liar and engaging in Your Lordship, have made the strongest Impressions upon me: for to these I owe the advantage of knowing Tour Lordship; the only thing requisite to convince any one of Your great Capacity and Worth. By these means I was not only a near Witness of all those eminent Services, that Your Lordship did for the Publick; but was also in some measure acquainted with the Motives, upon which You undertook them, and the Wise as well as Couragious Manner, in which You conducted them. Had others enjoy'd the same opportunities I did, they must have had the same inward Value for Your Lordship I have: all attempts to obscure the Lustre of your great Actions would then have been vain and impotent; and the United Thanks of your Country would e'er this time have rendred any account of them unneces fary.

I now beg leave to return them to Your Lordship with a few Observations; wherein if I have fail'd in doing justice to the subject, I shall not be much concern'd, since the subject is of such a nature, as to do Justice to itself. The Facts related in this Account are so important, and the Evidences of them so bright and glaring, that a bare representation of them (by how unequal a hand foever) must needs command the Esteem and Acknowledgment of every true English-man.

I do here therefore present Your Lordship with what sew Men in their

Siege of BARCELONA,

T was the constant Fate of the great Men of Rome and Athens, who had been eminently serviceable to their Country, to meet with very unsuitable Returns; and to find their best Actions abroad, traduc'd and set in false Lights by malicious and ungrateful Men at home, who reap'd the Benefit of them. This has been remarkably the Case of the Earl of Peterborow; whose important Services in Spain, for which he deserves a Statue from the Publick, have in a most Barbarous manner been mis-represented, and consequently mitun-derstood here in England.

Such groundless and ridiculous Reports as have been spread on this Occasion, cou'd never have gain'd the least Credit, had his Lord? ship's Friends been permitted to give the World an early Information of his Proceedings. TBut he was always extremely nice in that Point; and declar'd often, That if any Account of what had pals'd were necessary, he thought himself best able to give it, and would not willingly be prevented by imperfect Relations from · III from others. This filenc'd those who were otherwise well inclin'd to have done Justice to his Lordship's Character, and were furnish'd with ample Materials for that Purpose, the mood authorize

Nor did they, who had been all along Eye-witnesses of his Lordship's indefatigable Application and unparallel'd Successes, and had closely observ'd all the Steps of his Conduct, think it possible that the idle Reports given out to his Lordship's Disadvantage, shou'd have prevail'd so far, and made so deep an Impression in the Minds of Men, as they find they have done since their return to England.

My Lord Peterborow, looking back upon the great Advantages he had gain'd, and confcious of his own Integrity, was no ways apprehensive that he shou'd suffer in the Opinion of his Country-men. But at last, finding his mistake, gave his Friends leave to take all proper Occasions of vindicating his Reputation, which has been attack'd with so great Injustice; and in order to it, put into their Hands several attested Copies of Instructions, Orders and Letters, &c. with permission to make use of them, as they shou'd judge most for his Honour and Service.

I do therefore think my felf at liberty to communicate fome of these Papers to the World, and to accompany them with fuch Accounts of Things as my own Observation and Knowledge, and the frequent Opportunities I had of conversing with his Lordship, during my stay in Spain, have enabled me to give.

What

What Springs here in England gave motion to the new turn of Affairs in Spain, who were this noble Lord's Enemies, and upon what grounds, I think my felf not concern'd to enquire. My Bufiness is only to do Justice to fuch Actions, as want only to be understood, in order to be valued; and to shew my Gratitude to One who has in the highest manner oblig'd me. And I choose to do it in fuch Points where Right may be done to my Lord, without reflecting any Dishonour upon any other English-man what-

I have often heard my Lord profess with that generous freedom which diffinguishes his Character, that he desir'd no Friend of his to embark in his Quarrels. And tho' I confess my Nature to be such, as to be wrought upon B 2 the the rather to engage for fuch a Declaration, yet my present De-fign will not lead me into any Disputes of that kind, were I never so much inclin'd to it. For the chief aim in this short Account, is to shew that his Lordship, after he found all the great Things he had done were not able to procure Credit to his Advice, but that it was determin'd to change Hands and Measures, yet still perfished to do every thing that became him, towards forwarding those Designs which he neither laid nor approv'd. And I think it will plainly appear from the course of this Relation, that nothing of that emulation and refentment, which his Lordship's Enemies objected to him, mix'd in his Conduct: Since he readily join'd and consulted with all that were in Command, after Matters were fet upon a new Foot; and endeavour'd to Support the Publick Interest in other Hands, with more diligence and more hazards, if possible, than when the Army and Fleet were under his own Direction and Go-Lordinip, nothing can memnrav

The Truth of this must be own'd by the Ministers of the King of Spain, the Marquess das Minus, Lord Galway, and the Count Noyailles; with the last of which Generals my Lord Peterboroso had an intire Correspondence in every Council and Confultation, from the time of the Count's coming into Spain, till he himself left it: Tho fome have been pleas'd to produce this very General always for an Instance, that his Lordship could agree with none that were in Command. And whatever was the B 4 occaFortunes in Spain, that it was not owing in any respect to the Earl of Peterborow, I am so thoroughly convinced, and can make it so clear to the World, that, considering my Obligations to his Lordship, nothing can excuse me from doing it. to then he all less

His Lordship's Qualifications for the great Enterprize he undertook, are too well known to be insisted on: They sufficiently appear from the Commissions with which he was entrusted; Commissions of as different a nature as Land and Sea, War and Peace, and which no Subject ever had yet at the same time. The only Thing I shall say more, is, That the Choice her Majesty made, was justify'd by the Event.

awith space that were in Comant And whatever was the ant BA occaHe taking of Barcelona at first, and the preventing its being re-taken by the Enemy, were two Actions as Glorious in themselves, and of as great Consequences to the Common Cause, as any that have happened during this long and bloody War. The first of these was intirely and only owing to his Lordship's Personal Bravery and Conduct, nor had the latter been accomplished without it.

'Tis not within the compass of what I propose, to relate the swift Progress and surprizing Success of his Lordship's Arms; this is a matter in which the World needs no Information. I shall mention only two Particulars that have not been rightly understood, viz. The Siege and the Desence of Barcelona.

Tho' the Siege of this Place has justly made so great a Noise Con-in the World, yet the Motives and Conduct of it, as far as I can fee, are little regarded, or perhaps known. His Lordship, upon Encamping before this City, found the Scene of Affairs quite otherwife, than what he was promis'd he shou'd meet with: Instead of 10000 Men in Arms to cover his Landing and strengthen his Camp, he faw only fo many Higlers and Sutlers come into it; instead of a City in a weak condition and ready to Surrender upon the appearance of his Troops, he found an orderly Garrison in it, and a Force almost equal to his Army. In these Difficulties his Lordship, as he was oblig'd by his Instructions, call'd frequent Councils of War; wherein, Day after Day, for above a Fortnight together, it was often unanimoufly and always by a Majority agreed, That, conconfidering the weakness of our Forces, and the strength of the Enemy; confidering our Batteries, as the Engineers declar'd, wou'd be almost as long a raising, on the fide of the Town we were Master's of, as the Fleet cou'd well stay: In short, considering the extreme Want of every thing necessary towards such an Attempt, the Siege was utterly impracticable. His Lordship indeed did twice give his Vote for the Undertaking; but from the following Councils of War 'twill appear, 'twas only out of the extreme Passion he had to comply with the King of Spain's Desires, and not out of any Opinion he had of succeeding.

T a Council of War held on Board the Britannia, in Presence of his Catholick Majesty, it having been offer'd to our Consideration, whether the Siege of Barcelona ought to be undertaken, and the Opinions of every General neral Officer having been asked, they are come to this unanimous Refolution: That the faid Siege could not only not be undertaken with any probable hopes of Success, but that the attempting it, would expose our little Army to such Hazards and Difficulties, as might make our Retreat impracticable. The General Officers supported this their unannimous Vote, by the following Reasons.

First, That by the Account of the Prince of Hesse, which makes the Garrison least, it consists of above 3000 Foot, and 800 Horse; that of all other Accounts which came to us, either by Deserters, or the People of the Town who came to join us, and expressed the most earnest Desire that we should attack the Town, none made it less than 5000 Men, but most say six or seven. That our Army consists at this time of no more than seven thousand Men in Health, and sit for Service.

That the Works which we must attack are in very good Condition, but the Ground thro' which our Attack must be carried, is for the most part a Bogg, thro' which it will be impossible to March our Cannon, and where our Trenches must be fill'd with Water.

That the Engineers, whose Business it would be to manage this Siege, are fo fensible of this Inconvenience, and the insuperable Difficulties which wou'd attend the regular Approach, that they gave up all thoughts of proceeding according to the usual Methods, and Forms of War; and if the Town is to be Attack'd, propose it may be by ereeling a Battery of Cannon, at between 6 or 700 Paces distance from the Curtain, in which they propose to make a Breach, and when fuch a Breach is made to have it Storm'd.

This Project, which alone they think our little Number of Men can enable us to attempt, they confess will be liable to the following Difficulties.

That the Men who are to give the Asfault, must March to it uncover'd about seven Hundred Paces, under the Fire of three Bastions, and of the cover'd Way, which they confess cannot by fuch a Battery be destroy'd, no more than the two Flanks, thro' which this Assault must be given: That the Enemy will probably plant Pallifadoes in the Ditch, which we shall never come to fee with our Cannon; fo that our Men to carry the Town by Storm, will be under a Necessity of gaining the cover'd Way, cutting down the Pallifadoes, and mounting the Breach at one time, under the Fire already mention'd.

For the working at this Battery, carrying Fascines for it, bringing up the Cannon and Ammunition, fo great a number of Workmen are necessary, as cannot be spar'd by our little Army, tho' no Guard were to be mounted to fupport this Battery. That of our Dragoon-Horses, from which some Assiltance might have been hop'd for this Service, not one Hundred and Twenty are in a Condition to go. That if, by the Assistance of some Seamen, and of fome of the Country People, our Battery might be put in a Condition to make a Breach, we have great Reason to believe, that before we can be ready to give an Assault, the Garrison may be confiderably Reinforc'd both from Madrid, where we know they have a thoufand or twelve hundred Horse; from the Frontiers of France, which are but 35 Leagues distant; and 'tis well known an Army five times as ffrong as ours, would not be sufficient to invest

the Place, and to prevent Succours going in.

That if our whole Army, which we must expect to be considerably diminifhed in three Weeks time, should in fuch Circumstances resolve to Attack an equal number of regular Troops, under the Difficulties already mention'd. and should be repuls'd, which is most probable, it would in fuch a Cafe be found Impracticable, not only to draw off our Cannon, but even to carry off the remainder of our Men, who would be pushed not only by the regular Troops, but even by those, who finding themselves desperate, by having join'd us, would in all Probability be very glad to make their Peace at Home byaffifting to destroy us.

That tho' bold, and almost desperate Attempts, have sometimes been undertaken with Success, yet are they never by Choice, but the effect of Despair, and to get out of some great Difficulty; whereas these Troops are at this Time under no Necessity, which obliges them to desperate Attempts, since other very considerable Services, and such as by Her Majesty's Instructions seem to be thought at least of equal Importance with this of Barcelona, may still be purfued: Such is particularly that of Italy, and supporting the Duke of Savoy. The Earl of Peterborow has likewise propos'd and offer'd to his Majesty to March by Land, along the Sea Coast, where, with the Countenance and Affiftance of the Fleet, many Towns of Confequence might be reduced, the whole Country disposed to declare for, and pay Obedience to his Catholick Majesty, as some part of the Neighbouring Parts have already done; and upon any reasonable Encouragement from this Province, and rhose of Valentia and Arragon, Winter-Quarters may be fecur'd, and a Body of Troops raised out of them, which might enable his Majesty to March to Madrid next Spring.

Either of these Services we do most chearfully offer to go upon, or indeed any other which may be proposed by his Majesty, which shall not expose both the Honour of the Queen's and States-General's Arms, and the Body of the Troops, which we are intrusted with,

to utter Destruction.

The Earl of Peterborow gave his Vote in the Affirmative, for the following Reasons.

Peterborow .

Because I am sensible that the Queen my Mistress, besides the Engagements of Treaties, and the Motives of publick Interest, has a most particular and tender Friendship for the King of Spain; therefore, as I think it Expedient to pay him the utmost Respect, in complying as far as possible with his Desires, in any Attempt wherein there is the least hopes of Success, after having, as in Duty bound, with all Sincerity and Plainness represented to him the Difficulties and Hazards to which he exposes his Interest, and the Troops of the Queen and her Allies.

Because that his Majesty persisting with so much firmness in his Opinion about Barcelona, upon a belief the Town would surrender it a Breach was made: This may create some Dispute in the World, what might have been the Event, which nothing but Experience can demonstrate, what-ever Reasons some may have to judge the contrary, and it may be thought by some our Duty to have tried the Experiment, tho at the greatest hazard.

Lastly, because no other Reason but plain disobedience to her Majesty's Orders, should have hindred me from complying with any Commands, that came from his Catholick Majesty. But the Queen has repeatedly commanded me, in all my Instructions, to be guided in Councils of War by a Majority, even in express Words, in those Cases where the Kings of Spain and Portugal or their Ministers should offer any thing in Writing to me; which Orders I communicated to his Catholick Majesty, as all my other Instructions, and I had often opportunity of repeating them before the Ministers of the King of Spain, the King of Portugal, and the English and Dutch Ambassador and Envoy. Being thus fetter'd by fuch positive Orders, which I must comply with, this has again made me offer the Kings Propofals about Barcelona, and use my utmost Efforts to gain the confent of a Council of War, declaring then, as I do now, that I would most willingly engage in any attempt which could have been agreed to in a Council of War. having received his Majesty aboard the Fleet, with a Refolution to ferve and obey him in all things in my Power.

Since the King of Spain is resolved to lay the whole Stress of his Aftairs upon making an Attempt on Barcelona for eighteen Days (specified in his his Letter to us) notwithstanding all our unanswerable Arguments to the contrary at three feveral Councils of War, and the' we have Reason to sear the Refult will too much justify our Opinions, yet in regard that our General, the Earl of Peterboron, has comply'd with the Kings Defire, as likewise the Brigadiers St. Amant, and Stanhope, and that we are extreamly pressed to do the same by the King and his Ministers, who still continue to give politive affurance of their Intelligence from the Place, being resolved that no blame be imputed to us:

We are willing to comply with the Kings Defire for the abovemention'd Attempts; tho' at the same time we must express our Concern, that this Undertawill debar us of all future Services for this Campaign.

It is evident to this Council of War, by the Demands from the Engineers, and the Opinions of all the General Officers, that this attempt cannot be made with less than five thousand Men on Duty every Day, to Work and Guard the Trenches; that of this Number our Army, not exceeding feven thousand Men, including the eleven hundred Marines, rines, befides the Dragoons and Guards, cannot furnish above two thousand five hundred; that this Service absolutely requires two thousand five hundred Men daily out of the Fleet and Miquelets, and we desire the Admirals (having promis'd their utmost Assistance) ro let us know whether they can furnish fisteen hundred Men per Day. And whereas they have promis'd to assist this undertaking with fifty two Battering Guns, it is understood all things thereunto belonging must be furnished with the Gunners and Men.

Aving overcome the highest Difficulties in submitting our Judgments, declar'd in three Councils of War, supported with undeniable Reafons fons, to His Majesty's Pleasure, and the Inclinations of our General, provided we had been affisted as in the last Council of War we desir'd, we are confident His Majesty will allow we gave even a most unreasonable mark of our Respect, having confented to expose the Troops under our Care to visible Ruin, without any prospect of Success, and against all the Rules of War.

We have been delay'd by Disappointments in all we were made to expect, wanting Men and Time to carry on the Siege, and diverted by feveral Refolutions intimated from His Majesty, sometimes for a March, fometimes for a Siege, fo little provided with Intelligence from the Place, that we were oblig'd to Land the Forces without the least Advice, and that made an Argument for an Attempt against a Town, with a Garrison near as strong as our selves, without any Correspondence in it fuitable to what has been told, which Siege must require more than two third parts of our Men on Duty every Day, by the demand of our Engineers.

And having notice from Admiral Wassanaer of the positive time of the departure of the Dutch Ships, some Days before which the Dutch General affures us he will embarque his Troops, and the Engineers not undertaking to make a Battery even in that time, fince the Fleet, besides the Marines, which in all our Computations of the Strength of the Army, we had reckon'd upon to compose a part of it, are not able to furnish towards carrying on our Works above nine hundred Men, of which, only three hundred can work each Day, instead of 1500 for daily Service, as we had desir'd; so that the whole assistance that the Fleet can give, being added to the number of effective Foot we have now fit for Service, including the Battalion of Guards, will make in all but 8515 Men, our of which 5000 Men must be daily employ'd, either to work at or guard the intended Trenches and Battery.

And, fince eight Deputies of the Catalans did declare to the Earl of Peterborow, that they would not promife any number of Men to work at our Trenches and Batteries, or in any Place where they shou'd be expos'd to Fire, which they faid cou'd not be expected from undisciplin'd Country-People:

And, whereas we express'd in our last Council of War, that our highest Concern was, that we should be disabled from pursuing any other real Service, by staying to endeavour to make a fruitless

Attempt:

And, feeing our general Instructions are explained, and the first Services intended fo plainly directed anew in feveral Letters fignifying Her Majesty's Pleasure: It is the unanimous Opinion of this Council of War that the propos'd Attempt on Barcelona for eighteen Days cannot be made, but that the Forces be immediately embarqu'd for the probable Service, and the Support of the Duke of Savoy.

therefore now made use or ly of his own thoughts; and he

32 The E. of Peterborow's

Thus we fee it was refolved to embarque all the troops for Savoy, which indeed was the first defign of his Lordship's Expedition. But the King of Spain taking a fudden resolution to stay by his Catalans, his Lordship saw himself reduc'd to this Dilemma, either to go Home without attempting any thing, or take this attempt upon himself, contrary to the opinion of the General Officers and consequently to po-fitive Instructions. His Lordship, who never car'd for being a General without doing something, chose rather to trust to the good nature of his Country, which he hop'd wou'd pardon his fucceeding in so confiderable an Action, tho' not strictly undertaken by a formal order. My Lord therefore now made use only of his own thoughts; and by an uncommon artifice made that never to be forgotten attack upon fort Monjuick, the very foundation of all our footing in Spain. This, I know, fome wou'd attribute to the late Prince of Hesse: That brave Prince indeed had too great a share in the danger of this undertaking; but as he had no Command in the Army, so he was not in the least concern'd in the forming of this Design.

