The images appearing here are the best quality possible considering the condition and legibility of the original copy and in keeping with the filming contract specifications.

Original copies in printed paper covers are filmed beginning with the front cover and ending on the last page with a printed or illustrated impression, or the back cover when appropriate. All other original copies are filmed beginning on the first page with a printed or illustrated impression, and ending on the last page with a printed or illustrated impression.

The last recorded frame on each microfiche shall contain the symbol \rightarrow (meaning "CONTINUED"), or the symbol ∇ (meaning "END"), whichever applies.

Maps, plates, charts, etc., may be filmed at different reduction ratios. Those too large to be entirely included in one exposure are filmed beginning in the upper left hand corner, left to right and top to bottom, as many frames as required. The following diagrams illustrate the method:

P R E F A C E.

THE science of Geography being in a constant state of improvement, either from new discoveries on the globe, or from the new points of view in which objects already known may be considered, a work of this nature must require frequent revision. In proportion as the spirit of enterprise and perseverance of research continue to exhibit new discoveries, it is necessary to apply with assiduity to the various sources of information, and to enrich this work by an interesting selection of such objects as may claim attention, not merely from their novelty, but from their importance in a delineation of the world and the history of the human race.

In the eighth edition, published in 1794, very considerable additions and improvements were made. The division of France into departments, instead of its ancient provinces; the transferment of the provinces of Poland to the dominion of Russia, Austria, and Prussia; the new division of the vast empire of Russia into governments; the new acquisitions in the geography of the regions of Hindoostan; the description of many cities, towns, lakes, and rivers, in North America; with numerous important additions in other foreign parts, were then introduced, for the first time, into any work of this kind. The articles that were not in the preceding edition amounted to considerably above a thousand; and a great number of the others were either newly written or greatly improved.

Since that time it has been the constant practice of the editor to enrich the subsequent editions by insertions from every respectable publication, whence new geographical and topographical information could be obtained; and to spare no pains to render this established work worthy of the reputation it has acquired. That the public have approved of these exertions, is evinced by the rapid sale of several large impressions; and so great a demand is also a decisive proof of its superiority to every other attempt of the kind.

The changeable state of territory that has lately been so frequent, particularly in many parts of Europe, has caused some perplexity in the account of several places; therefore indulgence is craved for any error that may be discovered. The ancient provinces of the original territory of France are still retained for the illustration of former histories; and the recent acquisitions of territory are particularised under the article FRANCE; but the different countries that have been annexed, are described, in general, under their former appellations; and also the countries which that government erected into kingdoms, &c. These alterations of territory are now likely to be settled in another and more permanent state; for, in June last, the Bourbon family was restored to the throne of France, and separate treaties of peace signed at Paris with Austria, Russia, Prussia, and Great Britain; and plenipotentiaries from the principal European powers are now assembled at Vienna, to regulate, in general congress, the arrangements necessary for the settlement of a general peace.

INTRODUCTION.

THE science which treats of the construction, figure, disposition, and relation of all the parts of the universe, is called COSMOGRAPHY; that is a description of the world: and as the universe is represented by the celestial and terrestrial globes, cosmography has two principal parts; namely, ASTRONOMY, which is the science of the celestial bodies; and GEOGRAPHY, which is a description of the Earth. As these two sciences have, in many respects, a necessary connection, we shall take a cursory view of each.

Of the Universe.

ASTRONOMY is a science which has been the study and admiration of the most remote ages. The true system of the universe was known in the earliest times. Pythagoras in particular, who flourished near 500 years before Christ, was undoubtedly acquainted with the present doctrine of the planetary motions, which he is supposed to have learned during his residence with some more enlightened nations in the east. His disciples not only taught, that the earth had a diurnal motion on its own axis, and annually revolved, with other planets round the Sun, but gave such an account of the comets as is agreeable to modern discoveries. The heavens and stars they supposed quiescent; and their apparent diurnal motion from east to west was imputed to the Earth's motion from west to east. Hence this doctrine, for many ages, was called the Pythagorean System. It was followed by Philolaus, Plato, Archimedes, and others, but lost during the prevalence of the Peripatetic philosophy, when the Ptolemaic System (so called from Ptolemy, an Egyptian philosopher, who lived about 138 years after Christ) was universally adopted. This system supposes the earth at rest in the centre of the universe, and that the heavens revolve round it from east to west, carrying all the celestial bodies along with them, in twenty-four hours. Among the ancient philosophers, the principal asserters of this system were Aristotle and Hipparchus. Being consonant to appearances, it was adhered to for many ages, till happily, in the year 1530, the true system was revived by Nicolaus Copernicus, a native of Thorn, in Western Prussia.

The Solar, or Planetary System, should, in strict propriety, be distinguished from the System of the Universe: for the fixed stars, from their immense distance, and the little relation they seem to bear to our globe, are reputed no part of the former. It is highly probable, indeed, that each fixed star is itself a sun, and the centre of a particular system, surrounded by planets, &c. which, at different distances, and in different periods, revolve round their respective suns, by which they are enlightened, warmed, and cherished. Hence we have a very magnificent idea of the universe, and its immensity; and hence also arises a kind of system of systems.

Of the Solar System.

As by the universe is to be understood the whole frame of nature, to the utmost extent of the creation; so by the solar system is meant that portion only of the universe which comprehends the Sun, planets, satellites, and comets. Of this system the Sun is the centre; and there are seven planets which revolve round him, each in its path or orbit. The names of these planets, in the order of their distance from the Sun, are Mercury, Venus, the Earth, Mars, Jupiter, Saturn, and the Georgian. The first two, because they move within the orbit of the Earth, are called inferior planets; and the last four, on account of their moving without that orbit, are called superior planets*.

The Sun.

THE SUN, the centre of our system, the parent of the seasons, and "great delegated source of light and life," is in the form of a spheroid, higher under the equator than about the poles. His diameter is 763,000 miles; and his solid bulk is a million of times larger than that of the Earth. This luminary was generally considered by the ancients as a globe of pure fire; but from a number of maculæ, or dark spots, which, by means of a telescope, may be seen on different parts of his surface, this opinion appears to have been ill-founded. These spots are supposed to be large excavations in the body of the Sun. Their motion is from east to west: and as they are observed to move quicker when they are near the central regions, it follows that the Sun must be a spherical body, and revolve on his axis. The time in which he performs this revolution is twenty-five days and six hours,

The Planets.

The planets are all opaque spherical bodies, and have no light of their own, but shine by means of that borrowed light which they receive from the Sun; it being ascertained, from telescopical observations, that only that side of the planets which is turned toward the sun is ever enlightened; while the opposite side, which the solar rays cannot reach, remains constantly dark. From the regular appearance and disappearance of several remarkable dark spots, which, by means of a telescope, are constantly to be seen on their bodies, it may be demonstrated, that each has such a motion round its axis, as corresponds with the diurnal rotation of the Earth; and from their seeming sometimes to be stationary, and at other times retrograde, it is equally certain, that they must have such a progressive motion round the Sun as answers to the annual revolution of the Earth in its orbit. As the Earth, moreover, is similar to the other six planets, it may reasonably be concluded by analogy, that they must be designed for the same purposes, although, from their different proportions of heat and cold, it is not credible that beings of our make and temperament could live upon all of them. We now proceed to the consideration of each planet in particular.

1. MERCURY, the nearest planet to the Sun, revolves round that luminary in about eighty-seven days and twenty-three hours, or little less than three of our months, which is the length of his year. Being seldom seen, however, on account of his proximity to the Sun, and no spots appearing on his disk, the time of his rotation on his axis, or the length of his days and nights, is unknown. His distance from the Sun is 36,841,000 miles: his diameter 3,100; and in his annual revolution round the Sun, he moves at the rate of 105,000 miles an hour. These calculations, as well as those of the other planets which follow, are founded on astronomical observations made on the transit of Venus over the Sun, in the year 1761. Mercury seems, when viewed in different positions, with a good telescope, to have all the phases or appearances of the Moon, except that he can, at no time, be seen entirely round, or quite full; because his enlightened side is never turned directly toward us; but when he is so near the Sun as to be hid in his beams.

* Four other planets have been discovered in the present century, whose orbits are between those of Mars and Jupiter, but they are of such inconsiderable size, the largest being much inferior to our Moon, that the term asteroides has been applied to them; and they require glasses of a high magnifying power to show them distinctly. The first, and largest, was discovered by M. Piazzi, at Palermo, January 1, 1801, and is called Ceres: its diameter is estimated at 1200 miles, and its distance from the Sun above 250 millions of miles. The second was discovered by Dr. Olbers, at Bremen, March 28, 1802, and is named Pallas: the third, discovered by M. Harding at Lilienthal, near Bremen, September 1, 1804, is called Juno: and the fourth, discovered by Dr. Olbers, March 29, 1807, is named Vesta.

2. VENUS, which is the brightest, and in appearance the largest, of all the planets, is 68,891,000 miles from the Sun, and, by moving at the rate of 76,000 miles an hour, completes her annual revolution in 224 days and seventeen hours, or about seven months and a half. Her diameter is 7,360 miles, and her diurnal rotation on her axis is performed in twenty-three hours and twenty-two minutes. When this planet appears to the west of the Sun, she rises before him in the morning, and is called a morning star; and when she appears to the east of that luminary, she shines in the evening, and is called the evening star. She is in each situation, alternately, for about 290 days; and during the whole of her revolution, appears, through a telescope, to have the various phases of the Moon.

3. The EARTH is 95,173,000 miles distant from the Sun, and by moving at the rate of 58,000 miles an hour, performs its annual revolution in 365 days, five hours, and 49 minutes, which is the space of our year. This distance is so prodigious, that a cannon-ball which moves at the rate of about eight miles in a minute, would be something more than twenty-two years and a half in going from the Earth to the Sun; and its motion, although 120 times swifter than that of a cannon-ball, is little more than half the velocity of Mercury in his orbit. The diameter of the Earth is 7,970 miles; and as it turns round its axis every twenty-four hours, from west to east, it occasions an apparent motion of all the heavenly bodies from east to west, in the same time. The line which it describes in its annual motion is called the ecliptic, and proceeds from west to east, according to the order of the signs of the zodiac. This motion is the cause of the different seasons of spring, summer, autumn, and winter, and consequently of the different length of day and night in these seasons. In its progress through the ecliptic, the Earth every where keeps its axis in a situation parallel to itself, and equally inclined to the plane of the ecliptic, in an angle of about twenty-three degrees and a half. The rotation of the earth on its axis in twenty-four hours, makes it day in those parts which are turned toward the Sun, and night in the parts which are turned from him. That the Earth is of a spherical figure, nearly resembling that of a globe, is evident from the voyages of several celebrated circumnavigators, and particularly commodore Anson, who, by steering continually westward, arrived, at length, at the place whence he departed; which could never have happened, had the Earth been of any other than a spherical figure. This form is also evident from the circular appearance of the sea itself, and the circumstances which attend large objects when seen at a distance on its surface; for, when a ship is sailing from the shore, we first lose sight of the hull, afterward of the rigging, and, at last, discern the top of the mast only: this is evidently occasioned by the convexity of the water between the eye and the object; for, otherwise, the largest and most conspicuous part would be visible the longest. Another proof of the globular form of the Earth is taken from its shadow on the face of the Moon, in the time of an eclipse; for, as the Moon has no light but what she receives from the Sun, and the Earth being interposed between them, during the eclipse, the Moon must be obscured, either totally or in part. And since in every lunar eclipse which is not total, the obscure part always appears to be bounded by a circular line, the Earth itself must be spherical; it being evident, that nothing but a spherical body can, in all situations, cast a circular shadow. The unevenness of the surface of the Earth, caused by mountains and valleys, does not afford an objection tions observed, both in them and the spots, are occasioned by tides, which are differently affected, according to the position of his moons. These moons or satellites, which are four in number, were discovered by Galileo, in 1610, soon after the invention of the telescope; but the belts were not discovered till near twenty years after.

6. SATURN is 907,956,000 miles from the Sun; and, by travelling at the rate of 22,000 miles an hour, performs his annual circuit round that luminary in about twenty-nine and a half of our years. His diameter is 77,990 miles; and he is surrounded by belts, like Jupiter, by observations on which Dr. Herschel determined, in January 1794, that his diurnal rotation is performed in ten hours and sixteen minutes. Saturn is observed to be attended by seven satellites. Of these, five were discovered in the 17th century; and the other two were first observed by Dr. Herschel, in 1786. A magnificent luminous ring encompasses this planet, at such a distance, that several of the stars may frequently be seen between the inward surface of the ring and the body of the planet; its distance from which is equal to its breadth, which is 21,000 miles. This ring was discovered by Huygens, about the year 1655.

7. THE GEORGIAN, the most remote planet in our system, had escaped the observation of every astronomer, as a planet, till the 13th of March 1781, when it was ascertained to be a planet by Mr. Herschel, at Bath, who gave it the name of Georgium Sidus, as a mark of respect to his present majesty. Foreign astronomers, however, call it by the name of the discoverer. Its distance from the Sun is 1,816,455,000 miles, which is nineteen times greater than that of the Earth. Its diameter is 35,220 miles; and it revolves round the Sun, at the rate of 7000 miles an hour, in about 82 years. It shines with a faint steady light, somewhat paler and fainter than Jupiter; but its apparent diameter being only about four seconds, it can only be seen by the naked eye in a clear night, when the Moon is absent. Six satellites attending upon it, have since been discovered.

The Secondary Planets.

Beside the primary planets there are eighteen others, called secondary planets, satellites, or moons, which regard their primaries as centres of their motions, and revolve round them in the same manner as those primaries do round the Sun; namely, the Moon, which attends our Earth; the four satellites of Jupiter; the seven that belong to Saturn; and the six that attend the Georgian. From the continual change of their phases or appearances, it is evident that these also are opaque bodies, and shine only by the reflection of the light which they receive from the Sun.

The Moon, which is the constant attendant of our globe, is the most conspicuous of these satellites. She accompanies the Earth in its annual progress through the heavens, and revolves round it continually by a different motion, in the space of a month. The diameter of the Moon is 2180 miles; her distance from the Earth 240,000 miles; and, in bulk, she is sixty times less than the Earth. The rotation of the Moon on her axis is performed exactly in the same time that she moves once round the Earth, as is evident from her always presenting the same face to us during the whole of her monthly revolution. On viewing the Moon with the naked eye, we discern a number of spots, which imagination naturally supposes to be seas, continents, and the like; but on viewing her through a telescope, the hypothesis of planetary worlds receives additional confirmation. Vast cavities and asperities are observed upon various parts of her surface, exactly resembling valleys and mountains; and every other appearance seems to indicate, that she is a body of the same nature with the Earth. Dr. Herschel, the superiority of whose telescopes is well known, has stated, in the Philosophical Transactions for 1787, his observations on three different volcanos in the Moon. Several astronomers have given exact maps of the Moon, with the figure of every spot, as it appears through the best telescopes, distinguishing each of them by a proper name. One of the most remarkable circumstances attending the Moon, is the continual change of figure to which she is subject; while that half of her which is toward the Sun is illumined, the other half is dark and invisible. Hence she disappears when she comes between the Earth and the Sun; because her dark side is then toward us. When she is gone somewhat forward, we see a little of her enlightened side, which still increases to our view as she advances, until she comes to be opposite the Sun, when her entire enlightened side is toward the Earth, and she appears with a full illumined orb, which we call the Full Moon; her dark side being then turned away from the Earth. From the full she decreases gradually as she proceeds through the other half of her course; showing us less and less of her bright side, every day, till her next change or conjunction with the Sun, and then she disappears as before. These different appearances of the Moon, which we call her phases, are sufficient to demonstrate, that she shines not by any light of her own; for, otherwise, as her form is spherical, we should always behold her, like the Sun, with a full orb. There are other phenomena of the Moon, the discussions of which, in this cursory view, would be too intricate to admit of a popular illustration. We shall, therefore, only observe further, that of all the celestial orbs, this satellite, next to the Sun, has the most beneficial influence on our globe. How cheerless and uncomfortable would be our nights, but for the constant returns of light, which this our inseparable companion dispenses in such agreeable vicissitude! How highly useful are even her eclipses, in our astronomical, geographical, and chronological computations! How salutary is her attractive influence, which swells the tides, perpetuates the regular returns of ebb and flow, and thus tends not only to preserve the liquid element itself from putrefaction, but the surrounding continents, in course, from infection and disease!

The Comets.

COMETS are solid opaque bodies, of different magnitudes, like the planets. Their number is unknown; but they have been found to move round the Sun, and to cross the orbits of the planets in all manner of directions. They are principally distinguished from the planets by a long transparent train or tail of light, which extends from the side that is furthest from the Sun. The orbits in which these vast bodies move are exceedingly long ovals, or very eccentric ellipses, of such amazing circumferences, that in some part of their circuit through the heavens they approach so near the Sun, as to be almost vitrified by his heat, and then go off again into the regions of infinite space, to such immense distances, as to be totally deprived of the light and heat which the rest of the planets receive from that luminary. The paths which they describe, and the laws to which they are subject, have been explained by Newton. Their revolutions are governed throughout by the same law, of describing equal areas in equal times, which is known to regulate the motions of all the other bodies in the system.

The Fixed Stars.

What a magnificent idea of the Creator and his works is presented in this account of the solar system! In the centre is placed the Sun, a stupendous body of fire, around whose orb, the planets, satellites, and comets, perform their revolutions with an exactness and regularity which must fill the mind with the most sublime conceptions of their divine origin. Who can contemplate the angitudes and distances of those vast bodies and not be struck with the wonders of Omnipotence! But what must be our astonishment, when informed, that this glorious system is only a small part of the universe, and that if it were utterly annihilated, it would be missed no more, by an eye that could take in the whole creation, than a grain of sand on the seashore. To form some idea, therefore, however imperfect, of the extent of the universe, and the more glorious works of creation, we must extend our views to those numerous and splendid orbs, which are extended far beyond the bounds of our solar system.

The fixed stars are distinguished from the planets by being more luminous, and by continually exhibiting that appearance which we call the twinkling of the stars. This arises, probably, from their appearing so extremely small, that the interposition of any very minute substance (of which there are many constantly floating in our atmosphere) deprives us of the sight of them; but as the interposed body instantly changes its place, we again see the star; and this succession being perpetual, occasions the twinkling. But a more remarkable property of the fixed stars (and from which they obtain their name) is their never changing their situation with regard to each other, as the planets do; for although the rotation of the Earth, on its axis, occasions an apparent diurnal motion of the whole frame of the heavens, in a contrary direction, yet any two fixed stars being observed, at distant intervals of time, will always be found to preserve the same relative position during the whole of this revolution.

The fixed stars are not placed in one concave surface, so as to be all equally distant from us, but are so dispersed through illimitable space, that there must be as great distance between any two neighbouring stars, as there is between the Sun and those which are the nearest to him. Were a spectator, therefore, to be placed near any fixed star, he would consider that alone as a real Sun, and the rest as so many luminous points, placed in the firmament at equal distances from him. The stars which are the nearest to us seem the largest, and are therefore called stars of the first magnitude, and so on as far as the sixth, which includes all the stars that are visible without a telescope; and, since the invention of that instrument, their number is considered as immense. But the immensity of their number is not alone worthy of admiration: their immense distance from us, and from each other, must equally exalt our ideas of the wonders of Omnipotence, and the inconceivable extent of the creation. The nearest star to us, or that supposed to be such from being the largest in appearance, is Sirius, or the dogstar; and the Earth, in its revolution round the Sun, is 195,000,000 miles nearer to this star in one part of its orbit, than in the opposite one; and yet its magnitude appears not to be in the least affected by it. The distance of this star from the Sun is computed to be above 32 millions of millions of miles, which is further than a cannon-ball would fly in seven millions of years.

The stars being at such immense distances from the Sun, cannot receive from him so strong a light as they seem to possess, nor even a degree of brightness sufficient to make them visible to us; for his rays would be so dissipated before they could reach such remote objects, that they could never be transmitted to our eyes, so as to render those objects visible by reflection. The stars, therefore, shine by their own native lustre, and, in this respect, are totally different from the planets.

The vulgar and uninformed imagine, that all the stars were made only to give a faint glimmering light to the inhabitants of this globe; although many of these stars are so far from benefiting us; that they cannot be seen without a telescope; and there are innumerable others which the eye, even by the aid of that instrument, can never reach. We have already intimated, that there is an inconceivable number of suns, systems, and worlds, dispersed through infinite space; insomuch that our solar system, compared with the whole, appears but as an atom, and is almost lost in the immensity of the creation. The Georgian planet, nevertheless, revolves at the distance of above 1,800,000 miles from the sun, and some of the comets make excursions of many millions of miles beyond this; and yet, at that astonishing distance, they are incomparably nearer to the Sun than to any other fixed star; as is evident from their keeping clear of the attraction of the stars, and returning periodically by virtue of that of the Sun. It cannot be imagined, therefore, that the omnipotent Creator, who acts with infinite wisdom, and never acts in vain, should have created so many glorious suns, fitted for so many important purposes, and placed at such distances from each other, without suitable objects sufficiently near them to be benefited by their influence. On the contrary, it is reasonable to conclude, that they were created for the same purposes with our Sun; to bestow light, heat, and vegetation, on a certain number of planets revolving round them. And from analogy we may infer, that all these innumerable systems are with equal wisdom contrived for the accommodation of rational inhabitants; perhaps of still higher orders of intelligent beings, all capable, in the different scales of existence, of a perpetual progression in knowledge and virtue, in perfection and felicity.

DESCRIPTION OF THE ARTIFICIAL SPHERE.

On the convex part of the terrestrial globe, which is an artificial spherical body, is represented the whole world, as it consists of land and water. The circumference of the globe is divided into 360 degrees, every degree containing 60 geographical miles; consequently the globe is 21,600 such miles round: but as these geographic miles are each about 69 miles and a half English measure, the circuit of the globe is therefore 25,020 English miles. The circles represented on the globe are, 1. The Equator, and the circles parallel to it; 2. The Meridian, and the rest of the meridional lines; 3. The Horizon; 4. The Ecliptic; 5. The two Tropics; and 6. The two Polar Circles.

The Equator, or Equinoctial, is a great circle, ninety degrees distant from the poles of the world, and so named, because it divides the world into two equal parts; that in which the arctic pole is found, is called the northern half; and that in which the antarctic pole is placed, is the southern half. It is divided into 360 degrees, or 180 degrees east, and the same west, from the first meridian, which on English globes passes through London; and its principal use is to show the longitude of any place east or west, from such first meridian. When the Sun is in this circle, there is an equality of days and nights all over the world; hence these points are called the equinoxes.

The Meridian is a great circle, supposed to pass through the poles of the world and those of the horizon, cutting the sphere into two equal parts; the one oriental, and the other occidental. It also passes through the zenith and nadir in every place, and cuts the horizon at right angles. It is called the Meridian, because it marks half the space of time during which the Sun and the stars appear above the horizon. As there is an infinite number of zeniths and horizons, the number of Meridians is also infinite; for the Me-

Meridian is changed, as well as the zenith and horizon, every step we take toward the east or west; but if we pass in a right line northward or southward, we still continue under the same Meridian, though we constantly change the zenith and horizon. However, geographers only reckon 360 Meridians, which are supposed to pass through every degree of the equinoctial. It has been customary for geographers to establish a First Meridian; though this is altogether arbitrary: Ptolemy placed it at the island of Ferro, which is the most western of the Canaries; but the common method, at present, is for every geographer to make the Meridian of the capital of his country the First Meridian; and, accordingly, the longitudes of this Dictionary are reckoned east or west from the Meridian of London or Greenwich. The use of the brass Meridian of a globe, is to show when it is noon or midnight at the place to which it is applied; and also to find the latitude of places, north or south, from the equator.

The Ecliptic is a great circle, that cuts the equator obliquely, and represents that path in the heavens, which the Sun seems to describe by the Earth's annual course round it. It is divided into 12 parts, called signs, and each of those into 30 more, called degrees, corresponding to the 12 months, and the days of the month.

The Horizon is a great circle that divides the world into two equal parts or hemispheres, of which one is superior and visible, and the other inferior and invisible. When the Sun is above this circle it is then day; and when it is sunk 18 degrees beneath it, night then commences. This circle is of wood, and the brass meridian is enclosed therein with all the rest of the sphere: it is also immoveable, and on it are marked the degrees of the 12 signs of the ecliptic, and the days of the 12 months of the year.

The Tropics are two small circles parallel to the equinoctial, described by the first points of the first degrees of the signs termed Cancer and Capricorn, that is when they touch the ecliptic. They are distant from the equinoctial very near 23 degrees and a half. The Sun describes these tropics about the 21st day of June, and the 21st day of December. When he touches the Tropic of Cancer, he makes the longest day for the inhabitants between the equator and the north pole; and when he comes to the beginning of Capricorn, he makes the longest day for the people between the equator and the south pole. On the contrary, the shortest day to the former will be when the Sun touches the Tropic of Capricorn, and to the latter when he comes to the Tropic of Cancer. For this reason, those points are called the winter and the summer Tropics, or the southern and northern; and they are as it were the two barriers, beyond which the Sun never passes.

The Polar Circles are distinguished by the names of the arctic and antarctic, or the north and the south, and the circles parallel to the equinoctial. They are termed Polar, because they are near the poles of the world, being only 23 degrees and a half from each pole.

The Map of the World, at the beginning of this book, represents the globe, taken out of its horizon, cut through, turned up, and squeezed flat. The circles bounding the projection, represent the brass meridian; and the curve lines running across, at every 10 degrees, show the latitude, north or south, from the equator. The top and bottom are the north and south poles; and the curve lines uniting them are the other meridians on the globe, which are drawn at every 10 degrees on the equator, and show the longitude, east or west, from the meridian of Greenwich or London. The equator or equinoctial is the straight line running across the meridians exactly in the middle. The tropics and polar circles are delineated at their proper distances on each side toward the north and south.

Of the Zones.

The Zones are five broad spaces encompassing the globe, and are distinguished chiefly by the temperature of the air. The torrid Zone contains all the space between the two tropics, and is so called from its excessive heat, the Sun being vertical twice every year to all that inhabit it. This circle is about 47 degrees broad. The two temperate Zones are so called from their lying between the two extremes of heat and cold, viz. between the torrid Zone and the frigid Zones, the one being called the Northern temperate Zone, and the other the Southern temperate Zone. These are both 43 degrees broad. Of the frigid Zones, the one encompasses the arctic or north pole, and extends to the distance of 23 degrees and a half from it; and the other, the antarctic or south pole, to the same distance.

Of the Climates.

A Climate is a space of the Earth comprehended between two parallels, at the end of which the length of the longest days are increased half an hour in the summer season. The better to understand this we must observe, that under the equator the longest day is no more than twelve hours, and that in proportion as we advance toward the polar circle, the days of each climate increase half an hour, till we arrive at the polar circles; for there the longest days consist of 24 hours. Thus there are 24 Climates in all, on each side of the equator. It is easy to know in what climate a city is, by observing the longest day; as, for instance, at London, where the days are 16 hours long, we need only subtract 12 from the number, and there will remain four; then multiply this by two, and you will have eight, which is the Climate of London. The same may be done for any other Climate.

Of the Points of the Compass.

The Earth may be considered, with regard to the four cardinal Points, which are the north, south, east, and west; and all the points included between them may have respect to a particular place. By this means we know the situation of the different countries of the world, with regard to each other; for some are oriental or toward the east, with regard to those that are occidental, or lie westerly of them. Thus Ireland is to the west of England, Poland is to the east of Germany, and Africa is to the south of Europe. We may easily distinguish the points that lie between those that are cardinal: thus, though Spain is to the south of France, yet it likewise lies to the westward thereof; but as they do not lie exactly south or west of each other, Spain may be said to lie southwest of France; and for the same reason, on the contrary, France will be northeast with regard to Spain. The like may be said of any two other countries.

Of the Terms used in Geography.

The word Geography comes from the Greek, and signifies a description of the Earth. By the Earth is meant the terraqueous globe, composed of land and water; and it is commonly called the terrestrial globe. Chorography is the description of a particular region, as a province or county. Topography is the description of a particular place, as a town and the like. Hydrography is a description of the water, as oceans, seas, and lakes.

The Earth may be represented either in the whole, or in part, by geographical charts or maps, which may be reduced to two kinds; namely, general and particular. Among the former is the map of the world, or planisphere, which shows the two surfaces of the whole terrestrial globe, bisected by the meridian passing through the equinoxes; as also the maps which describe some principal part of the globe, such as Europe, or Asia; and even kingdoms, as Spain, or Great Britain. However, those maps may be called particular, which represent any particular country; but they are more properly such which exhibit only a part, as Galicia in Spain, or Staffordshire in England.

But nothing can give a better or more general idea of the Earth than a globe, because it is of the same shape and figure; yet as it is impossible to make one large enough to show every part of the land and sea distinctly, there is a necessity of having recourse to general and particular maps.

Geography, as well as other arts and sciences, has terms proper to itself; some of which have relation to the land, and others to the water.

A Continent is a large part of land that comprehends several countries not separated by any sea: thus Europe is a continent.

An Island, or Isle, is a portion of land entirely surrounded by water.

A Peninsula is a quantity of land that is joined to a continent only by a neck of the same, it being every where else encompassed by water: as the peninsula of Crimen.

An Isthmus, or neck of land, is that part by which a peninsula is joined to the land; as the isthmus of Darien.

A Promontory is a high part of land that projects into the sea; it is commonly called a Cape, when it appears like a mountain; but when the advanced part has little elevation, it is termed a Point: thus the Cape of Good Hope is a mountainous promontory.

An Ocean is a large collection of waters bordering or surrounding a considerable part of a continent; such as the Atlantic and Indian Oceans.

A Sea is a smaller collection of waters, when understood in a strict sense, as the Mediterranean Sea; but, in general, every part of the ocean may be called the sea; and it is still more general, when the terraqueous globe is said to consist of sea and land.

A Channel is a narrow sea, confined between an island and a continent, or between two islands; as the English Channel and St. George Channel.

A Gulf is a part of the sea surrounded by land, except in one part where it communicates with the ocean; as the Gulf of Bengal, the Gulf of Florida; and yet these are more properly seas than the Mediterranean, the Baltic, and the Black Seas, which, properly speaking, are gulfs, as well as the Gulf of Venice.

A Bay is said to differ from a gulf only in being less, and more narrow at the entrance than within; but this in many instances is not true: for a bay has a wider entrance in proportion than a gulf, and it may be also larger than some gulfs; as, for instance, the Bay of Biscay; though it must be acknowledged that bays in general are much smaller.

A Creek is a small inlet of the sea, and always much less than a bay.

A Road is a place upon any coast where there is good anchorage, and where vessels, in some sense, are sheltered from the wind.

A Strait is a narrow passage which joins two seas, two gulfs, or a sea and a gulf; such as the Sound, near the Baltic; and the Strait of Gibraltar, between the Atlantic Ocean and the Mediterranean Sea.

A Lake is a large expanse of water surrounded by land, having no communication with the sea, except by a river. Thus the Caspian Sea is truly and properly a lake. Smaller lakes are those of Ladoga, Geneva, and several others.

Description of a Map.

The top of most modern Maps is considered as the north, the bottom as the south, the right hand as the east, and the left hand as the west. In old maps, where this rule is not always strictly followed, a flower de luce is generally placed on some part of it, pointing toward the north, by which the other points are easily known.

On the top of the map, between the marginal lines, are placed the several figures, which show the number of degrees of eastern or western longitude of every place, that is directly under those figures, from the first meridian, which in modern British maps is the royal observatory at Greenwich, near London. At the bottom of most maps are placed the same figures as those at the top: but in maps of the best sort, instead of them are placed the number of hours or minutes every place in it lies distant, east or west, from its chief town or first meridian. For instance, every place which is situate one degree east from another, will appear to have the Sun four minutes of time before it; and any one place, situate one degree west of another, will appear to have the Sun four minutes of time after it. Again, a place situate fifteen degrees east of Greenwich, as Naples, will appear to have the Sun one complete hour before us at London; and a place situate fifteen degrees west of Greenwich, as the island of Madeira, will appear to have the Sun one hour after us at London.

On the right and left hand of every map, between the marginal lines, are placed figures that show the number of degrees, either north or south latitude, which every place parallel with them is distant from the equator. Thus London is situate 51 degrees 30 minutes of north latitude; that is, it is so many degrees and minutes north from the equator. Over most maps are drawn lines from the top to the bottom, and from the right hand to the left; those which run from the top to the bottom are lines of longitude, and those which cross them, lines of latitude; but these are sometimes omitted, when a map is too full to admit them.

Kingdoms or provinces are divided from each other by a row of single points, and they are often stained with different colours. Cities or great towns are made like small houses, with a little circle in the middle of them; but smaller towns or villages are marked only with little circles. Mountains are imitated in the form of little rising hillocks; and forests are represented by a number of little trees. The names of villages are written in a running hand, those of towns in a Roman character, those of cities in small capitals, and those of provinces in large capitals. The sea is generally left as an empty space on the map, except where there are rocks, sands, or shelves, currents of water or wind. Rocks are sometimes made in maps like little pointed things sticking up sharp in the sea. Sands or shelves are denoted by a great number of little points placed in the form of those sands, as they have been found to lie in the ocean, by sounding the depths. Currents of water are described by several long parallel crooked strokes, imitating a current. The course of winds is represented by arrows, with the heads pointing out the direction in which the wind blows. Small rivers are described by a single curved line representing their course, and increasing in thickness as they flow; and large rivers by such double and treble lines made strong and black. Bridges are distinguished by a double line across the rivers.

AA, a river of Dutch Brabant, which waters Helmont, and joins the Dominel, near Bois le Duc.

Aa, a river of Holland, which waters Zwoll, and enters the Vecht, opposite Hasselt.

Aa, a river of Westphalia, which rises near Munster, waters that city, and flows into the Embs.

Aa, a river of France, which rises in the department of Somme, becomes navigable near St. Omer, and enters the German ocean at Gravelins.

Aa, a river of Courland, which rises in Samojitia, and flows into the gulf of Riga.

Aa, a river of Switzerland, which rises in the valley of Engelberg, crosses Underwalden, and flows into the Waldstadter See. Near the abbey of Engelberg, it has a noble cataract.

Aahus, a town of Westphalia, in the principality of Munster, on the river Aa, 12 m NW Coesfeld.

Aain Charain, a village 6 m from Jerusalem, said to be the place where Zacharias lived. It is frequented by pilgrims; and near it there is a large convent, with a splendid altar that is said to stand on the spot where John the baptist was born.

Aalen, a town of Suabia, seated on the Kocher, 40 m NW Augsburg.

Aar, a river of Switzerland, which issues from a lake, on the mount Grimfel, to the E of St. Goddard, flows through the lakes of Brentz and Thun to Bern, thence to Soleure, Arberg, and Bruck, below which it receives the Reufs and Limmat, and then enters the Rhine, below Zurzach.

in Northumberland county, at the head of Penn's creek, 40 m W by N Sunbury. Lon. 77 31 W, lat. 40 52 N.

Abach, a town of Bavaria, with a citadel, several Roman antiquities, and some fine mineral springs; seated near the Danube, 7 m SW Ratibon.

Abaco, or Lucayo, one of the largest of the Bahama islands, lying at the SE end of the Little Bahama bank. It contains great quantities of various kinds of wood. Near the E point is Little Harbour, which affords good anchorage. Lon. 77 14 W, lat. 26 22 N.

Abakansk, a fortified town of Siberia, in the government of Kolyvan, seated on the Abakan, 340 m ESE Kolyvan. Lon. 91 9 E, lat. 54 50 N.

Abalak, a town of Siberia, famous for an image of the virgin, visited by a great number of pilgrims. It is 14 m S Tobolsk.

Abancay, the capital of a province of the same name, in Peru. The country produces fine sugar, hemp, wheat, maize, and other grain, and the breed of horned cattle is considerable; it has also cloth manufactures and silver mines. The town stands on a river of the same name, over which is one of the largest bridges in the kingdom. This place is memorable for the victories gained in its vicinity by the king's troops against Gonzalo Pizarro, in 1542 and 1548. It is 60 m SW Cusco. Lon. 72 26 W, lat. 13 32 S.

Abano, a town of Italy, famous for its warm baths, 5 m SW Padua.

Abaskaia, a town of Siberia, on the river Ichim, 128 m S by E Tobolsk. Lon. 69 0 E, lat. 50 10 N.

Abberford, a town in W Yorkshire, with a market on Wednesday, and a manufacture of pins. Here are the ruins of an ancient castle. It is seated on the river Cook, 16 m sw York, and 186 nsw London.

Abbeville, a town of France, in the department of Somme, on the river Somme, which separates the town into two parts. Here are manufactures of woollen cloth, canvas, coarse linen, and so. p. It is 22 m NW Amiens, and 60 s Calais. Lon. 1 50 E, lat. 50 7 N.

Abbey Boyle, &c; see Boyle, &c.

Abbotsbury, a town in Dorsetshire, with a market on Thursday. Here was a famous Benedictine abbey, many traces of which remain, and some of the offices are yet entire. A mile w of the town is Strangeways castle, where there is a large swannery. Abbotsbury is seated near the sea, 7 m wsw Dorchester, and 127 w by s London.

Abbots Langley, a village in Hertfordshire, 4 m sw St. Alban, famous for being the birthplace of Nicholas Breakspere, who, under the name of Adrian IV, was the only Englishman that ever became pope.

Abb (St.) Head, a promontory on the E coast of Scotland, 10 m nsw Berwick. The remains of a church and a castle are still visible on its heights. Lon. 2 10 W, lat. 55 54 N.

Abenrade; see Apenrade.

Abensberg, a town and castle of Bavaria, on the river Abens, near the Danube, 15 m ssw Ratisbon.

Aberavon, a town of Wales, in Glamorganshire, which has copper and tin works; seated at the mouth of the Avon, 6 m s Neath, and 192 w London.

Aberbrothock, or Arbroath, a seaport and borough of Scotland, in Forfarshire, at the mouth of the Brothock. The harbour is small, but commodious, and defended by a long pier and a battery. The chief exports are coal, lime, thread, barley, and wheat. Here are considerable manufactures of canvas and brown linen, and the magnificent ruins of an abbey. It is 48 m nne Edinburg. Lon. 2 33 W, lat. 56 35 N.

Aberconway, a corporate town of Wales, in Carnarvonshire, with a market on Friday. It is surrounded by a wall with towers; and on a rocky promontory are the massy remains of a castle, formerly one of the most magnificent structures of the kind in the kingdom. It stands near the mouth of the Conway, 18 m ene Carnarvon, and 220 wnw London.

Abercorn, a town of Scotland, in Linlithgowshire. The Roman wall built by Antoninus began at this place, and extended to Kirkpatrick, on the frith of Clyde. It stands near the frith of Forth, 4 m ne Linlithgow.

Abercorn, a town of the state of Georgia, on the river Savanna, 20 m nw Savanna.

Aberdare, a village of Wales, in Glamorganshire, 5 m sw Merthyr Tudfyl. It has extensive iron-works, and a canal to that of Merthyr Tudfyl.

Aberdeen, New, a city of Scotland, capital of Aberdeenshire, situate on an eminence, near the mouth of the Dee. The college, called Marischal college, was founded in 1598, and is a respectable seminary, but the scholars are boarded in the town. Beside two papist churches, and the college kirk, there is an elegant episcopal chapel, and several meeting-houses. The other public buildings are, a townhouse, Gordon hospital, a lunatic hospital, and an infirmary. The harbour is defended by a strong stone pier and two batteries. Beside the coasting trade, vessels are sent hence to the Baltic, the Levant, and the W Indies. The manufactures are stockings, thread, cottons, &c. and great quantities of salmon and pork are pickled here. The city is governed by a lord provost. The number of inhabitants was 17,597 in 1801, and 21,639 in 1811. It is 121 m nne Edinburg. Lon. 2 8 W, lat. 57 9 N.

Aberdeen, Old, or Aberdon, a borough of Scotland, a mile n New Aberdeen, on the s bank of the Don, near its mouth. It was anciently a bishop's see, and a part of the cathedral now forms the parish church. King college, founded in 1494, is a large stately fabric, with a long uniform range of modern houses for the professors and students; and the townhouse is a neat modern structure. On the seacoast is a fort, and the remains of the castle that was destroyed by Cromwell. The number of inhabitants was 9,911 in 1801, and 13,731 in 1811.

Aberdeenshire, a county of Scotland, 90 m long and 38 broad; bounded on the n and e by the German ocean, s by the counties of Kincardine, Forfar, and Perth, and w by those of Inverness and Banff. It contains 718,800 acres, and is divided into 87 parishes. The number of inhabitants was 123,082 in 1801, and 135,075 in 1811. The ne part, extending toward the river Ythan, is called Buchan; and the Wangle, consisting of vast woodland mountains, is called Mar Forest, in which the river Dee takes its rise. There is excellent pasture in the high parts; and the level tract, called Strathbogie fields. It has stone, and limestone, and granite, and the rivers are the Forth, and the excellent salmon.

Aberdour, a town in Aberdeenshire, with iron utensils m nw Edinburg.

Aberdour, an ancient ocean, 8 m w Edinburgh.

river Cuban and the Black sea. They are tributary to the Turks, and are divided into two governments, the western and the eastern; each subject to a bashaw, commonly chosen out of the principal native families; one of whom resides at Sotchukkalé and the other at Soghumkalé. The Abkhas speak an original language, which appears to have a remote affinity to that of the Circassians. They have, at present, very little religion, although they still preserve some traces of Christianity. Their chief town is Anacopia.

Abyssinia, an empire of Africa, 900 m long and 600 broad, bounded on the N by Nubia, E by the Red sea and Adel, S by Machidas, Gingiro, and Monoemugi, and W by Negroland and Darfoor. It is divided into several provinces or kingdoms. The country is mountainous, but in the vales the soil is fertile. The rainy season continues from April to September. This is succeeded, without interval, by a cloudless sky, and a vertical sun. Cold nights as instantly follow these scorching days. The earth, notwithstanding these days, is cold to the soles of the feet; partly owing to the six months rain, when no sun appears, and partly to the perpetual equality of nights and days. There is no country in the world that produces a greater variety of quadrupeds, both wild and tame: the hyenas are very numerous, and dreadful in their ravages, but there are no tigers. Beside eagles, vultures, &c. there is a species of glede, called haddayn, which is frequent in Egypt, and comes punctually into Abyssinia, at the return of the sun, after the tropical rains; and storks are numerous in May, when the rains become constant: there are few owls; but these are of an immense size and beauty. The most remarkable insect is the Tsfalsal, a large fly, which is so fatal to cattle, that, in some districts, great emigrations take place in the beginning of the rainy season, to prevent the flock of cattle from being destroyed. There is a remarkable coincidence between the customs in the court of ancient Persia and those of Abyssinia. The religion of the country is a mixture of Judaism and of the Christianity of the Greek church; and the language bears a great affinity to the Arabic. The natives are of a dark olive complexion; and the dress is a light robe, bound with a sash, the head being covered with a kind of turban. The houses are of a conic form, meanly built of clay, and covered with thatch; and even the churches are of a round form, encircled by a portico. Some travellers say that at an Abyssinian banquet the flesh is cut from the live oxen; but others only affirm that the natives are fond of raw flesh, a taste not unknown to other nations. According to Mr. Bruce, the celebrated river Nile has its source in this country. Gondar is the metropolis.

Ach, a town of Suabia, in the land-gravate of Nellenburg, on a rocky eminence, by the river Ach, 14 m NE Schaffhausen.

Acham, a country in Asia, bounded on the N by Bootan, E by China, S by Birmah, and W by Hindoostan. It is very little known to the Europeans.

Acheen, a kingdom in the NW part of Sumatra, now very different from earlier times, when it was powerful enough to expel the Portuguese from the island, and its sovereigns received embassies from some of the greatest potentates of Europe. It is comparatively healthy, being more free from woods and swamps than the other parts of the island. Its chief products are fine fruits, rice, cotton, gold dust, and sulphur. The Acheneſe are taller, stouter, and darker complexioned than the other Sumatrans. They are more active and industrious than their neighbours, have more sagacity and penetration, and are bold and expert navigators. They are Mohamedans.

Acheen, the capital of a kingdom of the same name, in Sumatra, near the mouth of a river, on the NW point of the island, or Acheen Head, in a wide valley, formed by two lofty ranges of hills. The river, which empties itself by several channels, is very shallow at the bar. The houses are built of bamboos and rough timbers, and are raised some feet from the ground, this part of the country being overflowed in the rainy season. It is an open town, in the centre of which is the king's palace, a mile and a half in circumference, surrounded by a wide and deep moat, and strong walls. A manufacture of a thick kind of cotton cloth, and of stuff for the short trowsers worn by the Malays and Acheneſe, is established here. Payments are commonly made in gold dust, which is carried about in bladders. Crimes are punished here with remarkable rigour; but the rod of justice, it is supposed, falls only on the poor: yet the Acheneſe are supposed to be the most dishonest and flagitious people in the East. Acheen is 1000 m SE Madras. Lon. 95 34 E, lat. 5 22 N.

Acre, or St. John d'Acre, a seaport of Syria, in Palestine, and a bishop's see. It is the Ptolemais of the Greeks and Romans, and stands on a plain at the N point of a bay, which extends in a semicircle of 9 m to the point of Mount Carmel, near the mouth of the Kardanah, or ancient Belus. In the time of the crusades, it underwent several sieges; and little is now to be seen of this ancient city, but the remains of monuments, and of a church dedicated to St. Andrew, or, as some think, St. John the baptist. The new city is distant a mile from the ancient walls, and the fortifications are of little importance. The palace of the grand master of the order of St. John of Jerusalem is the residence of the chief of Acre. Here are three mosques, four churches, and a synagogue. Its port has been at all times the key to Palestine, and though now a bad one, is better than any other along the coast. The chief articles of commerce are cotton, cattle, corn, olives, and linseed; and rice brought from Egypt. In 1759, great damage was done by an earthquake; and the year following 5000 persons, near one-third of the inhabitants, died by the plague. In 1799, aided by the British under sir W. S. Smith, it withstood a siege by the French under Bonaparte, who retreated after failing in a twelfth assault, made over the putrid bodies of his soldiers. It is 24 m S Tyre, and 47 N Jerusalem. Lon. 35 20 E, lat. 32 32 N.

Adriano, a mountain of Spain, in Biscay, over which is a very difficult road to Alba and Old Castile. It is one of the highest of the Pyrenees; and is only inhabited by a few shepherds.

Adrianople, a city of European Turkey, in Romania, the see of an archbishop, and formerly the European seat of the Turkish dominion. It is 8 m in circumference, situate in the midst of a very extensive and perfectly level plain, on the river Marissa, which here receives two tributary streams. Several of the mosques are very splendid, and the principal one has four minarets, said to be the highest in all Turkey. Many of the houses are neat, but the streets are narrow and devious. The seraglio is separated from the city by the river Arda, and commands an extensive view

Afghanistan, a country of Asia, stretching from the mountains of Tartary to the Arabian sea, and from the Indus to the confines of Persia. The inhabitants of this wide domain have no written character, and speak a language peculiar to themselves. They are a robust, hardy race of men, and being generally addicted to a state of predatory warfare, their manners partake of a barbarous insolence; they avow a fixed contempt for the occupations of civil life; and are esteemed the most negligent of religious observances of all the Mohamedans. Their common dress consists of a shirt, which falls over the upper part of long and narrow trousers; a woollen vest, fitted closely to the body, and reaching to the midleg; and a high turned up cap, of broad cloth or cotton, usually of one colour, and of a conic form, with two small parallel slits in the upper edge of its facing. The principal cities are Candahar and Cabul, the former of which was the capital; but the late and present sultans have kept their court at Cabul. About the year 1720, an army of Afghans invaded Persia, took Ispahan, and made the sultan Husseyn prisoner. They kept possession of Ispahan and the southern provinces for ten years, when they were defeated in several battles, and driven out of the country by Nadir Kuli, commonly known in Europe by the name of Kouli Khan. After Nadir had deposed his sovereign, Shah Thomas, he laid siege to and took Candahar; but afterward received a considerable body of the Afghans into his army, who became his favourite foreign troops. On his assassination, in 1747, the general of the Afghan troops, though furiously attacked by the whole Persian army, effected a safe retreat into his own country, where he caused himself to be acknowledged sovereign of the Afghan territories by the title of Ahmed Shah.

by the Mediterranean sea, w by the Atlantic ocean, s by the Southern ocean, and e by the isthmus of Suez, the Red sea, and the Indian ocean. It is a peninsula of prodigious extent, being joined to Asia by the isthmus of Suez, which is 125 m over. In its greatest length, from the most northern part to the Cape of Good Hope, it is 4600 m; and in the broadest part, from Cape Verd to Cape Guardafui, it is 3500. The greater part lies within the torrid zone, which renders the heat almost insupportable in many places. However, the coasts in general are very fertile, the fruits excellent, and the plants extraordinary. There are more wild beasts than in any other part of the world: there are also some animals peculiar to this country; as the hippopotamus, or river horse; the rhinoceros, with two horns on its nose; and the beautiful striped zebra. Beside these, there are crocodiles, ostriches, camels, and many other animals not to be met with in Europe. There are several deserts, particularly one of a large extent called Zahara; but these are not quite without inhabitants. There are many large rivers; but the principal are the Nile, Niger, Zaire, Senegal, and Gambia. The most considerable mountains are the Atlas, the Mountains of the Moon, and the Sierra Leone. The inhabitants consist of pagans, Mohamedans, and Christians. The first, who possess the greatest part of the country, from the Tropic of Cancer to the Cape of Good Hope, are the most numerous, and are generally black. The Mohamedans, who are tawny, possess Egypt and the coast of Barbary. The people of Abyssinia are denominated Christians, but retain many pagan and Jewish rites. In the N of Africa are some Jews, who manage all the little trade of that part of the country. The principal divisions of Africa are Barbary, Egypt, Biledulgerid, Zahara, Negroland, Guinea, Bornou, Cahna, Fezzan, Senna, Nubia, Abyssinia, Abex, Loango, Congo, Angola, Benguela, Mataman, Zanguebar, Mocarango, Monoemugi, Sofola, Caffraria, and the country of the Hottentots.

Albion, New, a country on the W coast of N America, to the N of California, extending from lat. 33 to 40 N, and from 30 to 40 m in breadth. It received its name from sir Francis Drake in 1578, whose harbour is in lon. 116 45 W, lat. 37 58 N; but the coast had been examined by Juan Rodriguez Cabrillo, in 1542, and the country is called New California by the Spaniards. The land is mountainous, and abounds with trees; but there are extensive plains and valleys of luxuriant soil, and well watered. Maize, wheat, and barley are cultivated in abundance; good wine is made in all the settlements on the coast; and the olive is successfully cultivated, especially near St. Diego. In the mountains are the same kind of goats as in California; and in the forests and plains are stags of a most gigantic size, called venados, of a brown colour and without spot. The climate is subject to much drought, especially in autumn; but this is in some measure compensated by dews, which often fall very heavily: the rainy season is from December to March. The Spaniards, who first settled here in 1769, have divided the country into four jurisdictions, named, from their chief towns, St. Diego, St. Barbara, Monterey, and St. Francisco. The government is confided to European monks of the order of St. Francis, and their establishments are in a prosperous state. In 1802, the number of native Indian cultivators alone was 15,562. The capital is Monterey.

dalusia, near the river Guadalquiver. Here is a bridge built by the Romans, to pass the marshes formed by the river. It is 14 m s Seville.

Alcaraz, a town of Spain, in Mancha, with a strong castle, and a remarkable ancient aqueduct. It is situate among mountains, near the source of the Guadalquiver, 67 m e Ciudad Real. Lon. 2 48 w, lat. 38 58 n.

Alcaudete, a town of Spain, in Andalusia, 19 m sw Jaen.

Alcazar de Sal, a town of Portugal, in Estremadura, with a castle reckoned impregnable. Fine white salt is made here. It is seated on the Cadoan, 15 m from the sea, and 35 se Lisbon. Lon. 9 5 w, lat. 38 18 n.

Alcazar Quiber, a town of the kingdom of Fez, which has a profitable commerce with Tetuan and other places. A little to the n of the town Sebastian king of Portugal lost his life in a battle with the Moors, in 1578. It is seated on the Lucos, 20 m se Larache.

Alcazar Seguer, a town of the kingdom of Fez, on the strait of Gibraltar. It was taken by Alphonso, king of Portugal, in 1468; but soon after abandoned. It is 14 m e Tangier.

Alcester, or Alncester, a town in Warwickshire, with a market on Tuesday. Many Roman coins, bricks, &c. have been found near it, and the Icknield-street passes through the town. It has a manufacture of needles, and is situate at the conflux of the Alne with the Arrow, 14 m sw Warwick, and 103 nw London.

Alcmaer, or Alkmaar, a strong city of Holland, capital of the department of Texel. The environs produce excellent butter and cheese, and fine tulips. This city was besieged by the Spaniards in 1573, after they had taken Harlem; but the Spaniards, after an investment of three months, were obliged to raise the siege with disgrace. Alcmaer opened its gates to the British troops in 1799, after the second battle near Bergen; but a treaty was soon afterward concluded here for their evacuating the country. It is situate among groves of tall trees, near Schermeer, one of the largest lakes in Holland, 18 m n by e Harlem. Lon. 4 38 e, lat. 52 38 n.

Alconchol, a fort of Spain, on the frontiers of Estremadura, seated on the Alcaraque, which runs into the Guadiana, 20 m s by w Badajoz. Lon. 7 3 w, lat. 38 12 n.

Alcoutim, a town of Portugal, in Algarva, with a strong castle, seated on an Alcoy, a town of Spain, in Valencia, with a manufacture of cloth; seated near the source of a river of the same name, 22 m N Alicant.

Aleudia, a city of Majorca, consisting of about 1000 houses, surrounded by a wall and ditch. It stands on a peninsula, between two bays on the NE coast, 34 m NE Palma. Lon. 3 10 E, lat. 39 50 N.

Aldborough, a borough and seaport in Suffolk, with a market on Wednesday and Saturday. It stands on the Alde, between a high hill and the sea; and the harbour is tolerably good, but small. The town was formerly much longer; but the sea has taken away whole streets. It is 40 m E Bury, and 94 NE London. Lon. 1 37 E, lat. 52 16 N.

Aldborough, a borough in W Yorkshire, which has now no market. Here are many remains of Roman works. It is seated on the Ure, near its junction with the Swale, 15 m NE York, and 208 N by W London.

Aldea Gallega, a town of Portugal, in Estremadura, seated on the Tajo, 10 m SE Lisbon.

Aldenburg, a town of Westphalia, in the duchy of Berg, 20 m ESE Duffeldorf.

Alderbury, a village in Wiltshire, on a hill near the Avon, 3 m from Salisbury. It has a manufacture of fustians, and received considerable damage by a fire in 1777, when 100 houses were destroyed.

Alderholm, an island of Sweden, formed by the three arms of the river Gesle, in the gulf of Bothnia. A considerable trade is carried on here in planks and deals. It is 80 m N Stockholm.

Alderney, an island in the English channel, 8 m in circumference, separated from France by a strait called the Race of Alderney, which is a dangerous passage, on account of the rocks under water. It is fertile in corn and pasture; and has upward of 1000 inhabitants, who live in a town of the same name. Lon. 2 17 W, lat. 49 45 N.

Aldstone; see Alston-moor.

Alegre, a town of France, in the department of Upper Loire, 15 m SE Brionde.

Alentejo, a province of Portugal, between the river Tajo and the province of Algarve. Its oranges are of an excellent quality, and it produces much rice. Evora is the capital.

Alençon, a city of France, capital of the department of Orne. The manufacture of lace is considerable. Near it are stone quarries, in which are found a sort of crystal like Bristol stones. It is seated on the Sarte, 30 m N by W Mans, and 87 WSW Paris. Lon. 0 1 E, lat. 48 26 N.

Aleppo, the capital of Syria, and next to Constantinople and Cairo, the most considerable city in the Turkish empire. It stands on eight hills, in the middle of a fruitful plain; is of an oval figure, 7 m in compass, and supposed to contain 250,000 inhabitants. The castle is on the highest hill, in the centre of the city; and the houses are better than in other places in Turkey. As usual in the East, they consist of a large court, with a dead wall to the street, an arcade running round it, paved with marble, and a marble fountain in the middle. The streets are narrow, but well paved with large square stones, and kept very clean. Here are many stately mosques, caravanseras, fountains, vineyards, and gardens. The water in the wells is brackish; but good water is brought from some springs about 5 m off, by an aqueduct, said to have been built by empress Helena. The Christians have their houses and churches in the suburbs, and carry on a considerable trade in silks, camblets, and leather. Large caravans frequently arrive from Bagdad and Bassora, charged with the products of Persia and India. Several European nations have factories here, and the merchants live in greater splendour and safety than in any other city in the Turkish empire. Coaches are not used here, but persons of quality ride on horseback, with a number of servants before them, according to their rank. Eighteen miles SE of Aleppo is a large plain, bounded by low rocky hills, called the Valley of Salt; this is overflowed in winter, and in April, the water being soon evaporated by the sun, leaves a cake of salt, in some places half an inch thick, which is sufficient to supply all this part of the country. Aleppo is seated on a rivulet, 70 m SE Alexandretta, and 150 N Damascus. Lon. 37 16 E, lat. 35 40 N.

Alessano, a town of Naples, in Terra d'Otranto, 15 m SW Otranto.

Aleutian Islands; see Archipelago, Northern.

Alexandretta, or Scanderoon, a town of Syria, on the Mediterranean sea, and the port of Aleppo. It is now a poor place, the tombs being more numerous than the houses. The road is subject to many inconveniences; but the extreme unwholesomeness of the air is the worst. While the heats are excessive, the principal inhabitants retire to the neighbouring villages, among the mountains, where there is excellent water, and delicious fruits. It is 60 m nw Aleppo. Lon. 36 15 E, lat. 36 35 N.

Alexandria, or Alesundria, a town in that part of Milanese adjoining Montferat, which has been lately united to France, and is now the capital of the department of Marengo. Here is a strong castle; but the place has been often taken in the various wars in Italy. The inhabitants, computed at 12,000, have a considerable trade, particularly in cotton and silk. It is seated on the Tanaro, 40 m E Turin, and 50 ssw Milan. Lon. 8 38 E, lat. 44 53 N.

Alexandria, or Scanderia, a town of Egypt, now much decayed, though there are still some remains of its ancient splendour. Here is an obelisk full of hieroglyphics, called Cleopatra's Needle; and Pompey's pillar, which is one entire piece of granite 70 feet high and 25 in circumference. The ancient Pharos, so famous in antiquity that it was numbered among the seven wonders of the world, is now a castle called Pharillon, and still used to direct vessels into the harbour. From the harbour is a canal to the w branch of the Nile, at Rhamanie. This city was first built by Alexander the great, and now consists chiefly of one long street, facing the harbour, the rest being a heap of ruins; part of the walls are standing, with great square towers 200 paces distant; and the gates are of Thebaic and granite marble. It was formerly a place of great trade, all the treasures of the E Indies being deposited here, before the discovery of the route by the Cape of Good Hope. It is subject to the grand signior, who, however, has but a limited authority. Alexandria was taken by the French invaders, under Bonaparte, in 1798; and taken from them by the English in 1801. It surrendered to the English in 1807, but was soon after evacuated. It is seated on the Mediter-

Algeri, or Alghieri, a seaport on the w coast of Sardinia, and a bishop's see, 6 m s Saffari.

Algezira, a province of Turkey in Asia, now usually called Diarbek.

Algeziras, a town of Spain, in Andalusia, on the strait of Gibraltar, but in a mean condition. The ancient citadel is in ruins, and the harbour is decayed, but affords shelter to numerous gun boats and small vessels. It is 7 m w Gibraltar.

Algiers, a country of Barbary, comprehending a great part of the ancient Mauritania. It is 600 m from E to W, and 170 in breadth; bounded on the N by the Mediterranean, E by Tunis, S by Mount Atlas, and W by Morocco. It is divided into the territory of the city of Algiers, and the provinces of Mascara, Titeri, and Constantina. Mineral springs and waters are met with in many places; and several of the chains of mountains contain lead and copper. The principal rivers are the Shellif, Mazafra, Malva, and Zaine. The land toward the N is fertile in corn, and the valleys are full of fruit; but it is ill cultivated. The melons have an exquisite taste, some of which are ripe in summer, and others in winter. The stems of the vines are very large, and the bunches of grapes are a foot and a half long. The Turks, who have the government in their hands, are not above 7000 in number; and yet the Moors, or natives of Africa, have no share in it. It is a kind of republic under the protection of the grand signior, and governed by a dey, who, however, can do nothing of consequence without the council of the janissaries. The Arabs, who live in tents, are a distinct people, governed by their own laws and magistrates, though the Turks interpose as often as they please. The dey is an absolute monarch, but elected by the Turkish soldiers, and frequently deposed and put to death by them. The revenues of the government arise from the tribute paid by the Moors and Arabs, a detachment of the army being sent into each province every year to collect it; and the prizes they take at sea sometimes equal the taxes they lay upon the natives. The dey has several thousand Moors in his service, both horse and foot; and the beys or viceroys of the provinces have each an army under his command. The complexion of the natives is tawny, and they are strong and well made. Their religion is Mohamedanism, and their language a dialect of the Arabic. They have likewise a jargon, composed of Italian, French, and Spanish, called Lingua Franca, which is understood by the common people and merchants.

Algiers, a strong city, capital of the whole country of Algiers. It is built on the side of a mountain, next the harbour; and the houses appearing one above another, of a resplendent whiteness, make a fine appearance from the sea. The tops of the houses are flat, covered with earth, and form a sort of gardens. The streets are narrow, and serve to keep off the extreme heat of the sun. There are five gates, but no public places or squares of considerable extent. The larger mosques are seven, but there is nothing remarkable in their architecture; and the dey's palace is far from being spacious and extensive. The harbour is small, shallow, and insecure, and its entrance is incommoded with numerous rocks. The mole of the harbour is 500 paces in length, extending from the continent to a small island, where there is a castle and a large battery. The number of inhabitants is said to be 80,000, in which are included several thousand Jewish families. Their chief subsistence is derived from their piracies, for they make prizes of all Christian ships that are not at peace with them. The country about Algiers is adorned with gardens and fine villas, watered by fountains and rivulets; and thither the inhabitants resort in the hot season. Algiers has for ages braved the resentment of the most powerful states in Christendom. Emperor Charles V lost a fine fleet and army in an expedition against it in 1541. The English burnt their vessels in the harbour in 1635 and 1670. It was bombarded by the French in 1688. In 1775, the Spaniards made a descent near the city with a formidable army, but were defeated with great slaughter. In 1784, they sent a powerful fleet to attack the forts that defend the harbour; but they were repelled by the Algerines, although they made eight successive attacks with great bravery. Algiers is 380 m w Tunis. Lon. 3 48 E, lat. 36 40 N.

Algoa Bay, a bay on the s coast of Africa. It lies open to the se wind, and the entrance is difficult when it blows from other quarters. Alicant, a seaport of Spain, in Valencia, famous for excellent wine and fruits. It has a great trade, and the chief exports are barilla, antimony, alum, aniseed, cumin, and tent wine. The castle, on a high rock, was reckoned impregnable; but it was taken by the English in 1706. It was likewise taken by the French and Spaniards, after a siege of almost two years; and then part of the rock was blown up. It is seated on the Mediterranean, on a bay of the same name, 85 m S Valencia. Lon. 0 32 W, lat. 38 16 N.

Alicata, a seaport of Sicily, in Val di Mazara, with a fortress on a small cape. It exports much corn and sulphur, and stands at the mouth of the Salso, 28 m SE Girgenti. Lon. 14 5 E, lat. 37 6 N.

Allchurch, a village in Worcestershire, formerly a borough, 5 m E by N of Bromigrove. The Roman Icknield street and the Worcester canal pass it. The bishop of Worcester had formerly a palace here; and the church, several parts of which are of Saxon architecture, contains many antique monuments.

Alleghany, or Apalachian Mountains, a long range of mountains in N America, between the Atlantic, the Mississippi, and the lakes; extending nearly parallel with the seacoast, 900 m in length, and from 60 to 200 in breadth. The different ridges which compose this immense range have different names in the different states. Advancing from the Atlantic, the first ridge of Pennsylvania, Virginia, and N Carolina, is the Blue ridge, or South Mountain, from 130 to 200 m from the sea, and about 4000 feet high from its base. Between this and the North Mountain spreads a large fertile vale. Next lies the Alleghany, which is the principal ridge, and has been descriptively called the Back-bone of the United States. Beyond this is the long ridge, called the Laurel Mountains, in a spur of which, in lat. 36, is a spring of water, 50 feet deep, very cold, and as blue as indigo. From these several ridges proceed innumerable nameless branches or spurs. The Kittatiny, or Blue Mountains, run through the northern parts of New Jersey and Pennsylvania. All these ridges, except the Alleghany, are broken through by rivers, which appear to have forced their way through solid rocks. These mountains are sometimes called the Apalachian, from a river, whose original source proceeds from this ridge, called the Apalachicola. They are not confusedly scattered, but stretch along in uniform ridges, scarcely half a mile high. They spread as they proceed S, and some of them terminate in high perpendicular bluffs; others gradually subside into a level country, giving rise to the rivers which run southerly into the gulf of Mexico.

Alleghany, a river of the United States, which rises in the Alleghany mountains, in lat. 42. At Fort Venango, at the mouth of French creek, it is 200 yards wide, and navigable for light batteaux. At Pittsburg it joins the Monongahela, and then assumes the name of Ohio. See Ohio.

Alloa, a town of Scotland, in Clackmannanshire, near the mouth of the Forth. Here is a customhouse, a glasshouse, an iron foundry, and an excellent dry dock; and its harbour is the resort of all the coal vessels in the neighbourhood. Near the town is a tower 90 feet high, with walls 11 feet thick. It is 31 m WNW Edinburg. Lon. 3 45 W, lat. 56 6 N.

Allonby, a fishing town in Westmorland, much resorted to for bathing. It stands on a flat shore of the Irish sea, 8 m WNW Cockermonth, and 22 WSW Carlisle.

All-Saints Bay, or Bahia, a government of Brasil, so called from a bay of that name, which is 36 m in diameter, and interspersed with a number of pleasant islands. It is reckoned the smallest province in Brasil, yet is the richest and most fertile, having some gold mines, and producing great quantities of cotton and sugar. St. Salvador is the capital.

Almaçaron, a seaport of Spain, in Murcia, with a fortress. It is famous for a very fine red earth, used as an ingredient in Spanish snuff, and, instead of tripoli, to give the last polish to glass; also for a truly saline white stone, called plume-alum. It stands near the mouth of the Guadalantin, 20 m WSW Carthagena. Lon. 1 26 W, lat. 37 32 N.

Alpnach, a town of Switzerland, in Underwalden, seated on an arm of the lake of the Four Cantons, 6 m S Lucern.

Alps, a chain of mountains in Europe, which begins at the gulf of Genoa, to the E of Nice, passes into Switzerland, crosses that country and Tyrol, separates Germany from Italy, and terminates at the N part of the gulf of Venice. This grand chain is sometimes divided into two or more ridges, ranging one by another, with only narrow vallies between; and the different portions have distinct appellations, as the Maritime, Pennine, Lepontine, Helvetian, Rhetian, Julian, &c. They are composed of stupendous rocky masses piled upon each other, from 4000 to above 15,600 feet high. There are few passes over them, and those of difficult access. Switzerland has the central part of these mountains, and the vallies between them. The famous Hannibal attempted to cross the Alps on the side of Piedmont, in the winter season, when he invaded Italy, and lost most of his elephants among them.

Alps, Upper, a department of France, including part of the late province of Dauphiny. It is so called from its vicinity to the mountains of that name. The capital is Embrun.

Amazon, or Maranon, a river of S America, and the greatest in the world. Its source is in Peru, not far from the Pacific ocean, and running E enters the Atlantic ocean directly under the equinoctial line. Its course is 3300 m its mouth is 150 m broad, and 1500 m from its mouth it is 30 fathoms deep. It receives, in its progress, near 200 other rivers, many of which have a course of 1500 m, and some of them not inferior to the Danube, or the Nile. In the rainy season it overflows its banks, and fertilizes the adjacent country.

Amazonia, a country of S America, 1400 m long and 960 broad; bounded on the N by Terra Firma and Guayana, E by the Atlantic ocean and Brasil, S by Paraguay, and W by Peru. It was discovered in 1580, by Francisco Orellana, who, coming from Peru, sailed down the river Amazon to the Atlantic. Observing companies of women in arms on its banks, he called the country Amazonia, and gave the name of Amazon to the river, which had formerly been called Maranon. The air in this country is cooler than might be expected, considering its situation in the torrid zone; this is owing partly to the heavy rains, which cause the inundations of the rivers for one half of the year, and partly to the cloudiness of the atmosphere, by which the sun is obscured the greatest part of the day. The fair season is about the time of the solstices, and the rainy season about the equinoxes. The soil is very rich and fertile; the trees and plants are verdant all the year. In the woods are tigers, wild boars, buffalos, deer, and game of various kinds. The rivers and lakes abound with fish, but are infested by alligators and water serpents. Their banks are inhabited by different tribes of Indians, governed by petty sovereigns, distinguished from their subjects by a coronet of beautiful feathers, a belt of tigers' teeth or claws, and a wooden sword. The natives are of a good stature and copper colour, with handsome features and long black hair. They make cotton cloth; and their houses are built of wood and clay, thatched with reeds. Their arms are darts, javelins, bows and arrows, and targets of cane or fishskin. The Spaniards have made many unsuccessful attempts to settle in this country; but on the coast, between Cape North and the mouth of the Amazon, the Portuguese have some small settlements.

Amburg, a fortified town, capital of the palatinate of Bavaria, with a strong castle. The magnificent church of St. Martin contains many beautiful paintings and curiosities; and the mint is esteemed one of the finest buildings of the kind in Germany. In 1743 it was taken by the Austrians, and in 1796 by the French. It is seated on the river Ills, 40 m E Nurenberg. Lon. 12 0 E, lat. 49 27 N.

Ambrieux, a town of France, in the department of Ain, 25 m SE Lyon.

Ambert, a town of France, in the department of Puy de Dome. There are numerous papermakers in its vicinity, and it has a trade in coarse laces, canlets, ferrets, &c. It is seated in a beautiful valley, on the river Dore, 21 m E Issoire.

Ambleside, a town in Westmorland, with a market on Wednesday, and a manufacture of woollen cloth; seated on the Rotha, near the head of Windermere-water, 13 m NW Kendal, and 276 m NW London.

Ambleteuse, a seaport of France, in the department of Pas de Calais, defended by a battery. At this port Cesa: embarked his cavalry when he passed over into England; and here James II landed on his leaving England, in 1688. It is seated on the English channel, 8 m N Boulogne. Lon. 1 26 E, lat. 50 49 N.

Amboise, a town of France, in the department of Indre and Loire. The staircase of the castle is without steps, and may be ascended to the very top. Here Louis XI instituted the order of St. Michel. It is seated at the conflux of the Massée with the Loire, 12 m E by N Tours, and 118 s by W Paris.

Ambouray, a town of France, in the department of Ain, 20 m NW Belley, and 27 NE Lyon.

Ambouyna, an island in the Indian ocean, the Dutch metropolis of the Moluccas. It is 56 m in length, and divided, on the W side, by a large bay into two parts; the largest of which is called Hetou, and the other Leytimor. The surface is beautiful; woody hills and verdant plains being interspersed with hamlets, and enriched by cultivation. The chief products are cloves, nutmegs, sugar, coffee, and many delicious fruits. The principal animals are deer and wild hogs. The natives wear large whiskers, and their dress is only a slight piece of stuff wrapped round their middle. The men buy their wives of their parents, and if they prove barren, the marriage is void. They are generally Mohamedans; but there are some Christians among them. The English and Dutch had factories here at the beginning of the 17th century; but the Dutch expelled the English, and tortured and put to death many of them. The island was taken by the English, in 1796; restored by the treaty at Amiens, in 1802; and again taken by the English, in 1810. The chief town is of the same name, neatly built, and stands near the SW extremity. Lon. 127 20 E, lat. 4 20 S.

Ambrym, one of the New Hebrides, in the Pacific ocean, 50 m in circumference. Lon. 168 12 E, lat. 16 10 N.

Amedabad, a city of Hindoostan, the capital of Guzerat. The walls are 6 m in circumference, and contain 12 gates; but now not a quarter of the area is inhabited. The mosque and tomb of the founder, Tatar Ahmed, are built of stone and marble, the last of exquisite workmanship. It was taken by the English, in 1780, from the Poonah Mah-rattas, to whom it was restored in 1783. It is seated in a level country, on a navigable river that enters the gulf of Cambay, 320 m N Bombay. Lon. 72 27 E, lat. 23 18 N.

Amelia, an island on the coast of E Florida, 13 m long and 2 broad; extending, about 2 m from the continent, between the rivers St. Mary and Nassau. It is very fertile, and has a town with an excellent harbour, at its N end. Lon. 81 35 W, lat. 30 42 N.

Amelia, a town of Italy, in the duchy of Spoleto, seated on a mountain between the Tiber and Nira, 20 m SW Spoleto, and 45 N Rome.

Amelia, a town of S Carolina, seated on the Santee, 26 m SE Columbia.

AMERICA, one of the four grand divisions of the world, and by much the largest; bounded on all sides by the ocean. It took its name from Americus Vespucius, a Florentine, who having accompanied Ojeda, a Spanish adventurer, to America, in 1497, drew up an amusing history of his voyage, in which it was insinuated, that the glory of having first discovered the continent of the new world belonged to him. This was in part believed; the country began to be called after the name of its supposed first discoverer; and the unaccountable caprice of mankind has perpetuated the error. But America was first discovered by Christopher Columbus, a Genoese, in 1492. It is called the New World with great propriety; for not only the men, but the birds and beasts, differ, in some respects, from those known before. It has likewise a great number of trees and plants, that grew no where else before they were transmitted to other places. All the men, except the Esquimaux, near Greenland, seem to have the same origin; for they agree in every particular, from the strait of Magellan, in the S, to Hudson bay, in the N. Their skins, unless daubed with grease or oil, are of a red copper colour, and they have no beards, or hair on any other parts of their bodies, except their heads, where it is black, straight, and coarse. Many are the conjectures about the peopling of this vast continent, and almost as various as their authors. America is so long, that it takes in not only all the torrid, but also the temperate and part of the frigid zones. The cold of America is much greater than in the countries of Europe, under the same latitude. A continent so extensive must naturally be various in its soil and productions. In the most northern and most southern parts, the countries are cold, sterile, and desert; while in the centre are found the richest metals, minerals, precious stones, and abundance of the most valuable and useful commodities. It is hard to say how many different languages there are in America, a vast number being spoken by the different people in different parts; and as to religion, there is no giving any tolerable account of it in general, though some of the most civilized of the aborigines seem to have worshipped the sun. The principal motive of the Spaniards in sending so many colonists here was the thirst of gold; and indeed they and the Portuguese are possessed of all the best parts where it is found in the greatest plenty. This vast continent is divided into North and South America, which are joined by the isthmus of Darien. It has the loftiest mountains in the world, such as the Andes and Allegany, which form immense ranges; and the most stupendous rivers, such as the Amazon, Plata, Oronoko, Mississippi, Missouri, Arkansas, Ohio, St. Lawrence, Hudson, Delaware, Susquehanna, Potomac, &c. Beside the aborigines, who inhabit the interior parts, and the United States of America, who possess Louisiana, and some of the finest provinces, the different European powers have rich and flourishing colonies here. In N America, Great Britain possesses New Britain, Upper and Lower Canada, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick; Spain has East and West Florida, Mexico, New Mexico, New Albany, and California; and Russia has some settlements on Cook inlet. In S America, Spain possesses Terra Firma, New Granada, Peru, Chili, and Paraguay; Portugal has Brasil, and part of Amazonia and Guayana; and Great Britain and Spain have the remainder of Guayana.

Amiens, a city of France, and an episcopal see, capital of the department of Somme. The cathedral is a stately structure; beside which there are 10 parish churches, one in the suburbs, and an academy of belles lettres. Three branches of the river Somme pass through this city, and afterward unite. It was taken by the Spaniards in 1597, but retaken by Henry IV, who built a citadel. It has manufactures of linen and woollen cloth, which employ, in the city and adjacent country, 30,000 people. A treaty of peace was concluded here in 1802, between Spain, Holland, France, and England. It is 20 m SE Abbeville, and 75 N Paris. Lon. 2 18 E, lat. 49 54 N.

Amlwich, a town of Wales, on the NW coast of Anglesea, with a harbour for small vessels. In 1768, when the Parys mines were opened, it did not contain above six houses; and in 1801 they amounted to 1025. The church was erected by the Parys Mine Company, who have also greatly improved the harbour. It is 25 m W Beaumaris, and 275 NW London. See Parys.

ment of Amstel. Next to London, it is deemed the most commercial city in the world, and is supposed to contain 212,000 inhabitants. The walls are high and well fortified; and the bridge, which joins the rampart, is built over the river Amstel. Few cities have their public buildings so fine, numerous, and well kept. Here are many handsome churches, colleges, and hospitals for persons of all religions and countries. The exchange is one of the principal ornaments of the city, and the harbour is one of the finest in Europe. The foundation of this town is laid upon piles, driven into a morass, and under the stadthouse alone are 13,659. The streets are broad and well paved, and most of them have canals, with rows of trees on each side; but there are no spacious public places, or squares. It surrendered to the king of Prussia in 1787, when that prince invaded Holland, in favour of the stadtholder; it received the French troops in 1795, without any resistance; and in Dec. 1813, it was the first place that declared for the restoration of the house of Orange. It is seated at the conflux of the Amstel and Wye, 70 m NW Cleve, and 80 N by E Antwerp. Lon. 4° 52' E, lat. 52° 22' N.

Amsterdam, and St. Paul, two islands in the Indian ocean, lying in the same longitude of, at 40 m distance. Their names are reversed by navigators, but most of them call the northern one St. Paul, and the southern Amsterdam. The latter is high land, and upward of 4 m long and 2 broad. It has evident marks of volcanic eruption in every part, and almost wholly covered with a deep fertile soil, but is destitute of trees. On the E side is a great crater, into which the sea has made a narrow and shallow entrance: its shelving sides are 700 feet in perpendicular height, in which, and in the causeway dividing it from the sea, are several hot springs of fresh water. St. Paul, or the northern island, presents no very high land, or any rise in a conic form. It is covered with shrubs and low trees, but has no convenient landing-place. Lon. 77° 48' E, lat. 37° 51' S.

Ancona, a city of Italy, capital of the marquisate of Ancona, and a bishop's see, with a citadel on a hill. The cathedral stands upon another hill, and the houses extend down the side of the eminence toward the gulf of Venice. Clement XII built a mole, to render the harbour safe; it is erected on the ruins of the ancient mole, raised by Trajan, and is above 2000 feet in length. Near this stands the beautiful triumphal arch of Trajan. Here likewise Clement erected a lazaretto, which advances a little way into the sea, in the form of a pentagon. Great numbers of Jews are settled in this city, where they have a synagogue; and they have the principal share of its commerce. Ancona was taken in 1796 by the French, who surrendered it to the Austrians in 1799. It is 116 m N by E Rome. Lon. 13 29 E, lat. 43 38 N.

Andalusia, a province of Spain, which, in its largest sense, is divided into Upper and Lower: Upper Andalusia, comprehends the province of Granada; and Lower Andalusia, the districts of Seville, Cordova, and Jaen. Andalusia, in a restricted sense (excluding Granada) is 270 m long and 80 broad; bounded on the N by Estremadura and Mancha, E by Murcia, S by Granada and the Mediterranean, and W by the Atlantic and Portugal. The Guadalquivir runs through its whole length; and it is the most fertile and trading country in Spain. The capital is Seville.

Andalusia, New; see Paria.

Andaman Islands, several islands on the E side of the bay of Bengal. The largest, called Great Andaman, is 120 m long and 16 broad, indented by deep bays affording good harbours, and intersected by vast creeks, one of which passes quite through the island, and at high water is navigable for small vessels. The forests afford some precious trees, as ebony and the Nicobar bread-fruit; and the edible birds-nests abound here. The only quadrupeds seem to be wild hogs, monkeys, and rats. The inhabitants are in a state of barbarism, and live chiefly on fish, fruits, and herbs; they perfectly resemble Negros, and their canoes are of the rudest kind. In 1793, the English made a settlement on the N end of Great Andaman, the largest island, which is called Port Cornwallis, and has a commodious harbour to shelter ships during the NE monsoon. Great quantities of timber are collected here, which are formed into vast rafts, and floated hence to Dordrecht, in Holland. It is seated on the Rhine, 10 m NW Coblenz.

Andero, St.; see Santander.

Andes, or Cordilleras, a grand chain of mountains in S America, extending 4300 m along the coast of the Pacific ocean, from the isthmus of Darien to the strait of Magellan. The greatest width of these mountains is 60 m, where they divide into two branches; being in some parts 36 m from the sea-coast, and in others approaching it within 15 m. They are much superior in height to any other mountains; for the plain of Quito, which may be considered as the base of the Andes, is elevated further above the sea than the top of the Pyrenees. They may be literally said to hide their heads in the clouds: the storms often roll, and the thunder bursts below their summits, which, though exposed to the rays of the sun in the torrid zone, are always covered with snow. The highest part of this chain rises from the plain of Quito, and the loftiest mountains are from 18 to 21,000 feet above the level of the sea: the medium height under the equator may be reckoned at 14,000 feet. The Andes contain numerous volcanos, many of them constantly burning, and some of the lower ones ejecting lava and other matter. They are clad with immense forests; and abound in gold, silver, and other metals, precious stones, marbles, and mineral earths of the rarest qualities. See Antisana and Chimborazo.

the conflux of the Loir with the Sarte, and is divided by the Mayenne into two parts; the western, which extends into a plain, and the eastern, which rises on the side of a hill. Its environs present a view of numerous country houses, upward of 100 windmills, and eminences that produce good white wine. The cathedral is an elegant structure; and in it is the tomb of Rene, king of Sicily. Here is a considerable manufacture of handkerchiefs and canvases; and the slate quarries, at the extremity of the suburb of Bressigny, yield an important article of commerce. The castle, flanked by 18 round towers, is situate on a rock. It is 50 m ENZ Nantes, and 175 SW Paris. Lon. 0 33 W, lat. 47 28 N.

Anghiera, a town of Italy, in Milanese, on the E side of the lake Maggiore, 30 m NW Milan.

Anglen, or Angelen, a small country of Denmark, in the duchy of Sleswick. Many authors suppose that from the people of this country the English originated; being called in to assist the Britons against the invaders from Norway, they in process of time became masters of the country, and gave it the name of England.

Anglesey, an island, and the most northern county of Wales, 24 m long and 18 broad, containing 257,280 acres. It sends two members to parliament; is divided into six hundreds, and 77 parishes; and has two market-towns. The number of inhabitants was 33,806 in 1801, and 37,045 in 1811. It is separated from Carnarvonshire by a narrow channel called Menai, which passes from St. George channel, by Carnarvon and Bangor, to the Irish sea. That part of the island which borders this strait is finely wooded, recalling to mind its ancient state, when it was the celebrated seat of the Druids, whose terrific religious rites were performed in the gloom of the thickest woods. Rude mounds and heaps of stones, said to be druidical remains, are still to be seen: but a little way within, the whole appears a naked tract, without trees or hedges, watered by numerous rills, fertile in grass and corn, and abounding in cattle. This island produces vast quantities of copper and sulphur (see Parys) and in the NW part is a quarry of green marble, intermixed with asbestos. Beaumaris is the county-town, but Holyhead is the largest.

Antrim, a county of Ireland, 46 m long and 27 broad; bounded on the N and \times by the sea, S by Down, and W by Londonderry. It is divided into 16 parishes, which include 170,000 inhabitants. This county is much encumbered with bogs and morasses, though it enjoys a tolerable air. It has two great natural curiosities: Lough Neagh, a large lake, the waters of which are of a petrifying quality; and the Giants Causeway, consisting of lofty pillars of basalt, all of angular shapes, from three to eight sides, and extending 3 m along the seashore. The linen manufacture is carried on very extensively in this county. It sends five members to parliament. The principal rivers are the Bann and Lagan. The assizes are held at Carrickfergus.

Antrum, a mountain in Valais, by which is a passage into the valley of Milanese.

Antwerp, a city of the Netherlands, bishop's see, and now in the department of Two Brabant, on the Scheldt, which is wide, and large vessels may lie at the quay. In 1568 it was taken by the Flemish commander, who retained 200,000 inhabitants. In the civil wars, caused by the revolt of the province, Philip II, drove the town into the sea. It now contains only 10,000 inhabitants, who carry on some commerce, particularly of lace and linens. The town is a fine structure, and the remains of the Flemish masters of the fine arts are many fine palaces and churches. The town was destroyed and burnt, and from Antwerp Gresham took the name. London, now serves as an academy of the fine arts, architecture, and painting. The townhouse, in the place, is a noble structure. The principal street is a cruciform street, on a magnificent height, on a mountain which was made from a dike. The cruel duke of Alva himself had set up in the town. The cathedral is esteemed one of the finest fortresses of the Low Countries. Antwerp was taken by the French in 1585, after a long and bloody siege. It has been more easily since, and was retaken by the French in 1794. It is 10 m from Amsterdam and 65 \times Amsterdam. Lon. 51 13 N.

Antrum, a mountain of the Swiss Alps, in Valais, by which there is a passage into the valley of Antrona, in Milanese.

Antwerp, a city of Brabant, lately a bishop's see, and now the capital of the department of Two Nethes. It stands on the Scheldt, which is here 400 yards wide, and large vessels may come up to the quay. In 1568 it was the chief mart of Flemish commerce, and then contained 200,000 inhabitants; but the civil wars, caused by the tyranny of Philip II, drove the trade to Amsterdam. It now contains only 50,000 inhabitants, who carry on some commerce, and a few flourishing manufactures, particularly of lace and linen. The cathedral is a fine structure, and contains an assemblage of paintings by the greatest masters of the Flemish school; and there are many fine paintings in the other churches. The exchange, once so thronged, and from which sir Thomas Gresham took the model of that for London, now serves for the accommodation of an academy for painting, sculpture, architecture, and the mathematics. The townhouse, in the great market-place, is a noble structure. In the principal street is a crucifix of bronze, 33 feet high, on a marble pedestal. This was made from a demolished statue of the cruel duke of Alba, which he himself had set up in the citadel. The citadel is esteemed one of the strongest fortresses of the Low Countries. Antwerp was taken by the prince of Parma in 1585, after a long and memorable siege. It has been frequently taken more easily since, the last time by the French in 1794. It is 22 m n Brussels, and 65 s Amsterdam. Lon. 4 23 e, lat. 51 13 n.

Apennines, a chain of mountains, in Europe, which begins near Oneglia, on the gulf of Genoa, passes round that gulf at no great distance from the sea, then proceeds e to the centre of Italy, and afterward divides that country in a mediate se direction to the extremities of the kingdom of Naples. Hence proceed all the rivers which water Italy. The Apennines are at first a branch of the Alps, and some of them above 5,000 feet high; but on the border of Parma they turn to the se, and afterward, in general, they may rather be regarded as hills than as mountains.

Apenrade, or Abenrade, a seaport of Denmark, in Sleswick, with a citadel. It is a place of considerable trade, seated at the end of a gulf of the Baltic, surrounded by hills, 27 m nwn Sleswick. Lon. 9 38 e, lat. 55 8 n.

Aphiom Karahissar, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in Natolia, built round a high rock, on the top of which is a fortress. It is 3 m in circumference, and has a considerable trade. The chief manufacture is carpets; and the country around produces much opium, called aphiom by the Turks. It stands on the

Arabia, a country of Asia, extending 1430 m in length and 1200 in breadth; bounded on the W by the Red sea and the isthmus of Suez, NE by the Euphrates, which divides it from Diarbekar, E by the gulfs of Persia and Ormus, and S by the Indian ocean. It is divided into three parts, Arabia Petrea, Deserta, and Felix, so named by Europeans from their supposed qualities. Arabia Petrea, much the smallest of the three, lies to the S of Syria, along the E coast of the Red sea. The N part is mountainous, and in general stony, sandy, and barren, but some parts yield sufficient nourishment for cattle, whose milk and camel's flesh is the chief food of its few inhabitants. Arabia Deserta lies S of Syria, and E of Arabia Petrea. It is for the most part desert, being intersected by barren mountains, and many of the plains nothing but great sands and heaths; but there are some plains and vallies that feed great flocks of sheep and goats; there are also great numbers of ostriches, and a fine breed of camels in several places. Arabia Felix, so called on account of its fertility with regard to the rest, lies to the S of Arabia Deserta, between the Red sea, the Indian ocean, and the Persian gulf. It is by far the most considerable part, and though the centre is occupied by very dry deserts, there are many rich provinces on the coasts, producing a variety of fruits, honey, wax, cinnamon, cassia, manna, spikenard, frankincense, myrrh, and coffee, of which latter prodigious quantities are exported. The Arabs are of a middle stature and brown complexion; and have always a grave and melancholy air, which, aided by the imposing aspect of their beards, gives a dignity in their manner that is very striking. They live in tribes amicably, consider hospitality as a religious duty, and always act with kindness to their slaves and inferiors. Selfishness, the vice of civilized nations, seldom degrades an Arab; that drunkenness and gaming are unknown among them. They derive their subsistence from their flocks, from hunting, and from what they acquire by plunder. They acknowledge no sovereign but the emir, or leading sheik, of their tribe, who is their natural prince, and to whom they pay obedience. They have also sheiks, or chiefs, of an advanced age, whom they often consult, and whose advice they follow. The dress of the Arabs consists of a white robe, bound round with a broad leather girdle, fastened by a strong buckle or large clasp. Their drawers are made of linen, and descend to the lower part of the leg. They wear a kind of red cap on the head; and sometimes they wear slippers, after the manner of the Turks, but are generally in half boots that they may be ready to get on horseback. Winter and summer they wear a large cloak, striped black and white, made of the hair of goats or some other animal. Their emir's dress is in the same manner, except that their cloaks are for the most part all black. The Arabs in the deserts live in tents, and remove from place to place, partly for the sake of pasture, and partly to lie in wait for the caravans, which they often rob, as they travel over from Bussara to Aleppo, and from Cairo to Mecca. The famous Mohamed was a native of this country; and his followers, soon after his death, conquered a great part of Asia, Africa, and Europe, establishing their religion wherever they came.

