"Guardianship"?

THAT the attitude of the ruling class in Britain towards India is even today as insolently imperialist as ever before, is brought home to us once again by the Marquis of Linlithgow, the ex-Viceroy of India of the Indian famine fame. Speaking recently at Edinburgh, Linlithgow declared that "Premature withdrawal of British guardianship of India would be a sad betrayal of our plain duty to the peoples of India."

Of course this claim that Britain is the Heaven-appointed guardian of India is nothing new to Indians. We have been hearing it from have been hearing it from leading Britishers ever since Britain obtained a strangle-hold on India's human and material resources and began exploiting them to Britain's advantage. We know to our cost that, because of Britain's guardianship for the last one century, India is at this moment a sick country, a backward country, a country this moment a sick country, a backward country, a country of arrested development, ridden with disease and poverty, parasitism and waste as no other area in the world; while at the same time India's guardians the British are among the richest peoples of Lingchi, our spearhead unit succeeded in crushing all resistance put up by Chungking troops in a desperate a tempt to check our advance.

It is this blood-sucking the British Imperialists have the cheek to call their "guardianship" of India. Everyone knows how Linlithgow himself discharged this self-appointed British duty during his repeatedly extended term of viceroyalty. He starved millions of our people to death, threw into jails all our great leaders, and organised a reign of terror and plunder throughout the country. All throughout the country. All this was done, according to Linlithgow, for the good of India, and not at all in the interests of British war-mong-