Those that remember matters of fact so well known in foreign Parts and to so many thousand then present, cannot but read with surprize in Annals p. 146. year the 4th. of Her Majesty's Reign, taken (as is pretended) from papers of publick authority, representations so false and so injurious to the reputation of this Noble Lord: As if a diminution of his indisputable fervices were to be the only reward of fuch hazards run, and fuch fucceffes obtain'd for the publick.

The injudicious, or rather impossible, proposals made by the Prince of Heffe, and infifted upon by him to the last, were the occasion of those unanimous Councils of War against an enterprize which promis'd fuch certain ruin: and the freedoms taken in discourse by that Prince had prevented any correspondence, for some time, between him and the Earl of Peterborow. So far was this Project against Monjuick from being propos'd by that Prince to his Lordship, that in truth the Earl of Peterborow was forc'd to make it a fecret even to the Court; where refentments were very publick and remarkable, upon orders orders to embarque the artillery and the King's baggage, which his Lordship gave out the better to disguise his real design. Nay, the excuse the Earl of Peterborow made to the Prince of Heffe, for inviting him to affift in an action he cou'd not yet acquaint him with, was, that the indifpensible necessity of deceiving the Enemy had made him resolve to furprize his Friends in an attempt, which however desperate, was yet the only possible way of carrying on the Siege with fuc-cefs. All I shall observe further upon this Head is, That 'twas own'd by all who were there, that had not his Lordship shewn an unexampled Vigour and Courage, and expos'd himself more than perhaps became one in his Post, the Efforts of the Enemy and the mistakes of some of his own own people had put this important enterprize beyond all re-trieve. So that 'twill be the least justice that can be done to his Lordship on this occasion to say, That few Generals cou'd have accomplish'd what he did, and that fewer, confidering his circumstances, wou'd have attempted it.

They who were fo ready to attribute the Honour of taking Barcelona to any rather than to the Earl of Peterborow, wou'd with equal justice deny his Lordship to have had any share in the relief of it, imputing the intire preservation of that place to the timely arrival of the Fleet. This no doubt was very feafonable and fortunate, and what his Lordship was indefatigably indufirious in hastning: But confidering that the Enemy had for two two days before this made a practicable Breach, let any unprejudic'd man judge, whether the appearance of our Fleet upon the Coast, cou'd be the only reason of preventing their asfault; nay, rather, whether it was not a reason for them to attack the Town, as they might eafily have done, with more vigour and dispatch. The Terror fure must come from some other quarter: And I think we may very impartially affign it to my Lord Peterborow's being posted in the Mountains with a few Troops of his own, and a good number of Miquelets; which his Lordship dispos'd of to that advantage, as to cut off the Enemy from any communication with the Country, hinder all their parties from fallying out, and give them continual alarms and un-D 3 eafieafiness in their Camp. If they had made an Attack upon the Town, they had good reason to fear they might be Attack'd themselves at the same time from the Mountains: And they were unwilling to venture the diforders that might have happened to their Army, which they defign'd for other Services as too plainly appear'd foon after. It must be confess'd, that my Lord had but a very few regular Troops with him: But those who have had a thousand opportunities of being acquainted with his dexterity in furprizing, and his peculiar Art of managing weak Instruments to elude and confound the force of a strong Enemy, will easily be convinc'd that the Appearance he made and the Alarms he gave from the hills, was not the effect of Chance and and Hurry, but the pure refult of a good Conduct: And that to his unwearied Vigilance and uncommon Stratagems, we owe, in a great measure, the Infatuation our Enemies were then posses'd with.

Perhaps it may be no disagreeable entertainment to the Reader, if I show'd make a short comparison of these two Sieges of Barcelona: The Actions being both of 'em extreamly remarkable for the difference not only of the Event, but of the circumstances the Armies were in when they enter'd upon the Siege, and of the Methods which they us'd in carrying it on.

When it was attack'd by Her Majesty's Arms, the Success was every where despair'd of; and the Attempt oppos'd by many Councils of War: nor without reason, since the Garrison was double our number in Horse, and almost equal in Foot; And the English Army, unprovided of Artillery and all things else which are thought necessary where a Siege is in good earnest intended, was in a manner supply'd with nothing but from our Fleet.

But when the French attack'd it, they had a Royal Army, encourag'd by the presence of a King, led by a Mareschal of France, and countenanc'd by the Fleet under the command of the Lord High Admiral. The Success was presum'd certain all over the World, and insur'd by the most famous Engineer of France; not without very good grounds, for their preparations of all kinds were equal to such hopes: Their Army was numerous, not less than 24000, their Troops in good condition, and the quantity of Warlike Stores with which they were furnisht for that Siege, almost incredible. We may judge of the rest by the Artillery they left behind 'em upon their Retreat, which was upwards of 100 Brass Canon fit for Battery, and mounted upon the proper Field-Carriages.

The circumstances of the two Armies that severally fat down before this place being fo unlike, the Methods by which they attack'd it must needs be very different. The very Works thrown up by the French wou'd have destroy'd the Earl of Peterborow's Army in labour and fatigue alone. For they begun their Trenches from the bottom of Monjuick-hill at the distance of twice Musket-shot, and continued tinued 23 days battering the Fort with 50 pieces of Cannon, and lost 3000 of their best men in taking that Citadel, which the Earl of Peterborow secur'd with little loss in less than an hour. And besides these Works at Monjuick, they carried on their Internehments to a vast length, all along the West-side of the Town; and sinish'd them with such regularity and exactness, as if they had design'd to secure them against the insults of the strongest Army.

When the English besieg'd the City, they were scarce more than 7000 in number, and 'twas necessary that even this little Body shou'd be divided into two Camps, so situated as not to be able to relieve one another under three Leagues march, round by the foot of the mountains: so that the Garrison had double the Force of either part of our Army. This was the only contrivance by which the sitting down of such a handful of men, not capable of surrounding the Town, cou'd have had the effect of a regular Investment.

The disposition of these two fmall Bodies was thus happpily order'd: That on one fide in the plain was cover'd by a Fort just on the edge of the Sea, and great retrenchments were carried on to a little Village, where the walls of some Gardens and a River gave fecurity to the right of the Camp; and the Waters upon occasion might be made use of to render the flat Grounds between them and Barcelona almost unpassable. That on the other fide was plac'd in a little Valley betwixt Hills 1 . .

so conveniently, and out of fight, that tho' within small-shot of the walls, the Enemy cou'd only incommode us by the randomshot of their Biscayne musquets. The Works leading from the little Camp betwixt the Mountains to the Battery were fo inconfiderable, that two High-ways supplied almost the use of Trenches; which were reliev'd with those different faints and disguises, that we lost very few Men in changing the Guards. bas

To conclude, the day before the Capitulation the whole Army had orders for a general Attack, and no one Man was exempt from his share in that hazardous action: Tho' the Garrison, upon a view of this desperate resolution, prevented it by an immediate furrender. inua little Valey between fifths

Madam my Sifter,

Should not have been so long e'er I did my self the Honour to repeat the assurances of my sincere Re-' spects to you, had not I waited for the 'good Occasion which I now acquaint you with, that the City of Barcelona is furrendred to me by Capitulation. I doubt not but you will receive this great News with intire Satisfaction; as well because this happy Success is the effect of your Arms always glori-ous, as from the pure motives of that Bounty and Paternal Affection you have for me, and for every thing which may contribute to the advancement of my Interest.

'I must do this Justice to all the Of-' ficers and Common Souldiers, and par-'ticularly to my Lord Peterborom, that 'he has shewn in this whole Expedition a Constancy, Bravery and Conduct worthy of the choice that your Majefly has made of him, and that he could ono ways give me better Satisfaction than he has by the great Zeal and Apsplication which he has equally testified for my Interest, and for the Service of my Person. I owe the same justice to Brigadier Stanhope for his great Zeal. Vigilance, and very wife Conduct, which he has given proofs of upon all Occasions: As also to all your Officers of the Fleet, particularly to your worthy Admiral Shovel, affuring your Majesty, that he has assisted me in this Expedition with an inconceiveable Readiness and Application, and that ono Admiral will be ever better able to render me greater Satisfaction than he has done. During the Siege of Barcelona fome of your Majesty's Ships. with the assistance of the Troops of the Country have reduced the Town of Tarragona, and the Officers are ' made Prisoners of War. The Town of Girone has been taken at the fame 'time by furprize by the Troops of the Country. The Town of Lerida has fubmitted, as also that of Tortosa upon the Ebro; fo that we have taken all the Places of Catalonia, except Roses. Some Places in Arragon near Sarragoffa have declar'd for me, and the Garrison of 31.

the Castle of Denia in Valentia have maintain'd their Post, and repuls'd the Enemy; 400 of the Enemies Cavalry have entred into our Service, and a great number of their Infantry have deserted.

This, Madam, is the State that your Arms, and the inclination of the People have put my Affairs in. It is unnecessary to tell you what stops the course of these Conquests; it is not the Season of the Year, nor the Enemy, these are no obstacles to your Troops, who desire nothing more than to act under the Conduct that your Majesty has appointed them. The taking of Barcelona with so small a number of Troops is very remarkable, and what has been done in this Siege is almost without example. That with 7 or 8000 Men of your Troops, and 2000 Miquelets, we should surround and invested a Place, that 30000 French could not block up.

'After a March of 13 hours, the Troops climb'd up the Rocks and Precipices to attack a Fortification stronger than the Place, which the Earl of Peterborow has sent you a Plan of: Two Generals with the Granadiers attack'd it Sword in Hand, in which Action the Prince of Heffe died gloriously after fo many brave Actions: I hope his Brother and his Family will always have your Majesty's Protection. With 800 'Men they forc'd the Cover'd Way, and all the Intrenchments and Works, one after another, till they came to the last Work which furrounded it, 'against 500 Men of regular Troops which defended the Place, and a Re-'inforcement they had receiv'd; and three Days afterwards we became 'Masters of the Place. We afterwards 'attack'd the Town on the fide of the 'Caftle. We landed again our Cannon ' and the other Artillery with inconceiv-'able Trouble, and form'd two Camps ' diffaire from each other three Leagues; 'against a Garrison almost as numerous as our Army, whose Cavalry was double the strength of ours. The first 'Camp was fo well intrench'd that ''twas defended by 2000 Men and the Dragoons, whilst we attack'd the Town with the rest of our Troops. The Breach being made we prepar'd to 'make a general Affault with all the 'Army : These are Circumstances, orbon , ban oved Ewisdre' Madam, Madam, which distinguish this Action perhaps from all others.

'Here has happen'd an unforeseen Accident: The Cruelty of the pretended Viceroy, and the report spread abroad, that he would take away the Prisoners contrary to the Capitulation, provok'd the Burghers and some of the Country People to take up Arms against the Garrison, whilst they were busie in 'packing up their Baggage, which was to be fent away the next day; so that every thing tended to Slaughter; but 'your Majesty's Troops entring into the Town with the Earl of Peterborow 'instead of seeking Pillage, a practice common upon fuch Occasions, they appeas'd the Tumult, and have fav'd the 'Town, and even the Lives of their 'Enemies, with a Discipline and Generofity without example.

What remains is, that I return you 'my most hearty Thanks for sending ' so great a Fleet, and such good and 'valiant Troops to my Ailistance. After fo happy a beginning I have thought it proper, according to the Sentiments of your Generals and Admirals, to support by my Presence the Conquests that we have made, and to 6 fhow

' show my Subjects, fo Affectionate to 'my Person, that I cannot abandon them. I receive fuch Succours from ' your Majesty and from your Generous 'Nation, that I am loaded with your Bounties, and am not a little con-'cern'd to think, that the support of 'my Interest should cause so great an expence. But, Madam, I facrifice my Person, and my Subjects in Cata-'lonia expose also their Lives and Fortunes upon the assurances they have of 'your Majesty's generous Protection. 'Your Majesty and your Council knows better than we do what is 'necessary for our Conservation. We 'shall then expect your Majesty's Succours with an intire Confidence in 'your Bounty and Wisdom. A further force is necessary: we give no ' fmall diversion to France, and without doubt they will make their ut-'most Efforts against me as soon as 'possible; but I am satisfied, that the same Efforts will be made by 'my Allies to defend me. Your Good-'ness, Madam, inclines you, and your 'Power enables you, to support those that the Tyranny of France would oppress. All that I can insi-E 2 ' nuate

If we go on now to confider the relief of Barcelona, we shall find the Earl of Peterborow's conduct as fleady, as it was in the taking it, and perhaps as lit-tle understood. For in this, as in most of the Events of this War, his Lordship overcame all the Obstacles that cou'd be thrown in his way by the Ministers of the Spanish Court. As foon as his Lordship perceiv'd that the Enemies Design was upon Barcelona, he order'd some of the Troops in Lerida to march and reinforcethat Garrison: The King, who was perfuaded they wou'd rather make an Attempt upon Lerida, countermanded those Orders of my Lord, and was so little apprehensive of Barcelona's being in danger, tho' sufficiently warn'd of it by Letters from his Lordship, that when E 3 the Enemy was within 5 Leagues of the Town, his Majesty had but 500 Men in it. My Lord, in like manner, was follicited by the Court to abandon Valencia, in order to secure Catalonia; and by the most pressing Letters and Commands, he was urg'd to fuch rash and impossible Attempts, as must have prov'd the certain ruin of the Forces under his Command, and the loss of the King's Person. But in all these distracting and desperate Cases, his Lordship not only took the proper Resolutions, but with a Prudence fortunate to himfelf, as well as the Publick, never omitted to fecure the unanimous Content of all in Councils of War, and gave in Writing beforehand the Reasons which never fail'd of being justify'd by the Events.

While

While Baroelona was encompass'd by Land and Sea (after the loss of Fort Monjuick) his Lordship found methods to fling 500 Men into the Town, which was thought humanely impossible: And he brought the Forces which fo much contributed to the relief of the City, without abandoning Valencia, or any foot of Ground that he had gain'd in Spain. He maintain'd his Post upon the Hills, for near a Fortnight, with about 2500 Men, never above a League or two from the Enemy; which he kept in perpetual Alarms. And by the constant Vigilance he us'd, and the exact Intelligences he procur'd, he continued in the Neighbourhood of fuch an Army to the last; till he made a March of about feven Leagues with to critical a Disposition, E 4 that of Boats he had prepar'd to the number of 3 or 400, and landed at the same time with the Troops that were on board the Navy.

The throwing in of fo feafonable a Reinforcement into Barcelona, under fuch circumstances, was as great a Difgrace as happened to the French, except that of their rifing from before the Town immediately after; for the Garrison, even with this addition, was not stronger than when my Lord Peterborow took it with little more than a third part of their Army. In order to secure this great advantage, when it shou'd happen, the Earl of Per terborow, notwithstanding all the haste made from Valencia to Barcelona, had vifited, fortify'd and fecur'd all the Paffes behind him, fo as to oblige (with an inconfi-derable number of regular Troops and the Country-People) the whole Army of Mareschal de Tesse intirely to abandon Spain: into which, had my Lord's Advice been follow'd, they had never to this Day return'd, as I shall presently shew. Nothing will appear more wonderful, if People wou'd impartially confider it, than how it was possible for the Earl of Peterborow, with about 8000 Men (for he never had more) to gain ground, and defend every lnch of it, against thirty thousand as good Troops as any in Europe, and at last to disperfe and drive them out of the Spanish Dominions. Those that have been too willing to find imaginary Faults, and that cou'd not deny some notorious Services of his Lordship, have how-ever represented these Actions as effects effects of Spirit and a happy Temerity; but such effects of lucky Chance and Courage feldom produce above one fortunate Event, and are too often paid for by an after-reckoning. Whereas the whole War, while the Earl of Peterborow had the Conduct of it, feem'd nothing but a course of prodigious Success, without one disappointment or loss by Land or Sea: And every Action argued before-hand with all his Officers, and the Reasons upon all great Emergencies fet down in Councils of War, prove that Fortune had little share in such conftant, regular, and foreseen Events; and that his Lordship was Prudent enough to provide against the evil Hour, both Abroad and at Home.

I have dwelt longer upon these particulars relating to Barcelona, than than I at first intended; and shall now go on to what I chiefly aim'd at in these papers.

The Siege being rais'd, and the Enemy advanc'd into Roufellon, his Lordship clearly foresaw what defigns they had to put in execution towards the recovery of Spain: and therefore he immediately made all the pressing instances to the King and Court to hasten their departure from Barcelona, and to use the utmost dispatch to get possession of Madrid; for it was beyond all contradiction that the King's prefence at his Capital wou'd have made all the chief places in his Dominions declare for him; and an ordinary force upon the frontier of Navar wou'd have secur'd the passes there against any second entrance of the French into Spain. These motives and arguments ments urg'd by my Lord had their proper weight with the Court and the Army: and accordingly it was unanimously twice resolv'd, in a general Council of War, by all the Ministers and Officers, that the King should with all diligence imaginable march towards Valencia; and that my Lord Peterborow with 6000 Men shou'd go thither before, and prepare every thing, in order to carry on his Majesty to Madrid.

IS Majesty having propos'd, that feeing God was pleased to bless his Arms with such Success, and it being necessary to pursue the Advantage before the Enemy should have time to gather fresh Forces; he had called together the Persons present in Council, to deliberate with them about the most important Operations, and the easiest Method of putting them in Execution: desiring all their Opinions in a Matter of so great Consequence, as likewise in the following Proposals.

1. 'Whether the War shall be carried on in the Kingdom of Arragon, or Valencia.

2. 'Which and what Troops ought to be employed in the Campaign, and what will be sufficient to leave in Catalonia for its defence.

3. 'What Train of Artillery is proper, and how the Baggage is to be regulated.

' most proper for Magazines.

5. What Operations may be pitcht upon with hopes of Success.

His Majesty concluding with expressions of his Confidence in the known Valour and Application of all the Generals, by whose Conduct he expected a most advantageous Progress to the Common Cause.

