would operate to deprive defendant of his property without due process of law. A judgment rendered without either personal service or a valid levy is a mere nullity.[19]

(III) Effect of Failure to Give Notice—(A) As Rendering Proceedings Erroneous. Failure to give the prescribed notice is a ground for abating the writ,[20] dismissing the suit,[21] or reversing[22] or setting aside in direct proceedings[23] the judgment rendered therein.

(B) As Rendering Judgment Void. As to whether a judgment rendered without the required notice to defendant, where there has been a valid seizure of property, is void or merely voidable, the cases are in conflict. In some jurisdictions it has been held that the court acquires jurisdiction over the property by a valid levy thereupon, and its judgment in regard thereto is binding until reversed on appeal or set aside in some direct proceeding for that purpose.[24] But the

A simulated levy on property to which defendant has no claim of right will not have the effect of constructive notice, so as to authorize the court to render judgment. Grier v. Campbell, 21 Ala. 327.

The summoning of a garnishee indebted to defendant constitutes a seizure of property sufficient to operate as constructive notice (Thompson v. Allen, 4 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 184); but where the service of an original attachment is only made by the summons of a garnishee, it is erroneous to render judgment against defendant in attachment, until the garnishee has admitted a debt due or property in his hands, or until a final judgment has been rendered against him for his default (Bratton v. McGlothlen, 20 Ala. 146).

A defect in the original notice returned not found in a proceeding in attachment in a justice's court goes only to the jurisdiction weight of authority, if not of reason, is to the effect that the jurisdiction acquired by the seizure of the property is not to pass absolutely upon the rights of the parties but only to pass upon such rights after defendant has been given an opportunity to appear and defend; and where this view is maintained, a judgment rendered without the notice prescribed by law against a defendant who has not appeared is deemed absolutely void and open to collateral attack.[25]

b. To Authorize Personal Judgment. To authorize a judgment binding on defendant's person, where he has not appeared, it is essential that he shall have been served personally or by some mode equivalent to personal service.[26]

2. Mode and Sufficiency. Questions relating to the mode and sufficiency of service on defendant in attachment proceedings are as a rule governed by the of the person and does not prevent the court from rendering judgment against the property. Johnson v. Dodge, 19 Iowa 106.

Cases criticized.— The cases of Cooper v. Reynolds, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 308, 19 L. ed. 931; Beech v. Abbott, 6 Vt. 586; and Williams v. Stewart, 3 Wis. 773, have been frequently relied on as sustaining this doctrine, but a study of these decisions fails to show such a holding. In regard to the first-named case, the supreme court of Virginia in Dorr v. Rohr, 82 Va. 359, 365, 3 Am. St. Rep. 106, said: "The case of Cooper v. Reynolds, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 308, 19 L. ed. 931, has no application to the question before us. It was not decided in that case that a judgment where there is an attachment, a seizure of the res, is good, though no other notice be given, for there the attachment was issued and notice was published 'according to law;' but the point decided was, that a judgment rendered in attachment proceedings which are irregular merely cannot be impeached collaterally." But compare Voorhees v. Jackson, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 449, 9 L. ed. 490. In Beech v. Abbott, 6 Vt. 586, the proceedings appear to have been in accordance with the statutory requirements and the point decided was that a judgment rendered without actual notice to defendant was not void as being contrary to natural justice. In Williams v. Stewart, 3 Wis. 773, a defective publication was made and defendant thereafter appeared in the proceeding.

same principles that control service of process in other proceedings, and consequently will be treated elsewhere in this work.[27]

B. Appearance — 1. RIGHT TO APPEAR. Where special bail was required and attachment was regarded as original process to enforce appearance, defendant in attachment could not plead until he had filed such bail,[28] and where the statute required the replevy of property taken under an attachment to enforce appearance the execution of the replevy bond was a condition to the right to plead.[29] Where the practice of requiring bail no longer exists, or the attachment is not regarded as the leading process, defendant may appear and defend the action without giving bond or other security to discharge the attachment.[30] The time within which defendant may appear is a matter depending for the most part upon the terms of the statutes.[31]

2. WHAT CONSTITUTES — a. In General. The same acts will ordinarily constitute an appearance in actions begun or aided by attachment as in other suits.[32]

Waiver.— If, however, plaintiff permitted defendant to appear and plead without requiring special bail, and afterward replied to the plea or joined issue thereupon, he waived the objection. Callender v. Duncan, 2 Bailey (S. C.) 454.

Plea in abatement without special bail.— In Abbott v. Warriner, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 573, it was held that under the statute defendant in attachment must put in special bail in order to enable him to plead in bar, but that this requirement did not exist as a condition to pleading in abatement.

Appearance for defendant by third person. — In Georgia, under a statute of 1816, when an attachment issued against an absent person, any one was authorized to act as his friend, to give good special bail, and to plead and defend the suit by himself or attorney. Smith v. Gettinger, 3 Ga. 140. Special bail and a plea to the action ought to be received in behalf of defendant in an attachment issued against him as an absconding debtor, notwithstanding he did not, when called, appear in person or by attorney, but another appeared and offered himself as special bail to replevy the attached effects. Defendant need not ask leave of the court to defend, nor can the court impose terms at any stage of the case, when such leave would not have been required or terms imposed had the suit been commenced by ordinary summons personally served. Thompson v. Thomas, 11 Mich. 274.

31. At any time before final judgment.— In Georgia defendant may appear and defend at any time before final judgment is rendered against him. Cooley v. Abbey, 111 Ga. 439, 36 S. E. 786; Richmond, etc., R. Co. v. Mitchell, 95 Ga. 78, 22 S. E. 124; Kimball v. Nicol, 58 Ga. 175.

Judgment must be final.—Within the statute authorizing defendant in foreign attachment to cause an appearance to be entered for him "before judgment obtained," the judgment must be final; hence defendant may cause an appearance to be entered for him after judgment entered for default of appearance and the issue of a writ of inquiry, since the judgment is not final and complete till the writ is executed. Manuel v. Mississippi, etc., R. Co., 2 Miles (Pa.) 398.

Time for appearance and answer after judicial attachment.—When a citation for personal service has been returned "not found" and a judicial attachment has issued as a substitute therefor, defendant has the same time for appearance and answer after the judicial attachment as he would after personal service. Gray v. Smith, 17 Tex. 389.

Where notice by publication.— The publication of notice in attachment being intended as a substitute for personal service, defendant has the same time in which to serve notice of retainer and to plead after the filing of the affidavit of such publication as he has after the return of a writ personally served. b. Appearance to Contest Attachment. As a general rule defendant in attachment may appear specially for the purpose of contesting the attachment proceedings without giving the court jurisdiction over his person;[33] but in some jurisdictions an appearance to question the validity of the attachment is deemed to be a general appearance.[34]

3. Effect of. The fact that an action is begun or aided by attachment does not vary the rule that a general appearance by defendant gives the court jurisdiction to render a personal judgment against him[35] and operates as a waiver of such Affidavit for attachment serving in lieu of a complaint see supra, VII, D, 3.

In Maryland the filing with the clerk of a short note setting forth the cause of action is a substitute for the declaration in attachment proceedings. Spear v. Griffin, 23 Md. 418; Trasher v. Everhart, 3 Gill & J. (Md.) 234. Where, in an action of attachment, the declaration containing the money counts and the special counts on the contract was filed, this was sufficient compliance with the statute requiring the filing of a short note in support of the affidavit. Dirickson v. Showell, 79 Md. 49, 28 Atl. 896.

Ancillary attachment.— Where an attachment is brought in aid of an action of assumpsit, there is but one action pending, and only one declaration is necessary, even though the clerk has entered the attachment on the docket as a separate suit. Roberts v. Dunn, 71 Ill. 46.

38. Alabama.— The complaint is required to be filed within the first three days of the return-term (Perkerson v. Snodgrass, 85 Ala. 137, 4 So. 752); but where the demand is not due at the time the attachment is sued out the complaint need not be filed until the first term of the court after such cause of action falls due (Jones v. Holland, 47 Ala. 732; Beckwith v. Baldwin, 12 Ala. 720). The provision as to time of filing is regarded, however, as directory only. Perkerson v. Snodgrass, 85 Ala. 137, 4 So. 752.

Georgia.— The declaration in a case commenced by attachment in a court of record must be filed at the return-term of the writ (Russell v. Faulkner, 89 Ga. 818, 15 S. E. 756; Sutton v. Gunn, 86 Ga. 652, 12 S. E. 979; De Leon v. Heller, 77 Ga. 740; Mayer v. Brooks, 74 Ga. 526; Banks v. Hunt, 70 Ga. 741; Jaffray v. Purtell, 66 Ga. 226; Taylor v. Bell, 62 Ga. 158; Birdsong v. Brooks, 7 Ga. 88); but this is not necessary where the action is in a justice's court (Mayer v. Brooks, 74 Ga. 526). In this state the statute is imperative, and a failure to file at the prescribed time will avoid the proceeding unless such failure arose from circumstances entirely beyond plaintiff's control. Failure to file the declaration until the term succeeding that to which the attachment was returnable was not excused by the failure of the officer to make an actual return of the attachment at or before the return-term, especially as his delay was acquiesced in by plaintiff; nor was it an excuse that one of

c. Sufficiency. Questions as to the form and sufficiency of such pleadings are, in the main, governed by the general principles applicable to other proceedings.[39] The complaint must of course state the cause of action,[40] and where the suit is begun by attachment the declaration must set forth the cause of action specified in the affidavit on which the proceeding is based.[41] Where reference is made to the attachment papers the complaint will be construed in connection with them,[42] and it is not usually necessary to transcribe in the complaint all matters recited in the affidavit or bond.[43] Where the attachment has issued preliminary to the institution of the action, it is required in some jurisdictions that the complaint shall allege the fact of such issue.[44] plaintiff's attorneys, a member of a firm, was prevented by providential cause from attending court during most of the term, each member of the firm being plaintiff's counsel, and he being entitled to the services of the one present. Russell v. Faulkner, 89 Ga. 818, 15 S. E. 756. Where, however, the court just before adjourning passed a consent order dispensing with the calling of the appearance docket, and giving defendants time to plead until next term, in consequence of which a declaration was not filed at the return-term, but subsequently gave this order an equitable construction so as to sustain the attachment, and no harm appeared to have been done defendant, the action of the court was held to be within its discretion, and was not interfered with. Rock Island Paper Mills Co. v. Todd, 37 Ga. 667.

Illinois.— The declaration must be filed at or before the return-term (Kirk v. Elmer H. Dearth Agency, 171 Ill. 207, 49 N. E. 413; Lawver v. Langhans, 85 Ill. 138; Stoddard v. Miller, 29 Ill. 291; Craft v. Turney, 25 Ill. 324; Collins v. Tuttle, 24 Ill. 623; White v. Hogue, 18 Ill. 150; Plato v. Turrill, 18 Ill. 273) and a failure to file at the return-term is ground for dismissing the suit at the next term (Stoddard v. Miller, 29 Ill. 291).

Michigan.— The declaration is required to be filed within twenty days after the return of the writ; but where defendant does not appear and take advantage of plaintiff's failure to file his declaration in time, such failure is merely an irregularity which is cured by a subsequent filing. Smith v. Runnells, 94 Mich. 617, 54 N. W. 375.

New Jersey.—The declaration must be filed within thirty days after the return of the writ. Watson v. Noblett, 65 N. J. L. 506, 47 Atl. 438.

Pennsylvania.— Plaintiff in foreign attachment must file his declaration before the return-day of the writ in order to authorize judgment for want of an appearance. Melloy v. Deal, 124 Pa. And under the Pennsylvania act of May 12, 1897, if plaintiff fail to file his statement within one year after the issue of the writ, the proceeding abates. Seymour v. Fulton, 9 Pa. Dist. 611, 14 York Leg. Rec. (Pa.) 37.

Texas.—Where plaintiff in an attachment suit fails to file his petition until after the writ is issued the attachment will be discharged and treated as a nullity. Wooster v. McGee, 1 Tex. 17.

Failure to file in time not ground for quashing writ.— In a suit commenced by attachment a failure to file a declaration in time is no ground for quashing the writ, although in some cases it might be ground of nonsuit or plea in abatement. Toby v. Bowen, 3 Ark. 352.

Proof of filing.—While the indorsement by the clerk of the fact of filing a complaint in an attachment suit is conclusive evidence, at any time after judgment, that it was filed, it is not, either before or after judgment, the exclusive evidence of that fact; but when the complaint is found with the original file of the papers in the cause from which it must be transcribed when the final record is made up forming part thereof, and there is no countervailing proof, the fact of filing is satisfactorily shown. Variance.—Where the cause of action set out in the attachment was in the nature of a promissory note of the date of June 1, 1862, and the short note described the cause of action as a promissory note, bearing date June 1, 1867, the variance was fatal. Browning v. Pasquay, 35 Md. 294.

d. Amendments. Plaintiff in attachment will usually be allowed to amend his pleadings, as in other actions, without affecting the attachment, provided such amendment will not change the cause of action.[45] Thus amendments have been allowed adding new counts for the same cause of action;[46] correcting a defective statement of the cause of action;[47] correcting a misstatement as to the amount claimed;[48] correcting a mistake as to the venue of the Necessity of alleging grounds for attachment see supra, VII, D, 7, c, (v), (H).

Sufficient identification of attachment.— A declaration on an account, for the amount specified in an attachment, alleged that plaintiffs in the declaration were plaintiffs in an attachment then pending in the superior court, that the attachment had been levied on a lot of groceries as defendants' property, fully described in the sheriff's return on the attachment, which was then in the clerk's office of such court, and prayed judgment against the attached property, and also a general judgment. It was held that the declaration sufficiently identified the attachment. Guckenheimer v. Day, 74 Ga. 1.

Where part of claim not due.—Where an attachment is sued out for several debts, some of which are not due, the allegations in the petition as to when the debts will mature may be amended at any time before trial without affecting the validity of the writ. Donnelly v. Elser, 69 Tex. 282, 6 S. W. 563.

Substitution of foreign judgment.—Where a suit on an account was commenced by attachment in Louisiana, and one for the same cause of action was at the same time carried on and prosecuted to final judgment in the courts of Mississippi, it was held that the judgment thus obtained in Mississippi could be substituted by way of amendment, as the cause of action in the Louisiana court, in place of the account so as to maintain the attachment. Wright v. White, 14 La. Ann. 583.

Amendment after judgment.— A declaration in an attachment suit, which describes defendant as "defendant in attachment," sets out the note which is the evidence of the debt, and alleges that an attachment has been issued thereon, concluding with a prayer for process, may be amended even after judgment. Kolb v. Cheney, 63 Ga. 688.

In federal courts.—At least in the absence of some positive rule of state practice, the power of the federal courts to allow amendments is the same in attachment suits as in others. The supreme court will not revise a judgment in an attachment suit for error in allowing amendments more rigorously than one in an ordinary action would be revised, unless perhaps when some local statute is shown to have been violated. Tilton v. Cofield, 93 U. S. 163, 23 L. ed. 858. The allowance by a circuit court of the United States of an amendment to a declaration, the effect of which is the same as though allowed in a state court, is conclusive evidence against the defendant that the cause of action stated therein is identical with that stated in the original declaration, within the requirement of Mass. Pub. Stat. c. 167, § 85; and he cannot plead the variance as discharging an attachment made under the original declaration. Russia Cement Co. v. Le Page Co., 174 Mass. 349, 55 N. E. 70.

48. Neptune Ins. Co. v. Montell, 8 Gill (Md.) 228.

Petition demanding too little.—Where the affidavit for attachment and the writ both state the correct amount of plaintiff's claim, the petition, which by mistake demands a less sum, may be amended after the issue of the writ to support the attachment. Greer v. Richardson Drug Co., 1 Tex. Civ. App. 634, 20 S. W. 1127. See also La Force v. Schiff-Lewin Co., (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 29 S. W. 77.

Increasing amount beyond that claimed in affidavit.— It is not proper to allow an amendment increasing the amount of the cause;[49] striking out parties[50] and adding new ones.[51] It is not permissible, however, to amend so as to set up a new cause of action, and an amendment of this nature, if allowed, will usually operate as a discharge of the attachment.[52]

2. PLEA OR ANSWER. The rules governing the plea or answer to the action — as distinguished from the attachment proceeding — are for the most part the same as those applicable to other actions.[53] claim beyond that stated in the affidavit (Casey, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Dalton Ice Co., 94 Ga. 407, 20 S. E. 333); but the allowance of such an amendment will not vacate the attachment where plaintiff takes judgment for no greater sum than that originally claimed (Laighton v. Lord, 29 N. H. 237), or, upon obtaining judgment for the increased amount, directs the sheriff to levy only for the amount of his original claim (Cutler v. Lang, 30 Fed. 173).

Substituting new plaintiff.—Where an action is begun by attachment, sued out by the equitable owner of a chose in action, and the declaration is erroneously filed in his name, it may be amended by putting upon record the party in whom is the legal title; and this will not necessitate a change in the affidavit or bond. Tully v. Herrin, 44 Miss. 626. But see Fargo v. Cutshaw, 12 Ind. App. 392, 39 N. E. 532, where it was held that the substitution of a new plaintiff dissolved the attachment.

Changing character in which plaintiff sues.—An amendment to the declaration, filed after levy, alleging that plaintiff sues for the use of another who has purchased the claims since the levy, does not dissolve the attachment. Epstin v. Levenson, 79 Ga. 718, 4 S. E. 328. But see Hagerty v. Hughes, 4 Baxt. (Tenn.) 222, where it was held that an attachment issued in aid of an action by a husband, as such, for malpractice to his wife, was abandoned by amending the declaration so that the action stood as one by him as administrator for the use of his children.

New Jersey statute not applicable to attachments.—Where, in proceedings under section 6 of the attachment law against one of several joint debtors, defendant appears and pleads nonjoinder of the other debtors, plaintiff cannot amend and join the omitted defendants, as section 37 of the practice act provides for amendment only in an action "commenced by summons." Where judgment taken for original cause only.— In Laighton v. Lord, 29 N. H. 237, it was held that an amendment by agreement of parties inserting a new cause of action would not dissolve the attachment as against subsequently attaching creditors, where judgment was taken only for the cause of action contained in the writ.

Where character of complaint not determinable.— If a complaint is plainly in tort it cannot be amended to contract so as to validate an attachment previously issued in the action; but where the complaint is so indefinite and uncertain that its real character cannot be determined, and the facts of the case are such as would sustain an action upon contract, the complaint can be amended so as to uphold the attachment, even against a subsequent attachment. Suksdorff v. Bigham, 13 Oreg. 369, 12 Pac. 818.

Who may attack the attachment.—An attachment was levied on the goods of A. Subsequently A made mortgages on such goods to other creditors. Thereafter the petition in the attachment case was amended so as to state a different cause of action. On motion to discharge in the attachment case, the attachment was held good, and it was further held that the mortgagees could not, in an independent action, attack the attachment. Nagle v. Omaha First Nat. Bank, 57 Nebr. 552, 77 N. W. 1074.

Priority of intervening liens.—Where the original petition stated no ground of liability against a defendant, an amended petition alleging such liability will not take precedence of liens of other creditors who have attached since the filing of the original petition. D. Judgment — 1. Where No Personal Jurisdiction Acquired — a. In General. By a valid seizure of defendant's property and the giving of such notice as is required by law[54] the court acquires jurisdiction to render judgment against the attached property.[55] To authorize a judgment, where there is no jurisdiction of defendant's person, it must be made to appear that all the requisite preliminary proceedings have been taken in accordance with law and established facts,[56] plaintiff must establish his demand by proof,[57] and, under some statutes, before a judgment will be given for the sale of the attached property, plaintiff must give security conditioned to make restitution in case defendant shall thereafter appear and prevail in the action.[58]

Effect of prior levies.— An attachment levied upon land of defendant is sufficient to authorize a judgment by default against him on the claim sued on, although there have been prior levies which will exhaust the property. Perry v. Mendenhall, 57 N. C. 157.

Effect of subsequent personal service.— Where the court has acquired jurisdiction over the property by levy and constructive notice, judgment may properly be rendered against the same notwithstanding a subsequent personal service on defendant (Giddings v. Squier, 4 Mackey (D. C.) 49); but defendant may be permitted to come in as a matter of favor upon payment of costs and disbursements, the judgment being allowed to stand as security (Duche v. Voisin, 18 Abb. N. Cas. Assessment of damages — Evidence.— Under the Pennsylvania act of Apr. 9, 1870, authorizing the prothonotary to assess the damages on evidence produced to him or on the affidavit of plaintiff or some other person cognizant of the transaction, a judgment by default, rendered without the production of the required evidence, is erroneous. b. Operation and Effect — (i) Binding Only on Property. As has been stated heretofore, no personal judgment can be rendered against defendant in attachment unless he has appeared or has been served with process.[59] Where the court has acquired jurisdiction of the property but not of the person the judgment can bind nothing except the property levied upon.[60] If the property attached proves insuffieient to satisfy plaintiff's claim no other property can be taken,[61] and plaintiff must sue on the original indebtedness to reeover the balance.[62] Such judgment will have no effect in another state as a personal judgment against the debtor,[63] and is not an evidence of indebtedness on which an action can be maintained.[64]

(II) Effect of Rendering General Judgment. Some statutes contemplate the rendition of a judgment, personal in form, even where no jurisdiction has been obtained over defendant's person,[65] and it seems that such judgment will not be deemed void in any case;[66] but whatever the form of the judgment it can have no effect further than to bind the property attached.[67]

(III) Conclusiveness. Where the court has acquired jurisdiction of the property, its judgment is conclusive with respect thereto until reversed or set aside in a direct proceeding, and cannot be collaterally attacked on the ground of irregularities in the proceedings.[68]

Amendment.— In Mahone v. Perkinson, 35 Ga. 207, plaintiff was given leave to amend the judgment by changing the same from a general judgment in personam to a judgment in rem.

May be corrected nunc pro tunc.— Although, where suit is begun by publication and attachment, judgment will bind only the property attached, a general judgment in such case is nevertheless valid till reversed. It will authorize the issue of a special execution against the property attached, and it is such a judgment as a court would at any reasonable time correct by an entry nunc pro tunc. Massey v. Scott, 49 Mo. 278.

Personal judgment treated as surplusage.— In an action against a non-resident begun on attachment proceedings without service of process, where the judgment was personal in form and an execution issued generally against defendant's property, but was only levied on the attached real estate, it was held that the order of sale was valid, and the general personal judgment was mere surplusage. Mickey v. Stratton, 5 Sawy. (U. S.) 475, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 9,530, 11 Chic. Leg. N. 314. To same effect see Merwin v. Hawker, 31 Kan. 222, 1 Pac. 640.

Void personal judgment does not affect foreclosure of lien.— A judgment directing the sale of attached property to satisfy plaintiff's claim is not affected by the fact that the court rendered a void personal judgment against the defendant in the same case. Barelli v. Wagner, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 445, 27 S. W. 17.

Effect of issuing general execution.— In an action aided by an attachment, where there is no personal service on defendant and no appearance, it is erroneous to award a general execution (Clymore v. Williams, 77 Ill. 618); but where the judgment entered is a general one, with a general execution, and the property levied upon and sold is only that actually seized under the attachment writ, the errors will not render the sale and deed void in a collateral proceeding (Boothe v. Estes, 16 Ark. 104; Burnett v. McCluey, 92 Mo. 230, 4 S. W. 694).

Ascertainment of amount due not a personal judgment.— In attachment proceedings the amount of the indebtedness must be ascertained in order to make the proper order for the sale of the attached property. In such a case the court, in ascertaining the amount due, does not proceed against the person, but simply ascertains the amount that shall be adjudged a lien upon the property, or that shall measure the extent of the creditor's claim against it. The statement of the amount in the finding and the decree of the court in such case is not a personal judgment, but is a mere statement of the finding upon one of the questions in the case. In Tennessee, where a defendant in an attachment suit is a non-resident, or has removed himself or property out of the state, the judgment or decree by default may be set aside upon application and good ground shown within twelve months thereafter, so that he may make his defense; but when the issue of the attachment is based upon the ground that he is an absconding debtor, he is precluded from this mode of redress and must seek his remedy on the bond. Judgment against one of two defendants. — In New Jersey, where a defendant in attachment appears and goes to trial on the merits, the case proceeds as if commenced by summons. In New Jersey it is held that where defendant in an attachment suit in which applying creditors have been admitted appears, judgment in personam is rendered against him, and execution issues thereon to the sheriff, a sale of land thereunder will only convey the interest of defendant in such land at the time of the entry of judgment. If the creditor desires to avail himself of the title defendant had when the writ of attachment issued he must have his debt, as ascertained by his judgment, embraced in the judgment in the attachment suit, whereupon a sale and conveyance may be made by the auditor, which by the statute shall convey the estate defendant had at the time the writ of attachment was issued. Blatchford v. Conover, 40 N. J. Eq. 205, 1 Atl. 16, 7 Atl. 354.

Order for sale of part releases lien on rest. — A personal judgment for plaintiff, with an order for the sale of part of defendant's lands previously attached by plaintiff, releases the attachment lien on land not included in the order. Thomas v. Johnson, 137 Ind. 244, 36 N. E. 893.

Texas — Where interest in land attached. — Under Sayle's Civ. Stat. Tex. art. 180*a*, an order for the sale of the attached property is necessary only in regard to personalty, and where the attached property consists of an interest in land — such as a leasehold estate — a mere recital of the issue and levy of the attachment is sufficient to preserve the lien without an order of sale. Le Doux v. Johnson, (Tex. Civ. App. 1893) 23 S. W. 902.

Missouri — General judgment.— In Missouri, where jurisdiction is obtained over defendant's person, the judgment must be general, and it is error to order the sale of the attached property. for the sale of all the attached property was not erroneous if it were apparent that no injustice would be done thereby.

For form of judgment held to be sufficient as a judgment in rem see Griffith v. Milwaukee Harvester Co., 92 Iowa 634, 61 N. W. 243, 54 Am. St. Rep. 573.

Demands not recoverable in action.—Where plaintiff declared in assumpsit and his writ was in trespass on the case, it was held that demands for which debt or covenant alone would lie could not be recovered in the action; and therefore it was erroneous to order the sale of property for the satisfaction not only of that portion of plaintiff's claim which might properly be recovered, but also for that portion which could not be so recovered. Boarman v. Patterson, 1 Gill (Md.) 372.

Where property replevied.— Under Tex Rev. Stat. arts. 213–215, where the attached property has been replevied, it is not error on rendering judgment against the sureties on the replevy bond to also order the foreclosure of the attachment lien. Atkinson v. Witte, (Tex. Civ. App. 1900) 54 S. W. 611.

Order for sale of land.— It is error to direct a sale in gross of attached lands, which are separate tracts, and situated in different counties. The judgment should direct a sale by the tract, and only so much as is necessary to satisfy the debt and costs. Starks v. Curd, 88 Ky. 164, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 740, 10 S. W. 419.

Sale of land — Erroneous decree.— A decree directing a sale of attached land for cash, unless under very peculiar circumstances, which directs payment of the money to the creditor and conveyance of the land to the purchaser before the sale shall have been reported to and confirmed by the court, is erroneous. Brien v. Pittman, 12 Leigh (Va.) 379.

Where legal title held by trustees.—Where only the equitable title to attached realty is held by defendant, the land will not be sold in the absence of the trustees who hold the legal title. They must either be served with process, or if non-residents an order of publication or for service without the state must issue against them and be duly published or served. Chapman v. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co., 18 W. Va. 184.

Kentucky — When sale of land ordered.— In Kentucky the court cannot regularly order the sale of attached land until plaintiff files an affidavit that defendant has not personal property sufficient to satisfy plaintiff's claim (Davidson v. Simmons, 11 Bush (Ky.) 330; Jackson v. McElroy, 2 Bush (Ky.) 132); but the making of an order of sale before such affidavit is filed does not make the judgment void or affect the lien of the attachment (Fremd v. Ireland, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 1140, 33 S. W. 89).

Louisiana — Need not decree privilege.— To entitle an attachment creditor to be paid out of the property attached, it is not essential that the judgment should decree a privilege upon the property. A judgment decreeing that the debt be paid out of the property attached is equivalent to a judgment decreeing a privilege. Harmon v. Juge Fils, 6 La. Ann. 768.

74. Beall v. Barclay, 10 B. Mon. (Ky.) 261; Hillman v. Werner, 9 Heisk. (Tenn.) 586; Staunton v. Harris, 9 Heisk. (Tenn.) 579.

Sufficient order.— Where two mules were levied upon, it was held that, on judgment for plaintiff, an order for a special execution against the attached property was proper without making a specific order for each. Meincke v. Bracksieck, 14 Mo. App. 315.

Failure to describe land.— Where a judgment directed a sale of half of a city lot attached, without stating which half, and the return of the attachment also failed to show which half was attached, it was held that parol evidence was not admissible to show that fact, and the judgment was void for uncertainty. Porter v. Byrne, 10 Ind. 146, 71 Am. Dec. 305. Where a judgment foreclosing an attachment lien and an order of sale issued thereunder describes the land to be sold simply as part of designated lots, without identifying the part, a sale under the same is void. McDonald v. Red River County Bank, 74 Tex. 539, 12 S. W. 235.

Sufficient description of land.— It has been held that a judgment which recited the land attached to be all of defendant's one third interest in the south side addition to the city of G, in W county sufficiently described the property to fix the lien thereupon, where the petition described the land by metes and bounds as containing thirty-eight and sixty-eight one-hundredths acres, and alleged that the owner platted the same into lots and blocks, styled the "South Side Addition to Georgetown, Texas," and defendant in his pleading admitted that the South Side Addition constituted all the land specified in complainant's petition. Glasscock v. Price, (Tex. Civ. App. 1898) 45 S. W. 415.

Oregon.— Imperfect description does not discharge lien.—Where property has been attached, the fact that the judgment and order of sale contained an imperfect description of the property did not operate as a discharge of the lien of attachment. Gerdes v. Sears, 13 Oreg. 358, 10 Pac. 631.

75. Blue Grass Canning Co. v. Wardman, 103 Tenn. 179, 52 S. W. 137; Walker v. Houston, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 29 S. W. 1139.

As to priorities in general see supra, XII, B.

Where interplea pending.—Where property attached was interpleaded for under the Arkansas act of Jan. 9, 1861, and the judgment went against defendant in the original suit, it should be against him with an order

4. AMOUNT OF RECOVERY. Where no jurisdiction has been obtained over defendant's person, a judgment in attachment, for a greater amount than that claimed in the affidavit, with interest,[76] is usually regarded as erroneous,[77] although not absolutely void;[78] but the recovery of a less amount than that claimed in the affidavit will not invalidate the attachment.[79] Where personal jurisdiction has been obtained it seems that plaintiff's recovery is not limited by the amount claimed in the affidavit.[80]

5. TIME OF ENTRY — a. Judgment by Default. Usually it is not permissible to enter a final judgment by default against a defendant in attachment who has not been personally served until the lapse of a specified time after the execution of the writ;[81] but it seems that a judgment rendered before such time has elapsed is erroneous only and not void.[82]

b. Where Action on Immatured Demand. Where, by statute, attachment is of execution against the property attached in the event the interplea should be determined in favor of plaintiff. Adams v. Hobbs, 27 Ark. 1.

76. Right to interest.— It is not erroneous to add interest to the amount claimed in the affidavit if the debt be of a nature to carry interest. Empire Car-Roofing Co. v. Macey, 115 Ill. 390, 3 N. E. 417; Henrie v. Sweasey, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 273; Rose v. Palmer, 74 Mich. 332, 41 N. W. 1080; Briggs v. Lane, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 961. (Ind.) 273; Rose v. Palmer, 74 Mich. 332, 41 N. W. 1080 (where it was held that if judgment were taken for a greater amount than that claimed in the affidavit, and plaintiff did not remit the excess, mandamus would lie to compel the granting of a new trial).

Demand not included in affidavit.—The application for an attachment stated that the indebtedness arose upon a contract, whereby the defendants were to sell certain merchandise delivered to them, and account for and pay over the proceeds to the applicants. It was held that a demand for money advanced to defendants could not properly be included in the judgment. Renard v. Hargous, 2 Duer (N. Y.) 540.

Demands not existing at time of levy.— The creditor and debtor cannot by agreement increase creditor's claim by including in the judgment demands not in existence at the time of the levy. Oconto Co. v. Esson, (Wis. 1901) 87 N. W. 855.

Amount claimed in notice by publication.— Where defendant is summoned by publication but does not appear, judgment cannot be rendered for an amount greater than that claimed in the publication. Alpine Cotton Mills v. Weil, 129 N. C. 452, 40 S. E. 218.

Kansas — Judgment for costs.—Where, in an attachment action, the judgment is for the recovery of so much money with the costs of the action and the sale of the attached property, the judgment for costs is a lien on the attached property and may be enforced by an order of sale. Merwin v. Hawker, 31 Kan. 222, 1 Pac. 640.

Texas — Damages and costs of suit.— Under the Texas statutes, although a writ of attachment be issued for the amount of the debt only, the judgment ordering the sale may include enough to satisfy damages and the costs of suit. The same rule applies as in the foreclosure of mortgage and other liens. Piggott v. Schram, 64 Tex. 447.

allowed to issue for an immatured demand,[83] judgment cannot be rendered in the action, without defendant's consent or express statutory authority, until the demand matures.[84] Where the immatured portion of the demand sued upon becomes due before the trial of the cause it may properly be included in the judgment.[85]

XVII. PROCEEDINGS IN AID OF ATTACHMENT.

A. In General. Provision is commonly made by statute for proceedings to aid and supplement the remedy by attachment, the most usual of these being the process of garnishment.[86] In some jurisdictions the court has power to compel defendant to make disclosure as to property which the sheriff has been unable to seize, and to order it delivered to the sheriff,[87] and sometimes the attaching officer is authorized by statute to sue for and collect promissory notes and other evidences of indebtedness attached by him.[88] In New York it has been held Error not waived by offer to pay debt.— Error in rendering a judgment in attachment before the debt became due is not waived by defendant's offer, on the day of the rendition of the judgment, to pay the debt. Crain v. Bode, 5 Wyo. 255, 39 Pac. 747.

It is only by virtue of the attachment act that an action can be maintained on a claim not due; and where the attachment issues against one only of two joint defendants on such a demand, the action is premature as to the other and a judgment by default is erroneous as to him. Terry v. Curd, etc., Mfg. Co., 66 Miss. 394, 6 So. 229.

Effect of quashing attachment.—Where an attachment is issued for a debt not yet due, such being the only method of proceeding to collect the debt, the action fails when the attachment is quashed; but if the debt matures pending the decision of the attachment plaintiff may amend his petition and by that means succeed in his action for the debt. 86. See, generally, GARNISHMENT.

In New York there is no proceeding technically known as garnishment, but the statutes regulating attachments contain provisions designed to accomplish the same ends as the ordinary garnishment proceedings, and it has been deemed expedient to treat such matters under that title.

State statutes applicable to federal courts. — The remedies given by state law to suitors in the state courts, supplementary to writs of attachment for discovery of the debtor's property, are applicable to suitors in the federal courts, and may be enforced at law or in equity, according as the state law provides. Senter v. Mitchell, 5 McCrary (U. S.) 147, 16 Fed. 206, construing Arkansas statute.

Defendant need not incriminate himself.— Defendant cannot be compelled to answer a question which would subject him to a criminal prosecution. Brannon v. Ruddy, 8 Pa. Co. Ct. 176.

California — Cannot order surrender of property.— The provision of Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 545, to the effect that defendant may also be required to attend the examination of a garnishee for the purpose of giving information respecting his property, does not look to the entry of an order directing him to surrender property in his own possession, but merely to give such information, under oath or otherwise, as will facilitate the examination of the garnishee. Ex p. Rickleton, 51 Cal. 316.

New Jersey — Auditor cannot compel discovery.—Where an attachment defendant has appeared under New Jersey Revision, p. 48, § 38, without giving bond, the auditor appointed has no power to proceed under section 46 for the discovery of other property of defendant. Jackson v. Johnson, 51 N. J. L. 457, 17 Atl. 959.

Books of account are not such evidence of that the sheriff may sue to set aside a fraudulent transfer by the attachment debtor.[89]

B. Equitable Relief. While it is not usually the duty of a court of equity to aid an attaching creditor until all his legal remedies are exhausted,[90] yet equity will intervene where it is clear that plaintiff's only remedy is equitable.[91] Thus, where proper grounds for interference are shown, equity will afford the attaching creditor relief against fraudulent conveyances;[92] will entertain a bill for an accounting[93] or to remove clouds from a title;[94] will grant an injunction to prevent the debtor from committing waste upon attached land,[95] or in some cases debts that the seizure of them by an officer under an attachment will enable him to maintain an action therefor. Brower v. Smith, 17 Wis. 410.

Right to set off counter-indebtedness.— In an action by the sheriff to collect a note in which attachment debtor is payee, the maker may set off a counter-indebtedness of attachment debtor. Nicholls v. Hill, 42 S. C. 28, 19 S. E. 1017.

Missouri — Notice as condition precedent. — Where the sheriff brings an action under Mo. Rev. Code (1855), p. 250, § 41, to collect a promissory note attached by him, the notice required by section 39 to be given to the obligors is not a condition precedent to the bringing of the action, the statutory requirements in that regard being merely directory. Choate v. Noble, 31 Mo. 341.

South Carolina —Where motion to vacate pending.— An action by a sheriff, under S. C. Code, § 254, on a note seized on attachment, is not premature because brought while a motion to vacate the attachment is pending. Nicholls v. Hill, 42 S. C. 28, 19 S. E. 1017.

In McPherson v. Snowden, 19 Md. 197, the court was doubtful whether a court of equity had power to pass any order to aid or perfect the remedy by attachment, where for any cause it was not full and complete, such remedy being purely statutory and the jurisdiction being exclusively in a court of law.

Alabama — Equitable attachment.—When a creditor files a bill in equity against his debtor under the Alabama act of 1846, giving an attachment in chancery in certain cases, the jurisdiction of the court is not limited to the condemnation of the property seized under the attachment. If the court has once rightfully obtained jurisdiction it may render the same effectual to complainant's relief by sending out its process, upon a proper application, or widening the sphere of its action, so as to embrace and subject property enough to satisfy his demand. Before service of writ.— In Quarl v. Abbett, 102 Ind. 233, 1 N. E. 476, 52 Am. Rep. 662, it was held that a creditor contemplating the service of his writ of attachment had a right to invoke the aid of equity to have a fraudulent assignee's title overthrown and all questions of ownership settled.

Missouri — Need not exhaust remedies at law.— Under Mo. Rev. Stat. (1889), § 571, an attaching creditor, who by reason of the levy of the attachment has acquired a lien on the property, may maintain an action to set aside any fraudulent conveyance or other lien without first exhausting his remedies at law. to prevent the sale of the attached property under a void judgment;[96] but a suit in equity cannot be maintained in aid of an attachment at law where it has been decided in a prior suit, to which complainant was a party, that his attachment was ineffectual to give him any lien.[97]

XVIII. WRONGFUL ATTACHMENT.

A. Under Irregular or Void Process — 1. Liability Where Process Is Irregular. Where an attachment is irregular or merely voidable, it will nevertheless protect attachment plaintiff, or other parties acting under it, until set aside,[98] but after it has been set aside it affords no protection to the party at whose interest it was issued. He becomes a trespasser ab initio by relation.[99]

2. Liability Where Process Is Void. Where an attachment is for any reason void [1] attachment plaintiff will be a trespasser ab initio and liable to attachment defendant for any damages resulting therefrom,[2] and there is no necessity for setting it aside before bringing an action for acts done under it.[3]

3. Proceedings to Enforce Liability — a. Nature and Form of Action. An action for damages against one causing property to be taken under a void attachment has been held to be in substance an action for trespass de bonis asportatis.[4] It has been held, however, that where the writ is merely irregular or voidable, an action on the case is the proper and the only remedy.[5]

Norman v. Horn, 36 Mo. App. 419.

Where first name of attachment defendant is fictitious.— Where an attachment issues against the property of a person whose first name appears on the face thereof as fictitious, the attachment and all proceedings thereunder are absolutely void, and attachment plaintiff will be liable for the conversion thereof. Patrick v. Solinger, 9 Daly (N. Y.) 149.

3. Day v. Bach, 87 N. Y. 56.

Where process is void and is afterward set aside, attachment plaintiff is liable for injuries caused by the negligence of the attaching officer. In such case the officer is his agent or servant, and he is liable for any injury to the goods caused by the officer's negligence or careless acts while such goods are in his possession. Kerr v. Mount, 28 N. Y. 659.

4. Kerr v. Mount, 28 N. Y. 659; Stewart v. Roberts, 1 Yerg. (Tenn.) 386.

5. Bach v. Cook, 21 Ark. 571. See also Hayden v. Shed, 11 Mass. 500, where it is held that case and not trespass is the proper action for one whose goods have been attached upon a writ which was afterward abated, because another suit was pending for the same cause of action.

b. Parties. Where several persons place void writs in the hands of an officer and have them levied at the same time, they may be sued either jointly[6] or severally.[7]

c. Pleadings. There is no necessity of alleging malice or want of probable cause,[8] nor is it necessary to allege the place of levy.[9] If the action is based on the ground that the attachment was void it will not be sufficient as showing this fact to allege that the attachment was illegal, unauthorized, and void.[10] So, if the basis of the action is that the attachment was irregularly sued out, it will not be sufficient to allege merely that it was vacated.[11]

d. Matters of Defense and in Mitigation — (I) Subsequent Seizure by Attachment Plaintiff. It has been held that where property is seized under a void attachment, a subsequent seizure thereof by attachment plaintiff under valid process, whether a second writ of attachment or an execution, and application of the property so seized to the payment of the owner's debt without his consent, cannot be shown either in defense or in mitigation of damages for the wrongful attachment.[12]

(II) Subsequent Seizure by Third Person. It has been held, however, that where property is taken by the wrongful act of one person, its subsequent seizure upon process issued in favor of another against the owner, by which it is appropriated to the payment of his debt, is a circumstance which may be received in mitigation of the liability of the wrong-doer.[13]

(III) Return of Property. If the property has been returned and retained by the owner, this may be shown in mitigation of damages,[14] but not in bar of the action for the wrong.[15]

B. Under Regular Process — 1. Right of Action — a. Irrespective of Statutory Authority. It has been held in many cases that no action lies, in the absence of express or implied statutory authority, for injuries caused by the mere wrongful suing out of an attachment,[16] but that to give a cause of action it is

11. It might have been vacated for error upon a question of fact upon opposing affidavits, and, unless unauthorized or irregular, an action for damages not brought upon the undertaking could not be maintained. The rule is not altered by the fact that an offer was made to restore the property on discovering that the first attachment was invalid. Hanmer v. Wilsey, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 91. "By procuring a sale on legal process, the defendant cannot be better off than he would be if he had offered to restore the property to the plaintiff. And yet no tender will, at the common law, either bar an action for a tort, or take away the right to full compensation." Otis v. Jones, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 394, 396.

In Oregon the rule is not so stringent. While attachment plaintiff cannot make a complete defense by showing that he caused a subsequent valid writ to be levied on the property for the owner's debt, and that it was applied to such debt, this may nevertheless be shown in mitigation of damages. 17. From the earliest period, it has been uniformly held that there is no right of action growing out of a criminal prosecution or of an arrest of the person in a civil action, in the absence of malice and want of probable cause, however much the party may have been injured thereby. A fortiori it would seem that there can be no right of action for injuries caused by a mere wrongful seizure of property, which the law accounts the lesser injury of the two. See Stewart v. Sonneborn, 98 U. S. 187, 25 L. ed. 116, and the dissenting opinion in Wilson v. Outlaw, 1 Minor (Ala.) 367.

In North Carolina, where it was formerly held that no action would lie for injuries caused by an attachment unless sued out wrongfully and without probable cause (Williams v. Hunter, 10 N. C. 545, 14 Am. Dec. 597), it has been held in subsequent decisions that an action might be maintained if the attachment was sued out without probable cause, although without malice (Kirkham v. Coe, 46 N. C. 423; Abrams v. Pender, 44 N. C. 260). It is not easy to determine whether a statute, then in force, requiring attachment plaintiff to give a bond had any effect on the decisions or not. In the first of the two decisions cited no reference was made to any statute, but in the latter it might with some degree of plausibility be argued that the court considered that a statute requiring attachment plaintiff to give a bond to pay all damages caused by the attachment if "wrongfully sued out" imposed a liability on him for such damages, independently and exclusively of the bond. In Kirkham v. Coe, 46 N. C. 423, 429, the court said: "The bond which the Statute requires is to provide against wrongfully suing out the attachment, which does not embrace the idea of malice, except so far as it may have a tendency to aggravate the wrong of causing loss to another, by having his property seized without probable cause."

The constant practice has been to permit the recovery of actual damages on a counter claim or plea in reconvention whenever it appeared that the writ was wrongfully sued out and levied, and so without basing the defendant's pleadings on the attachment bond." See also Cox v. Trent, (Tex. Civ. App. 1896) 34 S. W. 764; Kaufman v. Armstrong, 74 Tex. 65, 11 S. W. 1048; Kauffman v. Babcock, 67 Tex. 241, 2 S. Reconvention or counter-claim in principal action.— In Louisiana and Texas such damages are also recoverable in the principal action by way of reconvention or counter-claim. damages are to be recovered is prescribed either expressly or by implication.[19] In other jurisdictions the statutes are not so broad, and to authorize a recovery, while malice is not necessary, it is essential that the attachment should have been sued out without probable cause as well as wrongfully.[20]

2. ELEMENTS OF LIABILITY — a. In General. A suit cannot be maintained because of the suing out of an attachment unless it was wrongful.[21] According to a number of decisions, moreover, the fact that the attachment was applied for and issued creates no cause of action, unless the same was actually levied, although the issue may have been wrongful;[22] and it has also been held that no action for

See also cases cited supra, this note.

Wrongful and oppressive attachment.— Under Ind. Rev. Stat. § 937, which requires the giving of a bond conditioned to prosecute the proceeding in attachment to effect and pay all damages which may be sustained by defendant, if the proceeding shall be "wrongful and oppressive," the proceeding must have been wrongful and oppressive to render attachment plaintiff liable for damages. Uppinghouse v. Mundel, 103 Ind. 238, 2 N. E. 719. But the attachment will be conclusively presumed to be wrongful and oppressive when it has been dissolved (Waring v. Fletcher, 152 Ind. 620, 52 N. E. 203); or where final judgment in the main suit is rendered in favor of attachment defendant (Trentman v. Wiley, 85 Ind. 33).

In Kentucky, a statute which provides that if property be attached without good cause for suing it out the owner may, in an action against attachment plaintiff, recover damages for the wrongful seizure and for the sale thereof, if the property be sold, and that in such case plaintiff shall not be held to prove or allege malice on the part of defendant, authorizes an action where an attachment was issued without good cause for suing it out. Mitchell v. Mattingly, 1 Metc. (Ky.) 237. It is to be noted that the action provided for by this statute is not on the attachment bond. Another Kentucky statute (Bullitt's Code Ky. p. 223, § 198) provides for the giving of a bond conditioned to pay damages caused by the attachment "if it be wrongfully obtained." By the same terms of this statute it would be sufficient to give a cause of action that the attachment was wrongfully sued out.

Under these statutes, if there is reasonable cause to believe the grounds upon which the attachment was issued to be true, actual damages are recoverable. Hurlbut v. Hardenbrook, 85 Iowa 606, 52 N. W. 510; Seattle Crockery Co. v. Haley, 6 Wash. 302, 33 Pac. 650, 36 Am. St. Rep. 156.

22. Necessity of actual levy.— Biering v. Galveston First Nat. Bank, 69 Tex. 599, 7 S. W. 90; Johnson v. King, 64 Tex. 226; Woods v. Huffman, 64 Tex. 98.

Sufficiency of constructive possession.— Defendant in an attachment which is wrongfully sued out may recover damages for being wrongfully dispossessed from the property, alwrongful attachment will lie where the levy is fatally defective, and for that reason amounts to no levy.[23]

b. Under What Circumstances Attachment Is Considered Wrongful. An attachment may be said to be wrongfully sued out where no debt exists;[24] where no grounds for attachment exist;[25] where, in some cases it seems, no grounds for attachment exist as to part of the debt;[26] where sued out before the debt is though it may not have been taken by the officer into actual possession, if the levy was such as to place it in the custody of the law. Rice v. Miller, 70 Tex. 613, 8 S. W. 317, 8 Am. St. Rep. 630.

Sufficiency of levy without actual seizure. — If an officer with a purpose of attaching personal property obtains access to and control of it, the attachment is complete, the possession of the owner is disturbed, and an action of trespass de bonis asportatis will lie in his behalf if the attachment was unauthorized. Morse v. Hurd, 17 N. H. 246.

Where the levy of an attachment is invalid, for failure to give defendant notice of the levy, although the supposed levy has been entered in the encumbrance book, defendant cannot set up as a counter-claim damages sustained by him from such levy. Sioux Valley State Bank v. Kellog, 81 Iowa 124, 46 N. W. 859.

In Alabama, however, in Flournoy v. Lyon, 70 Ala. 308, it is held that injury to the credit of defendant in attachment may result from the wrongful or vexatious suing out of the writ, although there was no levy, and may be recovered as special damages in an action on the bond; but unless there was a levy defendant could not be driven to the trouble and expense of defending the suit, and could not subject plaintiff to liability for damages on account of such trouble and expense when caused by his voluntary appearance without a levy. On principle this decision seems to be correct, for it is readily conceivable that great injury to the business of a debtor might result from the wrongful suing out of an attachment although it was not levied.

24. Where an attachment is issued against a person who is not indebted to the attachment plaintiff, or against whom the attachment plaintiff has no valid claim, it is wrongfully sued out. The class of debts or claims herein mentioned is not to be confused, however, with debts which have not matured, as attachments therefor are allowed in certain cases. See supra, VI, D.

Filing an amended petition setting up a subsequently accruing indebtedness does not avoid liability. Young v. Broadbent, 23 Iowa 539.

