ples, it may be said, were well established, and therefore, it may be argued that it is unnecessary to consecrate them in a constitution. This objection was not valid. They were fundamental principles, upon which rested the superstructure of democratic institutions. They were so regarded by the people of our sister States, and were to be found embodied in almost every modern constitution. It was necessary that these principles should be enunciated —that the rising generation may consult them, and that the public servants of the people may from time to time refresh their memories as to the rights and immunities of the people.

To say that they were reserved rights, clearly understood, was not yet sufficient. These rights may be misunderstood; they may be impaired; they may be invaded, unless the public mind is constantly in a position to apply the fundamental principles of republican government as a test to the administration of public affairs, and to the uninterrupted exercise of civil and religious liberty.

If any good reason can be adduced why these principles should not be enunciated in a republican constitution, I should be glad (said Mr. Porter,) to hear them. But I apprehend none such can be given. Are we better instructed, or more fully indoctrinated into the rights and privileges of free government than our sister States? Do we understand our rights better, or are they better guarded? The immortal Jefferson did not think this a matter beneath his dignity, or unworthy of his solicitude. The reputation of Louisiana yields to that, I am proud to say, of no other State in the Union. I should be sorry that she should set the example of a feeling of disregard towards the fundamental principles of democratic government so far as to refuse to place their enunciation in her constitution. I hope that her representives will not suffer their patriotism to fail them on this occasion.

I cannot anticipate any reasonable objections, and I shall not attempt to set up pins for the purpose of knocking them down. These are abstract principles, and I have but little talent to discuss them; but if any thing can be urged against them, I will attempt to reply, or abandon them to their fate.

Mr. Beatty moved that they be laid indefinitely on the table, and called for the previous question.

The call for the previous question was sustained—41 yeas; 20 nays.

The yeas and nays were then called on Mr. Beatty's motion to lay said report on the table indefinitely.

Messrs. Aubert, Beatty, Bourg, Burton, Carriere, Chambliss, Conrad of Orleans, Conrad of Jefferson, Derbes, Downs, Dunn, Eustis, Garcia, Garrett, Guion, Hudspeth, Kenner, King, Labauve, Ledoux, Legendre, Lewis, Mayo, Pugh, Roman, St. Amand, Scott of Feliciana, Scott of Madison, Sellers, Stephens, Taylor of Assumption, Taylor of St. Landry, Voorhies, Wikoff, Winchester and Winder voted in the affirmative—35 yeas; and

Messrs. Brazeale, Brent, Cade, Cenas, Claiborne, Covillion, Culbertson, DuBouchel, Dunn, Humble, Hynson, McCallop, McRae, Marigny, Porter, Prescott, of St. Landry, Preston, Prudhomme, Read, Roselius, Saunders, Scott of Baton Rouge, Trist and Waddill voted in the negative—24 nays.

On motion, the preamble to the constitution was taken up:

"We, the people of the State of Louisiana, by our representatives in Convention assembled, in order to secure to the citizens thereof the enjoyment of the rights of life, liberty and property, and of pursuing happiness, do order and establish the following constitution and civil form of government."

Mr. Eustis moved to lay the preamble on the table indefinitely, and to substitute the words "constitution of the State of Louisiana."

His motion was lost.

Mr. Taylor of Assumption offered as a substitute the following:

"We, the people of the State of Louisiana, do ordain and establish the following constitution for the government of ourselves and our posterity."

Mr. Beatty moved to amend said substitute, by striking out the words "and our posterity," which motion prevailed.

On motion of Mr. Porter, said substitute was laid on the table indefinitely.

Mr. Downs offered the following substitute, and the same was adopted, viz:

PREAMBLE.

"We, the people of the State of Louisiana, do ordain and establish the following Constitution."

On motion of Mr. DUNN, the report of the committee on education was taken up, viz:

SEC. 1. The governor shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the senate, appoint a superintendent of education, who shall hold his office for two years; whose duties shall be prescribed by law, and who shall receive such compensation as the legislature may direct.

SEC. 2. The legislature shall encourage the institution of common schools throughout the State, for the promotion of literature and the arts and sciences, and shall provide means for that purpose and for their support.

SEC. 3. The proceeds of all lands that have been or hereafter may be granted by the United States to this State, for the use or support of schools, and of all lands that have been or may hereafter be granted by the United States, or by any person or persons, body politic or corporate, to this State, and not granted expressly for any other purpose, which shall hereafter be sold or disposed of, and all estates of deceased persons to which the State may be or hereafter become entitled by law, shall be held by the State as a loan; and shall be and remain a perpetual fund, on which the State shall pay an annual interest of per cent. ; which interest, together with all the rents of the unsold lands, shall be inviolably appropriated to the support of such schools and institutions of learning throughout the State, until the rents or interest, or both together, shall amount to the sum of per annum; after which the annual excess of such rents and interest may be applied by the legislature to other objects.

SEC. 4. The fund arising from the rents or sales which may hereafter be made, of the lands heretofore granted by the United States to this State, for the use of a seminary of learning, and of any land that may hereafter be granted for that purpose, and any interest that may accrue upon such funds, shall be inviolably applied to the use specified, or that may be specified in the grant.

And your committe recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That our representatives and senators in congress be requested to use their best efforts to procure the passage of a law granting to this State the unsold land within this State, belonging to the United States, or as large a portion thereof as possible, for the purpose of education; and to co-operate, if necessary, to effect that object, with the representatives and senators in congress from other States.

Mr. EUSTIS, of the committee on education, submitted the following, viz:

An university shall be established in the city of New Orleans. It shall be composed of four faculties, to-wit: One of law, one of medicine, one of the natural sciences, and one of letters.

It shall be called the University of Louisiana; and the Medical College of Louisiana, as at present organized, shall constitute the faculty of medicine.

The legislature shall provide by law for its further organization and government.

Mr. LEWIS said that this was a matter within the ordinary competency of the legislature, and ought not to be put in the constitution.

Mr. KENNER offered as a substitute for the second section the following, viz:

"The legislature shall establish throughout the State a system of free schools, for the education of all the children of the people of the State, and shall provide the means for that purpose, and for their support."

Mr. LEWIS offered as a substitute for the whole, the following, viz:

"SEC. —. The legislature shall establish free schools throughout the State, and shall provide means for their support. The proceeds of all lands that have been, or hereafter may be granted by the United States to this State for the use or support of schools, and of all lands that may hereafter be granted by the United States, or by any person or persons, body politic or corporate, to this State, and not granted expressly for any other purpose, which shall hereafter be sold or disposed of, and all estates of deceased persons to which the State may be or hereafter become entitled by law, shall be held by the State as a loan; and shall be and remain a perpetual fund, on which the State shall pay an annual interest of per cent ; which interest, together with all the rents of the unsold lands, shall be inviolably appropriated to the support of such schools."

"Sec. —. The fund arising from the rents or sales which have been, or may hereafter be made, of any lands heretofore granted by the United States to this State, for the use of a seminary of learning, and of any land that may hereafter be granted for that purpose, and any interest that may accrue upon such funds shall be inviolably applied to the use specified, or that may be specified in the grant."

Mr. Kenner moved to amend said substitute by inserting in the second line after "free" the word "public;" which amendment was adopted.

Mr. Roselius said it seemed to be concluded on all hands that a system of public education ought to be establised, and that such a system ought to operate uniformly throughout the State. The first thing then to be considered is how are we to base that system upon a sure and permanent foundation. That can only be done by providing a permanent fund for the support of education. We have already the means to a certain extent, under the act of congress, donating certain portions of public territory to the purposes of education. The sixteenth section of every township is expressly reserved for the use of common schools. That cannot be diverted from its legitimate purpose. There is another appropriation of two townships of land for a seminary of learning. The legislature in 1843, laid their sacrilegious hands upon this donation, they ordered it to be sold, and the proceeds to be applied to the payment of the ordinary debts of the State. They diverted it from the purpose for which it was granted. The act consummatiug this outrage, (said Mr. Roselius) will remain a perpetual blot upon our statute books! I cannot find words to express my utter abhorrence and detestation of that act. We should take warning for the future and place it beyond the power of the legislature to abstract the means exclusively belonging to education to any other purpose.

The report of the committee on education, now before us may possibly need amendment, but as a whole I consider it as the corner stone upon which may be reared a magnificent system. I consider it to be essential. This, however, I do not consider the proper time to enter into the merits of the plan.

I have no doubt that the delegate from Ascension (Mr. Kenner,) is persuaded that his substitute will effect the same purpose thro' legislative interposition. But I would beg that delegate to reflect upon the experience of the past. What has been done by the legislature? The same results will follow future legislation, that has followed preceding legislation, unless a permanent system be recognized and consecrated in the constitution. The State has squandered millions of dollars for the purpose of public education, and to what purpose? Little or no good has been done. The blessings of public education have not been disseminated throughout the State. Something has been effected in the city. But, how far would the small pittance contributed by the State, have gone towards rearing those glorious institutions of which New Orleans may feel so proud? While the State has only contributed seven thousand dollars, the city of New Orleans has contibuted one hundred thousand dollars to the support of these schools.

But what has become of the millions of dollars appropriated by the State? It has been thrown away. In one of the richest parishes of the State adjacent to the city, I knew of an instance, where one of the public teachers, at the head of the school, did not actually know how to spell. How was it that he happened to be employed or retained? Because there was no superintendent of public education; there was no one to inspect and overlook the persons employed to teach. The system of public education has undergone occasional modifications, but this most important feature until now has been entirely overlooked, and no system of universal education has been adopted.

In the endowment of a higher institution, a college, we have likewise been guilty of a capital mistake. We have frittered away the resources of the State upon several institutions, when those resources ought to have been confined to a single institution. Of the three colleges established, all have failed with the exception of the college of Jefferson, and that is in a lingering state. With the population of Louisiana, and the States immediately adjoining, one institution is amply sufficent to provide for our own wants as well as the wants of the co-adjacent States.

Mr. KENNER said he agreed fully with the gentleman who had just resumed his seat, that the proceeds of the public lands, donated for the purposes of education, should be religiously appropriated to that object. I can not, said Mr. K., yield my sanction to the second section of this report, because I consider that the expression that the legislature "shall encourage the institution of common schools," as totally insufficient. To "encourage" is not the proper word. I would go further; I would make the requisition imperative. Not that the legislature shall "encourage" the institution of common schools, but that the legislature shall establish throughout the State a system of free schools, for the education of all the children of the people of the State. To accomplish this desirable result, I would make it imperative upon the legislature to raise the means for the maintenance and support of free shools. As to the establshment of a college or university, although I look upon such an institution with favor, I am not solicitous in the same degree for any thing so elevated. Let those who feel the want of a more complete education for their children, take the necessary steps to provide such an institution. But I hold it as our first duty, to establish the system of free schools, accessible to all, to the rich and to the poor indiscriminately, and to provide adequate means to keep up that system, and to maintain its usefulness.

Mr. MAYO stated that the committee designed suggesting certain amendments to their report. From what had been done by the legislature, the Convention would see the expediency of placing it out of the power of that body, to dispose of the public domain, appropriated to education, for any other purpose than that designed in its appropriation. The legislature had ordered the sale of the seminary lands, and had applied the proceeds to the payment of its public debt. What was to prevent them from disposing of the sixteenth section and diverting the proceeds to a similar purpose?

Mr. PRESTON moved to lay the report of the committee indefinitely on the table. He was as great a friend to public education as any one, particularly to universal education. He had felt the benefits of such a system, and he desired to extend it to all his fellow citizens. But he thought it better to leave this matter with the legislature. They came from the people, and would take care that the wishes of the people, in this respect, were carried out. They had always shown great solicitude upon the subject, and surely there was no want of liberality in their appropriations. That the system adopted had not met better success was a misfortune, but experience was as likely to have as beneficial an influence upon that body, in making salutary changes, as upon this.

In reference to what fell from the delegate from New Orleans (Mr. Roselius) as to the act which in his opinion deserves so much execration, for the sale of the seminary lands, I will merely reply that a great portion of this very indebtedness of the State, which he thought ought not to have been paid, arose from appropriations made for public education. The legislature and the executive thought themselves justified in using these means temporarily, for the purpose of discharging these debts. I see nothing hienous in that measure. I consider it perfectly right. We are bound to pay our honest debts, even if we have to sell the vevy clothes off our backs.

Mr. ROSELIUS said that he agreed with the delegate from Jefferson, (Mr. Preston) that we were bound to pay the debts of the State. But he could not agree that a sacred deposite should be directed from its purpose and applied to the payment of these debts. The act in question for the sale of these lands, was a breach of good faith. There was nothing to justify it. But, says that delegate, this money was taken to pay off debts, occasioned by appropriations for public education. That may very well be. From the year 1813 to the present time, the legislature has squandered millions for the purpose of promoting public education, but to little or no good purpose. To attempt to sustain the ground, that because the legislature has, through improvidence, involved herself for public education, she is authorized to use the per cent of property committed to her charge by the general government, for a purpose eqpressly specified, would be equivalent to sustaining that because one individual had been liberal to another at one time, and had involved himself on his account, he would be afterwards justified in robbing him. I repeat, it was an abominable breach of good faith. A man who robs another upon the pretence of necessity, is just as justifiable as the legislature were in diverting the proceeds of the seminary lands to the payment of State debts. A poor devil, for stealing a loaf of bread, or a shirt to cover his nakedness, is sent to the penitentiary, while a flagrant violation of good faith, on the part of the State, is justified.

But I will not dwell any longer on so melancholy and painful a subject. I sincerely wish that the act of 1843 could be expunged from our statute books. But there it stands, in bold relief, an evidence of the wisdom or folly of its authors!

As for the idea that public schools are intended for the poor, it is fallacious. There should be no difference between the poor and the rich. in these institutions; the children of both poor and rich should receive the benefits of public education indiscriminately. It would defeat the very object which prompts their establishment. The feeling of exclusion would be hateful. There is a sentiment of independence in the breast of the poorest man, which would prevent him from sending his children to school, if the school were exclusively designed for the education of poor children. But why speak of poverty in Louisiana? A State, whose soil is so fertile, and whose resources are so abundant. Why speak of the education of the poor? Education should be for all. It should be a State institution. The State owes it to her citizens. Knowledge is an aliment that she should not deny them. Let us establish the glorious fabric of free public education upon a solid and permanent foundation! I hope that the Convention will pause, and act with that calmness which befits a subject of such momentous consequences to the future well being of the State.

Mr. GARCIA gave notice that he would on Friday next move to reconsider the vote adopting the section on duelling.

Mr. PRESTON then moved to lay the report on education, and all the amendments, on the table indefinitely.

The yeas and nays being called for,

Messrs. Aubert, Brazeale, Brumfield, Burton, Guion, Hudspeth, Lewis, McCallop, Preston, Pugh and Waddill voted in the affirmative—11 yeas; and Messrs. Beatty, Cade, Cénas, Chambliss, Conrad of Jefferson. Derbes, Dunn, Eustis, Garcia, Garrett, Humble, Hynson, Kenner, King, McRae, Mayo, Peets, Porter, Prescott of St. Landry, Read, Roman, Roselius, Scott of Baton Rouge, Scott of Feliciana, Scott of Madison, Stephens, Taylor of Assumption, Taylor of St. Landry, Wederstrandt, Wikoff, Winchester and Winder voted in the negative—32 nays.

On motion of Mr. KENNER, the first section of said report was laid on the table indefinitely, viz:

SEC. 1. The governor shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the senate, appoint a spuerintendent of education, who shall hold his office for two years, whose duties shall be prescribed by law, and who shall receive such compensation as the legislature may direct.

Mr. DUNN gave notice that he will move to reconsider the vote laying said section on the table indefinitely.

Mr. KENNER accepted the substitute of Mr. Lewis, and moved its adoption.

Whereupon the Convention adjourned.

THURSDAY, May 8, 1845.

The Convention met pursuant to adjournment.

The Rev. Mr. GOODRICH opened the proceedings with prayer.

The PRESIDENT submitted a letter of invitation from the president of the executive committee of the agricultural and mechanic association of the State, to attend the annual fair of the association, at the town of Baton Rouge.

On motion of Mr. DUNN, said invitation was accepted.

Mr. EUSTIS, chairman of the committee on revision, submitted the following report, viz:

"The committee of revision report to the Convention that they consider it advisable to defer a further revision of the articles of the constitution until the unfinished business be transacted, and all the articles of the constitution be adopted at the first reading.

(Signed,) GEO. EUSTIS,
Chairman."

On motion of Mr. CHINN, said report was laid on the table, subject to call.

Mr. WINDER withdrew the notice he had given to move for the reconsideration of the vote forming one senatorial district of the city of New Orleans.

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR of Assumption, the rules were dispensed with, for the purpose of acting upon all motions for reconsideration.

Mr. WADDILL offered the following resolution, and the same was adopted, viz:

No new motion for reconsideration shall be allowed after twelve o'clock, m., this day, unless by a concurrence of three-fourths of all the members of this Convention.

Mr. HUMBLE gave notice that he would move to reconsider the vote adopting the section removing the seat of government from the city of New Orleans.

Mr. PORTER moved that the rules be dispensed with, in order to call up the 27th section of the bill of rights. He said that he presumed the 27th section was lost for no other reason than because it was deemed to be in bad company. It was, however, a most important provision as regarded the future boundaries of the State and the contiguous territory of Texas.

The motion to dispense with the rules was lost.

Mr. PORTER then gave notice he would move for the reconsideration.

ORDER OF THE DAY.

The Convention resumed the consideration of the subject of public education.

Mr. MAYO moved that the word "free" be struck out in the substitute offered by Mr. Lewis, so that the section would read, "the legislature shall establish public schools," &c., &c.

Mr. KENNER considered that in the word "free" lay the whole gist of the matter. His object was to oblige the legislature to establish the system of free public schools. If the proceeds of the public lands were insufficient to establish and maintain them, he was fully willing that a tax of half a million should be raised to sustain them. He trusted the word "free" would not be struck out.

Mr. BENJAMIN said that he considered the only safety for this State and for the United States, was the establishment of public schools, to diffuse the blessings of universal education among the people. We were fast diverging into the extremes of democracy. Unless means were taken to enlighten the masses, in order that they may be enabled to exercise political rights, with the extreme opinions which now prevail, it requires no great foresight to predict that we shall soon reach a state of complete anarchy. If you qualify the people for the extension of powers, if you fit them for the exercise of these extended powers, and public education is indispensable to that end, you may go to the fullest extent. With public education you may extend democratic principles without danger and without apprehension. But with universal suffrage there must not be popular ignorance. You must enlighten the public mind, and place before it ample means for the acquisition of knowledge. In a government in which all the citizens participate, where elective franchise is unlimited, I consider the first object of solicitude is public education; and if the Convention shall have accomplished that, they will secure our institutions from the manifold dangers with which they are threatened; they will elevate the character of the State, and our institutions will be properly appreciated and faithfully administered.

It is idle to speak of schools, where people may. Who wants them? There are an abundance of such schools, and those who can afford to pay are never at a loss. But we want public schools, for those who cannot afford to pay, as well as for those who can afford to pay. The only safety for our liberties, I repeat, is public education. Imbue the minors of the rising generation with knowledge, and they will understand the acts of scheming demagogues. Spread the rudiments of education far and wide. Plant the seed of knowledge, and those who desire more than the rudiments of education may perfect themselves, they may reap the harvest!

Mr. DUNN said that the word "free" was the best word in the whole provision.

Mr. MAYO withdrew his amendment.

Mr. TAYLOR of Assumption, proposed an amendment to test the sense of the house. It was to insert after the words "the legislature shall establish free public schools throughout the State, and provide for their support," the words "by taxation or otherwise."

The amendment was unanimously adopted, and the section was then adopted.

The second section was taken up.

Mr. Downs suggested that there might be some conflict in reference to disposition upon the sixteenth section, under the acts of congress making that appropriation. It would be better, therefore, to leave that matter to the legislature. There was another difficulty. By some it was contended that this appropriation was exclusive to the several townships, by others it was understood to be a common stock.

Mr. Taylor of Assumption, thought that it was better not to go too much into details. He considered that the Convention had done all that it was necessary to do. He concurred fully in what fell from the delegate from Ouachita (Mr. Downs). The proceeds of the sales of the public lands for the support of schools and for a seminary of learning, had to be invested, and it could not be better invested than by making the State debtor to that fund, and exacting from her a certain rate of interest. When we say in the constitution imperatively that these schools shall be established, and point out the means for their support, we do all that is requisite to ensure a wise and proper administration.

Mr. Beatty thought the section was of great use. It was necessary to constrain the legislature to fulfil its duty, and even if there should be a conflict between the act of congress and the dispositions of the section, in reference to the school lands, congress would not hesitate in confirming measures calculated to carry into effect the design for which that appropriation was made. It so happens, continued Mr. Beatty, that in some parishes the sixteenth section is covered by private claims, existing when the session of Louisiana was consummated; in other parishes, it is of little or no value. It seems but just that the fund derived should be constituted into a common stock for the benefit of the people of the whole State. It should be religiously applied to the purpose of education. I do not wish to be understood as participating in the opinion expressed by an honorable delegate, (Mr. Roselius) that the liberality of the State has been thrown away to no purpose. I do not think so. In my section of the State public education has made some progress, which is attributable to the appropriations made by the State, and some good has been effected, although the system has been defective. If the appropriations made have even served to the education of one dozen children, I do not consider the money thrown away.

Mr. Conrad of New Orleans, said that if on one hand there was a disposition to do nothing in reference to public education, on the part of some members, on the other there was a disposition on the part of the committe to go too far; to do too much. I think that the State is religiously bound to apply the proceeds of the public lands for the purpose to which they were appropriated. But I do not take upon myself to say, as one of my colleagues (Mr. Roselius) has said, that the legislature were not justifiable in employing the proceeds of some of these lands to relieve the present embarrassments of the State. These embarrassments were very pressing. At any rate there can be no doubt but that the State is bound to restore the amount realized.

I think the section ought to be amended as follows, by striking out the words "and not granted expressly for any other purpose, which shall hereafter be sold or disposed of, and all estates of deceased persons, to which the State may be or hereafter become entitled by law."

If the policy of Mr. Calhoun and that of a large party of which he is the head, prevail in relation to the public lands, the body of these lands remaining unsold will be relinquished by the general government to the State governments. The value of public lands in Louisiana are immense, and under this section, if it be not modified as I propose, the whole of these lands in the event to which I have alluded, will pass to the sole use of education. The fund derived would be altogether too large and disproportionate to the wants of education. But, I may be told that this relinquishment is quite improbable. It may not be very probable, but at any rate it is quite possible, and it is the part of wisdom to anticipate the possibility of such a contingency. In reference to the vacant estates of deceased persons, the amount realized may be trifling, but it may be very large.

Mr. Chinn called for the previous question, and it prevailed.

Mr. Kenner moved to lay Mr. Conrad's amendment on the table indefinitely, and called for the yeas and nays upon his motion.

Messrs. Aubert, Beatty, Benjamin, Brazeale, Brumfield, Burton, Cade, Chambliss, Chinn, Covillion, Derbes, DuBouchel, Dunn, Eustis, Garrett, Hudspeth, Humble, Hynson, Kenner, King, Labauve, Legendre, Lewis, McCallop, McRae, Marigny, Mayo, Mazureau, Porter, Prescott of St. Landry, Preston, Read, Roman, Roselius, Saunders, Scott of Baton Rouge, Scott of Feliciana, Scott of Madison, Splane, Stephens Taylor of Assumption, Trist, Voorhies, Waddill, Wederstrandt, Winchester and Winder voted in the affirmative—48 yeas; and

Messrs. Briant, Cénas, Claiborne, Conrad of Orleans, Conrad of Jefferson, Culbertson, Downs, Guion, Pugh, St. Amand, Sellers and Wikoff voted in the negative—12 nays.

Mr. Mayo moved to fill the blank in the clause fixing the amount of interest to be paid to the State at eight per cent. This motion was lost.

Mr. Downs then moved to fill the blank with seven per cent, and called for the yeas and nays upon that motion.

Messrs. Brazeale, Cade, Cénas, Chambliss, Claiborne, Downs, Dunn, Humble, Hynson, King, Mayo, Porter, Prescott of St. Landry, Roman, Saunders, Splane, Taylor of Assumption, Trist, Waddill, Wederstrandt and Winchester voted in the affirmative—21 yeas; and

Messrs. Aubert, Beatty Benjamin, Bourg, Briant, Brumfield, Burton, Chinn, Conrad of Orleans, Conrad of Jefferson, Culbertson, Derbes, DuBouchel, Eustis, Garrett, Guion, Hudspeth, Kenner, Labauve, Legendre, Lewis, McCallop, Marigny, McRae, Peets, Preston, Pugh, Read, Scott of Baton Rouge, Scott of Feliciana, Scott of Madison, Sellers, Stephens, Taylor of St. Landry, Voorhies, Wadsworth, Wikoff and Winchester voted in the negative—38 nays.

Mr. Mayo moved to fill the blank with six per cent, which motion prevailed.

Mr. Claiborne said that the fact had already been alluded to, that in some sections of the State the sixteenth section was valueless. It was but just that the proceeds arising from the appropriation for common schools, should be constituted a common fund for the benefit of education throughout the State. He would therefore propose to embody the following in the section, "and for the equal advantage of the people of the State, provided the assent of congress be attained." This amendment was lost.

Mr. Mayo moved for the adoption of the section. The yeas and nays were called for.

Messrs. Aubert, Beatty, Benjamin, Brazeale, Brent, Brumfield, Burton, Cade, Cénas, Chambliss, Chinn, Claiborne, Covillion, Culbertson, Derbes, Dunn, DuBouchel, Eustis, Garrett, Hudspeth, Humble, Hynson, Kenner, Legendre, Lewis, McCallop, McRae, Marigny, Mayo, Mazureau, Peets, Porter, Prescott of St. Landry, Pugh, Read, Roman, Roselius, St. Amand, Saunders, Scott of Baton Rouge, Scott of Feliciana, Scott of Madison, Sellers, Splane, Stephens, Taylor of Assumption, Taylor of St. Landry, Trist, Voorhies, Waddill, Wederstrandt, Winchester and Winder voted in the affirmative—53 yeas; and

Messrs. Briant, Conrad of Orleans, Conrad of Jefferson, Downs, Guion, King, Labauve, Preston and Wikoff voted in the negative—9 nays.

The following section was then taken up, viz:

"The fund arising from the rents or sales which hereafter may be made, of any lands heretofore granted by the United States to this State, for the use of a seminary of learning, and of any land that may hereafter be granted for that purpose, any interest that may accrue upon such funds, shall be inviolably applied to the use specified or that may be specified in the grant."

Mr. Mayo offered as a substitute to the foregoing, the following:

"All moneys arising from the sales which have been or may hereafter be made of any lands heretofore granted by the United States to this State for a seminary of learning, and from any kind of donation that may hereafter be made for that purpose, shall be and remain a perpetual fund; the interest of which, at six per cent per annum, shall be inviolably appropriated to the support of a seminary of learning for the promotion of literature, and the arts and sciences, and no law shall ever be made authorizing said fund to be diverted to any other use than to the establishment and improvement of said seminary of learning."

The substitute was adopted.

