The Prologue.

He bush'd contentment of two silent howres,
Breath-pleasing ayres on these attentine cares;
And since wee see in this well furnish'd roome,
All our best neighbours are so kindly met,
Wee would devise some pleasing talke to spend:
The lazie howres of the tedious night:
But for our owne inuention, 'twas too weake,
Whereon our young Muse durst wholly leane.
We heere present for to reuine a tale,
Which once in Athens great Eurypedes
In better phrasent such a meeting told
The learn'd Athenians wish much applause:
The same we will retell vnto your cares,
Whose Atticke iudgement is no lesse then theirs:
We bere as builders which doe oft take stones,
From out old buildings, then must hew and cut,
To make them square, and fitting for a new;
So from an old foundation we haue ta'n,
Stones ready squar'd for our new edifice,
Which if in pleasing our weake skill offends
In making corners disproportionate,
Some roome too narrow or some loft too high;
Yet we will hope, if the whole structure fall,
Your hands like props will serue to beare up all.

The Tragedie of ORESTES.

Actus primus, Scena prima.

Enter as from warre, Agamemnon: Clytemnestra: Orestes:
Pylades: Egystus: cum ceteris.

Agam.

ow a faire blessing bleſſe my deareſt earth,
And like a Bride adorne thy royall brow,
With fruits rich Garland; a new married Bride
Vnto thy King and Husband, who too long
Hath left thee widdowed: O, me thinks I ſee

How all my Grecians with vnſatiate lookes Turnes to the
And greedy eyes doe bid mee welcome home: ſpectators.
Each eare that heares the clamour ſeemes to griue
It cannot ſpeake, and giue a (welcome King)
Come Clytemneſtra, let not anger make
His wrinkled ſeat vpon my lones faire brow,
I haue too long bene abſent from thy bed,
Chide me for that anon, when arme in arme
I ſhall relate thoſe projects in lone termes,
Which when they firſt were acted, made Mars feare
To ſee each man turn'd to a God of warre.

Clyt. O my deare Lord, abſence of things wee lone,
Thus intermixt, makes them the ſweeter proue:
That your departure pierc'd my tender ſoule,
Witneſſe thoſe Chriſtall floods which in my eyes
Did make a ſea, when you ſhould goe to ſea,
Thoſe ſtreames which then flow'd from the veins of griefe
At your returne doe ouerflow the banks.

The Tragedie of Orestes

But tis with ioy. Agam. Now these eares indeed
Haue chang'd their place: they which were wont to heare
No musique but the summoning of warre.
Blowne thorow discords brazen instrument,
Are blessed now with accents that doe fill
My age-dry'd veynes with youthfull blood againe.
These eyes which had no other obiekt once,
But Hector twixt the armes of Greece and Troy,
Hewing downe men, and making euery field
Flow with a sea of blood, now see's blood flow
In my Orestes cheeke: heauen blesse this plant
Spung from the sap of this now iucelesse oake,
Now be thy branches greene, vnder whole shade
I may be shaddowed from the heat of warre.
Rise young Orestes, Oh how it glads my soule,
To see my Queene and Sonne, my Sonne and Queene.

Orestes
kneeles.

Clyt. But come my Lord, true loue still hates delayes,
Let no eares first be blessed with your breath,
Till on my brest resting your wearied head,
You tell your warre, where that the field's your bed.

Agam. My Queen shal haue her wil, see how times change,
I that last night thought all the world a sea,
As if our common mother earth, had now
Shot her selfe wholly into Neptunes armes,
And the strong hindges of the world had crackt,
Letting the moone fall into th' swelling waues,
Such watry mountaines oft did seeme to rise,
And quite o'rwhelme vs, all the winds at warre,
Banded the sea one to the others coasts,
Ioue thinking Neptune gan to striue for heauen,
Senta new sea from thence, and with his thunder,
Bad silence to the waues, they vncontrold,
Kept on their noyse, and let their fury swell,
Turning heauen, earth, sea, clouds, and all to hell,
Each Troian that was saued then' gan to cry,
Happy were they that did with Priam die.
It glads mee now to thinke, that that night was
No starre, no, not Orion there appear'd,
But this night's turnd to day, and heere doth shine,
For a good Omen my imbraced Queene.

The Tragedie of Orestes.

With whom her Agamemnon still will stay,
Till age and death shall beare him quite away.

Exeunt Agamemnon: Clytemnestra: cum ceteris:

SCEN. II.

Egyst. AND that shall be ere long, nish (shall be's) slow,
My vengefull thoughts tell mee thou now art
Fie faint Apollo, weakling infant-God, (dead.
Why wouldst thou let lame Vulcan's hammers beat
Downe those braue Turrets which thou help'dst to build?
Venus, I see thou art a woman now,
Which here are like to take a double foyle,
For me, that whilome reueld in thy campe
In the sweet pleasures of incestuous sheets
Must leaue our lou'd vnfatiate desires:
But now begin, thou blacke Eumenides,
You hand-mayds of great Dis, let such a flame
Of anger burne mee, as doth Ena's forge,
On fury, on, our hate shall not die thus:
I'll draw my poysonous arrow to the length,
That it may hit the marke and fly with strength. Exit.

SCEN. III.

Enter Orestes: Pylades:

Orest. COME now my dearest friend, my other selfe,
My empty soule is now filld to the top,
Brimfull with gladnesse, and it must runne o'r
Into my deare friends heart: those siluer hayres,
Which Time hath crown'd my Fathers brow withall,
Doe shine within mine eyes, and like the Sunne,
Extract all drossie vapors from my soule,
Like as the earth, whom frost hath long benumb'd,
And brought an Icie drinesse on her face,
Her veines so open at a sudden thaw,
That all plants, fruits, flowers, and tender grafts,
Kept as close prisoners in their mothers wombe,
Starts out their heads, and on a sudden doth
The sad earths countenance with a summer looke,

The Tragedie of Orestes.

So in this brest, here in this brest, deare friend,
Whiles Annus ten times, circled in the world,
Ten clumzie winters, and ten lagging springs
Hath with my Fathers absence frozen beene
All thoughts of ioy, which now shall make a spring
In my refreshed soule;

“ Things that wee daily see th’affections cloy,

“ Hopes long desired bring the greatest ioy :

Pyl. Nay, but deare Cousin, giue not the reines too much

To new receiued ioyes, lest that they runne

With so much speed, that they out-breath themselves :

Your Father is come home ; but being come

Should now some wilfull afterclap of fate

(Which Omen Ioue forbid should come to passe)

But take him hence againe, and crosse your ioy :

Each sparke of gladnesse which you now conceite,

Would turne a flame, for grieffe still on extreme

Altring his course, turnes to the diuers theame.

Orest. Tush Pylades, talke not of what may be,

Wee may, indeed i’ th’ clearest afternoone

Expect a storme. Pyl. Yes, and such stormes oft come,

And wet shrewd too, before we get at home.

Orest. O, but I’ll be above all fatall power :

I that have such a Father new come home,

I that have such a friend, such too rare gifts,

Who gave mee these gifts, thought no scowling frowne

Of angry fortune e’r should throw mee downe :

Pyl. Call them not gifts Orestes, th’are but lent,

Meere lendings friend, and lendings we must pay,

When e’r the owner shall appoint his day.

Orest. True, Pylades, but owners vse to warne

Their debtors when they must bring in their finnes,

But heauens tell mee with fauouring aspects,

I still must keepe their lendings, and possesse,

With frolike ioy, all their happinesse.

Pyl. Trust not the heauens too much, although they smile,

Good looks doe mortall hearts too oft beguile :

The heauens are vsurers ; and as oft ’tis seen

A full pought churle giue a most faire good Euen

To his poore Creditor : who trusting that

The Tregedie of Orestes.

Hath slackt his payment : on the morrow next
He hath beene rooted out by the tusky boare,
Which gaue thee faire good Euen the day before :
The heauens can doe thus too ———

Orest. Tush : mortalls must

Leane on the sacred Heaucn with greater trust;
But it growes farre in night, come let vs in
To morrow shall our ioyes a fresh begin.

Exeunt.

SCEN. IV.

*Enter Agist. Clyt. with naked daggers,
Agam. lying in his bed.*

ECyt.* Night, now onely spred thy sable wings
Ouer this climate, gather all thy fogs
That they may meet, and make thy face more blacke :
Let horrid murder take thee by the hand
And come along : I haue a prodigie
Equall to all the murders, all the blood
That hath been shed in all Troyes ten yeeres seige
So, snore returned King ; good Morphens hang He Thy leaden weights vpon his drowfie eyes draws the
Let him not wake till he shall see himselfe, curtaine.
Drencht in a sea of his vermilian goare :
Thou doest no Troian, now no Hector feare,
But yet I'll shew thee a new Hector here.

Clyt. See, I'll turne man too now, and to the hate
Which women beare, I'll adde a manly strength,
My minde does tremble, what I meane to doe
Breath forth your vapor's, O ye stygian powers,
And listen to hatefull womans prayers.

Pluto stand by me, for to aide my hand,
I may strike home now, and performe an act
May make Medea blush, she thought not of :
Could the old dry bon'd dotard euer dreame,
Now he had drawn forth all his strength abroad,
He could be welcome to lye bedred here
And supple his numbe ioynts in my fresh armes ?

Agist. Spoke like a queene, spoke like Agystens loue,

Now

The Tragedie of Orestes.

Now great Thyestes Genius, which didst prompt
Mee to this act, come, be spectator now;
And see reuenge for Athens bloody feast.

And thou wrong'd Clytemnestra call to minde
How his vnfatiate, lustfull, loath'd desire
Doted on enery female face he saw,

Rap't the Priests daughter, and so brought a plague

On all the Grecian host: Clytem. yes, yes, Agysteus, yes

And rap't yong Briseis from Achilles bed;

Crowd all reuengefull thoughts into this houre,

Now let thy sword let out that lustfull blood

Wound him Agysteus, kill him not at once,

Agist.

Wee'll be true Tyrants, let him feele he dies

stabs him.

Agam. Helpe Clytemnestra, helpe me my deare Queene.

Clytem. Yes dotard I will helpe thee, thus, yes thus:

Remember the Priests daughter: this for her,

She stabs

And this for Briseis: Agam. see, my Grecians, see,

him.

Your King which you so gladly entertain'd:

Sol hide thy selfe in euerlasting night,

Or when thou risest let thy blushing face,

Make these to blush; Clytem. I, so, curse on, curse on:

Agam. O Clytemnestra, O my once deare wife,

Is this the entertainment that thou giu'st;

Thy new come husband, gratulat'st thou thus

My ten yeers absence? see these frosty haire

Would euen mooue Hecuba to pittie me,

Looke on these aged armes which in this bed

Thought to haue beene blessed with thy kinde imbrace,

Clytem. Yes, mine or Cassandra's, old adulterer?

Agam. Kinsman Agysteus; O my dearest wife

Whom shall I call; me thinkes you both are mine,

What Tirius, what Megara hath put on

Agysteus and my Clytemnestra's shapes?

Agyst. Calst thou vs friends?

Stabs him againe.

Agam. O be not so, and I'll not call you so:

Let not your coward weapons wound this head,

That earst did scorne to shrinke at Priams blow.

O hew me not downe thus for my sonns sake,

Deare Clytemnestra for Orestes sake.

Is this the Trojan tale how I should tell?

That

The Tragedie of Orestes.

That here great Hector flew Anticchus,
And here that Meoniades was flaine,
And poore Protheslaus deare to Lacedaemio:
I thought to tell how these men lost their blood;
And see my blood is thus let forth at home.

Egyft. Is your hot blood yet cold! Clyt. breath dotard, do?
You shall haue gapes inough to let your soule
Finde a free passage to his deserued flames.

Agam. No pittie yet? O then, no pittie light
On you, nor yours; but let dire reuenge
Come learne how she may after handle you:
O, I am drown'd in blood, and now must yeeld
To murderers weapons; treason win's the field,
Alas this coming home hath had small ioy,
Argos hath worser foes then euer Troy.

Clyt. Now I am Clytemnestra right, now I deserue
To adde one more to the three Furies, now
Doe I count this more then my nuptiall night
'Tis mine, tis thine Egyftheus, and none else
Shall share a minute of this right, but we.

Egyft. Me thinks I now goe equall with the starres
And my proud head toucheth the highest pole,
Harke, Hell applauds me, and me thinks I heare. A noyse.
Thyestes tell me I haue done enough:
And now I kisse my hands, whilst yet they beare
This tincture on them, and embrace my Queene,
Now made my loue; lets in, this night the Fates
Haue amply fed vs with reuengefull eates. Exeunt.

SCEN. V.

Enter Orestes, as from his bed, unbuttoned in slippers, a torch in his hand.

WHat horrid dreams affright me? I see naught
That I should feare, and yet me thinks I feare,
Mine eyes scarce clos'd, my busie fancy saw
A sight that dash't all comforts of the day:
Me thought my Father lying in his tent,
Hatefull Achilles for his wronged loue
Comes in with Brisis, and they two let forth
Streames of fresh blood from out his eyes.

The Tragdie of Orestes.

