phi. But to shoote wide and farre of the marke is a thinge possible. Tox: No man will denye that. yet to hit the marke alwayes were an excellent thinge. Tox. Excellent furely. Phi. Then I am fure those be wyser men which covet to shoot wyde, than those which covet to hit the Tox. Why fo, I praye you? Phr. Because to shoote wyde is a thinge possible, and therefore, as you saye yourselfe, of every wyse man to be followed. And as for hittinge the pricke, because it is unpossible, it were a vain thinge to go about it in good * fadnesse, Toxophile; thus you fee that a man mighte go through all craftes and fciences, and prove that any man in his fcience coveteth that which he shall never get. Tox. By my trothe (as you fay) I cannot denye but they do fo: but why and wherefore they should do fo, I cannot PHI. I will tell you. Everye crafte and science standeth in two thinges: in knowinge of his crafte, and workinge of his crafte: for perfect knowledge bringeth a man to perfect workinge: This know painters, carvers, taylors, shomakers, and all other craftesmen, to be true. Now, in every crafte there is a perfect excellencye, which may be better known in a mans minde, than followed in a mans dede. This perfectnesse, because it is generally layed as a brode wyde example afore all men, no one particular man is able to compasse it: and, as it is general to all men, so it is perpetual for all time, which proveth it a thinge for man unpossible: although not for the capacitye of our thinckinge, which is heavenlye, yet furely for the habilitye of our workinge, which De Inven. 2. is worldly. God geveth not full perfectnesse to one man (fayth Tullye) lest if one man had all in any one science, there should be nothinge left for another. Yet God suffereth us to have the perfect knowledge of it, that such a knowledge, diligently solowed, might bringe for the accordinge as a man doth laboure, perfect workinge. And who is he, that, in learninge to wryte, would for sake an excellent example, and followe a worse? Therefore, seinge perfectnesse itselfe is an example for us, let every man studye how he may come nye it, which is a point of wysedome, not reason with God why he may not attaine unto it, which is vaine curiosity.

* Here is an example of the Socratic method of disputation, which, by repeated interrogations, consutes the opponent out of his own answers.

* Sadnesse is seriousness, or earnest.

Tox. Surelye this is gaily faide, Philologe, but yet this one thinge I am afraid of, least this perfectnesse which you speake on will discourage men to take any thinge in hand, because, afore they begin, they know they shall never come to an end. And thus dispayre shall dispatch, even at the first entring it, many a good man his purpose and intent. And I think both you yourselfe, and all other men to, would counte it mere follye for a man to tell him whom he teacheth, that he shall never obtain that which he would faynest learne. And therefore this same highe and perfect way of teachinge let us leave it to higher matters, and, as for shootinge, it shall be contente with a meaner way well enough. Phr Whereas you fave that this hye perfectnesse will discourage men, because they knowe they shall never attaine unto it, I am fure, cleane contrarye, there is nothing in the worlde shall encourage men more than it. And why? For where a man feeth, that though another man be never fo excellent, yet it is poffible for himselfe to be better, what payne or labour will that man refuse to take? If the game be once wonne, no man will set forth his foote to runne. And thus perfectnesse beinge so highe a thinge that men may looke at it, not come to it, and beinge fo plentifull and indifferent to every body, that the plentifulnesse of it may provoke all men to labour, because it hath enough for all men, the indifferencye of it shall encourage every one to take more payne than his fellow, because every man is rewarded accordinge to his nye comminge, and yet, which is most marveile of all, the more men take of it, the more they leave behinde for other, as Socrates did in wyfedom, and Cicero in eloquence, whereby other hath not lacked, but hath fared a great deale the better. And thus perfectnesse itselfe, because it is never obtained, even therefore onlye dothe it cause so manye men to be well scene and perfect in many matters, as they be. But whereas you thincke that it were fondnesse to teache a man to shoote, in lookinge at the most perfectnesse in it, but rather would have a man go fome other waye to worke. I trust no wyse man will discommend that waye, excepte he thincke himselfe wyser than Tullye, which doth plainlye saye, That, if he teached anye maner of crafte, as he did Rhetoricke, he would labour to De Orat. 3. bringe a man to the knowledge of the most perfectnesse of it, which knowledge should evermore leade and guide a man to do that thinge well which he went about. Which wave in all maner of learninge to be best, Plato doth also declare in Euthydemus, of whom Tullye learned it, as he did many other thinges mo. And thus you fee, Toxophile, by what reasons, and by whose authority I do require of you this way in teachinge me to shoote; which waye, I praye you, without any delaye, shewe me as farre forth as you have noted and marked. call me to a thinge, Philologe, which I am loth to do, and yet, if I do it not, beinge but a fmall matter as you thincke, you will lacke friendshipe in me; if I take it in hande, and not bringe it to passe as you would have it, you might thincke greate want of wysedome in me.

But I advyse you, seeing you will needes have it so, the blame shall be yours, as well as myne: yours for puttinge uppon me so * instauntly; myne for receivinge so fondly a greater burthen than I am able to bear. Therefore I, more willings to fulfil your minds than hopings to accomplishe that which you loke for, shall speake of it, not as a maister of shootinge, but as one not altogether ignorant in shootings. And one thing I am glad of, the sunne drawings down so fast into the West shall compell me to drawe apace to the ende of our matter, so that his darknesse shall something cloke myne ignoraunce.

And because you knowe the orderinge of a matter better than I, aske me generally of it, and I shall particularly answere to it. Phi. Very gladly, Toxophile: for so by order those thinges which I would know, you shall tell the better; and those thinges which you shall tell, I shall remember the better.

* So importunately.

The End of the First Booke of the Schole of Shootinge.

7

TOXOPHILUS.

B.

The Seconde Booke of the SCHOLE of SHOOTINGE.

TOXOPHILUS. PHILOLOGUS.

Phi. What is the chiefe pointe in shootinge, that every man laboureth to come to? Tox. To hit the marke. Phi. How manye thinges are required to make a man evermore hit the marke? Tox. Two. Phi. Which two? Tox. Shootinge streighte, and kepinge of a lengthe. Phi. How should a man shoote streight, and how should a man keep a lengthe? Tox. In knowinge and havinge thinges belonging to shootinge; and when they be knowen and had in well handlinge of them; whereof some belonge to shootinge streight, some to kepinge of a lengthe, some commonly to them both, as shall be tolde severally of them in place convenient.

Phi. Thinges belonginge to shootinge, which be they?

Tox. * All thinges be outwarde; and some be instrumentes for every; fere archer to bringe with him, proper for his owne use: other thinges be general to every man, as the place and time serveth. Phi. Which be instrumentes? Tox. Bracer, shootinge glove, stringe, bowe,.

+ Sere is several or particular.

* The instruments of shooting are external.

PHI. Which be general to all men? Tox. The and fliafte. weather and the marke, yet the marke is ever under the rule of the weather. Phi. Wherein standeth well handlinge of thinges? Tox. Alltogether within a man himfelfe, fome handlinge is proper to instrumentes, some to the wether, some to the marke, some is within Pur. What handlinge is proper to the instrua man himselfe. mentes? Tox. Standinge, nockinge, drawinge, holdinge, lowfinge, whereby commeth fayre shootinge, which neyther belonge to winde nor wether, nor yet to the marke, for in a raine and at no marke, a man may shoote a fayre shote. Phi. Well fayd, what handlinge belongeth to the wether? Tox. Knowinge of his winde, with him, against him, syde winde, full syde winde, syde winde quarter with him, fyde winde quarter against him, and so forthe. PHI. Well then go to, what handlinge belongeth to the marke? Tox. To marke his ftandinge, to shoote compasse, to drawe evermore like, to loufe evermore like, to confider the nature of the pricke, in hilles and dales, in strayte plaines and windinge places, and also to efpye his marke. Phr. Very well done. And what is only within a man himselfe? Tox. Good heede gevinge, and avoydinge all affections: which thinges oftentimes do marre and make all. And these thinges spoken of me generally and brieflye, if they be well knowen, had, and handled, shall bringe a man to suche shootinge, as fewe or none ever yet came unto, but furely if he misse in anye one of them, he can never hitte the marke, and in the more he doth misse, the farther he shooteth from his marke. But, as in all other matters, the first steppe or stayre to be good, is to know a mans faulte, and then to amende it, and he that will not knowe his faulte, shall never amende it. Phi. You speake nowe, Toxophile, even as I woulde have you to speake; but let us returne againe unto our matter, and those thinges which you have packed up in so short a roume, we will louse them forth, and take every piece, as it were, in our hande, and loke more narrowlye upon it.

Tox. I am content, but we will rydde them as fast as we can, because the sunne goeth so fast downe, and yet somewhat must needes be sayd of every one of them. Phi. Well said, and I trowe we beganne with those thinges which be instrumentes, whereof the first, as I suppose, was the bracer.

Bracer.

Tox. Little is to be fayd of the bracer. A * bracer ferveth for two causes, one to save his arme from the strype of the stringe, and his doublet from wearing; and the other is, that the stringe glidinge sharplye and quicklye of the bracer, maye make the sharper shoote. For if the stringe shoulde lighte upon the bare sleve, the strengthe of the shoote should stoppe and dye there. But it is beste, by my judgmente, to geve the bowe so muche bent, that the stringe neede never touche a mans arme, and fo shoulde a man neede no bracer, as I knowe many good archers which occupye none. In a bracer a man must take hede of three thinges, that it have no nayles in it, that it have no buckles, that it be fast on with laces without agglettes. For the nayles will fheere in funder a mans stringe before he be ware, and so put his bowe in jeopardye: buckles and agglettes at unawares, shall race his bowe, a thinge both evill for the fighte, and perillous for freatinge. And thus a bracer is only had for this purpose, that the stringe maye have redye passage.

PHI. In my bracer I am cunninge enoughe, but what fay you of the Shootinge Tox. A shootinge glove is chieflye for to save glove. shootinge glove? a mans fingers from hurtinge, that he maye be able to beare the sharpe stringe to the uttermoste of his strengthe. And when a man shooteth, the might of his shoote lyeth on the foremost finger, and on the ringman, for the middle finger, which is the longest, like a lubber, starteth backe, and beareth no weight of the stringe in a manner at all, therefore the two other fingers must have thicker leather, and that must have thickest of all, whereon a man lowseth most, and for sure lowsinge, the formost finger is most apt, because it holdest best, and for that purpose, nature liath, as a man would fay, yocked it with the thoumbe. Leather, if it be next a mans skinne, will sweate, waxe harde and chafe, therefore scarlet, for the softnesse of it and thicknesse withall, is good to fewe within a mannes glove. If that will not ferve, but your finger hurteth, you must take a searing cloth, made of fine virgin waxe, and deres fewet, and put next your finger, and fo on with your glove. If yet you feele your finger pinched, leave shootinge, both because then you shall shoote nought, and againe by little and little, hurtinge your finger, ye shall make it longe and longe to or you shoote againe. A newe glove pluckes manye shootes, because the stringe goeth not frelye of, and therefore the fingers must be cutte shorte, and trimmed with fome ointment, that the firinge maye glyde well away. Some with holding in the nocke of their shafte harde, rubbe the skinne of their fingers. For this there be two remedyes, one to have a goofe quill * spinetted and sewed against the nockinge, betwixt the lyninge and the leather, which shall helpe the shoote much to; the other way is to have fome roule of leather fewed betwixt his fingers, at the fettinge on of the fingers, which shall kepe his fingers so in funder, that they fhall not holde the nocke fo fast as they did. The shootinge glove hath a purfe, which shall ferve to put fine linen clothe and waxe in, two necessarye thinges for a shooter. Some men use gloves, or other such like thinge on theyr bow-hand for chafinge, because they hold so hard. But that cometh commonly when a bow is not round, but fomewhat fquare; fine waxe shall do verye well in such a case to lay where a man holdeth his bow: and thus much as concerninge your glove.

* Those who write of things well known, seldom extend their care to time in which they may be known less. This account of the bracer is somewhat obscure. It seems to have been a kind of close sleeve laced upon the lest arm.

And these thinges, although they be trisses, yet because you be but a yonge shooter, I would not leave them out. Phi. And so you stringe. Stringe. The stringe, I trowe, be the next.

Tox. The next indeede; a thinge thoughe it be litle, yet not a litle to be regarded. But herein you must be content to put your trust in honest stringers. And surely stringers ought more diligently to be loked upon by the officers, than eyther bower or sletcher, because they may deceyve a simple man the more easelyer. An ill stringe breaketh many a good bowe, nor no other thinge halfe so manye. In warre, if a stringe breake the man is lost, and is no man, for his weapon is gone, and although he have two stringes put on at once, yet he shall have small leasure and lesse roume to bende his bowe, therefore God send us good stringers both for warre and peace. Now what a stringe ought to be made on, whether of good hempe, as they do nowe a dayes, or of slaxe, or of silke, I leave that to the judgement of stringers, of whom we must buy them. Eustathius, upon this verse of Homer, Eustathius.

Illad 4.

+ Twang the bowe, and twang the string, out quicklie the skaft flue: doth tell, that, in oulde time, they made theyr bowe stringes of bullox thermes,

<sup>* &#</sup>x27;pine ted is perhaps flit and opened.
+ Perhaps this line should sland thus,

&#x27;Twang the bow, and twang went the string, out quickly the shaft slue.'

thermes, which they twined together as they do ropes, and therefore they made a greate twange. Bow stringes also hath bene made of the heare of an horse tayle, called, for the matter of them, Hippias, as doth appeare in manye good authors of the Greeke tongue. Great Favorinus, stringes and litle stringes be for divers purposes: the great string is more furer for the bowe, more stable to pricke withall, but flower for the cast. The litle string is cleane contrarye, not so sure, therefore to be taken heede of, lest with longe taryinge on, it breake your bowe, more fit to shoote farre, than apt to pricke neare, therefore when you know the nature of both bigge and litle, you must fit your bowe accordinge to the occasion of your shootinge. In stringinge of your bowe (though this place belonge rather to the handlinge than to the thinge itselfe, yet because the thinge, and the handlinge of the thinge, be so joyned together, I must needes sometimes couple the one with the other) you must marke the fit length of your bowe. For, if the stringe be too fhorte, the bendinge will geve, and at the last flyp, and so put the bowe in jeopardye. If it be longe, the bendinge must nedes be in the small of the stringe, which beinge fore twyned, must needes knap in funder, to the destruction of manye good bowes. Moreover, you must looke that your bowe be well nocked, for feare the sharpnesse of the horne fhere afunder the stringe. And that chaunceth oft when in bending, the ftringe hath but one way to ftrength it withall. You must marke also to set your stringe streighte on, or els the one ende shall wrieth contrarye to the other, and fo breake your bowe. When the firinge beginneth never fo litle to weare, trust it not, but away with it, for it is an yll faved halfpeny, that coftes a man a crowne. Thus you fee how many jeopardyes hangeth over the felye poore bow, by reason onlye of the stringe. As when the stringe is shorte, when it is longe, when eyther of the nockes be noughte, when it hath but one way, and when it taryeth over longe on.

PHI. I fee well it is no marveile, though fo many bowes be broken. Tox. Bowes be broken twyfe as many wayes befyde thefe. But againe in stringinge your bowe, you must loke for much bende or litle bende, for they be cleane contrarye. The litle bende hath but one commoditye, which is in shootinge faster, and farther shoote, and the cause thereof is, because the stringe hath so farre a passage, or it part with the shaft. The great bende hath many commodities: for it maketh eafyer shooting, the bow beinge half drawen afore. It needeth no bracer, for the stringe stoppeth before it come at the arme. I will not so sone hit a mans sleve or other geare, by the same reason. It hurteth not the shaft sether, as the low bend doth. It suffereth a man better to espie his marke. Therefore let your bowe have good bigge bende, a shaftment and two singers at the least, for these which I have spoken of.

* Thermes or tharms are guts.

Bowe. Phi. The bracer, glove, and ftringe, be done, nowe you must come to the bowe, the chiefe instrument of all. Tox. Dyvers countryes and tymes have used alwayes dyvers bowes, and of dyvers fashions. Horne bowes are used in some places now, and were used also in Homerus dayes, for Pandarus bowe, the best shooter amonge all the Troyans, was made of two goate hornes joyned together, the lengthe whereof, sayth Homer, was sixteen hand-bredes, not farre differinge from the lengthe of our bowes.

Pfalme 17. Scripture maketh mention of brasse bowes. Iron bowes, and stele bowes, have bene of longe time, and also now are used among the Turkes, but yet they must nedes be unprofitable. For if brasse, iron, or stele, have their owne strengthe and pithe in them, they be farrre above mans strengthe: if they be made meete for mans strengthe, they pithe is nothinge worth to shoote any shoote withall. The E-

Hera in Pol. thiopians had bowes of palme tree, which feemed to be very stronge, but we have none experience of them. The length of them was four cubites. The men of Inde had theyr bowes made of a rede, which was of a great strength. And no marveile thoughe bowe and shaftes were

In Thal. made thereof, for the redes be so greate in Inde, as Herodotus sayth, that of everye joynte of a rede a man may make a fishers bote. These Arrianus 8. bowes, fayth Arrianus in Alexanders life, gave so greate a stroke, that no harnesse or buckler, thoughe it were never so stronge, could with-stande it. The length of such a bowe was even with the length of him that used it. The Lycians used bowes made of a tree, called in

In Polym.

Latine Cornus, (as concerninge the name of it in Englishe, I can foner prove that other men call it false, than I can tell the right name of it myselfe) this wodde is as harde as horne, and verye sitte for shaftes, Metam. 1. as shall be toulde after. Ovid sheweth that Syrinx the Nymphe, and one of the maydens of Diana, had a bowe of this wodde, whereby the poet meaneth, that it was very excellent to make bowes of.

As for Brasell, Elme, Wych, and Ashe, experience doth prove them to be but meane for bowes, and so to conclude, Ewe of all other thinges is that, whereof perfite shootinge would have a bowe made. This wodde, as it is now generall and common amonges Englishmen, so hath it continued from long time, and had in most price for bowes, amonges the Romaines, as doth appears in this halfe verse of Virgill.

Taxi torquentur in arcus.

Virgilius.

Ewe fit for a bowe to be made on.

Nowe, as I faye, a bowe of Ewe must be made for perfecte shootinge at the prickes, which marke, because it is certaine, and most certaine rules may be geven of it, shall serve for our communication at this time. A good bowe is knowen, much what as good counfayle is knowen, by the ende and profite of it; yet both a bowe and good counfayle may be made both better and worse, by well or ill handlinge of them, as oftentimes chaunceth. And as a man both must and will take counsayle of a wyfe and honest man, though he fee not the ende of it; so must a shooter, of necessitye, trust an honest and good bowyer for a bowe, afore he knowe the proofe of it. And as a wyfe man will take plenty of counfayle aforehande, whatfoever neede, fo a shooter should have alwayes three or four bowes in store, whatsoever chaunce. if I trust bowyers alwayes, sometimes I am like to be deceyved. Tox. Therefore shall I tell you some tokens in a bowe, that you shall be the feldomer deceyved. If you come into a shoppe, and find a howe that is fmall, longe, heavye, and stronge, lyinge streighte, not windinge, not marred with knotte gaule, winde shake, wem, freat or pinch, bye that bowe of my warrante. The beste colour of a bowe that I finde. is when the backe and the bellye in workinge be much what after one maner, for fuch oftentimes in wearinge do prove like virgin waxe or golde, havinge a fine longe graine, even from the one ende of the bowe to the other; the shorte graine, although such prove well sometimes, are for the most part very brittle. Of the makinge of the bowe, I will not greatly meddle, lest I should seeme to enter into an other mans occupation, which I cannot skill of. Yet I would desyre all bowyers to feafon theyr staves well, to work them and fynke them well, to geve them heetes conveniente, and * tylleringes plentye. For thereby they should both gette themselves a good name, (and a good name encreafeth a mans profite muche) and also do great commoditye to the hole realme. If anye man do offende in this poynte, I am afraid they be those journeymen, which laboure more spedelye to make many bowes for their moneye fake, than they work diligentlye to make good bowes, for the common wealth fake, not layinge before theyr eyes this wyfe proverbe, Sone enoughe, if well enoughe; wherewith every honest handy craftes man should measure, as it were with a rule, his worke withall. He that is a journeyman, and rydeth upon another mans horse, if he ryde an honest pace, no man will disalowe him: but if he make poste haste, both he that owneth the horse, and he peradventure also that afterward shall by the horse, may chaunce to curse him. Such hastinesse, I am afrayde, may also be founde amonges fome of them, which throughe oute the realme, in divers places, worke the Kinges artillerye for warre, thinking, if they get a bow or a sheafe of arrowes to some fashion, they be good enough for bearing gere. And thus that weapon, which is the chiefe defence of the realme, vervé oft doth little service to him that should use it, because it is so negligently wrought of him that should make it, when trulye I suppose that neither the bowe can be too good and chiefe woode, nor yet too well feafoned or truly made, with hetinges and tilleringes, neither that shafte too good wodde, or too thorowly wroughte, with the best pinion fethers that can be gotten, wherewith a man shall serve his Prince, defende his countrye, and fave himselfe from his enemye. And I trust no man will be angrye with me for speakinge thus, but those which finde themselves touched therein: which ought rather to be angrye with themselves for doinge, than to be miscontent with me for sayinge so. And in no case they ought to be displeased with me, seeinge this is spoken also after that fort, not for the notinge of any person severallye, but for the amendinge of everye one generallye.

But turne we againe to know a good shootinge bowe for our purpose. Everye bow is made eyther of a boughe, of a plante, or of the boole of the tree. The boughe commonlye is very knottye, and full of pinnes, weake, of small pithe, and sone will solowe the stringe, and seldome werith to anye sayre coloure, yet for children and yong beginners it may serve well enough. The plant proveth many times well, if it be of a good and cleane groweth, and, for the pithe of it, is quicke enoughe of cast, it will plye and bowe farre before it breake, as all other yonge thinges do. The boole of the tree is cleanest without knot or pin, having a fast and harde wodde, by reason of his full groweth, strong and mightye of caste, and best for a bowe, if the staves be even cloven, and be afterwarde wrought, not overthwart the woode, but as the graine and streight growinge of the woode leadeth a man, or els, by all reason, it must sone breake, and that in many shivers. This must be considered in the roughe woode, and when the bowe staves be over wroughte and fashioned. For in dressinge and pykinge it up for a bowe, it is too late to loke for it.

* Tyllcringe is a word of art which I do not understand.

But yet in these pointes, as I sayde before, you must trust an honeste bowyer, to put a good bowe in your hand, somewhat lokinge yourselse to those tokens I shewed you. And you must not slicke for a grote or twelve pence more than another man would geve, if it be a good bowe. For a good bowe twise paid for, is better than an ill bowe once broken.

Thus a shooter must begin, not at the makinge of his bowe, like a bowyer, but at the byinge of his bowe, like an archer. And, when his bowe is boughte and broughte home, afore he trust much upon it, let him trye and trimme it after this fort.

Take your bowe into the fielde, shoote in him, sincke him with deade heavye shaftes, looke where he cometh moste, provide for that place betimes, least it pinche, and so freate: when you have thus shotte in him, and perceyved good shootinge woode in him, you must have him againe to a good, cunninge, and trusty workman, which shall cutte him shorter, and pike him and dresse him fitter, make him come round compasse every where, and whipping at the endes, but with discretion, least he whippe in sunder, or els freete, soner than he is ware of: he must also laye him streight, if he be caste, or otherwise neede requyre, and if he be flatte made, gather him rounde, and so shall he both shoote the faster, for farre shootinge, and also be surer for near prickinge.

Pur. What if I come into a shoppe, and spye out a bowe, which shall both then please me very well when I bye him, and be also very fitte and meete for me when I shoote in him: so that he be both weak enoughe for easy shootinge, also quicke and speedye enoughe for farre castinge, then, I would thincke, I shall neede no more business with him, but be content with him, and use him well enoughe, and fo, by that means, avoyde both great trouble, and also some cost, which you cunninge archers very often put yourselves unto, beinge verye Englishmen, never ceasinge piddeling about theyr bowe and shaftes, when they be well, but eyther with shortinge and pykinge your bowes, or els with newe featheringe, peecinge and headinge your shaftes, can never have done untill they be starke noughte. Philologe, furelye if I have any judgmente at all in shootinge, it is no very great good taken in a bow, whereof nothinge when it is new and fresh neede be cutte away, even as Cicero sayth of a younge mans witte and style, which you know better than I. For every newe thinge must alwayes have more than it needeth, or els it will not waxe better and better, but ever decaye, and be worse and worse. Newe ale, if it runne not over the barrel when it is newe tunned, will fone leafe his * pithe, and his heade afore he be longe drawen on. And likewyse as that colte, which, at the first takinge up, needeth litle breakinge and handlinge, but is fitte and gentle enoughe for the faddle, feldome or never proveth well: even fo that bowe, which at the first byinge, without any more proof and trimminge, is fitte and easye to shoote in, shall neyther be profitable to laste longe, nor yet pleafant to shoote well. And therefore as a young horse full of courage, with handlinge and breakinge, is brought unto a fure pace and goinge, fo shall a newe bowe, fresh and quick of caste, by finking and cutting, be broughte to a ftedfast shootinge. And an easy and gentle bowe, when it is newe, is not much unlike a foft spirited boye, when he is younge. But yet, as of an unrulye boye with righte handlinge, proveth oftenest of all a well ordered man: so of an unfit and staffishe bowe. with good trimminge, must nedes followe alwayes a stedfast shootinge bowe. And suche a perfite bowe, which never will deceive a man, excepte a man deceyve it, must be had for that perfecte ende, which you loke for in shootinge.

Phi. Well, Toxophile, I fee well you be cunninger in this gere than I: but put the cafe that I have three or foure fuch good bowes, pyked and dressed as you now speake of, yet I do remember that many learned men do say, that it is easyer to get a good thinge, than to save and kepe a good thinge, wherefore, if thou can teach me as concerninge that point, you have satisfyed me plentifullye, as concerninge a bowe.

# Pithe is strength, spriteliness, vigour, power of action.

Tox. Trulye it was the next thinge that I would have come unto, for fo the matter laye. When you have brought your bowe to fuch a pointe, as I spake of, then you must have a harden or wullen cloth waxed, wherewith every daye you must rubbe and chase your bowe, till it shyne and glitter withall. Which thinge shall cause it both to be cleane, well savoured, goodlye of coloure, and shall also bringe, as it were, a cruste over it, that is to saye, shall make it everye where on the out syde, so slipperye and harde, that neyther anye weete or weather can enter to hurte it, nor yet anye freate, or pinche, be able to byte upon it: but that you shall do it greate wronge before you breake it. This must be done oftentimes, but especially when you come from shootinge.

Beware also when you shoote of your shafte heades, dagger, knyves, or agglettes, lest they race your bowe, a thinge, as I sayde before, both unsemelye to loke on, and also daungerous for freates. Take heede also of mistye and dankinshe dayes, which shall hurt a bowe more than anye rayne. For then you must eyther alwaye rubbe it, or els leave shootinge.

Your bowe case (this I did not promise to speake of, because it is Bowe case, without the nature of shootinge, or els I should trouble me with other thinges infinite more: yet seinge it is a savegarde for the bowe, some thinge I will saye of it) your bowe case, I saye, if you ryde forthe, must neyther be to wyde for your bowes, for so shall one clappe uppon an other, and hurt them, nor yet so strayte that scarce they can be thrust in, for that would lay them on syde, and wynde them. A bow case of lether is not the best, for that is oft times moyst, which hurteth the bowes very much.

Therefore I have feene good shooters which would have for everye bowe a fere case, made of wullen clothe, and then you maye putte three or four of them so cased, into a lether case if you will. This wullen case shall both kepe them in sunder, and also will kepe a bowe in his sull strength, that it never geve for anye weather.

 ${f T}$

At home these * woode cases be verye good for bowes to stande in. But take hede that your bowe stande not to nere a stone wall, for that will make him moyst and weake, nor yet to neare anye fyre, for that will make him shorte and brittle. And thus much as concerninge the savinge and keepinge of our bowe: now you shall heare what thinges ye must avoyde, for fear of breakinge your bowe.

A shooter chaunceth to breake his bowe commonlye four wayes, by the stringe, by the shaft, by drawinge to farre, and by freates. By the stringe, as I sayd afore, when the stringe is eyther to short, to long, not surelye put on, with one wappe, or just croked on, or shorne in sunder with an evill nocke, or suffered to tarye over long on. When the stringe sayles the bowe must needes breake, and speciallye in the middes: because both the endes have nothinge to stoppe them: but whippes so sarre backe, that the bellye must needes violently rise up, the which you shall well perceyve in bendinge of a bowe backewarde. Therefore a bowe that soloweth the stringe is least hurte with breakinge of stringes.

By the shaft a bow is broken eyther when it is to short, and so you set it in your bowe, or when the nocke breakes for litlenesse, or when the stringe slippes without the nocke for wydenesse, then you pull it to your eare and lettes it go, which must needes breake the shaft at the least, and put stringe and bow and all in jeopardye, because the strength of the bowe hath nothinge in it to stoppe the violence of it. This kinde of breakinge is most perillous for the standers by, for in such a case you shall see some time the ende of a bow slye a hoole score from a man, and that most commonly, as I have marked oft, the upper ende of the bowe.

The bow is drawne to farre two wayes. Eyther when you take a longer shaft then your owne, or els when you shift your hande to lowe or to hye for shootinge farre. This waye pulleth the backe in sunder, and then the bowe fleeth in many peces.

* There is no mention of wooden cases before, therefore it should perhaps be wool cases, unless something be lest out by the printer.

So when you fee a bowe broken, havinge the bellye rifen uppe both wayes or to one, the stringe brake it. When it is broken in two peces, in a maner even of, and speciallye in the upper ende, the shaft nocke brake it. When the backe is pulled asunder in many peces, to farre drawinge brake it. These tokens eyther alwayes be true, or els very seldome misse.

The fourthe thinge that breaketh a bowe is freates, which make a Freates. bowe redye and apt to breake by any of the three wayes afore fayde. Freates be in a shaft as well as in a bowe, and they be much like a canker, creepinge and encreasinge in those places in a bowe, which be weaker then other. And for this purpose must your bowe be well trimmed and pyked of a cunninge man, that it maye come rounde in compasse everye where. For freates you must beware, if your bow have a knot in the backe, lest the places which be next it, be not alowed stronge enoughe to bere with the knot, or els the stronge knot shall freate the weake places next it. Freates be first litle pinches, the which when you perceave, pike the places about the pinches, to make them fomewhat weaker, and as well comminge as where it pinched, and fo the pinches shall dye, and never encrease farther into freates.

Freates begin many times in a pinne, for there the good woode is corrupted, that it must nedes be weake, and because it is weake, therefore it freates. Good bowyers therefore do raise every pinne, and alowe it more woode for feare of freatinge.

Againe, bowes most commonly freate under the hand, not so much as some men suppose for the moistnesse of the hand, as for the heate of the hand, The nature of the heat, fayth Aristotle, is to loose, and not to knitte fast, and the more loofer the more weaker, the more weaker the redier to freate.

A bowe is not well made, which hath not woode plentye in the hande. For if the endes of the bowe be stiffishe, or a mans hand any thinge hote, the bellye must nedes sone frete. Remedye for freates to any purpose I never harde tell of anye, but only to make the freated place as ftrong, or ftronger, than anye other. To fill up the freate with litle shevers of a quill and glewe, as some saye will do well, by reason must be starke nought. For, put the case the freate did cease then, yet the cause which made it freate afore, (and that is weaknesse of the place) because it is not taken away, must needes make it freate againe. As for cuttinge out of freates, with all maner of peecinge of bowes, I will cleane exclude from perfite shootinge. For peeced bowes be much like ould housen, which be more chargeable to repayre then commodious to dwell in. And againe, to fwadle a bowe much about with bandes, verye feldome doth anye good, excepte it be to keepe down a foell in the backe, otherwise bandes eyther nede not, when the bowe is any thing worthe, or els boote not, when it is marde and past best. And although I know mean and poore shooters will use peeced and banded howes fometimes, because they are not able to get better when they would, yet, I am fure, if they would confider it well, they shall find it both lesse charge and more pleasure, to bestowe at any time a couple of shillinges of a newe bowe, than to bestowe ten pence of peecing an ould bowe. For better is coste upon somewhat worth, than spence upon nothinge worth. And this I speake also, because you would have me referre all to perfitenesse in shootinge.

Moreover there is another thinge, which will fone cause a bowe to be broken by one of the three wayes which be first spoken of, and that is shootinge in * Winter, when there is anye frost. Frost is wheresoever is any waterishe humour, as is in woodes, eyther more or lesse, and you knowe that all thinges frosen and isse will rather breake than bende. Yet, if a man must needes shoote at any such time, let him take his bowe and bring it to the fire, and there, by little and little, rubbe and chase it with a waxed clothe, which shall bringe it to that point, that he maye shoote safely enough in it. This rubbing with waxe, as I sayde before, is a greate succour against all wete and moystnesse. In the sieldes also, in goinge betwixt the prickes, eyther with your hand, or els with a cloth, you must kepe your bowe in such a temper.

And thus much as concerninge your bowe, howe first to knowe what woode is best for a bowe, then to chose a bowe, after to trimme a bowe, againe to kepe it in goodnesse, last of all, how to save it from all harme and evilnesse. And although many men can saye more of a bowe, yet I trust

thefe

* Boyle formewhere mentions a Pole, who related that the cold of his countries winters broke his bow.

these thinges be true, and almost sufficient for the knowledge of a perfect bowe.

Phi. Surelye I believe fo, and yet I could have heard you talke longer on it: although I cannot fee what may be fayd more of it. Therefore, excepte you will paufe a while, you may go forwarde to a shaft.

Tox. What shaftes were made of, in ould time, authors do not so Shaftes. manifestly shewe, as of bowes. Herodotus doth tell, that in the floude of Nilus there was a beaste, called a Water Horse, of whose skin, after Euterp. it was dryed, the Egyptians made shaftes and dartes. The tree called Cornus was so common to make shaftes of, that, in good authors of the Latine tongue, Cornus is taken for a shafte, as in Seneca, and that place Sen. Hipp. of Virgill, Volat itala cornus.

Virg. En. 9.

Yet, of all thinges that ever I marked of ould authors, eyther Greeke or Latine, for shaftes to be made of, there is nothinge so common as reedes. Herodotus, in describinge the mightye hoast of Xerxes, doth tell, that three greate countryes used shaftes made of a rede, the Etbiopians, In Polym. the Lycians, (whose shaftes lacked fethers, whereat I marveile most of all) and the men of Inde. The shaftes of Inde were very longe, a yarde and an halfe, as Arrianus doth saye, or, at the least, a yarde, Arrianus. 8. as 2. Curtius doth saye, and therefore they gave the greater strype, but Q. Curt. 8. yet, because they were so longe, they were the more unhansome, and lesse profitable to the men of Inde, as Curtius doth tell.

In Crete and Italy they used to have theyr shaftes of reede also. The best reede for shaftes grew in Inde, and in Rhenus, a floud of Italye. Plin. 16. 36. But, because such shaftes be neyther easye for Englishemen to get, and, if they were gotten, scarce profitable for them to use, I will let them passe, and speake of those thastes which Englishemen, at this daye, most commonly do approve and allowe. A shaft hath three principall parts, the stele, the sethers, and the head: whereof every one must be severally spoken of.

Steles be made of divers woodes: as,

Brafell,

THE WORKS OF

Brafell, Servistree, Turkie Woode, Hulder, Fusticke, Blackthorne, Sugercheste, Beche, Hardbeame, Elder,
Byrche, Aspe,

Salowe.

Asshe, Oake,

These woodes, as they be most commonly used, so they be most fit to be used: yet some one fitter then an other for divers mens shootinge, as shall be told afterward. And in this pointe, as in a bowe, you must truste an honest sletcher. Neverthelesse, although I cannot teach you to make a bowe or a shaft, which belongeth to a bowyer and a sletcher to come to they lyving, yet will I shewe you some tokens to know a bowe and a shafte, which pertayneth to an archer to come to good shootinge.

A stele must be well * scasoned for castinge, and it must be made as the graine lyeth, and as it groweth, or els it will never flye cleane, as clothe cut overthwart, and against the wull, can never hoose a man cleane. A knotty stele may be suffered in a bigge shaft, but for a little shaft it is nothing fit, both because it will never flye farre, and, befides that, it is ever in danger of breaking, it flyeth not farre because the strength of the shoote is hindered and stopped at the knot, even as a stone cast into a plaine even still water, will make the water move a great space, yet, if there be any whirlinge plat in the water, the moving ceafeth when it cometh at the whirling plat, which is not much unlike a knot in a shaft, if it be considered well. So every thing as it is plaine and straight of his own nature, so it is fittest for farre movinge. Therefore a stelle which is harde to stand in a bowe withoute knot, and streighte, (I mean not artificially estreight as the fletcher doth make it, but naturally ftreighte as it groweth in the woode) is best to make a shafte of, eyther to go cleane, flye farre, or stande furely in anye weather.

Now how bigge, how fmall, how heavye, how light, how long, how fhort, a fhaft should be particularly for every man, feeing we must talke of the general nature of shootinge, can not be toulde no more than you Rhetoricians can appoint anye one kind of wordes, of sentences, of sigures, sit for everye matter, but even as the man and the matter requireth, so the sittest to be used. Therefore, as concerninge those contraryes in a shaft, everye man must avoyde them, and drawe to the meane of them, which mean is best in all thinges. Yet if a man happen to offende in any of the extremes, it is better to offende in want and scantnesse, than in to much and outragious excedinge. As it is better to have a shaft a litle to short than over longe, somewhat to light, than over lumpishe, a litle to smal, than a greate deale to big, which thinge is not only truly sayde in shootinge, but in all other thinges that ever man goeth about, as in eatinge, taulkinge, and all other thinges like, which matter was once excellentlye disputed upon, in the scholes, you know when.

* Seasoned for casting, that is, well seasoned to hinder it from warping.

And to offende, in these contraryes, commeth much, if men take not heede, throughe the kinde of woode, whereof the shaft is made; for fome woode belonges to that exceedinge part, fome to the fcant part, fome to the meane, as Brasell, Turkie woode, Fusticke, Sugar cheste, and fuch like, make dead, heavye, lumpishe, hobbling shaftes. Againe, Hulder, Blacke thorne, Servestree, Beeche, Elder, Aspe, and Salowe, eyther for theyr weakness or lightnesse, make holow, starting, scudding, gaddinge shaftes. But Birche, Hardbeame, some Oake, and some Ashe, being both stronge enoughe to stande in a bowe, and also light enoughe to fly farre, are best for a meane, which is to be sought out in every thinge. And although I know, that some men shoote so stronge, that the deade woodes be light enough for them, and other some so weake, that the loufe woodes be likewyfe for them bigge enoughe, yet generallye, for the most part of men, the meane is the best. And so to conclude, that is alwayes best for a man, which is meetest for him. Thus no woode of his owne nature is eyther to light or to heavy, but as the shooter is himselfe which doth use it. For that shaft, which one yeare for a man is to lighte and fouddinge, for the felfe fame reason the next yeare may chaunce to be heavye and hobblinge. Therefore cannot I expresse, except generallye, what is best woode for a shafte, but let everye man, when he knoweth his owne strengthe, and the nature of everye woode, provide and fit himselfe thereafter. Yet, as concerninge sheaffe arrowes for war, (as I suppose) it were better to make them of good Ashe, and not of Aspe, as they be now a dayes. For of all other woodes woodes that ever I proved, Ashe beinge bigge is swiftest, and againe hevye to geve a great stripe withall, which Aspe shall not do. What heavinesse doth in a stripe every man by experience can tell, therefore Ashe being both * swifter and heavyer, is more sit for sheafe arrowes than Aspe, and thus much for the best woode for shaftes.

Againe likewise as no one woode can be greatlye meete for all kinde of shaftes, no more can one fashion of the stele be fit for every shooter. For those that be little breasted and bigge towarde the heade, called by theyr likenesse Taper fashion, Reshe Growne, and of some mery felowes Bobtailes, be fit for them which shoote under hand, because they shoote with a softe louse, and stresses not a shafte much in the brefte, where the weight of the bowe lyeth, as you may perceyve by the weringe of everye shafte. Againe, the bigge breasted shaft is fit for him which shooteth right afore him, or els the breast beinge weake should never withstande that stronge pithye kinde of shootinge; thus, the under hand must have a smal brest to go clene away out of the bowc, the fore hand must have a bigge breste to beare the great might of the bowe. The fhaft must be made rounde, nothinge flat, without gall or wemme, for this purpole. For because roundnesse (whether you take example in heaven or in earthe) is fittest shappe and forme both for fast movinge, and also for sone percinge of any thinge. And therefore Ariftotle fayth, that nature hath made the raine to be rounde, because it should the easelyer enter through the ayre.

The nocke of the shaft is diversely made, for some be great and full, some handsome and litle; some wyde, some narowe, some deepe, some shalowe, some rounde, some longe, some with one nocke, some with double nocke, whereof every one hath his propertye. The great and full nocke may be well felt, and manye wayes they save a shaft from breakinge. The handsome and litle nocke will go cleane awaye from the hand, the wyde nocke is noughte, both for breakinge of the shafte and also for sodaine slippinge out of the stringe, when the narrowe nocke doth avoyde both those harmes. The deepe and longe nocke is good in warre for sure keepinge in of the stringe. The shalowe and rounde nocke is best for our purpose in pricking for cleane

deliverance

* This account of the qualities of the ash, which is represented as having some peculiar power of swistness, is obscure. He probably means, that ash is the wood which, in a quantity proper for an arrow, has weight enough to strike hard, and I ghtness enough to sty far.

deliverance of a shoote. And double nockinge is used for double fuertye of the shafte. And thus farre as concerninge a hoole stele. Peecinge of a shaft with Brasell and Hollie, or other heavye woodes, is to make the ende * compasse heavye with the feathers in flyinge, for the stedfaster shootinge. For if the ende were plumpe heavye with leade and the wood next it light, the head ende would ever be downwards, and never flye streight. Two pointes in peecinge be enough, least the moystnesse of the earth enter to much into the peecinge, and fo loufe the glue. Therefore many pointes be more pleafaunte to the eye, than profitable for the use. Some use to peece theyr shaftes in the nocke with Brasell or hollye, to counterwey with the heade, and I have seene some for the same purpose bore an hole a litle beneath the nocke, and put leade in it. But yet none of these wayes be any thing needfull at all, for the nature of a feather in flying, if a man mark it well, is able to beare uppe a wonderful weight: and I thincke fuch peecinge came uppe first, thus: when a good archer hath broken a good shaft, in the feathers, and for the fantasie he hath had to it, he is loth to leefe it, and therefore doth he peece it. And then by and by other, either because it is gaye, or els because they will have a shaft like a good archer, cutteth theyr hole shaftes, and peeceth them againe: a thinge, by my judgmente, more costlye than nedefull. And thus have you hearde what woode, what fashion, what nockinge, what peecinge, a stele must have. Now followeth the featheringe.

Phi. I would never have thought you could have fay de half fo much of a stele, and, I thineke, as concerninge the little feather, and the playne heade, there is but little to saye. Tox. Little, Yes, truly: for there is no one thinge in all shootinge so much to be looked on as the feather. For, first, a question may be asked: Whether any other thinge befyde a feather, be sit for a shaft or no? If a feather only be sit, whether a goose feather onlye or no? If a goose feather be best, then whether there be any difference as concerning the seather of an olde goose, and a younge goose; a gander, or a goose; a fenny goose, or an uplandishe goose? Againe, which is the best feather in any goose, the right winge or the left winge, the pinion feather, or any other feather: a whyte, blacke, or greye feather? Thirdly, in setting on your feather, whether it is pared or drawn with a thicke rybbe, or a thinne rybbe, (the rybbe is the hard quill which divideth the feather) a long feather better or a shorte, set on near the nocke, or far from the nocke, set on streight, or somewhat bowinge? And whether one or two feathers runne on the bowe. Fourthlye, in coulinge or sheeringe, whether highe or lowe, whether somewhat swyne backed (I must use shooters wordes) or sadle backed, whether rounde or square shorne? And whether a shaft at any time ought to be plucked, and howe to be plucked?

* Compass heavy seems to signify proportionately heavy.

PHI. Surely, Toxophile, I thincke many fletchers, although day-lye they have these thinges in ure, if they were asked sodenly, what they could say of a fether, they could not saye so much. But I pray you let me heare you more at large expresse those thinges in a feather, the which you packed up in so narrowe a roume. And first, whether any other thing may be used for a feather or not? Tox. That was the first pointe indede, and because there soloweth many after, I will hye apace over them, as one that had many a mile to ryde. Plin. 16.36. Shaftes to have had alwayes feathers, Plinius in Latine, and *Julius Pol-*J.Pol. 1.10. lux in Greke, do plainlye shewe, yet onlye the Lycians I reade in Hero-

Herod, Pol. dotus, to have used shaftes without feathers. Onelye a feather is fit for a shaft for two causes, first because it is * leath, weake to geve place to the bowe, then because it is of that nature, that it will starte up after the bowe. So plate, woode, or horne, cannot ferve, because they will not geve place. Againe, clothe, paper, or parchmente, cannot ferve, because they will not ryse after the bowe, therefore a feather is only meete, because it only will do both. Nowe to loke on the feathers of all maner of byrdes, you shall see some so lowe, weake and fhort, fome fo courfe, store and harde, and the ribbe fo brickle, thin and narrow, that it can neither be drawen, pared, nor yet well fet on, that excepte it be a fwanne for a deade shaft, (as I knowe some good archers have used) or a ducke for a flight, which lastes but one shoote, there is no feather but onlye of a goose that hath all commodities in it. And trulye at a shorte butte, which some man doth use, the peacock feather doth feldome kepe up the shaft eyther right or level, it is so rough and heavye, fo that manye men, which have taken them up for gaynesse, hath layde them down agayne for profite, thus, for our purpose, the goose is the best feather, for the best shooter. is not fo, for the best shooter that ever was, used other feathers.

Tox. Yea, are you so cunninge in shootinge? I praye you who was that? PHI. Hercules, which had his shaftes feathered with cagles feathers, as Hesiodus doth say. Tox. Well, as for Hercules, seeing Hesiodus in neyther water nor lande, heaven nor hell, coulde fcarce content him to Scuto. Her. abyde in, it was no marveile though felye poore goofe feather coulde not please him to shoote withal; and againe, as for eagles, they flye so hye and builde fo farre of, that they be very harde to come by. Yet well fare the gentle goofe, which bringeth to a man, even to his doore, A Goofe, fo many exceeding commodities. For the goofe is mans comfort in warre and in peace, fleepinge and wakinge. What prayfe foever is geven to shootinge, the goose may challenge the best part in it. Howe well dothe she make a man fare at his table? Howe easilye dothe she make a man lye in his bedde? Howe fit even as her feathers be only for shootinge, so be her quills fit only for wrytinge. Phi. Indede, Toxophile, that is the best prayse you gave to a goose yet, and furely I would have fayde you had bene to blame, if you had overskipte it.

* Leath is limber, flexible, eafily giving way. Milton calls it lithe.

Tox. The Romaynes, I trowe, Philologe, not so much because a goose with crying faved their Capitolium, and heade toure, with their golden Jupiter, as Propertius doth fay very pretely in this verse, Anseris et tutum voce fuisse Jovem.

Propertius.

Id est,

Theves on a night had stolne Jupiter, had a goose not a kekede.

Did make a golden goose, and set her in the toppe of the Capitolium, Livius 1. and appointed also the Censores to allow out of the common butche yeare-Dec. 5. ly stipendes, for the findinge of certaine geese; the Romaynes, did not, I faye, geeve all this honour to a goose for that good dede onely, but for other infinite mo, which come daily to a man by geefe; and furelye if I should declame in the prayse of any maner of best lyvinge, I would chuse a goose. But the goose hath made us flee to farre from our matter. Now, Sir, ye have heard how a feather must be had, and that a goofe feather onlye: it followeth of a young goofe and an olde, and the refidue belonginge to a feather: which thinge I will shortlye course over; whereof, when you knowe the properties, you may fit your shaftes according to your shootinge, which rule you must observe in all other thinges to, because no one fashion or quantitye can be fit for every man, no more than a shooe or a cote can be. The olde goose U 2 feather is stiffe and stronge, good for a wynde, and sittest for a dead shaft: the younge goose feather is weake and fyne, best for a swifte thafte, and it must be couled at the first sheering, somewhat hye, for with shootinge it will sattle and faule very much. The same thing (althoughe not so much) is to be considered in a goose and a gander. A fenny goose, even as her fleshe is blacker, stoorer, unholsomer, so is her feather, for the same cause, courser, stoorer, and rougher, and therefore I have heard very good fletchers fay, that the fecond fether in fome place is better than the pinion in other fome. Betwixt the winges is litle difference, but that you must have divers shaftes of one flight. feathered with divers winges, for divers wyndes: for if the wynd and the feather go both one waye, the shafte will be caryed to much. The pinion feathers, as it hath the first place in the winge, so it hath the first place in good featheringe. You may know it afore it be pared, by a bought which is in it, and againe when it is couled, by the thickneffe above, and the thicknelle at the grounde, and also by the stiffnesse and finesse which will cary a shaft better, faster and further, even as a fine fayle cloth doth a shippe.

feather

The coloure of the feather is least to be regarded, yet somewhat to be loked on; for a good white you have fometimes an ill greye. Yet furely it standeth with good reason, to have the cocke feather blacke or greye, as it were to geve a man warninge to nocke right. The cocke feather is called that which standeth above in right nockinge. which if you do not observe, the other feathers must needes runne on the bowe, and so marre your shote. And thus farre of the goodnesse and choyce of your feather: now followeth the fetting on. Wherein you must looke that your feathers be not drawen for hastinesse, but pared even and streight with diligence. The fletcher draweth a feather when it hath but one swappe at it with his knife, and then playneth it a litle, with rubbing it over his knife. He pareth it when he taketh levfure and heede, to make everye part of the rybbe apt to stand streight and even on upon the stele. This thing, if a man take not hede on, he may chaunce have cause to say so of his fletcher, as in dressinge of meate is commonlye fayde of cookes: and that is, that God fendeth us good feathers, but the devill noughtye fletchers. If anye fletchers heard me fay thus, they would not be angrye with me, excepte they were ill fletchers: and yet by reason, those fletchers too ought rather rather to amende themselves for doing ill, than be angrye with me for saying truth. The ribbe in a stiffe feather may be thinner, for so it will stande cleaner on: but in a weake feather you must leave a thicker ribbe, or esse if the ribbe, which is the foundation and grounde wherein nature hath set every clefte of the feather, be taken to nere the feather, it must nedes folow, that the feather shall sall and droup down, even as any herbe doth which hath his roote to nere taken on with a spade. The length and shortnesse of the feather serveth for divers shaftes, as a longe feather for a longe, heavye, or byg shafte, the short feather for the contrarye. Againe, the shorte maye stande farther, the longe nerer the nocke. Your feather must stand almost streight on, but yet after that sort, that it may turne rounde in slyinge.

And here I confider the wonderfull nature of shootinge, which standeth altogether by that fashion, which is most apt for quicke movinge, and that is by roundnesse. For first the bowe must be gathered rounde, in drawinge it must come rounde compasse, the stringe must be rounde, the stele must be round, the best nocke rounde, the feather shorne somewhat rounde, the shaft in slyinge must turne rounde, and, if it slye far, it slyeth a rounde compasse, for eyther above or beneath a rounde compasse hindereth the slyinge. Moreover, both the sletcher in makinge your shaft, and you in nockinge your shaft, must take heede that two feathers equally runne on the bow. For if one feather runne alone on the bowe, it shall quickely be worne, and shall not be able to match with the other feathers; and againe, at the lowse, if the shaft be light, it will start, if it be heavye, it will hobbe. And thus as concerning settinge on of your feather. Now of coulinge.

To shere a shaft highe or lowe, must be as the shafte is, heavye or light, great or litle, long or short, the swyne backed fashion maketh the shaft deader, for it gathereth more agree than the saddle backed, and therefore the saddle backe is surer for daunger of weather, and sitter for smothe slyinge. Againe, to shere a shaft rounde, as they were wont sometimes to do, or after the tryangle fashion, which is muche used now a dayes, both be good. For roundnesse is apte for slyinge of his own nature, and all maner of tryangle fashion (the sharpe pointe goinge before) is also naturally apte for quicke entringe;

and

De Nat. Deor. and therefore fayth Ciccro, that cranes, taught by nature, observe in flyinge a tryangle fashion alwayes, because it is so apte to perce and go through the agre withall. Last of all, pluckinge of feathers is nought, for there is no suretye in it, therefore let every archer have such shaftes, that he may both know them and trust them at every chaunge of weather. Yet, if they must nedes be plucked, plucke them as litle as can be, for so shall they be the lesse unconstant. And thus I have knit up in as short a roume as I could, the best feathers, featheringe, and coulinge of a shaft.

PHI. I thincke furely eyou have fo taken up the matter with you, that you have left nothinge behinde you. Nowe you have broughte a shafte to the heade, which, if it were on, we had done as concerninge all instrumentes belonging to shootinge. fitye, the inventor of all goodnesse (as all authors in a manner do faye) amonges all other thinges invented a shaft head, first to fave the end from breakinge, then it made it sharpe to sticke better, after it made it of strong matter, to last better: last of all, experience and wyfedome of men hath brought it to fuch a perfitneffe, that there is no one thinge fo profitable belonging to artillerye, either to strike a man's enemye forer in warre, or to shoote nerer the marke at home, than is a fitte heade for both purposes. For if a shaft lacke a heade, it is worth nothing for neyther use: Therefore, seeinge heades be so necessarye, they must of necessitye be well loked upon. Heades for warre, of longe time hath bene made, not onlye of divers matters, but also of divers fashions. The Troyans had heades of yron, as this verse, spoken of Pandarus, sheweth:

Iliad. 4. Up to the pappe his stringe did he pull, his shaft to the harde yron.

The Grecians had heades of brasse, as Ulysses shaftes were headed, when he slewe Antoninus and the other wowers of Penelope.

Odyst. 21. —— Quite throughe a dore flewe a shaft with a brasse head.

Iliad. 4. It is playne in Homer, where Menelaus was wounded of Pandarus shaftes, that the heades were not glewed on, but tyed on with a string, as the commentaryes in Greke plainly tell. And therefore shooters, at that time, used to carye theyr shaftes without heades, until they occupyed them, and then set on an head, as it appeareth in Homer, the twenty-twenty-first booke Odyssey, where Penelope brought Ulysses bow downe amonges the gentlemen which came on wowinge to her, that he which was able to bende it and drawe it, might enjoy her, and after her followed a mayde, fayth Homer, caryinge a bagge full of heades, both Odyst. 21. of yron and braffe.

The men of Scythia used heads of brasse. The men of Inde used Herod. Clio, heads of yron. The Ethiopians used heads of hard sharpe stone, as Polym. both Herodotus and Pollux doth tell. The Germaines, as Cornelius Tacitus doth faye, had theyr shaftes headed with bone, and manye countryes, both of olde time and nowe, use heades of horne. But, of all other, yron and stele must nedes be the fittest for heades. Julius Pollux cal- J. Pol. I. 10. leth otherwyse than we do, where the feathers be the heade, and that which we call the heade, he calleth the point.

Fashion of heades is divers, and that of olde time: two manner of arrowes heades, fayth Pollux, was used in olde time. The one he calleth oyewos, describinge it thus, havinge two pointes or barbes, lokinge backeward to the stele and the feathers, which surelye we call in Englishe a brode arrowe head, or a swalowe tayle. The other he calleth yawxis, having two pointes stretchinge forwarde, and this Englishemen do call a forke heade: both these two kindes of heades were used in Homers dayes, for Teucer used forked heades, sayinge thus to Agamemnon, Eight good shaftes have I shot sith I came, ech one with a forke heade. Iliad. 8.

Pandarus heades and Ulysses heades were brode arrowe heades, as a man maye learne in Homer, that would be curious in knowinge that matter. Hercules used forked heades, but yet they had three pointes or forkes, when other mens had but two. The Parthians at that great battaile where they flue riche Crassus and his sonne, used brode arrowe heads, whiche stacke so fore that the Romaynes could not pull them out in Crasso. againe. Commodus the Emperour used forked heades, whose fashion Herodian doth lively and naturallye describe, sayinge, that they were Herod. z. like the fhap of a newe mone, wherewith he woulde fmite the head of a birde, and never misse; other fashion of heades have not I redde on. Our Englishe heades be better in warre than eyther forked be les or brode arrowe heades. For first, the ende beinge lighter, the great deale the faster, and, by the same reason, geveth a fame tree stripe. Yea, and, I suppose, if the same litle barbes which they have, were clean put awaye, they should be farre better. For this every man doth graunt, that a shaft, as long as it flyeth, * turnes, and when it leaveth turning, it leaveth going any farther. And every thing that enters by a turninge and boringe fashion, the more flatter it is, the worse it enters, as a knife, though it be sharpe, yet, because of the edges, will not bore fo well as a bodkin, for everye rounde thinge enters best; and therefore nature, fayth Aristotle, made the raine droppes round, for quicke percinge the ayre. Thus, eyther shaftes turne not in flyinge, or else our flat arrow heades stop the shaft in entering. PHI. But yet, Toxophile, to hold your communication a litle, I suppose the flat head is better, both because it maketh a greater hole, and also Tox. These two reasons, as they be because it stickes faster in. both true, fo they be both nought. For first, the lesse hole, if it be deepe, is the worfe to heale againe: when a man fhooteth at his enemy, he desyreth rather that it should enter farre, than sticke fast. For what remedye is it, I praye you, for him that is fmitten with a deepe wounde, to pull out the shaft quicklye, except it be to hast his death spedelye? Thus heades which make a litle hole and deep, be better in warre, than those which make a great hole and sticke fast in. Julius Pollux maketh mention of certaine kindes of heades for warre, which beare fyre in them, and Scripture also speaketh somewhat of the fame. Herodotus doth tell a wonderfull policy to be done by Xerxes, what time he befieged the great tower in Athens: He made his archers binde theyr shaft heades about with towe, and then fet it on fyre and shoote them, which thing done by many archers, set all the place on fyre, which were of matter to burne: and, befydes that, dafed the men within, fo that they knew not whyther to turne them. But, to make an end of all heades for warre, I woulde wyshe that the heade makers of Englande should make theyr sheafe arrow heades more harder pointed than they be: for I myfelfe have seene of late such heades fet upon sheafe arrowes, as the officers, if they had feene them, would not have bene content withall.

Pollux 7.
Píalm 7:
Herod.
Vran.

Nowe as concerninge heades for prickinge, which is our purpole, there be divers kindes, fome be blont heades, fome fharpe, fome both

blonte

* If it be true, as I believe it is, that a shaft turns round in slying, it is not true that triangular shafts are good for piercing, as has been said by the authour, nor that Commodus could intercept the neck of a bird between the two points of a half-moon.

blonte and sharpe. The blonte heades men use, because they perceive them to be good to kepe a lengthe withall, they kepe a good lengthe, because a man pulleth them no further at one time than at another; for in feelinge the plompe ende alwayes equallye, he may lowfe them. Yet, in a winde, and against the winde, the weather hath fo much power on the brode ende, that no man can kepe no fure length with fuch a head; therefore a blont head, in a caulme or downe a winde, is very good, otherwife none worle. Sharpe heades at the ende, without any shoulders, (I call that the shoulders in a heade which a mans finger shall feele afore it come to the point) will perch quicklye through a winde, but yet it hath two discommodities, the one that it will kepe no length, it kepeth no length, because no man can pull it, certainly as farre at one time as at another: it is not drawen certainly fo farre one time as at another, because it lacketh shoulderinge, wherewith, as with a fure token, a man might be warned when to loufe; and also because men are afrayd of the sharpe pointe for fettinge it in the bowe. The fecond incommoditye is when it is lighted on the grounde, the small point shall everye time be in jeopardye of hurtinge, which thinge, of all other, will fonest make the shaft lese the length. Nowe, when blont heades be good to kepe a length withall, yet nought for a winde; sharpe heades good to perch the weather withal, yet nought for a length; certaine heade makers. dwellinge in London, perceyving the commoditye of both kindes of heades, joyned with a difcommoditye, invented new files and other instrumentes, wherewith they brought heades for prickinge to such a perfitnesse, that all the commodityes of the two other heades should be put in one heade, without any discommodity at all. They made a certaine kinde of heades, which men call Hie Rigged, Creafed, or Shouldred heades, or Silver-Spoon heades, for a certaine likenesse that such heades have with the knob ende of some filver spones. These heades be good both to kepe a length withall, and also to perche a winde withall. To kepe a length withall, because a man maye certainly pull it to the shoulderinge every shoote, and no farther; to perch a winde withall, because the point, from the shoulder forward, breaketh the weather as all other sharpe thinges doo. So the blont shoulder serveth for a fure length kepinge, the pointe also is ever fit for a roughe and great weather percinge. And thus much, as fhortly as I could, as concerninge heades PHI. But is there no cunninge as conboth for warre and peace. X cerninge cerninge fetting on of the heade. Tox. Well remembred. But that point belongeth to fletchers, yet you may defyre him to fet your heade full on, and close on. Full on is when the woode is bet harde up to the ende or stoppinge of the heade; close on, is when there is left woode on everye fyde the shafte, enoughe to fill the head withall, or when it is neyther too litle nor yet too great. If there be anye fault in any of these pointes, the heade, when it lighteth on an harde stone, or grounde, will be in jeopardye, eyther of breakinge, or els otherwise hurtinge. Stopping of heades eyther with leade or any thinge els, shall not nede nowe, because every silver spoone, or shouldred heade, is stopped of itselfe. Shorte heades be better than longe: for first, the longe heade is worse for the maker to file streight compasse everye waye; againe, it is worse for the fletcher to set straight on; thirdlye, it is alwaves in more jeopardye of breakinge when it is on. And now, I trowe, Philologe, we have done as concerninge all instrumentes belonging to shootinge, which every fere archer ought to provide for himselfe. And there remayneth two thinges behinde, which be general or common to every man, the weather and the marke, but, because they be so knit with shootinge straighte, or kepinge of a lengthe, I will refer them to that place; and now we will come (God willinge) to handle our instrumentes, the thinge that every man defyreth to do well. you teache me fo well to handle the instrumentes as you have descrybed them. I suppose I shall be an archer good enoughe. learne any thinge, (as you know better than I, Philologe) and especiallye to do a thinge with a mans handes, must be done, if a man would be excellent, in his youthe. Younge trees in gardens, which lacke all fenses, and beastes without reason, when they be younge, may, with handlinge and teachinge, be brought to wonderfull thinges.

And this is not onlye true in natural thinges, but in artificiall thinges to, as the potter most cunningly doth cast his pottes when his claye is soft and workable, and waxe taketh print when it is warme, and leathie weake, not when clay and waxe be harde and olde: and even so, every man in his youth, both with witte and bodye, is most apte and pliable to receive any cunning that should be taught him.

This communication of teachinge youth, maketh me remember the right worshipful, and my singular good maister, Sir Humphreye Wingfielde, fielde, to whom, next God, I ought to referre, for his manifold benefits bestowed on me, the pore talent of learninge which God hath lent me: and for his sake do I owe my service to all other of the name and noble house of the Wingsieldes, both in worde and deede. This worshipful man hath ever loved and used to have many children brought up in learninge in his house, amonges whom I myselfe was one. For whom at terme-times he would bringe down from London both bowe and shaftes, and, when they should playe, he would go with them himselfe into the fielde, and see them shoote, and he that shotte fayrest, should have the best bowe and shaftes, and he that shotte ill savouredly, should be mocked of his fellowes, till he shotte better.

Would to God all Englande had used, or would use to laye the foundation, after the example of this worshipful man, in bringinge up children in the booke and the bowe: by which two thinges the hole common wealthe, both in peace and warre, is chieflye ruled and defended withall.

But to our purpose, he that must come to this high persectness in schootinge, which we speake of, must nedes beginne to learne it in his youthe, the omittinge of which thinge in England, both maketh sewer shooters, and also every man, that is a shooter, shoote worse than he might if he were taught.

Phi. Even as I knowe this is true, which you saye, even so, Toxophile, you have quite discouraged me, and drawen my minde cleane from shootinge, seeinge, by this reason, no man that hath not used it in his youthe, can be excellent in it. And I suppose the same reason would discourage many other mo, if they heard you talk after this fort.

Tox. This thinge, Philologe, shall discourage no man that is wyse. For I will prove that wysedome may worke the same thinge in a man, that nature doth in a childe.

A childe by three thinges is broughte to excellencye. By aptnesse, desyre, and seare: aptnesse maketh him pliable, like waxe, to be formed and fashioned, even as a man would have him. Desyre, to be as good, or better, than his fellowes: and sear of them whom he is under, will cause him take great laboure and paine with diligente heede, in learninge any thing, whereof proceedeth, at the last, excellencye and perfectnesse.

X 2

A man maye, by wysedome in learninge of any thinge, and speciallye to shoote, have three like commodityes also, whereby he may, as it were, become yonge againe, and so attaine to excellencye. For as a childe is apt by naturall youthe, so a man, by usinge at the first weake bowes, farre underneth his strength, shall be as pliable and redye to be taughte sayre shootinge as any childe: and dailye use of the same shall both keepe him in sayre shootinge, and also at the last bringe him to stronge shootinge.

And, instede of the servent desyre which provoketh a child to be better than his selowe, let a man be as much stirred up with shamesastness to be worse than all other. And the same place that seare hath in a childe, to compel him to take paine, the same hath love of shootinge in a man, to cause him forsake no labour, without which no man nor childe can be excellent. And thus, whatsoever a childe may be taught by aptnesse, desyre, and fear, the same thinge in shootinge may a man be taught by weake bowes, shamesastnesse and love.

And hereby you may fee that that is true which Cicero fayth, that a man, by use, may be brought to a newe nature. And this I dare be bould to faye, that anye man which will wifelye beginne, and constantly. persevere in his trade of learninge to shoote, shall attaine to persectnesse PHI. This communication, Toxophile, doth please me very well, and now I perceive that most generally and chiefly youthe must be taught to shoote, and, secondarilye, no man is debarred therefrom except it be more throughe his own negligence, for because he will not learne, than any disabilitye because he cannot learne. Therefore, feeinge I will be glad to folowe your counfel in chofinge my bowe and other instrumentes, and also am ashamed that I can shoote no better than I can, moreover, havinge such a love towarde shootinge by your good reasons to daye, that I will forsake no laboure in the exercise of the same, I beseech you imagine that we had both bow and shaftes here, and teache me how I should handle them; and one thinge I desvre you, make me as fayre an archer as you can.

For this I am fure, in learninge all other matters, nothing is brought to the most profitable use, which is not handled after the most comelye fashion. As maisters of sence have no stroke fitte eyther to hitte an other, other, or els to defende himselse, which is not joyned with a wonderfull comlinesse. A cooke cannot choppe his herbes neyther quickely nor handsomely, excepte he kepe such a measure mith his choppinge knyves, as would delight a man both to see him and heare him. Every handye crafteman that workes beste for his owne profite, workes most semely to other mens sighte. Agayne in buildinge a house, in makinge a shippe, every parte, the more hansomlye they be joyned for * profite and laste, the more comelye they be fashioned to every mans sight and eye.

Nature itselfe taught men to joyne alwayes wellfavourednesse with profitablenesse. As in man, that joynte or piece which is by any chaunce deprived of his comlinesse, the same is also debarred of his use and profitablenesse. And he that is gogle eyde, and lokes a squinte, hath both his countenaunce clene marred, and his fight fore blemished, and so in all other members like. Moreover, what time of the year bringeth most profite with it for mans use, the same also covereth and decketh both earth and trees with most comlinesse for mans pleasure. And that time which taketh away the pleasure of the grounde, caryeth with him also the profite of the grounde, as every man by experience knoweth in harde and roughe winters. Some thinges there be which hath no other ende, but only comlinesse, as payntinge and dauncing. And vertue itselfe is nothinge else but comlinesse, as all Philosophers do agree in opinion; therefore, feeinge that which is best done in any matters, is alwayes most comlye done, as both Plato and Cicero in many places do prove, daily experience doth teache in other thinges, I praye you, as I faid before, teache me to shoote as fayre, wellfavouredly, as you can Tox. Trulye, Philologe, as you prove very well in ymagen. other matters, the best shootinge is alwayes the most comlye shootinge; but this you know as well as I, that Crassus sheweth in Cicero, that, as comlynesse is the chiefe pointe, and most to be sought for in all thinges, fo comlynesse only can never be taughte by any arte or craft; but may be perceyved well when it is done, not described well how it should be done. Yet, neverthelesse, to come to it there be many wayes, which wyse men hath affayed in other matters, as if a man would folowe, in learninge to shoote fayre, the noble paynter Zeuxes in payntinge Helena, which, to make his image beautiful, did chose out five of the fairest maydes in all the countrye about, and, in beholdinge them, conceyved and drue out such an image, that it farre exceeded all other, because the comlinesse of them all was brought into one most persit comlinesse: so likewyse in shootinge, if a man would set before his eyes five or six of the fairest archers that ever he saw shoote, and of one learne to stande, of another to drawe, of another to lowse, and so take of every man what every man could do best; I dare saye, he should come to such a comlinesse as never man came to yet.

* Profite and laste, convenience and duration.

PHI. This is very well trulye, but I pray you teache me somewhat of Tox. I can teache you to shoote fayre, shooting fayre yourselfe. even as Socrates taughte a man ones to know God; for, when he asked him what was God, Nay, fayth he, I can tell you better what God is not, as God is not ill, God is unspeakable, unsearchable, and so forth: even likewyse can I say of fayre shootinge, It hath not this discommodity with it nor that discommodity; and, at last, a man may so shift. all the discommodityes from shootinge, that there shall be left nothinge behinde but fayre shootinge. And to do this the better, you must remember how that I toulde you, when I descrybed generallye the hole. nature of shootinge, that fayre shootinge came of these thinges, of standinge, nockinge, drawinge, houldinge, and lowfinge, the which I. will go over as shortly as I can, describinge the discommodities that. men commonly use in all partes of theyr bodyes, that you, if you, faulte in anye fuch, may know it, and fo go about to amende it. Faultes in archers do exceed the nomber of archers, which come with use of shootinge withoute teachinge. Use and custome seperated from, knowledge and learninge, doth not only hurt shootinge, but the most: weightye thinges in the world befyde: and, therefore, I marveile much. at those people which be the maintayners of uses without knowledge, having no other worde in theyr mouth but this use, use, custome, custome. Such men, more wilfull than wyfe, befyde other discommodityes, take all place and occasion from all amendment. And this I speake: generallye of use and custome. Which thinge, if a learned man had it in hand that would applye it to any one matter, he might handle it wonderfully. But, as for shooting, use is the only cause of all faultes. in it, and therefore children, more easely and sooner, may be taught to shoote excellently than men, because children may be taught to. fhoote shoote well at the first, men have more pain to unlearne theyr ill uses, than they have labour afterwarde to come to good shootinge.

All the discommodityes which ill custome hath graffed in archers, can neyther be quickly pulled oute, nor yet foone reckoned of me, there be fo many. Some shooteth his head forwarde, as though he would byte the marke; another stareth with his eyes, as though they should flye out; another winketh with one eye and loketh with the other; some make a face with wrything theyr mouth and countenaunce fo, as though they were doinge you wotte what; another blereth oute his tongue; another byteth his lippes; another holdeth his necke awrye. In drawinge, fome fet fuch a compasse, as though they would turne about, and * bleffe all the field; other heave theyr hand now up now downe, that a man cannot decerne whereat they would shoote: another waggeth the upper end of his bow one way, the nether ende another way. Another will stand pointing his shaft at the marke a good while, and, by and by, he will geve him a whippe, and away or a man witte. Another maketh such a wrestlinge with his gere, as thoughe he were able to shoote no more as longe as he lived. Another draweth foftlye to the middes, and, by and by, it is gone you cannot know howe. Another draweth his fliaft lowe at the breast, as thoughe he would shoote at a roving marke, and, by and by, he lifteth his arme up pricke heyght. Another maketh a wrynchinge with his backe, as thoughe a man pinched him behinde. Another coureth downe, and layeth out his buttockes, as thoughe he should shoote at crowes. Another setteth forwarde his left legge, and draweth back with heade and shoulders, as thoughe he pulled at a rope, or else were afrayed of the mark. Another draweth his shaft well, untill within two fingers of the heade, and then he stayeth a little, to loke at his marke, and, that done, pulleth it up to the head, and lowfeth: which waye, although fome excellent shooters do use, yet furelye it is a fault, and good mennes faultes are not to be folowed. Some drawe to farre, some to short, some to slowlye, some to quicklye, some hold over longe, some let go over sone. Some sette theyr shafte on the grounde, and fetcheth him upwarde; another pointeth up towarde the skye, and so bringeth him downwardes.

* This alludes to the actions of the Romish priest in publick benedictions. This passage may explain a very obscure phrase in Spenser, who calls waving the sword in circles, blessing the sword.

Ones I fawe a man which used a bracer on his cheke, or else he had scratched all the skinne of the one syde of his face with his drawinge-hande. Another I saw, which, at every shote, after the loose, listed up his righte legge so far that he was ever in jeopardye of faulinge. Some stampe forwarde, and some leape backward. All these saultes be cyther in the drawinge, or at the loose; with many other mo, which you may easely eperceyve, and so go about to avoyde them.

Now afterward, when the shaft is gone, men have many faultes, which evill custome hath brought them to, and specially in cryinge after the shaft, and speaking wordes scarce honest for such an honest pastime.

