PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 85th CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

SENATE

THURSDAY, AUGUST 22, 1957

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Dear Lord and Father of mankind, grappling with problems which confound us in a world which could be so fair, but which by human folly has been made so ugly, we ask that Thou wilt forgive our foolish ways, and that where we have erred in our judgments, Thou wilt reclothe us in our rightful mind. May the coolness of Thy balm breathe through the heats of our desires.

Drop Thy still dews of quietness
  Till all our strivings cease;
Take from our souls the strain and stress,
And let our ordered lives confess
  The beauty of Thy peace.

We ask it in the name of the Prince of Peace, who says, "My peace I give unto you." Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. SMATHERS, and by unanimous consent, the Journal of the proceedings of Wednesday, August 21, 1957, was approved, and its reading was dispensed with.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore announced that on today, August 22, 1957, the Vice President had signed the following enrolled bills, which had previously been signed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 807) for the relief of Jackson School Township, Ind., with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1944) to amend title II of the Social Security Act so as to make inapplicable, in the case of the survivors of certain members of the Armed Forces, the provisions which presently prevent the payment of benefits to aliens who are outside the United States.

The message further announced that the House had severally agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills of the House:

H. R. 2842. An act to amend the Tariff Act of 1930 to provide for the temporary free importation of certain tanning extracts;

H. R. 8753. An act to amend title II of the Social Security Act to include California, Connecticut, and Rhode Island among the States which are permitted to divide their retirement systems into two parts so as to obtain social security coverage, under State agreement, for only those State and local employees who desire such coverage;

H. R. 8755. An act to amend title II of the Social Security Act to permit any instrumentality of two or more States to obtain social security coverage under its agreement separately for those of its employees who are covered by a retirement system and who desire such coverage; and

H. R. 8892. An act to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to extend the time within which a minister may elect coverage as a self-employed individual for social-security purposes, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 7900. An act to permit the Secretary of Agriculture to sell to individuals land in Ottawa County, Mich., which was acquired pursuant to the provisions of title III of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act; and

H. R. 9379. An act making appropriations for the Atomic Energy Commission for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1958, and for other purposes.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were each read twice by their titles and referred as indicated:

DEVELOPMENT OF BETHEL AIR BASE, MINN.—RESOLUTION

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, the citizens of Minnesota have a great interest and concern in the earliest possible development of the Bethel Air Base for military operations.

On August 9, 1957, the city council of Minneapolis adopted a resolution urging early completion of this project. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be printed in the Record, and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Resolution Relating to the Importance of Developing of Bethel Air Base Without Delay

Whereas the City Council of the City of Minneapolis has on a number of occasions urged Federal and State authorities to take all steps necessary to remove military operations from the commercial Wold-Chamberlain Airport; and

Whereas the hazards and specific incidents connected with military flying at Wold-Chamberlain have amply demonstrated the justification of the city council's position; and

Whereas the Minnesota State Legislature in its 1957 session provided for financing the acquisition of lands suitable for a military airport in the vicinity of the Twin City area; and

Whereas the expense of such land acquisition is a relatively small part of the total governmental expenditure required for the development of this military facility; and

Whereas the major consideration of the Bethel Airport project is its earliest possible completion so as to remove conflicts and improve safety in both military and civilian air traffic around the Twin Cities; and

Whereas controversy over the matter of financing acquisition may be used to delay the completion of this most important military airport project: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the City Council of the City of Minneapolis:

1. That we reaffirm our position that military flying should be completely separated from commercial flying at Wold-Chamberlain Airport.

2. That the relatively small portion of the total financing required for land acquisition should not be allowed to develop to a controversy endangering the main objective of separating military and civilian airport operations.

3. That the city council urge Congress of the United States and Federal agencies involved in the Bethel project to take all steps necessary for the earliest possible completion of the project without unnecessary controversy.

4. That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to the Members of Congress from the State of Minnesota and to the Governor of the State of Minnesota.

Passed August 9, 1957.

Geo. W. Martens,
President of the Council.

Not approved by the mayor.

Attest:

Leonard A. Johnson,
City Clerk.

REVISION OF FEDERAL FIREARMS REGULATIONS—RESOLUTIONS

My HUMPHREY. Mr. President, on August 18, 1957, the Minnesota Conservation Federation at its fifth annual State assembly at Minneapolis, Minn., adopted resolutions opposing the proposed revision of the Federal Firearms Regulations.

I ask unanimous consent that the resolutions be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Minnesota Conservation Federation,
Hopkins, Minn., August 19, 1957.

Hon. Hubert H. Humphrey,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

Dear Senator: I am instructed to transmit to you the following resolutions adopted by the Minnesota Conservation Federation at its fifth annual State assembly at Minneapolis, Minn., on August 18, 1957, referring to the Internal Revenue Code:

We oppose section 177.50, Identification of Firearms, because:

(a) It will add expense to the manufacture of firearms, which expense will be passed on to the consumer;

(b) It will raise questions as to the status of the thousands of sporting weapons now on dealers' shelves and in private hands and which carry no such serial number as that proposed; and

(c) Its imposition, where collectors' guns are concerned, designed for import into this country, stamping of serial numbers, as proposed, will materially reduce their market and historical value.

We oppose section 177.51, Firearms Records, because:

(a) It will impose a hardship on many dealers; and

(b) It will create for them a tremendous record-storage problem.

We oppose section 177.52, Ammunition Records, because:

(a) It imposes another intolerable burden upon dealers in that it requires them to keep and maintain voluminous records; and

(b) It accomplishes no useful purpose in crime prevention or deterrence.

We oppose section 177.54, Over the Counter Sales to Individuals, because it violates what appears to have been the will of Congress in the Federal Firearms Act of 1938, since Congress did not and probably could not legally have written into the act such a provision in view of the constitutional guaranties of individual liberty and State sovereignty.

We oppose section 177.55, Authority to Examine Records, because:

(a) It is arbitrary and capricious and could be used to deny constitutional guaranties against unreasonable search; and

(b) Search seems neither reasonable nor necessary to carry out a law requiring only importation, shipment and disposal records to be kept.

The Director of Alcohol and Tobacco Tax Division of the Internal Revenue Service has also been notified of this action.

Sincerely yours,

AGNES L. NELSON, Secretary.

RESOLUTION OF PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION OF NORTH DAKOTA

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record a resolution adopted by the Public Service Commission of North Dakota, protesting against the enactment of legislation to prohibit nonlawyer practitioners before the Interstate Commerce Commission.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Whereas there have been introduced in Congress H. R. 3350, H. R. 3349, H. R. 7006, and S. 932 which were prepared by the special committee on legal services and procedure of the American Bar Association, and which would practically prohibit any nonlawyer practitioner now licensed by the Interstate Commerce Commission from representing any party to a hearing before such agency; and

Whereas the utility section of the American Bar Association, composed of attorneys who practice before administrative bodies and who appreciate the value of nonlawyer practitioners in practice before such bodies, have opposed legislation of this type; and

Whereas the Interstate Commerce Commission is also opposed to this legislation because it recognizes the value of the technical knowledge possessed by the nonlawyers in assisting them in arriving at a proper solution to matters under consideration; and

Whereas eminent attorneys experienced and skilled in procedure before the Interstate Commerce Commission also are opposed to this type of legislation; and

Whereas it has been the experience of this Commission that nonlawyer practitioners experienced and skilled in matters coming before us, have assisted this Commission immeasurably in bringing facts to our attention and can and usually do represent the people as ably as most attorneys, if not more so, in the technical aspects of certain types of cases; and

Whereas the passage of this legislation would require the sending of an attorney, along with our director of traffic in all cases participated in by this Commission, even though it usually is not necessary, particularly in matters being considered by the Interstate Commerce Commission, said director of traffic being now admitted to practice by the Interstate Commerce Commission; and

Whereas this would lead to greater expense and inconvenience and be wholly unnecessary and inadvisable: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That this Commission go on record as being opposed to all legislation of this type, and that we urge our Senators and Congressmen to not only oppose the passage of this legislation but aggressively work for its defeat.

By the Commission:

ELMER OLSON, Secretary.

REDUCTION OF VETERANS' COMPENSATION ROLLS—LETTER

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record a letter I wrote to the Honorable Ralph H. Stone, Chief of Benefits Division, the Veterans' Administration, relating to the reduction in veterans' compensation rolls.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

AUGUST 16, 1957.

Hon. RALPH H. STONE,
Chief of Benefits Division,
Veterans' Administration,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. STONE: This is in reference to the resolution adopted by the Disabled American Veterans of Ohio, alleging, among other things, that due to new rating regulations, more than 40,000 service-connected veterans have either been taken off the compensation rolls entirely or have been drastically reduced.

I am very gravely concerned over this matter and consider it of sufficient importance to be brought to the attention of all my colleagues, so I introduced it into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of August 15, and suggest that you see page 14819.

Now in line with what seems to be the Veterans' Administration's new policy of elimination and reduction, I have just received a report from your Wichita office on the case of Mr. Robert R. Morford, C–803393, of Topeka, Kans., copy of which I am enclosing. As you will see from this report, this veteran since 1941 has had a condition of deafness, held to be service connected. In February of 1953, he was deemed to be 40 percent disabled and awarded compensation at the rate of $66 per month. Yet in October of 1956, it was determined he was only 20 percent disabled and his compensation reduced to $33 per month.

It may be that new miracle drugs have caused this miraculous partial recovery. I should be very grateful if you will cause a further review to be made of this case and advise me just what did cause this change in rating.

With kindest regards, I am

Sincerely,

WILLIAM LANGER.

NATIONAL YOUTH WEEK

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, the indictment this week in New York City of 7 teen-agers for first degree murder in the fatal stabbing of a crippled boy and the indictment of 7 others for first degree manslaughter starkly emphasize the importance of making an all-out national attack on juvenile delinquency and youth crime. It is symptomatic of what is going on in other cities.

In that connection, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a part of my remarks, excerpts from the report on this subject contained in the August 19 issue of Newsweek, detailing the situation in other cities.

There being no objection, the excerpts were ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Why the Young Kill: Prowling the Juvenile Jungles of the Big Cities

The man considered the greatest judicial authority on delinquent children in Massachusetts is Judge John J. Connelly of the Boston juvenile court. Judge Connelly said last week:

"If we could get the same public cooperation that the Salk vaccine got, we'd lick the problem. At the time that the vaccine was introduced, we had 7,000 cases of polio in the country, but we had 700,000 cases of juvenile delinquency."

In 1940, Judge Connelly's court handled 450 cases; in 1956, 1,030 (including 407 girls, whose chief offenses were stealing cosmetics, tight sweaters, and toreador pants from local stores). "Juvenile delinquency is growing four times faster than the juvenile population," Connelly said grimly.

In Seattle, which prides itself on its handling of delinquency, crimes involving juveniles have nevertheless quadrupled since 1939.

In Detroit, police reported that in the first 6 months of this year, juveniles committed 6 killings, compared with 3 in the same period in 1956; 50 rapes compared with 33; 247 robberies compared with 186.

In Los Angeles, 4,174 youths were arrested in 1941; in 1946 there were 8,051; in the past year there were 14,392.

Though the FBI reports that juvenile crime is on an alarming upswing in rural areas (due largely to the automobile), the problem is at its worst, and most uncontrollable, in cities of more than 100,000. Here occur most of the serious crimes of murder, rape, robbery, theft, and vandalism—and for them, the sociologists blame what they term another major flaw in American society today: The breakdown of authority.

"The parents, the community, the courts, the police, the moral standards of mankind itself, fail to give these children the thing they need most," said one noted sociologist, "and that is guidance. There is no authority to tell them what to do, to show them. In their world, no one is minding the store. There isn't enough tax money in the world to pay professional social workers to supply this guidance. The parents don't supply it. It's a miracle the problem isn't 10 times worse than it is."

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, the problem is national in scope. Earlier this summer, for example, a teen gang in Chicago brutally beat to death an honor student who had just won a college scholarship. The vicious senselessness of this is highlighted by the fact that the group did not even know the victim.

Mr. President, this is a subject with which I dealt as the attorney general of the State of New York when, during my incumbency, we strengthened the New York Youth Commission and allowed the New York State courts to cope more effectively with juvenile offenders. I believe the continuing serious nature of the situation also shows the need for some Federal Government cooperation to assist the States in developing countermeasures.

Mr. President, I have said that the problem is national in scope. The latest uniform crime report issued by the FBI shows that the juvenile crime rate in 1956 soared to still another record. According to this survey, covering more than 1,500 cities of over 2,500 population, arrests of juveniles under 18 years old rose 17 percent over 1955, although in terms of total population, the juvenile-age group increased by only 3 percent.

Therefore, the rate of juvenile crime increased more than five times the relationship of the increase in juvenile population. Last year, about 46 percent of all persons arrested for major crimes—or nearly one out of every two—were under 18. Juveniles arrested on charges of criminal homicide also increased and today almost one out of every ten persons arrested for murder is under 18.

We must, in dealing with this problem, think in terms of the enormous percentage of youth—the 98 percent—who are unaffected by juvenile delinquency and yet who suffer under the cloud cast by the lawless and irresponsible among them.

I say 98 percent, Mr. President, because 47.4 million Americans, representing 34 percent of the population are under 18 years of age. It is estimated that 1 million will this year in some way come to the attention of the police.

Mr. President, I have three suggestions in this regard. First, I suggest a national awakening to the seriousness of the problem.

Second, I suggest attention to the administration bill pending before the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, offered by the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Wiley], of which I have the honor to be a cosponsor, with my senior colleague [Mr. Ives] and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Thye].

This bill would strengthen and improve State and local programs with Federal allotments to demonstrate and develop improved methods for the control of juvenile delinquency, train personnel therefor, and help finance State and local youth programs. I call this to the attention of the Senate at this time in the belief that we should turn our thoughts to this vitally serious problem, that hearings should be scheduled on this measure. Also major attention should be given to the work and hearings of the Subcommittee on Juvenile Delinquency of the Judiciary Committee, under the chairmanship of the distinguished Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Kefauver], with participation by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Hennings] and other members.

My third suggestion, Mr. President, is a concurrent resolution which I am submitting today, with the cosponsorship of my colleague the senior Senator from

New York [Mr. Ives], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Thye], and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Wiley], calling upon the President to proclaim the second week in January as National Youth Week, to mobilize the resources of the United States to fight against juvenile delinquency.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Holland in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, in this regard, I invite attention to the terms of the concurrent resolution, which calls upon our people to have a National Youth Week so as to recognize and acknowledge the constructive achievements of the overwhelming majority of American youth as good citizens today, and to encourage them to prepare for a future of even better citizenship; second, to mobilize the spiritual and material resources of all the people of the United States in the struggle against juvenile delinquency and youth crime in individual American communities; and, third, to grant recognition to and strengthen the voluntary organizations—civic, fraternal, religious, veterans, service, and the instrumentalities of Federal, State, and local governments—which are working for the full development of the youth in the national interest.

Mr. President, speaking for myself and from my experience in New York, I favor two methods of attack, which are mainly community methods, but which can use a great deal of Federal help.

The first is the establishment of community centers, staffed with personnel trained in youth work. Indeed, the schools in our large cities need to be kept open the year around to furnish physical plants for such centers.

Second, Mr. President, on the corrective side, I favor taking the aggravated cases of delinquency out of their environment and into minimum security centers, like the CCC camps of the 1930's where the work of rehabilitation can be predominant. I am proud to say that in my home State of New York we are proceeding along that line at the present time.

In conclusion, Mr. President, let me say the importance of taking a broad scale, coordinated national attack on this problem cannot be overemphasized, for we are dealing with our most precious resource, our youth, the generation to whom we shall turn over the destiny of our country, indeed the destiny of the whole Free World. We will hand them a tremendous burden, Mr. President, and therefore it is our duty to do everything within our power to equip them mentally, morally, and physically to carry it through, successfully. We cannot allow them to get a bad name or to get into grave difficulties, such as are indicated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The concurrent resolution will be received and appropriately referred.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 48) to request the President to proclaim the second week in January, beginning in 1958, as "National Youth Week," submitted by Mr. Javits (for himself, Mr. Ives, Mr. Thye, and Mr. Wiley), was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

> Whereas some 47.4 millions of all Americans comprising 24 percent of the population are under 18 years of age; and
>
> Whereas the overwhelming majority of American youth lead constructive lives making their full contribution to the improvement of their communities and the security of the Nation; and
>
> Whereas, 18 States and the District of Columbia and some 10 cities have special Commissions or other bodies dealing with problems of youth; and
>
> Whereas, the marshaling of the national resources to deal with the problems of youth is essential in the national interest: Therefore be it
>
> Resolved by the Senate (The House of Representatives concurring), That the President is requested to issue a proclamation designating the second week in January, beginning in 1958, as "National Youth Week" and calling upon the people of the United States to observe such week by—
>
> (1) recognizing and acknowledging the constructive achievements of the overwhelming majority of American youth as good citizens today and preparing for a future of even better citizenship tomorrow;
>
> (2) mobilizing the spiritual and material resources of all the people of the United States in the struggle against juvenile delinquency and youth crime in individual American communities; and
>
> (3) granting recognition to and strengthening the voluntary organizations, civic, fraternal, religious, veteran and service, and the instrumentalities of the Federal, State and local governments working for the full development of youth in the national interest.

RULE TO GOVERN CORRECTIONS OF THE REPORTERS' TRANSCRIPT OF SENATE DEBATES

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, in the course of the debate on July 16, 1957, on the question of changes in the Congressional Record, I stated that I would prepare and submit a resolution which would propose a Senate rule to govern corrections of the reporters' transcript of Senate debate. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. Allott], who participated in that debate, agreed that there ought to be a precise standard governing the practice of editing the transcript, if one could be drafted. In preparing my resolution, therefore, I have taken account of suggestions of the Senator from Colorado, and he has agreed to cosponsor it. I send the resolution to the desk and ask that it be printed in the Congressional Record at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 193) was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

> Resolved, That the Standing Rules of the Senate are amended by adding at the end thereof the following new rule:
>
> "RULE XLI
>
>
> "Except as provided herein, the remarks of Senators in proceedings of the Senate shall be recorded in the Congressional Record as actually made. Changes in the recording of such remarks shall be permissible only to correct grammar and syntax, and to correct actual errors made in the reporting of such remarks. No changes of a substantive nature or changes concerning remarks of another Senator made in the proceedings shall be permitted."

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, Senators will remember that the matter arose on July 16 when the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Capehart] took the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Kerr] to task for adding the word fiscal to the transcript of certain remarks he had made in the Senate on July 15 concerning President Eisenhower's understanding of monetary affairs. The Senator from Indiana challenged the propriety of this addition to the transcript made by the Senator from Oklahoma on the ground that it affected the significance of the colloquy which had taken place between them.

When this matter was discussed on July 16, I called to the attention of the Senate the fact that the editing, by Senators or their staffs, of the transcript made by the official reporters has been a common practice in the Senate, and that many of these changes are often very extensive and even involve substantial additions to what has in fact been said and taken down by the reporters. I said that it was hardly fair to single out the Senator from Oklahoma for adding one single adjective to the transcript of remarks he had made on the preceding day, when every day Senators add, change, or remove whole sentences in the transcript made by the official reporters.

Surprising and disturbing as this practice has seemed to me ever since I came to the Senate 2½ years ago, we know that it has been the universal custom. It is unfair and prejudicial to make an issue of it and to criticize one particular Senator for one instance of adding a single adjective, when year in and year out Senators rewrite whole sentences and paragraphs in the Record for the purpose of conveying their thoughts more accurately or elegantly than they actually expressed them in the heat of debate.

Mr. President, my own view is that if there is to be a rule for one there should be a rule for all. I believe it is in the interest of the integrity of Senate debate, and in the interest of historical accuracy, that the Congressional Record should be what it purports to be—a record of congressional debates as they in fact take place. This would be the purport of the Senate rule I propose. Our official Senate reporters do a remarkable job of reporting the debates on the Senate floor, often under conditions which must be very difficult and tiring. The transcript is well edited for grammar, continuity, and syntax, by the official reporters of debates. I am quite willing to trust my grammatical reputation to the able and impartial Mr. James Murphy and the other official reporters. If occasionally a word or a phrase is actually misunderstood by a reporter or some error creeps into the transcript, my proposed rule would permit its correction. The text of the rule plainly shows that only substantive changes would be excluded.

Mr. President, I believe the Senate should adopt such a rule, or else Senators should refrain from criticizing one of their colleagues when they do not happen to like some specific word which that particular colleague may have added or subtracted in the transcript.

In closing, I want to mention that, in accordance with my remarks on July 16, I wrote the Senator from Indiana on July 19, to offer him an opportunity to join the Senator from Colorado and me in introducing this proposal. I have not heard from the Senator from Indiana about this, but I ask unanimous consent that my letter to him of July 19, 1957, be printed in the Record at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

July 19, 1957.

Hon. Homer E. Capehart,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

Dear Senator Capehart: You will recall that in the debate on July 16 concerning editing of the Congressional Record by Senators or their staffs, I discussed with Senator Allott the need for a Senate rule which will define what changes may or may not be made.

I have now had prepared the following draft rule, which I intend to introduce in the Senate:

"Resolved, etc.—

"RULE XLI

"Except as provided herein, the remarks of Senators in proceedings of the Senate shall be recorded in the Congressional Record as actually made. Changes in the recording of such remarks shall be permissible only to correct grammar and syntax, or to correct actual errors made in the reporting of such remarks. No changes of a substantive nature or which affect the remarks of other Senators made in the proceedings shall be permitted."

I have asked Senator Allott to join me in introducing this proposal, and I should be very pleased if you should decide also to join as a cosponsor of it. I believe that this proposed text leaves plenty of room for the kind of corrections in grammar or in the accuracy of reporting which may be necessary for clarity in the Congressional Record while avoiding any changes in substance which might possibly give rise to subsequent controversy over what was said or not said in the Senate.

If you should decide to cosponsor this resolution, I hope that you will have someone on your staff call my office by Monday morning, July 22.

Sincerely,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be received and appropriately referred.

The resolution (S. Res. 193) was received and referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

REVISION OF BASIC COMPENSATION SCHEDULES OF CLASSIFICATION ACT OF 1949—AMENDMENT

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina submitted an amendment, intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 734) to revise the basic compensation schedules of the Classification Act of 1949, as amended, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

PRODUCTION OF STATEMENTS AND REPORTS OF WITNESSES—AMENDMENT

Mr. COOPER submitted an amendment, intended to be proposed by him, to the amendment in the nature of a substitute, intended to be proposed by Mr. O'Mahoney, to the bill (S. 2377) to amend chapter 223, title 18, United States Code, to provide for the production of statements and reports of witnesses, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

Mr. O'MAHONEY submitted an amendment in the nature of a substitute, intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2377) to amend chapter 223, title 18, United States Code, to provide for the production of statements and reports of witnesses, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF INTERNAL REVENUE CODE OF 1939, RELATING TO CREDIT FOR PAYMENT OF CERTAIN ESTATE TAXES—AMENDMENTS

Mr. MARTIN of Pennsylvania (for Mr. Capehart) submitted amendments, intended to be proposed by Mr. Capehart to the bill (H. R. 8887) to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1939 to provide a credit against the estate tax for Federal estate taxes paid on certain prior transfers in the case of decedents dying after December 31, 1947, which were referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

USE OF INFORMATION MEDIUMS GUARANTY PROGRAM FUNDS IN ISRAEL

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, the supplemental appropriation bill which the Senate passed on August 19, provided funds for educational, scientific, and cultural purposes in Israel under the informational mediums guaranty program. The importance to the United States of these prospective expenditures in Israel is underscored in two letters to Mr. Bernard Katzen, a distinguished New York attorney who went to Israel, as the representative of the Secretary of State, to determine the best uses of this money. These letters to Mr. Katzen are signed, respectively, by our Ambassador to Israel and the United States representative to the United Nations. I ask unanimous consent that the letters be printed in the Record, at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

The Foreign Service of the United States of America,
Tel Aviv, Israel, April 17, 1956.

Mr. Bernard Katzen,

Dear Mr. Katzen: Thank you very much for your letter of March 30. I was delighted to learn of the progress you are making in planning constructive uses of the accrued information mediums guaranty funds and hope that all will continue to go smoothly in the Washington phase of the work.

As I told you before your departure from Israel, the work on which you were engaged here I regard of the greatest importance for the furtherance of closer relations and broader understanding between the United States and Israel. At a time when so much public emphasis has been placed on political and military matters, I think it very beneficial that your mission demonstrated our great and tangible interest in the cultural and educational aspects of the national life of Israel. I am confident, furthermore, that the very remarkable, and to my knowledge wholly favorable, public response to your visit was due in no small part to the high order of negotiating skill and public relations ability you brought to the task.

Your work here has left a lasting impact, and in these difficult times has made my own burden much lighter. I wish you every success in bringing your mission to a speedy conclusion and join you in hoping that you will soon return to Israel and see for yourself some of the results of the allocated grants.

Sincerely yours,

Edward B. Lawson,
Ambassador.

United States Representative to the United Nations,
New York, N. Y., February 21, 1957.

Bernard Katzen, Esq.,
New York, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Katzen: Many thanks for your letter of February 18 enclosing a copy of your report on your mission to Israel.

I am much impressed by the creative contribution to future relations between the United States and Israel which you have made, and which this report so clearly summarizes. At this time when the news is so full of conflict, it is a pleasure to read of these brighter prospects, and I congratulate you on what you are doing. I am sure that, as you say, your experience will have value as well for our cultural relations with other foreign countries.

With kind regards,

Sincerely yours,

Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr.

THE NATIONAL WILDERNESS PRESERVATION SYSTEM

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, I am in receipt of a letter from the Jugoslav National Home, Inc., of Ely, Minn. The letter was signed by Mr. Andrew Pirtz, secretary; and he enclosed a resolution passed by this organization.

I ask unanimous consent that the letter and resolution be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the letter and resolution were ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Jugoslav National Home, Inc.,
Ely, Minn., August 19, 1957.

Hon. Edward J. Thye,
United States Senator,
Washington, D. C.:

Enclosed find a resolution passed by Jugoslav National Home, Inc., at our July meeting.

Yours truly,

Andrew Pirtz,
Secretary.

Whereas a bill known as S. 1176 has been introduced in the Senate of the 85th Congress and also in the House of Representatives which is titled, and known as the wilderness preservation bill; and

Whereas provisions in the said S. 1176, particularly in section 3, subdivision B, would permanently and completely restrict the further development and use of our natural resources of our Nation contained within the limits of the National Wilderness Preservation System to the grave detriment of large segments of our population dependent upon development of such use, which restriction is without reference to the proper conservation practices which recognize the conservation of natural resources for continued use, benefit, and enjoyment of all the people; and

Whereas provision of the said bill S. 1176 relating to future administration of the Superior National Forest through a proposed National Wilderness Preservation Council is such that it usurps and restricts rights of citizens to effect improvements by giving such council too much power where anything the said council may propose, even if it be detrimental to public good, may be approved by Congress through default; and

Whereas present regulations governing the Superior National Forest are such that new legislation calling for further restrictions is not necessary: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Jugoslav National Home meeting in its building this 28th day of July 1957, does hereby go on record that the proposed legislation known as S. 1176 and its companion bill in the House of Representatives, be withdrawn from all consideration because such legislation is too restrictive in its application and is not consistent with good conservation practices to do benefit from our natural resources for the majority of our people.

Dated this 14th day of August 1957.

JUGOSLAV NATIONAL HOME, INC.,
JOHN MEHLE, President.
ANDREW PIRTZ, Secretary.

THE IMMIGRATION BILL

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, as a cosponsor of the administration's immigration bill this year, which was introduced by the Senator from Utah [Mr. WATKINS], I was very much gratified, as were others, by the vote last night of 65 to 4, by which the revised immigration bill was passed by the Senate.

While many of us who wanted to see the President's recommendations enacted into law were disappointed by the limited coverage of the bill as passed, nevertheless I feel that the bill is a worthwhile step ahead, and will help us in the development of a really just and sound immigration policy.

One omission from the bill which was passed last night was, in my judgment, particularly serious. The bill failed to alleviate the plight of the Hungarian refugees who have come to this country because of the Communist cruelties, and who have been admitted on parole. The total number is in the neighborhood of 27,000; and the uncertain status of these courageous people is a source of great concern to many of us. I realize full well there may be dangers of Communist infiltration through this route. However, the great bulk of these visitors are obviously brave Hungarians who risked their all to oppose the outrageous situation in Hungary which had been brought about by the Soviet cruelties, and who ultimately were able to break away and come to the United States, to enjoy the freedoms of our country.

I hope this omission will soon be corrected by legislative means, so the status of these people can be firmly established once and for all.

My warm congratulations go to the members of our Judiciary Committee, and especially to the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. WATKINS], whose leadership in this cause has been outstanding.

Mr. President——

DECOMMISSIONING OF THE BATTLESHIP "NEW JERSEY"

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, for over 14 years the citizens of New Jersey have been proud of the gallant 45,000-ton battleship which has borne the name of our State in the service of our country. Yesterday, at the Bayonne, N. J., Naval Supply Depot, this mighty ship was decommissioned, and was placed in mothballs, to stand in readiness for any future call to our defense.

The battleship New Jersey has served the country with distinction and great effectiveness. During the Second World War, she won nine battle stars in the Pacific theater. Following the end of the Second World War, she was decommissioned, only to be called forth to join in the support of our forces and the United Nations in the Korean war. She was the flagship in the siege of Wonsan Harbor.

Mr. President, the New Jersey is now temporarily at rest in her native State, standing by for whatever contingency may necessitate her reactivation. The citizens of New Jersey are proud to have her back home and are more secure in the knowledge that she will be ever ready to come to our defense, if need be.

JOHN TATSEY, OF THE GLACIER REPORTER

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, as we come to the end of the session, I think there is time for a little humor.

Washington, D. C., undoubtedly has the largest and most varied collection of newspaper reporters in the world. The Fourth Estate is represented in the Nation's Capital by internationally known reporters and columnists, who are preoccupied with news and events of national and international importance. Many of them are known for their individual and distinctive styles and techniques.

Their news stories and features are read by millions in cities and towns, large and small; but I doubt that any are read with such avid interest as are the local news columns in the small weekly newspapers.

The news writers for the small weekly papers also have their own individual styles, and these reporters are depended upon by the community residents as the source of news about their friends and neighbors.

One of the most unique news reporters anywhere is the man who writes the Heart Butte news for the Glacier Reporter, in Browning, Mont. John Tatsey, a Blackfoot Indian service policeman, gathers interesting bits of news about his Indian friends in the community, and prepares, without a doubt, the most unusual weekly news column of its kind.

He makes light of incidents in the lives of these people, as do the syndicated columnists who touch on the incidents in the lives of Government officials and noted personages. So far as John Tatsey is concerned, his friends are of no less importance than any national celebrity.

The weekly news column from Heart Butte, on the Blackfoot Reservation, may discuss items ranging from the most recent inmates in the local jail to a man who motored to a Canadian Blackfoot settlement and returned with a bride.

For example, the following are a few excerpts from John Tatsey's column published on August 9, 1957.

> Sam Horn and his wife went to Browning last week. There Sam got orders from his wife not to cross the street from Yegen Hotel. Somehow he managed to stop at the Legion Club to get a bottle opener for some pop, so there he downed 3 bottles of beer in 3 minutes. Might be a record.

Here is another one:

Here is another:

> Stoles Head Carrier has quit his job at Valier and has been home. His wife left. She was afraid of drunks, so she landed in Dupuyer where she would be safe.

Here is another one:

Here is another:

> Pete Day Rider has been home from the county jail in Conrad and had a party, and his wife broke even on him by putting a gash on his head.

Here is another:

> Mrs. Richard Wild Gun has been missing for 2 weeks. She went to town to get some groceries. She was heard of at Starr School. One boy has not been to work from Starr School since she has been there.

Mr. President, the Washington Post may have its George Dixon; the New York Herald Tribune, its Art Buchwald; and the Washington Evening Star may have its Fletcher Knebel; but the Glacier Reporter and the Hungry Horse News have John Tatsey. He is another Will Rogers.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that two of John Tatsey's news columns, reprinted in the Hungry Horse News, of Columbia Falls, Mont., be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Columbia Falls (Mont.) Hungry Horse News of August 9, 1957]

HORNE DOWNS BOTTLE A MINUTE

Sam Horne and his wife went to Browning last week. There Sam got orders from his wife not to cross the street from Yegen Hotel. Somehow he managed to stop at the Legion Club to get a bottle opener for some pop, so there he downed 3 bottles of beer in 3 minutes. Might be a record.

Father Mallman has returned from New York after spending his vacation there with his aged mother.

Mr. and Mrs. John Tatsey motored to Deer Lodge last Sunday where they spent the afternoon with Abe Racine.

Thomas Many Guns was over to the Canadian Blackfeet early part of July and returned home with a bride.

Joe Running Crane is rather having a hard time by not having a car. He left his car in Dupuyer to have it overhauled. He cannot walk.

Stoles Head Carrier has quit his job at Valier and has been home. His wife left. She was afraid of drunks so she landed in Dupuyer where she would be safe.

Gerald Bauttier came home from Greenland where he was stationed. He will be home until September 1 and then go west to Spokane.

IN, OUT OF JAIL AT HEART BUTTE

Pete Day Rider has been home from the county jail in Conrad and had a party and his wife broke even on him by putting a gash on his head.

Louie Red Head is serving a time in the county jail in Conrad. When they are in jail off the reservation they wish they were in James Walters place.

Alvin Mountain Chief was picked up for not paying an old fine and a notice was sent to Indian Police Tatsey for being a. w. o. l. and was taken by Air Force police from Great Falls last Monday. He got in a little trouble by running over a child with a car.

Tom Williamson and Ted Spotted Eagle were in Havre last week where they attended a drivers' school. They are going to transport schoolchildren from Swims Under and Mad Plum Schools.

Stoles is out this week. Just wait.

Sunday was a very nice day at Heart Butte. Church was well attended and afternoon the boys had their regular stick game.

George Comes At Night pulled a stunt when he hid from his wife in town. When she left he showed up at Jack Miles Pool Hall. Tatsey was sitting in car outside. Every 10 or 15 minutes he would go across the street.

Mr. and Mrs. Roy Doore were at the Tatsey place and had a picnic at Big Badger Canyon, where John cooked some steak on campfire. Maybe Joe Running Crane will try a trip like this.

Some of the boys are getting back from haying jobs. One guy lost his wife. Some white guy took off with her.

Mrs. Richard Wild Gun has been missing for 2 weeks. She went to town to get some groceries. She was heard of at Starr School. One boy has not been to work from Starr School since she has been there.

EXPOSURE OF IMPROPER PRACTICES IN THE LABOR AND MANAGEMENT FIELD

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed at this time for approximately 6 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, the Senator from Arizona may proceed.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, the current investigation into improper practices in the relationship of labor and management has brought to light astounding acts of some corrupt leaders of labor and management that are shocking the Nation. These revelations have come as a surprise to the American people; yet this should not be the case, because diligent members of the American press have for many years been pointing out the practices of some of these unscrupulous leaders. An examination of the past articles by Westbrook Pegler, of the Hearst publications; the articles by Carl R. Baldwin, James A. Kearns, and Charles Marselak, of the St. Louis Post Dispatch; the complete, detailed stories by Clark Mollenhoff, appearing in newspapers of the Middle West; the disclosures in the Port Huron Times-Herald editorials of Louis Weil, Sr.; the daily columns by Victor Riesel; the disclosures of Edward J. Donohue in the Scranton Times, along with similar stories by J. Harold Brislin appearing in the Scrantonian and the Scranton Tribune; the complete exposé by Wallace Turner and William Lambert that led to the downfall of Beck, as published in the Oregonian; and the equally excellent articles by Ed Guthman, of the Seattle Times, show that the American public was long ago forewarned of the perversions taking place in the labor field. Today, the finger of guilt is being pointed by the McClellan committee at these discredits to labor, many of whom were described in the earlier articles written by these newspapermen.

The list I have read and shall discuss is not by any means a complete one; but I feel that it is typical of the work that has been done in this area, which to many is a never-never land, a field which some believe should never be covered by the alert and courageous newspaper reporter.

The dean of newspapermen covering irregularities in labor activity is Westbrook Pegler. For more years than I care to remember, I have been following the activities of this amazing man as he has courageously exposed racketeers in the labor movement, from Willie Bioff to James Hoffa. Back in the 1940's, Pegler exposed Joe Fay, long before the labor leader was convicted of extortion. The late-September revelations that Fay had been holding a court in Sing Sing, with State and city officials and labor leaders beating a path to his cell, was not news to Pegler's readers. On September 4, 1940, Pegler had written:

> Sing Sing is a very convenient prison for Fay * * * and he has had the privilege of many visits from persons who are not eligible by the rules applying to other prisoners. John V. Kenny, the mayor of Jersey City, was one of these visitors, on a mission to negotiate a deal about crime on the waterfront.

After World War I, Pegler became markets editor of the United News, in New York. He also held the positions of sports editor, cable editor, fashion editor, society editor, and editor, until he was hired by the Chicago Tribune Syndicate, in 1925, to cover sports. This phase ended in 1933, when he went to work for Roy Howard. Thereafter, Pegler spent a good deal of his time in Washington. From 1944 until the present, Pegler has written a daily column for King Features.

In 1942 Pegler received the Pulitzer prize for distinguished reporting. He has received an honorary degree of doctor of laws from Knox College, and twice he has won the National Headliners Club annual award. He has also received the American Legion award for Americanism.

In 1954, he received the Silver Lady award for being "the outstanding reporter and columnist of the year," from the Banshees, a New York luncheon club composed of editors, writers, artists, and others in the creative trades. At the same luncheon, a remarkable and unique tribute was paid him by 25 winners of the Congressional Medal of Honor, who presented him with a special citation for Americanism.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD as a part of my remarks, samples of Pegler's articles which illustrate the scope of his pioneering in the labor racketeering field.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THREAT TO BOYCOTT TWO STATES PORTRAYS UNION "PATRIOTISM"

(By Westbrook Pegler)

I am so bright I sometimes wonder how I stand it, but I just go on giving myself day after day and today I thought I would tell you something about the obligations and restrictions imposed on so many millions of our people by Mr. Roosevelt's high-minded friends of the union racket, including, of course, the thieves and gorillas who formerly had to use their wits to get by but now rely on the Wagner Act, the War Labor Board and good old Professor Weenie of the Supreme Court.

I led myself into this subject a few days ago when I tossed off a learned essay on Joe Padway's threat to call a sort of general strike of the AFL against the States of Florida and Arkansas because their citizens, by popular vote in the recent election, adopted constitutional amendments affirming a man's right to work though he should refuse to join a union.

This imported American doesn't like the constitutions of these two States of our glorious Union and would punish the people thereof for daring to flout his will. Naturally we want to know what sort of constitutions he does like, for which information we turn to my little library of constitutions, some of which incidentally are very hard to get even if a fellow happens to be a member.

For example, I was talking the other day to a poor working stiff, a common man, as Henry Wallace, a very uncommon man himself, would call the guy, who had just had his ears kicked off by the president of his local for protesting against a speed-up arranged by the mob in command. When I read his union book and saw some mention of sick benefits and a burial fund I asked:

"What are these sick and burial funds?"

"Huh?" the guy said. "I dunno. I never heard of them. They don't leave us see the constitution."

Oh, before I go any further, I want to show you how Padway and Mr. Big team up in this thing. Roosevelt sent Padway over to Europe last year in company with old Dan Tobin as a representative of American labor. That shows you how he stands with the boss.

Well, here is the oath that an American sailor has to take when Mr. Big's political henchmen drive him into the national maritime union:

"I solemnly swear to be true and loyal to the union and the labor cause and to obey all rules the union may adopt."

That means the sailor obligates himself in advance, to follow the Communist Party line when the union follows the line, as it has done pretty consistently from the beginning, even though he may sincerely believe the union has adopted rules inimical to the United States.

This one is in the constitution of the boilermakers' union:

"If a member be so indiscreet as to buy or cause to be bought goods without the union label or patronize an unfair shop or restaurant, he shall be tried and, if found guilty, fined not less than $5 nor more than $10."

This clause invites the ruling clique to blacklist any shop, restaurant or product and divert the patronage of the members to rivals in trade who might be willing to lay a little something on the line in return for the favor.

In the same constitution it is written that the hundreds of thousands of members must buy life insurance under a group policy negotiated by the son of the union's president, now emeritus, who gets a commission on every dollar of the premiums.

If they don't keep up their insurance payments so that the old man's son can collect his share, they can't work, even in the Kaiser shipyards, and no matter how desperate the labor shortage.

Here is a hot one from the constitution of the old Browne-Bioff racket in the movie and theatrical trades for which Padway was general counsel:

"I solemnly pledge my word of honor as a man to abide by the constitution and bylaws of local 225 and abide by its rules without resort to a court of law."

These two filthy gangsters were two of the most vicious criminals in the whole union racket at the very time when Padway was drawing pay for representing the outfit and yet the constitution forbade the stiffs to appeal to the public courts for their rights. And, in accordance with the hammy Ku Klux tradition which still prevails in many of these subgovernments, the new brother being initiated was required to "take your fellow brother by the right hand, place your left hand over your heart, and repeat your obligation."

The president's welcoming address to the new joiners leads off by saying that nothing in the vow conflicts with any civil or religious beliefs, and two paragraphs later denies him access to the courts and the system of justice esablished by centuries of struggle.

To Padway this seems to have been all right. It seems O. K. to him, too, that the constitution of the Musicians' Union, for which he now is counsel, delivers the members into utter slavery by means of a clause granting Jimmy Petrillo the power to suspend the whole constitution at will and rule as absolute dictator.

And the constitution of the teamsters, as you may remember, grants to old Dan Tobin, Roosevelt's pal, the most luxurious and elaborate scale of free living at the members' expense, in addition to his salary of $30,000 a year, with a provision that this goes for Dan only and not for any successor.

It is like the British arrangements for the maintenance of the royal family. And there is, moreover, a special article which makes it a much more serious offense to take a poke at old Dan or any other member of the royal class than to make a pass at some commoner or lesser official. It is less majestic and no kidding to throw a hook at Old Dan, and this special protection for his august person certainly sounds kind of funny against the old fourflusher's stories of the terrible fights he used to have and what a hero he has been in labor's struggle over the years.

There is a lot more, but I don't want to overload my pupils with homework.

Just absorb this and remember that Padway is the guy who says these outfits will boycott two of our States because their people decided that a man didn't necessarily have to submit to such violations of his human and civil rights.

Professor Weenie, Senator Wagner, the old Tammany gang politician and labor faker, and Padway. We certainly did draw some honey from Europe, didn't we?

Fascistic Phase of Hillman's PAC Shown in Election

(By Westbrook Pegler)

We have just seen an alarming demonstration of the fascistic phase of unionism in the operations of Sidney Hillman's political action committee and in the campaign activities of other politicians of the union movement.

Some of labor, apparently a majority of the union members, either did not realize that they were voting for fascism or realized it and went along, anyway, sacrificing freedom for immediate pay, as Italian labor did under Mussolini.

On the surface it may seem inconsistent of me to say that the political action committee is dominated by Communists and then to say that the immediate effect of this program is Fascist. The explanation is that fascism and communism are alike in all important elements and that the Communists, as they demonstrated in Germany when they voted for Hitler, are willing to go through fascism to arrive at communism.

After all, Mussolini improvised fascism out of communism and, like President Roosevelt, he won the so-called common man by giving him vacations with pay, baby bonuses and other illusory benefits.

To enable the employers to meet these costs, Mussolini subsidized them, too, so that the expense was met out of the public treasury, which meant that the people paid for their own raises through taxes. Moreover, Mussolini thus, by subsidizing industry, got control of industry, as now is happening here.

Under Mussolini, the unions were not actually abolished, as the anti-Fascist, but pro-Communist, propagandists in this country would have Americans believe. Instead, he absorbed them into the Fascist movement, as unionism here is now almost wholly absorbed into the Roosevelt party, and made their treasuries available to himself for his political purposes.

It must be apparent to American labor that in this campaign most of the union treasuries were made available to Roosevelt's party. Not only did unions contribute enormously to the campaign, in some cases by minority decisions, in others by executive decision of the officials, but many of them levied special political assessments.

We discovered cases in which workers were fired for refusing to pay the political assessments or goaded and terrorized into quitting their jobs.

We had one specific case in which a man was convicted of un-union-like activity and dismissed by the union from an important semi-military war job because he declared that if he had to pay a dollar to Roosevelt's campaign fund he would give $5 to Dewey's fund. Other cases could have been authenticated, but, as in the courts, samples suffice to prove the charge.

Often, in criminal prosecutions, a defendant is convicted and sentenced on only one particular count of, say, grand larceny, when dozens could be proved, the idea being that even if he were convicted on each separate count, the sentences would run concurrently.

We have seen in operation many of the methods by which the Roosevelt regime has driven millions of workers into the unions, including the device called maintenance of membership, whereby men and women of the highest skill in war plants must be fired and their effort subtracted from the war effort, if they drop out of membership or violate union discipline, which includes a deferential respect for a Communist union official or an underworld racketeer.

The union's interests come before those of the fighting men, and maintenance of membership, on its face, is an admission by the union that it cannot keep its members on the rolls without Government coercion.

Another trick by which men and women are driven into the unions which, in turn, support their great political idol, called Il Duce in Italy, is the work of Jimmy Byrnes, formerly of the Supreme Court, who resigned to become Roosevelt's political odd-job man.

This is how it works:

George Spelvin, American, works in an unorganized or nonunion occupation. He is, let us say, a clerk. He has earned a raise and his employer wants to reward him and to help him meet the increased cost of living. But he can't give Spelvin a raise.

Then a union comes along and, incidentally, the most aggressive and successful of the office workers' unions is one which consistently follows the Communist Party line and whose president goes under an assumed name and has received cordial greetings from President Roosevelt.

The union can get Spelvin that raise through the War Labor Board if he and a sufficient number of his fellow-workers will consent to join. But in that case the employer must raise not only Spelvin, who has earned his increase, but dozens or hundreds of others, regardless of their merit or ability and including the undeserving.

So, instead of holding the line against inflation, up go the wages of all hands and up goes the prestige of the union, which, naturally, contributes generously to Roosevelt. And, of course, in most cases, since American industry went almost wholly to war, those raises are paid out of the workers' own taxes because the Treasury has subsidized the company and is meeting the payrolls.

Whether the workers who voted for this system understood what they were doing and realized that this was Mussolini's way and pure fascism, we can't know. It is bad enough that they did vote for it. The prospect is dark for that free America which so many million men and women entrusted to the conscience and intelligence of the voters at home when they went overseas to fight fascism.

Union Bosses Vote Selves Big Rakeoff, Freeze Out Widows

(By Westbrook Pegler)

Although the funny business occurred last April in Chicago, it still may be news to you that the mob who run the International Union of Operating Engineers of the A. F. of L. did very well for themselves and neatly waltzed around if they did not crash right through the Government's verboten on wage and salary increases which limits the earnings of that pathetic object in more or less human form whom the bleeding hearts fondly refer to as the common man.

This is the outfit of which Joe Fay is a vice president, he being also a hoodlum and racketeer of the Frank Hague satrapy of the New Deal and at present under indictment in New York charged with a shakedown of $703,000 on the Delaware Aqueduct job. He has been indicted before, to be sure, but this time he may wind up in Sing Sing after all these years.

The mob got together at the big Stevens Hotel in Chicago which, by interesting coincidence, was knocked down by the Government to a big Chicago construction contractor and politician who had a piece of the Aqueduct job and happens to be very friendly with the union's president, William E. Maloney.

Maloney is a very frugal fellow, indeed, for, on a salary of $8,000 a year from the union, or racket, he has managed to save enough to buy a great farm in Illinois and a winter home in Miami Beach, Fla., for which he paid $22,500 and maintain a stable of racing steeds and ship them around the country for the horse meets.

Fay, too, for that matter, has done very well on even less salary for he has two homes in the North and one in Sarasota, Fla., and is quite a clubman in both New York and Newark. However, he is also a contractor, leasing heavy equipment to construction contractors on jobs on which his union subjects are employed and, moreover, he is a Hague politician of the hoodlum branch of the New Deal party, which is no amateur activity.

Well, they had a big time in Chicago. Ed Kelly, the mayor, addressed the gang one day and William Green, the president of the A. F. of L., also showed up and sounded off with that set piece of his to the effect that "American workers will stand together, come what may, through thick and thin, unflinchingly, until victory is won over the foul forces of oppression."

There were two propositions before the convention which made an interesting contrast.

One provided that the general executive board, meaning Maloney, Fay and the rest of the tight little corporation of bosses, could vote themselves perpetual pensions in case they should slip politically and be heaved out. The pensions are to be irrevocable and there is no limit on the amount.

One fellow named Stoner, who seems to have been a working stiff, had the nerve to say that the high-rollers of the ruling mob ought to struggle along like the rank and file on the regular Federal social security after the age of 65.

"We are giving the general executive board a great deal of leeway when we say that they may establish pensions for those that they deem worthy," he said, but Brother Thomas F. McGraw, of Albany, N. Y., and a leading member of the O'Connell branch of the party of humanity, got up and said he believed in pensions for the big shots in addition to their social security.

Brother McGraw was fined $10,000 in the Federal court a couple of years back for shaking down working stiffs for job fees on a big war-construction project at Voorheesville, so he knows something about the occupational hazards and embarrassments which beset the defenders of labor's gains as in the present charges against Brother Fay.

Brother Fay also spoke a piece but he might have been plastered at the time because his remarks, as stated in the record, don't make much sense. He said he hoped the thing would go through because "I feel that the integrity and honesty and sincerity has been well performed and should be to the satisfaction of every delegate here."

Maybe you can figure that out. Anyway, the pension thing went sailing through and now the boys can get together any time and vote themselves, say $20,000 a year or whatever the the treasury will stand, in sincere appreciation of their own services to the workingman.

Well, then they came to a proposition which would have raised the maximum death insurance to the widow of a stiff in good standing for 10 years from $250, as at present, to $500 and hiked the benefits for members of inferior classes to $75 and $200, respectively.

At that, however, the opposition went to work. The resolution frankly said the money in the death benefit fund had increased enormously, but nevertheless, the general secretary and others spoke in great alarm about quick depletion of the kitty if this increase went through and the tragedy of widows who then would get no insurance at all. So this one was licked and the maximum remains at $250, even for a 10-year man.

But you ain't heard it all, yet.

Finally, the boys put through a resolution which blew not only the ceiling but the roof off the pay of worthy President William Maloney, with his farm and winter estate and racing stable and all, and of worthy Secretary-Treasurer F. A. Fitzgerald, of Washington. This one authorized the mob to raise these two salaries without any limit whatever up to the total of the entire treasury and provided only that Maloney's pay should not be less than $15,000 and Fitzgerald's not less than $10,000.

But don't let it run up your blood pressure. These boys are good, solid, down-the-line Roosevelt unioneers, like old Dan Tobin, and you certainly aren't naive enough to think they are subject to the same laws that rule the lives of the common man, are you?

(By Westbrook Pegler)

The release from prison of George Browne and Willie Bioff is the fulfillment of a routine bargain between public prosecutors and criminals who squeal on their partners in crime. They, in their turn, had been betrayed by their old friend, Joseph Schenck, the Hollywood moving picture magnate, who also received lenity for this service to the community.

The 6 Chicago underworld gangsters and 1 member of the Hague New Jersey mob who were sent to prison by the testimony of Browne and Bioff would appear to be the ultimate losers as there seems to be nobody whom they can turn in. They lost their appeals only last week.

With these two recent developments it might seem to the casual reader that a very bad situation in labor organization had been reformed.

That is not so, however, for men who tolerated these two particular crooks still are powerful in the American Federation of Labor and in the Roosevelt party and are allowed to pose as leaders and defenders of the American worker. And every attempt to enact Federal law correcting defects in labor administration which made possible their perfidies has been obstructed by the Roosevelt following in the Senate.

William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, used the power of his office to uphold Browne against a group of legitimate workmen in an evil St. Louis case. He sat with Browne in the executive council, or cabinet, of the A. F. of L. long after Browne had been made notorious by independent newspaper investigation.

Dan Tobin, President Roosevelt's particular friend, who was host to Roosevelt at the scandalous episode in Washington in October when the President made his flippant campaign oration and two young naval officers were beaten up, also sat with Browne in the executive council.

I am able to say flatly that Tobin knew Browne's union was a dirty racket and that, like any Tammany or Hague or Kelly politician, he refrained from exposing or opposing Browne in a spirit of live and let live. He let Browne alone because he anticipated that if he molested him, Browne would call attention to some similar characters and evils in Tobin's union of the teamsters.

Browne's general counsel for the union was Joseph Padway who similarly serves Tobin's union and the bartenders' and waiters' union, among others. Padway also is a friend of Roosevelt and has been honored by him.

That he could have been unaware of the character of Browne and Bioff, who was, from his youth, a common underworld bum, thief, and white slaver, is an assumption which belittles his intelligence. Some lawyers discovered long ago, however, that union law is a rich field of practice and Browne, through his union, was a juicy client.

Padway praised Browne lavishly at a national convention of this racket at a time when Bioff, acknowledged as Browne's personal representative, had been sent to jail to finish a term of 6 months for operating a brothel. Incidentally, his status in the jail was aristocratic and he held business conferences with other criminals and with Hollywood businessmen in a special room with a tub of bottled beer cooling in the corner.

About the same time, many faithless bosses of California unions were sending Bioff telegrams of sympathy and expressions of faith in his conduct and character. And Padway's praise of Browne went into the record of the proceedings along with Browne's own praise and defense of Bioff.

Another union lawyer who was receiving large fees at the time and who attended the same convention without raising his voice against the frightful betrayal of labor and exploitation of the workers for loot by an underworld gang, was Matthew Levy, of New York. Nevertheless, 2 years ago, another group of professional New Deal union operators and politicians handpicked Levy as a candidate for the supreme court and had the effrontery to present him as a labor candidate.

Here again, as in the case of Padway, to excuse Levy's association and his failure to utter some slight reproof of criminality and underworld power in unionism, would be no compliment to the acumen of the man.

The presentation in court of the detailed evidence on which Browne and Bioff were convicted and sentenced to 8 and 10 years, respectively, for extortion, had not yet occurred, it is true. But Padway, Levy, and Green all certainly had been put on warning that there was corruption in the union and the situation was one in which any man pretending to the title of leader or friend of American labor had a moral duty to disassociate himself if not to take the initiative and campaign for reform.

The discouraging fact is that not a single leader or boss of the American union movement took the initiative or any action against these men. Green, on the contrary, selected Browne to investigate racketeering.

And when, finally, there could no longer be any pretense that Browne was a victim of punishment without trial, the A. F. of L. did not have the decency to throw him out of the executive council by positive action but eased him out by abolishing the vice-presidency which he held.

Many remedial laws have been proposed, none of which, by any stretch of the imagination, could be said by any honest man to threaten any right or interest of the rank-and-file worker. Some of them would, however, impair the powers and stop the graft of union bosses and might curtail the fees of union lawyers who pose as labor leaders and spokesmen for the workers.

Everyone has been defeated by the Roosevelt element in Congress although two reform bills did pass the House of Representatives.

Browne and Bioff are low things who will now be on probation under Judge John C. Knox, a shrewd and strict man who knows them thoroughly and doubtless would throw them back into prison should they resume their racketeering. With the other gangsters safely put away, then, it might seem probable that conditions would improve.

Unfortunately, however, there are other crooks just as evil still operating notoriously in the A. F. of L. All to the detriment of the rank and file and the whole labor movement. And there has been no sign that decency has dawned in the higher councils.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Clark Mollenhoff of the Des Moines Register, whose columns are carried by other midwestern newspapers, represents admirably the present-day writer interested in the wrongdoings of certain labor leaders. The fact that his ability and crusading heart are recognized is evidenced by his having been awarded a Niemann Fellowship at Harvard, the Sigma Delta Chi award in 1953 and 1955, the Heywood Broun award in 1956, and the Ray Clapper award in 1956. It was my pleasure to have inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD back in 1956 several columns written by this man, covering the misdoings of James Hoffa, and so that my colleagues may have the opportunity to refresh their memories on Hoffa's activities, I ask that this material be printed in the RECORD, at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the extracts were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Motor Carrier Industry

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, recently there were concluded hearings, directed at competition, regulation, and the public interest in the motor carrier industry, before the Select Committee on Small Business of the United States Senate. At the end of the report of that select committee, under "Recommendations," the paragraph No. 5 reads as follows:

"Although your committee was primarily studying the role of the ICC in motor trucking, several witnesses testified and submitted statements alleging that the International Brotherhood of Teamsters was playing a trade-restraining role in the industry. It is recommended that the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare and the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce review those complaints to determine if more extensive inquiries should be conducted."

It is with that in mind that I ask unanimous consent that there may be printed in the RECORD a series of nine articles by Mr. Clark Mollenhoff, of the Cowles publications in Minneapolis and Des Moines, outlining in complete detail the dangers that were pointed out in testimony during the hearings.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"Beck's Aid Casts Long Shadow—Is Hoffa Top Man in Teamsters?

"(By Clark Mollenhoff)

"WASHINGTON.—As chairman of the central States conference of teamsters, James R. (Jimmy) Hoffa casts a long shadow over the highway transportation of the Nation.

"The influence of the young, dynamic vice president of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America extends from the Atlantic Ocean to the Rocky Mountains.

"Although he is only 42, Hoffa has been a labor organizer for more than 25 years. Today his title is ninth vice president of the International Teamsters, but the 5-foot-5 inch teamster official is regarded as the No. 2 man in the Nation's biggest union.

"There are some indications that Hoffa would rank above President Dave Beck if he wanted to press his claim with the 1,500,000 rank-and-file members.

"The free-wheeling Detroit labor leader is a political independent, who wields his personal influence and the union treasury for favorite candidates in local elections.

"He has paid fines of $1,000 and $500 for violating the labor laws but he has bounded back to become even more important in the teamsters' union.

"The highly critical reports written by Congressional committees haven't disturbed him except to bring his shouted threats to take care of those who gave information unfavorable to him.

"Hoffa was in a number of joint business enterprises with the group that was awarded the multimillion dollar annual contract for insurance for the Central States conference of teamsters.

"Hoffa's wife, Josephine, and the wife of Owen Bert Brennan, Hoffa's top aid, drew $65,000 in dividends from a truck-leasing firm set up for them by a large trucking firm that hired members of the teamsters union in Detroit, Mich.

"Two years ago, Hoffa told Congressional investigators he owed $38,000 in unpaid loans to persons who hired teamsters union members and to business agents of the teamsters union.

"Hoffa told the Congressional subcommittee he had put up no collateral on those loans and that no notes or other documents were involved in the transaction. It was just his word that he would repay.

"Teamster President Beck told a television audience he didn't know about the labor law violations by Hoffa, but declared that he would not criticize any transaction Hoffa has been involved in that he knows about.

"A study at Princeton University has ranked Hoffa as having one of the highest I. Q.'s among the Nation's labor leaders, despite the fact that his education was cut off in the eighth grade.

"Hoffa's Central States area include Michigan, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, and the Louisville area in Kentucky.

"But those 13 States do not end the extent of his influence. As a key figure in the handling of health and welfare plans for the teamsters' union, he has extended his jurisdiction to 12 other States from Texas and Oklahoma and Arkansas east to the Atlantic coast.

"Hoffa says he has been directed by Beck to cooperate in managing teamsters' affairs in those areas.

"Hoffa had what he considered to be a legitimate reason for moving south. 'Trucks from those areas were running into the Central States conference and they were breaking down our wage scale,' Hoffa says.

"This was justification for moving in to help jack up the wage scale in the southern areas, he says.

"Hoffa was also troubleshooter for the teamsters when there were contract troubles in New Jersey, New York, and the New England area.

"Hoffa is likely to show up almost any place in the country from Florida to North Dakota to show local teamsters' union officials how to deal effectively with employers. Hoffa says he acts only on general directions from Beck.

"'Beck knows how to delegate authority,' Hoffa explains. 'That is what I like about Dave. He is a good administrator. He gives you a job to do and lets you do it.'

"Hoffa's personal fortunes have swelled as he has climbed to a position of dominance in the teamsters' union, but he won't say how much.

"'I won't tell the Internal Revenue Service, so I'd be a damned fool to tell you,' Hoffa commented.

"The records brought out in various Congressional committees show his outside business investments include oil leases, a farm, a brewery, a small interest in a race track, and a share of a girls' camp at Eagle River, Wis.

"In addition, his wife owns a truck-leasing firm that hires no members of the teamsters' union but merely leases the equipment to a firm that hires teamsters' union members.

"The last time he went on record before a Congressional committee, Hoffa was drawing a salary of $21,000 from local 299 of the teamsters' union in Detroit and from the international union. In addition, he had an unlimited expense account on the million-dollar treasury of the Detroit local.

"Hoffa was born on St. Valentine's Day in 1913 in Brazil, Ind. He is of Dutch and Irish extraction. When he was 4, his father died, and his mother was left to support 4 small children. He was next to the youngest.

"They moved to Clinton, Ind., and when he was 9 the family moved to Detroit and his mother went to work in a factory.

"Family financial problems forced Hoffa to drop out of school at 14 and go to work. He had just finished the eighth grade, but work wasn't new to him. He had worked in a grocery store, sold newspapers and peddled bills.

"He was working in a warehouse for the Kroger Co. in Detroit at 16 when he started working as a labor organizer. His success in the rough and tough struggle to organize an independent union gave Hoffa his first boost. In 1932, when he was only 19, he took his independent union into the International Teamsters. He's been there ever since.

"Hoffa works 12 to 16 hours a day on a 6- or 7-day week on affairs of the Teamsters International. He's home only about 2 days a week as he keeps up close contact with local teamsters from Baltimore, Md., to Bismarck, N. Dak.

"He neither smokes nor drinks, and he exercises to keep in shape by swinging an ax in the woods of northern Michigan. Six weeks a year he vacations—2 weeks in Canada, 2 weeks at Iron River, Mich., and 2 weeks in Florida."

"Expense Account Unlimited—Hoffa Gains Power in Michigan Politics

"(By Clark Mollenhoff)

"WASHINGTON.—Backed by the million-dollar treasury of local 299 of the teamsters union in Detroit, Mich., James R. (Jimmy) Hoffa has become a power in Michigan politics.

"The 42-year-old chairman of the Central States Conference of Teamsters calls himself a political independent. The labels of Republican and Democrat mean nothing to him. He backs the people he thinks will be best for Hoffa and Hoffa's boys.

"In 1952, Hoffa threw his support to the late Senator Blair Moody, one of the most liberal Democrats in the Senate.

"In 1954, Hoffa was lined up with Senator Homer Ferguson, a Republican with a conservative voting record.

"In supporting Ferguson, Hoffa passed over the Democratic candidate who had been selected out of labor's ranks. Senator PATRICK MCNAMARA, a former A. F. of L. labor leader, defeated Ferguson despite the fact that Hoffa accompanied Ferguson to numerous meetings, and introduced the Republican as the man he wanted to win.

"Hoffa's record of losing with Moody in 1952 and losing with Ferguson in 1954 would not appear to indicate any strength at the polls. However, every time an election comes around, Hoffa gets the local union to pass a motion to allow him to spend whatever moneys he thinks necessary in the forthcoming local's elections.

"He pours this money into the campaign funds of persons seeking election as judges in Michigan. He knows the value of a friendly judiciary, from experience with judges who were not necessarily sympathetic to his pleas.

"Hoffa avoids putting any of the money from the union treasury in the campaign funds of candidates for the United States Senate or for the House of Representatives.

"However, Hoffa knows how to raise a political action fund in a hurry. In 1952, Moody needed money and Hoffa ordered his business agents to turn up $100 personal contributions. A fund totaling several thousand dollars was raised in a few days.

"Hoffa and his organization also distributed campaign literature for Moody. One of Moody's associates explained that placards and other printed material were given to the teamsters union; and that within a day truckdrivers had blanketed the State with signs.

"Ferguson accepted Hoffa's support and personal endorsement in 1954 despite the fact that two committees of the House had written scorching reports on Hoffa and his top aid, Owen Bert Brennan.

" 'Hoffa is a dominant figure in the teamsters union and virtually a dictator in certain areas, despite the fact that he has been found guilty and convicted of violation of the Michigan State labor law and the Federal antitrust laws,' commented the joint subcommittee of the home labor and government operations committees.

"The report labeled Hoffa as 'the brains between this shakedown (in the jukebox industry) and power grab by (William) Bufalino.'

" 'Bufalino could not have succeeded in gaining monopolistic control of the coin-vending business in Detroit without the cognizance and approval of Hoffa,' the report said.

"Another House subcommittee report criticized Hoffa's handling of the health and welfare funds of the central States teamsters' conference, and his wife's business connections with persons employing members of the teamsters union.

"Hoffa has a reputation for never asking a candidate for anything.

" 'All Jimmy wants is to be left alone,' commented one man who was closely associated with the Moody campaign in 1952.

" 'We are getting along O. K.,' Hoffa explains. 'We don't need any help.'

"Congressional investigators found that on the union income-tax returns for 1948, Hoffa had listed 'State political contributions in the amount of $15,487.50.' In 1950, the 'State political contributions' had totaled $13,410.30.

"Hoffa also told the subcommittee that the union had sponsored television shows 'for the best interests of trucking concerns and our members, and we used a couple of those shows to introduce some judges that were running for office.'

"But, when the Congressional investigators sought to learn how Hoffa used money allocated to 'State political contributions,' Hoffa said he couldn't remember any details. He also told the subcommittee that it would be impossible to produce records since he had approved a policy under which the union destroyed its records each year.

"All that was left for Congressional investigators to examine were the worksheets from which the Federal income-tax returns were prepared.

"Chief Counsel William McKenna read Hoffa the Treasury Department Decision 5381 which states:

" 'The books of record required by this section shall be kept at all times available for inspection by internal-revenue officers and shall be retained so long as the contents thereof may become material in the ministration of the internal-revenue law."

" 'Have you had any advice from the Bureau of Internal Revenue that the contents of those books are not material in the administration of the internal revenue law?' McKenna asked.

" 'I have not consulted with internal revenue,' Hoffa answered. 'Neither have they talked to me. I don't know if they have talked to our lawyers or not.'

"Hoffa told the subcommittee that local 299 of the teamsters has a million-dollar treasury, and that it has been the practice of the members to vote unanimously to let him use whatever funds he feels are necessary for organizational work, for expenses, or for politics.

"So far, Hoffa's political influence has been confined to his home State of Michigan even though his influence in the teamsters union extends from the Rocky Mountains to the Atlantic Ocean."

"WIFE PUT ON UNION PAYROLL—HOFFA $1,000 NETS 200 PERCENT AND CLAIM ON GOLDEN ERA

"(By Clark Mollenhoff)

"WASHINGTON.—The wife of James R. (Jimmy) Hoffa was on the payroll of the racket-ridden jukebox local of the Detroit teamsters union at $100 a week, but she never went near the office.

"The payment of $3,000 to the wife of the Detroit teamster boss was represented as being repayment of a loan from Hoffa with 200 percent interest.

"Eugene C. (Jimmy) James, former head of jukebox union 985, testified the payments were made to Mrs. Hoffa because union rules would have prevented Hoffa from drawing money from the local while he was drawing a salary as the top official of Teamsters Union 299 in Detroit.

"James told a one-man grand jury in Detroit that Hoffa, an international vice president of the teamsters, and Owen Bert Brennan, Hoffa's top aid, had each loaned him $1,000 to start the jukebox union.

"To repay the $2,000, the wives of Hoffa and Brennan were put on the payroll of the jukebox union at $100 a week each. By the time a one-man grand jury started its operations in 1946, a total of $6,000 had been paid to Mrs. Hoffa and Mrs. Brennan.

"Judge George B. Murphy, who was sitting as the one-man grand jury, pointed out that repayment of $6,000 on a $2,000 loan was a repayment by 800 percent.

" 'That was quite a difference; about $4,000. Did you consider that interest on the loan?' Judge Murphy asked James.

" 'Yes,' James answered, and the judge continued:

" 'Or was it a payoff to them?'

" 'It was no payoff, judge,' James answered. 'I gave it to them out of the graciousness of my heart.'

" 'But the money belonged to the union,' Judge Murphy commented.

" 'The union gave me the right to spend it.'

" 'The county gives me $100,000 to spend on this grand jury,' Judge Murphy replied. 'But, out of the graciousness of my heart I can't be throwing the money around.'

" 'I didn't figure I wasted the money,' James said. 'I figured it was well spent.'

" 'Why do you figure the money is well spent?' Murphy asked.

" 'Because they (Hoffa and Brennan) are big men, they could help me a lot.'

" 'Did they ever help you?' the judge asked.

" 'No, I never had to call on them. Just luck enough I never needed them,' James said.

"Not long after the grand jury investigation, James left Detroit for Chicago. He continued to receive a salary from the Detroit jukebox union for several years, but his major interest switched to the health and welfare funds of the laundry workers.

"Within the last 6 months, a Senate labor subcommittee has charged that James and a New Jersey insurance broker embezzled approximately $1 million from the Laundry Workers International health and welfare funds.

"Back in 1951, the Kefauver crime committee reported 'evidence of strong-arm methods in the jukebox distributing business in Chicago, Kansas City, Mo., and Detroit.'

"That subcommittee said it was 'the more refined method of shakedown and extortion' that was found in Detroit.

" 'Here a union was used as a front by underworld characters to extort money from jukebox distributors,' it said. 'These distributors were forced to join the union as "honorary members" and pay initiation fees and dues or risk having lines thrown around their locations.'

"In 1953 Phillip Berman, a jukebox serviceman, told the labor subcommittee that he was forced out of business as a jukebox operator.

"Acid was poured in his jukeboxes after he testified before the Kefauver crime committee, Berman told the House committee.

"When James went to Chicago, William E. Bufalino became president and principal operating official of union 985.

"Picket lines, bombing threats and acid plagued those who tried to operate machines that did not carry the union label of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen, and Helpers of America.

"Bufalino and six associates were indicted in Wayne County, Mich., on a 7-count indictment charging conspiracy to extort money from jukebox operators and to use terrorism and teamster pickets as a weapon.

"A House labor racket investigating subcommittee charged that Bufalino was the 'principal offender and perpetrator of racketeering extortion and gangsterism' which involved the jukebox union.

" 'Bufalino and the executive board of union 985 conspired and confederated to obtain this monopoly and used the union, not to advance the interest of labor, nor to protect labor in genuine labor disputes, but the interest of a favored few jukebox owners and operators at the expense of other owners and union members,' the House report stated.

"It stated that Bufalino's brother-in-law, Vincent A. Meli, headed Melton Music Co.—a jukebox distributor whom witnesses testified received favored treatment.

"Union members were forced out of the union by Bufalino, business places were bombed, and union dues of $20 a month per member were characterized as a tribute because the union did nothing for the members, the report said.

"The House report stated that 'Hoffa is a dominant figure in the teamsters union and virtually a dictator' in the Detroit area through his position as president of Teamsters Union 299, president of the teamsters joint council 43, and president of the Michigan conference of teamsters.

"Hoffa 'has been described as the brains between this shakedown and power grab by Bufalino and his Teamsters Union 985,' the report said.

"In any event, Bufalino could not have succeeded in gaining monopolistic control of the coin-vending business in Detroit without the cognizance and approval of Hoffa.

"Hoffa's faith in Bufalino and the State courts were rewarded when Bufalino was acquitted. Several of Bufalino's associates had entered pleas of guilty and were fined.

"General President Dave Beck, of the International Teamsters Union, contends that the teamsters have jurisdiction over jukeboxes because these machines are hauled on trucks. He states it is ridiculous for electrical workers to claim jurisdiction just because a little plug is put in the wall to operate the machine.

"When Hoffa appeared before a House subcommittee the jukebox union had between 400 and 450 members with dues running $20 a month per man.

"It was admitted that more than $6,000 a month flowed into the union treasury from dues, but the subcommittee was never able to determine how this money was spent.

"Under authority from Hoffa as president of Teamsters Joint Council 43, Bufalino's jukebox union was destroying its records every year 'to conserve space.'

"In the era of automation that is dawning, the jukebox local has great potential for expansion. In the Detroit area, the wash racks and service station organization has been claimed for this union in addition to any automats or other coin-operated machines.

"When Jimmy Hoffa made a $1,000 investment in the jukebox local he proved he is a labor leader with a good deal of foresight in claiming teamster jurisdiction in the field of coin-operated devices."

"OWNERSHIP CAMOUFLAGES—UNION DRIVERS LOSE PAY, JOBS TO MRS. HOFFA'S FIRM

"(By Clark Mollenhoff)

"WASHINGTON.—Members of the teamsters union lost part of their income when a Detroit trucking firm set up a truck-leasing corporation for the wife of Detroit teamster union boss James R. (Jimmy) Hoffa.

"Teamster union members who previously had leased their equipment to Commercial Carrier, Inc., saw their business handled by the new firm of Test Fleet, Inc. They also saw their personal income cut as much as $1,500 to $2,000 a year.

"Meanwhile, Mrs. Hoffa and the wife of another Detroit teamster official drew $65,000 from Test Fleet, Inc., in a 4-year period.

"Teamster union members in Detroit didn't know that the wives of two teamster officials were receiving the earnings of Test Fleet until a House labor subcommittee went into Detroit late in 1953.

"Ownership of the Test Fleet was well camouflaged. The firm was set up for Mrs. Hoffa and the wife of Owen Bert Brennan, Hoffa's top aid in Detroit. However, the maiden names of Mrs. Hoffa and Mrs. Brennan—Josephine Poszywak and Alice Johnson—were used on the record.

"Even these names did not appear when the firm was incorporated in Tennessee by attorney James W. Wrape of Memphis. Wrape and some of his office employees were listed as officers.

"Neither Mrs. Hoffa nor Mrs. Brennan took any part in setting up the corporation, or in running it, according to a House subcommittee report.

"Test Fleet came into being in 1949 when B. B. Beveridge, one of the owners of Commercial Carriers, called Elliot R. Beidler, vice president of Commercial Carriers, and said:

"'I am going to put some friends of mine in business and I want you to handle the account.'

"The friends turned out to be Mrs. Hoffa and Mrs. Brennan, wives of the teamsters officials who negotiated union contracts with Beidler.

"Beidler and Wrape handled the details. The $4,000 invested by Mrs. Hoffa and Mrs. Brennan wasn't enough to finance payment on the 10 tractors that Commercial Carriers had purchased for Test Fleet.

"Commercial Carriers carried the additional $5,000 on an open account for a month until Test Fleet had made enough from Commercial Carriers to pay it off.

"Test Fleet had no employees, and Beidler ran it for Mrs. Hoffa and Mrs. Brennan along with his duties as a vice president of Commercial Carriers.

"Periodically, Mrs. Hoffa or Mrs. Brennan would call and ask to have a dividend declared. On at least one occasion no dividend amount was stated and it was suggested that the dividend be as much as the corporation could stand out of its earnings.

"In that 4-year period the net earnings were $145,800 which went to pay for the equipment and the $65,000 in dividends.

"Two of the teamster union members who lost part of their income appeared before a House subcommittee to testify how the organization of Test Fleet had hurt them.

"Paul L. Smith, a veteran Flint, Mich., truckdriver with a long accident-free record, said his income was cut from $6,000 a year to about $4,500. Smith had his own equipment and was able to supplement his regular drivers pay before Test Fleet came into existence.

"Harold Herbert Cross, Flint, Mich, was another truckdriver who lost part of his income when Test Fleet was organized.

"Smith and Cross were among drivers who became involved in contract difficulties with Commercial Carriers, and struck contrary to the wishes of teamster chief Hoffa, the House report said.

"When the strike was over, Cross and Smith were blackballed by the teamsters union.

"'He (Cross) lost his equipment because he could not meet the payments, was forced to sell his house, and now finds the work he once did for Commercial Carriers is being done by the Hoffa-Brennan Test Fleet Corp.,' the House subcommittee officially reported.

"After he lost his equipment, Cross was once more permitted to go to work—this time as a driver at a sharply cut income.

"The report of the House Labor Subcommittee stated that Frank Fitzsimmons, another Detroit teamster official, under Hoffa's jurisdiction, became a dominant partner and later gained full control of a film-delivery business originally owned by a man with whom the union had recurring labor troubles.

"Howard C. Craven, Ann Arbor, Mich., was operating a film-delivery and paper-delivery business that brought in about $30,000 to $40,000 a year gross. It was a prosperous business until teamsters union members started striking. Teamster boss Fitzsimmons said he didn't know why.

"As a result of these strikes, a teamsters union steward in Fitzsimmons' union started taking over Craven's paper-hauling operations, Craven testified.

"As Craven's income diminished, he was approached by Fitzsimmons who suggested he could get Craven a contract for exclusive rights of hauling the paper in Detroit and suburbs, and all revenue.

"'He [Fitzsimmons] was to collect 90 percent of the revenue,' Craven testified.

"Craven testified he thought this was a good contract for increasing his business, but that he was forced to pay $9,000 to Fitzsimmons in the first year in checks made out to cash.

"Not satisfied with the $9,000, Fitzsimmons called him down to the teamsters union offices with the books to make sure he was getting his share, and had insisted that Craven produce another $600 to pay the income tax on the $9,000.

"The elderly truckline operator said the payments to Fitzsimmons made him go broke, and he took a job as a school janitor at $50 a week.

"House subcommittee investigators said a similar story was related by Gustave E. Leveque who sold his film trucking service firms. His firms were swallowed by a combined firm in which Mrs. Hoffa showed up as one of the directors under the name of Josephine Poszywak.

"Hoffa says he would never own a trucking firm that hired members of the teamsters union, because this would be against his principles as a union official.

"However, he has allowed his wife to keep her interest in the lucrative Test Fleet Corp. He justifies this arrangement on grounds that it is his wife's business enterprise, that he has no connection with it, and because Test Fleet hires no employees.

"'If Test Fleet hired union members I might make her drop it, but it is just an equipment leasing firm that happens to lease to a trucking firm,' Hoffa explains.

"'It is just an investment,' Hoffa declares. 'There is nothing wrong with legitimate investments. She has nothing to do with the operations.'

"The House Labor Subcommittee commented that 'we seriously question the ethics of the various business arrangements which we recount here.'

"'It should be pointed out that your subcommittee does not deny the free right of any American to engage in the business or profession of his choice,' the House report states.

"'However, we deny the right of anyone to take improper or unfair or unlawful advantage of anyone else. It is in this context that we raise the issue we do now.

"'Congress has decreed that employees may be represented by unions in dealing with their employers. The facts of business and economic life are such that through unions, employees enjoy considerable power and can bargain with an authority they could never have as individuals. Congress intended that this be so.'

"The report stated that if an employer, for good and proper reason, seeks to resist the demands of a union, the law does not prohibit him from doing so.

"'But suppose the same union, or its officers, operates a competitor business,' the report said. 'The employer may well have no choice but to yield to the union's demands. This is obviously not the type of collective bargaining which Federal statutes should compel. It is not the type of collective bargaining that Congress should condone. Yet implicit in this hearing record is the suggestion that such bargaining may soon be commonplace.'"

"CONSPIRACY LEADS TO $1,000 FINE—HOFFA BACKS LAWBREAKING AID

"(By Clark Mollenhoff)

"WASHINGTON.—Two convictions of labor law violations have made James R. (Jimmy) Hoffa tolerant of minor officials of the teamsters union who run afoul of the law.

"Hoffa blames his own arrests on 'anti-union police' and regards his convictions on Federal and State labor law violations as purely 'technical.'

"The case of Gerald P. Connelly, Minneapolis, is an indication that Hoffa will have a big voice in determining whether persons indicted and convicted of labor racketeering will continue to be influential in the teamsters.

"Connelly entered a plea of guilty to violation of the Taft-Hartley law by accepting money from an employer and was ousted from Teamsters Union 548 in Minneapolis.

"However, a three-man committee including Hoffa, Einar Mohn, Washington, 10th vice president, and John T. O'Brien, Chicago, 4th vice president, recommended that Connelly be reinstated in local 548.

"Hoffa said he considered Connelly's law violation to be 'technical,' and that he wouldn't let Connelly down because it reminded him of his own 'technical' convictions.

"It was back in November 1940 that the first so-called 'technical' indictment was returned against Hoffa in the Federal District Court for the Eastern District of Michigan.

"Hoffa, his chief aid, Owen Bert Brennan, Teamsters Union 337, and four wastepaper concerns were indicted on charges of having 'knowingly engaged in a combination and conspiracy unreasonably to prevent' other firms from selling wastepaper for shipment from Detroit to other States and to Canada.

"The indictment set out that the union followed the trucks of other firms, picketed railroads that hauled the wastepaper handled by other firms, and that a bomb was thrown into the home of Charles Ginns, a wholesaler of wastepaper.

"Hoffa admitted that he entered a plea of nolo contendere to the charge, paid a $1,000 fine, and had a permanent injunction against continuation of this activity in the wastepaper industry.

"Hoffa told a House subcommittee that his plea of nolo contendere amounted to admission of the facts, but that it was not the same as a guilty plea, because he contended he felt the things that were done were legal.

"Samuel L. Travis, a former special assistant to the attorney general of Michigan, explained the incident to a House labor-racket investigating subcommittee in 1947.

"He said that the teamsters union was only in its swaddling clothes in Detroit at that time, but that it was extremely powerful even then.

"At that time, they (Brennan and Hoffa) joined together with a group of wastepaper wholesalers to create a monopoly in Detroit of the wastepaper industry.

"No one but employees of the four concerns involved were permitted into union membership. The employees of the companies on the outside were not permitted to join the union, and then because of the fact that these companies were so-called nonunion companies and their employees were not members, they were not permitted to do business.

"Hoffa's second technical conviction arose out of efforts of the teamsters union to organize more than 6,000 independent grocers and meat dealers in Detroit in 1945.

"Hoffa and 17 associates were indicted for violation of the State labor laws. Hoffa entered a plea of nolo contendere and paid a $500 fine.

"The Detroit teamster boss explained that the charge was reduced from a felony to a misdemeanor. He said he entered a plea on the advice of his attorneys, and on the theory 'You don't go to court for a $25 fine.'

" 'When they reduced it to a misdemeanor, I entered a plea. A lot of big corporations do it. There is no sense in spending a lot of union money fighting under the circumstances even if you might win if you took it all the way to the Supreme Court.

" 'I would have fought that one, but there were so many involved that we decided it would cause less stink and cost a lot less money if we just entered a plea.'

"Hoffa said a plea of nolo contendere 'is nothing against a man,' 'Even General Motors has pleaded nolo,' he said.

"Circuit Judge George B. Murphy, of Michigan, wasn't so charitable about Hoffa's activity when he appeared before a House labor racket investigating subcommittee in 1947 to relate the story of the organizing of the so-called mamma-and-papa shops.

"Judge Murphy sat as a one-man grand jury to investigate the pattern used by Hoffa's union in organizing these independent grocers and meat dealers.

"He explained that Hoffa, as president of the Teamsters Joint Council 43, and Owen Bert Brennan, president of Teamsters Local 299, were the key figures in the organization drive.

" 'Prior to that the teamsters union successfully unionized the packers and wholesale meat dealers and distributors,' Judge Murphy testified. 'An attempt was made to sew up the food industry in Detroit.

" 'It was contended that more jobs ought to be created for returning soldiers, and more trucks should be put on the road, and that no one should be permitted to pick up his meat (from the wholesaler) unless and until he joined the teamsters union or bought a permit which would cost $5 and be good for 30 days.'

"Murphy said that many of the small groceries operated by a husband and wife had made it a practice of picking up their meat in a truck or car.

"However, pamphlets were passed out by the teamsters union that no meat was to be delivered by wholesalers of the packinghouse unless the teamsters union permit was presented.

"A great many paid the $5 a month for a permit under protest prior to the time that the grand jury started operating.

"Murphy said the union contended that it was creating more jobs, and that it wanted the meat hauled in sanitary trucks as a health measure.

" 'However, when some fellow had a broken-down Ford, or even a passenger car, he was permitted to take the meat in that truck regardless of whether it was sanitary or otherwise, provided he had paid the $5 for a permit.' Murphy said.

"In all, from 300 to 400 witnesses were called before the grand jury before indictments were handed down charging Hoffa, Brennan, and their associates with extortion of the $5 on permits, and for attempting to force employers to join a union against their will, Judge Murphy said.

"Hoffa said that those indictments were dismissed, and he entered his plea of guilty to a charge of violating the State labor law by improper organizing activity.

"Hoffa said his local union paid his $500 fine 'with full and complete acceptance of the membership.' Under court order the union also refunded $7,617 collected illegally from the mamma-and-papa stores in permit payments."

"YOU SHOULDA SEEN OTHER GUYS—BLACK EYE IN STREET FIGHT CAUSES HOFFA TO BOAST

"(By Clark Mollenhoff)

"WASHINGTON.—Two carloads of police broke up a brawl on the streets of Charlotte, N. C., September 3, and James R. (Jimmy) Hoffa was charged with being engaged in an affray.

"The 42-year-old chairman of the Central States Conference of Teamsters was 1 of 7 persons arrested.

"The fist fighting broke out in a longstanding dispute between members of local 71 of the teamsters union and officials of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen, and Helpers of America.

" 'Our men didn't like the way the contract was rammed down our throats,' said Sam Ewing, a steward in the local union.

"However, Hoffa, Thomas E. Flynn, Bethesda, Md., and Richard Kavner, St. Louis, Mo., regarded the contract as in line with the pattern the international union seeks.

"Although Hoffa got the contract approved on a 590 to 40 vote on a head-count procedure, this did not end the criticism. Fighting broke out as Hoffa and local union members bickered outside the Fox theater.

"A crowd of several hundred gathered to watch before two carloads of police arrested Hoffa, Flynn, Kavner, and four local truckdrivers.

"Hoffa, Flynn, and Kavner posted $50 bond each and were released. City Prosecutor James E. Walker stated that they did not appear for the September 20 trial, and forfeited the cash bond. The four truckdrivers were found guilty and paid $13 court costs each.

"The operation in North Carolina was merely one of a number of cases where Hoffa has been active on the east coast. He's been in New York, New England, and Maryland, bringing his talents to contract negotiations.

"Hoffa, as chairman of the Central States Conference of Teamsters, rules a 13-State region.

"In addition, Hoffa says that teamsters General President Dave Beck has given him supervisory authority over the 9-State Southern Conference of Teamsters which include Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Louisiana, Tennessee, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, and Florida.

"When an investigator for a Congressional committee kidded Hoffa about the black eye he received in the fight at Charlotte, Hoffa quipped:

" 'I took care of myself okay. You should have seen the other guys—two of them went to the hospital.'

"Police said one of the truckers injured his arm quite badly, and one suffered a bloody nose, but that they had taken none to the hospital.

"Hoffa was proud that he had taken care of himself with his fists, but he says he is opposed to using such physical force in settling disputes with other labor officials or with employers.

"He blames 'antiunion police' for the numerous arrests in connection with assault, and points out that he has only one conviction for assault and battery.

"Detroit police department file No. 59,527 shows that Hoffa was arrested for investigation of assault charges three times before his first conviction on February 4, 1938. Hoffa paid a $10 fine on the assault and battery charge.

"On March 30, 1938, he was arrested on a charge of disturbing the peace but it was dismissed in April 1938.

"In June 1938, a special investigation squad arrested Hoffa but he was discharged the same day.

"On February 16, 1939, Hoffa was arrested on a charge of molesting and disturbing workmen at work, but 11 days later this charge was dismissed.

"Hoffa was arrested November 2, 1939, on a charge of molesting a truck driver, but was discharged immediately.

"On February 10, 1940, Hoffa was arrested in the investigation of a shooting, but he was discharged on a writ of habeas corpus February 13, 1940.

"In 1942, Hoffa entered a plea of nolo contendere to a charge of violating the Federal antitrust laws, paid a $1,000 fine, and was put under a permanent injunction.

"The indictment and injunction involved the teamsters union agreements with four wastepaper firms which it was contended created a monopoly.

"In 1947, Hoffa and 17 associates were indicted on charges of violating the labor laws of Michigan by extorting $5 fees for permits for grocery and meat dealers to use to pick up meat at various packing houses and wholesale establishments.

"Again Hoffa entered a plea of nolo contendere, when the charge was reduced to a misdemeanor, and paid a $500 fine.

"The troubles between local 71 and the International Teamsters Union had started about a year ago when an election in the local upset the previous leadership. Bud Jenkins defeated A. L. Gunter for president.

"The international union removed Jenkins, put the local union in trusteeship, and named Gunter a district trustee with headquarters in Charlotte. Many local union members considered this to be a high-handed action by the international union.

"Hoffa went to Charlotte in September to work out details of contracts with employers. The negotiations had taken about 5 weeks, and local union members contended that they were not apprised of contents of the contract until time for a vote.

"Union Steward Ewing complained that Hoffa and others 'approved the contract without knowing anything about working conditions here.'

"He also declared that, although the membership heard rumors about the contract provisions, it wasn't until the day of the altercation that they learned the details. It was read to them.

"Instead of the locals' usual secret ballot, Hoffa, Flynn, and Kavner took a public head count.

"In general, the local drivers complained that a one-half cent per mile increase annually for the next 3 years was nullified by contract provisions increasing the layover time from 12 to 13 hours for over-the-road drivers.

"Under the previous contract, the employer had to start paying the driver after a 12-hour layover even if he wasn't driving.

"The contract negotiated by Hoffa provided increases of 35 cents an hour for dock workers and warehousemen and pickup and delivery drivers with a minimum of 45 hours a week.

"This brought the pickup and delivery drivers pay to $1.68 an hour, and the weekly minimum to $75.60. The pay of dock workers and warehousemen was boosted to $1.53 an hour with $68.85 weekly minimum.

"International headquarters of the teamsters' union said the altercation was a result of a misunderstanding. Some members of local 71 hadn't understood the contract Hoffa had negotiated for them, it was explained."

"Hoffa's Friends Draw Millions From Union Insurance Fund Deals

"(By Clark Mollenhoff)

"Washington.—Teamsters' union insurance premiums of more than $9 million were paid a year ago to an insurance firm operated by friends of James R. (Jimmy) Hoffa, chairman of the Central States Conference of Teamsters.

"The teamsters' union official admits that he used his influence to throw the health and welfare insurance for a 22-State area to an insurance firm operated by the wife and son of a Chicago labor leader, Paul (Red) Dorfman.

"'I think it was the best insurance we could get,' Hoffa said. 'I still think so. Our insurance fund is clean—one of the best in the country. None of these investigations has been able to show that one dime is missing.'

"Two Congressional inquiries have been made into the teamsters' health and welfare insurance fund paid to Union Casualty & Life Insurance Co., of Mount Vernon, N. Y.

"Some of the employer trustees objected to having the insurance placed with Union Casualty & Life, headed by Dr. Leo Perlman, executive vice president.

"However, Hoffa convinced employer representatives the insurance program should be placed with Union Casualty in 1949, and he's kept it there in the face of Congressional investigations and criticisms.

"In 1953, a House labor subcommittee brought out the fact that Allen Dorfman, then 30, and his mother, Rose Dorfman, had cleaned up more than a million dollars in commissions in the period from 1949 through June 1953.

"Investigators testified that $101,000 was missing from the Dorfman insurance agency. Allen Dorfman declined to testify on this missing $101,000 on grounds that he might incriminate himself. Hoffa testified he received none of the missing money.

"At present, a Senate labor investigating subcommittee headed by Senator Douglas, Democrat, of Illinois, is taking another look at the operations.

"There has been no criticism of theft or loss of money from the funds while held by the trustees.

"However, there has been considerable criticism of the huge commissions that have flowed to Hoffa's friends. The hearings also pointed out that Hoffa has been engaged in lucrative joint business enterprises with friends who received these huge commissions.

"Hoffa's friends—Mrs. Dorfman, Allen Dorfman, and Perlman—have drawn millions in profits from the Union insurance agency in Illinois operated by the Dorfmans, and from Union Casualty & Life.

"At the same time, Hoffa has entered into joint business operations with the Dorfmans and Perlman, including oil leases in North Dakota and Jack-o'-Lantern Lodge, a camp near Eagle River, Wis.

"Hoffa testified his partners in the Jack-o-Lantern Lodge were Allen Dorfman, Rose Dorfman, Owen Bert Brennan, and Phil Goodman, a Chicago lawyer. Brennan is another Detroit teamsters' union official and is regarded as Hoffa's top aid in the union.

"Hoffa says he is in a partnership with Brennan, Allen Dorfman, Mrs. Dorfman, and Perlman in Northwestern Oil Co., Bismarck, N. Dak. According to Hoffa, each of the partners put up $10,000 for that venture in oil leasing.

"The 42-year-old vice president of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen, and Helpers of America says he finds no conflict of interest in using his influence to place insurance with his business associates and friends.

"'I've got a right to make legitimate investments,' Hoffa declares. 'I've got a right to have these people for my friends. Paul Dorfman was my friend years before this insurance deal came up.'

"To this date Hoffa has received no criticism from the teamsters general president, Dave Beck, a fellow whose own private investments have made him a millionaire.

"Hoffa points to this lack of criticism from Beck as a sort of endorsement for the way the teamster health and welfare funds are being handled.

"Hoffa has been a key figure in bringing together the central State conference of teamsters welfare fund with the States of the southern conference of teamsters and steering them to Union Casualty.

"The Michigan conference of teamsters operates from a separate fund, but the insurance is placed with the same company.

"Under the contract signed for the over-the-road drivers for the period from February 1, 1956, to January 31, 1961, employers must contribute $2.25 a week for each employee. A pension plan has been added in the contract calling for an additional $2 a week contribution for each employee.

"Under the Taft-Hartley labor law, these multi-million-dollar funds are jointly administered by an equal number of representatives of labor and of management.

"Congressional committees have stated that in practice, the management trustees often disregard their responsibility and try to curry favor with the labor union officials who are trustees.

"Hoffa has been a long-time friend of Red Dorfman, head of local 20467 of the AFL Waste Material Handlers Union in Chicago.

"Perlman, as operating head of Union Casualty & Life, cultivated labor leaders such as Hoffa, Brennan, Dorfman, and Frank Darling, head of local 1031 of the Brotherhood of Electrical Workers in Chicago.

"A House committee investigative report states that the direct premium payments to Perlman's firm jumped from $1,460,000 in 1948, to $8,900,000 in 1952. Nearly 77 percent of the 1952 premiums came from the teamsters' union and Darling's electrical workers.

"In the last year, the total premium payments to Perlman's firm have soared to more than $11 million. More than $9 million of this comes from the huge 22-State teamsters bloc dominated by Hoffa. Another $1,500,000 comes from health and welfare insurance premiums for the 35,000 to 37,000 members in Darling's Electrical Workers Union.

"Hoffa contends that the contract with Perlman has been mutually beneficial, since it has enabled the Michigan conference of teamsters to buy a $250,000 bloc of preferred stock in Union Casualty & Life.

"This made the Michigan teamsters the largest holder of preferred stock. With the payment of $40 a share—another $250,000—this stock can be converted to common stock with voting privileges on an option that must be exercised before January 1, 1956.

"Congressional investigators have pointed to the problem involved if union ownership in an insurance company is such that union officials have an interest in curbing the claim rate of members of other unions insured by the company."

"Fear of Reprisals Cited—Hoffa Nearly Wrecks Career of Truck Official

"(By Clark Mollenhoff)

"Washington.—A number of disputes with James R. (Jimmy) Hoffa have nearly wrecked the career of a Des Moines man as a representative of the trucking industry.

"Willis J. McCarthy, an attorney who represented the Midwest Operators Association, told Congressional investigators that when he disagreed with Central States teamsters chief Hoffa, his clients were harassed with labor grievances.

"One employer had as many as 60 grievances filed against him in 1 month, with only a few of the grievances justified, McCarthy said.

"McCarthy said Hoffa had forced a Des Moines transportation firm to rehire 8 truck-drivers, 5 of whom admitted that they had made illegal charges for second-story deliveries and were pocketing the money.

"Hoffa boasted he would break McCarthy's clients, laughed at him for his futility in fighting the teamsters, and after having defeated McCarthy called him to chide him, McCarthy testified.

"McCarthy was one of the employer representatives in 1949 when Hoffa prevailed upon the trustees to place the multimillion-dollar health and welfare insurance policy with Union Casualty and Life, Mount Vernon, N. Y., bringing big commissions to Hoffa's friends.

"McCarthy said the employee representatives gave in to avoid 'reprisals (by the teamsters) against their companies.'

"As an example, McCarthy testified that when contract negotiations broke down in a local cartage driver's contract in Kansas City, Mo., the teamsters shut down operations of the trucking concern at such distant points as Denver, Colo., Des Moines, Iowa, Omaha, Nebr., St. Paul, Minn., South Bend, Ind., and Detroit, Mich.

"'In these distant cities they had local cartage contracts that were fully in effect and an over-the-road contract that was fully in effect, and that should not be affected by anything that occurred in Kansas City,' McCarthy told Congressional investigators.

"'Did Hoffa ever tell you what would happen to your clients because you were representing them?' asked Chief Counsel William M. McKenna, of the House Labor Investigating Subcommittee.

"'Hoffa told me that I should make an effort to get along with him; and if I didn't, that grievances would be filed against the carriers, and they would be struck as a result,' McCarthy testified.

"McCarthy said that in the case of drivers making extra charges for second-story deliveries the union contended that the charges were tips and that no dishonesty was involved. Forty city drivers and 50 road drivers went on strike, and teamsters' union members in Kansas City, St. Louis, and St. Paul picketed the company.

"McCarthy said the firm was faced with 'giving up or going broke, so we gave up.'

"McCarthy related that when a committee met to settle the case there were dissenting votes.

" 'I asked the committee be polled to get the result of the vote,' McCarthy said. 'Hoffa said, "If you want the committee polled, we will shut you down, and you will stay shut down forever. Now, if you want the committee polled, that is your answer." '

"McCarthy said he asked for a recess to consult with the president of the company, and that the company president said:

" 'I can't afford another strike. If I have another strike, it will mean we are broke.'

"The eight drivers were put back and were paid somewhere between $3,000 and $4,000 back pay without requesting a poll of the committee, McCarthy said.

"McCarthy said Hoffa called him on the telephone to ask, 'Do you want to keep on fighting, or do you want to give up?'

"Months later, McCarthy was in Washington seeking further Congressional inquiry into the actions of Hoffa in the Midwest.

"However, he was a cautious man. It was obvious that trucking interests were backing McCarthy, but as he called on Congressmen and investigators he carefully avoided naming his employer. He told Congressmen that he did not want his employer revealed because of the danger of reprisals.

"Teamsters President Dave Beck has ignored the request of the New York City anticrime committee that Hoffa be kept out of New York.

"Hoffa was the subject of a scathing report by the New York anticrime committee which was presented by Chairman Spruille Braden this year.

"Hoffa was characterized as a friend and associate of several major figures in the ranks of gangsterdom, and the public was warned that the regional organization of the teamsters union will facilitate the efforts of racketeers to dominate the trucking industry in this area.

"According to Braden's report, even big, tough New York City had reason to tremble at the invasion of the dynamic little labor leader from Detroit.

" 'His (Hoffa's) activities, though well publicized, have not as yet developed in Beck any visible will to take action,' the report said.

"Hoffa's invasions of other areas have been accomplished without the handicap of such organized resistance.

"Hoffa is president of local 299 of the teamsters in Detroit, president of Joint Teamsters Council 43 in Detroit, president of the Michigan conference of teamsters, chairman of the 12-State central conference of teamsters, and is ninth vice president of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters.

"He has been trustee of a dozen local unions throughout the Midwest, and through arrangements with Beck has had some supervisory authority over the nine-State southern conference of teamsters.

"The New York anticrime committee viewed with alarm the fact that the teamsters union is stamping out the autonomy of local unions.

"The report stated that until recently the racketeers have not been too successful in getting control of the trucking industry in New York.

" 'A major barrier has been the virtual autonomy of the locals in the International Brotherhood of Teamsters,' the report said. 'The result has been that here in New York a few bona fide honest labor leaders have, through the control of their locals, been able to withstand the onslaught of the racketeers and to preserve the hard core of honest trade unionism.'

"The report stated that at the present time 'an intensive effort is being made to break down that autonomy and to gain control over the teamster locals.'

" 'Regional organizations are being used to accomplish this end,' the report said. 'The resultant centralization of control, in the opinion of experts, will facilitate the efforts of racketeers to dominate the trucking industry in any area, provided they are able to get control of the regional office of that union.'

"The report pointed out that in recent city-wide strikes in New York 'the accepted spokesman for the trucking unions was replaced by order of Hoffa.'

" 'Hoffa put in as spokesman a man who has been a lifelong associate of the worst gangster in this city. The strike was settled on terms dictated by Hoffa.'

"The report then pointed out that Hoffa was 'the same man whose activities in the field of union welfare funds was the subject of disclosures by this committee and later by Congressional committees.

" 'He, himself, is a friend of several major figures in the ranks of gangsterdom,' the report said.

"The anticrime committee said the rise of Hoffa to a position of prominence in the teamsters union was due in large measure to the backing of a few nationwide trucking firms who have purposely played into his hands.

" 'Hoffa's plans for New York City, though not publicized by him, have been uncovered by your committee's investigation,' the report stated.

" 'Any trucking firm desirous of favored treatment can easily get it by retaining one of a few select labor-relations firms and by going along with suggestions as to what insurance agencies will handle the union welfare and insurance funds.'

"The report warned that 'certain leaders in the New York City trucking industry have already been approached with this proposition.'

"The report stated that there is much indecision in the trucking industry as to whether to go along with Hoffa's plan.

" 'They are bothered by the realization that one major weapon of Hoffa's is a plan which will ultimately relegate the local trucker to a very minor status in the industry,' the report said.

"The report stated that other leaders in the trucking industry 'have decided to combine their efforts in order to fight Hoffa and his racketeering allies.'

" 'These men, unlike their colleagues, realize the truth of the statement that "you employ the racketeer on Monday—he is your partner by Wednesday—and your employer by Friday." '

"The grand juries' indictments and Congressional committees that had criticized Hoffa over the years had never hit him any harder that the New York Anticrime Committee. The crime committee continued to gather information on Hoffa's contacts with Johnny Dio, a convicted extortionist who operates a labor relations firm.

"But, as if in defiance to the anticrime group, Hoffa continued to visit New York for the teamsters union. He said it was on authority from General President Beck."

"TEAMSTER BOSS EYES BECK POST—HOFFA SYMBOL OF DEFIANCE OF CONGRESSIONAL PROBERS

"(By Clark Mollenhoff)

"WASHINGTON.—James R. (Jimmy) Hoffa stands as a symbol of the teamsters union's successful defiance of Congressional investigators in the past few years.

"This little Napoleon of the drivers union is a shrewd, fearless, and aggressive warrior in the battles to expand the jurisdiction of the teamsters, to solidify it, and to defend his allies against those who attack them.

"He appears to be in no hurry to seize the crown from General President Dave Beck. He is merely moving to make alliances that will put him in line for the top post when Beck bows out.

"Throughout the central States conference of teamsters, local teamsters officials have been under the fire of Congressional investigators and grand juries.

"Hoffa has stood his ground when he has been under fire personally in Michigan. He has consistently backed those in his area who have been scorched by Congressional committees, indicted, or convicted.

"As chairman of the central States conference of teamsters, the 42-year-old Detroit man has been the bulwark of the teamster defense against Congressional committees that have conducted investigations in Minneapolis, Minn., Kansas City and St. Louis, Mo., Chicago, Cleveland and Akron, Ohio, and Detroit, Mich.

"Lack of records and lack of access to union records hampered investigators throughout 3 years of investigation. When Hoffa was called to explain the lack of records in his Michigan area, he testified he had approved the destruction of financial records to conserve space.

"Congressional committees and grand juries have plagued his career as a labor leader almost from the outset, but Jimmy said he has learned that all these things blow over. There are no indications that Hoffa's policy has hurt him at this stage.

In July 1953, the New York Anticrime Commission was critical of Hoffa as a lifelong associate of the worst gangsters in this city, and Chairman Spruille Braden asked that President Beck keep Hoffa out of New York.

"Beck declined to move against Hoffa, and in a nationwide television show asserted that he found nothing in Hoffa's operations to criticize.

"The various teamsters union members and officials who gathered in Washington for dedication of the $5 million teamsters building certainly didn't indicate any disenchantment with Hoffa.

"Minor officials made him the center of attention with an effusive greeting.

"Although he strutted with the carriage of one who expected this as his due, he had the names of all on the tip of his tongue and a quick comment that made it apparent he remembered them.

"His table gets a constant stream of minor teamsters officials. Some want to thank him for help in cutting redtape to settle administrative problems, or problems with employers. Others want to ask him to contact the heads of large organizations to iron out difficulties that local officials have found impossible to handle with regular labor-relations representatives of the firm.

"Beck can visit the White House and walk with kings, but Jimmy Hoffa is working 14 to 16 hours a day on the contacts that make him the No. 2 power in the 1,500,000-member International Brotherhood of Teamsters.

"Hoffa has two telephones in his home in Detroit. The number of the upstairs phone is known to business agents and other officials of the teamsters union.

"Hoffa says he is available 24 hours a day to hear the problems of any of the teamsters in his 22-State area.

"Hoffa also will take up the problems of local labor leaders in New York, New Jersey, Maryland, or North Carolina. Jimmy says this activity is not an encroachment on Thomas E. Flynn, head of the eastern conference of teamsters.

"Flynn is not an international vice president of the teamsters union, and Hoffa says that Beck had authorized him to go in and settle problems in those areas.

"Hoffa has continued to branch out in the East, and make plans for further organization drives in the Middle West despite the upsetting influence of indictments in the last 2 years of top teamster officials in St. Louis, Kansas City, Detroit, Chicago, and Minneapolis.

"Hoffa and his lawyers have listened to the problems of indicted teamster officials with a sympathetic ear. They had then set about giving what they consider to be sound advice for beating the rap, or copping a plea.

"When Gerald P. Connelly, former official of local 548 in Minneapolis, copped a plea of guilty to violation of the Taft-Hartley labor law he was acting on the advice of Hoffa.

"Hoffa said he listened to the story behind the charge that Connelly had illegally accepted $300 from an employer in violation of the Taft-Hartley law.

"In Hoffa's opinion it was a technical violation but there were so many problems involved in trying to beat the case that Hoffa advised Connelly to enter a plea of guilty and was fined $500.

"Later, when an effort was made to oust Connelly as a convicted labor racketeer, Hoffa was on the three-man committee that studied the case and recommended to Beck that Connelly be reinstated.

"Hoffa is equally critical of the indictments returned against Harold Gibbons, St. Louis teamster official; Orville Ring, teamster boss in Kansas City, and William Presser, Cleveland, chairman of the Ohio conference of teamsters.

"Presser paid a $1,500 fine after pleading nolo contendere (no contest) to a charge of conspiracy to create a monopoly in the distribution of candy and tobacco products in Ohio. Neither Gibbons nor Ring was convicted.

"Connelly and Hoffa had been friends for 20 years, and Hoffa stuck with a friend while he was in trouble.

"In the teamsters union, Hoffa is regarded as a man of his word whether he says he will back you, or whether he says he will get you.

"In November 1943, Hoffa paced back and forth outside of the door of an eight-floor courtroom of the Federal Building in Detroit. A Congressional hearing was in progress that was aimed at Hoffa. A committee ruling forced Hoffa to stay on the outside.

"He was the center of attention as he moved back and forth shouting his dislikes for Chairman Wint Smith, Republican, of Kansas, and his archenemy, Representative Clare Hoffman, Republican, of Michigan, who were conducting the hearings.

"On one occasion he cursed a personal representative of Teamster President Beck, and accused Beck of instigating the Congressional inquiry to get him. The representative of Beck said there was nothing to such reports, but he carefully avoided denouncing Hoffa for making such an accusation.

"Hoffa says he likes to run a union so that any member 'can come up and tell me I'm wrong.'

"I like to be able to sit down across the table and argue things out, and when it is all over with I like to forget it," Hoffa said.

"'I've had some tough battles with employers, but I've never seen an employer yet that I couldn't get along with afterward,' Hoffa said. 'I can go out right afterward and have a cup of coffee with them and get along just as if nothing had happened.'

"Part of the reason that Jimmy can be so cheerful after a battle is that he hasn't lost many.

"What is Hoffa's secret of success?

"'You gotta use your pressure, and make sure you got everything stopped off,' Hoffa explains. 'I've turned down a lot of strikes because I knew they (the local union) weren't ready. I won't sanction a strike when I'm not sure they have everything stopped off so they'll win.'

"Hoffa says that when local officials come in with just a feeling they can win a strike, he sends them back for the facts.

"'They have to show me,' he said. 'It must be done on a scientific basis. When you put the screws on you're sure they'll have to come your way.'

"Hoffa doesn't try to give the impression that he has never had any abortive attempts to organize, but he has considered those only temporary difficulties.

"At present, Hoffa is making big plans to organize the service stations, grease racks, and parking lots all over the area from the Appalachian Mountains to the Rocky Mountains.

"Hoffa says he's made some exploratory moves in his home territory around Detroit, and has concluded that it is not yet time for the big move.

"The teamster's action in Detroit was in part successful, but some of the big service stations just closed up and went home. The big oil companies then cut gasoline prices on the outskirts of the affected area, and this drew customers enough to keep the total gallonage up, Hoffa said.

"'It proved we've got to go at this in a wider area to really make it hurt,' Hoffa said. 'They think they have us stopped, but we've been doing some planning recently that will set these big oil companies up for a big surprise.'

"Hoffa asserts that the teamsters should have a right to organize small firms in which a man runs his own business and has no employees outside of his family.

"He cites the organization of the independent juke-box owner as essential, and each of these independent juke-box operators 'is a threat to the teamsters, and to organized labor as a whole.'

"Hoffa cites the case of the unorganized musicians who might work as independent entertainers if it were not for the tight musicians union.

"'Look at the way Petrillo has things sewed up,' Hoffa says. 'There is no reason why the teamsters shouldn't have it the same way.'

"If Jimmy Hoffa has it his way, he's going to have highway transportation, and everything else in teamsters jurisdiction, sewed up as tight as the musicians union."

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, carrying on in spite of almost insurmountable handicap of being blind, a blindness caused by the enemies he sought to drive from labor, Mr. Victor Riesel, practically born into the labor movement and raised among many of its leaders, writes a syndicated column that probes deeply into the evils now being exposed by the McClellan committee. Typical of his daily efforts is the column which I ask to have printed at this point in my remarks, touching in a broad way on the New York end of the investigation now underway.

There being no objection, the column was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Inside Labor

(By Victor Riesel)

The rackets will bust inaudibly in the Senate hearing room when Counselor Bob Kennedy puts the New York show on the boards knowing that virtually all of his witnesses will be silent men slipping on and off the stand.

If anybody but the interrogators talk as Senator John McClellan conducts what he considers his most vital hearing, it will be the summer audience. For this time, the committee will face the real pros. Deadly men tell no tales about each other.

What has gone before, in the words of one committee member, is "penny ante stuff." In the other cities, looting was a sideline. In New York it is "an art"—not for art's sake—but a multimillion-dollar-a-year business which Bob Kennedy discovered took in parts of 12 national unions.

In the Big Town he found that over the past 6 or 7 years the mob moved in to increase its other income by buying and selling unions or setting them up as they would bawdy houses or speakeasies in the old days. These unions also became the outlets for deserving young hoods who had to be placed in some lucrative steady jobs to help keep the combine intact.

For almost 18 months Bob Kennedy's men had dug into the labor-crime pattern in New York. If they found one witness willing to talk from the inside, it is a secret that hasn't leaked. East is East, and this probe was tougher and grimmer than digging into the western teamsters.

There were many men who dealt with Dave Beck and Frank Brewster, head of the Western Conference of Teamsters, who were willing to talk of their business relations with those saviors of the proletariat. But in New York it soon was obvious that silence was golden and lack of it could be leaden.

Not one teamster here talked. Not one employer really opened up. Obviously they preferred to be shaken down. The mobsters did not battle each other here as they did in Portland.

Compared to the big city's big-timers, the westerners were amateurs. Kennedy's man found it easy to trace their travels, their expenditures, and their phone calls. The New Yorkers, long accustomed to underworld fashions, always used public phones, not only so they couldn't be easily tapped, but because there would be no traceable record of the numbers reached or the persons talked to that way.

Almost always the eastern crowd traveled incognito and used false registrations on airlines and in hotels. Unlike the western looters, the boys from down east seldom used checks. They dealt in cash, kept no books, and lived quiet, circumspect lives.

They trusted no one. They had a counterintelligence system which could match the Army's G–2. They tapped wires. They infiltrated other groups. They communicated daily, sometimes hourly, with each other across the network of major cities.

They knew each other's business and how much each made from the sale of labor peace or the sale of a new union charter, and what the "take" was from dues and special assessment of unions covering new territories.

They managed themselves well and were organized in a sort of shadow association, for this was a type of business. There was no central high command, and there doesn't seem to be any now. But while all seemed equal, some were more equal than others—depending on their ties to other forces and how many favors they could deliver to the others.

The man who could deliver new union charters, or order picket lines lifted, or throw one up most frequently was, therefore, the most sought after.

Bob Kennedy's men found that this combine was as much a group of labor leaders as Khrushchev's "people's republics" are free nations. Some 50 Senate investigators found that many of these unions never signed a real contract and never legitimately negotiated wages, hours, or working conditions.

Slowly the probers pieced the story together and subpenas have been going out. The final ones were delivered on July 1.

They were handed to colleagues of one Johnny Dio, accused of so many legal and ethical breaches it would serve naught but the acid bitterness of frustration to list them here. The subpenas call on the witnesses to be ready to testify in Washington on July 15.

These hearings will run until Congress adjourns. Then the committee will recess for a month. Perhaps they will be resumed in the fall. It all depends on how much of a story the racket busting committee can tell the world through its questions. There will be no answers.

There will only be a pocketful of "fifths."

Mr. GOLDWATER. While these brief remarks are recognized as not covering by any means all the men actively engaged in the reporting of union misdoings, we must recognize that none of these reporters could be successful without the cooperation of either their syndicates or the newspapers for whom they write. Among the larger newspapers of the country none has done a more outstanding job in exposing labor racketeering than the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. In 1954, the Pulitzer Publishing Co. of St. Louis produced a brochure outlining the story of this newspaper, and I am sure they will excuse me if I quote directly from the pages of this interesting booklet, which describes how this prominent midwestern newspaper led in the fight against racketeering and misconduct in the labor unions of the St. Louis area.

I ask unanimous consent that the quotation be printed at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the quotation was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Beginning also in 1951, the Post-Dispatch carried out an investigation of phases of the construction industry, in which extortion, infiltration of labor by organized crime, and improper monopolistic alliances were found. It started with a seemingly limited inquiry into exorbitant costs of emergency defense construction at Scott Air Force Base, near Belleview. In time, the results were felt across the country in the construction industry. Material for a succession of news articles that brought this about was gathered and written by Carl R. Baldwin of the paper's staff. The stories gave names, dates and amounts in cases of oppressive extortion; showed how some contractors were forced out of business, and disclosed that millions of dollars had been lost on Government construction jobs because of labor strife that appeared to serve no legitimate purpose.

The evidence was made available by the paper to any law enforcement agency that cared to use it, but there was no immediate action. The Senate Labor Committee in Washington, which may have feared political repercussions, took a look at the evidence but did nothing. Then Reporter Baldwin and Reporter Link were sent to the capital, where they explained the situation to the House Labor Committee. They turned over to that group a mass of evidence, and made the same information available to the Department of Justice and the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Meanwhile, the paper continued to publish showings of unsavory deals and evidence of unrest in the industry. As an incident of developments, a faction of the Democratic Party in St. Louis, led by labor men whose names had been linked with the rackets situation, was defeated in the 1952 primary election. In April 1953, a St. Louis Federal grand jury, making full use of the information obtained by the Post-Dispatch and further developed by the FBI, began an extensive inquiry into labor racketeering. Three months later, the grand jury returned indictments charging 15 well-known labor leaders with extortion in violation of Federal law.

When in the autumn of 1953 it appeared that the Federal investigation had bogged down, the Post-Dispatch waged a heated news, editorial, and cartoon campaign to get action. Public opinion was so aroused that the Department of Justice launched a new grand jury investigation that went far beyond the scope of the earlier one. A top specialist in this field was assigned to the work of the Department. Meanwhile, another Federal grand jury in East St. Louis—also using leads supplied by the Post-Dispatch—undertook investigation of similar rackets in southern Illinois. One of the first results there was an indictment charging two widely known labor bosses with an attempt to extort $1,030,000 from a contractor on a strike-plagued multimillion-dollar atomic energy power facility at Joppa, Ill. Another Federal grand jury inquiry into the rackets was carried out at Springfield, Ill.

By spring of 1954, 38 men were indicted in the various inquiries. Thirty-three of them were charged under a Federal antiracketeering act which carries severe penalties on conviction; the others with miscellaneous crimes. The first 3 cases tried in St. Louis resulted in conviction of 6 union business agents, who were sentenced to prison terms.

A decade earlier, the Post-Dispatch had shown that Orville Golden, an official of the hod carriers' and common laborers' union, had admitted that he and 3 associates embezzled large sums from the union. News of this was turned up by James A. Kearns, Jr., of the paper's staff and he and Reporter Link afterward found material for a series of exclusive articles on affairs of this union. Golden was sent to prison on a charge of taking more than $151,000 of the union's funds.

Racketeering practices of John P. Nick, a big boss of the St. Louis theatrical unions, were exposed by the Post-Dispatch, leading ultimately to the conviction of Nick and an associate, Clyde Weston, and their commitment to Federal prisons under 5-year sentences for violation of the Federal antiracketeering statute. The late Charles W. Marsalek handled the exposé by the paper, aided by Theodore P. Wagner and Theodore C. Link. An earlier and unsuccessful trial of Nick in the State courts, for extortion, resulted in a contempt case against the Post-Dispatch and responsible staff members, which attracted nationwide attention, and was terminated in 1941 by a unanimous decision by the Supreme Court of Missouri upholding the newspaper's right of comment on court action.

Nick obtained $10,000 from theater owners in 1936 and $6,500 in 1937, while the movie operators' demand for increased wages went virtually unsatisfied. State Representative Edward M. (Putty Nose) Brady collected the $10,000 for Nick, and was indicted with him in the State case. Nick went to trial in 1940, and his lawyers pleaded that Brady got the money, as shown by testimony, and that Nick's connection was not proved. Circuit Judge Thomas J. Rowe threw the case out of court on a demurrer. At Brady's trial, the same defense lawyers appeared, but were spared the necessity of making a defense when Judge Rowe advised Circuit Attorney Franklin Miller to dismiss the case for lack of evidence. Miller did so. In the civil division of the circuit court, next day, Judge Ernest F. Oakley adjudged Nick liable to the union for the money collected through Brady. The Post-Dispatch printed an editorial on the Nick-Brady case March 5, titled, "A Burlesque on Justice"; its editorial of March 6 was headed: "Judge Rowe: Turn 'Em Loose; Judge Oakey: These Men Are Guilty." A cartoon, "Burlesque House in Rat Alley," accompanied the latter editorial.

Judge Rowe ordered the issuance of contempt citations; and on April 8 he sentenced Ralph Coghlan, then editorial page editor, to 20 days in jail to pay a $200 fine; Daniel R. Ritzpatrick, editorial cartoonist, to 10 days and a $100 fine, and the Pulitzer Publishing Co., a $2,000 fine. The contempt charge as to a news executive, Ben H. Reese, then managing editor, was dismissed, on a showing he was not responsible for contents of the editorial page. The judgment was reversed and all the defendants discharged by vote of all seven members of the Supreme Court of Missouri en banc, June 10, 1941. To uphold Judge Rowe's charge, the Supreme Court held, "would be to narrow the limits of permissible criticism so greatly that the right to criticise would cease to have practical value."

By implication, the Supreme Court discarded a part of the Shepherd case, long one of the controlling legal precedents in Missouri contempt proceedings. That case, decided in 1903, was strongly relied on by the prosecution in the Post-Dispatch case. The majority opinion in the latter case said: "The elaborate argument in the Shepherd case to prove that a publication scandalizing the court was punishable as in contempt was based upon a misunderstanding of legal history." The decision in the Post-Dispatch case broadened the right of newspapers and others to criticize the official conduct of a judge in connection with a concluded case. The Supreme Court said: "The great weight of judicial authority now supports the proposition that a publication, however scandalous, concerning a case which has been closed is not punishable as a contempt."

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, the Seattle Times, of Seattle, Wash., located in the heartland of Dave Beck's operations, has, through the work of its labor reporters, Paul Staples and Ed Guthman, long been engaged in exposing the peculiar operations of Dave, the "fifth's," teamsters union. Typical of the columns that helped to break this case is one of December 21, 1954, which I ask be printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Seattle Times of December 21, 1954]

TEAMSTER INSURANCE COMMISSIONS NET SEATTLE MAN $259,470 IN 1953

(The health-and-welfare plan of the teamsters union has provoked considerable discussion, both pro and con. This is the sixth in a series of articles on union health-and-welfare plans in the Northwest, and the first of two on the teamsters' program.)

(By Ed Guthman)

Teamster officials in Seattle submit to investigation of the union's health-and-welfare plan these days with hardly a murmur of protest.

The teamsters' health-and-welfare programs here and elsewhere are being investigated from all sides. Two committees of Congress, the Internal Revenue Service, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and the press have become curious here.

In the East and Midwest, State insurance commissions and grand juries have started probing.

TEAMSTERS ANNOYED

The teamsters here are annoyed that their program has come under suspicion. They insist that welfare plans covering more than 100,000 teamsters and their families in Washington and 10 other Western States are strictly on the up-and-up.

Dave Beck, teamster president, says the union has developed a model system in the West—open to investigation from any quarter.

Other persons connected with the teamster plans told the Times they welcomed the investigations and hoped the air would be cleared.

As for teamster plans outside the West, the teamsters here officially take the position they will not pass judgment until all the evidence is in.

Since it has become open season on teamster health-and-welfare plans, some of the finger pointing doubtlessly is being carried on by persons with longstanding grievances against the union.

DIFFERENT ELSEWHERE

Unquestionably, the teamsters here are also being tarred by disclosures of dubious dealings in teamster funds in New York, Minneapolis, Kansas City, Detroit, and St. Louis.

Two examples: A New York local's fund went broke after imprudently spending most its income to develop a vacation resort for union members; a Minneapolis business agent, who doubles as administrator of a pension plan, received a $10,000 advance from the fund to help him open a bar and a cafe.

By comparison, the teamster funds operating in Washington appear to be brimming with virtue.

Financial reports made available to the Times showed that the bulk of the money—an average of 85.5 cents of every dollar contributed—goes for benefits.

The teamster's benefits stand up well in comparison with those offered by other plans. Administration costs do not appear to be excessive.

Reserve totaled $283,206 August 31. The reserve is frozen at that figure, which is relatively low. It looks even lower when stacked against the $1 million in welfare funds which James Hoffa, the teamsters' strong man in the Midwest, could spare to invest last week in Montgomery Ward stock.

NEWELL UNDISTURBED

In the rumpus over Newell's commission, Newell remains undisturbed. He expressed the opinion that he is being criticized unfairly just because he has made a good deal of money.

Newell is the broker of record for all of the teamsters' 164 health and welfare trusts in the 11 Western States. His commission is a flat 2 percent of the premiums.

For the year ending February 28, Newell's gross income from teamster health and welfare and insurance business amounted to $459,268.61, of which $332,091.56 was profit.

Under a partnership setup, Newell and his wife received $129,735 each. The City of Hope Hospital in Los Angeles received $69,020.

Newell said he volunteered to help Beck raise $1,000,000 for the City of Hope by giving the hospital a 25 percent interest in his teamster business. Beck agreed and appointed Samuel B. Bassett, attorney for the teamsters for many years, and George Cavano, president of Teamsters' Local 174, as trustees.

In 6 months ending August 31, Newell's gross income from the teamster premiums amounted to $268,047.

MIXED EMOTIONS

Rival insurance brokers regard Newell's commission with mixed emotions. It's nice if you can get it, they say with a trace of wistfulness.

The competitive rate for brokers' commissions on health and welfare plans in this area is 1 percent or less.

One employer trustee said Newell's commission was the damndest gravy train in the West.

Another employer trustee told the Times: "I'm not so sure Newell's commission isn't too high, but what can I do about it?"

A few second-line teamster officials questioned whether Newell's commission wasn't out of line. They asserted that the broker's main work is over, once a plan is established and functioning smoothly.

Newell's commission does not violate any standard insurance practices. He points out that, in addition to health and welfare policies, he will write about $1,000,000 in other types of insurance, not connected with teamsters, on which the commissions are much higher.

BRANCH OFFICES OPENED

Newell also justifies his commission on the grounds that he devotes considerable time to the program and has established branch offices in San Francisco and Los Angeles to service it.

Because Newell is the teamsters' broker and the union will brook no argument about it, he has no competition from other brokers—many of whom say they would write the teamsters' health-and-welfare business for less than 2 percent.

Newell is the first to admit that he is reaping profits beyond his highest hopes and that he is cashing in on the brainchild of his former partner, the late Arthur Morgenstern.

Insurance executives, employers, and union officials pay tribute to Morgenstern as a genius in the group-insurance field. He devised a life-insurance plan which the teamsters bought in 1948. It provided each teamster with a $1,000 policy at the then unheard of rate of 84 cents a month—regardless of age.

A year later, when the teamsters got ready to move for health and welfare, they again turned to Morgenstern and Newell.

NEW TYPE OF PLAN

At that time the multiple employer negotiated type plan was new and again Morgenstern and Newell demonstrated to the teamsters a great amount of ability.

In 1950, the brewery workers negotiated 5 cents an hour for health and welfare and the first teamster plan was established in this area.

At the same time brewery workers in California negotiated a health-and-welfare plan in which the employers purchased the benefits.

The plan which Morgenstern and Newell obtained for the teamsters here proved to be much better than those in California. Accordingly, the teamsters made Morgenstern and Newell brokers of record for the 11 Western States.

Employers didn't like it, but the teamsters made it stick.

In the West, the teamsters always have operated under highly centralized authority, and this principle was extended to the health-and-welfare programs. It is another reason why all the union's business is placed through one broker.

Walter H. Briem, of Seattle, chairman of the statistical and welfare division of the Western Conference of Teamsters, has general supervision of the plans throughout the West. His salary does not come out of welfare funds.

The union has administrative offices in Portland, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Phoenix, and Denver. Briem doubles as administrator for teamster plans in Washington, part of Idaho, and Alaska.

HANDLING BACKED

Centralized handling of the plans results in more efficient administration, the teamsters say. An obvious byproduct is that it also keeps some local secretary from handling a fund in a way that might embarrass the union.

This thinking was reflected in Beck's unsuccessful effort earlier this year to have his international office screen teamster plans throughout the Nation.

Except for Newell's commissions, the House Labor Committee has given the teamster plans in the West a clean bill of health, the Times learned.

The House Labor Committee disclosed at a hearing in Los Angeles in September that Newell had given Brewster 1,000 blocks of stock in an investment trust in 1951, 1952, and 1953.

"COMMISSIONS" LISTED

Committee investigators testified that Newell had told them the payments were in connection with a race-horse stable which Brewster and Newell operate, but pointed out that Newell's income-tax returns listed the payments as "commissions" paid out of Teamster welfare-account profits.

The inference was that Newell and Brewster were financing their stable with welfare money. Both denied it indignantly. They asserted that the money came from Newell's pocket.

Neither Newell nor Brewster was called to testify, though Brewster was attending a convention in Los Angeles at the time. He has stated he wants to testify before the committee and a committee source told the Times he undoubtedly will have the opportunity.

Mr. GOLDWATER. At the very outset of the current hearings on labor racketeering, the names of two Portland men were prominently identified with the original attempts to expose racketeering and political influence in certain labor unions. These two men are Wallace Turner and William Lambert, of the Oregonian, published in Portland, Oreg.

Mr. Lambert went directly from high school into the Army, and after service in the South Pacific he returned and went to work for the Oregon City Banner-Courier, and by 1950 was news editor of the Enterprise Courier, a small daily in Oregon City. He left that organization in 1951 to become associated with the Oregonian. For his efforts in the teamster case, he has been awarded the Pulitzer prize, the Heywood Broun award, and the Sigma Delta Chi award.

His associate in this work, Mr. Turner, is a native of Florida, but he graduated from the University of Missouri School of Journalism in 1943. After the war, he worked for the Springfield, Mo., Daily News, until he joined the Oregonian in late 1943. For his assistance in cleaning up a gambling ring in Oregon, he received honorable mention in the American Newspaper Guild's Heywood Broun competition and received the Press Club of Oregon's award in 1951. He received another Heywood Broun award for disclosing land-fraud operations in 1952, and has recently been awarded, along with Mr. Lambert, the Pulitzer prize, the Heywood Broun award, and the Sigma Delta Chi award.

Instead of attempting to have printed in the RECORD columns which would indicate the scope and intensity of the efforts of these two men, I am offering instead a manuscript which these two gentlemen have prepared for the Quill, a magazine published for Sigma Delta Chi, a national journalism fraternity. This article will appear in the September issue, but I am certain the fraternity will not object to its being printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD just prior to that date. I ask unanimous consent that the article be printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

(By Wallace Turner and William Lambert)

A district attorney has been found guilt of failure to do his duty and has been removed from office, a labor leader has been acquitted on the first of 8 indictments against him, some 39 other defendants are in a mad scramble to organize defense on some 100 counts and capitalize on any available breaks.

On the national scene, Dave Beck has become embattled on many fronts in and out of the teamsters union. Jimmy Hoffa has beaten the rap of a bribery charge and leaders of other unions are scurrying for cover as exposure has followed exposure in the Senate labor rackets hearings.

The first series of events is the direct fruit of an exposé published by the Oregonian 15 months ago and only now is finding its belated way through the courts.

The second series makes up a national drama, which threatens to plunge Beck from his throne as head of organized labor's strongest union and perhaps to rend the ranks of the AFL–CIO. It was to this extravaganza that the Portland story served as a prologue.

In the months since April 1956, the Oregonian—one of the Nation's most famous newspapers—has been engaged in the hardest fight of its 106 years. When circuit court resumes in September after a summer recess, other indictments will come on for trial involving those accused by the Oregonian in its exposé series.

Two months of investigation preceded publication of a 12-part series of articles which linked together teamsters union officials, mobsters and Portland's district attorney in a conspiracy to expand vice activities in Portland and metropolitan Multnomah County.