With that his Echo'd schrieke did make me wake;
But I remembered then he was come home,
And yet I'll see him, still me thinks I quake,
Doe I still dreame? are not mine eyes vnclous'd? he dreames
Is this a torch? yes, 'tis, it burnes, I see! the curtaine
I am awake, doe not delude menight!
Now stand on tiptoes Atilas, lift heauen higher,
I may haue ayre inough to breath my woes,
O let me yet recall thy posting soule
If Charon haue not hurried thee too fast
If yet thou hast not drunke on lethies poole
Come backe, and tell mee who it is this night,
Hath don this deed farre blacker then the night,
Ha! art thou fled past call? why thou wert old
Me thinkes thou shouldst not haste so fast away
Was it for this thou swe' tist so oft in Armes!
Was it for this that the froth swelling foame
When thy ships top toucht Heauen, and deepe plac'd hell,
That thou must yet escape, curl'd Neptune's waues
To be a Palinurus in thy shoare
There drowne thy aged locks in crimson goare.
O if one sparke yet of thy Princely Soule
Remaine within this trunke, now let it shine
And light my ignorant eyes to reade the names
Of these night vultures, whose deuouring bills
Haue made a Tiuis of thy royall corps:
Who did not feare great Agamemmons sleepe?
Arme, arme your selues all you, all potent Gods
You which we terme Iust ministers of Heauen,
Shoote forked lightning from the marble poale
Let the all-seeing eye of heauen shoote flames
Which may parch vp the marrow from their bones
Should they lye coucht i' th brest a' th Thunderer,
Or be entrencht with guards of Furies,
Heauen, earth, nor hell should keepe them from my sword
Dost thou sleepe Ioue? O couldst thou snore so fast,
And let thy great vicegerent thus be torne?
Some of th' immortal powers haue had fathers,
And know what 'tis to haue them murdered thus.
But I turne woman now, O I raue ont

The Tragedy of Orestes.

My passions; doe grieffe, poure out thy selfe,
That thou wayst make room in my empty heart
To fill it with reuenge.

SCEN. VI.

Enter Clytem. Agyst. in night-ropes.

Clyt. HOW now? what ayles our sonne, how now Orestes!
Orest. O some are come now to helpe me greiue,
See, see mother, see, your husband and my Father,
The King of Greece, great shepheard of his Land

See, see him here : She faines her selfe to swoon: Ag. catcheth

Cly. O helpe now good heauen to keepe my sexe, her fall-
Let me dissemble. Agyst. Help my Lord the Queen. [ling.

Clyt. O why let you not my soule, that whilst he liu'd,
Was linkt to his, and would too now haue fled

With wing'd desire to haue beene with him,

What doe I liue for, Agamemnon slaine,

My Lord, my King, my Husband, wake my Lord,

What bloody Troian followed thee from thence

To kill thee here, could he not one night

Haue let me rested in thy sweet embraces?

Must he for surenesse make so many holes

For thy sweet soule to flye to be a God?

O let my teares be balme to these thy wounds,

Let my lips kisse, and warme thy gelid lips,

Let my haire wipe these clots of blood away

From thy age-honor'd side : O dry your teares,

Ioyne knees and prayers with mee, awake ye Gods,

And send our vows, since we can send no wounds : They

Come son, we women still know how to curse, [both kneel-

Let him that did it be an Adulterer, buried

Agyst. Faith she begins well, sure she knows the man :

Clytem. Let him be conscious he hath done a deed

Deserues reuenge, whether it fall or no ;

Let him for euer beare in minde this night,

And who 'twas helpt him in this bloody act.

Agyst. Yes, hee'll remember how you curse him now.

Orest. If euer he haue children let them be

Murdered before his face, that he may know

The Tragedie of Orestes.

How nature bindesa father and a sonne,

Egyst. Now hands I thank you, now my soule: grows
Had not he greiu'd thus, I had lost reuenge. (glad;

Clyt. But come my sonne, now let vs talke of graues,
Of Epitaphs, and tombs, and's soule being fled, Draw the
Let's slap his Trunke vp in a sheet of lead. curtaine, and carrie

Exeunt Clyt. & Egyst. manet Orest. [him away

Orest. Me thinks I see a Tragedy at hand,
To which this night hath as a Prologue bin;
I'll make a prayer now worthy Atrous grandchilde,
Let the foule Adder sting me as I walke,
The poysonous toad belch her blacke venom forth.
In my despised face, let it be thought
I neuer had a father, but some monster
Bred by a flamy exhalation;
If my reuenge fly not with ample wing,
Till then reit foule, hate told may lose his sting.

ACT. II. SCEN. I.

Enter Cassandra sola as a mad Prophetesse.

Cass. O Ye dead Troians leape within your graues,
O mother that thou hadst liu'd this night,
Now thou'ldst be glad to haue lost so many sons,
The Grecians are reuchg'd vpon themselues,
I thanke thee soule, that thou keptst here till now
To let me see Greece ouercome it selfe;
I liue, I liue, I'm here, I liue to see't:
I doe not dreame on't, 'no, I saw the blood
Run from his side, whole Catarackts, all Greece
Apollo how am I bound now for this
That I doe onely see this happinesse,
Hecuba, Priame, young Astianax
Looke Hecuba, Greece now doth act your woes,
Laugh Hecuba, for now Electra weeps:
And Tyndarus he knows not what to doe:
Come little Cuz, come my Astianax,
Orestes is in a worse case then thou.

Still

The Tragedie of Orestes.

Still I had others for to weepe with me,
But none are left to laugh now, but my selfe:
What should he feare at home? A conquerer feare?
Tis don, 'tis done, leaue fighting Hector, leaue,
The Grecians meane to fight against themselues,
From Tyndarus the first brand tooke fire
Which burnt downe Troy: and now an other here
Kindles from him, to set a fire Greece,
Graia iuuenca venit, quae se, patremque virumq;
Perdidit, lo lator, Graia iuuenca venit:
Hellen, thy sister Hellen, nay shee's thine:
Who could haue thought that Hector being slaine,
Old Priame made a sacrifice to death,
Troy turn'd to cinders, poore Andromacha
Dragg'd by her haire to death, Astianax
Sent out o'th world before he well came in,
Ha, ha, who could haue thought after all this
Cassandra should haue euer laught againe,
One houre of laughter following many yeeres
Of discontent, doth helpe to sweeten teares. Exit.

ACT. II. SCEN. II.

Enter Agystheus. Clytem.

Agyst. Faire morning to my Queene, nay more, my loue,
How likes my sweet her change of bedfellow?

Clyt. Looke as a hollow leafelesse failing oake,
To whom for that he hath bin her weight too long,
The earth denies to lend him moysture, so
His sap failes, and he stands on a green
Mongst sprouting Elms, that they may seem more fresh
Whilst hee's but held a monument of yeeres,
Such one seem'd Agamemnon; a drie tree:
Thou like a sprouting elme, whom I embrace
Like twining Iuy, with these now-blest armes,
Blest whilst this treasure in them they hold lockt.

Agyst. O who'd not doe a murder for a woman!
Heauen had but two things for the Gods reseru'd
Fire, and women, when with Giant thought
Prometheus had tane one, Ioue in his rage

The Tragedie of Orestes.

Threw him the to'ther, bad him keepe 'em both,
O th'are rare creatures, they haue such Meaders,
Their teares will come and goe with such Art,
Come now my Queene, one sweet Ambrosian kisse ;
O Nectar ! prethe hadst thou taught thy teares
How they should flow before : Clyt. No, trust me loue,
I knew my teares would soon be at command,
And faith the boy had almost made me weepe
Really once : were not my curse's rare ?

Egyft. Yes, all was womanlike, but yet that boy
Hctooke it deepely, would he were with his father,
So gon, it skills not how, were he away
We would act freely all our lustfull play :

Clyt. O but my loue, hee's mine ; nor can the rauen
Dig her sharpe beake into her owne birds brest :
He will forget his father : woe will breake,
Tis not the greatest griefe that most doth speake.

Egyft. O but hee'll beare a still suspitious eye ;
And who in bloody Scenes doth act a part,
Thinks euery eye doth penetrate his heart.
Nor can we ere be free, or I inioy
True pleasures, we must be but theecues at most,
Close in delights, and haue a Pander still
To be a Factor, 'twixt thy bed and mine
This we could haue before, what now we doe
The world should see done, and applaud it too.

Clyt. Why my deare Loue, I that would set my hand
To staine my marriage sheets with husbands blood
Would let these hands instructed now in ill,
Not leaue one arme of that vprooted tree ;
Could but Egystheus giue me any hope,
That from this top there should one spreading branch
Grow vp and flourish. Egyft. Now thou art thy selfe,
Yes, yes my loue, there shall one spring from vs
Shall be a lofty Pine, let this be cropt,
Murder must murder guard, guilt adde to guilt,
After one drop whole streams of blood be spilt. walks.w.17.

SCEN. III.

Enter Pylades : Orestes : Electra : Strophius.

DEARE friend, what mean you, to o'rwhelme your selfe,
In such a sea of grieffe? Orest. Father deare Agamem.

Pyl. Nay let this tempest fall, thou hast lost a father,
Why, tis but change, my father shall be thine,
I'll be thy brother, nay, I'll be thy selfe,
Weepe when thou weep'st, and where thou go'st I'll goe,
And bring thee on thy pilgrimage of woe.

Elect. Brother, looke vp, haue not I lost a father?
Yes, and would a riuer of fresh teares
Turne Lethes streame, and bring him from the wharf,
With a North gale of windy blowing sighs,
I would expire my soule, become all teares.

Stroph. Come, you haue lost a father, I a brother,
The Queene a Husband, all the Land a King,
Yet all thi's but a man; Therefore must die:
Our woes may all be in one ballance poys'd,
His booke of life the Fates had ouer-read,
And turn'd the leafe where his last period stood,
Now an immortall wreath circles his brow,
And makes him King in heauen, who was before
At most a God on earth; Hence difference springs,
Kings are earths Gods, and Gods are heauenly Kings.

Orest. Let vs ioyne words then now, and Swan-like sing,
The dolefull dirge to a departed King:
Thou friend didst of this misery diuine,
Therefore the burthen of the song is mine:
Words Orators for woe, which plead the cause,
When grieffe's the Iudge, and sighs are all the lawes,
Each one a sob, for Diapason beares,
Our tunes shall drowne the musique of the sphear'es:
O what Hirudo with vnfatiate thirst,
Could draw the blood from our those Princely veynes,
From whence flowes comfort to so many soules. (Spies his mother,
Mother, when weept you last, here take a scarfe goes to her,
Dry your eyes, now by love you need none,
What shine of comfort hath dri'd vp your teares?

The Tragedie of Orestes.

Clyt. Our sonne's too sawcie with his mother Queene:
Why, Sir, shall you tell vs a time to weepe?

Orest. Vs? good: Who is't makes the plurality?
'Twas wont to be my father, does he liue?

Clyt. Sir, curbe this lauish speech, or I'll forget
You are my sonne, and make you but a subiect.

Agyst. Good Cousin adde not disobedience
Vnto your mothers griefes. Orest. My mother, no,
She is not here, no, she hath hid her selfe
In some odde nooke, or angle vnperceiu'd,
She might not see this impious stygian world. (sheath?)

Clyt. Agistheus, canst thou still suffer thy dul sword i'th
Take the ranke head from this o'r-growing weed.

Stro. Remember Clytemnestra, he's your sonne.

Clyt. He is so, and I'll learne him to be so:
Had I a brazen bull, it should be heat,
Hotter then for the Tyrant: Disobedient?
More harsh then Adders hisses is thy voyce,
Sir, you shall die, but with a liuing death,
He still shall liue, but liue to know he dies;
Who strait threats death, knowes not to Tyrannize.

Exeunt Agistheus, Clytemnestra.

Stro. What temper's growne on the distracted Queene!
Hath griefe conceiu'd for her late husbands death,
Brought her so farre, shee hath forgot her selfe?

Orest. No Vncle, no, by heauen, I doe suspect,
O, my propheticke soule diuines much ill:
Well, I will flie, but heare this stratagem,
It shall be rumor'd i'th care o'th Court
I was found dead, I'll put a new shape on,
And liue alone, to heare how things goe here.

Pyl. Nay, not alone Orestes, whilst I liue,
Shouldst make thy bed vpon the rigid Alps,
Or frozen Caucalus, wrapt in sheets of snow,
I'd freeze vnto thy side; we will tell tales
Of Troian warriors, and deposed Kings,
Tell of strange shipwracke, of old Priams fall,
How mad Andromacha did teare her hayre,
When the wild horses tore braue Hectors limbs:
We'll thinke they all doe come, and weepe with vs;

Griefe

The Tragedie of Orestes.

Griefe loues companions, and it helpeth woe,
When it heares euery one grone forth his (Oh)
It easeth much, and our plaints fall more sweet,
When a whole consort, in one tune doe meet:
The halfe-dead ship-man, which hath shipwracke borne,
Seeing many drown'd, it makes him lesse to mourne:
It made Deucalion care the lesse to die,
When hee had all the world in company.
Thus we will sit, and our teares turnes shall keepe;
Thou for thy father, I for thee will weepe:
If actors on the stage hauing no cause,
But for to winne an hearers hands applause,
Can let fall teares, wee'll thinke wee Actors be,
And onely doe but play griefes Tragedie.

Orest. O, but deare friend, should we but act a part,
The play being ended, passion left the heart,
And we should share of ioy, but my whole age
Must neuer moue from off this wofull Stage:
But we must take our leaue; Vncle, farewell,
Remember what I spake; and Sister, you
Must tarry here, my thoughts shall busied be,
To finde the man that let my father blood;
Can I but finde Aegystheus did consent,
To spill one drop, O I would pierce his heart
With venom'd daggers, and so butcher him,
That all Apollo's skill in physicke hearbs,
Nor Asculapius th' Epidaurian God,
Should keepe his foule out of Enio's hand;
Come my deare friend, to all the rest farewell,
If heauen relate it not, I'll know't from hell.

Exeunt Pylades: Orestes.

SCEN .III.

Enter Aegystheus: Clytemnestra: Mysander: Strophon: Electra another way.

Aegst. What, is Orestes fled? sure there's some plot,
If you deare Queen, but search Elect. well,

You'll finde she knowes whither her brothers gone,
Clyt. If in her heart there be but lodg'd a thought,

The Tragedie of Orestes.

Vnknowne to mee this hand shall rip her brest,
And search her inparts: but I'll finde it out.