Aracan, or Reccan, a fertile country of Asia, bounded on the NW by Chittagong, NE by Cassay, E and SE by Birmah, and SW by the gulf of Bengal. The rainy season continues from April to October; and the rest of the year is called summer. The inhabitants are idolaters. The women are tolerably fair; but the longest ears are reckoned the most beautiful, and in these they wear many rings. They are a dastardly race of people, and have only courage to attack defenceless merchants and boatmen. There are such numbers of elephants, buffaloes, and tigers, that but few places are inhabited, on account of the ravages made by these animals. The commodities are salt, elephants teeth, bees wax, and rice; but its trade was never very considerable. Aracan was long an independent nation, governed by a king; but it was subdued by the Birmans in 1783, and is now a province of that empire.

Aracan, the capital of the country of the same name, with an extensive fort. The river Aracan runs through the city, and waters the streets by means of several arms or canals, into which it is divided. The inhabitants are about 100,000. It was taken by the Birmans in 1783. ASIA, one of the four grand divisions of the world; bounded on the N by the Frozen ocean, E by the Pacific ocean, S by the Indian ocean, and W by the Red sea, the Mediterranean, the Black sea, the Don, the Volga, the Ural mountains, and the river Cira. It extends 6,050 m from the Darlanelles on the W, to the E shore of Tartary; and 5,380 m from the most southern part of Malacca to the most northern cape of Nova Zembla; being superior in extent, as well as in many other respects, to Africa and Europe. This quarter of the globe has been the scene of the most important transactions respecting the human race; as the creation of man, the establishment of the Hebrew nation and religion, the promulgation of Christianity, &c. In early times, this vast extent of territory was successively governed by the Assyrians, Medes, Persians, and Greeks; but the regions of India and China were little known to Alexander, or the conquerors of the ancient world. On the decline of these empires, great part of Asia submitted to the Romans; and afterward, in the middle ages, the Saracens founded in Asia, Africa, and Europe, a more extensive empire than that of the Roman when in its height of power. Azores, or Western Islands, a group of islands in the Atlantic, between 25 and 30 W lon. and 37 and 40 N lat. 900 m W of Portugal. They are nine in number, namely, St. Maria, St. Michael, Tercera, St. George, Graciosa, Fayal, Pico, Flores, and Corro. They were discovered in 1439, by John Nanderberg, a merchant of Bruges, who, in a voyage to Lisbon, was driven to them by stress of weather. On his arrival at Lisbon, he boasted of his discovery; on which the Portuguese set sail, took possession of the islands, and called them the Azores, from the number of hawks found among them. Their rugged precipices and mountains, many of whose summits are conical, exhibit indications of the violent convulsions by which, at several distant periods, they have been agitated. They enjoy a great portion of clear and serene weather, and the climate is highly favorable to human health. The soil is in general fertile, abounding in corn, grapes, oranges, lemons, and other fruits, and feeding many cattle and sheep. The woods and high lands present a multitude of birds of different descriptions. No poisonous animal, it is said, is to be found in the Azores.

Benares, a populous city of Hindoostan, capital of a country of the same name. It is celebrated as the ancient seat of Braminical learning, and built on the left bank of the Ganges. Several Hindoo temples embellish the high banks of the river; and many other public and private buildings are magnificent. The streets are narrow; the houses high, and some of them inhabited by different families; but the more wealthy Gentoos live in detached houses with an open court, surrounded by a wall. Nearly in the centre of the city is a considerable Mohamedan mosque, built by emperor Aurungzebe, who destroyed a magnificent Hindoo temple to make room for it; and round the city are many ruins of buildings, the effects of Mohamedan intolerance. An insurrection here, in 1781, had nearly proved fatal to the English interests in Hindoostan; in consequence of which, Cheyt Sing, the rajah, was deposed in 1783. Benares is 136 m W by S Patna, and 380 m WNW Calcutta. Lon. 83 10 E, lat. 25 20 N.

Bengal, a country of Hindoostan, 400 m long and 300 broad; bounded on the w by Orissa and Bahar, n by Bootan, e by Assam and Cassay, and s by the bay of Bengal. It consists of one vast plain, of the most fertile soil, which, in common with other parts of Hindoostan, annually renders two, and, in some parts, even three crops. The principal products are sugar, silk, fruit, pepper, opium, rice, saltpetre, lac, and civet. It is compared to Egypt for fertility; the Ganges dividing here into several streams, and, like the Nile, annually overflowing the country. Bengal has been subject, ever since 1765, to the English E India Company. Calcutta is the capital.

Bengasi, a seaport of Barbary, in Baria, defended by a wall and castle toward the sea, and surrounded by a luxuriant country. It stands on the w side of an excellent harbour, 145 m wsw Derna. Lon. 19 20 E, lat. 32 18 N.

Benguela, a kingdom of Africa, in Congo, bounded on the n by Angola, e by Bemba, s by parts unknown, and w by the Atlantic. The climate is very pernicious to Europeans. The men wear skins about their waist, and beads round their neck; and are armed with darts headed with iron, and with bows and arrows. The women wear a collar of copper round their neck; a kind of cloth, made of the bark of a tree, round their waist; and copper rings on their legs.

Benin, a kingdom of Guinea, bounded on the NE by unknown parts, SE by Biafara and Majombo, and s and w by the gulf of Guinea and Dahoany. The country exhibits many beautiful landscapes; but the air is noxious, near the coast, on account of the gross vapours from the marshes. Oranges and lemons grow on the sides of the roads; cotton abounds every where; and the pepper produced here is smaller than that of the Indies. Among the animals are elephants in great number, tigers, leopards, stags, wild boars, civet and mountain cats, horses, hares, and hairy sheep; a vast number of serpents and other reptiles; and the principal birds are paroquets, pigeons, partridges, storks, and ostriches. The dress of the natives is neat. The rich wear white calico or cotton petticoats, but the upper part of the body is commonly naked. The women use great art in dressing their hair, which they reduce into a variety of forms. The people are skilful in making various sorts of dyes; and they manufacture and export cotton cloths. Polygamy is allowed, and the number of wives is limited by the state of their circumstances only. Though jealous of each other, they offer their wives to Europeans. The religion is paganism. The king is absolute, and has a great number of petty princes under him.

Benin, the capital of the kingdom of the same name. In the streets, which are long and broad, are many shops filled with European merchandize, as well as with the commodities of the country. The houses are all built of clay, and covered with reeds, straw, or leaves. The royal palace is of vast extent, but neither elegant nor commodious. All male slaves here are foreigners; for the inhabitants cannot be sold for slaves, only they bear the name of the king's slaves. Benin is situate on the river Benin or Formosa, 80 m from its mouth. Lon. 6 24 E, lat. 6 50 N.

Birmah, an extensive empire in Asia, to the E of the bay of Bengal; containing the kingdoms of Birmah, Cassay, Aracan, and Pegu, and all the W coast of Siar. The kingdom of Birmah, frequently called Ava, from the name of its ancient capital, has Pegu on the S, Assam on the N, Aracan and Cassay on the W, and China and Upper Siam on the E. This kingdom was conquered, in 1752, by the king of Pegu, who carried the Birman monarch prisoner to Pegu, and caused him to be murdered there in 1754. But Alompra, a Birman of low distinction, who was continued by the conqueror as chief at Monchabon, a small place to the N of Ava, revolted against the Peguese, got possession of Ava, in 1753, and after continued battles, with various success, became the conqueror of Pegu in 1757. This deliverer of his country continued in a state of warfare to his death in 1760; and his successors have added the other countries, which now form the Birman empire. The climate of Birmah is very salubrious; the seasons being regular, and the extremes of heat and cold seldom experienced. The soil is remarkably fertile, producing rice, sugar-canes, tobacco, indigo, cotton, and all the tropical fruits in perfection; and on the banks of the Irrawaddy, which runs through the whole country, is produced pure amber and the finest teak timber in the world. The kingdom of Birmah abounds in minerals; it has mines of gold, silver, rubies, and sapphires; and affords amethysts, garnets, chrysolites, jasper, loadstone, and marble. The general disposition of the Birmans is strikingly contrasted with that of the natives of Hindoostan, though separated only by a narrow ridge of mountains, in several places admitting of an easy intercourse. The Birmans are a lively inquisitive race, active, irascible, and impatient; but the character of their Bengal neighbours is known to be the reverse. The passion of jealousy, which prompts most eastern nations to immure their women, and surround them with guards, seems to have little influence on the minds of the Birmans; for their wives and daughters have as free intercourse with the other sex as the rules of European society admit. The Birmans are extremely fond both of poetry and music; and their language has been highly cultivated in composition, for they have numerous works in religion, history, and science. Their religion is, in fact, that of the Hindoos, though they are not votaries of Brama, but sectaries of Boodh, which admits not of the distinction of castes, or the separation of the people into hereditary professions. Their system of jurisprudence is distinguished above any other Hindoo commentary for perspicuity and good sense. The emperor of Birmah is a despotic monarch, and like the sovereign of China, acknowledges no equal: the prevailing characteristic of his court is pride. There are no hereditary dignities or employments in the government; for all honours and offices, on the demise of the possessor, revert to the crown. The capital of the kingdom, and metropolis of the empire, is Ummerapoura.

Birmingham, a town in Warwickshire, with a market on Thursday. It is a place of great antiquity, and stands on the side of a hill, forming nearly a half-moon. The lower part is filled with workshops and warehouses, and consists chiefly of old buildings. The upper part contains many new and regular streets, and a handsome square. It has two churches; one in the lower part of the town, which, though lately cased with brick, is a very ancient building, with a lofty spire; the other, a grand modern structure, having a square stone tower, with a cupola and turret: it has also two chapels, several meeting-houses, a large school endowed by Edward VI, an elegant theatre, and the completest set of baths in the kingdom. The hardware manufactures of Birmingham have been noted for a considerable period; but of late years, by great additions to its trade from a vast variety of articles, such as metal buttons, buckles, plated goods, japanned and paper ware, &c. It has risen greatly in population. The number of inhabitants was 73,670 in 1801, and 83,753 in 1811. It is plentifully supplied with coal by means of a canal to Wednesbury; and it has a communication with the Grand Trunk from the Trent to the Severn, by a branch passing by Wolverhampton. The Birmingham goods are exported in great quantities to foreign countries, where, in point of cheapness and show united, they are unrivalled. See Scho. Birmingham is 18 m NW Coventry and 109 London. Lon. 1° 50' W, lat. 52° 10' N.

Bologna, a city of Italy, capital of Bolognese, and an archbishop's see. The university is one of the most ancient and celebrated in Europe; and the Institutio di Bologna is a magnificent building, where the various arts and sciences have their respective halls. The church of St. Petronius is the largest in Bologna; and on the pavement of this, Cassini drew his meridian line. There are above 160 other churches, most of them full of paintings by celebrated artists, and particularly Albano. The school of painting is immortalized by the number of great masters it has produced; and the public theatre is one of the largest and most beautiful in Italy. Many of the palaces of the nobility are furnished in a magnificent taste, having been built and ornamented when the finest works of architecture and painting could be procured on easier terms. Most of the public streets are accommodated with covered walks; but the buildings in general are not celebrated for beauty. The inhabitants, estimated at 70,000, carry on a considerable trade in rich silks and velvets. The surrounding country produces immense quantities of oil, wine, flax, and hemp, and furnishes all Europe with confectiary, distilled waters, and essences. The river Rheno, which runs near the city, turns 400 mills for the silk works; and there is a canal hence to the Po. The celebrated church of la Madonna di St.

Bootan, a country of Asia, between Napani, Bengal, Assam, and Tibet, of which last it is a feudatory. It abounds in mountains covered with verdure, and rich with abundant forest-trees: there is scarcely a mountain whose base is not washed by some torrent, and many of the loftiest bear populous villages, amid orchards and plantations, on their summits and on their sides. The southernmost ridge of the Bootan mountains rises near a mile and a half above the plains of Bengal, in a horizontal distance of only 15 miles; and from the summit the astonished traveller looks on the plains below as on an extensive ocean. The Bootees are much fairer and more robust than their neighbours the Bengalees, with broader faces and higher cheek bones: their hair is invariably black, and cut short; their eyes small and black, with long pointed corners; and their skins remarkably smooth. The houses are built on props, though the country is hilly, and ascended by a ladder: the lower part, closed on all sides, serves for holding stores, and accommodating hogs, cows, and other animals. The capital is Tassafudon.

Borneo, an island in the Indian ocean, discovered by the Portuguese in 1511. It is of an oval figure, 900 m long and 600 broad. The inland country is mountainous; but toward the sea low and marshy; especially on the northern side, where it is covered with forests of large trees, which penetrate for scores of miles toward the centre of the island. It produces rice, pepper, sago, diamonds, gold, pearls, canes, bees-wax, camphor, dragonsblood, edible birds-nests, and sandal wood. The orang-outang abounds in this island. The English had factories here; but differences arising between them and the natives, they were driven away, or murdered, in 1706. The Dutch are now the only Europeans who have settlements here, and their chief factories are at the mouth of the Banjer and the Pontiana. The seacoast is usually overflowed half the year, and when the waters go off, the earth is covered with mud; for which reason some of the houses are built on floats, and others on pillars. The muddy flats are divided by rivers, which branch into numerous canals, and are the only roads into the interior parts. The countries on the coast are inhabited by a mixture of Malays, Moors, Javanese, and Macassars. The real natives of this island are the Biadjoo, or Dajakkefe, who are blacks and pagans, and live in the interior part, on the W side of the Banjer; but their country is little known. They are of middle stature, and well made, go almost naked, and are tattooed blue. They come down the Banjer in rude boats to the port of Bangermassing, with gold dust and other articles; the Moors called Banjareens being the factors. The chiefs extract one or two of the fore teeth, substituting others of gold; and strings of the teeth of tigers, a real badge of courage, are worn round the neck. The coast of this island is divided into several kingdoms, the principal of which are Borneo and Banjer-massing.

Borneo, a kingdom on the NW side of the island of Borneo, governed by a sultan, who lives in great state. The capital, of the same name, is large and populous, with a good harbour. Lon. 112 27 E, lat. 4 55 N.

Bornholm, an island of Denmark, in the Baltic, of an oval form, about 22 m in circumference, and nearly surrounded by rocks. The soil is stony, but fertile, with excellent pasture; and there are mines of coal, and quarries of marble. It lies 10 m SE of Schonen, in Sweden. The chief town is Ronne.

groland, having Cassina on the w, and Nubia on the e. It consists of a number of oases, or fertile spots, interspersed with arid wastes. The climate is said to be characterized by excessive, though not by uniform, heat. Two seasons, one commencing soon after the middle of April, the other at the same period in October, divide the year. The first is introduced by violent winds from the s^e and s^w; with intense heat, a deluge of sultry rain, and such tempests of thunder and lightning, as destroy multitudes of the cattle and many of the people. At the commencement of the second season, the ardent heat subsides; the air becomes soft and mild, and the weather perfectly serene. Maize, rice, the horsebean of Europe, the common kidneybean, cotton, hemp, and indigo, are cultivated; and there are figs, grapes, apricots, pomegranates, lemons, limes, and melons. The most valuable tree is called Redeyuah, in form and height like an olive, the leaf resembling that of a lemon, and bearing a nut, the kernel and shell of which are in great estimation; the first as a fruit, the last on account of the oil it produces. Horses, asses, mules, dogs, bees, goats, sheep, and camels (the flesh of which is much esteemed) are the common animals. Bees are so numerous, that the wax is often thrown away as an article of no value. The game consists of partridges, wild ducks, and ostriches, the flesh of which is prized above every other. The other animals are the lion, leopard, civet cat, wolf, fox, elephant, buffalo, antelope, and cameleopardalis; and there are many snakes, scorpions, centipedes, and toads. The complexion of the natives is black; but they are not of the Negro cast. The dress of the greater part consists of shirts of blue cotton manufactured in the country, of a red cap brought from Tripoli, and a white muslin turban from Cairo. Nose-rings of gold are worn by the principal people. But the only covering of the poorer sort is a kind of girdle for the waist. In their manners the people are courteous and humane: they are passionately fond of play; the lower classes of draughts, and the higher excel in chess. More than 30 different languages are said to be spoken in Bornou and its dependencies; and the reigning religion is the Mohamedan. The monarchy is elective. On the death of the sovereign, the privilege of choosing a successor from among his sons is conferred on three persons, whose age and character for wisdom are denoted by the title of elders. The sultan is said to have 500 ladies in his seraglio; and that his stud likewise contains 500 horses. His dominions extend beyond the desert into the fertile country of Negroland, of which he possesses a large portion. He has a vast army, which consists almost entirely of horse: the sabre, pike, and bow, are their weapons of offence, and a shield of hides is their armour.

Bornou, the capital of the empire of the same name, with a palace like a citadel. The whole city is surrounded by a high wall, encompassed with a ditch; but the other towns of the kingdom are open. The principal trade is in gold dust, slaves, horses, ostriches feathers, salt, and civet. It is seated on the Gazel, 750 m ENE Cassina. Lon. 23 5 E, lat. 19 45 N.

Borodino, a village of Russia, in the government of Moscow, on the river Kaloya, which flows to the Moskwa, 8 m W by N Mojaisk. Here, on Sept. 7, 1812, was a great battle between the Russians, under prince Kutoussoff, and the French, under Bonaparte; the former lost upward of 25,000 men, and the French a far greater number, with above 20,000 horses: both sides claimed the victory, but the French retreated from the field.

Boroughbridge, a borough in N Yorkshire, with a market on Saturday, and a trade in hardware. Here Edward 11, in 1322, defeated the rebel earl of Lancaster. It is seated on the Ure, over which is a stone bridge, 18 m SW York, and 256 N by W London.

Borriano, a town of Spain, in Valencia, at the mouth of the Millas, 21 m N Valencia.

Borrowdale, a village in Cumberland, 6 m S Keswick. It stands at the head of a narrow and crooked valley, and is famous for mines of wadd, or black-lead, a substance almost peculiar to England.

Borrowstonness, or Bonesf, a town of Scotland, in Linlithgowshire, with a safe and commodious harbour on the frith of Forth. It has a considerable trade in ship-building and coal, and extensive manufactures of salt and stoneware. It is 5 m N Linlithgow, and 18 W by N Edinburgh.

Boston, a borough in Lincolnshire, governed by a mayor, with a market on Wednesday and Saturday, and a trade in wool. It is seated on the Witham, not far from its entrance into the sea; but its harbour can admit vessels of inferior burden only. It has a navigation to Lincoln, partly by the Witham, and partly by a canal; and there is another canal to Bourn. The lofty tower of its large Gothic church is a noted seamark. The number of inhabitants was 5926 in 1801, and 8180 in 1811. It is 37 m SE Lincoln, and 113 N London. Lon. 05 E, lat. 53 1 N.

Boston, the capital of Massachusetts, and of Suffolk county, seated on a peninsula, at the W end of Massachusetts bay, covered by numerous islands and rocks, and defended by a castle. The peninsula is formed by the harbour and the river Charles, and contains about 700 acres; it is connected to the mainland, on the S, by an isthmus a mile in length, and about a quarter where broadest. The city extends in the form of a crescent about the harbour; and the country rising gradually beyond, affords a delightful prospect. There is only one safe channel to approach the harbour, and that so narrow, that two ships can scarcely sail abreast. Within the harbour there is room for 500 ships to anchor; and at the Long Pier, which is near 2000 feet in length, ships of the greatest burden may come close. Most of the public buildings are handsome, and some of them elegant. Franklin Place is a great ornament to the town; it contains a monument of Dr. Franklin (who was born here) and is encompassed on two sides with buildings of superior elegance. On the W side of the town is the Mall, a beautiful public walk; and opposite it, on Beacon-hill, is a magnificent state-house. The streets are handsome, particularly that extending from the pier to the townhouse. Here are 19 edifices for public worship, belonging to sects of various denominations; seven free-schools, supported at the public expense; and two elegant bridges over Charles river, which have draws for the admission of vessels. One of them, called Charles River Bridge, connects the city with Charlestown; and the other, West Boston Bridge, 3483 feet in length, leads to Cambridge. In 1800 the number of inhabitants was 24,937, and now it is deemed to be upward of 30,000. The foreign and domestic trade is very considerable; and the principal manufactures consist of rum, loaf sugar, canvass, cordage, beer, pot and pearl ash, glass, tobacco, and chocolate. Fifteen of the islands in the harbour afford pasture and corn, and furnish agreeable places of resort in summer to parties of pleasure. In the neighbourhood of Bolton, the first hostilities commenced, in 1775, between the colonists, and the troops of the mother country, who evacuated the town in 1776. It is 252 m NE New York. Lon. 71 0 W, lat. 42 18 N.

Bosworth, Market, a town in Leicestershire, with a market on Wednesday. In its vicinity was fought the famous battle between Richard III, and the earl of Richmond, afterward Henry VII, in which the former lost his crown and life. It is seated on a hill, 13 m W Leicester, and 106 NNW London.

Botany Bay, a bay of New S Wales, discovered by Cook in 1770, and so called from the great quantity of herbs found on the shore. The promontories which form its entrance are named Cape Banks and Point Solander. It was originally fixed on for a colony of convicts from Great Britain, which, in the sequel, took place at Port Jackson, 13 m further to the N. Lon. 151 21 E, lat. 34 0 S.

Bothnia, East, a province of Sweden, in Finland, on the E side of the gulf of Bothnia, between the provinces of Kimi and Finland Proper and Russia. It is 300 m in length, and from 90 to 220 in breadth. On the seacoast, and toward the S, the land is low and marshy; and the summers are often so cold as to destroy great part of the crops. The inhabitants are thinly spread over this large space, the cattle small, and bears numerous. The principal exports are timber, butter, whale oil, pitch, and tar. This province is sometimes called Cajani. The capital is Uleaborg.

Bothnia, West, a province of Sweden, in Nordland, on the W coast of the gulf of Bothnia. It is 230 m in length, between the seacoast and Swedish Lapland, and from 25 to 50 in breadth. The soil is tolerably fertile, but sudden frosts in July often destroy the crops; and it has mines of copper and iron, and numerous forests. The chief articles of commerce are the skins of foxes, ermines, bears, wolves, reindeer, otters, &c. The capital is Uma.

Bothnia, Gulf of, a sea or large gulf, branching N from the Baltic, at the S of Aland, and bounded on the W, N, and E by the dominions of Sweden. On its coasts are many small islands.

with Africa; owing chiefly to the refreshing wind, which blows continually from the sea. The rivers annually overflow their banks, and the soil, in many places, is very rich. More sugar is brought from this country than from all other parts of the world. It produces tobacco, maize, several sorts of fruit, and medicinal drugs. Beside the valuable brasil wood there are spacious woods of citron, ebony, mastic, cotton, and five species of palm-trees. The mines of gold and diamonds, first opened in 1681, yield above five millions sterling annually, of which sum a fifth belongs to the crown. The cattle increase so prodigiously, that they are killed for their hides only, 20,000 being sent annually to Europe; and there is great plenty of deer, hares, and other game. In some of the provinces are found a great variety of noxious insects and reptiles, as the liboya, or roebuck snake, which is said to grow to the length of 30 feet; the rattle-snake; the ibibaboka, a serpent said to 21 feet long, whose bite is almost instant death. No country produces a greater number of beautiful birds; in particular the colibri, whose body is not much larger than that of a maybug, and which sings as harmoniously as a nightingale. The natives, who inhabit the inland parts, are people of different languages; but they all agree in wearing no clothes. They are of a copper colour, with long, coarse, black hair on their heads, but without any on the other parts of their bodies, like the rest of the Americans. They are strong, lively, and gay, and subject to few diseases. They love to adorn themselves with feathers, and are fond of feasts, at which they dance immoderately. They have no temples, nor any other sign of religion; and they make no manner of scruple to marry their nearest relations. They have huts made of the branches of trees, and covered with palm leaves. Their furniture consists chiefly in their hammocks, and dishes, or cups, made of calibashes, painted without of a red colour, and black within. Their knives are made of a sort of stone and split canes; and they have baskets of different sizes, chiefly made of palm leaves. Their arms are bows, arrows, and wooden clubs. When they travel, they fasten their hammocks between two trees, and sleep all night therein. The capital of the Portuguese settlements is St. Sebastian.

It was formerly fortified with walls, and had a castle, now in ruins. Here are manufactures of cloth, stockings, and iron tools; and the trade both by land and water is considerable. It is seated on the Severn, 23 m SE Shrewsbury, and 137 NW London. Lon. 2 28 W, lat. 52 36 N.

Bridgetown, the capital of the island of Barbados, situate in the inmost part of Carlisle bay, which is large enough to contain 500 ships, but the bottom is foul, and apt to cut the cables. This city was burnt down in 1688; and suffered also greatly by fires in 1756, 1766, and 1767. Before these fires it contained 1500 houses; and it has since been rebuilt. The streets are broad, the houses high, the wharfs and quays convenient, and the forts strong. The church is as large as some cathedrals. Here also is a free-school, an hospital, and a college; the latter erected by the society for propagating the gospel, pursuant to the will of colonel Codrington, who endowed it with 2000 l. a year. The town had scarcely risen from the calamities already mentioned, when it was torn from its foundations by a hurricane in 1780, in which many of the inhabitants perished. It is now restored. Lon. 59 50 W, lat. 13 5 N.

Brisgau, a territory of Suabia, on the E side of the Rhine, which separates it from France. The chief part belonged to the house of Austria; but by the treaty of Presburg, in 1805, it was ceded to the elector of Baden, who was formerly possessed of a few places. The chief town is Friburg.

Brisino, a town of Naples, in Capitanata, 11 m SSW Manfredonia.

Brisiac, a town of France, in the department of Mayenne and Loire, seated on the Aubence, 13 m S Angers.

Bristol, a city and seaport in Gloucestershire, with a market on Wednesday and Saturday. For wealth, trade, and population, it has long been reckoned the second in the kingdom; though Liverpool now claims the preeminence as a seaport alone. It is seated on the Avon, at the influx of the Frome, 10 m from the entrance of the Avon into the Bristol channel. The tide rising to a great height in these narrow rivers, brings vessels of considerable burden to the quay, which extends above a mile along the inner shores of the Frome and Avon; but at low water they lie aground in the mud. Here is a dock which will contain ten large ships, with a smaller one above the influx of the Frome. At the mouth of the Avon are several dockyards, and a very extensive floating dock. The city has 18 churches, beside the cathedral, a guildhall, a customhouse, and an exchange. The number of inhabitants was 63,645 in 1801, and 76,433 in 1811. Bristol is a county of itself, governed by a mayor, and has the assizes held here in the spring. Here are no less than 15 glass-houses; and the sugar-refinery is one of its principal manufactures. Brunswick, New, a British province in N America, separated from that of Nova Scotia, in 1784. It is 200 m long and 170 broad; bounded on the W by *N*ew England, N by Canada, E by the gulf of St. Lawrence, and S by Nova Scotia and the bay of Fundy. It has several lakes, and is well-watered by rivers. At the conclusion of the American war, the emigration of loyalists to this province was very great. The river St. John opens a vast extent of fine country, most of which is settled and under improvement. The upland is in general well wooded, and the lofty pines afford a considerable supply of masts for the royal navy. The chief place is the city of St. John, but the seat of government is at Fredericton.

Brussels, a fortified city of the Netherlands, capital of the department of Dyle, lately the capital of Brabant, and the seat of the governor of the Austrian Low Countries. It has many magnificent squares, public buildings, walks, and fountains. The Hotel de Ville, in the grand market-place, is a remarkable structure: the turret is 364 feet in height, and on the top is the figure of St. Michael, of copper gilt, 17 feet high, which turns with the wind. Here is a kind of nunnery, called the Beguinage, which is like a little town, and surrounded by a wall and a ditch: the women educated here are allowed to leave it when they choose to marry. Brussels is celebrated for its fine lace, camblets, and tapestry: and contains 80,000 inhabitants. It has a communication with the Scheldt by a canal, 20 m long. It was bombarded by Marshal Villeroy in 1695, by which 14 churches and 4000 houses were destroyed. It has been several times taken since; the last time

Buenos Ayres, a city and seaport, the capital of Paraguay, and a bishop's see. It is the seat of a viceroynalty, established in 1776, which includes the countries of Paraguay, Chaco, and Tucuman; the jurisdictions of Potosi, Plata, and St. Cruz, in Peru; and that of Mendoza, in Chili. The city is well fortified; and hither is brought a great part of the treasures and merchandise of Peru and Chili, which are exported to Spain. It was founded by Mendoza in 1535, but afterward abandoned; and in 1544, another colony of the Spaniards came here, who left it also; but it was rebuilt in 1582, and inhabited by Spaniards and the native Americans. It has an elegant cathedral, a small Indian church, two monasteries, five convents, a college, a beautiful square, and about 33,000 inhabitants. The trade is carried on with the provinces of Peru by means of carts drawn by oxen, which travel together in caravans. The country around is quite open and level, furnishing every species of American and European productions; but the most extraordinary circumstance is the propagation of cattle, which have multiplied so immensely that all are in common, and a great many are killed merely for their hides. Buenos Ayres was surrendered to the English in July 1806, but they were obliged to abandon it soon after. In July 1807 the English made an unsuccessful attack on this city. It is seated on the Plata, 220 m from the ocean, though the river is here 21 m in breadth. Lon. 58 31 W, lat. 34 35 S.

Burrampooter, or Megna, a river which rises in the mountains of Tibet, near the head of the Ganges. These two rivers, issuing from opposite sides of the same ridge of mountains, direct their course toward opposite quarters, till they are more than 1200 m asunder; and afterward meet in one point near the sea, each having performed a winding course of about 1400 m. From its source, the Burrampooter proceeds E through Tibet, where it is named Sappoo, or Zancin; that is, the River: after washing the border of the territory of Lassa, it proceeds SE to within 220 m of Yunan, the westernmost province of China: it then turns suddenly to the W, and passing through Assam, assumes the name of Burrampooter. It enters Bengal on the NE, makes a circuit round the western point of the Garrow Mountains, and then, altering its course to S, meets the Ganges about 40 m from the sea. During the last 60 m before its junction with the Ganges, it forms a stream which is regularly from 4 to 5 m wide.

Bursa, or Prusa, a city of Asiatic Turkey, in Natolia, built by Prusias king of Bythia. It was the capital of the Ottoman empire, before the taking of Constantinople; and it now contains about 60,000 inhabitants. It stands upon several little hills, at the bottom of Mount Olympus, and on the edge of a fine plain full of fruit-trees. So many springs proceed from the mount, that every house has its own fountain; and at its foot are splendid hot baths. The mosques are elegant, as are the caravansaries. Bury, a town in Lancashire, with a market on Thursday. Here are large manufactures of woollen and cotton; and some capital printing works near the town. The number of inhabitants was 7072 in 1801, and 8762 in 1811. It is seated on the Irwell, above the influx of the Roch, 9 m N by W Manchester, and 195 m NW London.

Bury St. Edmund, a borough in Suffolk, with a market on Wednesday and Saturday. It took its name from St. Edmund the king, who was buried here; and to his honour an abbey was founded, of which some noble ruins remain. Here are two parish-churches, which stand in one churchyard: in St. Mary's lies Mary queen of France, who was married to Charles Brandon duke of Suffolk. At this town the barons met, and entered into a league against king John. Henry VI called a parliament here in 1446, when Humphry duke of Gloucester was imprisoned, and he died here, as supposed, by poison.

The assizes for the county are held here; and it has a free-school founded by Edward VI. The number of inhabitants was 7655 in 1801, and 7986 in 1811. It is seated on the Larke, a branch of the Ouse, 25 m NW Ipswich, and 71 m NE London. Lon. 0 46 E, lat. 52 22 N.

Burgent, St. a village in Cornwall, 5 m WSW Penzance. It was once of great note, and had a college founded by king Athelstan. The church is spacious, and contains many curious relics of antiquity. In its neighbourhood are 19 large stones standing in a circle, 12 feet from each other, and in the centre is one much larger than the rest.

Burgeo, a ridge of mountains in Portugal, in Beira, extending N from the river Mondego; noted for a battle, in 1810, in which the French were defeated by the British and Portuguese.

Bushier, or Abuschahr, the principal port of Persia, in Faristan, governed by a sheik. It occupies the point of a peninsula, in the gulf of Persia, and forms a triangle, of which the base on the land side is alone fortified. At unequal distances along the walls are 12 towers, two of which form the town-gate. The streets are very narrow, and the inhabitants estimated at 10,000. Here are seven mosques, two hammams or baths, and two caravansaries. The English East-India Company have a factory here; and the trade with Shiras, by caravans, is considerable. It is situated near the head of the gulf, 110 m WSW Shiras. Lon. 50 43 E, lat. 28 59 N.

Buttermere, a lake in Cumberland, 8 m sw Kewick. It is 2 m long, and nearly half a mile broad. On the w side it is terminated by a mountain, called, from its ferruginous colour, the Red Pike; a strip of cultivated ground adorns the E shore; at the N end is the village of Buttermere; and a group of houses, called Gategarth, is at the s extremity, under an amphitheatre of mountainous rocks. Here Honister Crag is seen rising to a vast height, flanked by two conical mountains, Fleetwith on the E, and Scarf on the w. Numerous mountain torrents form never-failing cataracts that thunder and foam down the rocks, and form the lake below. This lake is called the Upper Lake; and near a mile from it, to the NE, is the Lower Lake, called also Cromack-water. The river Cocker flows through both these lakes to Cocker-mouth.

vonshire has erected a beautiful crescent, and under the houses are piazzas and shops. A mile hence is another of the wonders, called Pool's Hole, at the foot of a mountain. The entrance is low and narrow, but it presently opens to a cave 696 feet long, of considerable height, with a roof resembling a Gothic cathedral. It contains many stalactical concretions, and several curious representations both of art and nature, produced by the petrifying water continually dropping from the rock. Buxton is 32 m NW Derby, and 160 m NW London.

It was anciently a province of Persia, afterward it was annexed to the Mogul empire till 1739, when it was restored to Persia by Nadir Shah. The country is highly diversified; consisting of mountains covered with snow, hills of moderate height, rich plains, stately forests, and innumerable streams. It produces every article necessary for human life, with the most delicate fruits and flowers. It is sometimes called Zabulistan, from Zabul, one of the names of Ghizni, which was the ancient capital of the country.

Cabul, the capital of the province of Cabul, and of the dominions of the sultan of the Afghans, seated near the foot of the Hindoo-ko, on the river Attock. It carries on a considerable trade, and is considered as the gate of India toward Tartary. In 1739, Nadir Shah took it by storm, and plundered it of great treasures. It is 170 m NE Candahar. Lon. 68 33 E, lat. 34 30 N.

Cachan, or Cashan, a city of Persia, in Irak, which has a considerable trade in silks, carpets, and copper ware. Here are many Christians, and Guebres, or worshippers of fire. It is seated in a stony plain, 106 m N by W Ispahan. Lon. 51 20 E, lat. 33 55 N.

Cachao, or Kecho, the capital of the kingdom of Tonquin. It contains 20,000 houses, whose walls are of mud, and the roofs covered with thatch; a few are built with brick, and roofed with pantiles. The principal streets are very wide, and paved with small stones. The king has three palaces here, such as they are; and near them are stables for his horses and elephants. The house of the English factory is the best in the city; and the factories purchase silks and lackered ware, as in China. It is seated on the river Hoti, 80 m from the gulf of Tonquin. Lon. 105 11 E, lat. 21 10 N.

Cadillac, a town of France, in the department of Gironde, with a castle, seated on the Garonne, 15 m SE Bourdeaux.

Cadiz, a fortified city of Spain, in Andalusia, and a bishop's see, with a good harbour. It is seated at the N extremity of a peninsula, which is 10 m long and scarcely 3 broad in any part; forming a harbour of more than the same length, between it and the mainland, from 6 to 8 m in breadth. The S side of the city is inaccessible by sea, being edged with craggy rocks; on the W side is fort St. Sebastian, and on the E fort St. Philip; and the passage into the harbour is commanded by two opposite forts, Matagorda on the continent near Porto Real, and St. Lorenzo on the peninsula; which two forts are also called the Puntals. Cadiz was built by the Phœnicians, and was afterward a Roman town: and there are still several remains of Roman antiquities. It is closely built; the streets are in general narrow, but kept remarkably clean, and the houses are high, with flat roofs. The situation prevents its further extension; and in 1799 it contained 75,000 inhabitants, who have every necessary of life in plenty, except water for drinking, which they are ob-ligned to obtain from springs on the coast, near St. Maria. The cathedral is an ancient structure, with magnificent decorations; and a new one was begun to be erected in 1722, but will still require many years to complete. Here is also a commodious observatory, a national theatre, and a large customhouse, but not an exchange. This port is the centre of the Spanish commerce to the W Indies and America. There are linen manufactures in the neighbourhood, but that of salt is the chief branch of industry. This city was taken by the English in 1596; but being attempted again in 1702, they had not the like success. In 1812, after a land blockade of some years by the French, they abandoned their works, having previously set them on fire. Cadiz is 53 m ssw Seville, and 60 wnw Gibraltar. Lon. 6 16 W, lat. 36 32 N.

Caerphilly, a town of Wales, in Glamorganshire, with a market on Thursday, and a woollen manufacture. The ruins of its celebrated castle more resemble that of a city than a single edifice. It is seated between the Taaf and Rumney, 7 m N Cardiff, and 160 W London.

Caerwent, a village in Monmouthshire, 4 m SW Chepstow. It is the Venta Silurum of the Romans, once crowded with palaces and temples; but now the buildings within its ruined walls are only a church and a few scattered houses, the rest of the area being laid out in fields and orchards, where a tessellated pavement and other antiquities have been discovered.

Caerwys, a town of Wales, in Flintshire. It had a market, which has been discontinued since that at Holywell was established; and the assizes were held here before their removal to Mold. It is 5 m W Flint, and 212 NW London.

Cassa, or Theodosia, the largest town of Crimea, with an excellent road and harbour. It was taken, in 1266, by the Genoese, who made it one of the most flourishing towns in Asia. It was taken from them by the Venetians, in 1297, but soon recovered; however, in 1474, the Tartars, assisted by the Turks, finally expelled them. It was the last port in Crimea of which the Genoese retained the sovereignty. Cassa was the Theodosia of the ancients; a name which has been restored to it by the Russians, who became possessed of Crimea in 1791. It then contained about 20,000 inhabitants, was well garri-soned, and a place of great commerce; but it has since suffered great devastation from the Russians, who have plundered or demolished the minarets, mosques, baths, &c. and laid most of the houses in ruins. The trade consists in wax, furs, lamb-skins, leather, horses, and female slaves, most of the latter brought from Circassia. Cassa is seated on a bay of the Black sea, at the foot of some high mountains, 65 m E by N Sympheropol, and 130 SE Precop. Lon. 35 20 E, lat. 45 0 N.

interior. The universal characteristics of all the tribes of this great nation consist in an external form and figure, varying exceedingly from the other nations of Africa. They are much taller, stronger, and better proportioned; their skin is brown, and their hair black and woolly. They have the high forehead and prominent nose of the Europeans, the thick lips of the Negroes, and the high cheek-bones of the Hottentots. The clothing of both sexes is skins, tanned with some skill, and as pliant as cloth. The men wear tails of different animals tied round their loins and below the knees; pieces of brass in their hair, and large ivory rings on their arms; they are adorned also with the hair of lions, and feathers fastened on their heads, with many other fantastical ornaments. They are fond of dogs; and have great pride in their cattle, which pay the most perfect obedience to their voice. Their exercise is hunting, fighting, or dancing. They are expert in throwing lances; and their other arms are spears, bludgeons, and very large oval shields made of the hides of oxen. The women are handsome, and modest in their behaviour; they are covered with clothing, except their face, arms, and legs, and of a slender form, much smaller than the men. They are employed in the cultivation of their gardens and corn, and in domestic occupations. They raise several vegetables, which are not indigenous to the country, as tobacco, watermelons, kidneybeans, and hemp. Their huts are higher and more commodious than those of the Hottentots, and their lands more fertile; but their oxen, and almost all their animals, are much smaller. Both men and women colour their bodies red with a sort of earth, or with iron rust, and then smear it over with fat; which operation is renewed every third or fourth day. Some of them are tattooed on the breast, back, and arms, but not on the face. The Caffres believe in a Supreme Being, who created the world; but he is not worshipped, neither is he represented by any kind of image, or sought in any thing terrestrial. Polygamy is allowed; several acts cause a period of uncleanness, followed by its purification; and the youths are circumcised when twelve years old. They are addicted to the grossest superstition, believe in prognostics and omens, and have a kind of magicians whom they greatly revere. They have no kind of alphabetical characters; but appear to have some ideas of drawing. The Caffres consist of a great number of tribes, each governed by its own king, which dignity is hereditary; but examples of usurpers are not rare. Their internal wars, not only of one tribe against another, but of rebellious captains against their princes, disturb their quiet continually, and prevent their making much progress in civilization.

Cahir, a town of Ireland, in the county of Kerry, on an inlet of Dingle bay, 32 m sw Tralee.

Cahors, a city of France, capital of the department of Lot, and a bishop's see, with a university. It is seated on a peninsula made by the river Lot, and built partly on a craggy rock. There are three bridges over the river. The cathedral is a Gothic structure, and has a large square steeple. The town has a manufacture of fine cloths and ratteens, and furnishes excellent wine. It was taken by assault in 1580, by Henry IV. by means of petards, which were first employed here. In one of the suburbs are the remains of a Roman amphitheatre. Cahors is 60 m N Toulouse, and 287 s Paris. Lon. 1 26 E, lat. 44 27 N.

Cajaneborg, a town of Sweden, in E Bothnia, situate on a lake where the river Pytia forms a tremendous cascade. It contains but few inhabitants, and is 125 m E Uleaborg. Lon. 27 45 E, lat. 65 13 N.

Cai-fong, a city of China, capital of the province of Ho-nan. It is situate on a plain 6 m from the river Hoan-ho, which is higher than the plain, and kept in by raised dikes that extend above 90 m. When the city was besieged by the rebels, in 1612, they cut the dikes of the river, which drowned 300,000 of the inhabitants. Some of the ruins still remains, which show that its present state is far inferior to its former magnificence. Its jurisdiction comprehends four cities of the second class and thirty of the third. It is 315 m ssw Peking. Lon. 114 28 E, lat. 34 53 N.

Caifa, a seaport of Syria, in Palestine, defended by walls and a citadel. It stands on the s side of the bay of Acre, 8 m sw Acre.

Cairn, a village of Scotland, in Wigtonshire, with an excellent harbour, on the E side of Loch Ryan, 9 m N Stranraver.

Cairngorm, a mountain of Scotland, between the counties of Banff and Elgin. It rises in a conical form 1750 feet above the level of a small lake near its base, which is the source of the Avon, and 4050 feet above the level of the sea; its sides clothed with firs, and its top generally covered with snow. It is famous for beautiful rock-crystals, much esteemed by lapidaries.

Cairo, or Grand Cairo, a large city, capital of Egypt. It consists of three towns, about a mile apart; Old Cairo, New Cairo, and the port termed Bulac. The population is estimated at 300,000. Old Cairo is reduced to a small place, though the harbour for boats that come from Upper Egypt. Some of the beys have country houses here, to which they retire when the country is overflowed by the Nile. New Cairo is a mile from the river, and 7 m in circumference. The streets are narrow; and the finest houses are built round a court, in which they make the best appearance, having few or no windows next the street. The castle stands on a steep rock, and is surrounded by thick walls, on which are strong towers. Joseph's Well, made by a vizier of that name about the year 1100, is the most curious part of the castle: it is sunk in the rock 280 feet deep and 40 in circumference, with a staircase carried round; and a machine, turned by oxen, raises the water (which comes from the Nile) into a reservoir, whence it is again raised by a similar machine. There are many other reservoirs for water; and numerous bazars, where each trade has its allotted quarter. There are several public bagnios, very handsome within, and used as places of refreshment and diversion, especially for the women, who go there twice a week; but the wives of great men have baths at home. The women have greater liberty here than in any part of the Turkish empire; and on Friday a mosque without the walls is frequented by them as a pilgrimage of pleasure. The Calish, a canal which conveys the waters of the Nile into the city, is 20 feet broad, and has houses on each side of it. As soon as the water begins to rise, the mouth of the canal is closed with earth, and a mark placed to show the time when this and all other canals in the kingdom are to be opened, which is done with great solemnity. There are not less than 300 mosques in Cairo, the lofty minarets of which present a very picturesque appearance. It was a place of very great trade before the discovery of the Cape of Good Hope; and is still the centre of that of eastern Africa. The chief manufactures are sugar, sal ammoniac, glass, lamps, salt-petre, gunpowder, red and yellow leather, and linen made of the fine Egyptian flax. This city was taken by the French, under Bonaparte, in 1798. It stands on the right bank of the Nile, 100 m S of its mouth. Lon. 31 18 E, lat. 30 3 N.

Cairoan, a town of the kingdom of Tunis, and next to the city of Tunis for trade and number of inhabitants. Calcutta, a city of Hindoostan, and the emporium of Bengal, situate on the left bank of the Hoogly, or western arm of the Ganges, 100 m from its mouth, in the bay of Bengal. It rose on the site of the village of Govindpour, about 1700, and extends from the W point of Fort William, along the banks of the river, almost to the village of Cossipour, 4 m and a half; the breadth, in many parts, inconsiderable. Generally speaking, the description of one Indian city is a description of all; being all built on one plan, with very narrow and crooked streets, interspersed with numerous reservoirs, ponds, and gardens. A few of the streets are paved with brick. The houses are variously built; some with brick, others with mud, and a greater proportion with bamboos and mats: these different kinds of fabrics, intermixed with each other, form a motley appearance. Those of the latter kinds are invariably of one story, and covered with thatch; those of brick seldom exceed two floors, and have flat terraced roofs; but these are so thinly scattered, that fires, which often happen, do not, sometimes, meet with the obstruction of a brick house through a whole street. But Calcutta is, in part, an exception to this rule of building; for there, the quarter inhabited by the English is composed entirely of brick buildings, many of which have the appearance of palaces. The line of buildings that surround two sides of the esplanade of the fort is magnificent; and it adds greatly to the superb appearance, that the houses are detached from each other, and insulated in a great space. The buildings are all on a large scale, from the necessity of having a free circulation of air in a climate, the heat of which is extreme. The general approach to the houses is by a flight of steps, with great projecting porticos, or surrounded by colonades or arcades, which give them the appearance of Grecian temples. But the remainder of the city, and by much the greatest part, is built as before described. Calcutta has been wonderfully improved both in appearance and in the salubrity of the air; for the streets have been properly drained, and the ponds filled up. It is supposed to contain at least 700,000 inhabitants. In this splendid city, the head of a mighty Christian empire, there is only one church of the establishment of the mother country, and that by no means conspicuous for size or ornament: It is also remarkable, that all British India does not afford one episcopal see, while that advantage has been granted to Canada. The mixture of European and Asiatic manners that may be observed here is curious: coaches, phaëtons, chaises, with the palankeens and hackeries of the natives, the passing ceremonies of the Hindoos, and the different appearances of the fakirs, form a sight more extraordinary than perhaps any other city can present. The hackery here mentioned is a small covered carriage upon two wheels, drawn by bullocks, and used generally for the female part of the family. The Ganges is navigable up to the town for the largest ships that visit India. The exports are considerable in salt, sugar, rice, opium, silks, muslins, calicos, &c. Calcutta is the seat of the governor-general and council of Bengal, who have a control over the presidencies of Madras, Bombay, and Bencoolen. Here is likewise a supreme court of judicature, in which justice is dispensed, according to the laws of England, by a chief justice and three puisne judges. In 1756, Calcutta was taken by the soubah of Bengal, who forced the feeble garrison, to the amount of 146 persons, into a small prison called the Black Hole, out of which only 23 came alive the next morning. It was retaken the next year; the victory of Plassey followed; and the inhuman soubah was deposed, and put to death by his successor. Immediately after this victory, the erection of Fort William commenced, which is superior to any fortress in India. In 1801, a noble college was founded here, in which are professors of English, Mohamedan, and Hindoo laws, history, &c. Calcutta is 1030 m NNE Madras. Lon. 88 29 E, lat. 22 35 N.

Caledonia, a seaport of the Pacific Ocean, discovered by James Cook. It is 200 m long, and 100 m wide. The inhabitants are all of the same race; their hair is black, and their eyes are frizzled, but not so much as the natives of the South Sea. Their clothes are made of the bark of a tree, and are only covering the body. The houses are formed of small stones, and are covered with long coarse grass, which grows in the ground. The chiefs wear gowns of their chiefs, and are adorned with shells, &c. They are very fond of their wives, and their children. Those of the more cultivated cultivate the soil, and are very industrious, but subsist chiefly by fishing. Plantains are very plentiful, bread-cocoa-nut-trees are also very common, but yams and taro are scarce. The cape is named after Queen Charlotte. 167 12 E, lat. 22

Caledonia, New, an island in the Pacific ocean, discovered by Cook, in 1774. It is 260 m long and 70 broad. The inhabitants are strong, active, and well made; their hair is black and much frizzled, but not woolly; their beards are crisp and thick; they besmear their faces with black pigment; and their only covering is a wrapper, made from the bark of a tree, or of leaves. Their houses are circular like a bee-hive; formed of small spars and reeds, covered with long coarse grass, and the floor laid with dry grass. They deposit their dead in the ground, and decorate the grave of their chiefs with spears, darts, paddles, &c. They are of a pacific disposition, and their women chaster than those of the more eastern islands. They cultivate the soil with some art and industry, but subsist chiefly on roots and fish. Plantains and sugar-canes are not plentiful, bread-fruit is scarce, and cocoa-nut-trees are but thinly planted; but yams and taras are in great abundance. The cape at the S end, called Queen Charlotte Foreland, is in lon. 167 12 E, lat. 22 15 S.

California, a peninsula of N America, in the Pacific ocean; separated from the W coast of America by the Vermillion sea, or gulf of California, and extending NW from lat. 23 to 33 N. It was discovered by Cortes, in 1536; and is said to have been visited by sir Francis Drake, in 1578. The peninsula is equal to England in extent of territory, but the population is not so great as the town of Ipswich. A chain of mountains extends its whole length, of which the most elevated, the Cerro de la Giganta, is from 4600 to 5000 feet, and appears to be of volcanic origin. The mountains are inhabited by a species of goat, called berendos, which leap, like the ibex, with the head downward, and, like the chamois, have the horns curved backward. The sky here is constantly serene, and of a deep blue, and rarely any clouds; but the earth, unfortunately, is not so beautiful. The soil is sandy and arid, vegetation is at a stand, and rain is very unfrequent. There are few springs, some of which issue from naked rocks; but where springs and earth happen to be together, the fertility of the soil is immense. In these points, of which the number is inconsiderable, the jesuits, toward the close of the 17th century, established their first missions. Maize vegetates vigorously, and the vine yields an excellent grape, of which the wine resembles that of the Canary islands; but the general nature of the soil will never be able to support a great population. The jesuits in a very few years built sixteen villages in the interior; and in 1750 the Spanish settlements were very considerable. Since the expulsion of the jesuits, in 1767, the government of the peninsula has been confided to the Dominican monks of the city of Mexico, who have been unsuccessful in their establishments. The villages of the missions are now reduced to sixteen, in which there are not above 5000 native cultivators; and the number of savages, dispersed in other parts, scarcely amounts to 4000. The pearl fishery on the coast is valuable; but it has no mines of a promising appearance. The principal place is Loreto.

It is divided from N to S by the river Mecon, or Cambodia, which annually overflows the country in the rainy season, between June and October. Its productions are much the same with those usually found between the tropics; and that peculiar substance styled gamboge, or rather Camboja gum, yielding a fine yellow tint. Though a country rich by nature, the inhabitants are few; and their religion is idolatry. The men are in general well made, with long hair, and a yellow complexion; their dress is a long and large robe: the dress of the women is shorter and closer; they are handsome, but immodest. They manufacture very fine cloth, and their needlework is much esteemed. This country about the commencement of the present century became subject to Cochinchina.

Cambridge, the capital of Cambridge-shire, and seat of a celebrated university.

C A M

It is a borough, governed by a mayor, and has a market on Wednesday and Saturday. The townhall and shire-house are the only buildings of note that do not belong to the university. The county gaol is the gatehouse of an ancient castle, built by William I. In the market-place, which consists of two spacious oblong squares, united together, is Hobson conduit, which is constantly running. Here are 14 parish churches, three dissenting meeting-houses, and a synagogue. The number of inhabitants was 10,087 in 1801, and 11,108 in 1813. The trade consists chiefly in oil, iron, and corn. The university is supposed to have been founded during the heptarchy. It contains 12 colleges, and four halls, which have equal privileges with the colleges. The colleges are, Peterhouse, Corpus Christi, or Benet, Gonville and Caius, Kings, Queens, Jesus, Christ, St. John, Magdalen, Trinity, Emanual, and Sidney-Sussex. The halls are Clare, Pembroke, Trinity, and Catherine. Of the colleges, Peterhouse is the most ancient, being founded in 1257. Kings college is the noblest foundation in Europe, and the chapel one of the finest pieces of Gothic architecture in the world. The library, chapel, &c. of Trinity college justly place it in the first rank. The other structures belonging to the university are the senate-house, which, with St. Mary's church, the schools, the university library, and other buildings, form a noble square. Here is also a botanical garden, and a general hospital, called Addenbrooke, from the name of the founder. In a field 2 m NE of the town, and under the jurisdiction of the university, is held an annual fair, called Stourbridge or Sturbich Fair, which commences on the 7th of September, and continues a fortnight. Cambridgeshire, a county of England, bounded on the NW by Lincolnshire, NE by Norfolk, E by Suffolk, S by Essex and Hertfordshire, and W by the counties of Huntingdon, Bedford, and Northampton. It is 50 m long and 25 broad, contains 439,040 acres; is divided into 15 hundreds, and 161 parishes; has a city, a university, and 8 market-towns; and sends six members to parliament. The number of inhabitants was 89,346 in 1801, and 101,109 in 1813. The principal rivers are the Ouse, Nen, and Cam. The southern and eastern parts are pleasant and healthy; but the northern part, called the Isle of Ely, is low and fenny, from the confluence of many rivers. All the waters of the middle part of England, which do not flow into the Thames or the Trent, run into these fens; and in the latter part of the year, they are sometimes overflowed by water, or appear covered with fogs. See Bedford Level.

Cambrilla, or Cambrilles, a town of Spain, in Catalonia, surrounded by a wall, and seated near the sea, 14 m W by s Tarragona.

Camden, a district of S Carolina, comprehending the counties of Fairfield, Richland, Clarendon, Claremont, Kershaw, Salem, and Lancaster. It produces corn, tobacco, and cotton.

Camden, a town of S Carolina, in Kershaw county, capital of Camden district. It was the scene of two battles in the American war; one in 1780, between lord Cornwallis and general Gates, and the other in 1781, between lord Rawdon and general Greene. It stands on the river Wateree, or Catawba, by means of which the inhabitants carry on a trade with the back country. It is 35 m NE Columbia. Lon. 80 54 W, lat. 34 12 N.

Camden, a town of the district of Maine, in Lincoln county, on the W side of Penobscot bay, 30 m ENE Wiscasset. Lon. 69 20 W, lat. 44 10 N.

Camel, a river in Cornwall, which rises 2 m N of Camelford, flows s almost to Bodmin, and then NW to Padstow, where it enters the Bristol channel. Its banks were the scene of some bloody battles between the Britons and Saxons.

Camelford, a borough in Cornwall, governed by a mayor, with a market on Friday. A great quantity of yarn is spun in this place and its neighbourhood. It is seated on the Camel, 14 m W Launceston, and 228 W by s London.

Camertino, a town of Italy, in the marquisate of Ancona, and an archbishop's see. It is seated on a mountain, near the river Chiento, 37 m SW Ancona. Lon. 13 0 E, lat. 43 15 N.

Camin, a seaport of Further Pomerania, and once a bishop's see, which was secularized at the peace of Westphalia; but it still has a fine cathedral and a chapter. Its navigation and commerce are very extensive, and it has a great trade in beer. It stands on the Diwenow, or E mouth of the Oder, opposite the isle of Wollin, 25 m N Stettin. Lon. 14 52 E, lat. 53 54 N.

Campagna, or Campania, a town of Naples, in Principato Citra, 40 m SE Naples.

Campagna di Roma, anciently Latium, a province of Italy, in the Ecclesiastical State, extending 60 m SE along the Mediterranean, to the frontiers of Naples. Formerly the best peopled and best cultivated spot in the world, few villages, little cultivation, and scarcely any inhabitants (except in the capital and its neighbourhood) are now to be seen; nothing, in short, but the scattered ruins of temples and tombs, which present the idea of a country depopulated by pestilence. Rome is the capital.

Campbeltown, or Cambletown, a borough and seaport of Scotland, in Argyleshire, situate on a bay toward the S extremity of the peninsula of Cantyre. It has a considerable trade in coal and the distillation of whisky, beside being the general rendezvous of the fishing vessels that annually visit the W coast. The number of inhabitants was 7093 in 1801, and 7807 in 1811. It is 65 m SW Inverary. Lon. 5 32 W, lat. 55 26 N.

Campden, a corporate town in Gloucestershire, with a market on Wednesday, 22 m NE Gloucester, and 90 WNW London.

Campeachy, a town of New Spain, in Jucatan, on the W coast of the bay of Campeachy, defended by strong forts. The port is large, but shallow; and the chief exports are logwood and Canada, a large country of N America, bounded on the N by New Britain, E by Labrador and the gulf of St. Lawrence, S by New Brunswick and the United States, and W by unknown lands.

It was discovered by John and Sebastian Cabot, father and son, in 1497; and was settled by the French in 1608. The summer here is very hot, and winter continues for six months very severe; but the sudden transitions from heat to cold, so common in the United States, are not known in Canada, and the seasons are more regular. The uncultivated parts are a continued wood, in which are many kinds of trees unknown in Europe; but the land that is cleared is fertile, and the progress of vegetation so rapid, that wheat sowed in May is reaped in August. Of all the animals, the beaver is the most useful and curious. Canada turpentine is greatly esteemed for its balsamic qualities. This country abounds with coal, and near Quebec is a fine lead mine. The different tribes of Indians, or original natives, in Canada, are almost innumerable; but they have been observed to decrease in population where the Europeans are most numerous, owing chiefly to their immoderate use of spirituous liquors. Canada was conquered by the English in 1759, and confirmed to them by the French at the peace of 1763. In 1791, this country was divided into two provinces, Upper and Lower Canada, which have since made great progress in population and agriculture. Upper Canada is deemed the garden of America, and not subject to the extreme heat or cold of the lower province. The chief products for exportation are flour, wheat, potash, oak and pine timber, masts, staves, planks, and firewood. The principal inconveniences to which this province is subject are the falls and rapids of the St. Lawrence, which impede the navigation between Kingston and Montreal. Lower Canada is free from such impediments; and to the export articles above enumerated may be added peas, barley, malt, cured fish, and furs. York in the upper province, and Quebec in the lower, are the chief towns.

Canajohary, a town of New York, in Montgomery county. Its vicinity abounds with apple-trees, planted by the Mohawk Indians, from which is made cider of an excellent quality. It stands on a creek of the same name, on Mohawk river, 25 m NE Cooperstown, and 56 WNW Albany.

Canal, Duke of Bridgewater's, in England, the first grand work of the kind in the kingdom, begun in 1758.
It commenced at Worsley, 7 m from Manchester, where, at the foot of a mountain composed of coal, a basin is cut, containing a great body of water, which serves as a reservoir to the navigation. The canal runs under a hill from this basin, about 1300 yards, to the coal works. At Barton bridge, 3 m from the basin, is an aqueduct, which, for upward of 200 yards, conveys the canal across the river Irwell; it has three arches over the river, and the middle one will admit the largest barges to pass through with masts and sails standing. At Longford bridge, the canal turns to the right, and crossing the Mersey, passes near Altringham, Dunham, Grapenhall, Kaul-ton, into the tide way of the Mersey, at Runcom Gap, where barges can come into the canal from Liverpool, at low water. This navigation is more than 29 m in length; and it is now extended 7 m further, from Worsley to Leigh.

Canal, Grand, or Imperial, in China, a stupendous work, which extends from N to S upward of 400 m. from the river Ku-ho, a little N of Tong-tchang, in Chang-tong, to Hanch-tehou, in Tche-kiang. In this course it cuts at right angles several rivers from the W, the smaller streams of which terminating in it, afford a constant supply of water; and the three great rivers, the Ku-ho to the north, the Hohan-ho about the middle, and the Kian-ku toward the south, intersecting the canal, carry the superfluous water to the sea. Many difficulties must have arisen in accommodating the general level of the canal to the several levels of the feeding streams; for it has been found necessary in many places, to cut to the depth of 60 or 70 feet below the surface; and in others, to raise mounds of earth upon lakes, swamps, and marshy grounds, of great length and magnitude. These gigantic embankments are carried through lakes of several miles in diameter, between which the water is kept to a height considerably above that of the lake; and in such situations this enormous aqueduct sometimes glides along at the rate of three miles an hour. Few parts of it are level: in some places it has little or no current; in others it sets to the N and S alternately at the rate of one, two, or three miles an hour. The balancing of the level is effected by flood-gates thrown across at certain distances to elevate or depress the height of the water a few inches, as appears necessary, and by sluices on the sides of the embankments, through which the superfluous water is let out into the lakes and swamps. The flood-gates are simply planks sliding in grooves that are cut into the sides of two stone piers, which in these places contract the canal to the width of about 30 feet; and at each is a guard-house, with soldiers to draw up and let down the planks as occasion requires. From the Hohan-ho to the Kian-ku the country abounds in lakes and marshy ground, and the canal is carried in some parts 20 feet above the level of the country, 200 feet in width. There is not a lock, nor, except the flood-gates, a single interruption to the whole navigation.

Canal, Grand Junction, in England, a work that joins several other canals in the centre of the country, which thence form a communication between the rivers Thames, Severn, Mersey, and Trent, and, consequently, an inland navigation to the four principal sea-ports, London, Bristol, Liverpool, and Hull. This canal commences at Braunston, on the W borders of Northamptonshire, passes by Daventry to Stony Stratford in Buckinghamshire, thence on the confines of Bedfordshire, W of Leighton Buzzard, to Tring, Berkhamsted, and Rickmansworth, in Hertfordshire, and through Middlesex by Uxbridge to Brentford, where it enters the Thames, 12 m by that river above London. It is upward of 90 m in length.

Canal, Grand Trunk, in England, a work that forms a communication between the rivers Mersey and Trent, and, in course, between the Irish sea and the German ocean. Its length is 92 m from the duke of Bridgewater's canal, at Preston on the Hill, in Cheshire, to Wildon-ferry, in Derbyshire, where it communicates with the Trent. The canal is carried over the river Dove, in an aqueduct of 23 arches, and over the Trent by an aqueduct of six arches. At Preston on the Hill, it passes under ground 1241 yards; at Barton and in the neighbourhood it has two subterraneous passages; and at Harecastle-hill, in Staffordshire, it is conveyed under ground 2880 yards. From the neighbourhood of Stafford, a branch is made from this canal, to run near Wolverhampton, and to join the Severn near Bewdley: from this again other branches cross Warwickshire to Braunston, where commences the Grand Junction canal to the Thames at Brentford.

Canal, Great, in Scotland, a work that forms a junction between the Forth and Clyde. Its length is 35 m, from the influx of the Carron, at Grangemouth, to the junction with the Clyde, 6 m above Dumbarton. In the course of this navigation, the vessels are raised to the height of 141 feet above the level of the sea, and passing afterward upon the summit of the country, for 18 m, they then descend into the river Clyde, and thence have free access to the Atlantic ocean. This canal is carried over 36 rivers and rivulets, and two great roads, by 38 aqueducts of hewn stone. In some places it passes through mossy ground, and in others through solid rock. The road from Edinburgh to Glasgow passes under it near Falkirk, and over it, by means of a drawbridge, 6 m from Glasgow. In the course of this inland navigation are many striking scenes; particularly the romantic situation of the stupendous aqueduct of four arches over the Kelvin, near Glasgow, 420 feet in length, carrying a great artificial river over a natural one, where vessels of 90 tons sail at the height of 63 feet above the bed of the river below. This communication between the German and Atlantic oceans, in the commerce of Great Britain and Ireland, to Norway, Sweden, and the Baltic, shortens the nautical distance in some instances 800, and in others 1000 miles.

Canal Royal, or Canal of Languedoc, in France, a work that effects an inland communication between the Mediterranean and Atlantic. From the port of Cette, in the Mediterranean, it crosses the lake of Thon; and, below Toulouse, is conveyed by three sluices into the Garonne. At St. Ferreol, near Revel, between two rocky hills, is a grand basin, above 1000 feet in diameter, into which the rivulet Laudot is received; and hence three large cocks of cast brass open and discharge the water, which then goes under the name of the river Laudot, and continues its course to the canal called Rigole de la Plaine. Thence it is conveyed to another reservoir near Narbonne, out of which it is conveyed by sluices, both to the Mediterranean and Atlantic, as the canal requires it; this being the highest point between the two seas. Near Beziers are eight sluices, which form a regular and grand cascade, 936 feet long and 66 feet high, by which vessels cross the river Orbe, and continue their voyage on the canal. Above it, between Beziers and Capetan, is the Mal-Pas, where the canal is conveyed, for the length of 720 feet, under a mountain. At Adge is a round sluice, with three openings, three different depths of the water meeting here; and the gates are so contrived, that vessels may pass through by opening which sluice the master pleases. The canal has 37 aqueducts, and its length from Toulouse to Beziers, where it joins the river Orbe, is 152 m.

Canandaqua, a town of New York, chief of Ontario county, situate on the S end of a lake of the same name, at its outlet into Canandaqua creek, which runs E into Seneca river. The lake is 20 m long and 3 broad. The town stands on a pleasant rise from the lake, 90 m ESE Niagara, and 130 w by N Cooperstown.

It is the head-quarters of the province, has several very good houses and a flourishing trade. It stands on a small bay, one of the best on the coast. 56 m NNW Calicut. Lon. 73 30 E, lat. 11 53 N.

Canara, a province on the W coast of Hindoostan, lately subject to the regent of Mysore, on whose defeat and death, in 1799, it came into the hands of the British. It is 180 m in length, between the Concan and Malabar, and from 30 to 80 in breadth. The soil is fertile; and it produces abundance of rice, betelnuts, and wild nutmegs. The principal port is Mangalore.

Canaria, or Grand Canary, the principal of the Canary islands, which gives name to the whole, and is the seat of government. It is 40 m long and 20 broad; the middle part very mountainous, so that one side is sometimes stormy, while the other is quite calm. The air is temperate, the water plentiful and good, and it has abundance of herbs and delicious fruits. Here are two wheat harvests, in February and May; and the corn makes bread as white as snow. A great quantity of sugar is made here; and of the wine called Sack, which is hence often termed Canary. There are great plenty of horned cattle, poultry, pigeons, and partridges; and Canary birds, with some others of the same size, seldom visit any of the Canaries, except this island and Ferro, which are the most southerly. The chief town is Canary.

Canaries, or Canary Islands, anciently called the Fortunate Islands, are thirteen in number, lying in the N Atlantic ocean, near the continent of Africa. Seven of them are considerable, namely, Palma, Ferro, Gomera, Teneriff, Canaria, Forteventura, and Lancerota; the other six are very small, Graciosa, Rocea, Allegranza, St. Clare, Inferno, and Lobos. They belong to the Spaniards, and produce corn, silk, tobacco, sugar-canes, and excellent wine.

Canary, or Palmos, the capital of the island of Canaria, and a bishop's see, with a castle on a hill. It is 3 m in circumference, and the residence of the governor and sovereign council of the Canaries. Lon. 15 42 W, lat. 28 4 N.

Cancale, a town of France, in the department of Ille and Vilaine, seated on a bay of its name, and celebrated for oysters. The English landed here in 1758, and proceeded by land to burn the ships at St. Malo. It is 9 m E St. Malo, and 40 NNW Rennes.

Candahar, a country of Asia, between the river Indus and Persia, bounded on the N by Cabul, E by Lahore, SE by Moultan, and W by Segistan. The dominions of the sultan of this country, extend westward to the neighbourhood of the city of Terfishi; including Cabul, Peishore, Ghiani, Gaur, Segistan, and Chorasan; a tract not less than 650 m in length, its breadth unknown; and, on the E side of the Indus, he possesses the territory of Cashmere, and some districts N of the city of Attock. These countries are all called by the general name of the Country of the Abdalli. Ahmed Abdalla, the founder of this kingdom, was originally the chief of an Afghan tribe, named Abdal (whence the name Abdalli) who was stript of his country by Nadir Shah, in 1739. On the death of Nadir, he suddenly appeared among his former subjects, and erected a considerable kingdom in the eastern part of Persia, adding to it most of the provinces to the W of the Indus, which had been ceded by the great mogul to Nadir Shah, together with Cashmere on the E of that river. See Afghanistan.

Candahar, a city and the capital of the country of the same name. It is surrounded by walls and ditches, and has a considerable trade. While the Persian and Mogul empires were each entire, it was the frontier fortress toward Persia. It is seated on the Harmend, which divides it in two parts, 145 m ssw Cabul. Lon. 65 22 E, lat. 33 0 N.

Candeeb, a province of the Deccan of Hindoostan, subject to the Poonah Mahrattas; bounded on the N by Malwa, E by Berar, S by Dowlatabad, and W by Baglana. The soil is fertile, though mountainous, and produces abundance of cotton. Burhanpour is the capital.

Candes, a town of France, in the department of Indre and Loire, at the conflux of the Vienne with the Loire, 30 m wsw Tours.

Candia, an island in the Mediterranean, formerly Crete, lying to the S of the Archipelago. It is 180 m long and 50 broad, and pervaded by a chain of mountains. The soil is fertile; and it abounds in fine cattle, sheep, swine, poultry, game, corn, wine, oil, silk, and honey. It was taken by the Turks, in 1669, after a war of 25 years. It was attempted to be retaken by the Venetians, in 1692, without effect. Mount Ida, so famous in history, is in the middle of this island.

Candia, the capital of the island of the same name, and the see of a Greek archbishop. Though populous formerly, little of it remains beside the walls and the market-place; and the harbour is now fit for nothing but boats. It is seated on the N side of the island, 500 m ssw Constantinople. Lon. 25 18 E, lat. 35 19 N.

Candy, a kingdom of Ceylon, containing about a fourth of the island. It occupies the middle part of the island, and nowhere extends to the seacoast, except about 10 m on the eastern shore. The country is mountainous; very woody on the frontiers, and difficult of access. The central part consists of mountains cultivated to their summits, interspersed with villages, rivulets, and cattle; well trodden foot paths in all directions; fruitful vallies, with groves of areka, jacca, cocoa-nut, limes, oranges, &c. with fine villages, and fields of paddy and other grain, well watered by the streams pouring down from the mountains. In many parts of the interior, volcanos have burst forth at different times; and the hills seem to possess the principle of those eruptions. Iron and other ores are to be met with; but the Candians, for years past, have paid no attention to discovering or working any of the veins. The air is subject to heavy fogs and dews at night, succeeded by excessively hot and sultry weather by day; rain and thunder are also frequent and violent. The inhabitants use fire-arms, and bows and arrows for weapons of offence. The king is absolute; and he is clothed in all the state and splendour of other Asiatic princes; but with the peculiar distinction of a crown, which he flatters himself no other monarch is entitled to wear. See Ceylon.

Candy, the capital of a kingdom of the same name, in the island of Ceylon. It was often burnt by the Portuguese, when they were masters of these coasts. It is more regularly built than most Indian towns. The principal street is about 2 m long, and very broad; and though the houses in general have but one story, they appear to have two, from the number of steps running up sidewise and close to the wall of the house, so that the door is at least the height of a story from the street. The king's palace terminates the upper end of the great street; it is a square of immense extent, built of a kind of cement, perfectly white, with stone gateways. Candy was entered by the British troops in Feb. 1803, the king and principal inhabitants having previously fled; but from the perfidy of the Candians, and the unhealthiness of the climate to Europeans, they capitulated to evacuate it in June, but on the third day after were all massacred. Carmarthenshire, a county of Wales, bounded on the N by Cardiganshire, E by Brecknockshire and Glamorganhire, S by the Bristol channel, and W by Pembrokeshire. It is 35 m long and 20 broad, containing 592,640 acres; is divided into eight hundreds and 30 parishes; has six market-towns; and sends two members to parliament. The number of inhabitants was 67,317 in 1801, and 77,217 in 1811. It is fruitful in corn and grass, has plenty of wood, coal, lead, and lime, and is not so mountainous as the other counties of Wales. The principal rivers are the Towy, Tyvy, and Taff.

Carmel, a mountain of Syria, in Palestine, noted for having been the retreat of the prophet Elias, and for a monastery of Carmelites. It is 50 m N Jerusalem.

Carmona, a town of Spain, in Andalusia, with many remains of ancient walls, inscriptions, &c. The gate toward Seville is one of the most extraordinary pieces of antiquity in all Spain; and its castle, now in ruins, was formerly of immense extent. It is seated on a high hill, 36 m NE Seville.

Carnarvon, a borough and seaport of Wales, capital of Carnarvonshire, with a market on Wednesday and Saturday. It is seated on a strait of the sea, called Menai, near its entrance into Carnarvon bay, and carries on a considerable trade with London, Bristol, Liverpool, and Ireland. Here is a celebrated castle, built by Edward I, in which his son, Edward II, the first prince of Wales was born. Carnarvon is governed by the constable of the castle, who is always mayor. The number of inhabitants was 4595 in 1811. Here are salt water baths, and elegant hot and cold baths, which are much frequented during the season. It is 7 m SW Bangor, and 244 NW London. Lon. 4 20 W, lat. 53 8 N.

Carnarvonshire, a county of Wales, bounded on a small part of the S by Merionethshire, on the E by Denbighshire, and on all other parts by the sea, being separated from Anglesea by the strait Menai. It is 50 m long and 13 broad, containing 496,000 acres; is divided into 10 hundreds, and 72 parishes; has one city and five market-towns; and sends two members to parliament. The number of inhabitants was 41,521 in 1801, and 49,336 in 1811. The principal rivers are the Conway and Saint. This county being the most rugged district of N Wales, may be truly called the British Alps. Its central part is occupied by the famed Snowdon; and the prospects around are rude and savage in the highest degree; but not without a mixture of beauty, when the dimensions of the vales admit the varieties of wood, water, and meadows. Cattle, sheep, and goats, are almost its sole rural riches. These are fed, during the summer, very high on the mountains, tended by their owners; and many rare vegetables, met with only on the most elevated spots, grow here. Copper mines have been worked in various parts of these mountains, as well as lead; blue slates, of a superior quality, are got in abundance; and quantities of stone, excellent for hones, are dug near Snowdon; to the dreary region of which the rich vale of Conway below forms a pleasing contrast. The chief manufacture is woollen cloth.

Carnatic, a country of the peninsula of Hindoostan, extending from the Guntoor Circar, along the whole coast of Coromandel, to Cape Comorin; including its appendages, which are Tanjore, Maravar, Trichinopoly, Madura, and Tinevelly. It is 570 m from N to S, but no where more than 120, and commonly 75 m wide. The annual revenue of its sovereign, the nabob of Arcot, is 1,500,000l. out of which he pays a subsidy of 160,000l. to the English E India Company, toward the expense of their military establishment. The British possessions here are confined chiefly to the district called the Jaghire. The Carnatic is rich, fertile, and populous, and contains an incredible number of fortresses: public monuments too, the unequivocal marks of civilization and opulence, are more common here than in the N parts of India. The principal rivers are the Pennar, Paliar, and Cavery. In 1787, the E India Company took the administration of the Carnatic, and the collection of the nabob's revenues, into their own hands. Arcot is the capital.

Carnaoul, a town of Hindoostan, in the province of Delhi. Here, in 1739, Kouli Khan gained a victory over the army of the great mogul; and in 1761, the Seiks, under Abdalla, defeated the Mahrattas. It is 80 m NW Delhi.

Carneville, a town of the state of Georgia, chief of Franklin county, 100 m NW Augusta, and 115 NNW Louisville.

Carniola, a late duchy of Germany, in the circle of Austria; bounded on the N by Carinthia and Stiria, E by Croatia, S by Morlachia and Istria, and W by Friuli. It is diversified with mountainous parts, having mines of iron and mercury; and others fertile and well cultivated, producing corn, wine, and oil. In 1809, this country was transferred to France. Laubach is the capital.

Carnwath, a town of Scotland, in Lanerksire, 8 m E Lanerk, and 23 SW Edinburg.

Carolath, a town of Silesia, capital of a principality of the same name, seated on the Oder, 14 m NW Glogau.

Carolina, a town of Spain, in Andalusia, the chief of a new colony of the same name, in the Sierra Morena. It stands on a hill, towering above the whole settlement, 20 m NE Anduxar.

Carolina, North, one of the United States of America; bounded on the N by Virginia, E by the Atlantic, S by Carolina, and W by Tennessee. It is 400

m long and 160 broad, and divided into eight districts; namely, Edenton, Newbern, Wilmington, Fayette, Hillsborough, Halifax, Morgan, and Salisbury; and these are sub-divided into 58 counties. The chief rivers are the Chowan, Roanoke, Tar, Neus, and Cape Fear. The country, in its whole width, for 60 m from the sea, is a dead level, of which a great part lies in forest and is barren; but more inland it rises into hills and mountains. Wheat, rye, barley, oats, tobacco, and flax grow well in the hilly districts; maize and pulse of all kinds, in all parts. Cotton and hemp are also cultivated. The most remarkable of its trees is the pitch-pine; it affords pitch, tar, turpentine, and various kinds of lumber, which, together, constitute half the exports of the state. No country produces finer white and red oak for staves; and the swampy parts abound with cypress and bay. Among the medicinal herbs and roots, this country abounds with ginseng, Virginia and Seneca snakeroot, and lionheart. In 1810 the number of inhabitants was 563,516. The largest town is Newbern, but the capital is Raleigh.

Carolina, South, one of the United States of America; bounded on the N by N Carolina, SE by the Atlantic, and SW and W by Georgia. It is 200 m long and 125 broad, and divided into nine districts; namely, Charleston, Beaufort, Georgetown, Ninety-six, Washington, Pinckney, Camden, Orangeburg, and Cheraw; and these are subdivided into 35 counties. The principal rivers are the Santee, Savanna, Edisto, and Pedee. This country abounds with precious ores, and there are likewise found pellucid stones of different hues. Beside maize, wheat, rice, &c. for home consumption, large quantities of tobacco, and some cotton, indigo, wheat, and rice are raised for exportation. There are also a variety of medicinal herbs and roots. In 1810 the number of inhabitants was 414,935. Charleston and Columbia are the chief towns.

Caroline Islands, a range of islands in the N Pacific ocean, discovered in 1686 by the Spaniards, in the reign of Charles II. They lie to the E of the Philippines, between 138 and 154 E lon. and 8 and 11 N lat. They are about 30 in number, and populous; the natives resembling those of the Philippines. The most considerable island is Hogoleu, about 90 m long and 40 broad; the next is Yap, at the W extremity of this chain, but not above a third part of that size.

Carron, a river of Scotland, in Stirlingshire, which rises on the S side of the Campsey hills, and flows into the frith of Forth, below Falkirk. Two m from its source, it forms a fine cascade, called the Fall of Auchinlilly; and near its mouth commences the Great Canal from the Forth to the Clyde.

Carron, a village of Scotland, in Stirlingshire, on the river Carron, 2 m N Falkirk, celebrated for the greatest iron-works in Europe. These works employ about 1600 men; and, on an average, use weekly 800 tons of coal, 400 tons of ironstone, and 100 tons of limestone. All sorts of iron goods are made here, from the most trifling article to the largest cannon; and the short piece of ordnance, called a carronade, hence received its name. The trade in coke and lime is also considerable. These works were erected in 1761, and are carried on by a chartered company.

Cart, two rivers of Scotland, in Renfrewshire, distinguished by the appellations of Black and White. The Black Cart issues from the lake Lochwinnoch; the White Cart descends from the SE angle of the county; and they both flow into the Gryfe, a few miles before its conflux with the Clyde.

Cartago, a city of New Spain, capital of Costo Rico, and a bishop's see. Here are some rich merchants. It stands on a river of the same name, 70 m from its mouth in the Pacific ocean. Lon. 84 10 W, lat. 10 15 N.

Cartama, a town of Spain, in Granada, at the foot of a mountain, near the river Guadala Medina, 8 m NW Malaga.

Carteret Island, an island in the Pacific ocean, seen by captain Carteret in 1767. It is 18 m long from E to W. Lon. 159 14 E, lat. 8 26 S.

Cartertsville, a town of Virginia, in Powhatan county, seated on James river, 40 m WNW Richmond.

Carthage, Cape, a promontory on the coast of the kingdom of Tunis, near which stood the famous city of Carthage, razed by the Romans, and some extensive ruins are to be seen on the east. The E point is 16 m ENE Tunis. Lon. 10 20 E, lat. 36 50 N.

Carthagena, a strong city and seaport Spain, in Murcia, built by Afrubal, Carthaginian general, and named after the city of Carthage. It is the see of a bishop, and a great mart for merchandize.

C A R

It has the best harbour in Spain; also the most considerable docks and magazines. The principal crops of barilla are produced in its vicinity; and a fine red earth, called almagra, used in polishing mirrors, and preparing tobacco for snuff. Carthagena was taken by sir John Leake in 1706, but the duke of Brunswick retook it. It is seated on a gulf of the same name, 27 m S Murcia. Lon. 10 W, lat. 37 37 N.

Carthagena, a province of Terra Firma, bounded on the W by the isthmus of Darien, N by the Caribbean sea, E by St. Martha, and S by Popayan. It is a mountainous country, but has many well-watered and fertile vallies; yet, being thinly peopled, it is ill cultivated. It produces a variety of valuable drugs, and some precious stones, particularly emeralds.

Carthagena, a seaport of Terra Firma, capital of the province of the same name, and one of the most populous, opulent and beautiful cities in S America. Its harbour is the safest and best fortified in the Spanish American dominions. It was the port in which the galleons first began to trade, on their arrival from Europe; and to which they returned to prepare for their voyage homeward. This circumstance raised its importance, which now must be affected by the change in the Spanish system of trade with America. The city is nearly surrounded by the sea; on the E it communicates by means of a wooden bridge with a large suburb, built on an island, which communicates with the continent by another bridge. It was taken by the English in 1585, and by the French in 1697, who found a great booty: but admiral Vernon, in 1741, though he had taken the forts, was obliged to abandon the siege. Lon. 75 43 W, lat. 10 25 N.

Cartmel, a town in Lancashire, with a market on Monday. It has a spacious old church, with a curious tower, being a square within a square, the upper part set diagonally within the lower. It is seated among the hills called Cartmel Fells, not far from the sea, 14 m N by W Lancaster, and 250 NNW London.

Caruru, or Caroor, a town of Hindoostan, in the province of Coimbatore, with a neat fort, in which is a large temple. Much sugar-cane is raised in the vicinity. It is seated on the Amarawati, 8 m above its conflux with the Cavery, and 37 NE Daraporam.

Carwar, a town of Hindoostan, in the province of Canara, and a British settlement. It is seated near the mouth of the Aliga, 50 m SW Goa. Lon. 74 14 E, lat. 14 52 N.

Carysfort, or Maerredin, a borough of Ireland, in the county of Wicklow. Here is a free-school founded by Charles I. It is 14 m SW Wicklow, and 34 S Dublin.

Casac, or Cazac, a country in the dominions of Persia, on the frontiers of Armenia, governed by princes of its own, nominally subject to Persia. The inhabitants are descended from the Cossacs, and represented as a rude and barbarous people. Casac, or Lore, is the capital, 55 m NNW Erivan. Lon. 44 34 E, lat. 40 50 N.

Casagrande, a town of New Spain, in the N part of Sonora. Here are the ruins of an Aztec city; in the midst of which is an immense edifice, supposed to have been built by the ancient Mexicans for a fortress, consisting of three floors, with a terrace above them; and the entrance is at the second floor, that a scaling-ladder was necessary. It is situate in a vast plain, on the left bank of the Gila, 230 m NW Arispe. Lon. 111 0 W, lat. 33 35 N.

Casal, a town of Piedmont, lately the capital of Montferrat, and a bishop's see. Its castle, citadel, and all its fortifications have been demolished. It is seated on the river Po, 37 m NE Turin. Lon. 8 27 E, lat. 45 18 N.

Casja! Maggiore, a town of Italy, in the duchy of Milan, on the river Po, 20 m ESE Cremona.

Casal Nuova, a town of Naples, in Calabria Ultra. An earthquake happened here in 1783, by which upward of 4000 inhabitants lost their lives. It stands near the sea, 11 m N by W Oppedo.

Casbin, or Casvin, a city of Persia, in Irak Agemi, where several of the kings of Persia have resided. Nadir Shah built a palace here, enclosed by a wall a mile and a half in circumference; and the town is surrounded by another 4 m in circuit. Although the greater part of the city is in ruins, it is yet very populous, and carries on a great trade with Ghilan. It is seated in a fine plain, 80 m NNW Teheran. Lon. 49 40 E, lat. 36 12 N.

Cascante, a town of Spain, in Navarre, on the borders of Aragon, 6 m N Tarazona, and 8 S Tudela.

Caschau; see Cassovia.

Casfo Bay, a bay of Massachusetts, in the district of Maine, between Cape Elizabeth on the SW, and Cape Small Point on the NE. Within these points, which are about 40 m apart, are about 300 small islands, some of them uninhabited, and nearly all more or less cultivated. The bay extends several arms or creeks into the country, and receives the waters of several rivers.

Caserta, a town of Naples. In Terra di Lavoro. Here is a royal palace, of a quadrangular form, which is one of the noblest in Europe for magnitude, elevation, and regularity; and it is supplied with water brought across a valley by a grand aqueduct, which in length and elevation surpasses all similar edifices of modern construction. The town was greatly damaged by an earthquake in 1803. It is 15 m N Naples.

Cashan; see Cachan.

Cashel, a city of Ireland, in the county of Tipperary, and an archbishop's see. It had formerly a wall; and part of two gates are still remaining. The ancient cathedral, now in ruins, is supposed to have been the first stone edifice in Ireland. A synod was held here by Henry I, in 1158, by which the kingdom of Ireland was confirmed to him. The modern cathedral, which serves also for a parish church, is a large and handsome edifice. The city is well inhabited for its size, but has no trade. It sends a member to parliament, and is 86 m SW Dublin. Lon. 8 10 W, lat. 52 26 N.

Cashgur, or Little Bokharia, a country of Usbec Tartary, which commences on the N and NE of Cashmere, in Hindoostan (from which it is separated by the Himmaleh mountains) and extends to 40 N lat. Great part of it is sandy desert; the other parts are populous and fertile. Here are mines of gold and silver, which the natives do no work, because they are employed wholly in feeding cattle. The musk-animals are found in this country. It likewise produces diamonds and several other precious stones. Ireken is the capital.

Cashgur, a city of Usbec Tartary, formerly the capital of the country of the same name. It has a good trade with the neighbouring countries, and stands at the foot of the Himmaleh mountains, 11 m S Ireken. Lon. 73 25 E, lat. 30 N.

vated valley, 90 m long and 50 broad, surrounded by steep mountains, which tower above the regions of snow. The periodical rains, which almost deluge the rest of India, are shut out of Cashmere by the height of the mountains, that only light showers fall here; but these are sufficiently abundant to feed hundreds of cascades, which are precipitated into the valley. The soil is the richest that can be conceived, and its productions those of the temperate zone. The numerous streams, from all quarters of the valley, bring their tribute to the Chelum, a large navigable river; and many small lakes are spread over the surface, some of which contain floating islands. But the country is subject to earthquakes; and, to guard against the most terrible effects, all the houses are built of wood. Among other curious manufactures of Cashmere, is that of shawls; and the delicate wool of which the finest are made is the product of a species of goat of this country, or of the adjoining Tibet. Here are bred a species of sheep, called Handoo, which are employed in carrying burdens. The Cashmereans are stout and well made; but their features often coarse and broad: even the women are of a deep brown complexion; but they are gay and lively, and fond of parties of pleasure on their beautiful lakes. They have a language of their own, said to be anterior to that of the Sanscrit; and a religion too, it is thought different from that of the Hindoos. The superstition of the inhabitants has multiplied the places of worship of Mahadeo, Breschan, and Brama: all Cashmere is holy land, and miraculous fountains abound.

Cashmere, a city of Hindoostan, capital of the province of Cashmere. Here are many fountains, reservoirs, and temples. The streets are narrow and dirty. The houses, many of them two and three stories high, are slightly built of brick and mortar, with a large intermixture of timber; and on the roofs is laid a covering of fine earth, which is planted with a variety of flowers. This city is without walls, and seated on both sides of the Chelum, 285 m E by S Cabul. Lon. 73 11 E, lat. 33 49 N.

Kalmucs, E by a tribe of the Turco-mans, S by Persia, and W by Georgia and Circassia. It is 680 m in length, from Ourief to Medshetifar, and in no part more than 260 in breadth. It contains several islands, but none of any note; and on account of frequent shoals, it is not navigable for vessels drawing more than 10 feet water, though in some parts a line of 450 fathoms will not reach the bottom. It has no tides, but violent gales cause strong currents; and the water is brackish, but not salt. The fishery is a nursery for sailora. The Uralian Cossacs enjoy the right of fishing on the coast 47 m on each side of the river Ural; and the inhabitants of Astracan have an exclusive privilege on the remaining shores belonging to Russia. The roes of the sturgeon and beluga supply large quantities of caviare; and the fish, which are chiefly salted and dried, form a considerable article of consumption in the Russian empire. The salmon is remarkably fine, and herrings are in great numbers.

Cassandria, a town of Holland, on the SW side of the island of Cadland, of which it is the capital. It stands at the mouth of the Zwin, 3 m N Sluys. Lon. 3 24 E, lat. 51 22 N.

Cassano, a town of Italy, in Milanese, with a castle. Here prince Eugene, in 1705, was checked in attempting to force the passage of the Adda; and in 1799 the French were defeated by the Austrians. It is seated on the Adda, 15 m NE Milan.

Cassano, a town of Naples, in Calabria Citra, 24 m NW Rossano, and 50 SE Policastro.

Cassay, or Meckley, a country of Asia, bounded on the W by Bengal, N by Assam, E and SE by Birmah, and SW by Aracan. The inhabitants are called Muggalooos, a tribe of rude mountaineers little known. It is now subject to the Birmans. Munnypour is the capital.

Cassel, a city of Germany, capital of Lower Hesse. It is divided into the Old Town, Lower New Town, and Upper New Town; the former two are chiefly built in the ancient style, but the last is very regular and handsome. The inhabitants are estimated at 25,000, and they have manufactures of linen, cloth, hats, porcelain, &c. Here is a college, founded by the landgrave in 1709. The castle, or palace, the gardens, the arsenal, the foundery, and the cabinet of curiosities, deserve the attention of travellers. It was taken by the French in 1760, and restored at the peace in 1763.