Such wordes be very tokens of an ill minde, and manifest signes of a man that is subject to inmesurable affections. Good mennes eares do abhorre them, and an honest man therefore will avoyde them. And befydes those which must needes have theyr tongue thus walkinge, other men use other faultes, as some will take theyr bowe and wrythe and wrinche it, to pull in his shaft, when it flyeth wyde, as if he drave a cart. Some will geve two or three strydes forwarde, daunsinge and hoppinge after his shaft, as longe as it flyeth, as though he were a madde man. Some, which feare to be to farre gone, runne backwarde, as it were to pull his shafte backe. Another runneth forwarde, when he feareth to be shorte, heavinge after his armes, as thoughe he woulde helpe his shafte to flye. Another wrythes, or runneth asyde, to pull in his shafte straight. One lifteth up his heele, and so holdeth his foote still, as longe as his shafte flyeth. Another casteth his arme backwarde after the loufe. And another fwynges his bowe about him, as it were a man with a shafte to make roume in a game place. And manye other faultes there be, which now come not to my remembraunce. Thus, as you have hearde, many archers, with marringe theyr face and countenaunce, with other partes of theyr bodye, as it were men that should daunce antiques, be farre from the comely porte in shootinge, which he that would be excellent must loke for.

Of these faultes I have very many myselfe, but I talke not of my shootinge, but of the general nature of shootinge. Now ymagen an archer archer that is cleane without all these faultes, and I am sure every man would be delighted to see him shoote.

And althoughe fuch a perfite comlynesse cannot be expressed with any precepte of teachinge, as Cicero and other learned men do say, yet I will speake (according to my little knowledge) that thing in it, which if you solowe, although you shall not be without faulte, yet your faulte shall neyther quickly be perceyved, nor yet greatly rebuked of them that stand by. Standing, nocking, drawing, holding, lowsing, done as they should be done, make fayre shootinge.

The first point is when a man should shoote, to take such footinge Standinge. and standinge, as shall be both comely to the eye, and profitable to his use, setting his countenaunce and all the other partes of his bodye after such a behaviour, and port, that both all his strength may be employed to his own most advantage, and his shote made and handled to other mens pleasure and delyte. A man must not go to hastely to it, for that is rashnesse, nor yet make to much to do about it, for that is curiosity; the one soote must not stand to far from the other, least he stoupe to much, which is unsemely, nor yet to nere together, least he stande to strengthe uppe, for so a man shall neyther use his strength well, nor yet stande stedsaftlye.

The mean betwixt both must be kept, a thinge more pleasaunt to behold when it is done, than easy to be taught how it should be done.

To nocke well is the easyest pointe of all, and therein is no cun-Nockinge. ninge, but only diligente heede gevinge, to set his shafte neyther to hye nor to lowe, but even streight overwharte his bowe. Unconstant nockinge maketh a man leese his lengthe. And besydes that, if the shafte ende be hye, and the bowe-hand low, or contrarye, both the bowe is in jeopardye of breakinge, and the shaft, if it be little, will start: if it be greate, it will hobble. Nocke the cocke fether upward alwayes, as I toulde you when I descrybed the fether. And be sure alwayes that your stringe slip not out of the nocke, for then all is in jeopardye of breakinge.

Drawinge.

Drawinge well is the best part of shootinge. Men in oulde time used other maner of drawinge than we do. They used to drawe lowe at the breaft, to the right pappe, and no further; and this to be true is plaine in Homer, where he descrybeth Pandarus shootinge.

Up to the pap his stringe did he pull, his shafte to the hard heade. Iliad. 4.

The noble women of Scythia used the same fashion of shootinge lowe at the brest, and, because theyr left pappe hindred theyr shooting at the lowfe, they cut it off when they were young, and therefore they be called, in lacking theyr pappe, Amazones. Nowe a daye, contrarywife, we drawe to the righte eare, and not to the pappe. Whether the old wave in drawinge lowe to the pappe, or the new way, to drawe alofte to the earc, be better, an excellent wryter in Greeke, called Procopius, doth faye his minde, shewinge that the olde fashion in drawinge to the pappe was noughte of no pithe, and therefore, fayth Procopius, is artillery dispraysed in Homer, which calleth it showing, i.e. weake. and able to do no good. Drawinge to the eare he prayfeth greatlye, whereby men shoote both stronger and longer: drawinge therefore to the eare is better than to drawe at the brest. And one thinge commeth into my remembraunce nowe, Philologe, when I speak of drawinge, that I never redde of other kinde of shootinge, than drawinge with a mans hande eyther to the breste or eare: this thing have I sought for in Großbowes. Homer, Herodotus, and Plutarch, and therefore I marveile how croßbowe. came first uppe, of the which, I am sure, a man shall find litle mention made on any good author. Leo the Emperour would have his fouldiours drawe quicklye in warre, for that maketh a shaft flye apace. In shootinge at the prickes, hastye and quicke drawinge is. neyther fure nor yet comely. Therefore to drawe easely and uniformelye, that is for to fay, not wagginge our hand, now upward, now downeward, but alwayes after one fashion, untill you come to the rigge or shouldringe of the heade, is best both for profite and seemelinesse. Holdinge must not be longe, for it both putteth a bowe in jeopardye, and also marreth a mans shote; it must be so litle, that it may be perceyved better in a mans minde, when it is done, than feene with a mans eyes when it is in doinge. Lowfinge must be much like. So quicke and harde, that it be without all girdes, fo foft and gentle, that the shafte flye not as it were sent out of a bowe-case. The meane betwixt both, both, which is perfite lowfinge, is not fo harde to be followed in fluortinge as it is to be descrybed in teachinge. For cleane lowfinge, you must take heede of hitinge any thinge about you. And for the same purpose, Leo the Emperour would have all archers in warre to have theyr heades pouled, and theyr beardes shaven, least the heere of theyr heads should stoppe the fighte of the eye, the heere of theyr beards hinder the course of the stringe. And these preceptes, I am sure, Philologe, if you folowe, in standing, nocking, drawing, holding, and lowfing, shall bring you at the last to excellent fayre shootinge. Риг. All these thinges, Toxophile, although I both now perceyve them thoroughlye, and also will remember them diligentlye: yet to-morrowe, or fome other day when you have leyfure, we will go to the prickes, and put them by litle and litle in experience. For teachinge not followed, doeth even as much good as bookes never looked upon. But now, feinge you have taughte me to shoote fayre, I pray you tell me somewhat, how I should shoote neare, least that proverbe might be sayde justlye of me some time, He shootes like a gentleman fayre and farre Tox. He that can shoote fayre, lacketh nothing but shooting streight, and keeping of a length, whereof commeth hittinge of the marke, the ende both of shootinge, and also of this our communication. The handling of the wether and the marke, because they belonge to shootinge streight, and keping of a length, I will jovne them together, shewinge what thinges belonge to kepinge of a lengthe, and what to shootinge streight.

Holdinge.

Lowfinge.

The greatest enemye of shooting is the winde and the weather, Wynde and whereby true kepinge a lengthe is chieflye hindered. If this thinge wether. were not, men, by teachinge, might be brought to wonderfull neare shootinge. It is no marveile if the litle poore shaft, beinge fent alone fo hye in the ayre, into a great rage of wether, one winde toffinge it that waye, another this waye, it is no marveile, I faye, though it leefe the length, and misse that place where the shooter had thought to have found it. Greater matters than shootinge are under the rule and will of the weather, as in faylinge on the fea. And likewyse, as in faylinge, the chiefe point of a good master is to know the tokens of chaunge of wether, the course of the wyndes, that thereby he may the better come to the haven: even fo the best propertye of a good shooter is to knowe the nature of the windes, with him and against him, and Y 2 thereby thereby he maye the nerer shoote at his marke. Wyse maysters, when they cannot winne the best haven, they are glad of the next: good fhooters also, that cannot when they woulde hit the marke, will labour to come as nigh as they can. All thinges in this worlde be unperfite and unconstant, therefore let every man acknowledge his own weaknesse in all matters, greate and small, weightye and merye, and glorifye him, in whom onlye perfite perfitenesse is. But now, Sir, he that will at all adventures use the seas, knowinge no more what is to be done in a tempest than in a caulme, shall soone become a merchaunt of ele fkinnes: fo that shooter which putteth no difference, but shooteth in all alike, in roughe weather and fayre, shall alwayes put his winninges in his eyes. Litle boates and thinne boordes cannot endure the rage of a tempest. Weake bowes, and light shaftes cannot stande in a roughe wynde. And likewife, as a blind man, which should go to a place where he had never beene afore, that hath but one streight waye to it, and of eyther fyde hooles and pittes to faule into, now fauleth into this hoole, and then into that hoole, and never cometh to his journey ende, but wandereth alwayes here and there, further and further of; fo that archer which ignorantly shooteth, considering neyther fayre nor foule, standinge nor nockinge, fether nor head, drawinge nor lowfinge, nor any compasse, shall alwayes shoote shorte and gone, wyde and farre off, and never come neare, excepte perchaunce he stumble sometime on the marke. For ignorance is nothing else but mere blindnesse.

A maister of a shippe first learneth to know the comminge of a tempest, the nature of it, and how to behave himselfe in it, eyther with chaunginge his course, or pulling downe his hye toppes and brode sayles, being glad to eschue as much of the wether as he can; even so a good archer will first, with diligent use and marking the weather, learne to knowe the nature of the winde, and, with wysedome, will measure in his minde, how much it will alter his shote, eyther in length kepinge, or essential short short, and so, with chaunging his standing, or taking another shaft, the which he knoweth persitely to be fatter for his purpose, eyther because it is lower sethered, or else because it is of a better wynge, will so handle with discretion his shote, that he shall seem rather to have the wether under his rule, by good heede heede gevinge, than the wether to rule his shaft by any sodaine chaunginge.

Therefore, in shooting, there is as much difference betwixt an archer that is a good wether man, and an other that knoweth and marketh nothinge, as is betwixt a blinde man, and he that can see.

Thus, as concerninge the wether, a perfite archer must first learne to knowe the fure flighte of his shaftes, that he may be bould alwayes to trust them, than must be learne by daily experience all maner of kindes of wether, the tokens of it, when it will come, the nature of it when it is come; the diverfity and altering of it when it chaungeth, the decrease and diminishinge of it when it ceaseth. Thirdlye, these thinges knowen, and every shote diligently marked, then must a man compare alwayes the wether and his footinge together, and, with difcretion, measure them fo, that whatfoever the wether shall take away from his shote, the same shall just footinge restore againe to his shote. This thinge well knowen, and differetely handled in shootinge, bringeth more profite and commendation and prayle to an archer, than any other thing befydes. He that would know perfectly the wind and wether, must put differences betwixt times. For diversity of time causeth diverfity of wether, as in the whole yeare. Spryng time, Sommer, Faule of the leafe, and Winter: likewise in one daye, morninge, noontyde, afternoone, and eventyde, both alter the wether, and chaunge a mans bow with the strength of a man also. And to knowe that this is fo, is enough for a shooter and artillerye, and not to fearche the cause why it should be so: which belongeth to a learned man and Philosophie. In consideringe the time of the year, a wyse archer will followe a good shipman; in winter and roughe weather, small boates and litle pinkes forfake the feas: and at one time of the yeare no gallies come abrode: so likewyse weake archers, usinge small and holowe shaftes, with bowes of litle pithe, must be content to geve place for a time. And this I do not fay, eyther to discourage any weake shooter: for likewife, as there is no shippe better than galleys be, in a foft and cauling fea, fo no man shooteth comlier, or never his marke, than some weake archers do, in a fayre and cleare daye.

Thus

Thus every Archer must know, not onlye what bowe and shafte is fittest for him to shoote withall, but also what time and season is best for him to shoote in. And furely, in all other matters to, among all degrees of men, there is no man which doth any thinge eyther more discretelye for his commendation, or yet more profitable for his advauntage, than he which will knowe perfitely for what matter, and for what tyme he is most apt and fitte. If men would go about matters which they should do, and be fitte for, not suche thinges which wilfully they defyre, and yet be unfitte for, verelye greater matters in the common wealth than shootinge should be in better case than they be. This ignorancye in men which knowe not for what time, and to what thing they be fitte, causeth some wyshe to be riche, for whom it were better a greate deale to be poore; other to be medlinge in everye mans matter, for whom it were more honestye to be quiete and still. Some to defyre to be in the court, which be borne and be fitter rather for the carte. Some to be maisters and rule other, which never yet began to rule themselves; some alwayes to langle and taulke, which rather shoulde heare and kepe filence. Some to teache, which rather should learne. Some to be priestes, which were fitter to be clearkes. And this perverse judgemente of the worlde, when men measure themselves amisse, bringeth much diforder and great unfemelinesse to the hole body of the common wealthe, as if a man should weare his hoose upon his heade, or a woman go with a fworde and a buckler, everye man woulde take it as a greate uncumlinesse, although it be but a trysle in respecte of the other.

This perverse judgement of men hindereth nothing so much as learninge, because commonly those that be unfittest for learninge, be chieflye set to learninge. As if a man nowe a dayes have two sonnes, the one impotent, weke, sicklye, lispinge, stutteringe, and stameringe, or havinge anye missimple in his bodye; what doth the father of suche one commonlye saye? This boye is sitte for nothinge else, but to set to learninge and make a priest of, as who would say, the outcastes of the worlde, having neyther countenance, tongue nor witte, (for of a perverse bodye commeth commonly a perverse minde) be good enoughe to make those men of, which shall be appointed to preache Gods holy worde, and minister his blessed facramentes, besydes other most weightye matters in the common wealthe, put oft times, and worthely, to learned mennes dyscretion and charge; when rather such an office, so highe in dignitye, so godly in administration, should be committed to no man, which should not have a countenaunce full of comlinesse, to allure good men, a bodye full of manly authoritye to *feare ill men, a witte apt for all learninge, with tongue and voyce able to perswade all men. And althoughe sewe such men as these can be founde in a common wealthe, yet surelye a godlye disposed man will both in his minde thincke sit, and with all his studye labour to gette such men as I speake of, or rather better, if better can be gotten, for such an hye administration, which is most properly appointed to Gods own matters and businesses.

This perverse judgemente of fathers, as concerninge the fitnesse and unfitnesse of theyr children, causeth the common wealth have manye unfit mynisters: and seinge that mynisters be, as a manne woulde fay, instrumentes wherewith the common wealth doth worke all her matters withall, I marveile how it chaunceth that a poore shoomaker hath so much witte, that he will prepare no instrumente for his science, neyther knyfe nor aule, nor nothinge elfe which is not verye fit for him. The common wealthe can be contente to take at a fonde fathers hande the rifraffe of the worlde, to make those instrumentes of, wherewithall the shoulde woorke the hiest matters under heaven. And surelye an aule of leade is not so unprofitable in a shoo-makers shoppe, as an unfit minister, made of groose metell, is unseemelye in the common wealthe. Fathers in olde time, among the noble Persians, might not do with theyr children as they thought good, but as the judgement of the common wealthe alwayes thoughte best. This faulte of fathers bringeth manye a blot with it, to the great deformitye of the common wealthe: and here furely I can prayle gentlewomen, which have alwayes at hand theyr glasses, to see if any thinge be amisse, and so will amende it, yet the common wealthe, havinge the glasse of knowledge in every mans hande, doth fee fuche uncumlinesse in it, and yet wincketh at it. This fault, and many such like, might be soone wyped away, if fathers would bestowe theyr children on that thinge alwayes, whereuntonature hath ordayned them most apt and fitte. For if youth be grafted streighte, and not awrye, the hole common wealthe will floryshe thereafter. When this is done, thenne muste every man beginne to be more readye to amende himselfe, than to checke another, measuringe-theyr matters with that wyse proverbe of Apollo, Knowe thyselfe: that is to faye, learne to knowe what thou art able, fitte, and apte unto, and followe that. This thinge should be both cumlye to the common wealthe, and moste profitable for everye one, as doth appeare verye well in all wyfe mennes deedes, and speciallye (to turne to our communication againe) in shootinge, where wyfe archers have alwayes theyr instrumentes fitte for theyr strength, and wayte evermore such time and wether as is most agreeable to they gere. Therefore, if the wether be to fore, and unfitte for your shootinge, leave off for that daye, and wayte a better feafon. For he is a foole that will not go whom necessitye Pur. This communication of yours pleafed me fo well, Toxophile, that furelye I was not haftye to call you to descrybe forth the wether, but with all my hart would have fuffered you yet to have stande longer in this matter. For these thinges touched of you by chaunce, and by the waye, be farre above the matter itselfe, by whose occasion the other were brought in. Tox. Weightye matters they be indeede, and fitte both in an other place to be spoken, and of an other man than I am to be handled. And, because meane men must meddle with meane matters, I will go forwarde in descrybinge the wether as concerninge shootinge: and, as I toulde you before, in the hole yere, Springe-time, Sommer, Faule of the leafe, and Winter: and in one daye, Morninge, Noonetime, Afternoone, and Eventyde, altereth the course of the wether, the pyth of the bowe, the strength of the man. And in everye one of these tymes, the wether altereth, as fometime windy, fometime caulme, fometime cloudye, fometime cleare, fometime hot, fometime coulde, the wynde fometime moiftye and thicke, fometime drye and fmoothe. A litle wynd in a moiftye day stoppeth a shafte more than a good whyskynge wynde in a cleare daye. Yea, and I have feene when there hath bene no wynde at all, the ayre fo miftye and thicke, that both the markes have bene wonderfull great. And ones, when the plague was in Cambrige, the * downe wynd twelve score marke for the space of three weekes was thirteen fcore and a half, and into the wynd, being not very great, a great deale above fourteen score.

* To fear is to terrify.

The wynde is fometime plaine up and downe, which is commonlye most certaine, and requireth least knowledge, wherein a meane shooter, with meane geare, if he can shoote home, may make best shift. A fyde wynd tryeth an archer and good gere very much. Sometime it bloweth aloft, fometime hard by the ground; fometime it bloweth by blastes, and sometime it continueth all in one; sometime full syde wynd, fometime quarter with him, and more; and likewife against him, as a man with casting up light grasse, or else, if he take good heede, shall fensiblye learne by experience. To see the wynd, with a mans eyes, it is unpossible, the nature of it is so fine, and subtile, yet this experience of the wynd had I ones myselfe, and that was in the great snowe that fell four yeares agoo. I rode in the hye way betwixt Topcliffe upon Swale and Borowbridge, the way being somewhat troden afore, by wave fayringe men; the fieldes on both fides were playne, and laye almost yeard deep with snowe, the night before had bene a litle froste, so that the snowe was harde, and crusted above; that morninge the sunne shone bright and cleare, the wynd was whistling aloft, and sharpe, according to the time of the yeare; the fnow in the hye wave lave lowfe and troden with horse feete; so as the wynd blewe, it toke the lowse fnowe with it, and made it fo flide upon the fnowe in the fielde, which was harde and crusted by reason of the frost over nighte, that thereby I might fee very well the hole nature of the wynde as it blewe that daye. And I had a greate delyte and pleasure to marke it, which maketh me now farre better to remember it. Sometime the wynde would be not past two yardes brode, and fo it would cary the fnow as farre as I could fee. Another time the snowe would blowe over half the fielde at ones. Sometime the fnow would tomble foftlye, by and by it would flye wonderful fast. And this I perceyved also, that the wynde goeth by streames, and not hole together. For I should see one streame within a score on me, then the space of two score, no snow would styre, but, after To much quantitye of grounde, an other streame of snowe, at the same very tyme, should be caryed likewyse, but not equallye, for the one would stande styll, when the other flew apace, and so continue sometime fwiftlyer, fometime flowlyer, fometime broder, fometime narrower, as far as I could fee. Nor it flewe not streighte, but sometime it crooked this waye, fometime that waye, and fometime it ran round about in a compasse. And sometime the snowe would be lyst cleane from the grounde up to the ayre, and by and by it would be all clapt to the ground, as though there had bene no wynd at all, freight way it would ryse and flye againe. And that which was the most marveile of all, at one time two driftes of fnow flewe, the one out of the West into the

* The downe wind, &c. This passage I do not fully understand.

the East, the other oute of the North into the East. And I sawe two wyndes, by reason of the snow, the one crosse over the other, as it had been two hye wayes. And, againe, I should heare the winde blow in the ayre, when nothing was styrred at the ground. And when all was still where I rode, not verye farre from me the snow should be lifted wonderfullye. This experience made me more marveile at the nature of the wynde, than it made me cunninge in the knowledge of the wynde; but yet thereby I learned persitely that it is no marveile at all though men in wynde lease they length in shootinge, seeinge so many wayes the wynde is so variable in blowinge.

But feeinge that a maister of a shyppe, be he never so cunninge, by the uncertainty of the wynde, leeseth manye tymes both lyse and goodes, surelye it is no wonder, though a right good archer, by the selfe same wynde, so variable in his own nature, so insensible to our nature, leese many a shote and game.

The more uncertaine and deceyvable the wynde is, the more heede must a wyse archer geve to know the gyles of it. He that doth mistrust is feldome begyled. For although thereby he shall not attayne to that which is best, yet by these meanes he shall at last avoyde that which is worst. Befyde all these kindes of wyndes, you must take heede if you see anye cloude appeare, and gather by litle and litle against you, or else, if a shower of rayne be lyke to come upon you, for then both the dryvinge of the wether and the thickinge of the ayre increafeth the marke, when, after the shower, all thinges are contrarve cleare and caulme, and the marke, for the most part, new to begin a. gaine. You must take heede also, if ever you shoote where one of the markes, or bothe, standes a little short of a hye wall, for there you may be easilye begyled. If you take grasse and caste it up, to see howe the wynde standes, many times you shall suppose to shoote downe the wynde, when you shoote cleane against the wynde. And a good reason why. For the wynde which commeth indeed against you, redoundeth backe agayne at the waule, and whyrleth backe to the pricke, and a litle farther, and then turneth agayne, even as a vehement water doth against a rocke, or an hye braye; which example of water, as it is more fensible to a mans eyes, so it is never a whitte the truer than this of the wynde. So that the graffe caste uppe shall flee that waye which indeede is the longer marke, and deceyve quicklye a shooter that is not ware of it.

This experience had I ones myselfe at Norwytche in the chapell field. within the waules. And this way I used in shootinge at those markes. When I was in the mydde way betwixt the markes, which was an open place, there I toke a fethere, or a lyttle lighte graffe, and fo, as well as I coulde, learned howe the wynde stoode; that done I went to the pricke as fast as I could, and, according as I had found the wynde when I was in the midde waye, fo I was fayne then to be content to make the best of my shote that I could. Even such an other experience had I, in a maner, at Yorke, at the prickes lyinge betwixt the castle and Ouse fyde. And although you fmyle, Philologe, to heare me tell myne own fondnesse; yet, seeinge you will nedes have me teache you somewhat in shootinge, I must nedes sometime tell you of mine owne experience. And the better I may do so, because Hippocrates, in teaching physicke, Hippoc. de herb. un. useth very muche the same waye. Take heede also when you shoote neare the sea coast, although you be two or three myles from the sea, for there diligent marking shall espye in the most cleare daye wonderfull chaunginge. The fame is to be confidered lykwyfe by a ryver fyde, specially if it be ebbe and flowe, where he that taketh diligente heede of the tyde and wether, shall lightlye take awaye all that he shooteth for. And thus, of the nature of wyndes and wether, accordinge to my markinge, you have hearde, Philologe: and hereafter you shall marke farre mo yourselfe, if you take heede. And the wether thus marked, as I tolde you afore, you must take heede of your standinge, that thereby you may winne as much as you shall lose by the wether. PHI. I fee well it is no marveile though a man misse many times in thootinge, feeinge the wether is fo unconstant in blowinge, but yet there is one thinge which many archers use, that shall cause a man have lesse nede to marke the wether, and that is ame gevinge. Tox. Of gevinge ame, I cannot tell well what I should saye. For in a straunge place it taketh awaye all occasion of foule game, which is the onlye prayle of it, yet, by my judgement, it hindereth the knowledge of shootinge, and maketh men more negligent: the which is a difprayle. Though ame be geven, yet take hede, for at another mans thoote you cannot well take ame, nor at your own neyther, because the wether will alter, even in a minute, and at that one marke, and not at the other, and trouble your shafte in the ayre, when you shall perceive no wynde at the grounde, as I myselfe have seen shaftes tumble alofte in a verye fayre daye. There may be a fault also in drawinge or lowsing, and manye thinges mo, which altogether are required to keepe a just length. But, to go forewarde, the next point after the markinge of your wether, is the taking of your standing. And, in a syde wynde, you must stande somewhat crosse into the wynde, for so shall you shootethe furer. When you have taken good footing, then must you loke at your shaft, that no earth, nor weete, be left upon it, for so should it leese the length. You must loke at the head also, least it have had any strype at the last shote. A strype upon a stone, many times will both marre the head, croke the shaft, and hurt the fether, whereof the least of them all will cause a man leese his * strengthe. For such thinges which chaunce every shoote, manye archers use to have some place made. in theyr coate, fit for a litle fyle, a stone, a hunfysh skin, and a clothe to dresse the shaft fit againe at all needes. This must a man loke to ever when he taketh uppe his shafte. And the heade may be made to fmoothe, which will cause it flye to farre: when your shafte is fitte, then must you take your bowe even in the middes, or els you shall both leese your length, and put your bowe in jeopardye of breakinge. Nocking just is next, which is much of the same nature. Then drawe equallye, lowfe equallye, with houldinge your hande ever of one height to kepe true compasse. To loke at your shafte heade at the lowse is the greatest helpe to kepe a lengthe that can be, which thing yet hindereth. excellente shootinge, because a man cannot shoote streight perfective excepte he loke at his marke; if I should shoote at a line, and not at. the marke, I would alwayes loke at my shafte ende: but of this thinge fome what afterwarde. Nowe, if you marke the wether diligentlye, kepe your standinge justlye, hould and nocke trucly, drawe and lowse equallye, and kepe your compasse certainlye, you shall never misse of Phi. Then there is nothinge behinde to make me hit the marke, but only shootinge streight. Tox. No trulye. And first I will tell you what shiftes archers have founde to shoote streight. then what is the best way to shoote streight. As the wether belongeth speciallye to kepe a lengthe (yet a syde winde belongeth also to shoote streight) even so the nature of the pricke is to shoote streighte. The lengthe or shortnesse of the marke is alwayes under the rule of the wether, yet fomewhat there is in the marke, worthie to be marked of an archer. If the prickes stande on a streighte plaine grounde, they be the beste to shoote at. If the marke stande on a hill-syde, or the grounde be unequall with pittes and turninge wayes betwixt the markes, a mans eye shall thincke that to be streighte which is crooked: the experience of this thinge is feen in paintinge, the cause of it is known by learninge: and it is enough for an archer to marke it, and take heede of it. The chiefe cause whye men cannot shoot streight, is because they loke at theyr shafte; and this faulte commeth, because a man is not taughte to shoote when he is younge. If he learne to shoote by himselfe, he is afraide to pull the shaft through the bowe, and therefore loketh alwayes at his shaft; ill use confirmeth this fault as it doth many mo. And men continue the longer in this fault, because it is so good to kepe a lengthe withall: and yet to shoote streighte, they have invented some wayes to espye a tree or a hill beyond the marke, or els to have some notable thing betwixt the markes; and ones I faw a good archer which did cast off his gere, and layed his quiver with it, even in the mid wayed betwixte the prickes. Some thought he did it for favegard of his gere: I suppose he did it to shoote streighte withall. Other men use to espye fome marke almost a bowe wyde of the pricke, and then go about to kepe himselfe on the hand that the pricke is on, which thinge how much good it doth, a man will not believe, that doth not prove it. Other, and those very good archers, in drawinge, loke at the marke untill they come almost to the heade, then they loke at theyr shafte, but, at the verye lowfe, with a fecond fight, they finde theyr marke againe. This waye, and all other afore of me reherfed, are but shiftes, and not to be followed in shootinge streight. For having a mans eye alwaye on his marke, is the onelye waye to shoote streighte, yea and, I suppose, fo redye and easye a waye, if it be learned in youth, and confirmed with use, that a man shall never misse therein. Men doubt yet in loking at the mark what way is best, whether betwixt the bowe and the stringe, above or beneath his hande, and many wayes mo: yet it maketh no greate matter which waye a man loke at his marke, if it be joyned with comelye shootinge. The diversity of mens standing and drawing causeth divers men loke at their marke divers wayes; yet they all leade a mans hande to shoote streight, if nothing els stoppe. So that cumlynesse is the onlye judge of best lokinge at the marke. Some men wonder whye, in castinge a mans eye at the marke, the hande should go streighte: furelye if he confidered the nature of a mans eye, he would not wonder at it: for this I am certaine of, that no servaunt to his maister, no childe to his father, is so obedient, as everye joynte and peece of the bodye is to do whatfoever the eye biddes. The eye is the guide, the ruler and the fuccourer of all the other partes. The hande, the foote, and other members, dare do nothinge withoute the eye, as doth appear on the night and darcke corners. The eye is the very tongue wherewith witte and reason doth speake to everye parte of the bodye, and the witte doth not fo foon fignifye a thinge by the eye, as every part is redye to folowe, or rather prevent the biddinge of the eye. This is plaine in manye thinges, but most evident in fence and feighting, as I have heard men faye. There everye parte standinge in feare to have a blowe, runnes to the eye for helpe, as younge children do to the mother; the foote, the hande, and all wayteth upon the eye. If the eye bid the hand eyther bear of or finite, or the foote eyther go forward, or backward, it doth to; and that which is most wonder of all, the one man lokinge stedfastly at the other mans eye, and not at his hand, will, even as it were, rede in his eye where he purpofeth to fmyte next, for the eye is nothing els but a certaine window for wit to shoote out her heade at.

Z 2

* Perhaps it should be length.

This wonderfull worke of God in makinge all the members fo obedient to the eye, is a pleasant thinge to remember and loke upon; therefore an archer may be fure, in learninge to loke at his marke when he is younge, alwayes to shoote streighe. The thinges that hinder a man which loketh at his marke, to shoote streight, be these: a syde winde, a bowe eyther to stronge, or els to weake, an ill arme, when a fether runneth on the bowe to much, a bigge brested shafte, for him that shooteth under hande, because it will hobble; a litle brested shafte for him that shooteth above the hande, because it will starte; a payre of windinge prickes, and many other thinges mo, which you shall marke yourselfe, and as ye know them, so learne to amende them. If a man would leave to loke at his shaft, and learne to loke at his marke, he maye use this waye, which a good shooter told me ones that he did. Let him take his bowe on the night, and shoot at two lightes, and there he shall be compelled to looke alwayes at his marke, and never at his shafte: this thinge, ones or twife used, will cause him forsake loking at his shafte. Yet let him take heede of setting his shafte in the bowe.

Thus,

Thus, Philologe, to shoote streight is the least maisterye of all, if a man order himselfe thereafter in his youthe. And as for kepinge a length, I am sure, the rules which I gave you will never deceyve you; so that there shall lacke nothing, eyther of hittinge the marke alwayes, or els verye neare shootinge, except the faulte be onlye in youre owne selfe, which may come two wayes, eyther in having a fainte harte, or courage, or els in sufferinge yourselfe overmuch to be ledde with affection: if a mans minde sayle him, the bodye, which is ruled by the minde, can never do his dutye, if lacke of courage were not, men might do mo maissries than they do, as doth appeare in leapinge and vaultinge.

All affections, and especially anger, hurteth both minde and body. The minde is blinde thereby, and, if the minde be blinde, it cannot rule the bodye arighte. The bodye, both bloude and bone, as they saye, is brought out of his right course by anger: whereby a man lacketh his righte strength, and therefore cannot shoote well. If these thinges be avoyded (whereof I will speake no more, both because they belonge not properlye to shootinge, and also you can teache me better in them than I you) and all the preceptes which I have given you diligentlye marked, no doubte ye shall shoote as well as ever man did yet, by the grace of God.

This communication handled of me, Philologe, as I know well not perfitelye, yet, as I fuppose trulye, you must take in good worthe, wherein, if divers thinges do not altogether please you, thancke your selfe, which woulde have me rather faulte in mere follye, to take that thinge in hande, which I was not able for to perfourme; than by any honest shamefastnesse with-saye your request and minde, which I knowe well I have not satisfyed. But yet I will thincke this labour of myne the better bestowed, if to-morrowe, or some other daye when you have leysure, you will spende as much time with me here in this same place, in entreating the question De origine animæ, and the joyninge of it with the bodye, that I maye knowe howe farre Plato, Aristotle, and the Stoy-cians have waded in it.

PHt. Howe you have handeled this matter, Toxophile, I maye not well-tell you myselfe now, but, for your gentlenesse and good will towardes learnings:

learninge and shootinge, I will be content to shewe you anye pleasure whensoever you will; and nowe the sunne is downe, therefore, if it please you, we will go home and drincke in my chamber, and there I will tell you plainlye what I thincke of this communication, and also what daye we will appointe, at your request, for the other matter to meete here againe.

The End of the Schole of Shootinge.

The TABLE of the FIRST BOOKE Of the Schole of Shootings.

	62
ARNEST businesse ought to be refreshed with honest pastyme,
, v	64
	66
	57
	70
Shootinge fitter for studentes than any musick or instrumentes,	72
Youth ought to learn to finge,	75
No maner of man doth or can use to muche shootinge, 7	9
Against unlawfull games, and namely Cardes and Dyse, 8	32
	) I
	3
Reasons and authorityes against shootinge in warre, with the con-
	5
	8
The commoditye of shootinge in warre through the histories
Greeke and Lattine, and all nations, Christen and Heathen, 10	0
Use of shootinge at home causeth strong shootinge in warre,	6
Use of shootinge at home, except men be apte by nature, and cun-
ninge by teachinge, doth little good at all, II	7
Lacke of learninge to shoote causeth Englande lacke manye a good
archer, 120	0
In learninge anye thinge, a man must covete to be best, or els he shall never attayne to be meane, 129	3

The TABLE of the SECONDE BOOKE Of the Sconle of Shootings.

By knowing thinges belonging to Shootinge,	fere m	r for every nans ufe. eral to all men.	Si S	racer, hootinge Glove, tringe, Bowe, Shaftes, Vether, Jarke.	Page 129 ib. 130 132 141 163
Hitting the marke, by		Shootinge ftraite.  Keeping a lengthe.	Bo	oth come partlye
By handlinge thinges belong-		without a man	-{	Standinge, Nockinge, Drawinge, Holdinge, Lowfinge,	<ul><li>ib.</li><li>ib.</li><li>ib.</li><li>ib.</li></ul>
ing to fhooting	within a man		Bould courage, Avoydinge all affection,	158

*DIVÆ ELIZABETHÆ,

Most Excellent Princes, &c. &c.

HE unlearned persons hath persitlie learned this lesson, that no one matter maketh more difference betwixt man and man, than doth learninge. And thoughe learninge bringe to everie Learninge. kinde of man (who godlie doth use it) the trewest pleasur, the surest profet, the greatest praise, that can be either gotten in earth, or given from heaven, (heaven itself onelie excepted) yet is not learninge more fitte and necessarie to any other person, than it is to a Prince. For Learninge we subjectes are, by dewtie, and oughte to be by reason, obeyers and most necessarily faire for folowers: and so as scholers and learners: You Princes are, in dignitie, Princes. and ought to be in worthinesse, commanders and leaders, and therefore as mafters and teachers. And how shall he lead an other, that can not go himself: or what shall he teache, that nothinge hath learned? But, how happie be we, that have a Prince who knoweth full well, that that Prince is unhappie for himself, and all his, who knoweth nothing, but by another mans head: nor must see nothing, but by other mens eyes: nor will hear nothing, but by other mennes eares: nor can speak nothing, but by an other mans tonge. Such a monster, without heade, eyes, ears, and tonge, were mervelus to be feene, more perilus to be had, but most perilus to be made keaper of others. And Xenosh in yet was he a verie wife man, that made this the verie figure of an un- anounce. learned, and of an unrewelie Prince.

* This letter to Queen Elizateth is now first published from a manuscript.

Pf. 2°.

The deformitie and hurte of ignorance, the cumlines and good of learning in a Prince, is well fet out, as your Majestie well knoweth, in Xenophon, and Isocrates: but yet no otherwise, then like a well painted image, without sense, without life, in comparison of that livelie voice and tromp of the Holle Ghoste, sounding dailie in everie good Christian Princes cares, Nunc reges intelligite: Erudimini qui judicatis terram; and that joyned with a terrible fore threate, Ne forte irascatur Dominus, et perentis de via justa.

Some, supposed wise men, would not have Princes learned: but proude have Princes is theyr wisdom, that will nedes be wifer then the Holie Ghoste: and not learned. fuch is theyr wildom, that would fill their owne coffers by the folie of theyr Prince. Therefor, let no good Prince be ashamed of good learninge, and namelie of Gods learninge, feeinge God himfelf doth will them thereunto, and that by the voice of fuch a teacher, as a Prince, be he never fo greate, never fo wife, may wel enoughe become his fcho-David, the ler. For this teacher, was not onlie a Kinge himfelf, but the best Kinge, best teacher and best learned Kinge, that ever God made Kinge upon earthe. And of Princes. he was brought up in that schole, where the Holie Ghoste himselfe was mafter: and he fuch a doer and woorker in that fchole, as his hand and tonge was his Master's chiefest pen, and style, as he witnesseth in plain wordes himself, Lingua mea calamus scribæ velociter scribentis. Pf. 44. This Kinge was also, nighest in authoritie, and highest in favore, with God, Kinge of all Kinges: for, what Kinge, or man elfe, hard ever fo frendelie a worde from Gods owne mowthe, Inveni virum secundum cor meum: Howe oft doth God faye in Scripture, I will do fo, and I will not do so, for my servant David sake? How happie is that Prince, of whom God will speak so? but how more happie is that Prince and all his too, for whom God will do fo? And therefore, what a comfort is it to a godlie Prince, to learne of such a teacher: to folowe such a guide:.. to reade his life: to fee his actes: to have his counsel always at hand, not onlie for the best civil government over his people, but for his owne

The best commentarie science is the best commentarie, to understand, with most profet, the for Davides Psalmes.

Psalmes of David: for benefites to give thanks: for offences to ask pardon: for miserie to seeke comfort: for injurie to praie aid. For, private life betwixte him and God.

no

no man can reade Davides Pfalmes attentifie, but he shall see all his owne faultes, all his owne necessities, all his outward deedes, all his inwarde thoughtes, fet before his eyes.

And yet is it as trewe, that the thoughtes and fayinges of David, being a Prince, cannot be neither fo properlye applied, nor fo deeplye understanded, by any other person, as by a Prince. For, the like state and dignitie, the like charge and authoritie, do breed like thoughtes, like purposes, like counselles, like actes, like eventes. Private persones feele not commonlie the thoughts of Princes. Fewe fervantes in common families have like thoughtes with the meanest masters. Therefor, fuch as be likest David, in life, affaires, state, and dignitie, maye have the likest thoughtes, and use the likest talke with God, that David had.

A Prince, no private person can run thoroughlie oute, the hole course The race of of Davides life: as, to begin his yonge yeares in Gods feare: to passe Kinge Dathroughe trobles and cares, periles and dangers: by injuries of greatest enemies: by unkindnes of nearest frendes: by false surmises: by wronge imprisonmentes: by daylie threates, and feare of deathe into safety of life, were benefites of God to David, being a private man, common also to many other goode private men. But, to be caryed, from such private miserie, up to princelie state and felicitie, is onelie the dealing of God with fuch Princes, who are speciallie regarded of God, as David was, and commit themselves hollie and onelie to God, as David did.

And how did God deale with David when he had made him a King? First, he saw the fall of all his enemies: and all their ungodlie race and bloodie faction rooted oute. And though God put into his hand the life of all those that cruellie before had fought for his deathe, yet not any his private revenge for private injuries, but Gods open punishment, brought them all under his feete. God gave him glorious victories, over all outward enemies: and speedie *meetinges with all inward conspiracies: and after blessed him with a quiet government, and gave him requiem circumquaque ab universis inimicis ejus, with happy dayes, Reg. 2°. 7°. with an obedient people: where common justice was duely executed, and private righte to every man defended: all craftie Achitophels removed out of place, and good, wise, and quiet Chusaies bearing greatest authoritie.

* To meet with, in the language of that age, was to oppose, to counterast, to repress.

These blessinges of God to King David were greate, but there followed far greater, both for the comfort of himselfe, and the happinesse of his subjectes: for he heard of Gods own mouthe, Thine owne seade shall sit in thy seate, which is the greatest comfort can come to a good Prince, and the joyfullest selicitie that a good Prince can leave to his subjectes.

And fo David, made King by Gods goodness, made also, not onely his present time happy, but his posterity also blessed. And therefore was David, a Prince, of himself most worthy, to others most happy: whose doinges for his posterity, as thousands unborne were bound to blesse, so all that heare of it, are driven to praise: the worthiest example for all good Princes to solowe, that ever God set before Princes eyes.

Most noble Princesse, and my best Ladie and Mistres, I ofte thinking of this race of Davides life; of his former miseries, of his later felicities, of Gods dealing with him in all pointes, to bring happinesse to his present tyme, and safety to his posterity, have had, for many like causes, many like thoughtes, even of the like life and state of your Majesty.

And therefor, moved by good will, as your trewe fervant, and caried by dewtie, as a faithful subject, and bound by many benefites of your most bountiful goodnes towardes me, and speciallie because it pleased your Highnesse, this last year, not onelie by your letters and commandement to the Courte of the Exchequer, but also by your owne present talke with my L. Archeb. of York, clearlie to deliver me, first, from the miserie of those long, careful, and costelle trobles of the lawe: and after, from the injurie, that some would have offered me, in surprising your Majestyes benefite from me, I thought good to offer to your Highnesse this book, with this letter, as a trewe servante doth in Euripides, to a most noble Queen, when he gave unto her the like token of good will, for the like delivery out of trobles and care: saying then, for no juster cause, nor with better hart, than I do now to your Majestye,

 $A\lambda\lambda^{2}$

. Αλλ ω Φίλη δεσποινα ευμενώς δεχου, Φιλον Φίλε μνημόσυνον εκδικουμένου.

And to offer this book of Scripture unto your Majestic, before any other, good reason, I suppose, doth move me. For though all Scripture, as the Apostle saith, is written for all mens teachinge, yet some peece is fitter to one person than another, to reade, for themselves, by themfelves, privately alone. As the Book of Wisdom, the Proverbs of Solomon, Fefus Sirach, for all men both learned and * lewde. Leviticus, Numeri, the Songes of Solomon, Daniel, the Apocalips, and fuch like, chiefly for deepe learned men, and not for every fonde heade, and curious spirit. The book of Judges, the Preacher of Solomon, for civil governors in common offices, for masters and fathers in private families. But the books of Samuel and the rest of the Kinges, speciallie for all good Kinges and Princes.

This volume conteneth two books: the first, the life of Saul, the Saul and his image of an ill Prince, the deformed face of a miferable kingdom, kingdom. where God and his goodnesse is forgotten, Gods voice not hard, right religion perverted, trewe facrifices, either quite left off, or coldlie obferved, God worshipped, as Saul listed, not as God prescribed, good Samuel despised, his counsel derided, Baals prestes borne withall, and openlie authorised, hill altars erected, spiritual fornication with Ægypte and Babylon every where ocupied. Thus Saul, first halfing with God, (as when God gave Amalec into his hand) then halting in religion, and at laste, quite falling from God and religion both, and flying to Baal 1º Reg. and develishe forcerie, brought his own state to utter destruction, and his kingdom to extreme miferie. For the contempte of God and religion brought his common-weithe to utter ruin, as it hath, and will do, all other kingdomes. And in what order? or rather, by what miforder? Surelie, by these steppes and degrees, all went dounward, wilful lust thut up all order of justice; open injurie oppressed good men. David was untrewelie suspected, and cruellie persecuted: vain and ill men bare greatest swinge, good Jonathan onelie excepted, placed in courte by Gods providence, for Davides and other good mennes comfort. And thus, lust and vanitie secretlie within, injustice and mischief openlie abrode, went with full tyde and winde, in Saules kingdom and courte, untill the blast of Gods wrathe overwhelmed all up set downe: first by all plages at home, then by a strange nation, theyr neybor, the old enemie of Israel; by whose invasion and cruel sworde, Saul loste his state, loste his life, dispossession his owne seede, undid his posteritie, and left his kingdom to a strange familie. This historie, for the miserie, is dreedfull to be hard, but for the example and warning, profitable for all good Princes, dailie to reade, and advised to marke.

280.

* Lewd is lay, or popular.

David and his kingdom.

The fecond booke conteneth the life of David, the image of a good Prince, a faire picture of a florishinge state and happie time, when God was alwayes in mynde, and his former benefites, his former deliveries from danger of deathe, never utterlie forgotten, Gods owne religion maintened, Gods voice onelie hard; Gods own facrifices, as God himself appointed, earnestlie observed, good Nathan highlie reverenced, his advice never refused, his free tonge, his hevie message from God, neyther then rebuked with wordes, nor after revenged with deedes, but, by and by, most humbly aunswered, with Ego peccavi domino: and therefore David hard joyfullie againe, Et Dominus transfulit peccatum tuum, non morieris. Baal and Dagon, and all theyr prestes, were utterlie banished. All hill aultars fullie rooted oute, all idolatrie and superstition of Ægypte and Babylon cleane forfaken. Thus David, by fearinge, fervinge, and holdinge himfelf fast by God and his religion, and thoughe fometymes fallinge, yet not perverfedlie cleavinge to wilfulnesse, but meeklie acknowledginge his owne wickednesse, not frowardlie lyinge still, but speedelie rysing up at Gods callinge, brought his own state to hiest dignitie, and his people to greatest felicitie. And in the ende, had this joyfull bleffinge from Gods owne mouthe, by Nathans message, which all trewe Englishe harts dailie do praye, that God will fend the same unto your Majestie; Excitabo semen tuum postea, quod egredietur de utero tuo, et regnum seminis tui perpetuo surmabo. Whereunto, I trust God, your Majesty, and all good men, will most gladlie, with hart and hand, fay all, Amen.

2 Reg

The image of these two Princes lives, the one good, the other bad, and Gods present dealing with them both, is a marvelous picture for all men to look upon, yea, thoughe they be but private persones, and onelie standers by: but most necessarie for all Princes to marke and muse upon, if eyther the dreedful seare of Gods wrathe, or the joyful hope of Gods savor, do any thing touch theyr hartes. And theyr hartes, of all other, oughte chieflye to be touched with both: for though God be Scrutator cordium omnium bominum, yet it is spoken for the hie prerogative of Princes, Corda regum in manu Dei sunt: that is to say, God immediately, by himselfe governeth, and with his present eye beholdeth, the deedes and thoughtes of Princes. This is no opinion of philosophie, but the trothe of Gods own doctrine, and that so certaine and sensible a trothe, as there is no Prince, be he never so good, never so bad, but his owne conscience doth daily and hourlie beare good witnesse to the same. And trothe also it is, that, as they dignitie is hiest, so is the burden of theyr charge heviest, and therefore the care for theyr accompte oughte to be greatest, and for this cause to, a greate deale the greater, because no man, but God onesie, must be the auditor thereof.

But how delt God with Saul? God gave unto Saul, an ill King, great and many blessinges, a combie stature of bodie: faire qualities of the mynde: he hard of Samuels mouthe, Quia Dominus tecum est; and, in manu tua liberabit Deus Israel. And yet, at the last, he hard again of Samuel, Stultus fastus es: and after, this fore threate, Jam non erit sirmum regnum tuum: and that with the plaine cause why, Quia abjecisti verbum Domini, Dominus abjecit te. And so, in the ende, Gods hie gistes, not thankfullie remembered, but ungodlie used, turned all to Saules greater destruction.

On the other fide, David, a good King, was tossed with all miseries, by danger of forest injuries, by griefe of greatest unkindnes; yet all such mishaps, patientlie taken at Gods hand, and the deliverie from them by God, never forgotten by David, turned all to Davides greatest selicitie. But David was wrapte in a stranger case and kinde of miserie: for when God had shewed him his greatest savor, and had given him the hiest benefites that man in earth could receive, yet God suffered him to fall into the deepest pitte of wickednes; to committe the cruellest murder, and shamefullest adultrie, that ever did man upon earthe. Whereinto he did not stumble by ignorance, nor slide by weaknesse, nor onelie fall by wilfulnesse, but went to it advised hie, purposing all * practices, and finding out all fetches that mischiefe could imagine, to bring mischiese to passe. Yet though David had shaken from him Gods seare, yet God had not taken from David his grace. For, when God did knock, David did open: when Nathan said boldlie, Tu secisti malum coram Domino, David answered humblie, Ipse peccavi Domino. And so, * out of this soule matter, is gathered the fairest example, and best lesson, both for Prince and private man, that is in all Scripture; for the hiest and best, alwayes to beware; for the meanest and worst never to dispare; and that, with a marvelous note of King Davids singular good nature, who was angrie with himselse, for ill doinge, and not with good Nathan, for trewe speakinge.

* Practice, in the language of our author's age, was commonly taken in an ill sense, for wicked acts, or unlawful stratagems.

B b

But your Majesty, in reading the hole course of this holie historie, shall better judge of all these pointes, and many other mo, if it may please you to reade with all, these learned commentaries of P. Martyr, who beside the expressing of this storie, and opening all hard doubtes thereof, hath godlie and learnedlie, as a man of greate experience and deepe judgement, decided many notable common places, belonginge speciallie to the good order of civil government, and therefore verie sitte for the knowledge of all good Princes.

And therefore was I verie willinge to offer this booke to your Majesty, wherein, as in a faire glasse, your Majesty shall see and acknowledge, by Gods dealinges with David, even verie many like good dealinges of God with your Majesty; and thereby finde yourself bounde, both daily to saye with David, Quid retribuam Domino pro omnibus quae tribuit mibi; and also to promise and performe with David, Benedicam Dominum in omni tempore, et semper laus ejus in ore meo. And so, doing as David did, heare from God, as David hard, Inveni mulierem secundum cor meum: and in the ende have as David had, that is, most prosperitie, and surest felicitie, for you, youres, and youre posteritie. God blesse your Majestie with all felicitie, and fend you, with many long yeares, all harts ease.

ххх°. Остов. М. D. LXVI°. Your Majesties

Most bounden, and

Faithfull Servante,

R. ASCHAM.

* This had been a very proper admonition after the execution of Queen Mary of Scotland.

SCHOLE MASTER;

Or plaine and perfite Way of teaching Children, to underfland, write, and speake, the LATIN TONGE, but specially purposed for the private bringing up of Youth in Jentlemen and Noblemens Houses, and commodious also for all such as have forgot the LATIN TONGE, and would, by themselves, without a Scholemaster, in short Tyme, and with small Paines, recover a sufficient Habilitie, to understand, write, and speake LATIN.

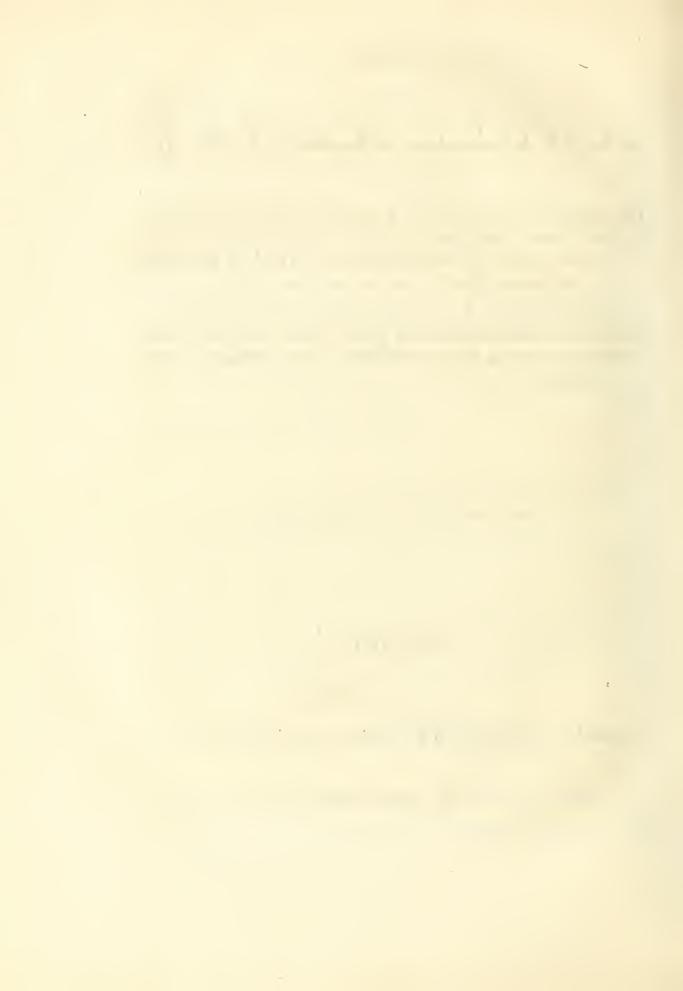

By ROGER ASCHAM.

Anno 1571.

AT LONDON,

Printed by JOHN DAYE, dwelling over ALDERSGATE.

Cum Gratia & Privilegio Regiæ Majestatis, per Decennium.

To the Honorable Sir WILLIAM CECILL, Knight, principal Secretary to the Quenes Most Excellent Majesty.

CUNDRY and reasonable be the causes why learned men have used to offer and dedicate such workes as they put abrode, to some such personage as they thinke fittest, eyther in respect of abilitie of defense, or skill for judgement, or private regard of kindnesse and dutie. Every one of those considerations, Sir, move me of right to offer this my late husbands, M. Aschams worke unto you. For well remembryng how much all good learnyng oweth unto you for defence thereof, as the Universitie of Cambrige, of which my said late husband was a member, have, in chosing you theyr worthy chauncellor, acknowledged; and how happily you have fpent your time in fuch studies, and caried the use thereof to the right ende, to the good service of the Quenes Majesty, and your countrey, to all our benefites; thyrdly, how much my fayd husband was many wayes bound unto you, and how gladly and comfortably he used in his life to recognise and report your goodnesse toward him, leaving with me, then his poore widow, and a great * fort of orphanes, a good comfort in the hope of your good continuance, which I have truly found to me and myne, and therefore do duely and dayly pray for you and yours: I could not finde any man for whose name this booke was more agreeable for hope of protection, more mete for fubmission to judgement, nor more due for respect of worthinesse of your part, and thankfulnesse of my husbandes and myne. Good I trust it shall do, as I am put in great hope by many very well learned that can well judge thereof. Mete therefore I compt it that fuch good as my husband was able to do and leave to the common-weale, it should be received under your name, and that the world should owe thanke thereof to you, to whom my husband, the authour of it, was, for good received of you, most dutifully bounden. And so befechyng you, to take on you the defence of this booke, to advance the good that may come of it by your allowance and furtherance, to publicke use and benefite, and to accept the thankful recognition of me and my poore children, trustyng of the continuance of your good memorie of M. Ascham and his, and dayly commending the prosperous estate of you and yours to God, whom you serve, and whose you are, I rest to trouble you.

* Sort is train, company, number.

Your humble

MARGARET ASCHAM.

af

A PREFACE to the READER.

Majestie Queen Elizabeth lay at her castle of Windsore: where, upon the 10th day of December*, it fortuned, that, in Sir William Cicells chamber, her Highnesse principal Secretarie, there dined together these personages, M. Secretarie himselse, Sir William Peter, Sir J. Mason, D. Wotton, Sir Richard Sackville Treasurer of the Exchequer, Sir Walter Mildmaye Chauncellor of the Exchequer, M. Haddon Master of Requestes, M. John Astely Master of the Jewell-House, M. Bernard Hampton, † M. Nicassus, and I. Of which number, the most part were of her Majesties Most Honourable Privic Counsell, and the rest serving her in very good place. I was glad then, and do rejoice yet to remember, that my chance was so happie to be there that day, in the companie of so manie wise and good men together, as hardly then could have beene piked out againe out of all Englande besides.

M. Secretarie hath this accustomed maner, though his head be never fo full of most weightie affaires of the realme, yet, ‡ at dinner time he doth seem to lay them always aside: and findeth ever sitte occasion to taulke pleasantlie of other matters, but most gladlie of some matter of learning: wherein he will curteslie heare the minde of the meanest at his table.

Not long after our fitting doune, "I have strange newes brought me, M. Secre- fayth M. Secretarie, this morning, that diverse scholers of Eaton be tarie.

- * This was about five years before the author's death; for he died the 30th of December in the year 1568, in the 53d year of his age.
- + Nicosius was a Greek of Constantinople, who came into England in the time of Queen Elizabeth, partly to propose an agreement between the Greek church and that of this nation; and partly to collect what charity he could for the poor distressed Christians of his own country.
- † Thus Crassus: "Eo autem omni sermone consecto, tantam in Crasso humanitatem se suisse, ut cum lauti accubuissent, tolleretur omnis illa superioris trislitia sermonis, eaque esse in homine jucunditas, et tantus in jocando lepos, ut dies inter eos Curiæ suisse retur, convivium Tusculani." Ciccro de Orat.

runne away from the schole, for seare of beating." Whereupon, M. Secretarie took occasion to wishe, that some more discretion were in many scholemasters, in using correction, than commonlie there is: who many times punishe rather the weakness of nature, than the fault of the scholer. Whereby many scholers, that might else prove well, be driven to hate learning, before they knowe what learning meaneth: and so are made willing to forsake their booke, and be glad to be put to any other kinde of living.

M. Peter, as one fomewhat fevere of nature, faid plainlie, "That the M. Peter. " rodde onelie was the fworde, that must keepe the schole in obedience, M. Wotton." and the scholer in good order." M. Wotton, a man milde of nature, with foft voice and fewe wordes, inclined to M. Secretaries judgment, and faid, " In mine opinion, the schole-house should be in deede, as Ludus lite-" it is called by name, * the house of play and pleasure, and not of feare rarius. " and bondage: and as I do remember, fo faith + Socrates in one place of Plato de " Plato. And therefore, if a rodde earie the feare of a fworde, it is Rep. " no marville, if those that be fearfull of nature, chose rather to for-" fake the place, than to stande alwayes within the feare of a sworde " in a t fonde mans handling." M. Mason, after his maner, was verie M. Mafon. merie with both parties, pleafantlie playing, both with the shrewde touches of many curste boyes, and with the small discretion of many M. Haddon. ** leude scholemasters. M. Haddon was fullie of M. Peters opinion, and faid, "That the best scholemaster of our time was the greatest beater," and fusta laboriferis tribuantur ut otia musis. Ausonius Edyll. 4.

* Grajo Schola nomine dista est,

† The Passage, to which the Dean of Canterbury here refers, is in Plato's 7th book of his Repub. not far from the end, and is asterwards cited by Mr. Meham. I shall here transcribe it somewhat more fully for the reader's satisfaction. Τὰ μὲν τόινυν λογισμῶν τε κὰ γεωμετειῶν, κὰ πάσης τῆς πριπαιδείας, ἢν τῆς Διαλεκθικῆς δεῖ προπαιδευθῆναι, παισίν ἔσε χεὴ περοβάλλειν, ἐχ ως ἐπάναγκες μαθεῖν τὸ σχῆμα τῆς διδαχῆς ποιεμένες. Τί δὴ; "Οι (ἦνδ' ἐγω) ἐδὲν μαθημα μελα δελέιας τον ἐλευθεξον χεὴ μανθάνειν. Οι μὲν γαρ τᾶ σώμαθω πονοι, βία πονέμενοι, χεῖξον οὐδὲν το σωμα ἀπεξγάζονλαι ψυχὴ δὲ βιαιον ἐδὲν ἔμμεν ν μάθημα. ᾿Αληθῆ, ἔρη. Μὴ τοίνυν βία (εἶπον) ὧ ἄριςε, τες πᾶιδας ἐν τοῖς μαθήμασιν, ἀλλὰ πάιζινλας τρέφε, ἵνα καὶ μᾶλλον διός τ' ῆς καθορᾶν ἐρ' δ ἔκας Τέρυκε.

# Fond, is faclish.

<sup>**</sup> Lewd originally fignified lay, not clerical, thence unlearned, thence gross of manners, favage, lastly libidinous.

This was Nic. Udal, master of Eaton school, whom Bale stiles El gantissimus omnium bonarum literarum megister, et carum felicissimus interpres: In the appendix I have given and named the person. "Though," quoth I, "it was his good for- The author tune to send from his schole unto the university *one of the best scho- of this booke.

" lers indeede of all our time, yet wise men do thincke, that that came fo to passe, rather by the great towardnesse of the scholer, than by the great beating of the master; and whether this be true or no, you yourselfe are best witnesse." I said somewhat further in the matter, how and why yong children were soner allured by love, than driven by beating, to attayne good learning: wherein I was the bolder to say my minde, because M. Secretarie courtesse provoked me thereunto, or else, in such a companie, and namelie in his presence, my wonte is, to be more willing to use mine eares than to occupy my tonge.

Sir Walter Mildmaye, M. Astely, and the rest, said veric litle; onelie Sir Rich. Sackville said nothing at all. After dinner I went up to read with the Queenes Majestie. We red then together in the Greeke tonge, as I well remember, that noble oration of Demosthenes against Æschines, for his salse dealing in his ambassage to King Philip of Macedonie. Sir Rich. Sackville came up sone after: and finding me in her Majesties Sir R. Sackprivy chamber, he tooke me by the hand, and carying me to a windoe, willes comfaid, "M. Ascham, I would not for a good deale of monie have been, with the author of this day, absent from dinner. Where, though I said nothing, yet thor of this booke." I gave as good eare, and do consider as well the taulke that passed, as a specimen of Mr. Udal's elegancy both in verse and prose. His severity his own scholar, Mr. Tusser, has sufficiently proclaimed in these lines:

From Pauls I went, to Eaton sent,
To learn straightways the Latin phrase;
Where sifty three stripes given to me
At once I had:
For fault but small, or none at all,
It came to pass, thus beat I was:
See Udal, see the mercy of thee
To me poor lad.

* This was Mr. Haddon, sometime fellow of King's college in Cambridge, very much complimented by all the learned men of that age; and of whom Queen Elizabeth, upon some comparison made betwixt him and Buchanan, thus gave her opinion; Buchananum omnibus antepono: Haddonum nemini postpono.

His works are collected into one volume, and published by Dr. Hatcher, to whose care and diligence we owe the catalogue of our society. I have thought proper to print one of his speeches, which he made to the scholars of Eaton, that something of his great abilities may be known.

 $\mathbf{C}$

" any one did there. M. Secretarie faid very wifely, and most truely, that " many yong wittes be driven to hate learninge, before they know what " learninge is. I can be good witness to this myselfe: for a fond schole-" master, before I was fullie fourtene yeare olde, drave me so, with fear of " beating, from all love of learninge, as nowe, when I know what diffe-" rence it is to have learninge, and to have little, or none at all, I feele it " my greatest griefe, and find it my greatest hurte, that ever came to me, " that it was my fo ill chance to light upon fo lewde a scholemaster. But " feeing it is but in vain to lament thinges paste, and also wisdome to " looke to thinges to come, furelie, God willing, if God lend me life, I " will make this my mishap, some occasion of good hap to litle * Robert " Sackville, my fonnes fonne; for whose bringinge up I would gladlie, " if it so please you, use speciallie your good advice. I heare say, you " have a fonne much of his age: we will deale thus togither. Point " you out a scholemaster, who, by your order, shall teache my sonne " and yours, and for all the rest I will provide, yea though they three " do cost me a couple of hundred poundes by year; and besides you shall " find me as fast a friend to you and yours, as perchance any you have." Which promife the worthie Gentleman furelie kept with me untill his dying daye.

The chief pointes of this booke.

We had then further taulke togither, of bringing up of children: of the nature of quicke and hard wittes: of the right choice of a good witte: of fear and love in teaching children. We passed from children and came to younge men, namely, Gentlemen: we taulked of their to much liberty to live as they lust; of their letting louse to sone to overmuch experience of ill, contrarie to the good order of many good olde common wealthes of the Persians and Greekes: of witte gathered, and good fortune gotten by some, onely by experience, without learninge: and lastlie, he required of me very earnestlie, to shewe, what I thought of the common goinge of Englishemen into Italie. "But, sayth he, be"cause this place, and this tyme, will not suffer so long taulke, as "these good matters require, therefore I praye you, at my request, and at your leysure, put in some order of writing, the chiefe pointes of this our taulke, concerning the right order of teachinge, and honesty

* This great care of the treasurer's in the education of his two grandsons, my Lord Clarendon has likewise taken notice of in the first book of his history.

" of living, for the good bringing up of children, and youg men. And " furelie, befide contenting me, you shall both please and profit very "many others." I made some excuse by lacke of habilitie, and weakenesse of bodie: "Well, saith he, I am not now to learne what you " can do. Our dear friende, + good Mr. Goodricke, whose judgement I " could well believe, did once for all fatisfie me fullie therein. Againe. " I heard you fay, not long ago, that you may thanke Sir John Cheke " for all the learninge you have: and I know very well myselfe that " you did teach the Queene. And therefore, feeing God did fo bleffe " you to make you the scholer of the best master, and also the schole-" master of the best scholer, that ever were in our time, surelie you " should please God, benefite your countrie, and honest your own " name, if you would take the paines to impart to others, what you " learned of fuch a master, and how ye taught such a scholer. And, " in uttering the stuffe ye received of the one, in declaring the order " ye tooke with the other, ye shall never lacke neither matter nor ma-" ner, what to write, nor how to write, in this kind of argument."

I beginning some further excuse, sodainlie was called to come to the Queene. The night following I slept little, my head was so full of this our former talke, and I so mindfull somewhat to satisfie the honest request of so deare a friend. I thought to prepare some little treatise, for a new years gift, that Christmass. But, as it chaunceth to busie builders, so, in building this my poor schole-house (the rather because the form of it is somewhat new, and differing from others) the work rose dailie higher and wider, than I thought it would at the beginninge.

And though it appear now, and be in very deede, but a small cotage, poore for the stuffe, and rude for the workmanship, yet, in going forward, I found the site so good, as I was lothe to give it over, but the making so costlie, outreaching my habilitie, as many times I wished, that some one of those three, my deare friendes, with full purses, Sir Thomas Smithe, M. Haddon, or M. Watson, had had the doing of it. Yet, neverthelesse, I myselfe spending gladly that little that I gatte at home by good Sir John Cheke, and that that I borrowed abroad of my frend Sturmius, beside somewhat that was left me in reversion by my olde masters, Plato, Aristotle, and Ciccro, I have at last patched it up, as I could, and as you see. If the matter be mean, and meanly handled, I pray you beare both with me and it: for never worke went up in worfe wether, with mo lettes and stoppes, than this poore schole-house of mine. * Westminster-Hall can bear some witnesse, beside + much weaknesse of bodie, but more trouble of minde by some such sores, as grieve me to touche them myselfe, and therefore I propose not to open them to others. And, in middes of outward injuries and inward cares, to encrease them withall, ± good Sir Richard Sackville dieth, that worthie Gentleman; that earnest favourer and furtherer of Gods true religion; that faithful servitor to his Prince and countrie: a lover of learning, and all learned men; wife in all doinges; curtesse to all persons; shewing spite to none; doing good to many; and, as I well found, to me fo fast a friend, as I never lost the like before. When he was gone, my hart was dead. There was not one that wore a black gown for him, who carried a heavier hart for him than I. When he was gone, I cast this booke awaie; I could not look upon it, but with weeping eyes, in remembering him, who was the onelie fetter on to do it; and would have beene, not onlie a glad commender of it, but also a sure and certaine comfort to me and mine for it. Almost two years togither, this booke lay scattered and neglected, and had beene quite given over of me, if the goodnesse of one had not given me fome life and spirite againe. God, the mover of goodnesse, prosper alwais him and his, as he hath many times comforted me and mine; and, I trust to God, shall comfort more and more. Of whom, most justly I may say, and verie oft, and alwaies gladlie,

† Bishop of Ely, and Lord Chancellor in King Edward's reign.

Sir William Cicill.

* That he was unhappily engaged in law appears from Dr. Haddon to his friend Sir Thomas Smith, refident in France. " Scio illum utriusque nostrum esse studiosissimum, et aussi dio ipsum hoc tempore litibus juris permolestè exerceri."

† &quot;Ingravescente jam ætate, à nocturnis & pomeridianis studiis abhorrebat: Antelucanis & matutinis temporibus legebat, commentabatur, studebat, scribebat. Erat corpore imbecillis, & valetudinarius, multis morbis fractus, continentibus sebribus correptus, variis ægrotationibus afflictus; quæ paucis ante mortem annis eum in hecticam sebrim conjecerunt." This is taken out of Mr. Grant's, excellent oration.

‡ Sir Richard Sackville died the same day that Sir John Mason did, in the year 1566, and the eighth of Queen Elizabith, two years before Mr. Ascham's death.

I am wont to fay, that sweet verse of Sophocles, spoken by * Oedipus to worthy Theseus, Έχω γὰς ὰ ἀχω διὰ σὲ, κἐκ ἄλλον βροτῶν.

Soph. in Oed. Col.

This hope hath helped me to end this booke: which, if he allowe, I shall thinke my labours well employed, and shall not much esteme the misliking of any others. And I trust, he shall thinke the better of it, because he shall finde the best part thereof to come out of his schole, whom he, of all men, loved and liked best.

Yet some men, friendly enough of nature, but of small judgement in learninge, do thinke I take to much paines, and spend to much time, in settinge forth these childrens affairs. But these good men were never brought up in Socrates schole, who saith plainlie, That no man goeth about a more podlie purpose, than he that is mindfull of the good bringing up, both of his own and other mens children.

Therefore, I trust, good and wise men will thinke well of this my doing. And of other, that thinke otherwise, I will thinke myselfe, they are but men, to be pardoned for their follie, and pitied for their ignorance.

In writing this booke, I have had earnest respecte to three speciall pointes, trothe of religion, honestie in living, right order in learninge. In which three waies, I praie God, my poore children may diligently waulke: for whose sake, as nature moved, and reason required, and necessitie also somewhat compelled, I was the willinger to take these paines.

For feeing, at my death, I am not like to leave them any great store of living, therefore, in my life-time, I thought good to bequeath unto them,

* Oedipus speaks to Thefeus in a transport of joy, having through his affishance recovered his two daughters out of the hands of Creon.

† Plato in initio Theagis: ᾿Αλλὰ μὲν δη, ὧ Δημόδοκε, καὶ, λέγεταί γε συμβελή ἱερὸν χρῆμα τἶναι εἶπερ ἔν καὶ ἄλλη ήτις εν ἐςιν ἱερὰ, καὶ ἀυτή ἀν εἴη ωερὶ ἦς σὺ νῦν συμβελέυη. Οῦ γάρ ἐςι περὶ ὅτε θειστέρε ἀν ἄνθρωπ۞ βελεύσαιο, ἢ περὶ Παιδείας καὶ τῶν αὐτε, καὶ τῶν αὐτε εἰκείων. This passage is cited by the author, though not so fully.

them, in this little booke, as in my last will and testament, the right waie to good learninge; which if they followe, with the feare of God, they shall verie well come to sufficiencie of livinge.

I wishe also, with all my heart, that yonge M. Rob. Sackville may take that fruite of this labour, that his worthie grand-father purposed he should have done; and if any other do take, either proffet or pleafure thereby, they have cause to thanke M. Robert Sackville, for whom speciallie this my Schole-master was provided.

And one thing I would have the reader consider in reading this booke, that, because no schole-master hath charge of any childe before he enter into his schole, therefore, I leaving all former care of their good bringing up to wise and good parentes, as a matter not belonging to the schole-master, I do appoynt this my schole-master, then, and there to begin, where his office and charge beginneth. Which charge lasteth not long, but untill the scholer be made hable to go to the Universitie, to procede in Logicke, Rhetoricke, and other kindes of learninge.

Yet, if my Schole-master, for love he beareth to his scholer, shall teach him somewhat for his furtherance, and better judgement in learninge, * that may serve him seven yeare after in the Universitie, he doth his scholer no more wrong, nor deserveth no worse name thereby, than he doth in London, who, selling silke or cloth unto his friend, doth give him better measure than either his promise or bargaine was.

Farewell in Christ.

* Mr. Ascham seems in this place to oppose Quintilian, and that with good reason. "Tenuit consuetudo, quæ quotidie magis invalescit, ut præceptoribus eloquentiæ, Latinis quidem seemper, sed etiam Græcis interim, discipuli serius quam ratio postulat, traderentur.—
Itaque quod est maxime ridiculum, non ante ad declamandi magistrum mittendus videtur puer, quam declamare jam sciat. Nos suum cuique professioni modum demus." Initio libri secundi.

The FIRST BOOKE for the YOUTH.

FTER the childe hath learned perfitlie the eight partes of speach, let him then learne the right joyning togither of substantives with adjectives, the nowne with the verbe, the relative with the antecedent. And, in learninge further his syntaxis, by mine advice, he shall not use the common order in common scholes, for making of Latines: whereby the childe commonly learneth, first, an evill choice of wordes, (and "*Right choice of wordes, saith Cæsar, is the foundation of eloquence;") then a wrong placing of wordes; and, lastlie, an ill framing of the sentence, with a perverse judgement, both of wordes and sentences. These faultes, taking once roote in youth, be never, or hardlie, pluckt away in age. Moreover, there is no one thing, that hath more, either Making of dulled the wittes, or taken awaye the will of children from learninge, Latines marreth children they have to satisfie their masters in making of Latines.

For the scholer is commonlie beat for the makinge, when the master were more worthie to be beat for the mending, or rather marring of the same: the master many times being as ignorant as the childe, what to saie properlie and sittle to the matter.