Mysander, call Electra:

Egyf. O, were that moat rane from our comforts beams,
No cloud could euer then o'rsshade our ioyes,
His life must be cut off without delay,
Mischiefe by mischiefe findes the sfaest vway:
But here's Electra:

Clyt. Why, how now Minion, what a blubbering still?
Huswife, pray vwhere's your brother, where's my sonne?

Elect. Mother, pray wher's my father, wher's your husband, Haile to my gracious Queene, here's one at doore. (Enter
Brings you a message, hee vwill not relate Strophius,
To any, but your selfe, he saies tis sad. and speaks.

Clyt. Why, the more dissmall, the more vvelcome 'tis,
But as for you. Elect. Good mother doe your worst,
No plague can euer make me more accurst,
Nothing is worse then death, that I'll not flye.

Clyt. Yes, life is worse to those that faine vvould die.
But vwhere's the messenger?

S C E N. V.

Enter Nuncius.

WHat whirlwind rising from the wombe of earth
Doth raise huge Pelion vnto Ossa's top,
That both being heapt, I stand vpon them both
And with an hundred Setnor-drowning voyce;
Relate vnto the world the saddest tale,
That euer burnded the weake iawes of man:

Egyf. Why, what portentuous newes? Amaze vs not,
Tell vs what e'r it be.

Nun. Were my mindè settled, would the gellid feare,
That freezeth vp my sense, set free my speech,
I would vnfold a tale which makes my heart
Throb in my intralls: when I seeme to see't.

Clyt. Relate it quickly, hold's not in suspence.

Nun. Vpon the mount of yonder rising cliffe,
Which the earth hath made a bulwarke for the sea,
Whose peerlesse head is from the streames so high

The Tragedy of Orestes.

That whosoer lookes downe, his braine will swim
With a vertigo: The space remou'd so farre
The object from the eye, that a tall ship
Seem'd a swift flying bird: vpon this top
Saw I two men making complaints to heauen,
One's voyce distinctly still cry'd, Father, King,
Great Agamemnon: whose diuine soule
Fled from thy corps, exil'd by buchers hands,
His friend still sought to keepe his dying life
With words of comfort, that it should not rush
Too violently vpon the hands of Fate.
He deafe as sea, to which he made his plaints,
Still cryed out, Agamemnon, I will come,
And finde thy blessed soule where e'r it walke,
In what faire Tempe of Elisum
So e'r it be, my soule shall find it out;
With that his friend knit him within his armes,
Striuing to hold him, but when twas no boot,
They hand in hand, thus plung'd into the maine.
Stra it they arose, and striu'd, me thought, for life,
But swelling Neptune not regarding friends,
Wrapt their embraced limbs in following waues:
Vntill at last, their deare departing soules
Hastned to Styx, and I no more cloud see.

Stro. O, 'twas Orestes, 'twas my Pylades,
Which arme in arme did follow him to death.

Elect. O my Orestes, O my dearest brother,
'Tis he, 'tis he that thus hath drown'd himselfe.

Agyst. Why, then if Agamemnon and his sonne
Haue brought their lease of life to the full end;

I am Thyestes sonne, and the next heyre,
To sit in Argos Throne of Maiesty.

Thanks to our Alpheus sea, who as't ad striu'd
To gratifie Agystheus, rais'd his force,
And gathered all his waters to one place,
They might be deepe inough to drowne Orestes:

But come my Queene, let vs command a feast.
To get a kingdome, who'ld not thinke it good,
To swim vnto it through a sea of blood.

The Tragedie of Orestes.

ACT. III. SCEN. I.

Enter Tyndarus: Misander.

Tynd. O Vr daughter send for vs? how fares she? well?
She mournes I'm sure for her husbands death.

Mis. My Lord, shee tooke it sadly at the first:
But time hath lessen'd it. Tynd. I, grieffe soone ends
That flowes in teares; they still are womens friends:
But how is't rumord now in Argos, though,
That Agamemnon dyde. Mis. Why, hee was old,
And death thought best to seise on him at home,

Tynd. 'Twas a long home, hee got by comming home;
Well, well, Misander, I like not the course,
The peoples murmure makes my cheekes to blush.

Mis. My gracious Lord, who trusts their idle murmure,
Must neuer let the blush goe from his cheekes,
They are like flagges growing on muddy banks,
Whose weake thin heads blowne, with one blast of winde,
They all will shake, and bend themselues one way;
Great mindes must not esteeme what small tongues say.
All things in state must euer haue this end,
The vulgar should both suffer, and commend,
If not for loue, for feare; great maiesty
Should doe those things the vulgar dare not see.

Tynd. O, Sir, but those that doe commend for feare,
Doe in their hearts a secret hatred beare.
Euer learne this; the truest praile indeed,
Must from the heart, and not from words proceed.
I feare some foule play: doth Aegystheus meane,
Then totally for to inuest himselfe
In Agamemmons seat? Where's young Orestes?

Mis. Why my Lord? hee for the great grieffe conceiu'd,
Being young, not knowing well to rule himselfe
With sway of reason, ranne vpon his death,
And threw himselfe with my Lord Strophius sonne,
Into the midst of Alpheus, so was drown'd.

Tynd. How took my daughter that? Mis. Why, wisely too;
And like her selfe; not being in despaire:.

The Tragedie of Orestes.

Her royall wombe will bring forth many more,
Shall be as deare as e'r Orestes was.

Tynd. I feare heauen cannot looke with equall eyes
Vpon so many deaths, but meanes to send
Plague after plague; for in a wretched state,
One ill begets another dismall Fate:
But goe and tell my daughter I will come,
And helpe to solemnize her nuptiall night:
Her hasty wedding, and the old Kings neglect,
Makes my coniecturall soule some ill suspect.

Exeunt.

S C E N. II.

Enter Orestes, and Pylades.

Orest. IF euer God lent any thing to earth,
Whereby it seem'd to sympathize with heauen,
It is this sacred friendship: Gordian knot
Which Kings, nor Gods, nor Fortune can vndoe.
O what Horoscopus, what constellation,
Held in our birth so great an influence,
Which one affection in two mindes vnites?
How hath my wo bene thine, my fatall ill
Hath still bene parted, and one share bene thine!

Pyl. Why, dearest friend, suppose my case were thine,
And I had lost a father, would it not thou
In the like sort participate my griefe?

Orest. Yes, wittesse heauen I would.

Pyl. So, now thou hast lost a father,

Orest. True, Pylades, thou putst me well in mind,
I haue lost a father, a deare, deare father,
A King, a braue old King, a noble souldier,
And yet he was murdered: O my forgetfull soule;
Why should not I now drawe my vengefull sword,
And strait-way sheath it in the murderers heart?

Minos should neuer haue vacation,
Whilst any of our progeny remain'd.

Well, I will goe, and so massacre him,
I'll teach him how to murder an old man,
A King, my Father, and so dastardly.

To kill him in his bed. Pyl. Alas, Orestes!

The Tragedie of Orestes.

Griefe doth distract thee: who ist thou wilt kill?

Orest. Why, he, or she, or they that kill'd my father.

Pyl. I, who are they? Orest. Nay, I know not yet,
But I will know. Pyl. Stay thy vengefull thoughts,
And since thus long we haue estrang'd our felus
From friends and parents, lets thinke why it is,
And why we had it noyfed in the Court,
We both were dead; the cause was thy reuenge,
That if by any secreet priuate meanes,
We might but learne who'twas, that drench'd their swords
In thy deare fathers blood, wee then would rouze
Blacke Nemesis in flames from out her caue,
And shee should be the vmpire in this cause.
Mans soule is like a boystrous working sea,
Swelling in billowes for disdaine of wrongs,
And tumbling vp and downe from day to day,
Growes greater still in indignation,
Turnes malecontent, in pleaselesse melancholly,
Spending her humours in dull pafsion, still
Locking her senses in vncloused gins,
Till by reuenge shee sets at liberty.

Orest. O, now my thirsty soule expects full draughts
Of Ate's boyling cup: O, how two'ld ease
My heart, to see a channell of his blood,
Streaming from hence to hell, that killd my father,

Pyl. I, but deare friend, thou must not let rage loose,
And like a furious Lyon, from whose denne
The forrester hath stolne away his young,
Hee misung it, strait runnes with open iawes
On all he meets, and neuer hurting him
That did the wrong; wise men must mix reuenge
With reason, which by prouidence will prompt,
And tell vs where's the marke, whereat we ayme.
Till then in Cinders wee'll rake vp our griefe,
Fire thus kept, still liues, but opened dies,
From smallest sparks great flames may one day rise.

Orest. True, friend, but, O, who euer will reueale
This hideous act! what power shall wee inuoke?

Pyl. Yes, harken friend, I haue bethought a meanes;
Not distant farre from this place where we liue,

There.

The Tragedie of Orestes.

There stands a caue hard by a hollow oake,
In a low valley where no Sun appears,
No musique euer was there heard to sound;
But the harsh voyce of croking ominous rauens,
And sad Nyctimine the bird of night,
There's now a shed vnder whose ancient rooffe,
There sometimes stood an Altar for the Gods,
But now slow creeping time, with windy blasts
Hath beaten downe that stately Temples walls,
Defac't his rich built windows, and vntil'd
His battlemented rooffe, and made it now
A habitation, nor for God, nor men:
Yet an old woman, who doth seem to striue
With the vast building for antiquity,
In whose rough face time now hath made such holes,
As in those vncouth stones she there hath made
Her selfe a cell, wherein to spend her age;
Her name's Canidia; great in Magique spells,
At whose dire voyce, the gods themselves would quake,
To heare her charme the second time pronounc't.
One that can know the secrets of Heauen,
And in the ayre hath flying ministers,
To bring her news from earth, from sea, from hell:
Which, when thicke night hath compas't in the world,
Then doth she goe to dead mens graues and tombs,
And sucks the poysonous marrow from their bones,
Then makes her charme, which she nere spent in vaine,
Nor doth she come as suppliant to the Gods,
But making Erebus, and Heauen to quake,
She sends a spell drowning infernall thunder,
By which all secrets that were euer don,
In faire white parchment writ in lines of blood,
Eockt in the inmost roome of hell it selfe
Is brought vnto her: and by her we may
Haue leaue to looke in Pluto's register,
And read the names of those most loathed Furies,
Which rent thy Fathers soule from out his truncke,
But she must see thy Fathers dead bones first,
Them we must bring her, for by them she works:
This if thou dar'st assay, I'll goe along.

The Tragedie fo Orestes.

Orest. If I dare assay? yes, yes, deare friend,
 Were it to burst my Fathers sepulchre,
 And wake his Manes, shew them Radamanth,
 Their iterated fight will burne my soule
 With such a sparkling flame of dire reuenge,
 As Nessus shirt did burne great Hercules,
 If that the scrowle which did containe their names,
 Were in a lake of flaming brimstone drencht,
 I'd take it out, or fetch't from Pluto's armes:
 But come; If earth haue such a creature as can tell,
 T will saue a iourney for this once from hell.

SCEN. III.

Enter Egyst. Clytem. Tynd. Misanter. Scrophius, Electra,
cum cat. with a crown. Egyst. ascends the throne, Mi-
ander crownes him: Clytem. great with child.

Mys. ALL yeares of happy dayes, all hour es of Ioy
 So circle in thy state, as doth this crown
 Wreath and combine thy princely temples in,
All speak! Ioue still protect Egystheus:

Egyst. Thanks to my Fathers subiects:
 Now Argos swell vp to the brim with ioy,
 And streams of gladnes flow on Tyndarus,
 Now made our Father; see old King, see here's
 My Quene doth meane to make thee a grandfather,
 See how thy royall blood shall propagate,
 Whose Kingly drops like heauen distilling dew
 Shall adde fresh life vnto thy withered roote.

Tyn. Yes, but Egystheus, there were armes before
 Grew on this tree; but the Fates enuious axe
 Hath cut them off before th'ad time to sproute:

Clyt. O Sir, the Fates needs must haue leaue to make
 Wayes for themselues to mannage what they doe:
 Had Agamemnon and Orestes liu'd,
 They could not then haue blest me with these gifts:
 Still when the heauens and Fates doe worke their will,
 They intend good, though sometimes there come ill:

Tynd. O but pray Ioue the Fates now were not forc't,
 But deedslike words no man can e're recall,
 Bee't good or ill; once don, we must beare all.

The Tragedie of Orestes.

Come Father sit we downe, and make a feast, They set to the
To glad our hearts; Heauen still doth for the best. feast.

Siroph. O let my latter age not liue to see

Agistheus weare great Argus diademe :

Elect. Feare not good vncler, there wil be a time
To pull him downe, although he yet doth climbe :

Tynd. Who euer trusted much on fortunes gifts,
On wife, on state, on health, on friends, on lands,
May looke on *Agamemnon*s comming home:

Fortune me thinks ne're shew'd her power more,

How quickly could she turn her Fatall sword

Vpon his brest, that thought him selfe past harme,

She that had vs'd death like an angry dogge,

Holding him vp, when that he should haue bit,

When al the game was past, and's fury laid,

The King being past all danger, safe at home,

Then he slip's coller, neuer vntill then;

And fortune she stood hissing of him on,

Till he had torne the good Kings soule away.

Agyst. Nay but good Father let passe elegies, Clyt. seems

You draw fresh tears now from your daughters eies, to weep

Who shed enough before at's funerall,

Let's talke who are to liue, not who are dead;

And thinke what progeny shall spring from vs

May beare your Image stamp't vpon the face,

This we must talke of now, not what griefs past

But of the ioy to come: Agyst. My Queen not well?

Now good Electra looke vnto your mother, Clyt. riseth

Lucina be propitious to the birth; from the table.

Why, will not now a young Agystheus be,

As gratefull as an old Orestes was?