Casleton, a village in the peak of Derbyshire, 5 m N Tideswell. It is situate at the foot of a rock above 250 feet high, on which are the remains of a castle, ascribed to William Peverel, natural son of William 1. Three of the seven wonders of the peak are in its neighbourhood; the Devil's Cave, Mam Tor, and Elden Hole. The first is a cavern in the rock abovementioned, whose arched entrance is 42 feet high and 120 wide, which becomes narrower as it proceeds, and the roof descends to within two feet of the surface of a brook; this being passed over, another large cavern succeeds, with several high openings in the roof, which descends again to a second brook; after which is a third cavern called Roger Rain's House, because of the perpetual dripping: the length of the whole cavern is 617 yards. Mam Tor, a mile w of the village, is a mountain, 1300 feet above the level of the valley, on the top and sides of which is a camp, supposed to be Roman: it overtops the whole Peak country; and the vulgar story is that this hill is continually crumbling, without being diminished. Elden Hole, a mile s of Mam Tor, is a perpendicular gulf or chasm in a limestone rock, the depth of which is unfathomable, its sides being so very shelving and irregular: it has been plumbed from 192 to 295 yards, 40 of which seemed to be in water.

Castletown, the capital of the isle of Man, near the s coast, with a rocky and shallow harbour, which checks its commerce, and renders it inferior to Douglas in most respects. In the centre of the town, on a high rock, is Castle Rushen, a magnificent pile, built of freestone in 960, by Guttred, a prince of the Danish line, who lies buried in the edifice. It is occupied by the governor of the island, and on one side of it are the chancery offices, and good barracks. Near the town is a fine quarry of black marble, whence the steps of St. Paul's church, in London, were taken. Lon. 4 38 w, lat. 53 55 N.

Celebes, or Macassar, an island in the Indian ocean, to the E of Borneo. It is 560 m from N to S, and divided into various portions by large bays, that the breadth is commonly not above 60 m. The E side of the island is sometimes called Celebes, and the W Macassar; but in general the former name is given to the whole island. It lies under the line; but the heat is moderated by the N winds, and the rains, which constantly fall five days before and after the full moon, and during the two months that the sun is nearly vertical. The products are maize, rice, sago, cocoa nuts, pumpions, black pepper, callivances or beans, melons, plantains, mangoes, oranges, lemons, pines, &c. There are also numerous poisonous trees and plants; and with the juice of the notorious upas, the natives often poison their lances and arrows. It is well stocked with horses, buffaloes, cattle, deer, sheep, goats, hogs, cats, and monkeys. Cotton grows in great abundance. In the middle of the island are mountains, almost inaccessible, in which are quarries of excellent stone and marble, and mines of gold, copper, and tin. The inhabitants are Malays, consisting of several nations or tribes, and the best soldiers in these parts. They are short and thick set, have a flat face, but not thick lips, and their colour is of a reddish yellow. They are frequently called Bugasses, and have something free and dignified in their manner superior to other Malays, and are remarkably industrious. The Dutch have some settlements on the coasts, of which the chief is Macassar; and, in 1810, the English obtained possession of Gorontano, and Manado.

Cesaria, a town of the capital of the diocese of Herod, in the province of Syria, and in the space between the Tiber and the sea, from an obscure city, a magnificent city, and a harbour made by Herod. Here St. Paul was confined 2 years, and spent which made it famous. It was at first called Cesarea, and became a Roman city, and a Roman city. Many revolutions, when it was destroyed in 1264, when it was rebuilt by the Turks, and frequently repaired, and rapidly declining, without a hundred years, and scattered on the coast, its port not yet built, remains of the city have long been seen, whenever required at Acre, on the sea coast.

Cervinara, a town of Naples, in Principato Ultra, 12 m SW Benevento.

Cesaria, once a seaport of Syria, and the capital of Palestine. It was so called by Herod, in honour of Augustus Cesar, and in the space of ten years became, from an obscure fortress, the most magnificent city of all Syria, with a noble harbour made at immense expense. Here St. Paul was a prisoner above two years, and spoke that eloquent appeal, which made Felix to tremble. The city was at first governed by kings; but it became a Roman colony, under Vespasian, and changed its name to Flavia. Many revolutions succeeded to the year 1264, when the Christians finally ceded it to the Turks; but from disasters so frequently renewed, its former splendor rapidly declined. For ages it has been without a human inhabitant; its gorgeous temples, palaces, theatres, &c. scattered on the ground; and the site of its port not to be distinguished. The remains of this city, yet considerable, have long been resorted to as a quarry, whenever building materials were required at Acre. Its extensive ruins are on the seacoast, 18 m SSW Acre.

In 1810, a British force was admitted into the garrison to protect it from the French. It stands at the extremity of a peninsula, on the strait of Gibraltar, 20 m SSE Gibraltar, and 22 NNE Tetuan. Lon. 5 13 W, lat. 35 50 N.

Ceylon, an island in the Indian ocean, separated from the SE point of Hindoostan, by Palk strait and the gulf of Manaar. It is 280 m long and 140 in its greatest breadth, nearly resembling a ham in shape, the narrow part to the N; and hence the peninsula of Jafnapatam was called Ham by the Dutch. The flat tracts on the coast, covered with rich fields of rice, are bounded by groves of cocoa-nut trees, and the prospect usually terminated by woods, which cover the sides of mountains. The E coast is cold and rocky, and the N part is every where indented with inlets of the sea. The interior parts abound with steep and lofty mountains, covered with thick forests, and full of almost impenetrable jungles; but there are fertile vallies. The woods and mountains completely surround the dominions of the king of Candy, and are a natural barrier against his foreign enemies. The most lofty range of mountains divide the island nearly into two parts, and terminate completely the effects of the monsoons, which set in periodically from opposite sides of them. The seasons are more regulated by the monsoons than the course of the sun; for the coolest season is during the summer solstice, while the western monsoon prevails. Spring commences in October, and the hottest season is from January to the beginning of April. The climate, on the coast, is more temperate than on the continent of Hindoostan; but in the interior of the country the heat is many degrees greater, and often extremely sultry and unhealthy. The most considerable mountain is called Hamalell, or Adam's Peak, and is of a pyramidal form, near the middle of the island. On its top is a large flat stone, with an impression on it in the shape of a man's foot, but considerably longer. The Cingalese have a tradition that Budha, the great author of their religion, left the print of his foot on this stone when he ascended into heaven. Most of the rivers in the island take their rise in the middle range of mountains, and the two largest are the Malivagonga and the Mulivaddy. The rivers, although smooth at their outlets into the sea, are seldom navigable to any great distance, for on entering the mountains they become rocky and rapid. Beside the rivers, with which the island abounds, there are many lakes and canals communicating with them. In some places there are rich mines, whence are procured rubies, sapphires, topazes, and other stones of less value; also iron, copper, and black lead. It is remarkable for abundance of cinnamon; and in the kingdom of Candy is plenty of very large cardamoms. The pepper here is so good, that it sells dearer than that of other places. Two species of the bread-fruit tree are indigenous to this island; one of which is used by the Cingalese as bread, and, in times of scarcity, instead of rice. One of the most remarkable trees in Ceylon is the wallipot, which grows straight and tall, and is as big as the mast of a ship: the leaves are so large as to cover 15 men; when dried, they are round, and fold up like a fan. The natives wear a piece of the leaf on their head when they travel, to shade them from the sun, and they are so tough that they are not easily torn. Every soldier carries one, and it serves for his tent. Of the animal tribes, this island is famous for its elephants, which are more esteemed than any others in the Indies; and it abounds with buffalos, goats, hogs, deer, hares, dogs, jackals, monkeys, tigers, and bears. It has a great variety of birds, some of which are not to be met with in other places; also very dangerous serpents, some of them said to be of a prodigious size, and ants which do a great deal of mischief. The aborigines of Ceylon consist of two classes of people, the Cingalese and the Vaddahs. The latter are still in the rudest stage of social life; they live embosomed in the woods, or in the hollows of the mountains; hunting their sole employment, and providing for the day their only care. Some of them acknowledge the authority of the king of Candy; and exchange with the Cingalese elephants teeth and deer flesh, for arrows, cloth, &c. but this practice is not general, for two-thirds of them hold no communication with the Cingalese, and have an utter antipathy to strangers. They worship a particular god; and their religious doctrine seems to consist of some indistinct notions of the fundamental principles of the Braminical faith. In some places they have erected temples; but for the most part they perform worship at an altar constructed of bamboos, under the shade of a banyan-tree. The Cingalese are the subjects of the king of Candy, and appear to have been, beyond time of memory, a race of Hindoos, instructed in all the arts of civil life, nearly in as high a degree as the nations of the neighbouring continent. They are pagans; and, though they acknowledge a supreme God, they worship only the inferior deities, among which they reckon the sun and moon. In their temples are images, well executed, though their figures are monstrous; some are of silver, copper, &c. The different sorts of gods have various priests, who have all some privileges. Their houses are small and low, with walls made of hurdles, smoothly covered with clay, and the roofs thatched. They have no chimneys, and their furniture is only a few earthen vessels, with two copper basins, and two or three stools; none but the king being allowed to sit in a chair. Their food is generally rice, and their common drink is water, which they pour into their mouths out of a vessel like a tea-pot, through the spout, never touching it with their lips. There are some inscriptions on the rocks, which must be very ancient, for they are not understood by any of the present inhabitants. The Portuguese were the first Europeans who settled on this island; but the Dutch soon drove them away, and established themselves on all the principal places along the coast. In 1796,

This county extends 33 m from N to S, and 42 from E to W, without including the peninsula just mentioned on the W, or a narrow tract of land, which stretches, between Lancashire and Derbyshire, to Yorkshire, on the NE. It contains 650,880 acres; is divided into seven hundreds, and 88 parishes; has a city and 12 market-towns, and sends four members to parliament. The number of inhabitants was 191,751 in 1801, and 227,031 in 1811. The principal rivers are the Mersey, Weaver, and Dee; and it has several small lakes. It is rich in pasture and corn land; but there are several heaths, upon which horses and sheep feed, among which are the extensive forests of Macclesfield and Delamere. The country is generally level; the highest hills in it are about Frodsham; and its extensive pastures feed a great number of cows, from whose milk is made excellent cheese, of which vast quantities are sent to London, Bristol, York, Scotland, Ireland, &c. This county is likewise famous for its salt springs at Namptwich, Middlewich, Northwich, and Winsford; and, at Northwich, there are vast pits of solid salt rock.

Chester, a city and the capital of Cheshire, and a bishop's see, with a market on Wednesday and Saturday. It is governed by a mayor; and the walls are nearly 2 m in circuit, in which are four gates, toward the cardinal points. It has a strong castle (in which is the shire-hall) and nine churches, beside the cathedral. The main streets have a sort of covered portico running out from house to house, which are called rows, and afford a sheltered walk for the foot passengers. The number of inhabitants was 25,052 in 1801, and 16,140 in 1811. It has a constant communication with Ireland; this and Holyhead being the principal places for taking shipping for Dublin. Chichester, a city and the capital of Sussex, and a county of itself, governed by a mayor, with a market on Wednesday and Saturday. It is a bishop's see, and has seven churches beside the cathedral. The city is walled round, and had formerly four gates. It exports corn, malt, &c. has some foreign commerce, and a manufacture of needles. The haven affords fine lobsters. The number of inhabitants was 4744 in 1801, and 6425 in 1811. It is seated in a plain, on the river Levant, near its entrance into an arm of the English channel, 61 m sw London. Lon. 0 48 W, lat. 50 50 N.

Chiclana, a town of Spain, in Andalusia, much frequented by the merchants of Cadiz in the spring months. The hills in its vicinity abound with mineral springs. Near this place, on the heights of Barrofa, the English and Portuguese gained a signal victory over the French in 1811. It is 16 m ssw Cadiz.

Chili, or Chile, a country of S America, extending on the coast of the Pacific ocean, from lat. 25 to 42 s, from the desert of Atacama to the island of Chiloe. Its length is 1190 m, but it varies in breadth from 140 to 340 to its eastern boundary, which is the great range of mountains called the Andes. This country was discovered by Diego d'Almagro in 1525. The mountainous part of it is possessed by the Puelches, Araucos, and other tribes of its original inhabitants, who are still formidable neighbours to the Spaniards. That part of Chili, therefore, which may be properly deemed a Spanish province, is a narrow district, extending along the coast, from the 25th to the 37th degree of latitude, about 840 m. The Indian country to the s of this, from the river Biobio to the island of Chiloe, is inhabited by three distinct nations, the Auracaneans, the Cuncheas, and the Huilliches; but the Spaniards here possess the town and district of Valdivia. The Spanish part is divided into 13 provinces, which, commencing on the side of Peru, are Copcapo, Coquimbo, Quillota, Aconcagua, Melipilla, St. Jago, Rancagua, Calchagua, Manle, Itata, Chillan, Puchacay, and Huilquilemu; but they are imperfectly designated, and some of them six times larger than others. Chili, though bordering on the torrid zone, never feels the extremity of heat, being screened on the E by the Andes, and refreshed from the W by cooling sea-breezes. The fertility of the soil corresponds with the benignity of the climate, and is wonderfully accommodated to European productions. The most valuable of these, corn, wine, and oil, abound in Chili, as if they had been native in the country. Here all the fruits imported from Europe attain to full maturity; and the animals not only multiply, but improve. The horned cattle are of larger size than those of Spain; and its horses excel in beauty and spirit the famous Andalusian race, from which they sprung. Nature, too, has enriched Chili with valuable mines of gold, silver, copper, iron, tin, and lead; also with salt springs, and mineral waters. Yet, in all this extent of country there are not above 80,000 white inhabitants, and 240,000 blacks and people of a mixed race.

This country is not infested by any kind of insect except the chiguas or prickler, nor by any poisonous reptile; and although in the woods and fields some snakes are to be found, their bite is not dangerous; nor does any savage or ferocious beast excite terror in its plains. The chief rivers are the Maule, Biobio, Cauten, Tolten, Valdivia, Chaiuin, Riobueno, and Sinfondo, which, with many others, rise in the Andes and flow w into the ocean. St. Jago is the capital.

Chilka, a lake in the Deccan of Hindoostan, which bounds the five Circars on the N. It lies on the coast of the bay of Bengal, and seems the effect of the breach of the sea over a flat sandy surface, whose elevation was something above the level of the country within. It communicates with the sea by a very narrow but deep opening, and is shallow within. It is 40 m long and 14 broad, with a narrow slip of ground between it and the sea. It contains many inhabited islands. On the NW it is bounded by a ridge of mountains, a continuation of that which extends from the Mahanuddy to the Godavery river, and shuts up the Circars toward the continent.

Chillan, the capital of an inland province of the same name, in Chili. The whole district is a plain, favorable to the raising of sheep, whose wool is highly esteemed; grain and fruit are also produced in abundance. The city was destroyed by an earthquake in 1751, and the next year transferred to a more convenient site. It is well peopled, and stands on the river Chillan, 80 m NE Concepcion. Chilpancingo, a town of New Spain, in the province of Mexico, seated in a fertile country, 55 m NNE Acapulco.

Chiltern, a chain of chalky hills in England, passing from E to W through the middle of Buckinghamshire, and covered, in various parts, with woods. This district belongs to the crown, and for time immemorial has had the nominal office of Steward of the Chiltern Hundreds, by the acceptance of which a commoner vacates his seat in parliament.

Chimay, a town of France, in the department of Nord. Near it are mines of iron, with founderies and forges. It is seated on the Blanche, 20 m ENE Cambray.

Chimborazo, a mountain of the kingdom of Quito, the loftiest of the Andes and in the known world. It is continually covered with snow, and the top terminates in a truncated cone. Many rivers issue from this mountain, and the warm streams that flow from its N side warrant the idea of a volcano within. In 1797 it was visited by Humboldt, who with his party ascended the E side till they were stopped by a chafin 500 feet wide. Here they planted their instruments on a narrow ledge of porphyritic rock, which projected from a vast field of unfathomed snow. The air was reduced to half its usual density, and intensely cold; respiration was difficult, and blood oozed from their eyes, lips, and gums. They stood on the highest spot ever trod by man, which was ascertained from barometrical observations to be 19,300 feet above the level of the sea. From this extreme station, the top of Chimborazo was found, by trigonometrical measurement, to be 2140 feet higher, which makes its whole height to be 21,440 feet.

China, an extensive country in Asia, between 98 and 123 E lon. and 21 and 42 N lat. It is 1330 m from N to S, and 1030 from E to W; bounded on the E by the Yellow and the China sea, S by the latter sea and the kingdoms of Tonquin, Lao, and Birmah, W by Tibet, and N by Tartary, from which it is separated by a great wall. This stupendous wall exceeds every thing of human art and industry that is read of

in history; and is said to have been built about the year 1160, to prevent the frequent incursions of the Monguls. It extends along a hilly surface 1500 m in length; the breadth, in many parts, is upward of 15 feet at the top; and it is flanked with towers at the distance of 300 feet: the materials of which the whole is composed are so close and solid, that it is yet almost entire. China is divided into 15 provinces, which are Pe-teh-li, Kiang-nan, Kiang-si, Fo-kien, Tche-kiang, Hou-quang, Ho-nan, Chan-tong, Chan-si, Chen-si, Se-tchuen, Quang-tong, Quang-si, Yun-nan, and Koei-teheou. These provinces contain 4402 walled cities, divided into two classes, the civil class containing 2045, and the military 2357. The civil class is again divided into three other classes; the first are called foes, the second teheou, and the third shien. According to the statement of the population of China, delivered to lord Macartney, in 1793, by a Chinese mandarin, the number of inhabitants was not less than 333,000,000; but from the calculations in Neu-hoff's travels the population is about 230,000,000. The climate and soil are various, as the different provinces are nearer to, or remote from, the s; severe cold being felt at Peking, while the southern provinces are exposed to excessive heat. Here are several large lakes; the principal of them are the Po-yang, in Kiang-si, 250 m in circumference; the Tong-ting, in Hou-quang, above 200 m in circumference; the Tai, part of which extends into Kiang-nan; the Hong-tse, and the Kao-yeou, in the province of Kiang-nan. The chief rivers are the Kian-ku and the Hoan-ho; beside which there are an infinitude of great and small rivers, and fine canals, one of which, called the Grand Canal, surpasses any thing of the kind in the world. By this canal, and some rivers, there is a communication by water between Peking and Canton, the two extremes of the empire, except the interruption of a day's journey, by a mountain in the province of Kiang-si. This inland navigation, upward of 1400 m, is effected from Peking by passing down the Pei-ho to the influx of the Eu-ho, then up that river to the entrance of the Grand canal, and along that canal to the Kian-ku: then up that river into the Po-yang lake, and thence up the river that runs through Kiang-si; then over the mountain before mentioned, and down the river of Canton. The manufactures of China embrace almost every article of industry; but the most noted are porcelain, silk, cotton, and paper. The internal commerce of the country is immense, but the external trade is unimportant; the chief export is that of tea, which is sent to England. In several of the provinces, the land yields two crops a year; yet though the husbandman cultivates it with such care as not to lose the smallest portion of ground, the country has been often desolated by famine. One great cause of the scarcity of grain is the prodigious consumption occasioned by the composition of wines, and of a spirituous liquor called rick. The numerous mountains of China (which are chiefly in the n and w parts) contain mines of iron, tutenag, copper, quicksilver, gold, and silver: but those of gold and silver are little worked, that the people may attend to the more useful labours of agriculture. Quarries of marble, coal, lapis lazuli, jasper, rock crystals, granite, and a kind of sonorous stones of which musical instruments are composed, are abundant; and here is potters earth of such various and superior kinds, that the fine porcelain of China is unrivalled. Beside the fruits peculiar to the country, it produces the greater part of those of Europe; but (except the grapes and pomegranates) they are much inferior. Oranges were first brought us from China. Here are also lemons, citrons, the se-tse, a kind of fig peculiar to China; the li-tchi, of the size of a date, its stone covered with a soft juicy pulp, of an exquisite taste, but dangerous when eaten to excess; the long-yen, or dragonseye, its pulp white, tart, and juicy, not so agreeable to the taste, but more wholesome than the li-tchi. The Chinese excel in the art of managing kitchengardens, and have a number of vegetables unknown to us. They cultivate even the bottom of their waters; the beds of their lakes, ponds, and rivulets, producing crops unknown to us, particularly the pishi, or water chestnut, the fruit of which (found in a cover formed by its root) is exceedingly wholesome, and of a very delicate taste. Among the trees peculiar to China is the tallow-tree, the fruit of which is white, of the size of a small walnut, and the pulp has the properties of tallow; the wax tree, producing a kind of white wax, almost equal to that made by bees; the tsi-chu, or varnish tree, which produces the admirable Chinese varnish; the ti-ly-mou, or iron wood, the wood of which is so hard and heavy, that it sinks in water, and the anchors of the Chinese ships are made of the camphire-tree; the bamboo reeds, which grow to the height and size of a large tree, and beside being used as natural pipes to convey water, are employed for numberless other purposes; the tea-plant, &c. with cotton, betel, and tobacco. The flowering shrubs, flowers, herbs, and medicinal plants, are too numerous to be recited. In the mountains and forests are wild animals of every species; but that valuable quadruped, the muskdeer, is peculiar to this country. Of its birds, the most beautiful in China, and perhaps, in the world, is the kin-hi, or golden fowl. The complexion of the Chinese is a sort of tawny, and they have large foreheads, small eyes, short noses, large ears, long beards, and black hair; and those are thought to be the most handsome who are the most bulky. The women affect a great deal of modesty, and are remarkable for their little feet. The men endeavour to make a pompous appearance when they go abroad; and yet their houses are mean and low, consisting only of a ground floor. Their towns are so much alike, that those who know one are acquainted with all. Learning, with the arts and sciences in general, is much cultivated in this country. Their writing is very particular; for every letter is a word, and consequently they have as many letters, or characters, as words in their language. Their religion is paganism. They allow polygamy, and keep their wives pretty close. Burials are not permitted in cities or towns, and their sepulchres are commonly on barren hills and mountains. They pretend to have a great veneration for their ancestors; and some keep images of them in their houses, to which they pay a sort of adoration. They have laws which regulate the civilities and ceremonious salutations they pay to each other, for which reason they always appear to be extremely good-natured; and yet they are as deceitful as any people in the world. The government is absolute, and the emperor has the privilege of naming his successor; but the chief mandarin has permission to tell him of his faults. He looks upon his subjects as his children, and professes to govern them with paternal affection. The Chinese empire is very ancient; they pretend that it existed many thousand years before Noah's flood, but it is generally allowed to have commenced 2500 years before the birth of Christ. It now includes Tibet, the greatest part of Tartary, Corea, and numerous islands on the s and e coasts Chitteldroog, or Chatratal, a strong fort and town of Hindoostan, capital of the NE district of Mysore. The plain of Chitteldroog is 10 m long and 4 broad, surrounded by rocky hills, on one of which stands the fort. The town formerly occupied a great portion of the plain, and is still a considerable place, but now confined entirely within the walls which are near the foot of the rock. Hyder, who obtained possession of this place by treachery, strengthened the walls; and other works have been since added as to render it totally impregnable against any neighbouring power. Since the final defeat of Tippon, in 1799, it belongs to the rajah of Mysore; and the English keep a garrison here. It is 48 m NW Sera, and 117 N by W Seringapatam. Lon. 76 26 E, lat. 14 6 N.

Cholula, a town of New Spain, in Tlaxcala. In the time of Cortez it was a large city, famed for its jewellers and potters, and the multitude of its temples. Here is a great pyramid, the sides of whose base are 1423 feet each, and exactly in the direction of the meridians and parallels; it consists of four stages, and its present perpendicular elevation is only 177 feet; the platform has a surface of 43,208 square feet, and in the midst is a church, surrounded with cypress, in which mass is said every morning by an Indian priest, whose habitual abode is the summit of this extraordinary monument: from a perforation made in the N side, its exterior appears to be constructed of alternate strata of brick and clay. The length of its base far exceeds that of all the edifices of the kind yet found, and is almost the double of the greatest pyramid in Egypt. Cholula contains 16,000 inhabitants, and is seated amid beautiful plantations of agave, 17 m W Puebla de los Angeles.

Chorasan, or Korasan, a province of Persia, bounded on the N by Charasm and the country of the Usbec Tartars, E by Bukharia and Balk, S by Segestan and Kerman, and W by Irak, Mezeranderan, and the Caspian sea. It is about 450 m in length and 420 in breadth. This extensive territory is little known to the Europeans; but it is represented to be a level country, intersected with sandy deserts and irregular ridges of mountains; and the soil, in general, excellent, producing wine, fruit, corn, rice, and silk, in the greatest abundance and of the best quality. The king of Persia's authority extends only over the cities of Mesched, Nisapour, Terhiz, and Tabas, with their dependencies. The SE parts, including the city of Cinque Ports, certain ports on the coast of England, opposite France, so called on account of their being five in number, when their first charter was granted by William 1, in 1077. These were Dover, Hastings, Hithe, Romney, and Sandwich; to which were afterward added Winchelsea, Seaford, and Rye. That king appointed a constable of Dover castle (who is now called Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports) and invested him with the command of these ports, whose inhabitants had considerable privileges and immunities, for which they were to supply the government with 57 ships, at 40 days notice, and to pay their crews during 15 days. At that period, the opulent traders of London were styled barons; a privilege that was enjoyed likewise by the merchants of these ports, whose representatives, to this day, are styled Barons of the Cinque Ports.

Of these circars, Guntoor belongs to the nizam of the Deccan; and Condapilly, Ellore, Rajamundry, and Cicacole, are in the possession of the English. The last four extend from the N bank of the river Kistna to the lake Chilka; forming a narrow slip of country 350 m long, and from 26 to 75 broad, bounded by mountains and extensive forests on the side opposite the sea. The English circars had been ceded to the French, by the nizam of the Deccan, in 1753; but they were conquered by the English in 1759.

nations, between the Black sea and the Caspian; bounded by the government of Caucasia on the N, and by Georgia and Mingrelia on the S, being separated from Russia by the river Cuban. It contains the district of Great Kabardah, Little Kabardah, Beslen, Temirgoi, Abafsch, Bfeduch, Hatukai, and Bshani. This nation, from their extraordinary courage and military genius, might be formidable where they united under one chief, but as they subsist by raising cattle, and are therefore forced to reside on the banks of rivers, for the sake of water and pasturage, they become divided into separate and hostile tribes. From this disunion the Circassians of the Cuban possess so little power as to be scarcely known even to Russians, but by the general appellation of Cuban Tartars, in which they are confounded with the Abkhas and Nogays, their neighbours. The Kabardian Circassians, called Tschherkessi by the Russians, are the most powerful people of the N side of Caucasia; and this superiority has introduced among their neighbours such a general imitation of their manners, that from the description of these an idea may be formed of all the rest. They are divided into three classes; the princes, the usdens or nobles, and the vassals or peasants. A certain number of peasants is allotted to each princely family. In each of these, the eldest individual is considered as chief of the family, and as judge, protector, and father of all the vassals attached to it. No prince can be a landholder; he has no other property than his arms, horses, slaves, and the tribute he can extort from the neighbouring nations. The person of every prince is sacred; but this is the only distinction of birth when unaccompanied by personal merit; the greatest honour a prince can acquire is that of being the first of the nation to charge the enemy. The princes are not to be distinguished in time of peace from the nobles, or even from the peasants; their food and dress are the same, and their houses little better. The nobles are chosen by the princes from the inferior class; they are the officers of the prince, and the executors of the laws, and are employed in the general assemblies of the nation to gain the assent of the people to the measures proposed by the princes. The vassals, as well as the usdens, are proprietors of lands. The Circassians do not appear to have ever had any written laws, but are governed by a kind of common law, or collection of ancient usages. They have few manufactures; and their agriculture produces barely sufficient for their own subsistence. Sheep and horses are the principal articles of their commerce, particularly the latter, which sell at a high price; but the balance of trade would be considerably against them, were it not for the slaves which they make in their predatory excursions. At the birth of a prince, some usden, or sometimes the prince of another family is chosen as his preceptor, to whose care he is committed on the third day, and the father never sees his son again till his marriage. The son of an usden remains under the parental roof till four years old, and is then consigned to a preceptor, who need not be of the same rank, by whom he is taught to ride, to use arms, and to steal; and does not return to his father's house, until his cunning, address, and strength, are supposed to be perfect. The preceptor is recompensed by nineteenth's of the booty made by his pupil while under this tuition. This mode of education is persevered in, with a view to prevent the bad effects of paternal indulgence, and is supposed to be peculiar to the Circassians; but the object of education is the same among all the mountaineers of Caucasia, who universally subsist by robbery. Girls are brought up by the mother; they learn to embroider, to make their own dress, and that of their future husbands. The daughters of slaves receive the same education; these are principally Georgians, and are sold according to their beauty, from 20 to 100l. Their musical instruments are a long flute with only three stops, a species of mandoline, and a tambourin. Their dances have little gayety or expression; the steps difficult, but not graceful. The habitation of a Circassian is composed of two huts; one allotted to the husband, and to the reception of strangers; the other to the wife and family: the court which separates them is surrounded by palisades. Their food is simple, consisting of a little meat, some paste made of gom or millet, and a kind of beer, composed of the same grain fermented. Whatever may have been the original religion of this people, they have been successively converted to Christianity and Mahomedanism, and have now no religion or worship among them. They break, without scruple, such oaths as they have taken on the bible and the koran; but there are certain forms of oaths, and certain places in the neighbourhood of Citta Vecchia, a fortified city of Malta, formerly the capital of the island, and still the seat of the bishopric. The most remarkable edifices are the palace of the grand master, and the cathedral. Here are extensive catacombs, about 15 feet below the surface of the rock in which they are cut; they contain streets formed with such regularity, that the title of Subterraneous City has been given to this place. Near the city is the Grotto of St. Paul, divided into three parts by iron grates; in the furthest part is an altar, and statue of the saint, in white marble. This old city was considerably larger than at present; for the new city, Valetta, being more conveniently seated, has drawn away the greater number of its inhabitants. It stands on a hill, in the interior of the island, 6 m W by S Valetta.

Cochinchina, a kingdom of Asia, 500 m long and 120 broad, bounded on the e by the China sea, w by Tonquin (from which it is separated by mountains and a strong wall) w by Cambodia, and s by Ciampa. The climate is healthy, the summer heat being tempered by regular breezes from the sea. September, October, and November is the rainy season, when the low lands are suddenly overflowed by torrents of water from the mountains: the inundations happen generally once a fortnight, and continue three or four days. In the following three months there are frequent rains, brought by cold northerly winds, which distinguish this country with a winter different from any other in the east. The inundations render the land fruitful, many parts producing three crops of grain in the year. Gold is almost taken pure from the mines, and there are rich silver mines. The country is intersected by rivers, which are well calculated for promoting inland commerce, yet not large enough to admit vessels of great burden; but there are commodious harbours on the coast, particularly that of Turon. The aborigines of Cochinchina are called Moys, and they inhabit the chain of mountains which separate it from Cambodia. To these strong holds they were driven, about the beginning of the 15th century, by the present possessors of the country. They are a savage people, very black, and in features resemble the Caffres. The present inhabitants bear evident marks of being derived from the same stock as the Chinese; their religion is also the same, and most of their manners and customs. They are a courteous, affable, inoffensive race, rather inclined to indolence. The women are by far the most active sex, and merchants often employ them as their factors and brokers. The cities and towns have gates at the end of each street, which are shut every night. The houses are mostly of bamboo, covered with rushes or the straw of rice, and stand in groves of oranges, limes, plantains, and cocoa trees. Here is plenty of sugar, pepper, rice, yams, sweet potatoes, pumpkins, and melons; also ivory, musk, honey, and silk: and the edible bird-nests, esteemed a luxury in China, are chiefly found here; they are as white as snow, formed by a specie of swallows from some unknown viscous substance, and great numbers are exported. The king of this country consummated a great revolution about the beginning of the present century; and also acquired the adjoining kingdoms of Tonquin, Cambodia, Lao, and Ciampa; that his dominions, united, now form one great empire. The government is a despotism, upon the model of that of China. The capital is Hue.

Condore, a fertile island in the China sea, near the coast of Cambodia. It is in the form of a crescent, 9 m long and 2 where broadest; and is surrounded by several islets. Buffalos, hogs, vegetables, and water are to be had here. The inhabitants are small in stature, well shaped, and of a dark olive complexion. They have a little idol temple, built of wood, and thatched like their houses, which are very mean. The English had a settlement here in 1702; but the factors falling out with the natives, most of them were murdered, and the rest driven thence in 1705. It has a spacious bay on the E side. Lon. 107 20 E, lat. 8 40 N.

Congo, a country on the W coast of Africa, between 4 and 15 degrees of S lat. containing the kingdoms of Loango, Congo, Angola, Matamba, and Benguela. It was discovered by the Portuguese in 1482; and is bounded on the N by Oninea, S by parts unknown, E by Bemba, and W by the Atlantic. It is sometimes called Lower Guinea; and the Portuguese have many settlements on the coast, as well as in the inland country. There are many desert places within land, in which are elephants, tigers, leopards, monkeys, and monstrous serpents; but near the coast the soil is more fertile; and there are fruits of many kinds, beside palm-trees, from which wine and oil are made.

The greatest part of the inhabitants go almost naked: they worship the sun, moon, stars, and animals of different kinds; but the Portuguese have made many converts: they are skilful in weaving cotton cloth; and trade in slaves, ivory, cassia, and tamarinds. Congo, properly so called, is only 150 m broad along the coast, but is 370 inland. From March to September is called the winter season, when it rains almost every day; and the summer is from October to March, when the weather is very hot. The principal rivers are the Zaire and Coanza. The capital is St. Salvador.

Congon, a town of Persia, in Laristan. It has a market for pearls, brought from Bahrin, and an excellent road to the Persian gulf. It is 76 m SE Lar. Lon. 54 30 E, lat. 26 40 N.

Coni, a fortified town of Piedmont, capital of a territory of its name, with a strong citadel. The trade here is considerable, it being the repository for all the merchandise from Turin and Nice, which is intended for Lombardy, Switzerland, and Germany. It is so strong by nature and art, that though frequently besieged by the French, they never could take it. In 1796 it was delivered up to the French, after their victory at Mondovi, as a hostage for the performance of a treaty; and it surrendered to the Austrians in 1799. It is seated on a rock, at the conflux of the Greffe and Sture, 35 m S Turin. Lon. 7 44 E, lat. 44 24 N.

Connecticut, one of the United States of America, 100 m long and 60 broad; bounded on the n by Massachusetts, e by Rhode Island, w by New York, and s by the Sound, which divides it from Long Island. This country is the most populous, in proportion to its extent, of any of the United States, and produces the necessaries and conveniences of life in abundance. The chief exports are horses, mules, oxen, maize, potash, pearlsh, beef, pork, timber, and lumber. The principal rivers are the Connecticut, Housatonic, and Thames. It contains the counties of Hartford, Newhaven, New London, Fairfield, Windham, Litchfield, Middlesex, and Tolland. In 1810 the number of inhabitants was 261,942. Hartford and Newhaven are the chief towns.

Connecticut, a river of New England, which rises in a swamp on the n con-

Constance, a fortified city of Suabia, and lately a bishop's see; seated on the s side of the Rhine, between the upper and lower lakes of Constance. Though once flourishing in commerce, and celebrated in history, it now scarcely contains 4000 inhabitants. Constance is famous for a council, in 1514, which caused John Huss and Jerome of Prague to be burnt; and likewise condemned the doctrine of Wickliß, and ordered his bones to be burned 40 years after he was dead. In 1787, about 300 emigrants from Geneva were settled here, by emperor Joseph II, who granted them the secularized convent of the Dominicans, for a manufacture of printed lineus. The French took possession of this city in 1796; and in 1805 it was ceded, by the treaty of Presburg, to the elector of Baden. It is 35 m ne Zurich. Lon. 9 7 E, lat. 47 38 N.

Constance, Lake of, the most considerable lake of Switzerland, which it separates from Suabia, that part excepted where the city of Constance is seated on its s side. It is divided into three parts. The upper and largest part is called Boden See; the middle part is named Bodner See; and the lower part Unter See, Zeller See, or the lake of Zell. The upper lake is 37 m long and 15 in its greatest breadth. Through this lake the Rhine flows, and then enters the Zeller See, which is 16 m long and 10 in its greatest breadth. Like all the lakes in Switzerland, this is deeper in summer than in winter; which is owing to the first melting of the snow from the adjacent mountains.

Constantina, the eastern province of the kingdom of Algiers, and the largest and richest of the four. It is governed by a bey, who pays an annual tribute to the dey of Algiers. The greatest part along the coast is mountainous. In the mountains dwell free Arabian and Moorish tribes, of whom the Cabyla are deemed the most turbulent and cruel. As these free mountaineers possess a superfluity of oil, soap, dried figs, and timber: the government of Algiers, which stands in need of these articles, is obliged in many things to show indulgence to those tribes. See Zaab.

Constantina, a city of the kingdom of Algiers, capital of the province of the same name. It is seated at the top of a high hill, and entered toward the N over a stupendous Roman bridge, having three rows of lofty arches. Here are many Roman antiquities, particularly a triumphal arch; and in the vicinity are numerous remains of the ancient Cirta. Next to Algiers, this city is the most populous in the kingdom. The chief articles for trade are corn, wax, hides, fine wool, camels hair, ostrich feathers, tallow, goat and sheep skins, beeves, sheep, horses, and mules. It is seated on the Rummel, 190 m E by S Algiers. Lon. 6 24 E, lat. 36 24 N.

Constantinople, one of the largest cities in Europe, and the capital of the Turkish empire. It is of a triangular form; and seated between the Black sea and the Archipelago, on a neck of land that advances toward Natolia, from which it is separated by a strait a mile in breadth. The sea of Marmora washes its walls on the S, and a gulf of the strait of Constantinople does the same on the NE. It was anciently called Byzantium, but the name was changed by Constantine the great, who made it the seat of the Roman empire in the east. It was taken, in 1453, by the Turks, who have kept possession of it ever since. The grand signior's palace, called the Seraglio, is on the seaside, surrounded by walls flanked with towers, and separated from the city by canals. It stands on the site of ancient Byzantium, the E point of the present city, and is 3 m in circumference, consisting of an assemblage of palaces and apartments placed by the side of one another, without symmetry and without order. The principal entrance of this palace is of marble, and is called Capi, that is, the Port (or gate) a name used frequently to express the court, or the empire. The castle of Seven Towers is a state prison, and stands near the sea of Marmora, at the W point of the city from the seraglio; and at the NW point, without the walls, is the imperial palace of Aijub, with a village of the same name. The number of houses in Constantinople is prodigious; but, in general, they are mean, and all of them constructed of wood, and the roofs covered with hollow tiles. The public edifices alone are built in masonry in a very solid manner. The streets are narrow, badly paved, and dirty; and the people are infected with the plague almost every year. The inhabitants, estimated at 520,000, are half Turks, two thirds of the other half Greeks and Armenians, and the rest Jews and Franks. Here are a great number of ancient monuments still remaining; particularly the superb temple of St. Sophia, built in the sixth century, which is converted into a mosque, and will contain 100,000 persons conveniently. Between the two mosques of sultan Solyman and Bajazet is the old seraglio, in which are shut up the wives of the deceased sultans, and also such women as have displeased the grand signior. The bazars resemble a row of booths in a fair, and others a street of shops, which are severally allotted to particular trades and merchandise. The bezesteins are large square buildings, covered with domes, supported by arcades, and contain all sorts of goods, which are there exposed to sale. There is a market for slaves of both sexes; and the Jews are the principal merchants, who bring them here for sale. A great number of girls are brought from Hungary, Greece, Candia, Circassia, Mingrelia, and Georgia, and sold to the Turks. The great square, near the mosque of sultan Bajazet, is the place for public diversions. The fountains and public baths are numerous. The gulf on the NE of the city, called the Golden Horn, is the harbour, which runs up from the point of the seraglio to the village of Aijub, about 4 m in length and half a mile where broadest. Aijub may be reckoned one of the suburbs, and has a mosque, in which is the tomb of sultan Othman, the founder of the empire. The suburbs of Galata and Pera are on the other side of the harbour. The former extends along the entrance of the harbour, and is chiefly occupied by merchants; and adjoining it on the E is an arsenal and cannon foundery, called Tophana. Pera stands behind these on an eminence, and, having frequently suffered by fire, is now chiefly built with stone. houses where European sailors, Greeks, and even Turks, go to drink and intoxicate themselves. No foreigner is now allowed to reside in the city itself, not even the minister of a friendly nation; and it is absolutely necessary, in visiting the city, to procure the protection of a janissary, in order to prevent insult. The circumference of this city is 12 m, and 24 with the suburbs included; and as they are built on ground which rises gradually, there is a view of the whole town from the sea. The city is surrounded by walls of freestone, here and there mixed with bricks, and flanked by 250 towers; it has also 22 gates, six on the land side and the rest toward the harbour and sea. The palaces, mosques, bagnios, and caravansaries, are many of them magnificent. It is 700 m SE Vienna. Lon. 28 55 E, lat. 41 1 N.

Constantinople, Strait of, anciently the Thracian Bosphorus, and forming the communication between the Propontis or sea of Marmora, and the Euxine or Black sea. It is 20 m long and a mile and a quarter where broadest; and forms the separation here between Europe and Asia. At its entrance on the w side is situate Constantinople, and on the other, Scutari. Both its banks are lined with villages, where are seen some very handsome houses, almost entirely built of wood and variously painted: those belonging to the Turks are in white or red; those of the Greeks, Armenians, and Jews, are of a blackish brown, for they are not allowed to employ the colours of the Mooselmins. At its termination in the Black sea are two forts, opposite each other, to defend the passage.

Copenhagen, the capital of Denmark, with a university. It is the best built city of the north; and owes its principal beauty to a fire in 1728, and another in 1794. At the latter, the royal palace of Christianburg, built by Christian VI, one of the most commodious and most sumptuously furnished in Europe, was destroyed. The new parts of the town, raised by Frederic V, consist of an octagon, containing four uniform palaces, with two pavilions to each, occupied by the royal family; and of four broad streets, leading to it in opposite directions: in the middle of the area is an equestrian statue of that king in bronze. The new royal market is the largest square in the city, and almost entirely composed of stately buildings; as, the academy of painting and sculpture, the theatre, the great hotel, the artillery house, &c. and in the centre is a marble equestrian statue of Christian v. The greatest part of the buildings are of brick; and a few are of freestone. The palaces of the nobility are in general splendid, and ornamented in the Italian style of architecture. Here are manufactures of beautiful porcelain, sugar, silk, cotton, woollen cloth, canvas, and leather. The haven is always crowded with ships; and the streets are intersected by canals, which bring the merchandise close to the warehouses that line the quays. Contiguous to the harbour are several islands, denominated Holms, upon which are dock-yards, containing every thing necessary for the building and equipment of ships of war. The citadel is a regular fortification, with five bastions, a double ditch full of water, and several advanced works. The round tower, built by Christian iv for an observatory, is a lofty structure; and the greatest part of its ascent is, by a spiral road, near 14 feet wide, that a carriage can go up and down. In the N suburbs is a large obelisk of reddish stone, erected in 1793 by the city, to the honour of Christian vii, on his abolishing vassalage; and around its pedestal are four female figures of white marble. Four m to the nw is Fredericksburg, the most considerable castle belonging to the royal family, with a superb chapel, in which the kings are crowned. Copenhagen at the end of the year 1799 contained 83,618 inhabitants. In 1807 a British fleet arrived here, and required the surrender of the ships of war in its harbour, to prevent the French getting possession of them; not being given up, the city was bombarded till it surrendered; and all the vessels and stores being sent off for England, the city was abandoned by the British. Copenhagen is 5 m in circumference, seated on the E shore of the isle of Zealand, 340 m sw Stockholm, and 500 NE London. Lon. 12 35 E, lat. 55 41 N. See Amak.

The principal products are wheat, rice, ginseng, gold, silver, iron, fossil, salt, castor and sable skins, a yellow varnish almost equal to gilding, and a peculiar kind of paper made of cotton. Numbers of whales are annually found on the coast toward the N. The Coreans are well made, ingenious, brave, and tractable. They are fond of dancing and music, and show great aptness for acquiring the sciences, which they apply to with ardour. Men of learning are distinguished from other people by two plumes of feathers, which they wear in their caps. They have borrowed their writing, dress, religion, and the greater part of their customs, from the Chinese. Their women are less confined than those in China, and have the liberty of appearing in company with the other sex. In China, parents often marry their children without their consent; but in Corea, they choose for themselves.

Coria, a town of Spain, in Andalusia, seated on the Guadalquivir, 10 m ssw Seville.

Corinth, or Coranthe, a town of European Turkey, in Morea, and a Greek archbishop's see, with a castle. It was one of the most important cities in Greece, on account of its situation on the isthmus into Morca; its castle on the top of an almost inaccessible rock; its harbours on the gulfs of Lepanto and Engia; its riches, and its architects, sculptors, and painters. It once belonged to the Venetians, but the Turks became masters of it in 1715. It is now greatly decayed; for the houses are not contiguous, but intermixed with fields and gardens, which make it look like a village. It is 60 m w Athens. Lon. 22 54 E, lat. 38 3 N.

COR

Corinth, Isthmus of, a neck of land which joins Morea to Livadia, and reaches from the gulf of Lepanto to that of Engia. The narrowest part of it is 6 m over: and on a mount here, called Oneius, were formerly celebrated the Isthmian games. There are still the ruins of a town upon it, and of the temples dedicated to the Sun, Pluto, Diana, Neptune, Ceres, and Bacchus. Julius Cæsar, Caligula, and Nero, in vain attempted to cut a channel through the isthmus; they therefore built a wall across it, called Hexamilium, because it was 6 m in length. This was demolished by Amurath II, rebuilt by the Venetians, and levelled a second time by Mohamed II.

Cork, a county of Ireland, in the province of Munster, 80 m long and 50 broad; bounded on the w by Kerry and the Atlantic, N by Limerick, E by Waterford, and S by St. George channel. It sends eight members to parliament, is divided into 232 parishes, and has about 416,000 inhabitants. It is very fertile, and has two considerable rivers, the Blackwater and Lee.

Cork, a city of Ireland, capital of the county of Cork, and a bishop's see united with Ross. It stands on an island in the river Lee, over which are two stone bridges. Vessels of 120 tons may come up to the quays, but those of heavier burden unload at West Passage, 6 m below; and the largest vessels generally anchor a few miles lower in a safe and commodious harbour called the Cove, which is defended by a strong fort. The cathedral was built, between 1725 and 1735, by the produce of a duty on coal; and there are six other parish-churches. It sends two members to parliament, and the inhabitants are estimated at near 100,000. Cork surpasses all the towns in Ireland for trade, except Dublin. The exports consist chiefly of beef, pork, hides, tallow, and butter. It was taken by the earl of Marlborough in 1690. It is 14 m from St. George channel, and 150 sw Dublin. Lon. 8 28 W, lat. 51 54 N.

Corlin, a town of Further Pomerania, with a castle, and considerable woollen manufactures; seated on the Persant, 10 m SE Colberg.

Cormantin, a town of Guinea, on the Gold coast, large and populous. Here the Dutch have a fort. Lon. 0 15 W, lat. 5 30 N.

Cormery, a town of France, in the department of Indre and Loire, with a Benedictine abbey, seated on the Indre, 8 m SE Tours.

Corna, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in Irak, seated at the angle formed by the junction of the Tigris with the Euphrates, 35 m WNW Bassora.

Corneto, a town of Italy, in the patriarchy of St. Peter, seated on the Marta, 3 m E of the sea, and 10 N Civita Vecchia.

Cornhill, a town of the county of Durham, in Northhamshire, seated near the Tweed, over which it has a large bridge to Coldstream, in Scotland. It is 12 m SW Berwick, and 333 NNW London.

Cornigliano, a town of Italy, in Milanese, 15 m E Milan.

Cornwall, a county that forms the SW extremity of England, bounded on the E by Devonshire, S by the English channel, and NW by St. George channel. Its length from E to W is 80 m; its breadth next to Devonshire is 48, but it soon contracts, and at Falmouth does not exceed 14; it then spreads a little to the S and SW, and terminates in two points, one of which is called the Lizard, and the other the Lands-end. It contains 900,480 acres; is divided into nine hundreds, and 213 parishes; has 37 market-towns; and sends 44 members to parliament. The number of inhabitants was 188,269 in 1801, and 216,667 in 1811. The vicinity of the sea exempts it from hard frosts, and snow never lies long on the ground. The soil is not very fruitful, especially in the centre on the hilly parts; the valleys yield plenty of grass, and the lands near the sea produce corn. It has plenty of sea-herbs, and some other plants peculiar to its insular situation. The principal rivers are the Tamar and Camel. It derives its chief importance from its minerals. The mines of tin and copper are numerous, and in general very rich in ore; and there are some of lead. With the metalline ores are intermixed large quan-

Corsham, a town in Wiltshire, with a market on Wednesday, and a considerable woollen manufacture. It is 9 m ENE Bath, and 97 W London.

Corfica, an island in the Mediterranean, separated from that of Sardinia, on the s, by the strait of Bonifacio. It is 150 m from N to S, and from 40 to 50 in breadth. It was known to the ancient Greeks by the names of Callista, and Cynus, and to the Romans by its present appellation. On the coast are many excellent harbours. It is mountainous, but fruitful valleys are interspersed; and it has some fine lakes and rivers. In the earliest times it has been famous for its swarms of bees, and produces vast quantities of honey, which, however, is reckoned bitter, on account of the box and yew with which the country abounds. The mountains are rich in lead, iron, copper, and silver; and there are also mines of alum and saltpetre. The granite of Corfica is nearly equal to the oriental; porphyries, jasper, talc, amianthes, emeralds, and other precious stones, are found scattered in the mountains; and the s coast abounds with beautiful coral. This island was, for some centuries, under the dominion of the Genoese, whose tyranny was such, that the Corsicans were almost in a perpetual state of insurrection. In 1736, a German adventurer, Theodore baron Newhoff, brought some assistance to them, and on his assurances of more powerful aid, they elected him king; but, as he could not substantiate his promises, he was obliged to leave the island. The Genoese, tired of the contest, sold the sovereignty to France, in 1767; and the celebrated Paoli, who had been elected to the chief command in 1755, was obliged to abandon the island in 1769. After the French revolution, in 1789, Corfica was admitted as an eighty-third department of France, at the particular request of a deputation, of which Paoli was at the head. In consequence of some events which followed the revolution of 1792, Paoli revolted; the French, by the assistance of the English, were expelled from the island; and Corfica, in 1794, was declared annexed to the crown of Great Britain. In 1796, however, the English found it expedient to evacuate the island; the French immediately took possession, and divided it into two departments, Golo and Liamone, of which Bastia and Ajaccio are the chief towns.

Corsoer, a town of Denmark, in the isle of Zealand, on a peninsula, in the Great Belt, with a good harbour for light vessels. It is defended by a castle, which serves also as a magazine for corn; and is 54 m WSW Copenhagen. Lon. 11 12 E, lat. 55 12 N.

Corte, a town of Corfica, situate in the centre of the island, on the side and foot of a rock, at the conflux of the Tavignano and Restonica. On the point of a rock, rising above the rest, is the castle, to which there is but one winding passage that will admit only two persons abreast. While the island was in the possession of the English, Corte was made the seat of the viceroy; and it has been enlarged and fortified by the French. It is 27 m NE Ajaccio, and 40 SW Bastia. Lon. 8 52 E, lat. 42 6 W.

COS

Cortemiglia, a town of Piedmont, in Montferrat, situate on the Bermuda, 16 m E Cherasco.

Cortona, a city of Tuscany, in Florentine, and a bishop's see, with a famous academy. It is supposed to be the most ancient city in Italy, and once the capital of Etruria, and preserves some remnant of its walls, the only vestige of its early magnificence. It stands on the side of a mountain, near the frontiers of the Ecclesiastical State, 32 m E Sienna, and 50 SE Florence. Lon. 11 52 W, lat. 43 20 N.

Corvey, a town and small principality of Westphalia, with a celebrated abbey; situate on the Weser, 27 m E by N Paderborn. Lon. 9 34 E, lat. 51 46 N.

Corunna, a seaport of Spain, in Galicia, with a large and safe harbour, called the Groyne, defended by two castles. The town is of a circular form; but the poverty of the surrounding country affords few resources for trade. It is 20 m SW Ferrol, and 35 N by E Compostella. Lon. 8 19 W, lat. 43 23 N.

Corvo, the smallest and most northerly island of the Azores, so called from the abundance of crows found upon it. The inhabitants cultivate wheat and feed hogs. Lon. 31 6 W, lat. 39 42 N.

Coucy, a town of France, in the department of Aisne, on the river Oise, 9 m N Soissons.

Coventry, a city in Warwickshire, which, united to Lichfield, is a bishop's see. The market is on Friday. It is a county of itself, governed by a mayor, and has three parish-churches, one of which, St. Michael, is said to have the most beautiful steeple in Europe. The houses being mostly old, with stories projecting over each other, make a mean appearance. The number of inhabitants was 16,034 in 1801, and 17,923 in 1811. The principal manufacture is silk ribands; but some gauzes, camblets, and lastings, are also made. It has a communication with the Staffordshire Grand Trunk, by a canal to Fradley; and by another, which joins the Oxford canal at Braunston, it has a communication with the Thames. Coventry is 15 m NNE Warwick, and 91 NW London. Lon. 1 30 W, lat. 52 24 N.

Cozumel, an island on the E coast of Yucatan, where Cortes landed, and refreshed his troops, before he attempted the conquest of Mexico. It abounds with fruit, pulse, cattle, and fowls. The original natives possess this island, but are subject to Spain. Lon. 87 19 w, lat. 19 40 N.

Crab Island; see Boriquen.

Cracatao, the southernmost of a cluster of islands in the entrance of the strait of Sunda. It consists of elevated land, gradually rising on all sides from the sea, and is covered with trees, except a few spots, which have been cleared by the natives for the purpose of forming rice fields; and its coral reefs afford small turtles in abundance. The inhabitants are not considerable; and their chief, like those of the other islands in the strait, is subject to the king of Bantam. Lon. 105 56 E, lat. 8 6 S.

Cracow, a city of Poland, capital of a palatinate of the same name, and a bishop's see, with a university. It was formerly the capital of Poland, where the kings were elected and crowned, and nearly in the centre of the Polish dominions; but, since the partition of Poland, it is become a frontier town, and belongs to Austria. On a rock near the Vistula is the ancient royal palace, surrounded by brick walls and old towers, which form a kind of citadel. Adjoining is the cathedral, within the walls of the citadel, in which most of the sovereigns of Poland are interred. Though the city and suburbs occupy a vast tract of ground, they scarcely contain 24,000 inhabitants. The great square is spacious and well built, and many of the streets are broad and handsome; but almost every building bears the mark of ruined grandeur. This devastation was begun by the Swedes in 1702, when it was taken by Charles XII; but it has since experienced greater calamities, having been taken and retaken by the Russians and the confederates. On the general insurrection, in 1794, against the Prussian and Russian usurpers of the Polish territory, Kosciuszko, the chief of the patriotic insurgents, expelled the Russian garrison from this city; but having marched, in the sequel, to the protection of Warsaw, Cracow surrendered to the Prussians. It is seated on the Vistula, 130 m ssw Warsaw. Lon. 19 50 E, lat. 49 59 N.

Crieff, a town of Scotland, in Perthshire, with manufactures of paper and thin linen; seated on the Erne, 18 m w Perth, and 24 nne Stirling.

Crim, a town of Crimea, supposed to be on the site of an ancient city that once gave its name of Crim Tartary, or Crimea, to the whole peninsula; after having, under the name of Cimmerium, been the capital of a famous people who gave laws to the greatest part of Europe. The modern town, called Eski Krim [Old Crim] by the Tartars, is now inhabited by Armenians, but the Mohamedan ruins are extensive, and the neighbouring peasants are Tartars. It is seated at the foot of an insulated mountain, 10 m w Caffa.

Crimea, or Taurida, the ancient Taurica Cheronefus, a peninsula of Europe; bounded on the s and w by the Black sea, n by the province of Catharinenslaf, with which it communicates by the isthmus of Prekop, and e by the sea of Asoph and the strait of Taman. Toward the end of the 11th century, the Genoese settled in this country; but they were expelled by the Crim Tartars in 1474. See Cassa. These Tartars had been settled in Crimea above two centuries before the expulsion of the Genoese. They were subjects of Batu Khan, grandson of Zingis; and their conquest was annexed to the kingdom of Kasan, till the death of Tamerlane in 1406, when Edegai Khan, an officer of that prince, took possession of it, and was succeeded by Duet Cheral, in whose family the sovereignty continued till the 18th century. The Khans, however, were vassals, or tributary to the Turks, till the year 1774, when their independence was stipulated in the treaty of Cainargi. In 1783, the Russians took possession of the country with an army; the following year it was ceded to them by the Turks; and the peaceable possession of the whole was secured to them in 1791, by the cession of the fortress of Oczakof. Crimea is divided into two parts by the river Salgir, which runs from w to e. The n division is flat, poor, and fit for pasturage only. It has neither tree nor hillock; salt lakes, and flocks of sheep, are its greatest riches. This district is bleak and cold in winter, and sultry and scorching in summer. The s part is mountainous, but the valleys are astonishingly productive, and the climate extremely mild, from the exclusion of those violent winds by which the n division is frequently incommoded. The lower hills, extending from Cassia to the e extremity of the country, are principally used in gardening, and produce excellent fruit. Beside the port of Kertch, the road of Cassia, and the harbour of Balaclava, there is, near Sebastopol, one of the finest harbours in the world. The principal articles of export are corn, salt, honey, wax, butter, horses, female slaves, hides, and furs, especially the tauric lamb-skins, which are in high esteem. Crimea now forms one of the two provinces of the government of Catharinenslaf, under the name of Taurida. Sympheropol is the capital.

Crimmischau, a town of Upper Saxony, in Misnia, with manufactures of stuffs and linens, seated on the Pleisse, 10 m ssw Altenberg.

Croatia, a country of Europe, bounded on the N by Hungary, E by Slavonia and Bosnia, S by Dalmatia, and W by Carniola and Stiria. It belonged to the house of Austria, except a small part E of the river Unna, subject to the Turks; but, in 1809, the Austrian part S of the river Save was transferred to France. Carlstadt is the capital of the French part, and Agram of the Austrian.

Croia, a town of European Turkey, in Albania, seated near the gulf of Venice, 13 m S E Durazzo.

Croisic, or Croisil, a town of France, in the department of Lower Loire, seated on the bay of Biscay, between the mouths of the Loire and Vilaine, 35 m W Nantes. Lon. 2 32 W, lat. 47 18 N.

Croix, St. a river of N America, which forms the NE boundary of the United States, and runs into the bay of Passamaquoddy.

Croix, St. one of the Caribbee islands, 30 m long and 8 where broadest, lying 40 m S by E of St. Thomas. It produces much sugar, and belongs to the Danes. The chief town is Christianstadt, on the N coast, with a fine harbour, defended by a fortress. Lon. 65 28 W, lat. 17 45 N.

Cromack-water, a lake in Cumberland, between Buttermere-water and Lowewater, receiving the former at its S end, by the river Cocker, and the latter at its N end. It is 4 m long and half a mile over; with three small isles, one of them a rock, and the other covered with wood. Half a mile from the S end is a waterfall, called Scale force, between the mountains of Melbreak and Blea-cragg. At the NE corner is a stone bridge over its outlet, the Cocker. It abounds with char and red trout.

Cromarty, a seaport of Scotland, capital of Cromartyshire. The harbour is one of the finest in Great Britain, and has a commodious quay. Here is a manufacture of hempen cloth, and a coasting trade in corn, thread, yarn, fish, and skins of various sorts. The number of inhabitants in 1811 was 2413. It stands at the mouth of the frith of Cromarty, 16 m NE Inverness. Lon. 3 50 W, lat. 57 38 N.

Cromartyshire, a county of Scotland, 16 m long and 6 broad, comprehending part of a peninsula on the S side of a frith to which it gives name. On the S and W it is bounded by Ross-shire. It is divided into five parishes, which contained 4286 inhabitants in 1801, and 5481 in 1811. The high lands are heathy, but on the coasts it is fertile and well cultivated. It sends a member to parliament, alternately with Nairnshire.

Cromer, a town in Norfolk, with a market on Saturday. It formerly had two churches, one of which, with several houses, was swallowed up by the sea. The inhabitants are chiefly fishermen; and the best lobsters, on this part of the coast, are taken here. It is seated on the German ocean, 22 m N Norwich, and 129 m N London.

Cromford, a village in Derbyshire, on the river Derwent, 2 m S Wirksworth. Here Mr. (afterward Sir Richard) Arkwright erected some of the new cotton mills, a capital improvement of mechanism due to him; and here also he built a noble seat, and a church. There is a canal hence to Nottingham.

Cronach, a town of Franconia, in the principality of Bamberg, near which is a mountain-fortress called Rosenburg. It is seated near the river Cronach, 11 m N Culmbach.

Cronborg, a strong fortress of Denmark, on the isle of Zealand, near Elsinore, which guards the passage of the Sound. It stands on the point of a peninsular promontory, opposite Helsingburg in Sweden, little more than 2 m distant. In 1658, it was taken by the king of Sweden, and restored in 1660. In this fortress is a palace, where queen Matilda was imprisoned till she was permitted to retire to Zell. Not far from this is Hamlet Garden, said to be the spot where the murder of his father was perpetrated.

Cronenberg, or Kronberg, a town of Germany, in the late electorate of Mentz, seated on a mountain, 9 m NW Frankfurt.

Cronstadt, a seaport and fortress of Russia, on the island of Retufari, in the gulf of Finland. The harbour is the chief station of the Russian fleet. Here are great magazines of naval stores, docks and yards for building ships, a foundery for cannon balls, and an extensive marine hospital. The Man of War's Mole is enclosed by a strong rampart, built of granite, in the sea. Peter's Canal, lined with masonry, is 1050 fathoms long, of which 558 stretch into the sea; it is 60 fathoms broad at the bottom and 100 at the top, and is 24 fathoms deep. At the end of the canal are two pyramidal columns, with inscriptions relative to this great work. The town occupies the E part of the island, and the inhabitants are estimated at 60,000. It is 23 m W Petersburg. Lon. 29 26 E, lat. 59 56 N.

Cronstadt, a town of Transylvania. See Brugau.

Croom, a town of Ireland, in the county of Limerick, on the river Maig. 13 m SW Limerick.

Cropani, a town of Naples, in Calabria Ultra, 9 m ENE St. Severino.

Crosie, a town of Poland, in the palatinate of Lemberg, 80 m W Lemberg.

Crossen, a town of Brandenburg, in the New mark, capital of a duchy of the same name, with a strong castle. It is seated on the frontiers of Silesia, near the conflux of the Bober with the Oder, in a country abounding with wine and fruit, 23 m SE Frankfort. Lon. 15 15 E, lat. 52 7 N.

Cross-fell, a mountain in Cumberland, 8 m ENE Kirkofwold. Its extreme altitude is 2901 feet. At different elevations there are two extensive plains; and a third on the summit contains several hundred acres, covered with moss and other vegetable productions. The view from this height comprehends great part of six counties. A few yards below the summit is a spring called the Gentlemans Well.

Crotchet, or Corachie, a town of Hindoostan, and the only good seaport in Sindy. It stands at the head of a bay, which has a narrow and shallow entrance, defended by a castle; but vessels of 400 tons may enter the harbour at high water. The inhabitants are estimated at 8000, the majority of whom are Hindoos. It has a considerable trade, being visited by the interior caravans; and the chief exports are rice, glue, hides, saltpetre, potash, asafetida, Tatta-cloth, indigo, frankincense, and coarse cloths. It is 60 m W by N Tatta. Lon. 67 16 E, lat. 24 51 N.

Cuba, the largest island of the W Indies, lying s of E Florida and the Bahama islands. It is 700 m long and 110 broad, and was discovered by Columbus, in 1492. The Spaniards are entirely masters of it, having extirpated the natives; but from their laziness, and the want of hands, only a very small portion of land is cleared. In the woods are some valuable trees, particularly cedars of a large size; and birds in variety and number, more than in any of the other islands. The soil is fertile; and cattle, sheep, and hogs are numerous. There are many warm springs, and copper mines in the mountains, and forests full of game. The produce is excellent sugar, ginger, long pepper, cassia, wild cinnamon, mastic, tobacco, and aloes. The hills run through the middle of the island, its whole length, from e to w, but near the coast the land is generally level; and many rivulets flow from the hills to the n and s. Havana is the capital.

Cubagua, a small island of S America, between that of Magaretta and Terra Firma. Here the Spaniards, in 1509, established a fishery of pearl; but the banks disappeared in 1524. The island is barren and nitrous. Lon. 64 10 W, lat. 10 56 N.

Cuban, a river that issues from the n side of the mountain Elbrus, the loftiest of the Caucasus, flows nw and w, dividing Circassia from part of Taurica, and enters, by several mouths, into the Black sea and the sea of Afoph. It forms the southern boundary of the Russian empire in this part; and on its right Culmbach, a town of Franconia, formerly the capital of a margravate of the same name. Near it, on a mountain, stands the fortress of Plaffenburg, where the archives of the principality were preserved, but they were removed to Bayreuth in 1783. From its district the whole margravate was formerly called Brandenburg-Culmbach; but in 1726, the government devolved into another line, and since that time it has been called Brandenburg-Bayreuth. Culmbach is seated on the Main, 13 m NNW Bayreuth. Lon. 11 36 E, lat. 50 7 N.

Culmore, a town of Ireland, in the county of Londonderry, with a fort at the W point of Lough Foyle, 5 m N by E Londonderry.

Culrofs, a borough of Scotland, in Perthshire, in a district almost detached by the shires of Fife and Clackmannan. Here is a princely abbey, built in 1590. It is situate on the side of a steep hill, by the frith of Forth, 20 m S Perth, and 21 WNW Edinburg.

Cumana, a province in the NE part of Terra Firma, in the government of Caracas; bounded on the N and E by the sea, S by Paria, and W by Caracas. The chief products are cocoa and tobacco, but it is gifted with every variety of territorial production. The interior is crowned by lofty mountains, and the highest, Tumerequiri, is 5600 feet above the level of the sea. In this mountain is the cavern of Guacharo, famed among the Indians; it is immense, and serves as a retreat to thousands of nocturnal birds, whose fat yields the famous oil of Guacharo.

Cumana, the capital of the province of the same name, with a fortress on an eminence. The inhabitants are estimated at 30,000, and noted for commercial activity and enterprise. The fisheries are plentiful, and salt being convenient, great quantities of fish are cured, and sent to the neighbouring ports and illands, which is the principal branch of trade. This town was nearly destroyed by the great earthquake in 1812. It is situate on the Manzanares, near the entrance of the gulf of Cariaco, 183 m E Leon. Lon. 64 24 W, lat. 10 12 N.

Cumberland, a county of England, bounded on the N by Scotland, E by Northumberland, Durham, and Westmerland, S by Lancashire, and W by the Irish sea and Solway frith. It is 58 m long and 30 broad, containing 958,080 acres; is divided into five wards, and 103 parishes; has a city and 10 market-towns; and sends six members to parliament. The number of inhabitants was 117,230 in 1801, and 133,744 in 1811. The mountains feed large flocks of sheep, and the valleys produce corn, &c. The tracts of level land are neither numerous nor extensive, being chiefly confined to the borders of the rivers and toward the N coast. There are mines of coal, lead, copper, iron, lapis calaminaris, and wad, or black-lead; the latter are near Borrowdale, and almost peculiar to this county. The principal manufactures are cotton and canvas, and there are some iron-works. Skiddaw, Saddleback, and Cross-fell are the principal mountains. The chief rivers are the Eden and Derwent; and its celebrated lakes are Derwent-water, Bassenthwaite-water, Buttermere, Cromack-water, Lowes-water, Ulls-water, Wast-water, Ennerdale-water, and Leathes-water. Carlisle is the capital.

the state of Tennessee, where it passes by Nashville; it then takes a NW course, re-enters Kentucky, and joins the Ohio about 12 m above the influx of the Tennessee. It is navigable for large vessels to Nashville, and its whole length is estimated to be above 450 m.

Cumberland, a town and fort of New Brunswick, in a county of the same name, noted for coal mines. The fort is situate at the head of the bay of Fundy, on the E side of its northern branch. Lon. 64 10 W, lat. 45 45 N.

Cumberland, a town of Maryland, chief of Allegany county. It stands on both sides of Wills creek, at its entrance into the Potomac, 95 m WNW Washington. Lon. 78 46 W, lat. 39 36 N.

Cumberland, an island on the coast of Georgia, the most southern territory of the United States on the Atlantic ocean. It is 15 m long and 2 broad. Opposite its S extremity is the island Amelia, and between them is the entrance of St. Mary river.

Cumberland, a bay on the SE coast of Cuba, formerly called Guantanamo. In 1741, it was visited by admiral Vernon, who built a fort, and gave it this name; and the river that enters the harbour he named Augusta. The port is one of the best in America, and capable of sheltering any number of vessels. It is 50 m E St. Jago. Lon. 75 12 W, lat. 20 0 N.

Cumbo, a kingdom on the W coast of Africa, S of the river Gambia. The Portuguese have a settlement at Cacheo.

Cumbray, Great and Little, two islands of Scotland, at the entrance of the frith of Clyde, to the SE of the isle of Bute. The former is 6 m in circumference, has excellent freestone quarries, and the ruins of a cathedral dedicated to St. Columba. The latter lies a little to the S of the other, and on it is a light-house. Lon. 4 47 W, lat. 55 45 N.

Cumiana, a town of Piedmont, 12 m SW Turin.

Cumly, a fort and town of Hindoostan, in Canara, seated between two rivers at their entrance into a salt water lake, which is separated from the sea by a spit of sand. On the opposite side of the S river, is the town of Kanyapura, to which it was formerly joined by a bridge. It is 15 m S by E Mangalore.

Cupar, a borough of Scotland, capital of Fifeshire, with manufactures of coarse linens and leather. The number of inhabitants was 3150 in 1801, and 4758 in 1811. It is seated in a rich valley, on the N side of the Eden, 8 m W by S St. Andrew, and 30 NNE Edinburg. Lon. 2 55 W, lat. 56 16 N.

Cupar, a town of Scotland, in Forfarshire, with a considerable linen manufacture and a tannery. It is seated on a rivulet that flows into the Isla, 11 m NW Dundee, and 12 NNE Perth.

Curacao, an island in the Caribbean sea, 45 m from the coast of Terra Firma. It is 35 m long and 12 broad; produces sugar, coffee, and cotton; has numerous warehouses, always full of the commodities of Europe and the east; and carries on a great trade, whether in peace or in war. In 1800, some French having settled on part of the island, and becoming at variance with the Dutch, the latter surrendered the island to a single British frigate. It was restored to the Dutch by the peace of 1802, and taken from them by three British frigates in 1807. The principal town is St. Peter, at the NE extremity of the island, with a good harbour defended by a fort and batteries. Lon. 69 15 W, lat. 12 22 N.

Curia Maria, an island on the coast of Arabia Felix, opposite the mouth of the Prim. Lon. 55 25 E, lat. 17 0 N.

Curisch Haff, a lake or bay of Prussia, lying along the Baltic, 70 m in length. It is wide toward the S, but narrow to the N, where it communicates with the Baltic, at Memel.

Currah, a town of Hindoostan, in Allahabad, on the right bank of the Ganges, 36 m NW Allahabad.

Currudea, a town of Hindoostan, in Bengal, on the river Adji, 190 m NW Calcutta. Lon. 86 20 E, lat. 24 25 N.

Currucpour, a town of Hindoostan, in Bengal, seated in a mountainous district, 127 m NW Moorshedabad. Lon. 86 42 E, lat. 25 6 N.

Curupa, a town of Brasil, in the government of Para, seated on the estuary of the Amazon, 250 m W Para. Lon. 53 10 W, lat. 1 50 S.

Curzola, an island in the gulf of Venice, on the coast of Dalmatia, about 26 m long. It abounds in wood, proper for building ships, and produces good wine. At the E end is a fortified town of the same name, with a good harbour. Lon. 17 10 E, lat. 43 6 N.

Cusco, a city of Peru, and a bishop's see, formerly the capital of the incas. The Spaniards, under Pizarro, took possession of it in 1534. On a mountain contiguous to the N part of the city are the ruins of a fort and palace of the incas, the stones of which are of an enormous magnitude. Cusco is built in a square form, in the middle of which is the best market in all America: four large streets which are perfectly straight, terminate in the square. It contains nine churches, beside the cathedral, which is a noble structure. The number of inhabitants is about 20,000, of which three-fourths are original Americans. Streams of water run through the town, which are a great conveniency in a country where it seldom rains. It is 350 m E by S Lima. Lon. 71 47 W, lat. 13 0 S.

Cushai, a river of N Carolina, which runs into Albemarle sound.

Cussel, a town of France, in the department of Allier, 37 m S by E Moulins.

Custrin, a fortified town of Brandenburg, capital of the New mark, with a castle. In 1760, it was bombarded and almost destroyed by the Russians. It is seated amid morasses, at the conflux of the ^Warta with the Oder, 46 m E by N Berlin. Lon. 14 52 E, lat. 52 38 N.

Cutais, or Kotatis, the chief town of Imeritia, surrounded by a thick wall with strong towers. Here is a palace for the prince, and the remains of a fine cathedral. In 1770 it was taken by the Russians. It is seated in a fertile plain, on the river Rioni, 100 m WNW Teflis. Lon. 43 5 E, lat. 42 32 N.

Cutay Malalawadi, a town of Hindoostan, in Mysore, with a large mud fort, 27 m W Seringatam.

Cutch, a country of Hindoostan, governed by a rajah. It lies on the SE of Sindy: the E branch of the Indus separating the two countries, extends along the N coast of the gulf of Cutch, and is separated from Guzerat by the river Puddar. It abounds with hills, woods, and sandy wilds. The capital is Booge-booge.

Cuxhaven, a seaport of Lower Saxony, in the duchy of Bremen, at the mouth of the Elbe. Here are only a few hovels and a windmill; but it was lately the port for the English packets to Hamburg; and passengers, while on shore, were accommodated at Ritzen-buttle, half a mile distant. Cuxhaven is 60 m NW Hamburg. Lon. 8 40 E, lat. 53 50 N.

Cuyck, a town of Dutch Brabant, in a small territory of the same name, 6 m SSE Grave.

Cyprus, an island in the Mediterranean, near the coast of Syria. It was taken by the Turks from the Venetians in 1570. It is 160 m in length, and 70 at its greatest breadth; pervaded by a chain of mountains, the highest of which is called Olympus. The soil is an excellent fertile clay; and if the government would give encouragement to the natives to be industrious, they might make it a paradise; for the mountains are covered with hyacinths, anemones, and other beautiful flowers. The chief products are apricots, oranges, silk, cotton, wine, honey, turpentine, and timber. There is one archbishop and three bishops. The priests are extremely ignorant, and they submit to the most servile employment to get money. The costume of the Cyprian ladies consists of a headdress modelled after the kind of calathus represented upon the Phenician idols of the country. Their hair, died of a fine brown colour by means of a plant called Kenna, hangs behind in numerous long straight braids; and in some ringlets, disposed near the face, are fastened blossoms of the jasmine, strung together in a pleasing manner. Some possess the secret of giving a brown colour to the whitest locks, and also tinge their eyebrows of the same hue. The upper robe is of scarlet, crimson, or green silk, embroidered with gold. Like other Greek women they wear scarlet pantaloons, fastened round the ankle, and yellow boots, with slippers of the same colour. About their waists they have a broad belt or zone, fastened in front by a large clasp of polished brass or mother-of-pearl. They expose the bosom; and around the neck, and from the head, are suspended a profusion of gold coins, chains, and other trinkets. Notwithstanding the pains they use in adorning their natural beauty by ill-selected ornaments, the women of Cyprus are taller and handsomer than those of any other Grecian island. Hence were possibly derived those celebrated models of female beauty, conspicuous in the works of Grecian artists; models selected from the throng of Cyprian virgins, who, as priestesses of Venus, officiated at the Paphian shrine. Nicosia is the capital.

Cyr, St. a village of France, 2 m from Versailles, celebrated for an abbey founded by madame de Maintenon, who was the abbess till her death in 1719.

Czassau, a town of Bohemia, capital of a circle of the same name. The church has the highest tower in Bohemia. Near this place the king of Prussia gained a victory over the Austrians in 1742. It is seated on the Crudenka, 40 m SSE Prague. Lon. 15 24 E, lat. 49 50 N.

Czeraweniza, a town of Upper Hungary, famous for mines of opal, a noble gem not yet discovered in any other region of the globe. It is 15 m N Casfovia.

Czirnitz, a town of Carniola, remarkable for its lake, which produces grass and corn every year. The lake is surrounded by mountains, and in dry seasons is from 20 to 25 m in circumference; but when full it is 40 m round, and contains several islands, on the largest of which is a village. When the water subsides, buckwheat is sown on the dry parts, and becomes ready for the sickle in six weeks; and the pasturage is not hurt by the water if it does not stay too long. The town is situate on the NW part of the lake, 20 m S by W Lauhach.

Dachsbach, a town of Franconia, in the principality of Bayreuth, 22 m S Bamberg.

Dachstein, a town of France, in the department of Lower Rhine, with a palace that belonged to the see of Strasbourg; situate on the Breuch, 8 m W Strasbourg.

Dafar, or Dasar, a seaport of Arabia Felix, governed by a sheik, who is a sovereign prince. It is seated on a bay of the same name, on the SE coast. Lon. 54 10 E, lat. 17 20 N.

Daghestan, a province of Asia, bounded on the N by Caucasia, E by the Caspian sea, S by Schirvan, and W by Georgia. It is almost entirely mountainous, inhabited chiefly by Tartars, and subject to Russia. Derhend is the capital.

Dagno, a town of European Turkey, in Albania, near the conflux of the Drino and Nero, 13 m SE Scutari.

Dago, or Dagao, an island in the Baltic, on the coast of Livonia, 7 m N of the isle of Oesel. It is 20 m in circumference, and has two castles, called Dagerwort and Paden. Lon. 22 56 E, lat. 58 44 N.

Dagborough, a town of Delaware, in Suffex county, on a branch of Indian river, which enters the ocean to the S of Delaware bay. It is 50 m S by E Dover.

Dahl, a river of Sweden, which flows through Dalecarlia and on the S confines of Gestricia, and enters the gulf of Bothnia, to the SE of Gesse. It is a considerable stream, but sometimes expands into lakes, and in general too shallow for the purposes of navigation. Near Escarleby, not far from its mouth, it forms a celebrated cataract, little inferior to that of the Rhine at Lauffen.

Dahomy, a kingdom of Guinea, to the N of Whidah, supposed to reach 180 m inland, though no European has penetrated above half the distance. The country is fertile, yielding a plentiful supply of farinaceous vegetables and tropical fruits; also indigo, cotton, sugar-cane, tobacco, palm oil, and a variety of spices. The religion of Dahomy consists of a jumble of superstitious ceremonies, of which it is impossible to convey any satisfactory idea. The government is perhaps the most formerly had, there remains only one, which is 3 m in length. Several streams flow across the fertile plain of Damascus, which water all the gardens, supply the public fountains, and are carried into every house. The houses are built of wood, with their fronts inward, where there is a court; in the streets there are only walls to be seen, but the insides are richly adorned. The most remarkable buildings are the caravansaries, which consist of long galleries supported by marble pillars, and surrounding a large square court. The castle is like a little town, having its own streets and houses; and the famous Damascus steel was kept here in a magazine. The mosques, of which there are about 200, are handsome edifices, the most stately of which was a Christian church. One street runs across the city and suburb in a direct line, on each side of which are shops, where all sorts of rich merchandize are sold. Several manufactures are carried on here, among which that of sabres and knives has been most famous. It stands on the river Barada, 20 m NNE Jerusalem, and 150 s Aleppo. Lon. 36 40 E, lat. 33 50 N.

Damaun, a seaport of Hindoostan, in the country of Baglana, at the entrance of the gulf of Cambay. Aurungzebe besieged it, about the middle of the 17th century, with an army of 40,000 men; but the garrison falling out on a part of his camp guarded by 200 elephants, terrified those animals by their fire-arms, that they turned on their masters, and trampled to death half his army. It is subject to the Portuguese, and 60 m s Surat. Lon. 72 47 E, lat. 20 18 N.

Damagan, or Damgan, a town of Persia, in Mazanderan, situate in a spacious plain, famous for a victory gained by Nadir Shah over the Afghans, 50 m w Astarabad, and 90 E Sari.

Damgartin, a town of Hither Pomerania, with a castle, seated on the necks, 18 m w Stralsund.

Damiano, St. a town of Piedmont, Montferrat, 18 m w by N Vercelli.

Damietta, a town of Egypt, and a Greek archbishop's see, with a good harbour, at one of the eastern mouths of the Nile. It has several squares, various grand mosques, and public baths paved with marble. The rice mezelaoui, the finest of Egypt, is cultivated in the neighbouring plains. Here are likewise Indian stuffs, silks, sal ammoniac, wheat, &c. The Christians of Aleppo and Damascus carry on the principal trade; the Turks being indolent, and content-

Damm, a town of Further Pomerania, with a considerable trade in steel manufactures; seated on the Oder, 8 m w Stettin.

Damme, a town of the Netherlands, in Flanders, seated on the canal between Sluys and Bruges, 5 m N by E Bruges.

Danuetz; see Donetz.

Danbury, a town of Connecticut, in Fairfield county, with two churches. On its small streams are iron-works, and several mills. This town, with a large quantity of military stores, was burnt by the British in 1777. It is 20 m NNW Fairfield, and 65 NNE New York.

Danbury, a village in Essex, 5 m E Chelmsford, and 16 W of the sea. It stands on the highest ground in the county, and the spire of the church serves as a seamark.

Dancali, a country in the E part of Abyssinia. The soil is unproductive; and its chief riches consist in fossil salt and honey. It is governed by a prince nominally tributary to the negus, or emperor of Abyssinia. Bailur is the principal town.

Dangala; see Dongola.

Danger, Isles of, three islands in the Pacific ocean, seen by Byron in 1765, but so surrounded by rocks and breakers, that it was unsafe to attempt to land. The commodore supposed them to be the islands seen by Quiros, in the beginning of the 17th century, and named Solomon Islands. Lon. 169 28 W, lat. 10 15 S.

Dannayata, a town of Hindoostan, in the province of Coimbatore, with a large fort, seated on the Bhawari, a little above the influx of the Mayar, 33 m N Coimbatore, and 42 W Bhavani-kudal.

Danneberg, a town of Lower Saxony, in the duchy of Luneburg, capital of a district of the same name. It is seated on the Jetze, near the Elbe, 30 m E by S Luneburg. Lon. 11 18 E, lat. 53 10 N.

Dantzic, one of the richest cities of Europe, lately the capital of W Prussia. It is encompassed by a wall, and fortifications of great extent. The inhabitants are estimated at 36,000. It has a very good harbour, and wants nothing but depth. The houses are of six or seven stories; and the granaries have still more, to which the ships lie close, and take in their lading. Here are 12 Lutheran churches, two for Calvinists, and one for Roman catholics; and a college provided with very learned professors. It carries on a great trade, particularly in corn, tallow, leather, wool, timber, and naval stores. In 1709, upward of 24,000 persons died of the plague. It was a free hanseatic town, under the protection of Poland; but, in 1793, it submitted to the king of Prussia, who forcibly usurped the sovereignty, in a second partition of the Polish dominions. In 1807 it surrendered to the French, after being bombarded a month; and by the treaty of Tilsit, it was restored to its former independence, under the protection of Prussia and Saxony. It is seated on the w branch of the Vistula, near its entrance into the Baltic, 85 m wsw Konigsberg, and 170 nw Warsaw. Lon. 18 38 E, lat. 54 21 N.

Danube, the largest river in Europe, called Ister by the ancients. It rises at Donaueschingen, in Suabia, and flows ne by Ulm; then e through Bavaria and Austria, by Ratisbon, Passau, Ens, and Vienna; it then enters Hungary, and runs se by Presburg, Buda, and Belgrade; after which it divides Bulgaria from Walachia, Moldavia, and Bessarabia, and then enters by five channels into the Black sea. It begins to be navigable for boats at Ulm, and is so deep between Buda and Belgrade, that the Turks and Germans have had ships of war upon it; yet it is not navigable to the Black sea, on account of the cataracts. From its source to the Black sea, it traverses a course of above 1300 m.

Danvers, a town of Massachusetts, in Essex county, adjoining Salem on the nw. It has many workshops of mechanics, and manufactures of coarse earthen ware.

Danville, a town of Kentucky, in Mercer county, situate in a fertile plain, on Dick river, 35 m ssw Lexington, and 70 se Louisville.

Darabjerd, a town of Persia, in Farsistan. It is large, but not populous; and has a manufacture of glass. It is surrounded with groves of orange and lemon-trees, and the vicinity produces immense quantities of the finest tobacco. It stands on an extensive plain, 140 m ese Shiras. Lon. 54 56 E, lat. 28 56 N.

Darah, or Dras, a country of Barbary; bounded on the n by Sus, e by Tafilet, s by Zahara, and w by the Atlantic. A river of the same name flows through it, which enters the Atlantic on the s side of Cape Non. The principal produce is indigo and dates. The inhabitants are Arabs and Mohamendans; and some of the districts of the country are dependent on Morocco.

Daraporam, a town of Hindoostan, capital of the s part of Coimbatore. It has a large mud fort, and straight and wide streets. Much cotton and tobacco are cultivated in the vicinity, and the garden and rice grounds are considerable. It is seated near the Amarawati, 42 m ese Coimbatore, and 106 w Tanjore. Lon. 77 40 E, lat. 10 47 N.

Darda, a town and fort of Lower Hungary, built by the Turks in 1686, and taken by the Austrians the next year. It is seated near the Drave, at the end of the bridge of Essek, 8 m s Barany.

Dardanelles, two castles of Turkey; the one, called Sestos, seated in Romania; the other, called Abydos, in Natolia. They command the middle and narrowest part of the strait of Gallipoli. At the latter, the cargoes of all ships sailing from Constantinople are searched. Lon. 26 26 E, lat. 40 10 N.

Darempoury, a town of Hindoostan, in Mysore, 98 m ese Seringapatam. Lon. 78 24 E, lat. 12 6 N.

Darfoor, a kingdom of Africa, on the borders of Nubia and Negroland, governed by a chief who calls himself sultan, and assumes the most extravagant titles. The wild animals are lions, leopards, hyenas, wolves, and buffaloes; the domestic are camels, goats, sheep and beeves. Considerable quantities of grain of different sorts are raised, and after the tropical rains the fertility is sudden and great. The people are very barbarous; consisting of native tribes of a deep black complexion and woolly hair, though with features different from those of the Negros, and of Arab of various tribes. Polygamy is not only established, but the intercourse of the sexes is totally destitute of decency. The labours of the field are left to the women; and the houses, which are of clay covered with thin boards, are chiefly built by them. Salt is the general medium of commerce here, and gold dust is in many other places. Africa. Caravans travel between the country and Egypt. Cobbe is the capital.

name of the Isthmus of Darien, and, by some writers, the Isthmus of Panama. In the narrowest part it is not above 50 m broad; and it extends 360 m in the form of a crescent, round the bay of Panama; being bounded on the N by the gulf of Mexico, E by the river and gulf of Darien, S by Popayan and the Pacific ocean, and W by the same ocean and Veragua. This isthmus, which unites the continents of N and S America, is strengthened by a chain of lofty mountains, stretching through its whole extent, which render it a barrier of solidity sufficient to resist the impulse of two opposite oceans. The mountains are covered with forests almost inaccessible. The valleys in this moist climate, where it rains during two-thirds of the year, are marshy, and so often overflowed, that the inhabitants, in many places, build their houses upon trees, to be elevated from the damp soil, and the odious reptiles engendered in the putrid waters. The natives go naked; and the men have a silver plate fastened to their nose, which hangs over their mouths, in the shape of a half-moon: the women have a ring hanging down in the same manner; and they have also several chains of teeth, shells, beads, and the like, hanging from the neck to the pit of the stomach. Their houses are mostly thin and scattered, and always by the side of a river, with plantations lying about them. The men clear the plantations, and the women cultivate them. The girls are employed in picking and spinning cotton, which the women weave, and the cloths are chiefly used for hammocks. It is the business of the men to make baskets, which they do very neatly with canes, reeds, or palmeto leaves died of various colours. Each man has several wives, who live together in great harmony. They are fond of dancing to the sound of a pipe and drum, and play a great many antic tricks. When they go out to hunt, the women carry in their baskets plantains, bananas, yams, potatoes, and cassava-roots ready roasted. They have no distinction of days or weeks, but reckon their time by the course of the moon. The animals are the same as in other countries of the same climate. The principal towns are Panama and Porto Bello.

Darien, a town of the state of Georgia, in Liberty county, seated on the branch of the Alatamaha, not far from its mouth, and 47 m SW Savanna. Lon. 81 37 W, lat. 31 23 N.

Darlington, a town in the county of Durham, with a market on Monday. Here are manufactures of huckabacks, camlets, small wares of the Manchester kind, and leather; also a curious water machine for grinding optical glasses, and another for spinning linen yarn, the invention of a native. The number of inhabitants was 4670 in 1801, and 5059 in 1811. It is seated on the Skerne, 19 m S Durham, and 241 N by W London. Lon. 1 25 W, lat. 54 32 N.

Darmstadt, a town of Germany, capital of the upper county of Catzenellenbogen, with a castle, where the prince of Hesse Darmstadt generally resides. It has handsome suburbs, and a good college. It is seated on a river of the same name, 30 m NW Heidelberg. Lon. 8 38 E, lat. 49 53 N.

Darney, a town of France, in the department of Vosges, 21 m WSW Epinal.

Daroca, a town of Spain, in Aragon, with seven parish churches, one of which is collegiate. It stands between two hills, on the Xiloca, 48 m SW Saragossa.

Darore, a town of Hindocstan, in Dowlatabad, 80 m NW Beder, and 98 E by S Amednagur. Lon. 76 43 E, lat. 18 44 N.

Darraway, a town of Hindocstan, in the country of Tatta, at the mouth of a river of the same name, a branch of the Indus, 74 m WSW Tatta. Lon. 66 31 E, lat. 24 32 N.

Dart, a river in Devonshire, which rises at the foot of Dartmoor hills, crosses Dartmoor to Ashburton and Totness, where it is navigable for small vessels, and enters the English channel at Dartmouth.