Mr. Eustis called up the section he had offered, viz:

"An university shall be established in the city of New Orleans. It shall be composed of four faculties, to wit: one of law, one of medicine, one of the natural sciences, and one of letters.

It shall be called the University of Louisiana; and the medical college of Louisiana, as at present organized, shall constitute the faculty of medicine.

The legislature shall provide by law for its further organization and government."

Mr. Chinn moved to lay the foregoing proposition indefinitely on the table. Mr. C. said he considered it unnecessary, as the legislature were fully competent to act upon this matter.

Mr. Eustis said he certainly did not wish to intrude any measure against the obvious sense of the house. It was with regret that he saw a disposition manifested to dispose of by far the most important subject that had come under the consideration of the Convention, in a summary manner. He was sorry that it should be deemed expedient to do so. Under the indulgence of the house, he would state what were the views that had influenced him in introducing this proposition. It was considered that in adopting universal suffrage, we took necessarily the consequences that would flow from it were any portion of the people ignorant and debased. As has been well said by a delegate (Mr. Benjamin) it was of the highest importance that with the extension of suffrage, knowledge should be extended. Without you enlighten the sources of political power, we shall have no government. The tyranny of numbers will rule instead of the tyranny of one man. You have adopted the principle of universal suffrage, but the basis is public education. You should not build until you have laid the foundation, the corner stone, until then, you have done nothing.

I am aware that you do not wish to hear a speech, and I would be the last to make one. You say that you have established common schools in order to develope the intelligence, and to enlighten the masses who will wield the political destinies of the State. This is without doubt doing much. But, will your common schools suffice for the training of lawyers, for the education of men of intelligence? Is there any provision for the education of the men who are to administer your government? There is little or nothing accomplished towards that object by the creation and endowment of common schools. I may be told that there are self-educated men. I admit there are men who will learn every thing, and make themselves distinguished. There are many on this floor. But, how many have come out of the mass after thirty years, and after expending a million and a half of dollars for the purpose of education in this State? Are we to rely upon that source alone for men to whom we may with safety commit the destinies of the State? Where are we to get our judges, and legislators? Unless particular individuals are endowed with the highest order of intellect, we cannot expect that a mere common school education will suffice. There are those who will shine conspicuous despite of circumstances. These are exceptions. But, for the mass of mankind, you must provide adequate means of acquiring knowledge.

What is our position at present—we have no means of educating a lawyer or architect? Well, you permit the money of the State to be sent abroad for the education of your children? How much money? No less a sum than two hundred thousand dollars per annum! But that is not all—you exile your children. You may have strangers to administer your laws, if not in birth perhaps in feeling. Intellect is power. Men of intelligence come from where they may most govern. Let us put a stop to the crying evils which most result from the want of adequate means to confer a home education. Let us at least plant the tree of knowledge. We ask you for nothing more than to protect it from the ruthless hand of violence. Unless you sanction some such plan as is suggested in the section before you, every system you may devise will be but a mockery. We ask you for no money—for no lands—we only ask you the means of establishing a proper system of education. We ask you for an institution where the lawyer, the physician and the architect may be perfected. New Orleans is the centre of an empire. Go to our public lectures, and you will find them thronged. I have been repeatedly called upon by the young men of the city to deliver lectures. The coffee houses are ceasing to be the haunts of dissipation and ennui. All this avidity for knowledge has been excited without the fostering hand of the government. One word more, and I am done. Look at the institutions that have stood the test of time—Harward and Yale! Both these institutions are recognized in the constitutions of their respective States. This is a worthy example for the wisdom of Louisiana. Let us imitate it, and the fruits will be many.

Mr. CHINN would make a remark in explanation. He was not averse to the proposition. No man would go further than he would in promoting the purpose designed. But he feared, at this late period of the session, it was impracticable. The location of a proper site for such an institution, would give more trouble than any thing else. He was not opposed to the institution. He was decidedly favorable to it. He thought, however, it was better to leave it with the legislature; at any rate, it was better to do so than for the Convention to act upon it hastily at the moment of adjournment. As he believed, every moment spent upon the discussion of this subject was uselessly spent, he would move the previous question.

The call for the previous question was sustained. The question then recurred on Mr. Chinn's motion to lay the proposition indefinitely on the table; and the ayes and nays were called for,

Messrs. Aubert, Chinn, Conrad of Orleans, Covillion, Downs, Hudspeth, Hynson, Kenner, Lewis, McCallop, McRae, Porter, Prescott of St. Landry, Preston, Read, Scott of Feliciana, Sellers, Stephens, Wikoff and Winder voted in the affirmative—20 yeas; and

Messrs. Beatty, Benjamin, Bourg, Brazeale, Brent, Briant, Brumfield, Burton, Cade, Cénas, Chambliss, Claiborne, Conrad of Jefferson, Culbertson, Derbes, Du-Bouchel, Dunn, Eustis, Garrett, Guion, Humble, King, Labauve, Legendre, Marigny, Mayo, Mazureau, Peets, Pugh, Roman, Roselius, St. Amand, Saunders, Scott of Baton Rouge, Soule, Splane, Taylor of Assumption, Taylor of St. Landry, Trist, Voorhies, Waddill, Wederstrandt and Winchester voted in the negative—43 nays.

Mr. C. M. CONRAD said he had voted yea, because, although he concurred cordially in the proposition, still he thought the constitution was not a proper place for it.

Mr. DOWNS voted yes, because he thought there was a conflict between this section and the section relative to seminary lands.

Mr. KENNER considered that the superstructure for universal suffrage, was free common schools. In establishing them, we had done what was indispensable.

Mr. LEWIS moved, in the first section, to substitute "the State of Louisiana" for the words "city of New Orleans." He said he offered this amendment simply to leave the location to the legislature.

Mr. BENJAMIN said that one moment's reflection would convince the delegate from St. Landry (Mr. Lewis) that an university of the character contemplated could be established no where out of the city of New Orleans. Nothing more was asked than a perpetual charter. It was contemplated that the institution should be composed of four faculties—a faculty of medicine, of law, of arts, and of letters. It would be necessary to begin on a small scale, for the funds that may be raised otherwise would not suffice. Eminent men in the several professions in the city, would be invited in their spare hours, to deliver lectures. It would be impossible to provide the necessary professors out of the city, without a very heavy expense, which the immediate resources of the institution could not afford. Lectures would be delivered by men of science, members of the bar and physicians, who would take a spare moment from their professional pursuits; and as the city combined the greatest facilities to obtain the services of such persons, it was manifest, that to say that the institution should not be established in the city, was equivalent to saying that it should not be established at all; for there were no adequate means at hand to establish it, and it could not be established in any other way than by the plan proposed. The State was yet too young to endow such an institution. At the north, these institutions were promoted by the legacies of wealthy men. We have not the same resources, and would have to rely upon useful and valuable members of the different professions, to contribute their energies and the faculties with which God has endowed them in furtherance of the undertaking. Men who are eminent as physicians and lawyers, and as votaries of science. He hoped no sectional jealousy would be excited upon this subject. If it be desired to establish this institution in the city, it is chiefly because it is impracticable to locate it in the country without immense resources, such resources as neither the State nor individuals can hope to contribute at the present time.

Mr. CHINN said he concurred in what fell from the delegate from New Orleans, (Mr. Benjamin) and would give his assent to the proposition, provided the institution was located four or five miles out of the city.

Mr. ROSELIUS: That is out of the question. Gentlemen practising the learned professions would not have the leisure to go four or five miles daily out of the city, to deliver lectures. And where is there any necessity for this?

Mr. SOULE said he trusted that the proposition of his honorable friend (Mr. Eustis) would prevail, by a large majority. Its object is to secure for the institution which it proposes to create, a healthy and vigorous existence; to place it upon a durable foundation. If there be a measure which is imperiously called for by the wants of society, and which ought to be recognized in the constitution, it is the one that is now before you. It is essential to the present and to future generations. Let the unanimity with which the Convention shall pronounce in its favor, be an augury of its complete success. We have the example of two States which have, in a similar manner, established institutions, worthy of themselves and of the cause of science. I refer to Harvard and to Yale colleges. Let us follow that example, and assign a rank no less distinguished to the University of Louisiana!

Mr. MAYO offered the following additional proviso, and the same was accepted by Mr. Eustis, viz:

"Provided, That the legislature shall be under no obligation to contribute to the establishment or support of said University, by appropriations."

Mr. WINDER moved to amend said proviso, by striking out the words "be under no obligation," and insert in lieu thereof the words "not have power."

The yeas and nays were called for,

Messrs. Aubert, Brumfield, Carriere, Hudspeth, Hynson, Lewis, McCallop, Read, Scott of Feliciana, Sellers, Stephens, Taylor of Assumption, Taylor of St Landry, Wikoff and Winder voted in the affirmative —15 yeas; and Messrs. Beatty, Benjamin, Bourg, Brent, Briant, Burton, Cade, Cénas, Chambliss, Chinn, Claiborne, Conrad of Orleans, Conrad of Jefferson, Culbertson, Derbes, Du-Bouchel, Dunn, Eustis, Garrett, Guion, Humble, Kenner, King, Labauve, Legendre, McRae, Marigny, Mayo, Mazureau, Peets, Porter, Prescott of St. Landry, Preston, Roman, Roselius, St. Amand, Saunders, Scott of Baton Rouge, Scott of Madison, Soulé, Splane, Trist, Voorhies, Waddill, Wadsworth, Wederstrandt and Winchester voted in the negative—46 nays; consequently said motion was lost.

Mr. MAYO moved for the adoption of the project as amended, viz:

An university shall be established in the city of New Orleans. It shall be composed of four faculties, to-wit: One of law, one of medicine, one of the natural sciences, and one of letters.

It shall be called the University of Louisiana; and the Medical College of Louisiana, as at present organized, shall constitute the faculty of medicine.

The legislature shall provide by law for its further organization and government.

Provided, That the legislature shall be under no obligation to contribute to the establishment or support of said University, by appropriations.

Which motion prevailed.

On motion of Mr. DUNN, the vote rejecting the first section of the report of the committee on education, was re-considered, and the same was taken up, viz:

SEC. 1. The governor shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the senate, appoint a superintendent of education, who shall hold his office for two years, whose duties shall be prescribed by law, and who shall receive such compensation as the legislature may direct.

Mr. DUNN moved for the adoption of said section.

The yeas and nays were called for,

Messrs. Beatty, Bourg, Brent, Briant, Brumfield, Burton, Carriere, Cénas, Chambliss, Chinn, Claiborne, Conrad of Orleans, Covillion, Culbertson, Derbes, Du-

Bouchel, Dunn, Eustis, Garrett, Hudspeth, Humble, Hynson, King, Legendre, Lewis, Marigny, Mayo, Mazureau, Porter, Prescott of St. Landry, Pugh, Read, Roman, Roselius, St. Amand, Scott of Baton Rouge, Scott of Feliciana, Scott of Madison, Sellers, Splane, Taylor of St. Landry, Voorhies, Wadsworth, Wederstrandt, Winchester and Winder voted in the affirmative—47 yeas; and

Messrs. Aubert, Benjamin, Cade, Conrad of Jefferson, Guion, Kenner, Labauve, McCallop, Peets, Preston, Soulé, Stephens, Trist, Waddill and Wikoff voted in the negative—15 nays.

On motion of Mr. SPLANE, the vote adopting the fifth section of the judiciary, was reconsidered, and the same was taken up, viz :

SEC. 5. The supreme court shall hold its sessions in the city of New Orleans, from the first Monday of the month of November, to the end of the month of June, inclusive. The legislature shall have the power to fix the sessions elsewhere during the rest of the year. Until otherwise provided for, the sessions shall be held as heretofore.

Appeals from the parishes of Jackson, Union, Morehouse, Caldwell, Ouachita, Franklin, Carroll, Madison, Tensas and Concordia shall, until otherwise provided, be returnable to New Orleans.

Mr. SPLANE moved to amend said section by inserting at the end of the proviso, the words "and the parish of St. Mary."

Mr. SPLANE remarked, that the supreme court held its sessions in the month of September at the town of Opelousas. This was the sickliest season of the year in the country. It was excessively inconvenient to those residing in St. Mary's, who had business in the supreme court, to attend the sessions at Opelousas. They were obliged to ride a very long distance, and were exposed to the burning rays of the sun and to the inclemency of the season. The court itself having to proceed to Alexandria, hurried its sessions, despatched its business with such hot haste, that the administration of justice had to suffer. These were his motives for submitting his amendment.

Mr. BEATTY thought it better to restore the section as it originally stood, that the sessions of the supreme court should be held at New Orleans until otherwise provided by law. There were only three or four other parishes that desired a county session of the supreme court, and it would be better to establish a general provision subject to the control of the legislature. To put a stop to useless discussion on this point, he would move the previous question.

The call for the previous question was sustained.

Mr. CADE moved to amend said section, by striking out the words "New Orleans," and insert in lieu thereof the words "seat of government;" which motion was lost.

The question then recurred on Mr. Beatty's motion, that the sessions of the supreme court shall be held in the city of New Orleans alone, until otherwise provided by law.

The yeas and nays were called for,

Messrs Beatty, Benjamin, Bourg, Briant, Brumfield, Carriere, Chinn, Claiborne, Conrad of Jefferson, Culbertson, Derbes, Downs, Dunn, Eustis, Garcia, Guion, Hudspeth, Humble, Kenner, Legendre, Lewis, Marigny, Mazureau, Preston, Pugh, Roman, Roselius, Saunders, Scott of Baton Rouge, Sellers, Soulé, Splane, Taylor of Assumption, Taylor of St. Landry, Trist, Voorhies, Wadsworth, Wederstrandt, Wikoff, Winchester and Winder voted in the affirmative—41 yeas; and

Messrs. Brazeale, Brent, Burton, Cade, Chambliss, Conrad of Orleans, Covillion, Du Bouchel, Garrett, King, Labauve, McCallop, McRae, Mayo, Peets, Porter, Prescott of St. Landry, Read, St. Amand, Scott of Feliciana, Scott of Madison, Stephens and Waddill voted in the negative—24 nays.

Mr. BRENT offered the following amendment, viz:

"Until otherwise provided for, the appeals from the parishes of Rapides, Avoyelles, Natchitoches, Sabine, DeSoto, Bossier, Caddo and Claiborne, shall be returnable as heretofore "

On a question of order,

The CHAIR (Mr. Taylor of Assumption, in the chair) decided the amendment to be out of order.

Mr. BRENT appealed from the decision of the chair; and the question being put, "shall the decision of the chair be sustained?" and the yeas and nays being called for, (Mr. Taylor of Assumption, in the chair,)

Messrs. Aubert, Beatty, Bourg, Benjamin, Briant, Carriere, Chambliss, Chinn,

Claiborne, Conrad of Jefferson, Culbertson, Derbes, Downs, DuBouchel, Dunn, Eustis, Garcia, Garrett, Guion, Hudspeth, Kenner, King, Labauve, Legendre, Lewis, McCallop, Marigny, Mazureau, Preston, Pugh, Read, Roman, Roselius, St. Amand, Saunders, Scott of Baton Rouge, Scott of Madison, Sellers, Soulé, Splane, Taylor of St. Landry, Trist, Voorhies, Wederstrandt, Wadsworth, Wikoff, Winchester and Winder voted in the affirmative—48 yeas; and

Messrs. Brazeale, Brent, Burton, Cade, Conrad of Orleans, Covillion, Humble, Hynson, McRae, Mayo, Peets, Porter, Prescott of St. Landry, Scott of Feliciana, Stephens and Waddill voted in the negative—17 nays.

Mr. BRENT, having voted in the majority, moved to reconsider the vote reconsidering the fifth section, under the motion of Mr. Splane.

On a question of order,

The CHAIR (Mr. Taylor of Assumption, in the chair) decided the motion to be in order.

Mr. BEATTY appealed from the decision of the chair; and the question being put, "shall the decision of the chair be sustained?" the same was sustained.

Mr. WALKER said he hoped the parish of Rapides, and surrounding parishes, should not be deprived of the presence of the supreme court at Alexandria. It was the desire of the people, and of the members bers of the bar, that the sessions of that court should be held there in the fall, as heretofore. He had no objections to urge against appeals being brought to the city from those parishes that desired it, but he thought the wishes of other sections of the State, that desired their appeals to be decided in their vicinity, ought to be, and he doubted not would be respected by this body.

The yeas and nays were then called for on the motion of Mr. Brent to reconsider, and

Messrs. Benjamin, Brazeale, Brent, Briant, Burton, Cade, Chambliss, Chinn, Conrad of Orleans, Covillion, Culbertson, DuBouchel, Downs, Garrett, Hudspeth, Humble, Hynson, Kenner, King, Labauve, Lewis, McCallop, McRae, Mayo, Peets, Porter, Prescott of St. Landry, Read, Scott of Baton Rouge, Scott of Feliciana, Scott of Madison, Sellers, Stephens, Taylor of St. Landry, Trist, Waddill, Wederstrandt and Wikoff voted in the affirmative—39 yeas; and

Messrs. Aubert, Beatty, Brumfield, Claiborne, Conrad of Jefferson, Derbes, Dunn, Garcia, Guion, Legendre, Marigny, Pugh, Roman, Roselius, Saunders, Splane, Voorhies, Wadsworth, Winchester and Winder voted in the negative—20 nays.

This result placed the section in the same situation in which it was before Mr. Splane's motion for reconsideration.

Mr. GARRETT moved for the reconsideration of the vote adopting the eleventh section of the article upon the judiciary, with the view of adding the following:

"Provided, That the dispositions in this section be not understood as applying to justices of the peace."

Mr. LEWIS inquired if the gentleman intended to make parish judges out of justices of the peace?

Mr. GARRETT: I think not. The jurisdiction of justices of the peace are limited to one hundred dollars. I can see no danger of their becoming parish judges by the amendment I propose. I wish to add this to the section, and nothing else.

His motion was lost.

Mr. CLAIBORNE moved for the reconsideratian of the first section of the judiciary article. He made this motion, he said, for the purpose of restoring the clause, "and in such other courts in the city of New Orleans as the legislature may prescribe," which had been stricken out.

The yeas and nays were called for upon his motion, and

Messrs. Briant, Cénas, Claiborne, Conrad of Orleans, Conrad of Jefferson, Culbertson, Derbes, Marigny, Porter, Pugh, Roselius, Saunders, Scott of Feliciana, Taylor of Assumption Voorhies and Wadsworth voted in the affirmative—16 yeas; and Messrs Aubert, Benjamin, Brazeale, Brent, Brumfield, Burton, Cade, Chamblis, Chinn, Downs, DuBouchel, Dunn, Eustis, Garrett, Guion, Hudspeth, Humble, Hynson, Kenner, King, Labauve, Legendre, Lewis, McCallop, McRae, Mayo, Peets, Prescott of St. Landry, Preston, Read, Roman, Scott of Baton Rouge, Scott of Madison, Sellers, Splane, Stephens, Taylor of St. Landry, Trist, Waddill, Wederstrandt, Wikoff and Winchester voted in the negative—42 nays.

Mr. HUMBLE moved for the reconsideration of the section prescribing that the seat of government should not be established within a radius of sixty miles of the city of New Orleans.

The yeas and nays were called for on Mr. Humble's motion, and

Messrs. Benjamin, Briant, Cénas, Claiborne, Conrad of Orleans, Conrad of Jefferson, Derbes, Downs, DuBouchel, Eustis, Garrett, Humble, Legendre, Marigny, Mayo, Peets, Porter, Prescott of St. Landry, Preston, Roman, Roselius, Splane, Taylor of St. Landry, Voorhies and Wadsworth voted in the affirmative—25 yeas; and

Messrs. Aubert, Beatty, Brazeale, Brent, Brumfield, Burton, Cade, Chambliss, Chinn, Dunn, Guion, Hudspeth, Hynson, Kenner, King, Labauve, Lewis, McCallop, McRae, Pugh, Read, Saunders, Scott of Baton Rouge, Scott of Feliciana, Scott of Madison, Sellers, Stephens, Taylor of Assumption, Trist, Waddill, Wederstrandt, Wikoff, Winchester and Winder voted in the negative—34 nays.

Mr. CONRAD of New Orleans, moved for the reconsideration of the vote by which the section was lost, presented by Mr. Eustis, prescribing that in the nomination of judges, after the first appointment under this constitution, the incumbent shall be considered ipso facto before the senate for re-appointment.

The yeas and nays were then called for upon said motion, and

Messrs. Beatty, Benjamin, Briant, Cénas, Chinn, Claiborne, Conrad of Orleans, Conrad of Jefferson, Derbes, Dunn, Eustis, Garcia, Garrett, Guion, Hudspeth, King, Lewis, Marigny, Mazureau, Pugh, Roman, Roselius, Saunders, Taylor of St. Landry, Voorhies, Wadsworth, Wikoff, Winchester and Winder voted in the affirmative—29 yeas; and

Messrs. Aubert, Brazeale, Brent, Briant, Brumfield, Cade, Chambliss, Covillion, Downs, DuBouchel, Humble, Hynson, Kenner, Labauve, Legendre, McCallop, McRae, Mayo, Peets, Porter, Prescott of St. Landry, Preston, Read, Scott of Baton Rouge, Scott of Feliciana, Scott of Madison, Sellers, Splane, Stephens, Taylor of Assumption, Trist, Waddill and Wederstrandt voted in the negative—33 nays.

Mr. GARCIA moved for the reconsideration of the vote by which one representative only was allowed to the parish of St John the Baptist, with a view of moving that two representatives be allowed tha parish.

On motion, the rules were dispensed with, in order to permit Mr. Garcia to address the Convention on the subject.

Mr. GARCIA said that the parish of St John the Baptist was one of the mos thickly settled parishes on the banks of the Mississippi. The delegates from St. James and from St. Charles, as well as the delegates from Jefferson, can corroborate this statement. Considerable settlements are progressing towards the lakes. Upon Lake Ponchartrain and German Lake there are already many settlers, and they are augmenting daily. The list of taxes prepared by the assessor is not, unfortunately, an unerring guide. The compensation allowed the assessors is not sufficient to enable them to traverse the more distant and inaccessible portions of the parish. I am myself aware of a number of inhabitants, owning property, whose names are not to be found on the tax list. There are others again, who exercise the right of suffrage upon property which is taxed in the name of their parents.

If implicit reliance were placed upon the tax list, it would be presumed that there were not more than from four to five hundred electors, at most, in the parish. But if a census were taken and the amount o population accurately ascertained, it would be found from the population, and reasonable to infer that there were many more, If the list of tax payers could be accurately had, it would be seen that the allotment of but one representative to St. John is not a fair proportion of the representation, in reference to other parishes. When universal suffrage shall be extended, it will be made evident that the number of electors fairly entitle this parish to greater weight than is assigned her. The delegates from the adjoining parishes are well aware of the large and increasing populatiou of St. John the Baptist. It is as densely settled as the parish of St. James, to which two representatives are asssigned. The only cause why there is an apparant disparity, arises from the fact that the assessment roll has been more fully prepared in the parish of St. James. St. James is composed of a wealthier population, and ıe settlements are more compact. Ought ıe people of the parish of St. John to suf- r merely from omissions in the tax list? hen it can be demonstrated that she is ıtitled to an additional member, and hen you have accorded three members the parish of Plaquemines? Equality ıd justice, it seems to me, requires that ıe representation of St. John be placed at vo members, in place of but one, which ıe would be allowed if she had no popu- tion at all!

The yeas and nays were called for on Ir. Garcia's motion to reconsider the vote llotting one member to the parish of St. ohn the Baptist; and

Messrs. Briant, Claiborne, Conrad of rleans, Conrad of Jefferson, Derbes, unn, Garcia, Kenner, Legendre, Marigny, Iazureau, Pugh, Roman, Roselius, Saun- ers, Wadsworth and Winchester voted in ıe affirmative—17 yeas; and Messrs. Beatty, Brazeale, Brent, Brum- eld, Burton, Cade, Cénas, Chambliss, hinn, Covillion, Downs, DuBouchel, ustis, Garrett, Guion, Hudspeth, Humble, lynson, King, Labauve, Lewis, McCallop, IcRae, Mayo, Peets, Porter, Prescott of t. Landry, Preston, Read, Scott of Baton ouge, Scott of Feliciana, Scott of Madi- on, Splane, Stephens, Taylor of St. Land- y, Voorhies, Waddill, Wederstrandt, Wi- off and Winchester voted in the negative— 1 nays.

Mr. Mayo would inquire if it would be ı order, under the rule, to require that all ıotions for reconsideration should be now aken up and determined?

The Chair decided that it would; those notions for reconsideration, already made, vhich were not taken up to day, would ome up to-morrow in the order of the lay.

Mr. Brent said that under this con- truction of the chair, he would move that he reconsideration asked for by the dele- gate from the German Coast (Mr. Garcia), upon the section relative to duelling, be now taken up and disposed of.

Mr. Beatty sustained the motion to dispose of the subject; and contended it was within the competency of the house to do so, notwithstanding the wishes of the mover for the reconsideration.

Mr. Garcia said he knew his rights as a member of this body, and no one could deprive him of them. He was familiar with parliamentary rules, as familiar, and perhaps more familiar than was the dele- gate from Lafourche, (Mr. Beatty.) The question for reconsideration involves the section adopted for the suppression of du- elling, and as this is a matter which I con- cieve of some importance and susceptible of results which may be deplored when it will be too late, I think at any rate that this impatient haste is not compatible with the gravity which should mark our delibe- rations. I shall insist that my motion be determined in a full house, and not be ta- ken up at a moment and under circumstan- ces which are decisive of its rejection. When I make a motion for reconsideration, it is with a view of carrying it. Whoever knows me must be aware that I would not voluntarily have interfered with a question which I conceive, has been rendered disgus- ting by the manner in which it has been treated and determined. But the evil has been done, and in asking solemnly a re- traçal of the steps by which it is accom- plished, I will observe that I am not, thank God, of the number of those hypocrites that conceal their cowardice under the guise of religion, and who pass their hand over their impassible countenances when they are denounced publicly as worthless and dishonest! Worthy men have a per- fect abhorrence of such contemptible base- ness, and I should deeply regret to see it consecrated, ennobled in the constitution of Louisiana.

Why not proscribe gambling and the gambler, that are certainly a greater pest to society than duelling and the duellist? How many men leave the gaming table where they have ruined their families and dishonored their own reputation. How many men in the indulgence of this selfish vice, that have sought oblivion of the past, of the wrongs they have inflicted upon their helpless wives and children, of the viola- tion of the most sacred engagements, in death? And yet no provision has been in- serted in your constitution excluding the gambler from office? No test or oath has been prescribed to establish by his own testimony his guilt! But you disqualify the man who neither offers insults nor sub- mits to them. You place beneath the mer- cy of the cowardly and the insolent, who may with impunity indulge their propensities to offer insults and indignities. You tell him that if he dares to resent an insult, he shall be proscribed, ostracised, banished from office and disqualified from the right of suffrage! What is the penalty for murder? The accused is tried and if he is acquitted he returns to the bosom of society with all his privileges! He may have been a cowardly assassin and have struck his blow, so as to avoid the vigilance of the law. He is not disqualified to hold office nor to cast his suffrage. But an honorable man who meets his antagonist face to face fairly, is punished with the loss of the most important privileges, even although no wound be inflicted, and the matter be amicably settled.