A series of grand jury investigations followed publication of this series. The Oregonian's disclosures also were a key factor in the decision of United States Senate leaders to investigate labor-management rackets. The story told by the Oregonian in the spring of 1956 was unfolded a year later to a national audience in the opening hearing of the newly created Senate Select Committee on Improper Practices in the Labor or Management Field.

As a result of the series, the Oregonian won the public service award of Sigma Delta Chi. The writers, who had been the first witnesses before the Senate labor-management racketeering hearing, won the Pulitzer prize and the Heywood Broun award.

The grand jury investigations had produced more than 100 indictments, some of them against persons accused in the Oregonian's series, others the result of related but independent investigation by the grand jury, the Oregon State Police and the office of the Oregon attorney general. The attorney general was named almost immediately to supersede the Multnomah County district attorney, one of those officials under fire.

Among those indicted who had been accused by the Oregonian were these: William M. Langley, district attorney, convicted on one count and out of office, but with other indictments still to be tried; Clyde C. Crosby, international organizer for Oregon for the teamsters' union, found not guilty on 1 charge, and with 3 left to be tried; Joseph P. McLaughlin, Seattle bookie, and Thomas E. Maloney, Spokane-Seattle hoodlum, intimates of the district attorney and Crosby, as yet untried.

A great many other indictments also were voted. Among those were a dozen or more against James B. Elkins, Portland racketeer who was one of the chief sources from which the Oregonian gained information about details of the conspiracy it alleged. None of the indictments against Elkins, nor those against his employee, Raymond F. Clark, a former policeman, has been tried in the State court. But both Elkins and Clark stand convicted in Federal court of violation of the Federal wiretapping statute.

Meantime, Portland's new mayor, former Sheriff Terry D. Schrunk, last spring was indicted on the charge of taking a bribe and of lying about it to a grand jury. The perjury indictment was tried first and Schrunk was found not guilty. The attorney general has said he will dismiss the bribery charge.

A reporter for the rival Oregon Journal is named on another indictment against Mayor Schrunk. This one charges violation of the State wiretapping statute. Teamster Boss Crosby also is a defendant. The indictment stems from an illegal raid staged by District Attorney Langley, Schrunk, and the Journal's vice investigator, Arthur Bradley Williams, on the home of Clark, the former policeman who worked for Racketeer Elkins

Five tape recordings allegedly containing telephone taps were seized in the raid. The tape recordings, not among the room conversations which Elkins furnished to the Oregonian, were the basis of indictments in both State and Federal courts against Elkins and Clark. Williams, Schrunk, and Teamster Boss Crosby were indicted for copying them, and this indictment named executives of the Journal as coconspirators in alleged setting up of the illegal raid and misusing the evidence so obtained.

It should be noted that recording room conversations is regarded legally as eavesdropping but interception of telephone conversations is wiretapping.

Even 16 months after publication of the Oregonian's series, there has been no letup in the counterattack launched by those accused. Teamster Boss Crosby has filed about $2 million worth of libel suits. Former District Attorney Langley dismissed a $2 million damage action against the Oregonian rather than answer questions in a deposition.

The Oregonian initiated this crusade as a byproduct of another investigation. There had been rumors of teamsters' union connections with racketeers, but nothing to validate the stories until one of the writers, Turner, chanced on it. Turner was assigned to do a research job on an obscure businessman who suddenly blossomed as a leader in the battle of a group of Portland citizens to locate a proposed $8 million coliseum on a site in the eastern section of the city. The businessman also had been involved in a fight against the city's antipinball ordinance.

It was the businessman's pinball activities that caused Turner to go to Elkins, who in addition to his backing of gambling and bootlegging places had operated a pinball "string."

Turner hadn't seen Elkins for many months and was surprised that the 56-year-old racketeer looked so haggard. Questioned by Turner, Elkins offered this explanation: He had been in a fight with the teamsters. Pressed for details, Elkins said he had made some recordings of room conversations which he could produce as evidence to support his story. He produced them and the magnitude of the job became obvious.

Robert C. Notson, managing editor of the Oregonian, assigned another reporter, Lambert, to work with Turner. Lambert had had extensive investigative reporting experience and the two had collaborated on other investigations, reporting their findings under joint bylines.

For 2 months we worked quietly at the job of documenting Elkins' story which we had pried from him a piece at a time. Operating in such secrecy that even other members of the news staff were unaware of the nature of our assignment, we checked documents and interviewed witnesses in Seattle, San Francisco, and Reno.

In Portland, we worked in hotel rooms, switching hotels frequently to avoid detection and the possibility that someone might try to bug our room with a hidden microphone. We rode in rented automobiles which we switched frequently.

Eventually, we reached the point where the bulk of Elkins' account had been corroborated. We had stacks of documentary evidence and affidavits of witnesses. In a safe deposit box were tape recordings, some 70 hours of them of conversations indicating that key teamsters' union officials, District Attorney Langley and various racketeers were involved in a plot to open the town to vice operations.

During the progress of the investigation, Managing Editor Notson and Publisher M. J. Frey had been kept apprised of developments. Few others knew what was afoot, but information began to leak that the Oregonian was investigating the teamsters. We wrote and polished on our series which was then carefully edited. Came the day when it was necessary to decide whether to print. The 2 months of work had been costly. Every prospect was for more expense. So for Frey and Notson, the decision was not an easy one.

The Oregonian was about to stick out its corporate neck and engage in battle with a powerful enemy. Here was an enemy with a powerful economic weapon. The conspirators also could count on the assistance of the district attorney, one of their number, and the district attorney is the most powerful of the local law-enforcement officers.

There was no question that the independent Republican Oregonian would be falsely accused of going into the exposé for political reasons, since many of the accused were Democrats. We also were to be accused of antilabor bias, we knew. Further, it would be known that much of our information came from Racketeer Elkins, long a leading figure in some underworld activities in our town. His background would be used in an attempt to weaken his evidence, we knew.

Then there was the matter of more cost. No one could forecast how long the crusade would continue, or how costly would be legal fees to defend against libel suits we were certain would be filed.

On the other side of the ledger was the opportunity to fulfill the public service obligation of a great newspaper. Financially the Oregonian stood to lose. No crusade could in any way bring in revenue to compensate for the costs of the job that faced us.

The fact that Frey and Notson decided to go into print was a tribute to their courage and determination. They pulled no punches. They told the whole story, not attempting to avoid libel suits by leaving out important elements, or by picking on only the most vulnerable conspirators.

In its first edition of April 19, 1956, the Oregonian began its disclosures. The stories shocked the city and set in motion a counterattack that was just as vicious as the newspaper's executives had envisioned.

District Attorney Langley struck back immediately. He called a grand jury into session and subpenaed three Oregonian staffers, Herbert Lundy, editor of the editorial page, and Turner and Lambert. But the Oregonian's attorneys stifled this by successfully arguing to the court that Langley had no right to investigate—and whitewash—charges against himself. Then Gov. Elmo Smith ordered the attorney general to supersede Langley.

But the district attorney had no intention of being stopped so easily. Within less than a month Langley obtained a search warrant, later held to have been obtained through fraud, and used it to break into the home of Clark, the ex-policeman employed by Elkins. There raiders seized the five tape recordings with wiretaps on them. These were used by Langley to get indictments against Elkins and Clark. They later were used in the successful prosecution of the two in Federal court.

The Oregon Journal published Langley's defensive statements, including a three-part life story in which the soon-to-be discredited district attorney claimed he was the victim of an unwarranted attack by the Oregonian and underworld elements. The Oregon Teamster, weekly publication of the Oregon Joint Council of Teamsters, began a campaign of vilification of the Oregonian, its reporters, editors, and owners.

Both the teamster paper and the Oregon Journal attacked the Oregonian and Elkins. As we had forecast, Elkins' background was cited as a reason not to believe the charges. The attorney general, Robert Y. Thornton, also was repeatedly attacked. Eventually, Kennedy and the Senate Rackets Committee also were assailed.

Thornton's grand jury sat for about 2 months and returned at the end of July with a stack of 38 indictments, more than a dozen of them against Elkins for a variety of things. He was indicted for his bootlegging and gambling activities; he was indicted for having conspired with Crosby, the teamster boss, to control the pinball racket, and for having plotted to profit from the location of the Coliseum. Crosby was a member of the unpaid city commission which was to select the Coliseum's site. Langley was indicted on several counts.

Then began a series of maneuvers by Langley and his deputies. Witnesses named on the chief conspiracy indictment against Langley were subjected to raids by the district attorney's office and sheriff's deputies. Legal attacks were made on the indictments by all the defendants, and a disquieting story began to emerge: Many of the indictments were technically faulty. They were ordered resubmitted to the grand jury.

In the fall, the situation quieted. But in November, Robert F. Kennedy, then chief counsel of the Senate Investigating Subcommittee, came to town. He examined the Oregonian's evidence and began interviewing witnesses. At first Elkins, the most-indicted man in town, was reluctant. But he cooperated and was the star witness when Kennedy opened his presentation for the new labor-management racketeering committee in late February 1957.

We were the first witnesses and acquainted the committee with the general nature of what the Oregonian had done. Then came Elkins and a horde of witnesses produced by Kennedy's investigators. Eventually came Langley's turn. He took the fifth amendment about 100 times.

Then Langley came home and was tried on a neglect-of-office charge, convicted, and removed from office.

Meantime, Kennedy continued to pursue the top teamsters. He had Crosby on and Crosby denied any connection with Elkins, controverting the evidence to show he had known Elkins well and had been associated with him. He had on Frank W. Brewster, top teamster in the West, and Brewster eventually had to admit he had misused union money but planned to pay it back. He had Dave Beck, the most bellicose, bellowing teamster of them all. And Beck took the fifth amendment.

The Oregonian, aided by the national attention of the Senate hearings, continued vigorously the battle to clear the city of an undesirable alliance between certain leaders of a powerful union and the underworld.

Mr. GOLDWATER. The city of Scranton, Pa., has produced two outstanding examples of newspapers and newsmen working for the best interests of their community against the machinations of a union organization bent on terrorizing the city. The chief associate editor of the Scranton Times, Thomas F. Murphy, doggedly pursued the hoodlums who were in control of the local teamsters union to the end that police action finally came and the entire matter was exposed to public view. In recognition of this work, the University of Scranton, at its June commencement this year, conferred upon Mr. Murphy an honorary degree of doctor of laws for his contributions to the American way of life, notably his writings on matters of labor and the welfare of labor. Mr. Edward J. Donohoe, the city editor of this newspaper, has written an exceedingly interesting article on Mr. Murphy and his fight against hoodlumism which I ask to have printed in the Record at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Tom Murphy Versus Dynamiters: Long Campaign Was Not Against Unionism, but for Fair Play

(By Edward J. Donohoe)

Let me tell you about a fellow named Tom Murphy.

He happens to be a newspaperman.

But more than that, he is a citizen who believes in the American way of life, in orderly process, human dignity, in fair play, and in moderation.

Tom Murphy is a quiet man, but he is a fighter, too.

His rugged Irish face, disarming smile, and gentle voice do not betray the intensity of the burning, hereditary love of freedom that has been his trademark over some 60 eventful years as reporter and editor of the Scranton Times.

He is no Johnny-come-lately in the defense of human rights. And nowhere in the vibrant editorials which fill the pages of Tom Murphy's long journalistic lifetime has it been written that he ever chose expediency over the dictates of his conscience.

In what kind of community does Tom Murphy live and work? What did he do to safeguard those principles of fair play and moderation upon which the American tradition is based?

Not, necessarily, the ancient traditions that bulwark powerful, articulate rights such as free press, free speech and freedom of worship, but the newer brand that guarantees to the lowliest or most ordinary citizen, under the law, the fullest privileges of thought, decision, and action.

And even more, in this complex age, a guaranty of the modern application of fair play, assuring complete, uninhibited protection, also under the law, from vandals who, by unlawful acts, would wantonly seek to deprive any American of his rights.

I give you this example:

Scranton, Pa., where Tom Murphy has labored long as associate editor of the Times, is known as a union town.

Here, John Mitchell organized the coal miners, and as president of the United Mine Workers of America, led them through one of the most violent eras of this Nation's industrial life.

Tom Murphy and John Mitchell were friends.

Tom Murphy has written many editorials on the significance of Mitchell Day (October 29) when hard-coal miners suspend their labors and place floral wreaths at Mitchell's feet.

MINERS ONCE MARCHED

In Tom Murphy's time as a Times reporter, tens of thousands of miners marched around Courthouse Square in celebration of economic gains won for them by John Mitchell.

Yes, and in Scranton, even before John Mitchell, lived Terrence V. Powderly, Grand Master Workman of the Knights of Labor, the secret labor union which was the forerunner of the American Federation of Labor.

Tom Murphy came to know Terrence V. Powderly, too. A colorful and controversial union figure, TV was thrice-elected mayor of the city of Scranton, the first labor mayor on the American scene.

And what about Tom Murphy's own personal participation and contributions to the cause of organized labor?

Before the turn of the century, Scranton had become known as a newspaper graveyard. It was said a good reporter worked only long enough on some publications to earn the price of a train ticket out of town. Tom Murphy helped organize Scranton Newswriters Union No. 3 which brought that unpleasant era to an end.

CHARTER MEMBER TWICE

Labor union charters were obtained by Scranton newspapermen in 1904 and again in 1907. Tom Murphy was one of the incorporators both times. He planned and worked in behalf of the union with other visionaries of that day: John F. Sullivan of the Boston Globe, noted labor writer of his time; John P. O'Connor, brother of the famous Tay Pay O'Connor of England, and many more.

That union and its successor, the American Newspaper Guild, have had more than a half century of uninterrupted contractual relationships with Tom Murphy's publishers. Within the same newspaper framework are a variety of other unions, each with its own history of amicable, gainful and mutually beneficial dealings with the Times management.

Greatness, circulation, and affluence came to Tom Murphy's newspaper as over the years it championed the rights of labor. It defended the miners through the dark days when feudal coal barons were invoking their "divine right" to do what they pleased with a God-given natural resource. Tom Murphy's editorials contributed much to this success and prestige.

Editorially, under his aegis and in the news columns, all labor disputes were treated on their merit, equity, and relation to the public interest. Always there was constant awareness of the fact that there are two sides to every controversy and that any given situation can generate contradictory interpretations. As Tom Murphy often observed, "It all depends on which side of the street you're walking."

In this favorable climate, unionism in Scranton has flourished for more than a half century.

Indeed, it is a union town.

But, let's not forget, Tom Murphy believes, above all, in the American way of life, in fair play, and in moderation.

Andrew Ruby, a middle-class dental technician, decided to build a home for his family. He chose a plot of ground only about 2 miles from the central city business district.

Wage rates of building tradesmen are high in Scranton. It is a union town. The only construction work that isn't union falls into the do-it-yourself category.

Andrew Ruby decided to utilize nonunion labor, or, in any event, he elected to deal with a contractor who wasn't union. He had a right to do so, if he felt like it. There's no law against it.

His builder, Edward Pozusek, began the job. Shortly he had visitors. There was some tough talk about somebody "getting ulcers" if union labor wasn't employed.

Edward Pozusek, who lives some 16 miles from Scranton, was not persuaded to go along. He kept his men working.

Some time after midnight on May 1, 1954, a charge of dynamite was set off in the basement of Andrew Ruby's partly completed home.

Police were called. Damage was not extensive; in fact, it was quite minor. But the technique of the goon squad was unmistakable. Tom Murphy's newspaper gave the story a pretty good play in the news columns; others paid little or no attention.

Forty-eight hours passed. The investigation lagged. No one seemed overly interested. Perhaps it was cynicism, probably it was simple public apathy. That might be par for the course in a union town. When good wage scales are threatened, not many unions stand idly by. But there are effective legal pressures, too.

Here, however, was a clear, open challenge to the principles in which Tom Murphy believes above all, in the American way of life, in fair play, and in moderation—20th century style.

On the second day after the dynamiting—there was an intervening weekend—Tom Murphy sat down and wrote an editorial: Get the Dynamiters. It was calm, mild, and reasonable. But those who knew Tom Murphy recognized his hallmark. He had enlisted for the duration.

This was the first of many editorials.

Police statements to reporters that the dynamiting baffled them, left Tom Murphy unimpressed. His first editorial had pointed out that the identity of the visitors to Andrew Ruby's home was no mystery. From the beginning he urged that Scranton police, if they find themselves stymied, should avail themselves of the crime detection facilities of the Pennsylvania State Police.

WRITES PROVOCATIVE EDITORIAL

Weeks passed and nothing developed. Tom Murphy's seventh editorial was a provocative one: Are the Dynamiters Laughing? There had been no apparent change in the earlier disinterest of townspeople. Perhaps their attitude had by this time resolved to cynicism.

Union circles, generally, swung to the view that Tom Murphy, friend of long standing, had launched a persecution of organized labor per se. To them it seemed out of focus. Were not the police professing complete bafflement? Other newspapers had yet to publish a single line of editorial opinion on the dynamiting. No one but Tom Murphy, really, seemed to care whether arrests were made. Why not forget about the whole thing? Nobody was hurt, much.

During the first 10 weeks following the dynamiting, Tom Murphy wrote 11 editorials, repeatedly demanding that the city investigation be broadened. It was after the 11th editorial that the district attorney's office entered the probe, along with crack men from the Pennsylvania State Police.

On October 8, 1954, 5 months after the dynamiting, the augmented police detail arrested one Paul Bradshaw, a minor union figure, an ex-prizefighter, reputed to be a "strong-arm guy." Subsequent events were to show, after the roof fell in, that he wasn't so tough, at all.

Bradshaw pleaded innocent but a criminal court jury did not believe him. He was convicted on Saturday, February 5, 1955. On Monday, February 7, his first publishing day following the conviction, Tom Murphy told colleagues: "Watch things happen from here in."

The room was bugged for a hidden tape recorder. Everybody had lots to say about the Ruby job, including the invited guests who didn't know, of course, that a concealed microphone was recording the discussions.

MUSIC STARTS GOING 'ROUND

Not long after, Bradshaw decided that he was not going to take the rap alone. He sang. The first perjured lyrics—there were variations as time went on—implicated four accomplices, smalltime hoods like himself.

They pleaded guilty in criminal court.

Now there were reports that the case was ended with the hoods behind bars and Bradshaw, referred to flatteringly by his accomplices as the mastermind, awaiting sentence. These reports were given widest currency in union circles.

Then, suddenly, came a grand jury probe, ordered by the president judge of Lackawanna County.

Six topflight officials of four big unions in the building and transportation fields were indicted on September 23, 1955.

These men were prominent in community politics, civic activities, etc. They occupied positions of power and influence in areas beyond their union jurisdictions.

GOODBYE, GOON SQUAD

The grand jury too. had dug into instances of goon squad hoodlumism that had gone into the records as unsolved. Perhaps this was due to someone's misinterpretation of a union town.

But at the top of the list were those Tom Murphy had repeatedly referred to over the period of his unrelenting editorial campaign as the others.

For the first time in 16 months, Tom Murphy rested at his editorial labors. Younger colleagues were asked to finish the job.

The top defendants went on trial. When a criminal court jury deadlocked, 11 for conviction and 1 for acquittal, and was discharged, Tom Murphy came forward with the benefit of his long newspaper experience.

The district attorney immediatly launched investigation into rumored jury fixing. One juror was arrested on a morals charge.

The second trial was as lengthy and hard-fought as the first. But this time the verdict was conclusive: Guilty as charged.

Tom Murphy wrote all but a few of the 26 editorials appearing in his newspaper between the time Andrew Ruby's home was dynamited on May 1, 1954, and the conviction of the top union leaders on October 23, 1956. He directed the writing of the several he didn't do personally.

The 27th editorial was written October 24, 1956. It was captioned: Justice Is Served.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Arizona has expired. Does the Senator have another item?

Mr. GOLDWATER. I have two more items. I ask unanimous consent that I may continue for not more than 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator may proceed.

Mr. GOLDWATER. The other newspaper in Scranton, the Scrantonian, has on its staff a writer by the name of J. Harold Brislin, who has been recognized by Time magazine and Westbrook Pegler as one of the outstanding men in the field of labor today. He comes from a newspaper family and has been cited many times for his work in investigative reporting. He, like many other men in the newspaper profession, is also a union member, having been president of Local No. 177 of the American Newspaper Guild. This, however, has not prevented him from recognizing that goons and hoodlums, racketeers and crooks, infest a part of the movement he so loyally embraces, and he has directed his brilliance and ability to exposing these people. I ask unanimous consent that several columns from this newspaper written by and about Mr. Brislin be inserted at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TRIBUNE-SCRANTONIAN UPHELD IN PUSHING PROBE OF BLAST

Enterprise and determination of the Tribune and the Scrantonian in pressing the investigation of a North Scranton dynamiting case to a logical conclusion were largely responsible for the series of dramatic developments which followed the conviction of Paul Bradshaw in February 1955.

When Bradshaw was convicted the probe subsided and to all practical purposes appeared to have stopped—despite the fact that the general public was not satisfied that Bradshaw was alone in the commission of the crime.

Yesterday's conviction of four top labor leaders—as well as the earlier confessions by four members of Local 229, General Drivers Union—demonstrated that the public had ample justification for its opinion.

In his closing address to the jury, District Attorney Carlon M. O'Malley delivered ringing words of praise for the accomplishments of the Tribune and the Scrantonian, adding that Bradshaw, through the two newspapers, "handed on a silver platter" the statement which brought about the indictment of the four men.

In may 1955, after more than 3 months had passed since the conviction of Bradshaw without disclosure of further progress in the case, Bradshaw approached J. Harold Brislin, reporter for the Tribune and Scrantonian, on the street and indicated a willingness to talk—and to back up his talk with evidence in the form of tape recordings.

Bradshaw asserted that he and Miss Helen Canfield had secretly secured tape recordings of conversations with two of the four local 229 members who subsequently pleaded guilty to participating in the dynamiting of a nonunion home project in North Scranton on May 1, 1954.

Those recordings, of discussions with George Murphy and William Munley, gave the impression Bradshaw was innocent of the bombing, despite the fact he actually was involved, because he argued against the use of explosives.

The tapes also tended to free labor leaders of responsibility because repeatedly it was stressed that they didn't want a dynamiting. Bradshaw from the outset has maintained the position that the labor leaders opposed dynamite, while insisting they did desire the nonunion job sabotaged.

Bradshaw and Miss Canfield produced the tape recordings. Duplicate copies were made and retained by the Scrantonian and the Tribune. The originals were turned over to District Attorney O'Malley, together with sworn affidavits by Bradshaw and Miss Canfield.

District Attorney O'Malley called in his county detectives, city detectives John J. "Sparky" Owens and officers from the Blakely barracks of the State police. Those named by Bradshaw—Robert X. Hubshmann, Murphy, Munley, and Joseph Malloy—were rounded up in a matter of hours.

After initial interrogation at the district attorney's office they were transported to the Blakely barracks where the grilling continued for several days—ending finally with the confessions of all four.

However, they refuted part of Bradshaw's first story to the Scrantonian and the Tribune—that the ex-steward for Local 229, General Drivers Union, was not involved. Rather they asserted, correctly as subsequent developments showed, that Bradshaw was an active participant in the plot to damage the property being built at 1045 North Main Avenue by a nonunion contractor.

District Attorney O'Malley, in addition to arresting Hubshmann, Murphy, Munley, and Malloy for felonious use of dynamite, placed fresh charges of perjury and conspiracy to obstruct justice against Bradshaw and also booked Miss Canfield for conspiracy to obstruct justice.

Then District Attorney O'Malley was quoted in the evening paper as labeling as a hoax the sensational developments which broke the case the police had not been able to crack.

And to the further amazement of the public, the district attorney also was quoted in the evening paper as classifying the dynamiting case as completely solved with no top labor leaders being involved.

While the case was being labeled a hoax and completely solved, the Scrantonian and the Tribune were busy obtaining additional and even more sensational information from Bradshaw—who had been tagged the mastermind of the dynamiting.

That additional information, much of it incorporated in a second statement by Bradshaw and the balance verbally passed along to authorities by Bradshaw and this reporter, involved the labor leaders who were found guilty of criminal conspiracy yesterday.

When the second statement and additional information was turned over to authorities it touched off renewed activity, climaxed by a special grand jury investigation and the indictment of six labor leaders, including the four convicted yesterday in connection with the dynamiting.

Also indicted, in connection with another alleged sabotage job on a nonunion contractor, were Robert Malloy and Joseph McHugh, business agents of local 229. Two of the quartet found guilty yesterday, Philip Brady and Joseph Bartell, also were indicted as participants in the second sabotage job—at the Denny property on the East Mountain.

John Durkin and Anthony Bonacuse, the other two labor leaders convicted in the dynamiting conspiracy case, are not among the defendants in the Denny case which is still to come to trial. The first conspiracy trial, last February, ended with the jury deadlocked 11 to 1 for conviction.

Public officials and police officers working on the investigation and prosecution of the accused men included:

District Attorney O'Malley and First Assistant District Attorney William J. Kearney who handled both conspiracy trials of the four labor leaders; City Detective Owens, First Sgt. John J. Tama and Trooper Leo McDonnell of the State Police, and County Detectives Thomas "Tim" Vellela and Adam Wojchiechowski.

MAJOR NEWS BREAKS CREDITED TO BRISLIN

The biggest news breaks in the Scanton labor racketeering scandal are credited to Scranton Tribune reporter J. Harold Brislin in this week's Time magazine, which hits the newsstands tomorrow. Time calls him tough, aggressive.

Leading off its The Press section, the news magazine said:

"When Teamster Steward Paul Bradshaw went on trial for the dynamiting in 1955, a tough, aggressive Tribune reported named J. Harold Brislin interviewed him and wrote a story after his conviction asking: 'Will Bradshaw talk?'

"Four months later, out on bail and embittered by the way his union pals had let him take the rap, Paul Bradshaw decided at last to talk—to Harold Brislin."

"In a series of surreptitious midnight conferences at Brislin's house, Bradshaw and girl friend sang out the story of the dynamiting and allowed the newsman to copy tape-recorded conversations by the four other goons who had done the job. With affidavits from Bradshaw and girl friend in hand, Brislin turned his story into the Tribune city desk and handed over his evidence to the district attorney.

"Within 3 days all four dynamiters had confessed.

"Brislin's continuing exclusive series in the Tribune * * * led to grand jury indictments against six local union leaders and four of their goons. Later Brislin turned over his files to McClellan committee investigators and even accompanied Witness Bradshaw to Washington.

"Convinced that the committee and the press have 'still only scratched the surface' in Scranton, Newsman Brislin (whose city editor says he has vinegar in his blood) last week was digging deeper into the story that he has followed for 25 months."

Leading off its article, Time magazine said:

"In a society as complex as the United States, it takes more than one man, or one newspaper, or one committee to focus the national attention on a serious problem. While the United States Senate's McClellan committee has produced the national headlines on labor racketeering, it was vigilant newsmen from Des Moines to Portland, Oreg., and back to Scranton, Pa., who sparked the Senate investigation and provided the scattered local fragments that fell into a nationwide kaleidoscope of corruption and violence. The pattern of partnership showed sharply this week as Senator JOHN MCCLELLAN's men wound up their hearings on union terrorism in Scranton."

The magazine article observed that "In a few cities have union bullyboys faced a more obdurate press than in Scranton."

The article commented on sensitive white-haired Thomas F. Murphy, editorial page editor of the Democratic Evening Times. It said:

"A Times man for 60 of his 77 years, fighting Tom Murphy is a stanch unionist; in 1904 he helped found the Newswriters Union, a forerunner of the American Newspaper Guild. But in recent years, as labor goons and commissars pushed their thumbs deeper into Scranton's economic windpipe, old Tom hammered tirelessly at union despotism."

PEGLER LAUDS BRISLIN FOR BEST REPORTING

Columnist Westbrook Pegler who often aims his typewriter at labor racketeering today hails Tribune Reporter J. Harold Brislin's work on the Scranton labor situation as the best job of reporting among all newsmen credited with ventilating labor scandals stretching to Oregon.

For the second time in 48 hours Tribune Reporter Brislin received national acclaim first through Time magazine which capsuled Brislin's job of exposing behind-the-scenery conspiracy, and today through the Pegler column which is nationally syndicated.

Time hailed Brislin's reportorial work as tough, aggressive, and said he is still digging deeper after 25 months of investigation.

On previous occasions Pegler praised Brislin's work. Today however, he places the Tribune reporter's efforts as the No. 1 job among all newsmen involved in digging up facts leading to Senate probing of labor scandals.

Pegler charges the Kennedy brothers, John and Robert, the former the Senator, the latter the Senate committee's chief, with taking bows for work done by Brislin and other reporters.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Next I present a brief résumé of how a daily newspaper put a halt to teamster labor recruiting in a community of 35,000 persons by exposing the strong-arm tactics of tough union organizers, arousing the community with front-page editorials and news stories into virtually running the labor racketeers out of town.

The year was 1943, a time when the United States was at war.

The community was Port Huron, Mich., which is 65 miles north of Detroit.

The newspaper was the Port Huron Times Herald.

A teamster goon squad from Detroit, led by Maurice Coleman, a chief lieutenant of James R. Hoffa, and who had a long police record of violence, moved into Port Huron in early March of 1943, to organize the truck drivers of Port Huron's dairies. There had been no request on the part of the drivers for unionization; nor were there any complaints of bad working conditions or low pay.

Coleman was aided by 10 organizers from Detroit—who also were reported to have long police records—and the late Lester "Cuts" Burde, an ex-prizefighter and bartender, who was the local teamster business agent.

Coleman and his goons were armed with baseball bats, tire chains, and an assortment of other makeshift weapons. They drove new automobiles and had C gasoline-ration stamps, which gave them unlimited motor fuel for their cars.

There was no meeting between Coleman and the milk truck drivers of Port Huron. Nor was there any contact made by him or his organizers with the dairy employees to form a local union chapter.

Coleman, instead, went to the dairy owners and told them to organize their workers and pay their dues, or else. Despite the fact that there was not one employee who belonged to the union in all the dairies, the teamster goons struck the plants by setting up picket lines, warning the workers that there would be violence if they crossed the picket lines.

The strike action strangled Port Huron's milk supply.

Owners of the dairies came forward with their stories. One of them was Mrs. Ada Wurzel, a civic leader who devoted her spare time to Red Cross activities in the war effort. The day she was approached by Coleman was the same day that she and other Red Cross workers accompanied 175 draftees to Fort Custer.

The exposure of the tactics of the teamsters by the newspapers aroused the community. Money was raised to help the milk truck drivers who were thrown out of work.

The junior chamber of commerce and other groups held public meetings, and the wrath of the community came to the boiling point. There was open talk of tar and feather parties for the organizers. The police had to stand by, because there was no open violence, and the courts were powerless to act.

The editorials and news stories continued, despite anonymous telephone calls to the publisher. The unknown callers threatened to bomb the newspaper plant. The news reporters also got threatening telephone calls. As tension mounted, the community became more and more aroused. Groups of citizens formed where the organizers were housed, despite the fact that they moved quarters several times.

The teamster organizers quit under pressure. They moved back to Detroit. The milk strike was over. The truckdrivers went back to work. No one wanted to belong to the union.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that articles from the Times Herald be printed at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Port Huron Times Herald of March 16, 1943]

DRIVE OUT THESE OUTLAWS

The people of Port Huron today are being made the victims of as fine a bunch of pirates as ever scuttled a ship.

Babies are being deprived of milk and sick persons are suffering because a lot of racketeers have this city's milk supply shut off.

It is an intolerable situation and one which demands prompt and decisive action from State and Federal authorities.

Milk drivers of Port Huron, refusing to be forced into a union against their will, have asserted their Americanism and rebelled against as rotten an attempt to invade their sacred rights as has ever been witnessed in this or any other American community.

It is not a question of employers standing in the way of their employees to organize a union.

It is not a question of wages, hours, or anything else of that kind.

This is simply and solely a question of whether a crowd of highbinders, led by a few outlaws, are going to be able to cram down the throats of good decent Americans a union contract upon which the racketeers can take a rakeoff for themselves.

It is an unthinkable thing, the sort of thing that Adolf Hitler has tried to force upon free men and women all over the world.

It is something which should never for a minute have been allowed to go as far as it has already gone without someone being placed behind prison bars.

Employers, protesting that they have no control over whether their men may consent to join a union, have been laughed at and told to get busy, or they would be put out of business.

Their customers have been taken away from them, or picketed by as frowsy and lousy individuals as could possibly be obtained.

They have been plainly and brazenly told to go ahead and organize their men and that the so-called labor leaders were only out for the dough.

"Come across or else," they have said in just those words.

Decent labor leaders in this community have been shocked by the tactics employed and have so informed this newspaper.

If this sort of thing can go on in this country without any interference from State or Federal authorities there is little use trying to fight a war for freedom.

Why should our sons be spilling their blood all over the world, while a lot of bandits are being permitted to ply their dirty trade at home?

The Times Herald believes the milk drivers are doing exactly the right thing and that they have only done what every decent American would do under the circumstances.

They are not antiunion, or anything of the kind.

They are simply demanding the right, which they are entitled to under the law, to vote themselves on whether they should unionize and, if so, what union they should join.

Their employers would be in direct violation of the Federal law if they attempted to force an organization on them.

The time has come for a showdown.

[From the Port Huron Times Herald of March 17, 1943]

WHY NOT A GRAND JURY?

Here are a few facts concerning the manner in which the racketeers, who are responsible for failure of babies, sick persons, and others to get milk, have plied their rotten trade in Port Huron.

Morris Coleman, their so-called international agent, approaches an employer and says, "We want to organize your men into a union."

The employer replies that it is all right with him and for them to talk with the men and see if they want to join.

That's the last the employer hears of them for some time.

Then he gets a letter telling him that, unless he proceeds to organize his men into a union (regardless of whether they want to join and regardless of the fact that it is illegal for him to form a union) they will picket his place and his customers.

They proceed to boycott him.

They also tell the employer that they "Don't give a damn about the men—all they want is the dues."

They state that "these teamsters are an ignorant lot—any man can drive a truck" and that all they are concerned with is getting them "organized" in any way they can.

They want the money.

These are facts.

There are statements that have been made to the Times Herald by responsible men and which we stand ready to prove.

These are the methods of racketeers and not decent and responsible labor leaders.

The Times Herald is a union shop and it wouldn't have anything else.

For more than a third of a century we have had union contracts wherever men wanted them and we have as fine men as ever worked anywhere—men of the very highest type and standing in this community.

They are not racketeers.

They are real Americans.

Why not a grand jury to reveal to the public the methods of the persons responsible for the facts that babies and invalids and sick persons, as well as the general public are being deprived of their daily supply of milk?

Why not?

[From the Port Huron Times Herald of March 18, 1943]

HOW DO YOU LIKE THIS?

The Times Herald wants to thank the hundreds and hundreds of persons who have called or written us during the past few days in commendation of the attitude of this paper with regard to the milk situation here.

We greatly appreciate the confidence expressed in this newspaper, but the fact of the matter is the Times Herald is simply doing its plain duty as an American newspaper published in an American community.

When a lot of gorillas and racketeers get a community by its throat and attempt to take over, there is nothing a self-respecting American citizen can do but to fight to the limit of his ability.

We sent our sons to Africa, to the Pacific, to Iceland, and all over the world to die, if necessary, on the battlefields and ships that we might be free over here and the very least we can do is to try to protect their wives and babies at home while they are fighting for us.

God knows if we don't do that we are lost.

This newspaper is a firm believer in the right of organization and collective bargaining, if employees so desire. But to force them against their will into a union through illegal pressure on their employers is a racket not indulged in by honest union leaders.

The degree of patriotism possessed by these scavengers in the guise of labor representatives is best illustrated by what took place in a meeting of the milk wagon drivers with Lester (Cuts) Burde, former bootlegger and prizefighter, now business agent of the bartenders union.

Frank Houk, one of the drivers, prompted by a remark by Burde said: "In other words you and your organization are taking away the right of independence that is given to every American citizen."

At this point Houk was interrupted by Burde who exclaimed,

"Aw, don't give us that American s———." (Too filthy to print.)

Attesting to the absolute accuracy of this statement are Houk, Clarence R. Smith, William Duncanson, Alger Ashley, Clarence Ogden, Thomas Odom, and Walter Harris, all good American citizens and drivers of milk trucks.

Do you wonder that decent men of this type object to being ruled and lorded over by such filth?

What do you American Legion boys, who fought for their country in the last world war, think of this?

Do you believe decent union men and responsible union leaders will stand for this sort of talk, with their own sons fighting for America today?

Burde is the man responsible for the boycott declared against restaurants and others who sell milk delivered by nonunion teamsters.

Burde is the man responsible for picketing.

There was a time in the United States of America when they didn't fool with people of this type, but things seem somewhat different today.

Surely there is some way under the law to deal with the Burdes and Colemans and other racketeers and surely our law enforcement officials cannot, in all decency, permit this sort of thing to go on.

If we do, we have lost the war before our boys come back and they will return ashamed of their fathers and brothers and everyone else.

Why not a grand jury?

[From the Port Huron Times Herald of March 20, 1943]

AND THIS IS THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

Lester "Cuts" Burde, exbootlegger and prize fighter and, of all things, ex-strikebreaker himself, the so-called business agent of the bartenders' union and the restaurant employees, walked into the cafeteria of Mueller's a few days ago.

Here is the conversation as related to us by one of the girls (we have her name and address) who was employed there, but who quit rather than be forced to pay tribute to Burde.

"Why don't you get your employees organized here?" demanded Burde of the proprietor. "Didn't I tell you to get busy?"

The proprietor said he just didn't happen to have the time.

"Well," exclaimed Burde, "we'll have no more fooling. You get this place organized or else ——."

As a parting shot Burde declared:

"I don't want you to wait longer than Monday or Tuesday, do you understand?"

The proprietor meekly said he did.

Incidentally Burde informed this young lady that, having once before been a member of the union, she would have to pay $8.25 to rejoin if she wanted to hold her job, and in addition she would have to pay $1.75 a month dues.

The girls who do not belong to the union must pay $5 to join and $1.75 a month thereafter. Occasionally they are fined by Burde to the extent of $5.

They have nothing to say about whether they wanted to join this union or any other union. They were to be organized by their proprietor and all Burde wanted was "the dough."

This is what has been going on in Port Huron, where this former bootlegger has been strutting about the streets, threatening and boycotting businessmen and taking blood-money from a lot of helpless working girls.

This is the sort of thing which brought on the refusal of the milk drivers to give up their sacred American rights and be forced to join a union which frankly tells them they will do nothing for them and that they don't give a damn about them.

This is the sort of thing which started our forefathers in the flight for American freedom and finally resulted in the Boston Tea Party.

And yet there are a few individuals so lacking in patriotism and so selfish and concerned with their own comfort, that they wonder why the drivers quit their jobs rather than give up their sacred freedom.

Thank God from the great majority there has come a response to the action of the milk drivers which shows that the heart of America is still sound.

There is a way, under the law, to organize a union.

That way is to go to the employees and get them to join of their own free will and accord.

No employer may, under penalty of the law, interfere with this.

The purpose of a union is to improve the working conditions and to seek fair wages and other rights and privileges for the workers.

The purpose of the racketeers is to get a soft living by shaking down a hard-working man or woman.

There are people who ask, "Why don't they go to the courts for protection?"

We are ashamed to say there is no protection from the courts.

This same outfit which has plied its filthy trade here recently said "to hell with that injunction" which had been issued by the court in behalf of a local concern.

These are things the public should know.

These are facts which the rotten racketeers cannot refute.

Our soldier boys who are fighting for their country in far-off lands while Burde and Coleman are holding up their fathers and mothers and interfering with the delivery of milk to their babies at home will be interested in this.

If they haven't already heard about it we shall tell them when they get back, and we doubt if Port Huron will be a very healthy place for these slimy individuals.

When the cowardly Coleman came here he called Ada Wurzel on the phone.

"Why haven't you organized your men?" he asked Mrs. Wurzel.

Mrs. Wurzel told him her husband was handling the matter and that the men told Mr. Wurzel they wouldn't join a union.

"I'll tell you something," this bully said to Mrs. Wurzel, "you will organize these men or else——."

WE WANT PUBLIC TO KNOW

This morning the Times Herald had a telephone call—among hundreds of other good citizens who are fighting mad—from Mrs. William DeMars, of Lakeport, president of the parent-teacher association of that community.

Yesterday Mrs. DeMars' son, Wilbert, left for Fort Custer with 170 other Port Huron and St. Clair County boys to fight for his country.

Now Mrs. DeMars wants to know why her son should be taken to some foreign land to fight Japs and Germans in order to preserve our freedom, when we are losing it at home.

We don't know what good it is going to do to send our sons to far-off foreign lands to fight for us, if we are going to permit the leeches and racketeers of the kind who are now operating in this community to take away our rights as American citizens.

Coleman and Burde and their dirty gang are not interested in this American s———, and Burde has plainly said so to the milk wagon drivers.

All they want is a rakeoff on the pay of a lot of working men and girls—$2 or more a month.

Coleman came to Port Huron in a big new Buick car with a "C" license and so have his associates.

An honest workingman couldn't get a "C" license to save his neck, but a labor racketeer can get one simply by asking for it.

Nice situation, isn't it, Mrs. DeMars?

Bet your husband who probably works hard for his living every day, can't get one.

Coleman didn't go to the milk-wagon drivers and ask them to join a union—not that racketeer.

That isn't his way of working.

He went to the employers, driving up in his big new car, and told them to get busy organizing their men or else.

Those were his words, not in one particular place, but in many places he visited.

He said he "didn't give a damn" about the drivers, but was simply a businessman interested in getting "the dough."

The drivers, he said, are an "ignorant lot and anybody can drive a truck."

He didn't promise any better wages, working hours, or conditions, or anything else to the men. He didn't even talk to them and said "to hell with that."

The Times Herald has Mr. Coleman on record and we haven't yet completed the publication of the record.

The whole purpose of these editorials is to make clear to the people of this community and the readers of the Times Herald everywhere what is really going on in this good old United States of America which we all love so well.

We want the public to know something of the methods of labor racketeers, to whom we have referred on many occasions, as distinguished from decent, responsible labor leaders, who are really trying to improve working conditions among working people.

As we have said before, the Times Herald has had a union and a closed shop for a third of a century, and we would have nothing else today under any circumstances.

But we deal and work with honest, responsible, fine Americans who are not out to take pennies from a dead man's eyes.

We don't have any "Cuts" Burdes or Morris Coleman's around our shop, ready to grab off part of the wages of hard-working girls who only get a living.

We want a showdown and we want the authorities in high and low places to help us get it.

We want to put some of these gorillas where they belong and we're not going to be "shushed" by anybody.

We're still free, thank God, and we're going to keep right on fighting to maintain that freedom as long as we live.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, my colleagues will wonder why I have used the time of the Senate today and have asked for this large amount of space in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and I believe an explanation is due them. It is often said that the American people do not read the editorial pages of their newspapers, and, from the expressions of surprise at the exposés being made by the McClellan committee, I am inclined to agree. The situations that are being unfolded are not new; they have existed for years, and many eminent newspapermen and newspapers have been discussing them daily in their editorials and on their editorial pages through the medium of columns.

That we have had our Fays, our Becks, our Johnny Dios, our James Hoffas, our Willie Bioffs, our Frank Brewsters, should not come as a surprise to anyone, but the fact that it does causes me today to make available to my colleagues and to those who read the RECORD some interesting background and material which I hope will show the extent to which these misdoings have been covered for many years.

I also wish to point out at this time the great results which real investigative reporting can accomplish for the protection of our institutions and our way of life. Reporters who are willing to go after the facts, to dig them out, to analyze them and to present them in an honest fashion to their readers, will forever be a credit to their profession and a guaranty that the freedom of the press will continue, and with it the freedom of all Americans.

Mr. President, we are indebted to the men and to the newspapers I have mentioned today, but we are also indebted to many others, who for lack of time and lack of space, I have not mentioned.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Bartlett, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 6 and 54 to the bill (H. R. 9131) making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1958, and for other purposes; agreed to the further conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. CANNON, Mr. ROONEY, and Mr. TABER were appointed managers on the part of the House at the further conference.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6508) to modify the Code of Law for the District of Columbia to provide for a uniform succession of real and personal property in case of intestacy, to abolish dower and curtesy, and to grant unto a surviving spouse a statutory share in the other's real estate owned at time of death, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 959. An act to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, to exempt certain wheat producers from liability under the act where all the wheat crop is fed or used for seed or food on the farm, and for other purposes;

S. 1866. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to require the inspection and certification of certain vessels carrying passengers," approved May 10, 1956, in order to provide adequate time for the formulation and consideration of rules and regulations to be prescribed under such act;

S. 2431. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Klamath River Basin compact between the States of California and Oregon, and for other purposes;

H. R. 8753. An act to amend title II of the Social Security Act to include California, Connecticut, Minnesota, and Rhode Island among the States which are permitted to divide their retirement systems into two parts so as to obtain social-security coverage, under State agreement, for only those State and local employees who desire such coverage; and

H. R. 8929. An act to amend the act of August 27, 1935, as amended, to permit the disposal of lands and interests in lands by the Secretary of State to aliens.

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS, 1958—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9131) making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1958, and for other purposes. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the report.

(For conference report, see House proceedings of August 21, 1957, pp. 15508–15509, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, by way of explanation, I will say the conference committee reached an agreement on all of the Senate amendments except No. 6, which deals with an additional Washington airport. However, because of a parliamentary entanglement on the floor of the other body during the consideration of the conference report, amendment No. 54, which involves funds for construction by the Corps of Engineers, will have to go back to conference.

After the conference report and the amendments in disagreement on which the conferees have now reached an agreement have been disposed of, I intend to make a motion that the Senate insist on its amendments Nos. 6 and 54, and request a further conference with the House thereon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question first is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report, with the exception of amendments Nos. 6 and 54, was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its action on certain amendments of the Senate to House bill 9131, which was read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF
REPRESENTATIVES, U. S.,
August 21, 1957.

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 8, 15, 33, 34, 43, 45, 47, 49, 50, 57, 58, 64, 69, 70, 72, and 75 to the bill (H. R. 9131) entitled "An act making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1958, and for other purposes," and concur therein.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment, insert "$1,300,000."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment, insert "$20,000,000."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment, insert "$2,400,000."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment, insert "$750,000."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert:

"ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON WEATHER CONTROL

"To complete its final report to the President and the Congress as provided by law, $100,000: Provided, That the committee shall complete its report and terminate its activities by December 31, 1957."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert:

"SALARIES AND EXPENSES

"For necessary expenses, not otherwise provided for, of the Small Business Administration, including expenses of attendance at meetings concerned with the purposes of this appropriation and hire of passenger-motor vehicles, $2,235,000; and in addition there may be transferred to this appropriation not to exceed $6,877,000 from the revolving fund, Small Business Administration, and not to exceed $490,000 from the fund for liquidation of Reconstruction Finance Corporation Disaster Loans, Small Business Administration, for administrative expenses in connection with activities financed under said funds: Provided, That the amount authorized for transfer from the revolving fund, Small Business Administration, may be increased, with the approval of the Bureau of the Budget, by such amount as may be required to finance administrative expenses incurred in the making of disaster loans: Provided further, That the Committees on Appropriations of the House of Representatives and the Senate shall be notified in advance of such increases in transfers from the revolving fund."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 32, and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert:

"SEC. 312. The Secretary of Defense in his discretion, is hereby authorized to transfer to the "Air Force industrial fund" not to exceed $75 million from appropriations to the Department of the Air Force available for obligation during the fiscal year 1958."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert:

"CONSTRUCTION OF POWER SYSTEMS, RYUKYU ISLANDS

"For necessary expenses of construction, installation, and equipment of electric power systems in the Ryukyu Islands, which shall be operated by the Ryukyu Electric Power Corporation, an instrumentality of the United States Civil Administration of the Ryukyu Islands; services as authorized by section 15 of the act of August 2, 1946 (5 U. S. C. 55a), at rates not in excess of $50 a day for individuals; $1,513,000, to remain available until expended, without regard to sections 355 and 3734 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, and title 10, United States Code, section 4774."

"HOSPITAL FACILITIES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

"For an additional amount for expenses necessary in carrying out the provisions of the act of August 7, 1946 (60 Stat. 896), as amended, authorizing the establishment of a hospital center in the District of Columbia, including grants to private agencies for hospital facilities in said District, $500,000, to remain available until expended: Provided, That the limitation under this head in the act of July 15, 1952 (66 Stat. 644), as amended, on the total amount to be provided for completion of grant projects, is increased from $13,010,000 to $13,300,000: Provided further, That the limitation on the total amount for completion of the hospital center is increased from $23,200,000 to $23,413,000."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 61, and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken and inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For an additional amount for the 'President's special international program', including uniforms or allowances therefor, as authorized by law (5 U. S. C. 2131), $2,745,000, to remain available until expended: Provided, That the amount made available under this head in the Departments of State and Justice, the Judiciary, and Related Agencies Appropriation Act, 1958, for United States participation in the Universal and International Exhibition of Brussels, 1958, is increased from '$6,500,000' to '$7,045,000'."

That the House insist upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 6 and 54.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House to the Senate amendments numbered 3, 4, 7, 10, 12, 14, 32, 38, 40, and 61.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. JAVITS. May I ask the Senator from Arizona what disposition was made of the amendment affecting the matter of counterpart funds in relation to Israeli towns?

Mr. HAYDEN. That was agreed to as passed by the Senate.

Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist on its amendments numbered 6 and 54, request a further conference with the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. CHAVEZ, Mr. ELLENDER, Mr. HILL, Mr. HOLLAND, Mr. STENNIS, Mr. SALTONSTALL, Mr. YOUNG, Mr. KNOWLAND, Mr. THYE, Mr. MUNDT, and Mrs. SMITH of Maine conferees on the part of the Senate.

THE POSTAL RATE INCREASE BILL

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, the other body recently passed a bill in connection with the postal rate increase, which is now before the Senate Committee on Post Office and Civil Service and on which bill hearings are underway.

I sincerely hope the committee will report the bill to the Senate, and that action can be obtained at this session of Congress. The amount involved is $2 million a day—$2 million a day more which will come into the Federal Treasury, if we pass the postal-rate bill.

We all know how dangerously close to the debt ceiling the Government's expenditures are running. Probably the situation will deteriorate in the next few months, before the large tax receipts come in early next year. For that reason, also, I hope action can be taken on the postal-rate bill at this session of Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further morning business?

THE TOWN OF MEDICINE LAKE, MONT.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1103, H. R. 7384.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 7384) for the relief of the town of Medicine Lake, Mont.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Florida?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, the water supply of the town of Medicine Lake, Mont., comes from a well located on the western edge of the town. This well is located in what is known as the Little Muddy Valley. This valley is bordered by foothills on its western side and until 1940 any overflow of water from the Muddy River flowed naturally over a 3-mile terrain and no trouble was experienced with floods.

In 1939 and 1940 the Fish and Wildlife Service built a dike and canal which diverted the Muddy River into a lake known as Medicine Lake. The diversion canal and dike extends across the Muddy Valley to a point about 100 feet from the town well. The dike is about 8 to 10 feet high and has the effect of forcing any floodwater into a narrow channel some 30 to 40 feet in width. Prior to its construction it had the full 3-mile width of the valley in which to flow. The mayor of the city has stated that the result has been that the area around the well has been flooded and the well and its pumping equipment has been inundated so as to deprive the city of its water for as long as 24 hours at a time. In the face of flood threats, the city has on occasion been required to remove its pumping equipment and warn its residents to boil all water.

The Montana State Board of Health has taken cognizance of this situation.

The Department of the Interior indicates it has no objection to the enactment of the bill. It observes that the reports of the Department of Health of the State of Montana indicate that the contamination of the town's water supply has become progressively more serious since the completion of the diversion of the creek. On the basis of the material in the files and the facts outlined, the Committee on the Judiciary recommends that the bill be considered favorably.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the statement of purpose and the letter from D. Otis Beasley, administrative Assistant Secretary of the Interior, be printed in the RECORD in connection with the consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the statement of purpose and letter were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PURPOSE

The purpose of the proposed legislation is to provide payment for the town of Medicine Lake, Mont., in the sum of $12,000 in full settlement of all claims of the town for damages to their municipal water supply resulting from developments of the Fish and Wildlife Service.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., August 2, 1957.

Hon. EMANUEL CELLER,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. CELLER: Your committee has requested a report on H. R. 7384, a bill for the relief of the town of Medicine Lake, Mont. This bill would authorize the payment of $12,000 to the town of Medicine Lake, Mont., in settlement of its claim for damages to its municipal water-supply system. The Federal activity to which this bill refers, the establishment of the Medicine Lake National Wildlife Refuge, which provides the basis for this claim, occurred in 1935.

Because of the circumstances in the case, we would have no objection to the favorable consideration of this measure if your committee finds that such favorable consideration is warranted.

The establishment in 1935 of the Medicine Lake National Wildlife Refuge below the town of Medicine Lake, Mont., required the diversion of a local water supply, Muddy Creek, from the new channel of the creek to its former channel. The city reservoir is located on the edge of the old channel of the creek, however, and we understand that there been some contamination of the town water supply, possibly as a result of the diversion. Our reports on this matter are inconclusive that the establishment of the refuge and diversion of the creek was alone responsible for the subsequent condition of the town water supply.

In any event, we are informed by reports of the Montana Department of Public Health that contamination of the town water supply, while not entirely absent before such diversion of the creek, became progressively more serious after completion of such diversion. Contamination may have occurred, of course, from some other source or in some other manner.

The Bureau of the Budget has advised us that there would be no objection to the submission of this report to your committee.

Sincerely yours,

D. Otis Beasley,
Administrative Assistant Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask for favorable consideration of the bill at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no amendments to be proposed, the question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill (H. R. 7384) was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POLICE JURISDICTION OVER THE BLACKFEET HIGHWAY, MONTANA

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of Calendar No. 1086, Senate bill 1828.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The Legislative Clerk. A bill (S. 1828) to retrocede to the State of Montana concurrent police jurisdiction over the Blackfeet Highway and its connections with the Glacier National Park road system, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record at this point as a part of my remarks a statement from the committee report concerning the purpose of the bill, together with a letter dated August 7, 1957, from Roger Ernst, Assistant Secretary of the Interior, to the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. Murray].

There being no objection, the statement from the report (No. 1063) and letter were ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Purpose of the Bill

The Blackfeet Highway was constructed originally to serve visitors to the Glacier National Park. The United States initially assumed responsibility for maintaining the highway and concurrently with the State, has exercised police jurisdiction over it. Due to shifts in the volume and nature of the traffic over the highway, an agreement was entered into with the State of Montana by which the State will maintain the highway. Retrocession would bring about a change in the jurisdiction over the Blackfeet Highway which would be in keeping with its changed use and the State's assumption of responsibility for its maintenance.

Department of the Interior,
Office of the Secretary,
Washington, D. C., August 7, 1957.

Hon. James E. Murray,
Chairman, Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Dear Senator Murray: Your committee has requested a report on S. 1828, a bill to retrocede to the State of Montana concurrent police jurisdiction over the Blackfeet Highway and its connections with the Glacier National Park road system, and for other purposes.

We recommend the enactment of this bill.

The Blackfeet Highway, to which this bill refers, extends from East Glacier Park, Mont., to the Canadian boundary at Carway, a distance of 52.7 miles. The highway was constructed initially by the State with Federal funds in order to serve visitors to the park as well as to provide for various administrative needs of the park. The United States assumed initial responsibility for maintenance of the highway. Also, concurrently with the State, the United States has exercised police jurisdiction over the highway as a result of State and Federal enactments.

In recent years, however, the highway has been subject to heavy use for commercial and international traffic. Therefore, it has lost much of its identity as a road serving the park. The policy of this Department is to relieve the United States from the maintenance of roads outside park boundaries wherever possible; and we entered into an agreement with the State of Montana on April 1, 1956, by which the State has assumed responsibility for maintaining the highway.

In these circumstances, we consider that a retrocession by the United States of police jurisdiction over the Blackfeet Highway, and its connections with the park road system, would be a logical implementation of the State's newly acquired maintenance responsibility.

The Bureau of the Budget has advised us that there would be no objection to the submission of this report to your committee.

Sincerely yours,

Roger Ernst,
Assistant Secretary of the Interior.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby retroceded to the State of Montana such concurrent police jurisdiction as has been ceded to the United States of America over the rights-of-way of the Blackfeet Highway, including the highway itself, and over the rights-of-way of its connections with the Glacier National Park road system on the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, including the highways themselves, the same being the jurisdiction ceded by the act of the Legislature of Montana, approved February 27, 1929 (Laws of Montana, 1929, p. 63), and accepted by act of Congress approved May 2, 1932 (47 Stat. 144).

Sec. 2. Following acceptance by the State of Montana of the retrocession provided herein, the laws and regulations of the United States pertaining to Glacier National Park shall cease to apply to the territory of said rights-of-way and highways.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further morning business? If not, morning business is concluded.

AMENDMENT OF SECTION 22 OF THE INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 939) to amend section 22 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. SMATHERS. What is the pending question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Kefauver] to postpone, until January 30, 1958, at 2 o'clock p. m., further consideration of the conference report.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be a quorum call, and that the time utilized in making the call be not deducted from the time of either side.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A quorum call is in order without any unanimous consent request.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Neuberger in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Kefauver] to postpone, until January 30, 1958, at 2 o'clock p. m., further consideration of the conference report.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, I yield myself 10 minutes.

The prime purpose of the House amendment pushed upon the Senate conferees, to which some Members of the Senate on the conference committee did not agree and which others accepted reluctantly, is to enable certain railroad companies to win a decision in a lawsuit which was brought in the District Court for the District of Columbia, and which is now pending on appeal in the circuit court of appeals.

An additional purpose of the amendment which was placed in the conference report, without a hearing, is to remove the injunction by the district court which was granted certain small airlines against certain railroad companies. A further purpose is to try to prevent the collection of damages in the amount of several million dollars because of alleged violations of the antitrust laws on the part of these railroads which were found to have been committed by the district court.

Mr. President, this is an unholy purpose. It is a purpose for which the Congress should not be used. Litigants in a case ought to try the case in the courts. They have no business coming to Congress to try to get themselves out of a judgment entered against them. They have no business to come to Congress to try to remove the restrictions of an injunction issued by the district court. They have no business to try to use the Senate or Congress to immunize themselves from a possible monetary judgment of many million dollars.

I wish to develop a little further the point that this is the primary purpose of this provision of the conference report.

The bill the Senate passed merely provided that the transportation companies under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission in the case of section 22 rates would file with the Commission a report, the purpose of which would be to enable a statistical study to be made of section 22 rates. The Interstate Commerce Commission was not given any jurisdiction over those rates. The Commission has never had jurisdiction over section 22 rates, according to the court decision and according to the Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission itself, Mr. Clarke. So the bill the Senate passed had a good purpose.

Then the bill went to the House of Representatives. The House committee reported the bill to the House of Representatives, and recommended adoption of the Senate provision regarding the filing of reports. At about that time the district court in the District of Columbia decided, in a case against the railroads, that they had been guilty of a violation of the antitrust laws. The court issued an injunction. The suit was also for damages in the amount of $45 million. The case is now on appeal to the court of appeals.

At that point, without any hearings whatsoever, without giving the parties to the suit an opportunity to be heard, there was offered on the floor of the House of Representatives—and the matter was treated as a more or less routine one—an amendment to change the position of the parties to that lawsuit by eliminating the injunction, and including the words which would take away the substantive right of the parties plaintiff for damages. All that was done without the holding of any hearings whatsoever. All that was done without giving the parties plaintiff in the suit—the small airlines—an opportunity to appear before the appropriate Congressional committees.

> Provided, That nothing in this paragraph shall affect any liability or cause of action which may have accrued prior to the date on which this paragraph takes effect.

I know that language was offered by Representative DINGELL, in the conference, and was adopted.

The original sponsors of the bill and the railroad lobby that is pushing it tried to have the bill passed without having that provision included. But, as I understand, it was added by Representative DINGELL in the conference.

Mr. President, the bill is cleverly drawn. The protection which is alleged to be given by means of this provision in the case of the lawsuit, in my opinion is practically no protection at all; and I wish to demonstrate why that is true.

In the first place, if the conference report is agreed to, the injunction will be meaningless, because in that case the railroad companies will be permitted, by statute, to do exactly what the injunction has said they cannot do; and, of course, the statute will supersede, and will give the railroads the right to do it, and will take away any protection afforded by the injunction. An injunction against a lawful act cannot stand. So long as there is a violation of the antitrust laws, the injunction is valid. But when the companies are exempted by statute from the antitrust laws, the injunction becomes meaningless, because an injunction cannot stand against a legal law enacted by the Congress.

As to the substantative right, Mr. President, this measure is the most skillfully worded measure I have ever seen. It is really a "slicker." I wish to pay my compliments to the clever lawyers who devised the language appearing on page 2, in order to try to avoid the burden of the millions of dollars which the railroad companies may be owing to these airlines, under the decision of the district court, which has decided in favor of the small airlines.

Let us just for a moment examine the language. How any Member of Congress can fall for this strange proposal, I do not know. I begin to read on page 1 of the amendment; the bill would be amended by inserting the following at the end of the section:

> 2. All quotations or tenders of rates, fares, or charges under paragraph 1 of this section for transportation, storage, or handling of property or the transportation of persons free or at reduced rates for the United States or any agency or department thereof, including quotations or tenders for retroactive application, whether negotiated or renegotiated. After the service has been performed.

Mr. President, the intent there is, of course, is to permit the railroads to file retroactively their tariffs and their applications with the Interstate Commerce Commission, under section 5 (a) of the Transportation Act—that is to say, the Reed-Bulwinkle Act.

If the tariffs or applications are approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission, then, of course, the entire cause of action of the small airlines will vanish immediately. Mr. President, that is not right. It is not fair to take away, by means of such clever, slick language, anyone's rights in connection with a lawsuit.

So, Mr. President, regardless of the clause appearing at the end, if the conference report is agreed to, the suit of the small airlines—which they won in the district court—against the railroads, which were charged with violating the antitrust laws, will become meaningless, and the injunction which has been issued will become meaningless, because the action taken by the railroads in violating the antitrust laws will then have been made legal. Furthermore, the cause of action of the small airlines for damages will have been destroyed, because the effort in connection with this measure is to try to obtain retroactive approval by the Interstate Commerce Commission of what the railroads have done in violation of the antitrust laws.

Furthermore, of course, any protection which the small airlines may have had, or any opportunity they may have had to compete with the railroads, in the future will not exist, if this measure is enacted into law, because in that event the law will have been changed.

I have heard it said that the enactment of this measure will do nothing more than apply the Reed-Bulwinkle law to section 22 cases. In the first place, Mr. President, the Reed-Bulwinkle bill—for which I did not vote, but for which many of the present Members of the Senate and Members of the House of Representatives did vote—was passed only after long hearings before the House committee and the Senate committee. After the bill was passed, it was vetoed by the President. Thereafter, the bill was passed over the Presidential veto. The matter was a most highly controverted one. So, even if we accept the statement of those who say this measure is nothing but an extension of the Reed-Bulwinkle Act to section 22 transportation cases, it is strange that the law should be extended to so large an item of business. After all, the Government is one of the largest shippers of both freight and passengers. So it is very strange that such a change would be made without holding any committee hearings at all, and without having the matter receive any consideration by any Congressional committee.

In the case of the Reed-Bulwinkle bill, the committee hearings lasted for months and months. The bill was highly controversial. But the present effort is to extend the application of that act to the largest segment of freight and passenger traffic in the United States, and a very large part of the business of the railroads. And it is proposed that that change be made without having had any committee hearings whatever.

Mr. President, it is important to note that the conference report does more than extend the Reed-Bulwinkle Act to section 22 cases. Under the Reed-Bulwinkle Act, bad as it is, the railroads could draw up a tariff, when taking action in concert. The tariff would have to be filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission, and would have to be publicly advertised, and notice of it would have to be given, and there would have to be an opportunity for objections to be filed to the proposed tariff or rate, and there would have to be an opportunity to have a hearing held before the Interstate Commerce Commission. Thereafter, the Interstate Commerce Commission, acting in a quasi-judicial capacity, and after having given full notice, could approve the tariff, in which case it would be applicable in the future.

Mr. President, all Senators should read the language of the proposed change. None of those safeguards or standards is included in the monstrosity which is before the Senate at this time. Under this proposal, once the railroad companies negotiate for the business, they are entitled to make application to the Interstate Commerce Commission to have the tariff or rates applied retroactively—after they have the business, after they have acted. Then, if they find the negotiated rate is not satisfactory to them, they can renegotiate it, after the service has been performed. There will be no notice, there will be no opportunity for anyone to object, there will be no hearings, because the act will already have taken place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Clark in the chair.) The time the Senator from Tennessee has yielded to himself has expired. Does he desire to yield himself additional time?

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

Mr. KEFAUVER. So, Mr. President, the pending proposal is not only for an extension of the Reed-Bulwinkle Act to section 22 cases, but it would also take away all the existing safeguards. And that would be done without the holding of any hearings whatsoever.

Mr. President, the opinion of Judge McGarraghy appears in the Congressional Record of yesterday, beginning at page 15485. The Record also includes the orders which have been issued. The court's opinion represents months of study, litigation, and presentations to the court. The small airlines have a vested interest in the order the court has issued. So I cannot understand how any Member of Congress can in good conscience vote for a measure which would take away those rights of the small airlines and would deprive them of what they have won after a long and difficult presentation in court, and without at least giving them an opportunity to appear at a hearing before a Congressional committee.

Mr. President, no harm will be done by postponing action on this conference report until January 30, 1958. That will give the committees a chance to have hearings and give the parties who are interested an opportunity to have their day in court.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. KEFAUVER. That is all my motion seeks to do.

I reserve the remainder of my time, Mr. President.

I assume the Senator from Florida desires to yield some time on the other side.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, I wish to say that the conferees have made their statement. They feel it stands unrefuted. We are ready to vote.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I wonder if the Senator from Tennessee will yield me some time so that I may address some questions to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. KEFAUVER. How much time does the Senator wish?

Mr. MORSE. Ten minutes.

Mr. KEFAUVER. I yield the Senator from Oregon 10 minutes.

Mr. MORSE. First I wish to say that I agree with the Senator from Florida when he said, if I understood him correctly, about everything on the bill that could be said was said last night. I do not know what else I could say in opposition to taking up the conference report at this time, but I shall summarize what I said after I put a few questions to the Senator from Florida, for the Record, in order to make legislative history.

Did the Senate conferees examine General Lasher when he made the flat statement that unless the Harris amendment is agreed to it will cost the Government $100 million?

Mr. SMATHERS. That is correct. That letter was written to us by General Lasher in his capacity as Executive Director of the Military Traffic Management Agency of the Department of Defense. We made that letter a part of the record.

Mr. MORSE. Did the conferees examine him about the letter?

Mr. SMATHERS. We had him before the conference committee, and did examine him with respect to the letter.

Mr. MORSE. Did he tell the conferees what the $100 million consisted of, by way of a breakdown?

Mr. SMATHERS. He indicated to us it was broken down somewhat as follows. If I may, I should like to put into the Record his own language.

Mr. MORSE. Yes.

Mr. SMATHERS. This is his statement:

> The monetary savings on the Department of Defense transportation bill for 1956 resulting from tenders under section 22 was $140 million—$12 million on household goods and $128 million on other freight and on passenger traffic (H. Rept. 677, 85th Cong.). Restrictions against carriers jointly submitting, or through concerted action, quotations, would nullify most of these savings under section 22.

That is a part of his argument. We will strike out the argument—

> As a vast majority of Government movements must, for practical purposes, result from joint consideration and action by carriers. This is particularly so on joint passenger movements, annual passenger agreements, area, territorial, and interterritorial freight adjustments. It is the informed judgment of the traffic people in the Department of Defense that approximately 75 percent of the savings under section 22 result from quotations concertedly arrived at, or better than $100 million.

We gathered from questioning him that approximately 85 percent of the Defense Department's expense with respect to transporting its goods had to do solely with freight, and that the remainder of it had to do with carrying passengers. In addition, I had him prepare a chart for us pertaining to traffic obtained by the supplemental air carriers, which Senators can see at the rear of the Chamber, and which I shall be glad to have the Senator from Oregon consult if he cares to do so.

General Lasher further pointed out that in 1952, when the nonscheduled airlines began to receive a part of the business, the railroads received about 65 percent of the total passenger business. That business has now been changed to the point where the railroads receive about 38 percent of the total passenger business of the Defense Department under the program in 1956. Of the group passenger travel of Defense, railroads, motor carriers, and water carriers receive much less than do the four nonscheduled airlines. That was, generally, the information we gathered.

Mr. MORSE. Would the Senator from Florida say the hearing which the conferees held, if it could be called a hearing, with General Lasher was comparable to the type of hearing which would have taken place had the Harris amendment, for example, gone back to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and those in favor and those opposed to it had been given an opportunity to appear before the committee and testify upon it?

Mr. SMATHERS. I would say it was not that type of hearing; but I would say the conferees, who have the same desire to save the taxpayers money as other Senators have, and the same desire, certainly in the case of the junior Senator from Florida—and I see present the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Lausche]—to preserve the protection of the antitrust laws, as has any other Senator on the floor, felt that under the circumstances in which we found ourselves, this was the most practical thing we could do.

Mr. MORSE. I understand. The Senator from Florida understands that if we differ, we differ only over the matter of procedure. I happen to be of the opinion that when the Senate receives a conference report which involves really a rewriting of the bill which left the floor of the Senate and went to conference—a rewriting in the sense that an amendment was added on the floor of the House, on which there has been no hearing so far as the Senate is concerned—the burden of proof is on the conferees to show that any great harm would result from our waiting until January, when we could get the whole matter sent back to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce for hearing on the Harris amendment. That is the position which the Senator from Oregon takes.

Mr. SMATHERS. I could not disagree greatly with the Senator from Oregon except in this respect: I believe we as legislators have a duty to represent the Government of the United States and the taxpayers, just as we have a duty of representing four nonscheduled airlines.

Mr. MORSE. That is right.

Mr. SMATHERS. In this instance we felt that unless we took this action it would cost the Federal Government an extra $100 million in fiscal 1958. That amount of money would not go to anybody that I know of except the railroads. So, in effect, we believed the most practical thing to do was to attempt to keep the situation as it has existed since 1948, at least until such time next year when perhaps the Senator from Tennessee or the Senator from Oregon, or perhaps I, could introduce a bill amending the Interstate Commerce Act and repealing outright the Bulwinkle provisions.

Mr. MORSE. The only difficulty I have with respect to the amount of $100 million is that I am not inclined to accept it without a record that makes it possible for adverse witnesses to rebut it.

Mr. SMATHERS. Information has been given to various Senators by lobbyists—and I do not use that term unkindly, because all groups must have lobbyists—to the effect that the figure $100 million probably is not correct.

Mr. MORSE. The reception room is full of lobbyists.

Mr. SMATHERS. As a Senator goes from the Chamber to the elevator he is importuned and buttonholed and has information stuck into his pockets and put in his ear that the figure is inaccurate. The best proof of the fact that it would cost the Government a great deal of money—I do not know if it would amount to $100 million—is that the Atomic Energy Commission has stated it would cost $4 million and the General Services Administration has indicated it would cost approximately $13 million.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Oregon has expired.

Mr. SMATHERS. I shall be glad to yield the Senator 5 minutes, and more, if he needs it.

Mr. MORSE. I am not going to be long. I made my long speech last night.

Mr. SMATHERS. I would say the best proof of the fact that the Government is realizing some benefit from the section 22 rate quotations made by the railroads is that in the complaint which was filed in the District Court it was alleged that the railroads were quoting rates 50 percent below the published rates. We find that is the first point in the decision of the court—that the railroads were quoting to the Government rates 50 percent below the published rates. It seems to me on the face of that allegation it would at least have to be admitted that the Government was getting some benefit from section 22.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. LAUSCHE. I wish to invite attention to the question whether the members of the committee had any knowledge of what savings the Government would make except those as declared by General Lasher. Pending before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce was Senate bill 939, which is the bill now before the Senate, asking that there be a repeal of section 22. The main subject of inquiry was whether it would be to the interest of the Government to reject Senate bill 939 or repeal section 22, which permitted the railroads to charge lesser rates to the Government. Inquiries were made of the witnesses as to whether it should or should not be repealed. The Defense Department appeared and fought against the repeal of section 22.

I should like to read to the Senator from Oregon, because he possibly did not hear it, what I said yesterday:

> On page 101 of the hearings on the bill, S. 939, we find the testimony of Mr. Smith, the Director for Transportation and Petroleum Logistics, of the Office of the Assistant Secretary of Defense, at the Pentagon, Washington, D. C. He was questioned by the Senator from Florida [Mr. SMATHERS]. I read the following from the hearings:
>
> How much would it cost the Government if section 22 were repealed or changed, as has been recommended in Senate bill 939?

That is what is before us.

> How much additional expense would it cost the Government?
>
> Mr. SMITH. At the time I testified before the House committee last year, based on the then freight bills of the military departments, I estimated it would cost, if section 22 were eliminated, and all the rates went back to the tariff basis, the cost to the Government would be $215 million per year. Based on the present freight bill, I testified before the House just a few days ago that the cost would be $128 million per year.

I may say that that statement of Mr. Smith was challenged. Questions were put to him about studies which showed that the Government would make no saving. When we were through with our hearing, there was unanimous judgment that section 22 should not be repealed, because the loss to the Government would be $215 million a year.

Mr. MORSE. I thank the Senator. I should like to have the Senator from Ohio or the Senator from Florida tell me whether the conferees considered the other alternatives by way of transportation available to the Government. It would seem to me that if the railroads raised the rates, then the Department of Defense would have to make a choice between and among alternatives, such as the use of trucks, buses, air and water facilities. Did the conferees go into that problem?

Mr. SMATHERS. I will say to the Senator from Oregon that of course when we talk about railroads the whole question of transportation is involved, and at the same time we are talking about motor trucks and water carriers and everything but air carriers, because they all come under the same provisions of section 22. Naturally we did consider that feature.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, I yield 5 additional minutes to the Senator from Oregon, so that we may continue the discussion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon is recognized for 5 additional minutes.

Mr. COOPER. My question is addressed either to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. LAUSCHE], to the Senator from Florida [Mr. SMATHERS], or to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE].

Night before last, when the conference report came before the Senate for debate, I asked a question. Perhaps in the debate that question has been discussed. If so, I have missed the discussion in my reading of the RECORD.

My question was addressed to the opinion of those who have charge of this bill as to what the legal effect would be on the proceedings which were initiated in court. My own judgment was that if the Harris amendment became the law, and there was no ambiguity in the law, then the discussion on the floor or in the committee report could not change the legal effect of the law.

Mr. MORSE. The Senator is one question ahead of me.

Mr. COOPER. The case is before the court. I know there are great lawyers considering the question in the Senate. I should like to have their judgment on that issue.

I think the Senator will remember that in 1947 when the portal-to-portal pay bill was enacted there was a problem involved. I know something about that legislation, because I was a member of the subcommittee which had charge of the measure then pending. In that bill, it was specifically provided that all prior claims or subsequent claims dealing with the area covered by the bill, outside the field of the Fair Labor Standards Act, which had previously been considered an area for compensable activities, should be invalid. There was written into the law a specific provision about the effect of that legislation upon such proceedings. There was a proceeding at that time which had been initiated in a Federal district court and was in the process of appeal. What is the judgment of the Senators who are in charge of this bill and those Senators who are opposing the bill as to the legal effect of the amendment, so far as further court proceedings are concerned?

Mr. MORSE. I think it is only fair that I give my judgment first, for whatever it may be worth. Then I should like to have the opinion of the conferees.

I think we owe it to them to tell them what our doubts are about the language of the conference report.

It is my judgment that we cannot write anything into the conference report, including the Harris amendment, which could have any possible effect on the case in the court, unless the court found first that the Harris amendment was ambiguous. If the Harris amendment is clear and unambiguous, it is the law.

In the conference report, I understand there is certain language which would seem to have been written by the conferees on the assumption that it sets forth reservations and qualifications about the Harris amendment. In my judgment, that is not worth the paper it is written on, if the court, picking up the Harris amendment, says that the law with the Harris amendment added to it has no ambiguity. The determination of whether there is an ambiguity cannot be made on the floor of the Senate. That determination has to be made in the courtroom, with able counsel representing the parties litigant. The court will have to decide whether there is an ambiguity.

If the court decides there is no ambiguity, then the conference report will not get into evidence. That is my legal opinion. I should be glad to ascertain whether the conferees are proceeding on the assumption that the Harris amendment is ambiguous. If that is so, that is all the more reason why we should wait until January, to get the matter cleared up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has again expired.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield me an additional 5 minutes?

Mr. SMATHERS. I am happy to yield the Senator an additional 5 minutes. However, I do not wish to yield all of my time. I believe I have yielded 15 minutes thus far. Is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has yielded 13 minutes thus far.

Mr. SMATHERS. I yield an additional 5 minutes to the Senator from Oregon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized for an additional 5 minutes.

Mr. MORSE. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. LAUSCHE. It is my understanding of the law that the court, when interpreting the language, must declare the language to mean what it says, unless there is ambiguity. If there is ambiguity, the court can search for ulterior surrounding circumstances to determine what was intended.

In my judgment, there can be no question about the clarity of the language. It reads:

> That nothing in this paragraph shall affect any liability or cause of action which may have accrued prior to the date on which this paragraph takes effect.

Now, the challenge is made that the preceding language may create an ambiguity. I do not think it does. The preceding language says that there shall continue the right to file, under the law, joint and concert rates. That is the only purpose of that language, I think we agree.

Mr. MORSE. I wish to say to my friend the Senator from Ohio that I think we agree on the rule of law as to legislative interpretation; but I want to say to my friend the Senator from Kentucky that the Senator from Ohio has convinced me all the more, when he has talked about the present status of the bill, how wise it would be to let the report go over until January. All the circumstances could be considered de novo before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. We could start all over.

In the meantime, the decision of Judge McGarraghy would go to the appellate courts for a determination.

That causes me to reiterate what I said last night, on the basis of the cost to the taxpayers. We should not forget that we are dealing here with a question involving the antitrust laws. I do not know what is more valuable to the American taxpayers than to keep the antitrust laws without any breach in them.

This dispute has arisen over the rider which was put on the bill in the House. I stress the argument I made last night, which was supported by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS], who first described this amendment as a rider. The Harris amendment is a rider. If we did such a thing on the floor of the Senate, I think it would be subject to the long standing judgment of the Senate that in the Senate we do not pass legislation containing riders. What we are discussing is a rider. I do not think it has any place in the legislation which left the floor of the Senate, at least without a Senate hearing and without consideration of a legislative committee.

The legislative committees and not the conferees, under the procedure of the Senate, should make the decision with regard to bills which are to have the approval of the Senate. So in this instance it is rather like having the buggy before the horse. We really have a new bill within a bill that is brought back to us from the conferees, and the new bill was inserted in the Senate bill by way of an amendment in the House. If that were my only protest I would say wait until January, but I have the other objections which I have also raised.

I think the Senator from Ohio has very accurately stated what the law is as to the rule of legislative interpretation, but I believe the discussion also points out that we have a first class lawsuit coming along if we agree to the Harris amendment. Certainly counsel will try to have it set aside on some basis, if possible.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. LAUSCHE. I wish to offer this further suggestion to the Senator from Kentucky. If the language is clear, as I contend it is, then there can be no question that the rights now existing are preserved. But if there is ambiguity, and the court must look further to determine what the Congress intended, I now call attention to page 5 of the conference report:

> However, it is the understanding of the conferees, in accepting the language which the House added to S. 939 as to the applicability of the Reed-Bulwinkle amendment to section 22 rates, that nothing therein adopted and agreed to herein would vitiate or in any way affect the order of the court in the Air Coach case or similar litigation now pending.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I shall not ask for any more time. If my friend from Florida will permit me, I will close with this further brief statement:

I do not think the language which the Senator from Ohio has just read would have any standing whatsoever in a court of law in litigation involving the McGarraghy decision, which will go up on appeal. I think what is proposed, in effect, by way of a rider on this particular piece of proposed legislation, would at least crack the antitrust wall, if not blast some stones out of it and cause a real breach.

I say to my friend from Florida that I do not consider it to be an issue of railroad versus air coach line. I am not approaching it from that standpoint. I am approaching it from the standpoint of what will best protect the shippers and consumers of the country. I do not think the Harris amendment would do that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Oregon has expired.

Mr. SMATHERS. I yield the Senator from Oregon 3 more minutes.

Mr. MORSE. I ask my friend from Florida to think with me for a moment as to the effect on the "nonskeds." The nonskeds are pretty important in a great many States which are discriminated against in freight rates, such as my section of the country, and, very important, in the Senator's section of the country. Some of the nonsked air coach lines which have been put out of business have their bases in Florida. They are Florida companies. They have made a great contribution to the transportation system of Florida, just as they are making a great contribution to the transportation system of the Western States. So I say, give them their day in court. They are in court. The case is going "upstairs."

Now it is proposed to adopt the Harris amendment, which undoubtedly applies to the nonskeds. It will be to the disadvantage of the air coach lines. We are doing it, as I said last night, under a "wrinkle" whereby all the railroads have to do, after their concerted action, is to file their reports on rates, whereas under the Reed-Bulwinkle Act, at least the Interstate Commerce Commission has the legal authority, if it wishes to exercise it, to require hearings, and to approve or disapprove.

As I read the bill and the conference report—I think I am right; but, as I said last night, if not, I wish to be corrected—if we adopt the conference report, the Interstate Commerce Commission will have no authority to disapprove the rates. We would make the Interstate Commerce Commission only the receptacle for the filing of rates.

Mr. President, that is dangerous, if we want to protect the antitrust laws of the country.

I close with this observation: This is a proposal to substitute delegation of authority for regulation. It would delegate to the railroads the power to act in concert, and then simply file with the Interstate Commerce Commission, as a receptacle, their new rates without the Interstate Commerce Commission having any power to disapprove them, however disadvantageous they might be to other transportation systems.

What justification do we hear offered most often? It is said that we might save the taxpayers some money in regard to certain shipments from military installations. So says General Lasher, of the Pentagon Building. I would like to see him before a committee, under examination, before accepting his figures.

But let us take his assumption for a moment. Let me tell the Senate what I consider more valuable to the consumers of America than $100 million. It is the importance of keeping protected, without any break, the great protective wall of antitrust authority, which is so vital to America's businessmen and consumers.

Mr. President, I rest my case.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his suggestion of the absence of a quorum for a moment?

Mr. KEFAUVER. Certainly.

Mr. SMATHERS. I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, I think it is important that the Senator from Oregon and everyone else understand that when the Reed-Bulwinkle bill was passed, which became section 5 (a) of the act, it exempted railroads, motor carriers, water carriers, and freight forwarders from prosecution on the charge of acting in collusion or concert in making rates, first, to commercial houses and to commercial shippers. That was the understanding. That is what everyone thought could happen.

The question arose as to what is meant by rates. The word was interpreted by the Interstate Commerce Commission in a letter sent to me, which I have placed in the RECORD. It is a recent letter, more recent than any evidence which I heard quoted the other day, which I do not believe is to the point. In its letter to me the Commission stated that it had always understood that this protection was given to the railroads, motor carriers, and other carriers subject to the Interstate Commerce Act in dealing with the Government on section 22 rates, as well as in dealing with commercial houses.

Judge McGarraghy said, "I am going to let the railroads get together in concert and make certain rates to commercial houses. But we will not let them do that with respect to section 22 rates."

It is not a question of whether we like the Reed-Bulwinkle Act or dislike it. Some of us voted for it, and some of us voted against it. It was passed by a two-thirds vote in the House and Senate in 1948. I believe that a reasonable interpretation at that time was that naturally the act applied to all rates. It was never dreamed that a judge would come along and say, "Wait a minute; it does not apply to the Government, but we are going to apply it with respect to everyone else."

A case was filed in New Mexico in which the district court judge threw out this kind of claim made on the same point. So we have two district court judges disagreeing as to what was meant by the Congress.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMATHERS. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. That is why I think it is so important that the case be decided "upstairs". We ought to wait until the judicial process has been completed.

The Reed-Bulwinkle Act, although it gave the railroads power to act in concert, did not provide that they might fix any rate they wished. The rates were subject to the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. SMATHERS. That was a very difficult point for me to understand, too. I labored with the Interstate Commerce Commission to try to find out the meaning of the law.

Section 22 provides that the railroads can even give free rates, or anything below published rates; and the Interstate Commerce Commission, as such, could not approve or disapprove of such rates. That has been the law with respect to section 22 since 1887.

Initially the Government entered into an agreement with the railroads. It said, "We are not going to pay these published rates. We are a big shipper. We want you to give us the best rates you can." The Government could bargain with the railroads, up and down the scale. What the railroads had to do, first, was to submit to the Interstate Commerce Commission an agreement. Railroad A, railroad B, and railroad C, would get together in a certain area, either the Southwest, the Southeast, or the Senator's area, the Northwest, and establish a procedure which they would follow in fixing rates. The approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission is required if the agreement is to protect the carriers. The agreement, or the methodology, had to be approved, but not the specific rate itself, with respect to section 22 quotations.

It may be that the entire section ought to be stricken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Florida has expired.

Mr. SMATHERS. I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMATHERS. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. I say good naturedly that this proves to me that action on the conference report ought to wait until January.

Mr. SMATHERS. We have had one hearing already this year on the question as to whether section 22 should be eliminated. The Senate finally passed on that bill on June 12. We agreed not to eliminate it, because it would cost the Government such an enormous amount of money.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMATHERS. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. KEFAUVER. The bill was not presented for the purpose of eliminating section 22. The bill as it came from the committee contained only a provision for filing. The committee was not presented with the choice as to whether or not to eliminate section 22.

Mr. SMATHERS. The Interstate Commerce Commission sent to us a bill proposing to strike out section 22.

Mr. KEFAUVER. But that was not presented to the Senate.

Mr. SMATHERS. It was presented to our committee. As I told the Senator last night, I do not recall his being present. We held hearings for about a week and a half.

Mr. KEFAUVER. I have to attend a great many committee meetings, and I did not know a thing about it.

Mr. SMATHERS. I understand. As I said to the "nonsked" airlines, "Where were you? We would have liked to hear from you."

The Senator from Ohio and I indicated at the start that we believed section 22 should be eliminated. It was only after we heard the testimony of the Government as to the $650 million traffic cost it had every year and that it would cost them in the neighborhood of $215 million extra if we knocked out section 22, that we finally decided we were wrong, and we, therefore, changed our minds. So we reported the amended bill to the Senate, and it was passed by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Florida has again expired.

Mr. SMATHERS. How much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 35 minutes remaining.

Mr. SMATHERS. I yield myself an additional 3 minutes.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMATHERS. I yield.

Mr. PASTORE. Am I correct in understanding the Senator to say that under existing law the railroads can agree to act in concert with reference to the establishment of rates which affect commercial and private shippers, without violating the antitrust laws?

Mr. SMATHERS. The Senator is correct.

Mr. PASTORE. But in the case of the Government, as a shipper, the railroads cannot act in concert in establishing freight rates without violating the antitrust laws?

Mr. SMATHERS. That is what the district court decision has just held. That has been held for the first time.

Mr. PASTORE. All that the bill before the Senate would do, if I am correct, is actually to put the Government, as a shipper, in the precise position a private shipper finds himself in today under existing law. Is that correct?

Mr. SMATHERS. The Senator is absolutely correct.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMATHERS. I am happy to yield.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Under the Reed-Bulwinkle law, as it applies to shippers generally, certain standards have to be followed; that is, a tariff is set and filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission and then complaints can be filed, and notice must be given. Under the bill a different rule is applied to the Government, because under it the contract is made and it is carried out, and it then provides retroactive application, whether negotiated or renegotiated, after the service has been performed. Therefore, there is no advance proposal, which is provided for in the Reed-Bulwinkle Act.

Mr. SMATHERS. Since I am speaking on my own time, I will say once again to the Senator from Tennessee that there is a difference between agreements and the rates resulting from agreements. There is that difference, as the Senator suggests and has put his finger on it, but has not said it in so many words. In the case of a commercial shipper, as the Senator from Rhode Island has pointed out, not only do the railroads get together to make quotations of rates, but the rates must first be approved by the ICC; but when they file the rates with respect to commercial shippers, they have to publish the rates. Under section 22, once they have filed the agreement, and the methodology and procedure has been approved—and section 22 has been in existence since 1887—they can make any rate—reduced or free—to the Government or for other reasons, and the ICC says on that particular type of rate the agreement is all right, and the railroads can make any kind of reduced rate.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMATHERS. I yield.

Mr. PASTORE. What is disturbing the junior Senator from Rhode Island—and I say this in all sincerity—is that I am one of those who believe that we ought to do very little to disturb the antitrust laws. I feel that the laws are for the common good and for the benefit of the people generally, and we ought not to take any steps which would weaken that philosophy and that system of law enforcement.

Mr. SMATHERS. I share the sentiments of the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. PASTORE. The situation, as I understand it now, is that today a private shipper can with immunity send his goods under a freight rate fixed by concert on the part of the railroads; but, when it comes to the Government, it would be a violation of the antitrust laws to do that. In other words, an individual is being placed in a better position than the Government itself.

Mr. SMATHERS. Under the decision of the district court, the Senator is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Florida has again expired.

Mr. SMATHERS. I yield myself an additional 3 minutes.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMATHERS. I yield.

Mr. JACKSON. In the House I voted against the Reed-Bulwinkle bill because I felt it was a weakening of the antitrust laws. If I understand the court's decision, the effect of it is to put the Government at a disadvantage so far as rates are concerned, as compared with private, commercial shippers. Am I correct?

Mr. SMATHERS. The Senator is correct; yes; under the court's interpretation.

Mr. JACKSON. The court decided, in effect, that, when Congress passed the Reed-Bulwinkle Act, it did not intend to include the Government with commercial shippers in the right on the part of the railroads to fix rates. Is that correct?

Mr. SMATHERS. That is what the court said.

Mr. JACKSON. I mean that is what the district court said.

Mr. SMATHERS. The district court; yes. That is the effect of the ruling. The effect is that the immunity from concert of action will apply with respect to rates for commercial shippers, but will not apply with respect to rates for the Government.

Mr. JACKSON. All I can say is that if shippers are to receive the benefits—if there are benefits, and I am not sure that there are many—from the provisions of the law, then I cannot understand on what basis we are going to permit the shippers to discriminate against the Government in the matter of freight charges.

Mr. SMATHERS. I can say to the Senator that there is only one basis——

Mr. JACKSON. I mean other than by repeal of the law.

Mr. SMATHERS. There is only one basis and that is the question whether we want to affect the suit of the nonscheduled airlines in the district court. The Senator is absolutely correct with respect to the equity of the matter.

Mr. JACKSON. So long as the law is on the books, it would occur to me it ought to be administered uniformly.

Mr. SMATHERS. The ICC thought so. The Defense Department thought so. The Members of the House and of the Senate who participated in the enactment of the Reed-Bulwinkle Act thought so. One district court also thought so. Another district court, however, has not thought so.

Mr. JACKSON. I should like to hear what the other side has to say.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMATHERS. I yield.

Mr. PASTORE. From a practical point of view, am I to understand that if this procedure is sanctified by the enactment of the proposed legislation now before the Senate, making the position of the United States Government analogous to that of a private shipper, the result will be reduced rates in favor of the Government, which would inure to the benefit of the taxpayers of the country? Is that correct? In other words, is this procedure being inaugurated to lower freight rates on behalf of the United States Government, or to raise them?

Mr. SMATHERS. Does the Senator refer to the procedure we are discussing here?

Mr. PASTORE. Yes; under the pending bill, or under the conference report.

Mr. SMATHERS. What we are endeavoring to do is to reestablish the condition which existed prior to the decision of the district court. I will answer the question by saying "Yes."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has again expired.

Mr. SMATHERS. I yield myself an additional 2 minutes. The Defense Department says, "We must have this procedure reestablished as it existed from 1948 to date, or it will cost us $100 million." There may be some question about the exact figure, but they say it will cost them a considerable amount of money if we do not take the action here proposed. The Atomic Energy Commission has sent us a letter saying, "If you do not reestablish the procedure, it will cost us about $4 million."

The General Services Administration has told us it would cost them about $13 million. It would cost the TVA $2 million, we have been told. And so it goes.

The only thing we can do is to accept the word of those agencies that we should reestablish the situation which existed prior to the decision of the district court. The only way we can do it is by the method the conference report proposes. In that way we would save the Government a considerable amount of money.

Mr. PASTORE. Without regard to whether there is involved a violation of the antitrust laws, is it not correct to say that the procedure in any event, whether it involves the United States Government or whether it involves a private shipper, is being instituted for the reason that the concerted action on the part of the various railroads will result in lower freight rates?

Mr. SMATHERS. To a certain extent. As I once again say, the Defense Department says it will. The Atomic Energy Commission says it will. The other agencies say it will. That is the only testimony we have to go on.

Mr. PASTORE. Does the Senator know of any instance where the concerted action on the part of the railroads has resulted in higher freight rates?

Mr. SMATHERS. Not with respect to the Government, because section 22, which allows the carriers to deal with the Government, says that the carriers can offer to the Government free or reduced rates, meaning below published rates which go to the ordinary commercial shipper.

Mr. PASTORE. May I ask one further question?

Mr. SMATHERS. I yield.

Mr. PASTORE. Is the grievance or the objection to the proposed legislation chiefly the fact that we are permitting a violation of the antitrust laws, or is this to protect competition on the part of nonscheduled airlines?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. SMATHERS. I yield myself an additional 2 minutes.

I wish to say in all candor, as I said before, and as I said this to the Senator from Minnesota last night, that we want to keep the nonscheduled airlines in this business, if we can, because naturally where there is one method of transportation competing with another method of transportation for Government business, the result will be a lower price for the Government.

What we want to do, as we agreed last night and in the other discussions we have had, is to try to put the nonscheduled airlines, at the beginning of next year, in the same competitive position with respect to getting Government business that the railroads and motor carriers occupy today. The reason we could not do it in the pending bill is that the bill proposes to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, whereas the nonscheduled airlines come under the Civil Aeronautics Act, as the Senator knows.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMATHERS. I am happy to yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. LAUSCHE. The Senator from Ohio desires to point out that shippers and the Interstate Commerce Commission support the passage of S. 939, as introduced, which would repeal section 22. That section, which is involved in this debate, provides for the Government lower rates on the same basis as that of the rates given to private shippers. The argument in favor of section 22—which, according to Mr. Smith, saved the Government $215 million 2 years ago—was as follows: The railroads are charging so little to the Government, that the Government has been saved $215 million; and to the extent that the income to the railroads has thus been reduced, other shippers have to make up for it.

We did not accept that argument as a sound basis for repealing section 22. But the court decision substantially repeals it; and this measure contemplates an avoidance of that repeal.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield, so that I may ask a question of the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SMATHERS. I am glad to yield.

Mr. PASTORE. Then I understand from the distinguished Senator from Ohio that there is absolutely no question in his mind that by permitting the railroads to act in concert with reference to the establishment of their rates, when the Government is a shipper, the result has been reduced rates to the Government and a saving to the taxpayers of the country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MONRONEY in the chair). The time the Senator from Florida has yielded to himself has expired.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, I yield myself 1 more minute.

Mr. SMATHERS. I yield further to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, I would answer the question of the Senator from Rhode Island by asking him to ask each member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and especially those, on the small committee, what their conclusion is. The conclusion is that if section 22 is repealed, so that the Government is removed from that protective position, the result will be an additional cost to the Government, not of $100 million, but of more than $200 million.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio has answered my question.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield to me?

Mr. SMATHERS. I am happy to yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I wish to know why it is that the American Association of Railroads is so anxious to lose money.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The additional time the Senator from Florida has yielded to himself has expired.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, I yield to myself 5 additional minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida is recognized for 5 additional minutes.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, how much time have I remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida has 22 minutes remaining.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I pose the question again to the Senator from Florida, in light of the colloquy which has just occurred. The American Association of Railroads indicated in a letter which was printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on yesterday—a letter signed by the vice president and general counsel of the association, that following Judge McGarraghy's decision, they would refuse to submit section 22 quotations or bids to the Department of Defense; and they are insisting that section 22 be maintained.

My question is this: If it be true that the railroads give so much lower rates under section 22, and if it is true that that saves the Government so much money, why are the railroads so anxious to have section 22, which makes the reduced rates possible, retained? The Government has to ship troops and commodities, regardless of the rates which apply. So why are the railroads so anxious to have the Government have the benefit of low rates?

Mr. SMATHERS. I asked them that question. I asked them, "Are you ever forced to accept this business?"

They replied, "No; we are not."

Then I asked, "Would you ever accept business would result in a loss to you?"

They replied, "Well, in some cases we would—if it resulted in our taking our equipment across the country, where we would be able to have a profitable haul back."

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield to me?

Mr. SMATHERS. I yield.

Mr. PASTORE. I am very much impressed with that argument, and surely the junior Senator from Rhode Island is not a protagonist of the railroads. But let me ask this question: Must we not rely on the statement which was made by the representative of the Department of Defense and the statement which was made by the representative of the Atomic Energy Commission, and the statements which have been made by the representatives of the other Government agencies which have shipping business? They have said to the committee, "Unless this measure is enacted, our transportation bill will be much higher." Does that not impress the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HUMPHREY. Yes. As I said yesterday, I was primarily seeking information which had not been obtainable from any hearings, because there were no hearings on the Harris amendment, inasmuch as the Harris amendment was tacked on in the House of Representatives, and was railroaded through—to use the proper terminology—in the conference.

But here there is a conflict of evidence. The Bureau of Transportation Economics and Statistics, of the Interstate Commerce Commission, points out that the Government pays more under section 22 rates. That statement is included in the record of the House committee hearings of the 84th Congress.

Mr. SMATHERS. That is correct; there is no doubt about it.

Mr. HUMPHREY. The chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission says that is not true. But I recall that at one time, when the committee was dealing with postal rates, and when a representative of the Interstate Commerce Commission was before the committee, when the committee was dealing with the so-called round-trip provisions in the case of the Post Office Department, wherein the Government of the United States was compelled to pay as much for the transportation of an empty railroad car as it was for the transportation of a full railroad car, there were 45 railroad attorneys against one post-office attorney, a gentleman from Chicago, Mr. Delany, a very able man——

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota is speaking in my time.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Very well; I shall suspend. I appreciate the courtesy of the Senator from Florida in permitting me to speak this long.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, the principal allegation made was that the railroads were taking action in concert in order to offer rates as much as 50 percent below the published rates; and the district court found that to be the case. So, Mr. President, if they were trying to offer rates as much as 50 percent below the published rates, the Government was bound to be benefiting by such lower rates.

Mr. HUMPHREY. But the point is that those rates were 50 percent below the published rates, in a situation in which there was competition. Certainly all that is involved in this matter is the old skin game, which is known to anyone who has ever run a corner drugstore, namely, if you have competition, cut your rates sharply, and cut them enough, and cut them long enough, until you can drive all your competition out of business. Then, when all your competition has vanished, you can raise your rates enough to make up for the cuts you made in the preceding period.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The additional time the Senator from Florida has yielded to himself has expired.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, I yield myself 1 more minute.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota and I agree that, ordinarily, when there is no competition, the railroads quote a passenger rate only 10 percent below the published rates; but when there is competition, they reduce their rates as much as 50 percent below the published rates.

On the other hand, why have a situation in which the railroads cannot establish reduced rates for the Government?

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield to me?

Mr. SMATHERS. I yield.

Mr. PASTORE. Will the Senator from Florida yield, so that I may ask another question of the Senator from Minnesota?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The additional time yielded by the Senator from Florida to himself has expired.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida is recognized for 2 additional minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Perhaps the Senator from Tennessee will yield time at this point.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, let me inquire how much time remains under my control?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee has 33 minutes remaining under his control.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, in that case I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President——

Mr. HUMPHREY. I yield.

Mr. PASTORE. The Senator from Minnesota makes a rather good argument. What disturbs me is that this situation does not apply to a private shipper, whereas all we are trying to do is give the United States Government the same advantages a private shipper has.

If action taken in concert actually, in the long run, hurts the United States, as a shipper, then does not the Senator think the law should be changed, so there would be a violation of the antitrust laws, without regard to whether the shipper was a private person or was the United States Government?

Mr. HUMPHREY. To be frank about the matter, my answer is "Yes." What the Senator from Rhode Island is saying is that the Reed-Bulwinkle Act is the source of the evil—and I agree—and that what we should do is, instead of scratching, perform major surgery.

However, we are not now in the operating room; we are only in the bandaging room. In short, what we have before us is the report of the conference committee.

Mr. PASTORE. If the Senator from Minnesota will today submit a bill to amend that, I will go along with him, and I will vote for the amendment.

Mr. HUMPHREY. But the point is that we cannot amend a conference report.

Mr. SMATHERS. But we could act on such an amendment in January of next year.

Mr. HUMPHREY. The Congress will be on the job then, I trust. In fact, we may not leave here before then. I say that because I want everyone to have a bad day. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Tennessee yield 5 minutes to me?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Oregon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I desire to have the attention of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JACKSON] and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PASTORE]. This is not the place to try a lawsuit; but I wish to say that I completely disagree with my friend, the Senator from Florida [Mr. SMATHERS] in regard to what the Reed-Bulwinkle Act provides. The act itself reads as follows:

> (3) CHANGE IN RATES, FARES, ETC.; NOTICE REQUIRED; SIMPLIFICATION OF SCHEDULES
>
> No change shall be made in the rates, fares, and charges or joint rates, fares, and charges which have been filed and published by any common carrier in compliance with the requirements of this section, except after 30 days' notice to the Commission and to the public published as aforesaid, which shall plainly state the changes proposed to be made in the schedule then in force and the time when the changed rates, fares, or charges will go into effect; and the proposed changes shall be shown by printing new schedules, or shall be plainly indicated upon the schedules in force at the time and kept open to public inspection: Provided, That the Commission may, in its discretion and for good cause shown, allow changes upon less than the notice herein specified, or modify the requirements of this section in respect to publishing, posting, and filing of tariffs, either in particular instances or by a general order applicable to special or peculiar circumstances or conditions: Provided further, That the Commission is authorized to make suitable rules and regulations for the simplification of schedules of rates, fares, charges, and classifications and to permit in such rules and regulations the filing of an amendment of, or change in, any rate, fare, charge, or classification without filing complete schedules covering rates, fares, charges, or classifications not changed if, in its judgment, not inconsistent with the public interest.

So I dispute the contention of the Senator from Florida that under the Reed-Bulwinkle Act, fare changes and rate changes do not have to be approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The distinguished Senator from Washington [Mr. JACKSON] and I discussed this matter at great length on yesterday. We think the Commission is subject to severe criticism, and we think it should be thoroughly investigated, as we said on yesterday, on the floor of the Senate. The Commission has been accepting these changes without itself making any alterations in them. But under the statute, the Commission has the clear, mandatory duty, in my opinion, to see to it that any rate proposed as a result of action taken in concert meets with the approval of the Commission.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon yield?

Mr. MORSE. First, Mr. President, I wish to say that in the present instance, the attempt being made is to breach the antitrust law. The present attempt is to make the Interstate Commerce Commission the receptacle of notices of rate changes, rather than to have the Interstate Commerce Commission make the railroads come before it and put the proposed new rates on top of the table, in advance of initiating them.

> At reduced rates for the United States Government, or any agency or department thereof, including quotations or tenders for retroactive application—> for retroactive application whether negotiated or unnegotiated after the services have been performed, shall be in writing or confirmed in writing and a copy or copies thereof shall be submitted to the Commission by the carrier or carriers offering such tenders or quotations.

That is the jigger, that is the gimmick, in this particular bill—

There is nothing the Interstate Commerce Commission can do, under that provision. It will just have to receive the copies or file them.

I am saying, let us wait until January. Let the McGarraghy decision go to the court of appeals. In my judgment, Judge McGarraghy found, in effect, that what railroads are doing is using traffic from military installations, Government business, to undercut other forms of transportation, in order to break the competition, and then they will be in a position, when the field is wide open, after breaking competing lines, to raise the rates, which the taxpayers would have to pay.

So what Judge McGarraghy is saying—and I am not so sure it is not a very wise statement; at least we should wait until the Supreme Court has a look at it—is that he is not going to sit still and let the railroads use the Pentagon and the Atomic Energy Commission and other Government agencies as a device for a cutrate program for shipment of goods in order to break other shippers who are serving the businessmen and commercial houses of America.

It makes a good argument to say we are going to save the taxpayers some money by shipping Government goods in that manner. What the judge is pointing out is that the railroads are using traffic from Government installations for cutting rates in order to put competition out of business. Then watch how high the rates will go after the competition has ended.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. JACKSON. I voted against the Reed-Bulwinkle bill, because I felt that breaking the antitrust laws was bad and that in the end competition would be lessened; but is it not true that the same argument which the distinguished senior Senator from Oregon has just made, which is an able argument, applies with equal force where such rates are made for private commercial handlers?

Mr. MORSE. It surely does. Under the bill, with the Harris amendment in it, the Interstate Commerce Commission, if it is not holding hearings, is not approving of these rates and is not carrying out the language of the Reed-Bulwinkle provisions.

Mr. JACKSON. One reason why I voted against the Reed-Bulwinkle bill was that private commercial shippers could do the very thing the Senator has mentioned. What disturbs me is that the provision has been interpreted to apply to commercial shippers, but not to the Government. I am against the whole procedure. How can one justify discrimination against the Government in the matter of lower rates?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Oregon has expired.

Mr. KEFAUVER. I yield the Senator from Oregon 3 minutes more.

Mr. JACKSON. How can one justify discrimination against the Government, with all the accompanying bad practices, when Congress has legalized the action as to private commercial shippers? I am against the Reed-Bulwinkle Act. I voted against the bill. What disturbs me is that the Government has a disadvantage so far as actual dollars are concerned.

Mr. MORSE. My reply is that we ought to wait until the higher courts have acted upon the decision of the district court. Then we could have hearings on the Harris amendment, which we have not had, and get testimony before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, of which the Senator from Rhode Island is a member. Hearings could be held in January, and then we could decide whether or not it is desired to rewrite the whole bill. I do not know why we should, on the floor of the Senate, pass on a rider which has been added to the Senate bill by the House of Representatives.

Mr. PASTORE. I agree with the Senator. If there were something we could do to suspend the whole action until January, that would be all right, but I suppose we are going to vote the report up or down. When the question comes on a motion to recommit, I shall vote for it. I think discrimination ought to be removed entirely. I believe the law ought to apply as equally to the private shipper as it does to the Government.

Mr. MORSE. I shall vote against repeal of section 22 in January, if I get a chance to do so.

Mr. PASTORE. I shall, too, but when the motion to recommit is put, I shall vote for it. If there is to be an up-or-down vote, I shall vote to give the United States Government the same kind of an advantage private shippers have.

Mr. MORSE. The question before the Senate is the Kefauver motion, which proposes to postpone action on the conference report until January.

Mr. PASTORE. I shall vote for it.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I have made my case, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. KEFAUVER. I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, the argument which has been relentlessly pursued in this case—and it is a moving appeal to the citizenry—is that we are going to save the Government money. The answer to that argument is that we may temporarily chalk up or add up an economic saving, but at the expense, No. 1, of basic public statutes, the antitrust laws, which protect the free enterprise system ultimately at the expense of the users of transportation, because the history of this kind of activity is that when there are loss leaders, which is exactly what section 22 deals with, they drive competition from the marketplace. For every dollar the Government saves, the taxpayer ultimately pays far more in increased prices or rates.

If what is sought were permitted, it would be a violation of the Robinson-Patman Act, because it would legalize loss leaders, since that is what is contemplated, and in one sense there would not be competition in good faith, because there would be competition only in the areas where there was an attempt to destroy competition.

It is on that basis that I think the Senator from Tennessee has made a motion which is worthy of our favorable consideration. The Senator from Tennessee is not saying we should kill the conference report. The Senator from Tennessee is saying we should delay final action on it until the committees designated by Congress to undertake an investigation into this very complex field have an opportunity to do so. The complexities of the transportation laws are almost beyond human comprehension. The Senator from Tennessee has said, "Look, here comes a House provision on a conference report," and he is asking only that the Senate of the United States take enough time, until January next year, next session, so that we can really look into the question. As the Senator from Rhode Island has said, he would have serious doubts about voting nay on the conference report, which I think all of us would have, because after we return home people might say, "You voted to have the taxpayers pay $100 million more."

By the way, I remind Senators that the conference report contains retroactive provisions. Therefore, even if we should delay action until January, nothing will be lost even if the conference report should then be agreed to. In the meantime, Members of the Senate will know what they are doing.

I say to my colleagues that when we literally drive a bulldozer through the antitrust laws in the name of the Federal Government, and in the name of departments and agencies whose representatives appeared before Congress, with a letter as their testimony, then we are taking a pretty serious step. I am frank to tell my colleagues I am in doubt about many points in the conference report. It is not ironbound.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. PURTELL. I wonder if the Senator will yield to me.

Mr. SMATHERS. I think I have yielded to the Senator from Tennessee and the Senator from Oregon about 10 minutes in order to argue the proponent's case. I think the Senator naturally would like to see that action reciprocated.

Mr. PURTELL. I understood the Senator from Oregon to state he quoted from the Reed-Bulwinkle bill. Do I correctly understand that the Senator from Oregon quoted from a law which he said was the Reed-Bulwinkle bill?

Mr. MORSE. Yes.

Mr. PURTELL. As I understand section 7, that is not the Reed-Bulwinkle bill. The section is section 5 (a).

Mr. MORSE. I quoted section 6.

Mr. PURTELL. The Reed-Bulwinkle part is section 5 (a).

Mr. MORSE. I may say to the Senator from Connecticut, counsel advises me that I quoted from the rate section of the Reed-Bulwinkle bill.

Mr. SMATHERS. Counsel is incorrect.

Mr. PURTELL. Counsel is not correct. The Reed-Bulwinkle part is section 5 (a).

Mr. MORSE. I may say to the Senator from Connecticut I quoted section 6 of the Interstate Commerce Act, of which the Reed-Bulwinkle bill is a part, and the rate part applies to the section of the act that includes the Reed-Bulwinkle bill. I have quoted the ratemaking section of the Interstate Commerce Act, of which the Reed-Bulwinkle bill is a part, and it is equally applicable to the procedures under the Reed-Bulwinkle section.

Mr. PURTELL. Of course, every part of the act is a part of the whole, as is the Reed-Bulwinkle bill, but the Reed-Bulwinkle bill specifically treats of this matter under paragraph 9, affecting immunity under the antitrust law. That is what the Reed-Bulwinkle bill provides, and it is not provided in section 6.

Mr. MORSE. It has nothing to do with the duty of the Commission to pass upon any rates.

Mr. PURTELL. That is correct.

Mr. MORSE. That is what section 6 provides. It is the only rate-making section.

Mr. PURTELL. Mr. President, may I have another minute?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I yield the Senator 1 minute.

Mr. PURTELL. I suggest that we have a letter from the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission which also points out that this not only covers rates, as one might interpret what rate means, but also agreements under section 5 (a).

Mr. MORSE. My question is, So what? The Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission cannot change the law. I read the law to the Senator.

Mr. PURTELL. No, the Senator did not read section 5 (a). The Senator read section 6.

Mr. MORSE. I read the rate section, which applies to the Reed-Bulwinkle act.

Mr. PURTELL. That is correct, but that does not apply to section 22, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. MORSE. It applies to any rate any railroad may make, under the Interstate Commerce Act, unless we pass the bill and the situation which is set up under it. Under the Interstate Commerce Act, the railroads cannot establish rates without getting approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. PURTELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield me 1 more minute?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I yield an additional minute to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. PURTELL. May I read section 22?

Mr. MORSE. Certainly.

Mr. PURTELL. Section 22 provides:

> That nothing in this part shall prevent the carriage, storage, or handling of property free or at reduced rates for the United States, State, or municipal governments, or for charitable purposes——

Mr. MORSE. For charitable purposes. Section 22 does not mean that in the absence of the legislation such as it is proposed we pass today the railroads can fix any rate they want to and not follow the regulations prescribed in section 6.

Mr. PURTELL. The regulations in section 5.

Mr. MORSE. That is why I suggest we ought to have a thorough investigation of what we are doing.

Mr. PURTELL. They can follow the regulations prescribed in section 5. If the agreement is entered into and approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Commission can grant to the railroad authority to charge the rate. They have been doing that since 1948.

Mr. MORSE. That is what I am talking about. They ought to get approval. The Senator has used those words himself.

Mr. PURTELL. They do get approval, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. MORSE. I was answering the argument that they did not have to get approval, and the Senator said that they did. I am glad the Senator is on my side.

Mr. PURTELL. I beg the Senator's pardon. I should like to be on the Senator's side, but I am not, because if I were I would be on the wrong side.

Mr. MORSE. Do they get approval, or do they not?

Mr. PURTELL. They get an approval of the right to agree, but not of the rates, as stated in section 5 (a).

Mr. MORSE. We cannot escape the language of section 6, which is applicable to section 5 (a).

Mr. PURTELL. I am not trying to escape the language of section 5 (a). I refer to the language of section 5 (a) and section 22.

Mr. MORSE. That is further evidence that we had better wait until January to find out about many things.

Mr. PURTELL. We have a clear understanding of it.

Mr. MORSE. The Senator thinks he does, but he had better wait until the courts get through with it.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee has 16 minutes remaining.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Does the Senator from Florida desire to yield some time now?

Mr. SMATHERS. I have less time remaining than has the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, I yield myself 6 minutes.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I yield to the Senator from Rhode Island for a question.

Mr. PASTORE. I ask the distinguished Senator from Tennessee this question: In the event that action is postponed on the conference report, will the result be that the Government will be able to proceed as it has proceeded heretofore, before the case was brought in the district court, or will the Government be prejudiced in any way, in view of the decision rendered by the court?

Mr. KEFAUVER. There is no prohibition against the Government proceeding, under section 22, to enter into any contract with any carrier for the hauling of goods at a reduced rate. It can continue to proceed in that manner. The only thing which the carriers could not do would be joining together for the purpose of getting Government business. That is what is covered by Judge McGarraghy's opinion. The carriers could proceed to reduce the rates and make any rate they wanted to for the purpose of getting Government business, so long as they did not act in a conspiracy in violation of the antitrust laws.

Mr. PASTORE. I understand that the decision has been appealed.

Mr. KEFAUVER. The decision has been appealed to the court of appeals. The court of appeals will decide the case this fall.

Mr. PASTORE. Does the judgment of the district court stand as the law until the appeal is heard, or does the appeal automatically vacate the opinion of the court pending the appeal?

Mr. KEFAUVER. As the matter now stands, the railroads, if they entered into a conspiracy, would be taking a chance of violating the antitrust laws. Whether they are willing to take the chance, I do not know. Personally, I think they are in direct violation of the antitrust laws in what they have done, under the McGarraghy opinion.

Mr. PASTORE. I hope the Senator from Tennessee realizes what the problem of the Senator from Rhode Island is. I have already indicated that I should like to see action on the conference report postponed. Now I understand from the remarks of the distinguished Senator from Tennessee that we cannot postpone it, because in the meantime, from now until we take action in the Congress, the decision handed down by Judge McGarraghy will be in effect. Is that correct, or incorrect? I should like to know the answer.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Tennessee yield to me for a half minute, with regard to the question which has been asked?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. I should like to have the attention of counsel. Counsel cannot speak, but he can speak through me.

It is my understanding that at the present time there is no injunction in effect. The court of appeals has stayed the injunction. The appeal will be heard on September 9.

Counsel advises me that that is the correct understanding. The appeal will be heard September 9.

Mr. PASTORE. Therefore, as the matter now stands, we can proceed, and go along as we did before the case was taken to the district court, under the law as it was understood at the time.

Mr. MORSE. That is my understanding.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KEFAUVER. While the injunction has not taken effect, if the court of appeals and the Supreme Court finally decide as Judge McGarraghy decided, in my opinion the small air companies, in the absence of the proposed legislation, would be able to win the judgment against the railroads. But if Judge McGarraghy is overruled, they would not be able to.

Mr. PURTELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for 1 minute?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I yield first to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY].

Mr. HUMPHREY. It seems to me the point which needs to be clarified, insofar as the law which is under discussion is concerned, is the exact interpretation relating to section 5 (a) and section 22. We keep kicking these two sections around. I should like to see if I have a proper understanding of them.

Section 5 (a) is in fact the Reed-Bulwinkle Act.

Mr. SMATHERS. The Senator is correct.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Section 5 (a) provides for concerted ratemaking, but subject to the plenary jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Section 5 (a) provides for concerted ratemaking, but the carriers have to file a notice for 30 days and make an appearance.

Mr. HUMPHREY. That is correct.

Mr. KEFAUVER. And anybody can file an objection.

Mr. PURTELL. It is simply necessary to get approval.

Mr. KEFAUVER. It is necessary to get approval.

Mr. HUMPHREY. That matter is subject to the jurisdiction of the ICC.

Mr. KEFAUVER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. HUMPHREY. In other words, the rates must ultimately be subject to ICC authority.

Mr. KEFAUVER. That is correct.

Mr. HUMPHREY. That is my understanding. Section 22 does not refer to rates, but refers to reduced rates.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Or contracts for charges.

Mr. HUMPHREY. But the phrase reduced rates is used.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. KEFAUVER. How much time do I have remaining, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 10 minutes remaining.

Mr. KEFAUVER. I yield myself 3 more minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREY. As I understand the reduced rates, as defined in section 22, are not subject to ICC jurisdiction.

Mr. KEFAUVER. That is correct.

Mr. HUMPHREY. So on the one hand, while the procedure the Senate has cited may be the practice where rates are agreed to in concert under section 5 (a), the Reed-Bulwinkle Act, at least the theoretical authority is within the Interstate Commerce Commission to adjust those rates, to hold them within minimums and maximums, as the ICC Act states, and, therefore, the matter is under the plenary jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Section 22, since it refers to reduced rates, does not come under the ICC jurisdiction. In other words, those rates are immune from any regulation.

Mr. KEFAUVER. And if the conference report bill shall be enacted the standards of the Reed-Bulwinkle Act will not apply to Government business. It will be possible to contract, and then—after the fact—retroactively file the papers with the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Exactly.

Mr. KEFAUVER. And there would be no standard of regulation by the Interstate Commerce Commission, as is ordinarily the case.

Mr. HUMPHREY. The Interstate Commerce Commission becomes a depository.

Mr. KEFAUVER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Or an archive, so to speak, for action which is about to take place or has taken place.

I invite to the attention of my colleagues a reference which was brought to my attention as of yesterday, which I did not mention.

In the 79th Congress, I believe it was, there was an investigation made of Government payments to railroads for the shipment of war goods, materiel, and personnel. Those payments were made under the reduced rate schedules within the confines or the purview of section 22. It was discovered at that time, demonstrated by the testimony of the ICC itself, that the Government was in a helpless position insofar as the ICC was concerned, in order to obtain any kind of relief or action on the part of the Interstate Commerce Commission as to overcharging under section 22.

Mr. KEFAUVER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. HUMPHREY. So it seems to me that the history relating to section 22, the economic history insofar as the Government is concerned, is not one of reduced rates which are meaningful in terms of real cost, but rather one of excess charges, where the Government makes payments of excess charges and is unable to recoup that which even its own instrumentality of Government says it deserves.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. PURTELL. Will the Senator yield to me, to allow me to ask a question?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I wanted to save the remaining time.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I will conclude on that note, because it appears to me, Mr. President, that what we are doing here, if we are not very careful, is standardizing, and really making it possible to do under the law what has been an abuse of practice in the past.

Mr. PURTELL. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me 1 minute to refer to the remarks of the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. KEFAUVER. Yes.

Mr. PURTELL. Is the Senator from Minnesota clear in his recollection as to the information he received, that the matter discussed in the 79th Congress referred to section 22?

Mr. HUMPHREY. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. PURTELL. That is correct?

Mr. HUMPHREY. That is my understanding.

Mr. PURTELL. I suggest to the Senator that he might wish to check his source of information.

Mr. HUMPHREY. My information, if the Senator will permit me to reply, is that there were Senate hearings on House bill 2536 in the 79th Congress, when evidence was presented by the Justice Department, on the part of the Government, seeking to obtain some relief. The United States Government had been demonstrated to have been the victim of concerted action under section 22 practices.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, what time is left on our side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee has 7 minutes, and the Senator from Florida has 14 minutes.

Mr. KEFAUVER. The Senator from Florida has more time remaining than I have. Does he wish to yield any time?

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I wonder if the Senator from Florida would be willing to answer a couple of questions.

Mr. SMATHERS. I shall be happy to try to answer them.

Will the Chair stop me at the end of 3 minutes?

Mr. CLARK. Am I correct in saying that before the lower court decision the procedure under the Reed-Bulwinkle Act had been operating smoothly for almost 9 years, and the railroads had been making arrangements with the Government for the transportation of people and goods, and that there was no controversy over the procedure?

Mr. SMATHERS. The Senator is correct.

Mr. CLARK. Is it not also true that during that period the nonscheduled airlines very much increased their share of the transportation of this kind of Government traffic, as compared with the share which they had at the beginning of that period?

Mr. SMATHERS. The Senator is correct. The chart behind the Senator will show the history and the percentages for the past 3 years.

Mr. CLARK. Is it not true that all the conference agreement purports to do is to continue the status quo before the lower court decision?

Mr. SMATHERS. The Senator is correct.

Mr. CLARK. So no drastic change in existing law is proposed. This is not a situation in which we are violating the antitrust laws and getting into something brandnew. It is proposed merely to continue the situation which has been the law for 9 years.

Mr. SMATHERS. As it was understood by all the Government agencies, including the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the railroads.

Mr. CLARK. Is it not also true that the conference report protects the right of appeal of the nonscheduled airlines, by reason of the proviso in the amendment?

Mr. SMATHERS. We attempt to do so in every way. That is a matter of legal interpretation. We have tried to protect them, and I think we have.

Mr. PURTELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield 3 minutes to me?

Mr. SMATHERS. I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. PURTELL. An answer was given to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PASTORE] as to what effect the action taken by the conference committee might have upon the carrying of Government goods.

The information we have indicates that the railroads would be very reluctant to operate under section 22, fearful that ultimately they might find themselves in violation of the law. Therefore they will not grant the low rates to the Government at this time or until such time as action is taken by the court or by the Congress.

I wish to make it clear that I have no interest in the railroads or the nonscheduled airlines. Nor am I trying legislatively to displace a court decision.

We have heard a great deal about section 5 (a) and section 22. What do these sections provide? Section 5 (a) provides as follows:

> Any carrier party to an agreement between or among two or more carriers relating to rates, fares, classifications, divisions, allowances, or charges (including charges between carriers and compensation paid or received for the use of facilities and equipment), or rules or regulations pertaining thereto, or procedures for the joint consideration, initiation, or establishment thereof, may, under such rules and regulations as the Commission may prescribe, apply to the Commission for approval of the agreement, and the Commission shall by order approve any such agreement (if approval thereof is not prohibited by paragraph (4), (5), or (6) if it finds that, by reason of the furtherance of the national transportation policy declared in this act, the relief provided in paragraph (9) should apply with respect to the making and carrying out of such agreement.

Paragraph (9) is the one which affects the entire area we are discussing. It reads as follows:

> Parties to any agreement approved by the Commission under this section and other persons are, if the approval of such agreement is not prohibited by paragraph (4), (5), or (6), hereby relieved from the operation of the antitrust laws with respect to the making of such agreement, and with respect to the carrying out of such agreement in conformity with its provisions and in conformity with the terms and conditions prescribed by the Commission.

That means, as I read it, that any agreement which has been approved by the Commission, to the extent that the agreement points out what it is for, would be free of the antitrust laws. But it certainly does not mean that any operation by the railroads or any other carriers outside the aggreement approved by the Commission would not be in violation of the antitrust laws.

Let me point out one thing further with respect to section 5 (a), which we have been discussing.

> (7) The Commission is authorized, upon complaint or upon its own initiative without complaint, to investigate and determine whether any agreement previously approved by it under this section, or terms and conditions upon which such approval was granted, is not or are not in conformity with the standard set forth in paragraph (2), or whether any such terms and conditions are not necessary for purposes of conformity with such standard, and, after such investigation, the Commission shall by order terminate or modify its approval of such agreement if it finds such action necessary to insure conformity with such standard, and shall modify the terms and conditions upon which such approval was granted to the extent it finds necessary to insure conformity with such standard or to the extent to which it finds such terms and conditions not necessary to insure such conformity. The effective date of any order terminating or modifying approval, or modifying terms and conditions, shall be postponed for such period as the Commission determines to be reasonably necessary to avoid undue hardship.

What I am trying to point out is that it is felt that relief was provided in that such agreements had to be approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission, covering section 22 rates. It was felt that there was recourse to the Commission, and that complaint could be made. I do not know that any such complaints have been made. My understanding is that no complaints of that nature have been registered.

That is the situation under the Reed-Bulwinkle Act. What we are trying to do is not to determine what the courts should do, and not to act upon what the court has done. My study has convinced me beyond question that section 22 was covered by section 5 (a). I want to see the status quo maintained until court decisions may indicate otherwise. I do not wish to see any change at this time by way of legislation.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PURTELL. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Does the Senator agree with the Senator from Florida that the bill protects the right of appeal of the nonscheduled airlines in a pending case?

Mr. PURTELL. I am not interested in the nonscheduled airlines. I am not interested in the railroads. Frankly, what they have done under the antitrust laws is something for the court to decide.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, I yield myself the remaining time on my side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee has 7 minutes.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, the discussion in the Senate today is a most eloquent argument in favor of the motion I have made to postpone consideration of the conference report until January 30, 1958, at 2 o'clock p. m.

We are dealing with one of the most intricate and complicated subjects of legislation. It is highly technical. There have been arguments back and forth as to the meaning of section 5 (a) and section 22. There have been arguments back and forth as to whether the Government will lose money or make money, and as to the merits of section 22.

The very confusion which exists here today is ample reason why we should have some committee guidance and direction on this very complicated subject. The reason we are not getting committee guidance and instruction is that a bill providing merely for a report to the Interstate Commerce Commission was passed by the Senate. That was what was presented to the House. The railroad company lost its lawsuit, and, as railroads have done so frequently, it comes to Congress and tries to have a law enacted, in order to win its lawsuit before the legislative body, when it should fight it out in the courts.

Let us talk about some of the issues in dispute.

Mr. PURTELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I yield.

Mr. PURTELL. The Senator has said that the railroads have come to Congress for relief. Is it not a fact, as has already been indicated, that it was the Defense Department which came to Congress and complained? It was the Defense Department which asked for some relief.

Mr. KEFAUVER. If the Senator does not know that the railroad lobby is working, he has not been around to see about it.

Mr. PURTELL. Lobbies are active on both sides.

Mr. KEFAUVER. The Senator says that lobbies are active on both sides. I presume he is correct.

It has been stated that section 22 has always been considered to be covered by the Reed-Bulwinkle law. That is not true. Even in April, before the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, when the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Lausche] and the Senator from Florida [Mr. Smathers] were present, Mr. Clarke, the Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, made this statement:

> The Commission has no power or authority at the present time to interfere in any way with the section 22 rate. We can't compel it to be raised or lowered. It is outside our jurisdiction entirely.

I invite attention to the history of the debates. I ask unanimous consent to have excerpts from the debates printed in the Record at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the excerpts were ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

> The hearings held by the Committee on Interstate Commerce have never been printed. They are not available to Members of the Senate. The bill was passed in the House on December 10, 1945, came to the Senate, and was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. The committee held some hearings during the spring. I do not know why they have not been printed and are not available to the Members of the Senate, but they are not. No one outside the few members of the committee who were present at the time knows what the testimony was. Frequently, when bills have been brought up in the Senate, Senators have even objected to their consideration until the hearings could become available, and no one seriously questioned the propriety of such a request for postponement.
>
> Mr. Russell. I appreciate the Senator from Kentucky making this point very clear. Here we have a very highly controversial bill, involving one of the most complicated subjects in the entire American economy, that of freight rates, on which hearings were held for several weeks, and we are asked to take up the bill and consider it without having been able to secure a copy of the hearings and read them. The members of the Committee on Interstate Commerce may have had the hearings available, and may have had an opportunity to hear the witnesses themselves. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. Reed] is familiar with these subjects by virtue of his long background in dealing with public-utility matters.
>
> Mr. President, this bill affects my State. It affects litigation which the Supreme Court of the United States has permitted my State to file in that Court, and which has been referred to a master for determination. In view of the fact that I have not been able even to secure copies of the hearings, to see what the witnesses submitted in behalf of my State, I certainly feel justified in using any means at my command which are legal to see that the bill is not passed by the Senate, or taken up for consideration, in view of the fact that we have had no opportunity whatever to read the hearings. I appreciate the fact that the Senator from Kentucky has made that point clear.
>
> I ask the Senate in all seriousness, how often and to what extent are we to constitute ourselves into a supreme court in order to take away from the court litigation which has gone there properly under the law, in order that we may cut the ground out from under the Supreme Court in determining what is the law in regard to these situations? That is what this bill attempts to do.
>
> Mr. Barkley. Yes; very similar. The introduction of such bills seems to have become a habit here. If someone brings a lawsuit in the Federal court, and it gets to the Supreme Court, or does not get to the Supreme Court, a case which involves an interpretation of the laws which Congress has passed to protect the American people, instead of fighting the question out in the courts and allowing the courts to exercise their jurisdiction, Congress is asked to enact a law passing upon the question in advance of the courts having an opportunity to pass upon it. I think it is a vicious practice; I think it is a vicious habit; it ought never to have been indulged in.
>
> It seems to me that for the Congress to start out on the career of undertaking to nullify lawsuits, undertaking to set itself up an a master in chancery in the Supreme Court to determine what are the rights of these litigants, is an unjustified invasion of the jurisdiction of the court.
>
> Mr. Hill. And the Senate at this moment does not even have the hearings, does not even have the testimony, does not even have the evidence on this bill available to it for study.
>
> I know that investigation of the subject was made. Under this bill the Department of Justice would have no occasion to make such an investigation to determine the facts, because we are proposing to say to the Government of the United States, to the Department of Justice, and to the Federal courts, "The railroads are to be put on an island of safety, beyond the reach of the antitrust laws."
>
> Mr. Ferguson. As I read that provision, the bill would not interfere with the litigation before the Supreme Court. If certain railroads have violated the antitrust laws, they certainly should be punished. The last thing I would wish to do would be to interfere with a suit for the punishment of such railroads.
>
> Mr. Russell. The State of Georgia sought injunctive relief against the railroads from the conspiracy which was alleged, a conspiracy to combine to fix rates which were detrimental to the State of Georgia. If we pass this bill it will permit the railroads to get together and fix rates. The very heart will be cut out of the case of the State of Georgia which seeks to enjoin the conspiracy to discriminate against the State of Georgia and other States similarly situated.
>
> Mr. Barkley. I respectfully submit that it would do the State of Georgia, or any other State in the United States, no good simply to obtain a decision of the Supreme Court holding that what the railroads did at the time stated in the complaint was unlawful, when we are proposing to make it lawful hereafter for the railroads to do the same things which are involved in the lawsuit in the Supreme Court. The decision would be moot. It would not grant any relief. There would be no particular efficacy in having the Supreme Court decide that something which happened a year or two ago was unlawful then, and to have the Congress say that from now on it shall be lawful to do the same thing.
>
> Mr. Fulbright. This matter is as important to Arkansas as it is to Georgia. I cannot understand why there is any urgency that the bill be considered. It seems to me that it would be wholly inappropriate to have the Senate consider the bill at this time. The hearings have not been printed, and it is obvious that the subject matter of the bill is controversial.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Representatives Bulwinkle, Reed, and others stated that the Reed-Bulwinkle bill applied only to rates which were under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission; that the section 22 rates, being reduced rates or special rates for Government service, were not under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission. That is what Mr. Clarke said. That is what the sponsors of the bill said. That is what Judge McGarraghy has said. There may have been some statements to the contrary, but I have read the statement of the Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Is it the position of the Senator from Tennessee that ever since 1948 the railroads and the Government were, in effect, violating the antitrust laws, without any escape clause?