1. Admiral Leake declared, that the dispositions for the Operations of the Fleet, were of a different Nature from those by Land, but that he affur'd in the Name of the rest, that they would comply with their Obligations and Services to his Majesty, to the utmost of their Power, in what belong'd to the Sea Service; and having shown his Majesty their Opinions in a Council of War held on Board, he referr'd himself to that as his Sentiment, feeing no reason to alter his Opinion.

His Majesty having heard the discourse of every one, it was the unani-mous Opinion of all, That considering the present circumstances of Affairs, it would be best to carry on the Operations in the Kingdom of Valencia, where we should not only enjoy the Advantage of the assistance of the Fleet, which would fave great Expences, and Troubles, which the Army would be liable to in a March to Arragon; there being no other Body in Spain, that could embaras the speedy Conquest of that Kingdom, but that small one of the Count de las Torres: Routing this, the Kingdom of Valencia would be free, Murcia would submit, and the most convenient way would be open to proceed with the Army towards the Capital of Madrid, besides the Advantages gotten by inclining towards the Portuguese Army, being able to resist any Force the French can make, in order to hinder the entire Conquest of the Continent of Spain.

2. As to the second Point: It being of the highest consequence to preserve this Principality from the Insults, and the Invasions of the Enemy, leaving to this end a considerable Garrison in Girona; altho' it is thought that the Enemy is not in a Condition to besiege any other place this Summer, nor to effect any thing against Barcelona, whilst the Fleet are in these parts of the Medite-

It was agreed to take into the Field the following Train, fourteen Field Pieces, four half-Cannon, two Mortars, with Powder, Shot, Boinbs, and other Necessaries proportionable; and it being of Confequence to regulate the neceffary Baggage, it was left to some Generals to regulate, and concert a Contract, at the most moderate Rate it can be perform'd for. About the 4th Proposition of the Magazines, and Provifions, my Lord Peterborow declared he had in the Fleet, Wheat enough for three Months, for twenty Thousand Men, and it was propos'd to make another Contract for Bread and Barley, that should be necessary for the Camalways providing Magazines in the most convenient Places. 5. Touching the last Proposal, where the Army ought to join: 'Twas the common Opinion that the most convenient place for the Rendevouz would be nigh Valencia, for the eafe of fending by Land or Sea with greater Conveniency all necessaries for the Camp, and for being the more at hand for the preventing any Attempt of the Ene-

The Reader will observe, that in this Council of War there is a disposition of all the Troops we had on this fide of Spain: a number perhaps that will be furprizing to those, that remember how vigorously and early the Parliament, after the first Siege of Barcelona, voted a strong reinforcement to be fent immediately to those parts; and that accordingly the London Gazette of June 24th 1706 did his Lordship the honour to put him at the head of an Army of 25000. But however his Lordship, contrary to his ufual fortune, happen'd to be magnify'd in this particular; all the Forces his Lordship cou'd muster up in Valencia, (his Majesty having been pleased to remand, after my Lord was aboard, about 2000 of the 6000 order'd thither) were somewhat above above 4000, and wanted of the twenty five thousand little more than the odd twenty.

This Council of War which his Lordship obtain'd, so solemnly agreed upon and a fecond time confirm'd, shews the Earl of Peterborow's earnestness and impatience for the march to Madrid. In order to which, the day being fettled for the King's leaving Barcelona, nay, and the very route of his journey adjusted, his Lordship having sent all the Cavalry before, went on board the Fleet with the Foot, who were in no condition to march for want of baggage-necessaries, and landed at Valencia the beginning of June. His Lordship thought he cou'd make no better use of his short stay here, than to recruit his shatter'd Cavalry; which he not only did, but mounted a new Re-

Regiment of Dragoons, draughted out of the companies of Foot; there being always in this Country, and especially in our circumstances, which requir'd dispatch, a necessity for a good body of Horse. In which single Regiment I can't but remark what may feem a Paradox to some, that his Lordship sav'd the Queen near 20000 l. the Horses, one with another, coffing not above 10 l. a piece, which if they had been transported from England or Ireland, wou'd have stood Her Majesty at least in 60 l. as we found those actually did which first went upon the descent into Catalonia. Indeed it may justly be faid of his Lordship, That however liberal he was of his own, no one was ever a more frugal manager of the publick Stock: his Lordship having given several instances in this extraordinary War, that he cou'd sometimes maintain an Army without money, as well as take Towns without men. And this Regiment, to shew his Lordship had no great mind to delay his march into Castile, had their route given them, the very same day they were mounted.

And here his Lordship's indefatigable pains, in procuring and purchasing Mules for the baggage of the Army, deserves to be taken notice of: which, though it may at the first view seem a trifle, yet, considering the extream want we were in for them, and our incapacity to take the Field without them, as well as the difficulty and trouble to get them in a Country just exhausted by the Enemy, ought to be look'd upon as no ordinary piece of service; I am sure it was a service that no one there but his Lordship cou'd at that time have done. At least those that saw his Lordship for three weeks together, from morning to night, satiguing himself in this manner, and submitting to the drudgery of the lowest Officers, did not at all suspect that his Lordship had so little inclination to march, as some have since pretended to discover.

To facilitate our entrance into castile, his Lordship immediately sent Lieutenant General Wyndbam with a body of 1500 men to bessiege Requena; a strong and troublesome Garrison, and indeed the only one in the road to Madrid, and the first frontier Town of the Enemy: the enterprize succeeded to our wishes, and the way lay open for his Maiesty's jesty's march. For his Lordship prov'd to the King by the constant passing of Deserters as well as Expresses, that there was no-thing now to hinder his Majesty from reaching Madrid with a fmall party of Horfe only; and he thought a King needed not much persuasion to take posses-sion of a Crown, when 'twou'd be rather a journey of Pleasure, than a March, and this to be eafily perform'd in a fortnights time.

My Lord having made all the necellary prepartions for the carrying on the King and the Troops, was surpriz'd to find such a delay in the Court: and tho' by frequent Messages and Letters he had urg'd the necessity of the King's departure from Barcelona, his Majesty did not think fit to fet out from that place till near a month after the time agreed upon. 'Twas yet a greater furprize to his Lordship, when he had notice that the King, upon his arrival at Tarragona, had intirely alter'd all the scheme of his march, and was refolv'd to go round by Saragosa. The Earl of Peterborow reprefented, with all the earnestness he cou'd, the danger of the leaft delay in so critical a Juncture; the hazard as well as the great inconvenience of fo tedious a march through so barren and mountainous aCountry, and where his Majesty might run the risque of being intercepted and sur-priz'd by the Enemy. His Lord-ship shew'd a more than ordinary Zeal in foliciting this affair: fent Letters every day to dissuade his Majesty from his defign'd journey, dispatch'd a Deputation putation of the Valencian Nobility, transmitted the Opinion of Councils of War where the Spanish Ministers as well as English affifted, unanimously desiring and preffing the King to continue his march the eafiest and nearest way by Valencia, as was first propos'd. coa to khilines molificial gwest has Camiculated, the bell Carthagena has submitted, and the Garrison consists of 500 Men. Requena has Capitulated, the Soldiers Prisoners of War. The Inhabitants without Terms to be disposed of at your Pleasure. Your Majesty will find the Horse and 2000 Foot near Alarcon, half way to Madrid; the Spaniards and Germans are on that side.

ling, and have represented to him the pressing Reasons which (in my Opinion) requires your Majesty's presence in your Capital. On this side there are no difficulties, 'tis properly but a Journey of a few Days; but by Arragon it is the Business of six Weeks, or two Months, and all the Affairs of Europe in the mean time in suspence; the March also dangerous and uncertain.

Who can offer to your Majesty any Opinion upon the Affairs of Italy, and the Indies, recommended to Mr. Stanhope and my self? All that we can say to your Majesty, is, that the Grand Fleet is not arriv'd, but that your Majesty may in a Fortnights time be at Madrid, secure of the Spanish Monarchy, ready to give the necessary Orders for the Interest of Europe; and that by that time we shall be in a Condition to execute all that your Majesty may think Necessary by Sea and Land.

The Refolution of your Majesty's coming in Person this way is in no wise an Objection to the March of the Troops necessary by the side of Arragon. On the contrary when it is known that your Majesty is at Madrid, and capable of giving them the proper Affistances; there will be no Difficulties made in that Kingdom. Sir, it is only in your Capital, where the Proper and Necessar ry Orders can be given.

If your Majesty passes directly by Requena, without losing one Moment, which seems to me the necessary Resolution, it will be proper for me to stay here to put Matters into such a disposition, as to prevent any delay. If your Majesty does not take this determination, you will be pleased to give me Advice of it, that I may immediately take Post and come to you.

I have borrowed the Mony necessary to put your Majesty's Troops in March, and it seems to me there is nothing wanting but your Person at Madrid. God Almighty bring your Majesty fly thither without delay.

I have nothing in particular to Communicate to your Majesty, but that they have stopt in the Town of Campillo, a Courier fent with Letters from the Marquess Das Minas and my Lord Gallway to your Majesty; Don Pedro Moras, who is March'd that way, shall Chastise those People as they deserve, who have fent those Letters to the Duke of Anjou towards Navarre. It is faid those Generals solicited your Majesty that you would be pleased to pass by Valencia towards Madrid, that they made offers to your Majesty to send Horse to reinforce ours, if they were wanting, and to inform you that they would not enter Madrid without your Majesty, where every thing languish'd for want of your Presence.

I have received Letters from the Admirals: neither they, Sir, nor I know what to fay in this Conjuncture. It feems as if every thing were at a stand, till your Majesty gives Life to the whole, by your Presence in the Capital. If I may offer any thing to your Majesty, from the Queen, from the Allies, or from my felf, it must be my most carnest Prayers, that your Majesty would not lose one Moment in going to Madrid: All suffers by your Absence. I expect your Orders, Sir, that I may go to Tortofa, or to prepare every thing for your shortest way by Requena, or what else your Majesty thinks necessary. I hope the Count Savella is arriv'd near your Person: I refer my self to his Zeal, and to his knowledge of his own Country, assuring your Majesty on my part of a diligence to serve you, and of a most earnest desire to see you the greatest Prince of the Age.

July 10th.

SIR, on the Court to sent F it is no more proper to speak to your Majesty upon the Resolutions you have taken, it is now my Duty to do all in my Power to fustain what you have refolved upon, having already complied with my Obligations, in offering to your Majesty (with all possible Submission) my Sentiments, when I thought they might have been of use. In the present Circumstances, I am afraid that the Enemies Cavalry may burn all the Country to the Gates of Sarragofa; your Majesty doubtless will have received the Express which came from Madrid; he made us highly fensible how much it were to be wished that your Majesty were already there. You will fee, Sir, by the Queens Letter, that her Majesty has been pleased to increase my Burden, which was but too weighty before; she has fent me Orders and Instructions, plain and clear upon the present State of Affairs: if I had received them before, I should have represented (if possible) with more force the Necessity of passing G 2 with the utmost Diligence to Madrid by the secure way of Valencia. I must Advertise your Majesty in the Name of the Queen, that not only she is making the utmost Efforts for the Interest of your Majesty, in all places where her Troops can Act, but that also the English Nation suffers extreamly by the zealous Endeavours for your Service. The French have ruin'd some of our Colonies in America: St. Christophers has fuf-fer'd more than the rest, the Enemy having sent considerable Forces that way, which made them so weak before Barcelona. They endeavour'd to secure the possession of Carthagena, and the Havana. I have the necessary Advices and Instructions upon that great Article, which fo nearly concerns your Majesty and all Europe: and yet the precious time is lost by a dangerous March out of the way, when your Majesty might Remedy all at Madrid.

I obey your Majesty's Orders with relation to the Regiments of Ahumada and Colbatch: tho' I must take the Liberty to fay they are so far advanced in Castile, that their March by Madrid, would prove the shortest and most practicable way to go to Saragofa, 1150 11 110.11

I fee by Mr. Zinzerling's Letter, how much your Majesty is in want of Mony. I have some little come from England, and will send it immediately to Saragosa, after having given the necessary Orders for the March of your Troops according to your Command; esteeming my self most Happy when I can be useful to your Majesty, whose Glory and Establishment I desire above all things.

My Lord,

Owe you Answers to Four of yours of the 30th past, of the 1st, and 5th of this Month, which I have received in different places. You represent to me the Importance of my arriving as soon as possible at Madrid, and propose to me the way of Requena, as the shortest and securest from Insults. You tell me the Dispositions you have made to accompany my Person, and moreover offer me to come in Person to concert the rest, which might contribute to our good Success; for all which I consider that the Journy you must make to Saragosa to meet me would be too long, and difficult; and since the Fleet is expected each moment, I conceive your Presence very necessary where you are, to direct that important Affair of the Duke of Savoy, upon which I have so sully expressed my self in some of my former Letters.

What Opinion his Lordship had of this journey will yet further appear, by a Letter to one of the Ministers in England, where his Lordship has fet down the natural consequences of so strange a resolution in such a manner, as shews he was no ill Prophet, and could not therefore neglect to prevent (if in his power) mischiefs he so well forefaw. For, how can he be fuppos'd to have been fo far wanting to his own reputation and interest, as not to have follicited, and preffed for the carrying the King to his Capital; which wou'd have given him the entire glory of finishing the War, and prevented others from any pretence to a share in the honour of placing the King upon his Throne? asili a ton grissons told

What Opinionins L.

Extract of a Letter writ by the Earl of Peterborow to a Minister, from Valencia in July 1706.

THAT torrent of good Fortune which overcomes all Difficulties, and that infatuation which feems in every place to have feiz'd the Enemy, diffipates those fears I might justly have of Shipwreck in the very Port: But it is a cruel circumstance, that after so many escapes and so many dangers evercome, to see all so injudiciously expos'd by the most unaccountable Resolutions that ever were taken.

You may have receiv'd by Italy, before these come to hand, some Letters which I writ in the uncertainty of what the Portugueses might do. By all Accounts, the least opposition wou'd have made them turn back. It was hard enough to make them walk to Madrid, tho' meeting no resistance. And by the Express that pass'd two Days ago by Valencia to the King, we are inform'd that the unfortunate Delays to which his Majesty is advis'd in his Journy to Madrid, may cause the most faral changes; since, if any Foot can join their Horse, which is retir'd from Madrid to the number of 6000, I doubt we may see some extraordinary Revolutions.

- Judge of my Mortification and Grief to fee fo glorious and fure a Game expos'd to what I am going to represent. If I were at the Head of the 6000 Spanish Horse, which are very good, I would be accountable with my Life, that instead of the King's coming by Saragofa to Madrid, when his Majesty was in that Capital, I wou'd burn and deftroy all that Country, even to the Walls of that City: That nothing less than the march of the whole Portugal Army and the harrafing their Foot, if they cou'd take the Field, shou'd make it possible for the King to get to Madrid: That I wou'd at least delay his march till perhaps the French Foot and Horse might from Navar come into Arragon: And then give me leave to fay one Battle wou'd decide the Fate of Spain, commodure: and not only it into that Capital till they had intely

Notwithstanding all these advices, remonstrances, and warnings, the King continued firm in his resolution: 'tis needless to shew how fatal a one, since it not only cut us off from all the opportunities of gaining further advantages, but occasion'd some time after the loss of what we had been with fo much pains, and I may almost fay with so many miracles poffes'd of. The King thus perfifting in these measures, his Lordship had no other hopes left but that, fince he perceiv'd there was a correspondence between his Majesty and the Portuguese Army, who were now, as he was told, masters of Madrid, thosethat had the command there wou'd make all the advantages of fo happy a conjuncture: and not only fecure that Capital till they had fafely conducted the King thither, but take take care to seize and fortifie the passes in Navar; the only and obvious expedient left, since the King was resolv'd on these new methods, to keep him in the quiet possession of his Kingdom.

I shan't inquire into the mo-tives of his Majesty's Conduct in this particular; 'tis a matter too nice, and perhaps improper to be examin'd here. But I can't forbear faying it has been with no little astonishment that I have heard my Lord Peterborow accus'd, as being the cause of this Journey through Arragon: tho' indeed it has been his Fate more than once, to be charg'd even with those miscarriages, which he us'd his utmost endeavours to prevent.

There have been reports fpread about, and but too much encourag'd, that the King having demanded Mony for the necessary charges of his journey, my Lord Peterborow in a very peremptory manner refus'd to lend him any; and that upon this denial, the King was refolv'd to make his progress thro' Arragon, where he hop'd a fresh Province, that had hop'd a remarkation him, wou'd lately declar'd for him, wou'd be inclin'd to supply his present necessities.

The story indeed is very plaufible: and with this additional report, that his Lordship had received 103000 l. remitted for his Majerty's service, and wou'd give no pay to the King's Troops then in Valencia, shews the true fpirit of Calumny; which to carry on a maticious defign, must not only raise suspicions, but deny facts. For his Lordship was so far from refusing the King upon this this account any Mony which he had in his power to give him, that his Lordship not having received any part of the pretended 103000 l. was forc'd to order for that purpose a very considerable fum, appropriated to other uses. And 'tis well known to all those that were acquainted with what pass'd in Spain, that his Lord-thip being inform'd of these Calumnies, brought Mr. Mead, the Queen's Paymaster, before the King and Mr. Stanhope, who in regard to these points gave this account to his Majesty; That all his Troops had been paid ten days advance, for which he produc'd their Receipts, That no part of the 103000 l. was come to his hands, but that however forty thousand Pound had been advanc'd for his Majesty's service, at the earnest sollicitation of the Earl

Earl of Peterborow, which was defign'd and appointed for other fervices.

Nay, when upon his arrival at Saragosa, his Majesty was in want of a Supply, and fent to my Lord Peterborow for it, his Lordship immediately dispatch'd all the mony of his own, or what he could get upon Credit, and had his Majesty's thanks return'd in a very obliging Letter. So far was my Lord Peterborow from refusing the King mony towards supporting the march that was at first defign'd, and so much wish'd for by his Lordship; that he took care his Majesty shou'd not want it even in a journey, which his Lordship cou'd by no means approve of. vanc'd for his Maletty's fervice,

It is a hard circumstance of my Lord's Fortune, that he must at home be put to prove himfelf unconcern'd in a matter, which if he had laid any claim to abroad, his pretences wou'd have been utterly deny'd. For a Spanish Grandee, a Minister of great Influence at that time, the Conde de Cifuentes, took all the merit of this journey to himself; as he profess'd in a Letter he wrote to ingratiate himself and the Court with the People of Arragon, to this effect: 'I have us'd my utmost endeavours, and at last succeeded, in bringing the King by the way of Arragon: which his Majesty comply'd with the more easily, being fatisfied that fince the services 'you offer'd were free and vo-' luntary, not like those of the Catalans and Valencians, out of

'any fear or compulsion, you had a better Title to his Majefty's presence among you.