Dartford, a town in Kent, with a market on Saturday. Here are the remains of a nunnery founded by Edward III. At the dissolution it was converted into a royal palace; but it was alienated by James I. The rebellion of Wat Tyler, in the reign of Richard II, began in this town. The first paper-mill in England was erected here; and in the neighbourhood are some gunpowder mills. It is seated on the Darent, not far from its entrance into the Thames, 15 m E by S London.

Dartmoor, a forest in Devonshire, bounded on the N by bleak hills, and extending 20 m S through the centre of the county to the sea. It contains about 80,000 acres, and is watered by the river Dart. Many sheep are bred here, but of a small kind, and beees, which thrive well on the coarse herbage.

Dartmouth, a borough and seaport in Devonshire, governed by a mayor, with a market on Friday. It stands on the side of a craggy hill, by the river Dart, near its entrance into the sea, and has a spacious bay defended by a castle and strong battery. The dock-yards and quay project into the river, and the rocks on each side are composed of a purple coloured slate. The town contains three churches, and has a considerable trade to the s of Europe and to Newfoundland, as well as a share in the coasting traffic. It is 30 m ssw Exeter, and 203 w by s London. Lon. 3 45 w, lat. 50 22 N.

Dartmouth, a seaport of Massachusetts, in Bristol county, situate on the Accushnet, 50 m s Boston. Lon. 70 52 w, lat. 41 37 N.

Darwar, a fortress of Hindoostan, in the country of Sanore, taken from Tip-poo by the British in 1791, and afterward restored to the Mahrattas. It is 45 m wnw Sanore. Lon. 75 9 E, lat. 16 5 N.

Dassel, a town of Lower Saxony, in the duchy of Brunfwick, 15 m nwn Gottingen.

Davanagiri, a town of Hindoostan, in Mysore, with a small fort. Here are manufactures of coarse cotton cloths; and also of cumlies, a kind of blankets resembling English camblets, which are in high repute. Many merchants reside here, and carry on a considerable trade. It is 36 m nw Chitteldroog.

Daventry, a town in Northamptonshire, governed by a mayor, with a market on Wednesday, and a manufacture of whips. It stands on the Roman highway called Watling-street, on the side of a hill, 10 m w Northampton, and 72 nw London.

David, St. a city of Wales, in Pembrokehire, with a market on Wednesday. It was once a considerable place, and had walls, which are now demolished. The cathedral is only the ruins of its former splendour, and it contains the tomb of the celebrated Giraldus Cambrensis. From the adjacent cape called St. David head is a view into Ireland; and the whole neighbourhood abounds with remains of druidical monuments. The city is seated in a barren soil, on the river Ilen, 24 m nw Pembroke, and 273 w by N London. Lon. 5 15 w, lat. 51 56 N.

David, St. a village of Scotland, in Fifeshire, with a harbour in Inverkeithing bay. It has a considerable manufacture of salt, and exports an immense quantity of coal.

David, Fort St. an English fort, on the coast of Coromandel, which was taken and destroyed by the French in 1758, and has not yet been rebuilt. It is one mile n Cuddalore.

Davis Strait, an arm of the sea, between Greenland and N America, discovered by captain Davis, in 1585, when he attempted to find a nw passage.

Davos, a town of Swisserland, in the canton of Grisons, capital of a district in which are mines of copper, lead, and silver. It is 14 m E Coire.

Dauphin, Fort, a fort built by the French, on the E coast of Madagascar. Lon. 45 10 E, lat. 24 55 S.

Dauphiny, a late province of France, 130 m long and 115 broad; bounded on the w by the Rhone, N by the Rhone and Savoy, s by Provence, and E by the Alps. From this province, the heir apparent of the kings of France was called the Dauphin. Two thirds of Dauphiny are intersected by mountains, which afford good pasturage; plenty of timber, fir-trees in particular, for the building of ships; and very scarce simples. In these mountains, which are branches of the Alps, are bears, chamois marmots, eagles, hawks, &c. and mines of iron, copper, and lead. The valley afford wheat, and the hills, in the vicinity of the Rhone, excellent wines, olives, and silk. The principal rivers are the Rhone, Durance, Isere, and Drome. It now forms the departments of Drome, Isere, and Upper Alps.

Dax, or Dacqs, a town of France, in the department of Landes, and late a bishop's see. Here are some famous hot baths, the spring of which discharges 543 cubic feet of water in 10 minutes. It is surrounded by walls flanked with towers, and seated on the Adour, 24 m NE Bayonne. Lon. 13 42 E, lat. 43 42 N.

Dead Sea, a lake or inland sea in Palestine, into which the river Jordan runs. It is 60 m long and 15 broad, enclosed on the E and w by high mountains. Many fabulous opinions have for ages been affixed to the extreme saltness and other qualities of its waters, but it is now known to swarm with fishes, that shells abound on its shores, and that certain birds make it their peculiar resort. Mines of fossil salt are found in the sides of the mountains, which supply the neighbouring Arabians and the city of Jerusalem; also fragments of sulphur and bitumen, which the Arabs convert into trifling articles of commerce. This lake, called also Lake Asphaltites, has no outlet; and it has been demonstrated, that evaporation is more than sufficient to carry off the water brought in by the rivers.

Deadmans Head, a cape on the s coast of England, in Cornwall, between St. Maws and Fowey.

Deal, a town in Kent, with a market on Thursday. It is seated between the N and S Foreland, and is a member of the cinque port of Sandwich, governed by a mayor. No manufacture is carried on here, and it chiefly depends on the export of seafaring men. It has no harbour, but the sea between the shore and the Godwin Sands, called the Downs, is generally a secure road for ships, where they usually ride upon their leaving or entering the river Thames. The port is defended by two castles, Deal or Walmer castle to the s, and Sandown castle to the n; and also by several batteries. Deal is the birthplace of the celebrated Elifabeth Carter. It is 7 m by s Sandwich, and 74 E by s London. Lon. 1 24 E, lat. 51 13 N.

Dean, a forest in Gloucestershire, including that part of the county which lies between the Severn and the shires of Wiltshire and Hereford. It contains four market-towns and 23 parishes; is fertile in pasture and tillage, and bears very fine oaks, and has rich veins of iron and coal. It was once reckoned the chief support of the English navy; but is now thinned by frequency of felling, and narrowed by inclosure of cultivation, though a few deer continue to run wild in its recesses. The forest of Dean, and the rich vale of the same name, abound in orchards, which produce great plenty of excellent fruit.

Debalpour, a town of Hindoostan, capital of a district in the province of Malabar. It is situate on the great river from Delhi to Moultan, near the village of Setlege, 80 m sE Lahore, and 170 m N Moultan. Lon. 73 32 E, lat. 15 5 N.

Deben, a river in Suffolk, which rises at Debenham, and flows to Woodbridge, where it expands into a long narrow arm of the German ocean, a little to the N of Harwich.

Debenham, a town in Suffolk, with a market on Friday, seated on the side of the river, near the source of the Deben, 24 m N Bury St. Edmund, and 83 N London.

Debrezin, a town of Upper Hungary, capital of a district of the same name. It was taken by the Turks in 1684, and the Austrians retook it the same year. It is 107 m E Buda. Lon. 47 38 E, lat. 47 34 N.

Deccan, an extensive tract in Hindoostan, which, from the signification of its name [South], has been supposed to include the whole region s of Hindoostan Proper. But in its more accepted sense, it contains only the countries lying between Hindoostan Proper, and what is termed the Peninsula; namely, the provinces of Candesh, Dowlatabad, Vissapour, the N part of Golconda, Berar, Orissa, and the Circars. It is bounded on the N by the river Nerbudda, by Bengal, and by Bahar; and the river Kistna forms its separation on the s from the peninsula of Hindoostan. All this vast country was once the southern province of the Monguls, who did not pass the Kistna till a recent period. Candesh, Vissapour, and a part of Dowlatabad, Berar, and Orissa are subject to the Mahrattas. The English have part of Orissa and of the Circars. The dominions of the nizams of the Deccan comprise Golconda, the principal part of Dowlatabad, and the western part of Berar. His territories are bounded on the NW by the Poonah Mahrattas, N by the Berar Mahrattas, E by the Circars, and S by the Carnatic and Mysore. By family succession, in 1780, the nizam became possessed of the districts of Adoni and Tachore, and of the Guntoor Circar; and by the peace of 1792 and partition of 1799 he had a share of the countries belonging to Tipoo Sultan, including Kopaul, Cuddapa, Gangecolla, Gooty, and Gurrumconda. His dominions (without including the cessions) are supposed to be 430 m from NW to SE, by 300 wide. The capital is Hydrabad.

Devize, a town of France, in the department of Nievre, seated in an island, at the conflux of the Airon with the Loire, 16 m sE Nevers.

Deckendorf, a town of Lower Bavaria, seated on the Danube, 27 m NW Passau.

Deddington, a town in Oxfordshire, with a market on Saturday, 16 m N Oxford, and 69 WNW London.

Dedham, a town of Massachusetts, chief of Norfolk county. It has a wire manufacture for fish-hooks and cards, and is seated on Charles river, 11 m SW Boston.

Dedham, a town in Essex, with a market on Tuesday, and a manufacture of baize. It has an ancient large church, with a curious steeple, and a free grammar-school endowed by queen Elizabeth. It is seated on the Stour, 8 m NNE Colchester, and 58 NE London.

Dee, a river of Wales, held in great veneration by the ancient Britons, and the theme of many a poet since. It issues from the lake of Bala, in Merionethshire, whence it flows through a fine vale across the s part of Denbighshire to the SW part of Shropshire, visits the w border of Cheshire, passes on to Chester, and flows thence to the Irish sea, making a broad estuary, which separates Cheshire from Flintshire. The Dee is navigable from near Ellesmere, in Shropshire, to Chester, where the continuity of the navigation is broken by a ledge of rocks, running across the river; but by embankments made here, much land has been gained from the tide; and a narrow channel, fitter for navigation, has been formed from Chester half way to the sea.

Dee, a river of Scotland, which rises on the w border of Aberdeenshire, amid the mountains of Mar forest, and flows E through a wild country till it reaches the fertile vale of Braemar, whence it proceeds to Aberdeen, below which it enters the German ocean.

Dee, a river of Scotland, which rises in the w part of Kirkcudbrightshire, receives the Ken, below New Galloway, and enters the Irish sea, 5 m below Kirkcudbright.

Deeping, or Market Deeping, a town in Lincolnshire, with a market on Thursday; seated on the Welland, in a fen country, 6 m E Stamford, and 90 N London.

Deer, a village of Scotland, in Aberdeenshire, on a river of its name, 10 m w Peterhead. It has a trade in fine yarn, and near it are the remains of the abbey of Deer.

Deerfield, a town of Massachusetts, in Hampshire county, with an academy; seated on the Connecticut, near the influx of the river Deerfield, 17 m NNE Northampton, and 90 w by N Boston.

Deerhurst, a village in Gloucestershire, 3 m s Tewkesbury, subject to frequent inundations from the Severn. Here was a celebrated monastery, which was afterward made a cell to Tewkesbury abbey.

Deinse, or Deynse, a town of the Netherlands, in Flanders, seated on the Lis, 8 m sw Ghent.

Deizabad, a town of Persia, in Irak, 90 m N Isfahan.

Delagoa, a bay on the E coast of Africa, at the N end of the country of Natal. Cattle and poultry may be purchased here for a trifle; and it is frequently visited by vessels employed in the whale fishery. Lon. 32 0 E, lat. 26 0 S.

Delaware, a town of Virginia, in King William county, seated on the broad peninsula formed by the conflux of the Pamunky and Mattapony, whose united stream hence assumes the name of York River. It is 20 m N by w Williamsburg, and 45 w Richmond.

Delaware, one of the United States of America, 92 m long and 24 broad; bounded on the N by Pennsylvania, E by Delaware river and bay, and S and W by Maryland. In many parts it is unhealthy, being seated in a peninsula, where the land is generally low, which occasions the waters to stagnate. It is divided into three counties, Newcastle Kent, and Suffex. In 1810 the number of inhabitants was 72,624. The capital is Dover.

Delaware, a river of the United States, formed by two streams in the state of New York. In its course it separates Pennsylvania from New York and New Jersey; and, a few miles below Philadelphia, the state of Delaware from New Jersey, till it enters the bay of Delaware bay, a few miles below Salem. At Philadelphia it has a sufficient depth of water for a 74 gun ship; is navigable thence for floating up to the falls at Trenton; and for boats, that carry eight or ten tons, 10 m higher.

Delaware Bay, a bay of the United States, between the states of Delaware and New Jersey. It is 60 m long from Cape Henlopen to the entrance of the river Delaware at Bombay-haven, and from 10 to 30 broad. It opens to the Atlantic, between Cape Henlopen on the S, and Cape May on the N, which are 20 m apart. On the former is a lighthouse. Lon. 75 9 W, lat. 38 4 N.

Delebio, a town of Switzerland, in Valteline, on a small river that runs to the Adda, 5 m NW Morbegno.

Delft, a town of S Holland, built, with canals in the streets, plantations on each side with trees. Here are many churches, in one of which is the tomb of William III, prince of Orange, who was assassinated. It has a fine art and a considerable manufacture of earthen ware. Delft is the birthplace of the renowned Grotius. It is 10 m on the Schie, 8 m NW Rotterdam.

Delfzuyl, a town and fortress of Holland, in Groningen, with a good harbour. It is seated on the Damster, at its entrance into the estuary of the Ems, 12 m SW by S Emden. Lon. 6 58 E, lat. 48 18 N.

Delhi, a province of Hindoostan, bounded on the NW by Lahore, SE by Serinagur, E by the Rohilla country, S by Agra, and W by Mountan. Having been the seat of continual wars for above 60 years. It is almost depopulated; and a tract of country that possesses every advantage that can be derived from nature, contains the most miserable of inhabitants. It is now all that remains to the great mogul of his once extensive empire.

Delhi, the capital of the province of the same name. It is the nominal capital of all Hindoostan, and was actually so during the greatest part of the time since the Mohamedan conquest. In 1738, when Nadir Shah invaded Hindoostan, he entered Delhi, and dreadful were the massacres and famine that followed: 100,000 of the inhabitants perished by the sword; and plunder to the amount of 62,000,000l. sterling was said to be collected. The same calamities were endured in 1761, on the invasion of Abdalla, king of Candahar. In 1803, the Mahrattas, aided by the French, got possession of this place; but they were afterward defeated here by general Lake, and the aged Shah Aulum, emperor of Hindoostan, was restored to his throne. Delhi may be said to be now in ruins; but there are many splendid remains of palaces with baths of marble. The grand mosque is a magnificent edifice of marble and red freestone, with high minarets, and domes richly gilt. It is seated on the Jumna, 350 m NW Allahabad. Lon. 77 40 E, lat. 28 37 N.

Delitz, a town of Upper Saxony, in Misnia, with a considerable manufacture of worsted stockings, 15 m N by E Leipzig.

Dellamcotta, a fortress of the country of Bootan, which commands the principal pass over the mountains. It was taken by storm in 1773, by a detachment under captain John Jones. It is 15 m SW Tassafudon, and 200 m Moorshedabad. Lon. 88 46 E, lat. 27 2 N.

Desmenhorst, a town of Westphalia, capital of a district, in the duchy of Oldenburg. It is seated on the Delm, near the Weser, 8 m SW Bremen.

Delos, or Dili, an island of the Archipelago, formerly celebrated for the temples of Diana and Apollo, whose birth-place it is said to be. It is 6 m in circumference, but now little more than a desert rock, covered with ruins, and uninhabited. Lon. 25 12 E, lat. 37 38 N.

Delphi, or Delphos, a town of European Turkey, in Livadia, once famous for the oracle of Apollo, which people came from all parts to consult. It is seated in a valley, near Mount Parnassus, 18 m WSW Livadia.

Delfberg, a town of Switzerland, in the late bishopric of Basel, on the river Birs, 10 m NW Soleure.

Delta, a part of Lower Egypt, enclosed between the mouths of the Nile and the Mediterranean; so called from its triangular form, resembling the Greek letter of that name. The same term is frequently applied to the mouths of the Ganges, the Indus, and other large rivers.

Delvino, a town of European Turkey, in Albania, with a castle. It is the residence of a pacha, under that of Janina, and stands on an eminence, surrounded by advantageous military stations, 24 m WSW Janina.

Dembea, a considerable lake of Abyssinia, in a province of the same name, in the W part of the empire. It is supposed to be 450 m in circumference, and contains many islands, one of which is a place of confinement for state prisoners.

Demerara, a Dutch settlement in Guayana, on a river of the same name, contiguous to Isequibo. The river is 2 m wide at its mouth, defended by a fort on the E bank, and navigable upward of 200 m. The country produces coffee, sugar-canes, and the finest kinds of wood. It was taken by the English in 1796, restored in 1802, and taken again in 1803. This settlement and that of Isequibo form one government, and the capital is Starbrock.

Demmin, a town of Hither Pomerania, situate among morasses, on the river Peene, 16 m SW Gripfswald.

Demonia, a town and fort of Piedmont, on the river Sture, 10 m SW Coni.

Demotica, or Dimotuc, a town of European Turkey, in Romania, where a Greek archbishop resides. It was the residence of Charles XII for some years; and is situate near the Maritsch, 12 m S Adrianople.

DEN

Denain, a village of France, in the department of Nord, where a victory was gained over prince Eugene, by marshal Villars, in 1712. It is seated on the Scheldt, 6 m SW Valenciennes.

Denbigh, a borough of Wales, capital of Denbighshire, with a market on Wednesday and Saturday. Its ruined castle, with its vast enclosure crowning the top of the hill, forms a striking object. Denbigh has a considerable manufacture of gloves and shoes. The number of inhabitants was 2391 in 1801, and 2714 in 1811. It is situate on the side of a rocky hill, above the vale of Clywd, on a branch of the river of that name, 27 m W Chester, and 200 NW London. Lon. 3 35 W. lat. 53 11 N.

Denbighshire, a county of Wales, bounded on the N by the Irish sea, NE by Flintshire, E by Shropshire, S by Merionethshire and Montgomeryshire, and W by Carnarvonshire. It is 48 m long and 20 in its broadest part, contains 467,840 acres; is divided into six hundreds, and 59 parishes; has three market-towns; and sends two members to parliament. The number of inhabitants was 60,352 in 1801, and 64,240 in 1811. Its principal rivers are the Clywd, Elwy, Dee, and Conway. The soil is various; the vale of Clywd being extremely fertile, which is not the case with the E part of the country; and the W is, in a manner, barren. The products are corn, cheese, cattle, lead, and coal. The assizes are held at Ruthin, and the largest town is Wrexham.

Dender, a river of the Netherlands, which rises in Hainault, flows by Leuze, Ath, Lessines, Grammont, Ninove, and Alost, and joins the Scheldt, at Dendermond.

Dendera, a town of Egypt, the residence of an Arabian prince, who takes the title of Emir. It was anciently called Tentyra, and from the ruins that are seen appears to have been a large city. This place supplies most part of Egypt with charcoal. It is seated near the left bank of the Nile, 260 m S by E Cairo. Lon. 31 58 E, lat. 26 15 N.

Dendermond, a fortified town of the Netherlands, in Flanders, with a strong citadel. It was taken by the allies in 1706, and the Dutch put a garrison into it as one of the barrier towns. The French took it in 1745, and again in 1794. It is surrounded by marshes and fine meadows, which can be covered with water, and seated at the conflux of the Dender with the Scheldt, 16 m W Mechlin. Denia, a seaport of Spain, in Valencia. The entrance into the harbour is difficult, and the chief trade is in corn, almonds, and raisins. It stands at the foot of a mountain, 47 m NE Alicant. Lon. 0 2 E. lat. 38 50 N.

Denmark, a kingdom of Europe; bounded on the E by the Baltic sea, W and N by the ocean, and S by Germany. The country is generally flat, and the soil sandy. The air is rendered foggy by the neighbourhood of the seas and lakes, of which it is full; but it has no considerable river. Denmark, properly so called, consists of Jutland and the islands of Zealand and Funen, with the little isles about them; but the king of Denmark's dominions contain also Norway, the duchy of Holstein, Iceland, and the Feroe islands. In the E Indies he possesses Tranquebar on the coast of Coromandel, and the Nicobar islands; in the W Indies, the islands of St. Thomas, St. Croix, and St. John; Christianburg on the coast of Guinea; and a small part of Greenland: but some have been taken in the present war. Denmark was once a limited and elective monarchy; but, in 1660, it was made absolute and hereditary, by a revolution almost unparalleled in history; a free people voluntarily resigning their liberties into the hands of their sovereign. The inhabitants are protestants since the year 1522, when they embraced the confession of Augsborg. The manners and customs of the superior classes differ little from those in other parts of Europe; but the peasantry continue in a state of vassalage, except those of the crown, and consequently are idle, dirty, and dispirited. The number of souls in the islands of Denmark and Jutland is estimated at 850,000; in the duchy of Sleswick or S Jutland 250,000; to which if we add Norway, the duchy of Holstein, and Iceland, the whole number will be rather more than 2,140,000. The revenues, which arise from the crown and duties, are computed at 1,520,000l. a year. The harbours of Denmark are well calculated for trade; and commercial companies are established to the E Indies, W Indies, and Africa. The produce of Denmark, beside fir and other timber, is bees, horses, butter, tallow, hides, pitch, tar, fish, oil, and iron. Copenhagen is the capital.

Benedictines, to which the town owes its rise, has the appearance of a palace. Here is an ancient and magnificent church, in which were the tombs of many of the French kings; and in the treasury, among other curiosities the swords of St. Lewis and the Maid of Orleans, and the sceptre of Charlemagne. In 1793, after the abolition of royalty, the royal tombs in the church were all destroyed; and the name of the town was changed to Franciade. It is seated on the river Crould, near the Seine, 5 m N Paris.

Deegur, a town of Hindoostan, in Berar, formerly the residence of a rajah, 65 m NNW Nagpour.

Deptford, a town in Kent, considerable for its fine docks, and for the king-yard and storehouses. It was anciently called Deptford Strond, or West Greenwich. It is now divided into Upper and Lower Deptford, and has two parish churches, but not a market. Here is an hospital, incorporated by Henry VIII, called Trinity House of Deptford Strond. The brethren of the Trinity House hold their corporation by this hospital, and are obliged, at certain times, to meet here for business. This hospital contains 21 houses; and a more modern structure, and a finer one, called Trinity Hospital, contains 38. Both these are for decayed pilots, or masters of ships, or their widows, who have a handsome monthly allowance. Deptford, in 1801, contained 17,548 inhabitants: see Greenwich.

Derbend, the capital of Daghestan, with a fort on the summit of a rock, and a haven on the Caspian sea. It stands on the site of the ancient Albania, and is surrounded by high brick walls. The inhabitants are chiefly Russians, Tartars, and Armenians. This town has, since 1796, been in possession of the Russians. It is 120 m N Schamachi, and 180 E Teflis. Lon. 48 20 E, lat. 42 5 N.

Derby, a borough and the capital of Derbyshire, governed by a mayor, with a market on Friday. It is seated on the Derwent, over which is a stone bridge; and a brook runs through the town, under several stone bridges. Here is also a canal to the Trent. It has five churches, of which All Saints is the chief, noted for its beautiful tower. In 1734, a machine was erected here by sir Thomas Lombe for the manufacturing of silk, the model of which was brought from Italy; and it was the first of the kind in England. Derby possesses also a considerable manufacture of cotton, and fine worsted stockings; and has a fabric of fine porcelain. Several hands are employed in the lapidary and jewellery branches; and Derbyshire marbles, spars, and crystals, are wrought into a variety of ornamental articles. The maling trade is likewise carried on here. The number of inhabitants was 10,832 in 1801, and 13,043 in 1811. The rebels came as far as this town in 1745, and then returned to Scotland. It is 16 m W Nottingham, and 116 NNW London. Lon. 1 25 W, lat. 52 58 N.

Derby, a town of Connecticut, in Newhaven county, seated on the Housatonic, which is navigable hence to the sea, 14 m NW Newhaven.

Derby, a town of Pennsylvania, in Dauphin county. Here is a cave divided into several apartments, and adorned with stalactites. It is situate on the Swatera, 2 m above its conflux with the Susquehanna, and 10 SE Harrisburg.

Derbyshire, a county of England, bounded on the N by Yorkshire, E by Nottinghamshire, S by Leicestershire and Warwickshire, W by Staffordshire, and NW by Cheshire. It extends 59 m from N to S, and 34 where broadest, but in the S part it is not above 6. It contains 689,280 acres; is divided into six hundreds, and 138 parishes; has 11 market-towns; and sends four members to parliament. The number of inhabitants was 161,142 in 1801, and 185,487 in 1811. The S and E parts are pleasant and fertile, producing most kinds of grain, particularly barley. Even the NW part, called the Peak, is abundantly rich; for the mountains abound in minerals, and the intermediate valleys are fruitful in grass. The barytes, or ponderous earth, is here found in great quantities. The principal rivers are the Derwent, Dove, Erwash, and Trent. See Peak.

Dereham, a town in Norfolk, with a market on Friday. The church is a very ancient structure, with four chapels, and a curious stone font. It is 16 m W Norwich, and 101 NNE London.

Derenburg, a town of Lower Saxony, in the principality of Halberstadt, 6 m WSW Halberstadt.

Derkus, a town of European Turkey, in Romania, on the coast of the Black sea, 30 m NNW Constantinople.

Derna, a seaport of Barbary, capital of Barca, and the residence of a fangiac, with a castle. It is seated in a fertile country, on the W side of a bay of the Mediterranean, which affords good anchorage for the largest vessels, but is exposed to the NE winds. During the Derwent-water, a lake in Cumberland, near to Keswick, of an oval form, 3 m long and a mile and a half wide. It is surrounded by rocky mountains, broken into many fantastic shapes. The precipices seldom overhang the water, but are arranged at some distance; and the shores swell with woody eminences, or sink into green pastoral margins. The lake contains five islands; one of which, near the centre, is famous for having been the residence of St. Herbert, the ruins of whose hermitage are yet remaining. The river Derwent flows through this lake.

Desaguadero, a river of New Spain. See Juan, St.

Desaguadero, a town of Chili, seated on a lake of the same name, 260 m E Valdivia. Lon. 67 30 W, lat. 40 5 S.

tol channel, \pm by Somersetshire and Dorsetshire, sw and s by the English channel, and w by Cornwall. It is 40 m long and 64 broad, containing 1,592,320 acres; is divided into 32 hundreds, and 465 parishes; has a city and 35 market-towns; and sends 26 members to parliament. The number of inhabitants was 341,004 in 1801, and 383,308 in 1811. The air is so mild in the valleys, that the myrtle grows unsheltered; but it is cold and bleak on the mountains. The soil is various, for the lower grounds are naturally fertile, and the hills are very barren. In the eastern part there is plenty of good corn, and fine pasturage for sheep, where the grounds are dry and chalky. The southern part is remarkably fertile; and fruit-trees are plentiful, especially apples, from which a great quantity of cider is made. On the coast is found a peculiar rich sand, of singular service to husbandmen. The middle part is occupied by the forest of Dartmoor. The western part abounds with game, especially hares, pheasants, and woodcocks; and here is a bird so very small, that it is reputed a humming-bird, and like that constructs its nest on the extreme branches of trees. Devonshire was formerly more celebrated for its mines than even Cornwall; and although the latter has nearly monopolized the trade, the flannery laws in some degree remain in force. Here are veins of loadstone; likewise quarries of good stone and slate, great quantities of which are exported. In the sw parts are much marble, and in many places marble rocks are the basis of the high road. The principal rivers are the Tamar, Taw, Torridge, Ex, Teign, and Dart. Exeter is the capital.

Deuprag, a town of Tibet, in the country of Siniagur, seated at the conflux of the Allaknandara with the Ganges, 23 m s Sirinagur.

Deux Ponts, or Zweybrucken, a late duchy of Germany, in the palatinate of the Rhine. The country is mountainous, but celebrated for mines of quicksilver, and yields abundance of corn, wood, and wine. It now belongs to France, and is included in the department of Mont Tonnerre.

Domfront, a town of France, in the department of Orne, seated on a craggy rock, by the river Varenne, 35 m NW Alençon.

Domingo, St. or Hispaniola, one of the richest islands in the W Indies, 370 m in length and from 60 to 120 in breadth, except at the W part where it divides into two peninsulas about 25 m broad; that to the S being the longest, and extending 150 m. It was discovered by Columbus, in 1492, who called it Hispaniola; but building a city to which he gave the name of St. Domingo, the island is now more frequently called by that name than Hispaniola. The natives call it Hayti, or highland, for such it presents itself, particularly to the N. The island is surrounded by craggy rocks and dangerous shoals. The heat to the N and SE would be insupportable for six months of the year, if not qualified by the easterly winds, and frequent rains; but the latter soon spoil the flesh, bread, and fruits. It has mines of gold, talc, and crystal; extensive and rich vallies; and immense verdant plains where numerous herds pasture in common. The chief rivers are the Artibonite, St. Jago, Neyba, Yuua, Ozama, and Nisao. The Spaniards had possession of the whole island for 120 years; in the first fifteen of which they reduced at least a million of inhabitants to 60,000. They were afterward forced to divide the island with the French, who had the W part, but not equal to one third; and the Spaniards retained the E, which is the most fruitful. This joint possession continued till 1795, when the Spaniards ceded their part to the French. Since the revolution in France this island has been subject to great calamities. In 1791 an insurrection began in the French part, and in a short time not less than 100,000 blacks were in arms; the manufactures and plantations appeared as one general conflagration, and the plains and mountains were covered with carnage and blood. An African by birth, named Toussaint, was afterward invested with the command of the blacks and mulattos. In 1802 the French sent an additional force, and after several encounters the negro chief was induced to accept of apparently favorable terms; but soon after he was perfidiously seized, and sent in irons to France, where he perished in a dungeon. Two other black chiefs, Dessalines and Christophe, saved themselves by flight; the natives again flew to arms; and the French troops fell victims to the climate. Dessalines succeeded to the authority of Toussaint, and in 1804 caused himself to be proclaimed emperor of Hayti. In 1806 the chiefs began to war against each other, and the black emperor was killed. Christophe was elected chief in his place; and in 1811 was crowned king of Hayti. He is in possession of the town and harbour of St. Nicholas, and has long been in a state of warfare with other chiefs, particularly Pethion, who is possessed of Port au Prince. In 1809, the Spaniards, aided by the British, finally expelled the French from the E part of this island, and regained their ancient capital. St. Domingo lies between Jamaica to the W, and Porto Rico to the E.

Domingo, St. the capital of the E part of the island of St. Domingo, and an archbishop's see. It is of a quadrangular form, above 2 m in circuit, with the E side to the river Ozama, and the S to the sea; and is defended by forts and batteries. The ramparts that surround the city, and the walls of the houses, are formed of a glutinous red earth mixed with lime, which acquires a hardness and durability equal to stone. The cathedral is a large structure, forming the S side of the main square, and in it is preserved the first cross Columbus planted in the island. On the right of the high altar, for many years, rested the remains of that great man, brought from Seville in a brass coffin; but, on the island being ceded to the French, they were removed to Havana in 1796. The convents and nunneries are spacious buildings, and the palace is a good plain edifice. Here are barracks for 2000 men, and a fine arsenal. The houses are built in a square form, with flat roofs, and have a court in the middle. The harbour was formerly good, but is now choked up with sand and mud, that its commerce has been long extinct. This city was the last principal place in the island retained by the French, who surrendered it in 1809 to the British and Spanish forces. The inhabitants are estimated at 22,000, but before the late calamities were far more numerous. Lon. 69° 50' W, lat. 18° 28' N.

Dominica, one of the Windward Caribee islands in the W Indies. It lies about half-way between Guadaloupe and Martinico, and is 28 m long and 13 broad. It was taken by the English in 1762, and confirmed to them by the peace of 1763. The French took it in 1778, but restored it in 1783; and in 1795 they made an unsuccessful attempt, for all the Frenchmen that landed were either killed or taken prisoners. It suffered great damage by a tremendous hurricane in 1806. The soil is thin, and better adapted to the rearing of coffee than sugar; but the sides of the hills bear the finest trees in the W Indies, and the island is well supplied with rivulets. The capital is Charlotte-town.

Domwillers, a town of France, in the department of Meuse, 14 m N Verdun.

Don, a river of Russia, which separates the SE part of Europe from Asia. It issues from the lake St. John, in the government of Tula, and flows into the sea of Asoph, by several mouths. This river has so many windings, and such numerous shoals, as to be scarcely navigable, except in the spring, on the melting of the snows; and flat-bottomed boats only, except in the same season, can pass into the sea of Asoph. Its whole course is estimated to be 660 m; and in the spring it rises above sixteen feet, and inundates the adjacent plains.

Don, a river of Scotland, which rises in the W part of Aberdeenshire, receives the Urie-water at Inverary, passes by Kintore, and enters the German ocean, at Old Aberdeen.

Don, a river in Yorkshire, which rises on the borders of Cheshire, flows by Penistone, Sheffield, Rotherham, Doncaster, and Thorn, and joins the Ouse near its termination in the Humber.

Donaghadee, a small seaport of Ireland, in the county of Down, 20 m WSW Port Patrick, in Scotland, between which two places are regular packet-boats. Donauvert, a strong town of Bavaria, seated on the Danube, at the influx of the Wernitz, 25 m N by W Augsburg.

Doncaster, a town in W Yorkshire, governed by a mayor, with a market on Saturday. It had a castle, now in ruins; and has manufactures of stockings, waistcoats, and gloves. The houses are well built, and many genteel families reside here, who have their assemblies, concerts, &c. The number of inhabitants was 5697 in 1801, and 6935 in 1811. It is seated on the river Don, 37 m S York, and 158 N by W London. Lon. 1 12 W, lat. 53 33 N.

Doncherry, a town of France, in the department of Ardennes, seated on the Meuse, 3 m W Sedan.

Donegal, a county of Ireland, in the province of Ulster, 68 m long and 44 broad; bounded on the W and N by the ocean, E by Londonderry and Tyrone, and S by Fermanagh and the bay of Donegal. It contains about 140,000 inhabitants, is divided into 42 parishes, and sends two members to parliament. It is, in general, a champaign country, has extensive linen manufactures, and abounds with harbours. Lifford is the capital.

Donegal, a town of Ireland, in the county of the same name, with a fine old castle. It stands at the extremity of a large bay, to which it gives name, at the influx of the Esk, 10 m N by E Ballyshannon, and 28 SW Lifford. Lon. 7 47 W, lat. 54 36 N.

Doneraile, a borough of Ireland, in the county of Cork. Near it are quarries of variegated marble. It is situated on the Avbeg, 23 m N by W Cork, and 34 S Limerick.

Donetz, or Danaetz, a river of Russia, which rises near Bielgorod, and flows SE to the Don, which it enters 46 m above Tcherkassk, the capital of the Cossacks. The Cossacks and Tartars entertain a notion that it leaves the Don again, and they give the name of Danaetz to the most northern branch of the Don.

Dongola, or Dungala, a town of Nubia, capital of a kingdom of the same name. It contains 10,000 houses of wood, and is seated on the Nile, among mountains, 500 m N by W Senar. Lon. 32 5 E, lat. 19 25 N 1801, and 124,693 in 1811. The soil is generally rich and fertile, though in some parts very sandy; the northern part, which is divided by a range of chalk hills from the southern, affords good pasturage for cattle; while the southern part chiefly consists of fine downs, and feeds incredible numbers of sheep. The chalk hills, which run through every county from the SE part of the kingdom thus far, terminate at the further extremity of this; but on the coast, chalk cliffs extend beyond it into Devonshire, 10 m W of Lyme. From the Hampshire border to the neighbourhood of Blandford a heathy common extends, which causes an exception to the general character of fertility which this county merits; but the rich vales to the SW make ample amends. The principal rivers are the Stour and Frome. Here is plenty of poultry of all sorts, swans, woodcocks, pheasants, partridges, fieldfares, &c. The products are corn, wool, hemp, fine stone, and some marble. This county is distinguished for its woollen manufactures, and its fine ale and beer. Dorchester is the county-town, but Poole is the largest. See Portland and Purbeck.

Dorsten, a fortified town of Westphalia, in the county of Recklinghausen, seated on the Lippe, 15 m E by N Wesel.

Dort, or Dordrecht, a town of S Holland, on an island formed by the Meuse, which is here called the Merwe. It is famous for a protestant synod held in 1618, which condemned the tenets of Arminius. Here are several Lutheran and Calvinist churches, a fine council-house, an excellent academy, and the mint of S Holland. It has a good harbour, and a great trade in corn, wine, and timber; of the latter immense rafts are floated hither from Andernach, in Germany. Its natural situation is such, that it has never been taken by an enemy; but it surrendered to the French in 1795. It is 10 m SE Rotterdam. Lon. 4 45 E, lat. 51 51 N.

Dortmund, a strong town of Westphalia, in the county of Marck. It was lately imperial, and is seated on the Emster, 15 m SW Ham. Lon. 7 28 E, lat. 5 31 N.

bay of the same name, at the entrance of the English channel, 8 m NW Quimper.

Douay, a city of France, capital of the department of Nord, with a fine arsenal, a foundery for cannon, a military school, a citadel, and three famous colleges. It was taken by the duke of Marlborough in 1710, and retaken by the French, in 1712, after the suspension of arms. It is seated on the Scarpe, whence there is a canal to the Deule, 15 m NW Cambray. Lon. 3 5 E, lat. 50 22 N.

Doubs, a department of France, including part of the late province of Franche Comté. It is so named from a river which flows into the Saone, below Verdun. Besançon is the capital.

Doue, a town of France, in the department of Mayenne and Loire, with a considerable manufacture of druggets and tammies. Near it is a vast Roman amphitheatre, cut out of the solid rock. It is 9 m SW Saumur.

Dove, a river in Derbyshire, which rises in the Peak, near Buxton, parts the county from Staffordshire, and joins the Trent, 4 m below Burton.

Dover, a seaport in Kent, governed by a mayor, with a market on Wednesday and Saturday. It is situate between two high cliffs, and on that side from the town is an ancient castle, in which there are barracks for 3000 men. The town is also defended by several batteries. It was once walled round, and had 10 gates, but there now remain only three, and those much out of repair; also seven churches, which are now reduced to two in the town and one in the castle. The number of inhabitants was 14,845 in 1801, and 9,074 in 1811. It was formerly deemed the key of the island, and is the principal of the cinque ports. It is the station of the packet-boats that, in time of peace, pass between Dover and Calais, from which it is distant only 21 m. The harbour is made by a gap in the cliffs, which are of great height; and hence, in fine weather, is a prospect of the coast of France. Dover is 15 m SE Canterbury and 72 London. Lon. 1 18 E, lat. 51 8 N.

Dover, the capital of the state of Delaware, in Kent county. The chief trade is in corn and flour. It stands on Jones creek, 4 m from its mouth in Delaware bay, and 66 SSW Philadelphia. Lon. 75 34 W, lat. 39 10 N.

Drentelburg, a town of Germany, in Lower Hesse, 18 m NNW Cassel.

Dresden, a city of Germany, and the capital of Saxony. It is divided by the Elbe into the old and new town, which are united by a grand bridge, and surrounded by strong fortifications. It has a castle, an academy of painting and sculpture, and a magnificent church for the Roman catholics. The houses are built of freestone, almost all of the same height; and though the palaces are few, it is deemed the handsomest city in Germany. The palaces of Holland and Japan are full of curiosities from that country and China; and the picture gallery may claim precedence over every individual gallery in Italy. The city and suburbs are estimated to contain 50,000 inhabitants, near 5000 of whom are catholics, and there are about 800 Jews. Here are manufactures of gold and silver lace, jewelry, porcelain, paper-hangings, and wind-instruments of music. Dresden was taken by the king of Prussia in 1745, but was soon restored; again taken by him in 1756; but retaken in 1759; and it was bombarded by him in 1760, for nine days, when he was obliged to raise the siege. In 1813, it was occupied by the French early in May; in August, the allies made an unsuccessful attempt to take it by storm; in September, the French army, with Bonaparte and the king of Saxony, retired to Leipzig; in October, after the battle of Leipzig, it was reoccupied by a remnant of the French army, which, in November, surrendered to the allies. Dresden is 80 m NNW Prague. Lon. 13 50 E , lat. 51 6 N .

Dreux, a town of France, in the department of Eure and Loir, with a considerable manufacture of cloth for the Druses, a people of Syria, on the mountains of Libanus and Antilibanus, and to the E as far as Balbec. Their language is the Arabic; and they appear to have little religion of any kind, but pray indifferently in Christian churches or Turkish mosques. They are warlike, inured to labour, and great enemies of the Turks, and have their particular princes, called Emirs. Bairout is their capital.

Dublin, a county of Ireland, in the province of Leinster, 27 m long and 17 broad; bounded on the E by the Irish sea, N by E Meath, W by the same and Kildare, and S by Wicklow. It is divided into 107 parishes, has one city and four market-towns, sends five members to parliament, and contains about 208,000 inhabitants. The country is in general flat, except toward the S, where it is hilly and rocky. The principal river is the Liffey.

Dublin, the metropolis of Ireland, in a county of the same name, and an archbishop's see, with a university. Its form is that of a square, 2 m and a half on each side, and contains about 22,000 houses, whose inhabitants are estimated at 150,000. The streets have been lately improved in regard both to convenience and embellishment; and there are several magnificent squares, the largest of which is St. Stephen-green, nearly a mile in circuit. It has a cathedral and a collegiate church, 18 parish churches, eight chapels, 16 Roman catholic chapels, numerous meeting-houses for dissenters of various denominations, four foreign churches, and a synagogue. Among the principal public buildings are the castle (the residence of the viceroy), the national bank, Trinity college, the hall of justice, the royal exchange, the customhouse, the royal hospital of Kilmalsham for invalids, the linen hall, the barracks, the tollfell or townhouse, and Essex-bridge and Sarah-bridge, two of the six bridges over the Liffey. The hospitals and other charitable institutions are numerous; and it has two theatres. The Phoenix park, at the w end of the city, is a royal enclosure, 7 m in circuit; and, beside the Hibernian school, is adorned with the villa of the viceroy, the seat of the principal secretary, and a few others; also a salute battery of 22 pieces of cannon, and the ammunition magazine, a strong fortification. An observatory is erected on a rocky hill, about 4 m NW of the city. The civil government of Dublin is executed by a lord mayor, recorder, two sheriffs, 24 aldermen, and a common council, formed of representatives from the 25 corporations. The city send two members to parliament, and Trinity college one. Beside the silk, woollen, and cotton manufactures carried on in the suburbs, other branches of useful manufacture are establishing in different parts of the metropolis; and its foreign trade is considerable. The harbour is incommoded by two banks of sand, which prevent vessels of large burden from going over the bar; it has a mole nearly 4 m in length, with a lighthouse at the extremity, and another on the promontory opposite, called the hill of Howth. Three m below the city, at a place called the Pigeon-house, is a commodious dock; and here the packets receive and land their passengers. The Liffey divides the city almost into two equal parts, and has spacious and noble quays on both sides. Two canals pass from the Liffey; the southern one extends upward of 40 m to the Barrow navigation, and a branch is carried in a w direction toward the Shannon, at Clonfert; the northern one communicates with that great river in the county of Longford, and by a lateral cut unites with the Boyne navigation. Dublin is seated at the end of a spacious bay, 7 m from the Irish sea, 60 w Holyhead, in Wales, and 300 wNW London. Lon. 6 15 w, lat. 53 21 N.

Duke of York Island, an island in the Pacific ocean, discovered by commodore Byron in 1765, lying N of the Friendly islands. Lon. 172 30 W, lat. 7 56 S.

Duke of York Island, an island in the Pacific ocean, lying between New Britain and New Ireland, so named by captain Carteret, in 1767. The natives go entirely naked; are stout, well made, and of a light copper colour; their hair is woolly, but they dress it with grease and powder, and make it hang straight. Their huts are made chiefly of bamboo, and placed under the shade of cocconut trees, with a fence before them, within which the plantain, banana, yam, sugar-cane, &c. are cultivated. The island produces, beside the plants above-mentioned, betle-nuts, mangos, bread-fruit, and guavas. Here are also dogs, hogs, poultry, and some spices. The nutmeg was seen by captain Hunter, who anchored in Port Hunter bay, in this island, in 1791. Lon. 151 20 E, lat. 4 7 S.

Dulas, a village of Wales, in the isle of Anglesey, 10 m NW Beaumaris. It stands on the river Dulas, which flows into a bay to which it gives name, on the Irish sea; and is much frequented on account of the corn and butter trade, and for fern-ashes and kelp.

Dulcigno, a town of European Turkey, in Albania, with a good harbour, on the gulf of Venice, 16 m SE Scutari.

Dumbarton, a borough of Scotland, capital of Dumbartonshire, seated on the Leven, near its conflux with the Clyde. The principal manufacture is glass; but many hands are employed in the print-fields on the banks of the Leven. The number of inhabitants was 2541 in 1801, and 3121 in 1811. The castle, which is garrisoned, stands at the junction of the two rivers, on a vast rock, with two tops of unequal height, steep on every side. It is 15 m WNW Glasgow, and 58 W Edinburgh. Lon. 4 38 W, lat. 55 59 N.

Dumbartonshire, anciently called Lennox, a county of Scotland, bounded on the N by Perthshire, NE and E by Stirlingshire, S by the counties of Lanerk and Renfrew, and W by Argyleshire. The greatest length is 50 m, the breadth not above 12. It is divided into 12 parishes, which contained 20,710 inhabitants in 1801, and 24,189 in 1811. The W part of this county abounds with great morasses; but near the rivers it is fertile in corn. See Lomond, Loch.

Dumblane, a town of Scotland, in Perthshire, formerly the see of a bishop. Part of the cathedral now serves for a parish church. Near this place, on a heath called Sheriff-muir, a bloody but undecisive battle was fought, between the duke of Argyle and the rebel earl of Mar, in 1715. It is seated on the Allan, 6 m N Stirling, and 28 SW Perth.

Dumboo, a town of Negroland, in Bornou, a little to the W of a lake of the same name, which produces abundance of salt. It is 170 m NNW Bornou. Lon. 21 30 E, lat. 22 2 N.

Dumfries, a borough of Scotland, capital of Dumfrieshire, seated on the river Nith, 8 m from its mouth in Solway frith. It is a regular well-built town; but has no considerable trade, nor manufacture, though almost every branch of commercial and mechanical industry is practised. The number of inhabitants was 7288 in 1801, and 9262 in 1811. The amusements of the town, and its healthy situation, allure many of the gentry from the neighbouring counties. It is 30 m WNW Carlisle, and 72 S by W Edinburgh. Lon. 3 29 W, lat. 55 9 N.

Dumfrieshire, a county of Scotland, bounded on the N by the shires of Lanerk and Peebles, E by those of Selkirk and Roxburg, S by Solway frith, and W by the counties of Kircudbright and Ayr. It is 50 m long and 26 broad, and divided into 42 parishes. The number of inhabitants was 54,547 in 1801, and 62,960 in 1811. It contains a large morass, called Locher Moss; and the principal rivers are the Esk, Annan, and Nith. A great part of the county is mountainous and heathy, but the valleys are extremely fertile. It has abundance of freestone and limestone, and rich mines of lead and coal.

Dun, a town of France, in the department of Meuse, on the river Meuse, 15 m NNW Verdun.

Dun le Roi, a town of France, in the department of Cher, on the river Auron, 15 m S Bourges.

Duna; see Dwina.

Dunaburg, a town of Russia, in the government of Polotsk, with a fortress. It was taken by the French in 1812. It is seated on the Dwina, 90 m NW Polotsk, and 110 SE Riga.

Dunamond, a town of Russia, in the government of Riga. It formerly belonged to the duchy of Courland, but was taken by the Swedes in their wars with the Poles. In 1700 it was taken by the Poles, and retaken the next year, by Charles XII. In 1710 it was taken by Peter the great. It is situate at the mouth of the Dwina, 15 m WNW Riga, and 20 N Mittau.

Dunbar, a borough of Scotland, in Haddingtonshire, seated on a bay of the German ocean. It has a small harbour, of difficult access, defended by a battery; also a dry dock and a rope-work. The principal trade is the exportation of corn. Here was anciently a castle, now in ruins, which stood on a reef of rocks, and was deemed impregnable. In the rock are two natural arches, through which the tide flows; and between the harbour and the castle is a stratum of vast basaltic columns. Dunbar is remarkable for the defeat of John Balliol by earl Warrenne, in 1296; and for a victory gained by Cromwell over the Scots, in 1650. It is 28 m E by N Edinburg. Lon. 2 28 W, lat. 56 0 N.

Dunbeath, a town of Scotland, on the NE coast of Caithness, at the mouth of a river of the same name. It has an ancient castle situate on a narrow neck of land, and is an excellent fishing station, 20 m SW Wick, and 35 NE Dornoch.

Duncannon, a fortress and village of Ireland, in the county of Wexford, on Waterford harbour, which it defends. It is 4 m W Feathard, and 15 S New Ross.

Dundalk, a seaport and borough of Ireland, in the county of Lowth. The assizes for the county are held here; and it sends a member to parliament. It has manufactures of linen and muslin, and stands on a bay of the same name, 22 m N Drogheda. Lon. 6 20 W, lat. 54 12 N.

Dundee, a borough of Scotland, and the largest town in Forfarshire, with an excellent harbour. The lofty tower in the middle of the town, is part of a magnificent consecrated edifice, built in the 13th century. Most of the streets are neat, and the houses well built; but the new streets are spacious and elegant. The number of inhabitants was 26,084 in 1801, and 29,616 in 1811. Here are manufactures of glass, coarse linen, canvas, cordage, thread, buckram, and leather; and also a sugar-house. It is seated on the frith of Tay, 13 m SW Forfar. Lon. 3 3 W, lat. 56 28 N.

Dundonald, a village of Scotland, in Ayrshire, 2 m S Irvine. It has an extensive cotton manufacture, and near it is the remains of the royal castle of Dundonald.

Dundrum, a village of Ireland, in the county of Down, with the ruin of a strong castle; seated on a bay of the same name, 7 m SW Downpatrick.

Dunfermlin, a borough of Scotland, and the largest town in Fifeshire, with a good trade, and a considerable manufacture of linen goods, particularly diapers. Here is the ruin of a royal palace, in which Charles I was born, and the princess Elisabeth, wife to George I. Adjoining to this was a magnificent abbey, part of the remains of which now serve for a parish church. In this abbey were buried Malcolm and his, queen and seven other Scottish monarchs. Dunfermlin contained 9980 inhabitants in 1801, and 11,649 in 1811. It is 15 m NW Edinburg, and 22 S by W Perth. Lon. 3 20 W, lat. 56 6 N.

Dungala; see Dongola.

Dungannon, a borough of Ireland, capital of Tyrone; but the assizes are held at Omagh. It sends a member to parliament. Here is a free-school founded by Charles I, and in the vicinity are several coal mines. It is seated on a hill, 14 m NNW Armagh. Lon. 6 35 W, lat. 54 30 N.

Dungarvon, a seaport and borough of Ireland, in the county of Waterford, with a castle. The town is supplied with fresh water by an aqueduct from the river Phinisk. It sends a member to parliament, and is seated on Dungarvon bay, 27 m SW Waterford. Lon. 7 36 W, lat. 51 58 N.

Dungeness, a cape on the S coast of Kent, on which is a fort and a light-house, 8 m S by W New Romney. Lon. 0 59 E, lat. 50 32 N.

Dunglass Head, a promontory of Scotland, in the county of Caithness, which is the NE extremity of Great Britain. Here is the site of John o' Groat's House, famous for its local situation at the northern corner of the kingdom; and on the highest part of the head, near the edge of the precipice, is the foundation of a building supposed to have been a watch-tower. Lon. 2 33 W, lat. 58 40 N.

Dunkeld, a town of Scotland, in Perthshire, situate amid vast rocks, partly naked and partly wooded, through which flows the river Tay. Its romantic situation, and the benefit of drinking goats whey, render this place the resort of much genteel company in summer. It is the market-town of the Highlands on that side, and carries on a manufacture of linen and yarn. The duke of Athol has a fine seat here, screened by the Grampian mountains; and near it is the ruin of a cathedral, part of which is now the parish church. Dunkeld is 12 m NW Perth.

Dunkirk, a seaport of France, in the department of Nord. It was taken from the Spaniards by the English and French in 1658, and put into the hands of the English, but sold to the French by Charles II, in 1662. Lewis XIV made it one of the best fortified ports in the kingdom; but all the works were demolished, and the basins filled up, in consequence of the treaty of Utrecht, in 1713. The French afterward resumed their works; but they were ordered to be demolished by the peace of 1763. They continued thus till the peace of 1783, when the works were again resumed; and the next year it was declared a free port. The English attempted to besiege this place in 1793, but were obliged to retire. Dunkirk is divided into the old and new town; and the inhabitants, estimated at 80,000, had a great deal of commerce. By means of a sluice, 42 feet wide, the basin within the town will hold 40 ships of the line always floating. It is 22 m SW Ostend. Lon. 2 22 E, lat. 51 2 N.

Dunleer, a borough of Ireland, in the county of Lowth, 8 m NW Drogheda.

Dunmanaway, a town of Ireland, in the county of Cork, with a flourishing linen manufacture, situate on the Bandon, 32 m WSW Cork.

Dunmore, a town of Ireland, in the county of Galway, 8 m NNE Tuam, and 25 W Roscommon.

Dunmow, a corporate town in Essex, with a market on Saturday, and a manufacture of bays, seated on a hill, 13 m NNW Chelmsford, and 38 NE London.

Dunmow, Little, a village 2 m from Dunmow. It had once a monastery, and part of the priory now forms the parish church. This place is famous for the tenure of its manor; namely, that whatever married couple will go to the priory, and swear they have not repented of their marriage, within a year and a day after it took place, shall receive a fitch of bacon.

Dunnet Head, an extensive promontory of Scotland, on the N coast of Caithness. Its N extremity, in the Pentland frith, is the most northern point of Great Britain. Lon. 3 9 W, lat. 58 43 N.

Dunnope, a cape in the English channel, on the SE side of the isle of Wight. Lon. 1 16 W, lat. 50 34 N.

Dunse, a town of Scotland, the largest in Berwickshire, with a woollen manufacture and a large brewery. The number of inhabitants was 3157 in 1801, and 3082 in 1811. Near it is a celebrated mineral well, similar to that of Tunbridge in England. It is situate at the foot of a hill, near the river Whiteadder, 14 m W Berwick, and 40 ESE Edinburg. Lon. 2 18 W, lat. 55 47 N.

Dunstable, a town in Bedfordshire, with a market on Wednesday. It is of great antiquity, having been ruined by the Danes, and restored by Henry 1, who made it a borough, but no members were ever sent to parliament. The church is the remainder of a priory, and opposite to it is a farm house, once a royal palace. Dunstable has four streets, in the direction of the four cardinal points; and is famous for hats, baskets, &c. made of straw. It is seated on a chalky hill, 17 m S Bedford, and 33 NW London.

DUR

Dunstaffnage, a castle of Scotland, in Argyleshire, one of the first seats of the Pictish and Scotch monarchs. Here was long preserved the famous stone, used as the coronation seat of the Scottish monarchs, which was removed to Scone by Kenneth 11, and thence by Edward 1, in 1296, to Westminster abbey, where it now is an appendage to the coronation chair. Some of the ancient regalia still continue in the castle; and near it is a small roofless chapel, of elegant architecture, where several of the kings of Scotland are said to be interred. It stands on a promontory, almost insulated, at the entrance of Loch Etive, 24 m NW Inverary.

Dunster, a town in Somersetshire, with a market on Friday. It has a castle on a steep knoll; and at one corner of the terrace is an ancient turret, supposed to be part of the original castle, built in the time of William 1. A priory stood on the NW side of the castle, part of which now serves for the parish church. It stands on the edge of a vale, near the Bristol channel, 20 m NW Taunton, and 161 W London.

Dunwich, a borough in Suffolk, which has now no market, nor place of public worship. It was formerly a bishop's see, and had many churches, which have been swallowed up by the sea. The remains of two churches and a palace are the only marks left of its former greatness. It is seated at the top of a loose cliff, 24 m S Yarmouth, and 100 N London.

Duquella, a province of Morocco, about 80 m long and 60 broad, exceedingly fertile in corn and pasture.

Durance, a river of France, which is formed of the rivulets Dure and Ance, near Briançon, and flows by Embrun, Tallard, Sisteron, Monosque, Caivailon, and Avignon, into the Rhone.

Durango, a town of Spain, in Biscay, 17 m SE Bilbao.

Durango, a city of New Spain, capital of New Biscay, and an archbishop's see. The inhabitants are estimated at 12,000. It stands in the SW part of the province, in a fertile district, 170 m NW Zacatecas. Lon. 103 36 W, lat. 24 25 N.

Durazzo, a seaport of European Turkey, the chief town in the N part of Albania, and a Greek archbishop's see. It has a ruined fortress, and a good harbour on the gulf of Venice, 96 m SSE Ragusa. Lon. 19 28 E, lat. 41 40 N.

in Luxemburg, seated on the Ourthe, 20 m s by w Liege.

Duren, a fortified town of France, in the department of Roer, lately of Germany, in the duchy of Juliers; seated on the river Roer, 12 m s Juliers.

Durham, a county of England, bounded on the N by Northumberland, E by the German ocean, S and SW by Yorkshire, and W by Westmorland and Cumberland. It is usually called the Bishopric of Durham, from the sovereign power formerly possessed by the bishops, who yet enjoy great privileges. It is 47 m long and 37 broad, containing 665,600 acres; is divided into six wards, and 74 parishes; has one city and nine market-towns; and sends four members to parliament. Two of the above six divisions, called Northamshire and Islandshire, are a detached part, situate N of Northumberland, and includes Holy Island. The town of Berwick and its district, on the N side of the Tweed, is also in the jurisdiction of this county. The number of inhabitants was 160,591 in 1801, and 177,625 in 1811, exclusive of Berwick. The soil is very various; the W side being mountainous and barren, while the E and S consist of beautiful meadows, woods, and corn-fields. Here are rich mines of coal, lead, and iron, and quarries of marble, slate, millstone, firestone, grindstone, limestone, and freestone. The principal rivers are the Wear, Tees, Tyne, and Derwent.

Durham, a city and the capital of the county of Durham, and a bishop's see, with a market on Saturday. It is compactly built on a hill, on a bend of the Wear, over which are three stone bridges, and surrounded by the remains of its wall. The cathedral, which is a magnificent edifice, and the castle, now the bishop's palace, stand on the highest part of the hill: in the former are deposited the remains of St. Cuthbert and the venerable Bede. The city is governed by a mayor, and contains six parish churches. It has a manufacture of stuffs and carpets, and around it are grown large quantities of the best mustard. The number of inhabitants was 7530 in 1801, and 6763 in 1811. In a deep vale near the river are the ruins of Finchall abbey; and on the W of the city is Nevil Cross, erected in memory of the victory obtained by queen Philippa, in 1346, over David Bruce, king of Scotland, who was taken prisoner. Durham is 14 m s Newcastle, and 259 N by W London. Lon. 1 15 W, lat. 54 44 N.

Durham, a town of New Hampshire,

Ecclesiastical State, or Popedom, a country of Italy; bounded on the N by Romagna, NE by the gulf of Venice, SE by the kingdom of Naples, SW by the Mediterranean, and W by Tuscany. It is 120 m long, and from 80 to 100 broad, divided into the following provinces; Campagna di Roma, Patrimony of St. Peter, Sabino, Spoleto, Ancona, Perugino, and Urbino. All these provinces are badly cultivated and thinly inhabited; trade and manufactures are but little encouraged; and were it not for dates, figs, almonds, olives, and other fruits, which grow spontaneously, the indolence of the inhabitants is such, that they would be absolutely starved. The pope, according to the ancient canon law, is the supreme, universal, and independant head of the church, and invested with sovereignty over all Christian sovereigns, communities, and individuals. He has the title of Holy Father and Holiness; and is elected, at every vacancy, from among the cardinals, each of whom is styled His Eminence. Beside the Ecclesiastical State, and previous to the late revolutions, the pope was possessed of the duchy of Benevento, in the kingdom of Naples; and the territories of Avignon and Venaissin in France. He had also the three legations of Romagna, Bolognese, and Ferrarese annexed to his dominions till 1797, when the French made them a part of their Cisalpine republic. In 1798 this state was taken possession of by the French, who erected it into a republic, styled the Roman Republic, under the direction of five consuls. They obliged the pope, Pius VI, to remove into Tuscany, and afterward into France, where he died at Valence, in 1799. A few months after a conclave was permitted to be held at Venice, and in 1800, cardinal Chiaramonti was elected to the papal chair, who took the title of Pius VII, and resumed the sovereignty of the Ecclesiastical State. This power was held till 1809, when the pope was deprived by Napoleon of his temporal sovereignty, and reduced to the condition of bishop of Rome; and his state was decreed to be a part of the French empire. The pope was kept some time a state prisoner at Savona, and removed thence to the fortrefs of Tortona. Rome is the capital.

and a trade in wool and hemp. Fragments of marble pillars, trunks of statues, and stones with inscriptions, attest its ancient splendor. It is seated on the Xenil, 62 m ENE Seville. Lon. 4 57 W, lat. 37 33 N.

Eckardberg, a town and castle of Upper Saxony, in Thuringia, 10 m WSW Naumburg.

Eckrenforde, a seaport of Denmark, in S Jutland, on a bay of the Baltic. Near the town is a fresh-water lake, which is connected with the bay. It is 14 m NW Kiel in Holstein. Lon. 10 1 W, lat. 54 33 N.

Edam, a town of N Holland, famous for its red-rind cheeses; seated on the Ey, near the Zuider zee, 11 m NNE Amsterdam.

Eddystone, the name of some rocks in the English channel, lying 14 m SSW from the middle of Plymouth found. On the principal rock (for the rest are under water) Mr. Winstanly built a lighthouse in 1700, which was destroyed by a storm in 1703, and the projector perished in it. In 1709, another, built of wood, was erected by Mr. Rudyard, which was consumed by fire in 1755. Within four years after, one was built by Mr. Smeaton, which also was burnt down in 1770; and another, of stone, was completed by him in 1774, which has hitherto withstood the fury of the elements. The building, to the height of 33 feet from the foundation, is a solid of stones, engrafted into each other; above this are four rooms, one over the other, and at the top a gallery and lantern. It is nearly 80 feet high; and its distance from the Ram Head, the nearest point of land, is 12 m. Lon. 4 24 W, lat. 50 8 N.

Eden, a river of Scotland, which rises in Perthshire, on the confines of Fifeshire, and flows through the latter county, by Coupar, into the German ocean, at the bay of St. Andrew.

Edgarton, a seaport of Massachusetts, chief town of Duke county. It is situate on the E side of the island of Marthas Vineyard, 20 m SE Falmouth, on the continent. Lon. 70 30 W, lat. 41 25 N.

Edghill, a village in Warwickshire, 14 m S Warwick, memorable for the first battle fought between Charles I and the parliament, in 1642.

Edghir, a town of Hindoostan, in Golconda, seated near the Beemah, just above its conflux with the Kistnah, 95 m SW Hydrabad. Lon. 77 45 E, lat. 16 45 N.

Edgware, a town in Middlesex, with a market on Thursday; seated on the Roman road, leading to St. Alban, 8 m NW London.

Edgworthstown, a town of Ireland, in the county of Longford, 9 m E by S Longford, and 6 1/2 WNW Dublin.

Edinburg, the metropolis of Scotland, in a county of the same name, seated on three hills that run from E to W, in a direction almost parallel, and about 7 m in circuit. On the middle ridge, which is narrow and steep, stands the Old Town; the North Town is seated on an elevated plain, gently sloping on every side; and the South Town stands also on a similar sloping eminence. The form of the Old Town resembles that of a turtle; the castle being the head; the High-street, the ridge of the back; the narrow lanes (here called closes) the shelving sides; and Holyrood-house, the tail. On each side of this hill was once a lake. The S valley, drained of its waters, is occupied by Cowgate-street. The N valley is also drained; but a morass remains, called the North Loch. The ancient castle is seated on a high, craggy, and precipitous rock, with a drawbridge on the only side that is accessible: here is shown the apartment in which was born James VI of Scotland, afterward James I of England. Giles, a fine Gothic structure, which has four places of public worship under its roof. Near this is the building in which the Scotch parliament were usually convened: it is now occupied by the courts of justice; and has a magnificent lofty hall. The palace of Holyrood-house forms a grand quadrangle, with a court in the centre surrounded by piazzas: the NW towers were built by James V, and the whole was completed in the reign of Charles II. A spacious gallery here is hung with the pictures of 111 monarchs, from Fergus I to James VI, the greatest part of them imaginary. In the NW tower is shown the room where queen Mary sat at supper, when Rizzio was dragged from her side and murdered by Ruthven. Adjoining are the magnificent ruins of an abbey, founded by David I, and converted by Charles II into a royal chapel. The communication between the N and S parts of the city is by two noble bridges, the North bridge and the South bridge. The North Town has many new squares and streets, adorned with uniform and elegant houses. The buildings of the South Town are likewise elegant and extensive, and the new college forms a very striking object. The university, founded by James VI in 1581, is celebrated throughout the world; and its medical school, in particular, is entitled to the first rank. The high school of Edinburg has also been long famous for the scholars it has produced. Of the other buildings a few only can be noticed: the royal exchange, the register-office, the physicians hall, Heriot hospital for the education of 140 poor boys, Watson hospital for the support of the sons of decayed merchants, the royal infirmary, the public dispensary, and some other public charities. The churches, both presbyterian and episcopal, and other places of worship, of various denominations, are numerous. The public places of amusement are, the assembly rooms, the concert hall, the hall for the royal archers, the theatre royal, and the equestrian circus. Edinburg has numerous manufactures; and particularly of fine linen and cambric. The number of inhabitants, exclusive of Leith, was 67,288 in 1801, and 84,624 in 1811. It is supplied with water conveyed in iron-pipes, from Comiston, 4 m to the W. It is governed by a lord provost, a dean of guild, a guild council, and 25 common council. Here are 14 incorporated trades, each having a right to elect a deacon, who becomes a member of council. On the E side of the city is Salisbury craig, a remarkable rock that presents a steep front, in the form of an amphitheatre, 550 feet high; being part of the hill called Arthur's seat. Two m to the S is the remain of Craigmillar castle, the residence of James V during his minority, and of queen Mary after her return from France in 1562. Edinburg is 2 m SSW Leith (which is its port) and 377 N by W London. Lon. 3 12 W, lat. 55 58 N.

Edinburgshire, or Mid Lothian, a county of Scotland, 27 m long and from 6 to 16 broad; bounded on the N by the frith of Forth, E by the shires of Haddington, Berwick, and Roxburg, S by those of Selkirk, Peebles, and Lanerk, and W by Linlithgowshire. It is divided into 41 parishes, which contained 122,954 inhabitants in 1801, and 148,607 in 1811. The soil is fertile, and produces corn of all sorts, with plenty of grass; also coal, iron, limestone, and black marble. The principal rivers are the Esk, Leith, Amond, and Gala.

Efferding, a town of Austria, with a castle, seated near the Danube, 12 m W Lintz.

Effingham, a village in Surry, 12 m NE Guildford. It was once a much larger place; for wells, and cavities like cellars, have been frequently found in the neighbouring fields and woods; and in the church are some ancient stalls and monuments.

Egeln, a town and castle of Germany, in the duchy of Magdeburg, on the river Bode, 16 m SSW Magdeburg.

Egipten, a town of the duchy of Courland, 100 m SE Mittau. Lon 26 40 E, lat. 56 2 N.

Eglingen, a town of Suabia, capital of a lordship of the same name, 6 m N Dillengen.

Eglisau, a town and castle of Swisserland, in the canton of Zurich, seated on the Rhine, 13 m N Zurich.

Egmont op den Heef, a village of N Holland, 3 m W by S Alcaer. It appears to have been a considerable town, but was destroyed, in 1573, by the enraged Spaniards, after their failure before Alcaer. It now exhibits extensive and picturesque ruins, perhaps the only ruins in all Holland. Near it are two other villages; Egmont op Zee, a mile to the W, on the seacoast; and Egmont Binnen, nearly 2 m to the S, where a bloody and undecided battle was fought, in 1799, between the allied

English and Russian army and the French and Dutch.

Egra, or Eger, a fortified town of Bohemia, in the circle of Saatz, with a castle and a college. It was taken by the French in 1742, but they were forced to evacuate it the next year, through famine. Here are manufactures of leather, hats, cloths, and stuffs; and its mineral waters are famous. It is seated on the Egra, 90 m w by N Prague. Lon. 12 27 E, lat. 50 5 N.

Egremont, a town in Cumberland, with a market on Saturday. On the w side is an artificial mount, with the ruins of a castle; and 3 m to the sE, in the wooded vale of the Calder, are the remains of Calder abbey. Egremont is seated near the Irish sea, on the river Eben, 5 m sSE Whitehaven, and 289 nW London.

Egrippo; see Negropont.

Egypt, a country of Africa, 500 m in length, and 250 where broadest; bounded on the n by the Mediterranean, e by the Red sea and the isthmus of Suez, s by Nubia, and w by the deserts to the w of Fezzan. The broadest part is from Alexandria to Damietta, and thence it gradually grows narrower, till it approaches Nubia. This country, so famous in history for its fertility, has not that extent of cultivation as in ancient times; many lakes and canals being now filled up, and, with the lands they watered, are become deserts, the sands of which annually accumulate. Egypt is divided into the Upper, Middle, and Lower, which last comprehends the Delta; and though the air is naturally hot, and not very wholesome, it enjoys so many other advantages, that it has been always extremely populous. The ancient kings governed Egypt, till Cambyfes became master of it, 525 years B. C. and in their time all those wonderful structures were raised, and works perfected, which we cannot behold without astonishment. These are the pyramids, the labyrinth, the immense grottos in Thebaid; the obelisks, temples, and pompous palaces; the lake Mæris, and the vast canals, which served both for trade, and to render the land fruitful. After this conquest, Cambyfes demolished the temples, and persecuted the priests. This country continued under the Persian yoke, till the time of Alexander the great, who, having conquered Persia, built the city of Alexandria. He was succeeded by Ptolemy, the son of Lagos, 324 years B. C. Ten kings of that name succeeded each other, till Cleopatra, the sister of the last Ptolemy, ascended the throne; when Egypt became a Roman province, and continued so till the reign of Omar, the second califf of the successors of Mohamed, who drove out the Romans after it had been in their hands 700 years. When the power of the califfs declined, Saladin set up the empire of the Mamlouks, which became so powerful in time, that they extended their dominions over a great part of Africa, Syria, and Arabia. Last of all, Selim, a Turkish emperor, conquered Egypt. The present population of Egypt is computed at 2,500,000, which is not one half of the number it contained when subject to the Romans. The inhabitants are composed of four different races of people; the Turks, who are now masters of the country; the Arabs, who were conquered by the Turks; the Copts, who are descended from the first Egyptians, that became Christians; and the Mamlouks, who were originally Circassian or Mingrelian slaves, and for a long time the only military force in the country. Egypt has been, for many years, distracted by the civil wars between the different contending beys, by which its 24 provinces were governed. The famous Hassen Ali, the Turkish admiral, gained several victories over them in 1786; but though he repressed, he could not totally subdue them. The French invaded this country in 1798, under general Bonaparte, who defeated the Mamlouks in several engagements; but after the departure of Bonaparte, and a strong British force arriving to aid the country, the French were expelled in 1801. The Turks have since kept an army here. In 1811, the Turkish general having received information of a conspiracy formed by the beys, he, under a solemn feat, induced 800 of the chief Mamlouks to join in the procession to the citadel of Cairo; where they were entrapped between the outward and inward wall, many of them shot, and the rest beheaded. The like number were afterward killed in the neighbouring towns and villages, and their massacre pursued to distant parts; that the race of Mamlouks is now extirpated, or wholly subdued. Egypt carried on a considerable trade in E India commodities, till the Portuguese discovered the way round the Cape of Good Hope. However, the merchants of Europe visit the harbours in the Mediterranean, and import and export several sorts of merchandise; and from other parts the natives procure elephants teeth, ostriches feathers, ebony, gold-dust, musk, civet, ambergris, coffee, gums, and drugs. The principal commodities which the merchants purchase, are coffee, fenna, cassia, rhubarb, sal ammoniac, myrrh, saffron, saltpetre, aloes, opium, indigo, sugar, rice, wheat, flax, sandalwood, dates, cotton, cloth, &c. The complexion of the Egyptians is of a dusky brown. They are generally indolent and cowardly; and the lower class are disgustingly filthy in their persons: the richer sort do nothing all day but drink coffee, smoke tobacco, and sleep; and they are ignorant, proud, haughty, and ridiculously vain. But the Copts are an ingenious people, and have great skill in business. From March to November, the heat, to an European, is almost insupportable; but the other months are more temperate. The s winds, which occur at intervals from February till the end of May, are by the natives called poisonous winds, or the hot winds of the deserts: they are of such extreme heat and aridity, that no animated body exposed to it can withstand its fatal influence; and for the three days that it generally lasts, the streets are deserted. The sands are so subtil that they penetrate into the closets, chests, and cabinets, which, with the hot winds, are probably the cause of sore eyes being so very common here. It rains very seldom in Egypt; but that want is fully supplied by nightly dews and the annual inundation of the Nile. When the water of the river retires, all the ground is covered with mud; then the corn is harrowed into it, and in the following March there is usually a plentiful harvest. But some lands are never fallow, and yield three harvests annually; particularly in Lower Egypt, where sowing and reaping are going on incessantly, wherever the water of the river can be obtained. The rice fields are supplied with water from canals and reservoirs. There is no place in the world better furnished with corn, flesh, fish, sugar, fruit, and all sorts of garden-stuff; and in Lower Egypt oranges, lemons, figs, dates, almonds, cassia, and plantains, are produced in great plenty. Lentils form a considerable article of food to the inhabitants of Upper Egypt, who rarely enjoy the luxury of rice; and onions, remarkably mild and of the purest white, continue to be a favourite diet among all classes. The animals of Egypt are tigers, hyenas, antelopes, apes, beeves, fine horses, large asses, crocodiles, the hippopotamus, the camelion, the cerastes, or horned viper, and a kind of rat called ichneumon; eagles, hawks, pelicans, waterfowls of all kinds, and the ibis, which resembles a duck, and was deified by the ancient Egyptians, on account of its destroying serpents and noxious insects. The pyramids of Egypt, formerly accounted one of the seven wonders of the world, are all built on rocky and sandy plains; the largest, which is near Gizeh, is 500 feet in perpendicular height, the length of the base is 780 feet, and it takes up eleven acres of ground. Here are also caverns, containing mummies, or embalmed dead bodies, which are found in coffins set upright in niches of the walls, and have continued there at least 4000 years. The principal city is Cairo.

Ehingen, a town of Suabia, near which the Austrians were defeated by the French in 1805. It is seated on the Danube, 12 m sw Ulm.

Ehingen, a town of Suabia, seated on the Neckar, opposite Rotenberg, 6 m w by s Tubingen.

Ehrenbreitstein, a fortress of Germany, in the circle of Lower Rhine, on the river Rhine, opposite Coblentz. It stands on the summit of a stupendous rock, not less than 800 feet above the level of the river, and is deemed to be impregnable. It has a communication with Coblentz, by a subterraneous passage, cut out of the solid rock, and is plentifully supplied with water from a well 280 feet deep. In the vale of Ehrenbreitstein is an old palace, which belonged to the elector of Treves. This fortress surrendered, through famine, to the French, in 1799, after a blockade of above 20 months.

Ehrenfels, a fortress of Bavaria, in the duchy of Neuburg, which gives name to a lordship. It is 13 m sw Ratibon.

Eichfeld, a territory of Lower Saxony, surrounded by Brunfwick, Thuringia, and Hesse. It produces much flax and tobacco. Heiligenstadt is the capital.

Eigg, an island of Scotland, one of the Hebrides, to the s of Skye, 5 m long and 2 broad. It is partly flat, and partly hilly and rocky, with some basaltic pillars. The low grounds are fertile.

and the manners of the people, are much the same. Eimeo has steep rugged hills, running in different directions, leaving large valleys and gently rising ground about their sides. The hills, though rocky, are generally covered with trees almost to the tops. On its N side is the harbour Taloo. Lon. 150° 3' W, lat. 17° 30' S.

Einbeck, a fortified town of Lower Saxony, capital of the principality of Grubenhagen. It has manufactures of cloth and all kinds of stuffs; and in the mountain near it are mines of silver, iron, copper, and lead. It is situate on the Ilme, 17 m N Gottingen. Lon. 10° 2' W, lat. 51° 45' N.

Eisenach, a town of Upper Saxony, in Thuringia, capital of a principality of the same name, with a celebrated college. The duke resides in a castle within the town; and there is another on a mountain out of it, called Wartburg, which, in 1521, was for some time the asylum of Luther. It is seated on the Nesse, at its conflux with the Horsa, 16 m W Gotha. Lon. 10° 21' E, lat. 51° 0' N.

Eisenartz, or Eisenitz, a town of Germany, in Stiria, famous for its iron mines, 34 m NNW Gratz.

Eisenstadt, a town of Hungary, with a magnificent palace, 5 m NW Edenburg.

Eisleben, a town of Upper Saxony, capital of the county of Mansfeld, with a decayed castle. The celebrated Luther was born and died here. In the churches of St. Andrew and St. Ann are the superb burial-places of the ancient counts of Mansfeld. Eisleben contains many breweries, and derives much profit from the neighbouring iron mines. It is 28 m NNW Naumburg. Lon. 11° 47' E, lat. 51° 32' N.

Eisfeld, a town of Upper Saxony, in Thuringia, with a castle. It has manufactures of indigo and vitriol, and stands on the Werra, near its source, 7 m E Hildburghausen.

Ekanas, a town of Sweden, in Nyland, on a bay in the gulf of Finland, 50 m SE Abo.

Ekefo, a town of Sweden, in Smoland, 28 m SE Jonkoping.

Elba, an island in the Mediterranean, near the coast of Tuscany, 15 m long and 4 broad. It contains mines of excellent iron, and quarries of marble, in the hilly parts; the valleys and narrow plains yield excellent grapes, oranges, lemons, and other fruit; but the soil is very shallow, with few places level enough for corn. It has two good harbours, Porto Longone and Porto Ferrajo. It was lately subject to the prince of Piombino, and now belongs to the French.

Elbassano, a town of European Turkey, in Albania, 45 m SE Durazzo.

Elbe, a river of Germany, which rises in the Giant mountains between Bohemia and Silesia; flows by Konigsgratz, Leutmeritz, Dresden, Dessau, Meissen, Wittenberg, Magdeburg, Hamburg, and Gluckstadt, and enters the German ocean at Cuxhaven. It is navigable for ships to Hamburg, which is 70 m from the sea; a course of navigation longer than that of any other river in Europe.

Elberton, a town of the state of Georgia, chief of Elbert county. It is seated near the Tugelo, 73 m NW Augusta. Lon. 82° 35' W, lat. 33° 55' N.

Elberton, a town of the state of Georgia, in Effingham county, seated on the Ogeechee, 36 m W Ebenezer. Lon. 82° 2' W, lat. 32° 31' N.

Elbeuf, a town of France, in the department of Lower Seine, with a manufacture of cloth; seated on the Seine, 10 m S Rouen, and 65 m NW Paris.

Elbing, a strong town of W Prussia, in the palatinate of Marienburg, with a considerable trade in butter, cheese, and corn; seated on a river of the same name, near its entrance into the Frisch Haff, 30 m SE Dantzic. Lon. 19° 30' E, lat. 54° 18' N.

Elbogen, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Saatz, with a citadel; seated on a mountain, by the river Egra, 16 m NE Egra.

Elburg, a town of Holland, in Gelderland, on the E coast of the Zuider zee, 10 m NE Harderwick.

Elche, a town of Spain, in Valencia, supposed, from the magnificent remains found in and near it, to be the ancient Ilici. It is 10 m SW Alicant.

Elephanta, an island on the W coast of Hindoostan, 5 m from Bombay. It contains one of the most inexplicable antiquities in the world. The figure of an elephant, of the natural size, cut coarsely in stone, appears on the landing-place, near the foot of a mountain. An easy slope then leads to a subterranean temple, hewn out of the solid rock, 80 feet long and 40 broad, the roofs supported by rows of pillars 10 feet high. At the further end are three gigantic figures, which were mutilated by the absurd zeal of the Portuguese, when this island was in their possession. Elephanta was ceded to the English by the Mahrattas.

Elfsburg, a town of Sweden, in W Gothland, with a strong castle near the sea, 4 m SW Gotheburg.

Elfskarleby, a town of Sweden, in Upland, on the river Dahl, which a little above forms a beautiful cataract. It is 48 m N by W Upsal.

Elfsdal, a town of Sweden, in Dalecarlia, noted for curious quarries of porphyry, of which tables, vases, mortars, and other articles are made. It is 70 m NNW Fahlun.

Elgin, a borough of Scotland, capital of Elginshire. It was formerly called Moray, and then was the see of a bishop. Here are many large old buildings erected over piazzas. The cathedral was one of the most magnificent structures in Scotland; of which its ruins are a sufficient proof. Two m to the NE, on the S bank of a lake, is the palace of Spynie, formerly the residence of the bishop, of which some rooms are still pretty entire; and 6 m to the SW, on the river Lossie, are the large remains of Pluscarden priory. Elgin stands on the Lossie, 5 m from its port at Lossiemouth, where there is a tolerable harbour, whence much corn is exported. The number of inhabitants was 4345 in 1801, and 4602 in 1811. It is 38 m ENE Inverness, and 163 N Edinburg. Lon. 3 20 W, lat. 57 36 N.

Elginshire, or Morayshire, a county of Scotland, 40 m long and 30 broad; bounded on the N by the Moray frith, E by Banffshire, S by the shires of Aberdeen and Inverness, and W by the latter and Nairnshire. It is divided into 18 parishes, which contained 26,705 inhabitants in 1801, and 28,108 in 1811. The S part is mountainous, and occupied by forests; but the greatest part is rich, and produces wheat, barley, oats, and flax. The chief rivers are the Spey, Findhorn, and Lossie.

Elinge, a village in Hampshire, at the head of Southampton bay, 5 m W Southampton. Here are docks for building and repairing ships, and storehouses for merchandise and corn, in which last it carries on a considerable trade.

Elizabeth Islands, small islands near the coast of Massachusetts, bearing NW

Elfsinburg; see Helsingburg.

Elfsinore, a town of Denmark, seated on the Sound, in the isle of Zealand. It is the most commercial place in Denmark, next to Copenhagen, being the residence of a considerable number of foreign merchants, and the consuls of the principal nations trading to the Baltic. A little to the E is the fortress of Cronborg, which guards the Sound. Every vessel, as it passes, pays a toll at Elfsinore, in return for which the crown takes the charge of constructing light-houses, and erecting signals to mark the shoals and rocks, from the Categat to the entrance into the Baltic. Three m from the town is a considerable manufacture of arms, which supplies the whole Danish army. Elfsinore has no harbour, but a good and safe road, and is 22 m N Copenhagen. Lon. 12 35 E, lat. 56 0 N. See Cronborg.

Elsteth, a town of Westphalia, at the conflux of the Hunt with the Weser, 13 m ENE Oldenburg.

Eltham, a town in Kent, with a market on Monday. Here are the remains of a palace, in which Edward II often resided, and his son, John of Eltham, was born; it is now in part converted into a farm-house, and the stately hall forms the barn. It is 8 m S London.

Elvas, a strong frontier city of Portugal, in Alentejo, and a bishop's see, with a castle. Here is a cistern that will hold water enough for the town for six months. The water is brought by a Moorish aqueduct, 3 m in length, which in some places is supported by several stories of arches. On the side of it is a forest of olive-trees, 3 m long, among which are walks and fine fountains. Elvas was bombarded by the French in 1706. A royal academy for young gentlemen was founded here in 1733. It is 38 m ENE Evora, and 118 E Lisbon. Lon. 6 56 W, lat. 38 49 N.

Elwangen, a town of Suabia, with a castle on a mountain; seated on the Jaxt, 14 m NW Nordlingen.

Ely, a city in Cambridgeshire, and a bishop's see, with a market on Saturday. It is seated on the Ouse (which is navigable hence to Lynn) in the fenny tract, called the Isle of Ely. It is a county of itself, including the territory around it, and has a distinct civil and criminal jurisdiction, of which the bishop is the head. It has a fine cathedral, but is otherwise a mean place, and contained 4249 inhabitants in 1811. It is 17 m N Cambridge, and 67 N by E London. Lon. 0 9 E, lat. 52 24 N.

Ely, a town of Scotland, in Fifeshire, with a good harbour, on the frith of Forth, and much frequented for sea-bathing. It is 11 m S St. Andrew.

Elze, a town of Lower Saxony, in the principality of Hildesheim, seated on the Leina, 10 m SW Hildesheim.

Emboly, a town of European Turkey, in Macedonia, and a Greek archbishop's see. It is the ancient Amphipolis; and is sometimes called Christopholis. It is seated on the Stromona, 40 m NE Salonica. Lon. 23 55 E, lat. 40 59 N.

Engelberg, a valley of Switzerland, in the canton of Underwalden, 10 m long, surrounded by mountains. It is subject to the abbot of a Benedictine monastery of the same name, whose revenues arise principally from a commerce in cheeses. The country contains extensive glaciers, on the side of fertile mountains; fine black marble, white veined; small crystals, called Swift diamonds; silver, and vitriol. The abbey is 12 m SW Altdorf.

Engelholm, a seaport of Sweden, in Schonen, on a bay of the Categat, with good anchorage. In 1678, it was taken by the Danes after an obstinate defence. It is 44 m N by w Lund. Lon. 12 57 E, lat. 56 22 N.

Engen, a town of Suabia, in the principality of Furstenburg, 20 m ESE Furstenburg.

Engers, a town of Germany, in Westwald, capital of a county of its name. It is seated near the Rhine, 20 m WNW Dietz.

Enghein, a town of the Netherlands, in Hainault, 15 m SW Brussels.

Engia, or Egina, an island of European Turkey, in the gulf of Engia, between Livadia and Morca. It is of a triangular form, 36 m in circuit, surrounded by rocks, and has no harbour. The chief town is of the same name, 24 m SSW Athens. Lon. 23 59 E, lat. 37 45 N.

England, the southern part of the island of Great Britain, bounded on the N by Scotland, NE and E by the German ocean, s by the English channel, and w by St. George channel, the principality of Wales, and the Irish sea. It is of a triangular form: and from the S Foreland in Kent, which may be termed the E point of the triangle, to Berwick upon Tweed, which is the N, its length is 345 m; from that point to the Lands-end in Cornwall, which is the w, it is 425; and the breadth thence to the S Foreland is 340. It contains 50,210 square miles, or 32,094,400 acres. The number of resident inhabitants was 8,331,434 in 1801, and 9,538,827, in 1811; to these a thirtieth part may be added for the army and navy, which will raise the last enumeration to 9,836,700. The face of the country affords all that beautiful variety which can be found in the most extensive tracts of the globe; not, however, without romantic, and even dreary scenes, lofty mountains, craggy rocks, black barren moors, and wide uncultivated heaths; and yet, few countries have a smaller proportion of land absolutely sterile and incapable of culture. The richest parts are, in general, the midland and southern. Toward the N it partakes of the barrenness of the neighbouring Scotland. The E coast is, in many parts, sandy and marshy. A range of rude and elevated land, sometimes rising into lofty mountains, extends from the borders of Scotland, to the very heart of England, forming a natural division between the E and W sides of the kingdom. Cornwall is also a rough hilly tract; and a similar character prevails in part of the adjacent counties. These mountainous tracts abound with various mineral treasures. The rivers are numerous; and the most considerable of them are the Thames, Severn, Humber, Mersey, Medway, Trent, Ouse, Tyne, Tees, Eden, Avon, and Dree. The lakes are neither numerous nor extensive, and are chiefly in the NW counties: those of Westmorland and Cumberland. In particular, exhibit such varieties of beautiful scenery, as to become the object of summer excursions from every part of the country. With respect to climate, England is situate in the N part of the temperate zone, so that it enjoys but a scanty share of the genial influence of the sun. Its atmosphere is inclined to chilness and moisture, subject to frequent and sudden changes; and is more favorable to the growth, than to the ripening of the products of the earth. No country is clothed with so beautiful and lasting a verdure; but the harvests, especially in the northern parts, frequently suffer from unseasonable rains. The rigours of winter, however, and the heats of summer, are felt here in a much less degree than in parallel climates on the continent; a circumstance common to all islands. The whole country, some particular spots excepted, is sufficiently healthy; and the longevity of its inhabitants is equal to that of almost any region. All its most valuable productions, both animal and vegetable, have been imported from foreign countries, and have been kept up and improved by constant attention. England has now no other wild quadrupeds than some of the smaller kinds; as the fox, badger, marten, otter, hare, rabbit, squirrel, &c. On the other hand, every kind of domestic animal, imported from abroad, has been reared to the greatest degree of perfection. The horse has been trained up for all the various purposes of strength and swiftness, so as to excel in those qualities the same animal in every other country. The horned cattle have been brought to the largest size and greatest justness of shape. The different races of sheep are variously distinguished, either for uncommon size, goodness of flesh, and plenty or fineness of wool. The deer of its parks, which are originally a foreign breed, are superior in beauty of skin and delicacy of flesh to those of most countries. Even the several kinds of dogs have been trained to degrees of courage, strength, and sagacity, rarely to be met with elsewhere. The improvement in the vegetable products of this island is not less striking than in the animal. Nuts, acorns, crabs, and a few wild berries, were almost all the variety of vegetable food which its woods could boast. To other countries, and to the efforts of culture, it is indebted for corn, esculent roots, and plants, and all its garden fruits. The rivers and seas of England are stocked with a great variety of fish, which yield a plentiful article of provision to all ranks of people. The manufactures and commerce of this country are vast, extensive, and various: in the woollen, linen, cotton, and hardware manufactures in particular, it has long maintained a pre-eminence; nor must the recent one of elegant earthenware be omitted; and though nature has denied it the rich fruits of other countries, yet the manufacture, if it may be so called, of home-made wines, in imitation of all the varieties of the foreign, has been brought to an uncommon degree of perfection. The government of England is a limited monarchy; the legislative power residing in the king, lords, and commons; and the executive in the king, the great officers of state, the judges, and the inferior gradations of magistracy. The civil division of the country is into six circuits, and 40 counties: these last are subdivided into wa-

pentakes, each of the two of twice a year. Circuit, with Hertford, 1 sex. 2. Tingham, B. bridge, Suffolk, Oxford, Gloucester, Hereford, S. Midland, Gloucester, Der. pentakes, or hundreds, and parishes. In each of the circuits, for the most part, two of the judges administer justice, twice a year. They are, 1. The Home Circuit, which contains the counties of Hertford, Essex, Kent, Surry, and Suffolk. 2. The Norfolk, containing Buckingham, Bedford, Huntingdon, Cambridge, Suffolk, and Norfolk. 3. The Oxford, containing Oxford, Berks, Gloucester, Worcester, Monmouth, Hereford, Salop, and Stafford. 4. The Midland, containing Warwick, Leicester, Derby, Nottingham, Lincoln, Rutland, and Northampton. 5. The Northern, containing York, Durham, Northumberland, Lancaster, Westmorland, and Cumberland. 6. The Western, containing Hants, Wilts, Dorset, Somerset, Devon, and Cornwall. Two other counties, Middlesex and Chester, are not included in any circuit. The established religion, as contained in the Articles of the Church of England, is Calvinism; but these articles are interpreted, by the clergy in general, according to the more liberal principles of Arminius: and all other religions are tolerated. The ecclesiastical division of England is into two archbishoprics, called the provinces of Canterbury and York. That of Canterbury contains the dioceses of London, Winchester, Bath and Wells, Bristol, Chichester, Ely, Exeter, Gloucester, Hereford, Lichfield and Coventry, Lincoln, Norwich, Oxford, Peterborough, Rochester, Salisbury, and Worcester, beside the four Welsh bishoprics of St. David, Bangor, Landaff, and St. Asaph. The province of York contains the dioceses of Durham, Chester, and Carlisle, and that of Sodor and Man. Every prelate of the sees enumerated, that of Sodor and Man excepted, has a seat in the house of lords. London is the capital, and the metropolis also of the whole British empire.