Good faith of attachment plaintiff does not affect the application of this rule. Tucker v. Adams, 52 Ala. 254.

Non-existence of debt when attachment sued out. — In attachment against a non-resident on a note, defendant answered, denying the execution of the note, whereupon plaintiff amended its petition by adding a second count for money loaned defendant, in which it alleged that such count was for the same cause of action set out in the original action, and that the money was due when suit was commenced. The jury found for plaintiff on the second count. It was held that the attachment was not wrongful on the ground that no indebtedness existed at the time it was issued, as alleged in the original petition. Cawker City State Bank v. Jennings, 89 Iowa 230, 56 N. W. 494.

Wrongful refusal to allow a credit. — Similarly, it has been held that where plaintiff's agent presented to defendant a bill, which the latter offered to pay if a certain undisputed credit were allowed thereon, and the agent refused the offer and immediately attached defendant's property the attachment was wrongful, and that damages were properly awarded therefor. Feld v. Portwood, (Miss. 1890) 7 So. 492.

25. Where no grounds for attachment exist. — An attachment is wrongful or "improper," within the meaning of a statute making attachment plaintiff liable for injuries caused by such attachment, where the ground alleged in the affidavit for attachment is untrue, or is not one of the grounds enumerated by statute which must exist before the attachment can be allowed. Steen v. Ross, 22 Fla. 480. The mere fact that plaintiff's claim is a just one does not entitle him to an attachment. Nordhaus v. Peterson, 54 Iowa 68, 6 N. W. 77; Drummond v. Stewart, 8 Iowa 341; Gens v. Hargadine, 56 Mo. App. 245; Sprague v. Parsons, 12 Daly (N. Y.) 392, 6 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 26, 14 Abb. N. Cas. (N. The demand may be entirely true, and the suing out of the attachment may be wrongful, and even malicious. Nordhaus v. Peterson, 54 Iowa 68, 6 N. W. 77.

26. Where no grounds of attachment exist as to part of debt. — It has been held that an attachment issued for a claim which is the aggregate of several distinct claims constitut-

due;[27] where dissolved on the merits;[28] where the amount sued for is less than five dollars (under a statutory provision forbidding an attachment to issue for the enforcement of a claim less than five dollars);[29] or where attachment plaintiff's debt is amply secured,[30] or he refuses to accept reasonable security.[31] But it seems that an attachment cannot be said to be wrongfully sued out where part only of the debt for which the attachment is issued does not exist;[32] or where the attachment is dissolved for irregularities or informalities in the proceedings.[33] Neither will an action for wrongful attachment lie where the attachment is dissolved or quashed for ing separate causes of action is wrongful, if the ground of attachment alleged does not exist as to any one or more of such claims. Estlow v. Hanna, 75 Mich. 218, 42 N. W. 812; Mayer v. Zingre, 18 Nebr. 458, 25 N. W. 727. See also Wilson v. Harvey, 52 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 126, where it is held that the joinder of a cause of action, for which an attachment cannot issue if standing alone, with one for which it might be issued, is ground for vacating the same. See also, generally, supra, XV. See also Stiff v. Fisher, 85 Tex. 556, 22 S. W. 577, where it is held that in a case where it does not appear that the claim consists of one indivisible cause of action or several distinct causes of action the attachment is wrongful when grounds for attachment exist only as to a small part of the claim.

Where the claim is a running account, consisting of many items, an attachment issued in a suit thereon will not be wrongful merely because no ground for attachment exists as to the value of a few of the items. Mackey v. Hyatt, 42 Mo. App. 443, assigning as a reason for this the fact that the claim cannot be split up into suits on each item, because an action on any part of it would bar an action on the balance.

27. Where attachment is sued out before the debt is due.—As hitherto shown, attachments may be sued out under certain circumstances before the debt is due. If, however, these circumstances do not exist, the suing out of an attachment before the debt is due will of course be wrongful. See supra, VI, D.

28. Where attachment is dissolved on the merits.—Where, on an issue as to the truth of the facts alleged as the ground for attachment, there is a finding in favor of defendant and the attachment is dismissed, this is conclusive in a subsequent proceeding to recover damages caused thereby that the attachment was wrongfully obtained (Boatwright v. Stewart, 37 Ark. 614; Mitchell v. Mattingly, 1 Metc. (Ky.) 237; Miller v. McCrory, 3 Ky. L. Rep. 774; Freeman v. Young, 3 Rob. (N. Y.) 666), unless the judgment is appealed from and undetermined (Peck v. Hotchkiss, 52 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 226).

29. Gaddis v. Lord, 10 Iowa 141.

Effect of recovery of less than five dollars.—Where the claim in the suit in which the attachment was sued out is for more than five dollars, the attachment is not wrongful merely because a less amount than five dollars is recovered. Bradley v. McCall, 2 Greene (Iowa) 214.

Rule criticized.— It is a matter of no small difficulty, however, to understand the reason on which these conclusions are based. The right given by statutes when a debt exists and there are grounds for attachment to sue out the writ is unqualified, and it can make no possible difference whether the party's debt is secured or not, or whether he has refused security. Richardson v. Probst, 103 Iowa 241, 72 N. W. 521.

32. Where part of debt for which attachment is issued does not exist.— An action upon an attachment bond for wrongful attachment is not warranted merely because the attachment is sued out for a greater amount than is due. Marx v. Leinkauff, 93 Ala. 453, 9 So. 818; Waring v. Fletcher, 152 Ind. 620, 52 N. E. 203.

Where the disparity between the debt due and that for which the attachment was sued out is so great as to manifest an intention to abuse the remedy afforded by the extraordinary process of attachment, an action for both vexatious and wrongful use of the writ might possibly lie. Marx v. Leinkauff, 93 Ala. 453, 9 So. 818.

33. Where attachment dissolved for irregularity in proceedings.—An attachment is not wrongful, within the meaning of statutes authorizing a recovery of damages resulting from wrongful attachments, merely because it is dissolved on account of defects in the form of the proceedings, or for mere omissions, irregularities, or informalities in the issue of the writ.

the failure of the officer to perform his duty.[34] In some jurisdictions, voluntary abandonment or dismissal of an attachment renders the attaching creditor and surety responsible for damages for the wrongful suing out of the writ;[35] in others, however, it is not to be inferred that the attachment was wrongfully sued out from the voluntary dismissal of the suit.[36] There is also some conflict of authority as to the effect of the discharge of an attachment on the giving of bond by defendant.[37] It has been held that the fact that defendant at the time the attachment was sued out had no property liable to attachment does not make the attachment wrongful, but evidence thereof might be admissible as tending to show matters of vexation on the part of plaintiff suing it out.[38]

The mere failure to prosecute a suit in chancery connected with an attachment is not a forfeiture of the bond required to be given by the statute. The bond is not conditioned for the successful prosecution of the suit, but that the order for the attachment has not been wrongfully obtained. Unless, therefore, the order was wrongfully procured and without just cause, there is no breach of the bond. Pettit v. Mercer, 8 B. Mon. (Ky.) 51.

Voluntary dismissal for inability to produce evidence. — In an action on an attachment bond, the fact that the attachment has been dismissed, owing to the inability of plaintiff therein to supply a record, the original being burned, is held to be no evidence that the original attachment was wrongful, and plaintiff shall give only legal costs taxable on the dismissal of the attachment suit. Cooper v. Hill, 3 Bush (Ky.) 219.

37. In Indiana, where an attachment is dissolved by filing a bond for the restitution of the property under a statute declaring that when this is done "the attachment shall be discharged," the party so executing the bond in legal effect waives his right to assert that the attachment proceedings were wrongful. Bick v. Long, 15 Ind. App. 503, 44 N. E. 555.

In Minnesota, where an attachment is dissolved by the voluntary act of defendant in executing the bond provided for by statute, and no opportunity is given to the opposite party to test the validity of the attachment in the same proceeding, although no reason appears why it might not have been done, an action for wrongful attachment cannot be maintained. Rachelman v. Skinner, 46 Minn. 196, 48 N. W. 776.

In Ohio it is held with much better reason that the execution by defendant in attachment of the redelivery bond provided for by the statute cannot be regarded as an admission of record that the order of attachment was rightfully obtained, and cannot be set up as a bar to his right of action on the attachment undertaking. Alexander v. Jacoby, 23 Ohio St. 358, where it is said: "The interests of a party may imperatively require that his property shall be released from a wrongful attachment without delay," and he should be allowed therefore to procure a discharge of the attachment by executing the proper undertaking without abandoning his right of redress for the injury already done.

main action before instituting proceedings for redress.[40] It is nevertheless the rule under many statutes that before any right of action can arise from the wrongful suing out of an attachment the attachment must be dissolved.[41] This is not the rule, however, in those jurisdictions where damages caused by wrongful attachment are considered proper matter to be set up in the main action by way of counter-claim, set-off, or reconvention, in cases where a recovery is sought by this procedure,[42] or in jurisdictions where there is a controlling statute to the contrary.[43]

b. As Depending Upon Termination of Main Action in Defendant's Favor. Where a final judgment has been rendered in the main action in defendant's favor, there can be no doubt that a cause of action has accrued in his favor for injuries caused by the attachment in all jurisdictions where actions for wrongful attachment, either on or independently of the attachment bond, may be maintained.[44] This it has been held is true, notwithstanding the fact that defendant did not controvert the grounds of attachment by plea in abatement or otherwise.[45] As regards the necessity of a final judgment, the statutes have been so

In Texas, where an attachment defendant is allowed to reconvene or counter-claim damages arising from a wrongful attachment in the main action, it has been held that a cause of action in his behalf arises at the very instant the seizure is made under the attachment (Torrey v. Schneider, 74 Tex. 116, 11 S. W. 1068), and that an independent action may be maintained on the attachment bond as soon as the seizure is made (Jordan v. Meyer, 90 Tex. 544, 39 S. W. 1081).

43. In Alabama Civ. Code (1896), § 565, provides that at any time within three years of the suing out of the attachment, before or after the suit is determined, defendant may commence suit on the bond and recover damages actually sustained, if the attachment was wrongfully sued out.

In Iowa, where it is provided by statute that attachment defendant need not wait "until the principal suit is determined" before suing on the bond, the right of action accrues on the bond as soon as attachment defendant is disturbed in the possession of his property by the levy of the writ. construed in a number of jurisdictions as to require a final judgment in defendant's favor in the main action as a condition precedent to his right to recover damages therefor. In these jurisdictions the mere dissolution of an attachment without more would give the attachment defendant no right of action.[46]

4. Persons Entitled to Recover[47] — a. Attachment Defendant. Defendant in attachment is entitled to recover for the attachment, if it be wrongful, unless he has divested himself of all interest in the attached property before the attachment. If he has done this he has no right of action.[48]

b. Officer Levying Attachment. Ordinarily, it is apprehended, attachment bonds are conditioned to pay damages for injuries suffered by attachment defendant only, and in consequence no other person has a right of action thereon. In several states, however, the statutory bond is broad enough to include injuries to the levying officer.[49]

c. Garnishees. Where a bond is conditioned to pay all damages that may accrue to defendant or any garnishee, defendant may maintain an action thereon to the use of any garnishee who has been damaged;[50] otherwise, however, where attachment defendant is the only obligee named in the bond.[51]

49. Thus, where the condition of the bond is that plaintiff shall pay all damages and costs that may accrue to any officer by reason of any act under the writ done by him in compliance with the directions of plaintiff, such condition is not limited in its application to acts done by the sheriff in the seizure of the property, but will warrant a recovery by him on the bond when, after selling perishable property, he pays the proceeds to plaintiff, on the promise of the latter to refund if he should not be entitled thereto, and is subsequently compelled to again pay the amount of such proceeds to a successful interpleader. State v. Finke, 66 Mo. App. 238. So, where an attachment bond is conditioned for the payment of costs in case plaintiff fail to recover, it was held that the sheriff could recover thereon the expenses of keeping the property attached. Read v. Williams, 95 Ga. 108, 22 S. E. 213.

On the other hand, a bond conditioned to pay all "damages sustained by any person by reason of the suing out" an attachment has been held not to inure to the benefit of the sheriff who levied the attachment and took care of the property. Mitchell v. Chancellor, 14 W. Va. 22.

damages,[52] although it has been held that a county cannot become liable.[53] An attaching creditor is not liable for acts of nonfeasance or misfeasance committed by the attaching officer, unless he directs or participates in the wrong,[54] or ratifies and confirms it after becoming aware of it.[55] The same rule applies with regard to the sureties on his bond.[56]

b. Sureties on Attachment Bond. The liability of a surety on an attachment bond is created by and rests alone on the stipulations of the bond. He has a right to stand on the very terms of his contract, and his liability will not be extended beyond the fair import of the words used;[57] his liability is one not to be extended by implication, nor will it be inferred that he has agreed to do more than that which is fairly expressed in the bond.[58] It is a consequence of the rule stated that the sureties can be subjected to liability on the bond only in reference to the particular writ for obtaining which it was given;[59] and they cannot be held liable where the terms of the bond have been changed,[60] or where an amendment is permitted in the action in which the bond was given adding new parties and changing the character of the action.[61] So, it has been held that the surety, by signing an attachment bond, does not become a participant in the seizure or detention of the attached property by the sheriff or liable as a trespasser for such act.[62]

Right to set aside judgment irregularly obtained.— It has been held that if judgment has been obtained irregularly in the main action, sureties on the attachment bond can have it set aside on a seasonable application, and be allowed to defend on the merits. Holmes v. Cooper, 27 Ark. 239.

Statutory modification of rule.—Ind. Rev. Stat. (1897), § 1221, modifies the general rule to the extent only, that if the bond be defective, it is to be read, construed, and enforced the same as if it contained all the conditions and provisions required by the statute. Where the omission, if any, in a bond is so supplied, the bond so read is strictissimi juris. Waring v. Fletcher, 152 Ind. 620, 52 N. E. 203.

6. Proceedings to Recover For Wrongful Attachment — a. Jurisdiction and Venue. It has been held that an action for wrongfully suing out an attachment in one state may be maintained in another.[63] With regard to the jurisdiction of particular courts, it has been held that an action for a wrongful suing out of an attachment is in effect one for malicious prosecution, that a justice court has no jurisdiction.[64] In relation to venue, it has been held, under a statute providing that an action for a trespass may be prosecuted in the county in which the cause of action accrued, that an action for the wrongful seizure of property under a writ of attachment may be brought in the county where the seizure took place, although none of the defendants are residents of such county, and that a suit on the attachment bond may be maintained in such county.[65]

b. Statute of Limitations. The time when the statute begins to run against the right to recover damages for wrongful attachment depends of course on the character of the remedy by which it is sought to recover. Thus, if the form of procedure is by action on the bond in a jurisdiction where the cause of action is deemed to accrue at the time of the seizure, the statute of limitations will commence to run from that period.[66] If, however, the right to proceed either on or independently of the attachment bond does not accrue until the dissolution of the attachment, or until the final determination of the main action, the statute will of course commence to run only from that time.[67]

Instances.— If levy is made on the property of a third person instead of that of a person against whom the writ was sued out there can be no liability therefor on the bond. Erwin v. Commercial, etc., Bank, 12 Rob. (La.) 227. It has also been held that where an attachment was made against a firm by the firm-name, and a bond was given conditioned to pay the partners "all such damage as they might sustain," no recovery could be had in an action on the bond for damage sustained by one partner for wrongful levy on his individual property. c. Methods of Enforcing Liability[68] — (I) By Proceedings in Main Action — (A) Assessing Damages on Dissolution or Dismissal. In some jurisdictions upon the dissolution or dismissal of the attachment in proper proceedings for that purpose, the damages sustained by a wrongful attachment may be assessed and a judgment therefor rendered against attachment plaintiff and the sureties on his attachment bond.[69]

(B) Counter-Claim. In regard to the right to counter-claim damages caused by a wrongful attachment in the main suit the decisions are not harmonious. Under the statute in one state,[70] if the attachment is issued on a separate petition subsequently to the commencement of the main action, defendant cannot counter-claim damages therein caused by the wrongful issue of the writ.[71] So, where, subsequently to the commencement of the suit by attachment, defendant makes a general assignment, the assignee cannot set up by counter-claim a demand for damages caused by the attachment.[72] On the other hand, where an affidavit and bond for attachment are filed with the petition in the action, and the writ immediately sued out, the right to recover damages sustained by defendant from the wrongful suing out of the writ is a claim held by him at the commencement of the action, within the meaning of the statute, and it may be set up by way of counter-claim in the same action.[73] The fact that the counter-claim was interposed

In Texas an action for wrongful attachment is barred by the two years' statute of limitations. Woods v. Huffman, 64 Tex. 98.

68. Owing to the great variety of statutes on the subject, the methods of enforcing liability for injuries caused by wrongful attachments are very numerous. In most jurisdictions, several modes of obtaining redress for such injuries are open to attachment defendant. See infra, XVIII, B, 6, c, (I), (II).

Anno. Code (1892), § 168), damages shall be assessed by the jury, and judgment rendered against plaintiff and the sureties on the bond for the damages so assessed and the costs of suit; but where the attachment is defeated on the ground that the debt sued on is not due defendant is not entitled to have damages so assessed (Betancourt v. Maduel, 69 Miss. 839, 11 So. 111). The issue to be tried and determined by the jury is "whether the said attachment was wrongfully sued out" and not whether the facts stated in the affidavit are actually true or false. Cocke v. Kuykendall, 41 Miss. 65, 68.

In Wisconsin, if the trial of the traverse of the affidavit for attachment occurs before the trial of the main action and is decided in favor of defendant, the jury shall assess the damages sustained thereby, which with the costs shall be applied as a set-off to plaintiff's demand, and if in excess of it, or plaintiff fail to recover, the verdict shall be for defendant for the amount due. If the trial be after the trial of the main action the court may impanel a jury or proceed itself to assess such damages, and shall in like manner apply the same when so assessed, with the costs so taxed, as a set-off to plaintiff's demand as established upon the trial, and give judgment accordingly. Wis. Rev. Stat. (1898), § 2746. See also Meshke v. Van Doren, 16 Wis. 319. In a very recent decision it was said that in the absence of statutory direction the better practice in attachment suits is to try the main issue first, and in the event that defendant succeeds to take up the trial of the claim for damages. merely for delay cannot alter the right of the party to file such a plea. There is no means of determining that the defense is frivolous but by trial.[74] The counter-claim may be based upon the bond when it is joint and several,[75] or upon the cause of action for the wrongful attachment independently of the bond.[76] If the bond is joint, only, attachment defendant cannot counter-claim damages thereon in the main action, because he cannot sue one of the obligors alone.[77] In some states the right to counter-claim damages for wrongful attachment in the main action is maintained, and that too without any such qualification as hitherto mentioned;[78] but in others damages arising from a wrongful attachment cannot be counter-claimed in the main action.[79]

It was held that as defendant and intervener joined in their prayer for relief, the right to prosecute the counter-claim was given by the section which provides that defendant in attachment may sue on the attachment bond by way of counter-claim and recover damages as in the original action. What is commencement of action within the rule.—A landlord in an action for rent sued out an attachment, and upon its being quashed filed an amended petition in equity for the foreclosure of the lien under the lease, as a mortgage. It was held that the filing of the amended petition was not the beginning of a new action; hence damages caused to defendant by the attachment could not be pleaded as a counter-claim, as they were not an existing cause of action at the time of the commencement of the suit as required by statute. In California it was held that the counter-claim was "connected with the subject of the action." Waugenheim v. Graham, 39 Cal. 169.

In Idaho damages resulting from a wrongful attachment were allowed to be counter-claimed where the attachment was dissolved before answer. In Texas it was said that the damages complained of arose out of a suit instituted by plaintiff. Michigan Stove Co. v. Waco Hardware Co., 22 Tex. Civ. App. 293, 54 S. W. 357.

In Wisconsin, in at least one reported decision, it appears that a counter-claim was set up after the dissolution of the attachment, and no question being raised as to its propriety, the supreme court affirmed in part a judgment awarding defendant damages on such counter-claim. Braunsdorf v. Fellner, 76 Wis. 1, 45 N. W. 97.

79. In Kansas it has been held that a claim for damages for the wrongful suing out of an attachment not based upon the bond is not a proper subject for a counter-claim in the main action, because it is not connected with the foundation or subject of the action within the meaning of the statutes relating to counter-claims. Carver v. Shelly, 17 Kan. 472.

In Kentucky, under a statute defining a counter-claim as a cause of action in favor of defendant against plaintiff, arising out of the contract or transactions set forth in the petition as the foundation of plaintiff's claim, or connected with the subject of the action, it was held that such damages did not arise out of the contract set forth in the petition, or out of any transaction set forth in the petition, as the foundation of the action. Nolle v. Thompson, 3 Metc. (Ky.) 121.

In Missouri it was held in a decision of not very recent date that damages caused by a wrongful attachment cannot be counter-claimed in the main action. Hembrock v.

(c) Reconvention. In Texas it is well settled that damages caused by a wrongful attachment may be pleaded in reconvention in the action in which the attachment was sued out, and none of the decisions in which this question arises mention any special statutory authorization therefor.[80] In pleading in reconvention defendant may declare either independently of or upon the attachment bond.[81] Under the statute of Louisiana relating to reconvention [82] it has been held that defendant in an action commenced by attachment, if he resides in the same parish as plaintiff, cannot institute a demand in reconvention for damages growing out of the attachment.[83] Nevertheless, in a case where plaintiff in attachment was a non-resident, defendant pleaded in reconvention the damages resulting from the wrongful seizure, and no question was raised as to the propriety of this practice.[84]

(d) Set-Off. It has been held that in an action aided by attachment damages on the ground that the attachment was wrongful are not a proper subject of set-off, because not in existence at the commencement of the suit.[85] Again, it has

Nebraska.— Tessier v. Lockwood, 18 Nebr. 167, 24 N. The court based its ruling on the view that defendant's claim must be one upon which he could at the date of the commencement of the suit maintain an action on his part against plaintiff, and that therefore damages caused by the wrongful attachment could not be counter-claimed.

North Carolina.— Kramer v. Thomson-Houston Electric Light Co., 95 N. been held that where a suit is commenced by attachment, damages alleged to be sustained by the issue thereof cannot be set off in such action pending a rule to dissolve the attachment.[86]

(II) By Proceedings Subsequent to Main Action—(A) In General. Where the statute requires plaintiff in attachment to give bond conditioned to pay all damages caused by the attachment, if it be wrongfully sued out, an action may of course be maintained on the bond for such damages as may be occasioned by a breach of the conditions of such bond. Whether the party aggrieved has any other remedy than by an action on the bond for an injury caused by an attachment, which lacks the elements of a malicious attachment, is a proposition in regard to which there is some conflict of authority.[87]

(B) By Action Independently of Bond. It is held in a number of states that the sole remedy of the party is by action on the bond.[88] In other states the contrary conclusion has been reached upon the theory that statutes of the character under consideration impose a liability for wrongful attachment, which may be enforced independently of the bond; and they accordingly allow the party aggrieved the option of bringing suit on the bond, or in tort for the wrong.[89]

(C) By Motion Before Court Passing Upon Original Cause. In Tennessee defendant in attachment may at his discretion when the attachment has been dismissed, proceed to recover damages by motion before the court that passed upon the original cause.[90]

In Tennessee there is a statute which provides that all wrongs and injuries to the property and person, for which money only is demanded as damages, may be redressed by an action on the facts of the case. (D) By Set-Off or Counter-Claim in Subsequent Action. While it has been held that where an attachment has been dissolved, the damages, if capable of liquidation, may be set off in a subsequent action by plaintiff against defendant on the same cause of action,[91] ordinarily the right to set up such damages by way of a counter-claim or set-off in a subsequent action does not exist especially when the damages are incapable of liquidation.[92]

(E) Election of Remedies and Use of One Remedy as Bar to Another. In jurisdictions where exemplary or punitive damages, as well as actual damages, may be recovered in an action on a bond,[93] an action on the bond will, it is apprehended, operate as a bar to an action for malicious attachment; but if, as is the case in most jurisdictions, the bond is held to cover only actual damages, a suit on the bond will not be a bar to an action for malicious attachment.[94] If defendant in attachment counter-claims damages on the bond, a recovery thereon is a bar to a recovery in a subsequent suit of any further damages for the same cause.[95] If several attachments in different actions levied on the same property are all discharged the debtor may elect to bring an action for damages against the obligors on any particular bond.[96] Where a party prosecutes concurrently an action at law on the attachment bond against the principal obligor alone and motions in equity against the principal obligor and his sureties, the court will on its own motion require him to elect whether he will proceed at law or in equity.[97]

92. In Colorado it has been held that where a person to whom a claim is assigned dismisses a suit aided by attachment begun by him and reassigns the claim to the original holder, who sues thereon, defendant cannot counter-claim damages caused by the attachment in the former suit on the attachment bond therein given. Drake v. Avanzini, 20 Colo. 104, 36 Pac. 846, where the following reasons were alleged: (1) that plaintiff was not a party to that instrument, and (2) that if he could be held liable for a portion of such damages by reason of being a party in interest in the action, such liability would be a joint one and not available as a counter-claim in an action brought by him to recover an individual indebtedness. And in Esbensen v. Hover, 3 Colo. App. 467, 33 Pac. 1008, where the action was for goods sold and delivered, it was held that defendants could not counter-claim damages arising from an excessive levy under a writ of attachment issued therein, because such damages did not arise out of the transaction set forth in the complaint, and was not connected with the subject of the action.

In Dakota it has been held that in an action on an account, an attachment bond given by plaintiffs with sureties in a former action on the same account, conditioned to pay costs and damages if judgment should be rendered for defendants, or, if the attachment should be dissolved, cannot be set up as a counter-claim. Schuster v. Thompson, 6 Dak. 10, 50 N. W. 125.

In Wisconsin it has been held that damages for a wrongful attachment, which was sued out without malice and afterward discontinued, cannot be set up as a counter-claim by the debtor in a subsequent action brought against him by the attaching creditor, defendant's remedy being to obtain an assessment of damages in the original action and the rendition of judgment thereon and the issue of an execution on the judgment, or an action on plaintiff's undertaking for the recovery of the judgment. d. Conditions Precedent to Enforcement of Liability — (I) Demand.[99] It is held in some states that it is not necessary to make a demand on the principal in an attachment bond before bringing action against the sureties, as the statute contains no such requirement;[1] but in others no right of action accrues on the bond until a demand of damages therein provided for is made.[2]

(II) Notice.[3] It has been held that in proceedings to collect on an attachment bond, whether by rule or by action, notice of the proceedings is necessary.[4]

(III) Assessment of Damages in Main Action. Although there is a statute authorizing the assessment of damages in the main action on the dissolution of the attachment, it is not a condition precedent to the right to bring suit on the bond that damages should be so assessed.[5]

(IV) Judgment Against Attachment Plaintiff in Independent Action. In determining whether judgment in an independent action against attachment plaintiff is a condition precedent a careful consideration of the statutes under which the bonds are drawn is essential.[6] If the bond is conditioned to pay such damages as may be sustained or caused by the wrongful attachment, it is not necessary that an independent action against attachment plaintiff should be first brought before suing on the bond.[7] On the other hand, if the bond is conditioned to pay such damages as may be awarded or recovered in any suit brought against attachment plaintiff, such suit is a condition precedent to any liability on the bond.[8] Where the bond is conditioned to pay such damages as are awarded against plaintiff, there is some conflict of authority as to whether a preliminary action against attachment plaintiff is necessary.[9]

(v) Obtaining Possession of Bond. Where a right of action has accrued on an attachment bond, attachment defendant need not ask leave of the court to claim possession of the undertaking before he can commence an action thereon.[10]

(vi) Payment of Damages Caused by Attachment. To entitle attachment defendant to recover on the bond for damages caused by the attachment it is not necessary that he should have actually paid the damages sustained by him.[11]

e. (b) Assignees in Bankruptcy and Assignees For Benefit of Creditors. It has been held that a bankrupt's right of action on an attachment bond for the wrongful suing out of an attachment passes to the assignee in bankruptcy in so far as the action seeks compensation for injuring, detaining, or converting the property attached, but remains with the bankrupt in so far as the action seeks to recover compensation for injury to the bankrupt's business, reputation, and credit, and vindictive damages for a malicious suing out or abusive use of the attachment.[14] So it has been held that where property is assigned for the benefit of creditors after an attachment and after the acceptance thereof by some of the beneficiaries, and the taking possession of the property by the assignee, the latter

Suit on bond where national bank is obligor — Jurisdiction of state court.—Where a national bank of the state of New York desired to begin proceedings against a person residing in Fulton county, Georgia, and for that purpose gave a bond to pay all damages which defendant might sustain and all costs that might be incurred by him in consequence of suing out an attachment, in the event plaintiff should fail to recover in the case (the surety on the bond being a resident of Fulton county), and thereupon obtained an attachment returnable to the city court of Atlanta, in accordance with the statute, that court had jurisdiction of a suit subsequently brought against the principal and surety on the bond to recover damages arising from the suing out of such attachment. Continental Nat. Bank v. Folsom, 78 Ga. 449, 3 S. E. 269.

14. While the bankrupt and his assignee may maintain separate actions and recover, the assignee for the injury to the property, and the bankrupt for the personal tort, yet the aggregate recoveries cannot exceed the amount of the penalty where the action is

is the proper party to maintain an action independently of the bond for injuries caused by a wrongful levy of the attachment.[15] If, however, an attempt is made to enforce the liability for injuries resulting from a wrongful attachment by proceedings on the attachment bond, a different question arises. While it has been held that the assignee may maintain an action on the bond against the principal when the assignment was made prior to the attachment,[16] it has also been held that an action on the bond against the sureties cannot be maintained by the assignee.[17]

(c) Assignees of Attachment Bond. The assignee of an attachment bond may sue thereon in his own name, but defendant may have the benefit of any set-off he would have had against the assignor.[18]

(d) Joinder — (1) Where All Obligees Have Not Sustained Injury. Ordinarily the attachment bond is conditioned to pay attachment defendant or defendants such damages as he or they may sustain. The decisions are somewhat conflicting as regards the question of proper and necessary parties, where more than one obligee is named in the bond. According to the weight of authority, if one or any number of the obligees less than the whole is injured, the suit on the bond may be brought in the name of all for the benefit of the obligee or obligees injured;[19] and in a number of jurisdictions if one or more of the obligees sustain injury, he or they may sue alone without joining the obligee or obligees who have sustained no injury.[20]

(2) Where All Obligees Have Sustained Injury — (a) Where Injury Is Joint. Where all the obligees named in the bond have a common interest it cannot be doubted that they may join in an action on the bond;[21] and furthermore it is difficult to escape the conclusion that they must join.[22] sustained an injury in his own right, all the obligees may join in an action on the bond,[23] and it has been held that they must join;[24] and that too irrespective of the fact that each obligee employed different counsel to represent his respective interests and incurred separate counsel fees.[25] So it has been laid down without qualification that in an action by one of two joint obligees on a bond to recover the full amount of the bond the other is a necessary party to the action.[26]

(3) OBJECTIONS FOR DEFECTS OF PARTIES. If it appears from the complaint that all the obligees have not been joined as plaintiffs, the objection for this defect must be taken by demurrer, or it will be considered waived; but if the complaint fails to show who are the obligees, and if the bond was in fact payable to others beside plaintiffs, objection may be taken to its introduction in evidence, or a variance may be claimed and proper charges requested.[27]

(II) DEFENDANTS—(A) Joinder of Principal and Sureties. In an action on an attachment bond the principal alone may be sued,[28] or an action may be brought against the principal and sureties jointly.[29] There cannot, however, be two separate actions at the same time, one against the principal and another against the sureties.[30] Accordingly, a party who prosecutes concurrently these two actions will be put to his election as to which one he will prosecute.[31] There is some conflict of authority as to whether plaintiff in attachment may be joined in an action on the bond when he did not execute it. In some decisions it has been held that this cannot be done.[32] In other jurisdictions, however, it is held

Permitting principal to join as defendant. — In an action against the sureties by the assignee of defendant in the attachment for damages, where the principal, who is not made a party, has an unpaid judgment against attachment defendant, obtained in the attachment action, greatly in excess of the alleged damages, and defendant in the attachment is insolvent, the principal may become a party and defend, and, after the principal has been made a party, and has filed a verified answer setting forth all the foregoing facts, the court commits no error in refusing to allow plaintiff to dismiss his action against the principal, so that he may proceed against the sureties alone. (B) Joinder of Several Attaching Creditors. Where several creditors successively attach or otherwise impound the same fund of their debtor and give separate attachment bonds, they are not liable upon dismissal of their suits for a joint judgment for the damages resulting from the wrongful prosecution of their attachment suits. There is no joint tort by the several attaching creditors, no joint liability between the principals and sureties on the several bonds executed, and no connection between them at the time the attachments were sued out and the damage done.[34]

f. Pleadings — (I) Of Defendant in Attachment — (A) Necessity and Sufficiency of Allegations[35] — (1) As to Issue and Levy of Writ. Where an independent action is brought to recover for a wrongful attachment, whether on or independently of the attachment bond, the issue of the writ of attachment should be alleged.[36] It has been held, however, that where attachment defendant reconvenes on the attachment bond in the main action such allegation is unnecessary.[37] As regards the levy of an attachment, an examination of the ment was wrongful does not authorize a party bringing an action on the bond to join him with the sureties. Storz v. Finklestein, 48 Nebr. 27, 66 N. W. 1020, 30 L. R. A. 644.

In Miller v. Beck, (Iowa 1897) 72 N. W. 553, where attachments by different parties having different interests were simultaneously levied on the same property, and separate attachment bonds were given, it was held that the parties levying the attachments were not joint wrong-doers, and a recovery of damages on the bond of one and the satisfaction of the judgment therefor was no bar to an action on the bond given by another. But in another case, on identically the same state of facts, the court held that the levy of several attachments constituted but a single tort and a single cause of action, for which the attachment creditors were jointly and severally liable. It appearing, however, that the creditors acted without concert in good faith, having cause to believe that grounds of attachment existed, it was held that one of the creditors, who was compelled to satisfy the damages arising from the attachments in an action on the attachment bond given by him, was entitled to contribution from the other creditors who participated in the benefits accruing from the attachment proceedings. Vandiver v. Pollak, 107 Ala. 547, 18 So. 180, 54 Am. St. Rep. 118.

35. Depending upon character of remedy. — As hitherto shown (see supra, XVIII, B, 6, c) there exists in nearly every state, in addition to the action of malicious attachment elsewhere considered (see Malicious Prosecution), one or more remedies for injuries resulting from an attachment wrongfully, or wrongfully and maliciously, sued out. Thus, one or more of the following methods of procedure have been allowed in nearly all jurisdictions: The assessment of damages by the jury in the main action and rendition of judgment therein on the attachment bond on the adjudication of the wrongfulness of the attachment on a traverse of the affidavit, by plea in abatement, or by counter-affidavits; by set-off, or reconvention, in the main action; by counter-claim on the bond, or on the facts of the case independently of the bond; by a direct action on the bond, or by action on the facts of the case independently of it. The necessary allegations depend in a measure on the character of the remedy.

Establishment of title by writ of entry. — Where an attachment bond contains a provision that plaintiff shall first establish his title by a writ of entry, a declaration in an action on the bond which contains no averment that plaintiff has so established his title is demurrable. Berry v. Wasserman, (Mass. 1901) 61 N. E. 228.

36. Failure to object to sufficiency of allegation. — In an action on the bond, plaintiff did not directly allege that a writ of attachment had been issued, but did allege that "in obedience to the writ of attachment issued in said cause, the sheriff levied upon and attached the property of the plaintiff." The objection that the complaint nowhere directly alleges that a writ of attachment was issued, if made at all, must be made in the trial court, and cannot be first raised on an appeal. Hedrick v. Osborne, 99 Ind. 143. See, generally, Appeal and Error, 2 Cyc. 474.

37. Castro v. Whitlock, 15 Tex. 437, assigning as the reason that in pleading to a suit it is never necessary to aver the previous proceedings in the case, which appear to the court by the record.

decisions in proceedings for wrongful attachment shows that in the majority of cases it is usual to allege a levy,[38] although there seems to be some conflict of authority as to whether a levy is essential to give attachment defendant a cause of action.[39] If unnecessary to a cause of action, it would therefore be unnecessary to allege the issue of the attachment.[40] The pleadings in an action for wrongful attachment should describe the property levied on.[41] or state facts showing an excuse for failure to do so.[42]

(2) As to Execution and Approval of Bond. In an action on an attachment bond it must be alleged that the sureties joined in its execution,[43] and in jurisdictions where plaintiff in attachment must join in the execution of the bond, it would be insufficient to allege that he gave a bond to attachment defendant without alleging that he executed it.[44] But it is not necessary to allege that the undertaking was approved by the clerk who issued the writ.[45]

(3) As to Conditions of Bond and Breach Thereof. If an action to recover for wrongful attachment is brought on the bond[46] the provisions thereof must be set out.[47] The complaint in such an action must also show a breach of

43. Seattle Crockery Co. v. Haley, 6 Wash. 302, 33 Pac. 650, 36 Am. St. Rep. 156, where it was held that a mere statement that the bond was executed by the principal, without alleging that the sureties joined in its execution, was insufficient, although a copy was set out in the complaint, to which the names of the sureties were appended.

Variance.— In debt on an attachment bond, where the bond set out in the declaration recites that "Robert Cornell and Charles Cornell had, on the day of the date of said writing obligatory, prayed an attachment at the suit of said Robert and Charles Cornell, merchants and partners, using the name of Cornell & Brother," while the bond set out on oyer recites that "John J. Steiner hath, on the day of the date hereof, prayed an attachment at the suit of Robert and Charles Cornell, merchants and partners, using the name of Cornell & Brother," the variance is not material. These recitals do not form an essential portion of the condition of the bond. Dickson v. Bachelder, 21 Ala. 699. But a bond with three sureties on which an attachment in aid of an action is sued out is inadmissible to support a plea in the main action in reconvention for damages for wrongful attachment, declaring on an attachment bond with two sureties. Jordan v. Meyers, 89 Tex. 233, 34 S. W. 92. So in an action of debt on an attachment bond in which defendant pleaded non est factum and the instrument produced was not a bond but a covenant to pay one hundred dollars, or all damages plaintiff might sustain by reason of the issue of the attachment, it was held that, although oyer was not demanded by defendant or set forth, he could object to the variance at the trial, and that such variance was fatal. The obligors would be liable if the bond was actually executed and delivered to the clerk, and received by him and filed before issuing the process. Dothard v. Sheid, 69 Ala. 135.

46. Complaint held to be on bond.— In an action aided by attachment, a cross petition for wrongful attachment alleged that, when he sued out the writ, plaintiff filed a bond to pay all damages defendant might sustain by the wrongful suing out of the writ, and said bond and writ were made a part of the cross petition. The bondsmen were not made parties, and damages were claimed for a larger amount than the penalty of the bond. It was held that the cross-complaint was nevertheless on the bond, and not a proceeding at common law for maliciously suing out the attachment. Union Mercantile Co. v. Chandler, 90 Iowa 650, 57 N. W. 595.

47. Dunn v. Crocker, 22 Ind. 324; Bunt v. Rheum, 52 Iowa 619, 3 N. W. 667; Ryder v. Thomas, 32 Iowa 56.

Annexing a copy of the bond as an exhibit to the pleading is not a compliance with a statute providing that in an action on a bond party must notice its conditions, etc.; but where an answer in an attachment suit setting up a cross demand fails to set forth the con-

the conditions of the bond and must state the facts which constitute the same.[48]

(4) As to Wrongfulness of Attachment — (a) In General. Inasmuch as there can be no recovery for an attachment which is not wrongful, although the motive of the person suing it out may have been malicious,[49] it must follow that whatever may be the form of proceedings adopted in seeking to recover damages for an attachment the pleadings of attachment defendant must show that the attachment was wrongfully sued out.[50] The sufficiency of the allegations on this score depends somewhat on the character of the proceedings in which it is sought to recover damages. In some jurisdictions, in actions on the attachment bond, it would perhaps be sufficient to allege generally that the attachment was "wrongfully" sued out.[51]

(b) Negativing Grounds of Attachment in Express Terms — aa. In Suit Before Dissolution. In Alabama, when suit is brought on the attachment bond to recover damages before any adjudication in the main action as to the rightfulness of the attachment — this being the usual practice in this state, and expressly authorized by statute — there is considerable conflict of authority as to the necessity of expressly negativing the existence of grounds for attachment.[52] In another state ditions of the bond, but only annexes a copy of the bond, the pleading may be amended. Ryder v. Thomas, 32 Iowa 56.

Failure to file bond with petition.— Where the petition in an action on an attachment bond states a cause of action, the fact that the bond sued on is not filed with the petition, and no excuse given for not filing it, affords no ground for objection to the introduction of evidence, or for a motion in arrest of judgment. State v. Eldridge, 65 Mo. 584.

Reference to bond as being on file.— In pleading a set-off in an attachment suit for damages sustained on the attachment bond, reference in the answer to the bond as being on file is not sufficiently certain. Stadler v. Parmlee, 10 Iowa 23.

Setting out statute under which bond was given.—A bond given in attachment proceedings in another state, having been taken by a court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter, is good as a common-law bond, and it is not necessary to set out any statute under which it was taken in order to maintain an action thereon. Cunningham v. Jacobs, 120 Ind. 306, 22 N. E. 335.

In Texas it has been held that in an attachment suit a plea in reconvention, which alleges generally that the attachment was wrongfully sued out, is good on general demurrer, or on an objection to the admissibility of evidence under it to prove the facts from which the conclusion would follow. Black v. Drury, 24 Tex. 289.

52. In an early decision it was held sufficient to allege generally that the attachment was wrongfully sued out without any further statement denying the ground or grounds on which it was sued out. Dickson v. Bachelder, 21 Ala. 699. This rule was adopted in another decision, where it was alleged that the attachment was sued out wrongfully and maliciously. Gabel v. Hammerwell, 44 Ala. 336. Thereafter it was held that in an action on the bond for wrongfully and maliciously suing out an attachment it was necessary to negative the existence of the ground or grounds for the attachment stated in the affidavit. Durr v. Jackson, 59 Ala. 203. In the next decision, in point of time, the court, without noticing the one just mentioned, reached a contrary conclusion. Dothard v. Sheid, 69 Ala. 135. In later decisions, including some of very recent date, where the complaint alleged that the writ was sued out wrongfully and maliciously, or asked for exemplary damages, it was again held that the complaint must negative the ground or grounds stated in the affidavit (Painter v. Munn, 117 Ala. 322, 23 So. 83, 67 Am. St. Rep. 170; Brown v. Master, 104 Ala. 451, 16 So. 443; McLane v. McTighe, 89 Ala. 411, 8 So. 70; City Nat. Bank v. Jeffries, 73 Ala. 183; Flournoy v. Lyon, 70 Ala. 308); but in one of them it was denied that there was any necessity for stating that no

it has been held that in counter-claiming damages arising from the wrongful suing out of an attachment, the counter-claim apparently not being based on the bond, it is necessary to negative the truth of the matters stated in the application for the attachment.[53]

bb. In Suit After Dissolution. Whether an express denial of grounds for attachment alleged in the affidavit therefor is necessary in an action on an attachment bond, commenced after the dissolution of the attachment, is not altogether clear. So far as the reported decisions show, an attachment will not be considered wrongful merely because it has been dissolved on account of irregularities or informalities in the proceedings.[54] It is evident therefore that a mere statement that the attachment was dissolved does not show that it was wrongful.[55] Again, it has been held, in an action on an attachment bond, that it was insufficient to allege, in the language of the statute describing the terms of the bond, that the writ was "improperly" issued.[56] There are decisions, however, where the attachment was apparently dissolved on the merits, to the effect that in an action on the attachment bond an averment that the suit was not prosecuted to effect and that judgment was rendered dismissing the attachment prevents any inquiry into the truth of the affidavit for attachment,[57] and that the complaint should not deny the truth of the facts stated in the affidavit as grounds for the attachment.[58]

(5) Want of Probable Cause. Whether want of probable cause must be alleged depends upon two considerations: (1) the character of damages sought to be recovered; (2) the provisions of the statutes under which the action is brought. In jurisdictions where no liability for suing out an attachment arises unless it be shown that there was no probable cause therefor,[59] it is of course necessary to allege want of probable cause, although only actual damages are sought or the form of the proceeding is such that only actual damages are recoverable.[60] In most jurisdictions, however, want of probable cause is not a prerequisite to the recovery of such damages, and where they are asked there can be no necessity for alleging it, statutory grounds existed (Brown v. Master, 104 Ala. 451, 16 So. 443). In the latest decision on this question, and in another decision of very recent date, it was held that if exemplary damages are claimed the complaint must allege that the attachment was sued out without the existence of any statutory ground therefor. Hamilton v. Maxwell, 119 Ala. 23, 24 So. 769; Schloss v. Rovelsky, 107 Ala. 596, 18 So. 71. So in a number of cases in which only actual damages were asked it was held that if the indebtedness was not denied the complaint should in some form negative the existence of any statutory grounds for the suing out of the attachment (Painter v. Munn, 117 Ala. 322, 23 So. 83, 67 Am. St. Rep. 170; Crofford v. Vassar, 95 Ala. 548, 10 So. 350); and the reason assigned is that the non-existence of the particular ground averred in the affidavit, or of any particular ground, does not render the attachment wrongful (Painter v. Munn, 117 Ala. 322, 23 So. 83, 67 Am. St. Rep. 170).

53. Swan v. Smith, 26 Iowa 87, the rule in this state differing from that in Alabama in this respect, that an attachment is considered wrongful if the ground stated in the affidavit does not exist.

54. See supra, XV, A.

55. And it has been so held in a decision, from which it may be reasonably inferred that it will be sufficient either to allege generally that the attachment was wrongfully sued out or the facts from which this may be inferred. Eaton v. Bartscherer, 5 Nebr. 469.

56. Steen v. Ross, 22 Fla. 480, holding that the complaint should state in what the "impropriety" consisted, that is to say, that no cause of action of the class in which the attachment might be sued out existed, or that the ground alleged in the affidavit was untrue, or not one of the grounds enumerated, which must exist before a writ can be obtained.

A complaint which negatived the performance of the conditions of the bond in the words of the contract, and otherwise good, was deemed to be sufficient on demurrer. Sannes v. Ross, 105 Ind. 558, 5 N. E. 699.

58. Bennett v. Southern Bank, 61 Mo. App. 297, where the reason assigned is that this question has already been determined in the main suit and cannot be retried in the suit on the bond.

Allegations of this character should be stricken out on motion; but the overruling of such motion is not such error as will prejudice defendant. Bennett v. Southern Bank, 61 Mo. App. 297.

59. See supra, XVIII, B, 1, b.

60. Bunt v. Rheum, 52 Iowa 619, 3 N. W. 667; Burton v. Knapp, 14 Iowa 196, 81 Am. Dec. 465; Mahnke v. Damon, 3 Iowa 107;

whatever may be the character of the proceeding in which a recovery is sought.[61] On the other hand, if the party asks exemplary or punitive damages, want of probable cause must be alleged, whether the proceeding be based on the bond or independently of it.[62] Merely alleging that the attachment was sued out maliciously is insufficient.[63]

(6) MALICE. In an action on an attachment bond, if only actual damages are sought an averment of malice on the part of plaintiff in attachment in suing out the writ is unnecessary.[64] In respect to exemplary or punitive damages, where an action lies independently of the bond to recover either actual or punitive damages, it has been held that malice must be alleged in order to warrant a recovery of exemplary or punitive damages.[65] Again it has been determined that where the bond is held to cover exemplary or punitive damages, there can be no recovery of such damages in an action thereon in the absence of an allegation of malice.[66] In Alabama, an examination of the decisions will show that in actions on bonds it is usual to allege in express terms that the writ was "maliciously" or "vexatiously" sued out when a recovery of exemplary damages is asked.[67]

(7) DISSOLUTION OF ATTACHMENT OR TERMINATION OF MAIN ACTION.[68] In jurisdictions where it is not necessary to the accrual of the right of action that a final judgment should have been rendered in favor of attachment defendant,[69]

Surplusage.— If it is alleged, it will be regarded merely as surplusage, and will not render the pleading demurrable. Mitchell v. Mattingly, 1 Metc. (Ky.) 237.

62. Hamilton v. Maxwell, 119 Ala. 23, 24 So. 769; Schloss v. Rovelsky, 107 Ala. 596, 18 So. 71; Crofford v. Vassar, 95 Ala. 548, 10 So. 350; McLane v. McTighe, 89 Ala. 411, 8 So. 70; City Nat. Bank v. Jeffries, 73 Ala. 183; Elser v. Pierce, 2 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 737. Compare Dothard v. Sheid, 69 Ala. 135; Gable v. Hammerwell, 44 Ala. 336, where complaints were approved which contained no direct averment of want of probable cause. In both cases the question as to the sufficiency of the complaint arose on demurrer, and it is not easy to see whether the court intended to hold that the complaint was sufficient to authorize the recovery of actual damages or of exemplary damages as well. In the first-mentioned case, the averment was that the attachment was wrongfully, vexatiously, and maliciously sued out, and in the second that it was vexatiously and wrongfully sued out. If the court intended to hold that exemplary damages could be recovered under such complaints, these decisions are squarely in conflict with the other Alabama decisions above cited.

63. If it were malicious and unfounded, but there was probable cause for suing out the attachment, nothing more than actual damages can be recovered. Elser v. Pierce, 2 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 737.

There seems to be some doubt as to whether an express averment to this effect is necessary in this state. In one decision, in which the question seems to have received casual consideration, it is said that the absence of probable cause, coupled with the unlawful act of suing out the writ, is the vexatious or malicious abuse of the process, against which the statute intends to guard, and for which the jury are authorized to give vindictive damages. Durr v. Jackson, 59 Ala. 203. Compare Schloss v. Rovelsky, 107 Ala. 596, 599, 18 So. 71, where it was said: "We are not prepared to hold . . . 'that if no statutory ground existed for the attachment, and that defendant did not reasonably believe that one did exist,' that plaintiff was entitled to recover punitive damages. These facts are evidence to be considered by the jury, and it is for the jury to say from these facts and all the evidence whether the attachment was maliciously sued out."

