 but she matches Peter;
 If you strip Peter,
 (2) the hero of Reynolds' satire.
 First, the antenatal Peter,
 The first Peter—
 (3) the hero of Shelley's satire.
Peter was quite reformed,
 Which Peter said or sang,
 But Peter now grew old,
 Thy name is Peter Bell;
 Then Peter set up such a yell—sat Peter Bell, and swore, had bought Peter for half-a-crown;
 Till he saw Peter dead or napping,
 It was exceedingly like Peter—
Peter knew not that he was Bell;
Peter thought he had parents dear,
 The Devil told Peter, if he chose,
 And Peter bowed, quite pleased and proud,
 Lo, Peter in Hell's Grosvenor-Square,
 But Peter, though now damned,
 What Peter was before damnation,
 All things that Peter saw and felt from the first 'twas Peter's drift
 Then Peter rubbed his eyes severe,
 And Peter noted what he said,
 Now Peter, when he heard such talk,
 Stirred such harmony in Peter,
 Bat Peter's verse was clear,
 For language was in Peter's hand,
Peter, too proud of heart, I fear,
 The Devil to Peter wished no worse,
 When Peter's next new hook found vent,
Peter seduced Mrs. Foy's daughter,
 Safely to Peter's house conveyed,
 For carriage, ten-pence Peter paid—
 For Peter did not know the towa,
 All Peter did on this occasion
 Now Peter ran to seed in soul
 To Peter's view, all seemed one hae;
 The old Peter—the hard, old Potter
 Now Peter felt amused to see
 The storm in Peter's heart and mind
 On Peter while he wrote for freedom,
 As soon as he read that, cried Peter,
 Then Peter wrote odes to the Devil;
 the news sent off To Peter,
 When Peter heard of his promotion,
Peter was ever poor,
 The very life and soul of Peter—
 Clung upon Peter, night and day,
Peter was dull
 All grew dull as Peter's self,
 Near Peter's house took wing,
 To Peter's soul the spell is bound—
Peter Bell, n. (1) the satire by Reynolds.

 The awful shadow of some unseen Power
 What Power delights to torture us?
 One Power of many shapes which none may know,
 Which thy breath kindled, P. of holiest name!
 one Power, to which supreme controul
 that dark power which brings Evil, has some immortal power Such purposes?
 or what mute Power may give terrific power, I come away,
 Cursing the power that ne'er made aught in vain.
 Is it then thee, Almighty Power, she cries,
 as the Power divine Which then lulled all things,
 but power from worst producing worse,
 or of the power unknown!
 the abode Of that power which is the glass
 It matters not: for the same power made all,
 Before the Power that welds and kindles them.

 'Mid listening Echoes, in her Paradise She sate,
 He dreamed a veiled maid Sate near him,
 he sate: As if their genit were the ministers
 the Poet sate Holding the steady helm.
 as we sate In dusk, ere stars were lit,
 and we sate sad together
 A widow bird sate mourning Upon a wintry bough.
 A widow bird sate mourning for her love
Sate familiarly, side by side,
Sate by a well, under blue night-shade bowers;
 And sate beside me,
 So speaking, Phœbus sate;
 We sate there, rolling billiard balls about,
 and so she sate Looking upon the waves;
 Then on the sands the Woman sate again,
 Beneath, there sate on many a sapphire throne,
 beneath the planet sate a Form,
 He sate Majestic, yet most mild—
 Who sate beside him like his shadow there, when Cythna sate Amid the calm upon the threshold of a cave I sate with Cythna;
 where we s. to taste the joys which Nature gave.
 And we together sate by that isle-fretted flood.
 And those who sate tending the beacon's light,
 I sate beside him while the morning beam silently he sate Upon the footstool
 I sate beside him Upon the earth, on the dust as in a trance he sate,
 and one Sate there, a female Shape
 Beside that Image then I sate,
Sate one waving a sword;
 Came on us, as 'we sate in silence there,
 thro' a rent Of the ruin where we sate,
 The Meteor showed the leaves on which we sate,
 And we sate ealmy,
 There we unheeding sate,
 And so we sate, until our talk befell silent and stark they sate.
 So we sate joyous as the morning ray
 And we sate linked in the invowen charm and there we sate again On the grey margin
 I sate beside the steersman then,
 He ceased, and by the sail Sate cowering—
 when I sate pale With grief, or with stiff eyeballs sate upright
 With storms and shadows girt, sate God, alone,
 All night his aged Senate sate, pale with fear, Sate silently—Cythna sate reclined Beside me, sate gazing in a trance of wonder,
 a winged shape sate there,
 came Where that fair Lady sate,
 The plank whereon that Lady sate
 And in his dream sate down.
 he sate Apart from men,
 Had sate from earliest youth.
 And Athanase, . . . sate opposite and gazed
 I sate beside a sage's bed,
 As we sate here, the flower-in-folding buds
 And sate on the seat beside him there,
Sate with her on that seat of stone.
 Silent they sate;
 They sate With linked hands,
 but I Sate with a hard and tearless eye,
 I sate through the sweet sunny day
 And sate awe-stricken at my feet;
 And sate there too.
Sate my two younger babes at play,
 And Lionel sate alone with me,
 And in the shrine an image sate,
 We sate within that temple lone,
 And he sate in mute agony still;
 And sate in the pines.
 The Princess sate within the window seat, Moutho'ng I sate beside a public way and a Shape So sate within sate chattering like restless apes