Two scholemasters have set forth in print, either of them a booke of such kinde of Latines, + Horman and Whittington ‡. A childe shall

- * Cicero de claris Orat. Sect. 72. " Quinetiam in maximis occupationibus cum ad te ipsum (inquit ad me intuens) de ratione Latinè loquendi accuratissime scripserit; primoque in libro dixerit, Verborum de estum, originem esse choquentia."
- † Mr William Horman, born at Salisbury, was sometime master of Eaton school. As to his performance, though it is here censured, and perhaps not unjustly, as of little use to promote learning; yet it is highly recommended by that learned gentleman, Mr. Robert Adrich of Eaton, (whom Erasmus mentions with great respect) in a very long and elegant epistle; and Mr. Lily has expressed his opinion of it in this following epigram:

Ausoniæ gentis linguam si quæris, et optas Pulsa barbarie dostius ere loqui; Hoc opus Hormauni diseas puer, utile munus, Et veterum referens aurea dista pasrum.

See more of him in the fecond book.

† Whittington was born at Lichfield, or near it. He wrote many grammatical books, which Lilly's work drove out of the schools. He called himself Archipo.ta Anglice. **

learne

learne of the better of them, that, which an other daie, if he be wife and come to judgement, he must be faine to unlearne againe.

There is a waie, touched in the * first booke of Cicero de Oratore, which, wifelie brought into fcholes, truely taught, and conftantly used, would not only take wholly away this butcherlie feare of making of Latines, but would also, with ease and pleasure, and in short time, as I know by good experience, worke a true choice and placing of wordes, a right ordering of fentences, an easy understanding of the tonge, a readinesse to speake, a facilitie to write, a true judgement, both of his owne, and other mens doinges, what tonge foever he doth use.

The waie is this. After the three concordances learned, as I touched before, let the master read unto him the Epistles of Cicero, gathered togither and chosen out by Sturmius, for the capacitie of children.

The order

First, let him teach the childe, cherefullie and plainlie, the cause and of teaching. matter of the letter: then let him construe it into Englishe so oft, as the childe may easelie carrie awaie the understanding of it: lastlie, parfe it over perfitelie. This done thus, let the childe, by and by, both construe and parse it over againe: so that it may appear, that the childe doubteth in nothing that his master taughte him before. After this, the childe must take a paper booke, and, sitting in some place, where no man shall prompe him, by himself, let him translate into Englishe his former lesson. Then shewing it to his master, let the master take from him his Latin booke, and, paufing an houre at the least, then let the childe translate his own Englishe into Latine againe, in an other paper booke. When the childe bringeth it, turned into Latin, the mafter must compare it with Tullies booke, and laie them both togither: and where the childe doth well, either in chofing, or true placing of Tullies wordes, let the master praise him, and saie "Here ye do well." For,

Two paper bookes.

* The passage here referred to is in Tully's first book De Oratore. " Postea mihi placuit, " eoque fum usus adolescens, ut summorum oratorum Græcas orationes explicarem. Quibus 66 lectis hoc affequebar, ut, cum ea, quæ legerem Græcè, Latinè redderem, non folum optimis verbis uterer, & tamen usitatis, sed etiam exprimerem quædam verba imitande, " quæ nova nostris essent, dummodo essent idonea."

I assure you, there is no such whetstone, to sharpen a good witte, and Children encourage a will to learninge, as is praise.

But if the childe misse, either in forgetting a worde, or in chaunging a good with a worse, or misordering the sentence, I would not have the master either frowne or chide with him, if the childe have done his diligence, and used no trowandship therein. For I know, by good ex-Gentlenesse perience, that a childe shall take more profit of two faultes gentle in teaching. warned of, than of four thinges rightlie hitte. For then the master shall have good occasion to saie unto him, Tullie would have used such a worde, not this: Tullie would have placed this worde here, not there: would have used this case, this number, this person, this degree, this gender: he would have used this moode, this tense, this simple, rather than this compound: this adverbe here, not there: he would have ended the sentence with this verbe, not with that nowne or participle, &c.

In thefe few lines I have wrapped up the most tedious part of Grammar, and also the ground of almost all the rules that are so busilie taught by the mafter, and so hardlie learned by the scholer, in all common scholes; which, after this fort, the master shall teach without all error, and the scholer shall learne without great paine, the master being led by fo fure a guide, and the scholer being brought into so plaine and easy a waie. And therefore we do not contemne rules, but we gladlic teache rules; and teach them more plainlie, fensiblie, and orderlie, than they be commonlie taught in common fcholes. For when the master shall compare Tullies booke with his scholers translation, let the master, at the first, lead and teach his scholer to joine the rules of his grammar booke with the examples of his present lesion, untill the scholer, by himselfe, be able to fetch out of his grammar every rule for every example; fo as the grammar booke be ever in the scholers hand, and also used of him as a dictionarie for every present use. This is a lively and perfite waie of teaching of rules; where the common waie, used in common scholes, to read the grammar alone by itfelfe, is tedious for the master, hard for the scholer, colde and uncomfortable for them both.

Let your scholer be never afraid to ask you any doubt, but use discretelie the best allurementes ye can, to encourage him to the same, lest his over much fearinge of you drive him to feeke some misorderlie shifte; as to feeke to be helped by fome other booke, or to be prompted by fome other scholer, and so go about to beguile you much, and himselfe more.

With this waie, of good understanding the matter, plaine construinge, diligent parfinge, dailie tranflatinge, cheerfull admonishinge, and heedefull amendinge of faultes; never leaving behinde juste praise for well doinge, I would have the scholer brought up withall, till he had red and translated over the first booke of Epistles chosen out by Sturmius, with a good piece of a comedie of Terence also.

All this while, by mine advise, the childe shall use to speake no La-Latin fpeaktin: for, as Cicero faith in like mater, with like wordes, Loquendo, inge. G. Budæus. male loqui discunt. And that excellent learned man, * G. Budæus, in his Greeke commentaries, fore complaineth, that, when he began to learne the Latin tonge, use of speaking Latin at the table, and elsewhere, unadvisedlie, did bring him to fuch an evill choice of wordes, to fuch a crooked framing of fentences, that no one thing did hurte or hinder him more, all the days of his life afterward, both for readinesse in speaking, and also good judgement in writinge.

> In very deede, if children were brought up in such a house +, or such a schole, where the Latin tonge were properlie and perfitlie spoken, as Tiberius and Caius Gracchi were brought up, in their mother Cornelias house,

<sup>* &</sup>quot; Id Laurentio (Vallæ) non alias accidit, quam ex prava loquentium consuetudine, quibus aut legendis aut audiendis inviti erroris contagionem contrahimus, fimul ex fermone extemporali et neglecto, cui inter samiliares assuescimus, præsertim puræ Latinitatis ig-naros: Qua noxa sit interdum, ut quædam imprudentibus excidant; id quod aliquando experti sumus in Autographis nostris, ita ut flagitiosæ culpæ nos perpuderet." Budæus.

† &quot; Magni interest, quos quisque audiat quotidie domi, quibuscum loquatur à puero; quemadmodum patres, pædagogi, matres etiam loquantur. Legimus epistolas Corneliæ, " matris Gracchorum: Apparet filios non tam in gremio educatos, quam in sermone matris." Cic. de claris Orat. And again in the same book: "Fuit Gracchus diiigentia Corneliæ matris à puero doctus, & Græcis literis eruditus."

house, surelie then the dailie use of speakinge were the best and readiest waie to learne the Latin tonge. But now, commonlie, in the best scholes in England, for wordes, right choice is smallie regarded, true propriety wholly neglected, confusion is brought in, barbarousnesse is bred up fo in young wittes, as afterward they be, not onelie marred for speakinge, but also corrupted in judgement: as with much adoe, or never at all, they be brought to right frame againe.

Yet all men covet to have their children speake Latin: and so do I verie earnestlie too. We bothe have one purpose: we agree in desire, we wishe one end, but we differ somewhat in order and waie, that leadeth rightlie to that end. Other would have them speake * at all adventures; and, fo they be speakinge, to speake, the master careth not, the scholer knoweth not, what. This is, to seeme, and not to be; excepte it be, to be bolde without shame, rashe without skill, full of wordes without witte. I wishe to have them speake so, as it may well appeare, that the braine doth governe the tongue, and that reason leadeth forth the taulke. + Socrates doctrine is true in Plato, and well marked, and truely uttered by Horase in Arte Poetica, that, wherefoever knowledge doth accompanie the witte, there best utterance doth Much writalwaies awaite upon the tongue. For good understanding must first be ing breedeth bred in the childe, which, being nourished with skill and use of writ- ready speakinge (as I will teach more largelie hereafter) is the onlie waie to bringe Scribendi recte, sapere est & principium, & sons. Rem tibi Socraticæ poterunt oftendere chartæ: Verbaque provisam rem non invita sequentur.

* Here it is plain, Mr. Ascham had Tully in his view. " Plerique in hoc vocem modò, " neque eam fcienter, & vires exercent suas, & linguæ celeritatem incitant, verborumque "
frequentia delectantur. In quo fallit eos, quod audierent, Dicendo homines, ut dicunt, efficere folcre. Verè enim etiam illud dicitur, Perverse dicere, homines perverse dicendo, faciltime consequi. Quamobrem in istis ipsis exercitationibus, etsi utile est, etiam subitò sæpe dicere, ce tamen illud utilius, sumpto spatio ad cogitandum, paratius atque accuratius dicere. Ca-" put autem est, quod (ut verè dicam) minimè facimus (est enim magni laboris, quem " plerique fugimus) qu'am plurimum scribere." Cicero de Orat.

† Plato in Phædro: Τας δε ομοιότηλας άρλι διήλθομεν, ότι σανλαχε ό την αλήθειαν είδώς, κάλλιςα ἐπίςαλαι ευρίσκειν. Idem in Phædone: 'Ανηρ ἐπιςάμεν, ωερίων ἐπίςαλαι ἔχοι ἄν δεναι λόγον, η ε΄; Πολλη ἀνάγκη (ἔφη) ω Σώκραλες I his doctrine of Socrates here mentioned, Crassus seems modestly to contradict, in Tully's first book De Oratore, calling it rather probable, than true. "Atque illud est probabilius, neque tamen verum, quod Socrates dicere solebat, Omnes in eo quod scirent, satis esse cloquentes." The verses in Herace, which he commends, are well known:

him to judgement and readinesse in speakinge: and that in farre shorter er time (if he followe constantlie the * trade of this lesson) than he shall do, by common teachinge of the common scholes in England.

But, to go forward, as you perceive your scholer to goe better and better on awaie, first, with understanding his lesson more quicklie, with parsing more readilie, with translating more spedelie and persitie them he was wonte; after, give him longer lessons to translate, and, withall, begin to teach him, both in nownes and verbes, what is Proprium, and what is Translatum; what Synonymum, what Diversum; which be Contraria, and which be most notable Phrases in all his lessure. As,

Proprium.	{	Rex fepultus est magnificè.
Translatum.	{	Cum illo principe, sepulta est et gloria, et salus reipublicæ.
+ Synonyma.	-{	Enfis, gladius. Laudare, prædicare.
Diversa.	{	‡ Diligere, amare. Calere, exardescere. Inimicus, hostis.
Contraria.	{	Acerbum et luctuosum bellunz. Dulcis et læta pax.
Phrases.	{	Dare verba.    Abjicere obedientiam.

* Trade is practice. **

Nessit, quâ valeat trahi, catenam. Boetius.

Your

† Synonyma are very rare in any language. Laudare is simply to praise, prædicare, to praise jublickly. **

† &quot;Quis erat, qui putaret ad eum amorem, quem erga te habebam, posse aliquid acce"dere? Tantum tamen accessit, ut mihi nunc denique amare videar, antea dilexisse." Gicero ad Dolabellam. Videtur Scaligero diligere à deligendo dictum, quod tanquam initium sit amandi.

This is Tully's expression; which I therefore mention, because I have known some question the authority of it. Cic. lib. 1. Offic. "Relinquant enim, & abjiciunt obedientiam, nec ratione parent." And near the end of the same book; "Non illa omnia relinquat, atque abjiciat?" The allusion seems to be, A foldier quitting his post, and casting away his arms.

Abject clypeum, locoque motus

Your scholer then must have the third paper booke: in the which, The third after he hath done his double translation, let him write, after this sort, paper booke. four of these forenamed six, diligentlie marked out of every lesson.

Quatuor. Propria,

Translata, Synonyma, Diversa, Contraria, Phrases.

Or else three, or two, if there be no moe: and, if there be none of these at all in some lecture, yet not omitte the order, but write these:

[ Diversa nulla, Contraria nulla, &c.

This diligent translating, joined with this heedefull marking, in the foresaid epistles, and afterwarde in some plaine oration of Tullie, as Pro lege Manil. Pro Archia Poeta, or in those * three Ad C. Cass. shall worke such a right choice of wordes, so streight a framing of sentences, such a true judgement, both to write skilfullie, and speake wittelie, as wise men shall both praise and marvell at.

If your scholer do misse sometimes, in marking rightlie these fore-Gentlenesse said six thinges, chide not hastelie, for that shall both dull his witte, in teaching, and discorage his diligence, but monish him gentelie; which shall make him both willing to amende, and glad to go forward in love and hope of learning.

I have now wished twise or thrise this gentle nature to be in a schole-master: and that I have done so, neither by chance, nor without some reason, I will now declare at large, why, in mine opinion, love is Love.

* There are but two Orations properly ad C. Cafarem, viz. pro Q. Ligario, & rege Dejotaro: the third is easily understood to be that pro M. Marcello.

fitter

206

Feare.

fitter than feare, gentlenesse better than beating, to bring up a childe rightlie in learning.

Common scholes.

With the common use of teaching and beating in common scholes of England, I will not greatlie contend; which, if I did, it were but a small grammatical controversie, neither belonging to heresie nor treason, nor greatly touching God nor the Prince; although in very decde, in the end, the good or ill bringing up of children doth as much serve to the good or ill service of God, our Prince, and our whole countrie, as any one thing doth beside.

I do gladlie agree with all good scholemasters in these pointes; to have children brought to good persitnesse in learning, to all honestie in manners, to have all faultes rightlie amended, to have everie vice feverelie corrected; but for the order and waie that leadeth rightlie to these pointes, we somewhat differ. For commonlie many scholemasters, fome as I have feen, moe as I have heard tell, be of fo crooked a nature, as, when they meete with a harde witted scholer, they rather breake him than bowe him, rather marre him than mend him. For when the scholemaster is angrie with some other matter, then will he fonest faul to beate his scholer; and though he himselfe should be punished for his folie, yet must be beat some scholer for his pleasure, though there be no cause for him to do so, nor yet fault in the scholer to deserve so. These, ye will say, be fond scholemasters, and sewe they be that be found to be fuch. They be fond indeede, but furelie over many fuch be found everie where. But this will I fay, that even the wifest of your great beaters, do as oft punish nature, as they do correcte faultes. Yea, many times, the better nature is fore punished; for, if one, by quicknesse of witte, take his lesson readelie, an other, by hardnesse of witte, taketh it not so spedelie, the first is alwaies commended, the other is commonlie punished; when a wife scholemaster, should rather discretlie consider the right disposition of both their natures, and not fo much weigh what either of them is able to do now, as what either of them is likelie to do hereafter. For this I know, not onlie by reading of bookes in my studie, but also by experience of life abrode in the world, that those, which be commonlie the wifest, the best

Sharpe fcholemafters.

Nature punished.

best learned, and best men also, when they be olde *, were never com-Quicke monlie the quickest of witte, when they were yonge. The causes why, wittes for learninge. amongst other, which be many, that move me thus to thinke, be these fewe which I will reckon. Quicke wittes commonlie be apte to take, unapte to keepe: + foone hote and defirous of this and that, as colde, and fone wery of the same againe; more quicke to enter spedelie, than hable to pearfe farre; even like over-sharpe tooles, whose edges be verie foone turned. Such wittes delite themselves in easie and pleasant studies, and never passe forward in hie and hard sciences. And therefore the quickest wittes commonlie may prove the best poetes, but not the wifest orators: readie of tongue to speake boldlie, not deep of judgement, either for good counfell or wife writing. Also for manners and life, quicke Quicke wittes commonlie be, in desire new fangled, in purpose unconstant, light wittes for manners and to promise any thing, ready to forget every thing, both benefite and in-life. jurie: and thereby neither fast to frend, nor fearfull to foe: inquifitive of every trifle, not fecret in greatest affaires; bolde, with any person, busie in every matter; fothing such as be present, nipping any that is absent; of nature also, alwais flattering their betters, envying their equals, despising their inferiors; and, by quicknesse of witte, verie quicke and readie to like none fo well as themselves.

Moreover, commonlie, men verie quicke of witte be also verie light of ‡ conditions; and, thereby, very readie of disposition, to be carried over quicklie by any light companie, to any riot and unthriftinesse when they be yonge, and therefore feldome either honest of life, or riche inliving, when they be olde. For quicke in witte, and light in manners. be either feldome troubled, or verie foon wery, in carying a verie hevie purse. Quicke wittes also be, in most part of all their doinges, over quicke, hastie, rashe, headie, and brain-sicke. These two last wordes, Headie and Brain-ficke, be fitte and proper wordes, rifing naturally of the matter, and tearmed aptlie by the condition of over much quick-nesse of witte. In youthe also they be readie scoffers, privie mockers, and ever over light and mery; in age sone testie, very waspishe, and alwaies over miserable. And yet fewe of them come to any greate age, by reason of their misordered life when they were yonge, but a great deale fewer of them come to shewe any great countenance, or beare any great authoritie abrode in the world, but either live obscurely, men know not how, or dye obscurely, men marke not when.

* This was remarkably the character of Cato the Younger, as he is described by Plutarch.

† Thus Arifiele, most admirably describing the nature of youth: Εὐμεθαθολοι δε, κὶ αψίκ επι ωρός τὰς ἐπιθυμίας κὸ σφόθεα μὲν ἐπιθυμέσι, ταχὺ δὲ ωανονίαι. ὀξεῖαι γὰς αῖ βαλήσεις, κὸ ἐμεγάλαι, ὧσπες αὶ τῶν καμνόνθων δίψαι κὸ ωτίναι. Rhet. 2. εκρ. 12.

† Conditions are qualities of mind, temper, disposition.

They be like trees, I that shewe forth faire blossoms and broad leaves in Spring time, but bring out finall and not long lafting fruit in Harvest time; and that only fuch as fall and rotte before they be ripe, and fo never, or feldome, come to any good at all. For this ye shall finde most true by experience, that, amongest a number of quicke wittes in youthe, fewe be found, in the end, either verie fortunate for themselves, or verie profitable to ferve the common wealth, but decay and vanish, men know not which way, except a very few, to whom, peradventure, blood and hapby parentage may perchance purchase a long standing upon the stage. The which felicity, because it cometh by others procuring, not by their owne defervinge, and stand by other mens feete, and not by their own, what owtward brag foever is borne by them, is indeed, of itselfe, and in wife mens eyes, of no great estimation.

Some scienwittes, and marre mens manners.

cal heades.

Galen. Plato.

Some wittes, moderate enough by nature, be many times marde by ceshurtmens over much studie and use of some sciences, namelie, musicke, arithmeticke, and geometrie. These sciences, as they sharpen mens wittes over much, so they change mens manners over fore, if they be not moderately mingled, and wifely applied to some good use of life. Marke Mathemati- all * mathematical heades, which be only and wholy bent to those sciences, how folitary they be themselves, how unfit to live with others. and how unapte to ferve in the world. This is not onelie knowen now by common experience, but uttered long before by wife mens judgement and fentence. Galene fayth, much musick marreth mens manners: and Plato hath a notable place of the same thing in his bookes De Rep. well marked also, and excellentlie translated by Tullie himself.

† &quot; Illud ingeniorum velut præcox genus, non temere unquam pervenit ad frugem." Quint. lib. r. " Non enim potest in eo esse succus diuturnus, quod nimis celeriter est maturita-" tem assecutum." Cicero de Orat. lib. 1.

* This censure of mathematicians is confirmed by Swift, in Gulliver's Travels. **

Of this matter I wrote once more at large, twenty yeare ago, in my *booke of Shootinge: now I thought but to touch it, to prove, that over much quicknesse of witte, either given by nature, or sharpened by studie, doth not commonlie bring forth, eyther greatest learning, best maners, or happiest life in the end.

Contrariswife, a witte in youth that is not over dulle, heavie, Hard wittes knottie and lumpishe, but hard, tough, and though somewhat staf-in learning. fishe, (as Tullie wisheth, otium, quietum non languidum: and negotium cum labore, non cum periculo) such a witte, I say, if it be, at the first, well handled by the mother, and rightlie smothed and wrought as it should, not overwartlie, and against the wood, by the scholemaster, both for learning and hole course of living, proveth alwaies the best. In woode and stone, not the softest, but hardest, be alwaies aptest for portraiture, both fairest for pleasure, and most durable for profit. Hard wittes be hard to receive, but fure to keepe; painfull without wearienesse, hedefull without wavering, constant without newfanglenesse; bearing heavie thinges, though not lightlie, yet willinglie; entring hard thinges, though not easelie yet depelie; and so come to that persitnesse of learning in the ende, that quicke wittes feeme in hope, but do not in dede, or else verie feldome, ever attaine unto. Also, for manners and life, hard Hard wittes wittes, commonlie, are hardlie caried, either to desire everie new thing, in manners or else to marvell at every strange thinge: and therefore they be carefull and lyfe. and diligent in their own matters, not curious and busey in other mens affaires, and fo they become wife themselves, and also are counted honest by others. They be grave, stedfast, filent of tong, secret of hart. Not hastie in making, but constant in keping any promise. Not rashe in uttering, but ware in confidering every matter: and thereby, not quicke in speaking, but deepe of judgement, whether they write or give counsell in all weightie affairs. And theis be the men that become, in the end, both most happie for themselves, and alwaise best estemed abrode in the world.

I have bene longer in describing the nature, the good, or ill successe, of the quicke and hard witte, than perchance some will thinke this place and matter doth require. But my purpose was hereby plainlie to utter,

* See page 72.

The best wittes driven from what injurie is offered to all learninge, and to the common wealth alfo, first, by the fond father in chosing, but chieslie by the lewd * scholelearning to master in beating and driving away the best natures from learninge. other livyng. A childe that is still, silent, constant, and somewhat hard of witte, is either never chosen by the father to be made a scholer, or else, when he cometh to the schole, he is smally regarded, little looked unto, he lacketh teaching, he lacketh coraging, he lacketh all thinges, onelie he never lacketh beating, nor any word that may move him to hate learninge, nor any deed that may drive him from learninge, or any other kinde of living.

Hard wittes every kind of life.

And when this fadde natured, and hard witted childe is bette from: prove best in his booke, and becommeth after, eyther student of the common lawe, or page in the court, or ferving man, or bound prentice to a merchant, or to fome handiecrafte, he proveth, in the ende, wifer, happier, and many times honester too, than many of their quicke wittes do by their learninge.

> Learninge is both hindred and injured to, by the ill choice of them that fend young scholers to the universities; of whom must nedes come: all oure divines, lawyers, and physicians.

The ill choice of wittes for learninge.

These young scholers be chosen commonlie + as young apples be chofen by children, in a faire garden about St. James tyde: a childe willchose a sweeting, because it is presentlie faire and pleasant, and refuse a runnet, because it is then greene, hard and sowre, when the one, if it be eaten, doth breed both wormes and ill humours: the other, if it stand his tyme, be ordered and kept as it should, is holsome of itfelf, and helpeth to the good digeftion of other meates: sweetinges

* Anealis, qui fibi ipse cum nequeat imperare, incontinentes statim alteri injicit manus.

† &quot; Ita est, inquit Accius, uti dicis. Neque id sane me pœnitet : meliora enim sore spero,. quæ deinceps scribam. Nam quod in pomis est, itidem, inquit, esse aiunt in ingeniis:
quæ dura et acerba nascuntur, post siunt mitia & jucunda. Sed quæ gignuntur statim vieta et mollia, atque in principio sunt uvida, non matura mox siunt; sed putria. Relinquendum igitur visum est in ingenio, quod dies atque ætas mitiscet." A. Gellius, lib. 13.

will receive wormes, rotte, and dye on the tree, and never, or feldome, come to the gathering for good and lasting store.

For verie greafe of herte I will not applie the similatude: but hereby is plainlie feen, how learning is robbed of her best wittes, first, by the greate beating, and after by the ill chosing of scholers to go to the universities: whereof commeth, partlie, that lewde and spitefull proverbe, founding to the greate hurte of learning, and shame of learned men, that "the greatest clerkes be not the wisest men."

And though I, in all this discourse, seem plainlie to prefer hard and rough wittes before quicke and light wittes, both for learning and manners, yet am I not ignorant that some quicknesse of witte is a singular gift of God, and so most rare amonges men; and namelie, such a witte as is quicke without lightnesse, sharp without brittlenesse, defirous of good thinges without new fanglenesse, diligent in painfull thinges without werifomnesse, and constant in good will to do all thinges well; as I know was in Sir John Cheke, and is in some that yet live, in whom all these faire qualities of witte are fullie mette together.

But it is notable and trewe, that Socrates fayth in Plato to his frende Plato in Phado, that " * that number of men is fewest, which farre excede, Phadone. "either in good or ill, in wisedom or solie; but the meane betwixt Verie good, or verie ill both be the greatest number:" which he proveth trewe in diverse men, be fewother thinges; as in grey houndes, amonges which fewe are found ex- est in numceding greate, or exceding little, exceding swift, or exceding slowe. And ber. therefore, speaking of quick and hard wittes, I meant the common number of quick and hard wittes; amonges the which, for the most parte, the hard witte proveth manie times the better learned, wifer and honester man: and therefore do I the more lament that fuch wittes commonly be eyther kepte from learning by fond fathers, or bet from learninge by lewde scholemasters.

And,

* Plato's words are these: — οὐτως ἂν ἡγήσαιο, τὰς μὲν χρης ὰς τὰ συηρὰς σφόδρα ολίγες εἶναι ἐκαθέρες· τὰς δὲ μεθαξὺ, ωλείς ες. Πῶς λέγεις; ἦν δ ἐγώ. "Ωσπερ (ἢ δ' δς) ωερί τῶν σφόδρα μικρῶν κὰ μεγάλων, οἴει τὰ σπανιώτερον εἶναι, ἢ σφόδρα μέγαν ἢ σφόδρα σμικρὸν ἔξευρεῖν ἄνθρωπον; ἢ κύνα, ἢ ἄλλο οἶιᾶν; ἢ ἄυ ταχὺν, ἢ βραδὺν; ἢ καλὸν, ἢ αἰσχρὸν, ἢ λευκὸν, ἢ μέλανα; "Η ἐκ ἢσθησαι, ὅτι ωάνθων τῶν τοι έτων τα μὲν ἄκρα τῶν ἐσχάτων, σπάνια κὰ ολίγα, τὰ δὲ μεθαξὺ, ἄφθονα κὰ ωολλά. By a mistake of memory, Crito was twice mentioned by Mr. Afcham instead of Phædo.

Horsemen be wiser in knowledge of a good colte, than scholemasters be in knowledge of a good witte.

A good rider better rea good scholemas-Horse well broken, children ill taught.

And, speaking thus much of the wittes of children for learning, the opportunitie of the place, and goodnesse of the matter, might require to have here declared the most speciall notes of a good witte for learning in a childe; after the manner and custom of a good horseman, who is skilfull to know, and hable to tell others, how, by certain fure fignes, a man may choise a colte, that is like to prove an other day excellent for the faddle. And it is pitie, that commonlie more care is had, yea, and that amonges verie wife men, to find out rather a cunnynge man for their horse, than a cunnynge man for their children. They warded than fay nay in worde, but they do so in deede. For, to the one they will gladlie give a stipend of 200 crounes by yeare, and loth to offer to the other * 200 shillinges. God, that sitteth in heaven, laugheth their choice to skorne, and rewardeth their liberalitie as it should; for he suffereth them to have tame, and well ordered horse, but wilde and unfortunate children; and therefore, in the ende, they finde more pleafure in their horse then comforte in their children.

Plato in 7. de Rep.

But concerning the trewe notes of the best wittes for learning in a childe, I will reporte, not myne own opinion, but the very judgement of him that was counted the best teacher and wifest man that learning maketh mention of, and that is Socrates in Plato +, who expresseth orderlie these seven plaine notes, to chose a good witte in a childe for learninge.

1. Ευφυής.

* Hos inter sumptus, sestertia Quintiliano Ut multum, duo sufficient: res nulla minoris Constabit patri, quam filius. Juven. Sat. 7.

To these we shall subjoin the verses of Crates the philosopher, mentioned by Lacrtius:

Τίθει μαδείρω μυᾶς δέκ, ιατρώ δραχμην, Κόλακι τάλανλα ωένλε, συμβέλω καπτόν, Πόρνη τάλανδον, φιλοσόφω τριωδολον.

† It may not be amis, to present the reader with the whole passage out of Plato, though fomewhat long; fince not only the notes, and characters themselves, but the explanation of them, are in some measure thence taken by our author.

Δριμύτητα, ὧ μαχάριε, (ἔφην) δεῖ αὐτοῖς πρὸς τὰ μαθήματα ὑπάρχειν, χαὶ μὴ χαλεπῶς μανθάνειν. πολὺ γάρ τοι μάλλον ἀποδειλιῶσι ψυχαὶ ἐν ἰσχυροῖς μαθήμασιν, ἢ ἐν γυμνασίοις. οἰκειότερ؈ γὰρ αὐταῖς ὁ πόν؈, ἴδι؈, ἀλλ ἐ χοινὸς ὧν μετὰ τε σωματω. ᾿Αληθῆ, ἔφη. Καὶ μυήμονα δὲ, κὰ ἄκρατου, καὶ πάντα φιλόπονου ζητητέου. ἢ τίνι τρόπω οἶει τα τε τέ σώματω ἐθελήσειν τινὰ διαπονείν, κὰ τοσάντην μάθησίν τε καὶ μελέτην ἐπιτελείν; Οὐδένα, ἤ δ'ος, έαν μη παντάπασιν ή εύφυής. Tò

1. Euguns.

Μνήμων.

3. Φιλομαθής.

4. Φιλόπονος.

Ζητητίχος.

7. Φιλέπαινος.

Trewe notes of a good witte.

And because I write Englishe, and to Englishemen, I will plainlie declare, in Englishe, both what these wordes of Plato meane, and how aptlie they be linked, and how orderlie they follow one another.

1. Ευφυής,

Is he, that is apte by goodnesse of witte, and appliable by readinesse of will, to learning, having all other qualities of the minde and partes of the bodie, that must an other day serve learning; not trobled, mangled, and halfed, but founde, whole, full, and hable to do their office: as, a toung not stamering, or over hardlie drawing The toung. forth wordes, but plaine and redie to deliver the meaning of the minde; a voice not fofte, weake, piping, womanishe, but audible, stronge, The voice. and manlike; a countenance not werishe and crabbed, but faire and comelie; a personage not wretched and deformed, but taule and goodlie: for surelie, * a comlie countenance, with a goodlie stature, geveth Learning credit to learning, and authoritie to the person; otherwise, commonlie, joyned with either open contempte, or privie disfavour doth hurte, or hinder, both a comlie personage.

Witte. Will.

Το γων νυν αμάρτημα (ήν δ' έγω) και ή ατιμία Φιλοσοφία διά ταυτα προσπέπθωκεν (ο καί πρότερον είπομεν) ότι ε κατ' άξίαν αὐτης άπθονται. Ο γάρ νόθες έδει άπθεδαι, άλλα γνησίες. Πως; ἔφη. Πρώτων μεν, είπον, φιλοπονία ε χωλον δεῖ είναι τον άψόμενον. τα μεν ημίσεα φιλόπουον όντα, τα δε ημίσεα, απονον. Έςι δε τέτο, όταν τες φιλογυμνας ής μευ, κ φιλόθη-🕒 ή, και σάντα τα δια τέ σώματ Φ φιλοπονή. φιλομαθής δε μη, μηδε φιλήκο Φ, μηδε ζηθικος. αλλ' εν σάσι τέτοις μισοπονή. χωλος δε, κ) ο τανανδία τέτε μελαβεβληκώς την

The reader will observe, the last note φιλέπαιν is not here expressed; and I question very much, whether there be any fuch word in the Greek language. In this fense, φιλότιμο is generally used; as in Xenoph. speaking of Cyrus, φιλομαθές ατος κ φιλολιμόταλος; and in anoher place, opas ως φιλοτιμός έςι, η έλευθέρι : or else a Periphrasis, as έπαίνε έραςτης.

ρεγόμεν , εφιέμενος, or some such like.

* Thus X-nophon in his Institution of Cyrus, designing rather, as Tully supposes, a model of a just and complete government, than a true relation of things performed, has described his prince with all these happy endowments both of mind and body.

Φυναι δε ο Κυρ λεγείαι, κ αδείαι έτι κ νυν ύπο των βαρδάρων, είδος μεν κάλλις. ψυχην δε φιλανθρωπότα Θ, κ΄ φιλομαθές αλος κ΄ φιλοτιμότα Θ, ας ε ταντα μεν τονον αναλλη-ναι, τανλα δε κίνδυνον υπομείναι τε επαινείσθαι ένεκα. And again in the same book: Ετι δε χαὶ διὰ το φιλομαθής είναι, πολλά μεν αυτός ἀεὶ τὰς παρόνθας ἀνηρώτα, πῶς ἔχονθα πυγχάνος, κ, όσα αυτός υπ' άλλων έρωτώτο, δια το αίχινες είναι, ταχύ απεκρίνείο.

person

person and learning. And even as * a faire stone requireth to be sette in the finest gold, with the best workmanship, or else it leseth much of the grace and price, even fo excellencye in learning, and namely divinitie, joined with a comelie personage, is a mervelous jewell in the world. And how can a cumlie bodie be better employed, than to ferve the fairest exercise of Goddes greatest gifte, and that is learning. But commonlie the fairest bodies are bestowed on the foulest purposes. I would it were not fo; and with examples herein, I will not medle: yet I wishe, that those should both mynde it and medle with it, which have most occasion to looke to it, as good and wife fathers should do; and greatest authoritie to amend it, as good and wife magistrates ought to do: and yet I will not let openlie to lament the unfortunate case of learning herein.

Deformed creatures commonlie

For, if a father have four fonnes, three faire and well formed, both mynde and bodie, the fourth wretched, lame, and deformed, + his choice fet to learn-shall be, to put the worst to learning, as one good enough to become a scholer. I have spent the most parte of my life in the universitie, and therefore I can bear good witnesse that many fathers commonlie do thus: whereof I have hard many wife, learned, and as good men as ever I knew, make great and oft complainte. A good horseman will chose no such colte, neither for his own, nor yet for his masters sadle. And thus much of the first note.

2. Μνήμων,

Memorie.

Good of memorie: a speciall parte of the first note eupvis, and a mere benefite of nature; yet it is so necessarie for learning, as Plato maketh it a separate and perfite note of itselfe, and that so principal a note, as, without it, all other giftes of nature do fmall fervice to learning. Afranius, * that olde Latin poete, maketh Memorie the mother of Aul. Gel. learning and wifdome, faying thus:

* Quale manus addunt ebori decus, aut ubi flavo Argentum, Pariusve lapis circumdatur auro. Virgil. lib. 1. v. 596.

† The same complaint we have in Ludov. Vives, in his book De tradendis disciplinis. 46 Quidam, quo nihil est magis ridiculum, ineptos mercaturæ aut militiæ, aut aliis civilibus " muniis, ad scholas mittunt, atque initiari jubent; quodque est grande nesas, Deo sacrant 66 foetum despicatissimum atque inutilissimum; et putant ad res tantas satis habiturum judicii " ac mentis, qui ad minimas et levissimas non habet."

Usus me genuit, mater peperit Memoria.

And though it be the mere gift of nature, yet is memorie well preferved by use, and much encreased by order, as our scholer must learne an other day in the univerfitie: but, in a childe, a good memorie is Three fure well known by three properties: that is, if it be quicke in receyving, signes of a fure in keping, and redie in delivering forthe againe.

good memo-

3. Φιλομαθής,

Given to love learning: for though a child have all the giftes of nature at wishe, and perfection of memorie at will, yet if he have not a speciall love to learninge, he shall never attain to much learning. And therefore Isocrates, + one of the noblest scholemasters that is in memorie of learning, who taught Kinges and Princes, as Halicarnaffeus writeth; and out of whose schole, as Tullie saith, came forth I mo noble captanes, mo wife councelors, than did out of Epeius horse at Troie: This Isocrates, I say, did cause to be written at the entrie of his schole, in golden letters, this golden sentence, | Eαν ης Φιλομαθής, έση

* Aul. Gell. lib. 13. cap. 8. Versus Afranii sunt in togata, cui Sellæ nomen est: Usus me genuit, mater peperit Memoria: Sophiam vocant me Graji, vos Sapientiam.

+ Dionysius in his treatise of the ancient Greek orators, gives us this great character of σοιήσας την έαυτε Σχολην κατά τὰς ἀποικίας τῶν λόγων.

And so eminent for learning and wisdom were his scholars, that, as Dionysius informs us, Hermippus thought fit to write their history: ὁ τες Ἰσοκράτες μαθητας αναγεαψας Εεμιππος.

t " Ecce tibi exortus est Isocrates, magister istorum omnium, cujus è ludo, tanquam ex " equo Trojano, innumeri principes exierunt: sed eorum partim in pompa, partim in acie illustres esse voluerunt." Cic. de Orat. lib. 2. Virg. Et ipse doli fabricator Epeus. "Ιππος δεράτεος. Hence I shall take occasion to correct a verse, which we meet with in Hithæstien, pag. 60.

Δεραθέωτ' ἐφ' ἴππω κατὰ μὲν βριμέμενοι. So I read it, instead of Δέρατος ως' ἐφ' ἴππω, which Lucretius thus expresses:

Nec elam durateus Trojai Pergama partu Inflammasset equus nocturns Grojugenarum.

This sentence is likewise in his Paranesis to Demonicus.

στολυμαθής:

woλυμαθής: which excellentlie said in Greeke, is thus rudelie in Englishe, If thou lovest learning, thou shalt attayne to much learning.

4. Φιλόπουος,

Is he that hath a lust to labor, and a will to take paines. For if a childe have all the benefites of nature, with perfection of memorie, love, like, and praise learning never so much, yet if he be not of himselse painfull, he shall never attayne unto it. And yet, where love is present, labor is seldom absent, and namelie in studie of learning, and matters of the mynde: and therefore did Isocrates rightlie judge, that if his scholer were Φιλομαθής, he cared for no more. Ariflotle, * varying from Isocrates in private affaires of life, but agreeing with Isocrates in common judgement of learning, for love and labor in learning, is of the same opinion, uttered in these wordes, in his Rhetoricke ad Theodecten; " + Libertie kindleth love; love refuseth no la-" bour; and labor obtayneth whatfoever it feeketh." And yet, neverthelesse, goodnesse of nature may do litle good; perfection of memorie may serve to small use; all love may be employed in vayne; and labor may be fone gravaled, if a man trust alwaies to his own fingular witte, and will not be glad sometyme to heare, take advise, and learne of an other: and therefore doth Socrates very notablie adde the fifth note:

The Parody he used, though ingenious, was too severe on so great a man:

Αἰσχρον σιωπάν, Ἰσοκράτην τ' ἐάν λέγειν:

Inverting this verse of Euripides,

Αίσχρον σιωπαν, βαρβάρες τ' έαν λέγειν.

You meet with the same verse in the third book of Quintilian, but not so correct. In Laertius it is, Σενοκράτη δ' έμν λέγειν.

† See the beginning of the second book, where this passage out of Aristotle is repeated.

Φιλήκοος,

* This emulation between Iscerates and Aristotle, is mentioned by Tully more than once.

Ipse Aristoteles cum storere Isceratem nobilitate discipulorum videret, quod ipse suas disputationes à causis forensibus & civilibus ad inanem sermonis elegantiam transtulisset, mutavit repente totam formam propè disciplinæ suæ, versumque quendam de Philosteta paulo secus dixit. Ille enim turpe sibi ait esse tacere, cùm barbaros; hic autem, cùm Isceratem pateretur dicere." De Orat. lib. 3.

Φιλήκοος,

He that is glad to heare and learne of another. For, otherwise, he shall sticke with great troble, where he might go easelie forwarde: and also catche hardlie a verie litle by his own toyle, when he might gather quicklie a good deale, by another mans teaching. But now there be some that have great love to learning, good lust to labor, be willing to learne of others, yet, eyther of a fonde shamesastnesse, or else of a proude solie, they dare not, or will not, go to learne of another: and therefore doth Socrates wiselie adde the sixte note of a good witte in a childe for learninge, and that is,

6. Zητητικός,

He that is naturallie bolde to aske any question, desirous to searche out any doubte; not ashamed to learne of the meanest, nor affraide to go to the greatest, until he be persitlic taught, and fullie satisfied. The seventh and last poynte is,

7. Φιλέπαινος,

He that loveth to be praifed for well doing, at his father or masters hand. A childe of this nature will earnestlie love learninge, gladlie labor for learninge, willinglie learne of other, boldlie ask any doubte.

And thus, by Socrates judgement, a good father, and a wife schole-master, should chose a childe to make a scholer of, that hath, by nature, the foresaid perfite qualities, and cumlie furniture, both of minde and bodie: hath memorie, quicke to receyve, sure to kepe, and readie to deliver; hath love to learning; hath lust to labor; hath desire to learne of others; hath boldnesse to aske any question; hath minde holie bent to wynne praise by well doing.

The two first pointes be speciall benefites of nature; which, neverthe-lesse, be well preserved, and much encreased by good order. But, as for the five last, love, labor, gladnesse to learne of others, boldnesse to aske doubtes, and will to wynne praise, be wonne and maintened by the onelie wisedome and discretion of the scholemaster. Which five poyntes, whether a scholemaster shall worke soner in a childe by fear-full beating, or curtese handling, you that be wise, judge.

Ff

Yet some men, wise in deede, but, in this matter, more by severitie of nature than any wisedome at all, do laugh at us, when we thus wishe and reason, that young children should rather be allured to learning by jentlenesse and love, than compelled to learning by beating and feare: they fay "our reasons serve onlie to breede forth taulke, and " passe awaie time, but we never saw good scholemasters do so, nor ne-" ver red of wife men that thought fo."

de Rep.

Yes, forfothe: as wife as they be, either in other mens opinions, or in their own conceite; I will bring the contrarie judgement of him, who, they themselves shall confesse, was as wise as they are, or else they may be justlie thought to have small witte at all; and that is Socrates, Plato in 7 whose judgement in Plato is plainlie this, in these wordes; which, because they be verie notable, I will recite them in his own toung: * Οὐδὲν μάθημα με]α δουλείας τον ελέυθερον χρή μανθάνειν. οἱ μὲν γὰρ του σώματος πόνοι βία πονούμενοι, χεῖρον ουθέν τὸ σῶμα ἀπεργάζονται ψυχή δὲ βίαιον ουθέν ἔμμενον μάθημα. In Englishe thus; "No learning ought to be learned with " bondage: for bodily labours, wrought by compulsion, hurt not the " bodie; but any learning learned by compulsion, tarieth not long in. "the mynde." And why? For whatsoever the mynde doth learne unwillinglie with feare, the same it doth quicklie forget without care: And lest proude wittes, that love not to be contraryed, but have lust to wrangle and trifle away troth, will fay, that Socrates meaneth not this. of childrens teaching, but of some other higher learninge; hear what Socrates, in the same place, doth more plainlie say: Mn τοίνυν Gía: ὦ ἄρις ε, τοὺς παῖδας ἐν τοῖς μαθήμασιν, ἀλλὰ παίζοντας τρέφε. That is to fay ; " And therefore, my deare friend, bryng not up your children in learn-" inge by compulsion and feare, but by playing and pleasure." And you that do read Plate as ye shold, do well perceyve, that these be no questions asked by Socrates as doubtes, but they be sentences, first affirmed by Socrates, as mere trothes, and after given forth by Socrates as right rules; most necessarie to be marked, and fitte to be folowed of allthem, that would have children taughte as they should. And, in this counsell, judgement, and authority of Socrates, I will repose myselfes untill I meete with a man of the contrarie mynde, whom I may justlietake to be wifer than I thinke Socrates was. Fonde scholemasters nei-Yonge Jenther can understand, nor will follow, this good counsell of Socrates; but tlemen be wiselier wife ryders, in their office, can, and will do both; which is the onelie taught to cause, that commonlie the yong jentlemen of England go so unwilling-ryde by common ryders, lie to schole, and run so fast to the stable: for, in very deede, fond than to scholemasters, by feare, do beate into them the hatred of learning; and learne by wife ryders, by jentle allurementes, do breed up in them the love of cholemafryding. They finde feare and bondage in scholes, they feele libertie and ters. freedome in stables; which causeth them utterlie to abhorre the one, and most gladlie to haunt the other. And I do not write this, that, in exhorting to the one, I would diffuade yonge jentlemen from the other; yea I am forry, with all my harte, that they be given no more to ryding than they be; for, of all outward qualities, to ride faire is most Ryding. cumlie for himselfe, most necessarie for his countrie; and the greater he is in blood, the greater is his praise, the more he doth excede all other therein. It was one of the three excellent praises amongest the noble jentlemen, the old Persians; "Alwaise to say troth, to ride faire, " and shote well:" and so it was engraven + upon Darius tumbe, as Strabo 15. Strabo beareth witnesse:

The right reading of Plato.

* See the preface.

Darius the King lieth buried heare, Who in ryding and shoting had never peare.

But to our purpose: yonge men, by any meanes leesing the love of learning, when by tyme they cum to their ownerule, they carie commonlie from the schole with them, a perpetual hatred of their master, and a continual contempt of learninge. If ten jentlemen be asked, Why they forgot so some in court, that which they were learning so long in schole? eight of them, or let me be blamed, will laie the fault on their ill handling by their scholemasters.

Cuspinian doth report, that that noble Emperour Maximilian would lament verie oft his || misfortune herein. Yet

† This inscription is twice mentioned in his Toxophilus: Strabo's words are these: Μέμνη σι δ' 'Ονησίκρα ος κ' το έπι τε Δαρείε τάφω γράμμα τόδε.

 $\Phi I \Lambda O \Sigma$  ην τοῖς φίλοις  $i\pi\pi$ ευς η τοξότης άριςος εγενόμην. κυνηγῶν εκράτεν,  $\pi$ άνλα  $\pi$ οιεῖν ηδυνάμην.

This is the passage he alludes to in Cuspinian. "Ubi habilis per ætatem ad literas addiscendas suit, magistro Petro, qui postea Novæ Civitatis Antistes erat, traditus, aliquot antistes erat, a Paftime.

Yet some will say, that children, of nature, love pastime, and mis-Learning, like learning; because, in their kinde, the one is easie and pleasant, the other hard and werifome. Which is an opinion not fo true, as fome men weene. For, the matter lieth not so much in the disposition of them that be yong, as in the order and maner of bringing up, by them that be old; nor yet in the difference of learninge and pastime. For, beate a child if he daunce not well, and cherish him though he learne not well, ye shall have him unwilling to go to daunce, and glad to go to his booke: knocke him alwaies when he draweth his shafte ill, and favour him againe though he fault at his booke, ye shall have him verie loth to be in the field, and verie willing to be in the schole. Yea, I saie more, and not of myselfe, but by the judgement of those, from whom few wife men will gladlie dissent; that if ever the nature of man be given at any time, more than other, to receive goodnesse, it is in innocencie of yonge yeares, before that experience of evill have taken roote in him. For the pure cleane witte of a sweete yonge babe is like the newest wax, most hable to receive the best and fairest printing; and, like a new bright filver dishe never occupied, to receive, and kepe cleane, any good thyng that is put into it.

Will and Witte in children.

And thus will in children, wifelie wrought withall, maie easelie be won to be verie well willing to learne. "And witte in children, by na-"ture, namelie memorie, * the onely keie and keper of all learning, is " readiest to receive, and surest to kepe anie maner of thing that is learn" ed

&quot; nis cum nobilium quorundam filiis contubernalibus Latinas didicit literas. Sed cum ejus or præceptor folis Dialecticis argutiis doctus, Sophismata illi inculcare vellet, ad quæ capessen-" da aptus non erat, sæpius atrociter verberatus ab eo, magis ipse verberandus, (cum verbera " servos deceant, non liberos) tandem effecit, ut literas magis odio haberet, quàm diligeret: " Quod tamen præcipuum esse debet addiscenti literas, quemadmodum omnes docent boni " præceptores. " Audivi ex ore divi Maximiliani hoc verbum, quod nunquam è memoria mea excidet, « quod jam Romanorum rex factus, in mensa, ut solebat de variis loqui, multis abstantibus, dixerat. Si, inquit, hodie præceptor meus viveret Petrus, quanquam multa præceptoribus debeamus, efficerem, ut se instituisse me pæniteret. Quam multa enim bonis præceptoribus, qui resse instituunt pueros, debemus, tam multis plagis sunt onerandi indosti pædagogi, qui pretiossissimm ætatis tempus perdunt, & ca docent, quæ dediscere multo labore necesse est."

<sup>* &</sup>quot; Quid dicam de thesauro rerum omnium Memoria, quæ nisi custos inventis, cogitatisque " rebus, & verbis adhibeatur, intelligimus omnia, etiamsi præclarissima fuerint, in oratore " peritura ?" Cic, de Orat, lib. I.

"ed in youth." This, lewde and learned, by common experience, know to be most trewe. For we remember nothyng so well when we be olde, as those thinges which we learned when we were yonge: And this is not straunge, but common in all natures workes. Every man sees (as Yonge years I sayd before) new wax is best for printing; new claie fittest for work-aptest for ing; new shorn woll aptest for sone and surest dying; new fresh slearnyng. for good and durable salting. And this similitude is not rude, nor borrowed of the larder-house, but out of his schole-house, of whom the wisest of England nede not be ashamed to learne. Yonge graftes grow not onlie sonest, but also fairest, and bring always forth the best and sweetest fruite; yonge whelpes learne easilie to carie; yonge popingeis learne quicklie to speake: and so, to be short, if in all other thinges, though they lacke reason, sens, and life, the similitude of youth is sittest to all goodnesse; surelie nature, in mankinde, is most beneficiall and effectuall in this behalfe.

Therefore, if to the goodnesse of nature be joyned the wisedome of the teacher, in leading younge wittes into a right and plain way of learning, surelie children, kept up in Gods feare, and governed by his grace, maie most easilie be brought well to serve God and theyr contrey, both by vertue and wisedome.

But if will and witte, by farder age, be once allured from innocencie, delited in vaine fightes, filled with foull taulke, crooked with wilfulnesse, hardened with stubburnesse, and let louse to disobedience; surelie it is hard with jentlenesse, but unpossible with severe crueltie, to call them backe to good frame againe. For where the one, perchance, maie bend it, the other shall surelie breake it; and so, insteade of some hope, leave an assured desperation, and *shamelesse contempt of all goodnesse; the fardest pointe in all mischief, as Zenophon doth most trewlie and most wittelie marke.

Zen. 1. Cyri Ped.

Therefore,

* This is the passage, I suppose: Επισθαι δε δοκεί μάλισα τη άχαςισία ή άναισχυνία. καλ γάς αυτη μεγίση δοκεί είναι έπε πάνθα τὰ αισχρὰ ήγεμώς

Therefore, to love or to hate, to like or contemne, to plie this waie or that waie, to good or to bad, ye shall have as ye use a childe in his youth.

Lady Jane Grey.

And one example, whether love or feare doth worke more in a childe for vertue and learninge, I will gladlie report; which maie be hard with some pleasure, and followed with more profit. Before I went into Germanic, + I came to Brodegate in Leicestershire, to take my leave of that noble Lady fane Grey, to whom I was exceeding much beholdinge. Her parentes, the Duke and the Duches, with all the houshould, gentlemen and gentlewomen, were hunting in the parke. I found her in her chamber, readinge Phadon Platonis in Greeke, and that with as much delite, as some jentlemen would read a merie tale in Bocase. After salutation, and dewtie done, with fome other taulke, I asked her, why she would leefe fuch pastime in the parke? Smiling, she answered me; "I " wisse, all their sport in the parke is but a shadoe to that pleasure that " I find in Plato. Alas! good folke, they never felt what trewe plea-" fure ment." " And howe came you, Madame, quoth I, to this " deepe knowledge of pleasure? And what did chieflie allure you unto " it, feeinge not many women, but verie fewe men, have attained "thereunto." "I will tell you, quoth fhe, and tell you a truth, which " perchance ye will marvell at. One of the greatest benefites that ever "God gave me, is, that he fent me fo sharpe and severe parentes, and " fo jentle a scholemaster. For when I am in presence eyther of father " or mother; whether I speake, kepe silence, sit, stand, or go, eate, "drinke, be merie, or fad, be fowyng, playing, dauncing, or doing " anie thing elfe, I must do it, as it were, in such weight, measure, " and number, even fo perfitelie as God made the world, or elfe I am

† This discourse with this excellent lady, he thus expresses in a letter to his friend Sturmius.

"Hâc superioreæstate, cum amicos meos in agro Eboracensi viserem, & inde literis Joannis

"Cheei in Aulam, ut huc proficiscerer, accitus sum, in via deslexi Leicestriam, ubi Jara

"Graja cum patre habitaret. Statim admissus sum in cubiculum: inveni nobilem puellam, "Dii boni! legentem Græcè Phædonem Platonis; quem sic intelligit, ut mihi ipsi summam

"admirationem injiceret. Sic loquitur, & scribit Græcè, ut vera referenti vix sides adhiberi

"possit. Nacta est præceptorem Joannem Elmarum, utriusque linguæ valdè peritum; prop
"ter humanitatem, prudentiam, usum, rectam religionem, & alia multa rectissimæ amicitiæ

"vincula, mihi conjunctissimum."

"of sharplie taunted, so cruellie threatened, yea presentlie, sometimes, with pinches, nippes, and bobbes, and other waies, which I will not name for the honor I bear them, so without measure misordered, that I thincke myselfe in hell, till time come that I must go to Mr. Elmer; who teacheth me so jentlie, so pleasantlie, with such fair allurementes to learninge, that I thinke all the time nothing whiles I am with him. And when I am called from him, I fall on weeping, because whatsoever I do els, but learninge, is full of grief, trouble, feare, and whole missiking unto me. And thus my booke hath been so much my pleasure, and bringeth dayly to me more pleasure and more, that, in respect of it, all other pleasures, in very deede, be but tristes and troubles unto me."

I remember this taulk gladly, both because it is so worthie of memorie, and because also it was the last taulke that ever I had, and the last tyme that ever I saw that noble and worthie ladie.

I could be over long, both in shewinge just causes, and in recitinge trewe examples, why learning should be taught rather by love than feare. He that would see a persite discourse of it, let him read that learned treatise which my friende Joan. Sturmius wrote, De Institutione Instit. Princ. Principis, to the Duke of Cleves.

The godlie counsels of Solomon and Jesus the sonne of Sirach, for Qui parcit sharpe keping in, and bridlinge of youthe, are ment rather for fatherlie virgæ, odit correction, than masterlie beating; rather for maners, than for learninge; for other places, than for scholes. For God forbid, but all evill touches, wantonnes, lyinge, pickinge, slouthe, will, stubbornnesse, and disobedience, should be, with sharpe chastisement, daily cut away.

This discipline was well known, and diligentlie used, among the Grecians and old Romanes; as doth appeare in Aristophanes, Isocrates, and Plato, and also in the comedies of Plautus; where we see that children were under the rule of three persones, Praceptore, Padagogo, Parente. The scholemaster taught him learnings with all jentlenesse; the governour corrected his maners with much sharpnesse; the father held.

Father,

house.

held the sterne of his whole obedience. And so, he that used to teache, did not commonlie use to beate, but remitted that over to another mans charge. But what shall we faie, when now, in our dayes, the Scholemaster is used both for Praceptor in learninge, and Padagogus in maners. Surely I would he should not confound their offices, but difcretelie use the dewtie of both; so that neither ill touches should be left unpunished, nor jentlenesse in teachinge anie wise omitted. And he shall well do both, if wiselie he do appointe diversitie of time, and seperate place, for either purpose; using alwaies such discrete modera-The schole-tion, as the schole-house should be counted a fanctuarie against feare; and verie well learninge, a common pardon for ill doing, if the fault of itselfe be not over heinous.

> And thus the children, kept up in Gods feare, and preserved by his grace, finding paine in all ill doing, and pleasure in well studying, shold easelie be brought to honestie of life, and persitnesse of learning; the onlie marke, that good and wife fathers do wishe and labour, that their children shold most busilie and carefullie shot at.

There is another discommoditie besides crueltie in scholemasters in Youth of beating away the love of learning from children; which hindreth learn-Englande brought up inge and vertue, and good bringing up of youth, and namelie young with too much libertie jentlemen, verie much in Englande. This fault is cleane contrary to the first. I wished before, to have love of learning bred up in children: I wishe as much now, to have young men brought up in good order of living, and in some more severe discipline, than commonlie they be. We have lacke in Englande of such good order, as the old noble Persians so carefullie used; whose children, to the age of twenty-one yeares, were brought up in learning, and exercises of labor; * and that in such Xen. 1. place, where they shold neither see that was uncumlie, nor hear that Cyri Ped. was unhonest. Yea, a yong jentleman was never free to go where he would, and do what he lifte himfelf; but under the kepe, and by the counfell,

<sup>* &</sup>quot;Ες τν αὐτοῖς Έλευθέρα 'Αγορα καλυμένη, ἔνθα τά τε βασίλεια κὰ τὰ ἄλλα ἀρχεῖα πεποίηται. εντεύθεν τὰ μεν ἄνια, και δι άγγεαιοι κὶ ὰι τέτων φωνὰι, κὰ ἀπειροκαλίαι ἀπελήλανται εἰς άλλον τόπον ὡς μη μιγνύηται ἡ τέτων τύρξη τῆ τῶν ωεπαιδευμένων εὐκοσμία. I fee no difference between this college in Perfia, and one here in England, excepting that theirs was joined to the court, and so was more in the eye of their superiors and chief magistrates.

counsell, of some grave governour, until he was either married, or called to bear some office in the common-wealth.

And see the great obedience that was used in old time to fathers and governours. No sonne, were he never so olde of years, never so great of birth, though he were a kinges sonne, might not marry, but by his fathers and mothers also consent. Cyrus the Great, after he had conquered Babylon, and subdewed riche king Cræsus, with whole Asia-minor, cummyng tryumphantlie home, his uncle Cyaxeris offered him his daughter to wife. Cyrus thanked his uncle, and praised the maide; but for marriage, he answered him with thies wife and sweete wordes, as they be uttered by Xenophon; 'Aλλ', & Kuaξάρη, τό, τε γένω ἐπαινῶ, κὸ τὴν παῖδα, κὸ δῶρα. βέλομαι δὲ, ἔφη, σῦν τῆ τἕ πατρὸς γνώμη κὸ τῆ τῆς μητρὸς τᾶυτά σοι συναινέσαι, &c. That is to say, "Uncle Cyaxeris, I com"mend the stocke, I like the maide, and I allow well the dowrie, but (sayth he) by the counsell and consent of my father and mother, I will determine farther of thies matters."

Xen. 8. Cyri Pæd.

Strong Samson also in Scripture saw a maide that liked him; but he spake not to her, but went home to his father and his mother, and defired both father and mother to make the marriage for him. Doth this modestie, doth this obedience, that was in great king Cyrus, and stoute Samson, remaine in our young men at this daie? No surelie: for we live not longer after them by tyme, than we live farre different from them by good order. Our tyme is so farre from that old discipline and obedience, as now, not onlie young jentlemen, but even verie girles dare, without all feare, though not without open shame, where they list, and how they list, marrie themselves in spite of father,

"Ην γας δή με σόωσι θεοι, κ) οἴκαδ ἵκωμαι, Πηλεύς θήν μοι ἔπειθα γυναῖκα γαμέσσεθαι αὐπός.

Νυμφευμάτων μέν τῶν ἐμῶν ϖατης ἐμὸς Μέριμναν έξει, κὰκ ἐμὸν κρίνειν τάδε.

Andromache, v. 987.

G g

mother,

* The same dutiful regard Homer takes care to make Achilles express in his speech to the legates sent by Agamemnon, Iliad. I. 393.

&quot;Nam, ut inquit Grotius, si in omnibus rebus filii reverentiam parentibus debent, certe præcipue eam debent in eo negotio, quod ad gentem totam pertinet, quale sunt nuptiæ." So Hermione in Euripides, though I think her character none of the beil, makes this reply to Orestes:

mother, God, good order, and all. The cause of this evill is, that youth is least looked unto, when they stand most neede of good kepc and regard. It availeth not, to see them well taught in your yeares, and after when they come to lust and youthfull dayes, to give them licence to live as they lust themselves. For if ye suffer the eye of a yong jentleman once to be entangled with vaine fightes, and the eare to be corrupted with fond or filthie taulke, the mynde shall queicklie fall fick, and fone vomit, and cast up all the holesome doctrine, that he received in childhoode, though he were never fo well brought up before. And being ones inglutted with vanitie, he will streightway lothe all learning, and all good counsell to the same; and the parentes, for all their great cost and charge, reape onelie in the end the fruite of grief and care.

Great mens

This evill is not common to poore men, as God will have it, but brought up. proper to riche and great mens children, as they deserve it. Indeede from seven to seventeene, young jentlemen commonlie be carefullie enough brought up; "but from feventeene to feven and twentie (* the " most dangerous tyme of all mans life, and most slipperie to stay " well in) they have commonlie the reine of all licens in their owne " hand, and especiallie soch as do live in the court." And that which Wife men is most to be marveled at, commonlie the wifest and also best men, be fond fathers. found the fondest fathers in this behalfe. And if some good father would feik some remedie herein, yet the mother (if the house hold of our lady) had rather, yea and will to, have her fonne cunnyng and bold, in making him to live trimlie when he is young, than by learning and travell, to be able to ferve his prince and his countrie, both wiselie in peace, and stoutelie in warre, when he is old.

Meanemens The fault is in yourselves, ye noble mens sonnes, and therefore ye fonnes come deserve the greater blame, that commonlie the meaner mens children to great aucome to be the wifest councellors, and greatest doers, in the weightie affaires of this realme. And why? for God will have it so of his providence, because ye will have it no otherwise by your negligence.

And

* So fays Xenophon in his first book of the Institution of Cyrus: Δομεί γάρ αυτη ή ηλικία μάλιτα επιμελείας δείσθαι.

And God is a good God, and wifeft in all his doinges, that will place vertue, and displace vice, in those kingdomes where he doth governe. "For he knoweth, that nobilitie without vertue and wisdome, Nobilitie" is bloud indeed, but bloud trewelie without bones and sinewes; and without wisf" so of it selfe, without the other, verie weake to beare the burden of "weightie affaires."

The greatest shippe indeede commonlie carieth the greatest burden, but yet alwayes with the greatest jeoperdie, not onlie for the persons and goodes committed unto it, but even for the shippe itselfe, except it be governed with the greater wisdome.

But nobilitie, governed by learning and wisdome, is indeed, most Nobilitie like a faire shippe, havyng tide and winde at will, under the ruele of a with wisdome. skilfull master: when contrariewise, a shippe caried, yea with the hit wisdome. Without est tide and greatest winde, lacking a skilfull master, most commonlie wisdome. doth either sink itselfe upon fandes, or breake itselfe upon rockes. And even so, how manie have been either drowned in vaine pleasure, or Vaine pleasure overwhelmed by stout wilfulness, the histories of England be able to sure, and affour de over many examples unto us. Therefore, ye great and no-ness, two blemens children, if ye will have rightfullie that praise, and enjoie greatest enesure that place, which your fathers have, and elders had, and left litie. unto you, ye must kepe it as they gat it; and that is, by the onlie waie of vertue, wisdome, and worthinesse.

For wisdome and virtue, there be manie faire examples in this court for young jentlemen to follow; but they be like faire markes in the field, out of a mans reach, to far of to shote at well. The best and worthiest men, indeede, be sometimes seen, but seldom taulked withall. A young jentleman may sometime knele to their person, but smallie use their companie for their better instruction.

But young jentlemen are faine commonlie to do in the Court, as young archers do in the field; that is, take foch markes as be nie them, although they be never fo foule to shoote at: I meane, they be driven Ill companie to kepe companie with the worste: and what force ill companie hath marreth to corrupt good wittes, the wifest men know best.

Gg2

And

Xen. 1. Cyri Pæd.

The court And not ill companie onlie, but the ill opinion also of the most judgeth worst of the part doth moch harme; and namelie of those which shold be wise in best natures the trewe decyphring, of the good disposition of nature, of comlinesse in youth. in courtlie manners, and all right doinges of men.

But errour, and phantasie, do commonlie occupie the place of troth and judgement. For, if a yong jentleman be demure and still of nature, they say he is simple, and lacketh witte; if he be bashfull, and will soone blushe, they call him a babishe and ill brought up thynge; when Xenophon doth preciselie note in Cyrus, that "* his bashfulnesse in "youth, was the verie trewe signe of his vertue and stoutnes after." If he be innocent and ignorant of ill, they say he is rude, and hath no grace: so ungraciouslie do some gracelesse men misuse the faire and godlie word Grace!

The grace in But if ye would know what grace they meene, go and looke, and court learne amonges them, and ye shall see that it is,

First, to blush at nothing. "And blushing in youth," sayth Aristotle, † "is nothing else but feare to do ill:" which feare beyng once lustely fraid away from youth, then followeth to dare do any mischief; to contemne stoutly any goodnesse; to be busic in every matter; to be skilfull in every thing; to acknowledge no ignorance at all. To do thus in court, is counted of some the chief and greatest grace of all; and termed by the name of a vertue, called courage and boldnesse; when Cic.de Orat. Crassus in Cicero teacheth the cleane contrarie, and that most wittelie, saying thus; Audere, cum bonis etiam rebus conjunctum, per seipsum est in a good magnopere sugiendum: which is to say, "To be bold, yea in a good matter, not" matter, is for itself greatlie to be eschewed."

More grace Moreover, where the fwing goeth, there to follow, fawne, flatter, of court. laugh, and lie lustelie at other mens liking; to face, stand foremost, shove backe; and to the meaner man, or unknown in the court, to feeme fomewhat folume, coye, big, and dangerous of looke, taulk, and answere: to think well of himselfe, to be lustie in contemning of others, to have fome trim grace in a privie mock: and in greater prefens, to beare a brave looke; to be warlike, though he never looked enimie in the face in warre; yet fome warlike figne must be used, either a flovinglie busking, or an overstaring frounced hed, as though out of everie haeres toppe should suddenlie start out a good big othe, when nede requireth. Yet, praised be God, England hath at this time manie Men of worthie captaines and good fouldiours; which be indeede fo honest of warre best of behaviour, so cumlie of conditions, so milde of maners, as they may conditions. be examples of good order, to a good fort of others, which never came in warre.

shove

<sup>* &#</sup>x27;Ως δε ωςοπλεν ο χρόν αὐτον συν τῷ μεγέθει εἰς ἄραν τὰ ωςόσηθον γενέσθαι, ἐν τὐτῷ όὴ τοῖς μὲν λόγοις βραχυτέροις ἐχρῆτο, ἢ τῷ φωνῷ ἡσυχαιτέρα αἰδὰς δε ἐνεπίμπλαλο, ὡς ε κρθροβράινεσθαι, ὁπότε συνλυίχανοι τοῖς ωρεσθυλέροις.

† Αίσχύνη, φόδος δικαίε ψόγε. Arift. Magn. Moral. Menander, Ἐρυθειῶν wās χεις ος εἶναί μοι δοκεῖ. Terence's expression is well known: Erubuit: salva res est.

But to returne where I left: in place also to be able to raise taulke, and make discourse of everie rishe; to have a verie good will to hear himselfe speake; to be seen in palmistrie, whereby to conveie to chast Palmistrie. eares, fome fond or filthie taulke. And if fome Smithfield ruffian take up fome strange going, some new mowing with the mouth, some wrinching with the shoulders, some brave proverbe, some fresh new othe, that is not stale, but will rin round in the mouth; some new difguiled garment, or desperate hat, fond in facion, or gaurish in colour, whatfoever it cost, how small soever his living be, by what shift foever it be gotten, gotten must it be, and used with the first, or else the grace of it is stale and gone. Some part of this gracelesse grace was discribed by me in a little rude verse long ago.

To laughe, to lie, to flatter, to face, Foure waies in court to win men grace. If thou be thrall to none of thiefe, Away good Peekgoofe, bens John Cheefe. Marke well my word, and marke their dede, And thinke this verse part of thy crede.

Would to God this taulke were not trewe, and that some mens doings were not thus. I write not to hurte any, but to profit fome; to accuse none, but to monish soch who, allured by ill counsell, and folowreligion.

Ill councell ing ill examples, contrarie to their good bringyng up, and against their and ill com- own good nature, yeld over moch to thies folies and faultes: I know panie. many ferving men, of good order, and well staide: and againe, I heare Serving-men. faie, there be some serving men do but ill service to their yong mas-Terentius. ters. Yea, rede Terence and Plautus advisedlie over, and ye shall finde in those two wife writers, almost in every comedie, no unthriftie yong Servicorrup- man, that is not brought thereunto by the fotle inticement of some lewd telæ juvefervant. And even now in our dayes, Getæ, and Davi, Gnathos, and Multi Getæ, manie bold bawdie Phormios to, be preasing in to pratle on everie pauci Par- stage, to meddle in everie matter; when honest Parmenos shall not be heard, but beare small swing with their masters. Their companie, menones. their taulke, their over great experience in mischief, doth easelie corrupt the best natures, and best brought up wittes.

But I mervele the lesse that thies misorders be amonges some in Misorders in the court; for commonlie in the contrie also everie where, innocencie the countrie is gone, bashfulnesse is vanished; moch presumption in youthe, small authoritie in aige; reverence is neglected, dewties be confounded; and, to be shorte, disobedience doth overflow the banks of good order, almoste in everie place, almoste in everie degree of man.

Meane men have eies to see, and cause to lament, and occasion to complaine of thies miseries; but others have authoritie to remedie them, and will do fo to, when God shall think time fitte. For all thies misorders be Goddes juste plages, by his sufferance brought justlie upon us, for our finnes, which be infinite in nomber, and horrible in deede; but namelie, for the greate abhominable fin of unkindnesse. But what unkindnesse? Even such unkindnesse as was in the Yewes, in contemn-Contempt of ing Goddes voice, in shrinking from his worde, in wishing backe Gods trewe againe for Egypt, in committing aduoultrie and hordom, not with the women, but with the doctrine of Babylon; did bring all the plages, destructions, and captivities, that fell so ofte and horrible upon Israel.

> We have cause also in England to beware of unkindnesse, who have had, in fo fewe yeares, the candel of Goddes worde so oft lightned, so oft put out; and yet will venture, by our unthankfulnesse in doctrine Doctrina, Mores. and finfull life, to leefe againe lighte, candle, candlesticke and all.

God kepe in us his feare; God grafte in us the trewe knowledge of his worde, with a forward will to follow it, and fo to bryng forth the sweete fruites of it; and then shall he preserve us by his grace, from all manner of terrible dayes.

The remedie of this, doth not stand onelie in making good common Publicæ lelawes for the hole realme, but also (and perchance chieflie) in observing private discipline, everie man carefullie in his own house; and disciplina. namelie if special regard be had to youth; and that, not so much in Cognitio boteaching them what is good, as in keeping them from that that Ignoration is ill.

Therefore, if wife fathers be not as well aware in weedeing from their children ill things and ill companie, as they were before in graftinge in them learning, and providing for them good scholemasters, what frute they shall reape of all their coste and care, common experience doth tell.

Here is the place, in youth is the time when fome ignorance is as Some ignonecessarie, as moch knowledge; and not in matters of our dewtie to-rance as wardes God, as fome wilful wittes willinglie against their owne know- good as knowledge. ledge, perniciously against their owne conscience, have of late openlie taught. Indeede St. Chrysostome, that noble and eloquent doctor, * in a Chrysost. de fermon "contra Fatum, and the curious ferching of nativities," doth Fato. wifely faie, that "ignorance therein, is better than knowledge." But to wring this fentence, to wreste thereby out of mens handes the knowledge of Goddes doctrine, is without all reason, against common sense.

Το μη μαθείν σοι κρείσσου, η μαθείν τάδε.

contrarie

* The passage here pointed to, is in St. Chrysostome's fifth Discourse περί Είμαρμένης 26 Προνόιας. A captious question being put, How comes one man to be rich, and another poor? he answers, "Though we were never so ignorant of the reasons of these things, yet 'tis far bet-" ter to continue in our ignorance, than to admit of any impious tenet or opinion. Βέλτιον γάρ αγιοείν καλώς, η είδεναι κακώς· το μευ γαρ εκ έχει καθηγορίαυ, το δε απες έρηται συγγνώμης. Το m. 6. pag. 878. edit. Savil. Το this I shall subjoin, what we meet with in Asfebylus, δόγμα 'Επικέρειον, as the scholiast calls it:

contrarie to the judgement also of them, which be the discretest men, Julianus A- and best learned, on their own side. I know * Julianus Apostata did so; but I never hard or red, that any auncyent father of the primitive church, either thought or wrote so.

Innocencie
in youth.

But this ignorance in youthe, which I spake on, or rather this simplicitie, or most trewlie, this innocencie, is that, which the noble Perfians, as wife Xenophon doth testifie, were so careful to breede up their youthe in. But christian fathers commonlie do not so. And I will tell you a tale, as moch to be misliked, as the Persians example is to be followed.