68. Replication unnecessary, when.—Where in a suit on an attachment bond a petition alleges the rendition of judgment for the attachment defendant on plea in abatement, and the answer sets up that a motion for new trial was still pending and undisposed of, this does not constitute new matter requiring a replication. State v. Williams, 48 Mo. 210.

69. See supra, XVIII, B, 3, b.

it is of course unnecessary to allege such final determination of the action, but it will be sufficient to show that the attachment had been dissolved.[70] It is equally obvious that if no cause of action accrues until the dissolution of the attachment[71] the fact of dissolution should be alleged in a direct action to recover for wrongful attachment.[72] By parity of reasoning, if a final determination of the suit in which the attachment was sued out in favor of attachment defendant is essential to a cause of action for wrongful attachment, whether based on the bond or brought independently thereof,[73] it would be necessary to show this fact by some appropriate form of averment.[74]

(8) Damages — (a) Necessity of Alleging. In proceedings to recover for injuries resulting from an attachment, it is necessary to allege that damages have actually been sustained whatever may be the character of such proceedings;[75] and if a recovery of special damages is sought such damages must be specially pleaded.[76] The following items of damages have been held not recoverable unless specially pleaded: A depreciation in the value of the property seized under the attachment;[77] attorney's fees expended in relation to the attachment;[78] injuries caused by loss of reputation;[79] special injuries resulting from loss of credit;[80]

Alleging dismissal of appeal from judgment of dissolution.—An attachment having been set aside by the district court, and an appeal taken from the judgment, suit was brought on the bond for damages while the appeal was pending. Defendant in the suit for damages pleaded prematurity of action. Plaintiff was then allowed by a rule of court to amend, and allege that since the institution of the suit the supreme court had decided the attachment case on appeal. It was held proper to permit the amendment. McDaniel v. Gardner, 34 La. Ann. 341.

Sufficiency of allegation.— In an action for wrongful attachment, an allegation in the petition that the attachment was quashed, with a reference to the record in the attachment suit, is sufficient. Warner v. Bailey, 7 Tex. 517.

Demand for interest.—Under a statute providing that in a suit on a penal bond the judgment shall be rendered for the sum really due with interest and costs, it is not necessary to authorize the allowance of interest in an action on an attachment bond, although it should be demanded in the petition. State v. Gold Spring Distilling Co., 72 Mo. App. 573.

Whether an allegation of demand for damages provided for in an attachment bond must be made depends on whether or not a demand is necessary to give a cause of action on the bond. Variance.— In an action on an attachment bond, where it is alleged that plaintiff had actually contracted for the sale of grain after it had been attached, and the evidence rejected was that he had a conditional promise that upon a certain contingency the buyers would take the grain, and that contingency afterward happened, it was held, without deciding whether the rejected evidence made out a ground for special damage or not, that it was a variance which might be disregarded. Alleging payment of counsel fees.— In California counsel fees are not recoverable until they have been actually paid, and a complaint in an action on an attachment bond, asking counsel fees in a designated sum, but not alleging that they have been paid, will not authorize the recovery of such fees. expenses incurred in traveling to the place of trial;[81] and special injuries to business.[82]

(b) Sufficiency of Allegations. The allegations should be made with such certainty and definiteness[83] as to admit all competent and material evidence tending to prove the damages sustained and sought to be recovered.[84] Under a general allegation of "injury to credit," evidence of a general loss of credit is permissible, but not evidence of special injury by loss of credit with particular persons.[85] Although it is better to itemize the damages, yet a gross sum may be claimed embracing each item.[86] If special damages are claimed on more than one ground, and if any of the damages are recoverable, a demurrer to the entire complaint is properly overruled.[87]

(9) Non-Payment of Damages. In proceedings based on an attachment bond for injuries caused by the wrongful suing out of an attachment, it is necessary to allege that the damages have not been paid;[88] otherwise the pleading will be fatally defective.[89] If a recovery of costs in the attachment suit is sought in an

84. Recovery of attorney fees and extra expenditures in the suit is authorized under an allegation that plaintiff was required to pay out large sums of money in the defense of the suit, suffered a loss of time in attending thereto, was deprived of the use of the money attached, and was injured in his business. State v. McHale, 16 Mo. App. 478. Compare Crofford v. Vassar, 95 Ala. 548, 10 So. 350, where it was held that a complaint claiming "special damages in the sum of one hundred dollars, in that by the said attachment he was put to the expense of employing ınsel to defend said attachment suit," is not sufficient without a statement of some amount paid or incurred.

That plaintiff was compelled to expend "large sums of money and was put to great expense and trouble in and about defending said action of attachment to-wit: five hundred dollars," is sufficient to admit evidence of special damages, such as lawyer's fees, hotel bills, etc. Kelly v. Beauchamp, 59 Mo. 178.

General averment of injuries to business, reputation, and credit.— Under an allegation that in consequence of the attachment, attachment defendant's business, reputation and credit have been destroyed and lost, and his customers have withdrawn, it is not competent to show that he was maki.ıg advances to timber men and others, and that thereby he became interested in the handling of timber and crops; that his mercantile business being stopped, he lost his advantages, and lost his advances and the shipment of his timber. That was the condition of the obligation, viz., that they should pay all costs and all damages which he might sustain by reason of the attachment."

Failure to allege non-payment of damages may be urged for the first time upon a motion for a new trial, although it should ordinarily be taken advantage of by demurrer. Hencke v. Johnson, 62 Iowa 555, 17 N. W. 766. But compare Knapp v. Barnard, 78 Iowa 347, 43 N. It was held that under these circumstances the defect in failing to allege non-payment was waived. This case assumes to distinguish Hencke v. Johnson, 62 Iowa 555, 17 N. W. 766, supra.

action on the bond it is not sufficient to allege generally that such costs have not been paid. The amount thereof should be stated.[90]

(B) Joinder of Causes of Action. A plaintiff may proceed in one action for damages for breaches of two or more attachment bonds executed by the obligor in his favor;[91] and it has been held that the owner of goods wrongfully attached is not compelled to elect to sue plaintiff in attachment independently for the wrongful act of the bond, or to sue him and his surety on the bond, but may sue plaintiff independently of the bond and join the surety, counting on the bond.[92] Where it is permissible to sue independently of the bond for a merely wrongful attachment, it has been held that it is not necessary to sue on one count for the wrongful and on another for the malicious attachment of property, the reason being that if an action on the case will lie for wrongful attachment malice merely goes in aggravation of damages.[93]

(II) Of Plaintiff in Attachment[94]—(A) General Issue or General Denial. Under a plea of general issue or general denial it is proper to show a judgment on the merits in favor of attachment defendant;[95] or that the proceeds of the sale of the attached property were credited to the attachment debtor in the original proceeding, in order to reduce the amount of recovery to that extent.[96] Under the general denial attachment plaintiff may show that he had stated the facts within his knowledge to his attorney before suing out the writ, and had been advised by him that the writ was authorized.[97]

A plea of de injuria may also be filed.[99]

g. Defenses — (1) In General. It is a sufficient defense to an action on an attachment bond that the bond is void;[1] that action thereon is premature;[2] or that there has been a material alteration of the writ of attachment after its issue.[3] So it is a good defense against a claim for damages caused by wrongful attachment that the affidavit was founded on statements made by defendant in attachment to plaintiff,[4] or to third persons and communicated to plaintiff,[5] if such statements are sufficient to authorize an attachment; that title to the property attached passed from attachment defendant before the levy;[6] that the attachment was dissolved under statute by filing a bond for the restitution of the property;[7] that defendant in attachment after claiming that the property was exempt made no defense in the proceedings, and allowed judgment to be entered and the property sold without further protest.[8] The recovery of final judgment by plaintiff in attachment is also a defense.[9] On the other hand, it is not a defense to a claim for damages for wrongful attachment against the sureties on the attachment bond that the declaration in the main action was amended as to a merely formal defect;[10] that other persons than plaintiff, and without his privity, procured the undertaking to be executed;[11]

Proof of execution of an attachment bond by parties sued thereon interposing a plea of non est factum verified by affidavit, which is the only issue in the case, is sufficient to entitle plaintiffs to recover. Fitzsimmons v. Hall, 84 Ill. 538.

ment;[26] or that a motion to dissolve an attachment was overruled, where the motion was made under a statute authorizing a motion to discharge for insufficiency of statement of cause "or any other cause making it apparent of record that the attachment should not have been issued, or should not have been levied on a part or all of the property seized;"[27] or, where the claim is based on the bond, that the original plaintiff has ceased to be such and a third party substituted as a party in his stead.[28] Attachment defendant may bring an action for the wrongful attachment at any time within the statutory period of limitation, and cannot lose his right by failing to notify the surety of his intentions in that regard.[29]

(II) Advice of Counsel. The fact that the writ was sued out on the advice of counsel is under no circumstances a defense to a claim for actual or compensatory damages;[30] and in order that advice of counsel may constitute a defense to a claim for exemplary or punitive damages it is essential that a full and fair statement of the facts should have been made to counsel,[31] and that the advice was followed in good faith.[32]

(III) Consent to Attachment. While a debtor's consent to attachment may not create a ground therefor, it is a complete defense to an action by him for wrongful attachment;[33] and it has been held that if the debtor is a firm, the consent of one partner to an attachment against the partnership property bars his right to recover for injuries sustained thereby.[34]

This decision proceeds by analogy to the rule that one partner has no general authority to bind the partnership of the non-assenting partners by confessing judgment without the consent of the partnership.

If such consent is not collusive it will bind the firm. If, however, the consent is not collusive, only the consenting partner will be estopped to sue for wrongful attachment.

there are decisions which lay down the rule that if a valid claim and a ground or grounds of attachment existed at the time the attachment was sued out, this may be shown as a complete defense to an action for wrongful attachment, notwithstanding the non-existence of the grounds stated in the affidavit;[35] the weight of authority seems to be against this rule, the better doctrine being to the effect that the investigation should be limited to the ground or grounds stated in the application for the writ of attachment.[36]

(v) Good Faith of Attachment Plaintiff. As already shown, it is the rule in most jurisdictions that actual damages caused by an attachment which was merely wrongful are recoverable.[37] In these jurisdictions the good faith of attachment plaintiff in suing out the writ is no defense to a claim for actual damages.[38] If, however, exemplary or punitive damages are also claimed the good faith of attachment plaintiff would be a sufficient defense, as regards the recovery of that kind of damages.[39]

(vi) Illegality of Claim Sued On. The illegality of the claim in aid of which the attachment was sued out and a bond given is no defense to an action on the bond.[40] Nor is it any defense to such action that the issue and execution

35. This is the rule in Alabama, and the view taken is that under these circumstances the attachment was not wrongful, and defendant could not have been injured thereby. Painter v. Munn, 117 Ala. 322, 23 So. 83, 67 Am. St. Rep. 170; Baxley v. Segrest, 85 Ala. 183, 4 So. 865; Gabel v. Hammerwell, 44 Ala. 336; Lockhart v. Woods, 38 Ala. 631; Kirksey v. Jones, 7 Ala. 622, 629 (where it was said: "The question is, not whether the precise ground stated in the affidavit is true, for it is obvious that the plaintiff has sustained no legal damage by the writ, if it was proper to be issued by changing the terms of the affidavit").

36. In Iowa, under a statute providing that in an action on the bond plaintiff may recover if he shows that the attachment was wrongfully sued out, and that there was no reasonable cause to believe the ground upon which the same was issued to be true, investigation is limited to the very ground stated in the petition. Ringen Stove Co. v. Bowers, 109 Iowa 175, 80 N. W. 318.

In Pennsylvania it has been held that where the condition of the bond is to prosecute the action with effect and recover judgment against defendant or pay damages sustained by reason of attachment, it is no defense to an action thereon that a cause for attachment existed. Hibbs v. Blair, 14 Pa. St. 413.

In Texas it is not a defense to a claim for actual damages caused by wrongful attachment that valid grounds existed for an attachment, if the grounds stated in the affidavit did not in fact exist (Blum v. Strong, 71 Tex. 321, 6 S. W. 167), or were found insufficient (Woods v. Huffman, 64 Tex. 98). The reasoning on this question in Blum v. Strong, 71 Tex. 321, 326, 6 S. W. 167, is as follows: "That a debtor has done a certain act that would authorize an attachment, is no sufficient reason for a creditor to make affidavit of other acts not in fact true, and thereby cause a loss to the debtor; and if he does so, he ought not be heard to say: 'It is true I made a false affidavit to procure the attachment, but you were guilty of other acts which, if known in time, would have justified me in procuring an attachment on those grounds, and therefore you are not wronged.'"

40. Claim based on unconstitutional statute.— Thus, the obligors on an attachment bond, given in a suit brought under a special statute to recover damages allowed thereby, cannot plead the unconstitutionality of the act in avoidance of their liability on the bond. State v. Stark, 75 Mo. 566.

So where a party brings action for a reward offered by a lottery company to pay a certain sum to any person who would present a prize ticket which had not been promptly paid, the bond having been properly executed and its breach established, deof a void writ of attachment was in strict compliance with a statute, where such statute was unconstitutional.[41]

(VII) Irregularities in Proceedings—(A) In General. Irregularities in attachment proceedings are not available as a defense in an action on the attachment bond.[42] It has accordingly been held that it cannot be pleaded or proved as a defense that no writ of attachment had ever been sued out;[43] that there was a misnomer of attachment defendant if process was served on him;[44] that the levy was invalid for want of notice thereof to defendant, as required by law;[45] that attachment plaintiff failed to file a new affidavit and undertaking upon adding a new cause of action to the complaint;[46] or that no affidavit had been filed in the attachment proceeding.[47]

(B) Irregularities in Bond. It is not a defense to an action on a bond that it was not executed until after the issue of the writ, for which reason the writ was quashed;[48] that the penalty of the bond was for a slightly larger amount than required by statute;[49] or that the person executing the bond does not appear to have been the agent of attachment plaintiff.[50] It has been held, however, that the sureties on the attachment bond are not liable thereon when the bond is unsealed.[51]

(VIII) Probable Cause. Except where probable cause is under the statutes essential to a right of action for injuries resulting from the suing out of an attachment,[52] the fact that there was such is no defense to a claim for actual damages caused by the attachment if wrongful.[53] It may nevertheless be shown in mitigation of vindictive damages.[54]

(IX) Return of Property. The return of property taken under a wrongful attachment does not furnish a complete defense.[55]

(X) Subsequent Seizure. It has been held that while attachment plaintiff cannot make a complete defense by showing that he caused a subsequent valid writ to be levied on the property for the owner's debt, this fact may nevertheless be shown in mitigation of damages;[56] but in a suit to recover damages for wrong-fendant cannot escape its obligations by going behind the bond and saying that it grew out of an illegal transaction. State v. Fargo, 151 Mo. 280, 52 S. W. 199.

In Illinois, however, it has been held that where property has been wrongfully attached, ful attachment it cannot be shown that other attachments than defendant's were subsequently levied on the property.[57]

(xi) Truth of Facts Stated in Affidavit. Where in the main action the issue as to the rightfulness of an attachment has been decided adversely to plaintiff in attachment, he cannot, when made a defendant in an action on the attachment bond, set up as a defense that the facts stated in the affidavit were not true, or that the proceedings in attachment were wrongful.[58] Where, however, suit is brought on the attachment bond before a termination of that issue, as may be done in some jurisdictions, the converse of this doctrine is true.[59]

h. Set-Off. In an action on an attachment bond defendant therein may set off a judgment recovered in the action in which the attachment issued against the damages sustained by the wrongful attachment;[60] and this is true, although such judgment is against attachment defendant and another, who was not a party to the attachment proceedings.[61] So it has been held that where attached property has been sold, and the proceeds applied on a judgment, the amount so applied should be deducted from the damages recoverable by defendant on a dissolution of the attachment on appeal.[62]

i. Evidence — (i) Burden of Proof. The burden of proving the wrongfulness of the attachment is with the party seeking to recover damages for injuries caused thereby,[63] by showing such facts and circumstances as tend to and plaintiff in attachment subsequently seizes it under valid process and applies the property so seized to the payment of the owner's debt without his consent, such application of the property cannot be shown either in defense or in mitigation of damages for the wrongful attachment. establish the truth of what he asserts.[64] The burden of proof is on him also to show want of probable cause,[65] that his property has been levied upon,[66] and that he has been injured thereby,[67] where such matters are prerequisites to his recovery; and if exemplary or punitive damages are sought he also has the burden of proving want of probable cause and malice.[68]

(II) Admissibility — (A) In General. In a suit on an attachment bond the record in the original suit is admissible in behalf of plaintiff,[69] and its exclusion is not warranted by the fact that it had not been filed with the complaint.[70] To show injury by the seizure of property, because of inability to fulfil a contract of sale thereof, the contract may be proved by parol evidence on showing that it has been destroyed.[71] If the general reputation of attachment defendant is put in issue by the evidence he may offer evidence to sustain it.[72]

(B) In Relation to Grounds of Attachment — (1) In General. Where an attachment is sued out on the ground of intent to defraud creditors, testimony as to the financial condition of attachment defendant, although not known to plaintiff in attachment, is admissible as tending to show the truth or falsity of the charge.[73]

(2) That Debtor Is About to Remove From State or County. As tending to show that attachment defendant was about to remove from the state or county, evidence is admissible of his declarations, if made before the suing out of the attachment writ,[74] as well as efforts on the part of attachment defendant to sell

The bond should be received in evidence as also testimony showing the manner of its execution, where suit is brought on a bond purporting to be executed by the attorney of attachment plaintiff in his behalf, the latter denies its execution under oath, and the testimony tends to prove the agency of the attorney and the ratification of his act in bringing the suit by the principal. Evidence that defendants had refused to pay or secure debts to others than plaintiff, that judgment had been obtained against them, and that they had not acted as honest men ordinarily would have done, is not objectionable, on the ground of it being immaterial how defendants were indebted to others, or because it related to a part only of the defendants. Dent v. Smith, 53 Iowa 262, 5 N. W. 143.

74. Declarations of attachment defendant, tending to show preparations for removal from the state, if made after the suing out of the writ are not admissible against him; but if the evidence leaves it doubtful whether such declarations were made before or after that time, the jury should be left to decide that question, and the declarations should be allowed to go to them under proper instructions on that point. Baldwin v. Walker, 94 Ala. 514, 10 So. 391.

In behalf of attachment defendant declarations made anterior to the suing out of the attachment, explaining his intention to leave his property.[75] It is not competent for attachment defendant to testify as to an uncommunicated intention to remain within the state.[76] Nor can he show that it was generally reputed in the neighborhood in which he lived that he was merely leaving the state on a temporary visit;[77] although where it is admitted that defendant left the state in the summer in which the attachment was sued out, he may show that it was his habit to leave the state on a visit every summer.[78] Any evidence tending to show that plaintiff was removing his property from the county, and that at the time he was clouding the title as to a part of the property so to be removed is admissible to show fraudulent intent on his part.[79]

(3) That Defendant Is About to Fraudulently Dispose of Property. In proceedings to recover for wrongful attachment, sued out on the ground that defendant therein was about to dispose of or convey his property in fraud of creditors, it is competent to prove in support of the proceedings all acts of defendant which tend to show such intent, whether before or after the attachment.[80] In behalf of himself attachment defendant may show his own acts prior to the application for attachment, which tend to establish his intention to pay his debts.[81] He cannot, however, testify that a certain act, done by him after the attachment, was caused thereby, when nothing appears to show that this was other than a secret and uncommunicated motive;[82] nor can he testify as to whether he was about to convey his property to defraud creditors.[83] He may show that all the state only temporarily, are not a part of the res gestæ and are not admissible. Baldwin v. Walker, 91 Ala. 428, 8 So. 364; Jackson v. Smith, 75 Ala. 97; Havis v. Taylor, 13 Ala. 324. But see Offutt v. Edwards, 9 Rob. (La.) 90, where it was held that if such declarations were made a short time before the attachment and before leaving the state they should be admitted in evidence. To render such declarations competent it is necessary that they be made at the time of leaving and in explanation of the act. Baldwin v. Walker, 91 Ala. 428, 8 So. 364.

75. Troy v. Rogers, 113 Ala. 131, 20 So. 999, where it is held that in an action for wrongful attachment, sued out on the ground that attachment defendant was about to remove from the state, he may be properly required to testify that he made efforts to sell his personal property, and state that he expected to go to another state and engage in business there.

Testimony as to what defendants were doing in their business is only competent so far as it expresses their intentions as known to attachment plaintiff. Ruthven v. Beckwith, 84 Iowa 715, 45 N. W. 1073, 51 N. W. 153.

Statements of attachment defendant.— If it is shown that attachment defendant was negotiating at the time the attachment was sued out for a sale of his property at a low price, evidence is admissible of a statement by him that he "was involved and broke." Lockhart v. Woods, 38 Ala. 631.

That attachment defendant was embarrassed in his pecuniary affairs and pressed for money when writ issued cannot be shown unless the relevance of the evidence is shown by its connection with some question of fraud. Floyd v. Hamilton, 33 Ala. 235.

Testimony held not within rule.— On an issue as to the rightfulness of an attachment, testimony by attachment defendant that he had made no arrangement to dispose of the property except in the usual course of business, and to utilize the proceeds to pay his debts, is admissible, and is not objectionable as stating the unexpressed intention of defendant in disposing of the property. 83. Charles City Plow, etc., Co. v. Jones, the money received by him in his business, other than that necessary for his family, was used to pay his debts.[84]

(4) That Defendant Has Conveyed Property to Defraud Creditors. In proceedings to recover for injuries caused by wrongful attachment, issued on the ground that defendant therein had conveyed property to defraud creditors, attachment plaintiff may question the party to whom the goods were conveyed as to the price paid, to determine the question of attachment defendant's good faith, and the memory of the witness may be refreshed by showing him an invoice of the goods.[85] In his own behalf attachment defendant's testimony respecting his intent in disposing of his property is inadmissible;[86] as are also secret instructions given only to his employees in regard to the conduct of the business.[87]

(5) That Defendant Is Fraudulently Withholding Means From Creditors. In an action for wrongful attachment, based on the ground that the debtor was fraudulently withholding means from his creditors, he may show in his own behalf that he had paid out large sums to creditors during the year preceding the levy,[88] or that at the time the attachment was sued out, he was a man of large means, and had a large amount of property about him and under his control, claiming it openly and notoriously as his own.[89]

(c) In Relation to Malice of Attachment Plaintiff—(1) To Show Malice. In actions to recover for wrongful attachment declarations of attachment plaintiff may be admissible as tending to show malice on his part,[90] and evidence of his declarations to his attorney as to his reasons for suing out the writ, made at the time of suing it out, is also admissible as a part of the res gestæ.[91] On the other hand, acts and declarations of the attorney of plaintiff in attachment, of which he is not informed, cannot be shown for the purpose of proving malice on his part;[92] and the same is the case in regard to statements of his counsel made subsequently to the attachment.[93] So, it has been held competent for the purpose of proving malice to show that plaintiff in attachment procured two attachments in one week,[94] or to adduce evidence of attachment defendant's reputation for solvency and ability to pay his debts;[95] and where the debtors sued in attachment were a partnership it is competent to prove a wrongful levy of the attachment on

Where the business of attachment defendant is the baling and shipping of hay, his testimony as to delays in getting cars for shipment is admissible as showing the general course of business and as bearing on the question of intent to defraud. It is competent therefore to show that attachment plaintiff said he had more money than the defendant in attachment had to spend in a lawsuit (Dothard v. Sheid, 69 Ala. 135); or that attaching creditor went to the field of attachment defendant and threatened to prosecute him if he did not stop shucking certain corn, which he claimed under the attachment, and a part of which he took (Byford v. Girton, 90 Iowa 661, 57 N. W. 588); or that some months before the attachment, attachment plaintiff had declared that he intended to get everything that defendant made for nothing (Crofford v. Vassar, 95 Ala. 448, 10 So. 350).

the individual property of one of the partners, and attendant circumstances of aggravation, wantonness, or gross negligence, for the purpose of proving malice.[96]

(2) To Show Absence of Malice. To show absence of malice, attachment plaintiff may introduce evidence of attachments against attachment defendant levied prior to his own, provided he knew of them, but not otherwise;[97] that the debt upon which the attachment issued was actually due;[98] that prior to the suing out of the writ attachment defendant had admitted the facts on which the affidavit for attachment was based;[99] that at the time of the suing out of writ defendant in attachment was greatly involved in debt;[1] that attachment plaintiff acted on the advice of counsel given on a full statement of the facts.[2] Plaintiff in attachment cannot, however, testify that he acted without malice in suing out the attachment.[3]

(D) In Relation to Probable Cause. In proceedings to recover for injuries caused by wrongful attachment, facts and circumstances within the knowledge of attachment plaintiff, such as gave him reason to believe the truth of the facts stated in the affidavit, are competent evidence to show probable cause for suing out the writ.[4] On this question, it is also competent to show the amount of

The following evidence has been held inadmissible to prove malice on the part of attachment plaintiff: Slanderous words or declarations made by him after the commencement of the suit, unless they relate directly to the act of suing out the attachment (Burton v. Knapp, 14 Iowa 196, 81 Am. Dec. 465); evidence that plaintiff in attachment was angry with the defendant therein after the time of the levy (Yarborough v. Weaver, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 215, 25 S. W. 468); the sending of notices of the attachment to the commercial papers, if plaintiff is not first connected with the sending of such notices (Jamison v. Weaver, 81 Iowa 212, 46 N. W. 996); evidence of the value of the property seized, where it is not proposed to show that the levy was made on more property than the writ authorized, or that plaintiff in attachment gave directions as to the property on which it should be levied (Deere v. Bagley, 80 Iowa 197, 45 N. W. 557).

Nor is it permissible to introduce affidavits for continuance made by the sheriff, attachment plaintiffs' attorneys, and others in the case in support of the theory that the attaching creditors and the sheriff knew that the debtor's transfer of his goods was an honest one, and that the attachments were levied for vexatious purposes, and to compel the grantee to pay the grantor's debts. Evidence of his remarks at the time he procured the writ is likewise inadmissible in his behalf to show his motives. Shuck v. Vanderventer, 4 Greene (Iowa) 264. So where evidence was introduced of a statement by plaintiff in attachment, tending to show the motive which actuated him in suing out the writ, his explanation of what he meant by that statement was held to be admissible. It may therefore be shown when and how the debt for which the attachment issued originated, what occurred from time to time as to its payment, and what defendant did and said in relation thereto (Dent v. Smith, 53 Iowa 262, 5 N. W. 143); that another creditor telegraphed plaintiff in attachment that the debtor was sure to fail, and to attach (Citizens Nat. Bank v. Converse, 105 Iowa 669, 75 N. W. 506); what were the circumstances and outcome of an attachment issued five weeks previous to the one sued out by plaintiff in attachment (Willis v. McNeill, 57 Tex. 465); that defendant in attachment intended to "fix his property," so that plaintiff in attachment could not collect his debt (Dent v. Smith, 53 Iowa 262, 5 N. W. 143); that one of the attachment defendants had conveyed realty to another, and that it had been reconveyed to him, although this was done some time previous to the attachment (Dent v. Smith 53 Iowa 262, 5 N. W. 143).

(E) To Identify Plaintiff in Suit at Bar With Attachment Defendant. In an action on an attachment bond to recover damages for a wrongful attachment, it is competent to identify plaintiff as the real defendant in the attachment proceedings, doing business under the name of the obligee named in such bond.[8]

(F) To Identify Property Sold. In support of a counter-claim for damages caused by a wrongful attachment of a stock of goods, attachment defendant's inventory of the stock is admissible in connection with other evidence on the question of the identity of the property sold.[9]

(G) To Show Quantity of Property Seized. It has been held that in an action for wrongful attachment the return of an officer making a levy is conclusive as to the quantity of goods sold.[10]

(H) To Show Value of Property Attached. In determining the value of the property attached at the time of the attachment it is competent to show what it cost,[11] or what it brought at sheriff's sale, shortly after the seizure.[12] A sworn Jefferson County Sav. Bank v. Eborn, 84 Ala. 529, 4 So. 386. It is further held that, although to determine the quantity of goods seized it is not competent to show the percentage of profits on goods sold, it is permissible to prove for this purpose the amount of goods on hand at any particular time, the quantity sold by way of diminution, and the stock with all additions made to it by accretions in the meantime. Evidence to show unsalability of goods attached.— In an action for wrongful attachment, evidence on cross-examination of plaintiff's witness, who had been interested as purchaser of the goods subsequently to attachment, tending to show that they were unsalable, is admissible on the question of damages. The testimony tends to show that the goods were of less value than claimed by attachment defendant. Armstrong v. Ames, etc., Co., 17 Tex. Civ. App. 46, 43 S. W. 302.

The auctioneer making the sale, who had been engaged in that business for a long time, may testify that in his opinion they brought a fair price under the circumstances. Marx v. Leinkauff, 93 Ala. 453, 9 So. 818.

Written bids for the property made after appraisal made under a sheriff's levy on attachment,[13] or an inventory of the stock of goods seized made by defendant in attachment,[14] is also admissible for this purpose; but it is not competent to show the amount of insurance that attachment defendant had on the property seized.[15] A deputy sheriff who did not levy the attachment may testify as to the value of the goods, where a few days prior to the levy thereof he seized the same goods under a writ of detinue.[16]

(I) To Show Damages Sustained. Where exemplary or punitive damages are asked, attachment plaintiff should be permitted to show that he acted without malice;[17] otherwise if only actual damages are sought.[18] As a basis for the recovery of exemplary damages for injuries to business, it is competent to show that after the suing out of the attachment a number of plaintiff's customers had withdrawn from trading with him;[19] but the amount of business done since the attachment is not competent evidence.[20] To prove injuries to credit, it is competent to introduce evidence that an account of the attachment proceedings was published in a daily paper and to show the extent of its circulation.[21] Attachment defendant cannot, however, be permitted to testify that his credit was damaged in a designated amount.[22] For attachment plaintiff, evidence that attachment defendant was reputed insolvent at the time of the attachment is competent on the question whether the latter has sustained any, and what, injury to his credit;[23] but evidence that attachment defendant was a man of limited means is not admissible in his own behalf.[24] Where realty and personalty are both attached, and attachment defendant is not deprived of the use of the realty, the value thereof is immaterial on the question of damages for the seizure of the personalty.[25] The improper rejection of evidence in respect of damages may under some circumstances constitute harmless error.[26] So in some instances advertisement by the receiver appointed therein are admissible in evidence, as tending to show whether the goods sold for a fair price, even though not of themselves sufficient to prove the value. Citizens Nat. Bank v. Converse, 105 Iowa 669, 75 N. W. 506.

it has been held that error in admitting such evidence may be one which is subsequently cured.[27]

(J) To Show Amount of Attorney's Fees. Notes given for counsel fees in the attachment suit are admissible in evidence in an action on the attachment bond to show the amount of fees attachment defendant is legally bound to pay.[28]

(III) Weight and Sufficiency of Evidence and Presumptions — (A) In General. Where, in an action for wrongful attachment, the answer admits the attachment proceedings, the issue of the attachment, and an adverse decision on appeal, these facts will be deemed sufficiently proved without the introduction of the record of the attachment suit.[29] So where the record shows that a final judgment in personam alone has been taken, this sufficiently shows a dissolution or abandonment of the attachment.[30] Execution of the attachment bond is sufficiently shown by introducing the record of the attachment suit.[31]

(B) In Relation to Cause of Action. Payment into court and tender of a sum of money by defendants in attachment are a conclusive admission that such money was due when attachment issued.[32]

(C) In Relation to Malice and Want of Probable Cause. Want of probable cause cannot be inferred from the fact that an attachment was maliciously sued out,[33] but malice may be inferred from want of probable cause, such inference supplying the place of direct proof.[34] The jury, however, are at liberty to draw the inference or not, according to the facts and circumstances of the case.[35] Malice is not necessarily established by showing want of probable cause.[36] The presumption may be rebutted by other circumstances shown.[37] The mere fact that an attachment was discharged,[38] or that judgment was rendered for defendant in the suit in which the attachment was issued[39] does not prove that the attachment was issued maliciously and without probable cause. Nor does an unsuccessful attempt to show probable cause afford a fair inference of malice.[40] So malice cannot be presumed, as against sureties on a bond to procure an attachment, who are strangers to the controversy and not interested in the result, from the mere fact that they signed without previously examining into the merits of the cause.[41] On the other hand, absence of malice is conclusively proved by evidence that plaintiff acted under the advice of counsel, and that during the litigation two judgments were rendered in his favor, although subsequently reversed.[42]

(D) In Relation to Value of Property. On the question of the value of property seized, neither a sworn appraisal made under a sheriff's levy,[43] nor the price which the goods brought at forced sale is conclusive.[44]

(E) In Relation to Wrongfulness of Attachment. A dissolution of an attachment on the merits is conclusive that the writ was wrongfully sued out,[45] but such is not the case where the dissolution is based on mere irregularities in the attachment proceedings.[46]

j. Damages — (I) Character of Damages Recoverable as Affected by Method of Enforcing Liability — (A) By Proceedings on Bond — (1) Rule That Only Actual Damages Recoverable. In a large majority of the statutes requiring attachment plaintiff to give a bond before issue of the attachment, the damages covered by the bond are designated as "all damages" caused by the wrongful attachment.[47] These statutes are very generally held to include only actual damages. Indirect, consequential, or punitive damages are not included, and nothing beyond actual damages can be recovered on the bond, whether the proceeding be by an independent action on the bond,[48] or by assessment of damages in the main action on determination of the issue as to the validity of the attachment in favor of defendant, and rendition of judgment on the bond for the amount so assessed.[49] Under the latter procedure the jury trying the issue, have as large a scope to consider and estimate the damages as in a suit on the bond.[50]

(2) Rule That Exemplary or Punitive Damages Recoverable — (a) Under Statutes Making Express Provision Therefor. In Alabama the statute provides that if the attachment is sued out maliciously as well as wrongfully, the jury may, in addition to the allowance of damages actually sustained, give "vindictive" damages;[51] and the Iowa and Washington statutes[52] provide that if the

51. Ala. Civ. Code (1896), § 565.

52. Iowa Code (1897), § 3887; Wash. Anno. Codes & Stats. § 5257.

In Alabama and Iowa it is settled, in accordance with the express provisions of the statutes cited, that in an action on the bond only actual damages are recoverable when attachment is sued out maliciously, "exemplary" damages may be recovered, in addition to actual damages.

(b) Under Statutes Making No Provision For Other Than Actual Damages. In Louisiana, Tennessee, and Texas the statutes contain no express provisions for the allowance of exemplary or punitive damages in an action on the bond. Nevertheless the rule is settled that in an action on the bond such damages are recoverable if the attachment is malicious as well as wrongful;[53] while only actual damages are recoverable if attachment plaintiff has acted in good faith and without malice.[54]

(3) Limitation of Damages Recoverable by Amount of Penalty Named in Bond. As a general rule, where suit is brought on an attachment bond, the amount of the recovery cannot exceed the penalty on the face of it.[55]

(B) By Actions or Proceedings Independent of Bond. In jurisdictions where the common-law doctrine in regard to the necessity of malice and want of probable cause as a basis for the recovery of damages caused by a wrongful attachment has never obtained[56] defendant in attachment may, independently of any statutory authority, bring an action independently of the bond,[57] set up the attachment is merely wrongful (Dothard v. Sheid, 69 Ala. 135; Floyd v. Hamilton, 33 Ala. 235; Plumb v. Woodmansee, 34 Iowa 116; Raver v. Webster, 3 Iowa 502, 66 Am. Dec. 96); but that if the attachment is also sued out maliciously, exemplary or punitive damages may be recovered (Dothard v. Sheid, 69 Ala. 135; Floyd v. Hamilton, 33 Ala. 235; Campbell v. Chamberlain, 10 Iowa 337. See also Baldwin v. Walker, 94 Ala. 514, 10 So. 391).

In Washington it is held that if the attachment is sued out maliciously, defendant may recover "exemplary damages;" but this term is construed to mean only indeterminable actual damages, such as damages to reputation, pride, or feelings, and not damages by way of punishment. Levy v. Fleischner, 12 Wash. 15, 40 Pac. 384.

The term "wrongfully suing out said attachment," as used in the statutes prescribing the form of attachment bonds, is as properly applicable to a case where the process has been resorted to in the absence of sufficient legal cause, without reference to the intent, as to a case where it has been sued out and set on foot from motives of malice and oppression. The damages, however, would be confined in the one case to the actual injury sustained, while in the other, vindictive damages might be allowed. Smith v. Eakin, 2 Sneed (Tenn.) 456.

Liability of sureties.— In Tennessee the sureties will be liable for exemplary damages where the principal is liable for such damages. Rep. 777, where it was held that liability on the bond is not limited to the amount therein designated as security; that the clerk is merely directed to require security to such extent as is presumably sufficient.

On a counter-claim on an attachment bond for wrongful attachment the recovery cannot exceed the amount claimed, although the evidence shows or tends to show that a larger amount of damage was sustained. Charles City Plow, etc., Co. v. Jones, 71 Iowa 234, 32 N. W. 280. damages by way of reconvention,[58] or counter-claim in the main attachment action for the recovery of damages if the attachment be wrongful.[59] If the facts are such as to warrant it exemplary or punitive damages may also be recovered if appropriate averments are made,[60] but if the attachment be sued out in good faith, of course only actual damages are recoverable.[61]

(II) Actual Damages—(A) Defined. Generally speaking actual damages are the natural, proximate result or consequence of the wrongful act of suing out the attachment.[62]

(B) Right to Recover Where Attachment Merely Wrongful—(1) Statement of Rule. At common law no damages are recoverable for an attachment which is merely wrongful and not instituted with malice and without probable cause.[63] This doctrine, however, has been so disturbed that at the present time it is rather the exception than the rule. In the great majority of states there are statutes which either expressly or by implication authorize the recovery by some form of procedure of at least actual damages, although the attachment be merely wrongful.[64]

(2) Extent and Limitations of Rule. In actions of this character, however, the recovery is limited strictly to the actual damages which have been sustained,[65] and the injuries must be the proximate and natural result of the attachment.[66] It has been held, however, that where either malice[67] or want of probable cause is absent, nothing beyond actual damages can be allowed in an action for wrongful attachment.[68]

(III) Exemplary or Punitive Damages—(A) Under What Circumstances Allowable—(1) In General. Where an attachment has been sued out maliciously and without probable cause, exemplary or punitive damages may be allowed in a proper proceeding therefor;[69] but both of these elements must concur to authorize their recovery.[70] It is also essential that attachment creditor should have been actuated by malice against the debtor himself and not against some third person not a party to the process.[71] So it has been held that exemplary damages are not recoverable for the interruption of an illegal business by the levying of an attachment on the debtor's goods.[72]

Where there is no right of action for actual damages there can be no recovery of exemplary damages,[73] although the writ was maliciously sued out;[74] and where plaintiff remits the actual damages the court has no power to render a judgment for exemplary damages.[75]

(B) Method of Estimating. In estimating exemplary damages it has been said that they should bear proportion to the actual damage sustained.[76] By this is not meant that one should be either in exact or approximate ratio to the other, but that the imposition of heavy exemplary damages when the actual damage is small is a circumstance that aids in determining whether passion instead of reason influenced the verdict.[77]

(IV) Nominal Damages. According to the weight of authority, where an attachment is wrongfully sued out but no actual damages have resulted, attachment defendant is nevertheless entitled to recover nominal damages.[78] Under these circumstances, however, he can recover nothing more.[79]

(V) Damages For Acts of Agent or Attorney — (A) Acts of Agent. Where an agent sues out a writ of attachment wrongfully and maliciously, the principal will be liable both for actual and exemplary damages, if he ratifies the act of the agent with full knowledge that such act was wrongful and malicious,[80] or if he caused or participated in such evil motive or conduct.[81] In the absence, however, of such ratification of or participation in the malicious conduct of the agent, there can be no recovery at least of exemplary or punitive damages.[82] So a principal who directs or authorizes an agent to sue out an attachment will be liable for actual damages caused thereby if it be wrongful;[83] and irrespective of such authorization he will be liable for actual damages if he ratifies the act of the agent.[84]

(B) Acts of Attorney. A creditor is not liable for exemplary or punitive damages for the wrongful and malicious suing out of an attachment by his attorney, unless he participated in the evil motive of the attorney, or subsequently to the attachment ratified his act with a full knowledge of the facts.[85] If, however, the attachment is sued out wrongfully and maliciously, and the principal with full knowledge of all the facts ratifies the act of the attorney, exemplary as well as actual damages may be recovered.[86] As regards actual damages the creditor is liable where the attachment has been either wrongfully or maliciously sued out by the attorney.[87]

(VI) Particular Expenses, Injuries, or Losses—(A) In General. No recovery can be had for injuries resulting from the demoralization of attachment defendant's tenants;[88] from inability to raise[89] or gather a crop,[90] because of the seizure of attachment defendant's working stock; from an enforced sale under an assignment;[91] or from seizure under a writ in detinue by attachment plaintiff, which suit was dismissed before suing out the attachment.[92] So where a fund already in custodia legis is impounded by a wrongful attachment, the receiver's compensation for loaning the fund pending litigation, which was retained out of the growing interest, does not constitute an element of damage recoverable upon a breach of the attachment bond.[93] Interest on damages allowed for wrongful attachment cannot be recovered,[94] nor can money expended in telegrams to prevent injury to attachment defendant's credit.[95]

(B) Expenses Incurred in Defending Attachment. There is some conflict as to whether expenses incurred in defending against an attachment wrongfully sued out may be recovered. In a number of states the rule seems to be fairly well settled that such expenses are recoverable.[96] On the other hand, there are decisions in which it has been held that expenses incurred by way of defending an attachment are not actual damages and not recoverable as such.[97]

(D) Expenses Incurred in Proceeding to Recover Damages. Expenses incurred by the trial of a counter-claim on an attachment bond for damages for the wrongful suing out of an attachment are not recoverable.[99]

(E) Injury Resulting From Subsequent Levies. Attachment defendant cannot recover, as an item of actual damage for wrongful attachment, injuries resulting from the levy of executions by other creditors in consequence of the attachment.[1]

(F) Injury to Credit. There is some diversity of opinion as to the right of a defendant in attachment to recover for injury to his credit caused by the levy of the attachment. In some jurisdictions the right is denied without qualification, on the ground that such damages are too remote and speculative.[2] On the other hand, it seems to be well settled in a number of jurisdictions that damages for injury to credit are recoverable, and that it is immaterial whether the attachment was malicious or not.[3] There are also jurisdictions in which the right to recover is conceded in case the attachment was sued out maliciously.[4]

St. Rep. 156. Compare Thomas v. Isett, 1 Greene (Iowa) 470, where it was held that in an action of trespass by the seizing and obtaining of plaintiff's goods under an attachment, loss of credit cannot be proved, unless it appears to be intimately connected with the act complained of, and unless the act appears to have been done with an aggravating and malicious intention to injure the party complaining.

There can be no recovery after defendant, a merchant, went out of business (R. F. Scott Grocer Co. v. Kelly, 14 Tex. Civ. App. 136, 36 S. W. 140); where attachment defendant was insolvent at the time the attachment was issued (Chaffe v. Mackenzie, 43 La. Ann. 1062, 10 So. 369; Roach v. Brannon, 57 Miss. 490); or where the financial embarrassment of attachment defendant was such as to necessitate the stopping of his business, unless he could obtain relief from some source, it not being shown that there was any source from which such relief could be obtained (MacFarland v. Lehman, 38 La. Ann. 351). So injuries to credit incidental to the suit and not to the seizure cannot be allowed (Cretin v. Levy, 37 La. Ann. 182), and where the credit of the debtor has been lessened rather through his own conduct than by the act of the creditor in wrongfully attaching the property, no grounds for damage on that account exist (New Iberia State Bank v. Martin, 52 La. Ann. 1628, 28 So. 130).

3. These decisions proceed upon the theory that such damages are the natural and proximate consequences of the levy, and that the damages so caused are consequently actual damages. (G) Injury to or Depreciation in Value of Property Attached—(1) PERSONAL PROPERTY. Injury to or depreciation in value of personal property attached is an element of actual damage, and may be recovered in an appropriate action or proceeding therefor.[5] The fact that the injury or depreciation was the result of the negligence of the officer making the levy does not affect the rule.[6]

(2) REAL PROPERTY. Ordinarily depreciation in the value of real property, which occurs while the levy remains in force, there being no change of possession or loss of the use thereof, is not the immediate result of the attachment, and no recovery beyond nominal damages can be had therefor.[7] Nevertheless, the cases do not go so far as to hold that under no circumstances can actual damages be recovered. Thus when a pending sale is broken up by the levy itself, unaided by the act or delinquency of attachment defendant, and depreciation and loss follow, a different case is presented, and there is ample foundation for the recovery of actual damages.[8] In order to recover, however, it must be shown Deterioration arising from attachment defendant's act.— In an action for injury to lumber by being left piled in bulk during the period of an unlawful levy, it appeared that on the day the levy was made plaintiff had agreed to sell the lumber and that the purchaser was to examine it several days after before paying the price, but that learning of the levy he had refused to complete the purchase. It was held that plaintiff could not recover for deterioration of the lumber in value during the time it would have taken to complete the sale from natural causes operating on it in the condition in which he himself had placed it. Levy after creation of lis pendens.—An action to set aside a conveyance alleged to have been executed in fraud of creditors creates a lis pendens lien on the property sought to be thus subjected, and, as the levy of an attachment in such suit on the property causes no additional damage, defendant, on defeating the attachment, cannot recover damages for the wrongful levy thereof; the only damage suffered being caused by the bringing of the action. Loss occasioned by act of owner.— The fact that plaintiff himself notified the owner, that the contemplated sale would have been consummated in the absence of the attachment.[9]

(H) Injury to Feelings. An allowance may be made for an injury to feelings if the attachment was sued out maliciously and without probable cause,[10] but in the absence of these elements there can be no recovery.[11]

(I) Injury to or Loss of Business. Where the elements of a malicious attachment are present damages may be recovered for injury to or loss of business on the part of attachment defendant.[12] Furthermore, the view is taken in some jurisdictions that damages for injuries of this nature are recoverable as actual damages.[13] The weight of authority is against this view, however, and is to the effect that injury to or loss of business is not the proximate or natural result of an attachment of property, and that there can be a recovery therefor only when exemplary damages are proper.[14]

(J) Injury to Reputation or Character. Damages for injuries to reputation or character are not considered actual damages, and hence not recoverable unless the attachment be malicious as well as wrongful.[15]

Injury to private feelings of one partner.— The damages which a mercantile firm composed of three individuals can recover in an action for wrongfully and maliciously suing out an attachment must be for the injury done to their joint business, and must not only be the natural and proximate legal result and consequence of the wrongful act, but must affect the joint business or trade of the partnership. Even where a statute expressly makes loss of or injury to business recoverable, and the issue as to the rightfulness of the attachment is decided in favor of attachment defendant, he is nevertheless not entitled to recover on such determination where at the time of the attachment he was merely winding up his business by selling out his stock on hand. Damages to the reputation of goods caused by the levy of an attachment thereon are too vague to be capable of legitimate proof.

(K) Loss, Destruction, or Conversion of Property. In case of loss, destruction, or conversion of the attached property,[16] or if for any other reason it cannot be returned or recovered its reasonable value is an element of damage in an action on the bond, and in some jurisdictions interest on the value thereof is allowable.[17]

(L) Loss of Probable or Prospective Profits. While there are some decisions which hold that a recovery may be had for damages caused by the loss of probable or prospective profits, although the attachment was merely wrongful,[18] the weight of authority is to the effect that such profits are not an element of damage unless the attachment was malicious and without probable cause.[19]

(M) Loss of Use of Property. Damages for loss of property during the time of its detention by virtue of a wrongful attachment is an injury for which recovery may be had.[20]

Value is to be determined by what the property wrongfully attached would bring if sold at the time and place of attachment. The market value is not properly tested by what the party paid for the property nor by what he is holding or selling it at in his current business at retail. The ultimate test is what the property will bring when properly sold, after giving the public an opportunity to know what the property is, and when and where, and the terms of the sale. (VII) Measure of Damages — (A) Where Property Is Returned or Recovered. It has been variously held that the measure of damages where the property has been restored to or recovered back by attachment defendant is the value of the use of the property wrongfully taken during the period of its detention;[21] the value of the use of such property, necessary expenses incurred in regaining possession, and the loss of time in giving necessary personal attention to the business;[22] and the value of the use of property during the time of detention, depreciation in value, and expenses incurred in defending the attachment proceedings.[23] In two cases — the property being kept for sale — it has been held that the measure of damages is the depreciation in value during the time of detention;[24] in another, the measure stated is injury to the property attached caused by the attachment, and the expense, and value and time of labor expended in obtaining a dissolution thereof.[25]

(B) Where Property Is Not Recoverable. Where property attached has been destroyed, sold, or lost, or for any other reason cannot be returned or recovered, the measure of damages has been held in some cases to be the value of the property at the time and place of the taking, in the absence of the elements going to make up a malicious attachment.[26] In other decisions the measure of damages given is the value of the property at the time of seizure and interest thereon from the date of the seizure to the date of trial;[27] in others, the value of the property at the time of seizure, with interest thereon from the date of seizure that if defendant had not been restrained by the attachment it might have secured a higher rate of interest by using the funds in its own business, it may recover as damages in an action on the bond the interest which is thereby lost.

Preventing collection of accounts.—A levy of attachment on books of account is not a levy on the debts represented by the books, but only on the materials composing the books, and does not prevent the person to whom such debts are due from collecting them, so as to make such prevention an element of damage for wrongful attachment. Attachment of mortgaged property.— In an action by the mortgagor for the wrongful attachment by the mortgagee of mortgaged personal property, the measure of damages will be the loss for the detention of the property up to a judgment of foreclosure as the mortgagor's right of possession ceased then; he cannot recover for detention up to the time of trial. A. 611, where it was held that where property of no value for mere use but only for consumption is taken and afterward returned, and the owner seeks to recover in a suit only the damages suffered by reason of the taking or detention, mere interest on the value of the property at the time it was taken would generally be a complete indemnity. If the property depreciated, the amount of depreciation should be added to the interest. Compare Fullerton Lumber Co. v. Spencer, 81 Iowa 549, 46 N. W. 1058, where it was held that in an action for the wrongful suing out of an attachment against property used only for the purpose of sale, the owner is not entitled to recover as damages interest on the value of such property from the time of seizure without a showing of any loss merely from the failure to have the property on hand.