The Valencians, who had so distinguish'd themselves in their good services to the King, resented this Letter so far, that they printed it and dispers'd it about the Country: To shew how ill they had been represented to his Majesty, and how all that the Nobility and Gentry of that Kingdom had done and suffer'd for the Austrian Cause, was now overlook'd, in compliment to this Noble Counts new savourites and correspondents, the Peasants of Saragosa*.

is besides my purpose to inquire; his Lordship having not the least hand in this dark and unfortunate affair. Only it may by the way remark'd, that his Majesty always gave it as a reason of his going by Saragosa, that the Generals of the Portuguese Army wou'd move that way, and had promised to fecure his march to their Camp. And 'tis certain that when Col. Pepper was fent by my Lord Pez terborow from Valencia to the King, who was then on his way to Saragofa, with the most urgent follicitations to return into the road first propos'd: his Majesty did agree to what my Lord offer'd, and dispatch'd the Colliback again, with orders to his Lordship accordingly. But a French Officer from the Portuguése Camp arriving at Saragosa;

the King recall'd Col. Pepper, and was refolv'd to purfue the route he was in.

But to return to Valencia. We have feen the reason of his Lordship's stay here: and fure no one will accuse him for it, as long as he was, tho' very uneafie, in expectation every day of the King's coming, which he was oblig'd to wait for by the fundamental Council of War at Barcelona; or will imagin he ought to have march'd himself, and left his Majesty to have follow'd him alone, thro' a disaffected Country to Madrid. His Lordship as soon as he found there was no further hopes of prevailing with the King, or diverting him from his resolutions, immediately order'd all the Forces to advance into Castile, except 900 men which were left for the necessary security of the Kingdom of Valencia, and in a few days join'd them himfelf.

And in this he was forc'd to have the Opinion of a Council of War of both Spaniards and English, to release him from the obligation he lay under of staying for the King: his Lordship having been always so cautious as to act by a Council of War, ever since that (he hopes pardonable) action of taking Barcelona without one.

Upon due Consideration and Debate of these critical Circumstances, notwithstanding the fundamental Council of War at Barcelona, which obliges the Earl of Peterborow to attend the Kings Motions, in order to his March to Madrid, notwithstanding the Queens Commands to follicite preffingly the King of Spains Consent to embark some Fores for Italy; notwithstanding the Invasion threatned from Murcia, and Andalusia on Valencia; yet it is unanimously the Opinion of all prefent (Subjects of the King of Spain and others) that the Earl of Peterborow do March all those Forces that are (not near Altea ready for embarking but) at Requena, and in the Frontiers of Castile, either directly for Madrid, or to join the Portugal Army, as Occurences shall require; and that he fend an Officer immediately to the King to renew the defires of all, that his Majesty without loss of time would be graciously pleased to March towards Ma-H 3

Those who know that two Expresses from the Portuguese Army to the King did actually pass thro' Valencia, where my Lord Peterborow was, may perhaps be startled at the mention made here in this Council of War of the want of Intelligence from those parts: but whether it was thro' multiplicity of business, or the difficulty of finding out his Lordship with a body 4000 men, it appears by the following Certificate, that they did not favour his Lordship with the least account of their motions: if that word be not improperly apply'd to their resting 40 days at Madrid.

I have heard it often objected to his Lordship, that he delay'd his march to Madrid on purpose, out of an unwillingness to have any dispute about command with my Lord Gallway, or to act in concert with the Portuguese Army. A Calumny as ridiculous as false, and contrary to the whole tenor of his Lordship's defigns and actions. But I reckon it a happiness to his Lordship to be traduc'd not only where there is no colour for it, but where the matter of fact directly contradicts the aspersion.

An immediate march to Madrid was what his Lordship wish'd and labour'd for, with all the Zeal and Sollicitations possible, as well knowing there was nothing else wanting to put a finishing stroke to his glorious Successes, and secure the Spanish Monarchy to to the House of Aufiria, against any efforts that cou'd probably be made by France. Just before his Lordship march'd, he receiv'd Letters from the King, informing him that now his Majesty was satisfy'd every thing was secure in Spain, and that the Portuguese Army wou'd be sufficient to protect him from any Attempts that the Enemy could be able to make against him: and therefore his Majesty press'd his Lordship to send the Forces under his command to the relief of the Duke of Savoy purfuant to the Queen's instructions, or to reduce the Islands in the Mediterranean.

Therefore my Lord I am extreamly desirous, while you expect the Fleet coming under the Command of Admiral Shovel (who perhaps may be actually arriv'd) that you take the necessary Measures upon the arrival of the Fleet to embark all the Troops with the utmost dispatch, which near the Sea-side were emplop'd in the Expeditions on Alicant and Carthagena, that they may be made use of for the Succours ef the Duke of Savoy, referving what Admiral Shovel may bring for the Services in Spain.

His Lordship, who perhaps had as good Intelligence as ever any General had in any Country, believ'd his Majesty misinform'd of the true state of affairs; and concluding nothing fo necesfary in our present circumstances as to prevent, if possible, the return of the French into Spain, and to secure the Country round Madrid, desir'd to be excus'd ftom complying with his Majefty's directions, and continued on his march thro' Castile. So far was his Lordship from shewing any unwillingness to carry his Troops thither, or refusing to advance when he had orders for it, as some wou'd infinuate; That when he did march, twas contrary to the King of Spain's defires, who urg'd him immediately to purfue the orders he had receiv'd from the Queen, and embarque the Succours for Italy.

And indeed his Majesty was quickly convinc'd, that his Lord-Thip had judg'd right: for instead of being able to go on triumphantly from Saragosa to Madrid, his Majesty saw a necessity now of writing pressingly to my Lord, to come up to him with all the dispatch imaginable, to secure his march to the Army at Guadalaxara. This his Lordship immediately complied with, join'd his Majesty near Pastrana; and had at last the honour of conducting him to the Confederate Forces: and this within a fortnight after he had receiv'd the advices mention'd above, that his Majesty had no further occasion for the presence of him, or his Troops.

By this time I doubt not, but the Reader is thoroughly convinced, how false the matter of Fact is in relation to his Lordship's delaying his march: perhaps he may be still better satisfy'd, if, besides this, he finds the reasons alledg'd for that aspersion altogether groundless. His Lordship's Spirit, they say, wou'd not submit to the command of another General, or fo much as act in conjunction with him. Some may think it no improper answer to this, if it be reply'd, that my Lord Gallway did actually offer to the Earl of Peterborow the command of the English Forces, as having had a Prior Commisfion as General to the West Indies. However, to prevent any poffibility of dispute with either the Lord Gallway or the Portuguese General, his Lordship propos'd how a partition of the Command might be made, so as to satisfie all Pare

But, Sir, above all things I am refolved to make no Difficulties, which may any ways bring Prejudice to the Service, or give the least uneafiness to the Portuguese or their Generals; and I will take care to propose nothing, that can give them the least Scru-

Your Majesty has done me the great Honour to trust me hitherto with the Command of your Troops: though in these Circumstances I will pretend no Command over the Portuguese Generals, vet on the other fide I can receive no Orders, but from your Majesty. Cannot help offering to your Majesty an advice, which will appear extraordinary. I find many that wou'd propose ways to lose all in our present circumstances, which is to march part of our Troops towards Catalonia. I consess, Sir, I wou'd have your Majesty in the present conjuncture take a resolution as extraordinary, as that which brought you before Barcelona.

I would not have your Majesty go to Lisbon; but embark in some clean Ships I have prepar'd for that purpose, some careen'd at Argiers and in other places, and with a fair Wind endeavour to gain the first Land in Portugal, putting your self at the head of the 25000 which are in a good condition, on the borders of Portugal. The Enemy have but 5000 Men on that side of Spain in Arms; affairs well chang'd in our savour, I doubt not but your Majefly wou'd soon arrive at Madrid.

Sir, at first this has an extraordinary appearance: but the Voyage from De-nia to that part of Portugal, may be perform'd in a Week without hazard, no Vessels of France being upon this Coast. I fee nothing so great, so fecure for your Majesty. But, Sir, the utmost Secrecy is necessary; and I wou'd have no body trusted but the Portuguese Embasfador, whose Vanity wou'd perhaps be touch'd, to fee the finishing Stroke from his own Country. If your Majesty wou'd leave the Prince of Heffe Vice-Roy of Catalonia, with Orders to follow my Advice in what concerns the War, and the Council of the Count de Savella, and some others properly chosen in Bufinefs, I wou'd undertake to maintain Catalonia and Valencia, and perhaps open the way to Madrid. This, Sir, perhaps were the finest Stroke in Politicks that any Age has produc'd, and the least expected; and which might even give the quickest relief to Catalonia, which wou'd not be so vigorously attack'd, if your Majesty were in Person elsewhere.

We now find the Earl of Peterborow near Madrid, and join'd to the Portuguese Army, as soon as he cou'd break through the impediments, which obstructed his march, with any pretence or fafety: and what cou'd bring him thither but his own inclination and judgment, fince he was fo well furnish'd with excuses, that would have justify'd his not coming at all? His Lordship expected to have met a flourishing Army, ready to carry the King in triumph to Madrid; not queflioning but in those 40 days, wherein his Lordship not only made preparations to march into Castile, but took Cartbagena, Cuenca, Alicant, and Requena (places of great strength, and consequence) that the Portuguese Generals had with like caution and activity secur'd the Country round Madrid.

drid. His Lordship being confident, that had he had those opportunities in his hands, he wou'd foon have driven the Duke of Berwick beyond the Ebro: or at least cou'd never have been so destitute of information, as to have fuffer'd an Army of twenty thousand men to come within two hours march of him, without the least intelligence of their approach, or to have given them the opportunity of retaking Madrid without a blow.

Yet this was the State in which affairs were, at his Lordship's arrival in the Portuguese Camp; and he found the Confederate Army, not prepar'd (as he had hop'd) for a glorious entrance into Madrid, but retreating before the Enemy: and every body did that justice to my Lord Tyrawly, as to own?twas in a great meafure fure owing to his Conduct, That, upon fuch a furprize, they were capable of making any retreat.

To recover the difgrace of this almost fatal miscarriage, the general opinion inclin'd to fighting: the Earl of Peterborow too well knew the confequences of a lost Battle, and the great advantages that wou'd accrue to the publick by acting Defensively, and therefore oppos'd this motion, our circumstances being then the most improper for hazarding the whole of what we had in Spain. Yet at the same time his Lordship made an offer to attempt, with 5000 men, the recovery of Madrid; and the methods he defign'd to take were allow'd fo likely to fucceed, that it was approv'd more than once by the King and all the Generals. But now confultations were tedious, and and executions flow: fo that after two or three days debate, the defign was laid afide meerly for want of Bread; there being as little preparations made for flaying here, as there had been for pursuing the Duke of Berwick.

His Lordship, after a few days continuance here, where so little was to be done, refolv'd immediately to put in Execution the Queen's orders, that commanded him to Italy. Upon his Lordship's leaving Guadalaxara, 'twas reported here in England, that he had quitted the Army in difcontent and upon his own head, rather defigning a Voyage of pleasure to Italy, than going thither either upon any business, or by any orders. But so false and frivolous were these imputations, that he had the Queen's positive commands for going; and not only only the confent, but even the most pressing follicitation of the King himself, of his Minsters as well as the Queens, and of all the Generals at Guadalaxara. The plainest and best answer to this accusation against his Lordship, may, I think, be taken from the following papers.

Part of the Instructions to the Earl of Peterborow, and Sir Cloudes ly Shovel, dated 4th of May, 1705.

Aving given You, the Earl of Peter-borow, a Liberty to ferve on board our Fleet, or on Shore, by Virtue of the Commissions and Instructions to you given, as in your Judgment you shall think most convenient for the Publick Service; and confidering that, without our special Licence express'd, it might not be proper for you to be abfent from either of those Commands, where with you are entrusted; yet for as much as many Occasions may offer, wherein you may be of Service to us in Negociations of Importance, apart from the aforemention'd Commands, we think it therefore expedient upon fuch Occasions, to allow you the Liberty to leave the Fleet under the Command of Sir Cloudefly Shovel, and to embark, as Occasion shall require, on some clean Ship for the greater dispatch, towards the more speedy setling and adjusting those Services, to which our Instructions refer.

Part of the Instructions to the Earl of Peterborow dated 3d May, 1705, OU shall upon all Occasions, upon any Conferences, or Consultations with any Princes, or States, in Confederacy with us, with any of their Ministers or Commanding Officers, endeavour to procure in Writing, what they propose, and require on our part, what they offer on theirs for carrying on any designs against the common Enemies.

Instructions to the Earl of Peterborow and Sir John Leake, dated June 12th, 1706 103 and 1919 103

THereas by our Instructions of the 2d of April, and the 14th of May last, we have directed you to send three or more of our Regiments to the assistance of the Duke of Savoy, in Case Turin should be besieg'd; and for putting that Service in Execution, you were instructed to concert with the King of Spain; fince which we have receiv'd advices that Turin is actually befieg'd. We have thought fit hereby to require you in our Name to press the King of Spain to consent to the putting those Instructions forthwith in Execution, and if it be possible to send five of our Regiments to the Duke of Savoy, in Case you shall be certainly advised that the Siege of Turin is carrying on: The relieving of that Prince being of fo great Importance to the King of Spain himself, as well as the whole Confederacy, as not to be neglected; fince the Consequence of his being reduced will necessarily be the puting ing an end to the War in Italy, and leaving the French Forces in that Country to be employ'd in Spain or elsewhere. And to induce the King of Spain the rather to concur in this Service; you are to represent to him that so long as the French Troops are employ'd in the Siege of Turin, he will have the less Occasion for our Tsoops in Spain, and especially fince we have already taken Measures for fending our Forces now in Portugal to the King of Spain's assistance, in Cafe the Portuguese should, contrary to our expectation, make further Difficulties in Marching forward to Madrid. And that in Case they are going on, you are to observe to the King of Spain he willthen have less reason to detain in Spain, the Troops we propose for the Duke of Savoy's Assistance. And you are to understand this Instruction, as what we extreamly defire to be put in Execution, leaving it to your Care and Prudence to proceed therein fo far as is practicable, considering the present posture of the Affairs of us and our Allies in Spain: of which you can better judge, being on the place, than 'tis possible for us to direct politively at this distance.

And whereas you have an Instruction from our Dearest Consort, the Prince, to make a Detatehment of our Fleet, and to repair therewith to Naples: In Case it shall be agreed to fend affistance to the Duke of Savoy upon his being befieg'd in Turin, you are to take fuch our Troops with you for his Affistance, and land them at Oneglia or such other place, as the Duke of Savoy and you shall agree upon, and afterwards you are to proceed with our Ships to Naples, according to these Instructions. And in Case it shall not be found practicable to comply with both these Services, that is, to affist the Duke of Savoy, and to go with a Squadron to Naples: It is our Pleasure that you perform the Service for the Duke of Savoy preferible to that of going to Naples: We being very defirous of ta-king all occasions of using our utmost Endeavours to support so good an Ally, tho we are very earnest that both these Services should be comply'd with. And we do not doubt but the King of Spain will fend fuch Powers and Directions for the Government of Naples, as are requilite in Case of your succeeding there is to be possible: We do it somethin.

Instructions to the Earl of Peterborow and Sir John Leake, dated June 19th, 1706.

Hereas by our Instructions of the 2d of April, and the 14th of May last, we have directed you to send three or more of our Regiments to the affiftance of the Duke of Savoy, in Cafe Turin should be besieg'd, Copies of which Instructions are herewith sent you, and by our further Instructions of the 12th of this Instant June, we have order'd three of our Regiments to be fent to the succouring the Duke of Savoy, in Case the Siege of Turin is carried on, of which you have herewith also a Copy; fince which time we have receiv'd Advices from the Duke of Savoy, and from our Minister residing at his Court, that the Siege of Turin is pusht on with the utmost Vigour, and that there is an indispensible Necessity to relieve that Prince, if it be possible: We do hereby require you, upon the receipt hereof, to fend at least three of our Regiments to his Affistance, as far as it may be found practicable. And as we have reason to hope that the King of Spain's Affairs are in fo good a Condition, that the fending three Regiments of our Troops can be no Prejudice to him, you are to press him to Consent to so many more, as can conveniently be spared. And as you are hereby directed to fend three Regiments at least of our Troops to the Duke of Savoy's Assistance, We do not doubt but you will find the Officers of the States General ready to concur with you, in fending a proportionable number of their own Troops, in Conjunction with the faid three or more of our Regiments, pursuant to the Orders they will receive from the States by this Pacquet; and you are to proceed therein as shall be judged most advantageous for the Service by a Council of War, and to Land them at Oneglia, or fuch other place as shall be judged proper, as you are directed to do in our former Instructions.

And though you shall receive intelligence that Turin is taken, you are nevertheless to proceed in sending the K 2

Whitehall, June 19th, 1706,

My Lord,

A Courier being arriv'd from the Duke of Savoy with Letters of the 13th Instant, N.S. giving an account of his being very hard prest in his Capital of Turin, by the French Army under the Duke de la Feuillade, and reduced to the greatest Extremities; and her Majesty being desirous of doing all in her Power for the support of so good an Allie, and judging it an absolute necessity in order thereunto, that a Reinforcement be immediately fent him, from the Army under your Command: She has thought fit by her Instruction dated this Day to your Excellency and Sir John Lake (which as the most certain conveyance is sent to Sir John Lake) to require you upon the Receipt thereof, to send at least three of Her Regiments to that Dukes affistance, as far as it shall be practicable. The States General are fo fo fully convinced of the Necessity and Importance of this Service, that they have dispatch'd their Orders, which are fent herewith to their General and Admiral, and there is no doubt but they will concur with your Excellency, in fending to that Prince, a proportionable number of their own Forces.