Thou times good lengthener, age, posterity,

Spread thy selfe still vpon Agistheus line,

Helpe me to treasure vp antiquity,

And from Thyestes loyns let spring an heire,

Shall euer sit in great Thyestes chaire. Exeunt.

SCEN.

SCEN. IV.

Enter Pylates & Orestes, with his arme full of a dead mans bones and a Scull.

Pylad. Neare to this shady groue, where neuer light
Appeares, but when 'tis forced with som charm,
Canidia dwells, in such a dusky place,
That the night goblins feare to come too neare it,
Here let vs knocke. Orest. Nay, Pylades, see here,
O giue me leaue to descant on these bones.
This was my Fathers scull; but who can know
Whether it were some subiects scull, or no:
Where be these Princely eyes, commanding face,
The braue Maiesticke looke, the Kingly grace,
Wher's the imperious frowne, the Godlike smile,
The gracefull tongue, that spoke a souldiers stile?
Ha, ha, worms ate them: could no princely looke,
No line of eloquence writ in this booke,
Command, nor yet perswade the worms away
Rebellious worms! could a King beare no sway?
Iniurious worms! what could no flesh serue,
But Kings for you? By heauen you all shall sterue:
Had I but know'n't; what must my father make
A feast for you? O ye deuouring creatures!

Pyla. Now some Archilocus to helpe him make Vengefull Iambiques, that would make these worms
To burst themselues; Passion must please
It selfe by words, griefe told it selfe doth ease.

Orest. You cowardly bones, would you be thus vnclath'd
By little crawling wormes! by Ioue I neuer thought
My Fathers bones could e're haue beene such cowards:
O you vngratefull wormes how haue you vs'd him;
See their ingratitude: O ambitious creatures,
How they still domineere, or'e a Kings carcasse, (the crown

Pyla. How could they thinke Orestes, when thou cam'st to
That thou shouldst beare, that these should eat thy father,

Orest. True? Pylades, should not I rend their maws, Deuise some new tortures? O most horrible treason,
That worms should come vnto a great Kings face,

And

The Tragedie of Orestes.

And eate his eyes: why, I would vndertake
But at one stampe to kill a thousand of 'em,
And I will kill these: Stamps vpon them.

Goe you Kings-eating creatures: I will marre
All your digestion. Pylad. Alas, where be his wits?
He stands declaming against senselesse worms,
And turnes more senselesse then the worms themselves;

Wher's now the Oracle you should consult?
The great Magician? now the Centaurs thought
Shall be example to all future yeers,

And now transcend Proserpina's inuention,
Ha, hast thou found them out, ha, were they worms?

Orest. O prethe laugh not at me me, call her, call her; Pyl.
Whilst I stand gathering vp my Fathers bones, (knocks.)

His deare disiected bones; O, I remember, here
Ran the strong sinews, 'twixt his knitting ioynts,
Here to this bone was ioynd his Princely arme,
Here stood the hand that bare his warlike shield,

And on this little ioynt was place't the head,
That Atlas-like bare vp the weight of Greece,

Here, here betwixt these hollow yawning iaws
Stood once a tongue, which with one little word
Could haue commanded thousand souls to death:

Good hands indure this your weighty taske,
And good eyes striue not to make moyst his bones
With weeping teares:

What Scinis or Procustes euer could
Haue hackt a King into such things as these;

Alas her's euery part now so deform'd,
I know not which was his, yet all was his.

Sound infernall Musique.

SCEN. V.

Enter Canidia, like an Enchauntresse.

Orest. Protect vs O ye Ministers of Heauen,
Stand neare me my good Genius, my soule hath lost
His humane function, at this hellish sight.

Can. Who is't disturbs our caue, what messenger
Hath Pluto sent, that would know ought from vs,

The Tragedie of Orestes.

What are you, speake, Canidia cannot stay.

Pylad. Prompt vs some Ghost,
Great feare of earth, and gouernesse of nature,
In whose deepe closet of that sacred heart
Are written the characters of future Fate ;
And what is done, or what must be thou knowst :
Whose words make burning Acheron grow cold,
And Ioue leaue thundring, when he heares thy name,
To thee we come : O turne thy secret booke,
And looke whole names thou there shalt see inscrib'd
For murderers, reade or 'e all the catalogue,
Vntill thou findest there, engrauen those
Which kild the King of Greece, great Agamemnon.

Orest. Yes, he that did owe these bones which worms haue
It is not now one of the meaner sort (cate)
That craues this boone, but 'tis the heire of Greece,
Heire onely now but to my Fathers graue ;
I not command, but my astonisht soule
Entreats to know.

If in thy booke it be not yet put downe,
Command the Gods to vnlocke the gates of Heauen ;
And fetch forth death, command him to relate
Who 'twas put Agamemnon in his hands,
This is our businesse, this, great propheticke,
Made vs approach to thy most hallowed-cell.

Can. Ho, ho, ho, I tell thee fond young Prince !
A lesser power thou mightst haue implor'd,
Which might haue vrg'd th'vnwilling fiends to this :
Our dire enchantments carry such a force,
That when the stars, and influence of heauen,
Haue suckt the liuely bloud from out mens veyns,
I at my pleasure bring it backe againe ;
I knew each houre in the Troian fight,
What Grecian, or what Phrygian should die,
And fierce Achilles had no sooner pierc't
Great Hectors side, but fate did send me word :
Earth, Sea, deepe Chaos, all the stony hills,
Will ope themselues to shew me prodigies ;
Night will vnmaske her brow, to let me see
What blacke conceptions teeme within her wombe.

The Tragedy of Orestes.

Orest. O then relate great Mistresse of thy Art,
The things we craue: Can. what time of night is't?

Pyl. Vpon the stroke of twelue.

Can. Straite when a cloudy Euen clappeth the Ayre,
And all light's drench't in misty Acheron,
When the blacke palpherys of the full cheekt moone,
Haue got behinde this parta'th Hemisphære,
And darke Aldebor, and is mounted high
Into the sable Cassiopeias chaire,
And night ful mounted in her seat of iet,
Sits wrapt within a cabinet of clouds,
When serpents leaue to hisse, no dragons yell,
No birds doe sing, no harsh tun'd toads doe croake,
The Armenian Tyger, and the rauenuous wolfe,
Shall yeeld vp all their tyranny to sleepe,
And then none walke but hells disturbed spirits,
Children of night, such as belong to me,
I'll shew thee thy desire; giue me these bones.

Orest. Here, take them Mother, vse them gently,
They were a Kings bones once; O not so hard:

Can. Why senslesse boy, dost thinke that I respect
A Kings dead bones, more then an other mans;
O they smell rankly; I, this sent doth please,
But I must now to worke: why Sagana.

*Smells to

Pylad. Looke here thou King of Greece, fond Menelæus, Thou which didst bring so many goodly shapes, Take up the Into such things as these, and all for Helen, (Scull.
Which when the worms bred of her dainty flesh,
Shall haue know'd off her tender rubie lips,
And left her gumlesse, looke vpon her then;
And thou wouldst euen disgorge thy selfe to see,
Such putride vermin to lye kissing her.

Orest. This head had once a royall diademe,
Now knock it, beate it, and'twill ne're cry treason.

Can. Why Sagana.

Orest. There was a player once vpon a stage,
Who striuing to present a dreery passion,
Brought out the vrne of his late buried sonne,
It might the more affect him, and draw teares:
But I, as if I had no passion left,

The Tragedie of Orestes.

Not acting of a part, but really
In a true cause hauing my Fathers bones,
His hollow scull, yet crawling full of worms,
I cannot weepe, no not a teare wil come.

Can. Why Sagana, Veia, Erietho, know you not your time?

SCEN. V I.

Enter Sagana, Veia, Erietho, 3. witches.

Sag. V V Hat would you Beldame?

Can. Hath not triform'd Hecate put on
Her Styx-died mantle, is't not now fit time
To worke our charmes in?

Veia. We here are ready 'gainst thy sacred charme.

Can. You two, sit by, and beare in minde this charge;
Who e're you see, who euer I present,
Let your tongues be percullist in your iaws,
Stir not, nor speake not, till the charme be done.

Pyl. Feare not, it shall be chain'd with silence.

Can. Night, and Diana sacred Queene,
Which euer hast spectator beene
Vnto our balefull hideous rights,
Ne're acted but in darkest nights,
Now in this fatall herf-bred houre,
Shew to my rites thy greatest power.

Erietho when my torch shall twinkle,
Auernall water thou shalt sprinkle
About the roome, now let vs kneele,
Our heauy burthen Hell shall feele:
Lets all coyn words, now we may see
Who 'twas did worke this prodigie.

Omnes. Pluto, great Pluto, we command,
Thou send vnto vs out of hand,
The shapes of those that kild the King,
Great Agamemnon.

Infernall Musique.

Enter in a dumbe shew Egystheus, and Clytem. with their bloody daggers, looke vpon the bed, goe to it, and stab, and then make a shew of gladnes, and depart.

Or. O'tis about my bearing! were I linkt here with chains,

The Tragedie of Orestes.

I would like Cerberus draw Alcides backe :
Stay, stay, by heauens, reuenge shall take you here ;
Nay, I will follow you, should they take their cause,
Where Aetna vomits fire, I would in :
My mother, Clytemnestra, Aegistheus, was it they ?
Nay, I will o'rtake them.

Can. O sonne, remember what I told you sonce,
Many a rockie hill and stony mount,
Many a sea, and vast Charybdis gulfe,
Stands betwixt them and thee, though they seeme neere.

Orc. O piety! O most prodigious nature!
What creatures hast thou made to liue on earth ?
How hast thou cloath'd blacke darknesse with a scarfe
Of vnstain'd purity, and put a godly face
Vpon portentuous diuells ? Oh, how my mother wept !
How Clytemnestra ! how that Hyena wept !
No more my mother, I abiure the name,
She did not bring me forth, I know she did not :
But I'll o'rtake 'em ; shew mee Canidia where,
Which way they went, where haue they hid themselues.
Should they mount vp to the chariot of the Sunne,
And in his Carre fly to the Antipodes,
Or in the farthest nooke of yonder spheare :
Get vp and place themselues betwixt Taurus hornes,
The fire-breathing bull, or Lerna's Hydra,
Were there no entrance but ten Lyons iawes,
I'd runne through all, and make my way my selfe :
I'd fix them to the Axell tree of heauen,
Where their infectious Carcasses should hang,
Abait for flying spirits in the Ayre.
Canidia, I thanke thee for thy paines ;
Still may thy sacred Art reueale such deeds ;
Still keepe the gates of Orcus yawning ope,
Make the darke powers ready at command.

Pyl. But let vs haste deare friend, this vast worlds roome
Allowes vs none, but thy dead fathers Tombe :
Here's naught but ayres of death, no bed but stones,
Our pillow's a dead scull, companions bones,
This's all our comfort, if we needs must die,
We haue a graue prepar'd wherein to lie.

The Tragedie of Orestes.

Orest. Now pale Tisiphone, O for thy Snakes!
O that renowned spirit, that more then man,
Whom all the Trojan host could not o'rwhelme,
Murdred; but what braue warriour wore a crown,
By guilding a dire sword in his deare blood?
Hector, nor Priam, no, nor Mars himselte,
Onely his wife was his Bellona now.
O miserable valour, to scape foes,
And come for to be murdred of his friends:
O shamefull conquest! O most coward Fate,
That a weake woman was competitor
In Agamemmons death: had it beene any, yet
It should haue beene a Goddesse at the least,
And yet shee's but a Queene, a mortall woman.
Were she a Goddesse, I would make he mortall;
Dull coward that I am, and, worse then all,
After so many wrongs, yet vnreung'd,
Their Palace now should fire o'r their heads,
And the huge beams dash out their guilty brains:
The roofe, should fall on me, so't fell on them.
Begin reuenge, and now performe an act,
May giue a theame to all posterity,
Euer to talke of, fraught so full of horronr,
Egysthens and my mother, may wish their's,
Yet none was euer greater, yes, my deed.
Reuenge is lost, vnlesse we doe exceed.

Pyl. But a bad mother, friend, thou shouldst not hurt,
The law of nature doth forbid such thoughts.

Orest. Nor Gods, nor nature shall keepe mee inawe,
Why towards my mother, by heauens Parliament,
Who is most guilty, is most innocent.

Can. Shall I thus by some magique Art, my sonne,
Take both their pictures in pure virgin waxe?
And wound the place where that the hurt should stand,
And so wound them? Orest. Tush, this is too little.

Can. Shall I breed them hate? Orest. Too little too.

Can. Shall I consume their children? Ore. All this too Hell and the furies shall stand all amaz'd, (little:
Al. Eto shall come there for to behold
New kindes of murders which she knew not yet:

The Tragedie of Orestes.

And nature learne to violate her selfe,
I'll instantly to th'Court, and what I doe,
My selfe will see done, yes, and act it too.
Thanks great Canidia, this blacke night being done,
Reuenge now knowes her game whereat to runne:

Exeunt omnes.

A C T. IIII. S C E N. I.

Enter in state, Agystheus: Clytemnestra: Tyndarus: Sirophius: Electra: Nutrix: cum nouo partu:

Agyst. NEuere but when a royall off-spring comes
From a Kings loynes, can hee be truly King;
Then doth he sit firme, rooted in his state,
Then is he truly man, and then the Gods
He knowes doe loue him, which when Kings doe want;
The curse of nature doth deny them fruit;
And brands their bed with loath'd sterility.

Tynd. Agystheus, since the Gods haue blest'd you so,
Haue care their blessings turne not to your woe.
Your ioy, my daughters ioy, and my ioy too,
Haue care it be preferu'd, and brought vp well:
And take heed, sonne, of Agamemmons blood,
Pierce not with enuy the Babes tender heart.