Where property is released to a third person, who executes a bond under a statute which provides that the sheriff may release attached property if defendant causes to be executed a bond to the effect that he will perform the judgment, such property is constructively in the sheriff's custody; and, where the attachment is wrongful, defendant's damage is to be measured by the length of time it was in such custody, and not merely by the length of time up to the period when the release bond was given. to the date of rendition of judgment;[28] and in others, the value of the property with interest thereon from the time it was taken, and such expenses as were necessarily incurred in the defense of such proceedings with interest thereon from the time such expenses were incurred.[29] If the property is taken from the attaching officer and sold under the prior lien of a mortgage, the measure of damages is the amount paid over to the attaching officer after the satisfaction of the mortgage and interest thereon.[30]

k. Matters in Mitigation. It is matter in mitigation of damages that there has been a return and acceptance of the property seized under the attachment,[31] or that attachment plaintiffs had offered to return it;[32] that attachment defendant had recovered back the property for less than its value;[33] that after seizure the attaching creditor bought the property at a sale under foreclosure of a lien placed thereon by attachment defendant in favor of another creditor;[34] that part of the property attached belonged to third persons;[35] that defendant in attachment had replevied the property, sold it, and with the proceeds paid the debt, to enforce which the attachment was sued out;[36] or that the party suing out the attachment was security on a bond of attachment defendant, and that the latter at the time the writ was sued out was about to remove his property from the state.[37] So any sum paid by plaintiff in an attachment suit for costs and damages awarded against him operates to reduce the liability specified in the undertaking given by the sureties.[38] On the other hand the fact that the attached property which had not been replevied by or returned to attachment defendant brought its fair value when sold under an order of court, and that the proceeds of its sale had been applied to the payment of the debt of defendant is not in mitigation of damages.[39] So the damages cannot be reduced by showing that at the time of the seizure the debtor contemplated selling his goods in bulk at a sacrifice;[40] that attachment defendant was insolvent;[41] or that plaintiff in attachment had a cause of action, the petition in the action in which the attach-

In Hundley v. Chadick, 109 Ala. 575, 585, the court said, in support of this view: "To hold, in a case of a suit on the attachment bond, counting upon the wrongful suing out of an attachment, that the measure of damages is the value of the property taken, but only that, less the amount of the attaching creditor's demand, would be to offer inducement for the unlawful substitution, and to make it answer the ends of a most unwarranted trespass, to secure a preference of payment over other creditors, and to deprive the debtor of his property otherwise than by due process of law."

ment was issued having been dismissed on the ground that there was no cause of action;[42] and it has been held that where an attachment is dismissed because the affidavit therefor is defective, the fact that grounds for an attachment exist will not go in mitigation of damages if the damages sought are merely compensatory.[43] It cannot be shown in mitigation of actual damages that there was probable cause for suing out the attachment.[44]

l. Counsel Fees — (I) In Actions on Bonds — (A) View That No Fees Recoverable. There is considerable diversity of holdings in regard to the allowance of attorney's fees in actions on bonds given to indemnify defendant in attachment for injuries caused by a wrongful attachment. In a number of jurisdictions it is well settled that such fees will not be allowed.[45]

(B) View That Fees Expended in Defense of Attachment Recoverable. On the other hand, in probably the greater number of jurisdictions, in an action on an attachment bond a party may recover, as damages sustained by reason of the attachment, reasonable attorney fees expended in defense of the attachment.[46]

Reason for rule.— In Stringfield v. Hirsch, 94 Tenn. 425, 438, 29 S. W. 609, 45 Am. St. Rep. 733, it is said: "It is not sound public policy to place a penalty on the right to litigate; that the defeated party must pay the fees of counsel for his successful opponent in any case, and, especially, since it throws wide the doors of temptation for the opposing party, and his counsel, to swell the fees to undue proportions, and, in cases of attachment and injunction, to apportion them arbitrarily between the fees pertaining properly to the attachment and injunction and that relating to the merits of the case."

Iowa.— Attorney's fees are recoverable in an action on the attachment bond, provided the attachment was sued out without probable cause, as well as wrongfully, but not otherwise. The statute expressly so provides. Iowa Code (1897), § 3885. And while there are a number of decisions in which attorney's fees were allowed, it not appearing, or nothing being said as to whether or not the attachment was sued out without probable cause (Union Mill Co. v. Frenzler, 100 Iowa 540, 69 N. In applying this doctrine it has been held immaterial whether the fees had been paid or were merely promised;[47] but it has no application where no counsel was employed,[48] where the services of the attorney were not rendered until after judgment was rendered in the attachment suit,[49] or where no defense was made,[50] although services were rendered by filing cross-interrogatories to plaintiff's witnesses, requiring proof of the debt.[51] So attorney's fees are not allowable where the attachment is not controverted, but fails because the principal suit fails.[52]

(c) View That Only Fees Expended in Defense of Attachment Recoverable. In most jurisdictions where any allowance of counsel fees at all is made, the recovery is limited to fees incurred in the defense of the attachment proceedings alone, nothing being allowed for the defense of the main suit,[53] unless there is an express stipulation in the bond providing therefor. This rule has been held to apply, although jurisdiction was obtained solely by attaching the property of a non-resident, who subsequently appeared and defended the action.[54] Some decisions, however, recognize an exception to this rule. Thus it has been held that fees for the defense of the whole suit may be allowed, where both the action and the attachment proceeding have been defeated;[55] and there are decisions to the effect that attorney's fees for the whole case may be allowed, where the entire defense to the attachment action merely tended to show the wrongful issue of the attachment.[56]

(d) Fees For Bringing Suit on Bond. It is very generally agreed that counsel fees incurred in bringing suit on an attachment bond are not recoverable in such action.[57]

(II) On Trial of Plea in Abatement to Attachment. Where by statute damages may be allowed to defendant in attachment, when he is successful on the trial of a plea in abatement to the attachment, defendant is entitled to an allowance for reasonable counsel fees, as he would be in an action on the bond.[58]

(III) In Actions Independent of Bond. In one state, where an action for an attachment merely wrongful can be brought independently of the bond given to indemnify against injury caused by the wrongful attachment, there are two decisions which are in direct conflict on the question whether counsel fees incurred in defending the attachment are allowable.[59] In another state, where the same practice obtains, attorney's fees cannot be recovered, the view being taken that malice is the basis of the right to an allowance thereof.[60]

I. TERMINOLOGY.

A. Attorney. In its broadest sense, one put in place of another;[1] an agent;[2] but, when not coupled with any qualifying expression, the word is usually construed as meaning attorney at law,[3] in which sense it will be used in this article.

B. Attorney at Law. An officer in a court of justice who is employed by a party in a cause to manage the same for him.[4]

C. Barrister. In England and her colonies, a person entitled to practise as an advocate or counsel in the superior courts.[5]

D. Client. One who applies to a lawyer or counselor for advice and direction in a question of law, or commits his cause to his management in prosecuting a claim or defending against a suit, in a court of justice.[6]

E. Proctor. An attorney in the admiralty and ecclesiastical courts.[7]

F. Solicitor. A person whose business is to be employed in the care and management of suits depending in courts of chancery.[8]

II. THE OFFICE OF ATTORNEY.

A. Nature of. An attorney does not hold an office or public trust, in the constitutional or statutory sense of that term,[9] but is an officer of the court, exercising a privilege or franchise.[10]

B. Exercise of — 1. Right to Practise — a. In General. The right to practise law is not an absolute right,[11] but, as stated above, is a privilege or franchise,[12] which may be taxed by the government like other franchises or occupations.[13]

If such exemption existed by a constitutional or legislative command, it could be very easily pointed out and shown. Texas.— Languille v. State, 4 Tex. App. 312, holding that the license to practise law is not a contract, investing the person to whom it is granted with rights which cannot be interfered with by the state, but a naked grant of a privilege, which the state may revoke, or upon which it may impose such conditions as may be demanded by the public interest.

Compare Lawyers' Tax Cases, 8 Heisk. (Tenn.) 565, which involved the constitutional power of the legislature to impose a tax upon lawyers for the privilege of practising law in the several courts in which they had been enrolled as attorneys, the act in question [Tenn. Acts (1867–68), c. 4, § 19] declaring that the practice of law was a privilege, and prohibiting the exercise of the privilege without first obtaining a license and paying the privilege tax. A majority of the court held the act unconstitutional, two judges holding that the right to practise law is not subject to taxation; two judges holding that, even conceding that the legislature may tax the privilege of a lawyer, the act in question was unconstitutional because it required a new license to be taken out. Two judges dissented, holding the act constitutional.

15. Statute authorizing held unconstitutional.— It has been held, however, that an act providing that "any person of good moral character, although not admitted as an attorney, may manage, prosecute, or defend a suit has not been admitted as an attorney cannot practise as such, in a court of record,[16] by attempting to act as his client's agent;[17] but the parties may manage, prosecute, or defend their own suits personally.[18]

2. Admission to Practice — a. In General — (i) Jurisdiction. As attorneys are officers of the court,[19] their admission is the exercise of a judicial power, resting with the courts.[20] Legislatures, however, may prescribe regulations and qualifications for the office,[21] and have uniformly done so.

Instituting appeal.— Where an appeal from a superior court must be initiated in that court by a notice from appellant's attorney of record in that court, the fact that such attorney is not qualified to practise in the appellate court will not affect the validity of the appeal. (II) Requirements — (A) In England. In England barristers are not admitted to practice by the courts, but are called to the bar by the Inns of Court, which fix the requirements for admission.[22] Solicitors are admitted after such examination as the judges think proper.[23]

(B) In United States — (1) Federal Courts. To practise in the United States supreme court, attorneys must have been such for three years in the supreme courts of the states to which they belong, their private and professional character must appear to be fair, and they must swear or affirm that they will act uprightly and according to law, and will support the constitution of the United States.[24] The rules as to admission to the bar of the district and circuit courts vary with the different courts. In general, those courts recognize a member of the bar of the supreme court of the United States as a member of their courts, without requiring any formal order or motion for his admission.[25]

(2) State Courts.[26] In general, the statutes and rules of court of the different states require that an applicant for admission to practice must be a citizen[27] of the state, twenty-one years of age or upward,[28] and of good moral character.[29] He must have studied law for a certain period either in a law school

Where these have seemed reasonable and just, it has generally, we think, been the pleasure of the courts to act upon such statutes, in deference to the wishes of a coördinate branch of the government, without considering the question of power. . . If, unfortunately, such an attack [referring to an old act which had been repealed] upon the dignity of the courts should again be made, it will be time for them to inquire whether the rule of admission be within the legislative or judicial power."

b. Of Women. It has been held in some cases that, in the absence of express legislation, women are not entitled to practise law in either the federal[43] or state[44] courts, though in numerous others it has been held that they may be entitled to practise in the absence of constitutional or legislative inhibition.[45] By specific statutory provisions women are now entitled to practise in the supreme court of the United States,[46] and in the highest courts of many of the states.

c. Comity. While a citizen of one state, although possessed of all the requisite qualifications, has no absolute right to be admitted to practice in the courts of another state,[47] he is universally allowed to practise, either by courtesy of the courts or by statute.[48] denied the admission to practice on the ground of the unconstitutionality of an act making the diploma of the law school of Columbia College conclusive evidence of the learning and ability of its possessor, the court of appeals held that the constitution of 1846 conferred a substantial right; that the proceedings upon an application for admission, being proceedings to enforce that right, were of a judicial nature; and that, therefore, an appeal would lie from the order of the lower court denying admission.

3. Suspension or Disbarment — a. In General. Attorneys being officers of the court,[49] it is well settled that the court[50] which grants a license[51] to an attorney may, when proper grounds exist,[52] suspend or disbar him.[53] This power, however, is one which should be exercised with great caution,[54] and only for the most weighty reasons.[55]

b. Grounds — (1) In General. While the statutes of many of the states authorize the suspension or removal of attorneys upon specified grounds,[56] it has facto, an officer of the court of that state, and the validity of his acts as an attorney cannot be called in question collaterally.

Supreme Ct. 1], holding that the council of the bar of Montreal were competent to hear and decide upon a charge against a practising attorney, the facts being of a nature to constitute, prima facie, a proceeding derogatory to professional honor.

51. Power of removal commensurate with power of appointment.— In the absence of specific provisions to the contrary, the power of removal is, from its nature, commensurate with the power of appointment. generally been held that such statutes do not restrict the general powers of the court over attorneys, who are its officers, and that they may be removed for other than statutory grounds.[57]

(II) Bad Character. As good character is an essential qualification for the admission of an attorney to practice, he may be removed whenever he ceases to possess such a character. Posting a paper at the office door of a judge, accusing him of being a base and corrupt man, is not sufficient ground for temporarily revoking an attorney's license, where it does not appear that the charge had reference to any official act of the judge or that it was committed in term-time. Neel v. State, 9 Ark. 259, 50 Am. Dec. 209.

Scurrilous epithets applied to a judge in vacation do not constitute a contempt within the meaning of Tex. Acts (1854), p. 118, § 2, authorizing disbarment for contempts involving fraudulent or dishonorable conduct or malpractice. Jackson v. State, 21 Tex. 668.

Suggesting, in a letter, the retirement of a judge as a means of restoring public confidence in the court over which he presides, in response to a letter from the judge, where such advice is couched in respectful language, is not such conduct as will authorize the court to strike the attorney's name from the roll, nor is the character of such letter changed by its publication in a newspaper,

(B) Perverting, or Attempting to Pervert, Justice. An attorney may be suspended or disbarred for perverting, or attempting to pervert, a decision of a cause upon the merits, by deceiving or misleading the court,[64] by tampering with witnesses,[65] or by false testimony.[66]

(VII) Misuse of Records and Papers. An attorney may be suspended or disbarred for improperly falsifying, altering, or abstracting court records or papers.[67] not for the purpose of assailing the judge, but of defending the lawyer's own reputation. Austin's Case, 5 Rawle (Pa.) 191, 28 Am. Dec. 657.

The publication in a newspaper of a criticism of a particular case, which has been determined, by two attorneys who were also editors of the paper, is not ground for disbarment even though the article may have been libelous, for, to amount to a breach of professional duty, it must have been designed to acquire an influence over the judge in the exercise of his judicial functions by the instrumentality of popular prejudice. Ex p. Steinman, 95 Pa. Offering an expert money to testify.— Where an attorney, supposing that an expert whom he had hired to examine a certain paper believed the paper to be a forgery, offered the expert a large sum of money to testify regarding the forgery, such conduct of the attorney, though subject to criticism, was not ground for disbarment. In re Barnes, (Cal. 1888) 16 Pac. 896.

Unauthorized acts of agent.— On motion to disbar attorneys it was shown that they were notified that the deposition of a witness for whom they had sought would be taken by the adverse party. Desiring to know what he would testify, they sent an agent to see him, with instructions to try to incline him as favorably toward their client as possible. Their agent induced the witness to keep out of the way, making him drunk for the purpose, and got him to come to the city where one of the attorneys was, and have a consultation with the latter at his office. There being no evidence that the attorneys directed that the witness should be made drunk, kept out of the way, bribed, or intimidated, it was held not sufficient misconduct for disbarment. In re Thomas, 36 Fed. 242.

Appropriating money arising from a wrongful mortgage and sale of property conveyed to an attorney by a deed of trust, not as a result of his professional advice, but simply as a friendly office, will not justify a summary disbarment. People v. Appleton, 105 Ill. 474, 44 Am. Rep. 812.

Misconduct toward other attorneys.—An attorney has been disbarred for attempting to make the opposing attorney drunk in order to obtain the advantage of him in the trial of a case (Dickens' Case, 67 Pa. St. 169, 5 Am. Rep. 420), for intermeddling between a brother attorney and his client (Baker v. State, 90 Ga. 153, 15 S. E. 788), and for instituting disbarment proceedings against a brother attorney for improper motives and without just grounds (Matter of Kelly, 62 N. Y. 198). See, however, People v. Berry, 17 Colo. 322, 29 Pac. 904, holding that, where the attorney's misconduct consisted in alleging in a petition unnecessary scandalous matter as to the moral character of another attorney, there is an adequate remedy by contempt proceedings in the court in which the petition was filed, and that the supreme court will not disbar an attorney therefor.

Misrepresentation in a newspaper of facts connected with the trial of a cause, by the editor, who was also an attorney of the court, will not justify disbarment. In re Greevy, 4 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 308.

c. Proceedings — (i) Nature of. While proceedings to suspend or disbar attorneys are special and of a summary character, resulting from the inherent power of the courts over their officers,[71] attorneys cannot be deprived of their right to practise without notice and an opportunity to be heard, whether the court proceed under statute or in the exercise of its inherent power.[72] As such proceedings are intended, not for punishment, but for the protection of the courts and the profession, they are generally held not to be of a criminal nature.[73] Where properly instituted, they are due process of law, and not an invasion of the constitutional provision that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law.[74]

Offering to sell to a newspaper the confession of a defendant accused of murder, while such defendant's trial was going on, is not ground for disbarment, where the negotiations were closed without any confession having been received, or sold, or caused to be published. (II) Conduct of—(A) In General.[75] In proceedings for suspension or disbarment the practice is for the court to issue a rule or order upon the attorney, reciting the substance of the information or charges against him, and requiring him to show cause why he should not be suspended or disbarred.[76] It is not necessary that the proceedings should be founded upon formal allegations.[77] They are often instituted upon information developed in the progress of a cause, or from what the court learns of the conduct of the attorney from its own observation,[78] being sometimes moved by third parties upon affidavit,[79] and sometimes taken by the court upon its own motion.[80] The manner in which the proceeding shall be conducted, so that it be without oppression or unfairness, is a matter of judicial regulation.[81]

(B) Charges. While the charges against an attorney, on proceedings for suspension or disbarment, need not be formal or technical,[82] they should be suf-

When entitled to charges.—Where the facts upon which alleged misconduct is based are not at issue in a case passed upon by the court and do not occur in the presence of the court, the attorney is entitled to have specific charges preferred against him, and an opportunity for meeting them. Matter of Achi, 8 Hawaii 216.

78. Matter of Wool, 36 Mich. 299, where the misconduct of the attorney had come out in an equity hearing, where the court had itself heard the cause and passed upon the facts, and, accordingly, the order to show cause was based on the decree in equity.

79. Proceedings may be instituted by a bar association (Fairfield County Bar v. Taylor, 60 Conn. 11, 22 Atl. 441, 13 L. R. A. 767; Boston Bar Assoc. v. Greenhood, 168 Mass. 169, 46 N. E. 568), by the prosecuting attorney (In re Shepard, 109 Mich. 631, 67 N. W. 971), or by the attorney-general (see Attorney-General). But in People v. Allison, 68 Ill. 151, it was intimated that an attorney would not be disbarred at the relation of a stranger for failure to pay over money to a client who had made no complaint.

The court may require a member of the bar to prosecute charges against an attorney looking to his disbarment. State v. Harber, 129 Mo. 271, 31 S. W. 889. But the appointment of an attorney to draw up the accusation is not necessary where the proceedings are commenced by an individual, and not by the direction of the court. Byington v. Moore, 70 Iowa 206, 30 N. W. 485.

Conducted in whose name.—The proceedings may be conducted in the name of the state (Turner v. Com., 2 Metc. (Ky.) 619), but need not be so conducted (In re Bowman, 7 Mo. App. 569; In re Crum, 7 N. D. 316, 75 N. W. 257); or in the name of a client (Wilson v. Popham, 91 Ky. 327, 12 Ky. L. Rep. 904, 15 S. W. 859).

Waiver of objection to manner of commencement.—Although, by statute, a prosecution against one attorney for misconduct may be instituted by information or motion of two or more practising attorneys, a defendant, by appearing and answering to a motion of one attorney, waives objection to the form of proceeding that it was commenced by only one. Jackson v. State, 21 Tex. 668.

W. 584, in which last case the court said: "The fact that the circuit court, on its own motion, granted an order to show cause, requires no comment. It was the duty of the circuit judge, on his attention being called to the pleadings in the case of Wheeler v. Orton, pending before him, to issue such an order if he thought there was anything in the answers of Mr. Orton which the interest of the public or the integrity of the profession required should be investigated. Courts institute these proceedings on their own motion where papers are presented showing that there are probable grounds for believing that attorneys have been guilty of acts of misconduct in their practice which render them unfit longer to be members of the bar."

Compare Thomas v. State, 58 Ala. 365, holding that, the statutory proceedings for disbarment being in the nature of a criminal proceeding, the information must disclose with certainty the facts of misconduct, and that defendant is amenable to the proceeding.

It is no objection that the facts were stated in narrative form, without allegations connecting them with the general charges of misconduct, where facts are stated showing such misconduct on the part of the attorney as is sufficient to put him upon his trial. In re Lowenthal, 78 Cal. 427, 21 Pac. 7.

Variance between general charge and specifications.—Where a complaint alleges that an attorney is guilty of professional misconduct "in the following particulars," but the charges set out do not relate to professional conduct, a demurrer will be sustained. State v. Cadwell, (Mont. 1894) 36 Pac. 85.

When based upon a criminal conviction, the information should set out the offense of which the attorney was convicted (U. S. v. Clark, 76 Fed. 560), and, where the ground of disbarment is conviction of a misdemeanor involving moral turpitude, it must be alleged that moral turpitude was involved in the acts constituting the crime (State v. Bannon, (Oreg. 1895) 42 Pac. 869).

84. State v. Kirke, 12 Fla. 278, 95 Am. Dec. 314; Ex p. Burr, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 529, 6 L. ed. 152. Compare Ex p. Wall, 107 U. S. 265, 2 S. Ct. 569, 27 L. ed. 552, holding that, where an attorney assisted a mob in taking a prisoner from the jail and hanging him in the court-yard, and, in consequence of the excitement, no one was willing to make an affidavit against the attorney, the proceedings were valid, even though the charges were not made on affidavit.

Verification on information and belief by a prosecuting attorney is sufficient. In re Shepard, 109 Mich. 631, 67 N. W. 971. See also In re Wellcome, 23 Mont. 213, 58 Pac. 47, holding that, under Mont. Code Civ. Proc. § 420, which provides that an accusation must be verified by an oath that the charges therein are true, an accusation in disbarment proceedings wherein some of the charges are verified only on information and belief, and others are positively sworn to, is partially valid, and will stand against an objection aimed at the entire accusation.

Insufficient verification.—Where the accusation was signed by two informants, and all the allegations of acts on the part of the attorney were upon information of such informants, a verification upon information and belief of a third person, without explanation why it was not made by one of the informants, was insufficient. Matter of Hotchkiss, 58 Cal. 39. See also Matter of Hudson, 102 Cal. 467, 36 Pac. 812.

85. In re Lowenthal, 78 Cal. 427, 21 Pac. 7.

Disavowal of an intent to commit contempt is sufficient to excuse, if not acquit, even though in a subsequent paragraph of his answer the attorney, an editor, insists that the article complained of was not libelous and did not transcend the limits to criticism upon public men allowed to the freedom of the press. Ex p. Biggs, 64 N. C. 202.

Misconduct of an attorney is not cured by his consent, under legal compulsion, to an order rectifying the effects thereof (Matter of B—— V——, 10 N. Y. App. Div. 491, 42 N. Y. Suppl. 268), nor by the fact that such conduct was customary in the community where the attorney resided (Ex p. Finn, 32 Oreg. 519, 52 Pac. 756, 67 Am. St. Rep. 550). Neither is it a defense, to a motion to suspend an attorney for failure to pay over money collected by him, that he is holding the same to indemnify himself for sums of money owing him by the collecting agency through whom he received the claim for collection. McMath v. Maus, 12 Ky. L. Rep. 952, 15 S. W. 879.

Res judicata.—An order final in its character, discharging a rule to show cause why defendant should not be suspended, not made without prejudice, is a bar to a renewal of such rule after a decision in the pending suit adverse to the attorney. Com. v. Mc-limitations is no defense,[86] nor, when the offense is criminal, is the fact that a prosecution therefor is barred by limitation a defense.[87] Neither is the settlement of the matter which was the ground for the proceedings a good defense for the attorney, so as to bar proceedings.[88]

(D) Evidence. The common-law rules of evidence govern the proceedings,[89] and the charges must be proved by a clear preponderance of the evidence.[90]

Kay, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 407, 20 S. W. 276. So, too, where, on appeal from county commissioners to the circuit court in proceedings for contempt against an attorney, the proceedings are dismissed as to the contempt, a subsequent trial and judgment of suspension from practice before the board is unauthorized. Garrigus v. State, 93 Ind. 239. But, where an attorney, in his appeal brief, cast reflections on the trial judge, who, after the appellate court had attached him for contempt, disbarred him, and subsequently an information was filed against him for practising without a license, whereupon he questioned the jurisdiction of the court to render the judgment of disbarment because the supreme court had assumed jurisdiction, and because he could not, under the statute, be sued out of the county of his domicile, and objected because he had no jury trial, and could not be punished for a consequential contempt, it was held that the judgment was conclusive against such attacks in the collateral proceeding. The fullest opportunity should be given to investigate the conduct of an attorney who is charged with a violation of his duties as such; and while this court might not be willing to disbar or suspend an attorney if it appeared that there had been unreasonable delay in the presentation of the charges, so that a fair opportunity could not be had for procuring the witnesses and meeting the accusation, we are not prepared to say, as a matter of law upon this demurrer, that the accusation is barred either by the express terms of the statute of limitations or by analogy." damus is the proper remedy to restore an attorney, where the court below has exceeded its jurisdiction in disbarring him.[5]

C. Incidents of the Office — 1. Privileges — a. As Party to a Suit. At common law, an attorney had the right to bring suits in which he was plaintiff in the court of which he was an attorney,[6] and to be proceeded against as defendant by bill in the court in which he practised.[7] The bill against him and all notices had to be served personally on the attorney or his agent.[8] The attorney, however, could not plead his privilege when he was sued jointly,[9] and it ceased when he had not practised for a year.[10] Under modern practice, attorneys sue and are sued the same as other parties.

b. From Arrest. At common law, attorneys, as officers of the court whose duty it is to attend the court in their official capacity,[11] are privileged from arrest all his dealings? Will his restoration to the bar be compatible with a proper respect of the court for itself and with the dignity of the profession?"

Such restoration may be provisional where the attorney's conduct after his dismissal has not been wholly free from blame. In re Davies, 16 Phila. (Pa.) 65, 40 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 46.

Procedure for reinstatement.—After an attorney has been disbarred, the judgment remaining unreversed, he cannot apply, as in the first instance, for admission, but must apply to the court in which he was disbarred to be reinstated (Matter of King, 54 Ohio St. 415, 43 N. E. 686), and the mere petition of attorneys and others for such reinstatement will not be considered, such attorney not being before the court in person or by petition asking for reinstatement, and giving his reasons therefor (In re Pemberton, (Mont. 1901) 63 Pac. 1043).

11. "The ancient rule in England extended to practicing attorneys generally . . . on the theory that they were 'always supposed to be there attending,' and that the 'business of the court or their client's causes would suffer by their being drawn into any other than that in which their personal attendance is required.' 3 Bl. Comm. 289. . . . This doctrine obtained no acceptance, as an entirety, in the jurisprudence of this country; and a privilege of such nature and extent could not well exist, in the light of American institutions, nor under the conditions of the present day. But, out of the common-law on mesne process[12] and from service of process in civil suits while attending court.[13]

2. Disabilities — a. Acting as Bail or Surety. As an attorney enjoys certain privileges because of his profession and of his being an officer of the court,[14] so, for the same reasons, he is subject to certain restrictions or disabilities, one of which is that he cannot act as bail or surety in any proceeding in court. This has been a rule of the English courts since 1654,[15] and has been quite generally[16] adopted in this country, either by rule of court[17] or by statute.[18] This disqualification extends not only to suits in which he might be retained as attorney or as counsel, but to all cases pending in the courts.[19] A bond signed by an attorney rule, it has become firmly established in the courts of the Union that 'all persons who have any relation to a cause which calls for their attendance in court, and who attend in the course of that cause, though not compelled by process, are, for the sake of public justice, protected from arrest in coming to, attending upon, or returning from the court. . . . Necessarily, if not primarily, the immunity extends to the attorney representing the cause of his client before the court." Central Trust Co. v. Milwaukee St. R. Co., 74 Fed. 442, 443.

Waiver of the privilege.—In Cole v. McClellan, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 59, there was a dictum to the effect that the privilege of an attorney from arrest can be waived. In that case, there was a motion to be discharged from arrest on the ground of privilege, and the court thought honesty and fair dealing forbade the attorney to set up the privilege. The court distinguished Scott v. Van Alstyne, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 216, in which it was said an attorney could not waive his privilege as to being sued.

"The test of inconsistency is not whether the attorney has ever appeared for the party against whom he now proposes to appear, but it is whether his accepting the new retainer will require him, in forwarding the interests of his new client, to do anything which will injuriously affect his former client in any matter in which he formerly represented him, and also whether he will be called upon, in his new relation, to use against his former client any knowledge or information acquired through their former connection." In re Boone, 83 Fed. 944, 952.

An attorney may act for a third person in obtaining property through a defect in proceedings conducted by him to gain possession thereof after the relation with his former client has ceased (Learned v. Haley, 34 Cal.

however, the parties are not adverse or when the client's interests are not hostile to those of the other party, the attorney may act for both parties.[23]

c. Acting in Different Capacities. The relation of attorney and client is of such an important nature that the courts will not allow an attorney to act in any capacity or assume any duty inconsistent with his office of attorney or his duty to his client. Public policy, also, demands that an attorney should not act in another capacity where his duty would be incompatible with his duty as an attorney.[24]

3. LIABILITIES — a. For Contempt. The power of the court to punish an attorney for contempt is separate and distinct from its power to suspend or disbar for misconduct in the exercise of his office, though such misconduct may, in some instances, involve a contempt of court.[25] An attorney, like any other person, is subject to summary punishment for contempt, for abusive or insulting language or conduct toward the court, or for disobedience of the orders of the court,[26] and

608), for a director in an action to recover money which a corporation has lost through a breach of the director's official trust, although he has acted as counsel for the corporation (Bent v. Priest, 10 Mo. App. 543), or for plaintiff in an action for breach of promise of marriage, although such plaintiff was prosecuting witness in bastardy proceedings in which the attorney had been retained for defendant and been perpetually enjoined from appearing against him in such prosecution (Musselman v. Barker, 26 Nebr. 737, 42 N. W. 759).

In criminal cases this rule prevents defendant's attorney from assisting in the prosecution (Wilson v. State, 16 Ind. 392; State v. Halstead, 73 Iowa 376, 35 N. W. 457), or a prosecuting officer who instituted the proceedings from appearing for defendant (Gaulden v. State, 11 Ga. 47). See also Com. v. Gibbs, 4 Gray (Mass.) 146, holding that an attorney who has acted in a civil action cannot, on appointment by the court, perform the duties of prosecuting officer, in the absence of the district attorney, in a criminal case depending upon the same state of facts.

The law, for wise purposes, acts alone through disinterested agents. It will not tempt those having an interest in any way to abuse its process, for the purpose of promoting selfish ends. The relation of attorney and client is so intimate, and the duty of the attorney to protect the interest of his client is so rigid, that it can hardly be supposed that he would be willing, even if he were a disinterested person, to be entrusted with the enforcement of the legal rights of his clients. . . . (III) How Enforced. The liability of an attorney for costs may be enforced by an application for an order requiring the attorney to pay costs.[32]

c. To Third Persons — (I) In Contract. As an agent can always bind himself personally where such is his intention, an attorney who places a writ in the hands of an officer for service is regarded as personally requesting the service, and, the inference being that the attorney intends to be personally liable for such service, he is held liable in contract for the officer's fees, unless he expressly informs the officer that he will not be personally liable, or there are circumstances which make it clear that such was the understanding of the parties.[33] An attorney is not liable, however, in the absence of an express promise, for the fees of a referee,[34] of witnesses,[35] of stenographers,[36] or of other officers of the court.[37]

Reason for the rule.— The rule is based on the power of a court to punish any of its officers, including attorneys, for a contempt, in a proper case; and the power to compel an attorney to pay costs, for negligence or professional misconduct, is not a distinct power, but only a branch of the general power to punish for contempt. Ex p. Robbins, 63 N. faith in prosecuting a claim which his client believes to be just, and is actuated only by motives of fidelity to his trust, he is not liable to the other party, even though the attorney himself may think the claim is not just or legal.[38] If, however, the attorney knowingly aids his client in maliciously prosecuting an unjust claim, or if the attorney is actuated by malice on his own part, he is liable for any injury suffered by the other party.[39]

(B) Service of Process. An attorney is not liable for a wrongful or illegal seizure by a sheriff where he simply acted in the performance of his duty as an attorney;[40] but, where he goes beyond that and actually participates in the trespass, he is liable, with the officer, to the party injured.[41]

4. ASSIGNMENT AS COUNSEL BY COURT. It has been held that an attorney cannot refuse to act, without compensation, for persons accused of crime and destitute of means upon appointment thereto by the court,[42] and, by statute, the Effect of dissolution on pending litigation.—A lawyer who voluntarily abandons a partnership and becomes a judge is not entitled to any fees earned by his former partner for services rendered after the dissolution in cases commenced either before or after the dissolution of the partnership, nor is he chargeable with any of the expenses of his partner, after the dissolution, in prosecuting cases commenced before the partnership was dissolved. Money afterward collected by him or paid to him by his former partner as his share of the fees earned after the dissolution of the partnership in cases commenced before the dissolution cannot be recovered by the partner in an action for an accounting. Isenhart v. Hazen, (Kan. 1901) 63 Pac. 451.

Effect of death on pending litigation.— The surviving partner of a law firm should not be required to assume solely the conduct of all pending litigations in the office at the time of his partner's decease and share the results of such subsequent labor with the estate, and equity will enforce a reasonable agreement made with the estate concerning such labor. Sterne v. Goep, 20 Hun (N. Y.) 396. It is not within the scope of the implied authority of a solicitor carrying on business in partnership to constitute himself a constructive trustee, and thereby to subject his partner to liability in that character, the partner being ignorant of the dealings by which the constructive trust is established. Mara v. Browne, [1896] 1 Ch. 199, 65 L. J. Ch. 225, 73 L. T. Rep. N. S. 638, 44 Wkly. Rep. 330. one in trade or commerce, one partner has no implied authority to become a party to a negotiable instrument and bind the firm thereby.[47]

D. Attorney's Clerks. During an attorney's absence his clerk represents him, as to all ordinary business of the office, so as to bind the attorney.[48]

III. RETAINER AND AUTHORITY.

A. Retainer — 1. Definition. "Retainer" may be defined as "the act of a client by which he engages an attorney to manage his cause," and also as "the retaining fee."[49]

2. Necessity of — a. In General. Every attorney regularly licensed and duly admitted to practice possesses a general license to appear in court for any suitors who may retain him; but his license is not, of itself, an authority to appear for any particular person[50] until he is, in fact, employed by, or retained for, him.[51]

b. Effect of Unauthorized Action[52] — (i) For Defendant. Where an attorney appears for a defendant who has been duly served with process there is a strong presumption that such attorney had authority, and, even if this inference is overcome, it is incumbent upon defendant to disavow the attorney's act at once,[53] for, if he neglects this duty, his carelessness will have contributed to mislead plaintiff, and he will not be in a position to ask relief at a later stage in the proceedings.[54] Where, however, there has been no formal service and the court acquires jurisdiction only through the unauthorized appearance of the attorney, defendant will be relieved from any injury he may suffer.[55]

A person is not a partner of an attorney whom he procures to prepare, file, and prove certain claims before a certain court for a percentage of the amount recovered, which claims the former has been employed to collect under a contract entitling him to a percentage of the amount collected. (II) For Plaintiff. Where suits are brought by an attorney without authority from the plaintiff, the rule seems established that the bringing of suit does not bind the involuntary plaintiff.[56] The usual practice is to have the suit dismissed on motion as soon as the attorney's lack of authority is established.[57]

61. Arnold v. Robertson, 3 Daly (N. Y.) 298.

Joint defendants and employment through third persons.—An attorney has no right to act for a person who is not his client, even though there may be a community of interest (Hobbs v. Duff, 43 Cal. 485; Bowen v. Wood, 35 Ind. 268; Jacobs v. Copeland, 54 Me. 503; Stout Coal Co. v. O'Donnell, 4 Kulp (Pa.) 495; Yoakley v. Hawley, 5 Lea (Tenn.) 670; Silverman v. Greaser, 27 W. Va. 550); but, where there are several joint defendants and an attorney appears in the case, he is, usually, supposed to act for all (Odd Fellows Sav. Bank v. Brander, 124 Cal. 255, 56 Pac. 1109; Oltrogge v. Schutte, 51 Iowa 279, 1 N. W. 544; Phelps v. Brewer, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 390, 57 Am. Dec. 56; Adams v. Mowry, 6 Mo. App. 582), except when one of the joint defendants has not been served with process (Miller v. Alexander, 8 Tex. 36; Whitney v. Silver, 22 Vt. 634). While it is true that if one as agent for another and with authority employs an attorney for him, the relation is between the attorney and the principal (Porter v. Peckham, 44 Cal. 204), yet it is settled that when a claim is placed in the hands of an attorney by a commercial agency, the attorney is agent of the commercial agency and not of the owner of the claim (Milligan v. Alabama Fertilizer Co., 89 Ala. 322, 7 So. 650; Hoover v. Greenbaum, 61 N. Y. 305; Bradstreet v. Emerson, 72 Pa. St. 124, 13 Am. Rep. 665; Hoover v. Wise, 91 U. S. 308, 23 L. ed. 392. See also Matter of Redmond, 54 N. Y. App. Div. 454, 66 N. Y. Suppl. 782).

To employ an attorney merely as a scrivener does not create the relation. De Wolf v. Strader, 26 Ill. 225, 79 Am. Dec. 371.

A power of attorney may be demanded from one of several joint and several creditors, not constituting a single ideal person, who is absent (Laframboise v. D'Amour, 28 L. C. Jur. 290), and where two attorneys ad litem have appeared in the same case and for the same defendant, the court will not hear the case until it is decided which attorney represents defendant (Giguère v. Beauparlant, 4 Rev. Lég. 686).

(II) Compelling Disclosure of Client's Address. As an accessory power, the court has a right to compel an attorney to disclose the name and residence of his alleged client.[70]

b. Parties. Moreover, either party to a suit may question an attorney's right to represent his alleged client;[71] but a stranger to the record cannot make such an objection.[72]

3. Time to Demand. The authority of an attorney to represent his alleged client cannot be questioned at the trial,[73] and such an objection should, it seems, be taken at the first term.[74] The application for plaintiff's[75] attorney to show authority should be made before a plea is filed.[76]

4. Court in Which to Demand. The court where the wrongful appearance was entered or the unauthorized suit brought is the proper tribunal to pass upon the question of authority,[77] which is ordinarily a question to be decided by the judges.[78]

5. Manner of Demanding — a. In General. The question of an attorney's authority to represent an alleged client cannot, it is held, be raised collaterally,[79] or on a demurrer,[80] nor should it be set up in a pleading;[81] but must be raised on motion directly for that purpose, and supported by affidavits.[82]

b. Affidavits. The affidavits should state facts showing why the motion ought to be granted, and it is not enough to allege generally, on belief and information, that the attorney acts without authority.[83] Affidavits by the party whom the attorney professes to represent are naturally entitled to much more weight.[84]

ney's authority;[89] but, after the party the attorney professes to represent has denied his authority, the burden of showing authority is on the attorney.[90]

e. Sufficiency. Although in former times it was customary and even necessary for attorneys to file in court warrants showing their right to represent clients, this practice has long been discarded,[91] and it is generally[92] no longer necessary,[93] either in the case of an individual or of a corporation, for an attorney to have a warrant of attorney,[94] authority by parol being sufficient.[95]

C. Incidents of Relation — 1. In General. Where the relation of attorney and client exists the law of principal and agent is generally applicable, and the client is bound, according to the ordinary rules of agency, by the acts of the attorney within the scope of the latter's authority.[96] This is true, assuming that

91. With the general disuse of warrants, the question of their due execution has become unimportant. In the following cases, however, warrants of attorney were held to be sufficiently executed and to be valid: Strean v. Lloyd, 128 Ill. 493, 21 N. E. 533; Graham v. Andrews, 11 Misc. (N. 92. In Canada it seems that, where suit is commenced in favor of a non-resident, except where begun by plaintiff's affidavit (McLaren v. Hall, 2 Leg. N. 178), a power of attorney must be filed (Globe Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Sun Mut. L. Ins. Co., 22 L. C. Jur. 38, 1 Leg. N. 139; Howard v. Yule, 4 Montreal Super. Ct. 420). But notice of such filing need not be given (Bank of Commerce v. Papineau, 20 L. C. Jur. 306), and the production of a general authorization to sue for debts due to an absentee is sufficient. It is not necessary that the attorney ad litem be named therein (Major v. Paris, 28 L. C. Jur. 104, 7 Leg. N. 266).

93. There is, however, no objection to a written warrant, and many mistakes regarding the exact limits of authority would be avoided by adhering to the former practice. the qualification that the notice must come to the attorney after the employment has begun; and, though the English rule is different,[1] the prevailing doctrine in the United States makes it necessary that the attorney gain the knowledge while engaged in his client's business in order that it may affect the latter with constructive knowledge.[2] Where, however, an attorney acts in his own behalf, he is chargeable with knowledge though he acquired his information while acting in his professional capacity in behalf of a client.[3]

3. SCOPE OF AUTHORITY — a. In General — (I) IN CONDUCT OF LITIGATION — (A) In General. An attorney's authority is not limited to the mere prosecution of the suit; but extends to everything necessary to the protection and promotion of the interests committed to his care so far as they are affected by proceedings in the court where he represents his client.[4] The details of prodiction over defendant's person the attorney may accept service of all necessary and proper papers during the progress of the cause.[10]

(2) Changing Venue. An attorney may, without any special authority, change the venue of an action.[11]

(3) Confessing Judgment. The prevailing view seems to be that the power of an attorney to confess judgment for his client is implied,[12] though some disinclination to follow this rule has been shown.[13] In every case, however, the record of the judgment would be prima facie evidence that the attorney who confessed it was properly authorized.[14] It has also been held that an attorney may, by virtue of his employment, consent to a decree in behalf of his client.[15] record has implied authority to discontinue an action if he sees fit,[16] or to discontinue against one of several defendants.[17] But the entry of a retraxit bars all further proceedings,[18] and, therefore, it must be entered by the client personally.[19]

(5) Indorsing Client's Name on Writ. An attorney is, by his employment to commence a suit, empowered to indorse his client's name on the writ.[20]

(6) Issuing Attachment. An attorney employed to collect a claim by suit has authority to issue an attachment thereon,[21] and his client will be responsible if the attachment is unjustifiable.[22] It naturally follows that an attorney can control the minor details of the attachment;[23] but to release a perfected one has been held to be beyond his power.[24]

(7) Making Affidavits. The power to make necessary affidavits is implied, provided, of course, that the attorney has the necessary information to enable him to make them.[25]

(c) After Judgment — (1) Appeal. At common law, an attorney's employment ended with the entry of judgment for or against his client,[41] and, while this rule has been qualified, it still holds to the extent that an attorney cannot, without some further retainer, institute proceedings to appeal from a judgment.[42] It seems, however, to come within the scope of a general employment to agree not to take an appeal;[43] and, once an appeal is taken and an attorney employed to prosecute or defend it, he has general power to grant extensions of time[44] and manage other details.

(b) Collecting. Under a general retainer, an attorney may also take affirmative measures to collect a judgment.[53]

(c) Staying Execution or Vacating Judgment. Where a stay of execution is moderate, it is within an attorney's power to grant one,[54] and, when the court would vacate a judgment on motion, he may agree to have it done by consent.[55]

(3) Control Over Execution. After an attorney has had an execution issue on a judgment, he may, by force of his original retainer, receive payment on it, and such payment will bind his client;[56] but he cannot discharge an execution on payment of less than the full amount.[57] It is also within the scope of his general employment to direct the sheriff as to the time and manner of enforcing the execution,[58] and all directions given to the sheriff and representations made to him regarding the return of the execution are binding on the client.[59] It seems that retainer does not authorize an attorney to bid and purchase for his client,[71] or to enter into agreements regarding his client's property.[72] It seems, however, that contracts of indemnity come within the general scope when they directly affect some step in the litigation.[73]

(2) By Executing Bonds. An attorney employed to conduct an appeal has implied power to execute an appeal bond,[74] and one empowered to collect a debt has implied power to execute an attachment bond;[75] but replevin and injunction bonds seem to come within a different category, and authority to execute them will not be implied.[76]

ney[93] is equally effective as payment or tender to the client. The power to receive payment includes the power to receive partial payments,[94] and amounts less than the face of the claim act as payment pro tanto.[95] An attorney is also authorized to receive money paid to a clerk of court in behalf of his client.[96] He cannot, however, receive payment before it is due,[97] or after a default has become absolute by non-payment.[98]

(b) In Other Than Money. In general, it is held that an attorney who has received a claim for collection has no power, in the absence of special authority, to accept a substitute for money in payment of such claim.[99] Thus it has been held that he cannot receive notes of a third person[1] nor bonds[2] in payment,

7. See, generally, EVIDENCE; PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

A client is not bound by casual statements made by an attorney in a letter (McGarry v. McGarry, 9 Pa. Super. Ct. 71, 43 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 268, 29 Pittsb. Leg. J. N. S. (Pa.) 236. (II) Special Powers. By virtue of the peculiar nature of their employment, the admissions of attorneys of record generally[8] bind their clients in all matters relating to the progress and trial[9] of the cause;[10] but, to this end, they must be distinct and formal and made with the express purpose of dispensing with the formal proof of some fact at the trial.[11] When the admissions take the form of mutual concessions for a scheme of trial they are irrevocable.[12] Whether admissions by an attorney for a former trial are of binding effect at a subsequent one seems to be a doubtful point, but the general doctrine allows them to be put in evidence even where they are not final.[13]

c. Delegation of Authority. As an attorney is chosen with particular reference to his fitness and capacity, the established doctrine of agency that delegatus non potest delegare applies to him with especial force. So, it has been held that an attorney employed to prosecute a suit cannot delegate his authority to another attorney,[14] and where a claim has been put into an attorney's hands for collection he cannot authorize another to collect it.[15] Neither can an attorney employ counsel to aid him, at the expense of his client,[16] although he may hire assistants at his own expense and charge the client with a reasonable value for the entire labor.[17] It is, however, so necessary and customary to employ the services of certain persons during the progress of a lawsuit that an attorney may, without special authority, make his client liable for the value of the work done, as by ordering printers to print briefs,[18] hiring official stenographers to transcribe testimony,[19] or getting sheriffs to serve process.[20] It has been held, also, that an attorney may employ an expert witness by virtue of his general authority, and make the client liable for such expert's fees.[21]

d. Ratification by Client. As a general rule, any act of an attorney which might have been authorized can be ratified,[22] but the client must have acted with complete knowledge of the circumstances or he will not be bound.[23] Ratification may be inferred from, or shown by, numerous circumstances,[24] the commonest

2. Effect of Death — a. Of Attorney. Where an individual attorney is employed in a proceeding, his death stops at once[30] all further acts in his client's behalf; and, where a firm is retained and one partner dies, this also seems to end the relationship.[31] The dissolution of the partnership, however, has not the same effect, and the client can still look to the partners to act jointly in respect to his business.[32]

b. Of Client. The death of the client vacates the power of the attorney, and the latter is neither required nor authorized to do anything further.[33] Thus, after the client's death, he cannot admit a previous mistake,[34] or remit part of a that authority continues until final judgment is actually perfected.

though an irrevocable power of attorney has been given.[47] The client himself, however, must desire the change.[48]

b. How Made — (I) On Application of Attorney. An attorney seeking to withdraw must make an application to the court, for the relation does not terminate formally till there is a withdrawal of record,[49] and he cannot deny his authority to act for a client, especially where it will embarrass the adversary in the conduct of the litigation.[50]

(II) On Application of Client — (A) In General. Ordinarily, the discharged attorney assents to the change, and, his assent being filed, on an order entered substituting the new attorney, the change is complete.[51] If this consent of record cannot be obtained, however, the dissatisfied client must make an application to the court to have a new attorney of record substituted; and the order of substitution must be entered on the record before the change is completed.[52]

(B) After Judgment. After judgment there can be a change of attorneys without an order of substitution, either for the purpose of taking further proceedings to collect the judgment[53] or in appealing from it.[54]

c. Terms. In granting an order of substitution the court may impose terms, in determining which the attendant circumstances are to be taken into account. In those cases where the attorney was entirely free from blame, it has been variously ordered that his fees must be paid,[55] that his expenses and costs must be settled for,[56] and that he must be protected by a lien for his charges.[57] Where an attorney is clearly at fault, he would not ordinarily be protected in this way,[58] and when both parties are to blame the discretion lodged in the court is even greater.[59]

d. Notice of Change to Adverse Party. After the consent of record has been filed or the order of substitution obtained, notice of the substitution must be given to the opposing attorney,[60] and, until such notice has been given, the adversary is justified in dealing solely with the original attorney of record[61] and in disregarding acts of the new attorney.[62] Acknowledging the new attorney by dealing with him would effect a waiver of notice.[63] Written notice is sufficient, and it is not necessary for a copy of the order of substitution to be served.[64]

e. Effect. The substitution of a new attorney by a party in place of the one who previously represented him is an acquiescence in all the proceedings of the first attorney, there being no disavowal, notwithstanding any irregularity in the proceeding.[65]

the legal profession, to act toward his client with the most scrupulous good faith and fidelity, and to exercise, in the course of his employment, that reasonable care and diligence which is usually exercised by lawyers. He is not bound to possess or exercise the highest degree of skill, care, and diligence; nor is he an insurer or guarantor of the results of his work.[66] For the consequences of a failure to perform these duties the attorney is generally liable to his client,[67] although it has been held that he is only liable for gross negligence.[68]

B. Duties — 1. In General. It is the duty of an attorney to make known to his client any interest he may have in the matter concerning which he is employed,[69] to be faithful to the interests of his client,[70] and to render correct accounts[71] where he is called upon to account. No man can be supposed to be indifferent to the knowledge of facts, which work directly on his interests, or bear on the freedom of his choice of counsel. When a client employs an attorney, he has a right to presume, if the latter be silent on the point, that he has no engagements, which interfere, in any degree, with his exclusive devotion to the cause confided to him; that he has no interest, which may betray his judgment, or endanger his fidelity."

