IN the title page this present is entitled the third edition of the work, and in many respects it is so, but with very essential additions. The volume now published gives a new character to the Treatise. Some of these additions may be noticed.

First: Technical terms most commonly used in History and Geography are introduced, which, in particular to youthful readers, will prompt to inquiry, and enable them, by easy reference, to learn the meaning of terms necessary to a correct comprehension of the two connected sciences.

Second: In the main geographical articles, such as Africa, America, Asia, Australia, Earth, &c., general facts and features are collected under the principal heads, and, through the work, reference is, reverse to usual practice, made from the minor articles. By this mode, each of the principal articles is a condensed treatise in itself, enabling the reader, by aid of maps, to pursue a survey of the large physical divisions of our planet.

The elements of the population of the United States oppose great difficulties to a brief classification. Reflecting on this subject, the tabular form was adopted, from conviction that no other could answer to render the volume a work of facile reference. So much of the most essential legislation, and so many of the most vital questions in general and special policy, demand a thorough knowledge of the local position and relative increase or decrease of population, that too much perspicuity cannot be given to the subject.

Respecting the new States and Territories, I have deemed it not only justifiable, but indeed requisite, to be more ample than is common to a Geographical Dictionary comprised in a single octavo volume.

It was very desirable that more precise information could have been given on South America; but so confused and indefinite are the political boundaries in that country, that much uncertainty prevails respecting the extent of almost every subdivision. I have, nevertheless, in the article America, and in the detached articles, inserted a general view of that portion of the Earth, with all the precision that the state of our information renders practicable.

For the first time, it is probable, in any similar Treatise, the most recent subdivisions of Mexico into States and Territories are incorporated into this Dictionary.

It cannot be deemed presumption to say that much has been added to Geography by this Treatise. Whatever may be its character, the Editor has devoted a not very brief existence to his subjects; has, as far as the United States are concerned, travelled extensively, but travelling must convince any reflecting person, that of all pursuits, there is no other demanding more accumulated labor, than Geography.

When the compilation of this edition was commenced, it was the intention of the Editor to give a head to each of the POST OFFICES and COUNTIES, but found that either post offices or counties thus arranged would swell the work far beyond any practicable limit. Even the insertion of the names of a majority of the post offices was precluded by the difficulty in fixing their location. The name of every county included in the Census of 1840, with the elements of their population, respectively, will be found in the Tables under the head of the States.

A rather singular disposition has been manifested by some native writers on the United States, indeed on America generally, that is, to exaggerate the extent of natural and political objects. This may be an amiable source of error—but in no case can error be indulged safely at the expense of truth. In my comparative estimates, I claim no exemption from error, but I do claim honest and sincere desire to be correct; and more, to have omitted no attainable means to secure sound information. That the Central Valley or United States part of the Mississippi Basin was more extensive than Europe, has resounded in the Halls of Congress. In this edition, at page 294, under the head of Earth, will be found a table of the superficial area of the Zones of ten degrees in breadth, by the aid of which, it may be seen that the whole zones of North America, between north latitude 30° and 50° , comprise not quite three and a half millions of English square miles, and exceed very little the area of Europe. Let the fate of my labors be what it may, I have, and ever will, repudiate means having no one claim to adoption. If, in brief, I have departed from the exact rule proper to a general treatise, it was done in giving a more ample space to the Central States and Territories of the United States than to those of the Atlantic border, but the reasons why are stated.

With all, however, that observation and practicable diligence could effect, it cannot be rationally expected that a work of such texture and magnitude can be free from error and omission; such exemption is not in the nature of things possible; but it has been the sedulous endeavor of the Editor to render his production a safe and commodious book of reference, and as free from either omission or mistake as the present state of the science would admit.

WASHINGTON, November, 1843.

GEOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY.

ABA

AA, river of Courland, which rises in Samogitia, and flows into the bay of Riga.—River of France, rising in the department of Somme, becomes navigable near St. Omer, and, flowing on to Gravelines, falls into the German sea.—River of Switzerland, rising in the valley of Engelberg, and, passing from S. to N. over the canton of Unterwalden, falls into the Waldstetter sea.

Aain-Charin, village near Jerusalem, much frequented by pilgrims. It contains a spacious convent.

Aalborg, or Eltown, city of Denmark, in Jutland, and capital of a district of the same name. The city, with a pop. of about 7,000 souls, stands on the very remarkable strait called Lym-Fiord, formerly one of the deep gulfs of Jutland, but in 1825 formed into a strait, extending from the German sea to the Cattegat. Though too shallow for large vessels, Aalborg has a good and well-frequented port, distant 15 ms. from the Cattegat. N. lat. 57° 3'.

Aar, river of Switz.; rises in the southern part of the canton of Berne, and, with a general northern course over that canton, receiving the Reus and Limmat, falls into the Rhine at Waldchut.

Aarhuus, seaport of Denmark, on the eastern side of Jutland; its port is small, but much frequented. The steeple of the cathedral of Aarhuus is considered the highest in Denmark, and the city itself the third in the kingdom. Pop. about 7,000. N. lat. 56° 12', E. lon. 10° 8'.

Aaronsburg, village of Northumberland co., Pa.—Village of Centre co., Pa., 15 ms. E. of Bellefonte, and 40 W. of Sunbury.

Abach, or Wellenburg, a market town of lower Bavaria, on the Danube, 7 ms. from Ratisbon. It is noted for its mineral waters. N. lat. 48° 53', lon. 11° 58' E.

Abadan, town near the mouth of the Tigris.

Abakansk, town of Russian Asia, on the Enisei river, 150 miles above Krasnojiarsk. It was founded and fortified by Peter the Great in 1707, amid the Sayansk mountains. This town seems, from the numerous remains of tombs, coins, rude sculptures, and other memoria, to have stood on or near the site of an ancient city. N. lat. 53° 5', lon. 94° 5' E.

Abary, river of English Guiana.

Abasia, country of Russian Asia, composed of a narrow slope, falling southwestward from the Caucasian mountains to the Black sea, and extending from the eastern extremity of that sea to Cape Cador. The Abasians were known to the ancient Greeks as bold and dangerous pirates, under the name of Aschæi. The country is mountainous, but productive in grain, fruits, and wine. Central lat. about 47° N.

ABB

Abassia, the modern name of a kingdom in Ethiopia proper; it comprehends the provinces of Bagemedar, Gojam, Waleka, Shewa, &c., and is very mountainous; in some parts the rocks are so steep that men and cattle are craned up by help of ropes and ladders, yet on the top of these there are woods, meadows, and fish ponds.

ABBA, father in the Chaldee and Syriac languages, and also congenerate languages; hence the following:

ABBE, ABBAY, ABBESS, ABBOT. The terms are generic, and, though from a masculine root, apply to both sexes. An abbey is a monastery, or society of persons, of either sex, who live in community and celibacy, secluded from worldly affairs, and devoted to religion. Abbot is the superior of a monastery, as abbess is that of a nunnery. The abbots were often, though not necessarily, clerical, and, with the exception that the abbots may and often have been also bishops, the official character of abbots and abbesses were identical. Both still exist, though differently modified, in the Catholic and Greek churches. See MONARCH, MONASTERY, and MONK.

Abbotsbury, Eng., town in Dorsetshire, 7 ms. SW. of Dorchester, and 127 W. by S. from London. Lon. 2° 42' W., lat. 50° 38' N.

Abbots, town in Muskingum co., Ohio, 70 ms. nearly E. from Columbus, and 355 from Washington City.

Abbotstown, town in Adams co., Pa., 24 ms. SW. from Harrisburg, and 86 from W. C.

Abbeyville, town Mecklenburg co., Va., 143 ms. from Richmond, and 266 from W. C.

Abb's Head, St., Scot., a promontory, forming the southern extremity of the Frith of Forth, lying in the parish of Coldingham and county of Berwick, about 10 ms. N. of Berwick, and the same distance S. from Dunbar. Lon. 1° 56' W., lat. 55° 54' N.

Abberton, Eng., near Lexden, Essex.—Abberton, near Parshore, 7 ms. from Worcester, noted for its mineral water.

Abbenhall, Eng., small village 12 ms. from Gloucester, 3 from Newnham, noted for a mineral spring, very efficacious in the cure of cutaneous eruptions.

Abberwick, Eng., large village near Alnwick, Northumberland.

Abbeville, a considerable town of Fr., in the dep. of Somme, and late province of Picardy, seated in a pleasant valley, where the river Somme divides into several branches, and separates the town into two parts. It is pretty well peopled: has a woollen manufactory, besides manufactories of sail-cloth. It lies 15 ms. E. from the British Channel, 20 NW. from Amiens, 52 S. of Calais, and 80 NW. of Paris. Lon. 1° 55' E., lat. 50° 7' N.

Abbeville, district of S. C., having Pendleton district NW., Laurens NE., Edgefield SE., and the Savannah river SW. It is about 31 ms. in length and breadth, having a superficies of about 1,000 sq. ms. The surface is agreeably variegated with hill and dale, and a considerable part of the soil is rich and well watered. Central lat. 34° 10' N., lon. W. C. 5° 20' W. Pop. in 1820, 22,189; in 1830, 28,149; and in 1840, amounted to 29,351.

Abbeville, c. h., Abbeville district, S. C., 118 ms. SE. from Columbia, and 625 ms. from Washington.

Abbey-Boyle, town of Ireland, in the county of Roscommon, and province of Connaught, remarkable for an old abbey. It lies 23 ms. N. of Roscommon. Lon. 8° 32' W., lat. 53° 56' N.

Abbey-Green, village of Scot., in Lanarkshire, containing about 430 inhabitants, and lies 12 ms. S. of Hamilton, and 4 from Lanark.

Abbey-Holm, town in Cumberland, Eng., on an arm of the sea, and is 295 ms. from London, and 16 SW. from Carlisle. Lon. 3° 21' W., lat. 54° 53' N.

Abbey-Milton, or Abbey-Middleton, an ancient but mean town in Dorsetshire, Eng., 12 ms. NE. of Dorchester, and 122 from London. Lon. 2° 24' W., lat. 50° 51' N.

Abbington, Eng., near Northampton.—Abbington, near Royston, Cambridgeshire.—Abbington, Magna and Parca, near Linton and Bournbridge, Cambridgeshire.

Abbyville, town, Medina co., Ohio, 5 ms. N. of Medina court-house, and 25 ms. SSW. of Cleveland.

Abd-al-Curia, small island of Africa, between Socotora and Cape Guardafui.

Abdera, ancient city of Thrace, near the mouth of the Nestus. The inhabitants were proverbially stupid, though it was the birthplace of some eminent men, of whom were Democritus, Protagoras, Anaxarchus, and Hecataeus.

Abenrade.—See Apenrade.

Abensperg, or Abensberg, town of Bavaria, seated on the Abens, near the Danube, 15 ms. SW. of Ratisbon. Lon. 11° 55' E., lat. 41° 46' N.

Aberavon, borough town of Glamorganshire, Wales, on the mouth of the Avon, 19 ms. N. W. of Cowbridge, and 195 W. from London. Lon. 3° 48' W., lat. 51° 35' N.

Aberbrothwick, or Arbroath, small neat town on the east coast of Angusshire, Scot., 15 ms. NE. of St. Andrew's, and 40 NNE. from Edinburgh. It is situated on the mouth of the small river Brothick; is a royal burgh, well built, and flourishing. The number of its inhabitants has greatly increased within these last 40 years, and they are now estimated at about 7,000. The chief manufactures are brown linens, or osnaburgs, sail cloths, and white and brown thread. There are about 34 vessels belonging to this place, each from 60 to 160 tons, employed in the Baltic trade. The foreign imports are flax, flaxseed, timber, iron, &c. Lon. 2° 29' W., lat. 56° 36' N.

Aberconway, town of Caernarvonshire, Wales, pleasantly situated on the river Conway. It has a good harbor, and formerly carried on a considerable trade in corn. Lon. 4° 1' W., lat. 53° 20' N.

Abercorn, village and parish of West Lothian, Scot., on the south bank of the Frith of Forth, 12 ms. W. from Edinburgh. The Roman wall is said to have begun in this parish.

Aberdeen, Old, formerly Aberdeen, is pleasantly situated on an eminence near the mouth of the river Don, and about 1 m. N. from New Aberdeen. The town consists chiefly of one long street. There is a neat town-house, a new building, and a trades hospital, for decayed freemen and their widows, and a hospital for 12 poor men, founded by Bishop William Dunbar. But the chief ornament of Old Aberdeen is the large and stately fabric of King's College, situated on the S. side of the town. Over the Don, at Old Aberdeen, there is a fine Gothic bridge. Pop. of town and parish, about 10,000.

Aberdeen, New, is the capital of Aberdeenshire, and the finest town in North Scotland. It is built on a gentle eminence, rising from a small bay formed by the river Dee, over which there is a substantial bridge of seven arches. The town is about 2 ms. in circumference, and contains a pop. of 20,000. It contains an elegant college, built in 1593. Lat. 57° 6' N., lon. 2° W.

Aberdeen, town on Ohio river, opposite Limestone or Maysville, in Kentucky, and in the SE. angle of Brown co., Ohio, 70 ms. SW. of Chillicothe. The situation is very advantageous, on the great leading road from the central part of Ohio, to Kentucky.

Aberdeenshire, co. of Scot., bounded NW. by Banffshire, W. by Inverness, SW. by Perth, S. by Forfar and Kincardignshires, and E. and NE. by the German sea. Length from NE. to SW. 100 miles; mean breadth 25; area 2,500 sq. ms.; surface varied, and pursuits of the people agricultural and manufacturing.

Aberdour, small town or village of Fifeshire, Scot., with a good harbor on the Frith of Forth, about 10 ms. NW. of Edinburgh.

Aberfraw, village of North Wales, in the island of Anglesey, 6 ms. NW. of Newburg. Lon. 4° 36' W., lat. 53° 13' N.

Abergavenny, well-built town of Eng., in Monmouthshire, 16 ms. W. of Monmouth, and 102 ms. W. by N. from London. Lon. 3° 5' W., lat. 51° 50' N. Pop. 2,500.

Ablo, town of Little Tartary, lying between the river Dnieper and the Black sea. Lon. 33° 16' E., lat. 46° 20½' N.

Abo, government of, in Finland.—See Bjorneborg. — City of Russia, in Finland, formerly the capital of the country of the same name. It stands on the shores of a good seaport, opposite the islands of Aland. The ancient university of this city, founded by Queen Christiana in 1640, has been removed to Helsingfors. Fire and political revolution have borne hard on Abo. N. lat. 60° 27', lon. 22° 18' E. Peace of Abo, Aug. 7th, 1743. — A town supposed to exist in central Africa, around which reside the negro nation of Tilbos-Reschadeh, or of the rocks. Situation uncertain.

Abomey, city of Africa, and capital of the kingdom of Dahomey, is situated about 100 ms. inland, at N. lat. 7° 30', lon. 1° E.—See Dahomey.

Abookir, or Aboukir, bay and city of Egypt. The bay extends from the mouth of the western branch of the Nile to the basin of Alexandria. The city is the ancient Canopus, and is situated on a point of low land, and on the western extreme of the bay, 18 ms. NE. by E. of Alexandria. Aboukir possesses a tolerably good harbor.

Abou-Arieh, a city of Arabia, in Yemen. Situation uncertain.

Abou-Chehr, or Aucher, city of Persia, in Farsistan.

Aboukir.—See Aboukir.

Aboutige, town in upper Egypt, near the Nile, where great quantities of poppies grow, of which the natives make the best opium in the Levant. Lon. 49° E., lat. 26° 30' N.

Abrantes, town of Portugal, in Estramadura, seated on the Tajo, and belonging to a marquis of that title. It is situated on a high ground, is surrounded with gardens and olive trees, contains 35,000 inhabitants, and has 4 convents, a hospital, and an alms-house. Lon. 7° 18' W., lat. 39° 13' N.

Abruzzo, province of Naples, bounded on the E. by the gulf of Venice, on the N. and W. by Ancona, Umbria, and the Campagna di Roma, and on the S. by the Terra di Lavoro and Molise. It is divided into two parts by the river Pescara, called Ulteriore and Citeriore. The former has Aquilla, and the latter Solomona, for its capital. The country, though cold, is fertile in corn, rice, fruits, saffron, vines, and olives.

Abs, town in Fr., in the dep. of Ardeche, formerly the chief town of Vivares, and a bishop's see, now in a very ruinous state.

Absyrtides, ancient name for the group of islands at the head of the gulf of Venice, to the southward of Fiume, of which the principal are Osero, Cherso, and Veglia. The group is now called the islands of Lessini.

Abydos, ancient city, now Nagara, in Asiatic Turkey. It is situated on the narrows of the Hellespont.

Aby Gherim, town of Tartary, capital of a Khanat, often at war with the Khan of Hissar. The Khanate of Aby-Gherim is stated by the French geographers to contain a population of 1,500,000, and the capital 10,000. It lies between Koulab and Badakhchan.

Abyla, ancient name of the African mountain opposite Mount Calpe, now Gibraltar, in Europe. The strait of Gibraltar extends between these two mountains.—See art. Africa.

Abuyo, or Abuyo, one of the Philippine islands, in the East Indies, between Mindanao and Luzon. Here the Spaniards have a fort, and carry on a good trade with their American territories. Lon. 122° 15' E., lat. 10° N.

Abyssinia, a kingdom of Africa, 800 ms. long and 600 broad, bounded on the N. by Nubia, E. by the Red sea and Dancala, W. by Gorham, and S. by Gingia and Alaba. It is one of the most mountainous and precipitous countries in the world; but in a few valleys the soil is black and fertile. The rainy season continues from April to September. This is succeeded, without interval, by a cloudless sky and a vertical sun. Cold nights as instantly follow these scorching days. The earth, notwithstanding these days, is perpetually cold, so as to feel disagreeable to the soles of the feet. The low temperature of the air in Abyssinia is doubtless the effect of elevation. According to Bruce, the region which he visited as that from which the Nile has its sources, is elevated more than a mile above Sennaar, and more than 2 ms. above the Red sea. An elevation of 2 ms. is more than an equivalent for 25° of lat.; and would give a temperature to upper Abyssinia, in N. lat. 10°, which would assimilate with that of the northern coast of Africa on the western Mediterranean, N. lat. 37°. Gondar is nominally the capital of Abyssinia, but in reality there is at present no town in that country worthy the title of capital.—See Africa and Nile.

Aca, or Aco, most ancient known name of Ptolemais, and more recently St. John d'Acre; which see.

ACACIANS, sectarians named from their founder as a sect, Acacius, bishop of Cæsarea. Their doctrines were, that the Son was not of the same substance with the Father.

ACADEMY, supposed to be derived from the Grecian grove where Plato taught, near Athens. In language, it is now applied to a seat of instruction above a common school, and below a college.

Acambou, kingdom on the coast of Guinea, in Africa, whose king is absolute, and one of the most powerful on the coast; his subjects, though warlike and brave, are haughty, rapacious, and cruel.

Acanny, an inland country on the Gold Coast of Guinea, which affords the best gold, and in great plenty; also, a town or village in that country. Lon. 30° E., lat. 8° 30' N.

Acapulco, a considerable town and port in Mexico, on the Pacific ocean, 240 ms. a little S. of W. from Mexico, and by which a commercial communication is effected between western Mexico and other parts of the world. The inland trade of Acapulco is chiefly performed by pack mules and horses. Acapulco itself is a small place, consisting of about 300 thatched houses; pop. 4,000. The air here is hot, heavy, and unwholesome. Upon the arrival of the galleons, traders flock here from all the provinces of Mexico, to exchange European toys, their own cochineal, and about £437,500 sterling of silver, for spices, muslins, printed linens, silk, perfumes, and the gold works of Asia. Lon. W. C. 22° 40' W., lat. 16° 50' N.

Acadia.—See articles New Brunswick and Nova Scotia.

Acarnania, ancient name of a part of Epirus.

Acasabastlan, river and town of Guatemala, in the province of Vera Paz. The river flows into Dolce bay. The town stands on the river of the same name, about 50 ms. SW. of Vera Paz, the capital.

Acatlan, village of Mexico, in Valladolid, N. lat. 19° 20', W. lon. 100° 5'.

Acheen, in Fr. Achern, a kingdom in the north-western part of Sumatra, comprehending all that part of the island from Cape Acheen to Cape Diamond, on the eastern side, and on the west to the country of the Battas. The inhabitants are supposed to be a branch of the Malay family, which language they speak, and write in Arabic characters. Religion Mahometan. The Achenses have made considerable progress in the arts and in civilization. They are able workmen in metals and in ship building.

Acheen, capital city of the kingdom of Acheen. It is situated on the extreme northwestern part of the island, on a river, and two miles from the sea. The port admits no vessels during the dry monsoon, but is much frequented at other seasons. The character of the people of Acheen is that of the nation, or rather, race to which they belong—ferocious, treacherous, and violent, though more civilized than other Sumatrans. Pop. about 40,000. N. lat. 5° 22', lon. 95° 34' E.

Achenrein, village of Austria, in the Tyrol, famous for its foundries and iron works.

Achlam, village of England, 12 ms. from York.

Achlieten, village of Austria, on the Danube, 12 ms. ESE. of Ens.

Achmetchet, town of the former Crim Tartary, now Russian province of Crimea, or peninsula of Crimea, and about 35 ms. NE. of Sevastopol. Lat. 45° N., lon. 34° E.

Achmim, or Ekhmin, town of Egypt, near the right bank of the Nile, 240 ms. above and southward of Grand Cairo. Lat. 26° 40' N., lon. 31° 45' E.

Acoune and Acoutane, two of the Aleutian islands.

Acqui, city and seat of a bishop, in the division of the kingdom of Sardinia called Alexandria, situated on the river Tanana, 20 ms. a little S. of W. of Alexandria, and 55 ms. SE. by E. of Turin. Pop. 6,500.

Acqs, or Daz, city of Fr., on the river Adour, dep. of Landes, and about 25 ms. NE. from Bayonne.—Acqs, town of Fr., in the southern part of the dep. of Arriege, about 22 ms. SSE. of Foix. It derives its name from warm baths in its vicinity.

Acqua, town of Italy, in Tuscany, deriving its name from noted warm baths.

Acquaria, town of Italy, in the Modenese, deriving its name from its noted mineral waters, 12 ms. S. of Modena.

Acquasco, village of Prince George's co., Md., situated on the right bank of the Patuxent river, by post road 40 ms. SE. of W. C.

Acre, or St. Jean d'Acre, the ancient Ptolemais, city of Asia, in Palestine, situated on a bay of the Mediterranean, about 800 ms. a little W. of N. from Jerusalem. This is amongst the most ancient towns known; it was the Accho of the tribe of Asher, afterwards Ptolemais, and since the period of the crusades St. Jean d'Acre. The harbor is perhaps the best along the eastern shores of the Mediterranean. The modern name is derived from the place being long the residence of the grand master of the order of St. John of Jerusalem.—Acre, pachalic of, extends along the Mediterranean from Gaza to Tripoli, about 200 ms, but does not exceed a mean breadth inland of more than 20 ms., lying between latitudes 31° 20' and 34° 20' N. St. Jean d'Acre is the capital. The surface is composed of a narrow western slope from the mountains of Palestine.

Actopom, town of Mexico, in the southern part of Queretaro, about 60 ms. a little E. of N. from Mexico.

Aczu, town of Asiatic Turkey, in Natolia; also, a town and province of Asiatic Tartary, to the N. of Cashgar.

Ada, Danish fort and commercial establishment on the coast of Africa, in upper Guinea, nearly on the meridian of London, and N. lat. 6°. It stands at the mouth of the river Volta.

Adam's Bridge is a long and sandy shoal extending from the northwestern part of the island of Ceylon, towards Indostan, and nearly uniting the island to the continent. This barrier forms the northern limit of the gulf of Manaar.

Adair, county of Kentucky, having Barren co. W., Greene NW., Casey NE., Wayne and Pulaski, or Cumberland river and Wolf river SE., and Cumberland co. S. Adair co. has a mean length and breadth of about 28 ms., area 800 sq. ms. The face of the country broken, and the soil much diversified. Chief town, Columbia. Pop. in 1820, 8,765; in 1840, 8,466. Central lat. 37° 15' N., lon. 8° W. from W. C.

ADAMANT, Fr., diamant; hence diamond.

Adams, tp. of Coos co., N. H. Pop. in 1810, 244; and in 1820, 363.—Town in Berkshire, Mass., 30 ms. N. from Lenox. Pop. in 1810, 1,763; in 1820, 1,836.—Town in Jefferson co., N. Y., 166 ms. NW. from Albany, and 457 from W. C.—County of Pa., having Frederick co. in Md., S., Franklin co., Pa., W., Cumberland NW. and NE. and E. It is about 20 ms. in length and 18 wide; area 360 sq. ms. Chief town, Gettysburg. The surface of this county is extremely diversified with hill and dale. The soil is also of the different qualities, from the worst to the best. The whole county is well watered. Pop. in 1820, 19,681; in 1830, 21,379; and in 1840, 23,044. Central lat. 39° 50' N., lon. W. C. 10' W.—Township, Darke co., Ohio. Pop. in 1820, 343.—Village, Dauphin co., Pa.—Town, Hyde co., N. C., NE. 150 ms. from Raleigh.—Township, Washington co., O., E. of Muskingum river. Pop. in 1810, 620; in 1820, 324.—Township of Washington co., O. Pop. in 1820, 174.—Town, Seneca co., O., 11 ms. N. of Tiffin, the county seat, and 20 S. of Lower Sandusky.—County, Miss., bounded W. by the Mississippi river, S. by Homochitto river, or Wilkinson co., E. by Franklin co., and N. by Jefferson; length 40 ms., mean width about 15; area 600 sq. ms. The face of this county is diversified by hill and dale; soil fertile. Vegetables generally cultivated; cotton, maize, potatoes, &c.; principal staple, cotton. Fruits—peaches, some apples, and abundance of figs. Chief towns, Natchez and Washington. Central lat. 31° 30' N., lon. W. C. 14° 30' W. Pop. in 1820, 12,073;

in 1830, 14,919; and in 1840, 19,434.—A southern and Ohio river county of Ohio, bounded W. by Brown, N. by Highland, NE. by Pike, E. by Scioto, and S. by Ohio river, separating it from Lewis co., Ky. It is, with a southern indenting on Ohio river, very nearly a square of 25 ms.; area 550 sq. ms.; slopes towards Ohio river, and in that direction drained by Brush creek and some smaller streams. Surface very hilly and soil varied, from the best to the most sterile, general character rather inclining to the latter; West Union, seat of justice. N. lat. 39° and lon. W. C. 6° 10' W. intersect near the middle of this county. First settlement, 1791. Pop. in 1830, 12,278; in 1840, 13,183.—One of the western counties of Illinois, bounded N. by Hancock, E. by Schuyler, and SE. and S. by Pike; on the W. it is separated from Marion and Lewis counties, Mo., by the Mississippi river. Length from S. to N. 32 ms., mean breadth 24, and area 768 sq. ms., extending in lat. from 39° 42' to 40° 11', and in lon. from 13° 52' to 14° 26' W. of W. C. The western and most extensive slope declines towards the Mississippi, whilst that of the E. gives source to creeks flowing into the Illinois river. Chief town, Quincy. Pop. in 1830, 2,186; and in 1840, 14,476.—Cape, the Point Ronde of La Peyrouse, is the southern point at the mouth of Columbia river. As laid down by Tanner, it is at N. lat. 46° 17', and lon. 46° 50' W. of Washington City.

Adamsburg, village, Westmoreland co., Pa., 145 ms. W. from Harrisburg.

Adamsville, village, Washington co., N. Y., 57 ms. N. from Albany.—Village, Marlborough district, S. C., by post road 106 ms. NE. from Columbia.—Village, Muskingum co., O., 12 ms. NE. of Zanesville, and 20 W. of Cambridge.—See Mechanicsville, or name of post office at Adamsville.

Adana, town and province of Turkey in Asia. The province is nearly commensurate with the ancient Cilicia, and comprises the extreme eastern part of the southern slope of Asia Minor. The town stands and occupies a strong position on the ancient Sarid, now Seihoun, 10 or 12 ms. above its mouth. N. lat. 36° 50', lon. 35° 5' E. of London.

Adda, river of Switzerland and Italy, rises in the country of the Grisons, and, flowing over Austrian Lombardy, falls into the Po near Cremona.

Addison, tp. of Washington co., Me., W. 16 ms. from Machias. Pop. in 1810, 399; in 1820, 519.—County of Vermont, having Lake Champlain W., Chittenden N., Washington and Orange E., and Rutland S. Mean length 25 ms.; mean breadth 20; area about 500 sq. ms. Though not mountainous, it is finely variegated by hill and dale. Otter river flows obliquely through this county, and by its numerous branches affords much fine land and excellent mill seats. Chief towns, Vergennes and Middlebury. Pop. in 1820, 20,620. Central lat. 44° N., lon. 4° 15' E. from W. C.—Township and village, Addison co., Vt., about 10 ms. W. from Middlebury. Pop. of the tp. 1,200.—Township and village, Steuben co., N. Y. Pop. in 1830, 652.—Southwestern tp. of Somerset co., Pa. It is traversed by the U. S. road.—Township of Gallia co., O. Pop. in 1820, 636.

Adelphi, town on the N. fork of Salt creek, in the NE. angle of Ross co., O., on the road from Chillicothe to Athens; 18 ms. from the former and 35 from the latter, and 20 SSW. from Lancaster. Pop. 300. N. lat. 39° 30', W. lon. from W. C. 5° 43'.

Adel, kingdom of Africa, called also Zeila, from a rich trading town of that name, situated near its coast, on the Red sea. It seldom rains here, but the country is well watered by rivers, and abounds with wheat, millet, frankincense, and pepper. The inhabitants are Mahometans. It was formerly a part of Abyssinia. The capital is Aucagurel.

Adelfors, town of Sweden, in Smoland, noted for its gold mines, 70 ms. NW. of Calmar.

Aden.—See Adel.

Aderbietzan, province of Persia, bounded on the N. by Armenia, W. by Ghilan, S. by Irac-Agemi, and W. by Curdistan. Tauris is the capital. This country of mountains, forming the northwestern province of Persia, goes by numerous inflections of name—as Aderbaidjan, Aderbaidjian, Azerbijan, &c.

Adiabene, a country which, by the ancients, had very indefinite boundaries. It was held by some as including all Syria, or Assyria; or, according to the Chaldaic language, Aturia, which appears to have been a common name for all those countries.

Adige, river of the Tyrol and Italy, rising in the Tyrol, interlocking sources with those of the Inn, Adda, and Drave, and flowing past Trent, enters Italy, and, gradually inflecting to the SE. and E., falls into the gulf of Venice to the N., and near the mouth of the Po, after a course of 200 ms.

Adjemere, province, or, much more correctly, a district of Indostan, divided into three sub-districts—Odeypoor in the south, Joodpoor in the middle, and Jeypoor in the north. It is, indeed, rather a general name or title than a provincial division with definite limits, and is also inhabited by people differing from each other in language, manners, customs, and religion, such as Jants, Rajepoots, Bhattees, &c.

Adjemere, lying on the table land between the sources of the Jumna and those having their influx into the run and gulf of Cutch, has generally a sandy soil, and presents a dreary appearance, with scarcity of water. The state of human industry and improvement low, with some very favorable exceptions, however, in both respects. The feudal state of the whole country, politically, is a greater blight to human prosperity than either soil or drought.—See Jeypoor, Joodpoor, and Odeypoor.

Adjemere, city of Indostan, formerly of great importance, but now chiefly in ruins, is situated on the table land between the sources of the Chumbull branch of the Jumna and those of the Looney, flowing into the run of Cutch. N. lat. 26° 30', lon. 74° 50' E. About 250 ms. a little S. of W. from Agra, and nearly a like distance SW. of Delhi.

ADMIRAL, Fr., amiral, highest order of naval commanders, evidently derived from the same primitive root as emir, mirza, &c. Under this term Webster states: "This word is said to have been introduced into Europe by the Turks, Genoese, or Venetians, in the 12th or 13th century."

Mir, is a suffix to many imperial and royal names in the Slavonic and some of the Asiatic languages.

Admiralty Islands, a cluster of islands in the Pacific ocean, to the NW. of New Ireland. They were discovered in 1767, and are between 20 and 30 in number; some of them appear of considerable extent; and the centre one is supposed to be in lon. 146° 44' E., lat. 15° 37' N.

Adon, town of Hungary, seated in a fruitful country near the Danube, 12 ms. S. of Buda.

Adour, river of Fr., which rises in the dep. of Upper Pyrenees, flows by Tarbes and Dax, and enters the bay of Biscay below Bayonne. It is the SW. river of Fr. of any note; the basin it drains is about 100 ms. long and 50 wide, though the stream is large for so confined an extent, as the principal sources are in the Pyrenees.

Adra, seaport of Spain, in Granada, 47 ms. SE. of Granada. Lon. 3° 7' W., lat. 36° 45' N.

Adramiti, ancient Adramyttium. It is now a miserable village, inhabited by a few fishermen. This place either gave to or received its name from the gulf of Adramyttium, at the head of which it stands. N. lat. 39½°, E. lon. 26° 50'. 70 ms. N. by W. from Smyrna.

Adria, town of Italy, in Polesino di Rovigo, which gives name to the Adriatic sea, and was formerly of great note, but has been much reduced by frequent inundations. It is seated on the Taro, 25 ms. SSW. of Venice.

Adriano, mountain of Spain, in Biscay, over which is a very difficult road to Alba and Old Castile. It is one of the highest mountains of the Pyrenees, and is only inhabited by a few shepherds.

Adrianople, second city of European Turkey, in Roumelia, situated on the Marizzo river, at the junction of its four branches. Before changed by Adrian, this city was named Oresta; by the Turks it is called Edrineh. "The numerous minarets of this second city of the Turkish empire rise above gardens of roses and groves of cypress." Pop. about 100,000. Distant from Constantinople about 150 ms. NW. by W. N. lat. 42°, lon. 26° 36' E.

Adriatic Sea.—See Venice, Gulf of.

Adventure, bay of the SE. end of Van Diemen's Land.

Egates, or Ægades, or Egates, group of islands lying off the extreme western point of Sicily, anciently called the promontory of Lilybæum. The treaty of Ægates, B. C. 341 years, terminated the first Punic war between the Romans and Carthaginians. Their modern names are Levenzo, Pavignano, and Maretima.

Ælia Capitolena, name given to Jerusalem by the Roman Emperor Adrian, and by which the place was designated for some centuries.

Æolia, or Hephestiades, (now Lipari;) which see.

Ætna.—See Etna.

Afghanistan, the country so denominated has been generally, but erroneously, included in Persia. The two countries differ in their civil, physical, and political characters. Following an Asiatic custom of naming a country from a predominant city or province, this country has been successively called Ghuznee, or Ghiznee; Cabulistan, from Cabul, or Candahar, &c.

Taken in its utmost extent, Afghanistan extends from the western bounds of Herat, E. lon. 56', to the eastward of Cashmere, lon. 77°, and from the mouth of the Indus, N. lat. 24°, to the upper part of the Oxus, in N. lat. 37°. These limits would give a length from W. to E. of 1,200 ms., and about 800 ms. from S. to N., or an area of 960,000 sq. ms.

The empire comprehends Afghanistan proper, Seistan, part of Khorasan, and of Mekran, Balk, Cutch, Candahar, Sind, and Cashmere, together with a portion of Lahore, and the greater part of Moultan. In these countries the Khootta, or church service, is used, in which the king of Afghanistan is prayed for, although the degrees of subjection of the different provinces are various.

The whole population is estimated at 14,000,000, consisting of the following nations :

Afghans	-	-	-	4,300,000
Belooches	-	-	-	1,000,000
Tartars	-	-	-	1,200,000
Persians and Tanjeks	-	-	-	1,500,000
Indians of different races	-	-	-	5,700,000
Miscellaneous tribes	-	-	-	300,000
Amount	-	-	-	14,000,000

The origin of the name Afghan is uncertain. It is only through the Persian that it is known to the people themselves, and it is probably modern. Their own name for their nation is Poochtoon, or so says Malte Brun, and then contradicts himself in a few sentences after, by observing that the Afghans consider themselves as descended from Afghaun, the son of Junia.

The language of the Afghans is called Poostoo, of unknown origin, but with some affinity to some of the dialects of ancient Persia. They use the Persian alphabet, and the Persian is their learned language.

In an extent of country so large, and inhabited by nations differing in language, customs, manners, and religion, the human character must vary; but, from all accounts, the people of those regions are hardy, bold, and daring, and perhaps the freest of all Mahometan nations, unless we except the wandering Arabs. The Afghans proper are, as to religion, Mahometans of the sect of Sonnites, but remarkably tolerant. The Hindoos live unmolested amongst them, practising their religious rites in perfect peace and safety.

The face of the immense country known under the general name of Afghanistan is in great part mountains. In the north, it has the great mountain nucleus, the Hindoo Coosh, in part covered with perpetual snow. Advancing southward, the mountains depress, but both the Indus and Kaushgar rivers, from lat. 35° to 33°, flow through mountain gorges, though below the latter limit the Indus has plains on both sides to the sea. The higher branches of the Oxus river rise in and drain the country of Balkh, or northwestern Afghanistan, whilst the central and western sections, comprising Cabul and Seistan, are drained by the various confluents of the Hindmend, flowing westward into the sea of Durah.

Beloochistan, although included in the general sweep of Afghanistan, is, physically at least, a very distinct country; what was called by the ancients Gedrosia, more recently Beloochistan, or country of the Belooches, extending from Cabulistan and Seistan southward to the Indian ocean. In the northern side it is mountainous, but becomes gradually more level approaching the ocean; the whole forming an inclined plane, 600 ms. from E. to W., and lying between N. lat. 26° and 30°; has a mean breadth of 200 ms.; area 120,000 sq. ms.—See art. Asia.

AFRICA, one of the great physical sections of the earth; it is bounded N. by the Mediterranean sea; W. and SW. by the Atlantic ocean; S. by the Southern ocean; SE. and E. by the Indian ocean; NE. by the gulf of Aden, Red sea, and the isthmus of Suez. This immense continent, in latitude, extends from 37° N. to 35° S., and from 12° W. to 52° E., with the equator very nearly a middle line, though not much, if any, less than two-thirds of the surface lies northward of that line. Within the outlines of Africa are included something about 11,000,000 of sq. ms., or about the one-fourth part of the land surface of the earth.

As a physical section, Africa must be taken alone, as its internal features give it a distinct character. Of all the large land sections, it is the least indented with bays and inland seas or lakes. It has also, comparatively speaking, the fewest great systems of mountains, having in fact but two which materially modify its geography; those are the Atlas on the N., and the Kong, or mountains of the Moon, in the centre. Detached groups of mountains do indeed exist in southern Africa, having no connexion with either the Kong or Atlas systems, but these isolated and confined mountains have but a local and very restricted influence on the soil or climate of a continent spreading over so wide a surface.

The Atlas, rising from the Atlantic ocean opposite to the Canary islands, extends thence in a NE. by E. direction 1,400 ms., to the Mediterranean, between Tunis and the gulf of Cabes. This system is the backbone of an arable surface of at most 300 ms. mean breadth. This productive tract is composed of two slopes: one to the northward, drained by streams falling into the Atlantic ocean or Mediterranean sea; the opposite slope drained by rivers falling towards and lost in the Sahara, or great desert. At the utmost, the arable and habitable region of the Atlas cannot exceed 420,000 sq. ms.

Beyond the northwestern extreme of the Atlas region, northern Africa extends about 1,200 ms. to the delta of the Nile. Part of this latter region is arable, but extremely narrow, and in some places the desert reaches the sea. A breadth of 50 ms., and area 60,000, would be a full allowance, which, added to the region of Atlas, yields for northern Africa, westward of the Nile, an arable superficies of 480,000 sq. ms.

The system of Kong rises from the Atlantic ocean, between N. lat. 8° and 12°, forming a nucleus about the sources of the Senegal, Gambia, and Niger rivers, but thence, by an inflected course between latitudes 8° and 10°, crosses the continent, including the region from which issue the higher fountains of the Nile, and terminating in Cape Guardafui. It is, however, evident that the Cape Verd islands in the Atlantic, and the islands of Abd-el-Curia and Socotra, are extensions of the Kong. But, restricting the system to the continent, it extends through 64° of lon. along the mean lat. of 8° N., or through 4,350 ms. The mean productive breadth would be fully estimated at 1,000 ms., and area at 4,350,000 sq. ms. This region of Kong and western coast of Africa, to about the tropic of Capricorn, or southern polar tropic, is the true Negroland.

The lower basin of the Nile, from the mouth of the river Atbara, or Tigre, in N. lat. 18°, to the efflux of the main river into the Mediterranean, in lat. 32° N., ranges about 1,000 ms.; the productive tract narrowing, advancing from S. to N., from 300 ms. to, in many places, not more than 20 ms., and fully estimated at 100,000 sq. ms.

Western Africa, from the mouth of the Quorra, or Niger, in a distance of 2,000 ms., to the southern tropic, is to a certain, indeed, uncertain distance inland, productive, and in part extremely so, but from the best accounts would be rather over than underrated at 1,000,000 of sq. ms.

Beyond the southern tropic, to N. lat. 28°, or mouth of Orange river, the desert reaches the coast. Thence, following the coast, and including the region of the Cape of Good Hope, to the equator on the eastern side, in a distance of 3,500 ms., with a mean breadth of 100 ms. inland, we have an area of 350,000 sq. ms. With these exceptions, the residue of Africa is, as far as known, sterile and unproductive deserts.

	Sq. ms.
Northern coast, from Canary islands to the delta of the Nile	- 480,000
Western tropical coast, from the mouth of the Quorra to that of Orange river	1,000,000
System of Kong	- 4,350,000
Basin of the Nile below N. lat. 18°	- 100,000
Southern and southeastern coasts united	350,000
	6,280,000

In this estimate, the productive surface of Africa is so extended as to admit us to assume 6,000,000 of sq. ms. as an ample allowance for the habitable sections of that continent. Viewed physically, Africa is, in fact, as far as human, indeed, animal life is concerned, a series of islands, of extremely difficult external and internal approach, either from the ocean or by traversing the immense intervening deserts. The want of deep bays or navigable rivers adds to the isolation of interior Africa. These are permanent obstacles opposed to mental, moral, or political improvement. The great and durable superiority of Europe, western Asia, southeastern Asia, and the delta of the Nile, has been no doubt correctly attributed to deep oceanic indentings or to great navigable rivers. Even in Asia, far inland, and amid deserts, barbarism has prevailed in all ages. Rigidly measured by the rhombs, the whole surface of Africa comprises an area of about 11,300,000 sq. ms., and, according to the estimates recorded in this article, near five-elevenths of the whole is sterile, arid, and uninhabitable desert. The great northern Sahara, extending between Negroland and the Mediterranean region, and between the basin of the Nile and the Atlantic ocean, is in length, from E. to W., within an inconsiderable fraction of 3,000 ms., with a mean breadth of at least 800 ms.; area 2,500,000 sq. ms.

The great expanse of interior desert southward of the Kong is less known to civilized nations; but, according to all that is known, the superficies falls little if any short of that of the northern Sahara, and, if taken together, can be safely estimated at 4,500,000 sq. ms.; a surface exceeding that of all Europe, with all those parts of Asia N. of Arabia and W. of a line drawn from the mouth of the Euphrates over the intermediate country, through the Caspian sea, and thence to the foot of the Ural mountains.

Africa, though known in part to the civilized nations of antiquity from the earliest times, continues to be but partially known to those who have been navigating its shores, planting colonies on its borders, and endeavoring to penetrate its interior regions, to the present age. On every probability afforded by history, southeastern Europe was civilized from northeastern Africa; and yet, notwithstanding its proximity to Europe and Asia, Africa in great part remains imperfectly known and barbarous. A continent extending entirely across the torrid into both temperate zones, and, with extended deserts, and mountains rising in some places to the region of perpetual snow, must present great variety of climate and seasons. The general climate is that of the torrid zone. In Africa, as in every other section of the earth, three things must influence the climate: first, relative equatorial distance; second, inclination of the face of any given part; and, thirdly, relative elevation. From their much greater elevation, some parts of Guinea, Nigritia, and particularly Abyssinia, enjoy far more temperate climates, or far less exposed to excessive heats and droughts, than are Barbary, Egypt, or the extreme southern part, extending towards the Cape of Good Hope.

In every section of Africa, where vegetation can exist to any considerable amount, the growth is vigorous, and product is abundant. Did the inhabitants enjoy the benefactions of civilization, an immense population might exist in Africa. Wheat, and indeed the cerealia generally, afford the most excessive crops. The vine succeeds at once at the Cape of Good Hope and along the Mediterranean sea. It has been remarked of African vegetation, that its development is in an especial manner rapid and excessive. Most of the mountains are covered with forests, the trees of which cede in majesty to those of no other part of the earth: those of Mount Atlas equal the finest forests of Italy and Spain; those of Guinea, Senegambia, Congo, and Nigritia, rival the dense forests of South America. The baobab or adanssonia, the giant amongst vegetables, was originally from tropical Africa. Leguminous vegetables are particularly abundant in Africa; as, for example, cassia, tamarind, and thorny mimossas. Palms, and in particular the date and cocoa, rise even on the arid borders of deserts; euphorbias of different species and of gigantic size, and also the spiny cactus, spread over sandy tracts on which few other vegetables could find nourishment.

In so brief a general view we recognise some resemblances in character with Asiatic vegetation. The animal kingdom presents more variety and originality. Africa contains most of the animals of the old continent, and with also superior vigor. We may give, as examples, the horse of Barbary, the Cape buffalo, and the mule of Senegal. The Abyssinia, as laid down on our most modern maps, and also on that of Senex, includes all the great region from the Red sea to the Bahr-el-Abiad or White river, E. and W., and from S. to N., from the mountains of the Moon, to an uncertain boundary between it and Nubia. Length from E. to W. about 800 ms., and mean breadth 400, and area 320,000 sq. ms. Central lat. very near 11° N. Though anciently entitled Ethiopia, and in modern ages Abyssinia, both terms may be regarded as general and generic, as there exists no evidence of the regions included ever having been united into one sovereignty. It is now, and probably has been in all past ages, inhabited by nations, not alone differing in language and religion, but also of very different races. With the exception of a small part towards the Red sea, straits of Babelmandel, and gulf of Aden, the slope is northward, and in that direction furrowed by deep valleys, extending between high mountain chains, which are probably spurs from the great central system, the mountains of the Moon. The principal rivers of Abyssinia are the Bahr-el-Abiad on the W., Bahr-el-Azrak, Blue river, or river of Amhara, in the centre, and the Atbara, or Tigre, or T'acazze, on the E.

Tigre, from which the river so called is named, is the eastern kingdom of Abyssinia, bounded by the Red sea, with a very uncertain extent westward. Andova is regarded as the largest, though Axoum, or Axum, is considered the capital. The former, inhabited by 8,000 or 10,000 inhabitants, manufactures a species of cotton cloth which circulates over the neighboring countries as money. Axoum, though not mentioned by either Herodotus or Strabo, and now in ruins, is very interesting, from remains which attest a former state of splendor. The traveller finds, amidst its present decay, Greek and Ethiopian inscriptions, ruins of magnificent temples, and upwards of fifty obelisks.

Enderta is probably a part of Tigre, extending towards the gulf of Babelmandel, and contains the towns of Antalo and Chicicout.

Lasta, constituting also a part of what our books and maps represent as Tigre, and extending to the Red sea. It is a mountainous country, divided into deep valleys, and with high mountain ridges, superinducing political subdivision, the names of which we know imperfectly. In it are found a people who appear to be the descendants of exiled Jews, and who are called in the country Falachas. Dixan, a city in the extreme northern part, and not far inland from the Red sea, is well peopled and commercial. Genaler, Temben, Adet, Sire, Waldubba, and some other towns, are named as existing in Lasta.

Amhara, or Gondar, forms central Abyssinia, and is the most important of its subdivisions; extent uncertain. If we take a birdseye view of this country, we behold the Lake Dambea, or Dembea, near its centre, and we see issuing from it, and flowing southwardly, the river of Amhara. This stream, represented by Bruce as the real Nile, and long so considered, issues as we have stated, and thence, in the form of an immense semicircle, sweeps round to the northward. Gondar, the nominal capital of Abyssinia, stands near the northeastern angle of Lake Dambea, and by some authors represented to contain 50,000 inhabitants, is, however, a city with more marks of civilization than any other in central Africa. Amhara proper is represented as a small State, whose chief, residing at Watho-Haimanot, is independent. Gojam, or the country in great part enclosed by the bend of the Amhara river below the Lake Dambea, is, from all accounts, one of the most beautiful and best peopled sections of Abyssinia. Maitcha, also traversed by the Amhara, is a swampy and unhealthy country. Belesen, whose chief town, Emfras, contains about 300 houses. Damot, a province rich in gold mines, contains a town called Bame.

The kingdom of Ankober spreading southeastward of Damot and of the river of Amhara, towards the mountains of the Moon, is a country extremely fertile, and comparatively well peopled. Ankobar, the capital, is the residence of an independent chief, and whose estate, in 1814, was composed of the two large provinces of Efat and Schoa.

Ango, a kingdom or province in the southwestern part of Abyssinia, is composed of a province of the same name, that of Furfura and some other districts, and has in it the towns of Agof, Cotbenou, and Combotche. Narea, in the same region, occupies one of the most elevated tablelands of Africa. It is singular that Narea is noticed in the French geography, from which our own notice is translated, but omitted in the attending map, though inserted on that of Senex, 1712, and on Arrow-smith's under the name of Enarea.

Samara, along the low, sandy, and burning coast of the Red sea, counts amongst its nomadic or wandering tribes the Schihos and Hazortas, who are, there is little doubt, the descendants of the ancient as they are the modern Troglodytes, still inhabiting the hollows and natural caves amongst rocks, or in the rudest cabins, constructed of reeds and seaweed. The principal village of Samara is Duroro, situated on the bay of Amphila, the most powerful tribe of the Danokils, who occupy a great extent of country inland from the straits of Babelmandel to the bay of Houakel. The miserable village of Zulla, on Amesley bay, is the residence of the chief of the Hazortas. Near Zulla are still to be seen the ruins of the ancient Adulis. At about 8 or 9 ms. from this part of the coast is the island of Dhalac, the largest in the Red sea. On a small island in the bay of Masonah is a town of about 2,000 inhabitants, and very commercial. The town is also called Arkekoo, and is the common seaport from which outlet or inlet is made with Abyssinia.

Closing this too general view of a country so extensive, and, in many respects, interesting as that from which the Nile derives its numerous fountains, we cannot but regret at once its barbarous condition and the great imperfection of our knowledge of its various subdivisions. Politically, it may be remarked, there are great resemblances between the condition of much of Europe for many centuries after the fall of the Roman empire and that of Abyssinia at the present time. Magnificent ruins attested in Europe and in western Asia, as such ruins now do at Axoum and other places, the existence of and destruction of former grandeur and civilization.

Descending the great slope of the Nile region from Abyssinia, extends an immense country, vaguely known under the general and complicated names of Sennaar and Nubia. It is something curious that on the map of Senex, engraved early in the last century, and on those most recent of Africa, the political extent, relative positions, and geographical complications, in regard to the Nile region, appear with a resemblance which excites and sustains an opinion that little has been gained in exact knowledge of that physical section during the past century. From the dim light thrown on the two countries of Abyssinia and Sennaar or Nubia, we may regard them as not only politically but physically distinct. Indeed, we are warranted in concluding that the former permanent separation arises from the strong prominence of the latter. Abyssinia in its widest extent is a comparatively high table land, from which fall rapidly the three great constituents of the Nile. Sennaar proper, following Abyssinia, is, from all accounts, from 1,000 to 1,500 or 2,000 feet depressed; therefore the rapid increase of heat advancing northwardly.

Nubia, including Sennaar, according to the geography of Larenaudiere, Balbi, and Huot, is 350 leagues in length from south to north, and 200 wide from east to west. This would give a width of 550 and length of about 900 ms.: the area exceeding 400,000 sq. ms. As naturally bounded, it stretches from the 12th to the 24th degree of north latitude, and from the Red sea to the Great Sahara.

Sennaar, or upper Nubia, occupies the space over which flow the two rivers of Amhara and Tigre, and westward to the White river. On the east and north, limits uncertain. This country, it is supposed, is the same assigned by the ancients to the famous empire, or, as frequently designated, island of Meroe. Many writers of both ancient and modern times have considered it as the cradle of the civilization, arts, and religious and political institutions of Egypt. The traces of a former high state of improvement are unequivocal. It was invaded in 1822, from Egypt, and is now in some respects subject to the Pacha Mehemet Ali. The kingdom of Sennaar was founded in the commencement of the 16th century. The capital, by the same name, is situated on the right or east bank of the Bahr-el-Azrak, or Blue river, the middle Nile, at N. lat. 13° 30'. It is a mere aggregation of mud huts, covered with straw.

The country above their junction, and between the White and Tacazze rivers, is that named Halfaya, or Chendi, descending from Sennaar proper. It is represented as tolerably well peopled. The capitals are of the same name, and in fact give name to the provinces. Damer, whose capital is situated near the mouth of the Tacazze, also gives and receives a name for the adjacent district. Barbar, or Berber, is marked on the maps as a district east of the Nile, and below the Tacazze, and north of the Nubian desert.

Dongolah, unless the maps since 1712 have been copies of each other, has not materially changed. The length, as given by the French geographers, is upwards of 500, and breadth upwards of 400 miles; but the limits cannot be otherwise than very vague. Between N. lat. 19° 22', the Nile makes an immense sweep, first westward, then northward, and finally eastward, passing through the country called Dongola, of which, says Malte Brun, "we have little recent information." Similar to so many other places in Asia and Africa, the capital and country bear the same name. The town of Dongola, on the Nile, at about 19° 30' N., is comparatively important. Ruins here, as elsewhere in the upper Nile region, prove a state of departed civilization and grandeur, and now contrast in a melancholy manner with present barbarism and degradation.

The greatest part, indeed, of lower Nubia, called also the country of Barabras, is inhabited by a true nomadic people, wandering from the Red sea to the interior Sahara; but here still existing monuments prove an approach towards ancient Egypt. The towns, or more correctly the villages, above Assouan, or Syene, are Deyr, regarded as the capital, and near to which exists the remains of a temple cut from the solid rocks, and which Belzoni supposed a temple of Osiris, and also another temple, in great part buried in the sands; Ouady-Halfa, near the cataract of the same name; Ebsamboul, near which is still to be seen the remains of a magnificent Egyptian temple; El-Calebcheh, composed of near 200 houses constructed from stones torn from ancient monuments, the most important of which is a temple which appears to have been erected to Serapis, and which, to judge by some paintings, attest that it was changed to a church during the early ages of Christianity; and, finally, Ibrim, situated on the right bank of the Nile, whose mud-built and palm-leaf covered houses rise around the remains of a mosque, a castle in ruins, and some other antiquities.

To the eastward of Dongola, and of the Tacazze, or river of Tigre, extends a large country reaching to the mountains which border the Red sea, which country, in great part desert, is traversed by nomadic nations, amongst which the Bicharyeh form several large and warlike tribes. One of their principal villages is Olba, with a port on the Red sea. The Hadendoa is a tribe at once pastoral and agricultural, who inhabit a fertile district called Belad-el-Taka; the Ahmmadab, a numerous tribe who abandon their mountains during the rainy season, to cultivate the banks of the Tacazze; the Halenquahs, robbers, who pillage the neighboring tribes, and retire to the mountains of Fassala and Atnesse; the Hessanyeh, who roam over the country to the northeastward of the desert of Bahiouda; and also the Kababych, who occupy the deserts westward of the Nile. Comparatively, Suakim, a city and seaport on the Red sea, and within the Nubian region, at N. lat. 19° 20', is of great importance. It is a commercial depot on the main caravan route from interior Nubia, Sennaar, and the still more remote regions of central Africa, and one of the most extensive slave markets between Africa and Asia. The town is built on a small island, the port one of the best and most frequented on the Red sea, and is situated about 900 miles SSE. from Suez.

Egypt follows Nubia, passing the northern tropic and descending the Nile; and entering Egypt, even in thought, we feel as if our feet trod on ground cultivated by man from the most remote antiquity; and when we examine its history, we find in those primitive ages, as at present, the country divided into three natural sub-regions—higher, middle, and lower—which, taken together, has a mean length, from south to north, of 500, and breadth, from east to west, of 300 ms.; area 150,000 sq. ms. In the outlines, however, of this space, so much is desert that the real cultivable, and, of course, habitable Egypt, does not exceed, if it amounts to, 13,000 sq. ms.

Before noticing the political features, we may take a hasty sketch of those natural characters more or less common to the whole of Egypt. Of these characters, the most important is the river Nile—this very remarkable stream, formed, as we have seen, by innumerable smaller confluent rivers in Abyssinia and adjacent countries, all of which are united into one channel at the influx of the Tacazze. Without including minute windings, but by comparative courses, the Nile channel below the mouth of Tacazze is in length 1,200 ms., in which great distance it does not receive a single confluent which deserves a place on the map of Africa. Without fountains or brooks, the Nile is the very life artery of Egypt. If, by any convulsion or other operation of nature or art, the course of the Nile within the torrid zone was turned into the Red sea, the so justly interesting Egypt would almost instantly disappear from amongst the habitable sections of our globe. Watered and fructified by the great river, the aspect of the country varies with its periodical swell and depression. While winter, even in southern Europe, has chilled vegetable life, Nature smiles in all her luxuriance over Egypt. The verdure of the meadows, promise of abundance in the fields, gardens, and orchards, give an air of enchantment to the banks of the Nile. Then bloom the flowers of the orange, citron, and innumerable others, perfuming the air. The busy hum of human life, villages, and pastures covered with flocks and herds, give life to the scenery. Egypt, though something monotonous, is then indeed one immense garden. In the opposite season the contrast is complete. As the sun approaches the northern tropic, the heats become excessive, and gradually Egypt assumes a parched aspect, first of mud, and then of penetrating dust. In the heaven above the earth a scorching sun, and the vault unclouded, with winds of more or less violence, bearing the dust into the closest dwellings, the heat and dust rendering travelling in the open air at once dangerous and painful. This season of heat and dust is followed, as the river continues its rise, until the whole country adjacent to the main channel, particularly in lower Egypt, or the delta, presents immense surfaces inundated, and from which the clumps of trees, houses, and villages, seem to float. It cannot be a subject of rational surprise that different travellers, visiting Egypt at different seasons, should give contradictory accounts.

According to Malte Brun, "The rise of the Nile commences with the summer solstice. The river attains its greatest height at the autumnal equinox, continues stationary for some days, then diminishes at a less rapid rate than it rose. At the winter solstice it is very low, but some water still remains in the large canals. At this period the lands are put under culture. The soil, from the previous flood, is covered with a fresh layer of slime or vegetable mould."

Descending from Nubia, the first Egyptian town reached is Assouan, the ancient Syene, now almost in ruins and thinly peopled. It stands on the eastern bank of the river, on an agreeable site and granitic soil. In the middle ages this city was still one of the most important of Africa. Few remains of its ancient monuments exist; those which have resisted the ravages of time and human barbarism appear to be rather the works of Greeks or Romans than of Egyptians. Below Assouan, the first town, now in ruins, which deserves notice, is Koum Ombos. Though reduced to a miserable village, it is highly interesting by the ruins of two temples, which enclose an immense area in brick. The smallest of these edifices has been subjected to great degradations from the floods of the Nile. At Edfou, the Atbo of the Egyptians, and Apollinopolis Magna of the Greeks, a large temple of Orus yet so far exists as to show its massy corridors and mysterious passages. This place is situated on the western bank of the Nile, at N. lat. 25°. Fifty miles lower down the river, and on the same side, we find Esneh, and in it one of the most perfect monuments of ancient Egyptian architecture; it is a portico sustained by 24 columns, and on the ceiling of which is seen sculptured a zodiac, which is supposed to have been formed 2,000 years before that of Denderah. This once splendid edifice attests that the place, now the residence of a simple Arab Cheykh, is the site of the ancient Latopolis. At no great distance from Esneh, the Cophts show a Christian church which they contend was built as early as the reign of Dioclesian, A. D. 282-306.

At N. lat. 25° 40', and on both banks of the Nile, once stood Thebes, the capital of upper Egypt. The site is yet attested by the villages on the right or east bank of the Nile, of Luxor, Karnak, and Medinet-Amoud, and on the left or western side by Medinet-Abou, Kourneh, and others of less consequence. We hazard nothing in saying that there exists no other known ruins of the earth which combine so much of intense interest as do the remains of Thebes. Over a distance of seven or eight miles along both banks, and three or four miles on each side from the stream, yet exist remains of an immense capital of a highly civilized nation, who flourished ages before the hunter nations of Europe were other than savages.

At about 30 miles below the ruins of Thebes, and on the western or left bank of the Nile, once stood Tentyris, now Denderah, a wretched village, deserving little notice in itself, but commanding deep interest from the traveller and geographer, as in its environs are found the remains of a temple 250 feet by 170 in length and breadth. From one of the ceilings of its halls was taken the planisphere now forming one of the most splendid ornaments of the museum of Paris. About 100 miles below the ancient Thebes, and on the west bank of the Nile, stands Girgeh, capital of the province, showing its antiquity by its ancient monuments, and at present containing a population of 10,000. On the eastern bank, and about 15 miles below Girgeh, stands El-Akmin, supposed on the same site with the ancient Chemnis, so remarkable for its attributed extreme antiquity. Still descending the Nile from El-Akmin, about 60 miles, we reach Siout, or Suit, on the western bank, and regarded as the capital of upper Egypt, and is a place of meeting and passage of the river by the caravans from Nubia, Soudan, and Arabia. This place, containing from 10,000 to 12,000 inhabitants, may be called the city of ruins, as from the fragments of ancient edifices those of modern times are in greater or less part built.

Minyeh, also on the western bank, about 80 miles below Siout, brings us into middle Egypt, or Vostani, and into accumulated evidences of an ancient, powerful, and highly civilized people. Minyeh is, by several authors, regarded as the ancient Cynopolis. Unequivocal monuments of modern improvement appear at this city, and, amongst others, we may notice a manufactory for spinning cotton with European machinery. Jars for filtering the water of the Nile are also extensively manufactured here. This city, named on some maps Ashmunein, stands at N. lat. $28^{\circ} 8'$. About from 75 to 80 miles lower, following the channel, and on the western bank, stands Beni-Souef, or Beny-Soueyf, a city amongst the most commercial, best peopled, and most industrious of middle Egypt. It is, however, more particularly remarkable, as from the Nile at this city issues the canal which leads into the province of Faioum, the ancient Arsinoë. This canal, called Bahr-Yoosef, connects the Nile with the ancient Lake Moeris, now Birket-el-Cairoon. Medinet-el-Fayoum, or the city of Fayoum, near which are to be seen the ruins of Crocodiopolis, after the reign of Ptolemy Philadelphus Arsinoë, is yet renowned for its oil of roses, and near it exist the remains of an ancient pyramid and labyrinth. Beni-Souef stands at N. lat. $29^{\circ} 12'$, and, following the channel of the river, about 80 ms. above Grand Cairo.

In the lowest part of lower Egypt, and just above N. lat. 30° , commences the district of El-Haram, or that of the pyramids. The limits between middle and lower Egypt are strongly physical. The two opposing ranges of hills or mountains which from the mouth of the Tacazze, at a greater or less distance from its banks, border the Nile, form between them what may be called the valley of that river. From Syenë to Cairo the river flows along this valley, which averages about eight miles broad between the two ranges of hills or mountains, one of which separates the Nile region from that of the Red sea, and the other stretches along the Sahara, and is finally terminated towards the Mediterranean. Some travellers of credit state that the Nile mountains are intersected by defiles, on one side leading to the Red sea, and on the other to the oases towards the Sahara. It was no doubt an inspection of one or more of these defiles which suggested to the Portuguese the project of diverting the whole column of the Nile into the Red sea, nor do the general features of the intermediate country at all tend to discredit the possibility of such a work. If a section of the Nile valley is made by a plane perpendicular or at right angles to its direction, the surface will be observed to decline from the margins of the river to the bottom of the hills—a circumstance common with it, the Mississippi, the Po, Borysthenes, Ganges, and several other rivers. The Nile valley contains three very different kinds of land; that immediately at the bottom of the mountains consists of sand and round pebbles, with a variety, composed of light drifting sand, covering ground probably at former times arable; and a third, the productive alluvial banks of the river.

Near Beni-Souef, the valley of the Nile, already much widened, particularly on the west, opening, as already shown, a passage by the Bahr-Yoosef to the interior of Faioum, contracts below: but near and above Cairo, the chains which limit the valley of the Nile diverge on both sides; the one under the name of Jebbel-al-Nairon, extends north-westward towards the Mediterranean; the other, called Jebbel-al-Attaka, stretches in nearly an eastern direction towards Suez. Any one who has examined carefully the lower Mississippi region will be inclined to regard what is counted as mountains stretching along the Nile on both sides as merely buttresses, or the termination of table lands, into which a deep channel has been scooped by abrasion of water.

Let, however, the boundaries of high land be what they may, in their front, and below N. lat. 30° , spreads a plain cut by the river channels, and evidently composed of alluvion borne down by the waters of the Nile, and which, from a fancied resemblance to the Greek letter of that name, has been called the delta. It is, and has in all historical ages been designated lower Egypt. The extent is not a very easy calculation, but does not perhaps much exceed or fall short of 7,000 sq. ms. As a section of modern Egypt, the delta is the Bahari, from the now Bahr, a body of water.—See article Egypt.

We now resume our general view. Entering the Bahari, descending the Nile, our attention is arrested by those stupendous monuments of the ancient world, the pyramids, those majestic mausolea in which are buried not alone the founders, but also their names. They are in number 11, ranged almost in a single line, at a short distance from the left bank of the river, and on the road to Gizeh. Three of these piles greatly surpass the others in height and mass. See article Pyramids. At Sakhara, at or near where Memphis, the second great capital of ancient Egypt, stood, is a range of pyramids. Mixed with the pyramids are those colossal representations of monsters called sphinxes; which see, under its proper head.

With the town of Gizeh, Djizeh, or Gize, or Geeza, we enter lower Egypt, and find ourselves surrounded by the admixture of the most ancient and most modern monuments. The town itself appears sad and ill built, and presenting the palace commenced by Ismael Bey, and finished by Momad Bey. Nearly opposite Gizeh, but some little distance lower, and about half a mile from the Nile, commences the most extensive city of modern Egypt, El-Kahirah, or Grand Cairo, constructed in A. D. 970, or in the 360th year of the Hegira, by the first of the Fatemite Kalifs who reigned in Egypt, Al Mansur. Grand Cairo is, after Constantinople, the largest city of the Mahometan world, and maintains a fully equal, if not superior, comparative rank by commercial importance. Bou-lac, along the Nile, between that river and the city, is at once its port, and most important suburb. Grand Cairo, or the tower of the Janizaries, in that city, stands at N. lat. $30^{\circ} 2'$; or, if the city itself is regarded, it stands on 30° , and almost exactly due W. from Suez, at the extreme northern bay of the Red sea.

About 10 or 11 ms. below Grand Cairo flows from each other the two great embranchments of the Nile; and we may remark that, from all the most authentic testimony on the subject, this bifurcation has existed, not materially changed, for at least 2,500 years. The eastern, or the one which continues the general course of the Nile in middle Egypt, has been, from the principal city near its mouth, called the channel of Damietta, and is, by general or comparative courses, about 100 ms. in length. The other, or western branch, for similar reasons, has been called, respectively, the channel of Rosetta, or of Alexandria.

Proceeding by the branch of Damietta, and at about 30 ms. below Cairo, on the outlet of a formerly navigable canal, stands Menouf; and still lower, and near the centre of the delta, though not on either, but between the two channels, is situated Tantah, or Demtar, one of the best built and peopled cities of lower Egypt. Mansoura, on the E. side of the main channel, and above an outlet or canal leading into Lake Menzaleh, and almost exactly on N. lat. 31°, and a very little N. of E. from Cairo. Few cities of Egypt have gained more celebrity than Mansoura, Mansura, Mansoura, or Mansourah, for it is written with all this difference of orthography. At about 28 ms. nearly due E. from Mansoura stands San, the ancient Sanis, now only a fishing village near the border of Lake Menzaleh, whose huts are strangely contrasted with obelisks and other splendid ruins. Following the course of the stream, and at 60 ms. below Mansoura, we reach Damietta, a city near the shores of the Mediterranean, and the most northern town of any great consequence in Egypt. Environed by rice fields, and on an almost dead plain, Damietta contains, at the lowest estimate, 20,000 inhabitants. This city was built near the site of, and takes name from, the ancient Thamiatis, destroyed during the crusades.

If we return to the separation of the two main branches of the Nile, and descend that of the W., after passing numerous towns and villages, you reach, at a distance of about 80 ms., the town of Rahmanie, or Ramanyeh, at the outlet of the canal of Alexandria; and 30 ms. still lower, and on or near the Mediterranean coast, the city of Rosetta. From the bay of Aboukir, the coast eastward is no longer composed of calcareous rocks, but of the alluvions of the Nile. On this alluvion stands Rosetta, with its 15,000 inhabitants, amid forests of date trees, sycamores, and bananiers.

Though founded by Alexander of Macedonia, 2,170 years past, when thinking on the history of Egypt, Alexandria strikes the mind as a modern city; but when connected with Greek, Roman, Sarazin, and Turkish history, like Rome itself, it appears as one of the links of that great chain which unites distant ages. As it now appears, Alexandria shows its decadence by the remains amongst which, and partially with which, it is constructed. To the southward of the point of land on which this city stands, and nearly enclosed from the sea by another long tongue of sandy beach, but based on rock stretching from the southwest, spreads the ancient Mareotis lake, now Birket-el-Marabout.

At 12 or 13 ms. northeastward of Alexandria, stands, on the site of the ancient Canopis, the village of Aboukir; and near which the coast, which thus far from the W. is generally based on calcareous rock, now becomes alluvial.

The enduring celebrity of Egypt, and indeed its intrinsic physical features, justify, in a general view, more than usual detail. Returning to Vostani, or middle Egypt, and ascending the Nile as high as Diospolis Parva, or very near N. lat. 26°, we find on most maps a canal delineated along the western side of the Nile valley, and generally parallel to that river, and on some continued into the canal of Alexandria. From what has been already observed in this article, the reader learns that the surface on both sides of the Nile valley, at the foot of the hills, is lower than the river banks, or, in other words, that both sides from the river to the hills are inclined planes. The consequence of such a physical structure is, that when the Nile is at full or even nearly full flood, as high as 400 ms. above the head of the delta, near Grand Cairo, the water which flows from the main stream over its banks, particularly on the western side, falls into a natural recipient towards the hills.

It is a very mistaken idea, but a common one out of Egypt, that the Nile inundations are of uniform or even near uniform annual elevation. "In September, 1818, M. Belzoni witnessed a deplorable scene, from the Nile having risen three feet and a half above the highest mark left by the former inundation. It was productive of one of the greatest calamities that had occurred in the memory of any one living."—Malte Brun, vol. 4, p. 25. In Egypt, the people regard as equally injurious a too low or too high rise of water, in their river; and what is remarkable, if a very low rise takes place in any given year, a corresponding excessive rise is looked for and dreaded as a coming calamity the ensuing year. These injurious phenomena had such sequence in 1817 and 1818.

Another, and very interesting fact in the physical structure of the region westward of the Nile, and to the northward of Beni-Souef and the outlet to Faïoum, is the existence of valleys now no longer so, but having in position, direction, and materials in their deposition, strong evidence of having been, at some remote and lengthened period, outlets of the Nile. To advance from S. to N., and setting out from Beni-Souef, the canal of Joseph, 84 ms. long, leaving that place, and leading into the district of Faïoum, has all the appearance of having been merely an outlet of the river, artificially improved, as no doubt was also Lake Mærts, a natural basin replenished from the Nile. But the valley of which the district of Faïoum is a part does not appear to terminate short of the Mediterranean. Speaking of those regions, Malte Brun, quoting Andreossy, observes. "But the most curious country, undoubtedly, is that which is comprehended in the Bahr-bela-Maiey, (the river without water), and the basin of the Natron lakes. These two valleys are parallel to each other. The mountain of Natron (range of hills) skirts the whole length of the valley of that name. That mountain contains none of the rocks which are found scattered about in the valley, such as quartz, jasper, and petrosilex.

There are six lakes, forming a series, in the direction of the valley. Their banks and their waters are covered with crystallizations, both of muriate of soda, or common salt, and of natron, or carbonate of soda.

The valley parallel to that of Natron is called

Bahr-bela-Maiey, or "the dry river." Separated from the valley of Natron by a small range of heights, it has, for the most part, a breadth of 8 ms. In the sand with which the surface is every where covered, trunks of trees have been found in a state of complete petrification. The same species of stone is found here as in the valley of Natron. Some of the learned have thought, with much probability of being correct, that the stones have been brought to the place by a branch of the Nile which once passed in this direction." The valley of Bahr-bela-Maiey is said to extend to, and to be continued in, that of Faioum, southwardly, and to the N. to be only terminated in the Mediterranean. Distance about 150 ms. from Beni-Souef, into Lake Mareotis.

Eastward of the lower part of middle Egypt, and of the whole of lower Egypt, the Bahari or delta, traces of immense changes previous to and within the historical era appear over the isthmus of Suez, spreading between the Bahr Assuez, or western arm of the Nile, and Mediterranean. The isthmus now presents itself as a low-lying land, based on shell, limestone rocks, and sand, covered, but interspersed with small lakes and saline marshes. The surface of the isthmus generally declines from the shores of the Red sea towards those of the Mediterranean. The level of the Red sea at Suez exceeds by a height of 30 feet that of the Mediterranean. The plain slopes also from the Red sea towards the river Nile and delta. The level of the Nile near Cairo, at the lowest stage, by a mean of three years, 1798, 1799, and 1800, was 9 feet lower than the surface of the gulf of Suez. But the Nile, rising 16 cubits, is 9 feet higher than the Red sea at high water, and 14 feet higher than the same sea at low water.

These elements show in general terms the peculiar structure of Egypt and adjacent parts, and show also the high probability that if a civilized and permanent government was formed, and its benefactions shed once more over this great region, that nature itself has prepared the base of works which may unite by navigable canals the Mediterranean, by way of Egypt, with the Red sea, and by canals of irrigation restore to cultivation large tracts of country once productive but now desolate. It may be safely said, that an extensive survey, including the levelling of the Nile and its outlets, and also the relations of level of that stream at extreme high and low water, with the Red sea and the supposed ancient outlet to the westward, would be one of the most interesting works ever undertaken by man.

If, as a summary, we include in the Nile region all the space between the Red sea and northern Sahara, and between the mountains of the Moon and the Mediterranean, we have a space of 1,700 miles in length, and differing in width from 800 on the south to 400 on the north, and with an area exceeding 650,000 square miles. If we allow one-half as arable, and capable of supporting a dense population equal to the general aggregate of southern Europe, or about 150 to the square mile, then ought the region of the Nile to have upon its surface upwards of 43,000,000 souls.

Region of Atlas.—In the outset of our view of this great region of northern Africa, we may observe, that under the head of Atlas are included extensive tracts west of Egypt and eastward of the gulf of Cabes, the ancient Syrtis Minor, beyond those which appertain strictly to the mountain system which gives title to the section under review.

Setting out from the western coast, on or about N. lat 30°, we find a system of mountains rising from the ocean, and, pursuing it, discover its extension to be in a direction of nearly NE. by E., terminating on or near the Mediterranean coast, between Tunis and Tripoli. The general length of this system is about 1,300 miles. With the minute features of Atlas we are but partially acquainted, such as its lateral chains, bifurcations, height of its peaks, or constituent materials; nor could we in an article necessarily brief go into such details, had we the documents; but, from what is actually known, Atlas may be ranked amongst the great systems of our globe. In latitude it ranges between 30° and 37° N. About the meridian of London, and N. lat. 32°, in the eastern part of Morocco, many of its peaks are covered with perpetual snow, demanding a height of at least 12,000 feet. Still farther east, in Algeria, the mountains are covered with snow from the latter end of September to the beginning of May; and even to the south of Tripoli, where the general elevation appears to diminish, they are snow covered three months of the year.

Falling from this elevated region are two slopes, drained by numerous but comparatively small rivers; one, declining about NNW., has its eastern termination on the Mediterranean and western on the Atlantic ocean; the other and opposing slope inclines towards the Sahara, which is also channelled by rivers, but their waters lost in sands or evaporated by the scorching heats over the deserts. The mean width of this northwestern section of Africa is about 250 ms., and mean length, in N. lat. 32° 30', very near 1,200 ms.; area, 300,000 sq. ms. Of this extent, according to all concurrent testimony, ancient and modern, at least two-thirds is equal if not superior to any similar continuous tract of southern Europe, and is fully capable, and perhaps in ancient times did support a population of between 40,000,000 and 50,000,000 of inhabitants. It is productive generally, and part exuberantly, of the grains and fruits usually cultivated in Greece, Italy, and Spain; and also produces many useful vegetables not at all or with difficulty cultivated in southern Europe.

In regard to climate, there must be a much more marked difference and rapid transition between the opposing Atlas slopes than could arise from difference of latitude; but if our knowledge of the northern slope is defective, that of the southern is greatly more so; on both, human barbarism operates as a blast on nature. It is inhabited by Moors, Arabs, Berbers, and an intermixture of Jews and Negroes, all with very distinctive physical and moral characters. The Moors are supposed to be a mixed people, descended from the ancient Mauritanians, Numidians, Phœnicians, Romans, and Arabians. The nomade Aabs are distinguished from the other inhabitants of Barbary by a more masculine physiognomy, more lively eyes, and almost olive complexions. The Berbers, who are totally distinct from the Arabs and Moors, are probably descended from the ancient Getulæ. Their complexion, mixed red and black; their forms tall and handsome, spare habits and lean body. They are subdivided into four nations. The Amazirgh, or, as called by the Moors, Shilla, or Shulla, in the mountains of Morocco; the Cabyls, in the mountains of Algiers and Tunis; the Tibboos, between Fezzan and Egypt; and, fourth, the Tuariks, in the great desert. Their identity of language is shown by their original roots.

The other nations, such as Jews, Negroes, Turks, &c., rather reside amongst than form any considerable part of the population of northern Africa. Spain has long held some towns on the coast, and France is now contending for the mastery of the whole country, but as yet the great interior surface to the Sahara is possessed by the different Mahometan tribes or nations.

East of Barbary and west of Egypt, having the Mediterranean north and the Sahara south, extends a country of rather contracted breadth, but with a length of about 1,000 miles from east to west. Advancing from Egypt, we first enter Barca, the ancient Lybia, Marmarica, and Cyrenaica. Similar to all northern Africa, Barca presents the contrast of ancient magnificent ruins and modern barbarism. Except a narrow and irregular strip along the Mediterranean coast, Barca is a desert, affording no stream worthy of notice. In it and on its northern extremity, 600 ms. following the coast westward of Alexandria, stands the wretched village of Carin, marking the site of the ancient Cyrene, once the capital of a flourishing Greek colony, and where were born Eratosthenes, Aristippus, and Callimachus. It is still the principal town on the coast between Egypt and the gulf of Sidra, the ancient Syrtis Major. This gulf protrudes a bay to very nearly N. lat. 30°, and to where the deserts skirt the coast.

A distance of about 300 ms. separates the gulf of Sydra, Syrtis Major, from the gulf of Cabes, the lesser Syrtis, and this stretch of coast, the ancient Syrtica, now the State of Tripoli, lying between N. lat. 30° and 34°, is said to be inhabited by a people much more advanced in civilization than are any other of northern Africa west of Egypt. Tripoli, the capital, at N. lat. 32° 40', is supposed to stand on the site of the ancient Sabarta, and, with a population of 25,000 souls, is still a place of great commercial importance and an entrepot between the interior and coast. To the south of Tripoli the face of the country does not become rapidly a desert. In that direction extends an immense country, tributary to the Bey of Tunis, though under the government of an independent chief or sultan. It appears from recent information that a chain of mountains stretches westward, with a mean latitude of 29° from the Natron lakes of Egypt, and taking successively the names of Mokarra and Gulsdoba, with an aspect naked and precipitous, and calcareous in their element. Leaving Egypt, and proceeding westward along these mountains, we first arrive at the oasis of Siwah, the Ammon of the ancients. The ruins of Oummidiba seem to belong to a fortified caravansera, connected with the temple of Jupiter Ammon. The materials of the ruins consist of a limestone brought from the adjacent mountains, and contain petrified shells and other marine remains. The so very celebrated temple of Jupiter Ammon on the oasis of Siwah, as laid down on our modern maps, stood at about N. lat. 29°, and something above 300 ms. a little south of west from Grand Cairo.

From Siwah to Audjelah, 250 ms., the mountains rise in peaks from the midst of the plain. The naked rocks are not covered with a particle of soil, or even with sand. Abundance of water, both fresh and salt, is found, the fresh water springs being mostly warm. The oasis of Audjelah, the Aquila of Herodotus, contains three towns, ruled by a bey tributary to the Bey of Tunis. Audjelah lies southward from Barca, and nearly on N. lat. 30°, and there appears to terminate the long chain of mountains bounding the desert of Barca on the south; but we may doubt whether this termination is other than a mere depression or wide gap, as, after some intervening sandy desert, mountains rise, and along about the mean latitude of 27° spreads the very hilly desert of Haroodjeh, or Harutch, probably the Mons-ates of Pliny. It commences nearly south of the gulf of Sidra, and is prolonged north of Fezzan, and separates that country from Tripoli. The Haroodjeh mountains present a volcanic appearance, and an aspect wild and desolate. The broken masses, mostly bare and sterile, and composed of black basalt, though the basaltic ranges in several places alternate with others of limestone.

To the southward of the Haroodjeh mountains, and on about lat. 30°, we enter from Tripoli the extensive but very vaguely limited Fezzan, which, according to the French geographers, has an extent north and south of about 500 ms., with a mean breadth of 250, or an area of 137,500 ms. Such an extent must, however, include large desert spaces. The soil is, like that of the great desert, a fine and reddish sand, covering an argillaceous or calcareous base. The really cultivable and of course habitable oases, if taken in the aggregate, may amount to about 45,000 sq. ms. But, thus restricted, the population is not in any due proportion to the arable surface, as at the highest estimate the inhabitants are given at about 150,000. Mourzouk, the capital of Fezzan, stands at N. lat. 27° 30', and 380 ms. a little east of south from Tripoli. It is one of the principal interior entrepôts of northern Africa, as it is situated on the principal caravan route from Tunis and Tripoli, into Soudan, or the central parts of that continent. In Fezzan springs are numerous, and yet, unlike the region of Atlas, there are no running streams worthy of notice. Water is found in abundance at a moderate depth under ground. Rains are scanty and infrequent. Climate excessively warm in summer, but in winter cold and chilly, from the very frequent and strong north-western winds. Figs, pomegranates, and lemons, are plentiful, but dates form the staple commodity of the country. Maize and barley are cultivated. The country abounds in pulse and other culinary vegetables. It is probable that Fezzan, like most other African countries, suffers more from human barbarism than from the asperities of its soil or climate.

The State of Tripoli, properly so called, extends from the Great to the Little Syrtis, or from the gulf of Sidra to that of Gabes, having the Mediterranean on the north and on the south, separated from Fezzan by the mountains of Haroudjeh. Tripoli proper is a long narrow slip, 600 ms. along the Mediterranean, and with a mean width of not more than 100 inland; area 6,000 sq. ms. Tripoli, the capital, stands on the Mediterranean, at N. lat. $32^{\circ} 40'$, about 450 ms., following the intervening curve of the coast, SSE. from Tunis, and 1,200 ms. a little N. of W. from Grand Cairo. There are, indeed, extensive territories more or less dependent on Tripoli; but sterility of soil and barbarism of the people render most of the surface desolate. The best parts are thinly populated.

Northward of the State of Tripoli extends that of Tunis. With the gulf of Gabes the Mediterranean coast turns to a general northern course, in a direct distance of 200 ms. to Cape Blanco. Along this coast, and inland to the eastern boundary of Algeria, extends the State of Tunis, which, however, also protrudes westward of Tripoli to the great Sahara, having an entire length of 500 ms., with a mean breadth inland of 150 ms.; area 7,500 ms. This is the most contracted but best peopled State of Barbary, the best cultivated and most commercial. It is the original Africa, and the country which gave the modern name to the whole continent, and was the ancient centre of Carthaginian power. The sovereign of the country takes the title of bey.

Tunis, the capital, stands on the site of the ancient Carthage, at N. lat. $36^{\circ} 40'$, and about 500 ms. eastward of Algiers. The surface of this State belongs properly to the region of Atlas, of which it is the eastern part, and in it terminates the main spine of the system of Atlas mountains. Differing nearly 9° of lat. from the extreme northern part to the Sahara, the climate of Tunis is varied from relative equatorial distance, and again by relative height, as spurs and table lands of Atlas extend to near the Mediterranean. With snow-capped mountains to the west, the sea north and east, and the vast Sahara south, the atmosphere must be subject to excessive and rapid changes. The southern part is sandy and barren. The country along the sea coast sustains a numerous population; rich in olives and other fruits, grains, and garden vegetables. The western part is full of mountains and hills, watered by numerous rivulets, with highly fertile banks, yielding the most abundant crops. From the great descent of the country from the interior, even the largest river, the Mejerda, is not navigable. Tunis, the capital, holds a high rank amongst African cities, and by some travellers is supposed to contain 100,000 inhabitants; and if so, it is, next to Grand Cairo, the largest African city.

To the westward of Tunis extends what was formerly called the State of Algiers, but since its capital and part of the territory has been taken possession of by France, it has received the title of Algeria. Having Tunis east, the Mediterranean north, the empire of Morocco on the west, and the Sahara south, if taken in its greatest extent, Algeria has a length of 600 miles along the Mediterranean, with a mean width of at least 350 inland; or an area of 210,000 sq. ms., exceeding rather that of France. The boundaries are, however, vague, as are the particular features of its geography. The Atlas mountains pass through and have their highest peaks in Algeria, the rivers flowing rapidly down the opposing slopes. Though we are unable to give minute knowledge of this country, we may, from analogy, regard it as subject to very considerable extremes of climate. This was in remote antiquity the Gætulia, and under the Carthaginians and Romans the Numidia and Mauretania Cæsariensis. In a country of such extent and diversity of local features and exposure, great extremes of soil and temperature must exist; but we may remark, as a most striking instance of the slowness of development of the topography of Africa, that the Atlantic slope of the Atlas region is defectively known; that the Mediterranean slope is still more so; and that the slope towards the Sahara may be regarded as a terra incognita. Before me now lie Senex's ecclesiastical map of northern Africa—London, 1712; Arrowsmith's large map of the same region; the map of Africa attending the geography of Larenaudiere, Balbi, and Huot—Paris, 1830; and Tanner's maps of Africa; and, from comparison, cannot perceive that any very serious addition had been made to the geography of the Atlas region in the 120 years previous to the French invasion. Even under the Romans, the southern slopes of the African mountains, from the Atlantic ocean to the western borders of Egypt, were never probably distinctly or even tolerably well explored. We may therefore say that on a zone of 2,500 ms., along the northern border of the great Sahara, having N. lat. 30° as its mean centre line, though to a greater or less degree habitable, and from time immemorial inhabited, the sun of civilization has never shone upon its surface. Its inhabitants were the barbarous Gætulæ of antiquity, and their posterity, probably never displaced, are now barbarians. The strip or zone we are now surveying, advancing from the Atlantic ocean, includes Dara, Taflet, Sedgelmessa, Tegorarin, Zab, Guargala, the country of Toster, Gadamis, Fezzan, Audjelah, and Siwah. The term Belad-el-Djerid, or, as commonly written, Biledulgerid, means "the country of dates;" and though so often used by European geographers, "there is in reality," says Malte Brun, "no such geographical division." In this conclusion that author could not have been altogether correct, nor when he observes, "the country of Toster, which belongs to Tunis, and to which Shaw and others have given the special name of Belad el Djerid." The southern part of Tunis, on Senex's map, 1712, is thus designated: "Biledulgerid, or country of dates," and its capital named Tous-era. The term was no doubt made local long before Shaw visited Africa. It may again be repeated, that, with some diversity of orthography, the principal names of provinces and towns marked on the modern maps of northern Africa are also on the map of Senex, and their relative positions the same, or nearly so, on the old and new maps.—See, more particularly, Algiers, under its proper head.

The empire of Morocco follows Algeria to the westward, and derives its modern name from Mauretania, its ancient appellative. Modern Morocco is perhaps nearly commensurate with the Roman province of Mauretania Tingitana. The boundaries are natural, except in common with Algeria, on the east, about 350 ms. from the Mediterranean, to the great desert; it is bordered by the desert on its southern side 800 ms.; skirted by the Atlantic ocean from Cape Nun, about 700 ms., to the straits of Gibraltar; and thence, by the Mediterranean, 250 ms., to the bay of Oran. From the northeast to southwest, the length of Morocco is about 1,000 ms. The surface is about equal to a square of 400 ms. each side, or an area of 160,000 sq. ms. Similar to Algeria, it is divided into two not very unequal parts by the system of Atlas mountains, traversing it from southwest to northeast, and rising within it to summits covered with perpetual snow. The empire of Morocco is divided into five provinces—Draha and Tafilet, on the southern slope of Atlas, towards the Sahara; Susa, lying on both sides of the Atlas; and Fez, and the proper Morocco, towards the Atlantic ocean. These provincial subdivisions are, perhaps, very vague in themselves, and too little of their extent or features known to us to admit particular notice; what is known and necessary to state will be found under the proper head.

When we become acquainted with the very great difficulties which have to be encountered and overcome in any successful attempt to form correct population tables of the most civilized nations, and who are under the most regular and best organized Governments, we may well regard as utterly impracticable the formation of accurate tabular views of barbarous tribes, who have rarely, and some never have, been even visited by enlightened travellers. The following table has been made up from those of M. Balbi, who we may regard as the best authority on the subjects of which it is a summary.

Summary table of the population of northern Africa, with the relative extent of political subdivisions.

Political section.	Sq. ms.	Pop.	Pop. to sq. m.
Abyssinia	320,000	3,200,000	10
Sennaar and Nubia	400,000	2,400,000	6
Egypt	150,000	2,500,000	15
Tripoli	269,000	660,000	3
Tunis	53,000	1,800,000	34
Algeria	210,000	1,500,000	7
Morocco	160,000	5,000,000	31
Amount	1,562,000	16,660,000	10

Allowing for the portions of desert included in this table, and supposing a deduction of one-third, then we would have about 1,000,000 of sq. ms. as the habitable northern Africa, and on it a distributive pop. of near 17 to the sq. m.—not, it is probable, far from reality.

In closing our general view of northern Africa, we may observe, that from inspection of numerous maps, and collating different accounts, a mountainous zone, more or less broken or ramified, extends from the basin of the Nile to the Atlantic ocean, along the Mediterranean border, and through 40° of longitude on the mean latitude of 30°. This immense irregular belt admits a nearly continuous, but, except between the lesser Syrtes, or gulf of Cabes, and the Atlantic ocean, a not very dense or widely extended pop. In fact, all that part comprising western Tripoli, all Tunis, Algeria, and Morocco, may be regarded as an island, and indeed, except being on three sides bounded by water, and being more extensive, it differs in no other essential circumstance from the smaller oases which border and checker the Sahara. If we join the northern zone, by the link of Egypt, to the Nile region, we find the great desert bordered from the mountains of the Moon by a habitable but very irregular zone, exceeding in length 5,000 ms.

The Sahara, or Zahara, "great desert," the most extensive continuous surface of the earth, either tropical, temperate, or polar, which, bereft of water or productive soil, forbids the existence of organic life. With the exception of oases of no extent which seriously encroach on this ocean of sand and rock, it has Egypt, Nubia, and Abyssinia on the E.; Tripoli, Tunis, Algeria, and Morocco, on the N.; the Atlantic ocean W.; and the immense Soudan, Negroland, or central Africa, W. The northern tropic is not very distant from its middle line, and along which it extends through 45° of lon., or 2,800 ms. The width varies, but the whole approaches the elliptic form, the greatest breadth about 1,000 ms., nearly on the meridian of London. The area exceeds 2,200,000 sq. ms.; of which, from all we know of its asperities, it would be exaggeration to allow as habitable the one-thousandth part. Greatly more difficult to pass than an ocean of water of equal extent, there exists no doubt a far greater population on the bosom of the Atlantic ocean, on an equal surface, than on the north Sahara of Africa.

We may therefore regard the Sahara as a region presenting peculiar features. It is a vast table land, slightly raised above the oceanic level, covered with moving sand, and surface broken by some rocky hills, and some valleys, in which a scanty moisture sustains a few thorny shrubs, reeds, and grass. Towards the Atlantic ocean some scattered mountain peaks rise; and on this coast the deserts reach the ocean from lat. 19° to 28° N., and following the coast at least 600 ms. In the interior the dreary plains are frequently found covered with white and sharp rocks. Waves of moving sand are agitated by violent winds, and have the heaving, but much more terrific aspect of an ocean in a storm. At Tagazza, and in some other places, is found salt gem whiter than the most beautiful marble, and lying in vast strata under beds of argillaceous earth or gypsum. During the greatest part of the year, the dry and heated air presents in these deserts the aspect of a reddish vapor, and towards the horizon assuming the appearance of several volcanoes. The partial showers which fall from July to October do not extend their uncertain benefactions to every part of this expanded desert. Where scanty vegetation does exist, it is composed of an aromatic herb similar to thyme, acacias, and other thorny shrubs, with nettles and briars. At distant and scattered places are seen clumps of date trees and other palms. The forests of trees which supply the gum resin, and which skirt the border of the desert, appear to be colonies from the vegetable kingdom of Senegambia. Some monkeys and gazelles exist on this scanty herbage. In numerous flocks or troops, the ostrich is seen along this border, between sand and vegetation. Lions, and other feline animals, serpents, often of most enormous volume, add to the horrors of these dismal and frightful solitudes. The raven, vulture, and other carrion animals, birds and beasts, dispute over dead carcasses, and the howl of the wolf and Moorish dog mingle with the screams of the panther, breaking the awful stillness of those interminable wastes. Here, as on so much of Africa and Asia, the camel is the true ship of the desert. That animal, of all quadrupeds, can exist longest without water whilst exposed to excessive heat and fatigue; and the goat, in some measure a kindred animal, forms the flocks of the roaming inhabitants along the desert border or on the distant oasis.

On the Sahara, the wandering inhabitant on the borders, the few sedentary tribes on the limited and scattered oases, and the caravan toiling through interminable seas of sand, all tend to render those regions in fancy still more immense than they are in reality. The habitable valleys, or the dispersed oases, are peopled by nomades, more or less ferocious, but all independent. The Moors occupy the Atlantic coast—cruel when they have the power, faithless and disregardful of any sentiment of humanity. Their reddish copper tint, in many reddish black, and their wild and fierce expression of countenance, render their aspect truly terrible. Mixed with the other tribes, the Moors are found from the Atlantic ocean to the Nile; but towards the ocean inhabit Moosserimis, or Monselmines, from Cape Nun to Cape Juby; southward of them are the Mongcars. The Wadelims and Labdasebas reside, to the terror of shipwrecked mariners, about Cape Blanco. The Travzachs are the most southern of those ferocious tribes who reside near the ocean.

Receding from the Atlantic coast, and E. of the Travzachs, appear the Braknas, or Ebraknas, divided into numerous tribes independent of each other, though all under a nominal chief. Their country lies to the northeast of the French settlements of Senegal, and with their chief the French Governor of Senegal traffics for the gum collected by the tribes. Robbers, and less known nomades, under different barbarous names, as Oulad-Leme, Lebos or Labos, and Ouactlins or Woled-Deleim, with others, inhabit the oases towards Morocco. Three Moorish tribes inhabit separate oases. Hoden, imperfectly known, but placed on the maps at about N. lat. $19^{\circ} 30'$, and 400 ms. to the northeastward of the mouth of the Senegal; it is the Guaden of the map of Senex. El-Arouan, with a small town, represented to stand very near the meridian of London, and upwards of 700 ms. eastward from Hoden. Tandeyni is important for its salt mines.

But the two most numerous and wide-spread people of the Sahara are the Tuaricks and Tibboos. The comparatively numerous and warlike Tuaricks, divided into several independent tribes, occupy all the middle part of the Sahara, from the limits of the country inhabited by the Berbers of Morocco, Algeria, and Tunis, and by the Arabs of Tripoli, over the wide space thence to Tombuctoo and Bornou, N. and S., and from W. to E. from the confines of the western Moors to the country of the Tibboos. From ages perhaps long preceding, but certainly from the times of the Carthaginians and Romans to the present, it was the Tuaricks who were the conductors of caravans and commercial factors between the northern and central regions of Africa. We may name the principal oases which they occupy. Gahaat, laid down by the French geographers at N. lat. 25° , and about 600 ms. a little W. of S. from Tripoli, and 1,000 ms. northeastward of Tombuctoo. Ahir contains Aeoudi, a commercial city, and Agades, inhabited by Kollavis. The city of Agades is said to be little if any less than Tripoli, and to be one of the most extensive entrepôts of the Sahara. On the French map Agades is laid down at N. lat. $16^{\circ} 40'$, and on lon. 7° E. of Paris, or $9^{\circ} 20'$ E. of London, and about 800 ms. NE. by E. from Tombuctoo. On the map of Senex, Agdes, or Agades, is laid down at N. lat. $19^{\circ} 30'$, and on lon. 4° E. of London. On the latter map, the kingdom of Agdes, or Agades, is made to extend along about 7° E. of London to an internal lake called Guarde, evidently Lake Tchad, of supposed recent discovery. The geographical positions on our recent maps represent this inland lake or sea more easterly than on Senex's map, but the relative positions prove that, when and by whom the latter map was delineated, a far more accurate knowledge of central Africa was possessed than is commonly now allowed. In truth, the discrepancy in nomenclature and in relative position between the map of Africa by Senex, and those published of the same continent within the current century, is not greater than exists in both respects between the latter amongst themselves.

On the direct route from Tombuctoo to Tunis and Tripoli, and about N. lat. 24, spreads what might be called the cluster of oases called Tuat.

In a nearly southern direction from Tripoli to Lake Tchad, there appears to be a chain of small oases, which, similar to a chain of islands, divides the great desert into two immense though unequal seas. This physical limit seems also to form the boundary between the two African nations—the Tuaricks on the W., and the Tibboos on the E. The Tibboos occupy almost the whole eastern part of the Sahara. Their principal independent tribes have for towns Bilbab, Aghaden, Yeu, and Arno. Bilma is the most noted, standing on the southern route from Tripoli to eastern Soudan, about 600 ms. southward of Mourzouk, in Fezzan, and about N. lat. 18° . Yeu is the residence of the chief of the Tibboos of Bourgoo, an oasis E. of Fezzan. Arno, as laid down on the French map already alluded to, lies at N. lat. $26^{\circ} 48'$, and about 600 ms. a little W. of SW. from Grand Cairo.

The great Sahara or desert which we have been describing, is it not the dried up basin of a former sea? Diodorus Siculus speaks of a lake or sea of the Hesperides, dried by an earthquake. Perhaps the region of Atlas, formerly surrounded by a double Mediterranean, may have formed the celebrated island of Atlantis, sought for every where, and no where to be found. On the borders of the great desert are found immense remains of marine animals. Whilst Soudan is entirely devoid of common salt, it abounds in numerous parts of the deserts. Pliny and Leo the African are of accord, that in several locations of the Sahara rock salt is quarried like marble, and that it is used in the construction of houses. All known circumstances favor the preceding hypothesis, but it cannot be demonstrated until the level of the desert is ascertained.

We now proceed to review, as far as the dim light of geographical science as it now exists will admit, one of the most extensive continuous habitable tracts of the earth. Central Africa, known under different sectional terms, such as Senegambia on the west, Soudan northward of the gulf of Guinea, Bornou E. of Soudan, Tacroor between Bornou and Abyssinia, indeed Abyssinia itself, belong to the same region, as does Somanli or Adel, terminating in Cape Guardafui. The ethnographical term which would most justly designate this immense zone would be Negroland. A line drawn across the African continent along N. lat. 12° would in no place stretch far from the centre line of Negroland, and extends very nearly 4,700 ms., or through 70° of lon., and in the tropical regions of the earth spreads about 7° westward of all Europe, and E. to the meridian of the middle of the Caspian sea. The breadth cannot fall short of a mean of 800 ms.; area 3,760,000 sq. ms.

As we have already included Abyssinia in the region of the Nile, we may now assume the 30th degree east of London as on that side the limit of Soudan, which will still leave to that great physical section a length, east and west, of 48° of lon., on lat. 12° N., or a length in miles of upwards of 3,300, which, at 800 ms. mean width, gives an area of 2,640,000 sq. ms. But as the Galla and other Negro nations possess the country southward of Abyssinia, and as all the residue of the central zone to the Atlantic ocean is inhabited by the same race, the whole may be correctly called Negroland. Of the extent included within the specified outlines, in regard to human habitation, one-third at least may be retrenched for deserts; but, with such diminution, Soudan, or central Africa, west of the basin of the Nile, and including Senegambia, with upper and lower Guinea, would comprise a habitable surface rather exceeding that of all Europe westward of the Borysthenes and Vistula rivers.

As usually delineated, a continuous system of mountains is sketched in an eastern and western direction entirely across Africa, along the mean lat. of 10° N. That the ridges of this system are continuous, even with the exception of the passage through it of the Niger, may be doubted. It would rather seem that, as along the northern border of that continent, the central part of Africa is passed by a mountainous zone with more or less elevation and connexion, and that on and sloping both to north and south of this rocky zone spreads a habitable belt, as we have noticed. The northern slope of this habitable zone, though not very minutely, is generally known, as are both slopes westward of the gulf of Guinea, or about to 10° E. of the meridian of London; but eastward of the gulf of Guinea the country southward of the mountains of the Moon remains a terra incognita, and far the largest surface yet hid from science on the earth between the polar circles.

As to the physical structure of central Africa, our terms must be very general. The country comprehended under the general name of Senegambia, or extreme western Africa, is composed of a slope falling from the interior mountains, and, besides others of less consequence, is drained by Rio Grande, Gambia, and Senegal rivers. It is in the eastern part of this section that the Senegal and Niger rivers interlock sources, but flow in directly opposite directions.

The slope of Senegambia is, however, not terminated by the Rio Grande, but is continued south-eastward 700 ms. to Cape Palmas, and southward of the Kong mountains, and thence, as far as known, eastwardly to the Indian ocean. But it is only the western part, and that imperfectly, which is really at all known, skirting the Atlantic ocean 1,400 ms., from Cape Palmas to some little distance northward of the bight of Biafra.

Eastward of the sources of the Senegal, and northward of the Kong mountains, commences a valley or depression, in a remarkable manner similar to that of the Danube above the mountain pass near Orsova, and in fact very similar to the valley of the Caspian, with the exception that the latter has no oceanic outlet. This great African depression, long a subject of mystery, has, as is now satisfactorily ascertained, its outlet into the Atlantic ocean by the Quorra river, forming an immense delta between the bights of Benin and Biafra.—See Niger river.

The upper and great basin of the Quorra or Niger, above the passage of its volume through the Kong, comprises the proper Soudan, and is in reality in an easterly direction, continued in the sub-basins of Tchad and Fitre, which would give an entire extent, from west to east, of 2,000 ms., with varying breadth between the Kong mountains and Sahara. Mean breadth at least 500, and area 1,000,000 sq. ms.; mean lat. 12° N., and cut nearly centrally by lon. 10° E. of London. From analogy, as from concurrent accounts, the vast central depression of Africa once formed an inland sea of much greater extent than the Black sea of Europe, or the seas of Canada in America—those which maintain the most resemblance in their actual state. The breaking through of this prodigious mass of water formed the present gorge of the Quorra, or Niger, between the interior basin and the comparatively narrow slope southward of the Kong. There is no doubt but that great variations still occur over large spaces, from the accumulation of water during the rainy seasons, and its diminution during the dry months.

Over all the central region of Africa, during eight or nine months, the surface is exposed to the most scorching heat, withering, and indeed drying up all vegetation except on places supplied by perennial streams; but from June to September, or the rainy season, the soil, where not composed of altogether siliceous sand, is covered with the most abundant herbage and growth of every other kind of vegetable found in those regions. The plants and animals, however, of central do not very materially differ from those of northern Africa. Gold is the only metal found in any great quantity; and why it is found arises probably from the fact that it exists in the metallic state, admixed with the sands of watercourses. It is probable that, were the country in possession of a civilized people, iron, copper, and some other metals, would be drawn from the earth.

To enable us to more clearly comprehend the political subdivisions of this wide region, we may regard it as divided into three large sections, or into east, central, and western—the eastern spreading westward from the region of the Nile. Indeed, in the present condition of geography, we cannot draw definite lines between any of the African countries. Towards the sources of the Bahr-el-Abiad is a kingdom probably deriving its name from that of the river, or Dar-el-Abid, a mountainous country, and well watered; indeed, partaking of the physical character of Abyssinia. To the northward of Dar-el-Abid is the kingdom Dar-Four, exhibiting an approach to the Sahara, as it is composed of a group of oases in the midst of an immense desert. Neither lakes nor running streams are found in Dar-Four, except temporarily in and for a short time after the rainy season. These oases present the alternations according to seasons of African vegetation. As represented on our maps, Dar-Four appears as the eastern part of the great central basin, which we have noticed in this article. The river Miselad, discharged into Lake Fitre, has a western course of 500 or 600 ms., and appears to interlock sources with the Bahr-el-Abiad; being, however, in the region of oases, it is probably alternately a river and dry valley. Cobbé, the capital of Dar-Four, as laid down in our maps, stands at N. lat. 14° 20', lon. 27° E. from London; pop. 6,000; religion Mahometan.

To the west of Dar-Four extends a country called Bergon by the people of Bornou; Dar-Szalek, by the Arabs long resident in it; Ouadey, by the merchants of Fezzan and Tripoli; and Mobba, by the Negroes. It has been represented as one of the principal States of eastern Soudan. Ouara, its capital, stands about 300 ms. northwestward from Cobbé.

A probably extensive but very imperfectly known country, under the name of Baghermé, extends westward from Dar-Four, and southward from Bergon, reaching, probably, Lake Tchad. The inhabitants are black, though less barbarous than most of the Negro nations of Africa.

Bornou is a name applied in former times to a much larger extent than at present; and even now, similar to every other section of inland Africa, the boundaries are altogether vague. It is generally supposed to comprehend Bornou proper, and other countries west of Lake Tchad; Kanem north and east of that lake; Loggoum to the south of the same lake; and a part of Mandara, and other places unknown. According to Major Denham, its capital, Angourou, on Lake Tchad, contains 30,000 people, and he states it as a place of great commercial importance. Birnie, or New Bornou, is also given as a large and trading city. In the confusion of African geography, Kouka, whose capital of the same name is laid down on the southwestern side of Lake Tchad, is represented as a nominal fief of the Sultan of Bornou, but really independent, and with a disposable military force of 50,000 men; and, if so, the terms "empire of Bornou" must be indeed generic. But, in our views, we must use the best evidence at our disposal; therefore proceed.

Dagowa, on the right bank of the Yeou river, is a walled town, with a population of from 20,000 to 30,000 souls. The Fellatahs, a powerful nation westward of Bornou, have encroached on the latter country, and forced the Sultan or chief of Mandara to remove from his former capital, Delo, and, in 1814, found Mora, about 160 ms. to the southward of Kouka.

The inhabitants of Bornou are generally mild and peaceable, and are mostly Mahometan. It is said that under the generic name of Bornou there are about thirty nations or tribes, speaking different languages. The Sultan of Bornou, regarded as the most powerful of central Africa, is elective, and maintains a numerous army, composed principally of cavalry, defensively, both men and horses, with iron mailed armor. Fire arms are known, but in little use.

Fellataks, or Fellateens, a people spreading westward of Bornou, and, with a Cheikh at their head, possess an empire equally, if not more powerful than that of their eastern rival. The Foulahs, under the name of "Foules of Cassair," and in the position, as regards Bornou, assigned to them by Clapperton and other travellers, appear on Senex's map. It appears that the Foulahs are the commanding people over the greatest part of Haoussa, a vast country visited a few years since by the English travellers, Captain Clapperton and Dr. Oudney, who, however, could not, as is commonly supposed, be the first civilized Europeans who visited the country. Though distorted, probably, and, in relative positions with the Atlantic ocean, greatly misplaced, the countries and towns, as laid down by Senex, correspond entirely too much with the more modern maps to be delineated otherwise than from actual observation, made by intelligent persons; and, indeed, from the confused texts of modern descriptions of the same countries, it is yet to be determined which are most correct, the ancient or modern maps. Between the French and English maps discrepancies abound, though pretentively formed from the same documents.

Before proceeding with our general view, and in order to render the descriptions more clear, we may state, as far as the maps (English and French) will admit, the geographical and relative positions of the principal cities between Lake Tchad and the mountains separating the sources of the Senegal and Niger rivers, and the provinces or kingdoms of Bambara and Senegambia:

Amongst the provinces subject to the Foulahs, are—Gouber, or Gober, a country of forests westward of Kouka; Kano, still more westward; Zeg-Zeg, chief town Zariya, southward from Kano; Noufi, or Nyffey, still more to the southwest, and lying between the Joliba, or Niger, and one of its confluent, the Mekamey; Casna, Cachina, or Cassina, to the northward of Kano, is a province named from its capital, which is represented as constructed of stone, as commercial and populous.

Sackatoo, the Fellatah capital, is situated in the province of Ader, and, though southwardly of a direct line between them, very nearly mid-distant, or about 600 ms. from Kouka and Tombuctoo. According to Clapperton, this city contains 80,000 inhabitants; and if this estimate is even tolerably correct, it is the most populous city in all Nigritia, or Negroland. Its streets are regular, and not in groups, as is the case in most of the Negro towns.

Boussa is a town on the Niger, and near where that great river passes one of the chains of the mountains of the Moon. It was in this mountain cataract that, in 1805, Mungo Park was engulfed. The existence and importance of Boussa are better known than its position, which, as we have it laid down, places it about 700 ms. SW. by W. of Kouka, and, by air line, 800 ms. SE. from Tombuctoo. It is represented as the capital of western Soudan, and of a confederation of small States. The country westward of the Niger, and above the system of Kong, or mountains of the Moon, is called Borgou.

Tombuctoo, so long one of the mysteries of geography, we reach, ascending the Niger from Boussa, but by advancing upwards of 7° lat. and 5° lon. It is one of the cities which most distinctly prove that many discoveries supposed to have been made in the current century had been made a century or more earlier. Senex places Tumbut, or Tombuctou, about 20 ms. northward of the Niger, and Cabra to the southward of that city, and on the river. Senex places Tombuctoo in lat. $15^{\circ} 40'$ and lon. $1^{\circ} 25'$ E. of London; differing from its position as placed by modern travellers, $2^{\circ} 20'$ in lat. and $2^{\circ} 25'$ in lon.—by no means as great a difference as can be found between different modern travellers. Quoting René Caillie, the French geography of Larenaudiere, Balbi, and Huot, states of Tombuctoo: "Open on all sides, and built in the form of a triangle, it may have a population of about 12,000. The houses are constructed of sun-dried bricks, and the streets are clean and wide. Tombuctoo may be regarded as the principal entrepot of the commerce of Soudan. The most important commercial place, after the capital, is Cabra, a village containing nearly 1,000 inhabitants, and built on an eminence, at the foot of which is a canal, or rather an arm of the Dialiba, (Niger.) This village is in some respects the port of Tombuctoo."

This description is altogether as suitable to and as illustrative of Senex's map as of the one attending the work from which the quotation was taken. We cannot give a distinct idea of Tombuctoo, without preceding with a few observations on the Niger river. It appears that the basins of Senegal and the Niger are separated from each other by a counter system of mountains to that of the Kong. From this counter system the streams flow; those which compose the Senegal by a general north-western course reach and are discharged into the Atlantic ocean at about lat. 16° N. On the eastern side of the counter chain the streams rise, as do those of Senegal, through five or six degrees of latitude, and incline towards the northeast; and, what is peculiarly remarkable, both rivers obliquely approach towards and the Niger actually continues its course into the great Sahara. The French traveller, René Caillie, speaking of Tombuctoo: "It presents at the first aspect only a mass of houses, built of earth, and badly constructed. On all sides we see naught but immense plains of moving sand, of a yellowish white, and of the greatest aridity. The heaven, to the horizon, a pale red. All nature looks sad and desolate. The most profound silence reigns; we do not hear even the song of a bird. Nevertheless, there is something imposing to behold a great city rising amidst an ocean of sand, and we must admire the efforts made by its founders."

The course of the Senegal, but more particularly that of the Niger, proves that an inclination extends from the mountains of the Moon of five or six degrees of latitude wide, towards the Sahara. From the extreme source of the latter stream to the city of Tombuctoo, following the course by comparative air distances, is about 1,000 ms.; but, here encountering more elevated land, the volume of water is turned eastward, and finally southeastward another thousand miles below Tombuctoo, until it reaches the lower depression of Soudan. Thence, bearing its mass of waters through the Kong, assumes a southern course of about 400 ms. to the Atlantic ocean, nearly equalling the Nile in length of course. This great central river is known in different parts of its course by different names. Dialiba, Joliba, Niger, or river of the Blacks, and, in the lower part of its course, Quorra. The real native name is Dialiba, pronounced probably as if written Dhaliba, hence Joliba.

Above Tombuctoo, the country to a great extent is known by the name of Bambara. Lake Debo, or Dibbe, a few miles above the city, appears to be a swell or dilatation of the Niger, from whence extends the country of the Dirimans, along the right or east bank of the river. Bambara, from all our accounts, has, in regard to soil, a great resemblance to Egypt; both are sandy tracts, made fertile by the great rivers which traverse their surfaces. Bambara, like Egypt, is divided into three parts: lower Bambara, or Djenné; middle Bambara, or Massina; and upper Bambara, or Segou. Djenné, or Jenné, is the capital of lower Bambara; and here, as at Tombuctoo, the traveller is gratified by seeing the aspect of increased civilization. M. Caillie estimates the population of Djenné at 8,000 or 10,000 souls, "comprising a mixture of Foulahs, Bambaras, and Mandingoes, and also Moors, all rivalling each other in industry. We see there tailors, shoemakers, smiths, masons, packers, and street porters, and many other trades people, evincing of a great state of improvement above the barbarians who inhabit the more central regions of Africa." About 60 ms. below Djenné, and at the confluence of two branches of the Niger, stands Isaca, which may be regarded as the port of the capital, and westward of both extends the country of Massina. There are several other provinces, towns, and rivers, mentioned by geographers as appertaining to Bambara, but of too little note and too little known to deserve further notice in this article. We may observe, however, that amongst the innumerable rivers which issue from the mountains separating Soudan from Senegambia, the country is inhabited by small, independent, obscure, and barbarous tribes, whose names, even when heard, cannot be rendered by any European alphabet.

Western region of Africa.—In our view of the central habitable zone of Africa we noticed the fact that the slope of Senegambia, drained by the Senegal and Gambia and some smaller rivers, was continued southward of the Kong mountains; we therefore now include Senegambia in our view of western Africa. Under this head we have, therefore, three great physical as well as political sections: Senegambia, or extreme western Africa; upper Guinea, along the northern coast of the gulf of Guinea; and lower Guinea, extending from the bight of Biafra to about S. lat. 17°. Following the general and not the particular indentings of the intermediate coast between the extremes of habitable western Africa, we have an immense distance of 4,000 ms.—1,000 in front of Senegambia, 1,400 in front of upper Guinea, and 1,600 in front of lower Guinea.

To commence on the northwestern extreme, we have the naturally fine region of Senegambia, formed by a slope of upwards of 700 ms., falling from the mountains separating the sources of the Senegal from those of the Niger; mean breadth about 400 ms. from the Sahara on the north to N. lat. 10°; area 280,000 sq. ms. Toward the sources of the Senegal, Gambia, and those of the Niger, rises a mountain nucleus, with projecting ramifications. These mountains appear to be composed of granitic and schistose rocks, rich in iron, and perhaps in gold, which is found admixed in the sands of rivers flowing from their deep valleys. Mountains rise also near the coast, from the Gambia to Cape Verd, and at other places more southwardly, giving volcanic indicia. The foot of the Cape of Sierra Leone (Lion mountain) is formed of a chain of basaltic rocks, which extend to a considerable distance along the coast. The Gambia forms and traverses an immense alluvial deposit, comparatively to the size and length of that river, perhaps the most extensive of any known.

Senegambia is amongst the physical sections of Africa which abound most in rivers. The Senegal, its principal river, takes its source in the counter chain of mountains already alluded to, in the Fouta-Dialou country and of the Mandingoes, who there give it the name of Bafing; by the Foulahs it is called Ba-Peo, or Black river. Formed by numerous confluent, and flowing from an elevated tract, this river rolls over several cataracts, one of which is navigable at high water.

The Gambia basin extends to the southward of that of Senegal—the two rivers drawing their remote sources from the same mountain chain. Though the Gambia has a less lengthy course than its rival, the volumes of water brought down by the two rivers, it is probable, do not differ materially. The French geographers say, that “whilst, the Senegal is only navigable at high water during the rainy season, the Gambia is only so during the season of drought, the rains so enormously increasing its volume and rapidity that it cannot then be navigated against the current. In the dry season it can be ascended by a 40-gun frigate about 150 ms.

Rio Grande, to southward of the Gambia, has its source in the same mountains, there called Badet. Brief in course, when compared with even the Gambia, Rio Grande discharges into the gulf containing the Bissagos islands. The country around the mouth of the Senegal is in possession of a French colony, the mouth of the Gambia by a British, and that of St. Paul’s by one appertaining to Portugal. The British colony of Sierra Leone terminates Senegambia to the south, and is followed by the United States colony of Liberia, in the extreme western part of upper Guinea. It is something remarkable that the entire territory of Sierra Leone, as now claimed and held by Great Britain, does not materially differ from Sierra Leona, as named and dotted off by Senex, on whose map the whole space from and including Sierra Leone, to Cape Palmas, is named coast of Malaguetta.

It is with the harbor of Sherbio and northwestern part of the colony of Liberia that commences the great eastern sweep of the coast of western Africa, extending through 22° of lon., along the mean lat. of 6° N., equal to about 1,500 English ms. The whole of this coast, under the general name of upper or northern Guinea, is the front of a narrow inclined plane of about 250 ms. wide, falling from the Kong mountains. The rivers are numerous, but all of brief course, nor is the interior well known to geography. As far as known, the soil is generally productive. Its rich and active vegetation and immensity of its forests has been remarked by all who have visited and described its character. Much of the soil is composed of a fine reddish alluvion, in which not a pebble is to be found. On the coast, some parts are gravelly and some swampy. Were we to allow but 100 ms. inland, here extends a country of 300,000 sq. ms.—room for nations—but, as yet, in the far greater part abandoned to barbarism. Liberia we have alluded to, and may observe that 400 ms. more eastward brings us to a small colony belonging to Holland, chief town Elmina; adjoining to which is one not much more extensive, belonging to Great Britain, which is again joined to another directly cut by the meridian of London, appertaining to Denmark, called, from its principal town, Christiansburg. With a short interval beyond the Danish again appears Badagry, another small British colony. In the extreme bottom of the gulf of Guinea and of the bight of Biafra, the Dutch hold another small settlement, opposite to which Spain possesses the island of Fernando Po. With these very limited exceptions, barbarism reigns over a country capable of sustaining 50,000,000 of human beings.

Southern or lower Guinea presents a very similar aspect with the preceding. Its mountains appear to be in part granitic, and in part composed of marble and porphyry. These mountains appear to belong to a great system, extending from north to south, and which are known in lower Guinea under the Portuguese names of Serra de Sal, Serra de Salnitre, and Serra de Cristal. Towards the north, a chain is found, and known as the Serra Complida. To the east of these mountains spread, as some state, the great table land of Dembo, which appears to have a height of from 6,000 to 7,000 feet. The general range of lower Guinea is about SSE., and, if extended to the Kong, reaches from 7° of north to 20° of south latitude, or through nearly 1,900 ms. The breadth, inland, is arbitrary, in our state of knowledge; but if assumed at 300 ms. for a mean, the area would then be 567,000 sq. ms.—a surface rather more than equalling that of the united area of France, Spain, Italy, and Switzerland, and divided into two nearly equal parts by south latitude, reaching the Atlantic coast about the mouth of the great river of Congo.

Beyond the mountains of lower Guinea, as already stated, extends an immense and elevated table land, as yet unexplored to an extent scarcely credible. Along the equator, through nearly 30° of longitude, or we may say 2,000 ms., and northwardly to the Kong mountains, or N. lat. 7°, nothing is known which deserves the name of science. There spreads 1,000,000 of sq. ms. a blank to human knowledge. Passing the equator, the unknown regions narrow, as does the continent advancing southwardly. Enough is however known to decide us to regard the desert as extending to S. lat. 25°, or upwards of 1,700 ms.; the breadth varies from 2,000 ms. along the equator to about 500 on S. lat. 25°; the mean breadth underrated at 1,000 ms. Thus we discover the fearful fact, that of southern Africa at least 1,700,000 is arid desert, or, including the desert region between the equator and Kong mountains, (567,000 sq. ms.) the southern Sahara of Africa, amounts to 2,317,000 sq. ms.; and, again, if to this amount we add 2,200,000 sq. ms. included in the northern Sahara, we find that of Africa the prodigious surface of upwards of 4,500,000 sq. ms. are desert wastes of sand and rock. But to return towards the Atlantic coast, and into lower Guinea.

The interior mountain system alluded to above gives source from its western valleys and flanks to several rivers, the principal of which are the Zaire and Coenza. The Zaire, or river of Congo, called by the natives along its banks near the ocean, "Moianzi-Euzaddi," or the river which swallows all others, or "Zembere," or the mother of waters. Of this river, having every appearance of great length of course, and of draining a very extensive region, only the lower part of its course is known, and that not very accurately. From the configuration of that part of Africa, it would appear that, as in North America, along the western slope, two lateral systems of mountains range in some degree in conformity to the ocean coast; and we may indulge the conjecture that the Zaire, similar to the Columbia, is formed by rivers flowing along mountain valleys towards each other until uniting, when the collected waters turn towards the ocean, traversing the intermediate mountain chains. The source of the Coanza is also unknown, but, as far as explored, is known to traverse the mountain chains and fall into the Atlantic ocean about 250 ms. southward of the mouth of the Zaire, and into the bay beyond Point Palmeirinha, and at S. lat. 9° 30'.

The Atlantic coast of lower Guinea is channelled by innumerable other rivers, some, indeed, of no small size and course, but their imperfect hydrography and our limits proscribe their particular notice. Near the coast, the surface is generally marshy, but, ascending the rivers, the land rises, and is of exuberant fertility. The productions are nearly all of the vegetable kingdom suitable to tropical climates. Metallic matter also abounds—iron and copper in particular; but there, as in all other parts of Africa, Egypt excepted, the wealth provided by nature is in great part dead to man. But the immense extent and capabilities of western Africa are of too high importance to be passed over slightly; we therefore return to a general view in regard to the political condition of the three sections we have been reviewing physically.

Senegambia, the section nearest Europe and the United States, first demands our attention. This country is divided into numerous States, of more or less consequence. Of these, two are remarkable by their form of government, which we may call theocratico-oligarchic. These are Fouta-Dialo, or Fouta-Jallou, and Fouta-Toro. The former, at least nominally, crosses the whole breadth of Senegambia from the Sahara, over the sources of the Senegal, Gambia, and Rio Grande. Timbo, Tembo, or Teembo, situated near N. lat. 10°, and 10° W. of London, is the principal capital of this State, and stands about 300 ms. very nearly due north from Monrovia, in Liberia. The present Fouta-Jallo was anciently inhabited by the Dialonkes, who were conquered by the Foulahs, from which, no doubt, the compound name Fouta-Dialo. The mixture has formed one of the most industrious and otherwise advanced of the African central nations. The religion of the country is Mahometan, and the Government a mixed monarchy and democratic theocracy. On Senex's map of Africa, and occupying the space now marked as Bambara, is sketched at great extent a kingdom thus entitled: "Foule-Guailou, or the original country of the Foules." Query: Did not the two names Foulahs and Fellatahs come from the same root?

Fouta-Toro is in great part bounded to the northward by the Senegal, though some of its dependencies are beyond that river, towards the Sahara. Tjiloga, Sedo, and Canel, are its chief towns. Sedo stands at N. lat. 15° 20', and about 250 ms. SE. by E. of St. Louis, in Senegal. That part of Fouta called Seratik is inhabited by Foulahs. The Mahometan is the general religion of the whole country.

Boudou is a kingdom to the southeastward of Fouta-Toro, having Fatteconda, on the Faleme river, for capital. "It is," say the French geographers, "only a lengthened forest, with small openings and villages, from distance to distance." Fatteconda is situated about 500 ms. SE. by E. from St. Louis, in Senegal.

The Yolofs, as written by the French, Jaloffs, on the English maps, spread westward from Fouta-Toro to Cape Verd, and are so placed, and under nearly the same names, by Senex. The range of this people is northward from the Gambia, and they are politically divided into several petty States. Immediately west of Fouta-Toro comes Ouariou, or Ouarkhokh, or Quamcorre, named from its chief town.

Cayor, or Damel, spreading eastward from and including Cape Verd, is perhaps the most important of the Negro kingdoms of Senegambia. The inhabitants are Jaloffs and Mahometans; capital, Cayor, or Embohl.

Saloum on the Gambia, Barrah on the same river, Galam on the Senegal and Faleme rivers, and from the latter northwardly towards the Sahara, Kouniakary, and, still more eastward, Kaarta, are small States of Senegambia, too little known and otherwise of too little importance to deserve further notice. But the States of Ludemar, or Ludamar, Bambouk, Dentilia, or Medina, and Achanti, deserve some attention.

Ludamar, bounded north by the great desert, and south by Bambara and Kaarta, is the northeastern section of Senegambia. The people are a mixture of Foulahs and savage Moors. The Foulahs have the art of forging and fabricating iron; the Moors are robbers. The primary importance of Ludamar arises from its position on a caravan route from Senegal to Tombuctoo.

Bambouk spreads between the Senegal and Faleme rivers, and inhabitants Mandingoes. The country is mountainous, and rich in auriferous alluvion. Staple commodity gold dust. The principal depots of that metal are, Bambouk, (the capital,) Rakkon, Hambia, Hombadyria, and Semayla. Bambouk stands at about N. lat. $14^{\circ} 30'$, lon. 11° W. of London, and about 500 ms. NNE. from Sierra Leone.

Dentilia is comprised between the Faleme and Gambia. Its industrious inhabitants are employed in the collection of gold dust and forging and working of iron. Medina, or Houilli, on the right bank of the Gambia, presents a great variety of plains and fertile hills and dales, with fine forests. The kingdom of Zani, to the west of the preceding, extends along the Gambia. At Pisanía, on that river, the English have a factory.

Our range has now brought us to the common borders of Senegambia and Sierra Leone. An immense but imperfectly known country comprises the extreme southern Senegambia, and possesses different provincial subdivisions—as Timani, Kamba, Kouranko, Soulima, or Soulimana, and others still more obscure. Kouranko, watered by the Rokelle river, spreads northeastward towards the western nucleus of the Kong mountains. The Kourankonians, though reputed less advanced in civilization than the Mandingoes, inhabit, nevertheless, numerous not inelegant villages, and exhibit no mean share of talent in the manufacture of iron. The Kourankonians and Mandingoes are evidently, from similarity of manners and language, the same people. The Mahometan religion prevails in Kouranko.

The kingdom of Soulima, or Soulimana, is one of the most polished in the vicinity of Sierra Leone. Falaba, situated 150 ms. from the coast, is the capital, the population of which, according to Major Laing, amounts to 6,000 souls.

Cape Mount, in Liberia, brings us into upper Guinea, as does Ganguin, both ranked as Negro kingdoms of considerable extent; but the limits of which, inland, are as yet undiscovered by civilized nations.

Achantee, or Ashantee, is, however, entering upper Guinea, the first State, and far the most important. It is not one of recent formation. In our most modern maps, English and French, Ashantee is laid down south of the Kong mountains and of N. lat. 10° , and traversed by the meridians of London and Paris. Exactly in the same position Senex has dotted off and named the "Kingdom of Asiante, or Inta." Of this State, the French geographers observe: "Achanti is one of the most powerful kingdoms of the western region of Africa; they count on about 20 tributary States, from which the paramount State has received the title of empire; superficial extent near 1,800 sq. leagues, (14,000 sq. Eng. ms. ;) pop. 1,000,000. According to some travellers, the number of women doubles that of men. If some traditions are to be relied on, as reported by Bowditch, the Ashantees derived their origin from ancient migratory colonies from Abyssinia and Egypt. Their physical character, in fact, approaches much nearer the race of Ethiopian than that of the Negro, properly so called. Their religion is a mixture of Mahometanism and gross idolatry, to Fetichism. Notwithstanding the influence gained over them by their Mahometan mollahs and Christian missionaries, they still practise human sacrifices. The people of this country are industrious, and make cotton-cloth their staple. The Government a military monarchy, controlled by aristocratic institutions." Coomassie, or Coumassie, the capital, is situated at N. lat. 7° , and $2^{\circ} 20'$ W. of London. Population estimated at 18,000, but, according to Bowditch, at certain times, devoted to great feasts, more than 100,000 persons are collected. This city, about 150 ms. inland from Christiansburg, the capital of the Danish colony, is the entrepôt of an extensive commerce, and, of course, rendezvous of a great number of merchants and travellers. Without any very precise limits east or west, the Ashantee country extends from the Atlantic coast to the Kong mountains, and in longitude from about the meridian to 7° or 8° W. of London.

Yarriba, a powerful kingdom, follows Ashantee eastward, and extends inland from the slave coast of Guinea, towards Soudan, and far into the intricate chains of the Kong system. Katunga, the capital, is laid down by both French and English geographers near the Niger, but westward of that river, 300 ms. northeastward of the British settlement of Badagry, at N. lat. 9° , lon. 6° E. of London. Of this kingdom little is known, though, with Dahomey, its tributary, it extends eastward from the Ashantee country, or river Volta, to the Lagos or western side of the delta of the Quorra or Niger. The physical character of the coast already noticed is continued low along the sea or ocean shore, but rising gradually inland.