Agyst. Tush father, now not without grieve I speake,
All brookes which from the Princely Ocean ranne,
Are quite dry'd vp, onely Electra here,
Our deare Electra, whose great weight of loue
Is in our ballance equally so poys'd,
That shee shall euere thinke her father liues,
Our heart shall be so parallell with hers.

El. Yes, great Agystheus, we'r't but our mothers will,
What she thinks good of, I must not thinke ill:
Besides, your loue e'r since my fathers death,
As if it came from his departing soule,
And forth-with had reuiu'd againe in you,
Hath held a prospectiu for me, to see
His care redoubled, though the object's chang'd,
And, for I lost a brother, if you please,

That

The Tragedie of Orestes.

That I may challenge in your royall blood,
Here doe I tie with all affections bands,
My selfe vnto this Babe, which is as deare
Vnto my soule, as were Orestes here.

Clyt. Daughter, your heart now with obedience strung,
Makes a sweet musique sounding from your tongue.

Nurse, bring the Babe, giue it Electra, so,
You daughter shall haue ouersight of it.

Nur. O, shall I part from't then? Clyt. No, good Nurse,
Electra with her care, you with your paines.

Nur. Now by Lucina, had it gone away,
I should haue sit, and sob'd away my heart;
'Tis the sweetest Babe that euer Nurse did kisse.

Egypt. Looke here good father, looke mynobles here,
Vpon this Babe scarce crept yet out of earth,
For you shall grow an Autumn of ripe yeeres,
When time hath brought it to maturity,
Looke on thy Grandchilde, Tyndarus, see, 'tis thine,
This came from thee, old man, see how it smiles
Vpon the Grandfire, as if wise nature had Taught him his kindreds names fore he came forth.

Tynd. I see't, Egyptheus, and my ag'd blood grows warme,
As if my selfe were a new father made,
And all the blefsings I can render it,
Shal drop like golden showers on the head:
Me thinks it doth recall my sliding age,
And makes swift time retire backe againe:
It doth vnfold those wrinkles in my face,
Which griepe and yeeres had fixed as their signes
Vpon my brow, and now it shall be seene,
Although my hayres are gray, my ioyes are greene.

Clyt. Long may our father his opinion hold,
And you, our daughter, let not sinister thoughts
Wrong your suspitious minde, though this being young,
It makes our Lord, and me to speake our ioyes,
Yet our affection, and our naturall loue,
Is not a whit to you diminished.
A mother can be mother vnto many,
And as from one roote hid within the ground,
Springs many flowers, that lends sap to all:

The Tragedie of Orestes.

So from a parents heart runne veines of loue,
Which, though to many, they without doe flow,
Yet from one heart, one root, they all doe grow.

Elect. I hope our gracious mother cannot thinke
We doe suspect her loue, witnessse this charge,
Which you haue blefs'd my armes and soule withall,
And as your loue committed it with care,
My care shall still defend it with my loue. (come,

Aegyst. We thanke our daughter, come Lord Strophius,
Griefe still sits heauy on your fighting heart,
Be frolike, learne of vs, in all the grace,
And pleasure our Court extends, you shall haue place.

Stroph. I thanke my gracious Lord, time hath by this,
Almost eate out the memory of our sonne,
And since the heauens let fall their dew on you,
And watred Argos with such springing hopes,
I will not teeme a stocke, vncapable
Of such a generall comfort, but reuiue
My buried thoughts, and for my Souerignes sake,
Old Strophius will a young mans person take.

Aegyst. We thanke old Strophius, and if honour can
Keepe thee still young, our Princely hand is wide,
And freely shall extend all graces on thee,
And you all our subiects, which beare part
Thus in our ioy; and here I doe proclaime,
And personally from my owne mouth pronounce,
Sealing it with the signet of my State,
A generall immunity to all
Murders, rapes, treasons, thefts, conueyances,
Which haue beene from the birth of our deare childe,
In all the confines of our Empire done;
Nor shall your licence date be quite expired,
Till the slow ycere seuen times runnes out his course.
Our selfe thus speake it; vntill then all's free,
Kings win their subiects by immunity. Exeunt omnes.

Manent Strophius, & Electra.

Stroph. Electra, you are happy in your charge.

Electr. Yes, Vncle, and you happy in my fauour.

Nur. Madam, shall I stay here vntil you come? comes backe

The Tragedie of Orestes.

Electr. Yes, Nurse, sit downe and sing, looke to the Babe,
I'll onely with my Vncle change a word.

Nurse sings.

Lullaby, lullaby Baby,
Great Argos ioy,
The King of Greece thou art borne to be,
In despite of Troy.
Rest euer wait upon thy head,
Sleepe close thine eyes,
The blessed guard tend on thy bed
Of Deities.
O, how this brow will besee me a crowne!
How these lockes will shine!
Like the raies of the Sun on the ground,
These lockes of thine.
The Nurse of heauen still send thee milk,
Maist thou suck a Queene.
Thy drinke Ioues Nectar and cloaths of silke,
A God mayst thou see me.
Cupid sit on this Rose an cheek,
On these rubie lips
May thy minde like a Lambe be meeke,
In the vales which trips,
Lullaby, Lullaby Baby, &c.

Elect. You neuer heard from my brother, Vncle,
Nor from your sonne, they haue beene long away?

Stroph. In troth, Electra, I am in despaire,
Almost of euer seeing them againe;
Sure if Orestes liue, and euer heare,
Vnto what passe Egyptus brings his state,
Seated him in the throne of his mothers bed,
And like to leaue Argos hereditary
To his posterity, it cannot e'r be borne,
Orestes spirit will endure no scorne.

Elect. Vncle, his long delayes make mee surmise,
Or he will neuer come, or come with prize;
Hee, if now come, hee must not shew himselfe,
But liue vnknowne, vnnam'd, or change his name.

Str. Hisname, Electra, yes, and's nature too,

Which

The Tragedy of Orestes.

Which I doe feare me hee will hardly doe.
But if we hear not from them now e're long,
I'll listen by some meanes about the land,
To heare of them; meane time you to your charge,
Officious duty must our liues enlarge.

Elect. Come Nurse.

Exeunt.

SCEN. II.

Enter Orestes, and Pylades.

Orest. O, here's the Palace vnder whose kinde rooffe
My tender yeeres were gently fostered:
But now the sight on't seemes to strike my soule,
When I but thinke it holds within the walls,
The patrons of such lust incarnate diuells,
Mere Pythonists, that fascinate the world.

Pyl. Nay, but Orestes, thinke now of your selfe,
Complaine not of your wrongs, but seeke to right them.
We might haue liu'd i'th woods still to complaine,
And to that purpose wee may turne againe.
Whet vp your former thoughts, and spend not time,
To raue, but to reuenge this odious act.

We know they were their shapes, and no Chymera's.

Orest. O, Pylades, knew I thou art my friend?

Pyl. I hope you thinke it. Orest. I doe, I dare sweare it,
So I dare sweare it was Agystheus, and
The dumbe witch, the O, what things enough
To be an attribute to terme her by.

The Clytemnestra, O, wee saw her do't.

Pyl. 'Twas a blacke deede indeede, and past all thought.

Orest. O, hell it selfe has not the patterne to't:
Some stench, some fogs, and vapours stop their breath,
Exhald from out the dampish wombe of Styx,
Dideuer foule, disastrous, fiendlike hands,
Cast vp so huge a heape of hell-bred mischief.
Were I to diue to'th depth of Phelgeton,
Or fetch young Ganimed from the armes of Ioue,
To rend Proserpina from Pluto's bed,
Or take the vulture from off Titius heart,
And set it on my mothers, I'd do't;

The Tragedie of Orestes.

I'll breake ope doores, and nayle 'em to their bed ;
Harke, reuenge calls mee, I, I come, I come.

Pyl. Nay, still outrageous friend, good now containe
Your heady fury in wisedomes reyne :

Harken to my aduice. Orest. I will, deare friend,
Thou hast plaid musique to my dolefull soule ;
And when my heart was tympaniz'd with grieffe,
Thou lauedst out some into thy heart from mine,
And kept it so from bursting ; thou hast tide
With thy kinde counsell, as these loosned strings,
They should not cracke asunder with their weight.

Pyl. Then listen now, the best plot I can thinke,
Is this : wee here will liue a while vnknowne :

Orestes, thy profession shall be physicke,
I as your friend t' company you at Court ;
Carry it neatly, learne a few strange words,
Palliate your woe a while, and coope vp grieffe,
You may in time so minister to the King,
Physiques occasion fit reuenge may bring.

Orest. Rarely inuented, I'll speake Aphorismes,
Sublim'd purgations, Quintessence distill'd.
Each dose I giue shall make a heart to bleed,
And proue a true Physician so indeed.

Enter Misander, hauing o'r-heard their talke.

Mis. 'Twas my good Genius guided me here now,
To heare conspiracie ; wherefore I'll attach them.

Saue you Gentlemen. Ore. Saue you too, if you please.

Pyl. Sir, 'twas small manners to interrupt our talke,
And giue no warning of your being nere.

Mis. Warning? you shall haue warning, yes, I know
I heard you both, and vnderstood your plot,
You'll turne Physician, Sir, and giue rare glisters,
Shall worke like Stibium, to purge out hearts,
You thought to act well true Physicians parts.

Ore. Therefore on thee our medicine first shall worke.

Mis. Help, murder. Ore. Nay Parasite I'll gag you, Stabs
You shall not fawne againe, or wag your tayle, him.

When the King nods. Mis. O help me, I am slaine.
Stop his breath quickly, if but he be dead,

The Tragedie of Orestes.

We may escape the danger of the treason,
Nay he is silent; O but we are beset.

SCEN. III.

Enter a Lord and others at the out-cry.

Lor. Looke out, me thought I heard one cry out murder;
Some voyce I am sure did disturbe the court,
It was Misanders voyce me thought that cried, Spies him
And see hee's slaine; one whom the Kings esteeme (dead.
Did ranke among the best; there are the murderers:
Fellowes, how durst you thus abuse the court?
Goe, haste to th' King, tell him the men be here.

- Pylad. Gentlemen, we as louers to the court,
Came here as strangers, for to see the King,
This man being comming out, too soone for vs;
And for him selfe vs'd vs vnciuilly,
We haue been gentlemen, though our Fortunes now
Haue put on beggars weeds vpon our backs:
Who answering in the same sort he propos'd,
He strooke vs, and men cannot indure blows:
So thinking much to be strooke againe,
He grew so hot, he drew and made a Stab;
At which encounter both inclosing him
'Twixt vs, he tooke a wound worse then we thought
To giue, for we did thinke to haue giuen none;
But since 'tis thus, we must appeale to th' King.

Lor. Yes; and here comes his Maiesty in person,

SCEN. IV.

Enter Agysteus, with a guard.

Agy A Guard there on vs, here is murder don,
What is Misander kild, our trusty seruant?
Where are the villaines?

Orest. O hold good heart, harke, harke, hee call's vs villainess

Agyst. What is the matter, speake, how came he dead?
They shall die two deaths, that did cause him one.

The Tragedie of Orestes.

Orest. O I am now vndon; he must sit iudge,
To condemne vs that should massacre him.

Pyl. Nay keepe a temper, hold good friend a while.

Lord. My gracious Soueraigne, these two be the men,
Which haue confels'd the deed :

Aegist. Are you the men which thus abus'd our state,
Was't one or both, if both, you both shall die,
If one, that one, we are iust in our decree.

SCEN. V.

Enter Clyt. Tynd. Strophius, Electra.

V Hat is my Queene come here, to heare the cause;?
Wee'll then ascend; and iudge them instantly Af-

Or. O crack my eye-strings, let these balls drop out (cends
Or the quick sights like darts fly to their souls, (the throne
And pierce their entralls; he King, my mother Queen!

The Briseis and Achilles, that in my dreame,
We come to be condemn'd amongst our friends,
I will speake to them, Electra's there,
And Strophius your old father, Pylades.

Pyl. Shew thy selfe valerous, o'ecome thy selfe,
If we be known, we surely are condemn'd.

Aegist. Father, Lord Strophius sit and heare the cause.

Clyt. Why, my Lord, what is't makes the busines thus?

Aegist. My queene shall strait way know, bring them away,
Although it is not fallen out of our minde,

Of a free act or pardon of all faults,

Committed in the date of such a time,

Our hand of mercy must not be so soft,

To couer or'e with gentle lenity,

Such vlcrons sores as these; there is no place

For mercy left; murder must not find grace :

Therefore our doome is past, one needs must die,

Blood still for blood vnto the gods will cry.

Orest. Then, if thy doome be spent, great King here stands;
The man that did it, shewing his guilty hands.

Pylad. O hold thy doome a while, it was not he,

His serious studies in the learned Arts,

Hearing

The Tragedie of Orestes.

Hearing acute Philosophers dispute
'twixt life and death, and of a future state
Would faine haste to it; but the man was I,
Beleeue not him, 'twas his desire to die.

Orest. No King, 'tis he which in his desperate thoughts,
Would loose the bands betwixt his soule and him,
Ones selfe against ones selfe is witness store,
My selfe confesses, what wouldst thou haue more. kneels.

Pyl. Beleeue him not, vpon my knees I vow,
These hands are only branded with the guilt,
And for ones blood, let not two liues be spilt.

Orest. And on my knees I the like oath doe take,
I gaue the stab, my dagger's bloody yet.

Pylad. That was my dagger King; he took't from me;

Or. He do's me wrong, by heauen 'twas euer mine.

Egyft. This doth amaze vs; I ne're yet saw two Turne Rhetoricians so to plead for death.
Would not the pardon of this odious fact,
Like a foule stench, or an vnwholesome ayre,
Send an infectious vapour through the land,
And choake vp Iustice; this fidelity
Should for this one time set two murderers free.