England, New, a country of N America, bounded on the N by Canada, E by New Brunswick and the Atlantic, S by that ocean, and W by New York. It is the most populous part of the United States, and the inhabitants are mostly descended from the natives of England. It contains the states of Vermont, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and Connecticut.

Enköping, a town of Sweden, in Uppland, situate at the end of a creek of the lake Maelar, 21 m SW Upsal.

Ennerdale-water, a lake in Cumberland, 7 m E of Whitehaven. It is 2 m and a half in length, and nearly three-quarters of a mile in breadth; surrounded, except at the W end, with wild and craggy heights, which are almost impassable. It affords a variety of mountain, sylvan, and pastoral scenes. The river Eden runs through it.

Ennis, a borough of Ireland, capital of the county of Clare. It sends a member to parliament, has a considerable trade, and stands on the Fergus, which is navigable for large boats from the Shannon. Two m SSE is the village of Clare, once the capital of the county. Ennis is 22 m WSW Limerick, and 118 m W Dublin. Lon. 9 22 W, lat. 52 44 N.

Enniscorthy, a borough of Ireland, in the county of Wexford, with a strong castle. Here is a manufacture of coarse woollen cloth and some iron-works. It is situate on the Slaney, close under Vinegar-hill, 10 m N Wexford, and 27 m NE Waterford.

Enniskillen, a borough of Ireland, capital of the county of Fermanagh. It is seated on an island in Lough Erne, where that lake is contracted for about 6 m to the width of an ordinary river, and has a strong fort, it being a pass of great importance between the N and S of Ireland. In 1595, it made an oblique defence against the army of queen Elizabeth, and again in 1680, against James II. It sends a member to parliament, and is 80 m NW Dublin. Lon. 6 50 W, lat. 54 25 N.

Ennistige; see Inistige.

Eno, or Enos, a town of European Turkey, in Romania, and a Greek archbishop's see. It stands near a gulf of the Archipelago, at the influx of the Maritsa, 90 m S by W Adrianople. Lon. 26 15 E, lat. 40 46 N.

Enns, a town of Austria, on a river of the same name, at its conflux with the Danube, 12 m ESE Linz.

Enfene, a town of Egypt, on the E side of the Nile. Here are considerable ruins of the ancient Antinoë. It is 120 m S Cairo. Lon. 30 54 E, lat. 28 5 N.

Ensisheim, a town of France, in the department of Upper Rhine, on the river Ill, 10 m S Colmar.

Enskirken, a town of France, in the department of Roer, lately of Germany, in the duchy of Juliers, 15 m SW Cologne.

Enstorf, a town of the palatinate of Bavaria, 22 m N Ratibon.

Entlibuch, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Lucern, 14 m WSW Lucern.

Entre Douro e Minho, a province of Portugal, lying on the seacoast between the rivers Douro and Minho, and bounded on the z by Tra los Montes. It is very populous, and distinguished by its well-conducted agriculture. Braga is the capital.

Entzerstorf, a town of Austria, with a castle surrounded by walls and ditches, on the left bank of the Danube, 10 m SE Vienna.

Eperies, a town of Upper Hungary, capital of the county of Saros, celebrated for its mines of salt. It is seated on the Tatzta, 20 m NE Cassovia. Lon. 41 13 E, lat. 48 50 N.

Epernay, a town of France, in the department of Marne. It was taken by Henry IV in 1592, when marshal Biron was killed while the king's hand was on his shoulder. The wines produced in its neighbourhood are excellent. It is 17 m NW Chalons.

Epernon, a town of France, in the department of Eure and Loir, 15 m NNE Chartres.

Ephesus, a village of Asiatic Turkey, in Natolia, anciently one of the most splendid cities of Asia Minor, and the most frequented emporium of that continent. Of its former splendour there is nothing to be seen but heaps of marble, overturned walls, columns, capitals, and pieces of statues. The fortress, which is on an eminence, seems to have been the work of the Greek emperors; and also the aqueduct, part of which is yet standing, supported by pillars of fine marble. The eastern gate has three basso-relievos, taken from some ancient monuments: that in the middle was constructed by the Romans. The most remarkable structure was the Temple of Diana, deemed one of the seven wonders of the world, and which the primitive Christians converted into a church; but it is now so entirely ruined, that it is not easy to find the groundplot. Ephesus is seated near the mouth of the Cayster, which formerly afforded a good harbour for ships, but is now almost choked with sand. The present inhabitants are Greek peasants, who live in wretchedness and insensibility. It is 30 m SSE Smyrna. Lon. 27 23 E, lat. 38 8 N.

Ephrata, or Tunkerstown, a town of Pennsylvania, in Lancaster county, and the principal settlement of a sect called Tunkers [Dippers], who are of German extraction. It is 12 m NNE Lancaster.

Epidaurus, a village of European Turkey, in Morea; formerly a city, famous for the precinct of Esculapius; and his sacred territory is in its vicinity. It is now pronounced Pidavro by the natives, and stands in a peninsula, on the E coast, 24 m SE Corinth.

Epiez, a town of France, in the department of Loiret, 18 m w by N Orleans.

Epila, a town of Spain, in Aragon, on the Xiloca, 20 m w by s Saragossa.

Epinal, a town of France, capital of the department of Vosges. It is famous for paper-mills, and seated on the river Moselle, near the mountains of the Vosges, 35 m SE Nancy. Lon. 6 31 E, lat. 48 8 N.

Epping, a town in Essex, with a market on Friday, famous for excellent butter; seated at the N end of a forest of the same name, 17 m NNE London.

Eppingen, a town of Germany, in the late palatinate of the Rhine, seated on the Eltsats, 20 m ENE Philippsburg.

Epsom, a town in Surry, which has, from the number of opulent people residing in and near it, a daily market. It is celebrated for its mineral waters and salts; and on its neighbouring downs are annual horse-races. It is 15 m SSW London.

Epworth, a town in Lincolnshire, in the isle of Axholm, with a market on Friday, and a manufacture of facking. John Wesley, the founder of the Armenian sect of methodists, was born here. It is 11 m N Gainsborough, and 160 NNW London.

Erbach, a town of Franconia, capital of a county of the same name, with a castle. It is 22 m w by s Wertheim, and 35 SSE Frankfurt.

Erbille, or Erbila; see Arbil.

Erekli, a seaport of Asiatic Turkey, in Natolia, on a bay of the Black sea, 140 m ENE Burfa. Lon. 32 35 E, lat. 40 50 N.

Erekli, anciently Heraclea, a town of European Turkey, in Romania, in which are the ruins of an amphitheatre, built by emperor Severus. It is seated on the sea of Marmora, 48 m w Constantinople.

Erfurt, a city of Upper Saxony, commonly accounted the capital of Thuringia, with a university and two strong forts. The principal magistrate is sometimes a protestant and sometimes a papist; but the greatest part of the burghers are protestants. It has three fine libraries, one of which belongs to the papists, another to the university, and a third to the protestant ministers. The inhabitants are computed at 15,000. A fire happened here in 1736, which burnt down 180 houses, and several churches. In 1806, it was taken by the French. It is seated in a fertile country, Eribol, Loch, in Scotland, an arm of the sea, on the N coast of Sutherlandshire, capable of affording a safe retreat to the largest vessels. It receives several streams, particularly that which flows from Loch Hope; and much kelp is made on its coasts.

Ericeira, a town of Portugal, in Estremadura, on the seacoast, 21 m NNW Lisbon.

Ericht, Loch, a lake of Scotland, lying in the counties of Inverness and Perth. It is 24 m long and a mile broad, surrounded by lofty mountains and rugged cliffs, and its banks covered with heath and a few straggling birches and alders. Its outlet, at the s extremity, is the river Ericht, which flows into Loch Rannock.

Eric, Fort, a strong fortification of Upper Canada, situate near the E end of Lake Eric, and on the w bank of the river Niagara, 24 m s by E Fort Niagara. Lon. 78 59 w, lat. 42 54 N.

Eric, Lake, in N America, lies between 79 and 84 w lon. and 47 and 43 N lat. Its length is 380 m, its medium breadth, and upward of 700 in circumference. It is navigable for ships of any burden, and the coast on both sides is generally favorable for batteaux and canoes; yet in some places, chiefly on the s side, there are rocks that run several miles in length. Some of these, near the mouth of the Cayahaga, rise 40 or 50 feet above the water, and project over the lake so as to inspire dread into the boldest breast, when they are approached: the Indians, when they pass this impending danger, offer a sacrifice of tobacco to the water. The islands and banks toward its w end are infested with rattlesnakes; but on other parts of the coast are fine meadows, and woods abounding with game. This lake, at its NW end, receives the waters of several large lakes by the river Detroit, and discharges them by the river Niagara, at its NE end, into Lake Ontario.

Eriksay, a small island of the Hebrides of Scotland, at the s end of S Uist; noted for being the first place upon which Charles Stewart landed, in his attempt to obtain the British crown.

Erith, a village in Kent, seated on the Thames, 5 m E by s Woolwich. Great quantities of corn and wood are shipped hence, and here the East India ships, in their passage up the river, generally discharge a part of their cargoes.

Erivan, the capital of Persian Armenia, in a province of the same name, and the seat of an Armenian patriarch. The city is defended by a fortress, in which is the governor's palace, and by a castle, on the river Zuengul, which soon joins the Aras. The Meidan is an open square, 400 paces over, in which are very fine trees. The baths and caravanaries have their beauties; but the churches of the christians are small, and half underground. The city has been often taken by the Turks and Persians, but the latter has continued in possession since the peace of Nadir Shah in 1748. In 1808 it sustained a siege of near six months by the Russians. It is 180 m NW Tabriz, and 200 E Erzerum. Lon. 44 48 E, lat. 40 10 N.

Erkelens, a town of France, in the department of Roer, lately of Germany, in the duchy of Juliers; seated on the Roer, 10 m NW Juliers.

Erlach, a town and bailiwick of Switzerland, in the canton of Bern, with a castle, on the lake of Biel, 10 m sw Biel.

Erlangen, a town of Franconia, in the principality of Bayreuth, with a university, and a palace belonging to the prince. It is divided into the old and new town; the latter one of the handsomest in Germany. The principal manufactures are hats, gloves, and stockings. It is seated on the Regnitz, 12 m N Nuremberg. Lon. 11 2 E, lat. 49 38 N.

Erne, a river of Scotland, which issues from a lake of the same name, in Perthshire, flows by Crieff, and joins the Tay, a little below Abernethy.

Erne, a river of Ireland, which issues from a small lake on the N border of the county of Longford, flows N through that of Cavan, and NW through Fermanagh into Donegal bay. In the latter county it forms a lake, called Lough Erne, 30 m long, containing several islands; and on one in the middle part, where the lake is very narrow, stands the town of Enniskillen.

Erme, a town of France, in the department of Mayne, on a river of the same name, 15 m NNW Laval.

Erodu, or Eroad, a town of Hindoostan, in the province of Coimbatore, with a large mud fort. Much coarse cotton cloth is made here and in the vicinity. It is seated on a canal from the Bhawani, and near the Cavery, 8 m s Bhawanikudal.

Errel, a town of Scotland, in Perthshire, situate on an eminence on the N side of the Tay. Large quantities of grain are exported, and a passage-boat goes hence to Newburg, on the opposite shore, every tide. It is 9 m E Perth.

Erromango, one of the New Hebrides, in the Pacific ocean, 70 m in circumference, with low shores. On the w side is a promontory that separates two bays, and captain Cook, from the treacherous behaviour of the inhabitants, named it Traitors Head. Lon. 169 19 E, lat. 18 47 s.

Ervay, a town of France, in the department of Aube, 17 m s by w Troyes.

Erzerum, or Arzroum, the capital of Turkish Armenia, with Armenian and Greek episcopal sees, and a castle. It is surrounded by double walls, defended by square towers, and estimated to contain above 270,000 inhabitants. The houses are in general built of stone, with rafters of wood, and terraced roofs, on which grass grows and sheep feed. There are several bazars, 16 baths, and 100 mosques; but many remains of mosques and other ancient structures prove the city to have been still more considerable. The Turks are all janisaries; but most of them are tradesmen, and receive no pay. The Armenians have two churches, the Greeks but one; the latter are mostly brafiers, and live in the suburbs. A great trade is carried on in furs, Persian silks, cottons, calicos, and drugs. This city is a thoroughfare, and a resting-place, for the caravans to Persia and Hindoostan. It is situate on a rising ground, at the foot of a chain of mountains, 104 m SE Trebisond, and 200 w Erivan. Lon. 40 56 E, lat. 39 57 N.

Escalona, a town of Spain, in Old Castile, 14 m NNE Sagovia.

Escalona, a town of Spain, in New Castile, surrounded by walls. It is situate on an eminence, in a fertile country, near the Albreche, 20 m NW Toledo, and 32 SW Madrid.

Ejchawegen, a town and castle of Germany, in the landgrate of Hesse-Cassel, seated on the Werra, 25 m ESE Cassel.

Ejchweiler, a town of France, in the department of Roer, lately of Germany, in the duchy of Juliers, 10 m S Juliers.

Ejcurial, a village of Spain, in New Castile, seated on the Guadara, 15 m NW Madrid. It takes its name from a noble structure, founded by Philip 11, in memory of the victory gained over the French near St. Quentin, in 1557. This edifice consists of a royal palace, a church, a monastery, a college, a library, shops of different artists, apartments for a great number of people, beautiful walks, large alleys, an extensive park, and fine gardens. It is built of gray stones, found in the neighbourhood, and in the form of a gridiron; because St. Lawrence, on whose day the victory was gained, suffered martyrdom by being broiled on such an instrument. It is a long square of 740 feet by 580, and four stories high, with a tower at each angle 200 feet high; and the palace forms the handle of this imaginary gridiron. The most remarkable part is the arched chapel; in which is a magnificent sepulchre, called the Pantheon, being built in imitation of that edifice at Rome, and is the burying-place of the kings and queens of Spain.

Ejferain, a town of Persia, in Chorasán, 90 m E Astrabad. Lon. 41 23 E, lat. 36 48 N.

Ejgueyra, or Ejgueria, a town of Portugal, in Beira, 8 m S Aveiro.

Ejhref; see Ajhras.

Ejfk, a river that rises in Scotland, in the NE part of Dumfriesshire, and flows SE through a dale to which it gives name, to the edge of the county. It there receives the Liddel from Roxburghshire, and enters Cumberland, flowing S by Longtown into the NE extremity of Solway Frith.

Ejfk, a river of Scotland, in Edinburghshire, formed by the junction of two streams called N and S Ejfk. They almost encircle the town of Dalkeith, passing on each side of the eminence on which it stands, and unite a little below the town. The river enters the frith of Forth, at Musselburg.

Ejfk, North and South, two rivers of Scotland, in Forfarshire, which descend from the hills called the Bracs of Angus. The former divides the county from Kincardineshire for several miles, and reaches the ocean, a little to the N of Montrose; the latter, after traversing the whole breadth of the county, enters the bay, on the W of the same town.

Ejkijsjuna, a town of Sweden, in Sudermania, founded by Charles X, and enlarged by Gustavus 111, whence it is also called Carl Gustavadt. Here are manufactures of swords, fabres, scissors, &c. It is seated on the river between the lakes Hiemer and Maeler, 52 m W Stockholm.

Ejkijsjehr, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in Naxolia, on the river Sakaria, 80 m ESE Bursa. Lon. 31 18 E, lat. 39 48 W.

Ejne, Afna, or Ejnyay, a town of Egypt, supposed to be the ancient Latorpolis. Here is an ancient temple, with walls on three sides, and in the front 24 columns, well preserved: within it are three stories of hieroglyphics, of men about three feet high; and the ceiling is adorned with animals, painted in beautiful colours. Esquimaux, a people of N America, chiefly inhabiting Labrador. They have no fixed abode, but rove from place to place, and sometimes come as far as Newfoundland. They are of a different race from the other native Americans; for the other tribes have no beards, but these have them so thick and large, that it is difficult to discover any feature of their faces: they are likewise the only savages that eat their food in a raw state. They are of a middling stature, generally robust, lusty, and of a brown colour. Their head is large, and their face round and flat; they have thick lips, a flat nose, small eyes, curly hair of a black or chestnut colour, large shoulders, and uncommonly small feet. They are always well clothed, for there is nothing to be seen but part of their faces and their hands. They have a sort of shirt, made of the guts of fish, with a coat of bear or bird skins, and a cap on their head. They have likewise breeches made of skins, with the hair within, and covered with furs without; also two pair of boots, one over another, of the same sort of skins. In summer, they have nothing to cover them in the night; and in winter, they lodge in tents made of hides, or in caves. The dress of the women is nearly the same as that of the men. Their chief employment is hunting and fishing. They are savage, covetous, faithless, and ever disposed to mischief; and on this account, and from the little commerce carried on with them, few particulars of them are known.

Esquimaux Bay, a bay on the coast of Labrador, and in the N part of the gulf of St. Lawrence. A river of the same name enters the head of the bay; and Esquimaux islands extend across its mouth. Lon. 57 30 W, lat. 51 30 N.

Essék, or Efsék, a trading town of Scalvania, with a strong castle. It has a wooden bridge over the Drave and the marshes, 8 m long and 80 feet broad, with towers at a quarter of a mile distant from each other. It is a difficult pass, and several battles have been fought here between the Turks and Germans. Effek was taken from the Turks in 1687, since which time it has continued in the hands of the house of Austria. It is seated on the Drave, 100 m WNW Belgrade, and 136 S Buda. Lon. 19 16 E, lat. 45 30 N.

Essen, a town of Westphalia, in the duchy of Berg, lately subject to the abbey of Essen, who was a prince of the empire. Here are several catholic churches and convents, but the inhabitants are chiefly Lutherans. It is 8 m E Dnylsburg.

Essens, a town of Westphalia, in E Friesland, near the German ocean, 20 m NNW Emden.

Essequibo; see Essequibo.

Essex, a county of England, bounded on the N by Cambridgeshire and Suffolk, E by the German ocean, S by Kent, and W by Hertfordshire and Middlesex. It is 54 m long and 48 broad, containing 976,000 acres; is divided into 20 hundreds, and 406 parishes; has 27 market-towns; and sends eight members to parliament. The number of inhabitants was 226,437 in 1801, and 252,473 in 1811. It possesses a variety of soil and face of country. The SW part is occupied principally by the two forests of Epping and Hainault; and is noted for its butter, which takes the name of Epping butter. The NW part, from Saffron-Walden to Cambridge, is famous for the growth of saffron; and for a kind of triple crop of coriander, carraway, and teazle, which are all sown together, but come to maturity at different periods. The middle part is a fine corn country, varied with gentle inequalities of surface, and sprinkled with woods. The part bordering on the Thames and the sea consists chiefly of marshy grounds, which afford excellent pasturage, yet are deemed unwholesome and unguish. The principal rivers are the Thames, Blackwater, Coln, Chelmer, Stour, Crouch, and Roding. Beside vast quantities of corn of all kinds, abundance of calves are sent to the London market; also wild fowls and oysters. The chief manufacture is baize and stuffs. Chelmsford is the county-town.

Esslingen, a town of Suabia, lately imperial, in the duchy of Wirtemberg. Here are several convents, but the in-

Estrean de Acoma, St. see Acoma.

Estroña, or Revel, a government of the Russian empire, bounded on the W by the Baltic, N by the gulf of Finland, E by Ingria, and S by Livonia. After having been long an object of bloody contention between the Russians, Poles, and Swedes, it was confirmed to the latter by the peace of Oliva in 1660; but it was subdued by Peter the great in 1710, and finally ceded to Russia in 1721. Revel is the capital.

Esthwaite-water, a lake in Lancashire, between Hawkhead and Windermere-water. It is 2 m and a half long, and half a mile broad, intersected by a peninsula from each side, jutting far into the lake. On the banks are villages and scattered houses, situate under woods and hanging grounds clothed with verdure, all heightened by the strong background of rocky mountains. No char is found in this lake, though it is connected with Windermere-water.

Estremadura, a province of Spain, 175 m long and 100 broad; bounded on the N by Leon, E by Old and New Castile, S by Andalusia, and W by Portugal. It abounds with corn, wine, and fruit; but the air is bad for foreigners, on account of excessive heat. Cattle and fine wool are the chief articles of trade; and great herds of black swine are fed on the hills, which are covered with oaks. Badajoz is the capital.

Estremadura, a province of Portugal, 150 m long and from 25 to 75 broad; bounded on the N by Beira, E and S by Alentejo, and W by the Atlantic ocean. It abounds with excellent wine, oil, honey, and oranges. Here the oranges were first planted that were brought from China, and which are known by the name of China oranges. Lisbon is the capital.

Estremoz, a town of Portugal, in Alentejo, and one of the strongest in the kingdom, being surrounded by ten bastions. An earthen ware is made here, greatly esteemed for its beauty and fine smell; and in the vicinity are quarries of beautiful marble. It is 18 m W Elvas, and 100 E Lisbon. Lon. 7 23 W, lat. 38 47 N.

of the tide, a violent current. About 2 m below is the ancient castle of Dunstaffnage.

Etna, a volcano of Sicily, and the most celebrated mountain in Europe. It is 63 m in circumference at the base, and 10,954 feet in height. The Sicilians divide it into three parts or regions: the lower contains vineyards, corn-fields, and pastures, and many towns, villages, and convents; the second is covered with forests of oak, chestnut, ash, fir, and pine, and with an infinite number of aromatic plants; the third and most elevated is entirely destitute of vegetation, and always covered with ice and snow, except here and there a thick layer of black ashes. In many parts on the sides of this mountain there are prismatic columns of basalt. The first eruption of Etna, on record, is that mentioned by Diodorus Siculus, without fixing the period when it happened; but the second, recorded by Thucydides, was in the year 734 B.C. From this period to the year 1447, there were 18 more eruptions. After this it ceased to emit fire near 90 years, the next eruption being in 1536; other considerable ones followed in 1554, 1567, 1603, 1669, 1682, and 1693, which last was attended with an earthquake that overturned the town of Catania. Several smaller eruptions have happened since. From the great crater at the top issues continually a sulphurous smoke; but eruptions hence are very rare, as the lava generally breaks out on some side before it rises to that height. Beside the fruits, which are the finest in the island, and the wood for fuel, which Etna affords, the inhabitants likewise derive a profit from its snow, which is of greater request than ice, because it affords a more cooling beverage. The sale of this article, in a small district only, yields a yearly revenue of 23,000 livres to the bishop of Catania. The mountain is 10 m N of the town of Catania.

Eton, a town in Buckinghamshire, seated on the Thames, over which is a bridge to Windsor. It is famous for a school and college, founded by Henry VI; and Kings college in Cambridge admits no other students for fellows but what have been brought up here. It is 22 m W London.

Etoula, a town of Napaul, and a place of some commerce, seated on the Rap. 46 m S Ounardu.

Etruria, a name lately given to Tuscany, which includes the greater part Evoli, a town of Naples, in Principato Citra, 15 m ESE Salerno.

Evora, a fortified city of Portugal, capital of Alentejo, and the see of an archbishop, with a univerlity. Some remains of the ancient Roman wall are visible; part of a temple of Diana, of which there are seven entire pillars standing, is now converted into butchers shambles; and the famous aqueduct built by Sertorius still conveys a noble stream of water to the city. Evora is seated in a pleasant country, surrounded on all sides by mountains, 65 m E by S Lisbon. Lon. 7 40 W, lat. 38 28 N.

Evoramonte, a town of Portugal, in Alentejo, situate on a rock, 8 m wsw Estremoz, and 23 NNE Evora.

Eu-ho, or Precious-river, a river of China, in Petcheli, which flows NE into the Pei-ho, at Tien-sing. Much grain is conveyed by this river for Peking, and it is also important for its connection with the N extremity of the Grand canal.

Eupatoria, or Koslof, a town of Russia, in the government of Taurida, situate near the w side of a salt lake, and on the Black sea, 68 m s by W Precop. Lon. 33 16 E, lat. 45 12 N.

Eupen; see Open.

Euphrates, or Phrat, the principal river of Turkey in Asia, which has its rise in Armenia, from two sources, called the East and West Phrat. The former rises near Diabin, and flows w; the latter issues from the mountains to the w of Erzerum, and flows s to Kebban, where it joins the other branch, and the united stream is then called the Euphrates, or the Phrat. At this junction it begins to be navigable for boats; but the channel is so rocky, that the navigation is not safe. It first divides Armenia and Diabek, from Roum and Syria; after which it runs through Irak Arabi, and receives the Tigris at Corna, on the confines of the Persian province of Kustan; it then flows by Bassora, and 35 m below enters the gulf of Persia. It is also the NE boundary of the great desert of Arabia. The Euphrates, after receiving the Tigris, is sometimes called the Shit al Arab.

Eure, a department of France, which includes part of the late province of Normandy. It is so named from a river, which rises in the forest of Logny, in the department of Eure and Loir, and crosses this department to its conflux with the Seine, above Pont d'Arche. Evreux is the capital.

EUR

Eure and Loir, a department of France, so called from two rivers by which it is watered. It contains the late province of Beauce, and its capital is Chartres.

Evreux, a town of France, capital of the department of Eure, and a bishop's see. The cathedral is a handsome structure. The trade consists in corn, linen, and woollen cloth; and it has manufactures of cotton velvets and tick. It is seated on the Iton, 25 m s Rouen, and 55 NW Paris. Lon. 1 9 E, lat. 49 2 N.

EUROPE, one of the four grand divisions of the world; bounded on the N by the Frozen ocean, E by Asia, S by the Mediterranean sea, and W by the Atlantic ocean. Its extent from Cape St. Vincent to the mouth of the Cana, is near 3400 m; and from Cape Matapan in Morea to the North Cape in Lapland, about 2300. It is much less than either Asia or Africa, but surpasses them in many particulars. It is entirely within the temperate zone, except a small part of Norway and Russia; so that there is neither the excessive heat, nor the insupportable cold, of the other parts of the continent. It is much more populous, and better cultivated, than either Asia or Africa; is fuller of villages, towns, and cities; and the buildings are stronger, more elegant and commodious. The inhabitants, estimated at 150 millions, are all whites, and for the most part much better made than the Africans, or even the Asiatics. With respect to their skill and improvements in arts, sciences, trade, navigation, and war, there can be no comparison. Europe contains Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Great Britain, Ireland, France, Germany, Prussia, Poland, Spain, Italy, Portugal, Hungary, Switzerland, and part of Russia and Turkey, beside several islands in the Mediterranean, and other seas. The languages are the Italian, French, Spanish, and Portuguese, which are dialects of the Latin; the German, Flemish, Dutch, Swedish, Danish, and English, derived from the old Teutonic; the Sclavonian, which prevails, mixed with others, in Poland, Russia, Bohemia, and a great part of Turkey; the Celtic, of which there are dialects in Wales, the Highlands of Scotland, Ireland, Bretagne in France, Biscay in Spain, and Lapland; the modern Greek, and several others. The principal rivers are, the Danube, Dniester, Dnieper, Vistula, Volga, Dwina, Bog, Don, Scheldt, Rhine, Elbe, Oder, Po, Rhone, Seine, Loire, Garonne.

Exeter, a city and the capital of Devonshire, on the river Ex, with a market on Wednesday and Friday. It was formerly the seat of the W Saxon kings, who resided in the castle, called Rougemont, from the colour of the hill on which it is built. The city was encompassed by walls, and had four gates, two of which now remain. With the suburbs it contains 19 churches, beside the cathedral, which is a magnificent fabric. It is governed by a mayor, and has 13 companies of tradesmen. The number of inhabitants was 20,305 in 1801, and 18,896 in 1811. Ships of burden formerly came up to the city; but its port is now at Topsham, 5 m below, whence there is a canal by which vessels of 150 tons come up to a good quay, formed near the city walls. It has a considerable manufacture of serges and other woollen goods, a large cotton manufacture, and an extensive foreign and domestic commerce. It is 78 m SW Bristol, and 173 W by S London. Lon. 3 34 W, lat. 50 44 N.

Exeter, a town of New Hampshire, in Rockingham county, with a good harbour, on Exeter river, a branch of the Piscataqua. It has several manufactures, and the saddlery business is carried on to a great extent. Some vessels are built here, the river being capable of floating down those of 500 tons. The public edifices are two congregational churches, a celebrated academy, and a capacious court-house. It is 15 m SW Portsmouth, and 54 N Boston. Lon. 71 0 W, lat. 42 56 N.

Fe, St. the capital of New Mexico, and a bishop's see, with a fortress. The population is estimated at 4,500 souls, exclusive of the garrison. In the centre is the public square; on the N side of which is the governor's palace, guard-houses, &c. The houses are generally one story high, with flat roofs, and have a mean appearance on the outside, but some are richly furnished. The manufactures in its vicinity are leather, cotton, coarse woollen cloths, blankets, tobacco, pottery, and copper vessels. It stands on a river, which 27 m below enters the Rio del Norte, and is 5 10 m N Chihuahua. Lon. 104 53 w, lat. 36 12 N.

Fe, St. or St. Fe de Bogota, the capital of New Granada, and an archbishop's see, with a university. It is the seat of a vice-royalty, the jurisdiction of which includes the kingdoms of New Granada and Quito, and the whole of Terra Firma. The country abounds in corn and fruit, and in the vicinity are mines of silver and gold. It is situate on the Pati, which flows to the Madalena, 450 m NE Quito. Lon. 7330 w, lat. 4 6 N.

Fear, Cape, a cape of N Carolina, where there is a dangerous shoal, called, from its form, the Frying Pan, lying at the entrance of Cape Fear river. This river is formed by two branches, called the NW and NE branches, which unite above Wilmington; and it enters the Atlantic below Brunswick. Lon. 78 10 w, lat. 33 51 N.

Feathard, a borough of Ireland, in the county of Wexford, on the w side of the entrance of Bannow bay, 22 m SW Wexford.

Fecamp, a town of France, in the department of Lower Seine, with a trade in linen, serges, lace, leather, and hats; seated near the English channel, 24 m NE Havre de Grace.

Fejees, or Fejee Islands, a cluster of islands and reefs in the S Pacific ocean, lying 120 leagues NW of the Friendly Islands. The northern part of this numerous group, in lat. 15 33 S, was discovered by Tasman in 1643, and by him were named Prince William Islands. Captain Bligh, in 1789, fell in with the most eastern of the Fejees in lon. 178 W; and on his return from Otaheite, in 1792, doubled the southmost island in lon. 178 E, lat. 19 15 S. He landed nowhere, and the islanders in vain attempted to overtake the ship with their canoes, apparently with hostile intentions. Captain Barber, in 1794, on his passage from Port Jackson to the NW coast of America, discovered the western part of the group; and saw six of the islands, the largest in lon. 175 15 W; lat. 17 30 S.

He anchored in a bay on its w side, and some natives, who came off in a canoe, were reluctant to come aboard, and seemed unaccustomed to trade. The next day a number of canoes attacked the ship, wounded two of the crew with their arrows, and attempted to board; but the savages were repulsed by the ships swivels and small arms. The principal island is called Fejee; this and the other large ones appear to be fertile, and variegated with hills and vallies. They seem to be under the government of different chiefs, being frequently at war with each other. The navigation of this extensive group, on every side, is intricate and dangerous. The natives are a distinct race from those of the Friendly islands; they speak a different language, and, beside spears and clubs, make use of bows and arrows in battle; their stature is superior, their complexion darker, and their hair approaches to wool; they moreover retain the practice of eating the flesh of enemies whom they have killed, and even massacre their prisoners for that purpose. The intercourse of Fejee with Tongataboo is becoming more frequent. The natives of the latter regard the Fejeeans as superior to themselves in military prowess and mechanical ingenuity; their weapons and clothing being better wrought, and some manufactures, especially that of earthen vessels, being carried on at Fejee, which are not attempted at Tongataboo.

Feira, a town of Portugal, in Beira, 10 m SE Oporto, and 30 N by a Aveiro.

Felahi; see Dorak.

Ferentino, or Fiorento, a town of Italy, in Campagna di Roma, 3 m N Alatri.

Ferette, a town of France, in the department of Upper Rhine, on the river Ill, near its source, 40 m S Colmar.

Fermanagh, a county of Ireland, in the province of Ulster, 38 m long and 23 broad; bounded on the N by Donegal and Tyrone, E by Tyrone and Monaghan, S by Cavan and Leitrim, and W by Leitrim. It contains about 72,000 inhabitants, is divided into 19 parishes, and sends three members to parliament. The linen manufacture, and the raising of cattle and hemp, are the chief employ of the inhabitants. The county is navigable throughout by means of Lough Erne; but the uneven surface, and numerous bogs, render it difficult for travelling. Enniskillen is the capital.

Fermo, a town of Italy, in the marquisate of Ancona, and an archbishop's see. It has a harbour on the gulf of Venice, and is 17 m SE Macerata. Lon. 13 50 E, lat. 43 7 N.

Fermoy, a town of Ireland, in the county of Cork, on the river Blackwater, 20 m NNE Cork.

Fernambuco, a province on the E coast of Brasil, having Tamarica on the N and Sergippy on the S. It produces cotton, sugar, and brasil wood, and its immense plain feeds a great number of cattle.

Fernambuco, a town of Brasil, capital of the province of the same name, and a bishop's see. In 1630 it was taken by the Dutch, who called it Olinda; but it was retaken by the Portuguese. It has a small inconvenient harbour. Lon. 35 20 W, lat. 8 13 S.

Ferns, a town of Ireland, in the county of Wexford, and a bishop's see united to Leighlin. The cathedral is small, and serves for the parish church. It is seated on the Bann, near its conflux with the Slaney, 18 m N Wexford, and 33 ssw Wicklow.

Feroe Islands, a cluster of 22 small and lofty islands in the Northern ocean, between 5 and 8 w lon. and 61 and 63 N lat. subject to Denmark. Seventeen are habitable, each divided from the others by deep and rapid currents. Some of them are deeply indented with secure harbours, all of them steep, and most of them faced with tremendous precipices. They produce agate, jasper, and beautiful zeolites. The surface consists of a shallow soil of remarkable fertility; yielding plenty of barley, and fine grass for sheep. No trees above the size of a juniper, or stunted willow, will grow here; and the only quadrupeds are sheep. Vast quantities of sea-fowl frequent the rocks, and the taking of them furnishes a perilous employment for the inhabitants. The exports are salted mutton, tallow, goose-quills, feathers, eider-down, knit woollen waistcoats, caps, and stockings. To the s of these islands is a considerable whirlpool. The chief island is Stromoe.

Ferozabad, a city of Persia, in Faristan, formerly of considerable repute, and yet contains a number of fine tombs, gardens, and buildings. It is seated in a fertile country, 60 m s by w Shiraz. Lon. 53 0 E, lat. 28 50 N.

Ferrara, a city of Italy, capital of a duchy of the same name, and an archbishop's see, with a strong citadel, and a university. Its broad streets, and number of fine buildings, evince that it was formerly a flourishing place, but the present inhabitants are few in proportion to its extent. In the middle of the city is a palace, surrounded by walls flanked with towers and ditches. The cathedral is remarkable for its antiquity. Ferrara was taken by the French in 1796; in 1799 it was retaken by the Austrians, but shortly after surrendered to the French. It is seated near the Po, 25 m NE Bologna. Lon. 11 36 E, lat. 44 50 N.

Ferrara, or Ferrarese, a duchy of Italy, bounded on the N by Polefino di Rovigno, w by Mantuan, s by Bolognese and Romagna, and e by the gulf of Venice. It had its own dukes till 1597, when Clement VIII united it to the apostolic chamber; but in 1797, it was seized by the French, and is now a part of the kingdom of Italy. The air is unwholesome, on account of the marshes, and the inhabitants are too few to drain them. Ferrara is the capital.

Ferrendina, a town of Naples, in Basilicata, near the river Basianto, 25 m sw Matera.

Ferro, or Hiero, the most westward of the Canary islands, about 18 m in circumference. It is not fertile, but produces some corn, sugar, fruit, and legumes. The inhabitants make use of water collected in cisterns during the rainy season, for there is no spring in the island. Voyagers speak of a fountain tree in the middle of the island, and that in the night much water distils from its leaves. Some geographers take their first meridian from the w extremity of this island. Lon. 17 52 W, lat. 27 47 N.

Ferrol, a seaport of Spain, in Galicia, on a bay of the Atlantic. Its harbour is one of the best in Europe, and here the Spanish squadrons frequently rendezvous in time of war. The town is surrounded on three sides by the sea, and strongly fortified on the other. In 1800, the English made an unsuccessful attempt on this place; and in 1809 it surrendered to the French. It is 20 m NE Corunna, and 65 w Rivades. Lon. 8 4 w, lat. 43 28 N.

Ferrybridge, a town in W Yorkshire, with a noble bridge over the river Aire, which is the principal pass into the north. It is 21 m s by w York, and 174 N by w London.

Ferryport, a village of Scotland, in Fifeshire, on the frith of Tay, 4 m below Dundee, and 9 NNW St. Andrew. It has a considerable manufacture of brown linens; and a ferry over the Tay, well frequented before the bridge at Perth was built.

Ferrytown; see Creetown.

Ferte sur Aube, a town of France, in the department of Upper Marne, seated on the Aube, 22 m w by s Chaumont, and 33 sse Troyes.

Ferte Alaise, a town of France, in the department of Seine and Oise, 23 m s Paris.

Ferte Bernard, a town of France, in the department of Sarthe, seated on the Huisne, 23 m NE Mans.

of the Medway, much frequented by small vessels. It is a member of the port of Dover, governed by a mayor, and has a market on Wednesday and Saturday. Here is a noble church in the form of a cross; a free grammar-school founded by queen Elizabeth; and the remains of a stately abbey, built by king Stephen, who was buried in it, with his queen and son. It is famous for the best oysters for laying in stews; and has several gunpowder mills in its neighbourhood. James II embarked here for France in disguise, after the success of the prince of Orange; but the vessel was detained by the populace, and the king conveyed back to London. Feverishness is 9 m W Canterbury, and 47 S by S London.

Feurs, a town of France, in the department of Loire, on the river Loire, 13 m ESE Montbrison.

Feyfritz, a town and castle of Germany, in Stiria, on a river of the same name, 17 m NNE Cilley.

Fez, a kingdom of Barbary, 125 m long, and 120 broad; bounded on the W by the Atlantic, N by the Mediterranean, E by Algiers, and S by Morocco and Taflet. It is divided into nine provinces, and forms part of the empire of Morocco. The country is full of mountains, particularly to the W and S, where is Mount Atlas; but it produces citrons, lemons, oranges, dates, almonds, olives, figs, raisins, honey, wax, cotton, flax, pitch, and corn in abundance. The inhabitants are numerous, and breed camels, heeves, sheep, and the finest horses in Barbary.

Fez, the capital of the kingdom of Fez, and one of the largest cities in Africa. It is composed of two towns, Old Fez and New Fez, which contain about 380,000 inhabitants. Old Fez is the most considerable, and New Fez is principally inhabited by Jews, who trade with the Moors, notwithstanding the contempt with which they are treated by them. The imperial palace is an immense pile of buildings, enclosed by a strong wall and a deep ditch; and there are numerous mosques, one of which, called Carubin, is one of the finest edifices in the empire. The houses are built of brick or stone, with flat roofs, and adorned with mosaic work: those of brick are ornamented with glazing and colours like Dutch tiles, and the wood-work and ceilings are carved, painted, and gilt. Every house has a court, in which is a square marble basin; and the gardens are full of all kinds of fragrant flowers and shrubs.

FEZ

Here are two colleges for students, finely built of marble and adorned with paintings. The hospitals and public baths are numerous, many of which are stately structures. The different trades live in a separate part of the city; and the exchange, full of all sorts of rich merchandise, is as large as a small town. The Moors of Fez are clothed like the Turks, and, though more polished than their countrymen, are vain, superstitious, and intolerant. The saints, whom they pretend to have been buried in the city, serve them for a pretext to forbid its entrance to Jews and Christians; and an order from the emperor is necessary to gain admission. Arabic is better spoken here than in other parts of the empire; and the rich Moors send their children to the schools at Fez, where they gain more instruction than they could do elsewhere. Fez is the centre of the trade of this empire; and hence caravans go to Mecca, carrying ready-made garments, leather, indigo, cochineal, and ostriches feathers; for which they bring in return silks, muslins, and drugs. Caravans also go to Tombuctoo, and other parts of the river Niger: they travel over such dry barren deserts, that every other camel carries water; and the commodities are salt, cowries, wrought silk, British cloth, and the woollen manufactures of Barbary. Fez is seated in a valley watered by the Seboo, and surrounded by hills, 240 m NE Morocco. Lon. 5 25 W, lat. 33 40 N.

Feza, a town of Persia, in Farsistan, where the cultivation of the finest tobacco is carried to a great extent. It is 86 m SE Shiras.

Fezzan, a kingdom of Africa, having Tripoli on the N, and Cassina on the S. It is an extensive plain, encompassed by mountains, except to the W; and to the influence of these heights it may be owing, that here, as well as in Upper Egypt, no rain is ever known. Though the character of the surface (which, in general, is a light sand) and the want of rain, may seem to announce sterility, yet the springs are so abundant, that few regions in the N of Africa exhibit a richer vegetation. The greatest extent of the cultivated part is about 300 m from N to S, and 200 from E to W. From wells of 10 or 15 feet deep, with which every garden and field is furnished, the husbandman waters the productions of his land; among these are the date tree, the olive, lime, apricot, pomegranate, fig, maize, barley, wheat, pumpions or calabash, carrots, cucumbers, onions, and garlic. Among the tame animals are the sheep, cow, goat, camel, ass, and a species of the domestic fowl of Europe. The wild animals are the ostrich, and antelopes of various kinds. A multitude of noxious animals infest the country; adders, snakes, scorpions, and toads swarm in the fields, gardens, and houses; the air is crowded with mosquitos; and persons of every rank are overrun with vermin. The heat of the climate in summer is intense, and the s wind is scarcely supportable even by the natives; and in winter a penetrating N wind prevails, which drives to the fire even the natives of a northern country. Tempests of wind are frequent, which whirl up the sand and dust so as to give a yellow tinge to the atmosphere. The towns are chiefly inhabited by husbandmen and shepherds; for though they also contain merchants and artificers, yet agriculture and pasturage are the principal occupations. The houses are built of clay, with a flat roof, composed of boughs of trees, on which a quantity of earth is laid. The natives are of a deep swarthy complexion; their hair a short curly black, their lips thick, their noses flat and broad, and their skin emits a fetid effluvia; they are tall, and well-shaped, but weakly, indolent, and inactive. Their dress is similar to that of the Moors of Barbary. In their common intercourse, all distinctions of rank seem forgotten; the sheuef [governor] and the lowest plebeian, the rich and the poor, the master and the servant, converse familiarly, and eat and drink together. Generous and hospitable, let his fare be scanty or abundant, the Fezzaner is desirous that others should partake of it; and if 20 persons were unexpectedly to visit his dwelling, they must all participate as far as it will go. When they settle their money transactions, they squat upon the ground, and having levelled a spot with their hands, make dots as they reckon: if they are wrong, they smooth the spot again, and repeat the calculation. Gold dust constitutes the chief medium of payment; and value in that medium is always expressed by weight. In religion they are rigid, but not intolerant Mohamedans. The government is monarchical; and its powers are administered with such a temperate hand, that the people are ardently attached to their sovereign. Mourzouk is the capital.

Fiano, a town of Italy, in the patrimony of St. Peter, seated on the Tiber, 13 m N Rome.

Fianona, a town of Istria, on the sw coast, 17 m N Pola.

Fiascone, a town of Italy, in the patrimony of St. Peter, noted for fine muscadine wine; seated on a mountain near Lake Bolsena, 12 m NW Viterbo.

Ficherulo, a fortified town of Italy, in Ferrarese, seated on the Po, 12 m W Ferrara.

Fichtelberg, a mountain in Franconia, one of the highest in Germany. Its ridge extends from near Beruth to Eger, in Bohemia, about 16 m, and it is covered with pines and other trees.

Fielevier, an island near the W coast of Norway, 22 m long and 4 broad, with a town of the same name, 48 m WSW Drontheim. Lon. 10 40 E, lat. 63 44 N.

Fieranzuolo, a town of Italy, in Parmesan, 10 m SE Piacenza.

Fiesoli, a town of Tuscany, in Florentino, formerly a celebrated city. It still retains its episcopal honours, and stands on the summit of a hill, 5 m SE Florence.

Fifehire, a county of Scotland, 34 m long and 16 in its greatest breadth; bounded on the N by the frith of Tay, E by the ocean, S by the frith of Forth, and W by the counties of Perth and Kinross. It is divided into 63 parishes, which contained 93,743 inhabitants in 1801, and 101,272 in 1811. It is watered by several streams, but none deserve the name of rivers except the Eden and Leven. The soil is fertile; it abounds in cattle, coal, iron, lime, and freestone; and has many flourishing manufactures. The number of towns is almost unparalleled in an equal tract of coast; for from Culross to Crail, about 50 m, is one continued chain of towns and villages. Cupar is the county-town, and Dunfermlin the largest.

Figari, a town of Corsica, at the mouth of a river of the same name, 22 m WSW Bonifacio.

Figaruolo, an island in the gulf of Venice, near the coast of Istria. Lon. 13 47 E, lat. 45 18 W.

Figac, a town of France, in the department of Lot, with a Benedictine abbey; seated on the Sellé, 22 m E Cahors.

Figiz, a town of Barbary, in Biledulgerid. The inhabitants carry on a great trade with the merchants of Morocco and Fez, and with the Negros. It is 240 m ESE Mequinez. Lon. 1 5 W, lat. 32 20 N.

Figueras, a town of Spain, in Catalonia, near which, on an eminence, is a strong citadel. It surrendered to the French in 1794, without firing a shot.

FIN

In 1811, the French, by treachery, were driven out of it by the Spaniards, who, after a rigorous blockade, were obliged to surrender it again to the French. It is 14 m w Rufes.

Figuro dos Vinhos, a town of Portugal, in Estremadura, celebrated for its wine; seated among mountains, near the river Zizere, 22 m N Tomar.

Fillek, a town of Hungary, in the county of Novigrad, seated on the Ipól, 20 m wnw Agria.

Finale, a seaport of Genoa, with a strong citadel, two forts, and a castle. It was the capital of a marquise, annexed to the duchy of Milan in 1602, but sold to the Genoese in 1713. In 1746, it was taken by the king of Sardinia, and restored in 1748. It is 30 m sw Genoa. Lon. 8 10 E, lat. 44 14 N.

Finale, a town of Italy, in Modence, on an island formed by the river Panaro, 22 m NE Modena.

Fincafile, a town of Virginia, chief of Botetourt county. It is situate on Catobaw creek, which flows into James river, 36 m sw Lexington, and 140 w Richmond.

Findhorn, a river of Scotland, which rises in Invernessshire, crosses the sw part of Elginshire, forms a lake near Forres, and then enters the frith of Moray, at Findhorn.

Findhorn, a village of Scotland, in Elginshire, at the mouth of a river of the same name, 4 m NW Forres. It is the port of Forres, and the harbour has a shifting bar, which prevents ships of great burden from entering.

Finisterre, Cape, the most western cape of Spain. It was thought by the ancients to have no country beyond it, and therefore they gave it a name which signifies the Lands-end. Lon. 9 17 W, lat. 42 54 N.

Finisterre, a department of France, which includes part of the late province of Bretagne. It is the most westerly part of France, and bounded on three sides by the sea. Quimper is the capital.

Finland, one of the five general divisions of Sweden; bounded on the N by Swedish Lapland, E by Wiburg, S by the gulf of Finland, and W by that of Bothnia. It contains the provinces of Finland Proper, East Bothnia, Tavastland, Nyland, and Savolax, and a part of Kexholm. In 1808, this division was invaded by Russia; and the Swedes, after various battles, were necessitated to give it up by a convention. In 1809, a treaty of peace was concluded between the two powers, and the whole of the country, with the sea of Aland, Flamborough Head, a lofty promontory on the coast of Yorkshire, whose snow-white cliffs are seen far out at sea, and afford shelter to innumerable multitudes of sea-fowls. The lower parts contain vast caverns, and on the summit is a lighthouse, 5 m NE Burlington. Lon. 0 11 E, lat. 54 8 N.

Flanders, a country of the Netherlands, 60 m long and 50 broad; bounded on the N by the German ocean and Holland, E by Brabant, S by Hainault and Artois, and W by Artois and the German ocean. The principal rivers are the Scheldt, Lys, and Dender. It is a level country, fertile in grain and pasture, and very populous. The chief manufactures are beautiful table linen and fine lace. It was divided into Dutch, Austrian, and French Flanders; the latter was comprehended in the department of Nord, on the new division of France in 1791; the other two have since been annexed to that country, and constitute the new departments of Lys and Scheldt.

Flatbush, a town of New York, chief of King county, Long Island. Here is a Dutch church, a court-house, and Erasmus hall, the most flourishing academy in the state. The Americans were defeated near this place by the British in 1776. It is situate amid garden-grounds, 5 m S by E New York.

Flattery, Cape, on the W coast of N America, so named by Cook in 1778, because it promised at a distance what it denied on a nearer approach. Lon. 124 30 W, lat. 48 20 N.

Flavigny, a town of France, in the department of Côte d'Or, with a Benedictine abbey; seated on a mountain, by the river Ozerain, 27 m WNW Dijon.

Fleche, a town of France, in the department of Sarthe. Here was a noble college, built by Henry IV; the centre is now converted into a townhouse, and one of the wings rebuilt as a seminary for youth. It is seated on the Loire, 23 m SSW Ma. s. Lon. 0 3 W, lat. 47 39 N.

Fleckerøe, or Flecheren, an island in the North sea, near the coast of Norway. Between the island and the continent is a most excellent harbour, defended by a fortress. Lon. 8 18 E, lat. 58 4 N.

Fleet, a river of Scotland, in Kirkcudbrightshire, which issues from a small lake of the same name, and enters Wigton bay, below Gatehouse. On its W side are the vestiges of a camp, a druidical circle, and a vitrified fort.

Flensburg, a seaport of Denmark, in the duchy of Sleswick, with a strong citadel, and a harbour on a bay of the Baltic. It is a place of great commerce, 15 m NNW Sleswick. Lon. 9 47 E, lat. 54 52 N.

Flourance, a town of France, in the department of Gers, on the river Gers, 13 m N Auch.

Fléurus, a village of the Netherlands, in Namur, 6 m NE Charleroy. Here, in 1690, a victory was gained by the French over the allies; and in 1794, the Austrians were defeated in a general attack of the French posts.

Flie, or Vlieland, an island on the coast of Holland, at the middle of the entrance of the Zuider zee.

Flint, a river of the state of Georgia, which rises in the country of the Creek Indians, runs SW, and joining the Catahouchee, at its entrance into E Florida, forms the Apalachicola.

FLO

Flint, a borough of Wales, in Flintshire, which gives name to the county, though now a small place, and without a market. It has the county-gaol, but the assizes are held at Mold. Here are the remains of a royal castle, in which Richard 11 took shelter on arriving from Ireland; but on leaving it he was delivered into the hands of his rival, afterward Henry IV: it stands on a rock close to the sea, and is governed by a constable, who is also mayor of the town. The number of inhabitants was 1169 in 1801, and 1433 in 1811. It is seated on the estuary of the Dee, 13 m w by N Chester, and 193 NW London. Lon. 3 ° w. lat. 53 16 N.

Flintshire, a county of Wales, 29 m long and 12 where broadest; bounded on the N by the Irish sea, NE and E by the river Dee, which divides it from Cheshire, and S and SW by Denbighshire. A detached part also extends on the E side of the Dee, about 9 m between Cheshire and Shropshire. The county contains 197,760 acres; is divided into five hundreds, and 21 parishes; has a city and three market-towns; and sends two members to parliament. The number of inhabitants was 39,622 in 1801, and 46,518 in 1811. A lofty range of mountains rises on the W, and forms a bold frontier. The valleys are fertile, and contain coal and freestone; the hills are generally barren on the surface, but abound in lead, calamine, and limestone. The detached part is mostly a level country. The principal trade is mining and smelting. It produces good butter, cheese, and honey, of which last the natives make a wholesome beverage called Methelin. The principal rivers are the Clwyd, Wheeler, Dee, Sevon, Elwy, and Allen. The assizes are held at Mold, and the largest town is Holywell.

Flis, a town of Spain, in Catalonia, strong both by nature and art. It stands on a peninsula formed by the Ebro, and the side where the river does not pass is covered by mountains, and defended by a castle. It is 23 m N Tortosa.

Floddon, a village in Northumberland, 5 m NNW Wooler. Near this place a battle was fought between the English and Scots, in 1513, in which James IV was killed, with many of his nobility and 20,000 men.

Florac, a town of France, in the department of Lozere, 13 m S Mende, and 23 NW Alais.

Florence, a city of Italy, capital of Tuscany, and an archbishop's see, with a citadel, and a university. The circumference is about 6 m, surrounded by a wall and a ditch, with two or three forts that command a part of the town. It is divided into two unequal parts, by the river Arno, over which are four handsome bridges. The quays, the buildings on each side, and the bridges, render the part through which the river runs by far the finest; but there are several squares, and many churches and palaces. The cathedral is of great magnitude, and adorned with the works of the most eminent sculptors and painters; but its principal glory is its dome, built prior to that of St. Peter's at Rome, and little inferior to it in dimensions. This noble fabric stood for some time unequalled, and now claims the second honours. The other churches contain rich paintings and sculptures; and near that of St. Lorenzo is the Medicæan chapel, one of the most expensive edifices that ever was reared for the dead, being incrusted with precious stones, furnished with sarcophagi of porphyry, and adorned by the workmanship of the best modern sculptors. Some of the Florentine merchants, formerly, were men of great wealth; and one of them, in the 15th century, built that noble fabric, which, from the name of its founder, is still called the Palazzo Pitti. It was afterward purchased by the Medici family, who made some enlargements; and it thence became the residence of the grand dukes of Tuscany. The Palazzo Vecchio contains a room 172 feet long and 70 wide, for public entertainments. The beauties and riches of these palaces, in architecture, literature, painting, and sculpture, have been often described; but before the year 1800, all description fell short of their contents. The celebrated Venus of Medici, the standard of female beauty, stood in a room called the Tribune; but this with 60 other masterpieces of sculpture were, by a well-timed precaution, conveyed to Palermo; and many others were afterward, by the French, transported to Paris: the masterpieces of painting also shared the same fate; but many excellent statues and paintings still remain. The other rooms are indicated by their contents; as the cabinet of arts, of astronomy, natural history, medals, portraits, porcelain, antiquities, &c. Beside the Medicæan library, begun by Julius de Medici, and greatly augmented by duke Cosmo I, there are several other copious libraries, especially those in the two Benedictine and Carmelite convents. demia della Cruca were instituted to enrich the literature and improve the language of Tuscany. The Museum of natural history is one of the most complete of the kind; and annexed to it is a cabinet of anatomical preparations, deemed the first in Europe. The manufactures of Florence are chiefly silks, satins, gold and silver stuffs, and damask tablecloths; and it has a considerable trade in fruits and excellent wines. The inhabitants are estimated at 60,000; and the environs are rich in rural beauty, and very populous. Fifteen m to the E, imbedded in the Apennines above the vale of Arno, is the famed abbey of Vallombrosa, which from its wild and romantic scenery is supposed to have furnished Milton with the original of his Paradise. In 1799, the French troops, then in possession of this city, were driven out by the inhabitants; but they re-entered it in 1800, and became masters of all Tuscany. Florence is 45 m S Bologna, and 125 NNW Rome. Lon. 11 3 E, lat. 43 46 N.

Florent, St. a town of France, in the department of Mayenne and Loire, with a Benedictine abbey; seated on the Loire, 20 m WSW Angers.

Florentine, St. a town of France, in the department of Yonne, at the conflux of the Armançe and Armançon, 15 m NE Auxerre, and 80 SE Paris.

Florentino, one of the three provinces of Tuscany; bounded on the W by the republic of Lucca and Modenese, N by the Apennines, E by the duchy of Urbino, and S by Siennese. It is well watered, and very fertile. Florence is the capital.

Flores, an island of the E Indies, 180 m long and 45 broad, lying to the E of that of Cumbana. On the S side, near the E end, is a town named Larantuca. Lon. 121 56 E, lat. 8 20 S.

Flores, a fertile island, one of the Azores, so called from the abundance of flowers found upon it. Lagens is the most populous town, but St. Cruz is the capital. Lon. 31 0 W, lat. 39 43 N.

Florida, a country of N America, 500 m long and 130 broad; bounded on the N by the United States, E by the Atlantic ocean, S by the gulf of Mexico, and W by the territory of Orleans. It is divided into East and West Florida; St. Augustin the capital of the former, and Pensacola of the latter. The country about St. Augustin is the most unfruitful; yet, even here, two crops of maize are annually produced: the banks of the rivers are of a superior quality, and well adapted to the culture of rice and corn.

F O G

The interior country, which is hilly, abounds with wood of almost every kind; particularly white and red oak, pine, hickory, cypress, red and white cedar. The intervals between the hilly parts produce spontaneously the fruits common to Georgia and the Carolinas; and the whole country is valuable, in a particular manner, for its extensive ranges for cattle. Florida was discovered by Sebastian Cabot, in 1497. Having often changed masters, belonging alternately to the French and Spaniards, it was ceded by the latter to the English in 1763; in whose hands it continued till 1781, when it was taken by the Spaniards, and ceded to them in 1783.

Flotz, a town of Upper Saxony, in the principality of Anhalt, 6 m NW Zerbst.

Flota, a town of Walachia, seated on the Oenussa, near its conflux with the Danube.

Flour, St. a city of France, capital of the department of Cantal, and a bishop's see. Good knives are made here, and it has a considerable trade in corn. It is seated on a mountain, 53 m S Clermont. Lon. 3 6 E, lat. 45 2 N.

Flushing, a strong seaport of Dutch Zealand, in the island of Walcheren, on the N side of the Western Scheldt, the entrance of which it defends. It has a good harbour, and a canal runs through the town, deep enough to admit loaded vessels. The stadthouse is a superb building, after the model of that at Amsterdam. Flushing surrendered to the French in 1795; and in 1809, it was taken by the English, who destroyed the fort. It is 4 m SSW Middleburg. Lon. 3 34 E, lat. 51 26 N.

Flushing, a town of New York, in Queen county, Long Island, situate on the S side of Hell-gate, 7 m E by N New York.

Fochabers, a town of Scotland, belonging to Elginshire, though seated on the E side of the river Spey, over which is a bridge of four arches. Here are manufactures of thread, calicos, and worsted stockings, and a valuable salmon fishery. It is 8 m E by N Elgin, and 22 W by S Banff.

Fochia, a seaport of Asiatic Turkey, in Natolia, with a castle. The Venetians beat the Turkish fleet near this place, in 1650. It is seated on the gulf of Smyrna, at the influx of the Hermus, 28 m SW Smyrna. Lon. 26 39 E, lat. 38 44 N.

Fodwar, a town of Hungary, seated on the Danube, opposite Coloeza.

Fogarás, a town and castle of Transylvania, on the river Alauta, 30 m NE Hermanstadt.

Foggia, a town of Naples, in Capitanata. It is a staple for corn and wool, and seated near the Cerbero, 20 m SW Manfredonia.

Foglia, a river of Italy, which rises on the confines of Tuscany, crosses the duchy of Urbino, and enters the gulf of Venice, at Pesaro.

Foglioso, a town of Piedmont, 5 m NW Chivas, and 13 W Crescentino.

Fogo; see Fuego.

Fohr, or Fora, an island of Denmark, about 12 m in circumference, near the coast of Sleswick. Lon. 8 31 E, lat. 54 44 N.

Foix, a late province of France, adjoining the Pyrenees. It now forms, with Couserans, the department of Arriege.

Foix, a town of France, capital of the department of Arriege. Here is a manufacture of coarse woollen cloths, and some copper-mills. It is seated on the Arriege, 42 m S by E Toulouse. Lon. 1 35 E, lat. 43 0 N.

Fo-kien, a province of China, bounded on the N by Tche-kiang, W by Kiang-si, S by Quang-tong, and E by the China sea. The climate is warm; and yet the air is so pure, that no contagious diseases ever prevail. It produces musk in abundance, precious stones, quicksilver, iron, and tin; also gold and silver, but it is forbidden to dig for these. It has fine plains; and industry fertilizes even the mountains, the greater part of which are cut into terraces, rising above each other. Its valleys are watered by springs and rivers from the mountains, which the husbandman distributes, with great skill, to refresh his rice: he has even the art to raise his water to the tops of the mountains, and to convey it from one side to another, by pipes made of bamboo. The people speak a different language in most of the cities, each of which has its particular dialect. The language of the mandarins is that which is spoken every where; but few understand it in this province: however, it produces a great number of literati. It contains nine cities of the first, and 60 of the third class. Fou-tcheou is the capital.

Foligno, a town of Italy, in the duchy of Spoleto, famous for its sweetmeats, paper-mills, and silk manufactures. It is seated at the foot of the Apennines, in a delightful valley watered by the Clitumnus, 18 m WNW Spoleto.

Folkingham, a town in Lincolnshire, with a market on Thursday. Here are the ruins of an ancient castle. It is seated on a rising ground, 18 m WSW Boston, and 106 N London.

Folkstone, a town in Kent, with a market on Thursday. It had five churches, of which four have been destroyed by the incursions of the sea. It is a member of the port of Dover, governed by a mayor, and the inhabitants are chiefly employed in fishing. Dr. Harvey, the discoverer of the circulation of the blood, was born here. A little to the W is Sandgate cattle, built by Henry VIII. It is seated on the English channel, 8 m SW Dover, and 72 E by S London.

Fondi, a town of Naples, in Terra di Lavoro, seated in a fertile plain, near a lake of its name, 8 m N Gaeta, and 42 WNW Capua.

Fong-tsiang, a city of China, in the province of Chen-si. Its district contains eight cities of the second and third class. It is 560 m SW Peking. Lon. 106 57 E, lat. 34 36 N.

Fong-yang, a city of China, in the province of Kiang-nan. It encloses within its wall several fertile little hills; and its jurisdiction comprehends five cities of the second and 13 of the third class. It is seated on a mountain, which hangs over the Yellow river, 70 m NE Nanking. Lon. 116 58 E, lat. 32 52 N.

Fons, a town of France, in the department of Lot, 5 m NW Figeac.

Fontainbleau, a town of France, in the department of Seine and Marne, celebrated for its fine palace, a hunting seat of the late kings of France. It stands in the midst of a forest, 35 m SSE Paris.

Fontaine l'Evêque, a town of the Netherlands, in the territory of Liege, 6 m W Charleroy.

Fontanetto, a town of Piedmont, 7 m E Crescentino.

Fontarabia, a city and seaport of Spain, in Biscay, on the frontiers of France, from which it is separated by the river Bidassoa, which forms a harbour at its mouth, in the bay of Biscay. It stands on a peninsula, at the foot of the Pyrenean mountains, and is so strong both by nature and art as to be accounted the key of Spain on that side; but it opened its gates to the French, in 1794. It is 22 m SW Bayonne, and 62 E by N Bilboa. Lon. 1 56 W, lat. 43 23 N.

Fontello, a town of Portugal, in Beira, 6 m NE Lamego.

Fontenay le Comte, a town of France, capital of the department of Vendee. It has a woollen manufacture, and its fairs are famous for cattle. It is seated Fontenoy, a village of the Netherlands, in Hainault, 4 m SE Tournay. It is celebrated for a battle between the allies and the French in 1745, in which the former were worsted.

Fontevraud, a town of France, in the department of Mayenne and Loire. Here is a famous abbey, in the church of which several kings and queens of France lie interred. It is 7 m SE Saumur.

Fora, an island of Denmark, on the w coast of S Jutland, between those of Sylt and Nordstrand. It is of an oval form, 20 m in circumference, and the chief place is Uterfen. Lon. 8 30 E, lat. 53 48 N.

Forcalquier, a town of France, in the department of Lower Alps, seated on a hill, by the river Laye, 30 m NE Aix.

Forchheim, a strong town of Franconia, in the principality of Bamberg, with a fine arsenal. It surrendered to the French in 1796, but the Austrians compelled them to abandon it soon afterward. It is seated at the conflux of the Wisent and Rednitz, 16 m SSE Bamberg.

Forcingbridge, a town in Hampshire, with a market on Saturday, and a manufacture of checks and bed-ticks; seated on the Avon, 10 m s Salisbury, and 88 w by s London.

Fore, a borough of Ireland, in W Meath, now a poor place, 12 m N Mullingar.

Foreland, North, a promontory of Kent, the E point of the isle of Thanet. It is the most southern part of the port of London; and a line thence extended N, to the point called the Nase, in Essex, forms the mouth of the Thames. Here is a round brick tower, near 80 feet high, erected by the Trinity-house for a seamark. Lon. 1 29 E, lat. 51 22 N.

Foreland, South, a promontory of Kent, forming the SE point of England. It is called South, in respect to its bearing from the other Foreland, which is 13 m to the N. Between these two capes is the noted road, called the Downs.

Forest Towns, four towns of Suabia, in Brigau, situate on the Rhine and the confines of Switzerland, at the entrance of the Black Forest. Their names are Waldschut, Lauffenburg, Seckingen, and Rheinfelden.

Forets, a new department of France, containing the late duchy of Luxemburg, except the NW part, which is included in the department of Sambre and Meuse. The capital is Luxemburg.

Forez, a late province of France, bounded on the w by Auvergne, s by Velay and Vivarais, E by Lyonois, and N by Burgundy. It is watered by the Loire, and several other streams, and has several mines of coal and iron. It now forms the department of Loire.

Forfar, a borough of Scotland, capital of Forfarshire. It contains many neat modern houses, and has manufactures of coarse linens and shoes. The number of inhabitants was 5165 in 1801, and 5652 in 1811. It is situate in an extensive plain, 14 m NNE Dundee. Lon. 2 52 W, lat. 56 37 N.

Forfarshire, or Angusshire, a county of Scotland, 48 m long and 42 broad; bounded on the N by Aberdeenshire, NE by Kincardineshire, SE by the German ocean, S by the frith of Tay, and W by Perthshire. It contains about 593,920 acres, and is divided into 53 parishes. The number of inhabitants was 99,127 in 1801, and 107,264 in 1811. It has many lakes and hills, but is fruitful in corn and pasture. Marl is found in most of the lakes, freestone abounds in many parts, and there are several limestone quarries. The principal rivers are the North and South Esk. The largest town is Dundee.

Forges, a town of France, in the department of Lower Seine, celebrated for its mineral waters. It is 24 m NE Rouen.

Forli, a town of Italy, in Romagna, with a castle, 10 churches, and many convents; seated in a fertile country, near the river Ronca, 11 m SSW Ravenna.

Formosa, an island in the China sea, lying between 119 and 122 E lon. and 22 and 25 N lat. and separated from the province of Fo-kien, in China, by a channel about 80 m where narrowest. It is 280 m from N to S, and 70 in its broadest part, but is greatly contracted at the S extremity. It is subject to the Chinese, who, notwithstanding its proximity and size, did not know of its existence till the year 1430. A chain of mountains, running its whole length, divides it into two parts, the E and W. The Dutch built the fort of Zealand, in the W part, in 1634. They were driven thence, in 1661, by a Chinese pirate, who made himself master of all the W part. In 1682, the whole island submitted to the emperor of China. It contains extensive and fertile plains, watered by a great number of rivulets from the mountains. It produces abundance of corn and rice, most of the Indian fruits, many of those of Europe, tobacco, sugar, pepper, camphire, and cinnamon. Wholefome water is the only thing wanting in Formosa; and it is said, that every kind of water in it is pernicious to strangers. The inhabitants rear a great number of oxen, which they use for riding, from a want of horses. In 1782, this fine island was overwhelmed, and almost totally destroyed, by a furious hurricane and dreadful inundation of the sea. Taiouang is the capital.

Fornello, a town of Naples, in the county of Molise, 17 m w Molise Forovo, a town of Italy, in Parmesan, near which, in 1495, Charles VIII of France obtained a victory over the princes of Italy. It is 8 m wsw Parma.

Forres, a borough of Scotland, in Elginshire, neatly built on an eminence, near the E side of the Findhorn. The river here expands into a lake, and soon after enters the frith of Moray, at the village of Findhorn, which is the port of Forres. Here are manufactures of linen and thread, and a valuable salmon fishery. A little w of the town is a column, called Sweno's Stone, covered with antique sculpture; said to have been erected in memory of a victory obtained over the Danes, in 1008. Forres is 10 m E by N Nairn, and 16 w by s Elgin. Lon. 30 45 w, lat. 57 34 N.

Forsla, a town of Lusatia, with a castle. It has manufactures of woollen and linen cloths and carpets, and stands on a little island in the Neiffa, 15 m ssw Guben.

Forteventura, one of the Canary islands, 65 m in length and of a very irregular breadth, consisting of two peninsulas, joined by an isthmus 12 m in breadth. It produces plenty of wheat, barley, beèves, and goats. The w point is in lon. 14 31 w, lat 28 4 N.

Forth, a river of Scotland, which rises in the mountain Benlomond, in Dumbartonshire, flows E in a sinuous course by Stirling and Alloa, and meets the German ocean a little below Alloa, where it forms a noble estuary, called the Frith of Forth. The Forth is navigable for vessels of 80 tons, as far as Stirling bridge, and for merchant vessels of any burden as far as Grangemouth, where there is a communication between this river and the Clyde, by a canal. See Canal, Great.

Fortrose, a borough of Scotland, in Rosshire, situate on the Moray frith, nearly opposite Fort George, to which there is a regular ferry. It is composed of two towns, Rosmarkie and Chanonry; the former a very ancient borough, and the latter once a bishop's see. Two small parts of the ancient cathedral remain, one used as a burial-place, the other as a court-house and prison. It is 9 m sw Cromarty.

Fortroyal, the capital of Martinico, on the w side of the island, with one of the best harbours in the W Indies, defended by a strong citadel. Lon. 61 9 w, lat. 14 36 N.

Fossombrone, a town of Italy, in the duchy of Urbino, with a castle on a mountain, near the river Metro, 10 m SE Urbino.

Fossum, a town of Norway, in the government of Aggerhuys, noted for rich mines of cobalt, 35 m w Christiania.

Fotheringay, a village in Northamptonshire, near the river Nen, 3 m N Oundle. Here are the ruins of a castle in which Richard III was born, and Mary queen of Scots beheaded. In the church are interred two dukes of York; Edward, killed at Agincourt in France, and Richard, slain at Wakefield.

Foue, a town of Lower Egypt, seated on the w branch of the Nile, 25 m SE Rosetto.

Fougeres, a town of France, in the department of Ille and Vilaine, with an ancient castle. In 1202, it was taken by John, king of England. It is seated on the Coesnom, 25 m NE Rennes, and 150 w by s Paris.

Foula, or Fowla; see Fula.

Fouli, or Pholey, a country of Africa, extending on the sides of the river Senegal about 500 m from E to W; the boundaries from N to S are unknown. It is populous and fertile. The Foulahs are, in general, of a tawny complexion, though many of them are entirely black. Some lead a wandering life, and roam about the country with large droves of cows, sheep, goats, and horses; others are dextrous at hunting wild beasts; the teeth of elephants, and the skins of lions, leopards, and tigers, being articles of trade. Their arms are bows and arrows, lances, swords, daggers, and occasionally a kind of small snée. They are praised by travellers for their hospitality; nor is their humanity in other respects less commendable; for, if one of their coun-Fourneaux Island, a small island in the Pacific ocean. Lon. 143 2 W, lat. 17 11 S.

Fou-tcheou, a city of China, in Fokien, and the most considerable in that province, on account of its trade, the convenience of its rivers and port, and the number of its literati. It is the residence of a viceroy, and has under its jurisdiction nine cities of the third class. It is 360 m NE Canton, and 870 S Peking. Lon. 119 4 E, lat. 26 4 N.

Fou-tcheou, a city of China, in Kiangsi, formerly one of the most beautiful cities in China, but almost ruined by the invasion of the Tartars. It is 735 m S Peking. Lon. 115 56 E, lat. 27 55 N.

Fowey, or Fawey, a river in Cornwall, which rises 4 m to the SE of Camelford, passes by Lestwithiel, and enters the English channel, at Fowey.

Fowey, a borough and seaport in Cornwall, governed by a mayor, with a market on Saturday, and a considerable trade in the pilchard fishery. The harbour is defended by St. Catherine fort, on the summit of a steep pile of rocks, and an adjoining battery. The streets are so narrow and with such sudden turnings, that no wheeled carriage can be admitted. It is seated at the mouth of the Fowey, 32 m SW Launceston, and 439 W by S London. Lon. 4 37 W, lat. 50 49 N.

Fox Islands, a group of islands in the Northern Archipelago. They are 16 in number, lying near the extremity of the peninsula of Alaska, on the W coast of America, between 52 and 55 N lat. The largest island is called Oonamak, and each has a peculiar name; but this general name is given to the whole group, on account of the great number of black, grey, and red foxes, with which they abound. The dresses of the inhabitants consist of a cap, and a fur coat that reaches down to their knees: some wear a cap of a party-coloured bird-skin, upon which is left part of the wings and tail. On the forepart of their hunting and fishing caps they place a small board, like a skreen, adorned with the jawbones of seabears, and ornamented with glass beads, which they receive in barter from the Russians. They feed upon the flesh of all sorts of sea animals, and generally eat it raw. The provision intended for keeping is dried without salt, in the open air. Their weapons are bows, arrows, and darts; and, for defence, they use wooden shields. The most perfect equality reigns among them: they have neither chiefs nor superiors, neither laws nor punishments. They live together in families, and societies of several families united, which form what they call a race, who, in case of attack or defence, mutually aid each other. They have a good share of plain natural sense, but are rather slow of understanding; and seem cold and indifferent in most of their actions: yet, if an injury, or even a mere suspicion, rouse them from this phlegmatic state, they become furious and revengeful. The Russians call these islands the Lyssie Ostrova.

Foxford, a town of Ireland, in the county of Mayo, on the river Moy, 8 m N Castlebar.

Foy, St. a town of France, in the department of Gironde, on the river Dordogne, 38 m E Bordeaux.

Foyers, or Eyers, a river of Scotland, in the county of Inverness, which rises a few m E of Fort Augustus, and flows into Loch Ness. About 2 m before its entrance into the lake is the Fall of Foyers, one of the highest in the world, being 207 feet in one unbroken stream.

Foyle, a river of Ireland, formed by the junction of the Fin and the Mourne, at Lifford, in the county of Donegal. It passes by St. Johnstown and Londonderry, and at Culmore expands into a bay, called Lough Foyle, of an oval form, 14 m long and 8 broad, which communicates with the ocean by a short and narrow strait.

France, a country of Europe, bounded on the N by the English channel and the Netherlands, E by Germany, Switzerland, and Italy, S by the Mediterranean sea and Spain, and W by the Atlantic ocean. From the Pyrenees in the S, to Dunkirk in the N, its extent is 625 m; and something more from the most easterly part of Alsace to the most western point of Bretagne, which province, it must be observed, extends above 100 m further into the ocean than any other part of the country. The climate is temperate; and the soil productive of all the necessaries of life, and, among its luxuries, of the most excellent wines. The principal rivers are the Seine, Loire, Rhone, and Gironde; and there are many others, which give name to the departments in the new division of this country. The most considerable mountains are the Alps, Pyrenees, Cevennes, and Vosges. France was an absolute monarchy governed by kings, from the time of Clovis, in 486, to the death of Lewis XVI, in 1793. It was divided into several military governments or provinces; namely, Alsace, Angoumois, Anjou, Armagnac, Artois, Aunis, Auvergne, Barrois, Basques, Bearn, Berry, Bigorre, Blaisois, Boulonnois, Bourbonnois, Bresse, Bretagne, Burgundy, Cambresis, Champagne, Couserans, Dauphiny, Forez, Foix, Franche Comté, French Flanders, Gascony, Gevaudan, Guienne, French Hainault, Isle of France, Languedoc, Limosin, Lorraine, Lyonois, Marche, Main, Marfan, Navarre, Nivernois, Normandy, Orleanois, Perche, Perigord, Picardy, Poitou, Provence, Quercy, Rouergue, Rouffillon, Saintonge, Soissonnois, Touraine, Velay, and Vermandois. These varied much from each other in point of extent and importance, and there were others of still inferior consideration. The established religion was the Roman catholic; and the ecclesiastical division of the country was into 18 archbishoprics and 113 episcopal sees, exclusive of Avignon, Carpentras, Caivillon, and Vaison, which belonged to the pope. But in 1789, a wonderful revolution took place. The deranged state of the finances of the country, induced Lewis XVI to convoke the states general, which had not been assembled since 1614. They consisted of three orders; the nobility, the clergy, and the commons; and being assembled in May, at Versailles, they assumed the title of the National Assembly. On the removal of the popular minister, M. Neckar, in July, an insurrection ensued in Paris; the military refused to fire upon the people; the Bastille was taken by the citizens, and the governor and some others were beheaded. The national assembly now proceeded to the most extraordinary measures: they divested monarchy of its formidable prerogatives; abolished nobility, and the whole feudal system; confiscated the possessions of the clergy, rendering them dependent on a public allowance; and suppressed all the religious houses. In October, in consequence of a riot at Versailles, the royal family and the national assembly removed to Paris. The king was now, in fact, a state prisoner, and he attempted to escape in June 1791, with the queen, his sister, the dauphin, and his daughter; but they were arrested at Varennes, and conducted back to Paris, where the national assembly admitted the king's apologetical explanation of his conduct. In April 1792, the king proposed to the national assembly, to declare war against the king of Hungary and Bohemia, and war was accordingly declared; but the king was suspected of acting in concert with the enemy; and in August, the mayor of Paris appeared before the national assembly, and demanded the deposition of the king. Before they could deliberate on this demand, another insurrection ensued; the Tuilleries (the royal residence) was attacked; the Swiss guards were massacred; and the king and royal family took refuge in the national assembly. That body instantly decreed the suspension of royalty, and the convocation of a national convention. The king and his family were conveyed to the Temple, and kept in close confinement.

The convention met in September, and instantly decreed the formation of a republic. In December, they decreed, that the king should be tried before them; and this tribunal condemned the unfortunate monarch, who was beheaded in January 1793. All Europe exclaimed against this proceeding; and the new republic, in addition to the arms of Austria, Prussia, Sardinia, and the empire, had to encounter the combination of Great Britain, Spain, and Holland. The queen being tried and condemned by the revolutionary tribunal, was executed in October; and the king's sister was also beheaded in May following. The dauphin and his sister remained in confinement; where the former became diseased with swellings, and died in June 1795; and the princess was taken in December to the confines of Germany, where she was exchanged for some French deputies. Various factions successively seized the helm of government; the prisons were crowded in every part of the republic; the scaffolds streamed, almost incessantly, with blood; and many of the most popular patriots, and of those who had voted for the death of the king, perished on the scaffold, or in exile and misery; while insurrections, proscriptions, and massacres, became, in a manner, only common occurrences. By the conclusion, however, of the year 1794, this reign of despotism and terror gave place to a more moderate system: and although, at one period, the shutting up of churches, and the formation of a new calendar (by which the year was divided into decades instead of weeks) indicated open hostility to the christian religion; the convention found it necessary, at last, to declare publicly their acknowledgment of a Supreme Being, and of the immortality of the soul, and to permit again the exercise of religious worship. With respect to the war, it may be sufficient to state, in general, that after four campaigns, in which great reverses of fortune were experienced, the French nation before the conclusion of 1795, were in the entire possession of Savoy, and the Netherlands; and had made such progress in Holland, Spain, Italy, and Germany, as to procure a peace with Prussia and Spain, and form an alliance with Holland. Their commerce, however, was ruined; and their finances were supported by a vast emission of compulsive paper currency, and by plunder and confiscation: their armies nevertheless fought with ardour, and in 1796, under general Bonaparte, subdued the whole of Lombardy; and, after the capture of Mantua, penetrated through the Tyrol, and threatened the city of Vienna, that the emperor commenced a negotiation for peace. In the mean time the French turned their arms against Venice, which government they revolutionized; and at the conclusion of the treaty of peace with the emperor of Germany, at Campo Formio in 1797, they ceded the city and the greater part of the territory to Austria. In 1798, the French obtained possession of Mentz, forced Ehrenbreitstein to surrender by a blockade, and sent general Bonaparte with a formidable army into Egypt; the emperor of Germany formed an alliance with Russia; the Turks declared against France, on account of the invasion of Egypt; and the flames of war which had been for a time suppressed, burst forth with redoubled fury. In 1799, the French entered Germany, under general Jourdan, in March; and hostilities were at the same time commenced by the French troops in the Grison country, where they gained several advantages; but in a few days the army under Jourdan was defeated by the archduke Charles, near Stockach, and compelled to recross the Rhine. The Russian troops, under general Suwarrow, soon after joined the Austrian army in Italy, of which that general took the command. The success of the allied armies was so great, that by the end of August the French were almost entirely driven out both of Italy and Switzerland. But in the latter a reverse of fortune took place; for the republican armies having been greatly reinforced, general Massena, at Zurich, totally defeated the Austro-Russian army, under general Hotze, who was killed: general Suwarrow, who had entered the country from Italy, finding it impossible to join his defeated allies, retreated over the mountains into Germany; and soon afterward the Russian troops were ordered home. The affairs of the republic in Egypt were not prosperous, and general Bonaparte, having found means to escape thence, arrived at Paris in October. He found the authority of the directory was greatly weakened; and this one man, aided by the bayonets of a few soldiers, effected another revolution in November, by which the directory was abolished, and three consuls appointed to govern the republic. A new constitution was afterward formed, in which the whole of the executive and almost all other power was vested in the first consul, general Bonaparte. In April 1800, the campaign in Italy commenced, and for the most part with loss to the French till the arrival of Bonaparte, who gained a victory over the Austrians, at Marengo, which reinstated them in the full possession of that country. The war in Germany was prosecuted with vigour by the French, who pursued their successes into the territories of Austria, where they concluded an armistice with the emperor; and a treaty of peace was signed early in 1801, at Luneville. France now endeavoured to negotiate a peace with Great Britain, the preliminaries of which were settled in London, and the treaty was signed at Amiens in March 1802: but this treaty held little more than a year, the French deeming it violated by the English refusing to evacuate Malta. Bonaparte was now appointed consul for life, with power to nominate his successor; but his ambition aspired to the throne, and in May 1804, at the request of the senate, he assumed the title of Emperor of the French; and he was shortly afterward crowned by the pope, who was ordered to repair to Paris for that purpose. War in Germany was again renewed in 1805, and the grand army of the French, headed by the emperor, Napoleon, crossed the Rhine in October. His success and rapid progress were such, that after the battle of Austerlitz, in December, the emperor of Germany was necessitated to negotiate for peace, and a treaty between the two emperors was signed at Presburg. In 1806, several of the German princes entered into an alliance with France, and a treaty, called the Confederation of the Rhine, under the protection of Bonaparte, was signed at Paris. Soon after the king of Prussia took the field against France and these princes; the opposing armies met near Jena, and the French were victorious. A Russian army advanced to assist the Prussians, but, in 1807, their united forces were defeated at Friedland, which battle was decisive, and a treaty of peace was signed at Tilsit. From 1808 to 1812, France carried on war in Portugal and Spain with variable success; but in 1813, after the battle of the Pyrenees, the French were driven back into their own country: they were followed, in October, by the allied forces under lord Wellington, who remained established in the neighbourhood of Bayonne at the end of the year. For the fatal campaigns of Bonaparte in 1812 and 1813, in Russia and Germany, those countries may be referred to; and at the beginning of December, the armies of Russia, Austria, and Prussia crossed the Rhine into France, headed by their sovereigns, who commenced their approaches toward the capital, in different directions. [On March 31, 1814, Paris surrendered by capitulation; this was immediately followed by the abdication and exile of Bonaparte, and the restoration of the Bourbon family.] It is now proper to go back and notice other particulars of this country. The Roman catholic religion was re-established in France, by a convention between the pope and the first consul, in 1801; and the ecclesiastical division of the country is into 10 archbishoprics and 50 bishoprics. The protestant religion is also tolerated; and the new calendar was abolished at the close of the year 1805. The political division of the country is into 84 departments, nearly equal in extent, instead of the ancient military provinces; and these departments are subdivided into districts, cantons, and municipalities. The names of the departments are Ain, Aisne, Allier, Alps Upper, Alps Lower, Ardeche, Ardennes, Arriège, Aube, Aude, Aveyron, Calvados, Cantal, Charente, Charente Lower, Cher, Corrèze, Côte d'Or, Côtes du Nord, Creuse, Dordogne, Doubs, Drome, Eure, Eure and Loir, Finisterre, Gard, Garonne Upper, Gers, Gironde, Herault, Indre, Indre and Loire, Isère, Ille and Vilaine, Jura, Landes, Loir and Cher, Loire, Loire Upper, Loire Lower, Loiret, Lot, Lot and Garonne, Lozère, Mayenne, Mayenne and Loire, Manche, Marne, Marne Upper, Meurthe, Meuse, Morbihan, Moselle, Nord, Nièvre, Oise, Orne, Paris, Pas de Calais, Puy de Dome, Pyrenees Upper, Pyrenees Lower, Pyrenees Eastern, Rhine Upper, Rhine Lower, Rhone, Rhone (Mouths of the), Saône Upper, Saône and Loire, Sarthe, Seine and Oise, Seine Lower, Seine and Marne, Sevrès (Two), Somme, Tarn, Tarn and Garonne, Var, Vendée, Vienne, Vienne Upper, Vosges, and Yonne. All these departments appear in this work; and the account of the late provinces are still retained. They constitute the original territory of France, and the population of them is 27,900,000. The countries that the ambition of the government has since annexed to its former territory are Corsica, Savoy, Piedmont, Parmesan, the w part of Milanese, the bishopric of Basil, the country of Valais, the territories of Avignon and Geneva, the counties of Venaissin and Nice, the Netherlands, and all the German territory westward of the Rhine. These countries are divided into 27 departments; namely, Alps (Maritime), Dyle, Forets, Colo, Jemappe, Ivrea, Leman, Llamone, Lie, Marengo, Meuse Lower, Mont Blanc, Mont Tonnerre, Nethes (Two), Ourthe, Po, Rhine and Moselle, Roer, Sambre and Meuse, Sarre, Scheldt, Sefia, Simplon, Stura, Tanaro, Taro, and Vaulafé. This acquisition of territory makes an addition to the above population of France of 7,150,000. Paris is the metropolis.

France, Isle of, a late province of France, so called from being bounded by the rivers Seine, Marne, Oise, Aisne, and Ourque. It now forms the departments of Oise, Seine and Oise, Seine and Marne, and Paris.

France, Isle of, or Mauritius, an island in the Indian ocean, 400 m \pm of Madagascar. It was discovered by the Portuguese; but the first settlers were the Dutch, in 1598. They called it Mauritius, in honour of prince Maurice, their stadtholder; but, on their acquisition of the Cape of Good Hope, they deserted it; and it continued unsettled till the French landed in 1720, and gave it the name of one of the finest provinces in France. In 1810, it was taken from them by the English. The island is 150 m in circumference, and the climate healthy, but the soil not very fertile. There are many mountains, some of which have their tops covered with snow; but they produce the best ebony in the world. The valleys are well watered by rivers, and made very productive by cultivation, of which coffee and indigo are the principal objects. The town and harbour, called Port Louis, are strongly fortified; but in the hurricane months the harbour cannot afford shelter for more than eight vessels. Here are large storehouses, and every thing necessary for the equipment of fleets. Lon. 57 23 E , lat. 20 10 S .

Franche Compté, a late province of France, bounded on the N by Lorraine, \pm by Alsace and Swisserland, w by Burgundy, and s by Bresse. It is 125 m long and 80 broad, and abounds in corn, wine, cattle, horses, iron, copper, and lead. It now forms the three departments of Doubs, Jura, and Upper Saone.

Franchemont, a town of the Netherlands, in the territory of Liege, 12 m SE Liege.

Francis, St. a river of Brasil, which runs NE and then SE till it enters the Atlantic in lat. 11 20 S . It has a number of towns and settlements, chiefly on its head waters.

Francisco, St. a town on the coast of New Albion, capital of a jurisdiction of its name, with a citadel, and a fine harbour. It is the most northern settlement belonging to the Spaniards on this continent. Lon. 122 37 W , lat. 37 48 N .

Francois, Cape, a city and seaport, lately the capital of the w part of Hispaniola. Before the dreadful commotions that ensued after the French revolution, it contained 8000 inhabitants, whites, people of colour, and slaves; but in 1793, the Negros, supported by the Mulattos, entered the town and massacred all the white people. It stands on the N side of the island, 150 m NW St. Domingo. Lon. 72 18 W , lat. 19 46 N .

Franconia, a circle of Germany, bounded on the N by Upper Saxony, \pm by Bohemia and the palatinate of Bavaria, \pm by Suabia, and w by the circles of the Rhine. The middle is fertile in corn, wine, and fruit; but the borders are full of woods and barren mountains. This country was overrun by the French in 1796, and again in 1800. The Franks, who conquered France, came from this province, and gave their name to that country.