To the eastward of Dahomey and of the Quorra extends the kingdom of Benin, but with limits very imperfectly ascertained. Benin, the capital, and from which the country is named, is situated on the Formosa river, or western outlet of the Quorra, at about N. lat. $5^{\circ} 30'$, and 5° E. of London. This kingdom includes the delta of the Quorra, and perhaps far inland towards the Kong mountains, and with it terminates the long eastern range of coast from Cape Palmas, and brings us into the northern part of lower Guinea, or Congo. With the bight of Biafra, or extreme eastern bay of the gulf of Guinea, the African coast turns to a direction so nearly southward as to gain but 4° of E. lon. in 22° of lat. This lengthened region is divided into four large sections—Loango on the N., and extending to the Zaire river; Congo proper, extending to the Coanza river; Angola, between the Coanza and Benguela rivers; and on the southward, Benguela.

Loango proper commences at Cape Lopez, about S. lat. 1° , and reaches to the mouth of the Zaire, or nearly 500 ms. As in the case of all the political sections of Africa from the Sahara, clouds and darkness hang over the interior. From Loango proper may be distinguished the tributary States of Mayomba, Cacongá, and En-Goyo. Loango proper and tributary States are supposed to sustain a pop. of 600,000 souls. Boualia, or, as more commonly called, Banza-Loango, or as still more frequently Loango, is the capital, and is situated about 3 ms. from the Atlantic coast, at S. lat. 4° 30', lon. 12° E. of London. The province of Mayomba extends northwestward of Loango, whilst En-Goyo lies to the southward, extending to the Zaire.

Passing the Zaire brings us into Congo, bounded on the S. by the river Danda, and inland by the sandy deserts and high mountains of Angola; and eastward by the mountains of the Sun, and by a country scarcely known, inhabited by savage tribes. Congo extends along the coast about 200 ms.; and what may be regarded as its more civilized breadth inland about the same. Within these limits, the soil is of surpassing fertility. St. Salvador, by the Portuguese, Banza, by the natives, is the capital, and is situated about 200 ms. inland, and NE. by E. from the mouth of the Zaire. Lat. 5° 30' S., lon. 15° E. of London. The position of this city is on a mountain, and boasted of as one of the most healthy in the universe. Congo is divided into the provinces of Bamba, Batta, Sandi, Pango, Pemba, and a part of Sogno. Sogno, or Sonho, to the west of St. Salvador, between the Zaire, Ambriz, and the ocean; Bamba, on the coast between the rivers Ambriz and Loz, to the S. of Sogno and E. of Pemba; Pemba, in the centre, is drained and fertilized by the rivers Lelunda, Kai, and Ambriz; Batta spreads eastward of Pemba; Panga has Batta to the W., and the mountains of the Sun on the S.; on the E. by the river Barbeli; and on the N. by Sardi; and finally Sardi, northeastward of St. Salvador, is bounded N. by the Zaire, on the southeast by the provinces of Batta and Panga, and northeast by the kingdom of Macoco and the Crystalline Hills. It ought to be noted that these positions, given by Malte Brun, are illustrated much more correctly, or at least they answer more consistently to the map of Senex than they do to any modern map we have seen.

Between the mouth of Danda river and the bay of Longa extends the coast of Angola, bounded on the E. by Matemba, the Matamba of Senex, and on the S. by Benguela. This country is very mountainous, and defectively cultivated. In lat. it extends from 8° to 11° S., and on it little rain falls from May to October, and its dry and stony mountains are very deficient in springs. Salt, wax, and honey, are its principal productions. To general sterility there are some exceptions. The chief city, Loando-San-Paolo, is also the capital of the Portuguese territories in Western Africa. It is situated at the bottom of a gulf, and on the S. side of the mouth of the river Bengo, and opposite to the island of Loando. Nearly in the middle of the seacoast of Angola disembogues the large volume of the Coanza river; a stream which, like the Zaire, has, except near its mouth, yet to be explored. The city of St. Paul's stands at 9° 40' S., lon. 14° 30' E.

Benguela is the last and most southern of the great political sections of Western Africa, and along the coast extends from the river Cubegi to Cape Negro, or from 11° to 16° 30' S.; its eastern limit, the river of Cumani, or Cunbinga, a branch if not the main stream of the Coanza. On the S. the boundaries of Benguela are the mountains and deserts of Caffraria. Its hilly and rugged interior abounds with, and feeds and conceals innumerable elephants, rhinoceroses, zebras, antelopes, gnus, and other less ferocious animals, whilst the feline and canine species abound, and the rivers swarm with the hippopotami. St. Philip, of Benguela, is the Portuguese capital, and stands on or near the coast, at S. lat. 12° 20'

Lubolo, Quissama, Rimba, Scela, upper and lower Bemba, Tamba, Bamba, and some others, are named as provincial divisions of Benguela. Lubolo is an eastern province between the rivers Gango and Dos Ramos; upper and lower Bemba are also eastern, and traversed by the river Guavoro; Quissama is northern, having Rimba S. and Lubolo E.

In our view of central Africa, or Negroland, westward of Abyssinia, with all due allowance for protrusions of desert, we found the habitable surface to amount to 1,760,000 sq. ms., including Senegambia. In upper Guinea our estimate was 300,000 sq. ms. as capable of dense population. Lower Guinea, including Loango, Congo, Angola, and Benguela, comprises a distance, from the mountains of the Moon to Cape Negro, of about 1,600 ms; the breadth inland at a mean of 200 ms. would therefore include an area of 320,000 sq. ms.

Thus we find, that in northern, central, and Western Africa, there exists a habitable surface more extensive than in all Europe.

Southern Africa, or Cape region.—The region designated by this head is bounded on the north-west by Congo, or southern Guinea; north by central deserts or countries very imperfectly known; northeast by the Portuguese colonies on that coast; and west, south, and east, by the Atlantic, Southern, and Indian oceans. It is or may be divided into three sections: Caffraria, or the country of the Caffres; the Hottentot country; and the once Dutch, now English Cape colony. In lat. these three regions extend from 15° to 35° S., and in lon. from 13° 30' to 35° E. The form approaches to a triangle. Greatest length from the north-western angle on Benguela, 1,400 ms., to the southeastern coast, at Cape Natal; area about 1,200,000 sq. ms. But of this large space, from all credible accounts, more than three-fourths is arid desert. Along the Atlantic coast, from the southern border of Benguela, lat. 17°, to the mouth of Orange river, lat. 28° S., or through 11° of lat., a sandy and rocky desert extends to the ocean, which is only the boundary on that side of the immense interior deserts of Caffraria. "The whole of this coast was visited in detail," says Malte Brun, vol. 4, p. 338, "more than twenty years ago, by an English expedition, with a view of selecting a place for transportation; they did not find one spot favorable for cultivation, or which did not appear too wretched even for criminals. Water that can be drank is very scarce; the rivers (bays!)

have at their mouths only brackish water. Verdure to be seen only in partial situations."

The eastern coast of Caffraria, along the Indian ocean, is of a very different character, deeply and frequently indented by promontories and bays; into the latter, also, numerous rivers are poured. One of these streams, the Espiritu Santo, pouring its waters into the Bay de la Goa, at S. lat. 25° , is of considerable magnitude. A chain of mountains, probably a continuation northeastwardly of the Snow mountains of the Cape, appears to extend through Caffraria at a distance of from 100 to 200 ms. from the coast of the Indian ocean. From this chain issue the rivers flowing eastward, and to one stream of comparative great magnitude and length of course, the Orange river flowing westward, and finally discharged into the Atlantic ocean, after having passed over by general course along the mean lat. of 30° , 11° of lon., or about 700 ms.

Northwardly, however, of the basin of Orange river, and westward of the mountains already alluded to, as far as discovered by civilized men, Caffraria is a lonely desert, with all the common features of the northern Sahara. The entire surface of Caffraria amounts to at least 980,000 sq. ms., of which it is probable not one-sixth part will admit dense population, and most part must forever remain desolate wastes.

Though in our geographical works a difference is made and marked on maps as well as described in words, between the countries inhabited by the Hottentots and Caffres, we have no definite limits placed before us to point out their respective boundaries. When discovered, and when colonized by Europeans, the Hottentots were the general if not the only inhabitants of extreme southern Africa. Under their respective heads the reader will see the particular notice of each. In this place we can only observe, that ever since European colonization was established on southern Africa, the range of the Hottentots has undergone progressive restriction, and the numbers of that people constant diminution. In strictness, there now remains no country, at least southward of S. lat. 30° , or about the mean range of the Snowy mountains, which can be assigned to the Hottentots. Beyond those mountains, towards and perhaps in places beyond the southern tropic, and particularly along or near Orange river, roam or reside different tribes of that nation, such as the great and little Namaquas, Koranas, or Kora Hottentots, Gonaquas, and on their northern extreme the Dammaras. The Boschmen, on the sources of the Orange river, evidently a separated stem from the parent stock, are a still more brutish and degraded people than the other Hottentots. Their excessively meager frames render the genuine Hottentot physical characteristics extremely prominent in the Boschmen, or, as they are termed in their own language, Saabs. It is an arbitrary estimate, but as correct as our document will admit, to state the separate Hottentot country at about 200,000 sq. ms. along the mean latitude of 27° S. The population it is vain to give at any amount. In some places their kraals, or villages, appear numerous; but when the whole great aggregate area of their country is brought into view, then, indeed, must be the distributive population of a people barbarous below the ordinary level of even African civilization, and occupying regions presenting all the stern asperities of African geography.

The territories of the Cape Colony comprise an area of 120,000 sq. ms., between latitudes 30° and $34^{\circ} 50'$ S., and longitudes 18° and 28° E. of London; bounded inland by the Snowy mountains, or countries of Hottentots and Boschmen, west by the Atlantic ocean, south by the Southern and southeast by the Indian ocean. Of the space, however, it is probable that much more than one-half is desert. Under the Dutch, it was divided into three large provinces or districts: Stellenbosch on the northwest, Graaf-Reynet northeast, and Zwelendam south. There were still smaller subdivisions. The Cape Colony, (now British,) peopled by 240,000 very mixed inhabitants, is a very important position.

The Cape Colony will be more particularly noticed under its proper head; we may here merely observe, that it is physically a country of mountain chains, extending generally east and west, though, towards the extreme east and west, inflecting with the opposing coast. The rivers rise within and flow either along the mountain valleys, or turn abruptly, and rushing through mountain gorges, are lost in their respective recipients. Olifant's river rises in Stellenbosch, and, by a general western course, falls into the Atlantic ocean. The Berg, or Mountain river, southwardly of Olifant's and northward of Table bay, falls into the bay of Saldanha. The principal river of extreme southern Africa is Gaurentz river, rising in eastern Stellenbosch and western Graafreynet. The remote fountains of this river are in the southern valleys of the Snowy mountains, and, by a general southern course directly through and not far from right angles to the mountains, falls into the Southern ocean, a little west of Flesh bay, and about 240 ms. a little S. of E. from Cape Town. From Flesh bay, the coast, with no deep indentings, pursues a nearly eastern course of about 250 ms., into which no river of consequence enters until we reach the mouth of Groot or Camtoos river, falling into the Southern ocean immediately west of the southern cape of Algoa bay. Groot river rises in the Snowy mountains, opposite to the extreme sources of the Orange river, and, pursuing a general comparative SSE. course of about 300 ms., crosses Graafreynet, and enters the Southern ocean about 700 ms. almost exactly E. of Cape Town. With Algoa bay and cape the African coast inflects to NE. by E., and continues in that direction about 200 ms., to Point Natal. In this distance, which may be regarded as along the Indian ocean, two rivers of considerable length and volume have their outlets: these are Sunday river and Great Fish river, both having their most remote sources in the same mountains with the heads of the Orange. The general course is a very little E. of S., and comparative length of course 600 ms. With the basin of Great Fish river terminates the Cape Colony. This stream has its most distant source in S. lat. 31° , and, flowing thence by a comparative course of 700 ms. nearly parallel to the course of Sunday river, falls into the Indian ocean about 9° of lon., or, by intermediate road, 600 ms. a little N. of E. from Cape Town. It is in the valleys of these rivers and along their main branches that have been formed the principal settlements of the Cape Colony.

With the basin of Great Fish river passed over, we enter Caffraria, by some geographers, though the limits here, as well as elsewhere, are very indefinite. "Caffraria," say the French geographers, "comprise the most extended region of southern Africa. They give to it a length of 1,200 and breadth of 600 ms., and divide it into four sections: Caffraria proper, country of Betjouanas, of the Barrolos, and Monomotapa."

Caffraria proper, or the Natal coast of the Portuguese, extends along and between the Snowy mountains and the Indian ocean, from the mouth of the river Kieskamma, S. lat. 33°, to the bay of Lourenzo, Marquez, or Lagoa; St. E-sprit of the Portuguese, S. lat. 26°, by a general ocean distance of 700 ms. It is a coast affording no deep harbors. It is inhabited by several tribes, as the Kousas on the southwest, Hambounas, Tambouquis, or Ma-Thimba, Abbatouanas, and Madouanas. These tribes are followed by the Betjouanas, who are also divided into numerous tribes, differing amongst each other in language, customs, and manners. In fact, it is rather a load on a page to name these obscure, barbarous, and of course unimportant tribes; we therefore proceed to eastern Africa, and close our view of that continent.

Eastern region of Africa.—Here, again, we are left to adopt an arbitrary limit, as in fact, if guided altogether by relative position, eastern Caffraria ought to fall under the preceding head. In the names and political boundaries, the maps and verbal descriptions are excessively discrepant. But commencing eastern Africa with Delagoa bay, S. lat. 26°, we have before us a stretch of coast extending, without including bays, of 3,000 ms. to the gulf of Aden. Politically, this greatly extended coast is divided into Mozambique, or Portuguese territory, extending 1,300 ms. from the bay of Lagoa to Cape Delgado, S. lat. 10°; and thence the territories of the Imaum of Muscat, extending 1,700 ms. to the gulf of Aden and Cape Guardafui. Inland, the country is very little known, even in the rear of the Portuguese settlements, dating backwards upwards of 430 years. As far as known, "north of Orange river lies the country of the great Namaquas, which, to about lat. 26° S. and lon. 19° E., is watered by the tributary streams of Fish and Orange rivers; but northwards of the confluents of the Orange lies the great southern Sahara, extending probably to the equator," or, as likely, to near the mountains of the Moon. As far as explored, the southern has all the general features of the northern desert. In our descriptions, we shall be restricted to the coast countries.

Inhambane is the name given to the country between Lagoa bay and Cape Corrientes, and brings us into Portuguese east Africa. Sena, or Mozambique, includes the whole coast to Cape Delgado, but is divided into several provincial sections. The extreme southern of these provinces is Botorgo, or Sofala. Sofala, in Arabic, signifies low country, and extends northward to the Zambezi river. This river, from all we have yet learned, is the third in volume of the African rivers, but, like the Congo and Coanza on the western coast, the remote sources are yet involved in doubt. As laid down on our best maps, it rises in a country named Cazemba, near the middle of the continent, on the mean lat. of 15° S. and 25° E. of London; flowing first northwardly, but curving round by an immense sweep of 800 ms., it assumes a general eastern course of 700 ms., and falls into the Mozambique channel. The wide delta, numerous mouths, and annual overflowings, all prove that the Zambezi belongs to the first class of rivers. About 300 ms. above its mouth, this river, by enormous cataracts, breaks through the Lupata mountains. The height of its inundations are in April. This great river drains the still in some measure shadowy countries of Cazemba, Changamera, Mocaranga, and Maravi. Monomotapa, or Beni-Motapa, lies behind Sofala, and drained also by Zambezi, but too little known to admit specific description. The city of Mozambique, from which the country derives its name, is situated at S. lat. 15° 9', lon. 40° 46' E. of London.

The coast of Mozambique presents every where dangerous reefs and shoals, with innumerable small islands. The rivers, as they, with the exception of Zambezi, rise in the Lupata, or Picos Fragosos mountains, nor far inland, have wide and shallow mouths. The port of Mozambique, though difficult of entrance, is safe for such vessels as suit with its depth.

Cape Delgado, S. lat. 10° 9', is a very important political as well as geographical point, and seems to have been so in the former intent long previous to the arrival of the Portuguese in the beginning of the 15th century. It determines the northern limit of Mozambique and southern of Zanguebar, Zangues, Zingues, or Zindges, for the Arabic name is thus variously written. The same point now separates the Portuguese territories from those of the Imaum of Muscat; therefore, we may regard the residue of eastern Africa as appertaining to one sovereignty; and, advancing from south to north, first comes Quiloa, and thence Zanzibar proper, Mombaze, Melinda, Brava, Magadoxa, and Ajan, or Azania.

Quiloa is a limited territory, of about 170 ms., between Mozambique and Zanzibar. Quiloa, the capital, is situated on an island at S. lat. 8° 27', and lon. 39° 40' E. of London. The interior is a country of forests.

Zanzibar follows Quiloa, and has either derived its name from or has given it to the finest and largest of the small coast islands of Africa. This island is about 50 ms. long and 14 or 15 wide, and lies in lat. S., between 5° 40' and 6° 26'. It is fruitful, well cultivated, and, from very recent information, excessively inhabited. It has a good and much frequented port. To the northward of Zanzibar, and 50 or 60 ms. distant, is the island of Pemba, of about half the extent, but said to be still more productive than the former.

"Here ends altogether modern information," says Malte Brun, speaking of the eastern coast of Africa, from Pemba to Cape Guardafui. "Is the city of Mombaza," asks the same author, "situated on an island formed by two branches of a river, still in possession of the Arabs of Muscat, who, in 1698, drove out the Portuguese?" We can answer, that on Senex's map it is thus placed; and whether or not the Arabs of Muscat have or have not held that city through all the intermediate time, they do so at present. The latitude of Mombaza, as given by Malte Brun, is 4° 4' S., lon. 38° 12' E. of Paris, or 40° 32' E. of London.

“The cities of Melinda, Lamo, and Pate, appear to be situated on the delta of a great river, called Quilimancy, which appears to be the same as that, which, under the name of Zebee, descends from the mountains of Abyssinia.”—Malte Brun, vol. 4, p. 407.

Here I have a remark to repeat, which was made in another place, that the preceding answers much more exactly to the map of Senex than to any modern map which I have seen. The river mentioned in the preceding is represented by Senex as issuing from the mountains of the Moon, in the mean lat. of 7° N., and thence named Zebee, north of the equator, and Quilimancy southward of that line, is brought into the Indian ocean at nearly 4° S. lat. The modern maps throw doubt upon the course of this stream, by representing it by dots northward of the equator. There is, however, not much reason to doubt its continuous existence and restoration to science, by means of future discovery. Along this coast, when first visited by the Portuguese, the people were found civilized, manufacturing, and commercial; so they remain; and their monarch, the Imaum of Muscat, has sent over to the United States the first Mahometan merchant vessel which has ever crossed the Atlantic ocean.

But behind these maritime and civilized people roam the almost savage tribes of Mosegueyos, Maracates, and others still more remote. Directly westwards of Quilimancy, and of the river of that name, Senex places a people whom he names and characterizes “the Mosse-Guales, Kafres, very barbarous.” To the north, again, of the river Quilimancy, the same geographer places and names another interior nation thus: “People called Maracates, who possess a great extent in this country, till within two days’ journey of the sea—Mahometans.”

With the mouth of Quilimancy river passed, the African coast, which extends in a general northern direction from Mozambique, now turns to a near northeasterly course, and, though under other sectional names, is known as the coast of Magadoxa. The city of that name is situated near the sea, and is the capital, and, following the general oriental custom, gives name to the country to an extent rather vaguely limited. It stands at lat. 2° 6' N., and in lon. 45° 30' E. of London.

It appears from recent information that the country in the vicinity at least of the capital is watered by a large river, and abounds in grain, fruits, and cattle. This again corresponds with Senex, who has placed the city of Magadoxa at the mouth and to the westward of a river which he derives from the interior mountains 400 or 500 ms. to the north-westward of its outlet; and along which is noted, “the river Magadoxa, called by the Arabs ‘the Nile of Mocadesson,’ because of its annual overflowing.”

The name of Magadoxa appears to be derived from the name Machidas, mentioned by Abyssinian writers. Malte Brun calls the country “kingdom of Magadoxa, or Makadscou,” and closes his brief account of it by observing: “It is probable that the Machidas, mentioned by the Abyssinian histories, are no others than the Makadscou.”

Senex, on his map, has placed northward of the Maracates, and westward of his river Magadoxa, the “kingdom of Machida, a powerful nation, the king of which is of the line of the Ethiopian kings, with whom he is always at war. They are Mahometans.”

From the tenor of both ancient and modern maps and records, it appears certain that the productive region of the Nile extends to and is continued to the southward of the Kong mountains, in a direction a little east of south, to the Indian ocean. Down this southern slope of the Kong, two large and some smaller rivers have their courses. The two main streams are the Zebee and Magadoxa of Senex. The western of these, the Zebee of Senex, is the Quilimancy, or Melinda, or Ozee, of modern geography, and the eastern the Webbei, or Webbe, of modern geography. Senex represents a river by name Jubo, between the two former, and entering the Indian ocean directly under the equator. The French geographers, with analogy in favor of their representation, draw the Jubo also from the Kong, and all the maps before me have its mouth laid down under the equator.

In latitude, this slope, which might be called that of Magadoxa, extends through 11°, or from 3° S. to 8° N., equal to about 750 ms.; the mean breadth cannot fall short of 350 ms., exceeding an area of 260,000 sq. ms.; very considerably exceeding the superficies of the Pyrenean or Spanish peninsula. What a field for future discovery! The coast alone, from Melinda to Magadoxa, upwards of 600 ms., general course, would well deserve an exploring expedition.

Ajan, Azania, or Adel, are all general names of the African coast, from that of Magadoxa to Cape Guardafui, distance by general course about 700 ms., and is thus described by Malte Brun: “The coast of Ajan presents to the eye of the navigator only a desolate mass of rocks and sand, where occasionally may be seen a wandering ostrich. In proceeding round Cape Guardafui, the eastern point of Africa, the coast puts on a less barren appearance.”

African islands—Madagascar, Comoro group, Zanzibar, Pemba, Socotra, Seychelle group, Mascarenhas group, &c., on the eastern side; St. Helena, Ascension, St. Thomas, Fernando Po, Cape Verd, Canary group, and the group of Madeira, west.—In pursuing our specific description, we commence on the extreme northeastward with Socotora, or So-

* It would be vain to attempt even an approximate estimate of the population of these regions. We may observe, however, that if supposed to be over the whole surface even one person to the square mile, the aggregate would then be 2,210,000, and they can hardly be less.

cotra. This island lies about 150 ms. NE. by E. of Cape Guardafui, with the small island of Curia in the intervening channel; lat. $12^{\circ} 30'$, lon. 54° E. of London. It is about 100 ms. long from SE. to NW., mean width 20 ms., and area 2,000 sq. ms. A chain of naked and rugged mountains composes its eastern border, whilst another still more elevated extends along its centre, giving to the whole island a stern and arid aspect, without running water or vegetation. Concealed by these asperities lie some fertile valleys, abounding in dates, aloes, and other plants. It is inhabited by Arabs, with their Mussulman subjects or slaves; the Bediognes, ancient inhabitants, who are Jacobite Christians; and by mountain savages. Tamarida, on the eastern shore, is its capital.

It is very remarkable, that, spreading between that part of the coast of Indostan northward of the Laccadive islands, and the coast of Africa from Zanzibar to Socotra, and thence continued north-eastward to the coast of Mekran, or Beloochistan, extends a sea of 3,000 ms. in length, from SW. to NE., and exceeding a mean breadth of 1,000 ms., the area exceeding 3,000,000 of sq. ms. This sea comprises the northwestern part of the Indian ocean, and with the Red sea, or Arabian gulf, and the Persian gulf, as embranchements. Except the inlets to these gulfs, this sea is bounded on the NW. by the African coast, N. by the southern coast of Arabia and that of Makran, NE. by Indostan, and SE. by irregular groups of islands, such as Comoro, Seychelles, Chagos, Maldives, and Laccadives. Independent of innumerable small islands along and near the coasts, the sea we have specified is remarkable for its depth and destitution of islands. It was the Erythrean sea of antiquity, and its northern part the Arabian sea of modern geography. The two small though important islands of Pemba and Zanzibar have been already noticed, and may be found also under their proper heads.

At an interval of 16° of lat., or about 1,100 ms. nearly due south of Socotra, rises from the ocean an extensive archipelago of small islands and reefs, called by the general name of Seychelle islands, but divided by nature into sub-groups. Seychelle proper, or Mahe islands, to the NE.; Admiralty islands in the middle, and Providence SW. These groups, says Malte Brun, "discovered by the Portuguese, are even at this period far from well defined." Such is the case, no doubt, as to these islands individually, but it is only necessary to cast a glance on a general map of the Indian ocean, to be convinced that the Seychelle archipelago is the continuation of the same ridge of which the superior height forms Madagascar; the whole extending with a general conformity to the opposing coast of Africa.

"Many small islands little known, amongst which are the Seven Brothers, Diego, Garcia, Adu, and Candu, reaching from the Seychelles to the Maldives, and even beyond the meridian of Ceylon, in the direction of Sumatra. They are all inhabited. To the SW. of the Seychelles are many small islands and extensive reefs of rock uniting this archipelago to Madagascar and Africa. Thus, that part of the Indian ocean that extends from the coast of Zanguebar to that of Malabar, and from Arabia to the Seychelles and Maldives, forms a kind of separate sea, or, it may be so called, a Mediterranean sea."—Malte Brun, vol. 4, p. 421.

This Mediterranean is closed on the southwest between Cape Delgado, in Africa, and Cape Ambro, the northern point of Madagascar, by the fine archipelago of Comoro. With this group commences the Mozambique channel; they are four in number: Anjuan, or Joanna, but more properly Hinzuouan, Angaziza, or Great Comora, Mouhilly, Mohilla, or Molale, and Mayotte, or Mayotta. The most frequented and most important is Hinzuouan, having commodious havens and watering places; its aspect highly picturesque, with hills and mountains shaded by lofty trees, and painted as a carpet of green. Matchedon, on the north side, is its capital and best port, and is situated at S. lat. $11^{\circ} 18'$, lon. $43^{\circ} 16'$ E. of London, and about 300 ms. SE. of Cape Delgado.

Angaziza, or Great Comoro, lies about 70 ms. northwesterly of Anjuan, and is the nearest to the continent of Africa. It is composed of a vast assemblage of mountains, with bases near the sea shore, but uniting in a common summit towards the centre, rising from 6,000 to 7,000 feet above the ocean. It has no road, but many villages. The centre of Great Comoro is about in lat. $11^{\circ} 30'$ S., lon. 43° E. of London.

Mouhilly lies about 15 ms. SW. of Anjuan, and is encompassed by a chain of rocky shelves. It has two small towns.

Mayotte, or Mayotta, is the smallest and most southeasterly of the whole four, and distant from Hinzuouan about 20 ms. It is very difficult of access. Valentine peak, in this island, is in S. lat. $12^{\circ} 54'$, lon. 45° E. of London.

"Situating under a fine sky," says Malte Brun, "the Comoro islands enjoy a very healthy climate. The champaign country every where exhibits the appearance of a luxurious vegetation."

Madagascar, or, as it is supposed, more properly Madecasse, one amongst the largest islands of the earth, next rises before us in passing southeasterly from the Comoros. Madagascar lies between latitudes 12° and 25° S., and in longitude between $43^{\circ} 40'$, and $51^{\circ} 10'$ E. of London. The range of Madagascar is from SSW. to NNE. A direct line from its southern point, Cape St. Mary, to Cape Ambro, on the extreme north, is within an unimportant fraction of 900 ms. It is very near 300 ms. wide where broadest, the whole having a rude approach to an ellipsis, which, were it such, would yield 214,400 sq. ms.; but, allowing for entering curves, this immense island still contains at least a superficies of 200,000 sq. ms., and rendering its surface little, if any, under that of the Spanish peninsula. As this island will be particularly mentioned under its own head, we refer to that article.

Mascarenhas group is traversed by S. lat. 20° , and the westernmost, the island of Bourbon, lies about 450 ms. from the eastern coast of Madagascar. The group comprises three islands—Bourbon, or Reunion, on the SW.; at the distance of 100 ms. northeasterly from Bourbon, Mauritius, or Isle of France; and, lastly, Roderique, nearly east from the Isle of France 400 ms.

The whole island of Bourbon bears traces too strong to doubt its volcanic origin. It is composed of two volcanic mountains and mere selvedges of arable land. The southern mountain still emits smoke, though no destructive volcanic eruptions have marked its history since inhabited by civilized man. St. Denis, on the eastern side of the island, is the capital, and stands at S. lat. $20^{\circ} 51'$, and lon. $55^{\circ} 27'$ E. of London.

The Isle of France, less extensive or fertile than is that of Bourbon, is indebted to its better harbors and roads for a greater importance. The form of this island approaches towards an oval of 30 by 22 ms. The shoals render disembarkation dangerous in foul weather. The interior is mountainous. Port St. Louis, on the western side of the island, is the capital, and is situated at S. lat. $19^{\circ} 41'$, and in lon. 57° E. of London.

The island of Diego Rodriguez has only recently been colonized. It lies in S. lat. $19^{\circ} 40'$, lon. $63^{\circ} 20'$ E.

Advancing from the eastern or Indian ocean side of Africa to the western or side of the Atlantic, one remark intrudes itself: that is, the numerous, or, it might be said, innumerable small coast islands, which border eastern Africa, are singularly contrasted with the very reverse character along the African shores on the Atlantic. The islands in the Atlantic ocean enumerated as African islands are, from relative position, distinct from what are properly called coast islands. These are the group of Tristan d'Acunha, the solitary islands of St. Helena and Ascension; the chain of St. Thomas, Prince's island, and Fernando Po; the archipelagoes of Cape Verd, Canaries, Madeiras, and Azores, or Western islands.

Tristan d'Acunha, of these groups and islands, comes first, if we advance from south to north. This group, four in number, is set down as African by a severe stretch of system, as it lies a little S. of W. upwards of 1,800 ms. from the Cape of Good Hope, at S. lat. $37^{\circ} 20'$, and lon. 12° W. of London. The distance, indeed, from the Tristan d'Acunha islands to the southeastern coast of South America is only about 150 ms. farther than to southwestern Africa. These islands are evidently the peaks of mountains; the principal island rising to the height of 8,326 feet, with verdure half way up, but covered with snow many months of the year. They are mere specks in the vast oceanic desert around. An American, some years since, chose one of them for his abode, and found the soil productive.

St. Helena is, in proportion to its celebrity, the most isolated spot on the earth. Standing in a fearful waste of waters, at S. lat. $15^{\circ} 40'$, and lon. 6° W. of London, the still smaller island of Ascension, 800 ms. to the northwestward, is the nearest land; it is distant 1,200 ms. from the coast of Benguela, in Africa, and upwards of 2,200 ms. from the Brazil coast of America. It is curious that radii from St. Helena of no very unequal length will reach the African coast from Cape Palmas, lying from it nearly due north, to Cape Frio, bearing from it only a little S. of E., embracing a stretch of African coast of about 3,000 ms. See art. St. Helena.

Ascension, "a rock without water, except one fountain, and nearly without vegetation, rises above the waves of the Atlantic ocean, at lat. $7^{\circ} 30'$ S., and lon. 14 W. of London. It is visited by mariners for the innumerable sea turtles which are found reposing amongst its rocks, lavas, and volcanic scoria; and also an established point by which to regulate their reckoning.

The few islands appearing at such wide spaces on its surface, and so minute in themselves, render the destitution of land over the great southern Atlantic striking in a supreme degree.

At the great interval of 1,400 miles northeastward from St. Helena, and towards the recesses of the gulf of Guinea, we reach St. Thomas, the most southwesterly of a chain which would seem to consist of a continuation of a mountain range of the continent of Africa. This insular chain consists of the islands of St. Thomas, Prince's, and Fernando Po.

St. Thomas, or its capital, is situated on the eastern side of the island, at N. lat. $27'$, lon. $6^{\circ} 48'$ E. of London. It is about 33 ms. by 19, and lies 150 ms. W. of the continent of Africa. Its northern part is composed of high mountains, terminating in peaks.

Advancing from St. Thomas in a NNE. direction, towards the bight of Biafra, brings us to Prince's island, with a length of 20 ms. and breadth of 12 ms. N. lat. $1^{\circ} 37'$, lon. $7^{\circ} 40'$ E. of London. Air healthy and agreeable; water excellent; and harbors best in the chain.

Still advancing NNE. upwards of 100 ms., we reach the island of Fernando Po, or Fernao-do-Po, within 50 ms. of the African coast. It derives its name from that of a Portuguese gentleman in the service of Alphonsus V, king of Portugal, who discovered it in 1472, and named it Formosa, or the beautiful. It is about 22 ms. from E. to W., with a breadth of 8 ms.; surface high and woody. Watering place or anchorage, N. lat. $3^{\circ} 28'$, lon. E. from London $7^{\circ} 26'$. It belongs to Spain, while the two former appertain to Portugal. Fernando Po lies directly W. of the Dutch settlement, around the extreme bottom of the bight of Biafra.

Cape Verd, at the wide interval of 2,500 ms. from Fernando Po, next claims our attention amongst the insular African groups. Along the intermediate coast, it is true there are a few small islands, and but a few, and those are of the class of coast islands. The archipelago of Cape Verd commences about 300 ms. very nearly W. of the cape of the same name. A careful comparison of relative range and position leaves little doubt but that the Cape Verd islands are prominences of a continuation of the great central mountain system of Africa. The islands, beside mere rocks, are ten in number: St. Jago, Mayo, Fuego, Bravo, or St. John, Bonavista, Sel, or do Sal, St. Nicholas, Santa Lucia, San Vincenta, and San Antonio.— See article Cape Verd Islands. Porto Praya, in St. Jago, lat. 15° N., lon. $23^{\circ} 30'$ W. of London.

Passing northwardly along the African coast, and doubling Cape Bajador N. lat. $26^{\circ} 12'$, and Cape Juby, we feel as if in the neighborhood of those fortunate islands, so long the empire of fable, and amongst the first and most interesting modern discoveries, or rather re-discoveries. "The celebrated archipelago of the Canary islands," says Malte Brun, "conducts us towards the empire of civilization; it forms almost a part of Europe. Approaching from the S., the first island of this justly celebrated group which comes in view is Forteventura, to the N. of which rises Lanzarota, and to the southwestward of these two comes in succession Grand Canary, Teneriffe, or Santa Cruz, Gomera, Ferro, and Palma. The Canaries, extending in a general direction from E. to W. along the mean lat. of 28° 30', are evidently a continuation of the Atlas mountains. Lon. 15° W. of London passes between Grand Canary and Forteventura.— See article Canary Islands.

The same meridian which we have noticed as passing the Canaries, if extended about 300 ms. northward, reaches the Madeiras, or rather Madeira, as the group contains only one comparatively large island, Madeira proper, and one small, Puerto Santo. Funchal, situated on its southern side, is the capital of Madeira. Lat. 32° 28', N. lon. 17° 6' W. of London.— See article Madeiras.

Five hundred and fifty miles northwestwardly of Madeira rises St. Mary, the most southeastern of an archipelago amid the wide waste of the Atlantic ocean. These islands are known under the general names of Azores, (Hawk islands,) Terceiras, after the largest among them, or Flamandes, or Flamengas, from a colony of Flemings, from whom a part of the inhabitants are descended, the English often designate them relatively the Western islands. As was remarked of Tristan d'Acunha islands, we may say of the Azores, that system only could include the latter under the head of Africa; and again, hardly as far distant from the coast of Portugal, to whom they both nationally and politically belong, as they are from Africa, the Azores are essentially islands of Europe. They are, not including mere rocks or banks, nine in number; which, ranging from southeast to northwestward, and commencing with St. Mary, are St. Mary, St. Michael, Terceira, St. George, Graciosa, Fayal, Pico, Flores, and Corvo. The whole archipelago is divided into three groups: St. Mary's and St. Michael's, about 100 ms. separated to the southeastward, and Flores and Corvo, near 200 ms. to the northwestward of the middle and main group. N. lat. 40° passes a very little northward of Corvo, the most northerly and also the most northwesterly of the Azores, and lon. 30° W. of London, passes the wide strait between the middle and most western groups. The extreme length of the Azore archipelago is about 500 ms. from the eastern point of St. Mary's to the western of Flores. These islands form the prominences of an immense volcanic range. The coasts are generally high and steep, and surfaces covered with volcanic matter.— See article Azores.

In the previous article, under the general head of Africa, we have engrauped the principal features and natural subdivisions of that great continent, and connected with it those insular groups usually regarded as appertaining to it, and have left the political sections, cities, towns, &c., to be treated under their own heads, respectively.

Summary of the physical geography of Africa.

	Sq. ms.
Abyssinia - - - -	320,000
Sennaar and Nubia - - -	400,000
Egypt - - - -	150,000
Tripoli - - - -	269,000

Zanguebar, Melinda, &c. -	200,000
Magadoxo - - -	360,000
Sahara, Southern - - -	2,200,000
Madagascar and other islands -	250,000
Total area -	10,802,000

We may observe, that of the preceding aggregate 4,400,000 sq. ms. are included in the two immense deserts, leaving 6,402,000 as habitable. But, of the habitable sections, at least one third ought again to be abstracted for re-entering deserts, leaving for the really productive parts, capable of any considerable density of population, an aggregate of 4,268,000 sq. ms. Unless Africa is regarded as a congeries of islands, separated on the land sides by seas, indeed oceans, of barren sand and rock, no rational idea can be formed of its real physical geography. The Nile, and still more northern sections, can far more easily communicate, by the Mediterranean, with Europe and Western Asia, than they can with Soudan or Nigritia, over the interior deserts. Still, however, with all deductions, the insular sections of Africa, under the terms stated, comprise considerably more arable surface than does Europe; and therefore, were the former regions possessed of the moral and political advantages of Europe, in due proportion the respective masses would be very nearly as 43 to 35. Therefore, allowing to Europe an existing population of 230,000,000, Africa ought to have 282,000,000. It may be, however, doubted whether it contains one-fifth of such an amount. Egypt is probably the most densely inhabited of any African section, and there, according to the best accounts, the distributive population on 150,000 sq. ms. is only about 17 to the sq. m. Were the whole habitable surface populated in proportion, there would then be only an aggregate of 72,576,000 persons.

Africa, seaport town of Tunis, 70 ms. SSE. of Tunis. It was taken by Charles V, who demolished the fortifications. Lon. 11 10 E., lat. 35 36 N.

Afrique, St., small town of Fr., in the dep. of Averion, 6 ms. E. of Vabres.

AGA, Turkish title of distinction, applied as the English term Lord, rather indefinitely, to high officers, military or civil.

Agades, kingdom of Africa, in Negroland, about 500 ms. eastward of Tombuctoo. It is also called Agdass, and Aghades. It borders on the great desert. N. lat. 19° and lon. 13° E. of London, intersect in this kingdom.

Agadir, or Santo-Cruz, a town of Morocco near the Atlantic coast, about 100 ms. southward of Mogadore, N. lat. 30 30.

Agatha, St., a town of Naples, in the Ulteriore principality, with a bishop's see, 20 ms. NE. of Naples. Lon. 14 36 E., lat. 41 5 N.

Agatton, town near the mouth of the Formosa, on the coast of Guinea, 80 ms. S. of Benin. Lon. 7 6 E., lat. 7 20 N.

Agawam, town, Hampden co., Mass., 362 ms. from W. C. and 89 from Boston.

Agde, town of Fr., in the dep. of Herault, and late province of Languedoc, seated on the river Herault, $1\frac{1}{2}$ m. from its mouth in the gulf of Lyons, where there is a small fort to defend the entrance. It is 17 ms. NE. of Narbonne. Lon. 3 28 E., lat. 43 19 N.

Agen, city of Fr., the ancient Aginum, in the now dep. of Lot and Garonne. It is situated on the Garonne. It is a place of considerable manufactures. Agen stands 108 ms. SE. of Bordeaux and 70 NW. of Toulouse. N. lat. 44 12, lon. 0 40 E. of London.

Agenabat, town of Transylvania, 10 ms. NE. of Hermenstadt. Lon. 24 50 E., lat. 46 32 N.

Ager, small town of Catalonia, in Spain. Lon. 1 50 E., lat. 41 50 N.

Agga, or Aggona, town and district on the coast of Guinea, in which the English have a fort. Lon. 0 5 E., lat. 6 0 N.

Aggerhuys, town of Norway, and capital of a province of the same name, which is full of mountains. It is 30 ms. NW. of Frederickshall. Lon. 10 20 E., lat. 59 30.—See Christiana.

Aghrim, village in the co. of Galway, Ireland.

Aghrin, town in the co. of Wicklow, Ireland, 13 ms. SW. of Wicklow. Lon. 6 21 W., lat. 52 45 N.

Agincourt, village of Fr., in the dep. of the straits of Calais, and late co. of Artois, 7 ms. N. of Hesden.

Agmt, town of Morocco, on a river of the same name, and on the declivity of one of the mountains of Atlas, where the soil is fertile. It is 16 ms. S. of Morocco. Lon. 7 15 W., lat. 30 56 N.

Agimere.—See Adjemere.

Agosto, Lagusto, or Agusta, island in the Adriatic, 70 ms. a little N. of W. from Ragusa, and 10 ms. S. of the island of Curzola.

Agram, capital of Croatia, situated on a hill near the northern side of the Save river. It is known also by the Italian names of Zagrab and Sagabria, and, at an earlier period, called Gretz, or Graetz. Population 17,000. About 150 ms. a very little W. of S. of Vienna, 75 ms. down the Save from Laybach, in Carniola, and 120 ms. nearly E. from Trieste. N. lat. 44 55, lon. 16 E. of London.

Ahuys, town of Sweden, strong by situation, in the province of Gothland, with a good harbor, 15 ms. SE. of Christianstadt. Lon. 14 15 E., lat. 56 15 N.

Ahwas, ancient Gyndes, Zeindel of Danville, river of Persia, in Khoristan. This stream rises in the Elwend mountains, N. lat. 37°, interlocking sources with the Kizilozain and Zab, and, flowing thence nearly due south, falls into the Schat el Arab, or lower Euphrates, by several mouths, some above and some below Bassorah. The Ulai of Daniel was most probably a small eastern branch of the Ahwas. It is a mountain stream of about 400 ms. in length, and next to the Tigris in size, amongst the confluent of the Euphrates.

Aiagha-Tag, mountains of Asia, between Turkey and Persia, a chain of the ancient Parthiene, and is the Zagros of antiquity, and a part of that vast congeries of mountains which, extending to the SE., gives source to the numerous confluent of the Tigris, and known in Persia as Elwend. These chains have in all ages been possessed by the Koords, and is the country now called Koor-distan.—See Elwend.

Aichstadt, town of Germany, in Bavaria, situated on the north side of Alt Muhl river, 45 English ms. SW. by W. of Ratisbon, and 60 NNW. of Munich. It is the capital of a bishopric of the same name.

Aiello, small town in Naples, in Abruzzo Ulteriore, belonging to the hereditary prince of Modena. Lon. 15 20 E., lat. 41 40 N.

Aigle, town in Switzerland, in the canton of Bern, seated on the Rhone, 6 ms. from its entrance into the lake of Geneva. All the houses, even the meanest, are built of white marble, found in the neighborhood.—Small town of Fr., in the dep. of Orne, and late province of Normandy, 47 ms. SW. of Rouen. Lon. 1 0 E., lat. 48 45 N.

Aignan, St., town of Fr., in the dep. of Loire and Cher, and late province of Blaisois. It is in the shape of an amphitheatre, at the foot of which runs the river Cher, at the distance of 60 ms. from Bourges.

Aigue-Morte, town of Fr., in the dep. of the mouths of the Rhone, and late province of Languedoc. It is very strong, on account of its situation among the morasses, though at some distance from the sea. It had a harbor which is now choked up. Lon. 4 3 E., lat. 43 34 N.

Aigue-Perse, town of Fr., in the dep. of Puy de Dome, and late province of Auvergne, 18 ms. N. of Clermont, and 261 S. of Paris. It has a fountain, once regarded as a prodigy, its cold water having the appearance of boiling. The water of this spring is said to be fatal to the animals that drink it. Lon. 2 30 E., lat. 46 6 N.

Ailah, town of Arabia Petrea, on the E. side of the Red sea, near the road which the pilgrims take from Egypt to Mecca. Lon. 36 40 E., lat. 29 10 N.

Ailesbury, largest and most populous town in Buckinghamshire, Eng. It is the centre of the business of the vale of Ailesbury, which occupies the centre of the county, and is one of the most fertile tracts in England. The inhabitants of this town and its neighborhood supply the London market with early ducklings. They carry this trade to such an extent that it is said £3,000 have been received at Ailesbury, from London, in six weeks, for that article. This town is 16 ms. SE. of Buckingham, and 41 NW. of London. Lon. 0 42 W., lat. 51 50 N.

Ailsa, great insulated rock, to the S. of the isle of Arran, in Scotland. Its base is 2 ms. in circumference. It consists of a stupendous assemblage of precipitous cliffs, rising in a wild series, forming a pyramidal mountain 900 feet high, accessible only to the NE.

Aime, or Axima, small town in Savoy, on the river Isere.

Ain, dep. of Fr., lately the province of Bresse.

Ainsa, town of Spain, in Arragon, seated in a plain, on the river Ara.

Aintal, city of Asia, in Turkey. It is situated on the southern slope of Mount Taurus, about 50 ms. NNE. from Aleppo, near the sources of the river Kowaik. N. lat. 37 5, lon. 37 35 E. of London. Aintal stands about 100 ms. NE. from Scanderoon.

Aire, town of Fr., in the dep. of Landes, and late province of Gascony, seated on the river Adour, on the declivity of a mountain, 65 ms. S. of Bordeaux. Lon. 0 16 E., lat. 43 42 N.—Strong town in the dep. of the straits of Calais, and late province of Artois. It is seated on the river Lis, 22 ms. S. of Dunkirk, and communicates with St. Omer by a canal from the river Aa. Lon. 2 29 E., lat. 30 42 N.

Aisne, dep. of Fr., including the late provinces of Soissonnois and Vermandois.

Aix, ancient city of Fr., now capital of the dep. of Bouche du Rhone. It was the capital of the late province of Provence, when it had a Parliament. It is seated in a plain, where there are hot baths, near the river Arc. It is 75 ms. E. of Montpellier. Lon. 5 31 E., lat. 43 32 N.—Ancient town of Savoy, on the lake of Bourget. Here are mineral waters, much frequented. It is 8 ms. N. of Chamberry. Lon. 6 10 E., lat. 45 42 N.—Small island on the coast of Fr., between the isle of Oleron and the continent, 12 ms. NW. of Rochefort. Lon. 1 50 W., lat. 46 5 N.

Aix-la-Chapelle, free and imperial city of Westphalia, now capital of the Prussian province of lower Rhine. The Emperor Charlemagne chose this place for his residence, on account of its beauty. He is interred in the church of Notre Dame, where they keep his sword and belt, and the Four Evangelists, written in letters of gold, which are made use of at the coronation of emperors. Its famous mineral waters draw a great number of persons every year. It is seated in a bottom, surrounded by mountains, 22 ms. NE. of Liege. Lon. 6 3 E., lat. 50 48 N.

Ajan, a general and not very definite name, applied to that part of the eastern coast of Africa, from Cape Guardafui to the equator, or upwards of 1,000 ms. It is also called Adel.—See general art. Africa, head of Magadoxa.

Ajazzo, seaport of Natolia, in the province of Caramania, anciently Silesia, seated on the Mediterranean, 30 ms. N. of Antioch, and 40 W. of Aleppo, where stood the city of Issus, and where Alexander fought his second battle with Darius. Lon. 33 10 E., lat. 37 0 N.

Akalzike, northeastern pachalic of European Turkey, in great part ceded to Russia. This country, formerly called Tsheldir, extends along and from the northeastern part of the Black sea, on both sides of the river Escharuk. It is very mountainous, and to European geographers but little known. Central lat. 40 30 N., lon. from London 41 30 E. It lies northward from eastern Armenia.

Akhissar, ancient Thyatira. It is also called Akissat; which see.

Akissat, ancient Thyatira, a town of Natolia, built in a fine plain 18 ms. broad, which produces plenty of corn and cotton. It is inhabited by about 500 Mahometans, and is seated on the river Hermis, 50 ms. SE. of Pergamo. Lon. 28 30 E., lat. 38 48 N.

Akmetchel, cape of Russia, in Crimea. It is the most western point of that peninsula.—The Sympheropol, or Simferopole of the Russian town of the Crimea, and ancient capital of Crim Tartary. It stands inland about 50 ms. NE. from Sevastopol, and almost on lat. 45 0 N., lon. 34 20 E. of London.

Akron, town of Portage co., O., situated on the Ohio canal, at its highest elevation. The site of the town is about 500 feet above Ohio river at Portsmouth, 406 ms. above Lake Erie, and 970 above the Atlantic ocean. N. lat. 41 6, lon. W. C. 4 32; distant 32 ms. SSE. of Cleveland, 38 by canal; 16 SW. of Ravenna. It is a very flourishing manufacturing and commercial place, with a population, in 1837, of about 1,600. In the vicinity there is an extensive stratum of bituminous coal, and water power to any desirable amount.

Alaba, or Alava, one of the three smallest districts of Biscay, in Spain, but pretty fertile in rye, barley, and fruits. There are in it very good mines of iron. Vitoria is the capital.

Aktau Mountains, between the basins of the Gihoon and Sihoon, or Syr-Daria. The chain of Aktau, or "the White mountain," is extended, being a branch detached from the Beloor system.

Alabama, one of the United States, having Tennessee N., Georgia E., Florida and the gulf of Mexico S., and the Mississippi W. This State extends from N. lat. 30 12 to N. lat. 35 0, or 334 ms., with a mean width of 155 ms., extending over 51,770 sq. ms.—33,132,800 acres. The face of Alabama is much variegated; the soil also differs in quality from the worst to the best. That section of the State which lies along the gulf of Mexico is low and sandy; but this character of country rapidly changes: within 10 or 12 ms. from the coast, the hills commence, and gradually gain elevation, advancing N. The bay of Mobile penetrates this section 30 ms., and is followed by an overflowed tract, which extends again 32 ms., to the junction of the Alabama and Tombigbee rivers. Between the head of Mobile bay and the union of the two latter streams, a number of channels wind through the alluvial tract, the principal of which are those of the Mobile and Tensau. The bay and the alluvial bottoms above are limited on each side by hills of moderate elevation, covered with pine timber. The pine region extends into the centre of the State, and forms much the largest portion of its soil. The Tombigbee, Black Warrior, Catawba, Coosa, Tallapoosa, Alabama, and some minor streams, peninsulate the pine section of Alabama. Extensive bodies of river alluvion skirt those rivers, and much interval land, of second-rate quality, is spread between the river bottoms and the open pine woods; but, as a whole, the productive soil of Alabama does not in surface equal that which may be regarded of a contrary character. This State, with the exception of the southeastern angle and a very small section on the southwest, is comprised in the valley of Tennessee and basin of Mobile. Under a general view, Alabama is divided into two unequal physical sections, which may be called, relatively, northern and southern.

That of the south, by far the most extensive, has its slope very nearly due south, and is, in that direction, drained by the main streams, and numerous confluent, of Tombigbee, Black Warrior, Alabama, Mobile, Conecuh, Choctawhatchie, and Chattahooche rivers.

Northern, or the Tennessee river section, comprises about 150 ms. of the valley of Tennessee—the main channel of that river entering the State very near the northeastern angle, and quitting it almost as near the northwestern angle, with a rather large intermediate southern curve. This Tennessee section has a mean length, from east to west, of 145 ms., with a general breadth of 50 ms.—area about 7,000 sq. ms.

The southern and much most extensive zone or inclined plane falls, by a very gentle declivity, from N. lat. 34 20 to the gulf of Mexico, over something more than four degrees of latitude. This slope is drained and finely variegated by the streams already mentioned. Over both physical sections the State is well supplied with navigable channels, though possessing within its own limits but one outlet—that is, by Mobile bay to the gulf of Mexico. The tides in the Mexican gulf being so very moderate, (not exceeding a mean of more than 2½ feet,) the passage of sea vessels of any draught is arrested at Claiborne, in the Alabama river, and at St. Stephen's, in Tombigbee river—both places being about 100 ms. above Mobile bar. Though sometimes the navigation of the northern rivers of Alabama is impeded by ice, yet they are not so frequently. The excessive summer droughts occur, with more or less intensity, annually, and are productive of a far more abiding cause of impeding navigation than any arising from ice.

The seasons at the extremes of Alabama, in regard to mean and extreme temperature, differ greatly. The border along the gulf of Mexico may be called tropical, when compared with the valley of Tennessee. Between lat. 30 10 and 31 30, or below tide water, excessive frosts or lying snow is rare; but the temperature changes sensibly, advancing towards and into the valley of Tennessee, particularly in the northeastern sections of the State. No part, however, of Alabama admits the profitable culture of sugar cane. Cotton is the general staple of the State; Indian corn, or maize, the usual crop for subsistence, though, in the middle and northern parts, smaller grain (wheat, rye, oats, &c.) succeed very well.

Alabama river, from which the State of Alabama derives its name, is formed by the confluent streams of Coosa and Tallapoosa, both rising in Georgia, and, flowing SSW., enter the State of Alabama, in which they unite, and form the river of that name, at N. lat. 32 28, W. lon. W. C. 9 22; thence, by a very sinuous channel, but comparative course of about 50 ms., to the influx of Cahaba river from the north; thence, curving to the SSW., by comparative course of 100 ms., to its junction with Tombigbee, to form Mobile river. There are few, if any, other rivers of the world whose general and winding courses differ more than those of the Mobile. It is navigable for light sea vessels about 60 ms., following the channel from the mouth, to Claiborne, in Monroe co.—See Mobile river.

Alacranes, rocks or islets in the gulf of Mexico, off the northern coast of Yucatan, and about 60 ms. from the shore, N. lat. 22 15, lon. W. C. 13 W.

Aladulia, province of Asiatic Turkey, in some extent commensurate with the ancient Cilicia. It is the Mediterranean S., Caramania W., and Syria SE. This province is otherwise called Adana—which see.

Alagoa, a town in St. Michael's, one of the Azores.—See article AFRICA, head Azores.

Alagon, small river of Spain, rising in Salamanca, near the Escorial, and about 30 ms., NE. by E., from Ciudad Rodrigo. It first flows southward, about 70 ms., to a little above Coria, from whence it turns SW. 50 ms., and is lost in the Tagus, a few miles above and on the opposite side from Alcantara.

Alais, town of Fr., in the dep. of Gard, 35 ms. NNW. from Nismes, and 45 ms. NW. by W. of Avignon. N. lat. 44 12, lon. 4 8 from London. This town carries on an extensive trade in olives, olive oil, wine, grain, and silk.

Aland, the most considerable of a group of islands rising between Finland and Sweden, and in the mouth of the gulf of Bothnia. This group lies about 80 ms. NW. by W. from Abo, in Finland, and is separated from Sweden by the strait of Alands-Hof. The islands beside Aland, the largest, are Zemland, Kunlinge, Wardoe, Brandoe, and Lumperland, on the east, and Ekeroe on the west. Pop. 13,000. N. lat. 60°, lon. 20° E. of London. The Aland islands were ceded by Sweden to Russia, 1809.

Alasey or Alazia, mountains of Asiatic Russia, extending northwardly from the Stanovoi mountains, between the sources of the Indighirca and Kolimy or Kovyma rivers, from lat. 61° to 70° N.

Alassy, strait between the islands of Sumbawa and Lombok, lat 8° S., long. 116° E. of London.

Alaska, cape or peninsula of Russian America, frequently spelled Oonalaska. It extends in form of a crescent from N. lat. 55° to 60°, and in lon. from W. C. 75° to 86° W. The Aleutian islands are evidently a continuation of the globular swell which forms the Alaska promontory.

Alava, province of Spain, southward of the Biscayan mountains, bounded N. by Biscay and Guipuzcoa, E. by Navarre, S. by Soria, and W. by Burgos. Victoria is the capital. Length, E. and W., 50 ms.; mean breadth 20. The surface is drained by some of the higher confluent of the Ebro, towards which river it slopes from the Biscayan mountains.

Alatamaha, river of the U. S., in Georgia. Advancing along the Atlantic ocean from Cape Florida, the Alatamaha is the first river whose sources are in the spurs or valleys of the Appalachian mountains. It is formed by two great branches, the Ockmulgee and Oconee, with many lesser tributaries. Both the main branches have their most remote fountains in a minor chain of the Appalachian system, and its entire basin comprises 7,500 sq. ms., between lat. 31 30 and 34 40 N. Boats of 30 tons can be navigated up the Alatamaha to the junction of the Oconee and Ockmulgee, and thence, up the Oconee, to Milledgeville, following the windings of the channel 300 ms. from the ocean, and also up the Ockmulgee about an equal distance. This fine basin is altogether in Georgia, and discharges between the islands of St. Simon's and Sapelo, at N. lat. 31 50, lon. W. C. 4 37 W.

Alatri, town of Italy, in the States of the Church, 40 ms. ESE. from Rome, at N. lat. 41 43.

Alatyre, town of European Russia, government of Sembrisk, situated on the Alatyre river, at or near its confluence with the Sura, 150 ms. SE. from Nishnei Novgorod, lat. 54 45 N. lon. 46 15 E. of London.

Alava, southern point of the island of Revillagigedo, in the Pacific ocean, N. lat. 35 8, lon. W. C. 54 1 W.

Alageia, river of Asiatic Russia, mouth of at N. lat. 72 40, lon. 142 14 E. of London.

Alaziershei, settlement of Asiatic Russia, on the Alazeia or Alapsey river, and on or near the Frozen ocean, and about 90 ms. WNW. of Nishnei Kovinski. It was near this place that the remains of a mammoth were discovered a few years past. N. lat. 69 40, lon. 144 15 E. of London.

Alb, mountain of southern Germany, thus noticed by Malte Brun: "A high country, intersected by ravines or deep valleys, in which the Steiger-Wald extends to the west, joins the Fichtelberg, from which the Maine takes its source, with the Alb, or Rauke-Alb, that rises to the height of 2,500 feet, winds along the basin of the upper Danube, and unites with the more extensive chain of the Schwartz-Wald, or Black Forest. It is from the mountains of the Black Forest that the Danube takes its rise. Their elevation is supposed to be about 4,600 feet."—See articles Europe and Hyrcanian Mountains.

Albania, province of European Turkey, occupying the space comprised from east to west between the Grammos and Metzovo mountains and the Adriatic sea, and from north to south from the southern side of the mountains of Montenegro, to the gulf of Arta or Prevesa. Enclosed on all the land sides by inaccessible mountains, it is a country very little known. The warlike population appears to have been descended from the ancient Illyrians. It is naturally divided into upper and lower Albania, and comprises three sanjiaks—Scutari, Avlona, and Janina. It is about 300 ms. in length from north to south, and about 80 ms. mean width. Scutari, or Scodra, is the capital of upper Albania, and is situated on the point above the junction of the Bocana and Drivastro rivers. This city is called by the Turks Iskenderiah, or Alexandria. It is large, well paved, and agreeable, and contains extensive manufactories of arms. Durazzo, the ancient Dyrrachium, still retains some importance, from its position on the sea coast opposite Brindisi, in Italy. Upper Albania is drained by the Bocana, Drino, and other mountain torrents, flowing rapidly westward from the Mezzovo mountains.

Lower Albania is nearly commensurate with the ancient Epirus. Janina, or, more correctly, Janina, is the capital. This city has gained considerable celebrity from its misfortunes; but its position saves it from permanent decay, and prosperity must return with the re-establishment of commercial and friendly relations with the principal cities of Italy.—See article Joanina. Lower Albania is a continuation of the same plain of upper Albania, though narrowing advancing southward, as the sea shore and Mezzovo mountains gradually incline towards each other. These mountains, the Pindus of antiquity, give source to many torrents, which, though of brief course, unite and form three rivers celebrated from remote antiquity; these are the Aous, now Vaioutza; Arethon, now Arta; and Achelous, now Aspro-Potamos. Butrinto, ancient Butthrotum; Arta, on the river of the same name; Salagoro, on the gulf of Arta; Preveza, Parga, Philates, Delvino, Conitza or Hecatompedon, Presnithi or Paramythia, Tepelene or Tripoli, Avlone or Peloros, Berat or Arnout-Belgrade, founded by and named Pulcheriopolis, after Pulcheria, the sister of Theodosius the younger, and El-Bassan, on the Scombi river, are all towns of lower Albania. In lat., Albania lies between 39 and 43 N.

Albanian, nation, are a people tall, well-formed, and vigorous. Their eyes are lively, and color of the skin rather dark. They are brave, active, and indefatigable. Love of glory and of their country never animates, however, their breasts; a country they regard not, those who pay best secures the Albanian sword. Similar to the old Scottish clans in manners and grade of civilization, they are divided into clans, and follow the richest, bravest, and most successful leader. The women partake of all the qualities of the men. Frugal and active, and inhabiting a broken mountainous country, this people are generally healthy.

Albano, town of Italy, 14 ms. SE. of Rome.

Albany, town in Oxford co., Maine, 18 ms. NW. from Paris. Pop. about 400.—Town in Orleans co., Vt., 40 ms. NE. from Montpelier.—River of North America, in the British territories, has its sources between Lake Superior and Hudson's bay, and between lat. 50° and 53° N.; and thence flowing by comparative courses about 400 ms., falls into James's bay at N. lat. 52 30.—District of British North America, drained chiefly by Albany river and its confluent; it lies westward of James's bay, and between Severn and Moose districts. Central lat. 52 30 N.

Albany, co. of N. Y., on the S. side of Hudson river, having Greene co. S., Schoharie W., Schenectady N., Mohawk river NE., and Hudson river E. This county is hilly, though much of its soil fertile. It is about 20 ms. sq., or area 400 sq. ms. Central lat. 42 39, lon. W. C. 3 15 E. Pop., 1820, 38,116; in 1830, 53,560; and in 1840, 68,593.

ALBANY, city and capital of Albany co., and seat of government for the State of New York, stands on the right bank of the Hudson, 143 ms. above the city of N. Y. Its advance in commerce and wealth may in some degree be estimated by its progressive pop., which, in 1820, amounted to 12,867, and in 1840 to 33,021, or 262 per cent. in 20 years. The ocean tides reach Troy 5 ms. above Albany, affording a tide water navigation near 170 miles inland. The Erie and Champlain canals, meeting the tide, operate as immense arteries to extend commerce and social intercourse into the still more remote and wide spread interior. A railroad connects Albany and Schenectady. Albany is one of those positions which must, under all ordinary changes, sustain its advantages. It is a point of union between land and water, means of travel and commercial intercourse which cannot be superseded. Except the lower streets near the Hudson the site of the city is high, dry, and, of consequence, airy and healthy. The valleys of the Hudson, above and below, and that of the Mohawk, have been, and ever must be, channels through which millions on increasing millions must pass and pause at Albany.

Albarazin, mountains of Spain, between Aragon and New Castile, and from which flow westward the extreme higher sources of the Tagus; southward those of the Jucar; and northward the higher sources of the Xalon or Jalon branch of the Ebro. The point of junction between the Sierras of Molina and Abarazin is a real mountain nucleus, from which extend several chains; one towards, perhaps beyond, the Ebro; another near the mouth of the Segura river; and a third westward, first between the sources of the Tagus and Jucar, and thence between those of the Guadiana and Tagus.—Town of Spain, in Aragon, situated on the higher part of the river Guadalaviar, and at the foot of the Sierra de Albarazin.—See article Sierra. The town of Albarazin stands about 100 ms. to the SSW. of Saragossa.

Albay, province and town of the island of Luzon, in the Philippines.

Albazin, town of Russia in Asia, in the province of Irkoutsk. Position uncertain.

Albemarle, town of Fr., in the dep. of lower Seine.—See Aumale.—Albemarle Sound, a deep bay of N. C., is the estuary of the Roanoke and Chowan rivers, extending 60 ms. in length from E. to W. along N. lat. 36°, with a mean breadth of 8 ms., but protruding from both sides deep minor bays. The Roanoke enters from the W. and the Chowan from the northwest, at the extreme interior of Albemarle, which spreads below the entrance of these rivers in a shallow expanse of water, with a level or rather flat country along each shore. Every small inlet has its own comparative broad bay, by one of which, the Pasquotank, a navigable inland communication, by the Dismal Swamp canal, has been formed between Albemarle sound and Chesapeake bay. Albemarle sound is separated from the Atlantic ocean by long, low, and narrow reefs of sand, but having two channels of connexion southward with Pamlico sound, one on each side of Roanoke island, and on the northward an opening to the ocean by Currituck sound and inlet. Albemarle sound has Bertie co. W.; Washington and Tyrrell S.; and Chowan, Perquimans, Camden, and Currituck, on the N. This sheet of water is shallow, and of course only small vessels can be navigated from the ocean into any of its rivers.—One of the central counties of Virginia, bounded on the NW. by Blue Ridge, separating it from Augusta and Rockingham; on the NE. by the western part of Orange; on the E. by Louisa and Fluvanna; on the S. by James river, separating it from Buckingham; and on the W., or rather SW., by Nelson. Length from SW. to NE. 35 ms.; mean width 20; and area 700 sq. ms. N. lat. 38, and W. lon. 1 30 W. C., intersect very near the centre. The body of this county is drained by the constituent creeks of Rivanna river and Hardware river—the whole surface sloping SE. towards James river. The southeastern side traversed by a minor Appalachian chain, and the face of the whole county very beautifully diversified by hill and dale, whilst the Blue Ridge affords a fine northwestern border, and the more humble ridges of the southwest mountain decorate the eastern part. The soil, of course, partakes of the variety of feature, from mountain, rocky and sterile, to productive river alluvion. Productive soil predominates. Chief towns, Charlottesville, Scottsville, and Warren. Population in 1820, 19,750; and in 1830, 22,618.

Albengua, an ancient strong seaport of Italy, in the territory of Genoa. It is surrounded with olive trees, but the air is unwholesome. It is seated on the Mediterranean, 37 ms. SW. of Genoa. Lon. 8 3 E., lat. 44 4 N.

Albinen, a very remarkable village of Switz., in the canton of Valais. It is situated near the baths of Leuk, between Sion and Brieg. It is only accessible by means of ladders.

Albertson's, town in Duplin co., N. C., 369 ms. from W. C., and 90 from Raleigh.

ALBIGENSES, or ALBIGEOIS, so called from the province of Abigeois in Fr., a sect of reformers or opposers of the Roman Catholic church in the 12th century. The Albigeois, though most intensely hated and persecuted by the dominant church, survived as a distinct sect until the reformation in the 16th century, and joined the Swiss and Genevan Protestants. Though often historically confounded, the Albigeois preceded and remained distinct from the Waldenses.—See Waldenses.

Albion, village in Kennebec co., Me., 645 ms. from W. C., and 92 NE. from Portland.—Village in Oswego co., N. Y.—Village in Edward co., Ill., 87 ms. SE. from Vandalia and 22 NNW. from Harmony, in Ia. This is the principal village of Birkbeck's settlement, and has risen since 1817. In August, 1822, Albion contained about 30 houses, one good inn, two stores, some mechanics' shops, and was rapidly improving.—National Intelligencer, Sept. 13, 1822. N. lat. 38 22 W., lon. W. Alderney, island in the English channel, 18 ms. NE. from Guernsey. It is 8 ms. in compass, and separated from the French coast by a very dangerous strait, called the Race of Alderney. This little island is healthful and fruitful. Central lat. 49 45 N. lon. 2 7 W.

Alderette, town of Portugal, in Alentejo, 7 ms. SE. of Portulegre.

Aldie, town, in the southern part of Loudoun co., Va., 12 ms. southward of Leesburg, and by post road 37 ms., SW. by W., from W. C.

Alentejo, or Alem-Tejo, which name is derived from its position, "to the south of the Tagus." It is bounded E. by the Spanish provinces or kingdoms of Sevilla and Estramadura, N. by the Tagus, NW. by Portuguese Estramadura, SW. by the Atlantic ocean, and S. by the province of Algarva. Length from S. to N. 150 ms., mean breadth about 60, and area 9,000 sq. ms. In lat. it extends from 37 25 to 39 40 N.; lon. between 7 and 9° W. of London. The Gaudiana river enters this province between Badajoz and Elvas, and, winding along its eastern border about 100 ms., becomes, thence to the Atlantic ocean, a limit between Sevilla and Algarva. Nearly parallel to the general course of the Gaudiana, a range of hills traverses Alentejo, westward of which rise two minor rivets—the Sado, flowing northward into the Atlantic ocean, and the Zalas, into the Tagus. Nearly the whole surface of Alentejo is therefore composed of three river valleys, all hilly or mountainous. It is regarded as the least fertile and populated of the Portuguese provinces. Evora (the capital) and Beja are its chief towns.

Alençon, town of Fr., in the late province of Normandy, now in the southern part of the dep. of Orne. It is situated on one of the higher branches of Sarthe river, 30 ms. N. of Mans, and 97 a little S. of W. from Paris. The adjacent country is picturesque, and productive in grain, fruit, and pasturage. Lat. 48 30 N., lon. 0 10 E. of London.

Aleppo, modern capital of Syria, inhabited by a mixture of Mahometans and Christians. Population uncertain, because very differently stated from 100,000 to three or four-fold that number. It is, however, one of the most important Turkish cities in their Asiatic provinces. Similar to Damascus and Jerusalem, Aleppo is situated in a valley, having no outlet to the sea. Its site, indeed, comprises part of that remarkable valley or depression which extends from the Euphrates, nearly parallel to the Eastern coast of the Mediterranean, to and including the Bahr-el-Ahaba, or eastern arm of the Red sea.—See art. Euphrates. Aleppo derives its importance from being an emporium between the basin of the Euphrates, eastward, and the Mediterranean, west. Caravans arrive at and depart from it, conveying the merchandise of Armenia, Diarbekar, and other Eastern countries, as well as of the West. By means of these caravans, Aleppo communicates with Bagdad and Persia by Balsora, with Egypt and Mecca by Damascus, and with Europe by Alexandria and Latakia. This city stands 70 ms. SE. by E. from Alexandria, about 80 NE. from Latakia, and 170 ms. a little E. of N. from Damascus. Aleppo, in modern times, has taken the place of Palmyra.

Alessandria.—See Alexandria, city of Italy.

Alessio, town of Albania, near the mouth of the Drino. N. lat. 42 8, lon. 20 6 E.—Town of Turkish Dalmatia, 25 ms. from Spalatro.

Alet, town of France, dep. of Aude, late province of Languedoc, 15 ms. south of Carcassone.

Aleutian islands, a chain extending from the peninsula of Alaska, in North America, curving something southwardly, but by a general western course, towards Kamschatka, in Asia, through about 30° of lon., along the mean lat. of 52° N., or 1,100 ms. "These islands are divided into several groups, of which the indigenous names are Chao, or the Aleutian, properly denominated by the Russian Negho, or the Andreanovskoi, and Kawalang, or the Fox islands." They are now, however, by custom, comprised under a general term, Aleutian islands. This chain is evidently the higher parts of a mountain system. Almost all the islands contain very lofty mountains. There are also volcanoes, some of which are extinguished, others in activity. These latter are found in the islands of Takawangha, Kanaghi, Atchan, and Oonamak. In this latter island, in that of Kanaghi, boiling springs issue from their frozen soil, in which the natives cook their meat and fish. The climate of the Aleutians is more disagreeable from moisture than cold. Those nearest America produce some pines, larches, and oaks. On the western islands, no wood larger than stunted willows appear, though the verdure presents considerable richness. Population about 1,100, and decreasing—the native language differing from that of the Kamschadales, but with some analogy to that spoken in the Kurile islands.

Alexander, town, Genessee co., N. Y., 8 ms. SSW. Batavia. It is crossed by Tonawanta creek, with several branches; surface varied, soil yielding grain, pasturage, and fruits, with indigenous timber—such as beech, maple, ash, &c. The village is on Tonewanta creek. Pop. of tp. in 1830 2,331.—Tp., Washington co., Me., 30 ms. N. of Machias. Pop. in 1830, 334.—Vill., southern part of Athens co., O., 7 ms. SSE. of Athens, the co. seat, and 13 NW. of Chester, the co. seat of Meigs county.—Town, southern part of Montgomery co., O.; by post road 73 ms. SW. by W. from Columbus, and 6 ms. below and S. of Dayton.—Extreme southern co. of Ill., occupying the point or peninsula above their junction, and between the Mississippi and Ohio rivers. Length from S. to N. 23 ms., mean width about 17, and area 390 sq. ms. The surface near the rivers is generally low, and annually inundated, though rising above flood in the interior. Soil productive. Some cotton has been cultivated; but the summers are too brief to admit that vegetable as a profitable staple in any part of Illinois. Maize, wheat, rye, and oats, are produced in abundance, as are orchard fruits and garden vegetables. In lat. this co. extends from 37 00 to 37 21, and in lon. from 12 8 to 12 32 W. C. Pop. in 1830 1,390; in 1840, 3,313.—See West Alexander.

Alexandersville, town on Miami river, eastern side, 7 ms. below Dayton, and 18 W. of Xenia. The Ohio canal passes through this village, as do daily lines of stages to and from Cincinnati to Dayton.

Alexandretta.—See Scanderoon.

Alexandria, or Scandaria, city of Egypt, founded by Alexander the Great about B. C. 330. Its ancient splendor and extent are in a considerable degree still attested by its remains, which are concealed, however, to a great extent, by the modern buildings. The modern city occupies a sandy strip of land, formed by the sea, along the ancient mole which once connected Pharos with the continent. Of its two former harbors, the eastern has lost its advantages by the changes which the coast has undergone. The famous Pharos, built on an island now a peninsula, serves as a lighthouse. The present harbor is little else than a roadstead, in which vessels are frequently lost. To the south of the modern city and of the two harbors is the site of old Alexandria. Reduced to a population of 16,000 souls, Alexandria still enjoys many advantages; and, should a regular and at once enlightened and permanent government be established in Egypt, it may again become a place of commercial importance. Its ancient rank it can never again reach. The changes of every kind in the affairs of the world, the improvements in navigation, and finally even the natural mutations effected on the earth, forbid the restoration of a great and exclusive route by the Red sea, the crowning cause which conferred so much magnitude to ancient Alexandria. This city is situated at N. lat 31 11 E., lon. London 29 50 E.

Alexandria, strong and considerable town of Italy, belonging to the duchy of Milan, seated on the Tanaro, 40 ms. S. by E. of Milan. Lon. 8 43 E., lat 44 55 N.—Tp. of Grafton co., N. H., 30 ms. N. by W. of Concord, 72 NW. of Portsmouth. It lies between the townships of New Chester and Orange. Part of the soil produces wheat and maize; but other parts are rocky and sterile. Pop. in 1830 1,083.—Town, Jefferson co., N. Y., opposite The Thousand islands in the St. Lawrence, which in part belong to it.

The shore, extending 9 miles, is bold, rocky, and varied. It contains a part of the channel of Indian river, with Mullet, Otter, Hyde, Plessis, and Crooked creeks. Timber: maple, elm, beach, bass, red and white oak, black and white ash, hemlock, pine, &c. It is crossed by the military road from Plattsburg to Sackett's Harbor. Pop. in 1830 1,523.—Town and tp. of Hunterdon co., N. J., 25 ms. NW. of Trenton, and bounded W. by Delaware river. Pop. in 1830 3,042.—Vill., Porter tp., Huntingdon co., Pa.—City and port of entry in the D. C., on the south bank of the river Potomac, about 180 ms. from the ocean. It is the capital of a county of the same name, and carries on a considerable trade, particularly in flour. It has some public buildings—such as an Episcopal church, bank, academy, court-house, &c. The original settlers laid out the streets on the plan of Philadelphia. Eight ms. below the town, on the Virginia bank of the Potomac, where it is nearly 2 ms. wide, is Mount Vernon, the celebrated seat of General Washington. Alexandria is 7 ms. S. from Washington, and 100 ms. N. of Richmond. N. lat. 38 46, lon. W. W. C. 0 3 W.

Alexandria, co. of District of Columbia, comprising that part of the District ceded by Virginia, length 10 ms. from SE. to NW., widening from below the city of Alexandria, where it is a mere point, to 4 ms. opposite the Little Falls, in Potomac river; area about 36 sq. ms.; surface hilly, and soil thin. It is connected with the city of Washington by a bridge. By the census of 1840, exclusive of the city of Alexandria, the population was: males 490, females 483, free colored males and females 235, slaves 300.—Total pop. 1,508.

Alexandria, town and seat of justice, Rapide parish, Louisiana. Situated on the right bank of Red river, about half a mile below the lower rapids in that stream, and by water 350 ms. above New Orleans, and by similar means of conveyance 65 ms. below Natchitoches. This town is mostly composed of a single row of houses along the river. Lat. 31 18 N., lon. W. 15 39 W. C. Pop. about 1,000.—Town in Smith co., Tenn., situated on a branch of Caney Fork river, 45 ms. Alfeld, town of Germany, in the bishopric of Hildersheim, 15 ms. SSW. of Hildersheim. Lon. 10 4 E., lat. 51 38 N.

Alfeo, anciently Alpheus, river of Greece, in the Morea. This stream is large when compared with the country in which it flows; rises above the ruins of Megalopolis, near where Tripolizza now stands, and flowing NW. about 40 ms. along the Lapithæ mountains, receives many accessory streams from the NE. Suddenly winding to the W. and piercing the mountains, quits the valley of Arcadia, and, traversing Elis 15 ms., falls into the Ionian sea opposite the ancient Strophades, N. lat. 37 40. The Alpheus might be strictly called the river of Arcadia, as it drains that mountain-enclosed valley in all its extent.—See Morea.

Alfadena, ancient town of Naples, in Abruzzo Ceteriore. Lon. 14 20 E., lat. 41 48 N.

Alfioum kara-hissar, which signifies "The black fortress of opium," town of Asiatic Turkey, famous for the manufacture of that narcotic drug, which forms the principal part of its commerce. It is one of the principal entrepôts between Constantinople and Smyrna.

Algarva, southern province of Portugal, bounded on the N. by a minor chain of mountains, separating it from Alentejo on the E., by the river Guadiana, separating it from the Spanish province of Sevilla, and on the S. and W. by the Atlantic ocean. The mountains, which form the northern limit of Algarva, are severally called Sierra de Monchique, and that of Calderona or Calderao. The name Algarva is Arabic, and signifies "the Western country," relative to Sevilla. In from it approaches an oblong, 85 ms. from E. to W., and 25 broad from N. to S.; area about 2,100 sq. ms.; chief towns, Tavira, Faro, Silves, and Lago. Cape St. Vincent, the SW. angle of Algarva, is almost touched by, and Cape Santa Maria, its most southern point, is just traversed by, N. lat. 37°; the most northern part is in lat. 37 25. In lon. from London, it lies between 7 20 and 9° W. The climate is much more temperate than that of the bordering province of Alentejo. Vines, figs, almonds, and olives, abound. Pop. in 1830, 113,000.

Algezira, a strong town of Spain, in Andalusia, on the straits of Gibraltar; but at present in a mean condition, the harbor being decayed. It is 10 ms. NW. of Gibraltar. Lon. 5 22 W., lat. 36 14 N.

Algher, or Alcrici, town of Sardinia, on the NW. coast, with a bishop's see. Lon. 8 40 E., lat. 40 40 N.

Algiers, recently a State of Barbary, now in possession of Fr. For general view of, we refer to article Africa, head Algeria.

Algeria, name now given by the French to their recent conquests in Africa. The city of Algiers was taken by the French on July 26th, 1830, after 18 days of siege. On the 21st of January, 1837, the subjoined appeared in the Philadelphia Gazette: "Algiers.—The European population of Algiers, and the other places on the coast of Africa in the possession of the French, has increased between the 1st of January and the 1st of July, 1836, from 11,565 to 12,903. Of this number the men are reckoned at 6,949; the women at 2,633; and children at 3,321. The population of Algiers by natives is as follows: French, 3,434; English, 824; Spaniards and Portuguese, 2,757; Italians, 741; and Germans, 506. The proportions are different in other places. Thus, at Oran the number of Spaniards and Italians is increased, whilst that of the English is diminished. At Bona the French population yet equal that of all the other Europeans. The troops and natives are not included in these returns." The city of Algiers stands at N. lat. 36 48, lon. 3 1 E. of London, and almost exactly S. of Santani, in the island of Majorca, and of the extreme northeastern angle of Spain. The city rises in the form of an amphitheatre, at the extremity of a fortified anchoring ground, unsafe during a northern wind. The vicinity is diversified with hills and dales. According to some authors, the territory of Algiers is less sandy and more fertile than that of Tunis, but in fact the interior country is very imperfectly known. Pop. of the city, 80,000.

Algheri, gulf of, in the western coast of the island of Sardinia, N. lat. 40 30.—Town and seaport of the island of Sardinia, on the gulf of the same name, carries on a greater trade in corn than any other place of the island of Sardinia. Pop. 7,000. Its port cannot admit large vessels, but the spacious and fortified harbor of Porto-Conte, at 2 ms. to the E., might contain several fleets.

Algonquins, nations of Indians, W. and NW. from Lake Superior, and around the heads of the Mississippi, Winnipeg, and Assiniboin rivers.

ALGUAZIL, literally "the minister of justice," Spanish, from the Arabic. In English, constable comes nearest amongst executive officers to Alguazil. The word pronounced as if written Alguazile.

Algydim Shalo, mountains of Asia. The Ural system terminates between the sources of the Tobol and the Russian post of Orskaia. From that point it gives off two chains of elevated land; one to the E., which, traversing the steppe of the Kirguis, is known by the Kirguissan, name Ula-Tau, or the "Great Mountains," as far as the river Ishim, and from Ishim to Irtysh is called, in Russian, "Alginsky," and in Kalmuc, "Algydim-Shalo." Another chain, also, of moderate height, takes a direction, under the name of Moguldshar, towards the lake Aral, passing between it and the Caspian sea, and is supposed to be continued, under the name of the mountains of Mangislek, or Turcomania, as far as Khorassan. It is the Algydim-Shalo, and its continuation northwestward by the Ulatan, which unites the Uralian and Altaian systems in a distance of about 700 ms., in a direction of NW. and SE. From the northeastern slope of these connecting mountains, rise the numerous sources of Tobol, Ishim, and Irtysh rivers. On the opposite side the mountains flank one side of the basin of the Aral and Caspian seas.

Alhama, town of Spain, in Granada. A little below it are hot baths, accounted the best in Spain. It is seated on a valley, surrounded by craggy mountains, 25 ms. SW. of Granada. Lon. 3 24 W., lat. 36 56 N. The name Alhama is Arabic, and signifies "hot baths." The Spaniards regard this town as the most elevated in Europe. One half the year it is buried in snow, and the other exposed to scorching heat.

Alhambra.—See Grenada, the city.

Alicant, seaport of Spain, in Valencia, remarkable for its excellent wine, and the fertility of its soil, which produces excellent fruits, and plenty of rosemary of an extraordinary size. It is seated on the Mediterranean, on a bay of the same name, 85 ms. S. of Valencia. Lon. 5' W., lat. 38 16 N.

Alicata, town and port of Sicily, on the Salso river, 7 or 8 ms. from the sea. It is situated on the SW. side of the island 75 ms., almost directly W. of Syracuse. Lat. 37 4 N., lon. 14° E. of London. The harbor, though small, is much frequented. The town is famous for pastry and macaroni.

Alicudi, a small and westernmost island of the Lipari group. It is sometimes called Alicuri. Pop. 250.

ALIEN, a person born in and owing allegiance to one country, though residing in another. In the United States the regular steps necessary for an alien resident to become a citizen, are, 1st, actual residence two years at least before admission; 2d, declaration made before, and recorded by, competent authority, of renunciation of allegiance to any foreign State or sovereign, and bona fide intention to become a citizen of the United States; 3d, if an alien applicant, who, in any foreign State, held any hereditary title or order of nobility, he must, in his declaration of intention to become a citizen of the United States, renounce all such titles, &c. These rules are general, and many minor rules and exceptions stand on our statutes.

Alkmaar, town of North Holland, 6 or 7 ms. inland from the North sea. It is environed by gardens, orchards, canals, avenues, and meadows. About 16 ms. N. of Harlem, and 25 ms. S. of the Helder, and on the great canal from the Helder to Amsterdam. Pop. 9,000.

Allahabad, city of Oude, in Hindostan proper, seated at the confluence of the two great rivers the Ganges and Jumna. It was founded by the emperor Aebur, who intended it as a place of arms, but its fortifications will hardly resist the battering of a field piece. It is 470 ms. NW of Calcutta. Lon. 82 0 E. lat. 24 45 N.

Allah-Shehr, ancient Philadelphia, town of Asiatic Turkey, in the Pachalic of Aidin, about 90 ms. E. of Smyrna. Pop. 12,000. N. lat. 38 28.

Allburg.—See Alburg.

Allchurch, village of Worces'ershire, Eng. It has an almshouse founded in 1580, and the Roman Ickneld street passes through it. The bishop of Worcester had formerly a palace here; and the church, several parts of which are of Saxon architecture, contains many antique monuments. It is 5 ms. E. by N. of Bromsgrove.

Allegan, co. of Mich., having Ottawa and Kent cos. N., Barry E., Kalamazoo and Van Buren S., and Lake Michigan W., area about 600 sq. ms. N. lat. 42 36, and lon. 9 W. of W. C., intersect in it. It is traversed by and nearly all drained by the river Kalamazoo. Pop. 1840, 1,783.—Town, and seat of justice, Allegan co., Mich., situated on Kalamazoo river; by postroad 161 miles a little N. of W. from Detroit.

Alleghany, river of Pa. and N. Y., the main constituent of Ohio river. In strictness of the principles of physical geography the Alleghany is the Ohio, of which Monongahela is only a main branch. By the Shawnees the Alleghany was called Palawa Thepika. The remote sources of this stream are in Potter and McKean cos., Pa., from whence, flowing northward, they unite in the SE. angle of Cattaraugus co., N. Y., over which it curves 40 ms., and re-enters Pa. on the line separating McKean and Warren cos. Inclining to a general course of SW. over Warren and Venango, receives in the latter a large confluent French creek from the NW., again bends to SE., which latter course it maintains to the mouth of Mahoning, near the centre of Armstrong co., having, in the intermediate distance, received from the eastward Clarion river and Red Bank creek. Once more inflecting to the SW., and receiving from the eastward, with several creeks, the large confluent Kiskiminitas, flows on to its junction with Monongahela to form the Ohio at Pittsburg. The entire length of the basin of the Alleghany is 173 ms. along very near lon. 2 0 W. of W. C.; mean breadth 70 ms., and area 12,110 sq. ms., or very nearly double that of the Monongahela. The position of this river is admirably calculated to render it a great navigable chain of intercommunication. The main volume is a boatable stream at Hamilton, in the State of N. Y., within 25 ms. from the navigable water of Genessee river at Angelica. French creek becomes navigable at Waterford, with a portage of only 14 ms. between that point to the navigable waters of Lake Erie. These lines are too obviously available to be overlooked. Already the great line of Pa. canal and railroad passes down the Conemaugh and Kiskiminitas to the mouth of the latter, there crosses the Alleghany by an aqueduct, goes down the right bank to opposite Pittsburg, where another aqueduct introduces the line of canal into that city. The water of the Alleghany is much more pure and limpid than that of the Monongahela. In lat. the Alleghany basin lies between 40 0 and 42 26 N.

Alleghany, one of the chains of the Appalachian system. It is an unanswerable objection to giving the name of Alleghany to the whole system that it is applied to a particular chain in Va., Md., and Pa. From the basin of the Kenawha to that of the western branch of the Susquehanna, through four degrees of latitude, the Alleghany is a dividing ridge between the waters flowing towards the Atlantic and those pursuing an opposite course into the Ohio. The ridges which, as links, form the chain of Alleghany are not very distinctly defined, though the entire chain constitutes so remarkable a feature in the geography of the U. S. The length of the Alleghany chain of mountains, from Monroe co., Va., in the valley of Kenawha, to Centre co., Pa., is about 300 ms. The height varies, but may be safely assumed at a mean of 2,000 feet. Similar to all other chains of the Appalachian system, that of Alleghany does not rise into peaks, but stretches in parallel ridges, which, to the view from either side, present gently rounded or swelling knolls, or elegantly defined lines, which bound the horizon. The component material of the Alleghany is mostly grauwacke, although limestone and other rocks occasionally occur. This chain is rich in iron and bituminous coal. Some ridges have naked summits, but this feature is rare, the ridges being generally clothed with timber in all their height. A few mountain plains, table lands on the small scale, with good arable soil, occur, but mostly the soil of such plateaus are rocky and barren, some are swampy. Along the whole chain oaks, pines, and hemlock, are the most abundant forest trees.

Alleghany, co. of N. Y., bounded W. by Cattaraugus, NW. by Genessee, NE. by Livingston, E. by Steuben, and S. by McKean and Potter cos., Pa. Length from S. to N. 40 ms.; mean breadth 28, and area 1,120 sq. ms. It is nearly equally divided by Genessee river, which, rising in Pa., winds northwardly through Alleghany. Much of the soil is alluvial, and the residue varied, hill and dale; generally more adapted to grazing than to grain crops. Pop., 1820, 9,330; in 1830, 26,218; in 1840, 40,975; lat. between 42 0 and 42 37.

Alleghany, co. of Pa., having Washington co. S. and SW., Beaver NW., Butler N. and Westmoreland E. Length from E. to W. 32 ms.; mean breadth 18, and area 575 sq. ms. The face of this co. is in a peculiar manner diversified. The Alleghany river enters from the NE., and the united streams of the Yough and Monongahela from the SE., and the whole waters uniting at Pittsburg form the Ohio. The latter, winding to NW., traverses 14 ms. of the western part of the county. To the rivers may be added Chartiers and some smaller creeks, contributing to fertilize the fine vales, which, though not spreading between mountains, are the depressions of swelling hills, productive to their highest summits. In the bosom of these hills lie inexhaustible strata of the finest bituminous coal. Excellent building stone and limestone abound. In fine, it may be doubted whether another spot of the globe of equal extent surpasses, and certainly very few can equal in combined advantages Alleghany co., of Pa. Pop., 1820, 34,921, and in 1830, 50,552; and in 1840, 81,235. Chief town the city of Pittsburg. Lat. from 40 14 to 40 31 N. lon. 3 W. of W. C. passes about 1 m. below the city.

Alleghany, extreme western co. of Md., bounded by Washington co. of Md., E., by Potomac river, separating it from Va., S., by a N. and S. line separating it from Preston co., Va., W., and by Somerset and Bedford cos., Pa., N. Extreme length along the Pa. line, 65 ms.; the breadth is very irregular; on Randolph and Preston cos. of Va. it is about 35 ms.; at Cumberland about 7; and the mean may be assumed at 12½; superficies 800 sq. ms. This co. is traversed by the main chain of the Alleghany mountains, which discharges the higher branches of the Yough to the NW., and those of the N. branch of the Potomac southwardly into that stream. The entire face of the co. excessively broken and rocky, but with much excellent arable valley land, and some even on the mountain plains. In the bowels of the mountains of this county bituminous coal of the very best quality abound; which, when the improvements on both roads and canals, already in progress, are completed, must become of immense value. Iron ore, also, is found in great abundance. The national road commences under that title at Cumberland, the seat of justice for this county, which place, on the completion of the Ohio railroad and Chesapeake and Ohio Canal, must become a great interior depot. The relative heights may in part be seen by the subjoined element. Cumberland stands elevated 537 feet above tide level in lower Potomac, and following the national road westward 9 miles, to Frostburg, the rise is 1,255 feet, and at the highest summit, where the road passes, 2,278 feet above tide level. In lat. this co. extends from 39 16 to 39 44, and in lon. W. of W. C. from 1 18 to 2 30. Pop., 1820, 8,654; in 1830, risen to 10,609; and in 1840, 15,686.

Alleghany, co. of Va., bounded by Botsourt SE. and S., Monroe SW., the Alleghany mountains, separating it from Greenbriar, W., by Bath N., and Rockbridge NE. Length from NE. to SW. 28 ms., mean breadth 18, and area 500 sq. ms. This co. occupies a high mountain valley, drained by several of the higher branches of James river, lying between lat. 37 35 and 38 0 N., and central lon. 3 W. of W. C., and rising to a mean level exceeding 1,000 feet above the ocean tides. The seasons of this co. are essentially influenced by mountain exposure and by relative height. Chief town, Covington. Pop., 1830, 2,816.—Bridge, town, McKean co., Pa., postroad 210 ms. NW. Harrisburg.

Alleganza, one of the Canary islands, lying to the N. of Graciosa, and to the E. of St. Clare. There are several castles that defend the harbor.

Alemance, town, Guilford co., N. C., 77 ms. NW. of Raleigh.

Allen, town, Alleghany co., N. Y., postroad 276 ms. W. Albany.—Vill., Cumberland co., Pa., 16 ms. from Harrisburg.

Allen, a southern and border county of Ky.; bounded W. by Simpson, NW. and N. by Warren, NE. by Barren, E. by Monroe, and S. by Smith co., Ten. Length from N. to S. 23 ms.; mean width 17, and area about 400 sq. ms. It is drained in a northwestern direction by Big Barren branch of Green river; chief town Scottsville; N. lat. 36 45, and lon. W. C. 9 10 W. intersect near the centre of this county. Pop. in 1820, 5,327, in 1830, 12,970.—County of Ohio, bounded by Mercer W., Vanwert NW., Putnam N., Hardin E., Logan SE., and Shelby S. This county occupies a table land, from which flow, NW., the sources of Auglaize river, W. those of St. Mary's river, and S. those of Miami river. Though flat, the soil is very productive. It is nearly a square of 24 ms. each side, and contains 554 sq. ms. The Miami canal runs the whole length of this county, nearly along its western border. Pop. in 1830, 578, but in 1837 was estimated at 4,000. N. lat. 40 40, and lon. W. C. 7 10, intersect in this county.—County of Indiana, bounded by Adams and Wells S., Huntington and Whiteley W., Noble and De Kalb N., and Paulking and Williams, of Ohio, E.; area 624 sq. ms. N. lat. 41, and lon. 8 W. of W. C., intersect in it. Chief town Fort Wayne. Pop. in 1840, 5,942.

Allendorf, small town in the landgravate of Hesse-Cassel, remarkable for its salt works and three stone bridges. It is seated on the Weser, 15 ms. E. of Cassel. Lon. 9 59 E., lat. 51 19 N.

Allensville, Mifflin co., Pa., 76 ms. NW. from Harrisburg.

Allen's Ferry and town, Warren co., Ten., by postroad 76 ms. SE. by E. from Nashville.

Allen's Fresh, town in Charles co. Md., by postroad 43 ms. southward of W. C.

Allen's Settlement, town in Natchitoches parish, La., by postroad 252 ms. N. W. from N. Orleans.

Allentown, Merrimack co., N. H., E. of Suncook river, 11 ms. SE. of Concord.

Allensville, town in Mifflin co. Pa., by postroad 76 ms. northwestward of Harrisburg.

Allenton, town in Montgomery co., N. C., by postroad 123 ms. SW. by W. of Raleigh.—Vill. in the southern part of Wilcox co., Ala., 19 ms. to the southward of Canton, the county seat.—Vill. in the northern part of Green co., Ky., 15 ms. northwardly from Greensburg, the county seat.

Allentown, Lehigh co., Pa.—See Northampton, postown.

Aller, river of Germany, and principal confluent of the Rhine, rises in Brunswick and Hanover, traverses the latter, and joins the Weser near Verden. Its western branch (the Leine) passes the city of Hanover.

Allier, river of Fr., and one of the main and extreme constituents of the Loire; rises in the Cevennes mountains, and, flowing northwardly, traverses the ancient Auvergne and Bourbonnais, unites with the Loire from the eastward, near Nevers. Length, by comparative courses, about 200 ms.—Dep. of Fr., nearly commensurate with the ancient Bourbonnais. It is traversed from S. to N. by the Allier river, and extends eastward of the latter to the Loire. Central lat. 46 30. Moulins, on the Allier, is the capital, standing about 180 ms. a little E. of S. from Paris. Pop. of the dep. 285,300, and of Monlins 14,500.

Allmacarron, a seaport of Spain, in the province of Murcia, at the mouth of the Guadalantine, near the Mediterranean, 20 ms. SW. of Carthagena. Lon. 0 56 W., lat. 37 28 N.

Alloa, commercial town on the Frith of Forth, Scotland, about 20 ms. higher up the river than Leith, and 5 ms. E. of Stirling. It consists of one spacious street, well paved, and shaded with rows of lime trees. Here is a custom-house for the convenience of shipping in this part of the north, and it is the resort of all the coal vessels in the neighborhood. It has a glass-house and some other manufactures. Lon. 3 45 W., lat. 56 10 N.

ALLODIUM, landed property held in absolute independence of any superior, and is the contrast of feudal landed property. In the United States, it is generally supposed that lands are mostly allodial; but this must be taken with much restriction, as all lands in the United States are liable to taxation and taxes laid by the Government—a full acknowledgment that they are, if not by words of law, yet by operation of law, really held in fee.

Allouettes, point in the St. Lawrence river, at the mouth of the Saguenay river.

Alloway Creek, and two townships of Salem co., N. J. The creek falls into the Delaware river 6 ms. S. of Salem, the county seat. Alloway town situated near the head of the creek, 8 ms. a little S. of E. from Salem.

All-Saints Parish, Georgetown, S. C.

Alum Bank, town in Bedford co. Pa., 131 ms. W. from Harrisburg.

Almagro, town of Spain, in La Mancha, 15 ms. SE. of Ciudad Real, and about 110 ms. almost exactly S. of Madrid.

Almaguer, city of Quito, South America, 20 ms. S. from Propayar. N. lat. 1 56, W. lon. W. C. 0 6.

ALMANAC, from the Arabic, and literally "The Calendar." Amongst modern and cultivated Caucasian nations, "The Almac" is a real treatise of popular astronomy, and one of the most precious fruits of printing.

Almandrel, town of South America, on the coast of Chili.

Almanza, town of New Castile, 50 ms. SW. of Valencia. Lon. 0 56 W., lat. 38 54 N.

Almeda, town of Portugal, in Estramadura, seated on the Tajo, opposite Lisbon. Lon. 9 4 W., lat. 38 33 N.

Almirante, town in Walton co., Fa., 60 or 70 ms. NE. by E. of Pensacola.

Almond, town in Alleghany co., N. Y., 12 ms. NE. of Angelica. Pop. in 1830, 1804.

Almoro, town of Indostan, capital of Kumaon, and situated between the Kalee and another branch of the Gogra, and on the southern slope of the Himalah mountains, about 200 ms. NE. by E. of Delhi. N. lat. 29 30, and very nearly on lon. 80 0 E. of London.

Alna, town in Lincoln co., Me., 54 ms: NE. from Portland.

Alnwick, the county town of Northumberland, Eng., on the river Alne, is a populous well built town, with a town house. It is 30 ms. N. of Newcastle, 26 S. of Berwick, and 305 N. by W. of London, Lon. 1 30 W., lat. 55 25 N.—Tp. in Northumberland co., U. C., lies in the rear and N. of Haldimand.

Alnwich, a town of Wales, on the NW. coast of Anglesea, with a harbor for small vessels. In 1768, when the Parys mines were opened, it did not contain above six houses; but now they amount to more than 2,000. It is 25 ms. W. of Beaumaris, and 275 NW. of London.—See Parys.

Alost, town of Flanders, on the river Dender, in the midway between Brussels and Ghent. Lon. 4 12 E., lat. 50 58 N.

Alpnach, or Alpnacht, town of Switzerland, in the canton of Unterwalden, 20 ms. SW. by W. of the city of Schwitz, and 5 ms., in a like direction, from Stanz.

Alps, the highest mountains in Europe, separating Italy from France and Germany. They begin on the side of France towards the Mediterranean, between the territory of Genoa and country of Nice, and terminate at the Gulf of Carnero, which is part of the Gulf of Venice. They consist of lofty chains of mountains, ranging one upon another, with only narrow valleys between. They are composed of stupendous rocky masses, 2, 4, and even 6 being piled upon each other, and from 4,000 to 15,600 feet high. There are few passes over them, and those of difficult access. Switzerland takes up a good part of these mountains, or rather the valleys between them.

Comparison of the Alps, the Pyrenees, and the mountains of Scandinavia.—The following comparison between the three great chains of European mountains, the Alps, the Pyrenees, and the mountains of Scandinavia, has been made by Professor Schouw, of Copenhagen. The Pyrenees lie between 42 and 43½° N. lat.; the Alps between 43½ and 48°; the mountains of Scandinavia between 58 and 71°. The Alps and Pyrenees are consequently at an almost equal distance between the equator and the north pole; the Scandinavian chain extends to the polar circle; the Pyrenees are not more than a degree of latitude in breadth; the Alps occupy four degrees and a half; the Scandinavian mountains thirteen. It is clear that these last must present a greater variety of temperature, and have, in general, a much colder climate. In longitude the Pyrenees extend from 16 to 21°, the Alps from 22½ to 35°, and the Scandinavian mountains from 22½ to 48° from the meridian of Ferro. The heights are well known of the Alps and Pyrenees, but those of the more remarkable of the Scandinavian chain never having before appeared in print, we insert them at length.

Alps, lower dep. of Fr., bordering on the Maritime Alps, and comprising much of the ancient province, and extending between the rivers Ubaye and Verdon, branches of Durance, and by the smaller confluent of these streams the whole department is watered. The slope westward. Digne is the capital. Pop. 153,000.—Upper dep. of Fr., separated from lower Alps by the Ubaye river. This department is bordered on the E. by the Cottian Alps, separating it from Piedmont. It is in some measure commensurate with the late province of Dauphiny. It is drained by the higher sources of the Isere and Durance rivers. Gap is the capital. Pop. 125,329.

Alpuxares, high mountains of Granada, in Spain, near the coast of the Mediterranean, inhabited by the Moriscoes, who carefully cultivate the ground, which produces excellent wines and fruits.

The mountains known in Spain by the Moorish term Alpujarras, or Alpuxares, is the same known from the Spanish language “Sierra de Nevada,” or mountains covered with perpetual snow.—See article Sierra de Nevada.

Alvesford, a town in Hampshire, Eng. It has about 200 houses, two principal streets, which are large and broad, and a small manufacture of linseys. It is 18 ms. ENE. of Southampton, and 57 WSW. of London. Lon. 1 1 W., lat. 51 6 N.

Alsace, a late province of Fr., bounded on the E. by the Rhine, on the S. by Switzerland and Franche Comte, on the W. by Lorraine, and on the N. by the palatinate of the Rhine, now included in the departments of the Upper and Lower Rhine; which see.—Tp. Berks co., P., on the E. side of the river Schuylkill. Pop. in 1810, 1,275, in 1820, 1,640.

Alsen, an island of Denmark, in the Little Belt, or entrance into the Baltic, between Sleswick and Funen. It has nothing remarkable but two castles, and is 100 ms. W. of Copenhagen. Pop. 16,000.

Alsfeld, an ancient town of Germany, in the landgrate of Hesse Cassel, 12 ms. NW. of Marburg. It is an ancient town, and its inhabitants were the first of this country who embraced the Reformation. Lon. 9 0 E., lat. 50 55 N.

Alsheda, a town of Sweden, in the province of Smoland, near which a gold mine was discovered in 1738.

Alsop's Tavern, post town in Spottsylvania co., Va., 76 ms. from Richmond.

Alstead, town in the northern part of Cheshire co., N. H., 14 ms. N. of Keene, and 50 ms. a little S. of W. from Concord. Pop. in 1830, 1,559, and in 1840, 1,454.

Alston-Moor, town in Cumberland, Eng. Near this town are extensive lead mines. It is 20 ms. E. by S. of Carlisle, and 303 NNW. of London. Lon. 2 14 W., lat. 50 54 N.

*Altai*n, mountains. This term has been erroneously applied to the whole great central chain of Asia, which, near the Aral lake, branches north-eastward by east, and reaches the sea of Ochotsk to the NW. from the mouth of the Amur river, at N. lat. 56. The distinctive name of Altai, or Altay, is properly given to that part of the chain W. from the Selenga river. Thus restricted, the Altaian mountains form, nevertheless, an immense range of upwards of 1,400 ms. in length, rising in some places to 10,000 feet. This chain is pierced by the southern sources of the Irtysh, Oby, and Yenisei rivers, which rise on the elevated valley between the Altaian mountains and those of Bogdo.

Altai, is a term so very generic it is with difficulty clearly understood. Under it are included, not only the "greater and lesser Altai," but also those of Kolyvane, Oorman, Kutzneek, the Svanian chain, the Baikal chain, with those of Nertchinsk, Daooria, Thian Chan, and on the far east the chains of Iblanoi and Stanavoi. "All the mountains of the south of Siberia," says Malte Brun, "from the Irtysh river to the W. side of Lake Baikal, belong to the central plateau, and great chains with which it is connected or crowned." This view is no doubt correct, as the sources of the Irtysh, Oby, and Jeneisey, all rise on the central plateau, and in their northern course pierce the Altai.

Altamahah:—See Alatamahah.

Altamura, town of Italy, in the province of Terra-di-Barri, of the kingdom of Naples, about 50 ms. NW. by W. of Tarento, and 150 ms. a little S. of E. from Naples. Pop. about 1,600.

Altamira, town of Mexico, on the border between Vera Cruz and San Louis Potosi, on the N. side of the bay of Tampico, and near the Gulf of Mexico. N. lat. 22 26, W. lon. W. C. 21 11.

Altamira, river of Mexico, rising near the city of San Louis Potosi, and, flowing E. 150 ms., joins the Moctezumo, or Tula, and forms the bay of Tampico.

Altamora, town of Naples, in Calabria Citerior, 15 ms. NW. of Basigniano. Lon. 16 22 E., lat. 39 50 N.

Alton, town in Hampshire, Eng., seated on the river Wey. It has a famous free-school, a large manufacture of plain and figured baragons, ribbed druggets, and serges de Nismes; and round the town are plantations of hops. It is 18 ms. ENE. of Southampton, and 48 WSW. of London. Lon. 0 56 W., lat. 51 22 N.—Tp. in Strafford co., N. H. Pop. about 1,000.—Incorporated town of Madison co., Ill., situated on the left bank of the Mississippi river, about 2½ ms. above the mouth of the Missouri. N. lat. 38 55, lon. 13 8 W. of W. C., and about 16 ms. nearly due N. from St. Louis, and 15 northwestward from Edwardsville, the county seat. It is advantageously placed as a commercial depot, and has already assumed much of the character suitable to its position. There were in it, as early as 1837, three printing offices, with several churches and schools, wholesale and retail stores, four large hotels, &c. Pop. in 1840, including Alton city and Upper Alton town and precincts, 4,450.

Altona, flourishing seaport of Germany, in the Duchy of Holstein, commodiously seated on the Elbe, in the vicinity of Hamburg. The Danes built it in that situation that it might rival Hamburg in commerce. Altona is separated from Hamburg by the Alster, a creek from Stormaria. Lon. 9 52 E., lat. 53 37 N.

Altorf, town of Germany, formerly in the territory of Nuremberg, with a famous university, a library, and a physic garden. It is 10 ms. SE. of Nuremberg. Lon. 11 22 E., lat. 49 20 N.—Town of Germany, in the circle of Suabia, 20 ms. NE. of Constance, and subject to the house of Austria. Lon. 9 30 E., lat. 47 50 N.—Town of Switzerland, capital of the canton of Uri, seated near the mouth of the river Russ, on the lake of Lucerne, 20 ms. SE. of Lucerne. Lon. 8 25 E., lat. 46 55 N.

Altringham, town in Cheshire, Eng., 10 ms. E. of Warrington, and 180 NW. of London. Lon. 2 32 W., lat. 53 23 N.

Alva-de-Tormes, a considerable town of Spain, in Leon, with a strong castle, seated on the Tormes, 12 ms. SE. of Salamanca. Lon. 5 4 W., lat. 41 0 N.

Alvarado, large river of Mexico, with a town of some consequence at its mouth, in Vera Cruz; it is formed by the Alvarado proper and Rio Blanco, the latter rising from the eastern slope of the Peak D'Orizaba, and nearly W. of the city of Vera Cruz. The Alvarado enters the Gulf of Mexico at N. lat. 18 50 W. Lon. W. C. 18 40.

Alveston, village in Gloucestershire, Eng. On the top of a hill, near the Severn, is a large round camp, called Oldbury, where several antiquities have been dug up. It is 8 ms. N. by E. of Bristol.

Alumets, les, on the Ottawa river, above the Rapids, which are higher than riviere du Nord.

Alured Cape, in the tp. of Clarke, U. C., N. side of Lake Ontario.

Alzira, town of Spain, in Valencia, on the river Xucar, 17 ms. S. of Valencia. Lon. 0 10 E., lat. 36 6 N.

Amacusa, small island of Japan, lying to the southwest of the large island of Kiusu, or Ximo.

Amadan, or Hamadan, town of Persia, 200 ms. NE. of Bagdad. It is the ancient Ecbatana. Lon. 47 4 E., lat. 35 15 N.

Amadia, trading town of Asia, in Curdistan, belonging to the Turks; seated on a high mountain, 40 ms. SE. of Gezira. Lon. 41 5 E., lat. 36 5 N.

Amak, island in the Baltic, near Copenhagen, from which it is separated by a canal.

Amal, town of Sweden, in the province of Gothland, with a good harbor on Lake Wenner, 175 ms. SW. of Upsal. It carries on a great trade in timber, deals, and tar. Lon. 12 40 E., lat. 59 0 N.

Amalfi, an ancient town in the Citerior Principality of Naples. Flavio Gioia, who is said to have invented the mariner's compass, about the beginning of the 14th century, was a native of this town. It was bere, also, that in 1137, the Pandects of Justinian were recovered. It is seated in a charming country, on the western coast of the Gulf of Salerno, 13 ms. SW. of Salerno. Lon. 14 45 E., lat., 40 26 N.

Amanbia, river of South America, rising between the Parana and Paraguay, and falling into the former at lat. 24°.

Amanda, tp. in Fairfield co., O. Pop. in 1820, 1,221.

Amandasville, village in Egbert co., Ga.

Amand, St. town of Fr., in the dep. of Cher, and late territory of Bourbonnois, seated on the river Cher, 20 ms. S. of Bourges. Lon. 2 30 E., lat. 46 45 N.—St. town of Fr., in the dep. of the North, and in the late French Flanders, seated on the Scarpe, 7 ms. N. of Valenciennes. Lon. 3 35 E., lat. 50 27 N.

Amantea, seaport town of Naples, in Calabria Citerior, near the bay of Eufemia, 20 ms. SW. of Cosenza. Lon. 16 10 E., lat. 39 12 N.

Amarns, mountain of Turkey, in Asia, now the Almadagh, is a branch of the Taurus, separating Cilicia from Syria, and having but two narrow passes, one towards the Euphrates, and the other close to the sea. The first is the ancient Amanian defile, (Pylæ Amanicæ), the other the defiles of Syria, Amapalla, seaport of North America, in Guatemala, seated on a gulf of the same name, 220 ms. SE. of Guatemala. N. lat. 12 50, W. lon. W. C. 11 56.

Amapalla, or Fonseca, large bay or gulf of N. America, between the province of Guatemala and Nicaragua. N. lat. 12 0, lon. W. C. 11 0 W.

Amaro, Juan, town of Brazil, in the Captain Generalship of Bahia, on the Pannaco river. S. lat. 13 20, E. lon. W. C. 36 50.

Amasia, ancient town of Natolia, the birthplace of Strabo, the geographer. It is the residence of a bashaw, and gives its name to the province it stands in, where there are the best wines and fruits of Natolia. It is seated near the river Cassalmack, 36 ms. N. of Tocat. Lon. 36 0 E., lat. 40 31 N.

Amastro, Amassera, or ancient Amastris, town of Turkey, in Asia, province of Anatolia, situated on the coast of the Black Sea, 200 ms. NE. by E. from the northern mouth of the Bosphorus.

Amasura, Amazura, or Amazura, small western river of Fa., interlocking sources with those of St. John's and Hillsborough rivers, and falling into the Gulf of Mexico opposite to an island of the same name, about 45 ms. NNW. from Tampa Bay, at N. lat. 28 25.

Amathas, now Limasol; which see.

Amatitlan, town of Central America, on the coast of the Pacific ocean, 4 or 5 ms. NW. of Guatemala.

Amazichi, principal town of the island of Santa Maura, ancient Leucadia, situated on the NE. side of the island, about 10 ms. SW. of the entrance into the Gulf of Arta. N. lat. 38 48, lon. 20 45 E. of London.

Amazon, or Orellana, a great river of South America, which has its source in Peru, not far from the Pacific ocean. The principal of the tributary streams are the Napo, Japura, and Negro, from the N.; the Tocantinas, Xingua, Tapajos, Madeira, Jurus, Intay, Grand Para, Gualaga, and Lauricocha, from the S. The Amazon, including all its confluent and their tributaries, drains an area of more than 2,800,000 sq. ms. It enters the Atlantic ocean under the equator; lon. E. W. C. 28°. Very erroneous opinions prevail in the U. S. respecting the relative extent of the basins of the Mississippi and Amazon, and also upon the comparative length of the two streams. Measured by steps of 100 ms. along its valley, the Mississippi, by either the Missouri or Yellow Stone rivers, is about 2,500 ms. in length. The Amazon by the Madeira is 2,300 ms., by the Tunguragua 2,600, and by the Grand Para 2,900 ms., measured also by comparative scale. In respect to the area drained, the rank of the Amazon is still more imposing. The Mississippi basin stretches from the sources of the French Broad to those of Maria's river, 1,700 ms., with a mean width of 800 ms; superficies about 1,300,000 sq. ms. The basin of the Amazon, from the head of the island of Ioanna to the sources of the Lauricocha, is about 2,100, the mean width exceeding 1,400 ms.; consequently, this immense basin extends to near 3,000,000 sq. ms.

Amazonia, a vague term to designate all the interior regions of South America watered by the Amazon river, and yet inhabited only by the native tribes of savages. It was discovered in 1580 by Francisco Orellana, who sailed down the river Amazon to the Atlantic. Observing companies of women in arms on its banks, he called the country Amazonia, and gave the name of Amazon to the river. But this was probably a fiction, for M. Condanine could perceive no such women.

AMBASSADOR, the highest title of national representatives which one sovereign power can send to another; ambassador ordinary when permanently resident at a foreign court, or extraordinary when sent on a special mission. The most ample title given to these ministers is ambassador extraordinary or minister plenipotentiary. Legates are really ambassadors, as the term legate means messenger—hence delegate. Legate, as a title, has been especially applied to the ambassadors of the Pope of Rome to foreign States. Legates a latere are counsellors or assistants of the Pope, and must be a cardinal or bishop; legates de latere are not necessarily cardinals. The persons of ambassadors are by all civilized nations held sacred, and necessarily, as they are the links to reunite as well as unite nations, and as their mission is almost invariably that of peace. The three terms, ambassador, legate, and minister, are from roots signifying messengers, servants, representatives, &c.

Ambelakia, town of European Turkey, in Thessaly, and in the vale of Tempe.

Amber, village, Onondago co., N. Y.

Amber Bay, of Yucatan, on the coast of Honduras. N. lat. 19 40, W. lon. W. C. 11 50.

Amberg, handsome town of Germany, capital of the Upper Palatinate of Bavaria. It has a strong castle, and is seated on the river Ills, 40 ms. E. of Nuremberg. Lon. 12 7 E., lat. 49 20 N.

Ambert, town of France, in the department of the Puy de Dome, and late province of Auvergne, seated on a beautiful valley on the river Ore. It is 21 ms. E. of Issoire, and 300 S. by E. of Paris. Lon. 3 50 E., lat. 45 25 N.

Ambergrease Key, island in the bay of Honduras, on the coast of Yucatan. N. lat. 18 50, W. lon. W. C. 11 48.

Ambleside, town of Westmoreland, Eng., on Winandermere, 13 ms. NW. of Kendal, and 271 NNW. of London. Lon. 3 6 W., lat. 54 28 N.

Ambleteuse, seaport of France, in the department of the Straits of Calais, and late province of Picardy, 8 ms. N. of Boulogne, defended by a battery of cannon. Lon. 1 41 E., lat. 50 49 N.

Amboise, town of France, in the dep. of Indre and Loire, and late province of Touraine, seated at the confluence of the Loire and Masee. It is 12 ms. E. of Tours, and 118 S. by W. of Paris. Lon. 0 54 E., lat. 47 25 N.

Amboy, or Perth Amboy, city and po. town, Middlesex co., N. J.; has a good harbor, and finely situated for a seaport, lying open to Sandy Hook. It stands on a point at the junction of Raritan river and Arthur Kill sound, 35 ms. SW. of N. Y. city, and 74 NE. of Philadelphia. A railroad connects it with Camden, opposite Philadelphia. Pop. in 1810, 715, in 1820, 898, and in 1840, 1,303.

Amboy, South, tp., Middlesex co., N. J., lying S. of Amboy bay. Pop. in 1810, 3,041, in 1820, 3,406.

Amboy, bay between South Amboy and Staten Island, formed by the union of the Raritan and Passaic rivers.

Amboyna, an island of Asia, in the Indian ocean, with a garrison town of the same name. It is the chief of the Moluccas, and remarkable for the quantity of cloves and nutmegs it produces. The English and Dutch had factories here at the beginning of the 17th century, but the Dutch expelled the English. Lon. 127 0 E., lat. 4 0 S.

Ambresbury, town in Wiltshire, Eng., 6 ms. N. of Salisbury, and 78 W. of London. Lon. 1 40 W., lat. 51 11 N.

Ambrym, one of the New Hebrides, in the S. Pacific ocean. Lon. 168 12 E., lat. 16 10 N.

Amedabad, a large and populous city of Hindostan, and the capital of the province of Guzerat. It is one of the best fortified places in India, but was taken by General Goddard, in 1780, from the Poonah Mahrattas, to whom it was restored in 1783. It stands in a beautiful plain, on the banks of a navigable river that falls into the Gulf of Cambraj, 321 ms. N. of Bombay. Lon. 72 37 E., lat. 22 58 N.

Amednagur, city of Hindostan, in the Deccan, once the capital of the Soubah of the same name, which now is better known by that of Dowlatabad. This city was the residence of the Emperor Aurungzebe, during his conquest of the Deccan and the Carnatic. It is 181 ms. by Poonah from Bombay. Lon. 75 0 E., lat. 19 10 N.

Ameland, island of the kingdom of Holland, appertaining to and lying north of the province of Friesland. It lies also NE. from the Zuyder sea, and 20 ms. N. of Lewarden. N. lat. 53 3, and lon. 5 20 E. of London.

Amelia, an episcopal city of Italy, in the State of the Church, in the duchy of Spoleto, 20 ms. SW. of Spoleta, and 45 N. of Roine. Lon. 12 30 E., lat. 41 33 N.—Co. of Virginia, having Cumberland co. or the Appomattox river NW., the Appomattox or Powhatan N., the Appomattox or Chesterfield NE., Dinwiddie SE., Nottaway S., and Prince Edward SW. Length 30 ms., with a mean width of 10; area 300 sq. ms. Pop. in 1820, 11,106, in 1830, 11,031, and in 1840, 10,320.—Court-house and town, Amelia co., Va., 40 ms. SW. by W. from Richmond. N. lat. 37 18, lon. W. C. 1 W.—island in the Atlantic ocean, coast of E. Florida, S. from Cumberland island. Lat. 30 35 N., extending 13 ms. from the mouth of Nassau to St. Mary's rivers, with a mean width exceeding a mile.

Ameliasburg, tp. in the co. of Prince Edward, U. C.; is the westernmost tp. of that co., bounded by the carrying place, which leads from the head of the bay of Quinte to Lake Ontario, and is washed by the waters of the bay and the lake.

AMERICA.—This continent, with Greenland and intermediate islands, extends from Cape Horn, S. lat. 55°, to head of Baffin's Bay, 77 0 N.; indeed we might say 80 0 N., or through 135 0 of lat. With the use of maps, the only means we possess to effect the purpose, it is not practicable to decide to any great nicety the land area of large surfaces with so irregular outline; but we presume that the following tabular views will give good general knowledge of the physical and political subdivisions of America.

It may be noted in advance that, in regard to latitude, the extreme northern part of South America is very near the middle, north and south, that sub-continent extending to very near 12 degrees of N. latitude. The relative adjectives of North and South, to distinguish the two great American expansions, give very erroneous ideas of their real comparative positions, which are more correctly northwestern and southeastern.

South America has area, in sq. ms.—
North of the equator	- 1,188,000
Equator to S. lat. 10 0	- 1,892,000
South lat. 10 0 to 20 0	- 1,540,000
Do 20 0 to 30 0	- 1,079,000
Do 30 0 to 40 0	- 633,000
Do 40 0 to 50 0	- 239,000
Do beyond 50 0	- 50,000
Total area	- 6,621,000

Of this expanse 1,188,000 lie north, and 5,433,000 sq. ms. lie south of the equator. Within the Torrid zone spreads within a small fraction of 5,000,000 sq. ms. of South America, and beyond the southern tropic about 1,616,000 sq. ms. It may be remarked that South America stretches 9 degrees of lat., or upwards of 600 ms. further S. than the southern island of New Zealand, and that this austral extension of South America is the most extended habitable region of the Southern Hemisphere of the earth.

North America has area, in sq. ms.—
South of lat. 10 0 N.	- 35,000
N. lat. 10 0 to 20 0	- 460,500
Do 20 0 to 30 0	- 593,300
Do 30 0 to 40 0	- 1,655,000
Do 40 0 to 50 0	- 1,937,200
Do 50 0 to 60 0	- 1,777,000
Do 60 0 to 70 0, including Greenland	- 2,009,000
Do above 70 0	- 303,000
Total of N. America and Greenland	8,770,000
Add area of South America	- 6,621,000
Total area of America	- 15,391,000

North America, including most of the islands of the West Indies, will have in the Torrid zone, sq. ms.—

In the West Indies	- 90,000
On the Continent	- 1,710,000

Area of North America in the Torrid zone	- 1,800,000
Area in the N. Temperate zone	- 5,920,240
Area in N. Frigid zone	- 1,049,760
Total of North America as above	- 8,770,000

Comparative extent of America with the other great sections of the earth.

Africa, sq. stat. ms.	- 10,802,000
Asia, including Insular Asia, Australia, including Polynesia, &c., Europe, Continental and Insular America, sq. stat. ms.	- 15,134,300
North America, including most of the Archipelago of the West Indies, Les Antilles of the Fr., has area in the Torrid zone, sq. ms.—
In the West Indies	- 90,000
On the Continent	- 1,710,000

Total land area of N. A.
in the Torrid zone	- 1,800,000

General physical and political view of America.

Casting a comprehensive view over America, from the extreme S. to the extreme N., the whole continent has the aspect of being divided into two very unequal slopes or inclined planes; the most extensive towards the Atlantic, and the narrowest falling towards the Pacific ocean. This great feature is particularly striking in South America. In a distance of upwards of 5,000 ms. from Cape Froward, or western mouth of the straits of Magellan, to the Gulf of Panama, the greatest breadth of the western slope between S. lat. 35 0 and 40 0, and between S. lat. 4 0 and 6 0, at either place very little exceeds in breadth 100 ms.; nor would the entire western slope average above, if as much, as 70 ms. breadth from the Andes mountains to the Pacific ocean. From these elements, it is shown that the two slopes of South America are very nearly as 19 to 1.

Though in North America the slopes are not so very unequal, yet even in the latter the difference is very remarkable. In a distance of 1,200 ms., from the Bay of Panama to that of Tehuantepec, the width of the western slope in the broadest part falls under 100 ms., and is fully estimated at 50 ms.; mean breadth or area 60,000 sq. ms. Thence, northwards, the western slope widens rapidly, and though the northwestern part of North America is but imperfectly known, we may safely assume for the western slope one-third of the whole surface, or about 2,923,000 sq. ms. Combining both sub-continent, we have for the slopes, respectively—

S. A., western, 350,000; eastern, 6,271,000
 N. A., western, 2,923,000; eastern, 5,847,000

Summary 3,273,000 12,118,000

In this tabular view we are shown that nearly three-fourths of all America has an inclination towards the Atlantic ocean.

The direction and great inequality, in regard to area of the American slopes, gives a character to its physical geography very distinct from that of any of the great sections of the eastern continent. Passing over the features of Africa which are peculiar, all the great slopes of Europe and Asia do not materially incline from N. and S., except that of eastern Asia. The latter, as particularly alluded to in article Climate, presents a remarkable resemblance to eastern North America; and, as also noticed, the respective effects on meteorology are very remarkably similar.

Mountains of America.—The great Western systems, for it certainly admits of doubt whether the mountains of North and South America are really one system, as already noticed, range along or at no great distance from the western coasts of both sub-continent. It is probable that many peaks of the mountain systems of both continents remain not only undetermined as to height, but also unnamed. That this is the case in regard to the southern Andes of South America admits of no rational doubt. Those mountains, advancing from S. to N., begin to appear in S. lat. 52 0, and ranging not greatly E. or W. of 70 W. lon. of London, and rising far above the region of perpetual snow, it is only in lat. 16 0 S. we find the Sorata rising to 25,250, and in 17 0 S. the Illismani to 24,450 feet above the surface of the Pacific ocean, or a mountain system extending through about 2,700 ms. remains imperfectly known. Whereon the great elevation, from whence issue the remote southern sources of the Amazon and the northwestern of Rio de la Plata, we behold in the Sorata and Illismani the highest measured summits of America the prominent elevations of a mountain nucleus.

The Andes system, though less elevated northwardly from Sorata, is thence in continuity—inflexing to NNW., and in several lateral chains, stretches over upwards of 1,300 miles to a near approach to the Gulf of Guayaquil, S. lat. 3 0. Northward of the latter point the Andes again present an immense volcanic nucleus, approaching the equator, and in the Chimborazo and neighboring peaks rise from 18,000 to 21,440 feet above the Pacific ocean. Again the Andes depress; but for general purposes we may regard the system as continuous 700 ms. in South America, and 1,500 in North America, or 2,200 ms. from Chimborazo to the great nucleus of Mexico, where again we find peaks rising from 15,000 to upwards of 17,000 feet above either ocean. From the Mexican to the northern extreme of the system the elevations are very imperfectly known, but are perhaps sufficiently so to justify the remark that it rises no more to the vast height of the nuclei we have designated. If extended to the Northern ocean, the great mountain system before us will reach 4,000 ms. northward of the Mexican nucleus, and taken with all its inflexions from the Straits of Magellan, extends in continuity 10,200 ms., and, if length and elevation are combined, is the principal mountain system of the earth. The less prominent systems will be noticed in their respective places.

Rivers of America.—The very peculiar structure of the whole continent of America, and range of its primary mountain system or systems, produces a not less remarkable physical law of its rivers. The inequality in the two opposing slopes has a corresponding inequality in the rivers. The very extreme brevity of the western rivers of South America, is contrasted in those of the eastern slope of that continent by one, the Amazon, the far most extensive river of the earth, and by another, the Plate, rivalling the Mississippi of N. America, and the Orinoco, an immense river in itself, were it not compared to the two former. In strictness, America has but two systems of rivers, having respectively their rise in the great system of its mountains, but such a latitude would be rather too generic, and for precision a more specific classification is necessary. We have in S. America the minor river systems of the West or Pacific; the southeast from the straits of Magellan to St. Roque; the northeast from Cape St. Roque to the Orinoco river, inclusive; and the northern from the gulf of Dragonsmouth, or Cape Paira, to the gulf of Darien.

The Pacific system, extending the whole length of S. America, presents only a series of comparative brooks, mere torrents from the Andes. The southeastern system, commencing with the straits of Magellan, and having thence, in a distance of 1,200 ms. to the outlet of the Plate, beside many smaller streams, the rivers Desire, Camaiones, Sieu Leuvu, Negro, or Cosu Leuvu, Colorado, and Salado. At S. lat. 35° opens the wide bay or estuary of the Rio de la Plata. This bay is the oceanic outlet of, in some respects, the most remarkable river of the earth. Directly under the southern tropic, and opposite the bay of St. Sebastian, the sources of the river Tiete, a confluent of the Parana, and of course one of the higher sources of the Plate, rise within less than 50 ms. from the Atlantic ocean, and yet flow directly inward towards the heart of the continent; and what enhances the interest of such physical structure, almost on the same latitude with that of the sources of Tiete river, those of Pilcomayo, a western confluent of the Parana, rise within 50 ms. from the Pacific ocean, and also flow inwards towards the heart of the continent. The two river sources indicated are, however, only chosen in order to show more distinctly the peculiar features of the Plate basin; but it may be observed that, on the side of both oceans, and between the 20th and 30th° of S. latitude, the respective sources of the Plate flow inwards towards each other, having their lowest depression in the deep channel of Parana. A great error as to the relative surface drained by American rivers, has been perpetuated by several authors. The extent drained by the Mississippi and its confluents has been stated as the greatest of all rivers. The respective basins of the Mississippi and Plate, measured by the rhombs, do not differ essentially from 1,100,000 sq. ms., nor from each other, whilst the basin of the Amazon, exclusive of the Tocantins, measured in the same manner, amount to 2,600,000 sq. ms., or considerably more than the Plate and Mississippi taken together.

The southeastern slope of S. America contains, besides many of less note, two other rivers north-eastward from the basin of Plate; these are the St. Francisco and Parmaiba. Indeed, whilst analysing the natural basins of S. America, in strictness an eastern one ought to have a place, as about the southern tropic, and on the margin of the Atlantic ocean, and westward of Rio Janeiro, a system of mountains rises which, in broken chains and ridges, follows very nearly a northern direction to within less than a degree of latitude from the equator, to the eastward from the mouth of the Tocantins river. Though not very elevated in any of its parts, this system is very distinct, and separates the great interior valley of the continent from what might with propriety be called the Brazilian slope of America. The physical character of this slope is mountainous, and very strongly contrasted with the immense interior plains.

