The aim of this department is: (1) To help the student to a sympathetic appreciation of the value of the school as a social institution in human progress; (2) To help the student to a thorough knowledge of the best modern practice of the teaching profession and of the science upon which such practice is based. Emphasis is placed upon the present educational needs of North Carolina.

In addition to a theoretical study of the subject of education the college maintains a Practice and Observation School for teachers.

This school serves the same purpose in the Department of Education as the laboratory in the Science Department Here is afforded an opportunity for: the study of the child; observation of correct methods of teaching; and experience in actual teaching. In this school theories are given an actual test. Members of the Senior class are required to do a definite amount of work throughout the year under the personal supervision of teachers. In this way students have not only the means of demonstrating their native ability to plan and conduct recitations, but also confidence and skill in classroom management and in carrying out the various details of school work.