Cly. Now good my loue, me thinkes I pittie them,
And prethee for my sake, I know them not,
Abate thy edge of Iustice for this once.

Orest. O what she spoke, to dambe, it had been better.

Egyft. My loue, thou knowst I neuer looke too sterne,
Vpon a fault that could aske lenity.
But this is so transcendent, and so great,
It must not be slipt without impunity,
To doe a haynous murder, and i' th court,
I' th place of Iustice, where the King might heare,
Vpon a chiefe attendant of the Kings,
Murder it selfe is past all expiation,
The greatest crime that Nature doth abhorre,
Not being, is abominable to her,
And when we be, make others not to be,
'Tis worse then bestiall, and we did not so,
When onely we by natures ayd did liue,
A Heterogenious kinde, as semibcasts,

The Tragedie of Orestes.

When reason challeng'd scarce a part in vs,
But now doth manhood and ciuility
Stand at the bar of iustice, and there plead,
How much they'r wronged, and how much defac't
When man doth die his hands in blood of man,
Iudgement it selfe would scarce a law enact
Against the murderer, thinking it a fact,
That man 'gainst man would neuer dare commit,
Since the worst things of nature doe not it.

Orest. O how his words now raile against a sinne,
Which beat vpon his conscientious thoughts within.
His tongue speakes faire, his in parts, looke on them,
And they like Iury-men him selfe condemne:

Pyl. But O great King, if iustice must haue right,
Let me stand only guilty in thy sight.

Orest. No, 'tis not King, 'twas I that did the deed,
And for my action, let no other bleed.

Egyst. In troth this make my doome it cannot fall:
Will none of you confesse? Strophius weeps.

Orest. Yes, I confesse. Pylad. No King, 'tis I confesse.

Egyst. How now Lord Strophius, what affects you so,
That makes your teares bewrayers of some passion.

Stroph. My gracious soueraigns, this strange spectacle
Renues the memory of my once great losse,
And my deare Queens, we once were blest with two,
Which so had link'd themselues in bands of Loue,
As these men now doe seeme to me they haue.
One streame of loue did in two hearts so glide,
One with the other liu'd, with other dide.
And would my Queene be my competitor,
For our sons sake my suits should ioyne with her,
Since Iustice craves but one, and both will goe,
Euen saue them both, and right wrongd iustice so.

Clytem. I, good my loue, let iustice come and looke,
If she can finde in all her statute booke,
Two men for the same crime should rightly die;
She will not say so, iustice cannot lie.
And since they both will die, let ones loue saue
The others life, and so both life shall haue.

Agam. In troth my Queen, and my old Lord haue mou'd

The Tragedie of Orestes.

Well, since your loues are both so strongly tide,
And friendship like an old acquaintance sends
To her friend, Justice, that she should be milde,
And looks with eyes of mercy, on your fault,
Considering our immunity proclaim'd,
And such petitioners as you both haue got,
Death in our sentence now shall haue no part,
Whilst who should haue done worst confession strives,
To much confession thus saues two mens liues:
But now we must demand what you made here,
What busines or condition you professe.

Pylad. Great King, our duty owes to thee our liues,
And were we men that striu'd to set a cloud
Before these gifts, Art hath instructed vs:
Or we haue purchac't at a most deare rate,
Of cost and labour, yet thy clemency
Commands vs to lay open all to thee,
Yet for my selfe I rather count my state,
Blest that I lighted on this happy man,
Whose accurate and watchfull indagation,
Hath taught him for to heale the wounds of Nature,
By his exceeding skill in wholesome hearbs,
One that when I did thinke my thred of life
Had beene quite cut, did tie vp againe,
And make it last: recal'd my youthfull dayes,
And made me Ason-like becom thus yong,
For which great practises I did owe my life,
And thence proceeded our late pious strife.

Aeg. Na then I'me glad our mercy did extend
On men whom such rare vertues doe commend;
Or loue loue shall then grow greater, and our court
Shall entertaine you, and't may chance we will,
My queene and I make triall of your skill.

Orest. My gracious soueraigne, words must not haue wings,
To passe and out-flye the bounds of truth,
Onely to win the Elisur of opinion,
But for my friend doth here professe so much,
And for my life doe stand so deeply bound,
That all my Art can ne're make recompence,
Please but your graces selfe and your deare queen,

The Tragedie of Orestes:

Appoint the secrets of the safest roome,
To let me shew my selfe to none but you;
Though Nature dried vp with too much time,
Deny to spring in fruite from forth your loynes,
Or any other strange impediment,
Or Art preserues from sicknesse ruining,
And 'twill be blest to shew it to a King:

Aegst. Ha, prethee let me speake with thee apart:
Thou strik'st en tunes now, make me glad to heare,
We will commit our secrecie to thee,
Can'st water barren wombs with such a dew,
Shall make 'em flourish and wax green with fruit?
Although we cannot altogether blame,
That Nature hath been too vnkind to vs,
Yet we would plant each corner of our Realme,
With springing branches of our royall selfe,
To compasse in our selues, and we stand in the midst:
Kings in their children doe great blessing finde,
And great men loue to propagate their kind:

Orest. Great Soueraigne, boasting words shall ne're out-
The things I will performe, I speake not fame, (weigh
But what I first haue said, I'll doe the same.

Aegst. We like thy temper well, and we will trust,
Therefore this night we will appoint it so,
Thou shalt be guided to our secretst roome,
And there shalt vse thy skill; which if it take,
Our loue shall honour thee for Physicks sake.

Exeunt Aegst. Clyt. Tind.

Orest. Good heauens I thanke you, your effectuall power
Hath shewed your iustice in this blessed houre, They take Str.
Now is occasion put; thus murder layes (and Elest. back;
The trap wherein it selfe, it selfe betrayes.

Pyl. Old Lord a word with you, Orest. and with you Lady.

Pyl. Had not you once a Son lou'd the young Prince?

Stop: Yes Sir, but Fates enuied my happines,
And holds both Prince and Son away too long.

Orest. And had not you a brother Lady once?
When heard you of him last? he went to trauell.

Elest. In truth I had, but I can heare no news. They discover

Stro. O see my son, welcome my dearest boy. (themselves

Elest.

The Tragedy of Orestes.

Elect. Our brother, our Orestes is come home.

Stroph. 'Tis they indeed, O how my blood reuiues,
Let me embrace them, O ye'r welcome home,
Now is the Autumne of our sorrow done.

Elect. What silent place hath smothered you so long!
Of what great power haue you counsaile ta'ne,
Concerning the great plot you had in hand.

Orest. Vncle, and sister, we must not stand now
Embracing much, and bidding welcome home,
You see before I come, how things doe stand;
My busines hastens, and my friend, and I,
Haue yet a greater proiect to performe:
Onely Electra we must haue your ayde,
To helpe vs with their child, for now's the time,
When blest occasion striues to helpe reuenge.

Elect. Why brother, is the child in any fault,
That was vnborne when that our Father dided?
And 'tis a lusty boy: O hurt not that.

Orest. Tush, I must haue it, it shall haue no hurt,
Worse then my Father: Elect. Shal't not, indeed.

Orest. Beleeue me, no worse hurt; but let's begone.
I'll be a tripode Paracelsian. Exeunt.

SCEN. VI.

Enter a Chamberlaine, and a boy to sweep the roome.

Cham. BOY, sweepe the roome, set each thing in his place,
The King and queen take Physicke here to night.

Boy. Sir, and you'll helpe me, I am ready here, They set

Cham. Fetch them two chaires boy. Boy. Yes, Sir, (a table.
What carpet meane you shall be spread a'th boord?

Cham. That of red veluet, set the siluer cups,
There may be vse of them to take the potion: Sets two bowls
So, now all's well, the roome is well prepar'd.

Enter Orestes like a Doctor of Physicke.

Orest. Is this the roome, friend, where the King must be?

Cham. Yes, this is the roome Sir, 'tis the p'iuat'st, this.

Orest. You must auoyd it then, and tell his Grace,

The Tragedie of Orestes.

That I stay here prouided gainst he come.

Cham. His grace shall know it.

SCEN. VII.

Enter Pylad. with a little boy in's hand.

Pyl. I Faith Orestes prethee spare the child,
It hath no fault, but 'tis too like the mother.

Orest. Like my mother, O most execrable
Hadst rank'd the confus'd Chaos of all sins,
Thou couldst not haue found out a fault more blacke,
More stincking, more infectious to my heart,
Art like my mother, O transcendent crime!

Child. Some say I'me eyde like her, but in the face
I doe resemble most the King my father.

Pyl. Poore babe.

Orest. The King thy father, yes, too like them both,
Electra saies I'me somewhat like Orestes,
Her brother that is dead.

Orest. How, like Orestes! when didst see him child.

Child. Indeed I neuer saw him, but I loue him.

Pylad. Alas, deare friend, see the pretty knaue.

Orest. Would thou wert not my mothers, I could weepe,
But see, O see now my relenting heart,
Must now grow flinty, see my Father, see
Now to shew pittie were Impiety.

Enter Agamemmons ghost passing or'e the stage all wounded.

Ghost. Why flaggs reuenge? see thy now yeelding soule,
Made me burst ope my strong iawd sepulcher,
And rip the seare-cloth from my wounded breast,
O can a chiid sinile blanke the memory,
O fall these horrid wounds, which make me grone,
In the darke cauerns of the vncoucht earth,
From whence I come for to infect thy soule.
With ayre of vengeance, may make Acheron,
Yea, and our selues at the performance quake;
Fruite of our loyns, first vigor of our youth,

Looke

The Tragedie of Orestes.

Looke on these wounds, as on the Gorgons head,
And turne thy heart to stone, houering reuenge
Is false into thy hands, O graspe her close
By her snake knotted front, and make her doe
Things may incite a horror to her selfe.
Forget all, mother, in that disloyall witch,
Whose damned heate raging in strumpets blood,
So soone did condescend to murder mee.
By all the rites of Father, I coniure thee :
By Atreus, Atreus, he whose reuengefull soule
Is eccho'd through the world superlatiue;
Doe thou make Nemesis as great a feast,
And be enthroniz'd in her fire chaire,
In her triumphant chariot euer ride,
In which, Beares hurry her from the wombe of hell,
And beare this Title as thy deserued hire,
The braue reuenger of thy murdered fire.
Thinke on me, and reuenge.

Exit.

Orest. Stay, stay, and see't,
Stay Spright, thou strik'st no terror to my soule :
For vnamaz'd I now would dare out-looke
Ranks of Medusa's, and the grim aspect
Of the most frowning object hell affords :
Thinke on me, and reuenge: yes, those two words
Shall serue as burthen vnto all my acts,
I will reuenge, and then I'll thinke on thee :
I'll thinke on thee, and then againe reuenge,
And stab, and wound, and still I'll thinke on thee.
I haue a dropsie now to sucke vp fumes,
And drinke the reaking streames of vengeance some :
Great Agamemnon's Ghost, I will bedew,
Thy hearse with blood in steed of brinish teares,
And build a pile vp of their murthred trunks,
To burne thy marrowlesse consumed bones.
Arrowes of forked lightning neuer flew,
More swiftly from the awfull armes of Ioue,
Then Nemesis blacke Scorpions from mee.

Pyl. 'Twas a strange fight. Orc. I, didst thou see't, friend?
All of those wounds will I sticke in his brest.

Pyl. Alas, one will be enough for him !

The Tragedie of Oreste.

Ore. I, but she shal haue more, a while go by: Pyl. takes the child aside.
Were all the world their liues, the world should die.
Now Tragedy fetch out thy crimson robes,
And buckle sure thy purple buskins on,
Steep't ten graines deeper in their scarlet die;
This night shall giue mee now a deepe carouse,
Of Clytemnestra's and Aegistheus blood,
And Cerberus himselte stand by to pledge me,
Whilest to hells fire I shall sacrifice
Three Hecatombs; it doth the furies good,
When e'r wee wet the Altars with such blood.
And now yee fiends of hell, each take a place,
As 'twere spectators at a first daies play,
Raife all the hellish winds to expell nature;
Great Goddesse giue me leaue now to forget
All straines of duty; all obedient thoughts
Die in mee quite: a mothers memory,
Pious affections take no hold on mee.
Be all my senses circled in with Fiends,
And let Erynnis hold her flaming brand
To guide my murderous sword; for all lights else,
Vanish from out this Center, be this roome fraught
So full of mischief, may make the Fabricke cracke,
And let no time, now come into my thoughts,
But that dire night wherein my father di'd.
I'le onely be a Doctor now in word,
Each potion that I giue shall be my sword:
But I must change.

SCEN. VIII.

Enter Aegistheus and Clytemnestra, in their night-ropes.

Aegst. O Doctor, you are busie for our comming: Ore.
Orest. O My gracious Lord, I had no cause to faile. looking
Cly. Nay, but is this fit time for physick Doctor? on the cups.
Orest. First, Madame, for the physicke that I giue,
Now the diastall fabrique of your pulse,
Shewes all your passions most hystericall,
Pleaseth your grace sit down? one at each end o'th Table.

The Tragedie of Orestes.

Agyst. Yes, must wee sit, sit there my Queene.

Orest. Yes, now is Saturne, gouernour of nature,
In free coniunction with the planet Venus:
And iust at this time, Iupiter begat
Great Hercules, Sel, Luna, Mercury,
In that Diameter, now fauour propagation,
And now will my Alexipharmacum,

A royall, strange, and Princely progeny. (know't:

Agyst. Think'st thou so Doctor? Orest. Thinke it, nay, I

Agyst. O my boy, my boy. Orest. O, yee'r fast bound,
Yes, hee is thine, thy face, thy eyes, thy heart,
And would I knew where Nature had couchd most,
Of thy damnd blood, I thus would let it out; Stabs the child.
And thus't should spirt in thy most loathed face.