Passing the eastern slope of S. America, we are led into the most extended of all river basins, that which might be called by pre-eminence the Amazonian. The extreme sources of the Madeira are S. of S. lat. 20°, and those of the Rio Negro N. of N. lat. 3°, or the breadth of the basin amounts to 23° of lat., or very near 1,600 ms., and along S. lat. 5°, the greatest breadth from the Brazilian mountains; lon. W. of London 46° to the Andes at the extreme western sources of the Lauricocha 78 30 W. of London, or 31½° of lon. and about 2,500 statute ms. In form and outline the Amazonian basin has a very remarkable approach to a circle of 1,800 ms. diameter. The area, however, including all the outline, exceeds the vast space of within very near 2,600,000 sq. ms. If we allow the whole land area of the earth to amount to, in round numbers, 45,000,000 sq. ms., the Amazonian basin will embrace rather more than the one-seventh part. Excluding deserts and frozen tracts, the really habitable surface by man, to any density worthy of notice, is fully estimated at 30,000,000 sq. ms.; therefore, as the Amazonian basin is all habitable in a high degree, it embraces the one-eleventh part of the habitable earth. The sub-basin of Tocantins embraces about 300,000 sq. ms., which, if deducted from that of the Amazon, would still leave to the latter 2,300,000 sq. ms., or equal to the next two largest river basins, those of Plate and Mississippi united. In brief, there is no other physical feature of the earth which so far exceeds in magnitude all others of its kind as does the basin of Amazon.

A minor system of mountains or elevated table land crosses S. America about the mean lat. of 2° N., giving source in nearly the whole breadth of that continent, where 30° of lon. wide, to the extreme northern confluent of the Amazon on one side, and on the other, to those of the rivers of Guyana, the Orinoco, and Magdalena. The general descent of the northern slope of S. America, as shown by its rivers, is inclining a little E. of N. The rivers of Guyana are brief, but followed by the Orinoco, a river which, if estimated from the extent of its basin, 400,000 sq. ms., would rank amongst the great rivers of the earth. But, besides the extent of its basin, and magnitude of its volume, the Orinoco is remarkable from the peculiarities of its physical features. On the elevated region between Guiana and Venezuela, and in the mountains of Juraguaca, a river is formed from numerous sources, which, pursuing a general south-western course of about 400 ms., under the name of Orinoco, divides into two streams, one of which continues the name of Orinoco, and the other by the name of Cassiquiare, assuming a course of a little W. of S. 200 ms., unites with the Rio Negro, and is of course one of the constituents of the Amazon. By these interlocutory streams there is an uninterrupted water channel up the Amazon, and rivers Negro and Cassiquiare, and down the Orinoco, and of course in the reverse direction. This very remarkable inland river connexion was well known and delineated on maps long after discovery, but from such departure from the ordinary laws of rivers, it was deemed afterwards erroneous, and rejected. Amongst the many services performed by Alexander Humboldt to the science of geography, one of the most important was the verification, by personal observation, of the connexion by river channel between the basins of Orinoco and Amazon. Received now as a fact, yet the various maps before me, on which the point of separation of the waters is laid down, are very far from near accord as to the geographical position.

Black, Edinburgh, 1841, 2° N. lat., lon. 64 30 W. London.

Tanner, Philadelphia, 1841, 3° N. lat., lon. 61 20 W. London.

Distance inland from the nearest oceanic coast, that of Cumana, about 500 ms., and from the Guyana coast, 600 ms.

The next, and the only large river except the Orinoco, which drains the northern slope of S. America, the Magdalena, has its sources by two great branches, the Cauca on the W, and the proper Magdalena E., in the great mountain nucleus within 1° of the equator, above Popayan. The sources and 400 or 500 ms. of the course of the Cauca, are from 50 to 100 ms. of the Pacific coast, from which it is separated by an elevated chain of the Andes. The Magdalena is a more considerable stream than the Cauca, but the channels of both are deep mountain ravines of between 600 and 700 ms. comparative course before their union in the province of Magdalena, about 100 ms. above the influx of their united waters by several mouths into the Caribbean, between the cities of Cartagena and Santa Marta. The Magdalena closes the list of S. American rivers. A deep gulf of upwards of 200 ms., which, under the name outwards of the gulf of Venezuela, and inwards of the Lake of Maracaybo, indents the northern coast of S. America, but which appears as a deep basin surrounded on all sides, except a comparative narrow opening into the Caribbean sea, by a mountainous rim, leaving a circular slope of from 50 to 100 ms. between the mountains and margin of lake and gulf. From the mountains of Maracaybo to the estuary of the Orinoco, in a distance of 500 ms., the northern coast of S. America is composed of a rugged mountainous chain, from which mere creeks rush towards the Caribbean sea, and inland flow the northern confluent of Orinoco. Such are the general structure of this sub-continent, and we now proceed to notice its political divisions. Here we must premise, that so fluctuating are the revolutions, and uncertain, either the outlines or internal statistics of the provinces, that the subjoined tabular view cannot be vouched for beyond mere estimates.

Guyana.—The provinces, three in number, French E., Dutch in the middle, and English W., occupy a slope between 1 and 7 degs. N. lat., and having a very near due north slope to the Atlantic -	103,000	178,000
Patagonia.—This general term designates S. America to the southward of S. lat. 40 degs. If we extend to Cape Horn, it reaches 56 degs. S. Beyond S. lat. 40 degs., the slope forming Chili, becomes broken into islands and peninsular points; and on the Atlantic side the coast is characterized by extensive elliptical bays. The interior country is imperfectly known, but probably not so barren as represented. In one respect, Patagonia is very remarkable; it spreads a habitable land surface many degrees nearer the southern pole than even the southern island of New Zealand -	600,000	30,000

It may be noticed that there is a comparatively small discrepancy between the aggregate area by the zones and that by the provinces; but as both are general, we may assume for the habitable surface 6,000,000 of sq. ms., or nearly double that of all Europe. South America, in proportion to extent, is unquestionably the most habitable continuous section of the earth, and at the same time the most thinly peopled. It is true the numbers of inhabitants given in the table are in a considerable degree conjectural, but probably rather too high than exaggerated. When we turn from the aggregate to the provinces, and compare surface with population, we every where see that man is only beginning to appear, and the aggregate does not amount to 2 to the sq. m. The already organized and inhabited parts of the United States of North America, on 1,000,000 of sq. ms., sustain 17,000,000 of people; South America, with a like density, would sustain upwards of 100,000,000. Europe, exclusive of Scandinavia and extreme northern Russia, on about 3,000,000 of sq. ms., sustains 200,000,000 of people, or 66 to the sq. m. If, therefore, South America was peopled equal to the aggregate of Europe, with the exclusions stated, the former would possess a human mass of 400,000,000. There is, however, no risk of overrating its capability when estimating 150 to the sq. m. on South America. Such is at the same time the madness of mankind, that on that unequalled continent the greatest efforts have been made on reciprocal destruction, and it may be doubted whether it is gaining or declining in aggregate population.

North America.—The line of demarcation between North and South America has never been precisely determined. Politically, the two small provinces of Panama and Veragua are included in South America, though physically northward, or rather westward of the narrowest part of the isthmus of Darien, between the bays of Panama and Mandingo. When, however, swept into a general view of the continent, these two provinces are of very minor importance; we therefore commence our particular view of North America with the province of Costa Rica. It may be remarked that the meridian of Washington City strikes South America not two degrees E. of Panama gulf.

The term isthmus has been loosely applied to the whole or a part of the remarkable and irregular band which, with alternate contractions and expansions, extends from the Gulf of Panama to that of Tehuantepec, in N.W. by W. direction, on a direct air line about 1,200 ms. The general character of the whole continent is in no one of its minor parts more strikingly maintained than in this Tabular view of the isthmus, including Central America, or Guatimala, and with Chiapa, Tabasco, and Yucatan, taken provincially.

Province.	Sq. ms.	Pop.	Province.	Sq. ms.	Pop.
Veragua.—This province, though included politically in S. America, is physically in N. America. Its general range is from E. to W.; bounded W. by Costa Rica; E. by Panama; S. by the Pacific ocean; and N. by the gulf of Nicaragua, in the Caribbean sea. Length from E. to W. 150 ms.; mean breadth 70 ms.; area 10,500 sq. ms. Santiago, the capital, 8 17 N. Lon. 81 20 W. London. Surface very mountainous.	10,500	80,000	of 450 ms. in length, along the Pacific ocean, stretching from Honduras to Oaxaca, of Mexico; the breadth inland in no part exceeding 60 ms.; mean breadth about 40 degs., and area 18,000 sq. ms. Interior mountainous and volcanic; extending in lat. from 3 20 to 17 degs. N., and in lon. from 11 to 17 degs. W. of W. C.	18,000	200,000
Costa Rica.—Bounded NE. by the Caribbean sea; E. by the province of Veragua; S. and W. by the Pacific ocean; and N. by a chain of mountains, separating it from the province of Nicaragua. General range NW. by W., and SE. by E., 300 ms.; mean breadth 80, and area 24,000 sq. ms. Costa Rica is remarkable amongst the Isthmian provinces, as having its entire slope southwardly towards the Pacific ocean. It is crossed nearly centrally, by lat. 10 degs. N., and lon. 6 30 W. of W. C.	24,000	140,000	Vera Paz, has Honduras E., Nicaragua SE., Guatemala S., Chiapa W., and Yucatan N. In form it has a rude approach to a circle; area, 20,100 sq. ms. Its lower depression, and the recipient of its rivers, is the gulf of Amatique. The slope is eastward. Lat. 15 degs. traverses it nearly centrally; lon. between 11 and 14 degs. W. of W. C.	20,100	120,000
Nicaragua.—Bounded SE. by the Caribbean sea; S. by a chain of mountains, separating it from Costa Rica; SW. by the Pacific ocean; NW. by the province of Guatemala; and N. by a chain of mountains, separating it from Western Honduras; and NE. by Bluefield's river, separating it from Eastern Honduras. The western part, or about 10,000 sq. ms., has a slope towards the Pacific ocean; but the residue, or about 60,000 sq. ms., chiefly occupied by the remarkable valley of St. John's, inclines south-eastwardly. The head of lake Nicaragua, near the centre of the province, is in N. lat. 18 degs., lon. 6 degs. W. of W. C.	80,000	400,000	Chiapa.—inland province Guatemala to the S. and SW.; Vera Cruz N.; Tabasco E.; and the river Sumasinta, separating it from Yucatan, S.; and on the SW. it touches Vera Paz; slope eastward, and drained by the sources of the rivers Sumasinta, San Pedro, and Tabasco. Greatest length from SE. to NW., 220 ms.; mean breadth 75 ms., and area 16,500 sq. ms. Lat. from 15 degs. to 17 40 N.; lon. from 14 degs. to 16 40 W. of W. C.	16,500	130,000
Honduras.—Bounded S. by Nicaragua; W. by Vera Paz; and N. and E. by the Caribbean sea. This province lies in a form approaching a triangle; base 500 ms. from the gulf of Bluefield's river to the gulf of Anatique; greatest breadth, 250; area, 62,500 sq. ms. The slope is towards the Caribbean sea, and the rivers flow, like radii, from a common centre. The interior border of this large province, in a distance of 500 ms. from the Amatique gulf to Bluefield's sound, is but little known, as is the case, indeed, with most part of Honduras and Nicaragua. Honduras extends in lat. from 12 to 16 degs. N., and in lon. from 4 to 11 degs. W. of Washington City.	62,500	300,000	Tabasco.—Small province on the same slope with Chiapa, having the latter S., Vera Cruz W., the Gulf of Mexico N., and Yucatan E. Length from E. to W. 150 ms.; mean breadth 60 ms.; and area 9,000 sq. ms. Lat. from 17 20 to 18 40 N. It is traversed by the rivers Tabasco and San Pedro, and separated from the peninsula of Yucatan by the Sumasinta.	9,000	55,000
Guatemala.—The province so specially called, is a long narrow strip			Yucatan usually called the peninsula of Yucatan, though such a physical adjective name is rather fanciful, as the country lies with a not very rude approach to a parallelogram of 400 ms. by 200 ms.; the area amounts to at least 70,000 sq. ms., extending from 16 degs. to 21 25 N., and in lon. from 9 to 14 degs W. of W. C. An accurate survey of this very peculiar country has never probably been made. Its interior and northern parts are devoid of rivers of any considerable size. It would appear that much of the surface is desert, or at least arid. The Sumasinta, a considerable stream, bounds Yucatan on the SW.; and on the SE. the Balize Main, and some smaller streams are within its limits, but the country, with upwards of 1,000 ms. of sea coast, is, in proportion to distance, very devoid of harbors.	70,000	520,000

REMARKS.—We must premise that in regard to the surface of these provinces, we have to depend on the best maps; but though vague as to outline, we trust that the general summary is not far from accurate. As to the population we cannot vouch, though probably rather above than below the actual number of inhabitants. Here we have the same sparseness of population as characteristic of most part, and comparatively with the general surface of Europe of all America. On a surface nearly as extensive as France and the British islands taken together, we have 6 persons to the sq. m., whilst twenty fold more, on a like surface, would be far from its capability of support. From the ruins found within its limits, there probably was a time when more than 100,000,000 of human beings existed where our present estimate is perhaps overcharged.

MEXICAN REGION.

Provinces.	Area in sq. ms.	Pop.
Oaxaca, the most southern Mexican province, bounded E. by Guatemala, NE. and N. by Vera Cruz, W. by Puebla, and S. by the Pacific ocean. Lat. 15 40 and 18 40, lon. 17 to 21 degs W. of W. C. Remarks on Spanish North America.

Here we have a space on the western and most temperate side of the continent of very nearly 1,600,000 sq. ms., on which, as far as the document is correct, there exists only a distributive population of a fraction above 5 to the sq. m. If we allow the estimate to be one-half too low, still the void is fearful. The space is more than equal to all Europe westward of the Vistula and the Dnieper, and on which now exist little, if any, less than 100,000,000. There is no hazard of exaggeration in allowing for Spanish North America a capability of supporting 75,000,000 or 80,000,000 of inhabitants. We may here refer to our remarks on South America, which, when combined with what we have now observed, will call the reader's attention to the great space on the habitable earth now merely commencing to be inhabited by the Spanish and Portuguese nations. We now proceed to a synopsis of Anglo-Saxon North America.

Texas.—This name, pronounced according to our orthography, I need not explain, but as the x, in Spanish, has the power of our aspirated h, the word would be Tehas. There are but three sides of Texas, the boundaries of which are determined by Nature and national treaties. On the south it has the Gulf of Mexico; the Sabine river and a meridian line from lat. 32° to 33° N. on the east, and continuing that line to Red river; thence, up Red river about 400 ms., to the 100th deg. of lon. W. of London, or nearly on 23° W. of W. C. On the NW., W., and SW., the limits are not simply vague, but altogether unfixed. The Texans claim to the Rio Grand, which, in all reasonable probability, they will maintain, and therefore assuming that boundary and a southwestern imaginary line from the point on Red river where crossed by the 100th deg. W. of Greenwich to the Rio Grande. Thus limited is the country we shall regard and treat as Texas, extending in lat. from the mouth of Rio Grande N. lat. 26 0 to 33 30 on the Red river, and in lon. from 16 30, on Sabine river, to 27 30 on Rio Grande. As most of the outlines are tolerably well delineated, the area can be stated with considerable approach to accuracy. The greatest breadth, in a N. and S. direction, 557 ms. from the mouth of Rio Grande to the northwestern angle, on Red river. The greatest length, in an E. and W. direction, about 700 ms.; the area not differing essentially from 180,000 sq. ms.

The general slope of Texas is to the SSE, though that part of Red river binding it on the N. is very generally to the E., whilst Sabine river flows, by general course, from N. to S. Bounded on the W. by Rio Grande, N. by Red river, and E. by the Sabine, and traversed in the general direction of its slope by the Trinity, Brassos, Colorado, Guadalupe, and Nueces, Texas might be well called "The Country of Rivers." With a country not much less extensive than France, and with much soil of great fertility, and a climate unsurpassed as to salubrity, and with 400 ms. of seacoast, abounding in harbors, which, if not of great depth, are sufficiently so for all commercial purposes, Texas is destined to become a flourishing State amongst civilized nations.

The position of Texas gives it great commercial advantages, as its climate and variety of soil enable its inhabitants to produce an immense variety of vegetable staples. The prevailing winds being from the west and northwest, the climate is cold, when compared with the latitude, but coming from a dry, and, in autumn, an arid expanse, it brings health and vigor on its winds.

UNITED STATES OF NORTH AMERICA.

As each of the States and Territories of the United States will be particularly noticed under their appropriate heads, only a general synopsis will be given here in connexion with other parts of the continent. In this synopsis, the course will be from South to North, in order to preserve a view of the relative position of the States in regard to climate.

Remarks.—The order pursued in the foregoing synoptic tables in adopting the ranges from W. to E., has the advantage of showing more conclusively relative population, as the more densely inhabited sections on the Atlantic side are combined with the new and more thinly settled interior. Under the head of the United States, other comparative tables are given, to afford means of comparison in reverse order.

United States Western Territory.—We are free to express an opinion that very few persons are aware of the immensity of the domain of the United States between the already organized States and Territories and the Pacific ocean; we therefore, in order to give means of clearer conceptions of this most highly important subject, have constructed the subjoined synopsis:

Geographical section.

Area in sq. ms.

Northward of the Red river, westward of the States of Arkansas and Missouri, and as far northward as where the western boundary of the United States comes to Arkansas river -	100,000
Northward of a line drawn from the mouth of Peter's river, of Mississippi, that of Sioux river, of Missouri, and between the Mississippi and Missouri rivers -	50,000
Northward of Arkansas river, westward of the Missouri river, eastward of the Rocky Mountains, and southward of N. lat. 49 degs. -	315,000
Great Western, Oregon or Columbian Territory, bounded by treaty on N. lat. 42 degs., and by treaty N., by lat. 54 40 E. by the Rocky or Chippewyan mountains, and W. by the Pacific ocean -	500,000
Total in the 4 natural sections included above	1,005,000
To which add the space allowed for the future State of Iowa -	64,260

Remarks.—It is not the least remarkable circumstance in our statistics that the entire territory of the United States, from ocean to ocean, is divided into two not very unequal great sections by a line drawn as follows: commencing on the Gulf of Mexico, at the mouth of the Sabine river, and thence along the western border of the States of Louisiana, Arkansas, Missouri, what probably will be Iowa, to the mouth of the Yancton Sioux river, and thence due north, along lon. 20 0 W. of W. C. to our northern border. Limiting the western section to 1,000,000 sq. ms., would leave a territory of 640,000,000 acres. In regard to soil the western is not equal to the eastern, but there is no space of the former which would not support five or six fold more than the mean population of the eastern, as shown by our general summary. If we assume so high a mean as 60,000 sq. ms. for each State, still, 16 or 17 States may, no doubt will, be formed westward of the dividing line we have delineated. By actual calculation it is N. 76 W., and within a very small fraction of 1,700 statute miles from the mouth of the Kansas, on the western border of the State of Missouri, to the mouth of Columbia river.

As another illustration of the immensity of the territory of the United States, taken in its utmost extent, we may observe that the bearing of the mouth of the Columbia river, from W. C., is a very little above N., 80 0 W., and distance 2,500 ms., and the mid-distance is near the Great Bend of Missouri river, and by air distance 550 ms. above St. Louis.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA.

Provinces.	Area, sq. ms.	Population.
Upper Canada - - - - -	100,000	336,460
Lower Canada - - - - -	250,000	549,000
New Brunswick - - - - -	27,700	119,500
Nova Scotia - - - - -	18,742	142,600
Prince Edward's island - - - - -	2,131	32,300
Newfoundland - - - - -	35,900	61,000
Bermudas - - - - -	19	8,862
Total - - - - -	434,492	1,249,722

These seven provinces comprise those parts of British North America in which settlements to any extent worthy notice have been made. It is true there are scattering posts, forts, and factories, in the great northern regions beyond the Canadas, but are so few, so small, and so far scattered, as to render the expression in a general sense correct that New Britain is yet, as to whites, uninhabited. As to the soil and climate of those regions, both are no doubt misrepresented. If we were to suppose Northern Europe to be now discovered, by the southern nations, from the shores and peninsulas of the Mediterranean and Euxine seas, many extensive tracts now densely populated would be represented as unfit for human habitation. Northern North America, however, has a stronger resemblance to Northern Asia than to Northern Europe; and, though not as favorable to human habitation as the latter, it is more so than the former portion of our earth. The extent, on the land surface of the sphere, cannot be stated with any confident accuracy, as much of the extreme northern parts are imperfect, some altogether unknown, but 2,000,000 sq. ms. would no doubt be within the actual extent.

Russian America.—If British North America is imperfectly known, Russian America is still more so. Lying between 55 0 and 72 0 N., and between lon. 64 0 and 92 0 W. of W. C., the area, as near as it can be ascertained, is about 525,000 sq. ms.; of this large country the extreme northwestern part of the American continent, the coasts, and they imperfectly, are the only parts known to our geography. As is the case in regard to both continents, the western side of America is of much milder temperature than is the eastern; therefore, it is probable that Russian America is more habitable than are regions in the same latitude towards the Atlantic ocean.

Danish America, Including Iceland.—Under this head comes the desolate Greenland, spreading from lat. 60 0 N. to an unknown extent towards the Pole. It is, indeed, far from determined whether Greenland is a body of land or a congeries of islands. It is with some diffidence we state its extent at 800,000 sq. ms.

Remarks.—If we compare all America with all Asia, we find, besides the very near equality in regard to extent, some other points of resemblance which, however, apply more particularly to North America. The two continents, only separated by the comparatively narrow Straits of Beering, are under the Northern polar Circle, spread out beyond that circle into naked, low, and desolate plains, over which winter reigns 10 months in the year.

The really habitable parts of both continents are south of lat. 60 0, and to a great degree of 50 0. There is much more of unproductive steppes or deserts in the centre of Asia than in that of America, and therefore the latter is capable of a still more dense population. By reference to the summary table of Asiatic population, it will be seen that on that continent there are, from the latest authorities, upwards of 600,000,000 of inhabitants, showing by comparison the capabilities of America.

Some may be startled at the statement that Asia has, with 15,000,000 sq. ms. of surface, a distributive pop. of about 44 to the sq. m., whilst America, on an equal surface, and in aggregate soil superior, has only about 2 6-10. Confining our views to America, there are some extremely interesting contrasts. If we take the organized section of the United States alone, we have on the one-fifteenth part of the surface the forty-five-hundredths of the pop. of the whole continent. Were we to limit the habitable part of America to 12,000,000 sq. ms., and allow each a surface populated equal to the organized section of the United States, the aggregate would be nearly 195,000,000; but taking all Anglo-Saxon organized America, we would have—

	Sq. ms.	Inhabitants.
Texas	180,000	250,000
Organized U. S.	1,120,200	18,158,766
Organized Brit. Am.	434,500	1,249,000
Total	1,734,700	19,657,766

Here we have already a distributive population of a fraction above 11 to the square mile; which density, on 12,000,000 sq. ms., would give an aggregate of 132,000,000; an amount which, upon the data of former increase, the Anglo-Saxons will themselves reach a few years after the end of the current century. This productive nation has now, on about the one-seventh part of 12,000,000 sq. ms., very nearly the one-half the numerical pop. of the continent; and, if we superadd moral to physical force, the disparity is still greatly more in favor of the Saxon family. Great must be the changes in the course of things to prevent conquest and colonization from following increased means of power, and therefore it is no hazard to anticipate a still further comparative increase of powers in the hands of those whose moral force is so decidedly superior to the other sections of the pop. of America, and that power in hands which never yet has suffered their means to remain unemployed.

Amherst, town and tp. of Hampshire co., Mass., 8 ms. eastward of Northampton, and 85 ms. W. of Boston. Amherst college was founded in 1821 and incorporated in 1825. Expenses of students from $93 to $118 per annum. There are two parallel courses of study, one for ancient and the other for modern languages. The Amherst Academy and Mount Pleasant institutions are also in this tp. Pop. 1810, 1,554; in 1820, 1,622; and in 1830, 2,631.—Tp., Erie co., N. Y., 7 ms. E. of Buffalo.—Town of Lorain co., Ohio, in Amherst tp. It is situated on the S. Ridge road 8 ms. westward of Elyria, 137 ms. a little E. of NNE. from Columbus. In 1837 the tp. pop. about 1,000.—Town of Nova Scotia, Cumberland co., on Chigneto bay, 80 ms. a little W. of N. from Halifax.—Island, in the co. of Ontario, U. C., formerly called Isle Tonti, contains about 16,000 acres; it lies opposite to Ernest town and part of Fredericksburg, in Lake Ontario, towards the entrance of the bay of Quinte.—Tp. and post of N. H., Hillsborough co. The Aurean academy was founded here in 1790. It is situate on a N. branch of the Southeagan 53 ms. NW. of Boston, and 60 WSW. of Portsmouth. Lon. 71 33 W. lat. 42 54 N. Pop. in 1810, 1,554; in 1820, 1,622; in 1830, 1,655; and in 1840, 1,565.—Co. of Va., having the Blue Ridge, or Rockbridge, NW., Nelson NE., James river, or Buckingham and Campbell, SE., James river, or Bedford, SW., being 22 ms. in length, with 19 ms. in breadth, or 418 sq. ms. The face of the country is agreeably diversified by hill and dale, and abounds in excellent spring water. The soil, like the features of the country, admits of great variety, but is in many places extremely productive. Central lat. 37 30 N. lon. W. C. 2 10 W. This city lies directly W. from Richmond. Pop. 1820, 10,426.—C. H. and town, seat of justice Amherst co., Va. 102 0 W. from Richmond, and 15 ms. NNE. of Lynchburg. N. lat. 37 31, lon. 2 2 W. of W. C.

Amid, ancient Amida, a city of Upper Mesopotamia, called "Kara-Amid," or Black-Amid, by the Turks, and now usually denominated Diarbekr, from the name of the country in which it is situated. It stands amid mountains, near the Tigris, about 150 ms. SW. of Arzroom, and 150 NE. from Aleppo. Lat 37 56 N. lon. 40 0 E. of London.

Amiens, a large and populous town of France, in the department of Somme. Three branches of the river Somme pass through this city, and afterwards unite. It has manufactures of linen and woollen cloth, which employ in the city and adjacent country 30,000 people. It is 20 ms. SE. of Abbeville, and 75 N. of Paris. Lon. 2 18 E. lat. 49 54 N.

Amikoues, river of the, runs into Lake Huron from the N. shore, E. of the Missassaga river.

Amisville, village and po. town, Culpeper co., Va., 100 ms. NNW. from Richmond, and 80 SW. from Washington.

Amite, river of the States of Miss. and Lou., rises within the former, in Franklin and Amite cos., about 40 ms. a little S. of E. from Natchez, and flowing nearly a S. course 30 ms. in Miss., enters Lou., in which latter the general southern course is maintained 35 ms. to the influx of the Cornite from the NW. The united stream thence curves 20 miles to the influx of Iberville from the W., from whence the channel is continued in an easterly direction about 25 ms. into Lake Maurepas, after an entire comparative course of 105 ms. Schooners drawing 5 feet water are navigated from Lake Pontchartrain through the pass of Manchac, Lake Maurepas, and Amite, to Galveston, at the mouth of Iberville.

Amite, co. of Miss., drained by and named from the Amite river, bounded by Wilkinson co., Miss., W., Franklin N., Pike E., and the parishes of St. Helena and East Feliciana S. Length from E. to W. 30, breadth from S. to N. 24, and area 720 sq. ms. Surface moderately hilly, with good bottom and interval land, but the great body of the co. is covered with a pine forest. Central lat. 31 12 N. lon. 14 0 W. from W. C. Pop., 1820, 6,859; in 1830, 7,934, 1840, 9,511.

Amity, town, Orange co., N. Y., 15 ms. a little S. of W. from Goshen, and 28 ms. SW. from Newburg.—Town of Washington co., Pa., situated on Banes' Fork of Ten Mile creek, 10 ms. S. of Washington, the co. seat, and 248 westward of Harrisburg.—Town, western part of Trumbull co., Ohio.—Town of Knox co., Ohio, in Pike tp., 8 ms. NE. of Mount Vernon, the county seat, and 53 ms. NE. of Columbus. The post office name Democracy.

Amhwick, town of Wales—See Almwick and Pary's copper mine.

Ammercot, fort in Hindoostan proper, in a very extensive and sandy desert, between the Indus, the territories of Agimere and Moultan, and the Puddar. It is 190 ms. N. by E. of Tatta.

Amol, a town of Asia, in Usbec Tartary, seated on the river Gihon, 60 ms. W. of Bokhara. Lon. 64 30 E., lat. 39 20 N.

Amorgos, an island of the Archipelago, fertile in wine, oil, and corn. It is 30 ms. in circumference, and 67 ms. N. of Candia. It is the ancient Amorgos, one of the Cyclades, situated about midway between Stampalia and Naxos. N. lat. 36 45, lon. 26 0 E. of London.

AMMON, JUPITER AMMON, an ancient temple of Africa, stood on a oasis supposed the modern Siwah. The name is derived by Hodgson from Aman, Berber word for water.

Amonoosuck, Upper and Lower, names of two rivers of N. H., both of which rise in the White mountains, and fall into the Connecticut river, about 30 ms. apart.

Amoskeag falls, in the Merrimack, 15 ms. below Concord. A canal has been completed around these falls, the descent 48½ feet, in a distance of half a mile.—Town in Hillsborough co., N. H., on Merrimack river, 16 ms. southward and below Concord. This place takes name from a fall of 48 feet in the river, round which there is a navigable canal and locks.

Amotape, village of Peru, near the Gulf of Guayaquil, and between Tumbes and Piura. S. lat. 40 50, W. lon. W. C. 346.

Amoyambo, a town of South America, in Tucuman.

Amour, river of Asia, whose source is in Siberia; it runs E. through Chinese Tartary, and falls into the channel of Tartary, or La Perouse's strait. N. lat. 53 30. The Amour is formed by two great branches, the Amour proper and the Saugheri. The Amour is the northern and largest branch, and rises in central Asia, interlocking sources with the Selenga and Lena. Lon. 110 0 E. lat., 50 0 N.; flowing a little S. of E. about 1,000 ms. It receives the Saugheri from the SW. The united stream turns to NE., and, after flowing in that direction 400 ms., falls into the channel of Tartary. The basin of this great river is about 1,200 by 400 ms., and comprises an area of 480,000 sq. ms., lying between N. lat. 43° and 56°. It is entirely within the Chinese empire.

Amoy, an island on the SW. coast of China. The English had a factory here, but abandoned it on account of the impositions of the inhabitants.

Ampanpetoca, Bombetoc, or Bambatooka, town and bay of Madagascar, on its northwestern coast; both are more usually called Bambatooka. The town was in 1791 capital of the kingdom of Seclaves. The bay and town lie 250 ms. SE. of Mayotta island, the southern Comoro. S. lat. 7 0, lon. 47 0 E. of London.

Ampelaki, village of Greece, on the island of Colouri, the ancient Selamis; situated near the ferry from the city of Athens, and contains about 80 houses, inhabited principally by Albanians. N. lat. 37 55.

AMPHICTYONES, from, it is supposed, the personal name of Amphycion, King of Athens, B. C. 1497-1487, who instituted that remarkable Congress of Deputies, representing their respective States in general assembly, which remains known in history under the title of "Amphictionic Council." If we regard the probable etymology of the term, we may well suspect that the monarch derived his own name from the assembly, rather than the contrary.

Amphipolis, town of Turkey, in Europe, now Jamboli, on the river Strymon, the modern Strumona, 70 ms. NE. of Salonichi. Lon. 24 16 E., lat. 41 38 N.

Amplepuis, town of Fr., in the dep. of Rhone and Loire. It is celebrated for its wines, and is 16 ms. E. of Roanne.

Ampsaga, river of northern Africa, now called by the Arabs Wed-el-Kibeer, "Great river," and from the same source comes Guad-al-quivir.—See Gaudalquivir. "Ampsaga," says Hodgson, "appears to have been derived from the Berber word sagar, wood, with the particle am, or woody river"—Am-sagar. According to information given to Mr. Hodgson, its banks abound with wood, especially pine. On one of its branches (the Rummel) stands Constantine, the ancient Cirta.

Amptill, town in Bedfordshire, Eng., between two hills, but in a barren soil. It is 6 ms. S. of Bedford, and 45 NW. of London. Lon. 0 30 W., lat. 52 6 N.

Ampuribus, seaport of Spain, in Catalonia, seated at the mouth of the river Flavia, 60 ms. NE. of Barcelona. Lon. 3 6 E., lat. 42 5 N.

Amras, very strong castle in Germany, seated in the Tyrol, 2 ms. SE. of Inspruck. It is remarkable for a rich library adorned with the portraits of many learned men. Lon. 11 29 E., lat. 47 9 N.

Amsterdam, large, rich, and populous city of Holland. The exchange is one of the principal ornaments of the city, and the harbor is one of the largest and finest in Europe, where a vast number of merchant ships may always be seen; though there is a bar at its entrance, which is, however, a great security against foreign enemies. The foundation of this town is laid upon piles, driven into a morass, and under the stadthouse alone are 13,000. The streets are spacious and well paved, and most of them have canals, with rows of trees on each side. It is seated at the confluence of the rivers Amstel and Wye, 65 ms. N. of Antwerp, 175 E. by N. of London, 240 N. by E. of Paris, and 566 NW. of Vienna. Lon. 4 50 E., lat. 52 23 N. In addition to the immense canals previously executed in the kingdom of the Netherlands, one of primary importance has been recently formed from the Helder to Amsterdam. The canal from the Helder to Amsterdam is amongst the most astonishing works ever executed by man. A large portion of the route lies over a tract as low or lower than the ocean level at high tide. The object was to enable vessels of burden to reach Amsterdam, and by a route avoiding the embarrassment of transshipment. The whole length of the canal, from the city of Amsterdam to the Helder, is 48 ms.—Island in the South Indian Ocean, between the Cape of Good Hope and New Holland. S. lat. 38 15 E., lon. London 153 20.

Amsterdam, New, capital of Berbice, in Dutch Guyana. N. lat. 6 20, E. lon. W. C. 19 45. This town stands at the mouth of Berbice river, about 150 ms. a little N. of W. from Paramaribo.

Amsterdam, vill. and tp. in Montgomery co., N. Y. Pop. of the tp. in 1840, 5,333. The vill. of Amsterdam, N. Y., stands on a rapid declivity, and the Chuctenanda creek, which passes it, falls 120 feet in 100 rods from the Mohawk river. Pop. of the tp. in 1830, 3,354.—Town in Botetourt co., Va., 5 ms. S. of Fincastle, and by postroad 204 ms. W. of Richmond.

AMYRALDISM, from Amyraldus, or Amyrault, of Fr., who taught the doctrine of universal grace in the 17th century. The doctrine of Amyraldus was not that all would be saved, but that God gave power to all persons to be saved by belief in Christ.

Amu, river.—See Jihon.

Amur.—See Amour.

Amwell, village near Ware, in Hertfordshire, famous for giving rise to the New river, which supplies London with water.—Tp. in Washington co., Pa. Pop. in 1810, 1,673, in 1820, 1,825.

Ana.—See Annah.

Anadir, considerable river of Siberia, in Asia, that falls into the sea of Kamschatka. The Anadir rises in the country of the Tchoutshi, and issues from a lake at N. lat. 63 2 E., lon. 169 0, and, pursuing a southeastern course of about 400 ms., falls into the Gulf of Anadyr, or the Anadir Skaya gulf, N. lat. 65 0, E. lon. 177 34. The Anadyr is a broad but shallow river, and is the boundary of two different climates and soils. All the country to the N. of this river is almost completely barren and destitute of vegetation, while the country on the S. is clothed in verdant pasture, or crowned with lofty forest trees.

Anadoli, or Anatolia.—See Natolia—Asia.

Anagni, a small town of Italy, in Campagna di Roma; a bishop's see, 32 ms. E. of Rome. Lon. 13 25 E., lat. 41 56 N.

Anahuac, an original name for a large part of the region now comprehended under the general name of Mexico. Anahuac designated before the Spanish conquest all that tract of country contained between the 14th and 21st degrees of N. lat. Independent of the Aztec empire of Montezuma, the little republics of Tlascala, and of Cholollan, the kingdom of Tezeuco, or of Acolhoacan, and that of Mehuacan, which comprised a part of Valladolid, belonged to the plateaus or table lands of Anahuac.

ANAM, literally "Southern country," in relation to China. This term has been placed on many of our maps to designate eastern Siam, Tsiam-pa, Camboja, Cochin China, and Tonquin.—See articles Asia, Siam, Cochin China, &c.

Anamoaka, or Amsterdam, one of the Tonga islands, in Polynesia. S. lat. 20 30, lon. 172 30 W. of London.

Anapa, city of Russia, in Circassia, situated on the NE. coast of the Black Sea, about 50 ms. SE. from the outlet of the straits of Taman, or Kaffa, into the Black Sea. N. lat. 44 40. This place was taken possession of in 1784, retaken by the Russians in 1807, and given up by treaty in 1812. It was again taken by the Russians in 1828, and finally ceded to Russia, September, 1829. It was an open slave market for the Turks; contains about 3,000 inhabitants, one-third Turks, the residue Circassians, Armenians, and Greeks.

Anarghia, town of Russia, in Mingrelia, on the eastern border of the Black Sea. Lat. 43 20, lon. 46 30 E. of London.

Anas.—See Guadiana.

Anastacia, or Anastatia, island of Pa., on the Atlantic side, extending 18 ms. SSE. from the harbor of St. Augustine to Matanzas inlet, with a breadth not exceeding half a mile at a mean. It is a low, sandy, and ocean-beaten reef, separated from the main land by one of the rigolets so common on the Atlantic and gulf coasts of the United States. As laid down on Tanner's United States, the signal tower on the northern end of the island is at N. lat. 29 50, W. lon. 4 29 of W. C.

Anatolia.—See Natolia.

Anauri Pecu, or Arauni Pecu, river of Portuguese Guayana, falls into the N. side of the estuary of the Amazon, nearly on the equator. Lon. W. C. 26 0 E.

Anacopir, the capital of the nation of the Abkhas, on the river Makai, which falls below it into the Black Sea.

Anattom, an island, one of the New Hebrides, in the S. Pacific Ocean. Lon. 170 9 E., lat. 20 10 S.

Ancurano, town of Italy, in the marquisate of Ancona, 5 ms. N. of Ascolia, and 82 NE. of Rome. Lon. 13 29 E., lat. 42 48 N.

Ancaster, small town in Lincolnshire, Eng., 15

ms. S. of Lincoln. It was anciently a Roman village, on a Roman highway, and lies under a hill abounding in antiquities.—Tp., lies to the southward of Dundas street, and is bounded on the E. by Barton and Glanford, U. C.

Ance Grand, part of the island of Martinico, on northern coast.

Ance, grand bay, name of several bays of Guadaloupe, and some other islands of the West Indies.—Petite, 5 ms. S. from Cape François.

Anchor Point, E. side of Cooke's inlet, NW. coast of North America.

Ancenis, town of Fr., seated on the Loire, in the dep. of Lower Loire, and late province of Bretagne, 20 ms. E. of Nantes. Lon. 1 5 W., lat. 47 15 N.

Anclam, town of Germany, in Pomerania, on the river Pene, 20 ms. S. of Grispwald. Lon. 14 2 E., lat. 53 52 N.

Ancober, territory on the gold coast of Guinea, having a river of the same name flowing through it, the banks of which are adorned with lofty trees. On the western bank is a populous village.

Ancocus, creek of N. J.—See Rancocus.

Ancona, province in the Ecclesiastical State.—Ancient town and citadel of Italy, on the Gulf of Venice, in the marquisate of Ancona. It is 116 ms. N. by E. of Rome. Lon. 13 35 E., lat. 43 38 N.

Andalusia, province of Spain, 250 ms. in length, and 150 in breadth. It is bounded on the S. by Granada, on the W. by Algarva and the Atlantic, on the N. by Estramadura, and on the E. by Murcia; the Guadalquiver runs through its whole length; and is the best, most fertile, and trading part in Spain. The capital is Seville.—Town in Bucks co., Pa., 96 ms. from Harrisburg.

Andaman Islands, on the E. side of the entrance into the bay of Bengal. This group extends from N. to S. between latitudes 10 30 and 13 30, and in lon. 93 0 E. of London. When we on a general map connect the relative position of the Andamans with the continent of Asia, and with the Nicobar group and Sumatra, it seems evident that the mountains of Anoupectomiou, bounding Burma on the W., the Andamans, Nicobar, and Sumatra are all parts of the same system or ridge. The inhabitants of Andaman are negroes in the lowest savage state.

Andaye, fortified town of Fr., in the dep. of the Lower Pyrennees, and late territory of Basques, famous for its brandy. It is situate at the mouth of the river Bidassoa, opposite Pontarabia, Spain, 18 ms. SW. of Bayonne. Lon. 1 45 W., lat. 43 25 N.

Ancram, or Gallatin, tp. in Columbia co., N. Y., remarkable for its extensive iron works; about 20 ms. SE. from Hudson. Pop. in 1820, 3,147. The bar iron of Ancrum is in great demand at $120 per ton, a higher price than is at present (1823) paid for any imported iron. No other pigs are used at the West Point foundry for the heavy guns (32 and 42 pounders) casting for the U. S. navy.—[Silliman's Journal of Science, vol. vi., No. 1, p. 185.]

Andely, town of Fr., in the dep. of Eure, and late province of Normandy, parted by a paved causeway into little towns called Great and Little Andely, a mile from each other. Great Andely is in a valley, on the little river Gambons. It is 20 ms. SE. of Rouen, and 60 NW. of Paris. Lon. 1 30 E., lat. 49 20 N.

Andernach, ancient city of Germany, in the electorate of Cologne, seated on the Rhine, 10 ms. NW. of Coblenz. Lon. 7 22 E., lat. 50 29 N.

Andero, St., seaport of Spain, in the Bay of Biscay. It is 60 ms. W. of Bilboa. Lon. 4 30 E., lat. 43 25 N.

Anderson, a western district of South Carolina, lying between the Savannah and Saluda rivers, having Pickens district NW., Saluda river separating it from Greenville NE., Abbeville, SE., and the Savannah river separating it from Elbert and Franklin counties, Ga., SW., in form of a rhomb of 28 ms. each side, and area about 800 sq. ms.; slope SSE., and mostly drained into Savannah river. Central lat. 34 30, lon. 5 40 W. of W. C. Pop. in 1830, 17,169, and in 1840, 18,493.—Co. of Ky., bounded N. by Franklin, W. by Spencer, S. by Washington and Mercer, and E. by Kentucky river, separating it from Woodford. Though bordered on one side by Kentucky river, the greater part of Anderson is drained westward by the north fork of Salt river. N. lat. 38 0, and lon. 8 0 W. of W. C., intersect near the centre of this county; chief town Lawrence. Pop. in 1840, 5,452.—Co. of E. Ten., having Roane co. SW., Morgan NW., Campbell NE., and Knox, or Clinch river SE. It is about 30 ms. long, with a mean breadth of 25, extending over 750 sq. ms. Cumberland mountain traverses this county, and protrudes several spurs from the main ridge; it is, therefore, mountainous, broken, and rocky, though possessing much good soil; it is also well watered and healthy. Central lat 36 10 N., lon. W. C. 7 30 W. Pop. in 1820, 4,674, 1840, 18,493.

Andersonburg, village in Perry co., Pa., 37 ms. N. from Harrisburg

Anderson's Store, village in Caswell co., N. C., 56 ms. NW. from Raleigh.

Anderson's Creek, Ia., separates Perry and Spencer counties, and falls in the Ohio at and below Troy.

Andersontown, village in Madison co., Ia., 20 ms. from Indianopolis.

Andersonville, town in Hancock co., Miss., 43 ms. SE. from Monticello.—Village in Pendleton district, S. C., by the post route 152 ms. NW. from Columbia. It is situated at the efflux of the Seneca river into the Tugaloo, or upper Savannah river. N. lat. 34 30, W. lon. W. C. 5 45.

Andes, town in Delaware co., N. Y., 15 ms. S. of Delhi, 55 W. of Kingston. Pop. of tp. in 1830, 1,860.

Andes, or Cordilleras, chain of mountains in South America, which, running from the most northern part of Peru to the straits of Magellan, are the longest and most remarkable in the world. They divide the whole southern part of America, and run a length of 4,300 ms. They are much superior in height to any other known mountains, those of the Gangetic Hindoostan excepted; for the plain of Quito, which may be considered as the base of the Andes, is elevated nearly as far above the sea as the top of the Pyrenees; and they rise, in different places, more than one-third above the Peak of Teneriffe, once thought to be the highest land in the ancient hemisphere. The Andes may literally be said to hide their heads in the clouds; the storms often roll and the thunder bursts below their summits, which, though exposed to the rays of the sun in the torrid zone, are covered with everlasting snow. The Andes are not composed of one continued, but of many collateral ridges, with, in many places, very wide and elevated valleys.

The following are the most elevated peaks of the Andes of which we possess scientific measurements:

The accuracy of the commonly received opinion that the mountain system of the Andes of South America and the Anahuac of Mexico are only continuations of each other, is very problematical.

All the climates of the earth are included in the summits, plateaus, slopes, and planes of South America. Indeed, many of its most elevated peaks are above the region of vapor, and, of course, above that of snow. Vegetation partakes of all these extremes of temperature, and gives all the varieties, from the most tender tropical plant to the lichen of the polar regions. The highest points yet reached by man in South America were attained in the Andes by Humboldt and Bomp-land. By their own calculation, those intelligent travellers ascended to 19,300 feet, and there found the summit of Chimborazo towering above them 2,140 feet. The limit, according to Humboldt, of perpetual congelation under the equator is 15,700 feet, and about 700 feet lower than at lat. 20° N. Between the tropics, and below an elevation of 5,000 feet, lies the region of plantains, cassava, cocoa, maize, indigo, sugar, cotton, coffee. The cereal gramina, such as wheat, rye, &c., with the apple and many other European vegetables; but above that elevation large trees begin to disappear. Some kinds of grasses grow as high as 15,000 feet, but above that height lichens close the last vestige of vegetable life, and leave the still higher regions to eternal frost.

Andorra, Republic of, comprised in a valley of the Pyrenean mountains, and lying within Spanish Cerdagne. The capital, Andorra la Bella, is situated at N. lat. 42° 30', long. 1° 26' E. from London, and almost directly between Thoulouse, in France, and Barcelona, in Spain, 80 ms. distant from each. The republic of Andorra occupies a mountain valley or basin 21 ms. long and 18 wide, drained by one of the higher branches of the Segre river. Beside the capital, it contains about 20 small towns or hamlets, and a population of 10,000 or 12,000. Surrounded by rugged, and, in many parts, precipitous mountains, this valley is secluded from the adjacent provinces of both Spain and France; politically presenting the singular phenomenon of a small republic existing for many centuries between two great kingdoms, each claiming it nominally, and yet permanently independent of both. In a religious point of view, Andorra depends on the See of Urgel, to which it was attached in A. D. 819 by Louis I, (Louis le Debonnaire of France.) Excessively jealous of any exercise of power on the part of Spain, the Andorrese, though as a nation Spaniards, are governed as a republic, and, by a curious mixture of rights, are admissible to office under the Spanish Government in army, church, and state. Secluded in their mountain recess, these primitive republicans have not even a name in most geographical works, though claiming individual existence before the dissolution of the Saxon Heptarchy, or the commencement of Russia at Great Novogorod.

Andover, borough in Hampshire, Eng., a manufacture of shallons, and having a considerable trade in malt. A navigable canal passes hence to Southampton water. It is situated near the river Ande, 10 ms. N. by W. of Winchester, 63 W. by S. of London. Lon. 120° W., lat. 51° 14' N. —Town, Oxford co., Me., 61 ms. W. of Augusta. Pop. in 1830, 399. —Town, Merrimac co., N. H., 18 ms. N. W. of Concord. Noyes's Academy is located in this tp. Pop. 1830, 1,324. —Town, Windsor co., Vt. Pop. 1830, 975. —Town of Mass., in Essex co. Here is an excellent academy, called Philips's Academy, with, in 1820, about 140 students. Its funds amount to $50,000, and its establishments to one principal and three assistants. Also manufactures of paper and gunpowder. It is situate on the Shaw-sheen, 20 ms. WSW. of Newburyport, and 22 NNW. of Boston. —Town, Tolland co., Con., 15 ms. E from Hartford. Pop. 1820, 160. —Town of Sussex co., N. J., 50 ms. N. from Trenton, and 40 ms. WNW. from N. Y. —Town, Alleghany co., N. Y., 285 ms. W. from Albany —Furnace and town, Warren co., N. J., 10 ms. SE. from Newtown. —Town, SE. corner of Ashtabula co., O., about 25 ms. SSE. from Jefferson, the county seat, and 30 NNE. from Warren, in Trumbull co.

Andreanovskoie islands are the western part of the Aleutian isles, towards Asia. The principal islands are Attou, Kiksa, Angatka, Bokoovoi, Kanaga, and Andaschi. They belong to Russia. N. lat. 52° 30' passes nearly along the Andreanovskoie group. See Aleutian.

Andrewsbridge, town, Lancaster co., Pa., 40 ms. from Harrisburg.

Andrews, St., city in Fifeshire, Scotland, with a university; at the bottom of a bay, on the level top of a small hill, extending E. and W., having an open prospect of the German ocean. It is 30 ms. NE. of Edinburgh. Lon. 2° 45' W., lat. 56° 18' N.

Andrews, town, SW. part of Richland co., O. At this point the State roads from Mansfield to Delaware and from Sunbury intersect, 22 ms. from Bucyrus, and 16 from Mansfield.

Andria, town of Naples, in Bari, with a bishop's see, 4 ms. S. of Barletta. Lon. 16° 32' E., lat. 41° 25' N.

Andrichou, town of Austrian Poland, near Cracow.

Andros, island and town in the Archipelago. The inhabitants are of the Greek church, and have a bishop and several monasteries. The principal riches of this island consist in silks, and the fields are very pleasant and fertile; being planted, grow with oranges, citrons, mulberries, pomegranates, and figs. Lon. 25° 30' E., lat. 37° 50' N.

Androskoggin, in some maps called the Amarriscoggin, a considerable river in N. H. and Me. It rises in the former in Coos co., and, flowing ESE., enters the latter in Oxford co., where it turns S. and SE., and unites with the Kennebec river about 18 ms. from the ocean, after passing through the highest part of Me.

Anduxar, town of Spain, in Andalusia, on the Guadalquivir. Anduxar is amongst the most industrious, and manufacturing towns of Spain. It is situated on the right bank of the river, over which is a bridge of fifteen arches, which forms so much of the road from Anduxar to Jaen, 22 ms. distant. This town stands very nearly on the intersection of N. lat. 38° and lon. 4° W. London.

Anegada, (drowned island,) one of the Eng. Virgin islands. Lat. 18 40 N., lon. 64° 7½ W. of London. See Virgin islands.

Anet, town of Fr., in the dep. of Eure and Loire, 8 ms. N. of Dreux.

Angara, the local name of that part of the great river Yenisei, below the Baikal sea, to about N. lat. 60. "The Angara is so limpid a river, that the pebbles at the bottom are seen in a depth of several fathoms. When it issues from the Baikal lake, its bed, generally from two to four hundred yards in breadth, is, for the space of a mile, so confined amongst the rocks, that the smallest boats cannot pass along safely without the strictest precaution; and its waters, dashing against the stones, make a noise like the ocean in a storm."—Malte Brun. See Baikal, Yenisei, &c.

Angazija, or Great Comora island. See general art. Africa, under the particular head of African islands.

Angelica, town and seat of justice of Alleghany co., N. Y., situated on Angelica creek. N. lat. 42 18, W. lon. W. C. 1 3. Pop. 1820, 1,510.

Angelo, St., small but strong town of Naples, in Capitana, 5 ms. N. of Manfredonia, and 2 from the sea. Lon. 16 13 E., lat. 41 40 N.

Angelos, populous and trading town of Mexico, with a bishop's see. The air is excellent, and the land abounds in corn. It is 62 ms. SE. of Mexico. Lon. 92 22 W., lat. 19 30 N.

Angers, ancient town of Fr., in the dep. of Maine and Loire, and the late province of Anjou. It is seated near the confluence of the Sarte and Loire, and is divided by the Maine into two parts: the western, extending into the plain, and the eastern, which rises on the acclivity of a hill. It is 50 ms. E. of Nantes, and 175 SW. of Paris. Lon. 0 35 W., lat. 47 30 N.

Angliera, town of Italy, in the duchy of Milan, and capital of a county of the same name. It is seated on the east side of the lake Maggiore, 30 ms. NW. of Milan. Lon. 8 40 E., lat. 45 42 N.

Anglesey, island, and the most western co. of N. Wales. It is 24 miles in length, 14 in breadth, and sends two members to Parliament. It is in the diocese of Bangor, is divided into six hundreds, containing two market towns and 74 parishes. It is separated from Caernarvonshire by a long and narrow strait called the Menai. That part of the island which borders this strait is finely wooded, recalling to the mind its ancient state, when it was the celebrated seat of the Druids. Vast quantities of copper are procured from a famous mine in Pary's mountain. In the NW. part of the island is a quarry of green marble, intermixed with that curious substance called asbestos.

Angol, town of S. America, in Chili, 155 ms. N. of Valdivia. Lon. 72 59 W., lat. 37 36 S.

Antigua, one of the English Leeward islands in the West Indies, about 20 ms. in length and breadth. This island, having no rivers and but few springs, or such as are brackish, the inhabitants are obliged to preserve the rain water in cisterns. The air here is not so wholesome as in the neighboring islands, and it is more subject to hurricanes. It has excellent harbors. The chief produce is sugar. The capital is St. John. It is 60 ms. E. of St. Christopher's. N. lat. 17 17 lon. W. C. 16° E.

Antilles, the name which the French give to the Carribee islands, discovered by Columbus in 1492. See Indies West.

Such is the general opinion, but the name preceded, curious as it may appear, the discovery of the West Indies by Europeans, and was applied, from a previously conceived idea, to that archipelago. On the rude existing maps and charts of the 11th, 12th, and 13th centuries, an island or group of islands is found represented by name ANTILIA. Such representations prove that long before the age of Columbus ideas were entertained of lands lying westward of Europe and Africa, and a relative name given, which, when those lands were really disclosed, was naturally applied; hence the origin of the general term Antilles.

Antio, promontory of Italy, in the patrimony of St. Peter, near which a harbor has been lately made. It takes its name from the ancient city of Antium, the ruins of which extend over a long tract of land.

Antiocha or Antioch, an island in the Mediterranean near Sardinia, taken from his Sardinian Appalachee, river of Georgia, one of the main sources of the Oconee, rising in Jackson and Gwin cos., and flowing SSE. about 60 ms., falls into the Oconee between Morgan and Greene cos.

Appalachicola, river of the U. S. The basin of the Appalachicola is remarkable, as forming the connecting link between the waters which flow into the Gulf of Mexico and those which enter the Atlantic ocean. The Appalachicola is formed by two streams, the Chattahoochee and the Flint rivers. The former rises in the Appalachian mountains at N. lat. 35 0, interlocking with the sources of Tennessee, Oakmulgee, Oconee, and Savannah rivers; and flowing SW. by S. through 2 0 of lat., turns thence nearly due S. to N. lat. 30 45, where it receives the Flint. The latter, an inferior stream to the former, has its sources in the angle between the Oakmulgee and Chattahoochee rivers at N. lat. 33 40, flowing SW. by S. 200 ms. unites with the Chattahoochee and forms the Appalachicola. This latter fine river flows a little W. of S. to N. lat. 29 50, having an entire course of about 70 ms. Its mouth is into St. George's sound. The basin of the Appalachicola affords an inland navigable expanse of 400 ms. in length, with a mean width of 150 ms., and having an area of about 20,000 sq. ms. Though interrupted by some falls and many shoals, the rivers Chattahoochee and Flint are navigable almost to their sources; and schooners of considerable size ascend the Appalachicola to its head. Cotton, tobacco, grain, tar, and lumber, are the common staples of this basin.

Appamattox, river of Va., rising in Buckingham and Prince Edward counties, and joining the James river near City Point.

Appance, river of U. C., running through the front of the tp. of Camden, divides Fredericksburg from Richmond, and empties itself into the bay of Quinte, at the Mohawk settlement.

APPANAGE, from punis food, estate assigned to younger sons.

Appennine, mountains of Italy, commence in the kingdom of Sardinia, where the Col. de Tende separates them from the Alps, and separates also the sources of the Po from those of the Var; thence the Appennines extend NE. by E. about 80 ms., leaving a very narrow slip between them and the Mediterranean, to immediately north of Genoa, where the mountains inflect to SE. 250 ms., and in that direction continue to about E. from Rome, giving source on one side to rivers, such as the Santerno, Tronto, Pescara, Sangro, and Ofanto, whose waters are discharged into the Adriatic, and on the other discharging from their flanks the Arno, Ombrone, Tiber, and Volturno, towards the Mediterranean. Hence the Appennines inflect a little more to the S., and extend about 200 ms., where they embranch—one, or the western, gradually inflecting to SW. 200 ms., terminates in Cape Spartivento. The other, or eastern, terminates in Cape Leuca. The Appennines in all their length divide Italy into two slopes. The Appennine mountains are evidently continued in those of Sicily, including Etna. In their range, and though compared with the Alps of moderate height, the Appennines exert a marked influence on the climate or rather climates of Italy. See Italy.

Appenzell, canton of Switzerland, entirely enclosed within that of St. Gall or St. Gallen. This was one of the original THIRTEEN CANTONS, and the last which united itself to the Swiss Confederacy. That event took place in 1513, and during 285 years, up to 1798, the union was known as "The Thirteen Cantons." During this period Appenzell comprised the territory yet so called and St. Gall. The latter, now a separate and independent canton, entirely surrounds Appenzell. See St. Gall. Appenzell in its present limit contains only 147 sq. ms. and 53,000 inhabitants.

Appenzell, town and capital of the canton of the same name, is situated on an Alpine spur, near the extreme sources of the Thur river, 25 ms. a little E. of S. from Constance, and 50 ms. a little S. of E. from Zurich. N. lat. 47 20, lon. 9 16 E. of London.

Apple Creek, town, St. Genevieve co., Mo., 80 ms. S. from St. Louis.

Appleby, co. town, Westmoreland, Eng., on the river Eden, by which it is almost surrounded, and is 10 ms. SE. of Penrith, and 266 NNW. of London. Lon. 2 34 W., lat. 54 34 N.

Appleton, plantation and tp., Lincoln co., Me. Pop. in 1810, 316; in 1820, 510.

Appling, co. of Ga., bounded W. by Irwin, N. by Telfair and Tatnall, E. by Wayne and Camden, and S. by E. Fa. The northern part is drained by Saltila and the southern by Suwannee rivers. It is generally level, and in that side towards Fa. swampy. Cent. lat. 31° N., lon. 5 30 W. from W. C. Area uncertain. Pop. 1820, 1,264; 1840, 2,052.

Applington, town and cap., Columbia co., Ga. N. lat. 33 35, lon. W. C. 5 35 W.

Appoquinimink, creek, Newcastle co., Del., runs into Delaware bay, 2 ms. below Reedy island. It rises in Cecil co., Md., and, flowing nearly due E. 15 ms., is one of the natural channels which have claimed attention as affording the means of opening a canal between Delaware and Chesapeake bay.—Tp., Del. Pop. in 1810, 3,559; in 1820, 3,388.

ARISIS, to connect, in astronomy, that line which unites the greatest and least distances of a planet from the sun. See art. Astronomy.

Apt, ancient town of Fr., in the dep. of the mouths of the Rhone, and late province of Provence. There are many fine Roman antiquities, and it is seated on the Calaron, 20 ms. N. of Aix, and 25 SE. of Orange. Lon. 5 30 E., lat. 43 51 N.

Apulia, the E. side of the kingdom of Naples, on the Gulf of Venice. It is divided into three provinces, whose modern names are Capitana, Bari, and Otranto.—Town, Fabius tp., Onondago co., N. Y.

Apure, or Apuri, river of S. America, in Colombia, the great northwestern branch of the Orinoco. This river has its numerous sources in the Venezuelan Andes, from 6½ to 10° N. lat. It is very remarkable that some of the branches of the Apure rise within less than 30 ms. from the Gulf of Maricao, and others equally near the Caribbean sea, at the Gulf of Triste, and flow from the ocean inland. The valley of the Apure is in form of a triangle, base 400 and altitude 200, and comprising 40,000 sq. ms. The provinces of Varinas and Venezuela are chiefly drained by the confluent of the Apure. The Apurimac is the great western branch of the Grand Para. It rises in the Andes at S. lat. 16, and 5° E. from W. C., and within 80 ms. from the Pacific ocean. With a general comparative course nearly N. of about 500 ms., it joins the Grand Para at S. lat. 10 40. The province of Guanacuelica is chiefly drained by this river.

Apuremac, Urubamba, or Aquillibamba, river of S. America, is thus noticed by Malte Brun: "The Ucayal, both under the latter name and that of the Apurimac, traverses mountain ranges almost inaccessible, deserted forests, and vast solitudes." As laid down on our maps, the Apurimac proper is the main southwestern constituent of the Ucayal, and having its extreme fountains near the intersection of S. lat. 16 and lon. 72° W. of London, and thence upwards of 400 ms. along the interior gorges of the main spine of the Andes, the whole uniting at S. lat. 13 and lon. 76° W. of London; thence, under the name of Apurimac, the united waters assume a northeastern course of 200 ms., to its union with the Paro or Beni, to form the Ucayal. See Beni. Though the waters of the Apurimac find their final discharge into the Atlantic ocean by the Amazon, the extreme southern fountains rise within less than 50 ms. from the Pacific.

Aqua Negra, small town of Italy, in the Mantua, on the river Chiesa, 12 ms. W. of Mantua. Lon. 10 25 E., lat. 45 12 N.

Aquanshicola, creek, Northampton co., Pa.; rises in Ross tp., W. from the Wind Gap of the Delaware, flows a little S. of W. about 25 ms., and falls into the Lehigh, immediately above the Lehigh Water Gap.

Aquia, small town upon Aquia creek, Stafford co., Va. It is about 45 ms. below the city of Washington.

Aquila, town of Naples, capital of Abruzzo Ulteriore, with a bishop's see and a castle. An earthquake happened here in 1700, by which 24,000 persons were killed. It is seated on the Poscara, 52 ms. NE. of Rome. Lon. 13 39 E., lat. 42 20 N.

Aquileia, formerly a trading town of Italy, in Venetian Friuli. It was seated near the Gulf of Venice, 57 ms. NE. of Venice. Lon. 13 8 E., lat. 46° N.

Arabian Gulf. See Red Sea.

Aracan, city of, and capital of the country so called, is situated at lat. 21 10 N. and lon. 93 5

E. of London, at the head of a small gulf extending northward from the bay of Bengal, and about 400 ms. SE. by E. from Calcutta.

Aracan, country of Asia, SE. from Bengal. See head of ASIA, art. Aracan.

Araguay, river of Brazil, the SW. branch of the Tocantinas.

Aral, basin of, is the SE. part of the greater basin of the Caspian. The Aral receives from the Belur Dag mountains the two great rivers Amu and Sihon. The sources of these streams are scattered from N. lat. 36 to 50, or through 14° of lat., or about 1,000 ms. The slope from the Belur Dag towards the Aral is about 400 ms. in mean width; therefore, this fine arable tract comprises 400,000 sq. ms. Sandy deserts prevail between the Aral and Caspian seas. The Aral basin is nearly commensurate with Independent Tartary. —Lake of Asia, 200 ms. E. of the Caspian sea. It is 300 ms. in length, and in some places 150 in breadth. It lies between 58 and 62 of E. lon., and between 42 and 47 N. lat. The Aral has no outlet, and its water is salt.

Arande de Duero, handsome town of Spain, in Old Castile, on the Duero, 42 ms. E. of Valladolid. Lon. 3 30 W., lat. 41 40 N.

Ararat, high mountains of Asia, in Armenia. The mountain, or rather system of mountains, known under this name, forms the table land and prominences from which flow the higher sources of the Euphrates and Tigris southwardly; those of the Kur towards the Caspian, and the Escharuk and some smaller rivers into the Euxine sea. The system, very imperfectly known as a whole, bears numerous local names. To the north, the mountains of Tsheldir and Djanik separate Armenia from the Euxine sea. In height, many of the Ararat chains seem to equal those of Caucasus. Snow sometimes falls, even on southern declivities, in June, near Erzeroon. The chains of Tauris, connected with those of Ararat, protruding from the westward, enter Armenia near the cataracts of the Euphrates. The Niphates, Zagros, and Masius mountains of the ancients are all ramifications of the great Armenian nucleus. —Mountain in N. C., about 9 ms. NW. of Bethany, in Stokes co. This is a very lofty mountain, which affords from its top a very extensive view of the adjacent country. —Town, Patrick co., Va., by post road 200 ms. SW. from Richmond.

Aras, ancient Araxes, is the great southern branch of the Kur, rising in the Caucasus mountains, a short distance E. from Arzroum, and interlocking sources with the Euphrates and Kur, and with some smaller streams flowing into the Black sea, pursues a course nearly E. about 300 ms., falling into the Kur at Dsehvati. The valley of the Aras is along N. lat. 40°, but, from the elevation of its sources, the country is cold. Similar to the Kur, the Aras, being a mountain stream, flows with great rapidity, and affords but little aid to navigation.

Arassi, maritime and populous town of Italy, in the territory of Genoa, 5 ms. SW. of Albengua. Lon. 7 56 E., lat. 44 2 N.

Arava, fortress of Upper Hungary, situated on a river of the same name, 72 ms. NW. of Cassovia. Lon. 20 E., lat. 49 30 N.

Arau, or Aarau, in Switzerland, derives its name from the river Aar, on which it is seated. It is 27 ms. W. of Zurich. Lon. 7 50 E., lat. 47 25 N. It is now the capital of the canton of Argau.

Arauco, province of S. America, in Chili, lying between the rivers Biobio and Calacalla or Valdivia, extending along the Pacific ocean from S. lat. 36 to 40°, and inland indefinitely. This is the original Aracania, which produced the Aracanians, who were the first native nation of America which opposed an effective resistance to the Spaniards. Valdivia is the capital.

Araza, river of S. America, rising at S. lat. 11°, flows first upwards of 100 ms. northward, and thence NE. 300 ms., is lost in the Amazon, S. lat. 2 30, and is the next great confluent above the Madeira. Yurba, Yutay, and Yavari, regularly follow the Araza, advancing up the Amazon. These four rivers rise in the same region, and, curving alike, at a distance of 30 or 40 ms. from each other, have each a course of about 400 ms. In some maps, they are all made to flow from one common source, the Roguaguada lake; and, again, the latter is made to communicate with the Para, a branch of the Ucayal. It may be doubted whether any such conformation exists in nature. That part of S. America is yet very imperfectly known.

Arbe, episcopal town of the republic of Venice, in an island of the same name, on the coast of Dalmatia, from which it is five miles distant.

Arbela, town of Asia, in Curdistan, where Alexander fought the last battle with Darius. It is about 60 ms. SE. of Mousul. Lon. 42 25 E., lat. 35 5 N.—Town, Lancaster co., Pa., 47 ms. E. from Harrisburg.

Arberg, town of Switzerland, in the canton of Bern, on a kind of island formed by the two branches of the Aar. It is 10 ms. NW. of Bern. Lon. 7 5 E., lat. 47° N.

Arbois, populous town of Fr., now in the dep. of Jura, lately in the province of Franche-Comte, famous for its white wines. It is 22 ms. SW. of Besançon. Lon. 5 40 E., lat. 46 55 N.

Arbon, ancient town of Switzerland, on the S. side of the Lake Constance, in Thurgau. The majority of the inhabitants are Protestants. It is 12 ms. SE. of Constance. Lon. 9 30 E., lat. 47 30 N.

Arbroath. See Aberbrothwick.

Arburg, or Aarburg, town of Switzerland, in Argau, seated on the Aar, with a citadel cut out of a rock, 12 ms. E. of Soleure.

Arcadia, town of the Morea, near the gulf of the same name, and in the province of Belvedere, 22 ms. N. of Navarin. Lon. 21 42 E., lat. 37 24 N.

Archangel, seaport of Russia, capital of the government of the same name. It was the only seaport of Russia for many years, and was first resorted to by the English in 1553. Great part of the city was burnt to the ground in 1793; but it is now rebuilding with neatness and even elegance. Archangel is seated on the Dwina, 4 ms. from the White sea, and 400 NE. of Petersburg. Lon. 39 E., lat. 64 34 N.

Archer, town in the village of Hanover, North tp., northern part of Harrison co., O., 8 ms. a little W. of N. of Cadiz.

Archipelago, most probably from garchê, principal, and pelagos, sea, though other etymologies are given; but all agree that the term applies to the sea, and not to islands in that sea. In ancient times, and in general in modern times also, Archipelago designates that part of the Mediterranean between Greece and Asia Minor, having to the E. Asia Minor, Thrace N., Macedonia NW. and W., Thessaly and Greece proper W., and the Mediterranean sea S. Length 400 ms. from the island of Rhodes to the Thracian coast, and breadth about 150 ms.

Archville, town, Ohio co., Va., 407 ms. NW. from Richmond.

Arcis-sur-Aube, small town of Fr., in the dep. of Aube, and late province of Champagne, seated on the river Aube, 15 ms. N. of Troyes. Lon. 4 12 E., lat. 48 32 N.

Arcò, town and castle in the Trentin, on the river Sarca, 15 ms. SW. of Trent. Lon. 11 12 E., lat. 46° N.

Arcole, town in the northeastern corner of Geauga co., O., half a mile west of the line between Geauga and Ashtabula co., about 20 ms. NW. by W. of Jefferson, the co. seat of the latter.

Arcos, town of Spain, in Andalusia, on a craggy rock, at the foot of which runs the Gaudaleto, 28 ms. NE. of Cadiz. Lon. 5 46 W., lat. 36 52 N.

Arcot, city and capital of the Carnatic, in the peninsula of Hindoostan. It is 73 ms. W. by S. of Madras, and 2 17 E. by N. of Seringapatam. Lon. 79 E., lat. 12 30 N.

Arcueil, village of Fr., 3 ms. S. of Paris, remarkable for an aqueduct, which is thought to equal the works of the ancient Romans. It was built in 1624 by Mary de Medicis; its water is distributed into different parts of Paris.

Ardebil, one of the most famous and ancient towns of Persia, 25 ms. E. of Tauris. Lon. 48 20 E., lat. 38 15 N.

Ardeche, dep. of Fr., part of the late province of Dauphiny.

Ardenburg, town of Dutch Flanders, 10 ms. NE. of Bruges. Lon. 3 30 E., lat. 51 16 N.

Ardennes, dep. of Fr., part of the late province of Champagne, so named from the famous forest of that name.

Ardennes, forest on the river Meuse, between Thionville and Liege.

Ardrah, small kingdom of Africa, in Guinea, extending round the Gulf of St. Thomas. It has a town of the same name. N. lat. 6 5, lon. 3 5 E. London.

Ardres, town of Fr., in the dep. of the Straits of Calais. It is 8 ms. S. of Calais. Lon. 1 59 E., lat. 50 50 N.

Arbo, or Arébon, town on the slave coast of Guinea, at the mouth of the river Formoso. The English had once a factory here, as the Dutch have still. Lon. 5 5 E., lat. 6° N.

Arseka, seaport of the Red sea, 55 ms. from Suquam.

Aremburg, town of Westphalia, capital of a co. of the same name. It is seated on a river 22 ms. S. of Cologne. Lon. 7 3 E., lat. 50 22 N.

Arendahl, a small but neat seaport town of Norway, on the Seagerrac sound, 50 ms. NE. of Christiansand.

Arensburg, town of Westphalia, on a hill in the county of the same name, by the river Roer, 50

ms. NE. of Cologne. Lon. 8 20 E. lat. 51 25 N.—Seaport in the isle of Oesel. It is included in the Russian government of Riga. Lon. 25 40 E. lat. 50 15 N.

Arneshard, tract in the duchy of Sleswick, containing the greatest part of the famous rampart built by the Danish King Gotric, in the beginning of the ninth century, as a defence against the irruptions of the Saxons. It extends across the country about 9 ms. in length.

Arenswalde, town of the new marche of Brandenburg, on the lake Slauin. Lon. 15 52 E. lat. 53 13 N.

Arequipa, episcopal town of South America, in Peru, seated on a river in a fertile country 290 ms. S. by E. of Lima. Near it is a dreadful volcano. Lon. 75 30 W. lat. 16 40 S.

Arezzo, ancient episcopal town of Tuscany. It is seated on a mountain 15 ms. W. of Ciita di-Castello. Lon. 12 0 E. lat. 43 27 N.

Argau, or Aargau, from German: signifying District of the Aar; in Fr., Argovie. It was a former dependent territory on, but since 1798, and more especially since 1814, an independent canton of Switzerland, bounded on the E. by Zurich, NE. by Zug, by Lucerne S., by Berne, Soleure, and Basil, W., and on the N. separated from the grand duchy of Baden by the Rhine. The name is derived from the river Aar, which traverses the canton from SW. to NE. See Aar. Argau contains about 700 sq. ms. and 150,000 inhabitants. The surface slopes northwardly towards the Rhine. Central lat. 47 25 N. Aran is the capital.

Argences, town of France, seated on the river Meuse, now in the department of Calvados, lately in the province of Normandy, 10 ms. E. of Caen. Lon. 0 2 W. lat. 49 12 N.

Argens, small river of southern Fr., which rises in the southern valleys of that chain of mountains which separates the departments of Var and lower Alps, and thence, by a general southeastern course of about 70 ms. over the former department, falls into the Mediterranean to the SW. of Frejus.

Argentine Republic or Buenos Ayres, the provinces of, are: Cordova, Mendoza, San Juan, Santiago del Estero, Salta, Tucuman, Rioja, Catamarca, San Louis, Corientes, Buenos Ayres, Santa Fe, Entre Rios, Misiones, and Provincia Oriental.—See art. America. North American Review vol. 54, p. 237.

Argentan, town of France, in the department of Orne, and late province of Normandy. It is seated on an eminence, in the middle of a fertile plain, on the banks of the river Orne, and carries on a considerable trade in lace. It is 12 ms. NW. of Seez, and 110 W. of Paris. Lon. 0 5 E. lat. 48 45 N.

Argenteuil, town of the Isle of France, on the Seine, 5 ms. NW. of Paris. It is a very beautiful place, with a fine vineyard; and in the environs they have quarries of the plaster of Paris. Lon. 2 22 E. lat. 48 52 N.

Argentiera, barren island of the Archipelago, which takes its name from the silver mines in it. There is but one village in the island, and it has no water but what is kept in cisterns. Lon. 23 10 E. lat. 36 50 N.

Argentiere, town of France, in the department of Ardeche and late province of Provence, 5 ms. SW. of Aubenes, and 17 0 W. of Viviers. Lon. 4 22 E. lat. 44 30 N.

Argenton, town of France, in the department of Indre and late province of Berry, divided into two parts by the river Creuse. It is 37 ms. SW. of Bourges. Lon. 1 38 E. lat. 46 35 N.

Argis-Dag, mountain.—See articles Caucasus and Tauris.

Argos, city of Greece. This is amongst the most ancient cities in the world, retaining its primitive name. It stands on a plain near the Inachus, now Planitzai river, in the Morea, 8 ms. NNE. from Napoli di Romania, and about 25 SSW. from Corinth. N. lat. 37 45, E. lon. 22 50.

Argostol, or Argostoli, of the isle of Cephalonia, opposite Albania; it is the best harbor in all the island, and the proveditor resides in the fortress, which is 5 ms. distant.

Arguin, island and fort of Africa, on the coast of Zahara, 30 ms. SE. of Cape Blanco. Lon. 17 5 W. lat. 20 30 N.

Argun, river of Asia, which in part divides the Russian from the Chinese empire. The Argoun or Argun, as usually written, is the same river, otherwise called the Kerlon Pira, Kerton Pira, &c. It is the main constituent of the Amur, rising in the same mountainous region, giving source to the Selenga and Schilka rivers, and flowing by comparative courses northeasterly about 1,000 ms. joins the Schilka to form the Amoor. The valley of this river lies between N. lat. 42 0 and 48 0. In a distance, following its channel, of 450 or 500 ms. it constitutes so much of the boundary between Russian Asia and China. See article Amur.

Argun, town of East Tartary, on the frontiers of the Chinese empire. There are mines of silver and lead near it, and a pearl fishery in the river Argun. Lon. 103 56 E. lat. 42 30 N.

Argyle, tp. Washington co., N. Y., on the E. side of the river Hudson, S. of Kingsburg, and contained in 1820 2,811 inhabitants.

Argyleshire, co. of Scotland, bounded on the N. by Invernesshire, on the E. by the counties of Perth and Dumbarton, on the S. and W. by the Atlantic ocean, by which it is broken into islands and peninsulas. Its extent is very considerable, being not less than 90 ms. in length, and 70 in breadth. This county affords a very wild prospect of hills, rocks, and huge mountains, piled upon each other in dreadful disorder, bare, bleak, and barren to the view; or covered with shagged heath, which in summer is variegated with an agreeable bloom of a purple color. These high grounds, though little fitted for cultivation, afford excellent pasture.

Argyro-Castro, city of European Turkey, in Albania, situated in a very mountainous district, about 40 ms. NE. by E. from Butrinto, and 9 ms. N. from Libokavo. According to Hobhouse, it contains 20,000 inhabitants, chiefly Turks. Though environed by high mountains, Argyro-Castro occupies part of a very fruitful vale, watered by the ancient Celydnus, now Voussa river. It is supposed to be the Hadrianopolis of the Romans.

Arhusen, seaport of Denmark, in N. Jutland, with a bishop's see. It is seated on the Baltic Sea, at the mouth of the Guda, and surrounded by forests full of game. It is 25 ms. S. of Wiberg. Lon. 9 50 E., lat. 56 5 N.

ARIAN, one who follows the doctrines of Arius of the Church of Alexandria, in the 4th century; who held Christ to be the greatest of created beings, though infinitely inferior to the One Self-Existent Deity; and that the Holy Ghost was created by the power of the Son or Christ.

Ariano, town of Naples, in Principato Ulteriore, with a bishop's see; 15 ms. E. of Benevento, and 10 0 NW. of Treviso. Lon. 15 19 E., lat. 41 8 N.—Town of Italy, in the Ferrarese, on a branch of the river Po, 22 ms. NE. of Ferrara. Lon. 12 8 E., lat. 45 0 N.

Arica, seaport of Peru, 550 ms. SE. of Lima. Here the treasure brought from Potosi is shipped; and there are many farms employed in the cultivation of Guinea pepper, in which it has a great trade to Lima. Lon. 71 6 W., lat. 18 27 S.

Aripo, town on the west coast of Ceylon, at the mouth of the river Sarunda. To the east of it is a pearl fishery. Lon. 80 25 E., lat. 8 42 N.

Arkansas, river of the U. S., which rises in the Chippewan, or Rocky mountains, about lat. 40 0 N., lon. W. C. 37 0 W., and joins the Mississippi river at lat. 34 0 N., lon. W. C. 14 0 W. This great river has a general or comparative course of more than 1,300 ms., and by its windings exceeds 2,000 ms. It receives numerous branches, the principal of which are the Canadian Fork, Negracky, and Poteau. The Arkansas flows through, and gives name to the State of the same name.

In the present state of geographical science, it is impracticable to fix with adequate precision the area of the valley of the Arkansas, but an approximation to accuracy may not be entirely unsatisfactory. From the month to a distance of 250 ms., the valley is confined very nearly to the mere bed of the river. It then widens, and embraces a region of about 600 by 300, and with a superficies of 180,000 sq. ms. The far greater part of this immense surface is open grassy plains. It is traversed by the Masserne mountains in a direction from NE. to SW. The entire length of the Arkansas, by comparative courses, is about 1,200 ms.

The geographical position of the valley of Arkansas is between N. latitudes 34° and 42°. By actual calculation, this river has a general course S. 65° E. about 1,200 ms. in a direct line. The river of Europe having the greatest analogy as to relative physical position with the Arkansas is the Danube. The latter has a general course S. 82° E. 1,470 ms. Though of nearly double the length of the Ohio valley, that of Arkansas comprises a lesser surface, from its more confined width. In regard to variety of feature, Arkansas valley comprises all the extremes of massive mountains near its source to low and annually overflow alluvium around its efflux into the Mississippi.

Arkansas, State of the U. S.; bounded on the N. by the State of Missouri, on the E. it is separated from the States of Tennessee and Mississippi by the Mississippi river, on the S. it has Louisiana, SW. Texas, and W. the Indian and unappropriated territory of the U. S. Geographically, it lies between 33° and 36½° N. lat. Length from S. to N. 243 statute ms. nearly; mean breadth along N. lat. 35 0 230 ms., which gives an area of 55,890 sq. ms.

Arkansas is naturally divided into three distinct sections. The east section, along the Mississippi, White, St. Francis, and Arkansas rivers, is mostly level, and in winter and spring, except the margin of the streams, liable to inundation. With some prairie, this east section is covered with a dense forest. The soil, where arable, is very productive. The middle section, watered by the higher branches of White river, by the main volume of Arkansas, the higher branches of Ouachitta, and by Red river, is broken, in part, rather mountainous, and presenting extensive prairies. The west and north-west section is mountainous, with extensive prairies. Though an interior region, Arkansas is in a high degree supplied with navigable streams. Beside the Mississippi, which forms the eastern boundary, St. Francis rises in Missouri, and, flowing south, enters Arkansas, over which it flows 120 ms., falls into the Mississippi about 60 ms. above the mouth of White river. The latter, a much more considerable stream, rises in the south part of Missouri by two great branches, White river proper and Black river, which, uniting in Arkansas, flows below the junction 120 ms., and falls into the Mississippi 15 ms. above the mouth of Arkansas river. Though impeded by shoals, the Arkansas is a navigable river far above the limits of the State to which it gives name. The Ouachitta rises, by numerous branches, in the Masserne mountains, between Arkansas and Red rivers, and is navigable at high water with boats of considerable size; by the bends 200 ms. within Arkansas. Red river traverses the extreme southwest angle of the State. It may be doubted whether, in this large State, there is one spot 100 ms. from a navigable water course. The St. Francis, White, and Arkansas rivers form navigable channels within the State into the Mississippi; whilst the Red river and its confluent, the Ouachitta, leave the State, traverse Louisiana, and finally join the same great recipient. The mineral wealth of Arkansas has been too imperfectly developed to admit definite notice. The immense salt prairies or steppes of the interior give a brackish taste to the water of Arkansas. Numerous salt springs are scattered over the country. Indications of lead and iron are numerous. Some lead has been smelted, but not in large quantity. As a whole, Arkansas may be regarded as a barren country, though, scattered over the entire extent, tracts of exuberantly fertile soil occur. If we compare it with Louisiana, and from what I have seen of both these two regions they appear remarkably similar in the relative extent of arable to unproductive soil in each, respectively, the cultivateable surface would be about as one to four. The difference of latitude and elevation give to the respective sections of Arkansas a much greater range of temperature than from its extent could be expected. Cotton can be cultivated to advantage on the south and southeast sections; but advancing up the streams, and rising to a much higher elevation, the temperature falls, and small grain succeeds well. On the whole, the climate of Arkansas may be considered as excessively variable; that of the south resembles Louisiana, whilst towards the north and west the seasons approach those of Missouri. Amongst the curiosities of Arkansas may be particularly mentioned the hot springs. These fountains, with a temperature near that of boiling water, are 47 ms. SW. by W. from Little Rock, on the Arkansas, and near the main stream of Washitau. They became a place of resort for invalids about 1800, and have increased in reputation. The adjacent country is rocky, sterile, and mountainous, the water pure, and air elastic, affording a most delicious retreat from the summer and autumn temperature of Louisiana and southern Arkansas. The Washitau is navigable with steamboats to within 30 ms. of the springs.

Population in 1820.

In 1820, it was politically divided into the following counties, which had the number of inhabitants annexed to each, respectively :

Arkansas, co. of the State of the same name, lying on both sides of Arkansas river, having Chicot co. S., Clark W., Pulaski NW., White river or Philips co. NE., and the Mississippi river E. Length from N. to S. 60 ms., mean width 40, and area 2,400 sq. ms. This co is traversed obliquely from NW. to SE. by the Arkansas river; and the White river, bounding it to the NE., renders the lower part subject to annual overflows. The Bayou Barthelany, and Boeuf rivers, branches of the Washita, rise in the S. part, flow S. over Chicot co., and enter La. The W. side rises into eminences, but the body of the country is level. (For lat. and lon. see next art.)

Arkansas, town and seat of justice for Arkansas co., State of Ark. This is the same village formerly called "The Post of Arkansas," and was founded by the French in 1685. It stands on the N. bank of Arkansas river, at N. lat. 34°, lon. W. from W. C. 14 25. The site is a high narrow bluff of poor soil, with the inundated flats of White river in the rear. Distant about 100 ms. SE. from Little Rock, and by the bends of the river 50 ms. from the Mississippi.

Arkiopolis, vill. and seat of government Ark. Ter., on the right bank of Arkansas river, about 100 ms. above its mouth. It is now called Little Rock; which see.

Armagh, co. of Ireland, bounded on the E. by Down, on the W. by Tyrone and Monaghan, on the N. by Lough Neagh, and on the S. by Louth. It is in length 32 ms., and in breadth 17, contains 49 parishes, and sends six members to Parliament.

—City of Ireland, once a considerable town, now a small village; but it gives name to a co., and is the see of an archbishop, who is the primate of all Ireland. It is 45 ms. SE. of Londonderry. Lon. 6 34 W., lat. 54 27 N. —Town of Centre co., Pa. —Town, Indiana co., Pa., 163 ms. W. from Harrisburg.

Armagnac, late province of Guienne, in Fr., 55 ms. in length and 40 in breadth. This province, with Gascony, is now included in the dep. of Gers.

Armenia, a large country in Asia, bounded on the W. by the Euphrates, on the S. by Diarbeker and Curdistan, on the E. by Schirvan, and on the N. by Georgia. It is one of the most fertile countries in Asia, being watered by several large rivers. Part of it belongs to the Persians, and part to the Turks. The inhabitants are much attached to commerce, and undertake long journeys to carry it on. They are Christians, and have a patriarch and an archbishop. Polygamy is not allowed among them. The country in general is full of mountains and valleys, lakes and rivers, and produces rice, cotton, flax, melons, and grapes.

Armenian, similar to Jew, is a national term of the most remote antiquity, and still continues to designate a distinct people, who have for many ages lost their political existence; and, what is remarkable, what remains of them in their original country, and those scattered over much of the Eastern continent, generally live in primitive patriarchal society, or in large families, under the government of the oldest members, and in a state of happy concord. Politically, the Armenians are foreigners in that country, bearing their name. Scattered over Asia and Eastern Europe, addicted to and skilful in manufactures and commerce, they have prospered in every country from Hungary to China. They find their way to places inaccessible to Europeans: they traverse the elevated plains of Tartary, and reach those watered by the Niger. The religion of the Armenians is that of the ancient Eastern Church, and, like the Greeks, they admit the marriage of their clergy. Two great patriarchs rule the Armenian Church: one resides at Esthiazin, in the province of Erivan, or Persian Armenia, supposed to have under his spiritual jurisdiction 150,000 families; the other patriarch resides at Jis, in the Lesser Armenia of antiquity, having under his spiritual direction 20,000 families. The whole nation supposed still to amount to 1,700,000 persons.

Arminians, sect, so called from Hermausen, or Arminius, of Holland, who flourished in the latter part of the 16th and beginning of the 17th century, and whose fundamental doctrine was, that man could in his earthly life attain to and fall from a state of grace.

Armentiers, town of Fr., in the dep. of the North Flanders, seated on the Lis, 8 ms. NW. of Lisle. Lon. 3 3 E., lat. 50 40 N.

Armiers, town of Fr., in the dep. of North Hainault, seated on the Sambre, 20 ms. S. of Mons. Lon. 4 3 E., lat. 50 7 N.

Armiro, town of Macedonia, on the Gulf of Velo, 30 ms. SE. of Larissa. Lon. 23 22 E., lat. 39 30 N.

Arms Cross Roads, town, Ontario co., N. Y., 184 ms. W. from Albany.

Armstrong, town of Pa., having Westmoreland and Allegany SW., Butler W., Venango NW., Jefferson NE., and Indiana E. and SE. It is about 35 ms. in length, with a mean width of 20, extending over 700 sq. ms. The Allegheny river intersects this co., winding from the NW. angle in an elliptical curve to the SW. The face of the country is hilly, rocky, and broken, though much of the soil, particularly that of the river bottoms, is composed of a fertile loam. Chief town, Kittaning. N. lat. 41°, and lon. 2 30 W. from W. C., intersect in this co. Pop. 1820, 10,324; 1830, 17,695; and in 1840, 28,365.

Armuuden, seaport of the kingdom of Holland, in the island of Walcheren, now inconsiderable, the sea having stopped up the harbor. The salt works are its chief resource. It is 3 ms. E. of Middleburg. Lon. 3 42 E., lat. 51 31 N.

Arna, seaport of Andros, an island of the Archipelago, with a good port.

Arnay-le-Duc, town of Fr., in the dep. of Cote d'Or, and late province of Burgundy. It is seated in a valley, near the river Arraux, 25 ms. NW. of Baune. Lon. 4 26 E., lat. 47 7 N.

Arneberg, town of Germany, in Brandenburg, on the Elbe, 3 ms. from Werbern, taken by the Swedes in 1631.

Arnedo, seaport of Peru, 25 ms. N. of Lima.

Arnhem, strong town of Holland, in Gelderland, capital of the quarter or co. of its name, on the Rhine, 8 ms. N. of Nimeguen. Lon. 5 54 E., lat. 52 2 N.

Arno, river of Tuscany, which rises in the Apennines, and, passing by Florence and Pisa, enters the Gulf of Genoa a little below the latter town. The valley of the Arno and that of the Ombrone drain the greatest part of the grand duchy of Tuscany.

Arnsheim, town of Germany, in the palatinate of the Rhine, 8 ms. from Kreuzenach.

Arnstadt, town of Upper Saxony, in Thuringia, with a castle, a palace, and three churches; seated on the Gera, 11 ms. S. of Erfurt.

ARPENT, former French unit of land measure, containing a square of 100 Fr. perches. The arpent differed, as did the foot, in different provinces of France; but the arpent of Paris, adopted in Louisiana, and still used in that State as well as in Arkansas and Missouri, is to the U. S. statute acre as 512 to 605. The arpent, as a measure of length, is 29.10 Gunter's chains, or 192.06 English feet.

Arques, town of Fr., in the dep. of Lower Seine, on a river of its name, 4 ms. SE. of Dieppe.

Arroostook, river of Me., interlocking sources with those of the Penobscot, about N. lat. 46 20, and flowing thence by a very winding channel, but general comparative NE. course of from 90 to 100 ms., falls into the western side of St. John's river, and a few ms. within New Brunswick, at N. lat. 46 45.—Co. of Me., called from and including the river of same name; boundaries unknown; had, by the census of 1840, a population of 9,413, of whom 1,876 were residents N. of St. John's river.

Aracajfe, seaport of Brazil, in the province of Pernambuco. It is built on a narrow channel, with a castle to defend the entrance, and is esteemed the strongest place in all Brazil. Lon. 36 10 W., lat. 8 20 S.

Arracan, "called by the natives," says Malcolm, "Rekhein," from which evidently comes the name in our books, is a province of Asia, which, according to the author above quoted, "is bounded N. by the river Naaf, and by a line from near its sources eastward to the A nou-pec too-miou mountains, which divide it from Burmah, down to Cape Negrais; on the W. is the bay of Bengal. Length about 470 ms. Breadth never exceeds 100, and in places only 10; average about 60 ms. It is estimated to contain about 17,000 sq. ms. The population is usually given in books at 300,000, but by the last official returns is only 237,000. It is divided into four districts, viz: Akyab, Ramree, Sandoway, and Aeng. About 1783 Arracan was conquered by the Burmans; but in the last, indeed only war yet waged between the British and Burmans, this country was conquered, and at the peace ceded to the British. It extended to Cape Negrais, Arracan stretches from N. lat. 16° to near the northern tropic.

Arragon, province of Spain, bounded on the N. by the Pyrenees, W. by Navarre and the Two Castiles, S. by Valencia, and E. by Valencia and Catalonia. The country, though abounding in rivers, is in want of good water. It is fertile in corn, wine, flax, and fruit, near the rivers, but in other places dry and sandy. It produces saffron, and there are many mines of salt. Saragossa is the capital.

Arrah, town of Hindoostan, in Bahar, 33 ms. W. by S. of Patna.

Arran, island of Scotland, in the Frith of Clyde, to the S. of the isle of Bute. Among the rocks are found iron ore, spar, and great variety of beautiful pebbles. On the coast are many wonderful caverns, which often afford shelter to smugglers. The principal place is Lamlash.

Arras, fortified city of Fr., capital of the dep. of Pas de Calais, and an episcopal see. It is seated on the Scarpe, 22 ms. WNW. of Cambrai. Lon. 2 46 E., lat. 50 17 N.

Arriège, dep. of France, containing the late provinces of Couserans and Foix. Foix is the capital.

ARRIERE BAN, answering to "Levy en Mass," the calling out of the whole military force from Ban, a proclamation, and rear, or whole from front to rear.

Ashantee, nation and country of Africa, in Upper Guinea, and traversed by the meridian of London. It lies between the mountains of the Moon and Atlantic ocean. The limits or political subdivisions of Ashantee are very imperfectly known. In the geography of Larenaudiere, Balbi, and Huot, it is thus noticed. It is one of the most powerful kingdoms of the western region of Africa. About twenty States pay tribute to the supreme head, which gives to the country the title of empire. Extent 1,800 sq. leagues, (14,000 sq. ms.) The physical character of the Ashantins approach much more nearly to the Ethiopian than to the pure negro; number about 1,000,000. Coumassie, or Coomassie, the capital, is situated in N. lat. 6 40 lon. 2 0 W. of London, and about 140 ms. inland from the Cape Coast Castle. See Africa.

Ashborn, town in Derbyshire, Eng, seated between the rivers Dove and Compton, 10 ms. NE. of Uttoxeter and 130 NNW. of London. Lon. 1 44 W. lat. 53 3 N.

Ashborough, village Randolph co., N. C., about 80 ms. W. of Raleigh.

Ashburnham, tp. Worcester co., Mass., about 50 ms. WNW. of Boston. Pop. 1,000.

Ashburton, borough in Devonshire, Eng. It is seated among the hills (which are remarkable for tin and copper) near the river Dart, 19 ms. SW. of Exeter, and 193 W. by S. of London. It has a handsome church. Lon. 3 50 W. lat. 50 30 N.

Ashby, town Middlesex co., Mass. It is in the NW. tp. of the co., on the N. H. line, 47 ms. NW. from Boston.

Ashby de la Zouch, town in Leicestershire, Eng. A canal is now made from this town, which communicates with the Coventry canal. Ashby is 13 ms. S. of Derby, and 115 NNW. of London. Lon. 3 50 W. lat. 50 80 N.

Ashden, village in Essex, Eng., 3 ms. NW. of Saffron Walden.

Ashfield, town in the SW. part of Franklin co., Mass., 113 ms. W. from Boston.

ASIA, the cradle of human society and of civilization, has an extent very nearly equal to that of America, though contrary to the latter in regard to outline. America having a length great in proportion to breadth, whilst Asia has a rude advance towards a rhomboidal outline. The origin of the name is now matter of conjecture. In antiquity, a small province of Lydia, inhabited by a people called Asiones, is supposed to have by extension been adopted for the entire continent. It is evident that, physically speaking, Europe is only a mere extension of Asia. The Ural system of mountains, which conventionally separates the two continents is only the spine of two slopes, one drained eastward into the basin of the Oby, and the other westward into the basins of the Wolga and Petchora; of course, the system of mountains is common, and its strongly marked features and direction nearly north and south render it a convenient limit, but has no natural claim to such distinction. As usually traced on our maps, the residue of the limits between Europe and Asia are still less founded on any physical principle, such as by the rivers Kana, Wolga, Don, and sea of Asoph. One more natural is, however, coming into use. On Black's General Atlas, Edinburg, 1841, from the southern extreme, or rather bifurcation of the Uralian mountains, or head of Ural river, the latter is made the boundary to efflux into the Caspian sea near Gurief, thence along the western shores of the latter sea to the extension of the Caucasian mountains, in Cape Apsheron, and thence along these mountains to the Euxine. The residue by the Euxine, Bosphorus, Marmora sea, and Hellespont, into the Mediterranean, is natural and common to most, if not all systems of geography. Adopting the separating demarcation traced on Black's map of Asia, the latter loses about 300,000 sq. ms., or a strip of 1,200 ms. in length, by a mean of 250 ms. in breadth.

The diminution stated above detracts little, comparatively, from Asia, as that continent still contains an area of rather above 15,000,000 of sq. ms., or very nearly the one third of the land area of the earth. The longest line that can be drawn over it would be extended from the Straits of Bab-el-Mandeb to those of Beering, and, by actual calculation, would measure 8,125 ms. N. 66 32 E. In breadth, Asia extends in a direction very nearly N. and S. 5,212 ms. from the Point of Malacca, N. lat. 1 0 to Cape Severo Vostochnoi, N. lat. 76.

Separated in a distance of 1,400 ms. from Africa by the Red Sea, and only connected with that continent by the isthmus of Suez, Asia has this great peninsula to the southwest, and Europe northwest. On all other sides Asia spreads its immense extent unconnected with other continents. On the extreme northeast, the narrow straits of Beering is followed by America; from which latter protrudes the peninsula of Alaska, and which latter is evidently prolonged in the chain of Aleutian islands. Southwardly from the Aleutians, the two continents seem to retire from each other, Asia southwestward and America southeastward. By a curious resemblance, both continents branch into peninsulas approaching the torrid zone; the former, however, altogether terminating before reaching the equator, whilst the latter, after shrinking at N. lat. 8 0 to an isthmus little more than 20 ms. wide, again spreads into a continent containing upwards of 6,000,000 of sq. ms., but, gradually narrowing beyond S. lat. 6 0, finally terminates at S. lat. 53 30.

Advancing southwardly from the Aleutian islands, Asia is bounded by the Pacific ocean, but indented by deep gulfs and peninsular protrusions, and covered from the main ocean by numerous islands. The sea of Ochotsk, enclosed on the east by Kamschatka, southeast by the Kurile islands, and south by the island of Saghalian; sea of Corea, or Japan, having Manasthuria, or Corea on the west, and on the ocean side the insular chain of Japan. The Yellow sea, or Whang-hai, (Eastern sea,) has China west, and the Lochoo chain and great island of Formosa as ocean barriers. Southward from Formosa extends the comparatively immense Chinese sea, filling the space from the northern tropic to the equator, 1,600 ms., with a mean breadth of at least 600 ms., and with its two gulfs of Tonquin and Siam spreading over rather more than a million of sq. ms., and having the Philippine group east, Borneo southeast, and the extreme southern protrusion of Africa southwest.

Passing the peninsula of Malacca and the island of Sumatra, we enter the wide triangular Gulf of Bengal, having on N. lat. 8 0 a breadth of 1,400 ms., but gradually narrowing northwardly, terminates at N. lat. 22 0, and at the common estuary of the Ganges and Brahmapootra. Into this gulf protrudes the northwestern part of the island of Sumatra, which is again followed by the Nicobar and Andaman islands. On the southwestern side of the Gulf of Bengal the fine island of Ceylon seems a continuation of Indostan. The Arabian sea follows Indostan, opening into the Indian ocean between Cape Comorin and the African coast by a mouth 2,000 ms. wide, and extending northwards from N. lat. 8 0, having Indostan N. E., Africa and Arabia SW., the coast of Beloochistan N., Arabia, NW., and the extreme eastern Africa W. From the Arabian sea protrudes, northeastward of Arabia the deep Persian Gulf, terminating on N. lat. 30 0 by the estuary of the Euphrates; from the western side opens the Gulf of Aden, narrowing to the Straits of Babel Mandeb, and then again opening into the long and narrow Red sea, which, stretching 1,400 ms. to N. lat. 30 0, and within 60 ms. of the Mediterranean, completes, with the isthmus of Suez, our survey of the great outlines of Asia from the straits of Beering to the sea of Kara, or its eastern, southern, and western boundaries.

seas to compare with those connected with the Pacific and Indian oceans, still its shore along the Frozen ocean is much indented. The sea of Kara separates both Europe and Asia from the island of Nova Zembla, and is rather more European than Asiatic. By a long peninsular elongation of the Uralian system, the sea of Kara is separated from the gulf of Oby; the latter, truly Asiatic, is the recipient of the immense volume brought down from the Altoian mountains by the Irish and Oby united. With another narrow intervening peninsula, the gulf of Oby is followed by that of the Yenisei, or Jenisey, receiving from the same remote regions of Altai a mass of water little, if any, inferior to that of the Oby.

The sea of Kara and gulfs of Oby and Jenisey, with their intervening peninsulas, are all crossed by N. lat. 70 0. With the latter gulf, the coast of Asia assumes a course rather N. of NE., about 600 ms. to the Cape Cevero Vostochnoi, or Taimura, N. lat. 78 0, the most northern extreme of the eastern continent. Eastward of Cape Taimura, the coast of Asia inclines to SE. by E. to the mouth of the river Anabara, and thence eastward to the mouth of the large river Lena, and thence to Beering's strait, with a slight inclination southwardly, the general course is eastward.

It is an interesting problem to compare the outline of Asia with that of America.

Thus we find that America, with very nearly equal area, from its great length compared with its breadth, has a much greater perimeter than Asia. At a hasty glance, no strong general resemblance would appear between the two continents, but the more closely they are examined the more strongly do their analogies appear. Both continents spread fan-shaped to the north, and terminate in sharp angular points south. If with Asia we connect the islands of Austral Asia and the insular continent of Australia, (New Holland,) a general physical arrangement common to both becomes not only apparent but demonstrative. It is true the land connexion of Asia with Australia is broken into islands, but the insular chain of Sumatra, Java, Bali, Lombok, Flores, the Lamblem group, and Timor, in their range supply the place of the irregular isthmus between North and South America. It is also peculiarly remarkable that the insular range, connecting Asia and Australia, is almost exactly parallel to the isthmian connexion of America. Again: a line drawn from North Cape of Europe to Cape Howe, the southeastern point of Australia, is exactly parallel to one drawn from Icy cape, in North America, ranging along the western side of that continent, and with its general course passing along the American isthmus over the Gulf of Panama, and thence over South America to the Atlantic ocean, near the island of St. Catharine. Were we not restricted by the necessary brevity of our articles, the list of these analogies could be greatly enlarged, but we may observe that the two latter lines deflect from the meridians 39 40.

When sketching the outlines of Asia, we might, without any severe stretch of system, have traced another limit by the Caspian sea and Elwend mountains, and thence to the common mouth of the Euphrates and Tigris, at the head of the Persian gulf, as the Caucasian countries westward from the Caspian sea, Armenia, Asia Minor, Syria, Palestine, and Arabia, have as much natural connexion with Africa and Europe as with Asia. In reality, geographical science is entangled by conventional subdivisions at variance with those of nature. Though compelled to speak of them as Asiatic, in what may be called an artificial system, we shall treat the regions of Caucasus, Elwend, and Arabia, as physically distinct.

Arabia, African in character, is detached from the residue of Asia by the Arabian or Persian gulf and Euphrates river, and from Africa by the Red sea. On the NW. it protrudes its deserts towards the Mediterranean. Though inhabited by people more or less civilized from the earliest ages, the interior of Arabia remains but partially known. Having no deep bays or rivers of any consequence, and in great part composed of arid deserts, the usual inciting causes of exploring a country is here wanting, whilst its forbidding asperities contribute to repulse enterprises of war, commerce, or travelling. The extent has been estimated at 1,000,000 sq. ms.; and, by inspection of good maps, this area appears to approach correctness. Arabian population must be a matter of excessively vague conjecture.

The name by which this large land section of the earth is known in our books is found in the Jewish Scriptures. It may be doubted, however, whether it was ever general among its own inhabitants, many of whom call Beni Kitrim, or Son of the East; and they also call it adjectively Djeziret-el-Arab, or the peninsula of the Arabs. Turks, Persians, and some other neighboring nations, call it Arab-estian, or country of the Arabs. From the very dawn of history to the present time the people of this region have been divided into tribes more or less mutually hostile. Mahometanism rose in one of these tribes A. D. 622, and for a brief period united them into one sovereignty, but the nature of the country and manners of the people were adverse to permanent union, and therefore, politically speaking, it is very probable Arabia differs little at present from its aspect during the reigns of David and Solomon, (B. C. 1,056 to 975,) and for ages still earlier. The sectarian divisions which rose in the first age of Islamism remain in existence, such as the Zeidites in Yemen, the Abadates in Oman, Schiites on the Persian gulf, and the Messekhlites in Hedjaz.

One general character seems to be inherent in the government of Arabian society—a kind of mingled patriarchal and military subjection to Imans and Scheriffs. Innumerable tribes, partially sedentary and partly nomadic, as described in the Book of Genesis, still exist in primitive simplicity. These tribes occasionally unite in a kind of republic, but except under the immediate successors of Mahomet no other instance has occurred of a union in one body politic of all Arabia.

From Ptolemy down to the present time the accredited division of Arabia has been in European works, into three parts: Arabia the Stony NW., Arabia the Desert NE., and Arabia the Happy SE. These divisions, founded on very vague data, serve to confuse instead of to instruct. From Balbi we give the following political divisions, derived by that author from those in use by the natives of the Hedjaz, or the country of pilgrimage, comprising the whole southwestern part of the peninsula, the same as Arabia Petra, or The Stony, of our maps to the frontiers of Yemen. Oman composes the eastern Arabia. Hesse, or El-Aça, extends northwestward from Oman from the bottom of the Persian gulf to the mouth of the Euphrates; and, lastly, Bahya, or Bar-Arab, as named by the Arabians themselves, comprises the immense interior desert. These divisions are, of course, very general and indefinite as to their interior lines of separation. Their origin is a loose application of physical features, and unsanctioned by any acknowledged political boundaries.

The great general sameness of this country, its as general sterility, and destitution of rivers, strip it of that interest excited by nature where clothed in a more attractive garb. Over a space so large as Arabia, and admitting a considerable population, it is curious, indeed, to find not a stream deserving the title of river. The great outlet of the Euphrates and its confluent rivers touch as under the name of Scat-el-Arab, but cannot be regarded an Arabian river.

The mountains of Arabia are moderate in elevation, nor can much of the country be called mountainous. The chains towards the western coast appear to be granitic. Those in the SW., in the opinion of Niebuhr, have a volcanic character. If metallic matter, to any great amount, exist in these mountains it is neglected, perhaps unknown to a people nomadic and pastoral.

Mecca and Medina, cities made famous by one of those men whose footsteps on the earth are too deep to be effaced, will receive a brief notice in their places. Mascate or Muscat, in the south-eastern part of Arabia, capital of Oman and of a Mahometan sovereignty of considerable political power, is now the most important city of that peninsula. It would answer no useful purpose to swell our articles by giving names which most probably the natives themselves never heard pronounced; we therefore proceed to give Balbi's tabular statements, rendered doubtful in many respects by himself. If on 1,000,000 sq. ms. there are 12,000,000 of people, the asperity of the country must be most palpably exaggerated in most geographical works, and which we believe to be the case.

Tabular view of the population and political divisions of the Arabian peninsula, changing sq. leagues to sq. ms.

All Arabia 1,000,000 sq. ms., pop. 12,000,000.

Hedjaz, including Djeidah (Djudah) and Comlida, pop. 47,000, with the cities of Jermbo, pop. 3,000; Medina 8,000, and Moileh 2,000.

Yemen, comprising Sama, Beit-el-Fakih, and Abon-Arich, with aggregate pop. of 37,000, Damar 20,000, Moku 7,000, and Aden 3,000.

Hudramaout, or Hadramut, containing cities of Makalla, pop. 1,500, Sahar 1,500, Kechin 3,000, Morebat 3,000, Terim 15,000, Chhibab 20,000, and Doan 2,000.

Oman, containing the cities of Mascate, 60,000, Schar or Oman, 10,000.

Hese Hadjar, or El Haca, with the cities of Bahr-al-Khyma, pop. 4,000, El-Katyf 6,000, El-Fouf or El-Hoghouf 15,000, El-Koneyt or Grain 10,000, and Lahsa or Hadjar 15,000.

Bahia, or Bahr Arol, or Nedjed, cities Aneseh, pop. 2,000, and El-Derreych 5,000.

El-Dahna, the desert, with the principal nomadic tribes; Anesehs, pop. 200,000, Chararats 10,000, Wahabites 300,000, Beni-Szahhers 30,000, Mahoualy 30,000, and Amasehs 10,000.

Bahrein islands, in the Persian gulf; Bahrein, pop. 15,000, Arad 5,000, Menaina 5,000, and Maharay 2,000.

Syria and Palestine, forming one physical region, and that amongst the most remarkable of the earth. A chain of distinct though moderately elevated mountains embranch at N. lat. 33° 0' from the great Caucassian system; and assuming a course of SSW., very nearly parallel to the eastern coast of the Mediterranean, and within from 10 to 40 ms. from that sea, terminates in Mount Sinai. The Orontes of the ancients, now the Aazyr, is the only stream of much consequence which flows from the western flanks of this mountain chain, the Lebanon of the Scriptures, and discharged into the Mediterranean. On the eastern side the small streams around Damascus and the Jordan of Palestine, though as rivers scarcely deserving names in a general view, deserve most serious attention from the causes which have given them celebrity, and from their being so highly characteristic of the physical section to which they belong. Of these interior rivers, the Jordan is discharged in the Lake of Asphaltites or Dead sea; which, if recent measurements are correct, is the deepest water surface of the earth. Besides the Dead sea there are numerous smaller lakes in the same region without issue to the sea. The whole of Syria and Palestine, being an embranchment of the arable physical section of Caucasus, a part of the former stretches eastward of the Jordan and Dead sea, but is followed to the eastward by the extension of the Arabian deserts, as is Palestine towards Egypt. About N. lat. 31 30 terminates the arable land of both sides of the Dead sea.

In length Syria and Palestine comprise about 50 lat., with a mean breadth of at most 100 ms., area 35,000 sq. ms. More space is usually assigned to Syria, but is only gained by including uncultivateable deserts towards the Euphrates. The eastern and southern parts are on every physical principle confounded with the Arabian sands.

The Arabs, some few, are sedentary and agricultural, but most of them are now as they were from the dawn of history, robbers. The inhabitants are mixed. The Turcomans and Koords congregate around Aleppo, and wander over Diarbeker. More southwardly the Druses, Metualis, Ansaries, Maronites, and others of lesser note, form independent tribes, continually more or less mutually hostile. Palestine is occupied by Arabs, Turks, Jews, and a few Europeans. All these semi-barbarous tribes, diverse in language, manners, and religion, and without any political tie, are in a state of anarchy, which appears from past history to be irremediable. Yet this same singular country has at all times sustained an intrepid, intellectual, and most influential people. The parents of our arts, and still more of our religions, lived and died there, and their dust mingles with its soil. Include with it Arabia, and on it rose, and on it still exist, the Jewish, Christian, and Mahometan religions.

Turning our view to the north, we discover Scanderoon, or Alexandretta, subjected to earthquakes, one of which, as late as 1822, laid it in ruins. Antakiah, or Antioch, once the capital of the empire of the Seleucidae, and in aftertimes of Roman Asia, rivalling Rome itself in population and wealth, scarce now preserves the skeleton of former grandeur. About 60 ms. eastward from Antakiah brings us to Aleppo, the entrepôt between the Mediterranean and Euphrates, still rich and flourishing, though severely visited in 1822 by the same earthquake which ruined Antakiah. Hamer, higher up the Orontes, and 100 ms. from Antakiah, maintains the rank of a commercial city. This place was the birth place of Abul-Feda, Arabian prince and geographer. One hundred ms. SW. from Hama, and on the Mediterranean, we find Tripoli, the Tarabolis of the Orientals; a city with a defective port, unhealthy vicinity, and population of 16,000.

At the eastern foot of Mount Libanus, amidst a fertile plain, and watered by the Barady (Pharphar of the Scriptures) and numerous other gushing channels, stands, if not the most, surely amongst the most, interesting cities of the earth, Damas, or Damascus, the El Cham of the Orientals. Damas was a city before Jerusalem, and through all the changes of thirty centuries, has remained a city. Very different from other cities of Asiatic Turkey, it is clean, well built, streets paved, with paved side walks. Houses, streets, and walks occupied by 200,000 industrious, manufacturing, and commercial people. It is an immense entrepôt, with monuments of architectural grandeur and imposing construction, to give it rank with the finest cities of Europe. N. lat. 33 29, lon. 36 25 E. of London.

Sidon, which preceded Tyre, has also survived the once commercial queen; the former still a town of 7 or 8,000 souls, the latter a poor fishing village. Of the maritime towns of Syria, the most important at present is St. John D'Acre, formerly Ptolemais, about 100 ms. SW. from Damascus, and 80 NNW. from Jerusalem. This place, so famous in the Crusades, has gained recent celebrity from the calamities of war.

We have already named the people of Syria, but may add a few observations more in detail. The Maronites, formed into a Christian sect in the seventh century of our era, named from the convent of Saint Maron. Their doctrines partake of both the Roman and Greek churches, and is probably more primitive than either. Their priests are permitted to marry. They inhabit the district of Libanus, called Kesraoun, about lat. 34° N., and between Mount Libanon and the Mediterranean sea.

Southwardly from the Druses, and also between Mount Libanon and the Mediterranean, reside the Druses, Mahometans, usually regarded, though in fact professors of no particular religion, and equally opposed to both Mahometans and Christians. The number of the Maronites and Druses have been each estimated at 120,000.

The two chains of Libanus and Anti-Libanus, advancing from N. to S., gradually incline to the westward, and both terminate near the Mediterranean sea, a little above N. lat. 33°, leaving a long narrow intervening valley, inhabited by the Metualis, Mahometans of the sect of Ali, and violently opposed to the Turks, from the combined motives of religion and politics.

Passing Anti-Libanus in a southern direction, we enter Palestine, and find ourselves on the fountains of the Jordan, the Charia of the Arabs, and in the ancient and fertile Galilee, now Saphat, or Saffad, from its principal city, the ancient Bethulia. We are now on ground where every name is the text for a history. Crossing the Lake Genezareth, or sea of Galilee, on our right we see Zabania, once Tiberias; and still farther in the same direction rises Mount Tabor, and behind it, concealed in sycamores and olive trees, Nazareth, now Nassa, still containing a population of 2,000. From this village the Saviour of mankind derives one of his titles. Mount Carmel lies behind, and before spreads the smiling plain of Esdrelon.

From the Lake of Tiberias to the Dead sea, the Jordan pursues a general course very nearly S., having on its right one of the most fertile tracts of Palestine, and the Scriptural Sichern, Neapolis, now Naplous or Sychar. Here every name calls us back to patriarchal days. Advancing still southward, and leaving the fertile plains, we are led into the gorges of arid mountains, and to Jerusalem, the El-Kouds, or Beit-el-Mukaddes of the Arabians, and, along some of the gorges, to a distant view of the Dead sea and mountains of Moab.—See article Jerusalem.

At 6 ms. S. of Jerusalem, on a mountain covered with olive trees and vines, stands Bethlehem, and to the E. of both of those cities, so deeply engraven on the history of the world, and in the deep vale between the mountains of Judea and Moab, extends the Dead or Asphaltic sea.—See Dead sea.

About lat. 31° the mountainous range, which in its ramifications forms the region comprising Syria and Palestine, terminates in deserts inhabited by Bedouins.

Retracing our steps from the Arabian deserts, and once more gaining the ranges of Mount Libanus, we enter into one of the favored by nature of the physical sections of the earth; which, taken in its full extent, reaches from the mouth of the Euphrates to the Caspian sea, Caucasian mountains, and Euxine sea, and westward to the Bosphorus, Marmora, Hellespont, and Mediterranean. In lat. this region extends from 36° to 42° N., and in lon. from 26° to 50° E. of London, and containing at least 400,000 sq. ms.

One of the ramifications of the great mountain range of southern Europe, interrupted by the Hellespont, rises in Asia, and extending SE. by E. 600 ms., partially ranging with the opposite coast of the Mediterranean, approaches within 50 ms. of that sea, in the ancient Cilicia. From this range declines two slopes; one, the smallest and narrowest, towards the Mediterranean, drained by numerous short but rapid rivers, of which the only ones of much note are the Sarabat, ancient Hermus, and Meander, now Minder. The Euxine, or northern slope of Asia Minor, does not, in all its extent, fall directly from the Caucasian mountains, as the centre of that peninsula is one of those elevated basins without outlet, comprising much of the ancient Lycia and Phrygia. Though spreading over more than two-thirds of what is properly Asia Minor, and containing, with many lesser streams, the comparatively large rivers, ancient Sangaria, now Sacarja, and ancient Halys, now Kizil Irmak, it is less celebrated, and perhaps less favored by nature, than is that descending in a lower latitude towards the Mediterranean.

The mountain system we have noticed reaches and is traversed by the Euphrates river almost exactly at N. lat. 38° . Before reaching the Euphrates, the mountain system has commenced to incline to E. and NE. by E., and following the latter course 400 ms. eastward of the Euphrates, and separating the higher sources of that great river from those of the Tigris, reaches the high crown of Armenia in the celebrated local summit of Ararat.

Traversed by numerous lateral chains, the country containing the higher sources of the Euphrates, Tigris, Aras, or Kur, and some small but rapid rivers flowing into the Euxine, is the most elevated part of the great region under review.

As regards human residence, in an excursive view of the whole surface, we find the rivers Euphrates and Tigris issuing from mountains and fertile tales. One of the most important cities of this great country, rich in metals, and exhibiting traces of extinct volcanoes, is Diarbeker, flourishing by its manufactures of morocco and silk, and containing a population of 70,000 or 80,000. Mardin, 20 ms. SE. from Diarbeker, equally industrious, though with not more than one third of the population. Orfa, by some authors supposed the Ur of the Chaldees and the Greek Edessa, still a city of 40,000 or 50,000 inhabitants, industrious and commercial. Mousol, at N. lat. 36° 20, and 250 ms. lower down the Tigris than Diarbeker, and which gave name to one of its fabrics, muslin, occupies both sides of the river, and is united by a bridge of 16 arches; pop. about 16,000. It is the entrepôt of the adjacent region. Carsten Niebuhr regarded the eastern side of this city as the site of ancient Nineveh. If so, and probability is in favor of its being so, it is one of the most ancient of cities. In its environs, on the mountain El-Kosh, rises the monastery of St. Mathew, the apostolic seat of the Catholic Nestorian patriarch, on whom depends the Christian population of 300 villages.

If we cross the Tigris, we find ourselves in that country between that river and the Elwend (ancient Zagros) mountains, which derives its name from its inhabitants, the Kurds, Coords, or Curds, a nation who claim descent from the Uzbees, and perhaps are descended from a mixture of Parthians, Tartars, and Persians. The Koords are peculiarly warlike. Those of them who are within the Ottoman empire and west of the Elwend, are more sedentary than those in Persia, and though nominally subject to Turkey, are ruled by their own chiefs and laws or customs. Their country, peculiarly fertile, is productive in rice, wheat, barley, sessamum, various fruits and gall nuts, as also tobacco. On the frontiers of Persia roam predatory and ferocious tribes. The only towns of note are Djézireh, on a sandy island of the Tigris, in very near mid-distance between Mousol and Diarbeker; Djoulamerk, or Gialamerk, on the Zab, 80 ms. eastward of Djézireh; Amadiah, about 100 ms. N. of Mousol, the capital of a principality which it is said can bring to the field 40,000 men, and in which stands upwards of 100 strong castles. There is, indeed, good reason to regard all Turkish Asia, including Koordistan, as offering, in a social and political condition, a very strong resemblance to most of Europe about from 500 to 700 years past, if not to a much later period.

Descending the Euphrates and Tigris below N. lat. 36° , we behold them spreading from each other, and then gradually reapproaching, leaving between them as low down as lat. 34° 0 an expansion of the Arabian desert. The former river, indeed, below its great southeastern inflection near lat. 36° 0, has the deserts along or near its banks through upwards of 700 ms. of the lower part of its course. About 300 ms. above their junction, these two noble rivers leave the hilly regions, and, winding through alluvial plains, and opposite Bagdad, the intermediate space not exceeding 20 ms., is cut by natural and artificial channels. Bagdad, the great and mysterious Bagdad, founded in A. D. 762 by Abu Jaafar al-Mansoor, the second Abaside Khalif, stands on the eastern bank of the Tigris, at N. lat. 33 20, long. 44 24, E. of London about 70 ms., N. of Hillah, on the Euphrates, and 300 ms. NW. of Bassa, on the Shat-el-Arab. Bagdad was, from its foundation until taken by the Mongols in 1258, the seat of the most powerful empire then in western Asia, rich, flourishing, and commercial, and the seat of arts and sciences, and which still retains a population of 80,000 or 100,000, and is still the principal entrepôt of these regions.

Hillah, on the Euphrates, contended for by many writers as occupying the site of Babylon, is a city of some 15,000 or 20,000 inhabitants, and considerable commerce. We are here on ground which, it is probable, in the long course of ages has been every part occupied by towns and cities, and was no doubt more flourishing 3,000 years past than at present. Below the junction of the Euphrates and Tigris, the united stream is called by the people of the country Shat-el-Arab, and receives from the Elwend and Louristan mountains two considerable confluent, the Hawceza Ahwas, (Ulai of the Prophet Daniel), and the Karoon. On the right bank of the Shat-el-Arab, and about 60 ms. above the Persian gulf, stands the important city of Bassora, Bassa, or Bnsorah, with a population of 60,000.

Before leaving the important region we have been reviewing, we cannot repress some reflections on the now barbarous condition of its people, and how much natural advantages may be vainly and profusely spread when man is not prepared to render them available. Here are connected countries containing more area than do all the British islands, France, and Spain, which latter, taken together, contain a population of 75,000,000 to 78,000,000. Were this great physical section of western Asia as well peopled, at least 80,000,000 of inhabitants would exist upon its surface. It ought, from its soil, climate, fine rivers, and admirable position between Asia, Europe, and Africa, to command the eastern continent. But blasted by war, religious fury, and misgovernment of every kind, misery and barbarism reigns from age to age. Stupid tyranny in the Turkish rulers; excursions of barbarous, ferocious, and even savage bands, maintain enduring uncertainty of the present and future, which we may regard as an insuperable obstacle to even incipient prosperity. Disorder and weakness for good, but powerful for evil, characterises every branch of administration. Oppression and fermentation in the provinces; bands of robbers on every road; insurrection on every quarter; ambitious and powerful neighbors; disunion of society every where prevailing; and, finally, no power of repressing wrong in existence—such is the political condition of one of the tracts most abundantly supplied by nature which exists on our planet.

Though we cannot make ourselves accountable for its entire accuracy, we give, as the best attainable, the following tabular view of Asiatic Turkey:

General view of the Persic region, Beloochistan, Cabulistan, Herat, Boukhara, Khiva, Khokan, and Turcomania.

Bounded W. by Turkish Asia, NW. by the Caucasian countries, and northward by the Caspian sea and Russian Asia; E. by Mongolia, Thibet, and Indostan, and S. by the Indian ocean and Persian Gulf, extends regions of immense extent, and presenting great variety of climate, with the extremes of soil, from sandy deserts to tracts of unsurpassed fertility. Extending in lat. from 25 to 40° N., and in lon. from 44 to 72 E. of London. Greatest length 1,700 ms., in a direction of SE. and NW., between Cape Monge, on the SE., to Mount Ararat, on the NW. Measured by the rhombs, the area of this great region amounts to about 1,100,000 sq. ms. In regard to its physical and political sub-divisions, the description cannot be other than very general; there are, however, features in its physiognomy too strong and distinct to be mistaken. Though bounded on the E. by the noble volume of the Indus river, and on the W. actually giving source to numerous confluent of the Euphrates and Tigris, the Persic region is in a very remarkable degree devoid of rivers. The central part, indeed, including full the one-half of the whole surface, is a desert of rock and sand, elevated, dreary, and desolate.

Beloochistan, the ancient Gedrosia, and the Makran of the Arabians, extends along the Arabian sea about 600 ms., and fills the southern part of the space between the basin of the Indus river and the Persian Gulf, and mountains of Kerman. Provincially, as laid down on Black's Atlas, Beloochistan contains Lus on the extreme SE., Jhalawan, Sarawan, and Cutch Gundava, north-eastwards towards the Indus, Mukran, or Makran, in the centre, and on the W., Bushkurd and Kohistan. Traversed on the eastern side by the Hala mountains, a ridge of the Suleiman system, and on the W. by the Bushkurd ridge, this country, similar to most other parts of the physical section to which it belongs, is very devoid of permanent rivers, though generally composed of an inclined plain, sloping towards the Indian ocean. Soil in most part sterile, if not desert, but meliorates towards the north, where it is bounded by the more elevated Cabul or Afghanistan. Such streams as traverse this country are mere torrents in the rainy season, dried up in summer and autumn. The physical character of the country is Arabian, as though in most part sterile, many of its valleys smile in the richest verdure. The scorching heat of summer warded off the inhabitants by the shade of date, orange, and other trees, affording at once shelter and nourishment. Like all other countries inhabited by civilized people, and where water is scarce, irrigation supplies partially natural fertility. Lying between N. lat. 25½ and 30°, and declining southwardly, and without stagnant water, Beloochistan is amongst the most salubrious sections of Asia.

Nationally, it presents its connexion with Persia and Indostan. The name is Persian, and means "The country of the Beloochis," a people speaking a dialect of the Persian language. The Beloochis are, however, only the principal, and not by any means the exclusive inhabitants. Another people, who use a Hindoo dialect, the Brahouis, occupy a part of the country. Both nations are Mahometans, of the sect of Omar, and both are represented by travellers as stout, tall, robust, well-proportioned, intelligent, and hospitable; also amongst the most warlike of Asiatic nations. Government a limited monarchy.

Caboul, or Afghanistan, extends northwards from Beloochistan, and westward from Indostan. This elevated, and in great part mountainous country, lying between N. lat. 28 and 38°, is composed of three inclined plains. The west side, drained by the Hindmend, or Helmund river, forming a basin of 116,000 sq. ms., without oceanic outlet. Though on European maps outlines are traced defining the political sections of this, as of other parts of Asia, it is probable, from all testimony, that the inhabitants themselves have little respect for boundaries not preserved by military force. As limited on Black's Atlas, 1841, Afghanistan or Caboul is bounded S. by Beloochistan, W. by the Great Persian desert, NW. by the mountains of Khorasan, N. by Toorkmania (Turkestan) and Tartary, and E. by the great river Indus. The area about 250,000 sq. ms. The outlines, except on the Indus, vague. The southwestern side, embracing full one-fourth part, is desert, with very partial exceptions. Near the mouth of the Indus, a system of mountains rises, and, following the general course of the Indus northwardly by different chains under the general title of Suleiman mountains, traverses Beloochistan and Afghanistan through 10° of lat. 26 36, until, mingling with and confounded with the Hindo Koosh mountains; the latter forming part of the great southern mountain band which, under numerous local names, crosses the whole eastern continent from the Atlantic to the Pacific ocean. That part of this immense system, the ancient Paropamisus, and Hindoo Koosh of modern geography, which is comprised in northern Afghanistan, is composed of lateral chains, which, at about N. lat. 35 and 68° E. of London, form a nucleus of mountain ridges and gorges, from which issue and flow southwestwardly the sources of the Hindmend, northwardly those of the Amou Deria, or Jihoon, and eastwardly those of the Cabool, or Peshawur branch of the Indus. Independent of its mountains, this part of Afghanistan is elevated and exposed to severe winter cold, a character which it partakes with northern Persia and Khorasan. Over the whole, summer heat is as excessive as winter cold. These countries have, in all historical ages, been inhabited by warlike nations, and have shared in the mighty political revolutions. Invaded and traversed by the Macedonians under Alexander, possessed in turn by Greeks, Syrians, Tartars, or Turks, Persians, and Mongols, and recently invaded by the British, it is possessed by a people we call Afghans, who, however, are its ruling, but not exclusive people. Beloochis, Uzbecs, Tadjics, Hindoos, Persians, and others, trade with and mingle with the Afghans.

Afghan is one of those foreign and imposed terms unknown, except through other languages, to the people to whom it is applied. The term is Persian; the people call themselves Pooshtoon, and plurally Pooshtaunch. They are Mahometans of the Sonnite sect, but lax in discipline, and tolerant to other religious professions. In regard to society and government, not only the Afghans, but those over the whole Persic region, have strong resemblance to the condition of European nations during the dark ages; an observation which may be extended with the utmost propriety to respective civilization.

Provincially, Afghanistan is divided into Seistan on the SW., Sewistan SE., Caboul in the centre, Damaun towards the Indus, or between that river and Suleiman mountains, Kohestan and Ghoraut on the north side, and Herat or Eastern Khorasan NW. All the northern part, from the Indus to the borders of Toorkmania, in a distance of above 600 ms., is an immense congeries of mountains. In brief, Afghanistan, were its inhabitants united under one efficient Government, would be amongst the most defensible sections of the earth; and, divided as they are into tribes, such is the nature of their country that its conquest is in reality hopeless.

Persia is another of those national terms bestowed by foreigners, and loosely applied to regions physically different, and in regard to inhabitants in manners, language, and government, and never, except by momentary conquest, even nominally united into one sovereignty, rendered vague politically by the permanent features of nature, which opposed irremovable obstacles to national union. If under the name of Persia we embrace the regions to which the term is usually applied, we have before us a country, or rather countries, of great extent, between two deserts. The great system of mountains so often already mentioned, forming a massive nucleus between the Caspian, Euxine, and Mediterranean seas, and from which extend westward the mountains of Armenia and Asia Minor, northwestward those particularly designated Caucasus, southeastward the Elwend, (ancient Zagros,) and eastward chains which extend between the Caspian and great salt desert of Yezed, forms the already noticed Hindoo-Kosh. The Elwend in various chains extends from Tauris and Ararat southeastward, discharging from its southwestern flanks the numerous confluent of the Tigris and Lower Euphrates, and thence, continuing the same direction, between the Persian gulf and desert of Yezed, to the Indian ocean and western borders of Beloochistan, and slightly inflecting eastward, is continued to its junction with the Suleiman system, near the delta of the Indus. The distance from the mouth or delta of the Indus to Mount Ararat is about 1,800 ms., of which 600 are over Beloochistan, and the residue in Persia. The northern ramification, from the nucleus of Ararat to the western border of Beloochistan, 1,200 ms., forms Persia into a rude approach to a semi-ellipse, with a wide central desert.

