PREFACE.

A DICTIONARY, Hindustani and English, accompanied by a reverse part, English and Hindustani, has hitherto been a desideratum in this country. It must be obvious that it is indispensable to a student of a foreign language, desirous of speaking and writing, as well as reading it, that he should have not only the words of that foreign language explained in his own, but the words of his own tongue rendered into that foreign language; and that a Dictionary, intended to assist in the study of both languages, which wants either counterpart, is essential to the teaching of Hindustani, which After more than twenty years, added to the exorbitant prices charged for Hindustani Dictionaries, has greatly impeded learners, I have endeavoured to remove this impediment by compiling a Dictionary of the principal colloquial language of India at once copious, portable, and of moderate price. These objects have been attained, without any real sacrifice, by using a small, clear and distinct letter-press; by employing the Roman character wherever it answered the purpose better than the Oriental; and by excluding every thing not practically useful, and which is therefore an incumbrance, to the learner. By these means I have been enabled to compress into a small volume, of convenient dimensions, both parts of the Dictionary, including, at the same time, not only more words, but more information really useful to the student, than will be found in any Dictionary of the language hitherto published.

It is proper, and will be expected, that I should give a brief account of the authorities to which I am indebted for the materials of this Dictionary, and of the mode in which I have compiled both its parts. The basis of the first part is the "Dictionary, Hindoostanee and English," in 2 vols. 4to., published by William Hunter, M.D., Calcutta, 1808. Upon this foundation I have superadded at least fifteen thousand words and phrases from the following sources: 1st. A vast number of useful words, both Urdū and Hindī, from the eccentric, but copious vocabulary appended to Dr. Gilchrist's "Hindee Moral Preceptor," 8vo. London, 1821. 2nd. All the useful words and phrases occurring in Gladwin's "Dictionary of Mahomedan Law and Bengal Revenue Terms," 4to., Calcutta, 1797. 3rd. A great number of new words from "A Glossary of Hindoo Terms," 8vo., Agra, 1845, by H. M. Elliot, Esq., Bengal Civil Service. 4th. Many Persian and Arabic words, occurring in Hindustani, from Professor Johnson's edition of Richardson's "Persian and Arabic Dictionary," 4to., London, 1829. 5th. Several thousands of Hindī words from Dr. Adam's "Hindī Dictionary," 2nd edition, 8vo., Calcutta. 6th. From the Vocabulary acco-panying the "Prem Sāgar," 4to., Calcutta, 1825, I have extracted all such words as were not found in Hunter's Dictionary. 7th. From Thomson's "Hindī and English Dictionary," royal 8vo., Delhi, 1846, I have culled many pure Hindī or Sanskrit-words not to be found in any of the sources above mentioned. 8th. I have inserted in their proper places all the words occurring in the Appendix to the "Dakṣiṇī Unwari Soheilee," printed at Madras, 1824; also many words from the "Qanoon e islam," by Dr. Herklots, London, 1832. To the materials collected from all these sources I have added numerous words, phrases, and significations that I have met with during a long course of experience in teaching the language.

PREFACE.

There is in the India-House Library "A Dictionary, English and Hindostany," by a Dr. Harris, printed at Madras in 1790. Of this work I have not availed myself, simply because I did not wish to extend the size of the volume by the insertion of words of very questionable utility, more especially as the text-books in which the Company's servants in Madras are examined are the same as in the other presidencies; viz. the Bāgh o Bahār, Ikhwānu-ṣ-ṣafā, Akhlāki Hindī, and Gulī Bakāwali. In fact, the military language of the Deccan differs, so far as I can perceive, in only a few trifling peculiarities from that of the north: the first is in the optional use of the particle ne in certain tenses of a transitive verb; the second is the addition of a termination ānī to masculine nouns in the nominative plural, which is a decided improvement worthy of imitation. I may add a third, which consists in a very free use of English military terms, as may be seen in a valuable work, London, 1847.

In the way of retrenchment, I have rejected from Hunter's work all quotations from the poets, which merely served to increase the bulk of the volume, without benefiting the student. I have also excluded the parenthetical clauses denoting the derivations of Arabic and Sanskrit words, given by Hunter. To those who know any thing of Arabic and Sanskrit, such derivations will appear superfluous; to those who do not, they are useless and perplexing. An etymological dictionary of the language would no doubt be valuable if properly executed; but in the case of this language the derivation and affinity of every word in the language ought to be ascertained. Hunter and his followers have not attempted to throw the least light upon those words which form the substratum of the language—I mean such as are not traceable to Arabic, Persian, or Sanskrit.