It seems to me that there is a conspiracy against the chivalric portion of our population. I am apprehensive that without knowing it, you are the dupes of some ambitious persons, whose craven spirits shrink from any responsibility, and who are anxious to exclude from a civil and political career, honorable men, whom they fear to meet on equal grounds. They will insult them, they will calumniate them, they will persecute them at their leisure in the public papers, and will force them to crouch beneath these insults, or otherwise lose their privileges of citizenship. And I would ask you, if you think that the youth of the country are to be restrained by a provision, which places the murderer, the assassin above the brave and honorable man?

(Mr. Lewis: I am sorry to interrupt the gentleman, but I do not think this matter properly under discussion.)

The Chair, (Mr. Miles Taylor) said that the gentleman was not out of order.

Mr. Garcia said he had but one word to reply to the delegate from St. Landry, (Mr. Lewis.) He had a right to express his motives for asking a reconsideration, and no one could deprive him of that right.

The Chair (Mr. M. Taylor,) said that strictly speaking according to the rule, the house had a right to insist upon the question being put, but inasmuch as it might operate as a surprise, he was induced to hope that the house would not take that course.

Whereupon, the Convention adjourned.

Friday, May 9, 1845.

The Convention met pursuant to adjournment.

The Rev. Mr. Nicholson opened the proceedings with prayer.

Mr. Porter moved for the reconsideration of the twenty-seventh section of the article upon the bill of rights.

Mr. Beatty opposed the motion to reconsider.

The question was taken and decided in the affirmative. The section was taken up, as follows:

Sec. —. The legislature shall have power to extend this constitution and the jurisdiction of the State, over all the territory which may hereafter be ascertained to be within her limits, or over any territory acquired by compact with any State, or with the United States, the same being done with the consent of the United States.

Mr. Porter moved for its adoption; the yeas and nays being called for,

Messrs. Brazeale, Brent, Brumfield, Burton, Cade, Carriere, Chinn, Chambliss, Covillion, Dunn, Eustis, Garrett, Hudspeth, Humble, Hynson, Labauve, Lewis, McCallop, McRae, Mayo, Peets, Porter, Prescott of St. Landry, Pugh, Read, Saunders, Scott of Baton Rouge, Scott of Feliciana, Scott of Madison, Splane, Stephens Taylor of St. Landry, Trist, Voorhies Waddill, Wederstrandt, Wikoff and Winder voted in the affirmative—38 nays; and

Messrs. Aubert, Beatty, Briant, Derbes, Kenner, Legendre, Mazureau, Roman, Sellers and Taylor of Assumption voted in the negative—10 nays.

Mr. Porter moved to reconsider the vote adopting the section offered by Mr. Taylor of Assumption, relative to the acquisition of residence.

The yeas and nays being called for,

Messrs. Benjamin, Brent, Culbertson, Derbes, Dunn, Eustis, Guion, Humble, Porter, Prescott, of St. Landry, Read, Splane, Waddill and Wederstrandt voted in the affirmative—14 yeas; and

Messrs. Aubert, Beatty, Bourg, Brazeale, Briant, Brumfield, Burton, Carriere, Cade, Chambliss, Chinn, Covillion, Garrett, Hudspeth, Hynson, Kenner, Labauve, Legendre, Lewis, McCallop, Mayo, Mazureau, Peets, Prudhomme, Pugh, Roman, Saunders, Scott of Baton Rouge, Scott of Feliciana, Scott of Madison, Sellers, Stephens, Taylor of Assumption, Taylor of St. Landry, Trist, Voorhies, Wikoff and and Winder voted in the negative—38 nays.

Mr. Chinn moved that the reconsideration on the vote adopting the section relative to duelling, asked for by the delegate from the German Coast, (Mr. Garcia) be had.

Mr. Garcia said he wished it to be distinctly understood that he was opposed to this mischievous section, in every form and shape in which it might be presented. He had voted for the amendment offered by Mr. McRae, disfranchising the voter, because he wished the section to be as odious as it well could be, in order that it might fall by its own deformity. Let us for one moment examine the section. It strikes the citizen and incapacitates him from holding office and from exercising suffrage, while it permits the stranger to insult the citizen with impunity; it places it out of the power of the one to defend himself, while it confers upon the other the power and faculty of being insolent. We shall be a prey to the prejudices, to the criticisms and to the censures of mere sojourners, persons who visit our city for temporary purposes.

But why, would I ask you, should you prescribe the penalty of disqualification to hold public offices, and the exercise of the right of suffrage? There are professions that are more lucrative than public offices. Why do you not go further, and exclude the man who is so unfortunate as to be engaged in a duel, not only from political offices, from the right of suffrage, but from the practice of the law, for it is in that profession that the license under your section is likely to be most abusive? I repeat I am invincibly opposed to the section, because I think it no matter for a constitution; but, since it needs must pass, let the majority be consistent, and carry out this principle of monstrous legislation in all its frightful and revolting details. Several delegates who entertain similar views to my own, and among others the delegate from Feliciana (Mr. Ratliff) are absent, and I therefore move that the question be postponed until 12 o'clock, m. If the majority will carry this measure, let them give at least to the minority an opportunity of recording their votes and their sentiments against it.

Mr. Garcia's motion for the postponement of the question prevailed.

On motion of Mr. Dunn, the schedule was taken up, viz:

That no inconvenience may arise from the alterations and amendments made in the constitution of this State, and in order to carry the same into complete operation and effect, it is hereby declared and ordained:

That all laws of the State in force at the time of making the said alterations and amendments, and not inconsistent therewith, and all rights, actions, prosecutions, claims and contracts, as well of individuals as of bodies corporate, shall continue, as if the said alterations and amendments had not been made.

The governor, secretary of state, judges and all other officers, both civil and military, shall continue in the exercise of the duties of their respective departments, until superseded and their successors duly inducted into office, pursuant to the provisions contained in the foregoing alterations and amendments.

On motion of Mr. Benjamin, the foregoing report was laid on the table subject to call.

It being 12 o'clock, m., Mr. Chinn asked that the vote be taken on Mr. Garcia's motion to reconsider the section upon duelling.

Mr. Garcia said that in moving for the reconsideration, it was his design if his motion proved successful, to offer an amendment extending the disqualification in the section, to the practice of all of the learned professions. He did this . . . . . .

Mr. Lewis said that it was not in order to address the house upon a motion for reconsideration.

Mr. Garcia replied that the president had decided that he could expose his reasons for the motion he had made.

Mr. Marigny signified that he would address the house.

Objection was made.

Mr. Garcia said the right of the delegate to be heard as a member of this body, was guaranteed by the constitution now in force. It was a right above any arbitrary rule of this body.

Mr. MARIGNY said that he felt persuaded that his efforts upon this occasion would be useless. That the majority under the pretext of applying a remedy to serious abuses, were determined to introduce a very questionable provision into the constitution, the consequences of which would be more deplorable than the evils it was designed to obviate. No one deplored duelling more than he did, in the manner in which it was now conducted. It is not, in his apprehension, a combat between men of honor with men of honor, but a butchery, in which the insulted party was the victim and the aggressor the public executioner! It was in the power of the latter to chose his weapons, and in this way the contest was rendered far from equal. The suppression of a custom which admits of such an abuse, is among the most ardent of my wishes. But at the same time, I would beg gentlemen to reflect, that there is no man, although he may be penetrated with the most moral feelings, and although you may hold over him the penalty of the penitentiary or of the gallows, who will tamely submit to an insult without asking reparation; and I would suggest that at any rate, under such circumstances, the offended party should be entitled to some indulgence, when he solicits the redintegration of his privileges. If you do not consent to some such modification, you give a preference by the operation of your constitutional provision to the murderer, the cowardly assassin, the burglar, and to those convicted of other infamous crimes, for with the pardon of the governor, they are restored to their social and political rights; but the honorable man, who may have been forced into a duel, is disfranchished for ever! You expose the most chivalric portion of the community to daily insults, you take away from them the means of protecting themselves against personal detraction and violence; in a word, you authorize murder and assassination in broad day-light.

Mr. VOORHIES said this was no time to discuss this question, nor did he propose doing so. But to all that has been urged with so much vehemence against the section, he would reply by a brief question? Are the people of Virginia less chivalric than the people of Louisiana, and if the adoption of a similar provision there has not been attended with any of those awful consequences that we have heard predicted, why should it be attended with these consequences in Louisiana?

Mr. Garcia was about replying, when the Chair (Mr. M. Taylor) reminded him, that under the rules, discussion could not proceed.

Mr. GARCIA said that if the Chair would refer to the actual constitution, which was not yet extinct, whatever it may be hereafter, the chair would find that his right of speech as a member of this body, was a constitutional right, and did not depend upon an arbitrary rule, arbitrarily enforced. The twenty-fourth section of the constitution of 1812, provides, "that no bill shall have the force of a law until on three several days it be read over in each house of the general assembly, and free discussion allowed thereon."

Mr. Garcia said that the gentleman from Attakapas (Mr. Voorhies) had asked a question, and he presumed it was intended that the question should be answered, if it could be answered. Now I am ready, (said Mr. G.) to answer that question. I will tell the gentleman, to begin with, that I have as high an estimation of the Virginians as any one, but it never entered into my head to institute a comparison between their chivalry and that of the people of Louisiana, to ascertain whether they possessed more chivalry or less chivalry. As to the question itself, I will cite a very important fact, showing what is the operation of this similar principle in Virginia, and in some of the other States. It is incontrovertible that there are more murders and assassinations committed in those States, respectively, than have ever been known in Louisiana; and there are more instances where the perpetration of these crimes have remained concealed, and the authors have never been discovered. If you take up the public papers, you will find the mysterious disappearance of some particular person announced, and that some other individual was found murdered, but that there is as yet no clue to discover the author of the deed. Is this the substitute for duelling in Louisiana, which the delegate from Attakapas, (Mr. Voorhies) would inflict upon us?

The yeas and nays were called for, on Mr. Garcia's motion to reconsider.

Messrs. Aubert, Benjamin, Bourg, Briant,

Cénas, Claiborne, Conrad of Orleans, Conrad of Jefferson, Culbertson, Derbes, Du-Bouchel, Garcia, Kenner, Labauve, Legendre, Marigny, Mazureau, Porter, Prescott of St. Landry, Prudhomme, Roman, St. Amand, Saunders, Splane, Taylor of Assumption, Trist, Wadsworth, Wederstrandt, Wikoff and Winchester voted in the affirmative—30 yeas; and

Messrs. Beatty, Brazeale, Brent, Burton, Cade, Carriere, Chambliss, Chinn, Downs, Dunn, Eustis, Garrett, Guion, Hudspeth, Humble, Hynson, Lewis, McCallop, McRae, Mayo, Peets, Preston, Pugh, Read, Roselius, Scott of Baton Rouge, Scott of Feliciana, Scott of Madison, Sellers, Stephens, Taylor of St. Landry, Voorhies, Waddill and Winder voted in the negative—34 nays.

Mr. Humble said he had voted in the negative, because if the section could be ameliorated by being amended, he was desirous of affording an opportunity to do so.

Mr. Culbertson stated that he had voted no, with a view of obviating some objections to the section, which he considered were well founded.

Mr. Porter was not in favor of duelling; but he voted for the reconsideration, because he thought the latter clause of the section ought to be struck out.

Mr. Waddill moved that the committee on revision be instructed to correct the phraseology so that the section should include all persons.

Mr. Garcia observed that the committee on revision had no such power. He was really humiliated at the result of the vote which had been just announced. You have granted a permit of insolence to the stranger, to the calumniator, and to the members of the legal profession, which latter need more restraint in the license to the tongue than any other class of the community. It is carrying very far the power of, by a bare majority of one or two, to pass such a section, affecting the natural right of the citizen to protect himself; and let it not be understood that I am influenced by any apprehensions for myself. Men of my age are not to be effected by the section. But it is in the name of that population against whom it is evidently directed, and who it is designed to exclude from all public offices, that I have spoken. Let it be remembered, the solemn warning that I have this day pronounced! When those you have proscribed will feel the weight of this perpetual proscription, and will have no other portion than blank despair, they will seek your children and ask of them an account of this transaction. They will seek revenge for the ignomy and disgrace that you have heaped upon them. Have you reflected and weighed the consequences? If you have reflected, I would entreat you to retrace your steps before it is too late. If you doom your children to be the victims of the injustice you have inflicted, you trample under foot the sentiments of paternity. If you tremble at the consequences of this injudicious act, in your own minds you must reprobate the vote you have just given!

The Convention then proceeded to the consideration of several reports of the committee upon revision.

The twenty-sixth section of the legislative article was taken up.

Sec. 26. All parish officers not otherwise provided for by this constitution, shall be elected by the qualified electors of the different parishes, in such manner as shall be prescribed by law. Provided, that the mode of appointment and tenure of office of all officers in the parish of Orleans shall remain as heretofore, unless otherwise provided for by the legislature.

Mr. Brent moved to amend the twenty-sixth section, by inserting in the proviso before the word "officers," the word "such."

The Chair decided the amendment to be out of order.

Mr. Prescott of St. Landry appealed from the decision of the chair, and the question being put, shall the decision of the chair be maintained; the yeas and nays being called for,

Messrs. Aubert, Briant, Carriere, Cénas, Chinn, Claiborne, Conrad of Orleans, Conrad of Jefferson, Derbes, Downs, Du-Bouchel, Dunn, Eustis, Garcia, Garrett, Guion, Hudspeth, Humble, Kenner, Labauve, Legendre, Lewis, McRae, Marigny, Mazureau, Peets, Pugh, Roman, Roselius, St. Amand, Saunders, Scott of Feliciana, Scott of Madison, Sellers, Stephens, Taylor of St. Landry, Waddill, Wadsworth, Wederstrandt, Wikoff, Winchester and Winder voted in the affirmative—42 yeas; and

Messrs. Beatty, Brazeale, Brent, Burton,

Cade, Chambliss, Covillion, Culbertson, Hynson, McCallop, Porter, Prescott of St. Landry, Preston, Read, Scott of Baton Rouge, Splane, Taylor of Assumption, Trist and Voorhies voted in the negative—19 nays.

The Convention then resumed the consideration of the reports of the committee upon revision, and after sanctioning several modifications in the phraseology, and rejecting others, on motion they adjourned.

SATURDAY, May 10, 1845.

The Convention met pursuant to adjournment.

At the request of the president, the Hon. Mr. STEPHENS opened the proceedings with prayer.

The PRESIDENT submitted a letter from Mr. J. Bayon, in relation to his compensation as printer of the debates of the Convention in French. Referred to the committee on contingent expenses.

Mr. READ, one of the committee on contingent expenses, submitted the following resolution, and the same was adopted:

Resolved, That the sum of two hundred and sixty-two dollars and fifteen cents be allowed B. M. Norman, bookseller and stationer, and that the committee on contingent expenses be authorized to issue a warrant for the same.

Mr. BRENT submitted the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the committee of revision shall have the power to recommend for correction any inaccuracies which may be discovered in the constitution, after the second reading.

Mr. MAYO gave notice that when the judiciary article came up on its third reading, he would move to determine and fix in a more specific manner the qualifications of the judges of the supreme court.

On motion, the report of the committee of revision, on the article impeachment, was taken up and adopted as reported.

On motion, the article schedule, was taken up.

Mr. SAUNDERS submitted the following as a substitute for said article, and it was adopted:

"The constitution adopted in convention, January 2d, 1812, is declared to be superseded by the alterations and amendments herein adopted; and in order to carry the same into operation and effect, it is hereby declared and ordained

"That all laws of this State, in force at the time of the adoption of this constitution, and not inconsistent therewith, and all rights, actions and prosecutions, claims and contracts, as well of individuals as of bodies corporate, shall continue as if the said alterations and amendments had not been made.

"The governor, secretary of state, judges, and all other officers, civil and military, shall continue in the exercise of the duties of their respective departments, until superseded under the authority of this constitution.

"Provided, That nominations and appointments to office, under this constitution, shall be made by the governor, to be elected under its authority."

Mr. SAUNDERS offered the following additional section; the same was adopted, and ordered to be transferred to the general provisions, viz:

"A treasurer of the State shall be elected biennially, by the joint ballot of the two houses of the general assembly."

Mr. KENNER moved to take up the majority report, on submitting the constitution to the people.

The yeas and nays being called for,

Messrs. Beatty, Bourg, Briant, Brumfield, Burton, Cade, Carriere, Chambliss, Cénas, Chinn, Claiborne, Conrad of Orleans, Conrad of Jefferson, Covillion, Culbertson, Dunn, Garcia, Guion, Hudspeth, Kenner, King, Labauve, Ledoux, Legendre, Lewis, McCallop, Marigny, Mayo, Porter, Prescott of St. Landry, Prudhomme, Read, Roman, Saunders, Scott of Baton Rouge, Scott of Feliciana, Sellers, Stephens, Taylor of Assumption, Taylor St. Landry, Trist, Voorhies, Winchester and Winder voted in the affirmative—43 yeas; and

Messrs. Brazeale, Brent, Covillion, DuBouchel, Eustis, Garrett, Humble, Hynson, Peets, Splane, Waddill and Wederstrandt voted in the negative—11 nays.

The majority report was then taken up, as follows, viz:

Ordered, That immediately after the adjournment of this Convention, the governor shalll issue his proclamation, directing the several officers of this State, authorized by law to hold elections for members of the general assembly, to open and hold an election in every parish of the State, at the places designated by law, upon the first Monday of November next, for the purpose of taking the sense of the good people of this State in regard to the adoption or rejection of this amended constitution. And it shall be the duty of the said officers to receive the votes of all persons entitled to vote under the old constitution, and under this amended constitution. Each voter shall express his opinion by depositing in the ballot box a ticket whereon shall be written "the constitution accepted," or "the constitution rejected," or some such words as will distinctly convey the intention of the voter. At the conclusion of the said election, which shall be conducted in every respect as the general State election is now conducted, the commissioners designated to preside over the same, shall carefully examine and count each ballot so deposited, and shall forthwith make due returns thereof to the secretary of state, in conformity to the provisions of the existing law, upon the subject of elections.

Ordered, That upon the receipt of the said returns, it shall be the duty of the governor, the secretary of state, the attorney general and the state treasurer, in the presence of all such persons as may choose to attend, to compare the votes given in said election for the ratification and rejection of this amended constitution; and if it shall appear from said returns that a majority of all the votes given in said election is for ratifying the amended constitution, then it shall be the duty of the governor to make proclamation of that fact, and thenceforth this amended constitution shall be ordained and established as the constitution of Louisiana. But whether the amended constitution be accepted or rejected, it shall be the duty of the governor to cause to be published in the State paper the result of the said election, showing the number of votes cast for and against the said constitution.

Ordered. That should this amended constitution be accepted by the people, it shall also be the duty of the governor forthwith to issue his proclamation, declaring the present legislature, elected under the old constitution, to be dissolved, and directing the several officers of the State, authorized by law to hold elections for members of the general assembly, to hold an election at the places designated by law, upon the third Monday in January next, (1846) for governor, lieutenant governor, members of the general assembly, and all other officers whose election is provided for pursuant to the provisions of this amended constitution. And the said election shall be conducted; and the returns thereof made in conformity with the existing laws upon the subject of State elections.

Ordered, That the general assembly, elected under this amended constitution, shall convene at the State house, in the city of New Orleans, upon the second Monday of February next, after the election, (1846); and that the governor and lieutenant governor, elected at the same time, shall be duly installed in office during the first week of their session, and before it shall be competent for the said general assembly to proceed with the transaction of business.

The minority report was then taken up, as follows, viz:

The undersigned, a minority of the committee appointed to divise a plan by which the amended constitution shall be carried into effect, having differed from the majority as to the time and manner of submitting it to the people for their approval or rejection, have deemed it incumbent on them to make the following counter report, for which they respectfully solicit the consideration of the Convention:

They are of opinion that there should be no greater delay in calling the people together in their several election districts, to decide upon the organic law which this Convention has framed for them, than is necessary for it to be published in all parts of the State, and to become generally known to the inhabitants; and as it is probable that this body will adjourn on or about the 10th instant, the undersigned proproposed that the second Monday of July next should be fixed upon for its submission to the electors. This would give the people two months' time to examine and discuss it, and to compare its provisions with those of the old constitution, a period quite sufficient to the apprehension of the undersigned, for it to be maturely considered and fully understood. At the present time the attention of the people is called to the proceedings of this Convention, and a lively interest is felt in the result of its labors. The sooner the work is submitted to them the greater is the probability of obtaining for it a full, fair and unprejudiced expression of the public sentiment. It is to be feared that the long delay proposed by the majority of the committee will have a tendency to stifle enquiry on the subject, and cause an apathy to be felt which will defeat the object which the Convention has in view, to-wit: to procure the decision of a majority of the qualified electors approving or rejecting the amended constitution.

The undersigned are also fully persuaded that it is contrary to good policy and sound principle to allow any class of persons other than those who were heretofore entitled to the elective franchise, to vote for or against the new constitution. It was they who voted for the assembling of this Convention; they alone are the constituents of its members, and they only have the right to say whether the mandate given by them, has been executed in such a manner as to meet their approbation. The proposition of the majority of the committee to allow, in addition to those who already possess the qualifications of voters, all who may have been constituted electors under the new constitution, to vote at the assembling of the people to decide upon that instrument, is viewed by the undersigned as amounting, in effect, to a fraud upon the rights of the constituency of this Convention. It is hazarding nothing to declare that had such a proceeding been anticipated, before the people decided to call a Convention, a very large portion of those who voted for it would have refused to delegate a power which could be exercised so as to defeat their wishes, whilst they are mocked with a show of accountability on the part of their representatives. The undersigned cannot perceive how it can be pretended that persons who are not entitled to vote under the existing constitution, should be permitted to exercise this inestimable privilege, upon an occasion like that in question. Those persons had no agency in electing the members of this Convention, and could not in consequence instruct them as to their acts. They have, therefore, no right to decide upon that which has been done by those who are not their agents; and this Convention has no rightful power to diminish the constitutional privileges of the electors of this State, by extending the elective franchise, without their consent, to persons who are by that means enabled to nullify their wishes.

The undersigned do not deem it necessary to say any thing further in support of the views they have taken of the matter under consideration; they submit it to the wisdom and sound discretion of the Convention.

Respectfully,
THOS. W. CHINN,
GEORGE S. GUION.

May 5th, 1845.

Mr. Guion moved to amend the first section of the majority report, by striking out in the fifteenth line, the word "November," and inserting in lieu thereof the word "July."

Mr. Garrett called for the previous question. Lost.

Mr. Voorhies hoped that the motion to substitue July for November, would not prevail. The reports and journals of this Convention would scarcely be before the people before July. The people should have sufficient time to consider well, and weigh the provisions in the new constitution, before being called to vote upon it. November was quite early enough. Before that time nine-tenths of the people would not be thoroughly informed of the character of the constitution.

Mr. Brent said that these considerations had induced the majority of the committee to report in favor of November. It was early enough to submit the constitution for the decision of the people.

The yeas and nays were called for on Mr. Garcia's motion, and

Messrs. Beatty, Bourg, Briant, Chinn, Dunn, Guion, Hudspeth, King, Legendre, Lewis, Read, Sellers, Taylor of Assumption, Taylor of St. Landry and Winder voted in the affirmative—15 yeas; and

Messrs. Brazeale, Brent, Brumfield, Burton, Cade, Carriere, Cénas, Chambliss, Claiborne, Conrad of Orleans, Conrad of Jefferson, Culbertson, Covillion, Downs, DuBouchel, Eustis, Garcia, Garrett, Humble, Hynson, Kenner, Labauve, Ledoux, McCallop, McRae, Marigny, Mayo, Peets, Porter, Prescott of St. Landry, Prudhomme, Roman, Saunders, Scott of Baton Rouge, Scott of Feliciana, Splane, Stephens, Voorhies, Waddill, Wederstrandt and Winchester voted in the negative—41 nays.

Mr. Guion then moved to amend the same section, by striking out in the fifteenth line the words "and under this amended constitution," so that the right to vote for the adoption or rejection of the constitution, be confined to actual voters under the constitution of 1812.

Mr. Brent said he would make a few observations; he did not propose to make an argument. It was apparent to his mind that it was our duty to submit the question of the adoption or rejection of the constitution to all who were entitled to vote under it. There are but two questions for us to resolve. The first is, have we the powes to do so? The second is, if we have the power, ought we to exercise it? Have we the power to put the constitution in force without submitting it to the people at all? If we assumed that power, we would only be following the precedent set us by nine out of ten of the several conventions held in the different States of the Union, for the purpose of forming their constitutions. If we have the power to decree at once that the constitution is in force, then upon every question those entitled to suffrage under it would have the right to vote. The possession of the greater power necessarily involves the possession of the lesser power. There can be no dispute that we have the power, and the next question is, ought we to exercise it? The conclusion is, that the constitution embodies the popular will; whether this conclusion be right or wrong, in reference to its general provisions, it, nevertheless, is beyond all possible doubt that the provision extending the right of suffrage, is eminently the deliberate expression of that will. That every free white male who has attained the age of twenty-one years, and resided two years in the State, and has the other qualifications prescribed by the constitution, ought to exercise the right of suffrage. That is an inherent right.

If we are satisfied that we have the power, and that in its exercise we but carry out the popular will, then we are bound to carry out that will, and if we fail to do so, we commit a great error. In regard to precedents, suppose this constitution had been the first constitution adopted in Louisiana, and that it were in like manner submitted to the ratification of the people, would not all those entitled to suffrage under it be entitled to vote upon the question whether it should be accepted or rejected? But, for the purpose of removeing every vestige of doubt, I will refer to the constitutions of some of our sister States that have decided the question.

(Mr. Brent read a similar proposition in the constitution of Alabama and in the constitution of Tennessee.)

Is there any thing (asked Mr. B.) novel or unusual in this proceeding? Did the people not vote for a convention with the understanding that the result of its labors should be submitted to them for ratification? Was that a part of the compact? There might have been some portion of the people that voted with that understanding. But the great body of the people expected that we would follow the example set by the conventions in our sister States, and by our own convention in 1812.

Mr. Eustis said that before taking a step which he considered a very important one, he would submit to the convention the reasons that governed his vote. He did not expect to influence the minds of others. The subject may appear at first to be a very difficult one. The time allowed did not admit of discussion, and it was not the sense of the Convention that there should be further debate. He had examined the subject with a great deal of care, for he never gave a vote without patient examination, and the best consideration of which his judgment was susceptible. The question involved is this: whether the constitution shall be submitted to the constituency under the old constitution, or to the constituency that are to live under the new constitution. To arrive at a correct solution of this question, he had sought for the best lights, intending to be governed by them without passion and without prejudice. His investigation had convinced him that the position of the delegate from Rapides (Mr. Brent) was correct; that the constitution ought to be submitted to those who were to live under it. What had tended considerably to strengthen this conviction, was what he had heard upon this floor in reference to the frauds that have been committed upon the ballot box. For myself, (said Mr. Eustis) I have never made a voter, directly or indirectly. I am innocent of any thing of that kind.