Mr. KEFAUVER. The railroads, if they have been conspiring and working together to get Government business, have, in my opinion, violated the antitrust laws.

Mr. CLARK. And that has been going on for how long?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I do not know how long it has been going on. There is nothing to prevent a railroad from going to the Defense Department and saying, "We will move this camp for so much." That is what section 22 provides. However, when the railroads act together, they violate the antitrust laws.

Mr. CLARK. Then is it the view of the Senator from Tennessee that for the first time the law was properly established by Judge McGarraghy?

Mr. KEFAUVER. No; it has been the law right along. The sponsors of the bill want these things put under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Section 22 is not under its jurisdiction, and it never has been.

Mr. CLARK. As I understand, these agreements have been made by the railroads for the past 10 years.

Mr. KEFAUVER. I assume some of them have been. I do not know whether the railroads have been conspiring. If they have been conspiring, they have been violating the law.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I cannot yield at this time. I should like to finish this point. The Reed-Bulwinkle Act does not apply to the specific end products. The conference report does more than merely bring section 22 under the Bulwinkle Act. The Bulwinkle Act prescribes standards. The bill also has retroactive application. It applies to something that was done prior to the effective date of this paragraph. Therefore, under the bill the railroads can get their price after the contract has been performed. Retroactively, after it has been negotiated, they can get their price, without public notice, and without any of the standards set forth in the Reed-Bulwinkle Act. All they do is simply file with the ICC what they have done, and they are immunized from the application of the antitrust laws.

On the question of whether the Government will lose any money, I should like to say that, in the first place, the Interstate Commerce Commission itself has said that for the years 1950 to 1954, section 22 rates were 13 percent higher than the regular commercial rates. Mr. Earl B. Smith, the Director for Transportation and Petroleum Logistics of the Defense Department, testified to that effect on April 16, 1957.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. KEFAUVER. He said that the regular commercial rates were lower than section 22 rates.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Do I have any time remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time of the Senator from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida has 5 minutes remaining.

Mr. SMATHERS. In essence what we are endeavoring to do, as we have repeatedly said, is to reestablish the status quo as it has existed since the passage of the Reed-Bulwinkle Act, since 1948. We are not arguing the merits of the Reed-Bulwinkle Act. Perhaps we should. The fact is that Congress passed that act in 1948 by a two-thirds vote of both Houses. There is no doubt in the mind of most people, certainly not in the mind of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and certainly not in the mind of the Defense Department or the Atomic Energy Commission, that the protection given by the Reed-Bulwinkle Act applies not merely to commercial shippers and people in ordinary business, but to Government rates under section 22 as well.

The first time we ever had an idea that there was any question about such immunity was when, on July 5 of this year, the District Court of the District of Columbia entered its order.

In view of that order, we must take some action. Why must we do so? If we do not do it, the railroads and the motor carriers and the water carriers can say, "We can no longer do business with the Government under section 22. If we do, we will be subjecting ourselves to further lawsuits."

The only thing we are trying to achieve is to put ourselves back in the status quo until such time, possibly, as some Senators who are so much interested in fighting monopoly introduce a bill to hit directly the question of the repeal of the Reed-Bulwinkle Act.

I ask the Senator from Tennessee to give me his attention on this point, because I wish to say to him that he has inferred we are carrying the banner of the railroads. I would respectfully point out to him that we are not carrying the banner of the railroads, but that, unwittingly, he is carrying the banner of the railroads. Who gains if we fail to act in this situation?

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me? He has mentioned my name.

Mr. SMATHERS. I do not have the time to yield.

Mr. KEFAUVER. The Senator has referred to me in the debate.

Mr. SMATHERS. If we do not act, it will cost the Defense Department $100 million, the Atomic Energy Commission $4 million, and the General Services Administration $13 million. If we do not act, the nonscheduled airlines will get a judgment of $45 million. They will get that money from the railroads, but the railroads will get even more money from the Government. By a little arithmetic, we can see that the railroads will get about $120 million. Taking $45 million from that, leaves the railroads with about $75 million net. Not only that, but when the lawsuit is over, they get another cool $120 million. Who gets it? The railroads get it. That is why for many years they have wanted section 22 stricken out.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, the Senator has mentioned my name. Will he yield to me?

Mr. SMATHERS. The Senator has mentioned my name many times. I refer to a letter written to us by the Defense Department. They say that what worries them about the situation is that if the court decision stands there will be claims made against the Defense Department for having used below-published rates, and the railroads can come forward and demand from the Defense Department, as the Department puts it, an incalculable amount. How much? We know it will be $120 million for 1956. It will be $120 million for 1955. It will be $120 million for 1954. Consider the Korean war, it will be $200 million or $300 million. Eventually the claims will amount to almost a billion dollars.

Who will get that money? The railroads will. Therefore I submit that the only practical thing we can do is not to open this little door so that the railroads can make themselves rich. They have not been lobbying. They have been playing it cozy. They know that whichever way this goes, they are bound to win. If we fail to do anything about it, then obviously they can come forward and say that the district court decision holds they have been giving the Government below-published rates, and they are therefore entitled to get that money back. I submit that this amounts to a billion dollars.

Mr. SMATHERS subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks, just prior to the vote on the Kefauver motion, a letter written to me by General Lasher which is self-explanatory, including an attached memorandum.

There being no objection, the letter and memorandum were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HEADQUARTERS,
MILITARY TRAFFIC MANAGEMENT AGENCY,
UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, D. C., August 22, 1957.
HON. GEORGE A. SMATHERS,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR SMATHERS: In response to your telephone request, I am inclosing a memorandum as to the legal requirements of a carrier to collect tariff rates.

I am happy for the opportunity of assembling this information and hope that it may be of assistance to you.

Sincerely yours,

E. C. R. LASHER,
Major General, United States Army,
Executive Director.

MEMORANDUM

Section 6 (7) of the Interstate Commerce Act provides that no carrier shall charge or demand or collect or receive a greater or less or different compensation for the transportation of passengers or property or for any service in connection therewith between the points named in such tariffs than the rates, fares, and charges which are specified in the tariff filed and in effect at the time. The only exception to this is that provided in section 22 which permits carriers to transport persons and property free or at reduced rates for the United States Government and for others specifically named in that section.

As stated by the United States Supreme Court in Pennsylavnia R. Co. v. International Coal Min. Co. (230 U. S. 184), "The statute required the carrier to abide absolutely by the tariff. It did not permit the company to decide that it had charged too much and then make a corresponding rebate; nor could it claim that it had charged too little, and insist upon a larger sum being paid by the shipper. * * * The tariff, so long as it was of force, was, in this respect, to be treated as though it had been a statute, binding as such upon railroad and shipper alike." The United States Supreme Court in Lowden v. Simonds, Etc., Grain Co. (306 U. S. 516), stated: "Until changed, tariffs bind both carriers and shippers with the force of law. Under section 6 of the Interstate Commerce Act the carrier cannot deviate from the rate specified in the tariff for any service in connection with the transportation of property. That section forbids the carrier from giving a voluntary rebate in any shape or form."

Therefore, if, as found by Judge McGarraghy in United States District Court for the District of Columbia, Civil Action 875-57, "1. The antitrust immunity conferred by section 5a of the Interstate Commerce Act does not apply to concerted section 22 quotations made to the United States Government." * * * and "4. The concerted section 22 quotations of defendants are illegal per se under the antitrust laws.", there is good argument to support a legal requirement upon the carriers to file claims against the United States Government for the difference between the section 22 rate found "illegal" and the tariff or legal rate.

Mr. NEUBERGER subsequently said: Mr. President, for the information of the Senate, I ask unanimous consent that there may appear in the RECORD, prior to the yea-and-nay vote on this issue, telegrams and other messages which I have received from representative leaders of the various railroad brotherhoods in the State of Oregon, as well as telegrams from some of the national officers of the same organizations of railroad labor.

The messages all bear upon the question which is before the Senate, and I believe my colleagues will be interested in studying or perusing them.

There being no objection, the messages were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

KLAMATH FALLS, OREG.,
August 14, 1957.
Hon. RICHARD L. NEUBERGER,
United States Senator,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

We railroad employees are very much interested in the passage of House bill 3233, regarding nonscheduled airlines. Our passenger trains are cut to the limit, which is affecting our economy. This will cost the taxpayers approximately $1,500,000. We are looking forward to your favorable support.

ALFRED F. CONDREY,
Chairman, Railroad Employees
Committee of Klamath County.

BAKER, OREG., August 13, 1957.
Senator RICHARD NEUBERGER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: Relative to H. R. 3233 I am asking your support for the conference committee reporting, including the Harris amendment. Unless this is adopted the nonscheduled airlines will automatically receive preference over the railroad which will contribute to railroad unemployment. According to my information H. R. 3233, as amended, will also save the taxpayers about $140 million. Best wishes.

PAT DAVIS,
The Railroad Employees Association.

PORTLAND, OREG., August 13, 1957.
Senator RICHARD NEUBERGER,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

Respectfully request favorable consideration H. R. 3233, including Harris amendment. This would protect employment railroad personnel, prevent giving this business to nonscheduled air flights, saving Government $140 million.

F. W. MADDEN,
Secretary-Treasurer, Railroad Brotherhoods Legislative League of Oregon.

SALEM, OREG., August 14, 1957.
Senator RICHARD NEUBERGER,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.:

Our understanding H. R. 3233, as amended, still permits ICC to control rates. Strongly urge adoption House version in order to prevent the transfer of business from the railroads to nonscheduled airlines. Railroad employment and taxpayers would otherwise suffer.

R. C. MCCORMICK,
Chairman, Railway Employees Committee.

PORTLAND, OREG., August 14, 1957.
Senator RICHARD NEUBERGER,
United States Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

I understand that the conference committee has reported out H. R. 3233. This bill includes the Harris amendment which allows the railroads to keep the business they have had rather than give it to the nonscheduled airlines. This bill is important to us for three reasons. 1. It protects our employment, 2. is supported by the Department of Defense, and 3. saves the taxpayers approximately $140 million. We, the Portland Redcaps, respectfully solicit your support of this measure.

Redcap JASON C. DANCEY.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, August 15, 1957.
Hon. Senator RICHARD LEWIS NEUBERGER,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

I urge your support of conference committee report on S. 939 to amend section 22 of Interstate Commerce Act. Carriers should be permitted to work together when it means reduced charges to Federal Government for transportation, and railroads should not be penalized for cooperating in this effort. No single line can accomplish this by itself. I seek your help in having conference committee report adopted this session.

H. E. GILBERT,
President, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, August 15, 1957.
Hon. RICHARD L. NEUBERGER,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

We urge your support of conference committee report on S. 939 to amend section 22 of Interstate Commerce Act. Carriers should be permitted to work together when it means reduced charges to Federal Government for transportation, and railroads should not be penalized for cooperating in this effort. No single line can accomplish this by itself. We seek your help in having conference committee report adopted this session.

W. P. KENNEDY,
President, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen.

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 16, 1957.
Hon. RICHARD L. NEUBERGER,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.:

On behalf of the Order of Railway Conductors and Brakemen, I respectfully urge your support of conference committee report on S. 939 to amend section 22 of Interstate Commerce Act. Railroads should be permitted to work together to provide reduced charges to Federal Government for transportation and should not be penalized for cooperating to that end. No single railroad can accomplish this by itself. Therefore, your help in having conference committee report adopted this session will mean much to the taxpayers, railroads, and employees.

R. O. HUGHES, President.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, August 14, 1957.
Hon. RICHARD L. NEUBERGER,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

On behalf of more than 70,000 members of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers manning the locomotives on the Nation's railroads, I urge you to support the conference committee report on S. 939 and assist in having it adopted at this session. We believe the railroads should be encouraged to work together in reducing charges to the Federal Government covering transportation of both troops and freight without becoming subject to antitrust penalties.

GUY L. BROWN,
Grand Chief Engineer, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Florida has expired. All time for debate has expired. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER] to postpone, until January 30, 1958, at 2 o'clock p. m., further consideration of the conference report.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCOTT in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER] to postpone the further consideration of the conference report until January 30, 1958, at 2 p. m.

On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky will state it.

Mr. MORTON. On this question, a vote "nay" will be in favor of sustaining the position taken by the conferees, will it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A vote "nay" will be in favor of having the Senate proceed at this time with further consideration of the conference report.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee will state it.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Is it not correct that a vote "yea" on the pending question will be in favor of postponing the further consideration of the conference report until January 30, 1958, at 2 p. m.; and a vote "nay" will be in opposition to the taking of that course?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida will state it.

Mr. SMATHERS. A vote "nay" will be to sustain the position taken by the conferees, will it not?

Mr. KEFAUVER. The vote is being taken on my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER] to postpone the further consideration of the conference report until January 30, 1958, at 2 p. m.

On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered; and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], and the Senator from Texas [Mr. YARBOROUGH] are absent on official business.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. CHURCH] is absent on official business attending the Economic Conference of the Organization of American States at Buenos Aires.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. HENNINGS] is absent by leave of the Senate because of illness.

On this vote, the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] is paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY]. If present and voting the Senator from New Mexico would vote "nay" and the Senator from Massachusetts would vote "yea."

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY]. If present and voting, the Senator from Louisiana would vote "nay" and the Senator from West Virginia would vote "yea."

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. HENNINGS] is paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. BUTLER]. If present and voting, the Senator from Missouri would vote "yea" and the Senator from Maryland would vote "nay."

Mr. DIRKSEN. I announce that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. BUTLER], and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] are absent on official business.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] and the Senator from Maine [Mr. PAYNE] are absent because of illness.

Then Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] is absent by leave of the Senate, in order to represent the Senate at the Latin American Economic Conference in Buenos Aires.

If present and voting, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART], and the Senator from Maine [Mr. PAYNE] would each vote "nay."

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. BUTLER] is paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HENNINGS]. If present and voting, the Senator from Maryland would vote "nay," and the Senator from Missouri would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 62, as follows:

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the vote by which the motion was rejected be reconsidered.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from California to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, if it is agreeable, I shall yield back my time on condition that the minority leader will do likewise, and the Senate can adopt the conference report and then proceed to other business. If Senators will let us do that, they can then proceed with routine business.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I wonder if there is any request for time on this side of the aisle on either side of the question. If not, I am prepared to yield back my time, and I do so.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield back the time remaining to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time having been yielded back, the question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from California to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9023) to amend the act of October 31, 1949, to extend until June 30, 1960, the authority of the Surgeon General to make certain payments to Bernalillo County, N. Mex., for furnishing hospital care to certain Indians, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. HILL. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. HILL, Mr. MURRAY, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. PURTELL, and Mr. COOPER conferees on the part of the Senate.

ORDER FOR CONSIDERATION OF ATOMIC ENERGY APPROPRIATION BILL ON TOMORROW

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that it may be in order to consider the atomic energy appropriation bill tomorrow.

I should like to announce that I am informed by the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Appropriations Committee that there is no controversy over the bill, that the amount provided in the bill is below that provided by the House and below the budget estimates, that it is important that the Senate consider the measure, and I should like to have it considered tomorrow. It is agreeable to the minority leader and members of the committee, and I hope it will be agreeable to the Senate. Therefore I ask that it be in order to consider the bill tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. What time will the Senate convene tomorrow?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. That has not been agreed upon, but I think, at the moment, it will be 12 o'clock. I want to discuss it with the minority leader.

MUNICIPAL YIELD INDEX CLIMBS

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, for the fifth straight week the Dow-Jones municipal yield index shows a rise. The latest figure is 3.58 percent, an increase of 4 points over last week and the highest yield recorded since September of 1935. Interest rates, even on tax-exempt bonds, continued to rise.

I ask unanimous consent that an article on rising municipal bond yields, from the Wall Street Journal of August 19, be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MUNICIPAL YIELD INDEX CLIMBS 4 BASIS POINTS, HITS NEW 22-YEAR HIGH

The steady attrition of municipal bond prices continued last week, and the Dow-Jones yield index on tax exempts today registers 3.58 percent, the highest level since September 1935, and an increase of 4 basis points over last Monday's 3.54 percent figure, the previous 22-year record.

The Dow-Jones index, comprised of 20 representative 20-year bonds, moves inversely to municipal security prices.

Main reason given by dealers for the dwindling value of their wares was the continued high volume of municipal securities coming to market. This swollen money demand, acting in conjunction with the Federal Government's anti-inflationary, tight-money practices, has beaten down bond prices and forced yields up to heights not seen since the midthirties, they note.

With municipal bond yields greater than those realized on many stocks and carrying their tax-free attraction besides, municipal traders discerned a mild swing from stock to bond purchases by individual investors. These investors from the stock market sought primarily short-term maturity bonds and were lured by yields from municipal bonds actually more attractive than those of the thirties. Corporate and income taxes were far less weighty 20 years ago than now.

Confronted with the possibility of a further drop in bond prices, dealers evaluated issues last week with an eye to rapid movement. Reception by investors at retail varied from good to so-so. The $44 million Los Angeles school districts issue was last week's biggest success, reporting a sellout soon after the reoffering. On the other hand, by late Friday only a little over half of New York City's $40 million securities were reported sold. Nearly a third of the $35 million Connecticut issue of 2 weeks ago was still unsold. And realistic price cuts reportedly were anticipated.

Some dealers in municipals felt the prices quoted last week were close to rock bottom. Most other dealers, however, could see no basic change in the conditions that were depressing the bond market; i. e., tight money policies of the Federal Reserve System and the heavy demand of municipalities for money they felt prices would continue to dwindle until those conditions were changed.

The visible 30-day supply of tax-exempt bonds coming to market now stands at $318,153,019, up from last Monday's figure of $304,329,614, according to the Daily Bond Buyer. The blue list total of unsold municipal and housing bonds held by dealers today of $175,318,100, also increased from last Monday's $167,086,000.

Larger issues coming up for sale this week are $21,002,000 Nassau County, N. Y., bonds today, and $19,600,000 Kansas Turnpike Authority bonds and $19 million Massachusetts obligations on Tuesday.

A NEW ISOLATIONISM—RIPPLES OR TIDE?

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article which appeared in the New York Times magazine for August 18, 1957, entitled "A New Isolationism—Ripples or Tide?" written by the distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS]. It is a very fine article, which stimulates thinking on a problem which we in this Congress and in future Congresses will have to meet. I recommend its reading.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times Magazine of August 18, 1957]

A NEW ISOLATIONISM—RIPPLES OR TIDE?—ITS SIGNIFICANCE CANNOT YET BE RECKONED, BUT, AS SENATOR DOUGLAS SEES IT, THERE IS MOUNTING OPPOSITION TO OUR FOREIGN AID AND TRADE PROGRAMS—HERE HE DISCUSSES ITS CAUSES

(By PAUL H. DOUGLAS)

WASHINGTON.—Now that Congress is considering the various measures proposed by the administration, I am offering the following personal comments for what they may be worth:

"I think the United States should get out of the United Nations, and get the United Nations out of the United States.

"Isn't it time to call a halt on all this foreign aid? What has it bought for us so far?

"I can see no difference in this administration's foreign policy and that of previous Democratic administrations.

Thus writes one of the many thousands of my Illinois constituents who have vehemently protested against the administration's foreign policies. Many of my colleagues tell me that their mail is substantially similar.

Because of this and because of numerous manifestations in Congress, many have concluded that a new tide of isolationism is rising in the country. These people point for example to the strong opposition to the foreign-aid program of the administration, to the deep indifference, or worse, regarding a more liberal immigration policy and to widespread enmity toward the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) and hostility against the Organization for Trade Cooperation (OTC).

Thoughtful students of public affairs are asking themselves: How significant are these tendencies? Are they, for example, deeply rooted or adroitly manufactured by business and isolationist groups? What are the basic emotions and what are the philosophies which cause them? It would take more than a Senator to consider these questions fully, but perhaps I can make a beginning.

As to whether the opposition is spontaneous or organized, it is my impression that the outburst started with voluntary protests. But 2 weeks after Secretary Humphrey appealed for a big cut in his own administration's budget, the protesting letters swelled into an organized torrent. From then on they gave the impression of being largely stimulated by corporations, both big and small, and by many, although not all, of the various chambers of commerce.

In analyzing my own mail, I find that the largest number come from the western, northwestern, and northern suburbs of Chicago. These areas are overwhelmingly Republican and populated chiefly by junior and senior executives of the big corporations which increasingly dominate the industrial scene. These people are members of the group described by William F. Whyte in his book The Organization Man. They, and indeed most of the small- and medium-sized so-called independent businessmen, are followers of what C. Wright Mills terms "the power elite." After reading such letters carefully, I have concluded that the protests of these men and women on foreign aid are primarily a business revolt against the high cost of government.

Some of the opposition to our foreign policy is countrywide and more or less universal, while other elements are regional and cultural.

In the first place, it should be frankly recognized that it is hard for any nation to be constantly helpful and cooperative in foreign affairs for long periods of time. It has now been 12 years since World War II ended. One emergency has followed another and the American public has risen to each. We saved Europe from starvation with our support of UNRRA, then came the French and British loans, then the Marshall plan, then NATO and following that, Korea. We have been forced to build up huge armaments, send again hundreds of thousands of young men overseas, spend no less than $60 billion on overseas aid of one form or another and increase our own national budget to $70 billion a year.

It is indeed a source of wonder that the American people have done so well under these strains. Probably no other nation in human history has ever exerted itself so intelligently to preserve its own safety or to be so helpful to others. But it is natural for even the most tireless and far-sighted advocates of international cooperation to grow weary as year follows year and no respite appears.

Just as liberals became "tired" in the twenties, so there are clear signs that the internationalists are tiring rapidly now. For example, when I recently tried to rally some low-tariff economists to defend the principles which they had always espoused, I found no response. They had retired from the struggle. The resistance to isolationism is therefore being greatly weakened by this emotional and intellectual fatigue. Moreover, a period of relative prosperity, such as the present, makes most men and women complacent and reluctant to think deeply about issues.

But what about the positive forces making for isolationism? Here it may be helpful to consider this in terms of the four major sections of the United States, namely, the Middle West, the Northeast, the Far West and the South. Let me start with my own region, the Middle West, which is naturally the one I know best.

The German-American elements in our area, for example, have been subjected to severe emotional strains during the last 40 years. Feeling themselves to be loyal Americans, they have nevertheless found our country ranging itself twice against the beloved land whence they and their ancestors sprang. It is but natural therefore that these groups should, in the main, have resented our involvement in foreign affairs and have desired that we isolate ourselves from Europe so that we would not be tempted to go to war again.

But while this feeling is still strong amongst the German-Americans, it is much less so than it was during the hectic days of 1938–41. This is due to the increasing amalgamation of the German stock with other elements of the population, to honest revulsion over the crimes committed by Hitler, and to increasing awareness that the United States is the strongest protection of West Germany against communism and the best friend of Chancellor Adenauer.

There is also a strong degree of isolationist sentiment among many other nationality groups in the Middle West. This is partially caused by the age-old distrust of Great Britain and by the belief that in foreign affairs we ultimately play the game of that nation. It is the fashion of British writers and eastern editors to belittle this distrust as false and improper. However, it stems in part from the justified resentment aroused by the superiority complex shown by both Englishmen and the New England stock toward the other residents of the Middle West.

I well remember how, in the heyday of Big Bill Thompson in Chicago, that worthy suddenly shouted at an election rally that, if he were elected mayor, he "would bust King George on the snoot." The answering roar of applause showed that he had touched a raw nerve. This human resentment at being treated as inferior is still a powerful force in midwestern isolationism. This feeling also arises in part from memories of the Revolutionary War and the War of 1812 and of the way in which Great Britain favored the South in the Civil War. Such memories are raised to greater intensity by justified resentment over the abuses practiced by the British against the Irish from the days of Cromwell to those of the Sinn Fein Rebellion. The policy of certain midwestern papers has in turn both reflected and intensified this anti-British sentiment.

And yet this feeling for isolationism, reinforced as it was by geographical remoteness and a deep revulsion against foreign wars, was never as strong as many eastern pundits represented it. William Allen White, after all, came from Emporia, Kans. This conclusion is reinforced by my own personal experience. When I first ran for the United States Senate in 1948, I campaigned for active participation by the United States in the struggle against communism and in support of the United Nations and the Marshall plan. Although I was fought bitterly by nearly the entire press of the State—including, of course, the Chicago Tribune—I nevertheless was elected by a majority of 408,000, the second highest in the history of Illinois. Again, in 1954, I waged my campaign on the same general lines and, despite the fact that I faced both my usual opposition and that of the Eisenhower administration, which threw its full strength against me, I again won—in an off year and with a lowered turnout—by no less than 241,000.

My general conclusion about the Middle West, therefore, is that while isolationism is still strong in the great heartland of America—and has been recently reinforced by business desires for lower expenditures and a tax cut—it is basically not as strong as it once was. What, then, about sentiment in the three other main sections of the country, namely, the Northeast, the Far West, and the South?

The northeast coast, stretching from Lubec, Maine, to Washington, because of its close cultural and economic ties with Europe, has since 1916 been predominantly internationalist and interventionist. Most of the suburbanites and exurbanites who dwell along the Atlantic coast have different opinions on these matters from those of their midwestern cousins. The labor movement in these areas, notably in the clothing trades, has also realized the need for international cooperation.

The Far West has been somewhat isolationist, so far as Europe is concerned, but the coast States have been intensely interested in Asia and in the control of the Pacific. This tendency has been shown by the 1954 senatorial victory in Oregon of the able and well-informed RICHARD L. NEUBERGER. The election of Senators CHURCH from Idaho and CARROLL from Colorado, together with various Congressional elections in those same States, suggests that isolationist sentiment is also abating in the Rocky Mountain area. This region, despite its geographical distance from both Europe and Asia, seems increasingly aware of international realities even though on grounds of economy it may want some reduction in foreign aid.

Far more serious than the continuing isolationist feeling centered in the Middle West, however, has been the rapid change of sentiment in this direction in the South. Formerly, the South was a strong force for both interventionism and internationalism. This was partially caused by the strength of the military tradition and by the almost total absence of pacifist sentiment. Every southern hamlet had its highly honored officers and noncommissioned officers in the Navy, Army, Air Force, and Marines.

Furthermore, since the prosperity of the South was largely built upon the export of raw cotton and tobacco to Europe, southerners naturally desired low tariffs at home and a free and democratic market to which they could sell abroad. We Democratic liberals of the North and West who believed in the principles of international cooperation in support of democracy, and who defended our position against bitter and unrelenting opposition, found this southern attitude a strong support. We might differ with the southerners on domestic policies, but we were united on foreign policy. We took pride in the good work done by Senators Connally, George, and Fulbright.

It is different now. The first signs of the change came when the Reciprocal Trade Act was up for renewal in 1955. In the House of Representatives, virtually every Congressman from the Piedmont region, stretching from Danville, Va., to Birmingham, Ala., joined the Republican protectionists against this measure and failed by only one vote to defeat it. In the Senate, the defection of the hitherto low-tariff southern Senators led to a critical weakening of the bill which almost emasculated it.

This shift of opinion was due to the fact that the textile industry—cotton, woolens and synthetics—has virtually withdrawn from New England and has moved into the foothills of the South. In the process, the industries have brought with them their protectionist prejudices. Just as New Englanders—despite the economic teachings of their colleges—used to be predominantly protectionists, so the entire Piedmont area is now rapidly moving in the same direction.

In the last year, still another factor has appeared. As economic aid has been liquidated in Europe, the demand for possible future work has shifted to the Middle East and to Asia. But the development of the great river valleys of the Nile, the Jordan, the Tigris and Euphrates, and the Ganges, and the use of these waters for irrigation, will inevitably lead to the production of more raw cotton. The cotton planters of our coastal plains and of the Mississippi delta believe, with some reason, that this will decrease the market for southern cotton. Hence, they look with bilious eyes upon proposals to grant large sums of money to these countries. "Why," they ask, "should we be taxed in order to subsidize our rivals?"

This new fear is affecting our foreign policy. There was, therefore, more than a casual connection between the rough treatment which the Senate Appropriations Committee gave to Mr. Dulles' foreign-aid program last year and the decisive and brusque manner in which he almost immediately afterward discontinued our support of the Aswan Dam project. As we all know, Mr. Dulles' action then triggered off Colonel Nasser's seizure of the Suez Canal a week afterward and his defiance of the Western World.

These same forces are currently operating against any long-term economic commitments in the Middle East and India. For such commitments would inevitably move us out from the county-agent type of technical aid, which was the original core of the point 4 program, into the economic development of the river valleys and the better utilization of that desperately scarce resource of the East, namely, water. The cottongrowers dislike all this. Thus the majority of southern Senators were recorded against the mutual-security bill. In addition, the same fear of Japanese textiles is holding back our joining the OTC and ratifying GATT. It is also causing many groups to want closer trade relations between Japan and Red China in order to divert Japanese exports from this country.

There is, therefore, a very strong prospect that the alliance between the conservative Republicans of the Midwest and the southern conservatives, which has dominated Congress for the last 20 years, will be revived once the current civil-rights fight has subsided. Both groups agree on opposition to further foreign aid, advocate a return to protection, and support a less cooperative attitude on foreign affairs.

Unless a countervailing movement sets in, the foreign policy of this country may therefore grow increasingly in the direction of isolation. Such a countervailing force may lie, of course, in the growing awareness both of the international danger of Communist aggression and the earth-destroying nature of atomic and hydrogen warfare.

But perhaps we should not try to base our case for foreign aid exclusively on the grounds of national security or direct economic interest. These are real and powerful considerations, and they should not be muted. But why should we be ashamed of wanting to be friends to other people and seeking to help them? For it is just this type of friendliness which the world needs most.

It is, of course, hard to persevere in well-doing after a decade of intense and superficially unappreciated service. But if we reach down to the ethical bases for our action, and not merely weigh prudent economic and security factors, we can tap new sources of strength. We need not shrink from being scornfully branded as do-gooders by the isolationist press. For is not the greatest do-gooder of all time the very one who in our hearts we most honor and would most like to resemble?

We should not let the zeal of the professional public relations men who now largely determine our foreign policy obscure the fact that the only real way to make a friend is to be a friend. In the long run, effective mutual help, rather than words, is the best creator of friendship and of peace. As we create better relations and raise the standard of living elsewhere, we shall build bastions of freedom where democracy can thrive.

And if we hesitate over such a decision, we should let the spirit of the Galilean enter our worldly and power-obsessed hearts, and remember His words: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me also."

Perhaps we might then realize that the neighbors whom He told us we should love as we do ourselves are those who anywhere are in need of aid and friendship.

EFFECTIVE DATES OF COMPENSATION INCREASES TO WAGE BOARD EMPLOYEES

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending business is Calendar No. 389, which will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 25) relating to effective date of increases in compensation granted to Wage Board employees.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask that the Senator from Nevada be recognized.

CONSTRUCTION OF A STADIUM IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. BIBLE. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1937) to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation by the Armory Board of the District of Columbia of a stadium in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1937) to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation by the Armory Board of the District of Columbia of a stadium in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same.

ALAN BIBLE,
J. ALLEN FREAR, Jr.,
J. GLENN BEALL,
Managers on the Part of the Senate.
JOHN L. MCMILLAN,
OREN HARRIS,
OLIN E. TEAGUE,
SID SIMPSON,
JOS. P. O'HARA,
Managers on the Part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. BIBLE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate agree to the conference report.

The motion was agreed to.

CORNELIA S. ROBERTS

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 714, a private bill, H. R. 4240, for the relief of Cornelia S. Roberts.

I ask the distinguished Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON] to give a brief explanation of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 4240) for the relief of Cornelia S. Roberts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, the purpose of the proposed legislation is to pay the sum of $3,500 to Cornelia S. Roberts, of Bowie, Md., for her erroneous overpayment of Federal income taxes for the year 1945.

Mr. President, I can explain the bill further if any Senator so desires.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, to have printed in the RECORD a brief statement relating to the bill, for the information of the Senate.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT

The records of the Bureau of Internal Revenue show that, in filing her income-tax return for 1945, Mrs. Roberts reported as a credit against her tax liability payments of estimated taxes amounting to $19,122.80, whereas, payments actually had been made amounting to $22,622.80. No claim for refund was filed within the applicable 3-year period of limitation for such claims following the due date of her return. Accordingly, when the claimant subsequently sought to have either a refund or a credit for the amount of overpayment, her requests were denied, pursuant to section 322 (b) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1939. The report of the Treasury Department states:

"No audit was made of the taxpayer's return for the year 1945, as it is not the policy of the Internal Revenue Service to conduct audits of returns on which adjustments are clearly barred by the statute of limitations."

Further, in 1946, a similar mistake, also in the amount of $3,500, was made but, unlike the return of 1945, an overpayment of $433.74 was indicated. Although the error of $3,500 in stating the payments of estimated taxes was not discovered until after the expiration of the statute of limitations, the Internal Revenue Service held that the return for 1946 should be considered as a claim for refund of this $3.500. Similar administrative action with respect to the claimant's 1945 return was not believed to be justified, however, since the 1945 return did not indicate any overpayment.

The claimant states that during these periods her tax accounts were handled by a bookkeeper employed by her and that the error made by the bookkeeper was not discovered until after the running of the statute of limitations for both returns.

The Treasury Department does not favor enactment of the instant bill.

The committee has been informed that the factual situation, under which the mistake took place, is simple. Claimant was making quarterly payments which were paid every 3 months. After the third payment the claimant filed her formal return for the year (1945) including a check to make up the difference between the amount paid in first 3 quarterly installments and the amount due. When the time came for the fourth installment claimant received a bill from the collector and the fourth installment was paid by check in due course by claimant's secretary. The secretary sent the check thinking that, inasmuch as the Bureau had sent a notice or bill, the amount was due. This is borne out by photostats of the checks in question in the committee files. In other words, the Bureau received a tax return from the claimant showing the amount due to be $19.122.80 and received checks in the amount of $22,622.80. The Treasury Department admits the added $3.500 was not due, and was a windfall to the Government, but objects to the bill on the grounds of the running of the statute of limitations.

The committee has been informed that an attorney has rendered substantial services in connection with this claim and the attorney's fee provision has been retained.

After careful consideration of the above facts the committee feels that in all equity the claimant is entitled to the return of her money and accordingly recommends that the bill be favorably considered.

Attached hereto and made a part hereof is the report of the Treasury Department on a similar bill of the 84th Congress, together with other pertinent documents.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I should like to inform the Senate that it is our purpose to consider today and tomorrow Calendar No. 389, S. 25, relating to effective dates of increases in compensation granted to Wage Board employees; Calendar No. 1054, S. 2205, to amend section 116 (4) of chapter 10 of the Federal Bankruptcy Act; Calendar No. 577, S. 2377, to amend chapter 223, title 18, United States Code, to provide for the production of statements and reports of witnesses; Calendar No. 706, S. 1356, to amend the antitrust laws by vesting in the Federal Trade Commission jurisdiction to prevent monopolistic acts by certain persons engaged in commerce in meat and meat products, and for other purposes; and Calendar No. 814, S. 2672, to amend the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended, to increase the salaries of certain executives of the Atomic Energy Commission, and for other purposes.

I wonder if my friend, the Senator from Florida, or my friend, the Senator from Washington, can give me the calendar number for the bill relating to rights of vessels, which we had up the other evening.

Mr. MAGNUSON. That is Calendar No. 861.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I thank my friend, the Senator from Washington, the distinguished chairman of the committee.

I should like to inform the Senator from Washington and the other Members of the Senate that we expect to motion up Calendar No. 861, S. 1483, to amend the act of August 27, 1954, relating to the rights of vessels of the United States on the high seas and in the territorial waters of foreign countries, but we shall not do so today. We hope to be able to do that tomorrow.

In addition, we will take up for consideration the Atomic Energy Appropriation Act tomorrow, as well as any conference reports which may be available.

I do not intend, unless some emergency develops of which I am unaware at the moment, to have a session on Saturday. I hope Senators will realize that this is the latter part of the session and that it may be necessary next week to have some evening sessions.

I hope that the chairmen of the committees will again review all measures pending before each committee, in the hope that proper consideration can be given to them, particularly measures embodying recommendations of the Executive. If they can be approved, I hope they will be approved and reported to the Senate, because they will be considered if they reach the calendar. If they cannot be reported, I hope that hearings will be announced and plans will be made to consider them either later in this session or early in the next session. If it is found in the wisdom of the committees that certain measures should be rejected, I hope they will be rejected, so that the departments will be on notice.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas subsequently said:

Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that I expect to move to have the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order No. 1078, S. 314, to assist the United States cotton textile industry in regaining its equitable share of the world market.

I wish to add that bill to the list of measures I previously announced which we may possibly consider this week.

I should also like to give notice of the possibility of proceeding to the consideration of Order No. 892, S. 2363, to authorize the erection of a national monument symbolizing the ideals of democracy.

CONVEYANCE OF CERTAIN PUBLIC LANDS TO COLORADO RIVER COMMISSION OF NEVADA

Mr. BIBLE. Mr. President, there is at the desk a message from the House of Representatives regarding an amendment made by the House of Representatives to Senate bill 1568. I ask that the Presiding Officer lay the amendment before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1568) to direct the Secretary of the Interior to convey certain public lands in the State of Nevada to the Colorado River Commission of Nevada acting for the State of Nevada, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That, as used in this act—

"(a) The term 'Secretary' shall mean the Secretary of the Interior.

"(b) The term 'Commission' shall mean the Colorado River Commission of the State of Nevada.

"(c) The term 'State' shall mean the State of Nevada.

"(d) The term 'transfer area' shall mean all lands or interests in lands owned by the United States and located within the exterior boundaries of the area described in section 2 of this act.

"SEC. 2. The Secretary is hereby authorized and directed to segregate from all forms of entry under the public land laws of the United States, during a period of 5 years from and after the effective date of this act, the following described lands, situated in the State of Nevada and comprising approximately 126,775 acres:

"(1) All of south half, township 23 south, range 63 east, with the exception of the following areas: east half section 22; four 5-acre tracts located in section 26 and described as follows: south half southeast quarter northwest quarter northwest quarter, north half northeast quarter southwest quarter northwest quarter, north half southwest quarter northeast quarter northwest quarter and south half southwest quarter northwest quarter northwest quarter; and those portions of the northeast quarter section 23, and north half section 24, within the Lake Mead national recreation area.

"(3) All of sections 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, and 34, township 23 south, range 64 east.

"(4) Fractional sections 31, 32, 33, 34, and 35, township 23½ south, range 64 east.

"(5) All of southeast quarter of township 24 south, range 62 east.

"(7) All of township 24 south, range 64 east, except sections 1, 12, 13, 24, 25, and 36.

"(8) All of township 25 south, range 62 east.

"(9) All of township 25 south, range 63 east.

"(10) All of sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, township 25 south, range 64 east.

"(11) All of sections 1, 2, 11, 12, 13, and 14, township 26 south, range 62 east.

"(12) All of northwest quarter, township 26 south, range 63 east.

"SEC. 3. The Commission, acting on behalf of the State, is hereby given the option, after compliance with all of the provisions of this act and any regulations promulgated hereunder, of having patented to the State by the Secretary all or portions of the lands within the transfer area. Such option may be exercised at any time during the 5-year period of segregation established in section 2, but the filing of any application for the conveyance of title to any lands within the transfer area, if received by the Secretary from the Commission prior to the expiration of such period, shall have the effect of extending the period of segregation of such lands from all forms of entry under the public land laws until such application is finally disposed of by the Secretary.

"SEC. 4. Prior to conveying any lands or interests in lands of the United States to the State, the Commission and the Secretary shall comply with the requirements set out following:

"(a) The Commission, within 1 year after the effective date of this act, shall submit to the Secretary a proposed plan of development for the entire transfer area, which plan shall include but need not be limited to the general terms and conditions under which individuals, governmental agencies or subdivisions, corporations, associations or other legal entities may acquire rights, title, or interests in and to lands within the transfer area.

"(b) At any time after submission of a proposed plan for the entire transfer area, as required by the preceding subsection, the Commission may select for transfer from Federal to State ownership such land units within the transfer area as contain not less than 18 sections of land in reasonably compact tracts, taking into account the situation and potential uses of the land involved. All applications for transfer of title to any such land unit shall be made to the Secretary and shall be accompanied by a development and acquisition planning report containing such information relative to any proposed development and acquisition payment plan as may by regulation be required by the Secretary. No acquisition payment plan shall be considered by the Secretary unless such plan provides for payment by the State into the Treasury of the United States, within 5 years of the delivery of patent to the Commission, of an amount equal to the appraised fair market value of the lands conveyed.

"(c) Upon receipt of any application for transfer of title to any land unit the Secretary shall cause an appraisal to be made of the fair market value of the lands within the unit proposed to be transferred, including mineral and material values if any, but in arriving at such value the Secretary shall not include factors reflecting enhancement of the value of the lands within the unit involved by reason of development or improvement of other lands within the transfer area which have previously been patented to the State.

"(d) As soon as a proposed unit development and acquisition planning report is found by the Secretary to comply with the provisions of this act and with such regulations as the Secretary may prescribe as to the contents thereof, the Secretary is hereby authorized and directed to negotiate a contract of sale with the Commission and to prepare appropriate conveyancing instruments for the lands involved.

"Thereafter, the Secretary shall submit to the Congress, for reference to the appropriate committees of the House of Representatives and the Senate, copies of the Commission application, proposed unit development and acquisition planning report, and proposed contract of sale and conveyancing instruments, together with his comments and recommendations, if any.

"(e) No contract of sale or instrument of conveyance shall be executed by the Secretary with respect to any lands applied for by the Commission prior to 60 calendar days (which 60 days, however, shall not include days on which either the House of Representatives or the Senate is not in session because of an adjournment of more than 3 calendar days to a day certain) from the day on which the Secretary makes the submissions required by the preceding subsection unless the Congress, prior to the expiration of said 60 days, approves the execution of such contract of sale and instrument of conveyance.

"SEC. 5. The conveyance or conveyances authorized by this act shall be made subject to any existing valid rights pertaining to the lands included within the transfer area.

"SEC. 6. If the State selects and purchases under this act any lands which are subject on the date the purchase by the State becomes effective to a lease, permit, license, or contract issued under the Mineral Leasing Act of February 25, 1920 (41 Stat. 437), as amended (39 U. S. C. 181 and the following), the State shall be required to purchase all the lands subject to that lease, permit, license, or contract which are included within the boundaries of the transfer area. The purchase of lands subject to a lease, permit, license, or contract shall neither affect the validity nor modify the terms of the lease, permit, license, or contract in any way, or affect any rights thereunder, except that the State shall assume the position of the United States thereunder, including any right to rental, royalties, and other payments accruing on or after the date on which the purchase by the State becomes effective, and any right to modify the terms or conditions of such leases, permits, licenses, or contracts.

"SEC. 7. The Secretary is hereby authorized to perform any and all acts and to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary or proper in carrying out the provisions of this act. He shall give particular attention in so doing to including in any conveyancing instruments executed under the authority of this act such provisions as will in his judgment protect existing or future uses by the United States of lands within the transfer area, including, but not limited to, provision for reversion of title therein to the United States upon failure of the State or its successors in interest to strictly comply with the terms and conditions of any such conveyancing instrument. In establishing any future Federal easements, however, no lands shall be included upon which substantial improvements have been placed by the State or its successor in interest."

Mr. BIBLE. Mr. President, I am directed by the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs to recommend that the Senate disagree to the amendment adopted by the House of Representatives, and to move that the Senate request a conference thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. President, I so move.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. ANDERSON, Mr. BIBLE, and Mr. MALONE the conferees on the part of the Senate.

JACKSON SCHOOL TOWNSHIP, IND.

Mr. JENNER. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives relating to Senate bill 807, for the relief of Jackson School Township, Ind.; and I desire to move, when that is done, that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 807) for the relief of Jackson School Township, Ind., which was, on page 1, line 6, strike out "$275,000" and insert "$193,352."

Mr. JENNER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment. As the bill passed the Senate, it authorized a payment of $275,000 to the township for the loss of its school property. The House has reduced the amount to $193,352, and the authors of the bill are willing to accept this amendment. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, the distinguished minority leader, in his usual diligent fashion, has urged the majority leader to move to consider some nominations on the executive calendar. We have considered about 43,000 nominations this year, and there are only a few nominations left on the executive calendar.

Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

As in executive session,

The following favorable reports of nominations were submitted:

By Mr. JENNER, from the Committee on the Judiciary:

John S. Hastings, of Indiana, to be United States circuit judge, seventh circuit, vice J. Earl Major, retired;

W. Lynn Parkinson, of Indiana, to be United States circuit judge, seventh circuit, vice H. Nathan Swaim, deceased; and

Robert A. Grant, of Indiana, to be United States district judge for the northern district of Indiana, vice W. Lynn Parkinson, elevated.

By Mr. O'MAHONEY, from the Committee on the Judiciary:

Peter T. Dracopoulos, of Maryland, to be an examiner in chief in the Patent Office of the Department of Commerce, vice Mark Taylor, resigned; and

By Mr. SALTONSTALL, from the Committee on Armed Services:

Richard Jackson, of Massachusetts, to be Assistant Secretary of the Navy; and

Brig. Gen. Theron Baldwin Herndon, and sundry other officers for appointment as Reserve commissioned officers in the United States Air Force.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCOTT in the chair). If there be no further reports of committees, the nominations on the Executive Calendar will be stated.

UNITED NATIONS

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Henry Cabot Lodge to be a representative of the United States of America to the 12th session of the General Assembly of the United Nations, to serve no longer than December 31, 1957.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of A. S. J. CARNAHAN to be a representative of the United States of America to the 12th session of the General Assembly of the United Nations, to serve no longer than December 31, 1957.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of WALTER H. JUDD to be a representative of the United States of America to the 12th session of the General Assembly of the United Nations, to serve no longer than December 31, 1957.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of George Meany to be a representative of the United States of America to the 12th session of the General Assembly of the United Nations, to serve no longer than December 31, 1957.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Herman B. Wells to be a representative of the United States of America to the 12th session of the General Assembly of the United Nations, to serve no longer than December 31, 1957.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of James J. Wadsworth to be an alternate representative of the United States of America to the 12th session of the General Assembly of the United Nations to serve no longer than December 31, 1957.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Miss Irene Dunne to be an alternate representative of the United States of America to the 12th session of the General Assembly of the United Nations, to serve no longer than December 31, 1957.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I should like to make an observation at this time. I shall not raise any objection to the nominations of the alternates to the United Nations. The State Department has made the recommendations and the President has submitted the nominations. I understand that at least three or four of the alternates are members of one political party. I am informed that that is not unusual, and that it has happened in the past under Democratic administrations. I wish to express the hope, however, that it not become a strictly Republican United Nations, and that we will try to balance the nominations as nearly as possible. Even though my own administration may have erred in that regard in the past, I hope this administration will not continue in that error and load the United States representation with nominees from its own party.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the remaining nominations of alternate representatives to the U. N. be considered and confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE ARMY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Army.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the nominations in the Army be considered and confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objections the nominations in the Army are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE NAVY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Navy.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the nominations in the Navy be considered and confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations in the Navy are confirmed en bloc.

COLLECTORS OF CUSTOMS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of collectors of customs.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I make the same request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of collectors of customs are confirmed en bloc.

SURVEYOR OF CUSTOMS

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Harry Edwards to be Surveyor of Customs for customs collection district No. 10.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the nomination is confirmed.

BOARD OF PAROLE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Harvey G. Straub to be a member of the Board of Parole.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGES

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of United States district judges.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of United States attorneys.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Thomas H. Trent to be United States marshal for the southern district of Florida.

NOMINATIONS PLACED ON THE VICE PRESIDENT'S DESK

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the nominations placed on the Vice President's desk, referred to at the bottom of page 5 of today's Executive Calendar, be considered and confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGES

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, the distinguished minority leader calls my attention to the nominations of three judges, which have been unanimously reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, but which have not been printed on the calendar. Since there is no objection to the nominations, I have agreed that they be considered now, as a courtesy to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the nominations.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of W. Lynn Parkinson to be United States circuit judge, seventh circuit.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Robert A. Grant to be United States district judge for the northern district of Indiana.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of John S. Hastings to be United States circuit judge, seventh circuit.

EXAMINERS IN THE PATENT OFFICE

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, are there any other nominations which have been reported but which have not been placed on the Executive Calendar?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are two nominations of chief examiners in the Patent Office.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. They have been reported by the Judiciary Committee. I ask unanimous consent that they may be considered at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the nomination.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Harry Surle to be an examiner in chief in the Patent Office of the Department of Commerce.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Peter T. Dracopoulos to be an examiner in chief in the Patent Office of the Department of Commerce.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified of the nominations confirmed today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be so notified.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I hope this notification reaches the President himself. We have confirmed more than 3,000 nominations this year. I know the Senator from California is aware of the problems we have had, but it should be noted that in the closing days of the session we do not have one nomination remaining on the Executive Calendar. Some persons may be disappointed, but I hope that is not true in the case of the distinguished minority leader.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I wish to express to the distinguished senior Senator from Texas [Mr. JOHNSON], the majority leader, and I say this both on behalf of the President of the United States, who has sent the nominations to the Senate, and in my own behalf, as minority leader, our deep appreciation of the way in which the majority leader, with whom I have frequently consulted, has accelerated the handling of these matters in the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I wish to state that within the next day or two the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service will report approximately 100 or more post office nominations.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 215) authorizing the printing of additional copies of certain public hearings, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 293. An act to authorize settlement for certain inequitable losses in pay sustained by officers of the commissioned services under the emergency economy legislation, and for other purposes;

H. R. 3658. An act to liberalize certain criteria for determining eligibility of widows for benefits;

H. R. 8892. An act to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to extend the time within which a minister may elect coverage as a self-employed individual for social-security purposes and to permit such a minister to include, for social-security purposes, the value of meals and lodging furnished him for the convenience of his employer and the rental value of the parsonage furnished to him, and for other purposes.

HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION REFERRED

The concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 215) authorizing the printing of additional copies of certain public hearings, was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

PROGRESS IN RURAL ELECTRIFICATION

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. President, without a question of a doubt, history will record that the first half of this century marked the golden age of rural electrification. Bringing electricity to the farms and ranches throughout the length and breadth of our country is one of the outstanding social and economic developments of this generation.

In the first 35 years of this century a small but persistent group endeavored by every means at their disposal to promote interest in farm electrification. Strange as it may seem, their movement was referred to with letters somewhat similar to our own REA. It was called CREA, the abbreviation for Committee on the Relationship of Electricity to Agriculture.

The purpose of their organization was to investigate the application of electricity to farm needs and to devise plans for promoting farm electrification. Despite the efforts of these groups, rural electrification made slow progress.

The rural electrification program was brought into being by an executive order in 1935 under conditions which made it a part of the Federal Government's general program for relief of unemployment. The immediate task of REA was to promote rural electrification in such a way as to get funds rapidly into channels of commerce and thereby stimulate employment. At least 25 percent of the funds were required to be spent directly for labor, with the further provision that 90 percent of the labor would be obtained from the relief rolls. The pattern in the use of relief funds had been grants, loans, and other forms of subsidy. However, this temporary organization was unable to discover ways and means of employing grants and it was unable to develop a satisfactory plan for utilizing unskilled labor from relief rolls for construction of rural power systems.

Through the executive order issued in May 1935, the President established REA as a lending agency charged with responsibility of promoting rural electrification through a program of interest-bearing self-liquidating loans.

When the Rural Electrification Administration was first created in 1935, only 10.9 percent of the farms of our country had central station electric service. Generally speaking, these farms were adjacent to urban areas such as dairy farms or irrigated farms that required electric power in large quantities. In most areas of the country very few farms were hooked up to power lines because the cost of the connection was higher than farmers generally could afford.

In May, 1936, the Congress passed the Rural Electrification Act, which gave REA statutory authority for the promotion of rural electrification. In the first year of operation the Rural Electrification Administration worked with established electric companies, as that appeared to be the most expeditious way to use the funds made available by the Congress for the program.

Various reasons have been cited for the failure of the electric companies to take the initiative in the rural electrification program. Whatever the reasons may have been, the fact is that few electric companies submitted loan applications. A study was also made of the possibility of using municipal systems as an instrumentality for extending electric service to the farms, but likewise few cities or towns were interested. It shortly became apparent that the rural electric cooperative was the most promising vehicle to develop a nationwide program of rural electrification.

The task of developing the program in the formative years through rural electric cooperatives was not easy. The cooperatives had to be locally organized and incorporated under State law. In many States enabling legislation was required. The cooperatives had to develop a plan for their electric distribution plant which had to be soundly engineered and capable of serving the members' needs. They had to demonstrate that the system would operate successfully and repay the loan. They had to arrange for wholesale power at reasonable cost. On many occasions these and other difficulties appeared insurmountable to the organizers. There was no precedent to serve as a guide. It is apparent now that from the beginning the strength of the rural electrification program has been the intense desire of farm and other rural people to obtain for themselves dependable electric service at reasonable cost.

Considering the overwhelming obstacles these groups were obliged to overcome, it is fair to state that over the years the accomplishments of the rural electrification program have been little short of phenomenal.

From Maine to California, from Texas to the Canadian border, this splendid self-liquidating loan program is providing a vital and essential utility service to the rural people of our great land. The REA program has meant so much to the farmers of America that it is exceedingly difficult to measure its immense contribution to the general welfare and economy of our country. The story of rural electrification is a story of people. It cannot be told in terms of the vast sums invested or measured by the millions of consumers served. The people in the farming communities in every section of our country will gladly testify to the solid worth of the program. Power has released the farm wife from drudgery of the washboard. It has lightened her home chores and has given her more leisure time for family activities and participation in civic affairs. Rural folks who got city lights for the first time nearly a quarter century ago were understandably grateful. For some it meant an end to pumping and carrying water or to emptying the drip pan under the icebox.

It is only recently that our farmers have begun to move into this wondrous electrical age. This is clearly indicated by the upsurging in kilowatt-hour sales and in the growing number of new all-electric farm homes, as well as by the revolution in dairy farming. Electricity is truly the modern, efficient, low-cost miracle worker for the farmer. Electricity makes living and working conditions in the country more attractive to farm youth; and, as a result, the rural areas are keeping more of their ambitious, capable young people at home. They have all the advantages and home comforts of city living—radio, TV, lighted schoolrooms with instruction opportunities provided by electric equipment, shop and household appliances.

Unlike the days of long ago, the farm home of today compares quite favorably with the city home for comfort and convenience. The electrification of the farm water systems has made it possible to protect the family against many causes of ill health, and refrigeration safeguards the family food supply.

The primary objective of the program is to provide a means whereby our farm people can obtain for themselves the indispensable utility service so necessary for improved living conditions and for efficient farm operations. Service, rather than profit, is the fundamental concept of the program.

Along with farm mechanization, as symbolized by the tractor, rural electrification has brought about almost revolutionary changes in both rural living and productive capacity on our farms and in rural areas. In the years ahead when the history of this era is written, rural electrification may well go down as the greatest of all federally sponsored farm programs.

The REA was originally set up as an independent agency, but since 1939 it has been a part of the Department of Agriculture. The Rural Electrification Act empowers the REA to make self-liquidating loans to qualified borrowers, with preference to nonprofit and cooperative organizations, for the construction of power facilities to persons in rural areas without central station service and for financing the purchase of electrical appliances and equipment by rural consumers.

Since 1949, under an amendment to the Act, the REA has been empowered to make loans for the purpose of extending and improving telephone service in rural areas.

The Federal loan program for rural electrification today serves the electric power requirements of more than 4 million rural consumers. At this time it is expanding at top speed to keep pace with the increasing use of power in every section of the country. It is in splendid financial condition. There are 978 active borrowers, with facilities in more than 2,600 of the Nation's 3,000 counties.

In the telephone program there are 540 borrowers, whose plans call for new or improved dial service to about 845,000 rural subscribers in 44 States. This program also is moving ahead at the greatest possible speed.

During the 6 years preceding World War II the number of electrified farms tripled. Working with newly organized rural electric cooperatives, REA succeeded in reducing construction costs. This was achieved through the application of mass construction techniques and through the development of new and lower-cost construction designs adapted to rural service needs. When World War II ended, the rural electric cooperatives and the power companies quickly resumed their efforts to connect the remaining unserved farms; and today about 95 percent of the farms are served with electricity compared to 10.9 percent in 1935.

Mr. President, the tremendous growth in rural electrification in the past 22 years is clearly evident in a table which I ask to have printed in the RECORD. It indicates by States the total number of farms in 1935 and in 1954 and the number and percentage of such farms electrified in 1935 as compared with the number and percentage electrified in 1956.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

Mr. BARRETT. According to the census record, 275,000 farms do not now receive central station electric service. Half of that total are farms in the States of Alabama, Kansas, Kentucky, Mississippi, Missouri, North Carolina, South Carolina, Oklahoma, Tennessee, and Texas. A table which I now ask to have printed in the RECORD shows the number of farms by States together with the percentage of the total number of farms in the country not presently receiving central station electric service.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

Mr. BARRETT. About 55 percent of all the electrified farms of America are served through loans of the Rural Electrification Administration. Only Connecticut and Rhode Island do not have facilities financed by REA. It should also be noted that REA borrowers are serving Alaska and Puerto Rico. During the past 10 years more farms have been connected to REA lines than by all other electric systems combined. The constantly increasing percentage of electrified farms served by REA borrowers from 1935 to date is apparent from a table which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

Percent of Electrified Farms Served by REA Borrowers

1935	0
1940	23.6
1944	34.7
1947	39.6
1950	50.5
1953	53.8
1956	54.5

Mr. BARRETT. At the present time REA borrowers are connecting new consumers at the rate of about 100,000 per year. It is reasonable to assume that in the years that lie ahead these rural systems will continue to add new consumers. Our constantly growing population and the trend toward country living contribute in a major way to the increasing number of consumers served by REA-financed systems. At the end of 1956 the REA borrowers were serving about 4,361,000, although the average for that year was 4,229,000 consumers. A table, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD, shows that in 1956 about 58 percent of these consumers were farms, 34 percent were rural residential consumers located in small towns and in the country, and the remaining 8 percent were mostly commercial, industrial, public buildings and irrigation loads.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

Consumers Served by REA Borrowers, by Class of Consumer, 1956

Farm	2,431,795
Residential (town)	281,701
Residential (nonfarm, rural)	1,074,261
Residential (seasonal)	85,381
Schools, churches, public buildings	85,715
Small commercial and industrial	228,691
Large commercial and industrial	9,172
Pump irrigation	26,346
Public street and highway lighting	3,497
Other utilities	120
Other electric service	2,485
Other REA borrowers	45
Total	4,229,209

Mr. BARRETT. From the very beginning the Rural Electrification Administration endeavored to encourage rural electric service in all sections of the country. The rural electric cooperatives are committed to the principle of serving all those without electric service within their service areas who can be served without impairing their financial status. Their area coverage resolutions generally provide that service will be extended at no expense to the applicant except a nominal fee, usually $5, for membership in the cooperative. The area coverage principle has made it possible for the rural electric cooperatives to construct at one time all of the plants required to serve all consumers in sections of their service area and thus realize the economies of large-scale mass construction. The area coverage principle has also operated to avoid unserved "pockets" within service areas.

A total of 1,078 electric systems have obtained loans from the REA, and 88 of these borrowers have paid off their entire indebtedness.

The loan agreements between REA and its borrowers provide for the repayment of principal on an installment basis. Interest on the amount of principal outstanding is also due and payable with each payment on the principal.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARRETT. I yield to the distinguished Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. THYE. I wish to commend the distinguished Senator from Wyoming for having so clearly given this excellent report on the status and accomplishments of the REA. No law ever enacted by Congress has been so beneficial to the rural population as the REA Act. Nothing has brought greater comfort and safety to the farm home than electricity has brought. No longer are the farmer and his family dependent on the old-fashioned lamp, which was such a fire hazard. The same thing is true of the lantern in the stable. No longer are farm homes without running water and all the conveniences which electricity brings to the home. Today the farm child has the same opportunities in the farm home that his city cousins had in the years of yesterday.

I commend the distinguished Senator for having brought to us such a clear outline of the achievements of the REA and what it has meant to the American farmers.

Mr. BARRETT. I thank the Senator for his splendid contribution. For a good long time he has been a consistent and loyal supporter of the REA.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, my State, like the State of the Senator from Wyoming, is largely a rural and agricultural State.

Mr. BARRETT. The distinguished Senator from Kentucky is correct.

Mr. COOPER. Kentucky has 1 large city, Louisville, and 3 or 4 other cities of less than 100,000 population, and many small communities; but it is essentially an agricultural State. I am very much interested in what the Senator is saying about REA. Years ago I was a county judge in Kentucky, in a rural county. Prior to that time I spent all my life in a rural section of Kentucky. I can say that no Government agency or cooperative has reached more farm people and brought greater advantages to farm people than the REA.

I should like to ask the Senator if he knows of any other agency which through the cooperatives has brought into the business of management and operation more people who live in the rural sections of the country than has REA.

Mr. BARRETT. I know of no other agency. I believe I can say, without any possibility of doubt, that the REA has proved to be the most popular governmental program in the history of our country. It has brought more benefits to people on the local level than any other agency. Certainly the people can take credit for it, because they operate and manage the cooperatives themselves, and they have done a very good job of it.

Mr. COOPER. One aspect of the program which interests me particularly is that the management of REA cooperatives has drawn its people from farms and small communities. They manage their property as well as any group of people anywhere else in the United States.

Mr. BARRETT. I am sure that is true of Kentucky, and I know it is true in my State.

Mr. COOPER. I am speaking of the whole record throughout the United States.

Mr. BARRETT. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. Is it not correct to say that the rate of loss on loans is phenomenally small, if there is any loss?

Mr. BARRETT. It is very, very small. I will touch on that point in a moment. There is hardly any loss at all. It is so small that it amounts to very little, indeed.

Mr. COOPER. Many cooperatives are far in advance in the payment of their loans. Is that not correct?

Mr. BARRETT. That is true. As a whole, they are in splendid financial condition. There is no reason why that condition should not continue in the years ahead.

Mr. COOPER. In my short service in the Senate I have been impressed by the great interest the Senator from Wyoming has shown in REA and the way he has worked for it. I am happy that he is making his presentation today.

Mr. BARRETT. I thank the Senator. I know he has been a vigorous supporter of REA on all occasions. As a matter of fact, the Republican Party has consistently supported the REA program.

Mr. ALLOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARRETT. I yield.

Mr. ALLOTT. I hope I am not anticipating some of the Senator's remarks. However, is he going to insert in the RECORD, at a later point in his remarks, some of the percentages and amounts of repayments of REA loans?

Mr. BARRETT. I shall do that, if the Senator will bear with me.

Mr. ALLOTT. I do not want to anticipate anything. In the meantime I wish to associate myself with the remarks of the Senator from Wyoming. He has been a very strong and ardent supporter of REA. As he well knows, most of the States in the West have taken a great lead in REA, even though the distances are great, in bringing electricity to their ranches and farms through the medium of nonprofit organizations which are commonly called REA's, but are, in fact, cooperators.

Mr. BARRETT. I may say to the distinguished Senator from Colorado that my State is probably in worse shape in that regard than his own, because of the tremendous distances between farms and ranches in Wyoming. However, Colorado and Wyoming, and other Western States, have been able to overcome that difficulty. We have established a splendid record of bringing electricity to the ranches and farms in the West.

Mr. ALLOTT. I am sure that is true. I know that in the State of Colorado the percentage was 87 percent a year ago, and in a little less than a year that percentage has gone up seven-tenths of 1 percent, which brings it to about the national average.

Mr. BARRETT. I think that is a little better than the national average. I know the Senator's great interest in this program, and that he has taken the floor during the past week to defend the administration of REA by his fellow citizen from Colorado, Dave Hamil, who is doing a wonderful job. I hope the Senator will bear with me for a while, so that I may get to the point in my remarks where I discuss the record of Mr. Hamil.

Mr. ALLOTT. I shall be most happy to do so.

Mr. BARRETT. Repayment of long-term debt on an installment basis is unusual in the utility business. The long-term debt of utility companies is generally in the form of bonds due on a certain date. In most cases they are replaced at maturity by another issue of long-term debt. This is in contrast to the practice of REA borrowers of repaying the principal of each loan during the loan period.

During the fiscal year 1957 the amount of payments on principal was $71,259,516 and on interest was $39,342,578. On June 30, 1957, the total amount repaid on the principal of loans was $468,533,673 and the total interest paid was $285,471,883.

In addition to the scheduled payments, REA borrowers have made payments in advance of the due date. These advance payments are generally referred to as a "cushion of credit." Advance payments may be used at the option of the borrower to meet scheduled payments of interest or principal, or to pay a note in full. As of June 30, 1957, 756 borrowers had a "cushion of credit" amounting to a total of $109 million. This was an increase of approximately $13 million over the amount of "cushion of credit" which had been built on June 30, 1956.

At that time for the electric program as a whole, $200,602.29 in principal and interest was overdue more than 30 days. This figure represents less than one-thirtieth of 1 percent of the principal and interest payments due. This also is a decrease from the amount of $233,-

872.22 which was overdue more than 30 days as of December 31, 1956.

In any loan program it is expected that some loans will go sour; and the REA is no exception to that rule. During its lifetime, the REA has foreclosed two loans, on which a total loss of $44,478.13 was incurred. Mr. President, that is less than two one-thousandths of 1 percent of the total funds advanced to borrowers. One loss amounted to $7,248.08, in the case of a borrower which was never able effectively to commence construction; and the other amounted to $37,230.05, in the case of a borrower which suffered severe storm damages which decreased the revenue of the company to the point where it could not meet its obligations to the Government.

There are 988 active borrowers, of which 927 are cooperatives, 42 are public power districts, 15 are municipal corporations, and 4 are power companies. I have before me, Mr. President, a table which shows the type of borrowers of the REA, active and repaid. I ask unanimous consent to have the table printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

REA Borrowers

Type of borrower	Total	Cooperatives	Public power districts	Other public bodies	Power companies
All borrowers	1,078	978	49	27	24

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. President, the REA is presently serving about 52 percent of the total number of farms while other suppliers serve about 43 percent and 5 percent are not electrified. REA borrowers have energized almost 1.4 million miles of line, including more than 32,000 miles of transmission line. They have installed more than one million kilowatts of generating capacity. Over $3.5 billion in loans had been placed under contract to electrification borrowers as of June 30 last. I have before me, Mr. President, a table which shows the growth in net electrification and telephone loans since inception of the two programs. I ask unanimous consent to have the table printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. President, the greatest growth in electrification loans occurred during the 5 years following World War II, when construction material, equipment, and manpower again became available for civilian undertakings. The second 5-year postwar period witnessed a leveling off in electrification loans. The trend in the past 2 years has been upward, reflecting the substantial increase in energy consumption by rural consumers and for the attendant need for increasing and heavying up service facilities. REA has geared its operations to meeting promptly all legitimate loan needs of its borrowers.

During the initial year in which electrification loans were made the interest rate to borrowers was set at 3 percent by administrative determination. The loan funds which REA used in its fiscal 1936 lending operations were provided without interest charge to REA by the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935.

Now under the Rural Electrification Act of 1936, the interest rate to borrowers from fiscal year 1937 to September 21, 1944, was established by a formula based on the average rate of interest payable by the United Sates on its obligations having a maturity of 10 or more years. The interest rate so determined ranged from 2.46 to 2.88 percent during this period.

The loan funds used by REA during this period were obtained from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation at a cost of 3 percent, and from the Treasury by direct appropriation without interest.

The Department of Agriculture Organic Act of 1944 fixed the rate for past and future loans by REA at 2 percent and prescribed a rate of 1.75 percent for REA borrowing from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The Act also authorized extension of the term for all loans from 25 to 35 years. The objective of the 1944 amendments was to make it possible to extend electric service on an area coverage basis when materials again became available while complying with the statutory requirement that the loans be self-liquidating.

The Agriculture Department Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1948 amended the Rural Electrification Act by substituting the Treasury for the RFC as the source of REA loan funds. The Act transferred to the Secretary of the Treasury all REA obligations to RFC and authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish loan funds to REA either without interest or at a rate of interest per annum not to exceed the rate provided for REA loans to borrowers. The 2 percent rate fixed in 1944 for REA loans to its borrowers was not affected by this Act. By administrative agreement the rate of interest paid by REA to the Treasury was to be determined by the computed average rate payable by the Government on its outstanding marketable public-debt obligations at the close of the preceding fiscal year, adjusted to the nearest one-eighth but not to exceed 2 percent. From the fiscal year 1949 to date the range of interest rates paid to the Treasury by REA was from 1.75 to 2 percent.

The computed average interest rates paid by the United States on all marketable public-debt obligations were used in REA loan transactions only as a means of determining the interest rate to be paid to the Treasury by REA from 1948 on. Prior to that year the rate paid to RFC was fixed by law and bore no relationship to the cost of money to RFC or to the Treasury. During the period of RFC financing of the REA lending program, the source of RFC funds was relatively short-term public borrowing or borrowing of special funds from the Treasury at interest rates substantially below those paid by REA. No interest was paid to the Treasury by REA on loan funds which were made available to it by direct appropriations. However, at all times all interest received by REA in excess of amounts required to be paid by REA was deposited with the Treasury. The interest rate charged by REA to its borrowers exceeded the computed average rate paid by the Treasury on its marketable issues in all but 7 of the 19 years in which the Treasury rate is determinable. However, this spread is not a valid measure of monetary profit or loss to the Government from REA lending operations, since the source of funds advanced to REA by the Treasury was not identified.

Mr. President, I have before me a table which shows the interest rates paid by the REA for the funds advanced from Government sources and also the rates charged REA borrowers as well as the computed annual interest rates paid by the United States Treasury on interest bearing marketable securities from 1936 to date. I ask unanimous consent to have the table printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. President, it is clear that for some years at least the Rural Electrification Administration paid more in interest to the Treasury than it cost the United States to hire money for the same period of years. It seems to me that it would be a bit unfair to take advantage of that situation, and then, when the cost of money to the Treasury increases, immediately to call upon the REA to increase the interest due on its loans. Because I thought it was eminently unfair to increase the interest rate for the REA's, I submitted a Senate resolution some time ago expressing the conviction that the interest rate to the REA should be maintained at 2 percent.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wyoming yield to me?

Mr. BARRETT. I am glad to yield to my distinguished colleague, the senior Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Wyoming is making a most informative and interesting speech. I have told him privately that I support the resolution he has submitted, to continue the REA loans at the present rate of interest, although I see no indication that any administrative recommendation has been made to do anything other than that which has been provided in his resolution.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. President, I may say to the distinguished Senator from South Dakota that David Hamil, the Administrator of REA, and the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Benson, both have recommended that the interest rate for REA loans be maintained at 2 percent. I cannot believe, and do not believe, that the Administration will recommend an increase in the interest rate for the REA, and I am equally certain that if it did so that the Congress would not enact any such legislation.

Mr. MUNDT. I know that to be correct; I also have conferred with them. Even so, I have told the Senator from Wyoming that if there are in the country persons who are worried about the matter, and if it would tend to give them peace of mind, and if it would tend to establish this as even more definitely the policy—and I have told the Senator from Wyoming this in private conversation—I would support the resolution he has submitted; and I take this opportunity to say so publicly, on the record.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. President, I wish to say that the distinguished Senator from South Dakota has been a very strong and ardent supporter of the REA; and I am sure that in the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of which he is a member, he has given powerful help to the REA in maintaining the 2 percent interest rate. I cannot believe, and do not believe, that the Administration will recommend an increase in the interest rate.

Mr. MUNDT. Let me say that as a member of the Senate Appropriations Committee's subcommittee which deals with REA appropriations, it has been my pleasure not only to vote for, but also in many instances to initiate by motion, the necessary funds required by the REA in order to continue its steady and constructive program of expansion.

I want to commend the Senator from Wyoming for pointing out, as he has done, from his statistical study, that there have been periods of time over quite a few years when the Federal Government actually has made a profit from the interest which the borrowers of REA have paid to the Federal Government. Consequently, while we are at the moment in a period of comparatively higher interest rates, which may be of long or short duration, at this time there is no justification, immediately when interest rates get a little higher, to try to put a penalty on the REA by virtue of the fact that they have established, as it were, credit in the bank during the years when they were paying higher interest rates than would have been called for ordinarily.

Mr. BARRETT. I thank the Senator.

Mr. MUNDT. I can say, as a member of the Appropriations Committee, and as a member of the subcommittee which deals with REA funds, and as a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, nobody in the administration has suggested to me, directly or indirectly, that an effort is to be made to increase the interest rates of REA.

Mr. BARRETT. I thank the Senator.

Let me call attention to the fact that power requirements of REA-financed electric systems are expected to more than triple in the next 10 years. These projections are based on the actual input of the systems and are a part of a study of future power needs and resources of REA borrowers. In the past power needs of REA-financed electric systems have doubled almost every 4 years. This rapid growth was due in part to increased consumption by existing consumers and in part to new consumers coming on the lines. With 95 percent of the Nation's farms now electrified, greater usage by present consumers is expected to be the principal factor in the increased demand for power in the future. According to the Edison Electric Institute, "during the next decade it is estimated that about 124 million kilowatts of net generating capacity will be added."

REA borrowers' proportionate needs are expected to parallel or even exceed those of industry, primarily as a result of the continuing sharp increase in average consumption by their consumers.

Since inception of the REA program, wholesale power has been purchased from commercial power companies, municipal electric systems, TVA, Federal power marketing agencies, and REA-financed generation and transmission cooperatives. The following table, Mr. President, indicates the quantity of energy purchased by REA borrowers by type of supplier during selected fiscal years 1940 to 1956 inclusive.

I ask unanimous consent that the table be printed in the Record at this point.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the Record as follows:

	Total kilowatt-hours purchased	Power companies	Municipal systems	Public bodies	TVA	Federal agencies	REA co-op borrowers
		Percent	Percent	Percent	Percent	Percent	Percent

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. President, REA borrowers are interested in getting a dependable supply of power at the lowest cost for their consumers. There are some who believe that private and public power are completely incompatible, that we must have all of one and none of the other. To my way of thinking that position is completely unwarranted.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARRETT. I yield.

Mr. MUNDT. I agree with what the Senator has said, that there is room in this country for both private and public power. In those areas where private power is unable to provide, at proper economical rates, the power required by the people, those are the places in which public power should function. In those areas where private enterprise—which pays taxes—is able economically to generate and distribute power at reasonable rates which people can afford to pay, then it seems to me that is where private enterprise of the country should function and where public power should not be interjected. Does the Senator agree with that statement?

Mr. BARRETT. The Senator is entirely correct. Certainly it is entirely consistent for a person to be a rather firm supporter of REA and still be opposed to public power where private industry is ready, willing, and able to undertake construction of a power project.

Mr. MUNDT. May I say to the Senator in that regard that, in my opinion, as I understand REA and as I have advocated REA on the floor of Congress and in committee rooms, I consider REA to be private power, cooperatively owned——

Mr. BARRETT. There is no question about that.

Mr. MUNDT. REA is private power owned by the farmers who comprise the co-op. I do not think REA is public power at all, and those who identify REA as public power render a great disservice to REA, because it is no more public power than the local farmers' and merchants' oil company in my hometown is a public-ownership filling station. It is a co-op, organized under the cooperative laws of the State and the Nation, owned by the farmers. The profits go to the farmers and are paid to them in the nature of patronage dividends.

Mr. BARRETT. A co-op is private enterprise in the strictest sense of the word. The Senator is correct.

Mr. MUNDT. I think we should keep clearly in mind the distinction. Public power, which we think of in terms of Federal power, is owned by the Federal Government, operated by the Federal Government, with profits, if any, which may accrue, going to the Federal Government, and with losses, if any, being paid by the taxpayers of the entire country. The persons who would be running REA's today, if they were public power, would be politicians in a bureaucracy in Washington, rather than the farmers elected by the patrons of REA in various cooperative districts of the country as is presently the program. Is that statement not correct?

Mr. BARRETT. That is correct.

Mr. MUNDT. In the long run, I think there is a greater danger to our farmer-owned, farmer-operated REA co-ops in this country from Federal power, from national, socialized power, than there is from private power. There is a greater danger that the farmer-owned and farmer-operated co-ops will be snuffed out by a great flood of public-power enthusiasts and public-power legislation than that they are ever going to be snuffed out by private utilities.

It must be remembered that the co-ops are operated by the farmers and owned by the farmers and they borrow money from the Government as they might from banks and pay that money back with interest. I see no way in the world that a privately owned cooperative can fall into the hands of a private utility unless the board of directors some night goes out on a grand and glorious drunk and votes to sell it to a private utility. A private utility cannot take away from the farmers the co-op which the farmers own. But Congress could. Public-power enthusiasts could. People with a glint in their eyes about public power could. People who would socialize and nationalize all industry could. Congress could pass a law which could compel the farmer-owned, farmer-operated co-ops to divest themselves of their ownership. We could absorb their loans. We could take over their liabilities. We could require them to sell out to the Government. We could run the co-ops from a bureaucracy, from the center. We could operate them as nationalized institutions, the way the power facilities in Russia are operated today under communism. We could—but I sincerely hope we never do.

I call to the attention of the farmers of this country that they must protect their vested interest in farmer-owned and farmer-operated co-ops. Certainly they must protect them against letting a greedy private utility buy them out or bribe their boards of directors to sell out to them. They must also be protected against misinformed and ill-advised enthusiasts and political leaders and ideologists who would like to flood this country with a great wave of national Federal power, public power in its genuine sense, and thereby have legislation enacted divesting farmers of ownership which they rightfully have in the co-ops, of which they are members and of which they are a part. REA power is privately operated; our REA's are privately owned. They must be on guard equally against socialistically inclined public power lobbyists and private utility magnates.

Does the Senator agree?

Mr. BARRETT. The Senator is eminently correct. I am quite certain the persons who have organized and operated the REA's, at least those in the western part of the country, are fully aware of the problem, and they know full well their interests are not identical at all with those who want to have Federal projects constructed at Government cost of hundreds of millions of dollars and operated for the benefit of certain areas to the disadvantage of other areas in the West when the projects can be built by private industry. They know that their best interests are going to be served by working for the REA's entirely and not by identifying the rural electric cooperatives with public power.

Mr. MUNDT. I am mighty happy to have the Senator say that. I am glad to have that confirmation in the RECORD as I was sure we would have it. May I say that if this colloquy this afternoon does nothing else, I hope it buttons down for all time the fact that REA's are privately owned and privately operated, as any other co-op is; that they are not public power, and that those both inside and outside REA who try to delude the farmer owners and operators of REA by endeavoring to make them feel that they are part of a big public ownership socialized segment of our economy are either ill informed or ill intentioned. Such public power enthusiasts are mischief-makers who are doing a disservice to our farmers and to REA which would deprive them of the very existence of REA. Farmers desirous of maintaining this fine rural electrification program, which has been proved so wonderful for so long, and which has been supported by Democrats and Republicans in the administrative and executive branches, would do well to look with a jaundiced eye on visitors in their midsts who would make them believe they are part of a public power combine. America's farmers are private enterprisers. They believe in private ownership. They practice it in their personal lives and they practice it in REA. They do well, therefore, to examine the motives, the financial backing, and the personal or political ambitions of any who write, or speak, or campaign in an effort to identify REA with public power rather than with private, cooperatively managed, ownership.

If REA owner-patrons ever fall for that kind of a fallacy, they may wind up entirely out of the REA, with the politicians down in Washington running it, owning it, and operating it. Then we will have destroyed one of the great grassroots developments of this country which, in partnership with the Federal Government as a loaning agency, is bringing not only light but telephone communications to the farm homes all over America.

Mr. CURTIS and Mr. GOLDWATER addressed the Chair.

Mr. BARRETT. I yield first to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. CURTIS. I thank the distinguished Senator.

The Senator from Wyoming is making an excellent speech tracing the record and accomplishments of the rural electrification program.

The other Senators have made a material contribution toward clearing the air in the thinking about the REA program and what it means to rural America.

I have some very definite feelings about Federal public power. What I am about to state as my feeling on the subject is a position I have declared through the years, publicly and privately, at home and in Washington. That feeling is this: Whenever the Federal taxpayers are called upon to build, and it seems wise to build, a conservation project, such as an irrigation project or a flood-control project, and it is expedient and necessary that the Federal Government do so, then in that case Federal money should be spent to develop the public power in order to lower the cost of the multiple-purpose project.

Mr. BARRETT. Or, I may say to my distinguished colleague, to operate the project.

Mr. CURTIS. Yes.

Mr. BARRETT. To use the power for operation of the project or for the farmers on the project.

Mr. CURTIS. I would go further. I would say in order to lower the cost of an irrigation project or a flood-control project, which are Federal functions, it is wise and expedient to firm up the power with steam or other means in order to make it marketable to the best advantage. Within reason that should be done. I would say that powerlines should be built to market the power to the best advantage for all concerned.

That is the program I have consistently supported as a Member of the Senate and as a Member of the House. I have declared that position publicly and privately, at home and here in Washington.

However, when we are considering a different type of project, a project which in the main is not for the purpose of expanding irrigation or for the purpose of providing necessary flood control, but involves purely and simply taxing the Federal taxpayers in order to generate power, in the main for power in order to socialize the power industry, I have not favored such projects. I do not believe they are in the public interest.

Mr. BARRETT. Certainly not, when private industry is ready, willing, and able to undertake the construction of the project and to furnish the power which the people of the particular area need.

Mr. CURTIS. I agree. If the projects are not a part of the overall development, certainly the Federal Government should not undertake to construct them. If private sources can do the work, or if the local people can do it themselves, through municipalities or otherwise, the Government should not do so.

Mr. BARRETT. I think the Senator from Nebraska is eminently correct. I invite his attention to the fact that the Commissioner of Reclamation made the statement in Colorado the other day that the first use of Federal funds for the development of our water resources should be to apply the water to the land.

Mr. CURTIS. Yes.

Mr. BARRETT. And that if hundreds of millions of dollars are appropriated by the Congress for the purpose of building power projects, when private industry is willing and able to undertake their construction, then necessarily the amount of money which will be made available for the construction of reclamation projects and the bringing of water to the parched lands of the West will be restricted and limited by the same amount.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. BARRETT. I am glad to yield to my friend from Nebraska.

Mr. CURTIS. The rural electrification program is so well accepted all over the United States that it is the one program which has had unanimous support in the Congress. I cannot remember ever hearing a speech made in the Congress of the United States against the REA. I have never known of that being done.

Mr. BARRETT. I have never heard of one, either.

Mr. CURTIS. The authorization legislation is carried in the agricultural bills. The appropriations are made annually. While there may at times be some disagreement as to how much money should be spent in a given period of time, the program has been unanimously supported.

I think the farmers and others who are interested in REA have been misinformed and misguided by being advised that certain groups and individuals are fighting REA, when there is not a thing on the record to indicate that anybody is opposing this fine program. I cannot imagine anyone suggesting that we abandon electricity and go back to the lighting and power devices which were used before this program developed.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. President, in my State the private power people have worked hand in hand with public power for more than a quarter of a century. Only recently private power has started construction on a large 100,000-kilowatt steam plant that will help relieve the power shortage in our State. We need both public and private power working together to supply the needs of our State if we are to develop our natural resources and bring new industries into our State.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARRETT. I yield.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, I wish to compliment the distinguished Senator from Wyoming for the remarks he is making today. I feel they are long overdue. I believe they will help to clear up a condition which has been muddied by political interference and by the operations of a group in Washington who, I feel, do not have at heart the best interests of the people we have in mind.

I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Wyoming if he knows of any diminution of activity in the REA field since January of 1953.

Mr. BARRETT. Of course not. The program has gone ahead by leaps and bounds since 1953. Greater progress has been made during the last year than was made for a long time, with the exception of the years immediately following the war when there was a large backlog to be picked up, and a Republican Congress took care of that need at that time in a splendid way.

Mr. GOLDWATER. I should like to ask the Senator another question. Is the Senator aware of any large Federal electric projects having been completed since January of 1953?

Mr. BARRETT. Not any large ones.

Mr. GOLDWATER. There have not been any large ones completed. That leads me to the next question, which I think the distinguished Senator from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT] was discussing with my friend from Wyoming. Is there any connection at all between REA and public power?

Mr. BARRETT. Not in the least. The REA's are free enterprises, working at the local level for the benefit of the people, managed by the people, and operated by the people. The REA is certainly an operation in connection with which the only interest of the Federal Government is in the nature of providing loans permitting the REA's to construct their lines.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, I should like to remind the Senate of what the Republican platform had to say on this question in 1952, because I wish to bring out that the administration, by allowing the free-enterprise system to operate in a freer manner than it has operated since 1932, has actually provided more power for the REA's. The Republican Party said in its platform in 1952:

> We support the principle of bona fide farmer-owned, farmer-operated cooperatives and urge the further development of rural electrification and communication, with federally assisted production of power and facilities for distribution when these are not adequately available through private enterprise at fair rates.

Mr. BARRETT. I may say that we have carried out that plank.

Mr. GOLDWATER. That is what I wanted to point out to my colleagues. The Republican administration has carried out that plank, and has, without spending the taxpayers' dollars on large Federal power projects, enabled more and more farmers to enjoy electricity, as a result of private enterprise entering the field and moving ahead.

Mr. BARRETT. I thank the Senator.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator to yield further.

Mr. BARRETT. I am glad to yield.

Mr. GOLDWATER. I should like to develop a point with which I feel not many people are acquainted.

Mr. BARRETT. I am glad to yield.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Is the Senator acquainted with the National Rural Electric Cooperative Association?

Mr. BARRETT. I have heard of the organization. I get the magazine. I have had occasion to read their articles from time to time.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Let me remind the Senator and the Senate that the National Rural Electric Cooperative Association describes itself as a nonpartisan, nonprofit organization of rural electric cooperative public power districts and public utility districts in the United States and Territories, an entirely independent private cooperative service organization in no way affiliated with the Rural Electrification Administration.

I desire to point out that this association describes itself as a nonpartisan organization. If this organization is nonpartisan, why do the Members of the Senate and the Members of the House of Representatives receive copious quantities of mail when such projects as Hells Canyon, TVA, and atomic power come up?

Mr. BARRETT. I may say to my colleague, the Senator from Arizona, that I think the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT] and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. CURTIS] made it abundantly clear a few moments ago that the interests of the REA cooperatives are not identical with the interests of those who advocate public power and attempted to exploit it in the proposed Hells Canyon legislation. It seems to me that REA cooperatives have been ill advised and there are those who attempt to lead them to believe that their interests are identical with the interests of those who want to construct big power projects at public expense.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Yet every time Hells Canyon comes to the floor of the Senate, or TVA comes to the floor of the Senate, I hear from my constituents in Arizona that I should vote for Hells Canyon or for TVA. I believe the Senator from Wyoming will say that he has had the same experience.

Mr. BARRETT. I certainly have; and I think every other Senator can say the same thing. A barrage of propaganda has been fired at the farmers of America in an effort to convince them that they are obliged to support the public power program when their cooperatives, as the Senator has well pointed out, are private-enterprise systems in the true sense of the word.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me in order that I may ask the Senator from Arizona a question?

Mr. BARRETT. I am delighted to yield.

Mr. CURTIS. Did the Senator from Arizona say that the National Association of REA Cooperatives is a nonpartisan organization?

Mr. GOLDWATER. I read from their current description of themselves:

Mr. CURTIS. It has been my observation that in election year after election year they have been in partisan politics. One of their principal officers, Mr. Ellis, arrived in my State—I assume at the expense of that group—last fall, prior to the presidential election, and he attacked the present administration of the REA. He charged the administration with attempting to destroy the REA. A few months before that, in my own State of Nebraska, the largest REA loan in history had been granted, to build a steam plant; yet Mr. Ellis came there and delivered a partisan blast as soon as he got off the airplane, obviously for the purpose of playing politics.

The voting charts and other material which they distribute at election time are directed toward the same end. In order to make this account entirely impersonal, our late beloved friend, Senator Hugh Butler, was a leader in this body for REA. He went all the way for it. Yet when election time came, and one read the charts, he would find Hugh Butler pictured as an enemy of REA. I am astounded at the claim of the National Rural Electric Cooperative Association that it is nonpartisan.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARRETT. I yield to the distinguished Senator from Arizona.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Why are Senators and Members of the House pictured as enemies of the REA? Because they vote against public power. I know that the farmers in my State, users of REA service, do not believe in public power. Yet when public power projects come before this body, they are incited by Mr. Ellis and his organization to telegraph me and my colleagues to vote for public power.

Mr. CURTIS. It goes further than that. I think they are opposed because of their party affiliation.

Mr. GOLDWATER. I think there is no question about that.

Mr. CURTIS. Where do they get the money with which to operate?

Mr. GOLDWATER. I shall be very happy to explain that. The Association has a system of dues. The NRECA dues structure varies with the type of member organization. A nonprofit rural electric distribution system pays an initial membership fee of $10, and annual dues of between 10 and 12½ cents per connected customer. The dues vary.

Mr. Ellis reported, at the 1957 annual meeting, that the dues income had increased sevenfold since 1943, to 1946, or to a total of $400,000.

Why should the people of Arizona who enjoy REA power—and I believe our farms are 96 or 97 percent electrified—pay dues to an organization in Washington which is solely for public power? I do not believe the farmers of my State believe in public power. Yet Mr. Ellis, the general manager, with $400,000 a year at his beck and call, can spread false propaganda. He can speak over the radio; he can go to my town or the town of the Senator from Nebraska, or the town of the Senator from Wyoming, and say, "These Senators are no good." Why? Because I voted against Hells Canyon, which is about 2,000 miles from Arizona; and because I voted against TVA, which is about the same distance from Arizona.

Mr. ALLOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARRETT. I yield.

Mr. ALLOTT. Is the Senator from Arizona aware that the source of funds he has mentioned is not the only source of funds with which the association carries on its propaganda campaigns? Is he aware that twice in the past 2 years a national campaign has been organized to solicit REA's for propagandizing public power, and that many REA local cooperatives, under the mistaken apprehension that public power was a part of their purpose, because of the constant propagandizing, contributed money as a result of the two campaigns in addition to their annual dues to the NRECA?

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wyoming yield to me so that I may answer the question of the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BARRETT. I am very happy to yield.

Mr. GOLDWATER. I am glad the Senator from Colorado brought up that question.

Two years ago, during the debate on the Hells Canyon bill, I placed in the RECORD a list of contributors to the Hells Canyon Association. Let me read the list of contributors:

Northwest Public Power Association, $2,000.

Montana REA, $200.

Southwestern Washington Public Utilities District Commissioners Association, $1,030.

Eastern Washington Public Utilities District Commissioners Association, $500.

Idaho REA, $500.

Wasco Electric Cooperative, $425.

Oregon REA, $2,000.

Water and power users of Santa Clara County, $27.

APPA, $1,750.

Washington REA, $200.

Cooperative League of the United States, $25.

Individual REA's, $19,266.70.

These contributions aggregate $29,925.70, of the total kitty of more than $100,000 which was raised.

These moneys come from people who have been told that if dams like Hells Canyon are not built, or if TVA is not expanded, or if atomic power is not developed by the Government, the REA will fall on its face.

I am surprised at Mr. Ellis spreading such propaganda, in view of the evidence that in this administration the REA, operating with power produced by private sources, has shown the greatest increase in its history, except for the years immediately after the war, when the demand was heaviest.

Mr. BARRETT. I thank my colleague.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARRETT. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. I have no objection to anyone being for or against public power if it is not connected with multipurpose dams. I have no objection to individuals raising money to get their side of the story across, if they are for public power, but I think it should be done forthrightly and honestly, and it should not be confused with the rural electrification program.

Mr. BARRETT. I agree with the Senator 100 percent.

Mr. CURTIS. Money should not be collected from farmers, making the cost of their local unit more expensive, under the pretense that it is necessary to maintain a lobby in Washington in order to get the REA program over, when the money is used for other purposes. I certainly condemn the action of an organization which misrepresents the voting record of Members of the Congress with respect to the support of authorizations for the rural electrification program. I am convinced that some of the leaders in the national association to whom reference has been made have been doing that for some time.

Mr. BARRETT. I thank the Senator.

I was one of the organizers of the Niobrara Rural Electric Association at Lusk 17 years ago and I yield to no man in my support of REA, but, at the same time, I realize the need and importance of encouraging private enterprise to do its full part in providing the power that we will need in the years ahead. There is a place today and tomorrow for both private and public power with REA-financed systems maintaining their proper place as a growing and influential part of private power. Both private and public power are needed to do the Nation's power job. Each can serve to keep the other member of the power team on its toes.

Where power generated by Federal agencies is available under the statutory preference clauses of the Flood Control Act, REA-financed cooperatives, municipalities, public power districts and other political subdivisions should have access to such power. Many REA borrowers serve sections of the country where area coverage is possible only through the availability of low-cost power generated by Federal agencies.

During the early years of the program REA borrowers found it necessary to purchase or generate their electric power at costs ranging from 1.5 cents to 2.5 cents per kilowatt-hour. Due to increase in the consumers' usage, improved efficiency, better understanding of the program, and cooperation from the electric industry, the average cost of wholesale power purchased has been reduced from 1.09 cents per kilowatt-hour in 1940 to .72 cents in 1956.

A table, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD, shows the quantity and the cost of energy purchased by REA borrowers during selected fiscal years 1940 to 1956 inclusive.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

Fiscal year ending June 30—	Kilowatt-hours purchased	Cost of energy purchased	Average cost per kilowatt-hour
			Cents
1940	406,530,264	$4,426,643	1.09
1942	1,086,221,222	10,192,747	.94
1944	1,988,266,708	16,656,009	.84
1946	2,367,780,748	20,760,680	.88
1948	4,151,635,089	37,014,736	.89
1950	7,138,326,685	61,505,793	.86
1951	8,974,458,974	73,604,738	.82
1952	10,764,660,930	85,569,592	.79
1953	12,458,469,815	97,215,856	.78
1954	14,309,755,359	108,979,050	.76
1955	16,216,442,800	119,806,774	.74
1956	18,373,165,900	132,403,246	.72

Mr. BARRETT. Electricity has brought much more business to our rural communities than was anticipated by its most optimistic friends.

Expenditures by rural consumers for electric equipment and wiring is already estimated in the billions. Farm sales of power equipment continue to increase. In addition, availability of power is attracting new residents from the cities and is bringing new industry to the country. Electricity is driving the wheels of progress in rural America. Electricity is enabling the farmers of America to meet successfully competitive postwar conditions.

Electricity has moved factory efficiency to the farm, increasing production with less labor. Electric equipment has improved the quality of farm products. Sterilization and refrigeration equipment has meant higher-grade milk for the protection of the consumer. Electric brooding equipment has saved chicks and pigs. Losses due to spoilage have been greatly reduced by electric refrigerators, food freezers, and hay and grain dryers.

The growth of rural electric usage has exceeded even the rosiest expectations. Recent developments indicate that the increase will continue. Air conditioning, electric house heating, water pumping for irrigation, and crop drying are just beginning to appear in farm areas but already give evidence of their usefulness and popularity with rural consumers. Electric heating, for example, can add 10,000 to 15,000 kilowatt-hours to the average annual consumption per residence. This figure now is about 2,500 kilowatt-hours. Experience with irrigation as a load builder in Western States indicates that farm loads will increase spectacularly with wider adoption of this practice.

This achievement has been accomplished by the rural people, the electric industry, and the Government working together within the framework of our free enterprise system. One of the strong points of the program and one which receives full endorsement of the Republican Party is its private enterprise nature.

The rural electric cooperatives are private enterprise in the strictest sense. They are incorporated under the laws of their respective States. They are owned and controlled by their member-consumers. Their relationship with REA is that of a borrower to a lender. As long as they are current in their payments of principal and interest, the REA exercises over the cooperatives the minimum control essential to the security of the loans. REA expresses policy on matters relating to loan security but refrains from interference with the management of the systems. The cooperatives' purpose is to render dependable electric service to their members at the lowest cost consistent with sound management of the system. They operate under the control of their boards of directors who are elected by the members and who determine the objectives, establish the policies, and hire the personnel required to carry on the management and administrative functions of the organization. Margins in excess of expenses realized through operations by the cooperative belong to the members.

It is a matter of record that the Republican Party has consistently supported the rural electrification program. The late Senator George W. Norris, Republican, of Nebraska, was coauthor of the Rural Electrification Act. He was fighting for rural electrification long before the Act was adopted. The lights that burn in the farm homes of the Nation symbolize his interest and leadership in helping establish the rural electrification program. The Republican Party down through the years has stood firmly for a sound rural electrification program—one that would be expanded to meet the needs of our rural people. In fiscal years 1943 and 1949, when rural electric construction was at a peak, a Republican Congress voted the largest appropriation on record for the program.

Mr. HRUSKA. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARRETT. I am very glad to yield to the distinguished senior Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HRUSKA. First of all, I should like to associate myself with the remarks of the Senators who have expressed appreciation to the Senator from Wyoming for outlining the history and achievement of REA. With reference to my State of Nebraska, I believe the Senator from Wyoming will be interested to know that during the past 22 years, since REA began operations, more than $125 million has been advanced to cooperatives, which embrace an area of some 60,000 square miles, and serve approximately 95,000 farms. The cooperatives have paid since that time approximately $11 million in interest and approximately $14 million in principal on the loans made to them. Their payments are well ahead of schedule.

Indicative of the fine fashion in which the respective cooperatives have been managed, their payments are approximately $4½ million ahead of schedule. As of July 1 this year not one account was more than 30 days in arrears, indicating a perfect record of payment.

Mr. BARRETT. The State of Nebraska is entitled to be commended on that achievement and to take great credit for that splendid record.

Mr. HRUSKA. I believe that is a record which is not much different from the record of many other States. I am confident that the record of our neighboring State to the west, so ably represented, in part, by the Senator from Wyoming, is undoubtedly equally as up to date and as far along in the program.

Mr. BARRETT. My own State also has a very splendid record.

Mr. HRUSKA. If the Senator will yield further, I should like to say it was with some interest that I listened to the colloquy between the Senator from Arizona and the Senator from Wyoming with reference to some of the activities of NRECA. I could not help being reminded in that connection of instances of the association having gone into questions involving public power, and issues such as the Hells Canyon Dam proposal.

Not long ago there came before the Senate the Niagara Power Authority bill. In that instance, as in other instances, there was an injection of the public-power issue into a proposition in which no Federal funds were involved. In the development of the Niagara Falls, there was involved the New York State Power Authority, which will resort to no Federal funds. Yet REA local cooperatives throughout the Nation were circularized and asked to contact Members of Congress for the purpose of inducing them to support a Federal preference clause in the Niagara power bill. In that project no Federal money was involved, and no Federal loan was involved. It was totally a State-developed project. Yet the effort was made to inject the public-power philosophy into the consideration of that project.

It seems to me that that is another instance of an attempt by NRECA to lend political and public-power color to the Niagara project. NRECA has received some financial support from REA's which, as has been so ably pointed out by the Senator from South Dakota and by the Senator from Wyoming, are truly privately owned, rather than public-power institutions.

Mr. BARRETT. I thank the Senator for his splendid contribution. I hope the statement made by the distinguished senior Senator from Nebraska and the statements by many other Senators on the floor today will show the members of REA throughout the length and breadth of the land that they are truly private entrepreneurs and that their interests are not in any sense identical with public power.

Mr. HRUSKA. There would be no direct influence on the REA's of either the State of Nebraska or the State of Wyoming even if the preference clause were or were not attached to the Niagara Falls situation. I have the idea that we would function just as happily and as successfully with or without it.

Mr. BARRETT. I am sure we would. I thank the Senator.

As the Senator from Arizona [Mr. GOLDWATER] so well pointed out a few moments ago, the Republican Party had a very strong plank in its 1952 platform supporting rural electrification.

We had a similar declaration in the 1956 platform.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARRETT. I yield.

Mr. COOPER. I am interested in the Senator's statement that in 1948 and 1949 the 80th Republican Congress made available the largest appropriation in the history of our country for the Rural Electrification Administration. That is a fact, is it not?

Mr. BARRETT. Indeed it is.

Mr. COOPER. I know that it is correct, yet it is a fact hardly every stated. There are very few farmers, I believe, who know it. Those who want to make a partisan issue of REA, against the Republican Party, certainly conceal that fact. I am glad the distinguished Senator from Wyoming has stated it. I am glad that our party, when it was in power in the 80th Congress in 1947 and 1948, made the largest appropriation to REA on record.

Mr. BARRETT. I think it is only fair to say that the Republican Party has stood foursquare for REA at all times. That is true, any statement to the contrary notwithstanding. I am sure that every Republican Member of the Senate and of the House has supported REA on all occasions.

Mr. COOPER. I was called out of the Chamber for a few moments. I do not know whether the Senator has yet discussed the fact that during the last 4 years the backlog of applications for REA funds has been greatly reduced under the leadership of both Mr. Nelsen, the former REA Administrator, and the present Administrator, and at a faster rate than during the preceding administration.

Mr. BARRETT. That is Mr. Hamil. The Senator is anticipating me a bit. I will develop that point a little later in my remarks. But that is certainly the record, one of which we are very proud. It shows again that the Republican Administration is doing everything it can to promote the best interests of the REA program.

Mr. COOPER. Will the Senator from Wyoming yield, to permit me to refer to an experience had in Kentucky, in the last few years, in regard to the REA?

Mr. BARRETT. I shall be delighted to have the Senator from Kentucky do so.

Mr. COOPER. In 1940, an application was made by a distributing cooperative in Kentucky, called the Eastern Kentucky Rural Electric Cooperative, for funds with which to build a steam plant to generate power to be furnished to a number of cooperatives in Kentucky, and to reach approximately 90 counties. I want to be fair. Of course, World War II came along; and during the war years it was impossible to make the loan available, chiefly because it was impossible to obtain the necessary supplies and equipment. But after the war ended, the years passed, but the REA made no loans to that cooperative.

In 1953, when President Eisenhower's administration came into power and when Mr. Nelsen became the Administrator, the Eastern Kentucky Rural Electric Cooperative renewed its application. Mr. Nelsen was very careful in making the review; at times it was even charged in Kentucky, in some quarters, that he was not giving the matter fair consideration. But the important thing was that after a fair consideration, the loan was made. I do not remember the exact amount of the loan, but it was approximately $22 million. The application had been pending for 13 years; but under this administration, under Mr. Nelsen, the loan was made.

Mr. BARRETT. Under the Republican administration the job was done.

Mr. COOPER. Yes.

Last fall, the same cooperative made application for an additional $12 million or $13 million, as I recall. Mr. Hamil took the application under consideration; and within a period of 4 or 5 months he had thoroughly reviewed the application and had made the loan.

I have never received any complaint of any delay in connection with the loans, or to the effect that loans were not made, when properly applied for, to any cooperative in Kentucky under Mr. Nelsen or Mr. Hamil.

Mr. BARRETT. I venture to state that, strange to say, in Kentucky there are persons who will say that this administration is opposed to the REA, despite that splendid record.

Mr. COOPER. No; to the contrary the director of our cooperative and members are very much pleased with the treatment they have received and with the expeditious way in which their requests have been handled. Again I commend the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. BARRETT] for his great support and work for REA.

Mr. BARRETT. I am very glad to hear that.

Mr. President, a moment ago I referred to the statement contained in the Republican Party's platform.

With this statement as a guideline, the administration under President Eisenhower moved forward with an expanded and businesslike program. The overall policy was to give the program the best possible service at the least cost to the taxpayer. Under this administration the Rural Electrification Administration speeded up the process of making loans. The volume of loans to meet legitimate needs started an upward trend. In the fiscal year 1954, the first full year of operation under the Eisenhower administration, REA loans increased nearly $2.5 million over those in the previous year. They increased again in 1955 and 1956. In 1957 the gross loans reached $300.5 million, the fourth largest loan-year in the 22-year history of REA.

More than 600,000 rural consumers will get service for the first time as a result of these loans, hundred of thousands of people on the lines will get better service through system improvements, and all will get power at the lowest rate in REA history. In the fiscal year 1956 that rate averaged 7.2 mills per kilowatt-hour, a reduction of 7.5 percent under the 1953 rate. In addition, it should be noted that the average retail rate to consumers on the lines of the rural cooperatives dropped to an all-time low of 2.8 cents.

Since World War II the average kilowatt-hour consumption per farm consumer served by REA borrowers has tripled—from 90 kilowatt-hours monthly in 1946 to 270 kilowatt-hours last year. The total input of REA financed systems has increased even more spectacularly—from less than 2.5 billion kilowatt-hours in the fiscal year 1946 to 21 billion kilowatt-hours in the fiscal year 1957, an 840-percent increase.

In 1956 the Republican Party's platform not only declared its support of the rural electrification program, but also recognized the growing power needs of our rural areas and the necessity of doing something about them. It made this pledge to rural people: "To expand rural electrification through REA loans for generation and transmission." That pledge has been kept.

It should be made clear, Mr. President, that the REA makes loans to finance the construction of generation and transmission facilities only where no adequate and dependable source of power is available to meet the consumers' needs. From the standpoint of the Nation's farmers, it is indeed fortunate that the REA has the right to finance generation and transmission systems, even though it is unnecessary to exercise that right. That in itself gives the REA's strong bargaining power. There have been cases in which such loans have made it possible for REA borrowers to proceed with area-coverage programs.

Of course, Federal appropriations should be used in the first place to bring basic electric service wherever feasible to the few rural areas which are still without it. In the second place, Federal funds should be used to increase the load on rural lines in order to provide adequate power for those already receiving service from cooperatives.

Where private industry is ready, willing, and able to provide generating capacity, it should be permitted to do so and thereby relieve the Federal Treasury from that obligation. I can see no good reason, Mr. President, why private and public power should not work together wherever private industry is unable or unwilling to undertake projects necessary for the general welfare of our people. Then, of course, the Congress is amply justified in authorizing the construction of such projects. On the other hand, the budgetary requirements of the Federal Government make it imperative that we encourage free enterprise to assume its share of the construction and operation of these projects.

In the fiscal year 1957 over $120 million was loaned to finance new generation and transmission facilities. A total of 740,000 kilowatts of new generating capacity has been approved under this Administration. As of June 30 of this year the REA has made loans to 40 generation and transmission borrowers. It has loaned to these borrowers $744,832,130 for the construction of generation and transmission facilities.

I have before me a table which shows the generation and transmission facilities provided by REA loans during the fiscal years 1953 to 1957 inclusive. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have the table printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

Fiscal year	Miles transmission line	Kilowatt generating capacity
1953	1,337	30,205
1954	1,659	73,240
1955	1,724	98,940
1956	2,677	188,834
1957	2,245	379,466

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. President, it should be pointed out that the rural electrification program has developed a significant wholesale power market for electric utilities. The volume of power-company sales to cooperatives over recent years is shown in a table which I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

Fiscal year	[In millions of dollars]
1956	64.3
1955	59.4
1954	57.0
1953	54.1
1952	49.3
1951	43.2

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. President, the continuing success of the rural electrification program has been due largely to the selection of two outstanding REA Administrators by President Eisenhower. His appointment of Ancher Nelsen in 1953 and of David A. Hamil in 1956 placed the REA lending operations in the hands of experienced businessmen who had already demonstrated competence and integrity. Both men were born and reared on farms in our great agricultural West. From their farm and ranch experience they brought to the REA a deep appreciation of the rural need for top-quality electric service at reasonable cost.

Both Administrators had helped sign up their neighbors for electric service from cooperatives, and both had served as directors of their local rural systems. They came to Washington strong believers in the REA loan program and completely dedicated to extending its benefits.

It is to their credit that both of these fine Administrators chose to use with a minimum of change the existing staff of civil-service employees already familiar with the work at the REA. Both contributed vigorous leadership and brought about more efficient procedures in the organization, and they developed in the REA a new and meaningful concept of the relationship between the Government and the citizens it serves.

Mr. ALLOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wyoming yield to me?

Mr. BARRETT. I am delighted to yield to my distinguished colleague, the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ALLOTT. I am sure the efforts of the distinguished senior Senator from Wyoming will bring a warm glow in the hearts of the members of the rural electric cooperatives all over the country. The record which Ancher Nelsen and his successor, Mr. Hamil, as Administrators of the REA, have made is well known.

The other day I had occasion to comment, on the floor of the Senate, on the great backlog of loans which existed when Ancher Nelsen took office. I am very happy to state that during the subsequent administration of Dave Hamil that backlog has been constantly whittled down, and the loans made by the REA to the cooperatives have expanded each year.

As a Coloradan, I wish to extend, for both my fellow Coloradan, Mr. Hamil, and myself, our very deep appreciation of the remarks the distinguished Senator from Wyoming has made.

Mr. BARRETT. I thank the Senator from Colorado. I wish to say to him that I consider Dave Hamil to be one of the outstanding administrators in the entire Government service. He is doing a magnificent job for the rural electrification program. The Senator from Colorado has anticipated the statement I am about to make about Mr. Hamil's record. I shall discuss that in a few minutes, and I hope the Senator from Colorado will make some comments in that connection.

Mr. ALLOTT. I shall be very happy to do so.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. President, the cooperatives and other borrowers of REA funds have been given increasing opportunity under the present administration to develop their operations as local, independent business enterprises, free from unnecessary controls and restraints from Washington. This is in keeping with our best traditions and goes far in assuring continued freedom for the individual in these days when the tendency is to center power and authority in the Federal Government.

To the credit of this administration and of these fine Administrators, Nelsen and Hamil, it must be said that the program has been managed and operated wholly and completely on a nonpartisan basis. This is as it should be, for the REA program is a program of the people, not of any one political party or of any one group of people. I would be the first to voice strenuous objection to partisan operation.

Under the leadership of these men rural electric cooperatives today find themselves in the strongest financial position in the entire 21-year history of the REA. Their loan needs have been met with record promptness. In the past 4 years processing time for loan applications has been reduced in some cases up to 50 percent, with resultant savings to taxpayers of millions of dollars annually in administrative costs.

When this administration came into power there was a backlog of $192 million in electric loan applications, as the distinguished Senator from Colorado so well pointed out. But by the adoption of streamlined business procedures that backlog was reduced to $90 million by the end of last year.

In the last full year of the Truman administration the gross electric loans totaled $165 million. This compares with gross loans of $190 million in 1956 and $300.5 million in 1957.

Marked improvement in administrative and operating efficiency in the Rural Electrification Administration in recent years has saved millions of dollars in tax money. In 1952 it cost $6,630,000 to administer the electric program. Today the administrative costs of the electric program are about $4,500,000, with no reduction in essential services and with a marked advancement in helpfulness to borrowers. Under this administration electric program administrative costs have been reduced by nearly $10 million.

Under this administration REA has worked closely and diligently with rural electric cooperatives to improve their financial position.

Mr. ALLOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. BARRETT. I am glad to yield.

Mr. ALLOTT. I should like to make a comment, rather than ask a question, on the improvement in administration which has taken place in the past 5 years. I believe that in many programs which are formulated for the purpose of helping our citizens, one of the most frustrating aspects is the seemingly endless lapse of time between the time citizens organize to take care of a need or a program and the time they actually receive the benefits of the program.

I hope the Senator will agree with me that in the ending of that frustration and the instillation of confidence in the people who use these programs, the two administrators who have been mentioned have accomplished a most constructive purpose, which is the essence of the program, namely, that of letting persons know that when they apply and proceed along the lines the law sets forth, they are going to get positive and quick action on their applications.

Mr. BARRETT. The record shows that both Administrators have done a remarkable job.

From the beginning of fiscal year 1954 to the end of fiscal year 1957 their gross revenues jumped more than 60 percent, and their net worth went up by more than 50 percent. During this same period the borrowers were able to pay REA nearly $432 million in principal and interest on their loans. This compares to a total of $431 million paid in the entire period from 1935 to 1954. They have increased their payments ahead of due dates to a record high of a total of $109 million. At the beginning of fiscal year 1954 the records show that 34 rural electric systems were delinquent in their payments to REA, whereas today improved economic strength and greater attention to correcting weaknesses of the cooperatives has resulted in a reduction of the number of delinquents to 9.

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARRETT. I am delighted to yield to the distinguished Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CARLSON. First, I wish to express my appreciation to the distinguished Senator from Wyoming for the splendid statement which he is making with regard to REA and its benefits to the farmers and the people of the Nation. Secondly, I want to join with him in commending the administration for two outstanding men in the REA program, Ancher Nelsen, who was placed in charge of the REA in 1953, and, later, David Hamil, of Colorado, who is the present Administrator.

I have received a telegram from Harry Miller, executive director of the Kansas REA, in which he states that he not only has great faith in the ability and the efforts of David Hamil, but the organization in our State is supporting him wholeheartedly in the fine program he is carrying out.

Again, I want to say to the Senator from Wyoming he has rendered a real service to the Nation and to the REA by the speech he has made on the Senate floor.

Mr. BARRETT. I thank the Senator from Kansas for his kind remarks. I say to him I could not agree with him more completely than I do, that Ancher Nelsen and David Hamil have done a wonderful job for the REA during the past 5 years of this administration.

In order that the loan needs of rural electric systems could be estimated to the Congress with a maximum of accuracy, the REA instituted in 1954 an annual survey of the construction and financial plans of borrowers. To meet loan needs during fiscal years 1954, 1955, and 1956, the REA had loan funds on hand totaling $556 million which, by the way, was $32 million more than was required to meet needs totaling $524 million.

With loan approvals clearing through REA in record time, rural electric cooperatives had to their credit on June 30 of this year an aggregate of $595.7 million in loan funds approved but not drawn down. These funds were available to them on requisition.

The charge has been made, Mr. President, that Secretary Benson has removed from the hands of the Administrator of the Rural Electrification Administration the authority to approve loans in excess of $500,000 and delegated that authority to a member of his immediate staff. The fact is that the Administrator of the REA has the full and complete authority to make the decision on loans. It is true that he does seek the counsel and advice of Kenneth Scott, the Director of the Agricultural Credit Services of the Department of Agriculture, on certain loans, but the fact remains that no one, not even the Secretary of Agriculture, exercises any veto power of any kind over the Director of the REA on the matter of granting of loans by that agency. I submit, Mr. President, that the loan-making authority of the REA is being administered strictly in accordance with the expressed will and direction of the Congress. There are budgetary problems, Mr. President, and a member of the Cabinet has obligations not only to the President, but to the Congress as well, that make it necessary that he be concerned with major expenditures in his department. The Administrator of the REA is appointed on the recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture, and so I submit, Mr. President, that it is ridiculous to charge that the law is being circumvented merely because the Administrator counsels and advises with the Secretary or his Chief of Credit Services.

In recent years it has become increasingly evident that the job of rural electrification is a continuing task which must take account of the service responsibilities of these rural systems. Borrowers are making inventories of the remaining unserved units in their areas preparatory to connecting those desiring service wherever possible. They are taking a greater interest in the development of the economy of their service areas. They are laying plans for the years to come, with proper attention to the affairs of their cooperative.

The consumers served by these systems are dependent on them for electric service. Service responsibility of these systems include planned growth of the system in order that they can meet their consumers' growing needs on a financially sound basis.

Service from the rural electric cooperatives is high-quality service. The dependence of rural consumers on electric energy for family living and for farm production requires that energy be available in adequate quantities, at dependable voltages, and with service outages held to the lowest possible frequency and duration. The cooperatives have established an excellent service record, and they have moved ahead in recent years with improvements in their systems aimed at assuring even better service for the ever-increasing rural loads. As the need is established by periodic engineering surveys, the capacity of distribution plants is being increased. Loop feeds providing double access to the source of supply are being built to reduce further the incidence and duration of service outages. Generation and transmission facilities are being constructed in record volume to provide the additional power supply needed. Most borrowers have installed radio communications systems to speed up action on service calls.

The success of the rural electrification program is a tribute to the hard work and vision of untold thousands of rural men and women who were determined to find the way to get electricity to the farms of our country. At all times since the program began in 1935 the grassroots support of the rural electrification program has been these same farm people who joined together to do the organizing, to conduct the member signup campaigns, and serve on the boards of their cooperatives. These cooperatives exemplify local private enterprise at its best and are rendering a vital service to the community, State, and Nation. The members are justly proud of their cooperatives' accomplishments. They can be expected to control and direct their cooperatives in the future with the same degree of vigor and reason which has characterized them to date. The farmers of this country are sound and conservative people. Historically, they have arrived at sound conclusions and decided on effective courses of action when they have been given the full facts.

These characteristics are a reassuring factor with respect to the future of the rural electrification program.

Mr. President, of course the REA will continue to serve fully and effectively the financing needs of rural electrification. We shall make available adequate loan funds. We shall continue to operate the programs with the measure of economy and honesty that all of us as taxpayers have come to expect. We shall extend to the cooperatives and other borrowers the assistance they require, and we shall do it with a minimum of regulations and supervision. In this way, rural people and their Government can continue to work hand-in-hand in order to achieve greater productivity and higher levels of living for the farmers of our country.

This, Mr. President, is no partisan matter. We have a splendid record of support for the rural electrification program over the years. By our actions, now and in the future, let us show the farmers and ranchers of America that their friends on both sides of the aisle, in both the Senate and House, stand ready to support REA effectively and courageously.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 194) granting permanent residence to certain aliens.

INCREASE IN COMPENSATION GRANTED TO WAGE BOARD EMPLOYEES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 25) relating to effective dates of increases in compensation granted to wage board employees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to amendment.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, what is the unfinished business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the unfinished business by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 25) relating to effective dates of increases in compensation granted to wage board employees.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, this bill relates to effective dates of increases in compensation granted to wage-board employees. It could also affect decreases. It happens that in the past everything has been going up, as we all know, but it could go the other way.

Mr. President, the pay of Federal employees in recognized trades or crafts or in unskilled, semiskilled, or skilled manual-labor occupations is fixed and adjusted from time to time in accordance with prevailing rates in private industry.

There are some 650,000 such employees.

Congress in granting agencies the authority to fix the pay of these employees assumed there would be a close relationship between the pay of employees in industry and those in Government. However, that is not always the case.

Here is why.

Pay increases are granted by industry. At some later date, employees of Government whose pay is supposed to be related to that of employees in industry petitions their agency for a wage survey. The agency considers the petition, makes a preliminary examination to determine that increases have been granted by industry, and finally an official survey is ordered.

The data collected in the survey is then analyzed and eventually a new pay scale developed.

This process has on occasion taken up to 6 to 8 months.

The net result is that, although the Government is presumed to be paying its blue-collar workers in accordance with prevailing rates in private industry, they are not doing so during this long intervening period.

Public hearings were held by the Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee on similar legislation last year.

Following the hearings, the committee unanimously reported S. 3465, which was approved unanimously in the Senate July 16, 1956. That bill was identical to this bill S. 25.

S. 25 provides that the effective date of increases shall be not later than the beginning of the first pay period which begins on or after 30 days following the start of the survey. This allows agencies reasonable time in which to conduct adequate surveys.

The committee believes that if agencies plan their work well there will be little, if any, occasion for the payment of retroactive wage increases.

The committee believes that the bill is amply liberal from the standpoint of the time allowed agencies to conduct wage surveys and develop new pay schedules.

The committee believes further that there is no justification for long delay in making the adjustments that should be made under existing law. I dislike to say it, but it seems that some agencies string the process out in order to keep from putting into effect the increase to which the workers are clearly entitled.

I believe that explains the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to amendment.

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, in line 2 on page 2 of the bill, to strike out the words "ordered to be made" and insert the word "completed" in lieu thereof.

In line 13 and in line 22 on page 2 of the bill, strike out the word "ordered" and insert the word "completed" in lieu thereof.

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina has accurately described the action taken by the Senate Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, which was unanimous in reporting the bill. However, after the bill had been reported I was advised that the Department of Defense was opposed to the bill. For the record, I should like to read a statement which has been submitted to me.

I wish to state, Mr. President, that this report was not available—or at least we did not have it—at the time the committee considered the bill.

The statement from the Defense Department reads:

> The position of the Department of Defense with respect to possible amendments to the bill is that the Department is opposed to any legislation that would provide any retroactivity whatsoever for wage increases, but if Congress feels that some legislation of this type should be enacted the least opposition would be to legislation that would provide retroactivity to the first pay period that begins more than 30 days from the date of completion of the survey, as would be provided by H. R. 5273. The amendments that we favor are attached to this note.

That is the amendment, Mr. President, that I have offered.

Under present procedures, if a new schedule of wage-board rates is made effective, retroactive to the first pay period beginning 30 days after the start of a survey, that will add an increased average added time period of 10 weeks. Assuming an average increase of 12½ cents an hour per employee, or $50 per employee for the 10-week period, the additional increased payroll cost would be approximately $15 million for the Army and the Air Force and $11½ million for the Navy, for a total additional cost of approximately $26½ million for the 10-week period. The Defense Department contends that it will take them 4 weeks to conduct this survey; it will take 4 weeks to analyze the survey; and that to put the new rates into effect will take an additional 2 weeks.

It was for this reason that I offered the amendment, which the Defense Department had submitted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, may the amendment be stated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The Chief Clerk. On page 2, line 2, it is proposed to strike out "ordered to be made" and insert "completed"; and on page 2, line 22, to strike out the word "ordered" and insert the word "completed."

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, in my opinion this amendment would make the law much worse than it is at the present time. Personally, I believe that if the Department can make its survey in 4 weeks, which is less than 30 days, that would leave approximately 15 days in which to analyze its report. If the Department cannot analyze its own report in 15 days, something is wrong. Our own bill would take away from the workers about 45 days additional pay, if there is to be an increase. It would not go into effect until after about 45 days. I do not think that is the intention of the law at the present time.

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. President, do I correctly understand that the Senator is suggesting that the 30-day provision be left in the bill, adding such additional language as would require the time used in making the surveys not to include Saturdays and Sundays, making a total of 45 days?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I will say to the Senator from Kansas that I have no authority to speak for the committee. I have not consulted with the committee, and I could not agree to any amendment to the committee bill. We discussed the question in the committee thoroughly, and we held hearings on the subject last year. Last year the committee was unanimous. This year the committee was unanimous. Last year the Senate passed the bill with practically no discussion. So we think that 30 days is sufficient.

Mr. CARLSON. Would the chairman be willing, if I should withdraw the amendment which I have offered, to permit me to offer an amendment which would insert the words "exclusive of Saturdays and Sundays" in lines 1, 12, and 21, on page 2?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Rather than quibble over a few days, naturally I would not object; but, as the Senator knows, the committee decided upon 30 days as the proper time. We did not say whether Saturdays and Sundays should be counted or not, but I would not argue that particular question.

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. President, I withdraw the amendment which I have offered, and offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated, in its place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas will be stated.

The Legislative Clerk. On page 2, lines 1, 12, and 21, following the word "day" it is proposed to insert the words "exclusive of Saturdays and Sundays."

Mr. CARLSON. I sincerely hope the chairman will accept that amendment.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I will not object to that amendment, under the circumstances.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That whenever, pursuant to a wage survey, an increase in rates of basic compensation is granted to any employees of the Federal Government or of the municipal government of the District of Columbia, whose compensation is fixed and adjusted from time to time as nearly as is consistent with the public interest in accordance with prevailing rates under authority of section 202 (7) of the Classification Act of 1949, as amended, such increase shall be made effective not later than the first day of the first pay period which begins on or after the 30th day, exclusive of Saturdays and Sundays, following the date on which such survey was ordered to be made.
>
> Sec. 2. (a) Retroactive compensation shall be paid under this act only in the case of an individual in the service of the United States (including service in the Armed Forces of the United States) or the municipal government of the District of Columbia on the first day of the first pay period which begins on or after the date on which the increase is granted, except that such retroactive compensation shall be payable (1) to an officer or employee who retired during the period beginning on the first day of the first pay period which begins on or after the 30th day, exclusive of Saturdays and Sundays, following the date on which the survey was ordered and ending on the first day of the first pay period which begins on or after the date on which the increase was granted, for services performed during such period, and (2) in accordance with the provisions of the act of August 3, 1950 (Public Law 636, 81st Congress), as amended, for services rendered during the period beginning on the first day of the first pay period which begins on or after the 30th day, exclusive of Saturdays and Sundays, following the date on which the survey was ordered and ending on the first day of the first pay period which begins on or after the date on which the increase was granted, by an officer or employee who dies during such period.
>
> (b) For the purposes of this section, service in the Armed Forces of the United States, in the case of an individual relieved from training and service in the Armed Forces of the United States or discharged from hospitalization following such training and service shall include the period provided by law for the mandatory restoration of such individual to a position in or under the Federal Government or the municipal government of the District of Columbia.
>
> (c) For the purpose of determining the amount of insurance for which an individual is eligible under the Federal Employees' Group Life Insurance Act of 1954, such increase shall be considered to have taken effect prior to the first day of the first pay period which begins on or after the date on which the increase was granted.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL BANKRUPTCY ACT

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1054, Senate bill 2205, a bill to amend the Federal Bankruptcy Act.

The Legislative Clerk. A bill (S. 2205) to amend section 116 (4) of chapter 10 of the Federal Bankruptcy Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Montana?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, this bill was introduced by the distinguished Senator from Maryland [Mr. Butler], and it was reported from the Judiciary Committee. As I understand, it was unanimously approved by both the subcommittee and the full committee.

The purpose of the amendments reported by the committee is to make the bill conform to the recommendations of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts. The amendments have the effect of providing that the exemption is with respect to chapter 10 of the Bankruptcy Act, rather than the entire act.

There was rather distinguished testimony on the subject, and, so far as I recall, although I was not a member of that particular subcommittee, no objection was raised.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that there is on the calendar a companion House bill, Calendar No. 1079, House bill 7671.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 7671, as a substitute for Senate bill 2205.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 7671) to amend section 116 of chapter X of the Federal Bankruptcy Act, to make certain equipment trust provisions applicable to aircraft and aircraft equipment of air carriers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of House bill 7671?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF ATOMIC ENERGY ACT OF 1954

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Calendar No. 814, Senate bill 2672.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 2672) to amend the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended, to increase the salaries of certain executives of the Atomic Energy Commission, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

ORDER FOR RECESS TO TOMORROW

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, has an order been previously entered concerning the time of meeting tomorrow?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No previous order has been entered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business tonight, it stand in recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE BUSINESS TOMORROW

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be the usual morning hour tomorrow, for the transaction of routine business, and that under the heading of "Morning Business" speeches be limited to not to exceed 3 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PRINTING AS A SENATE DOCUMENT OF STUDY ENTITLED "THE INTERNATIONAL PATENT SYSTEM AND FOREIGN POLICY" (S. DOC. NO. 63)

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, a study of the international patent system and foreign policy was written for the Subcommittee on Patents, Trademarks, and Copyrights of the Senate Judiciary Committee by Raymond Vernon, who served as Chief of the International Business Practices Division and as Acting Chief of the Office of Economic Defense and Trade Policy of the State Department for several years. At the present time he is directing a study of the economic life of the New York metropolitan region, under the auspices of Harvard University and the Regional Planning Association.

While the study was made under the authority of the Subcommittee on Patents, Trademarks, and Copyrights, it is not to be regarded as a statement of the committee or of any member of the committee.

It has, however, been in substantial demand, both at the office of the subcommittee and at the Office of the Superintendent of Documents of the Government Printing Office. As of today, I am advised by the Office of the Superintendent of Documents that 1,287 copies of this document have been sold at 20 cents a copy. Demands for additional copies are being received daily by the committee. After consultation with the members of the Subcommittee on Patents, Trademarks, and Copyrights, and with the distinguished Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], chairman of the Judiciary Committee, I am authorized to request that this committee print be issued as a Senate document.

I should like to add that to date the Superintendent of Documents has sold 17,921 copies of the 5 regional studies which have been published by our subcommittee.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks a report of sales by the office of the Superintendent of Documents with respect to these five studies, as of July 30, 1957.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Report of sales by the Superintendent of Public Documents, Government Printing Office, of the Research Studies, July 30, 1957

	Copies sold
Study No. 1: Proposals for Improving the Patent System (Bush)	6,962
Study No. 2: The Patent System and the Modern Economy (Frost)	3,416
Study No. 3: Distribution of Patents to Corporations (Federico)	3,539
Study No. 4: Opposition and Revocation Proceedings in Patent Cases (Federico)	3,075
Study No. 5: The International Patent System and Foreign Policy (Vernon)	1,129
Total sold	17,921

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

JURISDICTION OVER WHOLESALING ACTIVITIES OF MEATPACKERS

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, there appeared in the Washington Post of this morning a letter to the editor by Mr. Aled P. Davies, who identifies himself as director of the department of livestock of the American Meat Institute. Mr. Davies' letter took issue with a Washington Post editorial of August 19, 1957, written in support of Senate bill 1356. This bill would return to the Federal Trade Commission jurisdiction of the wholesaling activities of meatpackers.

I ask unanimous consent that my comment on the editorial and Mr. Davies' reply letter be printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the statement and letter were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COMMENT BY SENATOR WATKINS

There appeared in the Washington Post, this morning, a letter to the editor from Mr. Aled P. Davies, who identifies himself as director, department of livestock, American Meat Institute. Mr. Davies' letter took issue with a Washington Post editorial of August 19, 1957, written in support of S. 1356. As you know, this bill would return to the FTC jurisdiction over the wholesaling activities of meatpackers.