Franeke, a town of Holland, in Friesland, with a castle and a university. The public buildings and palaces are magnificent, and it has two navigable canals. It is 9 m W Lewarden.

Frankfort, a town of Pennsylvania, in Philadelphia county, on an arm of the river Delaware, 4 m NE Philadelphia.

Frankfort on the Maine, a fortified city of Germany, in Wetteravia, on the confines of Franconia. It is divided by the river Maine into two parts, which communicate by means of a stone bridge; the larger part on the N side, is called Frankfort, and the smaller Sachsenhausen. It contains several palaces and courts belonging to princes and counts; and here the king of the Romans is elected and crowned. The chief structure is the townhouse, in which is preserved the golden bull, the origin of the fundamental laws of the empire. All religions are tolerated at Frankfort, under certain restrictions; but Lutheranism is the established faith; though the principal church is in the possession of the Roman catholics. The Jews live together in a long narrow street, separated from the other citizens by a high wall. Frankfort is one of the most commercial places in Europe, and has two great fairs every year. It was taken, in 1759, by the French, who evacuated it in 1763; and it has been several times taken and retaken by the French and Austrians, in the late wars. It is 18 m ENE Mentz, and 350 WNW Vienna. Lon. 8 32 E, lat. 50 7 N.

Frankfort on the Oder, a town of Brandenburg, in the Middle mark, with a famous university and a noble academy. It has three great fairs, and the exclusive right of navigation up the Oder to Breslau. Here are two suburbs, called Lebus and Guben, and a bridge over the Oder. In 1759, it was taken by the Russians and Austrians, and in 1806, it fell into the hands of the French. It is 45 m E by E Berlin, and 72 s Stettin. Lon. 14 39 E, lat. 52 23 N.

Franzburg, a town of Hither Pomerania, 14 m ssw Straßund.

Frascati, a town of Italy, in Campagna di Roma, seated on the side of a woody mountain. It is a bishop's see, always possessed by one of the six eldest cardinals; and in its neighbourhood are some of the most magnificent villas in Italy. The ancient city of Tusculum stood on the summit of the mountain, where its scattered ruins of white stone are intermingled with shrubs and bushes. Between these ruins and Frascati was the Tusculanum of Cicero; and St. Nilus, a Greek monk, in the 11th century, built a convent on the site of his villa, which is now an abbey of Greek monks, and called Grotta Ferrata. Frascati is 12 m SE Rome.

Frazerburg, a town of Scotland, in Aberdeenshire, with a good harbour for coasting vessels, and a manufacture of linen yarn. It is seated on the German ocean, a little S of the point of Kinaird Head, and 42 m N Aberdeen. Lon. 1 47 W, lat. 57 28 N.

Friendly Islands, a group of islands in the S Pacific ocean, so named by Cook, in 1773, on account of the friendship that appeared to subsist among the inhabitants, and their courteous behaviour to strangers. Tasman, a Dutch navigator, first touched here in 1643, and gave the names of Amsterdam, Rotterdam, and Middleburg, to three of the principal islands. Cook explored the whole cluster, which he found to consist of more than 20 islands, the principal of which are Tongataboo, or Amsterdam; Eaooove, or Middleburg; Annamooka, or Rotterdam; Hapacee, and Lefooga. The first, which is the largest, lies in 174 46 W lon. and 21 9 S lat. The general appearance of these islands conveys an idea of the most exuberant fertility; the surface, at a distance, seems entirely clothed with trees of various sizes, some of which are very large, particularly the tall cocoa-palm, and a species of fig with narrow-pointed leaves. On closer examination, they are almost wholly laid out in plantations, in which are some of the richest productions of nature; such as bread-fruit and cocoa-nut trees, plantains, yams, sugar-canes, and a fruit like a nectarine. The stock of quadrupeds was scanty; but they received from Cook some valuable additions, both to the animal and vegetable kingdom. Their domestic fowls are as large as those of Europe. Among the birds are parrots and parroquets of various sorts, which furnish the red feathers so much esteemed in the Society Isles. The numerous reefs and shoals afford shelter for an endless variety of shellfish. These islands are all inhabited by a race of people, who cultivate the earth with great industry; and nature, assisted by a little art, appears nowhere in greater splendour. Agriculture, architecture, boat-building, and fishing, are the employment of the men; to the women is confined the manufacture of cloth.

Friesach, a town of Germany, in Carinthia, with a strong castle on a mountain; seated on the Metnitz, 17 m NNE Clagenfurt.

Friesland, one of the provinces of Holland, bounded on the N by the German ocean, W by the Zuider zee, S by the same and Overijssel, and E by Overijssel and Groningen. This country much resembles the province of Holland in its soil, canals, and dikes. Lewarden is the capital.

Friesland, East, a principality of Westphalia, so called from its situation with respect to the Dutch province of Friesland. It is 45 m long and 42 broad; bounded on the N by the German ocean, E by Oldenburg, S by Munster, and W by Groningen and the German ocean. The country, being level and low, is obliged to be secured against inundations by expensive dikes. The land is fertile; and the pastures feed horned cattle, horses, and sheep, of an extraordinary size. On the death of prince Charles Edward, in 1744, it became subject to the king of Prussia, who resigned it by the treaty of Tilsit in 1807, and it has since been annexed to Holland. Emden is the capital.

Friesland, West, that part of Holland, more usually called North Holland.

Fullan, a country in the interior of Africa, W of the kingdom of Cassina. The boundaries have not been ascertained, nor has the face of the country been described. The dress of the natives resembles the plaids of the Scotch highlanders.

Fuluck, a town and castle of Moravia, on the frontiers of Silesia, 26 m ENE Prerau.

Funchal, the capital of Madeira, situate round a bay, on the gentle ascent of some hills. An old castle, which commands the road, stands on the top of a steep black rock, called the Loo Rock, surrounded by the sea at high water; there are also three other forts, and several batteries. The streets are narrow and dirty, though streams of water run through them. The houses are built of freestone, or bricks; but they are dark, and only a few of the best are provided with glass windows; the others have a kind of lattice-work in their stead, which hangs on hinges. The beams and roof of the cathedral are of cedar. The chief curiosity here is a chamber in the Franciscan convent, which has the walls and ceiling covered with human skulls and thigh-bones, said to be the relics of holy men who have died on the island. The town contains about 11,000 inhabitants. Lon. 17 6 W, lat. 32 38 N.

Fundy, a bay of N America, between New England and Nova Scotia, remarkable for its tides, which rise from the height of 30 to 60 feet, and flow rapidly. It extends about 200 m in a NE direction; and at the upper part is divided into two arms, by a peninsula of Nova Scotia, the W point of which is called Cape Shegneto. In the basin of Minas, the E arm of the bay, the tides rise 40 feet; and in Shegneto channel, the SE arm, they rise 60 feet. The latter branch, with Vart bay, which pushes into the land in a SW direction from Northumberland strait, form an isthmus of only 12 m wide, which unites Nova Scotia to New Brunswick.

Gangelt, a town of France, in the department of Roer, lately of Germany, in the duchy of Juliers, 16 m NW Juliers.

Ganges, a celebrated river of Asia, which has its source in two springs, on the W side of Mount Kentaiffe, in Tibet. The two streams take a W direction for 300 m, when meeting the ridge of Himmaleh, they turn S, unite their waters, and form what is properly called the Ganges, from the Hindoo word Ganga, which signifies a river; a term given it by way of eminence. This great body of water now forces a passage through the ridge of Himmaleh, at the distance of 400 m below the place of its first approach, and, rushing through a cavern, precipitates itself into a vast basin, at the hither foot of the mountain. The Ganges thus appears, to incurious spectators, to have its source from this chain of mountains. Superstition has given to the mouth of the cavern the form of the head of a cow; an animal held by the Hindoos in great veneration; and it is therefore called the Gangotri, or the Cow's Mouth. From this place it takes a SE direction through the country of Sirinagur, until, at Hurdwar, it finally escapes from this mountainous tract in which it has wandered 800 m. From Hurdwar, where it gushes through an opening in the mountains, and enters Hindoostan, it flows 1200 m with a smooth navigable stream, through delightful plains, to the bay of Bengal, which it enters by several mouths that form an extensive delta. In its course through these plains, it receives 11 rivers, some of them larger and none smaller than the Thames, beside many of inferior note. In the annual inundation of this river, which on an average rises 31 feet, the country is overflowed to the extent of more than 100 m in width. The Ganges is, in every respect, one of the most beneficial rivers in the world; diffusing plenty immediately by means of its living productions, and secondarily by enriching the lands, affording an easy conveyance for the production of its borders, and giving employment to many thousand boatmen. It is no wonder, therefore, that the Hindoos regard this river as a kind of deity, that they hold its waters in high veneration, and that it is visited annually by a prodigious number of pilgrims from all parts of Hindoostan.

Gangotri, a town of the country of Sirinagur, seated on the Ganges, where that river rushes through a cavern of the Himmaleh mountains, 170 m NNW Sirinagur. Lon. 76 35 E, lat. 33 8 N.

lies between the Zuider zee, the provinces of Holland, Utrecht, and Overysse, the principality of Munster, the late duchy of Cleve, and Dutch Brabant; and is divided into three quarters or counties, called Nimeguen, Arnhem, and Zutphen, from the principal towns. It is fertile in fruit and corn; and, in many parts, abounds in wood.

Gelderland, Upper, a territory of the Netherlands, lying in detached parts, on both sides the river Meuse; lately divided into Austrian, Dutch, and Prussian Gelderland. The Austrian part included Ruremonde, and its dependencies; the Dutch comprehended the lordships of Velno and Stevenswert; and the Prussian contained the capital, Gelders, and its district, which was reckoned as a part of the circle of Westphalia. These districts have been recently annexed to France; the Austrian and Dutch part included in the department of Lower Meuse, and the Prussian in that of Roer.

Gelders, a town of France, in the department of Roer, lately the capital of Prussian Gelderland. Here is a palace, the residence of the former dukes. It was taken in 1702, by the king of Prussia, and in 1713, the town and its district was ceded by France to that prince in exchange for the principality of Orange. In 1757 it surrendered to the French, who restored it in 1764, after demolishing the fortifications. It again surrendered to them in 1794; and was afterward, with its district, annexed to France. It is 20 m sse Cleve. Lon. 6 16 E, lat. 51 31 N.

Genessee, a river that rises on the N border of Pennsylvania, in the highest ground of that state, and runs 100 m NNE through the state of New York into Lake Ontario. It has three falls, which furnish excellent mill-seats; and on its borders are the famous Genessee flats, 20 m long and 4 broad, the soil rich and clear of trees.

Geneva, a town of New York, in Onondago county, at the NW corner of Seneca lake, 24 m SSE Canandaqua, and 106 w Cooperstown.

Geneva, a fortified city, capital of a territory of the same name, surrounded by the duchy of Savoy, of which it was formerly a part, and the see of a bishop, now resident at Annecy. In 1584, Geneva concluded an alliance with Zurich and Bern, by which it was an associate of Switzerland. During the greater part of the 18th century, there were frequent contests between the aristocratic and the popular parties; and the years 1768, 1782, 1789, and 1794, were distinguished by great revolutions. The last was effected entirely by the influence of the French; and not long after, this city and its territory was made a department of France, under the name of Leman. But in 1813, the French garrison abandoned the city on the appearance of an Austrian force, to whom the inhabitants opened their gates. Geneva, which stands partly on a plain at the W end of the lake, and partly on a gentle ascent, is irregularly built. It has a good arsenal, and a university founded in 1368. The houses are lofty, and many in the trading part of the city have arcades of wood, which are raised even to the upper stories. The inhabitants, estimated at 26,000, carry on a great trade, and among others the watch-making business is particularly flourishing. Geneva is 40 m NE Chambery, and 135 NW Turin. Lon. 6° E, lat. 46° 12' N.

Geneva, Lake of, a large expanse of water, between Savoy and Switzerland, in a valley, which separates the Alps from Mount Jura. Its length, from Villeneuve to the city of Geneva, is 34 m, and the breadth, in the widest part, is 12. The water near Geneva is shallow; in other parts the depth is various; the greatest, yet found by sounding, is 160 fathoms. The river Rhone runs through it from E to W.

Gengenbach, a town of Suabia, in Brisgau, with a Benedictine abbey; seated on a rivulet of the same name, which flows into the Kintzig, 20 m N Friburg.

Gengoux de Royal, St. a town of France, in the department of Saone and Loire, celebrated for its excellent wine; seated at the foot of a mountain, 17 m SW Chalons.

Genies, St. a town of France, in the department of Aveyron, 24 m N Rhodéz.

Genlis, a town of France, in the department of Aisne, 12 m S St. Quentin.

Gennep, a town of France, in the department of Roer, lately of Germany, in the duchy of Cleve; seated on the Niers, 8 m SSW Cleve.

Genoa, or Liguria, a republic of Italy, extending 150 m along that part of the Mediterranean called the gulf of Genoa, but the breadth is only from 8 to 12. Where the country is not bounded by the sea, it is bordered from W to E by Piedmont, Milan, Parma, and Tuscany. It is populous, well cultivated, and fertile near the sea; but the inner parts are mountainous, and barren in several places. The corn grown is insufficient for its own consumption; but there are abundance of excellent fruits and vegetables; and its mulberry and olive trees are innumerable. The government of the republic was aristocratic, from the year 1520 till 1798, when the French form was chosen, or rather enforced, and the new style assumed of the Ligurian Republic.

Genoa, a city and seaport, capital of the republic of the same name, and an archbishop's see. It is 6 m in circumference, and full of marble churches and palaces; whence it has the name of Genoa the Proud. The doge's palace has an immense front, both in length and elevation, and is richly fitted up with decorations and furniture. Genoa on the land side is defended by a double rampart; one encloses the town only, and the other, extending along the hills that command the city, makes a circuit of 13 m. The harbour is protected by two forts, one of which has its top formed of strong glass, and is illuminated at night by great lamps; and it has a mole 560 paces in length, 13 in breadth, and 15 feet above the level of the water. The inhabitants are computed at 80,000. It has manufactures of velvets, damasks, gold and silver tissues, and paper; and the banking business is a very profitable article of commerce. Here are the public store-houses, from which the inhabitants are obliged to purchase wine, oil, bread, and wood; and only the principal merchants are allowed, upon paying a sum of money, to procure these articles abroad. The streets are kept clean, but most of them are narrow and uneven. Genoa was taken, in 1746, by the Austrians, whose oppression of the inhabitants was such, that the latter suddenly rose and expelled their conquerors, who again besieged the city, the next year, but without effect. In 1798, the French became masters of this city. In 1800 it sustained a siege by a British fleet and Austrian army till literally starved, and was evacuated by capitulation; but soon afterward it was again delivered up to the French, on their victory at Marengo. Genoa is 62 m s^w Turin, and 120 m w w Florence. Lon. 8 36 E, lat. 44 25 N.

Gentiah, a town of the kingdom of Assam, 370 m E Patna. Lon. 92 10 E, lat. 25 10 N.

George, Fort, a fortress of Scotland, in Invernesshire, which has several handsome streets of barracks, and is the most regular fortification in Great Britain. It is seated on the point of a peninsula, running into the Moray frith, and completely commands the entrance into the harbour of Inverness. It is 10 m N^e Inverness.

George, Fort St. see Madras.

George, Lake, in the state of New York, lies to the sw of Lake Champlain, and its waters are about 100 feet higher. It is 36 m long, and from 1 to 7 broad, enclosing more than 200 islands, the greatest part little better than barren rocks. On each side it is skirted by mountains, from which large quantities of red cedar are obtained for ship timber. The remains of Fort George are at the s end of the lake, and of the fort of Ticonderoga at the n end, at its outlet into Lake Champlain.

George, St. the capital of the island of Granada, formerly called Fortroyal, which name the fort still retains. It is situate on the w coast, not far from the s end of the island, and has a safe and commodious harbour. Lon. 61 45 w, lat. 11 50 N.

George, St. one of the Azores, which produces much wheat. In 1808 a volcano broke out here, which destroyed the town of Ursulina, several farm-houses, &c. The chief town is Vellas. Lon. 28 0 w, lat. 38 39 N.

George, St. a small island in the gulf of Venice, to the s of Venice, to which it is subject. Here is a Benedictine monastery, whose church is one of the finest in Italy.

George, St. the largest island of the Bermudas. It is in the form of a hook, about 20 m long, but seldom 2 broad. It has a town of the same name, containing 500 houses built of free-stone and washed with lime, which is the capital of all the islands. Lon. 64 40 w, lat. 32 12 N.

George, St. an island in the gulf of Mexico, opposite the mouth of the Apalachicola. Lon. 84 50 w, lat. 29 30 N.

George del Mina, St. a fort of Guinea, on the Gold coast, and the principal settlement of the Dutch in those parts. The town under it, called by the natives Oddena, has the houses built of stone, which is uncommon, for in other places they are composed only of clay and wood. It is 10 m w s w Cape Coast Castle. Lon. 0 8 w, lat. 4 56 N.

George Key, St. a small island in the bay of Honduras, on the e coast of Jucatan. It is likewise called Casina, or Cayo Casigo. By a convention in 1786, the English logwood-cutters were permitted, under certain restrictions, to occupy this island. Lon. 88 35 w, lat. 17 40 N.

Georgetown, a town of S Carolina, capital of a district of the same name. The public buildings are three churches, a court-house, and an academy. It stands near the junction of a number of rivers, which here form a basin called Winyaw bay; but a bar at its entrance will not admit vessels drawing above 11 feet. It is 12 m from the sea, and 55 N by E Charleston. Lon. 79 6 w, lat. 33 27 N.

Georgetown, a town of the state of Georgia, in Oglethorpe county, situate on the Ogeechee, 24 m NNW Louisville.

Georgia, a country of Asia, called by the Persians Gurgistan, and by the Turks Gurthi. It comprehends the ancient Iberia, and is bounded on the N by Circassia, E by Daghestan and Schirvan, S by Persian Armenia, and W by Imeritia. The last reigning king ceded this country to Russia on his death, which happened in 1800; and in 1802, it was made a Russian government. The hills of Georgia are covered with forests of oak, ash, beech, chestnut, walnut, and elm, encircled with vines, growing perfectly wild, but producing vast quantities of grapes, from which much wine and brandy are made. Cotton grows spontaneously, as well as the finest European fruit-trees. Rice, wheat, millet, hemp, and flax, are raised on the plains, almost without culture. The valleys afford the finest pasturage, the rivers are full of fish, the mountains abound in minerals, and the climate is healthy. The rivers of Georgia, being fed by mountain torrents, are always either too rapid or too shallow for the purposes of navigation. The Georgians are Christians of the Greek communion, and appear to have received their name from their attachment to St. George, the tutelary saint of these countries. Their dress nearly resembles that of the Cossacs; but men of rank frequently wear the habit of Persia. They usually die their hair, beards, and nails with red. The women employ the same colour to stain the palms of their hands. On their head they wear a cap or fillet, under which their black hair falls on their forehead; behind, it is braided into several tresses: their eyebrows are painted with black, in such a manner as to form one entire line, and the face is coated with white and red. They are celebrated for their beauty, but their air and manners are extremely voluptuous. The Georgians have great skill in the use of the bow, and are deemed excellent soldiers; but the men have no virtue, except courage; fathers sell their children, and sometimes their wives. Both sexes are addicted to drunkenness, and are particularly fond of brandy. The other inhabitants of Georgia are Tartars, Ossi, and Armenians. These last are found all over Georgia, sometimes mixed with the natives, and sometimes in villages of their own. They speak among themselves their own language, but all understand and can talk the Georgian. Beside these, there are a considerable number of Jews, some having villages of their own, and others mixed with the Georgian, Armenian, and Tartar inhabitants, but never with the Ossi. The Christians of the country in part follow the rites of the Armenian, and in part that of the Greek church; and they are represented as the most tractable Christians in the east. Teflis is the capital. See Imeritia.

Georgia, the most southern of the United States of America, 400 m long and 250 broad; bounded on the N by Tennessee, SE and E by S Carolina, SE by the Atlantic, S by Florida, and W by the territory of Mississippi. It is divided into 24 counties, namely, Camden, Glynn, Liberty, Chatham, Bryan, Macintosh, Effingham, Scriven, Burke, Richmond, Wilkes, Washington, Greene, Franklin, Montgomery, Hancock, Oglethorpe, Elbert, Lincoln, Warren, Jefferson, Jackson, Bullock, and Columbia. The principal rivers are the Savanna, Ogeechee, Altamaha, Turtle river, Little Sitilla, Great Sitilla, Crooked river, St. Mary, and Apalachicola. The winters in Georgia are very mild and pleasant; snow is seldom or never seen. The soil and its fertility are various, according to situation and different improvements. By culture are produced rice, cotton, tobacco, indigo, sago, maize, potatoes, oranges, figs, pomegranates, &c. The whole coast of Georgia is bordered with islands, the principal of which are Skidaway, Waffaw, Ossahaw, St. Catherine, Sapelo, St. Simon, Jekyll, Cumberland, and Amelia. In 1810 the number of inhabitants was 252,433. The capital is Louisville.

Georgia, or South Georgia, an island in the Pacific ocean, 64 m long and 30 in its greatest breadth, visited by Cook in 1775. It seems to abound with bays and harbours, which the vast quantities of ice render inaccessible the greatest part of the year. Two rocky islands are situate at the N end; one of which, from the discoverer, was named Willis Island: the other received the name of Bird Island, from the innumerable flocks of birds that were seen near it. Here are perpendicular ice cliffs, of considerable height, like those at Spitzbergen; from which pieces were continually breaking off and floating out to sea. The valleys were covered with snow; and the only vegetation observed was bladed grass, wild burnet, and a plant like moss, which sprung from the rocks. Not a stream of fresh water was to be seen on the whole coast. A promontory at its SE end was named Queen Charlotte Cape. Lon. 36 11 W, lat. 54 32 S.

Georgia, Gulf of, a gulf of the N Pacific ocean, between the continent of N America and Quadra and Vancouver island; about 120 m long and from 6 to 20 broad. It contains several clusters of islands, and branches off into a great number of canals, most of which were examined by Vancouver and his officers.

Georgiewsk, a town of Russia, capital of the government of Caucasia. It has a fortress on an eminence, steep on two sides, and is impregnable against any attack of the mountaineers. The town is built in a regular manner, but the houses in general are only of slight boarding. It stands on the left bank of the Podkuma, 160 m NNW Teflis, and 280 SE Asoph. Lon. 43 50 E, lat. 44 15 N.

Gera, a town of Upper Saxony, in Voigtland. It has a castle, called Osterstein, about a mile from the town, on a mountain in a wood. Here is a considerable manufacture of fine stuffs; and its great trade and handsome houses have procured it the name of Little Leipzig. It is seated on the Elster, 32 m SSW Leipzig. Lon. 12 7 E, lat. 50 55 N.

Gerau, a town of Germany, in Hesse-Darmstadt, 10 m NNW Darmstadt.

Gerberoy, a town of France, in the department of Oise, 12 m NW Beauvois.

Gerbeviller, a town of France, in the department of Meurte, seated on the Agen, 5 m S Luneville.

Gerbi, an island in the Mediterranean, on the coast of Tripoli. It bears much barley; and has large quantities of figs, olives, and grapes, which, when dried, form the principal trade. Lon. 11 20 E, lat. 33 56 N.

Gerbstad, a town of Upper Saxony, in the county of Mansfeld, 7 m NE Mansfeld.

Gerdaun, a town of Prussia, defended by two castles, and seated on the Omet, near a considerable lake, 50 m SE Konigberg.

Germain, St. a borough in Cornwall, governed by a mayor, with a market on Friday. It was once the largest town in the county, and a bishop's see, but now consists chiefly of fishermen's cottages. What remains of the cath-

Germain, St. a town of France, in the department of Seine and Oise, with a magnificent palace, in which Lewis XIV was born. Here James II of England found an asylum, when he fled to France. It is seated on the Seine, near a fine forest, 10 m NW Paris.

Germain, St. a town of France, in the department of Loire, celebrated for its excellent wine, 18 m S Roanne.

Germano, St. a town of Piedmont, on the river Naviglio, 9 m W Vercelli.

Germano, St. a town of Naples, in Terra di Lavoro, at the foot of Monte Cassino, 17 m SSE Sora.

Germanatown, a town of Pennsylvania, in Philadelphia county. Stockings of cotton, thread, and worsted, are manufactured here to a great extent. In 1777, here was a battle between the British and the Americans, in which the latter retreated, but the former suffered severely. It is 7 m W Philadelphia.

Germanatown, a town of N Carolina, chief of Stokes county. It is situated near a branch of the Dan, 70 m W by N Hillsborough, and 85 N by W Raleigh.

Germanatown, New, a town of New Jersey, in Hunterdon county, 28 m NW Brunswick.

Germany, a country of Europe, 600 m long and 500 broad, bounded on the E by Hungary and Poland, N by the Baltic sea and Denmark, W by the Netherlands and France, and S by Switzerland and Italy. All parts do not enjoy the same mildness of temperature, nor the same fertility of soil; but in general the air is wholesome, and it produces abundance of all kinds of grain. The surface is tolerably level, but it contains some mountains and large forests; the white mulberry-tree is very common, olives grow in several places, and chestnuts, oaks, beeches, firs, and fruit-trees. Hemp, flax, hops, anise, cummin, tobacco, madder, woad, saffron, &c. are cultivated; and the wines of this country are in high esteem. Salt-springs are very numerous, also medicinal springs and baths, both hot and cold. The chief rivers are the Danube, Rhine, Elbe, Weser, Maine, and Oder. Germany contains a great many sovereign princes, who are independent of each other; and lately there was a number of imperial towns, which were so many little republics; but the whole of them formed a great confederacy, governed by political laws, at the head of which was an emperor, whose power in the collective body, or diet, was not directive, but executive. The western Roman empire which had terminated in the year 475, in the person of Augustulus, the last Roman emperor, and which was succeeded by the reign of the Huns, the Ostrogoths, and the Lombards, was revived by Charlemagne, king of France, on Christmas day, in the year 800. This prince being then at Rome, pope Leo III crowned him emperor, in St. Peter's church; and Nicephorus, who was then emperor of the east, consented to this coronation. After the death of Charlemagne, and of Louis le Debonnaire, his son and successor, the empire was divided between the four sons of the latter. Lothario, the first, was emperor; Pepin was king of Aquitaine; Lewis, king of Germany; and Charles le Chauve, king of France. This partition was the source of incessant feuds. The French kept the empire under eight emperors, till the year 912, when Lewis III, the last prince of the line of Charlemagne, died without issue male. Conrad, count of Franconia, the son-in-law of Lewis, was then elected emperor. Thus the empire went to the Germans, and became elective; for it had been hereditary under the French emperors. The emperor was chosen by the princes, the lords, and the deputies of cities, till the year 1239, when the number of the electors was reduced to seven; one more was added in 1649, and another in 1692: these nine electors continued to the year 1798, when, in consequence of the alterations made in the constitution of the empire, under the influence of France and Russia, they became ten in number; namely, the elector and archbishop of Ratisbon, the elector and king of Bohemia (the then emperor) the elector of Bavaria, the elector of Saxony, the elector of Brandenburg (king of Prussia) the elector of Hanover (king of England) the elector of Wurtzburg (late grand duke of Tuscany) the elector of Wirtemberg, the elector of Baden, and the elector of Hesse. Rodolphus, count of Hapsburg, was elected emperor in 1273. He is the head of the house of Austria, which is descended from the same stock as the house of Lorraine, united to it in the person of Francis I, father of the two late emperors, Joseph and Leopold. On the death of Charles VI of Austria, in 1740, an emperor was chosen from the house of Bavaria, by the name of Charles VII. On the death of this prince, in 1745, the abovementioned

Francis, grand duke of Tuscany, was elected emperor; whose grandson, Francis II, enjoyed the dignity of emperor of Germany till 1806, when he formally resigned that title and office, and styled himself emperor of Austria. At the close of the Saxon race, in 1024, the prerogatives of the emperor of Germany were very considerable; but, in 1437, they were reduced to the right of conferring all dignities and titles, except the privilege of being a state of the empire; of granting dispensations with respect to the age of majority; of erecting cities, and conferring the privilege of coining money; of calling the meetings of the diet, and presiding in them. But, after all, there was not a foot of land annexed to this title; for, ever since the reign of Charles IV, the emperors depended entirely on their hereditary dominions, as the only source of their power, and even of their subsistence. To prevent the calamities of a contested election, a king of the Romans was often chosen in the lifetime of the emperor, on whose death he succeeded to the imperial dignity of course. The emperor (always elected and crowned at Frankfurt on the Maine) assumed the title of august, and pretended to be successor to the emperors of Rome. Although he was chief of the empire, the supreme authority resided in the diet, which was composed of three colleges; the college of electors, the college of princes, and the college of imperial towns. The diet had the power of making peace or war, or settling general impositions, and of regulating all the important affairs of the empire; but the decisions had not the force of law till the emperor gave his consent. When a war was determined on, every prince contributed his quota of men and money, as valued in the matriculation roll; though as an elector or prince he might espouse a different side from that of the diet. All the sovereigns of Germany had an absolute authority in their own dominions, and could lay taxes, levy troops, and make alliances, provided they did not prejudice the empire. They determined all civil causes definitively, unless in some particular cases, in which an appeal might be made. These appeals were to two courts, called the Imperial Chamber, at Wetzlar, and the Aulic Council, at Vienna. Germany is divided into nine circles, namely, Austria, Bavaria, Suabia, Franconia, Upper and Lower Rhine, Westphalia, and Upper and Lower Saxony: each of these includes several other states; and Bohe-mla, Moravia, Lufata, and Silefia are not comprifed in the circles. Germany lately contained fix archbifhoprics and 38 bifhoprics; but this hierarchy was thrown into confufion by the fecularizations in 1798, and is not yet reftored to order: the archbifhop of Ratisbon is primate and metropolitan of all Germany; the fee of Mentz having been moved to Ratisbon. Many other transfers and exchanges of territories have fince taken place, from the difaftrous confequences of the war with France; the kings of England and Pruffia have been deprived of all their territories in this country, and new kings and princes have been created by Bonaparte, which makes this country, at prefent, a labyrinth of geography; but the following transfer muft here be noticed as the principal. In 1801, thofe parts of the circles of Upper and Lower Rhine, and Weftphalia, lying on the left bank of the Rhine, were ceded to France, by the treaty of Luneville; and are now annexed to that country, forming the departments of Mont Tonnerre, Sarre, Rhine and Mofelle, and Roer. The remainder of Germany, in 1806, ceafed to be united as an empire; for a treaty, ftyled the Confederation of the Rhine, was figned at Paris in July, by France on one part, and by Bavaria, Wirtemberg, Baden, &c. on the other, in which the latter renounced their connection with the empire; and, in confequence, Francis II, in Auguft, publifhed at Vienna his refignation of the office of emperor of Germany, which diffolved the ancient conftitution. In 1812, the French again entered this country under Bonaparte, who required the confederates to raife their war quotas; and he then proceeded, with an army of 300,000 men, on an invasion of Ruffia. Of this mighty hoft, not more than 50,000 returned, and in a miferable ftate, which their chief foon after abandoned, and fled in difguife to France. In 1813, the Ruffians and Swedes entered Germany, and were foon joined by Pruffia: thefe allies were oppofed by Bonaparte and fome German adherents, but with little fuccefs. An armiftice was agreed upon, and terms of peace offered to the French chief, which being rejected by him, Austria (who had remained neuter) declared in favour of the allies. The battles of Lelpzic and Hanau enfued, from both of which Bonaparte fled: he was followed by the fovereigns of Ruffia, Austria, and Pruffia, who with their armies croffed the Rhine into France, the beginning of December, and there continued a prosperous warfare. The language of Germany is a dialect of the Teutonic, which fucceeded that called the Celtic. The three principal religions are, the Roman catholic, the Lutheran, and the Calvinift; but Chriftians of all denominations are tolerated, and there are a multitude of Jews in all the great towns. Vienna is the principal city.

Gezira, a town of Asiatic Turkey, capital of a pachalic, in Diarbek. The whole province of Diarbek is also called Al Gezira. It stands on an island formed by the Tigris, 70 m NW Mosul. Lon. 40 50 E, lat. 36 36 N.

Gezula, a province of Morocco, which is very fertile, and contains mines of iron and copper. The inhabitants are numerous, and considered as the most ancient people of Africa: they live in tents, and are so independent that they are rather the allies than the subjects of the emperor of Morocco.

Ghana, or Cano, a city of Negroland, capital of a country of the same name, governed by a sultan. It stands on the S side of a large lake, at its outlet, which separates the city into two parts, and soon after joins the river Niger, which is here called Neel il Aheed, or Nile of the Negros. It is 130 m E by S Cassina. Lon. 13 25 E, lat. 16 15 N.

Ghanara, a city of Negroland, capital of the country of Wangara. The articles of trade are gold, senna, and slaves. It stands on a branch of the Niger, 280 m SE Cassina. Lon. 15 40 E, lat. 13 40 N.

Ghent, or Gaud, a city of the Netherlands, lately the capital of Austrian Flanders, now the capital of the department of Scheldt, and a bishop's see. It contains 58,000 inhabitants; but is not populous in proportion to its extent. The city is cut by many canals, which divide it into 26 isles, and over the canals are 300 bridges. It has also two navigable canals; the one to Sas van Ghent, the other to Bruges and Ostend. Here are several linen and woollen manufactures, and it has a great trade in corn. The cathedral of St. Bavon, and the abbey of St. Peter, are magnificent edifices; in which, as also in the churches, are some capital paintings. Charles V was born here; but the inhabitants have no reason to respect his memory; for he repeatedly loaded them with heavy exactions, and built a citadel to awe them. Here, in 1576, was concluded the famous treaty, called the Pacification of Ghent, the first commencement of the separation of seven provinces from the seventeen which then formed the Netherlands. Ghent has been often taken; the last time by the French, in 1794. It is seated on the Scheldt, at the influx of the IIs, Lieve, and Moeze, 26 m NW Brussels. Lon. 3 44 E, lat. 51 3 N.

Ghergong, a city and the capital of the kingdom of Assam. It is fenced with bamboos, and has four gates constructed of stone and earth. The raja, or king, has a splendid palace, surrounded by a ditch full of water. It is seated on the Degoo, near its conflux with the Burrampooter, 400 m NE Calcutta. Lon. 93 36 E, lat. 26 25 N.

Gheriah, a seaport of Hindoostan, on the coast of Concan. It was the capital of Angria, a famous piratical prince, whose fort here was taken, and his whole fleet destroyed, in 1756, by the English and Mahrattas. It is 165 m S by E Bombay. Lon. 73 8 E, lat. 16 45 N.

Ghiddore, a town of Hindoostan, in Bengal, on the confines of Bahar, 84 m SE Patna.

Ghilan, a province of Persia, bounded on the E by the Caspian sea and Mazanderan, S by Irak, W and N by Aderbijan. On the W side are high mountains, which are covered with many sorts of trees, and vines that grow wild. It produces abundance of fruit, oil, wine, rice, tobacco, and excellent silk. This province was ceded to Russia, in 1724, but not possessed by Russia till 1780, and was restored in 1797. Resht is the capital.

Ghilan, St. a town of France, in the department of Nord, seated on the Haina, 5 m W Mons.

Ghizni, or Gazna, a town of the country of Cabul, once the capital of a powerful empire of the same name. It is called the second Medina, from the great number of illustrious persons who have been interred here. It is 54 m S Cabul. Lon. 68 20 E, lat. 38 40 N.

Chourbond, a town of the country of Cabul, 42 m NW Cabul.

Gjat, or Ghat, a town of Russia, in the government of Moscow, with numerous churches, and manufactures of linen cloth. On September 1, 1812, it was entered by the French, who found the magazines and bridges burnt. It is situate on a river of the same name, which is navigable to the Wolga, 96 m w by s Moscow.

Gibello, a town of Italy, in Parmesan, on the river Po, 16 m NW Parma.

Gibraleon, a town of Spain, in Andalusia, with a harbour for small craft, on the river Odiel, 53 m W Seville.

Gibraltar, a town of Spain, in Andalusia, near a mountain of the same name, formerly called Calpe, which, with Abyla, on the opposite shore of Africa, were called the Pillars of Hercules. Tarick, a general of the Moors, built a fortress here, which he called Gibel-Tarick, that is, Mount Tarick. Since that time a town has been built at the foot of this rock, which is strongly fortified. It can be approached only by a narrow passage between the mountain and the sea, across which the Spaniards have drawn a line, and fortified it, to prevent the garrison from having any communication with the country. The rock abounds in partridges; and on the east side, amid the broken precipices, is a stratum of bones, belonging to various animals, encased in a reddish calcareous stone. Gibraltar was taken from the Moors in 1462; and in 1704 it fell into the hands of the English. The Spaniards attempted to retake it the following year; and they besieged it again, in 1727, with as little success. It sustained a siege from July 1779 to February 1783, when the siege was finally raised, on advice being received that the preliminaries of peace were signed; but it may be considered as terminated in September 1782, on the failure of a grand attack made by the Spaniards, whose floating batteries were destroyed by red-hot shot, from the garrison. The number and strength of the military works, and the vast galleries opened in the calcareous rock, excite admiration; and the fortrefs, in the opinion of most engineers, is absolutely impregnable. The garrison here is cooped up in a very narrow compass, and in a war with Spain has no provisions, but what are brought from Barbary and England. The strait of Gibraltar is 24 m long and 15 broad, and a strong upper current always runs through it from the Atlantic into the Mediterranean. Gibraltar is 60 m SE Cadiz. Lon. 5° 21' W, lat. 36° 8' N.

GIL

Gibraltar, a town of Terra Firma, in Venezuela, defended by some fortifications. The air is unhealthy in the rainy season, that the merchants and planters generally retire at that time to Maracaybo. The environs produce the best cocoa in the province, and an excellent kind of tobacco. It stands on the SE coast of the lake Maracaybo, 120 m SE Maracaybo. Lon. 70° 45' W, lat. 8° 45' N.

Gien, a town of France, in the department of Loiret, seated on the Loire, 34 m SE Orleans.

Giengen, a town of Suabia, on the river Brentz, 18 m NE Ulm.

Giennar, a town of Barbary, in Tripoli, 10 m S Tripoli.

Gierace, a town of Naples, in Calabria Ultra, seated on a mountain, near the sea, 32 m ENE Reggio.

Gießen, a fortified town of Germany, in Upper Hesse, with a citadel and a university. It belongs to the house of Darmstadt, and is the seat of its regency for Upper Hesse. In 1759 it was taken by the French, and it surrendered to them in 1796, but was soon after taken by the Austrians. It is seated on the Lahn, 16 m WSW Marburg. Lon. 8° 43' E, lat. 50° 35' N.

Giga, a small island, one of the Hebrides, lying on the W coast of the peninsula of Cantyre, and included in Argyleshire. The inhabitants export corn, meal, and kelp.

Ternate and Tidore share this island between them. The natives are industrious, particularly in weaving. One of the chief towns is Tatany, on a small promontory of the eastern limb, and only accessible by ladders. Lon. 129° 0' E, lat. 0° 24' N.

Gimont, a town of France, in the department of Gers, 12 m E Auch.

Gingee, a town of Hindoostan, in the Carnatic, strong both by nature and art, being seated on a mountain, whose top is divided into three points, on each of which is a castle. In 1750, it was taken by the French. It is 38 m SW Pondicherry. Lon. 79° 35' E, lat. 12° 15' N.

Gingira, an interior kingdom of Africa, situate to the S of Abyssinia, and w Machidas.

Giargiev, a town of European Turkey, in Walachia, near which the Russians gained a great victory over the Turks in 1771. It is seated on the Danube, 46 m SW Bucharest.

Giovenazzo, a town of Naples, in Terra di Bari, with a castle. It has high houses and towers, built of polished stone, with flat roofs, which give it a singular appearance. It is seated near the sea, 10 m SW Bari.

Gireh, a town of Persia, in Kerman, with a trade in wheat and dates, 100 m S by N Gombron.

Girge, a town of Egypt, the capital of Said, and residence of the bey of Upper Egypt. It is about 3 m in circumference, and contains several mosques, bazars, and squares, but no marble buildings, or remains of ancient structures. It stands near the left bank of the Nile, 130 m NNW Eina, and 240 m Cairo. Lon. 31° 52' E, lat. 26° 30' N.

Girgenti, a seaport of Sicily, in Val di Mazara, and a bishop's see, with a castle. It is part of the ancient Agrigentum, and in the vicinity are numerous remains of temples, &c. The cathedral is a magnificent pile, and there are 15 convents, and an ecclesiastical seminary. The harbour, at the mouth of the river St. Blaise, is formed by a fine mole, constructed in 1752, and was capable of receiving large vessels; but from negligence there is now only 12 feet of water on the bar. The chief exports are corn and sulphur; but its trade and population is greatly decreased. It stands on a hill, near the river, 62 m S Palermo. Lon. 13° 42' E, lat. 37° 20' N.

Gironde, a river of France, formed by the union of the Garonne and Dordogne, 12 m N of Bordeaux, which runs into the bay of Biscay after a NNW course of about 45 m. At its mouth is a famous tower and lighthouse, called Cordouan, situate on a rock in the sea, 60 m NNW Bourdeaux. Lon. 19° W, lat. 45° 36' N.

Gironde, a department of France, which includes part of the late province of Guienne. It lies on both sides of the Garonne, and has its name from the lower part of that river, which is called the Gironde. Bourdeaux is the capital.

Gironne, St. a town of France, in the department of Ariège, on the Salat, 4 m S by E St. Lizier.

Girvan, a town of Scotland, in Ayrshire, at the mouth of the river Girvan, which forms a tolerable harbour. The inhabitants are chiefly weavers of cotton and woollen cloths. It is 16 m S by W Ayr.

Gisborough, a town in N Yorkshire, with a market on Monday. It is celebrated for being the first place where alum was made, as it was formerly for its fine abbey. It is 22 m WSW Whithby, and 247 N by W London.

Gisors, a town of France, in the department of Eure, seated on the Ept, 28 m SE Rouen.

Gitzchin, a town of Bohemia, which suffered greatly during the long war of the Swedes in Germany. It is 22 m SW Koninggratz.

Givet, a fortified town of France, in the department of Ardennes, divided by the Meuse into two parts, Givet Saint Hilaire and Givet Notre Dame, the former situate at the foot of a mountain close by Charlemont, and the other on the opposite side of the river. It is 20 m NE Rocroy.

Giula, a strong town of Upper Hungary, on the frontiers of Transylvania and the river Kereblan, 30 m SW Great Waradin. Lon. 25° 40' E, lat. 46° 40' N.

Giula Nuova, a town of Naples, in Abruzzo Ultra, near the gulf of Venice, 13 m N Atri.

Giuliana, a town of Sicily, in Val di Mazara, on a craggy rock, 12 m NNE Xacca.

French by the British in 1801. It stands on the left bank of the Nile, nearly opposite Cairo.

Gladbach, a town of France, in the department of Roer, lately of Germany, in the duchy of Juliers, with a Benedictine abbey. It has manufactures of fine strong linen, and is seated on the Ner, 16 m N Juliers.

Gladenbach, a town of Germany, in Upper Hesse, 12 m N Gießen.

Glamis, a town of Scotland, in Forfarshire, with manufactures of yarn and linen cloth. Near it, on the bank of the Dean, is Glamis-castle, a large edifice, in which Malcolm 11 was murdered. It is 4 m SW Forfar.

Glamorganshire, a county of Wales, bounded on the N by Carmarthenshire and Brecknockshire, E by Monmouthshire, and S and W by the Bristol channel. It is 48 m long and 26 broad, containing 526,080 acres; is divided into 10 hundreds, and 125 parishes; has one city and five market-towns; and sends two members to parliament. The number of inhabitants was 71,525 in 1801, and 85,067 in 1811. On the N side it is mountainous; but on the S it bears large crops of corn, and very sweet grass. Cattle abound in all parts, there being valleys among the mountains that yield good pasture. The other commodities are lead, coal, iron, and limestone. The principal rivers are the Rumney, Taff, Elwy, Neath, and Tawy. Cardiff is the county-town, and Swansea the largest; but the assizes are held at Cowbridge.

Glandelagh, a village of Ireland, in the county of Wexford, on the river Oveca, 11 m W Wexford. It was formerly a city, and is now celebrated for its Seven Churches and other monastic remains.

Glanfordbridge, or Brig, a town in Lincolnshire, with a market on Thurlfay, and a good trade in corn, coal, and timber. It is seated on the Ancholm, which is navigable for sloops to the Humber, 23 m N Lincoln, and 156 N by W London.

Glanworth, a town of Ireland, in the county of Cork, on the river Funcheon, 23 m N by E Cork.

Glaris, or Glarus, a canton of Switzerland, bounded on the N by the river Linth, E by the canton of Grisons, and S by the same and the cantons of Uri and Schweitz. It is a mountainous country; and the chief trade is in cattle, cheese, and butter. The inhabitants, estimated at 20,000, are partly protestants and partly catholics; and both sects live together in the greatest harmony. Glarus is surrounded by the Alps, except toward the N; and there is no other entrance but through this opening, which lies between the lake of Wallenfadt, and the mountains separating this canton from that of Schweitz.

Glaris, a town of Switzerland, capital of a canton of the same name. It has manufactures of cloth, and a trade in cattle, horses, cheese, flates, and wooden ware. In 1799, the Russians under marshal Suwarrow advanced as far as this place, and defeated the French; but, in consequence of general Hotze's defeat near Zurich, retired into the Grisons. Glaris is surrounded by mountains, and seated on the river Linth, 32 m SE Zurich. Lon. 9 7 E, lat. 46 55 N.

Glasgow, a city of Scotland, in Lanerksire, seated on the S side of the Clyde, over which are two bridges. From its extent, and the beauty and regularity of its buildings, it is deemed the second city in Scotland. The four principal streets, which intersect each other at right angles, divide the city nearly into four equal parts. Glasgow was once an archiepiscopal see. The cathedral, or high church, is a magnificent gothic structure, and divided into two places of worship. There are six other churches, three chapels of ease, and many places of worship for different denominations. Here is a celebrated university, founded in 1450, the single college belonging to which is an elegant building; the library contains a large and valuable collection of books; the observatory is fitted up with the most improved instruments; and in the garden is an elegant building that contains the important collection of books, manuscripts, medals, coins, and anatomical preparations, bequeathed by the late Dr. Wm. Hunter. The academical institution is a handsome edifice, where a regular course of instruction is given to those who do not intend to enter any university. The townhouse is an elegant building with a piazza in front; and opposite it is the exchange, a square building, with an equestrian statue of William III in the centre. The toll-booth, the guildhall, and the theatre, are also worthy of notice. There are several charitable establishments; particularly the Merchant's hospital and that of the town, and a royal infirmary. Glasgow has a considerable foreign trade; and its numerous manufactures, particularly of muslin, cotton, calico, coarse woollen cloth, porceland, glass, the refining of sugar, and the tanning of leather, are carried on to a great extent. The Clyde is navigable for vessels of eight feet water as far as the bridge; but larger vessels stop at Port Glasgow, or Greenock, to unload; it has also the advantage of two canals, beside the Great canal that joins the Clyde to the Forth. The number of inhabitants was 46,779 in 1801, and 58,334 in 1811, or with the suburbs 100,749. It is 43 m w by s Edinburg. Lon. 4 18 W, lat. 55 52 N.

Glastonbury, a town in Somersetshire, governed by a mayor, with a market on Tuesday. It is seated near a high hill, called the Tor, and famous for an abbey, that occupied an area of 60 acres, of which some considerable ruins still remain; particularly the kitchen, which is of a very unusual contrivance. The George inn was formerly an hospital for the accommodation of pilgrims who came to the abbey, and to see the holy thorn, which, it was pretended, was planted by Joseph of Arimathea, and blossomed on Christmas eve. It was also pretended, that the body of Joseph, of king Arthur, and of Edward the confessor, were buried here. The last abbot of this place was hanged on the top of the Tor, by order of Henry VIII, for not acknowledging his supremacy; and on this hill is a tower, which serves as a seamark. Glastonbury has two churches, and a manufacture of worsted stockings. It is seated on the river Brue, 6 m sw Wells, and 124 w by s London.

Glastonbury, a town of Connecticut, in Hartford county, on the E side of Connecticut river, 9 m s by E Hartford.

Glatz, a sovereign county of Germany, lying between Silesia, Bohemia, and Moravia, surrounded by mountains. It is 40 m long and 25 broad, has mines of coal, copper, and iron, quarries of marble and stone, and springs of mineral waters. In 1742, it was ceded to the king of Prussia, by the queen of Hungary, and is now deemed a part of Silesia.

Glatz, a strong town of Silesia, capital of the county of Glatz, seated on the side of a hill, by the river Neisse. On the top of the hill is an ancient castle, and a new citadel. In 1742 the Prussians took the town by capitulation; and in 1760, the Austrians took it by storm, but restored it in 1763. It is 48 m sse Breslau, and 82 ene Prague. Lon. 16 32 E, lat. 50 18 N.

Glauchau, a town of Upper Saxony, in Misnia, with considerable manufactures of stuffs; seated on the Muldau, 9 m N Zwickau.

Gleiwitz, a town of Silesia, noted for the culture of hops and the weaving of cloth, 34 m se Oppelen.

Glenarm, a town of Ireland, in the county of Antrim, with a castle; seated near a bay of its name, 20 m NNW Carrickfergus.

Glencaple, a town of Scotland, in Dumfriesshire, where much business is transacted in the coasting trade. It is seated on the Nith, near its mouth, 5 m s Dumfries.

Glencuce, a town of Scotland, in Wigtonshire, with a harbour for small vessels. Near it is the ruin of an abbey. It is seated on the river Luce, near its entrance into Luce bay, 16 m w Wigton.

Glogau, a town of Silesia, capital of a principality of the same name, which is very fertile, and produces wine. The town is well fortified, and formerly stood close by the Oder, which has since changed its course, and now flows about a mile from it. Beside the papists, there is a great number of protestants and Jews. It was taken by the king of Prussia in 1741. After the peace in 1742, that king settled the supreme court of justice here; it being, next to Breslau, the most populous place in Silesia. It is 50 m NW Breslau. Lon. 16 14 E, lat. 51 38 N.

Glogau, Little, a town of Silesia, with a collegiate church and minorite convent, 23 m s Oppelen.

Glomme, a river of Norway, in the province of Aggerhuys, which flows into the North sea, at Fredericstadr. It receives the river Worme, which issues from the lake Mios, and is not navigable in any part of its course from this lake to Fredericstadr, the stream being intercepted by such frequent cataracts and shoals, as in some places to render it necessary to drag the trees, which are floated down, over the ground. At least 50,000 trees are annually floated by this river to Fredericstadr.

Gloucester, a city and the capital of Gloucestershire, with a market on Wednesday and Saturday. It is a county of itself, governed by a mayor, and seated on the E side of the Severn, where, by two streams, it makes the isle of Alney. It was fortified with a wall, which Charles II, after the restoration, ordered to be demolished. The four principal streets have their junction in the centre of the town. It once contained 11 churches, but now has only five, beside the cathedral, in which are a large cloister, a whispering gallery, and the tombs of Robert duke of Normandy and Edward II. It has five hospitals, two free-schools, and a county gaol. The number of inhabitants was 7579 in 1801, and 8280 in 1811. Great quantities of pins are made here; and there are 12 incorporated trading companies. Ships come up by the Severn to the bridge; but the navigation being circuitous and difficult, a canal is made hence to Berkeley, at the head of which is a basin fit for the reception of 100 vessels. The city and neighbourhood contains many remains of abbeys; and those of Lantony abbey, in the s suburb, are converted into outhouses belonging to adjacent farms. Gloucester is 24 m NE Bristol, and 104 w by N London. Lon. 2 16 w, lat. 51 50 N.

Gloucester, a seaport of Massachusetts, in Essex county, and on the peninsula of Cape Ann, which forms the N side of Massachusetts bay. The harbour is accessible for large ships, and defended by a battery and citadel. It is one of the most considerable fishing-towns in the United States, and 15 m NE Salem. Lon. 70 40 w, lat. 42 36 N.

Gloucester, a town of Virginia, chief of a fertile county of the same name. It stands on a point of land on the N side of the mouth of York river, 17 m NE York-town, and 70 E by S Richmond.

Gloucester, a town of New Jersey, in the county of the same name, of which it was formerly the capital. It stands on the river Delaware, 5 m S Philadelphia.

Gloucester, New, a town of the district of Maine, in Cumberland county, 27 m N Portland.

Gloucestershire, a county of England, bounded on the w by Herefordshire and Monmouthshire, N by Worcester-shire, E by Warwickshire and Oxfordshire, and S by Wiltshire and Somersetshire. It is 60 m long and 26 broad, containing 718,080 acres; is divided into 28 hundreds, and 338 parishes; has two cities and 25 market-towns; and sends 10 members to parliament. The number of inhabitants was 250,809 in 1801, and 285,514 in 1811. The air is sharp in the E, or hilly part, called the Cotswold; but very mild in the rich vale that occupies the centre, through which the river Severn flows. The w part, which is the smallest district, is varied by hill and dale, and is chiefly occupied by the forest of Dean. The staple commodities of the county are its wools, and cheese. The principal rivers are the Severn, Warwickshire Avon,

Lower Avon, Wye, Thames, Coln, and Lech.

Glouk, a town of Lithuania, in the palatinate of Novogrodeck, situate on the Pezyca, 44 m ESE Slouk.

Gluckstadt, a seaport of Lower Saxony, capital of the duchy of Holstein, with a strong castle. It has a considerable foreign trade, the principal branch of which is the whale fishery. In 1813 the fortress, after six days heavy bombardment, surrendered to a British and Swedish force. It is seated on the estuary of the Elbe, 28 m NW Hamburg. Lon. 9 28 E, lat. 53 51 N.

Glurens, a town of Germany, in the county of Tyrol, on the river Adige, 24 m W by N Meran.

Gnesen, or Gnesia, the capital of Great Poland, and an archbishop's see, whose prelate was primate of Poland. The cathedral contains a vast treasure of costly vessels and vestments; and its gates, of Corinthian brass curiously wrought, belonged formerly to a Greek monastery in Taurica Chersonesus. It was the first town built in the kingdom, and formerly more considerable than at present. It is 90 m N by E Breslau, and 125 w by N Warsaw. Lon. 17 40 E, lat. 52 28 N.

Goa, a city of Hindoostan, in the Concan, and the capital of the Portuguese settlements in India. It stands on the N side of an island, 22 m long and 6 broad, formed by the river Mandova, which is capable of receiving the largest ships. The viceroy's palace is a noble building, at a small distance from the river. Here are a great number of handsome churches and convents, and a stately hospital. The houses are large, and make a fine appearance, but are poorly furnished. The market-place takes up an acre of ground; and in the shops about it may be had the produce of Europe, China, Bengal, and other countries. The inhabitants are contented with greens, fruits, and roots, which, with a little bread, rice, and fish, is their principal diet, though they have hogs and fowls in plenty. Their religion is the Roman catholic, and the clergy are numerous and illiterate. Only one of the churches has glass windows; for they make use of clear oyster-shells instead of glass, and all their fine houses have the same. Goa has few manufactures or productions, the best trade being in arrack, which is distilled from the sap of the cocoa-nut tree. The harbour is defended by several forts and batteries. It is 250 m S by E Bombay. Lon. 73 45 E, lat. 15 31 N.

Goalpara, a town of Hindoostan, in Bengal, where the Europeans have factories, who carry on a great trade with Assam, Bootan, Tibet, &c. It stands on the left bank of the Burrumpooter, 38 m E Rangamatty.

Gear, St. a fortified town of France, in the department of Rhine and Moselle, lately of Germany, and the capital of the lower county of Catzenellenbogen. It is seated on the Rhine, under the stupendous rock and castle of Rheinfels, with which it surrendered to the French in 1794. It has a considerable trade in wines and hides, and is 17 m SE Coblentz.

Goarhausen, St. a town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Rhine, and lower county of Catzenellenbogen. On a mountain near it is a strong castle called Catze. It is seated on the Rhine, opposite Rheinfels, 10 m SW Nassau.

Goave, Grand, a seaport of St. Domingo, with a harbour capable of containing many ships. The environs contain plantations of sugar, coffee, indigo, and cotton. It is 10 m SSW Leogane.

Goave, Petit, a seaport of St. Domingo, with a good harbour defended by a castle. It is 20 m SW Leogane.

Gobin, St; see Fere.

Goch, a town of France, in the department of Roer, lately of Germany, in the duchy of Cleve; seated on the Niers, 8 m S Cleve.

Gochheim, or Gochsen, a town of Snaabia, in the duchy of Wirtemberg, 16 m S Heidelberg.

Gociano, a town of Sardinia, capital of a county of the same name, with a castle seated on the Thurso, 25 m E Algher.

Godalming, a town in Surry, with a market on Saturday, and manufactures of stockings, and coarse woollen cloths; seated on the Wey, where it divides into several streams, 4 m SW Guildford and 34 London.

Godavery, a river of Hindoostan, which has its sources in the Sukhien mountains, 70 m to the NE of Bombay. In the upper part of its course it is esteemed a sacred river by the Hindoos, who called it Gongga, a term for a river in general. After crossing Dowlatabad and Golconda, from W to E, it turns to the SE, and receiving the Bain about 90 m from the sea, divides into two principal channels at Rajamundry; and these subdividing again, form several tide harbours, for vessels of moderate burden, at its different mouths in the bay of Bengal. Its course is estimated to be above 700 m; and extensive forests of teak border on its banks, within the mountains.

Goderville, a town of France, in the department of Lower Seine, 9 m NE Montivilliers.

Goding, a town of Moravia, with a fine castle, seated on a branch of the Marche, 38 m SE Brunn.

Godmanchester, a corporate town in Huntingdonshire, parted from Huntingdon by the river Ouse. It is seated in a rich soil, which yields great plenty of corn. When James I came through it from Scotland, the inhabitants met him with 70 ploughs, drawn by as many teams of horses; for which novel sight he granted them a charter. Here is a school called the free grammar-school of queen Elisabeth. It is 59 m N by W London.

Godra, a town of Hindoostan, in Guzerat, 55 m E Amedabad. Lon. 73 40 E, lat. 22 50 N.

Godwin Sands, sandbanks off the E coast of Kent, in England, between the N and S Foreland. They run parallel with the coast for 10 m, at about 7 m distant, and add to the security of the capacious road, the Downs. These sands occupy the space that was formerly a large tract of ground belonging to Godwin earl of Kent, father of king Harold; and which being afterward given to the monastery of St. Augustin, at Canterbury, the abbot neglecting to keep in repair the wall that defended it from the sea, the whole tract was drowned in the year 1100, leaving these sands, upon which many ships have been wrecked.

Goes, or Ter Goes, a strong town of Holland, in Zealand, capital of the island of S Beveland. It has a considerable trade, particularly in salt and corn. The great church was burnt down in 1688, and another was built, which is a handsome structure. It communicates with the Scheldt by a canal, and is 20 m E Middleburg. Lon. 3 50 E, lat. 51 33 N.

Gogard, a town of Sweden, in E Gothland, 23 m NNW Linkioping.

Gogo, a town of Hindoostan, in Guzerat, with a good tide harbour, at the mouth of a river, in the gulf of Cambay, 100 m SSW Amedabad. Lon. 71 53 E, lat. 21 45 N.

Gogra, or Soorjew, a river that issues from Lake Lankee in Tibet, and forcing its way through Mount Himmaleh, pervades the province of Oude, in Hindoostan, where it takes a SE direction, and joins the Ganges, above Chuprah, in the province of Bahar.

Gohud, a town of Hindoostan, capital of a circar of the same name, in the province of Agra, 63 m SSE Agra. Lon. 78 44 E, lat. 26 24 N.

Goito, a town of Italy, in Mantuan, on the river Mincio, between the lake of Mantua and that of Garda, 15 m NW Mantua.

Golconda, a country of the Deccan of Hindoostan, between the lower parts of the rivers Kistna and Godavery, and the principal part of Dowlatabad. It was formerly called Tellingana, or Tilling, and is subject to the nizam of the Deccan. Here are diamond mines, the most considerable in the world; also mines of salt, fine iron, plenty of vines, and curious calicos and chintzes. Hydrabad is the capital.

Golconda, a fortress of Hindoostan, in the country of the same name, 6 m WSW Hydrabad, and joined to that city by a wall of communication. It occupies the summit of a conical hill, and is deemed impregnable. When Aurungzebe conquered the kingdom of Golconda, in 1687, this fortress was taken possession of by treachery.

Gold Coast, a maritime country of Guinea, where the Europeans have several forts and settlements. It is about 220 m from W to E, between the rivers Ancobar and Volta; and includes several districts, in which are two or three towns or villages on the seashore. Seven of the districts are dignified with the title of kingdoms, though they contain but a small extent of land along the coast. The natives are generally very rich, as they carry on a great trade with the Europeans for gold; and many of them are employed in fishing, and cultivating rice, which grows in incredible quantities. This they exchange with others for maize, yams, potatoes, and palm oil. Most of the inhabitants go naked; and those who are best clothed have only some yards of stuff wrapped about their middle.

Goldberg, a town of Silesia, in the principality of Lignitz, with manufactures of woollen and linen; seated at the foot of a mountain, on the river Katzbach, 11 m SW Lignitz.

Golden Island, a small island at the entrance of the gulf of Darien, where the Scots attempted to make a settlement in 1698. Lon. 77 10 W, lat. 9 0 N.

Goldingen, a town of the duchy of Courland, with a castle, formerly the residence of the dukes. It is seated on the Windau, 56 m WNW Mittau. Lon. 22 21 E, lat. 56 48 N.

G O N

of Maine, in Hancock county, on an inlet of the sea, 47 m E Castine. Lon. 68 20 W, lat. 44 28 N.

Goletta, a fortress of Tunis, on a narrow channel between the lake of Tunis and the sea. In 1536, it was taken by Charles V when he attempted the siege of Tunis, and kept by the Spaniards till 1574, when it was taken from them by Selim II. It is 25 m N Tunis.

Golling, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Salzburg, 14 m SSE Salzburg.

Golnow, a town of Hither Pomerania, seated on the Ilna, 11 m NE Stettin.

Golo, a new department of France, including the N part of Corsica. It has its name from a river, which rises near the centre of the island, and runs into the sea, 12 m to the S of Bastia, the chief town.

Golpbington, a town of the state of Georgia, chief of Washington county. It is situated near the head of the Ogeechee, 37 m WSW Augusta, and 50 NNW Louisville.

Golub, a town of W Prussia, in the district of Culm, on the river Dribeuz, 13 m NE Thorn.

Gombron, or Gamboroon, a seaport of Persia, in Laristan, called by the natives Bender Abassi. The best houses are built of brick, flat at the top, with a square turret; but the common people have huts, made with the boughs of palm-trees, and covered with leaves. It was formerly much frequented by people of several nations. The adjacent soil is barren, but provisions brought from other countries are plentiful. It is fortified with double walls, and seated on a bay of the strait of Ormus, 180 m E by S Lar. Lon. 56 12 E, lat. 27 18 N.

Gomera, one of the Canary islands, between Ferro and Teneriff, 20 m long and 10 broad. Here is corn sufficient to support the inhabitants, a sugar work, and great plenty of wine and fruit. It has a town of the same name, with an excellent harbour, where the Spanish ships often take in refreshments. Lon. 17 8 W, lat. 28 6 N.

Gonave, an island in the W Indies, 34 m long and 3 broad, lying between the two peninsulas of St Domingo. At its SE corner, separated by a channel 3 m wide, is Little Gonave, an islet about 2 m each way. The E end of Gonave is 40 m WNW Port au Prince Lon. 72 40 W, lat. 18 44 N.

Gondar, the metropolis of Abyssinia, situate on a hill of considerable height. The palace of the neguz, or king, is at the W end, flanked with square towers. The houses are chiefly of clay; the roofs thatched in the form of cones. The inhabitants are estimated at 40,000. They have no shops; but carry on their trade in a large square, where they expose their merchandise upon mats. Gold and rock salt are the only money used: each bar of salt is a foot in length, and they break off as much as they agree for in the purchase of small wares. There are about 100 churches, and the patriarch depends on that of Alexandria. It is 180 m SE Sennar. Lon. 37 33 E, lat. 12 34 N.

Gonieh, a town of Asiatic Turkey, capital of Guriel, with a castle. It is surrounded by a wall, in which are two gates, and was formerly of some distinction, but is now a poor place, chiefly inhabited by seamen. It is situate on the right bank of a river, which flows into the Black sea, 90 m ENE Trebisond. Lon. 41 15 E, lat. 41 25 N.

Good Hope, Cape-of, the SW extremity of Africa, discovered by the Portuguese in 1439, and made a Dutch settlement in 1660. Here is a neat town called

Cape-town, rising in the midst of a desert, surrounded by black and dreary mountains. To the SE of the town are some vineyards, which yield the famous wine called Constantia. The store-houses of the Dutch E India Company are situate next the water, and the private buildings lie beyond them, on a gentle ascent toward the mountains. The Castle, or principal fort, which commands the road, is on the E side; and Amsterdam Fort is on the W side. The streets are broad and regular; and the houses, in general, are built of stone, and white-washed. Here are two churches; one for the Calvinists, the established religion, the other for the Lutherans. The slaves are lodged and boarded in a spacious house, where they are likewise kept at work: these slaves, a few Hottentots excepted, were all originally brought from the E Indies, and principally from Malacca. Another great building serves as a hospital for the sailors belonging to the Dutch E India ships which touch here: it is situate close to the Company's gardens, to which the convalescents have free access. The inhabitants, though stout and athletic, have not all that phlegm about them which is the characteristic of the Dutch in general. The ladies are lively, goodnatured, familiar, and gay. The heavy draught-work here is chiefly performed by oxen, which are brought to an uncommon degree of docility and usefulness. The inhabitants, in general, travel in a kind of covered wagons, drawn by oxen, which better suit the roughness of the country than more elegant vehicles; but some of the principal people keep coaches, which are drawn by horses. The mountains behind Cape-town are, the Table Mountain, the Sugar-loaf, the Lions Head, Charles Mount, and James Mount, or the Lions Rump. From these mountains descend several rivulets which flow into the different bays, as Table Bay, False Bay, &c. Among these mountains, along the valleys and rivulets, are a great number of plantations. This fine Dutch settlement (with its extensive colony) surrendered by capitulation to the British in 1795, was restored in 1802 by the treaty of Amiens, and again surrendered to the British in 1806. Cape-town stands on the W side of Table bay. Lon. 18 23 E, lat. 33 56 S. See Hottentots, Country of the.

Gotha, a town of Upper Saxony, capital of a duchy of the same name, in Thuringia. It is the residence of the duke of Saxe-Gotha, whose palace contains a fine library and a rich cabinet of coins. Near it is the ducal observatory of Seeberg, the most beautiful and useful in Germany. Gotha has a foundery for cannon, a porcelain manufacture, and a considerable trade in woollens, wood, and beer. It is seated on the Leine, 16 m w by s Erfurt. Lon. 10 48 E, lat. 50 51 N.

Gotha, a river of Sweden, which issues from the sw extremity of the lake Wenner, flows by Trohatta (where it forms a cataract) to Bahus, and there divides into two branches that enter the N part of the Categat, the principal one at Gotheburg.

Gothard, St. a celebrated mountain of Swisserland, in the canton of Uri. It is 9275 feet above the sea, and 22 m to the s of Aelforf. Though not the highest mountain, it is deemed the principal summit of the Helvetian Alps, for in its vicinity rise the rivers Tesino, Aar, Reufs, and Rhine, which flow hence in different directions.

Gotheburg, or Gothenborg, a city of Sweden, capital of W Gothland, and a bishop's see. It stands at the mouth of the Gotha, which forms the best harbour for foreign trade of any in the kingdom, as it lies on the Categat. Here is a considerable herring fishery; and a great trade in salt, iron, and fir-planks; and from this port the Swedish E India Company's ships take their departure. The inhabitants are computed at 25,000. The environs present a uniform scene of barren rocks, on the sides of which part of the suburbs are built; and in the city are several canals with rows of trees along their margin. In 1802 nearly a fourth part of the city was consumed by a fire. It is 180 m sw Orebro. Lon. 11 59 E, lat. 57 42 N.

Gothland, one of the five general divisions of Sweden; bounded on the N by Sweden Proper, E and s by the Baltic, and w by the Sound, the German ocean, and Norway. This country is inhabited by a nation, celebrated for their excursions and invasions of other countries, which had its origin from the Getæ, or Tartars of Crimea. The Goths had kings of their own till 1134, when they were united to Sweden. It includes nine provinces and the isles of Gothland and Oeland.

Gothland, an island of Sweden, in the Baltic, 70 m from N to s, and 25 in its greatest breadth. From its form and situation it has obtained the name of the Eye of the Baltic. The soil is fertile, and remarkable for an excellent breed of sheep. Here are fine woods of oak and pine, quarries of excellent stone, and very good limestone. Wisby is the capital.

Gothland, East, a province of Sweden, in the division of Gothland, between the Baltic on the E and Lake Wetter on the w, 80 m long and 70 broad. The soil produces abundance of all sorts of grain. It has fine orchards, pastures, lakes, and rivers, forests of oak and birch, and quarries of alum, stone, and marble. The chief town is Nordkoping.

Gothland, West, a province of Sweden, in the division of Gothland, between the lakes Wetter and Wenner, 130 m long and from 25 to 70 broad. The soil and produce are similar to E Gothland. The chief town is Gotheburg.

Gottseburg, a town of Silesia, where great quantities of worsted stockings are knit, 16 m sw Schweidnitz.

Göttingen, a city of Lower Saxony, in the duchy of Brunswick. Here George II of Great Britain founded a university, which has acquired a very distinguished reputation; and it contains one of the most capital libraries in Europe. There are also many other literary institutions, and a commandery of the Teutonic order. The woollen manufactures are the principal support of the inhabitants. It is seated on the Leine, 58 m s Hanover. Lon. 9 53 E, lat. 51 32 N.

Göttingen, New, a town of the state of Georgia, in Burke county, on the w bank of the Savanna, 18 m E Waynesborough.

Gottleube, a town of Upper Saxony, in Misnia, on a river of the same name, 18 m sse Dresden.

Gottorp, a town of Denmark, in the duchy of Sleswick, with an old palace, formerly the ducal residence. It is seated at the extremity of an arm of the sea, called the Sley, 2 m ws Sleswick, to which it is joined by a nw of trees.

Gottschee, a town of Germany, in Carniola, with a castle, 17 m ENE Fiume.

Gradiſca, a fortified town of Slavonia, on the frontiers of Croatia, seated on the Save, 20 m SW Pofega. Lon. 18 39 E, lat. 45 21 N.

Gradiſca, a strong town of Friuli, on the confines of Carinthia, capital of a county united with Goritz, and a bishop's see. It is seated on the Lifonzo, 6 m SW Goritz. Lon. 13 32 E, lat. 46 2 N.

Grado, a town of Italy, in a small island of the same name, on the coast of Friuli, 50 m E by N Venice. Lon. 13 10 E, lat. 45 46 N.

G R A

Grafton, a town of New Hampshire, in the county of its name, 16 m SE Hanover.

Grain Coast, a country of Guinea, extending along the Atlantic about 300 m between the Sierra Leone country on the W and the Ivory coast on the E. The productions are peas, beans, gourds, lemons, oranges, dates, and palm wine; but the chief article is the abundance of Guinea pepper, or grains of paradise, which draws a great interior and export trade. Cows, hogs, sheep, and goats are numerous. The Portuguese had formerly the whole commerce of this coast, but it has long been chiefly in the hands of the English and Dutch.

Graitney, or Gretna Green, a village of Scotland, in Dumfriesshire, near the head of the Solway frith, and the borders of Cumberland, 9 m NNW Carlisle. It was long famous for the resort of fugitive minors from England to get married; but this improper practice is now abolished.

Graitz, or Greiz, a town of Upper Saxony, in Voigtland, with a castle on a rocky mountain, and another in the town. It has manufactures of stuff, and is situate on the Elster, between mountains and woods, 10 m N Plauen.

Gramat, a town of France, in the department of Lot, 22 m NNE Cahors.

Grammont, a town of Flanders, seated on both sides of the Dender, 18 m NE Tournay.

Grampian Hills, a chain of hills in Scotland, which extends, in a NE direction, from the SE border of Argyleshire, through the counties of Dumbarton, Perth, Forfar, and Kincardine, to Aberdeen; and thence, in a NW direction, through the counties of Aberdeen, Banff, and Elgin, to the borders of Inverness. The Grampians vary in height from 1400 to 3500 feet, but Benlomon and several others are elevated still higher. They take their name from a single hill, the Mons Grampinus of Tacitus, where Galgacus waited the approach of Agricola, and where the battle was fought so fatal to the brave Caledonians.

Grampound, a borough in Cornwall, governed by a mayor, with a market on Saturday, and a manufacture of gloves; seated on the Fal, 40 m SW Launceston, and 244 W by S London.

Gran, a town of Lower Hungary, and an archbishop's see; seated near the conflux of the Gran with the Danube, 50 m ESE Presburg. Lon. 18 16 E, lat. 47 46 N.

Granada, a province (formerly a kingdom) of Spain, sometimes called Upper Andalusia. It is 175 m long and 75 broad; bounded on the w and s by Andalusia, n by Murcia and the Mediterranean, and s by the same sea. Though a mountainous country, the soil is good; but it has not been well cultivated since the Moors were expelled in 1492. However, it produces corn, wine, oil, sugar, flax, hemp, excellent fruit, honey, wax, and mulberry-trees, which feed a great number of silkworms. The forests produce gall-nuts, palm-trees, and oaks.

Granada, a city of Spain, capital of the province of Granada, and an archbishop's see. It is divided into four parts, and was formerly one of the finest cities in the world. In one part is the cathedral, containing the tombs of Ferdinand and Isabella, who took this place from the Moors in 1492. In another is a palace built by Charles V, and an ancient palace of the Moorish kings, called the Alhambra, which contains so many rooms that it is like a labyrinth. In the third is the university; the fourth has nothing considerable; but all the public buildings are magnificent; and the cathedral and convents contain excellent pictures by Spanish masters. The walls and gates, and the aqueducts, are mostly destroyed; and its trade is feebly carried on, without encouragement or protection. The inhabitants are not more than 80,000, and half of them are lawyers, ecclesiastics, and mendicants. It is seated on both sides of the Darro, at its conflux with the Xenil, 70 m sE Cordova. Lon. 3 38 W, lat. 37 8 N.

Granada, an island of the W Indies, the last of the Windward Caribees, and 30 leagues NW of Tobago. It is 20 m long and 13 broad, finely wooded, and the soil suited to produce sugar, tobacco, and indigo. It was taken from the French in 1762, confirmed to the English in 1763, taken by the French in 1779, and restored to the English in 1783. In 1795, the French landed some troops, and caused an insurrection, which was not quelled till 1796. St. George is the capital.

Granada, a city of New Spain, in the province of Nicaragua. It was taken twice by the French buccaneers, and pillaged. The inhabitants carry on a great trade by means of the lake Nicaragua, on which it is seated, 60 m sE Leon. Lon. 86 36 W, lat. 12 5 N.

Granada, New, an extensive country in S America, denominated by the Spaniards the new kingdom of Granada. It is bounded on the s by Peru, w by the Pacific ocean, n by Terra Firma, and e by a country that stretches along the banks of the Oronoko, and is little known. New Granada was conquered by the Spaniards in 1536. It is so far elevated above the level of the sea, that, though it approaches almost to the equator, the climate is remarkably temperate. The fertility of the valleys is not inferior to that of the richest districts in America; and the higher grounds yield gold and precious stones of various kinds. The towns are populous and flourishing; and the capital is St. Fé.

Granadillas, or Granadines, a chain of islands in the W Indies, dependent on Granada, and extending N from that island to St. Vincent. They are 23 in number, most of them fertile, and capable of producing cotton, coffee, indigo, and sugar. The most considerable is Carinacou.

Granard, a borough of Ireland, in the county of Longford, 16 m sNE Longford.

Granby, a small town of S Carolina, seated on the Congaree, on the contrary side to Columbia, about a mile below that city. It is noted for a curious bridge, whose centre arch is 100 feet wide, to give passage for large trees that are brought down by the floods.

Grandcourt, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Bern, near the lake of Neuchatel, 7 m sW Friburg.

Grandmont, a town of France, in the department of Upper Vienne. Near it was a celebrated abbey, suppressed in 1769, after the death of the then professed members. It is 15 m sNE Limoges.

Greenfield, a town of Massachusetts, in Hampshire county, on the w bank of the Connecticut, 22 m NNE Northampton, and 94 WNW Boston.

Greenland, an extensive region stretching toward the north pole, which, whether continental or insular, is regarded as belonging to N America. This country was discovered in the tenth century by the Norwegians, who planted a colony on the eastern coast; and the intercourse between this colony, Iceland, and Denmark was continued till the beginning of the fifteenth century. In that century, by the gradual increase of the arctic ice, the colony became completely imprisoned by the frozen ocean; while on the w a range of mountains and plains, covered with perpetual ice, precluded all access. This settlement contained several churches and monasteries, and is said to have extended about 200 m in the sE extremity. In more recent times the western coast was chiefly explored by Davis, and other English navigators; but there was no attempt to settle a colony. In 1721, a Norwegian clergyman, named Egede, proceeded to this dreary country, where he continued till 1735, preaching to the natives; and his benevolent example has been since followed by several missionaries. The country is said to be inhabited as far as 76 N lat. but the Danish and Moravian settlements are chiefly in the sw extremity. The short summer is very warm, but foggy; and the northern lights diversify the gloom of winter, which is very severe. From them we learn, that the NW coast of Greenland is separated from America by a narrow strait; that the natives of the two countries have some intercourse; and that the Esquimaux of America perfectly resemble the Greenlanders in their aspect, dress, mode of living, and language. The quadrupeds are deer, bears, foxes, hares, and some dogs resembling wolves. Cape Farewell, the sw point, is in lon. 42 42 w, lat. 59 38 N.

Greenlaw, a town of Scotland, capital of Berwickshire, though a small place. The number of inhabitants was 1270 in 1801, and 1260 in 1811. Here are the remains of two religions houses. It is seated on the Blackadder, 8 m sw Dunfermline, and 36 sE Edinburgh.

Greenock, a seaport of Scotland, in Renfrewshire, at the mouth of the Clyde, with a small fort for the defence of the harbour. Here are several dry docks, and the building and rigging of ships is much followed; but the manufactures are small, compared with the size of the town. It has a great trade; and the fisheries, particularly for herrings, and the Newfoundland fishery, are carried on to a great extent. The number of inhabitants was 17,458 in 1801, and 19,042 in 1811. It is 24 m w by N Glasgow. Lon. 4 45 w, lat. 55 57 N.

Greenwich, a town in Kent, with a market on Wednesday and Saturday. It is famous for an hospital for decayed seamen, thought to be the finest structure of the kind in the world; and for an observatory built by Charles II, on the summit of a hill, called Flamsteed Hill, from the great astronomer of that name, who was here the first astronomer royal; and the English compute the longitude from the meridian of this place. Here was once a royal palace, in which Edward VI died, and queen Mary and queen Elizabeth were born; it has been long pulled down, and on part of its site now stands the house belonging to the ranger of the park. Here is a college, called the Duke of Norfolk College, for the maintenance of 20 decayed housekeepers; and another called Queen Elizabeth College; also a royal naval asylum for 1000 children. In 1779, the chapel of the hospital, the dining-hall, and eight wards were destroyed by fire; but the whole was soon rebuilt. Greenwich in 1801 contained 14,339 inhabitants; and in 1811, including Deptford, which adjoins it on the W, the number was 36,780. It is seated on the Thames, 3 m ESE London. Lon. 0, lat. 51 29 N.

Grisons, a new canton of Switzerland, bounded on the s by Milan and Venice, e and n by Tyrol, and w by the cantons of Glaris, Uri, and Tessin. The Valteline, and the counties of Chiavenna and Bormio, lately subject to the Grisons, now constitute part of the kingdom of Italy. The country was formerly divided into three leagues, namely, the Grey League, the League of God's House, and the League of the Ten Jurisdictions; each of them had a distinct internal government, and they were connected as one republic by an annual diet held alternately at the towns of Coire, Hantz, and Davos. Bt in 1803, the constitution was changed by the French, and the country made an additional canton of Switzerland. The inhabitants, amounting to about 250,000, are partly Calvinists and partly catholics; but the former are most numerous. The principal subsistence of the peasantry is by breeding oxen, most of which are sent to Milan. The capital is Coire.

cala and the gulf of Mexico, E by Tabasco and Chiapa, S by Soconusco and the Pacific ocean, and W by Tlaxcala. It is mountainous, but fertile in maize, fruit, cochineal, and cassia; and contains mines of gold, silver, and crystal.

Guaxaca, or Antequera, a city of New Spain, capital of the province of Guaxaca, and a bishop's see. It exports excellent wood, perfumes, and chocolate; and has a noble cathedral and many rich convents. The inhabitants are estimated at 24,000. It stands on a hill and along the left bank of the Rio Verde, 90 m from the Pacific ocean, and 150 SSE Puebla. Lon. 97 12 W, lat. 16 52 N.

Guayana, a country of S America, on the coast of the Atlantic, between the rivers Oroonoko and Amazon, and to the N of Amazonia. The Portuguese possess the part adjoining the river Amazon, and the small colony of Cayenne; the English, Surinam, Berbice, Demerara, and Isequibo, recently taken from the Dutch; and the Spaniards, the part next the Oroonoko. The greatest heat takes place in October, and continues to March: this is succeeded by violent uninterrupted rain till June, when parching heat again takes place till July, which is again followed by incessant rain till October. Dutch Guayana is every where level, and so low, that, during the rainy seasons, it is usually covered with water near two feet in height. This renders the soil so rich, that, on the surface, for 12 inches in depth, it is a stratum of perfect manure, and, as such, has been transported to Barbados. The interior parts of the country are inhabited by blacks, who have different languages and customs; and some of them build their houses on trees, to be secure from the inundations of the rivers. See St. Thomas, Cayenne, &c.

Guayaquil, a city and seaport of Quito, capital of a jurisdiction of the same name. It is defended by three strong forts, and situate on the river Guayaquil, near its entrance into the bay of Guayaquil. This place is famous for a shellfish, called Turbine, no larger than a nut, which produces a purple reckoned to exceed all others in the world; and with it the threads of cotton, ribands, laces, &c. are dyed. The commerce of this city is considerable. It is 140 m SSW Quito. Lon. 79 46 W, lat. 1 40 S.

Guaymas, a town of New Spain, in Sonora, with a small port, at the mouth of the river Sonora, on the gulf of Cali-

Guimaraens, a town of Portugal, in Entre Douro e Minho, which has formerly been the residence of its kings. It is divided into the old and new town, the former situate on an eminence, surrounded by walls. Here is a manufacture of linen in high estimation. The public buildings are magnificent, and the collegiate church is said to be founded on the ruins of a temple of Ceres. It is 10 m SE Braga. Lon. 8 21 W, lat. 41 35 N.

Guinea, a large region of Africa, of which little is known except the coast. It lies in the Torrid Zone, between 14 W and 20 E lon. and is divided into Upper and Lower Guinea. The first comprehends Sierra Leone, the Grain-coast, the Tooth coast, the Gold-coast, the Slave-coast (which includes Whidah, Dahomy, and Ardrah) Benin, Biafara, Majombo, Gabon, and Anziko. Lower Guinea is commonly called Congo. It is very unhealthy for Europeans. The natives in general go almost naked, and there seems to be little religion or honesty among them. The commodities purchased here, are gum seneca, at Senegal; rice and maize, on the Grain-coast; elephants teeth, on the Tooth-coast; the greatest plenty of gold, on the Gold-coast; and all, in general, supplied slaves, a trade which commenced in 1517, but abandoned by the English in 1807. There are many little states, whose chiefs are often at war with each other, when the people taken, on both sides, are sold for slaves; and it is not uncommon for the nearest of kin to sell each other. The English, Dutch, Portuguese, Danes, and French, have factories upon this coast.

Guinea, New, or Papua, an island of the S Pacific ocean, to the N of New Holland, from which it is separated by Endeavour strait. It is next in size to New Holland, extending SE from the equator to 12 S lat. and from 131 to 153 E lon. a length of more than 1200 m, by a medial breadth of perhaps 300; but the coasts of the eastern part are far from being completely investigated. The northern part is said to have been discovered by the Spaniards, in 1528, who had sailed from New Spain to explore the Spice islands. The coasts are generally lofty; and in the interior, mountain rises above mountain; but the whole appears covered with such luxuriance of wood and herbage, as can scarcely be conceived. The cocoa, sago, bread-fruit, and plantain tree, beside most of the trees, shrubs, and plants, common to the islands in the S Pacific ocean, are found here in great perfection. This island is the chosen residence of the singular birds of paradise, which breed here during the wet monsoon, and in the dry migrate in flocks westward, to the smaller islands, particularly Arroo. Here are also elegant parrots; and pigeons that almost equal a turkey in size. The inhabitants of the northern part are called Papous; whence the name of the country. They seem to have the true Malay complexion and features; but in general of horrible appearance, and great ferocity. Their language and habitations resemble those of Borneo, &c. on the west. The women seem the most industrious in making mats, and pots of clay, which they afterward burn with dry grass or brushwood; and they even wield the ax, while the men are indolent, or engaged in the chase of wild hogs. In the interior is a race called Haraforas, who live in trees, which they ascend by a notched pole, drawing it after them to prevent surprize. On this extensive territory, so favoured by nature, there is no European settlement. The chief commerce is with the Chinese, from whom they purchase instruments and utensils. Their returns are ambergris, tortoise shell, small pearls, birds of paradise, and other birds, which the Pa-

the extensive empire of the Mahrattas.
Amedabad is the capital.

Gwalior, a fortress of Hindoostan, in the province of Gohud, situate on a rock about 4 m long, but narrow, and nearly flat on the top, with sides almost perpendicular, from 200 to 300 feet
rampart conforms to the edge of the precipice all around; and the only entrance is by steps running up the side of the rock, defended on the side next the country by a wall and bastions.
The area within is full of noble buildings, reservoirs of water, wells, and cultivated land; so that it is a little district within itself. At the nw foot of a mountain is the town, which is well built. This fortress is c. 3dered as the Gibraltar of the east; but, in 1780,

the duchy of Holstein, consisting of the old and the new town; both nearly of an equal size. Most of the houses are built after the manner of the Dutch, and richly furnished within. The principal streets have long and broad canals, which are filled by the tide; the others are narrow and ill paved. It is seated on the rivers Elbe and Alster; and the latter, before it enters the town by sluices, forms a fine basin. Hamburg is well fortified, and on the ramparts are handsome walks, planted with rows of trees. The town, from its situation, has all possible advantages for foreign and domestic trade; particularly from its communication, by the Elbe, with some of the principal navigable rivers of Germany; and hence it is one of the most commercial places in the world, though not conspicuous for manufactures. Here is a celebrated college, an arsenal, a bank, an exchange (in which is a library) a German theatre, and a founding hospital. The inhabitants are estimated at 110,000, and nearly 12,000 of them are Jews, who transact much business. The religion is Lutheran, and none but the English have the liberty of performing divine service in a chapel of their own. Other religions are tolerated at Altona, a large town near the harbour of Hamburg, except the Jews, who have no synagogue. Beside the five principal churches, there are 11 smaller ones for particular occasions, some of which belong to hospitals. The cathedral of Our Lady is a very fine structure; and the church of St. Michael is celebrated for a tower 390 feet high, on which many astronomical and physical experiments have been made. Hamburg was occupied in 1806 by the French, who confiscated all English property found here, and laid heavy contributions on the inhabitants. In 1813, it was occupied by the Russians, then by the Danes, who suffered it to be regained by the French. It is 55 m SE of the mouth of the Elbe in the German ocean, and 55 m N Bremen. Lon. 10 1 E, lat. 53 33 N.

Hamont, a town of the Netherlands, in the late bishopric of Liege, 15 m W by N Ruremonde.

Hampshire, a county of England, bounded on the N by Berkshire, E by Surry and Suffex, S by the English channel, and W by Dorsetshire and Wiltshire. It extends, exclusive of the isle of Wight, 42 m from N to S, and 28 from E to W.

H A M

Including the island it contains 981,120 acres; is divided into 10 hundreds, and 311 parishes; has one city and 20 market towns; and sends 26 members to parliament. The number of inhabitants was 219,656 in 1801, and 245,080 in 1811. This county has a great variety of soils, but the principal part is chalk. The Dorsetshire border has large tracts of heath; and toward the sea are great quantities of marsh land, but very fertile; and all the remainder is excellent land. It is one of the most fertile and populous counties in England. On the downs, of which a ridge runs almost across the county, are fed plenty of sheep: but the stock is considerably decreased, owing to enclosures. Besides wheat, barley, and hops, it is famous for bacon, honey, and timber; the last in particular, on account of its great woods, of which the principal are the New Forest and the forest of Bere. The principal rivers are the Avon, Test, Itchen, and Stour. Southampton is the county-town, but the assizes are held at Winchester. See New Forest, and Wight.

Hampshire, New, one of the United States of America, bounded on the N by Canada, E by the district of Maine and the Atlantic, S by Massachusetts, and W by the river Connecticut, which separates it from Vermont. It is divided into five counties, Rockingham, Stafford, Hillsborough, Cheshire, and Grafton: the last lies to the N, and comprehends nearly as much territory as all the other four counties. The land near the sea is generally low, but, advancing into the country, it rises into hills. From the vicinity of some mountains, whose summits are covered with snow most of the year, this country is intensely cold in winter. In summer the heat is great, but of short duration. In 1810 the number of inhabitants was 214,414. The capital is Portsmouth.

Hampstead, a town of New York, in Queen county, Long island, situate in a large plain, which feeds numerous cattle, 23 m E by S New York.

Hampstead, a village in Middlesex, 4 m NNW London, formerly famous for its medicinal waters. It is seated on the side of a hill, on the top of which is a fine heath that commands a delightful prospect; and in the vicinity are many elegant seats and villas.

HAN

of Elizabeth county. It has a trade in grain, lumber, flaves, &c. and stands at the head of a bay, near the month of James river, 80 m ESE Richmond. Lon. 76 28 W, lat. 37 5 N.

Hampton, a town of New Hampshire, in Rockingham county, on a river of its name, near the sea. It has a canal to the Merrimac, at Salisbury; and is 14 m S by W Portsmouth.

Hampton, a village in Middlesex, on the river Thames, 11 m SW London. It is famous for a royal palace, called Hampton Court, originally and magnificently built by cardinal Wolsey, who gave it to Henry VIII. What remains of the old palace are only some of the domestic offices, the principal part being taken down in 1690, and the present palace erected by William III. The buildings, gardens, and parks are 4 m in circumference.

