IT is due to the munificent liberality of the Radcliffe Trustees, and also to the judicious and long continued exertions of my predecessor, the late Dr. Williams, that the scientific public should be made acquainted with the valuable collection contained in that splendid repository, the Radcliffe Library.

With great readiness therefore I proceeded to obey the direction, given by the Trustees in last June, to make a Catalogue of its contents. And though I do not consider that which is now published as a sufficiently satisfactory representation of the valuable collection it describes; yet, considering the length of time which would have been required for the construction of a Catalogue complete in all its details; and that a knowledge of the contents of the Library, by leading to a knowledge of its deficiencies also, would tend to accelerate its improvement; it has been thought right to give immediate publication to the present sketch: respecting the plan of which a very few observations will be sufficient.

The primary object in this, as in the Catalogue of every Library indeed, being a clear and succinct description of the title of each book noticed in it; in order that its existence in the Library may be easily ascertained; I have, in general, in order to distract the eye as little as possible, described the authors of individual works simply by their surnames and the initial of their other name or names, without the addition of their official or other titles: and this will not, I trust, be considered disrespectful. In some instances indeed the surname only has been given, as being even more forcibly descriptive than any addition could make it. No other appellation need be added, it may be presumed, to the name of Linnæus, Buffon, or Cuvier.

With respect to books which are either extensively known, or are to be found in most large libraries of natural history, no further description has been given than was considered just sufficient to verify their existence in the collection: but with respect to books which are at the same time of rare occurrence, and of intrinsic value from the character of their contents, in addition to the general description has been occasionally subjoined a short account of the plates, &c. contained in them. On such occasions, where Zoology is the subject-matter, the classification of the “Règne Animal” of Cuvier has been principally adopted; substituting however, usually, a Latin instead of a French nomenclature; and sometimes employing equivalent instead of identical terms, as “Accipitres” for “Oiseaux de proie,” and “Grallæ” for “Echassiers.”

In books to which the author’s name is not added, or which are the production of a Collective Society, the initial letter of that appellation by which the book is most commonly known, or of the most characteristic term of the whole title, has determined its alphabetical position in the Catalogue. Thus the Transactions of the Royal Society of London, being most familiarly known under the name of the “Philosophical Transactions,” are noticed under the initial letter of that term: but the Transactions of the Philosophical Societies of Cambridge or Manchester are noticed respectively under the initials of those places.

Where the title of a work has been thought too long and diffuse, it has been compressed; and in some instances the terms of the original description have even been varied: such a liberty being usually considered allowable, provided the purport of the work be truly described. And when the same book is written in more than one language, the description of it has been given in that which is the most generally known; but the common Latin abbreviations relative to the size, &c. of a book or set of books have been used indifferently; which is manifestly convenient to all parties.

Although it is not necessary to enter into a consideration of the reasons which determined the order of classification which has been adopted in the following Catalogue; yet, for the convenience of those who may at any time consult the Library, it is desirable to state that the general subjects are there classed in the same order as they occur in the Library itself. And it will be seen that those subjects are such only as have a direct relation to medicine, or are more or less remotely connected with it; this being in accordance with the intention of the Founder.

As the subjects have been classed under as many as ten distinct divisions, with an alphabetical arrangement in each division, the difficulty of finding any individual work will probably be very trifling; and I have therefore not thought it necessary to add a general Index: though, had there been sufficient time, I should have been desirous of adding an index which should not merely have referred to individual works, but, under appropriate heads, to all the works, and portions of works contained in the library, that bear upon the several branches of each department of Natural History. In order however to facilitate the search for any individual work, I have subjoined to this advertisement the order of arrangement of the subjects<sup>a</sup>.

I take this opportunity of adding, that when a work contains Plates illustrative of Zoology, Botany, or Geology, the abbreviations employed are the initials of the words expressing the branch of science illustrated by the Plate: e. g. if there be ten Zoological Plates, seven Botanical, and three Geological, the abbreviations will be as follow: 10 Z. 7 B. 3 G: and it is to be understood that Geology includes Mineralogy.

It would be disingenuous, and unjust to my predecessor, were I not to acknowledge in the most explicit manner both the copiousness and the value of the materials which he had prepared for the construction of a Catalogue of that Library, to the formation of which he so mainly contributed. In the memoranda which he has left, I have met with almost daily proofs of his industry, his discrimination, and his accuracy: and, had he lived to complete the projected Catalogue, he would have had little further trouble than to make a copy of the notes which he had accumulated. But, however safely I might have relied on those data, I should not have discharged my duty either towards the Trustees of the Library or myself, had I in any instance made use of them without the fullest personal examination of the books to which they refer. In making that examination indeed they have been of the greatest value: and whenever I have failed of obtaining satisfaction from an inspection of the book itself, as for instance in endeavouring to ascertain the author of an anonymous publication, I have securely relied on the testimony of Dr. Williams.