Since S. 1356 shortly will be before the Senate for debate, I feel it incumbent upon me, as one of the sponsors of the bill, to point out to the Senate the many misstatements of fact which this letter contains, as well as other liberties the AMI has taken with the facts in an attempt to defeat this bill.

It is to be expected that the big national packers, who seem to dominate the American Meat Institute, since the big 4 packers provide 55 percent of the dues, would keep up a constant volley of rebuttal against S. 1356. It cannot be disputed that these 4, and 6 other packers, dominate the meat industry, since, although there are about 2,000 packers engaged in interstate commerce, 10 meatpacking firms market 66.1 percent of the meat slaughtered and eligible for shipment in interstate commerce. When these 10, and perhaps a few other large packers are suddenly faced with the prospect that jurisdiction over their trade practices may suddenly be shifted from the USDA to the FTC, an effective and specialized enforcement agency, human nature being what it is, their reaction to S. 1356 through the AMI is understandable, even if not commendable.

I do not believe that the bulk of the packers are opposed to S. 1356, simply because testimony given to the Senate Subcommittee on Antitrust & Monopoly seems to indicate just the opposite: The AMI told the subcommittee that it had 435 members (hearings, S. 1356, p. 247); however, the Western States Meat Packers Association, which supports S. 1356, indicated that 462 firms, mostly small businesses, comprise its membership (hearings, S. 1356, p. 96). The answers of these small independent packers, as well as some 28 other organizations representing all phases of the livestock and food industry, to the questions and observations posed by Mr. Davies' letter are given in the pamphlet What's So Different About Meat?, which can be obtained from the Western States Meat Packers Association, room 704, 917 15th Street N. W., Washington 5, D. C.

S. 1356, as the following analysis of Mr. Davies' letter to the editor indicates, was not born of false or faulty allegations, as alleged, but rather of 36 years of noneffective USDA administration of title II of the Packers & Stockyards Act, and a genuine bipartisan concern to remedy this situation.

1. Challenged AMI Davies statement: "The first sentence of the editorial implies what a bit later is stated to be a fact—that there has not been effective policing of monopolisic or unfair trade practices in the meatpacking industry."

Answer: The Packers and Stockyards Act vests the Secretary of Agriculture with authority to issue cease and desist orders with respect to packers who engage in unfair trade practices under title II. While a small number of such cease and desist orders, in and of itself, obviously is not a good indicator of whether title II has been and is being enforced, a small number of cease and desist orders, however, do indicate nonenforcement in my judgment, when coupled with these facts: (1) USDA has never asked for sufficient funds to enforce the act; (2) the packers and stockyards branch, since the early 1920's has been understaffed and spread too thin to do the job title II requires; and (3) the growing volume of complaints of unfair trade practices by packers which the USDA has done little or nothing about.

No, to say the least, it is unlikely that the small number of cease and desist orders—32 since 1921—is attributed to any other fact than noninterest and nonconcern on the part of the USDA since the early 1930's. Since 1921, 18 of these 32 cease and desist orders have been issued to packers under title II for refusal to pay for or accept livestock.

In the past 36 years the USDA has issued but six cease and desist orders involving weight and grade frauds in the buying and selling of livestock. The remaining eight cease and desist orders issued to packers involved actual unfair trade practices in the form of restraints, preferences, price fixing, and discriminations. Seven of these cease and desist orders were issued against packers involving restraints, preferences, price fixing, and discriminations in the wholesaling of meat. But it is important to note that in the last 18 years the USDA has issued only one such order. Not since the mid-1930's has the Department evidenced any concern in this area. More significant still is the fact that the USDA has never issued a cease and desist order against a packer which involved the wholesaling or retailing of nonmeat food products or nonfood products.

2. Challenged AMI Davies statement: "To support this contention, the supporters of the O'Mahoney-Watkins bill say that not many cases alleging such practices have been brought by the Secretary of Agriculture and the Department of Agriculture does not have sufficient personnel to police the industry."

On July 6, 1956, I introduced S. 4177 in the Senate. The Senate Agriculture Committee to which it was referred requested a report from the USDA on July 10, 1956. In the meantime, the USDA's 1958 fiscal year budget request went to the Bureau of the Budget. Its request for new obligatory authority to administer the Packers and Stockyards Act amounted to $178,000 which was for the purpose of posting additional stockyards under title III of the Packers and Stockyards Act. Not $1 of new obligatory authority appears to have been requested by the USDA for expansion of its enforcement activities under title II of that act for the 1958 fiscal year, although the packers and stockyards branch requested $200,000 of additional new funds for title II enforcement, which the USDA itself turned down.

Notwithstanding this background the USDA on December 21, after the Department's 1958 fiscal year request had gone to the Bureau of the Budget, rendered a report recommending against enactment of S. 4177.

By contrast with the vigorous activities in earlier years under title II, as described by Mr. Millard J. Cook, head of the Packers and Stockyards Branch from 1945 to 1955, in testimony presented to the subcommittee in June 1956, responsibility for prevention of unfair trade practices by meatpackers today not only under title II but under title III as well as here in Washington, D. C., is vested in the Trade Practices Section of the Packers and Stockyards Branch of the Livestock Division of the Agricultural Marketing Service. This Trade Practice Section was staffed by two marketing specialists and a stenographer at the time S. 1356 was introduced, and I presume the section is still so staffed, since I have not received information to the contrary.

Neither one of these two marketing specialists, nor a single employee in any of the 20 understaffed field offices maintained by the Packers and Stockyards Branch, is engaged full time in title II enforcement. A review of the USDA's April 4, 1957, self-appraisal report on the Packers and Stockyards Act administration indicates, as does the Department's appropriation request, that nearly 90 percent of the work of this section and the Packers and Stockyards Branch itself is spent in title III enforcement; any action taken under title II being incidental to its title III activities relating to operation of stockyards.

This self-appraisal report alluded to by Mr. Davies in his letter does state that "the organization that is maintained in administering the Packers and Stockyards Act permits a high degree of flexibility in planning and conducting major investigations and in meeting the fluctuating demands of different district offices. This is because the entire field force may be actively utilized in such an investigation whenever necessary" (p. 8).

This statement appears to be a self-directed gratuity rather than a fact, as is revealed by examination of Mr. Earl Butz, Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, and Mr. D. M. Pettus, Acting Director, Livestock Division, Agricultural Marketing Service, before the Senate subcommittee. Consider the following colloquy between these gentlemen and myself:

"Senator Watkins. Mr. Secretary * * * is it not true that in the Ogden, Utah, area you have 2 marketing specialists and 1 clerk—3 people to regulate 26 packers in 3 States, 12 of them in Utah, 13 in Idaho, and also 1 in Oregon?

"Mr. Pettus. Those are the people permanently assigned to that location. When we have an investigation underway, we frequently bring in people from other markets and from our Washington area and add to our staff.

"Senator Watkins. If they do not have any bigger staff in other areas than in this, what would you have to enforce the law where you are moving them from?

"Mr. Pettus. We leave a reduced staff.

"Senator Watkins. For instance, in Billings, Mont., you have 1 marketing specialist and 1 half-time clerk, as I get it, to regulate 5 packers in Utah, 3 in Idaho, 2 in Wyoming, and 11 in Montana—21 altogether. How in the world can you take anybody from that area to help somewhere else such as the Ogden, Utah, area if the others are manned in the same way?" (transcript, p. 695–6). At this point Mr. Butz asked Acting Director Pettus to explain how a case 2 years ago in the Ogden, Utah, area was handled. In part Mr. Pettus replied:

"Mr. Pettus. I cannot recall at the moment how many people we had looking into the particular transaction, but we try to operate it with as few people as possible because we are spread so thin, Senator" (transcript, p. 697).

To which I replied, with the colloquy continuing as follows:

"Senator Watkins. I recognize you are spread thin, and that is our complaint—that you do not have enough force to do the job in title II.

"Mr. Pettus. We agree with you, and I think that is pointed out.

"Senator Watkins. You have not had for nearly 36 years.

"Mr. Pettus. I agree with you, sir.

"Senator Watkins. We think that is a long enough trial period. * * * With all the problems that have been handed to Agriculture, we thought we would certainly find someone who would be glad to get rid of this matter of law enforcement in the field in which the FTC has a special interest by reason of the act of Congress creating it as an independent regulatory agency—a special arm of the Congress.

"Mr. Butz. It is quite true for 26 years it has not been adequately enforced, but don't you think when the sinner confesses and resolves to do better he should be given a chance?" (Transcript, p. 697–8)

Under these circumstances, what reasonably prudent person would not conclude that responsibility for prevention of unfair trade practices involving meat packers should be returned to the Federal Trade Commission, where it was before passage of the Packers and Stockyard Act of 1921? Is not 25 or 30 years of inadequate enforcement a long enough trial period?

3. Challenged AMI-Davies statement: "Actually, one would think that if the situation is serious enough in the meat industry to call for legislation the supporters of the transfer bills would be able to come up with at least one authenticated case of unlawful trade practices which have been uncorrected by the Secretary of Agriculture."

I am most happy to oblige Mr. Davies. But let me say this: It is not the job of the Senate Judiciary Committee to decide whether a complaint is or is not valid. Our job was to determine whether the USDA has been in the habit of (1) investigating complaints, and (2) taking proper action.

Countless witnesses told the committee of taking complaints to the USDA, about which the USDA did nothing. Complaints which the USDA did not ever attempt to investigate. Consider the following statement of Mr. Harold O. Smith, Jr., executive vice president, United States Wholesale Grocers' Association, given in testimony to the subcommittee:

"Here are some practices currently engaged in by meatpackers, as reported to us by our members and apparently about which nothing effective can be done in the present state of the law and enforcement jurisdiction:

"1. Discriminating in price between competing buyers. We happen to have supporting invoices on that, although they are confidential.

"2. Giving kickbacks to supervisors of a retail distributing company.

"Incidentally, most of these have been applied apparently for the purpose of incurring favor, in order to sell more of the fresh meats of these packers.

"Senator Kefauver. You mean, the packers gave kickbacks?

"Mr. Smith. Yes; that is right; either the packers or the salesman or the agent of the packer, to the supervisors, in order to get more fresh meat business, or so they have reported to us.

"3. Subsidizing certain customers to the disadvantage of their competitors.

"4. Selling evaporated milk in five-case lots to some outlets cheaper than the wholesaler can buy evaporated milk in carload lots.

"5. Favoring some retailers under the guise of advertising and promotional allowances and even selling to them at prices cheaper than to the wholesaler.

"6. Selling to some retail buyers from branch houses below wholesale prices temporarily, to make up monthly branch-house tonnage quota. Of course, that is fresh-meat tonnage quotas.

"7. Packers salesmen telling wholesale grocers' retail customers the prices they have charged the wholesaler for purchase of packer merchandise, and in some cases, telling the retailer to buy up the wholesaler's stock of an item on which the price has advanced before the wholesaler learns of that advance" (hearings, p. 168).

But more disturbing, Mr. President, is the refusal of the Department of Agriculture at the policy level to take action against a packer even when the Packers and Stockyards Branch's Trade Practice Section has developed adequate information to warrant full-scale investigation and perhaps formal charges. Such a recent case, as Mr. Davies full well knows, involved certain alleged unfair trade practices prohibited by title II of the Packers and Stockyards Act on the part of Safeway Stores, which, if sustained would be violations of that act. The following colloquy between the Senate Subcommittee Counsel, Mr. McHugh, Mr. Pettus, and Mr. Lee D. Sinclair, Chief, Packers and Stockyards Branch, clearly develops this fact. Mr. Sinclair stated that he had recommended to his superiors "that the case be fully investigated and that we attempt to get sufficient funds to carry out that investigation." The colloquy then continued as follows:

"Mr. McHugh. You were overruled in this recommendation?

"Mr. Sinclair. In effect there was an overruling, yes.

"Mr. McHugh. Was the matter considered again after it was returned to you with this notation for conducting a study?

"Mr. Sinclair. Well, I brought it up again about January of this year with Mr. Reed, the director of the Livestock Branch, Mr. Reed told me later that he had taken it up again and that we should not investigate it.

"Mr. McHugh. Well, what did that mean to you? With whom?

"Mr. Sinclair. Well, I understand it to mean his superiors, who would be Mr. Lennartson, Mr. Wells, and Mr. Butz.

"Mr. McHugh. After that, did you concur in the decision that was made not to go forward with this investigation, but to conduct this research study?

"Mr. Sinclair. Well, we weren't asked about that.

"Mr. McHugh. Did your opinion as to the best manner of handling this problem change any?

"Mr. Sinclair. No."

I am not critical of the decision to undertake a broad economic study of the practice involved in the Safeway case. However, I am critical of the lack of action to stop such a practice when preliminary investigation by the Trade Practice Section seemed to verify a violation of title II. Both actions could and should have been undertaken.

Many witnesses who appeared before the Senate subcommittee listed dozens of similar instances involving practices carried on by packers which the USDA has not even bothered to investigate. The USDA witnesses did not refute them.

4. Challenged AMI-Davies statement: "Since the Packers and Stockyards Act was passed in 1921, there has not been a single conviction we know about in the industry for antitrust law violation, despite numerous sweeping investigations by the Department of Justice, which over the last 15 years actually brought 11 major criminal and civil cases involving packers of all sizes, all of which were dropped, dismissed or lost on trial."

It is true that the Department of Justice has authority to enforce the antitrust laws, involving conspiracy to monopolize, such as the Sherman Act of 1890 and the Clayton Act of 1914. But this is beside the point at issue, since the Department of Justice does not have authority to prevent unfair trade practices under title II of the Packers and Stockyards Act, which falls short of Sherman Act violations. In addition, section 404 of the Packers and Stockyards Act provides that the Secretary of Agriculture "may report any violation of this act to the Attorney General of the United States, who shall cause appropriate proceedings to be commenced and prosecuted in the proper courts of the United States without delay." The only difficulty, however, is that Secretaries of Agriculture have not used this authority apparently, for title II has never been litigated in the courts, either by the USDA or the Department of Justice.

Although the Justice Department, under the Sherman Act now has authority to proceed against meat packers for conspiracies in restraint of trade, the big packers who dominate the meat industry know, in light of the 1948 case against Armour and Col, et al., that it is very unlikely, at least in the near future, that they will ever be effectively proceeded against under the Sherman Act. Why? Mr. Victor R. Hansen, head of the Justice Department's Antitrust Division, in a letter to me dated July 11, 1957, put it this way: "In the Department's 1948 proceeding against the four major meat packers the Government had charged a continuing conspiracy commencing in 1893. After the case was filed the Court ordered that no evidence offered by the Government that related to the defendants' activities before 1930 would be received in evidence. This order of the Court eliminated from the Government's case its best evidence of conspiratorial acts. Thus the Court's "1930 cut-off date" drastically affected the ability of the Government to prove its case. For these reasons, this Department dismissed in 1954 its 1948 proceedings."

Thus, the only way to prevent continued concentration in the meat packing industry it seems at present, is to prevent that type of trade practice which falls short of a Sherman Act violation by returning to the FTC jurisdiction over packers' trade practices. This is provided by S. 1356.

5. Challenged AMI-Davis statement: The fact that meat packers submit reports to the Department of Agriculture has no bearing on enforcement activities, as the editorial implies."

Mr. President, it most certainly has a bearing. As I pointed out in my testimony to the House Antitrust and Commerce and Finance Subcommittees in support of H. R. 5282, a companion bill to S. 1356:

"USDA DOES NOT ATTEMPT TO OBTAIN DATA ESSENTIAL TO DETERMINATION OF TITLE II VIOLATIONS

"During the course of the Senate subcommittee's hearings on S. 1356, Mr. Butz, the major spokesman for the USDA, indicated that the Department, while willing to give the FTC jurisdiction over the wholesaling and retailing of meat, nonmeat food, and nonfood products of a firm not principally engaged in meat packaging and processing, nevertheless would not voluntarily give up jurisdiction over such activities by a firm principally engaged in meat packing because '* * * in that case it is necessary to have general supervision over that because sometimes, as has been alleged, they may use profits in their nonmeat activities, you see, to engage in discriminatory pricing practices on meat' (transcript, p. 751).

"But in fact, does the USDA obtain such data from meat packers? No, Mr. President, on a regular basis they do not, nor does the USDA even require packers to report their losses or profits on their meat operations or any nonmeat food product or nonfood product operation. As one witness summarized this administrative shortcoming to the Senate subcommittee last summer:

"'Under the Packers and Stockyards Act every company doing an interstate meat business has to report a financial statement as of the end of each year but never have the packers and stockyards administration required the national packers to submit a statement of their meat operations separately from their total operations. That has been one of the failures of properly administering that Packers and Stockyards Act, in that you cannot get the definite information' (transcript, June 21, 1956, p. 21).

"The statement of this witness is substantiated by the USDA's Packers and Stockyards Administration self-appraisal report of April 4, 1957, to which I have already made reference, as I shall point out shortly.

"When asked during the Senate hearings on S. 1356 a few days ago whether the USDA was continuing to investigate charges of market sharing by packers, since the Department of Justice dropped its major suit in 1953 against several national packers based on this practice, Mr. Pettus, Acting Director, Livestock Branch, Agricultural Marketing Service replied:

"'Not as a specific followup of that overall case, but in our various types of records that we get on packers, the reports that we get each year, and our observations, we have continued to look over the entire question of sharing' (transcript, p. 664).

"Great stress was placed by Mr. Pettus upon information contained in packer reports, or as he put it information 'that we get ourselves directly from the packers, under the act' (transcript, p. 665).

"Now, what does the self-appraisal report say about the content and use made of reports submitted annually by packers to the Packers & Stockyards Branch? Namely this:

"'The annual reports of meatpackers are received by the 20 district offices that are maintained by the packers and stockyards branch. * * * Information contained in these reports is primarily concerned with ownership, organization, and financial conditions. * * * The annual reports of the top four packers are forwarded to the Washington office of the branch where they are retained in a permanent file.

"'Although the annual reports of packers are received, there is no tabulation or statistical analysis made of the information contained in them for the purpose of determining industry trends, problems, or conditions' (p. 14).

"Might one not logically ask, as a result: Why, in fact, are these reports not reviewed for the purpose of determining industry trends, problems, or conditions? Why even require reports in the first place unless they are reviewed in order to further the carrying out of specific objectives of the Packers and Stockyards Act?

"Insofar as title II is concerned, the Department is charged with the responsibility of preventing unfair trade practices by meatpackers, yet these reports do not even require packers to show losses on their meat, nonmeat food products, and non-food-product operations. Such information, however, is essential to determine whether a firm is absorbing losses in one area or line of operation in order to eliminate competitors, but making up the loss in other areas and lines of operation where its position is better established in the market. If none but the reports of the 'top four packers' are sent to Washington, how could the Department ever detect various market-sharing arrangements which limit competition for livestock and mean lower prices to producers? The odds are that it could not make such a detection, let alone produce evidence sustainable in a court of law.

"The self-appraisal report confirms these observations by correctly suggesting that 'effective administration and prompt enforcement of any regulatory measure such as the Packers and Stockyards Act are highly dependent upon the availability of adequate information and the use made of this information in the job that must be done. Packers and others subject to the act are now required to file annual reports. In the past, the Department of Agriculture has consistently adhered to a policy of requesting from those subject to this act a minimum of information in their reports.

"'This raises the question as to whether both the timeliness and the content of these reports from packers might be improved and whether the information supplied should be in more pertinent detail for analysis and interpretation. Such reports would help pinpoint industry or individual problems and assist in bringing about more effective and economical administration of the act. This is so, particularly in view of the information such reports can reveal relating to trends, shifts, emphasis, degree of concentration in the industry, etc.'" (pp. 20-21).

6. Challenged AMI-Davies statement: "* * * we felt the logical solution is to adopt the approach suggested by the Dirksen amendment to the O'Mahoney-Watkins bill."

I am sure the AMI feels this way. I am equally sure the American people do not.

Proposals made to the Subcommittee on Antitrust and Monopoly by (1) the American Meat Institute, lobbyist for the big national packers who oppose S. 1356, and (2) the United States Department of Agriculture, as embodied in the Dirksen amendments, would give to the Federal Trade Commission jurisdiction only over the wholesaling and retailing activities of a firm not principally engaged in meat packing or processing.

On the other hand, the great majority of the groups which testified before the Antitrust and Monopoly Subcommittee or filed statements with the subcommittee, or who have otherwise indicated approval of S. 1356, urged the Senate to give the FTC such authority over the wholesaling and retailing activities of all firms.

The group includes:

National Federation of Independent Business, Inc.

National Retail Dry Goods Association.

National Association of Retail Grocers.

National Fisheries Institute.

United States Wholesale Grocers' Association, Inc.

National Farmers Union.

National Food Brokers Association.

Cooperative League of the United States.

National Wool Growers Association.

National Milk Producers Federation.

American National Livestock Auction Association.

Idaho Wool Growers Association.

Utah Wool Growers Association.

Wyoming Wool Growers Association.

Utah Cattlemen's Association.

Western States Meat Packers Association, Inc.

National Renderers Association.

National American Wholesale Grocers Association.

National Institutional Wholesale Grocers Association.

National Candy Wholesalers Association, Inc.

Wyoming Stock Growers Association.

National Preservers Association.

Montana Cattlemen's Association.

Iowa Swine Producers Association.

Georgia Dairy Association.

Pure Milk Association.

Kansas Ice Cream and Milk Institute.

Why? Because the firms these spokesmen represent must compete with the packers in the wholesaling and retailing of meat, of nonmeat food products, and of nonfood products. Yet, as they pointed out to the subcommittee while they are subject to the effective enforcement of the Federal Trade Commission Act, as were the big 5 packers before 1921, these packers and others as well are subject to the Packers and Stockyards Act under title II of which they enjoy comparative freedom due to nonenforcement by the USDA.

The AMI and the USDA proposals, as embodied in the proposed Dirksen amendments to S. 1356, thus would continue the present system of two sets of trade practice rules: One for the big packers which is not effectively enforced by the USDA, and one set for their competitors which is effectively enforced by the FTC. As the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. O'MAHONEY) remarked during the testimony of the Department of Agriculture officials: "* * * you are proposing to throw the food chains to the wolves in the Federal Trade Commission while shielding the packers behind the Department of Agriculture" (hearings, S. 1356, p. 394).

These witnesses and the firms they represent are concerned in the light of this situation, because 3 of the biggest packers, represented by the AMI, were 1920 consent decree signers who recently have petitioned the courts to set aside those portions of that order which would permit these packers to process and sell 140 food and nonfood products, own and operate retail meat markets, sell fresh milk and cream, and operate distribution facilities for handling these products in direct competition with wholesale and retail food stores.

Should this petition be granted, these firms fear, and rightly so, the ramifications continued USDA noninterest in the enforcement of the unfair trade practices of title II would have upon their businesses, since to all intent and purpose these 3 of the biggest 10 packers would be free, as other packers now are, to expand into every segment of the food industry, and nonfood industries as well.

But whether the consent decree modification is granted or not, the activities of these packers outside the area prohibited by the consent decree are so extensive that their competitors—food firms, nonfood firms, and small packers—are likely to be hurt unless the big national packers are required to operate under the same set of trade practice rules under which they must operate. In this respect, it should be noted that in 1950 one or more of the four largest packers shipped 21 classes of food products in interstate commerce and 58 classes of nonfood products. Nonmeat food products comprised 6.6 percent of their total shipments. Nonfood products, exclusive of the byproducts of their meat operations, constituted 6.7 percent of their total shipments in interstate commerce, and nonfood byproducts shipped accounted for an additional 4.9 percent. Thus, 18.2 percent of their total shipments comprised nonmeat food and nonfood products.

Yet, these packer-owned operations now are not subject to the FTC, but their competitors are subject to the jurisdiction of that more effective agency. Nor under the proposed Dirksen amendments to S. 1356 would these big packers be subject to the FTC. The present situation without doubt gives, and these proposals would continue to give in the future, an unfair competitive advantage to packer-owned enterprises. Under these circumstances who, as a competitor of Swift & Co., wouldn't be concerned about this situation when in 1955 that firm, for example, produced 4 percent of the Nation's butter; 8 percent of the cheese; 9 percent of the margarine; 19 percent of the salad and cooking oil; and 15 percent of the shortening?

Why, these witnesses ask, and rightly so in my opinion, should the trade practices of a firm like Wilson Sporting Goods, selling nonfood products, be under USDA while its competitors like Spaulding, as it would under the USDA and AMI proposal, continue to be subject to the FTC? Why they ask, should Swift and Armour in the wholesaling of nonmeat food products such as cheese, canned milk, eggs, soups, etc., be under the USDA and their competitors like Campbell Soup Co. and Safeway Stores continue to be under the FTC, as the USDA and the AMI propose?

PACKERS AND THE FTC

The editorial in your August 19 edition entitled "Packers and the FTC" repeats in substance the contentions which have been made by proponents of S. 1356 and the companion bills in the House to transfer jurisdiction over the meatpacking industry from the Secretary of Agriculture to the Federal Trade Commission.

The first sentence of the editorial implies what a bit later is stated to be a fact—that there has not been effective policing of monopolistic or unfair trade practices in the meatpacking industry. To prove this contention, the supporters of the O'Mahoney-Watkins bill say that not many cases alleging such practices have been brought by the Secretary of Agriculture and the Department of Agriculture does not have sufficient personnel to police the industry.

Actually, one would think that if the situation is serious enough in the meat industry to call for legislation, the supporters of the transfer bills would be able to come up with at least one authenticated case of unlawful trade practices which have been uncorrected by the Secretary of Agriculture.

So far this has not been done. Chairman COOLEY of the House Committee on Agriculture called attention to this glaring deficiency, after hearing many witnesses testify before his committee and after having asked for concrete examples of complaints.

The fact is that the meatpacking industry is a clean industry and the small number of cases proves it. Since the Packers and Stockyards Act was passed in 1921, there has not been a single conviction we know about in the industry for antitrust law violation, despite numerous sweeping investigations by the Department of Justice, which, over the last 15 years actually brought 11 major criminal and civil cases involving packers of all sizes, all of which were dropped, dismissed or lost on trial. Several of these cases involved various trade practices and in all of them the industry's activities were under the most detailed scrutiny and study.

Those who advocate the passage of this legislation claim that only three persons are available for enforcement. The Department of Agriculture, however, points out that it has 78 full-time employees who may be utilized in investigations whenever necessary.

The editorial states that the Department has neither the specialists nor the experience for effective enforcement of the law against unfair trade practices. Actually, the Agricultural personnel which have the responsibility in this field are much more expert than anyone available to the FTC, which this week may be investigating some phase of the food business and next week may be looking into automobile batteries.

The fact that meatpackers submit reports to the Department of Agriculture has no bearing on enforcement activities, as the editorial implies. The reports are required by law. Other businesses submit reports to the FTC. We fail to see how this fact can be taken as a persuasive argument for legislation.

However, if legislation is needed to regulate more effectively someone who is claiming to be a backer when his principal business is in other fields, then we feel the logical solution is to adopt the approach suggested by the Dirksen amendment to the O'Mahoney-Watkins bill.

This amendment would keep those whose principal business is meatpacking under the Secretary of Agriculture and give the FTC jurisdiction over all activities of others except such meatpacking operations as they may choose to operate.

Director, Department of Livestock, American Meat Institute.

ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business, Calendar No. 814, Senate bill 2672, be placed back on the calendar, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 9379.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read by title for the information of the Senate.

The Legislative Clerk. A bill (H. R. 9379) making appropriations for the Atomic Energy Commission for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1958, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Montana?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

RECESS TO TOMORROW

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, in accordance with the order previously entered, I move that the Senate stand in recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 22, 1957

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

O Thou who art the source of every good and perfect gift, inspire us in our moments of prayer with lofty ideals and aspirations and with the wisdom and the will to fulfill them.

May we be grateful for the hallowed memories of the past and mindful of our eternal destiny as the children of Thy love and care.

Grant that we may be humble in our estimate of ourselves, never relying upon our own human ingenuity and seeking our own glory.

Make us faithful and diligent in performing the duties of our high vocation, discharging all our appointed tasks without thought of praise or reward.

Constrain us to be honorable in all our dealings with our fellow men and may our honesty never be only a matter of policy but of principle.

To Thy name we ascribe all the glory. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McBride, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 491. An act for the relief of Joanne Lea (Buffington) Lybarger;

S. 864. An act to provide for the transfer of certain lands to the State of Minnesota;

S. 2460. An act to authorize the transfer of certain housing projects to the city of Decatur, Ill., or to the Decatur Housing Authority; and

S. 2792. An act to amend the Immigration and Nationality Act, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 1937) entitled "An act to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation by the Armory Board of the District of Columbia of a stadium in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. Bible, Mr. Frear, and Mr. Beall to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9131) entitled "An act making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1958, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to Senate amendments Nos. 3, 4, 7, 10, 12, 14, 32, 38, 40, and 61.

The message also announced that the Senate further insists upon its amendments Nos. 6 and 54 to the above-entitled bill, asks a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and has appointed the following conferees: Mr. Hayden, Mr. Russell, Mr. Chavez, Mr. Ellender, Mr. Hill, Mr. Holland, Mr. Stennis, Mr. Saltonstall, Mr. Young, Mr. Knowland, Mr. Thye, Mr. Mundt, and Mrs. Smith of Maine.

CONVEYANCE TO THE CITY OF WARNER ROBINS, GA., OF CERTAIN LANDS

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 7972) to provide for the conveyance to the city of Warner Robins, Ga., of certain lands located in such city.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain this bill?

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, the total area involved in this bill is 5.78 acres. It formerly constituted a portion of Robins Air Force Base. It has now been determined by the Air Force that there is no further requirement for this land, and they have declared it excess to their needs.

I want to draw particular attention to the fact that the city of Warner Robins will pay the fair market value for this property, whatever that may turn out to be. It is my understanding that the value will approximate $35,000.

Warner Robins is a growing community and has established a requirement for these two small parcels of land for use for municipal purposes.

I cannot visualize any objection to this measure in view of the obvious need of the city for the land and their willingness to pay the fair market value for the property.

The Department of the Air Force and the Bureau of the Budget have no objection to this measure.

Mr. MARTIN. I understand this has been unanimously approved by the gentleman's committee.

Mr. VINSON. The gentleman is correct and it has been approved by the Budget and the Air Force.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Air Force is directed to convey to the city of Warner Robins, at the fair market value, all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to 2 parcels of land aggregating 5.78 acres, within the city of Warner Robins, Ga., and more particularly described as follows:

Parcel 1: Commencing at a point being the common corner of land lots numbered 199, 200, 217, and 218 in the fifth district of Houston County, Warner Robins, Georgia, at the intersection of Watson Boulevard and Davis Drive, run south 89 degrees 30 minutes east for 40.01 feet; thence north 2 degrees east along the eastern right-of-way of North Davis Drive for 1,129.69 feet, thence south 88 degrees 41 minutes and 16 seconds east for 349.79 feet to the point of beginning, thence continue south 88 degrees 41 minutes 16 seconds east for 1,480.89 feet to a point on the western right-of-way on Myrtle Street; thence north 1 degree 26 minutes west for 141.10 feet, thence north 88 degrees 41 minutes 16 seconds west for 1,474.13 feet to the eastern right-of-way of a proposed drive; thence south 1 degree 18 minutes and 44 seconds west for 141.00 feet to the point of beginning. Said above described parcel contains 4.781 acres more or less situated entirely in land lot numbered 217 of the fifth district, Houston County, Warner Robins, Georgia.

Parcel 2: Commencing at a point being the common corner of land lots numbered 199, 200, 217, and 218 in the fifth district of Houston County, Warner Robins, Georgia, at the intersection of Watson Boulevard and Davis drive, run south 89 degrees 30 minutes east for 40.01 feet; thence north 2 degrees east along the eastern right-of-way of North Davis Drive for 1,129.69 feet to the point of beginning; thence south 88 degrees 41 minutes and 16 seconds east for a distance of 309.79 feet to a proposed drive, thence north 1 degree 18 minutes and 44 seconds east along the western right-of-way of said drive for 141.00 feet to a point on the proposed extension of Young Avenue; thence north 88 degrees 41 minutes and 16 seconds west for 308.10 feet more or less to a point at the eastern right-of-way of North Davis Drive; thence south 2 degrees west along said right-of-way for 141.01 feet to the point of beginning. Said described parcel contains 1 acre more or less situated in land lot numbered 217 at the fifth district of Houston County and Warner Robins, Georgia.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended to read as follows: "A bill to provide for the conveyance to the city of Warner Robins, Ga., of certain lands and any improvements located thereon in such city."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATION BILL, 1948

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 9131) making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1958, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. Cannon, Rooney, and Taber.

THE LATE HONORABLE HARRY LUTHER GANDY

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Berry].

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for this time to advise the House of the funeral services today of one of my predecessors in the Congress from the Second District of South Dakota, the Honorable Harry Luther Gandy.

The Honorable Harry L. Gandy, who served in the House of Representatives from March 4, 1915, to March 3, 1921, died last week at his home in Los Gatos, Calif., at the age of 76. His body was returned to Rapid City, S. Dak., for burial in his home State.

Mr. Gandy was born August 13, 1881, in Churubusco, Ind. He was graduated from Tri-State College, Angolo, Ind., in 1901, and moved to Rapid City, S. Dak., in 1907 where he engaged in newspaper work. He operated the Wasta, S. Dak., Gazette from 1910 to 1918.

He began a career of public service as United States Commissioner at Wasta from 1910 to 1913. He was elected to the South Dakota State Senate in 1911. In 1914, he was elected to the United States House of Representatives where he served 3 terms. He was the first Democratic candidate ever to be elected from that district.

Since serving in Congress, he continued operating a ranch near Wasta until 1945, and from 1923 to 1930 was executive secretary of the National Coal Association of Washington, D. C. During this time, he assisted in the negotiations during a series of bitter and controversial mine strikes. He was connected with the Pittston Co. from 1930 to 1937, and from 1937 to 1940 was chairman, Bituminous Coal Producers Board, Cincinnati, Ohio. From 1944 until his retirement, he was assistant to the president, Elk River Coal & Lumber Co., and Buffalo Creek & Gauley Railroad Co., Widen, W. Va. It was my privilege to visit with him on several occasions when he was a Washington visitor, and at all times he was an ardent booster of western South Dakota.

Harry Gandy lived a long and successful life, marked with outstanding service to his State and country. I know my colleagues in the House join me in extending our sincere sympathy to his family.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BERRY. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I join the distinguished gentleman from South Dakota in paying tribute to the memory of Mr. Gandy. Some 10 or 12 years ago, Mr. Gandy came to West Virginia and located in my Congressional District. He was elected vice president and manager of the Elk River Coal and Lumber Co. He became widely known in West Virginia. He was among the prominent coal operators of the State, operating one of the largest coal enterprises within the State. I join the gentleman in adding my word of praise of Mr. Gandy and extend my sincere sympathy to the family of this distinguished South Dakotan.

Mr. BERRY. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have permission to extend their remarks in the Record on the life and services of the Honorable Harry Luther Gandy.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to join with my distinguished colleague from South Dakota [Mr. Berry] in paying tribute to our respected former Member, the Honorable Harry L. Gandy, who has recently passed away at his home in California.

Mr. Gandy was a most effective and conscientious Member of the Congress from 1915 to 1921. He has the distinction of being the first Democratic Congressional candidate elected from the western district of South Dakota. As such he has perpetuated the worthy cause of two-party government in a State that has traditionally leaned heavily on the side of the opposition party.

I want to salute our departed colleague for his political courage, his concept of public service and his dedication to the common good. My deepest sympathies are extended to his family and friends.

NARCOTICS MANUFACTURING ACT OF 1957

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 9028) to discharge more effectively obligations of the United States under certain conventions and protocols relating to the institution of controls over the manufacture of narcotic drugs, and for other purposes, which was reported unanimously favorably by the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.—

SHORT TITLE

Section 1. This act may be cited as the "Narcotics Manufacturing Act of 1957."

NECESSITY FOR LEGISLATION

Sec. 2. The enactment of this act is necessary for the following reasons:

(1) The Congress has long recognized that the manufacture, distribution, and use of narcotic drugs for nonmedical and nonscientific purposes endangers the health of the American people and threatens the general welfare. The Congress has enacted laws and the Senate has approved international conventions designed to establish effective control over domestic and international traffic in narcotic drugs.

(2) Until recently, most narcotic drugs were made from natural raw materials such as the opium poppy and the coca leaf, produced in limited areas of the world. In practice, control over the production of narcotic drugs could therefore be achieved by national and international restrictions over the production and shipment of these raw materials and their use to manufacture narcotic drugs.

(3) In recent years, however, technological advances have resulted in the development of new types of narcotic drugs, produced synthetically from a variety of generally available raw materials. As a result, controls over the production of narcotic drugs can no longer be maintained solely by controls relating to the opium poppy and the coca leaf.

(4) The United States has joined with other nations in executing international conventions intended to establish suitable controls over production, shipment, and use of all narcotic drugs. These conventions are not self-executing, and the obligations of the United States thereunder must be performed pursuant to appropriate legislation.

(5) In order (a) to discharge more effectively the international obligations of the United States, (b) to promote the public health, safety, and welfare, (c) to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in narcotic drugs, and (d) to safeguard the revenue derived from taxation of narcotic drugs, the Congress finds it necessary to enact a statute for the licensing and control of the manufacture of all narcotic drugs.

DEFINITIONS

Sec. 3. For the purposes of this act—

(a) The term "1931 convention" means the Convention for Limiting the Manufacture and Regulating the Distribution of Narcotic Drugs, concluded at Geneva, July 13, 1931, and entered into force with respect to the United States of America July 9, 1933, as amended by the protocol signed at Lake Success on December 11, 1946.

(b) The term "1948 protocol" means the protocol bringing under international control drugs outside the scope of the convention of July 13, 1931, for limiting the manufacture and regulating the distribution of narcotic drugs (as amended by the protocol signed at Lake Success on December 11, 1946), signed at Paris, November 19, 1948, and entered into force with respect to the United States of America, September 11, 1950.

(c) The term "Secretary or his delegate" means the Secretary of the Treasury, or any officer, employee, or agency of the Treasury Department duly authorized by the Secretary (directly or indirectly by one or more redelegations of authority) to perform the function mentioned or described in the context.

(d) The term "person" includes an individual, partnership, corporation, association, trust, or other institution or entity.

(e) The term "narcotic drug" means narcotic drug as defined in section 4731 (a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as amended by section 4 of this act.

(f) The term "manufacture" means the production of a narcotic drug, either directly or indirectly by extraction from substances of vegetable origin, or independently by means of chemical synthesis or by a combination of extraction and chemical synthesis.

(g) The term "basic class of narcotic drug" means any one of the following classes of narcotic drugs and any additional class or classes of narcotic drugs (other than crude opium or coca leaves), by whatever trade name designated, as may be defined from time to time by the Secretary or his delegate in accordance with section 6 of this act:

1. Opium, powdered, granulated, or deodorized, or tinctures or extracts of opium.
2. Mixed alkaloids of opium and their salts.
3. Morphine and its salts.
4. Codeine and its salts.
5. Thebaine and its salts.
6. Marcotine and its salts.
7. Papaverine and its salts.
8. Cotarnine and its salts.
9. Marceine and its salts.
10. Ethylmorphine and its salts.
11. Apomorphine and its salts.
12. Nalorphine (N-allylnormorphine) and its salts.
13. Hydromorphone (dihydromorphinone) and its salts.
14. Metopon (methyldihydromorphinone) and its salts.
15. Dihydrocodeine and its salts.
16. Hydrocodone (dihydrocodeinone) and its salts.
17. Oxycodone (dihydrohydroxycodeinone) and its salts.
18. Cocaine and its salts.
19. Ecgonine and its salts.
20. Pethidine (meperidine, isonipecaine) (1-methyl-4-phenylpiperidine-4-carboxylic acid ethyl ester) and its salts.
21. Alphaprodine (alpha-1, 3-dimethyl-4-phenyl-4-propionoxypiperidine) and its salts.
22. Methadone (amidone) (6-dimethylamino-4, 4-diphenyl-3-heptanone) and its salts.
23. Isomethadone (isoamidone) (6-dimethylamino-5-methyl-4, 4-diphenyl-3-hexanone) and its salts.
24. Levorphan and racemorphan (3-hydroxy-N-methlymorphinan) and their salts.
25. Levomethorphan and racemethorphan, (3-methoxy-N-methylmorphinan) and their salts.
26. Anileridine (ethyl 1-[2-(p-amino phenyl)-ethyl]-4-phenyl piperidine-4-carboxylate) and its salts.

(h) The term "net disposal" means the quantity of a basic class of narcotic drug, sold, exchanged, given away, used in the production of another basic class of narcotic drug for which the manufacturer is licensed, or otherwise disposed of (as such or contained in or combined with other drugs compounded by the manufacturer of such basic class) by the manufacturer during a stated period, less the quantity of any such basic class of narcotic drug returned to the manufacturer by a customer and any quantity sold or transferred to another licensed manufacturer of the same basic class of narcotic drug.

(l) The term "narcotic precursor" means a substance other than a narcotic drug which the Secretary or his delegate has found, after due notice and opportunity for public hearing—

(1) is an immediate chemical precursor of a narcotic drug;

(2) is produced primarily for use in the manufacture of a narcotic drug; and

(3) is used, or is likely to be used, in the manufacture of a narcotic drug by persons other than persons licensed to manufacture such narcotic drug.

AMENDMENTS TO INTERNAL REVENUE CODE OF 1954

SEC. 4. (a) Subsection (a) of section 4731 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is amended to read as follows:

"(a) Narcotic drugs: The words 'narcotic drugs' as used in this part shall mean any of the following, whether produced directly or indirectly by extraction from substances of vegetable origin, or independently by means of chemical synthesis, or by a combination of extraction and chemical synthesis:

"(1) Opium, isonipecaine, coca leaves, and opiate;

"(2) Any compound, manufacture, salt, derivative, or preparation of opium, isonipecaine, coca leaves, or opiate;

"(3) Any substance (and any compound, manufacture, salt, derivative, or preparation thereof) which is chemically identical with any of the substances referred to in clauses (1) and (2); except that the words 'narcotic drugs' as used in this part shall not include decocainized coca leaves or extracts of coca leaves, which extracts do not contain cocaine or ecgonine."

(b) Subsection (g) of section 4731 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is amended to read as follows:

"(g) Opiate: The word 'opiate' as used in this part shall mean any drug (as defined in the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (52 Stat. 1041, sec. 201 (g); 21 U. S. C. 321)) or other substance found by the Secretary or his delegate and proclaimed by the Secretary or his delegate to have been so found in the Federal Register, after due notice and opportunity for public hearing, to have an addiction-forming or addiction-sustaining liability similar to morphine or cocaine or to be capable of conversion into a drug having such addiction-forming or addiction-sustaining liability, where in the judgment of the Secretary or his delegate, the relative technical simplicity and degree of yield of such conversion create a risk of improper use of the drug. The Secretary or his delegate is authorized to issue necessary rules and regulations for carrying out the provisions of this subsection, and to confer or impose upon any officer or employee of the Treasury Department whom he shall designate or appoint, the duty of conducting any hearing authorized hereunder. The Secretary or his delegate is authorized to withdraw any previous finding that a drug or other substance is an 'opiate' whenever he determines that such previous finding was erroneous, and upon publication of such determination in the Federal Register, the particular drug or other substance shall cease to be an opiate. For purposes of the foregoing provision the Secretary or his delegate may consider any action taken pursuant to article 3 of the 1948 protocol.

NOTIFICATIONS, FINDINGS, AND DECISIONS UNDER THE 1948 PROTOCOL

SEC. 5. (a) Before a notification may be sent on behalf of the United States to the Secretary General of the United Nations, under article 1 of the 1948 protocol, that a drug is considered liable to the same kind of abuse and productive of the same kind of harmful effects as the drugs specified in article 1, paragraph 2, of the 1931 convention, such drug shall have been found by the Secretary or his delegate to be an "opiate", as defined in section 4731 (g) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as amended by section 4 (b) of this act, and so proclaimed in accordance with the procedure prescribed by section 4731 (g) as amended.

(b) Upon receipt by the United States of a finding or decision made pursuant to article 1 or article 2 of the 1948 protocol that a certain drug is capable of producing addiction or conversion into a drug capable of producing addiction and that the appropriate provisions of the 1931 convention shall apply to such drug, such finding or decision shall be transmitted to the Secretary or his delegate. The Secretary or his delegate shall cause such finding or decision to be published in the Federal Register unless such drug has already been determined to be an opiate under the procedure prescribed by section 4731 (g) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as amended by section 4 of this act. From the time of such publication, such drug shall be an opiate to the same extent as if the procedure prescribed by section 4731 (g) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as amended by section 4 of this act, had been followed with respect to such drug.

(c) If the finding or decision so received and published in the Federal Register relates to a drug which has not previously been determined to be an opiate under the procedure prescribed by section 4731 (g) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as amended by section 4 of this act, any person in the United States interested in the domestic manufacture and distribution of such drug for medical and scientific purposes may submit to the Secretary or his delegate written data, views, and argument opposed to such finding or decision. Such written data, views, and argument shall be transmitted to the Secretary General of the United Nations for consideration by the World Health Organization or the Commission on Narcotic Drugs of the United Nations, as the case may be, under article 3 of the 1948 protocol. If thereafter the United States receives a revised finding or decision, under article 3 of the 1948 protocol, that such a drug is not capable of producing addiction or conversion into a drug capable of producing addiction and that the provisions of the 1931 convention shall not apply to such drug, such revised finding or decision shall be transmitted to the Secretary or his delegate, who shall cause such revised finding or decision to be published in the Federal Register within 90 days of receipt thereof by the Secretary or his delegate. From the time of such publication, such drug shall cease to be an opiate, unless the Secretary or his delegate has theretofore initiated an opiate procedure under section 4731 (g) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as amended by section 4 of this act.

(d) Upon receipt by the United States of a revised finding or decision under article 3 of the 1948 protocol (except a revised finding or decision to which subsection (c) applies) that a drug (theretofore subject to the Federal narcotic laws as an opiate) is not capable of producing addiction or conversion into a drug capable of producing addiction and that the provisions of the 1931 convention shall not apply to such drug, the revised finding or decision shall be transmitted to the Secretary or his delegate. The Secretary or his delegate may, in his discretion, publish the revised finding or decision in the Federal Register and, from the time of such publication, such drug shall cease to be an opiate. If the revised finding or decision is not so published in the Federal Register, the said drug shall continue to be an opiate.

MODIFICATION OF LIST OF BASIC NARCOTIC DRUGS

SEC. 6. The Secretary or his delegate, upon his initiative or upon the petition of any interested person shall have the power by rule made on the record after opportunity for hearing, to alter classifications set forth in section 3 (g) by adding to, subtracting from, or further defining such classifications or any one or more of them, on the basis of their chemical structure and content and addiction liability or convertibility into an addicting drug. No new basic class shall be added unless with respect to any drug or drugs falling within such class the Secretary or his delegate shall have determined that such drug is a narcotic drug as defined by section 4731 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as amended by section 4 of this act, or has caused a finding or decision to be published in the Federal Register pursuant to section 5 of this act. For purposes of this subsection, the Secretary or his delegate may consider changes in classification established by the World Health Organization or its successor in function.

RESTRICTIONS ON THE MANUFACTURE OF NARCOTIC DRUGS

SEC. 7. (a) Except as otherwise provided in this act, it shall be unlawful for any person to manufacture any narcotic drug unless—

(1) such narcotic drug falls within a basic class of narcotic drugs established by or pursuant to this act, and

(2) such person holds a currently effective license and manufacturing quota with respect to such basic class of narcotic drug issued pursuant to section 8 of this act.

The omission of a narcotic drug from the classification established pursuant to section 3 (g) shall not be construed to permit the manufacture of such narcotic drug, the intent of this act being to limit the manufacture of narcotic drugs in the United States to those narcotic drugs established under this act as a basic class of narcotic drugs or as a member of a basic class of narcotic drugs. The fact that the Secretary or his delegate shall have—

(A) determined that a drug is a narcotic drug as defined by section 4731 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as amended by section 4 of this act, or

(B) caused a finding or decision with respect to any drug or other substance to be published in the Federal Register pursuant to section 5 of this act, shall not require the Secretary or his delegate to add such narcotic drug to the classifications set forth in paragraph (1) or to grant a manufacturing quota for such narcotic drug, if the Secretary or his delegate shall determine that it is contrary to the public health and safety to permit the manufacture of such drug within the United States.

(b) It shall be unlawful for any person (1) to manufacture or attempt to manufacture any narcotic drug, or (2) to knowingly permit the manufacture of any narcotic drug, in or upon any place owned, leased, occupied, used or controlled by him unless he (or the lessee, tenant, or other occupant as the case may be) is the holder of a license and quota for the manufacture during the period in question of such narcotic drug in accordance with the provisions of sections 3 (g), 8, and 11 of this act; and it shall be unlawful for the holder of any such quota to manufacture during the period for which the quota is applicable any quantity of such narcotic drug in excess of the amount authorized by such quota.

LICENSES TO MANUFACTURE NARCOTIC DRUGS

Sec. 8. (a) Every person who manufactures a basic class or classes of narcotic drug shall, on or before January 1, 1958, if then already engaged in such manufacture, or otherwise before engaging in such manufacture, obtain from the Secretary or his delegate a license or licenses for the appropriate basic class or classes of narcotic drug. There shall be a separate license for the manufacture of each basic class of narcotic drug. In determining whether to issue a license for a particular basic class of narcotic drug to a particular applicant, the Secretary or his delegate shall be governed by the following factors—

(1) maintenance of effective controls against the diversion of the particular basic class of narcotic drug and of narcotic drugs compounded therefrom into other than legitimate medical and scientific channels through limitation of manufacture of the particular basic class of narcotic drug to the smallest number of establishments which will produce an adequate and uninterrupted supply of narcotic drugs of or derived from such basic class of narcotic drugs for medical and scientific purposes, consistent with the public interest; and

(2) compliance with the obligations undertaken by the United States pursuant to the 1931 convention and the 1948 protocol; and

(3) promotion of technical advances in the art of manufacturing narcotic drugs and the development of new narcotic drug products; and

(4) the applicant's education, moral character and reputation, the applicant's past drug manufacturing experience and the quality of his products, his technical competence, the existence in the applicant's establishment of adequate safeguards against diversion of narcotic drugs into other than legitimate medical and scientific channels; and

(5) such other factors as may be relevant to and consistent with the public interest.

(b) Registration pursuant to section 4722 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, shall be a prerequisite to the issuance of any license under this section. Licenses shall be in such form as the Secretary or his delegate shall prescribe and shall continue in effect subject only to annual renewal of registration unless revoked pursuant to section 9 of this act or voluntarily surrendered. Issuance of a license pursuant to this section shall not entitle the licensee to perform any act with respect to narcotic drugs as to which the consent or approval of the Secretary or his delegate is required by the provisions of this or any other act.

(c) Issuance of a license for the manufacture of any one basic class of narcotic drug shall not entitle the holder thereof to manufacture for sale, distribution, or other use any other basic class of narcotic drug.

(d) Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this section, the Secretary or his delegate shall authorize any person registered as a manufacturer or as a person engaged in research under section 4722 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, who meets the standards for licensing under subsection (a) (4) of this section 8, whether or not such person actually holds a license under subsection (a), to produce such limited quantities as the Secretary or his delegate may specify of any narcotic drug, except crude opium or coca leaves, whether or not a basic class for such drug has been established under section 3 (g) of this act, exclusively for research in the development of manufacturing processes for the drug, or for chemical, pharmacological or medical testing of such drugs, for fitness for medical or scientific use and for determination of its suitability for general manufacture and distribution for medical or scientific use. Such person shall make such reports as the Secretary or his delegate may require relating to the quantities of narcotic drug manufactured and to use and disposal of such quantities of such narcotic drug. Such quantities of such narcotic drug may be disposed of only in accordance with the regulations of the Secretary or his delegate. Any authorization made under this subsection (d) shall be subject to revocation or suspension in accordance with the procedure set forth in section 8 of this act.

(e) In issuing or refusing to issue manufacturing licenses pursuant to this section, the Secretary or his delegate shall act in conformity with the procedure prescribed by section 5 of the Administrative Procedure Act and the Secretary or his delegate shall be deemed to constitute "the agency" for purposes of compliance with sections 7 and 8 of such act. Each licensee of the basic class of narcotic drug with respect to which a license is sought to be obtained shall be deemed a person entitled to notice within the meaning of section 5 (a) of the Administrative Procedure Act.

REVOCATION OR SUSPENSION OF LICENSES

Sec. 9. (a) Any license issued pursuant to section 8 of this act may be revoked by the Secretary or his delegate if the licensee—

(1) has been convicted of violating or conspiring to violate any law of the United States or of any State where the offense involves any activity or transaction with respect to narcotic drugs; or

(2) has violated or failed to comply with any duly promulgated regulation of the Secretary or his delegate relating to narcotic drugs, and such violation or failure to comply reflected adversely on the licensee's reliability and integrity with respect to narcotic drugs.

In the case of a licensee holding more than one license issued pursuant to section 8 of this act, revocation may be in the discretion of the Secretary or his delegate extended to all licenses held by such licensee.

(b) Before revoking any license pursuant to subsection (a), the Secretary or his delegate shall serve upon the licensee an order to show cause why an order of revocation should not be issued. Any such order to show cause shall contain a statement of the basis thereof, and shall call upon such licensee to appear before the Secretary or his delegate at a time and place stated in the order, but in no event less than 30 days after the date of receipt of such order, and give evidence upon the matter specified therein. The Secretary or his delegate may in his discretion suspend any license simultaneously with the issuance of an order to show cause, in cases where he finds that the public health, safety, or interest require such suspension. Such suspension shall continue in effect until the conclusion of any revocation proceeding, including judicial review thereof, unless sooner withdrawn by the Secretary or his delegate, or dissolved by a court of competent jurisdiction. Every hearing held pursuant to this section shall be conducted in accordance with section 5 of the Administrative Procedure Act and the Secretary or his delegate shall be deemed to constitute "the agency" for purposes of compliance with sections 7 and 8 of such act. If after hearing, default, or waiver thereof by the licensee, the Secretary or his delegate determines that an order of revocation should issue, he shall issue such order, which shall include a statement of his findings and the grounds and reasons therefor and shall specify the effective date of the order, and he shall cause such order to be served on the licensee. In any case where a hearing is conducted pursuant to the provisions of this section both the burden of proceeding with the introduction of evidence and the burden of proof shall be upon the Secretary or his delegate. Proceedings under this section shall be independent of, and not in lieu of, criminal prosecution or other proceedings under this act or any other law of the United States.

AUTHORITY TO SEIZE NARCOTIC DRUGS, ORDER FORMS, AND TAX STAMPS

Sec. 10. In the event of the suspension or revocation of a license obtained under section 8, all narcotic drugs owned or possessed by such person at the time of suspension or at the effective date of the revocation order, as the case may be, whether or not taxes have been paid on such narcotic drugs, together with all unused order forms or narcotic tax stamps owned or possessed by such person, may at the discretion of the Secretary or his delegate be placed under seal and no disposition made until the time for taking an appeal has elapsed or until all appeals have been concluded. Upon a suspension or revocation order becoming final all narcotic drugs, tax stamps, and order forms shall be forfeited to the Government.

MANUFACTURING QUOTAS FOR BASIC CLASSES OF NARCOTIC DRUGS

Sec. 11. (a) For the purpose of fixing manufacturing quotas under this section and in order to carry out the treaty obligations of the United States, the Secretary or his delegate shall make determinations of the total quantity of each basic class of narcotic drug necessary to be manufactured during each calendar year to provide for the estimated medical and scientific needs of the United States, for lawful export requirements, and for establishment and maintenance of reserve stocks.

(b) In fixing individual manufacturing quotas for any basic class of narcotic drug for a calendar year pursuant to this section, or at any time after fixing such individual quotas, the Secretary or his delegate shall limit or reduce such individual quotas to the extent necessary to prevent the aggregate of such individual quotas from exceeding the amount of the determination of the Secretary or his delegate under subsection (a). In any such limitation or reduction pursuant to this subsection the quota of each licensed manufacturer of such basic class of drug shall be limited or reduced in the same proportion as the limitation or reduction of the aggregate of such quotas. However, if any licensee, before the issuance of a limitation or reduction in quota, has manufactured in excess of his quota so limited or reduced, the amount of such excess shall be subtracted from such licensee's manufacturing quota for the following year.

(c) On or before June 1 of each year, upon application therefor by a person having a license to manufacture a basic class of narcotic drug, the Secretary or his delegate shall fix a manufacturing quota for such calendar year for such basic class of narcotic drug for such person. Subject to the provisions of subsections (a) and (b), such quota shall be sufficient to cover the applicant's estimated disposal, inventory, and other requirements for the calendar year as determined by the Secretary or his delegate, who shall take into account the applicant's current disposal rate, the trend of such disposal rate during the preceding calendar year, the applicant's production cycle and inventory position, the economic availability of raw materials, yield and stability problems, emergencies such as strikes and fires, and other factors. Subject to the provisions of subsections (a) and (b), such quota shall not be less than the sum of—

(1) such licensed manufacturer's net disposal of such basic class of narcotic drug during the immediately preceding calendar year or the average of the three immediately preceding calendar years in which such manufacturer produced such basic class of narcotic drug, whichever is greater; and

(2) one-half of such manufacturer's net disposal of such basic class of narcotic drug

(d) During the period from January 1 until a manufacturing quota for such calendar year is fixed pursuant to subsection (c), any licensed manufacturer entitled to receive a quota for any basic class of narcotic drug under subsection (c) may manufacture a provisional quota of not more than 75 percent of whichever of the following is greater—

(1) such manufacturer's net disposal of such basic class of narcotic drug during the 12 months immediately preceding September 30 of the preceding calendar year; or

(2) twelve times such manufacturer's average monthly net disposal of such basic class of narcotic drug for the 33 months immediately preceding September 30 of the preceding calendar year;

or such higher or lower percentage as the Secretary or his delegate may from time to time for good cause direct. Any higher or lower percentage so directed shall apply to the provisional quotas of all licensed manufacturers for such basic class of narcotic drug.

(e) The Secretary or his delegate shall, on application therefor, and subject to the provisions of subsections (a) and (b), fix a quota for any licensed manufacturer of a basic class of narcotic drug who has not manufactured such basic class of narcotic drug during one or more of the three immediately preceding calendar years, in an amount adequate to cover such manufacturer's reasonably anticipated requirements for the current calendar year.

(f) At any time during the calendar year any licensed manufacturer who has applied for or received a manufacturing quota for a basic class of narcotic drug may apply for an increase in such quota, to meet his estimated disposal, inventory, and other requirements during the remainder of such calendar year. In passing upon such application the Secretary or his delegate shall take into consideration any occurrences since the filing of such manufacturer's initial quota application that may require an increased manufacturing rate by such manufacturer during the balance of such calendar year. In passing upon such application the Secretary or his delegate may also take into consideration the amount, if any, by which the determination of the Secretary or his delegate under subsection (a) exceeds the aggregate of the quotas of all manufacturers under this section, and the equitable distribution of such excess among other manufacturers.

EXCEPTION FROM APPLICABILITY OF LICENSE AND QUOTA PROVISIONS

Sec. 12. Notwithstanding any other provisions of this act—

(1) no license or quota shall be required for the manufacture of such quantities of narcotic drugs as incidentally but necessarily result from the manufacturing process used for the manufacture of a basic class of narcotic drug duly licensed under this act; and

(2) no license or quota shall be required for the manufacture of such quantities of narcotic drugs as incidentally but necessarily result from the manufacture of any substance which is not a narcotic drug.

Unless such incidentally but necessarily resulting narcotic drug shall have been determined to be nonaddicting by the Secretary or his delegate, it may (apart from being used in the process of producing a narcotic drug for which license and quota are held) be retained or disposed of only in such manner as may be prescribed or authorized by the Secretary or his delegate.

REGULATION WITH RESPECT TO PERSONS WHO MANUFACTURE NARCOTIC PRECURSORS

Sec. 13. Persons who manufacture, compound, package, sell, deal in, or give away any narcotic precursor shall keep such records and make such reports with respect to such narcotic precursor as the Secretary or his delegate shall by regulation prescribe. The Secretary or his delegate may advise the Congress whether in his opinion the manufacture and distribution of narcotic precursors threaten to result in the diversion of narcotic drugs into other than legitimate medical and scientific channels and whether in his judgment further legislation with respect to narcotic precursors is necessary or desirable.

CERTAIN PROCEDURES FOR JUDICIAL REVIEW

Sec. 14. Every final decision of the Secretary or his delegate under sections 3 (i), 6, 8, 9, 11 (c), 11 (e), or 11 (f) of this act shall be subject to judicial review as provided by and in the manner prescribed in Public Law 901, 81st Congress, approved December 29, 1950.

AMENDMENT TO LAW WITH RESPECT TO EXPORTATION OF NARCOTIC DRUGS

Sec. 15. Section 6 of the act entitled "An act to prohibit the importation and use of opium for other than medicinal purposes," approved February 9, 1909, as amended (21 U. S. C. 182), is amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 6. (a) No person subject to the jurisdiction of the United States Government shall export or cause to be exported from the United States, or from territory under its control or jurisdiction, any narcotic drug to any other country except—

"(1) to a country which has ratified and become a party to the International Opium Convention of 1912 for the Suppression of the Abuses of Opium, Morphine, Cocaine, and Derivative Drugs, or to the International Opium Convention signed at Geneva on February 19, 1925, any narcotic drugs derived directly or indirectly from crude opium or coca leaves; or

"(2) to a country which has ratified and become a party to the Convention for Limiting the Manufacture and Regulating the Distribution of Narcotic Drugs concluded at Geneva July 13, 1931, and entered into force with respect to the United States of America July 9, 1933, as amended by the protocol signed at Lake Success on December 11, 1946, and the protocol bringing under international control drugs outside the scope of the convention of July 13, 1931, for limiting the manufacture and regulating the distribution of narcotic drugs (as amended by the protocol signed at Lake Success on December 11, 1946) signed at Paris November 19, 1948, and entered into force with respect to the United States of America September 11, 1950, any narcotic drugs not derived directly or indirectly from crude opium or coca leaves; and in the instance of (1) and (2) then only if—

"(1) such country has instituted and maintains, in conformity with the respective conventions, a system which the Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate deems adequate, for the control of imports of narcotic drugs;

"(2) the narcotic drug is consigned to a holder of such permits or licenses as may be required under the laws of the country of import; and

"(3) there is furnished to the Secretary or his delegate proof deemed adequate by him that the narcotic drug is to be applied exclusively to medical and scientific uses within the country to which exported, that it will not be reexported from such country, and that there is an actual need for the narcotic drug for medical and scientific uses within such country.

"(b) The exceptions contained in subsection (a) shall not apply to smoking opium or opium prepared for smoking, the exportation of which is absolutely prohibited.

"(c) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (a), the Secretary or his delegate may authorize the exportation of any narcotic drug (including crude opium and coca leaves) to a country which has ratified and become a party either to the 1912 convention, the 1925 convention, or the 1931 convention and supplementing protocols of 1946 and 1948, if the particular drug is to be applied to a special scientific purpose in the country of destination and the authorities of such country will permit the importation of the particular drug for such purpose.

"(d) The Secretary of State shall request all foreign governments to communicate through the diplomatic channels copies of the laws and regulations promulgated in their respective countries which prohibit or regulate the importation and shipment in transit of any narcotic drug and, when received, shall advise the Secretary or his delegate thereof."

AUTHORIZING IMPORTATION OF NARCOTIC DRUGS AS TO CERTAIN PERSONS

Sec. 16. Notwithstanding the provisions of this act or any other law, the Secretary or his delegate may in his discretion authorize the importation of any narcotic drug or drugs (including crude opium or coca leaves) for delivery to officials of the United Nations, of the Government of the United States, or of any of the several States, or to any person licensed or qualified to be licensed under section 7 of this act, for scientific purposes only.

ENFORCEMENT AND AUTHORITY TO DELEGATE FUNCTIONS

Sec. 17. It shall be the duty of the Secretary or his delegate to enforce the provisions of this act, and he is hereby authorized to make, prescribe, and publish all necessary rules and regulations for carrying out its provisions, including but not limited to rules and regulations for the prevention of unlawful diversion of narcotic drugs, and to confer or impose any of the rights, privileges, powers, and duties conferred or imposed upon him by this act upon such officers or employees of the Treasury Department as he shall designate or appoint.

PENAL PROVISIONS

Sec. 18. (a) Any person who violates any of the provisions of this act shall be guilty of a felony, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

(b) Any person who willfully makes, aids, or assists in the making of, or procures, counsels, or advises in the preparation or presentation of, a false or fraudulent statement in any application made pursuant to this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not more than $2,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both.

PROCEDURE AND PRESUMPTIONS

Sec. 19. It shall not be necessary to negative any exemptions set forth in this act in any complaint, information, indictment, or other writ or proceeding laid or brought under this act and the burden of proof of any such exemption shall be upon the person claiming its benefit. In the absence of proof by such person that he is the duly authorized holder of an appropriate license or quota issued under this act, he shall be presumed not to be the holder of such license or quota and the burden of proof shall be upon him to rebut such presumption.

APPLICABILITY OF ACT

Sec. 20. The provisions of this act shall apply to the several States, the District of Columbia, the Territory of Alaska, the Territory of Hawaii, the Canal Zone, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, and the other insular territories and possessions of the United States.

SEPARABILITY OF INVALID PROVISIONS

SEC. 21. If any provision of this act, or the application of such provision to any circumstances, shall be held invalid, the validity of the remainder of the act and the applicability of such provision to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 14, lines 2 and 3, strike out "paragraph (1)" and insert "section 3 (g)."

Page 17, line 21, strike out "8" and insert "9."

Page 29, line 17, strike out "7" and insert "8."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD on the bill just passed, and that following my remarks the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] may extend his remarks on the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of H. R. 9028, which was introduced by our colleague, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. KARSTEN] is to implement and give full effect to treaty obligations of the United States to limit exclusively to medical and scientific purposes the manufacture of narcotic drugs and to require that such manufacture be restricted to persons and premises that have been licensed for the purpose. As is pointed out in the committee report, the bill is also designed to amend the Narcotic Drugs Import and Export Act to bring the regulation of exports into conformity with current treaty obligations, and to permit the importation and exportation of certain narcotic drugs for scientific research purposes.

The bill provides a system of licenses and manufacturing quotas for all manufacturers, with appropriate safeguards, with respect to the manufacture of the basic classes of narcotic drugs, both natural and synthetic, for medical and scientific purposes. This will enable the United States Government to discharge its treaty obligations and to provide for and promote the general health and welfare of our citizens.

This bill is strongly supported by the Bureau of Narcotics and has been carefully considered over a period of time by the Committee on Ways and Means.

The bill was unanimously reported by the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, this legislation has as its meritorious purpose the amendment of our Federal laws relating to narcotic drugs so as to give full effect to the treaty obligations of the United States to limit the manufacture of such drugs to purposes that are exclusively for medical and scientific uses and also provide that such manufacture would be restricted to persons and premises that have been licensed for that purpose. In addition the legislation would restrict exports and imports of narcotics to purposes that are limited by and specified in applicable treaties. This legislation was unanimously approved by the Committee on Ways and Means and should receive the favorable consideration of the Congress so as to strengthen our narcotic laws and the enforcement thereof.

U. S. S. "ARIZONA" MEMORIAL AT PEARL HARBOR

Mr. O'HARA of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'HARA of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, since the passage by the House of H. R. 5809, authorizing the construction of a U. S. S. Arizona memorial at Pearl Harbor, I have received many letters commending our action. This reflects an interest that is nationwide. I wish to commend the able and distinguished gentleman from Hawaii, the Honorable JOHN A. BURNS, on the masterful manner in which he has handled a legislative proposal that appeals so strongly to the sentiment of the American people.

On the morning of the day H. R. 5809 was on the calendar for a vote I received a letter from Delegate BURNS. It read, in part:

> The U. S. S. Arizona is the tomb of 1,102 of the Navy's finest. Enclosed herewith is a list of those from your area or district shown by Navy records to have been aboard and to have died on December 7, 1941, on the U. S. S. Arizona. The Arizona is their tomb. I know that we can count on your support that this memorial to your constitutents will be as fine as it can be made.

I judge from conversations with my colleagues that a similar letter was received by each and every Member of the House, each letter transmitting a list of the men from the recipient's district or area whose tomb is the U. S. S. Arizona. It must have required a tremendous lot of work to furnish more than 400 Members of this body the Arizona's honor roll broken down by Congressional districts.

The memory of all the men who died at Pearl Harbor that black day of December 7, 1941, is sacred to all Americans. There is no distinction on the lines of local geography, of race, religion or station. But in reminding us that among the heroes of the Nation whose memory we were perpetuating were some who had been our own constituents, the gentleman from Hawaii gave us the added personal sense that in supporting H. R. 5809 we were aiding in building a memorial tomb not only for our countrymen personally unknown to us but also for the members of our own community families.

I wish to join my colleagues in an expression of thanks to the distinguished gentleman from Hawaii. He has brought home to us a new realization of how closely knit together are all of us in our great United States of America. I feel that I am expressing the sentiment of all my colleagues in congratulating the people of Hawaii on the fine representation they have in the Congress of the United States.

MARTIN'S MOUSE

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, while the important work of this session of Congress was all but completed, and while the membership strained to wind it up this weekend, we were stalled by the Republican leadership of the House which fails to recognize, apparently, that all legislation is the result of compromise.

Rumors were heard that the Republican leadership was coming up with a brand new plan for civil rights, a genuine inspiration, something the President could sign, something nobody, apparently, had thought of before. There was a great air of expectancy yesterday as the time for the revelation neared. At length the moment arrived. The heavens darkened, the mountain quivered, and finally a ray of light broke through the clouds, and there, in all its majesty, stood the plan—a mouse, the usual timid and confused creature.

We have a new concept in the law, a bargain-basement contempt of court.

Mr. MARTIN proposes a Saks Fifth Avenue and Macy's basement contempt and, believe it or not, he is serious about it. Take your choice, Mr. MARTIN says, be $300 worth of contemptuous without a jury—the Macy rate, or go all out at the Saks Fifth Avenue rate—over $300 and a trial by jury.

CENSORSHIP BY THE MAJOR NETWORKS OF THE SONGS OF STEPHEN C. FOSTER

Mr. DORN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. DORN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, there is mounting resentment throughout America against the shocking censorship by the major networks of the songs of Stephen C. Foster. Our people will be further shocked and alarmed when they learn that many music books taught in the public schools have already been censored, one in the Washington, D. C., area having left out entirely one of Stephen Foster's best and most familiar songs—Old Black Joe. When the news of this unwarranted action of publishing houses and broadcasters gets through to the American people in every one of our States, they will be resentful.

Our people gave their sons to fight for freedom against the Fascists, Nazis, and Communists. They gave their sons to fight this very type of censorship and rewriting of history. I never dreamed when in the Armed Forces that I would live to see the day when censorship of this type would be practiced in America. It strikes at the very fundamentals of our American philosophy—freedom of speech, freedom of religion, and freedom of the press.

I am today joining some of my colleagues in introducing a bill which would prohibit unwarranted censorship by broadcasting, television, telephone, telegraph, and similar companies without the permission of the author. In case the author is deceased before his songs or publications can be censored, a hearing must be held before the Federal Communications Commission, and the names of those requesting such censorship be exposed to the sunlight of public opinion.

This bill will provide for punishment of such censorship and it shall be a misdemeanor for any person or company to practice such un-American censorship. The bill provides for fines and imprisonment.

I do hope the House will pass this bill and protect our basic American freedoms.

Also, Mr. Speaker, I have requested of the distinguished chairman of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee to have his great committee investigate the reasons behind such censorship here in free America.

GRADUATES OF UNITED STATES SERVICE ACADEMIES

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I have today introduced legislation which would require graduates of United States service academies to serve at least 10 years on active duty.

This 10-year requirement would apply to cadets and midshipmen accepted for admission to the academies after the date of enactment of the bill.

Under present law, graduates of the Military, Naval, and Air Force Academies are required to serve only 3 years on active duty. Coast Guard Academy graduates must serve only 4 years.

Only this week the Air Force announced extension of the obligated service of pilot trainee reservists from 3 to 5 years. Here we have the almost incredible situation of a young man who has graduated from a college or university at his own expense being required to give 5 years of obligated service to the Military Establishment while another young man, after obtaining his education at Government expense, can throw up his contract at the end of 3 years.

It seems to me that after the Government invests some $40,000 in the education of a young man in one of the service academies the individual should be required to serve a longer period on active duty than is now the case. After all, the purpose of the academies is to prepare young men for lifetime careers as professional military leaders.

While it is of course too late for action to be taken on the bill during the present session, I hope it will receive favorable consideration early next year.

CIVIL RIGHTS

Mr. GUBSER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. GUBSER. Mr. Speaker, I do not like to take a partisan approach to any matter, but day in and day out I have listened to the hatchetmen from the Democratic side use printer's ink and space in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to ridicule the Republican Party. Today I feel constrained to get out my own hatchet and be a little partisan. Perhaps it will not be quite as shiny and sharp as Democratic hatchets but I hope it will cut just as deeply.

There is a great deal of talk about civil rights legislation. Today on this floor we have heard ridicule of the Republican attempt at honest compromise. The truth of the matter is that the Democratic Party is bitterly divided on the civil rights issue, yet it has always posed as the champion of civil rights. They are so divided that they want to get rid of it this year so that they will not face it next year in an election year.

There is no Federal election that will be held before next year. No Negro will be deprived of his right to vote between now and January. We have plenty of time to work this out in January and pass a real bill instead of a sham. We Republicans are not afraid of it being an issue in an election year. Our skirts are clean. So let us go home, and settle it in January.

SPECIAL ORDER TRANSFERRED

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the special order which I have for today may be vacated and transferred to Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PRIVATE CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. This is the day set for the call of the Private Calendar.

The Clerk will call the first bill on the calendar.

ROCHESTER IRON & METAL CO.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Rochester Iron & Metal Co., 335 St. Paul Street, Rochester, N. Y., the sum of $117,913.20. The payment of such sum shall be in full settlement of all claims of the said Rochester Iron & Metal Co. against the United States arising from the failure of the Government to deliver 1,940 net tons of steel as a part of a purchase of 3 lots of steel billets by the Rochester Iron & Metal Co. from the Philadelphia Ordnance District in accordance with an invitation to bid issued April 27, 1953.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 11, strike out "three" and insert in lieu thereof "two."

Page 2, at the end of line 3, strike out the period and add the following: ": Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this Act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this Act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FACILITATING THE ADMISSION INTO THE UNITED STATES OF CERTAIN ALIENS

Carroll, citizens of the United States.

With the following committee amendment:

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AUTHORIZING THE APPOINTMENT OF ADM. ARTHUR W. RADFORD

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 8763) to authorize the appointment of Adm. Arthur W. Radford, United States Navy, to the permanent grade of admiral in the Navy.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, because of the many distinguished services that Adm. Arthur W. Radford, United States Navy, has rendered to his country during more than 45 years of service, including World War II, later service as Commander in Chief Pacific and United States Pacific Fleet during the Korean hostilities, and most recent service as Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff for 2 terms during a most critical period, the President is authorized to appoint Adm. Arthur W. Radford, United States Navy, to the permanent grade of admiral in the Navy, with the active duty pay and allowances provided by law for an officer in such grade serving as Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. Upon retirement Adm. Arthur W. Radford shall be entitled to have his name placed on the retired list with the highest grade or rank held by him while on the active list and shall be entitled to the same pay and allowances while on the retired list as authorized by law for an officer on the active list serving in the grade of admiral and holding the office of Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Sec. 2. In the event Admiral Radford is transferred to the retired list before the approval of this Act, the President is authorized to appoint him to the permanent grade of admiral on the retired list with the pay and allowances provided in section 1 of this Act.

With the following committee amendments:

On page 2, lines 3 and 4, strike "in such grade serving as Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff." and insert "in the grade of rear admiral (upper half)."

On page 2, lines 10 and 11, strike "admiral and holding the office of Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff." and insert "rear admiral (upper half)."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time and was read the third time and passed.

The title of the bill was amended to read: "A bill to authorize the appointment of Adm. Arthur W. Radford, United States Navy, to the permanent grade of admiral in the Navy and to provide for increased retired pay."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONVEYANCE OF CERTAIN LANDS WITHIN HICKORY LOCK AND DAM PROJECT TO MIDDLE TENNESSEE COUNCIL, INC., BOY SCOUTS OF AMERICA

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 8576) to authorize the conveyance of certain lands within the Old Hickory lock and dam project, Cumberland River, Tenn., to Middle Tennessee Council, Inc., Boy Scouts of America, for recreation and camping purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subject to section 2 and without monetary consideration, the Secretary of the Army is authorized and directed to convey to the Middle Tennessee Council, Inc., Boy Scouts of America, all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to the following lands within the Old Hickory lock and dam project:

[1] Judgment No. 851.
[2] Judgment No. 850.

SEC. 2. Title to property authorized to be conveyed by this Act shall revert to the United States, which shall have the right of immediate entry thereon, if the Middle Tennessee Council, Inc., Boy Scouts of America—

(1) has not commenced the development of such property for recreation and camping purposes within the 3-year period beginning on the date of enactment of this Act; or

(2) shall ever cease to use such property for recreation and camping purposes.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of the Army is authorized to grant to the Middle Tennessee Council, Inc., Boy Scouts of America, such rights-of-way for public access and utility lines across any property of the United States as may be necessary to facilitate the development and use of the property conveyed under authority of this Act for recreation and camping purposes.

SEC. 4. The conveyance of the property herein authorized shall be subject to the right to flood due to the fluctuation of the water level of the Old Hickory lock and dam project and to such other conditions, reservations, and restrictions as the Secretary of the Army may determine to be necessary for the management and operation of said Old Hickory lock and dam project.

SEC. 5. The cost of any surveys necessary as an incident of the conveyance authorized herein shall be borne by the Middle Tennessee Council, Inc., Boy Scouts of America.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all of section 1 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "That the Secretary of the Army is authorized and directed to convey to the Middle Tennessee Council, Inc., Boy Scouts of America, without monetary consideration therefor, but subject to the conditions of this Act, the area or areas he determines to be available for conveyance within the 609.2 acres of land leased to the said Boy Scouts Council at the Old Hickory lock and dam, Cumberland River, Tenn., under lease granted July 12, 1955, No. DA-40-058-CIVENG-56-8."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. EVINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. EVINS. Mr. Speaker, this bill, H. R. 8576, to authorize the conveyance of certain lands within the Old Hickory Reservoir area on the Cumberland River in Tennessee to the Middle Tennessee Council, Inc., Boy Scouts of America, is a worthy measure which will serve a valued and useful purpose in aiding in the building of citizenship for our country.

This bill by our esteemed colleague, Congressman LOSER, is similar to a bill which I was pleased to introduce for this purpose. Also our other colleague from middle Tennessee, Congressman BASS, has likewise introduced a companion bill to the one which the House has considered and has just passed.

The Corps of Engineers has recommended the conveyance of this land to the Middle Tennessee Boy Scout Council in order that a camp may be developed and used by the Boy Scouts of middle Tennessee. The land is situated in Wilson County, in the district which I have the honor to represent. The full development of this Boy Scout camp will mean much to the youth of this area by providing a permanent encampment for recreation, sports, and training in leadership. The passage of this act will mean a great contribution to the building of character and good citizenship.

The Boy Scout Council has already expended more than $25,000 in developments in this area and it is anticipated that the organization will expend another $750,000 for permanent shelters, utilities, road development, and equipment to make the camp suitable for Boy Scouts and one of the most outstanding such developments.

There have been many leaders in this movement to bring about this accomplishment. Among the foremost of our outstanding civic-minded citizens spearheading this drive has been Mr. E. B. Stahlman, publisher of the Nashville Banner. The Governor of Tennessee, Hon. Frank G. Clement, has also expressed his interest in this legislation, as well as have many other officials and public spirited citizens. These include county judges, mayors of municipalities in middle Tennessee, chamber of commerce officials, business and industrial leaders, Boy Scout officials, and others.

I cite these facts to point out for the record that there is certainly a great public interest in this legislation. I am pleased that the Corps of Engineers has recommended this action and that the House Public Works Committee has favorably reported the bills introduced for this purpose.

I want to commend my colleagues, Congressmen LOSER and BASS, and also our colleagues, Congressman DAVIS of Tennessee and Congressman JONES of Alabama, members of the Public Works Committee, as well as Chairman BUCKLEY of the House Public Works Committee, for their diligence and assistance in securing favorable action on this legislation.

This project, when fully developed, will contribute immeasurably to the training of our youth, building character, good citizens, and leaders for our country. The passage of this legislation is in the public interest and will mean a significant contribution in this direction.

IRENE MONTOYA

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the legal guardian of Irene Montoya, Belen, N. Mex., in addition to the sum paid to such legal guardian under the provisions of Private Law 699, 79th Congress, the further sum of $3,500, in full satisfaction of her claim against the United States for compensation for expenses incident to the provision of artificial limbs and other expenses arising as a result of the loss of a leg in the explosion of a bomb which had been dropped and left unprotected in a field by the United States Army near Belen, N. Mex., on August 12, 1945: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this Act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this Act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Page 2, lines 4 and 5, strike out "in excess of 10 percent thereof."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ROBERT F. GROSS

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Robert F. Gross of Harrisburg, Pa., is hereby relieved of all liability to refund to the United States the sum of $1,047.42, representing the amount of the overpayment received by him at the time of his final separation from employment with the Department of Labor as compensation for unused annual leave.

SEC. 2. All disbursing officers, or other responsible officers, who made or authorized the overpayment referred to in the first section of this Act, are relieved of all liability for such overpayment and their accounts shall be credited with the amount of such overpayment.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

KARL L. LARSON

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Karl L. Larson, Mount Shasta, Calif., the sum of $503.25. The payment of such sum shall be in full settlement of all claims of such person against the United States for compensation for personal property destroyed by fire on July 20, 1955, while employed by the Forest Service on the Shasta-Trinity National Forest, Calif.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this Act for the payment of any one claim in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with such claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this Act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ALFRED HANZAL

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Alfred Hanzal, San Antonio, Tex., the sum of $322.67. The payment of such sum shall be in full settlement of all claims of the said Alfred Hanzal against the United States for refund of taxes which he erroneously paid under the Federal Insurance Contributions Act with respect to his remuneration (as owner of the Milam Building Barber Shop, San Antonio) during the period beginning January 1, 1947, and ending March 31, 1947, and which cannot now be refunded to him by the Internal Revenue Service because of the expiration of the applicable period of limitation: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this Act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this Act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendment:

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LT. PERCY HAMILTON HEBERT

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That 1st Lt. Percy Hamilton Hebert, Air Force of the United States, retired, serial No. AO–888402, is hereby relieved of all liability to pay to the United States the sum of $2,238. Such sum represents certain amounts erroneously paid to the said Percy Hamilton Hebert during the period between November 19, 1944, and June 30, 1950, inclusive, as a result of errors made in the computation of his retired pay.

The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the said Percy Hamilton Hebert an amount equal to the aggregate of amounts paid by him, or which have been withheld from sums otherwise due him, in complete or partial satisfaction of such claim of the United States.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MRS. MARGOT M. DRAUGHON

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 1692) for the relief of Mrs. Margot M. Draughon.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Mrs. Margot M. Draughon is hereby relieved of all liability to refund to the United States the sum of $2,625. Such sum represents the amount of class E allotment payments which were erroneously made to Mrs. Margot M. Draughon, the wife of Charles R. Draughon, Army serial No. 6971596, during the period October 1, 1942, through August 31, 1945, after the said Charles R. Draughon had discontinued such allotment. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the said Margot M. Draughon any amount refunded by her to the United States on account of these erroneous payments of class E allotment. In the audit and settlement of the accounts of any certifying or disbursing officer of the United States full credit shall be given for the amount for which liability is relieved by this Act.

SEC. 2. Nothing in this Act shall be construed to relieve Charles R. Draughon, Army serial No. 6971596, of any liability to refund to the United States any amounts which have been determined to be erroneous payments as the result of his authorizing a class E allotment to Mrs. Margot M. Draughon during the period August 1, 1942, through August 31, 1945.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ESTATE OF MRS. FRANK C. GREGG

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, for the purpose of determining the individual liability for income taxes for the taxable year 1951 of Mrs. Frank C. Gregg, the election of the said Mrs. Frank C. Gregg, a stockholder in the Scott & Gregg Real Estate Co., which was liquidated pursuant to a plan of complete liquidation adopted on June 21, 1951, to have the benefits of section 112 (b) (7) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1939, shall be considered to have been filed within 30 days after the date of adoption of such plan, such benefits having been denied Mrs. Frank C. Gregg because the filing of such election was delayed, due to the unavailability of the prescribed forms for filing such election and the serious illness of the said Mrs. Frank C. Gregg, until after the 30 days allowed for filing such election had expired.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 1, line 10, strike out "considered to have been filed within 30 days after the date of adoption of such plan" and insert "held and considered fully effective."

COL. JACK C. JEFFREY

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the accounts of Col. Jack C. Jeffrey, of APO 343, care postmaster, San Francisco, Calif., in the sum of $435.64. Such credit is for excess shipping weight allowances for household goods shipped from Fort Monroe, Va., to San Antonio, Tex., and to other locations in the United States during November and December 1947.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following: "That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Col. Jack C. Jeffrey, of APO 343, care postmaster, San Francisco, Calif., the sum of $435.63, as a refund of excess costs collected from Col. Jack C. Jeffrey on shipments of household effects to Madison, Wis., from overseas and from certain locations in the United States, during April, May, and August, 1950: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this Act shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this Act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FAMILY OF JOSEPH A. MORGAN

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to determine the persons who would have been entitled upon the death of Joseph A. Morgan (Veterans' Administration claim No. XC-1336540) to the United States series E and G bonds, the proceeds of which were donated to the United States by the said Joseph A. Morgan in 1951 while he was of unsound mind, if such bonds had not been redeemed by the said Joseph A. Morgan, and to pay to such persons, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the amounts which they would have been entitled to receive if such bonds had been redeemed as of the day after the date of death of the said Joseph A. Morgan: Provided, That no part of any sum paid under this Act to any person in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with the claim settled by the payment of such sum, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this Act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following: "That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to determine the persons who would have been entitled upon the death of Joseph A. Morgan (Veterans' Administration claim No. XC-1336540) to the United States series E and G bonds, the proceeds of which were donated to the United States by the said Joseph A. Morgan in 1951, if such bonds had not been redeemed by the said Joseph A. Morgan, and to pay to such persons, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the amounts which were deposited in the Treasury as the redemption value of the bonds to which they are found to be entitled: Provided, That no part of any sum paid under this act to any person shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with the claim settled by the payment of such sum, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

RELIEF OF CERTAIN ALIENS

The Clerk called House Joint Resolution 435 for the relief of certain aliens.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the House joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That, for the purposes of the Immigration and Nationality Act, Lisa El Aneed, Alfred El Aneed, and Maria Gounaris Stephenson shall be held and considered to have been lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence as of the date of the enactment of this act, upon payment of the required visa fees: Provided, That a suitable and proper bond or undertaking, approved by the Attorney General be deposited as prescribed by section 213 of the said act in the case of Alfred El Aneed.

SEC. 2. The Attorney General is authorized and directed to cancel any outstanding orders and warrants of deportation, warrants of arrest, and bonds, which may have issued in the cases of Joseph (Josip) Torbar, Ludmilla Jungbauer, and Albert Charles Jolly. From and after the date of the enactment of this act, the said persons shall not again be subject to deportation by reason of the same facts upon which such deportation proceedings were commenced or any such warrants and orders have issued.

SEC. 3. For the purposes of the Immigration and Nationality Act, Eugenia Dlugopolska and May Ping Lee shall be held and considered to have been lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence as of the date of the enactment of this act, upon payment of the required visa fees. Upon the granting of permanent residence to each alien as provided for in this section of this act, if such alien was classifiable as a quota immigrant at the time of the enactment of this act, the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper quota-control officer to reduce by one the quota for the quota area to which the alien is chargeable for the first year that such quota is available.

With the following committee amendments:

On page 1, line 4, after the name "Alfred El Aneed," strike out the word "and", as it appears before the words "and Maria."

On page 2, line 9, after the word "issued", change the period to a colon and add the following: "Provided, That, unless Ludmilla Jungbauer is entitled to care under the Dependents' Medical Care Act, a suitable and proper bond or undertaking, approved by the Attorney General, to be deposited as prescribed by section 213 of the Immigration and Nationality Act, and the provisions of this section of this act shall be applicable in her case upon compliance with such conditions and controls which the Attorney General, after consultation with the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service, Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, may deem necessary to impose."

Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 5, strike out "$19,000" and insert "$13,766.21."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REMOVAL OF CLOUD ON TITLE TO PROPERTY IN ILLINOIS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 7081) to provide for the removal of a cloud on the title to certain real property located in the State of Illinois.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Administrator of General Services shall convey, by quitclaim deed and without consideration, all of the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to the following tracts of real property lying within the east half of section 24, township 1 north, range 3 west of the third principal meridian, Clinton County, Ill., as provided in the following paragraphs:

(1) To Daniel H. Meyer, the west 16½ feet and the south 16½ feet of the southwest quarter southeast quarter of section 24.

(2) To Richard Brinkman and Florence Brinkman, the southwest quarter southeast quarter of section 24, except 16½ feet off of the south side and except 16½ feet off of the west side.

(3) To Lee A. Friend, southeast quarter southeast quarter of section 24.

(4) To William F. Weihe, north half southeast quarter of section 24.

(5) To Lawrence M. Dame and Villa Dame, as joint tenants, beginning at the northwest corner of the northwest quarter northeast quarter of section 24, thence east 59 rods, thence south 44 rods, thence west 59 rods, thence north 44 rods to the place of beginning.

(6) To Gene W. Spears, commencing 59 rods east of the northwest corner of the northeast quarter of section 24, thence east to the northeast corner of the said northeast quarter, thence south 24 rods, thence west 101 rods to a point due south of the point of beginning, thence north 24 rods to the place of beginning.

(7) To William F. Weihe, northeast quarter of section 24, except a tract described as beginning at the northwest corner thereof, thence east 59 rods, thence south 44 rods, thence west 59 rods, thence north 44 rods, to the place of beginning; and also except a tract described as beginning 59 rods east of the northwest corner of said northeast quarter, thence east to the northeast corner thereof, thence south 24 rods, thence west 101 rods, thence north to the place of beginning.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following: "That the United States hereby releases, remises, and quitclaims all right, title, and interest in and to '200 acres, part of east one-half section 24, township 1 north, range 3 north,' Clinton County, Ill., which the United States may have by virtue of a deed made to the United States on August 24, 1868, by the United States marshal for the southern district of Illinois, recorded in book 3 of deeds at page 116, records of Clinton County, Ill., to the person or persons who would, except for any claim of right, title, and interest in and to such land on the part of the United States by virtue of said deed, be entitled to said land under the laws of the State of Illinois."

Mr. BROOKS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the committee amendment offered by Mr. BROOKS of Texas: Page 3, line 8, strike the last word and insert in lieu thereof "west."

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LAND CONVEYANCE AT BOWIE, MD.

The Clerk called the bill (S. 1962) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to convey a certain tract of land owned by the United States to the Perkins Chapel Methodist Church, Bowie, Md.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed to convey by quitclaim deed to the Perkins Chapel Methodist Church, Bowie, Md., any right, title, and interest of the United States in and to a certain tract of land situated in Bowie, Md., Prince Georges County, described as follows:

Beginning at an iron pipe set on the south side of Fairland-Springfield Road, formerly known as the Springfield Hill Road, being at the northeast corner of the land now owned by the Perkins Chapel Methodist Church, running south 36 degrees 30 minutes west 328.75 feet; thence south 53 degrees 30 minutes east to the north boundary of Telegraph Road; thence northeasterly to the intersection of the north side of Telegraph Road and the south side of Fairland-Springfield Road; thence continuing in a northwesterly direction following the south side of Fairland-Springfield Road to the point of beginning, containing 5.5 acres more or less.

SEC. 2. The conveyance authorized by this act shall be subject to the condition that the Perkins Chapel Methodist Church pay to the Secretary of Agriculture as consideration for the land conveyed the fair market value of such land as determined by the Secretary after appraisal of such land.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FAVORING THE SUSPENSION OF DEPORTATION IN THE CASE OF CERTAIN ALIENS

The Clerk called the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 41) favoring the suspension of deportation in the case of certain aliens.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress favors the suspension of deportation in the case of each alien hereinafter named, in which case the Attorney General has suspended deportation pursuant to the provisions of section 244 (a) (5) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (66 Stat. 214; 8 U. S. C. 1254 (c)):

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The concurrent resolution was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PAUL BERNSTEIN

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 1488) for the relief of Paul Bernstein.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Paul Bernstein, of Brooklyn, N. Y., the sum of $797.78. The payment of such sum shall be in full settlement of all claims of the said Paul Bernstein against the United States arising out of services rendered by him to the United States between June 30, 1936, and November 1, 1939, as an employee of the Federal Works Agency, Works Projects Administration, New York City. Such sum is the amount due the said Paul Bernstein for sick leave and annual leave, earned but not taken by him before a retroactive transfer to an agency under a different leave system. Similar payments may now be made under the subsequently enacted provisions of the Act approved December 21, 1944 (U. S. C., 1946 edition, supp. V, title 5, sec. 61d): Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS FOR 1958

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the managers on the part of the House have until midnight tonight to file a conference report on the bill (H. R. 9131) making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1958, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

STADIUM IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. McMILLAN submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 1937) to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation by the Armory Board of the District of Columbia of a stadium in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

DECEDENT ESTATES LAW

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 6508) to modify the Code of Law for the District of Columbia to provide for a uniform succession of real and personal property in case of intestacy, to abolish dower and curtesy, and to grant unto a surviving spouse a statutory share in the other's real estate owned at time of death, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

"(b) The intestate share as provided by section 940 of the act entitled 'An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia,' approved March 3, 1901, shall attach to all real property owned by husband or wife during coverture: Provided, That neither husband nor wife hereafter shall have the right to convey, transfer, or encumber his or her real property free of the surviving spouse's interest in case of intestacy, as provided in this act, without joinder of the other spouse."

Page 6, line 17, strike out "Married" and insert "Subject to the provisions of subsection (b) of section 3 of this act, married."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ST. THOMAS' LITERARY SOCIETY

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 9285) to amend the charter of St. Thomas' Literary Society and ask for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has the gentleman from South Carolina cleared this bill with the ranking Member on this side?

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes, it has been cleared.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first section of the act entitled "An act to incorporate St. Thomas' Literary Society in the District of Columbia," approved June 2, 1856 (11 Stat. 448), is amended by striking out "purposes of charity and education" and inserting in lieu thereof "purposes of religion, charity, and education"; and by striking out "not exceeding in value the sum of $500,000 at any one time,".

Sec. 2. Such act is further amended by striking out section 4 thereof, and redesignating section 5 as section 4.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RESERVISTS' PENSIONS

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 1140) to amend Public Law 314, 78th Congress, to provide that retired reservists may waive receipt of a portion of their retired pay.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I assume the gentleman from Virginia has cleared this matter with the ranking Member on this side?

Mr. HARDY. That is correct. It has been cleared with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ARENDS], the ranking member on the committee, and also the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, will the gentleman give us a brief explanation of this bill?

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, this bill was on the Consent Calendar and it was requested to be passed over by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD] who has withdrawn his objection. The bill simply permits the reservists to waive a portion of their retirement in order to receive the equivalent in compensation when they have been retired for disability. That provision now is available to the regulars in the military, but not to the reservists and equalizes the conditions between the regulars and the reservists.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to provide for payment of pensions and compensation to certain persons who are receiving retired pay," approved May 27, 1944 (38 U. S. C. 26c), is amended to read as follows: "That any person who is receiving retired or retirement pay pursuant to any provision of law relating to the granting of retired or retirement pay to persons in the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Air Force, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service (including the Reserve components thereof), and who would be eligible to receive pension or compensation under the laws administered by the Veterans' Administration if he were not receiving such retired or retirement pay, shall be entitled to receive such pension or compensation upon the filing by such person with the department by which such retired or retirement pay is paid of a waiver of so much of his retired or retirement pay as is equal in amount to such pension or compensation. To prevent duplication of payments, the department with which any such waiver is filed shall notify the Veterans' Administration of the receipt of such waiver, the amount waived, and the effective date of the reduction in retired or retirement pay."

Sec. 2. Section 4 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the discharge of retirement of enlisted men of the Regular Army and the Philippine Scouts in certain cases," approved June 30, 1941 (38 U. S. C. 26b), is repealed.

Sec. 3. This act shall become effective upon the date of its enactment.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert "That section 1005 of Public Law 85–56, approved June 17, 1957 (71 Stat. 123), is amended to read as follows:

"'Sec. 1005. Any person who is receiving retired or retirement pay under any provision of law providing retired or retirement pay to persons in any of the components of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Air Force, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, or Public Health Service, and who would be eligible to receive pension or compensation under the laws administered by the Veterans' Administration if he were not receiving such retired or retirement pay, shall be entitled to receive such pension or compensation upon the filing by such person with the department by which such retired or retirement pay is paid of a waiver of so much of this retired or retirement pay as is equal in amount to such pension or compensation. To prevent duplication of payments, the department with which any such waiver is filed shall notify the Veterans' Administration of the receipt of such waiver, the amount waived, and the effective date of the reduction in retired or retirement pay.'

"Sec. 2. This act shall take effect on January 1, 1958, or the first day of the month following enactment, whichever is later."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend Public Law 85-56 to permit persons receiving retired pay for nonregular service to waive receipt of a portion of that pay to receive pensions or compensation under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

POSTAL ALLOWANCES FOR MEMBERS OF CONGRESS

Mr. FRIEDEL. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on House Administration, I call up a privileged resolution (H. Res. 399) to increase the postage allowances of Members of the House of Representatives, and for other purposes, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That (a), in addition to amounts otherwise authorized by law, the Clerk of the House of Representatives is authorized and directed to procure and furnish—

(1) to each Representative and Delegate and the Resident Commissioner of Puerto Rico, upon request by such person, United States airmail and special delivery postage stamps in an amount not exceeding $100, for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1957, and each succeeding fiscal year, for the mailing of postal matters arising in connection with his official business; and

(2) to each standing committee of the House of Representatives, upon request of the chairman thereof United States airmail and special delivery postage stamps in an amount not exceeding $100, for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1957, and each succeeding fiscal year, for official business of each such committee.

(b) The Clerk of the House of Representatives is authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, until otherwise provided by law, such sums as may be necessary to carry out this resolution.

Mr. LeCOMPTE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRIEDEL. I yield.

Mr. LeCOMPTE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain the resolution.

Mr. FRIEDEL. At the present time the Members of Congress receive an allotment for the purchase of stamps. Special delivery stamps have gone up from 20 cents to 30 cents and this allowance is increased in proportion.

Mr. LeCOMPTE. Does it also provide for an increase in airmail stamps?

Mr. FRIEDEL. This increases your overall stamp allowance from $200 to $300. The subject came up because of the increase in special delivery stamps by the Postmaster General.

Mr. WILSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this an authorizing resolution or is it a resolution which provides that these funds come out of the contingent fund of the House or what is it?

Mr. FRIEDEL. It provides that the money comes out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. WILSON of Indiana. What is the necessity or need for this at this time, other than the fact that it has been increased? We are in the process of adjourning almost. In my opinion, most Members will be returning to their districts, so what necessitates that increase in postage at this time?

Mr. FRIEDEL. Well, there have been quite a few requests from Members. This is in line with the increase in the cost of special delivery stamps.

Mr. WILSON of Indiana. Does the gentleman think at all in terms of bringing in a resolution increasing the secretarial allowance?

Mr. FRIEDEL. No, I have not.

Mr. WILSON of Indiana. Why have you not brought in such a bill?

Mr. FRIEDEL. Because we do not have many requests from Members for such an increase.

Mr. WILSON of Indiana. How do you get a bill for this?

Mr. FRIEDEL. Because of requests from many Members.

Mr. WILSON of Indiana. But you have not had a request from Members for an increase in secretarial allowance?

Mr. FRIEDEL. Only a few. I have a list of Members who have paid out of their own pockets for telephone and telegraph and stationery allowances every month. Many Members have to pay these expenses out of their own pockets in order to answer their constituents' mail. The resolution was passed by our committee by unanimous vote.

Mr. WILSON of Indiana. I understand that. But further reserving the right to object, it has been customary in the past when we have an extended session which necessitates additional office work and office equipment and materials to keep the office going, to have an additional fund allocated for stationery and also for secretarial allowance. We have gone beyond the normal adjournment date by about 2 months. Many of us have used up our allowance, and some of us have to go on our own. I just wondered why that has not been given some consideration by the committee.

Mr. FRIEDEL. I agree with the gentleman. That will be one of the bills considered the first of January next year.

Mr. WILSON of Indiana. The first of January you will be asking for an appropriation for next year, but that will not answer the purpose now.

Mr. FRIEDEL. It is too late to have another committee meeting on that now before adjournment.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRIEDEL. I yield.

Mr. BURLESON. If I may say to the gentleman from Indiana, who is a member of the Appropriations Committee, that committee in the past, when they thought the circumstances justified it, did appropriate to Members of the House additional stationery allowances. If the Appropriations Committee, of which the gentleman is a member, should see fit to do that in these closing days, there will be many of us who would be willing to accept it.

Mr. WILSON of Indiana. There have been appropriations made directly by the Appropriations Committee, and there have been resolutions authorizing transfer from the contingent fund of the House to that fund.

I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. Boggs]. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ADDITIONAL OFFICE SPACE IN HOME DISTRICTS OF CONGRESSMEN, DELEGATES, AND RESIDENT COMMISSIONERS

Mr. FRIEDEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 9282) to provide additional office space in home districts of Congressmen, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Friedel]?

Mr. GROSS. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I think we ought to have an explanation of this bill.

Mr. LeCOMPTE. The gentleman will explain the bill?

Mr. FRIEDEL. I will explain it.

Under the law today, Members who do not have office space available in a Federal Building in their home district, and are forced to rent private office space, are allowed $75 a month for this purpose. This bill provides for an increase from $75 a month to $100 a month for private office space. In many areas it is difficult to find office space for $75 a month.

Mr. FRIEDEL. This is in conformity with the Senate practice.

Mr. LeCOMPTE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRIEDEL. I yield.

Mr. LeCOMPTE. Does not the bill also provide that Members may have an office in two different cities, the total rent not to exceed $100 a month?

Mr. FRIEDEL. Yes. It provides that they may have two offices in their district, but they cannot spend more than $100 a month rent overall for both offices.

Mr. LeCOMPTE. This, of course, is on a year-round basis.

Mr. FRIEDEL. This is on a year-round basis. This rent is not paid by the Members. The landlord is paid by the Clerk of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the 18th paragraph under the subheading "Contingent Expenses of the House" under the heading "House of Representatives" in the Legislative Appropriation Act, 1955 (2 U. S. C. 122; 68 Stat. 396), is amended to read as follows:

"Each Member shall be entitled to office space suitable for his use in the district he represents, at not more than two places designated by him in such district. The Sergeant at Arms shall secure office space satisfactory to the Member in the post offices or other Federal buildings if such space is available. Office space to which a Member is entitled under this paragraph which is not secured by the Sergeant at Arms, may be secured by the Member, and the Clerk shall approve for payment from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives vouchers covering bona fide statements of amounts due for such office space not exceeding $1,200 per annum. As used in this paragraph the term 'Member' means each Member of the House of Representatives, the Delegate from Alaska, the Delegate from Hawaii, and the Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico; the term 'district' means each Congressional district, Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and, in the case of a Representative at Large, a State; and the term 'Clerk' means the Clerk of the House of Representatives."

Sec. 2. The amendment made by the first section of this act shall take effect as of August 1, 1957.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CHANGE OF TITLE OF CERTAIN POSITIONS

Mr. FRIEDEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Resolution 405, authorizing the titles of the "Chief Janitor" and "Assistant Chief Janitor (Minority)," office of the Doorkeeper, be changed to "Custodian" and "Assistant Custodian (Minority)," respectively.

The Clerk read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That, effective September 1, 1957, until otherwise provided by law, the title of the positions "Chief Janitor," and "Assistant Chief Janitor (Minority)," office of the Doorkeeper, be changed to "Custodian" and "Assistant Custodian (Minority)," respectively.

Mr. LeCOMPTE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the resolution?

Mr. FRIEDEL. This is a very simple resolution. There is no money involved. It just changes the title from Chief Janitor to Custodian and from Assistant Chief Janitor to Assistant Custodian.

Mr. MARTIN. Is it recommended by the leadership?

Mr. FRIEDEL. I cleared this with both sides of the aisle.

Mr. MARTIN. Will this change the duties of the individuals at all?

Mr. FRIEDEL. They have a lot of work other than that of being janitor and we thought it fitting that they have more appropriate titles.

Mr. MARTIN. It is probably paving the way for a salary increase, is it not?

Mr. FRIEDEL. No, no salary increase.

Mr. MARTIN. Not this year, but next.

Mr. FRIEDEL. I do not know.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BIENNIAL BASIS FOR COMPUTING CERTAIN ALLOWANCES FOR MEMBERS

Mr. FRIEDEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill H. R. 9406 to amend the act of June 23, 1949, as amended, to provide that telephone and telegraph service furnished Members of the House of Representatives shall be computed on a biennial rather than an annual basis.

Mr. LECOMPTE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the bill?

Mr. FRIEDEL. Mr. Speaker, in explaining this bill may I say that it provides that instead of the Member receiving his telephone and telegraph allotment on a yearly basis, he will receive it for the entire term. If the Member overdraws in the first session it will go over to the second; and if there is a surplus in the first sesson it may be used in the second. It does not increase the amount in any way.

Mr. LECOMPTE. There have been a good many requests for this legislation.

Mr. FRIEDEL. Yes; and quite a number of Members have overdrawn already.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, section 2 of the act entited "An act relating to telephone and telegraph service and clerk hire for Members of the House of Representatives," approved June 23, 1949, as amended (2 U. S. C. 46g), is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. In the case of any Member of the House of Representatives other than the Speaker, the majority leader, the minority leader, the majority whip, and the minority whip, there shall be paid under the first section of this act—

"(1) toll charges on strictly official long-distance telephone calls made by or on behalf of the Member, aggregating not more than 6,000 minutes during a term, except that if a Member is elected for a portion of a term, the aggregate number of minutes with respect to which toll charges may be paid under the first section for such portion of a term shall be reduced to a number which is the same percentage of 6,000 as the number of days of his service in such portion of a term is of the total number of days in a term; and

"(2) charges on strictly official telegrams, cablegrams, and radiograms sent by or on behalf of the Member aggregating during a term not more than 40,000 words of which not more than 4,000 may be in telegrams, cablegrams, and radiograms sent to or from a point outside the United States, or its Territories or possessions, except that if a Member is elected for a portion of a term the aggregate number of words with respect to which charges may be paid under the first section for such portion of a term shall be reduced to a number which is the same percentage of 40,000 as the number of days of his service in such portion of a term is of the total number of days in a term.

For the purposes of this section, the word 'term' means the period beginning at noon on January 3 of an odd-numbered calendar year and ending at noon on January 3 of the next succeeding odd-numbered calendar years."

SEC. 2. The amendment made by the first section of this act shall take effect as of noon, January 3, 1957.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INVESTIGATIONS BY COMMITTEE ON VETERANS' AFFAIRS

Mr. FRIEDEL. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on House Administration I call up the resolution, House Resolution 279, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the further expenses of the investigation and study authorized by House Resolution 64 of the 85th Congress incurred by the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, acting as a whole or by subcommittee, and the expenses of the investigation and study to be conducted pursuant to House Resolution 65 of the 85th Congress incurred by the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, acting as a whole or by subcommittee, not to exceed $25,000, for the purposes of both investigations, additional to that authorized by House Resolution 143 of the 85th Congress, including expenditures for the employment of experts, and clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers authorized by such committee, signed by the chairman thereof and approved by the Committee on House Administration.

SEC. 2. The official stenographers to committees may be used at all hearings held in the District of Columbia unless otherwise officially engaged.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, would the gentleman explain just what is expected to be accomplished through this $25,000 expenditure?

Mr. FRIEDEL. This authorizes the Committee on Veterans' Affairs to conduct an investigation of appeals for charitable contributions made in the name of veterans. Our subcommittee received testimony that a lot of promoters used the names of veterans' groups for their own benefit, while the veterans' organizations received little or nothing. In one instance the promoters raised $1 million but all the veterans received was $100,000. The Veterans' Affairs Committee intends to go into the State laws and see if the State laws can be amended to correct the situation. The Committee will review State laws and they will review Federal laws. There is a lot of detailed work involved. That is one of the abuses we ought to correct.

Mr. MARTIN. That may well be, but would not the gentleman think that the Veterans of Foreign Wars and other veterans' organizations would be aware of this abuse? They are not exactly powerless and they might bring pressure upon the legislatures to have the situation corrected.

Mr. FRIEDEL. These major organizations are the ones who are supporting this legislation. They are powerless because they cannot revoke the charters of the small local chapters.

Mr. MARTIN. Who granted them the charter?

Mr. FRIEDEL. The Federal Government. The veterans' organizations are chartered by the United States Government.

Mr. MARTIN. Yes; but the gentleman is not accusing them.

Mr. FRIEDEL. They have these local chapters.

Mr. MARTIN. The gentleman is not accusing them, is he?

Mr. FRIEDEL. No, but they do not have supervision of a lot of the local chapters who, in turn, are misled by these promoters. If we can get proper legislation through this investigation, it will save the taxpayers of our country millions and millions of dollars.

Mr. MARTIN. If there is anything that is going to save the taxpayers some money I do not know but what I could agree with the gentleman, but I am not convinced that you will save very much money here.

Mr. FRIEDEL. We have a very able chairman of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs. If he does not spend all of this money it will go back to the Treasury. He will not waste it. He has been conservative.

Mr. MARTIN. I am not criticizing him. This is the Veterans' Affairs Committee?

Mr. FRIEDEL. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN. I am not criticizing the committee at all, but it does look to me as if $25,000 is a lot of money. The way to find out information is to send a few letters around to the Legion posts and they will tell you quickly enough what the trouble is.

Mr. FRIEDEL. The committee will have to study the State laws and Federal laws. These local chapters get their charters from the national group.

Mr. MARTIN. How many people will be on the payroll?

Mr. FRIEDEL. This provides a salary for one full-time counsel, travel for the committee, reporters' services, and miscellaneous expenses, total $25,000.

Mr. MARTIN. I am not going to object.

Mr. WIER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRIEDEL. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. WIER. Is it not true that 2 years ago the Congress had a committee set up that called in all of the veterans' organizations and they put their finger on these units or other organizations that were receiving funds on the basis it affected veterans? I think there is a tremendous volume of information on it.

Mr. FRIEDEL. The information we received is that the veterans' organizations are in favor of this legislation.

Mr. WIER. I know, but it has been done once.

Mr. FRIEDEL. Not that I know of.

Mr. WIER. I am pointing it out to the gentleman.

Mr. LeCOMPTE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRIEDEL. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. LeCOMPTE. Of course, I was not a member of the gentleman's subcommittee, but I understood that members of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs came before the gentleman's committee for hearing and justified this resolution?

Mr. FRIEDEL. Yes, they came and justified it and it was passed unanimously by our subcommittee.

Mr. LeCOMPTE. By vote of Members on both sides of the aisle?

Mr. FRIEDEL. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to and a motion to reconsider was laid on table.

COMMITTEE ON HOUSE ADMINISTRATION

Mr. ASHMORE. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on House Administration I call up for immediate consideration House Resolution 406.

The Clerk read the House resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on House Administration, or any subcommittee thereof, may make investigations and studies into matters within its jurisdiction including the following:

(1) The operation and enforcement of the Act to Prevent Pernicious Political Activities, approved August 2, 1939 (53 Stat. 1147), as amended, to determine what changes therein are necessary in order to grant the greatest possible freedom of political activity to the greatest possible number of persons whose political activities are now restricted under that act and amendments thereto, consistent with the preservation of governmental efficiency and impartiality.

(2) The operation and enforcement of any act of Congress, rule, regulation, order, understanding or precedent now obtaining in the legislative, executive, or judicial branches of the Government of the United States restricting the rights of officers or employees of the United States or of any State or local subdivision thereof to take an active part in the political life of the Nation.

(3) The operation and effect of any act of Congress, including the Federal Corrupt Practices Act (43 Stat. 1070), as amended, restricting the right of any Senator, or Representative in, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to or candidate for Congress, or individual elected as Senator, Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner, to take an active part in the political life of the Nation.

For the purposes of such investigations and studies the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places within or outside the United States, whether the House has recessed or has adjourned, may hold such hearings, and may require, by subpena or otherwise, the attendance and testimony of such witnesses and the production of such books, records, correspondence, memorandums, papers, and documents, as it deems necessary. Subpenas may be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee or any member of the committee designated by him, and may be served by any person designated by such chairman or member.

The committee may report to the House at any time during the present Congress the results of any investigation or study made under authority of this resolution, together with such recommendations at it deems appropriate. Any such report shall be filed with the Clerk of the House if the House is not in session.

SEC. 2. The expenses incurred in carrying out the purposes of this resolution, not to exceed $50,000, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives upon vouchers authorized and approved by the Committee on House Administration, and signed by the chairman of such committee.

Mr. LeCOMPTE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from South Carolina kindly explain this resolution?

Mr. ASHMORE. Mr. Speaker, this resolution calls for an investigation of what is commonly known as the Hatch Act and other acts, statutes and Executive orders that are related to matters covered by the Hatch Act. There has been a great deal of confusion and there is still much confusion in the enforcement of the so-called Hatch Act. Various administrative officers of the Government do not agree on what the act means and do not agree on its enforcement.

The enforcement officer for the Civil Service Commission has recommended that some amendments be made. Various Members of the Congress have introduced bills requesting that a study be made and amendments made to the law. Particularly the Members of Congress who are in the Washington area introduced bills and testified—several of them did—before our committee when we had two hearings on these bills. The further we go into the matter the more complex we find it and the greater need we find for a thorough investigation and some relief by means of amendments to the law. We believe that it cannot be done in the proper manner unless a thorough investigation and study is made. That is the reason why we are asking for this investigation at this time. It is thought best that we begin this work during the recess of Congress to have more time to put on it. That is the reason it is being requested now.

Mr. LeCOMPTE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASHMORE. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. LeCOMPTE. Is it contemplated that the gentleman's commitee might to some extent take over part of the functions of the Special Elections Subcommittee which we usually have each year about the time the campaign opens?

Mr. ASHMORE. I do not know that that has been considered by the committee, but the investigation, I presume, will be made by the Elections Committee and we will, of course, study all matters pertaining to all questions of enforcement of the Hatch Act.

Mr. LeCOMPTE. The gentleman from Texas recalls that we undertook to do something about that on one occasion. Is that not right?

Mr. BURLESON. That would be the inference, that the Subcommittee on Elections of the Committee on House Administration would conduct this inquiry.

If the gentleman will yield further, I am not definite myself, but as far as I know there has never been an investigation into the entire so-called Hatch Act.

Mr. ASHMORE. There has not.

Mr. BURLESON. There has developed over the years the question of the applicability of the law. Now any Federal employee receiving any portion of his salary from the Federal Government is subject to the law. As we are all aware, the number of Federal employees has increased tremendously. I think it is denying the right of many people who are paid in part—I use the word "part" for lack of a better one—by Federal funds to take part in many matters locally which are not strictly political as we ordinarily think of them.

As many Members will recall, last year the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BEAMER] introduced a bill which would exempt State employees from the Hatch Act, so-called, that is, those who receive a small part of their pay from the Federal Government but who are actually State employees. That passed this body and went over to the other body, where it did not pass. As a result that provision is still in force. I just mention that as an example of the fact that many Members have asked the committee to look into this matter to reappraise its applicability. I think that would sum up the purpose of it, as I understand it.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASHMORE. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARTIN. May I ask the chairman of the committee if there was not a similar investigation over in the Senate, and they have proposed legislation? It seems to me I read of that in the newspapers.

Mr. BURLESON. I think the Rules Committee of the Senate looked into various facets of the Hatch Act, but, as far as I know, there has never been a complete or whole investigation of the applicability of the law.

Mr. MARTIN. I do not know how completely the other body looked up the legislation, but another question I also should like to inquire about: The gentleman made the statement that this would probably take the place of the regular Elections Committee. Has this been taken up with the Democratic leadership of the House?

Mr. BURLESON. I think the minority leader perhaps misunderstood that. It does not take the place of the so-called Elections Committee which is appointed in an election year, but the work, if the House approves the bill, will be conducted by the standing Subcommittee on Elections of the Committee on House Administration.

Mr. MARTIN. I have no objection to the membership of the committee, but I do not think anybody in the House on the gentleman's side or my side would want two committees trying to supervise an election.

Mr. BURLESON. I believe the minority leader still may misunderstand me. That is just the point. We are not creating a new committee. This is not a select committee. We propose that the regular Subcommittee on Elections, the same members of the Committee on House Administration, serving on the Subcommittee on Elections, would conduct the investigation. There are bills pending, I think from both sides of the aisle, which suggest that a committee be appointed to look into this matter. The committee considered those bills. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LANKFORD] and I think the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BROYHILL] and others suggested that this special commission be set up to look into this matter. Personally, I am a little allergic to commissions. The committee felt likewise, that if there is a need for this work the Subcommittee on Elections of the Committee on House Administration was able and willing, and if given the authority and the money, we could do an adequate job of it.

Mr. ASHMORE. I would like to say to the minority leader that there will be no confusion or misunderstanding between the work of the regularly established Subcommittee on Elections and this committee. The Subcommittee on Elections considers only contested election cases. This resolution does not go into that.

Mr. MARTIN. The special committee has to do with campaigns. It supervises elections. We do not want to have two campaign committees directing us as to how our campaigns are to be conducted. They might be in conflict.

Mr. ASHMORE. That will not happen because the regular Committee on Elections does not go into those matters unless there is a contested election which is brought to our attention.

Mr. ROOSEVELT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASHMORE. I yield.

Mr. ROOSEVELT. Could the gentleman tell us whether it is the plan of the committee to hold hearings or just to conduct a staff investigation?

Mr. ASHMORE. It is the plan of the committee to hold hearings.

Mr. ROOSEVELT. That is on specific bills, for instance, the bill introduced by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LANKFORD] and others as well.

Mr. ASHMORE. That is correct, and to go into the matter thoroughly. That is the reason we asked for the money so that we will be able to go to these places where we have been requested to go.

Mr. ROOSEVELT. Will the Members of Congress be given the opportunity to come back after the recess because, obviously, it will be rather difficult for some Members to come before the committee during the interim period?

Mr. ASHMORE. Yes; they will, either during the recess or after.

Mr. LeCOMPTE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASHMORE. I yield.

Mr. LeCOMPTE. I wish to ask the gentleman from South Carolina, Why do we need the provision in the resolution for holding hearings within or outside of the United States? It seems to me that election matters would be held in the United States.

Mr. ASHMORE. I think the reason for that language, I will say to the gentleman, is that there may be a need to go to Panama or Alaska or someplace like that. It makes no particular difference to the committee whether it is included or not, but that is generally the language used.

Mr. LeCOMPTE. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASHMORE. I yield.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, whatever the House desires to do with this resolution is, of course, their business, but I want to disabuse the minds of the gentleman from South Carolina, the gentleman from Texas and the other Members of any impression that the special committee that is appointed for 2 years does not go into such matters as this. I have served on this committee for several Congresses, and always the resolution setting up the special committee is very broad in its language and authorizes them to go into general matters relating to elections and would be broad enough, in my judgment, to encompass the suggestion here. We have on many occasions filed reports where general investigations have taken place. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS] was the chairman last year and the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BOGGS] has also served as chairman. We went into a great many things other than specific Members' seats. I think, perhaps, the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from South Carolina were not aware of that.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield. Yes, I am aware of that. It is just a matter of misunderstanding of the nature of the subcommittee which proposes to do this work. I think the gentleman will agree that the principal mission of the special elections committee is to determine what violations have occurred during an election. In other words, violations of the Hatch Act as they might have affected the results of an election. But, aside from that, the gentleman, I am sure, is aware that the report made by the special elections committee ends up with the Committee on House Administration.

Mr. KEATING. Oh, yes, that is true.

Mr. BURLESON. I think we understand each other.

Mr. SCOTT of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASHMORE. I yield.

Mr. SCOTT of Pennsylvania. Is there anything in this resolution which covers the rest of the field the gentleman has been referring to? We mentioned the Hatch Act. Does this authorize investigation into the Corrupt Practices Act as well?

Mr. ASHMORE. It does.

Mr. SCOTT of Pennsylvania. May I inquire how the committee has jurisdiction, rather than the Committee on the Judiciary, of investigations of the Hatch Act and the Corrupt Practices Act?

Mr. ASHMORE. By virtue of the Reorganization Act, I am informed. We looked into that.

Mr. SCOTT of Pennsylvania. It is my understanding that when resolutions include the right of travel abroad, some reason is given. I know when they appear before the Committee on Rules it is customary to cite some reason for that. I am wondering whether the gentleman is authorized to go beyond the United States, Territories, and possessions. Why should you have to investigate elections in Japan, Panama, or Peru?

Mr. ASHMORE. We have no intention of going beyond the territory of the United States, but there was some confusion as to whether or not the language "within the United States" covers Territories and possessions.

Mr. SCOTT of Pennsylvania. I thought it might be well to bring that out. The committee has no such intention?

Mr. ASHMORE. That is true.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASHMORE. I yield.

Mr. GROSS. If the committee is going abroad, I wish it would look into the new currency that is floating around and subject to redemption with our dollars. I came into possession of some of it today.

Mr. ASHMORE. That is not Confederate money, is it?

Mr. GROSS. It might turn out to be. It is UNESCO money. You have heard the expression: "as phoney as a 3-dollar bill." I have one of them here. This is a UNESCO 3-dollar bill. This particular one is in payment for—if the gentleman's committee is going abroad, I would like to have it——

Mr. ASHMORE. We have no intention of going abroad, but I am glad to know about it.

Mr. GROSS. This $3 bill is supposed to be in payment for books for a Japanese. I have here a publication put out by UNESCO which lists the products foreigners can buy with this paper money. Here are some of the items: Optical equipment, books, periodicals, electrical measuring instruments, blowers, vacuum pumps and gages, radio parts, small workshop tools, film, and other photographic equipment. A foreigner sends his order and UNESCO money to the supplier in this country and the supplier ships the merchandise. Then the supplier apparently takes this UNESCO money to a bank in the United States and gets his dollars. The bank, in turn, apparently sends the UNESCO note over to Paris, to international headquarters of UNESCO and is reimbursed through one, Luther B. Evans, who is known as Directeur General of UNESCO. I just thought if the committee was going abroad it might want to look into this funny money that is in circulation.

Mr. ASHMORE. It will not be necessary, because the committee is not going abroad.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASHMORE. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Does not the gentleman feel it very important to caution the House in these investigations not to have too many? As ranking member of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, I did not know of the hearings before the gentleman's committee on the investigation to be conducted by them. I voted for the investigation, but I did it with the feeling that we must be very careful not to hurt any veterans' organizations or any committee of the House.

I believe the gentleman will agree with me as to the importance of these investigations. They can be used as punitive measures and cause great harm and great unhappiness unjustifiably to the Members of Congress and also Federal employees.

Mr. ASHMORE. I am glad to have the gentlewoman's contribution; however, that is a matter over which this committee does not have jurisdiction. I believe the gentlewoman has reference to another resolution.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I hope committees conducting other investigations will bear this in mind too.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NATIONAL HISTORICAL PUBLICATIONS COMMISSION

Mr. JONES of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on House Administration I call up the resolution (S. Con. Res. 31) favoring the fulfillment of the program recommended by the National Historical Publications Commission for the publication of certain documents, and ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. LECOMPTE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is a Senate resolution and it is merely for the use of the Senate. There is no provision in this resolution for any material for the House, is there?

Mr. JONES of Missouri. This resolution apparently is not going to cost the Government any money. It says that the Congress of the United States respectfully urges the governors and legislatures of the several States and the State historical commissions and achival agencies as well as appropriate libraries, historical societies, colleges, and universities, business corporations, foundations, civic and other nonprofit organizations, and individuals to cooperate with the National Historical Publications Commission in the fulfillment of the said program. It just urges them to support it. I think it is a harmless bill.

Mr. LECOMPTE. Without expense to the Federal Government.

Mr. JONES of Missouri. Without any expense to the Federal Government.

Mr. LECOMPTE. I thank the gentleman and withdraw my reservation of objection.

The clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Whereas the National Historical Publications Commission is charged by the Congress with responsibility for cooperating with and encouraging "Federal, State, and local agencies and nongovernmental institutions, societies, and individuals" in collecting, preserving, and publishing documents that are important for understanding the history of the United States; and

Whereas the said Commission in the discharge of these responsibilities has recommended a national program to encourage the publication of the basic source materials of American history through the cooperative efforts of both public and private organizations; and

Whereas the President of the United States has approved the national program for the publication of historical documents, as set forth in the Commission's published report to him (and summarized in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 101, pt. 7, p. 9310, for July 22, 1955); and

Whereas it is important that the people of the United States understand the history of their country and of its relationship to the rest of the world; and

Whereas the publication of such source materials as letters, diaries, journals, sermons, speeches, reports, and other documents—the firsthand evidence of the initiative, courage, and spiritual qualities of the men and women who have helped to shape our country's destiny—would contribute to a better understanding of the history of the United States in all of its manifold aspects, and would thereby strengthen the defense of our country against its enemies: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress of the United States that the fulfillment of the program recommended by the National Historical Publications Commission in its report entitled "A National Program for the Publication of Historical Documents" would be of lasting benefit to the Government and citizens of the United States; and be it further

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States respectfully urges the governors and legislatures of the several States and the State historical commissions and archival agencies, as well as appropriate libraries, historical societies, colleges and universities, business corporations, foundations, civic and other nonprofit organizations, and individuals to cooperate with the National Historical Publications Commission in the fulfillment of the said program.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BOOKS FOR THE ADULT BLIND

Mr. JONES of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2434) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide books for the adult blind."

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. LECOMPTE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the bill?

Mr. JONES of Missouri. I shall be pleased to.

This is a bill pased by the other body which removes the limitation on the authorization of appropriations for books and records for the blind. In other words, as the law now stands the Committee on Appropriations each year determines the request which is limited by an authorization. With the passage of this bill there will be no limitation. At the present time I understand the limitation is $125,000 a year.

Mr. LECOMPTE. I thank the gentleman and withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. That section 1 of the act entitled "An act to provide books for the adult blind", approved March 3, 1931, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"That there is authorized to be appropriated annually to the Library of Congress, in addition to appropriations otherwise made to said Library, such sums for expenditure under the direction of the Librarian of Congress as may be necessary to provide books published either in raised characters, on sound-reproduction recordings, or in any other form, and for the purchase, maintenance, and replacement of reproducers for such sound-reproduction recordings, for the use of the blind residents of the United States, including the several States, Territories, insular possessions, and the District of Columbia, all of which books, recordings, and reproducers will remain the property of the Library of Congress but will be loaned to blind readers under regulations prescribed by the Librarian of Congress for this service. In the purchase of books in either raised characters or in sound-reproduction recordings the Librarian of Congress, without reference to the provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (41 U. S. C. 5), as amended, shall give preference to non-profit-making institutions or agencies whose activities are primarily concerned with the blind, in all cases where the prices or bids submitted by such institutions or agencies are, by said Librarian, under all the circumstances and needs involved, determined to be fair and reasonable."

SEC. 2. This act shall be applicable with respect to the fiscal year ending June 30, 1958, and for each fiscal year thereafter.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

Mr. JONES of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution (H. Res. 392) authorizing the printing of certain proceedings in the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, as a House document.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

Mr. LECOMPTE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the resolution?

Mr. JONES of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, in explanation I may say that this is in conformity with a practice carried on in the House in other committees and relates to proceedings in the House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

I believe there is no objection to the resolution.

Mr. LECOMPTE. I thank the gentleman and withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved*, That the transcript of the proceedings in the Committee on Merchant

Marine and Fisheries of Thursday, May 16, 1957, incident to the presentation of a portrait of Chairman HERBERT C. BONNER to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries be printed as a House document with suitable binding.

The resolution was agreed to and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

Mr. JONES of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Resolution 401 authorizing the printing as a House document of the historical data regarding the creation and jurisdiction of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and providing for additional copies.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

Mr. LECOMPTE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the resolution?

Mr. JONES of Missouri. Certainly.

Mr. Speaker, I might say that this is more or less a document showing the creation and the jurisdiction of this committee. It is a very small printing bill. The estimated cost of printing is $291.

I believe there is no objection to it.

Mr. LECOMPTE. I thank the gentleman and withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

> Resolved, That there be printed as a House document the historical data regarding the creation and jurisdiction of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, House of Representatives; and that 1,500 additional copies be printed for the use of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The resolution was agreed to and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ADDITIONAL COPIES OF HOUSE DOCUMENT NO. 232, 84TH CONGRESS, WITH EMENDATIONS

Mr. JONES of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on House Administration I ask for the immediate consideration of House Concurrent Resolution No. 17.

The Clerk read the House concurrent resolution, as follows:

> Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there shall be printed for the use of the House of Representatives 500,000 additional copies of House Document No. 232, 84th Congress, with emendations.

Mr. LECOMPTE. Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman going to explain this resolution, inasmuch as it involves a sizable amount? It concerns every Member of the House.

Mr. JONES of Missouri. I will be glad to do that. This resolution has to do with the reprint of a House document known as The Capitol. I think most of the Members are familiar with it. There will be certain changes made. This resolution provides for the printing of 500,000 additional copies and I think I should say, Mr. Speaker, that I did not support this resolution in the committee. I am bringing it here at the direction of the committee. It is up to the Members of the House to decide what they want to do.

Mr. LECOMPTE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. LECOMPTE. I think it would be fair to say to the House that the gentleman from Missouri and myself more or less consented that the resolution come before the House but we did not support it in the committee.