A child ill This last Somer I was in a jentlemans house, where a young childe, brought up somewhat past four yeare olde, could in no wise frame his tonge, to saie a little shorte grace; and yet he could roundly rap out so manie uglie othes, and those of the newest facion, as some good man of sour-score year olde hath never hard named before. And that which was most detestable of all, his father and mother would laughe at it. I moche doubte what comforte an other daie this childe shall bring unto them. This childe using e moch the company of servingmen, and gevinge good eare to their taulke, did easilie learne, which he shall hardlie forget all the daies of his life hereafter. So likewise in the courte, if a yong jentleman will venture himselfe into the companie of russians, it is over great a jeopardie, lest their facions, maners, thoughts,

Ill companie, taulke, and deedes, will verie sone be over like. "The confounding of companies, breedeth confusion of good maners, both in the courte and everie where else."

And it maie be a great wonder, but a greater shame, to us christian Isocrates. men, to understand what a heithen writer, Isocrates, doth leave in

memorie

* Julian put forth a severe edict, whereby he forbad the Christians publickly in the scholes either to teach, or study humane literature. For which Gregory Nazianzene thus warmly inveighs against him, though playing too much with the word λόγ. Καλείνω πρέπεσα δίκη, λόγω κολάζεσθαι υπέρ της είς λόγες παρανομίας. ὧν κοινών εντων λογικοίς άπασι, ως ίδιων κύτε, Χριςιάνοις ἐφθονησεν, ἀλογώτατα περὶ λόγων διανοηθείς ὁ πάνθων, ως ώετο, λογιώταθω. Στηλ. ά. pag. 4. edit. Eton. "Illud autem inclemens, obruendum perenni silentio, quod arcebat docere magistros rhetoricos & grammaticos ritus Christiani cultores." Anmianus Marcellinus, lib. 21.

memorie of writing, concerning the care that the noble citie of Athens had, to bring up their youthe in honest companie, and vertuous discipline; whose taulke in Greke, is to this effect in Englishe.

"The citie was not more carefull to fee their children well taughte, In Orat. " than to fee their young men well governed; which they brought to Ariopag. " passe, not so much by common lawe, as by private discipline. For " they had more regard, that their youthe by good order should not " offend, than how, by lawe, they might be punished; and if offense " were committed, there was neither waie to hide it, nor hope of " pardon for it. Good natures were not fo moch openly praifed, as " they were fecretlie marked, and watchfullie regarded, left they should " leafe the goodnes they had. Therefore, in sholes of singing and "dancing, and other honest exercises, governours were appointed, " more diligent to overfee their good maners, than their mafters were " to teach them anie learning. It was fome shame to a young man " to be feen in the open market; and if for businesse he passed through " it, he did it with a marvelous modestie, and bashefull facion. To " eate or drinke in a taverne, was not onlie a shame, but also punish-" able, in a yong man. To contrarie, or to stand in termes with an olde man, was more henious, * than in some place to rebuke and " scholde with his owne father." With manie other mo good orders, and faire disciplines, which I referre to their reading, that have lust to looke upon the description of soch a worthie common wealthe.

And to know what worthie frute did spring of soch worthie sede, Good sede I will tell you the most mervell of all, and yet soch a trothe, as no worthie frute

* In this citation out of Isocrates, Mr. Ascham has rather given the sense of several passages, than a strict translation of his author: and perhaps he might trust to his memory, without consulting the original; which is no uncommon thing with learned men. What is here expressed, than in some place, is in the Greek, now which is not a comparison between Athens, and some other state, in point of strict discipline and regularity of manners, but a complaint of a decay herein, and of a degeneracy in the present age from the good conduct of sormer times.

The latter part, where he keeps somewhat closer to the original, I shall transcribe: Ούτω δ' ἔφευγον την ἀγοραν, ώςε εἰ καί πόλε διελθεῖν ἀναγκασθεῖεν, μελα πολλης αἰδες κὸ σωφροσύνης ἐφαίνονλο τέτο ποιούνλες. ἀνλειπεῖν δὲ τοῖς πρεσθυτεροις. η λοιδορήσασθαι, δεινότερον ἐνόμιζον, η νῦν περὶ τές γονέας ἔξαμαρλανειν. ἐν καπηλείω δὲ φαγεῖν η πιεῖν, ἐθεὶς ἐσ ἀν οἰκέτης ἐπιεικης ἐτολμησε.

Hh

THE WORKS OF

man shall denie it, except soch as be ignorant in knowledge of the best stories.

Athens, by this discipline and good ordering of youthe, did breede up, Athens. within the circute of that one citie, within the compas of one hondred yeares, within the memorie of one mans life, so manie notable captaines in warre, for worthinesse, wisdome and learning, as be scarce matchable, no not in the state of Rome, in the compas of those seven hondred yeares, Rome.

when it flourished moste.

And because I will not onlie saie it, but also prove it, the names of them be these: Miltiades, Themistocles, Xantippus, Pericles, Cymon, Alcy-The noble captaines of biades, Thrasybulus, Conon, Iphicrates, Xenophon, Timotheus, Theopompus, Athens. Demetrius, and divers other mo: of which everie one, maie justlie be spoken that worthie praise, which was geven to Scipio Africanus, who Cicero douteth, "whether he were more noble captaine in warre, or " more eloquent and wife councelor in peace." And if ye believe not Æmil. Pro- me, read diligentlie * Æmilius Probus in Latin, and Plutarche in Greeke; which two had no cause either to flatter or lie upon any of those Plutarchus. which I have recited.

And besides nobilitie in warre, for excellent and matchless masters in The learned men of A- all maner of learninge, in that one citie, in memorie of one age, were thens. mo learned men, and that in a manner altogether, than all tyme doth remember, than all place doth affourde, than all other tonges do conteine. And I do not meane of those authors, which, by injurie of tyme, by negligence of men, by crueltie of fier and fworde, be loft; but even of those, which by Goddes grace, are left yet unto us; of which, I thank God, even my poore studie lacketh not one. As in philosophie, Plato, Aristotle, Xenophon, Euclide, and Theophrast: in eloquence and civill lawe, Demosthenes, Æschines, Lycurgus, Dinarchus, Demades, Isocrates, Isaus, Lyfias, Antistbenes, Andocides: in historie, Herodotus, Thucydides, Xenophon, and which we lacke, to our great loffe, Theopompus and Ephorus: in poetrie, Æschylus, Sophocles, Euripides, Aristophanes, and somewhat of Menander, Demosthenes sister sonne.

* Cornelius Nepos, whose works by a mistake have gone under the name of Emilius Probus; who feems to have no other title to them, than as he took care to have them copied out; for the use of the Emperor Theodosius.

Now let Italian, and Latin itself, Spanishe, French, Douch, and Eng-Learning lishe, bring forth their learning, and recite their authors, Ciccro onlie chieflie contained, and one or two moe in Latin, they be all patched cloutes and Greke, and ragges, in comparison of faire woven broade clothes; and trewlie, if in no other there be any good in them, it is either lerned, borrowed, or stolne, from some of those worthie wittes of Athens.

The remembrance of foch a common welthe, using foch discipline and order for youthe, and thereby bringing forth to their praise, and leaving to us for our example, foch capitaines for warre, foch councellors for peace, and matchles masters for all kinde of learninge, is pleasant for me to recite, and not irksum, I trust, for others to heare, except it be soch, as make neither counte of virtue nor learninge.

And whether there be anie foch, or no, I cannot well tell; yet I heare Contemners faie, fome yonge jentlemen of oures, count it their shame to be count- of learning. ed learned; and perchance they count it their shame, to be counted honest also; for I heare saie, they meddle as little with the one, as with the other. A mervelous case, that jentlemen should so be ashamed of good learning, and never a whit ashamed of ill manners! Soch do saie for them, that the jentlemen of France do fo; which is a lie, as God will have it. Langaus, and Bellaus that be dead, and the noble Vidam Gentlemen of Chartres, that is alive, and infinite mo in France, which I heare tell of France. of, prove this to be most false. And though some in France, which will nedes be jentlemen, whether men will or no, and have more jentleshippe in their hat, than in their head, be at deadlie feude, with both learning and honestie; yet I believe, if * that noble prince, King Fran-Franciscus 1: cis the first, were alive, they should have neither place in his courte, nobilis. Francorum rex. nor pension in his warres, if he had knowledge of them. This opinion is not French, but plaine Turkishe, from whens some Frenche fetche moe faultes than this; which, I praie God, kepe out of England, and fend also those of oures better mindes, which bend themselves againste vertue and learninge, to the contempte of God, dishonor of their contrie, to the hurt of manie others, and at lengthe, to the greatest harme and utter destruction of themselves.

* Erasmus, whose friendship this excellent prince courted very much, gives us this account of him: "Magis habet studio, ut regnum suum optimis legibus, incorruptis moribus, ho"nestissimis studiis locupletet, exornet, illustret, quam ut ditionis suæ pomæria proferat."

Experience without learning.

Some other, having better nature, but leffe witte, (for ill commonlie have over much witte) do not utterlie dispraise learning, but they saie, that without learning, common experience, knowledge of all facions, and haunting all companies, shall worke in youthe both wisdome, and abilitie, to execute anie weightie affaire. Surelie long experience doth proffet much, but moste, and almost onelie to him (if we meane honest affaires) that is diligentlie before instructed with preceptes of well doinge. For good preceptes of learning be the eyes of the minde, to looke wiselie before a man, which waie to go right, and which not.

Learning.

Learning teacheth more in one yeare, than experience in twentie; Experience, and learning teacheth fafelie, when experience maketh mo miserable than wife. He hasardeth fore, that waxeth wife by experience. An unhappy mafter he is, that is made cunning by manie shippewrakes; a miserable merchant, that is neither riche nor wise, but after some bankroutes. It is costlie wisdom that is bought by experience. We know by experience itselfe, that it is a marvelous paine, to find out but a fhort waie by long wandering. And furelie, he that would prove wife by experience, he maie be wittie indeede, but even like a swift runner, that runneth fast out of his waie, and upon the night, he knoweth not whither. And verelie they be fewest in number that be happie or wife by unlearned experience. And looke well upon the former life of those fewe, whether your example be old or yonge, who without learning have gathered, by long experience, a little wisdome, and some happiness; and when you do consider, what mischiefe they have committed, what dangers they have escaped, (and yet twentie for one do perishe in. the adventure) then thinke well with your felfe, whether ye wold that your owne fon should come to wisdome and happines by the waie of fuch experience, or no.

Syr Roger Chamloe.

It is a notable tale, that old Syr Roger Chamloe, fometime chiefe justice, wold tell of himselfe. When he was Auncient in inn of court, certainecertaine yong jentlemen were brought before him to be corrected for certaine miforders; and one of the lustiest saide, "Syr, we be yong jen"tlemen; and wise men before us have proved all facions, and yet those have done full well." This they said, because it was well known, Syr Roger had bene a good felloe in his youth. But he answered them verie wiselie: "Indeede, saith he, in youthe I was as you are now: and I had twelve felloes like unto myself, but not one of them came to a good ende. And therefore, solow not my example in youth, but solow my councell in aige, if ever ye thinke to come to this place, or to thies yeares, that I am come unto; lesse ye meete either with povertie or Tiburn in the way."

Thus, experience of all facions in youthe, beinge in profe alwaise Experience. dangerous, in ishue seldom luckie, is a waie indeede to over moch knowledge; yet used commonlie of soch men, which be either caried by some curious affection of mynde, or driven by some hard necessitie of life, to hasard the triall of over manie perilous adventures.

Erasmus, the honor of learning of all oure time, saide wiselie, "that Erasmus." experience is the common scholehouse of sooles, and ill men. Men Experience of witte and honestie, be otherwise instructed. For there be, that house of

- « kepe them out of fier, and yet was never burned; that be ware of fooles and ill
- "water, and yet was never nie drowninge; that hate harlottes, and men.
- " was never at the stewes; that abhorre falshoode, and never brake
- " promis themselves."

But will'ye see a sit similitude of this adventured experience? A father that doth let louse his son to all experiences, is most like a fond hunter, that letteth slippe a whelpe to the hole herde: twentie to one, he shall fall upon a rascall, and let go the faire game. Men that hunt so, be either ignorant persones, privie stealers, or night walkers.

Learning therefore, ye wise fathers, and good bringing up, and not blinde and dangerous experience, is the next and readiest waie, that must lede your children, first to wisdom, and then to worthinesse, if ever ye purpose they shall come there.

And

And to faie all in shorte, though I lacke authoritie to give counsell, How experience may yet I lack not good will to wishe, that the youthe in England, specialproffit. lie jentlemen, and namelie nobilitie, shold be by good bringing up so grounded in judgement of learninge, fo founded in love of honestie, as when they should be called forthe to the execution of great affaires. in service of their prince and contrie, they might be hable to use, and to order all experiences, were they good, were they bad, and that according to the square, rule, and line, of wisdom, learning and vertue.

And I do not meene, by all this my taulke, that yong jentlemen Diligent ought to be should alwaies be poring on a booke, and by using good studies, shold joyned with lease honest pleasure, and haunt no good pastime; I meane nothing pleafant pa-leffe: for it is well knowne, that I bothe like and love, and have alnamelie in a waies, and do yet still use all exercises and pastimes, that be fitte for my nature and habilitie. And beside naturall disposition, in judgement jentleman. also I was never, either stoick in doctrine, or anabaptist in religion, to mislike a merie, pleasant, and plaisfull nature; if no outrage be committed against lawe, measure, and good order.

Therefore I would wishe, that beside some good time, fitlie appointed, and constantlie kepte, to encrease by reading the knowledge of the tongues, and learning; yong jentlemen shold use, and delite in all courtlie exercises, and jentlemanlike pastimes. And good cause why: joyned with for the self same noble eitie of Athens, justlie commended of me before. did wiselie, and upon great consideration, appoint the Muses, Apollo. and Pallas, to be patrones of learning to their youthe. For the muses, befides learning, were also ladies of dauncinge, mirthe and minstrelsie: Apollo was god of shooting, and author of cunning playing upon instrumentes; Pallas also was ladie mistres in warres. Wherebie was nothing elfe ment, but that learning should be alwaise mingled with honest mirthe, and comlie exercises; and that warre also shold be governed by learning, and moderated by wisdom; as did well appeare in those captaines of Athens named by me before, and also in Scipio and Casar. the two diamondes of Rome. And Pallas was no more feared in weering Ægida, than the was praifed for chosing Olivam; whereby thineth the glory of learning, which thus was governor and mistres, in the noble citie of Athens, both of warre and peace.

Learning rewleth both warre and peace.

Learning

pastimes.

Muſæ.

Apollo.

Pallas.

Therefore

Therefore to ride comlie, to run faire at the tilte or ring; to plaie The paat all weapones, to shote faire in bow, or surelie in gun; to vant luste- be fitte for ly; to runne, to leape, to wrestle, to swimme; to daunce comlie, courtlie jento fing, and play on instrumentes cunnyngly; to hawke, to hunte; to tlemen. playe at tennes, and all pastimes generally, which be joyned with labor, used in open place, and on the day light, conteining either some fitte exercise for warre, or some pleasant pastime for peace, be not onlic comlie and decent, but also verie necessarie for a courtlie jentleman to use.

But of all kinde of pastimes, fitte for a jentleman, I will, God willing, in fitter place more at large declare fullie, in my "book of the "Cockpitte;" which I do write to fatisfie fome, I trust with some reafon, that be more curious in marking other mens doinges, than carefull in mendyng their own faultes. And some also will nedes busie themfelves in merveling, and adding thereunto unfrendlie taulke; why I, a man of good yeares, and of no ill place, I thanke God and my prince, do make choife to spend foch tyme in writing of trifles; as "the Schole " of Shooting, the Cockpitte, and this booke of the first principles of " Grammar," rather than to take fome weightie matter in hand, either of religion, or civill discipline.

Wife men, I know, will well allow of my choife herein; and as for foch, who have not witte of themselves, but must learne of others to judge right of mens doynges, let them read that wife poet Horace, in A booke of a his Arte Poetica, who willeth men to be ware of hie and loftie beareth the titles. For great shippes require costlie tackling, and also afterward brag of over dangerous government: small boates be neither verie chargeable in ma- greate a prokyng, nor verie oft in great jeopardie; and yet they carry many tymes as good and cost in great jeopardie, and jet and jet and jet and jet and the right choice to easilie beare the light burden of a small faute, and have alwaise at hand choose a sitte a ready excuse for ill handling; and some praise it is, if it so chaunce argument to to be better in deede than a man dare venture to feeme. A hie title write upon. doth charge a man with the heavie burden of too great a promife; and therefore fayth Horace verie wittelie, that that poete was a very foole Hor. in Artethat began hys booke with a good verse indeede, but over proude a pro-Poet. mise:

For-

Fortunam Priami cantabo, & nobile bellum:

And after as wifelie;

Quanto rectius bic, qui nil molitur inepte? &c.

meaning Homer; who, within the compasse of a small argument of one harlot, and of one good wife, did utter so much learning in all Homers wisdom in this a praise, that no man yet deserved to sit in the second degree choice of his beneth him." And thus much out of my waie, concerning my purpose in spending penne, and paper, and tyme, upon trisles; and namelie to aunswere some, that have neither witte nor learning to do any thyng themselves, neither will nor honestie, to say well of others.

The Cortegian, an exhis booke Cortegiane, doth trimlie teache: which booke, advisedlie cellentbooke
for a jentleman.

would do a yong jentleman more good, I wisse, than three yeares travell abrode spent in Italie. And I mervell this booke is no more read in the court than it is; seeing it is + so well translated into Englishe Syr Tho.
Hobbie.

Syr Tho.
Hobbie.

To joine learning with comlie exercises, Conto Baldesar Castiglione, in the special content of the special con

Examples better than preceptes.

And befide good preceptes in bookes, in all kind of tonges, this court also never lacked many faire examples for yong jentlemen to follow. And surelie one example is more valuable, both to good and ill, than twentie preceptes written in bookes; and so Plato, not in one or two, but diverse places, doth plainlie teach.

* Quintilianus, lib. x. "Utar verbis, quæ ex Afro Domitio juvenis accepi: qui mihi in-"terroganti, quem Homero crederet maximè accedere; fecundus, inquit, est Virgilius; propier tamen primo, quàm tertio."

† This book was soon after (and perhaps the sooner for this great character here given) translated into excellent Latin by Mr. Clerke, Fellow of King's College in Cambridge, with this title; Balthafaris Castilionis comitis de curiali, sive Aulico, libri quatuor, ex Italico sermone en Latinum conversi.

If Kyng Edward had lived a little longer, his onely example had bred King Ed. 6. foch a race of worthie learned jentlemen, as this realme never yet did affourde.

And in the fecond degree, two noble primeroses of nobilitie, * the The yong yong Duke of Suffolke, and † Lord Hen. Matravers, were soch two exfolke. amples to the court for learning, as our tyme may rather wishe than Lord H. Malook for agains.

At Cambridge also, in St. John's college, in my tyme, I do know, that not so much the good statutes, as two jentlemen of worthie memorie, Syr John Cheke, and Dr. Readman, by their only example of Syr John excellency in learnyng, of godlynes in livyng, of diligence in studying, Cheke. Dr. Readof councell in exhorting, by good order in all thyngs, did breed up so man. many learned men in that one college of St. John's, at one tyme, as I believe the whole universitie of Lovaine in many yeares, was never able to affourd.

Prefent examples of this prefent tyme I lift not to touch; yet there is one example for all the jentlemen of this court to follow, that may well fatisfie them, or nothing will ferve them, nor no example move them to goodness and learnyng.

- * The most noble Henry Brandon, Duke of Suffolk, with his brother Charles, were both carried off by the sweating-sickness at the same time. Their death Dr. Haddon laments in an elegant oration very affectionately: "Postquam inundantes, & in Cantabrigiam effer"vescentes æstivi sudores, illud præstans & aureolum par Sussociensium fratrum, tum quidem peregrinatum à nobis, sed tamen planè nostrum, obruerunt; sic ingemuimus, ut insinitus dolor, vix ullam tanti mali levationem invenire posset. —Dux ipse, licet nondum plane vir, tamen & annis ad juventutem pæne adoleverat, & ingenio ad omnes res gerendas ita ematuruerat, ut ex his omnibus nihil illi abesset, quibus illustrem personam vel ornari deceret, vel institui conveniret. Gravis erat sine superbia, comis sine levitate; docilitate summâ, minimo ut studio esset opus, diligentia tamen ejusmodi, quæ naturam posset etiam ex tarditate incitare."
- † This young nobleman, of the Arundel family, being fent in quality of envoy to the Emperor by Queen Mary, having over-heated his blood by the speed he made, sell into a sever, and died the last of July, in the nineteenth year of his age, as we learn from the above-mention'd author:

Quatuor à lustris unum si dempseris annum, Hæc Matraversi morientis habebitur ætas; Que post Edvardum majus nil Anglia vidit. fabeth.

Queene Eli- It is your shame, (I speak to you all, you yong jentlemen of Englande) that one mayd should go beyond you all in excellencie of learnyng, and knowledge of divers tonges. Pointe forth fix of the best given jentlemen of this court, and all they together shew not so much good will, fpend not fo much tyme, bestow not so many houres dayly, orderly, and conftantly, for the increase of learning and knowledge, as doth the Queenes Majestie herselfe. Yea I believe, that beside her perfit readines in Latin, Italian, French, and Spanish, * she readeth here now at Windsore more Greeke every day, than some prebendarie of this church doth read Latin in a whole weeke. And that which is most praise-worthie of all, within the walls of her privie chamber, she hath obteyned that excellencie of learnyng, to understand, speake, and write both wittely with head, and faire with hand, as fcarfe one or two rare wittes in both the universities have in many yeares reached unto. Amongest all the benefites that God hath blessed me withall, next the knowledge of Christes true religion, I counte this the greatest, that it pleafed God to call me to be one poore minister in settyng forward these excellent giftes of learning in this most excellent prince; whose only example if the rest of our nobilitie would follow, then might Englande be, for learning and wisedome in nobilitie, a spectacle to all the world ill examples beside. But see the mishap of men; the best examples have never such force than forse to move to any goodnes, as the bad, vaine, light and fond, have good exam-to all illnes.

ples.

And one example, though out of the compas of learning, yet not out of the order of good maners, was notable in this court not fullie twentie foure yeares ago; when all the actes of parliament, many good proclamations, diverse strait commandementes, sore punishments openlie, special regarde privatelie, could not do fo moch to take away one misorder, as

This I the rather add, because I have heard this place censured; as if Mr. Ascham had failed in point of civility and good manners, and intended a reflection by the comparison.

* Mr. Ascham, in his Discourse of the affairs of Germany, speaking of John Frederick Duke of Saxony, Luther's great friend and defender, hath this passage not unlike what he here relates of his royal mistress.

&quot; It is marvellous, that my friend Joannes Sturmius doth report by writing, what he heard 44 Philip Melancihon at a time fay of this noble Duke, that he thought the Duke did privately " read and write more every day, than did both he and Dr. Aurifater; which two were counted in all mens judgments to be the greatest readers and writers in all the university of " Wittemberg."

the example of one big one of this courte did, still to keep up the same: the memory whereof doth yet remaine in a common proverb of Birching Lane.

Take hede therefore, ye great ones in the court, yea though ye be Great men the greatest of all, take hede what ye do; take hede how ye live: for in court by as you great ones use to do, so all meane men love to do. You be in-their example make or deed makers, or marrers, of all mens maners within the realme. For marre all othough God hath placed you to be chief in making of lawes, to beare ther mens greatest authoritie, to command all others; yet God doth order, that all your lawes, all your authoritie, all your commandementes, do not halfe fo moch with meane men, as doth your example and maner of livinge. And for example, even in the greatest matter, if you your-Example in felves do ferve God gladlie and orderlie for confeience fake, not coldlie, religions and fomtyme for maner fake, you carie all the court with you, and the whole realme beside, earnestlie and orderlie to do the same. If you do otherwise, you be the onlie authors of all misorders in religion, not onlie to the courte, but to all Englande beside. Infinite shall be made cold in religion by your example, that never were hurt by reading of books.

And in meaner matters, if three or foure great ones in courte will Example in nedes outrage in apparell, in huge hofe, in monstrous hattes, in gaur-apparell. ishe colours; let the prince proclame, make lawes, order, punishe, commaunde everie gate in London dailie to be watched; let all good men beside do everie where what they can; surelie the misorder of apparell in mean men abrode shall never be amended, except the greatest in courte will order and mend themselves first. I know some greate and good ones in courte were authors, that honest citizens of London should watch at everie gate to take misordered persones in apparell: I know that honest Londoners did so; and I sawe (which I sawe then, and reporte now with some griefe) that some courtelie men were offended with these good men of London: and that which greved me most of all, I sawe the verie same tyme, for all these good orders commaunded from the courte, and executed in London; I fawe, I fay, come out of London, Masters, usheven unto the presence of the prince, a great rable of mean and light ers and scholers of sence. persones, in apparell, for matter against lawe, for making against order, for facion, namelie hose, so without all order, as he thought himselfe most brave, that durst do most in breaking order, and was most monsterous in misorder. And for all the great commandementes that came out of the courte, yet this bold misorder was winked at, and borne withall in the courte. I thought it was not well, that some great ones of the court durst declare themselves offended with good men of London, for doing their dewtie; and the good ones of the courte would not shew themselves offended with ill men of London, for breaking good order. I found thereby a sayinge of Socrates to be most trewe, "that "ill men be more hastie, than good men be forwarde, to prosecute "their purposes;" even as Christ himselfe saith of the children of light and darkness.

I i 2 for

Beside apparell, in all other thinges too, not so moch good lawes and strait commandementes, as the example and maner of living of great men, doth carrie all meane men everie where to like, and love, and do, as they do. For if but two or three noble men in the court wold Example in but beginne to shoote, all young jentlemen, the whole court, all Lon-shooting.

What praise shold they wynne to themselves, what commoditie shold they bring to their contrie, that would thus deserve to be pointed at; "*Behold there goeth the author of good order, the guide of good men?" I could say more, and yet not over moch. But perchance some will say, I have stepte to farre out of my schole into the common welthe; from teaching a yong scholer, to monishe great and noble

Totum muneris hoc tui est, Quòd monstror digito prætereuntium, Romanæ fidicen lyræ.

* Men of true worth and excellency, as they justly challenge all due respect, so they draw the eyes of the world after them, wherever they go. Demosthenes never appeared in publick, but he was marked out by the admiring multitude, as he passed along, one crying to another, Obtos exessos. To this Lucian alludes in his Dream. Τοιαθτά σοι περιθήσω τὰ γνωρίσμαλα, ως ε τῶν οράνδων εκας τον πλησίον κινήσας, δείξει σε τῷ δακθυλώ, Οδτος ἐκεῖνω, λέγων. This Horace expresses with some satisfaction, as being his own case:

So Pliny, in his letter to Maximus: "An fi Demosthenes jure lætatus est, quod illum "anus Attica ita demonstravit, Οὖτός ἐςν Δημοσθένης, ego celebritate nominis mei gaudere son debeo?"

men: yet I trust good and wise men will thinke and judge of me, that Written not my minde was not so much to be busie and bold with them, that be for great great now, as to give trewe advice to them, that may be great hereaf-great mens ter; who if they do, as I wishe them to do, how great soever they bechildren now by blood, and other mens meanes, they shall become a great deale greater hereafter, by learninge, vertue, and their owne desertes; "which is trewe praise, right worthiness, and verie nobilitie indeede." Yet if some will needes presse me, that I am to bold with great men, and stray to farre from my matter, I will answere them with St. Paul, Ad Philip. Sive per contentionem, sive quocunque modo, modò Christus prædicetur, &cc. Even so, whether in place, or out of place, with my matter, or beside my matter, if I can hereby either provoke the good, or staye the ill, I shall think my writing herein well imployed.

But to come downe from greate men, and hier matters, to my little children, and poore schole-house againe; I will, God willing, go forward orderlie, as I purposed, to instructe children, and yong men, both for learnyng and maners.

Hitherto I have shewed, what harme over moch searce bringeth to children; and what hurte ill companie, and over moch libertie, breedeth in youthe; meaning thereby, that from seven yeare olde to seventeene, love is the best allurement to learnyng; from seventeene to seven and twentie, that wise men shold carefullie see the steppes of youthe surelie staide by good order, in that most slipperie tyme; and speciallie in the courte, a place most dangerous for youthe to live in, without great grace, good regarde, and diligent looking to.

Syr Richard Sackville, that worthie jentleman of worthie memorie, as I fayd in the begynnynge, in the queenes privie chamber at Windfore, after he had talked with me for the right choice of a good witte in a childe for learnyng, and of the trewe difference betwixt quicke and hard wittes; of alluring yong children by jentlenes to love learnyng, and of the special care that was to be had, to keepe yong men from licentious livyng; he was most earnest with me, to have me say my mynde also, what I thought concernyng the fansie that many yong jentlemen of Englande have to travell abroad, and namely to lead a long life in Italie.

Traveling into Italie.

Italie. His request, both for his authoritie, and good will toward me, was a sufficient commaundement unto me, to satisfie his pleasure with utteryng plainlie my opinion in that matter. "Syr, quoth I, I take " goyng thither, and living there, for a yonge jentleman, that doth " not goe under the kepe and garde of fuch a man, as both by wife-"dome can, and authoritie dare rewle him, to be marvelous danger-CC 0115."

And why I faid fo then, I will declare at large now, which I faid tonge.

Italia.

Roma.

then privatelie, and write now openlie; not because I do contemne either the knowledge of strange and diverse tonges, and namelie the Ita-The Italian lian tonge, (which next the Greek and Latin tonge, I like and love above all other) or elfe because I do despise the learning that is gotten, or the experience that is gathered in strange countries; or for any private malice that I beare to Italie; which contrie, and in it, namelie Rome, I have alwayes speciallie honored: because tyme was, when Italie and Rome have bene to the greate good of us that now live, the best breeders and bringers up of the worthiest men, not onlie for wise speakinge, but also for well doing, in all civill affaires, that ever was in the worlde. But now that tyme is gone, and though the place remayne, yet the olde and present maners do differ as farre, as blacke and white, as virtue and vice.

> Virtue once made that countrie mistress over all the world; vice now maketh that contrie flave to them, that before were glad to ferve it. All men see it; they themselves confesse it, namelie soch as be best and wisest amongest them. For sinne, by lust and vanitie, hath, and doth breed up every where, common contempt of Gods word, private contention in many families, open factions in every citie; and fo making themselves bonde to vanitie and vice at home, they are content to beare the yoke of ferving strangers abroad. Italie now, is not that Italie, that it was wont to be; and therefore now not fo fitte a place as some do counte it, for yong men to fetch either wisedome or honestie from thence. For surelie they will make others but bad scholers, that be so ill masters to themselves. Yet, if a jentleman will nedes travel into Italie, he shall do well to looke to the life of the wifest traveler that ever traveled thither, fet out by the wifest writer that ever

fpake

spake with tonge, Gods doctrine onclie excepted; and that is Ulysses in Ulysses. Homere.

Homere..

Ulysses, and his travel, I wishe our travellers to looke upon; not so much to feare them with the great daungers that he many times suffered, as to instruct them with his excellent wisedome, which he alwayes, and every where used. Yea even those that be learned and wittie travellers, when they be disposed to praise traveling, as a great commendation, and the best scripture they have for it, they gladlie recite the * third verse of 'Odror. a. Homere, in his first booke of Odyssea, conteying a great praise of Ulysses, for the witte he gathered, and wisdome he used, in his traveling.

Which verse, because, in mine opinion, it was not made at the first more naturally in Greke by Homere, nor after turned more aptelie into Lativ by Horace, than it was a good while ago, in Cambridge, translated into English, both plainlie for the sense, and roundlie for the verse, + by one of the best scholers that ever St. John's college bred, M. Watson, Mr. Thomyne old friend, sometime bishop of Lincolne; therefore, for their sake mas Watson. that have lust to see how our English tonge, in avoiding barbarous rhyming, may as well receive right quantitie of fillables, and trewe order of verfifying, (of which matter more at large hereafter) as either Greke or Latin, if a cunning man have it in handling; I will fet forth that one verse in all three tonges, for an example to good wittes that shall delite in like learned exercife.

Πολλών δ' ανθρώπων ίδεν άς εα, κ, νόον έγνω.

Homer.

Qui mores hominum multorum vidit, & urbes.

Horace.

All travellers do gladly report great prayle of Ulysses, For that he knew many mens maners, and faw many cities.

Mr. Watfon,

* The three first verses of Homer's Odyss.

"Ανδρά μοι ἔννεπε Μέσα πολύτροπον, ος μάλα πολλα Πλάγχθη, ἐπεὶ Τρόιης ἱερον προλίεθρον ἔπερσε. Πολλῶν δ' ἀνθρώπων ἴδεν ἄςεα, κὰ νόον ἔγνω.

† This learned gentleman has left nothing behind him, that I know of, but a copy of Latin verses, to recommend Mr Seton's logick to the publick; as Mr. Cheke wrote excellently well. in. Greek upon the same subject.

And

And yet is not Uly fes commended fo much, nor fo oft in Homere, be-Ulvff. Πολύτροωος. cause he was Πολύτροπος, that is, "skilfull in many mens maners and facions;" as because he was Πολύμητις, that is, " wife in all purposes, Ulvff. " and ware in all places." Which wisedome and warenes will not serve Πολύμηλης. Pallas from never a traveller, except Pallas be alwayes at his elbow; that is Gods special grace from Heaven, to kepe him in Gods feare in all his do-Heaven. ings, in all his journeye. For he shall not allwaics in his absence out of Englande, light upon a jentle Alcynous, and walke in his fair gar-Alcynous. dens, full of all harmeless pleasures; but he shall sometymes fall either O.d. n. into the handes of some cruell Cyclops, or into the lappe of some wan-Cyclops. ton and dallying dame, Calvpso; and so suffer the danger of many a dead-Od. i. Calyplo. lie denne, not fo full of perils to destroy the body, as full of vayne Od. i. pleasures to poyson the minde. Some Siren shall sing him a song, Sirenes. swecte in tune, but sownding in the ende to his utter destruction. If Οδ. μ. Scylla. OS. p. Scylla drowne him not, Charybdis may fortune to fwalow him. Some Circe shall make him, of a plaine Englishman, a right Italian: and at Charybdis. Circe. Od. R. length to Hell, or fome hellish place, is he likelie to go; from whence OS. p. is hard returning, although one Ulysses, and that by Pallas ayde, and good counsell of Tirefias, once escaped that horible den of deadly darknes.

Therefore, if wife men will nedes fend their fonnes into Italie, let them do it wiselie, under the kepe and garde of him, who, by his wisedome and honestie, by his example and authoritie, may be hable to kepe them safe and sound in the searce of God, in Christes trewe religion, in good order, and honestie of livyng; except they will have them run headlong into over many jeoperdies, as Ulyses had done many tymes, if Pallas had not alwaies governed him; if he had not used Od. 2. to stop his eares with wax, to bind himselfe to the mast of his shyp, Moly Herba. to feed dayly upon that sweet herb Moly*, with the black roote and white slowere given unto hym by Mercurie, to avoide all the enchantmentes of Circe. Wherby the divine poete Homere ment covertlie (as wise

* Odyst. K. ver. 304.

'Ρίζη μὲν μέλαν ἔσκε, γάλακ]ι δὲ εἴκελον ἄνθος.
Μῶλυ δέ μιν καλέμσι θεοί. χαλεωον δέ τ' ορυσσειν
'Ανδράσι γὲ θυητοῖσι. θεοι δέ τε πάν]α δύνανται.

and godlie men do judge) that love of honestie, and hatred of ill, which David more plainly doth call "the fcar of God," the onely remedie Pf. xxxiii. against all inchantmentes of sinne.

I know diverse noble personages, and many worthie jentlemen of Englande, whome all the Siren songes of Italie could never untwine from the maste of Gods word; nor no inchantment of vanitie overturn them from the seare of God, and love of honestie.

But I know as many, or mo, and fome, fometyme my deare frendes, (for whose sake I hate going into that contrey the more) who parting out of Englande fervent in the love of Christes doctrine, and well furnished with the feare of God, returned out of Italie worse transformed than ever was any in Circes court. I know diverse, that went out of Englande men of innocent life, men of excellent learning, who returned out of Italie, not only with worse maners, but also with lesse learnyng; neither fo willing to live orderlie, nor yet fo hable to speake learnedlie, as they were at home, before they went abroad. And why? Plato, that wife writer, and worthy traveler himselfe, telleth the cause why he went into Sicilia; a countrey no nigher Italy by fite of place, than Italie, that is now, is like Sicilia, that was then, in all corrupt maners and licentiousnes of life. Plato found in Sicilia, every citie full of vanitie, full of factions, even as Italie is now. And as Homere, like a learned poete, doth fayne that Circe, by pleasant inchantmentes, did turne men into beafts, some into swine, some into asses, some into foxes, some into wolves, &c. even so * Plato, like a wise philosopher, Plat. ad Diodoth plainly declare, that pleasure by licentious vanitie, that sweete and nysium, eperilous pist. 3.

Χαΐρε, κὸ ἡδόμενον βίστον διάσωζε Τυράννε.

yet he himself approves only of the latter; which he constantly used to his friends, and that, tor these reasons, whereunto our author alludes:

\* Plato seems to insist upon a nicety, in the beginning of this letter to Dionysius. 'Twas usual to greet their friends in this form,  $X\alpha'(\rho \epsilon \nu)$  ev  $\pi \rho \alpha' \tau \tau \epsilon \nu$ ; that is, wish 'em joy, and true felicity, founded upon good conduct. Plato, though he observes that Dionysius had chose the former, to caress and compliment the Delphian god, bespeaking him in this verse, perilous poyfon of all youth, doth ingender in all those that yield up themselves to her, soure notorious properties:

The fruites of vayne pleasure.

12, Δυσμαθίαν. ] 3, 'Αφροσύνην. 14, "Y Bpiv.

The first, forgetfulness of all good thinges learned before; the se-Causes why men returne cond, dulnes to receyve either learning or honestie ever after; the third, out of Italie a mynde embracing lightlie the worse opinion, and baren of discretion and worse to make trewe difference betwixt good and ill, betwixt troth and vanimanered. tie; the fourth, a proude disdainfulnes of other good men in all honest matters.

Homere and pounded. A fwyne.

An asse. A foxe.

'Αφροσύνη,

"YBois.

Homere and Plato have both one meaning, look both to one end, riato joyn-ed, and ex-For if a man inglutte himselse with vanitie, or walter in filthines like a fwyne, all learnyng, all goodness, is sone forgotten. Then quicklie shall he become a dull asse, to understand either learning or honestie; and yet shall he be as subtle as a foxe, in breeding of mischief, in bringing in miforder with a busie head, a discoursing tonge, and a factious harte, in every private affaire, in all matters of state; with this prettie propertie, alwayes glad to commend the worse partie, and ever quid & unde. ready to defend the falfer opinion. And why? For where will is given from goodnes to vanitie, the mynde is fone caryed from right judgement to any fond opinion in religion, in philosophy, or any other kynde of learnyng. The fourth fruite of vaine pleasure, by Homere and Platos judgement, is pride in themselves, contempt of others, the very badge of all those that serve in Circes court. The trewe meaning of both Homere and Plato, is plainlie declared in one short sentence of the holy prophet of God Hieremie, crying out of the vaine and vicious life of the Israelites: "This people (sayth he) be fooles and dulhedes to Hieremias, "all goodnes, but sotle, cunning, and bolde in any mischiefe," &c. cap. iv. ver. 22.

> Έγω δὲ ἐδὲ ἀνθεωπω κλήσει, μη ὅτι δη θεῷ, παρακελευσαίμην ᾶν δρᾶν τᾶτο. Θεῷ μὲν, ἔτι παρὰ φύσιν προςάττοιμ ἄν (πόρρω γὰρ πόονης ἴδρυται κ) λύπης τὸ θεῖον) ἀνθεωπω δὲ, ἔτι τὰ πολλὰ βλάβην ήδονη κ) λυπην γεννᾶ, δυσμαθίαν, κ) λήθην, κ) ἄφροσύνην, κ) ὕβριν דוֹצוֹצוֹם בֹּע דֹחְ שְׁעַצְהָּ.

The trewe medicine against the inchantmentes of Circe, the vanitie of licentious pleasure, the inticementes of all sinne, is in Homere the herbe Moly, with the blacke roote, and white flowere, sower at the first, but sweete in the end; which Hesiodus termeth * the study of vertue, Hesiodus de hard and irksome in the beginning, but in the end easie and pleasant. virtute. And that which is most to be marveled at, the divine poete Homere Homerus, disayth plainlie, that this medicine against sinne and vanitie, is not found vinus poeta, out by man, but given and taught by God. And for some ones sake, that will have delite to read that sweet and godlie verse, I will recite the very wordes of Homere, and also turne them into rude Englishe metre:

*Ανδράσι γὲ Φυητοϊσι. Θεὸι δέ τε πάντα δύνανται.

Οδε, κ.

In Englishe thus;

No mortall man, with sweat of browe, or toile of minde, But onely God, who can do all, that herbe doth finde.

Plato also, that divine philosopher, hath many godly medicines against the poyson of vayne pleasure, in many places, but specially in his epistle to Dionysius, the tyrant of Sicilie. Yet against those that will Plat ad Dionedes become beastes with serving of Circe, the prophet David crieth most loud; Nolite sieri, sicut equus, & mulus; and by and by giveth the Psal.xxxii.9: right medicine, the trewe herbe Moly, In camo & fræno maxillas eorum constringe: that is to say, "Let Gods grace be the bitte, let Gods feare

* The place in Hefiod, which he points to, is this, "Egywu & Hueg. ver. 289.

Της δ' 'Αρετης ίδρωτα θεοί προπάροιθεν έθηκαν 'Αθάναθοι. μακρός δε κό δρθιώ οίμος επ' αὐτην, Καὶ τρηχύς το πρωτον. επην δ'είς άκρον ίκηαι, Ρηϊδίη δε έπειτα ωέλει, χαλεπή περ έξσα.

These verses Lucian, in his Νεκυομανδεία, calls πάνδημα επη, famous and celebrated verses. So Aristotle, Τοὶς παιδείας εφη τὰς μὲν ρίζας εἶναι πικράς, γλυκείς δὲ τὰς καρπές. Lacrtiue.

K k 2

" be

ture of a knight of

be the bridle, to flay them from runnyng headlong into vice, and to "turne them into the right way agayne." David, in the fecond Pfal. xxxiv. pfalme after, giveth the fame medicine, but in these plainer wordes, Diverte à malo, & fac bonum.

But I am afraide, that over many of our travelers into Italie do not eschewe the way to Circes court, but go, and ryde, and runne, and flie thither; they make great haste to come to her; they make great fuite to ferve her; yea, I could point out fome with my finger, that never had gone out of Englande, but onelie to serve Circe in Italie. Vanitie and vice, and any licence to ill livying in Englande, was counted A trewe pic- stale and rude unto them. And so, being mules and horses before they went, returne very fwyne and affes home againe; yet everie where Circes court, verie foxes with subtile and busie heades; and where they may, verie wolves, with cruel malicious hearts. A marvelous monster, whych, for filthiness of living, for dulness to learning himselfe, for wiliness in dealing with others, for malice in hurting without cause, should carie at once, in one bodie, the bellie of a fwyne, the head of an affe, the braine of a foxe, the wombe of a wolfe. If you thinke we judge The Italians amisse, and write to fore against you, heare what the Italian sayth of judgement of the Englishman; what the master reporteth of the scholer, who uttereth plainlie what is taught by him, and what is learned by you, faying, Englese Italianato, e un Diabolo incarnato: that is to fay, "You re-" maine men in shape and facion, but become devils in life and con-" dition."

The Italian diffameth himfelfe, to shame the Englishman.

Englishmen brought up in Italie.

This is not the opinion of one, for some private spite, but the judgement of all in a common proverbe, which rifeth of that learnyng, and those maners, which you gather in Italie; a good schole-house of wholesome doctrine, and worthy masters of commendable scholers; where the master had rather disfame hymselfe for hys teaching, than not shame his scholer for his learnyng. A good nature of the master, and faire conditions of the scholers! And now chose you, you Italian-Englishmen, whether you will be angrye with us, for calling you monsters, or with the Italianes, for callyng you devils; or else with your own. felves, that take so much paines, and go so farre, to make yourselves. both. If some do not well understand, what is an Englishman Italianat-ed, I will plainlie tell him: "He that by living, and traveling in An English-"Italie, bringeth home into Englande, out of Italie, the religion, the man Italian-" learnyng, the pollicie, the experience, the maners of Italie." That is 1. The relito fay, for religion, papiftrie, or worfe; for learnyng, leffe commonly gion, 2. the than they caried out with them; for pollicie, a factious hart, a dif-learnyng, 3. the pollicie, courfing head, a mynde to medle in all mens matters; for experience, the pollicie, 4. the expeplentie of new mischieves never known in Englande before; for maners, rience, and, varietie of vanities, and chaunge of filthie lyving.

5. the maners, gotten ners, gotten in Italie.

These be the inchantmentes of Circe, brought out of Italie, to marre mens maners in Englande; much by example of ill life, but more by precepts of fond books, of late translated out of Italian into Englishe, Italian fold in every shop in London; commended by honest titles, the soner bookestransto corrupt honest maners; dedicated over boldlie to vertuous and ho-Englishe, nourable personages, the easilier to beguile simple and innocent wittes. " It is pitie, that those which have authoritie and charge, to allow and "difallow bookes to be printed, be no more circumspect herein than "they are." Ten fermons at Paules Croffe do not so much good for movyng men to trewe doctrine, as one of those bookes do harme, with inticing men to ill living. Yea, I fay farder, those bookes tend not so moch to corrupt honest livying, as they do to subvert trewe religion. Mo Papistes be made by your mery bookes of Italie, than by your earnest bookes of Louvain. And bicause our great physicians do winke at the matter, and make no count of this fore, I, though not admitted one of their fellowshyp, yet havyng bene many yeares a prentice to Gods trewe religion, and trust to continewe a poore journeyman therein all dayes of my life; for the dewtie I owe, and love I beare, both to trewe doctrine, and honest living, though I have no authoritie to amend the fore myselfe, yet I will declare my good will, to discover the fore to others.

St. Paul saith, "that sects and ill opinions be the workes of the Epist. ad "flesh, and fruites of sinne." This is spoken no more trewlie for the Gal. v. 19. doctrine, than sensible for the reason. And why? "For ill doinges Voluntas re-" breed ill thinkinges; and of corrupted maners, spryng perverted spicit bo-"judgementes." And how? There be in man two speciall thinges; Mens respimans will, mans mynde. Where will inclineth to goodness, the mynde cit verum.

is bent to troth: where will is carried from goodnes to vanitie, the minde is fone drawn from troth to false opinion. And so, the readiest way to entangle the mynde with false doctrine, is first to intice the will to wanton livyng. Therefore, when the busie and open Papistes abroad, could not, by their contentious bookes, turne men in Englande fast enough from troth and right judgement in doctrine, then the subtle and secrete Papistes at home, procured bawdie bookes to be translated out of the Italian tonge, whereby over many young willes and wittes allured to wantonnes, do now boldly contemne all severe bookes that founde to honestie and godlines.

La Morte d'Arthure. In our forefathers tyme, when papistrie, as a standyng poole, covered and overslowed all Englande, sewe bookes were read in our tonge, savyng certaine bookes of chevalrie, as they said for passime and pleasure; which, as some say, were made in monasteries by idle monks, or wanton chanons. As one for example, the Morte d'Arthure; the whole pleasure of which booke standeth in two special poyntes, in open manssaughter, and bold bawdrye: in which booke they be counted the noblest knightes that do kill most men without any quarrell, and commit fowlest adoulteries by sutlest shiftes; as Sir Launcelote, with the wife of king Arthure his master; Sir Tristram, with the wife of king Marke his uncle; Sir Lamerocke, with the wife of king Lote, that was his own aunte. This is good stuffe for wise men to laughe at, or honest men to take pleasure at: yet I know, when Gods Bible was banished the court, and La Morte d'Arthure received into the princes chamber.

What

* He hath much the same in his presace to his Toxophilus. "In our fathers time, nothinge was read but bookes of sayned chivalrie; wherein a man by reading should be led to none other end, but only to manssaughter and bawdrye. If any man suppose they were good enough to passe the time withall, he is deceived. For surely vain wordes do work no small thinge in vaine, ignorant, and young minds, especially if they be given any thinge thereunto of their own nature. These bookes, as I have heard say, were made the most part in abuseys and monasteries: a very likely and fit fruite of such an idle and blind kind of living." See Huetius de Origine Fabularum Romanensium.

† La Mort d'Arthure: so the book is intitled, tho' it treats of the birth, life, and acts of the said King Arthure, and of his noble knights of the Round Table, and their marvailous conquests and adventures. I find it was reprinted at London in 1634.

What toyes the dayly readyng of fuch a booke may worke in the will of a yong jenleman, or a yong mayde, that liveth welthelie and idlelie, wise men can judge, and honest men do pitie. And yet ten La Morte d'Arthures do not the tenth parte so much harme, as one of these bookes made in Italie, and translated in Englande. They open, not fond and common wayes to vice, but fuch futle, cunnyng, new, and diverse shiftes, to carry yong willes to vanitie, and yong wittes to mischief, to teach old bawdes new schole poyntes, as the simple head of an Englishman is not hable to invent, nor never was heard of in Englande before, yea when papistrie overflowed all. Suffer these bookes to be read, and they shall soone displace all bookes of godly learning. " For they, carrying the will to vanitie, and marryng good maners, " shall easily corrupt the mynde with ill opinions, and false judgement " in doctrine; first, to think ill of all trewe religion, and at last to " thinke nothing of God hymselfe: one speciall pointe that is to be " learned in Italie, and Italian bookes." And that which is most to be lamented, and therefore more nedefull to be looked to, there be moe of these ungratious bookes set out in printe within these sewe monethes, than have been fene in Englande many score yeares before. And bicause our Englishmen made Italians cannot hurt but certaine perfons, and in certaine places, therefore these Italian bookes are made Englishe, to bryng mischief enough openly and boldly, to all states, great and meane, yong and old, every where.

And thus you fee, how will intifed to wantonnes, doth eafilie allure the mynde to false opinions; and how corrupt maners in livinge, breede false judgement in doctrine; how sinne and fleshlines bring forth sectes and herefies: and therefore fuffer not vaine bookes to breede vanitie in mens willes, if you would have Goddes trothe take roote in mens myndes.

That Italian, that first invented the Italian proverbe against our Eng- The Italian lishmen Italianated, ment no more their vanitie in livyng, than their proverbe exlewd opinion in religion. For in calling them deviles, he carrieth them pounded. cleane from God; and yet he carrieth them no farder, than they willinglie go themselves; that is, where they may freely say their mindes to the open contempte of God, and all godliness, both in living and doctrine.

And how? I will expresse how; not by a fable of Homere, nor by the philosophie of Plate, but by a plaine troth of Goddes worde, sensiblie uttered by David thus: thies men, abominabiles facti in studiis suis, thinke verilie and finge gladlie the verse before, Dixit insipiens in corde Pfal. xiv. 1. fuo, non eft Deus: that is to fay, they giving themselves up to vanitie, shakinge of the motions of grace, driving from them the feare of God, and running headlong into all finne, first lustelie contemn God, then fcornfullie mocke his worde, and also spitefullie hate and hurte all well willers thereof. "Then they have in more reverence the triumphes " of Petrarche, than the Genesis of Moses; they make more accounte of Tullies Offices, than of St. Paules epiftles; of a tale in Bocace, than " a storie of the Bible. Then they counte as fables, the holie miste-" ries of christian religion. They make Christ and his Gospell onlie " ferve civil pollicie." Then neyther religion cometh amisse to them. In tyme they be promoters of both openlie; in place againe mockers of both privilie, as I wrote once in a rude ryme:

Now new, now olde, now both, now neither; To serve the worldes course, they care not with whether.

For where they dare, in companie where they like, they boldlie laugh to scorne both Protestant and Papist. They care for no Scripture; they make no counte of generall councels; they contemne the consent of the church; they pass for no doctores; they mock the Pope, they raile on Luther; they allow neyther fide; they like none, but onelie themselves. The marke they shote at, the ende they looke for, the heaven they defire, is onelie their own prefent pleasure, and private profite; whereby they plainlie declare of whose schole, of what religion they be; that is, " Epicures in living, and "Aθεοι in doctrine." This last worde is no more unknowne now to plaine Englishmen, than the person was unknowne some tyme in Englande, untill some Englishman took paines to The Italian fetche that devilishe opinion out of Italie. Thies men thus Italianated abroad, cannot abide our godlie Italian church at home; they be not of church in London. that that parish; they be not of that felowship; they like not that preacher; they heare not his fermons, excepte fomtymes for companie; they come thither to hear the Italian tonge naturally spoken, not to heare Gods doctrine trewly preached.

And yet thies men, in matters of divinitie, openlie pretend a great knowledge, and have pravatelie to themselves a very compendious understanding of all; which nevertheless they will utter, when and where they lifte: and that is this; All the misteries of Moses, the whole lawe and ceremonies, the Pfalmes and prophets; Christ and his Gospell, God and the Devil, heaven and hell, faith, confeience, finne, death, and all, they shortlie wrap up, they quicklie expounde, with this one half verse of Horace;

---- Credat Judæus Apella.

Lib. r. fat. 5.

Yet though in Italie they may freely be of no religion, as they are in Englande in verie deede to; nevertheless returning home into Englande, they must countenance the profession of the one or the other, howsoever inwardlie they laugh to scorne both. And though, for their private matters, they can follow, fawne, and flatter noble personages, contrarie to them in all respects; yet commonlie they allie themselves with the worst Papistes, to whom they be wedded, and do well agree together in three proper opinions; in open contempte of Goddes worde, Papistrie and in a fecret fecuritie of finne, and in a bloodie defire to have all taken impiety agree awaie by fword, or burninge, that be not of their faction. They that in three opido read with an indifferent judgement * Pighius, and Machiavel, two indifferent patriarches of thies two religions, do know full well that I fay Machiave trewe.

Ye see what manners and doctrine our Englishmen setch out of Italie: for finding no other there, they can bring no other hither. And there-

* Albertus Pighius, a famous champion for the Romish cause, and one of Luther's antagonists. "Meminerit Cardinalem Campegium, Albertum Pighium, aliosque complures suos docuisse, facerdotem illum multò sanctius & castius vivere, qui alat concubinam, quàm " qui uxorem habeat in matrimonio." Juel.i Apol.

Wife and honest travellers.

Venice.

fore manie godlie and excellent learned Englishmen, not manie yeares ago, did make a better choice; when open crueltie drave them out of Germanie, this contrie, to place themselves there, where Christes doctrine, the feare of God, punishment of sinne, and discipline of honestie, were had in special regard.

Service of God in Englande.

The lord major of London.

The inquisi-

I was once in Italie myselfe; but I thanke God, my abode there was but nine dayes; and yet I fawe in that litle tyme, in one citie, more London. libertie to finne, than ever I heard tell of in our noble citie of London in nine yeare. I fawe, it was there as free to finne, not onelic without all punishment, but also without any mans marking, as it is free in the citie of London, to chose without all blame, whether a man lust to weare shoo, or pantocle. And good cause why: for being unlike in troth of religion, they must nedes be unlike in honestie of living. For, blefsed be Christ, in our citie of London, commonlie the commandementes of God be more diligentlie taught, and the fervice of God more reverentlie used, and that daylie in many private mens houses, than they be in Italie once a weeke in their common churches; where masking GodinItalie. ceremonies, to delite the eye, and vaine foundes, to please the eare, do quite thrust out of the churches all service of God in spirit and troth. Yea, the lord maior of London, being but a civill officer, is commonlie for his tyme, more diligent in punishing sinne, the bent enemie against God and good order, than all the bloodie inquisitors in Italie be in tors in Italie, seven yeare. For their care and charge is, not to punishe sinne, not to amend manners, not to purge doctrine, but onlie to watch and overfee that Christes trewe religion set no sure footing, where the Pope hath anie jurisdiction.

I learned, when I was at Venice, that there it is counted good polli-An ungodlie cie, when there be four or five bretheren of one familie, one onelie to pollicie. marrie, and all the rest, to waulter, with as little shame, in open lecherie, as fwyne do here in the common myre. Yea, there be as fayre houses of religion, as great provision, as diligent officers, to kepe up this misorder, as Bridewell is, and all the masters there, to kepe downe misorder. order. And therefore, * if the Pope himselfe do not onelic grant pardons to furder thics wicked purposes abrode in Italie, but also (although this present Pope, in the beginning, made some shewe of misliking thereof) assigne both meede and merite to the maintenance of stewes and brothel houses at home in Rome; then let wise men thinke Italie a safe place for holsome doctrine, and godlie manners, and a sitte schole for yong jentlemen of Englande to be brought up in.

Our Italians bring home with them other faultes from Italie, though not fo greate as this of religion; yet a great deal greater than many good men can well beare. For commonlie they come home, common contemners of mariage, and readie perfuaders of all others to the fame; Contempt of not because they love virginitie, nor yet because they hate prettie yong mariage. virgines, but being free in Italie to go whither so ever lust will carry them, they do not like, that lawe and honestie should be soch a barre to their libertie at home in Englande. And yet they be the greatest makers of love, the daylie dalliers with fuch pleasant wordes, with fuch fmilyng and fecret countenances, with fuch fignes, tokens, wagers, purposed to be lost, before they were purposed to be made, with bargains of wearing colours, floures, and herbes, to breede occasion of ofter meeting of him and her, and bolder talking of this and that, &c. And although I have feene fome, innocent of all ill, and stayde in all honestie, that have used these things without all harme, without all fuspicion of harme; yet these knacks were brought first into Englande by them, that learned them before in Italie in Circes court; and how courtlie courtesies so ever they be counted now, yet if the meaning and manners of some that do use them, were somewhat amended, it were no great hurt, neither to themselves, nor to others.

Another propertie of thies our English Italians is, to be marvelous fingular in all their matters; fingular in knowledge, ignorant of nothing; so fingular in wisdome (in their owne opinion) as scarce they count the best councellor the prince hath, comparable with them: common dis-

courfers

* Nondum ille, spero, oblitus est, multa esse Romæ publicarum meretricum millia, & se ex illis in singulos annos, vectigalis nomine, colligere ad triginta millia ducatorum. Oblivisci non potest, se Romæ Lenocinium publicè exercere, & desædissima mercede sæde ac nequiter delitiari. Juelli Apol.

coursers of all matters, busic searchers of most secret affaires, open flatterers of great men, privie mislikers of good men, faire speakers with smiling countenances, and much courtesse openlie to all men; ready backbiters, fore nippers, and spitefull reporters privilie of good men. And beyng brought up in Italie in some free citie, as all cities be there; where a man may freely discourse against what he will, against whom he lust, against any prince, agaynst any government, yea against God himselse, and his whole religion; where he must be either * Guelphe or Gibiline; either French or Spanish; and alwayes compelled to be of some partie, of some faction, he shall never be compelled to be of any religion. And if he meddle not over much with Christes true religion, he shall have free libertie to embrace all religions, and become if he lust, at once, without any let or punishment, Jewish, Turkish, Papish, and Devillish.

A yong jentleman, thus bred up in this goodly schole, to learne the next and readie way to sinne, to have a busic head, a factious heart, a talkative tonge, fed with discoursing of factions, led to contemne God and his religion, shall come home into Englande but verie ill taught, either to be an honest man hymselfe, a quiet subject to his prince, or willyng to serve God, under the obedience of trewe doctrine, or within the order of honest living.

I know, none will be offended with this my generall writing, but onelie such, as finde themselves guiltie privately therein; who shall have good leave to be offended with me, untill they begin to amende themselves. I touch not them that be good; and I say to litle of them that be naught. And so, though not enough for their deserving, yet sufficientlie for this time, and more els-when, if occasion so require.

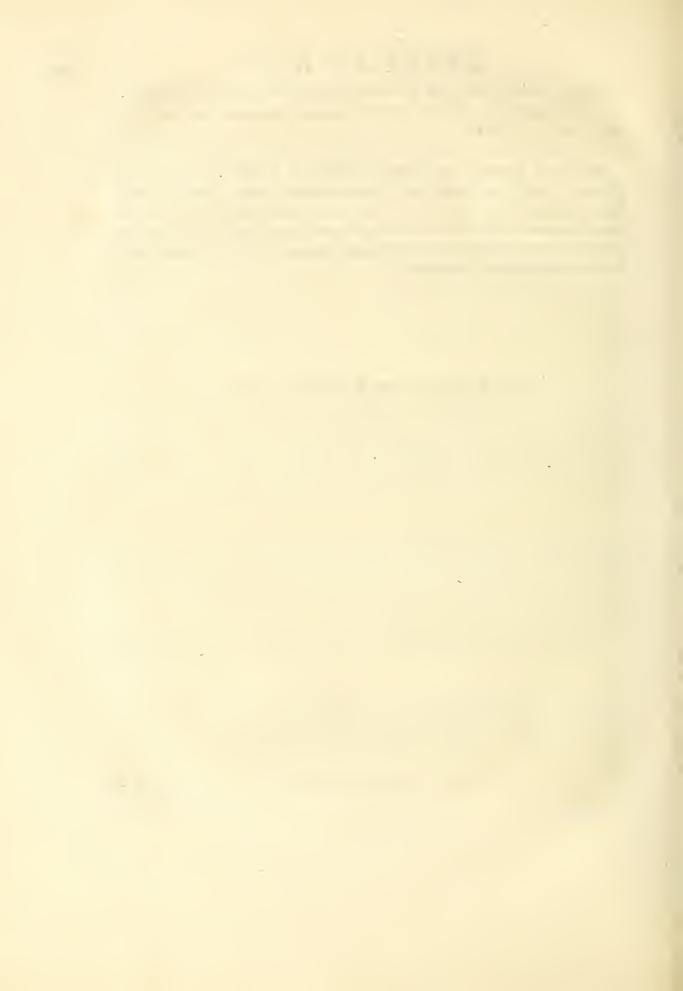

And thus farre have I wandered from my first purpose of teaching a child, yet not altogether out of the way, bicause this whole taulke hath tended to the onelie advauncement of trothe in religion, and honestie of living; and hath bene whollie within the compasse of learnyng and good manners, the special pointes belonging to the right brynging up of youth.

* Two factions in Italy, which their historians frequently mention. See Machiavel's account of their original.

But to my matter: as I began plainlie and fimplie with my yong scholer, so will I not leave him, God willing, untill I have brought him a perfite scholer out of the schole, and placed him in the universitie, to become a fitte student for logicke and rhetoricke; and so after to physicke, law, or divinitie, as aptnes of nature, advise of frendes, and Gods disposition shall lead him.

The Ende of the FIRST BOOKE.

BOOKE. SECOND

Teachyng the ready Way

To the LATIN TONGE.

FTER that your scholer, as I sayd before, shall come indeede, first to a readie perfitnes in translating, then to a ripe and skilfull choice in marking out hys fixe pointes; as,

- [1. Proprium.
- 2. Translatum.
- 3. Synonymum.
  4. Contrarium.
  5. Diversum.
- 6. Phrases.

Then take this order with him: Read dayly unto him some booke of Tullie; as the third booke of epistles chosen out by Sturmius; de Amicitia, de Senectute, or that excellent epistle, containing almost the whole first booke, ad Q. Fratrem; some comedie of Terence, or Plautus. But in Plautus, skilfull choice must be used by the master, to traine his scholer to a judgment, in cutting out perfitelie over old and unproper wordes. Cæsars Commentaries are to be read with all curiositie, wherein Jul. Cæsar. fpecially (without all exception to be made either by friend or foe) is feene the unspotted proprietie of the Latin tonge, even when it was, as the Grecians fay, in anun, that is, at the highest pitch of all perfitenesse; or some orations of T. Livius, such as be both longest and T. Livius. plainest.

Cicero.

These bookes I would have him read now a good deale at every lecture; for he shall not now use dailie translation, but only construe againe, and parfe, where ye suspect is any nede: yet let him not omitte in these bookes his former exercise, in marking diligentlie, and writing orderlie out his fix pointes: and for translating, use you yourselfe, every fecond fecond or thyrd day, to chose out some epistle ad Atticum; some notable common place out of his orations, or some other part of Tullie, by your discretion, which your scholer may not know where to find; and translate it you your selfe, into plaine naturall English; and then give it him to translate into Latin againe, allowing him good space and tyme, to do it both with diligent heede, and good advisement.

Here his witte shal be new set on worke; his judgement, for right choice, trewlie tried; his memorie, for sure reteyning, better exercised, than by learnyng any thing without the booke; and here, how much he hath profited, shall plainlie appeare. When he bringeth it translated unto you, bring you forth the place of Tullie; lay them together, compare the one with the other; commend his good choice, and right placing of wordes; shew his faultes jently, but blame them not over sharply; for of such missings, jentlie admonished of, proceedeth glad and good heed taking; of good heed taking, springeth chiefly knowledge, which after groweth to perfitnesse, if this order be diligentlie used by the scholer, and jently handled by the master. For here shall all the hard pointes of grammar, both easelie and surelie be learned up; which scholers in common scholes, by making of Latines, be groping at, with care and feare, and yet in many yeares they scarce can reach unto them.

I remember, when I was yong, in the North they went to the grammar schole little children; they came from thence great lubbers, alwayes learnyng, and little profiting; learnyng without booke, every thing, understanding within the booke little or nothing. Their whole knowledge, by learnyng without the booke, was tied only to their tonge and lips, and never ascended up to the brain and head; and therefore was sone spitte out of the mouth againe. They were as men alwayes going, but ever out of the way. And why? For their whole labour, or rather great toile without order, was even vaine idlenesse without profit. Indeede they took great paynes about learnyng, but employed small labour in learnyng; when by this way prescribed in this booke, being straight, plaine, and easie, the scholer is alwayes laboring with pleasure, and ever going right on forward with proffit. Alwayes laboring I say; for, or he have construed, parced, twise translated lated over by good advisement, marked out his fix pointes by skilfull judgement, he shall have necessary occasion, to read over every lecture a dozen tymes at the least. Which because he shall do alwayes in order, he shall do it alwayes with pleasure: "and pleasure allureth love, "love hath lust to labor, labor alwayes obtaineth his purpose;" as most trewly both Aristotle in his Rhetoricke, and Oedipus * in Sophocles Rhet. 2. In Oedip. Tyr. do teach, saying, πῶν γὰρ ἐνπονούμενον ἄλισκε, &c. And this oft read-Tyr. ing, is the verie right following of that good counsell, † which Plinie Lib. 7. ep. 92 doth give to his frende Fuscus, saying, Multum, non multa. But to my purpose againe.

When by this diligent and spedie reading over those forenamed good bookes of Tullie, Terence, Cæsar, and Livie, and by this second kinde of translating out of your English, tyme shall breede skill, and use shall bring perfection: then ye may trie, if ye will, your scholer with the third kinde of translation: although the two first wayes, by mine opinion, be not onlie sufficient of themselves, but also surer, both for the masters teaching, and scholers learning, than this third way is; which is thus:

Write you in English some letter, as it were from him to his father, or to some other frende, naturallie, according to the disposition of the child; or some tale, or fable, or plane narration, according as Aphthonius beginneth his exercises of learnyng; and let him translate it into Latin againe, abiding in soch place where no other scholer may prompt him. But yet, use you your selfe soch discretion for choice therein, as the matter may be within the compas, both for wordes and sentences, of his former learnyng and reading. And now take heede, lest your

* What passage he means in Sophocles, I know not. The following sentence Creon speaks to Oedipus, after his return from the oracle:

Αλωτον, έκφευγει δε τάμελέμενον.

There is nothing else in that excellent play that has the least relation hereunto.

† The sentence in Pliny's epissles here referred to, is this: "Tu memineris, sui cujusque generis auctores diligenter eligere. Aiunt enim, multum legendum esse, non multa."

M m

fcholer

scholer do not better in some point than you yourselfe, except ye have bene diligentlie exercised in these kindes of translating before.

I had once a profe hereof, tried by good experience, by a deare frende of myne, when I came first from Cambrige to serve the queens majestie, than ladie Elizabeth, lying at worthie Syr Antony Denys in Cheflon. John Whitney, a youg jentleman, was my bed felloe; who willyng by good nature, and provoked by mine advife, began to learn the Latin tonge after the order declared in this booke. We began after Christmas: I read unto him Tullie de Amicitia, which he did every day twife translate, out of Latin into English, and out of English into Latin againe. About St. Laurence tide after, to prove how he profitted, I did chose out Torquatus taulke de Amicitia, in the later end of the first booke de Finibus; bicause that place was the same in matter, like in wordes and phrases, nigh to the form and facion of sentences, as he had learned before in de Amicitia. I did translate it myselfe into plaine English, and gave it him to turn into Latin; which he did fo choislie, so orderlie, so without any great misse in the hardest pointes of grammar, that some, in seven yeare in grammar scholes, yea, and some in the universities to, cannot do halfe so well. yong jentleman, to my greatest grief, to the great lamentation of that whole house, and speciallie to that noble ladie, now queene Elizabeth herfelfe, departed within few days out of this world.

And if in any cause, a man may without offence to God speake somewhat ungodlie, surely it was some grief unto me, to see him hie so hastelie to God, as he did. A court, full of soch yong gentlemen, were rather a Paradise than a court upon earth. And though I had never poeticall head, to make any verse in any tonge; yet either love, or sorow, or both, did wring out of me then, certaine careful thoughtes of my good will towards him; which in my mourning for him, fell forth more by chance, than either by skill or use, into this kinde of misorderlie meter.

Myne own John Whitney, now farewell, now death doth parte us twaine: No death, but partyng for a while, whom life shall joyne agayne.

Therefore

Therefore my heart cease sighes and sobbes, cease sorowes seede to sow; Whereof no gaine, but greater grief, and burtfull care may grow. Yet when I thinke upon foch giftes of grace, as God-him lent, My losse, his gaine, I must a while, with joyfull teares lament. Yong yeares to yielde foch frute in court, where feede of vice is fowne, Is some time read, in some place seene, amongst us seldome knowne. His life he ledde, Christes lore to learne, with will to worke the same; He read to know, and knew to live, and liv'd to praise bis name. So fast a frende, so foe to few, so good to every wight, I may well wishe, but scarcelie hope, againe to have in fight. The greater joye his life to me, his death the greater payne: His life in Christ so surclie set, doth glad my harte againe: His life so good, his death better, do mingle mirth with care, My spirit with joye, my slesh with grief, so deare a frend to spare. Thus God the good, while they be good, doth take, and leave us ill, That we should mend our finfull life, in life to tary still. Thus we well left, he better reft, in heaven to take his place, That by like life, and death, at last, we may obtaine like grace. Myne owne John Whitney, agayne farewell, a while thus parte in twaine; Whom payne doth part in earth, in heaven great joye shall joyne agayne.

In this place, or I procede farder, I will now declare, by whose authoritie I am led, and by what reason I am moved, to thinke, that this way of double translation out of one tonge into another, in either onelie, or at least chiefly to be exercised, speciallie of youth, for the ready and fure obtaining of any tonge.

There be fix wayes appointed by the best learned men, for the learnyng of tonges, and encrease of eloquence; as,

- [1. Translatio linguarum.
  2. Paraphrasis.
  3. Metaphrasis.
  4. Epitome.

  - 5. Imitatio.
- 6. Declamatio.

M m 2

All

All theis be used, and commended, but in order, and for respectes, as person, habilitie, place, and tyme shall require. The five last be fitter for the mafter than the scholer; for men, than for children; for the universities, rather than for grammar scholes. Yet never the lesse, which is fittest in mine opinion for our schole, and which is either wholie to be refused, or partlie to be used for our purpose; I will, by good authoritie, and some reason I trust, particularlie of everie one, and largelie enough of them all, declare orderlie unto you.

TRANSLATIO LINGUARUM.

Translation is easie in the beginning for the scholer, and bringeth also moch learning and great judgement to the master. It is most common, and most commendable of all other exercises for youth: most common; for all your constructions in grammar scholes, be nothing els but translations: but because they be not double translations, as I do require, they bring forth but fimple and fingle commoditie; and because also they lacke the daily use of writing, which is the onely thing that breedeth deepe roote, both in the witte, for good understanding, and in the memorie, for fure keeping of all that is learned: most commendable also, and that by the judgement of all authors, which intreate of theis exercises. Tullie in the person of L. Crassius, (whom he maketh his example of eloquence and trewe judgement in learning) doth not onely praise specially, and chose this way of translation for a youg man; but doth also * discommend and refuse his owne former wonte, in exercifing Paraphrasin, & Metaphrasin. Paraphrasis is, to take some eloquent oration, or fome notable common place in Latin, and expresse it with other wordes: Metaphrasis is, to take some notable place out of a good poete, and turn the fame fense into meter, or into other wordes in profe. Crassus, or rather Tullie, doth mislike both these wayes; bicause the author, either orator or poete, had chosen out before the fittest wordes, and aptest composition for that matter; and so he, in feeking other, was driven to use the worse.

De Orat. lib. 1.

* These are Crassus's reasons against this fort of exercise: "Sed post animadverti, hoc esse " in hoc vitii, quod ea verba, quæ maxime cujusque rei propria, quæque essent ornatissima

&quot; atque optimà, occupasset aut Ennius, si ad ejus versus me exercerem, aut Gracchus, si ejus " orationem mihi forte proposuissem: ita, si iissem verbis uterer, nihil prodesse; si aliis, etiam obesse, cum minus idoneis uti consucscerem." De Orat. lib. 1.