If on some occasions, as in describing the Museum of Petiver, or the remarkable work of the French Institute on Egypt, I have proceeded in a less technical way than others might have done, the description will not be the less intelligible to scientific persons; while the general inquirer will, I trust, be benefited by the mode I have adopted: for to such, a popularly analytical description of a work is better calculated to convey at the same time a just notion of its contents, and of the existing state of that branch of science to which its subject belongs, than the usual technical mode of description.

This splendid work is styled in the leaf preceding the regular title-page, "OISEAUX DORÉS, OU A REFLETS METALLIQUES;" and is described commonly under the name of the "Oiseaux dorés." The term was suggested by the employment of gold in the coloured engravings of the work, in order to give to the figures that metallic brillianey which distinguishes so remarkably many of the birds represented: and with reference to a few copies, among which is that of the Radcliffe Library, the term is further applicable from the additional employment of gold, instead of ink, in the text also.

But, however beautiful and valuable the two volumes above described may be considered, the Radcliffe Library is in possession of a third volume, a supplement to the preceding, which is infinitely preferable in every point of view. This volume has never been edited: but the original designs contained in it, which, as well as the accompanying

MS. descriptions, were executed by M. Vieillot, are complete; and the figures represented very far exceed in beauty and delicacy those of the printed volumes. It contains 83 designs, highly finished in the drawing, as well as in the colouring and gilding, which are placed in the following order:

Colibris, 8.	Promerops, 7.
Oiseaux-mouches, 28.	Souï-mangas, 37.
Jacamars, 3.

In these plates, which are beautifully executed, almost the whole natural history of each species is developed: not only the plumage and characteristic difference in age or sex, but the nest and the egg, the plant on which the species feeds, and the localities which it frequents, are delineated: in addition to which, the description enters into the detail of all those points.

*T. 10. and 19; of which T. 10. is entitled "Manna Israelitarum," and represents a species of tamarisk, scarcely differing from that of France; the extreme branches of which are partially covered with small vesicles resembling wax, each of which includes a female hemipterous insect of the genus "coccus." The bark of the tree being pierced by these insects, there exudes a sweet viscid substance of a brown colour, which at a low temperature retains a concrete form, but soon begins to melt upon an increase of temperature.

Ehrenberg names the tree tamarix mannifera, and the insect coccus manniparus. The manna so extensively used in medicine is derived from a species of ash; by means also of an hemipterous insect, not of the genus "coccus," but of the genus "cicada."

Aware of the conclusion which might inadvertently be drawn from this account of the natural origin of a substance, bearing the same name as another substance which on one occasion was supplied miraculously, I think it right to add that the difference between the two is easily demonstrable.

PETIVER, J. Opera historiam naturalem spectantia; or, gazophylacium. voll. 1 et 2. fol.; vol. 3. 8°.

Of these volumes, the third is a uniformly printed book, containing two distinct parts; each of which bears a date much anterior to the date of the title-pages of the two folio volumes. The folio volumes, which are made up of numerous parts printed at different times, have each a title-page of a much later date than most of the parts contained.

It will be convenient, in describing the contents of these curious volumes, to begin with the third.

Vol. III.

Part 1. Musei Petiveriani centuriæ decem, rariora naturæ continentia; viz. animalia, fossilia, plantas ex variis mundi plagis advecta; ordine digesta et nominibus propriis signata. 8°. Lond. 1695-1703.

At p. 43, and at the end, are abstracts of some collections received, but not mentioned: and this part contains two plates representing various subjects described in the first century.

Part 2. Gazophylacii naturæ et artis decades quinque; in quibus animalia, &c. descriptionibus brevibus et iconibus illustrantur. 8°. Lond. 1702-6.

At the end of this second part is a classical and topical catalogue of all the things figured in the five decads; together with an addition to Petiver's Hortus Siccus in the appendix to Ray's third volume of plants, p. 241. There are two plates in this second part, representing various plants, principally exotic.

Vol. I.

Opera, historiam naturalem spectantia; or gazophylacium: containing several thousand figures of birds, &c. with Latin and English names; about 100 of the plates never before published. fol. Lond. 1764.

The contents of this volume are distributed in the following order:

Catalogus classicus et topicus omnium rerum figuratarum in decem decadibus gazophylacii naturæ et artis. fol. Lond. 1709-11.

