The end of the First World War in 1918 didn’t stop all of the fighting. The fall of the Austro-Hungarian, German, Ottoman and Russian Empires meant the birth of many new states, and the beginning of many small, but deadly conflicts, some of which still affect our world today.