Self, n. (1) individuality, one's own person.
Nor, when the spirit's self has ceased to burn,
I would that to my own suspected self become, . . . to her own conscions self Or war or pestilence or Nature's self,
Another self, here and in Ireland;
I prithee comfort thy sweet self again,
A second self, far dearer and more fair;
And Cythna's pure and radiant self was shewn that I described All shapes like mine own self,
A ghastlier self beside them,
All but her dearest self.
Sorrow's self thy cup has given,
by thy dread self, O Famine!
All grew dull as Peter's self.
Death's self could change oot,
Look to thy wretched self!
that sweet bondage which is freedom's self,
And not my scorned self who prayed to thee.
The tomb of thy dead self.
Unless Love feeds upon its own sweet self,
(2) one's own interest, selfishness.

 By the low s. on which the loud sea laughed,
 and this shore More barren than its billows;
 Which lay between the city and the shore
 the waves that meet Near to the shore,
 And to the shore I went to muse and weep;
 Like meteors on a river's grassy shore,
 Far by the desolated shore,
 And then the night-wind steaming from the shore,
 dark shore of Ocean's curved flood.
 As by the shore of the tempestuous sea
 The hollow shore its thousand echoes cast on the shore The dead and putrid fish sweep in whirlwinds from the shore,
 In fierce tumult on the rocking shore,
 That bade me recline on the shore;
 The pine forest on bleak Chiassi's shore,
 On thy wild and winding shore

