PREFATORY NOTE

The list here presented was originally intended to indicate literature on the use and abuse of injunctions in labor disputes, but the subject was found to be so interwoven with the boycott that the scope of the list was extended to include that question also.

The injunction proved to be so powerful a weapon in labor disputes and its abuse under certain circumstances so easy, that, almost from the start, it aroused the greatest interest and has been widely discussed in popular magazines, and the publications of labor organizations. These two classes of publications consequently have furnished a large part of the references; and special pains have been taken to present, as completely as possible, those writings in which labor leaders have expressed their attitude toward the question. The other main source of information has proved to be the legal literature of the past twenty years; this has been freely drawn upon, though without citation of particular cases. To have included such would have been to duplicate work already well done in the "American digest." Those, therefore, who desire references to particular cases should consult that work, which extends down to 1896, and its supplements the "Decennial edition of the American digest," 1897-1906, and the "American digest annotated" which extends from 1906 to 1910. Complete bibliographical descriptions of these works with special page references are given on page 4 of this list.

Certain cases have aroused so much interest that they have been widely discussed outside of the legal profession. References to these discussions have been included and they will be found brought together under appropriate headings in the index at the end of the list.

Two new features have been introduced into this list which will prove of special interest to librarians. When printed catalogue cards exist for any work entered in the list, the Library of Congress card number is printed immediately after the entry at the left. On the same line to the right the class mark, where determined in the new classification, is printed in heavier type.

Chicago times-herald, Sept. 19, 1897, v. 44, pt. 3: 25-28.
 The following questions were submitted by the Sunday times-herald to eminent jurists and prominent laymen: 1. What are your views on the power and practice of courts in issuing injunctions in labor disputes? 2. How is such power derived, and is it misused? 3. Do injunctions interfere with the constitutional guarantee of trial by jury? 4. Should Congress specifically define and limit the power of courts in issuing injunctions? Among others, replies were received from P. S. Grosscup, Murray F. Tuley, James McCabe, Edward F. Dunne, and Henry M. Shepard.

AP4.N7,v.60

Criticises the clause of the bill entitled "Prohibition of actions of tort against trade unions." Argues that injunctions should be prohibited.

"The injunction is used early in the fray. In a properly laid case upon a carefully drawn series of affidavits a union may find itself prohibited by injunction from providing the sinews of war to carry on a strike perfectly lawful in itself, but in connection with which certain unlawful acts may have been committed by individuals, over whom they have no control. An injunction under such circumstances may cause the collapse of a strike, with the result that the men, angry at such a collapse, will leave the union in large numbers. This has been the experience in American strikes over and over again. There the injunction in a strike has been developed as a weapon of great art and power. And unless it is prohibited against the unions here, it needs no wisdom to predict that its far-reaching possibilities will be exploited to the utmost under the pressure of the feelings engendered by, and the great interests often involved in, our great industrial conflicts."