Advice as to incurring costs.— It is the duty of a solicitor to inform his client, when a trustee, as to the advisability of taking proceedings and incurring costs, when it may become a question whether the costs will have to be paid out of his private funds or out of the trust fund or estate. Attending court.— Duty of attorney and counsel in a cause to attend court until cause is disposed of. Bowes v. Sutherland, 4 N. Brunsw. 1.

Entering rules.— It is the duty of counsel to see that rules obtained by them are properly entered in the minutes of the court. Ex p. Glass, 7 N. Brunsw. 88.

71. Where an attorney is called upon to account he is bound to show in detail what he has done with his client's money, and to justify its retention or expenditure. He cannot merely state that he has received it for counsel fees and for moneys which he has paid out for his client. Matter of Raby, 29 N. Y. App. Div. 225, 51 N. Y. Suppl. 552.

72. Applying proceeds according to agent's instructions.—An attorney may rightfully apply the proceeds of a claim placed in his hands for collection as directed by the party from whom he received it, who was controlling the claim in the name of, and as the agent of, the owner of such claim. Long v. Sampson, 4 Ky. L. Rep. 532.

To whom payment should be made.— In Marvin v. Ellwood, 11 Paige (N. Y.) 365, the court laid down the general proposition that it is the duty of an attorney who collects money for a client to pay it over to such client whenever he can do it with safety. See also Boulden v. Hebel, 17 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 312; Penny v. Caldwell, 1 Bailey (S. C.) 345. But an attorney who collects money for an agent may discharge himself by paying it over either to the agent or to the true owner (Wallace v. Peck, 12 Ala. 768), though he cannot discharge himself by paying it to the payee of money belonging to his client[73] is also the duty of an attorney where the payment falls within the scope of his employment.

2. Acquiring Property Adversely — a. In General. An attorney can in no case, without the client's consent, buy and hold, otherwise than in trust, any adverse title or interest touching the thing to which his employment relates, or put himself in an adverse position.[74]

b. At Judicial Sale. When an attorney purchases at a judicial sale property in relation to which he has, in some way, acted in a professional capacity,[75] the law presumes that he acted for his client and regards him as the trustee of his client respecting the property, unless he can show satisfactorily that he has purchased for himself with his client's consent, and that the transaction was in every way fair[76] and not to the client's disadvantage. The burden is on the attorney, of a note, when the latter is not, in fact, the true owner (Wallace v. Peck, 12 Ala. 768; Lewis v. Peck, 10 Ala. 142). Where, however, the note is payable to a third person and not indorsed, a payment by the attorney to the payee will discharge him from all liability to the person who placed the same in his hands. Peck v. Wallace, 19 Ala. 219. In some instances, moreover, persons other than clients are entitled to an accounting and payment from attorneys as a result of dealings between the attorneys and their clients. Newcastle v. Bellard, 3 Me. 369 (holding that, where an attorney had collected moneys for the treasurer of a town in that capacity, he was liable for the amount, in an action for money had and received, at the suit of the town, and that, in such action, he could not set off any demand of his own against the treasurer in his private capacity); Gillespie v. Mulholland, 12 Misc. (N. Y.) 40, 33 N. Y. Suppl. 33, 66 N. Y. St. 532 [affirming 8 Misc. (N. Y.) 511, 28 N. Y. Suppl. 754, 59 N. Y. St. 407] (wherein an application to compel an attorney to pay over money collected by him was granted, it appearing that the original owner of the claim, who employed the attorney, agreed to transfer it to the petitioner pending the action for its collection, but was advised by the attorney not to do so at that time, and the assignment was, therefore, not executed until judgment was recovered).

When attorney holds money in trust.— Attorneys who withdraw from a sheriff money deposited with the latter as security for a judgment that may be rendered in an action hold the money in trust for both parties to the action, the same as it was held by the sheriff. Hathaway v. Patterson, 45 Cal. 294. So, too, an attorney, intrusted with the collection of debts, who receives notes of third persons for collection as collateral security for such debts, becomes thereby a trustee for both debtor and creditor. Effect of termination of relation.— It has been held that if an attorney be retained to defend a particular title to real estate he can never thereafter, unless his client consents, buy the opposing title without holding it in trust for those then having the title he was employed to sustain. Henry v. Raiman, 25 Pa. St. 354, 64 Am. Dec. 703.

Taking mortgage to secure attorney's personal claim.— Where a client left notes given for the purchase-price of machinery with his attorney for collection, the notes stating that the machinery should belong to the client until paid for, and the attorney took a mortgage on the machinery, and recorded it, to secure an indebtedness to himself, the attorney's mortgage did not take priority over his client's subsequent mortgage, for the reason that an attorney cannot subordinate the rights and interests of his client to his own. Taylor v. Barker, 30 S. C. 238, 9 S. E. 115.

75. An attorney who sustains no professional relation to the parties concerned may purchase property at judicial sales the same as other persons. Taylor v. Boardman, 24 Mich. 287; Bowers v. Virden, 56 Miss. 595; Christian v. O'Neal, 46 Miss. 669; Sallade's Appeal, 36 Pa. St. 429.

76. Where the attorney acted in perfect fairness and good faith and in no manner in opposition to the interest of his client, it has been held that the mere relation of attorney and client does not, of itself, disable the at-and, if his interest as a purchaser may conflict with his duty as an attorney, the sale will be held void or the attorney charged as a trustee,[77] at the option[78] of the client.[79]

e. Outstanding Claims Against Client. An attorney cannot, without his client's consent, buy and hold for himself or a third person claims outstanding against his client or his client's estate, but will hold such claims as trustee for his client or the estate.[80]

3. Dealings With Client — a. In General. Owing to the confidential and fiduciary relation between an attorney and his client and to the influence of the attorney over his client growing out of that relation,[81] courts of law, and especially of equity, scrutinize most closely all transactions between an attorney and his client.[82] To sustain a transaction of advantage to himself with his client,

81. Reason for rule.— "It is obvious that this relation must give rise to great confidence between the parties, and to very strong influence over the actions and rights and interests of the client. The situation of an attorney or solicitor puts it in his power to avail himself, not only of the necessities of his client, but of his good nature, liberality and credulity, to obtain undue advantages, bargains and gratuities. Hence, the law, with a wise providence, not only watches over all the transactions of parties in this predicament, but it often interposes to declare transactions void which, between other persons, would be held unobjectionable." Effect of termination of relation.— The rule applies even after the relation of attorney and client has ceased, where the influence of that relation still continues (Mason v. Ring, 3 Abb. Dec. (N. Y.) 210, 2 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 322; Wood v. Downes, 18 Ves. Jr. 120, 11 Rev. Rep. 160; Wright v. Proud, 13 Ves. W. 171). Even though a decree of divorce has been obtained, the fiduciary relations are not terminated, provided the attorney continues to attend to the arranging of property matters between the parties; and a deed made during that time by the client to the attorney is made while the fiduciary relation exists. c. Assignments of Judgments. An assignment of a judgment by a client to his attorney is not necessarily void, but, owing to the confidential relations of the parties, the law casts upon the attorney the burden of establishing its perfect fairness, equity, and adequacy of consideration.[85]

d. Fraudulent Transfers. Where a transfer of property is made from a client to his attorney, for the purpose of defrauding creditors, the parties are not regarded as in pari delicto, but the client will be relieved if it can be done without injury to an innocent purchaser.[86]

e. Gifts. While a gift from a client to an attorney, during the relation, is not void ipso facto,[87] it is viewed by the courts with the greatest suspicion.[88]

f. Sales. The law does not absolutely prohibit[89] a sale of property[90] by a client to his attorney, and such a sale will be sustained when the transaction is open, honest, and fair, and no undue influence has been used by the attorney,[91] but the burden of proving fairness is on the latter.[92] relieved attorneys from a disability which before existed, did not relieve their dealings with their clients from the supervision which the courts have at all times exercised. Haight v. Moore, 37 N. Y. Super. Ct. 161. See also Whitehead v. Kennedy, 69 N. Y. 462.

Agreement of indemnity.— It has been held that an agreement by an attorney that, in consideration of defendant's appealing from a judgment against him and paying the attorney a certain fee, the latter would pay whatever judgment was ultimately recovered against the defendant on appeal, is void as against public policy, and cannot be enforced by either the attorney or the client. 87. "A client, for example, may naturally entertain a kindly feeling towards an attorney or solicitor by whose assistance he has long benefited; and he may fairly and wisely desire to benefit him by a gift. . . . No law that is tolerable among civilized men, men who have the benefits of civility, without the evils of excessive refinement and overdone subtlety, can ever forbid such a transaction, provided the client be of mature age and of sound mind, and there be nothing to show that the deception was practiced." Jr. 136, 138, where Lord Erskine rendered a dictum that "independent of all fraud, an attorney shall not take a gift from his client, while the relation subsists; though the transaction may be, not only free from fraud, but the most moral in its nature;" "a dictum," Lord Brougham observed in Hunter v. Atkins, 3 Myl. & K. 113, 136, 10 Eng. Ch. 113, "reduced . . . to this, that it is almost impossible for a gift from a client to attorney to stand, because the difficulty is extreme of showing that everything was voluntary and fair, and with full warning and perfect knowledge."

89. Such contracts are voidable at the election of the client (Rogers v. R. E. Lee Min. Co., 3 McCrary (U. S.) 76, 9 Fed. 721, 14 Centr. L. J. 168, 13 Reporter 39), whether or not false representations were made to induce him to sell his claim, or even if the claim was sold for an adequate price (Lane v. Black, 21 W. Va. 617).

C. Liabilities — 1. In General — a. For Fraud. An attorney is liable for fraud if he conceals an adverse interest held by him whereby his client suffers loss.[93] It also being his duty to advise his client promptly whenever he has information which it is important the client should receive, he is liable for fraud if he conceals any such material fact which should have been communicated to his client.[94] Actual fraud is not necessary.[95]

b. For Money Collected. As the relation between attorney and client in regard to money collected is in general the fiduciary one of agent and principal, an attorney who fails to pay over[96] money or property collected is liable for its value[97] as of the time of the conversion.[98] If, however, it has been customary for an attor-

Mere concealment of the fact of an adverse retainer is not a necessary presumption of fraud. Williams v. Reed, 3 Mason (U. S.) 405, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,733.

Treble damages.— Under a statute making an attorney who has been guilty of any deceit with intent to defraud any party liable for treble damages, it has been held that the transaction must have reference to a pending suit. Looff v. Lawton, 97 N. Y. 478.

A client cannot maintain an action against her attorney for alleged bad faith in securing for her a compromise settlement in an action in which nothing could have been legally recovered, where the settlement was the result of proper negotiations, and was only accepted after consultation with her father, although at the time she was a minor. Phillips v. Rhodes, 2 Colo. App. 70, 29 Pac. 1011.

96. Loss through third persons.— As the responsibility of an attorney for money collected is that of an ordinary bailee, he will not be responsible for its loss through default of third persons if he has acted to the best of his skill and with a bona fide and ordinary degree of attention, and provided that the relation between him and his client has not been changed to that of debtor and creditor. Assignment of the benefit of a suit, though written by the plaintiff's attorney, does not bind him to pay the money to the assignee — he is liable only to the assignor. Lee v. Chambers, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 506.

97. Liability for interest.—An attorney is liable for interest on money collected for the period during which he has treated it as his own, or after demand and refusal or other equivalent act; or where he has failed to notify his client of the collection within a reasonable time.

ney in dealing with his client to treat money collected as his own, and he appropriates it to his own use, this does not constitute a conversion, but creates a mere contract relation of debtor and creditor.[99] He may retain enough of the money collected to pay his own fees, but he has no lien on the rest;[1] and it is his duty, after collection, to notify his client immediately, or, at all events, within a reasonable time.[2]

c. For Negligence — (1) In General. An attorney[3] must use a reasonable degree of care and skill and possess, to a reasonable extent, the knowledge requisite to a proper performance of the duties of his profession, and is liable for damage to the client resulting as a proximate consequence of the lack of such skill or knowledge, or from the failure to exercise it.[4] This liability exists, even

Not liable for every mistake.—"It must not be understood that an attorney is liable for every mistake that may occur in practice, or that he may be held responsible to his client for every error of judgment in the conduct of his client's cause. Instead of that, the rule is, that if he act with a proper degree of skill and with reasonable care and to the best of his knowledge, he will not be held responsible." Clifford, J., in National Sav. Bank v. Ward, 100 U. S. 195, 25 L. ed. 621, 622. He is not responsible for the consequences of his client's failure to keep him advised of his residence (Harris v. Govett, 3 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 560), nor, it seems, for not urging for his client the defense that the agreement sued upon was made on a Sunday, as it is not part of his professional duty to take all dishonest advantages (Vail v. Duggan, 7 U. C. Q. B. 568); and before an attorney, who has been employed to defend a suit, and has failed to do so, so that judgment is rendered against his client, can be made liable for the whole amount of the judgment thus recovered, he must have been informed by his client what was the nature of the defense he was expected to make (Grayson v. Wilkinson, 5 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 268; Benton v. Craig, 2 Mo. 198).

A client who is a lawyer is estopped to plead the negligence of his attorney when his acquiescence in the latter's course is the result of a personal examination of the author-though the attorney acts gratuitously.[5] The act complained of, however, must be done while the relation of attorney and client exists, and must be within the scope of the attorney's employment.[6]

(II) Ignorance of Law. An attorney must be acquainted with the statutes and the settled rules of law and practice in the courts prevailing in the locality wherein he practices, and is responsible for loss to his client resulting from ignorance thereof.[7] But an error of judgment upon a controverted point of law does not render him liable for damages resulting from such error.[8]

Embarrassing collection when client solvent.— An attorney who undertakes the collection of a debt, and by his negligence puts it in such a situation as to embarrass the creditor in obtaining payment and to render the debt of less value, is liable to his client, though the debtor always has been and still is able to pay the debt. Wilson v. Coffin, 2 Cush. (Mass.) 316.

Receiving depreciated currency.— An attorney who, without authority, receives money, not passing at its face value, in payment of a debt left with him for collection, is liable for its face value even though it was customary to receive such money in payment. Advising as to value of security.—An attorney who is employed merely to examine the title to property on the security of which his client contemplates advancing money, and to prepare the necessary legal documents, is not chargeable with neglect of duty in failing to advise his client as to the value of the security. Cohn v. Heusner, 9 Misc. (N. Y.) 482, 30 N. Y. Suppl. 244, 61 N. Y. St. 92. Failure to defend suit.— If an attorney be employed to defend a suit, and fail to do so, he is liable to the party injured to the extent of damages actually suffered. New and unusual mode of pleading.— If an attorney, without any assignable reason and without precedent, adopts a new and unusual mode of pleading, in consequence of which his client suffers loss, the attorney is answerable in an action for negligence. Carrigan v. Andrews, 6 N. Brunsw. 485.

(B) Compromise. An attorney who compromises his client's debt without authority is liable to him from the date of such compromise.[22]

(C) Consent to Judgment, or to Vacation Thereof. An attorney is liable for confessing judgment, or consenting to the vacation thereof, without authority.[23]

(II) Violation of Instructions. An attorney is bound[24] to follow his client's instructions so far as the rules of law and the orders of the court will permit;[25] and he is, accordingly, liable to his client for acts in violation of his instructions or in excess of his authority, whereby the latter is injured.[26]

3. For Acts of Partners. As the employment of a member of a firm of attorneys is that of the entire firm, an attorney is liable to a client for the negligence, lack of skill, or wrongful acts of a partner, even though he may have had no participation in, or knowledge of, the transaction.[28] Such acts, however, in order to make the attorney liable, must be done while the relation of attorney and client subsists between the firm and the client.[29]

D. Remedies of Client — 1. Action — a. For Money Collected — (I) Form of Action. When an attorney wrongfully withholds money which he has collected, his client may bring an action at law against him for the amount so withheld;[30] but a bill in equity for an accounting will not lie unless, for some particular reason, the remedy at law is not adequate, and it appears that the power of the court of equity is necessary to complainant's remedy.[31] With reference to the form of the action at law it has been held that assumpsit,[32] case,[33] and account

W. 178 (holding that the fact that one member of a firm of attorneys employed to manage a will contest conspired with one of the heirs to cheat the others out of their share of a settlement, after the money had been paid over to the attorney in fact of the contesting heirs, does not render the firm liable for a diversion of the funds where it acted in good faith until the settlement was made and money paid over); Ex p. Flood, 23 N. Brunsw. 86 (holding that where one member of a firm of attorneys receives money for investment, and misappropriates it without the knowledge or consent of the other, it ought to be clearly shown that the latter was guilty of personal misconduct, or, at least, of neglect of duty as a member of the firm, in consequence of the misconduct of his partner, before the court will interfere on a summary application to compel him to pay money).

Effect of associating partner.—An attorney, in whose hands notes are placed for collection, will be individually liable for neglect, or for money had and received, though he gave notice that he had afterward associated with him a partner in the practice of his profession who collected the money, unless the client recognized the partnership in the transaction of his business. Mardis v. Shackleford. 4 Ala. 493.

render[34] will lie against an attorney who fails to pay over money collected by him.

(II) Conditions Precedent—(A) Demand and Refusal. As it is the duty of an attorney to notify his client immediately, or, at least, within a reasonable time, that he has in his hands money collected for his client, if he does so notify him,[35] in the absence of instructions to remit, no action to recover the money will lie until after demand and refusal,[36] unless demand has been waived or there are circumstances which excuse it.[37]

(B) Release. Where an administrator turned over the balance in his hands to the attorney for the distributees, with directions to hold it in trust for them, but not to pay it to them till they had duly and properly signed a release, they cannot maintain an action against the attorney to recover their respective shares without first tendering the releases, as a compliance with the condition precedent which the administrator had placed on its payment.[38]

Demand before suit is not necessary where the attorney has agreed to pay over moneys when collected, and has failed to do so. Mardis v. Shackleford, 4 Ala. 493.

No demand is necessary, by the party entitled to money, where an attorney receives it as for his client, knowing that it belongs to another, the act of receiving being wrongful (Mowery v. Webb, 6 Ky. L. Rep. 360), or by the client where the attorney fails to give information of its receipt, and converts the money or otherwise applies it illegally (Nisbet v. Lawson, 1 Ga. 275).

(III) PLEADINGS—(A) Complaint, Declaration, or Petition.[39] Where demand and refusal is a condition precedent, plaintiff must aver such demand and refusal.[40] He need not, however, aver that defendant was retained for reward,[41] that defendant promised to account for the moneys which he collected,[42] or that the latter fraudulently embezzled, misapplied, or converted the money.[43] Neither is it necessary for him to state the particulars of the account or to furnish a bill of particulars, unless under a special order.[44]

(B) Plea. Under the general issue the attorney may show a lien[45] or claim for services.[46]

(IV) DEFENSES—(A) In General—(1) APPLICATION OF FUND AS DIRECTED. Where money is applied in good faith by an attorney in accordance with an agreement entered into between his clients, this is a defense in an action against the attorney, though there was a failure of consideration among the clients.[47]

(2) GARNISHMENT BY CLIENT'S CREDITOR. In an action against an attorney for money collected, it is a defense that, before he had had an opportunity to account, the money had been garnished[48] by a creditor of the client.[49]

(3) STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS. An attorney is not debarred from the provisions of the statute of limitations, in an action against him for money collected, because of the relationship existing between him and his client.[50]

(B) Counter-Claim. It has been held that an attorney, when sued by his client for money collected for the latter, may set up, by way of counter-claim,

B. 546, from which it seems that the court may prevent an attorney pleading the statute of limitations to defeat a client's just claim, but cannot prevent the attorney's executors from so doing.

When period begins to run.—In some jurisdictions it has been held that, in absence of fraud on the attorney's part, the statutory period begins to run from the time of collection. Cook v. Rives, 13 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 328, 53 Am. Dec. 88; Aultman v. Adams, 35 Mo. App. 503; Hawkins v. Walker, 4 Yerg. (Tenn.) 187. See also Smith v. Owen, 7 Lea (Tenn.) 53. In others it runs only from the date of client's demand (Denton v. Embury, 10 Ark. 228; Roberts v. Armstrong, 1 Bush (Ky.) 263, 89 Am. Dec. 624; Sneed v. Hanly, Hempst. (U. S.) 659, 22 Fed. a demand for services, and is entitled to set off other claims which he may have against his client.[51]

(c) Estoppel. An attorney who has collected money for his client is estopped to deny that he is an attorney,[52] that plaintiff is a corporation when it sues in the same name used by him in obtaining the judgment,[53] or to claim that the client has no title to the moneys collected,[54] and may be estopped by laches from setting up an equitable defense.[55]

(v) Evidence. The burden of proof is on plaintiff to establish, upon all the evidence, his right to recover;[56] but, in an action against an attorney to recover a sum of money collected by him for plaintiff and held by him as compensation for legal services,[57] the burden is on defendant to prove the services and their value, and he can retain only enough to compensate him.[58]

(vi) Damages. The measure of damages in an action against an attorney by a client is the amount of money collected, with interest from the time it was demanded, or, if the attorney failed to give notice to his client or wilfully misappropriated the money or applied it to his own use, with interest from the date of its reception.[59]

b. For Negligence — (i) In General. A client[60] who has suffered damages as the result of his attorney's negligence[61] may recover therefor in an action at law.[62]

Effect of client's death.—Where the client died, and afterward the attorneys collected the money, it was held, in the administrator's suit to recover the money from them, that the attorneys could not set off the sum due for their services before the client's death, but might do so for those rendered afterward. (II) Complaint, Declaration, or Petition. In an action against an attorney for negligence it is sufficient for plaintiff to aver, generally, that defendant was retained as attorney, without stating the consideration.[63] Neither is it necessary for plaintiff to show that he was without fault,[64] or to state specific facts constituting the negligence.[65] When the action was for failure to collect a note it has been held that plaintiff must allege his title to the note.[66]

(III) Defenses—(A) Champerty. An attorney sued by his client for negligence and unskilfulness cannot set up champerty in the contract as a defense to the suit.[67]

(B) Statute of Limitations. It is a good defense that the client's right of action is barred by the statute of limitations.[68]

(C) That Client Did Not Own Claim. It has been held a good defense to an action by a client against an attorney for negligence in not instituting suit to recover a debt due to the former, that the debt was not due to him, but to a third person at the time when defendant was retained to institute the suit.[69]

(D) That Client Prevented Collection. It is a good defense that the client himself prevented the collection of the debt.[70]

(IV) Evidence. Plaintiff must prove defendant's employment,[71] and the want of reasonable care and skill in the performance of the stipulated service;[72]

but, where a prima facie case of negligence is shown, the burden of proving adequate excuse is on the attorney.[73] An attorney's receipt for a claim, placed in his hands for collection, is admissible to prove the relation of attorney and client,[74] and is prima facie evidence of the genuineness and justness of the securities described in the receipt.[75] The record of the suit on the claim is also admissible against the attorney, to prove the final determination of that suit, although it was conducted by him in the name of another attorney.[76] The attorney will not be allowed to prove that he consulted a distinguished attorney respecting the proper course to be pursued by him, or that the arrangement made by him was, in the opinion of the witness, the best that could be made for his client's interest;[77] nor can he introduce a memorandum of instructions made in plaintiff's presence.[78] Expert evidence is admissible on the question of negligence.[79]

b. Jurisdiction. A state court has no jurisdiction to compel an attorney to pay over money collected by him under process of a federal court.[88]

c. When Remedy Authorized — (I) In General. The summary jurisdiction of the court, to be exercised by order to its attorneys, extends to any matter in which an attorney has been employed in his professional character.[89] An order for the payment of money will not be granted, however, unless the claim of the petitioner is free from doubt.[90]

(II) Existence of Relation of Attorney and Client. To give the right of proceeding summarily against an attorney it is essential that the relation of attorney and client should exist between the parties in relation to the matter which is the ground for the application.[91]

(III) Pursuit of Other Remedy. Bringing an action for the recovery of judgment against an attorney is a waiver of the right to proceed summarily against him.[92]

Action in other state.—An attorney collecting money for his client may be compelled, by summary proceedings, to pay over the same as well where such moneys were collected in a proceeding instituted in another state as in domestic actions. To give the right of proceeding summarily against an attorney to compel the payment of money in his hands it is not essential that he should have received the money in any suit or legal proceeding, or that he should have been employed to commence legal proceedings. Assignment of claim.—An attorney will not, on a summary process, be ordered to pay over money collected for, and claimed by, his client, if an assignment of the client's claim to a third person has come indirectly to the attorney's knowledge. Bowen v. Smidt, 20 N. Y. Suppl. 735. 49 N. Y. St. 647. See also Murray v. Johnston, 6 N. d. Who May Invoke Remedy. A summary application to compel an attorney to pay over money collected in a professional capacity is entertained only on motion of a client.[93]

e. Defenses. An attorney, when proceeded against by motion under the statute, may insist upon any defense which it would be competent for him to make to an action if that form of remedy had been adopted.[94] But good faith in withholding money collected has been held to be no answer to a summary application to compel the payment of such money.[95]

f. Procedure — (i) In General. The summary power of the court must

C. 570, holding that a rule will not be granted against an attorney, to compel him to pay over money collected for a client, where the client has filed a bill in equity against the attorney for the same purpose and the suit is ready for hearing. But see Gabriel v. Schillinger Fire Proof Cement, etc., Co., 24 Misc. (N. Y.) 313, 52 N. Y. Suppl. 1127, holding that where, on an attorney's failure to pay costs with money his client paid him for that purpose, the client paid them, and secured a judgment therefor against the attorney, execution on which was returned unsatisfied, a summary proceeding to compel him to repay the money, by motion in the cause in which the attorney was retained, was not barred by the client's pursuit of his remedy by action. To same effect is In re Grey, [1892] 2 Q. B. 440, 61 L. J. Q. B. 795, 41 Wkly. Rep. 3.

Action barred by limitation.—An attachment will not be granted against an attorney for the non-payment of money collected by him for a client, after the remedy by action is barred by the statute of limitations. People v. Brotherson, 36 Barb. (N. Y.) 662.

A proceeding by motion against a party for money collected as an attorney is no bar to a recovery in an action on the case for damages. Coopwood v. Baldwin, 25 Miss. 129.

93. Sloan v. Johnson, 14 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 47, holding that where an administrator placed a note for collection, the property of his intestate, in the hands of attorneys and they collected it, and the probate court afterward revoked the administrator's letters and appointed another administrator, the latter could not maintain the summary motion against the attorneys for refusing to pay over the money thus collected. But see Trammell v. Shropshire, 22 Tex. 327, holding that the summary remedy, given by Hartley Dig. Tex. art. 62, against an attorney for his failure to pay over money collected, extends to the case of an administrator, for whom, or for whose intestate, the attorney has collected money which the administrator is entitled to receive. See also Wilmerdings v. Fowler, 14 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 249, holding that an attorney who by fraud procures from the court an order by which he obtains money from a party may be proceeded against summarily, even though such party be not his client.

As to necessity of existence of relation of attorney and client see supra, IV, D, 2, c, (II).

As to parties to proceeding see infra, IV, D, 2, f, (IV).

Assignee of client.— The summary remedy by motion to compel an attorney to pay over money of his client is not available to an assignee of the client. Matter of Schell, 58 Hun (N. Y.) 440, 12 N. Y. Suppl. 790, 34 N. Y. St. 928 [affirmed in 128 N. Y. 67, 27 N. E. 957, 38 N. Y. St. 442]; Hess v. Joseph, 7 Rob. (N. Y.) 609; Bowen v. Smidt, 20 N. Y. Suppl. 735, 49 N. Y. St. 647; Longworth v. Handy, 2 Disn. (Ohio) 75.

Attorney of non-resident client.— That petitioners in a summary proceeding to compel an attorney at law to pay over certain funds alleged to have been received by him in his professional capacity are non-residents does not, of itself, excuse them from verifying their own statements, or authorize another attorney, on his own application, based on the unsworn and ex parte statements of his clients, to institute such a proceeding.

One of several co-plaintiffs cannot litigate his rights, as against the other plaintiffs, to the money recovered in the suit, by a motion against the attorney for not paying over the same. Trammell v. Shropshire, 22 Tex. 327.

94. Jones v. Miller, 1 Swan (Tenn.) 151.

Payment to third person.—Where an attorney assumed control over money payable to his client under a judgment, but, instead of taking the money into his possession, directed the actual custodian of the fund to pay it to a third person for the client's benefit, he cannot claim, in opposition to a summary proceeding to compel him to pay over such money, that he did not receive it. Kent v. Rockwell, 89 Hun (N. Y.) 88, 34 N. Y. Suppl. 1041, 69 N. Y. St. 13.

Refusal of client to give receipt.— It is no excuse for the refusal of an attorney to pay over that his client refuses to give a receipt on settlement. The duty is absolute to pay on demand, and the law imposes no obligation on a party receiving money to give an acquittance for it. Longworth v. Handy, 2 Disn. (Ohio) 75.

be invoked by application in the action in which the alleged misconduct was committed, and not in an action against the attorney to recover for such misconduct.[96]

(II) Form of Proceeding. The form of the proceeding is generally regulated by statute. It may be attachment for contempt,[97] disbarment,[98] or execution against the property.[99]

(III) Demand. Money collected by an attorney for his client must be demanded before the client can move for an attachment for its non-payment.[1]

(IV) Parties. Where a judgment recovered for a client by a firm of attorneys is paid to one member of the firm, who appropriates the proceeds to his own use, and refuses to pay any part of it to the client, the other member of the firm is not a necessary party to a summary proceeding by the client for an order compelling the payment to him of the amount received.[2]

rule should convince the court that the money was withheld in good faith and believed to be not more than an honest compensation, the rule will be dismissed and the petitioner remitted to his action at law. Appeal from judgment.—It is no answer, to a rule on an attorney to show cause why he should not pay over money collected after judgment against him, that he has appealed from such judgment. McMath v. Maus Bros. Boot, etc., Store, 12 Ky. L. Rep. 952, 15 S. W. 879.

The assertion of a lien by the attorney is not an answer to a summary application against him. Matter of Fincke, 6 Daly (N. Y.) 111; Gillespie v. Mulholland, 12 Misc. (N. Y.) 40, 33 N. Y. Suppl. 33, 66 N. Y. St. 532. But see Matter of Attorney, 63 How. Pr. (N. Papers — How entitled.— The papers, upon an application to compel the attorney of defendant to pay plaintiff a sum of money deposited by defendant with his attorney, should not be entitled in the action, the application being dehors the action, and in no sense a step or proceeding in the action. Hess v. Joseph, 7 Rob. (N. Y.) 609.

Trial by jury.— In Georgia it has been held that the answer of an attorney, made to a rule against him for not paying over money collected for his client, is traversable, and the traverse is to be tried by a jury. Smith v. Bush, 58 Ga. 121. But in Louisiana it has been held that the statutes of 1809 and 1826, authorizing summary proceedings against counselors and attorneys at law who refuse to pay over money collected by them for clients, do not entitle them to the intervention of a jury. But see Taylor v. Armstead, 3 Call (Va.) 200, holding that, on motion against an attorney for money received by him for his client, if notice be regularly given, and he appear and contest the claim, plaintiff is not bound to prove a demand and refusal to pay.

Failure of record to show demand.— Where the sole point of the answer is a denial that the money was collected, and the answer is found by the jury to be untrue, the judgment making absolute the rule will not be disturbed because the record contains no evidence of demand. Smith v. Bush, 58 Ga. 121.

(v) Evidence. The answer of an attorney to a rule against him for money collected is not evidence for him except so far as responsive to the rule.[3]

(vi) Matters Determinable. Upon summary application for the payment of money collected by an attorney, the court may determine as to the existence of a special agreement fixing the rate of the attorney's compensation for prosecuting the action.[4]

(vii) Reference. The court may direct a reference to hear and report on the questions arising on a summary application to compel an attorney to pay over money collected.[5]

g. Measure of Liability. An attorney is not answerable in a summary proceeding against him for failure to pay over moneys collected for more than the sum actually collected.[6]

V. COMPENSATION OF ATTORNEY.

A. Right to Compel Payment — 1. In England. English barristers, advocates, and counsel are incapable of making contracts for compensation for their services, nor can they maintain an action for the reasonable value of work performed.[7] On the other hand, the fees of attorneys, solicitors, and proctors are exist, the persons claiming such rights therein are necessary parties.

As to who may invoke remedy see supra, IV, D, 2, d.

Joinder of parties.— Where an attorney recovered judgments against the United States, in the court of commissioners of Alabama claims, for each of six different petitioners on distinct and separate claims belonging to each, they could not unite in one proceeding against him to obtain possession thereof. Matter of Forster, 49 Hun (N. Y.) 114, 1 N. Y. Suppl. 619, 17 N. Y. St. 115.

3. Foster v. Reid, 58 Ga. 221.

Admissions by failure to reply.—An answer filed by an attorney, setting up affirmative matter, does not cast any additional burden upon complainant, and the averments of the answer are not to be regarded as admitted because no reply was filed thereto. State v. Morgan, 80 Iowa 413, 45 N. W. 1070.

4. Porter v. Parmly, 39 N. Y. Super. Ct. 219.

Amount of compensation.— On a motion to compel an attorney to pay over to his clients moneys received by him in excess of what he is entitled to for his services, where it appears what services the attorney had performed, the court has only to fix a reasonable amount for his compensation. Ferdon v. Ferdon, 36 N. Y. Suppl. 741, 71 N. Y. St. 671.

5. Matter of Fincke, 6 Daly (N. Y.) 111; Gillespie v. Mulholland, 12 Misc. (N. Y.) 40, 33 N. Y. Suppl. 33, 66 N. Y. St. 532. But see Waterbury v. Eldridge, 5 N. Y. Suppl. 324, 24 N. Y. St. 429, holding that on petition to compel an attorney to pay over money collected, and which he claims a right to retain in payment for services rendered, where it appears that the attorney had rendered his bill for such services up to a certain date, which had been fully paid, and the value of his services since that date can be readily ascertained, it is proper for the court to decide that value, allow the attorney to retain it, and, without appointing a referee, order him to pay over the balance.

Indefinite claim.—In proceedings against an attorney to compel him to deliver property in his possession belonging to plaintiff, where it appears that, though the attorney's claim is exceedingly indefinite, yet some amount may be due him by reason of his retainer by plaintiff, a reference is properly ordered to ascertain the amount thereof, giving plaintiff the option of making a deposit sufficient to secure whatever amount may be established on the reference. Taylor Iron, etc., Co. v. Higgins, 20 N. Y. Suppl. 746, 49 N. Y. St. 645 [affirmed in 137 N. Y. 605, 33 N. E. 744, 51 N. Y. St. 930].

Hearing of report.—Where, upon the return of an order requiring an attorney to show cause why he should not be punished, as for a contempt, because of his failure to pay over to his client moneys collected for him, a reference is ordered, the court may, upon the coming in of the report, appoint a day for the hearing thereon, and direct that an attachment issue against the attorney, returnable upon the day of the hearing, for the purpose of securing his presence thereon. Matter of Steinert, 24 Hun (N. Y.) 246.

6. Langmade v. Glenn, 57 Ga. 525; Croft v. Hicks, 26 Tex. 383, which hold that an attorney cannot, in a summary proceeding, be made liable for failure, through negligence or other cause, to recover judgment for the full amount due the client.

Allowance of interest.—Where a judgment recovered for a client by a firm of attorneys is paid to one member of the firm, who appropriates the proceeds to his own use, and the amount which the client owes the firm for legal services is disputed, the order finding the amount due the client and directing its payment should allow interest only from the commencement of the proceeding. Matter of Wolf, 51 Hun (N. Y.) 407, 4 N. Y. Suppl. 239, 21 N. Y. St. 224.

7. Kennedy v. Broun, 13 C. B. N. S. 677, 9 Jur. N. S. 119, 32 L. J. C. P. 137, 7 L. T. Rep. N. S. 626, 11 Wkly. Rep. 284, 106 E. C. L. 677. See also Swinfen v. Chelmsford, 1 F. & F.

regulated strictly by statute,[8] and they are, by statute, authorized to enter into contracts with their clients for the payment for their service, either by gross sum, by percentage, or as salary;[9] but in case the services are rendered in respect to an action at law or a suit in equity, the solicitor must submit his bill to an officer of the court, to be taxed, before he receives his pay.

2. In the United States and Canada — a. Rule Stated — (i) In General. In the United States it has been held, generally, that members of all branches of the legal profession are entitled to fair compensation[10] for services rendered on a contract, express or implied,[11] and can enforce this right by action,[12] but, where an

9. By the Attorneys and Solicitors' Act of 1870, 33 & 34 Vict. c. 28.

10. Unlawful charges.— In some states the amount which an attorney can charge for his services is regulated by statute, and it is an offense, making the attorney subject to a penalty, for him to charge more than the sum specified. It is held that the act of receiving illegal fees is one of official misconduct (Waters v. Whittemore, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 593), but only one penalty can be exacted for several unlawful charges in the same bill (Tanner v. Croxall, 17 N. J. L. 332); and, if the bill of costs has been regularly taxed by the proper officer, the attorney is relieved from liability for excessive charges (Onondaga v. Briggs, 3 Den. (N. Y.) 173). These rules apply only to charges for such items as are fixed by statute (State v. Andrews, 51 N. H. 582; Onondaga v. Briggs, 3 Den. (N. Y.) 173; Hall v. Gird, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 586), and, where the statute exacts no penalty, the illegal fees cannot be recovered back (Rawson v. Porter, 9 Me. 119).

11. Services under assignment by court.— The appointment of attorneys by the court to defend criminals or to see that proceedings of an ex parte nature are fairly conducted is largely regulated by the various state statutes, and the right of the attorney to pay for services thus rendered depends upon the same statutes.

California.— Attorneys appointed in probate proceedings are entitled to reasonable compensation. Lee v. San Joaquin County Super. Ct., 112 Cal. 354, 44 Pac. 666.

Georgia.—A judge appointing an attorney under the provisions of the code has no power to order the payment of his fee. Creamer v. Creamer, 36 Ga. 618.

Iowa.— Iowa Code, § 5314, allows ten dollars to the attorney appointed for each man accused of felony that he defends (Clark v. Osceola County, 107 Iowa 502, 78 N. W. 198), but he must file an affidavit that he has not received compensation from any other source (State v. Behrens, 109 Iowa 58, 79 N. W. 387).

Kentucky.— Ky. Civ. Code, § 441, requires that an attorney acting under appointment must sign a statement of what he has done and file it with the papers in the case. Jackson v. McElroy, 2 Bush (Ky.) 132.

Michigan.—An order of the court directing an appeal is necessary in order that an attorney, appointed under How. Anno. Stat. Mich. § 9046, recover extra compensation for an appeal as allowed by the following section. De Long v. Muskegon County, 111 Mich. 568, 69 N. W. 1115.

New York.— N. Y. Code, § 460, enacts that one assigned to act as counsel to one permitted to sue in forma pauperis must act without compensation. Matter of Kelly, 12 Daly (N. Y.) 110. Section 308 of the code permits the appointment of counsel to defend persons accused of capital offenses, and the allowance of reasonable compensation, not exceeding five hundred dollars. In proper cases five hundred dollars may be allowed to each of the counsel employed. People v. Heiselbetz, 26 Misc. (N. Y.) 100, 55 N. Y. Suppl. 4, 5 N. Y. Annot. Cas. 165. New Jersey.— In New Jersey the rule at one time obtained that counsel could not sue for compensation (Van Atta v. McKinney, 16 N. J. L. 235; Seeley v. Crane, 15 N. J. L. 35), and this is still true unless an express agreement to pay a definite sum can be shown (Hopper v. Ludlum, 41 N. J. L. 182 [approved in Zabriskie v. Woodruff, 48 N. J. United States.— The federal court held, in 1817, that an attorney could not recover at law for services rendered as counsel, even though he proved an express promise to pay (Law v. Ewell, 2 Cranch C. C. (U. S.) 144, 15 Fed. Cas. No. 8,127); but it was subsequently held that a note given in payment of counsel fees could be enforced (Mowat v. Brown, 19 Fed. 87), and it seems doubtful whether the original distinction would be followed to-day, for it is not founded on any principle of law.

See 5 Cent. Dig. tit. "Attorney and Client," § 292.

Acting as lobbyist.—An attorney cannot recover compensation for acting merely as a lobbyist (McBratney v. Chandler, 22 Kan. 692, 31 Am. Rep. 213; Matter of Knapp, 8 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 308, 59 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 367), but the mere fact that his services were rendered before a legislative body does not deprive him of the right (McBratney v. Chandler, 22 Kan. 692, 31 Am. Rep. 213).

Division of compensation among attorneys who work jointly.— In the absence of special agreement, attorneys who jointly undertake to defend a lawsuit are entitled to share equally in the compensation (Henry v. Bassett, 75 Mo. 89; Hurst v. Durnell, 1 Wash. (U. S.) 438, 12 Fed. Cas. No. 6,928; D'Amour v. Bertrand, 26 L. C. Jur. 136), or, if they appear at different stages of the suit, the fees will be apportioned among them (Beddo v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cl. 69). In the following cases one attorney successfully recovered from his associate his share of the compensation for doing joint work: Henry v. Bassett, 75 Mo. 89; Brown v. Remington, 90 Hun (N. Y.) 214. 35 N. Y. Suppl. 621, 70 N. Y. St. 385; White v. Polhamus, 1 N. Y. City Ct. 421; Bundy v. McLean, 104 Wis. 263, 80 N. W. 445. Contra, English v. McConnel, 23 Ill. 513.

Reimbursement for moneys expended.— Where an attorney exceeds his authority in incurring expense or laying out money he cannot recover back the amounts from his client, although he acted in good faith (Hughes v. Zeigler, 69 Ill. 38; Gray v. Emmons, 7 Mich. 533; People v. Lockwood, 9 Daly (N. Y.) 68); but where an attorney was obliged to refund money after he had paid it over to his client, he successfully enforced his claim against the client for the amount he had been obliged to refund (Seevers v. Hamilton, 6 Iowa 199).

Substitute attorney.—Though a general rule forbids that an attorney delegate his authority (see supra, III, C, 3, c), yet, if an emergency makes it necessary for a substitute attorney to conduct part of the proceedings, the client cannot accept the services and later deny his liability to pay for them (Fenno v. English, 22 Ark. 170; Rust v. Larue, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 411, 14 Am. Dec. 172; Eggleston v. Boardman, 37 Mich. 14; Allcorn v. Butler, 9 Tex. 56). See also Meaney v. Rosenberg, 32 Misc. (N. Y.) 96, 65 N. Y. Suppl. 497, requiring that client must know all the facts before accepting the service of another attorney in order to create liability on his part to pay for such services.

Where an advocate appears personally in his own case and conducts it as attorney of record, he is entitled to the usual attorney's fees as well as the disbursements (Banks v. Burroughs, 12 Can. Supreme Ct. 184; Gugy v.