Mr. IKARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. IKARD. I would like to say with reference to the document that this is one, I am informed, of few that has ever shown a profit to the Government Printing Office. There have been some $7,400 made. I am informed that as of the 22d of this month there were some 1,500 orders unfilled because they are out of the document. I may say to the House, and I know that everyone here must understand I cannot make a definite statement, that I have been informed and advised by responsible Members of the other body it is their desire, if this resolution is adopted, that the publication they have be not reprinted and that a section of this document would be devoted to the Senate. Of course, certainly, I cannot say definitely that that will happen, but I understand and have been informed, as I say, by responsible people on the other side of the building that that is their intention and their plan. Of course, if that should come to pass it would mean a substantial saving as far as printing is concerned, in that there would be one document rather than the currently two.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARTIN. We have heard a great deal about economy this year. Here is a matter involving over $100,000 that we are going to spend on ourselves to see if we can popularize the Members at home. I think if we are going to have economy—and I have not seen too many signs of it this year, only in 1 or 2 spots—why not start with ourselves. I feel so strongly about this that I was surprised at the gentleman from Texas's statement the Government had made a profit. I would therefore suggest that he withdraw the resolution so that we can look into that statement. If this is going to cost $100,000 as a "give away" to Members of the Congress to popularize themselves, I am going to ask for a rollcall vote. This extravagance should not be undertaken in a year we have been obliged to reject worthier proposals. I have observed with alarm the constant increase of our legislative authority.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Texas, the chairman of our committee.

Mr. BURLESON. I cannot agree with the minority leader that this is a service to ourselves or a particular favor to ourselves. There is a great public demand for this publication.

Mr. MARTIN. Why the $100,000 then?

Mr. BURLESON. I am not too sure that the gentleman from Texas mentioned it, but we do know there are now on file with the Government Printing Office requests for more than 1,500 copies. Those are requests. We do not know how many books may be included in any one request. We know there are more than 1,500.

Mr. MARTIN. Does the gentleman not think we should have that information before we vote on it?

Mr. BURLESON. We have it, as near as we can get it. We did not ask the people in the Printing Office to go through and count the number which may be included in each order, but they tell us it is over 1,500.

Mr. IKARD. I may say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that on the 22d of this month I talked to the Government Printing Office and received the following information:

By way of explanation, I hope I have made myself clear that I was not implying that the copies that went to Members did not cost anything. They certainly did. But I was saying that the copies that went to the Government Printing Office and were sold, were sold at a profit. I was informed on the 22d day of this month that the profit was $7,380. I was also informed at the same time by the Office of the Superintendent of Documents that they had received approximately 1,500 requests from individuals for copies of this publication. These were now on file. They were cash customers and represented orders that were unfilled.

Mr. MARTIN. Does the gentleman think he could stay in business by getting $7,000 of cash sales and giving $100,000 of these publications away to Members of Congress?

Mr. IKARD. Mr. Speaker, this publication has made a profit on those that were sold. We frequently print documents here for our own use. As has been pointed out by the chairman of the Committee on House Administration [Mr. BURLESON] this is an effort on the part of this body to impress upon the people who get these publications something of the responsibility, of the function and purpose of representative Government. We have been very careful in our efforts not to build up any one Member or to put out a document that promotes any individual. We have tried as best we could to present objectively to the public the purpose, the function and the responsibility of the membership of the House of Representatives.

Mr. MARTIN. I cannot agree with the gentleman. I think it is a violation of our economy drive and I am certainly going to ask for a rollcall on the resolution.

Mr. JONES of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I might say for the benefit of the distinguished minority leader that this committee has brought about some economies in printing. While I was not in support of this particular resolution in the committee, I do know that each copy that has been printed has been distributed and there are no more copies available. We do print each year millions of copies of documents, reports, and so forth, that are not ever sent out and which clutter up our storerooms. This committee has carried over several resolutions which were before it, which we did not present to the House. I should like to say that in defense of the committee. We have some others here today that I think will result in cluttering up our storerooms, but I do not think this one will ever lodge in our storerooms. It will be distributed.

Mr. MARTIN. Will the gentleman kindly explain why he voted against the resolution in the committee? He has always been a sound member of the committee and stood for economy.

Mr. JONES of Missouri. I have voted against many resolutions. I have been in the minority many times, voting for economy. I would forego this one as a matter of economy. However, I have been outvoted many times. I have presented other resolutions here that I think we could have done without and I did not support them in the committee; and I will say that I was successful in preventing others from coming out of the committee which saved more money than the one before us would cost.

Mr. HOSMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HOSMER. Is the document in question the Life magazine type picture book of the Capitol?

Mr. JONES of Missouri. This is it.

Mr. HOSMER. Of which Members of the House and of the other body received some 550 copies last year for free distribution?

Mr. JONES of Missouri. That is the one.

Mr. HOSMER. Does this resolution propose to give the Members another supply of that document for the same purpose?

Mr. JONES of Missouri. It does.

Mr. HOSMER. It seems to me if there is anything to the argument that this is a means of informing and enthusing the people of the country about Congress as an institution we either have to print enough for everybody in the country or not print any at all, because if you limit them to some 550 per Member it is obviously then nothing more than a public relations gimmick for the Members themselves. I do not think that as responsible elected officials we have any right to devote $100,000 of the taxpayers' money to improving our relations with constituents.

Mr. JONES of Missouri. As to the cost of printing, the figure of $100,000 has been used. The estimated cost is between $90,000 and $95,000.

Mr. CORBETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CORBETT. I want to associate myself with the remarks of the gentleman as regards the fact that I believe the Subcommittee on Printing has probably turned down more requests for printing in the past year than it has in the previous 7 or 8 years. The resolutions that have been brought up here today are in most cases the survivors of a pretty thorough scrutiny. I commend the gentleman on his efforts in that regard.

With regard to this particular publication, certainly there can be some objections to it. On the other hand, I believe it is increasingly true that practically every library in the United States has or is about to receive copies of this. There are lots of publications, I may say to the gentleman who has just spoken, and we do not have to put one in every home in America. However, as folks come here in increasing tens of thousands to visit this Capitol, to have some publication of this kind available as an item augmenting their pleasure and information, I think is a good thing. Perhaps we have too elaborate a publication there for that purpose, but certainly I think it makes a fine memento for our visitors here to take back home. I tend to regard it, and I am not objecting to anybody else's remarks, as something we give to the people, not to the Members of Congress.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. I am a member of the Committee on Printing. I think that, if any of the members had been present at the last meeting, they would realize that we really do not just pass every bill because it is requested. We cut off a lot more than we approve. I believe this one document "The Capitol" we are discussing comes more nearly meeting the approval of everybody that knows about it. More people are asking for them. Although they are given to the Members of Congress themselves, they are distributed to the voters, the taxpayers, who want to know something about their Capitol and something about their Government. I have helped to cut off many a document that I felt would remain in the storeroom, but this one I know will not. I am sure the people who know about it will approve.

Mr. TEWES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. TEWES. Mr. Speaker, this is the kind of legislation which puts us to the test of deciding between that which is desirable in Government and that which is absolutely necessary. Those of us who for reasons of economy hold sturdily to the latter theory believe that in this resolution the issue is clear-cut.

The publication in question is a handsome picture book printed at Government expense and used by Congressmen as gifts to visiting constituents. The document has merit. Its makeup is attractive, and the information concerning the workings of Government is a valuable reference. My own visitors are invariably pleased with this booklet as a memento of their trip to see their Congressman. I, of course, am not unmindful of the fact that my name is stamped on a prominent place on this addition to my constituent's library.

However, since this is my first opportunity to vote on whether this is a wise use of the taxpayers' money, I feel compelled to say that it is not. While we need to encourage interest in the affairs of Government, it is questionable whether this objective in all truth is not secondary to the book's value in the reelection of the constituents' current Congressman.

If the book is of general worth as a guide to civics, as has been said here on the floor, and if Congressmen are the best means of distribution, I believe we should urge this viewpoint on charitable foundations which make grants for educational purposes.

During the course of this session many of us have voted against programs with laudable motives because we believe the test of absolute "necessity" is better than the test of "desirability." We should apply the same standards to those proposals in which we as individuals are, if not the primary, then the secondary beneficiaries. On such a basis this appropriation for nearly $100,000 cannot be justified, and I hope the resolution will be defeated.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MARTIN) there were—ayes 72, noes 45.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present, and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently no quorum is present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 183, nays 129, not voting 120, as follows:

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PRINTING OF CERTAIN MATERIAL RELATING TO THE CENTRAL VALLEY PROJECT OF CALIFORNIA

Mr. JONES of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on House Administration, I call up House Concurrent Resolution 176 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed as a House document part II of Central Valley project documents comprising project operating documents, and that there be printed for the use of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs 1,200 additional copies, 600 of which shall be bound in cloth and 600 bound in paper.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON SMALL BUSINESS

Mr. JONES of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on House Administration, I call up the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 188) authorizing the printing as a House document of the document entitled "Congress and the Monopoly Problem; Fifty-six Years of Antitrust Development, 1900–1956".

The Clerk read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the document entitled "Congress and the Monopoly Problem: 56 Years of Antitrust Development, 1900–1956," which was prepared by the Legislative Reference Service of the Library of Congress at the instance and under the direction of the chairman of the Select Committee on Small Business, House of Representatives, 84th Congress, shall be printed as a House document.

Sec. 2. In addition to the usual number, there shall be printed for the use of the House of Representatives 4,500 copies of such House document, of which 3,500 copies shall be for the use of the Select Committee on Small Business of the House of Representatives and 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the House Document Room.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 11, strike out "four" and insert "one", and strike out "five hundred."

Page 1, line 12, strike out all of line 12 and the remainder of the concurrent resolution and insert in lieu thereof the following: "which shall be for the use of the Select Committee on Small Business of the House of Representatives."

Mr. LeCOMPTE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. LeCOMPTE. Is it not correct that House Concurrent Resolution 188 is one that the Select Committee on Small Business is seeking?

Mr. JONES of Missouri. Yes; it is a document that has already been printed, as I understand.

Mr. LeCOMPTE. It has been represented to us as a document in the interest of the small business of the United States.

Mr. JONES of Missouri. The document is entitled, "Congress and the Monopoly Problem; 56 Years of Antitrust Development, 1900–1956." It would now be printed as a House document, and the committee amendment would change the concurrent resolution so that all of the copies, 1,000, would be for the use of the Select Committee on Small Business.

Mr. HOSMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HOSMER. Would the gentleman say what the Committee on Small Business told his committee they wanted to use this document for? I had not heard of this until today. I should like to know why the document is being sought, for what purpose the committee seeks it.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PATMAN. This document has been very popular with the libraries, judges, lawyers, and other people who are interested in antitrust legislation, including the different agencies of our Government. I do not recall that the committee asked that we have control of the distribution of them. It is all right, but we have requests now for 1,000 copies. This number was reduced from what the concurrent resolution stated. I am not going to ask that it be increased, but I assure the gentleman that there is a real need, and there are actual requests for these documents now. It was carefully prepared. It is the only document of its kind that is in existence. No private publisher has ever published a document like this. It is right up-to-date, and it serves a good purpose. The fact that they have been designated for distribution by our committee is all right, because we have requests for that number of copies now.

Mr. HOSMER. From what committee does this document originally come?

Mr. PATMAN. It came from the House Committee on Small Business.

Mr. HOSMER. Is there any question with respect to the jurisdiction of this matter as between the Committee on Small Business and a standing committee of the House?

Mr. PATMAN. No one has ever questioned it; in fact, we have been praised for having it prepared. It was prepared under the direction of the Committee on Small Business. We have had not one word of criticism but many words of praise.

Mr. HOSMER. I would hope that in the future the Small Business Committee at large be informed of these requests before they are made to the Committee on House Administration.

Mr. PATMAN. This happens to be a reprint. Since there has never been any objection, it was presumed that there would be no objection to a reprint.

Mr. HOSMER. I understand that, but I think the amount, $3,557.72, would justify a discussion of this matter by the committee.

Mr. PATMAN. That was for the original request, which we think was justified, but the committee cut that down about one-third.

Mr. HOSMER. As I understand, the resolution provides for the sum that I just mentioned. Is that correct?

Mr. LECOMPTE. If the gentleman will yield, that is correct. I think the original estimate was something over $6,000. Is that not right?

Mr. JONES of Missouri. I do not have those figures before me; I could not say.

Mr. LECOMPTE. The committee did cut it more than in half, in total number of copies and approximately half in cost. Is this not correct?

Mr. PATMAN. We did not have an opportunity to present this to the committee because we were engaged in other activities of other committees and we could not be there at the time to present this to the committee. However, it is just a reprint, and the books are well worthwhile. They are highly regarded and very much needed. Whatever the cost is, it is a cost to the Government. I do not know what it is, but it is a cost to the Government.

Mr. HOSMER. I would like to inquire of the gentleman if there has been any consideration in the committee of a procedure whereby documents such as this one and others, which the committee from time to time orders be printed, can be reprinted by the Government Printing Office for the purpose of sale rather than have free distribution through the channels of either the Members or the various standing and select committees of the Congress.

Mr. JONES of Missouri. The gentleman is asking if the Government Printing Office should print these for sale?

Mr. HOSMER. I am asking if the committee has ever considered the adoption of any procedure whereby this could be done and thereby save the recurrent printing costs and enable the people to purchase these documents at least at cost.

Mr. JONES of Missouri. The subcommittee on printing is now considering that. On that basis, we did not report several resolutions which were offered. I might say it has been the opinion of the gentleman from Missouri that many publications which have been printed for free distribution could be sold, and that there would be a ready market from the Government Printing Office. Our committee is working on that. I think by the early part of next session, we will bring in some recommendations to the House along that line.

Mr. HOSMER. I would hope that the committee would do that before too many more of these resolutions appropriating specific sums for this purpose come in again.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. BAILEY. Could the distinguished chairman of the committee explain why the resolution, which I sponsored, to provide for the publication of some additional copies of Job Outlook Opportunities, a publication by the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor, which was reported by your committee unanimously, was not reported out? The number of requests for reprints were, I believe, 6,000, and that was the suggestion of the committee at the time they acted on it.

Mr. JONES of Missouri. That was one of several resolutions which was carried over. It was not turned down by the committee, but it was carried over until the next session until we can look into the practice of having these books sold. There are some of them for sale at the Government Printing Office. The Department of Labor also has some of these books.

Mr. BAILEY. I think the publication is a worthwhile one in this period of juvenile delinquency when the high schools and colleges are trying all over the country to steer the youth of the country into satisfactory jobs. It was at their request that I introduced the resolution, at the request of high school libraries and college libraries who wanted some information that they could use in their instruction courses in this field. I think it is a very worthwhile publication.

Mr. JONES of Missouri. I agree with the gentleman that it is a very worthwhile publication. I also want to remind the gentleman that I am only one member of this committee.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The resolution was agreed to and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RADIOACTIVE FALLOUT

Mr. JONES of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on House Administration, I call up the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 215) authorizing the printing of additional copies of certain public hearings, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the concurrent resolution as follows:

> Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy be authorized to have printed for its use 20,000 copies of the public hearings on "The Nature of Radio-Active Fallout and Its Effects on Man," held by the Special Subcommittee on Radiation during the 85th Congress, 1st session; and be it further
>
> Resolved, That the Joint Committee be authorized to have printed 20,000 copies of a brief analysis of the above hearings.

Mr. JONES of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I would like to yield to the gentleman from North Carolina who introduced this resolution. I do not think there is any controversy about it, however, I want to explain that it is for printing the hearings on the nature of radioactive fallout and its effect on man.

I now yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DURHAM].

Mr. DURHAM. Mr. Speaker, this resolution concerns the hearings held by the Joint Committee on the problem of fallout and radiation hazards. We based our hearings entirely on scientific data presented by the foremost scientists in America. I doubt whether any hearings have ever been held here on Capitol Hill which are better evaluated on a purely scientific basis.

The hearings have created widespread interest not only in this country but in many other countries. Requests have been received from colleges and universities, scientific organizations, and from practically all of the civil defense installations in the country.

I wrote a letter to every Member of the House and of the Senate, asking them to indicate the number of copies of the hearings they would require. Many Members began receiving requests from constituents long before the hearings were completed, and at the present time the requests for copies from the Members of Congress filed with the Joint Committee total more than 12,000 copies.

I believe the document will be of great benefit to our schools and colleges throughout the country. There have been confusing statements and so much misinformation printed about this subject that the committee felt it could render a real service to the country in holding and printing these hearings, and I believe a good job has been done. I hope the House will go along with this resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The House concurrent resolution was agreed to and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PRINTING ADDITIONAL COPIES OF REPORT OF THE COMMISSION ON GOVERNMENT SECURITY

Mr. JONES of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution (S. Con Res. 39) providing for the printing as a Senate document and for additional copies of the report of the Commission on Government Security.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the resolution as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there shall be printed as a Senate document the report of the Commission on Government Security, submitted to the Congress June 21, 1957, pursuant to Public Law 304 of the Eighty-fourth Congress, as amended; and that there shall be printed 5,000 additional copies, of which 2,500 shall be for the use of the Senate and 2,500 for the use of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The Senate concurrent resolution was agreed to and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PHILLIS GUYADEEN

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 1558) for the relief of Phillis Guyadeen, with a Senate amendment, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert "That, in the administration of the Immigration and Nationality Act, sections 202 (a) (5) and 202 (b) (4) of that act shall not be applicable in connection with the application for an immigrant visa by Phillis Guyadeen."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER]?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

IKUKO MOROOKA MAHONEY

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 1741) for the relief of Ikuko Morooka Mahoney, with a Senate amendment and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert "That, for the purposes of the Immigration and Nationality Act, Ikuko Morooka Mahoney, the widow of a United States citizen, shall be deemed to be a nonquota immigrant."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DANIEL ADAMSON

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 1868) for the relief of Daniel Adamson, with a Senate amendment, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert "That, for the purposes of the Immigration and Nationality Act, Daniel Adamson shall be held and considered to have been lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence as of the date of the enactment of this act upon payment of the required visa fee. Upon the granting of permanent residence to such alien as provided for in this act, the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct one number from the appropriate quota for the first year that such quota is available."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman if these amendments have been cleared with the minority side?

Mr. WALTER. These amendments have been cleared. They in no way affect the legislation. They are technical, with the exception of two resolutions where the Senate struck the name from the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER]?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

VICTORIA GALEA

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 4854) for the relief of Victoria Galea, with a Senate amendment, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert "That, in the administration of the Immigration and Nationality Act, section 202 (c) (1) shall not be applicable in connection with the application for an immigrant visa by Victoria Galea."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER]?

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to inquire of the gentleman, both with regard to this bill, and others which I understand he is about to present, if he could give us just a general statement on these amendments which have been adopted by the Senate and in which we are being asked to concur.

Mr. WALTER. For the most part, the amendments are technical. In one case the beneficiary has died, but in two resolutions the Senate struck the names from the resolutions as they left the House.

Mr. KEATING. There are some instances where the names were stricken out of the House bills?

Mr. WALTER. That is correct.

Mr. KEATING. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McCULLOCH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, can the gentleman tell me why the names of the persons who were in the bill when it went to the Senate have now been stricken?

Mr. WALTER. The name deleted from the first, House Joint Resolution 338, there was a preference that became available; in other words, this alien had applied for a quota number; there was none available. Subsequently the preference became available, so the alien could be admitted as a first-preference alien without the need of private legislation.

In the second case the beneficiary is a student of nursing. She has student status and cannot be deported. When she completes her education she will then become a skilled specialist within the meaning of the law and be entitled to a first preference in a quota which is wide open.

Mr. McCULLOCH. If I may interrupt further, I would like to ask a question which might save time. Is the gentleman from Pennsylvania in accord with the action of the Senate in striking these various names which have been mentioned.

Mr. WALTER. Yes, I am quite certain that in each instance they followed the proper course.

Mr. McCULLOCH. And it was in accordance with the unanimous agreement in the Senate committee that these names were stricken, I presume.

Mr. WALTER. I doubt if the language employed in some of the changes improved the language carried in the measure as it passed the House; but their technicians did change the language, and rather than get into a prolonged discussion and conference the members of the subcommittee felt it was easier to concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. McCULLOCH. One further question, and then I shall be through: This action of the Senate was in accord, then, with the unanimous agreement of the subcommittee of the House?

Mr. WALTER. In each case well-known policies were followed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INNOCENZA GUARASCIO

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 8284) for the relief of Innocenza Guarascio, with a Senate amendment thereto and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert "That, in the administration of the Immigration and Nationality Act, Innocenza Guarascio may be issued a nonquota immigrant visa and may be admitted to the United States for permanent residence if she is found to be otherwise admissible under the provisions of that act. Upon the issuance of such nonquota immigrant visa, the Secretary of State shall reduce by one the total number of nonquota visas authorized and not issued under the Refugee Relief Act of 1953, as amended."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN ALIENS

BARCELONA LIGHTHOUSE SITE, PORTLAND, N. Y.

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 1678) to provide for the quitclaiming of the title of the United States to the real property known as the Barcelona Lighthouse site, Portland, N. Y., with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Line 9, after "Administrator.", insert "Such conveyance shall be conditional upon payment being made for such real property in an amount equal to its fair market value (excluding the value of any improvements) as determined by the Administrator after appraisal."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the Record.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, it is a source of great satisfaction to have H. R. 1678 pass the House of Representatives and the Senate of the United States, because this legislation will clear the title to six-tenths of an acre of land upon which stands a lighthouse that was abandoned by the Government in 1859. This abandoned and deserted lighthouse was sold in 1872 and later restored as a dwelling. It has been in the hands of a very prominent family, the Crandalls, for many years. Mr. G. Patterson Crandall and Mrs. Nellie B. Crandall, his wife, had every right to assume that they had full title not only to the lighthouse, which was purchased from the Government, but also the site of six-tenths of an acre on which it stood. It was only recently that the United States Government claimed any title to the land. There was little value in the property, both land and tower, because it sold for $102 in 1872. Whatever value has developed in the property is due to the improvements made in it by Mr. and Mrs. Crandall. I introduced a bill to clear this title, which bill has just passed the House of Representatives with a Senate amendment; the amendment having been placed upon the bill by Senator Wayne Morse of Oregon. This amendment requires, in order to clear the title to the six-tenths of 1 acre on which the lighthouse stands, according to the General Services Administration the payment of the market value without the value of improvements to the property. The good faith of the Crandalls in believing they had the title to the real estate is indicated by the fact that they have paid the taxes on this real estate since 1910.

The Government has never spent 1 cent on this property for the last 100 years. I cannot help but feel the irony of requiring these people to pay the present fair market value to the Federal Government to clear the title when billions of dollars are appropriated and sent to every imaginable boondoggling project abroad.

I am gratified, however, that the title can be cleared by the enactment of this bill and its ultimate signature by the President of the United States.

FISHING OPERATIONS IN THE TERRITORY OF ALASKA

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 9280) to facilitate the conduct of fishing operations in the Territory of Alaska, to promote the conservation of fishery resources thereof, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That in order to facilitate the conduct of fishing operations in the Territory of Alaska and to promote the conservation of fishery resources thereof section 2 of the act approved June 6, 1924 (43 Stat. 464, 465; 48 U. S. C., 1952 edition, 225), relating to the escapement in certain instances of a portion of the salmon run in the waters of Alaska, is hereby repealed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. TOLLEFSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. TOLLEFSON. Mr. Speaker, I introduced H. R. 9230 at the request of representatives of the Department of Interior, Department of State, the fishing industry, and of the North Pacific Fisheries Commission. The bill seeks to amend the White Act of 1924 so as to give the Secretary of Interior greater discretion with respect to fixing the percentage of salmon runs which should be permitted for spawning purposes. The White Act provides that not less than 50 percent of salmon run must be permitted to escape for spawning purposes. The remainder may be taken by fishermen. The experiences under this provision of law have proved to be unscientific. Better conservation results can be had under my bill in those cases where salmon runs are so large that a 50 percent escapement would permit more fish to go upstream for spawning purposes than the stream could handle. The results in such case are wasteful. Less than a 50 percent escapement would produce better results.

While it is true that at the present time more than 50 percent escapement is required by the Secretary of Interior in most streams in Alaska, he is powerless under present law to permit a smaller than 50 percent escapement in those cases where it would be beneficial and scientific to do so.

Furthermore, Japanese fishermen have abstained from taking Alaska salmon in waters adjacent to Alaska simply because of a treaty provision which requires the United States to make full utilization of Alaska salmon resources and to follow sound conservation practices. If we fail to fulfill the treaty requirement there is no assurance that Japanese fishermen will continue to abstain from taking our salmon. My bill provides for sound conservation practices and also makes possible a full utilization of our Alaska salmon resource.

A CHALLENGE TO SECRETARY MITCHELL

Mr. ROOSEVET. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROOSEVELT. Mr. Speaker, this session of Congress has seen a demand for leadership from the administration that has been unprecedently bipartisan. And just as unprecedented has been the administration's abdication of its responsibility for leadership.

Congress and the American people have suffered from an incredible display of equivocation, of hollow promises and lip service. The administration has been consistent only in its inconsistency. It has taken a stand, then retreated, made pronouncements, then renounced them, backed and filled until it has become clear that Republican policy could only be construed in the most charitable light as being no policy.

Notable among the examples of Republican issue-dodging is the stand of the administration and the Department of Labor on the Taft-Hartley Act and its application to right-to-work laws. Again, shifts in position, contradictory statements and an obvious intent to stay on the fence have denied to great segments of American labor the right that it asks and deserves to union security through union-shop agreements. Secretary Mitchell has spent the tenure of his office wooing the support of labor, but never offering a program that reflects a small part of his pious words. The time has come to demand that he make good on the principles that he purports to embrace.

Let us look at the record. In 1954, before the 16th Annual Convention of the CIO in Los Angeles, Secretary Mitchell said that laws that make it illegal for workers and employers to enter into union-shop agreements "do more harm than good."

> In the first place—

> they do not create jobs at all. In the second place they result in undesirable and unnecessary limitations upon the freedom of working men and women and their employers to bargain collectively and agree upon conditions of work. Thirdly, they restrict union security and thereby undermine the basic strength of the labor organization.[1]

In recognizing the justice of freedom in collective bargaining, why did Secretary Mitchell thus condemn right-to-work laws? For very good reasons, well known to him in 1954, and every bit as valid in 1957. The so-called right-to-work law, contrary to its connotations of freedom for all, is actually a tightening vise around unions. It provides no rights—it only denies rights.

The Taft-Hartley Act now provides minimum union security. It is minimum security because under the act, States may put on the books "right to work" statutes that restrict union activity more severely than the act provides. Seventeen States now have such laws. The act itself, however, prohibits the States from relieving Taft-Hartley restrictions. And those more restrictive State laws, which can outlaw the union shop and maintenance of membership agreements, both acceptable under Taft-Hartley, have precedence over the act. In other words, in those 17 States, wage earners and employers are prohibited from sitting around the collective bargaining table. They are prohibited from coming to mutually acceptable agreements on wages, hours and working conditions. And they are prohibited from engaging in this union activity even if both the worker and the employer desire to do so.

Secretary Mitchell was well aware in 1954 of the patent unfairness of laws that make agreements between labor and management illegal. He was aware, I am sure, that in the national picture these laws tend to undermine the stability of the national economy. It is obviously impossible to maintain a strong economy and a healthy labor market as a whole, if within that whole are islands of economic weakness and labor insecurity. This is a national problem and can only be handled on the national level by invalidating the priority given to right-to-work laws.

Yet listen to Secretary Mitchell's comments in 1957 on a bill that would place statute priority in the Taft-Hartley Act. He writes:

> On March 14, 1957, I transmitted to the Speaker of the House of Representatives three administration proposals for amendment of the Labor-Management Relations Act, 1947, as amended, primarily as it relates to the building and construction industry. These were introduced in the House as H. R. 6857. At the present time, I am not prepared to recommend any proposals for amendment of this act other than those provided in H. R. 6857.

The bill to which he refers does indeed make some needed corrections in the act. It removes restrictions on the building trades industry that have been unnecessary and well nigh impossible to meet, it allows employers to contribute to funds that would be used to train skilled workers, and it allows employers to group together for collective bargaining. My approval of these worthy aims is wholehearted. But this bill, which is as far as Secretary Mitchell is willing to venture along the road that he has implied is the right road, will have no effect on unfair, restrictive right-to-work laws which he has said "do more harm than good."

Now Secretary Mitchell's position is conceded to be one of hope that no more States will enact right-to-work laws. He is evidently willing to work in the interests of American labor by crossing his fingers. Is this action? Is it policy? If he in truth hopes that no new right-to-work laws are enacted, we might reasonably assume that his position is still one of disapproval of those laws, and that his disapproval might well be based on the very reasons that he announced in 1954. Why then, when presented with a bill that would remedy the situation that he deplores, does he refuse to take a stand?

And this is the same man who has recently berated Walter Reuther, president of the United Auto Workers, and a number of liberal organizations for compromising their position on the civil-rights bill. He says:

> They give as a reason something is better than nothing. All I can say to them is that this is not the philosophy that made our country what it is today.[2]

---

[1] New York Times, December 8, 1954.

[2] Daily Labor Report, August 16, 1957.

Let Secretary Mitchell condemn others for what he might construe to be an abandonment of principles when he can show the American people that he is willing to back his principles up with action. We have seen, for instance his Department's opposition to a fair minimum wage. Let him fight for the rights that labor deserves just as the advocates of civil-rights legislation have fought for the protection of the rights of the people. Then we will appreciate his words when he talks about philosophies that made our country what it is today.

I, for one, intend to give him every opportunity to make good on his words. His support of fair labor legislation is the minimum requirement. If, however, his support of the kind of revisions of Taft-Hartley that he has deemed right in the past is not forthcoming, then it is up to Congress in the next session to give such legislation priority without the blessing of the Department of Labor.

Mr. Mitchell, we are waiting.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM FOR THE BALANCE OF THE WEEK

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I take this time for the purpose of asking the acting majority leader if he can tell us about the program for tomorrow.

Mr. ALBERT. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER] will present some privileged resolutions from the Committee on Un-American Activities having to do with contempt citations.

Mr. KEATING. I suppose it is to be expected that there might be some rollcalls on those resolutions?

Mr. ALBERT. It is a possibility.

Mr. KEATING. Are there any conference reports coming up that the gentleman can inform us about?

Mr. ALBERT. Not that I know of at this time, but under our general reservation conference reports may be brought up at any time.

Mr. KEATING. There will not be any other business tomorrow in addition to the resolutions the gentleman has referred to or perhaps some conference reports?

Mr. ALBERT. Or action under unanimous consent.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire of the acting majority leader if he knows whether there will be a session on Saturday or whether we may have the weekend off.

Mr. ALBERT. It is not planned at this time to have a session on Saturday.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the acting majority leader this question? Personally I expect to be here, but there are some Members who have made some plans and I wondered if it has been discussed whether it would be possible to put over any rollcall votes until Monday?

Mr. ALBERT. That has not been determined, and at this time I am not able to give the gentleman that assurance.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would think that if a conference report on an appropriation bill were brought up tomorrow, in order to expedite it, we would have a rollcall.

Mr. KEATING. I thank the Speaker.

Mr. JONES of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. JONES of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to inquire if any plans have been made for introducing a resolution to adjourn sine die? It seems to be the opinion of many people that if we had such a resolution to adjourn by Saturday night, it might speed up a great many matters, and some things could happen this week that will happen next week.

Mr. ALBERT. There are no plans of that kind pending at this time, to my knowledge.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate by Mr. Carrell, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 4240. An act for the relief of Cornelia S. Roberts; and

H. R. 7384. An act for the relief of the town of Medicine Lake, Mont.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1937) entitled "An act to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation by the Armory Board of the District of Columbia of a stadium in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 939) entitled "An act to amend section 22 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended."

The message also announced that the Senate further insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 9023) entitled "An act to amend the act of October 31, 1949, to extend until June 30, 1960, the authority of the Surgeon General to make certain payments to Bernalillo County, N. Mex., for furnishing hospital care to certain Indians," disagreed to by the House; requests a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. HILL, Mr. MURRAY, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. PURTELL, and Mr. COOPER to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

CIVIL-RIGHTS LEGISLATION

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, H. R. 6127, as passed by the House of Representatives, was a moderate civil-rights bill which would nonetheless have been effective in providing more adequate protection for individual rights guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States. I believe that the enactment into law of the bill, as passed by the House, would unquestionably have been in the national interest.

The bill that has now been returned to the House by the other body still bears the same number, H. R. 6127. However, in what were its most important provisions, it is no longer the same bill. Those Members of the House who supported its passage in its original form may now well wonder whether its enactment would still be in the national interest.

Part III of the bill, which would have authorized the Attorney General to bring civil proceedings in Federal courts for injunctions and other preventive relief to secure for individuals the equal protection of the laws, has been deleted. Thus, the bill would now provide a civil remedy to the Attorney General only in cases involving violation of the right to vote.

If this were the only result of the amendments made in the other body, enactment of the bill would still represent a significant step forward, even though it fell far short of what the true friends of civil rights had hoped for. A provision for an effective remedy solely in voting cases would be preferable to no civil-rights legislation at all. But even in this limited field the bill returned by the other body is not the same as the bill which was passed by the House.

The bill which the House passed would have authorized the Attorney General to follow the usual procedure in equity cases to prevent interference with the right to vote. The bill did not introduce any novel proceedings nor depart from the usual and traditional procedures for the enforcement of court orders. The other body, while concurring in the determination of the House that the Attorney General should be authorized to seek equity relief for the protection of voting rights, took the occasion to change in a vital respect the rules of procedure traditionally followed in the enforcement of equity decrees.

A court order can be of no more effect than the means available for its enforcement. The power of a court to punish disobedience of its orders by means of speedy, summary procedure without using a jury has long been recognized. It is conceded that the constitutional guaranty of jury trial does not relate to such proceedings. Nonetheless the other body, in order to meet danger imagined to exist in voting right cases, adopted a sweeping, radical, and ill-considered amendment applicable to the whole field of equity jurisprudence and to the enforcement of every court order in every case. This amendment cannot but seriously weaken and impair the authority of the Federal courts if enacted into law. The amendment provided that no Federal court could punish for contempt of its orders without first affording the contemnor a jury trial. Under this provision even a person who deliberately disobeyed a subpena to appear in court would be entitled to a jury trial before he could be punished for his flouting of the court's authority.

On the floor of the other body it was argued that this drastic weakening of the authority of Federal judges was not intended to discriminate against the enforcement of the right to vote but that it was a desirable change in equity procedure generally. That is why, it was said, a jury trial should be a matter of right in all criminal-contempt cases. Now, however, the disastrous effect of this proposal on the Federal courts is very generally perceived and acknowledged even by some of its sponsors in the other body. It is now conceded that the amendment providing jury trials in criminal-contempt cases should be limited to contempts arising in voting-right cases only. What is this if not discrimination against the right to vote? On what legitimate basis can it be claimed that the enforcement procedures available to the courts in cases involving the right to vote should be weaker, slower, and more cumbersome than for the enforcement of any other right guaranteed by Federal law?

Surely, it cannot be asserted that in voting-right cases as distinguished from any other type of litigation Federal judges will tend more to be arbitrary and unjust toward those alleged to have violated the court's orders. The Federal judges who would hear and decide these cases are not foreign to the people of their soil nor to the areas in which they sit. They are ordinarily natives of their communities and share the social traditions and customs of those communities. At the same time, experience has shown they will be fearless in their duty, will apply the law without favor, and will uphold it with utmost integrity.

If we must now accept this weakening and unfair amendment as applied to voting right cases, let us at least make its provisions consistent with the use of trial juries in criminal cases generally. The Constitution and the laws do not require juries in all criminal cases. It has long been recognized that with respect to less serious offenses where the permissible punishment is not great, the right to jury trial does not apply. The right to jury trial in criminal contempt cases, created by this ill-advised amendment, should certainly extend no further than it now exists in criminal cases. With this in mind, it has been proposed that the first paragraph of the amendment to part V advanced by the chairman of the Judiciary Committee be itself amended to add the following proviso:

> Provided, however, That the court in which such criminal contempt proceeding is pending may, in its sole discretion, order that the accused shall not be entitled to trial by a jury, and if such an order is entered by the court the accused shall if convicted by the court without a jury be punished by fine which shall not exceed the sum of $300 or by imprisonment not exceeding the term of 90 days, or both.

The amendment proposed by the chairman of the Judiciary Committee would restrict the novel introduction of jury trial in cases of criminal contempt to disobedience of orders made in voting right cases. The further amendment which I now propose would follow the policy of not requiring juries where the possible punishment is not great.

In this connection, it is interesting to note legislation previously enacted by the Congress relating to jury trial for offenses committed in the District of Columbia. Section 11–616 of the District of Columbia Code, enacted by Congress, contains the following provision:

> In all prosecutions within the jurisdiction of said court in which, according to the Constitution of the United States, the accused would be entitled to a jury trial, the trial shall be by jury * * *.
>
> In all cases where the accused would not by force of the Constitution of the United States be entitled to a trial by jury, the trial shall be by the court without a jury, unless * * * the fine or penalty may be more than $300, or imprisonment as punishment for the offense may be more than 90 days.

Pursuant to this provision, there is no jury trial in the District of Columbia for disorderly conduct or for unlawful assembly, each of which offenses involves a maximum punishment of $250 or 90 days imprisonment. Likewise, there is no provision for jury trial in connection with the offenses of indecent exposure not before a minor, of vagrancy, of sale of unwholesome food, of violating industrial safety regulations or of speeding, all of which involve maximum penalties of a $300 fine or 90 days in jail or both. There is, likewise, no provision for jury trial for the offense of hit-and-run driving involving damage to property, a first violation of which carries a maximum penalty of $100 or 30 days and the second violation a maximum penalty of $300 or 90 days. These examples illustrate a public policy even in criminal offenses of not requiring jury trial where the offense is of a less serious nature and the maximum penalty is relatively slight.

The amendment I have proposed would, if adopted, relieve the fears expressed in the other body of harsh and excessive punishment imposed without a jury trial. It would, however, preserve to the court its right to enforce its orders in the traditional speedy and effective manner without jury trial where the punishment is limited. While I consider it just as unwise to interpose a jury in the enforcement of court orders arising in voting right cases as it is in equity proceedings generally, the present proposal will at least permit the simple and speedy procedures of enforcement that are usual in equity cases to be followed in those instances where the court considers that the fine should not exceed $300 or the imprisonment 90 days.

This proposal is advanced with great reluctance since any jury trial amendment seriously weakens the protection of the right to vote. But it at least puts some baby teeth in the ineffective and unworkable provisions of the amendment proposed by the chairman of the Judiciary Committee. The proper way to resolve all the differences between the two bodies is by the normal and accepted practice of a House-Senate conference. But, due to the adamant position taken by the leadership controling this Congress and the insistence that the Congress shall at most pass only a weak and diluted imitation of a civil-right bill, the adoption of the amendment I propose would at least salvage something from the wreck wrought by the other body.

THE FARM SITUATION

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, to those Members of this House who have been constantly emphasizing serious difficulties in which the farm producers find themselves, it might be well to remind them that once in a while the sun does shine through the gloom. It is not all bad regardless of the weeping and wailing of the do-gooders and especially those who would brace farm income by extending the arm of support to the extent of placing the farmers in a straitjacket under a farm pension compensatory payment plan . To my way of thinking this policy is an extremely socialistic approach.

To illustrate that everything about the farm program is not as bad as our wailing colleagues indicate, I quote from the Washington Farm Reporter, dated August 17, 1957, written by what I consider an excellent, understanding, agricultural writer, Fred Bailey:

> Prices farmers receive have turned the corner—and have been above the year-earlier figure for more than 12 months. And this has been accomplished with lower—rather than higher—price supports.
>
> Farm income is headed up for the first time in a peacetime year since 1947. Figured on a per farm basis, the increase from 1955 to 1956 was 7 percent. Also regarding the economic position of farmers: Assets are at an all-time high and average 8 times debt. Only 1 of 3 farms has a mortgage, with farm ownership being a record high.
>
> Exports are larger than ever before measured in both quantity and value. Much of the credit is due 480 export program and competitive pricing of cotton and wheat.
>
> Surplus holdings of CCC are being drawn down by roughly one-sixth during the most recent 16 months. Stocks of wheat, cotton, rice, and dairy products all are on the decline. And USDA expects further reductions during the 1957–58 marketing area.
>
> Other programs: Rural development (underway in 24 States), Soil Conservation Service (a 37 percent increase in farmers participating), Farmers' Home Administration (a 50-percent increase in loans), and ACP (a gain in practices undertaken).

When we close the books on this session of Congress we will have to conclude that no major farm legislation will have been enacted by the 1st session of the 85th Congress. However the Committee on Agriculture, on which I have the honor to serve, has done a world of work in committee and many hearings have been held and much testimony has been heard on major agricultural problems, and certainly during the 2d session of the 85th Congress this House will have an opportunity to consider fundamental changes in the approach toward the solution of our agricultural difficulties. It is not an easy task.

The rewriting of our basic agricultural legislation is long past due and nothing will be gained by delaying action.

REVOLUTION IN LATIN AMERICA?

Mr. REECE of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. REECE of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, my attention has been called to a United Press dispatch of July 31 from San Juan, Puerto Rico, which reads as follows:

>
> Yesterday afternoon Silfa, accompanied by Morales, visited briefly Gov. Luis Muñoz-Marin at his residence.
>
> Silfa is in the last phases of a trip of 1 month to Mexico, Cuba, Puerto Rico, and other places not revealed in order to unite the anti-Trujillo forces for the final step of the struggle against the dictator.

I am informed that the Nicholas Silfa referred to in the above press dispatch is an American citizen, and in fact, the same individual who at one time, on the basis of information whose source he claimed to be unable to reveal, charged that Galindez had been thrown alive into the boiler of a Dominican ship. This story was checked by the New York City police, with the full cooperation of the Dominican Government, and disproved. Even Mr. Silfa admits his allegation was incorrect, although it received wide publicity at the time, on his authority.

What concerns me most, Mr. Speaker, is the spectacle of an American citizen traveling throughout Latin America, and conferring with the governor of an American territory, for the open and avowed purpose of overthrowing the government of a friendly Latin American country. I do not understand, in the first place, how an American citizen can be a member of a foreign political party. Neither do I understand how our State Department can permit and provide passports for American citizens to travel abroad for such purposes. Even less can I understand the propriety of the governor of an American territory participating in conference with such an individual. Surely nothing but evil and danger for the United States can result from it.

During the last 3 years, President Remon of Panama, President Somoza of Nicaragua, and President Castillo Armas of Guatemala, have all been assassinated. The one thing that all three of these leaders had in common was their unswerving opposition to the infiltration of their countries by Communist elements. That the assassinations of Presidents Somoza and Castillo Armas was the result of subversive activities, there is not the slightest doubt. President Somoza's death was greeted with ill-concealed pleasure by Romulo Betancourt, the Venezuelan exile who is a close friend and mentor of President Figueres of Costa Rica. Betancourt works closely with Governor Muñoz-Marín of Puerto Rico. Figueres invited Representative PORTER to Costa Rica. All are outspoken enemies of Trujillo in the Dominican Republic and Perez Jimenez in Venezuela. All have conferred with Mr. Silfa.

This picture seems to me frighteningly clear. The former Red officials of Guatemala, now living in Uruguay and Chile, called Castillo Armas' assassin a hero. They were intimate friends of Figueres and Betancourt. Figueres and Betancourt are attempting to get Trujillo. It is inconceivable that their plans do not call for more assassinations and more "heroes." Should this happen, the United States must assume its share of the blame for permitting activities of this nature by Silfa, an American citizen; by Betancourt, a Venezuelan who spends much of his time on American soil, who organized the Bogotá riot which almost cost the life of Gen. George Marshall; by Muñoz-Marín, Governor of an American territory, and Representative PORTER, an American Congressman.

Indeed, it seems to me that the United States has gone further than merely permitting this activity. We have given the greatest publicity and sympathy to charges by men like Silfa, Representative Porter, Betancourt and Governor Muñoz-Marín, which so far have been either disproven or unproven, and condemned their opponents without further thought. We have undertaken and are now undertaking extensive investigations of their charges, and of the Dominican Republic, for example, without investigating the people who are making the charges and why they are making them. One thing is certain, however, the assassinations of the leaders of friendly anti-Communist countries must stop, and they will not be stopped by investigating Trujillo.

THE FUTURE OF THE LEAD AND ZINC INDUSTRY

The SPEAKER. Under special order of the House, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BROWN] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. BROWN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I should like to talk a little bit about some people down in the tristate area of Missouri, Kansas, and Oklahoma who have about lost all faith in their Govment.

They are miners—lead and zinc miners. They have some real problems. But their personal problems are small, indeed, compared to the Nation's problem and the national interest in the future of the lead and zinc industry.

And that is what I want to bring to your attention today—the story of how an intelligent country willfully or negligently is maneuvering itself into an unwise and precarious dependence on foreign sources for too much of its vital lead and zinc ores.

First, let us orient ourselves with the facts of life about the world we live in, August 22, 1957.

Two powerful forces in the world, the force for freedom and the force for communism, are locked in a life-and-death struggle for survival or supremacy.

The arsenal for freedom's forces is the United States of America. The arsenal for communism is the U. S. S. R. Whatever the perimeter forces might be and however they might shift around, the real last-ditch stronghold of freedom is the United States of America and the last-ditch stronghold of communism is the U. S. S. R.

Just how long this struggle will go on nobody knows. You can get opinions that the two philosophies can coexist for the next hundred years without open warfare. You can also get opinions that an incident in Syria or Taiwan could ignite the spark overnight. The truth is, nobody knows, and anybody's opinion is just as good as anybody else's.

But this much we do know. The potential for conflict is present. The forces are powerful and getting more powerful all the time. The commitments on both sides are firming up constantly; and the conflict is basic. We hope and pray that it will not erupt in war. We are trying to prevent it. But to say that war is not a very real possibility in an explosive situation of this kind is to turn one's back on every lesson of history. We must work for peace, but constantly be vigilant.

In such an abnormal era it is essential to pay special attention to the sources of vital raw materials required for the national security.

Mr. Gordon Gray, the Director of the Office of Defense Mobilization, told the House Ways and Means Committee recently:

> A healthy mining industry is important not only in time of peace but also in time of national emergency.

He went on to say:

> Complete reliance on nearby foreign production—

Get that; even nearby foreign production—

> in time of emergency would subject us to contingencies which could endanger the security of the country.

He further said:

> Availability of foreign metals could be dependent to a large degree on willingness to pay inflated and even exhorbitant prices.

He wound up by saying:

> Domestic production provides a somewhat greater degree of national security.

But while Mr. Gray stated the truths very well, just plain commonsense tells us that lead and zinc production capacity is essential to the security of the United States—freedom's arsenal.

In these particularly explosive times, no thinking nation should under any circumstances maneuver itself into a position where it is needlessly dependent on a precarious source of supply for a large amount of vital raw material. It is unthinkable shortsightedness. But that is exactly what this Nation is doing. Lead and zinc imports have gradually become so far out of balance with domestic production, so utterly disproportionate, that foreign metals are now almost our primary source of supply, and it is getting worse.

Why would a supposedly intelligent nation take a calculated risk like that? Oh, there are a thousand reasons and excuses. It is said that imports are essential in the fight against inflation. It is said that we have to do it to help our allies. Still others say it really is not a risk at all because many of the mines are owned by American companies, anyway, and the sources are nearby friendly governments.

These reasons scarcely take into account, of course, that governments change sometimes, that arbitrary confiscation of private property has occurred many times in many countries, that, while we are hoping for the day when trade will move freely among peoples of the world, that day is not yet here.

To depend upon even nearby foreign production for a vital ore involves a certain element of risk.

Why take the risk until you have to take it?

The truth is that somebody wants it that way so we are doing it that way. The Nation is willfully encouraging even more dependence on foreign sources of two vital metals by permitting and sanctioning more and more imports.

Here at home we are closing down our own mines, letting them fill up with water and letting the miners disperse to other occupations. We are literally knocking a big part of an entire industry in the head because somebody somewhere wants to do it that way. Now the mystery is—who is the somebody and where is this key thinking?

Certainly, it is not the Congress because the Congress is vitally interested in this problem. The congressionally established agency of the Congress, the Tariff Commission, which was created to adjust tariffs in detail in accordance with the Congressional policy told the executive to slow down on this import business a little bit and they told them that in 1954. They asked the President to raise the tariffs to the maximum limit under existing authority so that we could get a better balance of imports and domestic production. But, apparently, when the Tariff Commission was talking in one ear of the President, somebody else was talking in the other ear. The President did not do it; and again there were plenty of excuses for not doing it.

As a substitute, the Nation started stockpiling lead and zinc supplies on top of the ground. Understand that is the hard way, that is the expensive way to store any substantial quantities of ore or petroleum. The cheap way is to keep it in the ground in its natural state. But, there were good reasons for stockpiling some lead and zinc for quick, ready emergency stockpile purposes. We did it and that was fine, but still it did not solve the whole problem. What happens after the stockpile is exhausted?

Remember—the Office of Defense Mobilization says that a healthy mining industry is essential for national security. The only way to get a guaranty adequate stores of lead and zinc for the Nation is a healthy domestic mining industry in the United States. The situation has gone from bad to worse as situations of this kind generally do.

We were about to pass the point of no turning back in our national lead and zinc policy, and just about everybody recognizes it as a mistake. That is the strange thing about this whole lead and zinc industry situation. Everybody seems to want to correct a bad situation; but nobody does anything.

Now, the President has the authority to do it. Let us not kid ourselves about that. Under section 7 (b) of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements program, the President can raise tariffs to any amount that he wants to. He can impose quotas or anything else that he wants to do to preserve an industry essential to the Nation's defense requirements. The process is a simple one. The President tells the Office of Defense Mobilization to conduct a study of the lead and zinc situation. The ODM reports its findings and the President then takes whatever action is justified with almost no limitation on what the President can do. In a press conference yesterday the President explained why he had not followed this procedure with lead and zinc. He said, "The condition was represented to me as being so critical as not to allow time for such an investigation, which usually involves many months."

In other words, from that statement the President wanted faster action than that study. So they figured out at the White House the thing to do to get fast action was to get a bill through the Congress. Now if there is any slower slow-boat-to-China way of getting tariff relief for a specific product, than by trying to pass a bill through the Congress. I do not know what it could be. Passing an act of Congress takes time. Everybody in Washington knows that. Certainly, the Department of Interior and the other agencies of the executive branch acting for the President knew it, because the very bill they sent to Capitol Hill carried an effective date of January 1958. No relief was even intended before 1958.

I submit that thinking people will all agree with this obvious passing of the "hot potato" from one branch of the Government to the other, the national interest in lead and zinc in an era of potential international explosions got bogged down in the Washington bureaucracy maze. Now what happened?

Lead and zinc are essential to the national security. Both the Executive and Congress will admit that. The Tariff Commission long ago recommended to the President that something must be done to get some relief for the lead and zinc miners of America so that our domestic industry can survive. But the recommendation received a Presidential veto. The Office of Defense Mobilization says lead and zinc are essential to national security. All the President has to do is call for a study and then adjust imports to proper balance. Why does something not happen?

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Missouri. Yes, I yield. I would like to get the gentleman's theory.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. I think the gentleman knows there is pending in the Congress a bill to provide protection for the lead and zinc industry. Hearings have been held on that legislation by the Senate Finance Committee and hearings have been held in the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives on that legislation. The Committee on Ways and Means could have met at any time in the last several weeks and reported that bill out. I assure the gentleman that, at least on the Republican side, I am advised they were requested to report the bill out immediately.

Where is the responsibility for not reporting that bill out? It is on the Democratic-controlled Ways and Means Committee of the House, and there is no doubt about it.

Mr. BROWN of Missouri. Now, that is one of the basic problems right there. The gentleman brings politics into the Nation's security. The politicians keep trying to make some sort of an issue out of this nonpolitical matter.

Now I do not believe the President wants to play politics with it. I believe he genuinely wants to correct the situation. But someone keeps saying, make Congress take the responsibility, even though there is ample legislative authority now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Under previous order of the House the gentleman from Montana [Mr. METCALF] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. METCALF. Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BROWN] if he wants to continue his colloquy.

Mr. BROWN of Missouri. If I could continue briefly, I would appreciate it.

You do not pass legislation to do something that the Executive is already authorized to do in the first place unless you just reach a total impasse where the Executive just under no circumstances will carry out the will of Congress. Even then, you have no assurance that the President will sign it. The President refused to sign the Tariff Commission recommendation of 1954. The President has, up to now, refused to make adjustments under section 7 B. Merely passing a bill is no guaranty that the bill would become law.

What we have to do is find out who it is, and why, someone, somewhere, is so opposed to a better balance of lead and zinc imports with domestic production. Who is it that keeps bottling up Executive action?

Mr. EDMONDSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. METCALF. I yield.

Mr. EDMONDSON. The gentleman from Missouri in his remarks a few moments ago referred to the statement made by the President in his press conference yesterday. I wonder if the gentleman is also familiar with the last two sentences of the statement in his press conference, in which he said the following:

> I actually believe the best way in the long run to handle these things is through the established method which is to put it into the Tariff Commission and allow the study > to be made, and then for the President to act on it in accordance with existing law.

>
> I understand that the industry itself seems now to prefer that method.

Mr. BROWN of Missouri. I thank the gentleman. I was just looking for my copy of the President's statement. That is the key point. Surely, the gentleman from Wisconsin recognizes that the President himself has the authority when the President himself says so, and feels now that Executive action is the proper course to take.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. METCALF. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. I am not going to argue the question as to whether or not there is authority down in the White House to take some action.

Mr. BROWN of Missouri. Excuse me, but the gentleman was arguing that a moment ago.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. No; I was not. I am trying to make the point here, and I suggest that the gentleman study the matter a little further—I am suggesting to the gentleman that the Congress has the power to do something. The President may also have power but that does not excuse us, I say to the gentleman, from doing what we ourselves can do; and certainly we can do it quicker, having held the hearings, knowing the facts, and not having to wait until the Tariff Commission or some other commission makes a finding on the subject. We should face up to our own responsibility.

Mr. BROWN of Missouri. Well now, I am sure the gentleman recognizes realities. Congress is nearing the end of the session and will not be in session again until January. The President can, and should, and he admits he can, do something about it. I am sure that he wants to do the right thing.

I am just hoping that no one will get to his ear before he actually gets down to doing it and stop it again this time, because the Nation's security is involved.

Further, how disgusting it must be to people back in the mining areas to see this Alphonse-Gaston act or buckpassing argument. They do not care whether the Congress has the authority, the President has the authority, whether Joe Smith or Joe Jones has the authority; what they want is that something be done, and the people who look down the road and think about the national interest want something done, too.

Mr. BREEDING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. METCALF. I yield.

Mr. BREEDING. I want to compliment my colleague from Missouri for the effort he has made and the statement he is making. My State of Kansas is affected by this problem. I hope we can work something out before long that will help not only my State but also the gentleman's State, and Oklahoma.

Mr. BROWN of Missouri. I certainly thank the gentleman from Kansas who has been vitally concerned about this problem from the beginning.

Mr. DORN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. METCALF. I yield.

Mr. DORN of South Carolina. I compliment the gentleman. The gentleman has made a distinct contribution to the solution of this problem. We have no lead or zinc probem in South Carolina, but it is easy for me to realize that lead and zinc are essential to the national defense, not only of this country but also of the world; and it is essential that we have lead and zinc in the United States that we can tap.

Syria was our friend yesterday; she is our enemy today. We cannot depend on so-called friends all over the world to keep the heart and core of the Free World on a self-sustaining basis.

Again I compliment the gentleman for his splendid statement.

Mr. BROWN of Missouri. I thank the gentleman from South Carolina. He has epitomized it well.

Every thinking person in the Congress wants to see this situation corrected, because it is vital to the very core of our national defense. Why take one single risk we do not have to take?

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. METCALF. I am going to continue the discussion of this very subject and I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin a little later.

Mr. Speaker, I, too, am concerned about lead and zinc. The State of Montana I represent, and the district I represent is first in the production of zinc in the United States. We are fifth in the production of lead in the United States.

In the last 90 days in Montana more than 1,500 miners have lost their jobs. Since the first of the year in the State of Montana as a result of this depression in lead and zinc 2,500 of the 5,000 miners are unemployed as the result of the closing of the lead and zinc mines and smelters in the State of Montana. You can hardly pick up a paper in the West without reading that such-and-such a mine is closing. Sometimes you read that they are pulling the pumps out of the mines, or they are knocking the pillars out. Sometimes you read there is going to be a skeleton crew put in there to keep the pumps going. When they pull the pumps out, and when the pillars are knocked out, that mine is finished, that resource is gone. Sometimes the ore bodies are still there, but it would take a prohibitive sum to bring such a mine back into production in the event we would need it in a national emergency such as we had in World War II or in the Korean war. So we have the admitted fact, as the gentleman from Missouri has pointed out, that lead and zinc are metals necessary and vital to the security of this Nation. It is an industry with thousands of men employed. Everyone admits that the industry is in a critical situation.

In 1953 when a similar crisis arose I felt that the leaders of the lead and zinc industry under existing legislation should go to the Tariff Commission, where hearings would be held, and relief secured under the escape clause. They did that. They went to the Commission, hearings were held, and, as was pointed out in the letter of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, a recommendation to give them the fullest relief was made to the President. Instead of that the President chose to embark upon the stockpiling program. The stockpiling program, while lead and zinc are necessary for the national defense and national security, was only going to give temporary relief until we had a full stockpile. The President recognized there was going to be some difficulty about the control of imports because he sent a letter to the Secretary of State directing him to tell the foreign producers that this was for the relief of the domestic industry and not to increase foreign production.

On August 20, 1954, the President said:

> In addition, I am directing the Secretary of State to seek recognition by the foreign countries which are principal suppliers of lead and zinc that this increased stockpile buying is designed to help domestic production and they will not themselves seek to take any unfair advantage of it.

Those foreign producers paid as much attention to that as the steel producers paid to the President's directive asking them to hold down the price of steel. They continued to ship lead and zinc into this country, so that the stockpile was just another subsidy for foreign producers.

I have voted for these reciprocal trade agreements, I have voted for all the extensions to the Tariff Acts, I believe in them. I believe in them if there is a way in which to control the safety valve and take care of a seriously and critically injured domestic industry. But such relief must be a part of any act. The President is doing a disservice to the Reciprocal Trade Act when he comes to the Congress to ask for legislation to cure a situation that he has the power to cure under existing law.

I am glad that the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means has pointed out to the President that there is ample power and authority under existing law to give the lead and zinc industry the relief it needs. I am glad that yesterday in the news conference that the gentleman from Missouri mentioned, the President said that he believes the best way to handle these things is through the established method, which is to put it into the hands of the Tariff Commission, allow a study to be made, and then have the President act in accordance with law.

The chairman of the Ways and Means Committee has told the President he has the authority, the President has admitted he has the authority, there is established an obvious way to take care of this situation.

Now, as we come to the closing days of Congress, it is up to the President to take the established method to protect the Reciprocal Trade Act in which he believes, or in which he purports to believe, and go the regular administrative route in trying to give relief to this industry.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. METCALF. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. I cannot understand how the gentleman and those who preceded him, as Members of this Congress feel that they can carry out their responsibility to the lead and zinc industry by trying to shift this monkey on to the back of the President. They know, and does not the gentleman agree, that the Congress can take action on this matter? There is nothing at all that prohibits it; is not that correct?

Mr. METCALF. Congress could repeal the Reciprocal Trade Act and it could change the tariff. We can do anything we are empowered to do under the Constitution.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. I want to be reasonable with the gentleman.

Mr. METCALF. But within the framework of the act, in order to carry out the provisions of the act, this Congress should require the administrative agencies to exhaust the administrative remedies.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Even within the framework of the Trade Agreements Act, does not the gentleman agree that we could pass the bill that is now pending before the Committee on Ways and Means of the House and the Finance Committee of the other body, and that that would be perfectly consistent with the Trade Agreements Act as such and not inconsistent with it? Otherwise the gentleman is saying that Congress might just as well cease to function in any matter relating to trade or tariffs.

Mr. METCALF. I do not say that Congress should cease to function. I do say, however, that it would be inconsistent with the framework of the present Trade Agreements Act for us to pass this special legislation to take care of the lead and zinc industry when the administrative agencies have not exhausted the administrative remedies that were written into the law to take care of this very situation. If we have a hearing before the Tariff Commission and we find that the relief granted by the present act is not adequate, I believe Congress should reappraise, reevaluate the whole tariff program so that we can take care of sick industries or industries in a critical situation.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. I will agree that our Trade Agreements Act needs some reevaluation, and so forth. But what disturbs me is this, because I am interested in this problem of the lead and zinc people, too. We have some in Wisconsin and they are in very serious difficulty. I want to see something done. But also I want to see something done that would be dependable and frankly, amongst those of us who are discussing this matter may I say that any action by the President under the administrative procedures cannot have the same certainty of continuation, because what the President can do he can also undo. I would much rather, therefore, that it be put in the hands of Congress, put on the statute books, so that there would be some degree of certainty to the industry.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. METCALF. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I may say that I am very pleased to know that the gentleman and his colleagues on that side of the aisle are taking such an active interest in this matter. As the gentleman knows, his party for years recommended low tariffs, or, in fact, no tariffs at all. That was about the only difference between the Republican Party and the Democratic Party until about 25 years ago. It is not only the lead and zinc industry that is in trouble because of the low tariffs that exist. Many other industries are in trouble. The tungsten industry is in trouble. It is going to continue to be in trouble as long as we have the kind of tariff we have today. Now we have the escape clause.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MILLS). The time of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. METCALF] has expired.

Mr. BROWN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Montana may proceed for an additional 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is that agreeable to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDMONDSON] who has a special order to follow that of the gentleman from Montana?

Mr. EDMONDSON. That is agreeable to me, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENSEN. We have the escape clause in our Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act which, as the gentleman says, the President has the power to impose.

But if he would impose that escape clause for lead and zinc, you can imagine what would happen to the President. The House would come down on his head because almost every industry in America that is in trouble today because of low tariffs would insist on the very same thing. If they could induce the President to impose the escape clause for every industry that is in trouble today because of low tariffs, then I would be happy, and I hope the gentleman and his party and all those who are interested in this matter are successful in getting him to do just that. But this problem of lead and zinc and these other things just did not occur today or yesterday. They have been happening and growing for many years. This Congress should have absolutely taken a position and passed a law that would relieve this terrible situation that exists.

Mr. BROWN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. METCALF. May I give a short response to the gentleman from Iowa, then I shall be glad to yield all the time I have to the gentleman from Missouri.

I will say to the gentleman from Iowa that we have a law. Congress, as I see it, does not have to pass any additional law. It is written into that escape clause that whenever a case is made before the Tariff Commission where it is demonstrated that a domestic industry is critically injured as a result of the tariff, and it does not make any difference whether it is the lead and zinc or the ceramics or the tungsten industry or anything else, when the case is made before that Tariff Commission that there is a critical situation in a domestic industry, then the President should grant relief. If too many cases are made, or there are too many instances where relief should be granted, then is the time to come back to the Congress and say, "Well, we have to have some reshaping or reevaluation."

Mr. JENSEN. The gentleman knows there are hundreds of industries in trouble today because of that.

Mr. BROWN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. METCALF. I now yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BROWN of Missouri. I hope that the gentleman from Iowa is not overlooking the basic point involved in this whole thing—the national security. We should not be talking about escape clauses, reciprocal trade versus rigid tariffs, or differences of trade philosophy. Here we have vital ores, essential to the national security. The gentleman talks effectively about hundreds of different items that are in similar trouble as lead and zinc, are they essential to national security? If so, let's make sure we husband those supplies and their production capacity too.

Are imports as far out of balance in those other industries as in lead and zinc? Are imports such a disproportionate percentage of the total product consumption in the United States?

This is no trade ideology matter. I would not stand on this floor and ask rigid high level protections for industry. The lead and zinc people are not asking their government to shut off imports. They are interested in getting a better balance of imports with domestic production. If lead and zinc are essential to national security, if there is a situation internationally which requires vigilant attention to sources for critical materials, the case proves itself on its merits.

Under section 7 (b) the President has the authority. He says he has the authority. There is no point in getting into any argument about which came first, the chicken or the egg. What difference does it make whether the Congress or the President should act. The President says he has the authority to do it now. Let us get some action.

Mr. JENSEN. I do not miss the point at all. I know exactly what the trouble is and I hope it can be resolved.

Mt. METCALF. The case right now comes down to this. The President admits he has the authority. He says the proper way to proceed is through the Tariff Commission. The point today is that we have an industry that is in trouble and the President should act quickly. Anyone who reads the hearings before the House Committee on Ways and Means or the Senate Finance Committee will be convinced that there is a case for relief under section 7 of the Trade Agreements Act. Everyone who has studied this question has admitted that there is a need for relief of the lead and zinc industry.

Today all I want to ask is that the President on the basis of the evidence before him and on the basis of the power and authority granted to him act quickly for the relief of this industry so that if there is a need for additional legislation, we, in Congress, can know about it and have time to enact such legislation.

LEAD AND ZINC IMPORTS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDMONDSON] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. BOW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDSON. I would like to make a statement and then I will be glad to yield to the gentleman. I would like for just a minute to comment on some of the statements that have been previously made by my good friend, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BYRNES].

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. I would like to ask the gentleman one thing at this point before he starts his speech, that he also might address some of his remarks to the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means who is present instead of addressing all of our remarks to the President of the United States.

Mr. EDMONDSON. I hope I am addressing my remarks to all of the people who are gathered here in this Hall at this moment. I appreciate very much the presence of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER], for whom I have very high regard and very great respect. On the question of where the responsibility for failure to act in this situation should be placed, I think it would be a great tragedy if we become involved at great length in debating and counterdebating that question while thousands of lead and zinc miners all over the United States go hungry and their families go without clothing for the school term, which will begin in a very few weeks.

Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt about the fact and I will not in anyway question the statement of my good friend, the gentleman from Wisconsin, that Congress does have the power to meet this situation. I do not think the gentleman from Wisconsin will question either that the President of the United States also has the power to meet the situation. What we, who represent the districts where the mines are located and where the men are out of work—what we hope is that speedily we will have a recognition of this responsibility by either the Congress or the President and that we will have substantial and speedy action to meet this problem and get the mines of our country operating once again and the payrolls in operation once again for our miners.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield at this point, I want to tell him I agree with what he has said one hundred percent. May I suggest to him that then the approach to this should be—let us have the Congress proceed and let us have the President proceed and whichever arrives there first, so much the better because we will get some action. But let us not sit back in the background to wait and see what happens downtown.

Mr. EDMONDSON. The gentleman knows, of course, that I appeared before the House Committee on Ways and Means to urge that it act on this legislation. I introduced the legislation along with Members of the House on the Republican side of the aisle. It was sent to the Congress by the White House and by the Secretary of the Interior. By the same token, I also went before the Tariff Commission in 1954 when we had this emergency situation at that time to urge relief be afforded to this industry under the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act. The gentleman from Montana and I have supported the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act in the past and have voted for its extension. But, I have also urged when I voted for its extension that the Tariff Commission and the President of the United States act more expeditiously and more effectively in the future to carry out the escape clause and the peril point provisions of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act because if we do not implement those sections, if we do not give to our American industry the protection which it has been given by law and if we do not afford that protection as we carry out the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act, it is going to become increasingly difficult for those of us across the country who represent these impacted areas to go along with this legislation in the future. I venture to say unless we see in the near future action by the Tariff Commission and by the President on the problems of some of these terribly hit industries in this country under the escape clause or under Section 7 (b), you are not going to see in this House the majorities for the extension of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act in the future that you have seen in the past. On the contrary, you may very likely see a defeat of this very useful legislation.

Mr. METCALF. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDSON. I yield.

Mr. METCALF. Unless this reciprocal trade agreement program is made to work, many of us who have favored the program over the years may have to vote against it and vote for some other method of relief than this escape clause as it is presently administered. But, no matter what action is taken, the President is the man who has the ultimate decision to make. In his letter to the President, the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee said:

> I am confident that you would not want to see the Congress by-pass and undermine your present authority under trade agreements legislation by acting on individual items.

If the President would decide, after we had passed legislation in accordance with the Secretary's recommendation that he did not want his authority undermined, he would veto that legislation. If he decided he wanted to continue this authority on the broad program, he would have to go to the Tariff Commission anyway. So the President is the man who has to make the final decision.

Mr. EDMONDSON. That is reinforced by the letter which the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee sent to the President on August 15, 1957, when he said:

> I sincerely urge you to personally review the situation in the lead and zinc industries and the proposal submitted to the Congress. Upon such a review, I am sure you will be convinced as I am that you do have ample authority to provide such relief as you deem necessary in the national interest to the lead and zinc industries. I am also confident that you will agree that to by-pass the existing provisions of our trade agreements law will undermine the trade agreements program.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER] has very well forecast in this letter the difficulties that lie ahead for support of this program if we continue to see the administrative implementation of it that does not respect the escape clause and the peril point provisions and other protective features that have been written into the law by the Congress.

Mr. BROWN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDSON. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Missouri. Too often, we forget that the Tariff Commission was established by the Congress to act for the Congress in carrying out the detailed adjustments in overall Congressional programs on tariffs. Created by the Congress, an agent of the Congress, its recommendations to the President of the United States are, in fact, if not in name, the same as presenting the President with an act of Congress for the President's signature or veto. Does the gentleman feel that that is being forgotten too many times?

Mr. EDMONDSON. I think the gentleman has made a very good point. The Tariff Commission's recommendations should receive more weight at the White House than they have received. They have failed to receive the weight to which they are entitled, both in Republican and Democratic administrations. I think that is a very unfortunate situation.

Mr. BOW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDSON. I would like to make one more statement, then I will yield.

Mr. Speaker, this is not a local problem. This is not a problem of three States in the tristate district or some Northwestern States. The lead and zinc industry spreads all over this country from the State of New York to the State of California. There are 27 States in this Union where lead and zinc are produced by the mining industry and by miners who rely upon healthy mining conditions for their livelihood.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask unanimous consent at this time to insert this list of the 27 States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

(The list referred to follows:)

THE LEAD AND ZINC MINING INDUSTRY IN THE UNITED STATES

Where is the industry located? In 27 States of the Union from New York to California: Alabama, Arizona, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Kentucky, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Jersey, New Mexico, New York, Oklahoma, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, Texas, Utah, Virginia, Washington, West Virginia, and Wisconsin.

Mr. EDMONDSON. Mr. Speaker, I would also like to ask unanimous consent at this time to insert the testimony of Mr. Tom Kiser, vice president of the Tri-State Zinc and Lead Ore Producers Association, before the House Ways and Means Committee on August 1, 1957.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

(The matter referred to follows:)

STATEMENT OF TOM KISER, VICE PRESIDENT OF THE TRI-STATE ZINC AND LEAD ORE PRODUCERS ASSOCIATION, BEFORE THE HOUSE WAYS AND MEANS COMMITTEE ON ADMINISTRATION BILL, TRANSMITTED TO CONGRESS ON JUNE 19 BY SECRETARY SEATON

I am Tom Kiser, vice president, Tri-State Ore Producers Association. I am here to represent the association, small miners, retail merchants, civic organizations, schools, and anyone else affected by our economy.

The tristate district, comprised of Oklahoma, Kansas, and Missouri, covers an area of approximately 100 square miles. There are approximately 85,000 American taxpayers in this area whose economy is very much affected by the drastic reductions in the price of lead and zinc—I might add that even though our trucks and tractors, drill steel, blasting powder, and many other supplies are jobbed locally, they are manufactured elsewhere, mostly in the East.

We of the tristate district want to thank the Interior Department for establishing the peril points at 14.5 for zinc and 17.0 for lead. We feel that at that price we can operate at a fair and reasonable profit and do some development work.

No doubt you gentlemen are aware that we have been operating on 16-cent lead and 13.5 zinc until May of this year. When the price broke to 14-cent lead and 10-cent zinc, it was brought about by ever-increasing foreign imports, no doubt encouraged by our liberal foreign-aid policies, developing and equipping foreign mines.

While many tristate mines and other mines in the United States have suspended operations, others have cut back or curtailed production, hoping for some emergency action that will enable them to survive the crisis. However, if something isn't done soon the situation will grow continually worse. It seems to be a process of elimination, eventually every mine in the tristate district is most likely to be forced out of business because of foreign imports.

Along with them will go the various supply houses, retail merchants and the whole economy of our area.

The tristate district has produced well during three major wars and will do so again if called upon, provided it has a fair price to maintain it now.

Therefore, I want to urge you gentlemen on this committee to give us your support in establishing these peril points the Interior Department has recommended. However, due to the very recent increases in the cost of electric power, blasting powder, workmen compensation insurance and steel, and the fact zinc has dropped to 10 cents and lead 14 cents, which I am sure is much lower than the Department ever anticipated.

We of the tristate district would like to have some assurance the peril points will be maintained. There is possibly a million American taxpayers in all the combined lead and zinc districts of the United States who are directly concerned or in sympathy with lead and zinc miners, who would also like to see some assurance of the peril points being maintained.

To do this we are going along with the Emergency Lead and Zinc Committee in asking for amendments which should assure the peril points are maintained.

On behalf of my association and all those affected by this crisis in our area, I thank you for the opportunity to bring our problem before you.

Mr. EDMONDSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert at this time the letter of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER] to the President of the United States on August 16, 1957, dealing with this particular problem.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

(The letter referred to follows:)

AUGUST 16, 1957.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I am writing to you in connection with the proposal of the Honorable Fred A. Seaton, Secretary of the Interior, on behalf of the administration, for the enactment of sliding-scale import excise taxes on lead and zinc.

Although the communication from Secretary Seaton on this subject was not received by the Committee on Ways and Means until June 19, 1957, at a time when the session was far advanced and the committee was diligently following an agenda previously determined by it, due to the importance of the subject and due to conditions in the lead and zinc industry as depicted by the communication of the Secretary, the committee broke into its agenda and conducted hearings on August 1 and 2, 1957.

I have now had time to carefully review and study the testimony which was presented to the committee at the public hearing on this important subject. It is my sincere conviction that you already have authority, previously delegated to you by the Congress in the trade agreements legislation, to afford relief to domestic industries from import competition in appropriate cases. The testimony of your representatives at the public hearings, in conjunction with the written recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior, indicates that the lead and zinc industries properly constitute such a case in the opinion of the administration. The testimony further shows that your present authority is adequate to afford the relief which you have recommended to the Congress.

As you will recall, one of the principal purposes of the so-called escape clause provision (section 7 of the Trade Agreements Extension Act of 1951) and the national security amendment (section 7 of the Trade Agreements Extension Act of 1955) was to afford you an avenue under which you can provide relief from import competition to domestic industries according to the procedures and standards set forth therein. As may further be recalled, the committees of the Congress and the Congress in past years have devoted much time, thought, and attention to providing you with these powers so that our domestic industries can be afforded protection in appropriate cases and so that the national interest can be served by Presidential action without resort to further legislation.

It is clear that in this instance you have not made recourse to existing administrative procedures which are available to provide relief to these industries. In addition, you have not advised the Congress that your existing authority under the escape clause and the national security amendment is inadequate in these matters generally, although a subcommittee of the Committee on Ways and Means last fall specifically called upon the administration for any recommendations which it might have for modifying or strengthening these provisions of existing legislation.

The testimony presented to the Committee on Ways and Means during the course of the public hearings on August 1 and 2, 1957, indicated that the proposal for a sliding-scale import excise tax on lead and zinc is almost identical in major respects with the recommendations of the Tariff Commission made to you under the lead and zinc escape clause proceeding in 1954. You rejected this recommendation, stating among other things, that the proposed relief did not meet the needs of these industries. The testimony of your representatives further indicated that the situation today in the lead and zinc industries is substantially the same as it was at the time of the escape-clause investigation by the Tariff Commission and your rejection of the unanimous finding of the Tariff Commission.

The testimony at the public hearings also clearly showed that the proposal which the Secretary of the Interior now recommends on behalf of the administration is almost identical in effect to a proposal that was before the Committee on Ways and Means in 1953 and on which a strongly adverse report was submitted by the State Department. The State Department set forth 10 reasons why this proposal was inadvisable and contrary to the national interest. This report was made a part of the recent public hearings.

The proposal which the administration has now recommended would not become effective, in event of its enactment, until January 1, 1958. Yet, under the national security amendment any relief found appropriate could be put into effect by you almost immediately. Also, under the escape clause I see no reason why you cannot direct the Tariff Commission to report to you within a stated time as to measures which it may deem appropriate for relief of these industries, and I see no reason why you could not have done so on June 19, the date of the proposal, or even earlier for that matter. It is clear from the testimony presented to our committee, aside from the merits of the proposal, that relief can be afforded by you much more speedily than would be the case even with enactment of the proposal.

As you of course know, I have been a strong and consistent supporter of the reciprocal trade agreements program since the inception of the program in 1934. I have consistently supported and worked for proposals which you have made to continue our foreign-trade policies, including, for example, your proposal during the last Congress and in this Congress for approval by the Congress for membership in OTC.

You have gone on record strongly supporting the reciprocal trade agreements program. At your request the Congress has provided three extensions of your authority during your administration. An important consideration of the Congress in providing these extensions was the fact that should trade agreements concessions result in such import competition that domestic industries are injured or are threatened with injury you would have the authority where it is in the national interest to relieve domestic industries of such injury.

I cannot refrain from expressing to you my very great concern as to the impact of a proposal such as the one which your administration has made concerning lead and zinc on the whole structure of the trade agreements program. In stating this, I do not intend to imply that the lead and zinc industries may not need relief. My concern is due to the fact that this proposal would completely bypass existing authority given you in present trade agreements legislation. You are asking the Congress to do that which you already have ample authority to do. The authority which you have is not selective, but broad and general, and applies to any and all industries which are injured or threatened with injury as a result of trade agreements concessions. I am sure you are aware of the fact that there are many other industries that are asking for relief from import competition. Among these are textiles, velveteen and ginghams, tuna fish, hardwood-plywood, stainless steel flatware, fluorspar, natural gas, petroleum, and many others. There are numerous bills now pending before the Committee on Ways and > Means which would provide relief from import competition on the above specified items and many additional ones. I am confident that you would not want to see the Congress bypass and undermine your present authority under trade agreements legislation by acting on individual items.

>
> I sincerely urge you to personally review the situation in the lead and zinc industries and the proposal submitted to the Congress. Upon such a review, I am sure you will be convinced as I am that you do have ample authority to provide such relief as you deem necessary in the national interest to the lead and zinc industries. I am also confident that you will agree that to bypass the existing provisions of our trade agreements law will undermine the trade agreements program.
>
> I can only observe in closing that there is considerable sentiment that, in the absence of your exercising such authority as you may have for an expansion of our foreign trade and the protection of domestic industries, the Congress will be forced to study again the delegation of authority made to you under the trade agreements legislation. This is an eventuality which neither you nor I would contemplate with equanimity.
>
> The other 14 Democratic members of the Committee on Ways and Means concur with me in this letter.
>
> Very cordially yours,
>
> Jere Cooper,
> Chairman, Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. BOW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDSON. I yield.

Mr. BOW. I thank the gentleman for yielding at this time. I simply wanted to make this observation. We have discussed this matter before. I have all sympathy for the people in this mining industry. I hope that either the Congress or the President does something about it, and does it promptly. But is it not a fact that under the Constitution of the United States it is the duty of the Congress to levy tariffs?

Mr. EDMONDSON. It is a fact. It is the duty of the Congress to levy tariffs.

Mr. BOW. And the Congress has in the past delegated that constitutional authority to the Executive?

Mr. EDMONDSON. That is correct also.

Mr. BOW. Would the gentleman agree that perhaps it is time that the Congress got back its constitutional duties and authority in these matters?

Mr. EDMONDSON. I think we are approaching a joint and collective state of mind on that question which we are very likely to see become a prevailing state of mind unless this delegated authority is exercised with proper regard for the rights and interests of American industry and American workers.

Mr. BOW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for one further question?

Mr. EDMONDSON. I yield.

Mr. BOW. I wanted to say that at no time do I believe we should ever delegate our constitutional duties and authorities.

The gentleman from Missouri a few moments ago said that no industry had been hurt as badly as lead. I would like to point out to the gentleman the pottery industry in the State of Ohio. This industry has been practically destroyed. And we have other industries in the State, the glass industry. The gentleman from West Virginia has some industries in his State. He also is in the position of being hurt by these things.

I think it is time that we reestablished our constitutional authority and took effective action in the Congress to meet these problems.

Mr. EDMONDSON. I think the gentleman from Ohio will agree with me that we are very likely to have another week of Congressional activity here at least, and I am sure the gentleman from Ohio and the gentleman from Wisconsin are genuinely sympathetic toward the problems of the lead and zinc industry as are the gentleman from Montana, the gentleman from Missouri, and the gentleman from Oklahoma. I hope these gentlemen will join us in calling upon the President of the United States to make clear at once what his intentions are with regard to action under the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Extension Act, upon the lead and zinc problem.

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDSON. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. HORAN. I just want to join my colleagues on this problem because we have some rather important lead and zinc production in my district. I understand, of course, that part of the trouble is that some of the mine owners in this country also own mines abroad. Would the gentleman comment on that; if they do, is not that the cause of some of our unemployment in this country?

Mr. EDMONDSON. I think it is undoubtedly. I think we have some American ownership of foreign mines that affect our own production problems.

Mr. HORAN. If that be true, I think the Tariff Commission ought to take into consideration that fact, for it means unemployment in this country.

Mr. EDMONDSON. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. EDMONDSON. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. I believe we all recognize that this is going to be a long-range problem and more or less of a permanent problem affecting the domestic lead and zinc industry in this country.

Mr. EDMONDSON. I think that is true.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. We are always going to be dependent to some extent, possibly, on imports of lead and zinc to meet all of our needs.

Mr. EDMONDSON. I believe that is correct.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. But the domestic producer finds himself caught in a price competition because of these foreign imports.

Mr. EDMONDSON. I think that is correct.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. The result is that our domestic market is open to these imports that make it difficult for the domestic miner to meet the price and still stay in business. He cannot operate at a loss indefinitely. That I think really is the crux of the problem facing the domestic lead and zinc industry. Is that correct?

Mr. EDMONDSON. The cheap labor situation, lower taxes, lower land values in many of these foreign producing areas are all factors that affect our domestic production.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. And that this is really going to be a long-range problem; it is not just a temporary emergency that faces the industry.

Mr. EDMONDSON. I think it is going to be a problem of fluctuating seriousness as it has been in the last 10 years. This is the third instance in the last 10 years in which this crisis has arisen with the lead and zinc industry of the country.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDSON. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. I wish to follow this thought with the gentleman, because I think he recognizes that I am desirous as he is or any other Member of this House to have an environment in which our domestic lead and zinc industry can exist and continue to operate and where we will not become wholly dependent upon foreign sources.

I think it is a long-range problem as well as a temporary one which we must face.

I ask the gentleman this: Does he not feel that, being a long-range problem, it would be much better as a long-range solution to have the protection written into the statutes and on the statute books rather than being dependent upon an Executive order which can be changed at will by any President?

Mr. EDMONDSON. I see advantages and disadvantages in the gentleman's approach. I see the disadvantage that a tariff level established by the law might prove in a few years with a different price situation or continued inflation to be entirely inadequate and we might once again face the same legislative problem.

THE FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Patman] is recognized for 30 minutes.

MONETARY PROBLEMS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, evidently this session will come to an end pretty soon. As evidence of the fact that Members are thinking about going home, about 125, according to the last rollcall, have probably already gone home. We certainly expect to get through within the next week or two.

The object of taking this time is to invite the attention of the Members to a subject about which there is a lot of misinformation over the country; that is a subject that involves not only our economy, our progress, taxation, inflation, high prices, high costs, but all other economic problems. I do not have a prepared statement and will not use notes but I do expect to cover certain points I believe are important.

VALUE OF MONEY

I refer to the power and authority of an agency that has the power and authority delegated to it by the Congress of the United States. Prices are determined by many factors, but one factor has more to do with the question of prices than any other one particular factor. That is the value and the cost of money. The Constitution is very plain that Congress shall have all power over money, but, obviously, Congress cannot administer that power. So Congress has delegated it to the Federal Reserve System, which is all right if properly administered.

REPEAL OR CHANGE ONE PART

I am for the Federal Reserve System. I think it is a fine System, a great System, and I have no desire to offer any suggestion that would lead to the repeal of a substantial part of it, except one.

That is to have the Government and Government officials carry out this important function of regulating the value of money; in other words, to determine the supply of money, the cost of money including interest rates. It is a subject that we cannot dramatize. There is not enough interest in it. But yet it is the most important subject that the Members of Congress have to deal with. Members of Congress do not pay sufficient attention to it because they are not equipped to keep up with the different bills that come before Congress and at the same time study these economic problems affecting this particular power.

MISINFORMATION

Two days ago in the other body, a Member of that body inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, commencing at page 15283, a statement that was made by Mr. Martin, Chairman of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System before the Senate Committee on Finance on August 13. The reason I mention that statement is that it gives evidence of misinformation that is misleading information. Such information is passed from one person to another, from one Member of Congress to another; it is disseminated in different ways, and it is published in many newspapers of the country without opposition. Yet, at the same time, if you closely read Mr. Martin's statement you have the facts, the proof, right there.

Mr. Martin says that the "Federal Reserve bank has a board of nine directors, of whom six are elected by the member banks. Of these, three are bankers. Three more must not be bankers, but must be engaged in some nonbanking business. The other three members are appointed by the Board of Governors in Washington."

The point that Mr. Martin does not fully explain is that out of the 12 Federal Reserve districts in the United States, the private commercial banks select the directors representing two-thirds of each bank; in other words, they run each Federal Reserve bank and the 24 branches. Mr. Martin says here that there are three bankers and three in nonbanking business. He fails to bring out a point that I have often made with Mr. Martin when I have interrogated him before different committees of the House in the past, that these other three selected by the banks, a majority of them are also holders of bank stock. Therefore, that gives the bankers a majority in interest. Of course, others are interested, too, because they are selected by the banks. But a majority are interested in stock ownership in the banks.

That is a serious problem. That means that we have delegated power to people who have a private interest in regulating the supply of money, in their own interest. And we must recognize that the private enterprise system itself is self-interest. People work for themselves. You cannot get that out of human beings. It is not possible to do it. It would not be right to do it. That is expected. We expect self-interest to be there in an individual or in a corporation that is conducted by individuals.

That self-interest would dictate that they would like to have high interest if high interest would cause them to have a more profitable business. That is exactly what they have been doing, having so much power and control over the Federal Reserve banking system that the Congress has delegated the power to, and two-thirds of each board of directors of each of the 12 banks selected by the bankers themselves having a private interest and a selfish interest in having the supply of money as short as possible and the interest rate as high as possible. That is what has happened in this country the last 18 months, at least.

AN ABOUT FACE

Commencing in January 1953, a long step was made in that same direction, but they made the step so quickly and so suddenly that it almost threw the country into a recession or a depression and they had to take an about-face. On May 11, 1953, they commenced to go the other way and let interest rates go down and the supply of money become greater. But after that was over they commenced the hard money, high interest in 1955, the latter part, to really put on hard money and high interest in this country.

HIGH INTEREST CAUSES LESS FEDERAL TAXES

The taxpayers are interested in this. A large part of the national income, a substantial part, is payment of interest, and a large part of the interest that is paid is paid by large concerns, large corporations. The more interest that they pay the less taxes they are paying. So that affects your budget. It is a tax-deductible item, therefore, the higher the interest rate is and the more interest the corporations pay the less taxes they pay into the Federal Treasury. So it affects all taxpayers and reduces the amount that is collected in revenue. It is an important question.

MEMBER BANKS DO NOT OWN FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS

But there is another question that I want to address myself to, and really what I wanted to invite your attention to for your consideration. I have said myself, which was a true statement, on the floor of this House many times in years gone by that all the stock that is owned in the 12 Federal Reserve banks is owned by the private commercial banks, the members of the System. That is absolutely true. At one time I even offered a bill to the effect that we should have the Government buy that stock, recognizing that it was stock that was owned by the commercial banks. But since that time we have had an investigation and study by the Joint Economic Committee composed of Members of the House and Senate. In 1952 I happened to be chairman of that committee, and we went into this question thoroughly and discovered that what they call stock in the Federal Reserve System is not stock at all. It is not stock. They call it stock, and they still claim that they own the System because they own that $330 million in stock. It is not true at all. It is a misnomer. That is misinformation. It is a hoax. It is not true.

What does the proof show? The proof shows that every bank that is a member of the System makes an involuntary investment into the Federal Reserve bank in the district in which it is located of 3 percent of its capital and surplus. As this capital and surplus goes up they have more invested. As it goes down they have less invested. Is it stock? It carries no proprietary interest. That is the test of real stock, genuine stock, stock that is worth something, that you can do something with. So it carries no proprietary interest, not at all. The bank that holds that stock cannot sell it. The bank that holds that stock cannot hypothecate it. The only thing that stock amounts to is that the bank collects 6 percent every year as a dividend on it. That stock serves no purpose whatsoever. Imagine $330 million in so-called stock having any real worth in the Federal Reserve banking system, that owns $23 billion worth of bonds, for instance, and has assets of tens of billions of dollars. It serves no useful purpose, should be returned to the member banks and the taxpayers saved $20 million a year.

The 12 Federal Reserve banks have a surplus of $745 million. It really belongs to the Government. We could use $330 million of this surplus fund to pay the banks for their so-called stock and there would remain $410 million, in these surplus funds which is not needed and for that reason we could consider paying it into the Treasury and save the taxpayers that much.

I have over the last two decades interrogated the heads of the Federal Reserve banking system, Mr. Eccles, Mr. McCabe, Mr. Martin, the Open Market Committee composed of 12 members who really run the show, and many others. This you can put down as the absolute fact—that the Federal Reserve banking system is not owned by the private banks. It is owned by the Government of the United States.

FEDERAL RESERVE INDEPENDENCE

Before 1951, the Federal Reserve Board had been looking for an opportunity to declare its independence from the executive and at a time when the then executive was at a low point in popularity, we will call it, the Federal Reserve Board defied the President of the United States and said, "We are not going any longer to support the price of Government bonds at par and above par. We are just going to let the bonds go down, down, and down." So, Mr. Truman, the President of the United States, called the Federal Reserve Board and the Open Market Committee into the Executive offices of the President at the White House and he told them how terrible that would be and that it would be greatly destructive to the public interest. The President got a promise from them that they would not do it. There are letters to that effect. They are in the RECORD. I put them in the RECORD in 1952. So, Mr. Truman resisted it. They promised then that they would not do it. But, after they left the White House, notwithstanding their promise, they defied the President of the United States and on March 4, 1951, they quit supporting the prices of Government bonds. But their wings were short and they did not yet have a feeling of security in that new power of defiance and secession so they went rather slow and easy in 1951 and 1952. They did not do much about it. But, when the present President came in and said, "We are going to recognize the independence of the Federal Reserve Board," that gave them real independence. That is what they had been waiting for and they did not have it until this administration gave it to them. They do not have it now so far as the Congress is concerned because they are agents and servants of the Congress of the United States. They are obligated to carry out the will and wishes of the Congress of the United States. They are not independent of the Congress. Let me read you another statement that Mr. Martin made in this statement of August 13 that proves the point I made about the stock:

> The stock of each Federal Reserve bank is held by the member banks of its district. This stock does not have the normal attributes of corporate stock.

From whom does this come? It comes from the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board. He says this stock does not have the normal attributes of corporate stock. He said further:

> Rather it represents a required subscription to the capital of the Reserve bank and the dividend being fixed by law at 6 percent, the residual interest and the surplus of the Federal Reserve banks belong to the United States Government not to the bank stockholders.

Now that is the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board speaking to the Senate Committee on Finance on August 13.

Mr. DORN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. DORN of South Carolina. The gentleman from Texas is making a splendid statement and there should be more Members here to listen to him. Is it not a fact that these banks which the gentleman mentions are getting 6 percent on money that is not used? Is that not a correct statement?

Mr. PATMAN. Well, the credit is there but the money is not used. The other day when Mr. Martin was on the witness stand—and over the years I have interrogated him to the extent that I know the questions that I can ask him and get short answers to—so I asked Mr. Martin, "Is it not a fact that whenever the Federal Reserve banks buy United States Government bonds that they take the money from the Bureau of Engraving and Printing which does not cost the Federal Reserve bank anything and trade that money for Government bonds and then keep the Government bonds and charge the Government interest on those bonds?"

He admitted that it was true. There was nothing else for him to do because I know it is true and the records show it is true. Now, then, the Federal Reserve banking system is collecting each year in that way $600 million in money—interest on these Government bonds that they have bought with Government money; money that is collected from the taxpayers each year.

They use that money for any purpose that they want to use it for. Then after they have used all they want and for whatever purpose they want to use it, 90 percent of it goes into the Treasury. But there is no audit of their books. Remember this—it is a startling and a shocking statement—although the Federal Reserve banks have issued and distributed hundreds of billions of dollars in United States Federal Reserve notes, yet no audit has ever been made by the Government of the United States. Do not forget that. The only audit that has ever been made is a self audit, where they have appointed their own auditors who have made their own investigation and their own report to them. That is the only audit that has ever been made.

On this stock I asked another question of Mr. Martin. "Is it a fact, Mr. Martin, that buying these Government bonds you do not use this stock of the member banks?" He had to answer that he did not. I said, "Is it not a fact that you do not use the reserves of the member banks to buy those bonds?" He had to answer that he did not. He had to reply that these $23 billion of bonds held by the 12 banks were all bought on the credit of the United States, without using anything that belonged to the member banks.

All right. Where do we go from there? We know that is not good business. Suppose the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DORN] should have a mortgage of a thousand dollars against his home, and he gave me out of his pocket $1,000 and said, "Mr. PATMAN, take this money and pay it to the man who holds that $1,000 mortgage." He says, "I want to pay off my mortgage."

I take Mr. Dorn's $1,000, and I carry it to the man who holds the mortgage. I pay him the $1,000, and I ask him to transfer the mortgage to me, not to Mr. Dorn, transfer to me that mortgage, and I hold that mortgage and continue to charge Mr. Dorn interest every year. That would not make any sense, neither commonsense, book sense, or horsesense. That is exactly what we permit to be done in the Federal Reserve System. The Federal Reserve takes money from the Bureau of Engraving: Federal Reserve notes. Who promises to pay these notes? The United States Government. Such a note is exactly the same as a bond. The only difference is it does not bear interest. It carries the same obligation to pay. The United States Government promises to pay, on demand, so many dollars. They take those notes and trade them for United States Government bonds, just like I would trade that $1,000 for the mortgage. Then they keep those bonds in a lock box, in the New York Federal Reserve Bank, and they collect interest on those bonds. Does that make sense? No, it does not. But it is going on all the time.

Suppose the Congress should say, "Well, instead of having appropriations each year from the Congress, we are going to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to have printed so many billions of dollars worth of Government bonds drawing 3 percent interest and turn them over to the Clerk of the House and the clerk of the Senate and let them draw the interest on them every year and make no accounting to anybody; have no Government audits, no supervisors, no investigations, as we would have our own money." That would be a comparable situation if we took Federal Reserve notes from the Bureau of Engraving and Printing to pay for them.

That is what the Federal Reserve is doing. Maybe that would not be so bad if the Federal Reserve were being used solely in the public interest, but I do not believe it is. I am not charging any corruption, I am not saying that they are evil men, I am just saying that the System is not being operated in what I consider to be or what I believe to be in the public interest.

All right. Now, Mr. Martin, in making these declarations in these statements has also made some concessions. You have got to read the fine print in order to find out the concessions. Remember this, the Federal Reserve banking system does not belong to the banks of this country, but the banks of the country select a majority of the directors of each Federal Reserve bank and, therefore, they have a lot of control over the System, sufficient control and influence that they have gotten what they wanted. The greatest power 12 men ever had is in the Federal Open Market Committee.

MONEY SCARCE—INTEREST RATES HIGH

The bankers want money scarce and they want interest rates high. Why do they want money scarce? Because they, the commercial banks, have the exclusive privilege of issuing money, exclusive privilege except what is created by the 12 Federal Reserve banks. That is the only way we can expand in this country, that is by debt. The only way you can have more money is to have more debt. That is the capitalistic system. I am not condemning it; I am for it if it is worked in the public interest and not against the public interest. That is what is happening.

BONDS FORCED DOWN

We have $160 billion in marketable bonds, the bonds that are sold in the markets every day, open markets, $160 billion worth. If they were liquid the people could turn their bonds in and get their money. If a neighbor wanted to build a house and could not get the financing you would probably sell your bonds and let him have your money and you would draw more interest on it. But if the bonds are run down in price to where you would be taking a loss, you would not want to turn them in and get cash on your bonds, your bonds would be immobilized and taken out of competition with the bankers. The bankers and the moneylenders know that when they run the price of bonds down to 95, 90, or down to 85, they immobilize all of that money and take it out of competition with the banks, while the banks can create and lend $6 for every $1 of reserves they have. So the demand would be much greater for the scarce money; naturally it would be; and the demand being much greater for the scarce money interest rates go up.

I just want to put these facts before you, my friends, so that during this recess you will possibly give them some consideration. I know this is a rambling speech, without preparation, but I do hope Members will study these problems.

We have the finest commercial banking system in the world if it is operated as banks are organized to operate. We have a fine Federal Reserve banking system. If you will just take the bankers off the policy-making boards, if you will just say, as Woodrow Wilson said when he asked for the passage of the Federal Reserve Act, that bankers not be given the privilege of being on a board that would determine the volume of money or the rates of interest. President Wilson said it would be just as reasonable to put railroad owners on the Interstate Commerce Commission to fix freight rates as to put bankers on the Federal Reserve Board to fix interest rates and determine the supply of money.

When Woodrow Wilson got the Federal Reserve Act through in 1913 there were no bankers on the Federal Reserve Board. But all that has been changed; it has become a central banking system. We have a central bank now where we had a system of regional banks, each bank autonomous, 12 regions. It has been changed into one system. There was no central bank before 1935. It is different now. It is not the same system at all; it is entirely different. It was completely changed in 1935. The Federal Open Market Committee that now has the real power to control money and interest rates is composed of the seven members of the Board and five presidents of Federal Reserve banks who are selected by boards of directors, a majority of whom (two-thirds to be exact) are elected by the private commercial banks.

The local Federal Reserve banks have little power themselves now. The power is centered in Washington and New York. Most of the power is in the New York Federal Reserve Bank. An employee of this bank buys and sells Government bonds by the millions of dollars each year for all 12 Federal Reserve banks.

You take the Federal Reserve Board of seven members, do you know how many people help them perform their duties? Twelve bankers, one from each Federal Reserve district, and 12 presidents of Federal Reserve banks; 5 of them can vote on the Open Market Committee. So they are right around this board of seven. Do you think the public has much of a chance of getting any sympathy in a case like that where there are 7 members of a board to represent the public, surrounded by 24 bankers and people who are selected by representatives of the banks to represent them? In other words, three to one. Suppose the law required each Member of Congress to confer with and advise with three bankers before casting a vote? Suppose the law permitted 1,800 bankers to surround the 435 Representatives and 96 United States Senators in all their deliberations and actually allowed 400 or more of them to vote? What chance would the people have?

So I ask that these questions be considered, Mr. Speaker, and let us do something about it at the next session of the Congress.

LATIN AMERICAN POLICY

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the Record.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, these remarks are by way of comment and correction on the speech made Tuesday, August 20, 1957—Record, pages 15404–15406—by the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Withrow] and entitled "Foreign Policy." With much of what the gentleman says I heartily concur.

I make these comments because much of what the gentleman says appears to be directed against the policies I have been advocating to make our fight against international communism in Latin America more effective.

The gentleman does not mention, much less meet head on, my recommendations that we differentiate between the dictatorships and the democracies and frame our policies accordingly by cutting off all financial aid to the dictatorships, by instructing our ambassadors not to appear to be warmly intimate with the dictators and to help the democracies in every way possible.

Instead he states:

> Just a few words today from the President, the Secretary of State, or even the Secretary of Defense actually, would bring an end to the mysterious and ridiculous attack on the Dominican Republic.

I gather from what the gentleman later states about his confidence that the Joint Chiefs of Staffs "will support the fact that the Dominican Republic is vital to us," that the gentleman believes this to be true and controlling. He wants the "attack" on the so-called Dominican Republic to stop because of its presumed great military importance, because the Jews there are enthusiastic about the Government and because the archbishop there apparently will certify that everything is just fine.

The gentleman is in error in characterizing the attack on the so-called Dominican Republic as "mysterious and ridiculous." There is no mystery about opposition to a ruthless dictator and there is nothing ridiculous about the murder of Gerry Murphy, the young son of two of my constituents in Eugene, Oreg.

It was my privilege to testify yesterday before the Federal grand jury considering the Murphy-Galindez cases. I urged them to indict Trujillo for the murder of Gerry Murphy. The evidence is overwhelming and most of it appears in notes from our State Department. We rejected the official Dominican explanation for the death of Gerry Murphy. We asked twice, in our most formal and urgent manner, that General Espaillat, formerly consul general in New York, be "amenable for the usual processes of investigation and trial." This was refused.

Gerry told his fiance just before he disappeared that he had to go to the dictator's palace. He had earlier told her that he believed he had flown Galindez from the United States. The elaborate explanation built around the de la Maza suicide shows guilt by Trujillo. Refusal to make Espaillat available shows guilt. The chain of circumstances is strong and unbroken.

Murder of Gerry at Trujillo's order fits the pattern of this dictator's way of life. One murder has no moral meaning to a man who ordered thousands of Haitians slaughtered in 1937. The decisive factor then, as now, was his estimate that he could get away with it.

As for the military importance of that unhappy land, I say show me, please, how it can be of any substantial importance in case of an attack by the Soviet Union. By Latin American standards they have a formidable military force, but compared to the forces of a great power they have nothing.

The real danger from international communism in Latin America, and especially in dictatorships like Trujillo's, is from within, since totalitarianism prepares "a climate for the growth of communism," as a notable editorial in the New York Times, August 21, 1957, puts it.

This editorial also is an apt reply to the gentleman's recommendation that we ought to give the so-called Dominican Republic credit, a pat on the back, encouragement and so on. The editorial in its entirety is as follows:

A Problem in Policy

The Kingmaker of the Caribbean, Generalissimo Rafael L. Trujillo, has just had his brother Hector crowned as President of the Dominican Republic for another 5 years. President Trujillo is a weak, amiable, agreeable person who will continue to act as the formal front for his formidable brother, the military dictator of the last 27 years. One thinks in terms of a coronation because the Generalissimo is certainly trying to establish a dynasty to carry on the family rule after he dies.

The ceremony last week was a reminder of the curious anomaly in American foreign policy, one that creates a great deal of critical discussion, especially in Latin America, although not exclusively there. This is the extent to which American policy concentrates on anticommunism to the exclusion of antifascism or—in this case—antimilitarism and dictatorship. During the 1930's the danger to the Free World of fascism was clear, so clear that we ended up fighting against fascism in the greatest of all wars, with communism as our ally.

Having defeated the Axis we found that the other Janus-face of totalitarianism—communism—was the present danger. As a result, we have taken the line in the cold war that whoever fights communism is therefore our ally. When Guatemala threatened to go Communist we intervened to overthrow the Arbenz regime. On the other hand, our > relations were notably friendly with Peron of Argentina, Perez Jimenez of Venezuela, Somoza of Nicaragua, Batista of Cuba, Trujillo of the Dominican Republic, Franco of Spain.

>
> Yet it is surely as clear today as it ever was that the enemy of liberal democracy is not just communism but totalitarianism in any form. It should not be sufficient for a military dictator such as Generalissimo Trujillo to say that he is anti-Communist to win American support and encouragement, and yet this is what has happened everywhere in these postwar years. One weakness of the policy is that these dictators in reality prepare a climate for the growth of communism and most of them, Trujillo included, have dealt with the Communists when it suited their purpose.
>
> Anticommunism covers a multitude of sins for the American State Department. So does a rug when the dirt is swept under it.

Several other corrections need to be made. The gentleman says he does not "carry a pistol around the Congress as evidence of my crusade and willingness to work for my constituents." I do not, either. When I do carry a gun, I do so because many responsible and informed persons, including the Washington police, have urged that I do so.

Would the gentleman advise I ignore this advice?

I never carry a gun around the Congress. The Dominican effrontery is immense, but I doubt that it would include an attack on these premises.

After reciting a press report that I favor trading with Red China as a boon to the Oregon economy, the gentleman asks, "Just who does the House think we fought a war with in Korea?" I remind the gentleman we also fought a war with Japan and with Germany and today we trade with them.

I also remind the gentleman that such trade would be in nonstrategic goods and that we, in return, would obtain many items which would strengthen our economy.

The gentleman's reference to the "millions and billions we might vote out of the Treasury to get a 20th century crusade going against so-called dictators" is, to say the least, obscure. I have made no such proposal. I do believe in stopping foreign aid to Latin American dictators because we get nothing in return for the taxpayers' dollars. And, I want to add, they are not so-called. The dictators are real dictators and even our State Department, if pressed, will admit it.

Latin America offers tremendous opportunities for private and public investment. Our military and economic aid, however, should be restricted to those instances where our national security is enhanced accordingly.

I was astonished and disgusted by the letter to the gentleman from the President of the House of Deputies of the so-called Dominican Republic and which the gentleman sets forth in full in his speech.

It vilifies Governor Muñoz-Marín of Puerto Rico, who is an outstanding democratic leader in Latin America, as one who has "dedicated himself to favoring the agents of international communism." It also libels the FBI. I cannot understand why the gentleman consented to be a party to such smears.

For myself, I care not what any harlot parliamentarian of the so-called Dominican Republic says. I know his lips speak his master's words. But I am amazed that the gentleman from Wisconsin would give such a statement any weight at all. The gentleman must know that the legislative body there does what Rafael Trujillo says, just as do the President and the other officers. It is more a prison than a republic.

In closing, let me say that I am grateful for the gentleman's interest in Latin America and in our fight against international communism there. I wish more Members would undertake to inform themselves on these subjects.

It is clear that our aims are identical. We do disagree with regard to the value of dictatorships as allies in the struggle against international communism. This is a matter for further consideration by Congressional committees and in the Halls of Congress. Certainly how we resolve this issue could well decide the ultimate battle between the forces of freedom and tyranny.

COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE

Mr. ULLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Agriculture may have until midnight tonight to file a report on the bill H. R. 8490.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Metcalf). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. Allen of California, for 30 days, beginning on August 23, 1957, on account of personal and official business.

To Mrs. Harden (at the request of Mr. Dawson of Illinois), indefinitely, on account of official business.

SPECIAL ORDERS GRANTED

By unanimous consent, permission to address the House, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered, was granted to:

Mr. Davis of Georgia, for 45 minutes, on Monday next.

Mr. Brooks of Louisiana, for 15 minutes, on tomorrow.

Mr. Patman, for 30 minutes on tomorrow.

Mrs. Rogers of Massachusetts, for 5 minutes, on tomorrow.

Mr. Schwengel (at the request of Mr. Canfield), on Tuesday next, his subject being One Hundred Years in This Chamber.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

By unanimous consent, permission to extend remarks in the Record, or to revise and extend remarks, was granted to:

Mr. Long.

Mr. Brooks of Louisiana and to include extraneous matter.

Mr. Hill and to include extraneous matter.

NOTE ON ITEM "A".—(a) In General: This "Report" form may be used by either an organization or an individual, as follows:

(i) "EMPLOYEE".—To file as an "employee," state in Item "B" the name, address, and nature of business of the "employer." (If the "employee" is a firm [such as a law firm or public relations firm], partners and salaried staff members of such firm may join in filing a Report as an "employee.")

(ii) "Employer".—To file as an "employer," write "None" as answer to Item "B."

(b) Separate Reports.—An agent or employee should not attempt to combine his Report with the employer's Report.

(i) Employers subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their agents or employees.

(ii) Employees subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their employers.

A. ORGANIZATION OR INDIVIDUAL FILING.—(1) State name, address, and nature of business; (2) if this Report is for an Employer, list names of agents or employees who will file Reports for this Quarter.

NOTE ON ITEM "B".—Reports by Agents or Employees. An employee is to file, each quarter, as many Reports as he has employees; except that: (a) If a particular undertaking is jointly financed by a group of employers, the group is to be considered as one employer, but all members of the group are to be named, and the contribution of each member is to be specified; (b) if the work is done in the interest of one person but payment therefor is made by another, a single Report—naming both persons as "employers"—is to be filed each quarter.

B. EMPLOYER.—State name, address, and nature of business. If there is no employer, write "None."

NOTE ON ITEM "C".—The expression "in connection with legislative interests," as used in this Report, means "in connection with attempting, directly or indirectly, to influence the passage or defeat oflegislation." "The term 'legislation' means bills, resolutions, amendments, nominations, and other matters pending or proposed in either House of Congress, and includes any other matter which may be the subject of action by either House"—Section 302 (e).

(b) Before undertaking any activities in connection with legislative interests, organizations and individuals subject to the Lobbying Act are required to file a "Preliminary" Report (Registration).

(c) After beginning such activities, they must file a "Quarterly" Report at the end of each calendar quarter in which they have either received or expended anything of value in connection with legislative interests.

C. LEGISLATIVE INTERESTS, AND PUBLICATIONS in connection therewith:

1. State approximately how long legislative interests are to continue. If receipts and expenditures in connection with legislative interests have terminated, place ☐ an "X" in the box at the left, so that this Office will no longer expect to receive Reports.

2. State the general legislative interests of the person filing and set forth the specific legislative interests by reciting: (a) Short titles of statutes and bills; (b) House and Senate numbers of bills, where known; (c) citations of statutes, where known; (d) whether for or against such statutes and bills.

3. In the case of those publications which the person filing has caused to be issued or distributed, in connection with legislative interests, set forth: (a) description; (b) quantity distributed; (c) date of distribution; (d) name of printer or publisher (if publications were paid for by person filing) or name of donor (if publications were received as a gift).

(Answer items 1, 2, and 3 in the space below. Attach additional pages if more space is needed.)

4. If this is a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) rather than a "Quarterly" Report, state below what the nature and amount of anticipated expenses will be; and if for an agent or employee, state also what the daily, monthly, or annual rate of compensation is to be. If this is a "Quarterly" Report, disregard this Item "C 4" and fill out Items "D" and "E" on the back of this page. Do not attempt to combine a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) with a "Quarter ly" Report.

AFFIDAVIT

PAGE 1

Note on Item "D".—(a) In General. The term "contribution" includes anything of value. When an organization or individual uses printed or duplicated matter in a campaign attempting to influence legislation, money received by such organization or individual—for such printed or duplicated matter—is a "contribution." "The term 'contribution' includes a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money, or anything of value, and includes a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make a contribution"—Section 302 (a) of the Lobbying Act.

(b) If This Report is for an Employer.—(i) In General. Item "D" is designed for the reporting of all receipts from which expenditures are made, or will be made, in accordance with legislative interests.

(ii) Receipts of Business Firms and Individuals.—A business firm (or individual) which is subject to the Lobbying Act by reason of expenditures which it makes in attempting to influence legislation—but which has no funds to expand except those which are available in the ordinary course of operating a business not connected in any way with the influencing of legislation—will have no receipts to report, even though it does have expenditures to report.

(iii) Receipts of Multipurpose Organizations.—Some organizations do not receive any funds which are to be expended solely for the purpose of attempting to influence legislation. Such organizations make such expenditures out of a general fund raised by dues, assessments, or other contributions. The percentage of the general fund which is used for such expenditures indicates the percentage of dues, assessments, or other contributions which may be considered to have been paid for that purpose. Therefore, in reporting receipts, such organizations may specify what that percentage is, and report their dues, assessments, and other contributions on that basis. However, each contributor of $500 or more is to be listed, regardless of whether the contribution was made solely for legislative purposes.

(c) If This Report is for an Agent or Employee.—(i) In General. In the case of many employees, all receipts will come under Items "D 5" (received for services) and "D 12" (expense money and reimbursements). In the absence of a clear statement to the contrary, it will be presumed that your employer is to reimburse you for all expenditures which you make in connection with legislative interests.

(ii) Employer as Contributor of $500 or More.—When your contribution from your employer (in the form of salary, fee, etc.) amounts to $500 or more, it is not necessary to report such contribution under "D 13" and "D 14," since the amount has already been reported under "D 5," and the name of the "employer" has been given under Item "B" on page 1 of this report.

D. Receipts (Including Contributions and Loans):

Fill in every blank. If the answer to any numbered item is "None," write "None" in the space following the number.

10. $--------Expended during previous Quarters of calendar year

11. $--------Total from January 1 through this Quarter (Add "9" and "10")

Loans Made to Others

"The term 'expenditure' includes a . . . loan . . ."—Sec. 302 (b).

12. $--------Total now owed to person filing
13. $--------Lent to others during this Quarter
14. $--------Repayment received during this Quarter

15. Recipients of Expenditures of $10 or More

In the case of expenditures made during this Quarter by, or on behalf of the person filing: Attach plain sheets of paper approximately the size of this page and tabulate data as to expenditures under the following heading: "Amount," "Date or Dates," "Name and Address of Recipient," "Purpose." Prepare such tabulation in accordance with the following example:

Amount	Date or Dates—Name and Address of Recipient—Purpose
$1,750.00	7-11 Doe Printing Co., 3214 Blank Ave., St. Louis, Printing and mailing circulars on the "Marshbanks Bill."

REGISTRATIONS

The following registrations were submitted for the second calendar quarter 1957:

(NOTE.—The form used for registration is reproduced below. In the interest of economy in the RECORD, questions are not repeated, only the essential answers are printed, and are indicated by their respective letter and number.)

FILE TWO COPIES WITH THE SECRETARY OF THE SENATE AND FILE THREE COPIES WITH THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES:

This page (page 1) is designed to supply identifying data; and page 2 (on the back of this page) deals with financial data.

PLACE AN "X" BELOW THE APPROPRIATE LETTER OR FIGURE IN THE BOX AT THE RIGHT OF THE "REPORT" HEADING BELOW:

"PRELIMINARY" REPORT ("Registration"): To "register," place an "X" below the letter "P" and fill out page 1 only.

Year: 19______ ◀

REPORT

PURSUANT TO FEDERAL REGULATION OF LOBBYING ACT

P	QUARTER
	1st	2d	3d	4th

(Mark one square only)

NOTE ON ITEM "A".—(a) IN GENERAL. This "Report" form may be used by either an organization or an individual, as follows:

(i) "Employee".—To file as an "employee", state (in Item "B") the name, address, and nature of business of the "employer". (If the "employee" is a firm [such as a law firm or public relations firm], partners and salaried staff members of such firm may join in filing a Report as an "employee".)

(ii) "Employer".—To file as an "employer", write "None" in answer to Item "B".

(b) SEPARATE REPORTS. An agent or employee should not attempt to combine his Report with the employer's Report.

(i) Employers subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their agents or employees.

(ii) Employees subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their employers.

A. ORGANIZATION OR INDIVIDUAL FILING:

1. State name, address, and nature of business.

2. If this Report is for an Employer, list names of agents or employees who will file Reports for this Quarter.

NOTE ON ITEM "B".—Reports by Agents or Employees. An employee is to file, each quarter, as many Reports as he has employers, except that: (a) If a particular undertaking is jointly financed by a group of employers, the group is to be considered as one employer, but all members of the group are to be named, and the contribution of each member is to be specified; (b) if the work is done in the interest of one person but payment therefor is made by another, a single Report—naming both persons as "employers"—is to be filed each quarter.

B. EMPLOYER.—State name, address, and nature of business. If there is no employer, write "None."

NOTE ON ITEM "C".—(a) The expression "in connection with legislative interests," as used in this Report, means "in connection with attempting, directly or indirectly, to influence the passage or defeat of legislation." "The term 'legislation' means bills, resolutions, amendments, nominations, and other matters pending or proposed in either House of Congress, and includes any other matter which may be the subject of action by either House"—§ 302 (e).

(b) Before undertaking any activities in connection with legislative interests, organizations and individuals subject to the Lobbying Act are required to file a "Preliminary" Report (Registration).

(c) After beginning such activities, they must file a "Quarterly" Report at the end of each calendar quarter in which they have either received or expended anything of value in connection with legislative interests.

C. LEGISLATIVE INTERESTS, AND PUBLICATIONS in connection therewith:

1. State approximately how long legislative interests are to continue. If receipts and expenditures in connection with legislative interests have terminated, ☐ place an "X" in the box at the left, so that this Office will no longer expect to receive Reports.

2. State the general legislative interests of the person filing and set forth the specific legislative interests by reciting: (a) Short titles of statutes and bills; (b) House and Senate numbers of bills, where known; (c) citations of statutes, where known; (d) whether for or against such statutes and bills.

3. In the case of those publications which the person filing has caused to be issued or distributed in connection with legislative interests, set forth: (a) Description, (b) quantity distributed; (c) date of distribution, (d) name of printer or publisher (if publications were paid for by person filing) or name of donor (if publications were received as a gift).

(Answer items 1, 2, and 3 in the space below. Attach additional pages if more space is needed.)

4. If this is a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) rather than a "Quarterly" Report, state below what the nature and amount of anticipated expenses will be; and if for an agent or employee, state also what the daily, monthly, or annual rate of compensation is to be. If this is a "Quarterly" Report disregard this item "C 4" and fill out items "D" and "E" on the back of this page. Do not attempt to combine a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) with a "Quarterly" Report.◀

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

A Word of Appreciation to Army Legislative Liaison

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ELMER J. HOLLAND
OF PENNSYLVANIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, August 22, 1957

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Speaker, as this first session of the 85th Congress draws to a close, it is only fitting and proper that we look about and thank those agencies and persons in the Government who have helped us discharge our obligations and responsibilities, as Members of Congress, to our individual constituents, to our districts, and to the Nation.

In the forefront of these alert and responsive people are the personnel of the Army legislation liaison, under the able leadership of Maj. Gen. J. H. "Mike" Michaelis and Col. Donald "Sandy" MacGrain. They have with them as fine a staff of intelligent and cooperative young men, as, I am sure, the Army can assemble. The results are self-evident. We, the Members of Congress, can call for Army liaison no matter what the situation and be assured of a correct, prompt, and courteous response. If we need an officer by our side to meet with visitors to our office, we can be sure they will be there and tide us over smoothly and smartly.

Many of my colleagues have expressed these same sentiments on many occasions. I feel that they should be officially and properly reflected in the RECORD before we adjourn so that there will be some tangible evidence of our appreciation for Army liaison's fine work in behalf of us all.

Equal Rights Amendment

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CHARLES S. GUBSER
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, August 22, 1957

Mr. GUBSER. Mr. Speaker, on July 19 several Members spoke in favor of the equal-rights amendment. I regret that

I was unable to participate in the discussion at that time and under leave to express my remarks would like to again reiterate my unqualified support for an equal-rights amendment.

One argument against the equal-rights amendment on which great stress is laid by opponents is that the passage of the amendment would cause endless confusion and litigation. Our whole history refutes such fear.

We have always believed that a bad law should be changed in the interest of freedom, liberty, and democracy. The equal-rights amendment to the Constitution would not be accomplished in a day, and every State would have time to amend her own laws before the amendment actually went into effect.

Of course there would be litigation, for every new law is subjected to litigation necessary to establish its constitutionality, interpretation, and application to our lives. Why should fear of changing laws prevent passage of the equal-rights amendment granting full citizenship to more than half our population?

I sincerely hope that Congress will recognize its responsibility and cause early passage of the equal-rights amendment.

Do-Nothing Congress

OF

HON. WILL E. NEAL

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 22, 1957

Mr. NEAL. Mr. Speaker, if the 1st session of the 85th Congress deserves this sobriquet, it can be construed to mean the public will be the principal beneficiary.

It is true that the main efforts of this session have been directed toward making appropriations for domestic activities, Defense Establishment, and various programs of aid to foreign nations. Aside from attention to civil rights, no other major legislation of far-reaching effect on the national economy has been approved. This is a good omen. Congress for many years has been besieged by minority groups seeking legislation designed to relieve or materially benefit their special problems, resulting in added administrative agencies and a maze of Government intrusion into the affairs of helpless citizens.

The immediate result has been big government, heavy taxation, overgrown budgets, and inflation, to say nothing of the tendency to encourage evasions and dishonesty on the part of many citizens.

The average citizen no longer enjoys the freedom to engage in any enterprise without first employing an attorney to explore the possibilities of defeat or failure through the application of some public law. The prohibitions imposed by laws enacted and presently on the statute books are contributing more and more to discourage initiative, not only individual, but corporate. There is just too much law interfering with the proverbial freedom of progressive minded individuals and groups who up to now have succeeded in making America the outstanding creative Nation of the world.

Reviewing our international relations during the past decade reveals less than satisfactory success in challenging Communist influence in many parts of the Old World. It approaches the point of alarm when we see the trends in areas of our own hemisphere, the Caribbean, Central and South America, becoming more and more tolerant to the guiles of communism. Congress and the administration should manifest more direct concern for the stabilization of governments in these areas where our influence offers more assurance of creating and maintaining democratic strength to oppose the Communist threat through our back doors. The Old World has been the seat of power struggle during all history and we see no visible reason to expect anything different in the future. It is not to be expected that in the usual course of human experience, Russian communism can succeed in holding so many divisive peoples under her yoke for long.

The spirit of national freedom initiated in our Declaration of Independence and frequently enunciated through all our international contacts, has become altogether too strong among the smaller free nations to permit foreign domination and mass enslavement.

American democracy can be the instrument through which Communist philosophy will cease to appeal to civilized people, provided we discard our fears of Russian strength, unite and solidify the forces of our continental neighbors, and return to a national policy of economy, thrift, less exorbitant taxation, and a sound dollar of consistent value. A strong America of determined people need entertain no fear of Old World supremacy.

A Visit to the Dominican Republic, the Land Columbus Loved

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GEORGE S. LONG

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 22, 1957

Mr. LONG. Mr. Speaker, I have just returned from a week's visit to the Dominican Republic on the island of Hispaniola, in the Caribbean Sea.

Mrs. Long and I had a delightful visit to the Dominican Republic, where we attended the festivities in celebration of the inauguration of Gen. Hector Trujillo Molina as President. We returned from 6 days in the island Republic, filled with pleasant impressions of the graciousness of the people and the beauty of the country.

We were welcomed at the General Andrews Airport by Dr. Alvaro Logrono Batlle, Minister and Assistant Chief of the Protocol Division; United States Ambassador Joseph S. Farland, Otto Vega, official in the President's chancery, and by Deputies Marino Caceres, Wenceslao Troncoso Sanchez, and Arturo Caventy, accompanied by their wives Isabel Troncoso de Caceras, Rosa de Troncoso, and Marisa Thomen de Calventy. We enjoyed our reservations at the Ambassador Hotel, and have only praise for its comforts and superb service.

At the inaugural parade, we were privileged to have a seat along with delegates from 42 other countries. The parade itself was colorful and entertaining. The generalissimo wore a cream-colored uniform with a dark blue cap and neckband, braided with gold. Major units in the parade were drawn from the army, navy, air force, and national guard. For 3 hours we watched the well-trained and equipped units display their precision marching, and the air force put on an outstanding performance with Vampire jets.

Ciudad Trujillo is a lovely place. It is extremely clean and is dotted with magnificently landscaped parks. Avenida George Washington, named for our own first President, extends for miles along the seacoast and is lined with tall graceful palms, making it one of the most beautiful drives in the world. The obelisk in its path is reminiscent of our own Washington Monument.

Mrs. Long and I visited stores and found that they were well stocked and people were shopping much as they do here in the United States. We also visited many offices and businesses.

Outside the city, it was our pleasure to view several of the nicely kept sugar plantations and fruit farms. We saw the people industriously at work in their fields and around the sugar refineries, which were preparing to be opened for the new season.

The climax of our visit came on Friday night at a dance at the national palace, honoring the generalissimo and his brother, the President. It was most inspiring to see how the people who assembled there loved their officers, and to see the high regard these officers have for the people.

Both the generalissimo and President Hector Trujillo remained until the dance was over—in fact, I am sure the generalissimo remained until 1:30 in the morning. It was really admirable to see the way in which he remained as friendly and gracious at the end of the dance as he had been at the beginning of the ceremonies, although he had had more than 6 days' strenuous activity, attending dances, receptions, reviewing the Army, Navy, and Air Force.

Everyone with whom we had contact voted the officials of the Dominican Republic most gracious hosts. I would like to add my own and Mrs. Long's vote of thanks for the many Dominican kindnesses that made our visit to the land Columbus loved so memorable an occasion, and to extend our best wishes for the continued well-being and prosperity of the Dominican people under the skillful administration of President Trujillo.

I felt that my friends will be glad to have this report of my visit to the Dominican Republic.

Henceforth when I have occasion to speak about our great friend and ally, the Christian Dominican Republic, I can assure my colleagues that I will be able to speak with the authority gained from first-hand investigation—not from facts gained by hearsay, or even upon the advice of the experts on the Caribbean who are always available to me.

Memorial for Those Lost on U. S. S. Arizona

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. OVERTON BROOKS

OF LOUISIANA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, August 22, 1957

Mr. BROOKS of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, on August 19, 1957, H. R. 5809 came before the House and was passed by unanimous consent. This is a measure introduced by my able colleague, the delegate from Hawaii, Mr. Burns, and has for its purpose the construction of a memorial to the memory of those who lost their lives on December 7, 1941, in the sinking of the U. S. S. Arizona. I am proud of the fact that I was chairman of the subcommittee which heard testimony on this measure and which piloted it through the Congress. I am honored that I was permitted to help shepherd the measure through the House on August 19, 1957.

Mr. Speaker, on December 7, 1941, there were 1,473 men and officers serving aboard the U. S. S. Arizona. Of this total complement, 1,157 were declared dead or missing as a result of this most treacherous attack on December 7, 1941, which day President Roosevelt declared to be a day dedicated to infamy. One hundred and sixty-one bodies were accounted for following the dastardly attack on Pearl Harbor; but, today, the final remains of 996 American boys are still entombed in the hull of the U. S. S. Arizona. This ship, by decree of this Government, is the final resting place of almost 1,000 American men wearing the uniform of the United States Navy; and if there is a hallowed place on earth, this surely is the place.

My home State of Louisiana paid a fearful price when the losses of that black December day are added up. My State lost 24 young men who came from all parts of the State, one of them being from my home city of Shreveport; and the bodies of these men lie today entombed in this sunken ship. Their names and home addresses are: Achilles Arnaud, Arnaudville, La.; Claude Duran Arnold, Jr., Lake Charles, La.; Wilburn James Ashmore, Elizabeth, La.; Miller Xavier Aydell, French Settlement, La.; Malcolm Clark, Pollock, La.; John Quitman Davis, Tangipahoa, La.; Louis Felix Ducrest, Broussard, La.; Charles Donald Frederick, Albeville, La.; Ivan Joseph Huval, Folsom, La.; Floyd Baxter Jones, Shreveport, La.; Joseph McNeil Legros, Norse, La.; Jessie Huall Murphy, New Orleans, La.; "J" "D" Naylor, DeRidder, La.; Amos Paul Pace, Robert Leo Pritchett, Jr., New Orleans, La.; Wilburn Carle Roberts, Pollock, La.; William Edison Stoddard, Vinton, La.; Robert Tyson, Oak Grove, La.; John William Whitaker, Jr., Pollock, La.; Adrian Delton Williams, Gonzales, La.; Robert Kenneth Willis, Jr., Pineville, La.; Vernon Wesley Woods, Springhill, La.; Thomas Raymond Jones, Tallulah, La.; Walter Samuel Savage, Jr., Monroe, La.

A number of years ago, Mr. Speaker, I had the privilege of visiting Pearl Harbor and going by harbor boat to the wooden tramway which at that time connected with the superstructure which was the portion of the U. S. S. Arizona which remained above water several hundred yards offshore in the Pearl Harbor. This ship is located in an arm of the Pearl Harbor. It is about 400 feet from shore; and lies on the bottom in between 36 and 38 feet of water. Within recent years, the ship seems to have settled somewhat and now about the only portions of it above water are a few funnels of air vents, forming a part of the upper portion of the ship. It is awe inspiring to be able to stand on the steel deck of what remains above water of that great battlewagon. It is impressive to be able to uncover one's head and watch Old Glory, flying from the original mast and waving in the breeze. It brings one nearer to God as he ponders prayerfully on the lives of those 1,000 Americans who peacefully slept that Sunday morning safely, so they thought, within the steel sides of this great ship.

The American people have not forgotten those brave Americans. Although 17 years have passed since then, I believe it is yet the proper time to provide by popular subscription a memorial, either on this ship or adjacent to it, befitting the rare courage and pristine patriotism of those 1,000 Americans who sleep now and forever in the waters of the Pearl Harbor of Hawaii.

Campaign Against Certain Latin American Republics

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. B. CARROLL REECE

OF TENNESSEE
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, August 22, 1957

Mr. REECE of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the New York Times on Thursday, August 22, calls our attention to another interesting chapter in the unprecedented campaign of the gentleman from Oregon against the sovereign governments of certain allied Latin American Republics. The gentleman's latest exploit entailed his unusual appearance before a Federal grand jury in Washington. This particular grand jury was impaneled on December 27, 1956, and is reportedly investigating the disappearance of Dr. Jesus de Galindez and Gerald Murphy. One would gather from reading the Times that this story was published as a result of a press release from the gentleman's own office in the House of Representatives. There can be no doubt that the gentleman's espousal of the revolutionary cause of certain Latin American exiles has brought him publicity not usually attendant to the office of a freshman Congressman. The fact that he was asked to appear on the Meet the Press program is indicative of the attention his activities have aroused. While there are very few, if any, of us who do not enjoy the favors of press coverage of our activities, there should be some restraints on the methods of procuring public recognition.

The grand jury is an institution basic to the fundamentals of Anglo-American jurisprudence. It was originally conceived and continues to be regarded as the only practical method by which a free society could bring to justice its enemies. In proceedings before the grand jury one is not protected by the normal safeguards of justice such as are available in open court. The availability of such safeguards would necessarily hamper and probably completely thwart the scope of investigation of the grand jury. Substituted for these basic safeguards is the historical secrecy of grand jury proceedings. Without such confidence, names and reputations of many innocent persons would be destroyed. The grand jury is one of those inviolate institutions of American justice which has gained the admiration and respect of peoples throughout the world. It is for this reason that I am amazed to see a Member of this body utilizing a Federal grand jury as a vehicle for promoting his own political well-being. What other reason could the gentleman have for making public statements from his office in the House of Representatives to the effect that he had made an hour appearance before this jury?