I would ask gentlemen what do they expect to gain by restricting suffrage upon the question of the adoption of the constitution? It is admitted on all hands that our recent elections have been degraded by innumerable frauds. If any doubt exist as to the assertion having been repeated over and over again by gentlemen of this body, all that we have to do is to refer to the debates that have taken place since the commencement of the session at Jackson. These fraudulent votes have been cast upon the question of calling a convention; they have been cast in the election of delegates to this body, and they will be cast again upon the question of the adoption or rejection of this constitution, although the same restriction be applied. They will be cast to the exclusion of those to whom the new constitution gives the right of suffrage; but the result upon the question of adoption or rejection will not vary one straw. The conscientious man, who does not pay a State tax, and is not eligible to suffrage under the old constitution, will not attempt to vote; but the man who is regardless of the restriction and intent upon voting, will vote. The property qualification has been evaded before and can be evaded again. You give then to the unscrupulous the facility of voting while you exclude their betters, who will not have recourse to indirect means. I think this view of the case ought to be decisive of the question.

But, I humbly conceive that we ought to attach great weight to precedent. The constitution of the State of Tennessee puts the matter beyond all doubt. The respectable body that framed that constitution have decided it. Independent of that consideration, if we examine the point at issue, we shall find it unattended with any great embarrassment. In the first place, it is the sense of the constituency under the constitution of 1812, that suffrage should be extended by abolishing the property qualification. This is the deliberate opinion of the freeholders. The call for the Convention was preceded by two elections, in which the sense of the people was taken as to the expediency of the measure. You then had the freeholders at the polls in the election of delegates, whose representatives we are. It is beyond doubt that in this matter of suffrage we have their consent; that is to say, it is their will, that every free white male, who has attained the age of twenty-one years, a citizen of the United States, who has resided two years in the State, should have the right to vote. This is one of the clauses that were brought under the particular attention of the voters, and it is in virtue of their decesion of that question affirmatively, that this Convention now sits. It is a foregone conclusion. As was well observed by the delegate from Rapides, (Mr. Brent) the act calling this Convention is final as to the express will of the people, that suffrage shall be extended; and it is but carrying out that will to declare that the question for the adoption of the constitution shall be submitted as well to the voters under the new constitution as to those under the old constitution; both classes of citizens are equally interested.

I would ask gentlemen if it would not be perfectly competent for this body to decree the constitution at once, without submitting it to the people?

But why consume the valuable time of the Convention by arguing the question further? It has been resolved—solemnly resolved—by a body distinguished by the wisest statesmen of the age. Mr. Randolph, in the Virginia convention, proposed to submit the new constitution to the old electors only. He scouted at the idea that it should be submitted to the electors under the new constitution. The question was put upon his proposition and the yeas and nays were called for. Only twenty-eight voted in favor of it; sixty-six voted against it, among whom are the names of Marshall and of Barbour. They determined the very question now before us, that the constitution ought to be submitted to those that were to be affected by it! That was the decision of that enligned body of men; and that decision is enough to satisfy my mind if I entertained any doubts.

Mr. Guion said that he rose for the purpose of very briefly replying to the delegate from Rapides, (Mr. Brent) and the delegate from New Orleans (Mr. Eustis). Both these gentlemen had assumed the ground that the Convention were fully competent to decree the constitution without submitting it to the people. He conceded that power, but he maintained that the Convention were morally bound, if they submitted the constitution, to submit the whole and not a part, for the ratification of the people. The new constitution provides for the extension of suffrage. It proposes many other changes from the old constitution. All these changes are to be submitted to the people, with a single reservation: the provision to extend suffrage. That is to be decreed and it is to go into operation in anticipation of all the other provisions of the constitution. If not probable, it is at least possible that the new constitution may be rejected. If our work be destroyed, what becomes of our power? I think that argument conclusive, and I shall say nothing further on that head.

The people have, in my opinion, declared their wish that our work should be submitted for their approval. The gentleman from Rapides (Mr. Brent) has said that the people did not expect it would be submitted. It may be so with the gentleman's constituents, but with my constituents the reverse is the case. The people in my section of the State expect it to be submitted to them for their approval or rejection. But to whom is it to be submitted? To those that elected us, and by whose power we are here? or is it to be submitted as well to those who have not as yet, and cannot have, until the constitution be put in force, any portion of the political power of the State? We might as well submit the new constitution to the people of Mississippi, or to the people of Virginia! We are the mandatories, the agents only of those that elected us. We have assembled and have prosecuted our labors, in obedience, and under the authority of their will, and it is they and they alone, who are competent to determine whether our work shall be accepted or rejected.

Mr. CHINN called for the previous question. His motion was lost by the casting vote of the president.

Mr. C. M. CONRAD said he had but a few remarks to make. He conceived the question to be an important one; not that it would have any material bearing upon the adoption or rejection of the constitution, but because it involved an important principle. It is important that the Convention should act correctly upon it. He would not undertake to examine what were the civil functions of society, and how far it was competent to impose limits upon political power; it was to his mind perfectly clear that society had a right to determine who should exercise political power. The delegate from Rapides (Mr. Brent) had discussed the question as if we were about to deprive a portion of the people of the right to vote. How can it be said that we deprive them of the right to vote? They must have had that right for us to deprive them of it. It is impossible we should deprive them of that which they never possessed. Until the constitution shall be ratified by the electors under the old constitution, those to whom suffrage is extended cannot be said to form part and parcel of the political power of the State.

The delegate from Lafourche, (said Mr. C.) conceded more than I would be willing to concede. He conceded that the Convention had the power to decree the substitute for the old constitution to be in force, without submitting it to the people. I have serious doubts whether the Convention have any such power. We were assembled under an act specifying the amendments to be made, with the assent of the people, to the old constitution. Had we confined ourselves to these amendments, and respected the other dispositions of the old constitution which it was never proposed to amend, there might be some force in the argument that the constitution would have been in force without the necessity of submitting it to the people. But instead of limiting itself to the amendments specified in the acts by which the sense of the people were consulted, the Convention have proposed to revolutionize the State. They have proceeded to effect a thorough revolution, a bloodless revolution it is true, but still a revolution. They have made amendments which the people never dreamed of. A large portion of the people were under the conviction that the old constitution would remain untouched, except in the particular amendments to which reference was had in the act calling the Convention. Let me say that many of my constituents, a great number of respectable persons, acted under a thorough persuasion that the proceedings of this body would be confined to the law by which it was convened. Had they anticipated what has transpired, I am confident they would never have voted for this Convention. Several other delegates can make a similar remark in reference to a respectable number of their constituents.

It being clear that we are bound to submit the constitution we have prepared, and which annuls if adopted the old constitution as a whole, the next question is to determine, to whom are we to submit it? Shall we submit it exclusively to those citizens from whom we have derived our powers, or shall it be equally submitted to those to whom the right of suffrage has been extended? It can scarcely be contended that the latter are to be comprehended in the submission, unless it be assumed that the Convention may submit one portion of the constitution and decree another. But whose agents are we? Whose mandatories are we? Are we the representatives in part of those that have no present share in the political power of the State, and can have no share in the political power until the old constitution issuperseded by the new? Until the new constitution be ratified by our constituents, the political power resides in them only; they are possessed of it in virtue of the constitution of 1812. No other class of voters are known. The old constitution has pointed out what the qualifications of an elector shall be. That clause of the old constitution, like every other clause in that instrument, is binding until the new constitution shall be adopted. But who can decree the substitution of the new constitution for the old one? Only those that are entitled to suffrage under the old constitution. And if the new constitution be rejected, it will not surely be contended, and yet it may well be contended by a parity of reasoning, that the clause extending the right of suffrage has never been rejected by the people, because it was never submitted to them, and that having been decreed by the Convention, it is therefore binding; notwithstanding all the other provisions were rejected. If we are here the representatives of the population en masse, we are the representatives of women and children, of persons of color and of negroes, as well as of those persons who have not yet acquired the right of suffrage, and if we are to submit the constitution to the latter for approval, on the principle enunciated by my colleague (Mr. Eustis,) that they are to be effected by it, then on the same principle, we should submit it to women and children, free persons of color and negroes.

The delegate from Rapides (Mr. Brent) has attempted to sustain his proposition by precedents. Let us see what these precedents are worth. Upon reference to the clause to which he referred in the constitution of Tennessee, it will be seen that so far from extending the right of suffrage to other than original electors, the intent of the clause is to limit suffrage, and to exclude some persons that were before entitled to it. By comparing the clause with the schedule it appears that formerly persons of color had the privilege of suffrage conferred upon them in that State, and it was deemed expedient to withdraw from them that privilege. I shall say nothing as to the fact itself, but I would ask gentlemen a simple question. Suppose the proposition of an honorable delegate had been pressed, and that proposition was not peculiar to that gentleman, that free persons of color in Louisiana should have the right of suffrage: and suppose it had been embodied in the constitution. would gentlemen pretend that this class of persons had a right to vote upon the adoption of this constitution? Their argument would tend to that result. It may hereafter be considered expedient that this should be done. It may be decreed by some future Convention, and in the action of this body on the present occasion, they will find a precedent. Many persons entertain the idea that free persons of color should be interested in the government; that it would be expedient to interest them. These are not my opinions, but they are entertained, and may hereafter under the multifarious changes to which the State is subjected, be acted upon in some future Convention. They may decree the principle in some future constitution. Would it be proper that in submitting it to the people for ratification, it should be ecreedd that all the voters under the new constitution should vote upon the question of its adoption or rejection. And yet if we pass a similar clause here, we shall establish a precedent for all future time. But further, a Convention might abolish slavery, and according to the same principle they would be called upon to participate in the decision of that question, if it were submitted to the people, because they were "to be effected by it." I trust that the Convention will sustain the motion of the delegate from Lafourche, (Mr. Guion,) and reject a principle which is radically wrong and extremely dangerous.

The previous question was called for and sustained.

The question was then taken on the adoption of Mr. Guion's amendment; and the yeas and nays were called for,

Messrs. Aubert, Beatty, Boudousquie, Bourg, Briant, Cade, Cénas, Chinn, Claiborne, Conrad of Orleans, Conrad of Jefferson, Culbertson, Derbes, Dunn, Garcia, Guion, Hudspeth, Kenner, King, Labauve, Legendre, Lewis, Marigny, Mazureau, Pugh, Roman, Roselius, Sellers, Taylor of St. Landry, Wadsworth and Winder voted in the affirmative—31 yeas; and

Messrs. Brazeale, Brent, Brumfield, Burton, Carriere, Chambliss, Covillion, Downs, DuBouchel, Eustis, Garrett, Humble, Hynson, Ledoux, McCallop, McRae, Mayo, Peets, Porter, Prescott of St. Landry, Preston, Read, Saunders, Scott of Baton Rouge, Scott of Feliciana, Splane, Stephens, Taylor of Assumption, Voorhies, Waddill, Wederstrandt and Winchester voted in the negative—32 nays; consequently said motion was lost.

Mr. Downs moved to amend said section by inserting after the word "commissioners," in the twenty-fifth line, the words "and parish judges;" which motion prevailed.

Mr. Downs moved that said report be laid on the table indefinitely.

Mr. Downs said that in making this motion he had little expectation that it would prevail. He made it, not because he had any particular objection to the section, not that he distrusted the enlightened judgments of the people in this or any other matter, but because he considered it essential for the repose and tranquility of the State, that this vexed and exciting question of constitutional reform should be definitively settled. The people were anxious to be relieved from the solicitude which they had felt for a series of years, and at the earliest moment to enjoy the advantages of a more perfect and better system of government—one more adapted to their wants and feelings, than that provided by the constitution of 1812.

The question has been mooted, whether this body were bound to submit the result of their labors to the anticipation of the people. As far as precedent goes, it seems clearly established that there is no obligation to do so, and on most occasions the formality has been dispensed with. But whatever may, under ordinary circumstances, be alledged in favor of the practice, and however much it may comport with the respect which, as public servants, we should exhibit for the will of the people, yet in the present instance, if the precedent were established in favor of a reference to the source of power for its fiat for or against our work, there are weighty reasons why it should not be followed, under the peculiar circumstances which present themselves, and which I shall briefly unfold.

I again repeat that it is not from any want of confidence in the people, nor from the apprehension that there will be any great contrariety of opinion as to the merits of the constitution. I am actuated by no such feeling. But it must not be overlooked, that large interests are effected, and that these interests will be arrayed in direct opposition to the adoption of the constitution. I feel satisfied that, although it is not all I could have wished, yet upon the whole it deserves and will obtain a large preponderence of the votes in the Convention, and a large preponderance of the popular vote, if false issues, and insiduous attempts be not made to defeat it in detail. It is a decided improvement, to say the least, upon the old constitution. I have reflected maturely upon the subject, and I am persuaded that it would be better to carry it into effect at once. The people have been harrassed for years with this question. As one of its earliest and most ardent friends, it may well be presumed how anxious I am now that it is consummated, that we should derive the benefits which we have a right to expect from it, and not expose the possession of them to the remotest accident. The very possibility that it might be rejected by improper and indirect means, and without a full expression of the voice of the people, through any mischance, ought to admonish us to avoid even that risk, as remote as it may be. If it were rejected, what would be the unfortunate position of the friends of reform? They would be thrown back to 1837, and the people would be dispirited, worn out and disheartened. Is not that risking too much? And should that be the result, would we not lay ourselves open to the just censure of our constituents?

So far as the people are concerned, they never expexted that we should submit the constitution for their action. We were elected to represent their wishes, and if we received no positive instructions, our intercourse with them pretty plainly indicated what were the reforms they expected at our hands. In the act calling the Convention, there is not one word indicating the necessity for a reference. But our legislative history is not without an example that it was not expected, nor was it deemed desirable that we should make this submission. In 1843 a similar proposition was offered in the house, to the one before us, and rejected. We have, therefore, not only precedent in the constitution of 1812, authority in the laws for convening the Convention, but the distinct and explicit action of the popular branch of the legislature, rejecting a proposition for submitting the constitution to the people when it should be finally prepared. There is one fact to which some attention ought to be paid. Although a number of friends to the new constitution, here and elsewhere, are in favor of its submission to the people, there is not a single one of its bitterest opponents who does not favor that course. They are as anxious for this reference as they were averse to the slightest innovation upon the old constitution. I would beg the friends of reform to pause, and seriously reflect. What would their constituents say, if by this reference this great measure of popular reform were lost?

What would their constituents do, if they were here in person? Would they expose this important work to the remotest possibility of defeat; to the machinations and secret plottings of its enemies? They would say that this was a crisis when their representatives should have thrown themselves into the breach and have saved the constitution at no matter what personal risk. What the people would do, if they were here en masse, their representatives were bound to do.

I am aware that in making this motion and advocating it, I may lay myself open to attack, but I would consider myself unworthy of a seat upon this floor, if personal considerations weighed with me a feather in the balance against what I consider is for the interest and welfare of the people. I know it may be said in a certain quarter, that I am afraid of referring the constitution to the people—that I am afraid of the people. I am not afraid of the people. But I will tell gentlemen of whom I am afraid. I am afraid of the office holders; I am afraid of the men whose income depends upon the rejection of this constitution. I do not pretend to say that other men in similar circumstances, would act differently. There too, may be men among them who are above all considerations of self. But it must not be forgotten that they have the means of wielding some power. There are forty-six parish judges; twelve or fifteen judges of a higher grade, five judges of the supreme court, clerks of court in every parish, whose life tenure to office is to be swept away. Look at the enormous salaries that are to be effected. The independence of these functionaries from any restraint, save their own will and pleasure. Why they have privileges that are better than titles to nobility. There are among them men of great abilities, and the influence of these men, personal and official, run through all the ramifications of society. It is with this serried body of office holders that the struggle is to he had; that the private citizen is to contend, to wrench from them their extraordinary privileges, and to establish a more equal state of things through a reformed constitution. I do not wish to be understood as attributing bad motives to them. Some may be found among them who are exceptions to the general rule. It is their combination that I fear, in referring the constitution. If it were possible, no office holder should be allowed to vote upon a question in which he is directly interested. I wish to save the people from a contest in so unfair an arena. I do not wish to hazard the verdict of the people already pronounced, that the old system of official abuses in this State should be abolished. In three days we can make the constitution the supreme law of the land. Every interest and every section of the State is fairly represented, and the constitution has been fully discussed. If the matter be kept in agitation, it may possibly be lost; at any rate, it will be exposed to the herculean resistance of its enemies, if not openly, it will be done covertly and in the dark. With due deference for those political friends who are like myself, steadfast in the cause of reform, I throw out these suggestions: I have lately returned from the country and I found the people anxious that we should adopt the constitution, and put it immediately in vigor. I have no doubt that this is the desire of the great body of the people. The duration of this body has been extended much longer than it was anticipated, it has adjourned from one place to another, and there has been a feverish anxiety that its labors should be consummated and placed beyond all possible contingencies. Whatever may be the result, I am satisfied I have done my duty.

Mr. KENNER said, when the delegate from Ouachita (Mr. Downs) first announced his intention to make the motion he did, I intended to have followed it by a very unpopular motion, the call for the previous question. The gentleman will excuse me when I say, that it struck a plain man like myself, with some surprise, that such a proposition should have come from him. It seemed to me a strange situation in man's ingenious work, that one who has stood in the foremost ranks could have by any legerdemain so suddenly have changed his position. Had the report of the majority of the committee been rejected, then I might have very well have conceived some reason for the gentleman's motion. But that report prevailed. The delegate (Mr. Downs) in all that he has been pleased to tell us, gives us but a single reason why the constitution should not be submitted to the people. And that is, that he fears it will be rejected. Now I would ask the delegate from Ouachita, for whom are we making a constitution? Is it for the Convention, or is it for the people? If we are making the constitution for the people, then I consider it our duty to lay it before them. We ought not to lose sight of the responsibility we owe to the people, nor attempt to hedge ourselves behind the doctrine that it is unsafe to commit the result of our labors to the judgment of the people. If the constitution we have made is not in accordance with the wishes of the people, they will reject it. And they ought to reject it under such circumstances. For myself, I shall vote for the constitution here, and I shall vote for it at the ballot box. If the people should dislike it, and prefer the constitution of 1812, so be it. I shall most certainly submit to their better judgment.

But sir, the gentleman says that it is not of the people he is so afraid, but of the band of office holders, of judges, sheriffs, intriguers—

[Mr. DOWNS: I did not say intriguers.]

Mr. KENNER: I am glad to find that I am mistaken. But how does the gentleman's fears comport with the fact, that the people have the choice in their own hands. How can the band of office holders expect to control the people? I do not think it is at all likely they will attempt it. In fact, I have a better opinion of their discretion, and their disinterestedness. It is fallacious to believe any thing of the kind. If the people reject the constitution, it will be because they do not like it, and not from any influence to be exercised over them. It may be the gentleman's doctrine to distrust them, but although I do not cry out the people, the people, on every occasion, it is not my doctrine. I do not know whether I shall call for the previous question or not?

Mr. DOWNS said: I am sorry to be under the necessity of saying another word. I do not understand what the delegate from Ascension (Mr. Kenner) means, by legerdemain and changes. That gentleman ought to know that I have never changed. If legerdemain be incidental to changes, then I would say that change is not so novel with him.

Mr. KENNER said that the burden of the song of some gentlemen in this house had been, the people, the people, the people, so much so, that a bystander, would natually conclude that we were apart from the people. At the very head and front and the ablest advocate of the well beloved people, stood the delegate from Ouachita, (Mr. Downs.) I expressed some surprise and enquired by what legerdemain it was, that the gentleman should have shuffled out of his front position and have distrusted himself the dear people. I did not say the gentleman had changed, I am not sufficiently acquainted with his sentiments to make such an assertion.

Mr. WADSWORTH would remark, that he had heard the delegate from Ouachita, (Mr. Downs,) on several occasions question the necessity of submitting the constitution.

Messrs. CHINN and CULBERTSON made a similar statement.

Mr. HUMBLE stated, he was convinced that his constiuents were in favor of the adoption of this constitution without submitting it.

The yeas and nays were called for on Mr. DOWNS' motion.

Messrs. Downs, Humble and Waddill voted in the affirmative—3 yeas ; and Messrs. Aubert, Beatty, Bourg, Benjamin, Brazeale, Brent, Briant, Brumfield, Burton, Cade, Carriere, Chambliss, Cenas, Chinn, Covillion, Conrad of Orleans, Culbertson, Claiborne, Derbes, Dunn, Du Bouchel, Eustis, Garcia, Guion, Hudspeth, Hynson, Kenner, Labauve, Ledoux, Legendre, Lewis, McCallop, McRae, Mayo, Marigny, Mazureau, Peets, Porter, Prescott of St. Landry, Preston, Pugh, Read, Roman, Roselius, Saunders, Scott of Baton Rouge, Scott of Feliciana, Sellers, Soulé, Splane, Stephens, Taylor of Assumption, Taylor of St. Landry, Voorhies, Wadsworth, Wederstrandt, Winchester and Winder voted in the negative—59 nays ; consequently said motion was lost.

Mr. LEWIS moved that the word "amended" be stricken out wherever it precedes the word "constitution;" which motion prevailed.

Mr. PRESTON moved to amend said section by striking out the words "by depositing in the ballot-box a ticket whereon shall be written, the constitution accepted or the constitution rejected," and insert in lieu thereof "orally for or against the constitution."

Mr. PRESTON advocated this mode as being the best and safest. It could do no harm and might be productive of infinite good.

Mr. ROSELIUS was indifferent which system prevailed. It was immaterial. But one or the other system ought to be exclusively adopted.

Mr. PORTER said upon the abstract principle, he was in favor of voting viva voce.

Mr. MILES TAYLOR said he hoped the amendment would not be adopted. The ballot system was the true system for elections by the people. Let each one vote as his judgment may prompt him and let his vote, if he chooses, be between him and his maker.

Mr. PRESTON's amendment was lost—yeas 24 ; nays 35.

The first order was then adopted unanimously, 57 members present.

The second order was then taken up.

Mr. CONRAD of Orleans moved to amend said order by inserting after the word "cast," in the twentieth line, the words "in each parish," which motion prevailed.

On motion the third order was taken up.

Mr. LEDOUX moved to amend said order by striking out "the third Monday of January," and substituting "first Monday of March." Mr. Ledoux thought this delay expedient. He had come to that conclusion by the experience he had acquired in the office of the governor, as to the delays attending the transmission of the returns of election.

Mr. LEWIS opposed this amendment. He thought that by postponing the election to so distant a period, it would interfere with the session of the legislature, immediately ensuing. That session would continue for at least three months and it would force the legislature to remain in the city during the sickly season.

The yeas and nays being called for,

Messrs. Cenas, Claiborne, Covillion, Downs, Eustis, Garcia, Garrett, Humble, Labauve, Ledoux, Marigny, Prescott of St. Landry, Scott of Baton Rouge, Soule, Taylor of Assumption and Voorhies voted in the affirmative—16 yeas; and Messrs. Aubert, Beatty, Bourg, Brazeale, Brent, Brumfield, Burton, Cade, Chambliss, Conrad of Orleans, Conrad of Jefferson, Culbertson, Derbes, Dunn, Guion, Hudspeth, Hynson, Kenner, Legendre, Lewis, McCallop, McRae, Mayo, Peets, Porter, Preston, Pugh, Read Roman, Roselius, Sellers, Scott of Feliciana, Scott of Madison, Stephens, Taylor of St. Landry, Waddill, Wederstrandt, Winchester and Winder voted in the negative —40 nays ; consequently said motion was lost and the order as reported was adopted.

The fourth order was then taken up and adopted without debate.

Mr. READ, on behalf of the committee on contingent expenses, submitted the following report, viz:

The committee on contingent expenses have carefully examined the claims presented by Jerome Bayon; and by Messrs. Besançon, Ferguson & Co., and have come to the conclusion that the sum of three thousand dollars should be allowed to Mr. Jerome Bayon, in full payment for all printing (including subscription for the paper) already done and remaining to be done; and that the sum of three thousand three hundred and sixty dollars should be allowed to Messrs. Besançon, Ferguson & Co., in full payment for all printing (including subscription for paper) already done and remaining to be done; and the committee recommend that said sums be paid to the printers, deducting therefrom the sum of five hundred dollars paid to Mr. Bayon, and the sum of twelve hundred and fifty dollars paid to Messrs. Besançon, Ferguson & Co., and that the said committee be authorised to issue a warrant in favor of Mr. Jerome Bayon, for the sum of two thousand five hundred dollars, and a warrant in favor of Messrs. Besançon, Ferguson and Co., for the sum of two thousand one hundred and ten dollars—these being the amounts allowed after making the above deductions.

(Signed) A. READ,
J. P. BENJAMIN,
L. SAUNDERS,
C. ROSELIUS.

Mr. BEATTY offered the following resolution, and the same was adopted, viz:

Resolved, That the printers be furnished with copies of all the articles of the constitution, to be printed for the use of the Convention, by Monday next.

On motion the Convention adjourned till 9 o'clock, a. m.

MONDAY, May 12, 1845.

The Convention met pursuant to adjournment.

The Hon. Mr. STEPHENS opened the proceedings with prayer.

The committee upon revision presented their reports upon the articles general provisions and public education, which were taken up and concurred in.

Mr. CONRAD of Orleans offered the following section, which was adopted, and the same transferred to the executive department, viz:

"The governor shall have power to fill vacancies that may happen during the recess of the senate, by granting commissions which shall expire at the end of the next session, unless otherwise provided for by this constitution; but no person who has been nominated for office, and rejected by the senate, shall be appointed to the same office during the recess of the senate."

Mr. CLAIBORNE offered the following additional section:

He said it met with the unanimous concurrence of the Orleans delegation. It was essential in order to prevent an abuse of the taxing power by municipal corporations.

"The legislature may delegate to political corporations the power to pass local ordinances; provided, that such corporations shall not have power to borrow money or issue their bonds or obligations, except for purposes strictly relative to the administration of municipal affairs."

Mr. WADSWORTH moved to amend the said section, by adding at the end of the same the words "and for purposes of public education," which motion prevailed, and the amendment was adopted.

Mr. BEATTY moved to lay on the table indefinitely the section as amended; which motion was lost—yeas 21; nays 31.

Mr. BRENT moved to amend said section by striking out the words "except for purposes strictly relative to the administration of their municipal affairs, and for purposes of public education;" which motion was lost—yeas 26; nays 36.

Mr MAYO then offered to amend said section by adding to the same the following proviso, viz:

"Provided, that no authority shall ever be granted by the legislature to any corporations to exercise any banking or discounting privileges, nor to issue notes, bills, or obligations of any kind, to be used as currency, and that no corporation shall ever be permitted to exercise any such powers."

Mr. BRENT offered as a substitute for the provision offered by Mr. Mayo, the following, viz:

"Provided further, that no political corporation shall ever be authorized to issue any notes, or bills or other obligations, payable to bearer or endorsed in blank."

Mr. BRENT moved for the adoption of the same.

The yeas and nays being called for,

Messrs. Beatty, Bourg, Brazeale, Brent, Brumfield, Burton, Cade, Carriere, Chambliss, Covillion, Downs, Garrett, Hudspeth, Humble, Hynson, Lewis, McCallop, McRae, Marigny, Mayo, Peets, Penn, Porter, Prescott of St. Landry, Prudhomme, Read, Scott of Baton Rouge, Scott of Feliciana, Scott of Madison, Sellers, Soule, Splane, Stephens, Taylor of Assumption, Voorhies, Waddill, Wadsworth and Wederstrandt voted in the affirmative—40 yeas; and

Messrs. Aubert, Benjamin, Boudousquie, Briant, Cenas, Chinn, Claiborne, Conrad of Orleans, Culbertson, Derbes, Dunn, Guion, Kenner, Legendre, Roman, St. Amand, Saunders, Taylor of S. Landry and Winchester voted in the negative—19 nays; consequently said motion was carried and the substitute was adopted.