There is reason to believe, that even the loss of Turin will not induce the Duke of Savoy to desert the Common Cause, but that he will retire first to Quieras, and afterwards, in Case he shall be pusht, to Coni; and there do what he can to keep up the Diversion he has hitherto with so much Constancy and Resolution given to the Enemy: in which Case as your Excellency will see in the Instructions, you are to succour him, provided he be still upon his Desence.

His Royal Highness is so sensible of your Excellencies great Courage and Conduct, and the success that still accompanies your Person, wherever you go, whereby you have more than once restor'd our Assairs, when under Intricate Difficulties, that he has desir'd you might your self bring the Succours to him: to which her Majesty has given her Consent, but leaves it wholly to your Excellency, to go thither or not, as you shall judge it most suitable to her Majesty's Service, and your own Conveniency. I am, &c.

At the first orders of the 12th of Fune from the Queen, to follicit Succours for the Duke of Savoy, by their being so entirely approv'd and enforc'd by the King of Spain, (as is before observ'd) shew that neither his Lordship's Troops nor Person were thought necessary at Madrid: So the orders repeated and the Lordship's repeated and the Lordship gain and enlarg'd upon the 19th of June, and accompany'd with the most earnest recommendations from the Secretary of State, were fure sufficient motives for his Lordship's Voyage: a service so much censur'd at home, and so highly valud abroad. His Lordship instead of wanting any Apology for these proceedings, has, as the Reader sees, such Authorities for every step he made; that were he now to draw up new Instructions on purpose, and adapt K 4 them them to justifie what he had done, he wou'd not desire them to be in one tittle different from the Instruments just now produc'd. These orders were communicated to the King: and the approbation of all the Generals and Ministers so fully express'd in the Council of War here annex'd, give occasion of Astonishment to People abroad, how, or by whom such objections against his Lordship cou'd be rais'd.

That, my Lord Peterborow, having put in Execution the Queens Commands in Italy, should without delay, return with the Fleet, and attempt the taking of Port Mahon, judging this Conquest of the very highest Importance, in the present posture of Affairs; the Coasts of Catalonia and Valencia remaining ever expos'd to the Invasion of the Enemy, unless protected by the Neighbourhood of the Fleet. For which end, it is indispensible, that the Fleet be ordered to continue during the Winter in the faid Port, and that the necessary Instances be repeated to the Queen of England, that She would please to Command, that Her Fleet have such Orders for the ensuing Winter, without which, the confervation of Catalonia and Valencia must be despaired of.

For very miserable was the present condition of our Army, for want of mony; and the prospect still worse, unless effectual means were us'd for a speedy supply. In this necessity the Ministers and Generals earneftly recommended the affair of mony to his Lordship, the Marquess das Minas and the Portuguese Embassador gave him Bills to transact for them at Genoa: and the King, to shew both his want of mony and his confidence in my Lord, gave his Lordship power, rather than he shou'd fail in his Negotiation, to morgage any part of his Dominions.

What still further confirm'd his Lordship in this resolution of going to Italy, was, that he found at this juncture no occafion for his presence in Spain. For the Campagne was now confessedly at an end, and our Generals proposed nothing else but to go into Quarters in Ca-file, and maintain themselves there, till the Season would give them leave to retake the Field. With all the Spaniards of my Opinion, I could not prevent our March from Chiacon, or retard the passage over the Tage, in a Season so little advanced, and so proper for Action. In my Opinion there is but one resolution to be taken in this conjuncture, to remedy (if poffible) measures so inconsistent with the King's Interest, and contrary to his Intentions. What is left us to do, is to possess Cuenca with the Spanish Troops: perhaps this Refolution of his Majesty will oblige the Generals of the Allies to fupport it, at least it is undeniable, that this motion of our Troops will manifest to the whole World the Aims and Intentions of this Prince As I am inform'd, Cuenca is a great City, recommended by its situation, the places in this Country having no other Fortification. The taking possession of it was a considerable Service, tho' you were oblig'd to divide the few Troops you had: we are now under the like Necessity to fecure it, this Town being one of the best in Castile, after Madrid. I cannot suppose that the Allies will so far oppose themselves to the King's Desires, and draw upon them the whole Spanish Nation, as they would inevitably do, if they should expose their Troops alone Enr

His Lordship soon after he had left Guadalaxara, receiv'd the ill news, that the Enemy, the same night they recovered Madrid, had likewise seiz'd all his baggage, which he had left at Huete: in which his Lordship lost all his Mules, Horses and Carriages, with all his Equipage prepar'd for his Embassy at Madrid, to the value of eight thousand Pounds. The City and the adjoyning Villages, which indeed not only might have hinder'd the Souldiers from plundering it, but did actually affift them in it, offer'd publickly to repair his Lordship's lots, by a payment of 10000 Pistoles, or any larger fum that his Lordship wou'd demand. This his Lordship wou'd not accept of; but knowing as well the plenty of Corn there was in this Country, as the ex-L4 treme treme want of it in the Confederate Army, chose rather to take this opportunity of supplying the present necessities we were in for Bread; and obligid the Magistrates of that District to lay in fuch Magazines of Corn, as were sufficient to maintain 20000 men for two months. In fo generous a manner did his Lordthip provide for an Army, which he had left under the command of another: and fure he won't be thought the worse General for this extraordinary conduct of taking so much care of the publick interest, and so little of his own.

His Lordship upon his arrival at Alicant, found peremptory orders from England for a Squadron to go to the West Indies: so that the designs propos'd for the Fleet upon Port Mahon, in the Council held at Guadalaxara, were intirely prevented. The only thing his Lordship had to do more, before his embarking for Italy, was to fortifie and fecure the Country and Coast of Valencia, against the Insults of the Bishop of Murcia: and therefore, though press'd by the King and the Lord Galway to fend up the Forces there into Castile, his Lordship had the unanimous Opinion, not only of all the Gentlemen of the Country, but of a Council of War, that confidering the ill circumstances of our affairs in those inland parts, and the necesfity of keeping a fure footing towards the Sea, it was of the highest consequence, that the little number we had then in Garrison at Alicant, shou'd still continue there; as well for fecuring the Kingdom of Valencia, as preferving the communication with Castile: as is more fully express'd in the following Council of War.

Pon several heads proposed to us by the Earl of Peterborow, relating to the Publick Services on this critical Occasion: We the Officers composing posing this Council of War agree unanimously in the following Opinions:

That, Whereas the King to Sir John Lake, and the Earl of Gallway to the Earl of Peterborow, has fignified their Desires, That the Forces employed in the Siege of Alicant should forthwith March into Castile; We most folemnly declare, That we are sensible the least diminution of the Forces here, would lose immediately all the Country from Alicant to Tortofa; and not only fo, but that the Army and the King's Person would be exposed to the utmost hazard, by the communication being cut off to the Sea, the only hopes of fupporting this War, or fecuring any part of her Majesty's Troops: besides the number here not exceeding nine hundred Foot, is fo small, that it would little encrease the force of the Army, but entirely lose all this Kingdom. Lastb, It would be the highest Folly to quit the impregnable Castle of Alicant, we have taken, and the Troops here are hardly sufficient for the Garrison of that Place, belonery by the # splet thereasers, renoque the French salvices on this in

Upon what good reasons the opinion of this Council of War was grounded, and how exactly they forefaw what was likely to happen to the Army in Castile, appear'd but too visible in less than two months after. And indeed if his Lordship had not by this prudent forecast kept open the communication between the Sea and Caftile, whither cou'd they themselves, that desir'd these Forces, have made their retreat? or where cou'd their Army have fublished till the Battle of Albut his Lordhip cou'd! sham

Twas for the same reasons, that his Lordship refolv'd not to carry any of these Troops with him to Italy: and that he thought it more expedient to take the reinforcement defign'd for Savoy, if he shou'd find that service necesfary, out of the Garrisons of Catalonia. But,

But, his Lordship having been fome days at Sea, had the good fortune to meet with the Mary Galley, which brought him the welcome news of the great Victory obtain'd at Turin: fo that now there was no further occafion of carrying any Forces to Italy. However, the Negotiations his Lordship was charg'd with for mony, besides the necesfity of having his Squadron clean'd there, determin'd his Lordship to pursue his Voyage to Genoa. And that none but his Lordship cou'd tranfact this great affair of the mony, was as evident, as the extremities we lay under for the want of it; and this was not only the fense of all those that affisted in the Councils at Guadalaxara, but of all the siftO out of the Carrifons of Ct.

Officers too that his Lordship left behind him in Valencia: and the usefulness, or rather necessity of his Lordship's going in Person can't be more forcibly represented, than 'tis in the following Council of War. THERE IN THE Major Theodore Collier.

HE Earl of Peterborow having laid before us 'the Commission from the King of Spain, to treat with the Genoeses about Mony, and the Bills of the Marquess das Minas for a hundred thousand Pounds to be Negotiated for the use of his Troops, and the present Condition of the Army without a farthing of Mony to pay the Troops: and finding, by the Murther of so many of her Majesty's Officers and Soldiers in Castile, the ill effects of the Rapine and Plunder committed by the Army, which cannot be kept in Discipline without Pay, having laid before us likewife, that he has been forced to give the King of Spain the Mony destined for the payment of the Forces upon his Establishment, which hitherto having liv'd under the feverest Discipline, and with the utmost good Intelligence with the People, we judge it of the highest Consequence that the fame Regularity should continue in the Troops, and the same good Correspondence with the People.

For which there being no other Expedient, but Mony, and no Mony to be hoped for but by the Earl of Peterborow's endeavouring to obtain it at Genoa, and bringing it down in clean Ships from thence upon this Coast, we have been forced to approve the Refolution taken by the faid Earl to go in Person, to obviate if possible the fatal Necessity: having no Objection, but the hazards, to which we doubt his Lordship exposes himself for the Publick Service.

His Lordship having intimated to us likewise the hopes of a considerable Body of German Horse, which may be brought difmounted with their Accoutrements, having already fettled fomething of that kind with the Duke of Savoy, which we are fensible would be the highest Service to the King of Spain in the present Circumstance; considering also that his Lordship has left the Army upon positive Orders from the Queen in relation to Italy, the Services being foon to end in these Parts till after the Rains, and there being no Troops that can be fent from hence to the Army, or that are of that Consequence as to require the Presence of a General, his Lordship having given to Brigadier Gorge all the necessary directions for the Fortifying the Castle of Alicant, and providing it with Provisions, which when in Condition, we hope may be defended against any Force whatfoever. For these Reafons we agree of the Important Services, that the Earl of Peterborow may effect by the Voyage to Italy: not being competent Judges of the hazards, to which the General may be exposed to by Sea.

By this it appears under what necessities they were in Valencia: and that the Army, which was in Castile, labour'd under the same difficulties, and was as eager for this supply from Italy, may be feen, not only by the Com-mission and Powers given the Earl of Peterborow at his leaving Guadalaxara, but by this Letter of Her Majesty's Envoy then with the King of Spain, fent to his Lordship, while he was in Italy, vincinarmi won asbu vincop

Extract of Mr. Stanhope's Letter, dated October 12. 1706.

Can only tell your Lordship in a few Words, that since you left us, our affairs have gone de mal en pire. Our whole Army is quarter'd in the Kingdom of Valencia, except a Garrison in Cuenca, and another in Requena, the only two places we maintain in Cassille, and for those we are not without apprehensions. Our Horse is ruin'd. Your Lordship knows, how well stock'd with Mony you left us, and will consequently judge how impatiently we expect your return.

What other Negotiations his Lordship carried on in Italy, for I believe he was not idle in the Duke of Savoy's Court, is out of my way to relate: but it was fome time after discours'd abroad, that a Defensive War in Spain, as press'd by the Earl of Peterborow, and approv'd by the King of Spain, and the Duke of Savoy, wou'd have procur'd us the possession of Toulon, and consequently a happy end of the War.

To load his Lordship yet further upon this head of going to Italy, it was the general clamour here, that his Lordship gave an extravagant interest of 20 per cent. for procuring the mony at Genoa (which wou'd have amounted to 20000 l.) whereas not above one thousand was allow'd by his Lordship above the current Exchange: and fuch a fum obtain'd in fuch difficult circumstances, in so little time, and at fo little lofs, perhaps is as extraordinary, as any one of those many Services he did in the Spanish War. His Lordship having fucceeded beyond expectation, brought the mony fafe to Valencia, where he found all the Confederate Forces under the same preffing wants he left them: and was receiv'd with universal joy, and all imaginable acknowledge ments of his good Services. How ferviceable this Voyage

How serviceable this Voyage was thought of, and how all the views of it were answer'd, can't be more evidently manifested, than by the universal applause of the Spanish Nation, and the esteem and respect paid his Lordship by all the Princes abroad:

This A Royal Testimony, on I think, not only shews his Majesty's entire Approbation of this Voyage, but sufficiently confutes those malicious Infinuations, that have been made of the King's displeasure to the Earl of Peterborow. I have often heard my Lord fay, That he never once met with the least difficulty from the King, when he himself was present with his Majesty; but that all meafures were agreed upon, all Councils of War and Resolutions drawn up perfectly to his satisfaction. In his abfence indeed false suggestions, and the contrivances and cabals of others have too often prevail'd: and during the correspondence with the Portugal Army, not only unfortunate methods took place, but as his Lordship found at his return from Italy, the the King had, by fome Artifices, been wrought upon to fignific to the Court of England, some kind of diffatisfaction with his Lordship's Conduct. But that Prince has been fince pleas'd fully to justifie to the World the proceedings of his Lordship; and how fenfible his Majesty was of his Lordship's affection, how well fatisfy'd with his fervices from time to time, I can't better express than in his Majesty's own Words. 10 Chamed In Marie de la company de

My Lord,
Hope this will find you happily arrived in the place you defigned for going from hence, and that you will find there no difficulties in the execution of your glorious Designs. At my arrival in this place, your Presence had been very agreeable to me, to have conferr'd with you upon the state of my affairs, and feveral other things not to be neglected in the present conjuncture.

As the Emperor, my Brother, gives me to understand in the last Letters I have receiv'd, his Refolutions of fending the Duke of Moles as his Embasfador; I suppose the said Duke is actually now at Genoa, or will come thi-ther in few Days: Therefore you will very much oblige me, in a fervice fo neceffary to the Publick, by taking the proper measures for his secure passage upon his arrival at Genoa, in case he have not the good fortune to come in your Company. I hope God Almighty will take you, my dear Lord, into his Holy Protection, affuring you of my Constant, Perfect Esteem, and Acknowledgments.

His Lordship, after his return to Spain, acted in no publick Post; yet, upon all occasions, shew'd the same concern and zeal for the publick good, and the prosperity of her Majesty's Arms. And tho' he was difmis'd from the command of the Army, yet he did not think himself exempt from using his utmost endeavours to promote the Interest of the Common Cause: and took the liberty to offer his advice in fuch affairs, as he thought his experience and knowledge of the Country enabled him to judge of. Therefore, in a Council of War held at Valencia, Febr. 4. 170%. he gave in writing his opinion, concerning the management and conduct of the ensuing Campaign.

A N Offensive War is of Eclat and Reputation to the Generals and the Troops; but the Defensive is often of most Utility to the Publick.

Our Circumstances require vigorous Efforts in Italy or Spain. In the last, the Defensive secures us the Crown of Arragon; but the Troops in Italy can only give the Mortal Blow; that is, enter France. Neither can it be doubted, if the French desist from their Hopes in Italy, but that the great Force in that Country will be usefully employ'd by the Duke of Savoy and Prince Eugene.

No positive Opinions can be given without knowing the Condition of the Fleet; without the Assistance of the Sea, the best dispositions in Italy are useles. If that were wanting, all must be hazarded in Spain; the War there being of an inconceivable Expence to the Allies. But the difficulties of subfifting Armies in Castile are fufficiently apparent by the last Campaign; and the Dangers are evident of putting the whole upon the risque of passing to Madrid, before an Army fo superior in Cavalry.

The Tage must likewise be passed before the Enemy (if Marching by Murcia) without Pontoons, or the necessary Preparations for fuch an Attempt. The Precipices of that River are natural Fortifications: If there are Plains near Aranjues, it is almost equally impossible to pass them before an Army in Batalia, without a great Superiority in Artillery. And nothing is more easie to a Body of Horse so numerous, than to cut off the necessary Provisions in a Country, where they are fo fcarce.

If the Troops advance into Castile towards Madrid, without taking the necessary Precautions for the Defence of Catalonia, either Madrid must fall into our Power, or all is lost. It is to be doubted, whether the possession of Madrid (without the Defeat of the Enemies Army) be decifive; but the loss of Catalonia is certain, if the Places there are not better Fortified, and Provided:

And if Forces are not fent into that Province, or those parts of Arragon near that Frontier, which may serve at the same time for the Desence of the Fortify'd places of Catalonia, and towards preventing the Succours from the side of Navarre.

If we hope for a Maritine Force betimes in these Seas, which may be superior to the Enemy, there does not appear the least Necessity for rash Measures: And the least Disgrace, or great Fatigues alone may give our Troops that Inclination to desert, which the Enemy will not fail to improve, when in a proper Situation.

Above all things the Defence of Catalonia, and what we have, is Necessary. Our Intelligences assure us, that great numbers of Troops assemble in Rousillon, and that great Magazines are forming there for Foot and Horse, and all Warlike Necessaries. But to conclude, what better Opinions can be offer'd than those of the Duke of Savoy and Prince Eugene? Who have doubtless communicated them to the Emperor, the Queen, and his Catholick Majesty, where that Duke has Ministers.

Conduct in Spain. 181

Soon after this his Lordship left Spain: but carried with him the fame concern for the good fuccess of Affairs there, and writ a Letter from Italy, pressing more earnestly, and explaining more at large the same advice, he had given in the Council of War.

A Letter writ to the Portugal Ambassador from Italy.

Turin April 21st, 1707.

My Lord,

Affure you, I am with a particular Inclination your Servant. I look upon you as my Friend, and Companion in all the Miseries, and Mortifications of the Spanish War; in all places I shall be a Witness of your Conduct and Prudence, and of the Steadiness you have shewn upon so many extraordinary Occasions.