Quintilian also preferreth translation * before all other exercises; yet Quintil. de having a lust to diffent from Tullie (as he doth in very many places, lib. x. if a man read his Rhetoricke over advisedlie; and that rather of an envious minde, than of any just cause) doth greatlie commend Paraphra. fis, + croffing spitefullie Tullies judgement in refusing the same: and so do Ramus and Talæus even at this day in France to. But fuch fingularitie in differting from the best mens judgementes, in liking onelic their owne opinions, is moch misliked of all them, that joyne with learnyng, discretion and wisdome. For he, that can neither like Aristotle in logicke and philosophie, nor Tullie in rhetoricke and eloquence, will, from these steppes, likelie enough, presume by like pride, to mount hier, to the misliking of greater matters; that is, either in religion, to have a diffentious head, or in the common wealth, to have a factious hart: as I knew one, a student in Cambrige, who, for a singularitie, began first to dissent in the scholes from Aristotle, and sone after became a perverse Arian, against Christ and all trewe religion; and studied diligentlie Origene, Basilius, and S. Hierome, onelie to gleane out of their workes, the pernicious herefies of Celfus, Eunomius, and Helvidius, whereby the church of Christ was so poysoned withall.

But to leave these hye pointes of divinitie: surelie in this quiete and harmless controversie, for the liking or misliking of Paraphrasis for a yong scholer; even as far as Tullie goeth beyond Quintilian, Ramus, and Talæus, in perfect eloquence, even so moch, by mine opinion, come they beyonde Tullie, for trewe judgement in teaching the same.

Plinius Secundus, a wife fenator of great experience, excellentlie learned himselfe, ‡ a liberall patrone of learned men, and the purest writer,

* Quintilian does not feem heartily to recommend this way of translating out of Greek into Latin; but rather gives us the opini n and judgment of the old orators about it adding, that it was much practifed by Grassias, Cicero, and Messala. His words are, "Vertere Græca in Latinum veteres nostri oratores optimum judicabant."

† He writes thus to Quintilian, being about to marry his daughter to Nonius C ler: "Partem oneris tui mihi vindico, et tanquam parens alter puellæ nostræ, confero quinquaginta "millia

Quintiliano præceptori nummos. Epist. lib. 6.

Plinius Se- writer, in myne opinion, of all his age + (I except not Suctonius, his cundus dedit two scholemasters Quintilian and Tacitus, nor yet his most excellent learned uncle, the elder Plinius) doth expresse in an epistle to his frende fuo, in ma- Fuscus, many good wayes for order in studie; but he beginneth with film, 50000 translation, and preferreth it to all the rest. And bicause * his wordes be not able, I will recite them.

ep. 311.

Utile in primis, ut multi præcipiunt, ex Græco in Latinum, & ex Latino vertere in Græcum: quo genere exercitationis, proprietas (plendorque verborum, apta structura sententiarum, figurarum copia & explicandi vis colligitur. Præterea, imitatione optimorum, facultus similia inveniendi paratur: & quæ legentem, fefellissent, transferentem fugere non possunt. Intelligentia ex boc, & judicium acquiritur.

Ye perceive how Plinie teacheth, that by this exercise of double translating, is learned easely, fensiblie, by little and little, not onelie all the hard congruities of grammar, the choice of aptest wordes, the right framing of wordes and fentences, comlines of figures, and formes fitte for everie matter, and proper for everie tonge: but that which is greater also, in marking dayly, and following diligentlie thus the steppes

" millia nummûm; plus collaturus, nifi à verecundia tuâ fola mediocritate munufculi, im-" petrari posse confiderem, ne recusares." Epist. lib. 6.

+ Many have condemned the whole age wherein Pliny wrote. "Optaret alius, ut orato-46 rem Plinium saperem, quod hujus et maturitas et disciplina laudatur. Ego contra totum " illud aspernari me dicam Plinii seculum." Angelus Politianus, epist. 1.

* There is so great a difference in this citation out of Pliny from the printed copies, that I'm satisfied Mr. Ascham (as I have observ'd before) trusted to his memory only, without ever looking into his author. This will appear plain enough to any one, that shall compare this paffage, as it stands here, with Pliny's text, which I shall give the reader out of Boxhornius's edition, printed by Elzevir.

" Utile imprimis, & multi præcipiunt, vel ex Græco in Latinum, vel ex Latino vertere in Gracum: quo genere exercitationis proprietas splendorque verborum, copia figurarum, " vis explicandi; præterea imitatione optimorum fimilia inveniendi facultas paratur: fimul " q æ legentem fesellissent, transferentem sugere non possunt. Intell gentia ex hoc & judi-

" cium acquiritur." Lib. 7.

Now left any shou'd worder at this strange inaccuracy (for so it seems to be) in a person of Mr. Ajcham's learning and judgment; I shall transcribe what Gafaubon, in his notes on Theo-critus, has remark'd on the like occasion. "Veterum grammaticorum mos oft in proferendis 66 auctorum locis, id unicum, cujus gratia eos laudant, fpectare, neglecta interim fententia. " Ex eo est, quòd multa sæpè apud eos aliter scripta inveniuntur, quàm in ipsis auctoribus of the best authors, like invention of argumentes, like order in disposition, like utterance in elocution, is easilie gathered up; whereby your scholer shall be brought not onlie to like eloquence, but also, to all trewe understanding, and right judgement, both for writing and speaking.

" habentur."

And where Dionysius Halicarnasseus hath written two excellent bookes, the * one de Delectu optimorum Verborum, (the which, I feare, is lost) the other, of the right framing of wordes and sentences, which doth remaine yet in Greeke, to the great profit of all them that trewlie studie for eloquence: yet this waie of double translating, shall bring the whole proffet of both these bookes to a diligent scholer, and that easelie and pleasantlie, both for sitte choice of wordes, and apt composition of sentences.

And by theis authorities and reasons, am I moved to thinke this waie of double translating, either onelie, or chieflie, to be fittest for the speedy and persit attayning of any tonge. And for speedy atteyning, I durst venture a good wager, if a scholer, in whom is aptnes, love, diligence, and constancie, would but translate, after this sorte, one little booke in Tullie, (as de Senestute, with two epistles, the first ad 2. fratrem, the other ad Lentulum, the last save one in the first booke) that scholer, I say, should come to a better knowledge in the Latin tonge, than the most part do, that spend source or sive yeares in tossing all the rules of grammar in common scholes. Indeede this one booke, with these two epistles, is not sufficient to affour de all Latin wordes, (which is not necessary for a young scholer to know) but it is able to surnishe him sully, for all pointes of grammar, with the right placing, ordering, and use of wordes, in all kinde of matter. And why not? For it is read, that Dion Pruæssis, that wise philosopher, and excellent oratour * of all his tyme, did come to the great learning and utterance that was in him, by reading and following onlie two bookes, Phædon Platonis, and Demosthenes most notable oration, ωερὶ Παραπρεσβείας.

* Dionysius, in the beginning of his excellent treatise περὶ Συυθέσεως δνομάτων, acquaints young Rusus Melitius, he designed him another present the year following, on his next enfuing birth-day; which should be a treatise, concerning the right choice of words. But whether he ever performed what he there promises, is uncertain. Ένων δὲ ἐγγένηθαί μοι σχολης τως περὶ της Ἐκλογης τῶν δυομάτων ἐτέραν ἐξοισω σοι γραφην, ἵνα τον Λεκτικον τόπον τελείως ἐξειργασμένον ἔχης. ἐκείνην μὲν ἔν την πραγμαθείαν εἰς νέωθα πάλιν ώραις ταῖς αὐταῖς προσδίχε.

And a better and nearer example herein may be, our most noble queen Elizabeth, who never toke yet Greeke nor Latin grammar in her hand, after the first declining of a nowne and a verbe; but only by this double translating of Demoslbenes and Isocrates dailie, without misfing every forenone, and likewise some part of Tullie every afternone, for the space of a yeare or two, hath atteyned to soch a perfit understanding in both the tonges, and to fuch a readie utterance of the Latin, and that with fuch a judgement, + as they be fewe in nomber in both the universities, or els where in Englande, that be, in both tonges, comparable with her majestic. And to conclude in a short rowme the commodities of double translation; furelie the minde by dailie marking, first, the cause and matter; then the wordes and phrases; next, the order and composition; after, the reason and argumentes; then the formes and figures of both the tonges; lastlie, the measure and compas of everie fentence, must needes, by little and little, draw unto it the like shape of eloquence, as the author doth use, which is read. And thus much for double translation.

PARAPHRASIS.

Paraphrasis, the second point, is not onelie ‡ to expresse at large with De Instit. Orat. lib. x. more wordes, but to strive and contend (as Quintilian sayth) to translate the best Latin authors into other Latin wordes, as many, or thereaboute.

This waie of exercise || was used first by C. Carbo, and taken up for a while by L. Crassus, but some after, upon due prose thereof, rejected justile

* He lived in Trajan's time, and in great favour and esteem with the Emperor.

‡ "Neque ego Παράφρασιν esse interpretationem tantum volo, sed circa eosdem sensus certamen atque æmulationem." Quintil.

"In quotidianis autem cogitationibus equidem mihi adolescentulus proponere solebam

+ See the character Sir Henry Savil gives of this incomparable queen, in his oration printed at the end of this book.

&quot;In quotidianis autem cogitationibus equidem mihi adolescentulus proponere solebam illam exercitationem maximè, qua C. Carbonem nostrum illum inimicum solitum esse uti sciebam, justlie by Crassus and Cicero; yet allowed, and made sterling agayne, by M. Quintilian: nevertheless shortlie after, by better assaye, disallowed of his owne scholer, Plinius Secundus, who termeth it rightlie thus, * audax contentio. It is a bold comparison indeede, to think to say better, than that is best. Such turning of the best into worse, is much like the turning of good wine, out of a faire sweete slagon of silver, into a soule mustie bottle of ledder; or to turne pure gold and silver into soule brasse and copper.

Soch kinde of Paraphrasis, in turning, chopping, and changing the best to worse, either in the mynte or scholes, (though M. Brokk, and Quintilian both say the contrary) is moch misliked of the best and wisest men. I can better allow an other kinde of Paraphrasis, to turne rude and barbarous, into proper and eloquent: which nevertheless is an exercise not sitte for a scholer, but for a persite master; who in plentic hath good choice, in copie hath right judgement, and grounded skill; as did appeare to be in Sebastian Castalio, in translating Kemppes booke de Imitando Christo.

But to follow Quintilianus advise for Paraphrasis, were even to take paine, to seeke the worse and sowler way, when the plaine and fairer is occupied before your eyes.

The olde and best authors that ever wrote, were content if occasion required to speake twise of one matter, not to change the wordes, but  $in \tau \omega_s$ , that is, worde for worde to expresse it againe. For they thought that a matter, well expressed with fitte wordes and apt composition, was not to be altered, but liking it well their selves, they thought it would also be well allowed of others.

&quot;fciebam, ut aut versibus propositis quàm maxime gravibus, aut oratione aliqua lecta ad eum finem, quem memoria possem comprehendere, eam rem ipsam, quam legissem, verbis aliis quam maxime possem lectis pronunciarem." Cic. de Orat, lib. 1.

&quot;Licebit interdum & notissima eligere, & certare cum electis. Audax hæc, non tamen improba, quia secreta, contentio; quanquam multos videmus ejusmodi certamina sibis cum multa laude sumpsisse, quosque subsequi satis habebant, dum non desperant, antècessisse." Pliny, in the same epistle.

A scholemaster, soch a one as I require, knoweth that I say trewe.

Homer. Iliado. 2. & 9. He readeth in Homer, almost in everie booke, and speciallie in secundo, ad. 2. & 9. He nono Iliados, not onlie some verses, but whole leaves, not to be altered with new, but to be uttered with the old selfe same wordes. He knoweth that Xenophon, writing twise of Agesilaus, once in his life, againe in the historie of the Greekes, in one matter, kepeth alwayes the selfe same wordes. He doth the like, speaking of Socrates, both in the beginning of his apologie, and in the last ende of 'Απομνημονευμάτων.

Demosthenes. Demosthenes also, in the fourth Philippica, doth borow his owne wordes, uttered before in his oration de Chersoneso. He doth the like, and that more at large, in his orations against Andration, and Timocrates.

Cicero. Virgil. In Latin also, Cicero in some places, and Virgil in mo, do repeate one matter with the selfe same wordes. Thies excellent authors did thus, not for lacke of wordes, but by judgement and skill, whatsoever others, more curious, and lesse skilfull, do thinke, write, and do.

Paraphrasis neverthelesse hath good place in learning, but not, by myne opinion, for any scholer; but is onelie to be lest to a persite master, either to expound openlie a good author withall, or to compare privatelie, for his owne exercise, how some notable place of an excellent author may be uttered with other sitte wordes. But if ye alter also the composition, some, and order, then that is not Paraphrasis, but Imitatio, as I will sullie declare in sitter place.

The scholer shall winne nothing by Paraphrasis, but onelie, if we may believe Tullie, to choose worse wordes, to place them out of order, to seare overmoch the judgement of the master, to mislike overmoch the hardness of learning; and by use to gather up faultes, which hardlie will be left of againe.

The master in teaching it, shall rather encrease hys owne labour, than his scholers proffet. For when the scholer shall bring unto his master a piece of Tullie, or Cæsar, turned into other Latin, then must the master master come to Quintilianus goodlie lesson de Emendatione; "which (as De Instit. he sayeth) is * the most profitable part of teaching;" but not in Orat. lib. x. myne opinion, and namelie for youth in grammer scholes. For the master nowetaketh double pains; first, to marke what is amisse; againe, to invent what may be sayd better. And here perchance, a verie good master may easilie both deceive himselfe, and lead his scholer into error.

It requireth greater learning, and deeper judgement, than is to be hoped for at any scholemasters hand; that is, to be able alwaies learnedlie, and persitelie,

Mutare, † quod ineptum est:
Transmutare, quod perversum est:
Replere, quod deest:
Detrabere, quod obest:
Expungere, quod inane est.

And that which requireth more skill, and deeper consideration,

Premere tumentia:
Extollere humilia:
Astringere luxurantia:
Componere dissoluta.

The master may here onlie stumble, and perchance faull in teaching, to the marring and mayming of the scholer in learnyng; when it is a matter of moch readyng, of great learnyng, and tried judgement, to make trewe difference betwixt

<sup>* &</sup>quot; Sequitur emendatio, pars studiorum longe utilissima. Neque enim sine causa creditume est, Stilum non minus agere, cum delet." Quint.

† These directions for emendation are taken from Quintilian. "Hujus autem operis est, adjicere, detrahere, mutare. Sed facilius in his simpliciusque judicium, quæ replenda, vel dejicienda sunt: premere verò tumentia, humilia extollere, luxuriantia astringere, inordinata digerere, soluta componere, exultantia coercere, duplicis operæ."

THE WORKS OF

Sublime, & tumidum:
Grande, & immodicum:
Decorum, & ineptum:
Perfectum, & nimium.

Some men of our time counted perfite masters of eloquence *, in their owne opinion the best, in other mens judgementes very good; (as Omphalius everie where, Sadoletus in many places; yea also my friende Osciius, namelie in his epistle to the queene, and in his whole booke de Justicia) have so over reached themselves in making trewe difference in the poyntes afore rehearsed, as though they had been brought up + in some schole in Asia, to learne to decline, rather than in Athens with Plato, Aristotle, and Demosthenes, (from whence Tullie setched his eloquence) to understand, what in everie matter to be spoken, or written on, is, in verie deede, Nimium, Satis, Parum; that is for to say, to all considerations, Decorum: which as it is the hardest point in all learnyng, so is it the fairest and onlie marke that scholers, in all their studie, must alwayes shote at, if they purpose an other day, to be either sounde in religion, or wise and discrete in any vocation of the common wealth.

Agayne, in the lowest degree, it is no low point of learning and judgement, for a scholemaster to make trewe difference betwixt.

Humile, & depressum:
Lene, & remissum:
Siccum, & aridum:
Exile, & macrum:
Inaffectatum, & neglectum.

Familiaris noster M. Bucculejus, homo neque meo judicio stultus, et suo valde saii piens." Cicero de Orat. lib. 1.

† What fort of oratory the Asiatics generally affected, is easily seen in Tully. A passage or two to this purpose, I shall cite out of his book de claris Orat. "Genera autem Asiaticæ dictionis, duo sunt: unum sententiosum, & argutum, sententiis non tam gravibus, & se-veris, quàm concinnis & venustis. Aliud autem genus est, non tam sententiis frequentatum, quàm verbis volucre, atque incitatum; quali est nunc Asia tota, nec siumine solumorationis, sed etiam exornato, & faceto genere verborum." And in the same book, Hinc Asiatici oratores non contemnendi quidem nec celeritate, nec copia, sed parum pressi, <sup>* &</sup>amp; nimis redundantes, Rhodii faniores, & Atticorum fimiliores."

In these poyntes, some loving Melantthon well, as he was well worthie, but yet not considering well, nor wiselie, how he of nature, and all his life and studie by judgement, was whollie spent in Genere disciplinabili; that is, in teaching, reading, and expounding plainlie and aptlie schole matters; and therefore imployed thereunto a fitte, sensible, and caulme kinde of speaking and writing: some, I say, with very well liking, but not with verie well weying Melantthones doinges, do frame themselves a style, cold, leane, and weake, though the matter be never so warme and earnest; not moch unlike unto one, that had a pleasure, in a rough, raynie, winter day, to clothe himselse with nothing els * but a demie buckram cassock, plaine without plaites, and single without lyning; which will neither beare of winde nor wether, nor yet kepe out the sunne in any hote day.

Some suppose, and that by good reason, that Melanethon himselfe Paraphrasis came to this low kinde of writyng, by using over moch Paraphrasis in in use of reading. For studying therebie to make everie thing straight and easie, hath hurt in smothing and playning all things to much, never leaveth, whiles the Melanetsense it selfe be left both lowse and leasie. And some of those Parahons stile in phrases of Melanethon be set out in printe, as, Pro Archia Poeta, & Markon Marcollo: but a scholer, by myne opinion, is better occupied in playing or sleping, than in spending tyme, not onlie vainlie, but also harmefullie, in soch a kinde of exercise.

If a master would have a persitte example to solow, how in Genere sublimi, to avoide Nimium; or in Mediocri, to atteyne Satis; or in Humili, to eschew Parum; let him read diligently for the first, secundam Philippicam; for the meane, de Natura Deorum; and for the lowest, Particiones. Or if in another tonge ye looke for like example, in like persection, for all those three degrees, read Pro Ctesiphonte, ad Leptinem, & Demosthe-Contra Olympiodorum; and what witte, arte, and diligence is hable to ness. affourde, ye shall plainlie see.

For our tyme, the odde man to performe all three perfitlie, whatfoever he doth, and to know the way to do them skilfullie, whenso-ever he list, is, in my poore opinion, Joannes Sturmius. He also councelleth all scholers to be ware of Paraphrasis, except it be from worse to better; from rude and barbarous, to proper and pure Latin; and yet no man to exercise that neyther, except soch one, as is alreadie furnished with plentie of learning, and grounded with stedsast judgement before.

• Horace, " Campestre nivalibus auris."

10annes

Sturmius.

All theis faultes, that thus manie wife men do finde with the exercife of Paraphrasis, in turning the best Latin into other, as good as they can; that is, ye may be sure, into a great deale worse, than it was, both in right choise for proprietie, and trewe placing for good order, are committed also commonlie in all common scholes by the scholemasters, in tossing and trobling yong wittes (as I sayd * in the beginning) with that butcherlie seare in making of Latins.

Therefore, in place of Latins for young scholers, and of Paraphrasis for the masters, I would have double translation specially used. For in double translating a perfite piece of Tullie, or Cæfar, neyther the scholer in learning, nor the master in teaching can erre. A true tochstone, a sure mete-wand lieth before both their eyes. For all right congruity, propriety of wordes, order in fentences; the right imitation to invent good matter, to dispose it in good order, to confirme it with good reason, to expresse any purpose sitlie and orderlie, is learned thus both eafilie and perfitlie. Yea, to misse sometyme in this kinde of translation, bringeth more proffet than to hit right either in Paraphrasis, or making of Latins. For though ye fay well in a Latin making, or in a Paraphrasis, yet you being but in doute, and uncertayne, whether ye faie well, or no, ye gather and lay up in memorie no fure frute of learning thereby; but if ye fault in translation, ye are easelie taught, how perfitlie to amende it, and fo well warned, how after to eschew all foch faultes againe.

Paraphrasis therefore, by myne opinion, is not meete for grammar scholes; nor yet verie sitte for yong men in the universitie, untill studie and tyme have bred in them persite learning, and stedsast judgement.

* See page 199.

There

There is a kinde of Paraphrafis, which may be used without all hurt, to moch profit; but it serveth onely the Greeke, and not the Latin, nor no other tonge; as to alter linguam Ionicam, aut Doricam, into meram Atticam. A notable example there is left unto us by a notable learned man, Dionyfius Halicarnasseus; who, * in his booke περί Συνθέσεως 'Ονομάτων, doth translate the goodlie storie of Candaules, and Gyges, in the first booke of Herodotus, out of Ionica lingua, into Atticam. Read the place, and ye shall take both pleasure and proffet in conference of it. A man that is exercised in reading Thucydides, Xenophon, Plato, and Demosthenes, in using to turne like places of Herodotus, after like forte. fhould shortlie come to soch a knowledge in understanding, speaking, and writing the Greeke tonge, as fewe or none have yet atteyned in Englande. The like exercise out of Dorica lingua may be also used, if a man take +that litle booke of Plato, Timæus Locrus, de Anima mundi, & Natura, which is written Dorice, and turne it into foch Greeke as Plato useth in other workes. The booke is but two leaves, and the labor would be but two weekes; but furelie the proffet, for easie understanding, and trewe writing the Greeke tonge, would countervaile wyth the toile that fome men take in otherwise coldlie reading that tonge two yeares.

And yet for the Latin tonge, and for the exercise of Paraphrasis in those places of Latin, that cannot be bettered, if some yong man, excellent of witte, couragious in will, lustie of nature, and desirous to contend even with the best Latin, to better it, if he can; surelie I commend his forwardnesse: and for his better instruction therein, I will set before him as notable an example of Paraphrasis, as is in record of learnyng. Cicero himselfe doth contend, in two sondrie places, to expresse one matter with divers wordes; and that is Paraphrasis, saith Quintilian. The matter, I suppose, is taken out of Panætius; and therefore being translated out of Greeke at divers times, is uttered for his purpose, with divers wordes and formes; which kinde of exercise, for persite learned men, is verie profitable.

* I have here given the true title of Dionysius's book. 'Twas at first printed, περὶ Συνθάξεω, αμαςτήμαθι μνημονικώ. The story of Candaules and Gyges is pag. 24. of the London edition of Dionysius.

† One would imagine from these words, Mr. Ascham believed Plato to be the author of that treatise. The title of it is, Τιμαίω τῷ Λοκςῷ πεςὶ ψυχᾶς Κόσμω, ἡ Φύσιος.

De Finibus, Lib. sec.

Homines enim, * eisi aliis multis, tamen boc uno à bestiis plurimum disserunt, quòd rationem babeant à natura datam, mentemque & acrem & vigentem, celerrimeque multa simul agitantem, &, ut ita dicam, sagacem: quæ & causas rerum, & consecutiones videat, & similitudines transferat, & disjuncta conjungat, & cum præsentibus sutura copulet, omnemque complectatur vitæ consequentis statum. Eademque ratio secit hominem hominum appetentem, cumque his natura, & sermone, & usu congruentem; ut prosectus à caritate domesticorum, ac suorum, serpat longius, & se implicet primum civium, deinde omnium mortalium societate: atque, ut ad Archytam scripsit Plato, non sibi se soli natum meminerit, sed patriæ, sed suis, ut perexigua pars ipsi relinquatur. Et quoniam eadem natura cupiditatem ingenuit homini veri inveniendi, quod facillime apparet, cum vacui curis, etiam quid in cælo stat, scire avemus: &c.

De Officiis, Lib. pri.

Homo autem, quod rationis est particeps, per quam consequentia cernit, causas rerum videt, earumque progressus, & quasi antecessiones non ignorat, similitudines comparat, & rebus præsentibus adjungit, atque annestit suturas: facile totius vitæ cursum videt, ad eamque degendam præparat res necessarias.

Eademque natura vi rationis bominem conciliat homini, & ad orationis, & ad vitæ societatem: ingeneratque inprimis præcipuum quendam amorem in eos, qui procreati sunt; impellitque, ut hominum cætus, & celebrationes esse, & à se obiri velit; ob easque causas studeat parare ea, quæ suppeditent & ad cultum, & ad vistum; nec sibi soli, sed conjugi, liberis, cæterisque, quos charos habeat, tuerique debeat. Quæ cura exsuscitat etiam animos, & majores ad rem gerendam facit. Inprimisque hominis est propria veri inquistio, atque investigatio. Itaque cùm sumus necessariis negotiis, curisque vacui, tum avemus aliquid videre, audire, addiscere; cognitionemque rerum aut occultarum, aut admirabilium, ad beatè vivendum necessariam ducimus.

The conference of these two places, conteyning so excellent a piece of learning, as this is, expressed by so worthy a witte, as Tullies was,

must

* These citations, which were very imperfect before, are now carefully corrected from the printed editions of Tully. And here I can't but observe, that this book has undergone the common sate of all orphans, and suffered very much for its parent's untimely death.

must needes bring great pleasure and proffit to him, that maketh trewe counte of learnyng and honesty. But if we had the Greek author, the first paterne of all, and thereby to see how Tullies witte did worke at diverse times; how, out of one excellent image might be framed two other, one in face and favour, but somewhat differing in forme, sigure, and colour; surely such a piece of workemanship, compared with the paterne itselfe, would better please the eies of honest, wise, and learned myndes, than two of the fairest Venusses that ever Apelles made.

And thus moch for all kinde of Paraphrasis, fitte or unfitte, for scholers or other, as I am led to thinke, not onlye by myne owne experience, but chiefly by the authoritie and judgement of those, whom I myselfe would gladlyest folow, and do counsell all myne to do the same; not contendyng with any other, that will otherwise either thinke, or do.

METAPHRASIS.

This kinde of exercise is all one with Paraphrasis, save it is out of verse, either into prose, or into some other kinde of meter; or else out of prose into verse, which was Socrates exercise and pastime (as Plato reporteth) when he was * in prison, to translate Æsopes Fabules into verse. Plato in Phæ-Quintilian doth greatlie praise † also this exercise: but bicause Tullie done. doth disalow it in yong men, by myne opinion, it were not well to use it in grammer scholes, even for the selfe same causes that be recited against Paraphrasis. And therefore, for the use, and misuse of it, the same is to be thought that is spoken of Paraphrasis before. This was Sulpitius exercise; and he gathering up thereby a poeticall kinde of talke.

00

* What he alludes to here, is in the beginning of Plato's Phædo. Περὶ γάρ τοι τῶν ποιημάτων ὧν ωεποίηκας, ἐνθείνας τὰς Τὰ Αἰσώπε λόγες, κὰ τὸ εἰς τον Απόλλω ωροοίμιον, κὰ ἄλλοι τινές με ἤρονθο ἦδη, ἀτὰρ κὰ Εὐηνὸς ωρώην, ὅ, τι ωστὰ διανοηθεὶς, ἐπειδὴ δεῦρο ἦλθες, ἐποιήσας αὐτὰ, πρότερον ἐδὲν ωώποτε ωοιήσας.

† &quot;Sed & illa ex Latinis conversio, multum & ipsa contulerit. Ac de carminibus quidem "neminem credo dubitare, quo solo genere exercitationis dicitur usus esse Sulpicius. Nam "& sublimis spiritus attollere orationem potest; & verba poeticà libertate audaciora, præsumunt eandem propriè dicendi facultatem. Sed & ipsis sententiis adjicere licet oratorium robur, & omissa supplere, et essus substringere." Quint. lib. 10.

talke, is justlie named of Cicero, † grandis & tragicus orator: which I think is spoken, not for his praise, but for other mens warning, to eschew the like faulte. Yet nevertheless, if our scholemaster, for his owne instruction, be desirous to see a persit example hereof, I will recite one, which I thinke, no man is so bold to say, that he can amend it; and that is Chrises the priestes oration to the Greekes, in the beginning of Homers Ilias, turned excellentlie into prose by Socrates himselse, and that advised and purposelie for others to solow. And therefore he calleth this exercise * in the same place, Miphous, that is, Imitatio; which is most trew: but in this booke, for teachyng sake, I will name it Metaphrasis, reteining the word that all teachers in this case do use.

'Ο γὰρ ἦλθε Θοὰς ἐπὶ νῆας 'Αχαιῶν,
Λυσόμενός τε θύγα]ρα, Φέρων τ' ἀπερείσι ἄποινα,
Στέμμα τ' ἔχων ἐν χερσὶν ἐκηβόλε 'Απόλλωνος, Χρυσέω ἀνὰ σκήπ]ρω ' κὰ ἐλίσσε]ο πάν]ας 'Αχαιούς,
'Ατρείδα δὲ μάλις α, δύω κοσμήτορε λαῶν.

'Ατρεῖδαί τε, κὰ ἄλλοι ἐϋκνήμιδες 'Αχαιοὶ, 'Υμῖν μὲν θεὸι δοῖεν, 'Ολύμπια δώματ' ἔχοντες, 'Εππέρσαι Πριάμοιο πόλιν, εὖ δ' οἴκαδ' ίκέσθαι. Παΐδα δέ μοι λύσαιτε Φίλην, τὰ δ' ἄποινα δέχεσθε, 'Αζόμενοι Διὸς ὑιὸν, ἐκήβολον 'Απόλλωνα.

"Ενθ' ἄλλοι μεν πάνζες επευφήμησαν 'Αχαιόι, Αἰδεῖσθαί θ' ἱερῆα, κ) ἀγλαὰ δέχθαι ἄποινα. 'Αλλ' ἐκ 'Ατρείδη 'Αγαμέμνονι ἡνδανε θυμῶ, 'Αλλὰ κακῶς ἀφίει, κρατερὸν δ' ἐπὶ μῦθον ἔτελλε.

† "Fuit enim Sulpicius vel maximè omnium, quos quidem audiverim, grandis, &, ut ita dicam, tragicus orator. Vox cùm magna, tum suavis & splendida: gestus & motus cor"poris ita venustus, ut tamen ad sorum, non ad scenam institutus videretur. Incitata &
"volubilis, nec ea redundans tamen, nec circumstuens oratio." Cic. de claris Orat. fag. 181.

From this character here given by Tully, Sulpicius seems to be called grandis & trugicus, rather from his theatrical management of himself in his delivery, than from his stile and method of expression.

* Οὐκεν τό γε όμοιεν έαυτὸν ἄλλω, ἢ κατὰ φωνὴν, ἢ καlὰ σχῆμα, μιμεῖσθαί ἐςιν ἐκεῖνον ῷ ἄν τις όμοιοῖ; Τί μήν; Ἐν δὴ τῷ τοιέτω (ὡς ἔοικεν) ἕτος τε κὸ οἱ ἄλλοι ωσιητὰι διὰ μιμήσεως τὴν διήγησιν ωσιενται. Πάνυ μὲν ἔν. Εἰ δέ γε μηδαμε ἑαυτὸν ἀποκρύπλοιλο ὁ ωσιητης, ωᾶσα ᾶν αὐτῷ ἄνευ μιμήσεως ἡ ωσίησίς τε κς ἡ διηγησις γεγουυῖα είη. Plata de Rep. lib. 3.

ROGER ASCHAM.

Μή σε, γέρον, κοίλησιν έγω παρα νηυσί κιχείω, Ή νῦν δηθυνοντ, ἢ ὕς ερον αῦτις ἰόν]α, Μὴ νύ τοι ἐ χραίσμη σκηπ]ρον, ἢ ς εμμα Θεοῖο. Τὴν δ' ἐγω ἐ λύσω, ϖρίν μιν ἢ γῆρας ἔπεισιν, Ἡμετέρω ἐνὶ οἴκω, ἐν Ἅργεϊ τηλόθι ϖάτρης Ἱς ὸν ἐποιχομενην, ἢ ἐμὸν λέχ, ἀν]ιόωσαν. ᾿Αλλ ἴθι, μὴ μ' ἐρέθιζε, σαώτερ, ὡς κε νέηαι.

'Ως ἔφατ', ἔδδεισεν δ' δ γέρων, ης ἐπείθεῖο μύθω. Βῆ δ' ἀκέων παρὰ Θίνα πολυΦλόισβοιο Θαλάσσης. Πολλὰ δ' ἔπειτ' ἀπάνευθε κ.ών ήρᾶθ' δ γεραιὸς ᾿Απόλλωνι ἀνακῖι, τὸν ἡὕκομ© τέκε Λητώ.

Κλῦθί μευ, 'Αργυρότοξ', ος Χρύσην αμφιβέβηκας, Κίλλαν τε ζαθέην, Τενέδοιό τε ἴφι ανάσσεις, Σμινθεῦ· εἴπο]έ τοι χαρίεντ' ἐπὶ νηὸν ἔρεψα, 'Η εἰ δή ωστέ τοι κατα ωίονα μηρί ἔκηα Ταύρων, ἠδ' αἰγῶν, τόδε μοι κρήηνον ἔελδωρ' Τίσειαν Δαναοὶ ἐμα δάκρυα σοῖσι βέλεσσιν.

Socrates, in Plato's third book de Republica, saith thus: Φράσω δὲ ἄνευ μέτρε· ε γὰρ εἰμὶ ωοιητικός.

ΤΗλθεν ὁ Χρύσης τῆς τε θυγατρὸς λύτρα Φέρων, ἢ ικέτης τῶν ἀχαιῶν, μάλις α δὲ τῶν βασιλέων ἢ εὐχερο ἐκείνοις μὲν τὰς θεὰς δοῦναι ἐλόντας τὴν Τρόιαν, αὐτᾶς δὲ σωθῆναι, τὴν δὲ θυγατέρα οἱ αὐτῷ λῦσαι, δεξαμένας ἄποινα, κὴ τὸν θεὸν αἰδεσθένρας. Τοιαῦτα δὲ εἰπόνρω αὐτᾶ, οἱ μὲν ἄλλοι ἐσέδονρο κὴ συνήνουν ὁ δὲ ἀγαμέμνων ἡγρίαινεν, ἐντελλόμενω νῦν τε ἀπιέναι, κὴ αῦθις μὴ ἐλθεῖν, μὴ αὐτῷ τό, τε σκῆπτρον, κὴ τὰ τᾶ θεᾶ ξέμματα ἐκ ἐπαρκέσοι. πρὶν δὲ λυθῆναι αὐτᾶ τὸν θυγαρέρα, ἐν Ἄργει ἔΦη γηράσειν μερὰ ἔ. ἀπιέναι δὲ εκέλευε, κὴ μὴ ἐρεθίζειν, ἴνα σῶς οἴκαδε ἔλθοι. Ὁ δὲ πρεσδύτης ἀκάσας, ἔδεισε τε κὴ ἀπήει σιγῆ. ἀποχωρήσας δ' ἐκ τᾶ ξρατοπέδα, πολλὰ τῷ ἀπόλλωνι εὐχετο, τάς τε ἐπωνυμίας τᾶ θεᾶ ἀνακαλῶν, κὴ ὑπομιμνήσκων κὴ ἀπαιρῶν, εἴτι πώπορε ἡ εν ναῶν οἰκοδομήσεσιν, ἡ ἐν ἱερῶν θυσιαῖς κεχαρισμένον δωρήσαιτο, ὧν δὴ χάριν κατεύχερο τίσαι τὰς ἀχαιὰς τὰ ἃ δάκρυα τοῖς ἐκείνε βέλεσι.

To compare * Homer and Plate together, two wonders of nature and arte, for witte and eloquence, is most pleasant and profitable for a man

* Plato himself, (if we may believe Longinus) as well as the rest of the Grecian writers, owes not a little to Homer, their common master; tho' he was so ungrateful, as to forbid him man of ripe judgement. Platos turning of Homer in this place doth not ride aloft in poetical termes, but goeth low and foft on foote, as prose and pedestris oratio should do. If Sulpitius had had * Platos consideration in right using this exercise, he had not deserved the name of tragicus orator; who should rather have studied to expresse vim Demosshenis, than furorem poetæ, how good soever he was, whom he did solow.

O o 2

And therefore would I have our scholemaster wey well together Homer and Plato, and marke diligentlie these foure pointes; "what is "kept, what is added, what is left out, what is changed, either in choise of wordes, or forme of sentences." Which soure pointes be the right tooles, to handle like a workeman this kinde of worke; as our scholer shall better understand, when he hath bene a good while in the universitie: to which tyme and place, I chiefly remitte this kinde of exercise.

And bicause I ever thought examples to be the best kinde of teaching, I will recite a golden sentence out of that poete, which is next unto Homer, not only in tyme, but also in worthiness; which hath been a paterne for many worthie wittes to follow by this kind of Metaphra-sis. But I will content myselfe with source workemen, two in Greke, and two in Latin, soch as, in both the tonges, wifer and worthier cannot be looked for. Surelie no stone set in gold by most cunning workemen, is in deed, if right counte be made, more worthie the looking on, his Republick. Οὐ γὰρ μόνο Ἡρόδοτο Ὁμηρικώταλος ἐγένελο. Στησίχορος ἔτι πρότερον, ὅ, τε ἀρχίλοχο. πάνλων δὲ τέτων μάλιςα ὁ Πλάτων ἀπὸ τὰ Ὁμηρικὰ ἐκείνε νάμαλος εἰς αὐτὸν μυρίας ὅσας παραλροπὰς ἀποχετευσάμενο. Sett. 13.

* Altho' in this inflance, and mostly elsewhere, Plato flows along in a foft and gentle stream, χευμαδί τινι αψοφητὶ ρέων, as Longinus speaks; yet he has his sublimities too, and bold flights. And some passages there are to be found in his writings, not entirely clear of the same censure, which is by Tully cast upon Sulpicius. And this perhaps might be occasioned likewise by his passionate affection for the muses, and study of poetry in his youthful days. Who can read this fentence, and not be offended, which Longinus cites out of his ninth book de Republica? Καὶ ένεκα τῆς τέτων ωλεονεξίας λακλίζοντες, κ κυρίτοντες αλλήλες σιδηροίς κίρασι, κὶ ὁπλαῖς, ἀποκλινόμοι δι ἀπληςίαν. For such harsh and metaphorical expressions as these, and for his poetical and figurative schemes, (σχήμασί τε ωμητικοίς ἐσχάτην ωροσβάλλεσιν ἀηδίαν) Piato is somewhat severely handled by Dionysius, in his letter to Cn. Fompey.

than this golden fentence, diverslie wrought upon by soch foure excellent masters.

Hesiodus, "Epy. n) Huep. á.

Οὖτος μὲν ωανάρις , δς αὐτὸς ωάνθα νοήσει, Φρασσάμεν , τά κ' ἔπείθα κ) ἐς τέλ ἦσιν ἀμείνω. 'Εσθλὸς δ' αὖ κἀκεῖν , ὸς εὖ εἰπόνθι ωίθηθαι. 'Ός δε κε μήτ' αὐτὸς νοέη, μήτ' ἄλλε ἀκέων 'Εν θυμῷ βάλληθαι, ὁ δ' αὖτ' ἀχρήϊ ἀνήρ.

Thus rudelie turned into base English:

That man in wifedome passeth all,

To know the best, who hath a head:

And meetelie wise eeke counted shall,

Who yieldes himselfe to wise mens read.

Who hath no witte, nor none will heare,

Amonge all fooles the bell may beare.

Sophocles in Antigone.

Γνώμη γὰρ εἴ τις κἀπ' ἐμᾶ νεωτέρε
Πρόσες ι, Φήμ' ἔγωγε, ωρεσδεύειν ωολύ
Φύναι τον ἄνδρα ωάντ' ἐπις ήμης ωλέω.
Εἰ δ' δυν, (φιλεῖ γὰρ τᾶτο μὴ ταύτη ἑέπειν)
Καὶ τῶν λεγόντων εὖ, καλὸν τὸ μανθάνειν.

Marke the wisedome of Sophocles in leaving out the last sentence, bicause it was not comlie * for the sonne to use it to his father.

St. Basil, in his Exhortation to Youth.

Μέμνησ θε † τᾶ Ἡσιόδα, ός φησί· "Αρις ον μεν είναι τον ωαρ' ε΄αυτᾶ τὰ δέοντα ξυνορῶν]α, ἐσθλον δε κάκεῖνον, τον τοῖς ωαρ' ε΄τέρων ὑωοδειχθεῖσιν ἐπόμενον· τον δε ωρὸς ἀδέτερον ἐπιτήδειον, ἀχρεῖον είναι ωρὸς ἀπαν]α.

M.

* Hamon speaks to his father Creon: I have added the first verse, in this edition, from Sophicles.

+ This is taken from the beginning of St. Bosil's discourse to the young students, directing them how to read the Grecian writers with advantage. Εί μεν εν προθύμως δέχοισθε τα λεγόμενα,

M. Cicero pro A. Cluentio.

Sapientissimum esse dicunt eum, cui quod opus sit, ipsi veniat in mentem: proxime accedere illum, qui alterius bene inventis obtemperet. In slultitia contra est. Minus enim slultus esl is, cui nibil in mentem venit, quàm ille, qui quod stulte alteri venit in mentem, comprobat.

Cicero doth not plainlie expresse the last sentence, but doth invent it sittlie for his purpose, to taunt the sollie and simplicitie in his adversarie Actius, not weying wiselie the sutle doynges of Chrysogonus, and Stalenus.

Tit. Livius in orat. Minucii, lib. 22.

Sæpe ego audivi, milites, eum primum esse virum, qui ipse consulat, quid in rem sit; secundum eum, qui bene monenti obediat: qui nec ipse consulere, nec alteri parere scit, eum extremi esse ingenii.

Now which of all these foure, Sophocles, St. Basil, Cicero, or Livie, * hath expressed Hesiodus best, the judgement is as hard, as the work-manship of everie one is most excellent indeede.

Another example out of the Latin tonge also I will recite, for the worthines of the workman thereof, and that is Horace; who hath so turned the begynning of Terences Eunuchus, as doth worke in me a pleafant admiration, as oft so ever as I compare those two places together. And though everie master, and everie good scholer to, do know the places both in Terence and Horace; yet will I set them here in one place together, that with more pleasure they may be compared together.

της δευτέρας των επαινεμμένων έσεσθε παρ' Ήσιόδω τάξεως. εί δε μη, ενώ μεν οδόθεν ων είποιμι δυσχερές. ωυτοι δε μέμνησθε των επων δηλονότι, εν οίς εκείνος φησί. "Αριςον, Εσ.

Terentius.

* Το these passages already cited by our author, I shall add another from Plutarch, who seems plainly to have had Hesiod in his eye: Τὸ μὲν άμαρτεῖν μηθεν ἐν πράγματι μεγάλοις, μεῖζον ἢ κατὰ ἄνθρωπόν ἐςι· τόνδ άμαρτόν λομπάσθαι τοῖς πλαίσμασι, διδάγμασι πρὸς τὸ λοιπὸν, ἀνδρὸς ἀγαθε κὰ νεν ἔχονω. Perhaps after πλαίσμασι, the particle ως may be well inserted.

Terentius in Eunucho.

Quid igitur faciam? non cam? ne nunc quidem Cum accerfor ultro? an potius ita me comparem, Non perpeti meretricum contumelias? Exclufit, revocat; redeam? non si me obsecret.

Parmeno a little after:

Here, quæ res in se neque consilium neque modum Habet ullum, eam consilio regere non potes. In amore bæc omnia insunt vitia; injuriæ, Suspiciones, inimicitiæ, induciæ, Bellum, pax rursum. Incerta bæc si tu postules Ratione certa facere, nibilo plus agas, Quàm si des operam, ut cum ratione insanias.

Horatius, serm. lib. 2. sat. 3.

Nec nunc, cùm me vocet ultro,
Accedam? an potius mediter finire dolores?
Exclufit, revocat: redeam? non, si obsecret. Ecce
Servus non paulò sapientior: O bere, quæ res
Nec modum babet, neque consilium, ratione modoque, Tractari non vult. In amore bæc sunt mala, bellum,
Pax rursum. bæc si quis tempestatis prope ritu
Mobilia, & cæcâ sluitantia sorte, laboret
Reddere certa sibi, nibilo plus explicet, ac si
Insanire paret certâ ratione, modoque.

This exercise may bring moch profite to ripe heades, and stayd judgementes; bicause in traveling in it, the mynde must needes be verie attentive, and busilie occupied in turning and tossing itselfe many wayes, and conferryng with great pleasure, the varietie of worthie wittes and judgementes together. But this harme may some come thereby, and namelie to yong scholers, lest in seeking other wordes, and newe forme of sentences, they chance upon the worse: for the which onelie cause, Cicero thinketh this exercise not to be fit for yong men.

EPI-

EPITOME.

This is a way of studie belonging rather to matter than to wordes; to memorie, than to utterance; to those that be learned alreadie, and hath small place at all amonges yong scholers in grammar scholes. It may proffit privately some learned men, but it hath hurt generallie learnyng itselfe very moch. For by it we have lost whole Trogus, the best part of T. Livius, the goodly dictionarie of * Pompeius Festus, a great deale of the civille law, and other many notable bookes: for the which cause, I do the more missike this exercise both in old and yong.

Epitome is good privatelie for himselfe that doth worke it, but ill commonlie for all others, that use other mens labor therein. A sillie poore kinde of studie, not unlike to the doing of those poore folke, which neither till, nor sowe, nor reape themselves, but gleane by stealth upon other mens groundes. Soch have empty barnes for deare yeares.

Grammar scholes have sewe Epitomes to hurt them, except Epitheta Textoris, and such beggarlie gatheringes, as + Horman, ‡ Whittington, and other like Vulgares for making of Latines. Yea I do wishe, that

- * This dictionary of Festus, as it was a learned, so was it a voluminous work: for it contained no less than twenty large books, as we may see from Paulus Diaconus's words, who epitomiz'd it. "Festus Pompejus Romanis studiis affatim eruditus, tam sermonum abditorum, quam etiam quarundam causarum origines aperieus, opus suum ad viginti usque prosilixa volumina extendit."
- † He is mentioned before. The title of his book is, Vulgaria Viri doctiffini Gul. Hormanni Cæfarisburgensis. And 'tis dedicated to his friend and patron, William Atwater Bishop of Lincoln. It consists of single sentences in English and Latin, without either order or connection, excepting that they are ranged under certain general heads: one of which, being in honour of our royal founder, (who was design'd to have been canoniz'd, had not the charges at Rome prov'd excessive) I shall give the reader as a specimen:

King Henry doth many divers miracles.

Divus Henricus non una miraculorum specie inclarescit.

‡ Rob. Whittington was educated in Oxford. He was thought by some little inserior to the ablest schole-masters of the age, not excepting even Lily; with whom, and Horman, he could not agree: they resenting the title of Proto-vates Angliae, which Whittington had vainly assumed. He published a great deal; and amongst the rest, his Vulgaria likewise: to which titles Mr. Ajeham alludes in the next words; and other like Vulgars for making of Latins.

all rules for yong scholers were shorter than they be. For without doute, Grammatica itselfe is sooner and surer learned by examples of good authors, than by the naked rules of Grammarians. Epitome hurteth more in the universities, and studie of philosophie; but most of all in divinitie itselfe.

Indeede bookes of common places be verie necessary to induce a man into an orderlie general knowledge, how to referre orderlie, all that he readeth, ad certa rerum capita, and not wander in studie. And to that end did Pet. Lombardus, the master of sentences, and Phil. Melancthon in our daies, write two notable bookes of common places.

But to dwell in Epitomes, and bookes of common places, and not to binde himselfe dailie by orderlie studie, to reade with all diligence principallie the holyest Scripture, and withall the best doctors, and so to learne to make trewe difference betwixt the authoritie of the one, and the councell of the other, maketh so many seeming, and sunburnt ministers, as we have; whose learning is gotten in a sommer heat, and washed away with a Christmas snow againe: who neverthelesse are lesse to be blamed, than those blind bussardes, who in late yeares, of wilfull maliciousnes, would neyther learne themselves, nor could teach others any thing at all.

Paraphrasis hath done lesse hurt to learning, than Epitome: for no Paraphrasis, though there be many, shall ever take away Davids Psalter. Erasmus Paraphrasis, being never so good, shall never banish the New Testament. And in another schole, the Paraphrasis of Bocardus, or Sambucus, shall never take Aristotles Rhetoricke, nor Horace de Arte Poetica, out of learned mens handes.

But as concerning a schole Epitome, he that would have an example of it, let him read * Lucian week Κάλλους, which is the verie Epitome of

* Lucian's Εἰκόνες is here pointed at; in which treatise Panthea, the Smyrna beauty, is described with so much oftentation of wit and learning. Την δὲ ωτρὶ Κάλλες κατ ἰδίαν Αεκιανὸς μιμήσασθαι ωραγματέιαν ἐπιχειρήσας, ἐ μὲν κατωρθωκέναι δοκεῖ τοῖς κριθικωθέροις τῶν φιλοσοφένθων. " Partem de pulchritudine, peculiari opere Lucianus æmulatus est, co- natu majore, si doctis credimus, quàm successu." Vide Argumentum Wolsii in Isocratis Helenæ Laudationem.

Isocrates oration de Laudibus Helenæ: whereby he may learne, at the least, this wife lesson, "that a man ought to beware, to be overbold in altering an excellent mans worke."

Nevertheles, some kinde of Epitome may be used by men of skillful judgement, to the great proffet also of others. As if a wise man would take * Halles Chronicle, where moch good matter is quite marred with indenture Englishe: and first, change strange and inkhorne termes into proper and commonlie used wordes; next, specially to wede out that, that is superfluous and idle, not onlie where wordes be vainlie heaped one upon another, but also where many sentences of one meaning, be so clouted up together, as though M. Hall had bene, not writing the storie of England, but varying a sentence in Hitching schole. Surelie a wise learned man, by this way of Epitome, in cutting away wordes and sentences, and diminishing nothing at all of the matter, shold leave to mens use a storie, half as moch as it was in quantitic, but twise as good as it was, both for pleasure, and also commoditie.

Another kinde of Epitome may be used likewise very well to moch proffet. Some man either by lustines of nature, or brought by ill teaching to a wrong judgement, is over full of wordes, sentences, and matter: and yet all his wordes be proper, apt, and well chosen; all his sentences be rownd, and trimlie framed; his whole matter grounded upon good reason, and stuffed with full argumentes for his intent and purpose: Yet when his talke shall be heard, or his writing be red of such one, as is either of my two dearest frendes, M. Haddon at home, or John Sturmius in Germanie; that Nimium in him, which sooles and unlearned will most commend, shall eyther of theis two bite his lippe, or shake his head at it.

This fulnes, as it is not to be misliked † in a yong man, so in furder aige, in greater skill, and weightier affaires, is to be temperated; or effe discretion

* Mr. Edw. Hall was counsellor at law, and writ his Chronicle of the union of the two houses of York and Lancoster in the time of Edward VI. Bp. Burnet, in the presace to his history, stiles him a superficial writer.

+ This fulness, and exuberancy, is what both Tully and Quintilian defire in youth.

* Audeat heec ætas plura, & inveniat, & inventis gaudeat, fint licet illa non fatis interim

* ficca

discretion and judgement shall seeme to be wanting in him. But if his stile be still over rancke and lustie; as some men being never so old, and spent by yeares, will still be full of youthfull conditions; (as was * Sir Francis Bryan, and evermore would have bene) soch a rancke and full writer must use, if he will do wiselie, the exercise of a verie good kinde of Epitome, and do, as certaine wise men do, that be over fat, and slesshie: who, leaving their owne sull and plentifull table, go to sojorne abrode from home for a while, at the temperate diet of some sober man: and so by little and little, cut away the grosseness that is in them.

As for an example; if Oforius would leave of his lustines in striving against St. Austin, and his over rancke rayling against poor Luther, and the troth of Gods doctrine; and give his whole studie, not to write any thing of his owne for a while, but to translate Demosthenes with so straite, fast, and temperate a style in Latin, as he is in Greke; he would become so perfect and pure a writer, I believe, as hath been sewe or none since Ciceroes daies. And so by doing himself, and all learned men, moch good, do others lesse harme, and Christes doctrine lesse injury, than he doth: and withall, wyn unto himselfe many worthy frendes, who agreeing with him gladly in the love and liking of excellent learnyng, are sorrie to see so worthie a witte, so rare eloquence wholie spent, and consumed, in striving with God and good men.

Amonges the rest, no man doth lament him more than I; not onelie for the excellent learnyng that I see in him, but also bicause there hath passed privatelic betwixt him and me, sure tokens of moch good will, and friendlie opinion, the one toward the other. And surelie the dis-

&quot;ficca & severa. Facile remedium est ubertatis, sterilia nullo labore vincuntur. Illa mihi in pueris natura minimum spei dabit, in qua ingenium judicio præsumittur. Materiam esse

&quot; primum volo vel abundantiorem, atque ultra quam oporteat fusam. — Quod me de his ætatibus fentire minus mirabitur, qui apud Ciceronem legerit, Volo enim se efferat in adolescente sæcunditas." Quint. de Inst. Orat. lib. 2.

&quot; diuturnus, quod nimis celeriter est maturitatem assecutum."

* Ambassador at the court of Rome for King Henry VIII.

tance betwixt London and Lysbon, should not stoppe any kinde of frend-lie dewtie, that I could eyther shew to him, or do to his, if the greatest matter of all did not in certeyne pointes separate our myndes.

And yet for my parte, both toward him, and diverse others here at home, for like cause of excellent learning, great wisdome, and gentle humanitie, which I have seene in them, and felt at their handes myselfe; where the matter of difference is mere conscience in a quiet minde inwardlie, and not contentious malice with spitefull rayling openlie, I can be content to follow this rewle, "in missing some one thing, not to hate for anie thing els."

But as for all the bloodie beaftes, as that "fat boore of the wood, "or those brauling bulls of Basan, or any lurking Dormus," blinde not by nature, but by malice, and as may be gathered of their owne testimonie, given over to blindness, for giving over God and his word: or * foch as be so lustie runagates, as first runne from God, and his trewe doctrine; then from their lords, maisters, and all dewtie; next, from themselves, and out of their wittes; lastly, from their prince, contrey, and all due allegence; whether they ought rather to be pittied of good men for their miserie, or contemned of wise men for their malicious follie, let good and wise men determine.

And to returne to Epitome agayne. Some will judge moch boldnes in me, thus to judge of Oforius style; but wise men do know, that meane lookers on may trewlie say, for a well made picture; "This sace had been more comlie, if that hie redde in the cheeke were somewhat more pure sanguin than it is;" and yet the stander by cannot amend it himselfe by any way.

And this is not written to the dispraise, but to the great commendation of Oscius: because Tullie himselfe had the same fulness in him, and therefore went to Rhodes to cut it away; + and saith himselfe, Re-

* Our author seems, in my opinion, to point to N. Sanders, amongst some others.

† Here again we have only part of a fentence (as it came into our author's memory) taken out of Tully de claris Oratoribus, near the end. I shall transcribe the whole, fince it will bring some light to the argument in hand.

"" Quibus

And although a man growndlie learned alreadie, may take moch proffet himselfe in using, by Epitome, to draw other mens workes for his owne memorie sake into shorter rowme; (as Canterus hath done verie well the whole Metamorphosis of Ovid, and David Cythræus a great deale better, the nine Muses of Herodotus; and Melanethon, in myne opinion, far best of all, the whole storie of time, not onelie to his owne use, but to other mens proffet, and hys great praise) yet Epitome is most necessarie of all in a mans owne writing, as we learne of that

- "Quibus non contentus, Rhodum veni, meque ad eundem, quem Romæ audiveram, Molonem applicavi, cum actorem in veris causis, scriptoremque præstantem, tum in no-tandis, animadvertendisque vitiis, & instituendo, docendoque prudentissimum. Is dedit operam (si modò id consequi potuit) ut nimis redundantes nos, & supersuentes juvenili quadam dicendi impunitate & licentia, reprimerer, & quasi extra ripas dissuentes coerceret. Ita recepi me biennio post non modò exercitatior, sed prope mutatus. Nam & contentio nimia vocis reciderat, & quasi referverat oratio, lateribusque vires, & corporismediocris habitus accesserat."
  - * See Crassus's words, cited in the notes, pag. 200.

† Tho' 'tis certain enough, that Tully did translate these two orations; yet I'm apt to think from his own words, that he did it rather as an example to encourage young students to take pains that way, than with any design to improve himself; his own stile much earlier being brought to its full persection.

"Sed cùm in eo magnus error esset, quale esset id dicendi genus; putavi mihi suscipiendum laborem, utilem studiosis, mihi quidem ipsi non necessarium. Converti enim ex
Atticis, duorum eloquentissimorum nobilissimas orationes inter se contrarias, Æschinis Demosthenisque: nec converti, ut interpres, sed ut orator, sententiis iissem, & earum formis, tanquam figuris, verbis ad nostram consuetudinem aptis: in quibus non verbum pro verbo necesse habui reddere, sed genus omnium verborum, vimque servavi. Non enim ea me annumerare lectori putavi oportere, sed tanquam appendere."

This opinion of mine will still appear more probable, from the last words of this introduction to these two orations: "Erit regula, ad quam corum dirigantur orationes, qui Atticè volunt dicere."

noble

noble poet Virgil; who, if Donatus * fay trewe, in writing that perfite worke of the Georgickes, used dailie, when he had written forty or fifty verses, not to cease cutting, paring, and polishing of them, till he had brought them to the nomber of ten or twelve.

And this exercise is not more nedefullie done in a great worke, than wifelie done in our common dailie writing, either of letter, or other thing else; that is to say, to peruse diligentlie, and see and spie wiselie, what is alwaies more than nedeth. For twentie to one, offend more in writing to moch, than to little: even as twenty to one, fall into ficknesse, rather by over moch fulnes, than by any lacke or emptinesse. And therefore is he alwaies the bost English physician, that best can give a purgation; that is, by way of Epitome to cut all over-much away. And furelie mens bodies be not more full of ill humors, than commonlie mens myndes (if they be yong, lustie, proude, like and love themfelves well, as most men do) be full of fantasies, opinions, errors, and faultes, not onlie in inward invention, but also in all their utterance, either by pen or talke.

And of all other men, even those that have the inventivest heades for all purposes, and roundest tonges in all matters and places (except they learne and use this good lesson of Epitome) commit commonlie greater faultes, than dull, staying, filent men do. For quick inventors, and faire readie speakers, being boldned with their present habilite to say more, and perchance better to, at the foden for that prefent, than any other can do; use lesse helpe of diligence and studie than they ought to do; and fo have in them commonlie lesse learning, and weaker judgement for all deepe confiderations, than fome duller heades, and flower tonges have.

The same is reported of our countryman, Mr. Milton, whom we may justly match with Virgil; that usually every morning, as he lay in bed, he tumbled over in his thoughts the verses he had made the day before, and never ceased altering and changing of them, till he had reduc'd them with inimitable exactness to a far less number.

* The passage alluded to in Firgil's life is this: " Cum Georgica scriberet, traditur quo-"tidie meditatos mane plurimos versus dictare solitus, ac per totum diem retractando ad 66 paucissimos redigere: non absurdè, carmen se ursæ more parere dicens, & lambendo de-" mum effingere."

And therefore readie speakers generallie be not the best, playnest, and wifest writers, nor yet the deepest judgers in weightie affaires: because they do not tarry to weye and judge all thinges as they should; but having their heads over full of matter, be like pennes over full of inke, which will fooner blotte, than make any fair letter at all. Tyme was, when I had experience of two ambassadors in one place; the one of a hote head to invent, and of a hastie hand to write; the other, cold and frayd in both: but what difference of their doinges was made by wife men, is not unknown to some persons. The bishop of Winchefter, * Steph. Gardiner, had a quicke head, and a readie tonge, and yet was not the best writer in Englande. Cicero, in Brutus, doth wifelie + note the fame in Serg. Galba, and Q. Hortenfius; who were both hote, lustie, and plaine speakers, but colde, lowse, and rough writers. And Tullie telleth the cause why; saying, when they spake, their tonge was naturally carried with full tyde and wynde of their witte; when they wrote, their head was folitarie, dull, and caulme; and fo their ftyle was blonte, and their writing colde. Quod vitium, faith Cicero, peringeniosis bominibus, neque satis doctis, plerumque accidit.

And therefore all quicke inventors, and readie faire speakers, must be carefull, that, to their goodness of nature, they adde also in any * Bishop Burnet, in his character of him, says, be had a good stile in Latin, and understood the Greek well. Something of his abilities may be seen in that samous controversy, about the true pronunciation of the Greek tongue; which was managed by him, as Chancellor, and by Mr. Cheke, and some other learned gentlemen of Cambridge, at that time.

† "Quid igitur, inquit, est causse, Brutus, si tanta virtus in oratore Galba suit, cur ea "nulla in orationibus ejus appareat?" To this question of Brutus, amongst other things, Tully makes this reply:

beantur. —— alios, quòd melius putent dicere se posse, quàm scribere: quod peringeniosis hominitus, neque satis declis, plerumque contigit, ut issis Galbæ.

"Quem fortasse vis non ingenii solum, sed etiam animi, & naturalis quidam dolor dicentem incendebat, efficiebatque, ut & incitata, & gravis, & vehemens esset oratio: dein cum totiosus stilum prehenderat, motusque omnis animi, tanquam ventus, hominem desecerat, se saccessedat oratio: quod iis, qui limatius dicendi consectantur genus, accidere non solet, propterea quod prudentia nunquam desicit oratorem qua ille utens eodem modo possit & dicere & scribere. Ardor animi non semper ades, ssque cum consedit, omnis illa vis, & quasi slamma oratoris extinguitur. Hanc igitur ob causam videtur Lælii mens spirare etiam in scriptis, Galbæ autem vis occidisse." Cic. de clas is Orat.

wise studie, sabor, leasure, learnyng, and judgement; and then they shall in deede passe all other, (as I know some do, in whome all those qualities are sullie planted) or else, if they give over moch to their witte, and over little to their labor and learnyng, they will soonest over reach in talke, and fardest come behinde in writing, whatsoever they take in hand. The method of Epitome is most necessarie for soch kinde of men. And thus much concerning the use, or misuse, of all kinde of Epitomes in matters of learnyng.

IMITATIO.

Imitation * is a facultie to expresse livelie and persitelie that example, which ye go about to folow. And of itselfe it is large and wide; for all the works of nature, in a manner, be examples for arte to folow.

But to our purpose: All languages, both learned, and mother tonges, be gotten, and gotten onlie by Imitation. For as ye use to heare, so ye learne to speake. If ye heare no other, ye speake not your selfe; and whom ye onlie heare, of them ye onlie learne.

And therefore, if ye would speake as the best and wisest do, ye must be conversant where the best and wisest are: but if you be borne, or brought up in a rude contrie, ye shall not chose but speak rudelie. The rudest man of all knoweth this to be trewe.

Yet neverthelesse, the rudenes of common and mother tonges is no bar for wise speaking. For in the rudest contrie, and most barbarous mother language, many be founde that can speake verie wiselie: but in the Greke and Latin tonges, the two onelie learned tonges, which be kept not in common taulke, but in private bookes; we find alwaies wisdom and eloquence, good matter and good utterance, never, or seldom asonder. For all such authors as be fullest of good matter, and right judgement in doctrine, be likewise alwaies most proper in wordes, most apt in sentence, most plaine and pure in uttering the same.

And

<sup>* &</sup>quot;Imitatio est, quâ impellimur cum diligenti ratione, ut aliquorum similes in dicendo velimus esse." Auctor ad Herennium.

And contrariwife, in those two tonges, all writers, either in religion, or anie fect of philosophie, whosoever be found fonde in judgement of matter, be commonlie found as rude in uttering their myndes. For stoickes, anabaptists, and friers, with epicures, libertines, and monkes, being most like in learnyng and life, are no fonder and pernicious in their opinions, than they be rude and barbarous in their writinges. They be not wife therefore that fay, "What care I for a mans wordes " and utterance, if his matter and reasons be good?" Soch men say fo, not fo much of ignorance, as eyther of fome fingular pride in themfelves, or fome speciall malice of others, or some private and parciall matter, either in religion, or other kind of learning. For good and choice meates be no more requifite for healthic bodies, than proper and apte wordes be for good matters; and also plaine and fensible utterance for the best and deepest reasons: "in which two pointes standeth per-" fite eloquence, one of the fairest and rarest giftes that God doth give " to man."

Ye know not what hurte ye do to learnyng, that care not for wordes, but for matter; and so make a divorse betwixt the tonge and the hart. For mark all ages, looke upon the whole course of both the Greke and Latin tonges, and ye shall surelie sinde, that, when apte and good wordes began to be neglected, and properties of those two tonges to be confounded, then also began ill deedes to spring; strange maners to oppresse good orders; newe and sonde opinions to strive with old and trewe doctrine, first in philosophie, and after in religion; right judgement of all thinges to be perverted, and so vertue with learnyng is contemned, and studie left off. "Of ill thoughtes commeth perverse judgement; of ill deedes springeth lewde taulke." Which sower misorders, as they mar mans life, so destroy they good learnyng withall.

But beholde the goodnesse of Gods providence for learnyng: all olde authors, and sects of philosophie, which were fondest in opinion, and rudest in utterance, as stoickes, and epicures, first contemned of wise men, and after forgotten of all men, be * so consumed by tyme, as they they be now not onlie out of use, but also out of memorie of man. Which thing, I surelie thinke, will shortelie chance to the whole doctrine and all the bookes of phantastical anabaptistes and friers, and of the beastlie libertines and monkes.

* This remark of Mr. Ajcham's must necessarily be restrained and limited to the Grecian writers, and to those only who sourished when their language was brought to its greatest perfection.

Againe, behold on the other fide, how Gods wisdome hath wrought, that of Academici and Peripatetici, those that were wisest in judgement of matters, and purest in uttering their myndes, the first and chiefest, that wrote most and best in either tonge, (as Plato and Aristotle in Greeke, and Tullie in Latin) be so either wholie, or sufficientlie left unto us, "as I never knew yet scholer, that gave himselfe to like, and love, and solow chieslie those three authors, but he proved both learned, wise, and also an honest man; if he joyned withall the trewe doctrine of Gods holie Bible; without the which, the other three be but fine edge tools in a fools or mad mans hand."

But to returne to Imitation againe: there be three kindes of it in matters of learnyng.

The whole * doctrine of comedies and tragedies, is a perfite Imitation, or faire livelie painted picture of the life of everie degree of man. Of this Imitation writeth Plato at large, in his third booke de Republica; but it doth not moch belong at this time to our purpose.

The fecond kind of Imitation, is to folow, for learning of tonges and fciences, the best authors. Here riseth amonges proude and envious fection. For Antoninus in the Greek tongue, and Lucretius and Seneca in the Latin, (authors that justly deserve our notice) are still perfect and entire. But that these sects were most remarkably careless in their stile and language, is plain enough from the constant testimony of all the ancients, who have had occasion to mention these things.

Thus Dionysius Halicarn. of the Stoicks, in his book περί Συνθέσεως, pag. 40. 'Απόχρη δὲ τεχμηρίω χρήσασθαι τῷ λόγῳ Χρυσίππε τε Στωϊκέ περαιτέρω γὰρ εκ αν προβάιην. τέτε γὰρ ετε ἀμεινον ἐδεὶς τὰς Διαλεκὶκὰς τέχνας ἀκρίβωσεν, ἔτε χείρονι ἀρμονία συνλαχθένλας ἱξήνεγκε λόγες, τῶν ὀνόμαι καλ δόξης ἀξιωθένλων. And afterwards, in the same excellent treatife, with respect to the Epicurean tribe; Ἐπικερείων δὲ χορὸν, οἰς ἐδὲν μέλει τέτων, παραιτέμεθα.

* Ἐποποιία δη, κ) ή της τραγωδίας ποίησις, έτι δε κωμωδία κ) ή διθυραμβοποιηθική, κ) της αυλητικής, ή πλείς η κ) κιθαρις ικής, πασαι τυγχάνεσιν εσαι μιμήσεις το σύνολον. Arift. περί Ποιηθικής, flatim ab initio.

wittes a great controversie; whether one, or many are to be followed: and if one, who is that one; Seneca, Cicero, Salust, or Casar, and so forth, in Greeke and Latin.

The third kinde of Imitation belongeth to the fecond; as when you be determined, whether ye will follow one, or mo, to know perfitlie, and which way, to follow that one; in what place; by what meane and order; by what tooles and instrumentes ye shall do it; by what skill and judgement ye shall trewlie discerne, whether ye follow rightlie or no.

This Imitatio is dissimilis materiei similis tractatio; and also, similis materiei dissimilis tractatio; as Virgil followed Homer: but the argument to the one was Ulysses; to the other, Æneas. Tullie persecuted Antonie with the same wepons of eloquence, that Demosthenes used before against Philippe.

Horace followeth Pindar, but either of them his owne argument and person: as the one, Hiero king of Sicilie; the other, Augustus the emperor: and yet both for like respectes; that is, for their coragious stoutnes in warre, and just government in peace.

One of the best examples for right Imitation, we lacke, and that is Menander; whom our Terence, as the matter required, in like argument, in the same persons, with equal eloquence, soote by foote did folow. Some peeces remaine, * like broken jewelles, whereby men may rightlie esteeme, and justlie lament, the losse of the whole.

Erasmus, the ornament of learning in our tyme, doth wish that some man of learning and diligence, † would take the like paines in Demostheres and Tullie, that Macrobius hath done in Homer and Virgil; that is, to write out and joyne together, where the one doth imitate the other. Erasmus wishe is good; but surelie it is not good enough. For Macrobius gatherings for the Encodos, out of Homer, and Eobanus Hessus more diligent gatherings for the Bucolikes, out of Theocritus, as they be not fullie taken out of the whole heape, as they should be, but even as though they had not sought for them of purpose, but sound them scattered here and there by chance in their way; even so, onelie to point out, and nakedlie to joine together their sentences, with no surder declaring the maner and way how the one doth solow the other, were but a colde helpe to the encrease of learning.

* A collection of these remains have been sometime since published, together with those of Philemon, by Mr. Le Clerke, who amidst his great learning, did not think 'em beneath his care.

† &quot;Elegans interim fuerit exercitatio, quod à veteribus nonnullis factum est in Homero ac Virgilio, siquis idem faciat in Demossibene et M. Tullio, ut ex collatione locorum deprehendar, quid hic ab illo sit mutuatus, & ubi noster sit Graco par, ubi superior, ubi ab exemplari non-initi degeneret imitatio. Vix aliares æquè conducit ad parandum judicium." Erasmus, Lib. 28. Ep. 26.

But if a man would take this paines also, when he hath layd two places of Homer and Virgil, or of Demosthenes and Tullie together, to teach plainlie withall, after this fort:

- 1. Tullie reteyneth thus moch of the matter, thies fentences, thies wordes.
- 2. This, and that he leaveth out; which he doth wittilie to this end and purpose.
  - 3. This he addeth here:
  - 4. This he diminisheth there:
  - 5. This he ordereth thus, with placing that here, not there:
- 6. This he altereth and changeth, either in propertie of wordes, in forme of sentence, in substance of the matter, or in one, or other convenient circumstance of the authors present purpose.

In thies fewe rude English wordes, are wrapt up all the necessarie tooles and instrumentes, wherewith trewe Imitation is rightlie wrought withall in any tonge. Which tooles, I openlie confesse, be not of myne owne forging, but partie left unto me by the cunningest master, and one of the worthiest jentlemen, that ever Englande bred, Syr John Cheke; partlie borowed by me out of the shoppe of the dearest frende I have out of Englande, Joh. Sturmius. And therefore I am the bolder to borow of him, and here to leave them to others, and namelie to my children. Which tooles, if it please God, that another day they may be able to use rightlie, as I do wishe, and daylie pray they may do, I shall be more glad, than if I were able to leave them a great quantitie of land.

This foresaide order and doctrine of Imitation, would bring forth more learnyng, and breed up trewer judgement, than any other exercise that can be used; but not for yong beginners, bicause they shall not be able to consider dulie thereof. And trewlie it may be a shame to good studentes, who having so faire examples to solow, as Plato and Tullie, do not use so wise wayes in following them for the obteyning of wisdome and learnyng, as rude ignorant artificers do for gayning a small commoditie. For surelie the meanest painter useth more witte, better arte, greater diligence in his shoppe, in solowing the picture of any meane mans face, than commonlie the best students do, even in the universitie, for the atteyning of learnyng itselfe.

Some ignorant, unlearned, and idle student, or some busic looker upon this litle poore booke; that hath neither will to do good himselfe, nor skill to judge right of others, but can lustelie contemne, by pride and ignorance, all painful diligence, and right order in study; * will perchance say, that I am to precise, to curious in marking and pidling thus about the Imitation of others; and that the old and worthie authors did not busic their heades and wittes, in following so preciselie either the matter, what other men wrote, or els the maner, how other men wrote. They will say, "It were a plain slaverie, and injurie to, "to shakkle and tye a good witte, and hinder the course of a mans good nature with such bondes of servitude, in following others." Except soch men thinke themselves wiser than Cicero for teaching of eloquence, they must be content to turne a new lease.

The best booke that ever Tullie wrote, by all mens judgement, and by his owne testimonie to, in writing whereof he employed most care, studie, learnyng, and judgement, is his booke de Oratore ad 2. Fratrem. Now let us fee, what he did for the matter, and also for the maner of writing thereof. For the whole booke confisteth in these two pointes onelie; in good matter, and good handling of the matter. And first, for the matter; it is whole Aristotles, whatsoever Antonie in the second, and Crassus in the third, doth teach. Trust not me, but believe Tullie himselfe, who writeth so; first, in that * goodlie long epistle ad Pub. Lentulum; and after in diverse places ad Atticum. And in the verie booke itselse, Tullie will not have it hidden; but both Catulus and Crassius do oft, and pleasantly lay that stell to Antonius charge. Now for the handling of the matter; was Tullie so precise and curious, rather to follow another mans paterne, than to invent some new shape himselfe, namelie in that booke, wherein he purposed to leave to posteritie the glorie of his witte? Yea forfooth, that he did. And this is not my gefling and gathering; nor onelie performed by Tullie in very deed, but uttered also by Tullie in plaine wordes; to teach other men thereby, what they should do, in taking like matter in hand.