Not only did the gentleman announce that he had made such an appearance, but according to the New York Times, he volunteered the contents of some of his testimony. According to his press release, the gentleman from Oregon made two specific suggestions. One was that the grand jury indict Trujillo himself, and the other was that the grand jury call the Dominican Ambassador to the United States as a witness. The fact that the gentleman made public these suggestions is not nearly as amazing as the fact that he, a lawyer, seriously made such proposals to a Federal grand jury. Aside from the propriety of a Member of this body suggesting American legal action against the sovereign of an allied country and its duly accredited representative to the United States, the gentleman as a graduate lawyer must be aware of the traditional rules of international law in this regard.

In 1812 the great Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, John Marshall, who more than any other jurist was responsible for the development of American law, had occasion to address himself to the subject of American regard for the sovereign rights of other nations. Chief Justice Marshall made the following wise and prudent comments:

> One sovereign being in no respect amenable to another; and being bound by obligations of the highest not to degrade the dignity of his nation, by placing himself or > its sovereign rights within the jurisdiction of another, can be supposed to enter a foreign territory only under an express license, or in the confidence that the immunities belonging to his independent sovereign station, though not expressly stipulated, are reserved by implication, and will be extended to him.

>
> * * * A foreign sovereign is not understood as intending to subject himself to a jurisdiction incompatible with his dignity, and the dignity of his nation.
>
> The assent of the sovereign to the very important and extensive exemptions from territorial jurisdiction which are admitted to attach to foreign ministers, is implied from the considerations that, without such exemption, every sovereign would hazard his own dignity by employing a public minister abroad. His minister would owe temporary and local allegiance to a foreign prince, and would be less competent to the objects of his mission. A sovereign committing the interests of his nation with a foreign power, to the care of a person whom he has selected for that purpose, cannot intend to subject his minister in any degree to that power; and, therefore, a consent to receive him, implies a consent that he shall possess those privileges which his principal intended he should retain—privileges which are essential to the dignity of his sovereign, and to the duties he is bound to perform.

Throughout our history, learned justices and statesmen and private citizens have restated in words far more meaningful than mine, the absolute precept of equality of sovereigns and the inviolability of their actions to the jurisdiction and judgment of the courts of other lands. The principle that the conduct of one independent government cannot be questioned in the courts of another rests upon the highest considerations of international comity and expediency. As Mr. Justice Clarke of the Supreme Court said in 1917, to do otherwise would "imperil the amicable relations between governments and vex the peace of nations." The very fact that an American grand jury, under principles of American and international law, has no jurisdiction over Generalissimo Trujillo or Ambassador De Moya makes more reprehensible the suggestions of the gentleman from Oregon. Since there could be no such indictment or summons process issue from this grand jury, the gentleman's suggestions can only serve the purpose of prejudicing grand-jury deliberations and promoting the gentleman's own political ambitions.

I cannot understand why the gentleman from Oregon was called to testify before this grand jury and thus allow him to use this sacrosanct institution as a political sounding board. The gentleman's anti-Dominican campaign has no place in grand-jury deliberations. From his previous statements both on the floor and to the press, the gentleman has not indicated knowledge of any concrete evidence which could be of benefit to this grand jury.

I trust that in the future, the grand jury will exercise more restraint in calling witnesses and confine itself to the detection and prosecution of citizens and residents who may be guilty of some violation of law. An intrusion into the delicate field of international relations by a Federal grand jury is unprecedented.

Surplus Disposal Program

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM S. HILL

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 22, 1957

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, in the surplus-disposal program by the United States Department of Agriculture, the Marketing Service Food Distribution Division has been doing a first-rate job.

I have always felt that in the disposition of surplus agricultural commodities to our friends in foreign countries we should at all times be definitely certain that the surpluses reach the people in desperate need of food and wherever possible it should be distributed in such a way so those who receive it are informed in a positive way who is supplying or donating the food.

Of course the ideal way to distribute food to areas of the world suffering seriously for want of food supplies should be through charitable organizations with a properly developed method of distributing the food.

In these remarks I am placing in the RECORD I find a most encouraging sign of following out the ideas I have expressed for many years and I include the list of the agencies approved for participation in the foreign distribution of surplus commodities under the Agricultural Act of 1949, as amended.

It is a wonderful thing to know we have these religious and semireligious organizations that are in a position to distribute food directly to the families in want throughout the world. Surplus farm commodities distributed in this manner, in my personal opinion, contributes greatly to the proper attitude that we wish the rank and file of the population in every area of the world to have toward our Republic. This is a positive way to "win friends and influence people." When friends are made through this source of distributing our farm surpluses they are friends indeed. The list is as follows:

AGENCIES APPROVED FOR PARTICIPATION IN THE FOREIGN DISTRIBUTION OF SURPLUS COMMODITIES UNDER SECTION 416 OF THE AGRICULTURAL ACT OF 1949, AS AMENDED

American Friends of Austrian Children, Inc., 202 East 19th Street, ninth floor, New York, N. Y.[1]

American Friends Service Committee, Inc., 20 South 12th Street, Philadelphia, Pa.[1]

American Fund for Czechoslovak Refugees, Inc., 1775 Broadway, New York, N. Y.

American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee, Inc., 3 East 54th Street, New York, N. Y.[1]

American Korean Foundation, 345 East 46th Street, New York, N. Y.[1]

American Middle East Relief, Inc., 350 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y.[1]

American Mission to Greeks, Inc., 233 West 42d Street, Post Office Box 423, New York, N. Y.[1]

American National Red Cross, Washington, D. C.[1]

Assemblies of God—Foreign Service Committee, 160 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y.[1]

Catholic Relief Services—NCWC, 451 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y.[1]

Christian Children's Fund, China Building, Richmond, Va.

Church World Service, Inc., 215 Fourth Avenue, New York, N. Y.[1]

Congregational Christian Service Committee, 110 East 29th Street, New York, N. Y.

Cooperative for American Remittances to Everywhere, Inc. (CARE), 660 First Avenue, New York, N. Y.[1]

First Aid for Hungary, Inc., 6 East 65th Street, New York, N. Y.

Foster Parents' Plan, Inc., 352 Fourth Avenue, New York, N. Y.[1]

Hadassah, Inc., 3 Thomas Circle, Washington, D. C.; 65 East 52d Street, New York, N. Y.[1]

International Rescue Committee, Inc., 62 West 45th Street, New York, N. Y.[1]

Iran Foundation, Inc., 6807 Empire State Building, 350 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y.[1]

Lutheran World Relief, Inc., 50 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y.[1]

Mennonite Central Committee, Inc., Akron, Pa.[1]

National Council of Young Israel, 3 West 16th Street, New York, N. Y.

Pestalozzi Foundation of America, Inc., 41 East 57th Street, New York, N. Y.

Romanian Welfare, Inc., 22 East 60th Street, New York, N. Y.[1]

Save the Children Federation, Inc., 345 East 46th Street, New York, N. Y.[1]

Tolstoy Foundation, Inc., 989 8th Avenue, New York, N. Y.[1]

Unitarian Service Committee, Inc., 345 East 46th Street, New York, N. Y.[1]

United Lithuanian Relief Fund of America, Inc., 105 Grand Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.[1]

United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund (UNICEF), United Nations Plaza, New York, N. Y.[1]

United Ukranian American Relief Committee, Inc., 866 North Seventh Street, Philadelphia, Pa.[1]

Volunteer Border Relief, Inc., Post Office Box 981, Harlingen, Tex.[1]

World Relief Commission of the National Association of Evangelicals, 12–19 Jackson Avenue, Long Island City, N. Y.[1]

Mr. Speaker, in addition to this very substantial list of organizations participating in our distribution of surplus products abroad, I include other information on the disposal of our surplus commodities at home:

DISTRIBUTION OF SURPLUS COMMODITIES

Food donations by the United States Department of Agriculture reached a record high in the fiscal year ended June 30, under an active Department effort to dispose of surpluses. A total of 2,818,400,000 pounds of food was donated during the year to recipients here and abroad through the direct distribution program conducted by USDA's Agricultural Marketing Service.

Distribution domestically was increased to 1,043 million pounds, up 32 percent over the total for fiscal year 1956. Foreign distribution rose to 1,775,400,000 pounds, an increase of 45 percent over the same period a year ago.

In this country, the biggest increases were made in distribution of surplus commodities for use in school lunch programs. A total of 426,300,000 pounds of food was distributed for this purpose during the year, an increase of 61 percent over the previous year. Distribution to institutions totaled 148,600,000 pounds, a gain of 14 percent. Distribution to needy persons in family units accounted for the largest quantity of food distributed domestically, with the total of 468,100,000 pounds up 18 percent over a year ago.

In addition to these uses, large quantities of surplus foods were used during the fiscal year in the relief of victims of natural disasters. Top priority on foods available for distribution is given to such use. For example, nearly 24 million pounds of food was distributed for immediate relief of last August's hurricane victims in Puerto Rico. Subsequently, Puerto Rico entered the continuing program of distribution to needy persons, to aid in long-term rehabilitation after completion of the emergency feeding. Large quantities of foods were also used in emergency feeding when spring floods, tornadoes, and hurricane struck Louisiana, Kentucky, and Virginia, driving persons from their homes and forcing them temporarily to rely on community feeding.

In addition, surplus foods were rushed to the aid of refugees from Hungary, following the October revolution. Thirty million pounds of food was made available to aid refugees in camps established in Austria. In addition, some 175,000 pounds of food was used to aid Hungarian refugees after they arrived in this country, in centers such as Camp Kilmer in New Jersey.

Foods donated under the direct distribution program are currently being used by over 12 million school children taking part in school-lunch programs, and about 1.4 million persons in charitable institutions. In addition, about 3 million needy persons in family units are currently receiving donated commodities.

Distribution of surplus commodities to schools and institutions is made in all 48 States, the District of Columbia and 5 Territories. A total of 39 States and Puerto Rico are currently taking part in distribution of surplus foods to needy persons, with 949 counties and 80 additional cities participating in those States.

The number of agencies taking part in the foreign donations program increased to 24 during the year, and the number of countries in which food was distributed to needy persons increased to 88. Distribution of surplus foods in these foreign countries is made by voluntary United States agencies, with commodities donated to them after provision has been made for the needs of all eligible recipients in this country.

In view of these statistics, it is clear that the Department of Agriculture has moved a tremendous quantity of surplus foods into consumption, foreign and domestic. In fact, the reduction of inventories through donations and other disposal programs has been so substantial for most items that eligible outlets could readily absorb larger quantities than are available on a continuing basis. For example, at one time the Commodity Credit Corporation held sufficient quantities of butter to permit donation to the school-lunch program, welfare and institutional distribution programs and to foreign outlets as well. Since January, stocks and acquisitions of butter by CCC have permitted distribution only to the school-lunch program. Similarly in the case of salad oil and shortening, donation to foreign outlets had to be eliminated during the past fiscal year for lack of availability.

Donation of dry beans to foreign outlets also had to be stopped in the third and fourth quarters of fiscal 1957 and the quantities of nonfat dry milk for donation abroad had to be reduced for lack of adequate supplies in Government hands. At the present time, donations of rice for foreign relief are limited to broken kernel or brewer's rice.

Tax-Reform Plan

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ANTONI N. SADLAK
OF CONNECTICUT
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, August 22, 1957

Mr. SADLAK. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I wish to list a number of organizations that have indicated their support of my tax-reform plan, H. R. 6452. This list, Mr. Speaker, is not confined to organizations in my home State of Connecticut which I have the honor to represent as the Congressman at Large, and in that capacity, represent the largest constituency on the Republican side of this House, but the organizations, which have volunteered their endorsement to H. R. 6452 as their basis for individual and corporate relief from our present confiscatory taxes, are nationwide.

May I once again stress the fact, Mr. Speaker, that the largest beneficial effect of the provisions of my bill will fall to those taxpayers in the $6,000 bracket and under. The total relief to individuals will approximate $10.6 billion over the 5-year forward scheduling and approximately $4.2 billion relief to businesses.

The list is as follows:

Optimist Club, Springfield, Ill.

Michigan Manufacturers' Association, Detroit, Mich.

Associated Industries of Rhode Island, Inc., Providence, R. I.

Chamber of Commerce, Bowling Green, Ohio.

Connecticut Farmers' Cooperative Association, East Hartford, Conn.

Associated Industries of Kentucky, Louisville, Ky.

Manufacturers' Association of Lackawanna County, Scranton, Pa.

Address by the Honorable James C. Davis, of Georgia

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM M. TUCK

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 22, 1957

Mr. TUCK. Mr. Speaker, under leave heretofore granted me to extend my remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, I am glad to include a most able and timely address delivered by our distinguished colleague from Georgia, Representative JAMES C. DAVIS, before the Tennessee Federation of Constitutional Government, at Nashville, Tenn., on August 16, 1957. The address is as follows:

SPEECH OF REPRESENTATIVE JAMES C. DAVIS TO THE TENNESSEE FEDERATION OF CONSTITUTIONAL GOVERNMENT, NASHVILLE, TENN., AUGUST 16, 1957

It is a privilege for me to accept the invitation to speak to this group of Tennesseans. You are striving to preserve a right which belongs to us, a possession which is precious to us, which is at this moment in great danger of destruction—namely, constitutional government. The Government in Washington is stretching its long arm into your State and community, through the Federal courts, to strike down State sovereignty, to destroy local self-government, to deprive you and your legally chosen school authorities of the power to operate your public schools as you have been operating them and as you want to continue to operate them. It proposes to substitute instead control by court orders and edicts fashioned upon a new philosophy which stalks through our land, and which we are told we must accept whether we like it or not.

It is demanded of us that we cast aside our beliefs, that we surrender our convictions, that we give up customs under which we were reared and to which we subscribe. Meek obedience is demanded. Resistance is threatened with dire consequences and penalties.

The situation, indeed, is critical; the times are perilous.

Why have we come suddenly face to face with this unbelievable situation? It stems from a wrongful and fraudulent usurpation of authority and power by the United States Supreme Court, a usurpation of power which amounts to tyranny.

In every section of America today earnest protests are being voiced against the arbitrary, dictatorial action of the Federal Supreme Court, and its wrongful usurpation of powers it does not possess. Americans have always been quick to recognize and to protest injustice in the courts. It is significant that when the Colonies revolted against the injustice and tyranny of George III, the Declaration of Independence complained of judges who were dependent on the will of the King alone for the tenure of their offices, the amount and payment of their salaries, and that the administration of justice was obstructed by the sovereign power. These acts of tyranny and oppression were intolerable then to a free and liberty-loving people just as similar acts are intolerable now.

We are facing today, I believe, the most critical period which America has faced since 1776, when that small group of men met in Philadelphia to choose between security and peace on the one hand, which could be purchased at the price of continued submission to tyrannical oppression, or revolution and war with the world's greatest power on the other hand. With the certain knowledge that years of misery and suffering lay ahead, that they would fight against heavy odds, and that defeat and death might be the portion of everyone who participated, they believed in their hearts that free government was worth the price they had to pay. They threw their all into the balance as they fought for it. Our Government of liberty, freedom, and opportunity today is the result of that choice and of the fight which they made.

Freedom was not just a topic of idle conversation with them. "Integrity" was more than a word in the dictionary. Benjamin Franklin, Thomas Jefferson, their associates, and their followers preached the doctrine that resistance to tyranny is obedience to God. They had the courage to practice what they preached.

When victory finally came to our forefathers they set up not a centralized government with unlimited powers, but a republic of sovereign States. And this was done for the purpose of guaranteeing local self-government to the citizen. They provided that the Federal Government should function as three coequal departments, each of the three to be separate from and independent of the others. The foundation of this free Government was a written Constitution. It was put in writing so that its lasting principles would not be subject to passing whims or fancies. They provided a specific way to amend the document, if changing times and conditions ever required it. All of us are familiar with that method of amending. Nothing less than a vote of two-thirds of the Congress to be ratified by three-fourths of the States will serve to change it. Without such concurrent action by those overwhelming majorities not a sentence or a word of the Constitution can legally be changed. Both those who wrote it and those who adopted that Constitution knew the need for reciprocal checks and balances in maintaining free government. George Washington, the Father of our Country, the greatest general, patriot, and statesman, knew that freedom and liberty would be preserved if these reciprocal checks and balances were maintained. He knew these checks and balances would be maintained if the Constitution were respected and followed, and if it were amended only in the manner provided by the instrument itself. Warning against any other method of change, he said in his farewell address on September 17, 1796:

"If, in the opinion of the people, the distribution or modification of the constitutional powers be, in any particular wrong, let it be corrected by an amendment, in the way which the Constitution designates. But let there be no change by usurpation; for though this, in one instance, may be the instrument of good, it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed."

Thomas Jefferson feared, as George Washington did, wrongful usurpation of power by the Supreme Court. Jefferson expressed himself far more vigorously on the subject than did Washington. On this subject Jefferson said:

"The judiciary of the United States is a subtle corps of sappers and miners constantly working underground to undermine the foundations of our confederated fabric. They are construing our Constitution from a coordination of general and special governments to a general and supreme one alone. * * * Having found from experience that impeachment is an impractical thing, a mere scarecrow, they consider themselves secure for life; they skulk from responsibility to public opinion * * * an opinion is huddled up in a conclave, perhaps by a majority of one, delivered as if unanimous, and with the silent acquiescence of lazy or timid associates, by a crafty Chief Judge, who sophisticates the law to his mind, by the turn of his own reasoning."

Jefferson, that stanch believer in individual liberty, that fine advocate of States rights and local self-government said this about the provisions in the 10th amendment:

"I consider the foundation of the Constitution as laid on this ground: that 'all powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States or to the people.' To take a single step beyond the boundaries thus specially drawn around the powers of Congress is to take possession of a boundless field of power, no longer susceptible of any definition."

Today our free Government is face to face with the danger of destruction which George Washington and Thomas Jefferson feared, and against which they warned us in the words I have just repeated. That Court, with a brazeness and boldness almost unbelievable is undertaking to amend the Constitution and make statutory law through so-called judicial decisions and court opinions. In the school segregation cases the Court has arrogated unto itself, first, the functions of Congress and the States to change the Constitution; second, the function of Congress to make enforcement law, and third, the functions of the Executive Department to carry out such enforcement. This is rank usurpation of authority the Court does not possess.

In the structure of our Government there is no fact more certain than this; the nine Justices of the Supreme Court cannot change our Constitution.

The Congress with its 531 Members of the House and Senate cannot change it.

The President of the United States, with all his power, cannot change it.

Neither one of these alone can amend the Constitution. All three together cannot amend it.

It can be changed only by an amendment voted for by two-thirds of the House and Senate, and by three-fourths of the sovereign States of the Union.

Any attempt to change our Constitution in any other manner is a fraud—a gross fraud which it is the duty of all patriotic citizens to expose and to prevent. Again I am reminded of the philosophy of Jefferson and Franklin, that resistance to tyranny is obedience to God.

The principle involved here goes far beyond our right to operate our schools, although that in itself is a valued right, and a right we are not called upon to surrender merely because the Supreme Court undertakes to usurp power it does not possess.

The real issue is: Shall we permit the Supreme Court, one Department of Government, whose powers are defined and limited by the Constitution, to successfully assert the power to change that precious document, by reading into it language it does not contain, and which those who wrote the Constitution and its amendments, never intended it should contain?

The question is, if changing conditions require a change in the Constitution, shall it be changed as the Constitution says, by drawing an amendment with definite and specific language which shall receive the people's overwhelming stamp of approval through a vote of two-thirds of the Congress, plus three-fourths of the States? This is the legal way.

Or, shall it be amended by the arbitrary act of nine men, to whom this authority has not been given, who are not elected, and who can in no sense of the word be said to represent the will and wishes of the people regarding amendments to the Constitution?

We have amended the Constitution 22 times in the past by following legal and regular procedure. The 22d amendment was proposed in 1947 and certified in 1951. What has happened that we no longer must submit amendments to the Congress for a two-thirds vote and to the States for a three-fourths vote?

We have not yet lost this right to have a voice in adopting amendments to the Constitution, or in rejecting them. But this Supreme Court decision of May 17, 1954, is a brazen effort to destroy this right.

Can the Court today strike down the accepted and declared meaning of the Constitution? Can it nullify a construction on the exact point involved, which has been followed and approved in dozens of instances, by the Supreme Court itself and courts of many other jurisdictions, and in doing so rely upon nothing but its own arbitrary will, to support the decision, and read into the Constitution language which is not there? If it can do this today, then it can tomorrow or next month strike down any other provision which does not conform to its sociological beliefs. While it may be Georgia or Tennessee which suffers today from such wrongful usurpation of authority, next year it may be Oregon, Maine, or Illinois.

While the subject today is schools, its next usurpation may involve taxes, or criminal law, or the right to own property. Once the precedent is established—once we have acknowledged the right of the Supreme Court to trifle with the Constitution, there is no limit to its possibilities.

Those of us who support local self-government and States rights have been slow to believe that we could lose these precious rights. We know now that we can lose them. We know now that if we are going to keep them we must arouse ourselves. We must throw off apathy and indifference.

The right to be segregated goes back for thousands of years before our Government was established. That right never was challenged until this present Supreme Court decided to make new law on the subject. Yet the Court is not a lawmaking body. Congress alone has the right to legislate and introduce new matter into the body of our law. Congress, in the proper exercise of its function, has time and time again refused to make new law on this subject. There is no question about the fact that Congress alone can change the law and that the Court cannot.

For the nine men who sit upon the Supreme Court to usurp these powers which do not belong to them, but which belong exclusively to Congress and to the States, is a monumental fraud which is shocking, outrageous, and reprehensible.

Such fraudulent conduct imposes no obligation upon the States to acquiesce, or upon the people to bow the neck to this new form of tyranny.

Let me say to you, as we counsel together, do not be concerned about what is said by the Communists, the pinkos, the radicals, the NAACP, the ADA, the one-worlders, and all that motley group of crackpots who are clamoring for desegregation and mongrelization. These groups of organized minorities are chanting a chorus that opposition to the fraudulent order of the Supreme Court is defiance of law. Of course that is not true. The decision of May 17, 1954, is not law. It is an attempt to make law where none existed before, by a nonlawmaking body. The defiance of law comes from the other side of this dispute. It is an arrogant defiance of law for the Supreme Court to usurp authority which it does not possess.

This claim that opposition to, and criticism of, the fraudulent Supreme Court decision is defiance of law is a sham. It is intended to draw attention away from the truth in this matter. That truth is that the Supreme Court is boldly and brazenly attempting to change the form of our Government.

A stock contention of the integrationists and mongrelizers is that a Court decision is the last word in the law, and must be accepted; that the Court's function is to expound the law.

As long as the Court sticks to the law its decisions will be accepted. When it flies in the face of the law, as the Court has done in this instance, it commits a wrong. It perpetrates a fraud upon the people. It commits as grievous a wrong as a tax collector commits when he demands more than just taxes from a taxpayer. It commits a wrong as grievous as a warden of a penitentiary commits who would seek to imprison a convict beyond the limits of his legal term. It commits as grievous a wrong as any other public official commits who seeks to assert authority which he does not possess, or to exceed the authority which he does possess. No right-thinking citizen can acquiesce in brazen usurpation of authority by any public official.

Free Americans are under no obligation whatever to permit any public official to take from them that which is theirs merely because that public official occupies a seat of authority, if he attempts either through ignorance or malfeasance to go beyond the bounds of that authority.

We owe allegiance to the Constitution of the United States. That instrument is the bedrock upon which our structure of government is built. It is our guaranty of liberty. But the allegiance we owe is to the Constitution itself, which was drafted by the Constitutional Convention and ratified by the sovereign States, and to such amendments thereto as have been legally proposed by two-thirds of the Congress and ratified by three-fourths of the States, and no one can dispute that solemn truth.

There are some who say that the Constitution means what the judges say it means. But that is not true. The Constitution itself proclaims its meaning. No court or judge possesses any authority to change the language or meaning of any phrase or word of the Constitution in the slightest degree. It is only when the wording of the Constitution is ambiguous or needs interpretation that the judicial department of the Government has authority to go into the question of what it means. And the judicial department never has had—it does not have now—authority to add anything new or take anything old from the instrument. That can only be done by amendment.

So the Constitution is not, as some would have us believe, what the judges say it is. It has no such unstable or uncertain meaning. The Constitution, and all of its amendments, is the compact of the sovereign States who consented to its operation. It is the document under which we live—which we understand, and which the courts have understood for years and generations. Its meaning has been proclaimed again and again. It is the document which every public official is sworn to uphold, and to which the loyalty of every public official is due. And let us never lose sight of this fact—that our loyalty is to the Constitution itself—not to a perverted opinion of nine men who happen for the moment to be occupying seats in the Supreme Court, and who seek because of that fact to change that true meaning, the established and accepted meaning, of our Constitution. That authority does not belong to these nine men. It belongs to two-thirds of the membership of Congress and to three-fourths of the States, joining in concurrent action.

The members of the Supreme Court have also sworn to uphold the Constitution. They owe the same loyalty to the Constitution that every other citizen does. The Constitution does not mean one thing yesterday, another thing today and something else tomorrow, and they have no right to so hold.

If the logic or reasoning employed by the Supreme Court in order to reach this decision is allowed to become standard practice;

if the Constitution means one thing today and something entirely different tomorrow, then actually we have no Constitution at all.

And when anyone, whether he be President, legislator, or judge, deals with the Constitution unlawfully, it is the part of patriotism and in keeping with loyalty to the Constitution, to protest and oppose such unwarranted action. The preservation of our Government depends upon it. Our Government cannot survive in any different climate.

Now it is not only on the segregation issue that the Court is following this pattern of usurpation. In other fields also it is following a pattern of consistent and continuous usurpation of legislative functions—a pattern of stealthy erosion of the Constitution without resort to legal amendment as provided for in that document.

In such recent decisions as the Steve Nelson and Slochower cases, the Court has rendered the States and our cities powerless to protect themselves against communism. On April 2, 1956, in the Steve Nelson case,[1] the Supreme Court said that the State of Pennsylvania cannot punish Communists for knowingly advocating the overthrow of the Government of the United States. The flimsy excuse given by the Court was that Congress had passed a law on the subject and when the Federal Government occupies the field on this vital subject, no room is left for the States to act.

One week later on April 9, 1956, the same Court in the Slochower case[2] declared a section of the charter of the city of New York unconstitutional because it permitted the city to dismiss a teacher in a college operated by the city when the teacher refused to state whether or not he was a Communist.

In the Yates case,[3] the Smith Act was rendered useless. In this case, decided on June 17 of this year, the Supreme Court reversed 14 convictions of conspiracy (a) for advocating and teaching the duty and necessity of overthrowing the Government of the United States by force and violence, and (b) for organizing a society of persons who so advocated and taught—all with the intent of causing the overthrow of the Government by force and violence. In this decision, the Court was actually legislating by writing into the Smith Act the intent of Congress—an intent undreamed of by the Congress when passing the act.

Earlier, on April 30, 1956, in Communist Party v. Subversive Activities Control Board,[4] the Supreme Court had rendered useless the Subversive Activities Control Act and nullified the action of the Subversive Activities Control Board in its efforts to require known Communists to register.

In the Jencks case,[5] the Court put shackles and handcuffs on the Federal Bureau of Investigation. In the Mallory case,[6] by turning a self-confessed convicted rapist scot-free, the Court tied the hands of police, sheriffs, and law-enforcement agencies. In the cases of Konigsberg v. the State Bar of California[7] and Schware v. the Board of Bar Examiners of New Mexico,[8] the Court told State courts and bar associations that they cannot make their own regulations on admission to the bar; that they had no power to protect themselves against Communists; and that it is unconstitutional to deny a Communist admission to the bar.

The Watkins[9] decision struck a mortal blow at effective machinery for exposing Communists through Congressional inquiry. Under this newly declared philosophy, Communists may now thumb their noses at Congressional and senatorial investigating committees. There are other similar decisions which time does not permit me to take up.

But I do not come tonight to discuss in detail these shocking and outrageous decisions which amount to the making of new laws to free Communists and criminals, to tie the hands of State legislatures, State courts, police officers, and Congressional investigating committees. I shall talk about these in other times and at other places and in due time I shall join with what I believe will be a great majority of my colleagues in Congress to enact laws to correct the evils of this pattern of usurpation, and to reestablish the security of our people and of this country, both nationally and locally. I want to give you tonight, from firsthand knowledge, some of the evils which follow this philosophy of integrated schools; this Court-made law which is being pushed and promoted so vigorously by the power-usurping Supreme Court of the United States and the radicals of this country.

On May 17, 1954, the Supreme Court made public its opinion in the school segregation cases. On June 18, 1953, in the case of District of Columbia v. Thompson's Restaurant, the Court had already made some more new laws to the effect that it was illegal in the District of Columbia for the owner of a restaurant to operate it on a segregated basis.

Although the Court in its May 17, 1954 opinion deferred any further action on the school cases until the October term, so as to give the legal representatives of the States an opportunity to present further argument, the radicals and the social equality advocates were champing at the bit and straining at the leash. They could not wait. Following a statement by the President of the United States that the Washington schools should serve as a model of integrated schools to be copied by the rest of the country, they proceeded full speed ahead to transform an orderly, effective school system into what later proved to be a veritable nightmare by ordering the schools to be integrated at the September term that year. On May 25, 1954, just 8 days after the Supreme Court ruling, the District of Columbia Board of Education, by a 6-to-3 vote, ordered the schools opened on an integrated basis in September.

Boundaries for each school were established with compulsory attendance of each pupil required at such school. A rule was made that records should not be kept or information given out on the basis of race.

If there is any place in the United States where integration could be expected to succeed, that place is Washington, D. C. For many years Washington has had no segregation in transportation or residence. For many years it has had Negro policemen on an unsegregated basis. For many years it has had Negro firemen and by official order the Fire Department was placed on an unsegregated basis in 1954. Since 1953, segregation has been unlawful in restaurants and hotels. Long before that, segregation was abolished in theaters, ball parks, motion pictures, and so forth. For many years there have been Negro judges, prosecutors, and court officials there.

Thousands of Negroes work on an unsegregated basis in all of the Government agencies in Washington. The Negro per capita income in the District of Columbia is higher than the white income in some areas of the Nation. All publicly owned swimming pools have been open to Negroes for years, as well as tennis courts, playgrounds, and parks.

All the public facilities of the Nation's Capital are, and have been, available to them for years, such as libraries and auditoriums. Here is the Nation's Capital, the people of the District of Columbia enjoy more cultural advantages than the people of any other city of America. The District of Columbia Negroes have had school facilities superior to most other school districts in the Nation. Washington has been spending $307.80 per child per year in its public-school system, as compared with $269.70 in Baltimore, $260.80 in Montgomery County, Md., adjoining Washington, $240.73 in Prince Georges County, Md., and as compared with $138.60 per pupil per year in Memphis, Tenn.

In June 1956, after 2 years' experience with integrated schools in the District of Columbia, the Legislative Committee on the District of Columbia in the House of Representatives created a subcommittee and ordered it to make an investigation of the public-school system in the District of Columbia. The subcommittee was strictly nonpartisan. It was composed of six members, three Democrats and three Republicans. I was named chairman of that subcommittee. For its counsel, the subcommittee selected, by unanimous vote, an able lawyer from your own State, Mr. William Gerber, of Memphis.

Those who had promoted the mixing of white and Negro children in schools uttered loud protests against this investigation. The radical organization, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, held a mass meeting in Washington to protest it. They sent telegrams to President Eisenhower, to Presidential Candidate Adlai Stevenson, to Chairman Leonard Hall of the Republican National Committee, to Chairman Paul Butler of the Democratic National Committee, to Speaker of the House Sam Rayburn, to Democratic Floor Leader John McCormack, to Republican Floor Leader Joe Martin, to Chairman John McMillan of the House District of Columbia Committee, and to each member of that committee, urging them to prevent the subcommittee from carrying out the function it was created to perform. The Washington Post, one of the most ardent advocates of mixing the races, began to carry editorials charging that the committee was stacked, that it was biased and prejudiced, and that its investigation would not result in a true picture of the school system. Frantic efforts were made to prevent the committee from beginning its work, and to prevent a continuance of the investigation after it began. In the 11 years I have served in Congress, I have never seen as much effort put forth to prevent a duly constituted committee of Congress from performing its work. When witnesses began to testify regarding the sordid facts and deplorable conditions of the schools, one of the Negro school board members issued a public statement containing a veiled threat to the effect that the school superintendent, Dr. Corning, "should reexamine the competency of some of the principals" who had testified at the hearings, and who, he said, had "made severe admissions of inadequacy." Our counsel and staff interviewed hundreds of teachers, principals, and school officials. Some of them were afraid to testify and told the staff they could not because they "had to live and eat."

Be it said to their credit, however, a majority of the witnesses, who were teachers, principals, or school officials, came voluntarily and testified. Not a subpena was issued by the committee to compel a single witness to appear, and witnesses consisted of both white and Negro teachers, and those who favored integration as well as those who did not.

In spite of all the roadblocks thrown in its path, the subcommittee made a thorough investigation and the hearings consisted of 512 printed pages of testimony.

We learned in this investigation that Negroes are moving into Washington in increasing numbers, and the white people are moving out. This exodus of white people from the District of Columbia began when the first steps of race mixing began in public housing and other fields. It increased as the agitation for integration increased. When the Supreme Court decision was rendered resulting in the integration of the schools, there was a marked and noticeable increase in the number of white people moving from Washington into Maryland and Virginia. This movement continues. Many formerly all-white areas have changed into all-colored areas. Many all-white schools have changed almost completely.

Twelve of the elementary schools which were all white in 1953 now have 92 percent Negro and 8 percent white pupils. Typical of the change is Wheatley Elementary School which was all white in 1953. In 1954, it had 589 white pupils and 139 Negro pupils. By 1956, the whites had dwindled to 24 and the colored had increased to 576.

Just a few years ago the school population in Washington was two-thirds white and one-third Negro, but the school census showed that in October 1956 white students were 32 percent of the school population and Negro students 68 percent. The rate of decline of white pupils is rapidly increasing year by year. In 1953 this rate of decline was 2.7 percent; in 1954, 7.8 percent; in 1955, 6.3, and in 1956, 10.4 percent. The percentage decline of white pupils from 1949 to 1956 was 28.6 percent. This trend of whites moving out of Washington and Negroes moving in, and the rate of changeover, justifies the prediction that in just a few years the District of Columbia will be a predominately Negro community.

Before integration white and Negro pupils had equal opportunity in the schools. The same amount of money was spent per pupil. A white teachers college and a colored teachers college were provided. Although there were about twice as many white pupils as Negro pupils, there were 60 white elementary schools and 61 colored elementary schools. There were six white senior high schools and four colored. The same equipment was provided for each and the same amount per pupil was spent.

Prior to integration, the integrationists claimed that the maintenance of one school system instead of two would mean substantial economy in operating expenses. Yet no economy has resulted. On the contrary operating costs have increased greatly. Information furnished me on August 12 this year by the District of Columbia school department, shows that operating expenses jumped from $26,700,000 in 1953 to $35,600,000 in 1957, with an estimate of $37½ million for 1958.

The committee had testimony that so much extra time is required for coaching Negro pupils that the teachers are unable to devote proper attention to the white pupils, who consequently suffer under this new system.

The Supreme Court and the NAACP have created strife and turmoil where no strife and turmoil existed before. Their joint action has increased tension between the races, and has caused hatred and hostility where before there was good will and harmony. This strife is chargeable to, and responsibility for it must rest with, the Court and the radical NAACP, which has been encouraged by the Court's action to stir up hostility between the races.

I have been talking to you about the Constitution and the legal phase of this question. I want to say something now about the human side, and the moral justification we have for insisting upon segregation.

Much false propaganda has been spread within recent years, and much effort has been made to brainwash the public with the utterly false doctrine that there is no difference between whites and blacks. It is time to look behind this brainwashing propaganda, and have a straight look at the facts.

There are obvious and well-known differences between whites and blacks which no amount of glossing over and covering up by subversive so-called anthropologists and pseudoscientists can hide.

Let's look at some facts from the record which have a direct bearing on the question of desirability or undesirability of integrated schools, aside from the legal aspect of the problem.

Among the many other reasons why the white people object to their children having this close association with Negro children are health, the Negroes' high crime rate, and disrespect for law, the lower mentality level, and the high rate of illegitimacy among Negroes.

It is well-known that the crime rate among Negroes far exceeds that of whites. This is true in Washington, D. C., although Negroes have every advantage they could ask for. The schools and colleges are open to them; also hotels, restaurants, theaters, parks, swimming pools, tennis courts. They buy property and live in any section they choose. The President and his appointed city commissioners apparently want to make a second Harlem out of Washington, and they boast that Washington is a model example of a nonsegregated city.

But Washington is noted for the great number of serious crimes committed in its limits. Its crimes of violence are more than twice those committed in Boston, a city of comparable size, more than twice those of Milwaukee, and nearly twice as many as New Orleans, La.

Negroes are responsible for this high crime rate. Crime statistics show that throughout the years the Negroes in Washington have committed the bulk of the crimes of violence, although until recently they have constituted about one-third of the population. In 1955, out of 11,072 crimes of violence, 9,056 were by Negroes. This is 82 percent of the total, and the percentage for the last 3 months of 1955 was 88 percent of the total.

Let's look at the District of Columbia health records. A report for the year 1955 made by the District of Columbia Department of Public Health of venereal diseases in children of school age and under, showed 834 Negro children, 17 years and under, treated for gonorrhea, as compared with 20 white children. Of the 834 Negro children, 10 were under 6 years of age. The total cases of gonorrhea of all ages, children and adults, for 1955 were Negro, 10,243, or 97.5 percent of the total; white, 271, or 2.5 percent.

These are repulsive statistics, but they show some of the impelling reasons for segregated schools, and what a tragedy it is for white children to have integration forced upon them.

From the standpoint of mentality, the Negroes have not been able to keep pace with the white children of the District of Columbia. This has resulted in lowering of educational standards.

The tragic consequences of throwing white and Negro children together in the public schools of Washington, D. C., were brought to light by the subcommittee investigation conducted by us of the integrated school system in the Nation's Capital which was supposed to be a model for the entire Nation to follow in setting up integrated schools.

One of the first steps taken when white and Negro children were thrown together in the Washington schools was the adoption of the rule which prohibits the keeping of records according to race. Failure to keep records by race prevents comparison of scholastic achievements, and mental capacity between white and Negro pupils.

The subcommittee was able, however, by careful and detailed investigation of the school records, to gather sufficient information to make comparisons in a number of schools of the scholastic achievements, mental capacity and intelligence quotient between the white and Negro students.

At the time of the hearings, there were still some schools in Washington which were nearly 100 percent colored; some still 100 percent white, and some nearly 100 percent white.

Accurate comparisons based upon recognized achievement tests, known as the Iowa achievement test, Stanford achievement tests, and I. Q. tests, showed that there was a very wide difference in scholastic achievement and mental ability between white and Negro pupils.

To illustrate, we found that in Cardoza High School, which had only six white pupils and 1,694 colored pupils, there were 512 pupils in the 10th grade; of the 512, 230 were able to read only from fourth grade to seventh grade level; more than 300 were able to work arithmetic only at seventh grade level or below, and 283 of the 512, which is 55 percent, were classified as being in a category which would never be able to achieve beyond the sixth grade level.

One teacher in Roosevelt High School, with a class about 75 percent colored, said she had more failures in 1 year on integrated teaching than she had in 10 years of teaching in a segregated school.

The assistant superintendent in charge of all senior high schools testified that in four high schools, having a total of eight white students and 5,011 colored students, these four colored high schools, tested under the Iowa achievement test, rated or scored in the lowest 5 percent in the Nation of schools taking this test. He testified that in three high schools having a total of 3,030 white students and 99 colored, these three predominantly white schools, under the same test, rated or scored in the top 5 percent of the Nation.

In a group of 11 junior high schools with a total of 10,304 Negro students and only 205 whites, 2,991 were given a test on "reading and paragraph meaning"; 2,161 achieved at the level of sixth grade or lower. Of these, 676 were at fourth grade level and 385 at third grade level.

Testimony of many of the teachers showed that the Negro pupils, because of low achievement and mental ability, required so much time and attention that the white pupils had to be neglected, and failed to receive the time and attention they would have had otherwise.

All of these facts had been concealed behind an iron curtain in Washington. The NAACP and the other sponsors of integrated schools wanted desperately to keep the facts concealed, and they were concealed until our investigation brought them to light.

I have given you a few examples of testimony concerning scholastic achievement and mental ability of Negro pupils in the Washington schools. This testimony is typical of the bulk of testimony we took for 9 days from school officials, principals, and teachers.

We asked about personal relations between white and colored pupils both as to pupils of the same sex and pupils of the opposite sex.

Practically without exception, the testimony was that dances, plays, senior proms, picnics, and similar social functions were discontinued when the schools were integrated.

At Roosevelt High School, where white and colored were about equally divided, it was necessary to discontinue girl cheerleaders and use only male cheerleaders because of remarks and incidents which occurred at the basketball games.

Negro girls were antagonistic to white girls, and did such things as stepping on their heels in the halls, sticking pins in them; a Negro girl will stand in the aisle and dare a white girl to pass her. A group of Negro girls will attack a white girl on the way home from school and inflict personal injuries upon her.

Similar personal antagonism exists between Negro boys and white boys. At McKinley High School a group of Negro boys attacked two white boys who had been circulating a petition opposing an integrated prom. They beat them and left one of the boys unconscious on the sidewalk. Fourteen stitches were required to sew the wounds inflicted inside this boy's mouth. His father brought him to the Capitol so that I could see the serious injuries he received.

There were numerous fights, beatings, stabbings, and so forth. The principal of McFarland Junior High School testified that, although it was never necessary to call for police assistance when operating segregated schools in the last year in his integrated school, he had to call for police assistance approximately 50 times to prevent fights and keep order.

Many of the witnesses testified as to obscene remarks, obscene literature, indecent proposals, indecent handling and indecent approaches of Negro boys to white girls.

The principal of Roosevelt High School testified that she had two cases of Negro boys approaching white girls in her school the same week she was testifying as a witness. She said she had this trouble last year and the year before, which was the entire period of integrated schools.

The former principal of Eastern High School swore that he retired last year because of ill health brought on by conditions resulting from integrating the schools. He stated it was necessary to require last year that all teachers leave their desks when the bells rang to keep order in the corridors.

He said he heard colored girls at times use language that was far worse than any he had ever heard, even in the Marine Corps.

He said that fighting, including several knifings, went on continuously—that such incidents became more or less commonplace following integration; that there were more thefts in his school in 2 years of integration than he had known in all his 30-odd years of experience before; that there were many sex problems following integration; that colored boys wrote notes to white girls giving their telephone numbers and asking for the girls' telephone numbers; that colored boys touched white girls in a suggestive manner when passing them in the halls, and made obscene remarks about them.

He stated that one white girl was surrounded by a group of colored students after leaving school one afternoon; that a colored boy put a knife to her back, forcing her down an alley and against a wall, and while they were debating making her take her clothes off, she broke away and ran home.

This principal stated that a dozen or more colored girl students became pregnant at his school during his last school year.

The principal of Jefferson Junior High School testified to 27 pregnancies in his school during last year, two white and 25 colored.

The number of pregnancies among the Negro girl pupils has created a serious problem in the high schools and junior high schools.

Mr. Howard West of the District of Columbia Department of Public Health testified that in 1955 there were 996 illegitimate babies born to girls of school age in Washington—that is, ages 18 and under. Of these 926 were colored and 70 whites; 86 of them were born to girls under 15 years of age, five white and 81 colored.

There were 3,533 illegitimate births of all ages in Washington in 1955, of which 382 were white and 3,151 colored.

All white births in Washington in 1955 totaled 8,556, of which 382 were illegitimate. The illegitimate white births were approximately 4.4 percent. All colored births in Washington in 1955 totaled 11,404, of which 3,151 or 27 percent were illegitimate.

He testified that it is a close estimate to say that one out of every four colored schoolchildren in the District of Columbia public schools is an illegitimate child, and this statement is based on the birth records in his department.

So, if you were the parent of a school-age daughter in Washington, D. C., and sent her to one of the model integrated schools, these are the surroundings and this is the atmosphere in which she would be educated and trained, and in which her life's philosophy would be formed.

We thought the testimony regarding illegitimate children before our committee was shocking almost beyond comprehension. However, it has grown much worse since this testimony was given. Illegitimate pregnancies have increased to such an alarming degree in the junior high schools of Washington that on June 21 Dr. John R. Pate, of the Southwest Health Center, made public a report on this disgraceful condition. In his report Dr. Pate said that Washington faces an "enormous moral and economic catastrophe," and that the District could no longer ignore the problem. His report was based on detailed records of children from 13 of the city's 23 junior high schools, who reported to the Southwest Health Center for confirmation of their pregnancies, in order to be excused from school. I have with me Dr. Pate's report, which consists of 25 mimeographed pages. I cannot begin to give you in the time allotted to me tonight but a small part of the shocking facts contained in this report, which for want of a better name was entitled "Junior Mothers."

Dr. Pate reported that a rise of over 1,000 percent in the number of pregnancies among this early teen-age group had occurred in comparison with the 1948–49 school year. He stated that in 1948–49 there were only seven illegitimate pregnancies in this junior high school group that came to the attention of the health center clinic.

In the first paragraph of his report he states that during the current school year there has been an alarming increase in the number of pregnant girls in the seventh, eighth, and ninth grades of the junior high schools of Washington coming to the Southwest Health Center to have completed and properly signed physician's certificates of pupils inability to attend school. It gives the details of a number of these cases in his report. It is full of such cases as that of a girl 14 years of age, herself one of six illegitimate children, having the second child by the same 17-year-old boy. A typical case is that of a 14-year-old girl, one of eight illegitimate children whose twin sister is also pregnant, both of them being on public assistance.

Dr. Pate says in the same paragraph that this problem has been increasing over the last 2 to 3 years (which is the period of integrated schools) more than was noted in several years prior to 1954. His report says:

"The fact is that during the current school year our records show an increase of approximately 1,000 percent in the number of illegitimate pregnancies as compared to the 1948–49 school year in this age group."

He also says that:

"In practically every school the report is not completely accurate, falling short of the total number of pregnancies for several reasons."

He also says:

"Further, many of these children being born out of wedlock are dependent solely upon public assistance funds for their support. This economic burden merely adds another complication to the emotional and moral one in the community."

He also says:

"On the question of public assistance to these children, it might be assumed that it will be the responsibility of the taxpayer for many years."

A shocking feature of this report is that the age of these school girls range from 11 to 15 years, one of them having become pregnant when she was 10 years old.

This report shows that in the elementary schools of a total of eight such cases all were colored, in the junior high schools of a total of 129, 119 were colored, 10 white. In the high schools of a total of 44, 43 were colored and 1 white. In a total of 190 such cases throughout the school system 178 were colored and 12 white.

Dr. Pate says in his report regarding one of these mothers of illegitimates, that their support and hers is from funds provided by the Department of Welfare. He says, "she readily admits the more children she has, the more income she expects to receive from this course and does not anticipate changing her pattern of living." He says that this pattern is repeated time and time again.

Dr. Pate's report compares conditions in Washington with those in Baltimore, a city which integrated its public schools at the same time Washington did. He states that in Baltimore of the total illegitimate babies, 50 percent occur among girls 18 years of age and lower, and that in 1954, the first year of integration, 36 percent of the total number of live births among the nonwhite were illegitimate, which was an increase of 6 percent over 1953 figures. He said that there was no noticeable increase in illegitimacy among white teen-agers in Baltimore during that same period.

One of the Washington cases was an eighth grade girl who was a close personal friend of another girl who had a baby. The junior mother kept showing pictures of her offspring to the eighth grade student, which created a strong desire in the eighth grader to duplicate the feat of her friend. After having intercourse with a number of young males and not getting pregnant, she has developed a definite psychosis.

Another portion of the report states that in the early part of the 1956–57 school year one southwest Washington school reported that more than one-half of the children enrolled were illegitimate.

Getting back to our investigation, Mr. Howard West, of the District of Columbia Department of Health told the committee that in 1955 the total number of cases of venereal disease reported to the Department age 17 and under was 854. Of that number, 20 were whites, seven male and 13 female; 834 were colored, 263 male and 571 female. There were 11 cases under six years of age, one white and 10 colored.

In the short time I have to talk to you tonight, I can only give you a few of the specific facts which our investigation has uncovered and brought out into the light. We held hearings for 9 days, and the testimony fills 512 printed pages.

The hearings show that instead of being a model integrated school system, the District of Columbia schools have been turned into a nightmare of chaos, indecency, lack of discipline, and inability to learn. It is causing white people to move out of Washington so rapidly that the school population which before integration was approximately two-thirds white and one-third colored, is now, according to the latest estimate, approximately 68 percent colored and 32 percent white, with the percentage of colored pupils constantly increasing and white pupils decreasing in a corresponding degree.

These are some of the many valid reasons why white people are justified in the position taken regarding segregation.

I have given you these facts about the situation in Washington because in the wake of the Supreme Court decision to integrate schools, the President declared that Washington would be an example of how good integration would be. The present sickening conditions of the Washington schools are mute testimony to this example.

Not only have mixed schools been a scholastic failure but as an experiment in human relations it has been a nightmare.

In December 1955, principals in high schools and junior high schools found it necessary to hold "shake-down" inspections of their students in compliance with numerous complaints that students were carrying knives.

Two cases of attempted assault by Negro boys on white girls were reported in 1 day at one junior high school. These cases involved language and action so vile and so sordid that it staggers the imagination.

We cannot afford to subject our children to such a malignant experiment. The same integrationists and mongrelizers have stated that they only want equal rights and opportunities for the Negro. Yet the radical NAACP has repeatedly declared that their ultimate goal is intermarriage and complete mongrelization of the American people. The fact that this is also the identical aim of the Communist Party of the United States is more than just coincidental. If they are successful in cramming this school decision down our throats, they will follow it with a decision invalidating our marriage laws, and that will be the end.

The time to end this judicial usurpation is now. The time to restore the Constitution to the people is now.

I have given you tonight, in brief, a picture of the deplorable situation in Washington. I have seen there the tragic results which come from the breakdown of segregation and substitution of an integrated public-school system.

This same thing can happen here and will happen to you if the people meekly accept wrongful usurpation of power, and a Supreme Court dictatorship, as they did in Washington.

It is not inevitable. It does not have to happen. The attitude that we cannot prevent it and that we must accept it is unworthy of a people with our heritage. There are many legal ways in which we can prevent such a catastrophe. The one thing which is needed is a determined attitude and a willingness to do whatever may be found necessary to preserve these precious rights.

I can say to you that we in Georgia are determined, and will not accept these fraudulent efforts to take from us our constitutional rights.

It need not happen here or elsewhere, and it will not happen, if we as free, liberty-loving Americans band together to retain our constitutional rights.

By organization at home, you can give inspiration to your public officials who must lead in this fight—to your governor, legislators, public-school officials, all those who must lead in this fight here at home, and to your Senators and Representatives in Washington. We must signify our determination to fight this battle to a successful conclusion. You have a most important part to play. It is your individual struggle, and your neighbor's individual struggle. Let me urge you to accept your responsibility, and to do your part. Urge your neighbor to do his part. This is a time when it is true, as never before, that "united we stand, divided we fall." This is a fight which can be won, and I pray that it is the will of Almighty God that it will be won. But it will not be won by default.

Shakespeare said, "He is thrice armed who hath his quarrel just." Never was there any people with more just reason to prevail than we in this struggle.

Let us not lose sight of this truth in these critical times. Let us remember that the fight is ahead of us—not behind us.

SENATE

FRIDAY, AUGUST 23, 1957

Legislative day of Thursday, August 22, 1955

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

Our Father, God, in the fierce heat and burden of these testing days, save us from being embittered by the ingratitude and pettiness of those who comprehend not the vastness of issues free men are now facing. Deliver us from all cowardly expediency. May the voice of the past warn us of paths which lead to national disaster. May the voice of the present call us to be inspiring prophets of good will. May the voice of the future challenge us to march on to a golden day when earth's dismal deserts shall blossom into gladsome gardens. We ask it in the dear Redeemer's name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. JOHNSON of Texas, and by unanimous consent, the Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, August 22, 1957, was approved, and its reading was dispensed with.

TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE BUSINESS

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, has an order previously been entered for the transaction of routine business, during the morning hour, at this time?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The order was made yesterday.

THE MUTUAL SECURITY BILL

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I should like to make a brief statement on the mutual security bill.

My position on the mutual security bill is that it is very important to the country to obtain the best measure we can. As the Members of the Senate are aware, we passed the authorization bill, and we passed it in an amount substantially higher than that which was finally resolved in the conference. I voted for the measure when it originally passed the Senate. I voted for the conference report which provided authorizations of $3,300,000,000. That meant that I thought that sum was a reasonable one. I have not changed my position.

In my opinion, not enough votes are available to obtain the full amount. But I am going to vote for a substantial increase, and I am going to do everything possible to strengthen the measure to the fullest possible extent.

This year the mutual security bill has assumed what I believe to be a new and very promising direction. I believe that the Members of the Senate should do everything possible to give it a chance.

Mr. President, I turn now to another subject.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas is recognized.

THE CIVIL-RIGHTS BILL

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, it seems to me that before the Congress adjourns, we should be able to complete action on an adequate civil-rights bill—a right-to-vote bill—at this session. The Senate voted by a substantial majority for the jury-trial amendment, after careful consideration and thorough debate. Now the distinguished Republican leader of the House of Representatives appears to have accepted the principle. The remaining question appears to be one of degree.

In my opinion, the amendment adopted by the Senate is by far the best one yet proposed. It maintains the principle of jury trial, and at the same time offers the maximum possibility of enforcement.

Mr. President, the Senate is composed of reasonable Members; and we are willing to accept reasonable proposals. We never took the position, when the House version of the bill was before us, that it was untouchable. We will not take the position, after the House acts, that what the House does must be destroyed. I think that if all of us work together in the spirit of mutual trust and in the spirit of good faith, rather than bad politics, we can achieve a reasonable, workable, meaningful bill, and that this will truly be a year of advancement for America.

Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas.

ACHIEVEMENTS AND DISAPPOINTMENTS

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, 2 days ago the President of the United States said that the record of this Congress is tremendously disappointing to him. I do not know how he anticipated it completely, because the Congress is still in session; and has not concluded its work.

There is no point in taking the time of the Senate to engage in an argument which may properly belong in the campaign year 1958. The majority leader does not intend to do so.

The record of this Congress will speak for itself; and I have no disposition to have the Congress start passing on the President's performance in the first 6 months of this term, either.

However, I believe that even some of the President's strongest supporters are tremendously disappointed in the efforts of his advisers to anticipate a campaign year. There is a place for politics, and there is a place for legislation. This is neither the time nor the place to confuse the two.

Therefore, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an editorial entitled, "Disappointments," which was published today in the influential Baltimore Sun, be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Baltimore Sun of August 23, 1957]

DISAPPOINTMENTS

The President said in his Wednesday press conference that he was "tremendously disappointed" with the way Congress had handled the administration's legislative program. But we are pleased to see that he did not ascribe the failure of Congress to follow through on his recommendations to raw politics exclusively. Politics has had a big part in this, of course. And yet it is important to remember that there is room for honest differences of opinion among those who in general have steadily supported what might be called the Eisenhower point of view. The Eisenhower point of view has to be distinguished from specific acts whether in individual legislative recommendations or in administration. The running comment of this newspaper, which supported Mr. Eisenhower twice and would do it over again could the clock be turned back, illustrates this point. Many times during the past 8 months we have criticized on their merits acts and recommendations of this administration. Examples:

1. The Middle East doctrine: Though sound in concept this proposal to Congress was badly managed and lost much of its impact because the groundwork for its announcement was not well laid. There was some political stalling in Congress, to be sure, but the real difficulty lay in the fact that, when it was announced, no one really knew what it meant.

2. The budget: There had been every reason to expect, and the public we think was ready for, a sterner overhauling of Government costs than the budget reflected. This threw the problem of budget cutting into the lap of Congress, with the result that Congress tended to bear down in the wrong places because they are so often the politically easiest places, i. e., the mutual security or foreign-aid program.

3. Federal aid to schools: The motive behind this program was good, since everyone knows that the country is in a school-building crisis. But the administration was never really able to show that this crisis cannot be handled individually by the States if they will summon the will to do so.

4. Civil rights: The administration deserves praise for having evolved a promising method of combating illegal denial of voting rights and for driving it hard in Congress. Yet the administration's bill was by no means free of flaws, and the debate in the Senate, which as it happens was dominated by Democrats, and Southern Democrats at that, not only brought out these flaws but produced in the end a superior bill, now needing only minor adjustment. Yet the administration, which might better have accepted the improved bill with cheers, has turned obstructive during these past few weeks. One need not be inspired by partisan motives to criticize this curious dog-in-the-manger behavior.

Here, then, are four issues on which one newspaper that has generally favored the administration had occasion to disagree. If the record of this Congress is disappointing to the President, it is not entirely because the Democratic Party is playing politics for all it is worth; it is in part because some of the administration's acts have at times been disappointing.

A NEW RECORD HIGH IN THE COST OF LIVING

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, yesterday was truly a sad day for America. For the 11th straight month, the cost of living went up to a new record high. The facts and figures available offer no cause for comfort.

There are two conditions which can bring misery to our people. One is when they do not have money with which to buy food, clothing, and shelter for themselves and their families. The other is when they have money, but when prices are simply too high.

Mr. President, no one knows precisely when prices become too high as a general proposition. But the individual knows, because he is bearing the brunt of the squeeze on his pocketbook.

Today the situation is one which affects more than the consumer alone. Of all the rising prices, one of the most important is the constant and continual rise in the price of money itself.

Important Congressional committees are inquiring into the facts of these problems, and are attempting to evolve recommendations. And it is entirely safe to predict that within the uncertain months which lie ahead, the high cost of living may well become the dominant issue on the American scene.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD, as part of my remarks, an article entitled, "Prices in July Set Record—Food Highest Since 1952." The article was written by Richard E. Mooney, and was published today in the New York Times.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times of August 23, 1957]

PRICES IN JULY SET RECORD—FOOD HIGHEST SINCE 1952

(By Richard E. Mooney)

WASHINGTON, August 22.—Consumer prices rose in July for the 11th straight month, setting another record. The increase was one-half of 1 percent, and represented a 3.2 percent rise over July of last year. Food prices, a major factor in the upward swing, went above the peak reached in August 1952.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics reported today that its Consumer Price Index registered 120.8 in mid-July. It used the 1947–48 average as a comparison base of 100.

The increase was the same as in June. It was one of the largest monthly rises since the current wave of inflation began last year. It was not an unusual gain for July, however.

The price of food rose 1 percent; that of all other consumer items showed an average increase of one-fifth of 1 percent.

CIGARETTES A FACTOR

Higher prices for cigarettes were another major factor in the overall increase. Consumer costs in housing held steady for the first time in more than a year, as declining prices for some major household appliances offset the continued rise in rents and maintenance costs.

Clothing prices were down one-tenth of 1 percent, but costs were higher for transportation, medical care, personal care, reading and recreation, and other goods and services.

If the pattern of recent years holds, food prices may be expected to turn downward in August, led by a sharp decline in fruit and vegetable prices.

H. E. Riley, Chief of the Bureau's Division of Prices and Cost of Living, said the outlook was for little change in the food price average this month, however. He did not predict how the overall consumer price average would move in August or the months ahead. He noted the current "softness" of appliance prices, such as refrigerators and washing machines, but pointed to mixed trends that could be expected in the fall—higher prices on 1958 model cars, lower meat prices, and higher clothing prices.

The price index has risen in 10 of the last 16 Augusts.

The July rise in the index means 1 to 6 cents pay increases September 1 for 1,300,000 factory workers' wages are tied to the index by so-called escalator clauses in their contracts. Most will get a 3-cent increase. Included are 70,000 auto workers, 120,000 at the Westinghouse Electric Corp., farm machinery workers, and smaller groups in local transit, metalworking, and trucking.

James B. Carey, president of the International Union of Electrical Workers, which represents almost 80,000 of the affected workers, used the occasion to denounce the Government's anti-inflation policies.

He said cost-of-living pay increases gave IUE members some protection against inflation, but that is no excuse for the criminal blundering of the Eisenhower administration.

The Bureau reported that factory workers' take-home pay rose slightly in July, but that this had been more than offset by the rise in prices. As a result, buying power declined slightly.

Harlow H. Curtice, president of the General Motors Corp., also referred to rising prices in a letter released today. He rejected a union proposal that the company cut prices on 1958 models. He commented that the costs of most goods and services bought by General Motors Corp., including wage rates, had gone up appreciably, "yet we have not increased the prices of our automobiles."

The auto industry's debate with the union is the same as the steel price debate that has been going on before the Senate Antitrust Subcommittee.

UNION ECONOMIST TESTIFIES

In the latter, Otis Brubaker, economist for the United Steel Workers, testified today that the industry's wage costs rose by $1.28 a ton in the first half of the year, but that this had been more than offset by a $6.32 a ton decrease in the cost of other services and materials.

These figures may not hold through the second half if the rate of production declines as much as the United States Steel Corp. has predicted.

Mr. Brubaker's point, in 3 days of testimony, has been that the steel industry did not need the $6 a ton price increase announced July 1, and that steelworkers had not received their proper share of postwar gains in profits or productivity.

Auto and steel producers are raising prices on the ground that they are being forced up by higher costs, particularly wages. The price increases will appear as small plus factors among the many elements that make up the Consumer Price Index.

Taxicab fares in Washington are going up, too. The Public Utilities Commission approved an increase today.

CITY SHOWS RECORD

Consumer prices in New York City rose to a high in July, marking the seventh consecutive month of increases. The July index at 118.4 reflected a 0.4-percent gain over June and a total increase this year of 2.4 percent.

Robert R. Behlow, regional director of the Federal Bureau of Labor Statistics, observed that the increase since July 1956 was 3.3 percent.

Last month's advance was caused almost entirely by food prices. There were minor increases in medical and personal care, reading and recreation and miscellaneous goods and services.

Slight declines occurred in housing, apparel and transportation.

The rise in food prices was concentrated mainly in meats, dairy products and eggs. Bacon was up 4 cents a pound, round steak 4 cents and frying chickens 2 cents. Eggs rose 11 cents a dozen, while fresh milk edged up fractionally. Lower prices were effected for tomatoes, onions, and watermelons.

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY AT NOON

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business today, it stand in adjournment until Monday, at 12 o'clock noon. I make this request now, so all Senators may have notice that they will have the weekend off.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE BUSINESS ON MONDAY

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate convenes on Monday, with the usual morning hour for the transaction of routine business, there be a 3-minute limitation on statements.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I should like to announce that every bill on the calendar may be brought up by motion at some time between now and adjournment. I should like to have all Senators be on notice. We have developed an unfortunate procedure: We give notice of bills which may be considered; and then individual Senators feel that they are entitled to telephone and say, "I should like to have this one postponed for a week"—or for 2 weeks or 3 weeks. Under those circumstances, Mr. President, we have to rearrange completely our schedule, in an attempt to accommodate our colleagues.

The majority leader and the minority leader are very anxious to accommodate all Members for as much of the time as possible. But in the concluding days of the session, we wish to clear up the nominations on the Executive Calendar, and we also wish to clear up the bills and other measures on the Legislative Calendar. So I wish each Senator to be on notice that any bill may be brought up by motion at any time.

I announce that the following measures have been determined to be available today, and may be brought up by motion on today or on Monday:

Calendar 1105, Senate bill 1764, to amend the District of Columbia Public Food Services Act.

Calendar 1106, Senate bill 1849, to provide for a more effective administration of public assistance in the District of Columbia; to make certain relatives responsible for support of needy persons, and for other purposes.

Calendar 1110, Senate bill 1726, authorizing certain construction for the protection of the Narragansett Bay area against hurricane tidal flooding.

Calendar 1065, Senate Joint Resolution 94, directing that the financial reports and other information filed with the Secretary of Labor pursuant to subsections (f) and (g) of section 9 of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, be made available to the public.

Calendar 1076, House bill 8679, to provide a 1-year extension of the programs of financial assistance in the construction of schools in areas affected by Federal activities under the provisions of Public Law 815, 81st Congress.

Calendar 1081, Senate bill 1889, to provide in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare for a loan service of captioned films for the deaf.

Calendar 1061, House bill 8030, to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, with respect to acreage listing.

Calendar 1063, House bill 8508, to provide that there shall be two county committees elected under the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act for certain counties.

Calendar 1039, House 4191, to amend section 633 of title 28, United States Code, prescribing fees of United States Commissioners.

Calendar 1069, House bill 3367, to amend section 1867 of title 28 of the United States Code to authorize the use of certified mail in summoning jurors.

Calendar 1070, House 4193, to amend section 1716 of title 18, United States Code, so as to conform to the act of July 14, 1956—seventieth United States Statutes at Large, pages 538–540.

Calendar 1122, House bill 110, to amend section 372 of title 28, United States Code.

Calendar 1124, House bill 2136, to amend section 124 (c) of title 28 of the United States Code so as to transfer Shelby County from the Beaumont to the Tyler division of the eastern district of Texas.

And Calendar 1126, House bill 5811, to amend subdivision b of section 14—Discharge when granted—of the Bankruptcy Act, as amended and subdivision b of section 58—Notices—the Bankruptcy Act, as amended.

All those bills may be brought up by motion during the day, together with the measures previously announced, and together with any others which may be cleared with the minority committee.

Let me say for the benefit of the information of the Senate that I do not plan to bring up any measure by motion except in the case of advance notice given.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Mr. Johnston of South Carolina and Mr. Carlson members of the committee on the part of the Senate.

RESOLUTIONS OF WESTERN ASSOCIATION OF STATE HIGHWAY OFFICIALS

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the Record a letter I received from L. P. Zimmerman, the Commissioner of Highways of the State of Minnesota. Commissioner Zimmerman refers to resolutions adopted by the Western Association of State Highway Officials during the annual conference at Houston, Tex., June 11–14, 1957.

There being no objection, the letter and resolutions were ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

State of Minnesota,
Department of Highways,
St. Paul, August 21, 1957.

Hon. Edward J. Thye,
United States Senator, Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

Dear Senator: We are taking the privilege of sending you herewith a copy of resolutions Nos. 2, 4, and 5 which were adopted by the Western Association of State Highway Officials during its annual conference at Houston, Tex., June 11–14, 1957.

Resolution No. 2 expresses opposition to any current or proposed legislation which would expand the mileage of the National System of Interstate Highways until such time as funds have been made available.

Resolution No. 4 requests the Congress of the United States to take necessary action to provide funds for the construction of access roads for the development of natural resources.

Resolution No. 5 approves the enactment of H. R. 6849 or other appropriate legislation to assure that conveyances of private property to State highway departments for highway purposes be exempted from the Internal Revenue documentary stamp tax.

We respectfully request that you give support to the passage of these resolutions.

Transmitted herewith also for your information is Resolution No. 1, adopted at the same meeting, which requests that the Congress of the United States be petitioned to enact proper legislation to prohibit the payment or reimbursement from Federal aid highway funds of any portion of the costs for moving, removing, or adjusting the facilities of utilities when such facilities are located upon the publicly owned rights-of-way of a public highway.

Respectfully yours,
L. P. Zimmerman,
Commissioner of Highways.

Resolution 1

Whereas, there is a concerted nationwide movement by utility companies to cause legislation to be enacted in the respective States having for its purpose the mandatory payment from public funds of the costs of removing or adjusting the facilities of such companies located upon public highway rights-of-way, when it is necessary that such relocations or adjustments be effected in order to provide for Federal aid highway or State construction; and

Whereas it is unfair to require the payment from public funds for the relocations or adjustments of utilities where such utilities have been occupying publicly acquired rights-of-way without the utility having paid any part of the costs of such public highway right-of-way; and

Whereas such legislation would be detrimental to the entire Federal aid highway program because it would be diverting public funds and would be decreasing very considerably the funds to be available for highway construction and would greatly delay the completion of the Federal aid highway systems thereby depriving the public of the highways needed in the national defense, for the economic development of the entire Nation, and for the safety and convenience of the motoring public: Therefore, be it hereby

Resolved by the Western Association of State Highway Officials assembled at Houston, Tex., this 13th day of June 1957, That such association vigorously oppose such legislation in the respective States, and that the Congress of the United States be hereby petitioned, for the reasons hereinabove set forth, to enact proper legislation to prohibit the payment or reimbursement from Federal aid highway funds of any portion of the costs for moving, removing, or adjusting the facilities of utilities when such facilities are located upon the publicly owned rights-of-way of a public highway; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be submitted to each Member of the Congress of the United States.

RESOLUTION 2

Whereas the executives and member delegates of the 36th annual conference of the Western Association of State Highway Officials are aware of the current status of the expanded highway program, as it applies to the National System of Interstate and Defense Highways, having been so appraised of the progress made thereupon, by Federal Highway Administrator Bertram D. Tallamy; and

Whereas the membership of this organization is also fully cognizant of the many serious obstacles confronting the orderly completion of the interstate program within the time allotted by the Congress of the United States, even though progress to date has been satisfactory and on schedule; and

Whereas it is the general feeling of the membership of the Western Association of State Highway Officials that completion of the currently established 41,000 miles of the interstate network will test the capabilities of the several State highway departments and the United States Bureau of Public Roads: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Western Association of State Highway Officials, in conference at Houston, Tex., on June 13, 1957, does hereby record its opposition to any current or proposed legislation which would expand the mileage of the National System of Interstate Highways, until such time as funds have been made available to assure the completion of the existing mileage, in accordance with established standards of design and construction.

RESOLUTION 4

Whereas there is increasing need for the construction of access roads for the development of our natural resources, to stimulate the mining of vital strategic minerals, and leading to Federal installations; and

Whereas such access roads will provide recreation opportunities to great numbers of our people; and

Whereas the Nation will receive much benefit from the supply of these strategic minerals so necessary for the defense of our country; and

Whereas the resulting industrial growth will provide economic benefit to the entire Nation; and

Whereas State and local governments are unable to provide for financing such access roads: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Western Association of State Highway Officials in convention assembled at Houston, Tex., on June 13, 1957, urgently requests the Congress of the United States to take the necesary action to provide funds for the construction of such access roads, and that copies of this resolution be sent to Members of Congress of the Western States and to members of the appropriate committees.

RESOLUTION 5

Whereas under present rulings of the United States Bureau of Internal Revenue conveyances of private property to public agencies for public use are subject to the imposition of the Internal Revenue documentary stamp tax; and

Whereas while technical legal liability for such stamp tax rests upon the private property owner, in fact the cost thereof must frequently be borne by the public agencies in order to avoid condemnation proceedings and to that extent, imposition of the stamp tax upon such conveyances constitutes an unreasonable interference with and burden upon necessary State governmental functions; and

Whereas H. R. 6849, presently being considered by the Congress of the United States, would eliminate such unreasonable interference and burden by exempting conveyances of private property to public agencies from said documentary stamp tax: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Western Association of State Highway Officials in annual convention assembled in Houston, Tex., this 13th day of June, 1957, instructs its president and executive committee to actively seek enactment of H. R. 6849 or other appropriate legislation to assure that conveyances of private property to State highway departments for highway purposes be exempted from the Internal Revenue documentary stamp tax.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

NATIONAL LIBRARY WEEK

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, on behalf of myself and Senators CHURCH, DOUGLAS, HENNINGS, MURRAY, MORSE, JOHNSTON of South Carolina, PASTORE, FULBRIGHT, AIKEN, THYE, ALLOTT, COOPER, CASE of New Jersey, WATKINS, MANSFIELD, CARLSON, and MCNAMARA, I submit, for appropriate reference, a concurrent resolution requesting the President to designate the week of March 16–22, 1958, as National Library Week. The concurrent resolution carries the endorsement of the American Library Association, the National Book Committee, and numerous other professional organizations and voluntary citizens' associations.

Last year Congress gave recognition and tangible support to the important educational and cultural functions of public libraries by the enactment of the Library Services Act. That act authorized a 5-year program of Federal matching grants to enable the States to provide public library services in rural areas of the country which have no library service or inadequate service, and in which approximately 27 million of our people live.

In passing the Library Services Act, Congress took a necessary step to alleviate the obvious and critical needs of this important educational service. There remains, however, the need to build the financial support and material resources of all libraries and make these resources available to our people in the most effective way possible. These needs will be provided by State and local governments, voluntary associations and private effort and initiative. National Library Week is intended to focus public attention on these problems and to stimulate public interest in their solution. State and local committees throughout the Nation will be at work during National Library Week emphasizing the resources of libraries and the part the printed word contributes to our education, self-development, cultural advancement, recreation, civic improvement, and our national well-being.

My fellow sponsors and I commend the National Book Committee, the American Library Association and the other supporters of National Library Week for their initiative in developing this program; and we are hopeful that Congress will adopt the concurrent resolution, and bring National Library Week to the attention of our people.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the concurrent resolution be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution will be received and appropriately referred.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 49) was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

Whereas the Congress of the United States has recognized the vital educational and cultural role of libraries by the enactment of the Library Services Act of 1956; and

Whereas the Library Services Act is now in operation in 43 of the 48 States as a means of finding ways of bringing adequate public library service to some 27 million Americans, largely in rural areas, hitherto without such service or with totally inadequate service; and

Whereas State and local governments, professional associations, and citizens' groups recognize that much remains to be done to improve the availability of the full resources of the printed word to all of our people for education, self-improvement, cultural advancement, and fulfilling the responsibilities of citizens in a democracy; and

Whereas the National Book Committee and the American Library Association in cooperation with numerous other citizens' organizations, business and professional groups, and voluntary associations, have designated the week of March 16–22, 1958, as the first National Library Week; and

Whereas National Library Week will increase support for libraries from the highest levels of leadership in the civic, economic, professional, and cultural life of the country; will expose the need for the extension and improvement of school and public library services; will offer opportunities for librarians to work more closely with newspaper, magazine, and advertising executives in broadening the use of printed materials; will attract wider public attention to library services through features in national media; and will promote prestige for reading itself by showing the vital role the printed word can play in the pleasure of reading aloud in the family, the rewards of reading as a leisure time activity and the contribution of reading to career advancement: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President is requested to issue a proclamation designating the week beginning on the 16th day and ending on the 22d day of March 1958 as National Library Week, and calling upon the people of the United States to observe such week with appropriate ceremonies.

CONSTRUCTION AND SALE OF A PASSENGER VESSEL FOR USE IN TRANSPACIFIC TRADE

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I submit, for appropriate reference, a concurrent resolution favoring the construction and equipment of a passenger vessel of certain requirements for sale to American President Lines, Limited, for use in the trans-Pacific trade. I ask unanimous consent that a statement, prepared by me, relating to the concurrent resolution, may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution will be received and appropriately referred; and, without objection, the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 50) was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, as follows:

Whereas it is the policy of the United States, as declared in section 101 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936 (46 U. S. C. 1101), to foster the development and encourage the maintenance of a merchant marine "(a) sufficient to carry its domestic waterborne commerce and a substantial portion of the waterborne export and import foreign commerce of the United States and to provide shipping service on all routes essential for maintaining the flow of such domestic and foreign waterborne commerce at all times, (b) capable of serving as a naval and military auxiliary in time of war or national emergency, (c) owned and operated under the United States flag by citizens of the United States insofar as may be practicable and (d) composed of the best equipped, safest, and most suitable types of vessels, constructed in the United States and manned with trained and efficient citizen personnel"; and

Whereas a new passenger vessel adequate in size and speed to meet the requirements of our foreign commerce and national defense is needed in the Pacific area to insure carriage of a substantial portion of the waterborne export and import foreign commerce of the United States in the transpacific trades by the United States merchant marine; and

Whereas the Department of Defense has stated that a majority of the passenger vessels now in the United States merchant marine and capable of serving as troop transports in time of war or national emergency are deficient in speed and that the construction of new passenger vessels is required in the interests of national defense; and

Whereas the capital investment required for a vessel of the necessary size and speed exceeds the financial resources of any qualified operator in the United States merchant marine; and

Whereas the Department of Commerce, Maritime Administration, is authorized by section 502 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936 (46 U. S. C. 1152), to contract for the construction, outfitting and equipment of new vessels in United States shipyards and to sell such vessels at foreign cost to citizens of the United States for use on essential trade routes, services on lines in the foreign commerce of the United States under contracts requiring a downpayment of 25 percent of the sales price and payment of the balance of said sales price in twenty equal annual installments with interest at 3½ percent per annum: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That, it is the sense of Congress that the Department of Commerce proceed as authorized by section 502 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, to construct, outfit and equip a new passenger vessel with a passenger capacity of approximately 1,400 and a speed of 26 knots, at an estimated domestic cost of $73 million ($45 million for 23-knot vessel) and an estimated foreign cost of $41 million ($25 million for 23-knot vessel), and to sell said vessel to American President Lines, Ltd., a citizen of the United States and an experienced and qualified steamship operator, for use on essential trade routes, services or lines in the trans-Pacific trade.

STATEMENT BY SENATOR MAGNUSON

Seldom in the administration of the affairs of our Government do as many of the broad interests, needs and requirements of our Nation converge to support a single program as they do in respect to the American Merchant Marine. From the first years of our Republic, this body, the Congress of the United States, has enacted legislation designed to encourage shipbuilding and the maintenance of an adequate fleet of merchant vessels under our own flag.

The existence of an American Merchant Marine industry in being, with its constituent parts of trained personnel, safe and modern vessels, equipment, shipyards, repair facilities, suppliers and customers, has, in our generation, been a life and death matter at three separate periods. The First and Second World Wars and the Korean engagement all demonstrated clearly that the defense of America and the defeat of aggression aimed at our country cannot proceed without an American-flag merchant marine to support it.

The latest in the long line of declarations of national policy to encourage such a native American fleet of merchant vessels was the Merchant Marine Act of 1936. The able administration of this law has greatly strengthened our Government over the last twenty-one years. The basic policy expressed in that law of developing a merchant marine capable of providing shipping service on all routes essential to our foreign water-borne commerce, of serving as a naval and military auxiliary in time of war and composed of the best equipped, safest and most suitable types of vessels has proven sound. I could present reams of testimony in proof of this. Perhaps as effective evidence of the soundness of this legislation as any I know is the fact that in those twenty-one years, no Member of this body has, to my knowledge, opposed this principle or questioned its validity. There may have been disagreements as to details of administration or the pace at which the merchant marine program should advance, but none as to the need for maintaining an American Merchant Marine.

With the vessels built during the World War II, supplemented by the mariner vessels laid down during the Korean war, our merchant marine has, in recent years, been reasonably well-equipped to carry out the purposes of the Merchant Marine Act of 1936. Today, however, we are facing a critical problem in one segment of our merchant marine. We are not replacing the large passenger vessels which are absolutely vital if we are to have an adequate supply of troop transports in any future national emergency. We cannot replace them in today's high cost, high interest rate economy unless we give specific and careful attention to their problems.

Large passenger ships are high speed, specialized types of ocean-going equipment designed and used in a particular trade. They are not susceptible of mass treatment as are the tankers and freighters which are relatively interchangeable between foreign and domestic trades and between the various foreign trade routes.

In the discharge of its responsibilities, under the Merchant Marine Act, the Federal Maritime Board has determined that a new large passenger ship is now required in the Atlantic and one in the Pacific, each as replacements for a similar vessel soon to be obsolete.

It has required, by formal contract, the steamship companies operating the two old passenger ships to enter into contracts for new ships. The two companies have accepted their responsibilities under their contracts, and have agreed to build replacement pasesnger vessels of a size and speed and with national defense features satisfactory to our Government.

Legislation has been introduced to provide for construction of a replacement vessel for the SS America for the trans-Atlantic service of the United States Line. Today, I submit a concurrent resolution which would express the will of Congress that a fast modern passenger liner should be built for the trans-Pacific service of American President Lines.

Our Nation needs such a vessel in the Pacific. At present, the entire American-flag passenger ship operation in the Pacific Ocean, including services to Australia and New Zealand, to the Orient, to Hawaii and around the world, comprises ten vessels, with a total passenger capacity of less than 5,000, an average age of 15 years, and a designed speed in no case above 20½ knots.

Our Secretary of the Navy has recently testified before a committee of Congress that "Defense is definitely interested in the construction of a new passenger ship" because of the deficiency in speed of our present troop lift potential.

To build such a ship in the United States for the Pacific run will cost $73 million, exclusive of financing costs. Even with the operator paying but the foreign cost of construction, the investment on the part of the operator will exceed its present total net worth. Furthermore, the high interest rates required today will reduce the probable return on the investment well below what a prudent businessman would be willing to undertake.

Thus, the situation created is simple:

1. The country needs a trans-Pacific passenger ship.
2. The Maritime Administration has, in its contract with American President Lines, required the construction of such a ship.
3. The cost of financing such a ship, if the operator must borrow privately, will make it virtually impossible to build.
4. Until the last few years, ships built under the provisions of the Merchant Marine Act of 1936 were financed with Government mortgages at 3½ per cent. This provision is still in law and is still sound.
5. With a Government mortgage at a reasonable interest rate and a national defense allowance as determined by the Federal Maritime Board for actual national defense features, the economics of constructing the passenger liner became sound for American President Lines and the Government.
6. Actually, the savings to the United States in the use of the Government mortgage are very substantial over the costs to the United States involved in private financing of a merchant ship. It has been estimated that the Government could save as much as $8 million with a Government mortgage over what it would cost the Government if the vessel were privately financed at current interest rates.

With these facts before me, I have submitted a concurrent resolution expressing the sense of the Congress that we proceed to authorize construction of this ship by the United States and sale to American President Lines in accordance with the long established and sound terms of the Merchant Marine Act of 1936. It is my intention to schedule hearings on this resolution early in the next session before the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

EQUITABLE TREATMENT OF PRODUCERS PARTICIPATING IN ACREAGE RESERVE PROGRAM

Mr. SYMINGTON. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to give relief to those farmers who signed and lived up to acreage reserve agreements under the Soil Bank Act, but who, through no fault of their own, received no compensation, or less compensation that their contracts provided. These farmers were shortchanged by their Government because of errors by agents or employees of the Department of Agriculture acting for the Secretary.

In some of these cases, Department officials agree that the result is unfair, but state that Department rules and regulations prevent the payments. The Comptroller General supports this position on the ground that the rules and regulations are in accord with the law.

As an example of this type of injustice, I present the case of a Carrollton, Missouri, farmer, who acted in good faith, signed an acreage reserve contract on July 26, 1956, expecting to be compensated under the Soil Bank, only to learn months later, after his crop was lost, that the local ASC office had given him erroneous information and, therefore, his contract was not binding on the Government.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have the following documents inserted in the RECORD at this point:

Copy of contract dated July 26, 1956, signed by Mr. Ralph Brock, of Carrollton, Mo., and the Carroll County ASC Committeeman, Mr. Buel Ogden.

Memorandum dated December 4, 1956, from Missouri ASC Committee to the Soil Bank Division, USDA, Washington, D. C.

Letter dated June 17, 1957, from Mr. Dwight W. Meyer, Acting Director, Soil Bank Division.

Letter dated July 12, 1957, from Mr. Howard J. Doggett, Director, Soil Bank Division, and a copy of notice issued by the USDA setting forth a ruling by the Comptroller General.

There being no objection, the matters referred to were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

1956 Acreage Reserve Program—Complaint of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Brock, Rural Route 3, Carrollton, Mo.

DWIGHT MYERS,
Deputy Director, Soil Bank Division, Commodity Stabilization Service, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

The State committee has received a complaint by way of a personal visit from the above producers relative to a 1956 corn acreage reserve agreement.

The Brocks stated that they had signed an agreement for 15 acres, but had not been paid.

Information obtained from the Brocks and from the Carroll County ASC office reveals that this is 1 of 10 such cases in the county. All 10 cases are actually missed farms, on which the county signed agreements on the assumption that the acres would be available out of the State reserve. It developed, however, that the acres in the State reserve was exhausted, and, consequently, these allotments could not be granted.

The county then attempted to pro rate the acres left in the county reserve among all 10 farms with the result that they offered Brock 3 acres instead of the 15 he originally signed for.

Brock's contention is that he lost 15 acres of hay which he otherwise would have cut and as a result he has suffered financial loss.

We fully realize that compliance with, and reduction from, acreage allotments is a requisite of the acreage reserve program, but it is our earnest opinion that in such cases as this, in which the error apparently rests with the county office, an attempt should be made to pay the producers involved.

For that reason, we are submitting this case and we would appreciate your consideration and advice.

MISSOURI STATE ASC COMMITTEE,
State Office, Columbia, Mo.

UNITED STATES
DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
COMMODITY STABILIZATION SERVICE,
Washington, D. C. June 17, 1957.
Hon. STUART SYMINGTON,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR SYMINGTON: This is in further reply to your letter of May 23, 1957, in regard to your constituent, Mr. Ralph Brock, Rural Route No. 3, Carrollton, Mo.

Your letter and all of the attachments were referred to the Office of General Counsel requesting that they determine the farm allotment that could have been established for Mr. Brock in 1956. Thus, establishing the acreage that was eligible to be placed under a 1956 acreage reserve agreement. The following report was received from the Office of General Counsel on June 13, 1957.

"The facts appear to be as follows: Mr. Brock's farm was 1 of 10 missed farms in Carroll County, Mo., and no official allotment was issued. An agreement was filed by Mr. Brock placing 15 acres in corn acreage reserve and he set aside a field of hay which he could otherwise have harvested. There is no record of Mr. Brock's having been told that his agreement depended on the availability of acres in the allotment reserve. Later, it was determined that the allotment reserve in Carroll County was only 10 acres. Subsequent to this determination, several other missed farms were reported and the 10 acres were prorated among them, the prorated allotment for Mr. Brock being established at only 3 acres. The county committee does not recall signing Mr. Brock's agreement, but Mr. Brock has submitted a photostatic copy of his agreement showing the signature of Buell Ogden, a member of the county committee. We therefore assume that the agreement was signed by Mr. Ogden.

"As you know, the Secretary has recently requested the Comptroller General's decision as to whether the 1956 acreage reserve regulations may be amended to provide that in any case where a producer is given erroneous information as to his acreage allotment or measured acreage of the commodity and, in good faith, acted in reliance on such information, the acreage allotment or measured acreage on which the producer was so advised shall be the official allotment or measured acreage for purposes of the 1956 acreage reserve program.

"If the Comptroller General approves the Department's proposed action and the regulations are so amended, Mr. Brock may be paid compensation on the 15 acres which he placed in the acreage reserve."

You will be advised as to the decision rendered by the Comptroller General. If we can be of further service to you, please feel free to call upon us.

Sincerely yours,
DWIGHT W. MEYER,
Acting Director, Soil Bank Division.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
COMMODITY STABILIZATION SERVICE,
Washington, D. C., July 12, 1957.
Hon. STUART SYMINGTON,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR SYMINGTON: This is in further reply to your inquiry in regard to your constituent Mr. Ralph Brock, Rural Route No. 3, Carrollton, Mo.

We advised you that the Secretary of Agriculture had requested the Comptroller General for his decision as to whether, legally, the regulations governing the 1956 acreage reserve program could be amended to make payment in cases such as this. The Department proposed to amend the 1956 regulations to provide that, in any case where a producer was given erroneous information as to his acreage allotment or measured acreage of the commodity and, in good faith, acted in reliance on such information, the acreage allotment or measured acreage of which the producer was so advised shall be the official allotment or measured acreage for purposes of the 1956 acreage reserve program. In the Secretary's letter it was pointed out that, in numerous cases, producers had voluntarily performed their acreage reserve agreements regarding land designated as the acreage reserve and have received greatly reduced, and in some instances no, compensation as a result of relying on erroneous or misleading information concerning their allotments or measured acreage.

The following is the Comptroller General's ruling: "Your proposed amendment to the 1956 regulations would authorize the compensation of producers for acreages in excess of their actual farm acreage allotments or farm base acreage, whichever is applicable. Since the compensation of producers on that basis would not be authorized by the Soil Bank Act, our opinion is that the issuance of the proposed amendment to the 1956 regulations legally would not be proper."

We regret that the Comptroller General's ruling makes it impossible for the Division to authorize payments on acreage reserve agreements such as Mr. Brock's.

Sincerely yours,
HOWARD J. DOGGETT,
Director, Soil Bank Division.

REQUESTS FOR WAIVER OF REGULATIONS—CLAIMS FOR ADDITIONAL COMPENSATION—1956 ACREAGE RESERVE AGREEMENTS

Approved:
CHAS. M. COX,
Acting Deputy Administrator, Production Adjustment.

1. Purpose: To transmit to State and county committees for their information and guidance the contents of a ruling by the Comptroller General of the United States. The ruling states that compensation may not be paid producers for acreages in excess of their actual reduction below the farm acreage allotments or farm-base acreage, whichever is applicable.

2. Background: During the past months, several of the ASC State committees have requested waivers involving cases where, as a result of incorrect information as to acreage allotments or measured acreages, producers in good faith acted in reliance on such information and destroyed acreages in excess of their actual farm allotments or farm-base acreage, whichever is applicable. Pursuant to these requests the office of the general counsel requested a ruling from the Comptroller General of the United States as to whether the 1956 acreage reserve regulations could legally be amended to permit the producers in such cases to be compensated for such destruction.

3. Ruling: The ruling of the Comptroller General is quoted below:

"Letter of June 10, 1957, from the Acting Secretary of Agriculture, requests our decision whether you legally may amend the regulations governing the 1956 acreage reserve part of the soil-bank program as stated below.

"Section 485.114 of the regulations governing the 1956 acreage reserve program (21 F. R. 4383) provides as follows:

"'§ 485.114 Amount of compensation: The amount of compensation for each commodity shall be determined by multiplying the rate of compensation per acre for the commodity, determined in accordance with § 485.115, by the smallest of (a) the number of acres in the acreage reserve, (b) the acreage by which the commodity is reduced below the allotment, or in the case of corn, the soil bank corn base, or (c) the number of acres which the producer agrees to place in the acreage reserve: Provided, That no compensation will be paid for the particular commodity if the acreage so determined is below the minimum acreage which may be placed in the acreage reserve.'

"The Acting Secretary's letter states that, in numerous cases, producers who have fully performed their acreage reserve agreements regarding land designated as the acreage reserve have received greatly reduced, and in some instances no, compensation as a result of relying on erroneous or misleading information concerning their allotments or acreage measurements. The following two examples are set out as typical of existing cases:

"'1. The producer is informed that he has a 50-acre wheat allotment and, acting in good faith on the basis of such information, places 10 acres of wheat in the acreage reserve and harvests 40 acres of wheat. In performing his acreage reserve agreement the producer destroys a crop, other than wheat, on the 10 acres designated as the acreage reserve. The producer is not notified of his correct 40-acre wheat allotment in time to permit him to destroy the excess acreage of wheat. The result is that there has been no reduction in wheat acreage below the final corrected wheat allotment, although the producer has destroyed a crop on the 10 acres in the acreage reserve in order to comply with the terms of the agreement which he signed.

"'2. The producer has a corn base acreage of 55 acres and is informed that his measured acreage of corn is 40 acres. On this basis, in good faith, the producer places 15 acres of corn in the acreage reserve and designates a 15-acre tract, on which he destroys a growing crop, as the acreage reserve.

"'The producer is not notified that the correct corn measurement is 50 acres instead of 40 acres in time to permit him to destroy the excess acreage of corn. The result is that there has been a reduction of only 5 acres below the corn base although the producer has destroyed a crop on the 15 acres in the acreage reserve in order to comply with the terms of the agreement which he signed.'

"The letter further states that under the existing regulations the producer in the first example can be paid no compensation, and in the second example he can be compensated only for 5 acres even though the failure in each case to reduce below the allotment or corn base to the extent of the acreage placed in the reserve is due to no fault of the producer, since the establishment of an allotment or a corn base, the measuremen of the acreage of a crop on the farm, and the furnishing of such information to the producer are administrative acts performed by employees of the Government. Therefore, your Department proposes to amend the 1956 regulations to provide that, in any case where a producer is given erroneous information as to his acreage allotment or measured acreage of the commodity, and, in good faith, acted in reliance on such information, the acreage allotment or measured acreage of which the producer was so advised shall be the official allotment or measured acreage for purposes of the 1956 acreage-reserve program.

"Section 103 (a) of the Soil Bank Act, Public Law 540, approved May 28, 1956, 70 Stat. 188, authorizes and directs the Secretary of Agriculture to formulate and carry out an acreage reserve 'under which producers shall be compensated for reducing their acreages of the commodity below their farm acreage allotments or their farm base acreages, whichever may be applicable' and provides further that to be eligible for such compensation 'the producer (1) shall reduce his acreage of the commodity below his farm acreage allotment or farm base acreage, whichever may be applicable, within such limits as the Secretary may prescribe.' This language clearly authorizes the compensation of producers solely for the reduction of their acreages of the commodity below their farm acreage allotments or their farm base acreages and any compensation based upon acreage in excess of such reduction in acreage is not authorized by the Soil Bank Act.

"Your proposed amendment to the 1956 regulations would authorize the compensation of producers for acreages in excess of their actual farm acreage allotments or farm base acreage, whichever is applicable. Since the compensation of producers on that basis would not be authorized by the Soil Bank Act, our opinion is that the issuance of the proposed amendment to the 1956 regulations legally would not be proper."

4. Action by ASC State and county offices: Pending the ruling from the Comptroller General, we attempted to advise all States involved that their requests for waivers on this type of case would be retained in this office until such time as the Comptroller General rendered a ruling. Upon receipt of this ruling, we attempted to reply to each request made by the respective States. However, it is possible in the rush of handling waiver cases and other matters in the office that some of the requests may have been overlooked. Therefore, in view of the ruling of the Comptroller General, a waiver may not be granted in this type of case. State and county committees can be governed accordingly in any case coming within the purview of the ruling of the Comptroller General.

Mr. SYMINGTON. Mr. President, based on these documents, a farmer does not know that his contract will be kept by the Government, even though he has signed and complied with it in good faith, and it is accepted by the USDA agents.

Inasmuch as the Comptroller General has ruled that the Department of Agriculture is prohibited from revising its rules and regulations in order to compensate farmers in such cases, I believe that Congress should take action to see that the Soil Bank Act is amended to remedy the injustice done.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred; and, without objection, the bill will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 2842) to provide equitable treatment for producers participating in the acreage reserve program on the basis of incorrect information furnished by the Government, introduced by Mr. SYMINGTON, was received, read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 103 of the Soil Bank Act is amended, effective as of the date of enactment of the Soil Bank Act, by adding at the end thereof the following additional subsection:

"(c) In any case in which a producer in good faith enters into an acreage reserve contract in reliance on information furnished to him by the Secretary as to his acreage allotment, base acreage, measured acreage of the commodity, or other fact, such information shall be regarded as true for the purpose of this title."

REIMBURSEMENT BY PANAMA CANAL COMPANY FOR ANNUITY PAID TO REPUBLIC OF PANAMA

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, by request, I introduce, for appropriate reference, a bill to provide for reimbursement of the Treasury by the Panama Canal Company for the annuity paid to the Republic of Panama. I ask unanimous consent that a statement prepared by me, relating to the bill, be printed in the RECORD, together with a letter from the secretary of the Panama Canal Company, requesting the proposed legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred; and, without objection, the statement and letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 2845) to provide for reimbursement of the Treasury by the Panama Canal Company for the annuity paid to the Republic of Panama, introduced by Mr. MAGNUSON, by request, was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The statement presented by Mr. MAGNUSON is as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR MAGNUSON

The Panama treaty implementation bill (H. R. 6709), recently approved by both Senate and House of Representatives, authorized conveyance of certain property and facilities to the Republic of Panama, and provided that the property and facilities conveyed should be credited to the Panama Canal Company account in the Treasury, at their market value.

Included in the bill as introduced, but deleted before passage, were provisions authorizing the additional $1,500,000 in annuity payments to the Republic of Panama stipulated in the treaty, and directing that the additional payments as well as the previously agreed annuity payment of $430,000 be reimbursed to the Treasury by the Panama Canal Company.

These provisions were eliminated from the bill because of the feeling by various members of both the Senate and House committees considering the bill, that more information should be forthcoming from the Department of State as to the circumstances attendant upon the granting of the annuity increase and the determination of the amount involved. Only thus, it was felt, could it be decided reasonably whether the additional payment was of such nature as to be a proper charge against the Canal Company, to be paid from tolls collected from vessels transiting the canal, or whether, as some contended, it was an extraordinary expenditure, based on a directive stemming from national policy and not directly connected with the operation of the canal.

Accordingly it was deemed best to defer consideration and approval of the increased payment, and of the fiscal handling of the additional amount, until the desired information on the matter was obtained. I, therefore, am reintroducing, by request, as a separate bill, the sections dealing with the authorization and fiscal handling of the increased annuity payment involved, for hearings and consideration in the 1958 session.

The letter presented by Mr. MAGNUSON is as follows:

PANAMA CANAL COMPANY,
Washington, D. C., August 21, 1957.

Hon. WARREN G. MAGNUSON,
Chairman, Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR MAGNUSON: Enclosed is a draft bill "To amend the provisions of paragraph (e) of section 246 of title 2 of the Canal Zone Code relating to reimbursement of the Treasury for the annuity paid to the Republic of Panama."

Article 1 of the 1955 treaty between the United States and Panama provides for an increase of $1,500,000, from $430,000 to $1,930,000, in the annuity payable by the United States to Panama under the 1903 convention (33 Stat. 2234) between the United States and Panama, as amended by article VII of the 1936 treaty between the two countries (53 Stat. 1807).

Section 246 (e) of title 2 of the Canal Zone Code, as amended by the act of September 26, 1950 (64 Stat. 1041) obligates the Panama Canal Company to reimburse the Treasury for the annuity payments required by article XIV of the 1903 convention, as amended by article VII of the 1936 treaty. The draft bill would amend this provision so as to obligate the Panama Canal Company to reimburse the Treasury for the amount of the increase in the annuity effected by the 1955 treaty.

A provision to require the Panama Canal Company to reimburse the Treasury for the full amount of the annuity as increased by the 1955 treaty was included in draft legislation submitted by the Bureau of the Budget to implement the various provisions of the 1955 treaty.

S. 1730, introduced by you on March 27, 1957, incorporated the provisions of the draft recommended by the Bureau of the Budget providing for transfer of certain lands to the Republic of Panama; reduction of the interest-bearing investment in the Panama Canal Company by the book value of the lands so transferred which belonged to the Company prior to the transfer; and reimbursement of the Treasury for the full amount of the annuity paid to Panama. S. 1730 passed the Senate with an amendment providing for reduction of the interest-bearing investment by the market value rather than book value of the transferred lands, and the text of the Senate bill as so amended, was substituted for the language of H. R. 6709 previously passed by the House of Representatives on the same subject.

In conference, the conference committee agreed to omit the section of H. R. 6709, as amended by the Senate, requiring the Panama Canal Company to reimburse the Treasury for the full amount of the annuity paid to Panama including the increase of $1,500,000 provided by the 1955 treaty. The conference report states that "it was agreed at the conference that this matter of internal accounting as between the Treasury and the Panama Canal Company should more properly be the subject of a separate bill."

The enclosed draft will provide a basis for consideration of this matter in separate legislation as contemplated by the conference committee.

Sincerely,

MERRILL WHITMAN,
Secretary.

PROPOSED FISCAL ACT OF 1957

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, inflation is one of the major problems facing the country today. Federal spending is a major factor in the trend toward rising costs, since the National Government collects and spends around 20 percent of the gross national income. It is not only important, but also necessary, that Congress be in a better position to judge our national fiscal policies, to eliminate waste, and to provide for necessary spending, on the most economic basis possible.

With this in mind, I am introducing a bill which would make possible the achievement of these objectives. Under the current system in which Congress must deal with measures like civil rights one week, and an appropriation bill the next, it is impossible for an adequate job to be accomplished. Moreover, toward the end of a session like this one, Congress is pressed by the departments to get "something passed" so that salaries and Government obligations can be met.

Mine is a threefold bill which will: First, provide for a regular annual fiscal session to be separate from the session on all legislative matters; second, establish the calendar year as the Government's fiscal year; and third, provide Federal accounting procedures which would insure a businesslike appraisal of the Government's fiscal position in the light of the President's annual budget.

In the fiscal session of Congress, beginning annually on the second Monday of November and extending until December 31, committees other than appropriations committees in either House might still meet, hold hearings, or conduct studies and investigations of matters under their respective jurisdictions, but ordinarily the only measures which would be introduced, reported upon, or enacted, would be money bills.

On the other hand, the present regular sessions of Congress beginning on January 3, and any special sessions, would ordinarily be confined to consideration of all nonfiscal measures. These would be known as legislative sessions.

Treaties, nominations, or other matters whose consideration during a fiscal session is requested by the President as being in the national interest, would provide certain necessary exceptions to the division of Congressional business between legislative and fiscal sessions. Action also might be taken on required deficiency appropriations during a legislative session.

I view inauguration of fiscal sessions the logical and most practical solution to the ever-increasing problem of thorough and timely action by Congress on appropriation bills. We in Congress are as responsible to the Nation as the executive branch for the wise and prudent disposition of public funds.

Sandwiching work on money bills into ordinary legislative business makes it almost impossible to meet that national responsibility. By contrast, the fiscal session plan will permit Congress periodically to devote its entire energies to these important matters without the pressure, haste, and confusion which have become too often associated with the consideration of money measures.

Title I of the bill sets up the fiscal session and establishes the difference between this and the legislative session.

Title II of the bill amends title 5, section 256 of the United States Code, and other related statutes, to establish the calendar year as the Government's fiscal year, thus putting the Federal accounting cycle in step with universal business practice. The bill provides that the first calendar-fiscal year will be 1960, commencing immediately after the first fiscal session, in November and December of 1959. Appropriations only for the period July 1 to December 31, 1959, would be made during the session of Congress beginning January 3, 1959.

Title III effects changes in the time of submission and content of the President's budget, amending section 201 of the Budget and Accounting Act of 1921. Beginning in 1959 the budget for the succeeding fiscal year would be required to be submitted on or before July 15 or approximately 4 months prior to the beginning of the fiscal session during which it will be passed upon. The benefits of having the budget published and on record well in advance of its consideration by Congress are obvious.

In order that the fiscal position of the Government be reflected in a more businesslike manner, this title requires the annual budget to incorporate two features not now required by law: First a showing of the amount of proposed appropriations and expenditures which are reimbursable to the Treasury; and second, a report on the total capital assets of the Government and their value, as of the end of the last completed fiscal year.

These items are essential to give Congress and the American people a true picture of the Federal financial position. The effect of the size of the budget as a whole cannot be properly analyzed unless some overall differentiation is made between absolute and reimbursable expenses. Even more important is the long-overdue requirement that some accounting be kept of our Government's capital assets.

It is almost impossible to make an intelligent appraisal of the Nation's solvency in terms of debt alone for the same reason that the indebtedness of a business or of an individual means nothing unless we also know something of their assets. The Federal Government today has the ownership of billions upon billions of dollars of lands, minerals, buildings, capital goods, supplies, and equipment. Inconceivable as it may seem to an outsider, no official accounting has ever been required to show the current value of this property, against which to measure the amount of our national debt. Surely this reform is now, more than ever, demanded.

The measure I am introducing is sincerely recommended for approval by the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred.

The bill (S. 2846) to provide for a separate session of Congress each year for the consideration of appropriation bills, to establish the calendar year as the fiscal year of the Government, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. MAGNUSON, was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

AMENDMENT OF ANTITRUST LAWS, RELATING TO MONOPOLISTIC ACTS OR PRACTICES BY CERTAIN PERSONS ENGAGED IN COMMERCE—AMENDMENTS

Mr. YOUNG submitted amendments, intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1356) to amend the antitrust laws by vesting in the Federal Trade Commission jurisdiction to prevent monopolistic acts or practices and other unlawful restraints in commerce by certain persons engaged in commerce in meat and meat products, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

ADDRESSES, EDITORIALS, ARTICLES, ETC., PRINTED IN THE RECORD

On request, and by unanimous consent, addresses, editorials, articles, etc., were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mr. JOHNSON of Texas:

Statement summarizing the activities of the National Security Training Commission.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, to consider the nominations on the Executive Calendar, so we may make a complete and thorough record there.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

As in executive session,

The following favorable report of a nomination was submitted:

By Mr. FULBRIGHT, from the Committee on Banking and Currency:

Robert B. Anderson, of New York, to be United States Governor of the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no further reports of committees, the nominations on the calendar will be stated.

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Richard Jackson, of Massachusetts, to be Assistant Secretary of the Navy.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

UNITED STATES AIR FORCE

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the United States Air Force.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I should like to make a brief statement on the Air Force nominations.

First of all, Brig. Gen. Robert James Smith, whose nomination is included in the list, for a long time has been an outstanding citizen of my State, and has had quite a distinguished career, having served in both wars. He is a very able citizen, who has dedicated his life largely to public service. I am very happy that he has been nominated to be a major general in our Air Force Reserve. I have great confidence in him. I am happy that the committee recommended the confirmation of his nomination.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Air Force nominations be considered en bloc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Air Force nominations will be considered en bloc; and, without objection, they are confirmed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I am very happy that the nomination of Brig. Gen. Robert James Smith to be major general has been confirmed. I wish to express my hearty congratulations to General Smith.

Mrs. SMITH of Maine. Mr. President, I opposed the Montgomery and Stewart nominations but I did not oppose any of the other nominations because I did not feel that it was fair to block nominees Herndon and Bradshaw who had excellent records of long participation in the Air Force Reserve. I am certainly not enthusiastic about the Reserve participation records of nominees Henebry, Smith, Alison, Larson, Stiles, Potts, and DeBrier. But their records were not to be put in the same class with those of Montgomery and Stewart. And I could not conclude that they, too, should be rejected merely because Montgomery and Stewart had been.

The member of the committee who opposed me in this matter expressed his feeling that fairness to all parties concerned required that my statement to the committee should be printed and made public. I am happy to comply with his expressed feeling and desire in this regard, and so I now submit the text of my statement made yesterday morning to the committee, and ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. Chairman, I have gone into these nominations very deeply and were I to make a full presentation of the objectionable matters about them it would take 3 hours of the time of the committee. I shall not impose upon the committee, but rather limit my statement to a few minutes. If the committee should want my full statement on any of the nominees I shall be happy to give it.

To set these nominations in proper perspective, we must first look at the record of the Air Force itself on these nominations. It is a record of repeated and direct misrepresentations to the committee, a record of extensive false testimony on these nominations, a record of attempts to make a wholesale rewriting of the transcript of the hearing before it was printed.

General O'Donnell sought to change his answers on 62 of the 83 pages of his testimony—on 43 of the 49 he gave in answers to my questions. General O'Donnell gave false testimony with respect to the J. B. Montgomery nomination; General O'Donnell gave false testimony with respect to the James Stewart nomination; General O'Donnell gave false testimony with respect to the Robert Smith nomination; General O'Donnell gave false testimony with respect to the John R. Alison nomination; General O'Donnell gave false testimony on the John Henebry nomination; General O'Donnell gave false information on the Jess Larson nomination.

For example, at page 34 of the hearing record General O'Donnell gave false testimony in challenging my observation that after Montgomery resigned from the Regular Air Force he would not have been eligible for any retirement benefits if he had not then been commissioned in the Reserve. He interrupted me with the flat statement of "That is incorrect, Senator." Yet later at page 79 the Air oFrce retracted this misrepresentation made by General O'Donnell and admitted that my statement was true and accurate.

At page 45 in connection with the Stewart nomination I asked if it were not true that an overwhelming number of rated Reserve Air Force generals were either command pilots or senior pilots instead of having the lowest rating of just pilot like Stewart. General O'Donnell's answer was an unequivocal and vigorous "Oh, no. Definitely not." Yet later General O'Donnell tried to have the transcript changed so that his answer would read "Yes" instead of "Oh, no. Definitely not." And the Air Force so requested that change in its letter of correction at page 80 of the hearing in the appendix. Information subsequently submitted by the Air Force revealed that there are 21 rated Air Force Reserve generals and that 19 of that number are either command pilots or senior pilots and that only 2 hold the lowest rating of mere pilot (see p. 46).

At page 28 of the hearing when I observed that Brig. Gen. Robert J. Smith at that time had had no 15-day active duty training tour since 1950, General O'Donnell gave directly false testimony to the committee and challenged my observation by stating flatly that General Smith served on duty from the 10th to the 31st of December 1956. When I said that the record did not show that, General O'Donnell repeated and persisted in this false testimony and misrepresentation to the committee. Yet, the truth is that my observation was truthful and accurate. The Air Force records show that General Smith was not on duty at any time during the period of December 10 to 31 of 1956—and that he had not performed, at the time of the hearing, a 15-day tour since 1950. Later General O'Donnell sought to have stricken from the printed hearing record this false testimony that he had given. The correction was later made in the Air Force letter of correction in the appendix of the hearing at page 79.

At pages 51 and 52 Senator STENNIS asked for the names of the nominees who had served more than the annual minimum of 15 days since 1954 and on page 52 General O'Donnell submitted a list stating "The following officers who are up for promotion have had more than the 15 days' active duty per year since 1954"; and included in that list was Colonel Alison. Again in this instance General O'Donnell gave false testimony and information to the committee for Colonel Alison did not have 15 days' active duty in 1954 but rather had only 3 partial days in 1954 and actually was in the inactive Reserve until May 15, 1955 (see p. 24 of the hearing).

At page 60 of the hearing General O'Donnell testified that no waivers had been granted to any of the nominees. Yet, although General Henebry's training category "A" requires not only an annual 15-day tour of active training but also a minimum of 48 inactive duty training periods annually. General Henebry did not get in 48 inactive duty training periods in any year—in fact, he didn't get in any such inactive duty training periods in the fiscal year 1957 just ended. Yet, at page 59 of the hearing General O'Donnell testified that all nominees had met the minimum requirements. Obviously, his testimony with respect to General Henebry in this regard was false.

At page 20 of the hearing the Air Force, through General O'Donnell, represented that Col. Jess Larson had a training category "A". Because I knew that this could not be true since Colonel Larson is not a pilot or rated officer, I asked pointedly at page 54 about this. Air Force representatives failed to correct this false information when I asked about it and they were content to leave the committee with the false impression that Colonel Larson did have a training category "A" assignment when he did not. They did not correct this false information until over 3 weeks after the hearing and only after I had pressed the point (see pp. 55 and 56).

Mr. Chairman, there are several other misrepresentations made by the Air Force and its representatives in this matter. I shall not burden the committee with a recital of them for I feel they would be merely cumulative in effect and I think that these enumerated should sufficiently and impressively demonstrate that the Air Force record in this matter before the committee has clearly been one of disregard for truth, disregard for accuracy, and disregard for encouragement of active participation in the Air Force Reserve.

I now turn to the specific nominations. First, I say that the records of nominees Herndon and Bradshaw are excellent and that their nominations should be approved without hesitancy by the committee.

But from that point on there are substantial questions in increasingly serious degree about the rest of the nominees. Colonel Larson was in the Air Force Reserve less than 5 years before he was nominated for brigadier general. Colonels DeBrier, Potts, and Stiles have deficiencies in their records of Reserve participation. General Henebry failed to perform a 15-day tour in retention years 1953, 1954, and 1956—and failed to meet his training category "A" requirement of 48 inactive duty training periods in retention year 1957—not only not getting in the required number but failing to get a single period of inactive duty training. General Smith failed to perform a 15-day tour from 1950 until the very last minute of retention year 1957, just barely getting in under the deadline for that year. Colonel Alison earned only 6 points in 9 years from 1946 to May 1955 and became active in the Air Force Reserve only when given an assignment that carried the authorized rank of brigadier general.

The worst 2 cases of the 11 nominations are those of Colonel Montgomery and Colonel Stewart.

There has been much false publicity about Colonel Stewart and the qualifications claimed for him. It has been claimed that he has trained actively with the Reserve every year. That claim was proved false at page 44 of the hearing. It has been claimed that he is the first pilot of a B–52. That claim was proved false at page 45 of the hearing. It has been claimed that he could fly a B–52 anywhere in the world. That claim was proved false at the hearing.

In fact, the real truth was established at the hearing—that Colonel Stewart is not current or qualified on any military aircraft (see p. 45). Instead of being a command pilot or senior pilot as the overwhelming number of rated Air Force Reserve generals are, he has the lowest rating of mere pilot.

Instead of having trained actively every year with the Reserve, he didn't start training until a year ago in July—the first time that he did a 15-day tour since the end of World War II—the first time in 11 years. In fact, his participation record in the Reserve until last year was only 9 days in 11 years.

What's more, even though his mobilization assignment is Deputy Director of Operations of the Strategic Air Command—literally the No. 3 job in SAC importance if war comes—the very bare minimum of participation is to be required of him in the future—the minimum of only 15 days—nothing else.

For he has a training category "D" in this most important mobilization assignment. Now what is the basis for such a low minimum training category "D"? The Air Force provided the answer to this at pages 54 and 71 of the hearing with the statement of: "These individuals are considered proficient in their Air Force specialty by virtue of their recent release from active military service or maintain their proficiency through their normal civilian pursuits."

Stewart was released from active military service in 1945—12 years ago. Obviously that is not a recent release.

Stewart's normal civilian pursuit is that of motion-picture actor. Obviously he can't maintain his proficiency for Deputy Director of Operations of the Strategic Air Command by being a motion-picture actor.

Past national presidents of the Reserve Officers Association have complained bitterly to me that the Stewart nomination was destructive to the morale of the Air Force Reserve.

The worst case in my opinion is that of the John B. Montgomery nomination, for here is a record of a nominee showing practically no interest in the Reserve—a nominee who for nearly 16 months after he was commissioned in the Reserve did not lift his finger for participation in the Reserve—a nominee, who in over 2 years, in over 26 months, has put in a total of only 15 days in the Air Force Reserve—a nominee with the least participation of all of the nominees in the Air Force Reserve—a nominee who has been in the Air Force Reserve only a little over 2 years.

Here is a case where a regular officer used the Air Force Reserve to get what he couldn't get in the regular establishment—who left the Regular Air Force, after being refused retirement as a regular major general, to take a high paying civilian job—but who, by taking advantage of a slip and loophole in the law, will be able to get just as much retirement pay as his contemporaries who stay in the Regular Air Force on duty 365 days a year while Montgomery is not on duty in some years a single day in the year—a nominee who is having his cake in the form of abandonment of the Regular Air Force for a plush job in private industry but who is also eating his cake by using the Air Force Reserve to get, at the age of 53, the maximum retirement pay of 75 percent of the base pay of a major general on a shocking minimum of participation in Reserve training duty with the Air Force.

The Montgomery case has become not only a symbolic case of a destructive blow to Air Force reservists who see in it a way for regulars to use the Reserve to their personal advantage—but also to the regulars themselves who see one of their contemporaries abandon the Regular Air Force for a plush job in industry and still get just as much retirement pay as those contemporaries who remain faithful to the Air Force and stay on the job 365 days a year for 30 years. I know because I have had 1- and 2-star Regular generals who served under and with Montgomery come to me and complain about the Montgomery nomination. They say that the Montgomery nomination is literally an invitation to all Regular Air Force generals to resign from the Regular Air Force to accept high-paying civilian jobs and then be commissioned in the Air Force Reserve and use it for minimum participation and the easy way to get the maximum retirement pay with the least possible service.

In fact, the Montgomery case is so bad that in an unguarded moment even General O'Donnell at page 39 of the hearing stated: "* * * I have been in the personnel business for 4 years over there, and that is the first time an action like this has been taken, and I don't anticipate any in the future because of this."

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I say that the committee should make sure of this—that the committee should serve notice on the Air Force and all Regular Air Force generals that the Montgomery nomination is not an invitation for them to abandon the Air Force for plush civilian jobs and use the Air Force Reserve to get the most retirement pay for the least service—by rejecting the Montgomery nomination now and serving notice on the Air Force and Colonel Montgomery that if he is to be made a general in the Air Force Reserve he is going to have to give a little more of his time—that there is no justification for making him a general in the Air Force Reserve on only 15 days activity in the Air Force Reserve.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey subsequently said: I am very happy, indeed, that the nomination of Col. Daniel DeBrier, who is a constituent of mine, to be a brigadier general in the Air Force, has been confirmed. I congratulate General DeBrier.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President be immediately notified of all nominations confirmed today.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the President will be notified forthwith.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate resume the consideration of legislative business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate resumed the consideration of legislative business.

MUTUAL-SECURITY PROGRAM

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, during the discussion of the appropriation for the mutual-security program for fiscal 1958, various assertions have been made with regard to the availability of funds of various kinds. An overall assertion has been made that upward of $12 billion is available and, therefore, a very small current appropriation is necessary. I am endeavoring to get a breakdown of the alleged available $12 billion, and will present it at a later date.

On Tuesday last, August 20, the distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] made the assertion that we have available in foreign currencies in various countries of the world, for fiscal 1958, a total of approximately $2.6 billion. The remarks of the Senator from Virginia appear on pages 15337–15338 of the RECORD.

At my request, the International Cooperation Administration and other departments of the Government have assisted my staff in preparing a statement explaining the situation with regard to these asserted available foreign currencies.

I ask unanimous consent that this statement, which I believe to be accurate, be inserted in full in the body of the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR SMITH OF NEW JERSEY

THE PROBLEM OF THE USE OF FOREIGN CURRENCIES—THEIR AVAILABILITY FOR THE MUTUAL-SECURITY PROGRAM IN FISCAL 1958

I

The first category of these foreign currencies consists of so-called counterpart funds. The amount involved in this category is approximately $1.1 billion. These are produced under section 142 of the Mutual Security Act which formerly required that whenever commodities were shipped abroad as grants under defense-support or development-assistance titles of the act and sold by the recipient nations, the latter had to establish a special account in local currency equal to the agreed value of the commodities. Ten percent of the moneys in such accounts was to be for the use of the United States and the remaining 90 percent was to be placed in projects for purposes advancing mutual security in the recipient country. Such projects are usually agreed upon by the United States and the local country before the commodities are shipped; but, since the recipient country owns the funds, the United States actually possesses only a veto over their use.

Under the authorization provisions of S. 2130 as adopted by the conference, counterpart funds will be primarily generated from defense support shipments hereafter.

There are almost $1.1 billion of these counterpart funds in existence which have been generated under section 142 from shipments of defense-support and development-assistance goods appropriated for in 1955, 1956, and 1957.

But, these counterpart currencies (1) cannot be used as a substitute for fiscal 1958 appropriations, nor (2) do they form part of any outstanding kitty of supposedly available mutual-security funds, for the following reasons:

1. They do not exist as a free, unattached fund of $1,100,000,000. They are, in fact, 28 different currencies in 28 different countries, ranging for example from 1,199,700 Burmese kyats to 7,109,100,000 Grecian drachmas. The Burmese kayats cannot be used in Turkey, nor the Grecian drachmas in Siam, etc.

2. One-half of these counterpart currencies are actually only borrowing by governments from their central banks. To use them for any purpose but to repay the banks might lead to dangerous inflation.

3. One-fourth of these currencies are held in countries in which we do not now have economic programs for which their use would be possible.

4. Therefore, only one-fourth of these currencies are open to discussion at all.

5. Of this one-fourth essentially all are inconvertible currencies and cannot be exchanged for dollars in order that needed commodities for use in the recipient countries can be acquired.

6. As a result, they have, in any case, a limited function in the mutual security program in obtaining military assistance and economic aid. These currencies cannot be used to buy from industrialized nations, tanks or tractors, school equipment, or generators, the goods which are needed locally in these underdeveloped countries and which cannot be produced there.

7. To the extent that any of these currencies are usable in mutual security programs they have already been taken into account in the mutual security programs of 1955, 1956, and 1957, and none remain for consideration as part of the fiscal year 1958 program.

8. To attempt to cut the appropriation for 1958 because of the existence of these currencies would constitute double accounting of currencies either unusable, or already committed to useful purposes in past years.

II

The second category is composed of local currencies generated from sales of surplus agricultural commodities under title I of Public Law 480. The amount approximately involved from these sales is $2 billion.

Section 104 of that act sets forth 10 uses of these funds and only four of them are related to mutual security purposes. These four are: (1) Military procurement (troop pay, cost of barracks, etc.); (2) purchase of goods for other countries; (3) grants for multilateral trade and economic development; and (4) loans for multilateral trade and economic development.

Of the amounts in sales since the inception of the program in 1954, some $1.5 billion in local currencies has been set aside for these four mutual security purposes.

The remaining six uses are for purposes unrelated to the mutual security program and total about $500 million.

The currencies, which in this case the United States owns, from all sales of commodities made under the act, are deposited in local accounts. Public Law 480 requires that a portion be earmarked for United States use and in some instances these reserves are very substantial. The balances remaining are then granted or loaned (mostly loaned) under agreements worked out with the local countries.

Of the available currencies only a part, therefore, can be considered in connection with mutual security appropriations in fiscal 1958. They do not constitute a free available fund which can be substituted for mutual security appropriated dollars, however, because:

1. They are comprised of 31 different currencies from some 31 variant countries and essentially all are inconvertible.

2. Public Law 480 agreements have been made with 12 countries which do not participate in the mutual security program at all. Funds represented by sales to these nations are included within the $1.5 billion noted above, which is allocated to the four designated uses. Since these nations are in no way accounted for in the mutual security appropriation for 1958 except for a small amount of technical assistance funds, the currencies in the agreements with these nations cannot serve as any substitute for mutual security appropriations.

The result is as follows:

Total under consideration as stated above	$1,500,000,000
Deducting amounts involved with the 12 countries not in the mutual security program (possibly more)	470,000,000
Balance	1,030,000,000

3. Of the $1.03 billion remaining, $75 million must be deducted because (1) part has already been spent, and (2) part will not be available for use until after June 30, 1958.

This leaves a net supposedly available balance of $955 million.

4. These $955 million in local currencies are supposedly available but they are inconvertible local currencies and are subject to the same limitations as surround the use of counterpart funds described before. Consequently, only a part of them can actually be taken into consideration in the preparation of the fiscal 1958 mutual security appropriation.

5. Finally, because of the limited use of these inconvertible funds and the difficulties of ascertaining whether they will be used in nations which are participating in the mutual security program, only about $550 million of the remaining $955 million was estimated to be available as a substitute for mutual security appropriated dollars in fiscal 1958. This figure was definitely taken into consideration in preparing the mutual security budget for fiscal 1958 and dollar requests were eliminated to this extent before the President sent his budget request to the Congress.

III

In conclusion, therefore, we find that—

(1) Of the total of some $2.6 billion in local currencies involved in both categories in this memorandum, which includes the $1.1 billion in counterpart currencies and $1.5 billion in Public Law 480 currencies, asserted to be available for the mutual security program for fiscal year 1958, it is apparent that only about $550 million could be substituted for 1958 appropriations, and

(2) The availability of these currencies actually has been fully taken into account in preparing the 1958 budget and the budget request was reduced by this amount before it was sent to the Congress.

For all practical purposes then, none of this $2.6 billion of local currencies can be available for use for the mutual security fiscal year 1958 program in substitution for any of the dollars which the President has advised the Congress are needed.

SECOND AIRPORT FOR DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA AREA

Mr. BEALL. Mr. President, the question of a second airport for the District of Columbia area is with us again. As is well known, many of us feel that the answer lies in the immediate utilization of Friendship International Airport, and that any investigation of the problem which is not slanted by the CAB will support our beliefs. I personally would welcome an objective, impartial study of the matter, and therefore I am inclined to go along with the proposal advanced yesterday that such an investigation be conducted at the President's request prior to next January 15. However, there are two important points I wish to make at this time. In the first place, I want the legislative history of the appropriate section of the supplemental appropriations bill—and I ask unanimous consent that the section be inserted at the end of my remarks—to show that nothing in the amendment shall indicate in any manner or form that the study shall exclude consideration of Friendship International Airport or that Friendship might not eventually be found to be the additional Washington airport therein mentioned. My second point, Mr. President, is that the planned study should not deter the CAB from following the explicit orders of this Congress in respect to the prompt utilization of Friendship International Airport for additional flights into and out of the Nation's Capital.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maryland?

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CIVIL AERONAUTICS ADMINISTRATION: CONSTRUCTION AND DEVELOPMENT, ADDITIONAL WASHINGTON AIRPORT

For necessary expenses for the construction and development of a public airport in the vicinity of the District of Columbia, as authorized by the act of September 7, 1950 (64 Stat. 770), including acquisition of land, $12,500,000, to remain available until expended: Provided, That not to exceed a total of $250,000 may be advanced from this appropriation to the applicable appropriations of the Civil Aeronautics Administration for necessary administrative expenses: Provided further, That such sums as may be necessary but not to exceed $100,000 shall be transferred from this appropriation to the President for expenses necessary for the investigation of alternate sites for said airport: Provided further, That no funds shall be expended for construction and development of said airport until the President shall make a report to the Congress with a recommendation as to the site, said report to be submitted not later than January 15, 1953.

FLOOD CONTROL STORAGE IN COLUMBIA RIVER BASIN

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. President, there is widespread interest throughout the Columbia River Basin on the desirability of flood control storage in the upper watershed to firm downstream generation. Recently the Portland Oregonian published an editorial emphasizing the importance of such developments, and particularly calling attention to the desirability of constructing Bruces Eddy Dam on the north fork of the Clearwater River in Idaho. I ask unanimous consent that the editorial may be published at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STORAGE OR BLACKOUTS

Although the Pacific Northwest is gratified that Congress has approved a small but firm start of construction on John Day Dam in the Columbia, it must be regretted that Congress and the administration continue to shove into the future the presently imperative need for upstream storage for flood control, power, and navigation.

The failure to develop upstream storage in the United States section of the Columbia Basin not only imperils the economy but weakens the United States position in negotiations with Canada for mutually beneficial storage projects in Canada's part of the basin. The more storage we can develop, the less dependent we will be on Canada, and the less costly to us will be the storage eventually obtained in Canada.

Thus, the House of Representatives refusal to go along with the Senate, which added $500,000 to the budget for planning of the Bruces Eddy flood-control and power dam on the North Fork of the Clearwater River in Idaho, is bad news for the Northwest. It is in a pattern with the failure of a Federal Power Commission examiner to propose a higher dam, for more storage, at the Pleasant Valley site in the Snake River.

Bruces Eddy Dam would have one of the highest benefits-to-cost ratios of the Columbia control system, 2.14 to 1, on the basis of preliminary Army engineers' estimates. This 570-foot-high rock- and earth-filled dam would store 2,460,000 acre-feet of water of which 1,433,000 acre-feet would be usable to reduce the costly flooding of the Clearwater and Columbia Basins and for downstream power generation. Dependable at-site power capacity would be 240,000 kilowatts and downstream power addition would be almost half that figure.

Northwesterners, generally speaking, are little aware of their present dependence on limited upstream storage for their kilowatts in the low-water periods of late summer and especially in winter when runoff is stopped by freezing in the Rockies. In a letter of protest to the Federal Power Commission from Howard Morgan, Oregon public utilities commissioner, this dependence and this danger were emphasized in relation to Snake River projects.

Mr. Morgan enclosed streamflow figures of last winter, which was not a particularly bad water year. In that cold period when peak power demand and lowest flow coincide, "the actual flow of the Columbia River dropped to a point at which it was capable of generating only 2,000,000 kilowatts out of a total demand of 5,500,000 kilowatts." This left a margin of 3,500,000 kilowatts, or more than three-fifths of total demand, which was attributable to downstream generation made possible by the release of upstream storage, principally from Grand Coulee and Hungry Horse Dams.

"It is easy to imagine the calamity which could have befallen this area if the period of cold weather had persisted for only the few weeks which would have been necessary in order completely to exhaust the limited upstream storage behind those two dams," Mr. Morgan wrote to FPC.

The observation applies as well to Bruces Eddy and other postponed storage projects as to Pleasant Valley. If the Northwest does not get some big storage projects in Idaho, Montana, or Canada, the Northwest one of these winters is going to have a power blackout which, as ex-Treasury Secretary Humphrey said about another phase of the economy, "will make your hair curl."

COST OF LIVING

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, we hear a great deal about the increased cost of living, but, as someone has said, nobody is doing anything about it. We have in this country a tremendous impact upon what we produce by an income of $350 billion. We are producing a product of about $440 billion.

We have read that the steel manufacturers have increased prices $6 a ton. We have seen that labor in many places is increasing its demands. All such factors increase buying power.

Correspondents have said in letters to me, "Why does not the Legislature do something about it?" We are looking for the wise man to tell us what should be done about it, and that is the nubbin of the whole problem. There can be no question about that.

Some persons say the increased interest rate has something to do with the high cost of living. The fact of the matter is that in small communities in Wisconsin where plants have closed, there have not been such price increases, because the demand is not there. In other words, the purchasing power is not there. Consequently, we must take a bird's-eye view of the whole picture, and not consider it from a pessimist's viewpoint, but from an optimist's viewpoint. We have got to see that up ahead lies great prosperity if we can regulate the forces which may operate against it. We have got to ask the manufacturers to use sense. We have got to ask labor to use sense. As someone has suggested to me, if each one of us would reduce our own spending by 10 percent, we would see that the accelerated pace of increased prices would stop.

Mr. President, I merely drop this little idea in the bucket to try to see if any wise man on the floor of the Senate or on the floor of the House can give us the answer legislativewise.

PROBLEMS OF METROPOLITAN AREAS

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, on the 3d of January of this year, the day when I had the honor to be inducted as a Member of the United States Senate, I spoke before the Women's National Press Club about the plight and problems of our great cities and metropolitan areas. As this first session of this Congress draws to a close, I am reminded of the fact that very little has been done to help the plight of our cities.

I ask unanimous consent that at this point in the Record there may be printed an excerpt from the comments I made at the Women's National Press Club on January 3.

There being no objection, the excerpt was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Remarks by Senator Joseph S. Clark, of Pennsylvania, at Dinner, Women's National Press Club, January 3, 1957

I would like to outline an area in which, in my view, the Federal Government must act, and quickly: the problems faced by our cities. Three-fifths of all Americans live in 173 metropolitan areas. This concentration of population in a relatively small geographic area, spilling across city, county, and even State boundaries, with its jurisdictional limitations, areawide service and control deficiencies, and economic and human inequalities, has resulted in a crisis for our cities which is endangering their very existence, and indeed the cultural way of life they historically engender.