- A silence fell upon the guests—
 were beguiled into strange silence, Soon pause in silence, ne'er to sound again,
 that silence made me start—Memories which found a tongue, as thus he silence broke.
 thoughtless pride his love in silence bound, Slowly the silence of the multitudes Past,
 infant fair Clasped on her lap in silence; Accompanied by the still through he went In sil.,
 those joys which sil. well requite Forbid reply;
 When in the silence of all spirits there In silence which doth follow talk in silence still, The pale survivors stood;
 as she leaned in passion's silence
 the silence of her eloquent smile,
 Its delicate brief touch in silence weaves gazed In patient silence.
 There is silence in the spaces—
 Made us keep silence—thus—and thus—
 Though silence is a hell to us.
 Crouch then in silence.
 charm To silence the envenying nightingales.
 to the meal Of silence, grandeur, and excess,
 Now, to the scene I shew, in silence turn,
 Henry, who kneeled in silence by her couch,
 In silence then they took the way
 Passionless calm and silence unproved,
 (3) stillness, calmness, peace.
 In eloquent silence through the depths of space
 And from all sounds, all silence.
 And in that silence, and in my despair,
 Harmonizing silence without a sound,
 the tone Unheard but in the silence of his blood, Killing the azure silence.
 How calm it was in the silence there
 A heaven of sacred silence.
 in silence lay On the still waters—
 Within whose happy silence, thus embraced
 That starry night, with its clear silence.
 And the few sounds . . . Made s. more profound—some deep lake, whose silence then it awaits,
 The sleepless silence did recal Laone . . .
 Which from brief silence bursting,
 In tones whose sweetness silence did prolong,
 Came on us, as we sat in silence there,
 and there was silence wide and lone.
Silence and solitude were vacancy?
 re-echoed snlently, Till silence became music?
 Dissonant threats kill Silence far away,
 Whose changeless paths thro' Heaven's deep silence lie;
 Where silence undisturbed might watch alone,
 The lovely silence of the unfathomed main,
Silence and twilight, unbeloved of men,
 Obeyest in silence their sweet solemn spells,
 Folded in cells of crystal silence there;
 (4) a deadly stillness, absence of all life.
 to-morrow, worms In silence and in darkness
 in silence flow Thro' the vast world,
 My mansion is damp, cold silence is there,
 Dares dispute with grim s. the empire of Death.
 And silence, and a sense that lifts the hair made the solemn silence seem More still—
 A far whisper—Terrible silence.
 a s. lone and drear, More horrible than famine:
 the mariner in fear Feels s. sink upon his heart—thro' the green silence of the main,
 like the silence of a tempest's birth,
 in the hot silence of the air;
 And in the silence of that expectation,
 the silence of a long despair,
 such silence through the host,
 Bursts on that awful silence;
 Pausing in breathless silence.
 The frightful silence of that altered mood,
 Because the crystal silence of the air continuous, vast, Awful as silence.
 All is deep silence, like the fearful calm . . .
 (5) non-interference, abstention.
 Has whispered silence to his Holiness:
 Or with my silence sanction tyranny,
 Can the directors of the storm in powerless s. lie?

- The urns of the silent snow,
 Descends in silent power:
 Went creeping through the day with silent feet,
 Through the grass with silent gliding.
Silent as night, in night;
 is multiplied With silent growth
 with Custom's hydra brood, Wage silent war;
 to keep Their silent watch—and the swift stroke Of silent rowers
 The flames grow silent—
 Which, though silent to the ear,
 Had not then silent Fear and fans with silent wing The tender hopes that nations fell Beneath his silent footstep.
 Famine's faint groan, and penury's silent tear,
 Came to my knees with silent breath,
 And the silent motions of passing death,
 a chariot on the silent storm.
 As veil by veil the silent splendour drops
 (2) mute, speechless.
Silent with expectation of the song,
Silent alone amid an Heaven of Song,
 and silent death exposed.
 An image, silent, cold, and motionless,
 For the weary winds are silent, the silent tongue of steel Speaks thus,
 — felt my wife insult with silent scorn
 in his silent rage His lips grew white Nay we are silent, and we chaw the air.
 As in silent multitudes
 Poor Ariel sends this silent token Coy, unwilling, silent bride, what secret fight . . . Waged thro' that s. throng;
 Among the s. millions who did lie In innocent sleep, but hind And silent, as a breathing corpse
 those tones divine Were silent as she past;
 stiff babes; silent and stark they sate.
 they became silent, and they stood and died in silent pain;
 and they A space stood silent,
 in silent anguish, on her husband's hier!
 Wiled, not untaught, his silent time away.
 Pressed into light by silent misery,
 The birds are silent, hanging down their heads,
 Were as silent as ever old Tmolus was,
 Were silent with love,
 there was a silent chasm
 Were now a silent multitude;
 shook With spasms of silent passion;
 And silent those sweet lips,
 centinels, in stern and silent ranks,
 The universe, In nature's silent eloquence,
 In silent eloquence unfold its store
Silent they sate;
 But I sat silent and alone,
 Beside my path, as silent as a ghost;
 (3) perfectly quiet, free from noise, calm, undisturbed.
 In love and silent hours,
 But, undulating woods, and silent well,
 one silent nook Was there.
 Whose sacred silent air owns yet no echo
 Its brood and silent mirror gave to view and the slow, silent night its measured
 And the plains that silent lie Underneath, had borne To that silent isle.
 What! do not the silent hours Beckon thee
 This crowd is sifer than the silent wood,
 When you die, the silent Moon
 With all the silent or teapotous workings
 On the dark, the silent stream—
 And smiled upon the silent sea,
 To the silent wilderness
 As still as in the silent deep
 A thrilling silent life,
 And then, the town is silent—
 when the calm sea was bright With silent stars, Like clouds inwoven in the silent sky,
 overhead Silent Arcturus shines—Hung silent and serene—of that azure sea a silent refuge make.
 She left me at the silent time
 Disputes her silent reign.
 envelope once this silent snow!
Silent, liquid, and serene;
 When work is none in the bright silent air?
 Pierce with song heaven's silent light,
 This silent spot tradition old
 Helen came To this lone silent spot,
 That mingle in the silent sky
 Cleave with their dark green cones the silent skies, Disencumbered of their silent sleep,
 as April rain On silent leaves,
 With cold and silent rest.
 Make a green space among the silent bowers,
 (4) still momentarily.
 the thunders made silent around.
 (5) uncommunicative, reticent.
 Therefore strong vanity will keep you silent
 O, thou most silent air,
 let us each be silent as a corpse;