I have been enabled to save a vast deal of space by making a free and legitimate use of the Roman character, according to a fixed system—that of Sir William Jones. The economy of this plan will be seen at once by a reference to the word انکھ ānkh, "the eye," where I have in one column given as much matter as the large works furnish in four or five, by rejecting the oriental type, which is not only a saving of room in itself, but has enabled me to use a much smaller Roman type after the first line of every article. The use of the Roman character alone in all phrases and compounds, &c. originating from the leading word (as, for example, under انکھ), is as little likely to cause error as if the Persian character accompanied it throughout. Every main letter has its corresponding symbol in the Persian and Devanāgarī characters; hence there can be no difficulty or uncertainty in converting any one of the three characters into either of the others. If the reader has the least doubt on this score, he has merely to cast his eye over the following tables.

PREFACE.

1st. A Table shewing the correspondence of the vowels in the Persian, Roman, and Devanāgarī characters :—

VOWELS.			INITIAL.			NON-INITIAL.

ايِ	i	ई	ايکھ	ikh	ईख	سي	si	सी
ايِ	ai	ऐ	ايسا	aisā	ऐसा	هي	hai	है

Let it be remembered that in all Oriental words a is to be sounded short, as in "happy," "America;"—i, short, as in "fit," "fin;"—u, short, as in "put," "push;"—ā, long, as in "war," "water;"—o, long, as in "pole," "mole;"—ū, long, as in "rule;"—au, like our ou in "sound," or the German au in "haus," a house;—e, like our ea in "bear," or the French e in "bête," "tête;"—ī, long, as in the words "police," "machine;" and —ai, like our i in "fire," "fine," or the German ai in "Kaisar," a Cæsar or emperor. The anomalous Sanskrit vowel ri is expressed in the Persian character merely by ر (re with a kasra) and in the Roman character by ri, sounded as ri in "rill," "rip," &c. The Arabic termination ي is represented in the Roman character by a or ā, according as its sound is short or long.

The Arabic consonant ع is represented in the Roman character by an apostrophe, thus, بعد ba'd. This can never lead into error, as the apostrophe is never used (in the Oriental words) for any other purpose. The symbol hamza of the Persian character is indicated by the mark , or , at the bottom of the line, and the imperceptible h at the end of Persian words is represented by the short vowel a, as may be seen in the word فَايِدَة fā,ida (or in the small type fū,ida). The nasal sound of the letter ن is indicated in the Roman character by n, and in Devanāgarī by the mark ' above the letter with which it is connected: thus, وھان wahān वहां "there;" هانسنه hānsnā हंसा "to laugh." The terminations an, in, and un, denote the Arabic nūnation, and the w denotes the Persian و which in some words is not sounded, as in khwāh, خواہ; lastly, the u indicates the short sound of و in a few Persian words, as khud.

بر	بيد	بيد	بون	بون	ب
brīd	bed	baid	bod	baud	ba

It may be here observed, that the Devanāgarī letter ड has sometimes the sound of a cerebral r; in which case it is generally marked with a dot beneath, thus ड़, and corresponds with ر or ر in the Persian character; as, बड़ा barā, "great," بڑا; and in like manner ढ with a dot beneath becomes ढ़, as in बुढ़ापा "old age," بڑھاپا burhāpā. The various nasals of the Devanāgarī are represented in the Persian character by the letter ن, which will be found sufficient for all useful purposes. The letter य is sometimes represented by چ; the letter श generally by ش, sometimes by س; and the letter ष is more frequently ش than ک. The compound च is generally represented by چھ or क्ह, seldom by کش ksh, its proper sound. The compound ज्ञ is represented by گي; as, अज्ञा āgyā (ājna), آگيا; its real sound is that of gn in the French words champagne, ligne, &c.

It appears, then, that the Devanāgarī alphabet may be represented with tolerable exactness in the Persian character; but the converse does not hold, as the Persi-Arabic alphabet has fourteen letters which have no exact counterpart in the Devanāgarī. The plan adopted in this case is to represent the letters in question by such Nāgarī letters as approximate to them in sound, which in printed books are generally distinguished with a dot underneath; thus,