Mr. BEATTY moved to amend said section by striking out the words "the legislature may delegate to political corporations the power to pass local ordinances, provided that such," and insert at the commencement of said section the word "municipal;" which amendment was agreed to —yeas 38; nays 18.

The yeas and nays being called for on the adoption of the section as amended,

"Municipal corporations shall never be authorized to borrow, or issue their bonds or obligations, except for purposes strictly relative to the administration of ther municipal offices, and for purposes of public education. Provided fnrther, that no political corporation shall ever be authorized to issue any notes or bills or obligations, payable to order or endorsed in blank."

Messrs. Beatty, Bourg, Carriere, McCallop and Voorhies voted in the affirmative—5 yeas; and Messrs. Benjamin, Brazeale, Brent, Briant, Burton, Cade, Cenas, Chinn, Chambliss, Claiborne, Conrad of Orleans, Covillion, Culbertson, Derbes, Downs, Dunn, Garrett, Guion, Hudspeth, Humble, Hynson, Kenner, Legendre, Lewis, Mayo, Porter, Peets, Prescott of Avoyelles, Prescott of St. Landry, Prudhomme, Read, Roman, Roselius, St. Amand, Saunders, Scott of Baton Rouge, Scott of Feliciana, Scott of Madison, Sellers, Soule, Splane, Stephens, Taylor of Assumption, Taylor of St. Landry, Waddill, Wadsworth, Wederstrandt, Winchester and Winder voted in the negative—50 nays; consequently said motion was lost.

Mr. SOULE submitted the following resolution, and the same was adopted, viz:

Resolved, that the constitution be enrolled so as to substitute the division by titles to that of articles, and that the sections be amended under the name of articles, in a continuing run of figures, from the first to the last.

On motion the preamble was taken up for its third reading and adopted.

The article on the division of powers was then taken up and read for the third time and adopted.

The judiciary article was then taken up.

Mr. C. M. CONRAD moved that the first section be so amended as to restore the words "and in such courts in the city of New Orleans as the legislature may from time to time direct."

Mr. BEATTY moved a sub-amendment, to strike out of the principal amendment the words "in the city of New Orleans."

Mr. BENJAMIN moved to lay the amendments on the table indefinitely.

The yeas and nays were called for.

Messrs. Aubert, Beatty, Bourg, Benjamin, Brazeale, Brent, Burton, Cade, Carriere, Chambliss, Chinn, Eustis, Guion, Hudspeth, Humble, Hynson, Kenner, Ledoux, Lewis, McCallop, McRae, Mayo, Peets, Penn, Prescott of Avoyelles, Prescott, of St. Landry, Preston, Prudhomme, Pugh, Read, Roman, Roselius, Scott of Baton Rouge, Sellers, Splane, Stephens, Taylor of St. Landry, Voorhies, Waddill, Wadsworth, Wederstrandt, Winchester and Winder voted in the affirmative—43 yeas; and

Messrs. Briant, Claiborne, Conrad of Orleans, Covillion, Culbertson, Derbes, Downs, Legendre, Marigny, Porter, St. Amand, Saunders, Scott of Feliciana, Soulé and Taylor of Assumption voted in the negative—15 nays.

Mr. PENN moved to strike out that portion of the third section fixing the salary of the judges of the supreme court, and to substitute in lieu thereof the following:

"The said judges shall receive such salary as may be fixed by the legislature."

Mr. P. stated that he was not present when this clause was passed, and insisted upon his right to record his vote against it.

He would move for the yeas and nays upon his proposition for that purpose.

Objection being made, and Mr. PENN insisting upon his motion,

Mr. MILES TAYLOR offered the following resolution:

Resolved, that permission be granted to Mr. PENN, senatorial delegate from the parishes of Washington, Livingston and St. Helena to record his vote in the negative upon the clause fixing the salaries in the constitution of the judges of the supreme court.

Said resolution was adopted.

Whereupon, Mr. PENN withdrew his motion.

Mr. ROSELIUS moved to amend the eighth section of the judiciary article by adding the following:

"And in all cases when the judges shall concurr in opinion that the judgment should be reversed, but differ in the judgment to be rendered, the opinion of the chief justice shall prevail."

Said motion was lost.

The executive article was then taken up, and read for the third time.

Whereupon, on motion, the Convention adjourned until 5 o'clock, p. m.

MONDAY EVENING, MAY 12, 1845.

The Convention met pursuant to adjournment.

On motion of Mr. READ, the Convention took up the report of the committee on contingent expenses, upon the claims of the printers to the Convention.

Mr. SAUNDERS moved for the adoption of the report.

Mr. LEWIS moved to amend the report by adding the following:

"And that the warrants shall not be delivered to the printers until they have completed the publication of the journal and debates and delivered them over to the secretary."

The report as amended, was then adopted.

Mr. BRENT then offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That an additional compensation of five hundred dollars be allowed ot Messrs. Besançon, Ferguson & Co., printers to the Convention of the debates and journals in English.

Mr. CHINN opposed the additional appropriation.

Mr. BEATTY asked, what was the amount allowed to the printer of the debates and journals in French?

Mr. BENJAMIN said that the committee on contingent expenses were guided in fixing the amount due to the printers for the English debates, by the amount asked by the printer of the debates in French. Mr. Bayon, of the Courier, had stated that he expected no gratuity from the Convention; that the work had cost him two thousand six hundred dollars, and that he asked three thousand dollars. I thought that amount reasonable.

The printers of the English debates had presented a much heavier bill, both in reference to the printing of the debates and journals and the job work. The English debates were more voluminous than the debates in French, but I consider, said Mr. Benjamin, that in allowing the accounts of the English printer, for extra work, more than compensated the difference in the expense they incurred, over and above for the printing of the debates in English.

Mr. ROSELIUS, who has been a practical printer, participated, I believe, in the same opinion.

Mr. DOWNS hoped the additional compensation would be allowed, as an act of sheer justice. The work done in English was much greater than in French, as all the proceedings of this body were almost exclusively conducted in English.

Mr. BRENT said that it should be borne in mind that when the present printers were elected, the debates and journals were two weeks behind. He thought they were fairly entitled to the additional compensation asked for.

Mr. CHINN moved to lay the amendment on the table. He desired information. If the printers were entitled to this additional sum, he had no objection. But he wished first to satisfy his mind.

The yeas and nays were called for on Mr. Chinn's motion, and

Messrs. Aubert, Benjamin, Brumfield, Burton, Chinn, Covillion, Dunn, Garcia, Garrett, Labauve, McCallop, Penn, Scott of Baton Rouge, Sellers, Stephens, Taylor of Assumption and Winchester voted in the affirmative—17 yeas; and Messrs. Beatty, Bourg, Brazeale, Brent, Cade, Carriere, Cénas, Chambliss, Covillion, Downs, Eustis, Guion, Humble, Hynson, Ledoux, Legendre, Lewis, McRae, Marigny, Mayo, Peets, Porter, Prescott of Avoyelles, Prescott of St. Landry, Preston, Prudhomme, Pugh, Read, Roman, Saunders, Scott of Madison, Taylor of St. Landry, Waddill, Wederstrandt and Winder voted in the negative—35 nays.

Mr. Brent moved for the adoption of the section.

The yeas and nays were called for on Mr. Brent's motion, and

Messrs. Beatty, Brazeale, Brent, Cénas, Chamblis, Covillion, Downs, Eustis, Garrett, Humble, Hynson, Labauve, Ledoux, McCallop, McRae, Marigny, Mayo, Peets, Porter, Prescott of Avoyelles, Prescott of St. Landry, Preston, Read, Scott of Baton Rouge, Scott of Madison, Taylor of Assumption, Waddill and Wederstrandt voted in the affirmative—28 yeas; and

Messrs. Benjamin, Bourg, Brumfield, Burton, Cade, Carriere, Conrad of Jefferson, Dunn, Garcia, Guion, Hudspeth, Legendre, Lewis, Penn, Prudhomme, Pugh, Roman, Saunders, Sellers, Stephens, Taylor of St. Landry and Winchester voted in the negative—23 nays.

Mr. Mayo then offered a resolution that the treasurer should reserve in his hands a sufficient amount to pay the printers, upon the completion of this work.

Said resolution was adopted.

Whereupon, the Convention adjourned.

Tuesday, May 13, 1845.

The Convention met pursuant to adjournment.

The Rev. Mr. Clark opened the proceedings with prayer.

The Convention took up the report of committee on revision, on the schedule, and adopted the same with amendments.

They then took up the title, legislative department. When the fifteenth article [section] was read,

Mr. Claiborne rose and said, that he considered it to be his duty to ask for the rejection of the clause which divided the city in her representation into petty districts. Such a clause was unworthy of the constitution, which ought not to contain any other than fundamental principles. If, however, the city had to be divided, as a compromise, he would ask that it be divided into its more natural divisions, municipalities, and not into petty divisions, which were at present dependent upon the names attached to streets.

The yeas and nays were called for upon Mr. Claiborne's motion—yeas 24, nays 31.

Mr. Brent moved to reject section ten, providing for the acquisition of residence.

The yeas and nays were called for—yeas, 25, nays 31.

Mr. Winder offered a resolution fixing to-morrow at twelve o'clock, for taking the final vote upon the passage of the constitution, and prescribing that if it be adopted, it shall be signed by the president, secretary, and the members of the Convention.

Mr. Porter objected to the latter part of the resolution. It was a privilege for a member to sign or not, just as he pleased.

Mr. Conrad of Orleans, said it ought to be signed by all or none.

Mr. Wadsworth observed that the matter of signing was not an evidence of approval.

The second part of the resolution was amended, so as to leave it to the members to sign or not, as they pleased.

Mr. Downs moved to add to the resolution "and shall vote upon the question without debate."

Messrs. Conrad of Orleans, and Claiborne objected. They did not believe that debate would take place, but yet they thought it indecorous to declare it should not take place. Members unquestionably had the right to assign their reasons.

Mr. Downs disclaimed the intention to prevent members from assigning the reasons for their vote. The object of the amendment was to preclude a repitition of the debates that had taken place upon the constitution in detail.

The amendment was concurred in.

Whereupon the Convention adjourned until 5 o'clock, p. m.

Tuesday Evening, May 13, 1845.

The Convention met pursuant to adjournment.

Mr. Taylor moved to amend the clause in the section relative to duelling, by inserting the following words, "with a citizen of Louisiana."

Mr. Lewis thought this would defeat, in a great measure, the object of the provision.

Mr. Taylor of Assumption, said that this amendment was necessary, in order to place citizens upon equal terms with transient persons.

The amendment was lost according to the rule—yeas 35, nays 19.

Mr. Garcia then moved that the subject be postponed for the present.

His motion prevailed.

Several other articles of the general provisions were then taken up and concurred in with amendments.

Mr. Voorhies then moved to strike out the clause prescribing that the seat of government shall not be within sixty miles of the city of New Orleans.

Mr. Kenner said if this motion prevailed, it would be equivalent to keeping the seat of government in the city.

Mr. Voorhies moved that his motion lay on the table subject to call.

The yeas and nays were called for—yeas 32, nays 28.

The Convention finally rejected section thirty-nine, authorizing suits to be instituted against the State—yeas 42, nays 19.

They then resumed the consideration of the cluase upon duelling.

Mr. Taylor of Assumption, renewed his motion to amend, by adding the words "with a citizen of the State."

Messrs. Brazeale, Burton, Chambliss, Chinn, Eustis, Garrett, Hynson, Lewis, McCallop, McRae, Peets, Preston, Pugh, Read, Roselius and Stephens voted in the negative—16 nays.

Mr. Kenner moved that the section relative to the seat of government, be taken up; which motion prevailed.

Mr. Brent moved that the seat of government be permanently fixed at the town of Baton Rouge, after the year 1848.

Mr. Kenner moved to amend the amendment, by striking out Baton Rouge and inserting Donaldsonville.

The amendment was lost.

Mr. Benjamin moved to strike out the words "Baton Rouge."

His motion was lost—yeas 31, nays 32.

The question recurred on the adoption of Mr. Brent's proposition.

The yeas and nays being called for,

Messrs. Beatty, Brazeale, Brent, Brumfield, Burton, Chambliss, Chinn, Dunn, Garrett, Humble, Hynson, McCallop, McRae, Mayo, Peets, Porter, Prescott of Avoyelles, Prescott of St. Landry, Pugh, Read, Scott of Baton Rouge, Scott of Feliciana, Scott of Madison, Sellers, Stephens, Splane, Taylor of Assumption, Trist, Voorhies, Waddill and Wederstrandt voted in the affirmative—31 yeas; and

Mr. WADSWORTH gave notice that he would move for the reconsideratien to-morrow.

Mr. BEATTY asked for the reconsideration at once.

The yeas and nays were called for upon the motion to reconsider; and it was lost.

Mr. WADSWORTH then gave notice that he would move, to-morrow, for the reconsideration of the vote just taken.

Whereupon the Convention adjourned.

WEDNESDAY, May 14, 1845.

The Convention met pursuant to adjournment.

The Rev. Mr. CLARK opened the proceedings with prayer.

Mr. READ, on behalf of the contingent expenses committee, presented several accounts, which were ordered to be paid; also an account of sales of the furniture used by the Convention during its sitting in the St. Louis Ball Room.

Mr. SAUNDERS presented an ordinance for the promulgation of the constitution through the Bee, Jeffersonian, Bulletin and Courier newspapers, and in the several country papers.

Said ordinance was adopted.

The Convention then took up the title impeachment, at its third reading, and adopted the several articles.

They next took up the title public education, upon its third reading.

Mr. MILES TAYLOR moved to amend the first section, so that the superintendent for public education shall be elected by the duly qualified voters, in lieu of being appointed by the governor.

The yeas and nays were called for, on said motion.

Messrs. Beatty, Bourg, Brazeale, Brent, Brumfield, Burton, Cade, Carriere, Chambliss, Covillion, Hudspeth, Humble, Hynson, Ledoux, Lewis, McCallop, McRae, Mayo, Peets, Porter, Prescott of St. Landry, Prescott of Avoyelles, Preston, Prudhomme, Pugh, Read, Saunders, Scott of Baton Rouge, Scott of Madison, Sellers, Stephens, Taylor of Assumption, Taylor of St. Landry, Waddill and Wederstrandt voted in the affirmatie—35 yeas; and

The motion was lost under the rule, there not being a majority of the whole Convention.

The several articles under the foregoing title, was then adopted.

The Convention then took title VIII, upon the revision of the constitution.

Mr. MILES TAYLOR moved to amend the first article of said title, by striking out "three-fifths," and inserting "a majority of the legislature."

The yeas and nays were called for,

Messrs. Brazeale, Brent, Brumfield, Cade, Chambliss, Covillion, DuBouchel, Garrett, Humble, Hynson, Ledoux, McCallop, McRae, Mayo, Peets, Penn, Porter, Prescott of Avoyelles, Prescott of St. Landry, Preston, Read, Scott of Baton Rouge, Scott of Madison, Stephens, Taylor of Assumption, Voorhies, Waddill and Wederstrandt voted in the affirmative—28 yeas; and

The several articles were then adopted.

The Convention took up title IX, schedule, on its third reading, and adopted the same.

They then took up title X, ordinances.

Mr. WINCHESTER moved to amend the first ordinance by striking out the words "and under the present constitution."

The yeas and nays being called for,

Messrs. Aubert, Beatty, Benjamin, Boudousquie, Bourg, Briant, Cade, Cénas, Chinn, Claiborne, Conrad of Orleans, Conrad of Jefferson, Culbertson, Derbes, Garcia, Guion, Hudspeth, Kenner, Labauve, Legendre, Lewis, Marigny, Mazureau, Pugh, Roman, Roselius, St. Amand, Saunders, Sellers, Taylor of St. Landry, Wadsworth, Winchester and Winder voted in the affirmative—33 yeas; and

The several articles of title X were then adopted.

Mr. WADSWORTH then moved to take up his motion to reconsider the article relative to the seat of government.

Mr. PENN said that he was in favor of the removal of the seat of government out of the city. He was ready to fix it at Baton Rouge at once, or leave the location to the legislature, but he could not consent to vote for so odious a clause as the one embodied in the constitution. In effect, it was not only affixing an approbrium upon the city, pronouncing an anathema upon her, but it likewise embraced a radius of sixty miles around the city. He could not vote for such an act of proscription. It not only excluded New Orleans, but it likewise excluded the section of country which he had the honor of representing upon this floor, from ever becoming the seat of government. Such an exclusion in a constitution was repugnant to his sense of justice. He should regret to see it placed there.

Mr. EUSTIS said he had a proposition to make on behalf of two or three members of the Orleans delegation. This interdict is to be found in no other constitution. It ought not to be found in this. If it be the settled conviction of a majority of this body, that the seat of government ought to be removed, be it so. The only question which presents to my mind any serious difficulty, is the period for holding the sessions of the legislature. If you place the seat of government out of the city, and fix the sessions of the legislature in January, you effectually disfranchise the city; for it will be impossible for her to be adequately represented at that season of the year. But what I would propose is this, and I speak in behalf of myself and two or three members of the city delegation only, to fix the sessions of the legislature in the month of June. If you do this, the necessity for the restriction of the city ceases. Fix at once the seat of government and establish it permanently, where you will. The people of the city of New Orleans cannot but regard the exclusion with sore discontent. They feel it as an act of great injustice, and that feeling ought to be dispelled at once for the mutual good will and understanding that ought to prevail between the city and the other sections of the State.

Mr. MILES TAYLOR said that for one he could not consent to the compromise offered at this late hour. The question of the removal of the seat of government had been for months before the Convention, and every opportunity had been presented for a settlement of that question, as it is now proposed, if such had been the desire of the city delegation. The direct proposition was even made last evening, to fix the seat of government at Baton Rouge, and what was the result? Why sir, every member of the city delegation voted against it. Not one syllable was heard then about a willingness to compromise the matter, by fixing the seat of government in the constitution. Delegates from the city had complained of what they were pleased to consider "the proscription of the city,"

Their objection, they told us, was not so much to the removal of the seat of government, but to the manner in which it was proposed to be brought about. If they were dissatisfied with the exclusion of the city and the country within sixty miles of it, it would have been crazy to have obviated that cause of discontent, by voting for the proposition to fix the seat of government at once. It depended upon themselves to have carried it, and to have expunged by their vote the "odious clause" to which they have taken so much exception. Why did they not do it? He (Mr. T.) had voted to establish it in Baton Rouge, though he preferred that the choice of the place in the country should have been left to the legislature. But he had so voted to obviate the objection of the city delegation. A large number of the country delegation, regardless of individual preferences and actuated, he believed, by the same feelings which influenced him, had voted in favor of that proposition, and had an inconsiderable portion of the city delegation united with them, the question would have been settled, and this clause, about which we have heard so much complaint, would have been struck out of the constitution. It was too late now to speak of compromises. The hour had arrived for taking the final vote upon the constitution, and if the removal of the seat of government were to be defeated now, he wished to see the names of those that were determined to effect it, distinctly recorded. For one, he was disposed to stand or fall by the section as it was. If it were so very objectionable to the city delegation, they alone were to blame. The seat of government would have been fixed at Baton Rouge had they willed it, and the exclusion would have become general with regard to the remainder of the State as well as the city. If thirty-nine delegates can be found opposed to the removal of the seat of government from the city, at this late hour, so be it! My name will not be found among the number.

Mr. Grymes contended that if this clause were maintained it would militate very much against the adoption of the constitution. It would irritate, and with just reason, the people of the city of New Orleans and the surrounding country. It was not the removal of the seat of government itself, which would provoke displeasure, but it was the manner in which it was proposed to be removed. For himself he thought it of no advantage to the city; in fact, he freely conceded that it would be better to remove it from the city, but let it be located at once. Place it at Baton Rouge, Donaldsonville, or where you will, but do not insist upon this unfortunate clause. There were several excellent provisions in the constitution, and upon the whole he would vote for it, but he was sorry to see its good features marred by such a blemish. It was not too late for the Convention to retrace their steps. Let them expunge this odious restriction from the constitution, and fix the seat of government where they will. It was of the highest importance that the constitution should be adopted. We had reached a crisis which rendered it indispensable to the public welfare and to the public quiet.

The only favor that the city of New Orleans asks at your hands in this matter of the seat of government, is to fix the sessions of the legislature at a period of the year when it will not be inconvenient for her citizens to represent her. If this be done I am ready to unite in fixing the seat of government at any place the majority of this body may desire.

Mr. Benjamin said that he desired not to be misunderstood, and therefore felt it necessary to state his dissent from a part of what had fallen from his colleague (Mr. Grymes.) He did not agree that the seat of government ought to be removed from New Orleans. This would be pernicious to the interests of the State, and particularly of the city.

When the Convention was called, nothing was said about removing the seat of government; a large vote for a Convention was given in New Orleans; this would not have been the case, if the citizens supposed such a clause would be inserted in the constitution.

Tne Convention had no right to say to the people that they should not choose their seat of government. This was a right of the people who had not delegated to the Convention the power to restrict that right.

That if this clause were now stricken out, there would be an almost unanimous vote for the constitution, which would be a great point gained, and would insure the confidence of the people.

Mr. Taylor of Assumption, said: I consider it to be proper to make a few remarks, in reply to what fell from the delegate from New Orleans, (Mr. Grymes), before the question is taken. That delegate has, with great frankness, admitted that it would be beneficial to the whole State, to remove the seat of government from the city of New Orleans. His objection is not to the removal, for he admits it ought to be removed, but the manner in which it is proposed to be effected. He says it will endanger the adoption of the constitution. Now, I will venture to predict that the city delegation, with the exception of that gentleman himself, and one or perhaps two others, will vote against the adoption of the constitution, and will exert themselves to obtain its rejection by the people. Their deep rooted aversion to it is known; and are we to be induced to abandon a measure which will promote the public good, because we are told it will endanger the adoption of the constitution, by persons who desire to defeat it? The large majority of the Orleans delegation are against the removal of the seat of government at all, and nothing less than a total abandonment of that design, would be satisfactory to them.

But we are told by a delegate from the country, (Mr. Penn) that he is in favor of establishing the seat of government at a particular place; that he would readily vote for fixing it at Baton Rouge, but that he cannot vote for proscribing the city of New Orleans, and the section of country in which he resides. If that delegate had been in his seat, it might have happened that the seat of government would have been fixed at Baton Rouge, and the necessity for this section would have been avoided. The vote was taken last evening upon the proposition to fix it there. Thirty-five votes were cast in favor of that proposition. The president did not vote, but would have voted in favor of the proposition had his vote been necessary to a decision of the question. The delegate from Lafayette was not in his seat, but his presence could have been obtained; his vote would have made thirty-six votes, and the vote of the delegate from St. Tammany (Mr. Penn), and that of his fellow delegate, would have made thirty-eight votes, and the vote of the president, thirty-nine. This would have made a majority of the whole house, and the number required under the rule. And now, when one of the delegates that voted in favor of the proposition, (Mr. Scott of East Feliciana) has been stricken by sickness, and has been compelled to withdraw from the Convention, the delegate from St. Tammany (Mr. Peen) tells us he is in favor of Baton Rouge, but against the section, because it is proscriptive!

I have as much right as any member on this floor to assert that I have no prejudices against the city of New Orleans. When a question of vital importance to her interests—one which involved her dearest rights, was before the Convention—I refer to the proposition to deprive her of equal representation in the popular branch of the legislature, I raised my voice against it; and when her own delegates fainted in the contest, and were diisposed to abandon it in dispair, I still stood by her, and yielded not one inch of ground. And now am I to be told that I am proscribing the city, and putting her to the ban, because I am of opinion that a populous city ought not to be the seat of government? I think it injurious to the public interest that it should be there; and I am persuaded that the correctness of that opinion is established by all experience.

There are many causes at work in a great commercial capital, which must inevitably disturb legislation. The attractions of pleasure and the calls of business, withdraw members of the legislature too frequently from their seats; and it happens again and again that large numbers of both representatives and senators are absent when the most important votes are taken. There are corrupting influences too, which tend to divert them from the path of duty; which are more easily brought to bear upon them when they are mingled up, and almost lost in crowds, influenced by interest and the hope of gain, than when they are at a distance from the seats of extravagant speculation and excited enterprise.

The city is as much interested in the removal of the seat of government as the country. Its population must have the same object—that of securing good legislation. And if her citizens will examine the facts, they must be convinced. The session of this body will furnish many illustrations of the correctness of this position. I will only mention one. In proportion to their numbers, the city delegates were more frequently absent from their seats than those coming from the country. When the details of the senatorial apportionment were under consideration, a great proportion of them were absent. By dint of exertion the presence of the most of them were procured at the final vote on its adoption as a whole, and it was rejected by a small majority. It then took the house a week or ten days to modify it in such a manner as to ensure its adoption. It is hardly necessary to add that if they had attended before, this would not have taken place.

The real question to be decided is this. Shall the seat of government continue in New Orleans or shall it be permanently fixed in the country. The time has passed when this question can be avoided by getting up a contest between particular places in the country. It must be decided on the section as it is. No country member who votes against it because of its form, can shield himself from responsibility. He is not in favor of the removal of the seat of government from the city. I venture the assertion that if the section be not adopted, the seat of government cannot be removed, whilst New Orleans is not excluded from the candidacy, she can and will defeat it. It is well ascertained that a large majority of the delegates in this body are in favor of the removal of the seat of government, into the interior of the State, and yet they could not locate it, because the city delegation by throwing its weight against every specified place, can prevent its being fixed on. The members to the legislature, as well as the members of this body, have their local preferences, and the representation from the city have thrown their weight in the legislature as well as in this Covention, so as to prevent its being permanently established in the country. It is therefore certain, that unless this section, as it is, be embodied in the constitution, the permanent removal of the seat of government from the city is impossible.

The delegate from New Orleans, (Mr. Grymes,) whilst he admitted that the seat of government ought to be removed, for which acknowledgement I thank him, objects to the section, because, he says, that if adopted, we shall have a floating capital, an ambulatory seat of government, and he refers to our past experience, for proof of the fact. He says the seat of government was carried to Donaldsonville and then brought back to the city, and that such will again be the result if the section referred to be adopted. It is true, he adds, that they will not bring it to the city, but they will take it from one country village to another. I think that our past experience will justify no such conclusion. There is no analogy between the provision proposed, and the old one on the same subject. This declares that the seat of government shall not be removed after it is fixed by the legislature, without the consent of four-fifths of the members of both houses of the legislature. How was it before? Why Sir, it was in the power of a bare majority to change it when they saw fit.