Hanau, a strong town of Germany, in Wetteravia, capital of a fertile county of the same name. It is divided into the old and new town, and in the former is a magnificent castle. It has manufactures of woollen stuffs, stockings, porcelain, and tobacco; and a trade in corn, iron, and timber. Here, on October 30, 1813, Bonaparte received his last defeat in Germany, and fled during the battle for France. It is seated on the Kintzig, near its conflux with the Main, 18 m NE Darmstadt. Lon. 8 53 E, lat. 50 10 N.

Hancock, a town of Maryland, in Washington county, seated on the Potomac, 70 m NW Baltimore.

Hang-tcheou, a city of China, of the first class, capital of the province of Tehe-kiang. It is 12 m in circumference, exclusive of its suburbs, contains more than a million of inhabitants, and is the general emporium for all articles that pass between the northern and southern provinces. Here are extensive shops and warehouses; and it has a great trade in died cottons and nankins, silks, rice, and other grain. It is seated between a large basin that forms the S extremity of the grand canal, and a small lake called See-hou, 700 m S by E Peking. Lon. 120 20 E, lat. 30 20 N.

Hanover, a late electorate of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony. It contains the duchies of Zell, Saxe-Lauenburg, Bremen, Lüneburg, and the principalities of Verden, Grubenhagen, and Overwald. George I of Great Britain was the first who gained possession of all these states, which lie mostly between the rivers Weser and Elbe, and extend 200 m in length; but the breadth is various, being in some places 150 m, and in others but 50. Their produce is timber, cattle, hogs, mutton, beer, and bacon; a little silver, copper, lead, iron, vitriol, brimstone, quicksilver, and copperas. In 1803, the French obtained possession of all those territories; but on November 1, 1813, the crown prince of Sweden entered this territory, and his Britannic majesty's government was soon reestablished.

Hanover, a fortified city of Lower Saxony, capital of the late electorate of the same name. In its neighbourhood are the palace and elegant gardens of Herrenhausen. Hanover is well built, contains upward of 15,000 inhabitants, and has manufactures of lace, stuff, stockings, ribands, and leather. The French took it in 1757, but were soon after expelled. They took it again in 1803, and were again expelled in 1813. It is seated on both sides of the Leine, 58 m W by N Brunswick. Lon. 9 48 E, lat. 52 22 N.

Hanover, a town of New Hampshire, in Grafton county, on the E bank of Connecticut. Three m S of it, and near the same river, is Dartmouth college, one of the most celebrated seminaries of education in the United States. Hanover is 32 m N Charleston, and 80 WSW Portsmouth. Lon. 72 5 W, lat. 43 46 N.

Hassfurt, a town of Franconia, in the principality of Wurtzburg, on the river Maine, 8 m E Schweinfurt.

Hastlach, a town of Suabia, in Brisgau, on the river Kintzig, 14 m ENE Gengenbach.

Hastenbeck, a town of Lower Saxony, in the duchy of Brunswick, near which the French gained a victory over the duke of Cumberland, in 1757. It is 5 m SE Hamelin.

Hastings, a borough in Suffex, governed by a mayor, with a market on Wednesday and Saturday. It is one of the Cinque Ports, and had once a castle, now in ruins. The harbour, formerly of much consequence, is now only an indifferent road for small vessels. The town is commanded by a strong fort, has two churches, and is a fashionable watering place. In 1066, a bloody battle was fought near this place, between Harold 1st of England and William duke of Normandy, in which the former lost his life and kingdom: William, hence surnamed the Conqueror, was soon after crowned king of England, and introduced a memorable epoch in the annals of the country. Hastings is seated between a high cliff toward the sea, and a high hill toward the land side, 24 m E Lewes, and 64 SE London. Lon. $0^{\circ} 41' E$, lat. $50^{\circ} 52' N$.

Hatfield, a town of Massachusetts, in Hampshire county, on the W side of the Connecticut, nearly opposite Hadley, to which place there is a ferry. It is 5 m N Northampton.

Hatfield, a town in Hertfordshire, with a market on Thursday. It formerly belonged to the bishop of Ely, in who sepulchre Elizabeth resided, and was thence conducted, on the death of Mary, to ascend the throne. She procured the alienation of this manor; and James 1st exchanged it with sir Robert Cecil, afterward earl of Salisbury, for Theobalds; and on the site of the episcopal palace, that nobleman built the magnificent seat called Hatfield-house. It is seated on the river Lea, 20 m NNW London.

Hatherley, a corporate town in Devonshire, with a market on Friday, and a woollen manufacture; seated near the river Oke, 26 m NW Exeter, and 201 W by 5 London.

the county of Mark, seated on the Rocr, 17 m ENE Duffeldorp.

Hatvan, a town and fort of Upper Hungary, seated on a mountain, 28 m ENE Buda.

Hatzfeld, a town and castle of Germany, in Upper Hesse, capital of a county of its name. It is seated on the Eder, 17 m NNW Marburg.

Havana, a city and seaport on the NW part of Cuba, 2 m in circumference, and the capital of the island. The houses are elegant, built of stone, and the churches are rich and magnificent. The harbour is capable of containing upward of 1000 vessels, and the entrance, so narrow that only one ship can enter at a time, is defended by two strong forts, called the Moro and the Puntal; there are also many other forts and platforms, well furnished with artillery. Here all the ships that come from the Spanish settlements rendezvous on their return to Spain. This city was taken by the English in 1762, but restored to the Spaniards in 1763. In 1810, it suffered much damage by a hurricane, followed by an earthquake. It is seated on the W side of the harbour, and watered by two branches of the river Lagida. Lon. 82 23 W, lat. 23 9 N.

Havant, a town in Hampshire, with a market on Saturday, 7 m NE Portsmouth, and 66 W by S London.

Havelberg, a town of Brandenburg, in the mark of Pregnitz, seated on the Havel, near its conflux with the Elbe. Many vessels for the navigation of the Elbe are built here, and great quantities of wood sent hence to Hamburg. It is 37 m NW Brandenburg.

Haverfordwest, a borough of Wales, and the largest town in Pembrokehire, with a market on Tuesday and Saturday. It is a county of itself, governed by a mayor, and has a considerable trade. The assizes and county gaol are kept here; and it had once a wall and castle, now demolished. The number of inhabitants was 2880 in 1801, and 3093 in 1811. It is seated on the Dougledy, which soon after enters a creek of Milford haven, 15 m ESE St. David, and 253 W by N London. Lon. 5 0 W, lat. 51 30 N.

continent, under the name of Tierra Auſtralia del Eſpiritu Santo. Bougainville viſited them in 1768, and found that the land was not connected, but compoſed of iſlands, which he called the Great Cyclades. Cook, in 1774, aſcertained the extent and ſituation of the whole group, and gave them the name they now bear. The principal iſlands are Tierra del Eſpiritu Santo and Mallicollo, beſide ſeveral of leſs note, ſome of which are from 18 to 25 leagues in circuit. In general they are high and mountainous, abounding with wood, water, and the uſual productions of the tropical iſlands. The inhabitants are of very different appearances at different iſlands; and are chiefly of a ſlender make and dark colour, and moſt of them have frizzled hair. Their canoes and houſes are ſmall, and poorly conſtructed; and, except their arms, they have ſcarcely any manufacture, not even tor clothing. They are, however, hofpitable and goodnatured, when not prompted to a contrary conduct by the jealouſy, which the unuſual appearance of European viſitors may be ſuppoſed to excite.

Hebron, a town of Syria, in Paleſtine, with a Chriſtian church, ſaid to contain the tombs of Abraham and Sarah, to which the Mohamedans, as well as Chriſtians, come on pilgrimage. Conſtantine built a church here, the walls of which are ſtill ſtanding. It is 25 m SW Jeruſalem.

brated university. It has manufactures of woollen stuffs, carpets, silk stockings, velvet, and soap. It was the capital of the palatinate, and celebrated for a great tun, which held 800 hogheads; but it has undergone so many calamities by war and fire, that it is not so large as formerly. The protestant electoral house becoming extinct in 1693, a bloody war ensued, in which the castle was ruined, and the elector removed his residence to Mannheim. The French took possession of this town in 1800, and in 1803 it was given to the elector of Baden. It is seated on the Neckar, over which is a bridge, 12 m s^e Mannheim, and 52 s Frankfort. Lon. 8 38 E, lat. 49 21 N.

Heidelberg, a town of Pennsylvania, in Dauphine county, with two German churches, 33 m E by N Harrisburg, and 74 wⁿw Philadelphia.

Heila, a town of W Prussia, opposite the mouth of the Vistula, on a headland that projects into the Baltic, 26 m N Dantzic.

Heilbrunn, a town of Franconia, in the principality of Anspach, with a medicinal spring, 10 m eⁿe Anspach.

Heilgoland, or Heiligeland, an island in the German ocean, 9 m in circuit, nearly opposite the mouths of the Eyder, Elbe, and Weser, belonging to Denmark. It has one of the most important lighthouses in Europe, and pilots are taken on board here by vessels going up either of the three rivers. The inhabitants, not less than 2000, subsist chiefly on fish and vegetable food. The houses are built in parallel streets, the ascent from the lower to the upper being effected by a wooden staircase of 191 steps. These steps are so formed that a cow can be driven up or down them, but not a carriage of any sort is used. In 1807 this island was seized by the British. Lon. 8 25 E, lat. 54 8 N.

Heiligenbeil, a town of Prussia, in the province of Natangen, famous for fine beer and white bread; seated on a small river, which soon after enters the Frisch Haff, 32 m s^w Konigsberg.

Heiligenstadt, a town of Lower Saxony, capital of the territory of Eichfeld, with a castle and a college. It is seated at the conflux of the Geisland with the Leina, 17 m s^e Gottingen. Lon. 10 10 E, lat. 51 22 N.

Heilberg, a town of Prussia, in the province of Ermeland. In 1703, Charles XII of Sweden fixed here his head quarters. It is seated on the Alla, 45 m s Konigsberg. Lon. 20 30 E, lat. 54 4 N.

Helder, a town of N Holland, with a strong fort that defends the entrance of the Texel. In 1799 the fort was taken by the English, and the whole of the Dutch fleet lying in the Texel surrendered to them, for the service of the prince of Orange; the English abandoned the fort soon afterward. It is situate on the s^w point of the province, opposite the w end of Texel island, 24 m N Alcaer. Lon. 4 34 E, lat. 53 0 N.

Helena, St. an island in the Atlantic ocean, 27 m in circuit, belonging to the English E India company. It lies between the continents of Africa and S America, about 1200 m w of the former, and 1800 E of the latter; and was discovered by the Portuguese, in 1502, on St. Helena day. Afterward, the Dutch were in possession of it till 1600, when they were expelled by the English. In 1673, the Dutch retook it by surprise; but it was soon after recovered. It has some high mountains, particularly one called Diana Peak, which is covered with wood to the very top. There are other hills also, which bear evident marks of a volcanic origin; and some have huge rocks of lava and a kind of half vitrified flags. The chief inconvenience to which the island is subject is want of rain; but it is far from being barren, the interior valleys and little hills being covered with verdure, and interspersed with gardens, orchards, and various plantations. There are also many pastures, filled with cattle and sheep; goats and poultry are likewise numerous. The inhabitants do not exceed 3000, including 500 soldiers and 1600 blacks, who are supplied with corn and manufactures by the company's ships, in return for refreshments. The town, called Jamestown, is situate at the bottom of a bay on the s side of the island, between two steep mountains; and is well defended by forts and batteries. Lon. 5 49 w, lat. 15 55 s.

erected; and at the top of the old market-place, now the square, is the statue of George II. In the church, where prayers are read alternately in English and French, is a public monument to the memory of major Pierfon, who fell here in the moment of victory: see Jersey. In the bay, a little E of the town, is the small isle of St. Helier, which took its name from Elerius, or Helier, a holy man who lived here, and was slain by the pagan Normans. His cell, with the stone bed, is still shown among the rocks; and in memory of him a noble abbey was founded. On the site of this abbey now stands Elisabeth castle, the residence of the governor and garrison of Jersey. It occupies the whole island, which is near a mile in circuit, and is surrounded by the sea at every half flood; and hence, at low water, is a passage to the town, called the Bridge, half a mile long, formed of sand and stones. The town of St. Helier contains about 800 houses, mostly shops, and above 4000 inhabitants. It has manufactures of woollen stockings and caps, and a considerable trade in the Newfoundland fishery. Lon.

Heliopolis, or Materea, a village of Egypt, 4 m NE Cairo, where the French gained a decisive victory over the Turks in 1800. Here is a celebrated spring of fresh water, said to be the only one in Egypt; and, according to tradition, the Holy Family came here on their flight from Herod, and bathed the child Jesus in this fountain.

Helleh, or Hillah, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in Irak, situate on both sides of the Euphrates, with a bridge of communication. It is supposed to stand on part of the site of the ancient Babylon, of which the ruins extend several miles around. The vicinity is so covered with fruit trees, particularly palms, that the town appears as if seated in a wood. It is 70 m S Bagdad.

Hellgate, a strait near the W end of Long island sound, 8 m to the NNE of New York. It is narrow and crooked, with a bed of rocks extending quite across, which cause whirlpools and a tremendous roaring at certain times of the tide; but, at proper times of the tide, ships of any burden may be conducted through this strait by a skilful pilot.

Helmerhausen, a town of Germany,

Helsingfors, a seaport of Sweden, in Finland, and the chief town in the province of Nyland. It has a commodious harbour in the gulf of Finland, and an immense fortrets called Sveaborg, built on seven small islands, three of which communicate by bridges. It is 110 m ESE Abo. Lon. 25 6 E, lat. 60 10 N.

Helsingia, or Helsingland, a province of Sweden, in Nordland, 210 m in length, between Dalecarlia and the gulf of Bothnia, and from 50 to 80 in breadth. It has extensive forests and many iron mines. The chief articles of trade are iron, flax, linen, tallow, butter, tar, deal, and timber. The principal town is Hudwickswald.

Helston, a borough in Cornwall, governed by a mayor, with a market on Monday. It stands on the river Loe, near its entrance into Mount bay, and is one of the towns appointed for the coinage of tin. A little below it is a harbour, where vessels take in their lading. It is 11 m SW Falmeuth, and Herat, a city of Persia, the largest in Chorasán, of which it was formerly the capital. It covers an area of 4 square miles, is encompassed by a lofty wall and wet ditch, and has a strong citadel. The governor is an Afgan prince, who pays a tribute to the king of Persia. The city has little ground unoccupied, and is estimated to contain 100,000 inhabitants. The staple commodities are silk, saffron, and asafoetida, which are sent to Hindoostan; and it is the emporium of the trade carried on between Cabul, Bokharía, Hindoostan, and Persia. The environs produce excellent fruit; and roses are in such plenty, that it is called Surgultzar, or the City of Roses. It is situate on the Herirood, at the S extremity of a rich and extensive plain, 300 m SE Meshed. Lon. 60 50 E, lat. 34 20 N.

Herault, a department of France, so named from a river which runs into the gulf of Lyon. It includes part of the late province of Languedoc; and the capital is Montpellier.

Herbemont, a town of the Netherlands, in Luxemburg, with a castle on a mountain, near the river Semoy, 3 m WNW Chiny.

Herborn, a town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Rhine, with a celebrated Calvinist academy, and manufactures of iron; seated on the Dille, 8 m SSE Dillenburg.

Herculaneum, an ancient city of Naples, totally overwhelmed by an eruption of Mount Vesuvius, in the beginning of the reign of emperor Titus. In 1689 and 1711, something of this city was discovered; and from 1738 to the present time, researches being frequently made by digging, a great number of manuscripts, paintings, statues, busts, domestic utensils, instruments of husbandry, &c. have been found. The village of Portici now stands on part of its site.

Hereford, the capital of Herefordshire, and a bishop's see, with a market on Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday. The city is governed by a mayor, and its chief manufacture is gloves. The castle, part of the walls, and three of the six gates are destroyed. It has four churches beside the cathedral, several meeting-houses for dissenters, and a free-school endowed with some exhibitions at each of the universities. Herefordshire, a county of England, bounded on the E by Gloucestershire and Worcestershire, N by Shropshire, W by Radnorshire and Brecknockshire, and S by Monmouthshire. It is 40 m long and 35 broad, containing 621,440 acres; is divided into 11 hundreds, and 220 parishes; has one city and seven market-towns; and sends eight members to parliament. The number of inhabitants was 89,191 in 1801, and 94,073 in 1811. The soil is exceedingly rich, producing excellent corn, hops, and fruit, as is evident from the Leominster bread,
Weobly ale, and Herefordshire cider.
The apples producing the cider grow in greater abundance here than in any other county, being plentiful even in the hedge-rows. The cattle of Herefordshire are deemed the superior breed in this island. The sheep are small, affording a fine silky wool. The principal rivers are the Wye, Munnaw, and Lug.

Hertford, or Hartford, a borough and the capital of Hertfordshire, with a market on Saturday. It is seated on the Lea, which is navigable for barges, as it was once for ships. In 879, the Danes erected two forts here, for the security of their ships; but Alfred turned the course of the river, so that their vessels were left on dry ground. Edward, the eldest son of Alfred, built a castle here, which has been often a royal residence. The town is governed by a mayor, and had formerly five churches, but now only two. Here is a fine hospital belonging to Christ's hospital in London; also a noble shire hall, and a large county gaol. The number of inhabitants was 3360 in 1801, and 3900 in 1811. About a mile to the E is a basin of water called Chadwell, which is the head spring of the New River. Hertford is 21 m N London. Lon. $0^{\circ} 1' E$, lat. $51^{\circ} 50' N$.

Hertfordshire, a county of England, bounded on the NW by Bedfordshire, N by Cambridgeshire, E by Essex, S by Middlesex, and W by Buckinghamshire. It is 36 m long and 28 broad, containing 385,280 acres; is divided into eight hundreds, and 134 parishes; has 19 market-towns; and sends six members to parliament. The number of inhabitants was 97,577 in 1801, and 111,654 in 1811. The N part is hilly, forming a scattered part of the chalky ridge which extends across the kingdom in this direction. A number of clear streams take their rise from this side. Flint stones are scattered in great profusion over the face of this county; and beds of chalk are frequently to be met with. The soil, however, with the aid of proper culture, is favorable to wheat and barley, which come to as great perfection here as in any part of the kingdom. The W part is, in general, a tolerable rich soil, and under excellent cultivation. The principal rivers are, the Lea, Stort, and Coln, and the artificial one called the New River.

Hertzberg, a town of Lower Saxony, in the principality of Grubenhagen, with manufactures of arms and iron tools; seated near the Hartz mountain, 17 m SSW Goslar.

which is the northern part, lies on the rivers Werra, Fulda, Schwalm, Diemel, and Weser, and is subject to Hesse-Cassel; and the former, or southern part, lies on the Lahn, and belongs principally to Hesse-Darmstadt. These are the two principal branches of the house of Hesse, and each of them has the title of landgrave. This country is surrounded by woods and mountains, in which are mines of iron and copper. In the middle are fine plains, fertile in corn and pasture; and there is plenty of honey and all sorts of fruit. Hops are likewise cultivated, which serve to make excellent beer; and birch-trees are very common, from the sap of which a deal of wine is made.

Heukelum, or Hoekelum, a town of S Holland, seated on the Linghe, 5 m NE Gorcum.

Heusden, a strong town of S Holland, seated on the Meuse, with a castle. It is 8 m NW Bois le Duc.

Hexham, a town in Northumberland, with a market on Tuesday, and a trade in tanned leather, shoes, and gloves. It had formerly a famous abbey, some parts of which yet remain. Near this place, in 1463, was a battle between the houses of York and Lancaster, in which the latter was defeated. Hexham is seated on the river Tyne, 22 m W Newcastle, and 285 NNW London.

Hendon, a borough in Wiltshire, with a market on Thursday, 20 m w Salisbury, and 97 w by S London.

Hindoo-ko; see Himmaleh.

Hindoostan, or India, a region of Asia, which comprises all the countries between the mountains of Tartary and Tibet on the N, Bootan, Assam, and Cassay on the E, the Indian ocean on the S, and the same ocean and Persia on the W. But this county must be considered under the three grand divisions of Hindoostan Proper, the Deccan, and the Peninsula. Hindoostan Proper includes the provinces of Bengal, Baha, and all those that lie to the north of the river Nerbudda; the principal of which are Agimere, Agra, Allahabad, Calimere, Delhi, Guzerat, Lahore, Malwa, Moultan, Oude, Rohilcund, Sindy. The Deccan has been extended to the whole region s of Hindoostan Proper; but in its most restricted sense, it means only the countries situate between Hindoostan Proper and the river Kistna; these are Candeish, Dowlatabad, Berar, Orissa, the Circars, the chief part of Golconda, Vissapor, and Concan. The tract s of these, or the river Kistna, is generally called the Peninsula; although its form does not authorize that appellation: it includes a small part of Golconda, Mysore, and the Carnatic, with Madura, and other smaller districts; the w coast being called that of Malabar, and the e that of Coromandel. The principal rivers of this extensive region are the Ganges, Burrampooter, Indus, Jumna, Pudda, Nerbudda, Tapty, Godavery, Kistna, Pennar, and Cauvery. The chief mountains are those of Himalaen and the Gauts. To give an idea of the modern revolutions in the empire of Hindoostan, it is proper to observe, that from a pure Hindoo government, it became, at last, a Mohamedan state, and continued to be so, under various dynasties, till the beginning of the 18th century. The first irruption of the Mohamedans was in the year 1000. From this period the provinces of Hindoostan were held rather as tributary kingdoms, than as provinces of the same empire; and the conquest of the Deccan, in particular, was for ages an object of considerable importance to the emperors. In 1389, the Mongul Tartars, under the conduct of Timur, or Tamerlane, invaded Hindoostan; but the conquest of the country was not effected till 1525, by sultan Baber, one of his descendants, who, from this circumstance, was the founder of the Mongul dynasty; and hence Hindoostan has been called the Mongul empire, and its chief, the Great Mogul. The illustrious Achar, his son, failed in his attack upon the Deccan; an attempt in which many of his successors were equally unfortunate, and which tended, in the sequel, to the decline and dissolution of the empire. In 1615, emperor Jehanguir, his son, received sir Thomas Roe, as the first English ambassador; and the Portuguese had, by this time, acquired considerable settlements in Bengal and Guzerat. In the reign of his grandson Aurungzebe, which lasted from 1660 to 1707, the empire attained its full extent: his authority reached from 10 to 35 degrees in lat. and nearly as much in lon. and his revenue exceeded 32,000,000l. sterling. But in the course of 50 years after his death, a succession of weak princes and wicked ministers reduced this astonishing empire to very narrow limits, and deprived it of all its power and splendor. In consequence of the intrigues of the nizam of the Deccan, Nadir Shah, the Persian usurper, invaded Hindoostan in 1738. The weak emperor, Mohamed Shah, threw himself on the clemency of the invader, who entered Delhi, and demanded thirty millions sterling by way of ransom. Nadir, afterward, evacuated Delhi, and left the nizam in possession of the whole remaining power of the empire, which he sacrificed to his own views in the Deccan, where he established an independent kingdom. Mohamed Shah died in 1747, having seen the Carnatic and Bengal become likewise independent, under their respective nabobs; an independent state too formed by the Rohillas (a tribe from the mountains between India and Persia) on the e of the Ganges, within 80 m of Delhi; and the kingdom of Candahar erected by Abdalla, one of the generals of Nadir Shah. Ahmed Shah, the son of Mohamed, succeeded; in whose reign the entire division of the empire took place; nothing remaining to the house of Tamerlane but the city and small territory of Delhi. The last imperial army was defeated by the Rohillas, in 1749. The Jats, a Hindoo tribe, founded a state in Agra; Oude was seized by Mohamed Kooli; and the Mahrattas, beside their ancient domains in the Deccan, obtained great part of Malwa, Guzerat, Berar, and Orissa. The Mongul empire was now become merely nominal; and the emperors, from this period, must be regarded as of no political consequence, otherwise than as their names and persons were made use of, by different parties, to promote their own views; for the name and person of the emperor retains a considerable degree of veneration among the bulk of the people in Hindoostan. Ahmed was deposed in 1753, and his successor was deposed and murdered in 1760. He was succeeded, however, by his son Shah Alum, who was alternately dependent on the contending powers, and more particularly upon the English, who obtained from him a grant of the provinces of Bengal, Bahar, Orissa, and the Circars. This prince died in 1806, and was succeeded by his second son, Ackber Shah. Hindoostan now consists of five principal states, which hold as tributaries, or feudatories, some numerous inferior ates. These five states are, the British, the Poonah Mahrattas, the Berar Mahrattas, the nizam of the Deccan, and the Seiks: for, whatever verbal distinctions may be made, a compulsive alliance is at least a dependent, if not a tributary situation. The British possessions are Bengal, Bahar, Banares, the Circars, the Jaghire, Bombay, Salsette, the district of Midnapour in Orissa, and some others in Mysore. The allies of the British, who may be considered as dependent upon them, are the nabobs of Oude and the Carnatic, and the rajahs of Mysore, Travancore, and Tanjore. For the other principal states, see their respective names; and for an account of some inferior independent states, see Bundelcund, Ballogistan, Jats, Rohilcund, &c. The inhabitants of Hindoostan are computed at about 10,000,000 Mohamedans, and 100,000,000 Hindoos. The Mohamedans, or Mooselmins, whom the English improperly call Moors, are represented to be of a detestable character. The Hindoos, or Gentoos, are of a black complexion; their hair is long, their person straight and elegant, and their countenance open and pleasant. They differ materially from all other nations, by being divided into tribes or casts. The four principal tribes are the Bramins, Soldiers, Labourers, and Mechanics; and these are subdivided into a multiplicity of inferior distinctions. There are Bramins of various degrees of excellence, who have the care of religion allotted to them, and are held sacred by the rest; some of these acknowledge the errors that have crept into their religion, own one Supreme Being, and laugh at the idolatry of the multitude, but insist upon the necessity of working upon the weaknesses of the vulgar; yet the generality of them are as ignorant as the laity. Such as are not engaged in worldly pursuits are a very superstitious, innocent people, who promote charity as much as they can, both to man and beast; but those who engage in the world are generally the worst of all the Gentoos; for, persuaded that the waters of the Ganges will purify them from their sins, and being exempt from the utmost rigour of the courts of justice (under the Gento government) they run into much greater excesses. The Soldiers are commonly called Rajah-poots; that is, descended from rajahs. They are much more robust than the rest, have a great share of courage, and a nice sense of military honour, which consists, among them, in fidelity to those they serve. Fighting is their profession; they readily enter into the service of any that will pay them, and will follow wherever he leads; but, should their leader fall in the battle, their cause is at an end, and they run off the field, without any stain in their reputation. The English E India Company have many battalions of them in their service: they are called Sepoys, and are clothed and disciplined in the European manner. The Labourers include farmers, and all who cultivate the land. The Mechanics include merchants, bankers, and all who follow any trade: these again are subdivided into each profession. Beside these, are the Hallachores, who cannot be called a tribe, being rather the refuse of all the tribes. They are a set of wretches, who perform all the vilest offices of life, bury the dead, and carry away every thing that is polluted. All the different tribes are kept distinct from each other by insurmountable barriers: they are forbidden to intermarry, to cohabit, to eat with each other, or even to drink out of the same vessel with one of another tribe. Every deviation from these points subjects them to be rejected by their tribe, renders them polluted for ever, and obliges them, from that instant, to herd with the Hallachores. The members of each cast adhere invariably to the profession of their forefathers: from generation to generation the same families have followed, and still continue to follow, one uniform manner of life. To this may be ascribed that high degree of perfection conspicuous in many of the Indian manufactures; and also that striking peculiarity in the state of Hindoostan, the permanence of its institutions, and the immutability in the manners of the inhabitants. Hence it is, that the Hindoos admit no converts, nor are themselves ever converted, whatever the Roman missionaries may pretend. The Hallachores may be here excepted, who are glad to be admitted into any society where they are treated as fellow creatures. The Hindoos vie with the Chinese, in respect to the antiquity of their nation; and the doctrine of transmigration is one of their distinguishing tenets. Their institutions of religion form a complete system of superstition, upheld by every thing which can excite the reverence of the people. The temples consecrated to their deities are magnificent; their religious ceremonies splendid; and the absolute dominion which the Bramins

have obtained over the minds of the people, is supported by the command of the immense revenues, with which the liberality of princes, and the zeal of pilgrims and devotees, have enriched their pagodas. The dominion of religion extends to a thousand particulars, which, in other countries, are governed by the civil laws, or by taste, custom, and fashion. Their dress, their food, the common intercourses of life, their marriages, and professions, are all under the jurisdiction of religion. The food of the Hindoos is simple, consisting chiefly of rice, ghee (a kind of imperfect butter) milk, vegetables, and oriental spices. The warrior cast may eat of the flesh of goats, sheep, and poultry. Other superior casts may eat poultry and fish; but the inferior casts are prohibited from eating flesh of any kind. Their greatest luxury consists in the use of the richest spices and perfumes, of which the great people are very lavish. They esteem milk the purest of food, because they think it partakes of some of the properties of the nectar of their gods, and because they esteem the cow itself almost as a divinity. Their manners are gentle. Their happiness consists in the solaces of domestic life; and they are taught by their religion, that matrimony is an indispensable duty in every man, who does not entirely separate himself from the world, from a principle of devotion. Their religion permits them to have several wives, but they seldom have more than one; and their wives are distinguished by a decency of demeanour, a solicitude in their families, and a fidelity to their vows, which might do honour to human nature in the most civilized countries. The custom of women burring themselves in the fire with the corpse of their husbands is still practised in Hindoostan. The code of Gentoo laws, with their sacred books, the Veidam and the Shahtah, are written in the Sanscrit language, which is very copious and nervous, although the style of their best authors is wonderfully concise. Hindoostan, toward the N, is pretty temperate, but hot toward the S; and it rains almost constantly for three months in the year. Its products are diamonds and other precious stones, silks, spices, aromatics, drugs, maize, rice, and sugar; and the chief manufactures are mullins and calicos. But these and various other particulars will be found under the different names of its provinces, cities, towns, mountains, and rivers, described in this work.

Hinzuwan, or Joanna, one of the Comora islands, between the S end of Madagascar and the continent of Africa. It is about 30 m long and 15 broad; and the coasts are chiefly in the hands of Arabians, who have driven the original natives to the interior and mountainous parts. Though not the largest, it is the principal of the Comora islands, for it exacts tributes from all the others. The cattle are a kind of buffalos, which are delicious eating; and there are sheep and hogs. The original natives occupy the hills, and are generally at war with the Arabian interlopers. They get their supplies of arms and ammunition from ships that touch here; and it is customary for all to make presents of arms and powder to the prince when he pays a visit on board, which he does to every one. When any ship touches here, it is surrounded by canoes, and the deck is crowded with natives of all ranks, from the high-born chief to the half naked slave. They have a regular form of government, and exercise the Mohamedan religion; both being introduced by the Arabs. The colour of these two races of men is very different; the Arabs have not so deep a tinge as the others, being of a copper complexion, with better features, and a more animated countenance. They consider a black streak under the eyes as ornamental, and this they make every day, with a brush dipt in a kind of ointment. The custom of chewing the betel-nut prevails here, as in most of the eastern countries. Their religion licenses a plurality of wives, and likewise concubines, of whom they are extremely jealous, and never allow any man to see them. The men are very temperate and abstemious, and attend the mosques three or four times a day. In general they appear to be a well-disposed people, and honest in their dealings, though there are among them, as in all other nations, some viciously inclined; and theft is much practised by the lower class, notwithstanding the punishment of it is amputation of both hands. The climate promotes vegetation to such a degree as requires little toil, but that little is denied; so that, beyond oranges, bananas, pineapples, cocoa-nuts, yams, and purslain (all growing spontaneously) few vegetables are met with. The face of the country is picturesque and pleasing; lofty mountains, clothed to the very summits; deep and rugged valleys, adorned by frequent cataracts, cascades, woods, rocks, and rivulets; and groves extending over the plains to the very edge of the sea. The town of Joanna, where the king resides, is on the E side, close to the sea, at the foot of a very high hill, and contains about 200 houses. The better kind of houses are built of stone, within a court yard, have a portico to shield them from the sun, and one long lofty room to receive guests; the other apartments being sacred to the women. It consists of seven provinces, namely Holland, Gelderland, Zealand, Utrecht, Friesland, Overijssel, and Groningen; and what was called the Land of the Generality, or Dutch Brabant. They were lately styled the United Provinces of the Netherlands. This country was a part of that inhabited by the ancient Batavi: it is usually called Holland, from the name of the principal province; which signifies a hollow, or low country. The principal rivers are the Rhine, Meuse, Dommel, Waal, Yffel, Scheldt, and Vecht. Holland affords a striking proof, that persevering industry is capable of conquering every disadvantage of climate and situation. The air and water are nearly equally bad; the soil produces naturally scarcely any thing but turf; and the possession of this very soil is disputed by the ocean, which, rising considerably above the level of the land, is prevented from overflowing it only by expensive dikes. Yet the labours of the Dutch have rendered this seemingly insignificant territory one of the richest spots in Europe, with respect to population and property. Among the most valuable natural productions of the country may be reckoned its excellent cattle; and large quantities of madder are exported, chiefly cultivated in Zealand. The principal revenue arises from the herring, cod, and whale fisheries; but these are not so considerable as formerly. The Dutch trade, though much reduced, is still considerable, and their country was, as it were, the universal warehouse of the commodities of every quarter of the globe. Their Asiatic possessions are the coasts of Java, the capital of which is Batavia, the seat of the governor-general of all their East India settlements; some settlements on the coasts of Sumatra, Malabar, and Coromandel; the greatest part of the Moluccas or Spice islands; and settlements of factories in the island of Celebes, at Surat, and in the gulf of Persia. In Africa, the Dutch have the Cape of Good Hope, with several forts and factories in Guinea; in the W Indies, St. Eustatia, Saba, and Curacao; and in S America, the colonies of Ilesquibo, Demerary, Surinam, and Berbice. But they have lost most of these in the present war. In Holland, the inland trade is greatly facilitated by canals, which pass in every direction, and equal the roads in other countries. By these canals and the Rhine, the inland trade with Germany is very considerable; and the most remarkable feature consists in the vast fleets of timber, which arrive at Dort from Andernach, and other places on the Rhine. A great quantity of corn is also obtained by this inland trade, and the other branches of traffic are numerous; that the Rhine may be said to supply Holland with insular advantages, secure from the destructive inroads of maritime war. This country contains thousands of wind-mills for sawing timber, grinding corn, &c. and the number of its manufactures is astonishing; the chief of which are linen, pottery, painted tiles, tobacco-pipes, refined salt, snuff, leather, wax, oil, sugar, starch, paper, beside some of woollen, cotton, and silk. From the year 1579 to 1795, the Seven United Provinces may be considered as one political body, united for the preservation of the whole. In consequence of the Union (see Netherlands) the Seven Provinces guaranteed each other's rights; they made war and peace, levied taxes, &c. in their joint capacity; but as to internal government, each province was independent. They sent deputies (chosen out of the provincial States) to the general assembly, called the States-general, which was invested with the supreme legislative power of the confederation. At the head of this government there has usually been a prince stadtholder, who exercised a considerable part of the executive power. After the death of William II (the fourth stadtholder) in 1667, this office was abolished by the States; but, in 1672, when Lewis XIV invaded Holland, the popular commotions compelled them to repeal the edict, to invest William III, prince of Orange, with the office, and to declare it hereditary. On his death, in 1702, it was again abolished; but, in 1745, some popular commotions compelled the States to restore the rank to William IV, and again to declare it hereditary in his family. In 1787, a civil war commenced, and the stadtholder, William V, was deprived of the office of captain general; but he was restored, the same year, by the interference of Great Britain and Prussia. When Holland, however, was rapidly overrun by the French in 1795, the stadtholder and his family were compelled to leave the country; and a convention was assembled to frame a constitution for the Seven Provinces and Dutch Brabant. The first plan they presented was rejected by the primary assemblies; another was drawn up, and accepted, in which the country was declared the Batavian Republic, governed by a directory of twelve members. The country was also divided into eight departments, which had names taken from rivers; but in 1801, they were changed to the names of the seven provinces and Brabant. In 1806, Holland was erected into a kingdom by Napoleon Bonaparte, in favour of his brother Louis, who, in 1810, abdicated his crown, and Napoleon decreed Holland united to France. The country was also re-divided into seven departments, viz. Mouths of the Meuse, Iffel, East Ems, West Ems, Friesland, Upper Iffel, and Zuider zee. But in November 1813, a counter-revolution took place, the French authorities were dismissed, and a provisional government established in the name of the prince of Orange, who by invitation arrived from England, and made his solemn entry into Amsterdam, on December 1, when he was proclaimed William I, Sovereign Prince of the Netherlands. The Calvinist religion is the most prevalent, but all other sects are tolerated. Amsterdam is the capital.

Holland, the most considerable of the provinces of the Dutch Netherlands, bounded on the s by Dutch Brabant and Zealand, w and n by the German ocean, and e by the Zuider zee, Utrecht, and Gelderland. It is divided into South and North Holland; which last is also called West Friesland, to distinguish it from Friesland on the e side of the Zuider zee. The Ye, or Wye, a small bay, which is an extension of the Zuider zee, separates S Holland from N Holland. This province is not above 180 m in circumference; but is so populous, that no country in Europe, of such a small extent, can equal it. The land is almost every where lower than the sea; and the water is kept out by dikes. It is crossed by the Rhine and Meuse, by several small rivers, and by a great number of canals, which are travelled on day and night, at a small expense. The pastures are so rich, that it has plenty of cattle, butter, and cheese, and the seas and rivers abound with fish. It has considerable linen and woollen manufactures, and numerous docks for the building of ships. The French effected, by the aid of a severe frost, the entire conquest of this province in 1795. Amsterdam is the capital.

Holland, a strong town of Prussia, in Oberland, near the river Weeske, 14 m sse Elbing.

Holland, New, the largest known land that does not bear the name of a continent. It extends from 109 to 153 e lon. and from 12 to 39 s lat. or 2720 m from w to e, and 1960 from n to s, being nearly as large as Europe. When this vast island was first discovered is uncertain. In the beginning of the 17th century, the n and w coasts were traced by the Dutch; and what was deemed, till lately, the s extremity, was discovered by Tasman, in 1642. Captain Cook, in 1770, explored the e and ne from 38 s, and ascertained its separation from New Guinea; and, in 1773, captain Furneaux, by connecting Tasman's discoveries with Cook's, completed the circuit. But the supposed s extremity, which Tasman distinguished by the name of Van Diemen Land, was found, in 1798, to be an island separated from New Holland by a channel 40 leagues wide. Different parts of the coast have been called by the names

Holladale, a river of Scotland, in Sutherlandshire, which rises in the mountains on the borders of Caithness, and flows n into a bay of the North sea, forming for several miles, in the latter part of its course, the boundary between the two counties.

Holm, a town in Cumberland, sometimes called Holm-Abbey, from an abbey that formerly stood here. It is seated near the mouth of the Waver, 12 m n Cocker-mouth, and 310 nnw London.

Holstebro, a town of Denmark, in N Jutland, on a shallow river that runs into the North sea. The principal trade is in corn, oxen, and horses. It is 24 m w Wiburg, and 68 n Ripen.

Holstein, a duchy of Lower Saxony, subject to the king of Denmark. It is 100 m long and 50 broad; bounded on the n by Sleswick, e by the Baltic and the duchy of Saxe-Lawenburg, s by the duchies of Bremen and Luneburg, and w by the German ocean. It is a fruitful country, and well seated for trade; having some considerable harbours, particularly those of Hamburg, Lubec, and Kiel; and from the latter is a canal to the Eider, at Rensburg, by which there is a free navigation from the Baltic to the German ocean. The religion of the country is Lutheranism.

Holston, a river of the United States, which rises in the Allegany mountains, in Virginia, and flows ssw into the state of Tennessee, where it takes a more westerly course to Knoxville, and 35 m below that town is joined by the Broad river, at fort Grainger, where their united stream takes the name of Tennessee. The whole course is about 200 m, and it is navigable for boats of 25 tons upward of 100 m. On its banks are several iron-works; and the adjacent country abounds with iron ore, and has sundry lead mines and salt springs.

Holt, a town in Norfolk, with a market on Saturday, and an excellent freeschool founded by sir John Gresham. It is 21 m wnw Norwich, and 119 ne London.

Holt, a town of Wales, in Denbighshire, governed by a mayor, though now a small place. The castle was demolished during the civil wars, in 1645. It is situate on the Dee, over which is

Holy Cross, a village of Ireland, in the county of Tipperary, on the river Suir, 11 m N Cahel. It was once a considerable town, and has extensive remains of an abbey.

Holy Island, an island on the coast of the detached part of Durham, called Islandshire, 8 m to the SE of Berwick. It is 3 m long and 2 broad, the soil rocky and full of stones, and at low water accessible by horses and carriages. It has a town called Kyo, and a castle on a high rock, under which is a commodious harbour, defended by a block-house. On this island are considerable remains of a stately monastery, called Lindisfarne, of which the celebrated St. Cuthbert was prior 12 years; and here was anciently a bishop's see, removed, with the body of St. Cuthbert, first to Chester le Street, and afterward to Durham.

Holyhead, a seaport of Wales, and the largest town in the Isle of Anglesea, with a market on Saturday. It stands at the west extremity of the island, on a cape that is separated from the rest of the island by a narrow channel, over which is a bridge, and hence is called Holyhead Island. It is the most usual place of embarkation for Dublin, being the station of the packet boats to and from that city, distant about 20 leagues. The number of inhabitants was 2132 in 1801, and 3005 in 1811. In the neighbourhood is a large vein of white fulfurs earth, and another of yellow. On St. I Island, which forms one side of the harbour, is a lighthouse; and on the side of Skerries, 9 m to the N, is another. Holyhead is 88 m W by N Chester, and 262 m W London. Lon. 4 49 W, lat. 53 23 N.

Holywell, a town of Wales, in Flintshire, with a market on Friday. From its vicinity to the mines, it is become the largest town in the county. It takes its name from the famous well of St. Winifred, concerning which so many fables and superstitious notions have prevailed. It is a copious stream, bursting out of the ground with great impetuosity, at the foot of a hill. Beside the cold bath, celebrated for wonderful cures, formed at the spring-head, and covered with a beautiful shrine, it is now applied to the purpose of turning several mills for the working of copper, making brass wire, paper, and snuff, and spinning cotton. The number of inhabitants was 5567 in 1801, and 6394 in 1811. It stands near the estuary of the Dee, 10 m E by N St. Asaph, and 208 NE London. Lon. 3 21 W, lat. 54 13 N.

Ho-nan, a province of China, bounded on the N by Pe-tcheli and Chan-si, E by Kiang-si and Chen-tong, S by Hon-quang, and W by Chen-si. As every thing that can contribute to render a country delightful is found in this province, the Chinese call it Tong-hoa, the Middle Flower; being situated almost in the centre of China. Beside Caisong, the capital, it contains seven cities of the first class, and 102 of the second and third.

Ho-nan, a city of China, of the first class, in the province of Ho-nan. It is 360 m SW Peking. Lon. 112 9 E, lat. 34 44 N.

Honawera, or Onore, a town of Hindoostan, in Canara, seated on an inlet of the sea, which spreads into a lake, and includes a number of islands. It was formerly a place of great commerce, but demolished by Tippoo after he had recovered it by the treaty of Mangalore. Here is now a customhouse, and a few shops, also some merchants, who live scattered near the banks of the lake, and sell rice, pepper, cocoa and betel-nuts, &c. to the trading vessels that come from Goa, Rajapura, and Bombay. It is 50 m N by Kunda-pura, and 84 SSE Goa.

Atlantic, s by Nicaragua, and w by Guatimala and Vera Paz. The country consists of mountains, valleys, and plains, watered by numerous rivers; and is exceedingly fertile. The vineyards bear thrice a year, and the soil in many parts yields three crops of maize; other productions are wheat, peas, cotton, wool, logwood, with excellent pasture, honey, wax, and provisions of all kinds. The bay of Honduras lies w of the Caribbean sea, between this province and the peninsula of Jucatan; and on its coast great quantities of logwood are cut, chiefly by the English, who once possessed the NE part of the province, called the Mosquito Shore. Honduras was formerly one of the most populous countries in America, but at present, though so fertile, is almost a desert. The capital is Valladolid.

Honfleur, a seaport of France, in the department of Calvados. The harbour is very capacious, at the mouth of the Seine; and its principal trade is in lace. It is 8 m N Pont l'Eveque, and 110 NW Paris. Lon. 0 15 E, lat. 49 24 N.

Honiton, a borough in Devonshire, with a market on Saturday, and a manufacture of broad lace. The church is half a mile from the town. A fire happened here in 1747, which consumed three-fourths of the town; and another, in 1765, destroyed nearly 180 buildings. It is seated on the Otter, 16 m E Exeter, and 151 w by s London.

Hoogly, a river of Hindoostan, formed by the two most western branches of the Ganges, named the Cossimbazar and Jellinghy, which unite at Nuddea. It flows by Hoogly, Chinsura, Chandernagore, and Calcutta, to the bay of Bengal, and is the only branch of the Ganges that is commonly navigated by ships.

Hoogly, a city of Hindoostan, in Bengal, now nearly in ruins, but possesses many vestiges of former greatness. In the beginning of the 18th century, it was the great mart of the export trade of Bengal to Europe. It stands on the river Hoogly, 25 m N Calcutta.

Hottentots, Country of the, a large region in the s of Africa, extending N by w, from the Cape of Good Hope, beyond the mouth of the Orange river, and from that cape, in a NNE direction, to the mouth of the Great Fish river, which parts it from Caffraria. It lies between the tropic of Capricorn and 35 s lat. and is bounded on the w, s, and E by the Atlantic, Southern, and Indian oceans, and on the N by regions very little, if at all, explored. The Hottentots are as tall as most Europeans, but are more slender; and the characteristic mark of this nation is, the smallness of their hands and feet, compared with the other parts of their body.
Their skin is of a yellowish brown hue, resembling that of an European who has the jaundice in a high degree. They have high cheek bones, but not such thick lips as their neighbours the Negros and Caffres; and their mouth is of the middling size, with the finest set of teeth imaginable. Their heads are covered with hair, more woolly, if possible, than that of the Negros. With respect to shape, carriage, and every motion, their whole appearance indicates health and content. Not only the men, but the women also are clothed with sheep-skins; the wool being worn outward in summer, and inward in winter. They wear one skin over their shoulders, the ends of it crossing each other before, and leaving their neck bare; another is fastened round their middle, and reaches down to their knees.

They besmear their bodies all over with fat, in which a little foot is mixed; and they are likewise perfumed with a rank and aromatic powder of herbs. They are excellent swimmers and divers, and practise bathing several times in the day.
The women braid or plait their hair as an additional elegance, and adorn themselves with necklaces of shells. They seldom content themselves with one covering, but almost always have two, and very often three. The outermost is the largest, finest, and most showy, and frequently adorned with glass beads strung in different figures. Both the men and women generally go bareheaded, and seldom wear any shoes. Neither their ears nor nose are adorned with any pendent ornaments; but the nose is sometimes marked with a black streak of soot, or with a large spot of red lead; of which latter, on high days, they likewise put a little on their cheeks. Both sexes wear rings on their arms and legs, chiefly made of thick leather straps, cut in a circular shape; but rings of iron, copper, or brass, of the size of a goosequill, are considered more genteel.
Girls are not allowed to use any rings till they are marriageable. Their habitations are adapted to their wandering pastoral life. They are merely huts, resembling a round beehive, from 18 to 24 feet in diameter, and so low that a middle sized man cannot stand upright in them. But neither the low-ness of the hut, nor that of the door, which is barely three feet high, can be considered as any inconvenience to a Hottentot, who finds no difficulty in slooping and crawling on all-fours, and who is more inclined to lie down than stand. The fire-place is in the middle, and they sit or lie round it in a circle.
The low door is the only place that admits the light, and the only outlet that is left for the smoke. The order of these huts in a craal, or clan, is most frequently in the form of a circle, with the doors inward; by which means a kind of yard is formed, where the cattle are kept at night. Such are the Hottentots in the vicinity of the Cape of Good Hope. In 1778, lieutenant Paterfon visited a Hottentot village in Little Nimiqua Land, in the NW part of the country: it consisted of 19 huts and about 150 inhabitants. The ensign of authority, worn by their chief, was a cane with a brass top, given to him by the Dutch E India Company. The

HOT

Hottentots amused them, part of the night, with music and dancing: their visitors, in return, treated them with tobacco and dacka, or hemp leaves, which they prefer even to tobacco. Their music was produced from flutes, made of the bark of trees, of different sizes. The men form themselves into a circle, with their flutes; and the women dance round them. Among other tribes of Hottentots, are the Bosjesmans, who inhabit the mountains in the interior part of the country, NE of the Cape, and are enemies to the pastoral life: they live by hunting and plunder, and never keep any animal alive for the space of one night. On this account they render themselves odious to the planters, and are pursued and exterminated like wild beasts; or made slaves of when taken alive. Their weapons are poisoned arrows, shot from a small bow; and they will hit a mark, with a tolerable degree of certainty, at the distance of 100 paces. Their habitations are not more agreeable than their manners and maxims; bushes and clefts in rocks serve them by turns for dwellings. Many of these savages are entirely naked; but some of them cover their body with the skin of any sort of animal, great or small, from the shoulder downward as far as it will reach, wearing it till it falls off in rags. Being ignorant of agriculture, they wander over hills and dales, after certain wild roots, berries, and plants, which they eat raw; also caterpillars, termites, locusts, grasshoppers, snakes, and spiders. Another tribe of Hottentots, near the mouth of Orange river, were observed by lieutenant Paterfon, in his journey to the NW in 1799. Their huts were loftier, and thatched with grass; and were furnished with stools made of the back-bones of the grampus. Their mode of living is in the highest degree wretched, and they are apparently the most dirty of all the Hottentot tribes. Their dress is composed of the skins of seals and jackals, the flesh of which they eat. When a grampus is cast ashore, they remove their huts to the place, and subsist upon it as long as any part remains. They smear their skin with the oil, the odour of which is so powerful, that their approach may be perceived some time before they appear in view. They carry their water in the shells of ostriches eggs, and the bladders of seals, which they shoot with arrows. To the N of the country of the Bosjesmans, and on the banks of Orange river, are another tribe called Koras, who may be reckoned to rank higher than any of the other Hottentots known in the S of Africa. Their features are of a superior cast; they are more cleanly in their appearance, and neater in their dress and domestic utensils; their huts are also constructed with greater care, and with a view of being more durable. They seem to be a mixed breed, between the Hottentot and Caffre. They appear to have no knowledge of agriculture, but are particularly attentive to their horned cattle, sheep, and goats, which they train in habits of strict subordination and command. With respect to the Hottentots, in general, none of them seem to have any religion, nor do they appear willing to receive any instruction. All of them, however, have the firmest opinion of the power of magic; whence it might be inferred that they believe in an evil being; but they pay no religious worship to him, though from this source they derive all the evils that happen; and among these, they reckon cold, rain, and thunder. They seem to have some idea of a future state, as they reproach their friends, when dead, with leaving them so soon; and admonish them to behave henceforth more properly. The country possessed by the Dutch is considerable; extending from the Cape of Good Hope, N to lat. 30, and E to the Great Fish river, about 550 m in length and 230 in breadth. The whole colony is naturally barren and mountainous; but the industrious Dutch have overcome those difficulties, and it produces not only a sufficiency of all the necessaries of life for the inhabitants, but also for the refreshment of all the European ships that touch at the Cape. The Dutch consider the year as divided into two seasons, which they term monsoons: the wet monsoon, or winter, begins in March; and the dry one, or summer, in September. Among the quadrupeds of this country are antelopes, which go in large herds; buffalos; camelopardilites; the gemsboch, a species of antelope, which has remarkably long sharp horns, and, when attacked by dogs, will sit on its hind quarters, and defend itself; wild dogs, which travel in herds, and are very destructive to sheep; elephants; elks; hyenas; the koedo, an animal rather larger than a deer, of a mouse colour, with three white stripes over the back, and the male having very large twisted horns; lions; jackals; tigers; the quacha, a species of zebra, but more tractable; rhinoceroses; horses; domestic horned cattle; common sheep, and a peculiar species of sheep covered with hair instead of wool. The hippopotamus, or river-horse, is frequently seen here. Among the birds are vultures; ostriches, whose eggs are excellent food; and the loxia, a species of gregarious bird: these latter build their curious nest in the mimosa tree, where they form a kind of thatched house, with a regular street of nests on both sides, containing under its roof several hundred birds. Among the insects are a species of termites which do no injury to wood as in the E Indies, but, by raising a number of hills, they impede the progress of vegetation. The black, or rock scorpion, is nearly as venomous here as any of the serpent tribe, of which there are numerous kinds.

Hozat, an island of France, between that of Belleisle and the continent. It is 10 m in circuit, and defended by a fort. Lon. 3 10 W, lat. 47 26 N.

hunting-seat, built by Augustus III, then electoral prince. A peace was concluded here between the kings of Prussia and Poland, and the empress queen. It is 22 m E Leipzig.

Huddersfield, a town in W Yorkshire, with a market on Tuesday. Here is a large circular hall, in which narrow and broad cloths, serges, kerseymeres, &c. manufactured in the town and neighbourhood, are weekly exposed to sale. It stands on the Colne, 3 m from the Calder, from which it has a canal to Ashton-under-Line. The number of inhabitants was 7268 in 1801, and 9671 in 1811. It is 42 m SW York, and 189 N W London.

Hudson, a river of the United States, which passes its whole course of 250 m in the state of New York. It rises in a mountainous country between the lakes Ontario and Champlain, and taking a SE course passes within 7 m of the lake George; it then flows S by Laufenburg, Albany, and Hudson, and enters the Atlantic ocean at New York. It is navigable for ships to Hudson, and for sloops of 80 tons to Albany.

Hudson, a city of New York, in Columbia county. The streets are spacious, and cross each other at right angles; and the houses are supplied with water brought in pipes from a spring 2 m distant. The trade is considerable, and vessels of large size are built here. It is seated on an eminence, on the E side of Hudson river, 30 m S Albany, and 120 N New York. Lon. 73 56 W, lat. 42 16 N.

Hudson Bay, a bay of N America, lying between 51 and 69 N latitude, discovered in 1610 by captain Henry Hudson. This intrepid mariner, in searching after a NW passage to the Pacific ocean, discovered three straits, through which he hoped to have found a passage to the Pacific ocean. The entrance of this bay, from the Atlantic, is between Resolution island on the N, and the Labrador coast on the S, forming the E extremity of the strait, distinguished by the name of its great discoverer. This bay is said to communicate on the N, by a strait, with Baffin bay; on the E side it is bordered by Labrador, on the SW by New S Wales, and on the W by New N Wales. These countries, included under the name of New Britain, abound with animals whose skins and furs are far superior in quality to those found in less northerly regions, and when manufactured, afford articles for trading with many European nations to great advantage.

The natives are called Esquimaux, and northern Indians; and are materially different from all the southern tribes. In 1670, a charter was granted to a company, for the exclusive trade to this bay. The Hudson Bay Company possesses three forts, on the S coast of James bay, by which name the S part of Hudson bay is distinguished; these factories are called Rupert, Moose, and Albany, but the former has been abandoned. On the W side of Hudson bay, up Hayes river, is a factory called Flamborough; and to the N of this is York Fort and Prince of Wales Fort. Further N is Button bay, where sir Thomas Button attempted to find a NW passage, but lost his ship, and returned home in a sloop made in the country. In December 1770, Mr. Hearne, in the service of the company, set out from Prince of Wales Fort to explore a river that the Esquimaux, who came to the company's factories to trade, had brought to their knowledge; and which, on account of much copper being found near it, had obtained the name of Copper-mine River. Under the convoy of those Indians, in 1771, he arrived at this river, and traced it to the Arctic ocean, finding it encumbered with shoals and a bar at its mouth, which is in lon. 119 W, lat. 72 N. In 1789, Mr. Mackenzie, another officer of the company, explored the country still more to the westward; and entering a river (now called after his name) which is the outlet of the Slave-lake, he traced it to its mouth in the Arctic ocean, where it forms a wide estuary in lon. 135 W, lat. 69 N. Its course is 780 m N W from the lake, in which it receives many large rivers. No discoveries W of this river have been made by land.

Hudwickswald, a seaport of Sweden, the chief town of Hellingia, with a good harbour, on the gulf of Bothnia. The inhabitants carry on an advantageous trade in timber, flax, linen, butter, fish, &c. It is 185 m N by W Stockholm. Lon. 17 46 E, lat. 62 6 N.

Hue, or Huefo, the capital of Cochinchina, with a royal palace. The inhabitants blacken their teeth, thinking it a shame to have them white, like dogs. It is seated in a beautiful plain, and divided into two parts by a large river, 30 m from its mouth, in the China sea. Lon. 107 25 E, lat. 16 25 N.

Huelva, a town of Spain, in Andalusia, on the coast of the Atlantic, between the mouths of the Odiel and Tinto, 53 m W Seville.

duces an excellent muscadell wine. The capital is Estanzia del Rei.

Hultschin, a town of Silesia, near the river Oppa, 13 m E Troppau.

Hull, or Kingston upon Hull, a borough and seaport in E Yorkshire, with a market on Tuesday and Saturday. It was built by Edward I, who called it Kingston, and stands on the W side of the river Hull (over which is a modern stone bridge) near its entrance into the Humber. It is a county of itself, governed by a mayor, and has two parish churches. The number of inhabitants was 27,616 in 1801, and 29,944 in 1811, including the suburb of Sculcoates. It is fortified, and was the first town that shut its gates against Charles I. The commerce of this place is considerable, and it is deemed the fourth port in the kingdom. Beside its communication with the Yorkshire rivers and canals, it has access also to the Trent, and all its branches; that it has the import and export trade of the northern and midland counties. The foreign trade is chiefly to the Baltic; but it has traffic with the southern parts of Europe, and with America. More ships are sent hence to Greenland than from any other port, that of London excepted. The harbour is artificial; and here are docks for building and repairing ships. Among the public buildings are the Trinity-house, for the relief of seamen and their widows, an armoury, a naval storehouse, a customhouse, and an exchange. Hull is 37 m SE York, and 170 N London.

Hulpen, a town of the Netherlands, in Brabant, 10 m SE Brussels.

Hulst, a town of the Netherlands, in the late Dutch Flanders, strong by its situation and fortifications. It was shamefully surrendered to the French in 1747, and taken by them in 1794. It is seated on a plain, which may be overflowed, and on a canal that communi-cates with the Scheldt, 15 m WNW Antwerp.

Humber, a river of England, formed by the junction of the Trent and Ouse.
It is a large estuary, which divides Yorkshire from Lincolnshire, and enters the German ocean, at Spurn Head.

Hummelstown, a town of Pennsylvania, in Dauphin county, on the S side of the Swetara, which runs into the Susquehanna, 10 m E by N Harrisburg, and 76 WNW Philadelphia.

Hummoch, a small island in the In-Stiria, near the river Muehr, 17 m W by S Judenburg.

Hunefeld, a town of Germany, in the principality of Fulda, with a collegiate church, 10 m N Fulda.

Hungary, a kingdom of Europe, bounded on the N by Poland and Silesia, W by Moravia, Austria, and Stiria, S by Sclavonia and Servia, and E by Walachia and Transylvania. It is divided into Upper and Lower Hungary; and to these may be added the Bannat of Tem-eswar, incorporated into the kingdom of Hungary in 1778. Hungary formerly included Transylvania, Sclavonia, Dalmatia, Servia, and Walachia. The principal rivers are the Danube, Save, Drave, Tresse, Maros, Raab, and Waag.
The air is unhealthy, occasioned by the lakes and bogs; but it abounds in all the necessaries of life, and the wine, especially that called Tokay, is excellent.
There are mines of gold, silver, copper, and iron; and also of opal, at Czerwenniza, which gem is peculiar to this country. There is such plenty of game, that hunting is allowed to all. The inhabitants are well shaped, generous and brave, but haughty and revengeful; and are estimated at seven millions. The trade principally consists in cattle, hogs, sheep, flour, wheat, rye, wool, and wine; and these are almost wholly sent to the Austrian provinces. The kingdom of Hungary can easily raise an army of 100,000 men. The horsemen are called Hussars, and the foot Heydukes. Almost all the towns of Hungary have two names, the one German, and the other Hungarian; and the language is a dialect of the Slavonian. The government is hereditary in the house of Austria, and the established religion is popery, though there are a great number of protestants. No country in the world is better supplied with mineral waters and baths; and those of Buda, when the Turks were in possession of it, were reckoned the finest in Europe. Buda is the capital of Lower Hungary, and Presburg of the Upper.

Hungen, a town of Germany, in Wetteravia, and county of Solms-Braunfels, 14 m SE Wetzlar.

Hungerford, a town in Berkshire, with a market on Wednesday, and a good trade by its canal navigation. John of Gaunt, duke of Lancaster, granted it a charter by the gift of a brass bugle horn, which is blown annually for the inhabitants to elect the constable, who is the chief officer. It is seated on the Kennet, 22 m SSW Abingdon, and 64 W London.

Huninguen, a fortified town of France, in the department of Upper Rhine, seated on the Rhine, 2 m N Basel, and 14 E Altkirch.

Hunmanby, a town in E Yorkshire, with a market on Tuesday, 34 m NE York, and 209 N London.

Hunslet, a town in W Yorkshire, in the liberty of Leeds. The inhabitants were 5709 in 1801, and 6393 in 1811.

Huntingdon, a town of New York, in Suffolk county, Long island, situate on a bay, in the sound, 25 m E by N New York.

Huntingdon, a town of Pennsylvania, capital of a mountainous county of the same name, which abounds with limestone, iron, and lead. It is situate on the Juniatta, at the influx of Standing Stone creek, 23 m WSW Lewistown. Lon. 78 15 W, lat. 40 22 N.

Huntingdon, a borough and the capital of Huntingdonshire, governed by a mayor, with a market on Saturday, and a great trade in corn. It was once a large place, said to have had 15 churches, which are now reduced to two; and there are the cemeteries of two other parishes, in one of which is an ancient steeple. The number of inhabitants was 2035 in 1801, and 2397 in 1811. On an eminence near the town stood a castle, erected by Edward the elder. Huntingdon is the birthplace of Oliver Cromwell. It is seated on a rising ground, on the river Ouse, over which is a stone bridge to Godmanchester, 16 m WSW Cambridge, and 59 N by W London. Lon. 0 5 W, lat. 52 17 N.

Huntingdonshire, a county of England, bounded on the SW and N by Northamptonshire, E by Cambridgeshire, and SW by Bedfordshire. It is 25 m long and 20 broad, containing 220,080 acres; is divided into four hundreds, and 106 parishes; has six market-towns, and sends four members to parliament. The number of inhabitants was 37,568 in 1801, and 42,203 in 1811. The principal rivers are the Ouse and Nen. The SE part consists of beautiful meadows. The middle and western parts are fertile in corn, and sprinkled with woods; and the upland part was anciently a forest, peculiarly adapted for hunting. The SE part consists of fens, which join those of Ely; but they are drained, so as to afford rich pasturage, and even large crops of corn. In the midst of them are some shallow pools, abounding with fish; and a lake 6 m long and 3 broad, called Whittlesea-mere. The chief commodities are corn, malt, and cheese; and it fattens abundance of cattle.

Huntley, a town of Scotland, in Aberdeenshire, with the magnificent remains of a castle. It has a considerable manufacture of linen cloth, and stands on a point of land formed by the conflux of the Bogie with the Deveron, 35 m NW Aberdeen.

Jaffa, a town of Syria, in Palestine, formerly a celebrated city, called Joppa, and the chief port of Judæa, but entirely fallen from its ancient grandeur, being laid waste in the time of the crusades. It is situate near the Mediterranean, on an eminence in the form of a sugar-loaf, on the summit of which is a small citadel; and the houses distributed along the side appear rising above each other. The bottom of the hill is surrounded by a wall, with battlements; and it is environed by gardens, which produce lemons, oranges, melons, and citrons of a prodigious size. The road is defended by a castle, on a rock; and the harbour is now too shallow to admit large vessels. The principal commerce is in fruit and grain. In 1799, it was taken by the French, under Bonaparte, with some difficulty and much bloodshed; but they held possession forty days only. It is 35 m ssw Acre. Lon. 35 10 E, lat. 32 5 N.

The animals are bees, horses, asses, mules, deer, goats, hogs, civet-cats, and monkeys. Here are fowls and birds of almost all sorts; and maize, plantains, bananas, pumpions, oranges, lemons, tamarinds, pineapples, coconuts, guavas, tar, apples, and sugar-canes. It has also some cedar-trees, and plenty of cotton. Ribeira Grande is the capital, but the governor resides at Porto Praya.

Jago, St. the capital of Chili, and a bishop's see, with a royal audience and a royal university. Beside the cathedral, there are four parish churches, ten monasteries, and seven nunneries. The streets are 36 feet wide, and intersect each other at right angles. The great square is 450 feet on each side; the N front occupied by the palace of the president, the tribunal of the audience, and other public edifices; that of the W by the cathedral church and the bishop's palace; and in the middle is a magnificent fountain. The inhabitants, upward of 46,000, are native Americans and Spaniards, and it is the centre of all the trade of Chili. Here are several canals, and a dike, by means of which they water the gardens and cool the streets. It is seated in a beautiful and extensive plain, abounding in all the necessaries of life, at the foot of the Andes, on the S side of the Topocalma, over which is a bridge that connects the city with the suburbs. Jamaica, an island of the W Indies, discovered by Columbus, in 1494. It lies 30 leagues W Hispaniola, nearly the same distance S Cuba, and is of an oval figure, 170 m long and 60 broad.
 It is divided into three counties, Middlesex, Surry, and Cornwall, and contains upward of 4,000,000 acres. A ridge of hills runs lengthwise from E to W, whence numerous rivers take their rise on both sides; and though none of them are navigable, even for barges, yet the sugars are carried upon many of them in canoes from the inland plantations to the seaside: some of them run under ground for a considerable space, particularly the Cobre and Pedra. The mountains and a great part of the island are covered with many kinds of trees; such as lignum vitæ, cedar, mahogany, &c. always green. In the valleys are sugar-canes, and such a variety of fruit-trees, as to make the country look like a paradise. But to balance this, there are alligators in the rivers; guanoes and gallwasps in the fens and marshes; and snakes and noxious animals in the mountains. The year is distinguished into two seasons, the wet and dry; but the rains are not so frequent as formerly, which is supposed to be owing to the cutting down of the woods. About nine in the morning it is so intolerably hot, that it would be difficult to live, if the easterly breeze did not arise to cool the air. Sometimes the nights are pretty cool, and there are great dews, which are deemed unwholesome, especially to new comers. The months of July, August, and September, are called the hurricane months, because then they are the most frequent; and there is lightning almost every night. Not
 bited, for the plantations are along the coasts. Here and there are savannas, or large plains, where the original natives used to plant their corn, and which the Spaniards made use of for breeding their cattle. The best houses are generally built low, on account of the hurricanes and earthquakes; and the Negroes huts, made of reeds, will hold only two or three persons. The common drink is Madeira wine, or rum punch. The common bread, or that which serves for it, is plantains; yams;

and cassava-roots; but, in 1793, a great number of the bread-fruit trees were brought here from Otaheite, and introduced into the different plantations. Hogs and sheep are plentiful; but the servants generally feed upon Irish salt-beef, and the Negros have herrings and salt-fish. The general produce of this island is sugar, rum, molasses, ginger, cotton, indigo, pimenta, cocoa, coffee, several kinds of woods, and medicinal drugs. It has some tobacco, but not good, and used only by the Negros, who can scarcely live without it; also maize, Guinea corn, and peas of various kinds, with variety of roots. Fruits are in great plenty, such as oranges, lemons, shaddock, citrons, pomegranates, pine-apples, prickly pears, melons, pumpkins, guavas, and many other sorts. The first settlement on this island was made in 1509, by the Spaniards, who were cruel to the natives; but none of their bloody settlements supported themselves, except that of St. Jago de la Vega. This island was taken by the English in 1655, and is now the most valuable of their W India colonies. The number of white inhabitants in 1787 was 30,000, free blacks 10,000, Maroons 1400, and slaves 250,000. The value of the slaves, the landed property, and buildings to which they are appurtenant, and that of the vessels employed in trade, were then estimated at 39 millions sterling; and it has since continued a growing and improving colony. The government of Jamaica is one of the richest places, next to that of Ireland, in the disposal of the crown: the standing salary is 2500l. and the assembly commonly vote as much more to the governor, which, with other perquisites, make it little less than 10,000l. a year. In June 1795, the Maroons, or original natives, who inhabit the mountains, rose against the English, and were not quelled till March 1796. St. Jago de la Vega is the seat of government, but Kingston is the capital.

Janville, a town of France, in the department of Eure and Loire, 20 m SE Chartres.

Jao-tcheon, a city of China, in the province of Kiang-si, seated on the river Po, near its entrance into the lake Poyang, 40 m NE Nan-tchang.

Japan, an empire in the most eastern part of Asia, extending from lon. 131 to 142 E, and from lat. 30 to 41 N. It is composed of several islands, the principal and most northern of which is Nippon. The whole empire is divided into seven principal districts, which are subdivided into 70 provinces; and the population is, in proportion to extent, deemed equal to that of China. It is the richest country in the world for gold; there are also rich silver mines, and fine copper is the main source of the wealth of many provinces. It produces a great deal of rice, which is reaped in September; and millet, wheat, and barley, which are cropped in May. Cedars are common, and so large that they are proper for the masts of ships and columns for temples. The rocks and most barren places produce a variety of fruits, plants, and roots. The woods and forests, and long ridges of mountains, with which the country is intersected, produce good pasturage, and are stocked with deer, oxen, buffaloes, hogs, and a few horses; but there are no sheep nor goats. Here are large quantities of fine porcelain, silk, and skins, as also red pearls, which are not in less esteem than the white. The Japanese are of a yellowish complexion all over; their heads are in general large, their necks short, and their hair black, thick, and shining, from the use they make of oils; their eyes are small, of a dark brown colour and sunk deep in the head, and the eyelids form in the great angle of the eye a deep furrow, which discriminates them from other nations; their eyebrows are also placed somewhat higher; and their noses, though not flat, are thick and short. They are naturally ingenious, and have a happy memory. Their houses are of wood, coloured white, and never exceed two stories in height; and the interior is divided into apartments at pleasure, by moveable partitions sliding in grooves. They have neither tables, beds, nor chairs; but sit and lie on carpets and mats, the meal being served apart to each in a basin of porcelain, or on a square salver of japaned wood. Their food consists almost entirely of fish, fowl, eggs, and vegetables. The dress consists of trowlers, and a loose robe of silk or cotton fastened by a girdle; the number being increased according to the coldness of the weather: their stockings, which cover only half the leg, are made of woollen stuffs sewed together; instead of shoes they merely wear soles made of rice straw, fastened to the great toe by a kind of loop, and these are taken off when they enter a room. The men have no beard, the hair being plucked out with small pincers, that it may not grow again: they shave the head daily from the brow to the nape; and the hair on the sides is turned up and fastened at the crown, which forms the common covering of the head; but conical hats made of grass are worn on journeys. They have a language so peculiar, that it is understood by no other nation. The sciences are highly esteemed among them; and they have several schools at different places, in which are taught arithmetic, rhetoric, poetry, history, and astronomy. Some of their arts and manufactures even surpass those of Europe. They treat the women with great severity, and punish adultery with death; yet a man may take as many wives as he pleases. The Japanese are naturally good soldiers, and skilful at shooting with a bow; however, as they inhabit islands, they are seldom at war with their neighbours. They formerly carried on a trade with the neighbouring countries; but now all communication is forbidden, except with the Chinese and Dutch; and with them only at the port of Nangasacki. The merchandise brought by the Dutch are spices, sugar, linen and woollen cloth, elephants teeth, and haberdashery wares; for which they receive gold, silver, copper, rice, tea, fine porcelain, cabinets, and other japanned and lackered wares. The Japanese are as fabulous as the Chinese in the antiquity of their empire; but the certain period begins with the hereditary succession of the ecclesiastical emperors, from the year 660 before the Christian epoch. Their emperor was called dairo; but in the minority of one of them, in 1150, when they had civil wars, one of the competitors for the crown assumed the ecclesiastical government, retaining the same title; while the other, who ruled in civil affairs, was called cubo. From that time the dairo had only been at the head of religious matters, while the cubo, or secular emperor, bears an absolute dominion over all civil and military affairs. The former still lives in great state and grandeur at Miaco; and the latter pays him a kind of homage, as if he acted only as his deputy or viceroy; but in reality, the cubo is now the real monarch of Japan, and the daïro only his high priest. The religion of the country is paganism; but there are two different sects. There was once a great number of Christians in different parts of the empire; but, in 1638, they underwent great persecutions, inasmuch that they were all extirpated. The capital of the empire is Jedo.

Japara, a seaport on the N coast of Java, with a good harbour. It was the capital of a considerable kingdom, till the Dutch made themselves masters of it; where they established a colony, and a considerable trade. It is 253 m E by S Batavia. Lon. 110 45 E, lat. 6 20 S.

Jaquemel, a town of St. Domingo, on a bay of its name, on the S coast, 32 m SSW Port au Prince.

Jargeau, a town of France, in the department of Loiret. It was taken by the English in 1438, and retaken by Joan of Arc the next year. It is seated near the Loire, 10 m ESE Orleans.

Jariferge, a town of Norway, in the diocese of Aggerhuys, capital of a district abounding in mines. It is 5 m N Tonsberg.

Jarnac, a town of France, in the department of Charente. Near this place the duke of Anjou, afterward Henry III, obtained a victory over the Huguenots, in 1569. It is seated on the Charente, 20 m W Angouleme.

Jaronitz, a town of Bohemia, seated on the Elbe, 9 m N Konigingratz.

Jaron, a town of Persia, in Farfistan, celebrated for abundance of palm trees and their excellent fruit. It is 95 m S by E Shiraz. Lon. 53 10 E, lat. 28 15 N.

Jaroslau, a town of Poland, in Red Russia, with a strong citadel. A battle was gained here by the Swedes, in 1656, after which they took the town. It is seated on the Saine, 55 m W Lemburg. Lon. 22 43 E, lat. 50 4 N.

Jaroslau, a government of Russia, formerly a province of the government of Moscow. It is 160 m long, and from 30 to 110 broad. The capital is of the same name, and a large commercial place, with numerous manufactures; seated on the Wolga, 145 m NNE Moscow. Lon. 39 50 E, lat. 57 35 N.

Jaschnitz, a town of Hither Pomerania, seated on the Oder, 8 m N Stettin.

Jasque, a town of Persia, in the province of Mecran, which gives name to a cape in the gulf of Ormus. Lon. 57 4 E, lat. 25 40 N.

Jassy, a city of European Turkey, capital of Moldavia, and an archbishop's see. In 1753, it was destroyed by fire; but is now a well fortified place, defended by a castle. The inhabitants are estimated at 12,000. It has been several times taken in the wars between the Turks and the Russians or Austrians. It is seated on the Pruth, 170 m NNE Bucharest. Lon. 27 30 E, lat. 47 8 N.

Java, an island of the E Indies, lying to the S of Borneo, and separated at its W end from Sumatra, by the strait of Sunda. It is 580 m long and 100 broad, extending from 105 to 114 E lon. and 6 to 8 S lat. The land is low, and in some places marshy, near the northern shore, but rises in a gradual slope toward the interior of the country, admitting in its ascent every variety of situation and verdure. The N coast has many commodious creeks, bays, harbours, and towns, with many little islands near the shore. The S coast is bold, rocky, and almost inaccessible, that it is little known. In former times Java had as many petty kings as there were large towns; but now it has five kingdoms or states; these are Bantam, Jacatra, Cheribon, the empire of the Soefochoenan, and that of the Sultan, which all together contain 123 provinces or governments. The Javanese live in mean huts of bamboo plastered with clay and thatched with leaves; and their food consists of boiled rice, fruits, vegetables, and water. They are a barbarous, proud, and indolent people; of a brown complexion, short black hair, large cheeks, flattish nose, small eyes, and large eyebrows. They smear their hair with cocoa-nut oil; and the women twist it into a knot on the top of the head, where it is fixed with gold or silver pins, and decorated with sweet-smelling flowers. The men are very robust and strong limbed; but the women are small. The men wear a piece of calico wrapt two or three times round their middle; and the women wear them from their armpits down to their knees; but all other parts are bare. The men have two or three wives and several concubines, according to their circumstances. Those that live near the seaside are generally Mohamedans; but within land they are Gentoos, abtaining from flesh of all kinds. This island has very high mountains, particularly the Pepper mountain on the S side; it has likewise impassable forests and wildernesses; but other parts produce abundance of rice, cotton, indigo, salt, and pepper, beside most sorts of fruit proper to the climate. Here also is plenty of hogs, beeves, and sheep, with other tame animals; and likewise fowl, both wild and tame, in great abundance. In the woods are large tigers, rhinoceroses, and other wild beasts. The air, except toward the w end of the island, is as temperate and healthy as in any part of the E Indies. The serene season is from May till November; and then the rains begin, which lay the low grounds under water, kill the insects, and continue till May. In March they begin to sow, and in July the sugar and rice begin to ripen; but September and October are the best months for all sorts of fruit. Java has many rivers, which rise in the mountains, and chiefly run into the sea on the N coast; they are probably none of them large, being mostly choaked up at their mouths with sand or mud, that their entrance at low water is difficult for the smallest vessels. The whole coast of this island is mostly under the dominion of the Dutch; and beside the native Javanese, it is inhabited by Chinese, Malayan, Amboynese, Topasses, Bugasses, Timoreans, and many other people, brought from distant countries by the Dutch. In 1740, the Dutch pretended that the Chinese were going to make an insurrection, and upon that account disarmed them; yet, after that they massacred them to the number of 20,000 men, women, and children, and seized their effects. In 1811, a British force was sent against this island, and a landing effected within 16 m of Batavia, which city surrendered on the approach of the army; the French forces, by whom it had been garrisoned, having previously retired to a neighbouring fort. This fort was immediately attacked, and taken by storm; but the French general, with most of the cavalry, escaped. They were afterward pursued, and being defeated in an action near Jattcalle, the French general capitulated, and surrendered all the Dutch possessions to the British. Batavia is the capital.

Jawat, a town of Persia, in Schirvan, seated on the Kur, nearly opposite the influx of the Aras, 45 m s Schamachie.

Jauer, a town of Silesia, capital of a principality of the same name, with a citadel; and a large square, surrounded by piazzas. Near this place, in 1813, the allies gained a great victory over the French. It is seated in a fine country, on the rivulet Jauer, 35 m w by s Breslau. Lon. 16 23 E, lat. 51 2 N.

Jaulnais, a town of France, in the department of Vienne, 6 m N Poitiers.

Jaxtberg, a town and castle of Franconia, in the principality of Wurzburg, on the river Jaxt, 10 m s Merzgentheim.

Ibila, a town of European Turkey, in Albania, seated on the Drino, 55 m E Scutari.

Iceland, an island to the w of Norway, 260 m long and 180 broad, lying between 63 and 67 N lat. The earliest discoverer on record was Naddoc, a famous pirate, who was driven here by a tempest, in 861, while on a voyage from Norway to the Feroe islands. The first settler was Ingulf, a Norwegian of great opulence, who dreading the tyranny of his king, emigrated in 874. He was followed by such numbers, that in the course of sixty years the whole coast and most of the habitable parts are said to have been occupied. The chiefs of the different colonies, notwithstanding intestine broils, continued as a republic till 1260, when they became subjects of Norway, and subsequently of Denmark in 1387 to the present time. The climate of Iceland is very unsettled; in winter there are frequent and sudden thaws, and in summer almost as frequent snow and frost; but the northern part of the island has more severe weather than the southern. For two months together the sun never sets; and in the winter it never rises for the same space, at least not entirely. The island is mountainous, stony, barren, and destitute of trees; but in some places there are excellent pastures. On all parts of the coast, the bays and harbours are both numerous and safe. The chief rivers are in the E part; the Skalfanda, Oxarfird, and Bruna, all flowing from s to N; and there are extensive fresh-water lakes. The highest mountains, clothed with perpetual snow, are called Yokuls; and of these Snæfell, a promontory on the w coast, is esteemed the highest, being computed at 4560 feet. Mount Hecla is 18 m from the s coast, about 4000 feet in height, and a noted volcano; but there are several other volcanos, and many sulphurous and hot springs. Some of the latter, called Geysers, frequently throw up boiling water: the principal one has a basin 51 feet in diameter, and in the centre an orifice 17 feet over, in which the water rises and falls; and from this pipe, in violent eruptions, a column of boiling water is frequently, by a sudden jet, shot up perpendicularly 100 feet, or thrown out diagonally to a great distance. The most tremendous volcanic eruption on record, accompanied by violent wind and rain, took place in this island in 1783. On Skaptaa Yokul, 40 m NE of Hecla, three fire-spouts broke out in the NW part, which, after rising to a considerable height in the air, united into a torrent of lava that flowed for six weeks, and ran a distance of 60 m to the sea, in a broken breadth of above 12 m. By this dreadful calamity, 12 rivers were dried up, 21 villages totally overwhelmed by fire or water, and 34 very materially injured: of the inhabitants, 220 perished by fire, 21 by water, and above 8700 by famine; all vegetation, the support of their cattle, being destroyed, and the fish driven from the coasts. The inhabitants are now estimated at 50,000. In the towns, particularly along the coasts, most of the houses are constructed of wood, previously framed in Norway; but in other parts the dwellings are at a distance from each other, many of them little above the level of the ground, and chiefly miserable huts, covered with turf or skins. The principal articles of food are fish and butter; the former most eaten in a dry state and uncooked; mutton, beef, and rye-bread are only brought to the table of the higher classes. The chief exports are dried fish, mutton, beef, butter, tallow, trainoil, coarse woollen cloth, stockings, gloves, wool, sheep and fox skins, eider-down, and feathers. The imports are timber, fishing tackle, implements of iron, tobacco, bread, spirits, wine, salt, linen, and other necessaries of life, with a very few superfluities. Iceland once abounded in learning and science, at a time when the greatest part of Europe was involved in ignorance. Their language was the old Gothic or Teutonic, the vernacular tongue of the Swedes, Danes, and Norwegians, before it branched into the several dialects since spoken by the natives of these three kingdoms. The religion of the early inhabitants was pagan; in 974 the Roman catholic was introduced, and in 1540 the Lutheran, which in a few years became the established religion. The island is divided into four commercial districts, Reikiavik, Ekeford, Eyaford, and Isaford, so named from the chief ports. The town of Reikiavik, where the governor and bishop reside, consists of about 70 wooden houses, with scattered huts in the outskirts, and a church of stone, covered with tiles. It is the principal place of traffic, and stands on a bay of its name, in the SW part of the island. Lon. 21 52 W, lat. 64 8 N.

Lehterhausen, a town of Upper Saxony, in the principality of Gotha, 12 m ESE Gotha.

Icolmkill, or Iona, a famous little island of Scotland, one of the Hebrides, near the SW point of the isle of Mull. It is only 3 m long, and produces beautiful white marble. Here are the ruins of an august nunnery, monastery, and cathedral, said to have been founded by St. Columba, about the year 735; also a small chapel, dedicated to St. Oran, containing many marble tomb-stones of the great lords of the isles; and adjoining it is a cemetery. In which many ancient kings of Scotland, Ireland, and Norway, are buried. Other ruins of monastic and druidical edifices can be traced; and many places are pointed out, noted for particular acts of St. Columba. This island was the retreat of learning, during the Gothic ignorance which pervaded Europe, after the overthrow of the Roman empire, and the seminary whence issued those pious monks and laymen, who again revived learning, and propagated Christianity through many kingdoms of Europe. This place, formerly so religious, has now divine service performed only four times in the year. The only village is Sodor. Lon. 6 20 W, lat. 56 23 N.

Ida, a lofty and pointed mountain, in the middle of the island of Candia, famous in ancient times as being the place on which Jupiter was brought up, and where there was a temple dedicated to Cybele.

Ida, a mountain of Asiatic Turkey, in Natolia, famous in ancient fable, for the judgment of Paris, and for being the resort of the gods during the Trojan war. It is 140 m to the W of Olympus.

Idanha a Nuova, a town of Portugal, in Beira, 3 m SW Idanha a Vella.

Idanha a Vella, a town of Portugal, in Beira. The French took it by assault in 1704. It is seated on the Ponsul, 25 m E Castel Branco. Lon. 6 14 W, lat. 39 39 N.

Idria, a town of Germany, in Carniola, celebrated for rich quicksilver mines; seated amid mountains, on the river Idria, 20 m ENE Gorz.

department of Moselle, seated on the Sare, 12 m w Deux Ponts.

Jean d'Angely, St. a town of France, in the department of Lower Charente, with a fine Benedictine abbey. It was taken from the Huguenots in 1621, by Lewis XIII, who demolished the fortifications. It is famous for brandy, and seated on the Bontonne, 15 m w s Santes, and 32 s s Rochelle.

Jean de Lofne, St. a town of France, in the department of Cote d'Or, seated on the Saone, 15 m s s s Dijon.

Jean de Lux, St. a town of France, in the department of Lower Pyrenees, the last next Spain, with a harbour. It owes its opulence to the cod and whale fishery, and is seated on a small river, near the bay of Biscay, 12 m sw Bayonne. Lon. 1 40 w, lat. 43 25 N.

Jean de Maurienne, St. a town of Savoy, capital of the county of Maurienne, and a bishop's see. It is seated on the river Arc, 25 m e n e Grenoble. Lon. 6 20 e, lat. 45 17 N.

Jean Pied de Port, St. a town of France, in the department of Lower Pyrenees, defended by a citadel, upon an eminence, at the entrance of those passes, or defiles, in the Pyrenees, which here are called Ports. It is seated on the river Nive, 20 m s s e Bayonne, and 30 n e Pamplona.

Jean Rabel, a town of St. Domingo, on the n coast of the n peninsula, with a fort, 10 m n e St. Nicholas.

Jed, a river of Scotland, in Roxburghshire, which rises on the borders of England, and joins the Teviot, a little below Jedburg. On its bank are several large caverns, which were the hiding places of ancient border-warriors.

Jedburg, a borough of Scotland, capital of Roxburghshire. Here is the ruin of a fine abbey church, and part of it has been made the parish church. It has manufactures of cloth, flannel, and hose, and the vicinity is noted for fine orchards. The number of inhabitants was 3834 in 1801, and 4454 in 1811. It is situate on the Jed, near its conflux with the Teviot, 45 m s e Edinburg. Lon. 2 35 w, lat. 55 30 N.

Jedo, the capital of the empire of Japan, situate on the s e side of Nippon, the largest of the Japanese islands. The city has neither walls nor ramparts, is 9 m long and 6 broad, and contains 1,000,000 inhabitants. The houses are built of earth, and boarded on the outside, to prevent the rain from destroying the walls. In every street is an iron gate, which is shut up in the night, and a kind of customhouse, or magazine, for merchandise. A fire happened in 1658, which, in the space of 48 hours, burnt down 100,000 houses, and the emperor's palace; but the whole is rebuilt. The imperial palace is surrounded by walls and ditches with drawbridges, forming of itself a considerable town, in the middle of the city. Where the emperor resides are three towers, nine stories high, each covered with plates of gold; and the hall of audience is supported by pillars of massy gold. Near the palace are several others, where the relations of the emperor live. The empress has a palace of her own, and there are 20 small ones for the concubines. Besides, all the vassal kings have each a palace in the city, with a handsome garden. The houses of the common class are nothing but ground floor, the rooms parted by folding screens; so that they can be made larger or smaller at pleasure. Jedo is seated in a plain at the head of a shallow bay, and a river that passes through it supplies several canals. Lon. 139 30 e, lat. 36 10 N.

Jegun, a town of France, in the department of Gers, 8 m n n w Auch, and 13 s Condom.

Jehud, or Joud, mountains in the n w part of Hindoostan, extending eastward from Attock to Behnbur. They are part of the territory of the mountaineers called Gickers, Gehkers, or Kakares.

Jekyl, a small island of N America, on the coast of Georgia, s of the island of St. Simon.

Jellafore, a town of Hindoostan, in Bengal, seated on the Subanreeka, 42 m s by w Midnapour.

Jellingby, a town of Hindoostan, in Bengal, on the right bank of the Ganges, where a branch separates from the main stream, and is called the Jellinghy river. It is 25 m e by s Moorshedabad.

Jemappee, a new department of France, including Austrian Hainault and a small part of Flanders. It has its name from a village, 3 m w by s Mons, where the French, in 1792, obtained a complete victory over the Austrians. The capital is Mons.

Jemptia, or Jemptland, an inland province of Sweden, in Nordland, 120 m long and 75 broad. The w part, on the frontiers of Norway, is full of craggy rocks and high mountains; but the e part is a champaign country, watered by lakes and rivers. It is divided into 11 parishes, but has not one town. The inhabitants subsist chiefly by agriculture, grazing, hunting, and ishing, and supply the Norwegians with iron-ware, steel, and leather; of the last they make shoes, boots, and jackets that are proof against wet.

Jena, a strong town of Upper Saxony, in Thuringia, with a castle and a celebrated university. Near this place, in 1806, the French defeated the Prussians, who suffered immense loss. It is seated on the Saal, 10 m ssw Weimar. Lon. 11 34 e, lat. 50 55 n.

Jenifa; see Yenisei.

Jeniskoi; see Yeniseisk.

Jenitz, a town of Upper Saxony, in the principality of Anhalt-Deffau, situate on the Muldau, 2 m ne Deffau.

Jenizza, a town of European Turkey, in Macedonia, situate on a lake which communicates with the gulf of Salonichi, by a canal, 12 m long. It is 24 m wnw Salonichi.

Jeno, a town of Upper Hungary, 20 m s Great Waradin, and 48 nse Segedin.

Jeremie, a town and cape on the n side of the s peninsula of St. Domingo. The town is situate on an eminence, at the mouth of a rivulet, and the vicinity is particularly excellent for the culture of coffee. It is 130 m w Port au Prince. Lon. 74 14 w, lat. 18 40 n.

Jericho, a town of Syria, in Palestine, once a famous city. It is now called Herubi by the Arabs, and contains only a few wretched huts, where some beggarly Arabs reside. It is 5 m w of the river Jordan, and 20 s by n Jerusalem.

Jericho, a town of Lower Saxony, in the duchy of Magdeburg, situate on the Elbe, 32 m wnw Magdeburg.