Egy. O, now, the heauens raine vengeance on our heads.

Child. O mother, mother, saue me, saue me father.

Orest. Hold Pylades, be stedfast, for by heauier
He wounds mee, that perswades me not to wound.

Clyt. O turne thy bloody weapon on my brest,
'Twas this wombe that brought forth this Babe and thee.
If that be guilty, I haue made it so.

Rip vp this place which first did bring thee forth,

'Tis I intreat thee, 'tis thy mother, she

Which gaue thee house-roome here within this brest,

Orest. It was my father, he intreated you,
Who many a time had clipt you in his armes,
Who made you Queene of Greece, yes, it was hee,

The Tragedie of Orestes:

Good Agamemnon, he did plead for life.

Egyft. Bathe not thy hands in a poore infants blood,
Nor in thy mothers, I deserue to die:
And yet remember how my doome sau'd thee,
How easilly mercy did obtaine her fuit.

Orest. Nay, but Egyftheus, you can aggrauate,
To doe a haynous murther, and i'th Court;
I'th place of Iustice, where the King might heare,
Vpon a chiefe attendant of the King.
Murther it selfe is past all expiation,
A crime that nature most of all abhorres,

Stand at the barre of Iustice, and there plead,
How much they'r wrong'd, and how much defac'd,
When man doth dye his hands in blood of man.
Now harken King, I'll vse thy Rhetorique,
Thou didst a haynous murther in the Court,
Not which the King did heare, but which he felt;
When no petition could (good man) preuaile,

Therefore this dies, this first shall haue his due: Stabs it a-

Ore. My hast deceiues my wil; tush, al this yet, in his face.
May be call'd piety, you shall taste too mother, Turnes it

Cly. O, why dos't banish nature from his place? to her.

Looke on thy mothers teares' worse then those grones,
And pangs she had, when she first brought thee forth,
When of thy friends or parents thou hast wrong,
Patience, not fury doth to thee belong.

Is this the blessing that thy knee should aske?

Repay'ft thou thus my kisses and my teares,
Which flow'd from mee to thee in tender yeeres.

Orest. O why did you so banish woman-hood,
When you and this damn'd villaine, base adulterer,

Made in my father side so many wounds,
And brought a braue old King into this state:

See, here's his bones, my pocket can containe
Great Agamemnon; and repayd you thus

His kind embraces? all his louing signes?

Pulls bones from his pocket.

Egyftheus,

The Tragedie of Orestes.

Egysteus, you are thirsty, you shall drinke, Fills two cups
Yes, you shall cleare your throat, by heauen you shall. with the
Ag. O mischief about mischief! what Heniochus child's blood:
Bred on a stony rock, could e'r endure gives it them.

To see a fathers thirst quenched with such blood?

Hast thou no measure? hath reuenge no end?

Ore. Who first doth mischief, may keep mean i'th deed,
But who reuengeth, must all meane exceed.

Nay, mother, wee'll not barre you of your draught.

Cly. O Nature, see here all thy lawe infring'd
A mothers prayers preuaile not with her sonne.

Orest. Pray with Thyestes, it shall neuer moue me:

But first, Egystheus, do thou haste reuenge. Stabs him.

Egyst. O, I am wounded, O when do'st thou end?

Or. Nay, I haue scarce begun, now mother, you, Stabs here.
So now I'll stand and looke, and on hell call,

Nay, my reuenge must not be vsuall;

One more for thee Egystheus; onely let out,

The blood you dranke before. Egyst. O, my heart feeles it.

Orest. Now mother you, and your loue the same.

Cly. O kill me quickly, time prolongs my woe,
And since I must die, let me quickly goe.

Orest. You know your sentence, let him feele hee dies,
Who strait threats death, knowes not to tyrannize.

Egy. This brings ten deaths. Or. Would't would a hundred
One death's too little to reuenge a King. (bring,

Hence, hence, adulterous soule to Tantalus,

And let hell know who 'twas sent thee thither: He dies.

Now, mother, you shall follow, but he first,

Left that like louers you goe hand in hand.

Cly. Why sonne, whose death is it thou dost reuenge?

Thy fathers? but on whom? vpon thy mother!

On her which brought thee forth, which took most care,

To bring thee vp, from whom thou tookst thy selfe,

Thou'rt sure thou art mine, but dost not know,

Who twas begat thee. Ore. Wil't Bastardize me?

Yes, mother, yes, I know I was his sonne:

Alas! why, what are you? a senselesse peece;

Of rotten earth can doe as much to come,

The Tragedie of Orestes.

As you to me, beare it, and bring it forth,
But Agamemnon he that seed did sow,
And onely vnto him my selfe I owe:
And for him thou shalt die. Cly. O, I confesse,
My conscience tells mee, I deserue no lesse:
And thus thy mother from thee doth depart,
Leauing vexation to torment thy heart:

She dies.

Orest. Now friend, I see my father liue againe,
And in his royall state at Argos Court:
This is the night in which hee first came home,
Oblestted powers of hell, diuine Camidia,
Now am I satisfied, now hath reuenge perfection.
And nothing grieues me, but that Tyndarus,
My mothers father, did not see her dye.
He in and tell him, my thoughts must reueale
Those acts I doe: this night who would conceale?
Now soule triumph, whilst that my deeds shall shine,
Th face o' th Court, and all the world know't mine.

Dead; his daughter bleed, Aegystens kill'd?

Orest. Your Lordships eyes doe faile, 'tis but spilt wine.

Tynd. Lay hands o' th villaine, 'tis the Physicians deede.

Orest. Nay friends, hands off, 'tis no Physician now: Disco-
see, see, old Tyndarus, dost thou know me yet? uers himselfe.

Fetch me my Crowne and robes, nay, I'll ascend:

Is not Arrides eldest sonne your King?

Tyn. What hast thou done, foule Viper, to eat out

Thy mothers bowells, what, was this thy deede?

Thy silence saies 'twas thine, what Tanais

Tygris or Rhenus, or what flowing sea,

Should wash thee in the salt Meotis streame,

The Tragedy of Orestes.

Or Tethis at full tide o'rflow thy banks,
Still would the spots of murder sticke on them.

Orest. Why Grandfire, I goe not about to wash.
By heauen, 'twas all the fruit I thought to win,
To thinke all mischief here could be no sinne.

Tynd. See, see, thy mother, looke vpon her now,
On her, whose eyes thou hast for euer clos'd,
Which eyes haue often wakned at thy cry,
And hush'd thee with a lullaby to sleepe:
See, see, these hands, which oft with so much care,
Wrapt gently vp thy vnset tender limbs:
See, see, this face, wont at thy signes to smile,
When nature gaue not leaue vnto thy tongue.
To vtter thy child's meaning.

Ore. See, see these bones, these nasty rotten bones,
Which had so often lock'd his hands in hers;
Here stood the tougue which oft had call'd her sweet,
Deare Glytemnestra, and then stopt his speech,
And told his loue in a more speaking signe.
Here stood those eyes, which fed vpon her face,
And made her of thy daughter, a great Queene,
And shee made him a dish for loathed wormes.

Tyn. Suppose she did, there was but one yet dead,
And with ones death againe should be repaid.

Orest. No, Tyndarus, had I desir'd but one,
I should haue thought I had desired none.
Why, me thinks, I should too haue kill'd thee,
The number is too little yet of three.

Tyn. Into what land, what conuntry wilt thou fly?
All earths, all lands, all countries will flie thee:
The heauens will look with a more cherefull brow
On Cerberus.

Orest. Why, let heauen looke as 'twill, it is my crowne,
That I haue done an act shall make heauen frowne:

Tynd. O, what earth loues so much a guilty soule,
That it can beare thee? Ore. Why, Sir, this is mine,
And this shall beare mee. Am I not righ heire?

Tynd. Thou heire to kingdomes! thou a subiect rather,
To helpe to make a Players Tragedie.

Orest. Why, that will make me swell with greater pride,

The Tragedie of Orestes.

To thinke my name shall drop in lines of blood ;
From some great poets quils, who well shall paint
How brauely I reueng'd my fathers death,
That is the thing I wish'd, and 'tis my glory,
I shall be matter for so braue a story.
But where's my Crowne ?

1 Lord. No murderers, wee'll rather ioyne with him,
This old man here to take away thy life,
Then such an homicide shall frame vs lawes,
Who hath himselfe rac'd out the lawes of Nature.

2 Lord. Yes, and wee'll set here Argos Crowne on him,
Who shall enact some punishment for thee ;
Which although none can equalize this deed,
Yet what our griefes can thinke, all shall be done,
And wee'll forget thou'rt Agamemmons sonne.

Ore. Why, thinke you vpon your worst, I scorne to craue,
I had three liues, you but my one shall haue.

Tyn. Then since vile wretch thou hast committed that,
Which while there is a world, throughout the world
VWill be pronounc'd for the most horrid deede
That euer came into the thought of man ;
A thing which all will talke of, none allow ;
I here disclaime that name of Grandfather,
And I must quite forget that in thy veynes,
My blood doth flow, but thinke it then let out,
VWhen thou letst out my daughters ; and since you
Kinde Lords commit the state vnto my yeeres,
Yeeres too vnfit, heauens know, to beare a state :
My mind, me thinks, contends for to decree
Somewhat, which to my selfe I dare not tell :
Iust conceiu'd wrath, and my affection striues,
Hate forbids pittie, pittie forbids hate,
And exile is but barren punishment :
Yet let me banish thee from out these eyes,
O neuer let thy sight offend me more,
All thy confederates, and all thy friends.
You, Pylades, wich did so smoothly cloake,
The damnde profession hee did vndertake :
You, Strophius. Stroph. My Lord, I know not ought,
Yet, since one foot is now in Cherons boat,

The Tragedie of Orestes.

If it please you, let tother too afoate.

Tynd. Nor so, but I will banish you the court,
And you Electra, come, I must forget
Affection too towards you, you gaue the child,
Which you had charge of to the murderers sword.

Elect. Why Grandfire, I herin no wrong do finde,
Since all these goe, I would not stay behinde.

Tyn. Nay, but no one shall company the other,
Hence thou Cocytus streame of this offence,
Strophium & Pylades, Electra, hence: Exeunt Stroph. Pyl. Elect.

Orest. Why farewell Grandfire, since thou bidst, I flie,
And scorn companions for my misery. Exit Orest.

Tynd. Vnto this punishment this one more I adde,
That none shall dare to giue Orestes foode,
And this decree shall stand; I speake with griefe,
And here pronounce Orestes no reliefe.
Hence with these corps; poore child what hadst thou don?
Thy Nurfes prayers, that there might spring a rose,
Where e're thou trod'st could not keepe backe thy foes.
Some plague he hath, but such a matricide
Should neuer die, although he euer dide.

SCEN. II.

Enter Elect. and Stroph.

Elect. THUS neuer lesse alone, then when alone,
Where to our selues we sweetly tell our woes,
Thou Vncle, cheife companion to our griefes,
And sole partaker of our miseries,
Why doe we liue, when now 'tis come to passe,
It is scarce knowne that Agamemnon was,
He dies far easier, who at first doth drowne,
Then he which long doth swim, and then sinks down.

Stroph. Nay Neece, me thinks I now doe see the Hauer,
Where my ag'de soule, must leaue this tofscd barke,
Made weak with yeeres and woes, yet I commend
Vnto my Son the heart of a true friend,
That's all the will I leaue, and let him know
Friendship should euer be, but most in woe.

The Tragedie of Orestes.

And so I leaue thee Neece, I first must die,
'Tis laste a periode to this Tragedy. He dies.

Elect. O enuious Fates could you not vse me thus?

Haue not I grieffe enough to burst my heart?

Was my life's thred twisted and knit so strong?

That the keen edge of all these miseries

Can neuer cut it off; Must I beare more?

'Tis all my safety now not to be safe,

Are there so many wayes to rid ones life?

And can I hit on none? they say that death

Is euery where, and yet I finde him not:

Tush, but I seeke him not, why my owne hand

Might graspe him to me, if I did but striue.

Now hand helpe ease my heart, and make a way

Stabs her

To let out grieffe, that hath so long dwelt here,

(Selfe

Now knife tha't don good seruice, there lie by,

Heauen well decreed it, nothing life can giue,

But euery thing can make vs not lue.

SCEN. III.

Enter Cassandra.

NOW Priams ghost, haste, haste, I say to looke,
With chearefull eyes on the sinister booke,
And there to Hecuba my mother show
The tragique story of thy conquered foe.
And let Andromacha my sister see,
What Agamemmons race is come to be.
Now Troy gratifie that most sad doome,
Conquered by those that thus themselues or'ecome,
Let Greece so flourish still, let Argos be
Pufft with the pride of their great victory.
Let it beare Souldiers, so withall it beare
Orestes too; now! mother neuer feare
Argos makes me to laugh, which made thee weep,
The Troians in the graue now sweetly sleep.
Their sorrow hath the end, now these begin
To ouerflow themselues with mutuall sin:
And after all, Orestes, we may see,
Hath lost his reason, mans sole proper e.

The Tragedie of Orestes.

SCEN. IV.

Enter Orestes furens.

Orest. BY heauen you shall not, nay, I am decreed,
Doe teare, teare me, yes, I haue deseru'd it.

Cass. O braue, O braue, hee's mad as well as I;
I'me glad my madnes hath got companie.

Orest. Mother, why mother will you kill my father?
Then I'll kill you; tush, I haue don't already.

Much patience will grow fury in time,
Follow you me, you beast, you damn'd Agysteus;
I'll hew thee piece by piece, looke of my mother.

Cass. I am she, or one loues thee well.

Orest. Out you witch, you witch. Cass. Murderer, murderer,

Orest. Dost whisper with the diuells, to torment mee,

O how they lash me with their Inaky whips,
Why Megara, Megara, wilt not hold thy hand?