* See what Dionysius Halic. says on the like occasion: Υφοςωμαί τινα πρὸς ταῦτα καταδρομην ἀνθρώπων, της μὲν ἐγκυκλίε παιδέιας ἀπέιρων, τὸ δὲ ἀγοραίου της Ῥητοςικης μέρων ὁδε τε κ πέχνης χωρὶς ἐπιτηδευόνθων. De Structura Orationis pag. 240.

And that which is specially to be marked, Tullie doth utter plainlie his conceit and purpose therein, by the mouth of the wifest man in all that companie: for + sayth Scævola himselfe, Cur non imitamur Crasse, Socratem illum, qui est in Phædro Platonis? &c.

And furder to understand, that Tullie did not obiter, and by chance, but purposelie and mindfullie bend himselfe to a precise and curious imitation of Plato, concernyng the shape and forme of those bookes; marke,

<sup>* &</sup>quot;Quod rogas, ut mea tibi scripta mittam, quæ post discessium tuum scripserim: sunt orationes quædam, quas Menocrito dabo: neque ita multæ; ne pertimescas. Scripsi etiam (nam
ab orationibus dijungo me serè, reseroque ad mansuetiores Musas: quæ me maximè, sicut jam ab prima adolescentia delectarunt) scripsi igitur Aristoteleo more, quemadmodum quidem volui, tres libros in disputatione ac dialogo de Oratore, quos arbitror Lentulo tuo non sore inutiles.
Abhorent enim à communibus præceptis: ac omnem antiquorum, & Aristoteleam, & Isocrateam rationem oratoriam complectuntur." Epist. Fam. Lib. 1. Ep. 9.

† &quot; Postero autem die, cum illi majores natu satis quiessent, & in ambulationem ventum es-" set; dicebat tum Scævolam duobus spatiis tribusve sactis, dixisse, Cur non imitamur," &c. De Orat. Lib. 1.

I pray you, how curious Tullie is to utter his purpose, and doyng therein, writing ‡ thus to Atticus:

Quod in iis Oratoriis libris, quos laudas, personam desideras Scævolæ; non cam temere dimovi: sed seci idem, quod in Ποληεία deus ille noster Plato. Cum in Piræeum Socrates venisset ad Cepbalum, locupletem & sessivum senem; quoad primus ille sermo haberetur, adest in disputando senex: deinde cum ipse quoque commodissimè locutus esset, ad rem divinam dicit se velle discedere; neque postea revertitur. Credo Platonem vix putasse satis consonum fore, si hominem id ætatis in tam longo sermone diutius retinuisset. Multo ego satius hoc mihi cavendum putavi in Scævola: qui & ætate, & valitudine erat ea, qua esse meministi; & iis honoribus, ut vix satis decorum videretur, eum plures dies esse in Crassi Tusculano. Et erat primi libri sermo non alienus à Scævolæ studiis: reliqui libri Tεχνολογίαν habent, ut scis. Huic joculatoriæ disputationi senem illum, ut noras, interesse sane nolui.

If Cicero had not opened himselfe, and declared hys owne thought and doynges herein, men that be idle, and ignorant, and envious of other mens diligence, and well doinges, would have sworne, that Tullie had never mynded any soch thing; but that, of a precise curiositie, we sayne and forge, and father soch thinges of Tullie, as he never ment indeed. I write this not for nought: for I have heard some, both well learned, and otherwayes verie wise, that by their lustie misliking of soch diligence, have drawen back the forwardnes of verie good wittes. But even as soch men themselves do sometymes stumble upon doing well by chance, and benefite of good witte; so would I have our scholer alwayes able to do well by order of learning, and right skill of judgement.

Concernyng Imitation, many learned men have written, with moch diversitie for the matter; and therefore with great contrarietie, and some stomacke amongest themselves. I have read as many as I could get, diligentlie; and what I thinke of everie one of them, I will freely say my mynde. With which freedome I trust good men will beare, because it shall tend to neither spitefull nor harmefull controversie.

† This citation is taken out of Tully's fourth book of Epistles to Atticus, Ep. 16.

304

Cicero.

In Tullie it is well touched, shortlie taught, * not fullie declared by Antonius in the second booke de Oratore; and afterward in Oratore ad Brutum, for the liking and misliking of Isocrates: and the contrarie judgement of Tullie against Calvus, Brutus, and Calidius, de genere dicendi Attico & Asiatico.

Dionyfius Halicarnass.

Dionysius Halicarnasseus περί Μιμήσεως, + I feare is lost; which author next Aristotle, Plato, and Tullie, of all others that write of eloquence, by the judgement of them that be best learned, deserveth the next prayse and place.

Quintilian.

Quintilian 1 writeth of it shortlie, and coldlie for the matter, yet hotlie and spitefullie enough agaynst the imitation of Tullie.

* " Ergo hoc sit primum in præceptis meis, ut demonstremus, quem imitetur; atque ita, " ut, quæ maximè excellant in eo quem imitabitur, ea diligentissimè persequatur: tum ac-" cedat exercitatio, qua illum, quem antè delegerit, imitando effingat, atque ita exprimat, on non ut multos imitatores sæpe cognovi, qui aut ea, quæ facilia sunt, aut etiam illa, quæ insignia, ac pænè vitiosa, consectantur imitando." De Orat. lib. 2.

"Atticos, inquit, volo imitari. quos? nec enim est unum genus. Nam quid est tam dissimile, quam Demosshenes & Lysias? quam idem, & Hyperides? quam omnium horum Æschines? Quem igitur imitaris? Si aliquem, cæteri ergo Atticè non dicebant si omnes; quî potes, cum sint ipsi dissimillimi inter se?" Cic. de claris Orat.

+ This book of imitation Dionysius divided into three parts: the first contained the whole question concerning imitation; the second, what authors in poetry, philosophy, history, and oratory, were to be imitated; the third, how this imitation was to be performed: which last book, he tells us, he had not finished at the time he gives us this account of it.

Dionysius's words are these, though corrupt enough, in his epistle to Cn. Pompey, p. 206. of the learned Dr. Hudson's edition. I shall cite them as I think they ought to be read. Πεωόιηκα δε κ τότο εν τοις προς Δημήτριον ύπομνηματισμοίς περί Μιμήσεως. Τέτων ο μεν πρώτω, αυτών περιείληφε την περί της μιμήσεως ζήτησιν ο δε δέυτερος, περί το, τίνας ανδρας μιμείσαι δεί, ποιητάς τε η φιλοσόρες, ίσοριογράφες η ρητορας ο δε τρίτο, περί τέ, πως δεί μιμείσθαι. έςὶ δὲ δτ 🕒 ατελής.

‡ "Ante omnia igitur imitatio per se ipsa non sufficit; vel quia pigri est ingenii, conten-"tum esse iis, quæ sunt ab aliis inventa. Quid enim suturum erat temporibus illis, quæ sine " exemplo fuerunt, si homines nihil nisi quod jam cognovissent, faciendum sibi aut cogitandum putassent? nempe nihil fuisset inventum -

"Itaque ne hoc quidem fuaserim, uni se alicui propriè, quem per omnia sequatur, addicere. Longè perfectissimus Græcorum Demosthenes, aliquid tamen aliquo in loco melius 66 alii. Plurima ille: fed non qui maximè imitandus, etiam folus imitandus est. Quid er-46 go? non est fatis omnia sic dicere, quomodo Marcus Tullius dixit? mihi quidem fatis ef-66 set, si omnia consequi possem. Quid tamen nocet, vim Cæsaris, asperitatem Cæsii, dili-66 gentiam Pollionis, judicium Calvi, quibusdam in locis assumere?" Quint. de Inst. Oral. lib. 10.

Erasmus,

Erasmus, beyng more occupied in spying other mens faultes, than Erasmus. declarying his owne advise, is mistaken of many, to the great hurt of studie for his authoritie fake. For he writeth rightlie, rightlie understanded; * he and Longolius onelie differing in this, that the one seemeth to give overmoch, the other over litle, to him, whom they both best loved, and chiefly allowed of all others.

Budæus in his commentaries roughlie and obscurelie, after his kinde Budæus, of writing: and for the matter, carried fomewhat out of the way in - overmuch milliking the imitation of Tullie.

Philip Melanethon, learnedlie and trewlie.

Phil. Melancthon.

Joach. Camerarius largely with a learned judgement, but somewhat Joa. Camer. confusedly, and with over rough a stile.

Sambucus largely, + with a right judgement, but somewhat a crooked Sambucus. stile.

* Erasmus in his epistles frequently mentions Longolius, who was a Hollander by birth, and one who in his writings applied himself with utmost care and industry, to the imitation of Tully. "Quid hic commemorem Longolium, qui totus in hoc incubuit, ut Ciceronem ex-"primeret; nec infeliciter cessit conatus?" Lib. 27. ep. 38. He died at Padua about the

Of the difference that happened betwixt himself and Longolius, Erasmus gives us some account in his letter to Alciatus, lib. 21. ep. 38. wherein he has this severe remark upon those flavish imitators, the Ciceronianists of that age.

"Exorta est nova secta Ciceronianorum quæ mihi videtur non minus servere istic, quam apud nos Lutheranorum. Posthac non licebit Episcopos appellare Patres reverendos, nec in "calce literarum scribere annum a Christo nato, quòd id nusquam faciat Cicero. Quid autem ineptius; quàm toto seculo novato, religione, imperiis, magistratibus, locorum voca-" bulis, ædificiis, cultu, moribus, non aliter audere loqui, quam locutus est Cicero? Si " reviviscerit ipse Cicero, rideret hoc Ciceronianorum genus."

And in his letter to Franciscus Vergera, he thus expresses himself: "Hæc, mi Francisce, " non eo spectant, ut alius sit magis proponendus eloquentiæ candidatis, quam Cicero; sed ce istos ut rideam simios, quibus nihil pulchrum, nisi quod Ciceronem refert; quum nulla " fuerit unquam forma tam felix, in qua nihil desideres. Ut formæ pictor, ita dictionis rhe-66 tor, absolutum exemplum à multis petat oportet."

+ " Sambucus tres dialogos conscripsit de Imitatione à Cicerone petenda." Concerning Cortesius, see the eighth book of Politian's epistles.

Rr Others.

306

Cortefius. Joan. Sturmius.

Others have written also, as Cortesius to Politian, and that verie well: P. Bembus. Bembus ad Picum, a great deale better; but Joan. Sturmius, de Nobilitate literata, & de Amissa dicendi ratione, farre best of all, in myne opinion. that ever tooke this matter in hand. For all the rest declare chieflie this point, whether one, or many, or all, are to be followed: but Sturmius onelie hath most learnedlie declared, "Who is to be followed; what " is to be followed; and the best point of all, by what way and order " trew Imitation is rightlie to be exercised." And although Sturmius herein doth farre passe all other; yet hath he not so fullie and perfitlie done it, as I do wishe he had, and as I know he could. For though he hath done it perfitlie for precept, yet he hath not done it perfitlie enough for example. Which he did, neither for lacke of ikill, nor by negligence, but of purpose, contented with one or two examples; bicause he was mynded in those two bookes, to write of it both shortlie. and also had to touch other matters.

> Bartbol. Riccius Ferrariensis also * hath written learnedlie, diligentlie, and verie largelie of this matter; even as he did before very well, de Apparatu Latinæ Locutionis. He writeth the better in myne opinion, bicause his whole doctrine, judgement, and order, femeth to be borrowed out of Joan. Sturmius bookes. He addeth also examples, the best kinde of teaching; wherein he doth well, but not well enough: indeede he committeth no fault, but yet deserveth small praise. He is content with the meane, and followeth not the best: as a man, that would feede + upon acornes, when he may eate, as good cheape, the finest wheat bread.

> He teacheth for example, where, and how, two or three late Italian poetes do follow Virgil; and how Virgil himselfe in the storie of Dido, doth whollie imitate Catullus in the like matter of Ariadne. Wherein I like better his diligence, and order of teaching, than his judgement in choice of examples for Imitation. But if he had done thus; if he had declared, where, and how; how oft, and how many wayes, Virgil doth follow Homer; as for example, the coming of Ulysses to Alcynous, and Calypso, with the coming of Aneas to Carthage, and Dido: likewise the games, running, wrestling, and shooting, that Achilles maketh in Homer, with the felfe same games that Æneas maketh in Virgil: the harnesse of Achilles, with the harnesse of Eneas; and the manner of making them both by Vulcane: the notable combate betwixt Achilles and HeEtor, with as notable a combate betwixt Aneas and Turnus: the going downe to hell of Ulysses in Homer, with the going downe to hell of Æneas in Virgil; and other places infinite mo, as similitudes, narrations, messages, descriptions of persones, places, battles, tempests, ship wrackes, and common places for divers purposes; which be as precisely taken out of Homer, as ever did painter in London follow the picture of any faire personage. And when thies places had been gathered together by this way of diligence, then to have conferred them together by this order of teaching; "as diligently to marke what is kept and used in either " author, in wordes, in fentences, in matter; what is added; what is " left out; what ordered otherwise, either præponendo, interponendo, or " postponendo; and what is altered for any respect, in worde, phrase, " fentence, figure, reason, argument, or by any way of circumstance." If Riccius had done this, he had not onlie bene well liked for his diligence in teaching, but also justlie commended for his right judgement in right choice of examples for the best Imitation.

This work Riccius published under this title, De Imitatione Libri tres.

+ The same proverbial expression we meet with a little after in this book. The commentators feem very fond of it: " Post fruges inventas vesci glandibus: ανδεες βαλανηφάγου Et eum sikgineus domi sit fanis, emendicato surfure magis vescimur." Ang. Politianus.

Riccius also for Imitation of prose declareth, where, and how, Longolius doth folow Tullie: but as for Longolius, I would not have him the patern of our Imitation. Indeede in Longolius shoppe, be proper and faire shewing colors; but as for shape, figure, and naturall comliness, by the judgement of best judging artificers, he is rather allowed as one to be borne withall, than speciallie commended, as one chieslie to be folowed.

If Riccius had taken for his examples, where Tullie himselfe followeth either Plato or Demostheres, he had shot then at the right marke. But to excuse Riccius somewhat, though I cannot fullie defend him, it may be sayd, his purpose was, to teach onelie the Latin tonge; when thys way that I do wishe, to joyne Virgil with Homer, to read Tullie with Demostrate Rr 2 benes and Plato, requireth a cunning and perfite master in both the tonges. It is my wishe indeede, and that by good reason: for whosoever will write well of any matter, must labor to express that, that is perfite; and not to stay and content himselfe with the meane: yea, I say farder, though it be not unpossible, yet it is verie rare, and marvelous hard, to prove excellent in the Latin tonge, for him that is not also well seene in the Greeke tonge: Tullie himselfe, most excellent of nature, most diligent in labor, brought up from his cradle in that place, and in that tyme, where and when the Latin tonge most flour-isshed naturallie in every mans mouth; yet was not his owne tonge able itselfe to make him so cunning in his owne tonge, as he was indeede; but the knowledge, and Imitation of the Greeke tonge withall. This he confesses that use to read him most.

Therefore thou, that shootest at perfection in the Latin tonge, thinke not thy selfe wifer than Tullie was, in choice of the way that leadeth right-lie to the same: thinke not thy witte better than Tullies was, as though that may serve thee, that was not sufficient for him. For even as a hauke slieth not hie with one wing, even so a man reacheth not to excellency with one tonge.

I have bene a looker on in the cockpit of learnyng thies many yeares; and one cock onelie have I knowne, which with one wing, even at this day, doth passe all other, in myne opinion, that ever I saw in any pitte in Englande, though they had two winges. Yet neverthelesse, to slie well with one wing, * to runne fast with one leg, be rather rare masteries moch to be marvelled at, than sure examples safelie to be followed. A bushop that now liveth, a good man, whose judgement in religion I better like, than his opinion in persitness in other learnyng, said once unto me; "We have no nede now of the Greeke tonge, when all thinges be translated into Latin." But the good man understood not, that even the best translation, is for mere necessitie but an evill imped wing to slie withall, or a heavie stompe leg of wood to go with-all. Such, the hier they flie, the fooner they falter and fail: the faster they runne, the ofter they stumble, and forer they fall. Soch as will nedes fo flie, may flie at a pye, and catch a dawe: and foch runners, as commonlie they, shove, and sholder, to stand formost, yet in the end they come behind others, and deferve but the hopfhakles, if the masters of the game be right judgers.

* Habeas licebit alterum pedem Ladæ, Inepte, frustra crure lignes curres.

Therefore in perufing thus fo many diverse bookes for Imitation, it Optima racame into my head, that a verie profitable booke might be made de Imita-tio imitatiotione, after another fort, than ever yet was attempted of that matter, conteyning a certeyne fewe fitte preceptes, unto which should be gathered and applied plentie of examples, out of the choicest authors of both the tonges. This worke would stand rather in good diligence for the gathering, and right judgement for the apte applying of those examples, than any great learnyng, or utterance at all.

The doing thereof would be more pleasant than painfull, and would bring also moch proffet to all that shold read it, and great praise to him that would take it in hand, with just desert of thankes.

Erasmus, giving himselfe * to read over all authors Greke and Latin, Erasmus feemeth to have prescribed to himselfe this order of reading; that is, to order in his note out by the way three special pointes, all adagies, all similitudes, studie. and all wittie fayinges of most notable personages. And so, by one labor, he left to posteritie three notable bookes, and namelie two, his Chiliades, Apophthegmata, and Similia. Likewise, if a good student would bend himselfe to read diligentlie over Tullie, and with him also at the fame tyme, as diligentlie Plato, and Xenophon, with his bookes of philofame tyme, as diligentile Plato, and Xenophon, with his bookes of philo-fophie; Isocrates, and Demosthenes with his orations, and Aristotle with Isocrates. his Rhetorickes, (which five of all others, be those whom Tullie best lov- Demostheed, and specially followed) and would marke diligentlie in Tullie, nes. Aristotle. where he doth exprimere, or effingere (which be the verie proper wordes of Imitation) either copiam Platonis, or venustatem Xenophontis, suavitatem Hocracis, or vim Demosthenis, propriam & puram subtilitatem Aristote-lis; and not onelie write out the places diligentlie, and lay them together orderlie, but also conferre them with skilfull judgement by those few rules, which I have expressed now twice before: if that diligence were taken, if that order were used, what perfite knowledge of both the tonges, what readie and pithie utterance in all matters, what right and deepe judgement in all kinde of learnyng would follow, is fcarce credible to be believed.

<sup>* &</sup>quot; Ille (Erasmus) genus omne perlustrans autorum, Adagia vetera, pœne tot ænigmatum. " specie: reddentia, et graves lectoribus offundentia tenebras, industrià mirificà, velut alter Cedipus, studiosis enarravit." Tonstalli epistola ad Budæum.

These bookes be not many, nor long, nor rude in speech, nor meane in matter; but next the majestie of Gods holie word, most worthie for a man, the lover of learning and honestie, to spend his life in. Yea, I have heard worthie M. Cheke many times fay; " I would have a " good student passe and jorney through all authors both Greke and " Latin." But he that will dwell in these few bookes onelie; first, in Gods Holie Bible, and then join with it Tullie in Latin, Plato, Aristotle, Kenophon, Hocrates, and Demosthenes, in Greke, must nedes prove an excellent man.

Perionius.

Some men alreadie in our dayes, have put to their helping handes H. Steph. to this worke of Imitation; as Perionius, Hen. Stephanus in dictionario P. Victorius. Ciceroniano, and Pet. Victorius most praise worthie of all, in that his learned worke conteynyng twentie five bookes de Varia Lectione; in which bookes be joyned diligentlie together, the best authors of both the tonges, where one doth feeme to imitate another.

> But all these, with Macrobius, Hessus, and other, be no more but common porters, caryers, and bringers of matter and stuffe together. They order nothing; they lay before you what is done; they do not teach you how it is done. They busie not themselves with forme of building; they do not declare this stuffe is thus framed by Demosthenes, and thus and thus by Tullie; and so likewise in Xenophon, Plato, and Isocrates, and Aristotle. For joyning Virgil with Homer, I have sufficientlie declared before.

Pindar. Horace.

The like diligence I would wishe to be taken in Pindar and Horace, an equal match for all respectes.

In

In tragedies, (the goodlieft argumente of all, and for the use either of a learned preacher, or a civill jentleman, * more profitable than Homer, Pindar, Virgil and Horace; yea comparable in myne opinion, with the doctrine of Aristotle, Plato, and Xenophon) the Grecians, Sophocles and Euripides, far over match our Seneca in Latin, namely in Sophocles. Oixovoμία & Decoro: although Senecas elocution and verse be verie com- Euripides, mendable + for his tyme. And for the matters of Hercules, Thebais, Hippolytus, and Troas, his imitation is to be gathered into the same booke, and to be tryed by the same touchstone, as is spoken before.

In histories, and namelie in Livie, the like diligence of imitation, could bring excellent learning, and breede stayde judgement in taking any like matter in hand.

Onely Livie were a sufficient taske for one mans studie, to compare Tit. Liv. him, first with his fellow for all respectes, Dionysius Halicarnassaus; who licarn. both lived in one tyme, took both one historie in hand to write, deferved both like prayse of learning and eloquence: then with Polybi- Polybiuszus, that wife writer, whom Livie professeth to folow; and if he would denie it, yet it is plaine, that the best part of the third decade in Livie, is in a manner translated out of the thyrd, and rest of Polybius: lastlie with Thucydides, to whose imitation Livie is curiously bent; as may Thucydides, well appeare by that one oration of those of Campania, asking aide of I Decad.

* Our author feems to have borrow'd this observation from MelanEthon. See his admirable epistle de legendis Tragædiis et comædiis; lib. 1mº epist.

"Hanc sententiam tragædiæ volunt omnium animis infigere, esse aliquam mentem æter-" nam, quæ semper atrocia scelera insignibus exemplis punit, moderatis verò et justis plerum-46 que dat tranquilliorem cursum.

" Quare tragcediarum lectionem valde utilem adolescentibus esse non dubium est, cum ad " commonefaciendos animos de multis vitæ officiis, et de frænandis immoderatis cupiditatibus, tum verò etiam ad eloquentiam."

† There are many conjectures made by learned men, concerning the time when these tragedies were writ, and who their author was. Mr. Ascham, by this expression, seems to bring them lower than most do. We have Erasmus's opinion in these words. "Tacitus commeorat illius (Senecæ) poemata, de quibus sentiens, incertum. Nam tragædiarum opus er eruditi quidam malunt Senecæ silio tribuere, quam huic: sunt, qui fratri Senecæ adscribant. Ex prima tragcedia versus aliquot resert, Due me parens, summique dominator polis. &c. Quanquam mini videtur opus noc tragcediarum non esse unius nominis." Lib. 28. ep. 12.

the

Thucyd.

the Romanes against the Samnites; * which is wholie taken, sentence, reason, argument, and order, out of the oration of Corcyra, asking like aide of the Athenienses against them of Corinth. If some diligent student would take paynes to compare them together, he should easilie perceive, that I do say trew.

A booke thus wholie filled with examples of imitation, first out of Tullie, compared with Plato, Xenophon, Isocrates, Demosthenes, and Aristotle; then out of Virgil and Horace, with Homer and Pindar; next out of Seneca, with Sophocles and Euripides; lastlie out of Livie, with Thucydides, Polybius, and Halicarnasseus, gathered with good diligence, and compared with right order, as I have expressed before, were another maner of worke for all kinde of learnyng, and namelie for eloquence, than be those cold gatherings of Macrobius, Hessus, Pieronius, Stephanus, and Victorius; which may be used (as I sayd before) in this case, as porters and caryers, deserving like prayse, as soch men do wages; but onely Sturmius is he, out of whom the trew survey, and whole workemanship, is speciallie to be learned.

I trust, this my writing shall give some good student occasion to take Opus de recta imitandi have any do it, than myselfe, yet surelie myselfe rather than none at all. And by Gods grace, if God do lend me life, with health, free leysure and libertie, with good liking, and a merrie hart, I will turne the best part of my studie and tyme, to toyle in one or other piece of this worke of imitation.

This diligence to gather examples, to give light and understanding to good precepts, is no new invention, but speciallie used of the best

authors

<sup>* &</sup>quot;Petitio Campanorum expressa est ex lib. r. Thucydidis, quo in loco Corcyræi auxilium ab Atheniensibus petunt. Quod quisque intelliget, qui utrasque orationes comparabit."
Sigonius.

† Something of this nature has fince been done by Jacobus Tollius, in his Gustus Criticarum Animadversionum ad Longinum: where he has with good judgment compared Pindar with Horace, Theocritus with Virgil, and Apollonius with Ovid; and some sew more beside. But had Mr. Ascham liv'd, we should certainly have seen a far more excellent performance on the subject.

authors and oldest writers. For Aristotle himselfe, as Diogenes Laertius Aristoteles. declareth, when he had written that goodlie booke of the Topickes, did gather out of historians and orators, so many examples as filled fifteene bookes, onelie to expresse the rules of his Topickes. These were the commentaries that Aristotle thought sit for his Topickes. And therefore, rii Græci, & to speake as I thinke, I never saw yet any commentarie upon Aristotles Latini in dilogicke, either in Greke or Latin, that ever I lyked; bicause they be alect. Aristotelis. rather spent in declaring schole poynt rules, than in gathering fitte examples for use and utterance, either by pen or talke. For precepts in all authors, and namelie in Aristotle, without applying unto them the imitation of examples, be hard, drie, and cold, and therefore barrayn, unfruitfull, and unpleafant. But Aristotle, namelie in his Topickes, and Elenches, should be, not onelie fruitfull, but also pleasant to, if examples out of Plato, and other good authors, were diligentlie gathered, and aptlie applied unto his most perfit preceptes there.

And it is notable, that my friende Sturmius writeth herein, that there Præcepta in is no precepte in Aristotles Topickes, whereof plentie of examples be not Aristotele: manifest in Platos workes. And I heare say, that an excellent learned exempla in Platone. man, Tomitanus in Italie, hath expressed everie fallacion in Aristotle, with diverse examples out of Plato. Would to God, I might once see fome worthie student of Aristotle and Plato, in Cambridge, that would joyne in one booke, the preceptes of the one, with the examples of the other. For fuch a labor were one speciall peece of that worke of imitation, which I do wishe were gathered together in one volume.

Cambridge, at my first comming thither, but not at my going away, committed this faulte in reading the preceptes of Aristotle without the examples of other authors. But herein, in my tyme, * thies men of worthie thie memorie, M. Redman, M. Cheke, M. Smith, M. Haddon, M. Watfon, put so to their helping handes, as that universitie, and all students there, as long as learning shall last, shall be bound unto them; if that trade in studie be trewlie followed, which those men left behind them there.

<sup>* &</sup>quot; Eo tempore Cantabrigiam venit, quo literæ & Græcæ, & Latinæ efflorescere, & præclara studia in ea academia herbescere, & ad summum hujus regni ornamentum maturescere coeperunt. Ea ætate postea floruit, quâ Georgius Dajus, Joan. Redmannus, Rob. Pemberus, Tho. Smithus, Joan. Checus, Nic. Ridlæus, Edm. Grindallus, Tho. Watsonus, Gualterus Haddonus, Jasob. Pilkintonus, Robertus, Jean. Christophersonus, Tho. Wilsonus, Joan. Setonus, & infinit alii excellenti dostrina præditi, & perspelar vitæ monutque probitate ornati, " magna academiæ eo tempore lumina, maxima postea totius reipublicæ ornamenta, vigue-" runt.

By this finall mention of Cambridge, I am caryed into three imaginations: first, into a sweete remembrance of my tyme spent there; then, into some carefull thoughts for the grevous alteration that followed fone after; lastlie, into much joy, to heare tell of the good recoverie, and earnest forwardnes in all good learning there again.

To utter their my thoughts formulat more largelie, were formulat beside my matter, yet not very farre out of the way; because it shall wholy tend to the good encoragement and right confideration of learnyng, which is my full purpose in writyng this little booke: whereby alfo shall well appeare this fentence to be most trewe, "That onelie good " men, by their government and example, make happy tymes in everie " degree and state."

Dr. Nicolas Medcalfe.

litie of

Dr. Nicolas Medcalfe, that honorable father, was master of S. Johnes colledge when I came thither; a man meanelie learned himselfe, but not meanely affectioned to fet forward learning in others. He found that colledge fpending fcarfe two hundred markes by the yeare: he left it fpending a thousand markes, and more. Which he procured, not with his money, but by his wisdome; not chargeablie bought by him, but liberallie given by others by his meane, for the zeal and honor they bore to learnyng. And that which is worthy of memorie, all theis. givers were almost northern men; who, being liberallie rewarded in the fervice of their prince, bestowed it as liberallie for the good of their con-The partia- trie. Some men thought therefore, that Dr. Medcalfe was partial to northern men: but fure I am of this, that northern men were partial in.

doctrinam furrexerunt." Edv. Grant.

northern "Hi enim, & ex his præcipuè Tho. Smithus, academiæ splendor, & Joan. Checus, Canta.

&quot; brigiæ decus, sua exemplo, eruditione, diligentia, constantia, consilio, non studendi so-" lum, sed rectè vivendi ordine, ad præclara studia omnes adduxerunt, & concitarunt, qui ab-" eo tempore ad hunc usque diem in Cantabrigia succreverunt, & ad eminentem aliquam.

doing more good, and giving more landes to the forderance of learn-men in St. yng, than any other contriemen, in those daies, did: which deede Johnes colledge. Thould have been rather an example of goodnes for others to followe, than matter of malice for anie to envie, as some there were that did.

Trewly, Dr. Medcalfe was partiall to none, but indifferent to all; a master for the whole, a father to everie one in that colledge. There was none fo poore, if he had either will to goodnes, or wit to learning, that could lack being there, or should depart from thence for any need. I am witnes myselfe, that mony many times was brought into yong mens studies by strangers whom they knew not. In which doing, this worthy Nicolaus folowed the steppes * of good olde S. Nicolaus, that learned bishop. He was a Papiste indeede; but would to God, amonge all us Protestants I might once see but one, that would winne like praise, in doing like good, for the advancement of learning and vertue. And yet, though he were a Papist, if any yong man, geven to new learning, (as they termed it) went beyond his fellowes, in witte, labour, and towardness; even the same neither lacked open praise to encourage him, nor private exhibition to mainteyne him; as worthy Sir 7. Cheke, if he were alive, would beare good witness, and so can many mo. I myselfe, one of the meanest of a great number in that colledge, because there appeared in me some small shew of towardnes and diligence, lacked not his favor to forder me in learnyng.

And being a boy, new batchelor of artes, I chanced amonges my companions to speake against the Pope; which matter was then in every mans mouth, bycause Dr. Haines and Dr. Skippe were come from the court, to debate the same matter by preaching, and disputation in the universitie. This hapened the same time when I stoode to be selow there. My taulke came to Dr. Medcalses eare: I was called before him and the seniores; and after grevious rebuke, and some punishment, open warning was given to all the selowes, none to be so hardie as to give me his voice at that election. And yet, for all those open threats, the good father himselse privile procured, that I should even then be chosen fellow; but the election being done, he made counti-

* See his life wrote by Platina, who stiles him, in omni genere virtutis unici viri exemplar.

nance of great discontentation thereat. This good mans goodness, and fatherlie difcretion, used towards me that one day, shall never out of my remembrance all the dayes of my life. And for the same cause have I put it here, in this fmall record of learning. For next Gods providence, furely that day was, by that good fathers meanes, dies natalis to me, for the whole foundation of the poore learning I have, and of all the furderance that hitherto elsewhere I have obteyned.

This his goodnes stood not still in one or two, but flowed abundantlie over all that colledge, and brake out also to norishe good wittes in every part of that universitie: whereby, at his departing thence, he left soch a companie of felowes and scholers in St. Johnes colledge, as can scarfe be found now in some whole universitie; which, either for divinitie, on the one fide or other, or for civill fervice to their prince and contrie, have bene, and are yet to this day, notable ornaments to this whole realme. Yea St. Johnes did then so flourish, as Trinitie colledge, that princely house now, at the first erection, was but colonia deducta out of St. Johnes, not onelie for their master, fellowes, and scholers, but alfo, which is more, for their whole both order of learning, and difcipline of manners. And yet to this day, it never tooke master but soch as was bred up before in St. Johnes; doing the dewtie of a good colonia to her metropolis; as the auncient cities in Greece, and some yet in Italie at this day, are accustomed to do.

S. Johnes stoode in this state, untill those hevie tymes, and that grevous change, * that chanced anno 1553; when mo perfite scholers were dispersed from thence in one month, than many yeares can reare up Aper de Syl-againe. For when Aper de Sylva had passed the seas, and fastened his foote againe in Englande, not onelie the two faire groves of learning in Englande were eyther cut up by the roote, or troden downe to the ground, and wholie went to wracke; but the yong spring there, and everie where else, was pitifullie nipt and over-troden by very beastes; and also the fairest standers of all were rooted up, and cast into the fire, va. Pfal. lxxx. 13.

<sup>* &</sup>quot; Anno 1553, & Julii 6to, nobilissimus princeps, Edvardus Sextus, immatura morte, " ad hujus regni maximum detrimentum, ad piorum omnium ingentem dolorem, ad omni-" um Anglorum immenfum malum, & Rogeri Afchami magnam calamitatem diem obiit." Edv. Grant.

to the great weakning even at this day of Christes church in Englande, both for religion and learnyng.

And what good could chance then to the universities, when some of the greatest, though not of the wisest, nor best learned, nor best men neyther of that side, did labor to persuade, † "that ignorance was "better than knowledge?" which they ment, not for the laitie onelie, but also for the greatest rable of their spiritualtie, what other pretense openlie soever they made. And therefore did some of them at Cambridge (whom I will not name openlie) cause hedge priestes sette out of the contrie, to be made sellowes in the universitie; saying in their talke privilie, and declaring by their deedes openlie, "that he was selow good enough for their tyme, if he could weare a gowne and a tipet comlie, and have hys crowne shorne faire and roundlie; and could turne his portesse and * pie readilie." Which I speake, not to reprove any order either of apparell, or other dewtie, that may be well and indifferentlie used; but to note the miserie of that time, when the benefites provided for learnyng were so sowie misused.

And what was the fruite of this seade? Verely, judgement in doctrine was wholy altered; order in discipline very sore changed; the love of good learnyng began sodenly to wax cold; the knowledge of the tonges (in spite of some that therein had florished) was manifestly contemned: and so, the way of right study purposely perverted; the choice of good authors, of malice confounded; olde sophistrie, I say not well, not olde, but that new rotten sophistrie, began to beard, and sholder logicke in her owne tonge: yea, I know that heades were cast together, and counsels devised, that Duns, with all the rable of barbarous questionistes, should have dispossessed of their place and rowme, Aristotle, Plato, Cicero, Tullie, and Demosthenes; when good M. Redman, and those two ro, Demostrates of that universitie, M. Cheke and M. Smith, with their henes.

scholers,

+ See this fentence taken out of St. Chrysostome, cited before.

* Some form the word pi from wivag, or wivaxidiov, a table of order, how things should be digested; but the Latin is pica, from a mark, I suppose, not unlike the coronis, often placed in the end of books, and sometimes elsewhere. Others derive it from litera picata, a great black letter, at the beginning of some new order. The printers have still in use the Pica letter.

fcholers, had brought to florishe as notably in Cambridge, as ever they did in Grece and in Italie; and for the doctrine of those fowre, the fowre pillers of learning, Cambridge then giving no place to no universitie, neither in France, Spaine, Germanie, nor Italie. Also, in outward behavior, then began simplicity in apparell to be laid aside, courtlie galantnes to be taken up; frugalitie in diet was privatelie misliked, towne-going to good cheare openly used; honest pastimes, joyned with labor, left off in the fieldes; unthristie and idle games, haunted corners, and occupied the nightes: contention in youth no where for learning; factions in the elders every where for trisles.

Shootinge.

All which miseries at length, by Gods providence, had their end * 16th Novemb. 1558. Since which tyme, the yong fpring hath shot up so faire, as now there be in Cambridge againe many goodly plantes, (as did well appeare at the Queenes Majesties late being there) which are like to grow to mightie great timber, to the honor of learning, and great good of their countrie; if they may stand their tyme, as the best plantes there were wont to do; and if some old dotterell trees, with standing over nie them, and dropping upon them, do not either hinder, or crooke their growing: wherein my feare is the leffe, feeing + fo worthie a justice of an oyre hath the present oversight of that whole chace: who was himselfe somtyme in the fairest spring that ever was there of learning, one of the forwardest yong plantes in all that worthy college of S. Johnes: who now by grace is growne to foch greatnesse, as, in the temperate and quiet shade of his wisdome, (next the providence of God, and goodnes of one) in thies our daies, religio for finceritie, literæ for order and advancement, respub. for happie and quiet government, have, to the great rejoyfing of all good men, speciallie reposed themselves.

Now to return to that question, "Whether one, a few, many, or "all, are to be followed?" My aunswere shall be short: All, for him that is desirous to know all; yea, the worst of all, as questionistes,

and

* The day of Queen Elifabeth's happy accession to the throne; tho' our historians fix it on the seventeenth.

† Sir William Cecil, principal secretary of state, and chancellor of the university of Cambridge.

and all the barbarous nation of schole-men, helpe for one or other confideration. But in everie feparate kinde of learnyng, and studie by itself, ye must follow choselie a few, and chiefly some one, and that namelie in our schole of eloquence, either for penne or talke. And as in portraiture, and paintyng, wife men chofe not that workman, that can onelie + make a faire hand, or a well facioned legge; but foch a one, as can furnish up fullie all the fetures of the whole body of a man, woman, and child; and withall is able to, by good skill, to give to every one of these three, in their proper kinde, the right forme, the trewe figure, the naturall color, that is fit and due to the dignity of a man, to the bewtie of a woman, to the sweetnes of a yong babe: even likewise do we seeke soch an one in our schole to folow; who is able always, in all matters, to teache plainlie, to delite pleasantlie, and to cary away by force of wife talke, all that shall heare or read him; and is so excellent in deed, as witte is able, or wishe can hope, to attayne unto: and this not onelie to ferve in the Latin or Greke tonge, but also in our own Englishe language. But yet, because the providence of God hath left unto us in no other tonge, fave onelie in the Greke and Latin tonge, the trew precepts, and perfite examples of eloquence; therefore must we feeke in the authors onelie of those two tonges, the trewe paterne of eloquence, if in any other mother tonge we looke to attaine, either toperfit utterance of it ourselves, or skilfull judgement of it in others.

And now to know, what author doth meddle onlie with some one piece and member of eloquence, and who doth persitlie make up the whole bodie, I will declare; as I can call to remembrance the goodlie talke that I have had oftentimes of the trewe difference of authors, with that jentleman of worthie memorie, my dearest friend, and teacher of all the little poor learnyng I have, Syr John Cheke.

The trew difference of authors is best knowne, per diversa genera dicendi, that everie one used: and therefore here I will divide genus dicendi.

* Amilium circa ludum faber imus, & ungues
Exprimet, et molles im tabitur ære capillos;
Infelix operis fumma: quia ponere totum
Nefcict. Horace de Aste Poetica.

dicendi, not into these three, Tenue, mediocre, & grande, but as the matter of everie author requireth; as,

These differre one from another in choice of wordes, in framyng of sentences, in handling of argumentes, and use of right forme, figure, and number, proper and fitte for everie matter: and everie one of these is diverse also in itselfe; as first,

And here, who soever hath bene diligent to read advisedlie over Terence, Seneca, Virgil, Horace, or els Aristophanus, Sophocles, Homer, and Pindar; and shall diligentlie marke the difference they use, in proprietie of wordes, in forme of sentence, in handlyng of their matter; he shall easelie perceive what is sitte and decorum in everie one, to the trew use of persite imitation.

When M. Watson in St. Johns college at Cambridge, wrote his excellent tragedie of Absalon; M. Cheke, he, and I, for that part of trew imitation, had many pleasant talkes together, in comparing the preceptes of Aristotle, and Horace de Arte Poetica, with the examples of Euripides, Sophocles, and Seneca. Few men, in writing of tragedies in our dayes, have shot at this marke. Some in Englande, moe in France, Germanie, and Italie also, have written tragedies in our tyme: of which, not one, I am sure, is able to abyde the trew touch of Aristotles preceptes, and Euripides examples, save onely two, that ever I saw, M. Watsons Absalon, and Georgius Buchananus Jephthe.

One

One man in Cambridge, * well liked of many, but best liked of himfelfe, was many tymes bold and busie to bryng matters upon stages, which he called tragedies. In one, whereby he looked to wynne his fpurres, and whereat many ignorant felowes fast clapped their handes, + he began the Protafis with Trochæis octonariis: which kinde of verse, as it is but feldome and rare in tragedies, so is it never used, save onelie in Epitali; when the tragedie is hiest and hotest, and full of greatest troubles. I remember full well what M. Watson merelie fayd unto me of his blindenesse and boldnes in that behalfe; although otherwise there passed much frendship between them. M. Watson had another maner of care of perfection, with a feare and reverence of the judgement of the best learned; who to this day would never suffer yet his Absalon to go abroad, and that onelie ‡ bicause in locis paribus Anapæstus is twife or thrife used instead of Iambus. A smal faulte, and such a one as perchance would never be marked, no neither in Italie, nor France. This I write, not so much to note the first, or praise the last, as to leave in memorie of writing, for good example to posteritie, what perfection in any time, was most diligentlie fought for in like maner in all kinde of learnyng, in that most worthie college of St. Johnes in Cambridge.

for this reason, especially with the comedians, as Hephastion has observed.

Έυς ίσκε αι δε παρά τοις Κωμικοίς συνεχώς ο 'Ανάπαις . τον γάρ βίον ετοι μιμέμενοι, Θέλουσι δοκείν διαλελυμένως διαλέγεσθαι, κ μη εμμείρως. ο δε 'Ανάπαις δο διαλελυμένην ποιεί την φράσιν, δια το τρίσημου.

I suppose the true reason hereof was, either an unwillingness to appear in print, or a disfatisfaction with the times, he being one of the ejected bishops.

* Who he means I know not: but he seems to have had St. Hierome before him, when he wrote this passage. "Unus quidam, poeta nominatus, homo perlitteratus, cujus sunt illa colloquia poetarum ac philosophorum, quam facit Euripidem et Menandrum inter se, et also loco Socratem atque Epicurum disserentes, quorum ætates non annis, sed seculis scimus esse disjunctas; quantos is plausus et clamores movet? Multos enim condiscipulos habet in theatro, qui simul literas non didicerunt." Epist. ad Nepot.

† &quot;Dividitur nova comœdia in quatuor partes: prologum, protafin, catastrophen."

† What is here assign'd, could never be the true reason of Mr. Watson's refusing to publish his tragedy, so accurately composed, as to be put in competition with Buchanan's Jepthe. For why did he not correct what he judged amis? a thing so very easy for him to do. Tho' what if we say, there was no fault in this respect committed, nor any need of alteration? For excepting the sixth place, the Anapest has free liberty to stand where it pleases; and that for this reason, especially with the comedians, as Hephastion has observed.

Historicum, in { Diaria, Annales, Commentarios, fusiam bistoriam.

For what proprietie in wordes, simplicitie in sentences, plainnesse and light, is comlie for these kindes, Casar and Livie, for the two last, are persite examples of imitation. And for the two sirst, * the old paterns be lost; and as for some that be present, and of late tyme, they be sitter to be read once for some pleasure, than oft to be perused, for any good imitation of them.

Philosophicum, in Sermonem; as Officia Ciceronis, & Ethica Arist.

Contentionem; as, the Dialogues of Plato, Xenophon, and Cicero.

Of which kinde of learnyng, and right imitation thereof, Carolus Sigonius hath written of late both learnedlie and eloquentlie; but best of all, my frende Joan. Sturmius, in hys commentaries upon Gorgias Platonis; which booke I have in writyng, and is not yet set out in print.

Oratorium, in { Humile, Mediocre, Sublime.

Examples of these three in the Greke tonge, be plentifull and persite, as Lycias, Isocrates, and Demosthenes: and all three, in onlie Demosthenes in diverse orations; as contra Olympiodorum, in Leptinem, and pro Ctestablonte. And trew it is, that Hermogenes writeth of Demosthenes, † " that all formes of eloquence be persite in him." In Ciceroes orations, Medium & Sublime, be most excellentlie handled; but Humile in his.

orations

<sup>* &</sup>quot; Atqui ne nostros contemnas, inquit Antonius; Græci ipsi sic initio scriptitarunt, ut " noster Cato, ut l'ictor, ut l'iso. Erat enim historia nihil aliud, nisi annalium consectio." Ciccro de Orat. lib. 2.

† See Hermogenes's first book de Formis Orationis, cap. 1. I have not the Greek by me, and the Latin is not worth citing.

orations is seldome seen: yet neverthelesse, in other bookes, as in some parte of his Ossices, and specially in Partitionibus, he is comparable in boc bumili, & disciplinabili genere, even with the best that ever wrote in Greke. But of Cicero more fullie in sitter place.

And thus the trew difference of stiles in everie author, and everie kinde of learning, may easily be knowne by this division,

In Genus Poeticum, Historicum, Philosophicum, Oratorium.

Which I thought in this place to touch onelie, not to profecute at large; bicause, God willing, in the Latin tonge, I will fullie handle it in my booke de Imitatione.

Now to touch more particularlie, which of those authors, that be now most commonlie in mens handes, will sone affourd you some piece of eloquence; and what manner a piece of eloquence; and what is to be liked and followed; and what to be misliked, and eschewed in them; and how some agayne will surnishe you fully withall, rightly and wisely considered, somewhat I will write, as I have heard Syr John Cheke many times say.

The Latin tonge, concerning any part of pureness of it, from the spring to the decay of the same, did not endure moch longer, * than is the life of a well aged man; scarse one hundred years from the tyme of the last Scipio Africanus and Lælius, to the empire of Augustus. And it is notable, that Velleius Paterculus † writeth of Tullie, " how that the per-

<sup>* &</sup>quot;Ipse ego in Britannia vidi senem, qui se fateretur et pugnæ intersuisse, qua Cæsarem inferentem arma Britanniæ, arcere litoribus, et pellere aggressi sunt. Ita si eum, qui arma tus C. Cæsari restitit, vel captivitas, vel voluntas, vel satum aliquod in Urbem pertraxisset, idem Cæsarem ipsum et Ciceronem audire potuit, et nostris quoque actionibus interesse." Dialogus de Oratoribus.

† &quot;Historicos (ut Livium quoque priorum ætati adstruas) præter Catonem, & quosdam veteres & obscuros, minus LXXX annis circumdatum ævum tulit; ut nec poetarum in T t 2

" perfection of eloquence did so remayne onelie in him, and in his time, " as before him were few which might moch delight a man, or after him, any worthy admiration, but such as Tullie might have seene, and such as might have seene Tullie." And good cause why; for no perfection is durable. Encrease hath a time, and decay likewise; but all perfit ripenesse remaineth but a moment: as is plainly seen in fruites, plummes, and cherries; but more sensibly in flowers, as roses, and such like; and yet as trewlie in all greater matters. For what naturallie *can go no hier, must naturallie yield and stoupe againe.

Of this short tyme of purenesse of the Latin tonge, for the first fortie yeares of it, and all the tyme before, we have no piece of learnvng left, fave Plautus and Terence, - with a little rude unperfit pamflet of the elder Cato. And as for Plautus, except the scholemaster be able to make wife and warie choice, first, in proprietie of wordes, then in framing of phrases and sentences, and chieflie in choice of honestie of matter; your scholer were better to play, than learne all that is in him. But furelie, if judgement for the tonge, and direction for the manners, be wifely joined with the diligent reading of Piautus, then trewlie Plautus, for that purenesse of the Latin tonge in Rome, when Rome did most florish in well doing, and so thereby in well speaking alfo, is foch a plentifull store-house for common eloquence in meane matters, and all private mens affaires, as the Latin tonge, for that respect, hath not the like againe. When I remember the worthy tyme of Rome, wherein Plautus did live, I must nedes honor the talke of that tyme, which we see Plautus doth use.

antiquius citeriusve processit ubertas. At oratio, ac vis forensis, persectumque prose eloquentiæ decus, ut idem separetur Cato, (pace P. Crassi, Scipionisque & Lælii & Gracchorum, & Fannii, & Ser. Galbæ dixerim) ita universa sub principe operis sui erupit Tullio;
ut delectari ante eum paucissimis, mirari vero neminem possis, nisi aut ab illo visum, aut qui illum viderit." Paterculus.

<sup>* &</sup>quot;Alit æmulatio ingenia: & nunc invidia, nunc admiratio incitationem accendit. Ma"turè quoque, (so I think it should be read) quod summo studio petitum est, ascendit in sum"mum: difficilisque in persecto mora est; naturaliterque quod procedere non potest, recedit."

Idem.

† One would imagine, Mr. Ascham had never seen Victorius's edition of Cato, de Re Rustica: fince he here calls it a little rude impersect pamphlet. And yet 'twas printed by Rob. Stephens, anno 1543.

Terence

Terence is also a store-house of the same tonge, for another tyme, following soone after; and although he be not so full and plentyful as Plautus is, for multitude of matters, and diversitie of wordes; yet his wordes be chosen so purelie, placed so orderlie, and all his stuffe so neatlie packed up, and wittely compassed in every place, as, by all wise mens judgement, "he is counted the cunninger workman, and to have his shop, for the rowme that is in it, more finely appointed, and trimlier ordered, than Plautus is."

Three things chiefly, both in Plautus and Terence, are to be specially confidered; the matter, the utterance, the wordes, the meter. matter in both, is altogether within the compasse of the meanest mens maners, and doth not stretch to any thing of any great weight at all: but standeth chiefly * in utteryng the thoughtes and conditions of hard fathers, foolish mothers, unthrifty young men, craftie servantes, sotle bawdes, and wilie harlots; and so is moch spent in finding out fine fetches, and packing up pelting matters, foch as in London commonlie come to the hearing of the masters of Bridewell. Here is base stuffe for that scholer, that should become hereafter either a good minister in religion, or a civill jentleman in fervice of his prince and contrie; (except the preacher do know foch matters to confute them) when ignorance furelie in all foch thinges, were better for a civill jentleman, than knowledge. " And thus for matter, both Plautus and Terence be like meane " painters, that worke by halfes; and be cunning onelie in making the " worst part of the picture: as if one were skilfull in painting the bodie " of a naked person from the navell downward, but nothing else."

For word and speach, Plautus is more plentifull, and Terence more pure and proper. And for one respect, Terence is to be embraced above all that ever wrote in thys kinde of argument: bicause it is well known, Dum fallax servus, durus pater, improba lena, Vivent, dum meretrix blanda; Menandros erit.

And so has Terence before him with no less art, in the prologue to his Eunuchus.

* In this is chiefly contained the subject-matter of all comedies; which Ovid has ingeniously comprized in two verses:

THE WORKS OF

by good recorde of learning, and that by * Ciceroes owne witnes, that fome comedies bearing Terence name, were written by worthy Scipio, and wife Lælius; and namely Heautontimorumenos and Adelphi. And therefore, as oft as I read those comedies, so oft doth sound in myne eare the pure fine taulke of Rome, which was used by the floure of the worthiest nobilitie that ever Rome bred. Let the wifest man, and best learned that liveth, read advisedlie over the first scene of Heautontimorumenos, and the first fcene of Adelphi; and let him confiderately judge, whether it is the talke of a fervile stranger borne, or rather even that milde eloquent wife speach, which Cicero in Brutus doth fo lively expresse in Lælius. And yet nevertheleffe, in all this good proprietic of wordes, and pureneffe of phrases, which be in Terence, ye must not follow him alwayes in placing of them; bicause for the meter sake, some wordes in him somtyme be driven awrie, which require a straighter placing in plaine prose, if ye will forme, as I would ve should do, your speach and writing to that excellent perfitnesse, which was onely in Tullie, or onelie in Tullies tyme.

The meter and verse of Plautus and Terence be verie meane, and not to be followed: which is not their reproach, ‡ but the fault of the tyme, wherein they wrote, when no kinde of poetrie, in the Latin tonge, was brought to persection; as doth well appeare in the fragmentes of Ennius, Cæcilius, and others, and evidentlie in Plautus, and Terence; if thies in Latin be compared with right skil with Homer, Euripides, Ari-

<sup>* &</sup>quot;Secutus sum, non dico Cæcilium, Mane ut ex portu in Piræeum; (malus enim auctor Latinitatis est) sed Terentium, cujus sabellæ propter elegantiam sermonis, putabantur à "C. Lælio scribi: Here aliquot adolescentuli coimus in Piræeum." Cic. lib. 7. epist. ad Attic. ep. 3.

† &quot;De ipsius Lælii & Scipionis ingenio, quanquam ea jam est opinio, ut plurimum tribuatur ambobus; dicendi tamen laus est in Lælio illustrior. ———— Nam ut ex bellica "laude adspirare ad Africanum nemo potest, in qua ipsa egregium Viriati bello reperimus "fuisse Lælium: sic ingenii, literarum, eloquentiæ, sapientiæ denique etsi utrique primas, "priores tamen libenter deserunt Lælio." Cic. de claris Orator. In which place, he has drawn a full comparison betwixt Lælius and Galba.

† — In longum tamen ævum
Manserunt, hodiéque manent vestigia ruris.
Serus enim Græcis admovit acumina chartis;
Et post Punica bella quietus, quærere cæpit, Quid Sophocles, ct Thespis, et Æschylus utile ferrent. Horace, ep. 1. lib. 11.
slophanes, flophanes, and other in Greke of like fort. Cicero himselfe * doth complaine of this unperfitnes; but more plainly Quintilian, faying, + In Comædia maximè claudicamus; &, vix levem consequimur umbram: and most earnestly of all, Horace in de Arte Poetica. Which he doth namely propter carmen Lambicum; and referreth all good students herein to the imitation of the Greke tonge, faying;

> Vos exemplaria Graca Nocturna versate manu, versate diurna.

This matter maketh me gladly remember my fweete tyme spent at Cambrige, and the pleasant talke which I had oft with M. Cheke, and M. Watson, of this fault, not onely in the olde Latin poets, but also in our new English rymers at this day. They wished, as Virgil and Horace were not wedded to follow the faultes of former fathers, (a shrewd marriage in greater matters) but by right Imitation of the perfit Grecians, had brought poetry to perfitnesse also in the Latin tonge; that we Englishmen likewise would acknowledge and understand rightfullie our rude beggarly ryming, brought first into Italie by Gothes and Hunnes, when all good verses, and all good learning to, were destroyed by them; and after caryed into France and Germanie, and at last receyved into Englande by men of excellent wit indeede, but of small learning, and lesse judgement in that behalfe.

But now, when men know the difference, and have the examples both of the best, and of the worst; surelie to follow rather the Gothes in ryming, than the Greekes in trew verfifying, were even to eate acornes with fwyne, when we may freely eate wheate bread amonges men. In-" obtinuerint." Quint. de Instit. Orat. lib. 10. cap. 1.

<sup>* &</sup>quot; Comicorum senarios propter similitudinem sermonis sic sæpe abjectos esse, ut nonnunquam in his numerus et versus vix intelligi posit." In Orat. ad Bratum. Horace's judgment is much the same, more particularly with respect to Plantus.

+ &quot;In comcedia maximè claudicamus: licet Varro dicat, Musas, Elii Stolonis s ntentia, Plantino sermone lecuturas suisse, si Latine loqui vellent; licet Cæcilium veteres laudibus sece rant; licet Terentii scripta ad Scipionem Africanum reserantur: quæ tamen sunt in hoc ce genere elegantissma, & plus adhuc habitura gratiæ, si intra versus trimetros stetissent.
ce Vix levem consequimur um ram: adeo ut mihi sermo ipse Romanus non recipere videatur

<sup>4</sup> illam solis concessam Atticis Venerem, quando eam ne Græci quidem in alio genere linguæ

deede Chauser, * Th. Norton of Bristol, + my lord of Surrey, M. Wiat, † Th. Phaer, and other jentlemen, in translating Ovide, Palingenius, and Seneca, have gone as farre to their great praise, as the copie they followed could cary them. But if foch good wittes, and forward diligence, had bene directed to follow the best examples, and not have bene caryed by tyme and custome, to content themselves with that barbarous and rude ryming; amonges their other worthy praifes, which they have justly deserved, this had not bene the least, to be counted amonges men of learnyng and skill, more like unto the Grecians, than unto the Gothians, in handlyng of their verse.

Indeede our English tonge, having in use chiefly wordes of one syllable, which commonly be long, doth not well receive the nature of Carmen Heroicum: bicause Daetylus, the aptest soote for that verse, conteining one long, and two short, is seldom therefore found in English; and doth also rather stumble, than stand upon Monosyllabis. Quintilian, in hys learned chapter || de Compositione, giveth this letton de Monosyliabis before me; and in the same place doth justlie invey against all ryming; that if there be anie who be angry with me for milliking of ryming, they may be angry for company too with Quintilian also, for the same thing: and yet Quintilian had not so just cause to mislike of it then, as men have at this day.

* Thomas Norton, born in Bristol, an alchymist, stourished in the reign of Edward IV.

+ &quot;In the latter end of the reign of Henry the eighth, sprung up a new company of courtly poets, of whom Sir Thomas Wiat the elder, and Henry Earl of Surrey, were the two chief-tains; who having travelled into Italy, and there tasted the sweet and stately measures and file of the Italian poely, as novices newly crept out of the scholes of Dame, Ariosto, and " Petrarch, they greatly polished our rude and homely manner of vulgar poefy from that it " had been before: and for that cause may justly be said the first reformers of our English " metre and slile." The Art of English Poefy; an anonymous writer in Queen Elizabeth's reign.

‡ &quot;In Queen Marie's time flourished above any other Doctor Phaer; one that was well learned, and excellently well translated into English verse heroical, certain books of Virgil's " Eneis." The fame author.

&quot; Etiam monofyllaba, si plura funt, malè continuabuntur, quia necesse est, compositio multis clausulis concisa subsultet. Ideoque etiam brevium verborum ac nominum vitanda continuatio, & ex diverso quoque longorum: afferunt enim quandam dicendi tarditatem. " Illa quoque vitia sunt ejusdem loci, si cadentia similiter & similiter desinentia, & eodem 66 modo declinata, multa jungantur." Idem, lib. 9. cap. 4.

And although Carmen Exametrum doth rather trotte and hoble, than run fmothly, in our English tonge; yet I am sure our English tonge * will receive Carmen Iambicum as naturallie as either Greeke or Latin. But for ignorance men cannot like, and for idlenes men will not labor, to come to any perfitnes at all. For as the worthy poets in Athens and Rome were more carefull to fatisfie the judgement of one learned, than rashe in pleasing the humor of a rude multitude; even so, if men in Englande now had the like reverend regard to learnyng, skill, and judgement, and durst not presume to write, except they came with the like learnyng; and also did use like diligence in searchyng out, not onelie just measure in everie meter (as everie ignorant person may easielie do) but also trew quantitie in every foote and sillable, (as onelie the learned shall be able to do, and as the Grekes and Romans were wont to do) furelie then rashe ignorant heades, which now can easily reckon up fourten fyllables, and eafilie stumble on every ryme, either durst not, for lacke of such learning, or els would not, in avoyding fuch labor, be so busie, as everie where they be; and shoppes in London should not be so full of lewd and rude rymes, as commonlie they are. But now the ripest of tonge be readiest to write. "And many " daily in fetting out bookes, and balettes, make great shew of blossoms " and buddes; in whom is neither roote of learning, nor fruit of wif-" dome at all."

* This our incomparable Milton, not inferior to any of the ancients, well understood; as indeed he did every thing else, worth knowing, in the whole compass of learning. He that reads him with right judgment, will easily observe, what use he makes of the Iambic, and how frequently in the second place, to give strength and firmness to his verse. As for instance, in these, which I never read without the greatest admiration:

Part on the plain, or in the air fublime Upon the wing, or in fwift race centend, As at th' Olympian games, or Pythian fields.

And a little after, in this fweet verse, where all the feet, excepting the fourth, are lambics.

For cloquence the foul, fong charms the sense.

This excellency almost peculiar to himself in our language, as also his setting aside rhyme, as no true ornament of verse, I question not but Mr. Milton owes in a great measure (next to his own natural genius) to the authority and reason of this wise and ingenious writer. 'Tis certain, he had the memory of Sir John Cheke in great veneration: and to me he seems, in the short account of his verse, printed before his poem, to have had our author in his eye.

+ — Satis est equitem mihi plaudere, ut audax, Centemptis aliis, explosa Arbuscula dixit.

Horace.

Some, that make * Chaucer in English, and Petrarch in Italian, their gods in verses, and yet be not able to make trewe difference, what is a fault, and what is a just praise, in those two worthie wittes, will moch mislike this my wryting. But such men be even like followers of Chaucer and Petrarch, as one here in Englande did follow Syr Tho. More; who, being most unlike unto him in wit and learning, nevertheless, in wearing his gowne + awrye upon one shoulder, as Syr Tho. More was wont to do, would nedes be counted lyke unto him.

This mislikyng of ryming beginneth not now of any new fangle singularitie, but hath bene long misliked of many, and that of men of greatest learnyng, and deepest judgement. And soch that defend it, do so, either for lacke of knowledge, what is best; or els of verie envie, that any should performe that in learnyng, whereunto they, as I sayd before, either for ignorance cannot, or for idlenes will not labor to attain unto.

And you that praise this ryming, bicause you neither have reason why to like it, nor can shew learning to defend it; yet I will helpe you with the authoritie of the oldest and learnedest tyme. In Greece, when poetrie was even at the hiest pitch of persitness, one Simmias Rhodius, of a certain singularity, wrote a book in ryming Greeke verses, naming it  $\Omega \partial v$ , conteyning the sable, how Supiter, in likeness of a swan, gat that egge upon Leda, whereof came Castor, Pollux, and saire Elena. This booke was so liked, that it had sew to read it, but none to solve but was presentlie contemned; and soon after, both author and booke

" tudine, qualia permulta nobis solent adhærere." In Epist. ad Ulricum Huttenum.

* Jeffrey Chaucer, born at Woodsteck, father of our English poets, lived in the time of Richard II. who gave him the manour of Newhalme in Oxfordshire. He died in 1440.

+ Of this ridiculous and servile imitation, wise men have always complain'd. Horace is full of it; and so is Quintilian, and Martial. But none so apposite as Tully, in his second book de Oracore:

&quot;Nihil est facilius, qu'am amictum imitari alicujus, aut statum, aut motum. Si verò etiam vitiose aliquid est, id sumere, & in eo vitiosum esse, non magnum est: ut ille, qui nunc etiam amissa voce surit in republica Fusius, nervos in dicendo C. Fimbriæ, quos tamen habuit ille, non assequitur; oris pravitatem, & verborum latitudinem imitatur."

Erasmus, in his account of Sir Thomas Moore, has these words: "Dexter humerus paulo "videtur eminentior lævo, præsertim cum incedit; id quod illi non accidit natura, sed assuefo forgotten by men, and confumed by tyme, as fcarfe the name of either is kept in memorie of learnyng. And the like folie was never folowed of any many hondred years after, until the Hunnes and Gothians, and other barbarous nations of ignorance and rude fingularitie, did revive the fame folie agayne.

The noble lord Henry * Earle of Surrey, first of all Englishmen, in trans- The Earle of lating the fourth booke of Virgil; and + Gonfalvo Periz, that excellent Gonfalvo learned man, and fecretarie to king Philip of Spaine, in translating the Periz. Ulisses of Homer out of Greke into Spanishe, have both, by good judgement, avoyded the fault of ryming: yet neither of them hath fullie hit perfite and trew verfifying. Indeede they observe just number, and even feete: but here is the fault, that their feete be feete without jointes, that is to fay, not distinct by trew quantitie of fillables. And so soch feete be but benummed feete; and be even as unfitte for a verse to turne, and runne roundly withall, as feete of braffe or wood be unwieldie to go well withall. And as a foote of wood is a plaine shew of a manifest maine: even so feete in our English versifying without quantitie and jointes, be fure fignes, that the verfe is either borne deformed, unnatural, or lame; and fo verie unfeemlie to looke upon, except to men that be gogle eyed themselves.

The spying of this fault now, is not the curiositie of English eyes, but even the good judgement also of the best that write in these dayes in Italie, and namelie of that worthie Senese Felice Figliucci; who # Senese Felice Figliucci.

U u 2

writing

* By a mistake, it was printed till now, Thomas Earl of Surrey. The title of his poems is, Songs and Sonnets, written by the Right Honourable Lord Henry Howard, late Earl of Sur-rey. Of him, and Sir Thomas Wiot, I find this character in the author above mentioned. "I repute them, between whom I find little difference, for the two chief lanterns of light " to all others, that have fince employed their pens upon English poefy. Their conceits were 66 lofty, their stiles stately, their conveyance cleanly, their terms proper, their metre sweet " and well proportioned, in all imitating very naturally and studiously their master Francis

† Among Mr. Ascham's letters, there is one to this learned Spaniard, wherein he recommends the ambassador Sir William Cecil to his acquaintance and friendship. The superscription of the letter is, Clarissimo viro, D. Gonsalvo Perisso, Regis Catholici Secretario primario, & Confiliario intimo, Amico meo cariffima.

† The title of this Italian book is, Filosofia Morale sopra il 10 libri d'Ethica d'Aristotile.

writing upon Aristotles Ethickes so excellentlie in Italian, as never did yet any one in myne opinion, either in Greke or Latin; amongest other thynges, doth most earnestlie invey against the rude ryming of verses in that tonge. And when soever he expressed Aristotles precepts with any example out of Homer or Euripides, he translateth them, not after the rymes of Petrarch, but into such kind of persite verse, with like seete and quantitie of sillables, as he found them before in the Greke tonge: exhorting earnestlie all the Italian nation, to leave of their rude barbariousnesses in ryming, and folow diligently the excellent Greke and Latin examples in trew versifying.

And you, that be able to understand no more than you finde in the Italian tonge; and never went farder than the schole of Petrarch and Ariostus abroad, or els of Chaucer at home; though you have pleasure to wander blindlie still in your soule wrong way, envie not others that seeke, as wise men have done before them, the fairest and rightest way: or els, beside the just reproach of malice, wise men shall trewlie judge, that you do so, as I have sayd, and say yet againe unto you, bicause either for idlenes ye will not, or for ignorance ye cannot, come by no better yourselves.

And therefore, even as Virgil and Horace deserve most worthie praise, that they spyng the unperfitness in Ennius and Plautus, by trew imitation of Homer and Euripides, brought poetry to the same perfitness in Latin, as it was in Greke; even so those, that by the same way would benefite their tonge and contrey, deserve rather thankes than disprayse in that behalfe.

And I rejoice, that even poore Englande prevented Italie, first in spying out, then in seeking to amend this fault in learning.

And here, for my pleasure, I purpose a little by the way, to play and sporte with my master Tully; from whom commonlie I am never wont to dissent. He himselfe, for this point of learning, in his verses doth halt a little by his leave: he could not denie it, if he were alive; nor those defend him now that love him best. This fault I lay to his charge; bicause once it pleased him, though somewhat merelie, yet overuncurteslie, to rayle upon poore Englande, objecting both extreme beggarie, and mere barbariousnes unto it, writing thus unto * his frend Tullies say-Atticus: "There is not one scruple of silver in that whole isle; or any Englande." one that knoweth either learning or letter."

But now, master Cicero, blessed be God, and his sonne Jesus Christ, whom you never knew, except it were as it pleafed him to lighten you by fome shadow; as covertlie in one place ye confesse, faying, + Veritatis tantum umbram consectamur, as your master Plato did before you: bleffed be God, I fay, that fixten hundred yeare after you were dead and gone, it may trewly be fayd, that for filver, there is more comlie plate in one citie of Englande, than is in four of the proudest cities in all Italie, and take Rome for one of them: and for learning, befide the knowledge of all learned tonges and liberal sciences, even your owne bookes, Cicero, be as well read, and your excellent eloquence is as well liked and loved, and as trewlie followed in Englande at this day, as it is now, or ever was since your own tyme, in any place of Italie, either at Arpinum, where you was borne, or els at Rome, where you was brought up. And a little to brag with you, Cicero, where you yourfelfe, by your leave, halted in some point of learning in your own tonge, many in Englande at this day go streight up, both in trewe skill, and right doing therein.

This I write, not to reprehend Tullie, whom above all other I like and love best; but to excuse Terence, because in hys tyme, and a good while after, poetrie was never perfited in Latin, untill by trew Imitation of the Grecians, it was at length brought to perfection: and also thereby to exhorte the goodlie wittes of Englande, whiche apt by nature, and willing by defire, give themselves to poetrie; that they rightly understanding the barbarous bringing in of rymes, would labor, as Virgil and Horace did in Latin, to make perfit also this point of learnyng, in our English tonge. And thus much for Plautus and Terence, for matter, tonge, and meter; what is to be followed, and what to be eschewed in them.

Offic,

<sup>* &</sup>quot;Britannici belli exitus exfpectatur: constat enim aditus insulæ esse munitos mirificis molibus. Etiam illud jam cognitum est, neque argenti scrupulum esse ullum in illa insula, neque ullam spem prædæ, nisi ex mancipiis: ex quibus nullos puto te literis, aut musicis reuditos exspectare." Cic. lib 4. Epist. ad Attic. ep. 16. The same thing he mencions to Tretatius, lib. 7. Fam. Epist. In Britannia nihil esse audio neque auri, neque argenti. Id si ita est, essedum aliquod suadeo capias, et ad nos quamprimum recurras." But Tacitus, in the lise of fucius Agricola, assirms the contrary. Fert Britannia aurum et argentum, et alia metalla, pretium victoriæ."

† &quot;Nos veri juris, germanæque justitiæ solidam et expressam estigiem nullam tenemus: umbrâ et imaginibus utimur: eas ipsas utinam sequeremur! feruntur enim ex optimis naturæ et veritatis exemplis." Cic. Offic. lib. 3. cap. 17.

After Plantus and Terence, no writyng remayneth untill Tullies tyme, except a few short fragmentes of L. Crassus excellent wit, here and there * recited of Cicero for example sake: whereby the lovers of learnyng may the more lament the losse of soch a worthic witte. And although the Latin tonge did faire bloome and blossome in L. Crassus, and M. Antonius; yet in Tullies tyme onely, and in Tullie himselfe chieslie, was the Latin tonge sullie ripe, and growne to the hiest pitch of all perfection. And yet in the same tyme, it began to sade and stoupe, as Tullie himselfe, in Brutus de claris Oratoribus, † with weeping wordes doth witnesse.

And bicause amonges them of that tyme there was some difference, good reason is, that of them of that tyme should be made right choice also. And yet let the best Ciceronian in Italie read Tullies familiar epistles

* In the first book de Oratore, Antonius recites this passage out of Crassus's oration to the commons of Rome: " Eripite nos ex miseriis; eripite nos ex saucibus eorum, quorum crudelitas nostro sanguine non potest expleri: nolite sinere nos cuiquam servire, nisi vobis uni-

" versis, quibus & possumus, & debemus."

And in his introduction to the third, Tully produces this short, but admirable fragment, out of his speech, delivered in the senate-house against the Consul Philip: "An tu, cùm omnem authoritatem universi ordinis pro pignore putaris, eamque in conspectu populi Romani concideris; me his pignoribus existimas posse terreri? Non tibi illa sunt cædenda, so si Crassum vis coercere. Hæc tibi est excidenda lingua: qua vel evulsa, spiritu ipso libidinem tuam libertas mea resutabit."

- † "Etenim si viveret Q. Hortensius, cætera fortasse desideraret unà cum reliquis bonis, "et fortibus civibus; hunc autem & præter cæteros, aut cum paucis sustineret dolorem, cùm forum populi Romani, quod fuisset quasi theatrum illius ingenii, voce erudita, & Romanis Græcisque auribus digna, spoliatum, atque orbatum videret.———
- "Nam mihi, Brute, in te intuenti crebrò in mentem venit vereri, ecquodnam curriculum diquando sic habitura tua et natura admirabilis, & exquisita doctrina, & singularis industria. Cùm enim in maximis causis versatus esses, & cum tibi ætas nostra jam cederet, fascesque fubmitteret, subitò in civitate cùm alia ceciderunt, tum etiam ea ipsa, de qua disputare

66 ordimur, eloquentia obmutuit." Cic. de claris Orat.

advif-

advisedly over, and I believe he shall finde small difference for the Latin tonge, either in proprietie of wordes, or framing of the stile, betwixt Tullie, and those that write unto him: as Ser. Sulpitius, A. Cecina, M. Cælius, M. & D. Bruti, A. Pollio, L. Plancus, and diverse other. Read the epistles of L. Plancus in the tenth book; and for an assay, that epistle namely to the consuls, and whole senate, the eighth epistle in number; and what could be either more eloquentlie, or more wiselie written, yea by Tullie himselse, a man may justlie doubt. Thies men and Tullie lived all in one tyme, were like in authority, not unlike in learnyng and studie; which might be just causes of this their equalitie in writing. And yet surelie, they neither were in deede, nor yet were counted in mens opinions, equal with Tullie in that sacultie.