The seat of government was once removed and then brought back, and we are now told that this shews it cannot be kept out of the city. And how did it happen that it was brought back? Why Sir, appropriations were not made to prepare suitable buildings for the accommodation of the servants of the people, and every thing was done indirectly to restore the seat of government to the city, by making it inconvenient or impossible for them to remain where they were. It was an open question, and the city delegation and those who preferred the city for the seat of government, absented themselves from the legislature, and then complained that there was no quorum to do the public business; that the public business could not be done in the country, and by preventing appropriations to complete the public buildings, and uttering continual complaints, they carried their point, and the legislature returned to the city. This would again be the result were it to remain an open question. This will be effectually prevented were we to adopt the section proposed; and the seat of government will be finally established, as the good of the whole State requires it to be, at a distance from our great commercial capital.

The Chair (Mr. Saunders) decided that the motion for reconsideration was not in order.

His decision was maintained.

The hour having arrived for taking the final vote upon the adoption of the constitution, Mr. VOORHIES called for the yeas and nays on that question.

The PRESIDENT (Mr. Walker) put the question "shall this constitution be adopted?"

Messrs. Joseph Walker, president, Beatty, Bourg, Brazeale, Brent, Brumfield, Burton, Cade, Carriere, Chambliss, Chinn, Covillion, Culbertson, Downs, Eustis, Garrett, Guion, Hudspeth, Hmble, Hynson, Kenner, Labauve, Ledoux, Lewis, McCallop, McRae, Marigny, Mayo, Peets, Penn, Porter, Prescott of Avoyelles, Prescott of St. Landry, Preston, Prudhomme, Pugh, Read, Roselius, Saunders, Scott of Baton Rouge, Scott of Madison, Sellers, Soule, Splane, Stephens, Taylor of Assumption, Taylor of St. Landry, Trist, Voorhies, Waddill, Wadsworth, Wederstrandt and Winder voted in the affirmative—55 yeas; and

Messrs. Aubert, Benjamin, Boudousquie, Briant, Cenas, Claiborne, Conrad of Orleans, Conrad of Jefferson, Derbes, Garcia, Legendre, Mazureau, Roman, St. Amand and Winchester voted in the negative—15 nays.

Absent members: Messrs. Grymes, King, O'Brian, Porche, Ratliff, Scott of Feliciana and Wikoff.

Mr. BENJAMIN said he voted no becausehe did not think his constituents would accept a constitution prescribing their territory and sixty miles around it as unworthy of being the seat of government. Had such a provision as that been submitted to them in the act providing that the sense of the people be taken as to the propriety of calling a convention, they would have voted against the call.

Mr. CENAS said,

Mr. President:—The position in which I find myself is peculiarly embarrassing and perplexing. With much that is admirable in the new constitution, and which meets with my most hearty concurrence, I am, nevertheless, constrained to withhold my assent to its final adoption. The article relative to the seat of government involves a principle so utterly at war with the spirit of our institutions, and so antidemocratic in its operation and tendencies, that, as a representative upon this floor of the constituency principally brought under its proscriptive ban, I cannot, conscientiously, give my sanction to an instrument whose whole character is, in my humble opinion, marred by this obnoxious and hideous feature. For this reason, therefore, Mr. President, I am compelled to request that my vote be recorded in the negative.

Mr. CHINN said,

Mr. President:—It will be recollected by this Convention, that when it first met I entertained opinions as to the powers of the Convention, different from those entertained by a large majority. I believed then and I still believe, that the Convention had no power to go beyond the specifications of the legislature. Entertaining that opinion, it might have been reasonably expected that on this occasion my answer would have been no. But, as I desire to afford the people an opportunity of passing upon our labors, I vote yes; reserving to myself the right at another time and place, of giving my final opinion on this important subject.

Mr. C. M. CONRAD said that he had hesitated for some time how he should vote upon the final question of the adoption of the constitution; but when the clause was adopted providing that the result of the labors of this body should be submitted to others than those that had called it into existence, his doubts vanished. He was not at Jackson when the direct question was put whether the Convention could go beyond the specifications in the act calling it into existence, and upon which specifications the sense of the people had alone been taken, and had, therefore, been unable to give expression to his opinion upon that point. He thought the Convention had not the power to go beyond the specifications, and this opinion was participated in by a large number of his constituents. Had they have dreamed that plenary powers would have been assumed, they would never have voted for the calling of the Convention. Be that, however, as it may, the question is decided; the evil is done, and the only resource left, is that the people have the opportunity of confirming this assumption of power, or of refusing to accept its fruits. If the decision were left to those that voted for the calling of the Convention, the violation of the power would be less obnoxious; the electors would decide the question; but as it is, one violation has been followed by another.

I cannot yield my assent to an instrument which has been brought forth under such circumstances. I would consider myself derelict in duty were I to do so. Moreover, I consider the clause prescribing the city of New Orleans a detestable proscription, and in its results it will be attended with pernicious consequences to the State. The absurd predjudice which dictated it, once before perverted the better judgment of the legislature and induced them to make the experiment. The seat of government was removed; but what was the result? The very persons that voted to take it away, voted to bring it back. The lessons of experience were not lost upon them, however unavailing those lessons may have been with a majority in this body. The city is the only place where the legislature of the State will be exposed to the broad glare of light. Where its acts will be laid bare to the rigid scrutiny of an active and vigilant press; and where concealment and obscurity cannot serve as shields from responsibility. At any rate, it cannot be expected that I should countenance such a stigma upon the constituency that I have the honor of representing that the meeting of the legislature in the city, if not prohibited, would contaminate the purity of that body.

Mr. Claiborne said: As I am about to cast my humble vote against this constitution, I desire, Mr. President, in the delicate and painful position in which I find myself placed, in regard to so important a matter, briefly to explain my motives and sentiments. I am animated, sir, by no captious opposition to the will of the majority; against that will, far greater abilities than mine, have struggled in vain upon this floor. And if it be subsequently ratified by the people, I shall of course yield to it with the submission and good grace, I hope, that are due by every citizen to the doctrine of our institutions, that the majority must govern. Not, sir, as has been truly said, because the majority is always right, or that its rule be always gentle, but because it being necessary that the one or the other should govern; it would be far more unjust to yield to the will of the minority than to that of the majority. Still, sir, I contend that in such an important and delicate matter as the framing of the social contract under which all are to live and to be governed, the feelings, the convictions, and even the prejudices of any respectable minority, should be treated with some regard, and some spirit of mutual concession. For, sir, where is the best guarantee of that stability which is so essential an element in the fundamental law of the land, of that respect which it should command, and of the prosperity which a people should enjoy under it? Is it not, sir, in the attachment to it of the great mass of that people, in the willing acquiescence of the remainder, and in the general contentment and security which it should afford to all sections of country, as well as to all essential interests in society? In these permanent requisites of a constitution, I fear, sir, that this Convention has failed, and that it will leave deep traces of discontent behind. When Solon made a system of laws for his country, he admitted that he had not made the best possible laws, but those that were the best suited to the Athenian people; but I doubt, sir, whether we can claim for our work even the latter of these qualities, of which the ancient law-giver had boasted. That our constitution is a masterpiece of wisdom, none, I presume, will assert; nor is it, in my humble opinion, the best adapted to the people of Louisiana. We have gone far beyond the objects of that people, when they called for a Convention; they called for reform, and not, as I believe, for experiments, amounting almost to a violation. We have unnecessarily attacked too many local feelings and interests; shocked too many customs and habits.

In our formation of the judiciary department, I see a change in the organization of that power, leaving scarcely a remnant behind. I see many men who are doomed to be superseded in office, and room to be made for others; but still I should be happy if I could as clearly perceive that the great object of reform will be effectually attained. I am convinced, on the other hand, that in regard to the great city, which I represent in part, the system adopted will be far from answering its wants, its habits, and its various business and interests; whilst I perceive, more and more, that it is decidedly obnoxious to a very large and respectable portion of the country. It would seem to me that we might equally have attained the end proposed, and respected the habits and desires of so large a portion of the population, by confining the parish judges to their judicial functions, and stripping them of those various other functions and attributes, against which the outcry of complaint had justly arisen.

In the legislative department I humbly concieve that we have made the house of representatives too numerous, according to our mode of conducting legislative proceeding, for order and promptitude in business, as well as for economy. Whilst the senate is scarcely more than an epitome of the other house, with no essential difference in the mode of election or qualifications for office, and not answering sufficiently its object in the theory of our government, as a check upon the precipitate action, or the passions that may temporarily prevail in the other house. There should have been in the senate, I conceive, (and I should have been perfectly satisfied with it in that branch of the government alone,) some acknowledged protection of the principle of property—the great stimulus to industry, without which civilized society could not exist, and mankind would fall into barbarism; but, sir, the word property, if not yet the principle, appears to have been repudiated in this constitution, for if it be found in it at all, it is, I believe, by accident.

In avowing these sentiments, I repel and contume the charge that has so often been directed against them, of restriction and exclusion, of invidious distinctions between the rich and the poor. The acquisition of property is often to the competition of all, and the honest and industrious poor who labor to obtain it, are as much interested in its protection, as those who already enjoy it. I am, sir, for a constitution that would secure to itself the attachment of the rich as well as that of the poor, by giving to each his proper share of protection. I am for a constitution under which, whilst the poor man would be contentedly at work below, or resting after his toil, the rich man, who would have leisure to do so, would be on the watch tower above to warn him of the dangers that might threaten their common interests, their common liberties, and their common country.

I will not allow myself to comment upon the unparalleled provision that has made a constitutional proscription of nearly one half of the State, in the choice of the seat of government to be made by the legislature; that section speaks for itself to every mind that is not obscured by prejudice or passion. These, sir, and other defects and oddities, that have been pointed out in debate, and which will be now left to public discussion, form my objections to this instrument. It contains, I know, many valuable provisions which I should regret to loose, but most of them may be equally attained by the proper action of the legislature; and others will be but delayed even if this constitution should be rejected by the people. As I cannot here separate the good that is in it from what I consider to be the overweighing rubbish, I feel myself painfully compelled to vote against the whole. If it be a crime, I have, therefore, avowed myself to be strongly conservative in my principles, and am prepared to suffer the penalty; but I have at least the consolation and the consciousness in my own heart of meaning and understanding by such principles, those that are the best calculated to secure and to preserve for ourselves and our posterity, the blessings of good government and of rational liberty. As the opposite doctrines of radicalism, as they are called, are marching with rapid strides over the land, God grant, if they should finally prevail, that we may be wrong, and that our adversaries may be right in the attainment of the great objects which both profess to have in view—the happiness of the people and the prosperity of our institutions.

Mr. Culbertson said that the clause in relation to the city of New Orleans, he would avow, would have deterred him from voting in favor of the constitution, if the vote in this body was to by final. But, inasmuch as the question of its final adoption is submitted to the people., I shall vote aye.

Mr. Downs said that nothing had astonished him more than the reasons that he had had assigned for voting against the constitution. The constitution certainly contained some clauses that did not meet his approbation; some of them operated to the prejudice of the section of the State which he represented, but the idea because they are there, and that the constitution is not perfect, that therefore it ought to be rejected, is one of the most novel he had ever heard. It was not to be expected that every provision would meet unanimous approbation. The only thing that has governed my vote, said Mr. Downs, is the tout ensemble of the instrument that meets my approbation, and that is as much as any individual member ought to expect, unless he made the constitution to suit himself, and embodied in it all his own notions.

As for the clause in relation to the seat of government, which it is said proscribes the city of New Orleans, I have invariably on every occasion when it has come up, voted against it. But there is, after all, nothing of that odious character in it which has been assumed. If the seat of government were fixed in the constitution out of the city of New Orleans, the city would in the same manner be proscribed. It is not intended as an odious exclusion of the city, but is conceived to be the only means of placing the legislature of the State where it will be conducted more calmly and more quietly. I do not think the clause necessary to effect the object, and would therefore have dispensed with it. But, at the same time, I cannot understand why it should interfere with the adoption of the constitution, whose provisions otherwise are admitted to be good in the main.

If it be expected, by this singular mode of attack, that the people are to be prejudiced beforehand with the constitution, and in that way they will be induced to reject it, such an expectation is doomed, I predict, to a most woful disappointment. This early beating to arms, instead of bringing the people to the curb of the opposition, will decide them to assume the defence of the constitution. So far, then, from regretting this premature indication of hostility, I am very glad the demonstration has been made, in order that the people may be prepared to meet it.

Mr. Labauve said that he had endeavored fully to carry out the will of his constituents, and to represent their wishes. He had freely blamed what he thought injudicious in the constitution; but after all, he was aware that, as a member of this body, he was finally bound to submit to the will of the majority. This constitution had been the result of the joint labors and experience of all, and whatever may be its imperfections, he conceived it his duty to submit it to that will. He would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. Lewis said: I vote in the affirmative because, upon the whole, I consider the constitution a good one, and notwithstanding its defects, defects which I anticipated, I think it will be acceptable to the mass of my constituents.

Mr. Marigny voted aye for this reason alone, that the approval or rejection of the constitution was with the people.

Mr. Kenner: Mr. President, I arise, sir, to assign the reasons for my vote on the final adoption of this constitution, with the less embarrassment, as the example has been set me by several whose names precede mine on the roll. Had, sir, a stranger entered this hall this morning, for the first time to witness our proceedings, he might have been easily led to believe that the only object of the calling of this Convention had been to locate the seat of government, or at least, that that was about all we had succeeded in accomplishing. For, sir, the sum and substance of every objection to this constitution, of every member who has as yet addressed the house, has been that the seat of government cannot, after the year 1848, be located within a circumference of sixty miles of the city of New Orleans—and that, consequently, they are constrained to vote against the constitution, as they think that thus great injustice has been done their constituents living within this "pestiferous circle," as it has been called.

Now, sir, I ask the members to pause and reflect, before casting their votes. I I ask, sir, was our mission here alone to locate the seat of government, and have we, sir, accomplished nothing else, after a long and arduous session of four months? Let us recur, for a few moments, to what we have done since assembling. What then have we done?

First, we have removed an odious restriction on the right of suffrage—the property qualification—the more odious that it prevented many an honest and worthy citizen to cast his vote, when those whose consciences were less tender, marched boldly to the polls, frequently under the mere semblance of having paid a tax, and thus fulfilling the mere letter of the law.

Sir, this restriction we have removed, and have established a principle more in accordance with human rights and the spirit of the age, that of universal suffrage.

Again, sir, we have equalized and extended representation, more particularly in the senate. We have given New Orleans something nearer her just right in the upper branch of the legislature.

Again, sir, we have by establishing the system of biennial legislation and confining the term to sixty days, removed one of the greatest curses ever inflicted on our country. I mean, sir, exess of legislation; the enacting laws one year to be repealed the next; to say nothing of this, the great saving to the public treasury.

Again, sir, we have diminished the patronage of the executive, by placing in the hands of the people themselves the appointment of most of their parochial officers.

Again, sir, we have effected great changes, and I hope great reforms in the judiciary—perhaps the most important of all the departments in our State government—reforms which we have been told, by the many distinguished occupants of the bench and members of the legal profession who hold seats on this floor, were much needed, and for which the people have been long crying aloud.

Again, sir, we have forbidden the legislature to pledge the faith of the State to enable private corporations to borrow money for the purposes of banking, internal improvements, or other wild and visionary schemes, or to borrow money for the State itself except in case of war or domestic insurrection. Now, sir, are these great changes nothing? Are they, sir, to be placed in the scale and weighed as a feather against the question of the location of the seat of government? I sincerely trust not.

Again, sir, we have ordered that the legislature shall establish a system of free public schools, to be supported by the proceeds of the public lands or by taxation, where the child of every man in the State shall be taught the rudiments of an education. And, sir, let me here remark, that should the legislature carry out our intention, as I hope to God they may, we shall have conferred a greater benefit on the rising generation of this "proscribed" sixty miles, than if every legislature of every State in the Union should hold not only yearly but monthly sessions, within the walls of this city. One word, sir, with regard to the words "proscribed" and "proscription." Gentlemen tell us, that because we have determined that the seat of government shall not be located within sixty miles of New Orleans, that it is an "odious proscription" of this city and their constituents. Sir, is this a fact? Had we have located the seat of government in New Orleans, would not that by a parity of reasoning, have been a virtual proscription of the rest of the State? Had we have located it in Donaldsonville, as I last night proposed, would the good sense of this Convention have sustained the member from Catahoula or Ouachita, had he have risen in his seat and objected to it, that it was an odious proscription of his parish? Sir, he would have been laughed at. The seat of government must be located some where, and it is, I had almost said, ridiculous, that the location of it in any one spot is an "odious proscription" of the rest of the State.

Away then, sir, with these pitiful local feelings and prejudices. Away, then, with this dog-in-the-manger feeling that because New Orleans cannot have the seat of government, no one else shall; and let us vote for this constitution on the higher and nobler ground of its extending and securing greater civil and political rights to the great body of our citizens.

I vote aye, because we have established universal suffrage.

I vote aye, because we have extended and equalized representation.

I vote aye, because we have set a limit to legislation, and diminished executive patronage.

I vote aye, because we have reformed the judiciary.

I vote aye, because we have ordered the legislature to establish a glorious system of free public schools.

I vote aye, because we have removed the seat of government from the city of New Orleans.

Mr. Porter said, although I am not in favor of all the provisions in this constitution, yet I will vote for it, because I believe it incomparably better than the old one:

First, because the governor is elected without the intervention of the legislature; and secondly, because the right of suffrage is extended, and no property qualification required in the electors or elected; thirdly, because some of the appointing power is taken from the governor; fourthly, because the people are to elect all their most important parish officers; fifthly, because the tenure of judical office is limited; sixthly, because an ad valorem system of taxation is established; seventhly, because the legislature is limited to biennial sessions, and restricted to sixty days; eighthly, because the legislature is prohibited from pledging the faith of the State, or granting banking privileges; and ninthly, because a system of common schools has been adopted.

Mr. PRESTON thought the constitution did not yet attain the popular wishes: it was not yet sufficiently radical, to make use of the common expression for reform. But, he voted for it under the firm hope, that it would be the prelude to a further extension of the popular franchise.

Mr. ROMAN assigned the following as his reasons:

1st. I vote against the adoption of this constitution, because the Convention that framed it, would never have been convened if the majority of the people had foreseen that the constitution of 1812 would have been entirely abrogated to substitute in its place, a constitution, in which conservative principles are almost all trodden under foot.

2d. Because in extending the right of suffrage, the majority in the Convention have not sufficiently penetrated the necessity of confiding that right to those only that are identified with the State, and because the functionaries who may be called on to preside over elections, will have no guide to enable them to determine who have, or who have not, the right of suffrage.

3d. Because the composition of the senate is such, that it cannot serve as a check upon the popular branch of the legislature, and because the latter body being too numerous, it will be too costly and unwieldy in conducting the public business.

4th. Because the casual and uncertain tenure of office for the judges of the supreme court and district courts, will unfortunately have the effect of placing those responsible offices in a state of dependence upon the political parties of the day; and further, that the election by the people of justices of the peace, clerks of courts and sheriffs will make the impartial administration of justice still more difficult.

For these reasons, and because a portion of this constitution is put into operation before its submission to the people, I vote in the negative.

Mr. READ voted aye because he believed it was the best constitutton in the world.

Mr. ROSELIUS said he had serious objections to raise to the constitution, and if the final vote had depended upon this body, his name would have been found in the negative. He must say too that serious doubts had arisen in his mind in relation to that clause in the ordinance conferring the right of suffrage upon the question of the adoption of the new constitution, to persons not recognized as voters under the existing constitution. He did not mean doubts as to the power of the Convention to pass this cluase, for he had specially denied that power in the Convention, and did not believe that the commissioners of elections conscientiously could carry it into effect; but doubts as to the expediency of placing it there in view of the difficulties to which it might give rise. He trusted the officers who were sworn to support the present constitution until it was superseded, would not so far forget the obligations of an oath, as to pay to it the slightest attention. He considered it an usurpation of power, a perfect nullity, and in that view only (as the question is referred to our constituents for decision,) I vote yes.

Mr. SELLERS voted aye because he thought the new constitution an improvement upon the old. There were some objectionable features in his mind, but among these was not the removal of the seat of government.

I vote in favor of this constitution because it effects many of the changes demanded by the constittuency which has sent us to this Convention, and above all because it places nearer the people, the means of providing hereafter for such improvements in the social compact as their experience may point out and their wants render necessary.

Mr. SPLANE: I vote yes, although there are some clauses in the constitution which do not meet my concurrence. At the same time, I cannot refrain from expressing my surprise that some of the Orleans delegates should vote against it upon so feeble a pretext as the removal of the seat of government.

Resolutions were then introduced relative to the per diem to be allowed to the secretary, minute clerk, reporters, &c., for bringing up the arrear work of the Convention.

Mr. KENNER then submitted the folowing resolution:

Resolved, that the Convention do hereby express their acknowedgements to the Hon. JOSEPH WALKER, President of the Convention, for the impartial, faithful and able manner with which he has presided over the deliberations of this body, during its protracted session.

Whereupon, Mr. WALKER addressed the Convention as follows:

Gentlemen of the Convention:

The resolution you have just passed, so complimentary to my conduct as presiding officer of this assembly, after a protracted session of more than four months duration, is a flattering proof of your favorable opinion, which I shall ever remember and appreciate as one of the most pleasing events of my life, and in return for which I have nothing to offer you but my heartfelt gratitude and most profound acknowledgements. That I may have erred in the discharge of the complex duties of my station, I shall not pretend to deny. But I beg to assure you gentlemen, that whatever errors I may have committed have been unintentional.

To have been honored by my constituents with a seat in this assembly, was a mark of distinction sufficient to gratify my highest aspirations; but to be selected by this assembly, composed of gentlemen of so much intelligence and respectability, to preside over their deliberations, was much more than any merits I possess entitled me to expect.

Taking into view the many difficult and important questions which the Convention has been called upon to decide, the general course of our proceedings has been characterized by a spirit of moderation and forbearance called for by the dignity and importance of the occasion.

The deep interest which members from different portions of the State have felt to secure to the constituency by which they were severally elected, a just proportion of power in the legislative department of the State, has occasionally given rise to debate that has characterized a portion of our proceedings upon that subject, with a feeling which, under the circumstances, it was not unreasonable to expect, but which could not have been desired. I cherish a hope, however, that by the mutual concession and compromise by which this difficult subject has been adjusted, a result has been produced to which the people for whom we have acted will yield their assent and approbation.

If in the course of animated discussion and momentary excitement, expressions have escaped members calculated to irritate, I am persuaded that a feeling of perfect harmony has since been restored, and that we shall now separate with mutual feelings of kindness and good will towards each other.

We have been long and arduously engaged in the responsible duties assigned to us by our constituents, of amending and changing the organic law of the State, and the constitution which has been framed is about to be submitted to the people for their ratification or rejection.

That it will meet the entire approbation of our constituency is not to be expected. I think, however, that we may indulge a reasonable hope that it will be received by the people as a great improvement upon the constitution of 1812, and as the best that the discordant opinions of members has enabled us to make.

We may be permitted to say that, though we have not done all, we have done much; we have provided for the election of the executive, without the intervention of the legislature, except upon extraordinary occasions. We have extended the right of suffrage, equalized represention in both houses of the general assembly, remoddled the judiciary system of the State, fixed a limit to the tenure of office of the judges, provided that the absurdity in a republic of offices for life shall no longer be exhibited in this State, prohibited the incorporation of banks and the creation of State debts, except in extraordinary contingencies and to a limited extent, and have, by salutary provisions, laid a permanent foundation for a system of free schools.

Keeping in view, therefore, gentlemen, these improvements, let us, I pray you, return to our constituents resolved to cast oil upon the troublad waters, as far as in our power lies. He who shall contribute most to so desirable an end will deserve well of his country, and will most assuredly receive that appellation—the highest reward a public servant can receive.

We are now, gentlemen, about to separate, many of us, in all probability, never to meet again; may you return safely into the bosom of your families and friends—may health and happiness attend you through life, and may you long live to see our beloved Louisiana prosperous at home and respected by her sister States.

Mr. CADE offered the following resolution, which was adopted unanimously:

"Resolved, That the thanks of the Convention be tendered to HORATIO DAVIS, Esq., secretary of the Convention, for the assiduity and ability with which he has discharged the difficult and important duties of secretary."

Mr. SELLERS offered the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the thanks of the Convention be tendered to the clergy of the city of New Orleans, for opening the proceedings daily with prayer.

Whereupon the Convention adjourned.

THURSDAY, May 15, 1845.

The Convention met pursuant to adjournment.

The Hon. Mr. STEPHENS opened the proceedings with prayer.

Mr. MILES TAYLOR offered the following resolutions:

Resolved, That when this Convention adjourns, it adjourn to meet to-morrow, at 12 o'clock, m.

Be it further resolved, That the President of the Convention be authorized to adjourn this body to-morrow, the 16th instant, sine die.

The foregoing resolutions were adopted.

Mr. SOULE then offered a resolution for the pay of the reporters, to enable them to bring up the arrear debates, which was adopted.

Mr. CENAS offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the thanks of the Convention be and are hereby tendered to WILLIAM DE BUYS, Esq, state treasurer, for having kept the accounts of the Convention, and paying the warrants of the members and officers.

Mr. CENAS explained that this was no portion of Mr. De Buys' duty, and that he had kindly undertaken it for the benefit of the Convention.

The resolution was unanimously adopted.

Whereupon the Convention adjourned.

FRIDAY, May 16, 1845.

The Convention met pursuant to adjournment.

The Rev. Mr. CLARK opened the proceedings with prayer.

Resolutions were offered and adopted, allowing extra compensation to the reporters, clerks, and translators

Mr. LEWIS moved that the delegates be called in the order of the parishes, to sign the constitution. It was finally decided they should be called in the order of senatorial districts.

The committee of enrollment reported that the constitution was not yet ready for signature.

Whereupon, the Convention adjourned until 5 o'clock, p. m.

Mr. MARIGNY said in signing the constitution, it was the second time he had performed the same ceremony. May God ordain it should be the last.

Mr. GARCIA said he had voted against the constitution, because there were several articles in it which he could not sanction. He was persuaded, moreover, that a majority of his constituents were opposed to it, but nevertheless, he considered his signature as nothing more than an authentication of the document.

Mr. BOUDOUSQUIE said, that as it might hereafter appear inconsistent were he to sign a constitution against which he had voted. He would decline signing it, and he would avail himself of the occasion to declare, that he had voted against it, and now refused to sign it, because it contained certain dispositions the objects and the results of which he never could approve. The majority differed with him, and he trusted it would secure the happiness of the State. He however owed it to himself, and to the position he held, to declare that he would not sign it.

Mr. DERBES said that he had voted against the constitution, but yet he would sign it, because he presumed his signature could not be understood as conflicting with his vote, and with his well known and expressed opinions. If the vote were to be taken de novo, he would vote again against the constitution, because it did not meet his expectations.

A resolution was then adopted, allowing absent members until January next, to sign the constitution.

The Convention then made provision to pay for the enrollment of the constitution, and for some other incidental expenses.

Mr. GARCIA presented the following resolution, which was adopted.

Resolved, That the thanks of the Convention be and they are hereby tendered to Mr. James Foulhouse, reporter of the debates in French, and to Mr. Robert J. Whereupon, the honorable JOSEPH WALKER announced that the Convention had adjourned sine die.

Official Reporer to the Convention.

CONSTITUTION

STATE OF LOUISIANA.

ADOPTED IN CONVENTION, MAY 14, 1845.

PREAMBLE.

We the people of the State of Louisiana do ordain, and establish this Constitution.