One hundred and fifty-six plates of the subjects described in the catalogue; with a special description of plates 51-155. The one hundred and fifty-sixth plate represents various Brazilian shells from Bonanni.

Twenty-two plates of shells, &c. of Amboyna, and the neighbouring shores of India, with descriptions.

Two plates, with descriptions, illustrative of the rudiments of botany.

Vol. II.

Seventy-two plates, with a Latin and English catalogue of Ray's Herbarium Britannicum: the Latin catalogue complete; the English not carried beyond the fiftieth plate.

A catalogue of plants (about one hundred and twenty) engraved in Petiver's English herbal.

Hortus Peruvianus medicinalis, or South-sea herbal. pp. 3. fol. Lond. 1705.

One plate representing twelve varieties of the Etruscan orchis.

Six plates: the five first representing medicinal plants of Peru, &c.; the last, some of the aromatic plants of India, &c.

Directions to collectors of natural curiosities.

Five plates: two, of the corallines, &c. of the Mediterranean; and three, of the grasses of Italy: with a description.

Two plates of Egyptian plants; with a description.

Pterigraphia Americana, consisting of twenty plates, with descriptions, of various ferns, corallines, shells, &c. from the islands of Antigua, Barbadoes, Jamaica, &c.

Six plates of English butterflies, with descriptions.

Monspelii desideratarum catalogus, e Raio, &c.

Plantæ Silesiacæ rariores ac desideratæ.

Plantarum Etruriæ rariorum catalogus.

Petiveriana, seu naturæ collectanea domi forisque auctori communicata. Partes 3.

A methodical concordance of about four hundred British grasses, &c. (incomplete; ending at N°. 375).

Botanicum Anglicum, or English herball.

Hortus siccus chirurgicus.—A list of drugs, &c. imperfectly known.—Hortus siccus pharmaceuticus. (The hortus siccus chir. et pharm. are printed in a confused manner).

This volume consists of numerous fasciculi of various dates between 1768 and 1804.

Mammalia, 22. Aves, 10. Reptilia, 2.

Two MS. 4° volumes, without any date, containing 372 beautifully executed coloured figures of various shells; accompanied by the following memorandum of the late Dr. Williams :

"A. Vosmaer was keeper of the prince of Orange's cabinet of natural history at the Hague, and author of a curious work of rare exotic animals. He intended to have published a new system of conchology, but did not live to accomplish it. The note at the beginning of the present work is a memorandum of the Dutch auctioneer, and informs the public that it is the 'excellent collection of water-colour drawings of rare shells in the most celebrated cabinets of Holland and other provinces, designed

“ by the ablest masters, VOET, MAROT, &c. under the eye
 “ of A. Vosmaer, from 1744 to 1784; many of them never “ before engraved nor described.’ ”

Of the 372 drawings contained in this work, 368 represent shells classed under 32 genera; of seven of which genera, however, no specimens are represented: the remaining nine drawings represent various shells. The following list describes the names and order of the genera, with the number of figures belonging to each. Gen. 1–18 are univalves; 19–27 bivalves; 28–30 multivalves: 31, 32 are called crustacea, and were intended to represent echini.

The last of these two works, under the name of Bulliard alone, is bound uniformly with the preceding in five volumes; which are accompanied by a sixth volume, containing 129 coloured engravings, principally of the medicinal plants of France, but without any text. The general title of "Herbier de la France" is given to the two works; the "plantes vénéneuses" forming the first division, the "champignons" the second division.

DODART, D. Mémoires pour servir à l'histoire des plantes. T. 39. fol. Paris, 1676.

This volume is accompanied by two others of the same size, bound in the same manner, and stamped similarly with the royal arms of France, containing 319 engravings of plants; among which are duplicates of the 39 plates above noticed. Each of these two volumes has the following MS. title-page, followed by a MS. list of the plants delineated:—
“Estampes pour servir à l'histoire des plantes. Ptie 1 et 2. A Paris, de l'imprimerie royale.” There can be no doubt that the contents of these two volumes are described in Mr. Dryander's catalogue of sir Joseph Banks's library (vol. III. p. 66.) in the following terms: “Icones plantarum tabb. æneis 319, long. 16 unc. lat. 12. unc., a Ni-

“COLAO ROBERT, A. Bosse, et Lud. de Chastillon sculptæ.”
In the copy of this work belonging to the botanical garden of Oxford the title-pages are printed, with the date 1701; but there is no index of the contents.

The plates are arranged alphabetically. Four of them represent processes in the arts connected with the history of trees; and 250, which are engravings on wood, represent trees and shrubs. Each description is preceded by a copper-plate vignette, illustrating the details of the flower and fruit.

