PREFATORY.

The Columbus City Directory for 1906 is herewith submitted to the public, the publishers feeling confident that the information contained herein will be found as complete and accurate as it is possible to make it in a work of this character.

The city of Columbus has reached that point in its history when a reliable directory is an imperative necessity. A careful study of the aims and purposes of a city directory demonstrates the necessity of careful and intelligent work in its preparation.

The purpose of a directory does not stop at the mere production of a list of names and residences of the inhabitants carelessly gathered and printed to establish a medium for cheap advertisements, and offering the community at large nothing in return. The preparation of the contents of a directory must be quickly and carefully made, and contain all the detail of business and individual information that can in any manner be of public interest, and reflect the business enterprise and growth of the city from year to year, issued promptly at the time best calculated to give the highest degree of accuracy.

In assuming the duties of publishing the Columbus Directory, we were influenced by the fact that the service rendered in the past was unsatisfactory and that the business men of the city were anxious to have some responsible company take hold of the work, which would have facilities to get up an accurate directory and have it delivered at the earliest possible date after the annual changes in residence and business location had been made.

There are 15,266 names in the directory, and using the multiple of $2\frac{1}{2}$ — to allow for names of women and children not represented in its columns,— we place the population of Columbus at 38,415.

When the fact is taken into consideration, that the territory covered by the directory canvass is not confined to the corporate limits, but includes the contiguous suburban territory, our estimate may be regarded as being very conservative.

The difference in size of book, as compared with the 1904 edition, is explained by the substitution of a finer grade of paper for that ordinarily used.

An examination of the classified business department of the directory, where all the different industries and professions are arranged under their various classifications, will be ample proof of any claim that is made for Columbus as a manufacturing and wholesale center.

It is our intention to publish the directory regularly hereafter — yearly if the situation warrants.

Our thanks are extended to patrons and the public generally for kindly co-operation in gathering the data for the work.

R. L. POLK & Co.