my soul communion knew; II. xx. 2 Hymns which my soul had woven to Freedom, flings On the entangled soul's aspiring wings, Sweet brother of my soul! can I dissemble sent Tameless resolve . . . Into my soul—
 the caverns dreary and forlorn Of the riven soul,
 And to my inmost soul his soothing looks he sent.
 Who slaked his thirsting soul as from a well Poured forth her inmost soul:
 two restless frames in one reposing soul?
 Which the soul dreams or knows,
 Which dawned thro' the rent soul;
 Watching the shade from his own upthrown all that brings Man's free-born soul
 Reproach not thine own soul, but know thyself, is the truth Within your soul?
 Shewed that her soul was quivering;
 the hopes and fears From every human soul,
 that his soul on its revenge might look,
 which pierced like ice thro' every soul.
 fed My soul with their own joy.—
 Turnt was in the soul of all . . .
 Till on my passive soul there seemed . . .
 O let a father's curse be on thy soul,
 Each energy of soul surviving
 Then o'er this ruin'd soul let spirits of hell,
 I'm dead, and lingers yet my soul behind.
 My rapt soul dwelt upon the ties that bind
 But a heavenly sleep . . . Pervaded my soul, Congenial minds will seek their kindred soul,
 tie Thy soul, O Charlotte,
 a despot's haughty soul,
 Oh! you suck my soul away;
 And streams of rapture drown my soul.
 'Tis not heard by the ear, but is felt in the s.
 Of a man who has sold his soul to hell.
 To sit and curb the soul's mute rage
My soul weeps healing rain, marble kneed The sculptor's fearless soul—
 Which bound thy lovely soul to bliss?
 'Tis to be a slave in soul
 Visit the soul in sleep,— Pressed into light . . . Hath soul's imperishable energy.
 When first her soul began indeed to grieve:
 A sorrow o'er her aged soul did fling,
 Which ruled his sinews and coerced his soul
 law loves to rend the poor man's soul
 shook The listening soul in its suspended blood;
My soul spurned the chains of its dismay,
 His soul may stream over the tyrant's head;
 the judgement-throne Of its own aweless soul,
 The shadows of my soul upon mankind,
 The body of a double soul.
 Like the soul before it is Born
 a Low-tide in soul,
 And swore in his soul a great oath then,
 And set his soul on fire.
 Now Peter ran to seed in soul
 And coolly to his own soul said—
 My dearest Soul, will then make merry,
 And so his Soul would not be gay,
 The very life and soul of Peter—
 To Peter's soul the spell is bound—
 Had left within his soul their dark unrest:
 His soul had wedded wisdom,
 Liberal he was of soul,
 his soul, like Vesper's serene beam
 But through the soul's abyss,
 Struck body and soul as with a mortal blight,
 Loves then the shade of his own soul,
 How will thy soul, cloven to its depth bend thy soul in prayer,
 we can obscure not The soul which burns
 The sights with which thou tortur'st gird my soul
 Which thro' the deep and labyrinthine soul,
 The shadow of that soul by which I live,
 that I may read his written soul!
 As mine own soul would answer, did it know How its soft smiles attract the soul!
 till grief cast Eclipse upon the soul
My soul is in an enchanted boat,
 The soul of man, . . . Yet burns towards heaven
 Those bitter ashes, a soul self-consumed,
 Which pierce the sense, and live within the soul,
 Man, one harmonious soul of many a soul,
 When soul meets soul on lovers' lips,
 Sheltered by the warm embrace Of thy soul
 Beneath whose looks did my reviving soul
 Seized on her sinless soul?
Soul of Ianthe! thou, judged alone worthy Soul of Ianthe! Awake! arise!
 Sudden arose Ianthe's Soul;
 a sight Of wonder to behold the body and soul.