The plates are said in the title-page to have been engraved and coloured by J. J. Haid and J. E. Haid, father and son. Many of them will almost bear a comparison with the best modern works. Immediately after the title-page are three mezzotinto portraits; one of Ehret, the author of the work; a second of Trew, who illustrated the work with notes; these engraved by Haid the father. The third is a portrait of his father by Haid the son, and is a remarkably spirited engraving.

 The interest of many of the plates is heightened by a representation of the native scenery and inhabitants, &c. In addition to the coloured plates are 16 not coloured, illustrative of the anatomy of the palms: but, from the yet incomplete state of the Radcliffe copy, a more detailed description is postponed.

This is said to be a scarce work. The drawing and colouring of the plates, though not comparable to some of the present day, are very good. Of these 265 plates, 8 represent varieties of the apricot,

8 almond,	26 peach,
17 plum,	41 apple,
31 cherry,	113 pear,
9 medlar, &c.	12 the culture of fruit-trees.

PETRUS de CRESCENTIIS, Bononiensis. Liber ruralium commodorum. fol.

This book, which is printed in old black letter, with MS. initial red letters, has no title-page; nor any date at the beginning or end: but it is said at the very conclusion to have been printed "in domo Johannis de Westfalia, alma ac florentissima in Universitate Lovaniensi:" and there is subjoined a MS. note, of an early possessor of the book, with the date of 1492.

In a note, attached to the book, the late Dr. Williams expresses his opinion that it was printed rather subsequently to 1474. The work, which is divided into twelve books, and consists of nearly four hundred pages, treats of every thing connected with agriculture, and rural husbandry and amusements.

This volume, in which are also printed a treatise of G. Margravius on Brasil and Chili, and of Bontius on East India, contains about 240 zoological figures, chiefly fish and birds, and 200 botanical. In the treatise of Bontius, p. 70, is a good representation of the dodo, with a very clear description of some of its characters.

By far the greater number of the plates represent fossil bones, &c.: some however represent the osteology of living species. This being understood, the distribution of the plates is as follows; and, upon the whole, accords with the succession of the volumes; but not strictly, because it occasionally happens that a subject, disscussed in a previous, is resumed in a subsequent volume.

Mundus subterraneus. 2 v. fol. Amstel. 1678.
 There are numerous plates in each volume; but most of them are of too trifling or too absurd a character to deserve notice. About 30 of them are curious, as illustrating the geological hypotheses of the author and others.

Each plate contains several outline figures of various organic remains; the collective number of the figures amounting to 102. Each figure is engraved in a separate compartment, so that it may be cut out and separated from the rest; and hence the term "sectiles." In the text are references to Cuvier's "règne animal," with observations of the author.

No description is now given of the plates contained in this volume, because they are also contained in the following work; of which a particular description is given.

Recueil des monumens des catastrophes que le globe terrestre a essuies; commencé par feu M. G. W. Knorr, et continué par ses héritiers: avec l'histoire naturelle de ces corps par Mons. J. E. E. Walch: trad. de l'Allemand. T. 272. (?) col. 4 v. fol. Nuremb. 1767-78.

The plates are irregularly arranged; and, occasionally, fossils of different characters are represented on the same plate. The following description of the number of plates appropriated to the different subjects is, probably, upon the whole, correct:

Vertebrated animals, principally fish, 32.

Various shells, 102.

Crustaceous animals, insects, &c. 20.

Echini and encrinites, 25.

Corallines and alcyonia, 42.

Whoever will carefully examine these plates cannot fail to perceive manifest traces of a knowledge of many anatomical facts, which are commonly supposed to be of comparatively recent discovery. The subjects of the plates are distributed in the following proportions, though not in the same order as here given:

- Spinal marrow of quadrupeds, 1.
- Ape, 1.
- Lion, tiger, cat, bear, dog, 11.
- Beaver, hare, mole, mouse, squirrel, 5.

It adds considerably to the value of these plates, that each skeleton is represented in relief on a dark ground; which is formed by a drawing of the animal clothed in its integuments.

* In these are included seven plates, with duplicates in outline, of the fossil animal, the "bradypus giganteus."

- FREWIN, R. Plantæ medicinales, cum descriptionibus et notis MSS. fol.

Though Frewin has left many memorials of his munificence in Oxford, I am not aware that he has left any other systematic memorial of his scientific attainments than the “hortus siccus” above described. The care, which he seems to have taken in arranging and commenting on the specimens here preserved, deserves to be noticed: and a description of an arrangement which was probably made at least a century from the present time will not be devoid of interest. The principle of the arrangement is probably derived from Ray.