Jermah, a town of the kingdom of Fezzan, which now consists of clay-built cottages. Numerous herds of sheep and goats feed around it, and many majestic ruins exhibit vestiges of its former greatness. It is 60 m se Mourzook.

Jersey, an island in the English channel, 18 m from the coast of Normandy in France, and 84 s from Portland in Dorsetshire. It is subject to the English, but still governed by the ancient Norman laws. It is 30 m in circuit, and difficult of access, on account of the rocks, sands, and forts erected for its defence. The vallies are finely watered by brooks, and abound with cattle and small sheep. It produces excellent butter and honey, and the s part is nearly covered with apple-trees for cider. The number of inhabitants is estimated at 20,000, of whom 3000 bear arms. It has two towns, St. Helier and St. Aubin, both situate on St. Aubin bay, on the s side of the island. The town of St. Aubin stands at the w end of the bay, and is inhabited principally by merchants and mariners; but it is not half the size of that of St. Peller. It has a fort, called the Tower, and, on a lofty hill, the erection of a citadel is now far advanced. In 1781, a body of 800 French troops landed on this island, surprised the garrison, took the governor prisoner, and compelled him to sign a capitulation; but major Pierfon, the next in command, refusing to abide by this forced capitulation, attacked the French, and made them surrender prisoners of war; but he was killed in the moment of victory. See Helier, St.

Jersey, New, one of the United States of America, 161 m long and 52 broad; bounded on the e by Hudson river and the Atlantic ocean, s by Delaware bay and river, w by Pennsylvania, and n by a line drawn from the mouth of Mahakkamac river in lat. 41 24 to a point in Hudson river in lat. 41. It is divided into 13 counties; namely, Cape Mary, Cumberland, Salem, Gloucester, Burlington, Hunterdon, Sussex, Bergen, Essex, Middlesex, Monmouth, Somerset, and Morris; the last two are mountainous, and one fourth of the others are sandy and barren. The hilly country feeds great quantities of cattle; the barren part produces little else but shrub-oaks and yellow pines; and the sandy lands yield an immense quantity of bog iron ore, which is worked up to great advantage in the numerous iron-works in this state. The soil in other parts is fertile, producing plenty of corn, and fruit of all kinds common to the climate. The principal rivers are, beside the boundary ones, the Hackinsac, Passaic, and Rariton. In 1810 the number of inhabitants was 245,562. Trenton is the capital.

Jerusalem, a famous city of Syria, in Palestine. It was the capital of Judea, after David had conquered the Jebusite; and in the reign of Zedekiah, it was taken by Nebuchadnezzar, who led the Jews captive to Babylon. It was afterward taken by the Romans, and ruined, together with the Temple, 70 years after the birth of Christ, as was foretold by him. Emperor Adrian built a new city, near the ruins of ancient Jerusalem; including the summit of Mount Moriah, and a small part of Mount Sion. It was taken by the Persians in 614, and the Saracens in 636. In 1099 it was retaken by the crusaders, who founded a kingdom that lasted 88 years, under nine kings. Saladin, king of Egypt and Syria, got possession of it in 1187. The Turks expelled the Saracens in 1217, have kept possession of it ever since, and call it Heleodis, that is, the Holy City. They have a governor here, who lives in great state. The city has steep ascents on every side, except the S; and being almost surrounded by valleys encompassed with mountains, it seems to stand in the middle of an amphitheatre, and presents, to the approaching traveller, a magnificent assemblage of domes, towers, palaces, churches, and monasteries. It is of a square form, surrounded by a wall, in which are six gates, and is nearly 3 m in circuit. The brook Kedron flows in the valley on its E side, along the foot of Mount Olivet. The houses are lofty, with flat roofs; and as no windows appear on the lower stories, and those above are latticed, the streets which are narrow, seem to be between high walls. The bazars are covered over, and have few articles in them exposed for sale, through fear of Turkish rapacity. The Armenians and Jews dispose of its manufactures to a great extent; these are beads, rosaries, amulets, crosses, shells, &c. The shells (mother-of-pearl) are formed into various shapes; the largest and most perfect are made into clasps for the zones of the Grecian ladies of Cyprus and the Archipelago. But what renders the city considerable is the great resort of pilgrims; for the inhabitants accommodate them with lodgings and provisions, which is their chief business. A bashaw, with a guard of janissaries, always resides here, to protect them from the Arabs. The Church of the Holy Sepulchre, which the pilgrims came principally to visit, was a large structure, with a round nave, and had no light, but what came through the top; and directly under the opening of the dome, was the Holy Sepulchre, placed in a small chapel, with three holes in the roof, to let out the smoke of many lamps, which were always kept lighted. The whole of this building was destroyed by fire in 1810. The mosque of Omar, built by a caliph of that name, in the seventh century, on the side of the temple of Solomon, is a lofty Saracenic edifice; with a capacious dome, and the most magnificent piece of architecture in the Turkish empire. The Franciscan monastery of St. Salvador is a large building like a fortress; and a part of it, surrounding a spacious open court, is appropriated to the reception of pilgrims, for whose maintenance the monks have considerable funds. The Armenian monastery is the largest in the city, and is maintained in a degree of oriental splendor. Jerusalem is 113 m SW Damascus, and 175 NE Suez. Lon. 35 20 E, lat. 31 47 N.

Jesi, a town of Italy, in Ancona, seated on a mountain, near the river Flumescina, 15 m WSW Ancona.

Jesselmere, a town of Hindoostan, in the province of Agimere, and circar of Bickaneer, 70 m W by N Bickaneer.

Jesso, a large island, lying between those of Nippon and Saghalien. It is of an irregular form, 350 m long and from 80 to 220 broad; the narrow part is in the S, toward Nippon, from which it is separated by the strait of Sangar. It is full of woods; and the natives, who live by fishing and hunting, are strong, robust, savage, and slovenly, when compared to the Japanese. They are called Ainos, and are now driven from the southern parts of the island by the Japanese, who have here some colonies. The island is generally deemed subject to Japan; but it may be rather considered as a foreign conquest than as a part of the civilized empire. Their principal settlement is Matsumay, and they give that name to the whole island. The SE point is in lon. 142 30 E, lat. 40 50 N.

Jesus of Coulemu, the capital of the province of Itata, in Chili. It is celebrated for excellent wine, and stands near the mouth of the Itata, 50 m N Conception. Lon. 72 20 W, lat. 36 2 S.

Jever, a town of Westphalia, in E Friesland, capital of a territory of its name, 28 m NE Embden.

Jf, an island in the Mediterranean, on the coast of France, the most eastern of the three before the harbour of Marseilles, and well fortified.

Iglau, a fortified town of Moravia, capital of a circle of the same name, with two convents and a college. Good cloth is manufactured here, and the commerce in corn and hemp is considerable. It is seated on the Iglu, 40 m WNW Brinn. Lon. 15 32 E, lat. 49 28 N.

Iglesias, a town of Sardinia, and a bishop's see, 37 m WSW Cagliari. Lon. 8 39 E, lat. 39 18 N.

Ihor; see Johore.

Jidda, a seaport of Arabia Felix, on the Red sea, in the sheriffate of Mecca. A very considerable trade is carried on here, this city being a mart between Egypt and India. The ships from Suez seldom proceed further than this port, and those from India are not suffered to advance to Suez. The English are particularly favoured in the trade of this place. Jidda has no fresh water, and is situate in a barren sandy district, 34 m w Mecca, of which it is the port. Lon. 39 23 E, lat. 21 29 N.

Jinbala, a town of Negroland, capital of an island so called, which is formed by two branches of the Niger that separate at leaving the lake Dibble, and unite again about 15 m from Tombuctoo. The town is a resting place for traders between Tombuctoo and the western part of the country. It stands on the w branch of the Niger, 80 m sw Tombuctoo. Lon. 0 16 E, lat. 16 4 N.

Jionpour, a town of Hindoostan, capital of a circar of the same name, in Allahabad. It is seated on the Goomty; and not far from the conflux of that river with the Ganges is the fort of Jionpour, on a high bank commanding the bridge over the Goomty. This place was at one time the seat of an empire; and sultan Shirki built the great musjud, or mausoleum, which is still remaining. The stone bridge over the Goomty consists of 16 pointed arches; and on the top of it are many little shops on both sides. It was built in 1567, and has hitherto withstood the force of the stream, which, in the time of the rains frequently flows over the bridge; and in 1774 a brigade of the British army passed over it in boats. Jionpour is 48 m nw Benares. Lon. 82 55 E, lat. 25 45 N.

Jery, a town of Hindoostan, in Myso-re, formerly the capital of a principality. The last rajah fled in 1789, for fear Tippoo should compel him to become a Mooselmin, and soon after procured a friendly Nair to shoot him dead. It was of a great size, surrounded by three concentric walls; but the court being removed to Nagara, the inhabitants willingly followed, and devastation succeeded. Ruins, and a large temple in good repair, are all that remains. It is 24 m n Nagara.

Ila; see Ista.

Ilat, or Jalat, a town of Nubia, on the river Nile, supposed by some to be the ancient Meroe. Lon. 34 30 E, lat. 18 48 N.

Ilanz, a town of Swisserland, in the canton of Grisons, formerly capital of the Grey League. It is partly surrounded by walls, and seated on the Rhine, 23 m sw Coire.

Ichester, or Iwelchester, a borough in Somersetshire, with a market on Wednesday. It is of great antiquity, and once had 16 churches, but now only one, at the w end of which is an octagonal tower, supposed to be built with Roman materials. Here are also various relics of monastic antiquities. It is the birthplace of the celebrated Roger Bacon. The election of the county members is held here, and here also is the county gaol. It is seated on the Ivel, 16 m s by w Wells, and 122 w by s London. Lon. 2 37 w, lat. 50 56 n.

Imeritia, or Imerethi, a country of Asia, which with Mingrelia comprehends the ancient Colchis. It is bounded on the n by Caucasia, e by Georgia, of which it was formerly a part, s by Turkish Armenia, and w by Guriel and Mingrelia. The revenues of the czar arise from a contribution of the peasants in wine, grain, and cattle, and from the tribute of the neighbouring princes; and among the extraordinary sources of revenue, confiscations have a considerable share. This country, as well as Mingrelia, is now dependent on Russia. The inhabitants, estimated at 20,000 families, are scattered over the country in small hamlets. They send yearly considerable quantities of wine to the neighbouring parts of Georgia, in leathern bags, carried by horses; but they are without manufactures, very poor and miserable, and cruelly oppressed by their landlords. The Imerethians are of the Greek religion. Their churches are scarcely to be distinguished from common cottages, but by a paper cross over the principal door, and some paintings of the virgin and the saints. Cutais is the capital.

India, an extensive region in Asia, lying between 66 and 93 E lon. and 7 and 35 N lat. Under this name the Europeans have included all the countries which lie S of Tartary, and extend from the eastern frontiers of Persia to the eastern coasts of China. But the name of India can be applied, with propriety, to that country only which is distinguished both in Asia and Europe by the name of Hindoostan. The countries to the E of the river Burampooter (namely Aracan, Assam, Birmah, Cambodia, Cochinchina, Lao, Malacca, Pegu, Siam, and Tonquin) which some geographers have distinguished by the name of India beyond the Ganges, are no more to be considered as belonging to India, than the bordering countries of Persia, Tartary, and Tibet. See Hindoostan.

Indiana, a territory of the United States of America; bounded on the N by the territories of Illinois and Michigan, E by the Great Miami, which divides it in part from the state of Ohio, S by the river Ohio, which separates it from Kentucky, and W by the river Mississippi, which parts it from Louisiana. The other principal rivers are the Illinois and Wabash. This country contains much fine land; but the white inhabitants are at present few. In 1810, the population was 24,520. Vincennes is the capital.

Indians, the name by which the original natives of America are generally called. These people are scattered through the extent of the two vast continents; of whom it is observable, that there is a natural distinction between the natives of the temperate zones and those of the torrid zone; and that, accordingly, they may be divided into two great classes. The one comprehends all the N Americans, from the river St. Lawrence to the gulf of Mexico, together with the people of Chili and a few small tribes toward the extremity of the southern continent. To the other belong all the inhabitants of the islands and those settled in the provinces, which extend from the isthmus of Darien, almost to the southern confines of Brazil, along the E side of the Andes. In the former, which comprehends all the regions of the temperate zones in America that are inhabited, the human species appears manifestly to be more perfect. The natives are more robust, active, intelligent, and courageous; and have defended their liberty with persevering fortitude against the Europeans, who subdued the other rude nations of America, with the greatest ease. The natives of the temperate zones are the only people in the New World who are indebted for their freedom to their own valour. The N Americans, though long encompassed by three formidable European powers, retain part of their original possessions; and the people of Chili, though early invaded, still maintain a gallant contest with the Spaniards, and have set bounds to their encroachments. In the warmer regions, the men are more feeble in their frame, less vigorous in the efforts of their mind, of a gentle but dauntless spirit, more enslaved by pleasure, and more sunk in indolence. Accordingly, it is in the torrid zone that the Europeans have most effectually established their dominion over America; and if several tribes there still enjoy independence, it is either because they have never been attacked by an enemy already satiated with conquest, and possessed of larger territories than he was able to occupy, or because they have been saved from oppression by their remote and inaccessible situation. This distinction, however, although so conspicuous, is not universal. Of the manners of the N American Indians a general idea may be formed by an account of those who inhabit the countries to the E of the Mississippi. These consist of 28 different nations; the principal of which are the Cherokees, Chickasaws, Chotaws, Creeks, Delawares, the Six Nations, the Shawanese, Hurons, Illinois, &c. Allowing about 700 to a nation or tribe, they will contain in all 20,000 souls, and may furnish about 5000 warriors. These Indians darken their complexion, by anointing themselves with grease and lying in the sun. They also paint their face, breast, and shoulders, of various colours, but generally red;

and in many parts of their bodies they prick in gunpowder in well-designed figures. They are of middle stature, their limbs clean and straight, and their features well formed, especially those of the women. They shave or pluck the hair off their heads, except a patch about the crown, which is ornamented with feathers, beads, wampum, and such like baubles. Their ears are bored, and stretched by a thong down to their shoulders. They are wound round with wire to expand them, and adorned with silver pendants, rings, and bells, which they likewise wear in their noses. Some of them pierce the cartilage of the nose, and pass through it a large feather; and those who can afford it wear a collar of wampum, a silver breastplate, and bracelets on the arms and wrists. A piece of cloth about the middle, a shirt of the English make, on which they bestow innumerable stitches to adorn it, a sort of cloth boots and moccasins, which are shoes of a make peculiar to the Indians, ornamented with porcupine quills, with a blanket thrown over all, complete their dress at home; but when they go to war they leave their trinkets behind.
There is little difference between the dress of the men and women, excepting that a short petticoat, and the hair, which is exceedingly black and long,
and clubbed behind, distinguish some of the latter. Their warlike arms are guns, bows and arrows, darts, scalping knives, and tomahawks; the last is one of their most useful pieces of field furniture, serving all the offices of the hatchet, pipe, and sword; and they are exceedingly expert in throwing it. The world has no better marksmen with any weapon; they will kill birds flying, fishes swimming, and wild beasts running.
They are not so ignorant as some suppose them, but are quick of apprehension, sudden in execution, subtle in business, exquisite in invention, and industrious in action. They are of a gentle and amiable disposition to those they think their friends, but as implacable in their enmity; their revenge being completed only by the entire destruction of their enemies. They are very hardy, bearing heat, cold, hunger, and thirst, in a surprising manner; and yet no people are more addicted to excess in eating and drinking, when it is in their power. The follies, nay mischief, they commit, when inebriated, are entirely imputed to the liquor; and no one will revenge any injury (murder excepted) received from one who is no more himself. Among the Indians all men are equal, personal qualities being most esteemed. No distinction of birth, or rank, renders any man capable of doing prejudice to the rights of private persons; and there is no pre-eminence from merit, which begets pride, and which makes others too sensible of their own inferiority. Their public conferences show them to be men of genius; and they have in a high degree the talent of natural eloquence. They live dispersed in villages, either in the woods, or on the banks of rivers, where they have little plantations of maize and roots, not enough to supply their families half the year; and they subsist, the remainder of it, by hunting, fishing, and fowling, and the fruits of the earth, which grow spontaneously in great plenty.

IND

Their huts are generally built of small logs, and covered with bark; each having a chimney, and a door, on which they place a padlock. One of their towns, called Old Chelicothe, is built in the form of a parallelogram; and some of their houses are shingled. A long council-house extends the whole length of the town, where the king and chiefs of the nation frequently meet, and consult on all matters of importance, whether civil or military. Some huts are built by setting up a frame on forks, and placing bark against it; others of reeds, and surrounded with clay.
The fire is in the middle of the wigwam, and the smoke passes through a little hole. They join reeds together by cords run through them, which serve them for tables and beds. They mostly lie upon skins of wild beasts, and sit on the ground. They have brass kettles and pots to boil their food. Gourds or calabashes, cut asunder, serve them for pails, cups, and dishes. The accounts of travellers, concerning their religion, are various; and although it cannot be absolutely affirmed that they have none, yet it is very difficult to define what it is. All agree that they acknowledge one Supreme God, but do not adore him. They have not seen him, they do not know him; believing him to be so far exalted above them, and too

I N D

happy in himself, to be concerned about the trifling affairs of poor mortals. They seem also to believe in a future state, and that after death they shall be removed to their friends who have gone before them, to an elysium or paradise. The Wyandots, near Detroit, and some others, have the Roman catholic religion introduced among them by missionaries. These have a church, a minister, and a regular burying ground. Many of them appear zealous, and say prayers in their families. These, by their acquaintance with white people, are a little civilised, which must of necessity precede Christianity. The Shawanese, Cherokees, Chickasaws, and some others, are little concerned about religion. Others continue their former superstitious worship of the objects of their love and fear, and especially those beings whom they most dread; though, at the same time it is allowed they pray to the sun, and other inferior benevolent deities, for success in their undertakings, for plenty of food, and other necessaries of life. They have their festivals, and other rejoicing days, on which they sing and dance in a ring, taking hands, having so painted and disguised themselves, that it is difficult to know any of them; and after enjoying this diversion for a while, they retire to the place where they have prepared a feast of fish, flesh, fowl, and fruit; to which all are invited, and entertained with their country songs. They believe that there is great virtue in feasts for the sick, which is concluded by singing a most harmonious, melancholy song; in which strain their music is particularly excellent. As they approach their towns, when some of their people are lost in war, they make great lamentations for their dead, and bear them long after in remembrance. Some nations abhor adultery, do not approve of a plurality of wives, and are not guilty of theft; but there are other tribes not so scrupulous. Among the Chickasaws, a husband may cut off the nose of his wife, if guilty of adultery; but men are allowed greater liberty. This nation despises a thief. Among the Cherokees, they cut off the nose and ears of an adulteress; afterward her husband gives her a discharge, and from this time she is not permitted to refuse any one who presents himself. Fornication is unnoticed; for they allow persons in a single state unbounded freedom. Their form of marriage is short: the man, before witnesses, gives the bride a deer's foot, and she in return presents him with an ear of corn, as emblems of their several duties. The women are very slaves to the men; which is usual in rude unpolished nations throughout the world. Their king has no power to put any one to death by his own authority; but the murderer is generally delivered up to the friends of the deceased, to do as they please. When one kills another, his friend kills him, and so they continue until much blood is shed; and at last the quarrel is ended by mutual presents. Their kings are hereditary, but their authority extremely limited. No people afford a more striking evidence of the miseries to which mankind are exposed from the want of government than they. Every chief, when offended, breaks off with a party, settles at some distance, and then commences hostilities against his own people. They are generally at war with each other. When they take captives in war, they are exceedingly cruel, treating the unhappy prisoners in such a manner, that death would be preferable to life. They load them with burdens, and when they arrive at their towns, they must run the gauntlet. In this the savages exercise so much cruelty, that one would think it impossible they should survive their sufferings. Many are killed; but if one outlives this trial, he is adopted into a family as a son, and treated with paternal kindness. But sometimes their prisoners are destined to be tortured to death, in order to satiate the revenge of their conquerors. While their lot is in suspense, the prisoners appear altogether unconcerned about what may befall them; and when the fatal sentence is intimated to them, they receive it with unaltered countenance, raise their death-song, and prepare to suffer like men. The prisoners are tied naked to a stake, but so as to be at liberty to move round it. All present, men, women, and children, rush upon them like furies; some burn their limbs with red-hot irons, some mangle their bodies with knives, others tear their flesh, pluck off their nails, and rend and twist their sinews. In spite of all their sufferings, the victims continue to chaunt their death-song with a firm voice; they boast of their own exploits, they insult their tormentors for their want of skill to avenge the death of their friends and relations, they warn them of the vengeance which awaits them for what they are now doing, and excite their ferocity by the most provoking reproaches and threats. at length with contending with men whose constancy they cannot vanquish, some chief puts a period to their sufferings, by dispatching them with his dagger or his club. The people of S America gratify their revenge in a manner somewhat different, but with the same unrelenting rancour. Their prisoners, at their first entrance, meet with the same rough reception as among the N Americans; but afterward they are treated with the greatest kindness, and some young women are appointed to attend and solace them: yet by a refinement of cruelty, while they seem studious to attach their captives to life, their doom is irrevocably fixed. On an appointed day, the victorious tribe assembles, the prisoner is brought forth with great solemnity, he meets his fate with undaunted firmness, and is dispatched by a single blow. The moment he falls, the women seize the body, and dress it for the feast: they besinear their children with the blood, in order to kindle in their bosoms a hatred of their enemies, and all join in feeding upon the flesh with amazing greediness and exultation. The Indians of S America, immediately under the Spanish government, are now far from being treated with that rigour and cruelty with which the first conquerors of that continent are charged. They are no longer considered as slaves; but are reputed as freemen, and entitled to the privileges of subjects. A certain tribute is, indeed, imposed upon them, and certain services required; but these are all under the due regulations of policy and humanity. The Indians who live in the principal towns are entirely subject to the Spanish laws and magistrates; but, in their own villages, they are governed by caziques, some of whom are the descendants of their ancient lords; others are named by the Spanish viceroys. These regulate the petty affairs of the people under them, according to maxims of justice, transmitted to them by tradition. For their further relief, the Spanish court has appointed an officer in every district with the title of Protector of the Indians, whose duty is to assert the rights of the Indians and to set bounds to the exactions of his countrymen. Hospitals also are founded in every new settlement for the reception of indigent and infirm Indians, where they are treated with tenderness and humanity. See Esquimaux; Indies, West; Patagonia.

Indies, East, the name given by Europeans to that vast tract of country in Asia, which lies to the s of Tartary, between Persia and China, as well as to a great number of islands in the Indian ocean, extending from the peninsula of Hindoostan as far e as New Guinea, and from the bay of Bengal and the China sea as far s as New Holland. The most western of the islands are the Maldives, and the most eastern the Moluccas; between which are several very large ones, as Ceylon, Sumatra, Java, Borneo, and Celebes; beside many others of considerable importance as to riches, though much inferior in extent.

Indies, West, the name given to a great number of islands in the Atlantic ocean, which extend across the entrance of the gulf of Mexico, from the NW extremity of the Bahama islands, off the coast of Florida, to the island of Tobago, 20 m from the coast of Terra Firma. Cuba is the most western, and Barbados the most eastern of these islands. When Columbus discovered them in 1492, he considered them as part of those vast regions in Asia comprehended under the general name of India; to reach which, by a w course across the Atlantic, had been the grand object of his voyage. This opinion was so general, that Ferdinand and Isabella, king and queen of Castile, in their ratification of a grant to Columbus, upon his return, gave them the name of Indies. Even after the error that gave rise to this opinion was detected, and the position of the New World ascertained, the name has remained; and the appellation of West Indies is given to these islands, and that of Indians to the inhabitants, not only of the islands, but of the continent of America. These islands are likewise called the Caribe Islands, from the aborigines of the country; and the sea in which they lie is called the Caribean Sea. By the French they are called the Antilles; and navigators distinguish them, from the different courses taken by ships, into the Leeward and Windward Islands, which see. The name of Caribe should properly be confined to the smaller islands, lying in a semicircle between Porto Rico and Trinidad. These were inhabited by the Caribs, a fierce race of Indians, nowise resembling their timid neighbours in the larger islands. Columbus was a witness to their intrepid valour; and the same character they have maintained invariably in all subsequent contests with the Europeans. The British islands are Jamaica, Barbados, St. Christopher, Antigua, Anegada, Nevis, Montserrat, Barbuda, Auguilla, Dominica, St. Vincent, Granada, the Bahama Islands, and part of the Virgin Islands. The Spaniards have Cuba, Porto Rico, Trinidad, and Margarita; the French, Guadeloupe, Marigalante, Desada, Hispaniola, Tobago, Martinico, and St. Lucia; the Dutch, St. Eustatia, Curacao, Saba, and St. Martin; the Danes, St. Thomas, St. Croix, and part of the Virgin Islands; and the Swedes, St. Bartholomew. The distribution of the islands is to be understood as prior to the present war, during which most of them have been taken by the English from the other powers.

Indus, or Sinde, a great river of Hindoostan, formed of about ten principal streams, which descend from the Persian and Tibetan mountains. From the city of Attock to Moulton, or to the influx of the Chunaub, it is commonly named the river of Attock. Below the city of Moulton, it proceeds in a S direction, through the province of that name, and that of Sindy; and enters the Arabian sea, by an extended delta of five mouths, NW of the gulf of Cutch. See Tatta. On the E of the Indus is a great sandy desert, near 500 m in length, and from 60 to 150 in breadth.

Rhine; seated on an eminence, by the river Salva, 10 m W Mentz.

Ingelmunster, a village of the Netherlands, in Flanders, near the river Mandel, 5 m N Courtray. Here is a castle, which was often made a garrison, in the religious wars of the 16th century.

Inglesborough, a mountain in Yorkshire, 8 m to the NW of Settle. It is 2000 ft above the level of the sea. The top is a circular plain, near a mile in circumference, containing the ruins of an old wall, &c. from which some imagine it has been a Roman station. Its sides are steep and rocky, and contain several pits and chasms, but may be ascended without danger. Its limestone base, which nearly extends to those of Whernside and Pennycant, is perforated in every direction with long caverns.

Ingleton, a village in W Yorkshire, 10 m NW Settle. It has a cotton mill, and stands at the bases of Whernside and Inglesborough, amid the natural curiosities of those mountains.

Ingling, a town of France, in the department of Moselle, 6 m E Thionville.

Ingolstadt, a town of Bavaria, with a famous university, and a fine church. It is one of the strongest places in Germany, surrounded by a morass. The houses are built of stone, and the streets are large. It was taken by the Austrians in 1742, and bombarded by the French in 1796. It is seated on the Danube, 9 m E Neuburg, and 45 N by W Munich. Lon. 11 22 E, lat. 48 46 N.

Ingraham Islands, a group of islands in the Pacific ocean; seven of them discovered in 1791 by capt. Ingraham, of Boston in Massachusetts, and named Washington, Adams, Lincoln, Federal, Franklin, Hancock, and Knox. Afterward, in the same year, some of them were observed by captain Marchand, a Frenchman, who called them Revolution Isles. They have since been visited by other navigators, and their number increased to twenty. They lie from 35 to 50 leagues NW of the Marquesas, in lon. 139 and 141 W, lat. 8 and 9 S. They appear generally to be diversified with hills and valleys, and to be well wooded and watered; but animal and vegetable provisions are not plentiful. Most of them are inhabited, and the people resemble those of the Marquesas. They are sometimes called the New Marquesas, and frequently Washington Islands. Federal island, called by the natives Nukahiwa, is the principal one; 70 m in circuit, and very mountainous, but has fertile valleys interspersed, and many secure harbours on its coasts: Port

Ingrande, a town of France, in the department of Mayenne and Loire, on the river Loire, 15 m wsw Angers.

Ingria, a province of Russia, which now forms the government of Peterfburg. It is 130 m long and 50 broad; bounded on the N by the river Neva and the gulf of Finland, E and S by the government of Novorogod, and W by that of Livonia. Peter the great wrested it from the Swedes, and it was conferred to him by the treaty of Nystadt in 1721. At that time, the inhabitants of the flat country were Finnish people, but little different from the Fins of Carelia, as to their language and manners. They were called Ichorki, and Ischortzi, from the river Ischora, which runs into the Neva. Ingria did not retain its Swedish privileges: on the contrary, Peter made a present of one part of the Ischortzi to certain Russian nobles; who, on their side, were obliged to people the less cultivated cantons of Ingria with colonies of Russians from their estates; and thence it is that a village of Russians is often surrounded by villages of Fins.
The Ischortzi have long followed agriculture. Their economy is an ill-chofen mean between that of the Russians and the Fins. They assemble in small villages, of five or ten farms each: and live miserably in small dirty huts. Their inclination to idleness and drinking leads them often to sell their stock, and the corn they have saved for sowing the fields. Some of them, however, imitate the Russian villagers, who are better managers, more at their ease, and in better circumstances. The Ingridians are a stupid, suspicious, thievish race, and dangerous from their phlegmatic temperament, and propensity to pilfering.
They resemble the gypsies, are vagabonds like them, calculate nativities, and tell fortunes. The dress of the men is like that of the Fin boors; but the habit of the women betrays a vanity, which, considering the poverty of this people, and the tyranny which their husbands and fathers exercise over them, may pass for luxury. The lower part of their dress resembles that of the Fin country women. Their shift has a neck and close wristbands, both of them pinked or wrought; the body and sleeves are large, the latter whimsically worked, and the body puffed with numberless plaits. Instead of a petticoat, they tie on two aprons: these are sometimes of cloth and sometimes of linen worked with different colours; that behind being much the widest, and the smaller one in front is generally adorned with glass beads and little shells. Several strings of these beads are worn round the neck, and fall upon the breasts; and they have heavy earrings, with the addition generally of strings of beads.

The girls wear their hair loose and uncovered; the married women, on the contrary, conceal their hair, like the Finnish women, with a long piece of linen, folded toward the middle into a kind of cap, while its extremities fall upon the back, and are supported by the girdle in such a manner that the whole makes a kind of spread sail over the shoulders. When they dress themselves to go to town, they commonly put on the Russ cap, which is ornamented with a peak in front, is lined with fur, and laced round the edges; with this they wear a long gown, made of coarse stuff, and fastened down the breast with buttons. Before the Russians conquered this country, the In-gridians had Lutheran ministers for every canton; but numbers of them have been since converted to the Greek faith.
They are addicted to absurd notions and pagan superstitions, which they mix with the ceremonials of Christianity.
They carry the figures of the saints into the woods in procession, and there pay them a formal worship. When a man is inclined to marry, he pur- chases a girl, and celebrates his nuptials at the church, to which they are accompanied by two women in veils, who sing compositions.
No sooner is the marriage ceremony performed, than the husband begins to treat his wife with severity, and thence-forward keeps her under strict discipline. The dead are buried by the priest of the profession to which they belong.
Their general opinion is, that they continue to live in the subterranean world in the same manner as they did on the surface of the earth; and that the grave is little more than a change of habitation: for which reason they bury their money, that they may have it to use in the other world.

Insh, a town of Scotland, in Aberdeenshire, 26 m WNW Aberdeen.

Inspruc, a fortified town of Germany, capital of Tyrol, with a strong castle. It was formerly the place where the archdukes of Austria resided; and here, in 1672, emperor Leopold I founded a university, which in 1782 was changed into a lyceum. The principal manufactures are gloves, silk and woollen stuffs, and all kinds of glass wares. Inspruc was entered by the French, in 1805. It is situate in a pleasant valley, on the river Inn, 60 m S Munich. Lon. 11 32 E. lat. 47 17 N.

Insterburg, a town of E Prussia, with a trade in corn and beer; seated on the Pregel, opposite the influx of the Inster, 45 m E by S Konigsberg.

Interlachen, a town of Switzerland, capital of a bailiwick of the same name, in the canton of Bern. It is seated between the lakes of Brientz and Thun, 28 m SSW Lucern, and 32 SE Bern.

Inveraray, a borough of Scotland, and the county-town of Argyshire, situate on the W side of Loch Fyne, at the influx of the Aray. It is neatly built, and has an elegant modern church, erected in the gothic style, with two places of worship under its roof. Here are manufactures of linen, woollen, and iron, and a trade in wool, timber, and oak bark; but its chief support is from the herring fishery. Near the town is Inveraray castle, the seat of the duke of Argyle; and in the neighbourhood is a considerable iron-work. It is 33 m NW Dumbarton, and 88 WNW Edinburg. Lon. 4 54 W, lat. 56 15 N.

Invergordon, a village of Scotland, in Rossshire, at the mouth of the frith of Cromarty, 8 m SSE Tain. It has a good harbour, and a regular ferry over the frith to the town of Cromarty.

Inverkelthing, a borough of Scotland, in Fifeshire, which has a considerable trade in coal and salt. Before the entrance of the harbour is a bay, which affords safe anchorage for ships in all winds; and the harbour itself is commodious, with excellent quays. It is situate on the N side of the frith of Forth, 12 m WNW Edinburg. Lon. 3 22 W, lat. 55 57 N.

Inverkip, a village of Scotland, in Renfrewshire, 3 m SSW Greenock. It is situate on the Kip, at its entrance into the frith of Clyde, and much frequented for sea-bathing.

Inverleithen, a town of Scotland, in Peebleshire, on the river Tweed, at the influx of the Leithen. Here is an extensive woollen manufacture, and a famous sulphurous spring. It is 3 m SSE Peebles, and 9 W Selkirk.

Inverness, a borough of Scotland, capital of a county of the same name, situate on both sides the river Ness, near its entrance into the frith of Moray. It has a commodious harbour, for vessels of 200 tons, and larger ones may ride in safety within a mile of the town. Here are six incorporated trades, a good salmon fishery, a large manufacture of ropes and canvas, several tan-works, and a considerable trade. The number of inhabitants was 8732 in 1801, and 10,757 in 1811. On an eminence are the ruins of the old castle, demolished by the rebels in 1746; and over the Ness is a bridge of seven arches. The court house is a handsome modern building, with a fine tower and spire; and here is an excellent academy, provided with a rector and four masters. Near this town, on Culloden heath, the duke of Cumberland gained a decisive victory over the rebels in 1746. To the W of the town is the hill of Craig Phatric, on the summit of which are the extensive remains of a vitrified fort. Inverness is 66 m NE Fort William, and 116 WNW Edinburg. Lon. 3 57 W, lat. 57 30 N.

Invernesshire, the most extensive county of Scotland; bounded on the N by Rossshire, E by the counties of Nairn, Elgin, and Aberdeen, S by those of Perth and Argyre, and W by the Atlantic ocean. It also includes several of the Hebrides. Independent of the islands, it is 80 m long and 50 broad; and is divided into 31 parishes, which contained 74,292 inhabitants in 1801, and 78,336 in 1811. The n part is mountainous and barren; the s part is also mountainous, and supposed to be the most elevated ground in Scotland. This county has several considerable lakes, and is divided, in a manner, into two equal parts, by those of Nefs, Olch, Lochy, and Linnhe; through which is now cutting the Caledonian canal, to unite the eastern and western oceans. The extensive plains which surround the lakes are, in general, fertile; and the high grounds feed many sheep and bees, the rearing and selling of which is the chief trade of the inhabitants; and numerous herds of goats are found in every district. The mountains and forests are inhabited by immense numbers of red and roe deer; the alpine and common hare, and other game, are also abundant. Limestone, iron-ore, and some traces of different minerals have been found in this county, with beautiful rock crystals of various tints; but no mines have been worked hitherto with much success. The principal rivers are the Spey and Beaulby.

Inverisaid, a village of Scotland, on the e side of Loch Lomond, 25 m n by w Dumbarton. Here is a small fort, and near it is a ferry over the lake.

Irak, or Irac Agemi, a province of Persia, bounded on the N by Aderbijan, Ghilan, and Mazanderan, E by Chorasfan, S by Farfistan and Kufistan, and W by Kurdistan. It includes the greatest part of the ancient Media, and is a large mountainous country, with vallies that seldom exceed 12 m in breadth. The mountains are barren and devoid of timber, but the vallies, where cultivated, yield abundance of corn. Ispahan is the capital.

Irak, or Irac Arabi, a province of Turkey in Asia, bounded on the N by Kurdistan and Diarbeck, E by Irak Agemi and Kufistan, and SW by the desert of Arabia. It is the ancient Chaldea, and a fertile country, watered by the Euphrates and Tigris. Bagdad is the capital.

Ireby, a town in Cumberland, with a market on Thursday, seated in a valley, at the source of the Ellen, 10 m NE Cockermouth, and 303 NNW London.

Ireland, an island of Europe, lying to the W of that of Great Britain. It is 280 m long and 160 broad; bounded on the E by St. George channel and the Irish sea, which separate it from England and Wales; on the NE by a channel, called the North Channel, 34 m broad, which separates it from Scotland; and on every other side by the ocean. It contains about 19,436,000 acres, and the population is upward of 5,000,000. Ireland is divided into four provinces; namely, Ulster to the N, Leinster to the E, Munster to the S, and

Connaught to the W; and these are subdivided into 32 counties. Ulster contains the counties of Down, Armagh, Monaghan, Cavan, Antrim, Londonderry, Tyrone, Fermanagh, and Donegal; Leinster has those of Dublin, Louth, Wicklow, Wexford, Longford, East Meath, West Meath, King, Queen, Kilkenny, Kildare, and Carlow; Munster includes Clare, Cork, Kerry, Limerick, Tipperary, and Waterford; and Connaught has Leitrim, Roscommon, Mayo, Sligo, and Galway. The climate of Ireland is mild and temperate, but more humid than in England. In general, it is a level country, well watered with lakes and rivers; and the soil, in most parts, is very good and fertile; even in those places where the bogs and morasses have been drained, there is good meadow ground. It produces corn, hemp, and flax, in great plenty; and there are so many cattle, that beef and butter are exported to foreign parts; and not only the English, but other ships, frequently come to be victualled here. The other commodities are, hides, wool, tallow, wood, salt, honey, and wax. The principal manufacture is fine linen cloth, which is brought to great perfection, and the trade in it is very great. This country is well situate for foreign trade, on account of its many secure and commodious bays and harbours. The principal rivers are the Shannon, Foyle, Liffey, Boyne, Sure, Barrow, Blackwater, and Lee. The laws of Ireland differ but little from those of England; and the established religion is the same; but the majority of the people are Roman catholics, and yet retain their nominal bishops and dignitaries. The ecclesiastical districts are four archbishoprics and eighteen bishoprics; the former are Armagh, Dublin, Cashel, and Tuam; the latter are, Meath, Kildare, Derry; Raphoe, Limerick, Ardferit and Aghadoe, Dromore, Elphin, Down and Connor, Waterford and Lismore, Leighlin and Ferns, Cloyne, Cork and Ross, Killaloe and Kilsenora, Kilmore and Ardagh, Clogher, Offory, Killala and Achonry, and Clonsfert and Kilmacduagh. Formerly, this kingdom had a parliament, which was subordinate to that of Great Britain; but, in 1800, it was deemed expedient that Ireland should be united to Great Britain. The two parliaments passed acts for that purpose, and the two kingdoms, at the commencement of 1801, were styled the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland: and 32 lords (four of them bishops) and 100 commoners of Ireland (two for each county, two for Dublin, two for Cork, one for Trinity college in Dublin, and one for each of the thirty-one most considerable cities, towns, and boroughs) were enacted to prevent that country in the Imperial Parliament, assembled in England. The lord lieutenant of Ireland, as well as the council, are appointed, from time to time, by the king. The common Irish are generally represented as an ignorant, uncivilised, and blundering sort of people, implacable and violent in all their affections, but quick of apprehension, courteous to strangers, and patient of hardships. Their diet consists chiefly of coarse bread, potatoes, and buttermilk; the favorite liquor is usquebaugh, an ardent distillation from corn; and the rural cottage is a wretched hovel of mud. The manners of the superior classes differ little from those of the same rank in England; but the gentry are more addicted to hunting and other robust exercises, than to literature and the arts. Dublin is the capital.

Irkutsk, the largest and least populous government of the Russian empire, comprising all the E part of Siberia, from the Northern ocean to the frontiers of Chinese Tartary, and from the boundaries of the government of Tobolsk to the Eastern ocean. This large territory was gradually conquered and appropriated by the Russians in their desultory excursions from Tobolsk. It is divided into the four provinces of Irkutsk, Nertchinsk, Yakutsk, and Okoth.

Irkutsk, a town of Siberia, capital of the government of the same name, and the see of a bishop. It is a place of considerable traffic, the caravans passing through it which trade to China, and being the seat of supreme jurisdiction over eastern Siberia. There are several churches and other edifices of stone, and the wooden houses are large and convenient. The inhabitants are estimated at 12,000. It stands on the river Angara, near the lake Baikal, 900 m ESE Tobolsk. Lon. 104 58 E, lat. 52 4 N.

Iroquois; see Lawrence, St.

Irrawaddy, or Iralatty, a river that rises in Tibet, flows s through the kingdoms of Birmah and Pegu, and enters the bay of Bengal by several mouths. On its banks are produced great quantities of the finest teak, so much esteemed in ship-building. The principal market for this valuable timber is Rangoon, at the most eastern mouth of this river.

Irtysb, a river of Siberia, which issues from the lake Saifan, in Chinese Tartary, runs NW between the two countries above 300 m, then flows by Omsk, Tobolsk, and Samarof, below which it joins the Ob.

Irwan, or Irivan; see Erivan.

Irvine, a river of Scotland, in Ayrshire, which passes by Newmills and Kilmarnock to the town of Irvine, below which it enters the frith of Clyde.

Irvine, a borough of Scotland, in Ayrshire, near the mouth of the river Irvine, with the ruin of a castle. It has a commodious harbour, a dock-yard, and manufactures of carpets, mullins, silks, lawns, &c. but the chief trade is the exporting of coal to Ireland. It is 10 m N Ayr, and 24 SW Glasgow. Lon. 4 36 W, lat. 55 39 N.

Irwell, a river in Lancashire, which rises above Bolton, flows thence SE to Manchester, and then SW to the Mersey, 7 m above Warrington.

Isabella, a town on the N coast of St. Domingo, now in ruins, but noted for being the first settlement of the immortal Columbus, in 1492. Lon. 71 2 W, lat. 19 55 N.

Ischia, an island of Naples, 16 m in circuit, lying 3 m off the coast of Terra di Lavoro. It is mountainous; but abounds in minerals, sulphur, fruit, and excellent wine. The air is healthy, and there are several hot baths, on which account it is much resorted to by invalids.

Ischia, an episcopal city of Naples, capital of the island of its name, with a strong fort. It stands upon a rock, which is joined to the island by a bridge, and is like a pyramid of houses piled one upon another. At the end of the bridge, next the city, are iron gates, which open in a subterranean passage, through which the city is entered. Lon. 14 2 E, lat. 40 41 N.

Iser, a river of Germany, which rises on the confines of Tyrol and Bavaria, passes by Munich and Landshut, and joins the Danube, between Straubing and Passau.

Iser, a department of France, including part of the late province of Dauphiny. It is so named from a river, which rises in Savoy, crosses this department by Grenoble, Moirans, and St. Marcellin, and joins the Rhone, above Valence. Grenoble is the capital.

Iserlohn, a town of Westphalia, in the county of Mark, with manufactures of iron, tin, velvets, silks, and stuffs. It is 40 m E by N Dusseldorf.

Isernia, a town of Naples, in the county of Molise, at the foot of the Apennines. In 1805 it was destroyed by an earthquake, and upward of 1500 persons perished. It is 12 m W Molise.

Isigny, a town of France, in the department of Calvados, 15 m W by N Bayeux.

Isis, a river that rises in Gloucestershire, near the village of Torleton, at the foot of Sapperton hill, 5 m SW Cirencester. It immediately enters Wiltshire, and there is joined by the Churn, from Cirencester, 2 m W of Cricklade, where their junction forms the Thames; but some writers have continued the name of Isis to the Thames till it receives the Thame at Dorchester.

Issun, a town of Russia, in the government of Kharkof, with four churches, one of them built of stone by order of Peter the great. It has a considerable traffic in Greek and Turkish commodities, and is seated on both sides the Donetz, 68 m SSE Charkow.

Isla, or Ila, an island of Scotland, one of the Hebrides, to the SW of Jura, from which it is separated by a narrow channel, called the Sound of Isla. It is 21 m long and 15 broad. On the E side the surface is hilly, and covered with heath, but the greater part of the island is flat, and capable of improvement. In the centre is Loch Finlagan, about 3 m in circuit, with an islet of the same name in the middle, where the great lord of the isles resided; but the palaces and offices are now in ruins. Isla has mines of iron, lead, copper, emery, quicksilver, and black-lead; with immense stores of limestone, marl, coral, and shell-sand, for manure. Much flax is raised here, a great number of cattle fed, and a large quantity of whisky distilled. The principal village is Bowmore, which has a convenient harbour

Italy, a country of Europe, bounded on the N and NE by Swisserland and Germany, E by the gulf of Venice, S by the Mediterranean, and W by that sea and France. Its figure has been compared to that of a high boot: its length, from the utmost point of the duchy of Milan to the gulf of Squillace, is 670 m; its breadth, between France and Germany, is 350 m, but the mediate breadth between the Mediterranean and the gulf of Venice is only 110. This classical and interesting country has been, in all ages of history, divided into three parts, the northern, central, and southern. The northern had the appellation of Cisalpine Gaul; the central was the seat of Roman and Etrurian power; and the southern, having received many Greek colonies, was called Magna Græcia. In the middle ages the kingdom of Lombardy and that of Naples held the N and S extremes, and the Ecclesiastical and Tuscan states occupied the centre. In more modern times the northern part became divided into a great number of states; and previous to the late alterations made by the French the whole country was divided in the following manner. Between the confines of France and Swisserland, on the W and N were the continental dominions of the king of Sardinia, namely, Savoy, Nice, Piedmont, part of Milanese, and Oneglia. To the NE were the territories of Venice, which are enumerated under that article. South of these, were the dominions of the emperor of Germany, namely, part of Milanese and Mantuan; and S of the latter is Modenese, which belonged to the duke of Modena. West of Modenese is the duchy of Parma, whose sovereign is of the house of Bourbon; to the SW of which lies the republic of Genoa; and SE of this, that of Lucca. Hence extends, along the coast of the Mediterranean, the grand duchy of Tuscany. The Ecclesiastical State, or territory of the pope, lies NE and E of Tuscany, between the gulf of Venice and the Mediterranean; and all S of this is the kingdom of Naples. Of the present unsettled state of this country a brief account must be given. Savoy, Nice, and Piedmont have been annexed to France. By the treaty of Campo Formio, in 1797, the Venetian territories to the E and N of the river Adige were ceded to Austria; and the remainder of the Venetian states, with the duchies of Modena, Milan, and Mantua, the principality of Massa, and the three legations of Ferrara, Bologna, and Romagna in the Ecclesiastical State, were erected into a government by the French, and called the Cisalpine Republic. This republic was overturned in 1799, but reitored after the battle of Marengo in 1800; and in 1802 it received a new constitution, under the name of the Italian Republic, and Bonaparte, then first consul of France, was elected president. In 1805, the Italian republic was erected into a kingdom, and the emperor of France assumed the title of King of Italy. Then the Austrian part of the Venetian states were added to its territories, by the treaty of Pressburg; and afterward Valteline and the counties of Chiavenne and Bormio, from the country of the Grisons, were annexed. The kingdom of Italy is divided into departments, and the city of Milan is the capital. See Lufcany, Ecclesiastical State, and Naples, for further changes in the government of this country, the whole of which seems to be under the control of France. The air of Italy is very different, according to the different situations of the countries it contains: in those on the NE side of the Apennines, it is more temperate; but on the SW it is very warm: in Campagna di Roma, and Ferrarese, it is said to be unwholesome, from the lands not being duly cultivated, nor the marshes drained; but in the other parts it is generally pure, dry, and healthy. The principal rivers are the Po, Tiber, Aino, Adige, and Yar; and there are several fine lakes, as the Maggiore, Lugano, Como, Garda, Pergusa, Bracciano, and Celano. The soil, in general, is very fertile. It produces a great variety of wines, and the best oil in Europe; excellent silk in abundance; corn of all sorts, but not in such plenty as in other countries; oranges, lemons, citrons, pomegranates, almonds, raisins, sugar, figs, peaches, apricots, pears, apples, filberts, chestnuts, &c. Most of these fruits were at first imported by the Romans from Asia Minor, Greece, Africa, and Syria, and were not the natural products of the soil. This country also yields good pasture, and abounds with cattle, sheep, goats, buffalos, wild boars, mules, and horses. The forests are well stored with game; and the mountains have mines of iron, lead, alum, sulphur, marble, alabaster, jasper, porphyry, &c. with a great variety of aromatic herbs, trees, shrubs, and evergreens. Wine, oil, perfumes, fruits, and silks, are the principal articles of exportation; and great sums of money are expended by travellers in the purchase of pictures, curiosities, relics, antiquities, &c. No country has produced better politicians, historians, poets, musicians, painters, and sculptors; that is, since the revival of the arts and sciences, exclusive of those of ancient times. The Italians are generally well proportioned; but of their complexion they cannot boast. With respect to dress, they follow the fashions of the countries on which they border, or to which they are subject. They are very affable, courteous, ingenious, sober, and ready-witted; but extremely jealous, vindictive, lascivious, ceremonious, and superstitious. In their disposition they are a medium between the French and Spaniards; neither so gay and volatile as the one, nor so grave and solemn as the other. Their fondness for greens, fruits, and vegetables of all kinds, contributes to their contentment and satisfaction; and an Italian gentleman or peasant can be luxurious at a very small expense. The women affect yellow hair, as did formerly the Roman ladies and courtizans, and use paints and washes, both for their hands and face. Masquerades, gaming, horse-races without riders, and conversations or assemblies, are the chief diversions of the Italians, excepting religious exhibitions, in which they are pompous beyond all other nations. There are forty-one archbishoprics in Italy, but the bishoprics are too indefinite and arbitrary to be depended on; the pope creating or suppressing them as he pleases. The established religion is the Roman catholic; but all sects live unmolested, provided no gross insult is offered to their worship. Their language, a corruption of the Latin, is remarkable for its smoothness, and is said to be spoken in its greatest purity at Florence.

Itata, a province of Chili, watered by a river of the same name. The best wine in Chili is obtained here, and being produced from lands belonging to the inhabitants of Conception, has received the name of Conception; and much gold is found in the mountains and rivers. The capital is Jesus of Coulemu.

tures of Robinson Crusoe. The island is about 40 m in circuit, and at a distance appears like a naked rock; but there are intersecting vallies covered with wood, and a great number of goats on the sides of every hill. In 1766, a settlement was made by the Spaniards, on the N and highest part of this island, at Cumberland bay, which is defended by batteries. The town is situate in a fine valley, between two high hills, and the houses have gardens, with arbours shaded with vines. Lon. 79 30 W, lat. 33 40 S.

Jucatan, or Yucatan, a province and peninsula of New Spain, in the audience of Mexico, lying between the bays of Campeachy and Honduras, and bounded at the isthmus by Tabasco, Chiapa, and Vera Paz. It projects from the continent 360 m, and is 150 in breadth. The S part has mountains, rivers, and lakes; and produces a great quantity of logwood and mahogany, as also sugar, cassia, and maize. Here the English have a settlement, on the coast of the bay of Honduras, between the rivers Bellize and Rio Hondo. The N part is less productive, and not only without mountains, but almost without any inequality of ground. The inhabitants are supplied with water from pits, and, wherever they dig them, find it in abundance; but there is not a river or stream. Merida is the capital.

Judenburg, a town of Germany, capital of Upper Stiria, with a handsome castle. The public buildings, with the square, are magnificent. This town was taken by the French, in 1797. It is seated on the Muer, 40 m W Gratz. Lon. 14 24 E, lat. 47 10 N.

Jura, an island of Scotland, one of the Hebrides, lying NNE of Isla. It is 21 m long and 7 broad, separated from the mainland of the county of Argyll, by a strait 4 m wide, called the Sound of Jura. On the W coast are four mountains of a conic form, called the Paps of Jura, one of which is elevated 2600 feet above the level of the sea. The rest of the island is rugged, and generally covered with heath; but it feeds numerous herds of sheep and goats. Here is abundance of iron ore; and on the W coast a great quantity of fine sand, which is carried away for the manufacture of glass. It has a village of the same name, on the E coast, with a good harbour. Lon. 5 44 W, lat. 56 8 N.

Jura, a department of France, including part of the late province of Franche Comté. It contains mines of iron of a superior quality, mines of copper and lead, and many quarries of black marble, jasper, and alabaster. It takes its name from Mount Jura. Lons le Saunier is the capital.

Jura. Mounts, a chain of mountains which begins in the canton of Zurich, in Switzerland, extends along the Rhine, into the canton of Soleure and the principality of Neuchatel, branches out toward Pays de Vaud, separates that country from France, and continues beyond the frontiers of the Genevois as far as the Rhone. In Pays de Vaud, this chain forms many elevated valleys; particularly one on the top of that part called Mount Joux, which is watered by two picturesque lakes, the largest called Joux, and the other Brenet.

Kalkas, a tribe of the Mongul Tartars, in Chinese Tartary. They inhabit the country N of the Mongul Tartars, properly so called, which stretches as far as the kingdom of the Eluths; and is near 300 leagues in extent from E to W. They live in tents, on the banks of their numerous rivers, the principal one called Kalka Pira. They adore a lama of the second order, who is held in such veneration, that bonzes from China, Hindoostan, Pegu, &c. come to pay their devotions at his residence in Iben Pira.

Kallinburg, a seaport of Denmark, in the isle of Zealand, seated on an inlet of the Great Belt, with the best harbour, next to Copenhagen, on the island. It is 55 m W by N Copenhagen. Lon. 11 11 E, lat. 55 47 N.

Kalmucs, a nation of Tartars, inhabiting that part of the Russian government of Caucasia, which lies between the Volga and the Ural, toward the Caspian sea. They all live in tents, and remove from place to place in quest of pasture for their horses, camels, cows, and sheep. They neither sow corn, nor make hay for their cattle, so that they live without bread, or any sort of vegetable; and, in winter, their cattle fare like the wild beasts. Their food is flesh (especially that of horses) fish, wild fowl, and venison; and they have great plenty of milk, butter, and cheese; but mare's milk is the most esteemed, and from it they make a strong spirit, to which they are partial. They are divided into a number of hordes or clans, each under their own particular khan, and all acknowledge the authority of one principal khan, who is called Orchicurtikhan, or the king of kings, and derives his pedigree from the great Tamerlane. All of them, however, have submitted to the government of Russia, or live under its protection. They are pagans, and believe in the transmigra-tion of souls. In person they are of a low stature, and bow-legged, occasioned by their being so continually on horseback, or sitting with their legs below them. Their faces are broad and flat, with a flat nose and little black eyes, distant from each other like the Chinese. They are of an olive colour, and their faces full of wrinkles, with very little beard; they shave their heads, leaving only a tuft of hair on the crown. The better sort wear coats of stuff or silk, with a wide furcoat of sheep-skins, and a cap of the same. Their only weapons were the cimeter, lance, and bow; but they now use fire-arms. In winter they are obliged to cross the river, and live on the bare plains of Astracan, where their only firing is the dried dung of the cattle, and the cattle themselves starving on the scanty produce of a desert. In spring, their former habitation on the E side of the river is overflowed, for near a month, by the melting of the snow; and when the water subsides, they swim their loaded camels and cattle over the river, where the intervening islands make the passage easiest. When they go upon an expedition, every one takes a sheep with him for his provision, and three horses, which he rides alternately; and when any one of them fails, they kill it and divide the flesh, putting pieces of it under their saddle, and after riding some time upon it, they eat it without further preparation. Their kibbets, or tents, are round, with a fire in the middle, and a hole at the top to let out the smoke, on which is a krine that can be turned against the wind. The tents can be enlarged or contracted at pleasure, their sides being made of wicker-work, and the cross sticks jointed for folding together or extending; and they are covered over with thick felt, more or less according as the season is cold or warm.

Kamnieck, a strong town of Poland, capital of Podolia, and a bishop's see, with a castle. When the Russians seized part of the Polish territories in 1793, this fortress held out a long time before it surrendered. The castle is seated on a craggy rock, 85 m W Braclaw, and 100 SE Lemburg. Lon. 26 30 E, lat. 48 58 N.

Kamnitz, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Leitmeritz, with a manufacture of stockings, 21 m NNE Leitmeritz.

Kamtschatka, a peninsula on the E coast of Siberia, extending from 51 to 61 N lat. The isthmus, joining it to the continent on the N, lies between the gulfs of Olutorok and Peushink; and its extremity to the S is cape Lopatka. The greatest breadth is 240 m, being from the mouth of the river Tigril to the river Kamtschatka; and toward each extremity it gradually becomes narrower. It is bounded on the N by the country of the Koriacks, NE by the sea of Kamtschatka, SE by the Pacific ocean, and W by the sea of Okotok. A chain of mountains extends the whole length of the peninsula, and almost equally divides it; whence several rivers take their rise and pursue their course to the sea. In the S part is a volcano; and near it are the hot baths of Natchikin, where the hot water falls in a rapid cascade 300 feet. The soil, in general, is barren and heathy, with stunted trees thinly scattered; but some parts are said to produce good grass. The severity of the climate is equal to the sterility of the soil; for in computing the seasons here, spring should be omitted. Summer may be said to extend from the middle of June to the middle of September; October may be considered as an autumn;

from which period to the middle of June it is all dreary winter. Some vegetables grow here in a wild state, such as chervil, garlic, onions, angelica, and celery; also a variety of berries, which are gathered at proper seasons, and preserved by mashing them into a thick jam; these constitute a considerable part of the winter provisions, serving as a general sauce to dried fish. Here are also some turnips and turnip-radishes, upon a few spots of ground in the valleys; and this is the utmost extent of garden cultivation. The inhabitants consist of Kamtschadales, Russians, and Cossacs, and a mixture produced by their intermarriages. Their habitations are of three sorts, called jourts, balagans, and log-houses. They inhabit the first in the winter, and the second in the summer; in the third, introduced by the Russians, only the more wealthy people reside. The external appearance of a jourts resembles a round squat hillock; a hole serving for a chimney, window, and door, is left in the centre; and the inhabitants go in and out by the assistance of a long pole, having notches deep enough to afford a little security for the toes. The upper garment of the Kamtschadales resembles a wagoner's frock. If for summer wear, it is made of nankin; if intended for winter, it is made of a skin, having one side tanned, and the hair preserved on the other, which is worn innermost. A close jacket of nankin, or other cotton stuff, is the next under this; and beneath that a shirt made of thin Persian silk of any colour. They wear long breeches and boots made of skins, with the hair innermost. They have also a fur cap, with two flaps that are usually tied up close to the head, but are permitted to fall round the shoulders in bad weather. A plurality of wives is allowed among them; and there is no less sensuality in their jourts, than in the harems of the Turks. They are subject to the Russians, and their trade consists in furs and skins.

Kamtschatkoi, Niznei, a town of Siberia, capital of Kamtschatka, with a citadel, arsenal, and barracks. It is seated on the N side of the river Kamtschatka, 20 m from its mouth. Lon. 161 50 E, lat. 56 30 N.

Kefl, a village of Asiatic Turkey, in Irak, 14 m s Haleb; celebrated for the tomb of the prophet Ezekiel, which is annually visited by a number of Jews.

Kehl, a strong fortress of Suabia, seated on the Rhine, over which is a bridge to Strasburg; and to that city, when an imperial one, it belonged. Some of the ancient fortifications are in ruins, but it is still an important pass between France and Germany. It was taken by the French in June 1795; retaken by the Austrians on September 18 following; but the French regained possession of it the same day. In 1808 it was transferred to France.

Kej; see Kidge.

Keighley, a town in W Yorkshire, with a market on Wednesday, and manufactures of woollen cloths, cottons, and lindseys; seated near the river Aire, 12 m n Halifax, and 206 n by w London.

Keith, a town of Scotland, in Banffshire, with manufactures of flax; seated on the Isla, which a little below forms a fine cascade, called the Linn of Keith. It is 12 m ssw Cullen, and 41 nw Aberdeen.

Kelbra, a town of Upper Saxony, in Thuringia, near the river Helm, 10 m s Stolberg.

Kelheim, a town and castle of Bavaria, with a Franciscan convent, a considerable brewery, and extensive magazines of salt; situate at the conflux of the Altmuhl and Danube, 10 m ssw Ratlsbon.

Kells, a borough of Ireland, in Meath, on the river Blackwater, 12 m n by w Trim.

Kelfo, a town of Scotland, in Roxburghshire, with a bridge over the Tweed, immediately below the influx of the Teviot. The abbey, magnificent ruins of which still remain, was founded by David I. Near it is Fleurs, the noble palace of the duke of Roxburg; and, on an eminence, the ruin of Roxburg castle. Kelfo has manufactures of carpeting, flannels, leather, linen, and shoes. It is 10 m nne Jedburg, and 42 se Edinburg. Lon. 2 29 w, lat. 55 37 n.

Kelwah, or Kelat, a town of Persia, in Mekran, and the chief place of the Balouches. It is surrounded by a low mud wall, and the palace of the khan stands on a very high hill. The bazar is well supplied, and it enjoys a considerable trade. It is seated on the Nehink, 350 m ne Kidge. Lon. 65 57 w, lat. 29 6 n.

Kemi, or Kiemi; see Kimi.

Kenmoo, a town of Negroland, capi-

Kenning, a town of the palatinate of Bavaria, 15 m ssw Bayreuth, and 26 n Amberg.

Kempten, a town of Suabia, with a late princely abbey of the Benedictine order. It has a great trade in linen, and is seated on the Iller, 45 m s by w Augsburg.

Ken, a river in Westmorland, which flows by Kendal, and enters the sandy wash of Lancashire, called Morecambe Bay. It has a cataract near its mouth, which obstructs the navigation.

Ken, a river of Scotland, which rises in the nw part of Kirkcudbrightshire, flows to New Galloway, thence expands into a lake, 4 m long and a mile broad, and then joins the river Dec.

Kendal, a town of Westmorland, governed by a mayor, with a market on Saturday. It is seated on the Ken, over which are two stone bridges, and one of wood leading to the castle, which is now in ruins. It has a spacious church, and a free-school endowed with some exhibitions to Queens college in Oxford. Here are manufactures of coarse woollen, woven and knit stockings, cottons, leather, fish-hooks, wool-cards, and gunpowder. It has seven trading companies, who have each a hall; and its trade is very considerable, notwithstanding the disadvantage of its river for water carriage. The number of inhabitants was 6892 in 1801, and 7505 in 1811. It is 46 m s Carlisle, and 262 nwn London. Lon. 2 52 w, lat. 54 15 n.

Kene, or Caana, a town of Egypt, with a manufacture of black earthenware. The caravans assemble here in their journey to Coseir. It is seated on the Nile, 280 m s Cairo. Lon. 32 2 e, lat. 26 2 n.

Kengis, a village of Sweden, in W Bothnia, noted for a considerable iron forge, and the last to the north; seated on the Tornea, a little above the influx of the Muonio, 90 m n by w Tornea.

Kenilworth, a town in Warwickshire, with a market on Wednesday. Here was a famous castle, the remains of which form one of the most picturesque objects in the kingdom. It is 5 m n Warwick, and 95 nw London.

Kenmare, a town of Ireland, in the county of Kerry, at the head of a river or bay of the same name, 28 m sse Tralee, and 46 w Cork.

river Tay. Near 2 m to the NE is Taimouth, the principal seat of the earl of Breckland, celebrated by Burns, the poet. Kenmore is 27 m NW Perth, and 36 N Stirling.

Kennebec, a river of Massachusetts, in the district of Maine, which enters the Atlantic ocean, between the bays of Casco and Penobscot. The head of its navigable waters is a basin, 46 m from the sea, very commodious for the anchoring of vessels.

Kennes, a river of England, which rises among the chalky hills in Wiltshire, and flows to Newbury, in Berkshire, where it becomes navigable: it is then augmented by the Lamborn, and runs to Reading, below which it enters the Thames. From this river, at Newbury, is a canal to the Avon, at Bath.

Kenington, a village in Middlesex, a mile W London. Here is a royal palace, formerly a seat of lord chancellor Finch, and purchased of that nobleman by William III. The gardens have since been considerably augmented, by upward of 350 acres taken from Hyde-park, and are now a fashionable promenade.

Kent, a county of England, bounded on the N by the Thames and the German ocean, E by the same ocean, SE and S by the English channel and Sussex, and W by Surry. It is 58 m long and 36 broad, containing 935,680 acres; is divided into five lathes, subdivided into 62 hundreds, and 405 parishes; has two cities and 28 market-towns; and sends 18 members to parliament. The number of inhabitants was 307,624 in 1801, and 373,095 in 1811. In the soil and face of the country there is a great diversity. The banks of the Thames are low and marshy, but backed by a range of chalky eminences, sometimes rising to a moderate height. This kind of hard chalky soil, inclining to barrenness, extends to the NE extremity of the county, and thence round to Dover, exhibiting its nature in the lofty white cliffs, which here bound the island, and produce that striking appearance at sea which gave it the name of Albion. The S part of Kent, called the Weald, is a flat and woody tract, of a clayey soil, and fertile. The midland and western districts are a mixture of hill and dale, arable and pasture, equal in pleasantries to any part of England. This county produces, beside the usual objects of agriculture, large quantities of hops; fruit of various kinds, especially cherries and apples, for the London markets; madder for dying; timber in the woody parts; and birch twigs for brooms, which form no inconsiderable article of trade for the metropolis. The country inland from Dover, consisting chiefly of open downs, is excellent for the feeding of sheep; and many are fattened to an extraordinary size in Romney marsh. The principal rivers, beside the Thames, are the Medway, Darent, Stour, Cray, and Rother. The cities of Kent are Canterbury and Rochester, but Maidstone is the county-town.

Kensaiiffe, a ridge of mountains, in the S part of Tibet, bordering on Hindoostan. On the W side of this ridge are the two heads of the Ganges, and from its E side issues the Burrampooter.

Kentucky, one of the United States of America, 350 m long and from 30 to 190 broad; bounded on the N by Ohio, E by Virginia, S by Tennessee, and W by the rivers Mississippi and Ohio. It is divided into fourteen counties, Lincoln, Fayette, Bourbon, Mercer, Jefferson, Nelson, Madison, Woodford, Mason, Washington, Clark, Scott, Logan, and Franklin. The other principal rivers are the Kentucky, Licking, Green, Cumberland, and Great Kenhaway, which all flow into the Ohio. The soil is amazingly fertile in the central part; to the E and W it is mountainous, and the S is principally composed of the Barrens, a sterile country destitute of water. Tobacco, hemp, cotton, and the different grains of Europe, but particularly maize and wheat, are cultivated. The country, in general, may be considered as well timbered, producing large trees of many kinds: those peculiar to it are the sugar-tree, which grows in great plenty, and furnishes excellent sugar; and the honey locust, which is surrounded by large thorny spikes, bearing broad and long pods in form of peas, has a sweet taste, and makes excellent beer. Here are also the coffee-tree, papwa, cucumber, black mulberry, wild cherry, buck-eye, and some other kinds of trees not common elsewhere. There is plenty of fine cane, on which the cattle feed; and where no cane grows, there is abundance of wild rye, clover, and buffalograss. The mountainous parts produce a great quantity of ginseng. Iron ore and lead are found in abundance; and there are many large caves, some of which extend above a mile under a limestone rock, supported by curious arches and pillars. The waters produce plenty of fish and fowl; and especially on the Ohio, the geese and ducks are amazingly numerous. The land fowls are turkies; a species of grouse, which the inhabitants call pheasants; and quails, to which they give the name of partridges. Serpents are not numerous, and such as are to be found in other parts of the continent, except the bull, the horned, and the mockalon snakes. Among the native animals are deers, bears, wild cats, wolves, beavers, otters, foxes, rabbits, squirrels, racoons, and opossums. Most of the species of the domestic quadrupeds have been introduced since the settlements, such as horses, cows, sheep, and hogs. In 1810 the number of inhabitants was 406,511. Frankfort is the capital.

Kentucky, a river in the state of its name, which rises in the Laurel mountains, and after a general NW course of 200 m, enters the Ohio in lat. 38 20 N. It is navigable 150 m. Its banks may rather be called precipices, for, almost every where, they consist of 300 or 400 feet of solid perpendicular limestone rock; in some parts of a fine white marble, curiously arched, pillared, or blocked up into fine building stones.

Kentzingen, a town of Suabia, in Brisgau, on the river Elz, 13 m NNW Friburg.

Kerbela; see Mesched Hossain.

Kercolang, an island in the Indian ocean, about 80 m in circuit. The face of the country seems to be steep hills and extensive valleys, and every part to be covered with trees and verdure, with some pleasant cultivated grounds. The inhabitants are Malays. Lon. 126 30 E, lat. 4 28 N.

Kerguelen Land, an island in the Southern ocean, visited by Cook, in 1776. For its sterility, it might properly have been called the Island of Desolation; but Cook was unwilling to rob Kerguelen of the honour of its bearing his name. On the NE coast is a good and safe bay, named Christmas Harbour. Lon. 69 4 E, lat. 48 41 S.

Kerkeni; see Querquini.

Kerkisla, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in Diarbeki, at the conflux of the Khabour with the Euphrates, 90 m SE Racca, and 105 NW Anah.

Kerkouk, a city of Kurdistan, the capital of a district and residence of a pacha. It is surrounded by a mud wall, and on an eminence that is nearly perpendicular on all sides, below which is an extensive suburb. The country around is hilly; and in a pass through a range of rocky mountains, on the N, are a number of springs that produce an inexhaustible supply of naphtha. It is 135

m SSE Betlis. Lon. 44 58 E, lat. 35 29 N.

Kerman, a province of Persia, bounded on the N by Chorasan, NE by Segistan, SE by Mekran, and W by the strait of Ormus, Laristan, and Farsistan. The northern part is desolate and barren, but toward the south the land is fertile. Many sheep are bred here, and the inhabitants drive a great trade in their wool.

Kerman, or Sirgan, a city of Persia, capital of the province of Kerman. It was plundered and destroyed in the civil wars, in 1794; and the present fortifications enclose but a small portion of the ancient city, which is in a most ruinous state. It is celebrated for its beautiful shawls, carpets, and stuffs; and stands on the W side of an extensive plain, 180 m NNE Gombron. Lon. 56 45 E, lat. 29 30 N.

Kerpen, a town of France, in the department of Roer, lately of Germany, in the duchy of Juliers. It has a collegiate church, and is seated on the Erft, 14 m SSE Juliers.

Kerry, a county of Ireland, in the province of Munster, 57 m long and 45 broad; bounded on the E by the counties of Limerick and Cork, W by the Atlantic ocean, N by the Shannon, which separates it from Thomond, and S by Desmond and the ocean. It is divided into 84 parishes, contains about 107,000 inhabitants, and sends four members to parliament. The southern part is plain, and fertile in corn; but the greater part is mountainous, and chiefly adapted for grazing. Considerable quantities of beef, butter, hides, and tallow, are exported from its excellent harbours. Tralee is the capital.

Kertch, a seaport of Crimea, on the strait of Taman, and on the site of the ancient Panticapeum. It was formerly of great importance, but the Russians have lately reduced it to extreme insignificance; yet its ruins, and the many antiquities in its vicinity, still make it interesting. Within the fortrefs, now a ruin, stands the church, erected in the year 757. It is 7 m W by S Yenikale, and 12 NW Taman.

Keschim, a seaport of Arabia Felix, in Hadramaut, 80 m E Shibam. Lon. 50 50 E, lat. 15 25 N.

Kelb, or Sebz, a town of Usbec Tartary, in Bokharia, once the ordinary summer residence of Timur, who surrounded it with walls, and built a new palace in 1379. It is 35 m S by W Samarcand.

Kessel, a town of the Netherlands, in the late Prussian Gelderland, with a handsome castle, seated on the Maefe, 7 m N Ruremonde.

Keffeldorf, a village of Upper Saxony, 7 m W Dresden, where a victory was gained by the king of Prussia over the Saxons in 1745.

Keswick, a town in Cumberland, with a market on Saturday; seated in a vale of its name, near the rapid river Greeta. This vale is much visited by the admirers of nature: here is the lake of Keswick, or Derwent-water; and to the N of this soars the lofty mountain Skiddaw, one of the most distinguished in England. Keswick has manufactures of stuffs, flannels, &c. It is 25 m NW Kendal, and 291 NNW London.

Kettering, a town in Northamptonshire, with a market on Friday, and manufactures of tammies, ferges, lalings, &c. It is 12 m NE Northampton, and 74 NW London.

Kesfchberg, or Kiade, a town of Upper Saxony, in Misnia, 6 m SE Merzburg.

Kevo, a village in Surry, 7 m W by S London. Here is a royal palace, built by his present majesty; and a stone bridge over the Thames, to Brentford.

Kexholm, the eastern part of Finland, belonging partly to the Swedes, and partly to the Russians. See Wiburg.

Kexholm, a town of Russia, in the government of Wiburg, seated on two islands in the river Woxon, which here flows into Lake Ladoga. The houses are built of wood, but it is well fortified, and has a strong castle. It is 60 m NE Wiburg, and 67 N Petersburg. Lon. 30 25 E, lat. 61 3 N.

Keynsham, a town in Somersetshire, with a market on Thursday, and a trade in malt; seated on the Chew, at its conflux with the Avon, 5 m SE Bristol, and 114 W London.

Khiva, the capital of the country of Charasm. It has a strong wall of earth, with three gates, turrets at small distances, and a broad ditch full of water. The houses are low, mostly built with mud, the roofs flat, and covered with earth. It stands on a rising ground, amid fertile plains, 210 m NW Bokhara. Lon. 59 20 W, lat. 40 50 N.

Khoi, a town of Persia, in Aderbijan, surrounded by a wall, with towers that present a triangular front. It has 20 mosques, and about 50,000 inhabitants, of which the greater part are Armenians. It stands in a rich and beautiful plain, near the river Otour, 85 m WNW Tabriz. Lon. 45 12 E, lat. 38 30 N.

Khum; see Kom.

Kia-king, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Tche-kiang. The streets have beautiful piazzas to shelter passengers from the sun and rain; and there is scarcely a house where they do not breed silkworms. There are many triumphal arches both in the city and suburbs; and several marble towers on the sides of a canal to the W of the city. It is 590 m SSE Peking. Lon. 120 14 E, lat. 30 50 N.

Kiakta, a town of Siberia, in the government of Irkutsk, on the borders of Chinese Tartary. It has a considerable fur trade, and is the mart of the Russian and Chinese commerce. It stands on a small river, near its conflux with the Selenga, 75 m SSW Selengink. Lon. 106 30 E, lat. 50 20 N.

Kiangari, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in Natolia, chief place of a sangiacat, with a castle on a rock. It is 230 m E Bursa. Lon. 34 47 E, lat. 39 56 N.

Kiang-nan, a province of China, bounded on the W by Ho-nan and Hou-quang, S by Tche-kiang and Kiang-si, E by the gulf of Nan-king, and N by Chan-tong. It is of vast extent, and contains 14 cities of the first rank, and 93 of the second and third, which are very populous, and of the greatest note for trade in the empire. It is full of lakes, rivers, and canals; and its silks, cottons, japanned goods, and paper, are in high esteem. Nan-king is the capital.

Kiang-nin; see Nan-king.

Kiang-si, a province of China, bounded on the N by Kiang-nan, W by Hou-quang, S by Quang-tong, and E by Fokien and Tche-kiang. The N part contains the great Po-yang lake, and some extensive morasses; the middle and S parts abound in mountains, but there are fine valleys among them. It contains 13 cities of the first rank, and 78 of the second and third. The arrack in this province is excellent; and its porcelain is the finest and most valuable in the empire. Nan-tchang is the capital.

Kian-ku, the largest river of Asia. It rises on the N borders of Tibet, flows E to the confines of Tartary, then S through Lower Tibet into China, entering the province of Yunnan, where it turns to the E, and crossing the provinces of Se-tchuen, Hou-quang, and Kiang-nan, enters the Eastern ocean, opposite the island of Tsong-ming, after a course of about 2200 m. Near its source it is called, by the Eleuths, Porticho or Petchow. At the place where the Kian-ku bends to the s, it is on the opposite side of the mountains which give rise to the Hoan-ho; and these two great rivers afterward part to the distance of above 1000 m, yet finally discharge themselves into the same sea at about the distance of 100 m from each other.

Kiburg, a town of Swisserland, in the canton of Zurich, with a castle, seated on the Theoff, 14 m ENE Zurich.

Kidderminster, a corporate town in Worcesterhire, with a market on Thursday. It is the first mart in England for beautiful carpets, and has also manufactures of poplins, crapes, bombazeens, &c. The number of inhabitants was 6110 in 1801, and 8038 in 1811. The Staffordshire and Worcesterhire canal passes this place. It is seated on the Stour, 14 m SE Bridgenorth, and 126 NW London.

Kidge, or Kej, a city of Persia, capital of the province of Mekran. The fort stands on a high precipice, on the right bank of the Nehink, and is surrounded by the town. The country in its vicinity is flat, and produces great quantities of dates. It is 320 m SE Kerman. Lon. 60 55 E, lat. 26 25 N.

Kidwely, a town of Wales, in Carmarthenshire, governed by a mayor, with a market on Tuesday. It stands on a creek of the Bristol channel, and has a canal to some collieries, whence coal is brought and exported. Here also is an iron foundery, and a tin mill. On the opposite bank of the creek, where the old town formerly stood, are the remains of a castle. It is 8 m S Carmarthen, and 226 W by N London.

Kief; see Kiof.

Kiel, a strong town of Lower Saxony, in Holstein, with a castle and a university. It stands on a peninsula, in a bay of the Baltic, and has a commodious harbour for ships of the largest size. It is one of the most commercial places in Holstein; and its trade is augmented by means of the Eyder canal, to Rendiburg. Kiel is 37 m NW Lubeck, and 46 N by E Hamburg. Lon. 10 16 E, lat. 54 21 N.

Kien-ning, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Fo-kien. At the time of the conquest of China by the Tartars, it sustained two sieges, in the last of which it was taken, and all the inhabitants were put to the sword. It was afterward re-established, by the Tartars, and is a place of considerable trade. It stands on the river Min-ho, 260 m SE Nan-king. Lon. 117 2 E, lat. 27 5 N.

Kien-tchang, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Kiang-si. It is seated in a fertile country, 340 m SSW Nan-king. Lon. 116 35 E, lat. 27 35 N.

Kieou-kiang, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Kiang-si, situate on the Kian ku, immediately above the influx of the Poyang-hou. It is the rendezvous of all the barks that pass to and from other places in this province, and the provinces of Kiangnan and Hou-quang. It is 250 m SW Nan-king. Lon. 116 0 E, lat. 29 54 N.

Kilbarchan, a village of Scotland, on the W side of Loch Winnoch, 5 m W Renfrew. It is a manufacturing place, and has extensive bleach-fields.

Kilbeggan, a borough of Ireland, in W Meath, seated on the Bosna, 14 m E Athlone, and 42 W Dublin.

Kilbride, a town of Scotland, in Lanarkshire, noted for its cotton manufactures, and for being the birthplace of Dr. William Hunter and his brother John, two celebrated anatomists. It is 6 m S by E Glasgow.

Kilcalmonil, a town of Scotland, in Argyleshire, and in the peninsula of Cantyre, 17 m N Campbellton.

Kilcock, a town of Ireland, in the county of Kildare, on the river Blackwater, 17 m W by N Dublin.

Kilcool, a town of Ireland, in the county of Wicklow, near which is the celebrated salt-marsh of Cooldrofs. It is seated near the sea, 18 m SSE Dublin.

Kilcullen-bridge, a town of Ireland, in the county of Kildare, on the river Liffey. A mile to the S is the village of Kilcullen, anciently a walled town with seven gates, one of which yet remains, and some other antiquities. It is 26 m SW Dublin.

Kilda, St. an island of Scotland, one of the Hebrides, 28 m to the W of N Uist. It is 3 m long and 2 broad, fenced about with one continued perpendicular face of rock, of prodigious height, except at the landing-place, on the SE, where there is a narrow and steep passage to a village on the top of the rock. The surface of the island is hilly; but it feeds many sheep, and produces barley and potatoes. The inhabitants live chiefly by fishing, and catching wild fowls. In the latter employment, they are let down by a rope from the summit

county of Kerry, otherwise called Lough Lean, from its being surrounded by high mountains. It is divided into three parts, called the Lower, Middle, and Upper Lake. The northern, or lower lake, is 6 m long and 3 broad.
On the side of one of the mountains is O'Sullivan's cascade, which falls above 70 feet with a tremendous roar; and opposite this is the island of Innisfallen, containing 18 Irish acres. The promontory of Mucrus divides the upper from the lower lake, and on passing into the upper lake, there is a rock, called the Eagles-nest, which produces wonderful echos. The upper lake is 4 m long and 2 broad: from the mountains descend a number of beautiful cascades; and the numerous islands in this lake afford a variety of picturesque views. The centre lake, which communicates with the upper, is small in comparison with the other two, and

and Lefguis, and s by the Lefguis and Georgians. They consist of 16 districts or tribes, which are generally at variance with each other, and with their neighbours. Those belonging to the districts of Wapi, Anguht, and Shalka, submitted to Russia in 1770. The Tshetshen tribe is so numerous and warlike, and has given the Russians so much trouble, that its name is usually given by them to the whole Kisti nation. The Ingush, who are capable of arming above 5000 men, live in villages near each other; they are diligent husbandmen, and rich in cattle. Many of their villages have a stone tower, which serves, in time of war, as a retreat to their women and children, and a magazine for their effects. These people are all armed, and have the custom of wearing shields. Their religion is very simple, but has some traces of Christianity. They believe in one God, whom they call Dailé, but have no saints or religious persons; and celebrate Sunday, not by any religious ceremony, but by resting from labour. They observe no ceremonies either at births or deaths, allow of polygamy, and eat pork.

Kijna, or Crijna, a river of Hindoostan, which rises in the Sukhein mountains, not far to the s of Poona, flows e about 500 m, forming the boundary between the Deccan and the Peninsula, and enters the bay of Bengal by several mouths, to the s of Manipatam. This river rivals any Indian stream in the fertility diffused by its inundations; and the richest diamond mines in the world are in the neighbouring hills to the north.

Kishnageri, a town and fortress of Hindoostan, in Mysore. This town was attacked by the British troops, in 1789, who gained the lower fort and suburb, without much difficulty; but the upper fort made so desperate a resistance, that it was found necessary to desert from the attempt. It is 54 m sE Bangalore, and 66 wsw Arcot.

Konigsberg, a fortified city, the capital of Prussia, with a university, a magnificent palace, and a public library. It stands on the Pregel, near its entrance into the Frisch Haff, an inlet of the Baltic. The townhouse, the exchange, the royal mint, and the cathedral, are fine structures. The tower of the castle is very high, whence there is a beautiful prospect. The city is 10 m in circuit, and contains 58,000 inhabitants, who are principally of the Lutheran religion. Many of the houses are large and elegant; and the trade is very considerable. The strong citadel, called Fredericksburg, is a regular square, surrounded by broad ditches and the river; and within it are a church and an arsenal. No ships drawing more than seven feet water can pass the bar, that large vessels anchor at Pillau, a small town on the Baltic. Konigsberg was taken by the Russians in 1758; and in 1807, after the battle of Friedland, Korfakan, a town of Arabia, in Oman, on a bay of the gulf of Ormus, 110 m N by W Rostak.

Koriacs, a people of Siberia, divided into two forts. Those properly called Koriacs have a fixed residence; the others are wanderers, and are known by the appellation of Raindeer Koriacs. Their flocks are numerous, and they maintain them by conducting them to those cantons that abound with moss. When these pastures are exhausted, they seek for others. In this manner they wander about, encamping under tents of skin, and supporting themselves with the produce of their deer, which are as serviceable for draught to the Koriacs, as the dogs are to the Kamtschadales. There is, in many respects, a great resemblance between the fixed and the wandering Koriacs: yet the misunderstanding which subsists among them, causes them to be considered as two different people. Their country, however, is the same, and takes in a vast extent; bounded on the s by Kamtschatka and the gulf of Pengina, e by the country of the Oluterians, n by that of the Tehoukchis, and w by the Tongoucs, the Lamouts, and the Yakouts. The number of fixed Koriacs scarcely exceeds 900; and the wandering Koriacs, it is imagined, do not much exceed that amount. The manners of the former are a mixture of duplicity, mistrust, and avarice. Robbers by nature, they are suspicious, cruel, incapable either of benevolence or pity. From this perfidious and savage disposition, it would not be easy for them to live in peace, or form any durable ties with their neighbours: hence their continual insurrections against the Russians, and their daily incursions on the people who surround them; hence the respective animosities and revenge that incessantly spring up. This state of warfoments in every individual a ferocious spirit. The practice of attacking, and of defending themselves, creates in them an inflexible courage, which delights in perpetual combats, and glories in a contempt of life. Superstition lends its aid to ennoble in their eyes this thirst of blood, by imposing a law that obliges them to conquer or to die. Neither the bravery nor the number of their adversaries can at all intimidate them; it is then they swear to destroy the jun. They discharge this terrible oath by cutting the throats of their wives and children, burning all their possessions, and rushing madly into the midst of their enemies. The combat cannot terminate but by the total destruction of one of the parties; for the vanquished never seek their safety by flight, and not a Koriac will survive the slaughter of his countrymen. Their regular occupation is hunting and fishing; but every season will not permit them to follow it. During these intervals, shut up in their deep habitations, they sleep, smoke, and get drunk. Thoughtless of the future, without regret for the past, they come not out of their jouts till the most urgent necessity compels them. These jouts are larger than those of the Kamtsschadales; but their filthiness is more disgusting, for there is neither door, nor vent-hole for the smoke. They live upon dried fish, and the flesh and fat of the whale and seawolf. The whale is commonly eaten raw, and the seawolf dried and cooked in the same manner as their fish, except the sinews, the marrow, the brain, and now and then a slice of the flesh, which they devour raw with extreme avidity. Raindeer is their favourite dish. Vegetables also form a part of their food: they gather in autumn various sorts of berries, of a part of which they make a refreshing beverage, and the rest is bruised to powder, and kneaded with the oil of the whale or seawolf. Their passion for strong liquors, increased by the difficulty of procuring brandy, has led them to invent a drink equally potent, which they extract from a red mushroom. The features of the majority of the Koriacs are not Asiatic; and they might be considered as Europeans, but for their low stature, their ill shape, and the colour of their skin. The other Koriacs have the same characteristic outlines as the Kamtschadales. Among the women, particularly, there are very few who have not sunk eyes, flat noses, and prominent cheeks. The men are almost entirely beardless, and have short hair. The women carry their children in a kind of net or basket arched over, in which the infant is placed in a sitting posture, and sheltered from the weather. A plurality of wives is not allowed among the Koriacs; although there have been instances of its being practised without scruple. When a Koriac dies, his relations and neighbours assemble to pay him their last respects. They erect a funeral pile, upon which they place a portion of the wealth of the deceased, and a stock of provisions consisting of whatever they conceive he will want for his great journey, and to keep him from starving in the other world. If he be a wandering Koriac, his deer conduct him to the pile; if a resident Koriac, he is drawn by his dogs, or carried by his relations. The body is exhibited, clothed in his best attire, and lying in a kind of coffin. There it receives the adieu of the attendants, who, with torches in their hands, consider it as an honour speedily to reduce their relation or friend to ashes. They feel only the regret of a short absence, and not of an eternal separation. They wear no mourning; and the funeral pomp terminates in a scene of intemperance. They acknow-

Judge a Supreme Being, the creator of all things. He inhabits the sun, whose burning orb they consider as the throne or palace of the Lord of Nature. They neither fear nor worship him: goodness they say is his essence; and it is impossible he should do any injury. The principle of evil they consider as a malignant spirit, who divides with the good being the empire of nature. As the one is intent on the happiness of mankind, the other endeavours to render them unhappy. Diseases, tempests, famine, calamities of every kind, are his works, and the instruments of his vengeance. To pacify his wrath, they offer to him various animals, the first-fruits of their hunting and fishing, and whatever they possess that is most valuable; but there is no temple set apart for his votaries, who conceive that they render him propitious by piously getting drunk in their jouts; for drunkenness is become with these people a religious practice, and the basis of all their solemnities.

Kubbees; see Kabis.

Kubesh, a strong town in the country of the Lesquis, situate on a hill, between high mountains. Its inhabitants call themselves Franki (Franks, a name common in the east to all Europeans) and form a republic. They are excellent artists, and make very good firearms, sabres, coats of mail, and several articles in gold and silver, for exportation. They have, likewise, for their own defence, small copper cannons, of three pounds calibre, cast by themselves. They coin Turkish and Persian silver money, and even rubles, which readily pass current, because they are of the full weight and value. Kubesh is considered as a neutral town, where the neighbouring princes can deposit their treasure with safety. In 1725, it acknowledged the sovereignty of Russia, but without paying any tribute. Lon. 47 59 E, lat. 42 30 N.

Kuffein, a strong town of Germany, in Tyrol, with a castle on a rock. It surrendered to the French and Bavarians in 1805. It is seated on the Inn, on the frontiers of Bavaria, 46 m SSE Munich. Lon. 12 15 E, lat. 47 30 N.

Kur, a river that rises in Persian Armenia, flows NE into Georgia, where it receives the Araqui, and turning SE passes by Teflis into Schirvan, where it receives the Aras, at Javat, and 50 m below enters the Caspian sea. At its mouth are several islets, liable to be overflowed in the spring.

Kurdistan, a province of Turkey in Asia, bounded on the N by Armenia, E by Persia, S by Irak, and W by Diarbek. It comprehends the whole of ancient Assyria, and is in general a fertile country, particularly the N part, which is highly cultivated. The Kurds are robust, hardy, and temperate, and live to a great age. Some live in towns and villages, and others in tents. They are averse to settled habits, and war and rapine are their delight. They are not subject either to the Turks or Persians; but are divided into different tribes, each governed by its own chief, all of whom are independent, though some condescend, for the preservation of peace, to pay an annual tribute to the king of Persia. Their language and dress are different from either the Turks or Persians; and their religion is partly Christianity and partly Mohamedanism. The province is sometimes divided into Upper and Lower, of which Betlis and Solymania are the capitals.

Kuriles, a chain of small islands, extending from Cape Lopatka, the S promontory of Kamtschatka, in a SW direction, to the NE end of Jesso. The inhabitants of the neighbourhood of Cape Lopatka, who were called Kuriles, gave these islands the same name, as soon as they became acquainted with them. They are 21 in number, exclusive of the very small ones. The northernmost, called Shoomska, is three