TITLE I.

DISTRIBUTION OF POWERS.

ART. 1. The powers of the Government of the State of Louisiana shall be divided into three distinct departments, and each of them be confided to a separate body of magistracy, to wit: those which are legislative to one; those which are executive to another and those which are judicial to another.

ART. 2. No one of these departments nor any person holding office in one of them shall exercise power properly belonging to either of the others, except in the instances hereinafter expressly directed or permitted.

TITLE II.

LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.

ART. 3. The Legislative power of the State shall be vested in two distinct branches, the one to be styled the House of Representatives, the other the Senate, and both "the General Assembly of the State of Louisiana."

ART. 4. The members of the House of Representatives shall continue in service for the term of two years from the day of the closing of the general elections.

ART. 5. Representatives shall be chosen on the first Monday in November, every two years; and the election shall be completed in one day. The General Assembly shall meet every second year, on the third Monday in January next ensuing the election, unless a different day be appointed by law, and their sessions shall be held at the seat of Government.

ART. 6. No person shall be a Representative, who, at the time of his election is not a free white male, and has not been for three years a citizen of the United States, and has not attained the age of twenty-one years, and resided in the State for the three years next preceeding the election, and the last year thereof, in the parish for which he may be chosen.

ART. 7. Elections for Representatives for the several parishes or Representative districts shall be held at the several election precincts established by law. The Legislature may delegate the power of establishing election precincts to the parochial or municipal authorities.

ART. 8 Representation in the House of Representatives, shall be equal and uniform, and shall be regulated and ascertained by the number of qualified electors. Each parish shall have at least one Representative: No new parish shall be created with a territory less than six hundred and twenty-five square miles, nor with a number of electors less than the full number entitling it to are presentative, nor when the creation of such new parish would leave any other parish without the said extent of territory and number of electors.

The first enumeration to be made by the State authorities under this Constitution shall be made in the year 1847, the second in the year 1855; and the subsequent enumerations shall be made every tenth year thereafter, in such manner as shall be prescribed by law for the purpose of ascertaining the total population and the number of qualified electors in each parish and election district.

At the first regular session of the Legislature after the making of each enumeration, the Legislature shall apportion the representation amongst the several parishes and election districts on the basis of qualified electors as aforesaid. A representative number shall be fixed, and each parish and election district shall have as many representatives as the aggregate number of its electors will entitle it to, and an additional Representative for any fraction exceeding one half the representative number. The number of Representatives shall not be more than one hundred nor less than seventy.

That part of the parish of Orleans situated on the left bank of the Mississippi shall be divided into nine representative districts as follows, viz:

1st. First district to extend from the line of the parish of Jefferson to the middle of Benjamin, Estelle and Thalia streets.

2d. Second district to extend from the last mentioned limits to the middle of Julia street, until it strikes the New Orleans canal, thence down said canal to the lake.

3d. Third district to comprise the residue of the Second Municipality.

4th. Fourth district to extend from the middle of Canal street to the middle of St. Louis street, until it reaches the Metairie road, thence along said road to the New Orleans canal.

5th. TUESDAY, January, 14, 1845.

Pursuant to adjournment the Convention of the State of Louisiana, elected for the purpose of amending, altering and changing the Constitution of the State of Louisina, met at the St. Louis Hall, in the city of New Orleans.

The President, the Hon. J. E. WALKER, called the Convention to order.

The President submitted to the Convention that a resolution had been adopted at Jackson, on the 8th of August, 1844, last past, authorising the president to invite the clergymen in and about Jackson, to open in turn the sittings of the Convention, and inquire whether it was the will of the Convention that the resolution should apply to New Orleans.

Whereupon, Mr. LEWIS offered the following resolution, which was unanimously adopted:

"Resolved, That the president be au"thorized to invite each of the divines in
"and about the city of New Orleans, to
"daily open in turn the deliberations of

Your committee first applied to the honorable the house of representatives for the purpose of procuring the hall of their sittings, for the use of the Convention; the house having refused to grant it, your committee were then under the necessity of seeking some other suitable place, and to provide the necessary furniture to enable the Convention to resume their labors. The account for the furniture will be presented to you in a few days, and will amount to about one thousand dollars.

Your committee applied to Mrs. Hawley, the lessee of the St. Louis ball room, with whom they made the following arrangements, subject to your approval; Mrs. Hawley furnishes the ball room and five rooms, destined for the use of the committees and clerks of the Convention. The principal room to be used by the Convention during its sittings, unless after the adjournment of the legislature the Convention should prefer the hall of the house of representatives.

Your committee have agreed to allow Mrs. Hawley fifteen dollars per day for the use of the said hall and rooms.

Your committee are under the impression that this room in every respect is suitable for the meetings of the Convention. They would observe that Mrs. Hawley reserves to herself the privilege of retaining the room on the 17th, 24th and 31st of January, and on the 4th of February, for the purpose of giving Society Balls, and will require it on those days at 4 o'clock, P. M.

Your committee deem it likewise proper to state for your information, that the City Council, of the First Municipality, design to place chains across the corners of Royal, Chartres and St. Louis streets, during the sittings of the Convention, so that their deliberations may not be disturbed by the running of carriages and other vehicles.

20. After a motion is stated by the president, or read by the secretary, it shall be deemed to be in possession of the Convention, but may be withdrawn at any time before a decision or amendment.

21. When a question is under debate, no motion shall be received, but to adjourn; to lay on the table; for the previous question; to postpone to a day certain; to commit or amend; to postpone indefinitely; which several motions shall have precedence in the order in which they are arranged; and no motion to postpone to a day certain, to commit or postpone indefinitely, being decided, shall be again allowed on the same day, and at the same stage of the proposition.

22. A motion to adjourn shall always be in order; that and the motion to lay on the table, shall be decided without debate.

Mr. Downs moved to amend it by striking out the words "that and the motion to lay on the table." His motion was carried by the casting vote of the president.

The rule as amended, viz: "A motion "to adjourn shall always be in order, and "shall be decided without debate," was adopted.

23. All questions except those enumerated in rule 21st, shall be put in the order they are moved, except that in filling up blanks, the largest sum and the largest time shall be first put.

Mr. LEONARD moved to amend this rule by striking out the words he have leave; the amendment was lost, and the rule adopted.

38. No member shall absent himself from the service of the Convention, unless he have leave, or be sick and unable to attend.

39. In order to insure the punctual attendance of the members, a call shall take place at the commencement of every day's sitting, by the secretary, who shall note the absentees; but shall remove the notes from the names of such members as appear in the course of that day's sitting; the names of those who do not attend, shall be entered on the Journal, and they shall receive no salary for that day, unless excused by the Convention.

40. A sergeant-at-arms shall be appointed to hold his office during the pleasure of the Convention, whose duty it shall be to attend the Convention during its sittings; to execute the commands of the Convention from time to time, together with all such process issued by authority thereof, as shall be directed to him by the president.

41. There shall be a committee of elections, whose duty it shall be to examine and report upon the certificate of election or other credentials of the members returned to serve in this Convention, and to take into consideration all such petitions and other matters touching elections and returns, as shall or may be presented or come in question, and be referred to them by the Convention, and on any other matter in relation to the manner, times and places of holding elections.

Rule 50. "It shall be a standing order, "that the Convention shall every day re"solve itself into a committee of the whole, "to consider the existing Constitution, and "such propositions for the amendment or "alteration thereof, as shall be referred to "or made in said committee."

On motion of Mr. RATLIFF, the said rule was rejected.

Mr. CONRAD moved for the re-consideration of the 30th rule, and his motion prevailed:

Rule 30. "When a motion has once been made, or carried in the affirmative or negative, it shall be in order for any member of the majority to move for the re-consideration thereof, provided it is made on the same day, or the next sitting day before the order of the day is taken up."

On motion of Mr. CONRAD, this rule was amended by the addition of the following proviso, viz: "provided further, that this rule do not apply to the provision of the Constitution which may have been adopted, and which shall always be subject to re-consideration, after two days' notice being given thereof," which motion was granted, and the rule adopted as amended.

On motion of Mr. RATLIFF, the Convention re-considered the 35th rule and rejected it.

Rule 51. "In forming the committee of the whole, the president shall leave the chair, and a chairman to preside in committee shall be appointed by the president;" which rule was rejected.

Rule 52. "In the committee of the whole Convention, the ayes and nays shall not be called." This rule was rejected.

Rule 47. "Every member in addressing the Convention, shall confine himself strictly to the subject matter under debate, and the address of no member to the Convention shall exceed one hour, unless by special permission of the Convention."

On motion of Mr. LEWIS, the rule was amended by striking out the words "and the address of no member to the Convention shall exceed one hour, &c.;" and the rule as amended, viz:

"Every member in addressing the Convention, shall confine himself strictly to the subject matter under debate;" was adopted.

Mr. ROMAN'S additional article, viz:

Rule 48. "There shall be appointed a standing committee of five, whose duty it shall be to revise, in English and French, every article of the Constitution, after it is adopted by the Convention, and report the same to the Convention on the next day, or as soon thereafter as practicable for its second reading,—was read and adopted.

Rule 49. "In all cases to which the above rules will not apply, the Jefferson's manual shall govern the Convention." The same was adopted.

Mr. DOWNS moved that the rules be printed in pamphlet form, in the French and English languages, and that one hundred copies be printed in each of the languages, which motion prevailed.

Mr. DOWNS moved to incorporate among the rules the following, viz: "The documents ordered to be printed by the Convention and the debates of the Convention, in pamphlet forms, shall be printed on paper of the same size of the printed journals of this Convention, and a copy sheet be bound with each journal, to be furnished to the members of the Convention, at the end of the session, and it shall be the duty of the printer of the Convention, to print one hundred additional copies ordered to be printed for the above purpose."

Mr. LEWIS moved to lay the same on the table subject to the call of the Convention; his motion prevailed.

Mr. SELLERS moved, that the statistical information called for by the Convention, and furnished by the reports of the State Treasurer, be printed as speedily as possible.

Mr. WADSWORTH moved that a committee be appointed to examine the reports, containing this statistical information before printing; which motion was lost.

Mr. SELLERS' motion was then adopted.

The Rev. Mr. NICHOLSON opened the proceedings by prayer.

The PRESIDENT submitted the following letter from the Right Rev. Blanc, Bishop of New Orleans:

NEW ORLEANS, January 15, 1845.

Bishopric of New Orleans:

SIR—I have the honor to acknowledge the reception of your note of this date.

In answer, I beg leave to state that as soon as I was informed that the Convention of our State had assembled in the town of Jackson, I instructed the clergy and laity under my charge to offer up public prayers, that the Almighty might in his goodness vouchsafe to direct the deliberations of the Convention, so that their decisions might be profitable to the people in whose behalf they were assembled, and that these prayers should be continued daily during the entire session of the Convention.

In relation to the daily opening prayer, I would beg leave, respectfully, to request in the name of my clergy, that we be dispen- sed from attending to it. Any arrange- ments which the divines, who may have be- gun, will make between themselves, will be agreeable to us. I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant.

Mr. DOWNS offered the following resolu- tion, viz:

"Resolved, That the sergeant-at-arms, under the direction of the president of the Convention, be directed to provide seats in the lobby, for the use of such persons as may attend the procedings of the Conven- tion, and suitable seats and tables for the reporters of the several newspapers of the city." Mouton, governor of the State of Louisiana, or his successors in office, in the sum of one thousand dollars, lawful money of the United States, the payment whereof, well and truly to be made unto the said governor, or his successors in office, we, and each of us, bind ourselves firmly, jointly and severally by these presents, dated this 14th day of August, 1844.

A. Kelly, (being the proprietor of said paper) on account of said subscription, on condition that he should give bond and security to the satisfaction of the president of the Convention for the faithful performance of his duties.

Now, therefore, if the above bound J. A. Kelly shall well and truly perform his duties, and fulfil the engagements to publish in French and English, the journal and debates of the Convention, three times per week, and furnish each member thereof with ten copies of each number of said paper, in French and English, at the rate of three times per week, according to the true intent and meaning of said resolution, or in default thereof pay all such damages and costs as may be sustained by reason of said failure, and return unto the treasury of the State of Louisiana, the said sum of one thousand dollars.—Then this obligation to be null and void, or else remain in full force and virtue in law.

On motion of Mr. Benjamin, the convention then took under consideration the 4th section of article 2d, as reported by the committee, viz:

Sec. 4. No person shall be a representative who, at the time of his election, is not a free white male citizen of the United States, and hath not attained the age of twenty-one years, and resided in the State two years next preceding his election, and the last year thereof in the parish for which he may be chosen.

To which Mr. Chinn offered the following amendment, viz: "And shall hold and possess in his own name, landed property to the value of at least five hundred dollars."

Mr. Voorhies moved to reject said amendment, and the yeas and nays being called for, resulted as follows:

Messrs. Brazeale, Brent, Brumfield, Barton, Cade, Carriere, Cenas, Chambliss, Claiborne, Conrad of Jefferson, Couvillion, Dunn, Eustis, Garrett, Grymes, Guion, Hudspeth, Humble, Hynson, Kenner, King, LaBauve, McCallop, McRae, Marigny, Mayo, Mazureau, O'Bryan, Peets, Porche, Porter, Prescott of Avoyelles, Prescott of St. Landry, Prudhomme, Ratliff, Read, Saunders, Scott of Baton Rouge, Scott of Feliciana, Scott of Madison, Sellers, Splane, Stephens, Taylor of Assumption, Taylor of St. Landry, Trist, Voorhies, Waddill, Wederstrandt, Wikoff, and Winder voted in the affirmative—52 ayes.

A call being made upon the President to declare whether the section reported by the committee, or that section as amended at previous sittings, was the section under consideration.

The President decided that the section as amended was before the convention.

Mr. Prescott of St. Landry, offered the following substitute, viz:

Section 4. "All persons enjoying the right of suffrage under this constitution, shall be eligible to a seat in the House of Representatives."

The President decided the substitute was inadmissible, because the division of a question was then pending before the convention, and could be received only after the decision of the two branches of the question by the convention.

Mr. PRESCOTT of St. Landry, then renewed the substitute offered by him and decided by the chair to be out of order, viz: Sec. 4. "All persons enjoying the right of suffrage under this constitution, shall be eligible to a seat in the House of Representatives."

The Sub-Committee, in explanation of the foregoing Statement, show:—that in all their calculations, whether upon population of whites, total population, federal numbers, or voters, instead of fixing an arbitrary limit to the number of the house, and then ascertaining how this number of representatives should be apportioned among the several parishes,

They adopted the double of the smallest parish as the representative number, and ascertained of how many members the house would be composed, on allowing one member to every parish having at least the half of this number, and one to every other parish for each time this divisor was contained in its population or votes, and one additional member for every fraction exceeding the half of this divisor.

Your Committee have made two calculations on voters, one by considering all the white inhabitants over 20, on the census of 1840, as voters, and the other on the votes polled at the presidential election of 1844. Though neither of those data exhibit with exactness the number of voters in the several parishes, they are the nearest approach to it within their power to obtain.

The Sub-Committee deem that this statement will explain itself sufficiently, by simply remarking, that (—) when placed before a number in the various columns of representatives, signifies that this number is a fraction exceeding the half of the representative number, for which an additional member has been allowed the parish on the same line with it, and that (✕) placed before a number, signifies that this is a fraction under one half of the representative number, and for which the parish is not represented.

That, to the parishes of Bossier, De Soto, Franklin, Morehead, Sabine, Tensas, and Vermilion, one representative each has been allowed on the supposition that they had sufficient population to entitle them to one representative, though they had no means of ascertaining the fact. They further show, that by reducing the representation of Orleans to one-fifth, as resolved on by the committee, and striking off one member each from Lafayette and Natchitoches, which have both been divided since the census on which their calculations are principally based, the basis of white population, taken from the census of 1840, would give a house of 77 members; on federal numbers, of 84; on voters, of 73; on total population, of 87, on votes at presidential election of 1844, of 98; and on federal numbers formed from tax roll of 1843, of 77 members.

All of which is respectfully submitted,

J. C. BEATTY, Chairman of Sub-Committee.

Mr. Preston moved to reject said amendment, which motion was lost.

Mr. Preston then moved to strike out from the 26th line, the words "and if no person have a majority," &c., to the end of the section, and insert in lieu thereof the words "but if two or more persons shall be equal and highest in the number of votes polled for lieutenant governor, one of them shall be immediately chosen lieutenant governor, by joint vote of the members of the general assembly," which motion was adopted.

Mr. Mayo moved to strike out, from the 30th line, the words "their votes shall be returned by the officers presiding over the elections, to the seat of government, addressed to the speaker of the house of representatives," and insert in lieu thereof the words "the returns of every election shall be sealed up and transmitted by the proper returning officer created by law, to the secretary of state, who shall deliver them to the speaker of the house of representatives," which motion was adopted,

Mr. Lewis then moved the adoption of the section as amended, viz:

The returns of every election shall be sealed up and transmitted, by the proper returning officer created by law, to the secretary of state, who shall deliver them to the speaker of the house of representatives, and on the second day of the session of the general assembly then next to be holden, the members of the general assembly shall meet in the house of representatives, to examine and count the votes. Mr. Saunders, chairman of the committee to whom was referred the 6th section of article 2d, as reported by the majority, with leave, submitted the following report and accompanying documents.

Sections reported by the committee of apportionment:

Sec. 8. Each parish shall be entitled to representation in proportion to its population, ascertained and calculated according to the principle of representation adopted in the constitution of the United States; provided, that no parish or city shall ever be entitled to more than one-fifth of the whole number of representatives.

Sec. 9. No new parish shall be created with an extent of territory less than four hundred square miles, not with a population less than the full representative number required at the time of its creation, to entitle it to a representative—nor shall any parish be so divided as to leave it with a smaller area or population than is above expressed.

SEC. 10. In the year 1846, and every tenth year thereafter, a census shall be made of the population of this State, in such manner as shall be prescribed by law, for the purpose of ascertaining the number of the federal population in each parish.

SEC. 11. At the first regular session of the legislature, after the making of each census, the legislature shall apportion the representation amongst the several parishes, on the basis of the federal population as aforesaid, and in the manner following, to-wit: some number shall be chosen as a representative number, which, when applied in making the apportionment, shall give a number of representatives not less than seventy nor more than one hundred; the number so chosen shall be taken as a divisor, and each parish shall be entitled to one representative for every time this divisor shall be found in the dividend formed of its representative population, and to one additional member for every fraction exceeding the one-half of the divisor---and any parish having a federal population less than the whole divisor, but exceeding one-half of it, shall be entitled to one representative, and the legislature shall be incompetent to act on any other subject matter, until the apportionment directed by this article shall have been made.

SEC. 12. The first representation under this constitution (ascertained as near may be, in accordance with the above principles,) shall continue until the first apportionment be made by the legislature, and shall be as follows, viz:

As soon as may be, after the United States census of 1850 shall have been taken and promulgated, and every ten years thereafter, the number of representatives shall be fixed and apportioned, according to the principles of this section, so as not to be less than seventy nor more than one hundred, and whenever a new parish shall be created, a separate representation shall at the same time be provided for it, which shall continue until the next decimal apportionment.

Mr. SAUNDERS, chairman of the committee to whom was referred the said section, submitted the following report, as a substitute for the same, viz:

SEC. 6. Each parish shall be entitled to representation in proportion to its population, ascertained and calculated according to the principle of representation adopted in the constitution of the United States; Provided, that no parish or city shall ever be en entitled to more than one-fifth of the whole number of representatives.

SEC. 7. No new parish shall be created with an extent of territory less than 400 square miles, nor with a population less than the full representative number required at the time of its creation, to entitle it to a representative; nor shall any parish be so divided as to leave it with a smaller area or population than is above expressed.

SEC. 8. In the year 1846, and every tenth year thereafter, a census shall be made of the population of this State, in such a manner as shall be prescribed by law, for the purpose of ascertaining the number of the federal population in each parish.

SEC. 9. At the first regular session of the legislature after the making of each census, the legislature shall apportion the representation amongst the several parishes on the basis of the federal population, as aforesaid, and in the manner following, to wit: some number shall be chosen as a representative number, which, when applied in making the apportionment, shall give a number of representatives not less than seventy nor more than one hundred; the number so chosen shall be taken as a divisor, and each parish shall be entitled to one representative for every time this divisor shall be found in the dividend formed of its representative population, and to one additional member for every fraction exceeding the one-half of the divisor; and any parish having a federal population less than the whole divisor, but exceeding one-half of it, shall be entitled to one representative; and the legislature shall be incompetent to act on any other subject matter, until the apportionment directed by this article shall have been made.

Sec. 10. The first representation under this constitution (ascertained as near as may be, in accordance with the above principles,) shall continue until the first apportionment be made by the legislature, and shall be as follows, viz:

Mr. Marigny moved that the whole matter be laid on the table, and made the special order of the day for to-morrow at 12, m., which motion was lost.

Mr. O'Bryan submitted the following as a substitute to the first section of the report, viz:

"Each parish shall have one representative, and beyond that if entitled to any more, in proportion to the number of voters in each; Provided, that no parish or city shall ever have more than one-sixth of the whole number of representatives."

On a question of order, the president decided said substitute to be out of order.

Mr. O'Bryan then moved to amend said section by striking out the words "its population ascertained and calculated according to the principle of representation adopted in the constitution of the United States."

And, pending the discussion on said motion, the Convention adjourned till to-morrow at 11 o'clock, a. m.

Note—Members absent: Messrs. Covillion, Garcia and Soulé, absent on account of illness; Messrs. Aubert, Brazeale, Cade, Guion, Lewis, Pugh, Scott of Madison and Splane, absent on leave.

Thursday, February 27, 1845.

The Convention met pursuant to adjournment.

The Rev. Mr. Goodrich opened the proceedings by prayer.

On motion, Mr. Chinn was excused for non-attendance, on account of illness.

Mr. Mayo, chairman of the committee on education, submitted the following report and resolutions, viz:

"As it is through the medium of education that the intellectual faculties of man are cultivated, and his physical and mental powers regulated and perfected, the subject would appear to justify as much attention and care as any other that can engage the attention of the legislator.

"This State has for many years acted with a degree of liberality, in making appropriations for the errection and support of colleges and academies, and for the education of indigent children.

"By the report of the State treasurer, dated 11th January, 1844, it appears that the sum of $1,710,559 40-100, from the year 1812 to the 31st December, 1844, has been expended by the State for the support of public schools, colleges, academies, seminaries and asylums; and by the same report it appears that $463,791 71-100, which is more than one-fourth of the whole sum, has been expended for the building and support of the colleges of Louisiana and Jefferson. The first of which is not now in operation; and owing to the want of a regular system of education, has not produced results that ought to have been expected from so large an amount of expenditure.

"The college of Jefferson is in operation, and has seventy or eighty students, as appears from the report of the committee of of the house of representatives on the subject of education, lately made to that body.

"The annual appropriation for that institution being $10,000, the annual expenditure for each student, supposing the number to be eighty, is $125, paid by the State, in addition to all the expenses of tuition, board, &c., which is paid by individuals.

"These facts are stated for no other purpose than to bring to view the disproportion in the expenditure, and actual waste of public money for want of a well regulated system of education.

"A large portion of the State is in a situation, in relation to schools, which is truly to be lamented; produced by various causes, some of which are peculiar to local situations where the population is extremely sparce, rendering it impracticable to support schools in the nighborhood, for want of a sufficient number of children to attend them without sending them from home to board, which many persons of large families either have not the means to do, or if they have, are not disposed to appropriate them for that purpose, in other neighborhoods where schools could be supported if the people desired. No interest or zeal appears to be felt on the subject, and children are permitted to grow up in ignorance, for want of a disposition on the part of the parent to educate them. The money that has been expended for the support of schools has in many, if not a majority of the parishes, failed to produce the beneficial results which were intended. Incompetent men have been employed as teachers, whose object has been to get the public money, more than to improve the children under their care; and when the public money, to which a school has been entitled, has been exhausted, the schools in many instances have been broken up, and no more taught in the neighborhood until another supply of money has been expected from the State to pay the teacher.

"Owing to facts like these, the children that have occasionally attended the schools have received, in many places, but little benefit from them. One of the causes of the failure in the expenditure of the funds of the State, distributed to the parishes generally, has been that indigent children only have been entitled to the benefits of the public funds. Men of the high sentiments and noble feelings that characterize the citizens of this State feel a repugnance at the thought of educating their children by the use of a fund that none but the poor and needy can be partakers of. Hence it is believed that many persons, unable to educate their children at their own expense, have too much pride and feel that it would be humiliating to themselves and their children to partake of a bounty thus offered. When the fact of partaking furnishes of itself evidence of their poverty and indigence; and though this may to some extent arise from false pride, still the fact exists, and the effect is the same as though the objection were a good one. Another cause of the failure has been that large expenditures have been made for building colleges and academies for the promotion of the higher branches of literature, before providing the means for teaching the first rudiments of a common education.

"The necessary steps ought first to be taken to place within the reach of the mass of the children throughout the State, such an education as will fit them for the higher branches, and in such a manner as to place all on an equal footing in the enjoyment of the benefits to be derived from the funds of the State. This would create a laudable ambition between those whose progress and advancement would fit them for the higher schools; and thus the higher as well as the lower would be supported. The progress of the child in the acquisitition of a substantial education, would emulate the parent; parents would encourage each other; and when the spirit of education could be fairly put into operation, it is believed that it would here, as it has done in many of the States of the United States, and in Prussia and Germany, carry with it public opinion, which in this country is all that is necessary to sustain any measure that promises to be permanently useful.

"The people must see and feel the importance of the subject, the necessity of action. The subject must receive their approbation; excite their interest and zeal; they must act together with their influence and money to carry it into operation. The public mind in this State has never been sufficiently aroused to the importance of educating the youth. Any system that may be organised, not calculated to inlist the feelings and receive the cordial approbation and support of a majority of the citizens, cannot be relied upon to effect the object desired, viz: that of furnishing to the greatest number of the rising generation, upon equal terms, the best education that the resources of the State, and of its citizens generally, will justify.

"To overcome these difficulties would require a system more in detail, that it would be proper to incorporate into the constitution, and which would often have to be changed and improved, as circumstances and observation might require.

"Provision ought to be made by the State for as large a fund for immediate use as its financial condition will permit, and also for a permanent fund for future use, large enough if possible to afford the means to all the children in the State of obtaining a knowledge of reading, writing and arithmetic; branches which are indispensably necessary to every citizen in his intercourse with his fellow man and with the world.

"Your committee have, by a provision which they report herewith, endeavored to lay the foundation for a permanent fund, which will have the power of increase within itself; to meet the increase of children and of expenditure that improvements may require, as will be seen by the provisions reported.

"A provision is also contained in the report providing for the appointment of a superintendent of education; the object of which is to secure an efficient officer whose sole business shall be to attend to the duties of that office, and who shall constitute the head of an organized school department of the State. By another section it is made the duty of the legislature to encourage the institution of common schools throughout the State, for the promotion of literature and the arts and sciences, and to provide means for their support. By enjoining the encouragement and support of education upon the legislature, it will be part of the duty which every member of that body will be sworn to perform, to give it attention.