Increasing demands for adequate and efficient services, coupled with constantly shrinking sources of revenue, are making it impossible for the city to deal with the special problems of blighted housing, urban redevelopment, congested traffic, inadequate parking facilities, deficient mass transit, water and air pollution control, airports, civil defense, and a dozen other vital needs and services which these huge metropolitan complexes require. Local governmental structure is not properly organized to solve these problems; the areas themselves crisscross State boundaries, and antiquated State constitutions often make possible solutions prohibitive. But most important of all, our municipalities simply don't have the money. And as the Kestnbaum (Commission on Intergovernmental Relations) report made clear, the Federal Government is not likely to relinquish any of the vast, entrenched taxing abilities which have dried up the city's sources of revenue.

The Federal Government is already playing a large role in the fields of housing, highways, river-valley development, civil defense—to mention only a few—which directly affect our cities; and, in some ways, contribute to their difficulties. Overlapping and duplication of services, the competition for personnel, many separate and independent governmental units, the increased demand for local expenditures, and plain red tape are by no means uncommon in existing relations between the local and Federal Governments.

What we need, then, is not just more of the same, but a whole new concept dealing with the problems of the metropolitan area. A new approach and a new policy of intergovernmental relations which recognizes the metropolitan area as reality not determined by artificial political boundaries, and the life of the metropolis as the central hub in a way of life that must not be allowed to wither and die. The Federal Government must provide the financial help which is available no other way. I believe that the Federal Government must also recognize this responsibility through the establishment of an appropriate agency to coordinate its activities in this program, perhaps at the cabinet level.

We are proud, in Pennsylvania, of what our cities have accomplished in recent years in their struggle to survive. But we know that we must have help, and have it now, if we are to turn that struggle into a victory.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, the problems of our large cities and municipal areas are serious and continuing, and they will continue until some combined form of governmental action at the local, State, and national level is taken. I deplore the efforts made at the conference of governors and the President and his administrators to try to work out methods of turning back certain functions to the States. In my judgment, that would take us down the long and irrelevant road to even less consideration of the serious problems of our cities.

In the Sunday Philadelphia Bulletin of August 18, there appeared an article entitled "Plight of the Cities: Revenue Can't Keep Up With Need for Service," written by John Mosedale, of the North American Newspaper Alliance. I ask unanimous consent that the article may be printed in the Record at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Plight of the Cities: Revenue Can't Keep Up With Need for Service

(Editor's Note.—Philadelphia's taxpayers and their suburban neighbors aren't the only ones caught between the need for more municipal services and the problem of paying for them. This survey by the North American Newspaper Alliance points up the marked similarity between Philadelphia problems and those of other cities, large and small.)

(By John Mosedale)

Several months ago, Mayor Ben West, of Nashville, Tenn., head of the American Municipal Association, said that unless adequate financial aid is promptly extended to cities "the Nation will be in a whale of a mess."

It's as simple as this: Cities are spending more than they are earning. Old sources of revenue are going dry. The search for new sources—necessarily at the taxpayers' expense—never catches up with needs, and at the same time, new demands on the local treasury are continually being made.

One expert estimates that the bursting of our cities has only begun, that by the most conservative estimate, our central cities can now house only 17 million of a population increase estimated at 55 million over the next 20 years.

This means two-thirds of the population growth will live outside today's central cities but will make work and play demands on them offering further financial strains. Now let's look at the present situation in some key cities:

BOSTON

Despite lopsided taxes, now at an alltime high, the city is deep in the red. In operating expenses alone, the city has spent nearly $19 million more than it has taken in during the past 10 years.

Boston's tax rate last year was $78.70 per $1,000. The 1957 rate, to be announced soon, is expected to be $87. By comparison, the 1931 tax rate was $31.50.

Mayor John B. Hynes said: "Business firms expect to pay about 3 percent of their gross income on local taxes. Here they are paying 7, 8, even 9 percent. How long can such a situation continue?"

"I dislike the sales tax as much as anyone," he continued, "but frankly, I do not see any present alternative * * * Without some kind of tax relief, Boston will shortly be facing a crisis—the worst in its history * * * less police, fire, and health protection * * * If we could check the rising tax rate here, Boston would be entering on a period of expansion, building, and rebuilding. * * *"

Boston, whose crooked streets are traffic-clogged, has found difficulty in trying to get what it considers a fair share of the State revenue dollar.

Officials have been unsuccessful in attempting to lighten the city's share of supporting a deficit-burdened transit system which serves 14 municipalities. Similarly, they have been unable to bring about reapportionment on the financing of metropolitan area parks and boulevards.

LOS ANGELES

The county's general operating budget will be in excess of $415 million next year * * * plus an additional $110 million in special district taxes. Residents of Los Angeles will have to pay more taxes next year. Property taxes are going up too.

Because of tax rises, there will be gripes. But they won't be too loud, for this is the most prosperous period in California's history. And Los Angeles and the rest of southern California lead the boom.

Industry is expanding.

This city spends big. It is spending $60 million for sewers and another $60 million to enlarge its municipal airport. The county is building a new courthouse and two other buildings downtown which will cost a total of $45 million.

Los Angeles is exceptional.

KANSAS CITY

City Manager L. P. Cookingham warns: "Cities do not stand still. They either go forward or backward. It is evident now that we're up against it. We are cutting services and stretching manpower. City employees haven't had a salary or wage increase in almost 4 years."

Mayor H. Roe Bartle put it bluntly: "I keep asking the finance director for money, and he keeps telling me the money ain't there."

As officials cut at their budget, they do so in the midst of protests from department heads, commissions, committees and citizens' groups. The residents want more services, not fewer services. They want community centers with paid staffs to combat delinquency; more street lights, more traffic signals, a trash collection service.

"Being the central city of a large metropolitan area," says Cookingham, "we are caught in the middle. We have only about half of the one million residents in the area, but we must perform services for all of them. Our revenues aren't keeping pace with the growth of the area, and we find ourselves unable to provide * * * urban renewal projects necessary for a progressive city."

Yet a proposal for a 1 percent earnings tax was defeated by a vote of four to one last March. It would have added $7 million a year to the city's revenue.

WASHINGTON

Although the average family here is relatively well off, there are slums in the shadow of the Capitol as bad as any in the country. Washington has no integrated transportation system. Private automobiles jam the streets.

Washington is now in the midst of a projected $500 million slum clearance program. But its basic municipal problem is beyond reach of its residents.

Says David Barnett, head of the NANA bureau in Washington:

"This is the only city in the world where the ultimate center of power is in the hands of persons who consider governing a municipality a passing nuisance."

Furthermore, "Congress won't permit the city to sell bonds or borrow money. More than half its 70 square miles is tax-free land. It has no heavy industry to provide tax revenue."

SAN FRANCISCO

The city spent $73 million in 1947 and just over $150 million in 1956. More than $44 million of that difference is accounted for in schools, public safety, preventive medicine and hospitals.

But the city's population hasn't increased appreciably. Business carries the load in the form of taxes.

Residents aren't satisfied with what they're getting for their city taxes. A prime target for bellyaching is the municipally owned bus, trolley and cable car system which the city took over at the end of World War II and has completely modernized with bond money and taxes.

Service is excellent, fast and frequent, but the system has lost riders and money every year.

For the overall picture, one city official puts it succinctly: "Pray for prosperity. Otherwise, we'll fall flat on our face."

People want more and better services, and the question is: Can they pay for it?

Harry Ross, the city's controller, thinks they can. With all the problems, San Francisco's credit remains excellent, its bonds selling at 2.24 percent—substantially lower than most municipal bonds.

ROCHESTER

For the future, higher and higher costs are the only prospect. Nonproperty taxes and other revenues, plus substantial financial help from county, State, and Federal Government, are counted on.

Estimated city budget for 1957–58 is nearly $32 million, up 11 percent from 2 years ago. School costs have jumped even more sharply.

Booming city costs here are caused not only by pay boosts but also by expanded police and fire forces, by rising prices on things the city purchases, and by various expanded activities.

Snowballing programs to sharpen municipal operations and build major new capital construction projects are being pushed by city fathers.

So far, taxpayers have borne the rising costs of these programs without concerted protest, and city leaders are hoping new municipal benefits will cause citizens to continue to overlook steadily increasing tax bills.

BIRMINGHAM

Howard H. Houk, Alabama State building director, says the survival of the city with its central market place is threatened. He takes a dim view of the many shopping centers that are spreading on the outskirts of many major cities.

"Cities are becoming loosely knit, quasi-federations with sprawling developments financed by Tom, Dick, and Harry," he said. "Many are jerry-built for quick returns on the builders' investment and are doomed to become the slums of tomorrow."

A drive is underway to enlist the aid of downtown property owners in a concerted campaign to revive what to many appears an economically sick area.

The demand is for more services, with no one coming forth with concrete plans for more financing.

Those wanting more help from the Government characteristically are the ones who yelp quickest when a tax bite is applied.

NEW YORK

On the surface, the city would seem so busy it could easily support its colossal costs. Major buildings rise almost weekly. But there are those who argue that prosperity here is more shadow than substance.

With the city spending $5.3 million a day, New Yorkers face the probability of a local income tax by 1961, according to the New York City-New York State Commission on Fiscal Relations.

If the population has not boomed, demands have. LaGuardia Airport, obsolete almost since its 1939 completion, faces a $30 million improvement program, and the money won't be forthcoming until new contracts are negotiated.

Bellevue Hospital, once regarded as unique in the world in offering communitywide services and opportunities for medical study, has been criticised by one of its own Nobel-prize winning directors, Dr. Dickinson Richards. He says it's no longer able to give patients that quality of medical care to which they are entitled.

PITTSBURGH

Pittsburgh is one of the bright spots in a dark picture. But after spending more than $2 billion on urban renewal, the city still has a glaring problem, and it will mean even more expenditure. The problem is transportation.

The mass transit system here is in desperate straits, with 15 private bus lines in the central city and 21 other companies in the suburbs. Traffic is hopelessly snarled.

Otherwise, the entire metropolitan area has been revitalized. Repair and renovation of the Golden Triangle alone—where the Monongahela and Allegheny meet to form the Ohio River—increased assessed valuation in the downtown district by 21 percent in 7 years.

Since 1946, some 44 new buildings have sprung up in the triangle, 10 of them regarded as major skyscrapers, rising against a backdrop of green and rugged mountains.

This was made possible by State, county, city, and Federal Government and private enterprise, along with gifts. But the citizens have pledged their credit for decades to come.

Yet Pittsburgh as a city can only hope to hold its own. The real expansion is in the suburbs. The city has virtually no industrial sites remaining and some plants, squeezed for space, have pulled out.

SUBURBS, SMALL TOWNS

The suburbs—those of Pittsburgh and many other cities—are overcrowded, too. So they're struggling along on patchwork economics, hoping for help from somebody—the State, the county, Uncle Sam.

While the pressure is on the suburbs as the villain of the piece, what is not generally considered is that the suburbs themselves grew because of urban inadequacies, and that they themselves are in trouble.

A University of Connecticut team reported that smalltown finances are being hit the hardest by rapid growth.

The team's survey, covering municipalities ranging in population from 3,032 to 34,116, showed that over an 8-year period, local taxes climbed from a minimum of 0.03 percent to 58 percent. The maximum increase occurred in the smallest town.

The United States Census Bureau says that the largest rise in the number of municipal employees—53 percent—over the past decade has occurred in cities of from 10,000 to 25,000. The same communities had the biggest local government payroll hike, too—a staggering 157 percent.

A survey of 4 towns in the Hartford fringe area revealed tax increases as high as 58 percent over a 6-year period, taking away any inflation factor.

The report pinpointed the trouble:

"Prior to growth, these towns either did without any public services or relied on volunteer or part-time officials. With growth, they were called on to provide full-time personnel, new equipment, and new services."

Accordingly—

Levittown, Long Island, N. Y., hiked its population from 721 to 55,572 and its tax rate jumped 480.9 percent.

The Jefferson County suburbs of Denver, Colo., more than doubled their population—from 35,079 to 90,000—but taxes increased 69.5 percent.

Parma Heights, a Cleveland, Ohio, suburb, grew from 1,330 to 22,000 and its tax rate went up 92.5 percent.

Milford, Conn., tried to halt growth by refusing to grant building permits. But the State supreme court declared the act unconstitutional.

In its court suit, Milford typically alleged that it was financially unable to provide adequate school, highway, sanitation, police, and other services.

What business can mean to a suburb is clear in the case of Stamford, Conn., outside New York City.

Shortly after World War II, Ridgeway, a $6.7 million shopping center, was constructed there. It became a model for shopping centers across the Nation. Today it pays the city $47,000 a year in taxes. As a residential area, the same site had paid a $2,376 tax bill.

But on one point the experts agree: Before suburbs can attract business and industry on a scale to keep taxpaying pace with the demands made on their treasuries, there will have to be a new kind of suburban planning.

Senator CLARK (Democrat, Pennsylvania), recently suggested that unless local governments are to lean more and more heavily on State and Federal assistance, "a fourth layer of government, one that will correspond geographically to the new community—the metropolitan area," is the only way out of the dilemma.

This reordering of the structure of local government is supported by most authorities in the field.

Prof. William A. Robson, of the London School of Economics and Political Science, sums up their argument by his comment:

"The problems of big cities and their suburbs have become so massive and urgent that city councils should turn over some functions to elected regional councils."

But political boundaries—drawn in the distant past for reasons irrelevant today—immensely complicate the situation.

DADE COUNTY PROBLEM

This was the problem facing Miami and Dade County, Fla. officials.

In sober fact, there was nothing unusual in Miami's situation.

It was typical of the world's richest continent. It contained a conglomeration of communities so unplanned that endless duplication and waste—violently criticized when they occur on the Federal level—are commonly accepted by citizens and even fought for until local tax facts are pointed out.

Dade County officials became deeply concerned and unlike many officials, they took action.

A 12-year campaign toward a fourth level of government was culminated by governmental changes just approved.

What Dade County voters approved—and what other municipalities will be studying with renewed interest—is a metropolitan charter which recognizes that the metropolitan area is a unity.

The "fourth level of government" is being increasingly talked about.

Mr. CLARK. The end result of this article is to point to a dozen of our major cities, most of them large, some of them small, and to point they are overcome with problems the solution of which is essential to a continuation of our urban communities as civilized centers of American life, and that their problems cannot be met with local revenues. Sooner or later we have got to give the same consideration to our cities which I am happy to join in giving to our farm population.

PAY FOR FEDERAL WORKERS—COST OF LIVING

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, it has been my conviction all along that Federal employees are the victims, and not the cause, of inflation.

Month after month the cost of living ascends to a new high. Yet, the salaries of Federal employees remain stationary. I do not know how much longer our loyal and efficient postal workers and other Federal employees can continue to survive economically and in decency under such circumstances. The administration appears to be without compassion in the matter. It continues to insist that an adjustment in pay of Federal workers would be inflationary. Yet, we witness increase after increase to other workers in the Nation.

I have in my hand an article by the Associated Press which appeared in today's newspapers, announcing that for the 11th successive month the cost of living rose to a new high.

The article points out further that the pay of more than a million and a half employees in private industry will be increased automatically. This is the 11th time in 11 successive months these employees have received an automatic cost-of-living adjustment in their pay.

By way of contrast, Federal employees have been given only one small increase in 6 years. One of the very real disappointments to me has been the unyielding attitude of the administration toward the serious economic plight of Federal employes.

I fervently hope that the leadership will expedite the consideration of this proposed legislation by the Senate, and that when we have passed it, the President will give it his approval.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the article of the Associated Press, referred to above, be printed in the RECORD immediately following my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LIVING COSTS UP FOR 11TH MONTH

(By G. K. Hodenfield)

The cost of living rose in July and for the 11th straight month set a record, the Government reported yesterday. The July increase was one-half of 1 percent, raising the Labor Department's Consumer Price Index to 120.8 percent of the 1947–49 level.

A Department spokesman indicated that no great decline was expected for August.

[Washington retail food prices for July jumped 1.6 percent over June prices, exceeding the price index for July 1956, by 3 percent and the August 1952, peak index by 2.8 percent.

[The food price index for July, released yesterday by the Labor Department's Bureau of Labor Statistics, was 119.4 of 1947–49 prices.]

MEATS, PRODUCE HIGHER

[Higher prices for meats and fresh fruits and vegetables were largely responsible for the advance. Meat price increases averaged 3.4 percent over the month, and fruits and vegetables cost 2.1 percent more.

[Bacon prices rose sharply, and costs of pork, beef, and frying chickens were also higher. Fresh fruit prices—up 6.2 percent—accounted largely for the fruit-vegetable increase. The price of eggs increased from 55 to 64 cents a dozen.]

The latest jump means a wage increase for some 1.3 million workers whose salaries are tied to the index. The increases will range from 1 to 6 cents an hour, with the bulk of the workers getting an additional 3 cents.

Most of the workers whose pay will go up are in the auto, farm equipment, and electrical industries. The big three automakers announced an increase of 3 cents for 700,000 hourly workers, and increases for 188,000 salaried workers.

Smaller groups in local transit, metal industries and trucking are due to get raises. About 120,000 are in Westinghouse Electric plants.

SPENDABLE EARNINGS UP

The average spendable earnings of factory production workers went up 15 cents a week in July, the Labor Department said, but the increase was canceled out by price rises.

The July average spendable pay for a worker with 3 dependents was $75.46 and for a worker without dependents $68.05. Considering the price increases, purchasing power of these workers declined by three-tenths of 1 percent as compared with June but was still $1\frac{1}{2}$ percent above a year ago.

The Labor Department pointed to food as the villain in the latest price rise—particularly the breakfast staples; bacon, eggs, and fresh fruit.

Apparel was the only major item that showed a decline over the month. Clothing prices dropped one-tenth of 1 percent because of clearance sales of men's summer suits.

Housing prices remained stable from June to July.

Mr. PASTORE. I might say, by way of rejoinder to the suggestion made by my distinguished friend, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] that it may be easy and it may be well to say that perhaps each of us should begin to save by spending 10 percent less than his income, but we must realize that there are many, many families in this country which cannot afford to do that, without doing irreparable harm to the family welfare and the education of the children.

I agree that many segments of our society can follow the suggestion made by the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin, but there are millions upon millions of American families who, on their present salaries, hardly have sufficient to sustain life. If they are compelled to save 10 percent, I say again, they can do so only with irreparable harm to their welfare and the welfare of their families.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PASTORE. I yield to the distinguished Senator.

Mr. WILEY. I hope my suggestion was not taken to be meant in an omnibus way. What I was thinking about was a slowing of the economic current which creates the pressure.

I think the Senator will agree with me that in such a respect, where the demand in many instances is greater than the supply, or where people are bidding for articles, there is created, as it were, an inflation in the price level.

There is one other thing I should like to mention while I am on my feet in order to get the Senator's reaction. There are segments of our economy which are not participants in what we call the prosperity wave. For instance, as I have mentioned before on the floor of the Senate, in my own State of Wisconsin—and this is another thing which requires thoughtful consideration—I receive 7 cents for milk which is produced on my farm, and the same day I have to pay 21 cents a quart for it. In other words, the cost of distribution is so high that the man who produces the milk cannot receive the cost of production plus a reasonable return, such as the person in the distribution process is able to get.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair must point out that the time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President——

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may be granted an additional 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will have to recognize the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE].

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, if the Senator will wait a moment I shall be glad to yield to him. I simply desire to make an insertion in the RECORD.

Mr. WILEY. I did not think Michigan would take me off my feet this way.

Mr. THYE. Michigan has not taken the Senator off his feet. Minnesota has permitted the Senator to stand on his feet.

Mr. WILEY. I could not grant that.

Mr. THYE. Minnesota will permit the Senator from Wisconsin to proceed, but I do not wish to be referred to as coming from the State of Michigan, much as I respect the State and the Senator who now represents the State of Michigan.

Mr. WILEY. I appreciate the lack of tyranny.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Apparently the Senator from Minnesota yields to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. WILEY. I thank the Senator very much.

I was discussing the discrepancy in the area of prosperity. In doing that, I recognize the fine, balanced mind of the Senator to whom I am making this suggestion. I think it is our business and the business of the appropriate committees to consider these problems as they are related to each other.

One problem is that one segment of our economy does not receive what I would call reasonable wages. The Senator from Rhode Island has mentioned one such segment. Another segment does not receive a reasonable return for what it produces; that is, the cost of production plus a reasonable return.

Then, there is the enormous overall pressure of the tremendous buying power, such as we have never had before in America. When I came to the Senate the United States had a buying power of $60 billion, and now it is $350 billion.

We have to take all of these factors into consideration in our endeavor to find an answer, before the balloon goes up.

I should like to have the Senator's suggestion as to that.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I do not wish to impose upon the time of the Senator, but may I have a half minute?

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, if I am permitted to do so I shall be happy to yield to the Senator from Rhode Island to make a comment.

Mr. WILEY. First, let me thank the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. PASTORE. I think the Senator from Wisconsin appreciates the fact that I meant to say nothing in criticism of the suggestion made by him. I have the highest respect for his wisdom and the highest respect for his judgment in many matters, especially those of an economic nature.

It is unfortunate that while perhaps our overall gross income is $350 billion we do have a lopsidedness in some States of the Union. In my own State we have a record rate of unemployment. I am being literally barraged with letters from people who work in the silverware shops, who state that unless something is done about the importation of Japanese flatware they will lose their jobs. Our textile employment faces similar threats.

We have all these problems. It is true that the paradox is that, while we are enjoying the highest level of prosperity overall in this Nation, there are many families which are very hard hit. Their economic plight is desperate.

I have addressed myself today with reference to the postal employees, because I know in many instances in my own State the wives of such employees have to find employment, and frequently the employees themselves have to take outside extra jobs in order to support their families.

I am hopeful that where it lies in our power we may be able to find ways and means to improve a situation in which the people involved have so little chance to work out a fair solution themselves.

SECOND ROUND POWER DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, during the discussion of the atomic-energy bill there was much comment on the problem faced by the REA cooperatives. At that time I tried to point out that the provisions of the bill could jeopardize the very lifeblood of the cooperatives, by putting them into contracts they could not carry out and by harnessing them with the cost of steam they could not bear, and that many things could happen which they could not anticipate.

Without trying to go back and rethresh the same straw, on the 23d of August the Atomic Energy Commission General Manager sent a letter to CARL T. DURHAM, the chairman of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, pointing out, with reference to one cooperative plant on which they tried to close the contract, the Wolverine Electric Cooperative in Michigan, that the contract is now in jeopardy because the anticipated total cost of the reactor was $5,472,000, and when the Wolverine Cooperative and the Atomic Energy Commission tried to bring it down to a fixed contract the industrial firm which had been negotiating with the cooperative and had given a price of $5,472,000 notified them that the price would be $14,436,000, and that that would not be the final price, but was on a cost-type basis and might go higher.

I want to say to the able presiding officer, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McNAMARA], who comes from the great State of Michigan, that this price would have destroyed the cooperative on the basis outlined. The cost of power would have been absolutely prohibitive. It would have cost more than 100 mills, in my opinion, and would have made it absolutely impossible for the cooperative to survive. If the industrial firm had entered into the original contract on the AEC basis it would have lost $9 million, which nobody desires.

If any evidence is needed as to what is required to make these things financially safe, this letter should supply it.

I desire to say, Mr. President, that when the Senate hearing was being conducted on the appropriation bill yesterday, which will come before the Senate for consideration this afternoon, I raised a question with reference to the second round power demonstration program, as is shown on page 38 of the hearings.

SECOND ROUND POWER DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM

Senator ANDERSON. With reference to the second round, Chugach, Elk River, city of Piqua, Ohio, and Wolverine, the Atomic Energy Commission has been negotiating, has it not, with these four on the basis that it would provide funds for them to purchase all the nuclear end of the plant?

Mr. STRAUSS. At one time, Senator, the idea was that they would borrow from the Rural Electrification Administration. If your question is as to whether we have sufficient funds——

Senator ANDERSON. I do not believe there was ever a time when any of them were going to borrow from the Rural Electrification Administration for the nuclear end of the plant.

Mr. STRAUSS. You are correct, Senator.

Senator ANDERSON. Then why can't I have an answer to the previous question? You have been negotiating with these four on the basis that there would be sufficient money to buy the nuclear end of their powerplants?

Mr. STRAUSS. That is right.

Senator ANDERSON. If that is true, have you sufficient money in this bill if it goes through for the Atomic Energy Commission to buy the nuclear end of their plants?

Mr. FIELDS. We have on the basis of the estimates previously submitted.

I call attention to the fact that the estimate jumped from $4 million or $5 million to $14 million. This information must have been in the hands of the Atomic Energy Commission at least in preliminary form when my question was answered. The letter will indicate that they knew then that the particular estimate might have to be substantially increased. However, it is understood that the Commission is not going to request an increase in appropriations at this time, but may shop around for another manufacturer. I know that the AEC, and particularly its field-operations offices, are competent and sharp contract negotiators and administrators. I believe they should be able to come up with a good contractual arrangement with a capable equipment firm on this project.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks the letter from the Atomic Energy Commission, dated August 23, 1957.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES
ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., August 23, 1957.
Hon. CARL T. DURHAM,
Chairman, Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, Congress of the United States.

DEAR MR. DURHAM: There have been very recent developments with respect to the proposal by the Wolverine Electric Cooperative of such significance that although we have not reached definitive conclusions as to our course of action, we believe it appropriate to inform you of them.

Following advice from Mr. Keen, manager of the Wolverine Electric Cooperative, that Foster Wheeler was withdrawing its previous price quotation to them for reactor development and construction, a meeting of representatives of the Atomic Energy Commission, Wolverine, and Foster Wheeler was held on August 21 to discuss the proposal and its possible modification. In the course of the meeting, the Foster Wheeler representative discussed in considerable detail the numerous circumstances and conditions that led to Foster Wheeler withdrawing its previous ceiling quotation for reactor development and construction. The company now states it is prepared to undertake this work on a cost-reimbursement basis only. It further estimates that the cost would total $14,436,000. You will recall the amount included for this project in the authorization for appropriations was $5,472,000.

The two companies were asked by the AEC representatives to submit in writing to the Commission statements as to their revised positions, and we received such definitive statements on August 21 at about 3 p. m.

In view of this development it will be necessary for the Atomic Energy Commission to reexamine the proposal and reconsider its position. You will be informed promptly of the results of Commission action in this respect.

K. E. FIELDS,
General Manager.

REPORT OF CONFERENCE ON ECONOMIC PROGRESS

Mr. SYMINGTON. Mr. President, during the past week several references have been made on the Senate floor to a report of the Conference on Economic Progress. This report is entitled "Full Prosperity for Agriculture," and contains an excellent analysis of the present farm problem and recommendations to meet this problem.

I am disturbed that anyone who has actually read and studied this report could have misinterpreted any one of the recommendations, or could have isolated any one of the 15 points included in the recommendations.

This is apparently what has happened, because the report and the recommendations include an overall, comprehensive, integrated study.

But nevertheless there has been repeated reference to one point. This was the statement in the report that there are some persons now engaged in agriculture for whom little can be done, in the way of an agricultural program, to improve the level of income or standard of living. The recommendation was that other than agricultural programs or policies are needed to handle this situation and that by 1960 those in this category would find opportunities outside of agriculture.

When the complete report and recommendations are studied, it is obvious that there is a basic difference between the goals and policies of the present leaders of the Department of Agriculture and those contained in the CEP report.

Present policies are specifically designed to force out the marginal farms, the smaller family-size farms, and to replace these foundations of our rural America with huge factory-size—so-called efficient—farms. This is the goal.

The way of accomplishing this, according to the theories of this administration—and the record will so prove—is continually to reduce farm prices and farm income so as to drive out, to squeeze out, to force out, the small family-size farm.

Those who would refer to the report of the Conference on Economic Progress surely must realize that this report does not agree in part or parcel with this approach.

Let us not be like the three blind men describing the elephant. It is not fair to the blind men nor to the elephant.

Nor is it fair to pick out one point in a comprehensive report as an evaluation of that report, while at the same time disregarding other clarifying statements in the report.

VISITS TO COMMUNIST CHINA BY AMERICAN NEWS CORRESPONDENTS

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, it was refreshing and heartening to me yesterday to learn that the Secretary of State had, at long last, reversed the order which has been in effect in the Department of State, denying passports to American news correspondents who sought to travel in Red China. As the wire services indicated to us late yesterday, and as the morning press carried the story, the State Department announced that it will permit 24 full-time American correspondents to travel in Red China. They will be permitted to travel for 6 months or longer, on an experimental basis.

The news dispatches listed the respective news services and public media, companies, or corporations, which were to be included among the 24 American news organizations which will be permitted to send one reporter each to the Chinese mainland.

Several Senators have been urging this action on the State Department for many months. I view this action as a constructive effort on the part of our Government, late as it is.

I said earlier this week, on Monday, that with some 40 young Americans going into Red China, despite the fact that they went there against the wishes of our Government, the State Department should immediately issue passports to competent American newsmen and reporters to cover the activities of those young Americans. I did not want their activities to be covered by Communist press services or press services of other countries, lest their activities might be distorted, and lest their visit might be used as a Communist propaganda weapon.

These reporters will penetrate the Bamboo Curtain. They will be able to bring to American readers and to the American public in general more objective observations as to what is really going on in China. They will be able to tell us, for example, how close are the political and economic ties between the Soviet Union and China. They will be able, possibly, to tell us how much support the present Communist government in China has among the masses of the people.

This is the kind of information a free people needs. It is good that the State Department has reversed its previous position; but I appeal to our Government to cease being so timid and fearful. We Americans are supposed to symbolize the land of the free and the home of the brave. We cannot be free without freedom of information; and we certainly cannot look very brave if we are afraid to meet face to face with those who resist our ideas and those who may live according to a different pattern of life.

Therefore, let us have no more of this business of closing our eyes to reality, but rather let the American people see the truth, even at times when the truth is ugly. Let the truth be reported by competent, experienced men and women of the news mediums, who have a sensitivity of what is going on, in terms of political and economic forces.

Mr. HUMPHREY subsequently said: Mr. President, in the remarks I made earlier today, I failed to ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, in connection with my remarks on the action of the State Department in giving passports to American reporters who wish to go to Communist China, two of the editorials to which I referred, namely, an editorial entitled "Reporting Red China," which was published in the New York Times, and the editorial entitled "Hole in the Curtain," which was published in the Washington Post. I ask unanimous consent that the editorials be printed in the body of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times]

REPORTING RED CHINA

The State Department has been gradually modifying its attitude toward permitting American newspaper men to live and travel in Red China. Yesterday the Department expressed itself as willing to allow 24 American correspondents to penetrate the Bamboo Curtain with 6-month experimental visas. The only magic in the number permitted to go is that about that many were reporting on China when the mainland was last open to the ordinary comings and goings of the Western press. It may not be enough now.

The New York Times will be permited to send one correspondent under the new policy. We believe this correspondent will render a service not merely to one newspaper but to the readers of that newspaper, and we are confident that a similar service will be rendered by the other members of this new journalistic corps. We have never believed that it was the interests of any newspaper or other medium that were involved in this situation. It is the rights of the reading, listening, and looking public that matter.

This democracy cannot function efficiently in the modern world without being fully, accurately, and continuously informed. It is the function of correspondents to see that our people are so informed. We think the State Department has in the past robbed us of a source of strength to the degree that it has prevented the gathering and dissemination of facts that might have helped in the formation of an intelligent opinion.

We do not believe it is wise at the moment to encourage casual tourist travel in China—least of all the kind of subsidized travel in which 40 young Americans have been indulging at the expense of the Communist Chinese Government. But we do believe that the reporting that can be done by mature and well-trained newspaper men—and women—in Red China may do an infinite amount of good in the democratic nations. We would make this reporting far more extensive than Mr. Dulles now seems willing to do and, if all goes well, put it on a permanent basis. But the policy announced yesterday does represent an advance over the policy of pretending that what we don't know can't hurt us.

[From the Washington Post]

Hole in the Curtain

Mr. Dulles has finally compromised with the inevitable. The authorization for representatives of 24 American newsgathering organizations to report from Communist China on a 6-month experimental basis does not by any means end the absurdities and inconsistencies of American Far Eastern policy—a policy exhibited at its worst in the moralizing to the students who went to Peking. But the concession on information does end an altogether indefensible governmental restraint on the right of the American people to know from firsthand reporting what is going on among one-fourth of the world's population.

The State Department arrangement does not lift the general ban on travel to China, nor does it authorize casual or transient visits by newsmen. It has the advantage over previous suggestions, however, of avoiding governmental favoritism. News media were not requested to choose pool representatives. Instead, the authorization was based on a survey by Assistant Secretary of State Berding of all news media which wanted to station regular correspondents in China. Actually, the survey disclosed (as news executives had maintained from the beginning) that relatively few organizations would undertake the expense. Mr. Berding deserves much credit for the concession.

There is no assurance, of course, that China will admit the American reporters. The Peking government has been strangely silent on the point since its selective invitations last year. Perhaps it now intends to ask that any exchange of reporters be reciprocal (a sore point with the State Department, but one on which no great principle is involved). Or perhaps China is less enthusiastic about additional reporting in view of the indications of economic and political distress and the ideological blight that has fallen upon the 100 flowers that Mao Tse-tung authorized to bloom. At any rate, the State Department has modified its own oriental (news) exclusion act, and for that the news mediums and the American public may be grateful.

MR. REUTHER'S PROPOSAL FOR A REDUCTION IN AUTOMOBILE PRICES

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the Record an editorial entitled "Mr. Reuther's Thrust," published in the Washington Post of August 19, 1957.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

[From the Washington Post of August 19 1957]

Mr. Reuther's Thrust

Walter P. Reuther's proposal for a $100 cut in the price of 1958 model automobiles is an imaginative thrust at the Nation's most serious domestic problem: inflation. It ought to have a serious and sympathetic review by the big three automakers, to whom it was addressed. For when the president of a big labor union publicly invites employers to bring to forthcoming wage negotiations a powerful argument against any excessive union demands, he has taken a long step toward putting labor's welfare in the broader perspective in which it belongs.

It would be expecting too much, perhaps, for the industry to agree to any such drastic price cut without a firmer idea of how far the United Auto Workers Union means to go in tailoring its contract demands to share any losses. But Mr. Reuther's stated willingness to be guided by arbitration on the effect such a cut would have on the companies' wage-paying abilities seems to indicate that he means business.

A $100 reduction in the price of cars would not, of course, level off the overall price spiral by very much. Moreover, if Mr. Reuther is right in saying that the markdown would result in a sales increase of 1,000,000 cars, there would be no letup in total consumer spending, no diversion of dollars to savings. And of course at bottom, the answer to inflation is buyer restraint. But this aspect of the problem is hardly the burden of Mr. Reuther or of the manufacturers. Their concern is to sell cars.

Recent increases in the price of steel have led to the widespread assumption that the new cars are going to cost more, not less, than 1957 models. Perhaps Mr. Reuther's idea for voluntary cutbacks in end-product prices is therefore only a pipedream, although his own accounting of the manufacturers' financial positions would indicate that a cut is feasible. The companies no doubt will have more to say on this. If the Reuther proposal has only the effect of restraining any price-boosting that may be in the works it will have served a useful purpose. But we think the companies, whatever they may feel they can or cannot afford, would miss a great opportunity to introduce a needed element of public responsibility into their wage contract negotiations if they should fail to examine the Reuther proposition for all it is worth.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I comment only briefly on the editorial. I regret that the great General Motors Corp. rejected the appeal of Mr. Walter Reuther, president of the United Automobile Workers, for a $100 cut in the price of 1958 model automobiles.

Mr. Reuther did not close the door to the possibility of a new wage contract, which would take into consideration a proposed reduction in price.

There has been a great deal of pious talk about checking inflation. For the first time we have a specific proposal directed toward thwarting and checking inflation.

The price of the American automobile is high. It may well be too high. Since great corporations are involved, with massive production facilities and tremendous capital investment, it seems wise and prudent that some effort should be made to stop the inflationary spiral at that point.

I believe Mr. Reuther's suggestion merited more than the casual treatment which it received. I am hopeful that it will be reconsidered.

INDIAN HOSPITALIZATION PAYMENTS TO BERNALILLO COUNTY, N. MEX.—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9023) to amend the act of October 31, 1949, to extend until June 30, 1960, the authority of the Surgeon General to make certain payments to Bernalillo County, N. Mex., for furnishing hospital care to certain Indians. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Lausche in the chair). The report will be read for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9023) to amend the act of October 31, 1949, to extend until June 30, 1960, the authority of the Surgeon General to make certain payments to Bernalillo County, N. Mex., for furnishing hospital care to certain Indians, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment.

Lister Hill,
James E. Murray,
John F. Kennedy,
Wm. A. Purtell,
John Sherman Cooper,
Managers on the Part of the Senate.

Oren Harris,
John Bell Williams,
George M. Rhodes,
J. Carlton Loser,
Chas. W. Wolverton,
Alvin Bush,
Will E. Neal,
Managers on the Part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. HILL. The conference report is signed by all members of the conference committee on both sides of the aisle, and is reported unanimously.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I understand there is no objection to it.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, may we know with what the conference report deals?

Mr. HILL. The conference report deals with an amendment to a House bill which had been reported by the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare and which gave the Surgeon General of the United States authority to reimburse a county hospital for the treatment of sick Indians.

The amendment added was to exempt homeworkers in the manufacturing or processing of Christmas wreaths from the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act.

The House conferees would not accept the Senate amendment. The Senate conferees, therefore, had to recede, and did recede from the amendment.

Therefore, as the bill stands now it is just as it was unanimously reported by the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, to give the Surgeon General the authority to reimburse a county hospital for services rendered to sick Indians.

Mr. JAVITS. I thank the Senator. Of course I have no objection to the conference report. I merely wish to say that many times we merely sit mute when conference reports are agreed to, simply because the conference report has been unanimously agreed to and reported to the Senate. Many of us have no knowledge of what is contained in such conference reports. I believe that is a very poor way to legislate, certainly in a body which is so small as the Senate. I am grateful to the Senator from Alabama for his explanation.

Mr. HILL. If there is any other information the Senator from New York desires to have, I shall be very glad to try to answer his questions.

Mr. JAVITS. No; I thank the Senator. I do think, however, that we ought to be informed in such cases to the extent of at least a brief statement of the substantive facts involved. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

PROPOSED 2-YEAR NUCLEAR TEST SUSPENSION

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD an editorial from the Washington Post of August 22, 1957, on the 2-year nuclear test suspension which the United States and its Western allies have proposed at London. I want to add one comment. The Post says it does not press the question of why this was not done a year ago, or at the beginning of the disarmament sessions. I do. I want to know why this suspension was so wrong during the campaign, and so right now.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SENSE ON NUCLEAR TESTS

The 2-year nuclear test suspension which the United States and its Western allies have proposed at London is a praiseworthy concession to realism. There is no need to press the question of why this was not done a year ago, or at the beginning of the disarmament sessions. Mr. Stassen has won his point over considerable opposition within the administration and in Britain and France. The Western Powers have now accepted the desirability of a test suspension as an end in itself—subject, of course, to the establishment of an effective inspection system.

This proposal does not mean that the other arms-control items under discussion with the Russians are withdrawn. One condition of continued nuclear test suspension, for example, is that within the 2-year period a plan be concluded for permanent cessation of fissionable materials production for weapons purposes. The virtue of the test suspension, however, is that it would give time to work out other details. Moreover, it is the simplest of possible arms-control agreements, and it would automatically serve as a check against the development of nuclear weapons by so-called fourth nations.

There is another virtue, and that is that the suspension proposal ends the propaganda monopoly which the Soviet Union has enjoyed for altogether too long. The proposal may indeed be a last desperate effort to salvage something from the London talks; in any event, it should be a rockbottom test of Soviet good faith. In light of what has happened in Syria any such exploration may seem futile. In actual fact, however, the need to control nuclear weapons remains urgent irrespective of the problem in Syria; and any practical steps that might stem from a test suspension agreement would be in the interest, not alone of one side or the other, but of the whole world.

Mr. MONRONEY. As I said, Mr. President, I do want to know why the suspension was so wrong during the last campaign, and why it is so right now, when the suggestion is made by Republican representatives at the disarmament conference.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MONRONEY. I yield.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I wish to associate myself with the Senator from Oklahoma in his remarks. First of all, I am very pleased that the Government has advanced its recent disarmament proposals, which had been made known to the members of the disarmament committee some week or 10 days prior to their public announcement, and which I believe give us a psychological advantage for the moment.

As the Senator from Oklahoma has said, when Mr. Stevenson—to bring his name into the debate—made the suggestion, which was surely no more unorthodox than it is now, he was harassed, literally, for toying—it was charged—with our security. The truth is he was not toying with our security. He had imagination. The administration is exhibiting the same kind of imagination now.

NUCLEAR CONFUSION DISTURBING

Mr. MONRONEY. I appreciate what the distinguished Senator has said. I think it comes with poor taste to ridicule and disparage the suggestion of any American merely for the sake of winning an election campaign. This is particularly disturbing when it confuses the people of America on one of the most serious and one of the most important questions before the country today, that of our atomic power.

Certainly in the future, those who anticipate negotiating, as Governor Stevenson proposed to negotiate—not on a unilateral abandonment of the H-bomb tests, but on seeking an agreement with other nations to abandon such tests—should be given a fairer treatment than Mr. Stevenson was given in his patriotic proposal.

The country is worse off today for his having received such criticism of his proposal for suspending nuclear tests. The criticism came from the Chief Executive of the Nation and from those around the Chief Executive. Now, a few months later, we find our own Government proposing the same program or one similar to it, in an effort to seek disarmament in connection with this weapon of terror. It seems to me that it would have been less confusing to Americans and to our foreign policy if there had not been such an adamant refusal to take the proposal seriously at that time.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MONRONEY. I am happy to yield.

Mr. HUMPHREY. In order to make the RECORD perfectly clear, it should be noted that the present disarmament proposals on the limitation of the H-bomb and H-bomb testing do not apply only to the large weapons, but apply to all weapons.

PROPOSAL GOES FURTHER

Mr. MONRONEY. It goes even beyond what Mr. Stevenson proposed.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I am not criticizing the proposals. I want to commend them. In that connection I should like to ask whether it would be agreeable to the Senator from Oklahoma if I asked unanimous consent to have printed, at the conclusion of his remarks a New York Times editorial entitled "Our Arms Offer."

Mr. MONRONEY. I would be happy to have the Senator do so.

Mr. HUMPHREY. The editorial points out that this is a proposal which has genuine merit; that it is a 2-year limitation, with the objective in mind of stopping the production of fissionable materials for weapons purposes, as indeed it is, and gives us a decided advantage in disarmament discussions. As the Senator has said, we could have started on it over a year ago.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the editorial be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OUR ARMS OFFER

In one more and possibly a final move to break the deadlock in the current London disarmament talks President Eisenhower has made another major concession to Soviet demands. Acting on his personal responsibility and the recommendations of Mr. Stassen, but over the misgivings of his defense advisers and with only the reluctant consent of our allies, he has offered to agree without prior controls to a conditional suspension of hydrogen-bomb tests for 2 years. This is the period on which the Soviets insisted as a minimum, instead of the 10 months previously proposed by the West.

This suspension, which the Soviets have been propagandizing with substantial effect on world opinion, is offered as part of a package deal for an experimental first-stage disarmament effort, and the emphasis is still on the conditions. But this offer, added to the many other concessions already made, is a far cry from the original Western stand for disarmament under a foolproof control system, as illustrated in the Baruch plan, and tied to a peaceful settlement of world problems, as called for by the Geneva directive.

The offer is, however, in keeping with the unilateral and one-sided reduction in manpower and armaments already under way in both the United States and among our allies, to which must be added the crippling Congressional cuts in our mutual-security program. Taken together, these various moves, which affect both conventional and nuclear armaments, raise a serious question as to how long and how far this process can continue without impairing Free-World security.

The irony of the situation is that despite the Western concessions, or perhaps because of them, the Soviets refuse to be appeased and continue to insist on their own program for the unconditional and in practice one-sided disarmament of the West. In line with this program, which offers the West only paper promises of armament reductions and controls, they now seek to evade acceptance of the President's offer by objecting to the conditions attached to it.

These conditions are that an agreement on suspension of hydrogen-bomb tests must be accompanied by further agreements providing for: (1) a cutoff in the production of fissionable material for nuclear weapons in favor of atoms for peace; (2) at least an initial monitoring system to detect violations of the test ban; (3) aerial and ground inspection zones to prevent surprise attack; (4) an initial cutback in manpower and conventional arms; and (5) control of outer-space missile development.

All further disarmament steps would then depend on solution of the most pressing world problems, in particular the reunification of Germany. Even the 2-year suspension period is subject to the condition that satisfactory progress be made during the first 12 months toward installing the monitoring system and cutting off production of fissionable material for military purposes. If that progress is unsatisfactory to the West, due to Soviet bad faith, the tests could be resumed. And only if both the monitoring system and the production cutoff are in full operation would the test ban become permanent.

One objection to this proposal is that it calls only for a Soviet agreement "in principle" to make the test ban effective, and that all the details for both the monitoring system and the production cutoff must still be worked out. This would give the Soviets unlimited opportunities for stalling the West while rushing their own nuclear-weapons production behind their Iron Curtain. The British and French, who are only beginning to develop their own nuclear weapons, look especially askance at this possibility.

There is, however, one thing that can be said for the President's offer. It should convince the world that the West is willing to go to the utmost limit of safety to reach a disarmament agreement and in particular to banish the atomic mushroom cloud that threatens the world with annihilation. It is now up to the Soviets to "put up or shut up," and no propaganda can disguise the choice confronting them.

Mr. HUMPHREY subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, at the point where I was discussing with the Senator from Oklahoma the disarmament negotiations, a memorandum entitled "Analysis of British Reaction to Recent Disarmament Talks," based on press surveys prepared by the British Information Service. I believe the Members of the Senate will be interested in the memorandum because of the relationship of the United States with the United Kingdom. I can say that, in the main, the reaction of the foreign press, particularly the British press, is very favorable to the recent visits by our Secretary of State to London and to the proposals which were made by the Secretary of State on behalf of the Western nations.

There being no objection, the memorandum was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
August 8, 1957.

To Senator HUMPHREY.
From Subcommittee on Disarmament.
Subject: Analysis of British reaction to recent disarmament talks, based on press surveys prepared by the British Information Service.

Although some viewed Mr. Dulles' trip to London with skepticism, charging that he was probably more interested in Oman and Cyprus than disarmament, his visit was generally welcomed as a sincere attempt to break the disarmament deadlock. Some British papers had previously been lamenting the lack of complete unity among the Western Powers on arms control issues, and desired to see more initiative from the West.

The Manchester Guardian (Independent, Liberal) hoped that Mr. Dulles would give a fresh momentum to the negotiations by a real concession, such as an unequivocal, though supervised, 18-month suspension of nuclear tests. The Guardian had previously favored attempts to get agreement on cessation of the production of fissionable materials for weapons purposes, at least in principle, along with the test suspension. Later, however, it took the position that the best way of achieving the suspension of production was through a separate agreement on tests, which would produce a favorable climate for working out the detailed agreements necessary for curtailing nuclear production. When Mr. Dulles' August 2 proposal was put forth, the Guardian called it generous, but almost irrelevant, arguing that that plan was so extensive that there was scant chance of agreement on it. The Guardian also argued that long-range aircraft and missiles invalidated the efficiency of mutual aerial and ground inspection.

The Daily Telegraph (Conservative) called the inspection proposal spectacular and praised it as realistic and constructive and a good propaganda move which would put the Russians on the defensive. The Observer (Independent) felt that the Dulles visit was effective for pulling together the ragged edges of inspection proposals, but asserted that nuclear control, not inspection, should be regarded as the core of Western proposals.

The Times also lauded the Western proposal as representing a wide and intricate agreement among many Western delegates, but felt that there was little prospect of agreement with the Soviet Union. The chief differences between the West and the Soviet Union, the Times said, remained the Western insistence on a cutoff of production of fissionable material and the Soviet insistence on an unconditional test ban. The Yorkshire Post (Conservative) and the Scotsman (Independent) also took the view that progress was doubtful in view of the positions on nuclear controls.

A New York Times correspondent from London cabled the following roundup of Western views after the August 2 proposal:

"The feeling here is that there is not the slightest sign of the Russians accepting the Dulles proposals. Since they presented their key proposal on April 30, the Soviet position has hardened daily. It seems clear now that they are not going to disarm or allow us to inspect them."

Throughout the disarmament talks the British papers have showed a general trend downward from hopefulness that progress might be made to doubt that agreement could be reached.

POSTAL PAY AND POSTAL RATE LEGISLATION

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, as the end of the session approaches, I rise to express the hope that we will have the opportunity before we adjourn to act on postal-pay legislation.

I take this opportunity, while the distinguished junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. NEUBERGER], who sat on a subcommittee to deal with postal rates, is on the floor, to express my view that both questions are separate and distinguishable. Postal pay needs urgently to be dealt with because the whole postal system is gradually turning toward a two-job idea for the individual postal employee, who must himself have two jobs, or have his wife or some other member of his family work in addition to himself, in order for the family to maintain a decent standard of living.

I ask unanimous consent that I may have printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks, a few of the many letters I have received on this very important subject, expressing the state of fact to which I have just referred.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A postal clerk with 10 years' service at the Syracuse Post Office writes:

"There's just three of us at present, but my take home pay doesn't cover the extra needs of our little son, so I'm employed part time at the Syracuse Card Co. A week ago I put in 15 hours per day—8 at the post office and 7 at the card company—but a man can't keep that up; and looking at it from the Department's view, there was a loss in production being even at Christmas time, there is a 12-hour limit per day. Before our son was born we were able to save a few dollars, but now the savings account had dwindled and I am paying on two outstanding loans. If a raise doesn't come through soon, having not had one in 6 years, hopes for our own home, and a good education for the little fellow and others to follow (we hope) will continue to be just hopes. You might be thinking, 'send your wife to work,' and here I would say that a mother's teaching and care is necessary 24 hours a day for a child to grow up to be a good citizen of the community and Nation. I think that way, that's why I do part-time work. In fact just recently, I gave up a good day-hour job at a station to go back working nights which increased my pay about $9.80 (night differential) for 2 weeks, and made it possible to work days at the card company."

A postal worker in Massapequa, N. Y., has written me:

"A very large percentage of postal employees have part-time employment on a permanent basis. Others have wives who hold down full-time jobs. I suppose that as statistics such income results in a report of good times. I honestly wonder about the relationship between such forced employment and juvenile delinquency. I have three small children whom I believe need and should have all the parental guidance it is possible to give. My wife has a full-time job as homemaker which does not add to our finances but certainly reflects itself in the behavior and appearance of our children. It is for the same reason that I do not have a permanent part-time job. However, much as I do not like it, I am forced from time to time to supplement my income in order to obtain necessities for my family. During these intervals I see my children long enough to say hello or goodbye. I feel very sorry for those men (and their children) who do this every day; does this result in a well-knit family, an asset to the community? I believe not."

A postal clerk in Syracuse writes:

"I am a postal clerk afflicted with a common disease called 'no moola.' If I didn't have a part-time job bringing me $12.00 a week, I or my family wouldn't eat. This is no joke."

I have a letter from a letter carrier. He writes as follows:

"I have two daughters whom I would like to educate and make good citizens of them, but it seems impossible right now. We have no car or telephone. My wife is seeking night employment to help financially."

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, postal pay needs to be dealt with fairly and honestly. Congress is the only one which can deal with it. The postal workers cannot strike; they cannot engage in important collective-bargaining negotiations, although they are very ably represented by what is equivalent to unions. It is up to the Members of Congress to do justice to them, and I hope Congress will do so before the adjournment.

As to the postal deficit, Mr. President, it also seems to me that Congress has a responsibility. Those who favor an increase in the pay of postal workers must face the need to end the postal deficit. In the case of the rates charged to the various classes of users of the mails, some are entitled to some subsidy; and others are not, because they should pay their own way. Congress should face that responsibility equally.

But, Mr. President, the handling of one responsibility—the postal workers pay problem—should not be contingent on the handling of the other. Both are the responsibility of Congress, and both are important.

Human urgency is involved in the case of the pay for the postal workers. Equity is involved in the case of the postal rates. I welcome the statement on this subject which was made earlier today by my colleague, the Senator from Rhode Island.

As one Member of the Senate, I face the fact of the urgency of the need to give attention to this matter before Congress adjourns.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. POTTER obtained the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President——

Mr. POTTER. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. POTTER] desires to make a statement which I believe will last approximately 15 minutes. I hope that first it will be possible to conclude the transaction of routine business in the morning hour.

Following that, I should like to have the Senate act on a bill which I believe will take only approximately 2 minutes to pass. We wish to have the bill acted on at that time, in order to accommodate a colleague who has another engagement. Thereafter, we should like to have the Senator from Michigan [Mr. POTTER] proceed, if that is agreeable to him.

THE SACCO-VANZETTI CASE AND THE SUPREME COURT'S JENCKS DECISION

Mr. McNAMARA. Mr. President, 30 years ago today, two men were electrocuted for a crime there is grave doubt they ever committed. The men, of course, were Sacco and Vanzetti.

In the Washington Post and Times Herald of today, there appears a very fine editorial, entitled "Victory in Death," on the Sacco-Vanzetti case. In conjunction with the editorial, there appeared a letter to the editor on the same subject. The letter is signed by 12 Americans who, as the Post notes, might agree on little else.

I ask unanimous consent that these two items be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit A.)

Mr. McNAMARA. Mr. President, as one of many Americans who sat on their hands during the Sacco-Vanzetti period, I confess I have something of a guilty conscience even today because I did not lend my voice to protest the hysteria and witch hunting of 30 years ago.

Perhaps that is why today I can see a parallel between the Sacco-Vanzetti case and the current efforts to legislate an interpretation of the Supreme Court's Jencks decision.

The Supreme Court has acted in the cause of individual liberty.

As I have said previously on this floor, I believe the earlier misapprehensions and misunderstandings of the meaning of the Jencks decision are rapidly being cleared away by our Federal judges.

The bill, S. 2377, now before us, has been changed several times since it was reported to the Senate in such haste on July 1. Its proponents apparently have discovered that it was poorly and loosely drafted in the beginning.

I should like to ask this hypothetical question: What would have been the result had the original version been steamrollered through the Senate, as was originally intended?

Again, while I am not an attorney, I have a very strong feeling for the rights of individuals.

The Supreme Court decision, I feel, was a sound one. The interpretation is working itself out.

I see no need for the hasty passage of this bill.

EXHIBIT A

[From the Washington Post of August 23, 1957]

VICTORY IN DEATH

'The headlines screamed that Sacco and Vanzetti had been executed, and men read them with a shiver, and wondered, perhaps, if this thing which had been done with such awful finality were the just desserts of crime or a hideous mistake." So Frederick Lewis Allen recalled in Only Yesterday the fateful early hours of August 23, 1927, when Nicola Sacco, a cobbler, and Bartolomeo Vanzetti, a fishmonger, were electrocuted in Boston for a crime they most likely did not commit. The passions of the hour—which swept around the world—still find their echo 30 years later. It is a mark of the enduring torment over the Sacco-Vanzetti case that a letter on the case elsewhere on this page could be signed by 12 persons who might agree on little else.

Great cases have obscure beginnings, and such was true of what later became this country's most celebrated criminal case. On April 15, 1920, two men were shot to death in a payroll robbery in South Braintree, Mass. Circumstantial evidence pointed to two Italian immigrants who happened to be anarchists, but the court testimony was clouded by contradictions, and the trial judge showed a clear bias against the defendants. As the case dragged through the courts the stoic calm of Sacco and Vanzetti was in ironic contrast to the hysteria which gripped much of this country and a score of world capitals. To be sure, Communists exploited the case, but the source of the outcry lay far deeper than Moscow's attempts at meddling. Men of good will everywhere were shocked when the respectable leaders of Boston lent their prestige to what seemed to be an outrageously rigged trial.

It was not the first time that hysteria prejudiced judgment, nor will it be the last. But one of the glories of a free society is that past errors cannot be scrubbed from the pages of history; they remain instead as a reminder that even the best of institutions is fallible. On May 4 of this year the Massachusetts Legislature gave official recognition to one such folly of the past in clearing the names of the "witches" hung in Salem in 1692. The wheels of history move slowly, but surely the Massachusetts Legislature would win applause if it waited less than 265 years to clear the names of a fishmonger and shoemaker whose trial seemed similarly warped.

THIS LAST HOUR OF AGONY

Three decades have passed since the execution of Sacco and Vanzetti in the first few minutes of August 23, 1927.

Those still living of the multitudes of individuals around the world, noted and unknown, who had become convinced at that time the electrocution of the two Italians was a miscarriage of justice, do not need to be reminded of this 30th anniversary.

That event in Charlestown Prison close by Boston Common and Charles Bullfinch's Massachusetts statehouse was an experience for them they have always kept vivid in their consciousness. Ask any one of them what he was doing the night of the execution. He'll invariably respond instantly and in detail, no matter how many thousands of miles he was away from Boston.

This complete memory recall is a phenomenon born of the personal anguish of those days over the imminent fate of Sacco and Vanzetti and what it meant. Not since that time has there been another effort by so many people in so many places to bring about what they conceived to be justice in a particular case.

Questions present themselves insistently when one reflects on the deep-seated personal commitments engendered by that case on so farflung a front among people of all kinds and conditions. Could similar commitments be again evoked on such a scale by another case embodying factors and elements like those in the Sacco-Vanzetti case? Or have three decades so altered human circumstances that a comparable evocation would be impossible?

There is value for the community in attempts to answer such questions. The potential role in this regard which the two men's tragedy might play was foreseen by Vanzetti.

In one of his final letters from the prison death cell he wrote: "What I wish more than all else in this last hour of agony is that our case and our fate be understood in their real being and serve as a tremendous lesson to the forces of freedom so that our suffering and death will not have been in vain."

Gutzon Borglum cast that sentence prominently on his large bas-relief of the two men. A standing offer of the sculpture was made 10 years ago, on the 20th anniversary, to the governor of Massachusetts and the mayor of Boston by a committee of prominent citizens which included Albert Einstein, CIO President Philip Murray and Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt.

From his Princeton home on that occasion Einstein said: "Everything should be done to keep alive the tragic affair of Sacco and Vanzetti in the conscience of mankind. They remind us of the fact that even the most perfectly planned democratic institutions are no better than the people whose instruments they are.

"At that time (during the Sacco-Vanzetti case) the desire for justice was as yet more powerful than it is today, although it did not triumph. Too many horrors have since dulled the human conscience. Therefore the fight for the dignity of man is particularly urgent today. May Sacco and Vanzetti continue to live as symbols in all those who strive for a better morality in public affairs."

We share the faith and hope expressed by Einstein and his associates. We sign this letter on the 30th anniversary of Sacco's and Vanzetti's execution because we believe that special periodic reevaluation of notable past experience in the search for justice helps to revitalize that search from generation to generation.

NORTHWEST TECHNICAL INSTITUTE AT TILLAMOOK, OREG., AND AIR FORCE CONTRACT POLICIES

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, a letter I received yesterday from Hon. James H. Douglas, Secretary of the Air Force, announced a decision that to citizens of Oregon—and especially to the people in the little town of Tillamook, on the Oregon coast—is, indeed, extremely discouraging. The substance of the letter, Mr. President, confirms a recent decision of the Air Force to discontinue at Tillamook any further training of men in the handling of treacherous petroleum fuels. This operation is referred to by the Air Force as POL training, and refers to petroleum, oil, and lubricants. Such training had been carried on ably by the Northwest Technical Institute, at Tillamook, Oreg., for the past 6 years. The school was conducted at the blimp base which had been used during World War II, and thus represented the economic and practical use of a facility which otherwise would probably have remained untenanted. All reports on the operation of the highly technical training at this school have been most commendatory of the training carried on by the private contractor, at the site of the old blimp base, on the Oregon coast. Every report I have heard indicated that, from the standpoint of quality of training, completeness and economy, the Northwest Technical Institute, at Tillamook, Oreg., was doing a superior job for the Air Force.

The Secretary of the Air Force, in his letter of August 22, stressed only the matter of economy as the determining factor in supporting the Air Force decision to conduct this training at the Amarillo Air Force Base, Tex.

Frankly, Mr. President, I cannot agree with the decision of the Secretary of the Air Force when he states that the training may be carried on more economically at Amarillo than at Tillamook, as I told the Secretary in a letter on August 20. My colleague [Mr. MORSE], the Senator from Washington [Mr. JACKSON], and I met on Wednesday, August 14, with representatives of the Air Force and the General Accounting Office for a discussion, moderated by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SYMINGTON], chairman of the Task Force on Air Training Facilities, which was a subcommittee of the Senate Armed Services Committee. At that meeting it was reported that in July the General Accounting Office had completed an audit of the Northwest Technical Institute. At the meeting, it was also brought out that time was not available for an equally intensive audit of the same type of training the Air Force undertook last year at Amarillo Air Force Base. The preliminary survey, however, pointed toward an actual saving on per-trainee costs at the Tillamook facility. According to one tabulation of costs, which I had an opportunity to see, the total cost per trainee was reported to be $864.55 for Amarillo and $848.93 for Tillamook. However, figured in this tabulation were certain items about which there was still some dispute as to whether they should be included or as to whether they were somewhat inflated.

In view of these circumstances, I urged the Secretary to continue the contractual arrangement with the Tillamook organization. It seemed to me that a suggestion offered in our discussion of Wednesday, August 14, should be considered. That suggestion proposed that the Air Force contract with the Northwest Technical Institute for the training of approximately half the student load, with the other 50 percent to be trained at Amarillo Air Force Base. The General Accounting Office should be assigned to complete an intensive audit, during the course of the year, and determine, based on the figures thus arrived at, whether to continue the arrangement with the contractor, or to set up the entire program at Amarillo.

I am sure no one could question the fairness of such a proposal. I offer these remarks at this time, Mr. President, with several thoughts in mind:

First. The State of Oregon, with the sole exception of the State of Washington, is closer to the soil of unfriendly nations than is any other State.

Second. The long Oregon coastline has no Air Force installation of any sort.

Third. Oregon, by contrast with such other great coastal States as Washington, California, Texas, Louisiana, Alabama, and Florida, is almost completely devoid of any major defense installation.

Fourth. At a time when Oregon's economy is in great trouble because of the depressed lumber industry, the loss to a community such as Tillamook of an operation carried on by the Northwest Technical Institute is a grim blow.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD my letter of August 20 to the Secretary of the Air Force, a letter from him of August 22, to me, and a news release which I issued today.

There being no objection, the letters and release were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE, COMMITTEE ON INTERIOR
AND INSULAR AFFAIRS,
August 20, 1957.

Hon. JAMES H. DOUGLAS,
Secretary of the Air Force,
Department of Defense,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: Your attention has been called recently to the problem growing out of the announced termination, June 25, 1957, of the contract between the Air Force and the Northwest Technical Institute, Tillamook, Oreg. As you know, the institute is a contract school which has engaged in POL (Petroleum, Oil, and Lubricants) training since 1951. On Wednesday, August 14, Senator MORSE and I appeared before the Task Force on Air Training Facilities, a subcommittee of the Senate Armed Services Committee, under the chairmanship of Senator STUART SYMINGTON. Senator HENRY JACKSON, a member of the Armed Services Committee was also in attendance at the discussion meeting which heard in addition from Air Force and General Accounting Office personnel as well as Representative WALTER ROGERS of Texas, in whose district Amarillo is located.

It should be noted that representatives of the General Accounting Office completed an audit of the Northwest Technical Institute in July; however, time was not available for an equally intensive audit of the same type training the Air Force undertook last year at Amarillo Air Force Base. On the strength of the audit of the Oregon school and a preliminary survey of the Amarillo program, the General Accounting Office shows that the institute's per-student costs are substantially under the costs estimated by the Air Force for its own similar training introduced last year at Amarillo. There is every indication that the continuation of the contractual arrangement with the Tillamook organization would assure the Air Force of an outstanding training job at a decided economy to the Government.

It seems to me that a suggestion offered in the course of the discussion last Wednesday merits serious consideration. It was proposed to contract with the Northwest Techical Institute for the training of approximately half the student load of 1,300, which is understood to be the annual recurring requirement of the Air Force for personnel in this particular career field. The others would be trained in the other facilities now being operated by the Air Force. The General Accounting Office would be assigned to make an intensive audit during the course of the year and it would be determined on the figures thus arrived at whether to continue the contractual arrangement or to set up the entire program at the Amarillo base.

I am sure such a plan is eminently fair to all concerned, and the decision thus obtained would be supported by unquestionable evidence.

I could present many other facts pertinent to this problem that merit the consideration of the administration in making their determination on this matter. I am sure they have already been called to your attention.

I would emphasize one thing especially that, in view of Oregon's geographic location and present economic difficulties, gives added weight to the above request: Among the States, Oregon ranks at or near the bottom in any table of Department of Defense expenditures allocated on a State-by-State basis. In marked contrast Texas would, undoubtedly, be at the top in any such listing. What I am saying is this: In the little town of Tillamook, Oreg., loss of the operation carried on by the Northwest Technical Institute would be a severe economic blow to the community. On the other hand, the community pulse of Amarillo would, I am sure, neither be stayed nor quickened by the operation of this program.

Just thumbing through the 141 pages of H. R. 8240, the military construction bill, illustrates my point. On page after page it stands out: Biggs Air Force Base, El Paso, Tex.; Sheppard Air Force Base, Wichita Falls, Tex.; Ellington Air Force Base, Houston, Tex.; Goodfellow Air Force Base, San Angelo, Tex.; Kelly Air Force Base, San Antonio, Tex.—to mention just a few. They are all strategically and properly located, I have no doubt. But the contrast is indeed striking when one searches for Oregon facilities listed in the bill.

In conclusion let me emphasize the fact that since 1951 the Northwest Technical Institute has faithfully and satisfactorily carried out every provision of their contract with the Air Force.

The above suggestions are offered in a desire to promote a careful and objective evaluation that will be consonant with the finest traditions of the Air Force and the Department of Defense.

With kind regards, I am,

Sincerely,

RICHARD L. NEUBERGER,
United States Senator.

DEPARTMENT OF THE AIR FORCE,
Washington, August 22, 1957.

Hon. RICHARD L. NEUBERGER,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR NEUBERGER: I refer to the recent meeting concerning petroleum training at Tillamook, Oreg., and your interest therein.

During the past 2 years I have personally studied this problem and it has also been the subject of special study by the Subcommittee on Real Estate and Military Construction of the Senate Committee on Armed Services. The staff of this subcommittee, after visits to both Tillamook and Amarillo, has agreed with our conclusion that it is in the best interest of the services to conduct this training at Amarillo Air Force Base, Tex. The General Accounting Office in their cost estimates of training at Amarillo and Tillamook also reached the conclusion that it was more economical to accomplish this training at Amarillo.

After considering all of the factors involved, I must reaffirm my previous decision that it is in the best interest of the Air Force to conduct this training at Amarillo Air Force Base, Tex. I regret that my decision in this matter is not more favorable to your expressed position.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES H. DOUGLAS.

Refusal of the administration to continue operation of the Northwest Technical Institute at Tillamook, Oreg., despite its efficient and economical operation under private enterprise, was criticized today by Senator RICHARD L. NEUBERGER, of Oregon, as "another example of favoritism which has concentrated defense installations in a few States."

The Oregon Senator had appeared before a session of the Senate Task Force on Air Training Facilities and objected to the Air Force decision to terminate its contract with the institute which has been training personnel in the handling of petroleum products. NEUBERGER was advised by Air Force Secretary James H. Douglas that the course will be transferred to Amarillo Air Force Base in Texas.

"Among the States, Oregon ranks at or near the bottom in any table of Department of Defense expenditures," NEUBERGER said. "In marked contrast Texas would, undoubtedly, be at the top in any such listing. Loss of the operation would be a severe economic blow to Tillamook, but the community pulse of Amarillo would, I am sure, neither be stayed nor quickened by the operation of this program."

In a letter protesting the action, NEUBERGER told Secretary Douglas that "the Northwest Technical Institute has faithfully and satisfactorily carried out every provision of their contract with the Air Force. Moreover, an audit of the Oregon school and preliminary survey of the Amarillo program by the General Accounting Office shows the institute's per-student costs are substantially under the costs estimated by the Air Force for its own similar training introduced last year at Amarillo.

"There is every indication that continuation of the contractual arrangement with the Tillamook organization would assure the Air Force of an outstanding training job at a decided economy to the Government. The efficiency of its operation is a tribute to Mr. Robert E. Klatt and his associates."

NEUBERGER had urged the Air Force to consider a plan under which Northwest Technical Institute would train approximately half of the 1,300 men assigned annually to study of technical oil and gasoline handling procedures. During a 1-year trial period, the General Accounting Office would make an intensive audit to compare costs between Tillamook and Amarillo Air Base operations. NEUBERGER suggested that these figures be used to make a final determination whether to continue the institute's contract or set up the entire program at the Amarillo base.

The Tillamook training facilities have been operating under private contract with the Air Force by utilizing surplus facilities at the former naval blimp station there.

"There has never been any criticism of the operation of the Tillamook base, which has saved the Government money and has turned out qualified technicians," NEUBERGER said. "It is incredible that the administration would decide to cancel out such an outstanding facility in Oregon—a State which has virtually no defense installations—in favor of adding another military undertaking to the already lengthy list of those based in the State of Texas. The contrast between the consideration given by the Defense Department to the States of Oregon and Texas is indeed disturbing."

PRIORITIES FOR THE ASIATIC INFLUENZA VACCINE

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. President, with some hesitation, I rise to make a suggestion to the President of the United States.

I realize my own limitations, certainly, and I do not mean to be presumptuous. I simply urge that Mr. Eisenhower begin to think of himself as the Chief Executive officer of this Nation.

One could only praise a man or a President for approaching his problems with all humility. But I suggest that in any assignment of priorities, a leader must understand that the survival of those he leads often is tied to his own survival. I suggest further that President Eisenhower is not an ordinary person in our system of government.

President Eisenhower told his press conference this week, according to press reports, that he would get a shot of the Asian flu vaccine when it becomes available to ordinary people, such as himself.

This disturbs me. More than a month ago, I wrote to the Surgeon General of the United States, asking what preparations the Public Health Service was making for a possible epidemic of this new flu virus. I asked whether the vaccine prepared for it was effective, and, if so, whether or not it will be in sufficient supply by fall to safeguard the entire population. I asked further, if there will not be enough for everybody, has a priority plan been established? I did not receive a reply immediately.

About a week later, Harper's magazine carried a lead article, entitled "The Influenza Epidemic," which urged priorities in vaccine for members of the military service and citizens who provide essential community services, in the event of an epidemic, to prevent serious dislocation of food supplies, or in transportation services, or who protect against dangers to public health. I still had heard no word from the Surgeon General.

On August 2, American morning newspapers carried in large headlines the story that the Public Health Service has alerted the Nation to a very definite probability of a wide outbreak of Asiatic flu this fall. That afternoon I received an answer to my letter of July 18; the answer told me the vaccine was 70 percent effective. No priority plan was outlined, but I was told that the Public Health Service would recommend that particular attention be given to the early vaccination of persons whose services are imperative for the care of the sick and those needed to maintain other essential functions.

I consider the President of the United States and the Commander in Chief one of those needed to maintain essential functions. I hope he will not insist on waiting until every other American is vaccinated, before he takes his turn. That time is not coming, you see. The Public Health Service tells me that on the basis of top production estimates, it obviously will not be possible to manufacture enough vaccine for the entire population before the influenza season.

ONE FARM PROGRAM THAT WORKS

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, in Time magazine for August 12, there appeared a rather interesting and succinct article on the subject of rural development. This is a program of tremendous importance to the future of America; and I believe the article stresses the great possibilities of what has been done thus far.

I ask unanimous consent that the article be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RURAL DEVELOPMENT: ONE FARM PROGRAM THAT WORKS

In campaigning for billions in price supports, Washington politicos often give the impression that the subsidies benefit all of America's 5,400,000 farm families. Actually, only a minority gets them since only five crops (wheat, corn, cotton, rice, and tobacco) are supported and they are produced by the Nation's most prosperous farmers. Left out almost completely are some 2,500,000 marginal farmers. These underfed and ill-housed families are a farm problem that few Congressmen talk about. Last week Congress grudgingly voted $2,500,000 for their benefit, a cut of $1,500,000 below the amount President Eisenhower urgently requested this year for rural development, the Nation's newest farm program.

Rural development is one of the few farm programs that really work. Yet it gets a cold reception from politicians because it is prompted by an unpleasant fact that they prefer to ignore. The fact too many farmers are trying to scratch out a living on farms that are too small to be profitable. From 1930 to 1954, the average United States farm jumped from 157 to 242 acres. But with the cost of mechanization even that is not enough to support a single family in many areas. And in hundreds of scrubby farming counties the cultivated area per farm averages as little as 8½ acres.

To make the first broad-scale assault ever attempted on this problem, the Agriculture, Interior, Commerce, Labor, and Health, Education, and Welfare Departments, at President Eisenhower's orders, selected 54 counties and 3 multicounty areas in the Southeast, Southwest, New England, along the Ohio River Valley, and in the Great Lakes area as laboratories in which to test a new idea. The big idea: to encourage local farm leaders, businessmen, clergymen, and others to take over and work out their own farm improvement plans, tailored to their own needs, with technical and loan assistance supplied by their State and the Federal Government.

In the test counties, farmers got a choice. If they wanted to keep on farming, they were shown how to farm better, got help in buying more land and equipment. Others were helped in getting jobs in town or industry. Rural development has also persuaded industries to locate plants in distressed rural areas, and has aided farmers in starting their own businesses.

In Price County, Wis., Gordon Johnson, who was a misfit at dairying, last week started work on his first glass-fiber boat in his new company. In Monroe County, Ohio, ministers sparked a countywide poll of the labor force, which helped attract a new Olin Mathieson aluminum plant. In Espanola, N. Mex., fruitgrowers were helped to build a plant to grade and pack their apples and peaches. In Choctaw County, Okla., which was losing population in droves, a new cannery, a glove factory and a feed mill were established.

With the help of rural development, many farmers are learning to be better farmers. In Lewis County, W. Va., rural development last year helped 12 farmers buy 146 western ewes. In one season they made enough from their lambs and wool to pay back the loan, this year will pocket a sizable profit from their almost vertical hillside pastures.

In Tippah County, Miss., farmers were giving up their homesteads at the rate of nearly 100 a year, forced out of business by the cotton acreage cuts. The county was helped by rural development to launch a brand-new dairy industry. Merchants raffled off 27 prize Jersey cows as breeding stock, put up $15,000 to start a processing plant. The plant opened February 1, paid back the loan in full June 1. A similar shift is going on in Chesterfield County, S. C., hard hit by the cutbacks in tobacco acreage, where rural development is encouraging farmers to use tobacco barns no longer needed for curing tobacco to dry out and store sweetpotatoes. For many families rural development means the amenities of living whose lack is incomprehensible to many other Americans. In tiny La Cañada de los Alamos, N. Mex., 13 Spanish-speaking families, thanks to rural development, now have a community well, ending generations of carrying water uphill.

Surveying such accomplishments all brought about in little over a year with a Federal cash outlay of only $2,100,000 (the cost of storing Government price-supported crop surpluses for 2 days), some enthusiasts believe that if rural development were vastly expanded, it would be an answer for the whole farm problem. But most experts point out that the plan's success is due to the fact that it relies on local and State initiative rather than a vast new Federal bureaucracy to dictate to farmers. As Editor F. W. Heath of the Price County (Wis.) weekly Bee put it last week: "At last we are beginning to realize that 'we' are the 'they' we talk about when we want something done."

THE CIVIL-RIGHTS BILL—PUBLISHING OF CERTAIN INFORMATION

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, my attention has been called to a column which appeared in one of our great New York City newspapers, the Daily News, bearing date of August 14, which was published August 15, relating to the contemplated alleged punishment of newspapers for publishing information about evidence taken in executive session before the prospective Civil Rights Commission contemplated by the bill. The article states that the provision was "nursed and defended in the Senate by New York's Republican JACOB JAVITS."

Mr. President, the column to which I refer is Capitol Stuff, written by the spirited and widely known and read John O'Donnell, who I am sure, as an outstanding newspaper man, would want the full facts stated of record. We do not mind slings and arrows in comments about those of us who are in public life, but I think we have a right to set the record straight when the facts are exactly opposite to what has been stated, so I take the privilege of doing that now.

I believe I was the first one, during the civil-rights debate, to call to the attention of the Senate my complete opposition to this particular provision which was being questioned by news media as to any possible punishment for reporting on testimony taken in executive session by the proposed Civil Rights Commission. I spoke on August 7 during the debate on the bill and said I was opposed to it, and that if I had the opportunity—the opportunity then having unfortunately expired, which represented an oversight of many of us in the Senate, as well as those in the other body—I would offer an amendment to strike out the provision, with which I thoroughly disagreed. I tried, speaking as a lawyer, to give the language the legislative interpretation that it applied only to the members of the Civil Rights Commission, its staff, and employees, and would not apply to news media generally. Whether that would help or not, nobody knew. Nevertheless, I tried to make that effort; unfortunately its purpose seems to have been misunderstood.

Subsequently, and I hope as a result of the attention I focused on the provision, the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] made a suggestion which might be adopted by the conferees, if there were to be conferees on the bill. I supported him. We also heard from the distinguished majority leader that a resolution would most likely be introduced to excise that portion of the bill. All of us realized that, having been adopted in the same form by both Houses, it was beyond the power of conferees to deal with the provision as it existed in the bill. I certainly agreed with the majority leader's suggestion of a resolution if it could be done in no other way.

I wish to set the record straight that I thoroughly disapprove of and disagree with the provision, and that it is against the public interest; that I have done, and will continue to do everything I can to excise it.

I hope very much we shall find an effective way to deal with this problem, and remove the provision from the bill, and certainly not consider it as part of the law if passed.

RETURN OF CERTAIN MINERAL INTERESTS TO FORMER OWNERS

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] has a measure which he desires to bring to the attention of the Senate. As soon as action is taken on his proposal, the Senate will proceed to consider Calendar No. 1110, S. 1726. I understand the Senator from Rhode Island is prepared to make an explanation of the bill.

Mr. PASTORE. I am.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the amendments of the House to S. 268.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 268) to provide that the Secretary of the Army shall return certain mineral interests in land acquired by him for flood-control purposes to the former owners of such land, which were, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That whenever the Secretary of the Army determines that the exploitation of any mineral interests underlying any lands within, or acquired for the purpose of, the Arkabutla, Sardis, Enid, and Grenada Reservoirs of the Yazoo Basin headwater project in the State of Mississippi will not be incompatible with the development, maintenance, and operation of the reservoir projects, he shall make such interests available for reconveyance to the former owners thereof or, in the case of any such owner who is deceased, to the legal heirs or devisees, if any.

SEC. 2. Upon application filed with the Secretary of the Interior within 3 years after the date of enactment of this act and upon approval of that application by the Secretary of the Army, whose determination shall be final, the Secretary of the Interior shall, upon payment of the fair market value thereof as determined by him, reconvey the mineral interests made available in accordance with this act, subject to the limitations contained in section 3 of this act.

SEC. 3. Each proposed reconveyance of mineral interests under this act shall be subject to the following limitations:

(a) In the event all of the mineral interests of the United States in and to all of the mineral deposits that are subject to any one lease, permit, license, or contract issued under the Mineral Leasing Act for Acquired Lands, approved August 7, 1947 (61 Stat. 913; 30 U. S. C. 1952 edition, secs. 351–359) as amended, are otherwise eligible for conveyance under section 1 of this act to a single grantee, or to several grantees as tenants in common, then such conveyance shall contain an assignment of all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to such lease, permit, license, or contract, including the right to all rentals, royalties, and other payments accruing under such lease, license, or contract after the effective date of such conveyance. Except as provided in the preceding sentence, mineral deposits that are subject to any such lease, permit, license, or contract shall not be eligible during its continuance for conveyance under this act. Nothing contained in this act shall affect the continued validity of any such lease, permit, license, or contract or any rights arising thereunder.

(b) Where mineral interests in the same lands were acquired from more than one owner, no conveyance shall be made unless it is established to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that the proposed conveyance will operate in a manner which will be fair and just to each person from whom any mineral interest in such lands was acquired by the United States, and will not prejudice the proper conservation and development of the mineral deposits affected by the conveyance. For the purposes of this act former mineral interests, whether or not in the same lands, may be combined or divided in such manner as may be requested by the applicants and approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

(c) No reconveyance shall be made of mineral interests in any lands if it is determined by the Secretary of the Interior that such reconveyance would adversely affect facilities required for the protection and management of migratory birds and fishing resources as provided in the act of August 14, 1946 (60 Stat. 1080), or if the lands are designated by the Secretary of the Army, after consultation with the Secretary of the Interior, as needed for public park or recreation purposes.

(d) The Secretary of the Army may include such reservations and restrictions as he determines to be necessary for the development, maintenance, and operation of the reservoir projects involved and as may otherwise be in the public interest.

Sec. 4. All proceeds from the reconveyance of mineral interests under this act shall be deposited in the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

Sec. 5. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as are necessary to carry out the purpose of this act.

And to amend the title so as to read: "An Act to provide that the United States shall return to the former owners certain mineral interests in lands acquired for the Arkabutla, Sardis, Enid, and Grenada Reservoirs, Miss."

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives to S. 268.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New Mexico.

The motion was agreed to.

CONSTRUCTION OF PROTECTIVE MEASURES IN NARRAGANSETT BAY AREA

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1110, Senate bill 1726.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The Legislative Clerk. A bill (S. 1726) authorizing certain construction for the protection of the Narragansett Bay area against hurricane tidal flooding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Works with amendments on page 1, line 7, after the word "the", to strike out "Division Engineer, New England Division, Corps of Engineers" and insert "Chief of Engineers"; in line 9, after the word "dated", strike out "February 15" and insert "June 26,"; in line 10, after the numerals "1957", strike out "as such may be modified by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors and the Chief of Engineers,"; on page 2, after line 2, strike out:

> Sec. 2. The project for the general protection of the Narragansett Bay area from hurricane tidal floods by the construction of a series of Lower Bay barriers is authorized substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Division Engineer, New England Division, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, in his report dated February 15, 1957, as such may be modified by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors and the Chief of Engineers, at an estimated initial cost to the United States of between $67,000,000 and $105,000,000.

And in line 13, to change the section number from "3" to "2", so as to make the bill read:

> Be it enacted, etc., That the project for the protection of the Providence, Rhode Island, area against hurricane tidal floods by the construction of a barrier at Fox Point on the Providence River is authorized substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, in his report dated June 26, 1957, at an estimated initial cost to the United States of $16,180,000.
>
> Sec. 2. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I rise to speak in support of S. 1726, a bill to authorize the construction of the Fox Point barrier for the protection of the city of Providence, R. I., against the devastating hurricane tidal flooding our city has experienced in the last several years.

The bill, introduced by my colleague, the senior Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. Green] and myself, is based upon the extensive studies and resulting recommendations of the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army. These studies, covering some 2 years, were authorized by Public Law 71 under date of June 15, 1955.

I shall not attempt to itemize the thorough studies of the engineers. The studies may be summarized by stating that the property damage to the industrial and commercial area of Providence in the 1954 hurricane alone was $41 million. Against such a future calamity the engineers have designed a protecting dam to be built for $16,500,000.

Following the established pattern of Federal and local contributions, the engineers have recommended that the Federal Government participate to the extent of $16,180,000, while local interests will contribute $320,000 of the first cost and assume annual charges for operation and maintenance in the amount of $134,000. The total annual charges will be $732,000, with annual benefits of $1,733,000. This gives a very favorable ratio of benefits to cost at 2.37 to 1.

The situation could be summarized in a single sentence from the engineers' voluminous report:

> The Fox Point barrier is urgently needed and should be constructed immediately.

It is the urgency of this matter, the knowledge that hurricanes do not wait upon our pleasure, that has impelled us to press all the steps that have been necessary with a multitude of Government agencies to bring us to this day when the situation has the attention of the Senate.

It is not my intent to emphasize the anxiety and agony of a community when the navigable waters of a great bay go on a rampage in the terrors of a hurricane. The loss of human life, the paralysis of everyday existence, the mortal blows to small business in the affected areas, the stunting of future growth, and the fears which return with every hurricane season are items outside the estimates of dollar costs. But we are properly concerned with dollar costs, too, and the Army engineers have devised a plan which is financially sound, as well as physically feasible and effective.

To speed this construction as fast and as far as lies in our power is vital to the city of Providence, which is important, too, in the economy of the Nation.

I am deeply indebted to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Kerr] and the members of his committee for their expeditious and thoughtful consideration, and I ask the Senate's favorable action on this most worthy and worthwhile project.

Mr. President, I ask that the Senate pass the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Alabama to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION APPROPRIATIONS, 1958

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate resume the consideration of Calendar No. 1108, H. R. 9379, the Atomic Energy appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 9379) making appropriations for the Atomic Energy Commission for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1958, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

TOLL TELEVISION

Mr. POTTER. Mr. President, the Congress of the United States owes a vote of thanks to the representatives of the Nation's great mass communications mediums who regularly cover our activities here.

I am thinking especially of the coverage which has been given to the complex civil-rights issue by the daily press, radio, television, and the periodical press. I believe that few here will question that the reports issued by these mediums during the long months when civil rights engaged the attention of the House and Senate have been thorough, accurate, and fair.

Certainly the television newsmen are entitled to a special accolade for their accomplishment. Television, as we all know, is still carving out its precedents in an area of communications which is youngest of all.

I have been reading recently some figures collected by the National Broadcasting Co. with respect to the growth of free television in the United States. These statistics, based upon tabulations brought down from research prepared by the Advertising Research Foundation and Census Bureau surveys, show that there are now in the United States a total of 40 million television homes that can receive the numerous programs offered by our advertising-supported system of free enterprise television broadcasting.

There are few industries in America that have enjoyed such phenomenal growth—for 12 years ago, when television was launched in this Nation, only 8,000 homes boasted TV sets in use. The present saturation represents 80.3 percent of all the homes in America.

It is not necessary for me at this time to recount before this body the blessings of free television; nor would I take the time, for no industry has been more thoroughly explored by Congress to enumerate its shortcomings. On balance, it seems to me that the people themselves have voted resoundingly for this system of home entertainment and education which has been designed along lines that are consistent with our traditional high regard for free media.

It is estimated that it has cost $190 million, invested by hundreds of business organizations and individuals, to construct this nationwide service. More significant than this figure, however, is the fact that the total contribution of American citizens has been $15 billion, and that the citizens have made this investment on the assumption that they were buying an instrument on which they would receive free programs without further assessment other than that required for the maintenance of the sets.

The citizens had every right to that assumption, because it was the Congress which enacted legislation based upon the historic premise that broadcasting would be free and that we would not pursue systems employed in many other nations throughout the world that provide for the regular collection of taxes for the privilege of using a television set.

Now, against the background of this tremendous growth of a medium that has rendered extraordinary service to the American people, we are hearing more and more about various proposals for pay or subscription television—popularly called pay TV. The proposals for pay TV have been subjects of hearings before the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committees of this legislative body, before the regulatory agency, the Federal Communications Commission, and have caused the proponents of pay TV to launch and sustain one of the most aggressive and calculated publicity campaigns in the history of American industry.

I am referring in these remarks to the systems of pay television which would require the partial use of existing broadcast frequencies in order to operate. As most of us know, these proposals—although they may differ in technique—are parallel in purpose: to broadcast on the air over established frequencies at selected hours of the day special programs that would emanate from the transmitter in a scrambled form requiring the set owner to pay a stipulated amount to unscramble the signal and afford him the benefit of seeing the production. We have over 500 so-called commercial television stations in the United States right now. When the allocation of channels for the development of our system was first discussed a decade ago, many experts predicted that by this time we would have upwards of 2,000 stations on the air. We do not have that many for the simple reason that the experts were wrong in presuming that companion systems, UHF and VHF, would be able to do the job.

There are many things about modern television that other Senators and I would improve. We would step up the quality of some of the productions, for example; we might like to do something about excessive commercialism.

However, further growth of television to its full potential as a medium of vital influence on our republican form of life will depend upon the availability of more space to be allocated to free television if we are to have a fully competitive system. These various proposals for pay television run absolutely counter to this basic theory of the legislation which established America's broadcasting system. They propose, in effect, to usurp some of the limited free time that is now available and supplant it by a sort of domestic slot machine operation which would require the people to pay for something they are now receiving without charge.

The major interest involved, therefore, is the public interest—the public who in a sense own these channels insofar as they constitute a natural resource of the United States. But despite the investment on the part of the individual citizen, and even in consideration of the virtual promise this Government has made to him that broadcasting would be a free service in his home, I see in pay television an even more dangerous possibility.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. POTTER. I am delighted to yield to the Senator from Ohio. I know he has a great interest in this very vital problem.

Mr. LAUSCHE. I am very much pleased that the Senator from Michigan has addressed the Senate as he has today, because his remarks deal with a vital subject.

May I pursue the subject of the amount of money which has been invested by the American citizenry in television sets which are now tied into free service? Did I correctly understand the Senator to say that was $15 billion?

Mr. POTTER. Fifteen billion dollars; yes.

Mr. LAUSCHE. If these television sets are converted into pay sets, can the Senator from Michigan tell me to what extent the owners of the present television sets would be able to avail themselves of service without the addition of new equipment and gadgets?

Mr. POTTER. As the Senator well knows, there have been two major techniques proposed as a means of collecting the toll from the viewer. One has been through the telephone system. In other words, if before a major prize fight somebody wished to get the signal and see the fight he could get the broadcast through a card which would go through the telephone system. Of course, that would completely disrupt the entire telephone system of the Nation.

The other means would be through some type of card or coin box affair which would be put on the receiver.

It seems that if the owner of a television set desires to see the so-called super programs, which he would have to pay for, he will have to purchase a coin box, or whatever type of unscrambler is necessary, which would involve a cost additional to the investment he already has in the set. That in itself would add up to several million dollars of additional cost to the viewing public.

Mr. LAUSCHE. We would then have involved two additional costs. One would be the cost for buying the gadgets necessary to unscramble the mixed up waves, or whatever they are.

Mr. POTTER. Yes.

Mr. LAUSCHE. And the second would be the fee for the specific program.

Mr. POTTER. The Senator is absolutely correct. Of course, at the same time, the viewer would be denied the program he would normally receive free over the particular channel involved.

In other words, let us assume that on channel 4 in Washington, D. C., for example, there is to be a program of a football game or a prize fight, or whatever it may be, for which there will be a charge. Unless the person were willing to pay that charge, he would be denied the use of that channel.

Mr. LAUSCHE. The channel would then be tied up only for service of those who were willing to pay the special fee?

Mr. POTTER. The Senator is absolutely right. Of course, in many communities of the country the viewing public does not have a choice between channels as he has here in Washington, but has only one channel. In my home town, for example, there is one channel that comes in well. If we had to pay for TV there during the hours of 8 to 10 in the evening, when there was a prize fight, or 10 to 12 in the evening, for the program being broadcast, those who could afford to put the money in the slot to use the channel could do so if they wanted, but there are thousands of people who could not pay and who thought when they bought the television sets they had an instrument which would be able to use all channels to receive the programs. Those people would be denied the programs for those hours, and would be denied the use of the television sets, in which they had a considerable investment.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Let me ask the Senator one further question. The Senator from Michigan dealt briefly with the air waves as a natural resource owned by the people of the country. I should like to hear the Senator discuss that question further.

Mr. POTTER. The Senator is absolutely right. The air waves have always been construed as belonging to the people. The entire system of broadcasting, both radio and television, has been under the concept that the frequencies belong to the people. If a person wished to use the air waves for commercial reasons, and wished to use certain frequencies either for radio or for television, it was understood that advertising would be used to build up the program, as a means of building up a listening and watching audience, and as a means of selling a product, but that the use of the frequency would be free for the people viewing.

Pay TV would completely reverse the procedure for broadcasting, whereby there is great competition to build up better and better programs by the advertising of a product to reach as many people as possible. This would turn the procedure around, to such a point that advertising would be eliminated, and the program would be developed to sell the program as a commodity to the people.

Mr. LAUSCHE. The net result would be that the pay stations would be given the property right of the public?

Mr. POTTER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. LAUSCHE. And authorized to use the air waves for pay?

Mr. POTTER. The Senator is absolutely right.

Mr. LAUSCHE. I thank the Senator very much.

Mr. POTTER. I appreciate the comments of the distinguished Senator from Ohio.

Those who are interested in promoting this form of TV—and I speak of pay television—for the most part are large, organized sports enterprises in such areas as boxing and baseball, motion-picture producers who visualize a rich return on some of the films that they have stockpiled, and at least 1 or 2 manufacturers of equipment—in other words, the jukebox type of equipment. There have been in this Chamber and in the House various charges made at various times that American broadcasting is centrally controlled through the networks to the point of monopolistic practice. I do not happen to believe this is true, and I am confident that an analysis of the ownership of America's 510 television stations would reveal that they are held by diversified interests covering a wide span of social, political, economic, and religious persuasion.

Conversely, however, any system of subscription TV, closely held and controlled by the purveyors of specified types of box-office programs, could in time develop into the kind of monopolistic practice with which our Department of Justice has had to deal in the past in the field of entertainment.

As to whether these systems then would reduce free television to such a state of economic distress that it could no longer afford to bring into the American home such significant events as our national political conventions, the inauguration, the coverage of public proceedings, and other programs in the public service, one can only hazard a guess. But should that happen the prospect of requiring a citizen to drop money in a slot in order to see and get to know candidates for public office is a dismal one indeed.

The Federal Communications Commission has closed its books on the filing of comments with respect to a public test of subscription television. The Commission has stated that it has jurisdiction in this matter under law and can authorize such a test. Whether or not this is so—and I presume that only the courts finally could decide—the American people certainly have jurisdiction too—and their representation resides in this Congress. The promoters of pay television have told the Commission that tests such as have been proposed are not entirely satisfactory to them—and they have asked for much wider latitude than had been contemplated. They want to include more cities and facilities than originally were conceived; they want to extend the period of such tests from as little as 2 to as much as 10 years. Obviously, in other words, they are seeking a test that would give an opportunity to go into business on a permanent basis.

My own position with respect to pay television that would utilize frequencies allocated for public broadcasting is well known. I am opposed to it. I am opposed also to any utilization of these frequencies for some sort of fanciful trial run that could lead inevitably to a derogation of the public interest.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. POTTER. I am delighted to yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Is it not a fact that the studies which have been made thus far concerning the feasibility of establishing pay television have not yet pointed out the feasibility of authorizing it? Am I correct?

Mr. POTTER. The Senator is absolutely correct.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Is it not a fact that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, of which the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from Ohio are members, is now in the process of studying the subject?

Mr. POTTER. The Senator is correct. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the Senate has had this problem before it for several years.

It is interesting to note that the strong advocates of pay television are not to be found among the general public. They are, first, the equipment manufacturers; second, the motion-picture industry, which would like to use the great medium of television as a means of replacing theaters, which have been, in the past, the means of showing their films. In other words, our living rooms would be turned into theaters for the exhibition of stockpiled motion pictures.

Mr. LAUSCHE. As I understand, the Senator from Michigan is of the conviction that the test assignments which are contemplated should not be made until a further study is made concerning what the impact might be upon the general public with respect to getting television service.

Mr. POTTER. The Senator from Michigan would even go further than that. The Senator from Michigan feels that, with the information we now have, the Federal Communications Commission should not even make a pilot study of this program, should not even authorize a pilot operation. In the first place, the physical procedure which would be necessary to put into effect a pilot study of pay television, even if it were a limited type of program, would, in itself, be injurious to the public interest. I assume that probably, on a local basis, the manufacturers might pay a part of the cost. I do not know who would pay the people to convert their sets into the money-grabbing machinery which would be necessary. I assume the manufacturers might do it on a trial basis, and turn over the equipment for experimental purposes.

The point I wish to make is that once a pilot study was started, I assume that an exceptionally good program might be furnished for a limited period of time. The Federal Communications Commission and the public might misconstrue that type of pilot study and might assume that such programs would continue after the competition had been removed, and after the programs normally paid for by advertising were eliminated.

Mr. LAUSCHE. I subscribe to what the Senator has said, but I should like to add that in my judgment, if the pilot-test authorization is given, the nose of the camel will be in the tent, and that will be a victory so great that free service of television will be on the way to an end.

Mr. POTTER. I share the concern of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. POTTER. I yield.

Mr. HOLLAND. Has the Senator discussed in his very able presentation, or does he intend to discuss, the very harmful impact on the motion-picture industry of pay television?

Mr. POTTER. The Senator has brought up a key point. If the proponents of this proposal had their way, and were able to reverse our entire procedure of broadcasting and convert it to a system under which the viewers would pay for the programs, it would put out of business every motion-picture theater in the country.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. POTTER. I yield.

Mr. HOLLAND. The distinguished Senator remembers, of course, that the impact of the television industry upon the motion-picture industry has already been very severe.

Mr. POTTER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. HOLLAND. Within recent years Congress has twice provided special tax relief in order to try to help the motion-picture industry to survive. Does the distinguished Senator not believe that the installation of pay television would much more than undo what we have attempted to do?

Mr. POTTER. The Senator is absolutely correct.

Mr. HOLLAND. It would practically assure the destruction of most of the motion-picture industry.

Mr. POTTER. The Senator is correct. It would put out of business all the community motion-picture houses, in which we take a great deal of pride. They could not stand this kind of competition. If this type of program became a nationwide pattern, the community motion-picture houses would all have to go out of business. On two occasions, as the Senator has said, Congress lately gave some special tax consideration to the motion-picture industry, and provided certain relief, to enable the industry to meet the competition of television. That effort would be completely undone by the proposed medium of pay television.

Mr. HOLLAND. I commend the distinguished Senator heartily. I think he is proceeding in exactly the right direction I hope he will be successful, and I hope that the Federal Communications Commission will not even seriously consider permitting such a revolution, which I think would be very hurtful to the motion-picture industry, as well as to the people in general in many areas, because of the drying up of sources of communication to many people, by preempting, for private development, some of the few and highly valuable channels which are available for television.

Mr. POTTER. I appreciate the comments of the distinguished Senator from Florida.

I am sure the Senator would also agree with me that at the present time our frequencies are considered a natural resource, a public property. If, by legislative action or by action of the Federal Communications Commission, we allowed a natural resource which belongs to the people of the United States to be used by some promoters, whether they be in the motion-picture industry or otherwise, to build up programs and charge the people for something which is theirs, the public interest would not be served.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. POTTER. I yield.

Mr. LAUSCHE. I have several premises which I should like to attach to questions on which I should like to have the Senator's opinion. Is it not a fact, if pay television were established, it would black out free television to a substantial degree?

Mr. POTTER. I do not believe that pay television and free television can live side by side for any length of time.

Mr. LAUSCHE. My second question is this: The argument is made that pay television will not siphon off the best talent and make it available only to those who pay for the television, but that the best television talent will also be available on free stations.

Mr. POTTER. I do not believe that would be so. For example, at the present time there are many programs which are not staged. Let us take for example, political conventions. At the present time it is possible to tune in on any one of the television channels and pick up a national political convention. If we had pay television, and it was necessary to pay to view a political convention, we would not get any better performance at the convention merely because we paid a quarter to see it.

With respect to other programs, the producers would get the topnotch performers and use them on pay television, and they would be the same topnotch performers who are now performing on free television.

Mr. LAUSCHE. In other words, the best talent would finally be monopolized by pay television.

Mr. POTTER. There can be no question about that.

Mr. LAUSCHE. In the third place, it is argued that new types of programs would be generated. The contrary argument is that there will be no new-type programs, because they are now being presented.

Mr. POTTER. The Senator is right. The programs which are presented today are presented because those who promote the program have something to sell to the public, and they want to tell their story to the public. Television is a highly competitive industry today, despite what some people may think. Suppose NBC has a program from 8 to 8:30, and has an advertiser who sponsors that program. The advertiser wants to reach as many people as he can. On another channel is CBS, and on another channel is ABC. They are competing for the same audience. The advertisers want to have as good a program as possible, in order to reach as many people as possible. So I would say to the distinguished Senator that at the present time the situation with respect to competition is such—and of course we can always stand more competition—that it is mandatory upon the advertiser to make his program as good as it is possible to make it, and to reach as many people as it is possible to reach, so as to get the most benefit from the advertising.

People say, "But we would have the opera. We could see opera on television." Mr. President, I am wondering, if there were the mass appeal in the public to demand televising of the opera, whether it would not be televised. I am sure, in fact, that if there were sufficient mass appeal for it, it would be possible to get someone to sponsor the televising of the opera. The fact that it is not done is apparently because advertisers feel that there is not enough popular appeal to opera.

Then it is said, "But with pay TV, people could see opera." Certain people who have an interest in opera could see it, but it would be to the detriment of the people who did not want to pay or could not afford to pay, or had no desire to see opera. In other words, a channel would be used for a select few so that they could see the opera on pay TV.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Is not the probability great that eventually the condition would be that good programs would be available only to those who pay and not to those who cannot pay?

Mr. POTTER. That could happen very easily, I think, if competition were destroyed. As I said before, I do not believe that pay TV and free TV can live side by side for any length of time. After pay TV has knocked out the means of broadcasting we have at the present time, pay TV will be nothing more than a medium for the running of films.

Mr. LAUSCHE. And pay TV will have a monopoly.

Mr. POTTER. It will have a monopoly, and the level of the programing will go down and down and down.

Mr. LAUSCHE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. POTTER. If a sufficient number of people in this Nation wish to convert their homes, which are their castles, into theaters where they will pay for certain types of entertainment, there are ways in which these promoters can devise systems that will perform efficiently and perhaps economically. But there is little justice in the concept that we should take from 40 million families any fractional opportunity they have to receive these same productions of entertainment and information free of charge.

Rather than expend further public funds on seeking a method by which we can limit the time available for free television we should be bending all of our energies to untangling the current allocations problems in order that more facilities will be available to serve more people, to give them greater choice and to enable more advertisers to sell their goods and services at a time when maintaining full production is so vital to our Nation.

Mr. THURMOND subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the remarks I am about to make may appear in the RECORD following the address by the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. POTTER] on the question of toll television or pay television.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I was greatly interested in the remarks made in the Senate earlier today by the senior Senator from Michigan with reference to pay television or, as it is sometimes called, toll television or subscription television.

In my opinion this is a subject which millions of Americans would be much more interested in if they fully realized the implications in the fact that the Federal Communications Commission has been holding hearings to determine whether it shall authorize tests of pay television service. I do not believe that these millions of Americans who own television sets in their homes want to wake up one morning and find that a new expense has been imposed upon them in the form of charges for certain television service which is now free.

I want to commend the able Senator from Michigan for declaring his opposition to pay television and for adding his voice to the growing opposition to subjecting the public to this form of unofficial taxation.

However, I wish to disagree with a statement made by the Senator from Michigan.

He stated that the Federal Communications Commission "has stated that it has jurisdiction in this matter under law and can authorize such a test. Whether or not this is so—and I presume that only the courts finally could decide—the American people certainly have jurisdiction, too—and their representation resides in this Congress."

My disagreement with my colleague is on his comment that "only the courts finally could decide" whether the FCC has judisdiction over pay television proposals.

I do agree with him fully in his next statement that "the American people certainly have jurisdiction, too—and their representation resides in this Congress." The fact that the Senator from Michigan expresses any doubt as to where the jurisdiction in this matter lies is sufficient evidence to me that legislation is needed on the subject of pay television.

On June 11 of this year I introduced a bill, S. 2268, in the Senate to prohibit the charging of a fee to view telecasts in the home. The passage of this bill, which is now pending in the Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, would protect the millions of Americans who bought their television sets to see free television, not to pay for the privilege of viewing programs they wished to see.

Mr. President, I do not believe it would be in the public interest for the Federal Communications Commission to approve any pay television test when there is doubt as to where jurisdiction lies in this matter. I do believe it is incumbent on the Congress to take action in this situation and pass legislation which will clearly define the authority of the Commission and to prohibit the charging of a fee to view telecasts in the home.

The American people deserve such protection against the imposition of a continuing expense for the privilege of viewing the television programs of their choice.

Mr. POTTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THURMOND. I yield.

Mr. POTTER. I wish to commend the Senator for his statement——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I wish to advise the Senator from Michigan that I yielded to the Senator from South Carolina for an insertion in the RECORD, and not for the beginning of another debate.

Mr. POTTER. I want to assure the Senator from Wyoming that my remarks will be very brief. I merely wish to commend the Senator for his remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. POTTER. I know the Senator from South Carolina has a bill before the committee which will bring the issue before Congress for its decision. I shall work with the Senator, as a member of that subcommittee, to make sure that hearings are held on that bill next January.

Mr. THURMOND. I wish to thank the Senator for his kind remarks.

INCREASE IN STORAGE CAPACITY OF WHITNEY DAM AND RESERVOIR

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1115, H. R. 2580.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 2580) to increase the storage capacity of the Whitney Dam and Reservoir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, H. R. 2580, as originally introduced, provided for increasing the storage capacity of Whitney Dam and Reservoir, in my State of Texas, by 50,000 acre-feet. This increase was to provide for the urgent needs of several communities in the area.

The bill was amended in the House, to provide, instead, for a reallocation of 50,000 acre-feet of water storage capacity. This language will permit the Secretary of the Army to make studies of the best economic use of the project, and is entirely acceptable to both the communities and the Army.

The cost of the reallocated water supply storage will be borne by the communities affected, under a contract which will not exceed the economic life of the project or 50 years, whichever is less. There will be no additional cost to the Federal Government.

This legislation is in accord with the full and proper use and conservation of our natural resources. It is essential to the present and future economy of those communities.

Mr. President, I urge the Senate to act favorably on this very worthy measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, there are a number of public works bills which I have discussed with the distinguished minority leader and which have been cleared by him. They are the following measures:

Calendar No. 1109, S. 1587, authorizing the construction of protective measures in the cities of New Bedford and Fairhaven, Mass.

Calendar No. 1110, S. 1726, authorizing certain construction for the protection of the Narragansett Bay area against hurricane tidal flooding.

Calendar No. 1111, S. 2531, to authorize the conveyance of certain lands within Old Hickory lock and dam project, Tennessee, to Middle Tennessee Council, Boy Scouts.

Calendar No. 1112, S. 2535, to amend the Alaska Public Works Act to clarify the authority of the Secretary of the Interior to convey federally owned land utilized in the furnishing of public works.

Calendar No. 1113, S. 2676, authorizing the Secretary of the Army to make a survey of a water route from Albany, N. Y., to the St. Lawrence River.

Calendar No. 1114, Senate Joint Resolution 50, to provide for the relocation of the Ferry County, State of Washington, highway by the Department of the Interior.

Calendar No. 1116, H. R. 6363, to amend the act of May 24, 1928, providing for a bridge across Bear Creek, Lovel Point, Baltimore County, Md.

Calendar No. 1117, S. 2603, to amend the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, approved June 3, 1896."

Mr. President, we shall attempt to notify all interested Senators when the measures are to be taken up. I should like to have the RECORD show that the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Public Works, the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], is anxious to have the proposed legislation acted on. The bills were reported on August 22. Today is August 23. If possible, we will attempt to take action on all of them before the end of the day, if we are able to notify the interested Senators.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, in order to indicate that the Committee on Public Works is not politically partial, I wish, if it meets with the desires of the Senator from Texas, that Calendar No. 1109, S. 1587, in which the Senators from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL and Mr. KENNEDY] are interested, could be taken up at this time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I will say to the Senator from New Mexico, that the Senator from Texas has informed the minority leader and has informed the Senator from New Mexico, that he is anxious to take up the bill, which has been on the calendar less than 24 hours. He is attempting to reach both Senators from Massachusetts. I should not like to have the Senate consider it, until the Senators from Massachusetts have had an opportunity to be on the floor. I have asked that they be notified. We will proceed to the consideration of the bill if possible, but we are not going to do so until we have concluded the consideration of the appropriation bill.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I thank the Senator for his kindness and tolerance.

ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9379) making appropriations for the Atomic Energy Commission for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1958, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments of the Committee on Appropriations will be stated.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Operating Expenses", on page 2, at the beginning of line 8, to strike out "$22,500" and insert "$30,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 13, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$45,000,000" and insert "$46,100,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 16, after the word "vehicles", to strike out "$2,196,556,000" and insert "$2,215,470,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Plant Acquisition and Construction", on page 4, line 1, after the word "vehicles", to strike out "$103,162,500" and insert "$108,162,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and third reading of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] is present. I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MORTON in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask that the Senator from Arizona be recognized.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, this bill, H. R. 9379, is a separate bill to provide appropriations for the Atomic Energy Commission for 1958, and is the last of the regular appropriation bills. Normally, these appropriation items would be included in the public works appropriation bill; but they were omitted from that bill, awaiting approval of the authorizations for the construction projects.

Estimates for the operating expenses were included in the original budget submission, in the amount of $2.377 million; and estimates for the projects in plant acquisition and construction, based upon the authorizations in Public Law 85-162, are contained in House Document No. 229, in the amount of $114,625,000.

The amount of the bill as reported to the Senate is $2,323,632,500, which is an increase over the House bill of $23,914,000, and a reduction under the estimates of $167,992,500.

The restorations involved in the Senate committee amendments are fully stated in the report.

The programs of the Atomic Energy Commission necessarily are quite complicated; but in the consideration of their estimates, our committee has been exceedingly fortunate to have had the advice and counsel of Senators with experience in regard to these programs, through their service on the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I can testify to the meticulous attention the bill received in the subcommittee and in the full Appropriations Committee. Every item certainly was gone over thoroughly, and I was not a little astonished to see how carefully and in what great detail the members of the Joint Committee, as well as the members of the Appropriations Committee, examined every item included in the bill as it was received from the House of Representatives.

Mr. President, I hope the bill will be passed.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I should like to address some questions about the bill to the distinguished vice chairman of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy [Mr. ANDERSON].

Of course, I attended the Appropriations Committee session at which the bill was marked up, and I know that several matters with which I was deeply concerned were completely straightened out in the committee. That was largely due to the helpfulness of the distinguished Senator from New Mexico [Mr. ANDERSON].

Mr. President, as a preface to the questions I am about to address to the distinguished Senator from New Mexico, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD an excerpt from the hearings, beginning with the headline "Florida Proposal," on page 20, and ending just before the last paragraph on page 21.

There being no objection, the excerpt from the hearings was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FLORIDA PROPOSAL

Senator ANDERSON. What is the status of the Florida proposal?

Mr. FIELDS. We have had several conferences with them, but we have not as yet accepted a proposal. We have approved a proposal with the Northern States.

Senator ANDERSON. Did the Northern States start ahead of the Florida group?

Mr. FIELDS. I am not sure whether they started about the same time or not.

Senator ANDERSON. The Florida group was ahead of you in starting negotiations, were they not?

Mr. STRAUSS. Perhaps Dr. Davis could speak to that.

Dr. DAVIS. They submitted a proposal a day or two earlier.

Senator ANDERSON. They cannot get it cleared but the Northern States can. What are the difficulties?

Dr. DAVIS. The Florida proposal is still under discussion; whereas in the case of Northern States, all of the difficulties were cleared up rapidly and the Commission was able to readily approve their proposal as a basis for contract negotiation.

Senator ANDERSON. Could you give us a sample?

Dr. DAVIS. There are questions about who will pay for the research and development if it exceeds the figure that was stated, for example.

Senator ANDERSON. Do you require of the Florida group the same provision you allowed the Northern States to have?

Dr. DAVIS. We would intend to require that they specify a fixed amount for the research and development. This was one of the points we were discussing.

Senator ANDERSON. Are they having comparable treatment or did Northern States get through pretty rapidly and Florida have difficulty?

Dr. DAVIS. Certainly they are not getting the same treatment.

Senator ANDERSON. What has caused the difference in speed?

Mr. FIELDS. Their proposals are different and there are additional conditions we are discussing with the Florida group, such as whether it is an open-ended proposal or not, and the question of whether they can terminate under certain conditions or not. This is why we are having additional conferences with them, sir.

Senator ANDERSON. I hope this $30 million will be restored. The importance of getting on with these various rounds of reactor development programs is tremendous and it would be too bad if the Commission, having gone to the work that it has already gone to in connection with the third round, would now find it is without funds. I think that both proposals are extremely desirable. I think we would accomplish a great deal of good.

As far as I am concerned, I am sure the $30 million would be restored.

Senator ELLENDER. Are they putting up the same kinds of reactors?

Mr. FIELDS. No; they are different types.

Senator ELLENDER. In one case the Government puts up $16 million, and the Florida group puts up $40 million; and in the case of the northern group, the Government puts up $6 million, and the northern group puts up $22 million.

Mr. STRAUSS. The difference is not only in the size of the reactors, Mr. Chairman, but in the fact that they operate on entirely different principles, and the amount of research and development to be done in one case is estimated to be greater than it was in the other.

Senator ELLENDER. Which is greater?

Mr. STRAUSS. The Florida group.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, first, I wish to express my very grateful appreciation to the Senator from New Mexico for the fact that in the hearings, to which most Senators did not have access, the distinguished Senator went to bat very clearly and very effectively in favor of equal treatment to the so-called Florida group, which is a group of public-utility companies of my State. First, I wish to thank him for the effective way in which he insisted upon equal treatment for that group, along with all others.

Mr. ANDERSON. I thank the distinguished Senator from Florida.

Mr. HOLLAND. Next, I wish to ask the Senator from New Mexico if it is correct, as I understand it to be, that the appropriation item which had been omitted in the House of Representatives, I refer to the appropriation for the Florida group and for another group, both being involved in the construction of a somewhat similar type of private-enterprise program, is now included in the bill upon which the Senate is acting.

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes; it is.

I wish to say to the Senator from Florida that the Senate Appropriations Committee put in the bill an item of $30 million for the so-called third round, which is at the present time primarily for the Northern States group and the Florida group. Other groups may come in at a subsequent time. These will be public-utility companies—or private-utility companies, if one prefers that term—and the Atomic Energy Commission is proceeding with plans to help them in the development of nuclear power.

The $30 million which was deleted by the House committee was restored by the Senate committee, properly so, I thought; and I thought the Senate Appropriations Committee did a fine job in that respect.

Mr. HOLLAND. Would the distinguished Senator from New Mexico mind stating for the RECORD the amount, within the $30 million, that is provided for the Florida group for this year?

Mr. ANDERSON. It will be approximately $16.5 million. Approximately $9,500,000 will be for cash contributions to research, and subsequently there will be a waiver of use charges amounting to approximately $7,500,000.

The amount for the Northern States group is approximately $6 million in funds, and $1 million in waiver of charges.

I recognize that those do not total $30 million. It is hoped that other companies will make application, and I am quite sure they will; and this money will be available to them.

Mr. HOLLAND. I certainly join the distinguished Senator from New Mexico in hoping that other companies will be interested in contributing their funds and experience and skill to this enterprise.

Mr. ANDERSON. The $30 million was left out of the bill as reported to the House. It was subsequently included by the House, by means of a floor amendment. But the language adopted by the House was perhaps a little indefinite in meaning; and, therefore, the Senate committee clearly established that these two groups and such other groups as might come in were to be included in it.

But the only two groups specifically mentioned were the Florida group and the Northern States group; and the amounts for them total approximately $15 million in cash, leaving a substantial amount for other applicants.

Mr. HOLLAND. And the amount for those two groups for this year is included in the bill as passed by the other body and in the bill as it is now being considered by the Senate; is that correct?

Mr. ANDERSON. The Senator from Florida is correct.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, at this point will the Senator from Florida yield to me?

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, first I wish to ask one more question.

I note what appears to be a mistake in the printing of the excerpt of the hearings which I have requested to have printed in the RECORD. In order that the excerpt may be correctly printed in the RECORD, I wish to ask the distinguished Senator from New Mexico whether it is true that the so-called Northern States group would put up $22 million and the Government would put up $6 million; and the so-called Florida group would put up $40 million, and the Government would put up $16 million, instead of vice versa, as shown in the portion of the hearings which I have pointed out to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes; the Senator from Florida is completely correct. In the hearing room at that time there was a considerable amount of conversation, and apparently the reporter did not correctly understand the distinction.

The Senator from Florida has correctly stated the matter. It is a fact that the Florida group puts up $40 million and receives approximately $16 million, of which approximately $9,500,000 will be cash.

And the Northern States group, which is in the State represented very ably by the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE], will be putting up approximately $22 million, and will be receiving approximately $6 million in connection with the research.

Let me say that the difference between the amounts is in some degree attributable to the difference in the type of research and development and operations. The Northern States group will base its operations on a reactor which already is quite well proven, whereas the Florida group will be working with a new type of natural uranium reactor on which there will need to be quite a considerable amount of new research.

Mr. HOLLAND. I am very grateful to the Senator from New Mexico, and I wish to say that there is no competition or anything of the sort between the Florida group and the Northern States group, the latter being represented here by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE]. We wish them well, as I know they will wish our group well; and we hope that both groups will move forward in making a material contribution to the welfare of the Nation, as private enterprise is given an opportunity to cooperate in connection with the solving of this problem.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, much of the information I wished to have placed in the RECORD has now been covered by the colloquy between the distinguished Senator from Florida and the distinguished Senator from New Mexico. After the colloquy commenced, I was anxious to make certain that there was no question about the funds for either the Northern States group or the Florida group, for the reason that both of them are engaging in research work which is highly scientific in nature; and that is what I desire. We are endeavoring to get the research under way, so we shall know how to use atomic energy within the commercial field.

The two Senators have very ably covered the point. At the outset, I wished to obtain that expression, because I was not certain that the point would be covered, when I first sought recognition.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, the able Senator from Minnesota attended the entire session; and he was very helpful to all of us, by his presence there.

Let me say that the amounts of money to which he has referred is included. It is not specifically earmarked for either of these two projects. But I have complete confidence that the Atomic Energy Commission will handle it in the fashion which has been indicated here today, and will proceed rapidly with its contract with the Northern States power group and also with its contract with the Florida group.

Mr. THYE. If the Senator will yield further, I should like to ask him, because of his senior position on the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, if there is sufficient money provided in the appropriation to carry through the Elk River project.

Mr. ANDERSON. There is.

Mr. THYE. That is another research project in which we are interested.

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes, and I know it is the desire of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy that that particular project shall be pushed as rapidly as possible. I will say to the Senator from Minnesota that in the final meeting of the Joint Committee I proposed that the Nebraska project and the Elk River project be treated in such a way that they might be quickly completed. Since that time I am glad to say I have been led to believe that the Minnesota project will benefit from provisions with reference to operations. There is no reason why the project should not proceed rapidly. After meeting with the Atomic Energy Commission, I understand work on the Elk River project will proceed expeditiously. I said earlier that there might be difficulty with the Wolverine project because the bid was not firm. I do not think that is the case at all with respect to the Elk River project.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yield?

Mr. THYE. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. In connection with the Elk River REA, which we discussed several days ago, has that matter been satisfactorily settled?

Mr. THYE. Yes; because when the Atomic Energy Commission members were before the committee, including Admiral Strauss, Mr. Fields, Mr. Davis, and other administrative officers, that question was discussed at length. Information regarding that will be found in many questions and answers participated in by the various officials of the Atomic Energy Commission, which appear in the report on the Senator's desk. So far as the contract itself between Elk River and the manufacturers is concerned, I am satisfied that there is nothing in the way of the Elk River Cooperative's proceeding other than what might be involved in an increasing cost. Even that should not be a factor, because I understand the contract was agreed to in the winter.

Mr. LANGER. How many million dollars does it involve?

Mr. THYE. I would not be able to answer the question as to the amount involved as well as would the distinguished Senator from New Mexico, because of his senior position on the Joint Committee.

Mr. ANDERSON. If the Senator from Minnesota will permit me, I will say to the Senator from North Dakota that about $98 million is involved in the five projects with the cooperatives and publicly owned organizations, including the Nebraska organization.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yield?

Mr. THYE. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. MUNDT. I should like to address an inquiry to the Senator from New Mexico. A few moments ago the Senator stated that neither the Northern States atomic energy group nor the atomic power group in Florida was mentioned specifically in the bill. That is correct, but they are mentioned specifically in the report. I rise for the purpose of having the Senator from New Mexico affirm, as I know he will, that during our consideration in the Senate Committee on Appropriations of the question of restoring the amounts both of those groups were frequently mentioned in the colloquy leading to the amendment which was finally adopted.

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes; and I wish to say to the Senator from South Dakota that he was most helpful. Both items were discussed, and I am sure it was the clear understanding, in the hearing with the Atomic Energy Commission, in the actions of the committee in executive session, and now as the bill is brought to the floor, that those items would be included. There is provided for the Northern States project about $6 million for research, and about $16 million for the Florida group, of which about $9½ million is to be immediately available in cash. So there is plenty of money available for those two projects. I regard the legislative history to be such that they are clearly approved as though mentioned in the bill, but additional money is to be available for additional projects as the Atomic Energy Commission develops them.

Mr. MUNDT. I wanted the RECORD to be abundantly clear in that regard.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. President, first I should like to express appreciation to the chairman and to the members of the Appropriations Committee for the effective way in which they have implemented the atomic energy authorization bill which was passed by Congress. One of the important items in the appropriation bill before the Senate is the $2 million figure for special nuclear materials to be used for the development, design, and engineering for a single or dual purpose reactor.

Because it is important to have the complete legislative history of that project, I should like to read into the RECORD a telegram sent to the Chairman of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy by Mr. F. K. McCune, vice president in charge of atomic equipment for the General Electric Co. The message reads as follows:

> SAN JOSE, CALIF.
>
> Representative CARL DURHAM,
> Chairman, Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, New House Office Building, Washington, D. C.:
>
> In response to your telegraphic request for my opinion, believe my testimony previously given on role of dual-purpose reactor still stands. Particularly that in response to question by Senator ANDERSON last year. In 1953 we believed it was then shortest road to substantial power production. Now I believe that if more plutonium is needed over the foreseeable future, lowest capital cost will come from a single purpose production reactor but greatest overall economy will come from a dual-purpose reactor.
>
> F. K. MCCUNE,
> Vice President, General Electric Co.

The importance of this telegram is that the General Electric Co. has been doing the design, development, and construction work for the Atomic Energy Commission in connection with production reactors at their Hanford atomic energy works at Richland, Wash.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill (H. R. 9379) was passed.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Bartlett, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 1392. An act for the relief of Karl L. Larson;

H. R. 1488. An act for the relief of Paul Bernstein;

H. R. 1495. An act for the relief of Alfred Hanzal;

H. R. 1633. An act for the relief of Jane Froman and Gypsy Markoff;

H. R. 1602. An act for the relief of Mrs. Margot M. Draughon;

H. R. 1803. An act for the relief of Mrs. Boyd Dinehart and Richard Reams;

H. R. 1829. An act for the relief of the estate of Mrs. Frank C. Gregg;

H. R. 1857. An act for the relief of John C. Matlon;

H. R. 2705. An act for the relief of William F. Kempe;

H. R. 3567. An act for the relief of John R. Cook;

HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION REFERRED

The concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 17) authorizing the printing of additional copies of House Document No. 232, 84th Congress, was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

REPORT OF PRESIDENT'S COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION BEYOND THE HIGH SCHOOL

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, the President's Committee on Education Beyond the High School, a group of outstanding citizens from all over the Nation, including some of our top educators, deserve high praise for their excellent and useful report.

It is interesting to note that the findings and recommendations of this committee are consistent with those made by every other objective study group in the Nation's educational structure. When the White House conference group reached similar conclusions a little more than a year ago regarding our educational needs, it was my earnest hope that the urgent nature of the needs would be met by appropriate Congressional action. I think it most regrettable that such action has not been taken.

As a matter of fact, the Congress has exhibited a massive indifference to these needs to date. It is most unfortunate that the present session will close with not even a feeble start toward a solution.

The Committee's report is an objective and thorough analysis of the educational needs of our Nation, particularly as they relate to college education. Its underlying emphasis is on the immediate need of Federal assistance. I suggest to my colleagues that if any further proof were needed that something must be done right away, or any guidance needed about how it should be done, both could be found in this report of the President's Committee on Education Beyond the High School.

Mr. President, in 10 years the educational problem will very nearly have developed to a point beyond our control. A tidal wave of young people, searching for educational opportunities, is practically on us. Our industry, our national security, our defenses, are crying for skilled manpower. Our educational system is being forced to spread itself so thin that all really effective education runs the danger of being weakened. We cannot, with good conscience, neglect this deteriorating situation. A sound educational system is the basis of real democracy; it is essential to the health and vitality of our economic and social system—an economic and social system that is based upon freedom of choice. When freedom of choice is the guiding principle, it is of the utmost importance that those who make the choices be given the opportunity of the best in education our society can afford.

I hope that this report will give impetus to legislative proposals designed to meet this educational crisis. I should like to draw attention, for example, to certain bills which I introduced in the opening days of the session, which would carry out specific recommendations of the Committee.

I digress to say that many Senators and Members of the other House have introduced bills relating to the Nation's educational needs. The most important thing we can do is to process those bills, refine them, bring them to the point of legislative action, and then take action before our time runs out.

Judged as "the most crucial education problem" by the committee is the preparation of qualified teachers. I have offered a simple and practical means of easing the desperate teacher shortage. In two of the bills I have sponsored, S. 869 and S. 872, loan writeoff provisions are included to encourage graduate students to enter the teaching field. Each year of teaching would serve as repayment for 1 year of academic assistance. Numerous other efforts to augment teacher preparation must be considered, of course, but a good incentive program would certainly be one of the initial steps.

I have heard many of my colleagues talk about the need of qualified people in our armed services. I concur in that sentiment. I have read with considerable interest press reports relating to the study made by Mr. Cordiner with respect to our military manpower. I have heard many Members of the Senate and many prominent lay leaders cite the importance of adequately trained professional people in medicine and science. I suggest that the greatest shortage, the most serious shortage in America, is the shortage of qualified, trained teachers for the young men and women of the families of America.

Unless something is done to alleviate the teacher shortage, the parents of America can make up their minds that their children are to receive a second-grade, second-class education. A college or a school is no better than the teacher who presides or offers instruction.

I pay tribute to the teachers in American education who have carried an almost unbearable burden in recent years. First of all, many of them have been grossly underpaid. Many of them have been called upon to perform civic duties far beyond what is required in their teaching contracts. All the teachers in practically every school of America have been called upon to teach many more students than a sensible and effective teaching program would require.

The teachers of America are the great unheralded heroes of America's free institutions, and they are worthy of much more consideration, both in terms of monetary reward, prestige, and community honor than they have received to date.

Therefore, I urge upon my colleagues, as the 85th Congress goes into its second session next January, that they place high on the list of must legislation all those proposals which have been introduced by many Members of the Senate and Members of the other body relating to education. Unless we meet this educational crisis between now and 1960, the entire educational system of the United States, both in public and private schools, will be threatened with disaster and collapse.

I sound this warning as one who has long been interested in education, and as a former teacher. Every responsible group in America which has studied the educational needs of the Nation is saying to the Congress, to State legislatures, to school boards, saying to the generous philanthropists who contribute to private schools, and saying to our churches, that unless we do something to expand the educational facilities, in terms of physical plant, and unless we do something to recruit more teachers who are qualified, trained, and dedicated to the ethics of the teaching profession, the system of education, as we have known it since the birth of the Republic, is headed for serious trouble and impairment.

I am happy to have this opportunity to sound the appeal for the protection and enhancement of the American educational system.

As I have said, the President's committee regards the preparation of qualified teachers as the most crucial education program. I hope we shall keep that premise in our minds.

The committee further recommends student assistance through loans, scholarships, and tax deductions for tuition payments. Again I have suggested aids which are embodied in titles II—scholarships; III—loans, and V—income-tax credit, of my omnibus youth-opportunity bill, S. 872.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record at this point as a part of my remarks an analysis of the youth-opportunity programs.

There being no objection, the analysis was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Senator Humphrey Introduces Comprehensive Youth-Opportunity Program

Congress was called upon by Senator Hubert H. Humphrey, Democrat, of Minnesota, today to enact a comprehensive youth-opportunity program.

Senator Humphrey introduced three measures in the Senate which he declared were designed to enable our young people to get the start they are entitled to, and need, to make their maximum contribution to a better world of the future.

They included:

1. Student-Aid Act of 1957: Providing scholarships for gifted high-school students unable to attend college because of lack of funds, offer grants to institutions of higher learning accepting such scholarship students to enable them to expand facilities, and providing tax credits to encourage parents to send young people to college, establishing a long-term, low-interest student-loan program to be repaid only after students graduate from college and enter higher earning brackets.

2. Youth Conservation Act of 1957: A two-part bill establishing a pilot program for providing summer or yearlong work opportunities to teen-agers in national parks and forests, and providing grants to States to establish and strengthen programs for control and treatment of juvenile delinquency.

3. School-Construction Act of 1957: Authorizing Federal payments to States to assist in constructing more schools, distributed according to the number of persons 5 to 17 years of age in each State with requirement for State and local matching funds.

"Linked with increased emphasis on other already existing programs for youth, such as vocational education, the school-lunch and milk programs, and public-health care and research, these new measures offer a comprehensive program of preparing American youth for becoming more useful and healthful citizens, with emphasis on the positive, preventive side of eliminating juvenile delinquency rather than just on the more negative, corrective side of coping with the small minority of problem children who are unfortunate byproducts of society's neglect," Senator Humphrey explained.

"Surely, the National Government—which requires so much of our young people in time of national stress—has a distinct responsibility to these young people to help provide them with the opportunities they deserve to better prepare themselves for life in the modern world.

"In a nation as rich as ours, there is no excuse for a situation in which every year 150,000 scholastically topflight youngsters cannot go on to college. It is in the Nation's interest, not only the individual's, to educate these young men and women so they can contribute to the best of their capabilities to our society."

Youth Opportunity Program Sponsored by Senator Hubert H. Humphrey, Democrat, of Minnesota

1. Student Aid Act of 1957:

(a) Federal scholarships of $1,000 a year, administered through State educational authorities by United States Commissioner of Education with advice of a National Council on Student Aid, to minimum of 40,000 needy students annually from top echelons of high school graduating classes.

(b) Grants of not more than $500 per scholarship student to participating colleges and universities to aid in expanding facilities and meet costs of educational services beyond portion covered by tuition fees.

(c) Long-term, low-interest loan program for college students, authorizing insuring up to $25 million in loans each year with maximum of $1,000 to any one student in any academic year and $4,000 total maximum outstanding loan to any one student. Repayment would not begin until 4 years after completion of full-time education, with up to 6 years allowed to repay the loan. Interest fixed at not more than 1 percent above the rate of average Treasury obligations. Special feature would be loan writeoff incentive to encourage graduates to enter the teaching profession, with a specified amount of the college loan to be "forgiven" for each year of teaching.