(II) Retaining Fee. The right to a retaining fee depends on the contract of the parties;[15] and it has been held that there is no general custom to charge one.[16] It seems clear that an attorney can charge only one fee of this sort in a single case, though if many attorneys are employed in one litigation, each may stipulate for his retaining fee.[17] Apart from the technical retaining fee, an attorney may always claim and receive reasonable compensation in advance;[18] he may also demand that costs be paid or secured,[19] and, in some instances, it might be safe for him to refuse to proceed with pending actions unless past services are paid for.[20]

(III) Taxed Costs. In some states, by statute, attorneys are entitled to the taxed costs.[21]

b. How Right May Be Affected — (I) By Absence of License. It is generally held that where one acts as an attorney without a proper license from the court he cannot recover by suit his fees for thus acting,[22] even if he sues to recover for services rendered as agent.[23] The failure to pay a license-tax required of attorneys seems to have the same effect upon the right to maintain an action for services;[24] but there is authority for the rule that a firm of attorneys may recover for services even though one partner has not been admitted to practice.[25]

(II) By Conduct of Attorney — (A) Absence From Trial. An attorney's presence at the trial is usually required, and his wrongful act in staying away would defeat his claim for compensation. But if, from any cause, he is relieved from attendance, his absence would not then affect his right to recover for services.[26]

(B) Acting For Adverse Party.[27] Since an attorney cannot serve conflicting interests, he can only claim pay for his services from one side.[28] Hence, an attorney employed by a corporation to free it from receivers forfeits his claim to compensation from the corporation by performing services for the receivers and accepting pay from them.[29]

(C) Fraud or Misconduct. Fraud or unfairness on the part of the attorney may also prevent him from recovering for services rendered;[30] but misconduct in regard to one matter will not prevent recovery for work done in a different employment, except, perhaps, that the client might avail himself of some right of set-off.[31]

(D) Negligence. When the services rendered are of no avail to the client on account of the negligence or mistake of the attorney, the latter cannot recover for them.[32] But a mistake which reasonable care would not prevent does not bar recovery,[33] nor would neglect of an unimportant matter defeat the right to recover for important services rendered without fault,[34] and a client may condone the attorney's misconduct.[35]

(III) By Fact That Services Were of No Benefit.[36] If an attorney is employed to carry a case to a higher court on appeal, he is entitled to pay for his services without regard to the merits of the appeal,[37] and, in general, his right to compensation is not lost because his services may have been of no benefit to his client, if they have been faithfully and intelligently rendered;[38] because his efforts were not successful in bringing the litigation to the desired conclusion;[39] or because his services were unnecessary, provided they were rendered in good faith.[40]

(IV) By Premature Termination of Employment—(A) By Attorney's Abandonment of Cause. Where an attorney is justified in abandoning his client's business or does so with the client's consent, he does not thereby forfeit his claim for compensation for work already done.[41] On the other hand it has been held that, in the absence of due cause, an attorney's abandonment of the cause will bar recovery.[42]

(B) By Death — (1) OF ATTORNEY. Where the attorney dies before the services are completed, the client is not liable for the whole compensation, but must pay for the reasonable value of the work already completed.[43]

(2) OF CLIENT. The death of the client seems not to affect the right to fees when the attorney is acting under an express contract.[44] Where there is no special contract, the attorney's duty to proceed terminates with his client's death, and he is entitled to compensation for the services already rendered.[45]

(C) By Client. When an attorney makes a contract to perform certain services for an agreed sum and the client, without any valid excuse or reason,[46] discharges him or prevents the fulfilment of the contract, the attorney is entitled to recover the full contract price.[47] This is true though the agreement was for a contingent fee, provided the contingency had taken place;[48] though, where there is an express contract for fees conditional upon success, and the client prevents success, the attorney may recover on the contract.[49] to him or the result valuable.[51] The absence of an express promise on the client's part to pay will not, however, prejudice recovery, if the employment is fairly made out from all the attendant circumstances,[52] and acquiescence by the client in the attorney's conduct may supply the place of a request to act, provided the case was such that the client might reasonably know that he would be expected to pay for the work.[53] The same would be true where the client, by his acts, induced the attorney to believe that his services were desired.[54]

b. Nature and Extent of Liability — (i) In General. The person to be looked to for compensation is not of necessity the one benefited, but the employer.[55] The latter's liability is personal, and the employer cannot defend by alleging a usage for the attorney to be paid out of the money collected.[56] There is no objection, however, to an agreement that the attorney shall look to a fund for compensation, and not to the personal liability of the client.[57] In some cases the right to be paid out of a fund is preferable to the personal claim, and sometimes such payment can be obtained by an attorney.[58]

(II) In Special Cases of Employment — (A) By Agent — (1) In General. Where the employment is arranged through an agent, the client's liability[59] depends on the authority of the agent to bind him in that respect, and the scope of the agent's authority depends on the rules and principles of the law of agency.[60]

(2) By Attorney. As an attorney has no implied power, under a general retainer, to employ associate counsel,[61] the client is not liable to counsel so employed.[62] Where there is special authority to employ associates, the client is liable for reasonable fees,[63] and may become so, even where the attorney is without antecedent authority to employ an associate, by conduct amounting to a ratification of the attorney's act in engaging one.[64] In the latter case, the assistant employed will not be affected by a secret agreement between the attorney and client that the former shall pay for the extra service.[65]

(B) By One Joint Defendant. One of several joint defendants has not authority, as agent, to employ counsel to act for all, and the others are not liable for the value of the attorney's services,[66] unless, by subsequent acquiescence, they ratify the employment.[67] But where one jointly interested in a common fund maintains litigations in good faith to save it, he is, in equity, entitled to reimbursement from the fund.[68]

(c) By Trustees, Personal Representatives, and Beneficiaries. Although the attorney was employed to act for the protection of the estate, it was held that the liability for his compensation was a personal one in the case of a trustee,[69] of an administrator,[70] and of an executor.[71] So, when a beneficiary employs an attorney to protect his interest, the attorney must look to his employer for his pay, and cannot get an allowance out of the estate[72] even though the services rendered are beneficial to it.[73]

c. Recovery Back by Client. It sometimes happens that a client becomes entitled to recover back money paid his attorney as fees;[74] but the settlement of the case in a manner involving less work than was anticipated will not entitle the client to recover back,[75] nor can he recover back a contingent fee by alleging that the contract was champertous.[76]

2. Express Agreements — a. In General — (i) Validity — (a) Generally. The contract made with an attorney for his retainer in the first instance is not subject to the particular scrutiny of the court,[77] for the client is regarded as competent to judge for himself what is a proper sum to pay for services.[78] The validity of the contract does not depend on the value of the services rendered,[79]

(B) Where Attorney a Salaried Officer. It is proper for an attorney to contract with a corporation for a special fee in a special case, although he is employed by the same corporation for a fixed salary.[81]

(C) Where Costs Are Allowed. An agreement is unobjectionable which allows the attorney the costs recovered,[82] or costs plus a reasonable counsel fee.[83]

(D) Unfair Agreement. The power of the court to reform contracts between attorney and client is limited to the duty of protecting the latter against the undue influence of the former.[84] If any fraud or undue influence on the part of the attorney induces the contract, it will not be enforced;[85] and the same is true where the terms are so indefinite as to be susceptible of unconscionable advantage on the part of the attorney.[86] It has also been said that an attorney cannot stipulate for compensation incommensurate with the services to be performed.[87] It is usually true that any agreement for services, made by the client, cannot be objected to on the part of his creditors.[88]

(II) Construction and Interpretation—(A) Generally. Agreements between attorneys and clients regarding compensation will be construed most favorably to the interests of the client.[89] An agreement to defend a suit has been held to include the filing of a counter-claim;[90] but there is no rule that a general employment for an agreed sum continues till the final disposition of the case in the court of last resort,[91] and an agreement to attend to cases during the balance of the year does not oblige the attorney to attend to business uncompleted at the end of that time.[92]

(B) Where Extra Work Is Done. When the contract calls for a fixed amount to be paid to the attorney for his services, it sometimes becomes necessary for work not included in the terms of the agreement to be done. In such cases, if the Binding effect on others.—A contract for contingent fee of fifty per cent, made by a mother and sole next of kin of a decedent, is not binding upon her descendants, nor upon an estate toward which she stood in no other relation than that of distributee. Sloan's Estate, 161 Pa. St. 237, 28 Atl. 1084.

happening of some other event,[98] and such an agreement is not objectionable for want of mutuality.[99] So, a contingent agreement to convey a portion of the land recovered by suit to the attorney for his fee will be specifically enforced,[1] even though the land has greatly increased in value.[2]

(II) Effect of—(A) When Enforceable—(1) As Assignment. Without an express stipulation to that effect, an agreement for contingent fees will not act as an assignment;[3] and, where a right of action is not assignable, it is not possible to assign to the attorney any right in a future judgment.[4] Where the claim is assignable, the wording of the agreement for a contingent fee must in every case be examined to determine whether the parties intended an equitable assignment in favor of the attorney.[5]

(2) On Client's Power to Compromise. Though there is a valid agreement for the payment to the attorney of a large proportion of the sum recovered in case of success, this does not give the attorney such an interest in the cause of action that it prevents plaintiff from compromising the suit.[6]

(B) When Unenforceable—(1) As Against Third Persons. The making of a champertous contract with his attorney in no way affects the rights of the client against third persons. So, it cannot be set up as a defense to a suit that plaintiff had a champertous agreement for the payment of his attorney.[7]

(2) As Between Attorney and Client. As between the attorney and client who are parties to the contract, the effect of the taint of champerty is that the agreement itself cannot be enforced;[8] but it does not prevent recovery on an implied agreement for reasonable compensation, and the champertous contract cannot be set up as a defense to such an action.[9]

(III) Happening of Contingency—(A) In General. Where there is an agreement for a contingent fee, the happening of the contingency is a condition precedent to the right of the attorney to recover for his services,[10] and the precise event which was contemplated must happen.[11] It is not, however, a valid objection to a claim for a contingent fee that the result was brought about in some unforeseen manner, even though the duties of the attorney are rendered much less burdensome thereby,[12] provided he has not previously abandoned the suit.[13]

(B) Effect of Death of Parties. The death of either attorney or client does not affect the requirement that the contingency must happen before the fees become payable.[14] But it has also been held that an agreement for a percentage of the sum recovered is such an interest as will prevent the death of the client from revoking the attorney's authority.[15]

(C) Effect of Interference by Client. Since, ordinarily, an agreement for a contingent fee does not give the attorney any interest in the subject-matter of the litigation,[16] any disposition the client choses to make of the case is binding on the attorney;[17] and if the party dismisses a suit without receiving any consideration, the attorney is entitled to nothing under the contract.[18] Where, however, the attorney agrees not to charge any fee unless successful, it has been held that he may recover a reasonable value for services rendered in cases where the client interferes to prevent success.[19] Where the agreement is for a percentage of the recovery and the client compromises for less than the face of the claim, the attorney is at least entitled to his proportion of the sum compromised for,[20] and the client's act amounts to a waiver of any requirement that the full amount be collected.[21]

(IV) Amount on Which Percentage Fee Is Reckoned. The percentage coming to the attorney is usually reckoned on the amount actually recovered,[22] which has been held to include costs,[23] and from which fees of assistant counsel cannot be deducted as necessary expenses.[24]

e. With Partnership — (I) In General. Where the client contracts with a firm of attorneys, whatever is done by any one, in behalf of all and under their joint engagement, is, if properly done, a fulfilment, to that extent, of their contract,[25] and where he contracts with one partner there is no implied agreement to pay extra for services rendered by another partner.[26]

(II) Effect of Changes in Firm — (A) Generally. In the absence of a particular agreement on the part of the client, the formation of a partnership by his attorney does not alter previous terms of employment.[27] And, where a firm dissolves, there is still a joint employment, and all the attorneys constituting the firm are under the same obligation to the client as if the partnership continued.[28]

(B) By Death. When one member of a firm dies and the client exercises his privilege of changing, he is liable for the reasonable value of the services already rendered,[29] and for the full amount if he allows the remaining members of the firm to complete the business.[30]

(III) Effect of Employing Additional Counsel. When there is an express agreement between an attorney and his client that the pay for services shall be a certain fixed sum, the right of the attorney to the full amount agreed upon is not affected by the client's act in employing additional counsel to assist in the work.[31] A suggestion by the attorney that aid be called in seems not to affect this rule,[32] but the attorney may not, of his own accord, employ assistant counsel and charge their services to his client.[33]

3. Implied Agreements — a. Arise When — (I) In General. In the absence of special agreement,[34] assuming that there is a valid retainer, there arises an implied agreement, on the part of the client, to pay for the services of his attorney.[35]

(II) When There Has Been an Express Contract. The existence of an express contract prevents one from arising by implication,[36] and in such case evidence of the value of the services is irrelevant.[37] The attorney alone has no right to rescind such a contract,[38] and cannot claim a larger sum than the amount agreed upon;[39] but where both parties assent to the abandonment of the express contract an implied contract arises.[40] In case the client sets aside the contract or procures it by misrepresentation, the attorney can resort to an implied contract on the part of the client to pay a fair amount as a fee.[41]

(III) When Services Are Considered as Necessaries. The services of an attorney will usually be considered as necessaries, and a promise to pay for them will be implied when rendered in a proceeding personal[42] to an infant[43] or other person incapable of entering into a contract, such as an habitual drunkard or an insane man.[44] Attorney's services rendered to a married woman may also, in certain instances, be regarded as necessaries, and her husband held liable for them — as where a wife brought a complaint against her husband to secure her personal safety,[45] or resisted a groundless charge brought against her by her husband.[46] As a rule, however, services rendered in bringing or defending divorce libels have not been brought within the category of necessaries, and the husband cannot be charged with counsel fees in such cases.[47]

b. Services Covered. Provided his act is neither illegal nor criminal,[48] an attorney can generally recover for doing[49] any services he has been requested to perform.[50]

c. Amount of Compensation — (i) In General — (A) Rule Stated. Implied agreements between attorney and client stand upon the same footing as like agreements between other parties,[51] the attorney being entitled to reasonable value for his services, taking into consideration the nature of the controversy, the skill and labor required, the responsibility imposed, the standing and experience of the attorney, and the success achieved.[52]

costs,[53] interest running in such cases only from the date when the attorney's claim for compensation has been reduced to judgment.[54] When, however, the amounts are liquidated, interest on the fee runs from the time of demand for payment, and on disbursements from the time when the money was paid out.[55]

(II) Effect of Statutory Regulation. Where the legislature, by a special act, adjusts the claims of attorneys employed in some particular proceeding, it withdraws from the court the question of reasonable value[56] and also supersedes an express contract to pay.[57] Such special acts are of rare occurrence, but in most jurisdictions there are general acts specifying certain amounts to be taxed against the losing party to a lawsuit, and one item of the costs thus taxed is an attorney's fee. These statutory regulations do not limit the amount of an attorney's recovery on a quantum meruit, and the attorney is entitled to a reasonable compensation for his services regardless of the amount fixed by statute.[58]

C. Actions to Recover Compensation — 1. Form of Action — a. In General. As an attorney's claim for fees arises ex contractu, the proper form of action by which to enforce payment is assumpsit[59] or book account.[60] This remedy being ordinarily adequate, some special circumstances must be present in a cause to give equity jurisdiction.[61]

b. Summary Proceeding. Where the amount of an attorney's fee is liquidated,[62] and where he has a lien on some article of value within the control of the court,[63] he may resort to a summary remedy. This remedy, however, is discretionary and is always a subsidiary proceeding in the principal cause, which must be instituted while that cause is still pending.[64]

2. Conditions Precedent — a. Accrual of Action — (i) Generally. When an attorney acts under a general retainer, the contract is generally considered an entire one, and the right of action for compensation does not arise till the proceedings have been brought to some conclusion.[65] It may be shown, however,

(11) When Either Party Dies. Where there is no special agreement which prevents the death of either party from terminating the relation, the right of action accrues at once upon the death of either attorney or client.[67]

b. Delivery of Bill to Client. In some jurisdictions an attorney must deliver to his client[68] an itemized[69] bill of costs, signed by himself,[70] at least one month[71] before he can bring an action for his fee,[72] but in others no account need be presented.[73]

3. Parties — a. Plaintiff. Under a general retainer it has been held that counsel employed to assist may be made a party plaintiff with the principal attorney,[74] and, where one member of a partnership renders services without an understanding as to whether he alone or the firm of which he is a member is retained, it seems that suit may be brought in the name of the individual partner[75] or in the Manner of conclusion.— The ordinary end to which they are brought is the entry of final judgment; but it is sufficient if the suit has been terminated by settlement out of court (O'Farrell v. Reciprocity Min. Co., 4 Quebec 198), and, as the client possesses the privilege of discharging his attorney at any time, it has also been stated, generally, that the attorney's right of action arises as soon as the relation ceases to exist (Mattern v. McDivitt, 113 Pa. St. 402, 6 Atl. 83). Where, however, it had been stipulated that the attorney should proceed to collect the judgment, the cause of action for his fees did not accrue till the collection was made (Morgan v. Brown, 12 La. Ann. 159); and, where the case was taken upon a contingent basis, the attorney's right of action did not accrue till success was achieved, although the relation terminated long before (Bartlett v. Odd Fellows' Sav. Bank, 79 Cal. 218, 21 Pac. 743, 12 Am. St. Rep. 139).

Brunsw. 164); but 2 Geo. II, c. 23, requiring the delivery a month before action, is not (James v. McLean, 8 N. Brunsw. 164).

72. The delivery is necessary even though the client admits the amount to be due (Dempsey v. Winstanley, 5 U. C. Q. B. 317), or suffers judgment by default (Ridout v. Brown, 4 U. C. Q. B. O. S. 74).

b. Defendant. Ordinarily, the employer, or employers if there be more than one, should be made parties defendant to the suit. Where several guardians assumed the position successively, however, it was held that only the last need be made a party, though, when the services were rendered, the earlier ones had charge of the estate.[77]

4. PLEADINGS — a. Complaint, Declaration, or Petition.[78] The attorney should allege that the services were rendered at defendant's request,[79] or that defendant ratified his acts, or that the services rendered without the latter's knowledge were necessary, stating facts showing such necessity.[80] He should also aver the performance of any conditions precedent.[81] With respect to the statement of charges,[82] it is sufficient to show the dates of the different services,[83] and their total value,[84] even though it does not allege when the amount claimed fell due;[85] and an allegation of demand for payment is not necessary.[86] Failure to allege that plaintiff was licensed to practise is not fatal, but is cured by verdict.[87]

b. Answer or Plea — (I) GENERAL DENIAL. Under a general denial it has been held that defendant may show that there was no retainer,[88] that the contract sued on was illegal,[89] and that the services were rendered by another attorney.[90]

It has also been held that he may show any degree of negligence on the part of the attorney.[91]

(II) Non-Delivery of Bill of Costs. The defense of non-delivery of the bill must be specially pleaded, and the non-delivery is no ground for staying the proceedings or discharging the client after an arrest.[92]

(III) Payment. Payment cannot be shown under a general denial.[93]

5. Trial — a. In General. After the issues between the attorney and his client have been properly framed, the selection of the tribunal depends largely upon the nature of the case and the wishes of the parties concerned, and their determination may be left to a jury[94] or to the court,[95] or the matter may be referred to an auditor to decide.[96]

b. Evidence — (I) Burden of Proof. The attorney must prove that he possessed the qualifications required by statute to practise,[97] what services he rendered,[98] the value thereof,[99] and that such services were rendered at defendant's request;[1] but, where defendant sets up any new matter to defeat the attorney's recovery, the burden of proving it is on the former.[2]

(B) As to Nature and Extent of Services. The nature and extent of the services of counsel can be proved by parol,[5] and it is usually enough to show that the attorney's task was practically accomplished, though the exact means contemplated were not used.[6]

attorney.[10] The pleadings in the action wherein the alleged services were rendered are also admissible to show their nature and value;[11] but proof of the value of plaintiff's services rendered in another suit is not good evidence,[12] and opinions as to the future benefits of a compromise cannot be considered.[13] An attorney's bill taxed ex parte is not conclusive proof of the services or disbursements charged,[14] but when the amount seems reasonable the court will not set it aside on appeal.[15]

(2) Expert Testimony. Evidence by attorneys in good standing and in active practice is admissible to prove the value of the services,[16] and, upon suitable occasion, an attorney has been allowed to testify as an expert regarding the necessity of services which were rendered,[17] or as to the absence of risk when the case was taken upon a contingent fee.[18] The witness must, however, qualify as an expert by showing that he is an attorney;[19] and the opinion must be as to the value of the particular services rendered, and not as to the general value of such services.[20] Such evidence is not necessarily controlling upon the court[21] or upon the jury,[22] though due weight should be given thereto.[23]

(3) Wealth of Client and Amount Involved in Suit. There is some diversity of opinion as to whether the wealth of the client may be considered by the jury in estimating the size of the attorney's fee, but as a rule it is not allowed.[24] The importance of the proceeding, however, has a direct bearing on the responsibility which the attorney assumes, and may always be considered in deciding what is reasonable compensation for his services.[25]

c. Questions For Jury. Whether or not the attorney was employed by defendant,[26] and, if so, whether the latter agreed to pay,[27] and what were the terms of the contract,[28] whether the services were rendered[29] and their value,[30] and whether an attorney was justified in withdrawing from a case,[31] are all questions of fact for the jury.

ignore certain grounds of defense,[33] or exclude from the consideration of the jury the necessity of the services.[34]

VI. LIEN OF ATTORNEY.

A. Classification. The lien of an attorney is of two kinds — possessory and charging.[35]

B. Definitions — 1. CHARGING LIEN. An attorney's charging lien may be defined as the right of the attorney, in the nature of an encumbrance, to charge upon property not in his possession, but connected with his employment, his claims arising out of his employment.[36]

2. POSSESSORY LIEN. An attorney's possessory lien may be defined as the attorney's right to retain possession of property, belonging to his client, which comes into his hands within the scope of his employment, until his charges are paid.[37]

C. Nature of Lien — 1. IN GENERAL. The charging lien of an attorney is an equitable right to be paid for his services out of the proceeds of the judgment obtained by his labor and skill. To the extent of such services he is regarded as an equitable assignee of the judgment.[38]

2. ASSIGNABILITY. The attorney's possessory lien is not assignable and is lost by an attempt at assignment.[39] The rule is otherwise, however, as to assignment of a claim for services or of the lien for such services on the sum collected.[40]

D. Creation and Existence of Lien — 1. In General. The common law did not recognize an attorney's charging lien on the judgment recovered.[41] Such lien now exists, however. in most jurisdictions either by statute or by virtue of judicial legislation.[42]

2. Agreement For Lien. An agreement between attorney and client that the attorney should have a lien on the judgment is decisive as to the existence of the lien and its amount;[43] but an agreement to pay the attorney out of the sum recovered in a proceeding will not, of itself, create a lien.[44] The latter agree-

Notice to member of firm.—Where an attorney, who was a member of a firm composed of three persons, received from a railway company a draft to deliver to a third person in the settlement of a suit, and in such suit none of the members of the firm represented the railway company, a notice of a lien served upon a member of the firm other than the one who actually received the draft will not be notice upon the attorney receiving the draft. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Bennett, 35 Kan. 395, 11 Pac. 155.

In Iowa notice may be served on any one upon whom original notice of the suit could be served. Smith v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 56 Iowa 720, 10 N. W. 244.

54. Notice to purchaser of judgment.—McCain v. Portis, 42 Ark. 402; Sayre v. Thompson, 18 Nebr. 33, 24 N. W. 383; Renick v. Ludington, 16 W. Va. 378.

Fund in court.— The court will not, without notice to the client, enforce the lien by granting the attorney's application for payment out of funds in the hands of the court. Black v. Black, 32 N. J. Eq. 74; Atty.-Gen. v. North America L. Ins. Co., 93 N. Y. 387.

55. Notice under garnishment process.— Weed Sewing Mach. Co. v. Boutelle, 56 Vt. 570, 48 Am. Rep. 821.

56. Crowley v. Le Duc, 21 Minn. 412, holding that a notice is sufficient if it fairly inform the party that a lien is claimed, its nature and character, for what it is claimed, and upon what it is intended to be enforced.

An indorsement on the summons in an action has been held insufficient (Cobbey v. Dorland, 50 Nebr. 373, 69 N. W. 951); but a proper notice may be included in a summons in an action (Smith v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 56 Iowa 720, 10 N. W. 244).

The notice covers only what is stated in it (Griggs v. White, 5 Nebr. 467); but a single notice that a lien is claimed is sufficient to cover all services rendered in the action, whether before or after the service of the notice (Smith v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 56 Iowa 720, 10 N. W. 244).

57. Forbush v. Leonard, 8 Minn. 303.

58. Elliott v. Atkins, 26 Nebr. 403, 42 N. W. 403, holding that notice of a contract between the attorney and client is insufficient. But see Fry v. Calder, 74 Ga. 7.

59. Connell v. Brumback, 18 Ohio Cir. Ct. 502, holding that mere notice that the attorney claims an interest in the settlement is insufficient.

60. Entry on docket.—Day v. Bowman, 109 Ind. 383, 10 N. E. 126; Hroch v. Aultman, 3 S. D. 477, 54 N. W. 269.

61. Filing with clerk.— Elliott v. Atkins, 26 Nebr. 403, 42 N. W. 403; Griggs v. White, 5 Nebr. 467; Wooding v. Crain, 11 Wash. 207, 39 Pac. 442. But where there is no statute

With such statutory provisions it has been held that there must be a strict compliance.[62]

5. Time of Attachment — a. In General. Unless otherwise regulated by statute,[63] a charging lien does not usually attach until the recovery of judgment.[64] A contingent judgment will not be subject to the lien until the contingency is satisfied.[65]

b. Appeal From Judgment. An appeal from a judgment suspends the lien,[66] unless the appeal does not operate to vacate the judgment.[67]

6. What Law Governs. The lien of an attorney will be enforced and adjudicated according to the law of the state where the lien attached.[68] providing for notice by filing with the clerk, such filing is ineffectual (Durango State Bank v. Davidson, 7 Colo. App. 91, 42 Pac. 687), unless the party affected has actual notice of it (Davidson v. La Plata County, 26 Colo. 549, 59 Pac. 46).

62. Compliance with statute.—Alderman v. Nelson, 111 Ind. 255, 12 N. E. 394; Day v. Bowman, 109 Ind. 383, 10 N. E. 126; Lavender v. Atkins, 20 Nebr. 206, 29 N. W. 467; Kreuzen v. Forty-Second St., etc., R. Co., 13 N. Y. Suppl. 588, 38 N. Y. St. 461; Wooding v. Crain, 11 Wash. 207, 39 Pac. 442. But see Porter v. Hanson, 36 Ark. 591, holding that a statute requiring the filing of a statement of the lien in writing, and having the same noted, extends only to protect those who in good faith, and without notice, make payment on the judgment.

Notice in writing.—Where the statute requires it, the notice should be in writing. Kansas Pac. R. Co. v. Thacher, 17 Kan. 92; Patrick v. Leach, 3 McCrary (U. S.) 555, 17 Fed. 476.

Where notice is to be placed in the docket on entry of judgment, notice on the day following the entry is sufficient. Blair v. Lanning, 61 Ind. 499.

63. In some states the lien exists on the cause of action from the institution of the suit. Lovett v. Moore, 98 Ga. 158, 26 S. E. 498; Winchester v. Heiskell, 16 Lea (Tenn.) 556. See also Ward v. Sherbondy, 96 Iowa 477, 65 N. W. 413; Patrick v. Leach, 2 McCrary (U. S.) 635, 12 Fed. 661, which cases hold that the lien arises on notice to the opposite party, whether before or after judgment.

In New York, by Code Civ. Proc. § 66, the lien attaches to a report but not to a report on a reference which is in the nature of a motion. Jones v. Easton, 11 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 114.

E. Continuance or Termination of Lien — 1. In General. The lien, being a contractual right, survives the death of the client.[69] The lien likewise survives where the judgment becomes dormant and is subsequently revived by other attorneys.[70] It has also been held that the bankruptcy of a client does not affect the lien on papers for services performed prior to the filing of the petition in bankruptcy.[71] A reversal of the judgment, however, annuls the lien.[72]

2. Discharge of Attorney. The client cannot by discharging the attorney deprive him of his lien, unless the discharge was with good cause.[73]

3. Withdrawal by Attorney. An attorney who withdraws from a suit without cause loses his inchoate right to a lien on the ultimate recovery.[74]

4. Waiver of Lien — a. In General. If an attorney agrees to a waiver, either expressly or by some act inconsistent with the existence of the lien,[75]

Illustrations.—A denial of the client's title is a waiver (Boardman v. Sill, 1 Campb. 410 note), or a claim apart from lien on the property (Dirks v. Richards, C. & M. 626, 6 Jur. 562, 4 M. & G. 574, 5 Scott N. R. 534, 41 E. C. L. 340), or giving credit for a particular time (Stoddard Woolen Manufactory v. Huntley, 8 N. H. 441, 31 Am. Dec. 198), or allowing the client to stipulate that the judgment shall be subject to a lien in favor of a third party (McClare v. Lockard, 121 N. Y. 308, 24 N. E. 453, 31 N. Y. St. 69). So, collecting a draft waives the lien on it (Lawrence v. Townsend, 88 N. Y. 24); but the lien is not waived by a refusal to deliver property held under it (Owen v. Knight, 4 Bing. N. Cas. 54, 6 Dowl. P. C. 245, 7 L. J. C. P. 27, 5 Scott 307, 33 E. C. L. 593), or by a claim of more than is due (Scarfe v. Morgan, 1 H. & H. 292, 2 Jur. 569, 7 L. J. Exch. 324, 4 M. & W. 270), by acquiescence in an assignment of the judgment (Hutchinson v. Worthington, 7 App. Cas. (D. C.) 548; Kinsey v. Stewart, 14 Tex. 457; Niagara F. Ins. Co. v. Hart, 13 Wash. 651, 43 Pac. 937), or by permitting others to enforce liens on the property in question (Coleman v. Austin, 99 Ga. 629, 27 S. E. 763).

or if he accepts security for it,[76] or is guilty of laches in enforcing it,[77] he loses his lien.

b. Recovery of Judgment. An attorney waives his lien by suing his client on his claim for services, and recovering judgment.[78]

c. Relinquishment of Possession. As a possessory lien depends upon possession, it will be lost if possession is voluntarily relinquished,[79] unless such relinquishment was effected by the fraud or coercion of the client.[80]

F. Subject-Matter of Lien — 1. Charging Lien — a. In General. A statute giving the attorney a lien on a judgment he has recovered confers a lien on the money or property so recovered.[81] The lien also applies to any process incident

76. Acceptance of security.—Fulton v. Harrington, 7 Houst. (Del.) 182, 30 Atl. 856; In re Taylor, [1891] 1 Ch. 590; Cowell v. Simpson, 16 Ves. Jr. 275, 10 Rev. Rep. 181; Balch v. Symes, Turn. & R. 87, 23 Rev. Rep. 195, 12 Eng. Ch. 87.

The acceptance of an assignment of the judgment is a waiver of the lien. Whitehead v. Jessup, 7 Colo. App. 460, 43 Pac. 1042; Dodd v. Brott, 1 Minn. 270, 66 Am. Dec. 541; Bishop v. Garcia, 14 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 69. But if the assignment is set aside the lien revives. Swift v. Hart, 35 Hun (N. Y.) 128.

Accepting client's note or bond is not a taking of security which waives the lien (Davis v. Jackson, 86 Ga. 138, 12 S. E. 299; Pope v. Armstrong, 3 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 214; Johnson v. Johnson R. Signal Co., 57 N. J. Eq. 79, 40 Atl. 193; Renick v. Ludington, 16 W. Va. 378), unless the note or bond is taken as payment (Dennett v. Cutts, 11 N. H. 163).

77. Laches.—Winans v. Mason, 33 Barb. (N. Y.) 522, 21 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 153. See also Guild v. Borner, 7 Baxt. (Tenn.) 266, holding that failure to have the lien declared on property covered by it at the termination of the suit will prevent the attorney from enforcing it in any way, even in chancery. But see Stone v. Hyde, 22 Me. 318, holding that delay without negligence will not discharge the lien.

Claim barred by limitations.— The lien on the judgment is destroyed when the attorney's claim for services is barred by the statute of limitations. Reavey v. Clark, 9 N. Y. Suppl. 216, 30 N. Y. St. 535, 18 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 272. The rule is otherwise as to an attorney's rights under a possessory lien. Higgins v. Scott, 2 B. & Ad. 413, 9 L. J. K. B. O. S. 262, 22 E. C. L. 176; In re Broomhead, 5 Dowl. & L. 52, 16 L. J. Q. B. 355. The statute does not run against an attorney's bill for fees until the dissolution of the relation between him and his client. Suit on other claims.— But the lien is not lost by suing the client on other claims. Commercial Telegram Co. v. Smith, 57 Hun (N. Y.) 176, 10 N. Y. Suppl. 433, 32 N. Y. St. 445, 19 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 32.

to the enforcement of the judgment,[82] or to anything on which the judgment itself is a lien.[83] If nothing is recovered, or if there is no cause of action, there is nothing to which the lien can attach.[84]

b. Counter-Claim. A lien may exist on a counter-claim resulting in an affirmative judgment for defendant.[85]

c. Fund in Custody or Control of Court. While there is, strictly speaking, no lien on any fund which is within the custody or control of the court,[86] the court may award attorney's fees out of the fund.[87] Thus, counsel for a representative may receive remuneration out of the estate,[88] especially if he procures property for the estate;[89] but counsel for a beneficiary cannot claim payment out of the estate,[90] though he may be paid out of his client's share,[91] or from the portions of those beneficiaries who have joined in the proceedings, or have acquiesced in the attorney's exertions.[92] The lien may also apply to a fund realized from a successful attempt to set aside a fraudulent conveyance.[93] But counsel has no lien on funds in the hands of a trustee as security for a client,[94] nor on a fund on which he levies when it was entirely covered by prior executions.[95]

d. Judgments of Courts Not of Record. A charging lien arises only in courts of record. Accordingly, a lien will not attach to a judgment of a probate,[96] municipal,[97] or justice's court,[98] unless such court is a court of record.[99]

e. Land. Whether the charging lien applies to land or other property which is the subject of the judgment and recovered for the client is a matter of dispute,[1]

but it is distinctly established that it does not apply to property defended for the client.[2]

f. Proceeds of Judgment. The general equitable principle of following the res into whatever form it may be converted usually applies to the proceeds of a judgment.[3]

g. Property Exempt From Execution. The fact that property is exempt from execution does not relieve it from the lien.[4]

2. Possessory Lien — a. In General. If the relationship of attorney and client exists, the possessory lien will cover, in general, any property of any sort belonging to the client, and held by the attorney.[5] It includes ordinary legal documents of the client in the possession of the attorney,[6] or money collected by the attor-

Relinquishment or inspection of papers.— Under certain circumstances, especially where the papers are needed for use in a suit pend-ney.[7] A lien cannot be claimed, however, on a will[8] or on public records of any kind.[9]

b. Property Delivered For Special Purpose. An attorney has no lien on property placed in his hands for a special purpose under such circumstances that a trust arises which is inconsistent with, or adverse to, the claim of a lien.[10]

c. Property Delivered in Representative Capacity. An attorney may claim a lien on property belonging to an estate, placed in his hands by the representative of that estate in his representative capacity, for services rendered him in such capacity.[11]

G. Attorneys Entitled to Lien — 1. In General. Only attorneys employed under a valid contract can claim a lien on the judgment recovered.[12]

2. Associate Counsel. An assistant counsel may claim a lien when his employment was authorized by the client,[13] unless the statute confines the lien to the attorney of record.[14]

H. Priority of Lien — 1. In General. An attorney's lien covers only the interest of the client in the property charged, and is subject to any rights in the property which are valid against the client at the time the lien attaches.[15] The lien when perfected, however, is held to be superior to claims subsequently attaching, by garnishment or otherwise, of the creditors of the client.[16] The lien

(II) Settlement Between Parties. On the settlement of a cause some decisions hold that plaintiff's attorney, on obtaining leave of court,[33] may prosecute the suit in his client's name to judgment for his lien.[34] Other cases deny the right, and require an independent suit,[35] or limit it to the case of a collusive settlement for the purpose of depriving the attorney of his claim.[36] If satisfaction of the judgment has been entered, the attorney may have the satisfaction set aside to the amount of his lien.[37]

I. DEFINITION.

Attorney-general is a title conferred in England,[1] under the government of the United States, and in many states of the Union,[2] on the chief law officer of the government.[3] The Prince of Wales also has an attorney-general, and the queen consort when there is one.[4]

II. APPOINTMENT, QUALIFICATION, AND TENURE.

In England the attorney-general is selected from the king's counsel[5] and is appointed, by letters patent from the crown,[6] on the advice of the government for the time being. There is, therefore, a change of attorney-general on every change of government.[7] Under the government of the United States the attorney-general is appointed by the president, with the advice and consent of the senate.[8] In the various states of the Union the selection,[9] qualifications,[10] and

1. The title is first mentioned in England in the eleventh year of Edward IV. Burrill L. Dict. [citing 4 Reeves Hist. Eng. L. 132].

2. In some states the name "solicitor-general" is bestowed on an officer of substantially the same power. Abbott L. Dict.

3. Abbott L. Dict.

The word is also defined as "a general attorney; one who was authorized to appear in all suits and causes, and in all courts; or in all suits at a particular circuit, or for a specified period of time." Burrill L. Dict.

4. Sweet L. Dict.

8. Abbott L. Dict.

Powers and duties of the attorney-general of the United States defined.—U. S. Rev. Stat. (1872), §§ 346–387.

9. The legislature alone can fill the office for the first term specified, where a law is enacted providing that the legislature enacting it shall elect an attorney-general to serve for two years, and that thereafter the office shall be filled by the qualified voters. Collins v. State, 8 Ind. 344.

Presumption as to regularity of appointment.—Where, on an informal contest as to the right to appear in a case as attorney-general, one party claims under an appointment by the present governor and the other under an appointment previously made for a term not yet expired, according to a commission exhibited in court, the court will presume, from the presence of the latter claimant, that he is not dead, and from his acts and declarations that he has not resigned, and will, accordingly, treat him as de facto attorney-general, the question as to who is so de jure being reserved for determination until such time as a proper case shall have been formally submitted and heard. In re Atty.-Gen., 3 N. M. 304, 9 Pac. 249.

10. Incumbent of another office ineligible.—A person holding the office of United States district attorney, on the day of election, is incapable of being chosen to the office of attorney-general of the state. State v. Clarke, 3 Nev. 566.

tenure of office[11] are fixed by the constitution or legislative enactment of each individual state.

III. DEPUTIES, ASSISTANTS, AND SUBSTITUTES.

A. District and County Attorneys. The attorney-general of the United States has a deputy in each judicial district who is known as the United States district attorney; the attorney-general of the state a deputy in each county, usually known as the district or county attorney.[12]

B. Special Assistants — 1. In General. The attorney-general may authorize another attorney to assist in a criminal prosecution or to conduct the prosecution alone;[13] has power, in the name of the state, to employ counsel to assist him in any suit when the state is a party;[14] and, in instituting legal proceedings on behalf of the crown, may be represented by attorney just as a private suitor may, the employment of an attorney to act for him not being a delegation of the powers conferred upon him by law to take such proceedings.[15] He has no authority, 11. Baker v. Payne, 22 Oreg. 335, 29 Pac. 787, holding that, under Oreg. Laws (1891), p. 188, by which the office was created, and which provided for a quadrennial election in one section, and by a subsequent section provided that, on the approval of the act, and at any time when a vacancy may occur in the office, the governor shall appoint a person to be attorney-general, who shall hold the office "until the next general election, when his successor shall be elected and shall qualify as provided for in this act"— the person appointed by the governor to fill the vacancy will hold only until some one is elected at the "next general election" to hold for the fractional part of the term.

12. Anderson L. Dict. See U. S. Rev. Stat. (1872), §§ 346–387; and, generally, PROSECUTING ATTORNEYS.

In Missouri (Mo. Laws (1901), p. 47) and other states, the office of assistant attorney-general is created by statute. This officer assists the attorney-general in the discharge of his duties in the appellate courts, while the district, county, and prosecuting attorneys represent the state in the trial courts.

Evidence of authority to act.—A certified copy of an order of the attorney-general, directing the United States attorney for the district of California to proceed in a certain suit in equity, is an abundant proof that the bill was filed by authority of the attorney-general. Mullan v. U. S., 118 U. S. 271, 6 S. Ct. 1041, 30 L. ed. 170 [affirming 10 Fed. 785].

13. State v. Anderson, 29 La. Ann. 774; State v. Russell, 26 La. Ann. 68. See also Com. v. Knapp, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 477, 20 Am. Dec. 534, holding that Mass. Stat. (1807), c. 18, providing that the attorney-general or the solicitor-general shall have control of prosecutions and shall receive no fee from the prosecutor, does not prevent the attorney-general, with the concurrence of the solicitor-general, from securing additional counsel, without pay, in the trial of a murder case, provided that the number addressing the jury for the state be limited to two.

When authorized by the state legislature, the attorney-general may appoint an attorney for the purpose of enforcing a given law, with authority to take all steps necessary to its enforcement that the attorney-general could take. State v. Becker, 3 S. D. 29, 51 N. W. 1018.

14. State v. Mayes, 28 Miss. 706.

15. Casgrain v. Cie de Carosserié de Montréal, 9 Quebec Super. Ct. 383. Compare Abrahams v. Reg., 6 Can. Supreme Ct. 10; Reg. v. Granger, 7 Leg. N. 247, which hold that, under 32 & 33 Vict. c. 29, the attorney-general could not delegate to the judgment and discretion of another the power which the legislature had authorized him personally to exercise.

Presumption as to authority of assistant. — An attorney who institutes proceedings for the attorney-general is presumed to be duly authorized, and all proceedings signed by him under such presumed authority are to be considered as the act of the attorney-general. Casgrain v. Cie de Carosserié de Montréal, 9 Quebec Super. Ct. 383. See also Crawford v. State, 155 Ind. 692, 57 N. E. 931, holding that a justice of the peace accused of failure to turn over fines received by him on demand of a deputy attorney-general, as is required by law, cannot set up the defense that the attorney-general is only entitled to one deputy, and that the person who made the demand, being appointed after another had been, is not a deputy authorized to make the demand, the statute providing that the attorney-general shall have such deputies as the governor, secretary, and auditor of state may deem necessary, and the salary act providing for the payment of two deputies.

Evidence as to appointment.— In a prosecution of a justice of the peace for embezzlement in failing to account for fines received by him after demand by one alleged to be a deputy of the attorney-general, on an issue as to whether or not a certain person was a deputy attorney-general, testimony that he is a deputy of the attorney-general, and that, at the time of the transactions under investigation, he was acting as such, is competent, and sufficient to prove that he was a deputy attorney-general. Crawford v. State, 155 Ind. 692, 57 N. E. 931.

however, to procure the opinion of counsel at the expense of the state,[16] to employ the assistance of counsel to resist the enactment of a law,[17] or to employ a district attorney to perform services in his own district, on behalf of the government but not pertaining to his office;[18] and statutes authorizing the employment of assistants are strictly construed.[19] It has been held that the duties of an assistant attorney-general are confined to the county in which he is appointed, and that he has no authority to bring an action by the state on his relation.[20]

2. STENOGRAPHERS. The attorney-general may employ a stenographer,[21] and the attorney-general of the United States has power to authorize the employment by the district attorney of a stenographer to assist in preparing indictments.[22]

C. Substitutes. When so provided by law, a substitute may be appointed to act in the absence or disqualification of the attorney-general.[23]

IV. COMPENSATION.

A. Of Attorney-General — 1. IN GENERAL. The compensation of an attorney-general may, according to the constitutional or legislative enactment of the particular jurisdiction, consist of a salary,[24] which may, in the absence of statutory or constitutional limitation, be made smaller during his term;[25] of a percentage[26] of moneys collected by him and his assistants;[27] or of specified fees,[28]

16. People v. Talmage, 6 Cal. 256.

17. Julian v. State, 140 Ind. 581, 39 N. E. 923.

18. Smith v. U. S., 26 Ct. Cl. 568.

19. Thus, under a statute, in one section authorizing the attorney-general to employ assistants to recover moneys due the state, paying such assistants a percentage of the sums collected, and in another providing that he shall have certain deputies provided not more than a certain sum per annum is expended, it has been held that the attorney-general was not authorized to employ attorneys for the prosecution of suits in relation to real estate owned by the state, by which such attorneys are entitled to a fee from the state equal to ten per cent of the value of the land (Julian v. State, 122 Ind. 68, 23 N. E. 690); and, under a statute providing that the attorney-general is authorized to employ additional counsel in suits in the name of the people "at any general or special term, or at chambers of the supreme court," etc., it has been held that he cannot appear by special counsel on the trial of such an action in a circuit court (People v. Metropolitan Telephone, etc., Co., 11 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 304, 64 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 66).

23. State v. Harris, (Tenn. 1898) 45 S. W. 438, holding that the court may appoint such a substitute under Shannon's Code Tenn. § 5769, and that an indictment for murder, drawn and preferred by an attorney-general so appointed, was valid. But see State v. Morris, Houst. Crim. Cas. (Del.) 124, holding that the legislature has no power, under the constitution, to authorize two particular members of the bar to prepare indictments, for certain misdemeanors, in behalf of the state, sign them as attorneys for the state, submit them to the grand jury, and then proceed to try them, exercising all the powers of the attorney-general, in case the attorney-general should not act within a certain time.

24. Act increasing salary not retrospective. — The Missouri act of Feb. 15, 1865, which increased the annual salary of the attorney-general, and was in terms made to take effect from its passage, was not retrospective so as to make the increased salary commence from the first day of the preceding January. State v. Thompson, 36 Mo. 65.

25. Field v. Auditor, 83 Va. 882, 3 S. E. 707.

Withholding in case of indebtedness to state unconstitutional.— The office of attorney-general being a constitutional office, although the salary is fixed by the legislature, Va. Acts (Ex. Sess. 1884), p. 90, authorizing the withholding of the salary in the case of an indebtedness to the state, is unconstitutional, and mandamus will issue to compel payment notwithstanding. Blair v. Marye, 80 Va. 485.

26. Two per cent of the judgment in favor of the state should, under Ky. Gen. Stat. c. 5, art. 5, § 4, be taxed as costs for the attorney-general's fee. Newport, etc., Bridge Co. v. Douglass, 12 Bush (Ky.) 673.

28. An attachment for a contempt, against a juror for non-attendance, is not an action for which the attorney-general can receive a fee for appearing on behalf of the state. Martin v. State, 1 Harr. & J. (Md.) 721.

For each misdemeanant whose conviction to which last it has been held that he may be entitled although he is given a specific salary.[29]

2. EXTRA SERVICES. Where, at the bidding of the legislature, the attorney-general performs services not incumbent on him by virtue of his office,[30] the legislature may compensate him therefor.[31]

B. Of Assistants. Special assistants employed by the attorney-general are entitled to compensation only under the conditions prescribed by law,[32] and are entitled to no compensation where their employment was unauthorized.[33]

V. DUTIES AND POWERS.

A. In General. The attorney-general has the powers belonging to that officer at common law in addition to those conferred by statute.[34] In both England[35] and the United States[36] he is the principal law officer of the government. His is affirmed, though jointly convicted, the attorney-general is entitled to receive ten dollars, under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. (1895), art. 1119. Hogg v. State, 40 Tex. Crim. 109, 48 S. W. 580.

In suits where the crown is a party and entitled to costs, a retaining fee of twenty-five shillings is allowed to the attorney-general; and for all papers properly termed pleadings a higher rate per folio is allowed for drafting and copying than in suits between subjects. Atty.-Gen. v. Twenty Casks Spirits, 8 N. Brunsw. 404.

29. Com. v. Field, 84 Va. 26, 3 S. E. 882 (holding that, although he be allowed fees taxed in criminal actions when collected from the defendants, he cannot collect those fees from the state under the Virginia act of April 4, 1877, as amended by the act of March 12, 1878, providing a salary of a given amount for the attorney-general, and that he "shall not be entitled to any further compensation"); Thon v. Com., 77 Va. 289.

30. Where the statute provides, among other duties, that the attorney-general "shall discharge such other duties as may be imposed by the general assembly," but shall receive no other compensation than his salary, and he appears for the state in certain cases under an act of the legislature, his services in such cases are covered by his salary. Field v. Auditor, 83 Va. 882, 3 S. E. 707.

31. Love v. Baehr, 47 Cal. 364.

32. Thus, under Ky. Stat. § 114, their fees must be fixed by the governor and auditor, and no fees can be paid except out of the amount recovered and paid into the treasury. Hendrick v. Posey, 104 Ky. 8, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 359, 45 S. W. 525, 46 S. W. 702. And, under Ky. Stat. §§ 4241, 4258, 4262, 4263, 4266, and c. 8, art. 2, §§ 113, 114, 127, it is held that an attorney employed by the attorney-general to institute a suit to compel a taxpayer to list his property is not entitled to be paid by the state. Coulter v. Denny, (Ky. 1902) 67 S. W. 65.

Allowance from funds in hands of receiver. — An allowance to special counsel employed by the attorney-general to wind up the affairs of an insolvent life insurance company should not be granted out of the funds in the hands of the receiver. Atty.-Gen. v. Continental L. Ins. Co., 88 N. Y. 571.

Power of legislature to increase duties. — It has been held that the legislature has no power to compel the attorney-general to act as a member of the board of examiners (Love v. Baehr, 47 Cal. 364); but where, though the constitution classed the attorney-general as belonging to the executive department, and district attorneys as belonging to the judicial, a clause in the constitution required the former to perform "such other duties as may be required by law," it was held that he might be required by act of legislature to advise the district attorneys and to act for the state in counties where there are no district attorneys; but that the legislature could not give the attorney-general control of cases in which the constitution provided that the district attorneys should represent the state, nor empower him to deprive those officers of their fees in such cases (State v. Moore, 57 Tex. 307).

The attorney-general of the United States directs the management and operation of the department of justice. Abbott L. Dict. See also a discussion of the duties of the attorney-general of the United States by William Wirt in 5 Law Rep. 373, and by Caleb Cushing in 6 Op. Atty.-Gen. (U. S.) 326, 5 Am. Law Reg. 65. By U. S. Rev. Stat. (1872), § 368, he has vested in him a general supervisory power over the accounts of the United States marshals, and his decision of any point functions are, however, political as well as legal, for in England he is almost invariably a member of the house of commons, where he answers questions on legal matters of public interest and has charge of government measures relating to legal subjects;[37] and the attorney-general of the United States is a member of the president's cabinet and, under the act of congress of Jan. 19, 1886, is the fourth in succession after the vice-president to the office of president, in case of a vacancy.[38]

B. Furnishing Opinions to Other Officers. The attorney-general of the United States is required to advise the president and heads of departments upon questions of law arising in the performance of their duties,[39] but he is not authorized to give legal opinions at the call of congress.[40] His opinions are preserved in a series of reports known as the "Opinions of the Attorneys-General," which include decisions rendered from 1791 to date.[41] In many of the states it is the duty of the attorney-general to advise, on request, the governor[42] or other state officers.[43]

C. Instituting Disbarment Proceedings. The attorney-general has power to institute disbarment proceedings.[44]

D. In Civil Actions — 1. May Act in What Cases — a. In General. The authority of the attorney-general to prosecute or defend any suit in which the state is concerned is necessarily implied from the nature of his office,[45] and he may bring an action where the wrong or injury complained of affects the public generally,[46] whenever there is proper cause, even though he is not required to do connected with the subject is conclusive, and not subject to collateral attack by the courts. Schloss v. Hewlett, 81 Ala. 266, 1 So. 263. He is not, however, authorized thereby to reduce fees of district attorneys which have been fixed by the court within the prescribed limit by virtue of U. S. Rev. Stat. (1872), § 824, providing that, for a conviction upon an indictment, "the district attorney may be allowed, in addition to the attorney's fees herein provided, a counsel fee in proportion to the importance and difficulty of the cause, not exceeding thirty dollars." Duty to appear in inferior courts. — Since Colo. Gen. Laws, § 1103, limits the duties of the attorney-general to state cases instituted or pending in the supreme court of the state, his duty to appear in such cases in inferior courts would be obligatory only when required to do so by the governor or general assembly. South Carolina. — State v. Corbin, 16 S. C. 533, holding that, since S. C. Gen. Stat. p. 110, § 5, authorizes the attorney-general to "prosecute information or other process against persons who intrude upon lands, rights, or property of the State," and section 35 requires him to "defend the rights of so except where other officers, whose duty it is to sue, have delayed for twelve the State in all cases where its rights are involved," he had authority to sue a law firm to recover money collected by them in a suit against persons intruding on the state's property, especially as the action of the attorney-general in suing the firm was reported to the legislature, and no objection was made, from which a ratification of his action might be inferred.

Canada.— Atty.-Gen. v. Bergen, 29 Nova Scotia 135.

Actions against public officers.— The attorney-general is the proper party to bring action against public officers to compel them to properly dispose of moneys in their keeping (State v. McClelland, 138 Ind. 395, 37 N. E. 799; Moore v. State, 55 Ind. 360), to restrain public boards from exercising inhibited powers (McMullen v. Person, 102 Mich. 608, 61 N. W. 260; Taggart v. Wayne County, 73 Mich. 53, 40 N. W. 852), or to recover on a state treasurer's bond (Miller v. State, 69 Miss. 112, 12 So. 265). It has been held, however, that an action cannot be maintained by the attorney-general to restrain a county treasurer from collecting taxes for the payment of bonds issued by a school district (State v. McLaughlin, 15 Kan. 228, 22 Am. Rep. 264), and that neither N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 430 (permitting the attorney-general, on leave of court, to bring suit to annul the charter of a corporation other than municipal, when such corporation exercises a franchise not conferred by law), nor section 432 (allowing him to maintain an action whenever any person shall unlawfully exercise any public office or franchise), authorizes such officer to prosecute a suit in the name of the people against commissioners appointed by act of legislature, to enjoin them from issuing town bonds authorized by said act, on the ground that they had failed to take the requisite preliminary steps, nor has he power at common law to maintain such proceeding (People v. Miner, 2 Lans. (N. Y.) 396).

Certiorari to remove orders of sessions relating to the expenditure of the district rates and assessments lies at the instance of the attorney-general, without notice. Rex v. Newcastle Justices, Draper (U. C.) 114.

Collection of taxes.— Under a statute authorizing the attorney-general to commence an action in the name of the state whenever, in his opinion, it is necessary to do so in order to protect or secure the public interests, he may bring suit for the collection of taxes due the state (State v. Central Pac. R. Co., 10 Nev. 47); but only upon express authority from the state can he settle a tax execution for less than its full amount (State v. Southwestern R. Co., 66 Ga. 403). Moneys received by him in actions for delinquent taxes become part of the public revenue of the state, and must be paid by him into the state treasury, notwithstanding such sums are not the full sum sued for, but constitute merely a payment of part which is admitted to be due, without prejudice to the rights of either party as to the balance. San Mateo County v. Oullahan, 69 Cal. 647, 11 Pac. 386.

Enforcing provisions in deed by commonwealth.— The attorney-general may bring suit to enforce a provision in a deed by the commonwealth prohibiting the placing of a building upon the front of a lot conveyed (Atty.-Gen. v. Gardiner, 117 Mass. 492), and where a bond for a deed given by the commonwealth contains a stipulation that "a passageway sixteen feet wide is to be laid out in the rear of said premises, the same to be filled in by the Commonwealth, and to be kept open and maintained by the abutters in common," may maintain an action to restrain defendant from building or maintaining bay windows which project over the passageway (Atty.-Gen. v. Williams, 140 Mass. 329, 2 N. E. 80, 3 N. E. 214, 54 Am. Rep. 468).

Enjoining conspiracy to do prohibited acts.— The attorney-general may institute proceedings to obtain an injunction restraining persons who have conspired together for the purpose of doing what is prohibited by law. State v. Fagan, 22 La. Ann. 545.