Stone, n. A. Lit. (1) hard mineral or earthy substance.

Through camps and cities rough with s., and steel,
In darkness and in light, from herb and stone,
Upon an ivied stone Reclined his languid head,
A stone at you Will I throw
Upon the sharp edge of the craggy stone:
Not so, if whelming you with this huge stone grown Out of the mountains, from the living stone, Hey over stock! and hey over stone!
They Who meet its ghastly stare are turned to s., He stretched their hides over a craggy stone.
Hard hearts, and cold, like weights of icy stone
so that the herbless stone, The leafless bough Sown by some eagle on the topmost stone
Smote on the beach beside a tower of stone;
I stood upon a point of shattered stone,
like shapes of living stone
And from a stone beside,
lay veiled by many a vein Of Parian stone;
He chose a lonely seat of unheven stone,
Two vast and trunkless legs of stone
Poised on twelve columns of resplendent stone,
From man's high mind even to the central stone Yea! not a stone shall stand to tell the detested task Of piling stone on stone,
There rusted amid heaps of broken stone
Let us sit on that grey stone,
Sate with her on that seat of stone.
From that grey stone where first we met Pavilioned round with Parian stone
Two scorpions under one wet stone,
Which lifted from her limbs the veil of stone forbade Shadow to fall from leaf and stone;
and veins Of gold and stone,
Sitting upon a seat of emerald stone.
Had changed those ragged blocks of savage s.,

B. Fig.

The broken lily lies—the storm is overpast.
O. storm of death!
 May sweep imagination in its storm;
 and scorn the storm Of time,
 in whatever checks that Storm
 And with the wind a storm of harmony
 That crowd about the pilot in the storm.
 The storm is in its branches.
 The storm in Peter's heart and mind
 from the storm Of faction,
 The storm of sound is driven along,
 By the storm of delight,
 And in the storm of change,
 Yes! when the sweeping storm of time
 Treacherous in calm, and terrible in storm,
 a chariot on the silent storm
 The thickest billows of that living storm
 whose music was a storm Of sound,

Storm-breath*, c. n. Fig. Irresistible force.
 his storm-breath drove in sand Across that desert Q. Mab, IX. 28.

Storms, n. A. Lit. pl. of Storm (1).
 The day that dawns in fire will die in storms,
 No storms deform the beaming brow of heaven,
 Though s. may break the "primrose" on its stalk,
 The "winged" storms, "chaunting their" thunder-psalm
 The storms are free But we—Tortured by storms to shapes as rude whose marble walls the leagued storms withstand.
 Throng from the mountains when the s. are there;
 waterfalls Fed from a thousand storms—
 next come the snows, and rain, And frosts, and s., on a throne With storms and shadows girt,
 A desert peopled by the storms aloof,
 The crash and darkness of a thousand storms
 each heart was as a hell of storms.
 More fleet than storms—
 Drive me, . . . hither—On direst storms?
 Of furies, driving by upon the wounding storms,
 as storms tear the deep,
 The storms mock the mountains
 I love waves, and winds, and storms,
 And languid storms their pinions close:
 As the storms rock the ravens on high:

 was low and faint, A simple strain— that my strain May modulate with murmurs of the air,
 In the frail pauses of this simple strain,
 A strain too learned for a shallow age,
 But strike the prelude of a loftier strain?
 as by their strain May well be known:

(3) song, music, sound.
 By the incantment of thy strain,
 'Tis like a wondrous strain that sweeps
 Finds a voice in this blithe strain,
 And from the glens beyond, in sullen strain,
 A strain of unpremeditated wit
 But such a strain of wondrous, strange, untired, Renewed the unintelligible strain
 and a strain, Swell'd 'mid the tumult
 The dissolving strain, through every vein,
 List! the strain floats nearer now,
 the languid close Of the last strain,
 the wondrous s. That round a lonely ruin swells, Prolonging it with deepened strain:
 and soon her strain The nightingale began;
 And the softest strain of music
 every strain Grew fainter but more sweet,
 Of thy happy strain?

 weaving wings for time's perpetual way.
time imparted Such power to me,
 Which Time thus marks for the devouring tomb, ere Dark Time had there its evil legend wrought
 but time shall be forgiven,
 When time shall be no more,
Time both, to-day, to-morrow,
 Where we will sit and talk of time and change,
 Indented by time's unrelaxing grasp, the lofty destiny Which restless time prepares the faintest sound From time's light footfall,
 Which time is fast maturing,
 Yes! when the sweeping storm of time
Time, earth and fire.

 Another time. My brain is swimming
 A seasonable time for maskers this!
 many t. and oft Went up before our Father's feet, Tempers the deep emotions of the time
 She spends a happy time
 and swiftly choosing The time,
 She left me at the silent time,
 Ah! when will come the sacred fated time,
 Ah! when will come the time, when o'er the plain
 We should have led her by this time of day.—
 Prithce, for this one time,
 I will declare another time;
 (9) a suitable moment or period.
 it is time that I should now pursue My journey
 When lawyers mask 'tis time for honest men
 We will find time and place for fit rebuke.—
 (10) the season of the year.

- War* and Earthquake, never light Upon its mountain-peaks;
 And war's mad fiends the scene environ,
 With poisonous war to taint the air:
 and her slow dogs of w., Fleshed with the chase,
 And Panic, shall wage war upon our side!
 were grappled in the embrace of war,
 To dwell with War, with us, and with Despair.
 After the war is fought, yield the sleek Russian
 And two the loftiest of our ships of war, are Built below the tide of war,
 has cast himself beneath The stream of war.
 On cloud of war, with its tempestuous phantoms Fierce war and mingling combat, trampled in treacherous war The gentle hearts
 now the line Of war extended,
 And this was thine, O War!
 With War, and Woe, and Terror, in his train;
 On wealth, and war, and fraud—
 Where the flag of war unfurled
 Lift not your hands in the banded war,
 Starvation, typhus-fever, war, nor prison—
 Bœotia, choose reform or civil war!
 Seeking peace, finding war—
 Thebes, choose reform or civil war, misery and confusion Of an unjust war,
 and War shall hover Above,
 It rapt us from red gulphs of war.
 The erring nations round to mutual war,
 They rushed to war,
 Wakes the unholy song of war,
 From kings, and priests, and statesmen, w. arose,
War is the statesman's game,
 The ruin, the disgrace, the woe of war.
War with its million horrors,
 Then preaching peace, as now they practise war,
 and war, Scarce satiate by fate's last death-draught
 from some dread war Triumphantly returning,

 In the great war between the old and young an eternal war to wage With tyranny worth your friendship heed the war Of worms?
 who hear the war Of winds, and sigh,
 For ever, as the war became more fierce
 All thoughts within his mind waged mutual war, with that Fiend of blood Renewed the doubtful war—
 with Custom's hydra brood, Wage silent war;
 Waged thro' that silent thro' ; a war that never failed!
 the surprise And war of earthly minds,
 Still secure 'mid the wildest war of the sky,
 things whose nature is at war with life—
 and make War for thy beloved sake .
 Weapons of an unvanquished war,
 And there was war among them,
 when tempest's war Is levied o'er earth and sea its blast of war,
 which levied mutual war,
 rises not in war Against a king's employ?
 perceive that vice Is discord, war, and misery ;
 And judgment cease to wage unnatural war
 Resolved to wage unwearable war
 unheeded the war Of the battling clouds, Could thaw the clouds which wage an obscure w.
 when the fierce war Of wintry winds . . .