Are you there too, Erynus? hay, all hell,
My Grandfire Arrens he stands fighting there,
But hee'll ha'th better on't; keep Cerberus keepe,

Keepe the fates fast, or all hell breakes loose.

Mother I see you, O you are a whore,

Did I kill you witch, dost thou lash, dost thou?

Cass. Why this is fine, my very looks doe whip him,

Orest. Could I but get the stone from Sisyphus,

I'de dash thy braines out; O are you there I faith, Spies Stro.

A bed so close with your adulterer, (and Elect. dead.

Hold good heart, do not burst with laughter, (Electra's knife.

Orest. Will you not wake, sleepe, sleepe then your last,
Looke how they fly' th ayre, Cass. I see them, see them,

Orest. Why loue, dost meane to let them into heauen,

O th'art come downe, and gon to hell,

Pluto, see Pluto hee's afraid of them,

O spare my sides, my sides, my sides, the blood

O now you touch my ribs:

Cass. Hay, how he skips, O excellent whips him selfe

The Tragedie of Orestes.

O sweet Catastrophy, do's none see't but I?
Clap, clap, againe, would all Priams sons,
And daughters were here now to helpe me laugh.

Orest. Lash on, lash on Canidia, art thou there?
Why grandsire would it were to doe againe,
Nay Aeacus I feare no whipping posts, Chorontes
Laugh'st thou, thou witch? I'll follow thee to hell. Exeunt.

SCEN. V.

Enter Pylad. alone.

Pyl. THus seeking others, I haue lost my selfe,
My friend and father banisht, and whilst I
Wander to seeke them for to ease their woe,
I heare more grieffe proclamd against my friend,
That none must succor, none must giue him foode,
And yet I'll seeke him, and should all the lawes,
That Tyranny should thinke vpon, restraine,
I'de draw my blood forth for let him drinke,
But O what's here? O I haue found too soone, Spies Stroph.
One which I sought, my Fathers wearied soule (dead.
In sighes hath now expired out it selfe.
Now O ye Sisters, your great taske is done,
You ne're vntwinde what you haue once begun.
Thus obnious to our Fates t'our selues vnkind,
We haste to seeke, that which too soone we finde.
Alas why doe our souls too greedy burn,
To hasten thither whence we ne're return,
We run to't of our selues, though death were slow,
Should he come tardy, we too soone should goe.
For the first day that giues vs our first breath,
Doth make vs a day nearer vnto death.
All this huge world, which now on earth so strive,
To morrow this time may not be aliuie.
Great Troy is downe since Agamemnon fell,
Since my deare Father, which but now was well.
O art thou come deare friend, for thee I sought, Enter Orest.
Her's some foode yet, in spight of all the lawes:
Orest. Wilt bid me to dinner Pluto, ha, with what?

The Tragedie of Orestes.

Giue me no snakes, I, I goe, I goe,
Vp to Cytherus top, I hate thy meate.

Pyl. Heauenst hee's distracted, now doth fury right,
When thus against her selfe, her selfe doth fight.

'Tis I man here, 'tis Pylades, not Pluto;

Orest. Ha, Pylades, I, they haue banisht him,
But grandfire looke too't, I'll teare out your maw,

Pylades, Pylades I come ———

Pylad. Why I am hee, looke friend, dost not know me.

Orest. Yes, yes thou wert with me when I kild my mother
And see, the Furies now would whip thee too,

Alecto looke, looke, here's Alecto too,

O Clytemnestra, hay, how the lion skips,

And Taurus he would tosse me on his hornes.

Looke on the Ramme, see the Beare roares at me,

And Charon he would fling me into Styx.

Pylad. He feares the heauenly signes, nay then now time
Hath brought true punishment on euery crime.

Orest. Dash out the puppets braines, the little boy,
The bastard, my mothers bastard: so blood, spin,
My mother kild my Father, kild the King,
But she got little by't, looke on her brest
It bleeds, it bleeds; so, so Aegystheus, so.

Pylad. O what a strange distemper stirs his braine,
Thou gentle Somnus, in whom care doth rest,
Kinde father of cold death, and son of peace,
Which comes to Kings and poore men all alike:
Binde his disturbed braine, tye vp his sense.
Let him but liue to die; now tis not long
Before we both shall sing our funerall song.

Or. Ha, must I sinke, can I not keepe a loft? Fals a sleepe.
What is the streame so strong? why then I'll dine,
And come to hell the sooner. Pylad. So gentle sleepe,
Thou gather'st vp his wandring braines againe,
This is but halfe dead, yet halfe dead he lies,
But tis not long; before he wholly dies. Musique within.
Harke they play musike; O these sounds do harme,
Enticing woe with their melodious charme;
These please not men in woe; these time doe keepe,
But miseries best falling is to weepe.

The Tragedie of Orestes.

Or stops are nought but sobs, our hearts we bring.
Whereon we prick the soules which we sing.

A song within together with the musicks.

Weepe, weepe you Argonauts,
Bemaile the day
That first to fatall Troy
You tooke your way.
Weepe Greece, weepe Greece,
Two Kings are dead,
Argos, thou Argos, now a grave
Where Kings are buried.
No heire, no heire is left,
But one that's mad,
See Argos, hast not thou,
Cause to be sad?
Sleepe, sleepe wild braine,
Rest rocke thy sence;
Live if thou canst
To grieue for thy offence.
Weepe, weepe you Argonauts, &c.

Pyl. Peace Musique, peace, our plaints haue louder cries,
A heart that's sad can neuer harmonize.

Griefe cannot keepe his time, all time's too long,
Sighs are best sembriefes to his dolefull Song.
My dirties mournfull though thou sweetly play.
Thus doe we all euen blow our liues away.

But dost thou wake Orestes? is rest fled, Orest. wakes.
Sleep ne're dwells long in a molested head,

Orest. Harke, harke the Furies entertaine my mother,
Orpheus would fetch Euridice from Hell,
See, he lookes back, wouldst venter so thou foole,
I'de see my mother burnt before Ide goe,
Why shouldst thou bring her? she would stifle thee,
Stifle thee in thy bed as my mother did.

Pylad. Still harping on thy mother? Orest. Harping, no,
Let Orpheus harpe: O, I, she was, she was,
A very, very Harpie. Pyl. Thus madnes playes,
And keeps a certaine measure in his words,

Orest. O I suckt out my mothers dearest blood,

The Tragedy of Orestes.

I did indeed, O the plagues me for't now,
O I must goe lie downe in Tyrinus place,
Ixion too, he Sir would faine resigne.
I scorne your petty plagues, I'll haue a worse,
O the vulture, the wheele, the vulture.

Pyl. See how his conscions thoughts, like fiends of hell,
Doe arme themselues, and lash his guilty soule.
He see's no vulture, nor no Scorpion strikes,
Yet doth his conscience whip his bloody heart,
He needs no witnesse, he hath within
A thousand thoughts which testifie his sin.
No punishment so strickt, no deadly smart,
As priuate guilt that smiteth on the heart.

Orest. I did, I confesse I did, I kild them all,
Ript vp the wombe that bare me; nay I did,
O Tantalus thy plague, some meate, some meate,
Who pulls those apples hence? let them alone,
Nay sinke to the bottom, I will follow thee, Lies downe to
The riuers drie, my mother hath drunke all. drinke.

Pyl. Alas, come, goe with me, we will finde drinke.

Orest. Is Pluto's buttry ope, his drinks too hot,
I doubt 'twill scald me, but I'll taste on't yet
Th' Eumenides stand to whip me as I goe,
Nay I will passe you, I will out-slip them all. Exit currens.

Pyl. See in his conscience lies hels punishment,
Our own thoughts iudges none are innocent. Exit.

SCEN. VI.

Enter 2. Lords.

1 Lord. VVE that haue here ben born to see this change,
May leaue the court, and tell our children
Of the dire fall of Inachus great house, (tales,
The young Prince mad, the Princess kild her selfe,
Old Strophius dead from griefe; and murder heapr,
Corps vpon corps, as if they ment't' inuite,
All hell to supper, or som Iouiall night.

2 Lor. Nay but my Lord this is most pittifull,
That the yong Prince should thus from dore to dore,

The Tragedie of Orestes.

Beg for his foode, and yet none dare to giue,
I saw him wandring yesterday alone,
Flying from euery crow, or pratling Pie,
Crying out mother, and as if there had
Tormenting Furies following him with fraud,
And truth I thought to tell old Tyndarus,
To'moue his ruthfull yeeres to pittie him,
And will you ioyne petitioner with me,
Wee'll tell the cause, 'tis good to ease misery.

1. Lord. My Lord I like your motion, and will ioyne
For *Agamemnon*s sake my honor'd Master.

SCEN. VII.

Enter Orestes, Pylades, with naked rapiers.

Orest. MY Fury leaues me, now I'me at my last,
And now me thinks thou truely art a friend,
Now with vndaunted spirit preuent my grieffe,
And let thy rapier drinke blood greedily,
As if it lou'd it, cause it is thy friend,
Now rid me of my woe, thy friendly vow,
Neuer did truely shew it selfe till now :

Pyl. Why then deare friend I thus erect this arime,
And will be strong to thee, as thou to me,
Wee'll looke vpon our deathies with better face,
Then others doe on life; come Tyndarus, see,
We scorne to liue when all our friends are dead,
Nor shall thy Fury make base famine be
The executioner to my dearest friend,
Whilst I can kill him, therefore spight of thee,
Wee'll free our selues past all calamity,

Orest. Yes Pylades, we will beguile our time,
And make him search through euery nooke a'th world,
If he in all his race can euer spie,
Two that like vs did liue, like vs did die :
But we delay our death, now brauely come,

And the last parting word shall be strike home. they run at
Pyl. O brauely rstook deare friend yet once again. one another.
Orest. Yes at one thrust two friends must not be slain, run again.

The Tragedie of Orestes.

O, how I loue these wounds, heauen dropping showers,
When the outrageous dogge makes clouds of dust
Vpon the thirsty earth, come not more sweet,
Then the blest streames of blood, thy rapier raines.
Hence weapon: for my loynes now scorne all props,
But my friends armes, O, beare good leggs a while,
The weight of murder sits vpon my soule,
And bends my staggering ioynts vnto the earth.

Pyl. Hast, hast, I faint, but O, yet let my strength
Be Atlas to sustaine the falling world;
Breath, breath sweet vapours of two trusty hearts,
And let our breaths ascend to heauen before,
To make a roome hard by the frozen pole,
Where that our winged soules shall mount and sit,
More glorious then the Concubines of Ioue,
Wreath'd with a crowne of rich enamel'd starres,
Leauing all ages to deplore our death:

That friendships abstract perish with our breath:

Orest. Fly thou best part of man, where Hecate
Borne on the swarthy shoulders of the Euen,
Sits in a groue of oakes, till gray eye'd morne,
Bids her to throw off nights blacke Canopie.

Pyl. Wilt die before me? Stay, stay, I come.

Orest. O graspeme then, our names like Gemini,
Shall make new starres for to adorne the skie.
Is thy breath gone? Pyl. O, yes, 'tis almost past,
Then both together, thus wee'll breath our last.

They fall downe dead, embracing each other.

SCEN. VIII.

Enter in haste Tyndarus, Lords, with others.

(much)

Tynd. VEnt they this way? my Lords, you moue mee.
Could I find him now, I would feat him new,
In his right Kingdome, which doth weigh downe mee.

1 Lord. I see my Lord Orestes, and his friend,
Without your leave haue made themselues an end.

Tynd. Then now is Argos Court like to some stage,

The Tragedie of Orestes.

When the sad plot fills it with mured Trunckes,
And none are left aliue but onely one,
To aske the kinde Spectators (plaudite)
All else haue bid (valere) to the world,
The man referu'd for that, is Tyndarus,
Who thus hath seen his childrens childrens end,
His Grandchild, a bad sonne, a most deare friend;
The Scene must now be overflow'd with grones,
Each man sits downe to waile his priuate mones:
One for the Queen doth weep, one for the King,
All taste the bitter waters of this Spring:
The Nurse bewails the child, that part she beares,
All haue their subjects to bedew with teares;
Each one yet haue but one; but all of mee,
Challenge a part in griefes sad sympathy.
Orestes, Clytemnestra, I must call,
These all for mine, thus must I weepe for all:
Let none belieue this deed, or if they doe.
Let them belieue this punishment then too.
'Tis vile to hate a Father, but such loue,
As breeds a hate to'th mother, worse doth proue:
Our life consists of ayre, our state of winde,
All things we leaue behind vs which wee find,
Sauing our faults; witnesse Orestes here,
VVho was his owne tormentor, his owne feare.
VVho flying all, yet could not fly himselfe,
But needs must shipwrack vpon murders shelfe:
And so his brest made hard with miserie,
He grew himselfe to be his enemy.
Thus griefe and gladnesse still by turnes do come,
But pleasure least while doth possesse the roome.
Long nights of griefe may last, but lo, one day
Of shining comfort slideth soone away.
He, whom all feare on earth, must feare a fate,
For all our powers are subordinate:
Three howres space thus well can represent,
Vices contriu'd and murders punishment.
A Monarchs life can in this little space
Shew all the pompe that all the time doth grace
His risings and his falls, and in one span

The Tragedie of Orestes.

Of time, can shew the vanity of man.
For none of vs can so command the powers
That we may say, to morrow shall be ours.
Now Fortunes wheele is turn'd, and time doth call,
To solemnize this friendly funerall.
No force so great, no so disaster wrong,
As can vnknit the bands which holdeth strong
Vnited hearts: who since they thus are dead,
One roome, one tombe shall hold them buried:
And as these friends ioynd hands to beare their Fate;
So we desire you to imitate.
VWho since they all are dead, we needs must craue
Your gentle hands to bring them to their graue.