Enjoining erection of buildings adjoining public square.— Mass. Stat. (1898), c. 452, prohibiting the erection of buildings over ninety feet high on the streets adjoining Copley square, in Boston, which is a public park, intended for the use of the public, gives the public rights in the nature of an easement over lands facing the square, which are annexed to it for the benefit of the public, and hence the attorney-general is the proper person to sue to enforce it. Atty.-Gen. v. Williams, 174 Mass. 476, 55 N. E. 77, 47 L. R. A. 314, holding further that Mass. Stat. (1894), c. 257, giving the city of Boston the right to enforce its building laws, applied to statutes then in force, and did not contemplate the passage of the later statute, and hence did not affect the attorney-general's right to enforce it. Compare State v. Schweickardt, 109 Mo. 496, 19 S. W. 47, holding that the attorney-general has no authority to enjoin a party from carrying out a contract made with a city under an ordinance in regard to a privilege granted such party in a park.

Enjoining trespass on crown lands.— The court has jurisdiction to grant an injunction, at the instance of the attorney-general for the Dominion, in respect of trespass upon crown lands. Atty.-Gen. v. Ryan, 5 Manitoba 81.

Intervention in suit between states.—The attorney-general may intervene on behalf of the United States in a suit between states in which the general government is interested, and may introduce evidence and take part in the argument without making the United States a party for or against whom judgment months after cause of action accrued.[47] He cannot, however, maintain an action to prevent or redress a private wrong,[48] or on behalf of a municipality[49] or county.[50]

b. Concerning Charities. The attorney-general is a proper party in any action involving the proper administration of a trust in which the public is interested,[51] and may bring suit to enforce a trust for a public charity.[52]

can be rendered. Florida v. Georgia, 17 How. (U. S.) 478, 15 L. ed. 181.

Where a public right is invaded, and the authorities whose duty it is to bring an action fraudulently refuse to do so, or no other remedy exists at common law, the attorney-general may sue in his representative capacity, whether the injury affect the whole people or a limited organization of them, and whether it be a public nuisance or corrupt perversion of public money or public credit. See also Ex p. Skinner, 2 Meriv. 453, 1 Wils. C. P. 14 (holding that a petition under 52 Geo. III, c. 101, must have the signature of the attorney-general, or of the solicitor-general in case only of there being no attorney-general at the time, such signature not to be affixed without the same deliberation as in the case of an information regularly filed); Matter of Warwick Charities, 1 Phil. 559, 19 Eng. Ch. 559 (holding that petitions for filling vacancies in the number of charity trustees require the fiat of the attorney-general, but need not be served upon him); Atty.-Gen. v. Hewitt, 9 Ves. Jr. 232 (holding that the court will not act under an award in a charity cause without consent of the attorney-general, or without inquiring whether it is for the benefit of charity).

He is a necessary party to a suit to obtain the direction of a court of equity as to the administration of a public charity which is not in the hands of trustees charged by the donor with its management, but is not a proper party when the only relief sought is the division of the property left by the donor between the charity and other devisees. A scire facias to repeal letters patent, at the instance of a private prosecutor, can only issue on the fiat of the attorney-general, who may withhold his assent if no sufficient ground is shown. A draft of the writ and a statement of the facts on which it is founded should be laid before the attorney-general, and, if he is disqualified from acting, the solicitor-general or a crown lawyer should decide on the application. Legall v. Duffy, 8 N. Brunsw. 57.

On an application to question a patent under the Patent Act of 1872, it seems that the intervention of the attorney-general is not essential. Matter of Bell Telephone Co., 9 Ont. 339.

d. For Recovery of Common-School Fund. A suit by the state to recover a part of its common-school fund is properly brought on the relation of the attorney-general.[54]

2. Conduct and Management of Cause — a. In General. In England[55] and Canada[56] the attorney-general possesses entire dominion over every suit instituted by him in his official capacity, whether there be a relator or not. In some of the United States, however, it has been held that when the state has no direct interest in the event of the suit, the attorney-general, as such, has no power to control the conduct thereof[57] or to withdraw his consent, to the parties interested, to use the name of the state and his name in bringing an action when such withdrawal would prejudice the parties interested.[58]

b. On Appeal. The attorney-general is the only person who is authorized by law to appear for the people in the supreme court,[59] and no other attorney, appearing without his consent, will be recognized.[60] The attorney-general may appeal[61] from a judgment taken by consent of the district attorney[62] or when the latter declines to present an appeal,[63] and, it seems, has power to waive his right to an appeal.[64]

An appeal from the board of general appraisers by the United States can only be allowed on the application and in the name of the attorney-general, when the record does not show that the court is of opinion that the question involved is of such importance as to require an appeal; but where such an appeal is irregularly taken, in the name of the collector of the port by the district attorney, and the parties admit, in the circuit court of appeals, that it was, in fact, taken by direction of the attorney-general, and consent that the petition for appeal may be amended by substituting his name for that of the collector, the circuit court of appeals has jurisdiction to allow such amendment. U. S. v.

c. Appearance. In England the attorney-general, as such, is always supposed to be in court, and if he will not appear it must be considered as a nil dicit.[65] In the United States supreme court it is the uniform practice of the clerk to enter, at the first term to which any writ of error or appeal is returnable, in cases in which the United States is a party, the appearance of the attorney-general of the United States. This practice is not conclusive against the attorney-general if, at the first term, he withdraws his appearance or moves to strike it off; but, if he lets it pass for one term, it is conclusive upon him as to an appearance.[66]

d. Pleading.[67] Where an action is brought by the attorney-general on the relation of another, the latter need not be joined as plaintiff unless the action is substantially for his benefit,[68] and it has been held that the proceedings in an ex-officio information[69] may be either at the suit of the queen or of the attorney-general.[70] There is no precedent, however, for dispensing with the signature of the attorney-general to an information,[71] though where, by direction of the court, an information had been amended by merely adding a party, a motion to take the amended information off the files because not signed by the attorney-general was refused.[72] At common law the crown is not precluded from pleading double, or pleading and demurring, and the right of the crown to plead double is unaffected by any of the statutes or rules of court relating to pleading and procedure.[73] Where a question of great difficulty and delicacy arises between a subject plaintiff and the crown defendant, the court will not allow it to be decided upon demurrer, but an answer must be filed, and the benefit of the demurrer will be reserved to defendant.[74]

e. Power to Bind State. Ordinarily, the attorney-general cannot bind the state by appearing for it in an action,[75] and, where he is specially authorized to bring certain actions, he can bind the state only in cases similar to those so authorized.[76]

E. In Criminal Causes — 1. In General. Both in England and the United States the attorney-general represents the government in criminal prosecutions.[77]

2. Conduct of Prosecution — a. In General — (I) In Trial Court. Although it may not be the duty of the attorney-general to conduct criminal trials in the court below, generally,[78] he may be required to do so in certain cases,[79] and may assist the circuit attorney, at the latter's request and by consent of court, in a prosecution for murder, without stating whether he appears in his official capacity or as hired counsel.[80]

(II) On Appeal. A criminal cause on appeal is under the exclusive control of the attorney-general,[81] notwithstanding a statute making it the duty of a prosecuting attorney to conduct such cause with the advice and assistance of the attorney-general.[82]

b. Entering Nolle Prosequi. The attorney-general has power to enter a nolle prosequi[83] to the whole or any distinct part of an indictment,[84] without defendant's consent,[85] either before the jury is impaneled[86] or after verdict,[87] but not during the trial.[88] not to the person who claims to be the incumbent devolves upon his successor,[90] who may act without causing himself to be substituted on the record.[91]

VI. LIABILITY FOR COSTS AND OFFICER'S FEES.

As a general rule the attorney-general is not liable for costs in a suit brought in his official capacity,[92] even upon interlocutory applications.[93] He is liable in his personal capacity, however, to a sheriff for such of the sheriff's fees of office on the execution of crown processes as are included in the attorney-general's taxed bill of costs, and received by him from defendants in the several crown suits, after demand made, where no ground is shown for retaining them.[94]

VII. PRIVILEGES.

A. In General. While the attorney-general has been held to be privileged in certain respects,[95] he will not be permitted to prosecute any proceeding which is merely vexatious or has no legal object,[96] is bound by the same rules as private suitors with respect to parties,[97] and, it seems, has no greater right to be let in to appeal.[98]

B. Choice of Forum. The attorney-general may, under some circumstances, choose his own forum,[99] but it is incumbent on him to make out clearly the prerogative.[1]

C. Practising Privately. In the absence of constitutional or statutory inhibition the attorney-general may engage in private practice during his term of office,[2] and it has been held that he may appear as counsel for defendant to an information filed by relators in his name.[3]

I. TERMINOLOGY.

A. Auction. An auction is a public sale of property to the highest bidder.[1]

1. Russell v. Miner, 61 Barb. (N. Y.) 534, 5 Lans. (N. Y.) 537; Reg. v. Rawson, 22 Ont. 467.

Other definitions.— An auction sale is a sale by consecutive bidding, intended to reach the highest price of the article by competition for it. Hibler v. Hoag, 1 Watts & S. (Pa.) 552.

An auction is a public competitive sale. Crandall v. State, 28 Ohio St. 479.

A sale by auction is a sale by public outcry to the highest bidder on the spot. Cal. Civ. Code, § 1792.

A sale by auction is that which takes place when the thing is offered publicly to be sold to whoever will give the highest price. La. Rev. Civ. Code (1900), art. 2601.

Origin.— A sale at auction is said to have originated with the Romans, who gave it the descriptive name of auctio — an increase —

B. Auctioneer. An auctioneer is one who sells goods at public auction for another on commission, or for a recompense.[2]

C. Bid. A bid is an offer, by an intending purchaser, to pay a designated price for property which is to be sold at auction.[3]

II. LICENSES, TAXES, AND REGULATIONS.

A. Power to License or Regulate — 1. In General. The licensing of auctioneers and the regulation of their conduct as such is within the power of the legislature.[4]

2. Power of Municipal Corporation. As the power to license auctioneers and to regulate their conduct is not one of the incidents to a municipal corporation, such power cannot be exercised by a municipal corporation unless conferred on it by the legislature.[5] And, under a power given a municipal corporation to tax, license, and regulate the business of auctioneers, it cannot directly prohibit the business,[6] or adopt such regulations as will produce such a result, or even be oppressive or highly injurious to the business.[7] because the offered property was sold to him who would offer the most for it. Crandall v. State, 28 Ohio St. 479.

A Dutch auction consists in the public offer of the property at a price beyond its value, and then gradually lowering the price until some one becomes the purchaser. Crandall v. State, 28 Ohio St. 479.

As to necessity for license for sale at Dutch auction see infra, II, C.

2. Thomas v. Kerr, 3 Bush (Ky.) 619, 96 Am. Dec. 262; Story Agency, § 27.

As to who are auctioneers within statute requiring auctioneers to have licenses see infra, II, C.

Other definitions.— An auctioneer is a person authorized or licensed by law to sell lands or goods of other persons at public auction. Black L. Dict.

Distinguished from "broker."—Auctioneers differ from brokers in that the latter may both buy and sell, whereas auctioneers can only sell. Black L. Dict.

Distinguished from "pawnbroker."— The business of an auctioneer and the business of a pawnbroker differ essentially. That of an auctioneer is to sell by public outcry the property of others upon an agreement, express or implied, that he shall receive for his labor and skill a compensation. The business of a pawnbroker consists in the loaning of money on interest. Hunt v. Philadelphia, 35 Pa. St. 277.

3. Black L. Dict.; Eppes v. Mississippi, etc., R. Co., 35 Ala. 33.

As to manner of making bid see infra, IV, C, 1.

A bidder is one who makes an offer for property on sale at auction. Abbott L. Dict.

4. People v. Grant, 126 N. Y. 473, 27 N. E. 964, 38 N. Y. St. 499; Buffalo v. Marion, 13 Misc. (N. Y.) 639, 34 N. Y. Suppl. 945, 69 N. Y. St. 170.

As to powers of legislature, generally, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

Authority to exact license-fees exists both under the police power and under the taxing power. State v. Atlantic City, (N. J. 1901) 50 Atl. 367.

Discrimination.— A statute dividing cities and towns into classes according to population, and imposing license-taxes on auctioneers engaged therein, the amount being different for each class, is not unconstitutional as discriminating between persons engaged in the same occupation. O'Hara v. State, 121 Ala. 28, 25 So. 622.

5. Necessity that power be conferred.— Ex p. Martin, 27 Ark. 467; Fowle v. Alexandria, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 398, 7 L. ed. 719; Merritt v. Toronto, 25 Ont. 256.

As to power of municipal corporation to pass ordinances, generally, see MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

6. Prohibition of business.—Wiggins v. Chicago, 68 Ill. 372; Merritt v. Toronto, 25 Ont. 256.

7. Oppressive regulations.—Wiggins v. Chicago, 68 Ill. 372.

Amount of fee.—Where a municipal corporation has the power to regulate and license auction sales, and to pass all ordinances necessary to exercise that power, an ordinance authorizing the mayor to fix the amount of the license within a specified sum is valid. Decorah v. Dunstan, 38 Iowa 96. The amount of the license must not be unreasonable. Mankato v. Fowler, 32 Minn. 364, 20 N. W. 361. See also State v. Atlantic City, (N. J. 1901) 50 Atl. 367, holding that the imposition of a license-fee of twenty-five hundred dollars on an auctioneer is unreasonable.

Discrimination.— A municipal ordinance prohibiting persons temporarily residing in a city from selling goods at auction, without a license, thereby discriminating between temporary and permanent residents, is invalid. Carrollton v. Bazzette, 159 Ill. 284, 42 N. E. 837, 31 L. R. A. 522.

Regulation of place of sale.— Under a statute giving city councils control of streets, sidewalks, and public grounds, to keep the same open and free from nuisances, for the comfort and convenience of the inhabitants, an ordinance prohibiting auction sales to be

B. Right to License. Under the provisions of a municipal charter requiring auctioneers to give bond and obtain a license, and empowering the mayor to grant such licenses and to revoke them for misconduct of the licensees, it is within the discretion of the mayor to refuse a license even though a proper bond is tendered.[8]

C. Necessity of License. A person who sells his own goods at public auction is an auctioneer within the meaning of a statute requiring an auctioneer to procure a license.[10] So, one sale by auction,[11] or a sale without compensation,[12] is a violation of an ordinance prohibiting a sale at auction without a license.

D. Revocation of License. A municipal corporation vested by its charter with power to regulate and license auctioneers may, by ordinance, empower the mayor to revoke a license for cause.[13]

E. Taxes. A statute providing that property sold at public auction shall be subject to an auction tax every time it is struck off imposes the tax only on consummated sales and not on ineffectual efforts to sell.[14]

III. AGENCY OF AUCTIONEER.

A. In General. An auctioneer, in making a sale, whether of personalty or held in such places is not an unreasonable restraint of trade, and the necessity thereof is solely within the determination of the city council. White v. Kent, 11 Ohio St. 550.

Regulation of time of sale.—An ordinance prohibiting the sale of watches at auction after six o'clock in the evening is authorized by a provision of a charter giving the common council power to enact ordinances to license and regulate auctioneers. Buffalo v. Marion, 13 Misc. (N. Y.) 639, 34 N. Y. Suppl. 945, 69 N. Y. St. 170. But see Rochester v. Close, 35 Hun (N. Y.) 208, holding that a city, under a power to regulate the "ringing of bells and the crying of goods for sale at auction or otherwise, and to prevent disturbing noises in the streets," cannot prohibit the auction sale of jewelers' goods after sunset.

8. People v. Grant, 126 N. Y. 473, 27 N. E. 964, 38 N. Y. St. 499, holding that mandamus will not lie in such case to compel the mayor to grant a license.

Corporation as auctioneer.—Under the provisions of a municipal charter declaring that "the city clerk shall have authority to grant licenses to any person engaged in and carrying on the business and occupation of auctioneer," the city clerk has power to license a corporation as an auctioneer. People v. Scully, 23 Misc. (N. Y.) 732, 53 N. Y. Suppl. 125.

Remedy on refusal of license.— Though the officers of a city refuse to license an auctioneer, the latter cannot, by bill in equity, restrain the former from interfering with him in conducting his business without a license, as he has an adequate remedy at law. Klinesmith v. Harrison, 18 Ill. App. 467.

9. As to validity of sale by unlicensed auctioneer see infra, IV, G.

10. Sale of one's own goods.— Goshen v. Kern, 63 Ind. 468, 30 Am. Rep. 234. But see Crandall v. State, 28 Ohio St. 479, holding that a person who, being in the business of selling merchandise at regular retail prices, sells a portion of them at his store-room by public outcry, making known to the persons present that he will sell the property offered for sale at his regular retail prices, and no other, is not exercising the trade or occupation of auctioneer, within the meaning of a statute requiring persons exercising the trade or occupation of auctioneer to take out a license.

Dutch auction.— Putting up property for sale at a high price, and then lowering the price till some one accepts it as a bidder, is a sale at auction within an ordinance requiring auctioneers to obtain a license. Deposit v. Pitts, 18 Hun (N. Y.) 475.

Sale at fixed price.—An offer of property to any one who will take it at a given price is not an offer to sell the property at auction within the meaning of a statute imposing a penalty on peddlers for selling goods at public auction. Hibler v. Hoag, 1 Watts & S. (Pa.) 552.

Territorial limits of license.—A license to sell goods at auction is of no force beyond the limits of the municipal corporation granting it. Waterhouse v. Dorr, 4 Me. 333.

11. Single sale.— Reg. v. Rawson, 22 Ont. 467. See also Rex v. Taylor, M'Clel. 362, 13 Price 636, wherein it appeared that, at a sale of premises, the vendor invited each bidder to put down two sums on a slip of paper, and, upon collating such biddings, he whose paper contained the highest bidding was to be declared the purchaser at the lowest of the two sums if that exceeded the highest of any other bidder. It was held that this was a sale by auction, and that the vendor incurred the penalty as an auctioneer without being licensed, although the purchase was never completed.

12. Sale without compensation.— State v. Rucker, 24 Mo. 557.

13. Wiggins v. Chicago, 68 Ill. 372.

Delegation of power to revoke.— Under a charter granting the common council of a city power to revoke a license, the common council cannot delegate to the mayor the power of revocation. State v. St. Paul, 34 Minn. 250, 25 N. W. 449.

14. State v. Hoboken Second Nat. Bank, 84 Md. 325, 35 Atl. 889.

realty, is, primarily, the agent of the seller.[15] When, however, the property is struck off he becomes also the agent of the purchaser to the extent of binding both parties by his memorandum of sale.[16]

B. Authority in Writing. The authority of an auctioneer to sell land at auction need not be in writing.[17]

C. Authority to Warrant. An auctioneer has no authority to bind the seller by a warranty of the goods sold, unless specially instructed so to do.[18]

15. He is the agent of the seller by virtue of his employment to make the sale.

Georgia.— McMillan v. Harris, 110 Ga. 72, 35 S. E. 334, 78 Am. St. Rep. 93, 48 L. R. A. 345.

Private sale.— On the employment of an auctioneer to sell by auction there is no employment to sell by private contract if the public sale proves abortive, and evidence of a custom to that effect among auctioneers is inadmissible. Marsh v. Jelf, 3 F. & F. 234. See also Muffatt v. Gott, 74 Mich. 672, 42 N. W. 149, holding that auctioneers employed to sell land upon specific terms fixed by the owner have no right, after a sale pursuant to such terms, to make a contract with a different person than the purchaser, and upon different terms.

16. He is made the agent of the purchaser by the act of the latter in giving him his bid and receiving from him, without objection, the announcement that the property is knocked off to him as purchaser.

Massachusetts.— Upton v. Suffolk County Mills, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 586, 59 Am. Dec. 163. See also Blood v. French, 9 Gray (Mass.) 197, holding that an auctioneer has no authority to bind an administrator personally by a warranty of the condition of goods of the intestate.

United States.— The Monte Allegre, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 616, 6 L. ed. 174.

England.— Payne v. Leconfield, 51 L. J. Q. B. 642, 30 Wkly. Rep. 814.

D. Delegation of Authority. An auctioneer cannot delegate his power to sell by auction. He may, however, employ another person to use the hammer and make the outcry under his immediate direction and supervision.[19]

E. Revocation of Authority. An authority given to an auctioneer to sell may be revoked by the vendor at any time before the sale.[20]

IV. CONDUCT AND VALIDITY OF SALE.

A. In General. In a sale by auction there are three parties — the owner of the property to be sold, the auctioneer, and the portion of the public who attend to bid.[21]

B. Conditions of Sale — 1. RIGHT TO PRESCRIBE. The owner of property offered for sale at auction has the right to prescribe the manner, conditions, and terms of sale.[22]

2. EFFECT OF PRESCRIBING PRINTED CONDITIONS. Printed conditions under which a sale proceeds are binding on both buyer[23] and seller,[24] and cannot be varied,[25]

As to liability of auctioneer on his personal warranty see infra, VI, D, 2.

19. Poree v. Bonneval, 6 La. Ann. 386; Com. v. Harnden, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 482; Stone v. State, 12 Mo. 400.

B. 151, holding that, if goods are sent to an auctioneer to sell and the principal afterward directs the auctioneer not to sell them, but the goods still remain in his possession and are purchased bona fide by a third party who has no notice of the revocation of the auctioneer's authority, such sale is good. To the same effect is Morgan v. Darragh, 39 Tex. 171.

As to right of owner to withdraw property from sale see infra, IV, C, 4.

Reception of purchase-money.—Where it is provided by the terms of sale that a portion of the purchase-money shall be paid within a given time, and the auctioneer is authorized to receive it, his authority is not revoked, immediately on the expiration of the time limited, without further orders from his principal prohibiting the subsequent reception of such money. Pinckney v. Hagadorn, 1 Duer (N. Y.) 89.

21. Warlow v. Harrison, 1 E. & E. 295, 8 Jur. N. S. 66, 29 L. J. Q. B. 14, 8 Wkly. Rep. 95, 102 E. C. L. 295.

To complete an auction sale there must be a bidder, the property must be struck off or knocked down, and the person to whom it is struck off must complete his purchase by complying with the terms of the sale. Sherwood v. Reade, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 431.

An agreement, in advance of a sale of stock, to present a cow to the best bidder does not constitute the transaction a lottery, and so against public policy. Lucas v. Wallace, 42 Ill. App. 172.

Right to sell in street.— It is not lawful for an auctioneer to place goods intended for sale in public streets. Com. v. Passmore, 1 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 217.

22. Farr v. John, 23 Iowa 286, 92 Am. Dec. 426.

Right of auctioneer to prescribe conditions. — An auctioneer, being the agent of the seller, has the right to settle, not merely the terms of the sale, but to regulate the bidding. Holder v. Jackson, 11 U. C. C. P. 543.

23. Buyer bound by conditions.— Farr v. John, 23 Iowa 286, 92 Am. Dec. 426; Poree v. Bonneval, 6 La. Ann. 386; Layton v. Hennen, 3 La. Ann. 1; Macarty v. New Orleans Canal, etc., Co., 8 Rob. (La.) 102. See also Mead v. Hendry, 1 U. C. Q. B. 238, holding that the purchaser cannot, by any agreement made before the sale, be discharged from his obligation to perform the conditions imposed at the time of the sale. But see Mitchell v. Zimmerman, 109 Pa. St. 183, 58 Am. Rep. 715, holding that, as between the seller and the purchaser of goods sold at auction, evidence is admissible to show that the bid was made and the property struck down to the purchaser in pursuance of a prior private agreement which he had made with the seller, although such agreement is inconsistent with the conditions of the sale as stated by the auctioneer.

24. Seller bound by conditions.— Poree v. Bonneval, 6 La. Ann. 386; Layton v. Hennen, 3 La. Ann. 1; Macarty v. New Orleans Canal, etc., Co., 8 Rob. (La.) 102.

Advertisements of the sale are no part of the conditions of the sale, unless expressly made so. Aschom v. Smith, 2 Penr. & W. (Pa.) 211, 21 Am. Dec. 437.

25. Authority of auctioneer to vary conditions.— Marston v. Waldrhyn, Ky. Dec. 112; Poree v. Bonneval, 6 La. Ann. 386; Layton v. Hennen, 3 La. Ann. 1; Macarty v. New Orleans Canal, etc., Co., 8 Rob. (La.) 102; Chouteau v. Goddin, 39 Mo. 229, 90 Am. Dec. 462; Shelton v. Livius, 2 C. & J. 411, 1 L. J. C. 60, wherein it appeared that, at a hiring of slaves, the auctioneer read a written statement of the terms of hiring, and also declared in a loud voice other terms which amounted to an alteration of the written terms. It was held that he was at liberty, as agent of the hirer, to make such alteration.

though they may be explained,[26] by verbal statements of the auctioneer made at the time of the sale.

3. Notice of Conditions. If it is the custom to paste up the conditions in the auctioneer's room, and the auctioneer announces that the conditions are as usual, a purchaser is bound by the conditions, whether he sees them or not.[27]

C. The Bidding — 1. Manner of Making Bid. A bid may be made in words, uttered aloud in the hearing of the bystanders or spoken privately to the auctioneer,[28] or by writing in words or figures, or it may be made by a wink or nod,[29] or in any mode by which the bidder signifies his willingness and intention to give a particular sum or price for the property offered for sale.[30]

2. Manner of Accepting Bid. Property is struck off or knocked down when the auctioneer, by the fall of his hammer or by any other audible or visible announcement, signifies to the bidder that he is entitled to the property on paying the amount of his bid according to the terms of the sale.[31]

3. Right to Reject Bid. An auctioneer is not bound to accept all bids as a matter of course from persons present at his auction.[32] If the terms of sale are

26. Authority of auctioneer to explain conditions.— Chouteau v. Goddin, 39 Mo. 229, 90 Am. Dec. 462; Rankin v. Matthews, 29 N. C. 286. See also Cannon v. Mitchell, 2 Desauss. (S. C.) 320, holding that a purchaser of land at auction is bound by verbal declarations made by the vendor, publicly, at the sale, if such declarations are not variant from the terms advertised, but are additional thereto and explanatory thereof.

27. Mesnard v. Aldridge, 3 Esp. 271.

Failure to hear conditions.— Proof that a party did not hear the terms of the sale, which were publicly announced, will not discharge him from a compliance with such terms and conditions. Vanleer v. Fain, 6 Humphr. (Tenn.) 104.

Sufficiency of notice.—Where the advertisements of a sale of land stated that the terms of sale would be given at the time of the sale, a public verbal declaration at such time that the quantity was liable to be reduced by an adverse claim, in which event a reduction would be made from the price, is sufficient notice of such claim to the purchaser. 32. Holder v. Jackson, 11 U. C. C. P. 543, holding that an action will not lie against an auctioneer for refusing to accept a bid, unless by reason of some special condition or terms of the sale. See also Marcus v. Boston, 136 Mass. 350, holding that a bill in equity, by a person claiming to be the highest bidder at an auction sale of land, against the auctioneer and the person to whom the land was struck off and the memorandum of sale executed, to compel the auctioneer to sign a memorandum of sale declaring plaintiff to be the purchaser, cannot be maintained. Plaintiff's remedy, if he has any, is in damages. But see Johnston v. Boyes, [1899] 2 Ch. 73, 68 L. J. Ch. 425, 80 L. T. Rep. N. S. 488, 47 Wkly. Rep. 517, holding that a vendor who offers land for sale under conditions providing that the highest bidder shall be the purchaser, and that he shall immediately pay a deposit and sign a contract of purchase, is liable in damages to one, to whom the property has been knocked down as the highest bidder, if he refuses to allow such bidder to sign the contract. And see Ricks v. Battle, 29 N. C. 269, holding that, if the seller employ an auctioneer to cry property at auction, without directing him not to cry the bid of a particular person, and such person is the last and highest bidder, and the property is knocked off to him, the contract is complete.

Bid of infant or insolvent.— An auctioneer is not bound to receive the bid of an infant (Kinney v. Showdy, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 544) or of an insolvent (Taylor v. Harnett, 26 Misc. (N. Y.) 362, 55 N. Y. Suppl. 988).

Trifling advances.—An auctioneer may refuse to accept trifling advances offered by bidders in the course of the sale, where that kind of bidding is initiated at the outset and the sum so offered is utterly incommensurate with the actual known value of the property. Taylor v. Harnett, 26 Misc. (N. Y.) 362, 55 N. Y. Suppl. 988. See also Holder v. Jackson, 11 U. C. C. P. 543, holding that an auctioneer may prescribe, as a condition, that he will specific, he need not notice a bid that is coupled with different terms or conditions.[33]

4. Right to Withdraw Property or Bid. Until the hammer falls a locus penitentiæ remains, and the seller may withdraw his property from sale[34] or the bidder may withdraw his bid.[35]

5. Dispute as to Bid. If a bid is claimed by two or more persons, it is the usual practice to put the property up again at the price and at the bid of such one of the competitors as the auctioneer may declare, in his judgment, entitled to it.[36]

6. Chilling the Bidding. Generally, it may be said that any act of the auctioneer, or of the party selling, or of third parties as purchasers, which prevents a fair, free, and open sale, or which diminishes competition and stifles or chills the sale, is contrary to public policy and vitiates the sale.[37] A combination of not receive any bid which does not advance a given sum upon the last preceding bid.

Auctioneer passing to other articles.— If the auctioneer adjourns the sale of the particular article and passes to something else without the express assent of the bidder, it is tantamount to a rejection of the preceding bid, which is thereby annulled. Donaldson v. Kerr, 6 Pa. St. 486.

Dispute as to price bid.— On an issue as to the price bid at a sale, evidence of one bidder as to his understanding of the price bid by the person to whom the property was knocked down is competent. Ives v. Tregent, 29 Mich. 390.

Effect of bidding at second exposure.— In consequence of a dispute as to the person to whom property was struck off, the auctioneer offered it again for sale. The person to whom the first adjudication was made protested, but bid at the second sale. It was held that by so doing he deprived himself of the right to question a purchase made by a bona fide bidder to whom the property was adjudicated on the second exposure. McMasters v. Atchafalaya R., etc., Co., 1 La. Ann. 11. See also Warehime v. Graf, 83 Md. 98, 34 Atl. 364, wherein it appeared that at an auction sale the property was knocked down to A at a certain price, whereupon another person claimed that the bid was his. The seller then directed the property to be put up again, and it was again knocked down to A at a higher price. It was held that, since A's first bid was not accepted, there had been no complete sale, and that he was bound to take the property at his last bid.

37. A sale at auction is a sale to the best bidder, its object a fair price, its means competition. Any agreement, therefore, to stifle competition is a fraud upon the principle on which the sale is founded.

Alabama.— Carrington v. Caller, 2 Stew. (Ala.) 175. Compare Haynes v. Crutchfield, 7 Ala. 189, holding that the mere attempt of a purchaser to prevent another person from bidding for it will not render the purchase invalid. To have this effect the attempt must have been successful.

interests, however, is not necessarily corrupt. It is the end to be accomplished which determines whether the combination is lawful or otherwise. If it be to depress the price of the property by artifice, the purchase, under the rule just stated, will be void.[38] If it be to raise money for payment or to divide the property for the accommodation of the purchasers, it will be valid.[39]

7. PUFFING, OR BY-BIDDING. Though there is some diversity in the decisions as to the circumstances under which puffing[40] will invalidate a sale at aucment, among incorporators in a corporation selling their lands, that they might bid and afterward take the lots or not, at their option, will not invalidate the sale where the agreement was not carried into effect.

Question for jury.— The question of fraudulent or illegal intent, in a combination to bid at a sale, is one for the jury. Hunt v. Elliott, 80 Ind. 245, 41 Am. Rep. 794.

40. "A puffer is a person who without having any intention to purchase is employed by the vendor at an auction to raise the price by fictitious bids, thereby increasing the competition among the bidders, while he himself is secured from risk by a secret understanding with the vendor, that he shall not be bound by his bids." Per Green, J., in Peck v. List, 23 W. Va. 338, 375, 48 Am. Rep. 398. But one who bids at an auction sale, not because of any desire to purchase, but merely for the purpose, either in his own interest or that of another, to run up the price, is not a puffer, if, in case his bid is the last and highest, he can be compelled by the person conducting the sale to take and pay for the property. McMillan v. Harris, 110 Ga. 72, 35 S. E. 334, 78 Am. St. Rep. 93, 48 L. R. A. 345.

Rights and liabilities of puffer.—Where a tion,[41] it is clear, both upon principle and the weight of the authorities that, when a sale is advertised or stated to be without reserve, the secret employment, by the seller, of puffers renders the sale voidable, at the option of the purchaser,[42] provided such purchaser returns, or offers to return, the property purpuffer, under an agreement with the owner, runs up the price of property, and it is knocked down to the puffer, the owner is bound by the sale. Troughton v. Johnston, 3 N. C. 498, 2 Am. Dec. 626. A puffer cannot recover compensation for his services. Walker v. Nightingale, 4 Bro. P. C. 193.

41. In Tennessee it has been held that, in order to avoid a sale on the ground of puffing, it must be shown that puffers were employed to enhance the price and deceive other bidders, and that they were, in fact, misled thereby. Davis v. Petway, 3 Head (Tenn.) 667, 75 Am. Dec. 789.

In Texas it has been held that the vendor may, with the bona fide intention of preventing a sacrifice of his property, where the purchaser is not indnced thereby to bid more than it is worth, employ a puffer without the sale being thereby avoided. The question as to whether such employment is bona fide or not is one of fact for the jnry. Reynolds v. Dechaums, 24 Tex. 174, 76 Am. Dec. 101.

In England the soundness of the doctrine against puffing laid down at law by Lord Mansfield in Bexwell v. Christie, Cowp. 395, was early called in question in equity by Lord Loughborough, who, in Conolly v. Parsons, 3 Ves. Jr. 625 note, attempted to sanction the practice of secret bidding or puffing. This decision was followed in Bramley v. Alt, 3 Ves. Jr. 620, and Smith v. Clarke, 12 Ves. Jr. 477, 8 Rev. Rep. 359. The conflict was finally settled by an act of parliament (30 & 31 Vict. c. 48) which provided that "whenever a sale by auction of land would be invalid at law by reason of the employment of a puffer, the same shall be deemed invalid in equity as well as at law." McMillan v. Harris, 110 Ga. 72, 79, 35 S. E. 334, 78 Am. St. Rep. 93, 48 L. R. A. 345.

42. The offer of property at auction, without reserve, is an implied guaranty that it is to be sold to the highest bidder, and each bidder has the right to assume that all previons bids are genuine. The seller in substance so assures him, and the secret employment, by the seller, of an agent to make fictitious bids is equivalent to a false representation by him as to a matter in which he is bound to speak the truth and act in good faith.

Presumption as to effect of puffing.— In cases where puffing is practised at an auction, chased,[43] and is not guilty of laches in exercising his option.[44] It is competent, however, for a seller to fix a minimum price, or reserve to himself the right to bid, or employ another to bid for him, if he gives fair notice of such fact.[45]

D. Disturbance of Sale. Though a person attending a sale cannot be expelled therefrom without proper motives,[46] an action lies against a bidder at a sale for a disturbance of the sale.[47]

E. Inclusion of Property of Third Person. Where property has been advertised as belonging to a certain person and the property of another is sold along with it, this fact should be announced.[48]

F. Purchase by Auctioneer. An auctioneer cannot be the purchaser of, or be interested in the purchase of, the property which he is selling.[49] It has been held, however, that an agency simply to bid a particular sum for a purchaser is not, necessarily, inconsistent with any duty of the auctioneer, and does not enable any one to avoid the sale.[50] the presumption that real bidders upon the same property are influenced and misled by it is very strong, if not conclusive. The buyer, therefore, may avoid the sale, without further proof that he is influenced and injured, if there is no evidence tending to control or rebut such presumption. Curtis v. Aspinwall, 114 Mass. 187, 19 Am. Rep. 332.

43. Return of property.— Minturn v. Main, 7 N. Y. 220. See also Staines v. Shore, 16 Pa. St. 200, 55 Am. Dec. 492, holding that, when the employment of a puffer has been discovered by the purchaser after the sale, it is his duty to offer to return the property purchased; but, if not discovered until too late to do so, the purchaser's defense is good without it. And see McDowell v. Simms, 41 N. C. 278, holding that the purchaser must aver in his bill and show that he abandoned the contract as soon as he discovered the fraud.

Rep. 508, 2 E. C. L. 345; Hill v. Gray, 1 Stark. 434, 18 Rev. Rep. 802, 2 E. C. L. 167. See also Thomas v. Kerr, 3 Bush (Ky.) 619, 96 Am. Dec. 262, holding that if, while an auctioneer is selling goods of one man, another procures him to sell his goods, without information as to whose they are, it is such a fraud both on the auctioneer and on the bidder as will entitle the bidder to repudiate the sale.

Who may question.— A purchase by the auctioneer for himself at a sale made by him on behalf of his principal is not void, but voidable by the principal. Third persons cannot question the sale. Veazie v. Williams, 3 Story (U. S.) 611, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,907, 13 Hunt Mer. Mag. 356.

50. Richards v. Holmes, 18 How. (U. S.) 143, 15 L. ed. 304, holding that such an agency amounts to no more than receiving from the purchaser before the auction a bid which is to be treated as if made there by the purchaser himself. See also Flannery v. Jones, 180 Pa. St. 338, 36 Atl. 856, 57 Am. St. Rep. 648, holding that an auctioneer may bid for a third person who employs him, but not for the owner. But see Randall v. Lautenberger, 16 R. I. 158, 13 Atl. 100, holding that if, without the seller's assent, the auctioneer makes a bid for a purchaser, his conduct is fraudulent, and the sale is not enforceable by the purchaser. G. Sale by Unlicensed Auctioneer. A sale at auction made by a person not licensed is good, even though the act of selling subjects the auctioneer to a penalty.[51]

H. Sale of Several Lots. If several lots are put up separately, and are separately struck off to the same purchaser, and on each occasion the auctioneer writes down the name of the purchaser, there is, in point of law, a distinct and independent contract as to each lot, although the purchaser afterward signs one memorandum that he has bought the several lots.[52]

V. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF BUYER AND SELLER.

A. When Title Passes. Under a sale without conditions, the rule is that the title passes to the bidder when the property is knocked down to him.[53] A different rule prevails, however, where the sale is imposed with terms or conditions. In such case the title does not pass until there has been a compliance with the terms or conditions.[54]

B. Lien of Seller. A seller has a lien on the property sold for the amount of the bid.[55] Consequently, the purchaser is not entitled to possession until the amount of his bid is paid or tendered.[56]

C. Purchase by Agent For Undisclosed Principal. Where one bids for another, but does not disclose the name of his principal either to the owner or the auctioneer, he is personally liable as purchaser.[57]

D. Rescission of Contract — 1. By Buyer. False representations of a material fact,[58] or the failure of the seller to give good title,[59] will relieve the buyer of his purchase.

2. By Seller. On the failure of the purchaser to comply with the conditions of the sale, the seller may treat the contract as abandoned.[60]

E. Rights as to Deposit. Where it is stipulated that the deposit shall be forfeited if the purchaser does not comply with his contract, the deposit cannot be recovered back either at law or in equity.[61] But, if the contract of sale falls Mistake as to property purchased.—A bidder at a sale of land who, because of misleading statements of the auctioneer, bids for one lot, believing in good faith that he is bidding for a different one, is not bound by the purchase. Clay v. Kagelmacher, 98 Ga. 149, 26 S. E. 493. See also Sheldon v. Capron, 3 R. I. 171.

59. Failure of title.— Bodin v. McCloskey, 11 La. Ann. 46; Freret v. Meux, 9 Rob. (La.) 414; Mayer v. Adrian, 77 N. C. 83. See also Averett v. Lipscombe, 76 Va. 404, wherein it appeared that the terms of sale provided that if the purchaser, on examination, should not be satisfied with the title he need not take the property. It was held that if the purchaser, in good faith, was not satisfied with the title he would not be compelled to take the property, although the court of appeals pronounced the title good. And see Millingar v. Daly, 56 Pa. St. 245, holding that, where land is struck off to a bidder who does not know that a strip thereof has been acquired under condemnation proceedings, the purchaser may refuse to take the property.

Advice of counsel as to title.—A purchaser of land is not justified in refusing to accept a conveyance merely because of the opinion of counsel, given in good faith, that the title is not safe, if the opinion is erroneous and the record title is, in fact, perfect. Montgomery v. Pacific Coast Land Bureau, 94 Cal. 284, 29 Pac. 640, 28 Am. St. Rep. 122.

Encroachment.— The bidder on a lot "twenty-five feet, more or less, front and rear, by one hundred feet deep on each side," is not bound to consummate the purchase where a building encroaches on the lot, making it less than twenty-five feet wide at different points, and the owner of the building claims the encroachment by adverse possession. King v. Knapp, 66 Barb. (N. Y.) 225, 229.

Refusal of auctioneer to disclose owner.— A bidder may repudiate a purchase of goods if the auctioneer refuses to disclose the owner. Thomas v. Kerr, 3 Bush (Ky.) 619, 96 Am. Dec. 262.

60. Higgins v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., 60 N. Y. 553. See also Woodward v. Boston, 115 Mass. 81, holding that a stipulation, in an advertisement of an auction, that the building to be sold should be removed within a certain time from the day of sale is a condition, and, although the price be paid by the purchaser, if the building be not removed before the expiration of the time limited the sale is voidable at the option of the seller. But see McClaskey v. Albany, 64 Barb. (N. Y.) 310, holding that, although a purchaser of land at an auction sale fails to comply with the terms of the sale by paying the balance of the purchase-money within the time specified, and the seller thereupon declares the sale void, a specific performance of the contract may be decreed in favor of the purchaser where it appears that the execution of the contract by the seller is not embarrassed by any new relation contracted with other parties; that the buyer has made repairs and improvements upon the premises, and that the seller has received and accepted the deposit required to be paid on the day of the sale, and has executed and tendered a deed and demanded performance by the purchaser.

As to combinations to stifle bidding as ground for rescission see supra, IV, C, 6.

61. Failure of purchaser to comply with bid.— Donahue v. Parkman, 161 Mass. 412, 37 through because of the failure of the vendor to convey good title as agreed,[62] or without any fault of the purchaser,[63] the deposit may be recovered from the vendor. It has been held, however, that if a sale is abandoned by mutual consent and the purchaser forbids the auctioneer to pay over the deposit-money to the vendor, and thus prevents him from doing so, the vendor is not responsible for its return. The remedy of the purchaser in such case is against the auctioneer.[64]

F. Sale on Approved Security. A condition, in the terms of a sale, that the purchaser shall give a note with approved securities is complied with when he tenders a note duly executed, signed by good and solvent sureties, justly entitled to approval. The seller cannot arbitrarily reject such note.[65] In case of question as to the character of the note tendered, however, the purchaser is bound to prove either that the seller knew the note to be good, or had the means of conveniently ascertaining the fact.[66]

G. Set-Off Against Bid. A purchaser at auction may set off against the auctioneer, suing for the price, a debt due him by the owner of the goods.[67]

H. Remedies of Seller — 1. In General. Where personal or real property is sold at public auction, and the purchaser refuses to comply with his bid, the vendor may maintain an action against him for damages.[68]

N. E. 205, 42 Am. St. Rep. 415; Bullock v. Adams, 20 N. J. Eq. 367; Black v. Gesner, 3 Nova Scotia 157.

Fraud in sale.—Where a bid is obtained by the suppression of a material fact the seller cannot enforce the purchase, and the buyer is entitled to recover the amount of the deposit made in conformity with the terms of the sale. King v. Knapp, 59 N. Y. 462.

Payment not as deposit.— The conditions of a sale were that a certain amount be paid down, and the balance on the execution of a deed within a certain time. The purchaser paid the amount down, and was notified to close the sale, but, after several months, failed to do so, and the vendor then resold the land. It was held that the purchaser was entitled to recover the amount he had paid, less the expense that the vendor had been put to in making the resale, as the amount so paid was not a deposit. Poulson v. Ellis, 60 Pa. St. 134.

62. Failure of title.—Teaffe v. Simmons, 11 Allen (Mass.) 342; Cockcroft v. Muller, 71 N. Y. 367; Wetmore v. Bruce, 54 N. Y. Super. Ct. 149; Mahon v. Liscomb, 19 N. Y. Suppl. 224, 46 N. Y. St. 932.

Advice of counsel as to title.—A purchaser of land is not justified in demanding back a deposit paid by him on account of the purchase-money merely because of the opinion of counsel, given in good faith, that the title is not safe, if the opinion is erroneous and the record title is, in fact, perfect. Montgomery v. Pacific Coast Land Bureau, 94 Cal. 284, 29 Pac. 640, 28 Am. St. Rep. 122.

Right to interest.— On the failure of the vendor to convey a perfect title as agreed, the purchaser is entitled to interest on the deposit from the time of the demand for the deposit, and the refusal to pay. Cockcroft v. Muller, 71 N. Y. 367.

See also Hope v. Alley, 9 Tex. 394, holding that, where the terms of sale were that the successful buyer should give a note with good security for the sum bid, the auctioneer, after knocking down the property, has no right to refuse to take the note, with the security offered, unless there is reasonable ground to believe that the security is not sufficient.

As to specific performance of contract of sale see SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

Defenses.— In an action for not completing the purchase, the purchaser cannot set up as a defense that the sale was a sale by auction, and void on the ground of puffing, without pleading the fact. Icely v. Grew, 6 C. & P. 671, 25 E. C. L. 632. But see Millar v. Campbell, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 526, holding that if, at an auction, a puffer is employed, by whom the property is run up to an unreasonable price, the fraud cannot be inquired into in an action for the sale-money. An action on the case or a bill in equity is the appropriate remedy.

Goods bargained and sold.— A seller of goods at auction may recover as for goods bargained and sold against the buyer who knows where they are kept, ready for convenient delivery, but who neglects to comply with the terms of the sale. Turner v. Langdon, 112 Mass. 265.

2. Resale. On the failure of a bidder to comply with his bid the owner may resell the property at the risk of such bidder on giving notice of intention to resell.[69] In such case the difference between the sum received at the resale and the first bid, together with the reasonable expenses of the resale, affords a proper criterion of damages,[70] though it is not binding on the jury.[71]

VI. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF AUCTIONEER.

A. Right to Compensation — 1. In General. An auctioneer intrusted with the sale of an estate is entitled to his commissions, if he is the causa causans of a sale, even though, before the actual sale, the vendor withdrew the property from sale by him.[72] An auctioneer is not entitled to compensation, however,

Sale on credit.—Where goods are sold on a credit and the purchaser afterward refuses to take them, the owner may, before the expiration of the credit, maintain an action against the purchaser for a breach of the contract. Girard v. Taggart, 5 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 19, 9 Am. Dec. 327. So, where goods are sold at auction on condition that the purchaser give in payment therefor an approved note, and the purchaser refuses to give the note on delivery of the goods, the auctioneer may reclaim the goods, or treat the sale as an absolute one without credit, and immediately sue for the price. Corlies v. Gardner, 2 Hall (N. Y.) 345. But, if the terms of sale of land be that the buyer shall, within a certain time, give his notes, with good indorsers, and, if he shall fail to do so, the land is to be resold on his account, the vendor cannot maintain an action for the breach of the contract until the deficit is ascertained by the resale. Webster v. Hoban, 7 Cranch (U. S.) 399, 3 L. ed. 384.

69. Notice of resale.— Green v. Ansley, 92 Ga. 647, 19 S. E. 53, 44 Am. St. Rep. 110, holding, however, that notice need not be given of the time and place of the resale.

The owner cannot bid in the property at a resale so as to charge the first purchaser with the difference in price. Banks v. Hyde, 15 La. 391.

Purchase by partner of auctioneer.—Where goods are sold at auction, but, not having been taken away by the purchaser, are afterward resold at a loss, the fact that they are purchased by a person who was the partner of the auctioneer in another business totally distinct from that of auctioneer is no ground of objection. Clarkson v. Noble, 2 U. C. Q. B. 361.

Sale under same conditions.—A purchaser at a sale can be held liable only for the deficiency in price caused by a second sale when the conditions of the second sale are the same, or are not more onerous than those of the first. Weast v. Derrick, 100 Pa. St. 509. See also Adams v. McMillan, 7 Port. (Ala.) 73, holding that, in order to charge a bidder with the deficiency in price, it must appear that the second sale was conducted fairly. And see Paul v. Shallcross, 2 Rawle (Pa.) 326, holding that, if property be sold on certain terms, one of which is that, on non-compliance with those terms, the property shall be resold at the risk and expense of the purchaser, the second sale must not be clogged with terms likely to lower the price.

See also Clark v. Smythies, 2 F. & F. 83, holding that, in the absence of an express contract, auctioneers are entitled to a reasonable remuneration for sales by private contract effected through their instrumentality, even though, by the act or default of the vendor, the contract is rescinded.

Disbursements on private sale.— Though an auctioneer cannot recover commissions on property sold by the owner at private sale, he is entitled to disbursements. Girardey v. Stone, 24 La. Ann. 286.

Discount on disbursements.—An auctioneer employed under an agreement that he shall be paid expenses of printing advertisements of the sale cannot charge the ordinary rate if the printer has allowed him any discount on a sale effected by him, if, by reason of his negligence, the sale becomes nugatory.[73]

2. STATUTORY REGULATIONS. A statute fixing the amount of an auctioneer's compensation for his services, in the absence of an agreement in writing,[74] at a certain per cent of the amount of the sales,[75] refers only to services as auctioneer. It does not prevent recovery for disbursements and expenses necessarily incurred for the successful conduct of a sale.[76]

B. Right to Lien. An auctioneer has a lien, on property which he is employed to sell. for all sums due to him for his commissions and charges of sale.[77] therefrom. Union Refining, etc., Co. v. Pentecost, 79 Pa. St. 491.

Part of sale beyond limits of license.— Where an auctioneer sold severally numerous lots of standing wood, and part of the wood was within the limits of a county where the auctioneer had no authority, and was, by law, prohibited to sell, he is entitled to recover compensation for selling those lots which were within the county where he was licensed and qualified to sell. Robinson v. Green, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 159.

Where a sale is adjourned the auctioneer is not entitled to fees for services on the day of adjournment. He must sell to earn his fees. Ward v. James, 8 Hun (N. Y.) 526.