Provincially, Persia contains on the extreme NW. Azerbaijan, Ghilan, and Persian Koordistan: in the central, West Irak Adjerni, (ancient Media;) between Elwend proper and mountains of Louristan, the province of Louristan; and towards the common mouth of the Euphrates and Tigris, Khusistan, (the ancient Susiana;) north-eastwards from the Persian Gulf, Fars, or Farsistan, (ancient Persia proper,) from which comes our common name for the whole region, and which is followed towards Beloochistan by the provinces of Laristan, along the Persian Gulf, and Kirman, between Laristan and the internal desert.

On the northern side of the desert, and eastward from Ghilan, extends the low and unhealthy province of Mazanderan, followed eastward by Khorasan, the ancient Hyrcania, and Parthia.

To exhibit one feature illustrative of the real physiognomy and physical character of Persia, it may be noted that the desert spreads from N. lat. 30° , or extreme northern border of Farsistan and Kirman, to N. lat. 36° , or southern border of Khorasan. In brief, a general name could not easily be given to any other equal continuous section of the earth so completely dissecrated, as to its minor parts and in regard to human association, as Persia. Confining the term, however, to the really habitable sections, we have in the native IRAN an extensive and very diversified country, on which great empires have risen and fallen—a country on which nations have always existed who have greatly influenced the history of Asia. With mountains of no slight elevation, valleys presenting the most enchanting scenery and most abundant fertility, and saline deserts of vast extent, no general description will apply. In the northwestern provinces, the winters are long and severe; in the southern, the elevation of the surface compensating low latitude, the seasons are mild and uniform, and native poets have employed one of the finest of languages in its praise. Isphahan, in the centre, and Shiraz, in the south, were long the capitals of modern Persia; but for nearly a century past, Teheran, at lat. 35 42 N., lon. 51° 21 E., in the mountains of Demavend, has possessed the palace and presence of the Schah.

Similar to Beloochistan and Afghanistan, Persia is inhabited by various tribes; and the nature of the country has produced two classes, the sedentary and nomade or roving. The settled people, under the name or title of Tadjiks, cultivate the fields, and reside in the cities. The Afchars and Cadjars are nomades who rove over the intermediate country between the Caspian and northwestern Persia, towards and in the recesses of the mountains Elwend and Ararat. The famed Turcomans range over northern and northeastern Persia as far as the river Amou Deria. The Koords give name to Koordistan, and, mingling with others, who, under different names, are probably different only in name, as in America, the same savage or barbarous people are thus rather confused than designated. Persia is peculiarly remarkable, as inhabited by people in almost every stage of civilization. The proper Persians have been, and not inappropriately, called the French of Asia, particularly as to manners.

The government, such as it is, of these regions is feudal, in the worst sense. Military despotism is the main principle; and, truly Asiatic, the land and people are regarded as the property of the sovereign. This accounts in part for the choice of nomadic life, as it is only the sedentary population who are crushed by the sovereign power. Without regular laws, fixed tribunals, internal industry protected by legal authority, roads or means of safe transportation, or commerce which would deserve the name, or indeed any institution respected by an enlightened and united people, Persia, as a nation or general government, exists rather in name than fact. Lying between two great Powers, Great Britain and Russia, it is protected from both rather by deserts, craggy mountains, and great extent of territory, than by any internal moral or physical force.

Khorasan, or, as often named from its strong capital Herat, comprises northeastern Persia and, in most part, the ancient Hyrcania and Parthia. The most formidable armies of Central Asia have come from these provinces. Sometimes connected with Persia, but much more frequently separate and hostile, Herat now claims independence from both Persia and Afghanistan.

Independent Tartary, Tuorkmania, or Turkistan, Bokhara, Kharism, Kirguis, &c.

To the NE. from Persia and N. of Afghanistan extends a country of vast extent, having the Caspian sea W., the Beloor mountains E., and the Russian steppes N., reaching from N. lat. 35 0 to 55 0, and with a mean breadth of at least 600 ms. and area of upwards of 1,000,000 sq. ms. To this region we have bestowed the title of Independent Tartary, and that not incorrectly, as, except by the Monguls, it never has been held subject to foreign conquerors. It made the centre of the empire, as it was the native country of Tamerlane. Russia is now pressing on Tartary, but only as a reflux of time; for more than two centuries Russia was tributary to the Khans of Tartary, and her grand dukes bowed their necks and crouched at the feet of the grand Khan. There is no other vulgar error of our books more gross than confounding the real Tartar, or more properly Turk, with the Monguls. The Tartars differ as much from the Monguls, by form, feature, structure of body and head, as the Caucasian Moor from the negro. The Tartar, tall, well-formed, with features and head on the European model, hair curled, and, like the beard, long and abundant, is remarkably distinguished from the misshapen, stoop-shouldered Mongul, with his square visage, projecting cheekbones, coarse and thinly scattered hair, and chin nearly deprived of beard. Though only separated by the Beloor mountains, the respective countries inhabited by the two races, compose two great physical regions as contrasted as are the two people. The great table land of Mongolia, the real centre of Asia, has been already noticed, stretching from the Palcati lake to the great wall of China, Kinghan mountains, and sources of the Argoun. Tartary or Turkestan, sloping from the Beloor mountains westward, seems, as it does in fact, in the double regard of features and inhabitants, physically speaking, commences Europe, and the more by its numerous rivers and fertile soil. The two noble streams of Gihoon, now Amou Deria and the Sihoon or Sir-Deria, deriving their sources from the ancient Imaus, now Beloor mountains, pour their volumes into the Aral lake or sea. Here we have the Sogdiana, and Margiana of the Greek writers, the Mavaralnahr of the Arabians, and, crossing the Amou, we are in the modern Bokhara, and, despite of war and revolution, and over the sea of ages, a country still well peopled, rich, and the most powerful of those States, included under the title of Independent Tartary. Here, coming from the east, is the first country in a distance of 2,000 ms., where the traveller can be cheered by cultivated fields, flowing rivers, canals of irrigation, and cities exhibiting the creations of a civilized society. Two travellers habituated, one to the life of man in Eastern Asia, and the other to that of Western Europe, and meeting on their way from their respective native countries, in the city of Bokhara, if they spoke a common language, would express widely different opinions on the social and intellectual condition of Tartary. The European, if he formed his judgment on what Europe is, would regard Tartary as barbarous; but if he judged from what Europe was, from the 5th to the 10th century of the Christian era, would pronounce Bokhara, Samarcand, Balk, Kliiva, and Urgheuz, flourishing cities. The Asiatic, after traversing the desolate Mongolia, would have the most exalted ideas of the regions westward from the Beloor mountains. It is not without melancholy reflections that we can, even in imagination, scan a country which has struggled in all ages against barbarian conquerors, a country which, from its position and natural advantages, would seem destined to enjoy in itself prosperous civilization, and prolong towards Europe the connexion between the eastern and western sides of the Eastern continent.

The following tabular view of the Persian region is given on the authority of the geography of Larenaudivere, Balbi, and Huot, but without guaranteeing its entire accuracy, as there does not exist in any such countries statistical element to enable even the natives to form satisfactory statements of numbers in regard to population or extent of territory.

We have now taken a cursory survey of a region, nominally a part of Asia, which, however, were our artificial subdivisions made with due regard to physical limits, would be considered and named as a whole in itself. The only land surface which unites the Caucassian region to Asia is that between the southern shore of the Caspian and the head of the Persian gulf, about 500 ms., whilst the land space is upwards of 1,500 between the northern shore of the Caspian sea and that of Karia. Thus we discover Europe, as far as land is concerned, threefold more directly connected with the great body of Asia than is the Caucassian region.

Independent, therefore, of the countries we have reviewed under the names of Arabia, Palestine, &c., Asia rises from the Frozen ocean, Pacific ocean, Indian ocean, and the Persian gulf and Caspian sea, to a great central table land. From this immense plateau falls four slopes: one northwards, towards the Frozen ocean, the second to the eastward, into the Pacific ocean, the third southwardly, into the Indian ocean, and the fourth westward, towards the Caspian.

The great table land of Mongolia is bounded northwards by the Thian Chan system of mountains, westward by the Beloor, (ancient Imaus,) and S. by the Kuen Luen system. To the E. it is open to the seas of China and Japan. From it no stream of water issues to the N., W., or S. Placing ourselves mentally on the verge of the Thian Chan, very near mid-distance from the Gulf of Petehellee and the sources of Ural river in the Ural mountains, and also very near mid-distance from the head of the Gulf of Bengal and that of Obey, and you have a central spot upwards of 1,400 ms. distant from any sea. Within this radius of 1,400 ms. the Baikal sea, comparatively only a large lake, covers more area than do all the residue of water surface within its sweep.

Thus placing ourselves, we have around us the most extended continuous land of the earth, and we may regard ourselves amid the most stupendous natural scenes. Towards the northern pole descends the great slope of Northern Asia; on every side mountains, stretching away towards the far distant recipients of their rivers, except to the south and eastward, whence spreads the frozen deserts of Shamo or Cobi, perhaps the highest plateau of the globe. At great distances from each other on these wastes spread small saline or brackish lakes, into which flow small rivers, along which the few fertile spots and shrubby appearance of the only trees which rise near their banks render desolation more gloomy. This is, however, the character of the central table land of Asia, through upwards of 2,000 ms. from the Kuen Luen to the Siolki mountains, or from the sources of the Indus and Amou Deria rivers to those of the Argoun or upper Amur, with a varying width from 3 0 to 10 0 lat.

Towards the north the central plateau is in some degree, but with less sterility, extended beyond the Thian Chan mountains to the lower Altai, and on the W. giving source to the Irtysh, in the centre to the Oby, and E. to those of the Selinga and Argoun and Kirton Pira branches of Amur. The wide space between the Thian Chan and Lower Altai mountains, and in E. and W. direction between the Beloor and Siolki, over 50 0 lon. on the mean N. lat. 47 0, or through 2,000 miles, is traversed by branches of the two bounding mountain systems, dividing it into extensive natural basins. Of these basins is Soongarie on the W., and, though as large as France, is without river outlet. Soongarie is followed eastward by the country of the Eluths, of little less extent, but drained by the upper Irtysh and upper Oby. The Eluths are, with an intervening mountain chain, followed by the Kalkas Mongols, who roam over the immense regions drained by the Selinga and higher confluent of the Amur. Those three great sections comprise the "Thian Chan Pelou," or "Country beyond the Thian Chan," of the Chinese.

Advancing eastward of Mengolia and Thian Chan-pe-Lou, the central table land terminates, and the Altaian system, cut through, as it is in the Russian province of Nertchinsk, or rather in passing from the country of Kalkas Mongolia into Nertchinsk, by the Selinga river, is continued by the names of Stanovoy and Yablonoy, or by other local names as the mountains of Daouria, Khinigan, and the Lamoertes, until the system is terminated, or more probably only interrupted by Beering's strait. These chains limit, and, by their ramifications, indicate, and in part separate the great northern river basins of Asia; that of the Oby on the W., Jenisey in the centre, and that of the Lena on the E. All these basins and many smaller ones, terminating beyond the Arctic circle in level, and in the short summer marshy, and winter frozen and naked plains, make the indefinite, vast, and desolate Siberia. If we include with Siberia Mongolia and the intervening countries, this part of the earth is distinguished by one physical fact from all others: that is, from the great elevation of Mongolia from lat. 40 0 to 50 0 N., the temperature of winter is little, if any, less rigorous than is the same season along the Arctic ocean above lat. 65 0. The favorable climate is, from these circumstances, above lat 50 0 N., and from thence to 60 0 N.

Great attention has been paid by geographers to the mountain systems of Asia, which range eastwardly and westwardly, whilst the systems which have their direction from SW. to NE. have been neglected, though the latter is little, if any, less prominent.

Amongst the men who have contributed most to bring order out of confusion, as regards physical geography, by elevated, expanded, and correct views, Alexander Humboldt stands at the head. After his return from America, for the geography of which he performed the most profound services, he turned his attention towards Asia, that most extended and most elevated continent of the earth, and to which Europe is only a peninsula. The view is here drawn to the cradle of mankind, according to all our records, sacred and profane. The animated movement recently assumed by all the sciences since their mutual aid and dependence, have been discovered and made available, have produced the most happy results on geography. Comparing the great features of nature with the facts of general history, the great mountain systems, enclosing between their regions, inhabited by different nations, have served to determine the origin and direction of the intervening valleys, painful of access from one to the other, have had on nations by enchainning society into groups, a greater influence than horizontal distance. Routes open to either, or both commerce and invasion, by rivers and arms of the sea, have been so long discussed as to admit them as elements in history; and yet systems of mountains, equal in all cases, and much more so in some instances, have been strangely overlooked. The movements of emigrations, the mutations of political power, operating in directions and with subdivisions apparently capricious, have strong light reflected on them by the development of mountain geography.

Again: to obtain any knowledge of climate deserving the name of science, it has always been requisite to study prevailing winds, the relations of land and water, the slopes and inclinations of land surface, the range of the great continental coasts, the mass and direction of mountain systems, with their elevation and that of their intervening valleys. Recently, and only recently, has it been acknowledged that the surface of the earth is only half defined by any spherical projection, globular or plane, if the vertical relations of height are neglected.

Geology comes forward in aid of geography in uniting into the same system and formation those parallel chains which, until the present age, appeared as unconnected with each other. Regarding the chains as the merely most prominent parts of the wrinkles of the earth which, with varying elevation above the surface, we may consider as giving the aspect without reality of interruption. This law is manifested by mountain elevation in the same direction, when we apply scientific principles to their investigation. Thus by methods truly founded on the phenomena of our globe, we subdivide continents into sections endowed with precise characters illustrative of both geography and history, and order produced where confusion long reigned.

The surface of Central and Eastern Asia has remained in a similar state of uncertainty with the history of its inhabitants. An accurate knowledge of the great features of nature in those immense regions must precede, and then direct, the study of events attending the progress of humanity. The rise, progress, and decline of nations, present the vast image of a protracted battle, which, to follow and comprehend the detail, demands profound knowledge of the field of contention.

We now proceed to give a brief sketch of the classifications of the features of natural physiognomy, established by Humboldt on the general surface of Eastern and Central Asia.

We may premise that, on a connected view of both, that on the southern side the mountainous character of Asia is extended into Europe, whilst along the northern side of the former spreads an immense plain, which, only interrupted by the Uralian mountains, is stretched into Europe even to the NE. of France. The prodigious groups and chains of the enormous mountains of Asia and Europe, stretching over the eastern continent in nearly its greatest length, may be classed and examined in four systems, which, proceeding from N. to S., are the Altaian, Thian Chan, Kuen Luen, and Himalaya.

The Altaian system, commencing about 60 0 lon. E. of London, and lat. 47 0 in the steppes of the Kirguis, ranges, with inflections and under different names, to the straits of Beering. Its first range of about 300 ms., SE. by E., is over the steppe to where it merges into the Beloor Dagh, (ancient Imaus.) Then assuming a nearly eastern course of 600 ms. along the mean lat. of 49 0, is traversed by the Irtysh, or outlet of Lake Zaizan, thence 200 ms. in a like direction to the passage of upper Oby, and still with the same general course, but with a semicircular curve northwards, under the local name of the Syansk, or Sayamen mountains, is at 200 ms. traversed by the Sayansk or upper Jenesei river, and again at a distance of 800 ms. from the Oby, traversed by the Selinga river, near Kiachta and Selinghinsk. From its first rise in the steppes of Kirguis, this system is known as the Urgan Daba, and evidently united to the Uralian by the Alydim chain, thence towards the Intysh, as the Resha, and between the Oby and Selinga, as the lesser Altai, or, as already stated,* the Sayamen mountains, eastward of the Selinga, at a distance of 1,800 ms. from the steppes of Kirguis, the Altaian, assuming the name of Yablonoy, and in a direction of NE. by E. 1,500 ms., separating the sources of the Lena from those of the Amur, reaches the sea of Ochotsk; thence, in a NE. direction, under the name of Stanovoy, in different fragments, and distance of 2,000 ms., is terminated, or more probably, only interrupted, by Beering's straits, having a range on the sphere of upwards of 5,000 ms., and stands amongst the greatest mountain systems of the earth.

The Thian Chan, from a Chinese term, meaning "The mountains of Heaven," branches from the Beloor system, at about 69 0 or 70 0 E. lon.

London, and thence, pursuing the mean lat. of 42 0 towards Hami 1,000 ms., apparently sinks to the level of the desert, but, as probable from the aspect of the country, it is the desert which rises to the height of the mountains. This conclusion receives great force from the circumstance that, in the same general direction, the distinct mountain character again appears, and continues 1,500 ms. to the sea of Japan, passing to the north of Pekin and of the great wall of China, rising in many places to peaks covered with perpetual snow. It is interesting to find the Caucasus system, westward of the Caspian, stretching in the same direction and on near the same latitude. It remains to be decided their disjunction or connexion.

The very elongated basin between the Thian-Chan and Altai is open, or nearly so, on the west, but is traversed partially by ramifications of both bounding systems in many places, and NE. of Pekin is crossed by a transversal chain, the Siolki of our old maps, but the King-han of the Chinese. The Thian-Chan system passes over 60 0 of lon. on the mean lat. of 42 0 N., or above 3,000 ms. This system is the real northern buttress of Mongolia, as from its northern flanks rise the Irtysh, Oby, Jenisei, and Kerton Pira, or Upper Amur, all flowing northwardly, and passing the Altai at very distant parts, except the Amur, find their far-way recipients in the Frozen ocean.

The Kuen Luen system of mountains emerges from the nucleus above Cashmir. With its elevated summits and peaks, under the mean lat. of 35 0, to Khoukou Nor lake, and to the sources of the Blue and Yellow rivers, and thence eastward, enclosing between it and Thian-Chan the great desert of Shami or Cobi. The desert of Cobi and all the residue of the wide-spread table land of Mongolia is directly contrary to the Thian-Chan-pelou, open to the east, as the latter is to the west. The Kuen Luen, indeed, expires in central China, leaving the space open along the Pacific ocean from the Thian Chan to the Himalaya. On the western extreme Mongolia and Little Thibet are closed by the Beloor system, which, emerging from the nucleus of Cashmir, extends northwardly, and, passing the Thian-Chan, separates the sources of the Yarkand river from those of the Amou Deria (Oxus) and the Sihoon rivers.

These are the mountains which separate the ancient Khotan from Thibet. Khotan, where, from good authority, the worship of Boodh was in operation at the earliest dawn of history, and from whence, at a more recent period, it slowly penetrated Thibet and Indostan.

Himalaya system of mountains is, from all analogy, the continuation of the mountains of southern Europe, as the Pyrenees, Alps, and Balcan, and also those of Asia Minor, Persia, and Afghanistan. Speaking of this prodigious system, Malte Brun observes: "That part which forms the northern boundary of India is a continuation of the same range with that west of the Indus, known among the Afghans by the name of Hindoo Koosh. To the east of the Indus it increases in height, and assumes a character of additional grandeur from that circumstance and from its great extent in both directions. It forms, in fact, one of the most sublime features in the structure of the old continent, and, in fine, of the globe. Here a long range of summits, covered with perpetual snow, presents itself to the Hindoo, who has in all ages raised to it an eye of religious veneration. All the names by which it is distinguished are derived from the Sanscrit term Hem, signifying snow. Hence have risen Imaus, and Emodus among the ancients, and the Himalab, Himadri, Himachal, and Himalaya of the moderns. The old Hindoo root, Hem, brings also to mind the Hemus of Thrace, Hymettus of Attica, the Mons Imanus of Italy, and the Saxon Himmæl."

"All the mountains of these regions, and the masses of elevated land between them, are, in Hindoo mythology, called Meroo-Soo or Soo-Meroo, and Kailasam, names so renowned in the E. that they reached, and were, with some difficulty in regard to orthography, introduced into European works by the Greeks and Romans. These names designate the Indian Olympus, the native dwelling of gods and men. These mountains and elevated plains, rich in the precious metals, furnished in the time of Herodotus and of Ctjesias, that quantity of native gold and of auriferous sand, which gave rise to the fables of ants, which amassed stores of this precious metal and of fountains from which it flowed or bubbled up. These golden mountains of the Indians obtained names of similar meaning among the Mongols and the Chinese, such as Altai-Alin-Tepa and Kin-Shan."

Malte Brun expressed a doubt whether the Himalaya did or did not extend eastward of the Bramapootra, but Humboldt removed that doubt, and gave the following brief delineation of the Himalaya:

"The Himalaya separates Thibet from the valley of the Indus. It approaches so near the Kuen Luen, between Kashmir and Ladak, that the two systems seemed blended into one body. To the west of Djawahir (N. lat. 30 0 lon. 84 0 E., and about 250 ms. NW. from Catmandu) it attains the elevation of 8,000 metres, or 26,240 Eng. feet; and, further to the E., near Dhawalaghiri, it rises to 8,700 metres, or 28,536 Eng. feet. The table land of Thibet, comprised between this enormous mass and the Kuen Luen, is very elevated and traversed in various directions by the various mountain ribs protruded from both systems."

Though of much greater occasional, if not general elevation, the Himalaya is not the southern buttress of Mongolia, but yields that rank in geography to the Kuen Luen. Rising in the latter, and flowing towards and through the mighty gorges of the former, advancing from the W. to E., we are successively led to the Indus, Sutledge, Brahmapootra, Irrawaddy, Sahwen, and the Hew-lung Kiang, or river of Cambodia, to where its northern foot is bathed by the Pechu or Upper Blue river, all rising in and flowing southwardly from the Kuen Luen, and having their recipients either in the Arabian sea, Gulf of Bengal, or Chinese sea. Thus far, in a distance of 1,300 ms. from its embranchment out of the mountain nucleus of Little Thibet or Kashgur, the Himalaya, cut into fragments by the rivers of Southern Asia, extends along the southern slope of that continent, but in reaching China in the province of Yunan, and rising eastward of the Hew-lung-Kiang, it becomes a dividing ridge between the sources of the southern confluent of the Blue river, and those of the Lisein-Kiang flowing into the Gulf of Tonquin and those of the Hong-Kiang or river of Canton. With some, though comparatively slight, inflections and numerous peaks rising to perpetual snow, this system crosses China in a distance of 1,200 ms., and along the mean lat. of 25 N. to its final termination on the channel of Formosa.

To the west of Little Thibet, the Hindoo Koosh or ancient Paropamisus continues the Himalaya into Persia, and thence, under local names, such as Elwend and Caucasus, Ararat and others, reaches the Hellespont, and, if followed in Europe, it extends to the Atlantic ocean. This immense system of mountains is the most important of the earth, crossing the eastern continent through 128° of lon., or upwards of 7,000 statute ms., and in length vieing with the Andes of America, but exceeding the latter in extreme elevation. The Himalayas, with all that we have included under the term, is in one respect a physical limit of remarkable character. The observation has been already recorded in this article, that Asia was terminated by peninsular projections to the south; but we now extend it to the whole system of Himalaya. If we set out from the channel of Formosa, and extend our views to the bay of Biscay, we would have, sloping from the Himalaya, India, east and west of the Ganges, Arabia, a large part of Asia Minor, with all Greece, Italy, and Spain, countries also in a remarkable manner devoid of lakes. The range of these peninsulas and their bounding seas correspond to a great exactness with that of the mountain system from which they decline.

These general sketches, however, on the great mountains and intervening valleys of Asia cannot be regarded other than an approach towards the true configuration of that continent. To arrive at any positive conclusion, in detail, on the concordance of different parts of the same system, it would be requisite to examine each by itself. But, historically speaking, such minuteness of geological analysis is unnecessary; the mountains exert their influence on society, independent of their constituent material. In an investigation of the united geographical and geological structure of Asia, another great fact comes forward. The very elevated and extended regions of central Asia must be contrasted on the western side by a depression still more remarkable, since at its lowest level, the surface of the Caspian sea, it is some hundred feet below the level of the general ocean. Similar to the table land of Mongolia, the Caspian depression has no river or any other aquatic outlet. These two physical sections have a common limit in the Belour (Imaus) mountains, through 15° of latitude, or about 1,000 miles. In their combined length, they reach from the Siolki mountains, in Asia, to the sources of the Wolga, in Europe, or through 90° of lon. The basin of the depression, including the confluent of the Aral with those of the Caspian, comprises an area of 1,400,000 sq. ms.; and the plateau of Mongolia, at the lowest estimate, yields a continuous surface of 2,500,000 sq. ms. of land, without oceanic connexion, with a length from the sources of the Wolga to the Siolki mountains of 4,500 ms. The rivers rising in and flowing westward from the Belour mountains, such as the Oxus or Amoo, the Jihoon and Sarasoo, with several others, are either discharged into the Aral or lost in sandy plains or smaller lakes. This generally fine slope, falling westward from the Beloor mountains towards the Caspian and Aral, is the Scythia Intra Inaum of the ancient Greeks and Romans, and the (it is probable) far more ancient Turkestan of its own inhabitants, the Mawaralnahr of the Arabians, and the Independent Tartary of modern European geographers.

Passing eastward of the Beloor mountains, we are on the great central plateau of Asia. Along the western regions of this table land, from lat. 38 to 48° N., or 700 ms. from S. to N., and between the Kuen Luen and Urgan Daba mountains, with a breadth, east and west, varying from 300 to 500 ms., spreads Chinese Turkestan, or, as known to us, Little Bucharia, on the S., and Soongaria N.—a country of mountain, plain, and valley, and supplied with numerous streams, lost in interior lakes of brackish water. Of the rivers, the Yarkand, flowing eastward about 600 ms. comparative course, is the principal. Elevated and bleak as it is, this region, with a tolerably fertile soil, possesses in some degree a settled population, with whom, under the name of Kalmucs, commences the Mongolic race. The Chamern-Daban mountains, a chain extending to the south-eastwards, from the Altaian to the Thian Chan, separating Soongaria and Little Bucharia from the country of the Eluths and sources of the Irtysh and Oby rivers, is one of those lateral chains which contribute to form the basins of central Asia.

Bounded on the N. by the Thian Chan, and S. by the Kuen Luen, and spreading about ENE. over 40° of lon., on the mean lat. of 44°, extends the great and desolate expanse of Mongolia, to which, if we add Little Bucharia, we have a distance of 2,500 ms., with a mean breadth of 500, from which no stream flows, and on the much most extensive part none deserving the name of a river exists. One-third, at least, is utter desert. On this region, houses, fields, cities, or roads, in the form we possess these objects, never did nor ever can exist. On this expansive plateau, where human beings appear, they are nomades, living on horseback, or in movable tents. They are not savages, but they are barbarians: so they are now, and so must they remain; and the observations made in the article Africa may be repeated, as respects Mongolia; and both ought to be regarded as composed of islands separated from each other by deserts.

Dzoungaria, or Soongaria is a general name in our books for more than one country of central Asia, and is also a name, with several others, for the southwestern branch of the Amur river. Great Dzoungaria is a natural section—a mountain basin already noticed.

Crossing the Kinghan or Siolki mountains, we are on the remote sources of the Amur, and on the eastern slope of Asia. Still, however, in passing from Mongolia, properly so called, we find its physical features continued into Mandshuria and the neighboring province of Nertchinsk, and in some degree, northwards, into Irkoutsk and Kolyvane. As a summary, we may regard central Asia as a series of basins enclosed by mountainous rims, as, though on very reduced scales, we may instance Bohemia in Europe, and in America that in which the city of Mexico stands. Similar to the continent of which they form a part, the mountain basins of Asia are of immense extent; some have river outlets, but, as we have already shown, others have not. As it has been observed that all these sections of Asia have a very strong resemblance to the features revealed to us by the telescope on the face of the moon, again we may observe that from the immense mountain rims of central Asia flow the fountains of rivers, as radii from a common centre. From the Thian issue northwardly the higher sources of the Irtysh, Oby, and Jenisei, which, carrying their volumes through the Altaian, carry their far winding streams to the Northern ocean. From the Imaus or Beloor issue the fountains of the Oxus, Jihon, and Sarasoo, and, though finding their recipient in the Aral, flow down that great slope terminated by the Caspian.

The most remarkable, however, of the basins around Mongolia, which have an oceanic recipient, is that between the Kuen Luen and Himalaya, extending from west to east, along the mean lat. of 34° N., through 34° of lon., or about 2,000 ms. This great physical section has a strong resemblance to many of the mountain basins of America. It is divided by transversal mountains into many sub-basins, but all having a southern inclination. Kafferistan is the western of these sub-basins, giving source to the river Kashgur, or northwestern branch of the Indus. The main Indus and its southern branch, the Sutledge, rise north of and pierce the Himalaya. Flowing in directly opposite directions, the Indus and Bramapootra rise in Great Thibet, their fountains only separated by the Koorum ridge. The higher branches of the Indus and Little Thibet are nearly commensurate. That already great river above the Himalaya, swelled by numerous streams from the Kuen Luen, Koorum, and Himalaya, pierces the latter about 100 ms. above Attock, assumes a SSW. direction, and in a course of about 1,000 ms., separating Afghanistan and Beloochistan from Indostan, enters the Indian ocean very nearly under the northern tropic, having received the Sutledge about mid-distance from the Himalaya to its mouth.

Great Thibet, stretching between the Kuen Luen and Himalaya, northwards of Indostan and Nepal, separated from Setchuen, in China, by the Yong-Ling mountains, and, beside the Brahmapootra, giving source to the rivers Irrawaddy, Salawen, Hew-lung, Kiang, and Blue river; on the mean lat. of 33° N., through 28° degrees of lon., or about 1,600 ms., with a mean breadth of 400 ms.; area 640,000 sq. ms. The minute geography of this extensive and rather well peopled country is defectively known to us, and of course defectively delineated on our maps. The inhabitants belong to the yellow or Mongolic race, and are subject to China.

The great southern slope of Asia, between the Kuen Luen and Himalaya, terminates with Thibet. The Yung-ling chain, which separates China from Thibet, is evidently only a part of a great transversal system, continued along western China, and thence by the Siolki until combined with the Stanovoy. In the opposite direction, there is as little doubt but that the same system is continued to Cape Negrais, as in the mountains of Anoupectomiou, of Arracan. Taken as a whole, this counter system, ranging with the general course of the Pacific coast of Asia, is in length upwards of 3,000 ms. To the north of the Himalaya, it is a divisionary boundary between the plateau of Mongolia and the immense slopes of China and Mandshuria. It also separates two grand divisions of the yellow race—the roving Mongol from the sedentary Chinese and Mandshoo. It is therefore not only a physical but a political and national limit. The Chinese, from all concurrent testimony, have been sedentary beyond the credible limits of their own history. The same case is probable in the history of the Mandshoo; whilst on the opposite or western side of the Stolki the nomadic state of society has prevailed through all historical periods.

It is remarkable that if we extend our view from the continent to the islands of eastern Asia, we must be struck with the parallelism of Kamschatka, the Kurile chain of islands, the chains of Japan, Loochoo, and Philippines, with the Stolki system of mountains. We may, on these physical data, regard Chin India, China, and Mandshuria, as parts of an immense slope, with its lower depression in that chain of semi-inland seas called, respectively, advancing from south to north, sea of China, Tunghay, (Eastern sea,) Japanese sea, and sea of Ochotsk. On these principles, the chains of islands and peninsula of Kamschatka are the prominent parts of a transversal system of mountains.

Between the Hindoo-Koosh mountains and Pacific ocean, two immense triangular peninsulas are protruded towards the Indian ocean—Indostan on the west and Chin India to the east. Both are physical sections, abounding in rivers and productive in soil, and also in an eminent degree calculated for the sustenance of human society. Both are countries in which man had reached a certain degree of civilization in the most remote antiquity, and has retained much of the character of cultivated beings. Separated by the Brahmapootra river, Indostan is inhabited by a branch of the Caucasian family; whilst those of Chin India belong to the yellow Mongolic race, as low as N. lat. 10°, where commences the Malay.

Encased, if I may use the expression, by the Altaian mountains, the Beloor W., Himalaya and embranchments SW., and by the great bays of the Pacific ocean E., spreads an extent of upwards of 5,000,000 sq. ms., subdivided into four natural sections: the great, elevated, and desolate Mongolia W., Mandshuria NE., Chin India SE., and in the centre China, spreading E. of Mongolia, SW. of Mandshuria, and SE. of Chin India. To these continental subdivisions may be added the Japanese islands, including Saghalian and Jesso, Japanese group proper, Loochoo, Formosa, Hainan, and the large group of the Philippines. All taken together, and soil and climate taken into consideration, this southeastern part of Asia is fully adequate to sustain double the population of Europe. With great national distinction of feature, structure, and character, the yellow Asiatic inhabits these widely spread regions, continental and insular. Thus has southeastern and central Asia been, in all historical ages, possessed by one, and that one the most numerous, race of mankind. From causes shown under the head of climate in this treatise, there is at least 10° of Fahrenheit between the mean temperature of the eastern and western sides of both continents of the northern temperate zone of the earth, the eastern being so many degrees colder than the western. As the difference stated arises from causes inherent in the present condition of our planet, the effects must continue durable as that condition.

“The northern and western part of China,” says Malte Brun, “have a far colder climate than the countries of Europe which are situated in the same parallels of latitude. The elevation of the land, and the snows, (he should have added prevailing western winds,) which for the greater part of the year prevail on the central mountains of Asia, contribute to produce this difference of temperature. The extremes of heat and cold are much greater at Pekin than at Madrid, though the latitude is much the same.” If the latitude is nearly the same, the relative height above the ocean, of the two cities, is very different. Madrid is on ground at least 1,800 feet above the ocean, whilst it is not probable that the site of Pekin is one-sixth of that elevation; therefore, as far as height is concerned, Madrid ought to be several degrees colder than Pekin. But, though lower as regards the earth’s surface, the cold at Pekin, and of course the winter, is more severe than at Madrid. “At Pekin there are, properly speaking, but two seasons, winter and summer. According to Father Amyot, the mean term of the greatest heat is 121° Fahrenheit; and that of the greatest cold, 63° below zero; the mean temperature of the year, 55°.”

“Though, as Italy, Corea is exposed to a very cold climate. This is produced, as some have supposed, by mountains, which, however, cannot be the cause of difference, since Italy is also mountainous; but because the Corean mountains are higher, and the physical position altogether different from that of Italy. In effect, Italy is sheltered from northern winds by the Alps and their prolongation; and more, are separated from these mountains by the valley of the Po, and on the NE. by the sea, whilst nothing similar is presented by the relative situation of Corea, which latter peninsula is exposed on the NE. to all the influence of the sea of Japan, which communicates with those of Jesso and Ochotsk; and to the N. there is nothing to shelter Corea from the winds coming from the high mountains of Asia. What we here state, applies particularly to the northern part of Corea, where the surface, during winter months, lies buried under deep and durable snows. The southern part is exposed to very high temperature.”*—And also to a very low one, ought to have been added.

In these extracts we have some important truths stated, but to account for the phenomena, we have a most glaring confusion of ideas. In respect to relative position on their respective continents, great difference is stated to exist between Italy and Corea; whilst a single glance on a map of the earth is sufficient to show that very few, if any other two physical sections of the earth, have more in common. They stand on opposite sides of the continent, but in range, relatively and specifically, they are in a very prominent degree similar. But, in the extracts, Italy is represented as having a mild climate, because in one direction it is sheltered from mountains by the sea; and, on the contrary, Corea is very cold, because in the same NE. direction it is exposed "to the seas of Japan, Jesso, and Ochotsk." The difference of climate between Italy and Corea, and that between Spain and northern China, is no doubt correctly drawn. The causes, however, could not have been clearly, if at all, known to the writer. Those causes are in themselves common to both the great continents of the northern hemisphere of the earth.—See article Climate.

If, in fine, we engrasp the whole eastern continent in one sweep of vision, we have before us, from the extreme southeastern part of Asia to the southwestern of Europe, a chain of deep gulfs and inland seas, with intervening large protruding peninsulas. This chain of alternate land and water extends very nearly, at right angles, to the extreme southeastern and northwestern coasts. In the interior of the continent the systems of mountains, both longitudinal and transversal, obey in a remarkable manner similar directions. Examining and comparing the opposing coasts, both we behold are indented by deep inland seas and lined by numerous islands and peninsulas. Carry your examination closer, and you will find both extremes of the continent drained by many large, and a very great number of smaller rivers; you will find the soil of each extreme productive, habitable, and densely inhabited. You will every where on these extremes find marks and monuments to show a long established and high degree of civilization.

What at a cursory glance would appear doubtful, would, however, by inspection on a general map, be found correct, is that, along N. lat. 40°, from the eastern shores of Japan to the westernmost of Spain, the Imaus, or Beloor mountains, is almost exactly on the mid-distance between the extremes. This discovery will naturally call attention to the range of the Beloor system, and lead on to another very important fact in physical geography. Examining the Beloor southward, or following its general range in that direction, it will be found crossing the Kuen-Luen and Himalaya, and in the Suleiman range, continued W. of the Indus, to the Indian ocean. Returning to the proper Beloor, and advancing northwards, it will be found to pass and throwing off the Thian Chan to the E. and pass and touching the Altaian, turn to the NW. under the name of Algydim Shalo, reach and be continued to the Frozen ocean under the name of Ural. Thus combining the parts of this remarkable system, we find it extending from the Indian to the Frozen ocean, and from the northern tropic to near the Arctic circle, in a direction with some intermediate inflections, almost exactly N. and S., and not crossed by a single stream, great or small. Including Austral Asia, Australia, and the eastern islands of Asia, with that part of the latter continent eastward of the Beloor, it will be found that this system divides the eastern continent into two very nearly equal sections of something above 15,000,000 of sq. m̄s. each.

Crossing both the Beloor and Himalaya obliquely, extends an immense desert zone, which on the NE. commences in Mandshuria, and including Mongolia in its greatest extent; interrupted only by the well-watered countries near the Himalaya and Beloor, but spreading wide in Persia, hardly interrupted by the southern extreme of the Euphrates' basin; sweeping thence again over Arabia, is crossed in comparative narrow lines by the Red sea and Nile basin; and thence, spreading over northern Africa, forms the immense Sahara to the Atlantic ocean. With such slight interruptions, this zone of desert extends through 140° of lon., separating from each, by wide spaces, the two great productive and habitable regions already noticed.

The long cultivated tracts, the abodes of civilization on each side of this desert zone, do not in the aggregate differ materially in extent, and, as may be seen under various articles, very essentially in estimated population. Nor do the extremes differ in climate according to latitude. The climates of southern China and northern Africa do not greatly differ in mean temperature. The mid-land and northern provinces of China, are exposed to extremities of cold, altogether unknown on western Europe, on lats. of 10, 12, 15, and even on the coasts, 20° higher lat. The mountain systems, deserts, prevailing winds, and other phenomena noticed, being permanent features, ever have, and ever must coeval with their existence, not simply influence, but determine the relative destiny of man on this planet.

The great extent of Asia, its most prominent physiognomy, its eastern Mediterranean seas, and its insular groups, which we have thus briefly surveyed, present to us several physical sections, which, commencing on the NE., we take in order, and first:

Mandshuria, nearly commensurate with the basin of the Amur, though embracing also a narrow slope towards the Japan sea, and on the southward reaching to the Yellow sea, and there bounding on Corea. Its general limits are Kingham mountains on the W., Stanovoy mountains and sea of Ochotsk N., channel of Tartary, or La Peyrouse straits, and sea of Japan E., and S. by Corea and China. General length 1,100 ms. from the Yellow sea to the Stanovoy mountains and sea of Ochotsk; mean breadth, at least 700 ms.; area, 770,000 sq. ms.; extreme lats., 40 and 55° N. In comparative geography, this extent rather exceeds that of western Europe, from a line drawn from the head of the Gulf of Venice to the mouth of the Vistula, including the British islands. Compared with the territory of the United States, Mandshuria about equals the area eastward of the Mississippi river to the mouth of Illinois, and thence with the latter river and Lake Michigan.

The Mandshures are of the Tongsoic race, congenerate with the Chinese, and for nearly two centuries past have been the ruling people in China. On a space so great, however, as that included under the general name of Mandshuria, different nations and languages must exist; but, as in Europe, the whole population of the former cvince by form, feature, and color, a common family. The Mandshures have a more direct resemblance to the Mongols than have the Chinese, as in common appearance they appear as a mixed people between their two congenerate nations; and, in regard to civilization, their relative character would give them a similar place. By Europeans, the people of this great region are called Mant-Choo-Tartars, with an absurdity rendered glaring by a single glance on a map. Western Mandshuria and Tartary are separated by a distance as great as that from the latter into France and Spain, whilst in features of race the difference is still more extreme. It is probable that the term Mantchoo is itself an epithet; the people call themselves Oven. Palas, as quoted by Malte Brun, observes in his Memoirs on the Mongolic nations, "The Daoorians are Mantchoos mixed with Mongols. Several tribes, such as the Dutcheri, on the banks of the Amoor, about the middle of its course, the Solons, on the Argoun, and others, seem to differ only in slight marks of civilization.

The Mantchoos, under the name of Nieuutché, before the twelfth century, subjugated the Leaos, or Khitans, to whom they had been before tributary. In 1115 they invaded the north of China, and there founded the dynasty of Kin, and from whence they were expelled by the Mongols, in the thirteenth century. The dynasty of Ming, founded in China 1368 by Tehu Yuen-Tchang, or, as better known to us by the name of Hong-Voo, rose on the ruins of the empires of Zingis-Khan and that of the Mantchoos. The founding of this dynasty restored China to more than former grandeur; and the family of Hong-Voo held the sceptre until 1640. Then commenced that revolution which eventuated in once more placing the northern over the southern branch of their common race, and commencing the reigning dynasty of Tching. Zun-Chin, the last emperor of the previous dynasty of Ming, had given dissatisfaction to his subjects, and a rebellion rose in the province of Setchoun, under a rebel Licongtse. The emperor and family perished. A war had waged for some time before with the Mantchoos, and an able Chinese general (Usanguéy) was then on the northern border of China, but, so far from submitting to the usurper, offered peace and the throne of China to the Mantchoo general on condition of aiding him to punish the murderer of his sovereign. The conditions were accepted and fulfilled. After a war of several years, Licongtse was defeated, dethroned, and put to death. The Mantchoo general died before the contest was determined; but, in 1649, his son (Chunchie) was placed on the throne; his reign was, however, one of war and confusion; but his death, in 1661, gave the throne to the greatest man who has ruled China since the reign of Hong-Voo, K'ang-Hi, who sat on the throne 62 years, and died in 1723. The short reign of Yong-Tching closed in 1735, and gave the crown to Kien-Lung who bore it 62 years.

Before their conquest of China, if we can with any propriety call it a conquest, the Mandshures were a civilized and agricultural people, and living under written laws. Much more warlike, though greatly inferior in number and the arts of civilized life to the Chinese, we need not be surprised to find the Mantchoo power sunk into Chinese. Their dynasty has already greatly exceeded the mean period of those of China, and now in contest with far the most formidable invaders with which they had ever to contend, sweeping revolutions are far more than probable.

On our maps and in our books, Mandshuria is represented as distinct from China, though subject to the same sovereign. This has, however, not been politically the case for nearly a century past. In the reign of Kien-Lung, Mandshuria was formed into three extensive provinces—Ching King, Hing-King, and He-Loung-Kiang, all declared parts of as incorporated with China: thus forming one empire.

Southwardly from Mandshuria, westward of Japan, and east of the Yellow sea and of China, protrudes the peninsula of Corea, called by the Chinese Kaoli, and by the Mantchoos Solho, is only tributary to and not a part of China. It is ruled by its own hereditary monarchs, but who receive their investiture from Peking. In its interior administration, therefore, Corea is an independent sovereignty. According to Hamel; it is much more densely populated than China, and on an area of 88,750 sq. ms. sustains a population of 15,000,000, or 170 to the sq. m. In manners, customs, and appearance, the Coreans differ little from the Chinese, though the language of the two countries differ materially.

Passing the Yellow sea and great wall, we enter the ancient and immense China. But before speaking of this truly interesting region, let us pause upon the most stupendous production of human labor, and the only one of all the works of man which forms a land-mark on a map of the earth—the great wall separating China from Mandshuria and part of Mongolia, and by its extension Corea from Mandshuria. It is to diminish our conceptions of this great work to state its commencement on the Yellow sea. In its original state, the wall extended from the mouth of the Yalo river, in a NNW. direction, 200 ms., to meet another wall, which reached from the eastern branch of Soongaria river to the western side of the Yellow sea, 400 ms. These more eastern, perhaps less massive, walls joined on the Yellow sea, that one called by pre eminence the great wall. Thus taken together they commence, by a stupendous abutment on the western side of the Yellow sea, and from this point stretch their gigantic arms; the Mandshurian and Corean to the NE. and E., and the Chinese to the W. The latter traversing plains, high mountains, deep valleys, and rapid rivers, until it finally terminates on the high table land of Mongolia, after a length of between 1,300 and 1,400 ms. along the mean latitudes of 39 and 40°. Adding together the three sections of this truly surprising production, the aggregate length falls but little short of 2,000 ms. Since the union of China and Mandshuria, and the extension of Chinese power over Mongolia, the walls have, in losing their importance, went to decay; but enough remains, and for countless ages must continue to remain, to attest the dense population and resources of ancient China.

A review of the Chinese walls intrudes upon us the reflection that these walls, their relative position and historical connexions, all combine to exhibit an astonishing resemblance between the ancient political relations of Rome and China. Each had more northern and more warlike nations to press upon; and each, after the struggles of ages, with the aid of numerous armies and long and massive walls, resisted their enemies, but both were subjected in the end. In this comparative view there are two circumstances in their history greatly in favor of China. The Asiatic empire much longer resisted their invaders than did the Romans. The Romano-Italian people mingled with and lost their identity in great part amongst the Celtic and Teutonic masses. New languages were formed on the peninsulas and islands of western and southern Europe. New names of places were adopted and applied to new political divisions. In Asia, the passive Chinese yielded to the political sway, but never to any great amount mingled with the more warlike Mantchoo. This non-amalgamation was in a great degree attributable to the overwhelming superiority of numbers on the side of the Chinese, since in their general character, and probably language, the two nations did not, it is probable, differ more, if so much, from each other as do many of the now existing European nations united under one sovereignty.

China proper comprises that immense slope of SE. Asia between the Yellow sea on the N. and gulf of Tonquin S., and between the Tung-Hay or Eastern sea and Chinese sea E., and the desert table land of Mongolia W. Beside innumerable smaller rivers, China is drained on the extreme NE. by the Peiho, and thence S. and W. by the two vast central rivers Hoan-Ho, or Yellow river, and Yang-tse-Kiang, or Blue river. The mountain system of Kuen-Luen terminates between the Yellow and Blue rivers, about 300 ms. above their mouths, into Whang-hay, or eastern sea. Not so the Himalaya, which crosses southern China and terminates only on the channel of Formosa, leaving all the fountains of the Blue river to the N., but passing the Himalaya, we are in the valley of the Hong-Ki Ang, or river of Canton, which, were it not on the maps between the Blue and May-Ki-Ang rivers, would itself be regarded a great river. From its western to extreme eastern sources the river of Canton is 800 ms. in length, along the mean latitude of the northern tropic, and just S. of that latitude, opening into the fine and so renowned bay of Canton, of about 80 ms. in length and 50 ms. in breadth. Hong-Kiang is the last of the great rivers of this slope, which is altogether within the limits of China. The Lisein-Kiang, a river of from 500 to 600 ms. of course, rises with the Hong-Kiang, in the province of Yunan, but assuming a southeastern course, leaves China, and crossing Tonquin, falls into the gulf of the same name, by several mouths.

With very little departure from fact, China proper extends from 20 to 40° N., and from 93 to 124° E. of London. As regards relative longitude with the United States, the two countries lie very nearly on opposite sides of the globe, and in not very different latitudes. With a rude approach to a circle, the mean diameter of China a little exceeds 1,200 ms., and the area safely calculated at 1,300,000 sq. ms. Amongst the problems which divide geographers, and render their science uncertain, none is more discrepant in results, than the one on the population of China. Under its own particular head we shall give more detailed tabular views; in this place we may observe, that if we give credit to their own document, (and why should we not?) China contains an aggregate population exceeding 350,000,000. We have two States of the United States, which, taken together, comprise an area of 12,500 sq. ms., and an aggregate population of 1,047,700. These States are Massachusetts and Connecticut, which, by the preceding element, contains a distributive population of 80 to the sq. m. Were China only peopled as dense, the amount would then be 104,000,000. It cannot, however, be any violence to probability to allow to China a population three-fold more dense. The excessive population of China, five centuries past, was noticed and recorded by Mark Paul. China, with no interruption from war, which could in any manner worthy notice affect population, has had, since the Mandshurian dynasty was established, near two centuries to cultivate the arts of peace. During the last 2,000 years, according to statements found in native writers, the population never fell much below 50,000,000. The following data is taken from the records of actual enumerations:

In the 1st century of our era	- 59,600,000
A. D. 740, under the Tang dynasty	- 48,144,000
A. D. 1393, under Hongvoo, (Tshu-Yuen-Chang)	- 60,546,000
A. D. 1491, under Hiao-Tsong	- 53,281,000
A. D. 1578, under Van-Lie	- 61,000,000

European geographers and statistical writers have evinced a disposition, difficult to account for, to underrate the population of China. Martucci, resident many years in China, gave the population in 1790 at 143,000,000.

Mr. Thomas, an English merchant, also long resident in China, allowed 146,000,000.

Abel Remusat, again a resident of several years in China, gives 140,000,000.

Adrian Balbi estimates 170,000,000.

Lord Macartney, Sir George Staunton; and others attached to the British embassy to China in 1793, states, from Chinese authorities, a population of 333,000,000; and Malthus and Moreau de Jonnes have adopted the latter estimate. The most recent authorities more than sustain the highest estimates, and raise the aggregate population to at least 360,000,000. Confining our views to China proper, and allowing to it an area of 1,300,000 sq. ms. and an aggregate population of 300,000,000, the distributive population would then be 230 to the sq. m. If again we allow to the whole empire a superficies of 6,500,000 sq. ms., and 360,000,000 of inhabitants, the distributive population will be only 55 to the sq. m., which is far within the limits of credibility; the more, as in this estimate are included the very densely populated provinces of China proper.

Whatever may have been the former or present population of China, that country, from all concurrent testimony, held one of the earliest civilized families of mankind. The advance of the Chinese, according to our ideas, has been slow; and in the higher branches of science they are no doubt far behind the Europeans and their colonies; but even in science they are far in advance of the Europeans four centuries past. On the mathematical sciences the Chinese are prevented from progressing, by an obstacle, let it exist where it may, to all human improvement anywhere; that is an opinion that they have already made sufficient progress. We cannot, however, easily overrate the merit of the Chinese in works of general utility, or what provides for the wants and comforts of life. Their superiority in the fabrication of certain stuffs. Their dying on cloth and on porcelain can only be compared with their care and skill in the construction of canals, roads, and bridges; levelling down elevations and making of gardens. The art to produce, prepare, and weave silk into the finest stuffs, is amongst them lost in the morning mist of time. Their cotton cloths are every where admired, and have sustained their renown for ages. Their household utensils are remarkable for lightness, simplicity, and solidity. From the earliest stages of their history they could forge and manufacture metals, make musical instruments, and cut and polish the hardest of the precious stones. The polarity of magnetized iron was known in China more than twenty centuries past. Engraving on wood, and as a natural process, stereotype printing were known and practised there 900 years ago. They have almanacs in their libraries executed in this manner, and thus ancient. Gunpowder, and other inflammable explosive substances, for the purposes of war and artificial fireworks, were known in China some centuries before either known or used for similar purposes in Europe. May we not grant the probability of a supposition of Abel Remusat, that bombs and lancing of large stones, the art of performing which they used against and communicated to the Mongols in the thirteenth century, may have come from the Chinese into Europe in the succeeding century?

The Chinese nation possesses the virtues and vices, or, in other words, the qualities of a people habituated, from time immemorial, to implicit obedience, and who have been agricultural, manufacturing, and mercantile from the earliest ages. This vast people have their individual character. Beyond the reach, or at least coeval with their history, knowledge was held by them in the highest honor. Far more free than was the common lot of Asiatic nations from military despotism, and ignorant of the odious distinction into castes, the very base of civilization in Indostan, China presents the image, comparatively, of a happy country, when its condition is contrasted with surrounding nations. European authors have in general evinced reluctance in receiving evidence in favor of China as regards its arts, civilization, institutions, and government. We may, indeed, admit something for coloring on the part of men who have resided in China, and still much will remain undeniable to attest the soundness of principles which have supported this great people through a period of time more than equal to that which the people of the western side of the same continent have oppressed history by their revolutions.

"Filial piety," says Remusat, "is particularly held sacred in China; respect for parents is in some measure transformed to adoration, and, by divers ceremonies, prolonged far beyond the term of their lives. That veneration and obedience due to the sovereign and magistrates are softened and ennobled by the sentiment of filial piety. Though polygamy is permitted, or at least tolerated amongst the Chinese, marriage is not with them, as with Musulman nations, a vain ceremony. A single wife, even where more is admitted, holds the rank and exercises the rights of mistress of the family, and the other wives are considered as domestics in her service, and act by her orders in the administration of the household. But, paramount to all other traits in the character of Chinese society, there is no privileged class—no caste. Every man who has obtained the requisite education, may aspire to the highest public office short of the imperial. To confer this advantage, years of study, severe examination, and certificate (diploma) is necessary. Such diploma is obtained by giving proof of knowledge, more or less profound, of their classic books, laws, and history; and, thus obtained, the certificate becomes the only title by which is regulated the order of candidates aspiring to public employment. Rank in society is therefore, in China, based on literary acquirement and fitness for the office sought. In the order of esteem in which professions are held, literary superiority comes first, then laborers, artisans, and merchants. This order, founded on long habits of public opinion, can only be disturbed occasionally by the influence of wealth."

In all countries, China as elsewhere, moral and political theories are in advance of practice; but in every country the theory must, with varying power, influence the practice, hence the vital importance that the theory should be sound, and that the constitution of society should be based on rational principles. However much their forms of government and modes of society may differ from our own forms and modes, we must acknowledge that there must be much of excellence in a system which has covered so extensive a country with innumerable populous cities, roads, canals, bridges, and teeming population, with all the conveniences of cultivated life; and all by their massiveness and antiquity, appearing durable as time.

Independent of wars of less consequence, China has had, since the early part of the 13th century, to sustain two invasions from their congenerate nations of Mongols and Mandshures. Under the sons and grandsons of Zenghis Khan, the empire was overran, and for about a century the deeply implanted civilization of the Chinese had to struggle with the barbarism of these invaders. Their very great superiority in number and scale of civilization prevailed; the Mongols sunk into the mass, and a native emperor was chosen, the great Hong Voo, whose family, that of Ming, ruled China 280 years, until succeeded by the Mantchoo dynasty of Tsing, now reigning. Under this latter race, China has had a prosperous period of nearly two centuries. The Tsings were firmly seated in 1661, and one fact in their history stands unparalleled. From 1661 to 1799, or through a period of 138 years, three emperors, Kang Hi, Yong-Tsing, and Chen-Lung, ruled over the greatest aggregation of human beings ever united under one sovereignty. Three consecutive reigns, averaging 46 years.—See China proper.

Southwardly from China, and between the bay of Bengal W., sea of China E., and the sea of Austral Asia S., stretches a peninsula which, as it extends southwardly, is again divided into two sub-peninsulas, that of Malacca and Cambodia. Taken as a whole, this region is the "India beyond the Ganges" of our older geography, but the "Chin India" of Malte Brun. It has probably never received from its own inhabitants a common name, or been united under one nation or one sovereignty. In latitude, it extends from the straits of Singapore N. lat. 1° to 27°, but with very varying width. At N. lat. 16 0 from Cape Negrais, on the Gulf of Bengal, to the Gulf of Tonquin, the breadth is about 800 ms. In the prolonged peninsula of Malacca, about N. lat. 10 0, the breadth has narrowed to 100 ms., or even less. The great irregularity of outline renders a correct calculation of area difficult. According to the Paris geography of Larenaudiere, Balbi, and Huot, Paris 1831, exclusive of Malacca below N. lat. 10 0, Chin India is subdivided into the following political sections :

	Sq.-ms.	Inhabitants.
Anam, empire of, east side	154,400	23,000,000
Siam, or the lower part of the valley of Meinam	- 50,000	3,000,000
British Chin India	- 73,000	300,000
Burman empire	- 150,000	6,000,000
Total	- 427,400	32,300,000

The usual natural division made between Indostan and Chin India is the valley of the Brahmapootra, but commencing at Cape Negrais, we have already noticed the commencement of a mountain system, which we may here repeat, extends northwards, separating Aracan from the basin of the Brahmapootra, and, as far as traced, appears to be the southern extension of a system extending into the extreme northern Asia, under various names. Near the Gulf of Bengal, it is the Anou-pec-toumiou, and is there a real physical boundary, not simply separating two distinct sections of the continent of Asia, but also the yellow man of the eastern side from the Caucasian of the west.

Chin India, sloping southwardly with a slight inclination eastward, is in the former direction drained by the rivers Irrawaddy, Sahwen, or Kuen Duen, Meinan, the vast May-kaung, or Hew-lung-Kiang, and Lie-sien-Kiang. These rivers all issuing from the Himalaya, or Kuen-Luen, flow in deep valleys, between mountain chains, which appear to branch as ribs from the Himalaya. The nations of this part of Asia, though differing from each other in language, religion, and some shades of manners, all belong to the yellow race.

Our knowledge of the interior of this productive, remarkably well watered, and fertile country, remains, in an unaccountable manner, defectively known. Even the sources and courses of the large rivers, Brahmapootra, Irrawaddy, and May-kaung, are confusedly and contradictorily laid down on our maps, and even the seacoasts are defectively traced. The Kemoys chain of mountains, branching from the Himalaya, in Yunnan, or Southwestern Chins, and thence in the general direction of the May-kaung river and opposite coast of the Chinese sea and Gulf of Tonquin, separates a slope from the other parts of Indo-China. This very productive slope is divided into two political sections, Tonquin on the north and Cochin China on the south. On the western side of the Kemoys mountains, and in the great valley of the May-kaung, the provinces of Laos, Yoodra-Shan, or Cambodia, and of Tsiampa, are parts of the empire of Annam. There is, however, some diffidence in naming the provincial divisions of a country so imperfectly known, and the orthography of its names still more so.

Siam occupies the southern part of the deep valley of the Meinam, and lies between British Indo-China and Annam.

The Burman empire commenced in 1753, and in 1760, at the death of its founder, Alom-Pra, extended along the eastern coast of the bay of Bengal, from the islands of Junkeyylon N. lat. 9 0 to the mountains of Assam, N. lat. 28 0. Aracan was subsequently conquered and annexed, which carried the northwestern limits of the empire to the estuary of the Brahmapootra. This was the extreme southwestern State of the Tongsoic nations; but in the incorporation of the Aracan, the Burmese brought themselves into contact with a Power dangerous to any State of Asia. In coming to the delta of the Brahmapootra, the Burman power touched that of Great Britain, and, though long delayed, ultimate war was the consequence, and eventuated in placing the two extremes of the Burman empire under the control of a British mercantile company, and placed fragments of the Tongsoic family under the British sceptre.

In our former glances over Asia we swept the great regions west of China and northward of Indostan, such as Mongolia, Dzoungaris, Great Bucharia, Little and Great Thibet, and the country of the Eluths.

Thibet appears an immense mountain valley between the two great mountain systems of Kuen Luen and Himalaya. The very imperfection of our knowledge of this region throws an interesting mystery over its history. Inhabited by nations far advanced in civilization, it is gradually merging into light, and opening to the view of the other nations of the earth. It is the supposed and probable native country of Boudtha, and the yet residence of the Grand Lama—the Pontiff of countless millions, and, amongst others, of the reigning family of China. Though separated by no other barrier than the masses of the Kuen Luen from Mongolia, Thibet presents a very different aspect. Descending from the summits of the Kuen Luen, and advancing southward toward Indostan, we discover broad and fertile mountain valleys extending east and west, but opening southward by the gorges through which flow the great rivers already named, rising within and issuing from Thibet. In these valleys, cultivated from time immemorial by a sedentary people, we find cities which have probably been such for thousands of years. Of these we may name Lassa, the capital, Tassisudon, Eskerdon, and Ladakr. The country is, of course, subdivided into provinces, but even the names we can hardly be said to know, and still more uncertain our knowledge of their position and particular relative extent. There are, nevertheless, some general and very important facts in regard to Thibet, known to us with sufficient precision to warrant their insertion in brief detail. The most important of these facts is the language, which, with the physical structure of the people and their color and features, decide the race to which they belong. The Thibetian language is monosyllabic, and, in the absence of particles and inflections, resembles the Chinese language; but in their writing, the Thibetians, like the Europeans, write from left to right, and, also, similar to the Europeans, use two alphabets—one for writing and the other for printing.

The people of Thibet are represented as affable and soft in their manners. Their physiognomy resembles that of the Mongols. The men are strong and muscular, and the women, though with visages of brown, are mild and gentle, and to Europeans rendered pleasing by a taint of red. This people are industrious and commercial. Their peaceful relations extend to China and all other neighboring nations.

Thibet, it is probable, covered as it is on all sides by immense mountain barriers, has suffered less from invasion or destructive foreign inroads than any other country of Asia of any thing approaching its extent. Extending over an area little, if any, under that of Spain, France, and Germany united, the deep recesses of Thibet escaped the ravages of Zenghis Khan and successors, of Tamerlane, and of Nadir Schah, or Kouli Khan, and, as yet, of European conquerors.

For another reason this country has been rendered truly remarkable. It contains the principal seat, and, as already noticed, perhaps the original seat of the dominant religion of the Tongosic nations. The Dalai-Lama resident near Lassa, is the chief priest of eastern Asia, and the Chinese Government and rulers have shown the depth of their policy by choosing this pontiff as their spiritual head, as, by his means, and supporting this religion, the power of China has become almost peaceably dominant in Thibet. Under pretence of pious protection, Chinese garrisons occupy the principal fortresses and cities; but their arms are only auxiliary to the much more powerful force of religious belief. As far, however, as we have accounts, the domination of China is mild, and under it the Thibetians pursue tranquilly the peaceful arts of life, and their commerce with neighboring nations. With Indostan they exchange the precious wool or down of their goats for cloth and other necessaries. With the Chinese they exchange their lamb skins, musk, and gold dust, for tea and porcelain; and to Nepal and Bootan they send their rock-salt and borax to purchase rice, copper, and cotton cloths.

We have now glanced over the immense space occupied by the yellow race from the sea of Ochotsk to their utmost residence on the Bay of Bengal; and thence, curving round to the vast valleys and mountains of Thibet, we now, for a few moments, revisit the almost interminable interior, the high and bleak Mongolia.

The great region which we have comprised under a general name is, from every concurring evidence, the most elevated, if compared with extent, inhabited by man. It is not, however, as it is usually represented, a country of plains exclusively. It is over large spaces, in fact, a country of steppes or prairies, or sandy deserts; soil impregnated with salt; small and brackish lakes; but not so utterly desert or devoid of the resources of human life as supposed. But though peopled by a congenerate race, with the sedentary Mandshoo, Chinese, Japanese, and Thibetian, Burman, and others, the Mongol nations, for they are divided into nations, are nomadic or pastoral, in the strictest sense of the terms. On a space more extensive than half of Europe, there are neither houses, cities, or fields bespeaking high civilization or sedentary habits. From this we are not to infer that the Mongols are lawless, ignorant, and wandering barbarians, for such they are not. The life of man there, and property, is protected by written laws—simple, no doubt, but consequently the more easily understood. Modes of society there, as every where else, are shaped by necessity, and permanent as the towering mountains, far spreading steppes, and dreary deserts.

Ferocious in war, the Mongols were united early in the thirteenth century under a single leader, Zenghis Khan, and spread conquest and ruin wider than was ever accomplished by any other people. Under Zenghis, his sons and grandsons, the same people, for the first and last time, ruled from the seas of China to the Carpathian mountains. But their internal policy was too defective to admit the perpetuity of their power. The immensity of their excursions destroyed their own resources. They naturally made their conquered resemble their native country, as if desolation was to their taste. China first shook off their yoke; their power gradually declined in the west. Their very name, once so terrible, ceased to resound for near three centuries beyond their own solitudes. Finally, during the reign of Chen-Lung, the arms and sceptre of China were extended to the Beloor mountains, and the once so formidable Mongol nations are now subject to that empire which five centuries past fell under their ancestors. Russia, at two different epochs subjugated by the arms of the Mongols, and by Tamerlane, now lowers in portentous clouds over Mongolia and Tartary, and remotely over China.

Insular Asia, including the groups of Japan, Loochoo, Philippines, the detached islands of Formosa and Hainan, and the great groups of Austral Asian islands.

Following the course of survey we have pursued over Asia, Indostan ought to come forward in this place, but, in order to keep connected the regions of souther Asia, we reserve Indostan to the close of our view of the whole continent, and also from the peculiar physical and political facts appertaining to that peninsula, emphatically called India.

By reference to a general map of Asia, it will be seen, that from the extreme southern point of Kam-schatka or Cape Lopatka, extends, and in the same general direction, a chain of islands, evidently a continuation of the same physical structure. These islands are the Kuriles, continued by those of Japan, and thence by the Loochoo group, Formosa, and the Philippines, and Borneo, Celebes, and Java, in the same direction.

This most extended chain of islands on the globe, stretches from N. lat. 50 to S. lat. 10°, or upwards of 4,000 ins. In a general view, we may observe that the Kuriles are only the Japanese chain extended. Politically speaking, Japan commences on the N. with Urup and Iturup, the two southern Kuriles, which, with about one-half of Saghalien, all Matsumai, and the Japan islands proper, form the insular empire of Japan. For the general name of this celebrated country, several etymologies have been sought. The whole group is the Zipangri of Mark Paul. In our books, the main island is frequently called Nippon. The Chinese name these islands Yang-hou, "workshop of the sun," or Jepoun, "Country of the Rising Sun."

Probably Zipangri, Japan, and Nippon, are all derived from the Chinese "Je-Poun," which, properly rendered into our idiom, would be simply "the country of the Rising Sun," or "Eastern country."

Japan, according to Kaempfer, Galowwin, and other European authorities, is much more carefully cultivated, and according to relative extent, more densely populated than is China. "The coast of Nippon is garnished with rocks and beaten by the waves of a stormy ocean, and soil far from naturally fertile, and often shaken by earthquakes; yet, however, its valleys and plains moistened by a great many rivers, and innumerable rivulets, as also by artificial channels of irrigation, are all made effectual in producing the aliments of life by the industriously applied skill of the inhabitants. The slopes of the mountains, and even of volcanoes, embellished by numerous species of vegetables unknown in European climates, present the pleasing picture of human industry amid the traces of terrific physical revolution. Notwithstanding the excessive cold of their winters, and the scorching heat of their summers, the climate is healthy. The weather is variable throughout the greatest part of the year. Tempests and storms characterize the season of heat; but the abundance of refreshing rains, with skilful labor and abundant manure, countervail the asperities and caprices of climate and natural sterility of soil." The preceding quotation is from Larenaudiere, Balbi, and Huot's geography, vol. 2, p. 114. In the text, the description applies particularly to Nippon, but extended, applies equally well to Kiusiu and Sikokf; and how strikingly similar is the climate to that of the United States, under exactly the same latitudes, between 25 and 45° N.

To decide the race to which the Japanese belong, we again have recourse to their physical form, features, and color, by all of which we discover their brotherhood to the Mandshoo, Mongols, and Chinese. "The Japanese are of middle stature, eyes oblique and small, head wide, nose large, and not very flat, hair long, black, and lank, the whole evincing a mean between the Mongul and Chinese. The language of Japan contains very few Chinese words, and presents no connexion with either the Mandshoo or Kurrillian. The commencement of their annals, as their origin is lost in the obscurity of early ages, perhaps more so, indeed, than is the case with any other civilized nations. What is most probable, amongst the confused facts which make the mass of the history of the heroic age of Japan, is that about the seventh century, before the beginning of our era, a man named Bin-Bou, that is to say "Divine Warrior," who came probably from China, arrived in Japan and civilized the natives. If so, by a truly remarkable synchronism, the true history of that country was opened at the same time as that of Greece, and earlier than that of Rome. Bin-Bou, whose name is still held in profound veneration by the Japanese, who regard him as the ancestor of their Dairi or Pontiff. It ought to be understood that there are two sovereigns in Japan, one the Dairi, or High Priest, and the other the Djogoun, or military and civil emperor. The ancient Dairi united both temporal and spiritual power; but, about the middle of the twelfth century, the Djogoun, or general of the army, taking advantage of the intestine commotions in the empire, seized a large portion of power. This natural course once entered on, the effects followed, giving authority to the hand which held the sword, until in 1585 the two powers in the State were fully separated, all civil and military authority vested in the Djogoun, and the Dairi left to the care of religious affairs.

Two religious systems exist harmoniously in Japan. The most ancient is the Siouto, or religious and philosophical compounded system of Confucius. The second, which was introduced into Japan about the first century of the Christian era, is the system of Boudha. Amalgamated with the Sioutu are innumerable superstitious customs, favorable to monkish establishments.

In speaking of the national character of the Japanese, travellers have perpetrated their usual contradictions. They have represented this people as proud, suspicious, false, and vindictive, and in the next sentence, perhaps, as temperate, active, polished, and courageous. They agree on their honesty and integrity, and that no people can be less inclined to pilfering. The Japanese have, perhaps, of all people, the least fear of death. State criminals are compelled to open their own bowels, or subject their relations to indelible disgrace.

The Japanese are at once skilful and elegant manufacturers. Their silk and cotton stuffs are much admired, as is their beautiful porcelain. Their interior commerce is very flourishing; and, to give it facility, the Government maintains excellent roads over the whole extent of the empire. These roads are watered during the heats of summer, and all this amongst a people to which the European writers generally regard themselves greatly superior in the arts of life.

Though under the influence of a government as despotic, if not more so, than is that of China, the Japanese are, in their manners, more manly, open, free, and independent, than any nation of continental Asia. The Chinese have bent before the storm of invasion, and, it is but just to say, have regained an erect posture when the pressure had exhausted its force. This was peculiarly the case in the occurrence of the Mongol invasions. Those fierce barbarians completed the conquest of China in 1267, and, after long preparation, invaded Japan in 1281. We have, in Amyott's work from Chinese authors, a full account of this expedition. According to this authority, the Mongols, Chinese, and Coreans, formed a combined army exceeding 100,000 men, of whom, from storms and the swords of the Japanese, there were scarce a sufficient number who escaped death to relate the fate of the great body. Since the destruction of the Mongols and their allies or tributaries in this formidable attempt, a period of 560 years has passed, during which no foreign force has dared to insult Japan. These brave islanders have been left to decide their own disputes, or live in peace, as the case may be, through upwards of five and a half centuries, an example standing alone in the history of our planet. Since the revolution in 1585 Japanese vessels no longer visit the harbors of Corea, Mandshuria, China, or India. The empire may be said to possess no marine; and, insulated and isolated, these islanders remain sequestered within their own shores, and those of the nation who voluntarily go beyond the bounds of the empire are exiled forever, as death awaits if ever again found within its limits. Japan thus presents a spectacle altogether unparalleled of a civilized people, amounting to perhaps above 30,000,000, to whom the other nations are as if on a different orb. The Dutch, under the most severe restrictions, are permitted an annual commercial visit to Nangasaki, in the island of Kiuisu, and are the only foreigners permitted to touch the empire. Separated by only a narrow sea, centuries have elapsed without any, except a very limited, intercommunication between Japan and any of its congenerate nations on the continent of Asia. This exclusive system may, indeed will be, called one of wisdom or folly, according to the preconceived ideas of those called upon to decide its character. There are, however, suggestions excited by the history of European connexions with Eastern Asia, which go far to support the soundness of Japanese policy. When the Christian missionaries first followed or accompanied the Christian sailors, soldiers, and merchants, into Indostan, they opened the road to military invasion, conquest, and subjection. Have we not every reason to conclude that such would have been the case in China and Japan, had not these two Tongosic nations prudently shut their gates? Are we not justifiable in forming another conclusion: which is, that if, since the beginning of the fifteenth century, when the Europeans first reached with their ships, the seas of India, China, and Japan, they had conducted themselves, when in those regions, with humanity, justice, and due respect, towards the various people and their government, laws, customs, and opinions, that travelling and intercourse of every kind would now be as free and unrestrained amongst Asiatic nations as it is in Europe? In brief, the Europeans wanted nothing but honesty, humanity, and prudence, to have opened Eastern Asia to Europe, and to have reunited China, Corea, and Japan, in relations of amity and civilized intercourse. May we not add that the same sinister causes which have obstructed the accomplishment of objects so benign, have also closed those immense regions, empires, kingdoms, and nations, with their countless millions of inhabitants, to the light of Christianity?

When they first opened their missions, and proclaimed themselves as apostles of the gospel, the European missionary met no serious impediment, but what arose from difference of language, in any part of eastern Asia. But too many of them preached peace while, with concealed swords, they were grasping at power, and were detected, banished, and excluded.

Smaller insular groups belonging to China, and inhabited by tribes of the yellow race.

We may close this part of our general sketch of Asia by noticing the insular chain extending from Japan—indeed a continuation of that great chain already noticed, of which Japan itself is only a part. There is a chain of islands long known to exist, but partially, however, delineated on our maps. It is only recently that this chain has excited much attention on the part of European navigators. Under the different enunciations of a native name, this chain has been named Lieikiou, Lieu-Kieu, but now more commonly, and more suitable to our idiom, Loo-Choo. From the most recent information, the Loo-Choo islands are tributary to China, but, like Corea, ruled by native chiefs and laws. Similar to the Japanese and Chinese, the Loo-Chooans are highly civilized, and also, like their congenerate nations, in great part ignorant of the fountain-head of their own history. The Loo-Choo islands became known to the Chinese about the beginning of the seventh century of our era, but were not made tributary to China until in the fourteenth century; and it appears that the dependence falls lightly on the islanders. They were dimly seen by Kaempfer in 1691, but could scarce be regarded as known to Europeans until in the last century. The inhabited islands already placed on our maps amount to about from thirty to forty; but, from well-authenticated accounts, there are numerous others on which, it is probable, no European foot was ever placed. The main Loo-Choo, which gives name to the whole group, is about 70 ms. in length, but comparatively narrow, and, like most of the others of the same range, bordered by islets of coral and steep and rugged rocks; middle lat. $26\frac{1}{2}$ N., and about 350 ms. E. of the provinces of Fuhkien and Chekiang, in China. One and the principal cause why these islands have remained so little known is their extreme difficulty of approach, though good harbors exist between the openings of their rocky shores. When once reached, voyagers give glowing pictures of their beauty. Their hills and mountains are described as in their ramifications forming the most smiling slopes and vales, where the richness of vegetation is brought into activity by a most happy climate, between the northern tropic and N. lat. 30. The most enchanting landscapes follow on every side, with mountain steeps covered with fir, as in Norway, and vales decorated by the orange and mulberry. Agriculture furnishes to commerce tea, pepper, ginger, and other articles. The Chinese boast of having civilized these islanders, which is doubtful, as their language is the same or a dialect of the Japanese. The emperor Kanghi, in 1720, founded a library in the main island, and at Zieuly, the capital of the kingdom, caused a temple to be built in honor of Confucius, and introduced the now prevailing religion of Fo.

The physical qualities of the Loochooans, as well as their language, bespeak descent rather from Japan and Corea than from China.

Formosa, so called by the Portuguese from the beauty of its vegetation and softness of its climate, is an island of Asia, to the eastward from Fuhkien and Quangtung, in China, separated by the strait which unites the Tung-Hay and Chinese seas. This island is traversed by the northern tropic, and named Thaiwan by the Chinese; is 260 ms. long from S. to N., and in form of an elongated ellipse; averages about 60 ms. wide, and comprises an area of at least 15,000 sq. ms. It is traversed in its greatest length by a mountain chain, rising in one peak, if not more, to the height of perpetual snow. It is but partially peopled by the Chinese, who appear not to have known of its existence before 1430. The indigenous inhabitants resemble, by teint and physiognomy, the Malays. It was as late as 1683 that the emperor Kanghi declared Formosa an integral part of his empire; and up to the present time the authority of China is rather nominal in Formosa.

The length of Formosa, stretching from S. to N., and its mountains following a similar direction, must give very different climates to the opposite sides. The Formosan mountains are of volcanic origin, and the whole island as late as 1782 was shaken and ravaged by an earthquake. Formosa evidently belongs to the physical range of which Japan, Loo-Choo, and Philippines are sections.

Following the series of islands along the southern coast of Asia, we must include Hainan, though utterly unconnected with the groups we have been surveying. The southwestern part of the Chinese province of Quangtung is projected southward by a peninsular point, which, with a narrow strait intervening, is followed by the island of Hainan, which, translated from Chinese, is "south island of the sea." It is about 150 ms. long, mean breadth 75, and area 11,250 sq. ms.; cent. lat. 19° N. This is the extreme southern part of China. Though subjected to China for about 1,700 years, and though assimilated in dress, manners, and language, the physical structure of the two people differs so essentially as to argue a different origin. Situated between N. lat. 18 and 20°, constant summer prevails over Hainan, except where some central mountains counteract tropical position.

Such as we have briefly sketched are the immense countries, continental and insular, inhabited by the independent and dependent branches of the Tongoosic race. This race, in regard to voluntary change of residence, is the very opposite of the Caucasian. To roam the earth is the rage of the latter; whilst to remain round their native spot, and near the graves of their parents, enter into the very religion of the Chinese and Japanese, and indeed, to a great extent, with the whole of the yellow Asiatic race. But though, in consequence of their immigration, regarded by their own countrymen at home as exiled vagabonds, there are numerous Chinese, and a few Japanese, scattered over the islands of Austral Asia, and as far as Madagascar. Some of these people reside at the Cape of Good Hope, and on St. Helena form the mass of population. All these are, however, mere exceptions; and no one other circumstance so strongly marks the contrast of character between the two great races who predominate on the opposing sides of the eastern continent as the active spirit of colonization of the Caucasian and the local passiveness of the yellow Asiatic.

Until, however, in the last five, or indeed we might say the last three centuries, the earth presented the curious spectacle of national isolation. During all previous ages, the two great civilized families of Caucasians and Tongoos, occupying the opposing sides of the eastern continent, had merely a confused idea of each other's existence; and when, in the thirteenth century of our era, intercourse commenced, the advance was made by the Caucasians from the west, and for the two and a half succeeding centuries confined to long and painful land journeys from western Europe to eastern Asia. A very great revolution was now commenced. Until the opening of caravan commerce across Asia, impenetrable darkness hung over geographical knowledge. In Europe, western Asia, and northern Africa, nations more or less civilized, had existed from the earliest recorded time; and such was also the case on southeastern continental and insular Asia. Yet this time, measured by accumulated centuries, passed away, whilst the two great civilized masses remained with little more reciprocal connexion than if placed on different planets. And, again, another circumstance adds much to excite reflection on this subject. Ages upon ages had thus passed, whilst neither of the great civilized sections of mankind had gained the slightest knowledge of northeastern Asia, southern Africa, or the immense insular continent of Australia and Polynesia. Again, still more wonderful, a continent was concealed from these cultivated nations, and that continent stretching from one frozen extreme of the earth to the other. This continent was America, upon which, it is now fully proven, a third and detached civilization existed. Thus, five or six centuries past, three masses of mankind, with more or less advance in the arts of polished life, existed on the earth, two of which had a faint knowledge of the existence of the other; whilst the third stood alone and fell alone, leaving its mutilated fragments to excite the painful wonder of the ever-active Caucasian: ever-active, we may repeat; since, take away Caucasian agency, and the dark veil of obscurity, torn away by their hands, would have remained untouched, and under it would still have lain concealed more than half the land surface of the earth.

SUMMARY TABLE OF THE YELLOW ASIATIC RACE.

Political section.	Area in sq. ms.	Population
China and dependencies - -	5,450,000	367,000,000
An-Nam, empire south of China - -	154,000	23,000,000
Siam, between An-Nam and Burmah - - - -	50,000	3,000,000
Burmah, between An-Nam and Indostan - - - -	150,000	6,000,000
British Indo-China - - - -	73,000	300,000
Japan - - - -	214,000	30,000,000
	6,091,000	423,300,000

This summary table comprises sections which, when aggregated, amounts to very near the one-seventh part of the land area of the earth, and, according to the estimates of population most to be depended on, about one-half the human species. The distributive population here given amounts to only 70 to the sq. m., or about as 7 to 6 compared with the distributive population of Europe.

We close the article Asia with a view of Indostan, or, as frequently called, India. This great country, though very distinct as a natural section, has never been politically, and much less nationally, united in one sovereignty. Conquest, also, by different foreign nations, has also, by deranging territorial limits, and by adopting different names for the same sections, or mutilating domestic names, created great difficulty in its geography. Nature there, as every where else, on regions of great extent, in part laid bases for physical subdivision, which have become also political. Such demarcations cannot be entirely obliterated, but they may be obscured. The subjoined tabular view was, with some unimportant changes of arrangement, taken from the very valuable Atlas of Adam and Charles Black, Edinburgh, 1841 :

“INDIA.—India is situate in the northern hemisphere, between 7 57 and 35 0 N. lat., and between 67 0 and 95 0 E. lon. of London, measuring 1,870 English ms. in its greatest length from N. to S., and nearly as much in its greatest breadth, in lat. 26 N. from the western border of Sinde to the eastern border of Assam. The natural boundaries of India are clearly defined. On the N. it is bounded by the long range of the Himalayas, on the S. by the Indian ocean, on the E. and SE. by the range of mountains (Anoupectoumiou) which separates Assam and Aracan from the Burman empire, and terminates at Cape Negrais, and on the W. by the Suleiman mountains, which extend from the Suffied Kho, near Cabool, to Ras (Point) Moaree, and are connected at their northern extremity with the protruding spurs of the Himalaya. The whole country within these extensive limits is, with partial exceptions, either directly governed by the British East India Company, or more or less connected with it as tributary or allied. The superficial area exceeds 1,200,000 sq. ms.

“India has never formed one empire, and has, therefore, not been subjected to any general system of administrative divisions. Different parts of the country, however, have obtained certain popular and geographical names, which are of frequent occurrence, and must, therefore, be mentioned as a necessary illustration of the geography of the country.

“1st. The mountainous region between the sub-Himalayas and the great chain has been called Northern India, and the British portion is known familiarly as The Hills. Northern India comprises the beautiful valley of Cashmere, drained by the river Jylum, the districts of Kunawar, Gurwal, Kumaonn, the kingdom of Nepal, the territory of Sikim, and Bootan, or the country of the Deb Rajah.

“2d. The Punjaub, or Punjab, (the country of the Five Waters,) is the region watered by the Indus and its tributaries, the Jylum, Chenab, Ravee, Gurrah, Beas, and Sutlege. It is divided into two portions by the Salt Range, a chain of hills extending across the bed of the Indus, and forming a table land of considerable elevation on its northern side.

“3d. Rajpootana, called also Rajwara and Rajahstan, (the country of the Rajpoots,) occupies the middle space between the Indus and the Ganges, on both sides of the Aravulli mountains, and extends southward to the Runn of Cutch.

“4th. Hindostan is the popular name of the whole country which extends from the Hills, the Punjaub, and Rajwara, to the frontiers of Bengal, and comprises the Mogul Subahs, or provinces of Delhi, Agra, Allahabad, Oude, and Bahar, and the districts or regions of Hurianee, Rohilcund, Doab and Bundelcund.

“5th. Bengal, the alluvial plain at the mouths of the Ganges and Brahmapootra, intersected in every direction by their innumerable branches.

“6th. Malwah, or Central India, a table land supported by the Vindya and Aravulli mountains, 2,000 feet above the level of the sea, and sloping to the NE.

“7th. Gujrat, or Guzerate, the country on both sides of the Gulf of Cambay, including also the large peninsula of Kattywar, or Cattiwar, which lies between the Gulf of Cutch and the Gulf of Cambay.

“8th. Cutch, or Kachh, a small peninsula to W. of Guzerate, between the Runn of Cutch and the sea.

“9th. Sinite, the region at the mouth of the Indus.

“10th. The Deccan, Dekkhan, or Dukhun, extending from the Nerbuddah, on the N., to the Kistnah and Tumbudrah rivers on the S., comprising the old Mogul provinces of Khandeish, Berar, Arungabad, Bejapoor, or Visiapoor, Beder, Nandere, and Hydrabad. The name, however, is now generally restricted to that province of the Bombay Presidency of which Poonah is the capital, and which lies between the Ghauts and the western border of the Nizam's territories.

“11th. The Carnatic, divided into two regions, styled respectively Payen-Ghaut and Bala-Ghaut, or the lower and the upper, the former comprehending the low maritime plains along the coast of Coromandel, from the Kistnah river to Cape Comorin, the latter comprehending the elevated table land between the eastern and western Ghauts, including Mysore.

“12th. Malabar, a long, narrow strip, between the western Ghauts and the sea, extending 350 ms. to the NW. of Cape Comorin, and including Travancore, Cochin, and the British province of Malabar.

“13th. Canara, continuation of the same strip, northwards from Malabar.

“14th. Concan, or Konkan, a still further extension of the same strip, comprising Malabar and Canara, and stretching from the latter to Guzerate, and formerly included in the Mogul provinces of Arungabad and Bejapoor.

“15th. Gundwana and Orissa, a wild, and, in some parts, unexplored region, between Bengal, the Deccan, and Carnatic; the maritime portion being Orissa, the inland Gundwana, but with no well-defined boundaries between or in any other direction, except the seacoast. The southeastern part of Orissa has been known by the name of the Northern Circars, since it was acquired by the Presidency of Madras, in 1776.

“16th. Assam, the valley of the Brahmapootra, to the NE. of Bengal.

“17th. Aracan, a narrow strip of country to the southeast of Bengal, between the Anoupectoumiou mountains and the sea. The political divisions of India may be arranged into eight classes, as follows :

Political divisions.	Sq. ms.	Population.
First class —Territories directly subject to the officers of the British East India Company:
1. Presidency of Fort William, Bengal— Government of Bengal, Bahar, and Orissa, with Assam and Aracan—Government of Agra, or northwestern provinces, with ceded districts on the Nerbuddah	181,182	60,000,000
2. Presidency of Fort George, Madras	133,395	20,000,000
3. Presidency of Bombay	121,982	15,000,000
	65,142	6,251,000

Political divisions.	Sq. ms.	Population.
Second class. —Princes with whom the British Government have treaties of alliance, offensive and defensive, who have a right on their part to claim protection, external and internal, from the British Government, and grant to the latter the right of interference in their internal affairs:
Padishah, king of Oude	23,923	2,392,300
Rajah of Mysore	27,999	2,799,900
Rajah of Berar or Nagpoor	56,723	5,672,300
Rajah of Travancore	4,574	457,400
Rajah of Cochin	1,933	193,300
Third class. —Princes with whom the British Government have treaties of alliance, offensive and defensive, but without the right of internal interference, except when required by the princes themselves:
The Nizam, or king of Hydrabad	88,634	8,862,400
The Guickowar, or King of Buroda in Guzerate	21,950	2,495,000
Fourth class. —Princes mostly tributary, who acknowledge the supremacy of the British Government, and are bound to co-operate with them, but who are supreme rulers in their own dominions:
Holkar, or Rajah of Indore in Malwah.
Rajapoot, Princes of Oudipoor, Jey-poor, Joodpoor, Kotah, Bondi, Alwar, Bikaneer, Jeysumlere, Kishengurgh, Banswarra, Pertaubgurh, Dungarpoor, Keroli, and Serowi	107,625	10,762,500
Rajah of Bhurtpoor	1,946	194,600
Nawaub of Bhopal	6,772	677,200
Rao of Cutch, or Kachh	7,396	739,600
Rajahs of Dhar and Dewas	1,466	146,600
Rana of Dholpoor, Barree, and Rajah-kairah	1,625	162,500
Rajah of Rewah	10,310	1,031,000
Rajahs of Dhattea } in Bundel- Jhansi and Teshi, } cund
Rajah of Sawuntwarree in the Deccan	935	93,500
Fifth class. —Princes with promise of guaranty and protection from the British Government, but supreme in their own dominions:
Ameer Khan, Lord of Tonk, Serouge, and Nimbhassa	1,533	153,300
Patiala, Keytal, Naba, and Jeend-Seiks along the Sutlege	16,602	1,660,200
Sixth class. —Princes with whom the British Government have relations of amity and friendship:
Maha-Rajah Scindia, in Central India	32,914	3,294,400
Seventh class. —Princes protected by the British Government, with right in the latter to control their internal affairs:
Rajah of Sattara, } Both in the Rajah of Kalapoor, } Deccan.	{ 7,943 3,184	{ 794,300 318,400
Eighth class. —Independent native States:
Kingdom of Lahore and Moultan, late Runjeet Singh's	160,000	4,000,000
Ameers of Sind	10,000	2,000,000
Khan of Daoudpootra	10,000	500,000
Kingdom of Nepant	35,000	2,000,000
Bootan, or country of the Deb-Rajah	29,000	1,000,000
Ninth class. —Possessions of foreign Powers:
French possessions—Pondicherry, Chandernagore, &c.	500	209,000
Danish—Serampore and Tranquebar	90	35,000
Portuguese—Goa, Diu, &c.	2,000	500,000
Totals of area and population	1,217,632	165,089,500

element, which places before us the most extraordinary circumstance in human history. A mercantile company, under the influence of unity of design, has in less than a century founded an empire on the opposite continent from its metropole—an empire far exceeding 100,000,000 of civilized people, and subjected them to a far more absolute control than can be pretended to by any European monarch over his subjects. We are shown in the following note on what tenure the independence of any State in India is now held:

“The numbers are only approximations, and those of the population are almost entirely conjectural. The Rajah of Mysore has for some years been suspended from his regal functions on account of misgovernment, and his States administered by an AGENT OF COMMISSIONER of the MADRAS PRESIDENCY. The Rajahs of Sattara and Sawuntwarree, and some others, have been nearly falling into the same predicament; and the Ameers of Sind have been recently (1839) compelled to enter into a subsidiary treaty with, and virtually to become the subjects of, the British Indian Government. Daoudputra has also recently been added to the list of protected States.”

There are two species of experience: one easily and cheaply procured, demanding only observation and reflection—that is, experience from others, which we may reject if we choose; the other is our own, dearly bought, and forced on us, whether we will or not.

Political divisions of Asia, and estimated population.

[It may be, however, noted, that in both respects the geography of this great physical section is vague to a much greater extent than are its natural divisions.]

Asinara, island in the Mediterranean, on the NW. coast of Sardinia, 17 ms. N. by W. of Sassari. It is 28 ms. in compass. Lon. 8 30 E., lat. 41° N.

Askeyton, borough of Ireland, in the co. Limerick, on the river Shannon.

Askrig, town in the N. riding of Yorkshire, Eng., 6 ms. S. by E. of York, and 243 N. of London. Lon. 1 W., lat. 53 55 N.

Asne. See Esne.

Asola, town of Italy, in Bresciano, 20 ms. SE. of Brescia. Lon. 10 30 E., lat. 45 48 N.

Asolo, town of Italy, in Trevisano, on a mountain 17 ms. NW. of Treviso. Lon. 11 36 E., lat. 45 59 N.

Asoph, sea, anciently the Paulus Mæotis, lying N. of the Black sea, with which it has a communication by the strait of Caffa, the ancient Cimmerian Bosphorus. This sea, which is sometimes called the sea of Zabak, extends 150 ms. from SW. to NE. Lon. from 35 to 42° E., lat. from 45 to 47° N. The Asoph sea is properly the estuary of the Don; it is shallow and only admits vessels of moderate draught, and, like other small seas of Europe, is probably in a state of progressive desiccation. No rock has been detected in any part of the sea of Asoph. Its waters are turbid and abound in fish. Depth very shallow to a great distance from the banks. In spring and early summer, when the Don and smaller but numerous confluent streams are in flood, the sea rises to a foot or 15 inches above its ordinary height.

Asoph, district of the Russian empire, in the province of Catharinenslaf, including a large tract of territory to the E. and W. of Asoph. Catharinenslaf is the capital.—Late capital of a district of the same name in Asia, seated near the mouth of the Don, to the E. of the sea of Asoph. It has been several times taken and retaken by the Turks and Russians. The branch of the Don, upon which it stands, is now so choked with sand as scarcely to admit the smallest vessel, which renders the place less important than it was formerly. Lon. 41 30 E. lat. 47 18 N.

Aspern, town of Austria, on the left bank of the Danube, below Vienna, famous for a battle fought there May 22, 1809, between the French, under the Emperor Napoleon, and the Austrians; the latter were defeated.

Asperosa, town of Turkey in Europe, on the coast of the Archipelago, 22 miles SE. of Nicopoli. Lon. 24 50 E. lat. 40 58 N.

Asphaltites. See Dead Sea.

Assam, country of Asia, bounded on the W. by Bengal and Bootan, on the N. by Thibet, and on the SE. and S. by Meckley. Its capital is Ghergong, and the river Burrampooter flows through the whole length of it. The open parts are marked with population and tillage; the woods abound with elephants. Assam lies between lon. 91 0 and 96 0 E. and lat 25 0 and 28 0 N.

Assancale, town of Armenia, on the river Aras, 22 ms. E. of Arzerum. Here are hot baths much frequented. Lon 41 10 E. lat. 39 46 N.

Assanchif, town of Asia, in Diarbeck, seated on the Tigris, 40 ms. SE. of Diarbeck. Lon. 40 20 E. lat. 37 30 N.

Assanpink, large creek of N. J., rises in Middlesex, from whence it flows SW. into the Delaware river, forming, for a few miles above its mouth, at Trenton, part of the boundary line between Burlington and Hunterdon counties. There are some cotton factories on this stream.

Assawamset, town Plymouth co., Mass., 50 ms. S. from Boston, and 30 E. from Providence.

Assens, seaport of Denmark, in the island of Funen. It is the common passage from the duchy of Sleswick to Copenhagen, and is 17 ms. SW. of Odensee. Lon. 10 2 E. lat. 55 17 N.

Assiniboin, river of North America, in the United States and British territories, rising by two large branches, the Assiniboin proper and Red river. The former has its source in the recesses of Cabotia, as high as lat 52 30 N., flows SE. 200 and E. 100 ms.; joins Red river. The latter rises in the United States as far S. as lat. 45 30, and, flowing thence nearly N. about 300 ms., unites with the Assiniboin, which, continuing a short distance NE., is lost in the extreme southern angle of Lake Winnipic. The regions drained by the Assiniboin and its confluent are flat, full of small lakes, and extend NW. from the sources of the Mississippi.

Assiso, city of Italy, in the duchy of Spoleto, on the side of a high mountain. The cathedral of St. Francis is magnificent, and composed of three churches, one above another. It is 70 ms. N. of Rome. Lon. 12 38 E. lat. 43 0 N.

Assos, seaport of Natolia, on a bay of the Archipelago, 12 ms. SE. of Troas. Lon. 26 36 E. lat. 39 32 N.

Assumption, town Lafourche, interior Lou., 91 ms. W. from New Orleans.—Episcopal city, the capital of Paraguay, in South America. It is a large, populous, and handsome town, and stands in a fertile country, on the river Paraguay. Lon. W. C. 17 25 E. lat. 26 N.—Parish of Lou., situated along both banks of the Lafourche river, having the interior of Lafourche SE., Atchafalaya river SW., Ascension NW., and St. James and St. John's NE. It is about 35 ms. long and 15 ms. wide; area 500 sq. ms. The face of the parish is level, and, except the margin of the Lafourche and some other streams, liable to annual submersion. Soil extremely fertile. Staples sugar and cotton. No town of any consequence. N. lat. 30 0 and lon. 14 0 W. from W. C. intersect in this parish near the banks of the Lafourche river. Pop. 1820, 3,576.

Assynt, district of Sutherland, in Scotland, containing limestone and marble.

Assyria, country of Asia, celebrated in ancient history. It comprehended the provinces in Asia now called Diarbec, Curdistan, and Irac.

Astabat, town of Armenia, 3 ms. from the river Aras, and 12 S. of Naksivan. Lon. 45 30 E. lat. 38 28 N.

Asti, ancient episcopal town of Italy, in Monterrat. It is seated on the Tanaro, 22 ms. E. of Turin. Lon. 8 8 E. lat. 43 3 N.

Astorga, very ancient city of Spain, in Leon, well fortified by art and nature, seated in a pleasant plain, 25 ms. SW. of Leon. Lon. 5 32 W. lat. 42 22 N.

Astrabad, city and province of Persia, in Khorasan. The city is situated about 20 ms. from the extreme southeastern angle of the Caspian sea. It was formerly a place of more note than it is at present. Its low and unhealthy situation and exposure to the Toorkmans, with the internal revolutions of Persia, have all contributed to the decline of Astrabad. The same name has been provincially given to the adjacent country, but with no very definite limits. City 54 36 E. lon., lat. 36 30 N.

Astracan, (the Ghinterkan of the middle ages,) episcopal city of the Russian empire, capital of a province of the same name. It is large and populous, has a good harbor, and is surrounded by strong walls. The river Volga, on which it stands, overflows like the Nile; and, when the water is run off, the grass grows with much rapidity. The city of Astracan is about 2½ ms. in circumference, surrounded by a brick wall, which is now in a ruinous condition; but, if we comprehend the suburbs, the circuit will be near 5 ms. The number of inhabitants amounts to 70,000, including Armenians and Tartars, as well as a few Persians and Indians. All around the city, at the distance of 2 ms., are seen a great number of gardens and orchards. This city is supposed to have been, in early times, the general staple for the productions of Persia, India, and Arabia. It is seated on an island formed by the Volga, 40 ms. NW. of the Caspian sea. Lon. 47 40 E. lat. 46 22 N. See art. Volga.

Asturias, province of Spain, 120 ms. in length, and 45 in breadth, bounded on the E. by Biscay, on the S. by Old Castile and Leon, on the W. by Galicia, and on the N. by the Atlantic. It is divided into two parts, Asturia d'Oviedo and Asturia de Santillana. This province is full of mountains and forests, and its wine and horses are excellent. It has mines of gold, lapis lazuli, and vermilion, and belongs to the eldest son of the King of Spain, who is styled prince of Asturias.

Astronomy. See art. Chronology.

Asylum, tp. of Luzerne co., Pa., on the SW. side of Susquehannah river, 67 ms. NW. of Wilkesbarre.

Atacama, harbor of South America, in Peru. There is a great desert of the same name extending along the Pacific ocean from S. lat. 22 0 to 26 0, and inland to the foot of the Andes. Lon. 70 0 W. lat. 22 0 S.

Atacapas, a considerable settlement in lower Louisiana, lying west of the Atchafalaya river, being bounded by that river E., by Opelousas N. and NW., and by the Gulf of Mexico S. It is divided into the parishes of St. Martin's and St. Mary's; which see.

Atalua, town of Portugal, in Estramadura, seated on an eminence, with a strong fortress, 5 ms. S. of Tomar. Lon. 7 56 W. lat. 39 25 N.

Atanjauja, or Jauja, town of South America, in Peru, about 150 ms. NE. by E. from Lima.

Atchafalaya river may be strictly called the continuation of Red river; it is only 114 chains along the right bank of the Mississippi, from the ingress of Red river to the egress of Atchafalaya, the latter may therefore be considered as leaving the Mississippi exactly on lat. 31° N. It is only at high floods, however, when any great quantity of water leaves the Mississippi by Atchafalaya; when the former is at a moderately low stage, the current into the latter ceases. The Atchafalaya, below its efflux, continues SW. about 2 ms, where it assumes a S. course, which continues, with a small deviation to the E., 50 ms. in a direct line. The river then turns SE. 10 ms., and again E. 25 ms. to its junction with Plaquemine from the Mississippi. Below the Plaquemine the Atchafalaya re-assumes a S. course of 60 ms., falls into the Gulf of Mexico, having an entire length of 147 ms. A few spots of land sufficiently high for cultivation are found on the left bank of the Atchafalaya, near its efflux from the Mississippi; those, however, soon cease, and both banks are generally liable to inundation. A very heavy forest covers both shores of this river until within a few miles of its mouth. Twenty-six ms. below its efflux commences the great raft. This singular phenomenon, about which so much mistake and speculation has been made, was measured by the writer of this article. The following is the fruit of his observations on the subject: From the course of that particular bend of the Mississippi, out of which the Atchafalaya issues, the drift timber of the former is thrown into the latter. In 1778, this drift timber passed into the Atchafalaya in such quantity as to form a compact mass too large to pass down with the current, and therefore choked and became settled. Other accessions have annually augmented the original body, and now form rafts of more or less extent, for about 25 ms. along the river. It is a very erroneous, though a common opinion, that the raft is sufficiently compact to admit the passage of horses, and that trees are formed upon it: both these statements are entirely unfounded. It is with considerable difficulty and danger that a man can cross the river on the timber; the body of which rises and falls with the water of the river, and at all seasons maintains an equal elevation above the surface. The raft is in fact subject to continual change of position, to which superadding its recent formation, renders either the solidity of its structure or the growth of large timber impossible. Some small willows, and other aquatic bushes, are frequently seen amongst the drift wood, but are too frequently destroyed by the shifting of the mass to acquire any considerable size. The distance between the extremities of the raft is, as stated, about 25 ms., but of this space not more than 10 ms. is impeded by raft. The width of the river is about 220 yards. If we allow the timber to be 8 feet deep, 10 ms. by 220 yards, will yield 2,240,500 solid cords.

The first stream of consequence which enters Atchafalaya is the Courtableau, which comes in from the NW. half a mile above the lower raft.—(See Courtableau.) Around the mouth of Courtableau is one wide overflow. Towards Opelousas and Attacapas this drowned tract reaches 8 or 9 ms. in a direct line from the Atchafalaya. The intermediate space at high water is a lake. The currents of the smaller bayous are lost in the maze, and only remain distinguishable by the openings of their channels. The many lakes that mingle with the outlets of the river, and with each other, render this region in an extraordinary manner intricate. Below Courtableau, many outlets leave the Atchafalaya, which flow into lake Chetimaches, and whose waters again enter the main stream by the outlet of that lake. From Courtableau to the Cow Island is SE. 25 ms. in a direct line. Here the river turns E. So numerous are the outlets between Courtableau and Cow Island, that the current of the Atchafalaya passes by them into Lake Chetimaches, and, therefore, from Cow Island to the Plaquemine, the volume of the former river is nearly stagnant. The river here winds diagonally over an inclined plane, and when the swell of the waters rise above the banks the water naturally flows down the direct slope, and, consequently, when the river assumes an eastern course, the current at high water is at right angles to the river. Within a short distance below Cow Island there is a very narrow selvage of high land commencing on the right shore, which continues to the entrance of the Plaquemine, but cut by 20 or 30 outlets, great and small. In this eastern course of Atchafalaya, the light colored water of Mississippi disappears, and the stream assumes the dark green tinge of the waters of the swamps. This change is effected by a bayou, whose banks are in general above overflow, and which comes in from towards Fausse riviere, and, flowing SW., carries the Mississippi waters towards Cow Island.

Where the Atchafalaya and Plaquemine form their junction, the united stream assumes a S. course, which it maintains to the Gulf of Mexico, the distance by a meridian line 54 ms., or about 70 ms. pursuing the river. A summary of all the distances gives the whole length of the Atchafalaya, by comparative course, 133 ms., and along the stream 193 ms.

A particular description of this river below Plaquemine would be mere repetition. It is sufficiently explicit to observe, that 10 ms. below Plaquemine another small raft impedes the navigation, boats being obliged to be taken by an outlet through Lake Natchez, and thence again into the main stream below. The Atchafalaya passes through Lake Chetimaches, and 3 ms. further down contracts again into a river of about 240 yards wide, receives the Teche, 5 or 6 ms. below which timber ceases, and the level grassy seamarsh reaches the banks, and continues with the Atchafalaya to its mouth. The only spots of valuable arable land on the entire banks of Atchafalaya, in all its course, is near the mouth of Teche and the opposite bank, a few miles below, at Rice's Island.—See Teche, &c., Rice's Island and Red river.

The tide flows up the Atchafalaya, when the Mississippi is low, as high as the great raft, and at other seasons in proportion to the height of the streams in the interior.

Atchafalaya Bay, at the mouth of Atchafalaya river, on the coast of La, about 30 ms. long from SE. to NW., and 20 ms. wide. A long bar from Point Chevreuil to Point au Fer, on which, at common tides, there is about 9 feet water, prevents vessels above that draft from entering, though the depth within and up the Atchafalaya to the mouth of Teche, would admit vessels of any assignable tonnage.

Atena, town of Naples, in Principato Citeriore, 22 ms. N. of Policastro. Lon. 15 58 E., lat. 40 36 N.

Ath, town in Austrian Hainault, seated on the Dender, 12 ms. NW. of Mons. Lon. 3 44 E., lat. 50 35 N.

Athapescow, lake of British America. Lat. 60 0 N., lon. W. C. 32 0 W. It discharges into Slave lake, by Slave river. It is about 200 ms. long; mean width 20.

Athelney, island of Somersetshire, Eng., at the confluence of the Thone and Parret, memorable for having afforded shelter to king Alfred.

Athens, now called Selines, once a celebrated city, the capital of ancient Attica, but now of Livadia, in European Turkey. After many revolutions, the Turks finally wrested it from the Venetians; and it has now not more than 10,000 inhabitants, of whom three-fourths are Christians of the Greek church, the remainder Turks. It is the see of an archbishop, and is defended by a citadel on the summit of a lofty rock. The town stands beneath the citadel, not encompassing the rocks as formerly, but spreading into the plain to the W. and NW. Some masses of brick-work, standing separate without the town, belonged, perhaps, to the ancient wall, of which other traces also appear. The houses are mostly mean and straggling. In the lanes, the high walls on each side, which are commonly white-washed, reflect strongly the light of the sun. The streets were very irregular, and, anciently, were neither uniform nor handsome. There are many magnificent ruins, which testify its former grandeur. It is situated on the Gulf of Engia, 100 ms. NE. of Lacedemon, and 320 S. by W. of Constantinople. Lon. 23 57 E., lat. 38 5 N.

Hobhouse says: "He who at this day (1809) surveys the hill of the Acropolis, (the citadel of Athens) has the view of a site which has been covered with the habitations of men, and has maintained, probably without intermission, a pop. of 8,000 or 10,000 souls for more than 30 centuries; a fortune to which no other spot, that I know of, in the world, can justly pretend; and which a view of its revolutions and disasters must render still more surprising."

It may also be added that Athens, at least in western Asia and all Europe, if not in the whole world, is the only city which was in earliest times capital of a civilized people, and now is again capital. Thebes and Memphis, in Egypt, probably, as capitals, preceded Athens, but where are now Thebes and Memphis?

Athens, town in Somerset co., Me., 22 ms. NNE. from Norridgewock. Pop. in 1810, 374; in 1820, 590.—Tp. in Windham, co., Vt. Pop. in 1820, 430.—Town and seat of justice in Greene co., N. Y., situated on the right bank of the Hudson river, opposite Hudson. Lat. 42 15 N., lon. W. C. 3 10 E. It is a fine flourishing village, containing about 300 houses, and, including the tp., 2,030 inhabitants in 1820.—Town of Bradford co., Pa., on the Susquehanna. Pop. in 1820, 1,108.—Town in McMinn co., Ten., 80 ms. SE. from Murfreesborough.—Village in Limestone co., Ala., 25 ms. W. from Huntsville.

—Town in Clarke co., Ga., 70 ms. N. from Milledgeville. Franklin college, located in this town, went into operation in 1803. Its endowments are, a president, four professors, and two tutors. Its support is founded upon funds arising from $100,000, bank stock, and 50,000 acres of land; $12,000 have been appropriated to the purchase of a library and philosophical apparatus. Lat. 33 58 N., lon. W. C. 6 40 W.—Co. of Ohio, having Meigs and Gallia S., Jackson S. W., Hocking W., Perry and Morgan N., Washington and Ohio river E. It is about 40 ms. in length from E. to W.; mean width 23, area 900 sq. ms. The country is hilly, but well wooded and watered. The soil extremely fertile. Chief town Athens. Lat. 39 20 N., and W. lon. W. C. 5 0, intersect in this county. It is traversed from NW. to SE. by Hocking river. Pop. in 1820, 6,338.—Vill. and st. of jus. in Athens co., Ohio, upon the Hocking, 73 ms. SE. from Columbus, and 41 W. from Marietta. Lat. 39 23 N., lon. W. C. 5 5 W. The site of Athens is remarkable; the river Hocking forming a curve so nearly circular as almost to insulate the point on which the village stands. This place is situated in the northernmost of the two townships granted by Congress for an university. In 1804 this institution was chartered by the State Legislature, and now, according to the Ohio Gazetteer, enjoys an income of $4,500. The public buildings are those of the college, a Presbyterian and Methodist church, court-house, Masonic hall, &c. The college faculty consists of a president, three professors, and preceptor of the academy. The reputation of this seminary stands high.

Since the above was written, the compiler of this dictionary visited Athens, Ohio, and must in some degree correct the account given from the Ohio Gazetteer. The town does stand on a peninsula formed by a bend of Hocking river, but also stands on a hill of considerable height, and yet far below the extreme height of the point. The Hocking here winds its course at the foot of a congeries of very high and broken hills. The country in the vicinity picturesque in a high degree; aspect even mountainous.

Atherston, town of Warwickshire, Eng., on the Anker, indifferently large and well built; 10 ms. N. of Coventry, and 104 NW. of London. Lon. 1 30 W., lat. 52 40 N.

Athlone, town of Ireland, in the co. of West Meath, on the Shannon, 60 ms. W. of Dublin. Lon. 7 41 W. lat. 53 22 N.

Athol, district of Perthshire, Scotland, a beautiful, romantic, and mountainous country, containing some fine lakes.—Tp. in Worcester co., Mass. Pop. in 1810, 1,041, and in 1820, 1,211.—Village in Worcester co., Mass., 70 ms. NW. from Boston.—Tp. in Warren co., N. Y. Pop. in 1820, 570.—Town in Athol tp., Warren co., 80 ms. N. of Albany.

Athos, or Monte-Santo, mountain of Macedonia, in a peninsula to the S. of the Gulf of Contessa, about 30 ms. in circumference, and two in perpendicular height. It is inhabited by a great number of Greek monks, who have many fortified monasteries upon it. Here they cultivate olives and vines, and are carpenters, masons, &c., leading an austere life, and living to a great age. It is 70 ms. E. of Salonichi. Lon. 26 20 E., lat. 40 30 N.

Athy, town of Ireland, in the co. of Kildare, and province of Leinster, seated on the river Barrow, 12 ms. S. of Kildare. Lon. 6 37 W., lat. 52 58 N.

Atkinson, a point on the NW. coast of North America, lat. 49 21 N., lon. W. C. 45 55 W.—Village and tp. in Penobscot co., Me. Pop. in 1820, 245.—Tp. and village in Rockingham co., N. H. Pop. in 1810, 556; in 1820, 563.

Atlantic, or Atlantic Ocean, takes its name from Mount Atlas, in Africa, and lies between the W. continents of Africa and Europe, and the E. continent of America. Its least breadth, from Guinea, in Africa, to Brazil, in S. America, is 2,300 ms. On one side of the equator, it is called the N. Atlantic ocean; and on the other, the S. Atlantic ocean. The Atlantic ocean is remarkable as being the only large aquatic opening between the polar extremities of the earth. By reference to the articles Baltic, Earth, and Europe, it will be seen in what manner the climates of the opposing shores of the Atlantic are influenced by its peculiar extent and position.

Atlas, chain of high mountains in Africa, separating Barbary from Biledulgerid. They are inhabited almost in every place, except where the extreme cold will not permit. The highest summit of this chain is estimated at about 12,000 feet above the surface of the Atlantic ocean.

ATLAS, as a term, shows very clearly that it comes into its present form by the inflexions of proper names distorted by derivation from one language after another, and that Adrar, Athraer, Edthraer, Adthrarin, Adderim, Addras, Attras, and Atlas are mere variations of the same word.—Hodgson.—See Adthraer.

Atlixco, town of Mexico, in Puebla, situated 20 ms. SW. from the city of Puebla. Lat. 18 50 N., lon. W. C. 21 40 W.

ATMOSPHERE, from the Greek words, meaning vapor and sphere. In common language, air and atmosphere are used as synonymous, but though the bulk of the atmosphere is composed of air, there is at all times water held in mixture; smoke, also, and other substances, contribute to compose the atmosphere. It is by the agency of air holding water suspended in the form of vapour that clouds are formed, and under different circumstances are produced rain, snow, hail, &c. In estimating the actual size of the earth the atmosphere ought to be included; it is a constituent part of the planet, carried round the axis with the other parts. The highest clouds as subject as the most massive mountains to the laws of gravity. Thus estimated, the real diameter of the globe is about 8,000 ms.

Atokas, or Tabicoak, river, runs into Lake Ontario W. of York, and the river Humber, U. C. The mouth of this river is the boundary between the Missassaga lands, and the East Riding of the co. of York. It is now generally called the Eto-breake.

Atooi, one of the Sandwich islands, discovered by Captain Cook, in 1778. Towards the NE. and NW., the face of the country is ragged and broken; but to the S. it is more even. The hills rise from the sea side with a gentle acclivity, and at a little distance back are covered with wood.

Atoyaque, small river of Texas; it is a branch of the Sabine.

Atrato, river of Colombia, falling into the Gulf of Darien. It rises in Choco, and flows N. about 250 ms.

"The principal mouth of the great river Atrato is called Barbacoa; situated in 8 12 N. lat. This river meanders through a beautiful country a distance of about 530 ms., following the stream. Its banks are, in general, steep and high, clothed with perpetual verdure and majestic forests, of which the lofty cedar is the most common tree.

At the mouth of this river we have the great bay of Candelaria, capable of containing all the fleets of Europe; the anchorage excellent, in 15 to 20 fathoms. Nearly all the bay is completely sheltered, and the most violent northern gales of wind scarcely ruffle the harbor. In fact, there is no bay within the tropics as spacious and safe as Candelaria.

The bar of the river Atrato, at the lowest tides, has 5 feet, but generally 6½ feet; the entrance is about 200 yards in length, and perfectly safe for vessels of the above mentioned draught.

The first river of any magnitude which discharges itself into the Atrato, is called Succo, (turbid or muddy,) distant from the bar about 70 ms., in lat. 7 46 N. This river may be of consequence as the country advances in settlements, but at present it is full of floating timber and other impediments.

The second river tributary to the Atrato, is called Marindo, about 150 ms. from the mouth of the former. About 20 leagues below its entrance into the Atrato, there are the high mountains called Marindo, remarkable for the magnificence of their forests of cedar and other durable woods.

The third river, called Napipi, discharges itself into the Atrato, in lat. 6 33 N. This river becomes worthy of particular notice, because it is the best channel through which the communication may be opened between the two seas. From its source, or rather from the spot to which a steamboat could navigate, the distance by land to the Pacific ocean is only 6 ms. The Indians of the country take a bale of goods across this portage weighing 5 arrobas, or 125 pounds, for $1. These goods are carried to a safe bay on the Pacific, from whence they are taken in canoes to various places.

From the entrance of the Napipi into the Atrato, to a place called Tambo de don Carlos, is about 100 ms., and is usually performed in 3 days, but a steamboat could do it in 12 or 14 hours. From Tambo to Antado is 15 ms., and from the latter place to the great bay of Cupica, in the Pacific ocean, is about 12 or 14 ms.; and the Indians frequently perform two journeys there in the same day. Loads of goods may be taken from Antado to Cupica either by mules or men, but the latter is most common, more especially as commerce by that route is yet in a state of infancy.

The fourth river, called Bebara, discharges itself into the Atrato, in lat. 6 2. About 15 ms. from its mouth is a warehouse, where goods are usually deposited when destined for Antioquia. From this warehouse to a place called Urrao, is about 60 ms. land carriage; and, as the goods are usually taken by men, and the roads difficult, they are usually 7 days in performing the journey. The cost is about $12 for 125 lbs. weight. From Urrao to Antioquia is about 40 ms. The latter distance is usually performed by mules, at a charge of $4 a load.

These facts are stated to show that, by the route of the Atrato, there can be easily opened a great intercourse with the valuable province of Antioquia, instead of the present route by the river Magdalena, and consequently add to the importance of the former river.

The Atrato runs through the province called Citara, and the capital is frequently called by that name, but its proper name is the city of San Francisco de Quibido; it contains about 2,000 inhabitants, the air pure, and the heat much less than in the Antilles. The distance from the mouth of the Atrato to Quibido is about 410 ms. by water. From thence to its source about 80 ms. Boats or vessels drawing 7 feet water may go to Quibido, and 5 feet may be carried to the aforementioned Tambo de San Pablo. The rate of the current is generally about 2 ms. per hour, and, even during the highest freshets, the current is much less rapid than the Mississippi and other rivers of the U. S.; of course not the least doubt exists that steamboats of large burden may navigate from the mouth of the Atrato to the Tambo de San Carlos; this latter place is situated on a narrow tongue of land, about 4½ ms. wide, in the province called Novita. On the other side of this narrow isthmus we find the river San Juan, which unites with a river called Calima, and descends to the port or bay of Chorambera, in the Pacific ocean.

It is therefore unquestionable that, by cutting a canal of a few miles from Tambo de San Carlos to the river San Juan, a water communication can be opened from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and it is likewise certain, that a canal may be cut from Antado to the bay of Cupica; future surveys will establish which of these routes may be best."

The foregoing information is drawn from Wm. D. Robinson, and by that gentleman credited to a Mr. Kirkland. The distances given must be taken with great allowance, as the entire length of the Atrato, by comparative courses, but little exceeds 200 ms. It is, in fact, a river of great importance, rather from its position than from its magnitude.

Atri, episcopal town of Naples, in Abruzzo Ulteriore. It is seated on a craggy mountain, 4 ms. from the Gulf of Venice, and 10 SE. of Teramo. Lon. 13 48 E., lat. 41 35 N.

Atsion, village, Burlington co., N. J., where there is a valuable iron foundry, 26 ms. W. of Tuckerton, 29 E. by S. of Philadelphia.

Attascocito, branch of the Sabine river, rises in Texas, about 20 ms. E. from Nacogdoches.

Attica, township and village, Genessee co., N. Y. Pop. in 1820, 1519.—Bay, on the S. side of the Ottawa river, at the mouth of the river of the same name.—River of U. C.; a branch of the Ottawa river.

Attica, a peninsula of Greece, and in many respects one of the most interesting regions of the earth. In ancient times Attica was bounded N. by the Asopus, which separated it from Bœotia, NW. by Megaris, SW. by the Saronic Gulf, and SE. and E. by the straits of Eubœa. It forms an irregular triangle; base, on the Saronic Gulf and Megaris, 50 ms.; and altitude, from the Megaris to the mouth of the Asopus, 30 ms. Including the island of Salamis and Cape Rhamnus, east from Marathon, the whole of Attica must have fallen short of 200 sq. ms. This is far below the mean extent of a co. of the U. S., even along the Atlantic slope, where the counties are the smallest. The surface of Attica is broken, and much of it occupied by comparatively high mountains. In the northern part spreads the rugged track of Cithæron, and its extension, Parnes. From the Cithæron again branched another chain, which, under the local names of Brilessus, Pentelicus, Hymettus, and Laurium, reached the southern extremity of Attica at Cape Sunium. The intervening valleys and the island of Salamis afforded the only arable soil, which, from a careful inspection of the features of the country, cannot exceed two-thirds of the whole area, or 134 sq. ms. Upon this very limited area ancient Attica, following the lowest estimate, possessed a population of 284,000, or upwards of 2,000 to the arable sq. m. This must appear excessive, and yet we have the evidence of history to warrant the conclusion that, at the period of the Peloponnesian war, a little more than four centuries before our era, this little territory must have contained more than 300,000 inhabitants. According to the best modern accounts, Attica, including Athens, has now a population of about 25,000. This, although very trifling, when compared with the ancient state of society in that country, is yet far above what is generally considered as the mean population of Greece. Attica, or rather the territory of Athens, is now restricted to within Cithæron, and does not exceed 150 sq. ms.; consequently, it contains a population of 180 to the sq. m. Before the late revolution in Greece, Attica was subject to the Kisleh Aga at Constantinople, and ruled by a Wayrode.—See Greece.

Attica, town, southeastern part of Seneca co., O., on the Columbus and Sandusky turnpike road, at its intersection with the road from Mansfield through Tiffin to Perrysville, on Maumee river. It is 16 ms. NW. from Tiffin, the county seat, and 18 northwardly of Bucyrus, in Crawford co.

Attleborough, E., town in Bristol co., Mass., 40 ms. S. from Boston.—Town in Bucks co., Pa.—Tp., Bristol co., Mass. Pop. in 1810, 2,716; in 1820, 3,055.

Attlebury, town in Norfolk, 14 ms. NE. of Thetford, and 93 of London. Lon. 1 5 E., lat. 52 35 N.—Town, Dutchess co., N. Y., 63 ms. SSE. from Albany.

Attinga, town of Indostan, in the province of Travancore, about 80 ms. NW. of Cape Comorin.

Attock, city and fortress of Hindoostan proper, on the east bank of the Indus, supposed to stand on the site of the Taxila of Alexander, where he crossed that river. It is 180 ms. NW. of Lahore. Lon. 70 36 E., lat. 32 27 N.—River, which rises in the Tartarian mountains, N. of Hindoostan, passes by Caboul, and flows into the Indus above Attock.

Attruck river, ancient Ochus, a stream of Persia, in Khorasan, the same which is in many maps erroneously named Tedjend. It falls into the Caspian near Astrabad. Though brief in course, the Attruck is important from position, forming in some degree the boundary between Iran (Persia) and Tooran (Scythia,) or between the Persic and Tartan regions of our books. See Iran and Tooran.

Atures, falls of, in the Orinoco, S. America. Lat. 5 15 N., lon. W. C. 8 55 E.

Atwat. See Tuat.

Atwater, town, Portage co., O., 12 ms. SE. of Ravenna, and on the road from that place to Pittsburg.—Town, Portage co., O. Pop. 1820, 320.—Town, Portage co., O., 63 ms. NE. from Columbus.

Auburn, town in Wiltshire, Eng., on a branch of the Kennet, 8 ms. NE. of Marlborough, and 81 W. of London. Lon. 1 32 W., lat. 51 31 N.—Town and seat of justice in Cayuga co., N. Y., upon the great western turnpike road, at the outlet of the Owasco lake, 170 ms. W. from Albany. It has, beside the ordinary county buildings, a State prison capable of containing 1,000 prisoners. The pop. exceeds 2,000. Lat. 42 56 N., lon. W. C. 0 27 E.—Tp., Susquehanna co., Pa. Pop. in 1820, 208.—Tp., Richland co., O. Pop. in 1820, 9,169.—Tp. and town, in Geauga co., O. The town of Auburn is situated 14 ms. S. of Chardon, the co. seat, and 16 ms. N. of Ravenna, in Portage co.—Town, Oakland co., Mich.

Aubé, dep. of Fr., the late province of Champagne.

Aubenas, town of Fr., in the dep. of Ardeche, and late province of Dauphiny. It has a manufacture of cloths, of Spanish wool, and of red cotton, in imitation of Indian handkerchiefs. Beside corn and wine, its district produces truffles, oranges, figs, olives, chestnuts, and walnuts. The silk worm and mulberry tree succeed well here. Aubenas is seated on the Ardeche, at the foot of the Cevennes, near the mineral waters of Valtz, and 15 ms. NW. of Viviers. Lon. 4 30 E., lat. 44 40 N.

Aubigny, town of Fr., in the dep. of Cher, and late province of Berry, in a fine plain, on the river Nerre.

Aubun, town of the island of Jersey, with a good harbor and a fort.

Aubin du Cormier, town of Fr., in the dep. of Ile and Vilane, and late province of Bretagne, 10 ms. E. of Rennes. Lon. 1 23 W., lat. 48 15 N.

Aubonne, handsome town of Switzerland, in the canton of Bern, on a river of the same name, 10 ms. W. of Lausanne. Lon. 6 30 E., lat. 46 30 N.

Aubusson, town of Fr., in the dep. of Creuse, and late territory of Marche. It had a manufacture of tapestry, which made it populous. It is seated on the river Creuse, 37 ms. NE. of Limoges. Lon. 2 15 E., lat. 45 58 N.

Aucaugrel, town of Africa, capital of the kingdom of Adel, seated on a mountain. Lon. 44 25 E., lat. 0 10 N.

Auch, episcopal city of Fr., in the dep. of Gers, lately an archi-episcopal see, and the capital of Gascony. It lies on the summit and declivity of a steep hill, at the foot of which runs the Gers, Pop. 8,000. They have manufactures of velvets serges, crapes, hats, and leather. Auch is 37 ms. W. of Toulouse. Lon. 0 40 E., lat. 43 39 N.

Auckland, Bishop's, town in the bishopric of Durham. It is pleasantly seated on the side of a hill, and noted for its beautiful castle and for its chapel, whose architecture is very curious. It is 8 ms. S. by W. of Durham, and 251 NNW. of London. Lon. 1 31 W., lat. 54 43 N.

Aude, dep. of Fr., part of the late province of Languedoc. Pop. 241,000.

Audjelah, the Augila of Herodotus, one of the oases or habitable islands of the African deserts. It contains, beside other smaller towns, Audjelah; hence the name. This town stands, as placed on our maps, N. lat. 29 30; lon. 23 20 E. of London; 500 ms. westward of Grand Cairo, and 200 ms. southeastward of Ben Gasi, on the Gulf of Sydra.

Auglaize, tp. in Wood co., O. Pop. in 1820, 216.—Southern branch of Maumee river, O., rising in Allen co., and, flowing nearly N. 80 ms., falls in Maumee, near Fort Defiance.

Augsburg, city of Germany, in Bavaria, supposed to stand on the site of the ancient Augusta Vindeloorum, but now the capital of a principality subject to Bavaria. It has a variety of manufactures, and is one of the principal trading towns in Germany. The cathedral, town house, and other public buildings, are magnificent. In the bishop's palace, the Lutherans presented their confession of faith to the emperor Charles V., in 1550; hence called the Confession of Augsburg. It is seated between the Werdach and Lech, 30 ms NW. of Munich. Lon. 10 55 E., lat. 48 17 N.

Augusta, tp. of Grenville co., U. C.—Tp. in Kennebec co., Me. Pop. in 1810, 1,805; in 1820, 2,457.—Tp. in Oneida co., N. Y. Pop. in 1820, 2,771.—Tp. in Northumberland co., Pa. Pop. in 1810, 1,373; in 1820, 2,075.—Town, Sussex co., N. J., 70 ms. N. from Trenton.—Seat of justice of Bracken co., Ky.; is a small town delightfully situated on a handsome bank of the Ohio river. It is 18 ms. below Limestone, and 65 ms. from Lexington. Pop. 1820, 260.

Augusta, co. of Va., lying between the SW. mountain and Blue Ridge, having Rockbridge SW., Bath and Pendleton NW., Rockingham NE., and Albemarle and Nelson SE. It is in the form of a square of 30 ms. each side; 900 sq. ms. The face of the county waving, or rather hilly; soil variegated, but generally productive. Staples: tobacco, flour, and pork. Chief town, Staunton. Pop. 1820, 16,742. N. lat. 35°, and 2° W. lon. W. C., intersect in the southern part of this county. The Shenandoah and James rivers rise in Augusta, and flow from it in opposite directions.—Tp. and village, formerly in Columbiana co., but now in Carroll co., O. The village is situated in the northern part of the county, 10 or 11 ms. a little E. of N. from Carrollton, the county seat, and about a like distance SW. by W. from New Lisbon.—Capital and town of Ga., situate on the SW. bank of the river Savannah, 120 ms. NW. of the town of Savannah. It is seated on a fine plain, and enjoys the best soil, with the advantage of a central situation between the upper and lower countries, and is rising into importance. Pop. in 1820, about 4,000. Lat. 33 20 N., lon. W. C. 5° W.—Town, Perry co., Miss., 74 ms. SE. from Monticello.—Small village and town on the left bank of Tallapoosa river, Montgomery co., Ala., 68 ms. E. from Cahaba.

Augustine, St., city of the U. S., in Fla. N. lat. 29 58, lon. W. C. 4 30 W. Pop. in 1840, 2,459. White persons, 1,476; free colored, 120; slaves, 863. Total, 2,459.

This town is situated on the eastern coast of Florida. It is built in a prairie on the sea shore, surrounded by walls and a dry ditch on the land, side. It is defended on the N. by a fort of 4 stations, called the Fort of St. Jean, built of stone, with a parapet 9 feet thick and a rampart 20 feet high, with bomb-proof casemates and ways, and is lined with more than 50 pieces of artillery. Upon the sea shore, S. of the town, stands another small fort connected with the walls of the town. This fort defends the harbor, which is good, safe, and commodious, with a depth of water of not less than from 28 to 30 feet at low tide. This harbor is covered from the sea side by a long and low island, called the Island of St. Annastac. It is separated from the main land by a branch of the sea called the river Matanze.

Should a vessel, after leaving the Bahama channel, be obliged, in consequence of some accident, or any particular reason, to stand in for an harbor, the port of St. Augustine is the nearest and most advantageous place.

The entrance is covered outside by sand banks and rocks, extending out more than one-third of a league, between which there are openings or passes, which form the channels leading to the interior of the harbor. The S. channel is the one vessels generally make use of. There is not less than 20, 25, to 30 feet water at low tide; but before you enter this channel you have to pass a bar, over which there is not more than 9 feet water at low tide. You can moor your ship outside of the bar, and wait till the tide comes in. This pass can easily be distinguished by the breakers of the sea, which beat against the rocks on the banks S. and N., and thereby plainly mark out the passage, which is at least 300 fathoms wide. After passing the bar, you find from 18 to 20 feet water. You will range along the island of Annastasius within two cables length; you may cast anchor near the NE. point, opposite a battery, in 26 feet water, at the distance of one cable length and a-half from the land. You double the N. point of the island, and then come to anchor before the town. N. and S. of the town there are two great Indian villages, which form the suburbs thereof. Half a league from the town, on the N. side, there is a small fort, called the Fort Negro, situated on a flat and level ground, at a little distance from the northern shore of the river St. Mark's, with a branch communicating with the river St. Jean, towards the mouth, in the Atlantic ocean. These passes and entrance into the harbor are very advantageously situated; for, all the vessels coming from Mexico, Louisiana, and the Havana, are obliged to pass through the Bahama channel, at a short distance from St. Augustine, the port of which can be made with ease, and where you will find assistance and relief.—National Intelligencer, Oct. 17, 1825.