And how is the difference hid in his epiftles? Verelie, as the cunning of an expert feaman, in a faire calme fresh river, doth little differ from the doing of a meaner workman therein; even so, in the short cut of a private letter, where matter is common, wordes case, and order not moch diverse, small shew of difference can appeare. But where Tullie doth set up his saile of eloquence in some broad deep argument, carried with full tyde and wynde of his witte and learnyng; all other may rather stand and looke after him, than hope to overtake him, what course soever he hold, either in faire or soule.

Foure men only when the Latin tonge was full ripe, be left unto us, who in that time did flourish, and did leave to posteritie the fruit of their witte and learnyng; Varro, Salust, Cæsar, and Cicero. When I say these foure only, I am not ignorant, that even in the same tyme most excellent poetes, deserving well of the Latin tonge, as Lucretius, Catullus, Virgil, and Horace, did write. But bicause in this little booke I purpose to teach a yong scholer to go, not to daunce; to speake, not to sing; (when poetes indeede, namely Epici and Lyrici, as these be, are fine dauncers, and trim singers) but Oratores and Historici be those comlie goers, and faire and wise speakers, of whom I wishe my scholer to wayte upon first; and after in good order, and due tyme, to be brought forth to the singing and dauncing schole. And for this consideration I do meane these foure, to be the onlie writers of that tyme.

VARRO.

arro.

Varro, in his bookes de Lingua Latina, & Analogia, as these be lest mangled and patched unto us, doth not enter there into any great depth of eloquence; but as one carried in a small low vessel himselse verie nigh the common shore, not much unlike the sister men of Rye, and hering men of Yarmouth, who deserve by common mens opinion, small commendation for any cunning sailing at all. Yet nevertheless in those bookes of Varro, good and necessarie stuffe for that meane kinde of argument, is verie well and learnedlie gathered together.

DeReRusti-

His bookes of husbandrie are moch to be regarded, and diligentlie to be read, not onelie for the proprietie, but also for the plentie of good wordes in all contrey and husbandmens affaires; which cannot be had by so good authoritie out of any other author, either of so good a tyme, or of so great learning, as out of Varro. And yet, bicause * he was soure score year olde when he wrote those bookes, the forme of his style there compared with Tullies writing, is but even the talke of a spent old man: whose wordes commonlie fall out of his mouth, though verie wiselie, yet hardly and coldlie, and more heavelie also, than some eares can well beare, except onelie for age, and authorities sake; and perchance, in a rude and contrey argument, of purpose and judgement he rather used the speach of the contrey, than the talke of the citie.

And so, for matter sake, his wordes sometyme be somewhat rude; and by the imitation of the elder Cato, old and out of use. And being deepe stept in age, by negligence some wordes do so scape and fall from him in those bookes, as be not worth the taking up by him that is carefull to speake or write trew Latin; + as that sentence in him,

* For this we have Varro's own words, in the beginning of his first book of Country Affairs:

Otium si essem consecutus, Fundania, commodius tibi hæc scriberem, quæ nunc, ut potero, exponam, cogitans esse properandum: quòd, ut dicitur, si est homo bulla, eo magis senex. Annus enim octogesimus admonet me, ut sarcinas colligam antequam proficiscar è vita."

† This citation I have corrected from Victorius's edition. The whole fentence is this:
"Itaque non fine causa majores nostri ex urbe in agris redigebant suos cives, quod & in pace a rusticis Romanis alebantur, & in bello ab his tuebantur."

Et in pace à rusticis Romanis alebantur, & in bello ab bis tuebantur. A good student must be therefore careful and diligent, to read with judgement over even those authors, which did write in the most persite tyme. And let him not be affrayd to try them, both in proprietie of wordes, and forme of stile, by the touch stone of Casar and Cicero; whose puritie was never foiled, no not by the sentence of those, that loved them worst.

All lovers of learning may fore lament the loss of those bookes of The loss of Varro, which he wrote in his yong and lustie yeares, with good leisure, Varroes bookes. and great * learnyng, of all parts of philosophie; of the goodliest argumentes perteyning both to the common wealth, and private life of man; as, de Ratione Studii & de Liberis Educandis; which booke is oft recited, and moch prayfed, in the fragmentes of Nonius, even for authoritie fake. He wrote most diligentlie and largelie also the whole historie of the state of Rome; the mysteries of their whole religion; their laws, customs, and government in peace; their maners, and whole discipline in warre. And this is not my gueffing, as one indeed that never faw those bookes; but even the verie judgement, and plaine testimonie of Tullie himselfe, who knew and read these bookes, + in these wordes: Tu ata-Acad. tem patriæ; tu descriptiones temporum; tu sacrorum jura; tu sacerdotum; Quæst. tu domesticam, tu bellicam disciplinam; tu sedem regionum, locorum; tu omnium divinarum bumanarumque rerum nomina, genera, officia, causas aperuisti, &c.

But this great losse of Varro, is a little recompensed by the ‡ happy coming of Dionysius Halicarnasseus to Rome in Augustus dayes: who getting * Quintilian's character and judgment of this learned writer, we have in his tenth book de Inft. Orat. "Alterum illud eft, & prius Satyræ genus, quod non fola carminum varietate "mistum condidit Terentius Varro, vir Romanorum eruditissimus. Plurimos hic libros, "& doctissimus composuit, peritissimus linguæ Latinæ, & omnis antiquitatis, & rerum Græcarum nostrarumque; plus tamen scientiæ collaturus, quam eloquentiæ."

† This passage taken out of Tully's first book of his Academical Questions, St. Augustine has also cited somewhat more fully in his sixth book de Civitate Dei.

† Έγω καθαπλεύσας εἰς Ἰταλίαν, ἄμα τῷ καθαλυθηναι τὸν Ἐμφύλιον τόλεμον ὑπὸ τῷ Σεβαςῷ Καίσας، This account he gives of himself in the introduction to his history; and X x getting the possession of Varros librarie, out of that treasure house of learning did leave unto us some frute of Varros witte and diligence; I meane, his goodlie bookes de Antiquitatibus Romanis. Varro was fo esteemed for his excellent learning, as Tullie himselfe had a reverence Cic. ad Att. to his judgement in all doutes of learning. And Antonius Triumvir, his enemie, and of a contrarie faction, who had power to kill and banish whom he listed; * when Varros name amongest others, was brought in a schedule unto him, to be noted to death, he tooke his penne, and wrote his warrant of favegard, with these most goodlie wordes, Vivat Varro, vir doetissimus. In later tyme, no man knew better, nor liked nor loved more Varros learning, than did St. Augustine; as they do well understand, that have diligentlie read over his learned bookes de Civitate Dei: where he hath this most notable + sentence; "When I fee how much Varro wrote, I marvell much, that ever he " had any leafure to read: and when I perceive how many thinges he " read, I marvell more, that ever he had any leafure to write."

> in his fecond book, he makes this honourable mention of Varro: Λέγω δε & Τερένλι Ο Οὐάρρων ἐν ἀρχαιολογίαις ἔγραψεν, ἀνὰρ τῶν καθὰ τὰν αὐτὰν ἀλικίαν ἀκμασάνθων πολυπειρόταθο. The loss also of so many of Dianysius's books we may justly lament: for had they been preferv'd entire, we should much less have perceiv'd the want of Varro's learning and diligence : or to use Balthasar Bonifacius's words, "Si historia Dionysii integra exstarct, nihil esset, cur " Varronis Thesauros quæreremus."

> * Whence our author had this account, I know not: the margin directs to Cic. ad Attic. but I find no such passage. It seems to be a mistake of memory. Appian, in his 4th book of the Civil Wars, gives a very different relation. Φιλοτιμεμένων δε αὐτὸν ὑποδεξαθαι τῶν γνωρίμων, κὰ διεριζόνων ἐς ἀλλήλες, Καληνός ἐξενίκησε, κὰ εἶχεν ἐν ἐπάυλει, ἔνθα Αντώνι, ὅτε διοδεύει, κατήγειο, κὰ τον Οὐαρρωνα οὐδεὶς ἔνδον ὄνια ἐνέφηνε θεράπων, ἔτε αὐτε Οὐάρρων, ὅτε Καληνέ. See the second Philip. near the end.

> + The fecond chapter of St. Augustine's fixth book, is wholly spent in admiration of Varro's learning and industry; where this following passage is, to which Mr. Ascham alludes:

> " Iste igitur vir, tam insignis excellentisque peritiæ, & quod de illo etiam Terentianus elegantissimo versiculo breviter ait;

Vir doctissimus undecunque Varro:

" qui tam multa legit, ut aliquid ei scribere vacasse miremur: tam multa scripsit, quam multa

" vix quenquam legere potuisse arbitror."

The number of his works is almost incredible. Aulus Gellius relates from Varro's own words, that in his 84th year, he had writ four hundred and ninety books: but that his library having been plundered during his proscription, several of them were afterwards missing.

14 Tum ibi addit, se quoque jam duodecimam annorum hebdomadam ingressum esse, & ad " eum diem feptuaginta hebdomadas librorum conscripsisse: ex quibus aliquam multos,

" quum proscriptus esset, direptis bibliothecis suis, non comparuisse."

And

And furelie, if Varros bookes had remained to posteritie, as by Gods providence the most part of Tullie did, then trewlie the Latin tonge might have made good comparison with the Greke.

SALUST.

Salust is a wise and worthie writer; but he requireth a learned reader, and a right considerer of him. My dearest frend, and best master that ever I had, or heard in learnyng, Syr J. Cheke, (soch a man, as if I should live to see Englande breed the like againe, I seare, I should live over long) did once give me a lesson for Salust, which, as I shall those that judgement, would come to persite judgement of the Latin tonge. He said, that Sa-and counsel suft was not very sitte for young men to learne out of him the puritie of Salust. of the Latin tonge; because he was not the purest in the proprietie of wordes, nor choisest in aptness of phrases, nor the best in framing of sentences; and therefore is his writing, sayd he, neyther plaine for the matter, nor sensible for mens understanding.

- "And what is the cause thereof, Syr?" quoth I. "Verelie, said he, bicause in Salustes writing, is more arte than nature, and more labor than arte: and in his labor also to moch toyle; as it were, with an uncontented care to write better than he could; a fault common to verie many men. And therefore he doth not expresse the matter lively and naturally with common speach, as ye see Xenophon doth in Greke; but it is carried and driven forth artificiallie after to learned a forte, as Thucydides doth in his orations."
- "And how cometh it to passe, faid I, that Cæsar and Ciceroes talke is so natural and plaine, and Saluss writing so artificial and darke; when all they three lived in one tyme?" "I will freely tell you my fansie herein," said he.
- "Surely Cæsar and Cicero, beside a singular prerogative of natural eloquence, given unto them by God; both two by use of life were daylie orators amonges the common people, and greatest councellors in the senate house: and therefore gave themselves to use soch speech, X x 2

" as the meanest should well understand, and the wifest best allow:
" following carefullie that good counsell of Aristotle, Loquendum, ut mul" ti; sapiendum, ut pauci.

" Salust was no foch man, neyther for will to goodness, nor skill by " learning; but ill given by nature, and made worse by bringing up; " * fpent the most part of his youth very misorderly in riot and leach-" ery, in the company of foch, who never giving their minde to " honest doyng, could never inure their tonge to wife speaking. But at " last coming to better years, and buying witte at the dearest hand, " (that is, by long experience of the hurt and shame that cometh of " mischief) moved by the counsell of them that were wise, and carried " by the example of foch as were good; he first fell to honestie of life, " and after to the love of studie and learnyng: and so became so new a " man, that Cæsar being dictator, made him prætor in Numidia; where " he, absent from his contrie, and not inured with the common talke " of Rome, but shut up in his studie, and bent wholie upon reading, did " write the storie of the Romans. And for the better accomplishing of " the same, he read Cato and Piso in Latin, for gathering of matter and " troth; and Thucydides in Greke, for the order of his storie, and fur-" nishing of his style.

"Cato (as his tyme required) had more troth for the matter, than eloquence for the style. And so Salust, the by gathering troth out of Cato, smelleth moch of the roughnes of his style: even as a man that eateth garlike for helth, shall cary away with him the savor of it also, whether he will or not. And yet the use of old wordes, is not the greatest cause of Salustes roughnes and darkenesse. There be Et verba antiqui multùm furate Catenis Crispe, Jugurthinæ conditor historiæ.

<sup>* &</sup>quot;Hæc oftendunt, inquit Ger. Vossius, vitam Sallustii laudari à nemine posse. Nempe "omnis ejus gloria à præclaris scriptis proficiscitur."

† His extreme affectation, and fondness for Cato's language, is severely censured in an old epigram, made by no friend, as it appears, of Salluste's, and mentioned by Quintilian. 6 Nec minus noto Sallustius epigrammate incessitur,

- " in Salust * fome old wordes indeed, as patrare bellum, ductare exerci-
- " tum, well noted by Quintilian, and verie much misliked of him. And
- " + supplicium for supplicatio; a word smelling of an older store than the - " other two, fo misliked by Quintilian. And yet is that word also in
- " Varro, speaking of oxen thus, Ad victimas farciunt, atque ad Deo-
- " rum servant supplicia: and a few old wordes mo.
- "Read Salust and Tullie advisedlie together, and in wordes you shall
- "finde small difference: yea Salust is more given to new wordes than
- "to olde, though some writers say the contrarie: as # claritudo,
- " for gloria; 4 exactè, for perfectè; || facundia for eloquentia. These two
- * "Ni multitudo togatorum suisset, quæ Numidas insequentes prohibuit, uno die inter "duos reges cœptum atque patratum foret bellum:" in his Jugurthine war. And again, in the fame history; "Tamen spe patrandi belli." So likewise, "Ductare exercitum," in his Catilinarian conspiracy; "Quia Cn. Pompeius invisus ipsi, magnum exercitum ductabat." And in his history of Jugurtha; "Ipse quasi vitabundus, per saltuosa loca, & tramites exer"citum ductare."

These expressions in Salluste, Quintilian does indeed take notice of; but not so much to find fault with the historian for using them, as with the age wherein he lived, and some idle wits, who strained the fignification of these words to a loose and wanton meaning, quite contrary to the historian's intention and defign.

- " Vel hoc vitium sit, quod κακόφαθον vocatur: sive mala consuetudine in obscænum in-" tellectum fermo detortus est, ut, dustare exercitum, &, patrare bellum, apud Sallustium
- se dicta fancte & antique, ridentur à nobis, si diis placet : quam culpam non scribentium "quidem judico, sed legentium: tamen vitanda, quatenus verba honesta moribus perdidi"mus, & evincentibus etiam vitiis cedendum est."
- † "Itaque senatus ob ea feliciter acta, Diis immortalibus supplicia decernere." Bello Jugurthino. The following passage is in Varro's second book de Re Rustica, cap. 5. but ill printed in the first edition. "Tametsi quidam de Italicis, quos propter amplitudinem præstare " dicunt, ad victimas farciunt, atque ad Deorum servant supplicia." And in his Catil. "In supplicies Deorum magnifici, domi parci."
- t "Cèm præsertim tam multæ variæque sint artes animi, quibus summa claritudo paratur:" in his presace to the Jugurthine war. And a little after, speaking of Jugurtha; "In tantam claritudinem brevi pervenerat, uti nostris vehementer carus, Numantinis maximo terrosi 66 effet."
  - 4 In Horace we have the participle exactis.

- Sed emendata videri, Pulchraque, et exactis minimum distantia, miror.

" Facundia Græcos, gloria belli Gallos ante Romanos fuisse." Bello Catil. And in his Jugurthine: "Sed, quoniam ea tempestate Romæ Memmii facundia clara pollensque suit." Now whatever Tully's reasons were for resulting this word, yet Horace, it is very certain, and Ovid, were neither of them so nice in this respect. The former uses it at least sour times; '' last wordes, exactè and facundia, now in every mans mouth, be ne'' ver, as I do remember, used of Tullie; and therefore I thinke they be '' not good. For surely Tullie, speaking every where so much of the '' matter of eloquence, would not so precisely have absteyned from the '' worde facundia, if it had been good; that is, proper for the tonge,
'' and common for mens use.

The cause why Salust is not like Tullie.

- "I could be long in reciting many foch like, both olde and new wordes in Salust: but in verie deed, neyther oldnes nor newnes of wordes, maketh the greatest difference betwixt Salust and Tullie: but first, strange phrases, made of good Latin wordes, but framed after the Greeke tonge; which be neyther choisely borrowed of them, nor properly used by him: then a hard composition, and crooked framing of his wordes and sentences; as a man would say, English talke placed and framed outlandish-like. As for example first in phrases:
- "Nimius and animus, be two used wordes: yet * bomo nimius animi, is an unused phrase. Vulgus, and amat, and sieri, be as common and well known wordes as may be in the Latin tonge: yet † id quod vulgo and Ulyffes's speech is well known. And what is more to the purpose, Terence has it in his prologue to Heautont. But here we must observe, words that will suit with poetry will not do so with oratory, as Tully himself declares in his book de Oratore.

- * This phrase, as I remember, is only in his Fragments: "Impotens, & nimius animi est." In the same sense is that of Horace, "Nimium mero Hylæum."
- † If I mistake not, this expression is no where to be sound in Sal'uste; but is formed by Mr. Ascham in imitation of his stile in other places. Quintilian, in his ninth book, has a passage not unlike it: "Ex Græco verò translata vel Sallustii plurima: quale est, Vulgus amot feri." And in his Jugurthine war: "Tametsi multitudo, quæ in concione aderat, ve- hementer accensa, terrebat eum clamore, vultu, sæpe impetu, atque aliis omnibus, quæ ira fieri amat, vicit tamen impudentia."

In this place, we have amat either used as an impersonal, or esse (what is still more harsh, and repugnant to the Latin construction) in imitation of the Greek tongue, joined to a nominative plural: in which language  $\varphi(x)$  is frequent enough in this sense; and so are offe, επίς αλαι, πέφυκε, but more especially among the poets.

As to the word itself, whatever objections it may be liable to in prose, where every thing should be plain and easy; yet I see no reason why it should be excluded poetry. Horace, I'm sure, had no such scruple against it, as appears from these lines, secure of any censure.

Aurum per medios ire fatellites Et perrumpere amat faxa, potentius letu fulmineo.

" amat

" amat fieri, for folet fieri, is but a strange and Grekish kind of writing. Ingens and vires, be proper wordes; yet * vir ingens virium, is an unproper kinde of speaking. And so be likewise æger consilii, promptissimus belli, territus animi, and many such like phrases in Salust,

"borowed, as I sayd, not choisly out of Greke, and used therefore un-

" properlie in Latin.

" Againe, in whole fentences, where the matter is good, the wordes " proper and plaine, yet the fense is hard and darke; and namely in " his prefaces and orations, wherein he used most labor. Which fault is " likewise in Thucydides in Greke, of whom Salust hath taken the great-" est part of his darknesse. For Thucydides likewise wrote his storie, " not at home in Grece, but abroad in Italie; and therefore smelleth of " a certaine outlandish kinde of talke, strange to them of Athens, and " diverse from their writing that lived in Athens and Greece, and wrote " the fame time that Thucydides did: as Lyfias, Xenophon, Plato, and Ifocra-" tes, the purest and playnest writers that ever wrote in any tonge, " and best examples for any man to follow, whether he write Latin, " Italian, French, or English. Thucydides also semeth in his writing, " not fo much benefited by nature, as holpen by arte, and carried forth " by defire, studie, labor, toyle, and over great curiofitie: who fpent "twenty feven yeares in writing his eight bookes of his history. Sa-" luft likewise wrote out of his contrie, and followed the faultes of "Thucydides to much; and boroweth of him fome kinde of writing, " which the Latin tonge can not well beare; as + casus nominativus in di-" verfe

And is not this a demonstration of the necessity of correct and accurate editions? Will not this also teach some men of letters civility, and good manners? Will not this oblige them to modesty.

* This expression is only to be met with in the Fragments: "Ingens ipse virium, atque animi." And so is Consilii ager: and likewise this sentence, "Neque virgines nuptum à parentibus mittebantur, sed ipse belli promptissimos delegebant." And lastly, "Tetrar-s' chas regesque territos animi firmavit."

† Here, for want of better copies, these two learned gentlemen were led aside to a wrong censure of their author. For this passage, beyond all dispute, (as later editions have settled it) is thus to be read; "Itaque ab imperatore facilè, quæ petebant, adepti. Misse sunt eo co- hortes Ligurum quatuor, & C. Annius præsectus." 'Tis a short scheme of speech, samiliar to Salluste, and other writers; wherein the auxiliary verb sunt is elegantly lest out. In the same manner, Livy speaking of Tullus Hostilius: "Imperitabat tum C. Cluilius Albæ. "ut inque legati sere sub idem tempus ad res repetendas missi."

verse places absolute positus; as in that place of his Jugurthine war, speaking de Leptitanis: Itaque ab imperatore facile quæ petebant, adepti, missæ funt eo cobortes Ligurum quatuor. This thing in participles, used so oft in Thucydides, and other Greeke authors to, may better be borne withall; but Salust useth the same more strangelie and boldlie, as * in thies wordes; Multis sibi quisque imperium petentibus. I believe, the best grammarian in Englande can scarce give a good rule, why quisque the nominative case, without any verbe, is so thrust up amongest so many oblique cases."

Some man perchance will finile, and laugh to fcorne this my writing, and call it idle curiofitic, thus to bufie myfelfe in picking about these small pointes of grammer; not fitte for my age, place and calling, to trisle in. I trust that man, be he never so great in authoritie, never so wise and learned, either by other mens judgement, or his own opinion, will yet thinke, that he is not greater in Englande, than Tullie was at Rome; nor yet wiser, nor better learned, than Tullie was him-modesty, if they chance to see a little better than others in the same argument, and discover a mistake, that has escaped the observation of such as have gone before? Will any one pronounce his fellow-student ignorant and illiterate, for some little omission or inadvertency, when he sees two such champions in all polite learning, foiled for want only of one single point fixed in its right place? So liable to error is human frailty! so short-sighted is the keenest eye! and so narrow and confin'd is the most comprehensive understanding!

* "Sed postquam in Hispania Hercules, sicut Afri putant, interiit: exercitus ejus compositus ex gentibus variis, amisso duce, ac passim multis sibi quisque imperium petentibus, brevi dilabitur."

This is the fentence at length: and I perceive learned men have given themselves no small trouble, the indeed to little purpose, in reconciling it to the rules of common syntax. And yet what can be more easy, if we thus supply what is certainly to be understood? Multis (sting quisque scilicet petchat) imperium petentibus. This I take to be the right way to account for it. One sentence, wherein stronger affirmation is made, respecting each individual, in a short succinct form of speaking, is included in another.

But if this be thought so difficult a question, as to have the ablest grammarian in England called upon to clear it; what shall we say to this construction in Livy, Raptim quibus quisque poterat elatis; which I take to be much more knotty and intricate? 'Tis in his first book, where he is describing the ruins of Alba. Here, if I mistake not, we have a pure Attick idiom brought to Rome; the relative and antecedent being joined in the same case. In plain language fully expressed, it ought to have been, Raptim its, qua quisque poterat efferre, elatis.

language fully expressed, it ought to have been, Raptim its, quæ quisque poterat efferre, elatis.

These constructions I look upon as pleasing irregularities, or fond innovations, what the Greeks call σχήμωλα καινοπρεπείας, at first forwardly introduced, and afterwards by use and custom established. Of this nature are, Cui nomen Iulo, and Lastea nomen erat, and such like; thought, no question, to be beauties, like moles in a fair face.

selfe:

felse: who, at the pitch of threescore yeares, in the middes of the broyle betwixt Casar and Pompei, when he knew not whither to send wife and children, which way to go, where to hide himselse; yet in an earnest letter, amongest his carnest councels for those heavie tymes, concerning both the common state of his contrey, and his own private affaires, he was neither unmyndfull, nor ashamed to reason at large, and learne gladlie of Atticus, a lesse point of grammer, than these be, noted of me in Saluste: * as whether he should write ad Piræea, in Piræea, or, in Piræeum, or, Piræeum, sine Præpositione. And in those heavie tymes he was so carefull to know this small point of grammar, that he addeth these wordes, Si hoc miki ζήτημα persolveris, magna me molestia liberâris.

If Tullie, at that age, in that authoritie, in that care for his contrey, in that jeopardie for himselfe, and extreme necessitie of hys dearest frendes, being also the prince of eloquence hymselfe, was not ashamed to descend to these low pointes of grammer in his owne naturall tonge; what should scholers do? yea what should any man do, if he do think well doyng better than ill doyng, and had rather be persite than meane, sure than doutefull; to be what he should be, in deed; and not seem what he is not, in opinion? He that maketh persitnes in the Latin tonge his marke, must come to it by choice and certain knowledge, not stumble upon it by chance and doutfull ignorance. And the right steppes to reach unto it be these, linked thus orderlie together, aptnes of nature, love of learning, diligence in right order, constancie with pleasant moderation, and alwayes to learne of them that be best; and so shall you judge as they that be wifest. And these be those rules which worthie

<sup>* &</sup>quot;Venio ad Piræea, in quo magis reprehendendus sum, quòd homo Romanus Piræea se scripserim, non Piræeum, (sic enim omnes nostri locuti sunt) quam quòd in addiderim. Son enim hoc ut oppido præposui, sed ut loco: & tamen Dionysius noster, qui est nobise cum, & Nicias Cous non rebatur, oppidum esse Piræea, sed de re videro. Nostrum quidem si est peccatum, in eo est, quod non, ut de oppido locutus sum, sed ut de loco; se cutusque sum, non dico Cæcilium, Mane ut ex portu in Piræeum; (malus enim auctor Latinitatis est) sed Terentium, cujus sabellæ propter elegantiam putabantur à C. Lælio scribi: Heri aliquot adolescentuli eoiimus in Piræeum." ('Tis much better in the editors of Terence, in Piræeo) « & idem, Mercator hoc addebat, captam è Sunio. Quod si δήμες oppida esse volumus; tam est oppidum Sunium, quàm Piræeus. Sed, quoniam grammaticus es, si hoc mihi ζήτημα persolveris, magna me molessia liberâris."

Mr. Cheke dyd impart unto me concerning Salufle, and the right judgement of the Latin tonge.

C Æ S A R.

Casar, for that little of him, that is left unto us, * is like the halfe face of a Venus, the other part of the head being hidden, the bodie and the rest of the members unbegun; yet so excellentlie done by Apelles, as all men may stand still to maze and muse upon it; and no man step forth with any hope to performe the like.

His feven bookes de Bello Gallico, and three de Bello Civili, be written fo wiselie for the matter, so eloquentlie for the tonge, that neither his greatest enemies could ever finde the least note of parcialitie in him, (a marvelous wisdom of a man, namely wryting of his own doynges) nor yet the best judgers of the Latin tonge, nor the most envious lookers upon other mens wrytinges, can say other, but all thinges be most persitlie done by him.

Brutus, Calvus, and Calidius,  $\uparrow$  who found fault with Tullies fulnes in wordes and matter, and that rightlie; for Tullie did both confesse it, and mend it: yet in  $C\alpha far$  they neither did, nor could finde the like, or any other faulte.

And therefore thus justlie I may conclude of Cæsar, that whereas in all other, the best that ever wrote in any tyme, or in any tonge, in Greke or Latin, (I except neither Plato, Demosthenes, nor Tullie) some fault is justlie noted; in Cæsar onelie could never yet fault be found.

<sup>* &</sup>quot;Accedit eodem testis locuples Posidonius, qui etiam scribit in quadam epistola, Pub.
"Rutilium Rusum dicere solere, qui Panætium audierat, ut nemo pictor esset inventus, qui "Coæ Veneris eam partem, quam Apelles inchoatam reliquisset, absolveret: (oris enim pulchritudo reliqui corporis imitandi spem auserebat) sic ea, quæ Panætius prætermissset, « & non persecisset, propter eorum, quæ persecisset, præstantiam, neminem esse persecutum."

Cic. de Offic. lib. 3.

† &quot;Satis constat ne Ciceroni quidem obtrectatores desuisse, quibus instatus et tumens, nec satis pressus, supra modum exultans et superfluens et parum Atticus videretur." Dialegus de Oratoribus.

Yet neverthelesse, for all this perfite excellencie in him, yet it is but one member of eloquence, and that but of one side neither; when we must looke for that example to follow, which hath a perfite head, a whole bodie, forward and backward, armes and legges and all.

Thus are we come to the end of what is left us on this subject, by this truly learned and ingenious writer; whose excellent judgment and abilities seem little inseriour to the ablest masters of antiquity: and had he lived to have perfected, what is here but a rough draught, at best, an unfinished work; I much question, whether any rhetorician, either Greek or Roman, would have been of more use in the study of oratory, or deserved greater esteem of learned men. But here I must add his own similitude, and compare him, as he did Casar, to the inimitable face of the Coan Venus, drawn by the hand of Apelles; unhappily lest imperfect, and ever so to remain, for want of an able artist of equal skill, to give it its just beauty, and to add some little colouring, and ornament, which seem defective.

In order to make the piece complete, as I think, a full and diffined character of Tully, together with a whole chapter about Declamation, or the conftant exercise and practice of invention, is still wanting. Tully by our author is joined with Varro, Sallusle, and Cæsar, as the most unexceptionable writers of the purest age, and best patterns for imitation. And how comes he, whom Mr. Ascham chiesly admires, when the other three are so largely described, to be passed over in silence? And yet this he seems to promise, p. 323, in these words: But of Cicero more fully in fitter place: unless we say, he reserved this for his Latin work; which doth not seem probable. Again, p. 267, Mr. Ascham tells us, there are six ways appointed for the learning of tongues, and increase of eloquence, which he designs particularly to treat of. Declamation is the last there mentioned, and yet we have not one word about it.

But if any one is not yet fatisfied with what I fay, Mr. Ascham's letter to his friend Sturmius of Strasburgh, printed at the end of this treatise, wherein he gives a full account of his Schole-master, will sufficiently convince him. In one place, he modestly desires leave of his friend, to make use of the same instance out of Tully, for a farther illustration of the argument in hand, as he had done before him. And afterwards, near the end of the same letter, he earnestly entreats Sturmius to send him with all speed what he had lately writ on the same subject; that his Schole-master, as yet almost naked and unsightly, might thence receive some better dress, before he appeared in publick. But these passages being no where to be found in this treatise before us, prove beyond exception, that as excellent as this work is, yet it was designed for farther improvements, and greater persection, had the author enjoyed a longer life.

This is what I thought necessary to acquaint the reader with, before I took my leave of him; not doubting in the least of his candour and ingenuity, either towards the author, or myself: n r have I any thing more to add, but an earnest recommendation (if that is still necessary) of this little work, in itself almost invaluable, to the careful perusal and study of all young gentlemen, for whose use it was at first designed, and is now published.

The ENDE of the SCHOLE MASTER.

CAMBDENUS.

Penultimus * hujus anni dies (Digressiunculæ in boni viri memoriam ignoscite) ultimus erat Rogero Aschamo, qui in Eboracensi Comitatu natus, et Cantabrigiæ educatus, inter primos nostræ nationis, literas Latinas et Græcas, stilique puritatem cum eloquentiæ laude, excoluit: Elizabethæ studiis aliquamdiu præfuit, eidemque reginæ ab epistolis erat Latinis. Cum tamen aleâ et Alectryomachiâ plus nimio oblectaretur, re tenui vixit et obiit, relictis duobus libris, elegantissimis ingenii monumentis linguâ vernaculâ, quorum alterum Toxophilum, alterum Scholarcham inscripsit.

* 1568.

ROGERO ASCHAMO ANGLO, G. BUCHANANUS.

Aschamum extinctum patriæ Grajæque Camenæ, Et Latiæ vera cum pietate dolent. Principibus vixit carus, jucundus amicis, Re modica, in mores dicere sama nequit.

JOANNI STURMIO

ROGERUS ASCHAMUS

S. P. D.

Ratum est, mi Sturmi, & mihi perjucundum, quod scribis de Imitatione Oratoria, tuis hoc tempore à te dictata. An mihi placitura sit, quæris? Mitte quæso, & quàm primum mitte, quæ dictata sunt: polliceris enim, & ipsa repræsentatione nihil exoptatius, nihil longius mihi existit. Meum judicium præcognoscere vis. Non mihi tantum sumo, mi Sturmi, nec consilium libenter interpono. Sed meam de imitandi ratione, sive opinionem, quæ levis est, sive desiderationem, quæ permagna est, satis quidem suse, nimis sortasse andacter, aperiam. Et hæc mihi cogitanti subinde occurrit, quam verum illud sit, quod dicitur, Amicorum omnia esse communia; non tam commodorum ac sortunæ, ut ego intelligo, mutua munera, quam animorum & voluntatis eadem studia. Nec magis illa humanitatis & officiorum, quam nostra hæc doctrinæ & literarum.

Scribis tu de Imitatione; & ego nonnihil cogito de eodem argumento: fed tu absolute eruditis jam, ac viris; ego inchoate, rudibus adhuc, & pueris: & hoc quidem consilio. Sunt mihi duo filii, Ægidius, & Dudlæus Aschami. nam Sturmius Aschamus, vivit ille quidem, sed nunquam moriturus. Cum his meis filiis non illustrem fortunæ splendorem promittere possum, aliquem certe doctrinæ cultum illis relinquere ipse cupio. Paro igitur illis Præceptorem, non illum soris sumptuosa mercede conducendum, sed rudi à me stilo domi jam delineatum. Formam ejus in duos includo libellos: prior magnam partem società alter disciplinabilis.

Formam ejus in duos includo libellos: prior magnam partem nonce et; alter disciplinabilis. Et quia meus hic Praceptor non è Gracia, non ex Italia accersitus, sed in hac barbara insula natus, & domi intra parietes meos altus est; propterea barbare, hoc est Anglice, loquitur. Sic enim sermo ejus convenienter quidem, & propior & proprior horum nostra gentis morum est suturus; & nostris, non alienis; Anglis, non exteris scribo. Praterea officio, quod patria, quod literis, utriusque in me mento, jure quidem debeo, aliqua ex parte defunctus suero; si hoc meo studio, studium in parentibus liberaliter sovendi, in eorum liberis alacriter discendi literas, possit nonnihil excitari.

Sed est Praceptor hic meus non Cantabrigiensis, sed Vindesorius: Aulicus, non Academicus. Ideoque non illustriorem aliquam ostentat doctrinam; sed mediocrem, & nonnulium, quoad potest, ostendit usum. Neque tamen ipse sum tam nostræ linguæ inimicus, quin sentiam illam omnium ornamentorum, cum dictionis, tum sententiarum admodum esse capacem; & esse item hoc argumentum non tam aridum, & exile, quin Anglicè etiam ανθηφογραφείσθαι possit; si in artificem aliquem, qualis suit Checus noster, & sunt adhuc apud nos, Smithus, & Haddonus, incidisset. At si quid fortasse boni in hoc tamen libello inerit, illud omne tibi, mi Sturmi, acceptum est referendum, quæ enim scribo, studui certè ut essent omnia Sturmiana. Et volo quidem, ut filii mei, per hoc à patre rudi more congestum, et perquam humile vestibulum, in illustre illud, & omni artificio perpolitum, Sturmii Gymnassum ingrediantur. Exstabit tamen aliquid, & eminens erit, in hoc meo Σχολαεπείω, perpetuum nimirum perpetui mei & in te amoris, & de te judicii testimonium.

Præceptor igitur hic meus satis habet, si viam rectè muniat, & quasi per certos gradus, sacilem paret adscensum ad sublimiores illas rite aperiendas sores Academiæ Sturmianæ. Gradus funt hi! primus, Linguarum Versio; non dico simplicem explicationem ignotæ singuæ quæ in scholis quotidiana est, & ore præceptoris solum traditur: sed iteratam, & quasi reciprocantem duarum linguarum, utriusque utrobique vertendarum rationem. Nimirum ut Græca Latinè, & tum ut eadem ipsa Latina Græcè denuo convertantur; justa commentatione, & diligenti Scriptione cum proprio, non alieno stilo, semper adhibita. Et sic ego intelligo utile illud imprimis, & prudens consilium cùm L. Crassi in primo de Oratore, tum Plinii Secundi ad suum Fuscum in septimo. Atque vix credibile est, ad quam excellentem cum Latinè tum Græcè intelligendi sacultatem, ipse Divam nostram Elizabetham, hac geminatæ conversionis ratione, scripto semper reddita, brevi tempore perduxi.

Scquantur reliqui gradus; Paraphrafis, Metaphrafis, Epitome, Imitatio, Commentatio, Scriptio, & Declamatio. Per hos gradus Præceptor meus cautius & timidius, porrecta fua nonnunquam manu, discipulos suos deducit. Sunt enim hi gradus nonnihil lubrici; & facilis in illis est prolapsio, ni cautio & judicium adhibeatur. At quo seror? Næ ego temere nimis, qui, cum faciem tantum Præceptoris m i tibi ostendere volui; non solum cætera membra aperio & explico, sed interiora illa ejus consilia & sensus omnes, nec prudenter, nec pudenter effero. Sed quid, ni planè ac palam omnia ad te? Accipe igitur, quod dicere institui etiam de Imitatione.

In loco de Imitatione longiusculus est Praceptor meus. Fatetur se omnes sere & veteres & recentes, qui de lmitatione scripsere, cupidè perlegisse. Probare se multos, admirari verò neminem, præter unum Sturmium. Aliqui certè rectè, qui sint imitandi; sed quomodo instituenda sit ipsa imitandi ratio, solus docet Sturmius. Itaque, si cum illa persectione præceptorum, quæ in Literata tua Nobilitate, & Amissa dicendi Ratione, plenissimè tradita sunt, copiam etiam exemplorum conjunxisses; quid præterea requirendum esset amplius, non video. Namque, ut in vitæ & morum, sic in doctrinæ & studiorum ratione omni, longe plus possent exempla, quàm præcepta. In illarum verò rerum sive arte, sive sacultate, quæ sola imitatione persici videntur; præcepta, aut nullum, aut perexiguum habent locum; cùm exempla issibic vel solitaria planè regnant. Pictores, sculptores, scriptores hoc, & prudenter intelligunt, & persectè præstant.

Atque ut Oratores etiam in horum numero collocem, movet nonnulla ratio; jubet, quæ illa est Quinctiliani auctoritas; qui dicit, Ciceronem, (nec Cicero de se hoc ipse tacet) jucunditatem Isocratis, copiam Platonis, vim Demosthenis essinxisse. & essingere, in imitatione nec ne propriam sedem habeat, omnes vident. Verum enimvero ostendere, & judicare solum, ubi hoc facit Cicero, mediocris diligentiæ, vulgaris & quotidiani est laboris. Hoc Perionius, Victorius, Stephanus, & alii in Cicerone: hoc Macrobius, Hessus, & nuper diligentissmè omnium Fulvius Ursinus, in Virgilio: hoc accurate etiam Clemens Alexandrinus, quinto Στεωμάτων in veteribus Græcis scriptoribus attentavit. Sed hi omnes perinde sunt, ut operarii & bajuli; qui, cùm comportent materiam, deesse certe in opere faciundo non possunt, mercedem tamen ipsi perexiguam, & laudem quidem non maximam promerentur.

Atqui docere perspicue & persecte, qua ratione Cicero vel Demosthenem, vel Platonem imitatur, singularis, fateor, doctrinæ, summi judicii, raræ laudis existit. Sed hæc laus adhuc præceptionis tota propria est. Aliud volo, plus requiro. Opisex nobis, & Architectus opus est, qui separata conjungere, rudia perpolire, & totum opus construere, artificiosa ratione noverit. Et illud, mea certè opinione, hoc modo: "Hinc Demossthenis locum, illine "Ciceronis produci cupio. Tum, digito Artificis me primum duci volo ad ea, quæ in utroque sunt aut eadem, aut simillima. Deinde, quæ sunt in hoc addita, & quo consisto; tum, quæ sunt ablata, & quo judicio. Postremò, quæ sunt commutata; & quo, ac quàni vario artificio: sive id in verborum delectu, sive in sententiarum forma, sive in membro-rum circumductione, sive in argumentorum ratione consistat. Nec uno, aut altero exemplo contentus ero. Numero multa, genere varia, ex Platone, ex Isocrate, & Demoste hene; & ex Aristotele in libris Rhetoricis exempla expeto."

Patior Pracceptorem parcum esse in pracceptorum traditione, modò liberalem se, & largum in exemplorum non solum productione, quod laboris est & diligentia, verum etiam tractatione, quod est doctrina et judicii, ostendat. Horum volumen, illorum paginam ipse re-

quiro. Nec mili molestum erit, si eadem via & ratione, Cæsarem cum Xenophonte, Sallustium cum Thucydide, Livium cum Polybio, Virgilium cum Homero, Horatium cum Pindaro, & Senecam etiam cum Sophocle, & Euripide conjungat. nisi sorsan satius erit sacere, quod hi prudenter faciunt, qui persectè scribere volunt. Hærent enim hi, & desigunt se totos in uno, & eo persectistimo, exemplo. Nec se, vel distrahi ad varia, vel deduci ad deteriora exempla libenter patiuntur. Tamen si carmen pangere vellem; nihil Virgilio divinius, nihil Horatio doctius mihi possum proponere. Sed ad dicendi sacultatem, ipsum Ciceronem si non solum, certè potissimum volo. Et dari mihi exemplum cupio Ciceronem Imitatorem, non Imitatorem Ciceronis. Equidem amplector unicè Ciceronis imitationem: sed eam dico & primam ordine, & præcipuam dignitate, qua Cicero ipse Gracos: non qua Lactantius olim, Omphalius nuper, aut qua multo selicius quidam Itali, Galli, Lusitani, & Angli Ciceronem sunt secuti. Nam quisquis fuerit non solum diligens, sed ctiam cum peritus doctrina, tum prudens judicio observaror, quibus vestigiis insistit, & quos gradus facit ipse Cicero, dum Græcos sequitur, assequitur, aut præcurrit; & scienter animadvertit, quibus in locis, & qua ratione hic noster ipsis Græcis plerumque par, sæpissime superior evadit; is demum tuto, & recta via ad imitandum ipsum Ciceronem perveniet. Qui enim intelligenter videt, quomodo Cicero secutus est alios, perspiciet ille longe felicissime, quomodo ipse Cicero sit sequendus. Et propterea, non possum probare confilium Bartholomæi Riccii Ferrariensis, doctissimi licet viri. qui, cum sic scripserit de recta imitandi ratione, ut, cum à Sturmio discesseris, cæteris omnibus, mea certe opinione, anteponendus sit; (præcepta enim ejus omnia sunt Sturmiana, & ex tuis sontibus hausta, atque derivata) exempla tamen maluit Longolii ex Cicerone, quam Ciceronis ex Platone fibi proponere; & Virgilii ex Catullo, quam Virgilii ex Homero producere. Hoc ille, bene quidem, sed non optime; ad aliquem fructum, non ad eximiam laudem; ad nonnullam mediocritatem, non ad summam perfectionem instituit.

Si verò optarem ipse sieri alter Cicero, (& optare quidem nesa non est) ut sierem, & qua ratione sierem, quem potius ad consilium mihi adhiberem, quàm ipsum Ciceronem? Et, si ipse cuperem eò recta ire, quò Cicero ante sel cissimè pervenit, qua meliore via, quàm ipsis ipsius Ciceronis vestigiis insisterem? Habuit ille quidem Romæ Gracchos, Crassos, Antonios, rarissima ad imitandum exempla; sed exempla alia ipse alias quærit. Proprietatem Romanæ linguæ simul cum lacte Romæ, purissima ætate, ex ipso Latinitatis lætissimo slore hausit. Ille tamen sermonem illum Latinum suum divinum, superioribus non cognitum, posteris tam admirabilem, aliunde sumpsit; & alio modo quàm Latino usu, quàm Latina institutione, & auxit, & aluit. Ille enim sermo non in Italia natus est, sed è Græcorum disciplina in Italiam traductus. Nec satis habuit Cicero, ut lingua ejus proprietate domestica cassa esser su ranta; nisi mens etiam Græcorum eruditione prudens essiceretur, & docta. Unde evenit, ut sola Ciceronis oratio inter reliquos omnes Romanos, qui illi ætate aut superiores, aut æquales, aut suppares suere, non colore solùm vernaculo purè tincta, sed raro & transmarino quodam plenè imbuta, tam admirabiliter resplendesceret.

Itaque, cum ipsa lingua Latina, selicissimo suo tempore, in ipsa Roma, in ipso Cicerone, ad summam persectionem sine Græca lingua non pervenit; cur quisquam in sola Latina quærit, quod Cicero ipse absque Græca non invenit? Et, cùm nos sumus nec seliciores ingenio, nec prudentiores judicio, quàm ipse Cicero suit; cur temere speramus assequi, quod ille non potuit? Cur imprudenter contendimus eam viam inire, qua ipse insistere noluit? præsertim cùm hunc solum, aut hunc potissimum, tanquam summum ducem, sequendum esse ducimus. Et in re literaria, cùm Ciceronis imprimis probamus judicium, cur ejus repudiaremus conssilium? Cùm prudenter illum de hac re semper dixisse, cur illum in eadem re rectè secisse non ingenuè sateamur? Nissi forsan Cicero ipse, judicio quidem prudens, aliis tamen & inutilis consilio, & ineptus exemplo planè esse videatur.

Itaque quemadmodum perspicuè cognoscimus, quid Cicero de hac re prudenter sæpe statuit, constanter semper docuit: ita nos libenter sequamur, quod ipse in eadem re selicissimè secit. Quas igitur Cicero linguas sibi re ipsa utiliter, aliis exemplo prudenter conjunxit: absit, ut nos vel separemus illas, quod est rudis imperitiæ; vel repudiemus alteram, quod est superbæ imprudentiæ.

imprudentiæ. Nam in hac florere sine illa, cum summa aliqua laude, tam facile continget, quam fæpe ufu eveniet, ut avis una ala cum pernicitate volare, aut vir uno pede cum velocitate currere possit. Ex omni enim seculorum memoria, sive ex lectione, sive ex auditione, five ex notitia, commemorare habeo folum unum aut alterum, qui absque Græcis literis, ad eximiam eloquentiæ laudem, in Latina lingua pervenerunt. Sed quemadmodum par est, ut hos homines admiremur, ita tutum non est, ut eosdem imitemur. Eos ex animo suspicio, et illis libenter gratulor hanc fuam raram felicitatem. Sed aliis non fum auctor, ut vel parem sperent laudem, vel eandem sequantur rationem. Si non alio, hoc certè nomine, quod Cicero hac via infiftere, aut prudenter ipfe noluit, aut frustra cum multis tentare non fit ausus. 66 Sed ait quis, Rectè quidem Cicero; nam ante eum, nemo suit præter Græcos, ad imita-66 tionem proponendus. Sed nunc habemus ipsum Ciceronem, eum quidem, eum universa "Græcia, & cum fingulo quoque Græcorum, in ea eloquentiæ laude qua maxime quisque " floruit, comparandum. Cur igitur non Ciceronem folum mihi, variis illis Græcis relictis,

" ad imitandum proponerem?"

Aliquid est, quod dicis. Ipse enim Ciceronem præcipuè imitandum volo; sed tuta via, fed recta ratione, suo ordine, suo loco. Et rationem meam, cur hoc volo, & quomodo hoc volo, apertè oftendam. Primum, si optarem ipse, alter fieri Cicero, quod ante dixi, qua ratione potius fierem, quam ea ipsa, qua ipse Cicero sactus est Cicero? Hanc viam, certam, cognitam, & expeditam esse, optimus testis est ipse Cicero. Itaque cum gressus nostri rectè & solide firmati erunt, in hac ipsa via, qua præivit Cicero ad alios; sic, ut omnes ejus & abditos recessus, & varia diverticula, & difficiles ansractus, persectè cognoscamus; tum tutò quidem, & feliciter etiam, duce ipfa Minerva, nostram ad Ciceronem viam muniemus. Et hoc quidem modo, ut ante dixi, si illustriora exempla, numero multa, genere varia, è Cicerone felecta, ubi ille optimos Græcos imitatur, per infignem aliquem artificem non folùm, ut quidam faciunt, diligenter indicata, fed, ut Sturmius docet, eruditè explicata fuerint.

Et hæc est illa via, mea certè opinione, quâ ad Ciceronis imitationem rectà pergendum est. Non, quomodo Riccius oftendit Longolium fecisse, (hoc est, ut ipse putat, excellenti ratione; ut ego existimo, valde laudabiliter; ut multi sentiunt, mediocriter, & tolerabiliter; ut * Erasmus, & Paulus Manutius judicant, ineptè, frigidè, & pueriliter) sed qua ratione Sturmius Ciceronem imitandum esse, & præceptis in Literata Nobilitate perfecte docet, & exemplis in Quinctiana Explicatione infigniter oftendit.

Et hoc in loco, opportunè mihi in mentem venit infignis ille in Quinctiana locus; nimirum, + Etenim si veritate amicitia, fide societas, &c. Quæ sententia bis est à te, mi Sturmi, mirabili imitationis artificio expressa, primum, in Amissa dicendi Ratione: posteà, in ipsa Explicatione Quinctiana. In utroque loco eandem orationis formam, diversis quidem in rebus, fed varia tractatione elegantissimè essinxissi. " Præceptor meus à me petit timidè quidem & es verecundè, rogem ut ipse te, tua pace, ut illi liceat, in suo Commentariolo, hac duplici "tua unius loci Ciceronis infigni imitatione, pro exemplo abuti. Et spondeo ipse pro eo, illum hoc cum honorifica de te, & amabili mentione facturum."

Sed quorsum tantopere, mi Sturmi, laboramus de imitatione? cum non desunt, qui docti & prudentes videri volunt, qui imitationem, vel nullam esse putant, vel nihil prorsus æstimant, vel omnem temerè permiscent, vel eam totam, quæcunque sit, cujuscunque sit, ut servilem & puerilem repudiant. Sed hi sunt & inertes, & imperiti, laborem sugiunt, artem nesciunt. Qui cum naturæ omnia falso judicio tribuunt; eandem tamen, optimis suis præfidiis iniquo confilio spoliant; & res semper conjungendas, magna temeritate, extrema imprudentia distrahunt. Artis enim & naturæ dissidium saciunt, quicunque casu, non delectu, fortuitò non observatione, in literarum studiis versantur. Isti idem sentiunt de eleganti illa eloquentiæ parte, quæ in numerorum ratione collocata est. illam enim aut nullam esse volunt, aut inanem omnem judicant. Et aurium sensum artificioso & intelligenti animi judicio, * Vide Erasmi Cicerenianum.

+ Etenim si veritate amicitia, side societas, pietate propinquitas colitur; necesse eft, qui amicum, socium, affinem, fama ac fortunis spoliare conatus est, vanum se, et persidiosum, et impium esse fateatur. Orat. pro P. Quintio, seA. 6.

nihil commercii habere existimant. Quem tamen doctrinæ locum, (id quod isti aut imperite nesciunt, aut superbe contemnunt) principes illi in omni doctrina viri, Aristoteles, Demetrius, Halicarnasseus, Hermogenes, Cicero, Quinctilianus, Sturmius tanto studio perpoliverunt, ut in nulla alia re accuratius elaborasse videantur.

Sed illos in sua, sive imperita desidia, sive superba imprudentia, relinquamus: et hos alteros nos amemus, atque sequamur. Qui cùm suerint optima natura ornati, esse item voluere sic doctrina exculti, ut ipsi non magis naturæ benesicio adjuti, quàm artis præsidio muniti; nec magis ingenio felices, quam judicio prudentes, semper habiti sint.

Et hæc mihi de imitandi ratione cogitanti gravis sæpe subit dolor, ob amisso illos libros Dionysii Halicarnassei, quos doctissime & sussilime scripsit de Imitatione & Oratoria, & Historica. Quos libros ipse Dionysius in eo Commentario, quo suum judicium de universa historia Thucydidis, quid in ea vel tutò imitandum, vel cautè declinandum sit, eruditè, prudenter, & plenè explicat, cæteris suis libris omnibus anteponit. Sed interim omnes docti plurimum debent cùm Andreæ Dudithio Pannonio, tum tuo Paulo Manutio, quòd nuper hunc eruditum Commentarium, alter Latinè doctissimè vertit, (Græca enim non vidi) alter typis elegantissimè excudit. Nam in eo libro sic omnes Thucydidis virtutes & vitia, & diligenter collegit, & liberè exposuit; ut quicquid in eo, sive in verborum delectu, sive in sententiarum forma & constructione, sive in rerum judicio & tractatione, vel prædicabile ad ejus laudem, vel vituperabile ad similium devitationem scriptum est; id omne & planè & plenè ab Halicarnasseo demonstretur. Tanta enim ejus est in singula congerendo diligentia, in considerando doctrina, in ponderando judicium; ut si ipse jam revivisceret Thucydides, credo equidem, non seipse melius noscere, non de se aut rectius, aut æquius statuere potuerit. De imitatione Historica doctius, aut accuratius quicquam, credo nondum exstitit.

Et quoties ego hunc lego Commentarium, (quod sæpe quidem & libenter facio) toties inhanc sententiam adducor, ut planè ipse existimem, neminem, nec Græcum, nec Latinummajori facultate ad scribendam historiam unquam venisse, quàm Dionysium Halicarnasseum: præsertim, si ad tantam diligentiæ, & judicii præstantiam accessit etiam, Augusti benesicio, totus & tantus ille Thesaurus Bibliothecæ M. Varronis. Si forsan hunc librum, mi Sturmi, Halicarnassei de historia Thucydidis, aliis rebus occupatus nondum legeris, rogo ut meo rogatu legas. Et scribas quæso, an sensus cum mea opinione de hoc libro consentiat, necne. Fatetur etiam ipse in eodem libro, se pari ratione de Imitatione Demosthenica, & alterum librum de civili Philosophia scripsisse. Utinam illi exstarent libri; mente enim quasi jam præcipio, tales libros à tanto viro scriptos, omnibus eruditionis & prudentiæ præceptis, quantum.

ad civilem cognitionem attinet, plenè abundavisse.

Hæ cogitationes de Imitatione, & illa mentio ante sacta à me de Christophoro Longolio, qui voluit ipse esse, & aliis etiam visus est, insignis Ciceronis imitator, nonnihil me movent, ut quid ipse de ejus facultate, & aliorum de eo opinione sentiam, tibi aperiam. Qui bene de Longolio sentiunt, habent me non repugnantem: quanquam habeo & foris & domi, quos illia anteponam. Budæus amicum immerentem ingrata invidia, in quadam ad Erasmum epistola, nimis acerbè premit. Erasmus apertius insectatur; & illum ineptè, suraciter, servili & puerili more, nihil præter centones ex Cicerone consuere arguit. id quod ipse credo Erasmum aliquopotius scripsisses fomacho, quam certo suo statuisse judicio. nam scio, ubi Longolio jam mortuo, non singularem aliquam, sed summam eloquentiæ laudem tribuit. Miror ipse magisquidem, *quid tuo Paulo Manutio in mentem venerit, homini, ut audio, natura humanissimo, &, ut video, doctrina excultissimo; ut is Longolium, vivus mortuum, bonus non malum, eruditus non indoctum, Italus Italorum delicias, in literis suis ad Steuhanum Saulium, etiam in lucem editis, tam acri stilo pungeret.

Quo consilio hoc fecit, nescio: parum humaniter quidem, scio, & an vero judicio, planè dubito. Dicit enim Longolium esse exilem in sententiis, non luculentum in verbis, inopema Latina lingua, esse prossus nullum. In eo & judicium requirit, & stultitiam notat. Quanto tu, mi Sturmi, moderatius, humanius, atque prudentius olim ad Ducem Juliacensium?

Ubi, cùm de Erasmo & Longolio, & eorum tota controversia gravissimum judicium dederis, laudem neutri adimis; sed suam utrique ingenuè tribuissi. Atque in eodem loco, ubi Manutius Longolium cousque dejicere tantopere laborat, non nihil ipse, mea opinione, labitur. Nam cùm eximiam illam suam, & ei, ut ipse scribit, cum paucis communem, augendæ linguæ Latinæ rationem, singulari præconio efferat; nimirum, quod exquisitas sententias de Cicerone excerptas, aliis verbis, quàm poterat lectissimis, ornare consueverat; an non planè ostendit, se malle cum Cn. Carbone in errores abduci, quàm cum L. Crasso recta via insistere; et opinionem Quinctiliani, judicio Ciceronis anteponere? Crassus enim & Cicero, non solùm majori auctoritate pugnant, sed meliori ratione vincunt, inutilem esse laborem, malo consilio aucupari deteriora, cum recto judicio optima sunt præcepta; & temere captare vulgaria, cum selectissima scienter sunt occupata.

Gaudeo Praceptorem meum loqui Anglicè; ne, cùm tam liberè dissentit hac in re à Manutio, tantum hominem offenderet; tamen Manutium non nominat. Nam cùm dissentit ab aliquo, hoc tacite; cùm laudat quenquam, illud apertè facit. Quanquam si ipse Manutius has literas legeret, non est cur offenderetur. Nemo enim melius, quàm ille novit, Musas ipsas esse non solum candidas, sed etiam prudentes: quæ inter literarum cultores aliquam non-nunquam opinionum dissensionem, & serunt patienter, & serunt ipse aliquando non inutiliter: omnem verò animorum distractionem & sieri semper vetant, & esse diu non patiuntur. Itaque Paulum tuum Manutium, meum quoque esse volo: nec sinam, ut eum tu plus diligas, quam ipse amem. Et quanquam tu loci opportunitate illi propior es, benevolentiæ tamen studio, & officii etiam repræsentatione, cùm usus serret, ut sis conjunctior, prosectò non permittam.

Idem cogito de aliis in Italia claristimis viris, de Petro Victorio, de Jovit a Rapicio, qui eruditè & eleganter de Numero Oratorio scripsit: de Carolo Sigonio, de Joanne Baptista Pigna Ferrariensi, de Petro Bargæo Pisano. Nam quantum Carolo Sigonio omnes docti debent, pro utraque utriusque urbis republica, tanta diligentia, tanta doctrina, tanto orationis lumine explicata; & imperitus, qui non clarè videt, & invidus, qui non ingenuè fatetur, habendus est. Rara vero illa doctrina, & grave etiam illud judicium, quo Baptista Pigna aureolum Horatii librum de Arte Poetica sussissime explicuit, magno me commovit desiderio videndi etiam ea, quæ in tres libros Rhetoricos Aristotelis pari ratione conscripsit. in quibus, ut ille ipse scribit, ad artis oratoriæ, ab intelligendi principe optimè traditæ, perfectissima præcepta, ex Græcorum & Latinorum dicendi principum orationibus, ex Ethicis item, Politicis, & Historicis, omnis generis exempla adjunxit. Et quale opus hoc sit, quanquam oculis nondum vidi, animo tamen quàm præclarum illud sit, cum magna voluptate jam præcepi.

Scripsit idem Baptista Pigna, ut ipse testatur, alterum librum, Quastiones Sophocleas: ubi de tota doctrina Tragica, de Senecæ viiiis, de Græcorum Tragicorum virtutibus susè tractavit. Nec minori hujus libri videndi desiderio teneor, mi Sturmi: quoniam Sophocles & Euripides, mea certè opinione, cum Platone & Xenophonte in omni civilis cognitionis explicatione, conserri possunt: præsertim quod attinet ad eorum mores, consilia, instituta, & even-ta, qui in splendore Aulico vitam suam traducunt.

Petrus Angelus Bargæus Pisanus, carmine divino Kunnystina complexus est; nec minus excellit dicendi facultate. Is Scripsit, ut ex ejus scripto, & Manutii testimonio intelligo, doctissimos etiam Commentarios in eruditum illum Demetrii libellum de Elocutione. An hic liber, & illi, quos commemoravi Joannis Baptistæ Pignæ, in lucem prodiere, aut sint prodituri, admodum aveo scire. Si homo es, mi Sturmi, hoc meo rogatu, per literas tuas cognosce primo quoque tempore, à Paulo Manutio, qui omnium optimè istud intelligit. Et quid ille respondet, ad me quamprimum perscribas: nihil cnim mihi gratius sacturus es. Et Manibus Longolii æternam selicitatem exopto, qui mihi hoc à te postulandi occasionem dedit. "Et tibi, mi Sturmi, gratias ingentes ago, quòd de Imitatione Oratoria scribis; quòd mihi mittere polliceris, quæ dictata sunt." Mitte igitur, & quamprimum mitte: ut Præceptor meus, qui nunc est serè nudus, & planè desormis, issinc aliquem elegantiorem mutuans amictum, nonnihil cultius vessitus, & inde superbior sactus, in lucem audacius prodeat.

Interim verò cupio à te scire, an Imitatio hoc loco tam latè patere debeat, ut eam etiam exercitationem complectatur, quam nos Metaphrasin nominamus. Quæ Mismoss tamen à Z z 2

Platone in tertio de Republica dicitur: ubi ipfe Socrates orationem Chrysæ sacerdotis ex à Indados, libero sermone elegantissime dissolvit. Et cur non appelletur Imitatio, non video; cum videam in eo loco & quædam prudenter ablata, & multa ingeniose commutata. Idem sentio de pari consilio Lucretii Latinissimi poetæ; qui, diversa ratione insignem illam Thucydidis explicationem Pestis, erudito & eleganti carmine illigavit.

At quid facis, mi Aschame, inquis; quòd tu non literas, sed libellum hoc tempore ad me? Quod sacio, facio libenter, & cùm voluptate, mi Sturmi; præsertim in hac dulci & domestica niea, ab omni Aulico negotio otiosa hoc tempore, & libera cessatione; dum Princeps mea nunc longius ab Urbe, non in Musarum sacrario Palladi, (quod reliquo toto anno facit) sed inter filvas Dianæ, de more hoc tempore serviat.

Et hæc prolixitas mea, mihi quidem non est molesta, & tibi item spero, non admodum crit ingrata. Cum enim mihi nullum in scribendo tædium attulerit, ne tibi magnum in legendo sastidium sit paritura, non valdè pertimesco. Et si nihil aliud, hoc certè essiciam; ut tu certè intelligas, hoc longo silentio meo, meum erga te amorem minimè esse diminutum. Intelliges præterea, quod adhuc etiam de literarum studiis nostrarum in me resideat eadem cogitatio, licet non par facultas, quæ tum suit, cum ego primum, D. Buceri hortatu, literas illas prolixas ad te dederim: quas tu peramice quidem, amoris nostri mutui publicas testes esse voluisti.

Nunc verò fructus ille otii nostri Academici, qui tibi aliquis tum visus est, ita jam omnis in hoc negotio Aulico quotidie languescit, & eo indies, tanquam vinum sugiens, paulatim decidit; ut planè verear, tuo ne judicio prorsus exaruisse videatur. Itaque peropportuna est mihi dulcis illa & perambilis tua mecum expostulatio; cùm me vocas, sestivè tu quidem, sed nimis verè, hominem desidiosum: & cùm amanter postulas, ut nos ipsi nostram multorum annorum intermissam scriptionem revocemus, & nos inter nos mutuis crebrò literis salutemus, atque consolemur.

De mea vero diutina taciturnitate, nihil dico; nec veniam valdè peto, nec excusationem admodum quæro: quam licet justam & probabilem adserre possim, uti tamen illa nolo; ne ipsa esset mihi quidem molesta, & tibi non lætabilis. Verum ne tu in hoc meo desidioso silentio nimiùm triumphes; quanquam ipse in hoc scribendi ossicio commendationem tibi magnam libenter tribuo, mihi verò nullam sumo; tamen sic tecum jure possum contendere. Tu literarum multarum numero, ego unius magnitudine: tu variis schedulis, ego hoc volumine: tu sententiarum pondere, ego verborum cumulo: tu erudita brevitate, ego loquacitate rudi: tu amoris crebra declaratione, ego benivolentiæ perpetuo studio: sic uterque nitimur, ut tu me, an ego te, in hac contentione superem, non multum quidem laborem.

Nicolai Udalli carmen hendecasyllabum ad libellum suum.

I certum est tibi, pertinax libelle,
In multas hominum manus venire,
Doctorumque libet subire nasum,
Sannas, verbera, jurgium, cachinnos;
Per me sit tibi liberum vagari.
I, quocunque voles, tuo persclo.
Securus poteras domi latere,
Et mecum poteras manere tutus.
Nunc es publicus, haud meus libellus;
Nec possum tibi jam patrocinari,
Nec Suffragia, gratiamque vulgi,
Aut vitam geniumque polliceri.
Orbis sed tibi, multitudinisque
Standum judicio, vel est cadendum.

Epistola nuncupatoria.

Nicolaus Udallus suavissimo discipulorum suorum gregi salutem plurimam dicit.

Uanquam initio quidem, ut ingenuè fatear, non meâ voluntate ad hanc docendi provinciam capessendam inductus, sed partim assiduis eisdemque importunissemis amicorum quorundam solicitationibus essemblusque compulsus, partim nescio quo meo sato protrusus videri poteram; nunc tamen, postquam egregia quorundam vestrum indoles luculentam sanè miniméque dubitatam spem ostendit, fore aliquando, ut ad insignem aliquam eruditionem evadatis, tantum abest, ut me instituti cœptique pœniteat, ut nihil prosectò hodie prius habeam, aut antiquius. Quapropter, quam sorte nastus sum spartam, ornare (prout Græcorum proverbium admonet) mihi proposui, planéque constitutum habeo, superis bene juvantibus, in hanc gnaviter curam incumbere, insigniterque in eo elaborare, ut vos ex immanissimis barbarici faucibus quamprimum eripiam, atque ex tenebrosa abstrusaque inscitiæ caligine vindicem, ad politioris literaturæ puritatem, lucem, claritudinem.

Nec dici me herculé potest, quanto desiderio slagrem, quantáque quum omnium, qui literis funt dediti, tum vestris, duntaxat honestis et rectis, studiis proficiendi, cupiditate ardeam. Jam inde enim ab eo tempore, quo in meam vos Scholam et disciplinam recepi, parentis erga vos animum induisse me fateor; semperque existimásse in eorundem me locum succedere, à quibus traditi mihi ad instituendum estis. Quod cum ita sit, ut est, quàm mihi rem gratam et jucundam, quàm porro lætabilem et gloriosam putatis fore; si vos aliquando ad eas in disciplina vires accrescere, et pervenire videro, ut exuperatis evictisque issis grammaticarum præceptionum, et rudimentorum dissicultatibus, ac velut salebris, ad jucundissimam, eandemque multò uberrimi fructus Latinorum authorum lectionem studium transferre valeatis.

Ad hanc autem maturitatem cum animadvetterem non alia demum ratione perveniri posse, nisi si quis in promptu jam ante, et ad manum habeat bonam atque adeo divitem Latini sermonis suppellectilem; sedulò equidem mihi faciendum putavi, ne vobis deesset, unde ca potissimè facultas parari possit, et Latini sermonis copia, puritas, nitor, elegantia nullo, aut certe quàm minimo negotio perdifci.

Scripsi itaque vobis, suavissimi tyrunculi, quasdam Latinè loquendi formulas, ad quotidiani sermonis usum et copiam sanè quam accommodatissimas. Eas vero ex Publii Terentii potissimim comœdiis delegimus; quod is scriptor ad informandam instruendamque linguam puerilem maximè omnium idoneus, citraque controversiam facilè princeps videatur; utpote per quem, ipsum Ciceronem, summum alioqui Latinitatis magistrum, ad tantum eloquentiæ fastigium prosecisse constet: id quod quum ipsemet de se fatetur alicubi, imò potius gloriatur, tum scripta ejus ubique tantum non clamant. Potro Latina ipse Anglicè interpretatus sum, quò vos quoque Latina vernaculè, aut è contrario Latinè vernacula absque molestia vel negotio, et cum aliqua ratione ac gratia, nec interim ineptis prorsus atque absurdis, quod plerique faciunt, sed appositis et accommodata verbis reddere addiscatis.

Neque verò putetis velim, nullum esse operæ pretium, si quis Latina aptè in maternum vertere sermonem calleat. Nam si Cicero quædam ex Græcis tam poetis, quàm oratoribus, ac philosophis Latinè interpretando, quæ in suos referret libros, operæ pretium existimare se fecisse non nusquam gloriatur; si Terentius plus sibi laudis statuit, majoremque gloriam posuit in vertendis Græcorum antiquis sabulis, quàm inveniendis suis novis; si idem Terentius rem nihilo minus ingeniosam arbitratus est, ex bonis Græcis bona Latina sacere, quàm si ipse de suo nova excogitasset, quæ scriberet, et posteris legenda traderet; si denique ingenii argumentum, et non postremæ laudis opus existimatur, bona vernacula sic verbis Latinis mutare, ut interim fervetur utriusque linguæ idiotismus et gratia; qui minus id quoque è diverso maximæ laudi dari par sit, et vel summi artificis opus haberi conveniat, ex bonis Latinis scilicet reddere bona vernacula?

interim

Verum ut redeam, quò cœpi tendere, nec justo diutius in his hæream, imò consilii vobis sactique mei rationem compendio expediam; addidi, sicubi opus id esse videbatur, quædam velut Scholia, quibus tum sensus poetæ explicetur, tum verba ipsa non paulo declarentur apertius. Si qua insignis aut elegans incidit Metaphora, indicavi: si qua figura occurrit, admonui: si qua fabula intervenit, non sum gravatus altiusculè repetitam narrare: si quid, quod ad Latinitatem egregiè faceret, sese obtulit, non commisi, ut præteriretur silentio: si quid ad rationem grammaticam pertinere visum est, non piguit enucleare: si quid proverbii interspersum est, exposui: si quod vocabulum obscurius judicatum est, illustravi: si qua formula à communi vulgarique et usitata Latiné loquendi ratione paulo alienior apparuit, rationem reddidi, citatis, ubi res posceret, atque adhibitis, ex optimis quibusque et probatissimis authoribus, exemplis ac testimoniis. Denique, ut finem tandem faciam, quicquid usquam objectum est, quod puerile ingenium judiciumve retardare in legendo posse videretur, quantumvis id humile foret aut leve, sedulò adnotavi; vestris scilicet studiis quam optime consultum cupiens, omnibusque omnium vestrum commodis nusquam non libentissimè deserviens.

Proinde hæc quidem, quæ commemoravi omnia, pingui, quod dicitur, crassaque ac rudi Minerva tradidi, et vereor, ne quorundam opinione, judicio sententiáque, nimis etiamnum anxiè, nimis scrupulosè, nimis denique, ut ita loquar, frustulatim persecutus sim, utique dum singula ad judicii vestri immaturitatem, et captûs teneritudinem attempero. Sed nimis quàm nihi, in hoc duntaxat negotio, placuit illud, quod dici solet, indostius modò apertius; præsertim cùm scirem quàm maximè opus esset, nil, nisi velut præmansum, vobis in os inseri.

Porro ipsum opusculum Flores Terentii libuit inscribere, quoniam hæ formulæ, quas vobis jam nuncupamus, ex ejus poetæ lepidissimis juxta atque elegantissimis comædiis, quasi horto quodam fragrantissimo, et ad miraculum vario, amænoque topiario, ordine omnes selectæ sunt et excerptæ. His igitur laborum nostrorum quasi primitiis fruimini, tanquam arrhabone ac pignore tum nostri erga vos summi amoris, tum officii ac fidei.

Quod si prodesse hæc, conduceréque vestris studiis intellexerimus, alia, favente Christo, dabimus propediem altiora atque majora. Vestræ autem partes erunt, suavissimi tyrones, omni, quod aiunt, pede stare, omnibus ingenii nervis contendere, ac modis omnibus curare, ne nostros sudores laboresque frustremini, neve nostrum hoc tantum oleum et operam eludatis, sed potius ut conceptæ de vobis tum spei, tum expectationi, possitis per omnia respondere. Valete.

Londini ex cœnobio Monachorum ordinis Divi Augustini pridie calendas Martias, anno post natum Christum 1534.

D. GUALTERI HADDONI ORATIO

ad pueros Ætonenses.

Agnam locus admonitionis vim habet, suavissimi pueri: Nam hæc ipsa cernens, quonadam mea, nunc vestra studiorum incunabula, communium memini vestrarum literatum, et vos amo tenentes illum vitæ cursum, in quo vos ipse sum antegressus. Quales enim vos nunc estis, tales nos olim pueri fuimus; et quales nos jam esse cernitis, tales vos dies viros essiciet. Quapropter si nonnullis in personis, magna vobis occurrunt et memorabilia. Scientiarum et morum ornamenta, primum cognoscite, principiis illos eisdem esse profectos, quibus vestræ jam ætates sundatæ sunt; deinde colloborate, similis ut progressus vester, et par ad extremum exitus esse possit. Etenim hoc valde sanè versimiliter affirmare licet, quod illa, quæ sunt in aliis maxima, nunquam in vobis erunt magna, nist teneris in his annis vestris coeperint esse aliqua.

Cur autem ad principatum quendam laudis ab hac florentissima Schola contendendum sit, paucula proponam nota samiliariter. Jucundior enim domesticarum rerum sermo vobis erit, et facilius in memoriis vestris insidebit. Primum autem et summum est, quòd disciplinam habetis persectissimam, et descriptissimam, per omnes literarum et morum vestrorum partes permeantem. Etenim sive libris occupamini, sive jucunditati vos datis, sive foras progredimini, sive domi vos tenetis, sive precamini, sive vescimini, sive quid aliud agitis, vitæ custodes omnibus in locis dispositos habetis. Omninò vos commovere non potestis, quin statim in aliquam censuræ particulam vestigium ponatis. Omnes loci pleni vobis officiorum vestrorum occurrunt; omnia tempora, imò verò singula temporum momenta, cartam habent vel fructuofi studii rationem, vel honestæ voluptatis oblectationem.