73. Denew v. Daverell, 3 Camph. 451. But see Benner's Estate, 7 Phila. (Pa.) 333, holding that, if an auctioneer's sale is set aside and a second sale is ordered, the auctioneer is entitled to compensation for his services at both sales if the first sale was not set aside through any default of the auctioneer.

Bid not complied with.— If an auctioneer is employed to sell at a certain commission on so much as he shall sell, he is not entitled to a commission on a bid not complied with. Cochran v. Johnson, 2 McCord (S. C.) 21.

A trustee who acts as auctioneer in the sale of trust property is not entitled to charge commissions. Kirkman v. Booth, 11 Beav. 273, 13 Jur. 525, 18 L. J. Ch. 25. See also Matthison v. Clarke, 3 Drew 3, 18 Jur. 1020, 24 L. J. Ch. 202, 3 Wkly. Rep. 2, wherein it appeared that a mortgagee with power of sale was a member of a firm of auctioneers. The firm sold for him. It was held that they were not entitled to commissions.

Dec. 204, holding that, where an assignment for the benefit of creditors is fraudulent, an auctioneer to whom the assignees have intrusted the effects to be sold has no lien upon the moneys realized from the sale, as against judgment creditors of the assignor, the auctioneer being himself a creditor, but having agreed to the assignment.

Property subject to lien.—Whatever is put into the hands of the auctioneer as passing with, and appurtenant to, the property sold, is subject to the lien. But maps left with him for the purpose of selling land thereby are not so subject. Blackburn v. Macdonald, 6 U. C. C. P. 380.

78. This doctrine stands upon the right of the auctioneer to receive, and his responsibility to his principal for, the price of the property sold, and his lien thereon for his commissions, which give him a special property in the goods intrusted to him for sale, and an interest in the proceeds.

or for the property itself,[79] even though the owner of the property be known. In case of real estate, however, an auctioneer is not, ordinarily, entitled to receive the price. But when the terms of his employment and of the authorized sale contemplate the payment of a deposit into his hands at the time of the auction, he may sue for the deposit in his own name, whenever an action for the deposit, separate from the other purchase-money, may become necessary.[80] An auctioneer may also sue in his own name for fees which the terms of sale require to be paid him by the purchaser;[81] but his right to recover will depend on the validity of the contract to purchase as between buyer and seller.[82]

D. Liabilities of Auctioneer — 1. To Seller — a. In General. As an auctioneer assumes upon himself an obligation to his employer to perform the services confided to him with ordinary care and skill, he is responsible for loss arising from gross negligence or ignorance.[83]

b. Disobedience of Instructions. If an auctioneer deviates from the instructions of his principal, he is liable in damages.[84] Thus, if he is directed not to See also Riddle v. Coburn, 8 Gray (Mass.) 241, wherein it appeared that an auctioneer, who had guaranteed his sales, sold and delivered a chattel upon condition that the title should not pass until payment of the price. Upon the purchaser's failing to perform the condition, the auctioneer agreed to take the chattel and settle with the seller after informing him of the facts. It was held that the auctioneer thereby acquired a perfect title, and could maintain trover against one claiming title by sale from such purchaser.

Replevin.—An auctioneer who sells and delivers goods on a condition which is not complied with may maintain replevin therefor. Tyler v. Freeman, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 261.

Trespass de bonis asportatis.—An auctioneer put into possession of fixtures attached to the freehold for the purpose of selling them, the purchaser being bound to detach and remove them, has not such a possession as will support trespass de bonis asportatis for their wrongful removal. Davis v. Danks, 3 Exch. 435, 18 L. J. Exch. 213.

80. In relation to such deposit the auctioneer stands in the same position as he does to the price of personal property sold and delivered by him. Thompson v. Kelly, 101 Mass. 291, 3 Am. Rep. 353.

Deposit of proceeds in bank.—Where an auctioneer, with the assent of the seller, deposits the proceeds of the sale in a bank to his own credit, mingling them with his own funds and with the proceeds of sales for others, the seller becomes a general creditor of the auctioneer, with no preference over other creditors. Levy v. Cavanagh, 2 Bosw. (N. Y.) 100.

Failure to ascertain bidder.—An auctioneer accepted a bid, but did not call for the name of the bidder. The bidder was asked by the auctioneer to come to the desk, but did not do so. Later, the auctioneer put up the chattel again and sold it for a less sum. It was held that he was liable to the owner for the sum first bid. Townsend v. Van Tassel, 8 Daly (N. Y.) 261.

Proof of title.— In an action against an auctioneer to recover the price of property, a slave sold by the auctioneer, plaintiff must prove such a property in the slave as will entitle him to the proceeds of the sale. It is not sufficient to show merely that he delivered it to the auctioneer. Allen v. Brown, 5 Mo. 323.

Sale at ruinous sacrifice.—An action will lie against an auctioneer for selling goods at a ruinous sacrifice, if the jury find that, under the circumstances, he has acted negligently and in disregard of his duty. Cull v. Wakefield, 6 U. C. Q. B. O. S. 178.

Unavoidable accidents.—An auctioneer is bound only to take due care of property sent to him for sale, the same as he would of his own goods, and is not liable for unavoidable accidents. Maltby v. Christie, 1 Esp. 340.

Subsequent insolvency of purchaser on credit.—Where auctioneers are authorized to sell on credit, and they do so, taking the notes of the purchasers, payable to themselves, the sell goods below a certain price, he must put them up at such price, and cannot sell them if they will not bring it.[85]

c. Estoppel of Auctioneer to Assert Title. An auctioneer sued for the proceeds of goods sold by him cannot set up title in himself either as a defense to the action or in reduction of damages.[86]

2. To Buyer — a. In General. An auctioneer is bound by his personal warranty that title exists in his principal.[87] If he assumes the delivery of goods sold by him, he is liable for a failure to deliver them.[88] He is also responsible to the purchaser for money paid as a deposit, as required by the terms of the sale, if the vendor fails to complete the conveyance.[89]

b. Sale For Undisclosed Principal. An auctioneer is personally responsible as vendor unless, at the time of the sale, he discloses the name of his principal. His general employment as auctioneer is not per se notice that he acts as agent.[90] principal, and not the auctioneer, must bear the loss in case of the failure of the makers of the notes before their maturity, unless the auctioneers have appropriated the notes to their own use. Townes v. Birchett, 12 Leigh (Va.) 173.

87. Personal warranty.— Dent v. McGrath, 3 Bush (Ky.) 174, holding, further, that, in an action against an auctioneer for damages resulting from his false warranty of the title of stolen property, which the purchaser has surrendered to the true owner, a judicial eviction is not necessary where the answer does not controvert the allegations as to want of title, and the owner's recaption.

Implied warranty.— Though the sale of goods by an auctioneer "as are" relieves him from any responsibility by way of warranty or for any defects in the condition of the thing sold, it, nevertheless, implies the existence of the thing sold in some condition, and does not protect him if the subject of the sale is wholly different from what it is represented to be. Ruben v. Lewis, 20 Misc. (N. Y.) 583, 46 N. Y. Suppl. 426. See also Somers v. O'Donohue, 9 U. C. C. P. 208, holding that, where an auctioneer sells a chattel as his own and delivers it to the purchaser, from whom it is taken by the rightful owner, the auctioneer is to be treated as impliedly warranting that he has a right to sell, and is, therefore, bound to compensate the purchaser for the loss.

Statute of frauds.—A verbal warranty of an auctioneer, where he alone was trusted, and expressly agreed, for himself, to warrant the title, is an original undertaking and not within the statute of frauds. Schell v. Stephens, 50 Mo. 375.

88. Failure to deliver.— Elison v. Wulff, 26 Ill. App. 616; Woolfe v. Horne, 2 Q. B. D. 355, 46 L. J. Q. B. 534, 36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 705, 25 Wkly. Rep. 728.

89. Return of deposit.— Teaffe v. Simmons, 11 Allen (Mass.) 342 (holding that, as to the deposit-money, the auctioneer is a stakeholder between the parties, and liable as such); Robinson v. Trofitter, 11 Allen (Mass.) 339; Cockeroft v. Muller, 71 N. Y. 367; Mahon v. Liscomb, 19 N. Y. Suppl. 224, 46 N. Y. St. 932; Gray v. Gutteridge, 3 C. & P. 40, 1 M. & Rob. 614, 14 E. C. L. 440. But see Ellison v. Kerr, 86 Ill. 427, wherein it appeared that, five months after the sale, the vendor gave the purchaser a contract acknowledging receipt of the deposit-money, and the purchaser, through whose acts the auctioneer had been induced to pay the deposit to the vendor, suffered two years to elapse after the sale before making demand for the deposit. It was held that the rule that the auctioneer is the stakeholder of both parties had ceased to apply, and that the purchaser could not recover the deposit.

As to liability of seller for deposit see supra, V, E.

Bill of interpleader.— If adverse claims arise as to the deposit-money received by an auctioneer, one party insisting upon its return and the other on its being paid over, the auctioneer may file a bill of interpleader. Bleeker v. Graham, 2 Edw. (N. Y.) 647.

See 5 Cent. Dig. tit. "Auctions and Auctioneers," § 42.

Amount of recovery.—An auctioneer selling for an undisclosed principal is liable to the purchaser, not only for the deposit and the auctioneer's fees, with interest, but also for any difference between the actual value of the property and the price agreed to be paid. Bush v. Cole, 28 N. Y. 261, 84 Am. Dec. 343.

3. To Third Persons[91]— a. In General. An auctioneer who sells property for one who has no title and pays over to his principal the proceeds is liable to the real owner for the conversion, even though such auctioneer acts in good faith, and without knowledge of the defect of title.[92] Of course, an auctioneer is liable to the true owner for the proceeds of a sale if he sells with knowledge, or under circumstances which charge him with knowledge, that the property does not belong to his principal.[93]

b. Garnishment. An auctioneer selling goods by order of a sheriff, and receiving the money for them, is accountable only to the sheriff, and cannot be held as the trustee of those who may have claims on the sheriff for the proceeds.[94]

VII. Bonds and Actions Thereon.

A. Requisites and Validity of Bond. The bond must conform in its provisions to the ordinance or statute governing it.[95]

Advances.—Where goods purchased through fraud are placed in the hands of an auctioneer for sale, and he, in good faith, advances money upon them, or incurs expenses in relation thereto, he acquires a title to the goods that cannot be impeached by the original vendor thereof. Higgins v. Lodge, 68 Md. 229, 11 Atl. 846, 6 Am. St. Rep. 437. See also Lewis v. Mason, 94 Mo. 551, 5 S. W. 911, 8 S. W. 735, holding that an auctioneer, who receives in good faith, and without the knowledge of any fraud, a consignment of goods to be sold on commission, and, on receiving part thereof, advances the consignor money upon account, is entitled to the possession of the goods as against an attaching creditor of the vendor of the consignor, and cannot be deprived of their possession, either by the consignor or a creditor of the consignor, until his advances, commissions, and charges are paid.

Void chattel mortgage.—An auctioneer, who, as agent of the mortgagee in a chattel mortgage void under the insolvent laws, sells the mortgaged property, under a power in the mortgage, after notice of the issuance of a warrant in insolvency against the mortgagor and demand of possession by the messenger, is guilty of a conversion of the property, and is liable to the assignee in insolvency for the value thereof. C. Action on Bond. A person who intrusts an auctioneer with the sale of goods, and has a claim against him for money arising on the sale, may apply for and direct a suit on the auctioneer's bond even though the ordinance requiring the bond did not authorize any person in particular to sue upon it.[97]

96. Raleigh v. Holloway, 10 N. C. 234. See also Tripp v. Barton, 13 R. I. 130, 131, holding that neglect of an auctioneer to pay over the proceeds of a sale by him constitutes a breach of his bond, conditioned merely that he shall "well and faithfully perform all the duties of said office during his continuance therein." But see Viadero v. Stacom, 14 Daly (N. Y.) 345, 12 N. Y. St. 114, holding that a bond, designed by the provisions of a statute as security against frauds and fraudulent practices committed upon purchasers at auction sales, does not embrace the fraud of an auctioneer in converting to his own use the proceeds of goods consigned to him for sale.

Discharge of sureties.— Where an auctioneer's license is void because not under the corporate seal, as required by ordinance, a surety on the bond, given before the issuance of the license, is not liable, though the auctioneer continued to act as such throughout the year. Georgetown v. Baker, 2 Cranch C. C. (U. S.) 291, 10 Fed. Cas. No. 5,342. But the neglect of a city treasurer to call on an auctioneer to render an account of his sales does not discharge the auctioneer's sureties from their liability. Charleston v. Paterson, 2 Bailey (S. C.) 165. So, a discharge in bankruptcy of an auctioneer does not discharge the sureties on his official bond. Jones v. Russell, 44 Ga. 460.

Duration of liability.— The liability of an auctioneer commissioned for one year, and of his sureties under a bond to perform, etc., "during the period he shall continue to act as auctioneer under the commission that may be granted him," continues while he acts as auctioneer, and does not expire in one year. Daly v. Com., 75 Pa. St. 331. But see Florance v. Richardson, 2 La. Ann. 663, 664, holding that where an auctioneer, who had received and advertised for sale goods, sells them after his term of office has expired and converts the proceeds to his own use, the sureties on his bond, who bound themselves "that he should perform his duty as an auctioneer to all persons who shall employ him as such, during his continuance in office," will not be liable for the amount so converted.

Private sale.— If goods are sent to an auctioneer with directions to sell them at public auction, and he sells them at private sale, without authority, and does not pay over the proceeds, his bond as auctioneer is liable. McMechen v. Baltimore, 3 Harr. & J. (Md.) 534.

Defenses.— In an action on an auctioneer's bond a surety cannot object that the bond was invalid in that the principal had not taken out the license as required by statute. State v. Blohm, 26 La. Ann. 538.

Presumptions.— In an action on an auctioneer's bond, it will be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the bond and license were given the same day, the execution of the former preceding the granting of the latter. McMechen v. Baltimore, 2 Harr. & J. (Md.) 41.

I. DEFINITION.

Audita querela[1] is a common-law writ,[2] issued upon the application of a judgment or execution debtor, designed to afford relief from the consequences of a judgment or an execution, upon the ground of some matter of defense or discharge arising subsequent to the rendition of the judgment or issue of the execution,[3] or for the relief, in like manner, of conusors in recognizances and statutes merchant and staple.[4] The term "audita querela" has also been applied

1. Literally, "the complaint having been heard," from which emphatic words used in the writ the latter takes its name. Abbott L. Dict.

2. It is a common-law writ (Radclyffe v. Barton, 161 Mass. 327, 37 N. E. 373; Garfield v. State University, 10 Vt. 536); and even where the proceeding is authorized and the forms prescribed by statute the rules of the common law determine the cases in which it is a suitable remedy (Radclyffe v. Barton, 161 Mass. 327, 37 N. E. 373; Lovejoy v. Webber, 10 Mass. 101; Johnson v. Plimpton, 30 Vt. 420; Poultney v. State Treasurer, 25 Vt. 168; Comstock v. Grout, 17 Vt. 512; Staniford v. Barry, 1 Aik. II. NATURE AND PROPRIETY OF REMEDY.

A. Nature. The proceeding is a regular suit or action,[6] in which the parties may plead and take issue, either in law or in fact,[7] and a regular judgment must be pronounced.[8] While the complaint generally[9] sounds in tort,[10] the proceeding is in the nature of a bill in equity.[11]

B. Propriety — 1. In General. The purpose of the writ of audita querela is to relieve the party suing it out from the fraud, oppression, or other misconduct of the opposite party,[12] by avoiding the execution[13] or vacating the judgment[14] complained of. Injury, or danger of injury, seems to be essential to the maintenance of the action,[15] and whenever the party has had a legal opportunity to avail himself of the matters of defense set forth in his complaint, or the injury of which he complains is attributable to his own neglect, he is not entitled to relief

Writ of error, or motion, and not audita querela, is also the proper remedy for the unauthorized appearance of an attorney. Abbott v. Dutton, 44 Vt. 546. 8 Am. Rep. 394; Spaulding v. Swift, 18 Vt. 214; Sheldon v. Kelseys, Brayt. (Vt.) 26. See also Alleley v. Colley, Cro. In Vermont, however, the writ has been held to be a proper remedy for certain errors of the court, such as the improper denial of an appeal (Edwards v. Osgood, 33 Vt. 224; Tyler v. Lathrop, 5 Vt. 170 [criticized in Scott v. Darling, 66 Vt. 510, 29 Atl. 993; Bradish v. Redway, 35 Vt. 424, 426; Harriman v. Swift, 31 Vt. 385; Spear v. Flint, 17 Vt. 497, in which cases the court said: "That case has since been followed, but with reluctance, and, if the question were now an open one, probably a different rule would be adopted"]), provided the suit was appealable on its face (Scott v. Darling, 66 Vt. 510, 29 Atl. 993; Bradish v. Redway, 35 Vt. 424; Griswold v. Rutland, 23 Vt. 324. See also Harriman v. Swift, 31 Vt. 385), or the rendition of judgment when the court lacked jurisdiction, either of the subject-matter of the suit (Burlington, etc., R. Co. v. Brush, 57 Vt. 472; Glover v. Chase, 27 Vt. 533; Ball v. Sleeper, 23 Vt. 573; Hastings v. Webber, 2 Vt. 407. (Vt.) 27. See also Perry v. Morse, 57 Vt. 509); but a recovery against an officer for failure to collect a judgment against an infant will not be set aside by audita querela while the judgment against the infant remains in force (Solace v. Downing, Brayt. (Vt.) 27), and the writ was held not to lie in Wrisley v. Kenyon, 28 Vt. 5 (where an infant was sued jointly with his father and natural guardian, who appeared and defended the suit); Chase v. Scott, 14 Vt. 77 (where the infant, being one of several defendants, did not appear, and no guardian ad litem was appointed, and judgment was rendered against all the defendants).

can purely equitable defenses, not cognizable at law, be set up by audita querela.[22] The writ is now less frequently resorted to than formerly, owing to the disposition of the courts to grant the same relief in a more summary manner;[23] but the remedy so substituted or other common-law remedies are merely concurrent with audita querela, and are not exclusive.[24]

the party suing it out should be actually in execution, or that an execution should have actually issued;[25] and after suing out a writ plaintiff is justified in pursuing it until he knows that he is no danger from the execution, although the execution was not in the officer's hands at the time the writ issued.[26]

3. To Set Aside Execution — a. When Issue, Levy, or Return Irregular or Void.[27] Audita querela lies to set aside an execution which is irregular in some particular or void,[28] which was irregularly issued,[29] under which an irregular levy was made,[30] or upon which the officer made a false return.[31]

b. When Judgment Released, Satisfied, or Otherwise Discharged. The writ of audita querela has also long been recognized as the proper remedy to avoid an execution which has been sued out after the judgment has been released,[32]

For cases where audita querela did not lie to avoid execution on a statute see 1 Bacon Abr. 513; Beston v. Robinson, Cro. Jac. 218.

28. Stone v. Chamberlain, 7 Gray (Mass.) 206 (date of judgment erroneously stated, whereby the officer was required to collect more interest than was due); Fairbanks v. Devereaux, 48 Vt. 550 (where an alias execution purported to be for the whole amount of the judgment, when a portion thereof had been collected on the first execution, even though the amount satisfied on the original execution was indorsed on the alias), Hovey v. Niles, 26 Vt. 541 (where the execution was made returnable at an earlier day than prescribed by statute); Sawyer v. Vilas, 19 Vt. 43; Stanley v. McClure, 17 Vt. 253 (in both which cases the execution was wrongfully issued against the body of the debtor, instead of against his property only); Gray v. Parker, 16 Vt. 652 (where, in a suit abated because there were no such persons as plaintiffs, an execution for costs was issued against plaintiffs); Wilson v. Fleming, 16 Vt. 649, 42 Am. Dec. 531 (where the execution misdescribed the judgment as to amount).

A justice's execution, which is renewed by erasing the date and inserting a new date, after it has been delivered to an officer for collection but before service is made and within its life, is not void, and cannot be set aside by audita querela. Sawyer v. Doane, 19 Vt. 598.

29. Dingman v. Myers, 13 Gray (Mass.) 1 (where issued against a non-resident, not personally served, without the creditor first filing the bond required by statute); Skillings v. Coolidge, 14 Mass. 43 (where issued contrary to the manifest intent of the referees on a judgment of the court upon an award by referees); Johnson v. Harvey, 4 Mass. 483; Hicks v. Murphy, Walk. (Miss.) 66 (where issued by the clerk against an administrator without an award of the court or revival by scire facias, after the lapse of a year and a day from the rendition of judgment against the intestate in his lifetime); Porter v. Vaughn, 24 Vt. 211.

Mistake no defense.— That an execution irregularly issued by the mistake of the clerk or attorney is no defense to the audita querela. Phelps v. Slade, 13 Vt. 195.

30. Hurlbut v. Mayo, 1 D. Chipm. (Vt.) 387. See also Com. v. Whitney, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 434, holding that where judgment was recovered and execution issued thereon before plaintiff's death, and defendant was committed on the execution after plaintiff's death, audita querela was the proper proceeding to try the question as to whether or not the prisoner was entitled to his discharge as a matter of right.

Where a levy on land is void the writ does not lie. Bryant v. Johnson, 24 Me. 304.

31. Hopkins v. Hayward, 34 Vt. 474, where the creditor fraudulently procured the officer to make a false return of the appraisal of the real estate levied on, and thereby set off too much of the debtor's property, on the basis of the actual appraisal, to cover the amount which he returned as satisfied on the execution.

32. Bryant v. Johnson, 24 Me. 304; Gordonier v. Billings, 77 Pa. St. 498; Flower v. Elgar, Cro. Car. 214 (holding that the writ lies against a plaintiff on his release of a judgment, although he has taken execution by elegit, and assigned it over); Child v. Durrant, Cro. Jac. 337 (where plaintiff released after judgment, and defendant subsequently brought error, upon which judgment was affirmed and additional costs incurred, whereupon defendant was taken in execution for the whole, and was relieved, on audita querela, as to the damages and first costs, but not as to the second costs); Hyde v. Morley, Cro. Eliz. 40; 3 Bl. Comm. 405.

paid,[33] satisfied on a prior execution,[34] discharged by the satisfaction of another judgment, when there have been separate recoveries for the same cause of action,[35] or against joint and several obligors[36] or joint trespassers,[37] where the debtor, after judgment, has obtained a discharge in bankruptcy,[38] where the debt was attached in the debtor's hands by a judgment creditor of plaintiff,[39] or where any other matter has occurred which operated as a discharge of the judgment.[40]

Tender.— There would seem to be no doubt that the tender of the amount due upon an execution, and a refusal to receive it, may entitle the debtor to relief by audita querela, when the tender is kept good and properly pleaded. Perry v. Ward, 20 Vt. 92. But it was held in Keen v. Vaughan, 48 Pa. St. 477, that where a petition for the writ averred an agreement to accept a certain sum in compromise of a larger judgment, and an actual receipt of the greater part, with a tender of the balance, it was not error to refuse the writ, as to discharge the judgment the agreement must be fully executed.

Where a bond was executed in payment of a judgment and execution afterward issued, it was held, on demurrer to an audita querela brought to vacate the execution, that the bond was insufficient to avoid the judgment. Lutterford v. Le Mayre, Cro. Jac. 579.

Satisfaction by co-defendant.— Where one of two judgment debtors satisfies the execution, and the other is taken in execution upon an alias issued to compel contribution, he will be relieved by audita querela. Brackett v. Winslow, 17 Mass. 153. Compare Waddington v. Vredenbergh, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 227.

Payment by purchaser for release of attachment.—Where a purchaser of land under attachment pays to the attaching creditor, after judgment and execution, a certain sum for the release of the attachment, under an agreement that the creditor need not apply such sum toward satisfaction of the judgment, this does not inure to the benefit of the debtor, and he cannot obtain his discharge from prison on that account after there has been a partial satisfaction of the judgment on an alias execution, and he has been committed on a pluries taken out for the balance. Kimball v. Parker, 7 Metc. (Mass.) 63.

35. Bowne v. Joy, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 221, holding that when two suits are brought upon the same cause of action, and proceed, pari passu, to judgment and execution, a satisfaction of either may be shown in discharge of the other.

The creditor cannot evade the effect of the discharge by continuing the suit from time to time, until the debtor has been discharged, and then taking judgment. Paddleford v. Bancroft, 22 Vt. 529. But see White v. Clapp, 8 Allen (Mass.) 283; Faxon v. Baxter, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 35, which hold that if the debtor neglected to take the necessary steps in court to postpone the action because of pending proceedings in insolvency, and subsequently a discharge was granted after judgment had been rendered, he could not be relieved by audita querela.

Where a debtor, imprisoned under an execution, was admitted to the liberties of the prison, and subsequently obtained a discharge in bankruptcy, and the creditor refused to discharge him from prison, or consent to his going at large, it was held that the debtor could not maintain audita querela against the creditor to procure his release; but that the debtor and his sureties must take the responsibility of deciding whether or not the discharge was effectual. Gould v. Mathewson, 18 Vt. 65.

39. Gridley v. Harraden, 14 Mass. 497; Daly v. Derringer, 1 Phila. (Pa.) 324, 9 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 46 (where the debt was impounded by plaintiff's creditor by trustee process).

40. As where the sheriff recovered against a hondsman for prisoner's escape, when his sole right to recover arose from liability to the creditor, whose right of recovery was afterward barred by limitation (Hall v. Fitch, 1 Root (Conn.) 151); where action was brought on a foreign judgment, pending an appeal, and the judgment was afterward reversed (Merchants' Ins. Co. v. De Wolf, 33 Pa. St. 45, 75 Am. Dec. 577); where judgment was recovered against bail, and the judgment against his principal was afterward satisfied (1 Bacon Abr. 513); where the execution debtor was enlarged by the consent of the creditor, and afterward taken in execution on the same judgment (Linacres' Case, 2 Leon. 96; Linacers' Case, 1 Leon. 230; 1 Bacon Abr. 513 [citing Rolle Abr. 307]); where two are in execution, and one is suffered to escape, and a recovery is had

4. To Vacate Judgment. A judgment may be vacated by writ of audita querela when defendant had no opportunity to defend the suit because not served with process,[41] or when, though he had due notice of the suit, he was prevented from making his defense by plaintiff's fraud.[42] against the sheriff therefor (Foster v. Jackson, Hob. 71; Alford v. Tatnel, 2 Mod. 49); where, after judgment in trespass against a soldier for forcibly taking property, an act was passed pardoning all acts of hostility and discharging the offenders from all actions and executions on that account (Benson v. Idle, 2 Mod. 37); where, after judgment obtained by an administrator, the administration was repealed (Turner v. Davies, 1 Mod. 62, 2 Saund. 137); where a recovery in debt was had against a jailer upon an escape, and the original judgment was afterward reversed (Appesley v. Ive, Cro. Jac. 645); or where a stranger purchased and paid for a judgment (Malyns v. Hawkins, Cro. Eliz. 634).

The writ will not lie where a corporation had an election of remedies against a defaulting shareholder, and proceeded to take judgment, and after judgment declared his shares to be forfeited, since the corporation having elected to take judgment, the declaration of forfeiture was invalid and did not operate in discharge of the judgment (Giles v. Hutt, 3 Exch. 18, 18 L. J. Exch. 53, 5 R. & Can. Cas. 505); or where an execution debtor is temporarily enlarged by consent of the creditor, under an agreement that he should settle the debt within a specified time, and he fails so to do and is taken into custody again (Little v. Newburyport Bank, 14 Mass. 443). Nor can the writ be maintained by one of two execution debtors, after the escape of the other, before recovery against the sheriff for the escape (Blumfield's Case, 5 Coke 86*b*; 1 Bacon Abr. 513. But see Bloomfield v. Roswick, Cro. Eliz. 555, 573), and the death of one of two in execution is no discharge to the other (Blumfield's Case, 5 Coke 86*b*).

Judgment against a defendant who was without the state at the time suit was brought will be vacated by audita querela when defendant had no notice of the suit, and continued absent until after the return-day (Sawyer v. Cross, 65 Vt. 158, 26 Atl. 528), or when plaintiff failed to give the security by recognizance required by statute, conditioned that he would refund such sum as might be recovered against him on writ of review (Folan v. Folan, 59 Me. 566; Dingman v. Myers, 13 Gray (Mass.) 1; Hill v. Warren, 54 Vt. 73; Harmon v. Martin, 52 Vt. 255; Folsom v. Conner, 49 Vt. 4; Eastman v. Waterman, 26 Vt. 494; Kidder v. Hadley, 25 Vt. 544; Whitney v. Silver, 22 Vt. 634; Alexander v. Abbott, 21 Vt. 476), even though execution has been returned satisfied (Folan v. Folan, 59 Me. 566), or though recognizance for review was given, but for double the amount of the damages only, instead of double the amount of the judgment and costs (Hill v. Warren, 54 Vt. 73).

Judgment by default against a non-resident defendant, not served with process, will be vacated by audita querela if the case was not continued for notice to defendant, as required by statute. Hawley v. Mead, 52 Vt. 343; Rollins v. Clement, 49 Vt. 98.

If the return does not show notice to a resident defendant who was out of the state at time suit was brought, the record must show on its face that the plaintiff proved notice, or proceedings must be had agreeably to Vt. Comp. Stat. §§ 58, 59, or the judgment will be vacated by audita querela. Kidder v. Hadley, 25 Vt. 544; Marvin v. Wilkins, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 107.

Where plaintiff procures a deputized person to make a return that he served a writ on defendant, when in fact defendant received no notice whatever of the suit, a judgment taken by default will be declared null on an audita querela, even though no execution has issued on the judgment. Stone v. Seaver, 5 Vt. 549.

Service on part of defendants.— In an action against three trustees, service was had on an agent of two of the trustees, who were non-residents, but the resident trustee was not personally served and no judgment was taken against him. It was held that audita querela did not lie to set aside the judgment against the others. Hamilton v. Wilder, 31 Vt. 695.

Omission of name of justice signing writ from copy served on defendant does not defeat the effect of the service as notice, and hence a default judgment thereon cannot be avoided by audita querela. Collins v. Merriam, 31 Vt. 622.

When the officer's return shows personal service the writ cannot be maintained to set aside, for want of notice, a judgment by default, the return being conclusive between the parties. Witherell v. Goss, 26 Vt. 748; Hawks v. Baldwin, Brayt. (Vt.) 85.

42. Lovejoy v. Webber, 10 Mass. 101 (where the debtor, after service of the original writ, and before its return, satisfied the creditor's demand, and the creditor nevertheless prosecuted the action to judgment by default); Walter v. Foss, 67 Vt. 591, 32 Atl. 643; Kimball v. Randall, 56 Vt. 558;

III. ISSUE OF WRIT AND ITS EFFECT.

A. Issue — 1. From What Court. The writ issues from a court of law only,[43] and from that one which rendered the judgment or issued the execution complained of;[44] since, in such court, there remains the record of the judgment on which the writ is designed to operate.[45]

2. Time of Making Application. Since the party injured may neither know of a judgment or execution in the former proceeding or the manner of procuring the same until some time after the rendition of the judgment or the issue of the execution, it has been held that he is not limited to a specific time within which he must sue out his writ.[46]

3. Parties — a. In General. An audita querela, being a judicial writ, must be between the parties to the former proceeding and their legal representatives only.[47]

b. Plaintiff. With respect to the parties plaintiff in audita querela it is held that the person suing out the writ must be one injured in the former proceeding,[48]

Weeks v. Lawrence, 1 Vt. 433; Eddy v. Cochran, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 359; Staniford v. Barry, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 321, 15 Am. Dec. 692; Stamp v. Parker, Cro. Jac. 646; 1 Bacon Abr. 510.

Where plaintiff obtains judgment by default in a suit discontinued, either by acts of the parties or by operation of law for irregularity, the writ will lie. Perkins v. Cooper, 28 Vt. 729; Paddleford v. Bancroft, 22 Vt. 529; Hinman v. Swift, 18 Vt. 315; Pike v. Hill, 15 Vt. 183; Crawford v. Cheney, 12 Vt. 567; Phelps v. Birge, 11 Vt. 161. But in Aldrich v. Bonett, 33 Vt. 202, the doctrine of Paddleford v. Bancroft, 22 Vt. 529, was limited to a case where the discontinuance was irregularly had for the purpose of depriving the opposite party of a defense he would have enjoyed if judgment had been entered at the proper time.

43. Garfield v. State University, 10 Vt. 536. But see Gleason v. Peck, 12 Vt. 56, 36 Am. Dec. 329; Peters v. White, 2 Show. 238.

C. 140; Ross v. Shurtleff, 55 Vt. 177; Shumway v. Sargeant, 27 Vt. 440; Poultney v. State Treasurer, 25 Vt. 168; Warner v. Crane, 16 Vt. 79; Gleason v. Peck, 12 Vt. 56, 36 Am. Dec. 329.

An original jurisdiction of all civil actions given by statute to one court does not confer upon it power to grant a writ of audita querela to affect a judgment or execution of another court. Ross v. Shurtleff, 55 Vt. 177; Warner v. Crane, 16 Vt. 79.

45. Warner v. Crane, 16 Vt. 79.

An extent issued, for the collection of taxes, by the state treasurer is not reviewable under an audita querela. Poultney v. State Treasurer, 25 Vt. 168. So, in Georgia, an execution issued by the comptroller-general of the state and not from a court is not the subject of relief under the proceeding by illegality. Manning v. Phillips, 65 Ga. 548.

46. Stone v. Seaver, 5 Vt. 549, holding that, where a statute of limitations does not name a writ of audita querela, the statute cannot with propriety be extended without doing violence to the spirit of the law permitting the remedy.

47. Herrick v. Orange County Bank, 27 Vt. 584; Gleason v. Peck, 12 Vt. 56, 36 Am. Dec. 329.

Misjoinder of parties.—Although authorized by statute, audita querela is governed by the common law as to misjoinder of parties. Johnson v. Plimpton, 30 Vt. 420. As to demurrer for misjoinder or non-joinder see infra, VI, B.

A judgment creditor, who had nothing to do with the enforcement of the judgment against the debtor by its assignee, and who has received nothing thereunder, is not a proper party to an audita querela to recover the amount paid under the judgment. Radclyffe v. Barton, 161 Mass. 327, 37 N. E. 373.

An officer who permits an execution debtor to escape, and afterward rearrests and imprisons him on the same execution, is not a proper party defendant to an audita querela brought to recover damages for false imprisonment. Coffin v. Ewer, 5 Metc. (Mass.) 228.

Husband and wife.— A husband is properly joined with his wife where the proceeding complained of was occasioned by a feme sole, and the audita querela is brought after the marriage. 1 Bacon Abr. 511.

Subsequently attaching creditors.—A subsequently attaching creditor may not use the name of his debtor to prosecute an audita querela to affect a judgment or levy of a prior attaching creditor, even though the subsequent creditor is authorized by statute, if he wishes to contest the validity of the debt or claim on which a prior attachment is based, to appear and defend the suit. Essex Min. Co. v. Bullard, 43 Vt. 238.

48. 2 Wms. Saund. 148, note 1 [citing Blakeston v. Martyn, W. Jones 90].

Trustee process.— A trustee is so far a party to a judgment rendered in trustee process that he may seek redress by audita and a defendant therein.[49] Where there was more than one defendant in the original proceeding and a joint judgment rendered affecting all of them, the writ must be sued out in the name of all,[50] unless the judgment complained of is admitted to be good as to some, in which case it has been held that the writ may be brought in the name of the defendant for whose benefit the proceeding is instituted;[51] or, unless the object is to obtain relief against an execution affecting only one defendant.[52]

c. Defendant. All persons benefited by the judgment or execution complained of, if parties thereto, or the legal representatives of such persons, should be made parties defendant to an audita querela.[53]

4. Motion. A writ of audita querela can be awarded only in open court upon motion or petition,[54] setting forth the grounds of relief with such certainty as would be good on demurrer,[55] and this should, in some cases, be supported by an affidavit as to the truth of the facts set forth.[56]

5. Security For Costs. Plaintiff must give security for costs in those cases where such security would be required in ordinary actions[57] and the security must be of such a nature as to secure redelivery of the body or estate where either of them have been taken in execution,[58] and payment of intervening damages.[59]

B. Effect.[60] The issue of the writ does not of itself operate as a supersedeas, which may be granted or not, according to the requirements of justice.[61]

IV. FORM, REQUISITES, AND NATURE OF WRIT, AND PROCESS THEREON.

A. Form and Requisites. The writ should, after setting out the matter of complaint, require the parties to be called before the court in order that, upon a hearing, justice may be administered.[62]

B. Nature. The writ is sometimes regarded as judicial,[63] and sometimes original.[64]

C. Process. Process may be either in the form of a scire facias or a venire facias,[65] and must be served upon all who are named as defendants.[66]

Omission of statutory requirement.— A writ of audita querela will not be permitted to operate as a supersedeas, if a material condition required in a statutory recognizance be omitted. State Treasurer v. Wells, 27 Vt. 276.

Prerequisites to operation as supersedeas. — Under the Vermont statute of 1809 (Vt. Rev. Laws, § 1657), an audita querela cannot operate as a supersedeas until sworn to, and having a judge's certificate that it ought so to operate, or until legal service has been had. Clark v. National Hydraulic Co., 12 Vt. 435.

Proof of the facts upon which writ is grounded must be made in court before a supersedeas is granted. Wall v. Dukes, 12 Mod. 105; Langston v. Grant, 1 Salk. 92.

V. APPEARANCE.

Defendant in audita querela must, of course, enter an appearance as in other cases.[67]

VI. PLEADINGS.

A. Declaration — 1. In General. The declaration should either set out the whole record of the recovery in the former proceeding, or recite it generally.[68] A good cause of action should be stated,[69] and the grounds of defense to the judgment or execution complained of set forth,[70] with an averment that such grounds existed at the time, or before, the writ was sued out.[71] Moreover, although the writ may comprehend several causes for avoidance of the proceeding complained of, the declaration should comprehend but one cause, or, if it alleges several, plaintiff must rely upon one only, or the declaration will be bad for duplicity.[72]

2. Particular Averments — a. Fraud and Deceit. An allegation of fraud and deceit seems to be necessary.[73]

b. Ground of Objection. The ground of objection to the proceeding attacked must be specifically averred.[74]

67. Edwards v. Lewis, 16 Ala. 813; Com. v. Berger, 8 Phila. (Pa.) 237.

Judgment by default for want of appearance is not proper, but plaintiff may enter a common appearance for defendant, who may then be ruled to plead as in other cases. Com. v. Berger, 8 Phila. (Pa.) 237. In the English practice the remedy for non-appearance of the defendant was by distress infinite. Com. v. Berger, 8 Phila. (Pa.) 237 [citing Clerk v. Moor, 1 Salk. 92].

68. For forms of declaration see Staniford v. Barry, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 321, 15 Am. Dec. 692; Lampton v. Collingwood, 1 Ld. Raym. 27, 3 Ld. Raym. 327; Turner v. Davies, 2 Saund. 137.

69. King v. Jeffrey, 77 Me. 106; Schott v. McFarland, 1 Phila. (Pa.) 53, 7 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 58; Alburgh Eleventh School Dist. v. Rood, 27 Vt. 214; Perry v. Ward, 18 Vt. 120, 20 Vt. 92; Spear v. Flint, 17 Vt. 497; Finney v. Hill, 13 Vt. 255; Potter v. Hodges, 13 Vt. 239; Jenney v. Glynn, 12 Vt. 480; Sheldon v. Kelseys, Brayt. (Vt.) 26; Blomfield v. Roswick, Cro. Eliz. 555; Puttenham v. Puttenham, Dyer 297*a*.

Sufficient declarations.— In an audita querela to avoid an execution for payment of the judgment, a surmise that the entire sum has been paid is sufficient. It is not necessary to surmise any writing to evidence the payment. Ognel v. Randol, Cro. Jac. 29. A complaint in audita querela by one in close jail need not allege that the jailer refused to release him, as the jailer has no discretion in the matter, and is bound to keep him until he is discharged by the creditor or by operation of law. Comstock v. Grout, 17 Vt. 512. Where a declaration in covenant in an action before a justice of the peace shows that it concerns the title to land, and by statute a justice has no jurisdiction to entertain such an action, a writ of audita querela, brought to set aside a judgment rendered by default, setting out the declaration in hæc verba, was, on demurrer, held sufficient, although it contained no express or formal averment that the action in which the judgment was rendered concerned the title to land. Hastings v. Webber, 2 Vt. 407.

70. Edwards v. Lewis, 16 Ala. 813; Oakes v. Eden School Dist. No. 9, 33 Vt. 155; Stone v. Seaver, 5 Vt. 549.

The grounds averred must not be such as plaintiff might have pleaded as a defense to the former proceeding. Flint v. Sheldon, 13 Mass. 443, 7 Am. Dec. 162; Lovejoy v. Webber, 10 Mass. 101.

A good defense to the original action need not be averred. Eddy v. Cochran, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 359.

71. Alford v. Tatnell, 1 Mod. 170.

72. Forrest v. Ballard, Cro. Eliz. 809; Puttenham v. Puttenham, Dyer 297*a*.

73. Lovejoy v. Webber, 10 Mass. 101; Walter v. Foss, 67 Vt. 591, 32 Atl. 643.

Sufficient averments.—An averment that complainant, believing that the original suit would not be entered in court, did not attend to defend it, and that thereupon defendant fraudulently procured judgment by default, was held, after verdict in the audita querela, equivalent to an allegation that complainant absented himself from the trial under the expectation and confidence that the suit was to be discontinued, and that defendant, knowing that he acted upon that confidence, procured judgment by default. Perkins v. Cooper, 28 Vt. 729. So fraud and deceit are sufficiently averred where the declaration alleges that defendant caused a return to be made on the writ in the original suit that a copy was left with complainant when defendant knew no such copy was left and that complainant had no knowledge of the suit, and that judgment by default was taken after such return. Stone v. Seaver, 5 Vt. 549.

74. Oakes v. Eden School Dist. No. 9, 33 Vt. 155, holding that, in the absence of such

c. Tender. Where a tender of the sum due defendant upon the execution complained of is alleged as a ground of relief, it is not sufficient to allege the bare fact of tender, but a readiness to pay must appear affirmatively by the declaration.[75]

d. Prayer For Relief. Specific or general relief for the act complained of should be prayed or indicated in the declaration.[76]

3. Amendments. A declaration in an audita querela may in a proper case be amended.[77]

B. Demurrer. A demurrer is proper where the matter alleged as the cause of complaint might have been pleaded in bar of the original action,[78] where plaintiff's remedy is not by audita querela, but by some other form of proceeding,[79] where there is a want of necessary parties,[80] or where the declaration fails generally to show a good cause of action.[81]

C. Motion to Dismiss. Defendant may move to dismiss the action where plaintiff procures too late an amendment to his writ,[82] when the court has no jurisdiction to entertain the writ,[83] when no security for costs is taken,[84] when process is not served on all the defendants,[85] or where there is an improper joinder of plaintiffs.[86]

D. Answer or Plea — 1. In Abatement. A plea in abatement, or motion to that effect, is proper where the writ is not served upon all the defendants,[87] or where proper security is not taken.[88]

2. In Bar. Defendant may plead in bar,[89] and several matters may be pleaded.[90] an averment, plaintiff can introduce no evidence as to the objection.

76. Clough v. Brown, 38 Vt. 179. See also Stone v. Seaver, 5 Vt. 549.

Sufficient claim for damages.—In an audita querela to vacate a judgment on which execution has issued and been satisfied, an allegation in these words: "By all which the said complainant, as he says, is greatly injured and aggrieved, and has suffered damage the sum of one hundred dollars," is a sufficient claim for damages; and complainant under such allegation may recover the amount collected from him by virtue of the execution. Alexander v. Abbott, 21 Vt. 476.

A declaration deficient only in matter alleged in aggravation of damages is sufficient. Hyott v. Hoxton, Cro. Car. 153.

77. Stone v. Chamberlain, 7 Gray (Mass.) 206, holding where the writ was described in the declaration as "an action of tort" that an amendment was proper.

Where object is to set aside judgment of justice of peace.—Where the declaration in an action before a justice of the peace clearly shows the jurisdiction of the justice, the action is not appealable on its face, and under the Vermont statutes a demurrer to a declaration in audita querela should be sustained on the ground that it is not a proper remedy. The outlawry of plaintiff may be pleaded in disability. Griffith v. Middleton, Cro. Jac. 425.

Where a special plea is insufficient a demurrer to the plea is proper. Godfrey v. Downer, 47 Vt. 599; Hinman v. Swift, 18 Vt. 315; Phelps v. Birge, 11 Vt. 161.

90. Giles v. Hutt, 5 Dowl. & L. 387, 1 Exch. 701, 17 L. J. Exch. 121.

No one plea, however, may be double,[91] nor must any special plea amount to the general issue.[92]

VII. TRIAL.

A. Mode of. Where an issue of fact is presented, either party may demand trial by jury unless it can be tried by the record, or the parties may agree to submit the issues of fact to the court alone for trial.[93]

B. Evidence — 1. In General. The regular rules of evidence are applicable. Accordingly where witnesses are introduced to sustain the issue by either party, the other may cross-examine such witnesses.[94]

2. Presumptions and Burden of Proof. Plaintiff must, where the record of the former proceedings is produced, prove their irregularity, the presumption being that all things were rightly done.[95]

3. Admissibility and Sufficiency — a. In General. Under the general issue, evidence may be given of a former judgment in audita querela on the same cause of action.[96] Pleadings in the action in which the judgment complained of was rendered are admissible to prove that the issues in the audita querela were involved in the former proceeding.[97] Plaintiff must confine his proof to the grounds for avoiding the judgment or execution complained of alleged in his declaration.[98]

b. Parol Evidence. Parol evidence is admissible to show that the proceedings and judgment complained of are invalid and ineffectual against plaintiff, notwithstanding the record is sufficient on its face, the whole object of the audita being to question, invalidate, and annul the record.[99]

C. Instructions. The jury must be duly instructed as to the burden of proof, but where a particular instruction is requested an instruction substantially complying with the request and expressed in such terms as not to mislead the jury is sufficient.[1]

D. Discontinuance and Nonsuit. Where there are two or more plaintiffs either of them may release or discharge the suit without the concurrence of the other.[2]

VIII. JUDGMENT, COSTS, AND REVIEW.

A. Judgment — 1. In General. If plaintiff is successful, the judgment may be simply that the judgment or execution, or both, be vacated,[3] or for damages also, as the case may require.[4] When defendant is successful, there is simply a "judgment for the defendant," and the court cannot order further proceedings in the former action.[5]

The practice has sometimes been different, as by traversing some decisive fact in the complaint, or by a general and express denial of all the facts alleged."

2. Effect of. The judgment is conclusive only as between the parties and their privies,[6] but is not conclusive as to matters not directly involved in the decision.[7]

3. Proceedings After Judgment. Defendant cannot move in arrest of judgment, although he may move for a new trial;[8] and a verdict will not be set aside, on motion, for insufficiency of the complaint.[9]

B. Costs. Costs are recovered by the successful party.[10]

C. Review. The proceedings under the writ may be reviewed by appeal,[11] or writ of error.[12]

When an execution is vacated, plaintiff may recover an amount collected on execution. Alexander v. Abbott, 21 Vt. 476; Anonymous, 12 Mod. 598.

When the record in the former proceeding shows there was no pleading on an audita querela brought to set the judgment aside, and the only record of the proceedings on the audita querela is, "Judgment that the plea of defendant is insufficient and that the plaintiff take no costs," a subsequent judgment rendered is erroneous and void because the original judgment was never reversed. Catlin v. Jewell, Brayt. (Vt.) 28.

Audita querela may affect former judgment.—Where, after a judgment for damages and costs, plaintiff released to defendant who then brought error, the judgment being affirmed with additional costs, and defendant taken in execution for the whole, an audita querela was sued out and a judgment therein that plaintiff in the audita should be relieved as to the damages and first costs, but not as to costs incurred after the release, was sustained. Child v. Durrant, Cro. Jac. 337. But see Thatcher v. Gammon, 12 Mass. 267; Higden v. Whitechurch, 1 Mod. 224, which hold that an audita querela cannot affect in any way the former judgment.

IX. LIABILITY ON BOND OR RECOGNIZANCE.

A. In General. No recovery can be had on plaintiff's bond or recognizance for costs when the court in which the audita querela was brought had no jurisdiction;[13] where, however, the court had jurisdiction a breach of condition of the bond creates a liability in accordance with the condition.[14] The liability of the principal is personal where the basis of the audita querela is personal, and in such case an executor or administrator of a decedent principal is not liable.[15]

B. Action. Debt lies on a recognizance taken on the issue of an audita querela, even though the recognizance is not returned into court,[16] the record of recognizance being conclusive evidence in an action thereon that it was entered with the consent of defendant.[17]

2. State v. Hastings, 10 Wis. 525, 530 [citing Bouvier L. Dict.; Burrill L. Dict.], wherein the court said: "As used in our constitution it signifies an officer whose business is to examine and certify accounts and claims against the state, and to keep an account between the state and its treasurer. Since the ratification of that instrument such has been the commonly accepted and uniform legislative interpretation of the word." See also State v. Brown, 10 Oreg. 215, 223 [quoting Abbott L. Dict.; Burrill L. Dict.].

"Originally it meant an officer of the king, whose duty it was, at stated periods of the year, to examine the accounts of inferior officers and certify to their correctness (Blount's Dictionary of 1681; Cotgrove's Dictionary of 1632; Rastall's Termes de la Ley; Defoe's English Dictionary of 1732), and was afterwards used to designate those officers of the Court of Exchequer whose duty, according to Coke, was to take the accounts of the receivers of the king's revenue and 'audit and perfect them,' without, however, putting in any changes, their office being only to audit the accounts — that is, ascertain their correctness (4 Coke's Inst. 107)." People v. Green, 5 Daly (N. Y.) 194, 200.

Synonym of "controller." — "In the constitution and statutes of the states of this Union, the words 'auditor' and 'controller' are synonymous." State v. Doron, 5 Nev. 399, 413.