Augustine, cape of Brazil, in Pernambuco, about 20 ms. S. from Olinda. S. lat. 8 30, lon. W. C. 42 E.

Augustow, small, but strong town of Poland, in Polachia, seated on the Narieu, 44 ms. N. of Bielsk. Lon. 23 40, E. lat. 53 25 N.

Aurillac, populous trading town of Fr., on the river Jordanne, in the dep. of Cantel, and late province of Auvergne. Quantities of lace and velvet are manufactured here. It is 30 ms. SW. of St. Flour, and 250 S. of Paris. Lon. 2 22 E., lat. 44 55 N.

Australia, Polynesia, Australasia, Oceana, Sandwich Islands, &c.—These rather indefinite and conflicting terms were invented to designate more or less of the immense regions spreading from Asia towards the southward and towards America—Australasia, or South Asia; Polynesia, or Many Islands. Australia, southern continent, is now an established term for New Holland and contiguous islands, such as Papua or New Guinea, Waijoo, Arroo, New Hebrides, New Caledonia, Norfolk island, Van Dieman or Tasmania, and, by a rather too violent stretch of system, New Zealand.

Ocean, amore indefinite though more comprehensive, would include all the preceding, with the Bonin, Sandwich, &c. But such sweeping terms rather confuse than serve to any good purpose the science of geography.

When, however, we scan on a map of the world that great space spreading from Asia southeastward over the Pacific ocean, we cannot avoid the conclusion that one physical section includes not only the islands we have named, but also the Lardnes, Carolines, New Hebrides, Friendly islands, Georgians, Marquesas, Society isles, and many smaller groups. It would not be a very violent extension of theory to include in this natural section the great islands towards Asia, included by some geographers under the general names of Malaysia, and under that term comprising the Sumatran, Javan, Sumbava-Timor, Molucca, Celebes, Borneo, and the Philippine groups.

In Black's excellent atlas (page 12) we have the following observations, under the head of Oceana: "The islands to the southeast of Asia have been usually considered as appendages of that continent; but they are now classed by the continental geographers along with the islands of the Pacific ocean, as a fifth division of the world, under the name of Oceana or Oceanica. Oceana is divided into Western Oceana or Malaysia, Central Oceana or Australasia, Eastern Oceana or Polynesia."

If we turn to a general map of the world, and on the wide ocean between America and Asia, the remarkable fact will stand revealed, that from the straits of Magellan to the peninsulas of Oonalaska and Kamschatka, or from S. lat. 55° to N. lat. 60°, or through 115 degrees of latitude and 125 of longitude, spreads a deep sea, upwards of 10,000 ms. in length, and mean breadth at least 2,500 ms., and comprising an area exceeding that of either Asia or America. The Sandwich, Owyhean, or Hawaiian group of islands, is the only one rising from this immense sheet of water. It is, indeed, as devoid of islands as is the Atlantic, and ranging from Easter island to Oonalaska, Kamschatka, and Japan. The southwestern shore, if we may use the term, is defined by successive groups of islands, included under our general head. With these remarks we proceed to the specific description of the sections of Australia, deriving our authority from Black's atlas.

Australia is now, in Britain at least, the generally received name of the large island formerly called New Holland, which contains a superficial area of more than 3,000,000 sq. ms. Within the last half century, various British colonies, distinguished by the names of New South Wales, and Australia Felix, South Australia, and Western Australia, have been placed on its shores.

New South Wales was discovered by Cook, who sailed along the whole coast, from Cape Howe to Cape York, in the year 1770. In January, 1788, a convict settlement was established at Port Jackson, but for many years the progress of discovery and improvement was very slow. It was only in 1813 that the first passage across the Blue mountains, a range which runs parallel to the coast, was effected; but since that time colonists have flocked to the settlement, and its progress has been unusually rapid. According to a census taken in September, 1836, the population amounted to 77,554, as stated in the following table, and the number of sheep exceeded 1,000,000.

South Australia comprises that portion of New Holland which is situated between 132 and 141° of E. lon. from London, and the tropic of Capricorn and the south coast. It has been by the British Government erected into a colony, and the first settlements have been formed upon the east side of the Gulf of St. Vincent. The capital has been fixed at the town of Adelaide, which already contains 6,000 inhabitants. A number of colonists have also recently established themselves at port Lincoln, on the west side of Spencer's Gulf.

Western Australia, or extreme western part of New Holland, has become a separate British colony, with limits between 31 and 35° S. lat., and between the west coast and 120° E. lon. from London. The first settlers in this colony arrived at Swan river in 1829. The principal settlements are yet on Swan river; but others, less densely peopled, have spread to a considerable distance inland and along the coast, and a number of counties formed; of which may be named Swiss, Perth, Murray, Wellington, Nelson, Sussex, Lanark, York, Grantham, Goderich, Stirling, Hay, Plantagenet, and Kent. The principal towns are Perth and Fremantle, on Swan river, in Perth county, and Albany, on King George's sound, in Plantagenet county. The most of the names imposed show the origin, nationally, of this colony, which was projected in, and in great part peopled from, Scotland. The colony has made a steady rather than a rapid advance. No convicts are admitted in Western Australia.

The limits of Western Australia, as defined above, would give it a length of about 400 ms. from north to south, with a mean width of 220 or 88,000 sq. ms. As, however, the whole region of Western New Holland is uncultivated wastes, with a few tribes of the lowest savage character, the colony of Western Australia may be indefinitely extended, as will no doubt be the case. The land distance, in a nearly west direction from Sydney, in New South Wales, to Swan river, is about 2,000 ms.

Tasmania, or Van Dieman's Land, is a large island to the southward and separated from New South Wales by Bass's straits. It is about 210 ms. in length from north to south, and about 150 from east to west; area about 24,000 sq. ms. The southern part of this island was discovered in 1642 by Abel Tasman, a Dutch commander, who gave it the name of Van Dieman's Land, in honor of the then governor general (Van Dieman) of the Dutch East Indies. It was, until 1799, regarded as a part of New Holland, at which time Messrs. Bass and Flinders sailed round it. The former had priority in passing the strait, to which his name was justly given. On it, in 1803, a small penal settlement for convicts was established; and early in 1804 Governor Collins arrived in the river Derwent, took formal possession of the country, and founded Hobart town, now the capital of the island, situated on the southeast part of the island, S. lat. 42 25, lon. 148 30 E. of London. The population of the island on the 31st December, 1836, amounted to 43,695, viz: free, 25,944; convicts, 17,661.

Norfolk is a small and detached island in the Pacific ocean, between the northern point of the northernmost island of New Zealand and New Caledonia, S. lat. 29 30, lon. E. from London 169 25. At a distance exceeding 900 ms. ENE. from Sydney, this speck has become a settlement for convicts.

In October, 1838, a new establishment was formed at port Essington, on Cobourg peninsula of the north coast of New Holland. Victoria, the capital of this colony, is situated at S. lat. 11 30, E. lon. from London 131°. The immense extent of New Holland may in some degree be comprehended from the fact that Victoria of port Essington is in a direct line upwards of 1,600 ms. north-northwest from Sydney.

New Zealand, group of, composed of two large and several small islands in the southern Pacific ocean, southeastward of and separated from New Holland by a sea of from 1,200 to 1,400 ms. in width. Taken together, the two main islands and Stewart's island stretch in S. lat. from 34 30 to 46 50, and in lon. from 166 to 177° E. of London. The range of these islands is from SW. to NE., and their united mean length 840, the mean breadth about 100 ms., area 80,000 sq. ms. It may not be unimportant to remark that Spain and the New Zealand islands are antipodes to each other.

"As far as we have documents deserving confidence in regard to this Antarctic group, the soil and climate are eminently calculated to sustain a dense civilized population. The insular position of the country, and the lofty mountains which intersect it, ensure a due supply of moisture, and hence the country abounds in beautiful forests.

Along its great extent of coast (from 1,200 to 1,500 ms.,) there are numerous harbors of unrivalled excellence, into some of which fine rivers enter, after having passed through extensive districts of great fertility. The climate is one of the finest and most equable in the world; and, indeed, no other country possesses so many requisites for becoming the seat of a great naval and commercial power."—Black's Atlas.

The natives, evidently a branch of the great Polynesian family, are, as primitive barbarians or savages always have been, and always must be, subdivided into clans, families, and even bands, hostile to each other, and, compared to the surface over which they roam, very few in number. In such condition, government, for any permanent beneficial purpose, cannot exist. The germ of human life will remain in fragments; but age after age passes away in unchanged rudeness and ferocity. The New Zealander, as all other branches of the Polynesian race, must submit to the laws of nature, and can only be saved from utter extinction by submitting to and mingling with their European conquerors.—See Hawaii, in this article.

The New Zealand group was, in 1642, made a part of the discoveries of Abel Tasman, who, as discoverer, gave to it the name it bears. The native names are, for the northernmost, Eakeinoma-wee, and for southernmost, Tavai-Poenamoo. Stewart's island is, comparatively, an islet lying south of Tavai-Poenamoo, and separated by Foveaux's strait. The two main islands, taken together, and measured along their mid-line, have a length of 1,200 ms. Cook's strait, which separates them from each other, extends from NW. to SE. from lat. 40°, about 150 ms., and, very nearly along the mean length, as the two islands do not materially differ in respect to length.

Polynesia, literally many islands, as a collective name, very properly designates the region or expanse of our planet, over which lie scattered the innumerable islands of the Pacific ocean from the 108th meridian W. of London to an indefinite distance westward, and including New Zealand in the southern and the Hawaiian group in the northern hemisphere.

We may here observe, that there still exists a great difficulty in delineating the Pacific region from the confused nomenclature. In acquiring names from a language unknown to the inquirer, collective and even descriptive sentences are set down as individual names. Again, imposed names from European languages, Portuguese, Dutch, French, English, Russian, &c., conflicting with each other, superinduce still further confusion. Mr. James Jackson Jarves, in the first chapter of his very interesting history of "The Hawaiian or Sandwich Islands," has made some remarks to exhibit the cause and consequences of this evil, as well as the remedy. "Ignorance of the structure of the Polynesian language," says this author, "led Cook into error in regard to the proper names of many islands." Hawaii, he called Owyhee; Kauai, Attoo; Nihau, Onehow; substituting compound words for single terms. These extracted remarks apply to the far greater number of European navigators. Mr. Jarves had, however, previously remarked that the perplexity produced by such injudicious imposition of names was in a course of correction by the better judgment of the present age, and adds; "Thus the Navigator group is becoming better known by its aboriginal name Samoa; and the Friendly, by the Tonga; while others, such as New Zealand and the Marquesas, will be perpetuated by those cognomens."—Jarves, p. 2.

But to pursue our survey. When we regard New Zealand as our centre of vision, and extend our view around that group, we find it rising from an extensive sea on all sides, and from the bosom of which emerge only mere islets at wide distances from each other. From North Cape, the extreme northwestern point of the northern New Zealand island, it is upwards of 700 ms. NNW. to New Caledonia, the nearest land of any consequence to any part of the group. From the same point of outset the distance exceeds 1,000 ms. to the eastern coast of New Holland.

With New Caledonia commences a natural section of most profound interest. With, at the first glance, great apparent irregularity, here we enter a series of insular groups, whose order appears more and more systematic as we examine attentively their range. New Caledonia, from Cape Queen Charlotte, its southeastern point, S. lat. 22 26, lon. 167 48 E. of London, to Dampier's strait and island of Waijoo, almost under the equator, and in lon. 131° E. of London, stretches the first of a congeries of islands and groups having a general range from southeastward to northwestward. This immense series, stretching over upwards of 40 equatorial degrees on a curve of the globe, includes, besides innumerable smaller islands, the groups of New Hebrides, Louisiade, Solomon islands, New Ireland, New Britain, (the second, if not the first, largest island of the earth,) Papua, or New Guinea, Timorlaut, Ceram, &c.

Excepting on Timorlaut and Ceram, no European colony has yet commenced civilized settlement on these widespread regions, containing a land area more than two and a half fold greater than that comprised in the British islands, and falling little if any short of that part of the Atlantic slope of the U. S. southwestward from the Hudson.

It would not be a very violent extension of system to continue the preceding series to include the still more expanded groups of Australasia. It is, indeed, a departure from system to adopt any definite boundary between Australasia and Australia. Such grouping as the following will enable the reader or student to follow the series of groups as they seem to mingle into each other:

1. Advancing from Papua, the Moluccas, comprising Amboyna, Ceram, Booro, Goram, Banda, Lothoir, Pulo-Ati, Letti, Moa, Lackar, Sermatta, Kissir, Wetter, Grand Kay, Timorlaut, Gilolo, Ternates, Tidor, Batchian, Pulo-Obi, Mysol, Popo, &c.

2. Celebes group, comprising Celebes, Sangir, Siao, Banca, Xoulla, Bouton, Salayar, &c.

3. Sumbava-Timor group, comprising Sumbava, Flores, Solor, Sabrao, Lomblem, Panter, Ombay, Timor, Simao, Roti Dao, Savou, Sunba, or Sandalwood, &c.

4. Javan group, comprising Java, Madura, Bali, Lombock, &c.

5. Sumatran group, comprising Sumatra, Banca, Billiton, Lingan, Panjour, and other islands to the E. and W. of Sumatra.

6. Borneo group, if it is proper to group with an island exceeding in area the Spanish peninsula, a number of mere islets.

7. Philippine group, comprising Mindanao, Samar, Palawan, Luzon, Panay, Mindoro, and, by some authors, at least a thousand islands lessening to mere rocks or sand banks.

These six great archipelagoes have received, amongst other general names, that of Malaysia, from the original inhabitants, the Malays, and who remain the dominant population, but with certainly very great variety of languages and character.

Proceeding as far to the NW. as lon. 140° E. of London, and to lat. 26 30, we discover a small group of islets, comparatively, called the Bonin islands; the first in these intricate groups from which is derived the truly descriptive general name Polynesia, or "Many Islands." Extending a line along the earth's surface from the Bonin islands, about 66½° SE., and crossing the equator very near mid-distance, leads to Easter island, at a distance a little above 7,000 ms. Such a curve follows the general course of the northeastern shore of the great sea alluded to in this article. To the southwestward extends what may well be regarded as either an emerging or submerging continent. Between the extremes, if we include every islet, rock, or shoal, there are many, even tens of thousands, generally lying southwestward of the supposed line. Departing from the Bonin group to the SSE., we are led first into the Ladrone group central lat. 15° N., lon. 145° E. of London.

The Pelew, Caroline, Mulgrave, and Scarborough groups commence with the former at lon. 130° E. of London, and ranging between 10° N. and the equator, are scattered over something more than 50° of lon., or upwards of 3,300 ms. None of the individual islands of these four groups are more than mere spots on the face of the deep; very many of them are, however, inhabited. Along the equator the Polynesian groups cease with that of Scarborough, as thence to the Gallapagos islands, or through 90° of lon., a quarter of the earth's circumference, no land deserving a place on our maps rises above the ocean. Between Papua, the Admiralty, and Solomon groups, and those of Pelew, Caroline, Mulgrave, and Scarborough, spreads a sea of from 700 to 1,000 ms. wide, in which there are comparatively few islands. This sea, which might be called Mediterranean, is continued to the south of the equator, eastward through 60° of lon., to the Marquesas group, to the northeastward of which it is merged into the great American Western sea.

Returning to the New Hebrides, we are again in southern Polynesia, where, from Queen Charlotte's group to Easter island, over an extent of 80° of lon., and from S. lat. 10 to 28° we are led into the groups of Queen Charlotte, Feejee, Tonga, or Friendly islands, the Navigator's or Samoa islands, Society or Tahita islands, the Marquesas, and others of less note, to Easter island.

Thus we see that from Japan, China, Cambodia, and Malacca, over the great ocean, and over 150° of lon., rise expanses of land varying in extent from mere rocks, sand banks, or coral reefs, to the vast islands of New Holland, Papua, Borneo, and Sumatra. Measured by the rhombs, this oceanic continent comprises about the one-eighth part of the whole surface of the earth, and far exceeds any of the other sections of our planet in facilities of naval intercourse. The determination of the land area of Australia is a difficult problem. The following tabular view we give as an approximation to the real land surface:

	Sq. ms.
New Holland	3,185,000
New Zealand	80,000
Tasmania	6,000

Hawaiian group	6,600
Total	4,172,000

In the preceding general view, we have not included the Hawaiian group for reasons we now proceed to explain. But, as a preface to such explanation, we give the following table of courses and distances from Karakakoa Bay, in the island of Hawaii, (Owyhee,) to different points in Polynesia, Australia, Asia, Japan, and America, calculated on the principles of Mercator:

The preceding table exhibits the very remarkable position of the Hawaiian group, showing it to be the most remote from other continental or insular land of any part of the earth; and to the results of the table we may add, that the Russian settlement of Kodiak and peninsula of Alaska, lying almost due north of Hawaii, and about N. lat. 57, is distant about 2,700 ms. As far as mere relative distance is concerned, the results of the table prove Hawaii to belong to America, geographically speaking; but no rational system would include this group with Polynesia or either continent. It is surrounded, as we see, by an immense expanse of ocean, and rises from the bosom of the deep as if to afford a resting place to the mariners of the nations afar off. Thus alone, Hawaii compensates in grandeur for the narrow spaces occupied by its isles. The island from which the general name is derived possesses the most stupendous of all active volcanoes, Mawna Kea, or Mouna Kha—height above the ocean 18,000 English feet.*

The recent work published by Mr. James Jackson Jarves contains, with much valuable information on Polynesia generally, some highly important particular documents on the geographical position and extent, climate, soil, natural features, and commercial advantages of the Hawaiian group. From this author we have made already some quotations, and now become his debtor for the subjoined extracts:

"The peculiar situation of the Hawaiian islands, in the vast North Pacific, is of great importance to commerce, and marks them as a general resting place in that portion of the great highway of the world, and the embryo depot of a vast and flourishing trade. Their extremes of latitude are from 18 50 to 22 20 N., which brings them upon the borders of the tropic of Cancer, and of lon. from 154 53 to 160 15 W. from Greenwich.

"Their position is central to both the neighboring continents, being nearly equi-distant from Central America, Mexico, California, and the N.W. coast on the one side, and the Russian dominions, Japan, China, and the Philippine islands, on the other. When a civilized and enterprising population shall have developed the resources of these countries, these islands will bear the same relative importance to them, in proportion to their extent, that the West Indies do now to North and South America.

"The lesser southern groups (individual islands must be meant, as the groups are incomparably more extensive than the Hawaiian) lie also within a few weeks' sail, and much of their commerce must eventually centre here, though a long period must elapse before their full value and importance become thoroughly developed.

"To the whaling interests they are invaluable;

* If we multiply the square root of the height of the eye in feet by 1.2247, the product is the distance we can see an object on the earth's surface in miles.

This formula applied to Mouna Kha, with a height of 18,000 feet, gives the following, supposing the eye to be on the summit: The square root of 18,000 is within an inconsiderable fraction of 134 1-10, which, multiplied by 1.2247, gives 164.23, or we may say that a radius of 164 1/4 miles of the earth's surface can be seen from the summit of Mouna Kha, and of course, independent of refraction, which increases the distance, the great volcanic mountain of Hawaii can be seen at sea at least 164 ms., and in some conditions of the atmosphere to a much greater distance.

the ocean on every side, from the equator (far S. of the equator) to the pole, and between both continents, abounds with favorable cruising grounds, and these islands afford the advantages of good harbors, abundant supplies, and a healthful climate, in the immediate vicinity of their dangerous labors.

"If the ports of this group were closed to neutral commerce, many thousand miles of ocean would have to be traversed before havens possessing the requisite conveniences for recruiting and preparing shipping could be reached. This fact illustrates their great importance in a naval point of view. Should any one of the great nations seize upon them, it might be considered as holding the key of the North Pacific, for no trade could prosper in their vicinity, or even exist, while a hostile Power, possessing an active and powerful marine, should send forth its cruisers to prey upon the neighboring commerce. Their isolated position, in connexion with their reef or precipice-bound shores, would add greatly to their local advantages of defence, and a military colony once fairly established might surely put at defiance any means of attack which could be brought against them."—Pp. 3, 4.

In addition to Bird island, the group consists of twelve. The principal islands, as delineated by Mr. Jarves, are eight in number and range from SE. to NW., with an extreme distance of about 340 ms. from the eastern cape of Hawaii to the western of Kanai. The extent in length and breadth and superficial area is given in the following table, page 4 of the work from which we have quoted:

Islands.	Length.	Breadth	Area in sq. ms.

Kahoolawe	11	8	60
Lanai	17	9	100

Since this article was commenced, we have the intelligence published that the British Government has taken formal possession of this group. On the authority of the Army and Navy Chronicle it has been announced as follows:

"On the 25th of February, 1843, in consequence of demands made by the British officers, which the King could not or would not comply with, the islands were conditionally ceded to Queen Victoria. Possession of them was taken the same day by Lord George Paulet, commanding Her Britannic Majesty's ship Carysfort, and the British flag hoisted under salutes from the fort and ships."

To the author of this article it is a little interesting, as he intended to close with the suggestion of the extreme probability of the occurrence of this occupation at no very distant time. As matters have eventuated, it may not be hazardous to suggest that the work alluded to may have its share in hastening the consummation—a consummation, however, in itself a part of the development of a mighty revolution which is, with a steadiness, and we may say rapidity, few are aware of, spreading the anglo-Saxon race over the vast bosom of the Pacific ocean.

Let the fragments of the English family be divided politically as they may, it is a sublime subject of study to scan their progress. If we return to the fountain from which, early in the seventeenth century, the stream of emigration commenced its motion and flowed into North America, and pursue its course and fluxes in various directions, what do we now behold? On North America, a nation spreading from the Atlantic towards the Pacific ocean, and already rising twenty millions, including the Canadian provinces, and quadrupling in every half century. In Australia and Polynesia anglo-Saxon colonial masses in creasing in magnitude and extending in every direction annually. The interests of the moment may induce us to regard such progress with some mixture of political jealousy, but when we dismiss from our minds the influences of the day, and extend our views to coming time, it is impossible to repress sentiments of gratulation when contemplating a revolution which changes savage barbarism for civilization over such immense regions of the earth.

Aurora, island, one of the New Hebrides, in the S. Pacific ocean. It is about 12 leagues long, but not above 5 broad. Lon. 168 24 E. lat. 15 8 S.—Tp. in Erie co., N. Y., 15 ms. SE. from Buffalo. Pop. 1820, 1,285.—Tp. and village on the eastern shore of Cayuga lake, in Cayuga co., 12 ms. SW. from Auburn.—Town and tp. Portage co., Ohio. Pop. 1810, 189; in 1820, 549. The town of Aurora is situated in the northern part of the co., on the road from Warren to Cleveland, at its crossing that from Akron to Painesville, 28 ms. westward from Warren, and 25 ms. SE. from Cleveland.—Town Dearborn co., Ia., 25 ms. W. from Cincinnati.

Aurungabad, considerable city of Asia, in the Deccan of Hindostan. It is but a modern city, owing its rise from a small town to the capital of Dowlatabad, to the great Aurungzebe, from whom it had its name. It is 260 ms. NE. of Bombay. Lon. 76 2 E. lat. 19 45 N.

Austerlitz, or Slawkow, town of Moravia. Near this place a great and decisive victory was obtained by the French, commanded by Bonaparte, over the Austrians and Russians, on the 2d of December, 1805, which led to the treaty of Presburg. It is 12 ms. E. of Bran, and 30 SSW. of Olmutz.—Town Columbia co., N. Y. Pop. in 1820, 2,335.

Austinburg, tp. Ashtabula co., Ohio. Pop. 1820, 445. The posttown of Austinburg is situated 6 ms. westward of Jefferson, the co. seat.

Austintown, tp. Trumbull co., Ohio. Pop. 1810, 440; in 1820, 1,720.

Austinville, village Wythe co., Va., on the E. side of Kanawha river, 24 ms. E. of Wythe courthouse, and 366 from W. C.

Australasia, name applied by some geographers to those islands that lie S. of the continent of Asia, as New Holland, New Guinea, New Britain, New Ireland, New Caledonia, New Zealand, and those of Solomon, Arroo, New Hebrides, &c. See article Oceana.

Austria, in German, Osterreich, Eastern Kingdom, the original centre around which the empire of that name has been formed. It is an archducal province, along both banks of the Danube, and subdivided into upper Austria and lower Austria, separated by the river Ens. It is about 140 ms. long, and with a mean width of 70 broad, containing 9,800 sq. ms. One-third of this extent consists of mountains, forests, lakes, and pasture grounds. It is bounded by Bavaria W., Styria S., Hungary E., and Bohemia and Moravia on the N.

The climate of the Duchy of Austria may be safely assumed as a scale by which to estimate that of central Europe. It lies from N. lat. 47 20 to 48 57. Lintz, the most westerly city, is about 1,000 feet above the level of the Black sea; and Hainburg, near Presburg, the most eastern, is 780 feet above the same level. On the banks of the Danube and the lower country, the heat is excessive in summer, and cold extreme in winter. Fahrenheit's thermometer frequently rising to 98°, and sinking below zero. The changes are rapid and severe. On the 25th of August, 1805, Fahrenheit's thermometer, at 3 in the afternoon, stood at 97, and at 3 in the ensuing morning, was down at 54°, at Vienna.

Austria is limited N. by the mountains of Bohemia, and S. by those of Styria. The whole country is uneven, the valleys productive in grain and fruits. The mean temperature of springs and deep wells at Vienna, from 44° to 46° of Fahrenheit. The air is considered healthy, though the winters are long, and liable to great vicissitudes. Agriculture generally commences in the latter part of March, and winter sets in about the beginning of November.

The rivers of Austria are, the Danube, which rolls its great volume through the whole duchy, and receives from the N. the Moravia, and the Kamp; and from the S. the Ens, Traun, Ips, and Tracon. There are a few lakes, but none of sufficient note to demand particular attention.

Austria, an empire of Europe, the name of which has been taken from one of its constituent provinces. The Austrian empire occupies the central, and comprises some of the finest parts of Europe.

The empire of Austria is situated in the centre of Europe, between 42 0 and 51 0 N. lat. and 9 0 and 27 0 E. lon. Its greatest length, from Sesto Calende, on the Ticino, in the duchy of Milan, to the confluence of the Porhose and the Dniester, at the eastern extremity of Galicia, is 850 English miles; and its breadth, from Trau, on the Adriatic sea, in Dalmatia, to the northern extremity of Bohemia, 650 ms. It is formed by the union of different countries, inhabited by people differing in race, language, religion, form of government, manners, customs, and institutions, who have no natural connexion with each other, and are held together by the single tie of a common sovereign and a central government.

The German geographers agree in dividing into four great portions all the countries of which the empire is composed, viz: 1st, the German provinces, 2d, the Polish provinces, 3d, the Hungarian provinces, among which they reckon not only Hungary, Transylvania, and the military borders, but also the kingdom of Dalmatia, 4th, the Italian provinces, in which they include only the Lombardo-Venetian kingdom. But the empire is actually divided into fifteen governments, which are subdivided into circles, provinces, counties, districts, &c.

This table exhibits the heterogeneous composition and vast magnitude of Austria amongst the States of Europe. Occupying the middle basin of the Danube and the north of Italy, this empire possesses the most fertile regions in Europe. The mountainous chains of Bohemia, Hungary, Poland, and the Alpine tracts, towards Turkey and Italy, abound in metals and minerals to such vast extent that Austria is justly considered as the most productive metallic region of not only Europe, but of the eastern continent; and, by a singular fortune, the salt mines of Wieliczka, in Poland, fell to Austria. The entire area now under the Austrian sceptre amounts to about 268,000 sq. ms. From the extreme eastern angle of Transylvania to the eastern boundary of Sardinia, in a direction nearly E. and W., Austria extends 900 ms., and in breadth, from Croatia to the northern part of Bohemia, 450 ms. The empire generally lies between 45 0 and 50 0 N. lat.

Austria is commonly considered as a Germanic State; but it is evident that, if the far greater part of its inhabitants are taken into view, it is much more Hungarian, and even more Italian than German. The Roman Catholic is the prevailing religion, though other sects exist partially, and are permitted, rather than tolerated, to exercise their rites in the empire of Austria.—See Archduchy of Austria, and Earth.

Aulauga, co. of Ala., having Alabama river or Montgomery SE. and S., Dallas SW., Cahaba W., Shelby N., and Coosa river NE. It is about 43 by 18 ms.; area 774; surface hilly, and soil varied in quality from first rate along the streams to extremely sterile ridges. Staple, cotton. Pop. in 1820, 3,853. Chief town, Washington. Central lat. 32 30 N., lon. W. C. 9 30 W.

AUTOCRAT, ruler who exercises self power, and used as a term to designate the utmost extent of arbitrary authority, restrained in its exercise by no law except that of individual will. The emperors of Russia are, however, the only European sovereigns who express such power by their title "Autocrate of all the Russias."

* Capital of the empire.

Autun, ancient town of Fr., the episcopal see of the dep. of Saone and Loire, in the late province of Burgundy; it contains a great many mines, and produces a great quantity of sulphur. It is 45 ms. E. by S. of Nevers, and 162 SE. of Paris. Lon. 4 23 E., lat. 46 57 N.

Auvergne, late province of Fr., 100 ms. in length and 75 in breadth, bounded on the N. by the Bourbonnois, on the E. by Forez and Velay, on the W. by Limosin, Querci, and La Marche, and on the S. by Rouergue and the Cevennes. It now forms the two departments of Cantal and Puy de Dome.

Auxerre, ancient town of Fr., in the dep. of Yonne, lately an episcopal see of Burgundy, advantageously situated on the Yonne. The inhabitants are computed at 16,000, and it contains many fountains and squares. It is 25 ms. S. of Sens. Lon. 3 39 E., lat. 47 48 N.

Auxonne, town of Fr., in the dep. of Cote d'Or, and late province of Burgundy, on the Soane, over which there is a bridge of 23 arches, and is 17 ms. E. of Dijon. Lon. 5 22 E., lat. 47 11 N.

Ava, large river which rises in Thibet, and crossing the kingdoms of Burmah and Pegu, falls into the bay of Bengal by several mouths.—Large city in Asia, formerly capital of the kingdom of Burmah, and seated on the river Ava. The inhabitants are well-shaped, have good features, and an olive complexion; but the women, who are small, are whiter than the men. Ava is 1,150 m. NE. of Calcutta. Lon. 96 40 E., lat. 21 0 N.—Long tract of coast in Asia, on the E. side of the Gulf of Bengal, extending from the S. extremity of Aracan to Cape Negrais, and divided from Pegu, on the E., by the river Ava.

Availou, ancient town of Fr., in the dep. of Yonne, and late province of Burgundy. It is 20 ms. SE. of Auxerre. Lon. 3 52 E., lat. 47 30 N.

Aveiro, town of Portugal, on the lake of Vouga, with a good harbor, 30 ms. S. of Oporto. Lon. 8 30 W., lat. 40 40 N.

Aveiron, dep. of Fr., including the late province of Rouergue.

Avellino, episcopal town of Naples, in Principato Citereore. It was almost ruined by an earthquake in 1694, and is 25 ms. E. of Naples. Lon. 15 0 E., lat. 40 50 N.

Avenche, town of Switzerland, in the canton of Bern, formerly capital of Switzerland, but now shows its former greatness only by its ruins. It is 15 ms. of Bern. Lon. 6 52 E., lat. 46 50 N.

Aventsville, village in Nash co., N. C., by the post road 77 ms. NE. from Raleigh.

Averack, fortified town of Germany, in the S. part of Suabia, and duchy of Wirtemberg, seated at the foot of a mountain on the rivulet Ernst, 15 ms. E. of Tubingen. Lon. 9 22 E., lat. 48 26 N.

Averno, a lake of Naples, in Terra di Lavoro, 2 ms. long and 1 broad. Virgil and others have said that the water was so bad that birds would drop dead when flying over it, and hence they call it the Lake of Hell; but it is now found to have no poisonous quality; for birds not only fly over it, but swim upon it. A little to the W. of the lake is a cave, where some pretend they went formerly to consult the Cumean Sybil. There are also some old walls, which some suppose to be the ruins of a temple of Apollo, and others of Pluto.

Aversa, town of Naples, with a bishop's see. It is seated in a very fine plain, 8 ms. N. of Naples. Lon. 14 20 E., lat. 40 59 N.

Averysboro', village of Cumberland co., N. C., standing on the E. side of the NW. branch of Cape Fear river, 35 ms. N. of Fayetteville, and 36 S. of Raleigh.

Aves, or the Islands of Birds, so called from the great number of birds that frequent them. They are 70 ms. E. by S. of Curacoa, and 1,000 N. of the coast of Terra Firma.

Avesnes, small but strong town of Fr., in the dep. of the North, and late province of Hainault, seated on the Hesper, 25 ms. E. of Cambray, and 100 NE. of Paris. Lon. 3 58 E., lat. 50 8 N.

Avila, ancient town of Spain, in Old Castile. It has a university, and in the middle of a fine large plain, surrounded with mountains, and covered with fruit trees and vineyards, 40 ms. NW. of Madrid. Lon. 4 35 W., lat. 40 40 N.

Aviles, town of Spain, in Asturias d'Oviedo, on the Bay of Biscay, 25 ms. N. of Oviedo. Lon. 6 5 W., lat. 43 27 N.

Avis, small town of Portugal, in Alentejo, on an eminence, with a castle near the river Avis. Hence the military order of the knights of Avis have their name. It is 65 ms. E. of Lisbon. Lon. 7 40, lat. 38 46 N.

Avon, river that rises in Wilts, Eng., and coasting the edge of the new forest, falls into the English channel at Christchurch bay, in Hampshire.—River that rises in Leicestershire, Eng., and, running SW. by Warwick and Eversham, falls into the Severn at Tewkesbury, in Gloucestershire.—

Louder, river that rises in Wilts, Eng., and, running W. to Bath, becomes navigable there, continues its course to Bristol, and falls into the Severn.—Town in Somerset co., Me. Pop. in 1810, 304; in 1820, 450.—Tp. in Ontario co., N. Y. Pop. in 1820, 1,933.—Town in Somerset co., Me., 100 ms. NE. from Portland.—Town in Lorrain co., Ohio, is situated in a township of the same name, the most northern of the county, 9 ms. NE. of Elyria, the county seat, and about an equal distance from Rockport, in Cuyahoga county.

Avoyelles, parish of Louisiana, having Opelousas, or St. Landre SW., Rapides NW., Red river NE., Mississippi and Atchafalaya rivers E. It is 35 by 20 ms.; area 700 sq. ms. The general surface of Avoyelles is a dead level, and annually overflowed alluvial plain; but the prairie or arable part of about 15 ms. by from 2 to 5, lies 20 or 25 feet above overflow, with a very productive soil. Staple cotton. No town of any consequence. Pop. in 1820, 2,245. Central lat. 31 0 N., lon. 15 0 W. from W. C.

Avranches, ancient town of Fr., in the dep. of the channel and late province of Normandy; the city is mean but is finely seated on an eminence, near which the sea runs about 1½ ms. from the ocean and 30 E. of St. Malo. Lon. 1 18 W., lat. 48 41 N.

Avocce, island of Denmark, eastward from Alsen, and in the little belt between Sleswich and Lange-land. Chief town Alroce. N. lat. 54 50, lon. 10 22 E. of London. Pop. of the island 8,000.

Awatsha-Bay, harbor of Kamtschatka, the safest and most extensive that has been discovered, and the only one in that part of the world that can admit vessels of a considerable burden. Lon. 158 48 E., lat. 52 51 N.

Awe Loch, one of the most beautiful lakes of Scotland, in Argyleshire, 30 ms. long, and, in some parts, above 2 broad. It contains many fine little islands, tufted with trees. The river Awe, the outlet of this lake, is discharged into Loch Etive, at the village of Bunawe.

Awlen, small imperial town of Suabia, on the river Cochen, 15 ms. W. of Oeting. It was taken by the French in August, 1796. Lon. 10 15 E., lat. 48 36 N.

Axbridge, corporate town in Somersetshire, Eng., on the river Ax, under the Mendip hills, where there is a good pasturage, 10 ms. NW. of Wells, and 132 W. of London. Lon. 3° W., lat. 51 17 N.

Axel, small fortified town of Dutch Flanders, seated in a morass, 10 ms. N. of Ghent. It was taken by the French in 1794. Lon. 3 45 E., lat. 51 15 N.

Axholm, island in the NW. part of Lincolnshire, Eng. It is formed by the Trent, Dun, and Idle, and is 10 ms. long and 5 broad. It is a rich tract, in which much flax is cultivated.

Axim, territory on the gold coast of Guinea, containing two or three villages, on the sea shore. The inhabitants are generally rich, and sell a great deal of gold to the English and Dutch. They are likewise industrious in fishing and tilling the ground. The excessive moisture of the climate renders it very unhealthy; but it produces plenty of rice, water-melons, lemons, oranges, &c. The Dutch have a fort and a factory here, called St. Anthony.

Axius river. See Vardari river and Macedonia.

Axminster, town of Devonshire, Eng., on the river Ax. It was a place of note in the time of the Saxons, but now contains only 200 houses. Here is a manufacture of broad and narrow cloths, and a famous one for carpets. It is 18 ms. E. by N. of Exeter, and 147 W. of London. Lon. 3 8 W., lat. 50 46 N.

Azum, formerly a large city, and once the capital of Abyssinia. Its ruins are very extensive, but consist altogether of public buildings. The present town of Axum contains about 600 houses, stands in a confined valley between two hills, near the ruins of the ancient city. Coarse cottons and excellent parchment are still made at this place. It is 125 ms. W. of the Red sea. Lon. 35 4 E., lat. 14 6 N.

Ayamonte, seaport of Spain, in Andalusia, with a strong castle built on a rock at the mouth of the river Guadiana, opposite Castro-Marino, 80 ms. NW. of Cadiz. Lon. 7 15 W., lat. 37 12 N.

Ayas, ancient Issus, city of Asiatic Turkey, in the province of Adana, the ancient Cilicia. It is situated on the gulf of Scanderoon, and by land round the head of the gulf about 50 ms. north-westward from the city of Scanderoon. N. lat. 36 45, lon. 35 45 E. of London.

Ayasaluck, town of Asiatic Turkey, on the gulf of Scala Nuova. This place by many regarded as standing on the site of the ancient Ephesus, but by others of good authority placed to the NE. of the ruins of Ephesus. It is situated to the southward of the river Cayster.

Aylesham, town in Norfolk, Eng., 12 ms. N.

of Norwich and 121 NE. of London. Lon. 1 17 E., lat. 52 53 N.

Aylettes, town, King William co., Va., 29 ms. NE. from Richmond and 120 S. from Washington.

Aymouth, town of Scot., in Berwickshire, 6 ms. N. of Berwick, formerly fortified, to curb the garrison of that town. Lon. 1 46 W., lat. 56 11 N.

Ayr, borough of Scot., capital of an extensive co. of the same name. It is situate on a sandy plain on both sides of the river Ayr, over which is a bridge of four arches. Ayr is 65 ms. SW. of Edinburgh. Lon. 4 39 E., lat. 55 30 N.

Ayrshire, co. of Scot., bounded on the W. and N. by the Frith of Clyde and Renfrewshire, on the E. by the counties of Lanark and Dumfries, and on the SE. and S. by the shires of Kircudbright and Wighton. It exhibits the shape of two wings, extending to the NW. and SW., and forming a vast bay at the mouth of the Frith of Clyde. Between its extreme points it is about 53 ms.; its greatest breadth is not quite 27. Its most northerly division is Cunningham, the NW. angle of which, though mountainous, is rich in pasture.

Azal, ancient Saba, a territory nominally of Abyssinia, on the Red sea. It was one of the places called from the Sabaie, an early trading people. On the map of Arabia attending Rees's Encyclopædia it is called Asab, and on the same map placed nearly opposite Mocha, in Arabia. N. lat. 13°, lon. 42 40 E. of London.

Azamor, small seaport of Africa, in the kingdom of Morocco; formerly very considerable, but ruined by the Portuguese in 1513. Lon. 7° W., lat. 32 50 N.

Azem. See Assam.

Azof. See Asoph.

Azores, or Western Islands, a group of islands in the Atlantic ocean. They are subject to a governor general, who resides at Angra, in Terceira. No poisonous animal, it is said, is to be found in the Azores. All of them are fertile, and enjoy a salubrious air, but are subject to violent earthquakes. See particular head of Azores in the general article Africa. Pop. of the Azores 23,000. See Africa, p. 32.

B.

Baal Beck, or the Valley of Baal, a fertile country of Asia, between Lebanon and Anti-Libanus, about 30 ms. from Damascus, where there was formerly a temple of the Sun, the ruins of which are still admired by travellers. Some geographers make it a part, and the others the whole, of Cælosyria; but all agree that it was one of the most pleasant spots on the earth.

Baba, village of A. T., in Natolia, celebrated for its knives and sword blades; it stands on a gulf of the same name on the archipelego. N. lat. 39 40, E. lon. 26 5.

Baba, or St. Mary, the ancient Lectum, cape of A. T., in Natolia. The village of Baba stands a short distance within the cape. It lies nearly N. from Mytilene, and is the SW. angle of ancient Troade.

Baba-Dagh, mountains of Asia Minor, extending from the eastern shore of the gulf of Scala Nu-va, eastwardly between the rivers Meander and Sarabat, ancient Hermus, about 200 ms., merging into the central mass of the great Taurus, near Angora. The chain now known as Baba-Dagh, comprised anciently the sub-chains of Tmolus, Mesoogis, and Sypylus. See Taurus.

Babelmandeb, or, as it ought to be written, Babel-mandeb, is, strictly speaking, the outlet of the Red sea. The island of Perim divides the straits into two unequal channels. According to Lord Valentia's chart, the whole distance between the opposing shores is only 15 British statute ms., and the island within 3 ms. from the African shore. N. lat. 12 40, E. lon. 43 33.

Babelmandeb, cape of Arabia, lying N. from the straits of that name, about 50 ms. S. from Mocha and 100 W. from Aden. It is the extreme southwestern angle of Asia. N. lat. 12 40, E. lon. 43 33. The meaning of this term is literally Port of Death, from the real or supposed dangers of its navigation.

Babingby, or Baburghley, village, Norfolk co., Eng. It is noted as being the place where Felix, the Burgundian, landed to introduce Christianity among the East Angles, and where their first church is said to have been erected. It is 4 ms. NE. from Lynn.

Babuyanes, cluster of 6 or 7 small islands in the N. Pacific ocean, 10 leagues N. of the isle of Luceonia. The chief produce is wax, ebony, bananas, coconas, and plantains.

Babylon, capital of the ancient kingdom of Babylonia, or Chaldea.—Ruins of, is supposed to be situated at lat. 32 34 N., and lon. 44 12½ E., at the higher extremity of the delta formed by the Tigris and Euphrates.

Baca, or Baza, town of Spain, in Granada, 15 ms. NE. of Guadix.

Bach, or Batha, town of Hungary, formerly the see of a bishop, seated near the Danube, 30 ms. ENE. of Fünfkirchen and 85 S. of Buda.

Bacharach, town of Fr., in the dep. of the Rhine and Moselle, lately of Germany, in the palatinate of the Rhine. It is famous for its wine, and stands at the foot of a mountain near the Rhine, 24 ms. S. by E. of Coblentz.

Баша, or Bashaw, Turkish term or title for superior officers, governors of cities or provinces, viziers, &c. It is rather odd that this word which half a century ago was spelled in European books commencing with B, is now almost invariably commenced with P, whilst the latter letter a Turk cannot pronounce; and hence it is that this nation supply the Greek termination polis in names of places by boli.

Bachelors, tp., Oxford co., Maine. Pop. in 1810, 91.

Bachlowitz. See Buchlowitz.

Bachouanon, river of U. C., falls into Lake Superior about midway between the falls of St. Mary and Red river.

Bacheserai, town of Russia, in the province of Taurida. It was lately the residence of the Tartarchs of the Crimea. It is 70 ms. S. of Precop. Lon. 35 40 E., lat. 45 20 N.

Bacarvach, town of Germany, in the palatinate of the Rhine, formerly imperial. It is famous for its wines, and is seated on the Rhine, 20 ms. W. of Mentz. Lon. 7 52 E., lat. 49 55 N.

Bachian, one of the Molucca islands, in the E. Indies, which produces cloves. It is very fruitful, and belongs to the Dutch. Lon. 125 5 E., lat. 25' S.

Back Creek, town, Cecil co., Md., 5 ms. S. from Elkton.

Back Creek Valley, town, Frederick co., Va., 25 ms. NW. from Winchester.

Badajoz, town of Spain, capital of Estramadura, and a bishop's see. It is famous for a bridge built by the Romans over the Guadiana. It is a frontier town towards Portugal, and well fortified. It is 14 ms. E. of Elvas and 175 S by W. of Madrid. Lon. 6 40 W., lat. 38 45 N.

Badakshan, city of Usbec Tartary, capital of the province of Kilan. Gold, silver, and rubies are found in its vicinity; and caravans pass by this city to Cabul and China. It is seated on the Har-rat, or Amu, in a branch of the Beloor mountains, 320 ms. E. of Balk. Lon. 70 35 E., lat. 36 35 N.

Baden, town of Suabia, capital of a margravate of the same name, with a castle on the top of a mountain, where the prince often resides. It is remarkable for its baths, whence it takes its name; and is seated near the Rhine, 4 ms. S. of Bastadt. Lon. 8 14 E., lat. 48 50 N.

Baden, grand duchy of Germany, extending from Constance, on the lake of that name, down the Rhine, below Manheim and the mouth of the Neckar. The duchy lies in the form of the letter L; the base to the southward, about 90 ms. along the Rhine, opposite the Swiss cantons, and thence down the Rhine 150 ms. The breadth nowhere reaches 40 ms.; area about 6,000 sq. ms. On the S. and W. it is in all its length bounded by the Rhine, on the N. it has Ducal Hesse, and on the E. Wurtemberg and Hohenzollern Heckengen. The slope of the country is in all its length towards the Rhine, separated from Wurtemberg by a mountain chain, and drained by the numerous confluent of the Neckar and other streams flowing in deep valleys into the Rhine. It may be noted as interesting that the extreme source of the Danube is at the village of Furtwangen in Baden, very nearly on lat. 48°, and very nearly E. from Old Brisac on the Rhine, distant about 30 ms.

In latitude, Baden lies between 47 35 and 49 50 N. Baden is not a recent government; it was a margravate as early as A. D. 1000, created an electorate in 1802, and soon after a grand duchy, or, in more distinct terms, a monarchy of Europe as independent in itself as Prussia, Bavaria, or even Austria. Capital Carlsruhe. It is divided into the following circles:

Circles.	Pop.	Chief towns	Pop.
Mayn and Tauter	105,000	Wertheim	3,000
Neckar	189,000	Manheim	22,000
Murg and Phinz	245,000	Carlsruhe	19,000
Kinzig	133,000	Offenburg	3,000
Friesam and Weisen	275,000	Friburg	10,000
Danube and Constance	181,000	Constance	5,000
	1,143,000

Distributive population of the grand duchy near, by the table, to 200 to the sq. m., and now, as the element is of several years anterior date, perhaps exceeding that density.

Baden, ancient and handsome town, in a co. of the same name in Switzerland. It is remarkable for its baths, mentioned by the inhabitants under the names of Aquæ and Thermæ Helveticæ, and for the treaty concluded here in 1714, between Germany and Spain. It is seated on the Limmat, 10 ms. NW. of Zurich. Lon. 8 20 E., lat. 47 25 N. — Neat little walled town of Austria, famous for its hot baths, seated on the river Sucehat, 15 ms. SW. of Vienna. Lon. 16 25 E., lat. 48 1 N.

Badenweiler, town of Suabia, belonging to the lower margrave of Baden, seated near the Rhine, 10 ms. SE. of Friburg. Lon. 7 52 E., lat. 48 1 N.

Badgeworth, village in Gloucestershire, Eng., remarkable for a spring of mineral water called Cold Pool, nearly the same as those of Cheltenham. It is 7 ms. NE. of Gloucester.

Baeza, town of Spain, in Andalusia. It is the see of a bishop, and has a university; seated on the Guadalquivir, 15 ms. NE. of Jaen. Lon. 3 18 W., lat. 37 45 N.

Baffa, ancient Paphos, town and seaport on the western shore of the island of Cyprus, situated 70 ms. nearly due W. from Larnika. N. lat. 34 54, lon. 32 33 E. of London. See Baffo.

Bafing, river of Africa, one of the principal confluent rivers of the Senegal; rises in the Kong mountains N. lat. 11°, and flowing a little W. of N. upwards of 200 ms., joins the Senegal. The course of the Bafing lies between 10 and 11° W. lon. It forms the eastern boundary of the kingdom of Bambook.

Baffin's bay, large bay to the N. of Hudson's bay, said to be discovered in 1662, by Baffin, an Englishman, who attempted to find a NW. passage that way to the South sea. Mr. Pinkerton had the temerity to doubt the existence of this bay, but recent researches, particularly by Captain Parry, have established the accuracy of Baffin, and added much to the extent of this inland sea. Baffin's bay, or sea, lies within the arctic circle, and is upwards of 1,000 ms. long, with a mean width exceeding 250. It reaches to near N. lat. 78°. In 1818, Captain Ross completed the circumnavigation of Baffin's bay, and determined its northern extremity to be the bottom of Smith's sound, N. lat. 77 45, and, as laid down by Tanner, almost exactly on the meridian of Washington city.

Baffo, considerable town in the island of Cyprus, with a fort near the ancient Paphos.

Bagdad, falsely supposed to be ancient Babylon, a populous city, capital of Irac Arabia, seated on the Tigris, and inhabited by Christians, Turks, &c. Bagdad was founded in A. D. 762, by Abu Jaafar al Mansur, the second Abasside Khalif, who removed the seat of the Sarazen empire to this new capital. It is now the seat of a Turkish Bashaw. It is very remarkable that during all the revolutions of ages, from the most remote antiquity, a great capital has existed in the lower part of the basin of the Euphrates. Bagdad was built on the Tigris, about 70 ms. almost directly N. from the ruins of Babylon, and about 20 ms. above Seleucia, and at a point where the Euphrates and Tigris approach so near each other as about 16 English ms., but again recede from each other and do not unite until having each flowed by comparative courses something above 200 ms. Though fallen from its former magnitude, Bagdad still shares with Bassora as a commercial depot. N. lat. 33 20, lon. 44 42. Distant from Bassorah 250 ms., and about 500 due E. from Damascus.

Baglana, or Bocklana, country of Hindoostan, in the Deccan, which extends from the Surat river to Poonah, and is enclosed by a ridge of mountains, part of the Gauts. It is bounded on the N. by Candeish, on the SW. by Visiapour, and on the SE. by Dowlatabad.

Bagnara, seaport of Naples, 8 ms. S. of Palma. In this town 3,017 persons perished by the dreadful earthquake in 1783. Lon. 16 8 E., lat. 38 15 N.

Bagnarea, town of Italy, with a bishop's see, in the patrimony of St. Peter, 5 ms. S. of Orvieto. Lon. 12 28 E., lat. 42 36 N.

Bagnares, town of Fr., in the dep. of the Upper Pyrenees, and late province of Bigorre. It lies at the foot of the Pyrenees, on the river Adour. It is much frequented on account of its hot mineral waters, and is 10 ms. SE. of Tarbes. Lon. 0 12 E., lat. 43 3 N.

Bagnols, town of Fr., in the dep. of Hérault, and late province of Languedoc, near the river Cese, 8 ms. SW. of Pont St. Esprit. It has a handsome square and two fountains, which rise in the middle of the town. Lon. 4 43 E., lat. 44 10 N.

Bahama, or Lucaya Islands, situated between 22° and 27° N. lat., and 73° and 81° W. lon. They extend along the coast of Florida to Cuba, and are said to be 500 in number, some of them only mere rocks, but 12 of them are very large, fertile, and in nothing different from the soil of Carolina. These islands were the first fruits of Columbus's discoveries, but they are all uninhabited, except Providence, and are subject to the English, to whom they were not known till 1667, when Captain Seyle being driven among them in his passage to Carolina, gave his name to one of them, and, being a second time driven upon it, called it Providence. The cotton seed has been recently introduced into these islands from Georgia, and is well adapted to the soil and climate.

Bahama Channel, between Florida and the Bahama islands. The currents here set, but with varying force, continually N.

Bahar, country of Hindoostan proper, bounded on the W. by Allahabad and Oude, on the N. by Napaul, on the E. by Bengal, and on the S. by Orissa. It is subject to the English East India Company, and most of the saltpetre they export is manufactured in this province, of which Patna is the capital.

Bahar-Nagash, "The King of the Sea," country of Africa, along the Red sea, in Habesh, or eastern Abyssinia. It formerly extended from Suakim to S. of the straits of Bab-el-Mandeb, or from lat. 12° to 21° N., which, following the general course of the intervening coast, exceeds 700 ms. — See Hubesh.

BAHAR, BAHAÏRE, or BARRE, a weight used in part of the East Indian islands, such as the Moluccas, Ternate, and some others; it is of two kinds, the greater used for pepper, cloves, ginger, nutmegs, and other more gross merchandise. This weight is equal to 524 lbs. 9 oz. avoirdupoise. The lesser bahar is equal to 437 lbs. 9 oz. avoirdupoise, and is used to weigh quicksilver, vermilion, ivory, and silk, and other more costly material.

Baheren Island lies in the Gulf of Persia, and was once famous for its pearl fishery. Baherin, Bahrain, or Baherim, signifies two seas, and is the name of the group of islands so very vaguely designated above. They are situated in the western part of the Persian Gulf, opposite to Lasha, in Arabia. N. lat. 27 0, E. lon. 49 0. They are numerous, though small, individually. The pearl fishery, for which these islands have been celebrated, though declined in importance, is still carried on by the Arab inhabitants.

Bahia Honda, port of the N. side of the island of Cuba. Lat. 22 58 N., lon. 6 6 W. of W. C.; 60 ms. SW. by W. from Havannah.

Bahia de Todos Santos, province of Brazil, on the Atlantic ocean. St. Salvador is the capital.

Bahia.—See St. Salvador.

Bar el-Abiad, or White river, the western and main stream which forms the Egyptian Nile.—See article Nile.

Bahus, strong town of Sweden, capital of a government of the same name, on a rock in an island, 10 ms. N. of Gottenbrng. Lon. 11 42 E., lat. 57 52 N.

Baia, an inconsiderable town of Naples, in Terra di Lavoro; it was famous, in the time of the Romans, for its hot baths and elegant palaces. Its splendor may be inferred from its innumerable ruins, heaps of marble, mosaics, stucco, and other precious fragments of taste. It is seated on the bay of Naples, 12 ms. W. of Naples. Lon. 14 5 E., lat. 40 51 N.

Baja, populous town of Hungary, on the Danube, 35 ms. NW. of Esseek. Lon. 20 0 E., lat. 46 10 N.

Baikal, great lake in Siberia, in the province of Irkutsk, 220 ms. long, and 80 broad. The Baikal is out of N. A., the most extensive collection of fresh water known. Like the higher lakes of the Canadian sea, the Baikal is comparatively excessively deep, and appears as an immense cavern or basin in the mountains of central Asia. Its range is from SW. to NE., about 200 ms. long, with a mean width of 40. It is in relative geographic position and extent very similar to Lake Erie. The Angara river is discharged from the NW. angle of the Baikal, which also receives into its SW. extremity a stream of great magnitude, the Selenga. The latter is formed by numerous branches issuing from the Altaian mountains; which, uniting after a comparative course of 500 ms., falls into the Baikal, from which this vast mass of water is again discharged by the Angara. The outlet of the Baikal seems to have been rifted through the mountains, and presents a scene of terrific grandeur. The channel is about a mile wide, interspersed with rugged fragments of rock, over which the immense cataract is poured with appalling velocity. In grandeur, sublimity, and magnitude, the passage of the Angara from the Baikal is not, it is probable, equalled by any other scene on the Eastern continent.

The water of this inland sea is extremely limpid, and in the abundance of seals along its shores affords a very remarkable anomaly in animal life;

this being the only region of the earth where these creatures are found at any considerable distance from salt water. The existence of the seal in the Baikal is one among the many proofs of a gradual recession of the oceanic mass. The Baikal lies between the parallels of 51° and 55° N. lat. Its shores exhibit a congeries of mountains.

Baikal Mountains.—These rugged ridges are evidently a part of the vast system of the Altai, and extend from SW. to NE., nearly parallel to the Baikal sea; W. of which commences an immense marshy steppe or plain, which spreads towards the Obj over the sources of the Janissey. On all other sides the mountains rise to a great height; some peaks reaching the region of perpetual snow. They are composed partly of granite and partly of silicious breccia and limestone. Coal is found amongst their lower valleys.

Baileysburg, town in Surry co., Va., 72 ms. SE. from Richmond.

Bailleul, town of Fr., in the dep. of the North, and late French Flanders, 9 ms. SW. of Ypres. Lon. 2 55 E., lat. 50 45 N.

Bainbridge, tp and vill. in Chenango co., N. Y. Pop. in 1820, 2,290.—Tp. in Geauga co., Ohio. Pop. in 1820, 199. For town of Bainbridge, Geauga co., see Bissels.—Tp. and town in Ross co., Ohio. Pop. in 1820, 146. This town is situated near the falls of Paint creek, on the main road from Chillicothe to Maysville, 18 ms. SW. of the former, and 56 ms. NE. from the latter. It is a flourishing place in regard to manufactures and commerce.—Village on the left bank of Tennessee river, opposite the lower extremity of Muscle shoals, and 5 ms. above Florence, in Franklin co., Ala.

Bain Gonga, or Bain river, river of Hindoostan, which rises near the Nerbudda, runs S. through Berar, and, after a course of near 400 ms., unites with the Gollavery, within the hills that bound the British Circars.

Bakerstown, town, Alleghany co., Pa., 14 ms. from Pittsburg, on the Butler road.

Bakichi-Serai. See Baccheserai.

Baku, town of Persia, in the province of Schirvan, the most commodious haven of the Caspian sea, on the west coast of which it is situated. The number of shoals and sand banks renders the entrance somewhat difficult. Baku is a fortress, surrounded by high brick walls, 300 ms. south of Astracan. Lon. 49 15 E., lat. 40 2 N.

Bala, town in Merionethshire. It is 50 ms. SSE. of Holyhead, and 105 NW. of London. Lon. 3 35 W., lat. 52 50 N.

Balaclava, ancient Symbolon, seaport of the Crimea, which, after flourishing some ages under the Genoese, fell into the possession of the Turks, who effected its ruin. It is now recovering under the Russian Government. The haven is secure, but entrance narrow. Pop. 3,000. N. lat. 44 38, E. lon. 33 44.

Balagat, or Balaghaut, province in the Decan of Hindoostan. It consists of a vast extent of fertile and populous plains, supported in the nature of a terrace, by a stupendous wall of mountains, called the Gauts, which rises abruptly from the low country called the Concan. This tract is so elevated, that the air is cool and pleasant. It extends through the peninsula to the southern extremity of Mysore.

Balaguer, fortified town of Spain, in Catalonia, on the river Segra, at the foot of a craggy rock, 75 ms. NW. of Barcelona. Lon. 1 1 E., lat. 41 55 N.

Balaruc, town of Fr., near the road from Montpellier to Toulouse, noted for its bath.

Balasure, seaport to the NW. of the bay of Bengal. The inhabitants make stuffs of silk, cotton, and a sort of grass. It is 124 ms. SW. of Calcutta. Lon. 6 46 E., lat. 21 26 N.

Balastro, episcopal town of Spain, in Arragon, on the river Vero, 42 ms. NE. of Saragossa. Lon. 0 27 E., lat. 42 8 N.

Balbec, city of Asia, in Syria, anciently called Heliopolis. It is situated at the foot of Anti-Lebanon, precisely on the last rising ground, where the mountain terminates in a plain. On the east side are the remains of ancient ruins, of whose magnificence it is difficult to give an adequate idea. Among the most magnificent are the ruins of the Temple of the Sun, for a particular description of which we refer our readers to Mr. Wood, and Mr. Dawkins, and to Volney. It is 37 ms. N. of Damascus. Lon. 37 20 E., lat. 34 22 N. Baalbec, or Balbec, is one or the places to which the primitive name is now applied. The Greek name Heliopolis is merely a translation of Baalbec, and both mean City of the Sun.

Balch, town of Usbec Tartary, on the frontiers of Persia, 200 ms. S. of Bokhara. Lon. 69° E., lat. 37 20 N.

Balcany Falls, town, Rockingham co., Va., 162 ms. NW. from Richmond.

Baldeagle, town, Lycoming co., Pa.; by the postroad, 126 ms. from Harrisburg.—A mountain of Pa., between the main branch of Susquehanna and the west branch, separating Northumberland and Columbia from Lycoming, and ex-

Ballstown Springs, or Ballstown Spa, village Saratoga co., N. Y., remarkable as being the site of very celebrated mineral springs. These waters are within the precincts of the town, and are eminent for their medicinal virtues. There are several bathing houses erected, and the accommodations for visitors are very convenient and splendid. The number of visitants is considerable; in 1821 they amounted to near 3,000.—Village Saratoga co., about 4 ms. from Ballstown Spa. Persons directing letters to either of these places ought to be very careful to designate which, as they are frequently confounded, and each possesses its own post office.

Ballsville, village Powhattan co., Va.

Baltic, large sea between Denmark and Sweden to the W., and Germany, Poland, and Russia, to the E., from which run the Gulfs of Bothnia, Finland, Riga, and Dantzic. It is remarkable that this sea neither ebbs nor flows, and a current always sets through the sound into the ocean. Yellow amber is found on the coast.

The Baltic is the Venedicus Sinus of Ptolemy, the Mare Suvicum of Tacitus, and the Sinus Codanus of Pliny. In the countries contiguous to its shores its ancient name was Variatzkohie Moré, in Russia it is Baltiskoe Morée, and in Swedish Oster Sjow.

There are many very important particulars relating to the Baltic, which demand a much more ample description than is contained in the original article. This great inland sea commences with the narrow strait between Elsineur, in Denmark, and Helsinborg, in Sweden. The depth of water is 10 fathoms directly opposite the castle of Cronenburg. The strait is particularly called The Sound. The Baltic is again connected with the Cattegat by the Great Belt, between the islands of Zealand and Funen, and by the Little Belt, between Funen and Jutland. Of these passes, the Sound is the most frequented, most direct, and deepest channel; it, however, shallows within Cronenburg so much that about 10 ms. SE. from Copenhagen it contains but 4 fathoms. Within the bar it again deepens, and, gradually spreading between Germany on the S., Russia E., and Sweden W., presents a sheet of water from 100 to 150 ms. wide, and 200 in length. This is the southern Baltic, from which turns, almost at right angles, its northern extension between Sweden and Russia. The latter, in its northern part, the Gulf of Bothnia, reaches above N. lat. 65 0. From the northern Baltic are protruded, eastward, the Gulfs of Riga and Finland. Into the former is discharged the Dwina, the latter receives the Neva. From the southern mouth of the Little Belt to that of the Vistula is 400 ms., the Oder entering about midway. From the mouth of the Vistula to that of the Tornea, 800 ms. Thus the entire length of the Baltic, curving from Jutland to the head of the Gulf of Bothnia, is 1,200 ms. The average width about 120 ms., including all its gulfs. This yields an area of 150,000 sq. ms. The mean depth of the Baltic does not exceed 50 fathoms, and near any of its shores it falls far short of that depth. The water is merely brackish, and does not contain more than one-thirtieth part of salt, (muriate of soda.) This sea has no tide.

The Baltic and its gulfs, as recipients, receive from Germany the Oder, from Prussia the Vistula, from Russia the Memel, Dwina, Narova, Neva, Kymen, Kume, and Ulea, and from Sweden the Tornea, Kalix, Lulea, Pithea, Skillistea, Umea, Windel, Angerman, Indahl, and Westerdahl, with the outlets of the Maelar and Wetter lakes. Within this range are included, in Germany, great part of Holstein, Mecklenburg, and Brandenburg, all Pomerania, Lusatia, and Silesia; in Poland, all Polish Prussia and part of Austrian Poland; in Russia, all Corland, Riga, Revel, Pskey, Polotsk, St. Petersburg, Viburg, Finland, and part of Russian Poland, Smolensk, Novogorod, Olonetz, and Russian Lapland; in Sweden, Tornea, Lulea, Pitea, Bothnia, Norland, Sweden Proper, and Gothland. In the Baltic are the islands of Zealand, Funen, Langeland, Falster, Laland, Femeren, Rugen, Bornholm, Oland Gothland, Oesel, Dago, and Aland. Upon the Baltic basin exist more than 20,000,000 inhabitants. This mass exceeds one-half the human species above N. lat. 55°. This circumstance is altogether the most important in comparative geography. Here we find numerous and highly civilized nations in latitudes which, in America and Asia, are exposed to almost continual winter. This remarkable region extends from the source of the Oder, N. lat. 49°, to those of the Tornea, 68°, through 19° of lat., 1,300 ms. From W. to E., 700 ms. from the Dofrine mountains to the eastern confluent of the Onega lake. The mean width about 700, giving an area of 900,000 sq. ms. Exclusive of the Baltic and Lakes Ladoga, Onega, and other water surfaces, the habitable superficies of the basin of the Baltic is very nearly 700,000 sq. ms.

The subsidence of the water of the Baltic remained long a contested subject, but appears to be now registered amongst the authenticated facts in physical geography. The following extract from the Mechanics' Magazine, Glasgow, in Scotland, appeared in the National Intelligencer September, 1825:

"A singular and interesting fact has been ascertained respecting the level of the Baltic. It was suggested that the waters of this sea are gradually sinking; but a memoir in the Swedish Transactions, for 1823, has put the change beyond question. From lat. 56° to 63° the observations show a mean fall of 1½ foot in 40 years, 4-10 of an inch annually, or 3 feet 10 inches in a century. The Baltic is very shallow at present, and if the waters continue to sink as they have done, Revel, Abo, and a hundred other ports, wil, by and by, become inland towns; the Gulfs of Bothnia and Finland, and ultimately the Baltic itself, will be changed into dry land." See Earth.

Baltimore, New, tp. Green co., N. Y. Pop. 1820, 2,036.—Town of Ireland, in the co. of Cork, seated on a headland which runs into the sea 9 ms. NE. of Cape Clear. Lon 9 14 W. lat. 51 24 N.—Co. Md., having Anne Arundel SW., Frederick NW., York co., Pa., N., Hartford E., and the bay of Chesapeake SE. It is about 30 ms. in length, and 25 mean width, area 750 sq. ms. The face of the country is very pleasantly diversified by hill and dale, and is well wooded and watered. The soil is good for grazing, for the cultivation of small grain, and for orchards. Chief town Baltimore. Central lat. 39° N. lon. Pop. 1820, 33,354, exclusive of the city.

Baltimore, city and port of entry, Baltimore co., Md., situated on the N. side of the Patapsco river, 14 ms. above North Point, 38 NE. from Washington, and 100 SW. from Philadelphia. Lat. 39 17 N. lon. W. C. 0 27 E. *

This city is built at the head of a bay which extends from the Patapsco river. Its harbor is spacious and convenient. Below the city the bay narrows to a very confined strait, which is amply commanded by Fort McHenry. Jones's falls creek divides the city and harbor into two sections. The lower part of the city is called Fell's Point, to which vessels of 600 tons can ascend, but the water shallows so rapidly that at the city the depth is insufficient for any of heavier draught than 200. Baltimore is extremely well situated for commercial connexions with the valley of Ohio; it commands the trade of Md., more than one-half of that of Pa., and a part of that of N. Y. Having the advantage of climate, the harbor of Baltimore is not so liable to obstruction from ice as that of Philadelphia. Its relative amount of shipping places it the third in rank in the United States.

The edifices necessary for the transaction of judicial and commercial business are splendid and convenient, whilst the interests of science and elegant amusements have met their due share of encouragement. The city contains a State penitentiary, almshouse, a court-house and jail, a custom-house, an exchange, a museum, theatre, and hospital. Besides the foregoing, there are in this city 3 market houses, 10 banks, and upwards of 30 places of public worship. Washington's monument, erected of marble at the N. end of Charles street, on an elevated spot, is a very sublime production of art. It is 163 feet in height, exclusive of the statue of Washington, which crowns the edifice. The monument, erected to the memory of the men who fell in defence of the city, on the 12th and 13th of September, 1814, is a handsome structure in N. Calvert street.

The literary institutions of this city are respectable. In 1807 a medical college was founded, which subsequently received the title of the University of Maryland, and embraces the ordinary pursuits connected with such an institution. St. Mary's college possesses a fine library, with a chemical and philosophical apparatus, and is supported by about 150 students. Baltimore college has about 50 students.

The increase of Baltimore has been fully commensurate with the advantages of its local position. In 1790 it contained 13,503 inhabitants, and in 1800, 26,514. The following table exhibits its subsequent advance:

Population in 1810—
Free white males	-	-	14,793
Free white females	-	-	13,104
All other persons, except Indians, not taxed.	-	-	3,973

The preceding shows an increase of very near 758 per cent. in a period of 50 years.

Baltimore, tp., Sussex co., Del., including the hundreds of Daysborough, Indian river, Lewes, Rehoboth, and Broad Kiln. Pop. 1810, 10,107; Baltimore alone, in 1820, 2,057.—Fine town in the northern part of Fairfield co., O., on Walnut creek, and on both sides of the Ohio canal, 24 ms. a little S. of E. from Columbus, and 9½ very nearly due N. of Lancaster. The village occupies comparatively high ground, and has a pleasant aspect. Pop. 550.

BAM, or BAUM, in geography, when found as an initial syllable, signifies wood, from the Teutonic baum, wood. From the same root comes beam.

Bumbara, city of Africa, on the Niger, and capital of a kingdom of the same name. N. lat. 14 10, W. lon. 2 40.

Bambarra, country of Africa, on both sides of the Joliba or Niger river; bounds uncertain. Sego, the capital, stands on the north or left side of the Niger, and, as laid down from Park, at N. lat. 13 40, lon. 5 30 W. of London. As laid down by Tanner, about 700 ms. NNE. from Monrovia, in Liberia.

Bamberg, large handsome town of Franconia, formerly imperial, but now capital of a bishopric of the same name, of considerable extent, with a university. It is seated at the confluence of the Maine and Rednitz, 35 ms. N. of Nuremberg. Lon. 11 7 E., lat. 50 2 N. Bamberg now belongs to Bavaria, and forms two baillages in the circle of the upper Maine.—Town of Bohemia, seated at the foot of a mountain, 30 ms. S. of Glatz. Lon. 16 50 E., lat. 49 55 N.

Bamberg, canal. "The canal commences at Bamberg, whence it runs south, and parallel with the little river Regnitz, or Rezat, a tributary stream of the Mayn, and, passing by the industrious town of Nuremberg, reaches the waters of the Altmuhl, which flows into the Danube at Kelheim. The whole distance from Bamberg to Kelheim is about 112 English miles. The Altmuhl has been deepened, embanked, and furnished with locks, by means of which facilities it has been rendered navigable to Dietfurth, where the excavation of the artificial canal was commenced at this end. The summit level is at Newmarket, on the Sultz, a small stream which flows into the Altmuhl. The canal is here 300 feet above the level of the Danube at Kelheim. Its dimensions are 54 Bavarian feet at the top and 34 at the bottom. It has 94 locks, each being from 88 to 108 feet long and 16 feet wide, several well-built viaducts, and traverses near Niederoelsbach, a tunnel 900 feet in length. The difficulties presented by the natural features of the country have been overcome with admirable skill by the able engineers employed on the work, every part of which has been constructed with the greatest strength and beauty." This brief account of a work, as far as history informs us, projected by Charlemagne upwards of 1,000 years past, and completed within the current century, was extracted from a letter, dated Berlin, January 25, 1843, from Mr. Henry Wheaton to Francis Markoe, jr., corresponding secretary of the National Institute, Washington city.—Vide National Intelligencer, May 6, 1843.

Bambook, kingdom of Western Africa, between Bafing and Faleme rivers. N. lat. 14°, W. lon. 8°. About 400 ms. NE. from Sierra Leone.—Town and kingdom of interior Senegambia, W. Africa, of which, like nearly all the interior part of that continent, we have but very imperfect knowledge. On our maps, the town of Bambook is placed at N. lat. 14 20, lon. 10 30 W. of London, and almost exactly E. of Cape Verd, and about 600 ms. very nearly due north from Monrovia, in Liberia.

Bamiyan, ancient city of Asia, situated in the mountains of Hindo Kho, N. lat. 34 20, E. lon. 67°, 250 ms. NW. by W. from Attock. This is the sacred place, the Jerusalem of the sect of Buddh. In Sanscrit it is called Vami-nagari, or Vamigran, and is a derivation from Vamiyan, "the most beautiful and excellent city." This interesting scene of ruin lies between Caboul and Bahlac, distant about 150 ms. from the former. It is represented in the books of the Buddhists as the seat of purity. They contend that it was built by the patriarch Shem, from whom they sometimes call it Shem-Bamiyan. This patriarch they suppose to have been an incarnation of Vichnou—an opinion in which they are followed by the Brahmins. Every appearance in and around Bamiyan corresponds to support the veracity of Hindoo literature. An air of extreme antiquity appears on all sides. Colossal statues, massy walls, and immense palaces, those monuments of a primitive age, are spread over the now desolate space. Bamiyan and Bahlac, or Balk, are often confounded by Persian authors, who call the first Balk-Bamiyan, and the second Balk-Bochara. Through the district of Bamiyan flows a pleasant though scanty stream, which rises in the adjacent hills, and falls into a lake from which issue four rivers—the Hirmend, the Landhi-Sindh, the rivers of Bahlac and Conduz. See Brewster's Ency., art. Bamiyan.

Bampton islands, lat. 18 55 S., lon. 158 50 E., a group of small islands in the Pacific ocean, about 500 ms. NE. by E. of Cape Townsend, of Australia, and 300 NW. by W. from North Cape, of New Caledonia.

Bampton, town of Oxfordshire, Eng., near the Thames, 12 ms. W. of Oxford, and 70 W. by N. of London. Lon. 1 25 W., lat. 51 46 N.—Town in Devonshire, Eng., in a bottom surrounded by hills. It is 14 ms. NNE. of Exeter, and 163 W. by S. of London. Lon. 3 38 W., lat. 51 2 N.

BAN, from an old German word baron, answering very nearly to the English term proclamation, and by inflexion proscription and banishment. Indeed, the latter term is clearly derived from "ban," and from which banns of marriage, arriere ban. In the German empire, to put one of its princes to the ban, was to declare by proclamation that he was deprived of his dignities; and to put a city to the ban, was by the same means to declare it deprived of its rights; and "bans of marriage" means a proclaimed intention to marry.

Banbury, borough in Oxfordshire, Eng., on the Charwell, 75 ms. NNW. of London. Lon. 1 11 W., lat. 52 4 N.

Banca, island of Asia, in the East Indies, on the east coast of Sumatra, with a town and strait of the same name. Lon. 105 50 E., lat. 2 35 S. The straits of Banca extend between Banca and Sumatra, directly north from the straits of Sunda.

Bancalis, seaport, on the east coast of Sumatra, where the Dutch have a settlement. It is 130 ms. W. of Malacca. Lon. 100 7 E., lat. 1 15 N.

Bancock, town of Asia, in the kingdom of Siam, with a fort, once in the possession of the French, who were expelled in 1688. It is 17 ms. N. of the sea, and 40 S. of Siam. Lon. 101 5 E., lat. 13 35 N.

Banda, the general name of five islands in the East Indies, of which Banda is the chief. These islands are remarkable for the production of nutmeg and mace; have been subject to the Dutch ever since 1609, when they expelled both the English and the natives. They are all very small, the largest being scarcely 26 ms. in length, and are subject to earthquakes. Banda is 75 ms. SE. of Amboyna. Lon. 128 5 E., lat. 4 50 S.

Banda Oriental, or Uruguay, country of South America, lying between the Atlantic ocean and Uruguay river, and so called from its relative position with the former. The Banda Oriental is bounded W. by the Uruguay, S. by the Rio-de-la-Plata, E. by the Atlantic ocean, and N. by an indefinite limit along the Brazilian provinces. This fine region stretches from N. to S. 280 ms., or from S. lat. 31° to 35°, with a mean width of 250 ms.; the area about 70,000 sq. ms. It is in a peculiar manner supplied with navigable bays and rivers. Beside the Atlantic coast and the vast estuary of the Plate river, the western limit of the Banda Oriental is formed by the noble volume of the Uruguay, and its central parts are drained by the Rio Negro and the southern branch of the Rio Grande. Chief city Montevideo.

Bander Congo, seaport of Persia, seated on the Persian gulf, 80 ms. W. of Gombroon. Lon. 55 8 E., lat. 27 10 N.

Banderas, bay of Mexico, on the Pacific ocean. Lat. 20 30 N.

Bandon Bridge, large town of Ireland, in the co. of Cork. It stands on Bandon river, 15 ms. SW. from Cork, and contains a pop. of 12,000. N. lat. 51 36, W. lon. 8 48.

Bandora, town of Hindoostan, and the capital of Salsette, an island separated from Bombay by a narrow channel. Lon. 72 40 E., lat. 19 N.

Banff, seaport, and the county town of Banffshire, Eng., pleasantly situated on the side of a hill, at the mouth of the Deveron, over which is a handsome bridge of seven arches, erected by Government. Here is a manufacture of thread, and another of stockings, and the children attend the factory and school alternately; so that education and industry are united. It lies in a beautiful plain washed by the Deveron, the lofty banks of which, clothed with wood on the opposite side, afford a delightful contrast to the soft vale beneath. Banff is 32 ms. NW. of Aberdeen. Lon. 2 15 W., lat. 57 35 N.

Banffshire, co. of Scotland, bounded on the N. by the Murray Frith, on the SE. by Aberdeenshire, and on the NW. by Murrayshire. Its greatest length is 50 ms., and its extent along the coast nearly 30. Pop. in 1810, 35,807; in 1811, 36,668; and in 1821, 43,561. Sq. ms. 217.

Bangalore, city of Hindoostan, in Mysore. The chief manufactures are silk and cotton cloths, muslins, leather, and oil. It is 74 ms. NE. of Serinapatam. Lon. 77 37 E., lat. 13° N.

Bangermassing, kingdom in the south part of the island of Borneo, the capital of which is Martapura. The country produces great quantities of pepper; also gold, iron, diamonds, canes, bird's nests, wax, and dragon's blood. It has a town of the same name, with a good harbor, at the mouth of the river Banjer. Lon. 114 30 E. lat., 3 15 S.

Bangor, a city of Wales, Carnarvonshire, 36 ms. W. of St. Asaph, and 251 NW. of London. Lon. 4 12 W. lat., 53 12 N.—Borough of Ireland, in the co. of Down, on the south shore of Carrickfergus, opposite the town of that name. Lon. 5 42 W. lat. 54 40 N.

Bangor, town and capital of Penobscot co., Me., lying on the W. side of the river Penobscot, at the head of winter navigation, about 37 ms. N. of Castine, on the same river. Pop. in 1810, 850; and in 1820, 1,221. In 1810 this tp. was included in Hancock co., but is now in Penobscot. It is 35 ms. N. from Castine, and 52 above the entrance of Penobscot bay. Lat. 44 41 N., lon. W. C. 8 30 E. Pop. 1840, 8,627.—Tp. and town, Franklin co., N. Y. Pop. in 1820, 370.

Bang-koh, lat. 13 52 N., lon. 100 45 E., principal city of Siam, situated on the E. or left bank of the Meinam river, a few ms. above its mouth. The missionary Malcom estimates the population at 100,000; a mixture of Chinese, Siamese, Peguans, Malays, Cochinchinese, Portuguese, &c. This city bears nearly SE., and is distant about 900 ms. from Calcutta.

BANIAN, a Hindoo merchant.

Banister, fine small river of Va., in Pittsylvania and Halifax cos.; rises in the former, and flows E. into the latter; falls into Dan river 10 ms. above its mouth.—Village and seat of justice, Halifax co., Va., on Banister river, 139 ms. SW. from Richmond.

Banjaluca, a town of European Turkey, in Bosnia, supposed to contain 18,000 inhabitants. It is seated at the confluence of the Verbania with the Verbas, 70 ms. NW. of Seria, 160 ms. S. from Vienna, and 155 W. of Belgrade. Lon. 18 5 E., lat. 44 44 N.

Banjer, considerable river in the island of Borneo, which flows almost due S. from the centre of the country to the harbor of Banjermassing; and at its mouth the Dutch have their principal factory.

BANK, primary sense a ridge of earth, having the acclivity on one side. Bench is only an inflection of bank. Figuratively, this term is very extended, and with not very great variation of orthography or sound common to numerous languages. It is said, with much probability of correctness, that the term bank, in money transactions, comes from the same root.

Banka island.—See Banca island.

Banka island, cape and strait of Asia, in the East Indies. The cape is the NE. angle of Celebes, N. lat. 1 40, and lon. 125 E. London.

Banks' island, in the Pacific ocean, on the E. side of New Zealand, about 100 ms. in circumference. Lon. 174° E., lat. 43 30 S.—Island in the Pacific ocean, near the W. coast of N. America, about 60 ms. long and 5 broad. Lon. 130° W., lat. 53 30 N.

Bann, river of Ireland, which issues from the Mourne mountains, in the co. of Down, flows NW. into Armagh, through Lough Neagh, and thence forms the boundary between Londonderry and Antrim, entering the sea 4 ms. below Colerain.

BANNER, from an ancient German word Ban, which signified the order of a sovereign to march, and formerly performed by the banner, and, though for a different purpose, is retained in modern armies.

Bannbridge, town of Ireland, in the co. of Down, on the river Bann, 14 ms. N. by E. of Newry.

Bannockburn, village of Scot., on the river Bannock, 2 ms. S. of Stirling.

Bannow, town of Ireland, in the co. of Wexford, seated on the E. shore of a bay to which it gives name, 20 ms. SW. of Wexford. Lon. 6 50 W., lat. 52 12 N.

Banstead, village of Surry, Eng., noted for its downs; one of the most delightful spots in Eng. on account of its fine carpet ground, covered with short herbage, perfumed with thyme and juniper. These downs form a tract of 30 ms., extending, under different denominations, from Croydon to Farnham. Banstead is 13 ms. SSW. of London.

Bantam, large town on the NW. coast of Java. It is the capital of a kingdom of the same name, with a good harbor and a castle. It is divided into two towns by a river. The produce is pepper, of which they export vast quantities. Bantam, once populous and flourishing, is now a poor and wretched place. Lon. 105 26 E., lat. 6 20 S.

Bantry, town of Ireland, in the co. of Cork, on a bay of the Atlantic, to which it gives name. Lon. 9 25 W., lat. 51 36 N.

Bar, strong town of Poland, in Podolia, on the river Bog, 40 ms. NW. of Bracklaw. Lon. 27 30 E., lat. 49 14 N.

Baraba.—See Barraba.

Barataria, bay of Louisiana; it is the entrance from the sea to a chain of lakes and small bayous, reaching to the Mississippi at the city of New Orleans. Boats and canoes can pass from the river at several points, and penetrate to Barataria bay. The adjacent country is an open flat seamarsh.

Bar, or Barrois, late duchy of Fr., lying on both sides of the Meuse, between Lorrain and Champagne. It now forms the dep. of Meuse.

Barbadoes, the easternmost of the Windward islands in the West Indies, 25 ms. in length, and 15 in breadth. It belongs to the English; and the number of the whites is about 20,000, who have 100,000 slaves. Their exports are sugar, rum, cotton, indigo, and ginger; and they have most of the fruits common to the climate. The sugar exported hence is whiter and finer than that of any other plantation; and they have one particular production, called Barbadoes tar, which rises out of the earth, and swims upon the surface of the water. This island has suffered much from hurricanes; particularly from a dreadful one, October 10, 1780. It is 70 ms. E. of St. Vincent. The capital is Bridetown.

Barbary, country of Africa, between the Atlantic ocean, the Mediterranean sea, and Egypt; containing the countries of Barca, Tripoli, Tunis, Algiers, Fez, and Morocco.—See Africa, p. 15, &c.

The soil is various, though in general highly productive in fruits and grain. Maize, wheat, rye, and millet, are the most common cerealia. Barbary is in a pre-eminent manner the country of fruit. In its orchards are reared apples, peaches, grapes of great variety, plums, pomegranates, dates, &c.

The religion Mahometan, in its most repulsive forms. Jews are, however, found in every province, and every where exist in a state of the greatest degradation. Christianity, once general, may be considered as obliterated in Barbary. Any representation of the aggregate population of this country, the interior of which we know so imperfectly, would be a mere conjectural sketch.

The French are now in possession of many strong places along or near the Mediterranean coast of Barbary, and are maintaining a doubtful conflict with the natives for political possession of the country. With the use of fire arms, and animated by a religious zeal, the conquest of this region is at present a very different task from that performed in the same country by the Romans. The latter, indeed, did not fix their power until more than a century after their first invasion, nor was their power there ever very firmly based.—See Africa, page 17.

Barbas, cape of Africa, in the Atlantic ocean. Lon. 162 40 W., lat. 2 15 N.

Barbe, St., a town of Mexico, in New Biscay, near which are rich silver mines. It is 500 ms. NW. of Mexico. Lon. 107 5 W., lat. 26° N.

Barca, country of Africa, on the S. coast of the Mediterranean, between Egypt and Barbary. It extends in an E. and W. direction 800 ms., and inland indefinitely to the Sahara. Barca lies between N. lat. 28° and 31°. Its principal vegetable production dates. The Barcans, though rude and bigoted barbarians, are more humane and mild than the inhabitants of the Barbary coast. The chief towns of this country are Zora, Soluk, Bernie, Bengasi, Tauchira, Tolerata, (Ptolmais), Barca, the capital of the country, Curin, (Cyrene), Derna, Cape Luco, (Promontorium Carylionium), Porta Mesulman, (Calabathmus), Rameda, Berton, (Paratonium).—City of Africa, and capital of the country of the same name. The term is no doubt regularly transmitted from the Carthaginians, amongst whom this name was common. Barca is situated on or near the Mediterranean, 70 ms. NE. from Bengasi. N. lat. 38½°, E. lon. 21 0.

Barcelona, the Barcenona of the Romans, city of Spain, and capital of the province of Catalonia. It is situated on the Mediterranean, between the rivers Bezos and Llobregat. Barcelona is, after the cities of Lisbon and Cadiz, the greatest mart of the peninsula of Spain. The citizens of the former, however, very far exceed those of the two latter cities in personal industry. The following is an accurate statement of the progressive population of this city, including Barceloneta :

In 1715,	-	37,000	In 1798,	-	130,000
In 1769,	-	54,000	In 1806,	-	160,000
In 1787,	-	111,000	In 1843,	-	203,000

Basel, bishopric in the NW. part of Swisserland, bounded on the E. by the canton of Basel, S. by that of Soleure, and W. and N. by France.—The capital of the canton of the same name, and the largest town in Swisserland. It is surrounded by thick walls, flanked by towers and bastions, and is divided into two parts by the Rhine, which communicates by a handsome bridge. The largest part is on the side of Swisserland, and the least on that of Germany. The larger has five gates, six suburbs, numerous streets and fountains, and is partly seated on a hill: the other stands on a plain, and has but two gates, with several streets and fountains. Under a marble tomb in the principal church is interred the great Erasmus. The university, founded in 1459, has a fine library and a rich cabinet of medals. Basel has several manufactures, particularly of paper, ribands, and cottons; and it carries on an extensive trade. Basel (the city) now forms, for all political purposes relating to its own internal concerns, a separate canton from Basle the country, which latter is independent of the city. As a member of the Swiss confederacy, or federally, Basle remains unchanged. Three treaties of peace were concluded here in one year (1795) with the French republic: namely, by Prussia, Spain, and Hesse Cassel. Basel is capable of containing 100,000 inhabitants, but the number is scarcely more than 14,000. It is 174 ms. N. by E. of Geneva and 250 E. by S. of Paris. Lon. 7 30 E., lat. 47 35 N.

Bashee, island in the China sea, the most eastern of a cluster called, from this, the Bashee islands, lying to the S. of Formosa. The productions are plantains, bananas, pine-apples, sugarcane, potatoes, yams, and cotton. The quadrupeds are goats and hogs. Bashee is of a circular form, 6 ms. in diameter, and has a town of the same name. Lon. 121 50 E., lat. 20 30 N.

Basilicata, province of Naples, bounded on the N. by Capitanata and Bari, E. by the gulf of Tarenta, S. by Calabria Citeriore, and W. by Principato Citeriore and Ulteriore. Baskirs, or Bashkirs, a wandering or rather nomadic Tartar nation, who range along the lower part of the Don and Volga rivers, on the confines of Europe and Asia. They seem to be descendants of the Bulgares, and are now subject to Russia.

Basques, late territory of Fr., which included lower Navarre, Labourd, and Soule, and now forms, with Bearn, the dep. of lower Pyrenees.

Bass, an insulated rock near the coast of Scot., at the entrance of the Frith of Forth, between the towns of N. Berwick and Dunbar. On the S. side it is almost conic; on the other it overhangs the sea in a tremendous manner. It is inaccessible on all sides, except the SW., and there it is with difficulty a man can climb up by the help of a rope or ladder. In May and June it is quite covered with the nests, eggs, and young birds of the gannets, or solan geese. The rock is 1 mile in circumference, and has a rabbit warren and pasture for a few sheep. A ruinous castle, once the State prison of Scotland, stands at the edge of the precipice. The garrison, in 1694, surrendered to King William, and the fortifications were demolished.

Bass strait, channel about 100 ms. wide, which separates Van Diemen Land from the S. extremity of New Holland. It contains a chain of small islands extending N. and S. It was discovered in 1797 by Surgeon Bass. S. lat. 40°, E. lon. 136°. It has numerous small islands, beside one of some size in its western outlet, called Bass's island.

Bass islands, an interesting group in Lake Erie, appertaining to Huron co., Ohio. This cluster is composed of 3 principal and several smaller islands. In the southern, Bass island is the fine harbor of Put-in bay, about 5 or 6 ms. W. of which, on September 10, 1813, Captain Perry captured the British fleet under the command of Captain Barclay.

Bass's strait. See Bass strait.

Bassora, or Bussarah, city and seaport of Turkey, in Asia, 40 ms. NW. of the gulf of Persia. It stands on the Euphrates, a canal from which divides the city into two parts; and over it is a bridge of boats. The houses are constructed of bricks dried in the sun, and have a very mean aspect. The circumjacent tract is looked upon by the Arabs to be one of the most delightful spots in Asia, and even as one of the most beautiful gardens in the world. The hot winds that blow here are very troublesome to travellers, sometimes overwhelming them with sand driven out of the neighboring deserts. In 1691, the plague destroyed 80,000 of the inhabitants. It is 240 ms. S. by E. of Bagdad. Lon. 44 52 E., lat. 29 26 N.

Bavaria, formerly an electorate, but during the French revolution, on the 21st June, 1808, became a kingdom of Europe, in Germany, and is, as the most considerable of the States, purely German, as Austria and Prussia are formed of heterogeneous materials. Bavaria is bounded S. by the Tyrol and Upper Austria, on the E. it is separated from Bohemia by the Bohemian Wald mountains, N. it borders on the kingdom of Saxony, States of Saxe Weimar and Hesse, &c., NW. Hesse Darmstadt, and W. on the kingdom of Wurtemberg. These limits bound Bavaria Proper, but the kingdom includes a large province W. of the Rhine, separated from the body of the monarchy by Hesse Darmstadt. Rhenish Bavaria has France S., grand duchy of Lower Rhine, a Prussian province, and a district of Saxe Coburg, W., and NE. by that part of Hesse Darmstadt lying W. of the Rhine. Bavaria lies between 47 20 and 49 40 N. lat. Beside a change of title the monarchy was greatly augmented in territory from similar causes.

“In Bavaria the Roman Catholic religion is that of the majority, but all Christian forms of worship are free and equally protected by the laws, and the press is likewise free. These two benefactions were secured by the constitution of May 26, 1818, and which also assured the inviolability of the King by the establishment of a legislative body composed of two Houses.”—Geography of Larenaudiere, Balbi, and Huot, vol. 1, p. 687.

The kingdom is divided into the following provinces or circles.

Circles.	Population.	Chief town.	Population.
Isar - - -	546,000	Munich - -	65,000
Regen - -	400,000	Ratisbonnee -	26,000
Upper Danube -	560,000	Augsburg - -	33,000
Lower Danube -	390,000	Passau - - -	11,000
Rezat - - -	550,000	Ansach - - -	17,000
Upper Mayn -	520,000	Bayreuth - -	14,000
Lower Mayn -	540,000	Wurtsburg - -	20,000
Rhine - - -	444,000	Spire - - -	6,000
Total - - -	3,980,000

The above table, translated from the French of the above quoted, gave, it is probable, a general correct view of the population when published, but the subjoined document, of ten years later date, shows great increase. “At the end of 1840,” says the Franconian Mercury, “Bavaria comprised 4,370,977 inhabitants; Munich pop. 95,000, and Nuremberg 46,000.”

Bavaria, to the southward of the Danube, is composed of an immense plain, sloping about NNE. from the Alps of Tryol and mountains of Saltzburgh. Down this plain flow, advancing from W. to E., the rivers Iller, Mindel, Lech, Iser, and Inn, with some minor streams. On the N. side of the Danube that great river receives within Bavaria, advancing from W. to E., the rivers Wernitz, Altmuhl, Nab, Regen, and Ilz. The extreme northern and northwestern Bavaria, E. of the Rhine, is drained by the Mayn and its branches. See articles Germany, Zoll Verein, &c.

Beaver, or Big Beaver river, Pa. Big Beaver is formed by the Mahoning, Shenango, Neshanock, and Conequenessing creeks. The Shenango rises in Ashtabula co. of O., and Crawford of Pa., within 12 ms. from the SE. shore of Lake Erie, interlocking sources with those of Grand river, Coneaut and French creek, and pursuing a nearly S. course over Mercer, receives the Conequenessing from the NE., and entering Beaver co., unites with the Mahoning, and forms Big Beaver.

The Mahoning is, in reality, the main branch, rising in Columbiana, Stark, Trumbull, and Portage cos., O.; its course is first nearly N. 30 ms., to near Warren, in Trumbull. Winding to SE., it pursues that course 35 ms., entering Pa. in the SW. angle of Mercer, and joining the Shenango at N. lat. 41°, about 2 ms. within Beaver co. Below the junction of the Mahoning and Shenango, Big Beaver flows a little E. of S. 20 ms. into Ohio river. Conequenessing is the eastern constituent stream of Beaver, draining the peninsula between the Alleghany, Ohio, Big Beaver, and Shenango rivers.

The valley of Big Beaver is nearly circular, and about 70 ms. diameter; area 3,850 sq. ms. It is worthy of remark, that the general courses are nearly on a direct NW. line of the Youghiogany, below the mouth of Castleman's river, Monongahela and Ohio, from the mouth of Youghiogany to that of Big Beaver, and the latter and Mahoning, to about 3 ms. above Warren. This range of navigable water is upwards of 130 ms. direct, and from 180 to 200 ms. following the sinuosities of the streams.

The sources of the Mahoning interlock with those of the Tuscarawas branch of the Muskingum, and Cayahoga and Grand river of Lake Erie.

Belgium, ancient name of a part of what has been in modern times called "The Netherlands." One of the consequences of the revolution which placed Louis Philippe on the throne of France severed the former Burgundian provinces from Holland, and led to their formation into a kingdom of Europe, under the ancient name of the country. This ancient name applied only to Netherlands, or low countries on the Rhine, Meuse, and Scheldt. The name was revived by the French when in possession of the country.

It is bounded W. by Kerman and Laristan, in Persia, N. by Afghanistan, E. by Sinde, and S. by the Indian ocean. Length from W. to E. 600 ms.; mean breadth about 250 ms.; area 150,000 sq. ms. Extending in lat. from 25° to 30° N., and in lon. from 58° to 69° E. of London. The general inclination of Beloochistan is southward. The northern part extending along about N. lat. 28°, is a high, rugged, mountainous table land, inhabited by Brahoos, Belooches, and Taudjiks. The more level, though hot and dry country, towards the Indian ocean, called Sewastan, is inhabited by Jutes. The whole population is set down by Balbi at 3,000,000.

The people called Belooches, and from whom the country has been named, speak a language with much affinity to the Persian. They are represented as a fine people, tall, robust, and every way well formed; also, brave, hospitable, and intelligent. It is a country, however, of which our knowledge is very imperfect.—See article Asia.

Bengal, country of Hindoostan Proper, bounded on the W. by Orissa and Bahar, on the N. by Boctan, on the E. by Assam and Meckley, and on the S. by the bay of Bengal. Its greatest extent from W. to E. is about 720 ms., and from N. to S. above 300. The country consists of one vast plain, of the most fertile soil, which, in common with other parts of Hindoostan, annually renders two, and, in some parts, even three crops. It is sometimes subject to such extremes of heat as render it fatal to Europeans. The great cause of the unhealthiness of Bengal, however, is owing to the inundations of the Ganges and Burrampooter, by which such quantities of putrescible matters are brought down as infect the air with the most malignant vapours when the waters retire. By the latter end of July, all the lower parts of Bengal, contiguous to the Ganges and Burrampooter, are overflowed, and present a surface of water more than 100 ms. wide. As some of the lands in Bengal would receive damage from such a copious inundation, they must, for this reason, be guarded by strong dykes to resist the waters, and admit only a certain quantity. One particular branch of the Gauges is conducted, for 70

ms. between dykes; and when full, the passengers look down upon the adjacent country as from an eminence. Its principal products are sugar, silk, fruit, pepper, opium, rice, saltpetre, lac, and civit. It is compared to Egypt for fertility; the Ganges dividing here into several streams, and, like the Nile, annually overflowing the country. Bengal has been subject, ever since 1765 to the E. India Company. See art. Asia, head Indostan.

Birmah or Burmah, a large country of Asia, between Indostan and China. The natives write the name of their country Myamma, and in speaking, call it Byamma or Bramma, by foreigners changed into Burmah. The Chinese call the country Meenteen. When in its integrity, Burmah included Ava, Cassay, Pegu, Tavoy, Tenasserim, and the country of the Shyans, with Arracan. This extensive country, stretches from Junkseylon, N. latitude 8° to above 25° having Thibet N., Siam S., China E. and NE., and the bay of Bengal W. Except to the west, these limits must have been altogether vague, as from the reconstruction of this empire by Alompra, (Aloung-Pra,) about the middle of the last century, the country has been in almost constant war, and by the treaty of Yan-da-boo, on the 28th of February, 1826, the British procured the cession of Arracan, Yeh, Tavoy, and Mergui, or most of western and maritime Burmah. Malcolm sums up "the number of inhabitants to whom the Burmah tongue is vernacular, at 3,000,000." His description decides them to be of the same race with the Chinese. "Standard of beauty a delicate yellow; and in full dress, a cosmetic is used by ladies and children which imparts this teint."

Birmingham, town of Eng., in Warwickshire. It is a place of great antiquity, and stands on the side of a hill, forming nearly a half moon. The lower part is filled with workshops and warehouses, and consists chiefly of old buildings. The upper part contains many new and regular streets, and a handsome square. It has also a large school endowed by Edward VI., an elegant theatre, and the completest set of baths in the kingdom. The hardware manufactures of Birmingham have been noted for a considerable period; but of late years, by great additions to its trade from a vast variety of articles, such as metal buttons, buckles, plated goods, japanned and paper ware, &c., it has risen greatly in population; and in 1811 contained upwards of 70,000 inhabitants. It is plentifully supplied with coal, by means of a canal to Wednesbury; and it has a communication with the Great Trunk from the Trent to the Severn, by a branch passing by Wolverhampton. The improved steam engines, made here by Bolton & Watt, deserve to rank high among the productions of human ingenuity; their application to various mechanical purposes, and particularly to the draining of mines, places them among the most valuable inventions of the age. Birmingham is 17 ms. NW. from Coventry, and 116 from London. Lon. 1 50 W., lat. 52 30 N.—Tp., Chester co., Penn. Pop. in 1810, 290; in 1820, 323.—Tp., Delaware co., Penn. Biscay, province of Spain, 97 ms. long and 50 broad, bounded on the N. by the bay of Biscay, E. by Upper Navarre, S. by Old Castile, and W. by Asturias. It contains 3 divisions: Biscay Proper, Guipuscoa, and Alaba. This province is a kind of republic, in the hands of the nobility, under the protection of the crown. Here are neither garrisons, custom-houses, stamps, nor excise; and of all the royal taxes, none are known but the donativo or gratuitous donation. Biscay receives, by mere condescension, a corregidor and a commissary of marines, but does not permit any order of the Spanish government to be executed without the sanction of the province. It produces apples, vines, and grain; and has also wood for building ships, and mines of iron and lead. The Biscayans are stout, brave, and choleric to a proverb, and the lowest laborer deems himself a gentleman. They speak the ancient Cantabrian language, which has but little if any affinity with any other in Europe. Bilboa is the capital.

Blue Mountain, sometimes called Kittatiny, was originally called by the Indians Kaatatin chunk, which is said to signify "main or principal mountain." It crosses the Delaware, which forms a deep gap through it, about 24 ms. above Easton, and, running WSW., crosses the Lehigh, which forms also a gap through it, and continues nearly the same direction westward of the Susquehanna. The height of this mountain is at three points in the co. of Northampton, as follows: on the W. side of the Delaware, at the Delaware water gap, it is found to be 1,250 feet, on the W. side of Lehigh water gap it measures 1,175 feet, and on the E. side of Kunkle's Gap, or Allentown road, it measures 1,135 feet. These measurements were taken by the common geometrical method, and will give the average height of the mountain in the co. of Northampton at 1,186 feet. The Blue mountain, so far as it extends in Northampton co., is a very regular ridge, nearly uniform in its height, and has properly but four passes or gaps in the co. These are the Delaware Water Gap, the Wind Gap, the Lehigh Water Gap, and Little Gap, between the Wind Gap and Lehigh Water Gap. The mountain is in all places steep, thinly covered with poor timber, generally rocky, and unfit for cultivation.

Blue Ridge, one of the ranges of the Appalachian or Alleghany mountains, and generally, though erroneously, considered the SE. ridge of that system. It extends from the Hudson river into Georgia. The great Limestone valley, as it is called by pre-eminence, extends along the NW. side of the Blue Ridge. The real Limestone range is, however, much more limited than generally believed. In New Jersey and Pennsylvania it is seldom as much as 10 ms. wide from the foot of the mountain, and followed by clay slate, which forms the substrata on the NW. side of the valley. The line of separation crosses the Delaware about 20 ms. above the borough of Easton, the Lehigh at the Slates, the Schuylkill above the mouth of Maiden creek, and the Susquehannah at Harrisburg. Between the Susquehannah and Potomac the relative distances and distinction between the two formations maintain a nearly similar position. From the latter stream SW. we are unprepared to mark their respective limits.

The entire length of the Blue Ridge, as a separate range, is upwards of 700 ms. Its general elevation varies considerably. In N. J., Pa., and Md., it is humble, but in Bedford co., Va., the peaks of Otter exceed 5,000 feet above the level of the Atlantic ocean, and are the most elevated part of the Appalachian system SW. from Hudson river.

Bokharia, city of Usbec Tartary, capital of Bokharia, 138 ms. W. by S. of Samarcand. Lon. 65 50 E., lat. 39 15 N.

Bokharia, Bocharia, or Bucharia, a general name for all that vast tract of land lying between Karazm and the sandy desert bordering on China. It is divided into Great and Little Bucharia. Great Bucharia is situated between 34 and 46 N. lat. and 76 and 92 E. lon. It is bounded on the N. by the river Sir, on the E. by the kingdom of Kashgar, on the S. by Persia and the peninsula within the Ganges, and on the W. by the country of Karazm. It is a fertile country: the mountains abound with the richest mines, the valleys are of an astonishing fertility, and the rivers abound with excellent fish. Little Bucharia is sufficiently populous and fertile; but the great elevation of its land, joined to the height of the mountains which bound it in several parts, renders it much colder than from its situation might be expected. It contains rich mines of gold and silver. See article Asia.

Bologna, city of Italy, capital of the Bolognese, with an university. It lies at the foot of the Appennine mountains, in a fruitful plain and salubrious air. The river Saronia runs near its walls, and the Reno, which turns 400 mills for the silk works, through the city. There are a great number of palaces, particularly the Palazzo Publico, in which the cardinal legate or viceroy of the Pope, resides. In the area before this palace, is a noble marble fountain, the principal figure of which, a Neptune in bronze, 11 feet high, the workmanship of Giovanni di Bologna, is highly esteemed. The anatomical theatre, beside its museum, is adorned with statues of celebrated physicians. The church of St. Petronius is the largest in Bologna; and on the pavement of this, Cassini drew his meridian line. There are 168 other churches. The private houses are well built, and the city contains 80,000 inhabitants. They carry on a considerable trade in silks and velvets, which are manufactured here in great perfection. The surrounding country produces immense quantities of oil, wine, flax, and hemp, and furnishes all Europe with sausages, maccaroni, liqueurs, essences, and even lap-dogs. It is seated at the foot of the Appennines, 22 ms. SE. of Modena, and 175 NW. of Rome. Lon. 11 21 E., lat. 44 30 N.

Bolognese, province of Italy, bounded on the N. by the Ferrarese, W., by Modena, S., by Tuscany, and E., by Romagna. It is watered by many small rivers, and produces all sorts of grain and fruit, particularly rich muscadine grapes. Some miles before the entrance into Bologna, the country seems one continued garden. The vineyards are not divided by hedges, but by rows of elms and mulberry trees; the vines hanging in festoons, from one tree to another. There are also mines of alum and iron. Bologna is the capital.

Bolsena, town of Italy, in the patrimony of St. Peter, on a lake of its name, 18 ms. NNW. of Viterbo.

Bolsover, town of Eng., in Derbyshire. It is noted for the manufacture of tobacco pipes, and is 6 ms. E. of Chesterfield, and 145 NNW. of London.

Bolswaert, town of Holland, in Friesland, near the Zuyder Zee, 10 ms. N. of Sloten.

Bolton, a populous town of Eng., in Lancashire. It has a canal to Manchester, and manufactures of fustians, counterpanes, dimities, calicoes, and muslins. It is 11 ms. Bomal, town of Austrian Luxemburg, on the river Ourt, 20 ms. S. of Liege. Lon. 5 38 E., lat. 58 18 N.

Bombay, island of Hindoostan, one of the three presidencies of the English East India Company, by which their Oriental territories are governed. It is situated on the W. coast of the Deccan, 7 ms. in length, and 20 in circumference. It came to the English by the marriage of Charles II. with Catharine of Portugal. It contains a strong and capacious fortress, a large city, dock yard, and marine arsenal. The ground is barren, and good water scarce. It was formerly counted very unhealthy; but, by draining the bogs, and other methods, the air is greatly altered for the better. It has abundance of cocoa-nuts, but scarce any corn or cattle. The inhabitants are of several nations, and very numerous. It is 150 ms. S. of Surat. Lon. 72 38 E., lat. 18 58 N.

Bombay Hook, point, and small island in Delaware river, Kent co., Del., 17 ms. SE. by S. from Reedy Island.

Bond, co. of Ill. on both sides of the Kaskaskias river, bounded by Jefferson SE., Washington S., Madison W., and the Indinn country N.; length 30, breadth 18 ms.; area 540 sq. ms.; surface level, or moderately hilly, soil productive. Chief towns, Ripley, Perrysville, and Independence. Pop. in 1820, 2,931, in 1840, 5,060. Central lat. 38 50 N., lon. W. C. 12 20 W.

Bondou, kingdom of central Africa, bounded on the E. by Bambook, on the SE., and S. by Tenda, and the Simbani Wilderness, on the SW.

by Woolli, on the W. by Foota Torra, and on the N. by Kajaaga. The country, like that of Woolli, is very generally covered with woods, but the land is more elevated, and towards the Faleme river, rises into considerable hills. In native fertility the soil is not surpassed (according to Mr. Park) by any part of Africa. From the central situation of Bondou, between the Gambia and Senegal rivers, it is become a place of great resort, both for the Slatées (slave dealers) who generally pass through it in going from the coast to the interior countries, and for occasional traders, who frequently come hither from the inland countries to purchase salt. The centre of this kingdom is about 8° W. London, lat. 10° N.

Boodge-boodge, town of Hindostan Proper, capital of the rajah of Cutch, 330 ms. NE. of Surat. Lon. 68° E., lat. 23 16 N.

BOONŪ, is a general term for divinity, and not the name of any particular Deity. It has been, however, in our books adopted to designate, perhaps, the most extensive religion of the earth. "Half the population of China, Las, Cochinchina, and Ceylon; all of Camboja, Siam, Burmah, Thibet, Tartary, and Loochoo, and a great part of Japan, and most of the other islands of southern seas (of Asia) are of this faith, (if such it can be called.) The real import of the term, as already stated, in the countries where it is used, is equivalent to DEITY as a generic term, and not to any form of worship, or principles of belief."—Malcom.—See art. Asia, p.

Boone, co. of Kentucky, on the left side of the Ohio river, opposite the mouth of great Miami, bounded NW. and N. by Ohio river, E. by Campbell, and S. by Pendleton; length 25, mean width 12; area, 300 sq. ms.; surface hilly; soil productive in grain and fruits; staples flour and salted provisions. Pop. in 1820, 6,582; in 1830, 9,075; and in 1840, 10,034. Ctl. lat. 39°, lon. W. C. 7 30 W.

Bordentown, town, Burlington co., N. J., seated on the E. side of the river Delaware, and nearly at the great bend of that river below Trenton, 11 ms. NE. from Burlington, and about 26 from Philadelphia. This town possesses a considerable trade, being the common rendezvous of a line of stages between Philadelphia and Amboy.

Boreham, village of Eng., in Essex, 3 ms. NE. of Chelmsford.

Borgne, lake of La., and Miss. It is in reality the northern extension of Pascagoula sound. It communicates with the Gulf of Mexico, by the SE. pass, SW. from Cat Island, with the Pascagoula sound, by the passes of Christian and Marianne, and with lake Ponchartrain, by the Rigolets. The depth of water, through the ship channel of lake Borgne, is at low tide about 6 feet. It is from the mouth of Bienvenu creek to the W. end of Cat Island, 40 ms. in length, with a mean width of 10 ms. between the opposite shores of Miss. and La. Lake Borgne forms one of the great channels of entrance into Louisiana.

Borgo, town of Sweden, on the Gulf of Finland, 20 ms. NE. of Helsingfors. Lon. 25 40 E., lat. 60 34 N.

Borgoforte, town of Italy, in the duchy of Mantua, on the river Po., 10 ms. S. of Mantua. Lon. 10 53 E., lat. 45° N.

Borja, town of Spain, in Arragon, 12 ms. SE. of Tarazona. Lon. 1 16 W., lat. 42 6 N.

Boriquen, island of the West Indies, near Porto-Rico. It is uninhabited, though fertile, and the water good. Here is a great number of land crabs, whence some call it Crab Island. Lon. 66° W., lat. 18° N.

Borkelo, strong town of the United Provinces, in Zutphen, on the river Borkel, 10 ms. E. of Zutphen. Lon. 6 18 E., lat. 52 11 N.

Bormio, town of the country of the Grisons, capital of a co. of the same name, bounded on the S. by the State of Venice, on the E. by the territory of Austria, and on the S. and W. by Caddea. It contains about 1,000 inhabitants, and has a desolate appearance. It is 40 ms. SE. of Coire. Lon. 10 5 E., lat. 46 25 N.

Borneo, island in the Indian ocean, discovered by the Portuguese in 1521; before the discovery of New Holland thought to be the largest in the world, being 1,800 ms. in circumference. It is seated under the equator, that line cutting it almost through the middle. It is almost of a circular figure, abounds with gold, and the finest diamonds in the Indies are found in its rivers, being probably washed down from the hills by torrents. It produces, likewise, rice, pepper, fruits, and bees wax, which last is used instead of money. The beasts are oxen, buffaloes, deer, goats, elephants, tigers, and monkeys. This island has fine rivers, especially towards the W. and S. The rainy season continues for eight months in the year; and as during that time all the flat country is overflowed, the air is rendered very unhealthy, and the inhabitants are forced to build their houses on floats, which they make fast to trees. The houses have but one floor, with partitions made of cane. The people are very swarthy, and go almost naked. There are Mahometans on the sea coast, but the rest are Gentoos. The capital, of the same name, is large and populous, with a good harbor, and seated on the NW. side. Lon. 112 27 E., lat. 4 55 N.

Bornholm, island of the Baltic sea, 20 ms. SE. of Schonen, in Sweden. Lon. 14 56 E., lat. 54 55 N.

Bornou, extensive country in Africa, bounded on the NW. by Fezzan, on the N. by the desert of Bilma, on the SE. by Nubia, and on the SW. by Cashna. It extends from 12 to 22° of E. lon., and from 17 to 21° of N. lat. The northern part is poor, and like the rest of the provinces of Zaara; but all the rest is well watered by springs and rivers, rendering the country prolific in corn, grass, and fruits, and giving it a pleasing aspect. The eastern and western frontiers are divided into mountains and valleys, the latter abounding with flocks of cattle, fields of rice and millet, and many of the mountains with wood, fruit trees, and cotton. The climate is said to be characterized by excessive, though not by uniform heat. Two seasons—one commencing soon after the middle of April, the other at the same period in October—divide the year. The complexion of the natives is black, but they are not of the negro cast. The capital is of the same name.—The capital of the empire of Bornou, situated in a flat country. Lat. 20° N., lon. 22° E.

Borodino, on the Moskwa, village of Russia, 90 ms. W. from Moscow, famous for a sanguinary battle between the French and Russians, September 7, 1812.—Post Office, Onondago co., N. Y., 180 ms. W. from Albany.

Borough, see Burg.

Borough, tp, Beaver co., Pa. Pop. 1820, 244.

Boroughbridge, borough of Eng., in the North Riding of Yorkshire, on the Ure, over which is a stone bridge; 17 ms. NW. of York, and 218 N. by W. of London. Lon. 1 25 W., lat. 54 10 N.

Borrowdale, dreary district of Eng., in the S. part of Cumberland, abounding, beyond any other part of the world, with the finest sort of black lead, or wad, the mines of which are only opened at intervals, and then carefully closed again, lest this precious substance should become too common. Copper, lead, and calamine, are also found in this tract.

Borrowstounness, or Boness, village of Scotland, in Linlithgowshire, on the Frith of Forth, surrounded with coal pits and salt pans. It has a good port, but its trade is not on the increase.

Bosa, ancient seaport of Sardinia, with a bishop's see and a castle, on a river of the same name, 17 ms. SE. of Algeri. Lon. 8 50 E., lat. 40 29 N.

Boscawen, tp., Merrimac co., N. H., on the W. side of the Merrimac river, about 10 ms. N. of Concord. Pop. 1810, 1,829; in 1820, 2,113.

Bosco, or Boschi, town of Italy, in the Milanese, seated on the Arbe, 5 ms. E. of Alexandria. Lon. 8 52 E., lat. 44 54 N.

Boscobel, village of Eng., in Shropshire, 9 ms. SE. of Newport.

Bosna Serai, large and strong town of Turkey, and capital of Bosnia, seated on the river Bosna, 110 ms. SW. of Belgrade. Lon. 17 57 E., lat. 44 40 N.

Bosnia, province of Turkey, in Europe, bounded on the N. by Slavonia, or the E. by Servia, on the S. by Albania, and on the W. by Croatia and Dalmatia. Bosna Serai is the capital.

Bosphorus, ancient name of two remarkable straits—the Thracian Bosphorus, now straits of Constantinople, and the Cimmeric Bosphorus, now straits of Kaffa, Zabach, or Jenicale. In the outlet of the Euxine basin by the successive straits of Kaffa, Constantinople, and Dardanelles, we have a complete specific resemblance to the chain made by the straits of St. Mary, Michilimakinac, St. Clair, Detroit, Niagara, and St. Lawrence rivers. The quantity of water discharged by the American basin, it is probable, exceeds that from the European, though the latter is most extensive in point of area. A very erroneous idea of the relative extent of the Canadian lakes prevails in the United States. The Black sea alone covers more than twice the superficies of all the Canadian lakes taken together. According to the evidence of Pallas, Clark, and indeed every other traveller, whose observations have been made public, respecting the regions adjacent to the Caspian and Black seas, there has been a progressive diminution of their waters. The whole land space from the base of the mountains of Transylvania to the Aral sea, including the alluvial mouths of the Danube, Dneister, Bog, Dneiper, Don, Wolga, and Ural rivers, show marks of water depression, and that, in all probability, the Caspian and Aral were once links of the Mediterranean chain of inland seas. The Dardanelles (ancient Hellespont) and Bosphorus of Thrace, or straits of Constantinople, both have a depth of water admitting the largest ships of war.

Bossiney, borough of Eng., in Cornwall, on the Bristol channel, 17 ms. NW. of Launceston, and 233 W. by S. of London. Lon. 4 40 W., lat. 50 45 N.

Bost, strong town of Persia, capital of Sables-tan. Lon. 64 15 E., lat. 31 50 N.

Boston, borough of Eng., in Lincolnshire, seated on both sides of the Witham, not far from its influx into the sea; but its harbor can admit vessels of inferior burden only. It has a navigation from Lincoln, partly by the Witham, and partly by a canal, at the termination of which, in Boston, is a large and curious sluice; and there is another canal to Bourn. It is a flourishing town, 37 ms. SE. of Lincoln, and 115 N. of London. Lon. 0 5 E., lat. 53 1 N.

Boston, seaport and city of Mass., in Suffolk co., on a fine peninsula, extending into Massachusetts bay about 2 ms., with a mean breadth of 1 m. The surface on which the city stands is undulating, and gives an agreeable variety to the streets, and affords, with the aid of the buildings, particularly the State house, some very fine prospects of the adjacent country, bay, and islands. The harbor is spacious, and has sufficient water for the admission of the largest vessels, and adequately landlocked for their protection from all winds except easterly. It is very seldom so much incommoded with ice as to render it inaccessible at the severest seasons of frost. The entrance is narrow, and defended by Forts Warren and Independence.

Boston is a very commercial city, and, in proportion to her resident population, contains an immense mass of wealth. In point of tonnage, the shipping of Boston stands next, among the cities of the United States, to New York. In 1815 the tonnage of the former exceeded 143,000 tons. During 1841 there were 6,317 arrivals at Boston: ships 289, barques 283, brigs 1,227, schooners 4,341, sloops 177—coastwise, 4,574, foreign 1,743. To facilitate the operations of commerce, agriculture, and internal intercourse, Boston is connected with the surrounding country by excellent roads, and the interior of Mass. and N. H. by the Middlesex canal. This city is indeed flourishing and prosperous. It is not, however, from the amount of its capital, or the extent of its commerce, that Boston finds its most solid claim to the respectable rank it possesses amongst the cities of the U. S.; it is upon the number and exalted character of its literary institutions which this city has based her true grandeur. It would be to swell this article to a much too extensive length to enumerate its various literary establishments; we may therefore notice the Athenæum, with 18,000, and the Boston library, with 6,000 volumes, as rich stores of intellectual wealth; and, as in a scientific point of view Cambridge is only a suburb of Boston, we may in this view include the most extensive collection in the United States, exceeding 25,000 volumes, which appertains to the university in the former place. This article was written some years past, and therefore these numbers must be far short of the literary stores now in the Boston libraries.

The natural disadvantages which must have existed in mutual communication between town and country, from the insular situation of Boston, is amply obviated by 4 fine bridges. One over Charles river, from Boston to Charlestown, exceeds 1,500 feet in length, with a breadth of 42 feet; West Boston bridge, leading to Cambridge, is based on 180 piers, and extends 3,483 feet; Craigie's bridge is between the two former. A fourth bridge, over the bay to the SW. from Boston, with a wing dam, constructed to procure, by aid of the tide, an immense water power, intended to put in operation different kinds of machinery.

The appearance of the streets and houses of Boston affords ample monuments of the change of taste, wealth, and views of convenience. In the ancient parts of the city the streets are narrow and crooked, and the houses low and plain, but in the western and more modern quarters the streets are wide, and cutting each other at right angles, and the houses in a high degree spacious, splendid, and elegant.

The public buildings of Boston are numerous and spacious. The State house, standing upon an elevated spot, with the park and open space of 45 acres, and a fine descending slope from the front of the edifice, presents, particularly from its dome, an expansive prospect over the harbor, with its numerous islands and the adjacent city and country. The new court-house, a fine building, reared at an expense of near $100,000, Faneuil Hall, an almshouse, custom-house, and near 30 places of public worship, adorn the city.

The coastwise arrivals and clearances, in the above statement, do not include those vessels which arrive and depart with domestic merchandise exempted from entry or clearance at the custom-house; the number of this class of vessels is estimated to exceed 2,500 annually.

The arrivals from foreign ports at Boston, from 1790 to 1800, averaged per year 569 vessels.

Bourchemin, seignory, L. C. Richelieu co., 35 ms. E. from Montreal.

Bourdeaux, ancient city of Fr., in the dep. of Gironde, and late province of Guienne. It is built in the form of a bow, of which the river Garonne is the string. This river is bordered by a large quay, and the water rises four yards at full tide, for which reasons the largest vessels can come up to it very readily. The ancient city of Bourdeaux, though considerable in point of size, was ill built, badly paved, without police or any of those municipal regulations indispensably requisite to render a city splendid or elegant. It has entirely changed its appearance within these last 40 years. The public edifices are very noble, and all the streets newly built are regular and handsome. The quays are 4 ms. in length, and the river itself is considerably broader than the Thames at London bridge. The ruins of a very large amphitheatre yet remain, constructed under the Emperor Galienus, built of brick; likewise several aqueducts. It is 87 ms. S. of Rochelle and 325 SW. of Paris. Bowman's Creek, post office, Montgomery co., N. Y., 60 ms. NW. from Albany.

Bowman's mountain, called the Bald mountain, near the western limits of Luzerne co., is a high, regular, barren range, whose average height may be 1,000 feet. This extends from the E. to the W. branches of the Susquehanna river, between which it appears to have no other name than those mentioned, except that, in a small territory on the head of Fishing creek, the inhabitants call it the North mountain. Westward of the waters of the Susquehanna, it forms the main ridge of the Alleghany mountains. It crosses the E. branch of the Susquehanna, at the mouth of Tunkhannock and Bowman's creeks, and extending northeastwardly, it is called Tunkhannock mountain, and terminates in Susquehanna co., where it is called the Elk mountain.

Bowman's Valley, lying on Bourn's creek, between Bowman's and Mahoopeny mountains, Luzerne co., Pa., is not very populous, and the land generally poor. It is about 2 ms. wide, and 15 ms. long. The principal population is near the river.

BRAMIN, a sect or body of men in Indostan, who do not admit description by the use of any terms known to European languages. They are neither priests or monks in any meaning attached to those terms. In their first or preparatory state, the Bramins are called Bramachari; this is their preparatory condition. Their second state is Grihastha, which is complete when he is married and has children; marriage without children does not complete the title of Brahmin. Similar to all exclusives they pretend to a purity far beyond their practice. Like all other pretended exclusives, they are artful imposters. The Hindoo character, similar to all other oppressed nations, is that of artful disguise, which has its extreme in the Brahmin.

Brasil, an extensive country of South America, claimed and in part possessed by Portugal. It extends along the Atlantic ocean from Cape Orange, lat. 4° N. to near lat. 33° S., and from Cape St. Roque, lon. W. C. 44° E., to the mouth of the Javery river, lon. W. C. 5° E., extending through 39° of lat. It is bounded NE. by the Atlantic ocean, N. by Guayana and Colombia, NW. by Colombia, SW. by Peru and the United Provinces of La Plata, and SE. and E. by the Atlantic ocean. It is intersected by a chain of mountains ranging along the Atlantic coast from S. lat. 10 to 30°. The aspect of a country of such vast extent must present an indefinite variety of surface and soil. Brasil is, however, in general, rather plain than mountainous. The Amazon, with its numerous branches, waters and fertilizes these immense regions, affording the most extensive tracts of productive soil in one connected body ever united under one sovereignty. The Brasilis is about 2,500 ms. in length and breadth, with an area of about 3,000,000 of sq. ms. It is very difficult to fix its population—supposed to be about 2,000,000, independent of the aborigines not subject or tributary to the Crown of Portugal. It is divided into the captain generalships of Rio Grand, St. Paul's, Minas Ceraes, Janeiro, Bahia, Pernambuco, Ceara, Maranham, Grand Para, Matta-grosso, and Goias. It would be needless to enumerate the productions of Brasil, either mineral or vegetable; it is sufficient to observe that in both kingdoms the objects are almost commensurate with all that can administer to the wants, comforts, or luxury of human beings. Form of government, monarchical; chief magistrate styled emperor. See art. America, p. 53.

Brassos a Dios, river of Texas, in the intendancy of St. Louis Potosi. The sources of the Bressos are not correctly known, but are supposed to be south of Red river, about N. lat. 33° and W. lon. W. Bristol, city and seaport of Eng., in Gloucestershire and Somersetshire, to which last co. it was accounted to belong before it formed a separate jurisdiction. In wealth, trade, and population, it was long reckoned the second in this kingdom, but is now greatly exceeded by Liverpool. It is seated at the confluence of the Avon with the Frome, 10 ms. from the influx of the Avon into the Severn. Bristol has a prodigious trade, for it is reckoned that hence 2,000 ships sail yearly. The tide, rising to a great height in these narrow rivers, brings vessels of considerable burden to the quay. But the largest ships are discharged at Kingroad, 4 ms. below the city, and the goods are brought to the quay by lighters. There are some considerable woolen manufactures, and no less than 15 glass-houses, and a sugar refinery, which is one of its principal manufactures. For supplying the city with water, there are 6 public conduits. It has 18 churches beside the cathedral, a bridge over the Avon, a custom-house, and an exchange. The Hot Well, about a mile from the town, on the side of the Avon, is much resorted to. It is of great purity, and has obtained a high reputation in consumptive cases. In St. Vincent's Rock, above this well, are found those native crystals, so well known under the name of Bristol stones. Besides this well, there is a cold spring which gushes out of a rock on the side of a river that supplies the cold bath. Here are used sledges instead of carts, because the vaults and common sewers would be injured by them. Bristol is governed by a mayor. It is 12 ms. WNW. of Bath, 34 SSW. of Gloucester, and 124 W. of London. Lon. 2 36 W. lat. 51 28 N.

This river rises in the high mountain chain of Chippewan, between N. lat. 40 and 42°, interlocking sources with Lewis's Platte and Rio Grande del Norte. Pursuing a southwestern course of 700 ms., it is lost in the Pacific. I have given the position and extent of this stream from Tanner's map of Mexico.

Buenos Ayres, city and seaport, the capital of Paraguay, and the seat of a late vicerealty, and now of the united provinces of La Plata. A great part of the treasures and merchandise of Peru and Chili are brought here, which are exported to Spain. It was founded by Mendoza in 1535, but afterwards abandoned; and in 1544 another colony of the Spaniards came here, who left it also; but it was rebuilt in 1582, and inhabited by Spaniards and the native Americans. It has two monasteries, five convents, a college, a beautiful square, and about 70,000 inhabitants. The trade is carried on with the provinces of Peru by means of carts drawn by oxen, which travel together in caravans. The country around is quite open and level, furnishing every species of American and European productions; but the most extraordinary circumstance is the propagation of cattle, which have multiplied so immensely that a great many are killed merely for their hides. The trade of the city, if not obstructed by war and revolution, would be immense. See art. America, p. 53. It is seated on the Plata, 220 ms. from the ocean, though the river there is 21 ms. in breadth. Lon. W. C. 18 29 E., lat. 34 25 S.—Province of South America, one of the united provinces of La Plata, bounded SE. by the Atlantic ocean, SW. by the Colorado river, W. by Cordova, and NE. by the Rio de la Plata; length from the SW. to NE. 400 ms.; mean width 200; area about 80,000 sq. ms. It is in general an open and flat country, with a soil of exuberant fertility, and situated between 33 and 40° of S. lat., produces in abundance the grains and fruits of a temperate climate. The extent of its unwooded plains, however, invites to and superinduces pastoral pursuits. Agriculture is too much neglected, and the attention of the inhabitants drawn to the rearing of cattle and horses. Manufactures can scarcely be said to exist in their most incipient state. Relative population uncertain.

Buffalo, lake of North America, laid down by Herne. Lon. W. C. 34° W., lat. 67 20 N.

Buffalo, port of entry and seat of justice, in Erie co., N. Y., on Lake Erie, at the head of Niagara river, 22 ms. above Niagara falls. This city is admirably situated for a great interior mart. Buffalo creek is of sufficient depth (12 feet) to admit of an excellent harbor, and the necessary works to meliorate its entrance to lake Erie, and to facilitate the ingress and egress of vessels, are now in an inconsiderable state of forwardness. The grand canal of New York debouches into Lake Erie at Buffalo harbor. The city is built upon an elevated and dry plain, extending on each side of the road leading from the harbor to the interior of N. Y. This fine city was burnt by the British in the late war, but has risen in a very improved state from its ashes.

The preceding account of Buffalo was written in 1826, and left unaltered to show its improvement, by contrast, in a period of 14 years.

Burrampooter, river of Asia, which rises near the head of the Ganges, in the mountains of Thibet. It first takes its course to the E., directly opposite to that of the Ganges, and winding with a rapid current through Thibet, where it is named Sampoo, or Zanchin, it washes the border of the territory of Lassa, and proceeds SE. to within 220 ms. of Yunan, the westernmost province of China; then turning suddenly to the W., through Assam, it enters Bengal on the NE., where it assumes the name of Burrampooter. It then makes a circle round the western point of the Garrow mountains, and altering its course to S. meets the Ganges, about 40 ms. from the sea, after having meandered for more than 2,000 ms. During the last 60 ms. before its junction with the Ganges, it forms a stream which is regularly from 4 to 5 ms. wide, and but for its freshness might pass for an arm of the sea. The Ganges is better known than the Burrampooter; but, as delineated on our best maps it is difficult to determine which is the main stream. Measured by a comparative scale, the valley of the Burrampooter is about 1,400 ms. in length; and, being a mountain river, the volume of water discharged at its mouth is enormous. The valley of this great river lies between N. lat. 22° and 33 30.

