MACMILLAN'S Series of Foreign School Classics.

Edited by G. EUGÈNE FASNACHT, Author of the "Progressive French Course," "Progressive German Course," &c.

Messrs. Macmillan & Co. have in preparation a series of FOREIGN CLASSICS, edited for the use of Schools on a plan and scale similar to that of their series of ELEMENTARY CLASSICS. Select works of the best foreign Authors will be issued, with suitable Notes and Introductions based on the latest researches of French and German scholars.

The work will be put into the hands of Editors actually engaged in teaching, and familiar with the needs of students, so that the books may be real aids to overcoming the difficulties of the language and rightly appreciating the literature. It is now being felt that French and German, if taught on the same strict scientific principles as Greek and Latin, are of hardly less value as an educational instrument than the Classical Languages. M. Fasnacht's own books have had no small share in producing the recognition of this fact, and the Publishers therefore feel confident that a series of FOREIGN CLASSICS, prepared under his guidance, will adequately meet the needs of the present time.

The English Citizen:

A Series of Short Books on

HIS RIGHTS AND RESPONSIBILITIES.

THIS series is intended to meet the demand for accessible information on the ordinary conditions, and the current terms, of our political life. Ignorance of these not only takes from the study of history the interest which comes from a contact with practical politics, but, still worse, it unfits men for their place as intelligent citizens. With women this ignorance frequently remains throughout life: and even with intelligent men its place is taken only by a knowledge gained in a haphazard way. The affairs of business, contact with other men, the reading of newspapers, the hearing of political speeches, may give a partial acquaintance with such matters, or at least stimulate curiosity as to special points. But such partial acquaintance with the most important facts of life is not satisfactory, although it is all that the majority of men find within their reach.

There is a large and important class who possess political privileges, and who, in the exercise of these privileges, incur arduous labour, devise intricate associations, and impose upon themselves a minutely organised discipline. They, it is hoped, may find in these books information more accessible, more systematic, and perhaps more reliable, than that which is to be gained from the occasional harangues of statesmen, or from the necessarily one-sided disquisitions of the press. They must be aware that it is on these harangues and on these disquisitions that their judgment, as a jury of citizens exercising the most august of functions, is sought: and no jury should be satisfied to learn facts only as taught them by the mouth of an advocate, however able and however learned he may be.

The series will deal with the details of the machinery whereby our Constitution works, and the broad lines upon which it has been constructed. The volumes in it will treat of the course of legislation: of the agencies by which civil and criminal justice are administered, whether imperial or local: of the relations between the greater system of the imperial government and the subdivisions by which local self-government is preserved alongside of it: of the electoral body and its functions and constitution and development: of the great scheme of national income and its disbursement: of state interference with the citizen in his training, in his labour, in his trafficking, and in his home: and of the dealings of the state with that part of property which is, perforce, political—the land; of the relation between state and church which bulks so largely in our history and is entwined so closely with our present organization; and lastly of those relations of the state that are other than domestic.

In dealing with these questions the aim will be not to give mere compendia of technical information, but to sum up as shortly and as clearly as possible the leading points, and to arrange these so as to show their relation to one another and their general bearing on the life and the duties of the citizen. The books are not intended to interpret disputed points in Acts of Parliament, nor to refer in detail to clauses or sections of those Acts; but to select and sum up the salient features of any branch of legislation, so as to place the ordinary citizen in possession of the main points of the law. They are intended further to show how such legislation arose, and (without going into minute historical or antiquarian details) to show how it has been the outcome of our history, how circumstances have led up to it, and what is its significance as affecting the relation between the individual and the state. Fresh light may often be thrown upon the subject by examining the resemblance, or contrast, between our arrangements and those existing elsewhere.

The following are the titles of the volumes:—

1. CENTRAL GOVERNMENT. H. D. TRAILL, D.C.L., late Fellow of St. John's College, Oxford. [Ready.]

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO. have in preparation a series of FOREIGN CLASSICS, edited for the use of Schools on a plan and scale similar to that of their series of ELEMENTARY CLASSICS. Select works of the best foreign Authors will be issued, with suitable Notes and Introductions based on the latest researches of French and German scholars.

The work will be put into the hands of Editors actually engaged in teaching, and familiar with the needs of students, so that the books may be real aids to overcoming the difficulties of the language and rightly appreciating the literature. It is now being felt that French and German, if taught on the same strict scientific principles as Greek and Latin, are of hardly less value as an educational instrument than the Classical Languages. M. Fasnacht's own books have had no small share in producing the recognition of this fact, and the Publishers therefore feel confident that a series of FOREIGN CLASSICS, prepared under his guidance, will adequately meet the needs of the present time.