Would to God you were free from uneafiness, when I hope to be in quiet! it feems to me as if Storms were threatning Spain, and I am the more concerned, because of the probability of your Generals continuing in a disposition to rash Measures. It is certain, they are only in a Condition for a Defensive; and that suffices for the Publick, since the pre.

preparatives against France are fo terrible in Italy, and in Flanders. You know my Opinion in the Councils of War held at Valencia: But the Succours which are coming, and the Perfon of the Duke of Orleans, are certain proofs of the great Efforts the Enemy will make in the beginnings of the next Campagne. If we prevent their first Impetuolity, whilst Naples, Sielly and Sardinia may be fecu-red, Peace will give us all we can defire. I am obliged to give you notice, that no Endeavours can prevent the Imperialists from Marching towards Naples; if it is impossible to hinder that Diversion of their Troops, it is our Interest to give the necessary help towards bringing that affair to a speedy Con-clusion. And methinks, one might hope upon the Success of that Enterprize, that those Troops might be fo-licited and obtain'd for the Succour of

But, my Lord, pray confider the Confequences of a lost Battle in the Spring: perhaps a Difgrace were less faral in Flanders. By a superiority of Horse, such a Missortune may happen to the best Foot in the World, which will be cut off entirely in case of a Deseat, and all Spain.

at the same time lost, for want of Garrifons in the strong Places we posses If we defend well what we have, their great Number of Horse will consume it self for want of Forrage, or destroy that part of the Country which is ill affected; and becalled for by their pressing Necessities elsewhere, since we have in this Country near 70000 effective Men, for the vigorous Measures that are concerted.

I know my Reasons, though good, will have little force with the Generals; they have the last Campaign in their Thoughts, and have not perhaps the fame tranquility of Mind, and quiet, which I thank God I enjoy. Being well content with the beginnings I have made, only wishing a happy conclusion to this great Affair: affuring your Excellency that nothing Private shall ever mix with my Thoughts for the Publick. But I justly lay a stress on the great Credit you have with every Body, and am well affur'd, that the Interest of your Country requires Measures of the utmost Precaution; fince your best Troops are in Spain, and that a Defeat would expose Portugal before Succours can arrive; fince England has left her felf almost unprovidvided with Troops, and that the Forces in Italy being defign'd for other Services, it will be difficult to obtain any of them, tho' the Circumstances pressingly require it. I therefore entreat your Excellency to think again of the Consequence of a lost Battle. God be praised we are not in a Necessity of a Victory: That is the Circumstance of France.

I told you when I went away, that I would fend you the Meafures I had propos'd to the King, which to me feem'd certain of Success; but any division of the Troops would never be listen'd to, which however was the only way possible to fecure Madrid. Quick Motions were requisite before the Succours could arrive from France. and those are never taken with great Bodies. My thoughts were to defend the Entrance into Valencia with 2000 Horse and 8000 Foot, which were easie with less Force; and with 11000 Foot and 5000 Horse to have gain'd the Head of the Tage, by a Rolen March. We might have had as many Arragonese, as we could desire; who for the Mountains, and defending the paffage over that River would have equal'd our best Troops, and have been

been better for long and speedy Marches. Thus we might have put the Tage betwixt us and the Enemy; Madrid had been found without Defence, and the Duke of Anjou oblig'd to a second Journey towards Burgos. This particularly would have hinder'd the junction of any Succours from France: The Troops lest in Valencia would have followed the Enemy at a proportionable Distance, when they march towards the Tage; and I assure you such Resolutions well pursued would sufficiently have perplex the Enemy. Another time I will explain more distinctly this Project to you, in giving you Answers to all the Objections might be made.

At present I have nothing to propose to your Excellency, nor to wish, but that the Troops might not be satigu'd in the impossible Views of gaining Madrid, half the Army being expos'd to Destruction, by Diseases, and Famine, or in the whole in a very improper time by an unequal Battle. I will neglect nothing in my Power to obtain, in a savourable Opportunity, a Succour of Troops for Spain; that in the after Season we may push our Affairs.

This Letter shews how well my Lord judg'd of the posture of affairs; and how reasonable it was to think of nothing else, but a defensive War in the present juncture. My Lord, I dare say, heartily wishes he had been mistaken in his judgment; but in a few days after the writing of this Letter, those who had no regard to what he foretold, took care most punctually to fulfil it.

And now, that I have shewn how early (before the French befieg'd Barcelona) my Lord Peterborow was solliciting and contriving for the Earl of Gallway, the opportunity and honour of carrying the King to Madrid: how generously he refus'd 10000 l. from the Castilians, and oblig'd 'em in lieu of that to surnish the whole Confederate Army with Provisions for two months: how willingly he run all hazards, and incurr'd the censures and reproaches of some that should have thank'd him, to procure mony, and support a starving Army now under the command of other Generals: how well he forecast, and how earnestly he propos'd the proper measures for future success, when he was out of service himself: Let the World judge whether the Earl of Peterborow acted by a Spirit of refentment, emulation or envy; or whether there are not clear and undeniable proofs of his Lordship's unweary'd Zeal and Labours for the prosperity of her Majesty's Army under the command of the Earl of Gallway.

went again to Turin, where he was received as before, very kindly and honourably. And I never heard my Lord regret any disappointment, but this only, that he was not permitted to flay a Voluntier with the Duke of Savoy, or his Friend Sir Cloudefly Shovel: but was recall'd home with great importunity, tho' in no good condition for travelling, and oblig'd to leave a very Worthy Son in ill circumstances under his Wounds; the fecond that has been crippled, and in a manner facrific'd to the publick in this War.

HE account I have here given, has been only a bare Narrative of some part of the Earl of Peterborow's Conduct in Spain, founded upon matter of Fact, and I think clearly made out from original papers. I don't doubt but the Reader, who has observ'd the caution and regularity of his Lordship's management, has been beforehand with me in doing Justice to his Character: and must needs be satisfy'd, that as his Lordship had in all his actions the honour of Her Majesty and the interest of his Country at heart, so neither was he without all thoughts of providing for his own proper defence, thou'd these actions, through envy or ignorance, be mif-represented at home. For whatever clamours have been rais'd rais'd against his Lordship, he is so well furnished with materials to justifie what he has done, that shou'd he ever be put upon a necessity of producing them, the World will be perhaps as much surprized to see how little his Accusers have to say against him, as He was that he cou'd be accus'd.

I never yet met with any so hardy, as to reslect upon his Lordship's courage and bravery; tho' this quality, so eminent in his Lordship, might with as good reason be called in question, as his Judgment and Conduct: since in the whole series of his successful undertakings, his circumstances oblig'd him to make more use of thought and contrivance, than of sorce or valour. Most people, I believe, are apt to judge of men's Conduct by the course of their Actions: when they fee defigns laid with prudence, carry'd on with industry, and executed with vigour; when they fee men always upon the watch to lay hold of and improve opportunities, taking all the measures to know the true strength of an Enemy, and to make their own appear to advantage; when they fee them choose the proper times of using all Offensive and Defensive Stratagems, and fo manage a small force, as, even without fighting, to defeat all the Efforts of a numerous Army; they cannot but think these no ill proofs of a cool understanding, and a wife management: and I must own my self to be so far of the opinion of the Vulgar, as not to like fuch men the worse for success. So that were I of Council to his Lord-Aller ships ship's Enemies, I would advise them to deny every thing that has been done in Spain: fince, unless they will allow of Miracles in this Catholick Country, I know nothing that can account for fuch important and continued successes, but his Lordship's Sagacity and Conduct. And, I believe, stwill readily be own'd by all impartial men, that fuch a Collection of Papers as his Lordship has, (a few of which only I have here produc'd) wou'd hardly have been preserv'd by a Man, that acted at Random, and without much thought, or precaution. And his Lordship desires no farther favour, than that the World would judge of his proceedings as the Evidences of them shall appear, whenever or whereever they shall be brought to an Examination.

BETTER.

A Fter I had finish'd the foregoing relation of the Earl of Peterborow's Actions, which had been most mis-represented, and from whence all the objections against his Lordship's Conduct have arisen: baving materials ready at hand, I was tempted to give an account of some Actions of his Lordship's, which have met with a different, but not much better Fate; and have been so intirely conceal'd, as scarce ever to have been discours'd of in England. The Campagne of Valencia is a subject so new, and so little known, that, I hope, upon that account at least it may give some entertainment to the Reader. The reduction of that Kingdom was fo remarkable, and the methods by which TOTAL ( that, not in the state on the

which it was carried on so extraordinary, that, not with standing all the care I hall take to relate what pass'd with the utmost veracity and exactness, an account of them will still have more the air of Romance than History. A course of such bappy Temerities (I make use of this term, since 'tis the fashionable word to express the Actions of his Lordship) will appear the effect of more Thought and Application, than the hurry of War seems to allow of: and a brief relation of them will set the judicious Conduct his Lordship us'd in a true light, notwithstanding so much affected silence, and such industrious malice.

A Fter the taking of Barcelona, in the first consultation about the War, the Earl of Peterborow was of opinion, That the Forces should be divided, and the better half march immediately into Valencia, the rest into Arragon. The Dutch and English Major Generals, Connyngham and Schratenbach, were against fatigueing and diminishing the Troops, which they thought must be preferv'd with the utmost caution, fince they were hardly fufficient to defend the places we already posses'd in Catalonia. The latter opinion had its weight, and prevail'd: and rest cou'd hardly be refus'd to Troops, that had undergone fuch hardships at Sea, and the fatigues of fuch a Siege. However, my Lord fo far prevail'd, as to obtain universal consent to send a good body to Lerida, and about a 1000 Foot and 200 Horse to Tortosa, the bordering City on the Kingdom of Valencia.

fatigue, and make him fit and willing for fervice. It is plain by what follow'd, that an immediate march, and a fufficient fum of mony for the procuring a body of Horse, had enabled us at that very juncture to over-run Spain, before the Enemy cou'd have had time to oppose so vigorous and unexpected an attempt: And that the ill Quarters at Barcelona destroy'd more men, than wou'd have been lost in Action, and moderate Marches, tho' in Winter-time.

My Lord most impatiently press'd for leave from the Court to march into Valencia, tho' attended with so small a force: but there were some there, who were better pleas'd, that the reduction of that Kingdom shou'd feem to be procur'd by their correspondence and management, than that it shou'd be owing to her Majesty's Arms. These artifices wrought fuch delays, as had like to have prov'd fatal. 'Tis true indeed, that in the mean time a revolt had been brought about in the City of Valencia, and a Vice-roy nam'd (the Count Cifuentes, a Person unacceptable enough in that place) before any particulars of the manner of it were known. But the rejoycings upon this occasion were of short continuance; and these slow proceedings of the Ministry gave the Enemy time, to bring a confiderable body of disciplind Troops before St. Mattheo, under the command of the Conde de las Torres, who had ferv'd in the War of Italy, a General of known Courage, and of long Service.

The risers of by consequent or most within general to This

This news gave great alarms to the Court at Barcelona, and occasion'd the report that all the Militia of Catalonia, Valencia, and some adjoyning places in Arragan had taken up Arms, to the number of 16000 men; that they had fecur'd fuch places and paffes, as wou'd make the subsistence of those Troops before St. Mattheo difficult, and their retreat from it impossible: and that there was nothing wanting to their utter destruction, but a few Officers and fome of the disciplin'd Troops to encourage and direct this multitude, so conveniently posted.

Llustrious Earl of Peterborow, General and Commander of my Troops, Having this Moment receiv'd Advice, that in the Wood of Vallivana, between Morella and St. Matheo in the Kingdom of Valencia, Tilly who has with him a 1000 Horse, and a 1000 Foot, is surrounded by the Country People, who have possest themselves of all the Passes; and having demanded from the Officer, who is at Tortosa, some regular Men to animate those of the Country, and being anfwered that he had no Orders, without which he could give no Men; I have refolved, confidering the great Advantage it will be to my Royal Service, if fuch a happy Operation could be fuccefsfully executed, to write and participate to you this Opportunity, that you may give speedy direction in it, and send the convenient Orders to the abovesaid Officer, that he may give immediately the Men you shall think sufficient to execute it with Success, which I expect from your great Zeal, Conduct and Prudent Disposition: For according to the Situation, in which they assume the Enemy is, it is impossible that any can escape, if the Troops of the Queen which are at Hand in the said Town of Tortosa assist in time, to animate the Country People, which are got together to that end.

The Earl of Peterborow regretted the lost time too much, to lose one moment more: and instead of sending to a Subaltern the Orders requir'd, he immediately took post; and the St. Mattheo was above 30 leagues from Barcelona, in about eight days time from his departure, he found ways to raise that siege. And indeed the methods taken in effecting it were as much out of the common road, as the re-folution to attempt it.

My Lord never rested night or day, till he came to Tortola; but had fent a Courier before Orders for Brigadier Killigrew to march, fo that the Troops had pass'd the Ebro, before he arriv'd. As foon as his Lordship came thither, he fummon'd the Governour, the Magistrates and Officers, and to his his great astonishment, was inform'd, that the Enemy was three times stronger than was reprefented; and the report of the Countries being up in Arms was so intirely false, that not one of those sixteen thousand, who were order'd to let no Body escape, was in being. The truth of the matter was, that the Enemy was before St. Matheo with between 2000 and 2000 Horse, and about 4000 Foot; and the Earl of Peterborow had nothing to depend upon, but 1000 Foot, and 200 Dragoons.

It is not hard to guess, what the general opinion was in these circumstances; neither did the Earl of Peterborow endeavour to persuade the Officers, that it was reasonable to approach such numbers with so inconsiderable a force: his Lordship only made them sensible, that unless he could raise that that Siege, our affairs were desperate, and therefore capable only of desperate Remedies. Upon which he defir'd his Officers to be content, to let him try his Fortune, whether he could not by diligence and surprize effect that, which by downright force was utterly impracticable. The confidence, that these Gentlemen had in my Lords care and intelligence, made them on all occasions approve of or acquiesce at least in his Designs, whatever Difficulties might feem to die in the way.

It is certain the Conde de las Torres had not the least notice of the approach of any Enemy, till those employ'd by the Earl of Peterborow gave him the account; which was in such a manner contriv'd by his Lordship, and perform'd by his Spies, that it obtain'd the desired effect. And it must be confess'd to his Lordship's great honour, that to fuch extraordinary Thoughts, and fuch diligent Executions, were owing all our fuccesses in Spain.

My Lord never made use of any Spaniards, without getting the whole Family in his posesfion, to be answerable for those he employ'd: and as the People of that Country have very good natural parts, and will run any hazards for mony, it was hard for the General of the other fide to avoid being impos'd upon, without renouncing all intelligence, and giving credit to nothing, though never so probable. er gering Slong

By marches in the mountains, by dividing his troops, and by the help of obscurity, his Lord-ship brought all his men to meet in one night, at a place call'd

Campagne of Valencia. 209 call'd Traguera, within fix miles of the Enemies Camp: and there having got them within the Walls, by his diligence and care he prevented any Person from going out of Town to give the Enemy intelligence. He begun his march before day, and having with a small Party view'd the Woods and the Hills, he placed a few Dragoons and Miquelets so conveniently, that they cou'd not be feen but by those they had already pass'd by, which his Lordship took care to fecure: fo that all the soldiers were brought to their respective Posts to appear at an hour prefix'd, soon after his Lordship's Spies had made the intended impressions in the Enemies Army. What this stratagem was and what influence it was defign'd P to

to have upon the Enemy, will be best conceiv'd from this Letter his Lordship wrote to Coll. Jones, who was then Governour of St. Mattheo.

OU will hardly believe your felf, what this Letter informs you of, if it comes fafe to you; and tho' I have taken the best Precautions, it will do little Prejudice, if it falls into the EnemiesHands: Since they shall See and Feel the Troops, as foon almost as they can receive Intelligence, shou'd it be betray'd to them. The end for which I venture it to you is, that you may prepare to open the furthest Gate towards Valencia, and have your thousand Miquelets ready who will have the Employment they love, and are fit for, the following and pillaging a flying Enemy. The Country is as one can wish for their intire Destruction. Be sure, upon the first appearance of our Troops, and the first discharge of our Artillery, you answer with an English Halloo: And take to the Mountains on the right with all your Men. It is no Matter what becomes of the Town; leave it to your Mistresses. The Conde de las Torres must take the Plains; the Hills on the left being almolt most impassable, and secur'd by five or or fix thousand of the Country People. But what will most Gall him, the old Regiment of Nebot, which revolted to us near Valencia, is likewise among them.

I was eight Days ago my felf in Bar-selona, and I believe the Conde de las Torres must have so good Intelligence from thence, that he can't be Ignorant of it. What belongs to my own Troops and my own Resolutions I can easily keep from him, tho' nothing elfe. You know the Force I have, and the Multitudes that are gathering from all parts against us; fo that I am forc'd to put the whole upon this Action: Which must be decifive, to give any hopes to our desperate Game. By nine or ten, within an Hour after you can receive this, assure your self you will discover us on the tops of the Hills, not two Cannon Shot from their Camp.

The Advantages of the Sea are inconceivable, and have contributed to bring about what you could never expect to see, a force almost equal to the Enemy in number; and you know less would do our Business. Besides never Men were fo transported, to be brought with fuch Secreey so near an Enemy. I have near near fix thousand Men lock'd up this Night, within the Walls of Traguera. I do not expect you should believe it, till vou see them.

You know we had a thousand Foot and two hundred Dragoons in Tortofa: Will's and a thousand Foot, English and Dutch, came down the Ebro in Boats; and I embark'd a thousand Foot more at Tarragona, which I landed at Vinaros: and the Artillery from thence I brought in Country Carts. It was easie to affemble the Horse: Zinzindorf and Moras are as good as our own, and with our English Dragoons make in all near two thousand. But the whole depends upon leaving them no retreat without interruption.

Dear Jones, prove a true Dragoon, be diligent and alert; and preach this welcome Doctrine to your Miquelets,

Talle and Trout Wour Friend,

PETERBOROW.

This Letter was given to two feveral persons: the one instru-Eted and order'd by fuch an hour in the Morning, topretend the betraying of it into the hands of the Conde delas Torres; the other was to remain hid in the mountains, and agreed with to endeavour to give it in the night to Collonel Jones. This Man was really persuaded, that the number of Troops was as confiderable as was pretended; the first was order'd to say nothing of our Force, least he might be expos'd to ill usage, when the truth came to be discover'd. When he had given the Letter, he had direction to inform where the other Spy was hid, upon condition made for the fecurity of his Life. Whether the artificial account of the one, or the fincere confession of the other prevail'd, is not known : known: but 'tis certain that as foon as the Letter was translated, orders were given to prepare for a march: and not long after, when upon a retreat of a small party of the Enemy, some of our Men approach'd the top of the Hill which overlooks St. Matheo, the whole Army was in the utmost Confusion, the Souldiers striking their Tents, loading their Baggage, and preparing to quit the Siege.