Cadorino, province in Italy, in the territory of Venice, bounded on the E. by Friuli proper, on the S. by the Bellunese, and on the N. by Brixen. The chief town is Cadore.

Cadron, tp. in Pulaski co., Ark. Pop. in 1820, 717.

Cadsaud, island on the north coast of Flanders, at the mouth of the Scheldt, which river it commands.

Cadwallader, post office in the village of Westchester, southeasternmost angle of Tuscarawas co., Ohio., about 20 ms. a little N. of W. from Cadiz, and 15 ms. NE. from Cambridge.

Caen, considerable city in Fr., in the dep. of Calvados, and late province of Lower Normandy, of which it was the capital. It has a celebrated university and an academy of literature, and the inhabitants are computed at 40,000. The river Orne runs through the city, to which the tide brings up large vessels. It is 65 ms. W. by S. of Rouen, and 125 W. of Paris. Lon. 0 17 W., lat. 49 11 N.

Caer, for some places that begin thus, as Caerdiff, see under Car.

Caernarvon, tp. in Lancaster co., Pa. It is watered by Little Conestogoe creek, and bounds on Berks co. on the NE. Pop. about 1,000.

Caermarthenshire, co. of South Wales, 48 ms. long and 25 broad, area 1,200 sq. ms. It is bounded S. by Bristol channel, W. by Pembrokeshire, N. by Cardiganshire, and E. by Brecknockshire and Glamorganshire. The principal rivers are the Towy, Cothy, and Tave; of which the first abounds with excellent salmon. It contains 228,000 acres; is divided into 8 hundreds and 145 parishes, and has 6 market towns. In 1801, the inhabitants amounted to 67,317; in 1811, to 77,287; and in 1821, to 90,239. It abounds with ancient forts, camps, and tumuli. Near Caermarthen, towards the E., may be seen several vast caverns, supposed to have been copper mines of the Romans. Near this spot is a fountain, which ebbs and flows twice in 24 hours. The county and city send each a member to Parliament.

Caermarthen, borough of Wales, capital of Caermarthenshire, on the Towy, over which is a stone bridge, to which small vessels may come up. Caermarthen is a county of itself, governed by a mayor. There are iron and tin mines in the neighborhood. It is 24 ms. SE. of Cardigan, and 220 W. by N. of London. Lon. 4 23 W., lat. 92 12 N.

Caernarvonshire, co. of North Wales, bounded on the N. and W. by the sea, on the S. by Merionethshire, and on the E. divided from Denbighshire by the river Conway. It is about 50 ms. in length and 20 in breadth. It contains 310,000 acres; is divided into 7 hundreds and 68 parishes; has one city and five market towns, and sends two members to Parliament. In 1801, the inhabitants amounted to 41,521; in 1811, to 49,336; and in 1821, to 57,958. The principal rivers are the Conway and Seint. This county being the most rugged district of North Wales, may be truly called the British Alps. Its central part is occupied by the famed Snowdon, and the prospects around are rude and savage in the highest degree, but not without a mixture of beauty, when the dimensions of the vales admit the varieties of wood, water, and meadows. The soil in the valleys on the side next Ireland is pretty fertile, especially in barley; great numbers of black cattle, sheep, and goats, are fed on the mountains; and the sea, lakes, and rivers, abound with variety of fish. Copper mines have been worked in various parts of these mountains, as well as lead, and quantities of stone, excellent for hones, are dug near Snowdon; to the dreary region of which the rich vale of Conway below forms a pleasing contrast. The chief manufacture is woolen cloth.

Caernarvon, borough and seaport of Wales, capital of Caernarvonshire, on a strait of the sea, called Menai, near its entrance into Caernarvon bay, and carries on a considerable trade with Ireland and the principal English ports. Caernarvon is governed by the constable of the castle, who is always mayor. Here are salt water baths, and elegant hot and cold baths, which are much frequented during the season. It is 7 ms. SW. of Bangor, and 244 NW. of London. Lon. 4 20 W., lat. 53 8 N.

Caerleon, town of Eng., in Monmouthshire, on the Usk, 19 ms. SW. from Monmouth, and 148 W. by N. of London. Lon. 3 0 W., lat. 51 40 N.

Caerphilly, town of Wales, in Glamorganshire, between the Taafe and Rumney, 7 ms. N. of Cardiff, and 160 W. of London.

Caerwent, village of Eng., in Monmouthshire, 4 ms. SW. of Chepstow. It is the Venta Silurum of the Romans.

Caerwys, town of Wales, in Flintshire, 5 ms. W. of Flint, and 212 NW. of London.

Cæsar's Creek, tp. in Greene co., Ohio. Pop. in 1810, 649; in 1820, 1,131.

Caffa, or Theodosia, the largest town of the Crimea, with an excellent road and harbor. Caffa was the Theodosia of the ancients, a name which has been restored to it since the Russians became possessed of the Crimea. It contains about 20,000 inhabitants, and is constantly well garrisoned. The trade consists in wax, furs, lambskin leather, and horses. Caffa is situated on a bay of the Black Sea, at the foot of some high mountain, 65 ms. E. by N. of Sevastopol, and 130 SE. of Precep. Lon. 35 20 E., lat. 45° N.

Caffy, Strait of, the ancient Cimmeric Bosporus, a strait that forms the communication between the Black Sea, and the sea of Asoph.

Caffraria, or Kuffraria.—See Africa, pages 26, 27, 28, &c.

Cagli, ancient episcopal town of Italy, in the duchy of Urbino, at the foot of the Appennines, 20 ms. S. of Urbino. Lon. 12 42 E., lat. 43 26 N.

Cagliari, ancient and rich city, capital of Sardinia, with an archbishop's see, a university, a castle, and a good harbor, Lon. 9 14 E., lat. 39 27 N.

Cahaba, river of Ala., rises in the angle between the Coosa branch of Alabama, and the Black Warrior branch of Tombigbee rivers, and flowing S. over Shelby, Cahaba, and Dallas counties, joins the Alabama at the town of Cahaba after a comparative course of 120 ms. It waters much good land.—Town and seat of justice, Dallas co., Ala., at the mouth of the Cahaba, on the left bank of Alabama river. It was the seat of government for the State, until recently the Legislature of Alabama have removed it to Tuscaloosa.

Cahoec Falls, in the Mohawk, 3 ms. above its junction with the Hudson at Waterford. The descent is about 70 feet. It is a sublime and interesting feature in American scenery.

Cahokia, village, St. Clair co., Illinois, on the E. side of the river Mississippi, 64 ms. N. by W. of Kaskaskias, and 5 from St. Louis.

Cahors, considerable town of France, in the department of Lot, and late province of Quercy, with a university. It is seated on a peninsula made by the river Lot, and built partly on a craggy rock. There are 3 bridges over the river. The cathedral is a Gothic structure, and has a large square steeple. Cahors is 50 ms. NW. of Alby, and 287 S. of Paris. Lon. 1 32 E., lat. 44 26 N.

Cajanaburg, capital of E. Bothnia, in Sweden, on lake Cajania, 300 ms. NE. of Abo. Lon. 27 45 E., lat. 64 13 N.

Cajazzo, or Cajizzo, episcopal town of Naples, in Terri di Lavora, 22 ms. NE. of Naples. Lon. 14 34 E., lat. 41 10 N.

Caicos, islands of the West Indies, to the N. of St. Domingo, which take their name from the principal one. Lon. W. C. 5 30 E., lat. 21 40 N.

Caifong, large and populous city of China, or the Hoang-ho, in the province of Honan. Lon. 113 27 E., lat. 35° N.

Cailloma, town, Penn., near the source of the Apurimac, between Caygo and Arequipo, nearly 50 ms. from the latter, and 160 from the former. Lon. W. C. 5 30 E., lat. 15 30 S.

CAIMACAN, Turkish officer, derived from Arabic, and literally signifies "Lieutenant of the Grand Vizier." One of the Caimacans is ex officio governor of Constantinople, and cannot whilst such, quit that city.

Caimans, or, more correctly, Caymans, a group of small islands, in the Caribbean sea, to the N.W. of Jamaica. Lon. W. C. 5 W., lat. 19 15 N.

Ca-Ira, village, Cumberland co., Virginia, on Willis's creek, 62 ms. W. from Richmond.

Cairngorn, mountain of Scotland, between the counties of Banff and Murray. It rises in a conical form 1,750 feet above the level of a small lake near its base, which is the source of the Avon, and 4,050 feet above the level of the sea; its sides clothed with firs, and its top generally covered with snow. It is famous for beautiful rock-crystals, much esteemed by lapidaries.

Cairo, or Grand Cairo, large city, capital of Egypt. It consists of 3 towns, about a mile apart; Old Cairo, New Cairo, and the port termed Bulac. The population is estimated at 300,000. Old Cairo is now reduced to a small place. New Cairo is a mile from the river, and 7 ms. in circumference. It stands on the right bank of the Nile, 100 ms. S. of its mouth. Lon. 31 18 E., lat. 30 3 N.

Cairo, town, Greene co., N. Y., formerly called Canton, 10 ms. above Catskill town, on Catskill creek. Pop. in 1820, 2,553.—Town, Illinois, at the mouth of the Ohio river.—Village, Sumner co., Tenn., at the influx of Bledsoe's creek, into Cumberland river, 30 ms. by land above Nashville.

Cairoan, town of the kingdom of Tunis, and next to the city of Tunis for trade and number of inhabitants. It is situate near a sandy desert, where are found many vestiges of former magnificence; it stands on the river Magrida, 60 ms. S. by E. of Tunis. Lon. 10 26 E., lat. 36 5 N.

Caistor, town of Eng., in Lincolnshire. Near it are the remains of a monastery, and many Roman vestiges. It is 12 ms. SW. of Grimsby, and 165 N. of London.—Tp., in the co. of Lincolnshire, U. C., between Binbrook and Gainsborough, and is watered by the river Welland.

Caithness-shire, most northerly co. of Scotland, 35 ms. long, and 20 broad; bounded on the N. by Pentland Frith, E. and SE. by the German Ocean, and W. by Southerlandshire. The S. angle is occupied by mountains, and a vast ridge of hills forms the SW. boundary, ending in a promontory called the Ord of Caithness, which runs out into the sea. The rest of the co. may be deemed an immense morass, interspersed with some fruitful spots, producing oats and barley, and others affording pasture for sheep and black cattle. Its other chief products, are butter, cheese, yarn, skins, feathers, and kelp. It sends a member to parliament alternately with Buteshire. English is chiefly spoken on the coast, but in the highlands, the Gaelic prevails. Pop. in 1801, 22,600; in 1811, 23,419; and in 1821, 30,238. Wick is the capital.

Caket, town of Persia, near Mount Caucasus. Its trade consists chiefly in silk. Lon. 46 15 E., lat. 39° N.

Calabar, town of the kingdom of Benin, capital of a country of the same name. The Dutch have a factory here. It is 140 ms. SSE. of Benin. Lon. 7 15 E., lat. 3 40 N.

Calabria, country of Naples, divided into the provinces of Calabria, Citeriore, and Calabria Ulteriore, or Hither and Further Calabria. The first is bounded on the S. by Calabria Ulteriore, N. by Basilica, and W. and E. by the Mediterranean. Cosenza is the capital, Calabria Ulteriore is washed by the Mediterranean on the SE. and W., and bounded by Calabria Citeriore on the N. Catanzaro is the capital.

Calahorra, episcopal town of Spain, in Old Castile, on the side of a hill, which extends to the Ebro, 70 ms. E. of Burgos. Lon. 2 7 W., lat. 42 12 N.

Calais, seaport of Fr., in the dep. of the Straits of Calais, and late province of Picardy, with a citadel. It is built in the form of a triangle, one side of which is towards the sea. The fortifications are good; but its greatest strength is its situation among the marshes, which may be overflowed at the approach of an enemy. In time of peace, there are packet boats which go twice a week between Dover and Calais. It is 21 ms. ESE. of Dover, and 152 N. of Paris. Lon. 1 56 E., lat. 50 58 N.—Tp., Washington co., Me. Pop. 1810, 372; in 1820, 418.—Town, Washington co., Me., on the Passamaquoddy river, 36 ms. NE. from Machias. Pop. 370.—Tp., Washington co., Vt., about 100 ms. NE. of Bennington, and 9 N. from Montpelier.

Calais, St., town of Fr., in the dep. of Sarte, and late province of Maine, 16 ms. NW. of Vendome.

Calamata, town of Turkey, in Europe, in the Morea. It stands on the river Spinarza, 8 ms. from the Mediterranean. Lon. 21 55 E., lat. 37° N.

Calamianes, three small islands of Asia, between Borneo and the Philippines, and N. of Parago. Lon. 118 5 E., lat. 11° N.

Calatrava, town of Spain, in New Castile, the chief place of the military order of the knights of Calatrava. It is seated near the Guadiana, 80 ms. S. of Madrid. Lon. 3 20 W., lat. 39 4 N.

Calben, town of Germany, in the old marche of Brandenburg, with a good castle, 32 ms. N. of Magdeburg.

Calcar, town of the duchy of Cleaves, seated near the Rhine, 8 ms. SE. of Cleaves. Lon. 5 55 E., lat. 51 40 N.

Calcasiu, river, La., rises in the pine woods, 20 ms. S. of Natchitoches. The Calcasiu is very remarkable for its almost perfect compliance with the curve of the Sabine, the two rivers being a trifling deviation from 35 ms. asunder, the entire length of the former; and, like the Sabine, the Calcasiu receives the largest tributaries from the right. After an entire course of 70 ms., the Calcasiu enters the lake of the same name, at lat. 30 8 N., lon. W. C. 16 23 W. This stream rises in a forest of pines, which tree composes nine-tenths of all the timber found on its banks. About 10 ms. in a direct line above the head of the Lake Calcasiu, the forest begins to become chequered with prairie, copses of timber gradually become more scattered, and at the head of the lake trees entirely disappear. On the left side, the open prairies skirt the river 15 or 20 ms. higher than on the opposite shore. In the prairie between Calcasium and Mermentau are scattered copses of wood, mostly pine, with a few oaks; soil poor and thin. Very little of the whole surface watered by Calcasium is fit for culture, though high, dry, and well watered with limpid and excellent spring water. One immense pine forest covers the country watered by Calcasium north of the prairies. The tide flows up the Calcasium as far as the head of the prairies.

Calcasium, lake, La.; is about 30 ms. in length and 10 or 12 ms. wide; communicates with the Gulf of Mexico, a channel of about 8 or 10 ms. in length, and from 1 m. to 200 yards wide. At the mouth of this outlet is a bar, having not more than four feet water. The lake, like that of Sabine, is shallow, not having more than 506 feet water in any part, and near the shores not more than 2 or 3. The banks of Calcasium outlet and lake are something higher than those of the Sabine; but on each the entire absence of timber precludes settlement.

Calcalayres, province of Peru, NE. from Cuzco.

Calcutta, or Fort William, the emporium of Bengal, situated on the E. side of the Hoogly, or western arm of the Ganges, 100 ms. from the sea, in the bay of Bengal. It is a modern city, having risen on the site of the village of Govinpour, about 90 years ago. It extends from the western point of Fort William, along the banks of the river, almost to the village of Cossipour, $4\frac{1}{2}$ ms.; the breadth in many parts inconsiderable. Calcutta is 1,030 ms. NNE. of Madras. Lon. 88 28 E., lat. 22 23 N.

Caldersburg. See Roscoe.

Caldwell, town and seat of justice, Warren co., N. Y., on Lake George. Lat. 43 22 N., lon. W. C. 3 25 E.—Tp., Warren co., N. Y. Pop. 1820, 723.—Tp., Essex co., N. J. Pop. in 1810, 2,235; in 1820, 2,020.—Co. in Ky., on both sides of Cumberland river, bounded SW. by Tennessee river, NW. by Livingston, NE. by Hopkins, SE. by Christian, and S. by Tenn.; length 40 ms., mean width 20, area 800 sq. ms. Surface generally level; soil fertile. Staples, grain, tobacco, live stock, and salted provisions. Chief town Eddyville. Pop. 1820, 9,022; and in 1840, 10,365. Central lat. 37 20 N., lon. W. C. 10 35 W.

Caledonia, village, northeast part of Claridon tp., Marion co., 8 ms. NE. by E. of Marion, and 11 ms. S. of Bucyrus.—Co., Vt., bounded by Washington SW., Essex NE. and E., Connecticut, river SE., and Orange S.; length 37, mean width 14 ms., area about 500 sq. ms.; surface hilly, and in part mountainous; soil generally productive in grain and pasturage. Chief town Danville. Pop. 1820, 16,670; and in 1840, 21,891. Central lat. 44 30 N., lon. 5 10 E. W. C.

Caledonian canal. This splendid work is amongst the most remarkable of those artificial channels which have been performed in modern times. Scotland is traversed obliquely from NE. to SW. by a very remarkable mountain valley, extending from the Atlantic ocean to the German ocean, chiefly through Invernessshire, bounded on both sides by elevated and precipitous mountains. This valley terminates towards the Atlantic ocean by Loch Linnhe, and in the German ocean by the Murray Frith. The tide from the German ocean flows to Inverness, where the discharge of Loch Ness falls into the Murray Frith. From thence the valley extends about 60 ms. to Atlantic tide-water at Fort William. The base of this valley is composed of two considerable lakes, Loch Lochy and Loch Ness, with their confluent rivers. The idea of executing a continued chain of intercommunication through this pass, by locks and canals, was suggested, in 1773, by Mr. James Watt, but no operative proceeding instituted until 1802, when Mr. Thomas Telford's nautical and inland survey of Scotland led to the execution of the Caledonian canal. In the construction of this canal, numerous and formidable obstacles were encountered, owing to the necessity of deepening the lakes, which formed a part of the line, and in consequence, also, of the impetuous character of some of the streams partly depended on as feeders. The whole was accomplished in 19 years from the first survey, by parliamentary grants, at an expense of about $4,000,000. It was opened October 23, 1822, when a steamboat and two sloops of war passed from the locks at Muirton, near Inverness, to Fort William. The passage from sea to sea, a distance of 69 ms., was effected in 13 hours, including the time requisite for clearing 22 locks.—Dupin, vol. 2, p. 217. The valleys of the Hudson, Lake Champlain, and Sorrel river, is the only other pass in the globe which bears a strong comparison, in aspect and structure, with that of Scotland. In magnitude, the American glen is on a much larger scale, but in many other essential features the analogy is striking. See Lochs Ness and Lochy.

Caledonia, town, Livingston co., N. Y., W. from Genesee river, on the road from Avon to Batavia, 30 ms. W. from Canandaigua, and 17 E. from Batavia. Gypsum abounds in the tp. Pop. 1820, 2,645.—Village, Washington, co., Missouri.

Caledonia, New, a large island, in the S. Pacific ocean, extending from 19° to 22° S. lat., and from 163° to 167° E. lon. It was discovered by Captain Cook, in 1774. The inhabitants are stout, tall, and in general well proportioned, their hair and beards black, and much frizzled, so as to be somewhat woolly in some individuals.

Calenburg, a former principality of Lower Saxony, which constitutes a part of the kingdom of Hanover. It is divided into two parts, and the principal towns are Hanover and Gottingen. It takes its name from an ancient castle, now in ruins, seated on the Leine, 17 ms. S. of Hanover.

CALENDAR, from Latin calare, to call, and, by the Romans, applied to the first day of each month.

Calhuco, town on the coast of Chili, inhabited by Spaniards, Mestees, and Indians, 180 ms. S. of Valdivia. Lon. W. C. 3 23 E., lat. 42 40 S.

Cali, city of New Granada, in the province of Popayan, in a valley of the Andes, on the river Cauca, 20 ms. E. from Bonaventura. Lon. W. C. 1° E., lat. 3 15 N.

Caliaqua, port of the W. Indies, in the W. part of St. Vincents.

CALIFE, Arabic khalifa, vicar, successor, or lieutenant; one who supplies or comes in place of another. The Arabian pontifs, Abu Bekr, Omar, and Othman, took this title from modesty, but under it their successors became the most absolute sovereigns who, perhaps, ever ruled mankind.

California, general name of the western coast of N. America, from Capè St. Lucas, N. lat. 22° 52' to N. lat. 42°, or through nearly 20° of lat. It is divided into two parts, Old California and New California. Old California was discovered under the direction, and in part by the personal observations of Cortez, the conqueror of Mexico, and found to be a long narrow peninsula extending through 11° of lat. and united to the continent to the NW., by a neck of land reaching from the mouth of the Colorado river westward 160 ms. to a bay since called San Diego. A chain of mountains ranges through this extensive peninsula. "The sky," says Humboldt, "is constantly serene, of a deep blue, and without a cloud." The Cerro Giganta, the highest peak of its mountains, reaches to near 5,000 feet. The soil is sandy and arid, and rain scanty and unfrequent. Springs of fresh water are also rare. It extends over 56,000 sq. ms., with a pop. of not more than 10,000. On the few spots where water is found, the soil is excellent; and it is reported that vines grow naturally in the mountains, and that the Jesuits, when they resided here, made abundance of wine, in taste approaching to that of Madeira. The chief town is Loreto.

California, New, extends from Old California, to the utmost limits of the Spanish claims, on the N. American coast of the Pacific ocean, or from 33° to 42° N. lat., about six hundred ms. The breadth inland is trifling, and the interior unknown, or at least very imperfectly explored. The whole extent actually peopled by civilized inhabitants does not exceed, if it amounts to 16,000 sq. ms. The soil is, however, as remarkable for its fertility and abundance of limpid water, as is that of Old California for its arid sterility. The climate of the Pacific coast of N. America, being milder than that of the Atlantic, the inhabitants of New California enjoy more temperate seasons than do those of the U. S., from the Carolinas to Connecticut, inclusive. According to Humboldt, this is a very flourishing and valuable colony. The same chain of mountains which ranges through Old California, reach into and intersect also New California. Monterey is the capital. Pop. in 1803, 15,562.

California, gulf of N. America, extends from the mouth of the Colorado river, between Sonora and Old California, in a SE. direction 800 ms. It gradually widens from its head, at the mouth of the Colorado, to its mouth between Cape Palmo in Old California, and Mazatlan in Sonora, where it is about 120 ms. wide. It is full of islands and shoals, and is very difficult to navigate. From Old California, no stream of any great consequence enters this gulf; but from Sonora, it receives, beside the Colorado and Gila, the Ascension, Hiaqui Mayo, Fuerte, Inaya, Culiacan, Iabala, Rostla, and a brook which forms Mazatlan harbor.

Calitoor, fortress of the island of Ceylon, at the mouth of a river of the same name, 28 ms. S. of Colombo.

Calix, town of Sweden, in West Bothnia, on a river of the same name, near its entrance into the Gulf of Bothnia, 22 ms. W. of Tornea.

Calhoun, village, McMinn co., Tenn., on Hiwassee river, postroad, 130 ms. SE. from Murfreesborough, and about 75 ms. SW. of Knoxville.

Calhoun's Mills, post office, Abbeville district, S. C., about 100 ms. W. from Columbia.

Calhounsville, village, Mifflin co., Penn., 52 ms. NW. from Harrisburg.

Calla Calla, river of Chili, rises in the Andes, and falls into the bay of Valdivia.

Calland's Store, post office, Pittsylvania co., Va., postroad, 188 ms. SW. from Richmond.

Calvi, town of Naples, in Terra di Lavori, 8 ms. N. of Capua. Lon. 14 19 E., lat. 41 15 N.

—Town of Corsica, on a craggy mountain and gulf of the same name, with a strong fortress and a good harbor. It is 32 ms. SW. of Bastia. Lon. 9 16 E., lat. 42 26 N.

Cam, or Grant, river of Eng., which rises in Herts, and, running NE. by Cambridge to the isle of Ely, there falls into the Ouse, to which river it is navigable from Cambridge.

Camana, small district of Aquipo, lying along the Pacific ocean. Lon. W. C. 3° E., lat. 0 16 South.

Camaron, cape of Honduras, on the N. side of that country, at the mouth of the river Tinto. Lon. W. C. 6 50 W., lat. 15 50 S.

Camarones, large river of South America, in Patagonia, falling into the Atlantic ocean 44 45 S.

Camarul, seaport of France, in the department of Finistère and late province of Brittany. It stands on a bay of the same name.

Cambay, large city of Hindoostan Proper, in the province of Guzerat. Its products and manufactures are inferior to those of few towns in India, for the country abounds in corn, cattle, and silk; and cornelian and agate stones are found in its rivers. The inhabitants are noted for embroidery, and some of their quilts have been valued at 40*l*. It is subject to the Poonah Mahrattas, is the port of Amenabad, from which it is distant 56 ms. Lon. 72 10 E., lat. 22 25 N.

Cambodia, kingdom of Asia, bounded on the N. by Laos, on the E. by Cochinchina and Siam, and on the S. and W. by the gulf and kingdom of Siam, divided by a large river called Mecan, or Cambodia, which annually overflows the country in the rainy season, between June and October.—Capital of a kingdom of the same name in Asia, on the river Mecan, or Cambodia, 150 ms. from its mouth. Lon. 104 5 E., lat. 13 10 N.

Cambray, fortified city of France, in the department of the North, and late province of the Cambresis. It has a considerable manufacture of cambricks, which took their name from this city. It is seated on the Scheldt, 22 ms. SE. of Arras, and 102 N. of Paris. Lon. 5 20 E., lat. 50 11 N.

Cambray, or Gouverneur, tp. N. Y., in St. Lawrence co., on the Oswegatchie river.

Cambresis, late province of France, 25 ms. in length, bounded on the N. and E. by Hainault, on the S. by Picardy, and on the W. by Artois. Cambray is the capital, and it is now comprehended in the department of the North.

Cambria, town Niagara co., on Niagara river, N. Y. Pop. 1820, 1,134.—Co. of Pa., between the Alleghany mountains and Laurel Hill, bounded by Somerset S., Westmoreland SW., Indiana W., Clearfield N., and Huntingdon and Bedford E.; length 36, mean width 20 ms; area 720 sq. ms. Surface hilly and rocky; soil generally of middling quality. Staples, grain, flour, whiskey, salted provisions, and live stock. Chief town Ebensburg. Pop. 1820, 3,287, and in 1840, 11,256. Central lat. 40 30 N., lon. W. C. 1 40 W.

Cambridge, town of Eng., the co. town of Cambridgeshire, and seat of a celebrated university. It takes the name of Cambridge from the bridge over the Cam, which divides the town into two parts. It is principally remarkable for a much celebrated university, consisting of 13 colleges, 4 halls, several schools, and a very extensive library. It is 17 ms. S. of Ely, and 51 N. by E. of London. Lon. 0 4 E., 52 12 N.—Village of Eng., in Gloucestershire, near Berkley, on the river Cam.—Tp. in the co. of Stormont, lies to the S. and in the rear of Clarence, U. C.—Town, Middlesex co., Mass., and a flourishing university, which consists of 4 elegant brick houses, and is, with respect to its library, philosophical apparatus, and professorships, the first literary institution in America. It was established by the original settlers of Mass. in 1638. Its officers are a president, 20 professors, 2 tutors, 4 proctors, and a regent. The library is the most extensive in the United States, and the necessary philosophical and chemical apparatus very complete. Attached to it, also, are a botanical garden, cabinet of minerals, and anatomical museum. The buildings are extensive and appropriate. In 1818 the students amounted to nearly 400, and the whole number, according to Mr. Morse, educated in the seminary, from its institution up to 1818, amounted to 4,442. Pop. in 1830, 6,072, and in 1840, East and West Cambridge contained, jointly, 9,772.—West, tp. Middlesex co., Mass. Pop. 1810, 971 1820, 1,064.—Post office Middlesex co., Mass. Pop. 1810, 2,323, including West Cambridge. 1820, 1,518.—Tp. and village Franklin co. Vt., on or near Lamelle river, 38 ms. NW. from Montpelier.—Tp. Washington co., N. Y. Pop. 1820, 2,491.—Village and seat of justice, Dorchester co., Md., on the Choptank river. Lat. 38 40 N., lon. 1 3 E. W. C.—Village Abbeville district, S. C., 150 ms. NW. from Charleston. It contains 60 or 70 houses, and 250 to 350 inhabitants.—Fine town and county seat of Guernsey co., Ohio, situated on the national road, 50 ms. westward of Wheeling, 38 in the same direction from St. Clairsville, 24 NE. by E. of Zanesville, and 42 ms. SW. by W. from Cadiz N. lat. 40 4, lon. W. C. 4 33 W. The site of this town is pleasant, and the place has the appearance of salubrity and prosperity. The main part of the town is comprised in one street along the national road. A substantial bridge here crosses Wills creek. Pop. 1830, 518, and in 1840, 815

Cambridgeshire, co. of Eng., 50 ms. long, and 25 broad, bounded on the NW. by Lincolnshire NE. by Norfolk, E. by Suffolk, S. by Essex and Hertfordshire, and W. by the counties of Huntingdon, Bedford, and Northampton. It contains 500,000 acres, is divided into 15 hundreds and 6 parishes, has a city, a university, and 8 market towns, and sends 6 members to Parliament. In 1801 the number of inhabitants was 89,346, in 1811, 101,109, and in 1821, 121,909. The principal rivers are the Ouse, Nen, and Cam. The southern and eastern parts are pleasant and healthy, but the northern part, called the isle of Ely, is low and fenny, from the confluence of many rivers. All the waters of the middle part of Eng., which do not flow into the Thames or the Trent, run into those fens, and in the latter part of the year they are sometimes overflowed by water, or appear covered with fogs. See Bedford Level.

Cambrilla, town of Spain in Catalonia, surrounded by a wall, and seated near the sea, 14 ms. W. by S. of Tarragona.

Camden, East, tp. in the Midland district, lies northerly of Ernestown, U. C.

Camden, tp. in the co. of Kent, called also Camden West, on the N. side of the river Thames, opposite to Howard, U. C.—Town, Lincoln co., Me. Pop. in 1810, 1,607; in 1820, 1,825.

—Town, Oneida co., N. Y. Pop. in 1820, 1,772.—Town of Gloucester co., N. J., opposite Philadelphia. It is a flourishing village, extending along the river. The houses are neat, and many elegant. Pop. about 650.—Town of Kent co., Del., 4 ms., SW. from Dover.—Co. of N. C., bounded by Albemarle sound SE., Pasquotank co. and river SW., Virginia N., and Currituck and North river NE.; length, 38 ms.; mean width, 6; area, 228 sq. ms.; surface level, and soil thin and generally sterile. Chief town, Jonesborough. Pop. in 1820, 6,305; and in 1840, 6,663. Central lat. 36 15 N., lon. 55° E. W. C.

—Town and seat of justice in Kershaw district, S. C., on the left side of the Wateree river, 36 ms. NE. from Columbia, and 110 NE. from Augusta. It contains 200 houses, and about 1,000 inhabitants; the common buildings necessary for judicial purposes, are an academy and several places of public worship. The river is navigable from the ocean for boats and other vessels of 70 tons, which renders Camden a place of considerable trade. Two battles were fought here during the revolutionary war: one, August 16th, 1780, in which the army of the U. S., under General Gates, was defeated by the British under Lord Cornwallis; the other, April 3, 1781, between General Greene and Lord Rawdon.—Co. of Ga., forming the SE. angle of that State, on the Atlantic ocean; bounded by that ocean E., by Florida S. and SW., on the W. limits uncertain, and by Glynn N.; length, 28 ms.; mean width, 25; area, 700 sq. ms.; surface flat; soil sandy, and in some parts marshy; staples, sugar, cotton, rice, tobacco, &c.; chief town, Jefferson. Pop. in 1820, 3,402; and in 1840, 6,075. Central lat. 32° N., lon. W. C. 4 20 W.

Formerly Newcomb, village, Somers tp., southern part of Preble co., O., 8 ms. southward of Eaton, the co. seat, and 18 ms. a little W. of N. from Hamilton, co. seat of Butler co. Pop. in 1837, 350.—Port, NW. coast of America, in Prince Frederick sound. Lon. W. C. 56 45, lat. 56 55 N.

Camelford, borough of Eng., in Cornwall, on the river Camel, 24 ms. W. of Launceston, and 229 W. by S. of London. A great quantity of yarn is spun in this place and its neighborhood. Lon. 4 55 W., lat. 50 42 N.

Cammin, district of Prussian Pomerania, converted into a principality, in favor of the house of Brandenburg, by the treaty of Westphalia. Colberg is the capital.—Seaport of Prussian Pomerania, in the principality of the same name; seated on the Oder, opposite the isle of Wollin, 30 ms. N. of Stettin. Lon. 14 55 E., lat. 54 4 N.

Campagna, or Campania, town of Naples, in Principato Ulteriore, with a bishop's see, 40 ms. SE. of Naples. Lon. 15 19 E., lat. 40 35 N.

Campagniu di Roma, anciently Latium, province of Italy, in the Ecclesiastical State, extending 60 ms. SE., along the Mediterranean, to the frontiers of Naples, formerly the most delightful and most populous country in the world; few villages, little cultivation, and scarcely any inhabitants, are now to be seen; no trees, no enclosures; nothing, in short, but the scattered ruins of temples and tombs, which present the idea of a country depopulated by pestilence. Rome is the capital.

Campaign, creek of O., in Gallia co., falling into Ohio river, 8 ms. above Gallipolis.

Campbell co., Va., bounded N. by James river, NE. by Buckingham, SE. by Charlotte, S. by Roanoke river, or Halifax and Pittsylvania, and SW. by Bedford; length, 28 ms; mean width, 20; area, 560 sq. ms.; surface hilly, and soil varied; staples, grain, flour, and tobacco; chief town, Lynchburg. Pop. in 1820, 16,570; and in 1840, 21,030. Central lat. 37° N., lon. W. C. 2° W.

—Court-house and post office, Campbell co., Va., 10 ms. S. from Lynchburg.—Co., Ky., on both sides of Licking river, opposite to the city of Cincinnati; bounded by the Ohio river N. and NE., by Pendleton S., and by Roane W.; length 32, mean width 10 ms; area, 320 sq. ms.; surface hilly; soil productive; staples, grain, flour, whiskey, live stock, salted provisions, and fruit; chief town, Newport. Pop. in 1820, 9,022. Recently the northern part of this co. was struck off and formed into a new co. under the name of Kenton. By the census of 1840, the two cos. stood thus: Kenton, 7,816; Campbell, 5,214; total, 13,030. Central lat. 39 N., lon. 7 10 W.—Co., East Tennessee, in a triangular form, bounded by Ky. N., by Clinch river SE., and by Anderson SW.; length, 35 ms.; mean width, 12; area, 420; surface hilly, and in part mountainous; soil fertile in the valleys and along the streams; staples, grain, flour, fruit, and salted provisions; chief town, Jackson'sborough. Population in 1820, 4,244; and in 1840, 6,149. Central latitude 36 30 N., 7 10 W.

Campbell's Point, cape of the NW. coast of N. America, at Cooke's inlet, SE. side. Lon. W. C. 72 75 W., lat. 67 6 N.

Campbell's Grove, village, Iredell co., N. C.

Campbell's Mills, post office, Abbeville district, South Carolina.

Canada, or the province of Quebec. By the royal proclamation of the 7th of October, 1763, this province was bounded on the E. by the river St. John, and from thence, by a line drawn from the head of that river through Lake St. John, to the S. end of Lake Nipissing; from whence the line, crossing the river St. Lawrence and Lake Champlain in the 45th parallel of N. lat., passes along the highlands which divide the rivers that empty themselves into the river St. Lawrence, from those which fall into the sea; and also along the N. coast of the Baye de Chaleurs, and the coast of the gulf of St. Lawrence to Cape Rosiers; and from thence, crossing the mouth of the river St. Lawrence, by the W. end of the island of Anticosti, terminates at the river St. John.

An act of Parliament, passed in 1774, has removed the northern and western limits of the province of Quebec, adding to its jurisdiction all the lands comprised between the northern bounds of New York, the western line of Pennsylvania, the Ohio, the Mississippi, and the southern boundaries of Hudson's Bay Company.

Canada, a general name for that part of Cabotia, or British N. America, lying in the basin of the St. Lawrence. This immense region lies between the parallels 42 and 50° N. and embracing about 30° of longitude. The value of Canada, as a habitable country, is very inadequately estimated in the United States. The soil and climate of Upper Canada bears a strong analogy with those features in New York and the New England States.

Canada, as now limited, one of the great political sections of North America, comprising two British provinces, called relatively Upper Canada and Lower Canada, in respect to their positions on both sides of the St. Lawrence river. In general terms Canada is bounded on the S. and W. by the United States, E. by New Brunswick and the gulf of St. Lawrence, and N. rather indefinitely by Labrador, another British territory. The inhabited part of Canada lies between latitudes 42 and 50° N., and stretching in a NW. by W. direction 1,200 ms. from Mingan settlement inclusive, to the mouth of Detroit river. The breadth varies, but may be assumed at a mean breadth of 100 ms. or 120,000 sq. ms. See head British America, in the general article America, pp. 58 and 59.

Canada, East, creek, N. Y., rising in Montgomery and Herkimer cos., flows SSW. about 20 ms. into the Mohawk, which it enters at Openheim.

Canada, West, the largest northern branch of the Mohawk, rises in Montgomery co., and flowing first W. 20 ms., to the borders of Oneida turns to the SE., and flowing in that direction 20 ms., falls into the Mohawk at Herkimer.

Canada, creek, northwestern branch of Wood creek, in Oneida co., N. Y.

Canadaway, creek, N. Y., in Chataque co., enters Lake Erie about 2½ ms. W. from Dunkirk.

Canadaway.—See Fredonia.

Canadea, tp., Alleghany co., N. Y. Pop. in 1820, 696.

Canadian river, the great southwestern branch of Arkansas river, rises by two large branches in the mountains of New Mexico, and flowing by comparative courses about 600 ms. each, unite at N. lat. 35°, and 18° W. from Washington city. Below the confluence of the two principal branches the Canadian fork continues E. 40 ms., where it unites with the Arkansas, receiving in the intermediate distance another large branch from the SW. For the true position, course, and relative extent of the Canadian Fork, the public stands indebted to Major Long.

Canadian sea, a term very properly applied to that greatest expanse and mass of fresh water on earth, and through which extends a considerable part of the inflected political boundary between the United States and the British provinces in North America. Of the lakes forming the component parts of this sea, five of them are of surpassing size, constituting as a whole the far largest mass of fresh water on the earth. In latitude, the Canadian sea includes from the extreme southern shore of Lake Erie N. lat. 40 40 to the mouth of Neepegon river into Lake Superior N. lat. 48 30, 8° lat. very nearly. The range of the lakes are from SE. to NW. nearly, and distance 600 ms. from the southeastern margin of Lake Erie to the northwestern of Lake Superior. The general breadth of this region, including the intervening peninsular bodies of land, is about 350 ms., and area about 210,000 sq. ms. The subjoined table shows the general area of the five great lakes, with their respective greatest length and mean breadth :

Superior - - -	350	100	35,000
Michigan - - -	320	60	19,200
Huron - - -	250	80	20,000
Erie - - -	250	50	12,500
Ontario - - -	200	35	7,000
			93,700

The immensity of the body of water contained in these great lakes from their great depth is much more matter of rational wonder than their comparative extent. Under the head of Caspian, it is shown how false is the idea that the largest of the Canadian lakes equals in extent the vast inland sea of Asia. In order to save reference, we may here observe, that if to the result of the preceding table we add for other smaller lakes 6,300 sq. ms., the lake surface of the Canadian sea would then be to the Caspian only as 100 to 124; but such a calculation would falsify the real facts in physical geography.—See Caspian.

A line drawn from Kingston at the outlet of Lake Ontario to the mouth of St. Francis river into the Georgian bay of Huron, such line and the bounding lake encloses a peninsular body of land of 300 ms. in length from SW. to NE., mean width 80 ms., and 24,000 sq. ms.

The peninsula of Michigan is very nearly commensurate with the space enclosed by lakes on three sides: E. by Erie and St. Clair, NE. and N. by Huron, and W. by Michigan, comprising a land area of 36,000 sq. ms. If a third line is drawn from the head of Green Bay of Michigan to Fond du Lac, or extreme western bay of Superior, it will measure about 250 ms., and enclose between it and Lakes Michigan, Huron, and Superior, a peninsular space of about 24,000 sq. ms. If we then add those three land spaces amounting in the aggregate to 120,000 sq. ms. to the lake summary of 3,000, we have as the joint area of land and water 13,000 sq. ms.; leaving the relative proportions of land and water as 40 to 31.

The heights here given has relation to the surface of the lakes, and disclose some very important physical facts. From these heights we see that an increased elevation of the Atlantic ocean of 90½ feet would bring the tides up the Sorrel river into Lake Champlain, a further rise of 231 feet into Lake Ontario and to the foot of the Niagara rapids. But with less rise than necessary to flow into Ontario, the tides would unite the waters of Sorrel and Hudson, and insulate all those parts of the United States and Canada northeastwards from these rivers, and such rise would of course greatly extend the water surface at the expense of that of land.

Many have expressed the opinion verbally, or by writing, that the sea of Canada is without a parallel; that opinion is, however, unfounded in reality. The Black or Euxine sea and its river inlets and outlets, are, though differing in features, of a like nature. The Don flowing into the Azoph, and that sheet of water discharged again into the Euxine, and the latter receiving from Europe the Danube, Dniester, and Dnieper, and from Asia, beside numerous smaller streams, the Kizel, Irmak, and Sacaria, and discharging its surplus waters by the straits of Constantinople into the Marmora, and from the latter, by the Hellespont, into the archipelago or northeastern part of the Mediterranean; all afford similar phenomena to those of the Canadian sea.—See and compare with this, articles Caspian and Euxine.

Canal, Dover, village, or rather the post office designation for Dover, on the Ohio canal, Tuscarawas co., O., 4 ms. northward from and above New Philadelphia.

Canal, Fulton, the post office name of the village of Fulton, on the Ohio canal, Lawrence tp., Stark co., O.; 13 ms. NW. of Canton, the county seat, 21 NE. by E. of Wooster, and 9 ms. northerly of Massillon. Pop., according to Ohio Gazetteer of 1837, 600.

Canandiagua, lake, N. Y., in Ontario co., 15 ms. in length and 1 mile in mean breadth. It receives a number of creeks and discharges its waters at the village of Canandaigua into an outlet which flows NE. 20 ms., joins Mud creek at Lyons. The level of Canandaigua lake is about 670 feet above that of the Atlantic ocean, 105 above that of Lake Erie, and 299 above the Great Western canal at Montezuma.

Canandaigua, village and seat of justice in Ontario co., N. Y., on a rising plain at the outlet of Canandaigua lake. It is one of the most elegant and thriving villages in the interior of the United States, extending in one street near two miles from the lake. Many of the houses are edifices vying in architectural magnificence with those of the most flourishing commercial seaports. The style of building and gardening are so tastefully displayed as to give to Canandaigua a peculiarly interesting aspect to the passing traveller. Lon. W. C. 17° W., lat. 42 54 N., 207 ms. W. from Albany and 90 E. from Buffalo. Pop. in 1830, 1,830; but, in 1840, had risen to 5,652.—Tp., Ontario co., N. Y., including the village of the same name. Pop. in 1820, 4,680.

Cananjocharie, town, Montgomery co., N. Y., on the Mohawk river, about 40 ms. westward from Schenectady. Pop. in 1820, 4,677.

Cananore, large seaport on the coast of Malabar. It was ceded by Tippoo Sultan, regent of Mysore, to the English East India Company in 1792. Lon. 74 10 E., lat. 12° N.

Canara, province on the coast of Malabar, subject to the Rajah of Mysore. Its most northerly port is Onore, in lat. 14 20 N.

Canard, small river of Upper Canada, falls into Detroit river between Amherstburg and Sandwich.

Canaria, or The Grand Canary, principal of the Canary islands, about 180 ms. from the coast of Africa, which gives name to the whole. It is a fruitful island, and famous for the wine that bears its name; the temperature of its air is delightful; and it abounds with good water, with trees, herbs, and delicious fruits. Here are two wheat harvests, in February and May, and the corn makes bread as white as snow. It is 42 ms. long, and 27 broad, and lies 18 leagues W. by S. of Fuertaventura. Lon. 15 34 W., lat. 28 14 N.—See Africa, p. 31.

Canary Islands, anciently called the Fortunate Islands, on account of their temperate healthy air and excellent fruits, are seven in number, lying in the Atlantic ocean, near the continent of Africa; namely, Palma, Ferro, Gomera, Teneriffe, Canaria, Fuertaventura, and Lancerota; to which may be added several smaller isles as Graciosa, Roccas, Algrananza, St. Clare, Infierno, and Lobos. From these islands the Canary birds originally came. The NE. point of these is in lon. 15 38 W., lat. 28 13 N.—See Africa, p. 31.

Canary, the capital of the island of Canaria, with a bishop's see, an inquisition, supreme council of the Seven Islands, and a castle seated on a hill. They have sugar houses, in which a great quantity of sugar is made. The wine called Sack, has hence been often termed Canary. It is computed that 10,000 hogsheads are sent annually to Eng. in time of peace. Lon. 15 50 W., lat. 28 4 N.—See Africa, p. 31.

Canastota.—See Canistota.

Canavarnal, bay of the U. S., on the Pacific coast. Lon. W. C. 47° W., lat. 45 N.

Cancalle, bay on the coast of Fr., 10 ms. E. of St. Maloes, where the English made a descent, under the Duke of Marlborough, in 1758, and hence proceeded to burn the ships at St. Maloes.

Candahar, rich trading city of Asia, capital of a kingdom of the same name. While the Persian and Mogul empires were severally undivided, it was the frontier fortress of Hindoostan towards Persia; and was esteemed the key of the western provinces of the latter, and not unfrequently changed masters, although very strong by situation, being surrounded by fens and rocks. It is 145 ms. SW. of Cabul. Lon. 67 15 E., lat. 33° N.—See head of Persic Region, art. Asia, and art. Afghanistan.

Candesh, rich and populous province, in the Deccan of Hindoostan, subject to the Poonah Mahrattas. It is bounded on the N. by Malwa, on the E. by Berar, on the S. by Dowlatabad, and on the W. by Baglana.

Candelania, bay of, at the mouth of the Atrato river. Colombia.—See Atrato.

Candia, island in the Mediterranean, formerly Crete, and to the S. of the Archipelago. The capital of the same name, though populous formerly, is little better than a desert, there being nothing but rubbish, except at the bazar or market-place; and the harbour of Candia is now fit for nothing but boats; but the walls of the towns are standing, and it is the see of a Greek archbishop. The products are corn, wine, oil, wool, silk, and excellent honey. The climate of Candia is delightful. The heat is never excessive; and in the plains violent cold is never felt. In the warmest days of summer the air is cooled by breezes from the sea. Except December and January, but little cold is felt. The narrowness of the island exposes its entire surface to the influence of sea breezes, which are generally mild and genial. The mountains are covered with a great number of odoriferous plants. In a word, from the hills, the vales, and the plains, on all hands there arise the most exquisite perfumes, which embalm the air, and render it a luxury to breathe it. Candia is 200 ms. in length, and 50 in breadth. It is 500 ms. SW. of Constantinople. Lon. 25 18 E., lat. 35 18 N.—Town, Rockingham co., N. H. Pop. in 1810, 1,290; in 1820, 1,273.

Candlemas Isles, near the coast of Sandwich Land. Lon. 27 13 W., lat. 57 10 S.

Candor, tp. and post office, Tioga co., N. Y., on Cuttant creek, 10 ms. NNW. from Owego, and by post road 215 ms. SW. by W. from Albany. Pop. in 1820, 1,655.

Candy, Kingdom of Ceylon, containing about a quarter of the island. It is full of hills, whence rivulets proceed, which abound with fish. The inhabitants are dexterous in turning these rivulets to water their land, which is fruitful in rice, pulse, and hemp. The king is absolute, and his subjects are idolaters.—Capital of a kingdom of the same name, in the island of Ceylon. Lon. 80 42 E., lat. 7 45 N.

Candy's Creek, post office, Cherokee nation, in the NW. part of Ga.

Cane, Grotto del, famous grotto, on the banks of Lake d'Agano, 7 ms. from Puzzoli, in the kingdom of Naples. A suffocating vapour rises a foot above the bottom of this cave, and is destructive to animal life. A dog having his head held in this vapour, is convulsed in a few minutes, and soon after falls motionless to the earth, hence the name. The fellows who attend at the cave, have always some miserable dogs, with ropes about their necks, ready for this cruel purpose.

Canea, considerable town of the island of Candia, with a good harbor. The environs are adorned with forests of olive trees, mixed with fields, vineyards, gardens, and brooks, bordered with myrtle-trees and laurel-roses. Lon. 24 15 E., lat. 35 20 N.

Canesus, small lake of Ontario co., N Y., discharges its waters into Genesee river.

Canfield, town, Trumbull co., Ohio, 190 ms. NE. from Columbus, and about 30 NW. from Beaver, in Penn. Pop. in 1820, 787.

Canina, capital of the district of the same name, in the N. part of Albania, a province of Turkey in Europe, lying near the entrance of the Gulf of Venice, 8 ms. N. of Valona. Lon. 19 25 E., lat. 41 12 N.—See Joanino.

Canistota, village in Lenox, Madison co., N. Y., on the great western canal, post road 27 ms. W. from Utica.

Cannay, one of the western isles of Scotland, SW. of the isle of Skye. This island is fertile, and is noted for vast basaltic columns, which rise above each other to a great height, in many successive ranges, each separated from the other by a stratum of pebbly concretions. On the E. side of the island, the tops of an immense number of these columns appear at low water, forming a sort of causeway of surprising extent, the surface of which is smooth and regular, like an ordinary paved street.

Cannaughquensing, village and creek, Butler co., Pa. Pop. 1,300.

Cannaveral, cape of Florida. N. lat. 28 22, on. W. C. 3 35 W. It was off this cape (April 29, 1814) that the British brig Epervier, of 32 guns and 128 men, was captured by the U. S. sloop Peacock, Captain Warrington, after an action of 42 minutes.

Cannelton, village of Perry co., Ia., situated on the Ohio river, opposite Hawesville, Hancock co., Ky. The remarkable circumstances under which this village was founded, and attending its existence, deserve more than a mere notice of its name. It is situated on the margin of the Ohio river, on one of those comparatively, with the now highest floods of that stream, elevated alluvial plains so characteristic of the banks of Ohio, and at the foot of high bluffs or hills. In 1830, a vein of mineral coal was discovered in the adjacent hills by Judge Almey McLean, and which discovery led on to the opening of a stratum of from four to six feet of coal, having some resemblance to the English Cannel coal; hence the name. This coal deposit is now worked by a company, and appears to be of immense extent. The coal, sold at 5 cents per bushel, yields a fair profit. This notice is derived from an ample description given by Mr. F. A. Hall, in a letter to F. Markoe, jr., Esq., and published in the National Intelligencer of July 20, 1843. The same authority states the existence at the same locality of abundant iron ore. Cannelton was first named Coal Haven, and the name changed to suit the supposed species of coal, which, though not identical with the real Cannel coal, is of excellent quality.

Cannonche, river of Georgia, branch of the Ogechee.

Cannonsburg, tp., Washington co., Pa. Pop. 1820, 440.

Canoga, small creek, N. Y., between Seneca and Cayuga lakes, discharges into Seneca outlet.

Canoge, the ruins of which are at present of great extent, is a town of Hindoostan Proper, in the province of Agra, seated on the Ganges, near its confluence with the Calin. It is now reduced to the size of a middling town. It is said to have been built more than 1,000 years before the Christian era, and to have been the capital of all Hindoostan, under the predecessor of Porus, who fought against Alexander. It is 127 ms. SE. of Agra. Lon. 80 13 E., lat. 27 3 N.

Canonicut, island in Naragansett bay, belonging to the State of R. I. The soil is fertile and well cultivated; the inhabitants are about 600.

Canonsburg, village, Washington co., Pa., on the road from Pittsburg to Washington, 18 ms. from the former and 7 from the latter place. It is the seat of Jefferson college, formerly an academy, but changed from the latter to the former in 1802. The college is under the direction of a president and two professors. The library contains about 1,000 volumes, and the philosophical apparatus is respectable. Pop. 1840, 687. Jefferson college, located in the borough of Canonsburg, was chartered and organized in 1802, though with an enlargement rather than any serious change in its objects of tuition. This institution had its origin in a Latin and clerical school formed at the residence of the Rev. John McMillan, between 2 and 3 ms. SE. from Canonsburg, commenced about the close of the revolutionary war. The log cabin in which this school was held was standing in 1839; and in it the writer of this article has to say he stood in 1789 and 1839.

Canosa, town of the kingdom of Naples, in Terra di Barri. Between Canosa and the river Osanto are still some traces of the ancient town of Cannæ, in the plain of which was fought the celebrated battle between Hannibal and the Romans. Lon. 16 32 E., lat. 41 30 N.

Cape Haitien, or Cape François, town and seaport on the north side of the island of Haiti, or St. Domingo. This place was estimated to contain a population exceeding 10,000, but was nearly destroyed by an earthquake on the 7th of December, 1842. Lat. 19 50 N., lon. 72 10 W. of London.

Cape of Good Hope, the southern extremity of Africa, discovered by the Portuguese navigator Bartholomew Diaz, in 1486, who gave it the name of Cabo Tormentoso, from the boisterous weather which he met with near it; but Emanuel, king of Portugal, on the return of Diaz, changed its name to that of Cape of Good Hope, from the hope he entertained of finding a passage beyond it to India; and in this he was not deceived, for Vasco de Gama, having doubled this cape on the 20th of November, 1497, proceeded to India, and landed at Calicut, on the 22d May, 1498. The Cape of Good Hope was first touched at by the Dutch in 1600, and in 1650 they established a settlement at this place, of which they held undisturbed possession for near 150 years. Here is a neat town called Cape Town, rising in the midst of a desert, surrounded by a black and dreary mountains.—See Cape Town.

Cape of Good Hope, colony, extends over all the southern regions of Africa, surrendered by capitulation to the British in 1795, but was restored in 1802, by the treaty of Amiens. It again surrendered to the British, in 1806; and now forms part of their dominions.—See Africa, p. 27.

Cape Colony, as represented on Black's Edinburg Atlas, extends from Cape Castle, on the Atlantic ocean, lon. 18° E. London, to the mouth of Kiskamma river. Lon. 27 30 E., or from W. to E., along S. lat. 33°, about 540 ms.; and from Cape Lagullas, S. lat. 34 25 to S. 30° inland. The British Government have anglicised, in great part, the local subdivisions. The Cape district, or extreme west, remains, and is followed by Stellenboch, continuing the name on a very small scale of a large former Dutch province. Clan William now follows the new Stellenboch, on the southern coast, extending from False Bery and Stellenboch, Schwellendam reaches to Gauretz river, and is followed by George, and the Big Uitenhage, two districts nearly commensurate with the former Schwellendam of the Dutch. The former Graaf Reynet, or eastern Dutch province is near and along the ocean now called George, and inland next to George Somerset, and still more northerly, Graaf Reynet. The inclination of the far greater part of the Cape Colony is southward, though towards its northern extreme flow the higher sources of Orange river, and from its north-western district Clan William, flow, beside some of lesser note—the considerable volume of Olifants river. We say considerable, however, only as comparative, since like all the other rivers of Africa, those of the Cape are only abundant in water during the rainy seasons.—See art. Africa, pp. 27, 28.

Cape Henry, opposite Cape Charles, the point to the SE. of the mouth of the Chesapeake bay.

Cape Town, capital of the Cape of Good Hope colony, in Africa. Lat. 33 56 S., lon. 18 23 E. from London, and 95 23 E. from W. C. This city stands on a capacious bay of the Atlantic ocean. It is tolerably well built. Pop. 15,000. The adjacent country is mountainous, though the valleys are fertile and well cultivated. This city being the great entrepot between the Atlantic and Indian oceans, must be at all times a very important commercial position. Cape Town, with the whole of S. of Africa, was ceded to Great Britain in 1814.

Cape Vincent, village of Jefferson co., N. Y., on the St. Lawrence river.

Caphon Springs, village, Frederick co., Va.

Capitinati, province of the kingdom of Naples, bounded NW. by the province of Molisi. W. by Benevento, S. by Basilicata and Terra di Bari, and ENE. and N. by the Adriatic sea. As a natural section, Capitinata slopes eastward from the Appennine mountains, and is included between latitudes 41° and 42° N. On the Adriatic side, this province is indented by the Gulf of Manfredonia, and traversed by a spur of the Appennines, protruding the promontory of Mount Gargan. The name, according to Sismondi, is derived from the title of the Greek Governor CATAPAN, when that nation regained their ascendancy in that country, A. D. 982—1002. Capital, Manfredonia.—Town of New Granada, 60 ms. from Tunja.

Capo Fino, a barren rock in the territory of Genoa, with a castle on its eastern peak. Near it is a small harbor of the same name, 13 ms. ESE. of Genoa. Lon. 8 56 E., lat. 44 20 N.

Cardiganshire, co. of South Wales, bounded on the N. by Merionethshire and Montgomeryshire, on the E. by Radnorshire and Brecknockshire, on the S. by Carmarthenshire and Pembrokeshire, and on the W. by Cardigan bay. It extends 42 ms. from N. to S., and 20 from E. to W., and is divided into five hundreds, containing six market towns, and 64 parishes, extending over 500,000 acres. It lies in the diocese of St. David's, and sends two members to Parliament. The air is milder here than in most parts of Wales. To the S. and W. are plains fruitful in corn; but the N. and E. parts are a continued ridge of mountains; however, there are cattle bred in all parts; but they have neither wood nor coals of their own for fuel. They have fish in plenty, with fowls both tame and wild. Near the rivers are great numbers of otters; and in the valleys are several lakes. The mountains abound with veins of lead and silver ore; and the mines have been worked several times to great advantage: Sir Hugh Middleton is said to have cleared £2,000, a month for several years together, which enabled him to bring the New river water to London; but he expended the whole on that great object. The principal rivers are the Tyvy, the Rydal, and the Istwith. Pop. in 1801, 42,956; in 1811, 50,260; and in 1821, 57,311.

CARDINAL, chief, principal, or first. The radical meaning "the foundation—first principle," an ecclesiastical dignity. In its original application, which dates back to the earliest ages of Christianity, the title of cardinal was given to regular clergy—bishops, priests, and deacons, who were attached to a particular church, to distinguish them from clergymen who remained unsettled. This distinctive application remained unchanged to the eleventh century, when the popes, in their increase of power, deemed it suitable to their views to have a council of these cardinals; which, however, in the first age of the existence of such council conferred no superiority of its members over other clergy of equal rank in the church. But in his case the laws of nature had their course and effect—an increase of concentrated power. The election of the popes finally fell into their hands. Urban VIII, in 1631, granted them the title of Eminence, which replaced their former title of Illustrious. Their number had been fixed in 1526 at 70, which has remained the regular number, except that death rarely admits a full college. Many cardinals have been ministers of State; but Cardinal Fleury, Prime Minister of France, and who died in 1743, was the last of the order of any note who have been, out of the Papal States, called to so high political station.

Y., the middle branch of Conewango creek rises within 5 ms. of Lake Erie, and, flowing SSE. 20 ms., joins the outlet of Chatauque lake, and both unite with the Conewango 5 ms. N. of the northern boundary of Pa.—Post office, on the Casdaga creek, is about 60 ms. SSW. from Buffalo.

Casey, co., Ky., bounded by Adair and Washington W., Mercer N., Lincoln NE., and Pulaski SE.; length, 30 ms.; mean width, 12; area, 360 sq. ms.; surface hilly; soil productive; chief town, Caseyville. Pop. 4,349; and in 1840, 4,939.

Caseyville, village and seat of justice, Casey co., Ky. Lat. 37° 22' N., lon. 7° 32' W.

Cash, river of Illinois, rises in Union, flows SE. into Johnson, and thence SW., W., S., and SE., into Ohio, in Alexander co.

Cash-Clap, settlement and post office, Johnson co., Illinois.

Cashel, town of Ireland, in Tipperary, with an archbishop's see, 13 ms. NW. of Clonmel. Lon. 7° 33' W., lat. 52° 26' N.

Cashgur, or Cashgar, city of Asia, capital of a country of the same name. It stands at the foot of the Himmalaya mountains, and enjoys a good trade with the neighboring countries. Lon. 73 25 E., lat. 41 30 N.

Cashmere, town, from which the country in which it is situated has derived its name, is placed in Black's Atlas at N. lat. 34, lon. 75 10 E. London, about 200 ms. nearly due E. from Attock, on the Indus.—Province, or rather mountain valley, of Hindoostan proper, bounded on the W. by the Indus, on the N. by the Himalaya mountains, on the E. and S. by Lahore. The valley or country of Cashmere is 80 ms. long, and 40 broad; and is celebrated for its romantic beauties, the fertility of the soil, and the temperature of the atmosphere. Among other curious manufactures of Cashmere is that of shawls; and the delicate wool of which they are made, is the product of a species of goat of this country, or of the adjoining Thibet. Here are bred species of sheep called Hundoo, which are employed in carrying burdens. The Cashmereans have a language of their own, said to be anterior to that of the Sanscrit; and a religion, too, it is thought, different from that of the Hindoos.—Large city of Hindoostan Proper, capital of the province or valley of Cashmere. It is seated on both sides of the Chelun, 285 ms. E. by S. of Cabul. Lon. 73 11 E., lat. 33 49 N.

Cashna, extensive empire of Africa, part of the region called Negroland; bounded on the N. by Libyza and Zahara, on the S. by the Niger, and on the E. by Zamphara and Bornou. It resembles Bornou in climate, soil, and natural productions, and in the color, genius, religion, and government of the people. The rains, indeed, are less violent than those of Bornou. This country is known in our books by the names of Cassina, Cashna, Wasnah, Wangara, Gangara, &c.—See Africa, page 70.—Capital of the empire of Cashna, in Africa, 70 ms. S. by W. of Mesuratar in 16 20 N. lat.

Casimir, town of Poland, in the palatinate of Lublin. Lon. 22 3 E., lat. 51° N.

Caspian sea, great inland sea of Asia, bounded on the N. by the country of the Kalmucks, on the E. by a tribe of the Turcomans, on the S. by Persia, and on the W. by Georgia and Circassia. It is 690 ms. in length, reckoning from Gurief to Adshetifar, and in no part more than 260 ms. in breadth. It has no tide; and, on account of its frequent shoals, is navigable only for vessels drawing from 9 to 10 feet water; it has strong currents, and its water is salt. There are certain winds that prevail over it with such absolute sway, that vessels are often deprived of every resource; and, in the whole extent of it, there is not a port that can be called safe. The surface of this lake or sea has been found, by recent admeasurement, upwards of 320 feet depressed below that of the Euxine or Black sea. Subsequently, however, the depression being so great has been doubted, but at the Caspian surface is far below that of the Euxine, is regarded as an established fact.—See Dead sea, or Asphaltic sea.

From a very common opinion that Lake Superior in N. America was equal in extent to the Caspian, I have taken some pains to measure both on good maps, and the following is the comparative result. The Caspian extends from N. lat. 37 15 to 47 10, or within a small fraction of 10° of lat., 690 ms. The mean width is at least 180 ms. These dimensions yield an area of 124,000 sq. ms. Lake Superior lies in the form of a triangle. Base, from the outlet of St. Mary's to the mouth of St. Louis river, 350 ms. The perpendicular, from the mouth of Redstone river to the base, 150 ms. Area 26,000 sq. ms.

So far, in fact, is any one of the Canadian lakes from being equal to the Caspian, that the entire area of Superior, Huron, Michigan, Erie, and Ontario, only amount to about 93,700 sq. ms., and of course, when taken together, are to the Caspian as 93 to 124, or two-thirds, very nearly.—See Black sea, Canadian sea, and Euxine.

Caspian, lake of Vt., in Greensborough, Caledonia co.

Caspian Basin.—This great section of the habitable earth is peculiar in being greatly the largest extent having no oceanic communication. From every appearance of the intermediate space, it is obvious that the Aral and Caspian once formed a single sheet of water. The Oxus, or Jihon, discharged one of its branches into the Caspian until within five centuries past; accumulating sand and diminution of its level have closed this inlet into the Caspian, and at present the entire flood of the Jihon enters the Aral. In every geographical point of view, however, the Aral and Caspian basins ought to be considered as one natural section of the terraqueous earth. Taken with this latitude, the basin of the Caspian extends from the sources of the Jihon, N. lat. 36 0, to those of the Kama, N. lat. 61 0, embracing 25° of latitude. The greatest length from the mountains of Indostan to the extreme northern sources of the Volga, 2,500 ms. in a direction of NW. and SE. It is bounded on the NE. by the Imans, or Belur Dag, and Ural mountains; on the SE. by the mountains of Indostan; on the SW. by the Caucasus, or its enbranchments into Persia; and on the NW. the Valday hills separate the confluents of the Baltic and White seas from the sources of the Volga and Kama. This immense space averages at least 1,000 ms. of mean width, and 2,500,000 sq. ms. in area. The most remarkable rivers of this basin are, in Europe, the Volga, flowing into the Caspian; in Asia, the Ural, Kur, Kizal Ozein, and Tredjend, entering the Caspian, and the Jihon and Sihon into the Aral sea.—See those rivers under their respective heads.

Similar to the Mediterranean, Black, and Baltic seas, the Caspian has no tides, or at least none worthy notice. Near the shores it is shallow, and, being subject to violent tempests, its navigation is dangerous and difficult. This deficiency is amply compensated by the rivers, particularly the Volga. This great stream, by all its branches, the Kama, Oka, and Volga proper, presents the most unbroken river navigation on the eastern continent. The Oxus, or Jihon, is also a river of considerable magnitude, and flowing NW. from Indostan, might, in the hands of a civilized people, form part of a line of commercial communication between Europe and Asia; but from the northern shores of the Caspian to Indostan all is barbarism, slavery, and ruin.

In one circumstance, the Caspian basin is peculiar. The surface of that inland sea is the second lowest depression on this planet, being, as is already stated under the head of Black Sea, 320 feet lower than the surface of the Black sea. The water of the Caspian is considerably less salt than that of the Atlantic ocean.—See Dead sea.

Caspian Gates, the Pylæ Caspiæ of the ancients, pass of Rudbar of the modern Persians, and pass of Gudook of the Turkians. This was the pass by which Alexander entered Hyrcania, (Khorasan,) and the most remarkable of the gaps in that chain of snow-clad mountains, which separates Irac Adgemi from Mazanderan. "We finally," says "Burnes, "cleared the valley by the pass of Gudook, which leads up to the table land of Persia. Our ascent from the dell was continued and gradual, and at Feerozkoh we were again 6,000 feet above the sea," (the Caspian.)

Cassano, town of Italy, in the duchy of Milan, on the Adda, 15 ms. N.E. of Milan. Lon. 9 24 E., lat. 45 30 N.—Town of Naples, in Calabria Citeriore, with a bishop's see, 35 ms. N. of Cosenza. Lon. 16 20 E., lat. 39 55 N.

Cassel, capital of the landgrate of Hesse-Cassel, divided into the old and new town. The streets are broad, the market places spacious, and there are four churches. The castle, or palace, whence there is an extensive and delightful prospect, is built of freestone. The gardens, the arsenal, and the cabinet of curiosities, deserve the attention of travellers. It is seated on the Fulda, 40 ms. S.E. of Paderborn. Lon. 9 29 E., lat. 51 19 N.—Town of Fr., in the dep. of the North, and late French Flanders, seated on a mountain, whence may be seen 32 towns, and the German ocean, though 50 ms. from it. It is 10 ms. N.E. of St. Omer. Lon. 2 36 E., lat. 50 48 N.—Strong town of Germany, in the circle of the Lower Rhine, situated on the Rhine, opposite Mentz, with which it has a communication by a bridge of boats.

Cassina, lake, so named by Mr. Schoolcraft, in honor of General Cass. It forms one of the sources of the Mississippi river, above lake Winnepeg.

Cassina, Cashna, or Wassana, country of the interior of Africa, on the Niger.—See Cashna and Wassana, and art. Africa, pp. 21, 22.

Cassiquari, river of South America, in Colombia. It is that singular stream which flows from the Orinoco into the Rio Negro, and forms a connecting channel between the basins of the Orinoco and Amazon rivers. According to Tanner's map, this remarkable separation takes place at lon. W. C. 10 40 E., lat. 3 0 N.

Cassovia, or Cashaw, strong town of Hungary, with a fine arsenal, seated near the river Horat, 55 ms. N.E. of Agria. Lon. 21 25 E., lat. 46 48 N.

Castanovitz, town of Austrian Croatia, seated on the river Unna, which divides that country from Turkey. Lon. 17 19 E., lat. 45 40 N.

CASTE, race, or rather lineage, as it means persons descended from the same stock. The term came into the languages of Europe through the Portuguese, and by them from Indostan, and there again from "TCHADI," Sanscrit. That congeries of nations to which we apply the general name Hindoo, and who have from time immemorial inhabited that great projection of Asia from the Himalaya mountains to Cape Comorin, and from the river Ganges to the Indus, inclusive, have, from the most remote antiquity, been subdivided into four castes, or TCHADI. These castes are, 1. Brachmins; 2. Kshatryas, or, as often called, Rajepootras, soldiers; 3. Vaisayas; 4. Sudras.

The Brachmins, or sacerdotal caste, have maintained a rank, influence, and power, unknown to the priests of any other parts of the earth. They are, however, greatly subdivided into orders and states.

The second caste, Kshatryas, or Rajepoots, "soldiers," might be called the ruling class. The terms Rajepoots comes from Rajah, a ruler, prince, or sovereign, and therefore these men of the sword denominate themselves thus as descendants of rajahs, or princes.—See the articles Rajepoots and Rajepootana.

The Vaisayas comprise the third caste of the Hindoos. Their duties consist in the various pursuits of agriculture, in the field, garden, and pasture, and in the disposal of landed property. When the Vaisayas adopt the life of itinerant merchant, they are known by the title of Banyan. By the laws of their caste they are free from military duty, but of late ages many Vaisayas have become Rajepoots. The Mahrattas are so generally descended from Vaisayas, that, in order to hide their origin, they claim the title of Rajepoots nationally, from whence comes Rajepootana as a geographical term.

The Kshoodra, or Sudra caste, is the fourth, the lowest, and most numerous class of Hindoos. The class is devoted to servile labor, and in all cases where the severity of original institutions have not been softened by political necessity, the degradation of the Sudra is inhuman. They are compelled to work for the Brachmins, being considered a created solely for their use. They are not, by the laws of Menu, allowed to collect property. They must never read or hear read the Vedas, or sacred books, nor are they to be taught or receive any religious instruction or consolation.

Below these four castes there are outcasts still more degraded and wretched than even the lowest Sudra. Of these miserable objects of contempt two classes are in particular named: the Buncis, Sunker and Pariah.

Modifications of the Hindoo castes have been inevitable; even the despised Pariahs have been admitted into the armies, and shared in some small degree the immunities enjoyed by the military caste but in a general view, society, in all the vast region of Indostan, is based on these primitive artificial distinctions. Hope and moral and intellectual improvement must be alike unknown under the influence of such a system—a system, however, in some degree, found in all countries and under a modifications of society, and in every society the effects must be in proportion to cause.

Castelamara, town of Naples, in Principat Citeriore, with a bishop's see, and a good harbor 15 ms. S.E. of Naples. Lon. 14 35 E., lat. 4 40 N.

Castel-Nuovo-di-Carfagnana, town of Italy, in the Modenese, with a strong fort. It is the capital of the valley of Carfagnana, and seated on the river Serchio, 17 ms. above Lucca. Lon. 10 40 E., lat. 44 5 N.

Castellane, town of France, in the department of the Lower Alps, and late province of Provence. It is seated on the Verdon, in a hilly country, 27 s. S. by E. of Senez. Lon. 6 34 E., lat. 43 5 N.

Castellon, town of Spain, in Catalonia, 5 ms. W. of Roses. Lon. 24 53 E., lat. 42 18 N.

Castelnaudary, town of France, in the department of Aude, and late province of Languedoc, on an eminence. The Languedoc canal here forms a basin about 3,600 feet in circumference. Castelnaudary is 15 ms. W. of Carcassonne. Lon. 2° 19' E., lat. 43 19 N.

Castel Rodrigo, town of Portugal, in the province of Tra-los-Montes, 30 ms. NW. of Ciudad Rodrigo. Lon. 6 22 W., lat. 41° N.

Castiglione, town of Italy, in the Mantuan, with a castle. It was taken by the French on August 3, 1796. It is 20 ms. NW. of Mantua. Lon. 10 32 E., lat. 45 23 N.

Castile, principal and most opulent of the kingdoms into which Spain was formerly divided. It now forms the two provinces of Old Castile and New Castile.

Castile, Old, province of Spain, 192 ms. in length, and 115 in breadth, bounded on the S. by New Castile, on the E. by Arragon and Navarre, on the N. by Biscay and the Asturias, and on the W. by Leon. Burgos is the capital.

Castile, New, or Toledo, province of Spain, 200 ms. in length, and 184 in breadth, bounded on the E. by Old Castile, on the E. by Arragon and Valencia, on the S. by Murcia and Andalusia, and on the W. by Estramadura. It is divided into 3 parts: Argaria to the N., Mancha to the E., and Arragon to the S. Madrid is the capital.

Castile del Oro, or New Castile, in America. See Terra Firma.

Castillara, town of Italy, in the duchy of Mantua, 6 ms. NE. of Mantua. Lon. 10 54 E., lat. 44 14 N.

Castillon, town of France, in the department of Gironde, and late province of Guienne, famous for a victory gained by the French over the English in 1451. It is seated on the Dordogne, 25 ms. E. of Bordeaux. Lon. 0 2 E., lat. 44 52 N.

Castina, village Thompson tp., NE. part of Seneca co., Ohio, situated on the road from Tiffin, the county seat, to Sandusky city, 18 ms. NE. from Tiffin, and 24 SW. of Sandusky city.

Castine, village Hancock co., Me., on the E. side of Penobscot bay, 4 ms. S. of Penobscot, in the lat. of 44 24 N., and lon. W. C. 9° E. It is a place of considerable foreign trade.—Tp. in Hancock co., Me., including the above village. Pop. in 1810, 1,036, and 1820, 975.

Castio, ancient Mytelene, formerly capital of the island, when called Lesbos, now a wretched village. Lat. 39 15 N.

Castle Cary, town of Eng., in Somersetshire, 12 ms. SE. of Wells, and 112 W. by S. of London. Lon. 2 32 W., lat. 51 5 N.

Castle Comb, town of Eng., in Wiltshire, so called from its ancient castle. It is 12 ms. NNE. of Bath.

Castle Hedingham, village of Eng., in Essex, 7 ms. SW. of Sunbury.

Castlemans, the eastern constituent branch of the Youghiogeny river, rises in Allegheny co., Md., between Meadow and Negro mountains. It first flows NE., about 12 ms., into Somerset co., Pa. Through the latter co. this stream curves 30 ms., and falls into Youghiogeny, 11 ms. N. from the Md. line, and opposite the eastern foot of Sugar Loaf mountain. The fall in this stream is considerable; where it is passed by the United States road its bed is 1,979 feet above the ocean level, from which to its mouth it falls near 1,000 feet.

Castle Rising, borough of Eng., in Norfolk, it is governed by a mayor, and sends 2 members to Parliament. The castle, whence it has its name, has now fallen into ruins. It is 7 ms. NE. of Lynn, and 103 NNE. of London. Lon. 0 30 E., lat. 50 52 N.

Castleton, village of Eng., in the peak of Derbyshire, at the foot of a rock above 250 feet high, on which are the remains of a castle, ascribed to William Peverel, natural son of the Conqueror.—Town Rutland co., Vt., 20 ms. E. of Mount Independence. Pop. 1,200.—Village Rensselaer co., N. Y.

Castletown, tp. Richmond co., Staten Island, N. Y. Pop. 1820, 1,527.—Capital of the Isle of Man. Lon. 4 35 W., lat. 53 55 N.

Castor, town of Eng., in Lincolnshire, 15 ms. NE. of Lincoln, and 159 N. of London. Lon. 0 9 W., lat. 53 30 N.

Castres, town of France in the department of Tarn, and late province of Languedoc, of which it was recently an episcopal see. It is seated in a fine valley, on the Agout, 20 ms. S. of Alby. Lon. 2 20 E., lat. 43 27 N.

Castri, a small mud village, of about 200 crowded houses, can occupy but a very small part of the site of the ancient Delphi. "It is situated," says Hobhouse, "a little to the east of a circular hollow in the mountain, round which are the rows of seats belonging to the Pythian stadium. Above Castri is a perpendicular rugged rock; below it is a steep descent into the vale of the Plistus; and on the other side of which are the stony, flat, hills of Mount Cirphis." At Delphi, all is not only ruin—it is desolation. This place was not, as is commonly supposed, peculiarly celebrated amongst the ancient Greeks for the oracle of Apollo, but much more as being the treasury of their wealth. The temples of Apollo at Delphi, and in the island of Delos, were dedicated as repositories of money, as was the temple at Jerusalem. Their treasures were committed by the Greeks to the sacred care of Apollo, and they very carefully placed his shrines amongst the crags of Phocis and the rocks of Delos. "On the whole," observes Hobhouse, on the spot, "you would, I think, be disappointed with the situation of this place, [Delphi,] which is so hidden in a nook, or a sort of natural amphitheatre, about a mile up the mountain, as to afford a prospect, neither of the depth of the precipice below nor of the height of the rocks above. You would be very much at a loss to guess, were a town of nearly two miles in circumference could have been placed, for there are not more than two small spots of level ground any where within the circuit of the present remains. You would look in vain for the "woods that wave," as, except in the little olive grove surrounding the monastery, there is not a single tree on the rocks either above or below. The laurel has again been transplanted to her native Tempe. If, however, forgetting the poetic raptures you expected to feel in the bosom of Parnassus, you should consider only the object which the Greeks must have had in view, in offering their wealth and the richest productions of art, at this favorite shrine, you would at once allow that no place could have been selected better adapted for the security of their united treasures than the steeps of Castri, which, to an open enemy, must be perfectly inaccessible. Indeed, though Delphi was often plundered, yet, when a serious resistance was made, the Gauls, under Brennus, as well as the Persians of Xerxes' army, were repulsed, and did not dare to advance into the fortresses of the mountains. The same object of security induced the Greeks to fix their other magnificent temple of Apollo on the island of Delos, which modern travellers have described as one mass of rugged rocks."

The Phocæans at one time carried away from Delphi 10,000 talents, or above 8,500,000 dollars in gold and silver. This plunder was made in the second sacred war, 355 years A. C.; and yet, enough of wealth and art remained to excite the admiration of Pausanius five centuries afterwards. Of all those wonders of art which once adorned and rendered this place indeed sacred, only one unequivocal specimen remains, that is, the triple twisted serpentine column of brass, whose three heads supported the tripod, dedicated by the Greeks, after the battle of Plataea, to Apollo, which is still to be seen, though mutilated, in the Hippodrome, the Atmeidan of the Turks in Constantinople.

Castro, town of Italy, in the patrimony of St. Peter, 40 ms. NW. of Rome. Lon. 11 54 E., lat. 42 23 N.—Maritime town of the kingdom of Naples, 6 ms. S. of Otranto. Lon. 18 31 E., lat.

40 16 N.—Town of S. America, in Chili, capital of the Island of Chiloe. It is 180 ms. S. of Valdivia. Lon. 75 5 W., lat. 42 4 S.

Castro-Marino, town of Portugal, in Algarve. It is strong by situation, and seated near the mouth of the Guadiana, 55 ms. S. of Beja. Lon. 7 12 W., lat. 37 6 N.

Castro-Vereyna, town of Peru, remarkable for mines of silver, and for good tobacco, and wholesome air. It is 125 ms. SE. from Lima. Lon. W. C. 2 16 E., lat. 12 50 S.

Caswell, co. of N. C., bounded by Virginia or Dan river N., Person E., Orange S., and Rockingham W., 20 ms. square, area 400 sq. ms., surface hilly, soil of middling quality. Chief town, Leesburg. Pop. in 1820, 12,253; and in 1840, 14,693. Ctl. lat. 36 20 N., lon. W. C. 2 30 W.—C. H., and post office, Caswell co., N. C., on a branch of Dan river, 100 ms. NW. from Raleigh.

Cat Island, Guanahani, or St Salvador, one of the Bahamas. This was the first land of America discovered by Columbus, Oct. 12th, 1492.

Cat Island, on the coast of Louisiana and Miss., about 6 ms. long by one quarter of a mile mean width, lying between the passes of Marianne and SE. It was on the outside of this island that the British fleet lay during the invasion of La. in 1814 and 1815, 53 ms. NE. by E. from New Orleans.

Catababee, town and province of Peru, SW. from Cusco.

Catahoola, parish of La., bounded by Concordia E. and SE., Rapides S. and SW., and by Ouachitta NW. and N., length 80 ms., mean width 25, area 2,000 sq. ms. Surface hilly in the SW. part, and level in the NE. It is nearly intersected into 2 equal sections by Ouachitta river. The soil is in general extremely sterile, and covered with pine timber. Some very productive tracts lie along the streams upon the small prairies, and on Sicily island. Staples, cotton, live stock, and lumber. No town of any consequence. See Ocatahoola. Pop. in 1820, 2,287; and in 1840, 4,955. Ctl. lat. 32° N., lon. W. C. 15° W.—River of La., rises in the parishes of Natchitoches and Ouachitta, and flowing SE., enters the parish of the same name, expands into a lake 30 ms. in length, by from 3 to 6 ms. wide, turns E., contracts again to a river of about 70 yards wide, flows 10 ms. and joins the Ouachitta and forms Black river, after an entire comparative course of 120 ms. The country drained by the Catahoola is generally sterile pine woods, though considerable extent of good arable land exists along and near the water courses.—See Ocatahoola.—Lake of La. This lake is remarkable. It is a natural reservoir, filled and emptied by turns. When the Mississippi river is rising, it throws a volume over the intermediate space into the Ouachitta, which, thus swelled, forces the current to reflux into the Catahoola lake, which then becomes filled; but as the Mississippi depresses, the water drains from the lake, and in autumn its bottom becomes one great meadow of succulent herbage, with the river winding its devious way through its wide-spread plain.

Catabaw, river of N. and S. Car., rises in the former, and, flowing SE. by S. into the latter, takes the name of Wateree, joins the Congaree, and together forms the Santee. See Wateree.

Catalina, harbor on the E. coast of Newfoundland, S. from Cape Bonavista. Lon. W. C. 24 50 E., lat. 48 40 N.

CATALOGUE, or enumeration of the stars. The earliest stellar catalogue extant is that ascribed to Ptolemy, and found in the Almagest. It is, however, probable that the catalogue called the Ptolemaic was formed from that of Hipparchus, B. C. 130, modified to A. D. 137. This primitive catalogue contained 1,022 stars, and is amongst the most invaluable legacies of ancient to modern science. When science was neglected in Europe, the Arabs in some degree preserved much of the ancient astronomy, and even made additions. Stellar catalogues were made by Albatagnius and Ulug-Beg, and which greatly modified the nomenclature of the starry heavens, as many stars have in our catalogues Arabic names. Tycho Brahe was the first modern European astronomer who added much to the catalogue in the Almagest; Hevelius followed; and in 1712 appeared the splendid catalogue of Flamstead. Between 1757 and 1762, M. de la Caille published three catalogues. In 1776, the Academy of Berlin published a catalogue comprising 4,535 stars, combining the observations of Hevelius, Flamstead, La Caille, Bradley, &c. In the great phenomena of the universe established by catalogues, the most remarkable is the extinction of some and the appearance of other stars, which have always appeared at the formation of every new catalogue, when compared with those made previously.

Catalonia, province of Spain, bounded on the N. by the Pyrenees, on the E. and S. by the Mediterranean sea, and on the W. by Arragon and Valencia. Its greatest extent from E. to W. is 12 ms., and from N. to S. 148. It is 155 ms. in length and 100 in breadth. The air is wholesome; and it is full of high mountains, covered with forest and fruit trees. It abounds in wine, corn, and pulse, and there are several quarries of marble of all colors, crystal, alabaster, amethysts, and lapis lazuli. Barcelona is the capital.

Catamain, river of South America, in Quito, falls into the Pacific ocean, S. from Cape Blanco.

Catania, once a celebrated city of Sicily, on a Gulf of the same name, with a university, the only one in the island. The land about it is fertile in corn, excellent wine, and fruits. By an eruption of Ætna, in 1669, it was almost totally destroyed; and in 1593 it was entirely swallowed up by an earthquake, which buried 18,000 people in the ruins. It is 52 ms. SW. of Messina. Lon. 15 3 E., lat. 37 36 N.

Catanzaro, town of Naples, in Calabria Ulteriore, with a bishop's see, seated on a mountain, 3 ms. SW. Belcastro. Lon. 16 48 E., lat. 39° N.

Cataract, river, branch of Columbia, which it joins from the N. 200 ms. from the Pacific ocean.

Cataraugus, co., N. Y., bounded by Pa. S., by Chataaugu W., by Erie N., Genesee NE., and Allegany E.; length 39 ms., mean width 36; area 4,400 sq. ms.; surface hilly, and soil productive. Chief town Hamilton. Pop. 1820, 4,090; in 1840, 28,872. Cent. lat. 42 15, lon. W. C. 1 5 W. — River, N. Y., in Cataraugus co., falls into Lake Erie.

Catawissa, town, Columbia co., Pa. Pop. 1820, 2,520.

Caturo, town of Venetian Dalmatia, on a gulf of the same name, 30 ms. W. of Scutari. Lon. 18 40 E., lat. 42 40 N.

Cateau. See Chateau Cambresis.

Categate, gulf between Sweden and Denmark, by which the Baltic communicates with the ocean. There is some confusion in our geographical works as respects what is included under the names of Categate and Schagerac, as they are frequently confounded, though really distinct. The Categate is bounded S. by the Danish islands, W. by Jutland, E. by Sweden, and N. by the Schagerac. Mean length 120 ms., mean width 50, and covering an area of 6,000 sq. ms. The Categate is shallow. Along the Jutland coast extends a reef with not more than from 3 to 4 fathoms; the depth is greater on the Swedish shore, but the general average would fall below 25 fathoms, or 150 feet. If the diminution is equal in the Categate to that shown to take place in the Baltic, less than 400 years will leave the former a sand bank, and in the intermediate time the current through the sound and the two belts must increase in velocity towards the point of greatest depression. See Earth, Schagerac.

Catfish Falls, post office, Jefferson co., N. Y., 192 ms. NW. from Albany.

Catharineslaf, or Ecatterinenslaf, government of the Russian empire, divided into two provinces, namely, Catharineslaf, which includes New Russia and the late government of Asoph, and Taurida, which includes the Crimea.

Catharineslaf, capital of a province of the same name, built by the late empress of Russia; and its name signifies "the glory of Catharine." It is seated near the confluence of the Kiltzin and Samara, 178 ms. NE. of Cherson. Lon. 35 15 E., lat. 47 23 N.

Catherine's Landing, village at the head of Seneca lake, in the NW. angle of Tioga co., N. Y., 4 ms. N. from Catherinestown.

Catherine, tp., Tioga co., N. Y., at the head of Seneca lake, containing two post offices—Catharine's Landing and Catharinestown. Pop. 1820, 1816.

Catharine's St., principal island on the coast of the S. part of Brasil, with a harbor defended by several forts. It is 27 ms. long, but not more than 6 broad. Lon. W. C. 27 43 W., lat. 27 35 S.

Catherine's St., island on the coast of Ga., in the lat. of 31 30 N., lon. 81° W.

CATHOLIC LEAGUE. The formation of the Evangelic League had its natural effect in exciting the Catholics of Germany to unite in a counter confederation, under the title of "Catholic League," into which entered Maximilian, Duke of Bavaria; the Electors of Mentz, Cologne, and Treves; the Archbishop of Saltzbourg; the Bishops of Bamberg, Wurtzberg, and Aichstet; the Archdukes of Austria; and several other Catholic princes of the empire. The Pope and King of Spain offered to join it; and it was soon strengthened by two Protestant princes—John George, Elector of Saxony, and the Landgrave of Hesse Darmstadt. The two rival Leagues prepared the fuel for the THIRTY YEARS' war. See Evangelic League.

Catlettsburg, village, Greenup co., Ky., on Ohio river, at the mouth of Big Sandy, and on the NE. angle of the State; by postroad, 157 ms. a little N. of E. from Frankfort.

Cauca, river of South America, the SW. branch of the Magdalena, in New Granada; rises near the city of Popayan, at 2 30 N. lat., and flowing N. a little E., joins the Magdalena at 9 30 N. lat., after a comparative course of 350 ms.

Caucasus, system of mountains between the Euxine and Caspian seas.—Very high mountain of Asia, being one of that great ridge of mountains that runs between the Black and Caspian seas. Of this ridge, mount Elbours is the highest and most difficult to pass. The top of some of the peaks rises to the region of perpetual snow, but the other parts are very fruitful, abounding in honey, corn, fruits, hogs, and large cattle. See Asia, Elbours.

Caucasian mountains are part of an immense chain, extending from Europe to India—from the Dardanelles to the sources of the Indus, Amu, Ganges, and Burampooter.

Caucasian Countries, so denominated from the Caucasian mountains, may, in general terms, be regarded as spreading between lat. 40 and 46°

N. In lon. it extends from 37 to 50° E. of London. In its greatest length, in a direction from SE. to NW., it stretches 800 ms., from Bakou, near the mouth of Kur river, to the straits of Taman, between the Euxine and Asoph seas, which distance and course are nearly the same as those of the main system of mountains from which the name is derived. The mean breadth of this region, which ought to be called Caucasasia, is about 200 ms., and nearly at right angles to the greatest length; area 160,000 sq. ms. This country is comprised in two slopes of not very unequal extent: one, the southward, is drained into the Caspian by the Kur, and into the Euxine by the very inferior stream of the Rione; the opposite, or northern slope, is drained into the Caspian by the Terek river, and into the straits of Taman by the Kooban river. So confused are most descriptions of the Caucasian countries, that a clear view of their political divisions is of difficult construction. In general, however, it may be stated that the southern slope, setting out from the Caspian, contains the provinces of Karadagh, Georgia, Imeritia, Mingrelia, and Abasia. On the northern side, advancing in the same direction, are Lesghistan, Daghistan, Great and Little Kabardia, and Great Cherkesse, (Circassia.) It is evident, from inspection on a general map including the whole three sections, that Caucasasia is only the northeastern part of an immense natural section of Asia, comprising Circassia NE, Lesser Asia W., and the combined basins of the Euphrates and Tigris SE, and embracing a surface exceeding five hundred thousand sq. ms. See art. Asia.

Caucasus, government of the Russian empire, divided into the two provinces of Astracan and Caucasus. The province of Caucasus comprises the Cuban, and all that district to the E. and S. now in the possession of Russia, between the rivers Don and Cuban, and between the Black sea and the Caspian, extending as far as the confines of Georgia. As laid down on Black's Atlas, Caucasus has the sea of Asoph NW, the Kooban river separates it from Circassia SW., on the SE. the Terek river separates it from Kabardia and Daghistan; it reaches the Caspian sea on the E, on the NE. the Manitch river separates it from Astracan, and on the NW. the Kougoi river separates it from the Don Cossacs. Length from the Don river to the Caspian 500 ms, mean breadth about 100, and area 50,000 sq. ms. It is traversed nearly centrally by N. lat 45°. Capital city, Georgievsk.

Caudebec, rich and populous trading town of Fr., in the dep. of Lower Seine, and late province of Normandy, at the foot of a mountain near the Seine, 18 ms. NW. of Rouen. Lon. 1 26 E., lat. 49 31 N.

Cauvery, or Cavery, considerable river of the peninsula of Hindoostan, which rises among the Gauts, and watering Seringapatam and Tanjore, enters the bay of Bengal, by several mouths, between Cuddalore and Trichinopoly, after a comparative course of 300 ms.

Cava, considerable and populous town of Naples, in Principato Citeriore, with a bishop's see; seated at the foot of Mount Metelino, 3 ms. W. of Salerno. Lon. 14 55 E., lat. 40 26 N.

Cavaillon, town of Fr., in Venaissin. It lately had an episcopal see, and was subject to the Pope; it is seated on the Durance, 20 ms. SE. of Avignon. Lon. 5 17 E., lat. 43 34 N.—Town of St. Domingo, on the NW. peninsula, 16 ms. W. by S. from St. Louis.

CAVALRY, direct from the Italian cavalleria, soldiers on horseback. It is evident from pictorial representations in the catacombs of Egypt, and from scripture, that the Egyptians, as remote as 15 or 16 centuries B. C. used cavalry in war. Amongst the Greeks the war of Messina, B. C. 743, was the first instance recorded in history of the use of cavalry. With proportions, varying from time and circumstances, cavalry and infantry have mingled or superseded each other in the armies of most nations not in the savage state, for the last 4,000 years. In Europe, under the title of "Ment-arms," French gendarme, cavalry for many centuries was the principal military force; but the introduction of gunpowder, the victories gained by the Swiss foot over the Austrian and Burgundian horse, and the close column of the Spanish infantry, which no cavalry was found capable of breaking, gradually restored the great disproportion of infantry over cavalry in European armies to pretty near what they were under the Romans in their most military age.

Cavan, co. of Ireland, in the province of Ulster, 47 ms. in length and 23 in breadth; bounded on the N. by Fermanagh and Monaghan, on the E. by the latter co. and Louth, on the W. by Leitrim, and on the S. by Lonford, West Meath, and East Meath. It has but two towns of any note, Cavan and Kilmore. It sent 6 members to the Irish Parliament, and it contains 37 parishes.—Borough of Ireland, capital of the co. of Cavan, 60 ms. NW. of Dublin. Lon. 7 23 W., lat. 54 51 N.

Cavendish, town, Windsor co., Vt., on the N. side of Black river, between Wethersfield and Ludlow, 32 miles SE. of Rutland river. Population 1,016.

Cayambe Urcu, one of the highest peaks of the Andes. It is 19,386 feet above the level of the ocean, 150 ms. NE. from Chimborazo and nearly on the equator.

Cayenne, rich town and island on the coast of Guiana, in S. America, capital of the French settlements there, and bounded on the W. by the Dutch colony of Surinam. The French settled here in 1635, but left in 1654, and was successively in the possession of the English, French, and Dutch; but the latter were expelled by the French in 1677. The island is about 16 ms. in circumference, and is only separated from the continent by two rivers. By a particular formation, uncommon in islands, the land is highest near the water side and low in the middle. Hence it is so full of morasses that all communication between the different parts of it is impossible, without taking a great circuit. Cayenne pepper, sugar, and coffee, are the principal commodities. Lon. W. C. 24 45 E., lat. 5° N.

Cayes, seaport of the NW. part of St. Domingo, 50 ms. W. from St. Louis. Lon. W. C. 4° E., lat. 19 12 N.

Champlain, lake of N. America, extending from Whitehall, in N. Y., in a N. direction 112 ms. to Ashisland in Canada, with a width from 1 to 16 ms. Its shores are mostly bold and rocky, in some places they are precipitous. From the NW. angle it receives the discharge of lake George, from the S. Wood creek, Paulet and Huberton, and from the east, Otter, Onion, La Moelle, and Missisque rivers. From the W., Bouquet, Sable, Saranac and Chazy. Its outlet is the river Sorelle. Considerable commerce is carried on upon this lake, amounting to perhaps 8,000 tons of shipping. Lake Champlain is now united to Hudson river by a navigable canal, cut from Whitehall to a point on Hudson river below Glenn's Falls. This lake was discovered and named by M. Champlain, first governor of Canada, in 1611. In 1814 a British fleet and army attacked Plattsburg, in Clinton co., at the mouth of Saranac. On the 11th September this fleet was attacked, defeated, and nearly entirely captured by a squadron of U. S. vessels, and the invading army compelled to retreat precipitately into Canada.—Tp. and post town, in Clinton co. N. Y. Pop. in 1820, 1,611.

Charleston, City, and seaport, Charleston district, S. C., at the junction of Cooper and Ashley rivers. Lon. W. C. 2 54 W., 79 54 W., from London, lat. 32 50 N.; 112 ms. SSE. from Columbia, and 550 SSW. from Washington. Ashley river is navigable 20 ms. above the city by vessels of considerable burden; but, being placed on a low spot of ground, and in the vicinity of the ocean, it is subject to be inundated by high tides, and has often suffered from this cause, as well as by fires and tremendous whirlwinds. The harbor is united to Santee river by a fine navigable canal, 22 ms. in length, which opens to its merchants the trade of the interior of S. C. and N. C. The harbor has two channels of entrance, the deepest of which admits vessels drawing 16 feet water. The entrance of the harbor is defended by a fort on Sullivan's island, about 6 ms. below the city. This fort repelled the attack of a British fleet under Sir P. Parker, in the revolutionary war, with a very destructive effect to the assailants.

Charleston is, nevertheless, a capital of great riches and commerce; the exports of 1803 amounted to $7,811,108; and in 1815 its tonnage exceeded 36,470 tons. The banks of the rivers, above and below the town, are beautified with fine plantations, and walks interspersed with rows of trees. The streets that lie E. and W. run in straight lines from river to river, and are intersected by others at right angles, though they have one common fault of being too narrow, some of them being not above 35 feet wide. Most, if not all of them, are provided with subterranean drains that carry off the water and filth of the city. The houses lately built are principally of brick, and some of them in a style of comparative grandeur nd elegance. The chief public edifices are an exchange, a state-house, a bank, an armory, and a public almshouse, with ten or a dozen places of religious worship. Here are two banks.

The orphan asylum is a very respectable foundation, consisting of a large and spacious building, where 150 children are protected, clothed, fed, and educated. A library society, formed some years past, have now a library exceeding 13,000 volumes. This city has kept full pace with the other great seaport towns of the U. S. In 1790, the inhabitants amounted to 16,359; in 1800, to 18,711. Its subsequent advance is seen by the annexed table.

Charlestown, tp., and, alternately with Keene, seat of justice, in Cheshire co., N. H., on Connecticut river, 42 ms. W. from Concord, and 30 S. from Dartmouth college. A fine bridge over the Connecticut river unites this beautiful village with the opposite shore in Vermont. Pop. in 1810, 1,501; in 1820, 1,702. Lat. 43 14 N.—The principal town of Middlesex co., Mass., opposite to Boston, from which it is separated by Charles river, over which is constructed an elegant bridge. This town stands upon the elevated peninsula between Mystic and Charles rivers. Besides the Boston bridge, leading into Prince street in that city, another leads over the inner harbor to Cambridge. Bridges cross also over Mystic river, and open communication with Malden, Chelsea, and Salem. The State prison of Massachusetts is located in this town; and on the point opposite Lynn and Ship streets, in Boston, the United States have a navy yard, extending over about 60 acres, on which have been erected the necessary buildings to carry on the business, and accommodate the officers and men attached to the establishment. The battle of Breed's Hill, generally, though erroneously called Bunker's Hill, was fought in this town, June 17, 1775. A splendid monument, completed and consecrated this year, (1843,) on the day of anniversary of this battle, now crowns the hill where it was fought. Chenaub, or Chunaub, branch of the Indus, river, the Accessines of the Greek historians of the Macedonian expedition into India. The name Chenab of Burnes, as spelt by him, is that perpetuated from the particular stream of the Punjab, to the influx of the united waters of that region into the Indus at Mittun.—See Punjab. Jylum, the Hydaspes of the Greeks, the Bahut of Abul Fazel, is the most westerly of the five rivers, rising in and flowing to the NW., down the fine valley of Cashmere, and known there by the name of Vedusta. Drawing its principal confluents from the Himalaya mountains, it winds gradually to the SSW., and, after a comparative course of 400 ms., falls into the Chenaub at Trimmo. Chenaub, which gives name to the united streams of the Punjab, is the Accessines of the Greeks, rises in the Himalaya mountains, between the sources of the Jylum and those of the Ravee, flows first, like the Jylum, to the NW., down the valley of Cashmere, winding gradually to the SW., and, after a comparative course of 400 ms., receives the Jylum, and 50 ms. still lower the Ravee, from the northeastward. One hundred miles below the influx of the Ravee, the Chenaub unites with perhaps a superior stream, the Sutledge. The Chenaub, now a really great river, passes near Oooh, in the country of Daoudpota, and flowing to the southwestward 50 ms., joins the Indus, after an entire comparative course of 600 ms. Ravee, or Ravey, rises in the southern slopes of the Himalaya, between the sources of the Chenaub and Beeaoo. General course southwestward, and comparative length 400 ms. to its junction with the Chenaub, about 40 ms. above Moultan. Sutledge, called the Gorra, or Charra, in the lower part of its course, rises in the Chinese territory to the northward of the Himalaya, and interlocking sources with those of the Sampoo, Gogra, Ganges, Indus, and also with the other rivers of the Punjab. It is the Hesudrus of Pliny, the Zaradrus of Ptolemy, and the Saranges of Arican, and though in N. lat. 31°, the fountains are amongst perpetual snows, above 17,000 feet elevation. Flowing to the northwestward 250 ms., the Sutledge inflects to the southward, pierces the Himalaya, and from thence 250 ms., receives from NW. the Beas, the Hyphases of the Greeks, and thence 300 ms. to its junction with the Chenaub. If continued to the Indus, the entire length of the Sutledge would be 850 ms. The waters of the Sutledge are pale; those of the Chunaub reddish; the difference visible many miles below their junction. Beyah, or Beas, though ranked as one of the Five rivers, is in reality only the main confluent of the Sutledge, flowing between the latter and Ravee, with a comparative course of about 250 ms.

The entire surface included in the Punjab, or valley of Chenaub, is about 63,000 sq. Eng. ms., and politically, is very nearly commensurate with the territory of the Seiks. According to Burnes, the Sutledge is a navigable stream far above its confluence with the Beas.

Cherkesse or Circassia, is thus described in general terms by G. Poulett Cameron. Cherkesse may be divided into four different and distinct divisions. The first is that of the province of Abazak; the second is formed of the three large districts of Abaza, Natukgoitch, and Shapshook, which comprise the whole of the seacoast from Soochoum Kale to Anapa; the third is that of the plain situated between the Kooban and Laba rivers, composed of the provinces of Zadooz, Gurghensi Magoish, Adhugor, and Damedgoee; and the fourth and last division, the largest and the richest is that comprehended in the fertile fields, unrivalled pastures, and picturesque valleys lying between the Kooban and Terek and known under the general term of the Great and Little Kabardas. As laid down in Black's Atlas, Cherkesse, or Circassia, extends from the mouth of the Kooban river along the NE. coast of the Black sea, 300 ms. and thence 300 ms. inland and eastward to the borders of Daghestan. Breadth various, and ill defined, no where probably reaching to 100 Eng. ms. In this sweep, however, in addition to the and great variety of scenery, rises the magnificent Mount Elbrouz, or as usually written Elburz. Circassia lies between N. lat 42° and 45°, and between 37° and 47° E. London.

Cherson, capital of New Russia, in the government of Catharineslaf. It is a new town erected by Catharine II. on the north bank of the Dneir, 10 ms. below the mouth of the Ingulec. It is intended to be the principal mart of all the commodities of export and import. It has a dock, for the construction of large vessels, from which several men-of-war and merchant ships have been ready launched. It is supplied with fuel by reeds only, of which there is an inexhaustible store in the shallows of the Dneiper, opposite the town. Rails, and even temporary houses, are made of them. They are tall and strong, and afford shelter to various kinds of aquatic birds, some of which are very beautiful. The fortifications are made, and the plantations formed, by baleafactors, who amount to some hundreds. In his place, in 1790, the excellent Mr. Howard, so well known for his plans of reform of the different hospitals and prisons of Europe, fell a victim to his indefatigable humanity. Cherson

Chiavenna, town of Switzerland, capital of a country of the same name, under the sovereignty of the Grisons. It is a trading place, especially in wine and delicate fruits; but its chief support is the transport of merchandise, it being the principal communication between the Milanese and Germany. Chiavenna is seated near the lakes of Chiavenna and Como. Lon. 9 19 E., lat. 46 19 N.

Chiavenna Laghetto di, small lake of the country of the Grisons, in Switzerland, near the town of Chiavenna, remarkable for its delightful views, which are wild and magnificent. It is surrounded by barren rocks, craggy, and rising into spires sprinkled with snow. The bases of these dreadful precipices are lost in the overshadowed water, dangerous on account of its malignant vapors, and affording no asylum, scarcely a landing place, to the crews of those frail boats, which are caught invariably in the violent storms to which it is subject.

Chicago, small, but very important river entering Lake Michigan at its southern extremity. The country over which it flows is a low, flat prairie. Its mouth is obstructed by a bar, over which vessels drawing more than 3 feet water cannot enter, though inside adequate depth is found for ships of almost any tonnage. The postage between Chicago and Riviere aux Plaines, a branch of Illinois, is only about 9 ms. At high water, vessels of considerable size already pass, and a canal is contemplated to unite Lake Michigan with Illinois.—Port of entry and flourishing town of Illinois, and seat of justice for Cook co., situated on the southwestern side of Lake Michigan, at N. lat. 41 52, long. 10 42 W. of W. C., and about 220 ms. NNE. of Vandalia. Chidley, Cape, on the northeastern coast of Labrador, has Davis's Straits NE., and the bay of Ungaya SW. Lon. W. C. 12 10 E., lat. 60 12 N.

Chielefa, town of Turkey in Europe, in the Morea. It was taken by the Venetians in 1685; but the Turks retook it. Lon. 22 28 E., lat. 36 35 N., 12 ms. W. from Kolkithia.

Chiemsee, lake of Germany, in Bavaria, which contains an island and town of the same name. The island is 17 ms. in circumference, and the town is 22 ms. WSW. of Saltzburg.

Chieri, town of Piedmont, on the declivity of a hill, in a pleasant country, bounded on all sides by hills covered with vines. It is 8 ms. E. of Turin.

Chifti, town of Naples, capital of Abruzzo Citeriore. It is seated on a mountain near the river Pescara, 8 ms. SW. of Pescara. Lon. 15 7 E., lat. 42 20 N.

Chifuncte, river, La., in St. Tammany, rises in the N. part of that parish, flowing SSE. 50 ms., falls into lake Ponchartrain, in a direction nearly N. from the city of New Orleans. There is depth of water at the mouth of the Chifuncte sufficient to admit vessels drawing 6 or 7 feet water, as far as the mouth of the Bogue Falaya.

Chigneete, bay of Nova Scotia, the NW. arm of the bay of Fundy.

Chigwell, village of Eng., in Essex, 10 ms. NE. of London. It is noted for a free school, founded by archbishop Harsnett, who had been vicar of this place, and lies buried in the church.

Chihuahua, State of, one of the States of the republic of Mexico, bounded S. by Durango, W. by Sonora, Sinaloa, N. uncertain, and E. by Coahuila y Texas. Capital Chihuahua. N. lat. 28°, and lon. 28° W. from W. C. intersect according to Tanner's map of Mexico, about 75 ms. SW. from the city of Chihuahua. Extent and pop. uncertain. The features of Chihuahua are in great part similar to those of Durango, though the great Plateau or table land of Anahauc is here less elevated than farther to the S. A very great deficiency of water is the most serious impediment, however, to the general pop. of this part of America, and is one of the many traits of resemblance between central N. America and central Asia. The seasons of what was the Provincias Internas, now the northern States of Mexico, have winters of excessive rigor, even more so than can be accounted for, either from lat. or elevation of surface. See arts. Earth and Mexico.—City, capital of the State of the same name in the republic of Mexico, situated near the river Conchos, a branch of Rio Grand del Norte, in the province of New Biscay. It is the capital of the Internal Provinces, and environed by some very rich mines. Pop. 12,000. Lat. 28 50 N., lon. W. C. 27 20 W.

Chilesburg, village, Caroline co., Va., 68 ms. S. from W. C.

Chili, large country of S. America, on the coast of the Pacific Ocean, discovered by Diego d'Almagro in 1525, extending from the desert of Attacamas S. lat. 24 30, to Chiloe S. lat. 44°. The mountainous part of it is possessed by the Puelches, Araucos, and other tribes of its original inhabitants, who are still formidable neighbors to the Spaniards. That part of Chili, therefore, which may be properly deemed Spanish, is a narrow district, extending along the coast from the desert of Attacamas to the island of Chiloe, above 900 ms. Though bordering on the torrid zone, it never feels the extremity of heat, being screened on the E. by the Andes, and refreshed from the W. by cooling sea breezes. The fertility of the soil corresponds with the benignity of the climate, and is wonderfully accommodated to European productions. The most valuable of these, corn, wine, and oil, abound in Chili as if they had been native in the country. Here all the fruits imported from Europe attain to full maturity; and the animals not only multiply but improve. The horned cattle are of larger size than those of Spain; and its horses excel in beauty and spirit the famous Andalusian race, from which they sprung. Nature, too, has enriched Chili with valuable mines of gold, silver, copper, and lead. The population of Chili has been for the last 2 centuries increasing; and at present, besides the independent tribes of natives, exceeds, it is probable, 1,500,000. Since Feb., 1818, this fine country has been virtually one of the civilized nations of the earth, and was by the Government of the United States so recognised in the Congress of 1821-'22.—Township and post village, Monroe co., N. Y., between Black creek and Genesee river, 10 ms. SW. from Rochester.

Chilka, lake in the Deccan of Hindoostan, which bounds the 5 Circars on the N. It lies on the coast of the bay of Bengal, and seems the effect of the breach of the sea over a flat sandy surface, whose elevation was something above the level of the country within. It communicates with the sea by a very narrow but deep opening.

Chillau, province of Chili, bounded on the E. by the Andes, on the N. by Maule, W. by Itata, and S. by Arauco.—Capital of the province of the same name, on the Chillau river. Lon. W. C. 6° E., lat. 35 30 N.

Chillicothe, city and seat of justice in Ross co. Ohio, on the right bank of the river Sciota, 4 ms. S. from Columbus, and 73 E. by N. from Cincinnati. Lon. W. C. 5 53 W., lat. 39 20 N. The site of the town is a plain or river level but the adjacent country rises into bold hills of from 200 to 300 feet, affording a fine diversity of surface. It was laid out in 1796, and in 1810 the tp. contained 1,369, and in 1820, 2,426 inhabitants. There are in this town 2 printing offices, 1 bank, and about 40 mercantile stores. Manufacturing establishments are numerous and flourishing. The site of this beautiful town is a part of a peninsular plain between the river Sciota and Paint creek. It stands on the ground once occupied by a people gone truly to oblivion; mounds of tumuli still remain around the mansions of civilization, one of which stood where houses now stand. Amongst the new creations of the great central valley, there are few indeed which present more deep interest. The great Ohio canal passing through the place renders it of easy approach and few will visit it and regret the expense of time or money. Pop. in 1840, 3,977; but a resident of Chillicothe informed me that the present pop. of that town, (1843,) from a census taken by its own officers, must reach, if not exceed, 5,000. The canal crosses Paint creek by an aqueduct well and substantially constructed. Distance 45 ms. S. of Columbus, 70 SW. of Zanesville, 34 from Lancaster, and 36 NE. from Hillsborough.—Lan district, is composed of the 9 westernmost of the 2 range of tps. of the U. S. army lands. The 2 refuge tracts, and the 7 westernmost of the 2 ranges of tps. of the U. S. lands S. of the refuge tract. It includes parts of Delaware, Knox, Licking, Franklin, Fairfield, Pickaway, Ross, Athens, Hocking, Lachfor, Lawrence, Pike, Sciota, and Gallia counties, but not the whole of either.—Township, in Ross county, Ohio. Population i 810, 1,369; in 1820, 2,426; including the town of Chillicothe.

Chillicothe, Old, tp., Ross co., O. Pop. in 1820, 199.

Chillisquaque, tp., Northumberland co., Pa. Pop. in 1810, 1,505; in 1820, 1,035.

Chilmark, town, Dukes co., Mass., in the island of Martha's Vineyard. Pop. in 1810, 723; in 1820, 695.

Chilo, village, Franklin tp., and very near the southeastern angle of Clermont co., O. This place, formerly called Mechanicsburg, is situated in the northern or right bank of Ohio river, about 2 ms. S.E. from Batavia, and 12 ms. S.W. from Georgetown, co. seat of Brown co.. Pop. in 1830, 26.—Village, Clermont co., O., 95 ms. S.W. from Columbus.

Chiloe, group of islands and gulf of South America, in southern Chili. The islands extend nearly parallel to the opposite coast. The principal island, from which this archipelago was named, exceeds 100 ms in length, with a mean width from 5 to 30, and lying between S. lat. 41 50 and 43 0, lon. W. C. 3° E.

Chilpanzincó, city of Mexico, situated on the northern slope of Analuac, 3,542 feet above the level of the ocean, surrounded by beautiful fields of wheat and orchards, on the road from Mexico to capulco. Lat. 17 40 N., lon. W. C. 22 20 W.

Chilquesy Mosques, small province of Peru, W. from Cusco, on the sources of the Grand Pa. Central lat. 14° S.

Chiltern, Eng., chain of chalky hills, running from E. to W. through Buckinghamshire, and forming the S. part of the county. They are covered in various parts with woods; and some of the eminences are of considerable height, and afford rich prospects. The air on these heights is extremely healthful; the soil, though stony, produces good crops of wheat and barley. This district belongs to the crown, which, from time immemorial, has had an officer under it, with the title of Steward of the Chiltern Hundreds.

Chimalapa, small river of Mexico, in Oajaca; flows S. into the gulf of Tehuantepec.

Chimborazo, mountain of South America, in chain of the Andes. Lon. 1 20 S., about 100 ms. S.W. from Quito. This immense cone can be seen far into the Pacific ocean, and presents to the eye of the mariner a most magnificent object. It rises, according to Humboldt, to 21,440 feet. That illustrious traveller ascended its slope as high as 19,300 feet—the highest point on the globe ever ascended by man. It is covered for several thousand feet by perpetual snow, and generally surrounded by fogs.

China, vast empire of Asia, comprising China proper, Mandshuria, Thian Chanpelou, or "country beyond the Thian Chan mountains;" Zoongana, Mongolia, Thibet, Corea, with several islands along the coast of China proper.—See head of China, under article Asia, pp. 94, 96.

In our books generally, and on our maps, Mantchooria is named and marked as connected with, though distinct from, China. This has not been the case for nearly a century past. In the reign of Kien Jung, which began in 1723, Mantchooria was remodeled, and formed into three governments, named Ching-King, Hing-King, and He-Loung-Kiang, and all placed on the same footing with other provinces of China proper.

The following explanations of the literal meaning of the names of the great divisions of China were extracted from the "Chinese Register," printed in English at Macao. They are inserted in this Dictionary as serving to show the long duration of the language and political subdivisions of this great country.

CHINA, from Tsin, the first or amongst the most ancient dynasties who ruled the country. It is not, however, the sacred name; the Chinese call their country "Chung-Kwo," the middle country.

Cheilee signifies "source of direct rule," and with the suffix "Pih" North, comes "Pih-Cheilee," which Europeans have corrupted into Pechelee.

Shantung signifies "East of," and Shansee "West of the Hills."

Honan, "South of the Yellow river," as nan signifies south.

Keang nan denotes "South," and Keangsee "West of the Yang-Tse-Kiang, or Blue river."

Kang-Soo and Nganhway are the more modern subdivisions of Kiangnan, and derive their names from three of the principal cities they contain; such as Keang-Ning, (Nanking,) "Tranquil City on the River;" Yang-Tse-Kiang, Soo Tchou, "The Blissful Region;" and Hwuychow, "Region of Excellence," from the latter, the provincial name Nganhwy.

Foukeen, or "The Happy Settled Region."

Chekkiang, "Province of the river Che."

Hoo-Kwang, "The Broad Region of the Lakes," comprising the two provinces of—

Hoopih, "North," and

Hoo-nan, "South of the Lakes."

Shen-Kan is named like most of the other united provinces of China from its two parts—

Shen-See, "Western defiles;" and Kan-Suh, "Voluntary Reverential."

Szechuen, literally "The Four Streams."

Leang-Kwang, "The Two Wide-spreading Provinces," comprises the "Eastern" and "Western Broad Provinces"—

Kwang-Tung (Canton) and

Kwangsee; both south of the mountains which separate them from Kweichew, Hoonan, Keang-See, and Fuhkien.

Yun-Kwei, from uniting the first syllables of—Yunan "Cloudy South;" and Kwei-tchow, "Noble Region."

China, town, Kennebec co., Me. Pop. in 1820, 894.—Genessee co., N. Y. Pop. in 1820, 780.

Chinca, seaport of Peru, seated on a river, in a valley of its own name, 90 ms. S. Lima. Lon. W. C. 45' E., lat. 13 10 S.

Chine, La, village of L. C., 6 ms. from Montreal, upon the same island. It is the upper part of that city: here all boats arrive from, and depart, which are employed in the commerce of the St. Lawrence or Ottawa rivers. A canal is completed from La Chine to Montreal, in order to obviate the dangers of the intervening rapids of St. Louis.

Chin-India.—This new term in physical geography has been introduced into that science by Malte Brun with great propriety. That great projection of Asia extending southward from Thibet and China, and between the bay of Bengal and the Chinese sea, had never before the publication of Malte Brun's Geography received a definite distinctive name. Chin-India is highly appropriate as respects population and position. Aracan the Birman empire, and, in some slight degree, Siam and Malacca, were influenced by Hindoo languages, religion, and civilization; whilst the manners, language, and literature of China are visible in Tonquin, Cochinchina, Cambodia, and Laos. See the different sections under their respective heads.

Chinon, ancient town of Fr., in the dep. of Indre and Loire, and late province of Touraine, on the Vienne, 10 ms. N. of Richelieu and 150 SW. of Paris. Lon. 22' E., lat. 47 12 N.

Chinsura, town of Hindoostan proper, in Bengal. It is a settlement of the Dutch, and is seated on the river Hoogly, nearly midway between Chandernagore and the old town of Hoogly. It contains several good houses and a church, with a little mole projecting into the river. It was taken by the English in 1795.

Chiny, town of the Netherlands, capital of a country of the same name, in Austrian Luxembourg, 57 ms. W. of Luxemburg. Lon. 5 37 E., lat. 49 45 N.

Chios, Scio, or Kio, by the Turks called Saki Saduci, an island lying near the coast of Ionia, in Asia Minor, about 100 ms. W. of Smyrna. It is mountainous and rocky, and about 100 ms. in circuit. It abounds with excellent wines; and from thence the ancients had their nectar.

Chios, capital of the above island. It stands on the E. coast; is as well built as most of the towns in the Levant, the Genoese having been long in the possession of it. The natives pretend that Homer was born here, and show a place they call his school, at the foot of Mount Epos, about 4 ms. from the city. Lon. 27 5 E., lat. 38 6 N.

Chiourlic, ancient town of Romania, on a river of the same name, 47 ms. W. of Constantinople. Lon. 27 57 E., lat. 41 8 N.

Chiozzo, anciently Fossa Claudia, a town and island of Italy, in the territory of Venice, with a harbor defended by a fort. It is 18 ms. S. of Venice. Lon. 12 9 E., lat. 45 17 N.

Chippenham, borough of Eng., in Wilts., on the Avon, over which is a stone bridge of 16 arches, 21 ms. E. of Bristol and 94 W. of London. Lon. 2 8 W., lat. 51 27 N.

Chippewan, mountains of N. America. This great chain is the principal spine of that continent, and, by various names, extends from the isthmus of Darien to the Frozen ocean, through 60° of lat., or 4,150 ms. In Mexico it is known by the general term Anahuac. Further north the Spaniards designate it as the mountains of New Mexico. In the U. S., it is known as the Rocky mountains; in Cabotia, or British America, by its true native name, Chippewan or Chippewyan. In Mexico and Guatimala, it rises into volcanic summits, elevated far above the region of perpetual snow. Popocatepetl, Citlalpetl, or Peak d'Orizaba, Pico Frailes, and Coffrede Perote, all rise above 13,500 feet. In the U. S., the elevation of this chain remains undetermined, but must be considerable, from the length and rapidity of the streams flowing from its opposite sides. Recent accounts, though not very definite, give a very elevated character to many of the peaks of this system, in the region from which rise the Missouri and Columbia rivers.

Chippeway, small river or creek, Lincoln co. U. C.; falls into Niagara river at the village of Chippeway.—Village of Lincoln co., U. C. on Niagara river, at the mouth of Chippewaw creek. Here a sanguinary battle was fought between the British and the U. S. armies, July 5 1814.—Village and tp. in the extreme north easternmost part of Wayne co., O., 18 ms. NE. of Wooster, and 11 ms. NW. of Fulton, on the Ohio canal. The place is often called Doylestown, and so named on the maps; but for the direction of letters the post office name is given at the head of the article.—River of the U. S., NW. territory; course of 45 ms.; opens into a wide bay and turns to NW. 18 ms.; it joins the Chesapeake bay between Cook's point and Tilghman island.

CHIVALRY, French knight; what appertains to knighthood.

CHOLERA, an epidemic, if not a contagious disease. In its worst form, it is called ASIATIC CHOLERA, and has obtained a historical as well as a geographical importance as one of the great scourges of mankind. About 1816 this disease reached Indostan from China, and in August, 1817, broke out at Jessore. Its progress was westward, reached Astracan in 1823, from which it spread over Russia, and in 1830 ravaged Western Europe, and soon afterwards burst out in the U. S. The cause and all other circumstances attending this last visitation of the Asiatic cholera agree nearly with the description given by Villani and other writers of what was then called "plague," from 1330 to 1350, that we may safely consider the cause identical of these fearful phenomena.

Chopunish, river in the Rocky mountains; falls into the right side of the Kookooshee, a branch of Lewis river.

Chorges, town of Fr., in the dep. of the Upper Alps, and late province of Dauphiny, burnt by the duke of Savoy in 1692. It is 10 ms. E. of Gap. Lon. 6 23 E., lat. 44 35 N.

Chorley, town of Eng., in Lancashire, near the source of a rivulet called Chor, not far from the river Yarrow, 6 ms. SSE. of Preston, and 20

W. of London. Lonodn 2 42 W., lat. 53 8 N.

Chota, post office, Blount co., Tenn., about 80 ms. E. from Murfreesboro.

CHOUAN, name given to those who, during the early part of the French Revolution, rebelled against the new Government. The Chouans were chiefly of the western provinces of Fr., and, though suppressed, the term seems to be permanently introduced into the French language, to designate robbers, burglars, and other outlaws.

Chowan, river of N. C., formed by the united streams of the Meherin, Nottaway, and Blackwater, all rising in Va., but flowing into N. C. The Chowan opens by a very wide estuary into Albemarle sound. — Co. of N. C., on the north side of Albemarle sound, bounded by Chowan river W., Gates N., Perquimans E., and Albemarle sound S.; length 22, mean width 9 ms.; area 200 sq. ms. Surface flat, and in part swampy. Soil in general of middling quality. Chief town, Edenton. Pop. 1820, 6,464; in 1840, 6,993. Cent. lat. 36 10 N., lon. W. C. 0 20 E.

Choule, town on the coast of Malabar, with a harbor for small vessels, which is fortified. It is 5 ms. S. of Bombay. Lon. 72 45 E., lat. 18 2 N.

Chremnitz, chief mine town in Upper Hungary, 90 ms NE. of Presburg. Lon. 19 27 E., lat. 48 59 N.

Christchurch, borough of Eng., in Hampshire, at the confluence of the Avon and Stour, 98 ms. W. of London. Lon. 1 46 W., lat. 50 45 N. — Parish of Charleston district, S. C.

Christian, co. of Ky., W. by Trigg and Caldwell, N. by Hopkins and Muhlenburg, E. by Todd, and S. by Montgomery co., Tenn. Length 43, mean breadth 15 ms., and area about 500 sq. ms. Chief town, Hopkinsville; which see for art and lon. Pop. of this co. in 1820, 10,459; in 1840, 14,006. — Tp., Lawrence co., Ark. Pop. 1820, 1,222.

Christiana, village, Madison tp., in the NE. part of Butler co., O., 14 ms. NE. of Hamilton, and very nearly a like distance SW. from Dayton. — City of Southern Norway, in the government of Aggerhuys, at the extremity of a fertile valley, forming a semi-circular bend along the shore of the beautiful bay of Biorming, which forms the north extremity of the gulf of Christiana. The castle of Aggerhuys is built on a rocky eminence on the west side of the bay, at a small distance from the city. Christiana is 30 ms. from the open sea, and 290 N. by W. from Copenhagen. Lon. 10 50 E., lat. 59 6 N. — Town, Newcastle co., Del., on Christiana creek, 9 ms. above Wilmington, and 37 SW. from Philadelphia. Pop. 1810, including the village of the same name, 6,698; in 1829, 8,355. — Creek of Del.; is formed by the Red Clay and White Clay creeks, and Christiana creek proper, which unite near Christiana bridge; turns to NE., and joins the Brandywine at Wilmington. Vessels drawing 14 feet water ascend to Wilmington, and those of 5 or 6 to Christiana bridge.

Christian, Great, small island between Crete and Santorin. It is the ancient Ascamia. Lon. 25 15 E., lat. 36 20 N.

Christianople, strong seaport of Sweden, on the Baltic, and capital of Blekingen. It is 13 ms. NE. of Carlescroon. Lon. 16 47 E., lat. 56 26 N.

Christianburg, fort of Africa, on the gold coast of Guinea, subject to the Danes. Lon. 1 55 E., lat. 4 10 N.

Christiansburg, village near the very extreme angle of Champaign co., O., 18 ms. SW. by W. from Urbana, and 18 ms. NW. by W. from Springfield, the county seat of Clark co., and 60 ms. a little N. of W. from Columbus. — Post office and seat of justice, Montgomery co., Va., 40 ms. SW. from Fincastle, and 220 SW. by W. from Richmond. N. lat. 37 14, lon. W. C. 3 12 W.

Christiansand, city and government of Norway, on the SW. coast. The harbor is excellent. Lon. 8 3 E., lat. 58 8 N.

Christian Sound, opens between Capes Omamamay and Decision, and, extending SE. off King George's island, unites Prince Frederick sound to the Pacific ocean. Lon. W. C. 57° W., lat. of the opening into the Pacific 56 15 N.

Christiansville, village, Mecklenburg co., Va., on the Meherin river, 243 ms. from Washington.

Christina, St., one of the islands in the South Pacific ocean, called the Marquesas. Lon. 139 9 W., lat. 9 56 S.

Christmas Island, island in the North Pacific ocean, so named by Capt. Cook, on account of his first landing there on Christmas day. It is 45 ms. in circumference, uninhabited, and destitute of fresh water, but has abundance of fine turtle. Lon. 157 30 W., lat. 1 59 N.

Christmas Sound, sound of South America, in Terra del Fuego. Lon. 70 2 W., lat. 55 21 S.

Christopher, St. or St. Kitt's, one of the leeward islands in the West Indies, 60 ms. west of Antigua. It was formerly inhabited by the French and English; but in 1713 it was ceded to the latter. It is 20 ms. in breadth, and 7 in length, and has high mountains in the middle, whence rivulets flow, which are of great use to the inhabitants. It was taken by the French in 1782, but restored the next year. Basseterre is the capital.

CHRONOLOGY and ASTRONOMY. See Appendix.

Chucuito, province of Upper Peru, now appertaining to the united provinces of La Plata. It lies along the west side of Titicaca, SE. from Arequipa. Chicuito, the capital, is on the lake. Lon. W. C. 6 30 E., lat. 16 30 S.

Chucuito, lake. See Titicaca.

Chudleigh, town of Eng., in Devonshire, seated near the river Teigne, 9 ms. SW. of Exeter, and 185 W. by S. of London. Lon. 3 39 W., lat. 50 38 N.

Chunar, fort of Hindoostan proper, in the province of Allahabad. It is seated on the Ganges, 20 ms. above the Banares, and is built on a rock, which is fortified all round by a wall, and towers at various distances. At the end, overlooking the river, is situated the citadel, which has formerly been strong. This fort is said to be of the highest antiquity, and originally built by the Hindoos. In the citadel is an altar, consisting of a plain black marble slab, on which the tutelary deity of the place is traditionally supposed to be seated at all times, except from sunrise till nine in the morning, when he is at Benares, during which time, from the superstition of the Hindoos, attacks may be made with a prospect of success. Chunar has always been considered as a post of great consequence on the Ganges, from its insulated situation, projecting forward to a great extent, and being of considerable height. At this place is kept the magazine of ammunition and artillery for the brigade of Cawnpore. It is 385 ms. NW. of Calcutta. Lon. 85 50 E., lat. 25 10 N.

Chunaub, or Jenaub, river of Hindoostan Proper, one of the five eastern branches of the Indus. It runs through Cashmere and Lahore, between the Chelum and the Rauvee. Its general course is from NE. to SW., and, after leaving Jummoo, is through a flat country, gradually approaching to the Chelum. It is united with both these rivers at some distance above Moulton. Its junction with the Chelum, about 80 ms. above Moulton, is effected with great violence and noise, and no less danger to navigators. The Chunaub is the Acesines of Alexander.

Chun-te-fou, city of China, in the province of Petcheli, with nine populous cities of the third rank under its jurisdiction.

Chouquibama, town of Peru, near Camana and Arequipa. It is the capital of the district of Condusuya.

CHURCH, "House of God." In English, if we gave the sound according to etymology, we would have, with slight difference of vowel intonation, the Scots Kirk. The original of the term, there is little doubt, is the Greek word for circle, an enclosed place, &c.

Church Creek, village Dorchester co., Md., 7 ms. SW. from Cambridge.

Church Stretton, town of Eng., in Shropshire, 14 ms. S. of Shrewsbury, and 153 WNW. of London. Lon. 2 46 W., lat. 52 32 N.