ق	ف	غ	ع	ظ	ط	ض	ص	ژ	ز	ذ	خ	ح	ث
क़	फ़	ग़	अ &c.	ज़	त़	ज़	स़	ज़	ज़	ज़	ख़	ह़	स़

In some printed books, for instance in Dr. Gilchrist's "Hindee Story-teller," an attempt has been made to form distinct letters for the various forms of the Persian and Arabic z, which, it will be observed, are all represented by ज़; but in reality the object is not worth the labour. In the first place, the Hindūs, who alone use the Devanāgarī character, are sparing in the use of Persian or Arabic words, to one or other of which the various forms of the letter z belong; and, secondly, such words as they have in the course of centuries adopted have become naturalized, or rather corrupted, so as to suit the elements of the Nāgarī; thus, حاصري is generally written and sounded हाजिरी hājiri. The letter ع is generally represented in Nāgarī by employing the vowel with which it is connected, in the initial form, with a dot under it; as, بعد ba'd; علم ilm; عمر umr. This method is sufficient for practical use; but it is by no means satisfactory, as may be seen in the monosyllable बाद, which in Persian and Arabic is sounded ba'd. (the a uttered from the bottom of the throat); but according to the rules of the Devanāgarī alphabet it makes bā'ād. In fact, the Hindūs seem to view the letter ε as a vowel, and not as a consonant, which it really is.

In the compilation of the second part, my principal authority is Dr. Gilchrist's "Dictionary, English and Hindoostanee," 2 vols. 4to. with Appendices, Calcutta, 1787, reprinted, &c. Edinburgh, 1810, in one volume, 4to. The merits of this work have been amply appreciated by Hindustani scholars for more than half a century. The first orientalist of the present day speaks of it as "a work of great merit and labour: the collection of Hindustani synonyma for every word is singularly full, and peculiarly adapted to a language which, varying in the use of words, though not in structure, in every provincé, abounds with synonymous terms, each of local and restricted employment. The whole (edition 1810) is in the Roman character, a singularity in its compilation which alone is indicative of no ordinary industry and perseverance." Such being the case, I have as a general rule availed myself of all the words occurring in Dr. Gilchrist's Dictionary, subject, however, to a strict course of correction. In Dr. Gilchrist's early days, the Hindustani language was in a manner unformed, and its orthography unsettled; hence, in a multitude of words he gives the long ū (oo) instead of the short u, and vice versa. I have throughout endeavoured to follow as my guides on this head the standard writers of the language, such as Mir Anmān, in the "Bāgh o Bahār;" Ikrām 'Alī, in the "Ikhwānu-ṣ-ṣafa," &c. &c. To the very copious collection furnished by Dr. Gilchrist, I have added several thousands of Persian and Arabic words (known to be used in Urdū) from the "Dictionary, English, Persian, and Arabic," by Dr. Wilkins, London, 1810, 4to. From Adam's "Dictionary, English and Hinduwee," I have extracted many pure Hindī words which escaped the notice of Dr. Gilchrist. I have also found many useful words and phrases in the "Dictionary, English, Bāngālī, and Hindūstānī," of P. S. D' Rozario, Calcutta, 1837, 8vo. Lastly, I have added numerous synonymous and expressive words and phrases which my own experience has supplied.

It will probably be thought that the second part of this Dictionary errs on the side of excess; but I have deemed it the safer course to run the risk of inserting a superfluous or even a vulgar word, rather than omit one that could by possibility occur in writing or conversation. It must be recollected that the Hindustani is, in more senses than one, a vulgar tongue, and that it abounds in a class of words, for the eschewing of which the great Dr. Johnson is said to have been once complimented by a certain elderly lady. I have excluded many such words; and if it be found that I have still retained too many, my humble excuse is, that the people of India speak and write more plainly than modern Europeans.

In Part First, compound words are generally to be found under the first or leading member of the compound; at the same time, it is proper to observe that the Hindustani language is capable of admitting or forming thousands of compounds not to be found in any dictionary; hence, the learner should bear in mind the more general rules of composition, as laid down in any good grammar of the language. The same remark applies with regard to the rules for derivation, particularly those relating to the formation of causal verbs and abstract nouns.

The few contractions used throughout the work are the following: The letters a, p, s, at the end of many definitions, denote that the word is from the Arabic, Persian, or Sanskrit, respectively. The letter h distinguishes such words as are aboriginal or purely Indian; and d such as are peculiar to the Deccan (dakhān); the few-words marked t and g are of Tartarian and Greek origin respectively. The other contractions are, m. denoting the masculine gender; f. feminine; a. an active or transitive verb; and n. a verb neuter. The letter v. imports vide, and pl. the plural number.

In Part Second, and occasionally in Part First, the following contractions are used in the formation of compound verbs: k, for karnā, "to make;" h, for honā, "to be, to become;" j, for jānā, "to go, to be;" r, for rakhnā, "to keep, to have;" d, for denā, "to give;" l, for lenā, "to take;" ḍ, for ḍālnā, "to throw;" and b, for bāndhnā, "to bind." These, with the exception of the first two, are chiefly used in the formation of intensives, and consequently they have then laid aside their own primitive signification. As a general rule, compound words have their parts or members separated by a hyphen, thus, dil-nishīn, tan-durust, sar-gardān, &c. Such compounds, when transferred into the Oriental characters, are optionally written entire as one word, or distinct as two. The short i, denoting the Persian izāfat, is indifferently written either as the last letter of the governing word, or separately between the two words, as dardi sar or dard i sar, the sense being abundantly obvious either way, as no Persian word ends in the short i except it be in a state of construction with that which follows.