In a very little time the Troops of the Earl of Peterborow appear'd on the top of the adjoining mountain, not above random Cannon shot from some part of the Enemies Camp. The Country, which was full of little rising Grounds and Valleys, and cover'd with Olive Trees, being favourable for such an approach, and the Enemies adpart of the Enemies advanced.

vanc'd party being driven into the Camp before any judgment cou'd be form'd of our Strength, it was easie for my Lord to make a shew of his forces to advantage. This furprize made their fears as great as could be desir'd, and had we had any proportion of Troops, we had a fair opportunity of cutting them all off. But we were content to let 7000 Men go off without being attack'd; and thought it enough to raise the Siege with a force so disproportionate, as that of 1200: after his Lordship found not only all the informations, that engag'd him in that Attempt, intirely wrong, but his circumstances so very difficult, as would have deterr'd any other Man from fe hazardous an undertaking.

The Earl of Peterborow pass'd thro' St. Mattheo, having before . refolv'd which way to make a shew of pursuing the Enemy, without intirely exposing his little body, if they shou'd be better inform'd, and lay afide their panick fear. So while they march'd thro' a narrow plain which leads to Valencia, my Lord took along the edge of the Hills to a place call'd Albocazer, not far distant from St. Mattheo, and a little to the right of the Enemy.

In this place the Earl of Peterborow receiv'd an Express from the King, with all these dismal accounts at once: That the Duke of Noyailles was entring with near eight thousand men into Cataloma, from the side of Rousillon; That the body under Serclas Tilly in Arragon was 4000 or 5000, and pressing upon all the places near Lerida; That the Duke of Anjou with Mareschal de Tesse was forming a body of 10000 near Madrid, which wou'd foon be in motion, besides the Troops under the Duke of Berwick on the fide of Portugal. After these informations, the King was pleas'd to acquaint his Lordship, that he was oblig'd to countermand the 1000 Foot and 200 Horse which was appointed to joyn him, and were already come almost as far as Tortosa. The Letters from Court at the same time represented the necessity of defending Catalonia, but above all things the care and prefervation of the King's Person: but however, in this matter my Lord had no politive Orders from the King, tho' he had receiv'd before very preffing ones for paffing the

His Lordship finding the Forces, that were to joyn him were countermanded ; had nothing else to comfort him but a Plenipotentiary Commission sent him by the King of Spain to do what he thought fit, with a strong reinforcement of Compliments and Authorities, in-flead of Troops. By which his Lordship was only made liable to be accus'd either of losing the Kingdom of Valencia, if he re-pais'd the Ebro; or the King's Person, if he did not return to the defence of Catalonia, expos'd to fuch imminent danger. And at this time his Foot were marching in the stony Mountains, and in a Winter-seafon; without Cloaths or Shooes and his few Dragoons were up-

OME Spies, Prisoners, and Deserters having been examin'd about the Force of the Enemy, they all agree that their Horse consisted of three of Q their their best Regiments, and one of Dragoons, besides two hundred Horse of the Duke of Anjou's Guards: It appear'd likewise, that the Regiment of Horse of Pozo Blanco was before them ready to join, and a Regiment of Dragoons within three Days March. The Regiment of Horse, if compleat, consists of twelve Troops of thirty Men each, all which, when together at the lowest computation, will amount to above two Thousand Horse; and their Foot to about twenty eight hundred. It appears to the Council of War, by Advices, Letters and Accounts, that a Body of five hundred Horse and fifteen hundred Foot, were come near to Valencia under Velasco; and by the confession of the Deferters and Prisoners, the Enemy were marching with intention to join them, depending upon a Correspondence in Valencia. The Forces, with which the Siege of St. Mattheo was raifed, confisted of a thousand Foot and less than two Hundred Dragoons, the Enemy being surprised, who were not informed of the March; upon the Retreat of the Enemy the Forces march'd after them, a long and tedious March over the Mountains to Albocazer; where the the Earl of Peterborow receiving Advices from Court, that the Regular Troops of the Duke of Anjou were encreas'd to twelve Thousand Men on the Frontiers of Arragon, besides near fix Thousand, which were between him and Valencia, the nine Hundred Foot that remain'd being Fatigu'd, and almost bare Foot with continu'd Marches over the Rocks and Mountains, his Lordship call'd a Council of War, where the Officers prefent of the Allies, and those of the King of Spain, were unannimously of Opinion, not to advance further on the Plains towards Valencia, but to attempt Peniscola; Marching towards Vineros; a proper Post to expect the Troops, that are coming to join: Which Port was not so far from Tortofa, but that his Lordship might employ his Forces to the relief of Catalonia, and pass the Ebro, if occasion requir'd, as likewise affist Valencia as soon as reinfore'd; his Lordship marching to follow the Enemy for some time with a fmall party of Horse, to observe their Motion. At the same time, by intercepted Letters from the Count St. Eftevan Vice-Roy of Arragon, it appear'd to the Council of War, that five Thou-Q 2

fand Men more were marching un-der the Duke of Arcos, and were within five Leagues of Valencia: So that finding the last Orders from Court were to give an entire Liberty to the Earl of Peterborow to act in all things as he pleas'd, whereas his former were positive and without any liberty, commanding the relief of St. Mattheo, upon Intelligences wholly groundlefs, which prevented his Lord-Thip in a much more considerable Service, he having it in his Power to pass the Enemy and to get near a Thousand Horses, and put himself with three Thousand Men into Vaiencia: And it being lest to the Earl of Peterborow's Judgment upon the Intelligence from Court, to act as he pleas'd: The whole Council of War were of Opinion, it might highly reflect on them in point of Judg-ment, and be lay'd to their Charge, if they did not advise his Lordship, so to Post the Troops with him, as not to be cut off from being able to affift the King in Person, and to pass to the Defence of Catalonia, in the extream Necesfity, which in all probability may be expected.

per A. Farly.

The whole Council of War having advis'd his Lordship to think of nothing but the defence of Catalonia, and the King's Person; and his Catholick Majefty having intimated his expectations, That his Lordship wou'd compleat the Conquest of Walencia, tho' at the same time he recall'd the few Troops, that were defign'd for that Kingdom: it will be eafily conceiv'd, how difficult it was, if not impossible, for the Earl of Peterborow to reconcile these different opinions, and to fatisfie the expectations of both. Against these Forces of the Enemy; against these orders from the Court; against these unanimous and reasonable opinions of a Council of War, few Generals wou'd have had fuch a thought, and fewer wou'd have executed fuch an attempt, as the reduction of a Kingdom with 200 Horse and 900 Foot, in the condition afore taken notice of.

The Earl of Peterborow fo far comply'd with the opinion of the Council of War, as to give orders to the Foot, with a small Party of Horse, to march back to Vinaros, a little Town on the Sea-fide, fix Leagues distant from Tortofa; where, in case of neces-sity, he cou'd embarque the Foot in Boats, and fling them fecure-ly into the Ebro. But the Officers were furpriz'd, when they found his Lordship resolved, with a Party of Horfe, to purfue fuch an Army. The parting was very melancholy; and their fears were the greater, when my Lord affur'd them he wou'd yet endeavour, however our circumstances feem'd desperate, to secure the King-

Kingdom of Valencia; and, That fince the King thought Conquest possible in the present case, his Majesty cou'd not complain of his Lordship's motions, however rash they might appear. His Lordship therefore was resolv'd never to re-pass the Ebro, without positive orders from the King: and explain'd himfelf very fully upon that subject to his Majesty, in the following Letter. in me, and ailure me or voin Elleen and Friendship, it is too much, then

A Letter from the Earl of Peterborow to the King of Spain.

Sir,

Your Majesty has confer'd particular Honours upon me, which I can't deserve. But, Sir, both the English Minister and my self have apprehended, we have had little share in your Councils. If our Advices had been approv'd; if your Majesty had trusted us in the management of your Troops, they had been now in a condition to have oppos'd your Enemies: If your Majesty had permitted me to have March'd into the Kingdom of Valencia, when I so earnestly desir'd it, without making me stay under pretence of the March of Imaginary Troops: If your Majesty would have believ'd me upon that occasion, your Majesty probably had not only had at this time a Vice-Roy of Valencia, but the Kingdom.

With what I have, I march ftrait to Valencia. I can take no other Meafures, leaving the rest to Providence. Your Majesty has made me pass the Ebro, with positive Orders for the relief of this Kingdom; it is but reasonable that your Majesty give me the like Orders to repais that River, when the Succouring of Catalonia requires it. At the same time his Lordship sent again orders to the thousand Spanish Foot and three hundred Horse to enter into Valencia; and in case his Majesty shou'd again remand them to Lerida, after having taken such a march from thence to the borders of Valencia, his Lordship had sent positive orders for Coll. Wills, to march immediately with an equal number of Horse and Foot to his assistance.

This resolution, taken by the Earl of Peterborow, produc'd the desir'd effect, and orders were sent to the Spanish sorces to sollow the direction of the English General: since it appear'd, that his Lordship was resolv'd otherwise to have an equal number of English out of the same place, to which these Spanish Troops were to return. In the mean while, my Lord pursu'd the Enemies Army with a party of Horse: the word won't be thought improperly us'd, fince the Enemy march'd twenty leagues with the fame precipitation, as they fled from St. Mattheo; and were (by the same artifices us'd to make them raise the Siege) persuaded, that they were follow'd by confiderable Forces.

It may eafily be imagin'd, what rest a Party cou'd have, that was employ'd in fuch a defign, and appear'd now one fide, now on the other, to give alarms by day and night to the Enemy: and what fatigues a General underwent, who was oblig'd to lead them in Person every step, and was perpetually bufie in contriving those artifices and stratagems, by which alone the enterprize cou'd succeed. To enter into all the

the particulars of this action, wou'd be to make it almost incredible; I shall only relate one passage, which will give us a just Idea of the whole.

After several days march, the Enemies whole Army came to a place call'd Nules, within three days march of Valencia, and one from Castillon de la Plana, which was a Town populous, rich, well affected, tho' in the Enemies hands, I and abounding in Horses. Nules was the most disaffected Town in all the Kingdom to the Interests of King Charles, and fortify'd with the most regular towers, with the best walls, and in the best repair. It was necessary to drive the Enemy from this place, and, if possible, to possess Nules, and some other little walled Towns, which coet due snied biers Enem ver'd ver'd Castillon, such as Villa Real, Burriana, &c. 100 Ober 10 110 11

The Enemy march'd away from Nules, and left a thousand of the Towns-People well arm'd in it. There was little hopes, that his Lordship should gain admittance there: but the Enemy having the day before, partly by force, partly by treaty, got into Villa Real, and under pretence of their relistance, put them all to the Sword; his Lordship flatter'd himfelf that Terror, might prevail on the inhabitants of Nules, and took a resolution as bold as fortunate. He rode in Person with his Party of Horse up to the Gates of the Town, under the shot of all their Musquets, and required them immediately to fend him out their chief Magistrate or a Priest, if they wou'd avoid being put to the the Sword without mercy, as foon as the Artillery or Miners cou'd make a breach. Some Priefts, who knew the Earl of Peterborow, came out; my Lord to improve their frights, allow'd them but fix minutes time to return with an answer. The Gates were immediately open'd: and here the Earl of Peterborow began to form that Cavalry, which fecur'd the Kingdom of Valencia, and contributed to fave Barcelona; taking near 200 Horse in this place, where the Enemy an hour before had 3000 men After this action, which forc'd the Duke of Anjou's Troops to a fecond march the same day, to get further from so terrible an Enemy, his Lordship made a short turn, and came to Castillon de la Plana. In this confiderable Town and some of the adjacent Places his Lordship procur'd and bought near 800 Horses, under the Ene mies nose: persuading the whole Country, that his Army was now following the Enemy, and driving them out of the Country, and that some of his Troops wou'd march back to take pof fession of the Horses, he had now provided. The dispatch, the persuafions, the arts us'd upon this occasion, are not to be conceiv'd: the whole had at that very time a Romantick Air, tho's every particular was before adjusted and prepar'd by his Lordship.

No surprize, I believe, was equal to that of the Officers and Soldiers of Collonel Pierce's Regiment; who had orders to march from Vinaros, where they were sent with the rest of the 900

English Infantry, to a place call'd Oropesa, four leagues from Castillon de la Plana. In this place by ten in the morning, they were met by the Earl of Peterborow, in a plain just bordering on the Town. His Lordship having made a review, was complimenting the Regiment, and wishing that he had but Horses and Acoutrements, to try whether a Corps of so good a character would maintain the like reputation upon such a change. It is not to be doubted, that they concurr'd with his Lordship in his wishes; little expecting the execution of them in a moment. But his Lordship having order'd his Secretary to give the Commissions already prepar'd, the Officers at last believ'd the General in earnest, when turning to the edge of the Hill, they R faw faw eight bodies of Horse drawn up separately, and sound them all ready accounted. Among these there were three good Horses for each Captain, two for each Lieutenant, and one for the Cornet. My Lord lest to the Field-Officers the choice of their Troops, the other Captains drew Lots; and immediately they all mounted and marched to the Quarters, appointed for them.

The like care the Earl of Peterborow had taken for the different different between the Earl of Peterborow had taken for the different between English and Spanish Dragoons, having in Barks brought Saddles, Arms and Accounted ments to the nearest place on the Sea-side in eight or nine days, when at the same time his Lordship was in continual motion, and had driven the Enemy twenty leagues before him. His Lordship having by this means from two two hundred, encreas'd his Horse to a thousand, left them in quarters in little walled Towns, which were well affected, all about Castillon de la Plana, and where they could not be infulted by the Enemy without Cannon. He gave orders for marches from place to place, with the proper cautions; and by this means confirm'd the Country, and the Enemy in the belief, that we had a confiderable body in those parts: he writ Letters to Valencia, promising them to come to their relief, and foon to force the Enemy out of the Country. And left orders to his Secretaries to continue a correla pondence with that place, as if he were in those parts, tho' his Lordship immediately took Post for Tortofailqishibaliw to require

The reason of his Lordship's going thither, was to see whether the King had been prevail'd with to let the Troops first designed march, or to hear how near Coll. Wills might be come to Tortofa, in cafe the Spanish Regiments continued under contrary orders. When his Lordship came to Vinaros, he found that the Spanish Troops had made a days march into Valencia, and that some of the Militia of Catalonia and Valencia were likewise come to their rendezvouz. With these Troops thus affembled the Earl of Peterborow immediately march'd with a defign to relieve Valencia, and fecure that Kingdom against an Enemy, who had (after all his Lordship could do) double the number of well-disciplin'd and veteran Campagne of Valencia, 245 teran Troops, both in Horse and Foot.

The Earl of Peterborow could hardly expect to deceive an Enemy, and to disguise his own weakness, for so considerable a time, as was necessary; but having nothing elfe to trust to, he happily succeeded by the help of a few English Dragoons well chosen, and some sober Subalterns well instructed, together with the People of the Country, who, of all Men, are the best qualified for such a purpose. And if the great art of War seems chiefly to confift in gaining true intelligence, and at the same time impoling upon the Enemy, his Lordship had this part of a General in perfection.

He fent at once twenty Spies forwards into the Country from St. Mattheo, knowing the Route the Enemy must take; appointing them the places from whence, and the time when they should bring in to the General the pretended Intelligences. It were too tedious to relate all the feveral pretences and directions, tho? my Lord has them all in writing. The Spies upon the fecond days march of the Enemy were very fuccessful, and oblig'd the Army to a march in the night. The Spaniards employ'd by my Lord inform'd the Conde de las Torres of a considerable force, that were upon his left, and fornewhat before him; which, as he told him, certainly defigned to take fome paffes, which might prevent his entrance into the plains which lead to Valencia, and that there were English Troops among them. This the Spanifo General thinking impossible, the Spy offer'd to give any two or three Officers he pleas'd to appoint, the satisfaction of seeing, what he affirm'd. Upon this, two Officers in the Countryhabit, went along with him to a place, where, pretending to alight and refresh themselves, they were fiezed by ten English Dragoons, that were posted there on purpole, and had marched in the Mountains all night with the Spies. The Spaniards thus furpriz'd and feiz'd, the Spy pretended the Guard was drunk; and the Officers feeing a couple of Dragoons lying along in that condition, flipp'd into the Stable, and took three of the Dragoon Horses with their accoutrements; this was enough to confirm the Intelligence, and to gain credit to the Spy; Officers of this Country never failing, to mag-R 4 nifie nific their dangers and escapes. Sometimes the Dragoons were brought Prisoners, by consent, into their Camp by Country-People, seeming in their Interest. By such artful means, and by such diligent application, a little body of Men, about twelve or thirteen hundred Horse, and two thousand Foot, were brought to join in the neighbourhood of Ca-

The time necessary to get these Forces together with some of the Militia, gave the Enemy leisure, and the opportunity of hindring Provisions from coming into Valencia: we may easily conceive how the nearness of so powerful an Enemy frighted a People, naturally very fearful: at least we may frame a true notion of their apprehensions, from the sollowing Letters they sent to his Lordship.