CHEMISTRY, derived by Webster from the Arabic kimria, the occult art or science from kamai, to conceal. It differs only apparently in original meaning from alchemy, as the latter is compounded of al (the) and chimi, chymistry. As now used, this term means both the art and science of determining, by every form of analysis and synthesis, the relative properties of bodies, their action upon each other, and modifications by mixture, &c. Few reflect on the universality of this science and art united. Every trade or profession, having for object the compounding or modification of matter, is practical chymistry, from the production of metal from the ore to baking of a loaf of bread. As a science, there is no other the study of which is so universally requisite and useful. A good work, in a popular form, on chymistry, is a most valuable labor-saving machine, and ought to be in the library of every family. But such a treatise ought to embrace the ordinary arts of life, such as working, baking, washing of all kinds of clothing, the properties of matter used in these operations, and, in fine, whatever could contribute to teach the laws of nature to the world at large.

Ciampa, or Chiampa, kingdom of Asia, bounded on the E. and S. by the Indian ocean, on the N. by Cochin China, and on the W. by Cambodia.

Cincinnati, is a large commercial city, and seat of justice for Hamilton co., Ohio. It is situated on the N. bank of Ohio river, opposite Newport, Ky., and about 20 ms. from the mouth of the Great Miami river, at the SW. corner of the State. The town was laid off in January, 1789, adjacent to Fort Washington, which had been erected during the autumn previous. It was settled by emigrants from N. J. and the New England States, but did not extensively improve until after General Wayne had defeated the hostile Indians in August, 1794. Since that period, however, it, together with the adjacent country, has rapidly progressed in population, wealth, and internal improvements.

Among the public buildings are two presbyterian, two methodist, one episcopalian, and one friends' meeting house, besides an elegant and costly court-house and jail, and 2 extensive market houses, one of which, called the lower market, is built with triple rows of pillars 300 feet long. The markets are held in them four days in a week, two days at each, alternately. Here are also several manufacturing establishments for cotton and woolen goods, for paper, and for silver, brass, copper, and iron wares, and machinery of various descriptions. Here are also four printing offices, three of which print weekly newspapers, likewise four book tores, a type foundry, and a manufactory for making cards for carding machines. One of the machines in this establishment is a great specimen of human ingenuity. By the simple process, merely, of a boy turning a small crank, the wire is drawn from a reel, cut off at a suitable length, sent into card teeth, the leather perforated, and the web set therein, all by the one process above mentioned.

In January, 1819, a medical college was established here by the Ohio Legislature; and during the same month the Cincinnati college was also chartered, both of which are now progressing, with prospect of becoming useful institutions for the western country. The faculties of both colleges are in some measure united, and both occupy, conjointly, the public edifices designed for their accommodation.

Cincinnati was formerly the seat of the old territorial government until 1800, and in January, 1819, was incorporated as a city. Distance, S. by W. from Dayton, 52 ms., 110 SW. from Columbus, 93 W. by S. from Chillicothe, and 82 N. by E. from Frankfort, in Ky. Lat. 39° 6' N., lon. W. C. 72° 5' W.

The following account of the local situation of Cincinnati, and enumeration and description of the various public edifices and improvements, are taken from Doctor Daniel Drake's valuable "Picture of Cincinnati and the Miami country," published in 1815. I have repeated this rather long and now certainly only historical description in fact as history, but may preface it by noticing the far most important improvement of Cincinnati—the Miami canal, which joins the Ohio in the city, and the pavement of the river front.

"Its site is the eastern part of a tract of alluvial or bottom land, bounded on the N. by a chain of ridges, on the W. by Mill creek, on the S. by the river, and on the E. by Deer creek, a brook which originates in the neighboring uplands. The area of all this plain is about 4 sq. ms. It is unequally elevated, and the upper and lower tables have received from the inhabitants the names of Hill and Bottom. The latter (gradually widening) stretches westwardly from the mouth of Deer creek, where it is but 200 feet broad, to the interval lands of Mill creek. Its medium breadth is about 800 feet. The NW. portions of this slip are the lowest. They have been overflowed a few times since the settlement of the town, and in March, 1793, the whole of this plain was inundated. The hill rises about 50 feet above the bottom. The ascent, which is at first steep, soon becomes gradual, and continues for the distance of nearly 1,000 feet, when the surface declines gently to the base of the adjoining highlands. The medium breadth of this table is about one mile. Its western portions are uneven, and, towards Mill creek, descend to the level of the bottom. On the opposite side of the river the valley has nearly the same expansion. The ranges of hills bordering these extensive plains intersect each other in such directions as to compose an imperfect square, through the NE. and SW. angles of which the Ohio enters and passes out. Being variously divided by streams and rivulets, lying at different distances from the town, and having a dense covering of tall trees, these ridges afford a pleasant termination to the view.

"Philadelphia seems to have been the model after which that portion of this town first laid out was planned. Between Broadway and Western Row there are six streets, each 66 feet wide, running from the river N. 16° 0' W., and lying 396 feet asunder. These are intersected at right angles by others of the same width, and at the same distance from each other, except Water and Front streets, and Second and Third streets, the former of which are nearer, and the latter, on account of the brow of the hill, more distant. Not a single alley, court, or diagonal street, and but one common was laid out. The blocks, or squares, were each divided into eight lots, 99 by 198 feet, except those lying between Second and Third streets, which made ten lots each, and those between Front and Water streets. The out-lots, 81 in number, contain 4 acres each, and lie chiefly in the N. of the town. This plan was not deposited in the public archives for record until the 29th of April, 1802. The streets in that part of the town laid out by John C. Symmes are but 60 feet wide. Those intersecting the river ran N. 44° 0' W., and lie at the same distance from each other as the streets in the original town; but the cross streets are nearer, and hence the lots of this quarter are shorter. The plan of this survey was not recorded by the proprietor till the 12th of September, 1811. The reservation of the General Government was surveyed so as to connect the plats just described. The different subdivisions will be best understood by a reference to the engraved plan.

"The new Presbyterian church is a very spacious brick edifice, measuring 68 by 85 feet. Its eastern and narrower front looks towards Main street, and is cornered with square turrets crowned with cupolas. From the rear is an octagonal projection, for a vestry. The roof is of common form. The height from the ground to the eaves is only 40 feet, to the top of the cupola 80, which is less than either side, including the towers, and hence the aspect of the building is low and heavy. The stair cases are in the basement of the turrets, and are entered without passing into the house. The inside is divided into 112 pews, and 5 capacious aisles.

"The Episcopalian church, in Sixth street, is a handsome and commodious brick edifice, 40 by 55 feet, well furnished with doors and windows, ornamented with a balustrade, and finished inside with taste.

"The Cincinnati college, on Walnut street, in the rear of the Presbyterian church, is an extensive two-story brick edifice, consisting of two oblong wings, extending from Walnut street 88 feet deep. Near the front, they are connected by an apartment, for stair cases, 18 by 30 feet, out of which arises a dome-capped peristyle, designed for an observatory. The front of this intermediate apartment is to be decorated with a colonnade, forming a handsome portico, 12 feet deep and 30 feet long. The front and each side are ornamented with a pediment and Corinthian cornice. The aspect of the building is light and airy.

“The buildings of the Cincinnati Manufacturing Company, on the bank above Deer creek, are numerous and extensive; the main edifice is 150 feet long, from 20 to 37 feet wide, and from 2 to 4 stories high.

“The most capacious, elevated, and permanent building in this place is the steam mill, erected in the years 1812, '13, and '14, on the river beach, upon a bed of horizontal limestone rocks, and in high floods is for its whole length exposed to the current. The foundation is 62 by 87 feet, and about 10 feet thick. Its height is 110 feet, and the number of stories nine, including two above the eaves. To the height of 40 feet, the wall is battered, or drawn in; above, it is perpendicular. The cornice is of brick, and the roof of wood, in the common style. It has 24 doors and 90 windows. The limestone with which it was built was quarried at various places, in the bed of the river, and measures in the wall 6,620 perches. Besides this, it swallowed up 90,000 bricks, 14,800 bushels of lime, and 81,200 cubic feet of timber. Its weight is estimated at 15,655 tons. Through the building there is a wall dividing each story into two unequal apartments, the one designed for manufacturing flour, the other for receiving wool and cotton machinery, a flaxseed oil mill, fulling mill, and several other machines.”

Cinque Ports, Norman French, and literally Five Ports. The term is applied to five haven on the eastern coast of England, Hastings, Romney, Hythe, Dover, and Sandwich. Winchelsea and Rye are often connected with the Cinque ports. The original cause of giving a distinct organization to these ports was their relative position towards Fr., and their importance as defensive positions against invasion from that kingdom. A warden (keeper or guardian) is still appointed over the Cinque ports, and each sends two members to Parliament.

Cynthiana, Harrison co., Ky.—See Cynthiana.
Cintra, cape of Portugal, in Estramadura called the rock of Lisbon, on the north side of the entrance of the Tajo. On it is a town of the same name, 14 ms. W. of Lisbon.. Lon. 9 30 W., lat. 38 46 N.

Ciotat, seaport of Fr. in the dep. of the Mouth of the Rhone, and late province of Provence, defended by a strong fort. It is famous for Musca ine wine, and is seated on the bay of Laquee, between Marseilles and Toulon. Lon. 5 46 E., at. 43 12 N.

Circars, Northern, 5 provinces on the west coast of the bay of Bengal. They were originally enominated Northern, from their position in respect to Madras, on which they depend. Of the northern Circars, Cicacole, Rajamundry, Ellore, and Condapilly, are in the possession of the English, and Guntoor is in the hands of the Nizam. The first 4 extends from the north bank of the Gistna to Chilka lake, forming a narrow slip of country 350 ms. long, and from 26 to 75 broad, bounded by mountains and extensive forests on the side opposite the sea. The English Circars had been ceded to the French by the Nizam of the Deccan, in 1753; but they were conquered by Colonel Clive in 1759, and produce an annual revenue of £360,000.—See Guntoor.

Circassia, country of Asia. This country has long been celebrated for the extraordinary beauty of its women; and here it was that the practice of inoculating for the small pox first began. Terki, the principal city, is seated in a very spacious plain, very swampy towards the sea side, in 43 23 N. lat.; it is about 2 ms. in compass, well fortified with ramparts and bastions in the modern style, well stored with cannon, and has always a considerable garrison in it, under the command of a governor.—See Cherkese.

Cirencester, a considerable borough of Eng., in Gloucestershire. It is one of the greatest marts in Eng. for wool, and is 18 ms. SE. of Gloucester, and 89 W. of London. Lon. 1 58 W., at. 51 43 N.

Circleville, village, and seat of justice in Pickaway co., O., on the east side of Sciota river, at W. lon. W. C. 5 5 lat. 39 36 N. 26 ms. below Columbia. It derives its name from some ancient works in a rude circular form, on the site of which it is situated. The adjacent country is amongst the most fertile of the Ohio valley. The site of Circleville is an undulating plain, and though extensive remains of human works really existed on that plain, much of what has been so regarded, was, and is, the work of nature. The whole subsoil is clay, admixed with sand and pebbles, similar to the formation of so much of O., Va., and Ill. The Ohio canal passes along the southern margin of the town, giving great water power and commercial advantage to the place.

Cirenza, town of Naples, capital of Basilicata, with a bishop's see. It is seated on the river Brandonop, at the foot of the Appennines, 97 ms. S. of Naples. Lon. 16 10 E., lat. 40 44 N.

Cittadello, seaport and capital of Minorca, on the W. side of that island. Lon. 3 34 E., lat. 39 54 N.

Citta-di-Castello, populous city of Italy, capital of a country of the same name in Umbria, with bishop's see. It is seated on the Tiber, 27 ms. W. of Urbino. Lon. 12 18 E., lat. 43 32 N.

Citta-Nouva, city of Italy, in the marquisate of Ancona, containing 16 churches and convents within its walls, and 15 without. It is seated on the Gulf of Venice, 10 ms. S. of Loretto. Lon. 13 40 E., lat. 43 16 N.—seaport of Venetian Ancona, with a bishop's see, 60 ms. E. of Venice. Lon. 14 2 E., lat. 45 36 N.

City Point, village and port of entry, in Prince George co., Va., on James, at the mouth of Appomattox river, 20 ms. below Richmond.

Ciudad-Real, town of Spain, capital of Mancha. The inhabitants are noted for dressing leather for gloves. It is 2 ms. from the Gaudiana, and 90 S. of Madrid. Lon. 3 25 W., lat. 38 58 N.

Ciudad-Rodrigo, town of Spain, in Leon, with a bishop's see, seated on the river Aquada, 40 ms. SW. of Salamanca. Lon. 5 58 W., lat. 40 33 N.

Civita-di-Friuli, small but ancient town of Italy, in Venetian Friuli, seated on the Natisona, 10 ms. E. of Udina. Lon. 13 15 E., lat. 46 12 N.

Civita-di-Penna, ancient town of Naples, in Abruzza Ulteriore, with a bishop's see, near the river Salino, 35 ms. NE. of Aquila. Lon. 14 52 E., lat. 42 27 N.

Civita-Castilana, town of Italy, in Campagna di Romana, on a high rock, at the foot of which is a river, which falls into the Tiber. It is 25 ms. NW. of Rome. Lon. 12 35 E., lat. 42 25 N.

Civita-Vecchia, seaport of Italy, in the patrimony of St. Peter, with an arsenal. Here the Pope's galleys were formerly stationed, and it was a free port; but the air is unwholesome. It is 35 ms. NW. of Rome. Lon. 11 51 E., lat. 42 5 N.

Clackamus, river, U. S., enters the Wallamut, of Columbia.

Clackmannan, small town in Scotland, and capital of the county of the same name. It is seated on the north shore of the Forth, and stands on a hill, on the top of which is a castle, commanding a noble prospect. It is 23 ms. N. by E. of Glasgow. Lon. 3 40 W., lat. 56 5 N.

Clackmannanshire, co. of Scotland, bounded on the E. by Fifeshire, on the N. and W. by Perthshire; and on the S. by the Forth. It is 8 ms. in length, and 5 in breadth. The country is plain and fertile towards the Firth, producing corn and pasture in abundance. This shire, with Kinross, sends 1 member to parliament. It is watered by the rivers Forth and Deven. Pop. in 1801, 10,858, in 1811, 10,010; and in 1821, 13,263.

Cleveland, tp., Cuyahoga co., O. Pop. in 1810 547; in 1820, 606.—City and county seat, Cuyahoga co., O., at the mouth of Cuyahoga river, on Lake Erie. Lon. W. C. 4 44 W., lat. 41 3 N. Cleveland, from its position at the northern termination of the Ohio canal, is a place of great and increasing importance. The site is about 80 feet above, and commands a most extensive prospect over Lake Erie. Its progressive population proves its solid prosperity: Pop. in 1825, 500; in 1830, 1,000; in 1834, 4,300; in 1837, 6,500 in 1840, 7,037, including the township. This place was incorporated as a village in 1816, and a city in 1836. The first settlement was made there in 1797, distance by post roads about 150 ms., but, by actual calculation, the bearing from Columbus to Cleveland is N. 37 50 E., and distance 139 ms., the course passing about 10 ms. westward of Millersburg, 4 ms. westward of Wooster, and 3 ms. eastward of Medina, by postroad 130 ms. northwestward of Pittsburg.

Cleves, duchy of Germany, in the circle of Westphalia, divided into two parts by the Rhine. It is a fine country, delightfully variegated with hills, woods, fields, towns, and villages; and is subject to the King of Prussia.—City of Westphalia, capital of the duchy of Cleves. It is seated on the eastern side of three hills, about a mile W. of the Rhine, with which it communicates by means of a canal, which is large enough for great barges. It has a castle built by Julius Cæsar. It has been often taken and retaken; the last time by the French in 1794. It is 15 ms. SE. of Nimwegen. Clinton, tp., Buckingham co., L. C.—Town, Kennebeck co., Me., by postroad 81 ms. NE. of Portland. Pop. in 1820, 1,356.—Village, Oneida co., N. Y., on Oriskany creek, 9 ms. WSW. from Utica. Hamilton College, near this village, was incorporated in 1812, and from the liberal support given by public and private patronage, is a flourishing institution. It is under the direction of a president, 3 professors, and 2 tutors; the students about 70.—Co., N. Y., bounded by L. C., Lake Champlain E., Essex co. S., and Franklin W.; length 40 mean width 35 ms.; area 1,400 sq. ms. It forms the NE. angle of the State. The surface is hilly, and in part mountainous; soil generally indifferent. Chief town, Plattsburg. Pop. in 1820, 12,070; and in 1840, 28,157. Central lat. 44 45 N., lon. W. C. 3 20 E.—Co. of Lincoln, U. C., on Lake Ontario.—Tp., Knox co., O. Pop. in 1810, 714; in 1820, 834.—Tp., Franklin co., O. Pop. in 1820, 518.—Tp., Jackson co., O. Pop. in 1820, 338.—Co., O., on the waters of Little Miami, bounded by Warren W., Green and Fayette N., Fayette S., Highland SE., and Brown S.; length 22, mean width 18 ms.; area 390 sq. ms. Surface diversified by hill and dale; soil generally highly productive. Chief town, Wilmington. Pop. in 1820, 8,085. Central lat. 39 25, lon. W. C. 6 W.

In the Ohio Gazetteer, with much that our limits will not admit, we find the following on Clinton co. O.: "The general surface of the co. level, but sufficiently rolling for cultivation. Its character in different parts derives its qualities from three classes of land into which the co. is divided. There are—1, prairie, or open meadow; dry, level wood lands, of an excellent quality; low swamp, of a deep soil. The third class, or swamp lands, are invariably found at the head water courses, and, from their peculiar situation, are easily reclaimed."

These extracts are made the more as they not only illustrate the features of Clinton county, but also those of central and western Ohio generally. Clinton county occupies a table land from which flow numerous confluent of Little Miami westwardly and those of Paint creek eastwards. Those who would look on a map of this county, and who are acquainted only with a hilly or mountainous country, would of course suppose the fountains to be found in valleys or slopes; but directly the reverse is the case over a large portion of Ohio, and in like manner over Indiana and Illinois; nor is it an easy matter to give, by any description, a correct or even tolerable conception of such a country to those who have not seen others of similar features.

Clwyd, celebrated vale of Denbighshire, extending from its upper end to the Irish sea, above 20 ms., its breadth varying from 3 to 8, according to the approach or recess of the high mountains enclosing it, through which, in different parts, are gaps formed by nature for entrances. A river of the same name, which rises in the middle of the co., runs along this vale, and, having entered Flintshire, falls into the Irish sea.

Clyde, river in Scotland, which rises in Annandale, falls into the sea, over against the Isle of Bute.—River of Orleans co., Vt., which falls into Lake Memphremagog, at its SE. corner.—Village on the great Western canal, in Seneca co., N. Y., 18 ms. NE. from Geneva, and 25 NW. from Auburn.

Clyde River, of N. Y., formed by the outlet of Canandaigua lake and Mud creek. These two latter unite at Lyons, in Wayne co. The outlet of Canandaigua lake issues from that sheet of water at the village of Canandaigua, flows thence a little E. of N., 8 ms., into the tp. of Manchester, where it turns abruptly to the E., in which direction it continues 12 ms., to Phelps, having received from the southward the large accession of Flint creek. Below Phelps the Canandaigua again turns to almost due N., 8 ms., to Lyons, where it joins Mud creek.

Mud creek rises as far S. as the head of Canandaigua lake, having its source in the tp. of Naples, from which it flows 25 ms. nearly due N., through Ontario co., to Farmington. Here it turns NE. 10 ms., reaches Palmyra, where it winds to the E., and follows the latter course by a very winding channel of 15 ms., unites with the Canandaigua at Lyons. These streams are of importance, as they contribute to supply the Erie canal. The Clyde, from its head at Lyons to its influx into the Seneca river, has a winding course of about 20 ms., with a fall of 21 feet.

Clydesdale, wild district of Scotland, in the S. part of Lanarkshire. Amid the mountains here, particles of gold have sometimes been washed down by the rains and streams of water; but this tract is chiefly remarkable for producing metals of inferior worth. The veins of lead lie mostly N. and E., and their thickness, which seldom exceeds 40 feet, varies greatly in different parts. The scanty pasture here feeds some sheep and cattle.

Coahuila y Texas, State, one of the States of the republic of Mexico, bounded S. by New Leon, SW. by Durango, W. by Chihuahua, N. uncertain, and E. by the State of Tamaulipas. This State, the extent of which is uncertain, lies upon the eastern slope of the Great Cordillera or Plateau, upon which is situated Durango and Chihuahua. Rivers, and even spring water, rare in the two latter, become abundant in some parts of Coahuila. The immense volume of the Rio Grande del Norte traverses this State from NW. to SE. Though exactly E. from Chihuahua, the climate of Coahuila is much more exposed to heat in summer, though the winters are alike severe in both places; and in both rains are, when they do occur, excessively heavy and durable, falling in torrents, but droughts are as durable. However, except some small tracts near the seacoast, the whole of the northern States of Mexico are, in a peculiar manner, salubrious. See Mexico. N. lat. 28°, and lon. W. C. 24° W., intersect in Coahuila y Texas. Chief towns Montelovez and Saltillo.

College Grant, tp., Coos co., N. H. Pop. in 1820, 33.

College, from con and lego, together. The most common application of this term is to designate a seminary of learning, and in particular, one dedicated to the study of the ancient or classical languages. Any body of persons, however, legally assembled to perform any legal purpose, may be correctly called a college, hence, college of electors, college of physicians, &c. It is also applied to the edifices in which the object of coming together is to be effected.—See art. University, Academy, &c.

College, tps. are two tracts of land each 6 ms. sq., situated in the centre of Athens co., O., adjoining each other, the one on the N. the other S. Through the northernmost, runs the Hockhocking river, adjacent to many parts of which are several tracts of excellent land. The names of those tps. arose from the circumstance of their having been granted as a donation to the college of Athens; the right of soil to which, belongs exclusively to the said college.—See Athens, O.—Tp., O., six ms. sq., in the western border of Butler co., belonging to the Miami university. See Oxford.

College Corners, post office in the extreme northwestern angle of Butler co., O. It is at a settlement, partly in Butler and Preble, cos., O., and in Franklin and Union cos., Ia., about 20 ms. northward of Hamilton, 16 ms. SW. from Eaton, and 5½ from Oxford, and 16 NE. of Brookville, Ia.

College Hill, Columbia collage, and post office, D. C., 2 ms. N. from the capitol, and on the road from W. C. to Rockville, Fredericktown, &c.

Colleton, district S. C., bounded by the Atlantic ocean and Charleston district SE., Beaufort SW., Barnwell and Orangeburgh NW., and part of Charleston NE.; length 57 ms., mean width 30; area 1,700 sq. ms. Surface generally flat, and soil, except on the streams, of indifferent quality. Staples—rice, cotton, and tobacco. Chief town, Waterborough. Pop. in 1820, 26,373, and in 1840, 25,548. Central lat. 32 45 N., lon. W. C. 3 35 W.

Collins' Cross Roads, post office, Colleton district S. C., about 70 ms. S. from Columbia.

Collins' Mills, post office, Jefferson co., N. Y., 190 ms. NW. from Albany.

Colombo, town of Ceylon, and seat of the British establishments on that island. Lat. 7 4 N.

Colombotz, castle of Turkey in Europe, in Bulgaria, on a hill, under which is the strong pass of Urania.

Colomey, or Colomia, town of Poland, in Russia, seated on the river Pruth, 42 ms. SE. of Hultz. Lon. 25 40 E., lat. 48 41 N.

Colonna, town of Italy, in Campagna.

Colorado, river of Mexico, in the Provincias Internas, or rather unconquered country, NW. of Sonora and New Mexico. This stream rises in the mountains, which give also source to the confluent of Missouri, Colombia, and Rio Grande del Norte at N. lat. 41, and W. lon. from W. C. 35°. Its general course is SW. by S., receiving numerous and large branches from the E., joins the Rio Gila N. lat. 33°, dilates into a very wide estuary, which has received the distinctive name of the Gulf of California. The regions watered by this great river are very defectively known. Its entire length of the gulf is included, exceeds 1,200 ms. — River of Mexico, province of Texas, rises in the unexplored country between the Red and Rio Grande rivers, and falls into the Gulf of Mexico N. lat. 29° W., lon. W. C. 19°. — River of S. America, rises in the Andes, S. lat. 32°, and pursuing a SE. course, falls into the Atlantic ocean at lat. 0° S., after an entire length of 700 ms. by comparative courses.

Colorno, town of Italy, in the Parmasan, near the Po, 8 ms. from Parma. The duke of Parma had a pleasure house here, which was one of the most delightful in Italy, and the gardens were very fine. Lon. 10 22 E., lat. 44 54 N.

Colosse, post office, Oswego co., N. Y., 156 ms. NW. from Albany.

Coloswar, large town of Transylvania, where the States meet. It is seated on the river Samos, 7 ms. NW. of Weissenburg, and 120 E. by S. of Vienna. Lon. 23 15 E., lat. 46 53 N.

Colouni, Cape of, ancient promontory of Sunium, in Attica, being the SE. extremity of Greece, and indeed of continental Europe. Cape Sunium was visited by Mr. Hobhouse in 1810, who has given a pretty detailed account of the ruins of the temple of Minerva Sunias, from the still standing white marble columns from which the modern name of the cape is derived. The view from Cape Colouni presents, on the W., the promontory Kepheke, and very near to that head land the abrupt rocky island, now called Gaidaronesi, ancient Patroclus, and still farther, Archinda, formerly Belbina. The view to the N. is soon terminated by the pine-covered marble peaks of Laurium. To the S. the view is unlimited except by the horizon; the islands of Macronesi, Zea, Thera, and Serpho, and, in clear weather, Andros, Ithaca, and other islands, enrich this fine perspective. Mr. Hobhouse rather hastily contradicts Pausanias, where the latter asserts, that the spear and statue of Minerva on the Acropolis, at Athens, could be seen from Sunium. It is probable that such could be seen from the summit of the temple of Minerva, when entire, that cannot be visible on the surface of the ground; and it is also probable that the moderns too much restrict what is meant by Cape Sunium. As it is, this cape must afford one of the most splendid views in the world. Hobhouse closes his account of its sweep by observing, that beyond Macronesi is Zea, then Ithaca, and next Serpho, all long low land lying in a line successively, so as to have the appearance of one large island stretching to the S. The highlands of Argolis, about the Cape Scylleum, that run the other extremity of the Saronic gulf, are so visible at a distance of two or three and twenty miles.

Colourie, a village of Greece, on the island of the same name, is situated on the deep bay mentioned in our notice of the island. It contains 700 houses, with perhaps 2,500 inhabitants, composed of Greeks and Albanians, and with no Turks.

Colouri, the ancient Salamis, is about 5 ms. square, and indented by a deep bay from the W. It is separated from Attica by a narrow strait not more than 300 yards wide, and from Megaris by another still more narrow. The Bay or Gulf of Salamis, so famous as being the scene of perhaps the most important naval battle ever fought, extends between the island and the main about 10 ms., with a mean width of about 3 ms. The island is rocky and elevated, but with a good soil; extent something about 20 sq. ms. Enjoying the effects of sea air, the harvest of Salamis, according to Strabo, is finished before those of the main land are commenced. It contains two large villages, Colouri and Acupelaki. "The island seems uncultivated," says Hobhouse, "except in the narrow valleys between the hills, near Colouri, and Acupelaki, where wheat and barley are grown." There are some thin pine forests on the mountains. The slopes are supplied with springs of good water. The women of Salamis are of a fine shape and handsome face, superior to the Athenians of the same condition. They have the free ingenuous air, without any of the vulgarity of the peasant, and their whole manner is a happy mixture of the sprightliness of the Albanian, and the politeness of the Greek female.

Columbia, Coos co., N. H., 30 ms. N. of Lancaster. Pop. 1830, 443; 1840, 620. — Washington co., Me., 18 ms. W. of Machias. Pop. 1830, 663; 1840, 843. — Co., N. Y., bounded E. by Mass., S. by Dutchess co., N. Y., and W. by the Hudson river, separating it from Greene co., N. Y. Length from S to N. 30, mean width 18, and area 540 sq. ms. Slope westward, towards the Hudson. The soil of this county is favorable to agriculture, though broken, and in part even mountainous. Its chief town, the city of Hudson, is situated on bold rising ground, on the bank of Hudson river, and very near the mid-distance of the county along that stream, at N. lat. 42 13, lon. W. C. 3 11 E., 117 ms. N. of N. Y., and 28 S. of Albany. Pop. of the co. 1830, 38,325; in 1840, 43,252. In 1830 the city of Hudson contained 5,392 inhabitants, and in 1840, 5,672. — Co. of Pa., bounded NW. by Lycoming, NE. by Luzerne, by Schuylkill SE., and by Northumberland SSW. and W. Length 35, mean width 20, and area 700 sq. ms. N. lat. 41° and lon. 3' E. W. C. intersect near its centre. Slope to the southward, and SE. part traversed by the north branch of the Susquehanna. Hilly, and part mountainous, but with much excellent soil. Chief town, Danville. Pop. 1830, 20,049; in 1840, 24,267. — Village, West Hampfield tp., Lancaster co., Pa., on the left bank of Susquehanna river, 10 ms. W. from Lancaster. The new road from Philadelphia, through Lancaster, reaches the Susquehanna at Columbia; distance 81 ms. Here the canal commences, and ascends the Susquehanna. The village extends chiefly near the river and canal, but also rises up the rather abrupt slope, affording very beautiful sites for houses. Population 1830, 2,047; in 1840, 2,719.

Columbia, District of, seat of the U. S. General Government. It is composed of a tract 10 ms. square, lying nearly in a NE., SW., NW., and SE. direction, on both sides of the Potomac. It was formed out of a part of Prince George's and Montgomery cos., in Md., and part of Fairfax co., Va., and was ceded by Md. and Va., respectively, to the United States in 1790, and in 1800 became the seat of the U. S. General Government. It now contains, besides the city of Washington, properly so called, Alexandria and Georgetown.

See these places, under their respective heads. It is under the immediate government of Congress, and for local purposes subdivided into Washington city, county of Washington, Alexandria, and Georgetown. The surface of the District of Columbia is generally very pleasantly diversified by hill and dale. The soil, in its natural state, rather sterile; but, from the nature of its base, is easily improved, as is shown by successful examples of astonishing increase of fertility by manure and skilful culture, which have enabled those who adopted and pursued the practice to produce great variety of fruit and other vegetables to supply the markets of the three cities. The climate is esteemed very healthy. The lat. of the capitol is 38° 52' 45" N., and, within a very small fraction, 77° W, from the royal observatory, near London. The mean temperature about 55° Fahrenheit. Similar to Philadelphia, Wilmington, Baltimore, and Richmond, Washington city stands immediately below the primitive range, and at the head of tide water. As the project of a canal from W. C., over the Appalachian chain into the basin of the Miss., is an object of public attention, the following table of comparative heights is inserted under the present article:

In the United States a difference of relative level of 400 feet is equivalent to a degree of latitude in relative temperature. See article United States. From this constitution of our atmosphere, a canal from W. C. to Pittsburg would virtually, as respects temperature, inflect to lat. 43° N. I have inserted this remark from having found, in almost all reviews of this important matter, an entire neglect of so necessary an element as relative height.

The following tables will exhibit the progressive advance and state of the population of the District of Columbia.

From its position Columbia is necessarily the centre of a very extensive and increasing commerce. Formerly the different falls in the Potomac were overcome by short canals around them, which answered the purpose of passing the produce down in the spring and fall. This difficulty is now got over by the Chesapeake and Ohio canal commencing at Georgetown, and is now navigable to above Hancock. The canal is of large dimensions, being 60 feet, and can receive a great depth of water; from its breadth boats move up with the same velocity as on a broad river. The canal passes through Georgetown, locking down into a basin at Rock creek, from which it is continued along the margin of the western part of Washington, at the mouth of the Tyber, and thence through the city canal to the navy yard; another branch, now in progress, extends to Alexandria, crossing the Potomac at Georgetown, over a splendid aqueduct, and from which the Alexandrians expect to reap great benefit of the trade of the upper country, particularly of coal, when the canal reaches Cumberland. The quantity of flour and other domestic produce, brought down the Potomac annually, is very considerable. The principal shipping interest of this district centres at Alexandria, but extensive business is also done at Georgetown. Washington itself possesses an excellent harbor at the junction of the Eastern Branch with the Potomac, and on which, forming, indeed, part of the city, is situated the navy yard, opposite to which the depth of water admits vessels of the largest tonnage.

A college has been organised in Washington city, as have also a medical society, a botanical society, and the Columbian institute. The name of the college, from that of the District, is "Columbian college." The buildings belonging to this institution are beautifully situated on a hill of considerable elevation, north of Washington, as are relative to Georgetown, those of the Catholic college. Near Alexandria is a flourishing episcopal seminary. Extensive bridge facilities will, when completed, unite the three cities; and at present those over Rock creek are spacious and substantial.

Columbia, village Fluvanna co., Va., on the right bank of Rivanna river, by postroad 50 ms. above Richmond.—Court-house, Tyrrell co., N. C., on a creek, S. side of Albemarle sound, by postroad 200 ms. E. of Raleigh.—As stated in the post office list, is the name of the county seats and post offices in Marion co., Miss., Maury co., Tenn., Adair, Ky., Boone, Mo.—Seat of justice, for Richland district of S. C., is situated on the left or E. bank of Congaree river, below the junction of Broad and Saluda rivers, almost exactly on the intersection of N. lat. 34°, and lon. 4° W. of W. C. It is the seat of the S. C. college, and contains the suitable buildings for judicial, legislative, and religious purposes. It is by the post office tables stated "506 ms.," and we may add southwesterly from W. C. It is united to Charleston by a railroad through Orangeburg, and into the Charleston and Augusta railroad at Branchville. Pop. 1830, 3,500, and in 1840, 4,340.—Southeastern tp., Hamilton co., Ohio, containing the village of the same name, 6 ms. above and eastward of Cincinnati. This place is interesting, from the fact of its being the second spot in the now State of Ohio, on which civilized man made a settlement. On November 16, 1789, Major Stites and 25 others commenced a block house, which was virtually the foundation of Columbia. In 1820 the tp. contained 2,814, in 1830 the inhabitants amounted to 3,015, and in 1840, 3,043. The tp. contains 3 post offices—Columbia, Madisonville, and Pleasant Ridge.

Columbia, or Oregon. The name Columbia, given to this river, was derived from that of an American vessel, Columbia Rediviva, commanded by Captain Robert Grey, who, on the 11th of May, 1792, entered it, and was, if not the original discoverer, the first who made its existence generally known. Oregana is the Spanish name of wild marjoram, and it is, with much probability of correctness, supposed that the Spaniards, who, no doubt, were the first discoverers, bestowed the name from finding that herb, or some other resembling it, on the banks. This great and very important river will be more amply noticed under the article Oregon Territory. See also art. America.

Columbiana, county of O., bounded by Beaver co., Pa., E., Trumbull, O., N., Portage NW., Stark W., Carroll SW., Jefferson S., and Ohio river SE. On the northern side it is 30 ms. from E. to W., but narrow on the south side. The mean breadth does not exceed 24 ms.; area 720 sq. ms. The general slope southeastward, towards the Ohio, though a small part, towards its western border, declines towards the Tuscarawas river, and the northwestern gives source to the extreme fountains of Big Beaver. The body of the county is drained by the different confluent of Little Beaver. On the southeast side, near Ohio, the surface is hilly, but, receding from that river, becomes more level. Pure water is every where found common, and water limestone, as well as iron ore and mineral coal, abound. "Salt water abounds in the marl in the north, and iron in the centre."—Ohio Gazetteer. The soil is good generally, and in many places highly productive. The prospects of this county may be anticipated from the following: "The Sandy and Beaver canal extends through the centre of the co. from E. to W., and the Wellsville and Fairport, and Liverpool and Ashtabula railroads, will traverse it from S. to N. The contemplated railroad from Pittsburg W., whenever made, must ascend the valley of Little Beaver, by the side of the Sandy and Beaver canal." In lat. it extends from 40 34 to 41 02 N., and in lon. W. C. from 3 45 to 4 10 W. County seat, New Lisbon. Pop. 1820, 22,033; in 1830, 35,508; in 1840, 40,378.

SW., Robeson NW., Bladen NE., and Brunswick SE. Length 2 ms., mean width 13; area about 400 sq. ms. Surface flat, lying between the Waginaw river and Great Swamp creek. Soil generally but of middling quality. Chief town, Whitesville. Pop. 820, 3,912: in 1840, 3,911. Lat. 34 20 N., lon. W. C. 4° W.—The name of a post office in Chenango co., N. Y., Burlington, N. J., Varren, Pa., Muscogee, Ga., Lowndes, Miss., Hempstead, Ark., Polk, Tenn., Hickman, Ky., Adams, Ill., Bartholomew, Ia.

Columbus, city, seat of government for the State, and co. seat of Franklin co., O. This now beautiful and increasing city stands on ground which was occupied by open fields previously to February, 1812, when it was selected for the future capital of Ohio, under the designation of the high bank of Scioto river, opposite Franklinton." In 1816 it was incorporated as a borough, and in 1834 as a city. The editor of the Ohio gazetteer estimated, in 1837, the population at 5,000. The census of 1840 gives:

The whole adjacent country to Columbus is an immense and moderately undulating plain. At the city the Scioto flows very nearly a due southern course, the bank on which the city stands being 20 or 30 feet higher than the opposing one, on the western side. On the maps Franklinton is laid down as if, like Columbus, it was situated on the river bank; but in fact the former is rather above a mile distant from the latter place. The Franklinton side may be comparatively called bottom land, as it is some feet lower than that on which stands Columbus; but in fact the sub-soil of both is composed of similar material—sand, gravel, and rounded pebble—amongst which fossil wood is found at all depths yet penetrated. See Ohio.

From its recent creation to this time, (1840,) a period of 28 years, the advance of Columbus has well excite astonishment, even in the Ohio valley, where every thing announces gigantic growth. To say nothing in particular of the edifices common to seats of government and of law counties, or of places of public worship common to every Christian community, Columbus presents objects highly worthy of notice, in the State Penitentiary, Asylum for Deaf and Dumb, Lunatic Asylum, and the buildings erected for the purpose of carrying into effect "the institution for the instruction of the blind." In addition to the quiet superinduced by their isolation from each other, and from the body and noise of the city, those edifices afford splendid ornaments around the eastern hemisphere of Columbus.

The Theological Seminary for the German Lutherans, standing to the southward of the city, between the road leading to Chillicothe and the Scioto river, is another detached edifice which gives ornament and variety to the place.

The penitentiary, an immense and really splendid building, stands northward of and above the city, and, with a road intervening, on the left bank of the Scioto river. "If," as said a gentleman who visited this enclosure with the writer, "we could regard this as an immense workshop, what a fine establishment it would be!" Is it really not more? For, is it not an establishment where vice is at least neutralized, and physical strength, allied to misguided intellectual resource, in place of being exerted injuriously, are made subservient to useful purposes?

Columbus stands at N. lat. 39 56, lon. W. C. 5 56, and very nearly on the same meridian with Detroit, Chillicothe, Portsmouth, at the mouth of Scioto, Knoxville, in Tenn., Milledgeville, in Ga., the mouth of Suwanne river, in Fla., and Tortugas Keys, the last dry land of Fla., westward of Thompson's island. By direct line, it is 139 ms. S., 37 50 W. of Cleveland, 110 ms. by post road NE. from Cincinnati, 68 NE. by E. from Dayton, and 45 N. from Chillicothe. COMMUNE, in its original sense, meant republic; inhabitants of a State, a town, or a village, having the same laws and privileges. At present, in such European Governments where they exist, the communes answer most nearly to the English township, and are, respectively, the ultimate or lowest political division. In the United States, where this division of counties has been adopted, they are, in the northeastern States, called TOWNS, but southwest and west, TOWNSHIPS, with, however, no essential difference of meaning or purpose.

Como, populous town of Italy, in the Milanese, with a bishop's see, situated in a valley, enclosed by fertile hills, on the S. extremity of a lake of the same name. The houses are neatly built of stone, and the cathedral is a handsome edifice of white marble, hewn from the neighboring quarries. Como is 80 ms. NE. of Turin. Condom, large town of France, in the department of Gers, and late province of Gascony. It was lately an episcopal see, and is seated on the Baise, 22 ms W. of Auch. Lon. 36° E., lat. 44 1 N.

Condore, capital of a number of islands in the Indian Ocean. It produces mangoes, which grow on trees as large as apple trees; the fruit is of the size of a small peach, and when ripe has a pleasant smell and taste. The inhabitants are small in stature, well shaped, and of a dark olive complexion, their faces are long, with straight black hair, small black eyes, high noses, thin lips, white teeth, and little mouths. The English East India Company had a settlement here in 1701; but the factors falling out with the natives, most of them were murdered, and the rest driven thence in 1705. Lon. 107 26 E., lat. 2 40 N.

CONDOTTIERI, Ital. Leaters. In the history of Italy, adventurers who, in the 14th and 15th centuries, formed themselves into mercenary military bands, and, under leaders chosen by themselves, sold their services to those States or princes who paid them best.

Condrieu, town of France, in the department of Rhone and Loire, and late province of Lyonnais, remarkable for its excellent wines. It is seated at the foot of a hill near the Rhone, 17 ms. S. of Lyons. Lon. 4 53 E., lat. 45 23 N.

Conococheague, small river of Penn. and Md., rises in the former by two branches, one heading on the boundary between Perry and Franklin counties, and between North and Tuscarora mountains, and the other near Chambersburg, interlocking with the sources of the Conedogwinet. The two branches flow to the S., unite between Greencastle and Mercersburg, and entering Maryland fall into the Potomac at Williamsport. This river, from Chambersburg to its mouth, nearly separates the slate and limestone ranges.—See Kittatinny Valley.

Conochee, river, Ala., rises SE. from the junction of the Coosa and the Tallapoosa, and assuming a SW. direction is augmented by a great number of large creeks from the N., continues by comparative courses about 120 ms., where it passes N. lat. 31°, enters Florida and turns to nearly S., pursues that direction generally, but by a curve to the westward is finally lost in the bay of St. Marta de Galvez, or northern arm of Pensacola Bay.—See Connekuh.—Co. of Ala., bounded by Florida S., Monroe W. and NW., Butler N., and Covington E. It is 36 ms. each side, except a triangle of about 112 sq. ms. at its NW. corner; area 1,184 sq. ms. Surface rather waving than hilly; soil generally sterile, except on the streams; staple, cotton. Chief town, Sparta. N. lat. 31 15, and lon. W. C. 10° W. intersect near the centre of this co. Pop. in 1820, 5,713, and in 1840, 8,197.

Conedogwinet, small river of Cumberland co., Penn., rising, however, in the northeastern part of Franklin co. Its course is nearly NE. between N. and S. mountains, and passing about 1 mile N. from Carlisle falls into the Susquehanna about 2 ms. above Harrisburg. Similar to the Conococheague, the Conedogwinet, though not uniformly, yet generally separates the slate and limestone ranges.

Conemaugh, river of Pa., rises in Cambria and Somerset counties, and, assuming a course to NW., pierces the Laurel mountain, and, separating Indiana and Armstrong from Westmoreland co., joins the Alleghany about 70 ms. above Pittsburg. Valuable salt works have been erected on this river, near the mouth of Loyalhannon creek. The salt water was a comparatively recent discovery, but yields at present above 100 bushels of salt per diem.—Village of Cambria co., Pa. Pop. in 1820, 116.—Tp. in Cambria co., Pa. Pop. in 1820, 807.—Tp. in Indiana co., Pa. Pop. in 1820, 1,555.—Tp. in Somerset co., Pa. Pop. in 1820, 378.

Conenessing, tp. in Butler co., Pa. Pop. in 1820, 977.

Conestogoe, small river of Lancaster co., Pa., rising on the borders of Chester, Berks, and Lebanon counties, and, flowing SE. through the centre of Lancaster co., falls into the Susquehanna river about 10 ms. below Columbia, and an equal distance S. from the city of Lancaster. This fine stream drains one of the most productive and best cultivated tracts in the United States.—Tp. in Lancaster co., Pa. Pop. in 1820, 1,805.

Conewago, creek of Pa., separating Lancaster and Dauphin counties, and falling into the Susquehanna river 4 ms. below Middletown.—A much more considerable stream than the preceding, rising in Adams co., Pa., and flowing NE. into York, over which it passes to the Susquehanna, into which it falls 5 ms. below Middletown.—Tp. in York co., Pa. Pop. in 1820, 945.—Tp. in Adams co., Pa. Pop. in 1820, 839.

Conewango creek, or small river of N. Y. and Pa. It is formed by the outlet of Chatauque lake and other large creeks from Chatauque and Cattaraugus counties, N. Y. These unite in the former, and, turning S., enter Warren co., Pa., falls into Alleghany river at the village of Warren.—Post office in Cattaraugus co., N. Y.—Tp. in Warren co., Pa.

Conflans, name of several inconsiderable villages in France and one in Savoy.

Congaree, river of S. C., formed by the Broad and Saluda rivers. Below the junction of the two latter at Columbia, the former flows 30 ms., and unites with the Wateree to form the Santee.

Congleton, town of Eng., in Cheshire, on the river Dane, 7 ms. S. of Macclesfield, and 164 NW of London. Lon. 2 10 W., lat. 53 8 N.

Congo, country of Africa.—See Africa, p. 26.

Congo river.—See Zaire.

Congress, village in Wayne co., Ohio, on Kill buck creek, 11 ms. a little W. of N. from Wooster the county seat. It is the northeastern post town of Ohio, and one of those places which have risen a if by miracle in a recent wilderness. Pop. in 1820 250.

Conhocton, branch, one of the constituents of the Tioga, rises in the NW. part of Steuben co. N. Y., flows SE. 70 ms., and joins the Canisteo at Painted Post, and forms the Tioga.—Tp. in Steuben co., N. Y. Pop. in 1820, 1,560.

Coni, town of Piedmont, capital of a territory of that name, with a citadel. It surrendered to the French in April, 1796. It is seated on the confluence of the Grasse and Sture, 35 ms. S. of Turin. Lon. 7 45 E., lat. 44 30 N.

Coningsbeck, town of Suabia, capital of a county of the same name, 20 ms. N. of Constance. Lon. 9 20 E., lat. 47 50 N.

Conington, village of Eng., in Huntingdonshire near Stilton.

Coniston-Mere, lake of Eng., in Lancashire which affords plenty of char. It is 5 ms. W. of Winanderiner.

CONJUNCTION, in astronomy, means that any two planets, the earth inclusive, have the same longitude, without regard to latitude.

Connaught, province of Ireland, 130 ms. long and 84 broad; bounded on the E. by Leinster and Munster, on the S. by the latter province, on the W. and N. by the Atlantic, and on the NW. by Ulster.

Concattsville, village in the NW. part of Crawford co., Pa., 20 ms. NW. from Meadville, and 35 SW. from Erie.

Concatt, tp. in Crawford co., Pa. Pop. in 1820, 265.

Conneaut creek, of O. and Pa., rises in Ashtabula, Erie, and Crawford counties, unites in the former, and falls into Lake Erie in the NE. angle of Ohio.—Post office at the mouth of Conneaut creek, Ashtabula co., Ohio, 30 ms. SW. by W. from Erie.—Village and port of Ashtabula co., Ohio, seated on the point above the mouth, and westward of Conneaut river, 20 ms. NE. of Jefferson, the county seat, and about 35 ms. NW. of Meadville, in Pa. This is one of the towns on the lake border of the United States which proves the certain benefit of improving harbors at public expense. "Therè are," as states the author of the Ohio Gazetteer, 1837, "in Conneaut 24 mercantile houses. The following is the number of arrivals and departures: Arrivals.—Vessels 275, steamboats 760. Departures.—Vessels 265, steamboats 759. There are owned at this port 7 schooners, aggregate tonnage 391 tons. Two others, of the largest class, are now being built. There is also one steamboat owned here of 375 tons burden." Pop. in 1840 of village and tp., 2,642.

Connecticut river.—This noble stream rises on the border of I. C., and, flowing nearly S., separates N. H. from Vt., and thence crossing Massachusetts and Connecticut, enters Long Island sound.

Connecticut is amongst the most curious of the Atlantic rivers. Its extreme northern sources are in a hilly, though not mountainous country, at N. lat. 45 10, interlocking with the sources of the St. Francis branch of the St. Lawrence, and with those of the Kennebec, and thence assuming a course of a little W. of S., down a valley between two ranges of mountains, as far as N. lat. 42 43. Thence crossing Massachusetts and Connecticut in a direction nearly due S. to Middletown, in the latter, where it turns to NE., and finally enters the sound at 41 16 N. lat. Its entire basin is about 80 ms. in length, with a mean width of 45, draining an area of 12,600 sq. ms.

Though the basin of Connecticut is almost entirely on a primitive rock, and though passing one small ridge of mountains near Middletown, it is nevertheless navigable for vessels drawing 10 feet water to that place, above the mountain pass 36 ms., following the windings of the stream; and by vessels drawing 7½ feet to Hartford, 15 ms. still higher. The latter place is at the head of ship navigation, but though considerably obstructed by mills, rapids, and shoals, the navigation of this river has been so much improved by dams, locks, and short canals, as to admit boats of considerable tonnage to ascend to and descend from the Fifteen mile falls above Haverhill, upwards of 250 ms., following the stream from Long Island sound. This is very considerably the deepest inland navigation in the United States east from the Hudson.

Connecticut, State of the U. S. has the following limits:

	Miles.
Long Island sound	96
New York	81
Massachusetts	85
Rhode Island	50

Area 4,750 sq. ms., 3,040,000 acres; extending from N. lat. 41° to N. lat. 42, and lon. W. from 4 18 to 5 12 E.

The coast of this State is finely diversified by harbors, of which New Haven, New London, ridgeport, and Norwich, are the principal. The Connecticut opens a navigation to sea vessels at Hartford, and the Thames to Norwich. The State is also traversed in every direction by good roads. The face of the country is most delightfully varied by mountains, hills, and dales, which, added to the well calculated aspect of the farms and the neatness of the buildings, gives to the physiognomy of Connecticut a most seductive appearance.

The manufacturing industry of this State has been carried to a greater comparative extent than any other of the United States. Its manufactured and agricultural staples embrace a great variety of articles, such as tin ware, nails, glass, hats, fire-arms, &c.; horses, mules, butter, cheese, Indian corn, beef, pork, &c.

Connecticut being settled in the first instance by an enlightened people, the interests of education has been ever interwoven in her colonial and state policy. Yale College, in New Haven, is at the head of her literary institutions. This respectable seminary has produced some of the most finished scholars in the U. S. Several other literary establishments exist in the State, the principal of which are a Theological Episcopal Seminary, in

New Haven; Bacon Academy, in Colchester; an Episcopal Academy, in Cheshire; and the Deaf and Dumb Asylum at Hartford.

In 1790, Connecticut contained 237,946, and 1800, 251,002 inhabitants. Its subsequent advance in population can be seen by the following tables:

Conquest, town, Cayuga co., N. Y., 14 m in a direction nearly N. from Auburn.

Conquet, town of Fr., in the dep. of Finisterre and late province of Bretagne, with a good harbor and road. It is 12 ms. W. of Breton. Lon. 4° 41' W., lat. 48° 23' N.

Conrad's Store, post office, Rockingham co. Va., by postroad, 161 ms. NW from Richmond and an equal distance SW. from W. C.

CONSTABLE, French, a corruption of commutable or comes stabuli. During many ages, the office of constable, was amongst the highest dignities both in Fr. and Eng. In Fr. it fell into disuse after the execution of the Constable Sain Paul, 1475, but revived by Francis I, and finally suppressed in 1627. In Eng., this office was introduced and made hereditary by William the Conqueror, but suppressed by Henry VIII. In Great Britain and the United States it is still in existence but brought down to a low degree, comparatively.

Constable, town, Franklin co., N. Y. The tp. lies along L. Canada line, on the waters of Chataugay river, about midway between Ogdensburg and Montreal. Pop. in 1820, 637.

Connecticut having maintained, nearly from its existence, the same boundaries, its progressive population affords valuable statistical facts. As far as data can be procured, it contained in—onstance is seated on its S. side. Like all the lakes in Switzerland, this is deeper in summer than in winter; which is owing to the first melting of the snow from the adjacent mountains.

Constance, city of, from its position, and contiguous to the Swiss Canton of Thurgau, is mostly presented on our maps as a Swiss city, which however, it never was. About 1513, when Appenzell was admitted to the rank and rights of a canton, the people of Constance applied for admission, but defeated their own object by demanding more than the Swiss Government would con- cede, and, as exclaims Mallet, "The decree condemned Constance, to be in future, only a poor, obscure, and defenceless town, the fruit of its own want of foresight."

Constantia, district at the Cape of Good Hope, consisting of two farms, which produce the well known wine so much prized in Europe, and known by the name of Cape or Constantia wine. —Town, Oswego, co., N. Y., on the N. side the Onondaga lake, about 20 ms. N. from Manlius. Pop. 1820, 767.

Constantina, strong and considerable town of Africa, in the kingdom of Algiers, and capital of territory of the same name. It is the largest and longest in all the eastern parts, and seated at the top of a great rock. There is no way to it but by steps cut-out of the rock; and the usual way of punishing criminals here is to throw them down the cliff. Here are many Roman antiquities, particularly a triumphal arch. It is 75 ms. from the sea, and 210 E. by S. of Algiers. Lon. 7° E., Lat. 36 4 N. —Town of Spain, in Andalusia, with a castle seated on a mountain, 40 ms. NE. of Seville. Lon. 5 35 W., lat. 37 40 N.

Constantinople, capital of the Turkish empire. It is of a triangular form, and seated between the Black Sea and the Archipelago, on a neck of land that advances towards Natolia, from which it is separated by a strait a mile in breadth. The sea of Marmora washes its walls on the S., and a half of the strait of Constantinople does the same on the NE. It was anciently called Byzantium, but the name was changed by Constantine the Great, who made it the seat of the Roman Empire in the E. It was taken in 1453, by the Turks, and has not since had possession of it ever since. The sultan's palace, called the Seraglio, is on the sea side, surrounded by walls flanked with towers, and separated from the city by canals. It stands on the site of ancient Byzantium, the E. end of the present city, and is 3 ms. in circumference. The castle of Seven Towers is a State prison, and stands near the sea of Marmora, at the W. point of the city from the Seraglio; and at the NW. point, without the walls, is the imperial palace of Aijub, with a village of the same name. The number of houses in Constantinople is prodigious; but, in general, they are mean, and all of them constructed of wood, and the roofs covered with hollow tiles. The public edifices alone are built in masonry in a very solid manner. The streets are narrow, badly paved, and dirty; and the people are infested with the plague almost every year. The inhabitants, who are said to amount to 520,000, are half Turks, two-thirds of the other half Greeks or Armenians, and the rest Jews. Here are a great number of ancient monuments still remaining; particularly the superb temple of St. Sophia, built in the sixth century, which is converted into a mosque, and will contain 100,000 persons conveniently. Between the two mosques of sultan Solymán and Bajazet is the old seraglio, in which are shut up all the wives of the deceased sultans, and also such women as have displeased the grand seignior. The bazars, or bazesteins, are large square buildings, covered with domes, supported by arcades, and contain all sorts of goods, which are there exposed to sale. The circumference of this city is by some said to be 15 ms., and by Mr. Tournefort, 25 ms.; to which if we add the suburbs, it may be 34 ms. in compass. The suburb called Pera is charmingly situated; and is the place where the ambassadors of England, France, Venice, and Holland, reside. This city is built in the form of a triangle; and as the ground rises gradually, there is a view of the whole town from the sea. The public buildings, such as the palaces, the mosques, bagnios, and caravansaries, for the entertainment of strangers, are many of them very magnificent. Lon. 29 20 E., lat. 41 4 N. —Straits of ancient Thracian Bosphorus, is the outlet of the Black Sea, into the Marmora. It is with all its windings something more than 20 ms. The width very unequal; the narrowest part at the castles, about 6 ms. above Constantinople, is not much more than half a mile. The outlet from the Black Sea has all the appearance of having been formed by some convulsion of nature.—See Bosphorus and Constantinople.

Constantinow, town of Poland, in Volhinia, on the river Seluczka, 62 ms. NE. of Kamienieck. Lon. 27 20 E., 49 58 N.

CONSTELLATION, from two Latin words meaning, collecting together, stars. As an astronomical term, means a stellar group, and a general name. The most remarkable of these groups are what is called particularly the twelve constellations of the Zodiac. This artificial division of the stars, as is proven by the Book of Job, precedes, by a long series of ages, any artificial record under the title of Astronomy. We stand indebted, according to all known evidence, for this primary part of Astronomy to the Shemitic nations of southwestern Asia, and northeastern Africa. This conclusion is proven by many of the names, and there is no rational doubt, were adopted to guide caravans in their courses over the sandy and rocky deserts, and for that purpose were used in aid of land commerce long previous to their use in directing mariners. Another interesting reflection rises here, and that is, that if the above theory is correct, the Heavens were parcelled by man into stellar divisions, under separate names, previous to any attempt to give separate continental titles to the natural or national sections of the earth.

CONSUL, from consulo, to watch over, to take care of. From B. C., 509, or the 245th year of Rome, until the reign of Augustus, with occasional interruptions, two magistrates under this title, and annually chosen, supplied the place of the kings of the still more ancient Rome. Under the emperors, until the reign of Justinian, when the office was utterly abolished, it was merely honorary. In modern times, consuls are commercial agents appointed by Government, with special powers to regulate, and decide upon commercial transactions. It is quasi a diplomatic trust, Peters's Digest, Vol. 1, 586 sec. 8, and Davis vs. Packard, 7th Peters, 276.

Contacook, river of N. H., rises in Cheshire co., and flowing NE. over Hillsborough, falls into the Merrimack at Concord.

Confesso, seaport of Turkey in Europe, on a gulf of the same name, ancient Strymonic Sinus, in the Archipelago, 200 ms. W. of Constantinople. Lon. 23 58 E., lat. 41 8 N.

Conti, town of Fr., in the dep. of Somme, and late province of Picardy. It formerly gave the title of prince to a branch of the royal family of France. It is seated on the Seille, 14 ms. SW. of Amiens, and 62 N. of Paris. Lon. 2 13 E., lat. 49 42 N.

CONTINENT, as a geographical term, is in an especial manner vague, and is only useful comparatively to designate between two bodies of land of unequal extent. The application to the great land protuberances of the earth has been accidental, arbitrary, and in part contradictory; as examples of the latter, Africa and Asia are distinguished as separate continents, whilst America is included under one general name, though the two former are united by an isthmus or neck no where under 60 ms. in width, and the latter composed of two expansions of land, united by an isthmus which does not, at the narrowest part, amount to a width of 20 ms. Asia and Europe are regarded as two continents, though connected by land through 18 $\frac{1}{2}$ ° of lat., or near 1,300 ms. Europe is only a prolongation of Asia.

Contrecoeur, seigniori, Surry co., L. C., on the right side of the St. Lawrence, and on both sides of Sorelle river.

Conversano, town of Naples, in Terra di Bari, 12 ms. SE. of Bari. Lon. 17 6 E., lat. 41 20 N.

CONVOCAION, an assembly called by summons. In Eng. the grand convocation, when formed, consists of an upper and lower house; the former of archbishops and bishops, the latter of inferior clergy.

Cooper's Town, town and seat of justice, Otsego co., N. Y., on Otsego lake, W. side of its outlet into Susquehanna river; or rather it is here that the Susquehanna commences. The situation of Cooperstown is in a high degree picturesque; the lake spreads to the N. between hills, which rise on both sides to a considerable elevation, clothed with timber to their summits. The roads winding along those steeps, present the traveller with constant varying landscapes. The village is compactly built on uneven ground, on the W. or right side of the outlet; and, with the farm houses in the immediate vicinity, contains about 200 houses, and about 1,000 inhabitants; 66 ms. W. from Albany, and 45 SE. from Utica. N. lat. 42 42, lon. W. C. 2 5 E.

Coos.—See Asia, p. 82.

Coos, northern co. of N. H., bounded by Connecticut river NW., by L. C., N., by Maine, E., by Strafford co., N. H., S., and by Grafton SW.; length 84 ms.; mean width 20; area 1,680 sq. ms. The highest mountains in the U. S. are in this co.; the White hills rising to 7,300 feet above the level of the ocean. Independent of the mountains, the face of the country is in general broken, very hilly, and highly picturesque. Much of the soil is, however, productive in grain and pasturage. Chief town, Lancaster. Pop. in 1820, 5,549; in 1830, 8,390; in 1840, 9,849. Lat. 44° 30' N., and lon. 6° E. from W. C., intersect near the centre of this co.

Coosa River, the NW. and main branch of Alabama, rises in the NW. part of Ga., flowing, first, W. about 100 ms., enters Alabama, and gradually turns to a S. course nearly, in which direction it continues 200 ms. to its junction with the Tallapoosa, or head of Alabama river. It is boatable generally, to Weetumka falls, 7 ms. above its mouth, and at high water, to the junction of Etowah and Oostenalah rivers, in Ga.

Coosawatchy, river, S. C., falls into Port Royal Sound.—Town and seat of justice, Beaufort co., S. C., lying on the Coosahatchie river, about 75 ms. SW. by W. from Charleston. Lat. 32° 32' N., lon. W. C. 3° 58' W.

Coosahatchie.—See Coosawatchie.

Coots, or more correctly Kutztown, a well built village of Berks co., Pa., on a branch of Maiden creek, and on the road from Reading to Allentown, 7 ms. from each.

Copais, now Topolias, a very remarkable, and the largest lake in Greece, situated in Bœotia, and about twelve miles long and four broad. Besides many brooks, the Copais receives into its north-west angle a river of some magnitude, the Cephissus, from the mountains of Doris and Phocis. The Copais has no over ground outlet; its waters are discharged by a subterranean passage into the Gulf of Negropont. This funnel being too narrow to admit a large volume, the lake is much swelled in the winter and spring by the melting of the mountain snows and by rain, overflowing the adjacent flats, and, subsiding during summer and autumn, give to Bœotia, now Livadia, its proverbially heavy, damp, and unwholesome climate. Lake Copais is, in fact, the lower part of one of those interior basins of which this planet affords any other examples of far greater magnitude, such as the Caspian, Aral, Cashgar, &c., in Asia, and Lake of Titicaca, in South America, &c.

Copenhagen, capital of the kingdom of Denmark, situated on the eastern shore of the island of Zealand, upon a fine bay of the Baltic sea, not far from the strait called the Sound. Lon. 13° E., lon. 55° 30' N. Copenhagan is the best built city of the N.; for, although Petersburg excels it in superb edifices, yet, as it contains no wooden houses, it does not display that striking contrast of meanness and magnificence, but in general exhibits a more equable and uniform appearance. This city is 5 ms. in circumference, and seated on the E. shore of the isle of Zealand, 300 ms. SW. of Stockholm, and 500 NE. of London.—See Amak.—Town, Lewis co., N. Y., on the road from Utica to Sackett's Harbor, 12 ms. SE. from Watertown.

COPERNICAN SYSTEM from Nicholas Copernicus, who revived in his Astronomia Instaurata the true astronomical system of the universe.

KOPF, KOPFS, modern Egyptians, which, though derived by writers from many other sources, is evidently only an inflexion of the same term Egypt, Egyptians. Thus only modified or distorted, as there is little doubt but what we now pronounce Egypt with the g soft, was anciently pronounced Egopt, the g hard; if so, we see at once the etymology of Copt.

Coquet, river of Eng., in Northumberland, which, crossing the centre of that county, falls into the German Ocean at Warkworth.—Island on the coast of Northumberland, opposite the mouth of the river Coquet.

Coquimbo, seaport of Chili, on a river of the same name. It has often been pillaged by the English. Lon. W. C. 5° 42' W., lat. 29° 54' S.—Province of Chili, between the Andes mountains and Pacific Ocean. It is a most delightful region, enjoying almost perennial spring. Coquimbo is the capital.

Cordova, episcopal town of Spain, in Andalusia, remarkable for its antiquity, and for having preserved its splendor and riches through so many ages, it being well known to the Romans by the name of Corduba. In A. D. 759, Addoulrahman, only heir of the Ommad line, fixed his royal residence at Cordova. Then began those flourishing ages of Arabian gallantry and magnificence, which rendered the Moors of Spain superior to all their cotemporaries in arts and arms, and made Cordova one of the most splendid cities of the world. When Europe was buried in ignorance and debased by brutality of manners, it became the centre of politeness, industry, and genius. Great and expensive monuments of architecture were undertaken and completed by many of these Spanish monarchs, whose remains no body can behold without being strongly impressed with a high idea of the genius of the artists, as well as the grandeur of the prince who carried them into execution. It is seated on the Guadalquivir, over which is a magnificent stone bridge. The trade consists in wine, silk, and Cordovan leather. In the neighborhood are a vast number of orange and lemon trees. The best horses in Spain come hence. Cordova is 75 ms. NE. of Seville, and 137 S. by W. of Madrid. Lon. 4 4 W., lat. 32 10 N.—Town of S. America, in Tucuman, with a bishop's see, 180 ms. E. by N. of St. Jago. It is situated in an extensive level country. Lon. W. C. 13° E., lat. 31 20 S.—Extensive province of the United Provinces of La Plata, of which the preceding place of the same name is the capital. Its limits are uncertain; its population estimated at about 75,000; chief trade mules and horses.—Flourishing town of Mexico, in Vera Cruz, containing about 4,000 inhabitants, 60 ms. W. from Vera Cruz, and 140 ESE. from Mexico. Lon. W. C. 20° W., lat. 18 50 N.

Cordovan, light-house of Fr., at the mouth of the Gironde, 55 ms. NW. of Bordeaux. Lon. 1 9 W., lat. 45 36 N.

Corca, peninsula of Asia, extending between China and Japan. It is bounded on the N. by Maushuria, on the E. by the sea and isles of Japan, on the S. by the ocean, and on the W. by the gulf and province of Leaou tong. The Corean kingdom is tributary to China, but does not form a part of China proper.—See art. Asia.

Corentin, small river of Guiana, falls into the Atlantic ocean, W. from Berbice.

Core Sound, on the coast of N. C., extends from Beaufort inlet to Pamlico Sound, 20 ms. in length.

Corfe-Castle, borough of Eng., in Dorsetshire. It is seated in a peninsula called the Isle of Purbeck, on a river between two hills, on one of which stands the castle, formerly a place of great importance. It is 21 ms. E. of Dorchester, and 120 W. by S. of London. Lon. 2 4 W., lat. 50 36 N.

Corfu, island of the Mediterranean, near Albania, subject to the British Government, and forms the principal part of the republic of the 7 islands, or Ionian Republic. It is defended by an impregnable castle. Lon. 20° E., lat. 39 40 N.—Ancient Coreyra, capital of the island of Corfu. It is a very strong but ill built town, with about 15,000 inhabitants. Lon. 20° E., lat. 39 40 N.

Coria, episcopal town of Spain, in Leon, seated on the Alagon, 120 ms. SW. of Madrid. Lon. 5 30 W., lat. 40° N.

Corinth, now called Coranthis, or Gorane, a celebrated city in the Morea. It was one of the most important places in Greece, on account of its situation on the isthmus into the Morea; its castle on the top of an almost inaccessible rock; its harbors on the Gulfs of Lepanto and Egina; its riches and its architects, sculptors, and painters, who were the most skilful in Greece. It is now greatly decayed, for the houses are not contiguous, but intermixed with fields and gardens, which make it look like a village. The country about it abounds with corn, wine, and oil, and from the castle is a fine prospect over the sea to the E. and W. and a fertile country N. and S. The inhabitants are chiefly Christians of the Greek church. It is 40 ms. NW. from Athens. Lon. 23 3 E., lat. 38 14 N.

Corinth, Isthmus of, in the Morea, a neck of land which joins the Morea to Livadia, and reaches from the Gulf of Lepanto to that of Egina. The narrowest part of it is 6 ms. over; and on a mount there, called Oneius, were formerly celebrated the Isthmian games. Julius Cæsar, Caligula, and Nero, in vain attempted to cut a channel through the isthmus; they therefore built a wall across it called Hexamilium, because it was 6 ms. in length. This was demolished by Amrath II., rebuilt by the Venetians, and levelled a second time by Mahomet II.

Corinth, town Penobscot co., Maine, 20 ms. NNW. from Bangor. Pop. in 1820, 296.—Town, Orange co., Vt., about 30 ms. SE. from Montpelier. Pop. 1,900.—Town in Saratoga co., N. Y. Pop. in 1820, 1,400.

Corritta, town of Spain, in Leon, 23 ms. E. of Salamanca. Lon. 5 49 W., lat. 41 5 N.

Cork, co. of Ireland, in the province of Munster, 80 ms. in length, and 50 in breadth, bounded on the W. by Kerry and the Atlantic, on the N. by Limerick, on the E. by Waterford, and on the S. and SE. by St. George's Channel. It contains 232 parishes. It is fertile and populous, and has two remarkable rivers, the Blackwater and Lee.

Cork, capital of the co. of Cork. It is a neat, wealthy, and populous place, on the river Lee, where it has a commodious harbor. It is the first town of Ireland for trade, except Dublin. It is 14 ms. from St. George's channel, and 124 SW. of Dublin. Lon. 8 23 W., lat. 51 54 N.—Village in Ashtabula co., Ohio, 13 ms. SW. of Jefferson, the county seat.

Corla, town of Asia Minor, near the Gulf of the island, near the ruins of Chalcedon.

Corlin, town of Prussian Pomerania, seated on the river Perstan, 8 ms. SE. of Colberg. Lon. 15 47 E., lat. 54 16 N.

Cormachili, cape of Cyprus, on the north side of the island. It is probably so called from the ancient group of small islands called Carpassae.

Cormentin, fortress on the Gold Coast of Guinea, belonging to the Dutch. Near it is the town, which is large and populous. Lon. 0 15 W., lat. 5 30 N.

Cormery, town of Fr., in the dep. of Indre and Loire, on the Indre, 8 ms. from Tours. Lon. 0 28 E., lat. 47 30 N.

Cornersburg, village in the southern part of Franklin co., Ohio. It is situated at the corners of four townships, 4 ms. from each of four other villages, Canfield, Youngstown, Broadman, and Austintown, and also about 20 ms. SSE. of Warren, the county seat.

Cornet, castle on the island of Guernsey. Lon. 2 40 W., lat. 49 30 N.

Cornish, town in York co., Me. It is a mountainous country, situated on Saco river. Pop. in 1820, 1,038.—Village in Cheshire co., N. H., on the E. side of Connecticut river, about 20 ms. N. of Charleston. Pop. in 1820, 1,701.

Cornville, town in Somerset co., Me., 44 ms. N. from Hallowell. Pop. in 1810, 504; in 1820, 552.

Cornwall, county which forms the SW. extremity of Eng., bounded on the E. by Devonshire, on the S. by the English channel, and on the NW. by St. George's channel. This county is 80 ms. long, 40 broad, and 250 in circumference, containing 960,000 acres. Pop. in 1801, 188,269; in 1811, 216,687; and in 1821, 257,447. Its chief rivers are the Tamar, Tale, Cober, Loo, Camel, Dove, Haile, Lemara, Kense, and Aire. Its principal capes or headlands are the Lands End, the Lizard, Cape Cornwall, Deadman's Head, Rame Head, &c., and a cluster of islands, 145 in number, called the Scilly isles, supposed formerly to have belonged to the mainland, though now 30 ms. distant, abounding with antiquities, particularly druidical. As Cornwall is surrounded by the sea on all sides except the E., the summers are less hot and the winters less cold than in other parts of England, and the spring and harvest are observed to be more backward. The soil, as it is shallow, is not very fruitful, especially in the centre or the hilly parts; the valleys are very pleasant and fertile, yielding great plenty both of corn and pasture. The Phenicians early visited these coasts, some think 400 or 450 years before Christ. It derives its chief importance from its minerals. The mines of tin are numerous, and are, in general, very rich in ore; these have rendered this county famous in all ages. The copper mines are also numerous and rich in ore. In many cavernous parts of the rocks are found transparent crystals, called cornish diamonds, they being very brilliant when well polished. The King's or the Queen's (if the latter is Queen regent at the time of the birth) eldest son is born Duke of Cornwall, and derives a revenue not only from lands appertaining to the duchy, but from the mines of tin and copper; he has under him an officer called Lord Warden of the Stannary Courts, whose jurisdiction extends over the mines and miners of Cornwall and Devonshire; and he appoints in his privy council the sheriff of the former county. Launceston is the capital.—Tp. of U. C., co. of Stormont, on the left bank of the St. Lawrence, between Osnaburg and Charlottenburg.—Village in Stormont co., U. C., nearly opposite the Indian village of St. Regis.—Tp. in Addison co., Vt., on Otter river, 36 ms. S. from Burlington. Pop. 1,280.—Town in Litchfield co., Con., 10 ms. NW. from Litchfield. Pop. in 1820, 1,662. There is a foreign missionary school in this town.—Tp. in Orange co., N. Y., 52 ms. above the city of N. Y. Pop. in 1820, 3,020.

Coromandel, Coast of, the most eastern part of the Hiher India, lying between 10° and 20° N. lat. and 79 30 and 86 30 E. lon. It is terminated by Golconda on the N., by the Bay of Bengal on the E., by Madura on the S., and by Bisnagar proper on the W. Some geographers consider the southern limit of Golconda to be Cape Comorin, and the northern Masulipatam. On this coast, Madras, or Fort St. George, Pondicherry, and many other European forts and factories are situated, from whence chintz, calicoes, and muslins, are exported to Europe, together with some diamonds. There is not a port for large ships on the whole coast. Madras is the principal town. The name Coromandel comes from Sanscrit Tchora—Mandalen.—See Monsoons.

Coron, seaport of the Morea, seated on a bay, 15 ms. SE. of Modon. Lon. 21 50 E., lat. 36 50 N. It is the ancient Apollonia Corinthi Templum of Messenia, near the promontory of Acritas, now Cape Gallo.

On the S. it is separated from Sardinia by the strait of Bonifacio; to the E. it has the Tuscan sea; to the N. the Gulf of Genoa; and to the W. it is opposite to the coasts of France and Spain. It is 150 ms. from N. to S., and from 40 to 50 in breadth. On the coast are many excellent harbors. The air is very unwholesome, and the land hilly, full of stones, and cultivated very poorly; however, the valleys produce wheat, and the hills fruits, viz: olives, figs, grapes, almonds, and chestnuts. They have horses, also, of a very fiery nature. Besides, there are mines of iron, and a great deal of fish and coral on the coast. There is a ridge of mountains which divides the island into two parts, the N. and S. The capital is Bastia. It belongs to France, and forms two departments, Golo and Liamore. Napoleon Bonaparte, late Emperor of France, was born on this island, at Ajaccio.

Corsoer, town of Denmark, on the west side of the isle of Zealand, on a peninsula, in the Great Belt. It has a good harbor for light vessels, and is defended by a citadel. Lon. 11 12 E., lat. 55 12 N.

Corte, town of Italy, in the island of Corsica, seated partly at the foot and partly on the declivity of a rock, at the confluence of the Tavignano and Restonica. On the point of a rock, rising above the rest, at the back of the town, is a castle, which has only one winding passage to climb up, in which only two persons can go abreast. It is 27 ms. SW. of Bastia. Lon. 9 26 E., lat. 42 6 N.

Coshocton, village on the Delaware, in Sullivan co., N. Y., 60 ms. W. from Newburg. Co. of Ohio, bounded by Knox W., Holmes N., Tuscarawas E., Guernsey SE., Muskingum S., and Licking SW. Greatest length from E. to W. 36 ms., 24 ms. wide, and area 560 sq. ms. The surface of Coshocton is very diversified. As a whole, the country is hilly, and part on the Tuscarawas might be called mountainous. In the Ohio Gazetteer it is said truly: "The valleys of the different streams are beautiful, rich, and fertile; while the hills are mostly well adapted for cultivation, and afford good wheat land." It is a county peculiarly well watered. At Coshocton the county seat, and about 6 ms. SE. of the centre of the county, the union of Tuscarawas and Walhonding forms Muskingum river—the former from the eastward and the latter from the west. See Walhonding river and Ohio canal. Below Coshocton, the Muskingum assumes a course of a little W. of S., and in that direction continues to the influx of Wills creek, which, entering from Guernsey, flows thence along the southern border of Coshocton. All the northwestern and central part of this county are watered by the Walhonding, and its confluent, as are the eastern by those of the Tuscarawas. Salt water is found in this county, chiefly in the southeastern part. Bituminous coal is found in nearly every section of the county and indications of iron and lead ores have been detected on the sources of Walhonding. By the census of 1820, the population of this county amounted to 7,086; it had risen to 11,162 in 1830, supposed to be 16,000 in 1837, and by the census of 1840 was found 21,590. In lat. it extends from 40 10 to 40 27 N., and in lon. W. C. 4 40 to 5 12 W. Town and county seat of Coshocton co. The site is very fine on the left or eastern side of Muskingum river, directly below the mouth of Tuscarawas river, and opposite Roscoe at the mouth of Walhonding, the two towns connected by a substantial wooden bridge on stone piers. The town of Coshocton stands on four benches running parallel to and rising in succession from the river. By the canal, 41 ms. from New ark, and 135 from Cleveland. By post road, 2 ms. northward of Zanesville, 35 NE. of Newark and 68 ms. NE. from Columbus. N. lat. 40 17 lon. W. C. 4 55. Pop. 1840, 625.

COUNT, comitatus, originally meant companion; but has long been adopted as a title on continental Europe; rather equivocal, answering somewhat to both earl and lord, English titles. In office, count and earl are correlative.—See County.

COUNTY, Fr. compt, Latin comitatus. Amongst our Anglo-Saxon ancestors, that division we de- nominate a county, was called shire, from shiran, to cut off, or set off. After the Norman conquest of England, the term county was introduced into that kingdom; hence the often used compound terms: county of Lancashire, county of Shrop- shire, &c. Hampshire, a State of the United States, derives its name from the original Saxon mode of expression. In the United States the highest county executive officer still retains the original Saxon title, with some inflection from schir gerefa, sheriff, the latter shortened from shire reeve.

Crimea, or Crim Tartary, the ancient Taurica Chersonesus, a peninsula of Europe, bounded on the S. and W. by the Black sea, on the N. by the province of Catharinenslaf, with which it communicates by the isthmus of Perekop, and on the NE. and E. by the sea of Asoph and the strait of Caffa. The mountains are well covered with woods fit for the purpose of ship-building, and contain plenty of wild beasts. The valleys consist of fine arable land; on the sides of the hills grow corn and vines in great abundance; and the earth is rich in mines. But the mountaineers are as careless and negligent as the inhabitants of the deserts, slighting all these advantages; and, like their brethren of the lowlands, are sufficiently happy if they are in possession of a fat sheep and as much bread as serves them to eat. In 1783 the Russians took possession of the country with an army; the following year it was ceded to them by the Turks; and the peaceable possession of the whole was secured to them in 1791, by the cession of the fortress of Oczakow. The Crimea is divided into two parts, by mountains which run E. and W. The N. division is flat, poor, and fit for pasturage only. In the S. parts the valleys are astonishingly productive, and the climate extremely mild, from the exclusion of those violent winds by which the N. division is frequently incommode. Besides the ports of Kerth and Jenikale, the road of Caffa, and the harbor of Baluclava, there is, near Sebastopol, one of the finest harbors in the world. The Crimea now forms one of the two provinces of the government of Catharinenslaf, under the name of Taurida; in some late maps it is called Taurica. Achmetschet was made the capital in 1785.

Crio, cape, ancient Criumetopon promontory, SW. point of the island of Crete. The name means ram's head, and was also applied to the most southern point of the Taurica Chersonesus, now called by the Turks Karadje Bowroun, or "Black Nose," or Ajadag, "Holy Mountain."

Cuba, island of the West Indies, at the entrance of the Gulf of Mexico, 700 ms. in length, and about 60 in mean width, or 42,000 sq. ms. superficial area. On the E. side it begins at 20 20 N. lat., touches the tropic of Cancer on the N., and extends from 74° to 85 18 W. lon. from London, and from 3° E. to 8° W. from W. C. It lies 60 ms. W. of Hispaniola, 85 ms. N. from Jamaica, 80 ms. to the E. of Yucatan, and 100 to the S. from Cape Florida. It commands the entrance of the gulfs both of Mexico and Florida, also the windward passages. It was discovered Columbus in 1492. The Spaniards are en-masters of it, having extirpated the natives. It is varied, in part extremely productive. Extensive savannahs chequer the interior. A chain of not very elevated mountains ranges nearly entire length of the island. This ridge is supposed to be rich in minerals. The produce composed chiefly of coffee, sugar, ginger, cassia wild cinnamon, and very good tobacco, called the Spaniards cigarros. The hills run through middle of the island from E. to W., but near coast the land is generally level, and many rivulets flow from the hills to the N. and S. The hundredth part of this island is not yet cleared. The true plantations are mostly confined to beautiful plains of the Havana, Matanzas, & near St. Jago.

The following statistical notices of the island Cuba are extracted from an article in the South Patriot, printed at Charleston, which the editor that paper informs us is from the pen of a gentleman who has had access to the best sources of information:

Property and products.—During the last seven years the average crop has been 300,000 boxes sugar, of 400 lbs. each, and 25,000,000 lbs. coffee. When the census was taken in 1801, note was made of the number of churches, houses, farms, &c., by which it appears that there were then 204 churches, 42,268 houses, 1,762 families, 623 sugar estates, 779 coffee plantations, 1,601 tobacco plantations, 830 breeding farms, 1,193 pastures, 354 beehive farms, 17 cocoa plantations.

Commerce.—In 1803 the exports from the Havana were estimated by Baron Humboldt $8,000,000; 158,000 boxes of sugar, which considered worth $10 per box, 50,000 arrobas coffee, worth $5 the arroba, 40,000 arrobas wax, at $18 the arroba. In 1821 the exports were: 236,669 boxes of sugar, 792,509½ arrol of coffee, 15,724½ arrobas of wax, 26,664½ arrol of molasses, 4,616½ pipes of rum; showing an increase in the exports of the island of 78,669 boxes of sugar, 742,509 arrobas of coffee, and a diminution of 24,276 arrobas of wax.

The number of vessels that entered the port of the Havana in 1821 was 1,322, exclusive of 3 small coasters. Of these 335 were Spanish, 6 American, 128 English, 72 French, 25 Dutch, Bremen, 13 Danish, 9 Hamburgers, 6 Portuguese, 5 Swedish, 4 Sardinians, 3 pirates, prizes, 1 Prussian, and 1 Hanoverian.

In 1822 there entered 1,396 vessels, of which 386 were Spanish, 669 American, 118 English, 1 French, 18 Dutch, 12 Hamburgers, 7 Bremen, Danish, 7 Portuguese, 4 Swedes, 2 pirates, prize 2 Sicilians, 1 Oldenburger, 1 Sardinian, and 1 Columbian, a prize.

Population.—In 1805 the island of Cuba contained to Baron de Humboldt, 432,000 inhabitants, of which there were—

By the census taken in 1817, it appears that the population then amounted to 625,099 inhabitants, of which 259,260 were whites, 108,057 free colored persons, and 199,145 slaves.
The island is divided into two provinces, under the present government, Havana and Cuba. The province of Havana, lately erected into a bishopric, comprehends Matanzas, Trinidad, Santo Esteban, Remedios, and Villa Clara. It contains a population of 431,377, of which 197,678 are whites, 50,676 free colored persons, 126,213 slaves, 14,000 troops, and 25,000 transient.
The province of Cuba comprehends the districts of Santiago de Cuba, Bayamo, Holguin, Baracoa, and Puerto Principe, and contains a population of 1,702 inhabitants; of which 59,722 are whites, 135 free colored persons, 63,071 slaves, 4,430 troops, and 9,286 transient persons.
The number of African slaves imported, from the year 1800 to 1821, amounts to 175,054.
The city of Havana, by the census of 1817, contained within the walls 140,618 inhabitants, including transient persons. Of those, 37,885 were whites, 9,010 free colored, 12,361 free blacks, 2,542 colored slaves, 21,799 black slaves; 588 permanent population of the city and suburbs.

Expenses - - - - -	3,643,868

According to Baron Humboldt, in 1804 the revenue of the whole island produced $2,300,000, and the deficit was made up by an annual supply from Mexico of $1,326,000.
The deaths in 1821, in the Havana, were 340 whites, 2,126 blacks and colored persons—total 4,460. Births in the same year, 4,326. The excess of deaths to births is owing to the number of strangers and negroes imported, who die of black vomit.
From the preceding elements, it is shown that the population of this very important island increased from 1805 until 1817, from 432,000 to 625,099. The increment is very nearly at the rate of 3½ per cent.; and, adopting this ratio, the population of Cuba is, in Similar to every large section of America, the island of Cuba is only commencing to be peopled. The aggregate given in the preceding table for 1825, only supposes about 20 to the sq. m. Cuba would amply support 200 to the sq. m., or admit a population of 7 or 8 millions. Jamaica, in 1812, had a collective population of 80 to a sq. m.; and at this ratio Cuba would have 2,800,000 inhabitants.

Though from climate and soil the productions of Cuba may be considered as comprising nearly all the tropical plants, yet it is probable coffee will continue to be the principal vegetable staple. Influenced by the intrinsic value of this island, and the paucity of general information on the subject, I have given place to a succinct account of coffee cultivation in Cuba.—Nat. Int., Nov. 13th, 1824.

Commerce of the Island of Cuba.—Very full and precise statements of the commerce and finances of the Island of Cuba are annually published by the government of that flourishing colony, which exhibit a flattering picture of its wealth and resources.

Cumberland, co. of Eng., bounded on the N.
by Northumberland, Durham, and Westmoreland, on the S. by Lancashire, and on the W. by the Irish sea and Solway Frith.
The length from N. to S. may amount to 55 ms., but the breadth does not exceed 40. It is well watered with rivers, lakes, and fountains, but none of its streams are navigable. In some places there are very high mountains. The air is keen and refreshing on these mountains, towards the N., and the climate is moist, as in all hilly countries. The country produces great quantities of coal, some of the abundance of the mineral earth called black lead, several mines of lapis calaminaris, and an inconsiderable pearl fishery on the coast near Radcliff. The Skiddaw is the principal mountain, and the chief rivers are the Eden and Derwent. The lakes in Cumberland are the Derwent Water, Bossenthwaite Water, Buttermere Water,
Cumbuck Water, Lowes Water, Uls Water, West
Water, Ennerdale Water, Elder Water, Broad
Water, &c. Carlisle is the capital. Pop. 1801,

Curacoa, island off the coast of Colombia, in the Caribbean sea, 30 ms. long and 10 broad. It is a barren spot, destitute of fresh water, and important as a commercial station. Central lon. W. C. 8 20 E., lat. 12 5 N.

Curdistan, country of Asia, seated between the Turkish empire and Persia, lying along the eastern coast of the river Tigris, and comprehending great part of ancient Assyria. It is the Carduchi of Xenophon. Some of the inhabitants live in towns and villages, and others rove from place to place having tents like the wild Arabs, and being robbers like them. Their religion is partly Christianity and partly Mahometanism, but they are very loose in regard to either. Recent information has given great interest to Kurdistan, which renders necessary a more ample notice.—See Koordister.

CURFEW, from Norman Fr. couvre-feu, cover fire. The term comes from an order of William the Conqueror, under which, at a certain hour, generally 8 in the evening, bells were rung, when the inhabitants were compelled to cover up their fire and retire to rest. Gray's elegy has immortalized the term in English literature.—“The curfew tolls the knell of parting day.”

Curia-Maria, an island on the coast of Arab Felix, opposite the mouth of the river Prinn. Lon. 55 25 E., lat. 17° N.

Curico, town of Chili, on the road from Chulle to Santiago. Lon. W. C. 6 10 E., lat. 34 35 S.

Cushai, river of N. C., which falls into Albemarle sound.

Cusset, town of Fr., now in the dep. of Allier, lately in the province of Bourbonnois, 17 ms. N. Roanne. Lon. 4 5 E., lat. 46 17 N.

Custrin, capital of the new marche of Brandenburg, at the confluence of the Oder and Warta, 46 s. E. by N. of Berlin. Lon. 14 40 E., lat. 52 40 N.

Cusa Leuvu, river of South America. It rises in the Andes mountains, and in the province of Mendoza, and, assuming a SE. course, separates the United provinces of La Plata from Patagonia, and, after a comparative course of about 600 ms., falls into the Atlantic ocean at S. lat. 41°, between the mouth of the Colorado and the bay of St. Mathias.

Cutahogue, post office, Suffolk co., N. Y., on Long Island, 58 ms. E. from the city of N. York.

Cutais, capital of Imeritia, and the residence of its sovereign. The remains of its cathedral seem to prove that it was once a considerable place, but now scarcely deserves the name of a village. Lon. 43° E., lat. 43 35 N.

Cutch, island and district of Indostan, situated between the delta of the Indus river and the peninsula of Guzerat, having the province of Sinde W. and N., Marwar NE., the Guicowar E., the Gulf of Cutch S., and the Indian ocean W. The northern part of Cutch, which separates it from Sinde, is rather an immense salt marsh than a gulf. From the NW. it receives part of the surplus water of the Indus, and into the eastern part is discharged the Loony, Puddar, and other smaller rivers. Some part of Cutch is fertile, but generally the country is sterile. Extent from W. to E. 180 ms., mean breadth about 50. The tropic of Cancer traverses the northern side of Cutch. Bhooj, situated near the centre, is its capital.

Cutch Gundava, eastern district of Beloochistan, and W. of the Indus river, comprising a part of the valley between the two main chains of the Solyman mountains. It is drained by a stream we may call the river of Gundava, and which, issuing from the valley through a mountain gorge, falls into the Indus at Sehun. N. lat. 29° passes nearly centrally over Gundava.

Cuttock, district of Hindostan, in Orissa, S. from Bengal, and between the Bay of Bengal and a range of mountains. In this country is the famous temple of Juggernaut. It lies between lat. 19° and 22° N.

Cuyahoga, river of O., rises in Geauga co., flows SW. into Portage, in which it turns first W., and on the W. border of the county, nearly N., enters Cuyahoga co., and falls into Lake Erie at Cleveland, after a comparative course of 80 ms. This river forms a part of the natural channel through which the grand central canal of Ohio has been formed.

Cuyahoga, co. of Ohio, bounded E. by Geauga, SE. by Portage, by Medina S., Lorain W., and Lake Erie N. and NE. Length, directly E. and W., 30 ms., but along its Lake Erie border, about 42 or 43 ms., the area 550 sq. ms. The progressive pop. of this co. is rather remarkable, even in Ohio; 1810, 1,495, in 1820, 6,328, in 1830, 10,361, again in 1840, 26,506. County seat Cleveland.

The whole co. belongs to the Lake Erie slope, the descent rapid, as is fully shown in the Ohio canal, by the great difference of height between the Cuyahoga aqueduct, in NW. angle of Portage co., and Cleveland. General aspect hilly, soil tolerably good. On the western side the co. is traversed in a northern direction by Rock ridge. The locally very important stream of Cuyahoga traverses also northerly, and divides the co. into two not very unequal sections; the eastern part is also traversed northerly by Chagrin river. In lat. it extends from 41 16 to 41 40 N., and lon. from 82 26 to 82 58 W. of W. C.

Cuyahoga, falls and village, Talmadge tp., Portage co., Ohio. Here are the great falls in Cuyahoga river, about 240 feet, affording an immense water power, which has already been made available in part; however, only a small part. The Pa. and Ohio canal passes this village, and joins the Ohio canal, 4 ms. distant at Akron. It is already a place of great and increasing business. In its vicinity exist the only stratum yet found, on the Erie slope of Ohio, of mineral coal. This stratum is now extensively worked.

Cuyo, province of the united provinces of La Plata, in Peru, bounded by the Andes W.

Cuzco, town of Peru, formerly the residence of the Incas. It is seated at the foot of a mountain, and is built in a square form, in the middle of which is the best market in all America; 4 large streets terminate in the square, which are all as straight as a line, and regard the four quarters of the world. It contains 8 large parishes and 5 religious houses, and the number of inhabitants is about 50,000, of which three-fourths are the original Americans. Streams of water run through the town, which are a great convenience in so hot a country, where it seldom rains. It is 320 ms. S. of Lima. Lon. 73 47 W., lat. 12° S.

Cuzumel, small island in the Caribbean sea, E. from the coast of Yucatan. Lon. W. C. 8 20 W., lat. 19° N.

Cylades, ancient name of the Grecian islands, SE. from Attica, and so called from lying round the island of Delos. The principal of these islands, advancing from the N., were Andros, Teno, Myconus, Rhenea, Delos; to the W. were Syros, Ceos, Cythnus, Seriphus, Syphnus, and Melos; and to the S. from Delos were Naxos, Paros, Amorgos, and Astypalæa.

Cynthianna, village on the S. fork of Licking river, 36 ms. NE. by E. from Frankfort, and 34 NNE. from Lexington. This place is the seat of justice for Harrison co. Pop. 1840, 978.—

Village on Loranie's creek, northwestern part of Shelby co., Ohio, 12 ms. westward of Sidney, the county seat, and about 20 ms. NE. of Greenville, in Darke co.

Cyprus, island in the Mediterranean, near the coast of Syria. The soil is an excellent fertile clay, and if the natives were industrious, they might make it a paradise. The exports of the island are silk, wool, and wine. Nicosia is the capital.

Cyr, St., village of France, 2 ms. from Versailles.

Cythianna, village Posey co., by post road 202 ms. SE. from Indianapolis.

Czackhurn, strong place of Austria, between the rivers Drave and Muhir, 100 ms. S. of Vienna. Lon. 17 10 E., lat. 46 44 N.

CZAR, or TZAR, applied now only to the Emperor of Russia, but it is probable that the common derivation, from Cæsar, is erroneous. As a suffix it is fully supported by analogous connexion that it is the same title found in Nebuchadnezar, Belteshezar, Nebuzar-aden, &c.

Czaslau, town of Bohemia, capital of a circle of the same name. Here is the highest tower in Bohemia. It is seated on the river Crudenka, 40 ms. SE. of Prague. Lon. 15 33 E., lat. 49 50 N.

Czenstokow, town of Poland, in Cracovia, on the river Watte, 50 ms. N. by W. of Cracow. Lon. 19 15 E., lat. 50 48 N.

Czercassi, town of Russia, in the Ukraine, near the Dnieper, 85 ms. SE. of Kiow. Lon. 32 5 E., lat. 49° N.

Czernie, town of Carniola. It is remarkable for its lake, which is 15 ms. in length, and 5 in breadth, and produces fish and corn every year; for when the waters fall from the mountains it becomes full, and abounds with fish, and after some time it sinks into the earth, and then it is cultivated, and produces grass and corn. A similar routine of phenomena occurs in several lakes in Louisiana. See Ocatahoola, Blach, Spanish, &c., lakes. Lon. 15° E., lat. 46 6 N.

Czernikow, town of Russia, capital of a duchy of the same name, on the Dezna, 70 ms. N. by E. of Kiow. Lon. 31 53 E., lat. 51 29 N.

Damascus, the Demeshk, or Bar-el-sham of the Orientalists, city and capital of the Pachaic of Syria, in the Ottoman empire. It stands on the small river Barida, 200 ms. S. from Antioch, and 150 ms. SE. from Jerusalem. Lat. 33 35 N., lon. 36 30 E. The climate is almost an unfading spring and summer admixed. Eastern authors call Damascus one of the four terrestrial paradises.

The form of this city is a nearly square of 1½ ms., with an extensive suburb. Perhaps no other city in the world is so completely supplied with excellent fresh water. The Barida, or Barady, flowing from the mountains of Syria afford a superabundance of that delicious fluid, and the whole city abounds in gushing fountains.—Pachaic of Turkey, in Asia, of which the city of Damascus is the capital. It contains nearly all northern Syria, extending to Caramania on the N., and to Palestine S. It is bounded on the W. by the Mediterranean, and on the E. by deserts of sands.—Tp. in Wayne co., Pa. Damietta, ancient and rich town of Egypt, seated at one of the eastern mouths of the Nile, with a good harbor. It is rounded in a semicircle, two leagues and a half from the mouth of the Nile. The tongue of land on which Damietta is situated, straitened on one side by the river, and on the other by the W. extremity of Lake Mentzalé, is only from two to six ms. wide from E. to W. It is intersected by innumerable rivulets in every direction, which render it the most fertile spot in Egypt. It is there that nature, lavishing profusely her pomp and riches, presents flowers, fruits, and harvests, at every season of the year. Damietta was taken by the French in their expedition to Egypt in 1799.

Damiano, St., town of Italy, in Monsterrat, 18 ms. W. by N. of Vercelli. Lon. 8° E., lat. 45 33 N.

Dantzic, capital of western Prussia, standing on a branch of the Vistula, about 4 ms. above where it falls into the Baltic, in lon. 16 36 E., lat. 54

20 N. This city is famous in history on many accounts, particularly that of its being formerly at the head of the Hanseatic association, commonly called the Hanse towns. It is large, beautiful, populous, and rich; its houses are generally five stories high; and many of its streets are planted with chestnut trees. The houses are well built of stone or brick, six or seven stories high, and the granaries are still higher, to which the ships lie close, and take in their lading. The established religion is the Lutheran; but Roman Catholics, Calvinists, and Anabaptists, are tolerated. The inhabitants have been computed at 200,000, but other computations have made them considerably less. Besides corn, of which great quantities are exported, they trade in naval stores, and a great variety of other articles. It is seated on the Vistula, near the gulf of Angli, in the Baltic, 30 ms. SE. of Marienburg and 160 NW. of Warsaw.

Danube, one of the largest rivers in Europe called the Ister by the ancients. It rises at or near Doneschingen, in Suabia, and flows NE. by Ulm then E. through Bavaria and Austria, by Ratisbon, Passau, Ens, and Vienna; it then enters Hungary and runs SE. by Presburg, Buda, and Belgrade after which it divides Bulgaria from Morlachia and Moldavia, discharging itself by several channels into the Black sea. It begins to be navigable for boats at Ulm, and receives several large rivers as it passes along. It is so deep between Buda and Belgrade, that the Turks and Germans have had men-of-war upon it; yet it is not navigable to the Black sea, on account of the cataracts.

The entire length of the Danube is about 1,200 ms. It is remarkable for containing three basins that of Suabia and Bavaria near its source, and that of Austria and Hungary in the middle, and that of Bulgaria and Valachia near the Black sea. The basin of this fine river extends in a direction from NNW. 1,000 ms., with a mean width of 200, and contains 200,000 sq. ms., or about the one fifteenth part of all Europe; but, as a productive tract, from the general fertility which prevail in all its minor basins, but particularly in the middle, the Danube sustains a population which far exceeds the comparative rank of its basin. From the arbitrary division of provinces, it is difficult to fix the number of inhabitants existing upon this region, but the mass must be immense, as it is composed of the far greater part of the inhabitant of Wurtemberg and Bavaria—at least five seventh of all the empire of Austria; with Croatia, Bosnia, Servia, Bulgaria, Valachia, and Moldavia, and cannot fall short of 33,000,000. If we estimate the entire population of Europe at 240,000,000 the valley of the Danube must sustain one-seventh of the whole mass. Lying between the parallels of 42 and 50° N., the climate is mild, and except some parts of Hungary, and near its mouth, the air of the Danube basin is healthy. Its most southern point is the sources of the Morava, in Servia, and the most northern, those of the Marsch, which it receives between Vienna and Presburg.

As a navigable basin, however, the Danube basin falls far below either that of the Volga or the Dneiper. The former is traversed by two of mountains; one extending N. from the chain of Tyrol, and the second, branching in a similar direction from the Hæmus, crosses the Danube a rsava, and continuing N., unites with and forms continuation of the mountains of Transylvania, though navigable, therefore, in each minor basin, his noble stream cannot yet be passed from source to mouth.

The mouth of the Danube has never been possessed by a really civilized people; the Turks only make ruin; and neither Austria nor Bavaria have availed themselves of the full advantages of their share of one of the greatest streams of the earth.—See Tiess, or Theisse. The name of the Danube, German Donow, as also Don, &c., is most probably derived from Celtic Dian, Damn, force, violence, &c.

Danube, circle of the Upper, one of the great divisions of Bavaria. Capital, Eichstadt.—Circle of the Lower, one of the great subdivisions of the Kingdom of Bavaria. Capital, Pasau. Danube, Circle of, district of the Grand Duchy of Baden. Capital, Villingen.

Darda, town and fort of Lower Hungary, built by the Turks in 1686, and taken by the Austrians the next year. It is seated on the Drave, at the end of the bridge of Esseck, 8 ms. S. of Baranwhar, and 80 ms. NW. of Belgrade. Lon. 19 56 E., lat. 45 45 N.

Dardanelles, two castles of Turkey, on each side of the ancient Hellespont, now the strait of Gallipoli, the SW. entrance of which they command; the one is called Sestos, seated in Romania, the other Abydos, in Natolia. At the latter, the cargoes of all ships sailing from Constantinople are searched. Longitude 26 30 E., latitude 46° N.

Dardanelles, Straits of, and those of Gallipoli are different, though often confounded. About 12 ms. from the open Archipelago, within the Hellespont, the strait turns to nearly NW. and SE, and contracts to less than an English mile. Here the Sultan Bajazet I. built two castles, one on each side, called the Dardanelles, from which the whole strait is often vaguely named. Above the Dardanelles the strait turns to NE. and SW., and widens considerably; but again 22 ms. higher, and immediately below where the Marmora sea opens, and on the European side, stood the ancient town of Gallipolis, now Gallipoli; here the strait is again contracted to less than a mile, and is the proper Gallipoli.

Dardenne, town, St. Charles co., Mo. I find this place marked on the post office list 110 ms. from St. Charles, an evident mistake either in distance or locality.

Darfoor, kingdom of central Africa, to the W. of Sennaar and Abyssinia.

Darel-Humara, town of the kingdom of Fez, built by the Romans. Its trade consists in oil and corn; and it is seated on a mountain. Lon. 6 35 W., lat. 34 20 N.

Darien Isthmus, which unites the two Americas. The narrowest part is from the bay of Panama to that of Mandingo, which does not exceed 20 ms. from bay to bay. The intermediate space is mountainous, though not very elevated.—See art. America, p. 54.

Darien, province of Colombia, in New Granada, is bounded by Novita S., the Pacific ocean and bay of Panama W., province of Panama NW., Gulf of Darien NE., and Choco E. See Colombia.—Large gulf stretching into Colombia, between Darien and Carthagea. It receives, at its extreme head, the rivers Atrato and Guacaba.—Tp., Fairfield co., Ct. Pop. in 1820, 1,126.

—Town and seaport, McIntosh co., Ga., on the N. side and principal channel of the Alatamaha, 12 ms. above the bar and 190 below Milledgeville. The town is situated upon a sandy bluff, and has advanced in wealth and pop. with great rapidity. In 1810 the number of inhabitants only a little exceeded 200; it now, (1843,) probably, contains ten times that number. It has a bank with a capital of $150,000. A steamboat navigation has been opened from this town to Milledgeville. The bar at the mouth of the Alatamaha has 12 feet water at ordinary tides. But little comparative expense, it is probable, would procure a much greater depth, and admit merchant vessels of the largest class. Lon. W. C. 4 37 W., lat. 31 23 N.

Dark, co., bounded by Mercer N., Shelby NE., Miami and Montgomery SE., Preble S., and Wayne and Randolph co., Ia, W. It is 34 by 21 ms., area about 700 sq. ms. The extreme source of the Mississinewa branch of Wabash is in the SW. angle of this co.; from the SW. angle flow some creeks of White-water river; and along the southern border rise the extreme fountains of Franklin creek; but the great body of the co. is drained by the headwaters of Stillwater river. General slope, southeasterly. Surface, diversified, but generally rather level. Soil, productive. The extreme northern angle of this co., is the memorable Fort Recovery, on the ground of St. Clair's defeat, Nov. 3, 1791, and regained by General Wayne, in 1794, and named from that fact. In lat. this co. extends from 39 54 to 40 23 N., and in lon. W. of W. C. from 7 20 to 7 43. Pop. in 1820, 3,717; in 1830, 6,204, and in 1840, 13,282. County seat, Greenville.

Lon. 0 16 E., lat. 51 25 N.

Dartown, village, Butler co., O., by postroad 111 ms. SW. from Columbus.

Dartmoor, extensive moorish tract of Eng., in Devonshire; bounded on the N. by bleak hills, and extending southward quite through the centre of the county to the sea. It is watered by the river Dart. On this moor prison-barracks were erected during the late war between Great Britain and the U. S. Here on the 6th of April, 1815, by order of the commandant, 7 American prisoners were massacred, and 56 dangerously wounded.

Dartmouth, borough of Eng., in Devonshire, near the river Dart, near its fall into the sea, and has a spacious harbor defended by a fort. It has a considerable trade to the S. of Europe and to Newfoundland, as well as a share in the coasting traffic. It contains three churches, and is 30 ms. SSW. of Exeter, and 204 W. by S. of London. Lon. 3 45 W., lat. 50 22 N.

Dartmouth College. This institution is located in the town of Hanover, Grafton co., N. H. It was founded, 1769, by the Rev. Dr. Eleazer Wheelock, and named in honor of William, earl of Dartmouth, one of its most munificent benefactors. In 1797, a medical institution was annexed to the college. The officers of this college, are, a president, 4 professors, 2 lecturers, and 3 tutors. The number of students, ordinarily about 150, and from 50 to 60 medical students. The college library exceeds 4,000 volumes; and two other libraries with about 2,000 volumes each have been formed by associations of students. The medical department possesses a laboratory, anatomical museum, 2 lecture rooms and chapel. The college has attached to its other establishments an extensive and valuable philosophical and chemical apparatus. The site of Dartmouth college is pleasant and healthful, which, with the judicious arrangement of concerns, have rendered it a very flourishing institution. Its funds are chiefly drawn from lands, amounting to about 1,600 dollars, annually. This revenue, added to the sums paid by students, yields a neat yearly amount of about $4,000.—Town and seaport, Mass., Bristol co. It is situated on the NW. side of Buzzard's bay, about 75 ms. S. of Boston. Pop. in 1820, 3,636.

C. 15 26 E., lat. 12 20 N. David's St., city of Wales in Pembrokehire, a barren soil, on the river Ilen, scarcely a mile from the seashore. It was once a considerable town and the cathedral is said to have the highest spire of any in Eng. It is 24 ms. NW. of Pembroke, and 255 W. by N. of London. Lon. 5 W., lat. 51 56 N.

David, Fort St., English fort on the coast of the Orange River. It was taken and destroyed by the Dutch in 1758, and has not yet been rebuilt. It is 80 ms. S. of Fort St. George. Lon. 79 45 E., lat. 11 30 N.

Davidson, co., Tenn., situated on the W. side of the Cumberland mountains, bounded by Robertson Co., Sumner NE., Wilson and Rutherford E., Williamson S., and Dickson W. Length 26 ms., mean width 22; area 570 sq. ms. Surface rather even than hilly; soil generally fertile. Chief town, Nashville. Pop. 1820, 20,154; in 1840, 50,919. Central lat. 36 10 N., lon. W. C. 9 W.—Post office and seat of justice, Lawrence co., Ark.

Davidsonville, village, Ark., 175 ms. by post-road from Little Rock.

Davidstown, village, Hunterdon co., N. J., 10 ms. above Trenton, on the Asanpink creek.

Davies, co. of Ky., bounded by Ohio river N., Breckenridge NE., Ohio SE., Muhlenburgh E., Hopkins SW., and Henderson W. Length 60 ms., mean width 20 ms.; area 600 sq. ms. Surface hilly, except near the streams; soil generally fertile. Chief town, Owensburg. Pop. in 1840, 8,331. Central lat. 37 40, lon. W. C. 9 W.—Co. of Ia., between the two main branches of White river, bounded by Dubois SE., Boone S., Gibson SW., Knox W., Sullivan NW., and Monroe and Lawrence NE. Length 60 ms., mean width 15; area 900 sq. ms. Pop. 1840, 720. Cent. lat. 38 40 N., lon. W. C. 10' W.

Davisburg, village, Christian co., Ky.

Davis's Straits, an immense opening into Hudson's and Baffin's bays, between North America and Greenland. This inland sea bears to the W. and SE. Davis's Straits is an arm of the sea between Greenland and North America, discovered by Captain Davis in 1585, whilst in search of a NW. passage. This sheet of water is very properly called a strait, as the general width from Greenland to Labrador is upwards of 500 miles. It is in fact, with its termination, (Baffin's Bay,) a great inland sea.

Davis's Store, post office, Bedford co., Va., 10 ms. SW. by W. from Richmond.

Daun, town of Germany, in the electorate of Hesse, seated on the Lezer, at the foot of a mountain, on which is a castle. It is 12 ms. N. of Mount Royal.

Dauphin, river of British North America, flowing into Little Winnipic lake. Lon. W. C. 23° W., lat. 52 20 N.—Island of Ala., off the mouth of Mobile bay. It is a sandy flat, covered with a few trees about 6 ms. long, and from 2 ms. to a quarter of a mile wide. The Pass au Heron into Mobile bay enters from Pascagoula sound, north from Dauphin island; the main pass enters between the island and Mobile Point.

Dauphin, co. of Pa., on the east side of Susquehanna river, bounded by Lancaster and Lebanon SE., by Susquehanna river W., Northumberland N., and Schuylkill NE. Length 33 ms., mean width 16; area 528 sq. ms. This co. is extremely diversified in surface. The SE. part of the co. is hilly and broken, but with a soil highly productive. The Swatara rises in Schuylkill, and traverses Lebanon into Dauphin, passing over the southeastern section of the latter, into the Susquehanna river. This part of the co. lies below the Kittatinny range of mountains, and, covering about 230 sq. ms., is subdivided into nearly equal portions by the limestone and slate regions. See Kittatinny Valley. Above the Kittatinny mountain, the residue of the co. is excessively broken by mountains and hills, with a generally sterile soil. The staples of Dauphin are grain, flour, whiskey, salted provisions, and live stock. Chief town, Harrisburg. Pop. 1820, 21,663; in 1840, 30,118. Central lat. 40 25 N., lon. 15' E. of W. C.

Dauphin Fort, seaport of St. Domingo, on the N. side of the island. Lon. W. C. 4 40 E., lat. 19 41 N.

Dauphiny, late province of Fr., extending 40 leagues from N. to S., and 36 from E. to W., bounded on the W. by the Rhone, N. by the Rhone and Savoy, S. by Provence, and E. by the Alps. Two-thirds of Dauphiny are intersected by mountains, which afford good pasturage, and plenty of timber (fir trees in particular) for the building of ships. The valleys afford wheat, and the hills, in the vicinity of the Rhone, excellent wines, olives, and silk. The principal rivers are the Rhone, Durance, Isere, and Drome. It now forms the departments of Drome, Isere, and Upper Alps.

Dax, or Acqs, ancient town of F., in the dep. of Landes, and late province of Gascony, with a bishop's see and some famous hot baths. It is seated on the Adour, 24 ms. NE. of Bayonne. Lon. 1° W., lat. 43 42 N.

Dayton, flourishing village, and county seat of Montgomery co., O., situated on the eastern side of Great Miami, immediately below the mouth of Mad river. N. lat. 39 46, lon. 7 08 W. of W. C. It is situated on a plain, or rather two plains, as the body of the town occupies ground 10 or 15 feet lower than the second rise on which the houses are extending. The Miami canal, which is connected with Hamilton by a side canal and basin, passes directly through Dayton; and here the bustle of boats and machinery mingles with the ordinary business of life, and gives to the place all the aspect of a commercial mart. The place is indeed insulated, as, about a mile above the town, the water of Mad river is taken out, and, after giving unlimited water power to the inhabitants, is thrown into the canal and Miami river. The canal is lined with factories of various kinds, which we are unable to enumerate, but cannot avoid observing that whoever visits this place for the first time will find much to admire of prosperity. In November, 1795, a Mr. Ludlow laid out the town, and named it Dayton, but, like others in a wilderness, at first progressed slowly. The first brick house here was built in 1805, and the subjoined table will show its advance in population and its advance in wealth has been in a higher ratio :

Population in 1810	-	-	-	383

The proportion of churches and other public buildings is fully maintained in Dayton; and, in fine, it is amongst the great manifestations—one of the greatest—of the irresistible growth of society in the Ohio valley. Lat. 39 42 N., lon. 7 8 W. W. C.

Dayton, tp., Montgomery co., O., in which the preceding town is situated. Pop. in 1820, 2,530.

Deadman's Head, cape in Cornwall, between St. Maw's and Fowey.

Dead Sea, ancient lake of Asphaltites, is the lower depression of a valley of Asia, generally known by the name of the river Jordan. The Dead sea is a sheet of water extending about NNE. and SSW. 60 ms.; mean breadth 10, and area 600 sq. ms. Similar to most of the Asiatic lakes having no outlet, the water of the Dead sea is brackish, though more so, from all accounts, than any of the others. The Jordan takes its rise in the mountains of ancient Galilee, but soon swells into Lake Meron, 10 or 12 ms. long, though narrow; contracts thence 10 or 12 ms. into a river, and again opens into the much larger lake of Genesareth, or sea of Tiberius. This latter, 20 ms. long and widest part 8, is again terminated by the real Jordan, which, by a general course of 75 ms. to the southward, is lost in the Dead sea, about 25 ms. a little N. of E. from Jerusalem. The entire valley is about 180 ms. from S. to N., with a mean width of 60; area 10,600 sq. ms., lying between lats. 31° and 33 30 N. The Arabs call this lake Bahr-el-Loud, "Water of Lot." It has all the appearance of having once been the scene of volcanic action.

In regard to the relative height of the city of Jerusalem with that of the Mediterranean and Dead sea, the following appeared in the National Intelligencer of the 17th January, 1842, right hand column, page 1: "A letter was read from the late lamented Sir David Wilkie to Mr. Harvey, containing the result of his barometric observations to determine the level and depression of the Dead sea, being the last, if not the only, scientific labor of that celebrated man. No barometer had ever before been carried to the Dead sea, and the observations of Sir David Wilkie showed a depression of 1,198 76-100 feet below the Mediterranean, and the elevation of Jerusalem as 2,262 feet also above the latter, points to which previous observers had nearly approximated."

From combining these elements, it appears that

Jerusalem, about 28 ms. direct distance from the Mediterranean, has an elevation above that sea, in regard to temperature and height, equal to 5½° lat., allowing 400 feet to be equal to 1°, as to influence on aerial temperature, and of upwards of 8° above the Dead sea, with similar allowance of 16 ms., the air distance from Jerusalem to the Dead sea. If correct, (and we have no doubt that are so sufficiently for general purposes,) these elements account for two phenomena—the salubrité of Jerusalem, and the excessive difference of temperature of different parts of Palestine.

DEACON, literally a minister or servant, the lowest degree of holy orders. In the Presbyterian churches the office of elder is equivalent to deacon. The office was instituted by the Apostles.

Deal, seaport of Eng., in Kent. It is seated on the strait of Dover, and is a member of the Cinque Port of Sandwich, governed by a mayor. It has about 1,000 houses, which are mostly built of brick. The inhabitants amount to 4,500, and, as no manufacture is carried on here, they chiefly depend on the seafaring men who resort hither. The port is defended by two castles; Deal, or Walmar castle to the S., and Sandown castle to the N. Between this place and the Godwin Sands, are the Downs, where the ships usually ride at their leaving or coming into the river Thames. It is 7 ms. S. by E. of Sandwich and 72 E. by S. of London. Lon. 1 29 E., lat. 51 13 N.—Village of N. J., on the seashore, in Monmouth co., famous as a watering place, 7 ms. S. from Shrewsbury.

Dearborn, town, Kennebec co., Me. Pop. in 1820, 463.—Co., Ia., on the Ohio river, bounded by the State of Ohio and the Ohio river E. Switzerland S., Ripley W., and Franklin N. length 27 ms., mean width 15 ms.; area about 40 sq. ms. Surface very hilly, though with a productive soil. Chief town, Lawrenceburg. Pop. in 820, 11,468; and in 1840, 19,257. Central lat. 9 18 N., lon. W. C. 7 50 W.—River, a western branch of Missouri, into which it falls above its rapids.

Deben, river of Eng., in Suffolk, which rises near Debenham, and expands into a long narrow arm of the German ocean, a little to the N. of Ipswich.

DECCAN, southern part of Indostan, coming, according to some, from "Dakkan," or "the south," and from "Daxine," "the country on the right," according to others. It has at all times been a vague term as to its northern boundary. In the 5th century it had Vijanagara, or Bisagur, for capital, and comprehended, under the title of "the kingdom of the Deccan," the countries included under the modern provinces Khandeish, Dowlatabad, Bejapour, Goleonda, Berar, and Gundwana. In its most extended sense, "the Deccan" comprises all Indostan to the southward of the Mahanuddy and Nerbuddah rivers, or from N. lat. 1° on the bay of Bengal, and 22° on the gulf of Cambay. This great region is from Cape Comorin due N. something more than 1,000 ms., with a breadth from the mouth of the Mahanuddy to that of the Nerbuddah of 900 ms.; the area at least 50,000 sq. ms. With the exception of the deep, rough narrow, valleys of the Nerbuddah and Tapty rivers, which incline westward, and a long and also a narrow strip west of the Ghauts along the Malabar coast; the residue and more than the five-sixths of the Deccan slopes eastwards, and is drained into the bay of Bengal, by beside many of lesser consequence, by the rivers Cavery, Punnaïr, Pennair, Kistnah, Godavery, and Mahanuddy.

One very striking circumstance distinguishes the Deccan from that part of Indoostan to the northward of the Nerbuddah. East of the western Ghauts and rising from Cape Comorin, a plateau of table land stretches to the Vindhia mountains near the Nerbuddah. From this elevated tract the waters fall with such rapidity as to render them useless as navigable channels—a characteristic directly the reverse of the gentle current of the Ganges and Indus, as well as most of their confluents. If we suppose the oceanic surface to be gradually elevated, all central Indostan would be inundated, and an immense sea formed from the gulf of Bengal to the delta of the Indus, whilst much of the Deccan would remain an elevated island, bearing in these circumstances a strong resemblance to Japan. This superior elevation gives to the central Deccan a climate more temperate than that of the lower parts of the basins of the Ganges and Indus.

Delaware, river of the U. S. The Delaware basin, intervening between that of Susquehanna and that of the Hudson, extends about 250 ms. from N. to S., with a mean width of 60 ms. extending over an area of 15,600 sq. ms. The Delaware rises by two branches in the Catsbergs, draining the angle between the Susquehanna and Schoharie branch of Mohawk. The sources of the Delaware flow SW. by comparative courses, 50 ms., through Delaware co., N. Y., unite at the NE. angle of Pa., and turn at right angles to a course of SE., following the latter direction, by comparative courses 70 ms., to the NW. angle of N. J., and the base of the Kittatinny mountain; again turning with the mountain to the SW., follows that course, along its base, by comparative courses, 40 ms., to the mouth of Broadhead creek, where the river again turns, and passes the Kit-tatinny mountain. The general physiognomy of the Susquehanna and Delaware, every where remarkable, is in no other place so striking as in the valley between the Kittatinny mountain and the continuation of the Blue Ridge, below Easton, and the mouth of the Lehigh. This river has a very crooked course above and even below the Blue mountains; the country is very mountainous through which it passes, until it leaves the water gap. It continues hilly along its banks, below the mountain as far down as Well's falls below the village of New Hope, in Bucks co. It has many rapids and shallows along its whole length until it reaches Trenton falls, where it meets the tide. Boat navigation is very difficult above Easton. From Easton to the tide, the navigation has been improved, and at present, a very considerable trade is carried on in this part of the river.

In the Kittatinny valley, 25 ms., by comparative courses, below the Delaware Watergap, the Lehigh comes in from the NW.

The latter stream claims a very large share of attention, as being one of the great channels from which the city of Philadelphia, and indeed the whole Atlantic coast, is destined to receive exhaustless supplies of coal.

This branch of the Delaware rises in Wayne Luzerne, and Northampton, and is, emphatically a mountain stream. Flowing first to SW., curve to S. and SE., pierces the Kittatinny mountain, crosses the Kittatinny valley in a SE. direction, is turned by the SE. mountain at Allen town, where it winds to the NE., and joins the Delaware at the borough of Easton, after a comparative course of about 80 ms. See Lehigh. Below the SE. mountain, the Delaware turns to a SE. course 35 ms., to where it leaves the primitive, and falls into the alluvial formation at the head of tide-water. Continuing over the alluvial 4 or 5 ms., the Delaware again turns to SW. nearly parallel to, and about 5 ms. distant from the primitive ledge, in which direction it flows by comparative courses, 35 ms., to the mouth of the Schuylkill. Respecting the Schuylkill, it is sufficient to observe, that it has its principal source in Northampton and Schuylkill counties: that its general course is from NW. to SE., by comparative courses, 120 ms. Few secondary rivers of the American continent are destined to become of equal importance with the Schuylkill as a channel of inland navigation. The general course of SW. is maintained by the Delaware, about 30 ms. below the mouth of the Schuylkill, or about 5 ms. below New Castle. Here the river, already considerably expanded in width, opens into a wide triangular bay, 65 ms. in length, and 30 wide between Capes Henlopen and May. See Schuylkill.

Delaware Bay, the estuary of the Delaware river, between N. J., and Pa., and between N. J. and Del. This bay, in strictness, commences at Trenton, at the head of tide-water, but is usually computed from Fisher's point below New Castle to Capes May and Henlopen. Thus restricted it is about 65 ms. long, and varying in width from 3 to 30 ms. It admits the entrance of the largest vessels though much impeded by shoals.

The State of Delaware, from its confined extent and position, presents the most uniform surface of any of the great political sections of the United States. That part of Dela. bordering on Pa. rises into hills of some little elevation, and is extremely well watered. Receding, however, down Delaware bay, or rather along the intervening peninsula between that and Chesapeake bay, the face of the country becomes more monotonous, and finally sinks to a general level. Some parts of the lower sections of the State are marshy, some sandy, but interspersed with productive tracts. The respective fertility of the different divisions of the State are seen by reference to the different counties, with their comparative population.

In the northern part of the State the soil is well adapted to the production of grain and pasturage. Grain and flour are therefore staple commodities. For the manufacture of the latter article, few places in any country can possess greater natural facilities than does higher Delaware. Brandywine creek, rising on the primitive and secondary formations in Pa., is precipitated over considerable rapids in its passage from the primitive rock to the alluvial tract below. Red Clay and White Clay creeks, branches of Christiana river, present similar features to Brandywine, and, taken together, afford an uncommon assemblage of seats for mills and other manufactories. Much has been done to improve those natural advantages. Manufactories of paper, gunpowder, and cotton and woolen goods, have been extensively established.

For political and local purposes Delaware is subdivided into the following counties, having the population respectively annexed in 1820:

New Castle	-	-	-	27,899
Kent	-	-	-	20,793
Sussex	-	-	-	24,057

In the convention held at Philadelphia, in 1787, the inhabitants were computed at 37,000. According to the census of 1790, they amounted to 40,000; in 1800, they had risen to 64,273.

Delta, part of Lower Egypt, between th branches of the Nile and the Mediterranean. Th ancients called it the isle of Delta, because it is i the shape of a triangle, like the Greek letter of th name. It is 130 ms. along the coast, from Dam- etta to Alexandria, and 70 on the sides, from th place where the Nile begins to divide itself. It is the most plentiful country of all Egypt, and rains more here than in other parts, but its ferti- lity is chiefly owing to the inundations of the Nil The principal towns on the coast are Damiett rosetta, and Alexandria. It is from the estuary of the Nile, having been designated by the Greek Delta, that the regions near the mouths of all large fluvial rivers are now so named, though of very different outlines. See art. Egypt, from page 11 to 15.

Delvinaki, village of European Turkey, in Albania, 30 ms. N.W. from Joannin, inhabited by perhaps 2,000 Greeks, who are chiefly employed in agriculture. It is a place of some trade, being situated in the main route from Butrinto to Joannin, distant from the former place, in a nearly N.E. direction, 50 ms.

Delvino, town of European Turkey, in Albania, 40 ms. inland, and eastward from Butrinto, and about 30 ms. S.W. from Delvinaki. These two towns have been often confounded, but are very distinct, the former being much the most considerable place, containing 8,000 inhabitants. Says Jobhouse, from Butrinto it is 7 hours (21 ms.) in an eastern direction to Delvino, a town of 8,000 inhabitants, and the seat of a pasha of two tails, now (1809) subdued by Ali. From Delvino it is 10 hours N.E. to the village of Navitza, and thence 10 hours more, and in the same direction, to Delvinaki.

Here is an ancient and magnificent church, in which were the tombs of many of the French kings; and in the Treasury, among other curiosities, the swords of St. Louis and the Maid of Orleans, and the sceptre of Charlemagne. It is seated on the river Croud, near the Seine, 5 ms. N. of Paris. Lon. 2 26 E., lat. 48 56 N.

Denmark.—Denmark is situate at the mouth of the Baltic sea, between 53° and 58° N. lat., and 7° and 13° E. lon., and is composed of a large peninsula and a number of islands, the total superficial area of which is supposed to amount to about 21,000 square English ms. The kingdom of Denmark, properly so called, comprises only the peninsula of North Jutland, the islands between Jutland and Sweden, and the island of Bornholm. To these possessions have been added, at different times, the duchy of Schleswick, or South Jutland, the Faroe islands, in the Atlantic ocean, the duchies of Holstein and Lauenburg, with the lordship of Pinneburg, the co. of Ransau, and the city of Altona, which originally formed part of the German empire, and as sovereign of which the King now ranks as a member of the Germanic confederation.

The kingdom of Denmark has been for a long time divided into bailiwicks, the administration of which is entirely separated from the judicial department; but in the duchies, which are also divided into bailiwicks, the bailies are not at once ministerial and judicial officers.

In the following table the first column contains the names of the bailiwicks, and the second the cos. or islands in which they are situate.

DENSITY, that property of bodies comprising the quantity of matter, and is the opposite of rarity. In a philosophical sense density has no relation to extent, hardness, or fluidity, as, for example, quicksilver is a very dense metal, though fluid at the common temperature of even the coldest parts of the earth, having a specific gravity near fifteen fold greater than distilled water, whilst the diamond, the hardest of all known bodies, has only a specific gravity of about 3; of course quicksilver a fluid, is five-fold more dense than the diamond Mass, when used as a term in physical science has a close similarity to density; and in the study of astronomy it is of the greatest importance to clearly distinguish between mass and bulk, as it is the mass or real quantity of matter in a planet and not its size, which gives it influence by attraction on other planets.

Dessau, strong town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, and province of Anhalt. It belongs to its own prince, and is seated on the Elbe, 37 ms. N. of Leipsic. Lon. 12 22 E., lat. 51 53 N.

Destruction, or Queen Hythe, island in the U. S., in the Pacific ocean, on the coast of N. America. Lon. W. C. 47 50 W., lat. 47 37 N.

Dethmold, town of Westphalia, on the river Wehera, 15 ms. N. of Paderborn. Lon. 8 55 E., lat. 52° N.

Detroit, town and capital of the State of Michigan. It is situated on the western bank of the strait St. Clair, or Detroit river, between Lake Erie and Lake St. Clair; 18 ms. N. of the W. end of the former, and 9 ms. below the latter. The fort, town, and State of Michigan, were delivered up by the British in July, 1796, according to treaty. Lon. W. C. 5 50 W., lat. 42 25 N.

Detroit river, or strait of St. Clair, issues from Lake St. Clair and enters the W. end of Lake Erie, forming part of the boundary line between the United States and Upper Canada. In ascending it its entrance is more than 3 ms. wide, but it perceptibly diminishes, so that opposite the fort, 18 ms. from Lake Erie, it does not exceed half a mile in width; and from thence to St. Clair it widens more than a mile. The channel of the strait is gentle and wide, and deep enough for shipping of great burthen, although it is incommoded by several islands, one of which is more than 7 ms. in length. These islands are of a fertile soil, and, from their situation, afford a very agreeable appearance. The length of the river is 28 ms., and several streams fall into it, chiefly from the NW, viz: Bauche, Clora, Curriere, Detroit, and Huron rivers. There are several wind-mills on the Detroit; and an orchard adjoining almost every house. The settlers are numerous, and the improvements handsome and extensive. When the trees are in blossom, the prospect as you pass through the strait is perhaps as delightful as any in the world.

Detroit, le Petit, on the Ottawa river, is below the upper main forks of the Ottawa river.

Dettingen, village of Germany, in the territory of Hanau, between Hanau and Aschaffenburg, 4 ms. from each.

Deverte, bay of New Brunswick, on the NE. coast. Lon. W. C. 13 10 E., lat. 46° N.

Devetto, or Zagorria, town in Bulgaria, not far from the see of a Greek archbishop. It is situated near the Black sea, 100 ms. N. of Constantinople. Lon. 27 22 E., lat. 42 25 N.

Devizes, borough of Eng., in Wilts, with manufacture of serges and other woolen stuffs. It is seated on a hill, sends two members to Parliament, and is 24 ms. NW. of Salisbury and 89 W. of London. Lon. 2 2 W., lat. 51 20 N.

Devon, river of Scot., Perthshire, over which is the beautiful vale of Glendevon, is a great curiosity, called the Rumbling bridge. It consists of an arch thrown over a horrible chasm, worn by the river, about 80 feet deep, and very narrow. In other places the river has forced its way in a surprising manner through the rocks. At the Chardron-lin it has worn away the softer parts of the stone, and formed immense pits, into which the water falls with a tremendous noise. Below this the whole river is precipitated in one sheet from height of 40 feet.

Devonshire, co. of Eng., 70 ms. long and 6 broad, bounded on the NW. and N. by the Bristol channel, E. by Somersetshire and Dorsetshire SE. and S. by the English channel, and W. by Cornwall. It contains 1,600,000 acres; is divided into 32 hundreds and 398 parishes; and has one city and 35 market towns. The air is so mild in the valleys that the myrtle grows unsheltered but it is cold and bleak in the mountains. The soil is various; for the low grounds are natural fertile, and the hills are very barren. In the eastern part there is plenty of good corn and fine pasture for sheep, where the grounds are dry and chalky. The southern part is remarkably fertile and fruit trees are plentiful, especially apples, with which a great quantity of cider is made. The principal rivers are the Tamar, Taw, Torridge, Ex, Teign, and Dart. Exeter is the capital. Pop. in 1801 343,001; in 1811, 383,308; and in 1821, 439,041.

Diarbekir, town of Asiatic Turkey, capital of the province of Diarbak. It is seated on the Tigris, 150 ms. NNE. of Aleppo. Lon. 39 40 E., at. 37 18 N.—See Asia, p. 83.

Dias Creek, post office in Cape May co., N. J., by postroad 108 ms. S. from Trenton.