"The cultivation of the mental faculties for the promotion of wisdom, morality and virtue, is amongst the first duties of a State. The chief object of constitutions and laws being to render its citizens secure in their lives, liberty and property, the importance of a good education to each individuhl, to every community, and to the State, cannot be too highly valued. It is certainly of too great value to be estimated by any pecuniary consideration.

"From the genius, nature and spirit of republican government, it is and must be based upon public opinion; which to be salutary in its operation must be virtuous and enlightened.

"The permanence of our institutions ever have, and must continue to depend upon the genius of our constitution and laws, sustained by that spirit of freedom which actuates every man who is truly an American.

"Upon education we may safely confide as the conservative power of the State, that will watch over our liberties and guard them against fraud, corruption, and decay.

"Without morality, virtue and intelligence to regulate the genius a spirit of republicanism, the latter one constantly exposed to be swept away by the iron rule of ignorance and vice, when wielded by demagogues, to destroy our liberties.

"Morality and virtue may exist without the peculiar culture of schools; but a man can hardly be said to be intelligent without knowing how to read, and without that kind of knowledge that generally has its source in an education acquired at school. Without intelligence virtue and morality would cease to perform their legitimate functions, and to have that influence upon the body politic which it is necessary they should exert. Without these necessary ingredients to sustain the purity and harmony of our constitution and laws, unless the people know and appreciate their rights, and know how to maintain and protect them, the vicious and disorderly will protect and screen each other from the operation of the laws; the restraining influence of the social and political compact will be annihilated, and dissolution and ruin will be the inevitable result.

"There can be no security, the true spirit of liberty cannot exist where vice, ignorance and immorality predominate.

"Where a right direction is given to the young and tender mind, correct principles inculcated and impulses given, morality, virtue and reason commence their reign, and with the necessary culture fit their possessors to be useful to themselves, ornaments to society, and safe-guards to the State. The strength of the State and the happiness of its people increase with the increase of useful knowledge. Without knowing their rights and duties men become dangerous to the State, nuisances to the community, and burdensome to themselves. By laying the foundation of a system susceptible of being carried into practical operation, and which will secure to the rising generation the means by which they may be educated.

"The greatest degree of social and individual prosperity will be secured to our posterity, and a strong guarantee of protection to our constitution and laws.

"Louisiana should possess the means of educating her youths at home. Southern men should have southern heads and hearts, with sentiments untarnished by doctrines at war with our rights and liberties. It is of the first importance that correct impressions be made upon the minds of children, for it is difficult to unlearn what has been learned amiss.

"When our children return from the north, after having received an education there, they have to be re-acclimated, and not unfrequently fall victims to the effects of the change. Many of the most promising youths of the State have been swept away within a very short period after their return with an accomplished education, from the effects of a change of climate. Youths who were the fondest hopes of their parents, and promised to be ornaments, not only to them, but to the State, and whose loss to both is irreparable.

"All this can be remedied by entering upon the work ourselves, with a determination to accomplish it. A good education furnished to the rising generation, will afford us a better guarantee of protection than fleets and armies. Shall we not then be inexcusable for neglect to make the trial?

"It is said that a man will give all he has for his life. If so, ought he not with equal readiness give the same price, if necessary, to secure his life, liberty and happiness, and the prospect of conferring upon his posterity the same blessings, enriched and enobled by the highest degree of intellectual attainments?

"All of which is respectfully submitted, together with the accompanying provisions and resolutions.

(Signed.) "G. MAYO,
"Chairman."

Report of the committee on the subject of education:

"And your committee recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

The committee appointed to enquire into the cause of the delay in printing the English reports of the proceedings of the Convention, respectfully submit,

That upon enquiry they have ascertained that the delay in printing has originated in the inability of Mr. Robert J. Kerr to furnish the necessary amount of copy to the printers. That he has constantly been many days behind hand with his copy, and was, on March 10th, only ready to furnish the copy of the proceedings of the 24th February. That according to his statement furnished the Convention, he is now ready to furnish copy of proceedings and debates up to date. They therefore recommend the adoption of the following resolution, all of which is respectfully submitted.

(Signed) J. C. BEATTY, Chairman of the committee.

Resolved, That the reporters in English be required, on the evening of the day succeeding any debates or proceedings of the house to furnish copy of those proceedings to the printers, obtain their receipt for the same, and file it with the secretary; and that on their failure so to do, the secretary shall report the fact to the Convention, and the delinquent be instantly removed from his post.

Resolved, That the reporters in English be required, on the evening of the day succeeding any debate or proceedings of the house, to furnish copy of those proceedings to the printers, obtain their receipt for the same, and file it with the secretary; and that on their failure so to do, the scretary shall report the fact to the Convention.

Mr. CENAS, a member of the committee to whom was referred the division of the city of New Orleans into eight representative districts, submitted the following report, viz:.

The committee composed of the delegation of New Orleans, to whom was referred the project of the division of the city of New Orleans for the choice of representatives to the house of representatives, into eight districts, report—

That the division of the three municipalities into eight districts is inconvenient and difficult to be carried into effect, so as to secure a just and equal representation, and it is therefore recommended that the number of districts be reduced to six, each municipality being divided into two election districts.

The following division, although far from being satisfactory to the committee, is the only one, dividing the city into eight districts, upon which they have been able to agree, viz:

1st. First district—To extend from the line of the parish of Jefferson to the middle of Benjamin, Estelle and Thalia streets.

2d. Second district—To extend from the last mentioned limits to the middle of Julia street, until it strikes the New Orleans canal, and thence down said canal to the lake.

3d. Third district—To comprise the residue of the second municipality.

4th. Fourth district—To extend from the middle of Canal street to the middle of St. Louis street, until it shall reach the Metairie road, thence along said road to the New Orleans canal.

5th. Fifth district—To extend from the last mentioned limits to the middle of St. Philip street, thence down said street until its intersection with the Bayou St. John, thence along the middle of said Bayou until it intersects the Metairie road, thence along said road until it reaches St. Louis street.

6th. Sixth district—To be composed of the residue of the first municipality.

7th. Seventh district—To be composed of all that portion of the third municipality above the Ponchartrain rail road.

8th. Eighth district—To be composed of all that part of the third municipality below the Ponchartrain rail road.

Mr. CENAS moved that the report be laid on the table, subject to call; which motion was lost.

Mr. VOORHIES moved that the report be taken into consideration with the section relative thereto; which motion was adopted.

On motion of Mr. BRENT, that part of the report dividing the city into eight representative districts was adopted—and the balance of said report laid on the table indefinitely.

ORDER OF THE DAY.

Saturday, March 29, 1845.

The Convention met pursuant to adjournment.

The Rev. Mr. Watkins opened the proceedings with prayer.

The President submitted a letter of invitation from major Gally, of the Orleans Battalion, to attend a target shooting, which invitation was accepted.

Mr. Ratliff, chairman of the committee on contingent expenses, to whom was referred the application of the printers of the reports of the English debates of the Convention, submitted the following report, viz:

The committee on contingent expenses, to whom was referred the application of the printers of the English reports of the Convention, for an increased compensa tion to be allowed them for their services, have the honor to report, that by a resolution of the Convention, adopted on the 27th day of January, the printers of the English reports of the journal and debates of the Convention, as well as the printers of the French, were to receive each five hundred dollars during the session of the Convention, for ten copies of their paper, containing the entire proceedings of the Convention, to be furnished each member three times a week, or oftener if necessary, to keep up with the proceedings of the Convention; and by a former resolution, adopted the 10th of August last, they were to have two dollars per page for the printing, binding and delivering in book form one thousand copies of the journals and debates of the Convention in English, and the same for a like number of copies in French. Nothing was said in either of those resolutions about extra printing ordered by the Convention. In view of the above resolutions, the committee have felt themselves fully authorized to credit the accounts of the printers for any extra printing they were required to do for the Convention, and to allow them a fair compensation for the work so done. The present application of the printers of the English reports for the Convention, is mainly, it is believed, to obtain an extra compensation for furnishing the number of copies of the paper to the members, required under the resolution above referred to. Their application is in these words: They say they are allowed five hundred dollars for furnishing each member of the Convention, with ten copies of the paper each day; the papers to contain the proceedings of the Convention, during the sitting of that body; a compensation less than twenty dollars per day for seven hundred and seventy copies of the paper. This would involve them in an absolute loss at the rate of ten dollars for three hundred and twelve papers; this number would be worth twenty-six dollars and seventy-five cents; thus, should the Convention sit three months, they would receive one thousand eight hundred dollars worth of papers, and according to the present arrangement, we should be mulcted in a loss of one thousand three hundred dollars on this item alone of the contract. The committee have thought proper to state the substance of their application, in order to possess the house fully of the value of their application; the committee would suggest, that the election of the present printers took place on the same day the resolution above referred to was adopted, and almost immediately after its adoption. The question of the removal of the former printer, had occupied the attention of the Convention for several days previous to his removal; soon after the election of the present printers, the committee paid them the five hundred dollars, allowed them by said resolution, in compensation for the subscription of the Convention to their paper, and since then the printers of the English journals and debates have received for extra printing, a further sum of five hundred dollars. It is proper to say, that, according to their account for extra printing, now in the hands of the committee, they have done extra printing to more than sufficient to cover that sum, and which the committee will report upon as soon as they can avail themselves of the necessary information in relation to the value of the work.

The committee feel fully assured, that the printers of the Convention became candidates for the office of printers with a full knowledge of the compensation to be allowed them, both for their paper, and their journal and debates, to be printed in book form; and nothing was left in doubt or uncertainty, in entering into the contract, but the extra printing; which the committee will, unless otherwise instructed, always pay for at a fair compensation as fast as the work is done. The committee feel satisfied, that the Convention has paid to the printers of the English department, as much money as has been authorized under the contract; and they are of opinion, that no further compensation aside from the contract, be allowed them.

Mr. SPLANE moved to lay the above report on the table, subject to call, which motion was lost.

Mr. DOWNS offered the following resolution, viz:

Resolved, That the report made by the committee on contingent expenses, be referred back to the same committee, with instructions to inquire what amount of compensation ought with justice to be given to the printers of the reports of the debates of the Convention, for furnishing to each member of the Convention ten copies of the newspaper, containing the reports.

THURSDAY, April 3, 1845.

The Convention met pursuant to adjournment.

The Rev. Mr. HINTON opened the proceedings by prayer.

Mr. KER, one of the English reporters, furnished the printers' receipts for the reports of the debates of the 29th March and of the 1st of April.

Mr. TAYLOR of Assumption, of the committee of revision, presented the following report:

The committee of revision, to whom the third article of the amended constitution was referred, have had the same under consideration, and now beg leave to report:

That they recommend that the words "created by law," in the seventh line of the second section should be struck out.

That section third be changed so as to read as follows:

"No person shall be eligible to the office of Governor, or Lieutenant Governor, who shall not have attained the age of thirty-five years, been fifteen years a citizen of the United States, and a resident within this State for the same space of time next preceding his election."

That the section numbered as section ten of the constitution of 1812, shall be changed by striking out the word "up" in the second line.

That the section now numbered as section twelve, be changed by adding before the first word, the words "there shall be," and striking out in the second, third, fourth, and fifth lines, the words "shall be nominated and appointed by the Governor, with the advice and consent of the senate, and commissioned." So that the section will then read,

"There shall be a Secretary of State to hold his office during the time for which the Governor shall have been elected." And the remainder of it as in the section already adopted.

Your committee further recommend that the sections of the third article be numbered in the order in which they are now arranged.

They shall be elected by the qualified voters of each parish for the term of two years, and shall have such criminal jurisdiction as shall be provided for by law.

Mr. Claiborne gave notice that he will on a future day more to reconsider the vote adopting after reconsideration the amendment of the seventh section, because he believed the reconsideration to be out of order.

(Mr. TAYLOR of Assumption in the chair.) The question of order raised is a very important one, and the chair thinks it proper to express its opinion on it, although it is not now necessary to decide it formally.

The chair does not concur in the opinion expressed by the delegate from New Orleans, that the rules were made for the protection of absent members, and that they cannot be dispensed with without previous notice.

Rules are made for the government of the house, and that is composed of the members present forming a quorum.

In the opinion of the chair it does not admit of a doubt, that four-fifths of the members present can at any time and without any previous notice, suspend any rule; and that the proceedings had in pursuance of such suspension of a rule, are in all respects regular, and that they cannot at any future time be called in question on that ground. Any thing done with the unanimous assent of the house, as in the instance referred to, necessarily involves a suspension of the rules, and the chair would in consequence decide that there had been in that instance no violation of the rules adopted for its government.

Mr. SELLERS gave notice that he would, on Thursday next, move to reconsider the vote adopting the eighth section of the legislative article.

ORDER OF THE DAY.

Communication of Mr. Marigny.

A few days ago I laid apon the desk a section to be inserted under the head of general provisions. The object of the section was to empower the legislature to extend the right of citizenship to persons of colored origin, whenever required by the public interest.

But public opion being against the measure, and many of the members of the Convention who seemed to approve of it, having since expressed themselves against it, I am now satisfied that it would be rejected.

I believe it is my duty to withdraw it. I trust that the members of the Convention of the State at large will do me the justice to believe that my motives were pure, I thought that it was proper to grant to the legislature a power that it was not likely would be abused, and the exercise of which might, under certain circumstances, redound to the benefit of the State.

Which was laid on the table subject to call.

Mr. Brent submitted the following report, viz:

Ordered, That immediately after the adjournment of this Convention the governor shall issue hi. proclamation, directing the several officers of this State, auhtorized by law to hold elections for members of the general assembly, to open and hold an election tn every parish of the State, at the places designated by law, upon the first Monday of November next, for the purpose of taking the sense of the good people of this State in regard to the adoption or rejection of this amended constitution. And it shall be the duty of the said officers to receive the votes of all persons entitled to vote under the old constitution, and under this amended constitution. Each voter shall express his opinion by depositing in the ballot box a ticket, whereon shall be written "the constitution accepted," or "the constitution rejected," or some such words as will distinctly convey the intention of the voter. At the conclusion of said election, which shall be conducted in every respect as the general State election is now conducted, the commissioners designated to preside over the same, shall carefully examine and count each ballot so deposited, and shall forthwith make due returns thereof to the secretary of State, in conformity to the provisions of the existing law upon the subject of elections.

Ordered, That upon the receipt of the said returns, it shall be the duty of the governor, the secretary of State, the attorney general and the State treasurer, in the presence of all such persons as may choose to attend, to compare the votes given in said election for the ratification and rejection of this amended constitution; and if it shall appear from said returns that a majority of all the votes given in said election is for ratifying the amended constitution, then it shall be the duty of the governor to make proclamation of that fact, and thenceforth this amended constitution shall be ordained and established as the constitution of Louisiana. But whether the amended constitution be accepted or rejected, it shall be the duty of the governor to cause to be published in the State paper the result of the said election, showing the number of votes cast for and against the said constitution.

Ordered, That should this amended constitution be accepted by the people, it shall also be the duty of the governor forthwith to issue his proclamation, declaring the present legislature, elected under the old constitution, to be dissolved, and directing the several officers of the State, authorised by law, to hold elections for members of the general assembly; to hold an election at the places designated by law, upon the third Monday in January next (1846), for governor, lieutenant governor, members of the general assembly and all other officers whose election is provided for pursuant to the provisions of this amended constitution. And the said election shall be conducted, and the returns thereof made in conformity with the existing laws upon the subject of State elections.

Ordered, That the general assembly, elected under this amended constitution, shall convene at the state house in the city of New Orleans, upon the second Monday of February next, after the election (1846); and that the gevernor and lieutenant governor, elected at the same time, shall be duly installed in office during the first week of their session, and before it shall be competent for the said general assembly to proceed with the transaction of business.

The minority of the committee then offered the following counter report, viz:

The undersigned, a minority of the committee appointed to devise a plan by which the amended constitution shall be carried into effect, have differed from the majority as to the time and manner of submitting it to the people for their approval or rejection, have deemed it incumbent on them to make the following counter report, for which they respectfully solicit the consideration of the Convention:

They are of opinion that there should be no greater delay in calling the people together in their several election districts, to decide upon the organic law which this Convention has framed for them, than is necessary for it to be published in all parts of the State, and to become generally known to the inhabitants; and as it is probable that this body will adjourn on or about the 10th instant, the undersigned propose that the second Monday of July next should be fixed upon for its submission to the electors. This would give the people two months' time to examine and discuss it, and to compare its provisions with those of the old constitution, a period quite sufficient, to the apprehension of the undersigned, for it to be maturely considered and fully understood. At the present time the attention of the people is called to the proceedings of this Convention, and a lively interest is felt in the result of its labors. The sooner the work is submitted to them the greater is the probability of obtaining for it a full, fair and unprejudiced expression of the public sentiment. It is to be feared that the long delay proposed by the majority of the committee will have a tendency to stifle enquiry on the subject, and cause an apathy to be felt, which will defeat the object which the Convention has in view, to-wit: to procure the decision of a majority of the qualified electors, approving or rejecting the amended constitution.

The undersigned are also fully persuaded that it is contrary to good policy and sound principle to allow any class of persons, other than those who were heretofore entitled to the elective franchise, to vote for or against the new constitution. It was they who voted for the assembling of this Convention; they alone are the constituents of its members, and they only have the right to say whether the mandate given by them has been executed in such a manner as to meet their approbation. The proposition of the majority of the committee to allow, in addition to those who already possess the qualifications of voters, all who may have been constituted electors under the new constitution, to vote at the assembling of the people to decide upon that instrument, is viewed by the undersigned as amounting in effect, to a fraud upon the rights of the constituency of this Convention. It is hazarding nothing to declare that had such a proceeding been anticipated, before the people decided to call a Convention, a very large portion of those who voted for it would have refused to delegate a power which could be exercised so as to defeat their wishes, whilst they are mocked with a show of accountability, on the part of their representatives. The undersigned cannot perceive how it can be pretended that persons who are not entitled to vote under the existing constitution, should be permitted to exercise this inestimable privilege upon an occasion like that in question. Those persons had no agency in electing the members of this Convention, and could not in consequence, instruct them as to their acts. They have therefore no right to decide upon that which has been done by those who are not their agents; and this Convention has no righful power to diminish the constitutional privileges of the electors of this State, by extending the elective franchise, without their consent, to persons who are by that means enabled to nullify their wishes.

The undersigned do not deem it necessary to say any thing further in support of the views they have taken of the matter under consideration; tney submit it to the wisdom and sound discretion of the Convention.

Respectfully,

THOS. W. CHINN,

GEORGE S. GUION.

Mr. Eustis, chairman of the committee of revision, reported the legislative article.

ORDER OF THE DAY.

GENERAL PROVISIONS.

The legislature shall not in any manner create any debt or debts, liability or liabilities, which shall singly or in the aggregate, with all previous debts or liabilities, exceed the sum of one hundred thousand dollars, (except in case of war, to repel invasion or suppress insurrection) unless the same be authorized by some law, for some single object or work, to be distinctly specified therein, which law shall provide ways and means, by taxation, for the payment of running interests during the whole time for which said debt shall be contracted and for the full and punctual discharge at maturity, of the capital borrowed; and said law shall be irrepealable until the principal and interest thereon shall be paid and fully discharged, and shall not be put into execution until after its re-enactment by the first legislature returned by a general election after its passage.

On motion of Mr. Dunn, the report of the committee on the bill of rights, was taken up, viz:

The committee appointed to report a bill of rights, beg leave to represent, that they have had the same under consideration, and believing as they do, that in all republican governments, and especially in the organic laws thereof, that a frequent recurrence to first principles is both necessary and proper, we therefore respectfully recommend and submit to your consideration, the following bill of rights, to wit:

That the great and essential principles of liberty and free government may be recognized and unalterably established, we, the representatives of the people of the State of Louisiana, declare—

Sec. 1. That all freemen, when they form a social compact, are equal, and have certain inherent and indefeasible rights, among which are those of enjoying and defending life and liberty, of acquiring, possessing and protecting property and reputation, and of pursuing and obtaining safety and happiness.

Sec. 2. All political power is inherent in the people; all free governments are founded on their authority, and instituted for their peace, safety and happiness, public officers are their trustees and servants, and at all times amenable to them; of all forms of government that is best which is capable of producing the greatest degree of happiness and safety to the greatest number of persons, and is most effectually secured against the dangers of mal-administration, and when any form of government shall be found inadequate, or contrary to those purposes, a majority of the community have an unalienable and indefeasible right to reform, alter or abolish their form of government in such manner as they may think most conducive to the public weal.

Sec. 3. That all men have a natural and indefeasible right to worship Almighty God according to the dictates of their own conscience; that no man can of right be compelled to attend, erect or support any place of worship, or to maintain any minister or priest, against his consent; that no human authority can, in any case whatever, control or interfere with the rights of conscience; and that no preference shall ever be given, by law, to any religious establishment, or mode of worship.

Sec. 4. That no religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under this State.

Sec. 5. That elections shall be free and equal.

Sec. 6. That the right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate.

Sec. 7. That the people shall be secure in their persons, houses, papers and possessions from unreasonable searches and seizures, and that general warrants whereby an officer may be commanded to search suspected places without evidence of the fault committed, or to seize any person or persons not named, whose offences are not particularly described and supported by evidence, are dangerous to liberty, and ought not to be granted.

Sec. 8. That no free man shall be taken or imprisoned, or deseized of his freehold, liberties or privileges, or outlawed or exiled, or in any manner destroyed or deprived of his life, liberty or property, but in pursuance of the judgment of his peers, or the law of the land.

Sec. 9. That no person shall, for the same offence, be twice put in jeopardy of life or liberty.

Sec. 10. That excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, no cruel and unusual punishments inflicted.

Sec. 11. That all courts shall be open; and every man for an injury done him, in his lands, goods, person or reputation, shall have remedy by due course of law, and right and justice administered without sale, denial or delay. Suits may be brought against the State in such manner and in such courts as the legislature may by law direct.

Sec. 12. That the person of a debtor, when there is not strong presumption of fraud, shall not be confined in prison after the delivery up of his estate for the benefit of his creditor or creditors, in such manner as shall be prescribed by law.

Sec. 13. That the printing press shall be free to every person who undertakes to examine the proceedings of the legislature, or of any branch or officers of the government; and no law shall ever be made to restrain the right thereof. The free communication of thoughts and opinions is one of the invaluable rights of man, and every citizen may freely speak and write and print on any subject, being responsible for the abuse of that liberty. But in prosecuting for the publication of papers investigating the official conduct of officers or men in public capacity, the truth thereof may be given in evidence; and in all indictments or prosecutions for libels, the jury shall have a right to determine the law and the facts under the direction of the court, as in other criminal cases.

Sec. 14. That no retrospective law, or law impairing the obligation of contracts, shall be made.

Sec. 15. That no man's particular vices shall be demanded, or property taken or applied to public use, without the consent of his representative, or without just compensation being made therefor.

Sec. 16. That perpetuities and monopolies are contrary to the genius of a free State, and shall not be allowed.

Sec. 17. That the citizens have a right in a peaceable manner to assemble together for the common good, to instruct their representatives, and to apply to those invested with the powers of government for redress of grievances or other proper purposes, by address or remonstrance.

Sec. 18. That the sure and certain defence of a free people is a well regulated militia, and as standing armies in time of peace are dangerous to freedom, they ought to be avoided as far as the circumstances and safety of the community will admit; and that in all cases, the military shall be kept in strict subordination to the civil authority.

Sec. 19. That the free white men of this State have a right to keep and bear arms in defence of themselves and the State.

Sec. 20. That an equal participation of the navigation of the Mississippi river is one of the inherent rights of the citizens of this State; it cannot therefore be conceded to any prince, potentate, power, person or persons whatever.

Sec. 21. That no hereditary emoluments, privileges or honors shall ever be granted or conferred in this State.

Sec. 22. That the legislature shall have power to extend this constitution, and the jurisdiction of this State over all territory claimed at this time by the State of Louisiana, or which may hereafter be ascertained to be within her limits, or over any territory acquired by compact with any State, or with the United States, the same being done by consent of the United States.

ORDINANCE.

ART. 150. Immediately after the adjournment of the Convention, the governor shall issue his proclamation, directing the several officers of this State authorized by law to hold elections for members of the general assembly, to open and hold a poll in every parish of the State, at the places designated by law, upon the first Monday of November next, for the purpose of taking the sense of the good people of this State in regard to the adoption or rejection of this constitution; and it shall be the duty of the said officers to recive the votes of all persons entitled to vote under the old constitution and under this constitution. Each voter shall express his opinion by depositing in the ballot-box a ticket whereon shall be written "the constitution accepted," or "the constitution rejected," or some such words as will distinctly convey the intention of the voter. At the conclusion of the said election, which shall be conducted in every respect as the general State election is now conducted, the parish judges and commissioners designated to preside over the same, shall carefully examine and count each ballot so deposited, and shall forthwith make due returns thereof to the secretary of state, in conformity to the provisions of the existing law upon the subject of elections.

ART. 151. Upon the receipt of the said returns, or on the first Monday of December, if the returns be not sooner received, it shall be the duty of the governor, the secretary of state, the attorney general, and the state treasurer, in the presence of all such persons as may choose to attend, to compare the votes given at the said poll, for the ratification and rejection of this constitution, and if it shall appear from said returns that a majority of all the votes given is for ratifying this constitation, then it shall be the duty of the governor to make proclamation of that fact, and thenceforth this constitution shall be ordained and established as the constitution of the State of Louisiana. But whether this constitution be accepted or rejected, it shall be the duty of the governor to cause to be published in the State paper the result of the polls, showing the number of votes cast in each parish, for and against the said constitution.

ART. 152. Should this constitution be accepted by the people, it shall also be the duty of the governor forthwith to issue his proclamation declaring the present legislature elected under the old constitution, to be dissolved, and directing the several officers of the State, authorized by law, to hold elections for members of the general assembly, to hold an election at the places designated by law, on the third Monday in January next, (1846) for governor, lieutenant governor, members of the general assembly, and all other officers whose election is provided for pursuant to the provisions of this constitution. And the said election shall be conducted and the returns thereof made in conformity with existing laws upon the subject of State elections.

ART. 153. The general assembly elected under this constitution shall convene at the state house, in the city of New Orleans, upon the second Monday of February next, (1846) after the elections; and that the governor and lieutenant governor, elected at the same time, shall be duly installed in office during the first week of their session, and before it shall be competent for the said general assembly to proceed with the transaction of business.

Mr. ROMAN submitted the following reasons for not voting in favor of the adoption of the constitution, and the same were ordered to be inserted in the journal, viz:

I will vote against the adoption, because I think that this Convention would never have been called, if a majority of the people would have foreseen that the constitution of 1812 would be entirely put down, and another adopted, in which almost every conservative principle has been set aside.

Because in extending the right of suffrage, sufficient care has not been taken to confide it to those only who are identified with the State, and no guide has been given to the officers who are to preside over the elections to enable them to decide, who are those who ought and those who ought not to vote.

Because the senate has been so framed as to form no check in the popular branch of the legislature, and this last has been rendered so numerous as to be too unwieldly and too expensive.

Because the tenure of office of the judges of the supreme and district courts is such as not to render them independent of the party politics of the day, and the election by the people of justices of the peace, clerks of courts and sheriffs, is calculated to jeopardize still more the impartial administration of justice.

For these reasons, and also because a part of this constitution is actually put in force without being submitted to the assent of the people, I vote No.