 Our world enkindles on its way—
 O Slavery ! thou frost of the world's prime,
 The world's eyeless charioteer, Destiny,
 The world's great age begins anew,
 The world is weary of the past,
 That since I came into this world of woe, visiting This various world that thou wouldst free This world from its dark slavery, . . . Fr. Satire, 8.
 Making the wintry world appear . . . Jane, Inwim, 10.
 Sweet views which in our world above
 when she came first To this bleak world ;
 Over the world in which I moved alone :—
 Like lamps into the world's tempestuous night,— Ruling the world with a divided lot,
 The earliest dweller of the world alone,
 the world's foundations tremble !
 The secrets of this wondrous world,
 And to my brain the boundless world
 Like birds of calm, from the world's raging sea,
 This vital world, this home of happy spirits,
 To gaze on this fair w. with hopeless unconcern !
 shall burst and fill The world with cleansing fire :
 Left in the human world few mysteries : to keep The empire of the world :
 the poison clouds which rest On the dark world,
 with such intent As renovates the world ;
 Shall then dissolve the world's unquiet trance, succeeds To faiths which long have held the world in awe,
 was o'er the world its gathered beams to bear.
 had gone from the w. scene, And left it vacant—
 the floods of light Which flow over the world,
 And clasps this barren world, . . . v. Song, 4, 15.
 far over the world those vapours roll
 His likeness in the world's vast mirror shewn ;
 be free to fill The world, like light ;
 the scepter of the world has lent,
 Virtue, and Hope, and Love, like light and Heaven, Surround the world.—
 This is the winter of the world ;
 Before this morn may on the world arise ;
 To adorn and clothe this naked world ;—
 the world has seen A type of peace ;
 There is delusion in the world—the world grew dim and pale,— those that made this world so fair,
 the world is grown too void and cold,
 The better Genins of this world's estate, nor was there aught The world contains,
 Nothing in the world is single ;
 Death, fate, and ruin, on a bleeding world,
 above The fabric of a ruined world—
 The limits of the dead and living world,
 What is this world's delight ?
 Wakening the world's dead gang,—
 As Athens doth the world with thy delight renew.
 thou terror Of the world's volves !
 lost Paradise of this divine And glorious world !
 within the dome of this dim world,
 Empress of the world, all hail !
 O'er the wide world wandering be,—
 The world is full of strange delusion.
 Why have the secret powers of this strange world
 smothered The struggling world,
 And the world awhile below . . . Peter, Prol. 2.
 His footsteps paved the world with light ;
 Sister of her whose footsteps pave the world
 Henceforth the sun of this rejoicing world :
 the sun's fire filling the living world,
 The echoes of the human world,

 A youth with hoary hair— Laon, I. xxxvii. 7.
 A winged youth, his radiant brow did wear
 the first faint lustre showed An armed youth—
 Then, suddenly, I knew it was the youth
 A Youth made reply,
 and full soon That Youth arose,
 and stabbed each ardent youth.
 There was a youth, Pr. Athan. I. 1.
 The youth, . . . soon outran His teacher,
 a youth With patient looks
 As a youth lulled in love-dreams faintly sighing, the thoughtless y. Already crushed with servitude:
 The ghost of a youth with hoary hair,
 But the youth, for God's most holy grace,
 The youth upon the pavement fell:
 Is it not strange, Isabel, said the youth,
 That night the youth and lady mingled lay the gentlest youth, Whose love
 There, a lone youth who in his dreams did weep;
 a dream Of youth, which night and time
 Be thou the resolution of quick youth
 A Metaphor of Spring and Youth and Morning;
 Youth will stand foremost ever,
 and how in hours of youth renewed among such as these my y. should seek its mate.
 And then my youth fell on me like a wind
 As if the light of y. were not withdrawn for ever, for Hope and Youth Are children of one mother, O Spring, of hope, and love, and y., and gladness
 the warmth of an immortal youth shoots down the while Youth springs, age moulders,
 Yet his cheek bore the mark of youth;
 With youth's primeval dauntlessness;
 Youth's starlight smile,
 Like young lovers whom y. and love make dear
 Health, hope, and youth, and brief prosperity;
 The marble brow of youth was cleft
