BY ORDER OF CHIEF OF GENERAL GROUP:

Yamazu Zen-e

YAMAZU, ZEN-E
Superintendent 1st Class
Chief, General Affairs Section

1. In order to clarify the command relationship of Camp and Unit Commanders, the following decisions, to be regarded as directive in nature, are published for the guidance of all concerned:

a. The commanding officer of the senior line unit in each camp will be appointed the camp commander in addition to his duties as unit commander. The exception to this principle will be in those instances where the camp is primarily a Service Group installation and a line unit junior to the senior service group may be present. In that case the Commanding Officer of the senior service group unit will be appointed the Camp Commander. The foregoing does not apply to camps in an exempted status such as Camp McKnight or Camp Kurihama. Command relationships at such camps will be clarified in other instructions. Line units will be understood to mean Ordinary and Special Units and Engineer Units of the ordinary r gion.

b. The Camp Commander will command all units at his camp subject to the limitations imposed in paragraph 1c below.

c. There will be attached to the senior line unit at the camp all other units stationed at the camp. This attachment will be for all purposes except training, which will remain a responsibility of the parent unit, and technical operations of Service Group units which will come under the supervision of the senior headquarters of the technical services concerned. In the case of service support units organic to a region or regiment, the same principle will apply. //Disposition of matters relating to appointments, assignments, temporary retirements, retirements, dismissal, and disciplinary actions will be in accordance with appropriate NPR regulations// For Service Group Units attachments will be accomplished by attaching units of the same technical service to the senior of such units and then attaching this senior technical service unit to the senior line unit at the camp. At servic group installations, established or to be established, where the Camp Commander is the commanding officer of the senior Service Group unit in the camp, the same principle of attachments will be followed. For purposes of fixing responsibility for training of Service Group units, the senior headquarters in each technical service will be considered to be the parent unit of that technical service. Parent unit, as the term is used here, for each type of service unit is shown in inclosure 1. Final responsibility for the training of all Service Group units rests with Service Group Headquarters.

d. In those instances where the senior line unit at a camp is a battalion, the battalion will not be detached from its parent unit but will come under the command of the parent unit on all matters. As camp commander the commanding officer of the battalion in such instances will issue necessary orders for the operation of the camp.

2. Detailed responsibilities of Camp Commanders will be covered in separate communications.

3. The command relationship at Camp Hakodate will be the subject of a separate communication.

Remarks:

Supt Matsumoto advised me yesterday (2 May) that GGHq wanted to reserve to regimental commanders all authority pertaining to appointments and assignments and punishment, in addition to training, in those instances where a battalion was detached from its parent unit and attached to another unit.

I did not give Supt Matsumoto an answer on this but told him I would refer the matter to you since I knew you were discussing this problem with Supt Hayashi.

Incls:

2. Report Form

RESTRICTED

Examination for Translators

Procedure to be followed:

All personnel will be given a maximum of two hours in which to translate the following paragraphs from English into Japanese. Use of dictionaries is permitted.

1. An outguard is a small group posted by an outpost to delay and disorganize the opponent and give warning of his approach. An outguard may vary in size from a half squad to a platoon with supporting weapons. Outguards organize defense areas permitting observation and long fields of fire. Each outguard organizes its position on a normal frontage so as not to sacrifice control. Fox holes are dug, the position is camouflaged, and routes of withdrawal are selected. Security for the outguard is obtained through the use of sentinel posts, listening posts, and patrols. As soon as desirable targets appear, outguards inflict maximum losses on the hostile force by long-range fire. Normally, outguards withdraw before engaging in close operations on orders of the outpost commander according to prearranged plans.

2. RESERVE OF DELAYING FORCE. In addition to accomplishing appropriate missions of a reserve within a position, the reserve of a delaying force forms the covering force in a daylight withdrawal. The mission of the delaying force determines the strength of the reserve. If mission is to hold the line of resistance for a given period of time, the reserve may be as large as a company reinforced. In this case, the reserve or a portion of the reserve may be held mobile to reinforce any threatened area. If the mission is to delay the advance of thenhostile force, the reserve may be smaller than a company.

3. DISPOSITION OF SUPPORT PLATOON. a. The primary mission of the support platoon is to support the front-line platoons by fire. The terrain seldom permits the support platoon to fire in front of the front-line platoons. Therefore, this fire support consists of firing in the gaps between frontline platoons, within forward areas in case they are overrun, and to the flanks and rear of the company defense area. This platoon also is assigned the mission of extending in depth in defense of the company area and protecting the flanks and rear of the company area. Exceptionally, it is assigned the mission of ejecting the hostile force from their position.

4. PIERS. a. General. A pier is a support that requires no external bracing for stability. They are used where great strength is required. Timber piers may be of trestle, pile, or crib construction. The type of pier to be used depends on the soil and stream conditions at the site. Trestle piers are used where water is shallow, bottom fairly firm and even, and scouring action small. Pile piers are used where stream bottom is soft and uneven, current swift, or water deep. If the current is swift, it may be necessary to protect the piers against scour by use of large stones or riprap; rolls of chicken wire filled with stone may also be used. Crib piers may be adapted to many sites but require much timber and labor to erect.

5. BRINGING PATIENT TO TABLE. A patient is brought to the operating section on a wheeled litter or in his own bed. Depending upon his state of consciousness, he is lifted or helped onto the operating table. Patients are routinely given preoperative sedatives to reduce their apprehension and to make induction of anesthesia easier. Some may be unconscious because of head injuries or other conditions, or if the anesthesia has been started in the induction room, those who have been given a spinal anesthetic have no use of their legs, so that care must be used in moving them from litter to operating table.