I have avoided cross references, which are very embarrassing to the learner, retaining only those in which the word referred to is either close at hand, or is attended by a long explanation which it would be needless to repeat.

I have been told it has been suggested that the second part of the work should have been given in the Persian character. Had it been so, I must, in the first place, have added the pronunciation in Roman characters to each word, which would have swelled the work to six times its present size; in the second place, omitting the Roman character, I must have given all the vowel marks and other orthographical symbols, which would have extended it to at least ten times its actual bulk.

In conclusion, I have only to add, that amidst such a mass of small letters, it will not seem surprising that an occasional error of the press should occur. I trust, however, that the number of such errors is small, and I am confident that the generous and experienced (and it is their good opinion I am ambitious to obtain) will not deny me their indulgence.

A DICTIONARY, HINDUSTANI AND ENGLISH.

ا alif, the first letter of the Arabic alphabet; in numeration it counts one. a or a-kāra, the first elementary sound in the Sanskrit alphabet; it is a name of God, or Vishnu. As an inseparable particle prefixed to a word, it signifies negation or privation, as adharm, injustice, from dharm, justice; adhan, poor, straitened in circumstances, from a, and dhan, wealth, treasure. It is akin to the alpha privativum of the Greek, the in of the Latin, or the un of the German and English. As in Greek, it becomes an before a vowel, as an-anta, endless or without end.

اب ab, now, presently, just now, a little while ago; by adding kā, ke, kī, it forms an adjective, as ab-kā zamānā, the present time. h.

اب ib, thus, as, in like manner. s.

اب ab (contract. from ابو), a father. In Hindūstānī, the plural is of most frequent occurrence, as in abā o ajdād, fathers and grandfathers, ancestors. a.

آب āb, m. water, splendour, elegance, dignity, lustre (in gems), temper (of steel, &c.), edge, sharpness (of a sword, &c.). The word āb in Persian is used in a great many metaphoric and idiomatic expressions. p.

In Arabic, the word shamāl denotes north, or left, and this agrees with the manner in which the Roman augurs determined the regions of the heavens, according to Livy. It may be further stated that in the Gaelic dialects south and north are synonymous terms with right and left respectively. s.

زامیندار zamīn-dār, a landlord, a land-holder. As the term zamīn-dār differs widely in its signification from our ideas of a landlord, it may be proper to add, on the authority of Gladwin, that under the Moghal government the term was applied to a person who held a tract of land immediately of government, on condition of paying the rent of it. He was first in rank among the land-holders; if a zamindār was unable to pay up the amount of his engagements with government at the end of the year, such a part of his zamindārī was sold as would discharge the balance. If he was dispossessed of the management of his zamindārī, he was nevertheless exclusively responsible for all debts incurred by him during his possession, unless a mortgage was given on the zamindārī, or the money borrowed applied to the payment of the revenue. Zamindārs, by the nature of their tenures, had no longer a right to their lands than whilst they paid their revenues, and in case of failure, the sale of their land was a more just and useful recompense to government than subjecting them to corporeal punishment. Should they, however, at any time have been prevented fulfilling their engagements by unavoidable accidents rather than by their own mismanagement, equity would point out what indulgence they might be entitled to on that account. p.

لال بھکتر lāl bujhakkar, an intelligent person; one who comprehends quickly, or who readily divines

ironically for a wiseacre, an ignorant fool who pretends to more sense than his neighbours; as in the following answer given by a person of this description when consulted respecting the marks of an elephant's feet in mire by people who had never seen such an animal: yth to būjhe Lāl-Bujhakkār aur na būjhe ko,e; pāyan chakkī bāndhkar mat harnā kūdā ho,e, "Surely Lāl-Bujhakkār and none else can understand this; may not an antelope with a millstone tied to his feet have bounded here?" This gentleman is evidently of the same family with the Wise Men of Gotham. Some twenty or thirty years ago there was a very popular biography of a similar character current in Scotland, attributed to the pen of the celebrated Adam Smith, entitled "The History of Wise Willie and Witty Eppy." Wise Willie is undoubtedly the full brother of Lāl-Bujhakkār, for once upon a time, the folk of Fife brought him a horseshoe which they had picked up, and he sagely assured them that it was the new moon, only it puzzled him sorely to account for its having fallen in Fife, as he had seen it the night before far to the south-west in a different part of the country. h. s.