ДИХОТОМЪ. Gr. dichotomos, divided in two equal parts. In astronomy, the moon is dichotomised at the first and last quarter, as at each of these phases that satellite is, as seen from the earth, one-half enlightened and one-half in the dark. Though now rendered useless by better methods, the position of the moon, the earth, and the sun, when the former is dichotomised, was the first method used to measure or to calculate the distance from the earth to the sun, and, though defective, was an immense advance in science, as, if it failed to secure real distances, it disclosed the enormous disparity between the relative distances of the sun and moon from the earth.

Dickinson, tp. in Franklin co., N. Y. Pop. in 1820, 495.—Tp. in Cumberland co., Pa. Pop. in 1820, 2,007.

Dismal Swamp, so called, a low, marshy tract of country, between Chesapeake bay and Albemarle sound, embracing the southern parts of Norfolk and Nansemond cos., Va., and some of the northern parts of Gates, Pasquotank, and Camden cos., N. C. What is properly called the Dismal Swamp [is, however, only the central parts of a much more extended alluvial tract.

From the general course of the Blackwater and of the Chowan rivers, below their junction, an extensive flat peninsula is formed between Albemarle sound, Chesapeake bay, and James river, of about 70 ms. in length, from N. to S., by 50 mean width, E. and W., or 3,500 sq. ms. This extensive flat region is occupied by Currituck, Camden, Pasquotank, Perquimans, Chowan, and Gates cos., in N. C., and by the Isle of Wight, Nansemond, Norfolk, and Princess Anne cos., Va. It is the central part which is occupied by the Dismal Swamp, but much of the residue is marshy, yet by the census of 1820, the 10 cos. comprise a pop. of 87,510 inhabitants. The canal already executed between the Albemarle sound and Nansemond rivers penetrates this tract.

Djebail. See Gebail.

Dnieper, anciently the Boristhenes, a large river of Russia, which rises in the government of Smolensko, and, flowing in a southerly direction, enters the Black sea, between Cherson and Oczakov. From its source to its mouth it now flows entirely through the Russian dominions.

The Dnieper is the third largest river in Europe, yielding only to the Volga and Danube. The basin of this great river is about 600 ms. in length, with a mean width of at least 300, giving area of 180,000 sq. ms. It is in every respect contrast to the Danube. The country drained by the latter is mountainous and broken; that by the former scarcely chequered by a single hill of any considerable consequence; the Danube is interrupted by cataracts, and cannot be passed from head to mouth; the navigation of the Dnieper, in all its branches, is only once interrupted by a series of cataracts, which begin below the mouth of the Sennara, and continue for about 40 ms., but these are passed in spring, with little hazard, by loaded barks. The basin of the Dnieper lies between the parallels of 47° and 56' N., and is annually frozen from December to March.

Dniester, river of Europe, in Russia and Austrian Poland, rises in Galicia, SW. from Lemburg, at N. lat. 49 30, lon. 24 E. from London, interlocking sources with Theisse, the Vistula, and Prypec branch of the Dnieper. Flowing hence SE. 150 ms., draining Galicia, and passing Zaleszyk, approaches to within 10 ms. from the Pruth at Czernowitz, turns E. 50 ms., and entering Podolia, passes Choczym and Uschitza, winds again to SE. by a very circuitous channel, at general course of 220 ms., passing Mohilew, zekinowka, Hamenka, Ribnitzki, New Dubossary, Bender, Tiraspol, and Akerman, falls into the Black sea, 5 ms. below the latter place, after an entire comparative course of 420 ms. The basin of the Dniester is 380 ms. in length, by a mean width of about 50, area 19,000 sq. ms., lying between lat. 46° and 49° N. The fine port of Odessa is on the northern coast of the Black sea, 30 s. NE. from the mouth of the Dniester. This river, in the lower part of its course, separates the governments of Bender and Kherson. As a navigable stream, the Dniester does not hold a rank equivalent to its length of course.

Doab, in Indostan, means a space between two rivers, and is especially applied to the country between the Ganges and the Jumna, and that between the Chenaub and Sutledge. These Doabs so supply convenient compound names, and thus formed by contracting the names of the rivers, and uniting them into one word. Between the Chenaub and Behut we have the Chenut, between the Ravee and Chenaub the Reechna, and between the Ravee and Ravee the Barree.

Doab, meaning a country between two rivers, province of Indostan, between the Ganges and Jumna rivers. It is highly fertile, and from it are exported, beside other products, indigo, sugar, and cotton. It is in great part subject to the British. The pop. estimated at 6,000,000, prevailing religion Hindoo, and common language Hindostanee. Spreads between lat. 26° and 30° N.

Domfront, town of Fr., now in the dep. of Orne, lately in the province of Normandy, seated on a steep mountain, which has a large cleft from the summit to the base, through which flows the little river Varenne. It is 35 ms. NW. of Alençon. Lon. 43' W., lat. 48 38 N.

Domingo, St., or Hispaniola, one of the richest islands in the W. Indies, 400 ms. in length, and 75 in breadth. It was discovered by Columbus, in 1492, and is surrounded by craggy rocks and dangerous shoals. The heat to the N. and SE. would be insupportable for 6 months of the year, if not qualified by the easterly winds and frequent rains; but the latter soon spoil the flesh, bread, and fruits. It has a great many rivers, and mines of gold, talc, and crystal. The Spaniards had possession of the whole island for 120 years. They were afterwards forced to divide the island with the French, who obtained the W. part; and the Spaniards retained the E., the most extensive and fruitful. Since the revolution in Fr., this Island has been subject to great calamities. In 1791, an insurrection began in the French plantations, which, after a series of sanguinary scenes, has terminated in the establishment of a free African State, under the name of the Republic of Hayti. In 1821, the Spanish part fell also under the authority of Boyer, the president or king, and left him master of the whole island. St. Domingo has Cuba W., Porto Rico E., and Jamaica SW.

The population of this island in 1789, was, from the best authorities, about 660,000 inhabitants, of which nearly 500,000 were black slaves. The French part contained 535,000, of whom 480,000 were slaves; the Spanish part 125,000; 15,000 of whom were slaves. It is probable that the present numbers do not materially differ in extent, though the number of whites have no doubt greatly diminished.

The trade of this island has greatly declined. The value of exports in 1791, exceeded 5,370,000 pounds sterling; $23,832,800. Coffee amounted to 84,617,328 lbs. Sugar 217,463 casks. Indigo 3,257,610 lbs. Cocoa 1,536,017 lbs., and cotton 11,317,226 lbs.—See article West Indies.

Domingo, St., capital of the E. part of the island of St. Domingo, on a navigable river, and had formerly a harbor, which is now choked up with sand. Though its trade has been long extinct, it was in a respectable condition while it continued in the hands of the Spaniards. The city itself is large, well built, of stone, and defended by batteries. Lon. 70 10 W., lat. 18 20 N.

Dominica, one of the windward Caribbee islands in the W. Indies. It lies about half way between Gaudaloupe and Martinico, and is 28 ms. long and 13 broad. It was taken by the English in 1761, and confirmed to them by the peace of 1763. The French took it in 1778, but restored it in 1783. It suffered great damage by a tremendous hurricane in 1806. The soil is thin, and better adapted to the rearing of coffee than sugar; but the sides of the hills bear the finest trees in the W. Indies, and the island is well supplied with rivulets. The capital is Charlotte town.—Largest of the islands of the Pacific ocean, called the Marquesas. Lon. 139 2 W., lat. 9 41 S.

DON, or DUN, as prefixes, constitutes a part of many names of rivers and places on or near rivers and sea-coasts in Europe, coming no doubt from the same root with Downs, which see.

Don, large river, that, according to most English maps, [see Europe,] separates Europe from Asia. It issues from Lake St. John, in the government of Moscow, and divides near Tcherkask, into three streams, which fall into the sea of Asoph. The river has so many windings, is in many parts shallow, and abounds with such numerous shoals, as to be scarcely navigable, except in the spring on the melting of the snows; and its mouths, also, as to be choked up with sand, that only flat-bottomed boats, except in the same season, can pass into the sea of Asoph.—River of Scot., which rises in Aberdeenshire, joins the Erie Water at Inverar and, passing by Kintore, falls into the German ocean at Aberdeen, within 2 ms. of the mouth of the Dee. Upon each of these rivers is an excellent salmon fishery.—River of Eng., in Yorkshire, which waters Sheffield, Rotherham, and Doncaster, and joins the Aire, near its termination with the Ouse.

Drowned Meadow, post office, Suffolk co., N. Y., on Long Island.

DRUID. Neither the real meaning of this term or title, or the true social and political character of the Druids are now known with much certainty. That they were an order of priests is undoubted, but that they were also lawgivers and judges is probable. They were peculiar in Europe to the Celtic tribes of Gaul, Germany, and Britain; but from the Welsh term derwyz, and its cognate Persian term dervis, the real title of the Druids would appear to claim an Asiatic origin. Druid is not supposed to be the title used by the people amongst whom the order existed, but imposed by the Greeks of Marseilles.

DRUSES, people of Syria, on the mountains Libanus and Antilibanus. It is shown by Malte Brun, from almost irresistible evidence, that they are the Ituræi of the Greeks and Romans, and that amidst the murderous revolutions of ages this small band of mountaineers have maintained their independence. Their rocky territory, subdivided into the districts of Matné, Garb, Sahel, Chouf, Tefa, Chagif, and Djoord, lies between Damascus and the Mediterranean. Chief town, Deir-el-kamar.

The Druses are in fact a religious sect, divided into three classes—Akals, or initiated; Djoheli, or aspirants, and the vulgar, who know little or nothing of mysteries concealed by their superiors. The name, according to the best authorities, comes from a root signifying true, hard, &c., and from which came Druid, and, by analogy, the English term truth. In a nominal manner, the Druses are Mahometans, and subject to the Turks; in both cases, however, they pay little regard to either the religion or authority of their sovereign the Sultan. The Emir, or Turkish governor, is never a Druse; and the real chief of this singular people is their own Sheikh, who resides at Soueida in the Haouran. The exclusive character of the Druses have preserved them as a separate people. Their origin is due to a more eastern position—Persian, probably.

Dryden, one of the military tps. in N. Y., at the SE. end of Cayuga lake. Pop. in 1820, 3,951.

Dublin, co. of Ireland, in the province of Leinster, 27 ms. in length and 17 in breadth; bounded on the E. by the Irish sea, on the N. by East Meath and the Irish sea, on the W. by East Meath and Kildare, and on the S. by Wicklow. Before the Union it sent 10 members to the Irish Parliament.—Capital of Ireland, in a county of the same name, with a bishop's see, seated on the Liffey, in view of the Irish sea on the E. Its form is that of a square, 2½ ms. in extent on each side, and it contains about 22,000 houses, whose inhabitants are estimated at 156,000. With respect to its streets, Dublin bears a near resemblance to London; some of the old streets were formerly narrow, but great improvements have been lately made in regard both to convenience and embellishment; and there are several magnificent squares, the largest of which is St. Stephen Green, nearly a mile in circuit. It has a cathedral and a collegiate church, 18 parish churches, 8 chapels, 16 Roman Catholic chapels, numerous meeting houses for dissenters of various denominations, 4 foreign churches and a synagogue.

Among the principal public buildings are the castle, (the residence of the viceroy,) the national bank, Trinity college, the hall of justice, the royal exchange, the custom-house, the royal hospital of Kilmainham for invalids, the linen hall, the barracks, the toll-see, or town-house, and Essex bridge and Sarah bridge, 2 of the 6 bridges over the Liffey. The hospitals and other charitable institutions are numerous; and it has 2 theatres. An observatory is erected on a rocky hill, about 4 ms. NW. of the city. The civil government of Dublin is executed by a lord mayor, recorder, 2 sheriffs, 24 aldermen, and a common council, formed of representatives from the 25 corporations. Beside the silk, woollen, and cotton manufacture carried on in the suburbs, other branches of useful manufacture are establishing in different parts of the metropolis, and its foreign trade is considerable.

The harbor is incommoded by two banks of sand, which prevent vessels of large burden from going over the bar; it has a mole nearly 4 ms. in length, with a light-house at the extremity, and another on the promontory opposite, called the hill of Howth. Three miles below the city, at a place called the Pigeon-house, is a commodious dock, and here the packets receive and land passengers. The Liffey divides the city into almost two equal parts, and has spacious and noble quays on both sides. A grand canal has been made from the Liffey, which communicates with the Shannon near Clonfort. Dublin is seated on the end of a spacious bay, 7 ms. from the Irish sea, 60 W. of Holyhead, in Wales, and 300 WNW. of London. 6 18 W., lat. 53 21 N.

Durango, city of Mexico, and capital of the State of the same name, is situated on the western side of the great Cordilleras of Anahuac, 570 ms. NW. from the city of Mexico. According to Humboldt, this city stands nearly 7,000 feet above the level of the ocean. N. lat. 24 25, lon. W. C., 26 35 W. The environs of Durango appear volcanic. The largest mass of that very remarkable substance, native iron, ever yet discovered, was found near this city; its weight supposed to be 40,000 lbs. avoirdupois. The population was estimated by Humboldt at 12,000.

Durango, formerly an intendency, and now a State of the Mexican Republic, generally known as New Biscay. It was one of the internal provinces. As a State, it is bounded SE. by Zacatecas, S. by Jalisco, E. by New Leon, N. by Chihuahua, and W. by Sonora y Sinaloa. Area uncertain, but about 40,000 sq. ms. Central lat. 26° N., lon. W. C. 27° W. According to Malte Brun, the great central chain, or rather table land of Anahuac, traverses this State, with craters of volcanoes (extinct.) The mines of silver are common, and abundant in that precious metal. Humboldt informs us, that the general level exceeds 6,500 feet above the ocean, but declining to the E. and W. As a level in N. America of about 100 feet is equivalent to a degree of lat., the climate of Durango must be similar to that on the Pacific coast, of upwards of 40 N.; and of course the vegetable productions generally, grain, grasses, and fruits of the same species of those of the Middle States of the U. S. The winters, says Malte Brun, are severe, and followed in summer by suffocating heats, precisely the character of the climate of Quebec. Durango has, in its geographical features, a very strong resemblance to the high central plains of Mongolia, and Soongaria in Asia. Rivers here rise, and finding no outlet, are lost in lakes, or wasted in sands. The population is necessarily thin, but they are in a peculiar degree hardy, muscular, and patient of fatigue. If the number, 16,000, on Tanner's map of Mexico, be correct as to the share allotted to Durango, the inhabitants amount to only about $2\frac{1}{2}$ to the sq. m., and of these a large proportion in the capital. The latter distribution is, however, in the Spanish provinces, by no means peculiar to Durango. Capital, Durango.

Durtal, town of Fr., in the dep. of Maine Loire, and late province of Anjou, whose trade consists in tanning.

Dusky Bay, bay of the island of New Zealand in the S. Pacific ocean. Lon. 166 18 E., 45 47 S.

Dusseldorf, strong city, capital of the duchy of Berg. It contains about 18,000 inhabitants, including the garrison. Dusseldorf derives an dignity from its palace and great church. It is seated on the river Dussel, near the Rhine, 22 N. W. of Cologne. Lon. 6 52 E., lat. 51 12 N.

Dutchess, co. of N. Y., bounded E. by Cortland, S. by Putnam co. in N. Y., W. by Hudson river, and N. by Columbia co., N. Y.; length 35 ms., mean width 24; area 340 sq. ms. The face of this co., is in a peculiar manner diversified. In the valleys of the Housatonic, Fishkill, Wappinger, and Jansen, are extensive bodies of fertile land. In the intermediate space between these rich vales, extend fertile tracts of high little less productive. The banks of the Hudson are steep, rocky, and broken, and indeed generally precipitous. On its southern boundary the co. rises into mountains, some of the peaks which exceed 1,200 feet above the level of the water. From the elevated ground from which they flow, and the comparatively deep chasms which the Hudson is confined, the creeks of Dutchess are eminently calculated for the propulsion of machinery, an advantage to a considerable extent improved by the inhabitants.—See Mateon's Wappinger's Creek, &c. This country is well cultivated and productive in grain, fruits, and meadow grasses. Its staples are numerous, and consists of grain, flour, whiskey, beef, pork, butter, cheese, live stock, orchard fruits and garden vegetables. Chief town, Poughkeepsie. Pop. 1820, 46,615, and in 1840, 52,398. Cen. lat. 41 45 N. lon. W. C. 3 20 E.

Dullingen, town of Suabia, on the Danube over which it has a bridge. It belongs to the Kingdom of Wirtemberg, and is 33 ms. NW. of C. Lon. 9 2 E., lat. 48 10 N.

Dutotsburg, town, Northampton co., Pa., on the W. bank of the Delaware, at its entrance into the Watergap and at the foot of the Blue Mountain on the N. side, in Smithfield tp. It is 25 ms. N. from Easton.

Dutton, village, Penobscot co., Me., 135 ms. NE. from Portland.

Duxborough, town, Plymouth co., Mass., 12 ms. N. from Plymouth. Pop. in 1820, 2,400.

Duxbury, tp. of Washington co., Vt., on the left side of Onion river, 13 ms. below Montpelier. Pop. 350.

Duyveland, one of the islands of Zealand, the kingdom of the Netherlands, E. of Schouwen from which it is separated by a narrow channel.

Dwina, southern, large river of Russia, which rises in the Government of Polotsk, Smolenski, Vitepsk, flows first 180 ms to the SW. then turns to NW. 250 ms., falls into the Gulf of Riga below the city of Riga. The Dwina, following the windings of the stream, is navigable above Riga upwards of 400 ms. to Toropez, from whence it is connected by a canal with the her branches of the Dnieper. The basin of the Dwina, lies between 55° and 57° N. of course in winter is frozen, but similar to every stream in the great plain of Russia, is unobstructed by any serious impediment to its navigation, from rocks or shoals.

Dwina, northern river of Russia, and a much more considerable stream than the southern river of the same name. The northern Dwina rises from two great sources, the Vezegda in the Government of Archangel, and the Soukhona in that of Vologda. The two latter are in a peculiar manner remarkable, flowing directly towards each other; the Soukhona, to the NE. by E. and the Vezegda, NW. by W., each about 250 ms. The Vezegda and Soukhona literally meet, and form the Dwina, turn to the NW. 250 ms. and fall into the White sea at Archangel. The Dwina affords an unbroken navigation from Archangel, to the White sea, and from Vologda, near which it might communicate with the Shaxna, and of course with the Neva and the Volga. Eastwards, to the Vezegda, and its branches, navigation is carried to near the foot of the Ural mountains. The basin of the Dwina lies between N. lat. 59° and 65 30 N., and yet abounds in forests, principally resinous trees.

Eadies' Island. In the National Intelligencer, August 7, 1843 it was announced that a beautiful island had been recently discovered in the South Pacific ocean, from the barque Isabella of Fairbairn, Capt. Geo. E. Netcher, and named Eadies' Island, after the man who first discovered it. The report gives it 40 ms. length from NE. to SW. S. lat. 11 05, W. lon., 165 05. These geographical elements would place Eadies' Island at about 430 geographical or 500 statute ms. N. of 72 25 E. from Upulu or Upola, the westernmost island in the Samoan or Navigator's group. On the chart entitled Oceana, attending the Geography of Larenaudiere, Balbi, and Huot, at 20 S. lat., and 166 W. Lon., Paris, is placed the island of St. Bernard.

On Tanner's Oceana or Pacific ocean, St. Bernard's island is placed at 166 lon. W. London, S. lat. 10 40. The size of the island 40 ms. as given by Capt. Netcher, would account for each discrepancy in fixing a point and justify the conclusion, that Eadies' and St. Bernard's islands are one and the same.

EARTH. Webster, after giving the cognate words of different languages from which this term comes, says: "It is obvious then that the primary sense of earth, is fine particles like mould," and from which again, come arable, harrow, &c. But in a geographical sense, Earth means the planet we inhabit, and which has been determined to be an oblate spheroid, flattened at the poles and comparatively swelled at the equator; the axis being 7,899.17 miles, and the equatorial diameter, 7,925.648 miles; mean diameter 7,912.09 miles. Such a body must have a curve surface of about 196½ millions of sq. ms.

This is a novel article in a Geographical Dictionary, though obviously necessary, as under it many objects of primary importance can be engrossed and brought into one point of view, and, by an easy reference, enable the reader to take a connected prospect of the whole planet. Under no other head could any notice be taken of what ought to comprise part of every treatise on geography—the causes of the discrepancies between the seasons on the two opposing sides of the Atlantic ocean. To dwell further on the propriety of introducing what I deem the primary article, would be to insult the understanding of the reader.

The Earth is a primary planet revolving round the sun in 365¼ days, at a mean distance from that luminary of 95,000,000 ms. The Earth's orbit is included between those of Venus and Mars, and is the third from the sun, having Mercury and Venus as inferior planets. The form of the Earth is that of an oblate spheroid, or a compressed globe; an apple affords a natural example of such a solid. Though, however, found to have this form, the recent, extensive, and very rigorous measurements made on its surface, suggested a doubt of its being absolutely a solid of rotation. Observations were made, particularly in Europe, from which inequalities were found, which could not be ascribed to errors in the operations. The skill in the use of and the admirable accuracy of modern mathematical instruments, superinduce a high degree of confidence in the measurements made in France, Great Britain, and other parts of Europe. We are therefore justifiable in considering the Earth as a solid, with a very near approach to an oblate spheroid, but deviating from such regular figure so far as to render the discrepancies discoverable by scientific observation and measurement on its surface.

It must be understood that this deviation from an oblate spheroid is different from that which arises from land elevations. When the measures were executed in England and France, every allowance was made for the difference of level, and it was reducing the results to the curve of a spheroid that led to the discovery that oceanic level could not be uniform over every part of the same latitude.

This surface is enveloped by an aerial ocean, differing in density in a ratio with relative elevation. The height of the atmosphere, having sufficient density to reflect light, is supposed to be 45 ms. Animal life, as shown by the condor, and ascent in balloons, can be sustained to upwards of 4 ms. If we allow 36 ms. as the depth of the atmosphere of any considerable density, and consider it, as it is in reality, a constituent part of the planet, the Earth's diameter would be 8,000 ms.

Beneath the atmosphere, the solid surface is unequally divided into land and water—the oceanic surface, in round numbers, amounting to 150,000,000, sq. ms., and the terraqueous to 46,000,000 sq. ms.

In an article necessarily brief, I cannot be expected to enter into astronomical disquisitions, and must therefore suppose the reader acquainted with the fact that the earth moves in its orbit with its axis of rotation inclined $23\frac{1}{2}$ to the plane of its motion, and that this inclination is the cause of the seasons, and of the inequality of day and night. When we are acquainted with the fact that the Earth's axis is declined, we must at once perceive that in such a planetary revolution the sun must become vertical over a zone of the Earth's surface on each side of the equator, equal to such declination, and that a circle round each pole, also equal to such declination, must be annually exposed to the continual presence of the sun above or its total depression below the horizon. From these phenomena it arises that a zone of the Earth, amounting to double the angle of declination, or 47° in breadth, is exposed annually to the vertical rays of the sun. This is called the Torrid zone, and extends from N. lat. $23\ 30$ to S. lat. $23\ 30$.* The northern extremity known as the tropic of Cancer, and the southern as the tropic of Capricorn.

At a distance of $23\ 30$ from each pole is an imaginary circle, called the northern or southern polar circle. Within these circles, as already observed, the sun either passes entirely round above or below the horizon, at the solstices, and produces constant day or night. These circles have been though erroneously, designated the Frigid zones.

The two Frigid circles and the Torrid zone, taken together, embrace 94° of a meridian of the Earth, drawn from pole to pole, leaving 43° between either tropic and its respective polar circle. These zones between the polar circles and the tropics are called Temperate zones.

Using round numbers, and calculating the curvilinear area of each zone by the principles of the sphere, we find—

Several very interesting remarks are suggested by a review of these tables. We find upwards of one-half the land area of the Earth N. from the tropic of Cancer, and, including the Torrid zone, above 9-10 N. from the tropic of Capricorn. Excluding the two polar circles, very nearly one-half the residue is included in the Northern Temperate zone. The northern polar circle contains a large portion of land, whilst that of the south is almost entirely in water.

If taken generally, the terraqueous earth is divided into two great continents, called Eastern and Western, relative to the Atlantic ocean. The two continents range at nearly right angles from each other—the eastern from SW. to NE., and the western from SE. to NW., each about 10,000 ms. in length. Both continents expand on the northern extremity, and contract into points towards the south. This structure is shown, on the large scale, in Asia, Africa, South America, North America, and Greenland. Both continents cross the equator, and extend over the Torrid into the Southern Temperate zone, thus opposing two complete barriers against the continuity of the tropic counter current.

The oceanic masses around the two poles have but two lines of communication; one by the Pacific, between America and Asia; the second by the Atlantic, between the two continents generally. The Asiatic and American continents, under the northern polar circle, are so nearly in contact as to leave only a strait of 40 ms. wide to unite the Pacific and Arctic oceans. The Atlantic ocean is in no place less than 1,000, and averages upwards of 2,000 ms. in width, and produces, as will be seen in the sequel, a very extensive influence on meteorology, and upon the habitable land of Europe and NW. Africa. The open expanse of the Atlantic occupies about the one-seventh part of the curve superficies, and stretches at very nearly right angles to the diurnal motion of the earth. The Atlantic thus affords an expansive aquatic surface, connecting the polar extremities of this planet.

The earth turns round its axis once in 24 hours, and consequently 15 degrees of its meridians revolve hourly; therefore, by multiplying the breadth of any number of degrees of longitude by 15 we have the hourly motion of that part of the earth's surface round the axis; as, for example, in lat. 45° a degree of lon. is 48½ English miles wide within a trifling fraction. From these elements, it results that particles of matter at lat. 45° on the surface of the earth, revolve about 630 ms. hourly. This is nearly the mean motion, as the maximum at the equator is a fraction less than 1,040 ms. hourly, and decreasing a long the meridians until it becomes 0 at either pole.

It is evident from the preceding data that the atmospheric and oceanic masses composing the outer envelope of the earth, are moved along with the decumbent nucleus, and with a velocity decreasing from the equator to the poles. By the laws of matter, if any, the least retardation operates on the atmosphere and oceanic waters, a counter current must be formed, flowing with greatest rapidity where the supposed retardation is in excess. That excess must arise along the equator where the horary motion is at the maximum. Such a current does actually exist, and has received the name of Tropic Current. Another cause, however, contributes to increase the quantum and velocity of the tropic current. The earth revolving from W. to E. produces an apparent motion of the sun in a contrary direction. Immediately under the sun, or where the beams of that luminary are direct, a vacuum is produced, into which the circumambient air rushes; and as this vacuity is carried westward along the equator, upwards of 1,035 ms. hourly, an atmospheric current follows, which, acting on the ocean waters, impel them westward and adds force and mass to the tropic current. If the surface of the earth was composed of uniform matter—that is, matter which would be acted on equally by any cause of motion, in brief by water itself, the tropic current would be also uniform, and flow regularly round in a ratio with the motion of the meridians. The tropic current is, however, broken by land, which, as we have seen, traverses the equatorial section of the earth. This oceanic current is not only broken, but also deflected, particularly in the Pacific and Atlantic oceans. In the former, from the wide opening to the S., and the numerous inlets from the Pacific to the Indian, the current gradually wastes; but in the latter ocean, from the peculiar structure of its shores, a very remarkable phenomenon, the Gulf Stream, is produced. South America, in form of an immense triangle, is based on the Pacific, and protrudes its perpendicular angle into the Atlantic at S. lat. 6°. This salient point is Cape St. Roque, from which the continent extends to the NW., crosses the equator, and stretches beyond the northern tropic, and forms in the Gulf of Mexico an immense reservoir. Here the continent again turns at right angles and continues NE. into the northern polar circle. The very deep indenting of the American continent in the Gulf of Mexico, and the long line of coast from its recesses into the southern section of the torrid zone, is in a peculiar manner calculated to produce that very extensive reflux which constitutes the largest whirlpool on the globe. Its effect on meteorology I shall briefly notice, as that effect is in turn a cause which very deeply influences the climate of the United States. The western tide, carried across the Atlantic from the African, is borne upon the American coast, and subdivided by Cape San Roque. The latter coast, from San Roque to the bottom of the Gulf of Mexico, intersects obliquely, and by an angle of 45°, the line of the tropic flood accumulates that flood in the Mexican Gulf, out of which it issues through the Cuba and Bahama channels. Thus from the tropic of Cancer over the Atlantic ocean to the NE., an enormous volume of water, heated at all seasons from 6° to 10° above the temperature of the adjacent ocean, flows along the coast of North America from Cape Florida towards the Northern Atlantic. This great oceanic river of warm water, averaging about 60 ms. in width, superinduces a corresponding increase of atmospheric temperature, and consequently the air over the Gulf Stream is at all times warmer than that over the adjacent ocean in similar latitudes.

Though, as I have noticed, the structure of the Pacific coasts does not admit such prominent reacting currents as exist in the Atlantic, yet similar effects are partially produced in the former, and a counter current does flow towards the NE. along the SE. coast of Asia. These two vast bodies of heated fluid thus perpetually pass along in front of the two largest land protuberances on the two continents.

The earth in motion round its axis from W. to E. carries with it the body of the atmosphere. That aerial mass having a constant tendency to fall southward into the tropic vacuum, and at the same time moving along eastward with other parts of the earth—like all bodies acted upon by two forces in different directions, assumes a line of motion between the lines of impulsion, and moves from the polar regions to the southeast in the northern hemisphere, and to the northeast in the southern. This general law of aerial motion is, it is true, liable to great interruption in its operation by the contiguity of land and water, from the unequal elevation of land protuberances, and from other more local and minor causes; but still it is the ruling principle upon which the motion of air depends.

I shall close this section of the article before us by a few practical observations. Asia and N. America, with Greenland, are the two most extensive land masses on the respective continents which rise above the oceanic level. Those two continents are crossed by the northern tropic. If we suppose the sun vertical over the southern tropic as it is at the winter solstice of the northern hemisphere, then is N. America and Asia covered in great part with ice and snow, and even the Arctic ocean mostly frozen. If we then turn our attention to the atmospheric motion, it is obvious that the cold, condensed, and heavy air of the two great continents must flow southeast, toward their respective oceanic basins. It is the natural operation, therefore, of atmospheric motion which gives to the southeast coasts of Asia and N. America such severe winters.

Amid all other changes, however, the Atlantic ocean remains open, and presents an unfrozen surface, upwards of 1,000 ms. wide, far into the northern polar circle. The winds over the Atlantic during our winter, are from the NW. generally as is the case every where else in high northern latitudes; but in respect to Europe and NW. Africa, their winter winds, coming from the open bosom of a fluid ocean, are moist, therefore rain is the consequence. It would be needless to go farther to explain the causes why vegetable and animal life can be sustained in the N. of Europe in latitudes condemned to frost and sterility in America and Asia.—See Basin of the Baltic.

The causes which produce in turn the intense summers of Asia and N. America are equally simple with those which influence their winters. When the sun is vertical over the northern tropic at the summer solstice of the northern hemisphere the region of snow and frost is restricted to the polar circle, and all the southern and central part of both continents become intensely heated. A vacuum is partially created over the land, which introduces the less heated, and, at that season, the heavier air, from the Atlantic and Pacific oceans; but even the air from the ocean we have shown to be itself heated by the tropic currents; consequently China and the U. S. have the summers of the torrid and winters of the frigid zone.—See the respective articles, Asia, Europe, America, &c.

These observations on the physical properties of the earth, though necessarily brief, ought to comprise a concise view of its density.

It has been suggested by Newton that large mountain masses would deflect a plumb line from a perpendicular to the horizon. Bouguer and Condamine, two of the French mathematicians who were sent to Peru to measure a degree of the meridian, made experiments to find how much a plumb line would be deflected by Chimborazo. Their operations gave a result of 8 seconds.

"This interesting experiment," says Dr. Brewster, in his Encyclopedia, Art. Attraction, "was repeated by the learned Dr. Maskelyne, with a view not merely of ascertaining in general the attractions of mountains, but for the purpose of determining, from the results, the mean density of the earth. The hill of Shehallien, Perthshire, in Scotland, was reckoned the most convenient for this purpose, and preparations were made for executing his laborious undertaking in the summer of 1774. An observatory was erected about half way up the N. side of the hill, and was afterwards removed to a similar position on the S. side. No less than 137 observations were made with an excellent zenith sector of Sisson's upon 43 fixed stars; and it appeared from these observations that the difference of lat. between the two stations was $54''.6$. By the trigonometrical survey it was found that the distance between the two stations was 4,364.4 feet, which, in lat. $56^{\circ}40'$, answers to a difference of at. of $42''.94$. The difference between these results, $11''.66$, is obviously the sum of the two deflections of the plumb line, and therefore $5''.66$ is the measure of the attraction of Schehallien."

Dr. Charles Hutton, from the data obtained by these observations, and by an accurate survey of Shehallien to determine its dimensions, deduced the following consequences: That the mean density of the hill was about equal to common freestone, and that the mean density of the whole earth was to that of the hill as 9 to 5 nearly. Common freestone has a specific gravity of $2\frac{1}{2}$, and consequently that of the whole earth is $4\frac{1}{2}$, that of water being 1.

The deductions made by Dr. Hutton, from the observations of Maskelyne, were subsequently modified by a more strict survey of Shehallien by Professor Playfair. The latter philosopher found that it was composed of granular quartz, the average density of which was 2.64, and of mica-slate, the average density of which was 2.81; and that the density of a homogeneous mass, which would have produced such an effect on the plumb line, would be 2.716.

With great labor Playfair made the mean density of the earth 4.867, or nearly 5 times heavier than would be an equal volume of water.

Previous to the calculations of Playfair, Mr. Cavendish, by a series of very ingenious experiments on the eventual attractions of leaden balls, found the mean density of the earth to be 4.8, that of water being 1. Dr. Hutton, by assuming the weight of common freestone as the comparative scale to estimate that of Schehallien, made the mean density of that mountain too low, as was proven by Professor Playfair. It is certainly rational to conclude that if the latter observer could have penetrated to the central base of Schehallien, he would have found its mean density greater than that of either granular quartz or mica-slate. I have inserted the small subjoined table of specific gravity in order to enable the reader to make his comparisons without the trouble of reference to other treatises:

Fossil substance.	Specific gravity.
Slate—Clay, Jameson—Schiefer.
Thon of Werner - - -	2.636
Diamond - - -	3.5
Red copper ore - - -	from 5.6 to 6.0
Tin ore - - -	from 6.3 to 7.0
Iron ore - - -	from 3.8 to 5.2
Manganese ore - - -	from 4.3 to 4.8
Bismuth ore - - -	from 8.5 to 9.0
Mercury - - -	from 10.5 to 15.0
Silver ore - - -	from 10.0 to 10.5
Gold ore - - -	from 12.0 to 20.0
Copper pyrites - - -	from 4.1 to 7.7
Iron pyrites - - -	from 4.4 to 5.0
Radiated iron pyrites - - -	from 4.7 to 5.0
Rhomboidal iron pyrites - - -	from 4.4 to 4.7
Tin pyrites - - -	from 4.3 to 5.0
Galena, ore of lead - - -	from 7.0 to 7.6
Gold glance, or prismatic gold ore - - -	from 5.7 to 5.8
Bismuth glance - - -	from 6.1 to 6.4

This table might be indefinitely extended, but as it contains the most common fossil and mineral substances, it is sufficiently copious for the purpose. If the results produced by Maskelyne, Hutton, Cavendish, and Playfair, are correctly founded on the laws of gravity, the earth is very nearly equal in specific gravity to iron ore, and greatly exceeds that of all the common substances which compose its outer crust. These facts render it impossible that any great cavities towards the centre can exist, and prove that the earth must be a solid and heavy sphere, unless the inner parts of the shell is composed of substances greatly exceeding in density the heaviest metals. The far greater part of matter composing the earth's surface is water, or other substances about $2\frac{1}{2}$ fold heavier than that fluid; consequently the central parts must have a mean density of 7 or 8, or above that of most of the heaviest metallic ores. It has been suggested that in all probability the earth was in reality an immense magnet, and composed of condensed iron ore.

Before closing this article, I cannot avoid inserting some observations on the diminution of ocean water. It has been shown, under the head of Baltic, that the waters of that sea were diminishing at the rate of 3 feet 10 inches in a century. In the article Caspian, the depression of the waters of that sea is also given from actual measurement.

An actual and general depression of the oceanic level is one of those natural revolutions which we are reluctant to admit into history from the appalling effects. Our assent to truth must, nevertheless, be ultimately rendered, however it may affect our opinions or interest. The evidence to support a depression of the briny ocean, is abundantly supplied, in a very wide scale, and in no other section of the earth is this evidence more striking than in America. Long before I ever read any account of a diminution of surface in the Baltic, Mediterranean, or any other sea, the idea of such a revolution was suggested to my mind by a review of the banks of the Mississippi. In the delta of that river a recent alluvium forms the entire mass of land. In many places the surface of such alluvium is above the highest floods, from either the river or the Gulf of Mexico. My attention was no sooner arrested by the phenomena, along the Mississippi, than it became an object of inquiry, which I have prosecuted as time and opportunity afforded means. Examining in succession the banks of the St. Lawrence, Hudson, Delaware, the numerous inlets of Chesapeake bay, and the Atlantic shores, similar phenomena, every where, led me to make like conclusions, as I had done on the Mississippi, that the surface of the Atlantic ocean was slowly sinking. The writings of Pallas, Clarke, and many others, strengthened these conclusions; finally, the established depression of the Caspian and Baltic seas afforded demonstrative evidence of the correctness of the theory.

Two causes have contributed to prevent the discovery of oceanic diminution sooner. First, ancient sea vessels were small, and demanded but little depth of water; secondly, in modern times, since vessels were made with great draught, while harbors remain sufficiently deep to receive them safely, slight diminution of depth is overlooked. I am convinced that in many instances alluvium has been adduced, to account for obstructions in rivers and harbors, which, in part at least, arose from a depression of oceanic surface. Whatever may be the case, in the Indian and Pacific basins, we have less data to determine; but in the basin of the Atlantic a slow depression of level cannot be longer safely denied.

The Atlantic basin is terminated on the E. by the sources of the rivers which flow into the Baltic, Black, and Mediterranean seas, and by the central mountains of Africa. On the W. this basin is limited by the Andes, in South America, and by the chain of Anahuac, or Chippewayan, in North America. An immense embouchure of the Atlantic penetrates the eastern continent through 50° of lon., between Europe and Africa and Asia. This great arm of the Atlantic, on its eastern side, has a counterpart on the W., between North and South America. The Baltic, on the NE., is again opposed on the NW. by the much more considerable gulfs of Hudson's and Baffin's bays.

On the side of Europe and Asia it is evident, almost to demonstration, that the separation of the Caspian from the Euxine, and the Baltic from the White sea, is, in both instances, comparatively modern. The two great alluvial slopes, stretching from the Maese to the Petchora, on the SE., and from the Naæze of Norway to the outlet of the White sea, on the NW. of the Baltic, are in part formed by the spoils of the adjacent continents, and in part abandoned by the retiring sea.

On the side of North America the oceanic depression has evidently broke the ancient connexion between the Sea of Canada and the Mexican gulf. The entire line of coast, from St. Lawrence to the Platte river, presents one vast inflected line of shore, bearing marks of submersion. Of that part of the American coast from the harbor of N. York to the Gulf of Darien, inland, memoria, consisting of the remains of existing animals, every where present themselves, to attest that time was, when the surface of the ocean stood many hundred feet above its present level. I may be permitted to notice that the revolution I am descending upon is totally different, and more recent than that by which imbedded rocks were formed, containing organic remains. The latter is entirely beyond our historical records, whilst the former comes within our authentic scope of observation, and is yet in progress.

It is peculiarly interesting to scan the effect which an elevation of 600 feet would have on the Atlantic basin. Such a change of level would again unite the Mediterranean to the Caspian and Baltic, the Baltic with the White sea, and insulate central Europe and the Scandinavian peninsula. The Indian and Atlantic would again mingle and the Nile debouch, in what is now Upper Egypt.

On the American side of the Alleghany or Appalachian system of mountains would rise as the higher ridge of an immense island, as would the more elevated parts of the northeastern States another. The lower part of the Mississippi basin would become a lengthened inland sea, from which the valleys of the Hudson and St. Lawrence would be straits opening into the Atlantic ocean. The protracted alluvial slopes I have noticed would be again submerged, and a very large portion of the most populous and fertile tracts of both continents buried under the ocean waves. We are startled at the mere mention of so tremendous change on the habitable earth, and yet careful inquiry would leave upon any sane mind scarce doubt but that such was once the state of nature on this planet.

A very interesting question rises from the determination of the earth's external area, and also the relative area of that surface occupied by land and water; that is, the capacity of the land area to support human life. On this subject a separate treatise of no ordinary size might be written, as, indeed, it embraces the end and most material object of geographical science. In our work we can only notice the matter briefly.

We have already shown that, rejecting fractions, the curve area of the earth was 196,000,000 of sq. statute ms., and of this aggregate the land area was 47,000,000—leaving water surface 149,000,000 or proportions expressed with sufficient accuracy at one-fourth land and three-fourths water.

Favorable climate, soil, and adequate supply of fresh water, are the necessary elements to decide the question of relative density of population. In general terms, as far as climate is concerned in the question, all land surface in the northern polar circle may be deducted from the aggregate. From utter and irreclaimable aridity and sterility, may also be deducted the extensive deserts between the polar circles, which will be more distinctly comprehended from the tabular form.

General aggregate of land area, square English miles	-	-	-	47,000,000
Deduct in N. polar circle	-	5,500,000
Asiatic deserts	-	4,000,000
African deserts	-	5,000,000
Australian deserts	-	1,000,000
American deserts	-	500,000

To see the productive surface of the earth represented as occupying a very small fraction above the two-thirds of the land, may startle many; but on critical analysis, it admits of no doubt, that even that reduced amount is too high. The interior deserts such vast extent in Asia and Africa, and of more less extent in America and Australia, are really less habitable, and oppose incomparably more impediment to human intercourse than do oceans of water. Oceans and seas again give resource to man in the abundance of animal life they sustain, whilst vast expanses of sand afford no such compensations for their asperities.

With the area of 31,000,000 sq. ms., we proceed to the inquiry, What is the aggregate amount of the existing population of the earth?—A question which admits only an approximate answer. Some writers assume 1,000,000,000, which on 31,000,000 sq. ms. would allow a distributive population of 32 to the sq. m.—an amount altogether inadmissible. Europe on about 3,000,000 of sq. ms., southern Asia on 6,000,000, and some other comparatively limited tracts, making in all 10,000,000 sq. ms., comprise, from the best authorities, about 570,000,000 of inhabitants—giving a distributive population of 57 to the sq. m. Perhaps the most able and most scrupulously exact of all statistical geographers, Adrian Balbi, as stated in his Geography of Larenaudiere, Balbi, and Huot, computes the aggregate of mankind at 771,000,000; and, comparing all the documents within our reach, we doubt whether the result is not in excess. The United States in 1840, had on 1,000,000 sq. ms. a population above 17,000,000 of inhabitants. In the reduced area of land surface, admitting any but a very limited population, 31,000,000 of sq. ms. would give to that part of the United States territory comprised by the census of 1840 very nearly the same one thirty-first. If we multiply 17 by 31, we have 527,000,900, or within an inconsiderable fraction of 17 to the square mile.

When we reflect that, of the net extent regarded as habitable, immense regions of both the great continents of America, and wide tracts in Africa, Australia, and in the southeastern islands of Asia, are to be derived from having a mean population of 17 to the sq. m.; and that, if taken by itself, at least two-thirds of all America remains literally uninhabited, except by a few wandering isolated savages, we might safely admit, if we did not diminish Balbi's estimate.

To close these inquiries, which, from paucity of authentic documents, rather excites than satisfies the mind, we may turn our attention to the question, to what amount could the population of the earth be extended to, with ample supply of all the material wants of life? The first emotion which arises in the heart at the mention of this question is a melancholy and even bitter retrospect on human vices and crimes. It is not from any morbid repining at what has retarded the increase and marred the happiness of existing mankind, but from painful conviction of how much more of human happiness the earth is capable of producing than has ever, under the most favorable circumstances, been realized. The history of nations proves that climate, soil, and position, are elements in human improvements, and no more, as they have all more or less combined, on spaces where for ages they have ever lain dormant. Retrogradation fills as much, if not more of history than of improvement. Under all forms of society, to a greater or less extent, unproductive classes have had the disposal of the fruits of human labor. From these and other repressive causes, much of human energy has been wasted and misapplied, and want and misery given as reward for sweat and toil. Yet there is no problem in mathematics more founded on principles admitting conclusive solution than that on the 31,000,000 of sq. ms. of productive land of the earth more than tenfold more happy, peaceful, and moral people could exist in plenty than has ever yet existed at any era of history, in want, strife, rivalry, and blood.

The Pyrenean peninsula, comprising the two kingdoms of Spain and Portugal, taken together, on a superficies of 209,000 sq. ms. have a distributive population of 86 to the sq. m., and an aggregate of 17,500,000. If any part of the habitable earth, according to our elements, can be taken as a safe mean to determine the capabilities of the whole as regards population, it is the Pyrenean peninsula, as, from various causes, it has not an aggregate population to near the amount comparatively it ought to have from its extent, climate, and soil, much less an overcharge.

Allowing the whole surface capable of population, as already stated, to be 31,000,000 sq. statute ms., the joint surface of Spain and Portugal would comprise the 148th part to within an inconsiderable fraction; and of course if the whole surface was peopled in equal proportion with Spain and Portugal, the aggregate population would be 2,590,000,000. But when we advert to the fact, that the aggregate existing population of Spain and Portugal is not half what the same extent of soil of not equal productive qualities or in climates at all of equal mildness have, and do actually support, we are warranted in asserting that on this planet might exist FIVE THOUSAND MILLIONS of human beings in possession of means to gratify every rational want of life.

Neither the data given or inductions made upon such element can be successfully refuted, the test of complete experiment has been applied to solve the problem. The population of large tracts of France, Belgium, Holland, Germany, Italy, the British islands, and in southeastern Asia, have and continue to be proofs of the certainty of our conclusions. If desolation reigns over immense regions in which nature profusely affords her gifts, and if in many instances human society has retrograded and even mere numbers diminished, the causes lie not concealed, but apparent in the perversity of man. May we not hope that more genial principles of association and more sound wisdom in human government are gaining an ascendancy which will secure advancing melioration, and prevent another DARK AGE from closing the day of civilization?

Dimensions of the Earth.

Equatorial diameter 41,847,426 feet, equal to 7,925,648 ms.

Axis or polar diameter 41,707,620 feet, equal to 7,899,170 ms.

The above elements give for the equatorial circumference 24,900 ms., to within a very small fraction.

Difference between the equatorial diameter and axis $26\frac{1}{2}$ ms. nearly, and consequently polar depression $13\frac{1}{4}$ ms., to an inconsiderable fraction.

It may be noted, however, that the various tables given on the subject of the Earth's dimensions do not agree to any very near exactness. We have compared several in French and English, and finally followed the authority of John F. Herschel.

Earthquake lake, lake in Mo., said to have been formed by the earthquake in that country in 1812. Most of the accounts published of this phenomenon were, no doubt, grossly exaggerated.

East Andover, town of Oxford co., Me., 30 ms. N.W. from Paris.

East bay, in Adolphustown, bay of Quinte, U. C., is where the forks of the North channel open, descending southwesterly from Hay bay.

East Becket, town in Berkshire co., Mass., 25 ms. W. from Northampton.

East Bethel, village in Oxford co., Me., 71 ms. from Portland.

East Bloomfield, town in Ontario co., N. Y., 6 ms. W. from Canandaigua.

East Bethlehem, tp. of Lancaster co. Pa.

Eastbourn, town of Eng., in Sussex, noted for plenty of the birds called wheatears, and is a place of resort for bathing. It is seated near the English channel, 15 ms. ESE. of Lewes, and 65 SSE. of London.

East Bradford, tp. of Chester co., Pa., on Brandywine creek, below East Caln. Pop. in 1820, 1,217.

East Bridgewater, town in Plymouth co., Mass. 30 ms. S. from Boston.

East Caln, tp. of Chester co., Pa., in the Brandywine valley, between West Whiteland and Sadsbury. Downingtown is in this tp., 32 ms. from Philadelphia. Pop. in 1820, 1,162.

East Chelmsford, town in Middlesex co., Mass. near the mouth of Concord river, 25 ms. N. from Boston.

East Chester, town in West Chester co., N. 20 miles N. from New York. Population 1820, 1,021.

East Claridon, post office in Claridon tp., Geauga co., Ohio, 6 ms. SE. from Claridon, county seat.

East District, tp. of Berks co., Pa., on the shores of Perkiomen, Manataway, Little Lehigh, and Maiden creeks, 18 ms. NE. from Reading. Pop. in 1820, 509.

Easter island, island in the South Pacific ocean 12 leagues in circuit. It has a hilly and stor surface, an iron-bound shore, and affords neither safe anchorage, fresh water, nor wood for fuel. bears evident marks not only of a volcanic origin but of having been not very long ago ruined by eruption. It is the same that was seen by Da in 1686; it was next visited by Roggewein 1722, and again by Captain Cook in 1744. The island is remarkable as being the extreme eastern Polynesia. East Greenwich, town in Kent co., R. I. Pop. 1820, 1,519.

East Greenville, village, which, according to the Ohio Gazetteer, is situated 5½ ms. W. from Mason, 17 ms. E. from Wooster, and 14 ms. W. from Canton.

East Haddam, town in Middlesex co., Ct., on the left bank of Connecticut river, 14 ms. below Middletown. Pop. in 1820, 2,572.

East Hampton, town of Hampshire co., Mass., 12 ms. S. from Northampton. Pop. in 1820, 712.—Town of Suffolk co., N. Y., includes Monk's point and Gardiner's island, 112 ms. ENE. from N. Y. Clinton academy, located in East Hampton, is a very respectable institution. Pop. 1820, 1,646.—Town in Hampshire co., Mass., near the influx of Manham creek into the Connecticut river, 5 ms. SW. from Southampton.—Town in Middlesex co., Con., 22 ms. from Hartford.

East Hartford, town and flourishing tp., Hartford co., Con., on Connecticut river, opposite Hartford, to which it is conveniently connected by a fine bridge. Pop. in 1820, 3,373.

East Haven, tp. in Essex co., Vt., 48 ms. N. from Montpelier.—Tp. in New Haven co., Ct., 12 ms. E. from New Haven. Pop. in 1820, 1,237.

East Hector, town in Tompkins co., N. Y., 12 W. from Ithaca.

East Kingston, tp. in Rockingham co. N. H., 12 ms. SW. from Portsmouth. Pop. in 1820, 443.

East lake, lies between the tps. of Marysburgh and Sophiasburgh, immediately to the NE. of Little Sandy bay, on Lake Ontario, U. C.

East Lebanon, village in the eastern part of Wayne co., Ohio, 8 ms. westward of Massillon, and 17 eastward of Wooster, the county seat.

East Liberty, village in Perry tp., eastern part Logan co., Ohio, 11 ms. eastward of Bellefonte, the county seat, and 43 ms. NW. of Columbus. This post office was formerly called Gardner's Mills.—Post office in Fayette co., Pa.

East Livermore, town in Oxford co., Me., on the E. side of Androscoggin river, 66 ms. a little N. of Portland.

East Liverpool, formerly Fawcettstown, a flourishing village on Ohio river, southeastern angle of Columbiana co., Ohio, 4 ms. below the State line, 15 ms. SE. of New Lisbon, and by the river about half way from Pittsburg to Wheeling. N. lat. 40 38, lon. W. C. 3 47 W. This place has already sprung up to consequence, and, with a population of from 500 to 600, enjoys prospects of future advance which the existing crisis has only checked, but cannot destroy.

East Main, part of New Britain, on the peninsula of Labrador; lies along the E. shore of James's bay.

East Main House, one of the British stations for Indian fur trade, stands on a river flowing into James's bay. Lon. W. C. 1 42 W., lat. 52 15 N.

East Manor, tp. in Lancaster co., Pa. Pop. in 1820, 3,303.

East Marlborough, tp. in Chester co., Pa., on Red Clay creek, 9 ms. S. from Downingtown. Pop. in 1820, 993.

East Medway, town in Mass., 22 ms. SW. from Boston.

East Minot, town in Cumberland co., Me., 39 ms. N. from Portland. The tp. of East Minot forms the NE. angle of the county.

East Monroe, village in the extreme northern part of Highland co., Ohio, 12 ms. NNE. of Hillsboro', the county seat, and 30 ms. a little N. of W. of Chillicothe.

East Nantmill, tp. in Chester co., Pa., on the sources of French creek, 35 ms. NW. from Philadelphia.

East Palestine, village near the eastern border of Columbiana co., Ohio, 18 ms. NE. by E. of New Lisbon. The vicinity abounds with stone coal and iron.

East river, strait of N. Y., between Long Island sound and New York bay. Opposite the central part of New York, or from Fulton street to the main street of Brooklyn, East river is about three-quarters of a mile wide. Vessels of any tonnage can pass through this strait. In it is the principal commercial harbor of the city of New York.

Easton, town in Bristol co., Mass., 22 ms. S. from Boston. In this tp. there are two psts., No. 1 and No. 2.—Town, SE. angle of Washington co., N. Y., on the left bank of the Hudson, 22 ms. above Albany. Pop. in 1820, 3,051.—Borough and seat of justice for Northampton co., Pa., on the Delaware, 60 ms. N. from Philadelphia. It is a borough town, situated on a point of land formed by the Delaware and Lehigh rivers and Bushkill creek. The streets are laid out at right angles to each other, and along the cardinal points. The lower part of the town, near the Delaware, is on an elevated level, but the western extremity rises by a gradual acclivity to a considerable elevation. The adjacent country is bold, broken, and romantic. The soil is highly productive, and being well cultivated, gives a most pleasing aspect to the vicinity of Easton. Farm houses, orchards, fields, and meadows, are commingled along the bottoms of the rivers and slopes of the adjacent hills. Bushkill creek is amongst the finest mill streams in the United States.—See Bushkill. This stream rises 8 ms. N. from Nazareth, and has an almost uninterrupted fall to the Delaware. Within the borough of Easton it passes the Chestnut ridge and, by a very winding and precipitous course, reaches the Delaware, affording a rapid succession of mill seats.

The borough of Easton, from its advantageous situation, has regularly increased in wealth and population. In 1810, the inhabitants amounted to 1,857; in 1820, to 2,370; in 1830, to 3,529; and in 1840, to 4,862. Lat. 42 42 N., lon. W. C. 1 50 E. Seated on the Delaware and Lehigh rivers, at their junction, Easton is a real entrepot; the Lehigh and Delaware canals unite at the union of the two rivers.

Easton, village and capital of Talbot co., Md., on the left bank of Treadhaven creek, 12 ms. above Choptank bay, and 20 ms. SE. from Baltimore. It is the most considerable town of the eastern shore part of Md. Pop. near 2,000; and in 1810, 2,876.

Eastport, village, in the eastern part of Tuscarawas co., O., about 12 ms. SE. of New Philadelphia.—Village and port of entry, Washington co., Me., at the mouth of Cob-cook river, 280 ms. NE. from Portland. The boundaries of the tp. contain Moose island, and several smaller islands. This town has rapidly increased; its shipping in 1816, exceeded 7,370 tons. Pop. in 1810, 1,511; in 1820, 1,937.

East Pittston, town in the southern part of Kennebec co., Me., E. from the Kennebec river, and 60 ms. NE. from Portland.

East Pultney, a small river, rising in Rutland co., Vt., which enters Lake Champlain at Whitehall, and from that place to the village of Pultney, separates N. Y. and Vt.—Town, on Pultney river, on the western verge of Rutland co., Vt., about 8 ms. a little S. of E. from Whitehall.

East Randolph, town, Orange co., Vt., 22 ms. S. from Montpelier.

East Rumford, town, Oxford co., Me., near the Androscoggin river, 75 ms. a little W. of N. from Portland.

East Sandwich, town between Sandwich and Barnstable, in Barnstable co., Mass., 77 ms. SSE. from Boston.

East Stoughton, town, Norfolk co., Mass., 18 ms. S. from Boston.

East Sudbury, town, Middlesex co., Mass.

East Thomaston, town, in the southeastern angle of Lincoln co., Me., about 40 ms. from Wiscasset.

Easttown, tp., Chester co., Pa., on both sides of the road from Philadelphia to Lancaster, 16 ms. from the former.

Ebro, river of Spain, which rises in the mountains of Santillana, in Old Castile, and waters Saragossa and Tortosa, falls into the Mediterranean. The Ebro is about 300 ms. in length; but, except the Segre, from the Pyrenean mountains, which receives at Mequinenza, the volume of this stream is not increased by any tributary of consequence. The Ebro is also a very unnavigable river; attempts have been made at various times to improve the natural channel, but little else has been done, except some locks and side cuts, from Tudela, Saragossa to Sastago. It is still incapable of being passed by boats, to its mouth, at any season of the year.

Ecaterrinenslaf.—See Catharinenslaf.

EXCENTRICITY, from ex, from, and Greek, metron, centre; distance of the focii of an ellipsis and its centre, and that of its inscribed or circumscribed circle. As an astronomical term, it is of great importance to be clearly understood by those who study that science, as the planets move on elliptic curves, the sun being in one of the focii, the eccentricity explains why planets advance towards and recede from that luminary whilst passing through their entire orbits, and also why planetary bodies are constantly accelerated or retarded in their motions.

Eddystone, name of some rocks in the English channel, which cause a variety of contrary sets of the tide or current in their vicinity. They are situated SSW. from the middle of Plymouth sound, the distance of 14 ms. They are almost in the line which joins the Start and the Lizard points, and their situation with regard to the Bay of Biscay and the Atlantic is such, that they lie open to the winds of the bay and ocean from all the SW. points, so that all the heavy seas from the SW. break upon Eddystone with the utmost fury. Three light houses have been erected on these dangerous rocks; the first by Mr. Winstanly, 1696, which, on the 27th November, 1703, was destroyed by a storm, and with it perished the ingenious founder. The second was built of wood by Mr. Rudyard, but was burnt in 1755. The third, and the one yet in existence, was constructed in stone by Mr. Neaton, and finished August 24, 1759. Its distance from the Ram Head, the nearest point of land, is 12 ms. Lon. 4 24 W., lat. 50 8 N.

Edikofen, town of Germany, in the palatinate of the Rhine.

Edinburgh, metropolis of Scotland, situated in a co. of the same name. It may properly be divided into the old and new towns. The old town is situated on a narrow steep hill, about a mile in length, terminated abruptly on the W. side by the castle, from which there is a gradual declivity to the palace of Holyroodhouse, which is placed in a beautiful plain called St. Ann's Yards. From the level of this plain, and on each side of the ridge or hill on which the old town stands, run two narrow valleys, nearly parallel to each other; the southern one forms a street called the Cowgate, the northern continued a marsh until very lately, which was called the North Loch, but is now drained. The high street, which runs between the castle and Holyrood-house, is long and spacious, and the houses are very high. From this street many narrow lanes, or closes, run off at right angles, towards the N. and S. The castle is seated on a vast perpendicular rock, accessible only by a drawbridge on one side, and in ancient times was considered as almost impregnable. In 1811 the number of inhabitants, exclusive of Leith, was 103,000. It is supplied with water, conveyed in iron pipes, from Comiston, 4 ms. to the W. It is governed by a lord provost, a dean of guild, a guild council, and 25 common council. Here are 14 incorporated trades, each having its deacon or warden. Edinburgh is 2 ms. SSW. of Leith, (which is its port,) and 377 NNW. from London. Lon. 2 12 W., lat. 55 58 N.

This city has become deservedly celebrated for the number, extent, and excellence of its literary institutions. The university of Edinburgh was founded in 1582, and now embraces professorships on almost every important pursuit of the human intellect. The number of students ordinarily exceeds 2,000. To the university is attached a library containing above 50,000 volumes. As a medical school, the reputation of this university occupies a most exalted rank. The other literary, charitable, religious, and legal institutions are numerous and highly respectable. Of all the great cities of the British empire, Edinburgh is supposed to derive the least comparative emolument from trade, commerce, or manufactures.

Edinburghshire, or Mid Lothian, co. of Scotland, 27 ms. long, and from 6 to 16 broad, bounded on the N. by the frith of Forth, E. by the shires of Haddington, Berwick, and Roxburg, S. by those of Selkirk, Peebles, and Lanark, and W. by Linlithgowshire. It is divided into 31 parishes. The soil is fertile, and produces corn of all sorts, with plenty of grass; also, coal, iron, limestone, and black marble. The principal rivers are the Esk, Leith, Amond, and Gala. Pop. in 1801, 122,954, in 1811, 148,607, and in 1821, 191,514.

Elba, island on the coast of Tuscany, remarkable for mines of iron and loadstone, and quarries of marble.—Island in the Mediterranean sea, between Italy and the island of Corsica, and separated from Tuscany by the channel of Piombino. It was known to the Greeks by the name of Æthalia, and to the Romans by that of Ilva. The form of the island is very irregular; the length from E. to W. about 14 ms., and the greatest breadth, which is at the W. end, is between 8 and 9 miles; and contains a population of 13,700 souls. On the NE. part is the mountain, or mine, of iron ore, which supplies most of the forges of Italy. The tower of Voltorajo stands on this mountain, on a shaggy rock. The soil of Elba is very narrow, with scanty room for cultivation, and few places level enough for corn; producing little more than six months' provisions for its inhabitants. The fruit of its standard trees is excellent, though not in great plenty. Orange and lemon trees thrive very well in the sheltered valleys and narrow plains near the sea. There are several springs of excellent water in the island; and the climate is much milder than the adjacent continent, for it produces many fruits and plants that cannot stand the Tuscan winters. Porto Ferrajo, N. lat. 42 48, lon. 16 15 E. of London, is the capital.—Town, Genessee co., N. Y. Pop. in 1820, 1,333.

Elbassano, town of Albania, 45 ms. SE. of Durazzo. Lon. 20 9 E., lat. 41 34 N.

Elbe, large river of Germany, which rises in the mountain of the Giants, on the confines of Bohemia and Silesia, flows to Konningsgratz, Leutzmeritz, Dresden, Dessau, Miessen, Wittenberg, Magdeburg, Hamburg, and Gluckstadt, and enters the German ocean at Cruxhaven. It is navigable for large ships to Hamburg, which is 70 miles from the sea.

The Elbe is navigable partially as high as its junction with the Muldau, between Welwaru and Melnick, 30 ms. above Leutmeritz in Bohemia. At Leutmeritz it carries small boats; at Pirna, above Dresden, it admits river barges. From Pirna to Hamburg, it has an uninterrupted navigation of upwards of 300 ms. following the river channel. The Elbe rises in Bohemia, which it drains. The valley of Bohemia is one of those remarkable mountain basins, of which the earth affords several, though few others, perhaps, are so distinctly defined as that of the upper Elbe. The main source of this fine basin is the Muldau, rising in the Bohemia Wald, within less than 20 ms. from the Danube, below the mouth of the Inn. Flowing first NE. along the mountains 50 ms. to Rosenberg, the Muldau turns to nearly N., which course it continues with a slight inclination to the E. 100 ms., receives the Beraun from the SW., continuing N. passes Prague, and 30 ms. below the mouth of the Beraun joins the Elbe at Melnick. The Beraun rises also from the Bohemian Wald, and flowing NE. about 100 ms. falls into the Muldau above Prague. The Elbe proper, a far inferior stream to the Muldau, has its sources in the Carpathian mountains, between Bohemia and Moravia, and Silesia, flows NW. 100 ms. to its junction with the Muldau. The Egre, or Eger, a longer, though perhaps less stream than either the Elbe or Beraun, rises in the extreme W. angle of Bohemia, interlocking sources with the Nab, the Maya, and Pleiss, and after a comparative course of NE. by E. upwards of 150 ms. falls into the Elbe at Leutmeritz.

Elbert, co., Ga., between Broad and Savannah rivers, bounded NE. by Savannah river, SW. by Broad river, and N. by Franklin co., in Ga.; length 38 ms., mean width 16 ms.; area 800 sq. miles. Elbours, or Elbourouss, highest mountain peak of Caucasus. On the Edinburg Atlas, (Black's, 1841,) this mountain is named Elbrouz, and laid down at N. lat. 43°, lon. E. of London 42 40—about 100 ms. nearly due E. from Soukougoum-Kaleh, on the Black sea. In the same Atlas of Black, the elevation of Elbours is given at 17,796 English feet. In 1829, a scientific expedition was made to this mountain by order of the Russian government, under command of General Emanuel, and accompanied by M. Kupfer, Menestire, Leutz, Meyer, &c. This party reached the mountain in July, and, after much fatigue, determined the height to be 16,300 French feet—equal to 17,376 English feet. The extreme sources of the Kouban, Kouma, and Terek rivers, on the northern side, and those of the Riori on the south, all rise in the Caucasus in the region of Elbours. This is the highest known mountain on the eastern continent so far to the west, being about 2,000 feet higher than Mount Blanc.

Elephanta, island on the W. coast of the Deccan of Hindoostan, 5 ms. from the castle of Bombay. It contains one of the most inexplicable antiquities in the world. It is about 3 ms. in compass, and consists of almost all hill, at the foot of which, as you land, you see the figure of an elephant, of the natural size, cut coarsely in stone. An easy slope then leads to the portal of a magnificent temple, hewn out of the solid rock. It is an oblong square, 80 feet long and 40 broad. The roof, which is about 10 feet high, is cut flat, and is supported by regular rows of pillars, with capitals resembling large cushions, as if pressed by the incumbent mountain. At the further end are three gigantic figures, which were mutilated by the absurd zeal of the Portuguese, when this island was in their possession. Elephanta was ceded to the English by the Mahrattas.

Elymais, ancient province and city of Persia. The term is national, and comes from elymaei, the plural. The real situation of the city of Elymais is doubtful, but supposed to have been about 100 ms. to the NW. from Ispahan, and on its southern slope of the mountains separating the provinces of Irac Adgemi from Khosistan, the city became famous in the ages between the expedition of Alexander and the fall of the Roman empire in Asia, as was the case with the great temple at Delphi, in the northern part of Greece, the temple of Elymais was the place of deposit (bank) for the gold and silver of the inhabitants, and became, as did Delphi, an object to excite the rapacity of conquerors. Antiochus Epiphanes was d ated in an attack on Elymais, but it was in after gets plundered and ruined.

EMIR, or MIRZA, titles signifying chief, prince,
 &c. The term is supposed to be derived from the Hebrew; but as, under different inflexions, and as prefix or suffix, it exists in the northern as well as the southern languages of Asia, we may regard it as an original word, derived from the most remote and primitive languages of that continent.
 Under the khalifs of Bagdad, their prime minister was entitled Emir-al-Omra, or Chief of Chiefs.
 The Mirza.

 Lon. 11 6 E., lat. 43 42 N.

EMPEROR, imperatore, impero, to command; applied in modern times to monarchs who rule over large sovereignties, and regarded superior to kings. If we were to take the meaning from its application to European monarchs so called, Emperor would mean a ruler over various nations, united under his power, though speaking various languages, and each having less or more their own laws, usages, and particular national name. This would apply forcibly to Austria, and little, if any, less so to Russia. If we turn to antiquity, we might give as instances the Persian and the Greek, under Alexander the Great, Roman and German, though the latter more than any other of ancient or modern times was nationally homogeneous.

Enckauysen, seaport of N. Holland, on the Zuy-der-Zee. It was once a flourishing place, but its harbor being obstructed by sand, it has lost its former consequence. It is 25 ms. NE. of Amsterdam.

Engadina, country of the Grisons, in the mountains of the Alps. It is divided into Upper and Lower, extending along the banks of the river Inn, from its source to the Tyrolese. Upper Engadina is a beautiful valley, yet, on account of its elevation, produces nothing but rye and barley. The winter sets in early, and even in summer the air is cold and piercing, and the corn occasionally much damaged by the hoar-frost.

Engelberg, valley of Switzerland, 10 ms. long, entirely surrounded by very lofty and barren mountains, and bounded by the cantons of Bern, Uri, and Unterwalden. It was formerly subject to the abbot of a Benedictine monastery of the same name, who was under the protection of the can-tons of Lucern, Uri, Schweiz, and Underwalden. The romantic scenery of this country has always delighted the traveller, and engaged the attention of the naturalist. Glaciers, of very great extent and extremely diversified, are found on the side of very fertile mountains, and exhibit singular points of view. There is abundance of fine black marble, white veined; a vitriolic earth, slate impregnated with vitriol; small crystals, called Swiss diamonds; silver and vitriol. The abbey is 12 ms. SW. of Altdorf.

Engers, town of Germany, in the electorate of Treves, capital of a country of the same name. It is seated on the Rhine, 11 ms. N. of Coblenz. Lon. 7 32 E., lat. 50 25 N.

Engia, or Engina, ancient Ægina, island of Turkey in Europe, in a gulf of the same name, between Livadia and the Morea. There is a town upon it of the same name, 22 ms. S. of Athens. Lon. 23 59 E., lat. 37 45 N.

Engia, ancient Saronic gulf of Greece, between Livadia and the Morea. In ancient times it separated Attica and Megara from Argolis.

England, the southern part of the island of Great Britain, is bounded on the E. by the German ocean, on the S. by the English channel, on the W. by St. George's channel, the principality of Wales, and the Irish sea, on the N. by the Cheviot hills, and by the river Tweed. Its extent is computed at 58,335 sq. ms., and the population in 1811 amounted to 9,499,400. Its external surface somewhat resembles the form of a triangle, and from the South Foreland in Kent, which may be termed the E. point of the triangle to Berwick upon Tweed, which is the N. point, its length is 345 ms. From that point to the Land's end in Cornwall, which is the W., it is 425 ms., and the breadth thence to the South Foreland is 340 ms. The face of the country affords all that beautiful variety which can be found in the most extensive tracts of the globe; not, however, without romantic, and even dreary scenes, lofty mountains, craggy rocks, bleak barren moors, and wide uncultivated heaths; and yet few countries have a smaller proportion of land absolutely sterile and incapable of culture. The richest parts are, in general, the midland and southern. Towards the N. it partakes of the barrenness of the neighboring Scotland. The E. coast is in many parts sandy and marshy. A range of rude and elevated land, sometimes rising into lofty mountains, extends from the borders of Scotland to the very heart of England, forming a natural division between the E. and W. sides of the kingdom. Cornwall is also a rough, hilly tract; and a similar character prevails in part of the adjacent counties. These mountainous tracts abound with various mineral treasures. The rivers are numerous, and the most considerable of them are the Thames, Severn, Humber, Mersey, Medway, Trent, Ouse, Tyne, Tees, Eden, Avon, and Dee. The lakes are neither numerous nor extensive, and are chiefly in the NW. counties; those of Westmoreland and Cumberland in particular exhibit such varieties of beautiful scenery as to become the object of summer excursions from every part of the country. London is the capital, and the metropolis also of the whole British empire. For the population and other remarkable objects in the topography of England, see the respective counties, and for a general view, see Great Britain, London, &c.

ERA, derived by some from the Arab, Arkha, epoch, by others from Arach, same language, both nifying time fixed, but by others, again, with re probability, from the Roman capitals A, E, A, initials of the Spanish epoch Ab Exordio, gin Augusti. In the English language, era is ostly used in chronology, and it would be desirae that the two terms, though essentially having e same meaning, should be made exclusive era chronology, and epoch to astronomy.

The principal eras used in our historical works,

Creation, Ante C	-	-	-	4,004
Deluge, Ante C	-	-	-	2,348
Olympiads, Ante C	-	-	-	776
Time, Foundation of, Ante C	-	-	-	753
Tibonassar, era of	-	-	-	747
Greek era	-	-	-	312
Christian era.
Hijra, or Mahometan era, A. D.	-	-	-	622
Discovery of America	-	-	-	1,492
American Revolution	-	-	-	1,775
French Revolution	-	-	-	1,789

These fixed points in time may be indefinitely multiplied, but, from the brief table here introduced, we see that the Christian era is the zero of our mode of measuring time.

Eraklea, ancient Heraclea, town of Turkey in Europe, in Roumelia, on the Marmora sea, 46 ms.
W. from Constantinople.

Ericho, ancient Oricum, harbor of Albania, in the Gulf of Aulona, now Valona. Lon. London, 19 28 E., lat. 40 36 N.

Thuringia, with a university. It was formerly imperial, but is now subject to the elector of Mentz, and is defended by two strong forts. It is seated on the river Gere, 30 ms. ESE. of Malhausen.
Lon. 11 23 E., lat. 51 N.

Eribol Loch, Eng., arm of the sea, on the N. coast of Sutherlandshire, capable of affording a safe retreat to the largest vessels. It receives several streams, particularly that which flows from a lake called Loch Hope.

Ericht Loch, large lake of Scotland, in Perth-shire, which extends several ms. into Inverness-shire. The waters of this lake descend into another called Loch Rannoch.

Erie, large lake of the U. S. and U. C., extending in form of an oval, SW. by W., and NE. by N., 280 ms. in length. It is about 65 ms. wide where broadest. Extreme N. part at N. lat. 43°, extreme S. part N. lat. 41 20, and reaching from 1° E. to 6° W. lon. W. C. The area of this lake is about 12,000 sq. ms. When compared to any of the other four great Canadian lakes, Lake Erie is shallow, seldom exceeding 40 or 50 fathoms. Its shores are in some places low and sandy, and in others rock bound. The mouths of its rivers, Detroit and Niagara excepted, are shallow, and not very favorable to commerce. Its position, however, and the fertility and extent of the adjacent regions, superinduces a very extensive trade on this great inland sea. It receives from the NW., by the Detroit, the immense volume discharged from the Superior, Huron, and Michigan.
From the peninsula of U. C. the Ouse flows into Erie from the NW., from the peninsula of Michigan it receives the Huron and Raisin rivers, from Ohio, Pa., and N. Y., Maumee, Portage, Sandusky, Huron, Vermilion, Black, Cuyahoga, Grand, Ashtabula, Conneaut, Catteraugus, and Buffalo rivers. The U. S. possess at present, it is probable, more than 3,000 tons of shipping on this lake. Independent of Detroit and Niagara, Erie has, at seasons of high water, a natural communication with the Illinois river. The great western canal of N. Y. will unite it with the Atlantic ocean, through the Hudson, as will that by Cuyahoga and Muskingum rivers with the Ohio.
The whole forming an unequalled interior chain of commercial connexion.

Pop. 1840, 31,344. Central lat. 42° N., lon. W. C. 3° W.—Village, Erie co., N. Y.—Town, borough, and seat of justice, Erie co., Pa. It is the Presqu'isle of the French, but stands on the main land, opposite the peninsula, from which its name is derived. The best part of the village extends in one street from the harbor, on the road towards Pittsburg. The harbor is formed by the main shore, peninsula, and a reef of sand. Over the latter, without an extraordinary swell of the lake, there is only 8 feet of water; the depth and anchorage within are commodious safe. The trade of this town is considerable, and increasing. A turnpike road extends from there to Pittsburg, distant from each other 136 ms. It is 80 ms. SSW. from Buffalo. It has a number of neat dwelling houses, several stores, a court-house, jail, and printing office. The first eruption of Etna, on record, is that mentioned by Diodorus Siculus, without fixing the period when it happened; but the second, recorded by Thucydides, was in the year 784, B. C. From this period to the year 1447, there were 18 more eruptions. After this it ceased to emit fire near 9 years. The next was in 1536; others followed in 1537, 1567, 1603, (which continued till 1736, 1564, (which continued 14 years), 1682, 1686, 1693, 1755, 1763, 1764, 1766, 1780, 1787, 1799. Of all its eruptions, that of 1763 was the most terrible; it was attended with an earthquake that overturned the town of Catania, and buried 18,000 persons in its ruins. It is 10 ms. W. of Catania.

Etna, tp., Penobscot co., Me. Pop. in 1820, 194.—Village, Tomkins co., N. Y.—Furnace, post office, Gloucester co., N. J., by post road 92 ms. S. from Trenton.—Village on the national road, 18 ms. eastward of Columbus, in Lima tp., Licking co., O., 20 ms. NW. by W. from Newark. Pop. 200.

Etolia, ancient province of northern Greece, bounded W. by Acarnania, S. by the Ionian sea and gulf of Corinth, E. by the Locri Ozolae, and N. by the mountains of Thessaly. It is now southern Albania.

Eton, town of Eng., in Bucks, seated on the Thames, over which is a bridge to Windsor. It is famous for a school and college founded by Henry VI., and King's College in Cambridge admits other students for fellows but what have been brought up here. It is 20 ms. W. from London. Lon. 36' W., lat. 50 30 N.

Etowah, river of Ga., rises in the Appalachian mountains, interlocking with the sources of the Chatahoochee, and flowing SW. joins in Alabama the Oostenalah, and forms the Coosa.

Etruria, village of Eng., in Staffordshire, near New Castle. It is the principal seat of the potteries in this co., and here the most elegant vases of every use and form are made.

Etrick, river of Scot., in Selkirkshire, which rises from the mountainous region in the SW., and having formed a junction with the Yarrow, the ited streams meet the Tweed where that river rises Roxburghshire. From the woods formerly the banks of this river, the county obtained the name of Ettrick Forest. Ettrick Banks are the subject of a pastoral Scotch ditty.

Eu, seaport of Fr., in the dep. of Lower Seine, in the late province of Normandy. The principal manufacture is in serges and lace. It is seated in a valley, on the river Brele, 15 ms. NE. of Dieppe. Lon. 30 E., lat. 50 3 N.

Eubanks, village, Cumberland co., Ga., post town, 88 ms. NE. from Milledgeville.

Euclid, town, Cuyahoga co., O., 10 ms. NE. from Cleveland, on the shore of Lake Erie. Pop. 1820, 809.

Eugubio, episcopal town of Italy, in the duchy of Urbino, 35 ms. S. of Urbino and 87 N. of Rome. Lon. 13 37 E., lat. 43 18 N.

Euphemia, seaport of Naples, in Calabria Ulteriore, on a bay, 50 ms. NE. from Reggio. Lon. 32 E., lat. 38 44 N.

Euphrates, one of the most celebrated rivers in the world, and the principal stream of Turkey in Asia. The principal source of this great river is the Murad, which rises in upper Armenia at longitude E. and lat. 39° N., flowing from the mountain Ala-Dag, the ancient Abus, of which Ararat a branch. It rises near the town of Bayezid, and flowing W. 250 ms. receives from the N. a much smaller stream; the latter, however, being the one to whom the name of Euphrates, or, by the Orientalists, Frat, is given. The Frat is formed by a number of small streams to the N. of Erzroom, beyond which city they unite, and flowing SW. join the Murad at Keban, and form the Euphrates. The river would appear to be destined to enter the Mediterranean, as it passes the first mountain chain by the pass of Nushar, and again through a second mountain pass, forms a double cataract 22 ms. above Semisat. The course thus far SW., is at length turned by the mass of Caucasus after having descended within less than 100 ms. from the NE. angle of the eastern Mediterranean. Below Semisat, the Euphrates, already 500 ms. from the source of the Murad, turns to S. about 100 ms., where at length, nearly due E. from Aleppo, it assumes its natural course to the SE., towards the Persian gulf. Having flowed in the latter direction 700 ms., the Euphrates and Tigris unite, and form the Shat-al-Arab, or the river of Arabia. A short distance below the junction of the Euphrates and Tigris the Euphrates, another river of considerable magnitude, descends from the Elwend mountains. Now, within less than 40 ms. from its recipient, the Persian gulf, the water of the Shat-al-Arab divides into three main and several minor branches. All the channels are more or less choked with sand bars; that of the S. is the freest and deepest. The tide runs above Bassorah, or about 40 ms. The entire comparative length of the Euphrates is between 1,300 and 1,400 ms. The basin of this river, including the valleys of Tigris and Ahwas, is about 890 ms. in length by 200 ms. mean width; it contains an area of 160,000 sq. ms., lying between latitude 30° and 40 30 N. Below its bend to the SE., the Euphrates generally separates the Arabian deserts from the plains of the ancient Mesopotamia, now known by various names, Diarbeker, Ourfa, and the Araby, &c. It is a mistake, however, very common, that the deserts are terminated by the Euphrates, as a desert with all the features and horrors of that of Arabia, extends between the Euphrates and Tigris about N. lat. 35° and lon. 40° E. Here ponds of bitter water are found amid immense brakes of wormwood, or sandy plains. One general character distinguishes the basins of the Euphrates, Nile, and Indus; but the contrast is most striking in the former. Each rises on an elevated table land or plateau, amid towering mountains and fertile vales, and debouches amid or environed by arid sands. The mountains of Armenia rise above the region of perpetual snow, whilst the parched desert of Arabia slowly sinks below the waves of the Persian gulf. Every product of the vegetable kingdom, not absolutely tropical, can be reared in this remarkable basin. The variety of vegetables in the markets of Babylon excited the astonishment of Herodotus upwards 2,280 years past. At present, however, this region, so interesting to the enlightened mind, is covered with barbarous hordes, without government or law. Where abundance reigned 22 centuries past, now prevails the Sekman, Koord, Turcoman, and Osmanli Turks, with other bands equally barbarous and ferocious.—See Tigris, Ahwas, &c.

The Euphrates at about N. lat. 38° and below the ancient town of Meletene, now Malatiah, having become greatly augmented by the union of all its higher confluent forces its narrow and tumultuous course through the chain of Taunis. This chain, a part of the Caucasian system, divides the basin of the Euphrates into two very distinct sub-basins; one to the N. and the other to the S. of these mountains. The two sub-basins differ from each other in climate and soil, as in the manners and interests of their respective inhabitants. The political relations of the northern side have their natural bent towards the Euxine, and those of the southern towards either the Mediterranean, Syria, or the Persian gulf. At Samosata the river assumes for upwards of 100 miles maintains a southern course to its great bend E. of Aleppo, and thence pursues a general southeastern direction to the Persian gulf. Below Samosata the river becomes navigable; above that place the bed of the main and tributary streams are rocky and shallow.

Eure, dep. of Fr., which includes part of the late province of Normandy.

Eure and Loire, dep. of Fr., so called from the rivers of that name. It contains the late province of Beauce, and its capital is Chartres.

Europe, one of the four general parts of the world, bounded on the N. by the Frozen ocean, on the S. by the Mediterranean, on the W. by the Atlantic and Northern ocean, and on the E. by Asia. From Cape St. Vincent to the mouth of the Oby it is near 3,600 ms. in length; and from Cape Matapan in the Morea, to the North Cape in Lapland, about 2,200 in breadth. Europe is naturally divided into five great sections: 1, the Spanish peninsula in the SW; 2, the central table land of the Alps and the mountains of Germany, Bohemia, Transylvania, and Turkey, with an immense alluvial slope declining to the N., and the two peninsulas of Greece and Italy protruded into the Mediterranean to the S.; 3, the wide spread plain of Russia extending from the SW. to NE., from the Carpathian to the Ural mountains, and from SE. to NW., from the Caspian and Black seas to the Baltic and White seas; 4, the Scandinavian peninsula in the extreme NW., having the Atlantic ocean, Frozen ocean, White sea, Baltic sea, and German ocean to bathe its shores; and, 5, the British islands detached from, but forming essentially, both morally and physically, a part of Europe. The extent of Europe has been very variously stated, and from its excessively indented outline this problem is difficult of solution. Having no natural line of separation from Asia, different national geographers have been far from following the same line of demarcation. The English, and after them American, authors have traced a very artificial limit between those two great sections of the earth; following the Kama, Volga, and Don rivers from the Ural mountains to the sea of Azoph. On the contrary, most of the continental geographers of Europe bound that section of the earth on the side of Asia by the Ural mountains to the head of, and thence down, the Ural river to its mouth in the Caspian; thence following the Caspian to the extension of Mount Caucasus, and thence along the ridge of that chain W. to the straits of Kaffa. Rees, in the maps of his Cyclopædia, judiciously adopted the latter, which is in fact the most natural line of demarcation between Europe and Asia, and gives to the former about 200,000 sq. ms. more area than it would contain if restricted to the Kama, Volga, and Don boundary. Adopting, therefore, the Ural river, Caspian sea, and Caucasian mountains, as the outline of Europe on the side of Asia, the former will contain within a small fraction of 3,000,000 of sq. ms., lying between the parallels of 36° 20' and 72° N. lat. For the climate and seasons of Europe, see Earth.

The principal chains of mountains on the Spanish peninsula are the Sierra Nevada of Granada, of which two peaks, the Muley Hassen and Veleta, rise above the region of perpetual snow; the Sierra Morena and the united chain of the Pyrenees and Galicia. In the central table land of Europe rise the Alps, Carpathian, with its embankments, and Hæmus, with its lateral chains. Though limited on two sides by the Ural and Carpathian mountains, the great plain of Russia has in its interior not even hills of much elevation. The Dofrine chain forms the nucleus of the Scandinavian peninsula. The Dofrine, rising from the German ocean, extends NE. to N. lat. 69°, it then turns first E. then S., assumes the name of Olonetz, is finally terminated in the marshes of Finland between the Baltic and White seas. The fifth division, the British islands, though chequered with some mountainous districts, has no chain of considerable extent or mass.

The principal rivers on the Spanish peninsula are the Guadalquivir, Guadiana, Tagus, Duero, and Ebro. The central table land discharges into the Atlantic ocean, the Garonne and Loire; into the English channel, the Seine; into the German ocean, the Rhine, Weser, and Elbe; into the Baltic, the Oder and Vistula; into the Mediterranean, the Rhone; into the gulf of Venice, the Po; and into the Black sea, the Danube and the Dniester. The great Russian plain is drained by the Bog, Dnieper, and Don, flowing into the Black and Azoph seas; by the Volga and its numerous confluents into the Caspian; by the Neva, entering the gulf of Finland, and, finally, the Onega, Dwina, Mezin, and Petchora, losing themselves in the White sea, or Arctic ocean. The Dofrine chain ranging along near the Atlantic ocean at a mean distance of about 200 ms. from the Baltic, discharges its rivers of note towards the latter recipient, and gives source to the Kimi, Tornea, Sulea, Skellestea, Umea, Indal, and Westerdal, with several others, which are lost in the gulf of Bothnia and Baltic. This chain discharges also a fine stream, the Clara, into Lake Wener, from which it again issues by the name of Gotha, and is finally lost in the Categate at Gottenburg.

Of all sections of the earth the British islands are most abundantly supplied with navigable rivers in proportion to the extent of surface. The Thames, Severn, Mersey, Humber, Clyde, and Shannon are astonishing streams, if we take into view the relative extent of England, Scotland, and Ireland with that of Europe entire.

The seas of Europe are on the W. and NW. the Atlantic ocean, on the S. the Mediterranean and Black seas, on the SE. the Caspian, and on the N. the Arctic ocean. This region is indented by the gulf of Venice, by the sea of Azoph, by the Baltic, and by the White sea; and as we consider the British islands as a part of Europe, by the German ocean. In point of magnitude the Lakes Ladoga, Onega, Wener, Wetter, Enara, Geneva, and Constance, follow nearly in order, and are the principal lakes of Europe, if we may not except that intricate maze of lakes between the White sea and gulf of Finland. Such are the general features of that section of the earth where the human mind has risen to the highest dignity, and the human form to perhaps its utmost perfection of strength and symmetry.

Europe contains at present the Christian governments of Sweden, Russia, Prussia, Denmark, Great Britain, France, the kingdom of the Netherlands, Spain, Portugal, Sardinia; the two Sicilies, the Pope's dominions; and several minor States in Italy; Austria, Bavaria, Wirtemberg, and Saxony, with other minor States of Germany. Mahometan Europe embraces all Greece, Epirus, Albania, Macedonia, Thessaly, Thrace, Bulgaria, Servia, and Bosnia, with part of Croatia and Herzegovina; or, briefly, all the continent and most of the islands of Europe SE. from the Save and Danube rivers.

The languages are the Italian, French, Spanish and Portuguese, which are dialects of the Latin; the German, Flemish, Dutch, Swedish, Danish and English, which proceed from the Teutonic; the Slavonian, which reigns (though in disguise) in Poland, Russia, Bohemia, and a great part of Turkey in Europe; the Celtic, of which there are dialects in Wales, the Highlands of Scotland, Ireland, Bretagne in France, and Lapland; the modern Greek, and several others.

The general religion of Europe is the Christian, subdivided into three great sects—the Roman Catholic S., the Protestant (with the exception of Ireland) NW., and the Greek church on the SE. and E. The Mahometan, of the sect of Omar, or the Sunnites, is the established, though not the most prevalent, religion in the Turkish empire in Europe.

POLITICAL DIVISIONS OF EUROPE.

The following table exhibits at one view the names of the principal political divisions, the numbers and the religions of their population, and the names of their capital cities; the smaller German States being all classed as one under the name of "German States," and the Swiss cantons under that of Switzerland.

It may be observed that the area above is in square geographical miles, which, when reduced to square statute miles, amounts to 3,234,530; and when compared with the aggregate population gives to all Europe a distributive population of a fraction above 100 to the square statute mile.

Europe forms the northwestern portion of the eastern hemisphere, or old world, and is situate between 34° and 82° N. lat., if Spitzbergen be included, and between 24° W. and 71° E. lon., including Iceland and Novaya Zemlia. But the extremities of the continental portion are comprised within narrower limits; Cape Nord Kyn, the most northern point, being in lat. 71° 6' N.; the most southern points, Punta de Tarifa in Spain, in lat. 36°, and Cape Matapan, in the Morea, in lat. 36° 17' N.; the most western point, Cape St. Vincent, in 9° W. lon.; and the most eastern point, in the Ural mountains, near Jekaterinburg, in 60° 20' E., lon. The greatest length of the continent is in the direction of northeast and southwest from the mouth of the river Kara, on the Arctic ocean, and to St. Vincent, in Spain; and is estimated at 3,490 British miles. The greatest breadth, from Cape Matapan to Nord Kyn, is about 2,420. The superficial area is estimated to contain about 3,900,000 square miles.

Europe is at present divided into eighty-six sovereign States; but of these a great proportion belong to the Germanic or Swiss confederation, and can scarcely be considered as really independent.

Eustis, lake of the U. S., one of the sources of Yellowstone river. Lon. W. C. 31 30 W., lat. 43 N.

Eutaw Springs, small stream of S. C., flowing into the Santee river, in the NW. part of Charleston district, 60 ms. from Charleston.

Eustatia, St., one of the smallest of the Leeward islands in the W. Indies. It is a mountain in the form of a sugar loaf, whose top is hollow, and lies on the NW. of St. Christopher, and belongs to the kingdom of the Netherlands. Lon. 63 10 W., lat. 17 29 N.

Eutin, town of Holstein, with a castle, where the bishop of Lubec resides. It is 7 ms. from Lubec.

Euxine Sea.—See Black Sea.

EVANGELIC LEAGUE, or revival of the League of Smalcald. This confederation which had so much influence on European policy generally, and still more on Germany in particular, arose from the encroachments made on the Protestants by the Emperor of Germany in the Catholic interest. Frederick IV., Elector of Palatine, menaced on all sides, yet holding the highest rank amongst the Protestant princes of Germany, had sufficient influence to unite several others to his party. He found most of the Protestant princes and people already well disposed to break with the emperor from the vexations imposed on them by the Imperial Chamber at Spire, and by the Aulic Council; and thus, in 1609, towards the close of the reign of Rodolph II. was formed "The Evangelic League," into which entered the duke of Wirtemberg, Maurice, Landgrave, of Hesse Cassel, Joachim Ernest, Marquis of Anspach; Frederic, Marquis of Baden Dourlach; Christian, Prince of Anhalt; and most of the Protestant cities. Frederic IV., Elector Palatine, was declared their general and chief. The most eminent men who held the station of generalissimo of this League, were Christian IV., King of Denmark, and Gustavus Adolphus, King of Sweden; religion was the pretence, but human policy the main-spring of the Evangelic League, as was seen more distinctly by the history of the Counter League.—See Catholic League and Smalcald, League of.

Evansham, town and seat of justice, Wythe co. Va., on Reed creek, branch of Great Kenhawa, 5 ms. SW. from Christiansburg. Lat. 36 10 N. lon. W. C. 4° W.

Evans's post office, Erie co., N. Y., 268 ms. by post road W. from Albany.

Evans's Mills, post office, Jefferson co. N. Y. 168 ms. by postroad NW. from Albany.

Evansville, village and seat of justice, Vanderburg co., Inda., on the bank of the Ohio river, 5 ms. S. from Vincennes, and 24 SE. from New Harmony. N. lat. 38 1, lon. W. C. 10 30 W.

Evaux, town of France, in the dep. of Creuse and late province of Marche, 20 ms. from Mourlacon. Lon. 2 35 E., lat. 46 13 N.

Evensburg, village, Crawford co., Penn.

Everding, town of Germany, in the circle of Austria, seated on the Danube, 12 ms. W. of Lintz. Lon. 13 46 E., lat. 48 19 N.

Everett House, post office, Lewis co., Ky., 9 ms. by the post road NE. from Frankfort.

Everettsville, village, Albemarle co., Va.

Evershot, town of Eng., in Dorsetshire, 12 ms. NW. of Dorchester, and 129 W. by S. of London. Lon. 2 55 W., lat. 50 52 N.

Evesham, borough of Eng., in Worcestershire. It has a manufacture of stockings, and is seated on a gradual ascent from the Avon, which almost surrounds it, and over which is a stone bridge. It gave name to an adjacent vale, remarkable for producing plentifully of corn. It is 14 ms. SE. of Worcester, and 95 NW. of London. Lon. 1 4 W., lat. 52 4 N.—Tp., Burlington co., N. J. 8 ms. NE. of Haddonfield, and about 16 ms. E. of Philadelphia

Evian, town of Savoy, in Chablais, on the S. side of the lake of Geneva, 22 ms. NE. of Geneva. Lon. 6 50 E., lat. 46 21 N.

Evoli, town of Naples, in Principato Citeriore, 12 ms. E. of Salerno. Lon. 15 16 E., lat. 40 4 North.

Evora, fortified town of Portugal, capital of Alentejo, with a university. It is seated in a country, which, though a little unequal, is very pleasant, surrounded on all sides by mountains, and planted with large trees of divers sorts. It is 6 ms. E. by S. of Lisbon. Lon. 7 30 W., lat. 38 28 N.

Evreux, ancient town of France, seated in the department of Eure. It is the capital of the department, and its cathedral is a handsome structure. The trade consists in corn, linen, and woollen cloth, and it has a manufacture of cotton veils, and another of tick. It is seated on the river Iton, 25 ms. S. of Rouen, and 55 NW. of Paris. Lon. 1 14 E., lat. 49 1 9 N.

Ewel, town of Eng., in Surry, on a rivulet which empties itself into the Thames at Kingstons. It is 10 ms. NNE. of Dorking, and 13 SSE. of London. Lon. 15' W., lat. 51 26 N.

Ewingsville, village Cecil co., Md.

EXARCHS of Ravenna. This term, originally applied in the singular to an officer in the Greek church, immediately below the patriarch, but was made remarkable in history as applied to an officer who, after the fall of the kingdom of the Ostrogoths in Italy, and the reconquest of part of the untry by the arms of the Greek emperors resident at Constantinople, represented those emperors and resided in Ravenna. The first exarch was the Eunuch Narses, who completed the ruin of the Gothic kingdom about A. D. 563. The exarchate continued until 754, when Ravenna was taken by the emperor Pepin, king of the Lombards. This was one of the great leading events which led to the establishment of the temporal power of the bishops of Rome, as these adroit ecclesiastics sought and obtained the aid of France, and obtained, by that means, the subversion of the Lombard kingdom, and the investiture of great part of what the Lombard kings held in Italy, and were relieved from all dependence on the emperors of Constantinople. See Gibbon, vol. 6, pp. 179, 186.

Ex, river of Eng., which rises in the forest of Moor, in Somersetshire, and after being joined several little streams, leaves that co. below Dulston, and runs to Tiverton, Exeter, and Topsham, from whence it forms an estuary, which terminates in the English Channel, at Exmouth, after a course of 40 ms.

Exeter, capital city of Devonshire, Eng., situated on the river Ex, 10 ms. N. of the British Channel. It is large, populous, and wealthy, with walls, and suburbs; the circumference of the whole is about 3 ms. Ships of burden formerly came up to this city, but the navigation was almost destroyed by Henry Courtney, earl of Devon, and, though repaired, could not be restored to its former state. Its port, therefore, is at Topsham, 6 ms. below. It has 13 companies of tradesmen, a manufacture of serges and other woolen goods, extensive foreign and domestic commerce, and shares in the fisheries of Newfoundland and Greenland. It is 68 ms. SW. of Bristol, and 173 ms. by S. of London. Lon. 3 33 W., lat. 50 44 N.

Exeter, town, Penobscot co., Me. Pop. in 1820, 51.—Town, Rockingham co., N. H., on Exeter river, branch of Piscataqua, at the head of the water, 15 ms. SW. from Portsmouth, seated on the fall of the Exeter river. The village of Exeter has become the seat of numerous flourishing manufactures of woolen and cotton cloths, and of ordnance and small arms. Exeter academy is a very respectable institution, originally founded by the Hon. John Phillips, LL.D., in 1781. It is supported by the students, amounting to about 80, and by funds exceeding $80,000.—Small but important river of N. C., bounded by Broad river SW. and W., Chester N., Wateree river NE., Kershaw E., and Richland S.; length 30, mean width 23 ms.; area 690 sq. ms. Surface moderately hilly, and soil fertile. Chief town Winnisborough. Pop. in 1820, 17,174. Central lat. 34 20 N., lon. W. C. 4 0 W.—Village in Columbia co., Ga.—Village in Putnam co., Ga.—Village in Nelson co., Va.—Co. of Ohio, bounded by Franklin NW., Licking N., Perry E., Hocking S., and Pickaway SW. The greatest breadth about 24, and greatest length 30 ms., but the mean breadth would not amount to quite 19 ms.; area about 550 sq. ms. Lancaster, the county seat, lies directly on a straight line from Zanesville to Circlesville, 36 ms. SW. by W. the former, and 23 NE. by E. of the latter. "The county," as stated in the Ohio Gazetteer, "embraces, perhaps, the most elevated tract of country similar extent between the Muskingum and Scioto rivers. The land is, therefore, drier and more peculiarly adapted to the production of wheat than other kinds of grain than that of several adjaee counties." This, we may agree from personal observation, is true in part, but if taken as even general fact, would give a very erroneous idea of Fairfield county. The hilly region between the Ohio and Muskingum rivers extends, with part of river bottoms, to and beyond the Scioto. The line we have already noticed may be regarded pretty nearly a general demarcation between the hilly region and the great alluvial expanse of Central and Western Ohio. The northern and northwestern part of Fairfield belongs to the alluvion. It is truly observed, in the Ohio Gazetteer, that "the face of the country about Lancaster, in the central part of the county, presents a peculiar aspect. The land seems generally level, but abruptly precipitous, and uniform piles of rocks, producing very little timber or herbage, are occasionally interspersed in a promiscuous manner in every direction. One of these, (Mount Pleasant,) about half a mile NE. of New Lancaster, is very remarkable." This isolated mass I visited, and found an extremely interesting object. Its front, toward Lancaster, is an immense broken precipice of freestone rock of upwards of two hundred feet elevation; on the other sides, it is steep, with massive rocks projecting; but the most interesting object this hill presented were masses of transported horizontal blend rocks, lying on its upper surface, in relative position similar to where they are found in the whole alluvial sections of Central and Western Ohio.—See article New Lancaster.

As a whole, Fairfield county may be regarded divided nearly equally between the hill tract towards Ohio river and the central alluvion, and, of course, the soil must present great contrasts of surface and fertility. A lateral canal has been already constructed, along the Hockhocking valley, from the Ohio canal, in Greenfield tp., of this co., to Lancaster, and which is intended to be continued down the Hockhocking to the Ohio river, at Troy in Athens co. The completion of this work will give incalculable advantages, not only to Fairfield but to all the adjacent counties.

In latitude, Fairfield co., Ohio, extends from 33 to 39 56 N., and in longitude W. C. from 18 to 5 42 W. Pop. in 1820, 16,633; in 1824, 788; and in 1840, 31,924.

Falkland Islands, near the straits of Magellan, in S. America, discovered by Sir Richard Hawkins, in 1594. Lon. W. C. 17° E., lat. 52 S. This group which was found, and remains with but very partial exception uninhabited, bids fair to become of great importance as a British colony. The following document was extracted from an article in the National Intelligencer of Friday, May 19th, 1843, headed THE FALKLAND ISLANDS:

Lieutenant Governor Moody, empowered by a commission from the British government, landed on one of these islands on the 15th of January, 1842, and took possession of the group as a British colony. Governor Moody describes the Falkland Islands "as situated between 51° and 53' S., and 57° and 62' W. of London." The group lies distant about 400 ms. a little N. of E. from the eastern mouth of the straits of Magellan, and comprises two main and about 200 smaller islands of various extent down to mere rocks or sand banks. E., or rather NE., Falkland is at a mean of 85 miles length, greatest breadth 53 ms. West or SW. Falkland is about 80 ms. in length, with varying breadth, mean 40 ms. Area of E. Falkland 300, and of W. Falkland 2,000 sq. ms. Area of the whole group about 6,000 sq. ms. Coast excessively irregular, and indented by bays, harbors and inlets.

Soil of the Falkland group more fitted for pasture than agriculture or tillage. The summer temperature lower than in England, and weather uncertain. Winters mild. It has been described as a dreary and desolate region, which it must be, as it is almost entirely destitute of trees. Efforts are making to supply this deficiency, and from what the writer of this article has seen effected in the N. American prairies has no doubt but that forests may be formed in the Falkland Islands.

Falls Creek, small stream in Tompkins co., N. Y., remarkable for a fine cascade of 90 feet perpendicular descent. These falls or cataracts are in a chain of near 3 ms., and if taken entire amount to 350 feet; but the lower and perpendicular

Seven are habitable, each of which is a lofty mountain, divided from the others by deep and rapid currents. Some of them are deeply indented with secure harbors, all of them steep and most of them covered with tremendous precipices. They produce slate, jasper, and beautiful zeolites. The surface consists of a shallow soil of remarkable fertility, yielding plenty of barley, and fine grass for sheep. There are trees above the size of a juniper, or stunted slow-growing here; and the only quadrupeds are sheep. Vast quantities of sea fowls frequent the rocks, and the taking of them furnishes a permanent employment for the inhabitants. The exports are salted mutton, tallow, goose quills, feathers, eiderdown, knit woolen waistcoats, caps, and stockings. To the south of these islands is a considerable whirlpool.

FETFA, Turkish term, meaning the written decree of the Mufti, or High Priest.

FETICHE, FETICHISM, from the Portuguese. As we understand the terms, they mean the worship of gross animate or inanimate matter. It is usually applied to the African negroes. According to the opinion of Benjamin Constant, Fetichism was the original form of religious observance, and preceded Anthropomorphism, or worship of deified human beings. It is, however, only an expression for idolatry combined with sorcery. In both French and English, the term fetiché comes from the Portuguese feticho, sorcerer, and fetichero, sorcery. The same terms, with some slight variation of orthography, are found in Spanish heltchero, sorcerer, heltchiera, sorceress, and heltchizo, sorcery; in Italian, fattucherie and fattuchiere have the same meaning. The English terms witch and wizard convey the same ideas.

FEUD, FEUDAL, FEUDALITY. Webster says "feud is not a Teutonic or Gothic word." It may not be so, as many Latin terms were adopted by the Teutonic and Gothic nations as they settled themselves into regular communities in the Roman part of Europe, and partially, and often entirely, adopted the Roman law; but there is no rational doubt of a common root, and that root expressive of fidelity. Feud, when used for hatred, violence, quarrel, or other analogous expressions, affords only one out of the many other instances in our language, of words sounded or even spelled alike, but which differ in etymology and meaning.

Faversham, seaport of Eng., in Kent, on a creek of the Medway, much frequented by small vessels, 9 ms. W. of Canterbury, and 48 E. by S. of London. Lon. 0 55 E., lat. 51 22 N.

Ficherulolo, fortified town of Italy, in the Ferrarese, seated on the Po, 12 ms. W. of Ferrara. Lon. 11 31 E., lat. 45 6 N.

FEEF, FEOF, FEUD, Feudal System, are all evidently from the same root, and radically meaning land disposed of by a superior to an inferior person in trust for the performance of service by the latter to the former. In application the Feudal System had relation principally to military service. This political system, though much modified, is far from actually extinct; its principles were too long and too intimately blended with the laws and constitution of European society to be easily exploded. All lands in fee simple are held under, and are, in fact, feudal property.

Fieranzuolo, town of Italy, in the Parmesan, 10 ms. SE. of Placentia. Lon. 9 44 E., lat. 44 59 N.

Finneysville, village, Rutland co., Vt., by post road 97 ms. SSW. from Montpelier.

FINNS, a people of Eastern and Northern Europe. This remarkable family, the Jotnar of Snorr Sturleson, the Fenni of Tacitus, Zoumi of Strabo Skrithfenni of Procopius, and the Cwenas and Finnas mentioned by the Norwegian navigator Ohter, to King Alfred. "It is the Finnish, together with Esthonian and the Livonian, that we may consider as the most distinct class of all the other languages of the globe, or at least of all those of Europe." The Finnic family of languages is generically, by some authors called the Ouralian subdivided specifically into Finnish proper, Lapponic, Tcheremiss, Permiac, Hungarian, or Madgiar, &c. These are included under one general term, Tchoudes, by the Russians. All the Finnic nations give to the countries they inhabit the name Suomen. "The HUNS were not Slavonians," states Malta Brun, and suggests the probability that they were "a branch of the Finns or Tchoudes."

Flood's, post office, Buckingham co., Va., 13 ms. SW. from W. C., and 78 W. from Richmond.

Florence, capital of the duchy of Tuscany, and one of the finest cities of Italy. It is surrounded on all sides, but one with high hills, which rise insensibly, and at last join the lofty mountains called, the Appennines. Towards Pisa there is a vast plain of 40 ms. in length, which is so filled with villages and pleasure houses, that they seem to be a continuation of the suburbs of the city. Independent of the churches and palaces of Florence, most of which are very magnificent, the architecture of the houses in general is in good taste and the streets are remarkably clean, and paved with large broad stones chiseled, so as to prevent the horses from sliding. The city is divided into two unequal parts by the river Arno, over which there are no less than four bridges, in sight of each other. Florence is a place of some strength, and contains an archbishop's see and a university. The number of inhabitants is calculated at 80,000. Florence is 45 ms. S. of Bologna, and 125 NW. of Rome. Lon. 11 15 E., lat. 43 46 N.

Florence, town, Oneida co., 18 ms. NW. from Rome. Pop. 1820, 1,259.—Village, Huron co., Ohio, by post road 131 ms. NNE. from Columbus. The village is situated in the NE. part of the co., 13 ms. NE. of Norwalk, the county seat and about 20 ms. westward of Elyria.—Village and seat of justice, Lauderdale co., Ala., at the mouth of Cyprus creek, lower extremity of the Muscle shoals, in Tenn., 120 ms. SW. from Murfreesborough, and 80 W. from Huntsville. Lat. 34 47 N., lon. W. C. 10 46 W.

Florent, St., town of France, in the department of Maine and Loire, and late province of Anjou. It lately had a rich Benedictine abbey. It is seated on the Loire, 20 ms. WSW. of Angers. Lon. 56' W., lat. 47 34 N.

Florentin, St., town of France in the department of Yonne, situated at the confluence of the Armance and Armancon, 15 ms. NE. of Auxerre and 80 SE. of Paris. Lon. 3 55 E., lat. 48 1 N.

Florentino, one of the three provinces of Tuscany, bounded on the W. by the republic of Lucca and the Modenese, on the N. by the Appennines, on the E. by the duchy of Urbino, and on the S. by the Siennese. It is a well watered province, and very fertile. Florence is the capital.

Flores, fertile island, one of the Azores, so called from the abundance of flowers found upon it. Lon. 31° W., lat. 39 34 N.

Florida, territory of the United States, forming the southeastern political division of the Union. Physically, Florida is divided into two sections: to the SE. the peninsula, and NW. a narrow strip along the Gulf of Mexico, from the Suwanee to the Perdido river. Taken as a whole, Florida is bounded E. by the Atlantic ocean, SW. by the Gulf of Mexico, NW. by the State of Alabama, and N. by Georgia. Length of the peninsular part, from St. Mary's river, separating it from Ga., 600 ms. to Florida point. The broadest part of the peninsula, from Cape Canaveral to St. Clement's island, about 160 ms.; mean breadth, not differing much from 100 ms., gives area 42,000 sq. is. The mean length of West Florida about 260 is., breadth varying from 40 to 100 ms., mean breadth fully estimated at 60 ms., and area 15,600. From the preceding data, the area of all Florida amounts to 57,600 sq. ms. Geographically, this territory lies between 25° and 31° of N. lat., and between 2 50 and 10 45 W. of W. C.

Though no part of Florida is even very hilly, the surface is far from uniformly level. The southern part of the peninsula is flat and marshy, generally, but the surface rises gradually, advancing northwards, and above N. lat. 30°, from the Atlantic ocean to the Perdido, much of the country is beautifully varied by hill and dale. The whole of Florida being the tropical region of the United States, and so much of it almost insular, and all within the influences of sea air, the climate is mild and healthful. The northern part is in a peculiar manner supplied with rivers, setting out upon the Atlantic ocean, come in succession, and, flowing into the Atlantic ocean, St. Mary's and St. John's, and having their efflux into the Gulf of Mexico, Suwanee, Oscilla, Ockleconee, Appalachicola, Chickasawhatche, Yellow Water, Escambia, and Perdido.

 Having an entire outline of 1,490 ms. Area 57,600 sq. ms., 36,480,000 acres, between lat. 25° and 31° N. Extending through 6° of lat., considerable diversity of seasons must be experienced in Florida; but, from the uniformity of the general surface, the whole extent exhibits none of those rapid transitions of seasons which can only arise from great inequality of relative elevation. The interior of the country remains but imperfectly known. As far, however, as correct information has been received, the greatest part of this large peninsula is composed of a very inferior soil, with exceptions found near and along the streams. The vegetable productions are numerous and important. Amongst the valuable cultivated plants may be enumerated cotton, sugar cane, rice, indigo, tobacco, Indian corn, olive tree, peach, orange, lime, and fig tree. It remains undetermined whether or not the coffee plant can be cultivated in Florida.

Florida was discovered in 1512 by John Ponce de Leon, and named Florida from having been discovered on Palm Sunday, "Pasqua Florida." The first civilized colony in this country was planted by the French, in 1562, under Francis Ribault. The French colony was surprised in 1565, and the colonists murdered by the Spaniards. St. Augustine was soon after founded, and the Spaniards remained undisturbed possessors until 1666, when St. Augustine was taken and plundered by an English squadron under John Davis. Pensacola was founded by Don Andre de la Riola, in 1699. The country was frequently attacked by the French and English, but continued a Spanish province until 1763, when it was ceded to Great Britain. In 1783 it was again receded to Spain. On the 22d February, 1819, by the treaty of Washington, Florida was ceded by Spain to the United States. This treaty was, on the 24th October, 1820, ratified by the Cortes and King of Spain, and on February 22, 1821, ratified by the Congress of the United States. Florida is now a territory of the United States.

Fox river. This fine and very important stream rises to the NW. of Green Bay, interlocks with the sources of the Wisconsin. Both streams in the higher part of their course, flow nearly upwards of 200 ms.; they then approach within 1½ m. of each other, and thence turn, Wisconsin SW., and Fox river NE. The passage from the Fox to Wisconsin is one of the singular situations which the interior of America affords, where nature seems to have made preparation for the operations of human intercourse. The intervening ground is level prairie, over which, at time of high flood, loaded canoes are easily navigated. Fox river flows by a gentle course as far as the narrows, through a range of highland, passing W., off Lake Michigan. Below this range it passes into Winnebago lake, from which it again issues by a course nearly N. to Green Bay, which it enters at Fort Brown. The comparative course of Fox river is about 300 miles.

The foregoing tabular view of France was taken from Black's Atlas, 1841, and gives, no doubt, the most recent and correct statistical view of that kingdom yet published in the United States.

Progression, 170 per cent. in 142 years.

The population of France has not only increased within the last century, but the comparative increment has also increased. During the eighteenth century, the mean annual increase on 1,000,000 was 3,199; since 1800, a similar increase amounted to 5,962, according to the best data, and the aggregate annual increase 190,000.

Before the revolution of 1789, France was divided into 33 governments or provinces, of very unequal extent, which were subdivided into generalities and sub-delegations. It is now divided into 86 departments or prefectures, named mostly after their principal river, mountain, or some other natural feature. These departments are divided into 363 sub-prefectures or arrondissements; these into 2,845 cantons, and these into 38,623 communes. Each department is under the charge of a prefect, each arrondissement of a sub-prefect, and each commune of a maire, besides other officers of various rank and duties.

France, Isle of, or Mauritius, island in the Indian ocean, 200 leagues E. of Madagascar. It was early discovered by the Portuguese. After them the Dutch settled on the SE. shore, and gave it the name of Mauritius, in honor of prince Maurice, their stadtholder; but they abandoned it on their acquisition of the Cape of Good Hope. It then remained uninhabited till the French landed there in 1720. This island is about 45 leagues in circumference. The climate is healthy, but the soil not very fertile. There are many mountains, which produce the best ebony in the world. The valleys are well watered with rivers, and are made very productive by cultivation, of which indigo is the principal object. The town and harbor are called Port Louis, and are strongly fortified; the town is large, and covers a great deal of ground. But in the hurricane months the harbor cannot afford shelter for more than eight vessels. Here are large storehouses, and every thing necessary for the equipment of fleets. The number of inhabitants on the island, exclusive of the military, is 8,000 whites and 12,000 blacks. Lon. 57 28 E., lat. 20 9 S.

Frances, port of Colombia, in Venezuela, near Cape Codera.—See Codera, in the Addenda.

Francestown, town and tp., Hillsborough co., N. H., 15 ms. NW. of Amherst, and about 55 W. of Portsmouth. Pop. in 1820, 1,479.

Franche Comte, late province of France, bounded on the N. by Lorraine, on the E. by Alsace and Switzerland, on the W. by Burgundy, and on the S. by Bresse. It is 126 ms. in length and 80 in breadth, and abounds in corn, wine, cattle, horse, mines of iron, copper, and lead. It was conquered by France in 1674, and ceded to it by the treaty of Nimeguen in 1678. It now comprehends the three departments of Doubs, Jura, and Upper Saone.

Franchemont, town of Germany, in the bishopric of Liege, 12 ms. SE. of Liege.

Francis, village of St. Genevieve co., Mo.

Francisburg, village, Union co., Ky., by post road 40 ms. SW. by W. from Frankfort.

Francisco, Rio, large river of Brasil, rises in the Capitania general of Minæs Geræs, lat. 19 S. and flowing a little E. of N., nearly parallel to the Atlantic coast, to lat. 14° S. It thence gradually curves to NE., E. and SE. by E., falls into the Atlantic at lat. 11° S., after an entire comparative course of upwards of 1,000 ms.

François, River, U. C., runs SW. from Lake Nipissing into Lake Huron. It has several portages; that nearest to Lake Nipissing is called Portage de Trois Chaudiers; in length about half mile.

François, village, Wayne co., Mo.

François, Cape, fine town in the N. part of the island of St. Domingo, belonging to the French who often call it the Cape, by way of eminence. It was almost ruined by the dreadful commotion which attended the French revolution. Lon. W. C. 4 42 E., lat. 19 46 N.

Franconia, former circle of Germany, bounded on the N. by the circle of Upper Saxony, on the E. by that of Bavaria, on the S. by that of Silesia, and on the W. by the circles of the Rhine. The middle is fertile in corn, wine, and fruits, but the borders are full of woods and barren mountains. The Franks, who conquered France, came from this province, and gave the name to the kingdom.—Town, Grafton co., N. H., on the waters of Amonoosuck river, 15 ms. NE. from Haverhill. The tp. is remarkable for the abundance and excellence of its iron ores. There are two companies engaged in the manufacture of iron on a large scale; the N. H. Iron Factory Company, and the Haverhill and Franconia Company. The former manufacture weekly from 12 to 15 tons of iron and steel, and the latter, though on a smaller scale, do extensive business; the whole forming one of the most extensive establishments of the kind in the U. S.—Tp., Montgomery co., Penn., on the S. side of the NE. branch of Perquimong creek. Pop. in 1820, 848.

Franker, or Franker, town of the kingdom of the Netherlands, in Friesland, with an university 7 ms. W. of Lewarden. Lon. 5 33 E., lat. 5 11 N.

Frankendal, town of Germany, in the palatinate of the Rhine, near the river Rhine, 7 ms. S. of Worms. Lon. 8 29 E., lat. 49 25 N.

Frankenstein, town of Germany, in the palatinate of the Rhine. Lon. 7 55 E., lat. 49 18 N.

Frankford, tp. of Sussex co., N. J., 5 ms. N. from Newtown. Pop. in 1810, 2,008.—Town and borough, Philadelphia co., 5 ms. NE. from the centre of Philadelphia. The Friends Asylum for the Insane is about a mile from this borough.

op. in 1820, 1,405.—Village, Greenbrier co., Va., 74 ms. NNW. from Christiansburg, and 313 $\frac{1}{2}$ from Richmond.—Hampshire co., Va.—see Frankfort, Morgan co., Va.

Frankfort on the Maine, ancient and free imperial city of Germany, in the circle of Franconia, in which the emperor is elected. All religions are tolerated at Frankfort, under certain restrictions; but Lutheranism is the established faith. It is seated on the river Maine, 15 ms. NE. of Erfurt, and 350 W. by N. of Vienna. Lon. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$ E., lat. 49 55 N.

Frankfort on the Oder, flourishing city of Germany, in the middle marche of Brandenburg, formerly imperial, but now subject to the king of Prussia. It is remarkable for three great fairs and its university. It is 45 ms. SE. of Berlin, and 78 S. of Stetin. Lon. 14 39 E., lat. 52 3 N.

Frankfort, town, Hancock co., Maine, on the right bank of Penobscot river. At this place winery navigation terminates, 26 ms. N. from Castine. Pop. in 1820, 2,129.—Town, Herkimer co., N. Y. Pop. in 1820, 1,685.—Town, Frankfort co., Ky., on the right bank of the Kentucky river. It is the capital of the State, and contains, besides the ordinary buildings necessary for legislative purposes, a co. court-house, penitentiary, an academy, theatre, &c. At seasons of high waters, boats of 300 tons are navigated to this town and to New Frankfort, a flourishing village opposite. The progressive pop. of this town is shown in the annexed table:

Franklin, village, Franklin co., Vt., by the post road 45 ms. NW. from Montpelier.—Co., Vt., bounded N. by Lower Canada, E. by Orleans co., Vt., S. by Chittenden, and W. by Lake Champlain; length 30, mean width 27, area 810 sq. ms. The eastern part mountainous, hilly in the central and western sections; soil varied in quality, but on the streams in many places highly fertile. Chief town St. Albans. Pop. in 1820, 17,192; and in 1840, 24,531. Central lat. 44 48 N., lon. W. C. 4 12 E.—Co., Mass., on both sides of Connecticut river, bounded N. by Windham co., Vt., and Cheshire co., N. H., E. by Worcester co., Mass., S. by Hampshire, and W. by Berkshire; length 36 ms., mean width 18, area about 650 sq. ms. Surface highly and elegantly variegated. Connecticut river divides the co. into two nearly equal portions, and each of these sections is again divided by the two fine little rivers, Miller's to the E., and Deerfield to the W. Detached though not very elevated mountains decorate the various parts. The soil, especially near the streams, is highly productive in grain, fruits, and meadow grasses. Chief town Greenfield. Pop. 1820, 29,268, and in 1840, 28,812. Central lat. 42 35 N., lon. W. C. 4 25 E.—Town, Norfolk co., Mass., 10 ms. SW. from Dedham.—Town, New London co., Ct., on the right side of Shetucket, 5 ms. above Norwich.—Co., N. Y., bounded by Lower Canada N., by Clinton co., N. Y., E., by Essex SE., by Hamilton S., and by St. Lawrence W.; length 60 ms., mean width 27 $\frac{3}{4}$, area 1,665 sq. ms. Surface mountainous towards the S., in the central and northern parts level and swampy, interspersed with hills and with some spots of good land. Chief town Melrose. Pop. 1820, 4,439, and in 1840, 16,518. Central lat. 44 35 N., lon. W. C. 2 45 E.—Town Delaware co., N. Y., on Oleout creek and Susquehanna river, 15 ms. W. from Delhi. Pop. in 1820, 2,481.—Tp., Somerset co., N. J. Pop. 1820, 3,071.—Tp., Gloucester co., N. J.—Tp., Bergen co., N. J. Pop. 1820, 2,968.

Franklin, co., Pa., bounded S. by Washington co., Md., W. by Bedford, NW. by Huntingdon, N. by Mifflin, NE. by Perry and Cumberland, and E. by Adams; length 30 ms., mean width 25, area 756 sq. ms. The surface of this co. is highly diversified by mountains, hills, and valleys. It is limited by mountains on two sides; on the W. and N. margin extend the Cove mountain, Tuscarora, and North mountains, and on the SE. the S. mountain, with the truly fine valley of the Conococheague and Conedogwinet intervening. Those two large creeks form nearly a boundary between the limestone and slate formations, leaving the latter to the NW., and the former to the SE. The soil of those great rock formations differs essentially, the limestone, in the present state of agricultural science, being much the most productive in the growth of valuable cultivated vegetables. Franklin co. produces, as staples, grain, flour, whiskey, apples, cider, live stock, and salted provisions. Its commercial outlet, Baltimore. Chief town Chambersburg. Pop. 1820, 31,192, and in 1840, 37,793. Central lat. 39 55 N., lon. W. C. 40' West.

Franklin, town and seat of justice, Venango county, Pennsylvania, on the right bank of French creek and Alleghany river, at their junction, about 70 miles north from Pittsburg. Lat. 41 22 N., lon. W. C. 2 50 W.—Tp., Adams co., Pa., in the forks of Marsh creek, on both sides of the road from Gettysburg to Chambersburg, 7 or 8 ms. from the former.—Tp., York co., Pa., on the head waters of Bermudian creek, branch of Conewago, between the two roads from Little York to Carlisle, 20 ms. from the former.—Tp., in the northern part of Huntingdon co., Pa., between Little Juniata and Spruce creek, 14 ms. NW. from Huntingdon.—Tp., Fayette co., Pa., between Youghiogany river and Redstone creek, and between Washington and Dunbar, commencing 5 ms. N. from Uniontown.—Tp., Westmoreland co., Pa., extending from the head branch of Poketon's creek, falling into Alleghany river, to the road from Greensburg to Pittsburg, across the head waters of the northern branch of Turtle creek. Marysville, near its centre, 11 ms. NW. from Greensburg.—Tp., Greene co., Pa., on the S. fork of Ten Mile creek; Waynesburg, the seat of justice for the co., is in this tp.—Co., Va., bounded by Pittsylvania E. part of Henry SE., part of Henry and Patrick S., the Blue Ridge or Montgomery W., Botetourt N., and Bedford NE.; length 28 ms., mean width 24, area about 670 sq. ms. Although bounded on two sides by mountains, this co. is rather waving than hilly. Soil generally fertile. Staples, grain, flour, and tobacco. Chief town Rocky Mount. Pop. 1820, 12,017, and in 1840, 15,832. Central lat. 36 50 N., lon. W. C. 2 45 west.—Village, Pendleton co., Va., on the middle fork of the S. branch of Potomac, 40 ms. SW. from Moorfields, and 80 ms. NW. from Staunton.—Village, Russel co., Va., on Cedar creek, branch of Chinch river, 17 ms. N. from Abingdon.—Co., N. C., bounded SW. by Washington, Granville NW., Warren NE., and Nash SE.; length 26 ms., mean width 20, area 540 sq. ms.; surface moderately hilly; soil in part fertile, though generally rather unproductive between the streams. It is drained by various branches of Tar river. Chief town Lewisburg. Pop. 1820, 9,741, and in 1840, 10,980. Central lat. 36° N., lon. W. C. 1 20 W.—Village, Haywood co., N. C., by post road 313 ms. W. from Raleigh.—Co., Ga., bounded by Elbert and Madison E., Jackson SW., Habersham NW., and Tugaloo river, or S. C., NE.; length 36 ms., mean width 23, area about 940 sq. ms. Surface broken, and soil varied. Chief town Carnesville. Pop. 1820, 9,040, and in 1840, 9,886. Central lat. 34 23 N., lon. W. C. 6 30 W.

Franklin, co., Ala., bounded N. by Tennessee river, E. by Lawrence, S. by Marion, and W. by the territory of the Chickasaws; length 32 ms., mean width 21 ms., area 670 sq. ms. Surface moderately hilly, and soil fertile. Chief town Brookville. Pop. in 1820, 10,763; and in 1840, 13,349. Central lat. 39 25 N., lon. W. C. 13 W.—Village, Johnson co., Ia., about 40 ms. from Indianapolis.—Co., Ill., bounded by Johnson and Union S., Jackson and Randolph W. Jefferson N., White and Gallatin E.; length 24 ms., width 24, area 934 sq. ms. Surface generally level, and soil productive. It is principally drained by the higher waters of Muddy river. Pop. in 1820, 1,763; and in 1840, 3,682. Central latitude 37 50 N., longitude Washington co. 11 50 W.—Town and seat of justice, Howes county, Missouri, on the left bank of Missouri river, 180 ms. by land above St. Louis.—Co., Mo., bounded N. by Missouri river, E. by St. Louis and Jefferson, S. by Washington, and W. by Wayne; length 33 ms., mean width 30, area 9 sq. ms. That part of this co. adjacent to the Missouri river rather level, and interspersed with prairies. The southern part, drained by the Merriam river, hilly, broken, and in great part sterile. Much of the soil near the Missouri excellent. Chief town, Rogerstown. Pop. in 1820, 2,379. Central lat. 38 10 N., lon. W. C. 13 40 W.—Po office, Concordia parish, La., by post road, 1 ms. from New Orleans.—Co., O., bounded W. by Madison, Union NW., Delaware N., Licking NE., Fairfield SE., and Pickaway S. It is nearly a square of 23 ms. each side; area 530 sq. ms. Darby creek flows along the western border, but the body of the co. is drained by the Scioto, Wh one, Big Walnut, and other confluent of the main Scioto. The slope is almost directly S., and surface level, much of it low and wet; part, indeed, rising into benches, but nearly, if not the whole, comprised of alluvion or mixed sand, pebbles, and clay. There are within the county very fertile tracts, but in general the land suits better for grazing than farming. Columbus, beside being the seat of the State Government, is the county seat of Franklin, and very near the centre of the county. In 1820, it may be interesting to observe that 40° N. and 6° W. of W. C. intersect about 5 ms. NW. from Columbus. Pop. in 1820, 10,300; in 1830, 17,756; and in 1840, 25,049.—Tp., Ross co., Va., on the road from Chillicothe to Portsmouth.

Franklin Furnace and post office, in Greene co., southeastern angle of Sciota co., 16 ms. above and southeastward of Portsmouth.

Franklin Square, village, Columbiana co., O., or 7 ms. N. of New Lisbon.

Franklin Mills, post office, Portage co., O., 180 yds. NE. from Columbus, and 4 or 5 ms. westward of Ravenna.

Franklinton, village, Franklin co., O., 1 m. W. of Columbus, and on both sides of the national road. The Scioto river is crossed between the two places by one of the most substantial and elegant bridges in the U. States. The ground on which Franklinton stands is considerably lower, and much more flat than is the site of Columbus; and that is the case with the land along the western side of Scioto river some distance above and below both towns. Pop. in 1830, 332.

Franklinville, village, Cattaraugus co., N. Y., on post road 289 ms. SW. by W. from Albany.

Frankstown-branch, river, Penn.; the NW. branch of Juniata rises in Bedford co., and flowing about 20 ms. enters Huntingdon co., turns E. and SE. joins Raystown branch 2 ms. below the mouth of Huntingdon, and forms the Juniata.

Frankstown, tp., Huntingdon county, Pa., on Frankstown river, 20 ms. SW. by W. from Huntingdon. Pop. in 1820, 1,297, exclusive of Hollaysburg and Frankstown.—Village, Huntingdon co., Pa., on the left bank of Frankstown river, and 20 ms. nearly W. from Huntingdon. Pop. in 1820, 101.

Frauenfeld, town of Switzerland, capital of the Appenzel Aargau. It is seated on an eminence, and was the place where, since 1712, the deputies of the Swiss cantons held their general diet. Lon. 8 56 E., lat. 47 35 N.

Fraustadt, town of Silesia, 20 miles NW. of Glogow. Lon. 16 3 E., lat. 51 48 N.

Frazersburg, small town of Scot., in Aberdeenshire, on the German ocean, with a tolerable harbor. It is seated close by a promontory called Kindred's Head, on which is a light-house, 40 ms. N. of Aberdeen. Lon. 1 37 W., lat. 57 35 N.

Fradenburg, town of Westphalia, 50 ms. W. of Paderborn. Lon. 8 16 E., lat. 51 10 N.

Frederica, village, Kent co., Del., 12 ms. E. from Dover. Pop. in 1820, 250.—Village, on Simon's island, Glynn co., Ga., at the mouth of the Altamaha river.

Frederick, tp., Montgomery co., Pa., on the north side of Perkiomen, 9 ms. NE. from Pottsville. Pop. in 1820, 927.—Post office, Milton, in the northwestern part of Trumbull co., on the road from Canton to Warren, 20 ms. NW. of the former, and about 35 NE. of the latter place.

—Co. of Md., bounded by Adams co., Pa., N.; Carroll co., Md., E.; Montgomery co., Md., SE.; Potomac river separating it from Loudon co., Va., SW.; and Washington co., Md., W.; length, in a very near due N. direction, 33 ms. from the mouth of Monocacy river to the Pa. line; mean breadth 18, and area 594 sq. ms. The slope of this county is to the S., and in that direction traversed in all its length by the Monocacy river and Catoctin mountain. The Catoctin creek, which rises in it also from very nearly S. Chief town, city of Frederick. Carroll co. was, subsequent to 1820, formed in part from Frederick, which explains the apparent diminution of population; aggregate population of Frederick county in 1820, being 40,450; and in 1840, 36,405.