Magna laus et planè summa majorum vestrorum, qui vestræ juventutis exercitationes tam sapienter dispertiverunt. Vos elaborare debetis, ne frustra tam egregia disciplinarum et virtutum adjumenta provisa sint. Quam ad rem crescet in animis vestris ardor et alacritas, si diligenter & attentè recordemini, qui, et unde sitis, quâ spe et expectatione hic collocati, quem ad sinem reservati. Nimirum Regales ii cœtus vestri sunt, Regale semen estis, Regalis samilia; quapropter grandes et uberes sructus serre debetis. Regalibus stipendiis omnes militatis: itaque singularis et excellens in vobis discendi sit assiduitas, ut quantum suit in muniscentia principum admirabilitatis et præstantiæ, tantum in literis vestris esse possit laudis & industriæ.

Nec frustra vobis labores erunt suscepti. Quot etenim respublica dignitatum gradus habet, tot vobis præmia studiorum vestrorum præparata sunt. Et si vobis magnum videtur, aurum & purpuram intueri, servorum greges, instratos equos, possessiones etiam & sundos, & cætera vitæ partim adjumenta, partim ornamenta; scitote vestris scientiis & virtutibus ista, quotcunque sunt, & quantacunque sunt, deberi sane emnia. Certè quidem in ipsis istis puerilibus subselliis, Decanos, Collegiorum Præsectos, Jureconsultos, Medicos, Judices, Episcopos etiam & Senatores video. Nunc laborare vos aliquamdiu non pœniteat, paulo post beneficiis & emolumentis, honoribus & ornamentis non solum explebimini, sed etiam accumulabimini.

Si dubitatis, hæc ipsa contemplamini præsentia tempora, quæ majorem vestris studiis honorem exhibuerunt, quam unquam optare ausi estis. Primum excellentistima Regina (qua nunquam sol quicquam in terris vidit speciosius, aut omni genere decorum et ornamentorum isluminatius) cum vix adhuc in palatio suo constitisset, poetam ad se vestrum admisit, poema

susception of the second of the se

fuscepit, & honorario luculento studia vestra cohonestavit. Deinde Senatûs & nobilitatis slos, hæc literarum vestrarum curricula benignissimè visitavit, & indoles vestras, quantum tempus serebat, degustavit: ad extremum præmiis vos & laudibus beneficentissimè dinisit. Si capita vos, & lumina reipublicæ, tantum in hac ætatula, propter spem literarum nonnullam, diligunt; quantum literas ipsas in vobis enatas & essentences amabunt, cum viri eritis, & singuli fingulis in reipublicæ partibus collocabimini?

Scd fortasse tempus hoc longe vobis abesse videtur. Non prosecto; sed adest, aut prope est: volat enim ætas. Interim disciplinis vestris tot reperietis sautores, & virtutibus, quot in Anglia docti reperiuntur & boni. Separatim autem & præcipuè vos curabit indulgentissimus vester præsectus, qui vos amat non secus quàm pater filios, qui vestras commoditates putat suas; qui ne vivere quidem deinceps ipse velit, nist vos ut eruditissimos videat & optimos. Adstat autem ante oculos Præceptor sanè laudabilis, qui vestras pueritias informat, ipse juvenis, in quo magnum vobis solatium propositum est. Etenim ipse, cum adoleveritis, ad aliorum gubernationem adhibebimini. Postremò me videtis, familiarem vestrum. & alumnum hujus Scholæ. Quanquam autem me mei valde pænitet, nec quicquam in me positum esse sciam, quo magnopere positis uti; tamen totum hoc, nescio quid nihili, quod in me est, commoditatibus vestris et opportunitatibus do dediceque. Nec enim quicquam in vita mihi potest optabilius accidere, quàm ut hæc nobilissima literarum sedes plurimos subministret egregios, & principi servos, & reipublicæ cives.

Atque hæc sunt illa paucula, quæ in hoc tempore volui attingere: cum ætas se vestra corroboraverit, & ematuruerint animi, plura vobis, si opus erit, & graviora proferam. Interim vivite, valete & crescite, ut Deo gloriæ, reipublicæ honori, & vobismet ipsis emolumento esse possitis.

An Extract out of Mr. Richard Mulcaster's Book of Education, printed in the year 1581.

TOR the credit of these mathematical sciences, I must needs use one authority of great and well-deserved countenance among us; and so much the rather, because his judgment is so often and so plausibly vouched by the courteous Master Ascham in his book, which I wish he had not himself, neither any for him, intitled the Scholemaster; because myself dealing in that argument, must needs sometimes dissent too far from him, with 66 fome hazard of mine own credit, seeing his is hallowed.

"The worthy and well-learned gentleman, Sir John Cheke, in the midst of all his great " learning, his rare eloquence, his found judgment, his grave modefty, feared the blame of a " mathematical head so little in himself, and thought the profession to be so far from any such " taint, being foundly and fadly studied by others, as he bewraied his great affection to-" wards them most evidently in this his doing. Being himself provost of the King's college in Cambridge, in the time of his most honoured prince, and his best-hoped pupil, the good "King Edward, brother to our gracious fovereign Queen Elizabeth, he fent down from the " court one Master Buckley, sometime fellow of the said college, and very well studied in " the mathematicals, to read arithmetick and geometry to the youth of the college; and for the better encouraging of them to that study, gave them a number of Euclides of his own cost. " Master Buckley had drawn the rules of arithmetick into verses, and gave the copies abroad " to his hearers. Myfelf am to honour the memory of that learned knight, being partaker " myself of his liberal distribution of those Euclides, with whom he joined Xenophon; which " book he wished and caused to be read in the same house, and gave them to the students, " to encourage them as well to the Greek tongue, as he did to the mathematicks. He did, "I take it, as much for the students in St. John's college, whose pupil he had once been, as he did for us of the King's college, whose provost he then was.

D. HENRICI SAVILII,

Equitis aurati, & Coll. Mertonensis Custodis dignissimi,

ORATIO,

C O R A M

REGINA ELIZABETHA

Oxonii habita, anno 1592, Septemb. 23.

可

1 - 5

.

D. HENRICI SAVILII ORATIO.

THESES.

- I. Rei Militaris, & Philosophiæ studia posse in Republica unà vigere.
- II. Astrologiam judiciariam è civitate benè morata esse exterminandam.

Orpus humanum, Serenissima Princeps, nisi vis aut morbus impulerit, tribus quasi gradibus tendit ad mortem; adolescentiæ, maturitatis & senectæ: Sic respublica, non bellis externis oppressa, non civilibus ante tempus lacerata, naturali cetè decursu habet incrementum, statum, & declinationem. Nam & omnia orta occidunt, & maturata dessuunt, Sall. initio bellis & tempore corroborata, tempore labesactantur. Jam artes aliæ sunt necessitatis, aliæ liberalis sugurth. otii, aliæ eruditi luxûs. Necessitatis. ut ad depellendam famem agricultura, pecuaria; ad arcendum srigus, architectura, vestiaria; ad vim propulsandam, ars militaris: Otii liberalis, ut gymnastica, musica, & hæc ipsa mater artium Philosophia: Luxûs, ut pictura, statuaria, culinariæ, fucatoriæ artes, aliæque, in quas magno corporum, majore animorum damno, sumus ingeniosi.

Nec in omnibus reipublicæ temporibus vigent istæ omnes, nec tamen ullum est tempus, in quo non aliqua. Sic enim natura comparatum est, ut necessitatis inventa tempore prima sint, otii media, extrema luxuriæ: sintque illa nascentis serè, crescentisque reipublicæ, vigentis altera, tertia ruentis. In constituentibus rempublicam, in bella gerentibus pro capite & salute, nasci literarum studia non solent, non possunt. Otium est pacemque nastæ, vel pro gloria tantum dimicantis, civitatis alumna Philosophia. Contra, rei militaris scientia iis reipublicæ temporibus non utilis modo, sed pernecessaria. Ut enim generare, naturæ nobilius, eoque dissicilius est opus, quam augere, quam conservare: sic majoris animi, ingenii, artis, virtutis, imperium sundare, quam tueri; ** cum novam, in medio crescentem molem oderint etiam lon-ginque nationes, fibi ac posteris suis metuant vicinæ.

Secundum est tempus reipublicæ jam constitutæ vigentisque, in quo emicant illa, quæ dixi, omnia oblectationis, & otii liberalis, storente etiamnum rei militaris scientia. Quòd si idem ardor animorum maneret, idem armorum studium, labor, industria, vigilantia; nempe id, in quo Deos omnes frustra votis satigamus, jamdiu manibus teneremus, immortalem civitatem. † Facilè enim imperium iis artibus retinetur, quibus initio partum est. Sed nimirum cimnemo jam hostis, nisi quem nos sacimus, nulla gens inimica, nisi propter nostras injurias; cessante necessitate, armorum, quæ necessitatis causa primum sumpta sunt, aciem patiniur hebescere. Labente dein paulatim disciplina, cum ex superiorum temporum virtute nihil restet, præter opes virtute congestas, & instrumenta luxuriæ; spreta jacet res militaris, assischa di-

† Nam imperium facile iis artibus retinetur, quibus initio partum est. Sallufius Bill. Catil.

Nusquam benigne legatio audita est: adeo simul spernebant, simul tantam in medio crescentem molem. sibi ac posteriosuis metuebant. Livius lib. 1.

vinæ particula mentis, virtutis imperatoria: eodemque labefactata motu, concidunt literarum studia, seu præsidio militari destituta, seu commercii vitiorum voluptatumque pertæsa: ut ne-mini dubium esse queat, ea studia posse unà vigere, quæ non possunt nisi unà perire.

Prima ætate à Roma condita usque ad Annibalem Italia Africaque ejectum, * Tollitur, ut ait Ennius, è medio sapientia, vi geritur res: Spernitur orator bonus, horridu' miles amatur. Inde ad Augustum maturitatem pono: in qua cluxerunt illa literarum lumina, Gracchi, Scavolæ, Tuberones, Crassi, Hortensii, Cicerones, Varrones. Huic ætati, ingeniorum sera-cissimæ, debemus Livium, Sallustium, Plautum, Lucretium, Virgilium: nec minus magnos imperatores, Mummium, Marium, Syllam, Pompejum, Agrippam; & in cœlum ferendos propter summam in utroque genere præstantiam, M. Catonem, P. Africanum, & C. Cæsarem. Quæ tamen ætas ita rudis fuit artium ad luxum pertinentium, ita parùm intelligens Græcarum deliciarum; ut Mummius, magnus, ut dixi, imperator, capta Corintho, cum maximorum artificum manibus persectas tabulas, ac statuas in Italiam portandas locaret, juberet prædici conducentibus, si eas perdidissent, novas eos reddituros.

Post Augustum, deslorescente jam penitus bellica laude, stanteque republica non vi sua. fed rerum prius gestarum glorià; ex domitis nationibus peregrinis hausta, infusaque in mores civitatis peregrinitas, ut eadem studia, quasi progressu quodam naturali, idem ubique exitus maneret. Ita dominante luxurie, cum homines beati & locupletes, voluptatibus immerfi, literarum fludia ad Græculos fervos rejicerent, dum putarent se scire, quod quisquam in domo fua sciret; à servilibus ingeniis artes liberales corruptæ, emortuam jam ante rem militarem haud longo intervallo confecutæ funt; nisi quod sub Trajano principe, † cùm iterum moveret lacertos imperium, reddita quafi juventute, bonze quoque literæ effloruerunt. Testes fero è Græcis Plutarchum, Lucianum: è nostris Plinium, Tacitum. Et dubitamus adhuc eas artes posse conjungi, quæ in civitate, omnium gentium principe, simul sloruerunt, simul perierunt, simulque renatæ sunt?

Num apud Græcos secus? Prima ætas usque ad Medica tempora, armis exercitatissima, literarum penè rudis. Inde ad Philippum Demetrii altera, literis armifque florens, in qua Cimon, Alcibiades, Philippus Amyntæ, Alexander, Seleucus, Demetrius, fummi imperatores: & in omni philosophia principes, Socrates, Anaxagoras, Plato, Aristoteles, Chrysippus. Non est necesse de singulis; nefas tamen fuerit de Pericle, Thucydide, Xenophonte Socratico. Dione Platonico, qui in utroque genere excelluerunt, filere. Ne in nostra quidem republica factum est illud, quod plerique putant, literarum & armorum divortium; cum iis ipsis temporibus, quibus majores tui, Augustissima Regina, terrorem nominis sui in Galliam, Hispaniam Siciliam, Cyprum, Asiam, Ægyptum intulissent, elucerent domi illa hujus Academiæ ornamenta, Europæ lumina, Rogerus Bacon, Walterus Burley, Scotus, Occhamus, Wiclevus: quos, cum ab omnibus cum ingenii, tum doctrinæ subsidiis suerint instructissimi, isto oraționis flore, quo nunc fere solum, certè nimium gloriamur, æquissimo animo patior carere.

Quid, quòd ne alterum quidem fine altero horum studiorum potest esse persectum? Literæ ab Imperatore præsidium mutuantur & tutelam, id est, spiritum & vitam: reddunt multa magnaque & adjumenta belli, & ornamenta victoriæ: Historiæ veteris notitiam, id est, maximè certam brevemque, maximè multiplicem, minimeque periculosam rerum gerendarum ex gestis scientiam. Do L. Lucullum, qui Roma persectus rei militaris rudis, rebus gestis legendis in Asiam venit factus imperator: P. Africanum, qui Cyri Disciplinam à Xenophonte scriptam, nunquam solebat ponere de manibus illis gloriosis, quibus Numantia & Carthago, duæ urbes Romani æmulæ fastigii, excisæ sunt. Addo ex philosophia sapientibus sententiis, gravibusque verbis ornatam orationem; qua militum animos possit jacentes erigere, serocientes reprimere, inflammatos restinguere: Addo temperamentum morum, & sedationem perturbationum: nequid in bello irate, in victoria superbe, in pace ultra civilem modum; neu cædibus & rapinis assueta mens, immanitate efferetur.

Vide Cicer. Orationem pro L. Murena: et Gellii, lib. xx. cap. 9.
 † A Cæfare Augusto in seculum nostrum haud multo minus anni ducenti; quibus inertia Cæsarum quasi consenuit atque decoxit: nisi quod sub Trajano principe movet lacertos, & præter spem omnium, senectus imperii, quasi reddita juventute, revirecuit. Floras.

Quid illa abstrusiora? Astronomia, inquit Plato, Imperatori suturo necessaria est ad temporum vicissitudines noscendas: Arithmetica ad acies instruendas: Geometria ad castra matanda, loca capienda, sigurandos exercitus: hine urbium muniendarum peritia; hine bellicorum tormentorum, operumque machinatrix. Ab hac disciplina prosectus Archimedes, legionum & classium impetum solus perlevi momento luto ludificatus est: contrà, Philippus Demetrii scalarum brevitate, id est, ignoratione Geometriæ, à Melitæensium oppido rejectus; Nicias superstitione lunaris desectus, id est, ignoratione Astronomiæ, cum exercitu cæsus in Sicilia. Idem cùm * Sulpitius Gallus in bello cum Persa provideret; prædiceretque militibus, ne id pro portento acciperent, quod ordine naturali, statis temporibus stat; magnum momentum ad debellendam Macedoniam, id est, ad Romanum imperium constituendum, visus est attulisse. Quare cùm his tot, ac tantis adminiculis persiciatur ars Imperatoria; neque aliunde sint ea, quàm ex media deprompta philosophia; concedamus sanè, ea studia simul esse posse, quæ nisi simul, non possum esse absoluta.

Neque tamen non est aliquid, quod contra affertur, Philosophiam avocare animum à sensibus, & contemplationi tradere rerum, dii boni! maximarum, sed ab hac consuetudine populari abhorrentium: quarum illecebris, quasi quodam Circæo poculo delinita mens, ad rempublicam tractandam, ad res manu gerendas, nolit accedere, nè possit quidem. "Nam cùm "natura, ut ait philosophus, faciat unum ad unum, difficileque sit pluribus in rebus eundem ex"cellere;" tum certè difficillimum, in tam dissidentibus, & natura disparatis. Ex humoribus, quibus constamus, aptissima ad Philosophiam melancholia, ad arma bilis, ad voluptates sanguis; quartus ille pituita gravis, ne ad mala quidem bonus. Plato tres animæ partes ponit, fedibus disclusas: rationalem in capite, irascibilem in corde, concupiscibilem in jecore. Ad rationalem pertinet philosophia, ad irascibilem ars militaris, voluptuariæ ad tertium genus.

Quod si possent illi humores ita commisceri, aut istæ sive partes animæ, sive sacultates, ita conjungi, ut altera vim alterius non infringeret, non debilitaret: haberemus, id quod quærimus, in milite philosophum. Aut si hoc difficile est, cùm ob alia, tum quia utriusque studii eâdem pæne ætate, multo sudore, multisque vigiliis sacienda sunt tyrocinia; secernamus, si placet, à milite totum hoc philosophari; relinquamus imperatori, ut contemplativis mediocriter tinctus sit; morali verò civilique philosophia, & politiore literatura penitus imbutus. Atque ut demus vera esse, quæ sunt ab ornatissimis magistris allata; tamen eam vim habent pleraque, non ut in una republica simul esse non possint, sed ut ne in uno homine: ne nos quidem civitatem ex philosophis constare volumus. quid enim ad vim arcendam soret ineptius? neque ex militibus totam: nam quid turbulentius? Respublica nimirum debet esse unita, non una. Cujus dignitas salusque non una laude, sed uno omnium rerum laudandarum temperamento continetur.

Sequitur Astrologia, quam eventis sallacem, usu superstitiosam, à barbaris nationibus importatam, bonis temporibus Græciæ ignotam, etiam malis Roma pulsam, tot senatusconsultis, tot principum rescriptis damnatam, suffragantibus omnium ætatum philosophis, (plebeios quosdam excipio) politicisque, è republica exterminamus: artem, (quod in arte turpissimum est) nullis textam principiis, nullâ subnixam demonstratione, nullo constantem syllogismo. Verum est, cœlum in hæc inferiora luce, motu, virtute agere: ista omnia sovere, animare; Obliquum circulum causam este ortûs & interitûs; à sole & homine generari hominem; sed ab homine, ut causa propinqua propriaque, quæ materiam suppeditet; à sole, ut inter essicientes coadjuvante, remotaque, & generali: qui uno & eodem calore, & semen Aconiti animat ad venenum, & Brassicæ ad alimentum, & Rhabarbari ad medicinam; non naturam aliquam inserendo, sed ea in actum, in lucem, producendo, quæ prius in materiæ potentiis delitescebant.

Itaque fanus, an morbosus sim; acutus an hebes; albus an ater, nihil ad cœlum stellasque: quæ eodem lumine, eodem cœli situ, eodem momento, omnibus iisdem agentia, & ex materia sanè disposita sanum producunt infantem, & ex morbosè morbosum. Quid illa externa? pauper an dives, honoribus clarus, an secus? quæ rerum fortuitarum temerario intercursu, nostræque voluntatis libero motu, infinitis modis variata, nullum habent cum cœlo commercium. Sed de Astrologia facilius est tacere, quàm pauca dicere.

* Ab aliis Caius Gallus appellatur. Vide Ciceronem de Sevedinte.

Reliquæ funt, Augustissima Regina, partes officii nostri, maximis tuis immortalibusque in nos, in rempublicam, in orbem Christianum, meritis debitæ, atque consecratæ. Patere igitur, ut id unus pro omnibus dicam, quod isti omnes de tua Majestate taciti sentiunt. Patere, tuam in obtinendo imperio felicitatem, in constituendo sapientiam, in tuendo sortitudinem, in administrando constantiam, cæteras virtutes tuas, quæ omnium gentium literis, & linguis commemoratæ sunt, tuorum quoque, ad quos tantarum virtutum fructus propiùs pertinet, voce celebrari. Cùm essent omnia, fato quodam superiorum temporum, plena suspicionum domi, soris bellum certum, aut pax insida: cùm in oculis, in visceribus nostris hæreret, ex illo inselici conjugio contractum, pertinax malum, Hispanorum dominatio: cùm essent sent denudatæ; in his tot tantisque difficultatibus eluxit tua singularis, ac verè divina sapientia, divinissima Princeps.

Gladium, in illa rerum mutatione ac transitu, vaginâ vacuum Anglia non vidit: vidit plausus, clamores, exultationes omnium ordinum, ætatum, hominum, nisi quibus expediret esse malum principem, hoc est, quàm dissimillimum tui. Tu Hispanos à capite, à cervicibus nostris, aut invitos depulisti, aut remissiti volentes. Tu publicam sidem, angustiis ærarii vacillantem, prædiorum tuorum, rerumque pretiosissimarum venditione levasti. Tu oppida amissa, pactis conventis, quod in te suit, recepisti: obsidum suga, & quorundam persidia, quod præstare non poteras, perdidisti. Cumque tuæ castissimæ purissimæque menti nihil placeret sallax, nihil sucatum; Tu, nummis adulterinis sublatis, commercia revocasti, sidem restituisti. Tu religionem, majorum incuria collapsam, aut ipso tempore desidentem, incredibili animi fortitudine renovasti, communeque Asylum omnibus gentibus aperuisti: neque dubitasti nova princeps, cùm omnes propinquæ nationes propter veteres inimicitias essent infensæ, longinquarum quoque odium hac novitate provocare.

Ab his initiis profecta, sedisti deinceps belli pacisque arbitra, inter reges Christianos Regina: qui à factiosis civibus vexati, aut potentiorum injuriis per vim pulsi, in tuo consilio, armis, opibus acquiescunt. Testis Valesiorum familia, quorum infantiam consiliis tuis rexisti, ferociam mitigasti; domumque ruentem, quantum in te suit, sustinuisti. Testis illustrissima hæc Borboniorum, qui tuis unius freti armis, nixi pecuniis, non alia re magis, quam Majestate nominis tui stantes, Te parentem agnoscunt, Te deam venerantur. Testis Lusitania, cujus regem extorrem ejectumque liberalissimo hospitio accepisti. Testis Germania, Dania, Suetia; quæ tuo nutu arma sumunt, ponuntque. Quid Christianos dico? cum ipsi Turcarum imperatores, quibus, ante hujus beatissimi seculi lumen, ne nomen quidem hujus insulæ unquam sando auditum, tui reverentia nominis arma abjecerint, pacemque Polonis jam ad ultima redactis, Te interveniente, concesserint.

Dixi de fingulis ferè partibus; nunc de universo orbe Christiano. Cujus cum maxima pars. aut hæreditate relicta, aut affinitatibus comprehensa, aut armis devicta Unius justu regeretur; cum Galliam per emissarios, Turciam per mercenarios obtineret; cum Germania partibus, Polonia bellis destineretur; cum omnes omnium gentium principes, proceres, aut socordia negligerent, aut timore abscederent, aut avaratia inclinarent, quà, junctis nuper Orientis & Occidentis opibus, aurum præponderebat; cum aucha, ut fit, ex prosperis cupiditate, animus haud obscure adjectus esset ad imperium universi, omniaque nemine impediente, in Unius finum cafura viderentur; hic tua divina virtus enituit, hic invictum animi robur, cum fapientia fingulari. Quæ, oppressis priniùm domesticorum infidiis, (quod dii prius omen in ipsum) rupto scedere Burgundico, quod Ipse, immisso in tuam provinciam latrocinio, priùs ruperat, receptis in societatem Belgis, ampliatisque imperii fin bus tot urbium accessione, bellum terra. marique, pro salute omnium susceptum, sola gestisti. Quod cujus manibus administratum sit, non quæro, cùm videam tuis auspiciis, tuis consiliis provincias adjunctas, urbes captas, naves direptas, classes depressas; non hossium fines, sed urbem, sedem imperii, tuis signis appetitam, obicisam, oppugnatam. Tuis consiliis Indiæ, quanta terræ totius pars, quantula tuorum manu, quam incredibili celeritate victoriis peragratæ! Tuis, tuis (intelligo, quid dicam) confiliis, tabulis armisque completa omnis hæc Oceani ora, constrata cadaveribus littora. Tuis auspiciis Hispania Anglum non vidit, nisi victorem, aut victoriæ immortuum; Anglia Hispanum, nisi captivum. Itaque stant tuorum objectu armorum, tuorum oppositu laterum, quot sunt in Europa regna, principatus: ipsique adeo Pontifici, nominis tui insensissimo hossi, unà cum cæteris, absque tuis armis, vel serviendum fuit, vel pereundum.

Bonitatem, clementiam, justitiam, æquitatem, (ista pervulgata, ac propè decantata) in tanta principe referre, regiarum & heroicarum virtutum, quæ in Majestate tua elucent, injuria suerit. Ne id quidem attingam, quæ mala quàm constanti animo privata pertuleris; quæ tamen & gratiorem præsentis selicitatis sensum attulerunt tibi, tuisque civibus certissimam salutem, principem habere, quæ & semper cogitet, crebrisque sermonibus usurpet, quid aut noluerit sub alio principe, aut voluerit. Illa commemorabo, quæ vulgò minùs nota, non minùs certè mirabilia ad laudem: Te, cùm tot literis legendis, tot dictandis, tot manu tua scribendis sussicias; cùm consiliariorum tuorum, in minimis etiam rebus, sententias dijudices; cùm privatorum precibus, principum legationibus per te respondeas, de subditorum quoque privatis controversiis sæpissimè cognoscas; in ista tamen districtissima vita, non principum, (quorum aliæ sunt nostris moribus artes) sed pænè mortalium doctissimam evassiste: Te magnam diei partem in gravissimorum autorum scriptis legendis, audiendisque ponere: neminem nisi sua lingua tecum loqui: Te cum nemine nisi ipsorum, aut omnium communibus Latina, Græccaque.

Omitto plebeios philosophos, quos rarò in manus sumis. Quoties divinum Platonem animadverti tuis interpretationibus diviniorem effectum! quoties Aristotelis obscuritates, principis philosophorum, à principe seminarum evolutas, atque explicatas! Dicerem liberò, nemini unquam ad sacratissimam Majestatem tuam aditum patuisse semidocto, qui non ex tuis sermonibus discesserit doctissimus; nisi meæ vehementer me pæniteret tarditatis, qui in tam illustri schola tam parûm profecerim.

Itaque literas, literatissima Princeps, tuere ac protege: id est, nobis, qui hîc vivimus, nostra privilegia; illis, quos emissimus suam dignitatem, sua præmia in Republica, in Ecclesia, quod sacis, conserva. Academiam utramque novis immunitatibus munire, novis legibus sundare perge. Utraque à te ornata, in te ornanda certabit, cæteroqui omni genere laudis pares; hoc nostra felicior, quòd tuos vultus iterum intuetur, in cujus oculis habitant Gratiæ, in fronte Benignitas, in ore Majestas, in pectore Sapientia, in manibus Liberalitas, in toto corpore Pulchritudo & Venustas, digna principe, digna tantis prognata principibus, digna imperio: ut tecum jam propè, parens Natura, redeamus in gratiam; quæ, cùm parem, essus hic viribus, procreare non posses, neminem voluisti ex tanta principe disparem superesse.

LETTERS*

OF

Mr. ROGER ASCHAM,

Transcribed by the Reverend Mr. Thomas Baker, B. D. of St. John's College, Cambridge, from the Originals, indorfed by the hand of William Lord Burghley, Lord High Treasurer in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, and formerly in the custody of the Reverend Mr. John Strype.

To Mr. RAVEN, fellow of St. John's college, in Cambridge.

S. P. in Christ Jesu.

UR journey out of England to Maclyn (a) in Brabant, I wrote unto you from Colen. Observe this—to write unto me how many letters you receive from me; what day they be written, and from what place. I wrote unto you four letters from Gravesend (b), from Calato, from Antwerp (c), from Colen (d); and this is the first from Augusta (e).

As I wrote in my last letter, 3d Oct. we came to Maclyn. I told you at large both of the abbey with 1600 nuns, and also the lantsgrave (f), whom

3 B

* These letters are unskilfully transcribed, so that proper names are not always recoverable.

(a) Mechlin.
(b) 21 Sept. 1551. Roger Aschanic Epist. lib. 3.
(c) O.A. i. ibid.
(d) O.A. 12. ibid.
(e) Augsburg.
(f) of Hesse. See Aschanics letter to Edward Raven, ubi supra, p. 212. edit. Lond. 1590.

whom we saw prisoner. He is lusty, well-favoured, something like Mr. Hebiltbrout in the sace; hasty, inconstant; and to get himself out of prison, would sight, if the Emperor would bid him, with Turk, Prench, England, God, and the Devil. The Emperor perceiving his busy head without constancy, handles him thereafter: his own Germano, as it is said, being well content that he is forthcoming.

John-Frederick is clear contrary, noble, courageous, constant, one in all fortunes, desired of his friends, reverenced of his foes, favoured of his Emperor, loved of all. He hath been proffered of late, it is said, by the Emperor, that if he will subscribe to his proceedings, to go at large, to have all his dignities and honour again, and more too. His answer was from the first one, and is still, that he will take the Emperor for his gracious sovereign lord: but to forsake God and his doctrine, he will never do, let the Emperor do with his body what he will.

At Maclyn we saw a strange bird. The Emperor doth allow it 8 d. a-day. It is milk-white, greater than a swan, with a bill somewhat like a shovel, and having a throat well able to swallow, without grief or touch of crest*, a white penny-loas of England, except your bread be bigger than your bread-master of St. John's is wont willingly to make it. The eyes are as red as sire, and, as they say, an hundred years old. It was wont in Maximilian's days to sly with him whithersoever he went.

4 Octob. we went to Bruxelles, twelve miles. In the mid-way is a town called Vilfort, with a notable strong hold of the Emperor's in it. Traitors and condemned persons lie there. At the town's end is a notable strong place of execution, where worthy Will. Tyndall was unworthily put to death. Ye can match Bruxelles in England but with London.

At afternoon I went about the town. I came to the frier Carmelites house, where Edward Billick was warden; not present there, but being then at Colen, in another house of his, I heard their even-song: after I desired to see the library. A frier was sent to me, and led me into it.

There

* Touch of crest I do not understand; perhaps it may be without touch of crust, without breaking the crust.

There was not one good book but Lyra. The frier was learned, spoke Latin readily, entered into Greek, having a very good wit, and a greater defire to learning. He was gentle, and honest; and being a papist, and knowing me to be a protestant, yet shewed me all gentleness, and would needs give me a new book in verse, titled, De Rusticitate Morum.

6 Octob. from Bruxelles to Louvain, twelve miles. We came hither at eleven, and went away before two; and there to feast mine eyes and ears, I was content to lose my dinner. I went strait to Mr. Bransbil's house, standing against the grey-friers door. He was not at home, but was ridden to Antwerp, to have conveyed my lord Ambassador to Louvain. He left word, that if he missed my lord by the way, that I in any case should lie and use his house as my own, in his absence. His house is trim. I wrote a letter to him with his own ink and paper. He is loved of all, and regarded with the best; nor doth not use the company of J. Clement, and Bastall, who, to see a mass freely in Flanders, are content to forfake, like their country. As we entered into our inn, the vice-chancellor, with his bedels, came out of our inn. the vice-chancellor being more like in apparel and porte to our priest of Hornyngsbire, than to the comeliness of Mr. Dr. Parker, and the bedels more like Harry Barber, and than Mr. Adams and Mr. Meyres.

I went to P. Nannius's chamber, to have talked with him; but he was either drunken at home, or drinking abroad; for he was making merry, and could not be feen, as an English boy, his pupil, told me. He reads Tully's Orations at nine of the clock: at one of the clock, Theodorus. Laudius read (whom I heard) Oed. Sophocle Græcè. He read that chiding place betwixt Oedipus and Creon, beginning in ève, &c. reading twenty-one verses. His hearers, being about eighty, did knock him out with such a noise, as I have not heard. This college is called Trilingue and Ruslidianum, where he reads it. Louvain's, as far as I could mark, were compared with Cambridge, Trilingue with St. John's, or Trinity college, Theod. Laudius with Mr. Car. Ours do far excel. The reader, in oi, followed our pronunciation. I tarried so long at his lectures, that my lord was ridden out of the town; and as I posted after my lord, so do I now post out of Louvain to Tilemont, nine miles off.

3 B 2

The

The town is walled, and so is every town we lay in betwixt Dover and Augusta. There I saw nuns and papists dance at a bridal. These be news to you, but olds to that country, where it is lawful in that Babylonical papistry to serve Bacchus, and what unhonesty they will, so they meddle not with Christ, and his word: Nam quæ communio tenebris cum luce?

We were drawn up the Rhine by horses. The grapes grow on the brant rocks so wonderfully, that ye will marvell how men dare climb up to them, and yet so plentifully, that it is not only a marvell where men be found to labour it, but also where men dwell that drink it. Seven or eight days journey ye cannot cast your sight over the compass of vines. And surely this wine of Rhine is so good and natural, so temperate, so very like itself, as can be wished for man's use. I was afraid when I came out of England to miss beer; but I ammore afraid when I shall come to England, that I cannot lack this wine.

19 Octob. to Wormes. The great church of this city appears all the way like King's college cradell. The city is great and fair; but because the plague was in it, I kept me in my inn.

20 Octob. to Spira, a good city. Here I first faw Sturmius de periodis. I found also here Ajax, Electra, and Antigone of Sophocles, excellently, by my judgment, translated into verse, and fair printed this summer by Gryphius. Your stationers do ill, that at least not provide you the regifter of all books, especially of old authors. Here, at Spires, we were a day's journey and a half from Argentine. My lord was willing to go thither; and whether I was or no, you, Edward Raven, can guess: but word came from Mr. Hobbie, I beshrew him, to haste our journey; or else I had talked with Sturmius, to whom I wrote, and sent Mr. Bucer's letters; and he wrote again to me at Augusta, sending me the copy, which Mrs. Bucer brought to me to Cambridge. One sentence Sturmius wrote to me in his last letter, which some of you will be glad to hear. The fentence is this: Regis non memini præsatione, ut nunc loquuntur, ad D. Elizabetham. Ejus Majestati locus destinatur in Aristotelicis meis dialogis, in quibus stylum meum cotidie acuo, ut siquid possit contra barbariem, in heis oftendat quantulum fit, quod in ea conficienda possit.

23 Octob.

23 Octob. we rode thro' the duke of Vilebergland, thro' which runs the goodly river called Neccarus. We met with a noble lady, which is the dutchess of Milan and Lorraine, daughter to the king of Denmark. She should once have been married to king Henry the VIII. before my lady Anne of Cleve. She had been with the Emperor, and, as some thought, she went a-wooing to the prince of Spain. She had in her company about 300 horses, most part great horses, and Gennets, herself having sixteen ladies following her on palfreys. She had thirty-six mules laded with her chamber-stuff, besides a great number of waggons laded with other stuff. A great number of rascals belonging to her kitchen and stable came drabbling in the dirt on foot.

I never faw lady of her porte in my life.

Some of you will jest at my diligence in seeking old monuments; but I do it for the remembrance Veteris & amici & præceptoris, Mr. Pember, whom I do not forget, and I know would hold me excused, because I write not to him, if he knew what business I have, I pray you, Mr. Raven, make him partaker of this my trisling talk.

But friends is content with all things. I pray you, Mr. Raven, use Mr. Pember as you would use me; commend me to him, Mr. Raven, and desire him, which, I know, he doth, to learn Christ out of Christ's own gospel; and let that consensus ecclesice alone, which deceives many worthy and learned wits in Cambridge, which is nothing esse indeed but a privy fink to convey the dregs of papistry into all places. Papistry here do use it to confirm the primacy of Rome.

28 Octob. We rode towards Augusta, a mile on this side the city. Sir Philip Hobbie, with a great number of horses, where was Thomas Hobbie, and George Wheatly, mine old friend, which did convey us honourably to our lodgings, which is the abbey of St. George. Ye may see it in description. And thus ye may bid me welcome to Augusta. And if I should bid you farewell also, ye would now give me leave, because I am sure ye are weary of my long talk: but because I think some of you would glad hear how we have done since we came, I will yet a little mo trouble you.

I thank God, and my lord Ambassador, I lack no moneys, which is the best comfort in a strange country; only I lack leisure to write to my friends when I would, and to learn the tongues here is. I could wish I had wrote part of this letter three months ago; and now it is the 3d of January. Five days in the week my lord and I continually do study the Greek tongue, that I am alway either looking for my lord's lectures, or else with my lord: two days I write my lord's letters into England; fo that I never fo much as go into the town, but only on Tuesdays, to deliver our letters to the post. If I had leisure to mark things, and write things, I trow I would come as well furnished home as most part of Englishmen do. And that thing which I thought should have been the cause, why I should have fent you many news, doth in a manner forbid me to fend any; and that is, because I know so much; and being in this room that I am, I must needs keep them close, because they be credit unto me; and though I knew them otherwise, yet I must and will let them alone. Vahan hath a better life than either my lord or I. He lacks nothing; he fares well; he lives well; he may do what he lifts; study what thing he lift; go to the Emperor's court, or elsewhere, when he lift. If he do not come home well furnished with much knowledge, he little confider what God doth call him to by this journey. If I were any man's man, as Vaban is mine, I would wish no better felicity abroad. Those that stopped S. Wright from this occasion, shall never be able to make him amends; for in lacking nothing he should have studied, and seen what he had list. There can be a greater commodity to an Englishman abroad. If Wrights had ten fellowships of St. John's, it would not counter-weigh with the loss of this occasion: for besides Dutch, French, and Italian, which he should have learned, in a manner, whether he would or no, he might have learned as much Greek and Latin, and perhaps more, than in St. John's. I am almost an Italian myself, and never look on it.

If I should tell you nothing of Augusta, I should do such a noble city much wrong. At a few things, guess the rest. There be five merchants in this town, thought able to disburse as much ready money as five of the greatest kings in Christendom. The Emperor would have borrowed money of one of them. The merchant said, he might spare him ten hundred thousand guilders, and the Emperor would have had eighteen; eighteen; a guilder is 3 s. 6 d. These merchants be three brethren, Tuccurs, two brethren, Bamgartner. One of the Tuccurs doth lodge, and hath done all the year, in his house, the Emperor, the king of the Romans, the prince of Spain, and the queen of Hungary, regent of Flanders, which is here, besides his family and children. His house is covered with copper; there be a number of houses in this town, which set in Cheapside, would over-look and over-brag the whole street.

There comes to this town commonly every market-day, three and twenty hundred waggons loaded with things to fell, &c.

I have seen the Emperor twice, first sick in his privy chamber, at our first coming. He looked somewhat like the parson of Epurstone. He had on a gown of black taffety, and a furred night-cap on his head, Dutch-like, having a seam over the crown, like a great cod-piece. I saw him also on St. Andrew's day, sitting at dinner at the seast of Golden Fleece; he and Ferdinando both under one cloth of estate; then the prince of Spain; all of one side, as the knights of the Garter do in England; after orderly, Mr. Bussie, master of the horse, duke d'Alva, a Spaniard, Dux Bavariæ, the prince of Piedmont, the count of Hardenburgh.

I stood hard by the Emperor's table. He had four courses; he had fod beef very good, roast mutton, baked hare: these be no service in England. The Emperor hath a good face, a constant look: he fed well of a capon. I have had a better from mine hostess Barnes many times in my chamber. He and Ferdinando eat together very handsomely, carving themselves where they list, without any curiosity. The Emperor drank the best that ever I saw; he had his head in the glass five times as long as any of us, and never drank less than a good quart at once of Rhenish wine. His chapel sung wonderful cunningly all the dinnerwhile. Ferdinando is a very homely man; gentle to be spoken to of any man, and now of great power and riches.

The prince of Spain, I think, is not all in so wise as his father. Maximilian, Ferdinando's son, now king of Boeme, is a worthy gentleman, learned, wise, liberal, gentle, loved and praised of all.

The

The general council shall begin at Trident the first of next May: Cardinal Pool shall be president there, as it is commonly said. I have seen the Pope's bull already for it.

If Mr. Cheke would get a living of the king, my lord Ambassador would send me to see all Italy, and other countries. So I believe I would report the manner of the general council, and mark the seat of the world, as well as some other. I would trust to have the letters of most ambassadors to their cities, that I might more freely see things than commonly Englishmen do, that go into Italy. My lord hath promised me to write to Mr. Cheke and others for the same purpose: and I do not doubt but my + lady's grace, my mistress, when she shall consider the honest and true service that I did her, will help also the same.

God's doctrine is so earnest in this town, as I never saw. The churches be made like theatra, one seat higher than another, and round about be stages, as it is at the King's College buttery-door; and in Christmas the pulpit in the midst.

The table of the Lord stands comely in the higher end. On Christmas-day I did communicate amongst them. There was above 1500 that did communicate that day.

Ye fee, good fellows and friends, how glad I am to talk with you, remembering you always, wishing oft to be amongst you, where is the most pleasant life in the world. I shall not take pleasure at things here, if I did not remember how gladly I shall talk of them amongst you. He that is able to maintain his life in learning at Cambridge, knoweth not what a felicity he hath. I pray God I may meet with you there, whom I left at St. John's. I do salute you all: I name none, because I would leave out none, and because I love all. I do make you weary. And thus fare you well all in the Lord, and pray for me.

Augusta Vindelicorum, 20 Januarii, 1551.

R. A. *

+ The lady (afterwards queen) Elizabeth.

* This letter being very long, several little particulars are lest out; but nothing that alters or interrupts the sense. The rest are given entire. Mr. BAKER.

Carissimo Amico suo Edwardo Raveno, Socio Collegii Johannis.

Am much beholden to my lord and my lady. I was yet, thanked be God, never fick. This Rhenish wine is so gentle a drink, I cannot tell how to do when I come home.

News ye look for, and few I dare write: Whether the Emperor go against the Turk, into Italy, into Spain, against Magdeburgh, or come down into Flanders, it is not yet certain. We will go with him whitherfoever he go, except he go to the Devil. The Turk cometh with a great power against Hungary. Ferdinando, within these two days, departs hence to meet the Turk aforehand, with his two noble sons, Maximilian king of Boeme, and Ferdinando archduke of Austria. Maximilian is a prince peerless, except the king our master. He is twenty-three years old, lusty, courageous, wise, hardy, liberal, gentle, learned, virtuous, godly. He can speak eight tongues persectly. I pray God he may give the Turk an overthrow. He carrieth with him the hearts, good wills, and prayers of rich and poor, and the commendation of all that is wife.

Fra. George, a stout frier, and a bishop of Transylvania, (look your maps) gave the Turks an overthrow this winter. I saw Fra. George's letter written to the palatine of Rhine, requiring aid of the princes of Germany. The letter was dated 12 January 1551. If we go into Turky, (I pray God we may) we shall sail goodly down by noble Danubizo.

Pope Julie is a very king. He hath made a boy of his kitchen, an upper keeper *, Cardinal de Monte, whereof he was cardinal himself. Men say now, Parturiant montes; nascetur simia turpis.

The Emperor last Saturday in his chapel, within Tuccar's house, gave warning to all the electors and states to be at the general council at Trident 1° Maii, where they say Cardinal Pole shall be president. But all wise men think there will be no council at all; for the Pope purposing neither to amend his life, nor redress his doctrine, may lose more than win thereby. The Germans were never more stouter in God's cause. The Emperor is too wise and forecasting a prince, either to fall out with * This I do not understand.

Germany or the Pope; for by a general council, he is likely either to make the Pope, of an uncertain friend, a stedfast enemy; or else the Germans, of secret rapines, open soes. Madenburge be stout persons. The duke of Mechenburg, who they took prisoner, is dead, as men say; and it is even now reported, that Mauritius hath raised his siege, and Madenburge strongly furnished for two or three years. The Emperors have made war against that town, and have left their bodies buried in Madenburge for monuments, and the town as a maid undefiled. Well! God send quietness to his church. Men think there will be business about Piement and Milan shortly.

England need fear no outward enemies. The lufty lads verily be in England. I have feen on a Sunday more likely men walking in St. Paul's church than I ever faw yet in Augusta, where lieth an Emperor with a garrison, three kings, a queen, three princes, a number of dukes, &c.

Here was justes since Candlemas. The tilt was in a street before the Emperor's lodging. The houses be eight or nine stories high, that a wonderful number of people may look out of windows. Their spears were small, their deckings were above measure. The prince of Spain justed gently; for he neither hurt himself, his horse, his spear, nor him that he ran with. Noble Maximilian ran not.

If Vahan were an honest fellow, he might write at large of any thing; for he hath good leifure.

Well, to bid you farewell: The Turk is fet upon war, the Pope upon mischief, the Emperor upon wisdom and policy, the Germans upon God's doctrine; and the Spaniards also be the people of God, for all the world hates them.

I study Greek apace, but no other tongue; for I cannot. I trust to see England shortly, God willing. I am forry that I hear no word from Ireland. Commendations to all, because I would leave out none; to Dr. Haddon, father Bucer, John Scarlett, mine hostess Barnes. If ye will see Tuccar's library, look on Mr. Pember's letter.—From Augusta, 23 Feb. 1551.

I never yet received letter out of England.

To my affured and especial friend Mr. Edward Raven, fellow in St. John's College, S. P.

Cannot think, my good Edward Raven, that because ye either for-Leget me, or neglect me, ye write nothing unto me. I suppose ye know not how to fend. Send to Mr. Eland, and he may deliver them at the White-Friers to Mr. Stephen Hales, and he can and will fend them to me as fitly as you may fend to London. My good Thomas Leaver hath not deceived me, but written a large letter unto me. I marvel that Mr. Henry Stiland writes not. None of you lacks matter; and your longest letters be most looked for. Write how good Dr. Maden doth, and all his. If I might have had a stroke in bishoprics, I wish, &c. and I would I had been at home in England at that time. Commend me to Mrs. Maden, and our Col. D. Maden. If he and I live together, he shall be fure of a stedfast loving friend. I ask nothing so much as good-will; for all other goods I trust to provide well enough myself.

Now, Edward, I pray you as him, whom I trust and love as myself, mark the manner, towardness, and bringing up, &c. and whether Dr. Maden would be very glad thereof, or no; and whether he is plain in the matter, or double and wavering; for if, &c. Ye perceive what I mean, and add what ye lift; for in this matter, or in any other, I trust you as myself. Let no man read this letter, or see it; be secret and close; and so bid Dr. Maden. But I need not write this to you. As you fend me word of the matter, so shall you hear from me: for as I shall know your affections, so then I will enter into the matter myself more plainly. Ye need not let Dr. Maden see this part of my letter; for now I would only prove by you what this part would think of the matter, if it should be. I do not doubt but ye will both do it friendly, and can handle it wifely; for your counsell, Edward, and advice in that matter, furely I will follow. When you write, feal your letters fo, that they may not be opened, &c.

Keep my chamber well: I heard fay fome was in it; I know not. What you do I am content, and well content. If the master meddle in my interest, I am not content; and he had as good no. Be stout, Edward, and doubt not but I will and shall be able to bear you out.

in

Purpose, my Edward, to live in godliness, and learning; for that is life only. I see Emperors, kings, princes, &c. live not, but play their lives upon stages. Suspicion, care, fear, need, and a thousand miseries and  $d\pi opla$ , turn and toss their lives.

Edward, I purpose, God willing, that you and I will live together, and look and laugh at the world. I trust to you to provide for us both; and that little that I shall have, take it, and use it as your own.

I am very well, thanked be God, and in great favour with my lord and lady. My lord furely is a witty man, and ferves his God, his king, and his country, nobly here. If you hear any thing to the contrary, be bold, Edward, of my word to reprove it. Yesterday we received letters from the king's council, full of thanks and gentleness.

Write how my money is received there, and make mine account well; and think not that 20 l. is my debt to you, Edward, but all that ever I have. Write of Bucer, and what my friend Haddon on him; but that I commit it to my Henry Ailand, to write at large of Bucer, because you shall write of other matters. I trust, Will. Taylor, John Bee, and Thomas Wilson, will not be behind. I pray God I may find these good fellows at Cambridge; for there is the life that no man knows, but he that hath sometimes lacked it, and especially if one be able to live plentifully there.

Will. Ireland and R. Calibret, in Easter week, departed from Venice towards England through France. I beforew them they came not this way; and so tell my good Ireland. And I trust, when he cometh home, ye two will take any thing that I have as your own. I write not this so oft, Edward, as I mean it faithfully, and from my heart; which doth cause me so oft to repeat it.

I know ye will answer all my letters with one long one. Make one packet of all your letters together, if any other will write, and so send them.

Some news I must needs write.

The Turk's armies entered Transylvania. The great king of Tartary is the Turk's standard-bearer; and the Turk hath made a league with the Sophy, which is king of Persia. We shall have hot war in Hungary; and would to God the Emperor would go thither. Ferdinando, with his noble son king Maximilian, were almost both drowned of late in Danubius, going to Vienna.

The Turk's preparation is very great per mare Mediterraneum, and the Venetians of late have sent a great force into Corcyra. The prince Andrew Doria hath chased one of the Turkish captains, called Dragunt Bois, into such a state upon Afric shore, not far from the isle of Zerbic, that he is like to be taken, with all his ships.

The matters of Parma and Italy, Ireland shall tell you. Some of the Pope's bishops hath been at Tridentum at the beginning of May, and have deferred the council ad calendas Septembris: but I believe it be ad calendas Gracas.

Madeburg be vengeable fellows: they have almost marred all duke Maurice's men; and yet they be as strong as ever they were.

This I wrote the 10th of May; but this 12° Maii news are come, that Andrew Doria is either taken by the Turks, or at least his whole navy lost. The certainty ye shall shortly know: and this day I hear say, that the siege of Madeburg is quite dispatched. The French king sits upon the realm of Navarre. So many irons, and so hot, be ill to handle.

I hear from Sturmius every week.

Hieronimus Wolfius, that translated Demosthenes and Isocrates, is in this town. I am well acquainted with him, and have brought him twice to my lord's to dinner. He looks very simple. He telleth me, that one Borrheus, that hath written well upon Aristot. priorum, &c. even now is printing goodly commentaries upon Aristotle's Rhetoric. But Sturmius will obscure them all.

Toachimus

foachimus Camerarius hath two goodly books in printing at Basil, which he has been in hand withall many years. The one is commentaries upon Plautus: the other is called De Homine; a lexicon for all things Greek and Latin belonging ad res humanus.

The godliness, and constancy, and discipline of this town, is incredible. Three or four thousand singing at one church at a time, is but a trifle. If a papistical church have a dozen, it is well furnished. Upon Shrove-Thursday, at night, a wonderful * fort of Spaniards did whip themselves naked through the streets, deep with forrow.

Ye write not to me; therefore I have no courage to do as I would, or else I would write many things to you.

There was many companies, &c. of the Emperor's house, 113, which went at nine of the clock at night, accompanied with 800 torches. No small fools bore torches that night, but very many great lords, in gowns of crimson and purple velvet, full of aggletts of gold.

The prince of Piedmont, the duke of Alva, one of the Emperor's council, bore torches that night; a wonderful  $E\theta = \lambda o\theta \rho \eta \tau ni\alpha$  to live fo abominable all the year; and then will needs make amends with God whether he will or not.

I could declare to you, as I wrote it to my lady of Warwick: but I cannot tell what to fay to you, ye be so unkind: I have called Vahan L. K. many times, that having so much leisure, he never writes. But I now judge him wifer than I. I know, Edward, there is no fault in you.

If ye will know how I do, I think I shall forget all tongues but the Greek afore I come home. I have read to my lord since I came to Augusta, whole Herodotus, five tragedies, three orations of Isocrates, seventeen orations of Demosthenes. For understanding of the Italian, I am meet well; but surely I drink Dutch better than I speak Dutch. Tell Mr. D. Maden, I will drink with him now a carouse of wine; and would to God he had a vessel of Rhenish wine, on condition that I paid

* That is, a wonderfully numerous company.

40 s. for it: and perchance, when I come to Cambridge, I will so provide here, that every year I will have a little piece of Rhenish wine.

I would fain hear from my good cousin Coniers. We have word now, that the Emperor cometh down into Flanders the 29th of May.

If I can get leave of my lord Ambassador, surely, Edward, I will come home at Michaelmas.

Commend me to all foannenses, and leave none out; Mr. Pember, Mr. Barwich, good Mr. D. Haddon, John Scarlett and his wife, and my good hostes Barnes, whom I cannot forget: to all at Wittane.

I write this letter by piece-meals; and this is the first letter you have had from me fince Candlemas. Burn this letter. Valete in Christo.——From Augusta, 14 Maii, 1551.

R. A.

P. S. Because this paper is void, I cannot leave talking with you.

Madeburge, as it is faid, hath given within these thirteen days a great overthrow and slaughter to Mauritius.

They fay that the marquis of Brandenburg's planta pedis is smitten off with a gun by them of Madeburge.

They have gotten into the town many waggons laden with victuals. They have ploughed up all the gardens, and fown wheat in them: they have taken up the stones in the streets throughout all the town, and sown wheat in the streets, leaving only a little space to pass from house to house; and it is said there is as goodly wheat in the city as ever grew. This will be both a great help, but chiefly it keepeth the people from idleness. I hear also, that Consules Madeburgenses be desired by Mauritius to come to Witenburge, to talk of conditions of peace. God send peace, but peace in Christ.

I would be glad to have a letter from Mr. D. Maden, and fo tell him. Tell Henry Stiland, that I am well acquainted with Andreas Vefalius, that noble noble physician, and, as Vaban saith, the best physician in the world, because he give him pitcher-meat enough. I was never sick, thanked be God, since I came out of England. I pray you make Dr. Blithe partaker of this news of Andrew Dorea's and Madeburge, for he is a man whom I always esteemed.

If my lady of Suffolk be at Cambridge, know if my lord Ambassador's son, little Mr. Charles Morisin, be there; and let not Edward but go and see him; and I pray you write diligently to me of him: and if he were not so young, I would ye should bring him to my chamber, and shew the child some pleasure; at least often to do it for my sake, &c. Write of his growing, of his wit, of his colour, &c.; for it is a good thing to please another well.

Keep these letters secret; shew them but by piece-meals: yet, Edward, inquire of him wisely, lest my lady of Suffolk suspect it is done to prove how he is handled; and therefore write to me accordingly to this purpose of the child. But I need not warn you: ye can do me no greater pleasure, for divers causes.

Ye see, Edward, how that with many pens, and divers inks, and sundry times, I write this letter. I trust my will to write shall match the marrs I make in it. I shall be forry if I hear tell Washington is gone from Cambridge, and glad to hear tell that S. Wright, by diligence, come to that pricke *, whereunto his goodly wit doth call him. I fend my letters to my brother and cousin Coniers open to you, that ye may both see news, and largely told, and also learn to lap up a letter.

The French secretary told me this day, that there are news that duke Maurice himself is smitten with a gun: but there is no certainty.

Ye fee, Edward, how glad I am to talk with you, and loth to depart from you, and therefore how confusedly καὶ ε δι δικονομίας I chop in things as they come.

Good Thomas Leaver only hath not deceived me, but written to me diligently. I will requite him, God willing.

* Prick, is mark, the point aimed at:

Seal your letters up well, Edward, or else they will be read many times ere they come hither. Make your packet of letters like a pack of cards; but keep the same proportion as I do in my letters.

At the closing up of this letter, word was brought, that the prince of Spain (whereas to-morrow I should have gone into Italy, and so per mare Mediter. into Spain) is this day fallen sore sick of a phrenesis; that he was twice this day let blood. Yesterday my lord was with, and bade him farewell; and then I saw him in his privy chamber.

I purpose within these seven days by the next post to write again to you, God willing. Now I bid you farewell in Christ, good Edward; for my paper is spent, and it is almost midnight, and to-morrow I write all day to the council. Saluta omnes. Shew Edward Cuntrell some of this news.——From Augusta, 18 Maii, 1551.

R. A.

To my especial friends Mr. Edward Raven, and Mr. William Ireland, fellows of St. John's.

S. P. in Christe Jesus.

My good Mr. Raven and Ireland,

Marvel not a little the cause of your silence, and that so many letters cannot deserve one word again. I have written, that Mr. Stephen Hales, in the White Friers in London, can readily convey your letters. I would fain know the state of Cambridge, and my affairs there, and especially how my friends do. I cannot think so on you, that you have forgot me. I measure your good-will towards me by mine towards you. I would hear of all, and namely of Mr. Maden and his house, Mr. Pember, Mr. Haddon, Mr. Barnwick, &c.

The Turk is in Hungary with two hosts; the one of one side Danubius, the other of the other side; 3000 horsemen in either: his navy of galleys at Mileta Insula, where St. Paul was cast up, 28.

The

The French give the bishop of Rome's men great overthrows at Parma and Mirandola.

The Emperor, 27 Augusti, hath banished the preachers protestant of Augusta the whole empire. They were ten preachers, that all went hence the 28th of August. This day schoolmasters are called before the council.

I have written at large to Mr. Leaver, for he only hath written to me; and yet I would have written at large to you, if I had leifure; for I neither can nor will forget you, whatsoever unkindness I find in you. Yet I do not think it unkindness, but rather some just stop that ye have. As for you, Ireland, ye have been but a little while at home; and I know ye be slow to write of old; therefore I can better excuse you. As for my Edward Raven, I know there is just occasion, or else I had had letters ere this.

My lord is merry, and one that doth God and his prince as good fervice as ever did ambassador. Mr. Wotton cometh home, and we tarry; and methinks I know what your Papists at home have talked of that matter.

I befeech you, leave not Cambridge for none occasion. I never loved it so well as I do at this day. I am a great man in Demosthenes, and I trust to make him better acquainted with Cambridge than he is there yet.

Keep my chamber, books, and stuff well. I would gladly hear that Richard Asteley did well. Farewell in Christ. With haste, the last of. August, 1551.

To my assured friends the fellows of St. John's college:

S. P. in Christo Jesus.

IF I should as often have written to you, as I have remembered that good fellowship and my duty bounden, and my good-will bent to every one of you, ye should receive every day letters from me.

Of my journey I wrote plentifully unto you all, and fince oft to Mr. Raven of matters here, and also to Mr. Leaver, which ye read, as I guess, in Sturbridge fair time. That honest company and quiet aboding I daily remember, and wish me often among you, and if it were but a problem fire-time; not because I wish me from hence, being with so good a lord and lady, but for the good-will I owe to the house, to you all and every one. I take pleasure in writing this letter, that is, in talking with you, in being at home for a while in St. John's, from whence my heart can never be absent. How glad I would be of two words from any of that house, none of you doth feel, that hath not been in like place. I never heard from Cambridge yet. I am content to put the fault on carriage, and do not mistrust your friendships.

Mr. Leaver, of all the rest, either is more friendly, or more happy to me. I have two long letters from him.

Because the Emperor goeth from Augusta this next week towards Infpruck, called in Latin Oenopons, at the foot of the Alps, and after, we think, to Milan, and so perchance to Naples and Sicily, if the French do not trouble our journey; therefore I thought to write in few words, as leifure, which is little, will give me leave.

The Turkish cometh in with might and main by land and sea. His quarrel by land into Hungary is this. Being three kings in Hungary, the Turk chief, next Ferdinando, the third Joannes Vaivoda, king of Transylvania, which is tributary to the Turk. Joannes Vaivoda is dead, leaving a young prince to be ruled by the queen his mother, and two governors. The one is called Fra. George, a frier, a bishop, a papist, and therefore this last day made a cardinal. He is wife in council, and hardy in war. The other is called Petrovitz, a count, a wife and worthy gentleman, and one that favoureth God's word truly. Fra. George hath laboured fecretly this twelvemonth to make Ferdinando king of Transylvania; fo that the young prince Vaivoda be provided for honourably in another place, easier for him to maintain. The queen and count Petrovitz did not incline at the first to Ferdinand, loth to fall out with the Turk, which doth keep his promise most firmly where he doth make it, and doth revenge most cruelly him that doth break it. The Turk perceives this this practice all this year, and therefore laboured the queen not to break with him, promifing her aid and help, as to his tributary, against all perfons that would do the young king wrong. At the last, Fra. George hath brought the queen and count Petrovitz to Ferdinand's mind, and came all three to the king with all their power. This done, foldiers were gathered on both fides. The baffa of Buda (look where Buda stands in your map of Danube) was the Turk's general for a while. He came this fummer within fix Dutch miles of Vienna, and gave the Hungarians a foul overthrow. He killed a great fort; for of five enfigns that went from home with Ferdinand's, there returned home but fifty persons; and he carried into Turkey with him 7000 Christian fouls, men, women, and children; for they bid no better booty than to carry men away: they ranfom few, but kill or carry away all. Ferdinando's fide, after this, gave the Turks an overthrow; fo that most cruelty hath been used on both fides. A noble gentleman of Ferdinando's court, which hath ferved floutly against the Turks, was taken and brought to the bassa of Buda. Great ransom was proffered, but none received. Certain great dogs were kept hungry, and after many spites and villanies done to the gentleman in prison, he was brought forth, and tormenters appointed did cast gobbets so cut to the dogs, that eat them in the gentleman's fight. When fo many gobbets were cut off, and cast to the dogs, as life would afford, then the dogs were let loofe, and fo tore him all in pieces. After this the Hungarians took three lords of Turkey: 6000 ducats were offered for their ranfom; but word was fent to the baffa, that if he himself came to their hands, as they trusted he should, all the gold in Turkey should not save him: and because no Turks will eat swines flesh, they would prove if swine would eat Turks flesh; and so kept up fwine from meat, which very cruelly devoured the Turks up. But now Beglierbeglie Mahomet, that hath married the Turk's daughter, and is general ruler of all the Turk's dominions in Europe, whole Thrace, Macedonia, and Greece, is come into Hungary with two main hosts, of either fide Danubius one. He hath written sharp letters to Fra. George, accusing him for the stir of this war: and even yesterday came word to this city, that Beglierbeglie hath won a great city from Ferdinando, and hath cut in pieces all the Christian folk in it, and cometh on, bringing great terror to all Hungary and Austria, and especially to Fra. George, that he knoweth not which way to turn him; infomuch that many that came to the king, be gone to the Turk's fide. All Christendom ought to pray to God, as a most merciful Father, to cast the rod in the fire: for even thus stands the case of Hungary.

3 D 2

Maximilian, the king of Boeme, Ferdinando's eldest son, is much missed in this war, being now in Spain to fetch home his wife: for an Hungarian told me, where his father should have one soldier for his money, he should have three for his love and good-will owing him. The Hungarians hope it shall be Maximilian that shall drive the Turk out of Hungarians hope it may well be so; for he is, as I wrote once, I trow, to Mr. Raven, a goodly person of stature and favour, liberal, gentle, wise, learned, speaking eight tongues, hardy, painful, loved of all, except where envy repines; pleasant without wildness, grave without pride, lowly to every one, and reverenced of all, and one whom all Germany, protestants and others, love and commend.

The Turk's quarrel by fea is this. Andrew Dorea took the city of Algiers, which standeth in Afric, from Dragunt Rais, a Turk, anno 1550. The great Turk required this city again. Whether a promife of the delivery was either not made or not kept, I cannot tell; but the Turk's navy is come so big, that they and the French rule all mare Mediterraneum. When they were once past Eubæa, and the point of summum promontorium, we had letters every week from Venice of them. They are 132 great gallies, befides a huge galleot, full of wonderful great ordnance, wherein, as one that was in it faid, there was in it 4000 faddles of men of arms. This great navy brought fuch terror with it, that the Venetians were fain afresh to double man and victual Corcyra. Sicilia was afraid, Naples was afraid, Rome was afraid, Genoa was afraid, all mare Mediterraneum did tremble, whither this great navy would go. At last they light upon St. Paul's isle of Melita, now Malta, kept by the knights of Rhodes. Whether they would not or could not then win it, from thence they departed and came to Tripoli, a Christian city in Africa, over-against Sicilia, kept by many knights of Rhodes. and well manned and victualled. The Turks gave cruel aslaults, that the gun-shot was heard to Malta. They within asked respite for certain days, and if aid came not from Malta, then to deliver the city. Respite was granted, and in this while they conveyed out of Tripoli 2000 of old men, women, and children, which came all into the Turk's hands. After that the city could not hold out; they gave up upon condition to have their lives. The Turk came in, and thirty knights of Rhodes, most part Frenchmen, were sent to Malta: 200 of the strongest foldiers were put in galleys, and all the rest, young and old, were killed without mercy. The Turk's promise was laid unto him, and he bid him lay the blame on those that had taught Turks to break promise. Thus was Tripoli won this last August; such a haven as scarce is like in mare Mediterran. which will receive 300 ships.

Tripoli may keep Africa from victuals, and is like to be an ill neighbour to Sicilia and Italy. The thirty knights of Rhodes went to Malta; but the great master calling a chapter, hath banished them, as both false and French. They sailed from thence, and by rage of water was driven upon Sicilia, and by the viceroy are taken every man, and cast into prison.

We looked that the Turk would straitway have set upon Malta; but the whole navy is gone over into Sinum Ambracium, where Augustus gave Anthony the overthrow; and there, as we hear say, have taken up their lodging for this winter. News were brought hither, that many of the Turk's galleys were drowned by over-thwarting the seas; some said forty, some sixteen, some nine: but the ambassador of Venice saith, that he heard in no letter that any ship took harm. And thus much of the Turk's stirs both by sea and land, as is most credibly known and confirmed to be true in this town and court.

Now Mήνιν ἄειδε Θεὰ, the pope is in a wonderful chase: he abhors Germany; he is thrust out of France; he mistrusts the Emperor; and yet the Emperor hath more cause to mistrust him: the house of Farnese have robbed him of his treasure; the siege of Parma is given up, and Mirandolo cares not for him; his own houshold wax Lutherans; none will come to his conspiracy at Trent but such as are sworn that no good shall be done there; and if he do not hang himself before October is past, he cometh to Bononia; and if we go into Italy, and happen to meet with him, as we are likely, I will describe him to you from top to toe.

Now

Now to come to quicquid delirant reges, η πίπτε δε λώος: I beshrew their hearts, either because they begin now, or else because they begin no sooner, whilst the weather was warmer; for now we must over the cold Alps, even now full of snow. The Emperor doth little yet; but the French be a great deal aforehand.

Of ships taken in those seas towards you, ye know; and the prior of Capua the same time came to Barcelona in Spain, and using the cloak of the Emperor's arms, came quietly into the haven, and took away with him, in fight of the Spaniards, feven goodly galleys. The French have a great host in Piedmont, and have won divers cities, towns, and castles, and have well manned them, as St. Damian Circusco, Cheir, &c. This Cheir is bigger than Norwich, as they fay that have feen it. The Emperor took a foul injury in it; for the citizens opened the gates to the French, and they will keep the gates the faster close against the imperials, lest they drink for this treachery. We look that all the war will be in Piedmont, and that the Emperor and French king will be both there in perfon. We imperials crack France out of measure, that it shall be beat down of all fides with one mighty army out of Spain, one other out of Flanders, the third out of Italy. If I have convenient time and carriage, I will not fail to let you know the cause of all these stirs; and will be very glad to mark them, and as ready to write them unto you. The Emperor hath many irons in the fire, and every one able alone to keep him work enough; the Turk by land and fea; the French fitting on his skirts on all sides, besides Madeburge, &c.

The Emperor is wise enough, and it stands him in hand even now to be so. The Turk nor the French can either be weak enemies, or sure friends: and therefore as [to] Madenburg, the duke of Saxony, and the landgrave, there is even this day fresh talk, that the Emperor will use the gentler choice of those two which the father gave to Pontius his son. Ye know the story in Livy; for that way is not to be taken, quæ neque amicos parat, neque inimicos tollit: and therefore ambassadors from duke Maurice, the marquis of Brandenburg, Breme, and other sea-cities, from the kings of Denmark and Pole, are within six miles of this town; and, as men think, they are come not without the Emperor's means. If I should talk of Madeburg Madeburg at length, it should require more than a letter. They are thought more strong and stout than they were this day twelvemonth. It is faid the Emperor required three persons of Madeburg, their chief captain, the count of Munsfelt, their chief preacher, Flacius Illyricus, and another: but the town would not lose one hair of their heads; and so they say all are forgiven. In this matter of Madeburg, and the two princes captives, I cannot as yet assure you the truth; for the matters be now in brewing: but, God willing, ye shall know shortly.

How the good preachers were banished this town the 26th of August last, I wrote at large to Mr. Leaver. This business, if it were to do, it should not be done now. The Emperor's council lay the doing to the heads of the town; and they lay it again to the bishop of Arras, the Emperor's chief counsellor. The papists churches be as desolate as ever they were; and yet here be more sayers than hearers of mass. The protestants constantly will come to neither. They have obtained to christen in Dutch as they did, and do marry without mass. Every one in his own house, morning and evening, see their whole houshold kneel down, and sing psalms, and the good man doth read a chapter of Scripture. Now protestant preachers are sought for; but none dare come, for fear of the former handling.

Ye are weary, I am sure, of my long talk: therefore I bid you all farewell, and I pray you pray for me. Commend me to all my friends in the town. I count good Mr. Maden, Mr. Pember, and Mr. Zone, St. John's men. Commend me to Mr. Redman, Mr. Haddon, Mr. Blythe, Mr. Sanders, Mr. Car, Mr. Barwick, &c.; for if I should name all that I would, my paper would not serve. I would I were at your problem-fire when you read this letter; then I would desire Mr. Downes, and Mr. Lector, to remit the scholars a day of noule and punishment, that they might remember me, that can forget none of that house, praying God to make them all virtuous and learned, and especially in the Greek tongue. Fare ye well in Christ.—From Augusta, 12 October, 1551.

Yours, R. A.

Charishmis

Charissimis amicis meis Edwardo Raveno, et Gulielmo Irelando, socies collegii Divi Joannis Evang.

Y good Raven and Ireland, I leave chiding you, but I will not leave loving you, write you or write you not. I will be your friend, and you shall be mine, whether you will or not.

By Mr. Leaver's letters you shall know how all things stand here, of the Turks, of the imperials, of the French, and of Germany. I have not leisure to write twice of one matter; therefore I will him to communicate to you, and then you may do so to other my friends, as Mr. Maden, Mr. Blythe, Mr. Haddon, &c.

Sturmius goeth forward in Rhetor. Aristot. 'The first book is sent to Mr. Cheke, which was purposed to me, but I had rather it should be sent to him. Mr. John Hales, my singular friend, sent me a piece of his rhetoric this week. I never saw any thing more to be compared with antiquity, and so I trust Mr. Haddon will judge. Vahan is writing it out a-pace: if he finish it before the post go, ye do receive it; if not now, ye shall have it shortly. Sturmius is in hand with Analysis Ciceron. such a book as I believe was never set out in our time: Nobilissimi Worteri fratres do give him to find him writers 4000 crowns a-year, for sour years. Sturmius telleth Mr. Hales, that a better and more plentiful analysis might be made of the Greek tongue; and he would make it, if he had help towards the costs. Mr. Hales will write to many of the nobles in it, as he writes unto me; but I wrote unto him, that temporal lords will rather win this praise, than bishops be brought to bear the charges. It were a shame if England lack this honour, and all learning this prosit.

Ye must either content ye for news with Mr. Leaver's letters, or feed ye with the hope of my next to come.

I am forry Mr. Langdale is gone from that college, although he did diffent from us in religion; yet we know that God calleth men at divers hours at his pleafure.

3 E

Commend

Commend me to good Mr. Pember, and tell him I trust he received my letter in Lent. Tell him also, that yesterday I saw a new coin, which I would he had, for all the old he hath. It was made in this house where we lie, at Inspruck. It is very like a great Susfolk cheese as any cometh to Sturbridge sair, but somewhat thicker. It is even so heavy as two men can bear. There was molten for it, of fine silver, (for I saw the making of it) 6400 guilders: every guilder is worth 5 s. English and more, except our money be well amended.

Noble Maximilian and his wife be come out of Spain, and be in Italy coming hitherward. This country of Tyrol, where we be, which is under Ferdinando, doth present this goodly coin to queen Mary, Maximilian's wife, which is the emperor's daughter, because she was never in Germany afore. This rich gift is given for Maximilian's fake, whom all men love above measure. There is of one side of this coin all the arms belonging io Maximilian and his wife; on the other stands queen Mary his wife's face, most lively printed, as the old antiquities be. Above her image be these words in Latin: Sereniss. Duci Reginæ Boemiæ, ex familia Regum Hispaniæ, et Archiducum Austriæ progenitæ jamprimum in Germaniam venienti Tyroliensum munus, 1551. And although I favour Maximilian, yet I would Mr. Pember had it in his chamber. Tell Mr. Pember also, I do not forget old coins. I have the fairest now that ever he faw in filver, and Domitian cum anchorâ Aldi, the Fuggeri have pecks of them. There is a worthy merchant called Mr. Rem, which had me into his house, and let me see a wonderful fight Greek and Letin. He gave me four at my coming from Augusta: the first was Sulla Cos.; on the other fide, C. Pompeius Rufus F. Cos.: the second had on the one fide, Fasces Imperii; on the other fide, an elephant, and under his feet Casar: the third had on the one side, Casar. Imp. Pont. Max. III. Vir.: the fourth, a goodly face, and about it M. Brutus Imp.: on the other fide, two daggers, and in the midst a thing like a bell, having written underneath, Id Martis. I bought also at Augusta a strange old face, with long hair; on the other fide, in Greek, MYPPOY BASI-AEOΣ. Mr. Rem shewed me also a coin, with a rude face in filver, thick, and about it, in Greek, QIAITTOU.

Commend me to good Mr. Pember, and all my friends, because I will leave out none. Commend me to my hostes Barnes, Dr. Maden, &c. to all at Wittam. I tell you once again, Mr. Stephen Hales at London can convey your letters. Farewell. My lord calls.—From Inspruck, the 17th of November, 1551.

R. A.

I am glad Vahan writes to you. By him you shall know more. Gentle Raven and Ireland, look to my duties for the Greek tongue and my oratorship. I would be loth but to hear tell the scholers went forward therein.

F I N I = S.

University of California
SOUTHERN REGIONAL LIBRARY FACILITY Return this material to the library from which it was borrowed.

FEB 0 1 2008