Most Excellent Sir,

TATE acknowledge the highest obli-VV gation, we owe your Excellency, for the great Delign you have in Hand, to favour and fuccour us in fuch preffing Circumstances of having the Enemy fo near this City, executing those Hostilities, which we have in other Letters reprefented and repeated to your Excellency: and that we can only expect our Redemption from your powerful Assistance; which must be afforded with that Diligence, the imminent Danger we are in requires. Wherefore we beg once more, that your Excellency will be pleas'd to hasten your Marches, without employing your Troops to any other Services than our Succour, fince it admits of no delay; for the Enemy have cut away the Water which came to our Mills, and this Morning they have prevented, that not one drop of Water comes to the Town, which will reduce us to the utmost Extremities, there being a great want of Meal; we pray therefore with the utmost Respect and Submission, that your Excellency will not fuffer this City to be loft. fince

Most Excellent Sir,

BEing to answer two Letters I have receiv'd from your Excellency, of the 21st and 24th Instant in the first place I am to give your Excellency repeated thanks for your Favours, and am always at your Service with all possible Submission: and next I am to acquaint you, that the Enemy have left Moncada, and are remov'd to Torrente, coming nearer to us, and intirely investing us; yesterday they cut away the Water of a Mill in this Town, and we having no Horse to cover the Country, the Enemy do every thing they please: To this Missortune may be added the cruel Hostilities they commit in the Country: After they have rais'd heavy Contributions, after they have drawn all their Provisions from them, they abuse their Persons, take away their Wives, cut down the Trees, destroy the Fields, and burn their Houses, after having Pillag'd em without any distinction, even to Churches. These and other execrable Hostilities asflict us not a little, and may shake even the best and most loyal Subjects His Majesty has, apprehending the like usage, if they fee those depravations continuing in their Neighbourhood, without being in condition, (as we are not at present) to remove them from us: and as the number of the ill affected increafes every Day, and your Excellencies arrival is delay'd, which they have fo often believ'd, and as often been deceiv'd in, the common People begin to despair, and the rumour is spread abroad, that your Excellency nor your Troops ever design to come, and that General Ramos and my self have deluded the People.

This mortifies us not a little, who know your Excellencies Inclinations and Defires; but I must venture to say, that if your Excellency was but here in Per-fon without your Troops, it would exceedingly animate every Man, who tho' they are now Dispirited by those Cruelties I have mention'd, and the Considerations of their being expos'd to further Invasions without a sufficient Desence, yet show a Love and Affection to our Monarch, which is not to be express'd, and repose a confidence in your Excellency, which is incredible.

For these Reasons I heartily beg of your Excellency with all Submission and

Since-

Sincerity, in my own Name, and that of all those afflicted Subjects, be pleas'd to deliver and protect us from these great Tribulations, using all imaginable diligence, that you may at the same time give an universal Consolation, and establish the Preservation of this City and Kingdom, which hath no other nor greater Hopes than in your Excellency, from whose Zeal and Compassion I promise my self the utmost compliance.

God preferve your Excellency the many Years I defire and have need of

The Duke of Arcos, who then commanded, kept the main of his Army to the right of Valencia, towards a place call'd Torrente: but sent Brigadier Mahoni with a detachment of Horse to secure the strongest pass in the Country. over a River which was just under the Walls of Molviedro, the ancient Saguntum, so famous in the Roman History. This place, which is about four Leagues distant from Valencia, my Lord must pass; for no other way was practicable. All the Officers were of opinion, That his Lordship must come to a full stop here, having no Artillery, no Miners, no preparations to take a walled Town; where, befides numerous Inhabitants, all arm'd and zealous for the Duke of Anjou, there was a very good General-Officer, and eight hundred men, near half of and T them them being Mahoni's Regiment of Iris Dragoons. What made our circumstances the more defperate in appearance, this place was for us most unfortunately situated; because after passing the River, there was a plain of two leagues to a Carthufian Convent, where the Enemy to all advantage might make use of their Horse, which were excellent, and double in number. vd problement

The Earl of Peterborow gave the Officers hopes, that what he could not do by force, he did not fear but to compais by Art: and told them, That if he could but prevail to get Mahoni to come out to speak with him, he was almost confident of getting immediate possession of the Town, and the opportunity of paffing the Plains without opposition.

constituted attitute family the life Mol-

Molviedro lies about a league from the Sea, the greatest part of the Town upon a flat, except the fide rifing towards the Castle, which stands on a high Hill. On the right runs a long ridge of Mountains; but a little above Cannon-shot from the place, there is, towards the Country, a little round Hill, distinct by it felf: our Troops came towards the Town by a great descent; and the way towards the pass was behind the round rifing ground, turning short on the left to the River.

The place of the interview intended by his Lordship, was on the side of this little rising ground next Molviedro; behind which my Lord had stolen some of his Troops towards the pass, which were come in view of the Town: the rest were at the same time march-marching on purpose to make a shew, and coming down the Hills, the Soldiers edging as it were the Country People on that fide, where they could be feen. The few Field-pieces we had were dispos'd to the like advantage; and every thing was fet in a fort of perspective to the place of the Interview.

The Scene being thus prepar'd, the Earl of Peterborow fent an Officer and Trumpet into the Town to Mahoni, to let him know; That it should not be his fault, if the Country were exposed to unnecessary hardships and ruine, it being the Interest of both fides to prevent it, fince each had a chance to be master of it: That, besides, he should be glad to have an interview with a Country-man of fo good a Reputation; That fuch a conference could have no ill confequence, and might have fome good; and that he was ready to meet him with ten or twelve Horse, in any convenient place betwixthis troops and the Town. My Lord had the more hopes of fucceeding in this project, firce, that besides in these Conferences evrey body presumes to make his own advantage, he thought it might be reasonable enough that Malioni shou'd be glad of a Capitulation, and an opportunity to join his Horse with that of the Duke of Arcos, in order to prevent our passing the Plains towards the Carthufian Convent.

The Conde de las Torres, the best Officer in Spain, (but by many thought no Enemy to the Houle of Austria) was luckily recall'd, upon pretended faults found in his Conduct, in relation to the

fiege of St. Mattheo: so that the Earl of Peterborow met an advantage he well improved, a General just come to an Army, a Man of great Quality, but no

Soldier of service. Mahoni return'd an Officer with this compliment, That he would immediately wait upon the Earl of Peterborow, upon his Lordship's parole for his security; being defirous to shew him any proper respect, and to concert measures with him that might prevent any diforders, but those which were inevitable in War. This Gentleman being related to the late Countess of Peterborow of the Tomond Family, was the more inclined to pay any civility to his Lordship.

He came, with some of the principal Officers of the Spanish Forces, to the place where his S 2 Lord-

Lordship receiv'd him, as the most proper to make an advantagious shew of his strength: and after he was entertain'd upon a fubject which had no effect, my Lord's fecond defign was more fuccessful. It was not improper for my Lord to offer the most preffing motives to encline him to take part with King Charles III. and to support them with the greatest offers; which were refus'd upon the Principles of Honour, and the impossibility of leaving a fervice to which he was engag'd, for any advantages. But as all past with great Compliments, the Earl of Peterborow, to shew how sensible he was of his confidence in coming to him, told him, That he was willing to return his marks of Esteem, with what he conceiv'd he would be well pleased with,

and which might prevent likewife fome unavoidable Cruelties very much against his Inclination. 'The Spaniards, fays he, have us'd fuch severities and cruelties at Villa Real, as will oblige me to retaliate. I am 'willing to spare a Town, that is under your Protection: I know you cannot pretend to defend it with the Horse you have; which will be fo much ' more useful in another place, if join'd with the Duke of Arcos to obstruct my passing the Plains of Valencia. I am confident, you will foon quit Molwiedro; which I can as little prevent, as you can hinder me from taking the Town. The Inhabitants then must be ex-'pos'd to the utmost Miseries; f and I can no otherwise prevent it, but by being ty'd by

'a Capitulation; which I am willing to give you, if I had the pretence of the immediate furrender of the place this very night. Some cases are so apparent, that I need not diffem-ble: I know you will immediately fend to the Duke of Arcos to march to the Carthufian Convent, and meet him there with the body of Horse under your Command. My Lord, with a pretended frankness offer'd him, if he pleas'd, to let him fee his Troops, and the Artillery which he had; and besides told him what he could bring from the Sea.

Mahoni seem'd almost to confess, that his part was to strengthen the Duke of Arcos with his Horse, and laughing, said to my Lord, I may say so to your Lordship; who is sensible of it, but cannot prevent it. The Brigadier however feem'd to be very well pleas'd with my Lord's openness, and told his Lordship, he would go back into the Town, and send an answer in half an hour. The Capitulation was agreed upon, and the answer came by the chief of the Spanish Officers: with whom my Lord had occasion to talk and to feel his Pulse, but sinding no probability of prevailing on him to change sides, he contriv'd all he could (and not without success) to give him jeal louses of Mahom.

Mahoni, (who of his fide manag'd this matter with a great deal of Dexterity, and very much like an Officer, had his advices been follow'd) in his Capitulation had agreed not to quit the place till about one at night, neither was the Earl of Peterboroxo to pass the River, till that hour. This was to get time for the Duke of Arcos to have made the march to the Plains, and the Brigadier allow'd himself the time before day break to have gain'd the fame Post. But the Earl of Peterborow fo vencreas'd the jealoufy betwixt the Spanish Officers and Mahoni, that the latter was forc'd to fend to my Lord, to let him know, that his Lordship was oblig'd in honour to the most fincere and punctual compliance with his Capitulation and confess'd to him that he was in danger from the Spanish Troops, even for his Person, if there were not the greatest assurances and evidences given of the performance of his Word. Word

I am satisfied nothing would have engaged the Earl of Peterborow to the least breach of faith; nor could any confideration have Campagne of Valencia. 265 justified his Lordship in going over the pass of the River, till the appointed time; the Enemy upon agreement having withdrawn their Dragoons, which defended the Intrenchments on the other fide. But my Lord having over-heard the neighing of Horses in the night, took it for granted, that some part of the Troops had evacuated the Town; and that if the noise of Firing was heard, it might cause a jealousie, that they were attack'd; and so produce the desir'd effects of his plot upon the Duke of Arcos, if any of the Spanish Officers should arrive in the Enemies Camp, persuaded of an ill design in Mahoni. Upon this, my Lord order'd a party of Men a little up the River, with directions to make discharges, that might resemble an Engagement of small parties. Mahoni sent immediately to my Lord to let him know, that whatever Umbrage was given, he depended upon his word, and would never believe, there could be of his side any foul play.

Mahoni was so pressed, that many of his Officers folicited his immediate march, but his aim was not to move till one a Clock, to give time to the Duke of Arcos; and the point my Lord was labouring, was to improve the suspicions and jealousies of the Spaniards. He thought the Message from Mar-boni gave him a good occasion; and therefore fent back an Officer with this feeming compliment, which fucceeded to his wish, and entirely accomplished what he aim'd at.

My Lord beg'd of Mahoni, to consent, that for his Security from any Accident, he might order a Regiment of Dragoons to pass the River, and wait the hour appointed, under the walls of the town; that his own Officers might accompany them, and fend them to the proper place; his Lordship having order'd two thirds of the Officers to come into the town, and put themselves into his hands, as Hostages for the exact and honourable performance of all Articles.

Upon the march of these troops towards the town, most of the Spanish Officers, with the detachments they commanded, marched separately towards the Duke of Arcos; and some lest their men, to give their General an account of what had past.

My

My Lord, as his Officers conceiv'd, had two insuperable difficulties: the one, to get possesfion of Molviedro, and secure the pass on the River; the other, to pass the two leagues of the Plains, which were betwixt Molviedro and Valencia, before so good and fo strong a body of Horse. My Lord was in hopes, if he fucceeded in one, to compass the other: and to that end, as foon as he found the treaty in a fair way, he chose two Irish Dragoons out of Zinzendorf's Regiment, which he well instructed and well paid, and fent immediately as Deserters to the Duke of Arcos. He promised to make them Officers, if they succeeded: which was punctually made good to one, who well had deferv'd it; the other dying foon after his return, the land to tall

They were to discover to the Duke of Arcos, That being hid under the rocks of the hill, where they were drinking a Glass of Wine, they had hear'd all the discourse betwixt the Earl and Mahoni: that they faw five thoufand Pistoles delivered, and, that Mahoni was to be a Major-General upon the English and Spanish Establishment, and to command a body of ten thousand Irish Catholicks, which were raising for the fervice of King Charles. They agreed with the Duke of Arcos to have no reward, if he were not foon made fenfible of the truth of what they faid, by Maboni himself: since they were perfuaded that he would foon fend to engage the Duke of Arcos, to march immediately with the whole Army towards the Carthusian Convent, under pretence of STATE OF THE of joining with his Horse, in order to prevent the Earl of Peterborow from passing the Plains of Molviedro: but that, whereas this march must be made in the night, all matters were so agreed and contriv'd betwixt the Earl and Mahoni, and the troops fo placed, that he must fall into the ambushes designed, and run great hazards of an entire defeat.

It fell out, that soon after these Spies had given this account to the Duke of Arcos, Mahoni's Aid de Camp, arriv'd with Proposals exactly to the same purpose; the Spanish General (whose luspicions were confirm'd by the jealousies, the Earl of Peterborow had rais'd, in feveral of the Spanish Officers, that were come from Molviedro to him) instead of complying with the immediate march proposed by Mahoni, remov'd moved his Camp quite the contrary way. Mahoni with his horse expected the whole Army at the Carthusian Convent, till the approach of the Earl of Peterborow made him retire to the Duke of Arcos's Camp: as soon as he arriv'd, he was secur'd by that General, and sent to Madrid. I must add here, that when Mahoni came to tell his Story at Court, he was made a Ma-

Arcos was recall'd.

Thus you have the account of perhaps as remarkable an Action as ever happen'd; a whole Kingdom gain'd with fuch inferior Forces, almost without any, and without a blow. His Lordship passed the Plains, without the fight of an Enemy, to the Cartbustan Convent; after which he was secure of entring into Valen-

jor-General, and the Duke of cia, without the possibility of opposition.

What a reception my Lord met with there, may be guess'd by the extremities they were in. I will only say, perhaps nothing was ever equal to this universal joy: it was all extravagant tumultuous Transport. Whole bodies of Priests and Fryars, in their several habits, were Regimented, and drawn up under Arms to receive him; and his Lordship never fail'd to return the highest civilities to, and improve his Interest with the Church.

After this unexpected entry into Valencia, when most were full of thoughts of Triumph and Conquest, my Lord was very sensible of his almost desperate condition: which however was to be dissembled to the Valencians. His Lordship had little above three three thousand Men in Valencia, where there was neither provifions for a Siege, nor Powder to make any defence withal; the Enemy were feven thousand near the Town; there were four thousand more Castillians at Fuente de Higuera, within 15 leagues of it, coming to join the Conde de las Torres, who was now return'd with Mahoni to the Command of the Army. At the same time the Marshal de Tesse was with ten thousand Men at Madrid, with intentions to come to besiege Valencia; which must have presently fubmitted, and fav'd him the difgrace he met with foon after at Barcelona. And my Lord had advice of fixteen 24 Pounders being ship'd at Alicant in a Genoese Vesfel, in order to be brought for the Siege of Valencia. to pais and repuls the River Au-

To prevent the Storm that threaten'd Valencia, it was necessary, as well to disperse the four thousand Men at Fuente de Higuera, before they could join the main Army, as to take from the Enemy the Artillery and Ammunition, with which they intended to carry on their Siege, and which was wanting to make a defence in Valencia. The Earl of Peterborow found the happy methods to disappoint the Enemy, in intercepting the 16 battering pieces of their Brass Cannon with all warlike Stores in proportion. The other attempt was equally requifite, but more difficult? fince the Conde de las Torres was betwixt the Troops, that were come from Castile, and the Earl of Peterborow; and my Lord's Forces, defign'd against this Castilian reinforcement, were to pass and repass the River Xu-car near the Enemies Army. However the Valencians were witnesses of his Lordships Zeal, Diligence, and Success: and they hardly knew their Danger, till they faw fix hundred of the Castilians brought into their City; the whole body of them being beaten beyoud the Conde de las Torres's Army at Fuente de Higuera, by four hundred of our Horse and eight hundred Foot, which pass'd in the night near three thoufand Horse of the Enemy, and return'd back in lafety with their prisoners to Valencia.

The Conde de las Torres, after this, despairing of any success against Valencia, form'd a design upon Alcira and Sueca; two Towns upon the River Xucar, about five leagues from Valencia. Upon taking these places, the bridge over the River at Sulle-

Power; and Valencia would have been depriv'd of two thirds of the Provisions, with which it us'd to be supplied. So perfect intelligence the Earl of Peterborous had of the Enemies motions and designs, that he slung some Men into Sueca; and sent an Officer to Alcira, who prevented the Enemy only by half an hour.

His Lordship put in Sueca and Alcira about six hundred English, and about six hundred Spanish Foot, and soon after laid a design, which must unavoidably have given the Conde de las Torres's Army an entire deseat, had it not fail'd merely by the scandalous Cowardice of the Spaniards. For the Conde, having his body divided for conveniency of Quarters, and not apprehending to be attack'd at five leagues distance from Valencia, by a force so much inferior: My Lord order'd the Spanish detachment of fix hundred Foot and four hundred Horse, to march in the night to furprize one of their Quarters, and at the same time march'd with fome Troops himself: they had about two English miles to march, and my Lord fifteen. The march on both fides was perform'd with fo much fecrefie, that the Enemy had not the least notice of it, till our Troops were very near; but an accidental party of twenty Horse, frighted all the Spanish body of a thousand, who were put into such disorder, that they killed many of their own men, in running back to the place from whence they came. However, the Earl of Peterborow advanced within a mile of the Enemies Army, and retreated five leagues without the least loss.

Thus we have run thro' a Campagne, which perhaps, in regard to the methods that were taken, and the success that attended them, has not its Parallel in any history. And if the World has a mind to be satisfied, why his Lordship was so much favour'd by Fortune, it was because he never depended on her, or upon other people. And I believe he is the only General, who can fay, That in two Campagnes he scarce ever fent a Party of thirty horse upon any action, without going in Person with them. Happy was it for him and the publick, that his constitution cou'd allow him to be so ferviceable to himself in a Country, where fometimes his Officers were less capable of serving him, when when there was occasion for the Language, tho' they all made him large amends with their Swords. And I must here do that justice to our Gallant Country-men, as to fay, That perhaps there never was a service, where Officers endur'd more fatigues and hardships, or gave greater proofs of Spirit, Resolution, and Courage, than they did, from the fortunate taking of Barcelona, to the fatal Battle of Almansa.

The bounds I have set to my self in these short Memoirs, won't let me sollow his Lordship surther in the glorious progress of his Arms: 'ris a scene indeed of such a fruitful and agreeable variety, as wou'd afford great pleasure to me, and no less entertainment to the Reader. Nor cou'd I deny my self the satisfaction of dwelling longer upon so inviting a subject : had I not reason to expect, that some abler Pen will deliver down to Posterity, a History of Revo lutions so extraordinary, and so, much for the honour of the Enwas a fervice, who notion did endur'd more titilgues and hard-