(d) Income-tax credit for tuition or fees, permitting any individual to charge off 30 percent of the cost of tuition and fees paid for education of himself or any other individual, against his net income tax, such credit not to exceed $450 in any taxable year.

2. Youth Conservation Act of 1957:

(a) Establishing a Youth Conservation Corps Commission made up of Director of National Park Service, Chief of United States Forest Service, Administrator of Soil Conservation Service, and an Assistant Secretary of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, with the latter as Chairman.

(b) Commission to make a survey of the current use and adaptability of our natural resources program in federally owned lands with a view to the training and utilization on a continuing basis of a corps of young men performing healthful outdoor work in conservation projects such as forest stand improvement measures, forest insect and disease control, park construction and improvements, wildlife cover improvement, public recreational facilities construction and improvement, and other related occupations in the public interest; and formulating, designing and operating a number of pilot Youth Conservation Corps projects employing a maximum of 500 boys of good character between 16 and 19 in groups of no more than 50, organized in camps or on an individual basis, as models for later expansion into a continuing program. Compensation to be on the basis of no less than $75 per month plus room and board during either summer periods or year-around enrollment.

(c) Commission to submit recommendations to Congress on January 1, 1959, based on survey and experience with pilot projects, including suggestions for cooperation with State agencies for State land projects if deemed feasible, and also including suggestions as to the advisability of linking this program to conservation training in general and recruitment for Federal conservation services in particular. Provides $1 million appropriation to Department of Health, Education, and Welfare for purposes of act during 1958.

(d) Providing grant to States to establish and strengthen programs for control and treatment of juvenile delinquency, beginning with a $5 million total for fiscal 1958 and rising to $10 million annually by fiscal 1960, allotted to States on the basis of number of children, with a minimum allotment of $50,000 annually. Another $5 million set aside for grants to States and colleges and universities for training personnel for juvenile delinquency programs, and $1 million authorized for research grants for developing and demonstrating new techniques in the control of delinquency.

3. School Construction Act of 1957:

Authorizing Federal financial assistance to build schools, but leaving responsibility for actual construction with State and local school authorities acquainted with local needs. Requires State plans to be approved by United States Commissioner of Education to insure Federal funds will go where most needed in each State. Funds to be distributed to States according to number of persons 5 to 17 years of age in each State. States and local school districts would be required to match Federal funds. Open authorization, with annual amount to be determined by Congress.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I have recommended: First. A Federal scholarship program of $1,000 per year grants, administered through State educational authorities by the United States Commissioner of Education with the advice of a National Council of Student Aid to a minimum of 40,000 able and needy high school graduating students annually;

Second. A long-term, low-interest loan program authorizing the insuring of up to $2,500 in loans each year for 4 years;

Third. An income tax credit for tuition and fees, permitting any individual to charge off 30 percent of tuition and fees paid for education of himself or any other individual against his net income tax, not exceeding $450 in any taxable year.

A partial solution to the committee's recommended expansion and diversity of educational opportunities is suggested in the title IV provisions of S. 872, providing grants of not more than $500 per scholarship student to participating colleges and universities to aid in expanding facilities and in meeting cost of educational services beyond the portion covered by tuition fees.

The report to which I have alluded places great emphasis on the scientific manpower shortage and its present particular relation with our national security. Since October of 1955, when I urged the President to establish a Presidential commission to study this critical problem, I have been deeply concerned about the availability of scientists and engineers. It was gratifying that such a commission was appointed 6 months later. During that time, I also carried out my own study and had a special report prepared by the Legislative Reference Service of the Library of Congress. I hope that the recommendations in that report and in the special committee's report will emerge in legislative form. I have also urged the President to call an international conference on scientists and educators to consider ways in which the nations of the free world may educate scientists and engineers to the benefit of all.

I am very favorably impressed with some of the other committee recommendations, particularly for slum clearance land use for educational institutions and low-interest college housing loan programs.

These proposals, and new ones, must be considered priority legislation in the forthcoming session, or we will have permitted the oncoming wave of students to overwhelm us before we find solutions.

Mr. President, I call on my colleagues on both sides of the Chamber to join in a concerted effort to face up to the hard realities of the educational problem and to enact intelligent, effective legislation in the field in the 85th Congress.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks two editorials referring to these serious problems of education, one from the Washington Post and Times Herald of August 19, entitled "Growing Education Dilemma," and the other, entitled "Not Only Specialists," from the Minneapolis Tribune of August 19.

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post of August 19, 1957]

GROWING EDUCATION DILEMMA

Whatever complacency still exists in regard to higher education in the United States ought to be shattered by the report of the President's Committee on Education Beyond the High School. The gist of this group's findings is that we are in an "explosive" period—populationwise and in the expansion of knowledge—and that the resources to meet the new demands for education are not at hand.

The magnitude of the problem can be viewed from several different angles. The Committee estimates that the number of students who will be knocking on the doors of colleges and universities in 1970 will be double that of today. Obviously a 3 million increase in students cannot be absorbed in existing institutions.

Most critical of all the deficiencies is the shortage of qualified teachers. Theoretically the number of colleage teachers available could be doubled in the next 10 to 15 years, but this would require a strong attraction to education as a profession. Yet there is no such incentive. The committee finds that faculty salaries must be increased by 75 to 80 percent to make them even competitive with other positions in the professional labor market.

The committee offers numerous suggestions to ease the burden of keeping a vastly increased portion of the population in college. It would give larger tax deductions to parents, students, and others who are paying educational expenses. It would expand public and private credit available to students. It recommends that Congress revise tax laws to encourage larger contributions to education; that college housing loans and other educational programs be continued and that some grants in aid to the States be provided on a matching basis. Unhappily the committee has not specifically indicated how the required threefold increase in college funds can be realized.

Probably its greatest contribution lies in the heightened awareness of the problem it has given. In this connection it severely criticizes the Government for the inadequacy of reports on the status of education. Far more information is offered on the price of potatoes, the number of hogs slaughtered and the status of bank loans than on the education of 40 million young people.

[From the Minneapolis Tribune of August 19, 1957]

NOT ONLY SPECIALISTS

There was a time, not very many years ago, when the college graduate who had majored in the liberal arts had a little difficulty selling his ability to employers whose business was of some technical nature. A general education, with emphasis on such subjects as history, economics, art and philosophy, was often considered not very practical by an industrialist looking for engineers and technicians.

But attitudes are changing. Leading universities and engineering schools have broadened programs so that the student mainly interested in a technical field also has enough courses in quite different fields to know much more about the world when he graduates.

And some leading corporation employers are now saying that the main preparation for a responsible job is mental discipline—learning how to learn and how to think—and the type of information acquired in college is secondary.

Yale university, in a recent study, asked a group of corporation heads their opinion on the question of general, rather than specialized training. One responded that the man who understands history and literature has the kind of mind to cope with the complexities of business. Another said that although technical knowledge might be the best tool in the first few years of a career, later on the broader approach would be needed for advancement. A third said the chief requisite for an administrative job was simply mental ability.

The country needs experts of all kinds, of course. It needs well-trained scientists and engineers and doctors and teachers. But any college student aiming at real accomplishment will gain immeasurably by the perspective and experience of education that reaches beyond the specialty.

Mr. HUMPHREY. The editorial from the Minneapolis Tribune concludes:

> The country needs experts of all kinds, of course. It needs well trained scientists and engineers and doctors and teachers. But any college student aiming at real accomplishment will gain immeasurably by the perspective and experience of education that reaches beyond the specialty.

I also ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks a newspaper article entitled "Report Asks More Aid to Education," written by Jeanne Rogers and published in the Washington Post of August 11, 1957.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REPORT ASKS MORE AID TO EDUCATION

(By Jeanne Rogers)

A blue-ribbon citizens committee told President Eisenhower yesterday that the Federal Government must play a bigger role in underwriting the costs of college education.

The President's Committee on Education Beyond the High School submitted its final report and made 47 recommendations on the crises facing colleges and universities.

One recommendation was to give parents of college students an income tax credit. The tax benefit would be slanted toward those least able to pay college expenses.

The Committee also proposed a work-study program similar to the National Youth Administration of the 1930's. Under this plan the Federal Government would subsidize work projects for college students.

WOULD BENEFIT 25,000

The Committee said such a program would enable "25,000 to 30,000 notably able and needy students to go to college every year."

Devereux C. Josephs, chairman of the board of New York Life Insurance Co., headed the Advisory Committee. He told a news conference that the self-help idea was backed by the Committee as more efficient even though most national educational groups put their support behind Federal scholarships.

The Committee asked for more borrowing. It pointed out that although young people can borrow funds for an automobile, credit is not by any means as readily available or as widely sought for their education.

America's most "crucial educational problem, the Committee said, is getting enough qualified teachers to meet the tripled load of college entrants a decade from now.

Salaries must be raised to solve the teacher shortage created by burgeoning birthrate and the increasing demand for education, the Committee wrote. It recommended that teacher wages be doubled in the next 5 to 10 years.

The Committee has worked for 15 months, its 35 members always promoting State conclaves to deal with problems of higher education.

MOUNTING COST CITED

Cost of the college program of tomorrow, which would accommodate about 6 million young people, will treble the present cost of higher education.

Conservatively, this would cost the taxpayer nearly $9 billion a year.

The expansion of American educational institutions, the Committee said, is "an enormous opportunity and challenge * * * and our institutions, despite their remarkable achievements in the past, are in no shape today to meet the challenge."

Stressing the importance of gaining leaders in science and engineering, the Committee pointed to the challenege of the dramatic strides being taken by Russia in post-high education.

"World peace and the survival of mankind may well depend on the way in which we educate the citizens and leaders of tomorrow," the Committee said.

The Committee endorsed the idea of 2-year community or junior colleges as the preferable form of new institutions to handle the influx of students.

It warned that "new community colleges should not be viewed as a panacea for relieving pressures upon 4-year institutions." One reason cited was "they would drain" teachers from regular 4-year schools.

FACTS ARE LACKING

The problems of higher education, Josephs said, are "local * * * with a national importance."

His Committee pointed out that this country is "sadly lacking" in facts about education. It didn't exactly blame the United States Office of Education—but said this agency simply wasn't informing the public properly about the educational need of America.

"There must be more fact-gathering by the Department on current trends and future needs in education," the Committee said.

The Committee said the Federal Government could help education by—

Continuing the low interest college housing loan program for facilities like dormitories and dining halls.

Freeing of slum clearance land for educational institutions.

Setting up a new grant-in-aid program to nonincome facilities such as laboratories.

Paying in full the cost of research programs undertaken for the Government by the colleges and universities.

Said the Committee, should the Government undertake any direct financial aid to colleges, it "should studiously avoid programs and policies which carry the threat either of control or of other adverse effects upon the educational institutions."

Mr. HUMPHREY. The Committee proposes a work-study program, similar to that of the National Youth Administration of the 1930's. Under this plan the Federal Government would subsidize work projects for college students. The Committee states that such a program would enable from twenty-five to thirty thousand high-school graduates annually to go on to college.

I suggest that the Congress of the United States would do well to reexamine the National Youth Administration program, bring it up to date in terms of modern educational needs and the requirements of our universities and colleges, and reenact it, or enact it with amendments which will make it fitting and proper in the light of our present situation.

I conclude with the hope that we will contribute more than mere words. I conclude with the hope that the people of the United States will hold Congress strictly accountable for what I consider to be its most obvious failure, the failure to do a single thing for young men and women, in terms of their educational and physical needs.

Congress can spend many billions of dollars for everything else, but it has not moved ahead a foot in terms of education. I suggest that instead of more Presidential Committee studies, the President should use the power of his office to mobilize support in the Congress and out of the Congress for an educational program which is long overdue.

SURVEY OF WATER ROUTE FROM ALBANY, N. Y., TO THE ST. LAWRENCE RIVER

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senator proceed to the consideration of Calendar 1113, S. 2676.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Morton in the chair). The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The Legislative Clerk. A bill (S. 2676) authorizing the Secretary of the Army to make a survey of a water route from Albany, N. Y., to the St. Lawrence River.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, the bill has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Public Works. The purpose of the bill is to authorize the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, under the direction of the Secretary of the Army, to make a survey of a water route from Albany, N. Y., into Lake Champlain, N. Y., and Vermont, with due consideration of ultimate connection with the St. Lawrence River in Canada.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate and is open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed as follows:

Be it enacted etc., That the Secretary of the Army is hereby authorized and directed to cause a survey to be made, under the direction of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, of a water route from Albany, N. Y., into Lake Champlain, N. Y. and Vermont, including the advisability of modifying existing Federal and State improvements, with due consideration of ultimate connection with the Saint Lawrence River in Canada.

Sec. 2. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

CONSTRUCTION OF PROTECTIVE MEASURES IN NEW BEDFORD AND FAIRHAVEN, MASS.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of S. 1587.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The Legislative Clerk. A bill (S. 1587) authorizing the construction of protective measures in the cities of New Bedford and Fairhaven, Mass.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Works with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the word "the", to strike out "division engineer, New England Division, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, in his report dated February 8, 1957, as such may be modified by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors and the Chief of Engineers" and insert "Chief of Engineers in Senate Document No. 59, 85th Congress," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the project for hurricane tidal flood protection for New Bedford, Fairhaven, and Acushnet, Mass., is hereby authorized substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers in Senate Document Numbered 59, 85th Congress, at an estimated cost of $15,490,000: Provided, That this authorization shall expire five years from the date on which local interests are notified by the Department of the Army of the requirements of local cooperation, unless said interests shall within said time furnish assurances satisfactory to the Secretary of the Army that the required cooperation will be furnished.

Sec. 2. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, Senate bill 1587 was introduced by the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Saltonstall] and myself. It was reported unanimously by the Committee on Public Works. The proposed project will provide protection for the New Bedford-Fair Haven-Acushnet Harbor, which has been subjected to floods as a result of the 1954 hurricane. The proposal is to construct across the harbor, a breakwater, with an entrance at a cost of about $17 million, with an annual carrying charge of $691,000. The annual benefits would run to about $987,000.

The plan, as submitted by the United States Army, provides for adequate local contributions, and it seems to me that the costs to the United States are completely justifiable in terms of the economic benefits which will redound to the community and, indirectly, to the Nation as a whole.

The area has been subjected to periodic difficulties. It has fallen into the surplus economic list of the Secretary of Labor. The local people have made a determined effort to maintain industrial strength in that area and to increase employment. Hanging over them constantly has been the prospect of future hurricanes which, if they came again, as did the hurricane of 1954, might cause substantial industrial migration from the area and an increase in unemployment.

This project is of vital importance, and I am sure it will justify itself economically.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I am authorized to say for the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Saltonstall] that he is unavoidably absent from the Chamber, but that he concurs entirely with the views expressed and wishes to associate himself with the remarks of the junior Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes; this is a subject on which the senior Senator from Massachusetts has worked with me. He introduced the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RELOCATION OF HIGHWAY, FERRY COUNTY, WASH.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1114, Senate Joint Resolution 50.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be stated by title, for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 50) to provide for the relocation of the Ferry County, State of Washington, highway by the Department of the Interior.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Works with an amendment to strike out all after the resolving clause, and insert:

> That the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Commerce shall make an investigation and survey to determine which portions of the Ferry County Highway along Lake Franklin D. Roosevelt in Ferry County, Wash., which was relocated by the Federal Government in connection with the building of Grand Coulee Dam, require further relocation, the route over which such portions should be relocated, and the legal and equitable responsibility for relocating such portions. Such Secretaries shall make a report on such investigation and survey to the Congress at the earliest practicable date not later than one year after the date of enactment of this joint resolution.
>
> SEC. 2. (a) The investigation and survey authorized in this joint resolution shall be conditional upon Ferry County, State of Washington, paying 50 per centum of so much of the cost of conducting such investigation and survey as does not exceed $20,000.
>
> (b) The Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Commerce are authorized to receive funds required to be paid by Ferry County under the provisions of this section, and to expend such funds in carrying out the investigation and survey authorized in this joint resolution.
>
> SEC. 3. Nothing in this joint resolution shall be deemed to constitute a determination by the Congress with respect to the legal or equitable responsibility of the Federal Government or of Ferry County for the costs of relocating such portions of the Ferry County Highway along Lake Franklin D. Roosevelt as may be determined to require relocation.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. President, the joint resolution would authorize the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Commerce to make an investigation and survey with respect to the relocation of the Ferry County Highway in the State of Washington, and to report their findings and recommendations to the Congress not later than 1 year from the date of the enactment of the legislation.

A portion of the Ferry County Highway along Lake Roosevelt was relocated at Federal expense in connection with the construction of the Grand Coulee Dam. The purpose of the joint resolution is to make a study to determine which portions of the road should be further relocated. The joint resolution would authorize an expenditure not to exceed the sum of $20,000, one-half of which would be borne by Ferry County, Wash.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended, so as to read: "Joint resolution to provide for an investigation and survey with respect to the relocation of the Ferry County Highway along Lake Franklin D. Roosevelt in the State of Washington."

The preamble was stricken out.

AVAILABILITY TO PUBLIC OF FINANCIAL REPORTS FILED WITH SECRETARY OF LABOR UNDER NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS ACT

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1065, Senate Joint Resolution 94.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 94) directing that the financial reports and other information filed with the Secretary of Labor pursuant to subsections (f) and (g) of section 9 of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, be made available to the public.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, section 9 (f) and (g) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, requires that certain information relating to the financial statements and the constitutions and bylaws of labor organizations be filed with the Secretary of Labor and made available to the members of the labor organizations. As a result of the investigations of the McClellan committee, the Secretary of Labor has recommended that this information be also made available to the public and to Congress.

The Secretary of Labor, in a statement submitted to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, stated:

> I consider that the enactment of Senate Joint Resolution 94 would be in the interest of the public and of the members of labor organizations and I urge that it be given prompt and favorable consideration.

The joint resolution was introduced by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. McCLELLAN], cosponsored by all the members of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare. It was reported unanimously to the Senate by the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare. If passed, it would provide a substantial safeguard, although certainly not a sufficient one, by giving increased protection to the funds belonging to members of labor organizations.

It is my hope that during the next session of Congress more substantial safeguards will be provided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

> Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of Labor shall make available to the public, in accordance with such regulations as he may deem appropriate, the information filed by labor organizations pursuant to subsections (f) and (g) of section 9 of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended.

The preamble was agreed to.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF BIRMINGHAM, ALA.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1041, H. R. 4336.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 4336) for the relief of the First National Bank of Birmingham, Ala.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, the purpose of the proposed legislation is to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the sum of $6,021.15 to the First National Bank of Birmingham, Ala., in full settlement of all its claims against the United States for repayment of loans made by said bank to the Alabama Aero-Mechanic Institute, division of airplane engineers, in connection with the veterans' training program under the Veterans' Administration.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator speak louder and slower? I cannot hear what he is saying. I have no objection to the bill, but I was wondering whether the Senator could tell us briefly what is provided by the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. The bill would authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the sum of $6,021.15 to the First National Bank of Birmingham, Ala., in full settlement of all its claims against the United States for repayment of loans made by the bank to the Alabama Aero-Mechanic Institute, division of airplane engineers, in connection with the veterans' training program under the Veterans' Administration. The bill would authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to make full settlement of the claims involved.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The bill was twice considered by the Committee on the Judiciary. It has had a very thorough discussion in committee. There is no objection to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SPARKMAN subsequently said: Mr. President, a short time ago the Senate passed H. R. 4336. I had a statement prepared which I intended to make in connection with that bill. I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed at the point in the RECORD where that bill was considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR SPARKMAN

This bill would pay the First National Bank of Birmingham, Ala., the sum of $6,021.15 in full settlement of all claims against the United States for repayment of loans made by the bank to the Alabama Aero-Mechanic Institute in connection with the veterans' training program under the Veterans' Administration.

The claimant in this case loaned money to the school on security of the school's contracts with the Government and the school assigned to the bank the payments from the Government under the contracts with the Veterans' Administration. An audit of the school records in 1950 disclosed irregularities in billings to the Veterans' Administration. As a result of the audits, the Veterans' Administration found that 13 fraudulent vouchers were submitted by the school prior to March 26, 1950, which was the date on which the bank gave the notice of assignment to the Government pursuant to the Assignment of Claims Act. These 13 fraudulent vouchers aggregated $126.37, on which the Government had paid $74.02. Subsequently thereto, the claimant filed suit under the Tucker Act seeking to recover on unpaid "nonfraudulent" vouchers on which the contractor had rendered the services required. Actually, the fraudulent vouchers had not been handled through claimant's bank. The amount of these vouchers was $12,981.96. The claimant filed suit for $10,000, the jurisdictional limit of the Tucker Act. Thereafter, the Government claimed a setoff in the amount of $26,148.04, which is broken down to a $2,000 penalty for each of the 13 fraudulent vouchers, plus double the amount of actual damages ($74.02) sustained by the Government, which amounts to $26,000 in penalties and $148.04 in double damages. The court found in favor of the Government, stating, however, that it had reached this conclusion "reluctantly because of the apparently unrealistic result reached."

The Veterans' Administration and the Department of Justice are opposed to the enactment of this bill.

After careful consideration, the committee is of the opinion that inasmuch as the Government was only damaged to the extent of $74.02, inasmuch as the use of a setoff (in terms described by the court) was unrealistic in this particular case, and inasmuch as the claimant bank had acted in complete good faith, the claimant should be entitled to some relief. The House committee amended the bill as originally introduced by reducing the amount from $12,981.96, which the claimant had advanced, to one-half that amount, which is the amount of the bill. Since this is in the nature of a gratuity, the committee is constrained to follow the recommendations of the House. The committee does not feel that this bill constitutes a precedent which would tend to deny the Government the use of the setoff in the usual case, since this is a most unusual case. The committee feels that equity would be served by awarding the claimant half of the money it had advanced and, accordingly, recommends that this bill be favorably considered.

The customary attorney's fee has been retained, inasmuch as the committee has been informed that substantial legal services have been rendered in connection with the claim.

MRS. MATTIE JANE LAWSON

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of S. 1704.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 1704) for the relief of Mrs. Mattie Jane Lawson.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I understand that there is a similar House bill. It is H. R. 5851, which was messaged over from the House yesterday.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the House bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 5851) for the relief of Mrs. Mattie Jane Lawson, which was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, the bill is for the purpose of compensating Mrs. Mattie Jane Lawson, a lady of advanced age, for a very serious accident which occurred to her by reason of a United States mail truck running into her. The Post Office Department has reported it has no objection to the enactment of the proposed legislation. She suffered a very bad injury. The purpose of the bill is to compensate her for her injuries.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate and open to amendment.

If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, S. 1704 is indefinitely postponed.

LOAN SERVICE OF CAPTIONED FILMS FOR THE DEAF

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1081, S. 1889.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 1889) to provide in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare for a loan service of captioned films for the deaf.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. PURTELL. Mr. President, the bill would provide captioned films for use by State schools for the deaf, and other agencies which the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare may deem appropriate.

Educators and others have asked for this type of legislation, to provide films which will be captioned. It is surprising how greatly schools for the deaf rely on films for educational and cultural purposes. Those who are deaf or hard of hearing are deprived of many advantages available to hearing persons. The program would compensate in considerable measure for this lack. There are available today many educational films which are made accessible to schools and other organizations. Since these films are accompanied by a sound track, they are of little, if any, use in schools for the deaf and other such organizations. By captioning the films, they can become of inestimable value to the deaf, and especially to the deaf child by increasing his educational opportunities. Such films would aid also the hard of hearing throughout the country.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, the bill was unanimously reported by the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

Mr. PURTELL. The Senator is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the objectives of this Act are—

(1) to bring to deaf persons understanding and appreciation of those films which play such an important part in the general and cultural advancement of hearing persons;

(2) to provide, through these films, enriched educational and cultural experiences through which deaf persons can be brought into better touch with the realities of their environment; and

(3) to provide a wholesome and rewarding experience which deaf persons may share together.

SEC. 2. As used in this act—

(1) The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare.

(2) The term "United States" means the several States, Territories, insular possessions, and the District of Columbia.

(3) The term "deaf person" includes a person whose hearing is severely impaired.

SEC. 3. (a) In order to carry out the objectives of this Act, the Secretary shall establish a loan service of captioned films for the purpose of making such films available for nonprofit purposes to groups of deaf persons in the United States in accordance with regulations promulgated by the Secretary.

(b) In carrying out the provisions of this Act, the Secretary shall have authority to—

(1) Acquire films (or rights thereto) by purchase, lease, or gift.

(2) Provide for the captioning of films.

(3) Provide for distribution of captioned films through State schools for the deaf and such other agencies as the Secretary may deem appropriate to serve as local or regional centers for such distribution.

(4) Make use, consistent with the purposes of this Act, of films made available to the Library of Congress under the copyright laws.

(5) Utilize the facilities and services of other governmental agencies.

(6) Accept gifts, contributions, and voluntary and uncompensated services of individuals and organizations.

Sec. 4. (a) There is hereby established in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare an Advisory Council on Captioned Films consisting of 12 members to be appointed by the Secretary. At least 3 of the members shall be deaf persons and 3 of the members shall be representatives of the general public. The membership of the Advisory Council shall also include persons selected from the leading organizations of the deaf or working with the deaf, including professional workers with the deaf. The Secretary or a member designated by him shall act as Chairman of the Council.

(b) It shall be the duty of the Advisory Council to advise the Secretary on the establishment of broad criteria for selection of films to be captioned, and to recommend to the Secretary films which it believes would make the greatest contribution to the general, cultural, or recreational advancement of deaf persons.

(c) Members of the Advisory Council shall be paid compensation at the rate of $25 per diem while engaged in the work of the Council, and shall be reimbursed for traveling and other necessary expenses incurred while so engaged.

Sec. 5. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Bartlett, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. 1568) to direct the Secretary of the Interior to convey certain public lands in the State of Nevada to the Colorado River Commission of Nevada acting for the State of Nevada, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. Engle, Mr. Aspinall, Mrs. Pfost, Mr. Berry, and Mr. Hosmers were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message informed the Senate that in the consideration upon the bill (H. R. 9131) making supplement appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1958, and for other purposes, that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 6 and 54 to the bill, and concurred therein, each with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS, 1958—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. Morton in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate numbered 6 and 54 to the bill (H. R. 9131) making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1958, and for other purposes. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the report.

(For conference report, see House proceedings of August 23, 1957, p. 15816, Congressional Record).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The report was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its action on certain amendments of the Senate to House bill 9131, which was read as follows:

In the House of
Representatives, U. S.,
August 23,1957.

Resolved, That in the consideration upon the bill (H. R. 9131) entitled "An Act making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1958, and for other purposes," the House has taken the following action;

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken by said amendment, insert:

"CIVIL AERONAUTICS ADMINISTRATION

"Construction and development, additional Washington airport

"For necessary expenses for the construction and development of a public airport in the vicinity of the District of Columbia, as authorized by the Act of September 7, 1950 (64 Stat. 770), including acquisition of land, $12,500,000, to remain available until expended: Provided, That not to exceed a total of $250,000 may be advanced from this appropriation to the applicable appropriations of the Civil Aeronautics Administration for necessary administrative expenses: Provided further, That such sums as may be necessary but not to exceed $100,000 shall be transferred from this appropriation to the President for expenses necessary for the investigation of alternate sites for said airport: Provided further, That no funds shall be expended for construction and development of said airport until the President shall make a report to the Congress with a recommendation as to the site, said report to be submitted not later than January 15, 1958."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 54, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment, insert $425,000."

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House to amendments Nos. 6 and 54.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I should like to make a comment on the conference report, if I may. My comment relates wholly to amendment numbered 6, which deals with the appropriation for an additional airport in the vicinity of Washington, D. C.

This amendment appropriates the amount of $12,500,000, as originally proposed by the other body, and as originally disagreed to by the Senate.

Additional language which has been added provides for the transfer of $100,000 to the President for "expenses necessary for the investigation of alternate sites for said airport."

The investigation contemplated would be made under the direction of Lt. Gen. E. R. Quesada, United States Air Force, retired, the President's special assistant for aviation facilities planning. Language also included prohibits the expenditure of funds for construction and development of the said airport until the President shall make a report to the Congress, with a recommendation as to the site, the report to be submitted not later than January 15, 1958.

The amendment in effect incorporates in the bill the substance of the Senate Committee on Appropriations report, except that the study requested will be made by the President's special assistant for aviation facilities planning, rather than by the Airways Modernization Board, of which he is Chairman.

The investigation of the alternate sites is to be a thorough and complete study of the sites referred to in the course of the hearings on this matter. It would and should include Burke, Chantilly, Belmont Bay, Friendship, and Andrews Air Force Base. It is not intended to be by any means perfunctory, once-over again lightly, or a mere delaying tactic.

In the course of the investigation, full consideration is to be given to the part of section 2 of Public Law 762 of the 81st Congress, approved September 7, 1950, which states:

> Provided further, That the choice of the site * * * shall be made only after consultation with the local governing body of the county in which the airport is to be located, with respect to the suitability of the site to be selected, and its possible impact on the vicinity.

Full compliance with this should include, in addition to consultation with the local governing bodies, official attention to the views of nearby residents immediately affected by any proposed location.

In conclusion, there is to be emphasized and repeated again the expression of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, as contained on page 5 of Senate Report No. 980:

> The committee urges the Civil Aeronautics Board and the Civil Aeronautics Administration in considering how best to route air traffic safely and expeditiously in the metropolitan area of Washington to make the fullest possible use of the Friendship Airport, temporarily, and, if advisable after experience, permanently.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a tabulation giving the budget estimate, the House allowance, the Senate allowance, and the conference allowance for each appropriation in the supplemental appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the tabulation was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arizona yield to me?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. NEUBERGER. I should like to ask the distinguished chairman of the committee a brief question: Does the conference report as it now stands include the item of $425,000 for dredging the upstream navigation channel of the Columbia River between the States of Oregon and Washington?

Mr. HAYDEN. It does.

Mr. NEUBERGER. I thank the Senator from Arizona for the information and for his cooperation.

ASSISTANCE IN CONSTRUCTION OF SCHOOLS

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar 1076, House bill 8679; and I call the attention of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL] and the attention of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ALLOTT] to this matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title, for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 8679) to provide a 1-year extension of the programs of financial assistance in the construction of schools in areas affected by Federal activities under the provisions of Public Law 815, 81st Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, the bill provides a 1-year extension of Public Law 815, 81st Congress.

It will be recalled that Public Law 815, 81st Congress, authorizes appropriations for the construction of schools in areas affected by Federal activities.

The bill is unanimously reported by the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

A 1-year extension is necessary at this time because of the delay in the completion of the Capehart housing program. This law, without the extension authorized in the pending bill, will expire on June 30, 1958, with a carryover appropriation authorization extending to June 30, 1959. Under the existing life of the program, funds may be provided to local school districts only for children living on Federal property on June 30, 1958. Because of the delay in the Capehart housing program, plus the additional housing units authorized by the 85th Congress, the June 30, 1958, expiration date will result in severe hardship.

So, in order to avoid such severe hardship, the committee has reported the bill which has been passed by the House of Representatives; and the bill provides for a 1-year extension.

The committee was informed that 45,302 Capehart housing units, located on 136 military installations in 40 States and three Territories, will be completed between June 30, 1958, the current ending date for Public Law 815, and June 30, 1959. These 45,302 housing units will have approximately 34,000 schoolchildren living in them by June 30, 1959, and none of these children may be counted for entitlement under Public Law 815 as currently in effect. In other words, in order to afford these 34,000 children the benefit of the schools, Congress must extend for 1 year the provisions of Public Law 815.

In this connection I may say that in the State of Colorado there is a perfect illustration of the necessity for enactment of the bill. At this time I shall be very happy to yield to the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. ALLOTT], who also is a member of the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, in order that he may cite—as stated in the report—the situation confronting the children in Colorado Springs, Colo.

Mr. ALLOTT. Mr. President, I appreciate very much the courtesy of the Senator from Alabama in yielding to me.

The situation at the Air Force Academy is, of course, only one of approximately 150 similar situations which exist in the United States.

Mr. HILL. In other words, it is but an illustration, as the Senator from Colorado has said, of approximately 150 situations which exist in 40 different States of the Nation; is that correct?

Mr. ALLOTT. Yes.

On June 30, 1958, there will be 70 children residing in the school district at the academy. But by next year there will be more than 600 children there; and this situation is repeated—according to the best information we have obtained—at approximately 150 other military installations in the United States.

So the matter is of vital and necessary concern to our military forces.

Mr. HILL. Of course, as the Senator from Colorado knows so well, it is impossible to make plans and work out the details for the schools and for their construction within less than approximately 12 or 15 months.

Mr. ALLOTT. That is correct.

Mr. HILL. And that makes it all the more urgent that the bill be passed at this time, because the plans must be made and the details must be worked, details for the schools and for their construction within less than approximately 12 or 15 months.

Mr. ALLOTT. That is correct.

Mr. President, I would be remiss if I did not express to the chairman of the committee my thanks and the thanks of the people who are affected by this matter, because of the hard work and the careful attention the Senator from Alabama has devoted to this matter.

Mr. HILL. The Senator from Colorado is most kind and generous. I may say no one could have been more diligent than was the Senator from Colorado in pressing the bill so as to make sure that the children are adequately taken care of in the matter of schools. He has certainly worked hard on this matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to amendment.

If there be no amendment to be offered, the question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA PUBLIC SCHOOL FOOD SERVICES ACT

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1105, S. 1764.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the bill by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 1764) to amend the District of Columbia Public School Food Services Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment on page 2, line 6, after the word "Act.", to insert:

> Appropriations authorized by this section shall be available for reimbursement of the food service fund in the amount of any agency contributions paid out of such fund pursuant to the provisions of section 4 (a) of the Civil Service Retirement Act.

So as to make the bill read:

> Be it enacted, etc., That section 6 of the District of Columbia Public School Food Services Act (65 Stat. 369; sec. 31-1405, D. C. Code, 1951 edition) is amended by adding before the period the following: "and for reimbursement of the District of Columbia Public School Food Service Fund for lunches served in accordance with section 9 of the National School Lunch Act (60 Stat. 233; title 42, sec. 1758, U. S. C., 1952 edition), to children without cost to such children or at reduced cost. The rate of such reimbursement for such lunches served by the public schools in the District of Columbia shall be the student price of 'type-A lunch' in effect at the time such lunches are served. As used in this section the term 'type-A lunch' means a type-A lunch as defined in regulations promulgated by the Secretary of Agriculture pursuant to authority in the National School Lunch Act. Appropriations authorized by this section shall be available for reimbursement of the food service fund in the amount of any agency contributions paid out of such fund pursuant to the provisions of section 4 (a) of the Civil Service Retirement Act."

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, the purpose of this bill is to amend the District of Columbia Public School Food Services Act so as to authorize payment from appropriated funds of the cost of free lunches provided for children in the District schools whose cases come within any of the following circumstances:

First. Children of families receiving public assistance.

Second. Children of large families of low or reduced incomes.

Third. Children suffering from malnutrition who may be referred by the school nurse or the school doctor.

The District of Columbia Public School Food Services Act established a Department of Food Services under the direction and control of the Board of Education, and authorized such Department to conduct a centralized system of public-school cafeterias, lunchrooms, and related services. In order to enable the Department of Food Services to function, the act established the District of Columbia public school food services fund. All revenues and receipts derived from the operation of food services in the schools are paid into this fund, and it is used as a permanent revolving fund for the purchase of foods, supplies, and all services and expenditures necessary, including personal services. The only appropriations presently authorized are those for the acquisition, maintenance, and replacement of equipment used or acquired for use in the conduct of the Department of Food Services.

That act also authorizes schools operating thereunder to participate in the functions authorized under the National School Lunch Act, which provides that lunches shall be made available to needy children without cost or at a reduced cost.

The cost of free lunches in the District public schools is currently being absorbed by the food services fund, which means that the pupils who can afford to pay for their lunches are contributing to the cost of the lunches served without charge to needy pupils. In other words, the schoolchildren who have to buy their lunches must pay an additional charge, in order to take care of the cost of the lunches given free to needy children. I think we all agree that is not very fair.

During the 1955–56 school year, 45,964 free lunches were served, the cost of which, approximately $15,500, had to be absorbed by the fund.

The committee amended the bill at the request of the school authorities to prevent the fund from being charged with an estimated $30,000 per annum cost of agency contributions now required under the provisions of the Civil Service Retirement Act. The committee agreed with the school authorities that this amount ought not be added to the amounts paid by children for their school lunches, an action which would otherwise be necessary, unless, as is the case in the current fiscal year, appropriation language should provide relief.

The District Commissioners and the Board of Education favor enactment of this proposed legislation.

The cost of the bill, if enacted, would be approximately $16,500 per annum.

The District of Columbia Committee unanimously recommends passage of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUPPORT OF NEEDY PERSONS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1106, S. 1849.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the bill by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 1849) to provide for a more effective administration of public assistance in the District of Columbia; to make certain relatives responsible for support of needy persons, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments on page 3, line 13, after "Sec. 5", to insert "(a)"; after line 15, to insert:

> (b) Such amount as referred to in subsection (a) of this section shall not be less than the full amount determined as necessary on the basis of the minimum needs of such person as established in accordance with such regulations. No ceiling shall be administratively imposed with respect to the amount of public assistance which any person, or class of persons, may receive.

After line 22, to insert:

(c) The provisions of subsection (b) of this section shall become effective on July 1, 1958.

And on page 15, line 7, after "Sec. 28.", to strike out "This" and insert "Except as otherwise provided in this act, the provisions of this", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the "District of Columbia Public Assistance Act of 1957."

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 2. As used in this act, the word "District" means the District of Columbia; the word "Commissioners" means the Commissioners of the District of Columbia or the agents, agencies, officers, and employees designated by them to perform any function vested in them by this act; the term "public assistance" means payment in or by money, medical care, remedial care, goods or services to, or for the benefit of, needy persons; the word "recipient" means a person to whom or on whose behalf public assistance is granted and the word "State" includes Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands.

FUNCTIONS OF COMMISSIONERS

SEC. 3. This act shall be administered by the Commissioners, who shall—

(a) establish such categories of public assistance as they deem appropriate;

(b) provide for maximum cooperation with other agencies in maintaining and strengthening family life and in rehabilitating recipients to help them attain self-support or self-care;

(c) establish and enforce such rules and regulations as may be necessary or desirable to carry out the provisions of this act;

(d) cooperate in all necessary respects with agencies of the United States Government in the administration of this act, and accept any funds, goods or services payable to the District for public assistance, and for administering public assistance;

(e) enter into reciprocal agreements with any State relative to the provisions of public assistance to residents and nonresidents; and

(f) promulgate regulations to carry out the purposes of this act.

ELIGIBILITY FOR PUBLIC ASSISTANCE

SEC. 4. Public assistance shall be awarded to or on behalf of any needy individual who either (a) has resided in the District for 1 year immediately preceding the date of filing his application for such assistance; or (b) is otherwise within one of the categories of public assistance established by the Commissioners pursuant to this act.

AMOUNT OF PUBLIC ASSISTANCE

SEC. 5. (a) The amount of public assistance which any person shall receive shall be determined in accordance with regulations approved by the Commissioners.

(b) Such amount as referred to in subsection (a) of this section shall not be less than the full amount determined as necessary on the basis of the minimum needs of such person as established in accordance with such regulations. No ceiling shall be administratively imposed with respect to the amount of public assistance which any person, or class of persons, may receive.

(c) The provisions of subsection (b) of this section shall become effective on July 1, 1958.

APPLICATION FOR PUBLIC ASSISTANCE

SEC. 6. Application for public assistance shall be accepted from, or on behalf of, any person who believes himself eligible for public assistance. Such application shall be made in the manner and form prescribed by the Commissioners, and shall contain such information as the Commissioners shall require.

INVESTIGATION OF APPLICANT

SEC. 7. Whenever the Commissioners shall receive an application for public assistance, they shall promptly make an investigation and record of the circumstances of the applicant in order to ascertain the facts supporting the application and to obtain such other information as they may require.

AWARD AND PAYMENT OF PUBLIC ASSISTANCE

SEC. 8. (a) Upon completion of the investigation, the Commissioners shall determine whether the applicant is eligible for public assistance, the type and amount of public assistance for which he is eligible, and the date from which such public assistance shall begin, and shall furnish public assistance with reasonable promptness to all eligible persons: Provided, That such date shall not be prior to the first day of the calendar month in which such determination is made.

(b) Money payments of public assistance shall be made by check. In emergency cases under section 10 of this act money payments of public assistance may be made in cash, and to accomplish such purpose the Commissioners are authorized to make necessary provisions for advancing from time to time to one or more officers or employees of the District such sum or sums as the Commissioners may determine: Provided, That no such advance shall be made to any such officer or employee who has not been previously bonded in such amount and form as the Commissioners shall determine.

RECIPIENT INCAPACITATED

SEC. 9. If a recipient is found by the Commissioners to be incapable of taking care of himself, his property, or his money, public assistance payments may be made for his benefit to any responsible person approved by the Commissioners.

EMERGENCY PUBLIC ASSISTANCE

SEC. 10. The Commissioners may grant emergency public assistance pending completion of investigation when eligibility has been established pursuant to section 4 of this act: Provided, That such emergency assistance shall not be granted in any case for a period exceeding 60 days.

REDETERMINATION OF GRANTS

SEC. 11. All public assistance grants made under this act shall be reconsidered by the Commissioners as frequently as they may deem necessary. After such further investigations as the Commissioners may deem necessary, the amount of public assistance may be changed, or may be entirely withdrawn, if the Commissioners find that any such grant has been made erroneously, or if they find that the recipient's circumstances have altered sufficiently to warrant such action. If at any time during the continuance of public assistance the recipient thereof becomes possessed of income or resources in excess of the amount previously reported by him, or if other changes should occur in the circumstances previously reported by him which would alter either his need or his eligibility, it shall be his duty to notify the Commissioners of such fact immediately on the receipt or possession of such additional income or resources, or on the change of circumstances.

RECORDS

SEC. 12. (a) The Commissioners are directed to prescribe regulations governing the custody, use, and preservation of the records, papers, files, and communications of the Commissioners relating to public assistance. Except as herein otherwise provided, such regulations shall provide safeguards restricting the use or disclosure of information concerning applicants for, or recipients of, public assistance to purposes directly connected with the administration of public assistance. The Commissioners are authorized, in their discretion, to include in such regulations provisions for the public to have access to the records of disbursement or payment of public assistance made after the effective date of this act.

(b) No person who obtains information by virtue of any regulation made pursuant to subsection (a) of this section shall use such information for commercial or political purposes.

(c) This section and section 13 of this act shall be construed as State legislation conforming to the requirements of section 618 of the Revenue Act of 1951 (Public Law 183, 82d Cong.).

PENALTIES

SEC. 13. Any person violating any regulation made pursuant to this act or any person violating subsection (b) of section 12 of this act shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500, or by imprisonment of not more than 90 days, or by both such fine and imprisonment. Prosecutions for such violations and for violations of section 17 (a) of this act shall be brought to the municipal court for the District of Columbia by the Corporation Counsel or any of his assistants.

FUNERAL EXPENSES

SEC. 14. On the death of a recipient, reasonable funeral expenses may be paid, subject to rules and regulations approved by the Commissioners.

HEARINGS

SEC. 15. An applicant for, or recipient of, public assistance, aggrieved by the action or inaction of the Commissioners shall be entitled to a hearing. Each applicant or recipient shall be notified of his right to a hearing. Upon request for such hearing, reasonable notice of the time and place thereof shall be given to such applicant or recipient. Such hearing shall be conducted in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioners. The findings of the Commissioners on any appeal shall be final.

PUBLIC ASSISTANCE NOT ASSIGNABLE

SEC. 16. Public assistance awarded under this act shall not be transferable or assignable at law or in equity, and none of the money paid or payable under this act shall be subject to execution, levy, attachment, garnishment, or other legal process, or to the operation of any bankruptcy or insolvency law.

FRAUD IN OBTAINING PUBLIC ASSISTANCE—REPAYMENT

SEC. 17. (a) Any person who by means of false statement, failure to disclose information, or impersonation, or by other fraudulent device obtains or attempts to obtain (1) any grant or payment of public assistance to which he is not entitled; (2) a larger amount of public assistance than that to which he is entitled; or (3) payment of any forfeited grant of public assistance; or any person who with intent to defraud the District aids or abets in the buying or in any way disposing of the real property of a recipient of public assistance, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be sentenced to pay a fine of not more than $500, or imprisoned not to exceed 1 year, or both.

(b) Any person who obtains any payment of public assistance to which he is not entitled shall be liable to repay such sum. In any case in which, under this section, a person is liable to repay any sum, such sum may be collected without interest by civil action brought in the name of the District. Any repayment required by this subsection may, in the discretion of the Commissioners, be waived in whole or in part, upon a finding by the Commissioners that such repayment would deprive such person, his spouse, parent, or child of shelter or subsistence needed to enable such person, spouse, parent, or child to maintain a minimum standard of health and well-being.

PROPERTY

SEC. 18. (a) At the death of any person who has received public assistance pursuant to the provisions of this act, or of any act repealed by this act, the District shall have a preferred claim for the amount of any such public assistance against the estate of the deceased recipient. Notwithstanding the provisions of any other law, no statute of limitations shall be deemed applicable as a defense to any claim of the District made pursuant to this section. The Commissioners are authorized to waive any such claim when in their judgment they deem it appropriate to do so.

(b) In addition to the remedy provided by subsection (a) of this section, or by any other provision of law, the Commissioners may file a notice in the office of the Recorder of Deeds in any case where public assistance is granted to any person under this act, and such notice shall constitute and have the effect of a lien in favor of the District against the real property of such person for the amount of the public assistance which theretofore has been granted or which may thereafter be granted to, or on behalf of, such persons. Any such lien may be enforced by a proceeding filed in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia. The Commissioners shall file in the office of the Recorder of Deeds a release of any such real property from the effect of such lien whenever there has been repaid to the District the amount of the public assistance theretofore granted to, or on behalf of, such person. The Commissioners are also authorized to release any such lien when in their judgment they deem it appropriate to do so. Such notices and releases may be filed without payment of fees.

(c) If the District collects from any recipient of public assistance or from his estate, or otherwise, any amount with respect to public assistance furnished him under this act, or under any act repealed by this act, the pro rata share to which the United States is equitably entitled shall be paid to the United States in accordance with the provisions of the Social Security Act, as amended (title 42, U. S. C., secs. 303, 603, 1203, and 1353). The pro rata share due the District shall be deposited as miscellaneous receipts to the credit of the District.

RESPONSIBLE RELATIVES

SEC. 19. (a) The husband, wife, father, mother, or adult child of a recipient of public assistance, or of a person in need thereof, shall, according to his ability to pay, be responsible for the support of such person. Any such recipient of public assistance or person in need thereof or the Commissioners may bring an action to require such husband, wife, father, mother, or adult child to provide such support and the court shall have the power to make orders requiring such husband, wife, father, mother, or adult child to pay to such recipient of public assistance or to such person in need thereof such sum or sums of money in such installments as the court in its discretion may direct and such orders may be enforced in the same manner as orders for alimony.

(b) The Commissioners shall be empowered on behalf of the District to sue such husband, wife, father, mother, or adult child for the amount of public assistance granted under this act or under any act repealed by this act to such recipient or for so much thereof as such husband, wife, father, mother, or adult child is reasonably able to pay.

(c) All suits, actions, and court proceedings under this section shall be brought in the Domestic Relations Branch of the Municipal Court for the District of Columbia. To the extent applicable, the provisions of the act entitled "An act to establish a domestic relations branch in the municipal court for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved April 11, 1956, shall be followed in suits, actions, and proceedings brought pursuant to this section.

PAYMENTS OF EXPENSES

SEC. 20. All necessary expenses incurred by the District in carrying out the provisions of this act shall be disbursed in the same manner as other expenses of the District are disbursed.

RELIEF FROM LIABILITY

SEC. 21. The Comptroller General may, in his discretion, relieve any disbursing, certifying, or approving officer of liability on account of any otherwise proper payment for public assistance made by the District prior to the effective date of Public Law 84, 82d Congress (65 Stat. 124), whenever he finds (1) that the disbursement, certification, or approval was based on official records and the responsible officer did not know, and by reasonable diligence and inquiry could not have ascertained, the actual facts, or (2) that the payment, certification, or approval was made in good faith and that the payment was not contrary to any statutory provision specifically prohibiting payments of the character involved.

DELEGATION OF AUTHORITY

SEC. 22. The Commissioners are authorized to make provisions for delegation and subdelegation of any function vested in them by this act to any agency, officer, or employee of the District.

VOLUNTARY SERVICES

SEC. 23. The Commmissioners are authorized to accept voluntary services in administering the provisions of this act. Such voluntary services shall not create any obligation against the District.

APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 24. (a) The Commissioners shall include in their annual estimates of appropriations such sums as may be needed to carry out the provisions of this act.

(b) Unobligated balances of appropriations for the Department of Public Welfare are hereby made available for the purposes of this act.

REPEALS

SEC. 25. The following acts are hereby repealed: The act entitled "An act to provide aid to dependent children in the District of Columbia", approved June 14, 1944 (58 Stat. 277); the act entitled "An act to amend the code of laws for the District of Columbia in relation to providing assistance against old-age want," approved August 24, 1935 (49 Stat. 747); and the act entitled "An act to provide aid for needy blind persons of the District of Columbia and authorizing appropriations therefor", approved August 24, 1935 (49 Stat. 744), as amended. Notwithstanding such repeal, all claims of the District of Columbia for recovery of amounts expended for aid or assistance granted under such repealed acts which it now has, or which would have accrued had such acts not been repealed, shall be recoverable in the same manner and to the same extent such claims would be recoverable had such aid or assistance been granted under the provisions of this act.

REORGANIZATION

SEC. 26. Where any provision of this act refers to an office or agency abolished by Reorganization Plan No. 5 of 1952 (66 Stat. 824), such reference shall be deemed to be to the office, agency, or officer now or hereafter exercising the functions of the office or agency so abolished. Nothing contained in this act shall be construed as a limitation on the authority vested in the Commissioners by Reorganization Plan No. 5 of 1952.

VALIDITY

SEC. 27. If any provision of this act or the application thereof to any person or circumstance is held invalid, the remainder of the act and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 28. Except as otherwise provided in this act, the provisions of this act shall take effect on the first day of the second month following the date of enactment.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, the purpose of this bill is to incorporate in 1 act all 5 of the public assistance programs administered in the District of Columbia. At present only three of these programs—aid to dependent children, aid to the aged, and aid to the blind—are covered by substantive legislation. The remaining two categories—aid to the disabled and general public assistance—have existed for a number of years by virtue of language contained in the annual appropriation acts.

Enactment of this bill will result in more uniform requirements and procedures for determining eligibility for public assistance, and the amount of assistance granted in terms of the need of the recipient. It will also apply more uniform standards to the reviewing of cases, conducting hearings, and making reinvestigations of eligibility for assistance.

This bill would authorize or accomplish the following actions or objectives which the District Commissioners under existing laws cannot perform:

First. Entering into reciprocal agreements with any State for the provision of public assistance to residents and nonresidents.

Second. Establishing of uniform residence requirements for all categories of assistance.

Third. Granting of emergency cash assistance when residence eligibility has been established and available information indicates the applicant is in need.

Fourth. Establishing of appropriate schedules for reinvestigating eligibility based on case needs.

Fifth. Authorizing the Commissioners, in their discretion, to permit public access to the records of disbursements or payments of public assistance, provided the information is not used for commercial or political purposes.

Sixth. The husband, wife, father, mother, or adult child of a recipient in any category of assistance shall, according to his ability to pay, be responsible for the support of such person. Under existing law, relatives are made responsible only in the old-age assistance and aid-to-the-blind laws. The bill provides that recipients of assistance or a person in need of assistance or the Commissioners may bring legal action to require support from the designated relatives. Existing law provides only that the District of Columbia is empowered to sue responsible relatives.

Seventh. The Commissioners are authorized to accept voluntary services in administering the provisions of the proposed act. There is no such provision in present law.

The committee amended the bill to endeavor to correct and to rectify the existing practice of imposing an arbitrary percentage figure as a ceiling on the grants without regard to the minimum subsistence needs of the welfare recipients, and, in addition, there is prohibited the imposition of a flat dollar amount ceiling without regard to the actual needs of these families. The policy currently being followed by the District Commissioners of permitting only 83 percent of minimum subsistence needs to be given to welfare aid recipients is one that creates great hardship and should be modified. It should be noted in this connection that the food item of the family budget, since the grant is a lump sum payment, is of necessity much less than 83 percent of the minimum subsistence amount. Other items—housing, utilities, clothing, soap—must be paid for at the going market price; hence the deficit of 17 percent for these items can only be made up by a decreased expenditure for food.

The need for this kind of legislation has been evident for many years. This need has been recognized by the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives. It has been studied by agencies of the District of Columbia directly concerned, and meets with their approval.

The estimated maximum annual cost of the proposed legislation as amended by the committee is $2 million. Because the Federal payment to the District of Columbia meets only 13 percent of the District budget, the net charge to the Treasury because of this bill would be approximately $260,000.

The Committee on the District of Columbia urges passage of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

If there be no further amendment to be offered, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

REVISION OF ORGANIC ACT OF THE VIRGIN ISLANDS

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1085, H. R. 8126.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The Legislative Clerk. A bill (H. R. 8126) to amend section 16 (c) of the Revised Organic Act of the Virgin Islands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Washington.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. President, the purpose of the bill is to amend section 16 (c) of the Revised Organic Act of the Virgin Islands to confer greater authority on the popularly elected Territorial legislature with respect to the confirmation of the chairman and the members of certain boards, authorities, and commissions of the Virgin Islands government. The bill involves no expenditure of Federal funds, and is still another step forward in self-government for the people of the Virgin Islands.

Simply stated, the bill clarifies a question of controversy which has existed within the Virgin Islands Legislature as to the confirmation of officials appointed by the Governor of the Virgin Islands.

The bill was reported unanimously from the Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, and has the support of the Department of Interior.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTABLISHMENT OF PUBLIC RECREATIONAL FACILITIES IN ALASKA

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1059, H. R. 7864.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The Legislative Clerk. A bill (H. R. 7864) to amend the act of May 4, 1956 (70 Stat. 130), relating to the establishment of public recreational facilities in Alaska.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Washington.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. President, the purpose of the bill is to clarify the legislation which the Congress enacted in 1956, authorizing construction and maintenance of facilities for public recreational purposes in Alaska to be turned over to the Territory of Alaska for administration. Apparently the legislation was not clear on the latter point. The purpose of the pending bill, therefore, is to make it clear that upon the completion of these recreational facilities the Department of the Interior shall have authority to turn over to the Territory of Alaska, for operation and maintenance, the facilities provided for in the act passed by the Congress last year.

The bill was reported unanimously from the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Scott in the chair). The question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONVEYANCE OF CERTAIN LANDS TO MIDDLE TENNESSEE COUNCIL, BOY SCOUTS

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1111, S. 2531.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The Legislative Clerk. A bill (S. 2531) to authorize the conveyance of certain lands within Old Hickory lock and dam project, Tennessee, to Middle Tennessee Council, Boy Scouts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Washington.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Works with an amendment.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I know the present Presiding Officer [Mr. Scott in the chair] knows as much about the bill as I do. The only purpose of the bill is to convey some land in Tennessee to the Boy Scouts of America. The Boy Scouts now have a 50-year lease on this piece of property.

The bill proposes that the land on which the Boy Scouts have a lease shall be turned over to the Boy Scouts. If they do not use it in the future for the purposes for which conveyed, the land will revert to the Government.

Mr. President, the House has passed H. R. 8576, which is identical to the Senate bill. There is no objection to the bill. I should like to have the House bill considered instead of the Senate bill, and I ask unanimous consent that the Senate may proceed to the consideration of H. R. 8576.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 8576) to authorize the conveyance of certain lands within the Old Hickory lock and dam project, Cumberland River, Tenn., to Middle Tennessee Council, Inc., Boy Scouts of America for recreation and camping purposes, which was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Mexico?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I rise to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon is recognized.

Mr. MORSE. I should like to ask a few questions about the bill. I have not had time to make as much of a study of the bill as I should like, but I find difficulty in differentiating between this bill and bills presented in the past which we have not passed, when it has been sought, in effect, to donate Federal property to 4-H Clubs and other fine social organizations.

I am at a loss to understand why the taxpayers of the United States should donate a piece of property to the Boy Scouts and not donate property to the 4-H Clubs. If we start donating Federal property to all the fine movements in the country, Mr. President, it will show a nice spirit, but I think it will lead to some very bad practices.

I see no reason why the Boy Scouts should not pay a reasonable sum of money for this property. The property belongs to the Government. The Boy Scouts have a lease on it now. I do not know why they should not be required to pay at least 50 percent of whatever the market value is.

Let us think of some other organizations which might want to make such a request. Suppose the Catholic Charities should apply. Would we donate property to them? Suppose the Presbyterian Brotherhood should apply. Would we donate property to them? Suppose the Quakers should apply. Would we donate property to them?

I realize the position I am in, Mr. President, just as I realized the position I was in 2 or 3 years ago. I have asked to have the precedents looked up, and there are many. I remember the Kentucky case, and I recall the 4-H Club case.

I thought it had been pretty well established that we were going to keep these great movements separate from the state. The line becomes pretty indistinguishable sometimes, Mr. President.

I think it is not wise to undertake to set a precedent this afternoon of donating Federal property to very worthwhile movements. I do not know how we are going to draw much of a line of distinction between the Boy Scouts and the church youth movements. The property for these great movements ought to be paid for by donors among the citizenry and not by the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I wonder if my good friend, the Senator from Oregon, will yield to me.

Mr. MORSE. Yes. I am merely outlining to the Senate what is puzzling me. If the Senator from New Mexico can clear it up, that will be fine.

Mr. CHAVEZ. So far as the Senator from New Mexico is concerned, I am as anxious as is the Senator from Oregon to provide for the rights of the organizations which the Senator has in mind, as I am anxious to provide for the Boy Scouts. It happens that in accordance with the statutory authority, 609.2 acres have been made available under a long-term nominal consideration lease to the Middle Tennessee Council, Inc., Boy Scouts of America, at Old Hickory lock and dam on the Cumberland River, Tenn. Since entering upon the leased property approximately 2 years ago, the Boy Scouts Council has made a modest beginning toward the development of extensive camping facilities. Approximately $26,000 has already been spent in order to provide access and minimum improvements for the site. Difficulties in further development occurred, the committee was informed, when the Boy Scouts Council undertook discussions toward the ultimate goal of raising approximately $750,000 to provide adequate and suitable camping facilities.

The money is to be raised by the Boy Scouts, and not by Uncle Sam. If the Boy Scouts are willing to develop this particular area and finance the development to the extent of $750,000, we think there is little that Uncle Sam can do except to donate 700 acres of land to a good organization. The same principle would apply to the Future Farmers of America and any similar organization if they were in the same situation.

The Committee on Public Works, after hearing the testimony on this proposal, unanimously reported the bill.

I assure the Senator from Oregon that I believe I understand his philosophy. Generally speaking, I am in accord with it. There have been very few times when the Senator from Oregon and I have discussed how we intended to vote, but we usually vote the same way. In this instance, however, I think this is a very worthy bill, for a very worthy purpose.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, the bill is under consideration as the result of a motion. If the bill had been reached on the call of the calendar, I would have objected.

The bill clearly violates the Morse formula. I do not care in what verbiage the bill is clothed. The fact is that it is proposed that the Federal Government give to the Boy Scouts of America property which belongs to all the taxpayers of America. That is a bad precedent. I shall make my case and take my seat. I wish to make a record on which to stand.

We are asked to establish a most unfortunate precedent. If we do what is asked for the Boy Scouts, we pave the way for doing the same thing for many fine organizations which operate under the auspices of religious orders or churches.

If the Boy Scouts can raise $750,000 to improve this land, it can raise from the citizenry, through a Boy Scout drive for funds, enough money to pay a reasonable price for the property. I see no reason in the world why the taxpayers, through the Congress, should donate property of great value to the Boy Scouts of America.

I realize that politically I should not make this speech, but that fact does not deter me. We are asked to establish a very bad precedent in disposing of property of the Federal taxpayers without getting any return for it, simply because it is for the Boy Scouts. If we do it for the Boy Scouts of America, we could reasonably be asked to do a similar thing for the Future Farmers of America, the 4-H Clubs, and various other groups. We would be asked to start doing the same thing for some very fine youth movements in the great churches.

I happen to believe that there is a line which should separate the state from the activities of various orders, because it is so easy for such activities to move over into the field of religious or quasi-religious activity. I shall vote against the bill, not because I am against the Boy Scouts. My whole record is to the contrary. However, I happen to believe that a very precious principle is involved in protecting the taxpayers of the country. I think they have a right to be protected by a Congress which starts distributing the taxpayers' property to various organizations, when large blocks of our citizens may not be in sympathy with the activities of a certain order. I do not know of any such group opposed to the Boy Scouts, but there may be.

I know enough about public opinion to know that when we start giving Government property to private organizations of this type, we shall find many citizens who will say, "We are not in favor of the program of that particular order or organization, and we do not know why the property we own as Federal taxpayers should be donated to the activities of such a private organization."

I think private organizations, no matter how public spirited, should pay for their property, and the money should be raised from supporters of the Boy Scouts to pay for this property.

Mr. President, I shall vote against the bill.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, upon most occasions I find myself in support of the so-called Morse formula. This is a question with respect to which the Congress must exercise care. But it is also a matter upon which the Congress can and should exercise discretion.

What are the purposes of these reservoirs? Of course, they are multipurpose projects, including flood control, navigation, power, and recreation.

How better could the Government promote healthful recreation on a small spot of land on this reservoir which has been declared surplus to the needs of the Government, than to permit its development by and for the benefit of the Boy Scouts?

The able senior Senator from Oregon refers to this organization as a private organization. It seems to me that that definition is subject to interpretation, and must be subject to the judgment and discretion of the Congress.

Furthermore, in my opinion, the Government would reap collateral benefits if a tract of land on a reservoir vast in extent were developed well as a recreational center. The adjacent land owned by the Government would become more valuable.

The Boy Scouts propose to spend $750,000 to develop this site as a permanent recreational camp for Boy Scouts. It is not for the private profit of anyone; it is not for the aggrandizement of a private interest. It is to promote the recreation of boys of tender age. The proposal is to put this reservoir to the highest and most beneficial use.

I do not feel that I come to the Senate requesting something that will inure to the benefit of a private organization. I think the Boy Scouts are a public organization—not one sponsored by the Government, but one supported by the public, one which invites all boys to become members, to take the oath, and to receive the benefit of the training and leadership which the Boy Scouts organization provides.

I hope the Senate will pass the bill. The House of Representatives passed it yesterday unanimously.

Heretofore the able Senator from Oregon has recognized the exigencies of certain occasions, and has permitted exceptions to the so-called Morse formula. He has permitted—and I think wisely—bills to be passed when the transfer was to a public agency for recreational purposes. It seems to me that this is no less for public recreational purposes.

There are only a few years during which a boy can be a Boy Scout. Perhaps we deplore the fleeting character of time, but time passes, nevertheless. There are but few years when boys can enjoy and benefit from the experience gained in this great organization. It is at least quasi-public in its nature.

I plead with the Senate to pass the bill.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I shall be very brief in my reply to the Senator from Tennessee, but I have three points to make.

First, I assure the Senator from Tennessee that neither he nor any other Member of the Senate can cite a single exception to the Morse formula which I have ever granted; and I have no intention of granting any exceptions.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. GORE. One of the exceptions to which I referred was the transfer of an island in Wolf Creek Reservoir to the State of Kentucky for development for recreational purposes. I think the Senator was entirely correct.

Mr. MORSE. There was no exception whatever. If the Senator will read the RECORD for the day on which that bill was discussed—and I recall it as though it were during the past hour—he will find that the RECORD shows that a clear case was made of Federal benefit in the development of that particular island. It was within the entire program of Federal development, with respect to which the Federal Government would have been required, if the development had not been done in the way proposed, to expend great sums of money for recreational development in that very area. The case was made that there would be a saving by the Federal Government because, instead of the Federal Government spending the money for a Federal park, the State of Kentucky would spend the money for a State park, and the park would revert to the Federal Government in case the State of Kentucky did not carry out the park purposes. It was a case in which the Federal Government would otherwise have had to spend money. I discussed it very fully on that day, and I pointed out in the RECORD that it was not an exception to the Morse formula.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. GORE. I would not attempt to pit my recollection against that of the Senator from Oregon. However, as I recall, the situation was not as the Senator now remembers it. As I recall—and I was on the floor at the time——

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I ask to have the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in the Kentucky case produced for use in the debate.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, the bill now under discussion was not scheduled to come up at this time. The majority leader was called out of the Chamber, and he asked the Senator from Washington [Mr. JACKSON] to act for him, and the Senator from Texas gave him a list of bills to be brought up by motion. The bill before the Senate was brought up by motion in my absence. I would like to have it passed, if it can be passed without any difficulty. On the other hand, I have asked a number of Senators to be present because I told them I would bring up the bills in which they were interested. If the bill before the Senate is controversial and will require more time for its consideration, I will ask the staff to make an investigation and provide for its being taken up later in the day, after we have cleared up other matters.

Mr. CHAVEZ. It is true that the bill was reported only yesterday. However, the Senator from Washington did not ask that the bill be brought up. I asked that it be brought up, although the Senator from Washington made the motion. The Senator from Texas was not on the floor. I thought it was a worthy bill. Inasmuch as we were passing bills which were reported yesterday, like Calendar 1109, S. 1587, in which the Senators from Massachusetts were interested, I thought we would consider this worthy bill also.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. The Senator asked that S. 1587 be brought up. I am trying to get action on the bills I announced would be taken up, and in connection with which I have notified Senators to be present because they are interested in the bills. I did so in good faith, and I am under an obligation to keep my word. I cannot do that if another bill is brought up by motion, in violation of my agreement. The Senator will get his bill passed before sundown, if he will permit us to continue the normal procedure.

If it is agreeable to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. GORE] and to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], I should like to proceed to the consideration of another bill.

Mr. MORSE. I want to keep the RECORD straight. The Senator from Tennessee, I am sure, has no intention of causing any injury to the Senator from Oregon. However, the statement he has made in the RECORD does cause injury to my record on the Morse formula. I wish to show the Senator from Tennessee that I have never knowingly made any exception to the Morse formula. The first time I do, so far as I am concerned, the Morse formula is dead. I do not believe there is any justification for making any exception to the Morse formula. I will not do it for the Boy Scouts, and I will not do it for the Methodist Church. Some Senators may recall that about 2 years ago the Methodist Church wanted to get a piece of property for nothing. They were on their way to getting it when I objected under the Morse formula.

I shall discuss the pending matter, not at any great length, but I do wish to discuss it. I desire to make a record on it for future reference. Fine as the Boy Scout organization is, it would be a dangerous precedent to start supporting any organization with donations from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. What is the pending business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending business is H. R. 8576. The bill is open to amendment.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I shall hold the floor and engage in a discussion until the matters I have asked for are produced. My assistants are now at work on the material. I have some other matters to discuss. I will discuss them, unless the bill can be laid aside.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I wonder if it would be agreeable to the Senators who are discussing the bill if I should now move that it be temporarily laid aside and that we proceed to the consideration of Calendar——

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I hope that the Senator will not do that. The majority leader is trying to control the motions to take up measures. I have made certain agreements with Senators with regard to bills in which they are interested. In the situation now before the Senate the pending bill was taken up when I was temporarily away from the floor. The bill was taken up because there was a misunderstanding between the Senator from Washington [Mr. JACKSON] and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ].

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator from Texas is quite justified in attempting to direct the schedule of the Senate. I am trying to help him.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I thank the Senator.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am trying to help him so that we may take up a very important bill, which will have a permanent effect upon the enforcement of criminal law in the United States. It is a bill which the Committee on the Judiciary has considered and which undertakes to clarify the meaning of the Supreme Court decision in the Jencks case. I wish to make the record clear that, representing the Committee on the Judiciary in charge of the bill, I wish to have the bill considered this afternoon.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I wish to make the RECORD clear that the Senator from Texas has been willing to take it up for a week. However, conferences on it have taken place, which, as I understand, have just now resolved some of the differences. That does not mean that I can ask that the bill be considered within the next 5 minutes. I shall have to try to live up to the commitments I made with other Members of the Senate. I will do that if Senators will let me.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I know the Senator from Texas is not interpreting my remarks as a reflection upon his activities. I am asking the Senate that we be given the opportunity, if we wish to take advantage of it, to deal with a very important matter.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. The Senator from Texas will see to it that is done before the session is over.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I will leave myself wholly in the hands of the majority leader, whom I hope to keep the majority leader of this body.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I thank the Senator.

Does the Senator from Oregon wish to continue the discussion?

Mr. MORSE. I intend to accommodate myself to the wishes of the majority leader, and postpone action on the bill for a few minutes.

AUTHORIZATION OF PRINTING OF ADDITIONAL COPIES OF CERTAIN PUBLIC HEARINGS

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1139, House Concurrent Resolution 215.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The concurrent resolution will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 215) authorizing the printing of additional copies of certain public hearings.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, the concurrent resolution would authorize the printing of 20,000 additional copies of the public hearings on The Nature of Radioactive Fallout and Its Effects on Man, held by the Special Subcommittee on Radiation of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy during the 85th Congress, 1st session.

I understand that over 10,000 copies have already been requested by Members of Congress alone and substantial numbers of copies have also been requested by the public. It is absolutely necessary that additional copies be printed. The hearings are a compilation of extremely important scientific information on radioactive fallout in which the public is very much interested.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

GUARANTY OF PRIVATE LOANS TO CERTAIN AIR CARRIERS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2229) to provide for Government guaranty of private loans to certain air carriers for purchase of modern aircraft and equipment, to foster the development and use of modern transport aircraft by such carriers, and for other purposes. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the report.

(For conference report, see House proceedings of August 23, 1957, p. 15823, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. President, the conference report is the unanimous report on the part of the Senate conferees, with the exception of the distinguished junior Senator from Maine [Mr. PAYNE], who was out of the city when the conference committee met. However, the Senator from Maine has been apprised of the contents of the report and of the agreement to the amendment of the House. He has informed us that if he had been present he would also have signed the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a statement on the conference report.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR MONRONEY

Other than some clarifying language inserted by the House in S. 2229, there are only two important changes in the bill from the form in which it passed the Senate.

The Senate bill covered 25 carriers of the feeder-line type but did not include the helicopter carriers. The House bill did. There are three such carriers now—one located in New York, the others in Chicago and Los Angeles. The conferees found a great interest on both sides for these services and have adopted the House inclusion of them in the legislation. It should be borne in mind that the Board has discretion in the authorizing of guaranteed loans and we have been assured by the Board that they will watch this particular segment of the air industry very closely.

The Senate bill limited the loans to aircraft manufactured under a United States type certificate issued after the enactment of this legislation. The effect of this provision would have limited loans on aircraft to 3 planes, only 1 of which is close to production. This is the Fokker-Friendship. Two other aircraft are on the drawing board or in other stages of production. They are the Douglas 1940 and the Frye Safari. The House had stricken this section of the bill. We had testimony on another bill just the other day that pointed out at least one of the feeder lines had been able to improve its economic operation tremendously by the use of Martin planes purchased from a trunk airline. We felt that if such planes could be used to advantage, we should not foreclose them from the operators covered by this bill. Accordingly, this section of the bill was rewritten so as to provide that no guaranty of a loan could be made unless the Board made a finding that the aircraft involved would improve the service and efficiency of the carrier. In other words, if the aircraft desired to be purchased would actually improve the service of the carrier, a loan could be guaranteed.

The Board has informally advised the conferees that the foregoing amendments are satisfactory to it.

I believe the bill, as amended, is a good one and should be approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Bartlett, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the bill (S. 2460) to authorize the transfer of certain housing projects to the city of Decatur, Ill., or to the Decatur Housing Authority.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2229) to provide for Government guaranty of private loans to certain air carriers for purchase of modern aircraft and equipment, to foster the development and use of modern transport aircraft by such carriers, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9023) to amend the act of October 31, 1949, to extend until June 30, 1960, the authority of the Surgeon General to make certain payments to Bernalillo County, N. Mex., for furnishing hospital care to certain Indians.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9379) making appropriations for the Atomic Energy Commission for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1958, and for other purposes; asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. CANNON, Mr. RABAUT, Mr. EVINS, Mr. JENSEN, and Mr. TABER were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 9280) to facilitate the conduct of fishing operations in the Territory of Alaska, to promote the conservation of fishery resources thereof, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled joint resolutions, and they were signed by the Vice President:

H. J. Res. 338. Joint resolution for the relief of certain aliens;

H. J. Res. 387. Joint resolution for the relief of certain spouses and minor children of citizens of the United States; and

H. J. Res. 409. Joint resolution to waive certain provisions of section 212 (a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act in behalf of certain aliens.

AMENDMENT OF ACT MAKING APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE CONSTRUCTION, REPAIR, AND PRESERVATION OF CERTAIN PUBLIC WORKS ON RIVERS AND HARBORS

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1117, S. 2603.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 2603) to amend the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, approved June 3, 1896."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, the bill repeals an old section of law going back to 1896, and would enable the city of New York to undertake a very constructive public work and to spend about $10 million for a pier, warehouse, and other installations. The bill would allow the front of that pier, as it faces the bay, to be 700 feet wide, instead of the old width of 300 feet.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. JAVITS. Certainly.

Mr. LONG. Why is it necessary to amend the law in order to make the pier wider?

Mr. JAVITS. It is an old section of law, which restricts the width to 300 feet. That section of law is out of date.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That chapter 314 of the laws of 1896, entitled, "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes", approved June 3, 1896, is hereby amended by deleting therefrom the following paragraph:

"And in order to meet the demands of the greatly enlarged size of vessels, and of increasing commerce, it is hereby further provided that such piers as may be built between 17th Street, on the south shore of Gowanus Creek, and Fort Hamilton may be constructed so that so much thereof as shall be between the pier and bulkhead lines may be of a linear width not to exceed 300 feet, and, whether of that width or of less width, may be filled with solid materials when an equal tidal prism or space to receive the inflow of the tides is provided in compensation therefor, behind the authorized bulkhead line and adjacent to said piers."

COOPERATIVE FOR AMERICAN REMITTANCES TO EVERYWHERE, INC.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar 1071, House bill 2938.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 2938) for the relief of Cooperative for American Remittances to Everywhere, Inc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, every one knows what CARE is. It is one of the great, humanitarian institutions.

It paid taxes on shipments of sugar. The Government agrees to refund the excise taxes which have been paid in connection with the shipment of CARE packages to many parts of the world.

On a previous occasion the Government took similar action. This measure calls for the refunding of payments which were made, but which should not have been made if at that time the organization had filed the proper documents.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to amendment.

If there be no amendment, the question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill (H. R. 2938) was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROPOSED LEGISLATION TO PROHIBIT THE SERVING OR CONSUMPTION OF ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES ABOARD AIRPLANES

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President——

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I yield to the distinguished Senator from South Carolina; and I thank him for his graciousness and courtesy.

Mr. THURMOND. I thank the Senator from Texas.

Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the extension of remarks of the Honorable THOMAS J. LANE, of Massachusetts, in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of August 22, 1957. These remarks contain a letter from Mr. C. N. Sayen, of the Air Line Pilots Association, which was addressed to the distinguished junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY], the chairman of the Aviation Subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, in support of my bill, S. 4. This proposed legislation would prohibit the serving or consumption of alcoholic beverages aboard airplanes.

In his letter, Mr. Sayen listed 23 separate drinking incidents aboard airliners which have seriously endangered the safety of passengers, air crews, and those on the ground below the aircraft, during the past 2 years. The subcommittee had requested Mr. Sayen to present such evidence, so it could determine whether the proposed legislation would be in the interest of air safety.

I hope every Member of the Senate will read the details of these dangerous incidents so they can decide for themselves whether the passage of this measure would be in the interest of air safety. Personally, I am willing to take the recommendation of the approximately 16,000 pilots who are members of the Air Line Pilots Association and who have adopted a resolution calling for the approval of such proposed legislation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at the conclusion of my remarks the following: Two articles which summarize the principal points made by Mr. Sayen in his report to the Aviation Subcommittee; a statement I presented before the Aviation Subcommittee on August 13, 1957, when hearings were held on S. 4 and S. 593; and an editorial which appeared in the Philadelphia Inquirer, dated August 23, 1957, entitled "Drunken Passengers Imperil Planes."

There being no objection, the articles, statement, and editorial were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post of August 22, 1957]

DRINK HAZARDS ON PLANES CITED

(By Robert J. Serling)

The Air Line Pilots Association told Congress yesterday that at least 23 airlines in the past 2 years have been seriously endangered by drunken passengers.

The union's charge was contained in a report filed with a Senate transportation subcommittee considering a bill to ban the serving of liquor on commercial flights.

The report cited:

Four instances of drunken passengers forcing their way into the cockpit.

Eight instances of inebriated passengers creating such disturbances in cabins that flight-crew members were forced to leave their cockpit duties to quell them.

Three cases of unscheduled emergency landings in order to remove drunken passengers whose behavior was threatening a plane's safety.

Three instances of intoxicated passengers damaging windows, doors or pressurization devices in flight.

Five cases of drunken passengers creating fire hazards in flight.

The report cited three instances where intoxicated passengers were carrying guns.

One stewardess said:

"A party of four (two couples) boarded in Washington. I took their coats and it was obvious that they had been drinking. During the flight they became increasingly noisy and used vulgar and indecent language much to the embarrassment of the other passengers.

"They could be heard throughout the plane which by then smelled like a brewery. One of the men in particular kept grabbing at us as we went by and propositioning us. We warned them to be quiet. While opening a champagne bottle it splashed on one of the men. I took his coat to hang up to dry and noticed he was carrying a gun under his belt. I said nothing to him but reported it to the captain who came back to the cabin and spoke to him.

"During the beverage service the gun was pointed at the other stewardess as the man asked for his coffee. We fed them lunch and they settled down. As these people deplaned at Dallas one of the women collapsed at the bottom of the ramp. We administered ice packs and ammonia. We notified the head agent that one of the men had a gun. A wheelchair was ordered for the lady."

Under the attempts to enter flight deck category was this item:

"A large man under the influence of liquor started to come up to the cockpit yelling that he was going to kill the captain. * * * A crew member, with other male passengers stopped him at the cockpit door. He put up such a struggle that they had to take his belt off, wrap it around his neck and tie him down."

In a letter accompanying the union report, ALPA president C. N. Sayen said drinks served in flight, "when added to a reduced oxygen pressure and strange environment, may be the final step in causing a normal, well-adjusted individual to become an uncontrollable hazard."

Sayen said the serving of in-flight drinks has weakened regulations against permitting intoxicated passengers to board planes.

NEWS RELEASE FROM NEWS BUREAU, AIR LINE PILOTS ASSOCIATION

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 21, 1957.—The Air Line Pilots Association (AFL–CIO) submitted to the United States Senate Subcommittee on Transportation today a list of incidents caused by intoxicated airline passengers which directly affected the ability of the flight crews to conduct their flights with the highest degree of safety.

The incidents were listed in six categories, namely: (1) Attempts to enter the flight deck and interfere with the operation of the aircraft by the crews; (2) creation of disturbances in the passenger cabin, possibly under critical flight conditions and at the risk of bodily injury; (3) in-flight emergencies requiring unscheduled landings to remove inebriated passengers who are creating disturbances or hazards; (4) inebriated passengers inadvertently actuating or damaging exit and pressurization devices in flight; (5) fire hazards from inebriated passengers and refusal to comply with safety regulations; (6) social and moral problems and effect of alcohol at altitude.

"The obvious hazard to flight safety in this practice is a matter of plain, commonsense," stated C. N. Sayen, president of the Air Line Pilots Association. "We are unable to comprehend the joint position of the Civil Aeronautics Board and the Air Transport Association before the committee * * * that no hazard exists. It is a matter of record that actual incidents have occurred." Sayen stated further, "But even presuming none had happened, it would be a matter of extreme negligence to assume that it is not necessary to take preventative action until after a fatal accident."

The spokesman for the Nation's airline pilots pointed out that while the airline liquor service is presently confined to a limited number of flights of eight carriers, the practice is spreading. "Competitive pressure," stated Sayen, "or the 'one rotten apple in the barrel' will create pressures to spread the practice and related safety hazards to the balance of the airlines in the domestic pattern." As the practice spreads, the number of incidents, with associated hazards, may be expected to increase proportionately.

Sayen pointed out that the House of Representatives, after a study of the problem, had voted to ban liquor service on flights in 1956, and expressed the hope that the problem would be reported by the Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee to the Senate for similar action shortly.

STATEMENT BY SENATOR STROM THURMOND, DEMOCRAT, OF SOUTH CAROLINA, IN SUPPORT OF S. 4 BEFORE AVIATION SUBCOMMITTEE OF SENATE COMMERCE COMMITTEE, AUGUST 13, 1957

Mr. Chairman and members of the subcommittee, I appreciate the opportunity of appearing this morning to testify in favor of S. 4, a bill which I consider to be one of the most vital safety measures facing the Congress today. This legislation, which I first introduced in the 84th Congress, is designed to prevent the service or consumption of alcoholic beverages aboard commercial passenger aircraft and military aircraft. Since its introduction, S. 4 has accounted for more of my mail than any other topic, including the huge volume of mail I received this year in favor of Government economy and in opposition to the so-called civil-rights bill.

Offers of support for this safety measure have come to me from every section of the country. These offers have come from both drinkers and nondrinkers who are concerned about the dangers which are inherent in the practice of serving cocktails while planes are in flight.

In an effort to kill this legislation, some have charged that this is a prohibition bill which was inspired by temperance and church groups. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that neither of these groups prompted me to introduce this legislation, nor did the pilots or stewardesses. I saw in this practice an inherent danger that need not exist at all.

There are some dangers, Mr. Chairman, which I admit we must risk and permit to exist. But, I have never found anyone who could give me one reason for permitting this hazard to continue, except for the purpose of meeting competition. And, if the serving or consumption of liquor on planes were outlawed altogether, then there would be no basis for even this flimsy argument. I ask you, Mr. Chairman, how many of our airlines do you believe would go out of business in the event this safety legislation were to be passed?

I did not introduce this legislation as a prohibition measure. I sponsored it for four principal reasons which I shall outline to you now.

First, I believe the unregulated consumption of liquor by airline passengers is a compromise with safety which we can ill afford. It is possible for an intoxicated passenger to seize control of an aircraft while in flight or to so distract the pilots from their duties so as to jeopardize many lives. Mr. Chairman, I need not remind the subcommittee that here we are dealing with an operation taking place several thousand feet above the earth, and generally, a plane crash means sure death for the passengers and those who might be in the path of the falling aircraft.

At this point, Mr. Chairman, I would like to read to the subcommittee an excerpt from an editorial which appeared in the State, of Columbia, S. C., on October 15, 1955. This is one of a number of outstanding newspapers across the country that have taken a stand against the serving of alcoholic beverages abroad airliners. The editorial states:

"We see no reason to turn a plane into a bar or a cocktail lounge. At best the quarters are limited, and the possibility of an unruly passenger is always present if liquor is served. * * * There are enough potential dangers in flying without adding the possibility of the complications of the obnoxious drunk."

My second reason is that the serving of liquor to passengers places an unnecessary burden upon the flight crews who are charged with the safety and comfort of airline passengers. Miss Peterson, the representative of the stewardesses association, has told me of several embarrassing incidents that have occurred on airplanes due to the consumption of liquor by passengers. I shall not go into these incidents here except to remark that I am sure the members of this subcommittee are interested not only in the safety aspect involved here but also in protecting the dignity of the fine young ladies who serve as stewardesses on these aircraft.

As you will hear from the pilots themselves, they do not favor a continuation of this unsafe practice. I agree with an editorial which appeared in the September 12, 1955, issue of the Tribune of South Bend, Ind., which made the following point:

"If the pilots believe a drink ban would reduce the danger of accidents, the Government ought to go along with them. The fliers are, after all, at a disadvantage. A nightclub manager can ask an unruly patron to leave. The crew of airborne liners can't do that."

My third reason is that drinking aboard airplanes creates a social problem in that the drinking passengers may offend or annoy other passengers. I would remind you, Mr. Chairman, that drinking in airplanes cannot be confined to club cars as on trains. In addition, there is the problem of children who accompany their parents and others on air flights. Moral decency impels us to exclude our children from barrooms and liquor stores. By the same token, our children should be protected from the flying saloons which now exist in most of the commercial aircraft now operating in the United States.

My final reason for introducing this legislation stemmed from a firm belief that alcohol and flying do not mix any more than do drinking and driving. It is a fact that the intoxicating effect of alcohol increases considerably as the oxygen in the air decreases and the air becomes thinner. This means, of course, that it takes a smaller quantity of alcohol to intoxicate at a high altitude than it would on the ground or at sea level.

I have heard it said on many occasions that there is a time and place for everything. If this saying is true, then the time and place for consuming alcoholic beverages is certainly not while an aircraft is in flight several thousand feet above the ground.

Those are my principal reasons for proposing this legislation. Since I introduced my previous bill in the 84th Congress and S. 4 in the 85th Congress, I have become more convinced than ever of the vital need for enactment of this legislation into law. As I said previously, I had not talked to the pilots and stewardesses associations when I introduced my first bill. Also, I had not received the hundreds of letters, many of them relating personal experiences of danger in the "flying saloons." Since then, the practice of serving these beverages has become even more widespread.

I hold in my hand, Mr. Chairman, a page from the February 20, 1957, issue of the Washington Post and Times Herald which contains a very large advertisement by United Air Lines on its red carpet service to San Francisco. Included in the red-carpet treatment furnished their passengers, according to the ad, is the choice of cocktails.

Here is how the ad describes the red-carpet service:

"You feel very special walking down the thick carpet to board the world's fastest airliner—the giant DC-7. And each new red-carpet extra adds to that feeling: Your soft, deep-cushioned seat. The choice of cocktails. The special meal that's placed before you—thick, juicy steak or other luxury entree with gourmet trimmings. The club-like lounge. The trays of French pastry and chilled fruit with rare cheeses. All these and more—and all at no extra fare. Enjoy red-carpet service the next time you travel."

Under this arrangement, Mr. Chairman, United Air Lines—and this is not the only airline serving cocktails aloft—is forcing their passengers who do not drink to share the barroom tab for those who do.

Besides that, Mr. Chairman, I have been informed by a spokesman for the Air Transport Association of America that the airlines are not supposed to include mention of alcoholic beverages in their advertisements. I understand that this is a part of the association's two-drink-per-customer voluntary code which was issued shortly after my bill was introduced and shortly after the House approved the Lane bill during the 84th Congress.

I charge here today, Mr. Chairman, that the voluntary code is a fraud and that it was adopted for the purpose of heading off passage of the Lane bill, which was approved by a unanimous vote in the House last year. According to information I have received, the code is not being enforced in other respects. This assertion will be backed up by testimony to be given later in the hearings by flight crews from the various airlines who must bear the stigma of doubling as barmaids and flight stewardesses.

The flight crews have pointed out to me that even if the code were enforced properly there is nothing to prevent the passengers from bringing their own bottles and requesting chasers from the stewardesses. This is exactly the manner in which some passengers have successfully skirted the code in the instances when it was being enforced. My bill would take care of this loophole in the code by prohibiting the serving or consumption of alcohol while in flight.

In closing, I would like to say that this is not a question of whether one condones or condemns drinking. Personally, I do not indulge in the use of intoxicating beverages for my own reasons. The question to be answered here, however, is in terms of safety and the welfare of our citizens who are using the airlines as a mode of transportation in increasing numbers every day. I hope this subcommittee will provide this needed protection as the House of Representatives attempted to do by a unanimous vote in the 84th Congress.

By the way, Mr. Chairman, it is my understanding that the full committee intended to favorably report the House bill during the waning hours of the 84th Congress but was unable to do so because of the last-minute rush to adjourn. I regret that I was temporarily out of the Senate at that time, and I hope that the rush to adjourn this year will not prevent favorable action by the subcommittee, the full committee, and the Senate.

I ask permission to have inserted in the hearings at this point several letters from among the hundreds I have received on this subject.

[From the Philadelphia Inquirer of August 23, 1957]

Drunken Passengers Imperil Planes

It seems a bit thick to us to say that an airline pilot's judgment is, to be trusted on virtually every issue, except whether drunken passengers on planes constitute a safety hazard.

Testifying in opposition to bills prohibiting serving of liquor aboard planes, Stuart G. Tipton, president of the Air Transport Association, declared: "If this legislation were actually justifiable on grounds of safety, there would be no possible argument against it."

Well, the Airline Pilots Association, composed of men who operate the planes and who have the actual responsibility for safety in the air, has told a Senate committee that 23 airliners have been seriously endangered in flight by drunken passengers during the past 2 years.

The pilots' report shows:

Four instances of drunken passengers forcing their way into the cockpit; three instances of emergency landings to remove drunken passengers whose conduct was threatening the plane's safety; eight cases of tipsy passengers creating such a disturbance that flight crew members were forced to leave their jobs in the cockpit to handle the crises; three instances of drunken passengers damaging windows, doors, or pressurizing devices in flight; five cases of drunken passengers creating fire hazards; three cases of drunken passengers carrying guns.

These are actual experiences of pilots and crew members. And the fliers' union comments: "It would be a matter of extreme negligence to assume that it is not necessary to take preventive action until after a fatal accident."

The argument is advanced that there is no recorded instance of a plane crash due to drunken passengers. But many crashes have been unexplained, with no survivors to tell whether the answer to any of them lay with the drunken conduct pilots complain about.

This is not a question of prohibition; it is a question of safety. It is not a question to be decided by polls, but by commonsense, and the light of experience.

The Airline Pilots Association has cited chapter and verse concerning the perils of drunks aloft. We cannot believe these men are qualified to judge every safety factor about airplanes, except the danger of passenger drunkenness. We accept their word. Most thoughtful Americans will, too.

ERECTION OF NATIONAL MONUMENT SYMBOLIZING THE IDEALS OF DEMOCRACY

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar 892, Senate bill 2363.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read by title, for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk. A bill (S. 2363) to authorize the erection of a national monument symbolizing the ideals of democracy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs with amendments on page 1, line 4, after the word "to," where it appears the second time, to strike out "The" and insert "the", and in line 5, after the word "Foundation", to strike out "Incorporated" and insert "a corporation organized under the laws of the District of Columbia", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to grant authority to the National Freedom Shrine Foundation, a corporation organized under the laws of the District of Columbia, to erect a national monument as contemplated by the act of August 31, 1954 (68 Stat. 1029), in accordance with plans and designs approved by the National Monument Commission, the National Capital Planning Commission, the Secretary of the Interior, and the National Commission of Fine Arts, and in accordance with all the provisions of such act. The United States shall bear no expense with respect to the erection of such monument.

(b) In the event the construction of such monument has not begun within 5 years from the date of the enactment of this act, the authority granted herein shall terminate and be of no further force or effect.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendments be considered and agreed to en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendments will be considered en bloc; and, without objection, the amendments are agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, the committee has unanimously recommended the passage of this measure.

No expense to the United States will be incurred as a result of the enactment of this bill.

The National Monument Commission, a bipartisan group, was created by the act of August 31, 1954 (68 Stat. 1029), to prepare or secure plans and designs for a monument to the five freedoms to be erected on the so-called Nevius tract adjacent to Arlington Cemetery and directly across the river from the Lincoln Memorial. The plans were to be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, the National Capital Planning Commission, and the Commission of Fine Arts. The act also required subsequent legislative authorization for the actual construction of the monument.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill (S. 2363) was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed,

The title was amended, so as to read: "A bill to authorize the erection of a national monument symbolizing the ideals of democracy in the fulfillment of the act of August 31, 1954 (68 Stat. 1029), 'An act to create a National Monument Commission, and for other purposes."

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the vote by which the bill was passed be reconsidered.

Mr. ALLOTT. Mr. President, I move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Frear in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. ALLOTT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there may be printed at this point in the Record statements by myself and by the distinguished junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. Neuberger].

There being no objection, the statements were ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Statement by Senator Allott

I speak in total support, and with emotion and personal conviction of the deepest order, asking the confirmation of the great work to be undertaken for the Nation to achieve the purpose of Public Law 742, previously passed by this body, of which S. 2363 is an authorization to proceed.

Educators have complained of the enormous difficulties in finding sparkling, inspirational approaches to interest American youth in the Republic's history through the old classroom techniques of books and lectures. No person is qualified to be entrusted with the management of our times who is unaware of the magnificence of American history. No people in all civilization's history who have been indifferent to these ideals and aspirations have ever survived.

Public Law 742 of the 83d Congress undertook to put in motion an instrument to make American history and the understanding of our Constitution and the Bill of Rights a live, spirited, affirmative experience for every American for all time to come. The National Monument Commission, established by Public Law 742, undertook to perform this great function and set about securing the plans and designs for a useful monument to our Nation which would symbolize our ideals as embodied and spelled out in our Declaration of Independence, and the Constitution in the Bill of Rights. This Commission was instructed by Congress to seek a memorial to our heritage which would be above all partisanship, giving emphasis above every contention of political parties, and above every division of religious thought. Above all things, it was to provide a means for the American people to stand clearly united before the whole world in their dedication to the great aspirations and deeds of our Founding Fathers.

Senator Richard L. Neuberger, Senator John Sherman Cooper, Senator William Kerr Scott, and myself were named to represent this body on that Commission. Congressman Wayne Aspinall, Congressman Robert E. Jones, Congressman Lawrence H. Smith, and Congressman Jack Westland were named by the Speaker of the House. President Eisenhower, under the terms of Public Law 742, named four eminent Americans: Mr. Spencer T. Olin, Chairman, of East Alton, Ill.; Mr. Don Belding, of Los Angeles, Calif.; Mr. Hugh Comer, of Alabama; and Col. Thomas H. Barton, of Arkansas, as public members. The legislation required comprehensive effort in establishing a Federal commission. Extensive hearings over a period of 3 years have been held by the Commission. There have been many, many meetings in consideration of great volumes of detail. After 2 years of intense study of the monuments of the world, as well as all of those in the United States, and of the methods by which they were planned, financed, and built, the National Monument Commission, a most objective, businesslike, and inspired group, approved the design for this great memorial to be placed on the Virginia side of the Potomac in the area known as the Nevius tract, directly across from the Lincoln Memorial, with the Iwo Jima Marine Memorial as a major flanking asset and adjoining Arlington National Cemetery. After lengthy considerations running into 3 years, the Fine Arts Commission formally approved the Freedom Shrine plan which we had selected. It was also approved by the National Capital Planning Commission after extensive studies and hearings. These two great commissions, whose integrity is unimpeachable, have now as always protected the esthetic integrity of our Nation's Capital, of this great tract of land, and of the citizens of Virginia whose lands approach the Freedom Shrine.

Here are some simple facts which follow the approval of the three Commissions: The approval of the Department of the Interior, the approval of the Bureau of the Budget, and the approval of the President of the United States. I might add that 221 chief and associate justices of State supreme courts throughout the entire land have indicated their approval of this project as a great force for good citizenship and have contributed a token dime at the time they enrolled themselves as a national committee in support of the Freedom Shrine project.

We must keep in mind that at no one spot in America is there such a monument. It has to be viewed piecemeal now at Valley Forge, Williamsburg, Boston, or the Great West. With this national monument, a great review of American history and principle will at last be seen in one place.

Long ago Turgot said: "This people is the hope of the human race." We all know this to be true for atheist world communism has swept 900 million people back of its bloody curtain during the last 8 years. We have seen the great nations of the world fall. We have seen others trapped. We have seen still others who have lost their way because they have lost the guiding faith. Dr. Kenneth D. Wells of the National Freedom Shrine Foundation said: "This bill would seek to undertake the financing for the construction of this freedom memorial. The time has come for the historic strengthening of the United States of America. Principle must rule passion. It is seemly to spell out basic concepts of American events and aspirations so that all ages to come for 1,000 years and more may stand fast with the faith that has made men free. Individuals and nations alike take their greatest inspiration from the continued remembrance of a glorious past. It is essential that American history be permanently rooted in this Republic's quest for freedom and liberty under God."

General of the Army Omar N. Bradley, the man who led the largest land armies in the history of warfare, has accepted the chairmanship of the Board of National Commissioners of the National Freedom Shrine Foundation. He stated: "I feel this monument to freedom will stand as an American symbol of our pledge to the world that we will eternally serve in this cause. The Freedom Shrine project brings noble men and noble ideas together, without thought of personal income or other compensation, to serve our democracy. The Freedom Shrine project will place upon imperishable stone for all to see the mighty concept of freedom and liberty which marks the American way of life. We have here the marriage of the great work of the Freedoms Foundation at Valley Forge through the years and the magnificent vision of the officials of the Hall of our History who sponsor this project, which gives a symbol to the world of the most powerful weapon in this global fight against tyranny, a monument to the principles of freedom. In addition to serving as an arsenal of democracy, we must remember that we are also regarded as the arsenal of hope."

I believe that the lengthy studies, meetings, and research of the National Freedom Shrine Foundation have given us the great gift of prophetically envisioning our patriotic needs for the future. That concept which our commission has approved, and which has also been approved by the Fine Arts Commission, the National Capital Planning Commission, the Department of the Interior, and the President, is deeply needed as a focal point of rededication of men's minds everywhere. This shrine will take the form of a beautiful court, open to the sky, with walls 30 feet thick and 90 feet high, starting with the inscription from the Mayflower compact, "In the name of God, America," and including the great elements of all of America's history done in stone and including for all time the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution cut in stone in words a foot high. This will indeed be a pilgrimage center for freedom fighters from all over the world. I am firmly convinced that with the Freedom Shrine located here it will focus national and world attention on it and will provide the Statue of Liberty of our time, expressing principles and magnitude of the American dream.

This is the American age. We have by the inexorable course of events fallen heir to the responsibility of world leadership. These walls of history will show how people of many countries came to build our land into the wholeness of personal liberty. This American age requires us to set forth our past clearly before the world and establish for all the world to see the ideas by which freemen must live. Here is the place, the time, the substance, where other countries can move from the defensive ideas of containing communism or socialism. We can turn the eyes of our fellow man into affirmative attack for the freedom of the individual away from what has so often been merely condemnation of evil communism. The people of the world watching this game between freedom and tyranny must know that our team, the American team, no longer shouts: "Hold that line," we shout with conviction: "We want a touchdown." We want to see the world aflame for freedom with the reactionary Communist order on the defensive on every square foot of God's world.

The purpose of the Freedom Shrine is to endlessly advocate the dignity of man. President Eisenhower, knowing of the work of Freedom's Foundation at Valley Forge, on November 24, 1952, before his first inauguration said:

"I hereby affirm that I have presented Kenneth D. Wells, president of Freedom's Foundation, Inc., on Saturday, June 28, 1952, one 1942 Liberty dime. This dime was given to open national contributions from Americans, whoever they are and wherever they may be, to implement the purpose of erecting in our National Capital a monument to America's basic beliefs. Thus we will show the world our Nation's fundamental belief in God, our constitutional government designed to serve and not to rule the American people, and our indivisible bundle of personal, political, and economic rights. This symbol of our free dynamic society might bear the faces of Washington, Franklin, Jefferson, and Lincoln. It will give to each oncoming generation a reminder of the price of freedom in the past and present, and of our purpose of living harmoniously together, permitting the creative spirit of man to reach its highest aspirations, to seek its own destiny, and to serve in the cause of freedom for its fellow man."

Congress, by giving wholehearted, vigorous endorsement to this magnificent work, will inspiringly solve the challenging purpose of the Congress of the United States in Public Law 742 of the 83d Congress.

The National Freedom Shrine Foundation, a nonprofit corporation incorporated in the District of Columbia, is independent and affiliated with no sectarian or religious group or political party. It may not lobby, it expresses no viewpoint on any issue, any American may become a member by subscribing financial support. It is organized to perform the will of Congress and it will be dissolved when the National Freedom Shrine is built and properly turned over to the Department of the Interior, as the law provides. The National Freedom Shrine Foundation contains the natural affinity of the two spirited ideas of the Freedom's Foundation at Valley Forge and of the Hall of our History. They have united in patriotic marriage to serve this cause, which will nurture the idea and ideals of the American age.

Chairman of the board of commissioners, General Omar N. Bradley; vice-chairman, Dr. Arthur Schuck, chief scout executive, Boy Scouts of America; vice-chairman, Mrs. Olive Ann Beech, president, Beech Aircraft Co.; vice-chairman, Charles M. White, chairman of the board, Republic Steel Corp.

National commissioners represent every geographic area in America and every religious and political group of this land and include chief justices of more than 10 States in the country, 15 nationally known educators of scholastic and collegiate life and further include the whole original membership of the National Monument Commission. President Eisenhower has accepted the honorary national chairmanship, and former Presidents Herbert Hoover and Harry S. Truman have been invited to serve as honorary national commissioners.

The board of governors of the National Freedom Shrine Foundation, under the Chairmanship of Spencer T. Olin, includes Vice Chairman Charles F. Palmer of Atlanta, Ga., and Don Belding of Los Angeles, Calif. Dr. Kenneth D. Wells has accepted the Presidency of the National Freedom Shrine Foundation. A remarkable staff of distinguished citizens, withdrawn from their usual duties to serve the Nation, are immediately prepared to start this task. The national board of commissioners and governors will be drawn from such people as General Lucius D. Clay; Dr. John Krout, Provost of Columbia University; the Very Reverend Theodore Hesburg, president of the University of Notre Dame; Dr. Fred Fagg, president of the University of Southern California; Arthur Hays Sulzberger; Dr. Milton S. Eisenhower; Mr. Y. Frank Freeman; Mr. John L. Lewis; Mr. Fred Maytag II; Mr. Robert V. Fleming; Mr. Sid Richardson; Dr. Horace Mann Bond; Chief Justice Carl V. Weygandt, past chairman of the Association of Chief Justices of State Supreme Courts; Mr. George Meany; Mr. Paul Manship; Mr. Horace Albright; Dr. Raymond Allen, chancellor of U. C. L. A., our own Senate Chaplain Frederick Brown Harris; the recently retired Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Adm. Arthur W. Radford; and great numbers of others who have put their interest and time and support behind this great concept. Plans are made for a comprehensive total program to raise the $23,950,000 this will require by asking the schoolchildren of this country, the near 45 million of them, to each earn a few nickels, a dime or two, a quarter or more, so that all of them may personally participate in this vast effort that America may remain free. By National Freedom Shrine Foundation and approved by the National Monument Commission, all funds received from children and individuals for the Freedom Shrine will be placed in total in an escrow account usable only for construction costs. The essential overhead staff expenditures—printed materials, publicity, and all operational financial needs will be met by application to the great financial foundations and tax-exempt educational funds of corporations to cover these overhead costs. This guarantees the total integrity of the project, in addition to which all policy officers will be nonsalaried, working as a love's labor. The question has been raised: How do we know that this great project will raise enough money to complete it? The answer is simple. The Department of the Interior, as it has done historically, will, in its contract with the National Freedom Shrine Foundation establish that work will proceed only when the great majority of funds are on hand and officially committed.

My fellow Members of the Senate, I come proudly today to tell you that the eminent architect, Eric Gugler, has been selected to do the supervision of this artistic work, after long consideration with all the Commissions. The historical detail will be accurate and under the full supervision of 12 or more of the Nation's outstanding historians. This vast work will contribute mightily to the value of Federal and private citizens' property values on the Virginia shores of the Potomac. This has the complete approval of the Marine Iwo Jima Memorial group. This will not obstruct the view or property of Virginia citizens, for the top of the great Freedom Shrine wall will not be any higher than the trees on the Nevius tract.

The Chaplain of the Senate said not long ago: "On the significant day of beginning for the Freedom Shrine, our Congress and all American citizens will proclaim the dignity of peoples and individuals throughout the world for America is the beacon of freedom. We must be responsible for bold acts. The Freedom Shrine is a bold act for God and country."

Dr. Milton Eisenhower said: "If we can counter the materialistic Communist ideology and the religious zeal of its adherents with a dynamic faith in God and a clear knowledge of what the free system truly stands for, we will be firmly under way on the road to victory in the moral struggle which today envelops the world."

The New York Times said: "We need reminders in granite and in bronze of the pains endured and the sacrifices made by men and women of flesh no more enduring than our own * * * it should stand forever as human beings measure time, and we may hope that the blank spaces on these walls will be enriched over the generations by new records of human valor and enduring wisdom."

Judge Learned Hand said: "We hope by a fitting portrayal of outstanding instances in which those who have gone before us staked all upon the eventual justification of that belief, that we shall fortify our own acceptance of the risks at which they did not flinch. For, make no mistake, the battle is not won, nor will it ever be won. Each generation must decide how far it will seek refuge in eternal and immutable verities rather than grope its way through the tangle of human passions and human credulity. It is our hope that these walls by their beauty and splendor will reaffirm in those who visit them the faith of their predecessors, and inspire them with a resolve not to prove truant to their example."

The great time is ready; years of work have been done; every consideration has been given.

I call your attention to the fact that this requires no Federal money. It is all America, above partisianship. It will be the teachable center of principles and ideals. I believe it is a heroic deed for leading citizens such as these to come forward voluntarily and invest great sums of money and work in order to prepare this.

This American age is coming alive. Over our rostrum is a motto: "E pluribus unum"—one out of many. Over the east entrance, the sculpture "Patriotism." Others over the west and south entrances tell of this Nation's march to take a bold lead in the American age, casting aside the inconsequential and holding the principles of our Nation above the fog and confusion of these times.

I ask the passage of Senate bill 2363.

Statement by Senator Neuberger

I should like to associate myself with the support voiced by my friend from Colorado [Mr. Allott] in advocating this worthwhile and impressive undertaking. I applaud the patriotic impulses of the Senator from Colorado, which have impelled him to be the principal sponsor of this great Freedom Shrine Monument.

The able Senator from Colorado and I together have the honor of representing the Senate on the National Monument Commission, where we speak respectively for our two parties. That is why we are allied as joint sponsors of the great monument to democracy and freedom, which soon will be erected in the vicinity of the national capital.

I also wish to commend Dr. Kenneth D. Wells, the Director of the Freedom Foundation at Valley Forge, who has provided the principal stimulus for this proposal. Dr. Wells is a man of profound spiritual convictions and great patriotism. He was in my office in furtherance of this project, even after he had just suffered a slight heart attack and when he should have been accepting the counsel of his physicians to rest and to withdraw from such strenuous activity.

The fact that this monument will represent the concerted generosity of schoolchildren and others across our broad land will give it additional significance and meaning. It will not be remote and impersonal. It will be alive and tangible. It will embody what the illustrious Jefferson envisioned, when he foresaw a country enshrining life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

In addition, I wish to commend two members of the Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committee who have helped to bring this national monument bill before the Senate so promptly—the chairman of the full committee, the distinguished senior Senator from Montana [Mr. Murray] and the able chairman of the Public Lands Subcommittee, the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'Mahoney] who kindly arranged for a speedy public hearing at the request of Senator Allott and myself, so that a number of constituents of the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Robertson] might make their views known regarding the location and prospective financing of the project.

CONVEYANCE OF PORTION OF UNITED STATES MILITARY RESERVATION AT FORT SCHUYLER, N. Y., TO STATE OF NEW YORK

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1136, House bill 4609.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk. A bill (H. R. 4609) to further amend the act entitled "An act to authorize the conveyance of a portion of the United States military reservation at Fort Schuyler, N. Y., to the State of New York."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, the purpose of the bill is to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Army to relinquish restrictions on use and modify reserved rights of reentry in an undefined part of the former Fort Schuyler Military Reservation, a portion of which was conveyed to the State of New York pursuant to the act of September 5, 1950, and which is now being used for a maritime academy and for other defense uses.

The bill enables the State of New York and the city of New York to proceed with a new bridge to link the Boroughs of Queens and the Bronx, with some of the supports to be erected on a portion of the Fort Schuyler Reservation, and with the bridge proper to pass over other parts of the installation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill (H. R. 4609) was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TARIFF TREATMENT OF ISTLE OR TAMPICO FIBER

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 882, House bill 7096; and I request the attention of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Lausche] and the Senator from Texas [Mr. Yarborough].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read by title for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk. A bill (H. R. 7096) to amend paragraph 1684 of the Tariff Act of 1930 with respect to istle or Tampico fiber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance, with amendments, on page 1, after line 8, to insert:

Sec. 2. The amendments made by the first section of this act shall apply only in the case of articles entered for consumption, or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption, during the 3-year period beginning on the day following the date of the enactment of this act.

On page 2, after line 2, to insert:

Sec. 3. (a) Except as provided in section 4 of this act, no tariff or customs duty shall apply with respect to a beta-ray spectrometer, complete, consisting of a magnet unit, motor-generator set, and control rack, which is entered or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption by Stanford University, Stanford, Calif., for use at such university in connection with research for the Office of Naval Research and the Alfred P. Sloan Foundation, Inc., New York, N. Y.

(b) Subsection (a) shall apply whether such beta-ray spectrometer is entered, or withdrawn from warehouse, for consumption before, on, or after the date of the enactment of this act. If the liquidation of such entry or withdrawal has become final, such entry or withdrawal may be reliquidated and the appropriate refund of duty may be made.

And, after line 17, to insert:

SEC. 4. Section 3 of this act shall apply only so long as title to the beta-ray spectrometer entered or withdrawn free of duty under such section is vested in Stanford University. In the event that title to such spectrometer becomes vested in any other person after such entry or withdrawal, such spectrometer shall become subject to all duties imposed thereon by the revenue laws in force on the date on which such title becomes so vested. Such duties shall be assessed according to the appraised value on the date on which such title becomes so vested, with due allowance made for depreciation from handling and use.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio will state it.

Mr. LAUSCHE. What bill is now before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is Calendar No. 882, House bill 7096.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, that was not the bill the Senator from Texas [Mr. YARBOROUGH] and I have asked to have considered.

CLARIFICATION OF ALASKA PUBLIC WORKS ACT

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending bill be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1112, Senate bill 2535.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read by title for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 2535) to amend the Alaska Public Works Act to clarify the authority of the Secretary of the Interior to convey federally owned land utilized in the furnishing of public works.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas?

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, the Committee on Public Works reported the bill unanimously, but it appears that the House has passed a similar bill, H. R. 8646, so I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of H. R. 8646, and that Senate bill be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs is discharged from further consideration of House bill 8646.

Is there objection to the present consideration of House bill 8646?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 8646) to amend the Alaska Public Works Act—Sixty-third United States Statutes at Large, page 627; title 48, United States Code, page 486, and the following—to fy the authority of the Secretary of the Interior to convey federally owned land utilized in the furnishing of public works, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 2535 is indefinitely postponed.

BEAR CREEK BRIDGE, MARYLAND

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1116, H. R. 6363.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 6363) to amend the act of May 24, 1928, providing for a bridge across Bear Creek, Lovel Point, Baltimore County, Md.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, all this bill does is to permit another bridge to be built in Baltimore County, which will be paid for by the local authorities, and will not cost the Federal Government one cent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be offered, the question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION FOR THE FISCAL YEAR ENDING JUNE 30, 1958

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. YARBOROUGH. I yield to the distinguished Senator from Arizona.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives as to H. R. 9379, the Atomic Energy Commission appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9379) making appropriations for the Atomic Energy Commission for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1958, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. HAYDEN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. HILL, Mr. ANDERSON, and Mr. THYE conferees on the part of the Senate.

RIGHTS OF VESSELS OF THE UNITED STATES IN TERRITORIAL WATERS OF FOREIGN COUNTRIES

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order No. 861, S. 1483, and I ask the minority leader to notify the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WILLIAMS], who desires to be heard.

I call to the attention of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. LAUSCHE], and the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. YARBOROUGH] that I am moving that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 861, Senate bill 1483, reported by the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON], to amend the act of August 27, 1954, relating to the rights of vessels of the United States on the high seas and in the territorial waters of foreign countries.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 1483) to amend the act of August 27, 1954, relating to the rights of vessels of the United States on the high seas and in the territorial waters of foreign countries.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce with amendments, which amendments were agreed to on August 9, 1957 (see CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 14242).

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I wonder if the junior Senator from Texas is prepared to explain the bill at this point, or if he would prefer that the absence of a quorum be suggested.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. Whatever is agreeable to the majority leader.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield the floor so the junior Senator from Texas may be recognized.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. Mr. President, Senate bill 1483 proposes to amend the existing law, the act of August 27, 1954. In 1954 the United States Congress enacted a law to protect the rights of vessels of the United States on the high seas and in territorial waters of foreign countries. The purpose of the law was to give protection to American fishing boats in the Gulf of Mexico and in the Pacific Ocean which were being seized by foreign countries, sometimes when they were 200 miles from any land, on the claim that the waters on which they were seized belonged to Ecuador, Mexico, or some other country.

The law enacted in 1954 provided for reimbursement of owners of such fishing boats for fines extorted from them by foreign countries. The Secretary of State always negotiated to get the fishing boats released.

The proposed amendment of that law provides protection for seamen shot on such ships and provides for payments to widows of those who are killed.

It further provides that the Secretary of State must determine that any payments made are just. The claimant has no recourse from the decision of the Secretary of State.

The bill also includes a provision, added as a result of action by the committee, that the Secretary of State shall take action to collect money from foreign countries on account of such claims so paid.

Under existing international law, owners of vessels are powerless to protect themselves. The conduct of international diplomacy is in the hands of the State Department. Fishing boats cannot mount their own cannon and engage in warfare. Since the conduct of our foreign affairs is in the State Department and since the Department wisely, I think, pursues a good-neighbor policy, the only way to protect fishermen is for the Federal Government to pay whatever the foreign governments levy against them, whether it be fines or the seizure of fishing gear, or if the lives of fishermen are taken—and then have the State Department take action against the foreign country which has wronged our shipping and fishermen to see that such country makes restitution to this country.

While these incidents have arisen in the Gulf of Mexico and in the Pacific Ocean primarily, passage of the bill would afford protection to any vessel anywhere which was flying the American flag. If Red China seized a ship off Formosa, and we refused to defend it, under this bill it would be the duty of the Government to pay the owner and to present a claim to the country seizing the ship.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. YARBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Does the bill seek to take care of the problem which arose in the Gulf of Mexico a short time ago, when ships of the Mexican Government came out beyond the 3-mile limit and seized shrimp fishermen?

Mr. YARBOROUGH. The Mexican ships came out beyond the 3-mile limit or the 12-mile limit.

Mr. LONG. As a matter of fact, in that instance the fishing boats were so far out at sea that they were not even in sight of Mexican land. Is that correct?

Mr. YARBOROUGH. They were so far out in the gulf that they could not be seen from land.

This problem has arisen from time to time. We have an existing law. The bill merely extends the existing law to cover the loss of fishing gear and other matters.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. YARBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. MORTON. Are there safeguards in the bill so the fact as to where the vessel was must be determined?

Mr. YARBOROUGH. Yes.

Mr. MORTON. I ask the question for this reason. If the captain of a ship knows the United States Government is going to pay a fine or whatever else is involved, he is likely to follow a school of shrimp to the beach. I want to be sure it is clear that if a fisherman violates international law the Government is not obliged to bail him out.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. I think the question asked by the Senator from Kentucky is a good one. I point out this language in the bill, which appears on page 2, beginning on line 15:

> The determinations of the Secretary of State and the amounts certified by him under the provisions of this section shall be final and conclusive and not subject to review in any administrative or judicial proceeding.

So under the provisions of the bill, there would be no reimbursement for a fine if a fishing vessel ran in close to the shore of a foreign country and stole shrimp, if it was within the territorial waters of that country. The master of the vessel could not file a suit in court and depend upon the verdict of a jury. The Secretary of State is made the final arbiter. That provision was put in the bill so the Secretary could make the determination, and we know the Secretary of State is not going to claim jurisdiction over territorial waters of foreign countries.

Mr. MORTON. But the Secretary of State would determine the fact as to whether or not the ship was or was not within 3 miles of the shore?

Mr. YARBOROUGH. The Secretary of State would adjudicate that fact.

Mr. MORTON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. YARBOROUGH. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Is it not a fact that if the bill is passed, the Government of the United States becomes the absolute indemnitor of an American national operating a vessel of any type whatsoever on the high seas when such operator has suffered damage through violation of international law by a foreign government?

Mr. YARBOROUGH. The bill is intended to protect an operator of a vessel when a foreign government itself is responsible for violations. It is not intended to protect operators of vessels against pirate ships or private vessels. The bill provides that there shall be reimbursement for damage as a result of action of a foreign government. It does not protect any American shipper where private parties interfere with his rights. It is intended only to keep our international relations in the hands of the State Department, and give protection only if a foreign government, through its war vessels or official vessels, seizes an American ship.

Mr. LAUSCHE. That is, if an American vessel were seized by a foreign government, our Government, under this bill, would agree to indemnify the operator of the vessel for any losses sustained. That is what the bill provides, as I understand.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. It is substantially that. I would not say all losses. There was stricken from the bill the language appearing on page 1, lines 9 and 10, which provided "all expenses incurred by them as a direct result of." That language was stricken out, but the bill does provide for reimbursement for gear, and so forth.

Mr. LAUSCHE. That is, if the ship is seized, the loss will be indemnified?

Mr. YARBOROUGH. If the ship is seized by a foreign nation.

Mr. LAUSCHE. The Government would idemnify all loss of equipment, fish, and provisions on the ship?

Mr. YARBOROUGH. Yes.

Mr. LAUSCHE. May I put this question? If this principle were carried out further, would not the United States Government be obligated to indemnify the operators of aircraft which are shot down over China and over Russia?

Mr. YARBOROUGH. Not under this proposed law.

Mr. LAUSCHE. I mean if the principle were extended.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. It would have to be extended; not under this principle, because under this principle it would apply only where vessels are lawfully using a highway. American ships have just as much right to be in the middle of the ocean, which is a highway, as a citizen has the right to have his automobile on a highway, because oceans are highways. Flying a plane across the land of another country is not the same as being on a public highway which all nations can use, and a different principle is involved.

Mr. LAUSCHE. My difficulty with this proposition lies in an extension of the very principle which the Senator from Texas has declared. If this principle were applied to damage done to an automobile on a highway, why would not the State be required, through an extension of this principle, to indemnify every citizen who has suffered damage through a violation of a law?

Mr. YARBOROUGH. Because this bill is in the field of international relations and applies only when the act is done by a foreign government. A man might have 40 collisions on the high seas, and might lose his ship each time, and this act would have no application, since it applies only when foreign governments are involved.

I should like to say to the Senate that the testimony from the different governmental agencies showed that the total amount of claim filed from 1950 to the present time does not exceed the amount of $300,000.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. YARBOROUGH. I yield to the distinguished Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. Is this situation not distinguishable from the situation described by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. LAUSCHE], in that it involves an area where the United States affirmatively declares that our seamen have the right of freedom of the seas to go into the area?

Mr. YARBOROUGH. The distinguished Senator from Louisiana is correct.

Mr. LONG. This involves a situation where our seamen, based upon a declaration of our Government that they have a right to go into the area, go into the area, and their ships are seized by a foreign power, in the judgment of our Government completely illegally; and the foreign power refuses to respond to its duty under international law to indemnify our seamen for damages the foreign government does. In that case our State Department and our Government can elect to indemnify our seamen, when they were in an area where the Government has told them they had a right to be.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. The distinguished Senator from Louisiana is eminently correct. It only applies to that limited area where our vessels are operating and as to which our Government has said, "You have a legal right to go there." This refers to the high seas.

Mr. LONG. With reference to the enactment of a bill of this sort, there would be a distinction between the type of situation the Senator from Ohio [Mr. LAUSCHE] described, if such happened on the highways of a State, or with reference to aircraft within the United States, where there is a right for a person to proceed against the Federal Government or against the State government if the Federal Government or the State government is at fault, or to proceed against a private citizen. The reason we need this kind of a law is that the foreign government refuses to make payment for damages for which it is liable under international law, and there is no recourse whatever available to the private citizen of this country.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. Under the amendment to the bill, adopted by the committee, with which the distinguished Senator from Ohio is familiar, this bill would make it the duty of the Secretary of State to present such claims to the foreign government, to pursue collection of whatever amount had been spent in reimbursing the seamen.

Mr. LONG. As a practical matter, with the experience we have had in the Gulf of Mexico, some of those who have owned fishing boats have not had sufficient resources, money, or ability to try to bring pressure upon the Mexican Government, and there has been no way for them to obtain recourse, when that Government has wrongfully seized their vessels. This bill would require the State Department to move in and attempt to obtain satisfaction from the foreign government, and would give the State Department the right to indemnify our seamen in the event that no recourse could be obtained from the foreign government.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. That is the exact situation. The Senator from Louisiana has stated the situation exactly.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, I think the question which we shall have to answer, in consideration of the bill, is as follows: Shall the Government of the United States adopt a policy of becoming the guarantor to its citizens for any losses sustained by them due to a transgression by a foreign government of international law?

To answer that question I submit that inquiry first has to be made: Where, if ever, has the Government agreed to indemnify its citizens when their rights have been violated either by a fellow citizen or a national or another government? Are we to adopt the policy that we will guarantee to all vessel operators and all aircraft operators complete indemnity for all losses sustained due to a violation of international law by a foreign government? To me that policy forbodes a tremendous expense and involvement.

The State Department opposes the bill. The Bureau of the Budget opposes the bill.

In a letter addressed to the chairman of the committee, the State Department made this statement:

> The items for which the proposed measures would provide compensation out of public funds are in reality claims against foreign governments. They are but one segment of a countless variety of claims by United States citizens against foreign governments throughout the world. All such claims are based on conduct of the foreign government claimed by this Government to have been improper or illegal. It may be pointed out the cases here invoved are no different, for example, from claims arising out of the shooting down of planes in international airspace over the high seas, in which claims have not been paid out of public funds.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LAUSCHE. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. WILEY. I have not had occasion to study the bill. I am very much interested in what the Senator says. I desire to ask a question.

Are these carriers engaged in activity for the Government or as agents of the Government, or are they engaged in their own business activities?

Mr. LAUSCHE. The bill contemplates providing full indemnity for every vessel operator under the flag of the United States when the vessel operator's rights have been violated due to a transgression of international law. These operators are not working for our Government, but instead are private operators on the high seas or in the air.

Mr. WILEY. Engaged in their own business?

Mr. LAUSCHE. Engaged in their own business.

Mr. MORSE and Mr. CLARK addressed the Chair.

Mr. LAUSCHE. I yield first to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE].

Mr. MORSE. I am very much interested in the use by the Senator from Ohio of the word "involvement." I have not had the opportunity to study this bill as carefully as I should like to, though I have been scanning it during the last 10 minutes.

There are some very unstable conditions in the world, in some of the so-called backward areas, with weak governments and corrupt governments. Am I to understand that under the bill if an American shipping company's ship, we will say, goes into a canal in State X, and the shipping company also has holdings in State X, be they rubber plantations or manufacturing plants, and a conflict develops between the shipping company and the government of State X, after which State X seizes the ship in the canal, the taxpayers of the United States will have to pay indemnity?

Mr. LAUSCHE. If it were in an international water it would be construed to be a violation of international law. If it were within the waters of the government seizing the ship, this bill would not cover it. Is that a correct understanding?

Mr. YARBOROUGH. The Senator from Ohio is correct. It would not cover any seizure within the territorial waters of a government. The Secretary of State must certify it to be an incident on the high seas, or the bill would have no application.

Mr. MORSE. Let me take the ship out of the canal.

I happen to be chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations which deals with American Republics Affairs. We have been greatly concerned in the past several years about some seizures in South American waters, where there have been disputes over fishing rights and over the boundaries of international waters, and some ships have been seized. Am I to understand that, if we consider the act of seizure violates international law, the fishing fleets will be indemnified?

Mr. LAUSCHE. Exactly. If the Secretary of State determines that the wrong was committed when the vessel was in international waters in violation of international law the people of the United States will indemnify the vessel operator for all losses sustained—for seizure of the ship, for payment of the fine, for detention of the personnel, for confiscation of the fish, and for confiscation of the provisions on the ship. The United States becomes a full indemnitor.

Mr. MORSE. That brings up for consideration again the word the Senator used, "involvement." I can see many possibilities for involvement which selfish interests could help promote, where they could say, "Well, we do not have anything to lose. We are going to be indemnified."

From what committee did the bill come?

Mr. YARBOROUGH. From the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, before this debate is over I am going to make a motion to refer the bill to the Committee on Foreign Relations, so that the committee will at least have an opportunity to study the bill, because I think it involves not only foreign commerce but a great many foreign relations problems.

As chairman of the Subcommittee on South American Affairs, I am very much concerned about this bill. We have before our subcommittee at the present time many problems. I am waiting for Mr. Rubottom, the head of the Latin American Desk at the State Department, to return from Buenos Aires, to get some briefing from him on some of the problems before our subcommittee in regard to alleged confiscations in South America.

I am not ready to vote for a bill this afternoon to make this kind of commitment, until the State Department at least has been given an opportunity to testify before the Foreign Relations Committee on the possible effects of the bill on American foreign relations.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, no hearings were held on this bill.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LAUSCHE. The bill is retroactive to 1950.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LAUSCHE. I yield.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. I beg the Senator's pardon. Hearings were held before the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee. I was not the only Senator who was present when hearings were held.

This principle has been law since 1954. The bill would extend further protection. This is not a new principle in American law. This principle was established when Admiral Decatur defeated the Barbary pirates. We now use the good-neighbor policy, rather than guns. This principle has been the policy of the Government from the beginning. It has been the policy of our Government to protect American shipping on the high seas.

The Senator from Oregon says that selfish interests might be involved. Certainly there is a selfish interest when a ship operator builds a ship, registers it under our flag, and takes it across the sea. He expects to make a profit. It has been the principle of the Government from the very earliest days, from the time when the clippers went around South America to China, in the 1700's, to defend our shipping on the high seas.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LAUSCHE. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Like the Senator from Oregon, I know very little about the background of the bill, but I do have the privilege of owning some property in the great State of Louisiana. I know that there is many a poor man in that State who owns a small shrimp boat. He goes out into the Gulf of Mexico, hazarding his fortune, to collect shrimp. He comes back and sells the shrimp—and they are excellent shrimp, too—to make a precarious living in a hazardous occupation.

I come from a State which is not directly involved in this situation. I know that those people, at great hazard to their lives, have been picked up on the high seas by the forces of foreign governments, and their fortunes have been destroyed by illegal and improper international action on the high seas, far beyond the territorial waters of Mexico.

I believe very firmly that the Senator from Texas is quite correct in stating the principle that these individuals should be given the support of their Government when they go out in this entirely proper and appropriate way to make a decent and honest living, and their fortunes are taken away from them by the arbitrary action of a foreign government, against which they have no redress.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, let me say in answer to the Senator from Pennsylvania and the Senator from Texas that the policy of the State Department until 1954 was to try to negotiate with the foreign governments the payment of the claims of the American vessel operators. It was only in 1954 that the shippers persuaded the Congress to enact a bill indemnifying them for the fines paid.

The camel's nose was thrust into the tent in 1954. Now the purpose is to extend coverage for all losses sustained.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LAUSCHE. I yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I was interested in the statement of the Senator from Texas that hearings had been held. I wonder if the Senator from Ohio will yield to me in order that I may ask unanimous consent that a copy of the hearings be placed on the desk of each Senator, in order that he may read the testimony.

Mr. LAUSCHE. It is my understanding that no hearings were held.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator from Texas, in charge of the bill, stated that hearings were held. If they were, copies of the printed record should be available. I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the hearings be placed on the desk of each Senator at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. YARBOROUGH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LAUSCHE. I yield.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. The basic hearings of 1954 were on Senate bill 3594.

Mr. WILLIAMS. This is 1957. I am speaking of the hearings on the pending bill. Have hearings been held on this bill and if so are they available?

Mr. YARBOROUGH. This year there were extensive hearings in the House. Documents were submitted to the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce from the various departments. They are printed in the report.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understood the Senator to say that hearings were held, and that he was present when hearings were held.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. I was present when the letters from the departments were discussed and read. I construed that to be a hearing.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Were there any public hearings?

Mr. YARBOROUGH. The documents are printed in the record.

Mr. WILLIAMS. We do not consider letters from a department as constituting a hearing. Was there any testimony from the State Department representatives before the committee, either in objection to or in support of the bill? Did others testify? If so, where is the record?

Like the Senator from Oregon, I believe that we are dealing with a major policy decision and one which I think should be considered not only by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, but also by the Foreign Relations Committee. If there are no printed hearings available, action on this bill should be postponed.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. The House hearings this year were printed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. We are dealing with the recommendation of the Senate committee. Senate committees usually hold their own hearings. I think an excellent point has been made, that Members of the Senate are entitled to examine a copy of the hearings on legislation of this type.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. The question was discussed. Letters were received from the Department of State, the Department of Justice, the Comptroller General, the Treasury Department, and the Department of Commerce. The letters are all dated in March or April. They are printed with the report.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But the letters are against the bill.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. I do not so construe them.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What persuaded the committee to report the bill? There must have been some testimony from some one who was for it?

Mr. YARBOROUGH. I think the basic reason which persuaded the committee to report the bill was that it is a just bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But there must have been some testimony from someone to support it. All the letters from the Departments are against it.

Mr. YABOROUGH. There have been hearings since 1954. Additional testimony was taken in the Alaskan fisheries case in 1955. Testimony was also taken relative to tuna and shrimp fishing in the Pacific. Vessels were being seized 200 miles off the coast of Ecuador.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I call attention to the fact that although hearings were held in 1950 and 1955, the Senate took no action based upon those hearings. Evidently it was concluded that action based upon those hearings was not justified.

Yet we are asked today to make this bill retroactive to 1950.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio has the floor. Does he yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield to me for a moment?

Mr. LAUSCHE. I shall be glad to yield in a moment.

The report contains letters written by the Department of State to the chairman of the committee. I know that no testimony was taken from witnesses. The bill was taken up in full committee, and reported to the Senate. I dissented from the general recommendation. It is correct to say that these letters were received by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for one question?

Mr. LAUSCHE. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. Am I to understand that the Department of State has recommended against the bill?

Mr. LAUSCHE. If the Senator will read my statement of individual views, on page 17 of the report, he will find the following:

> In commenting on the measure, which was eventually enacted as Public Law 680, the Department in a communication of July 1, 1954, to the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the Senate opposed the measure on the ground:
>
> (a) It was believed that the proposed legislation would be provocative;
>
> (b) That it would tend to increase controversies with foreign countries by encouraging American citizens to disregard their laws; and
>
> (c) That its enactment would not be desirable from the standpoint of the foreign relations of the United States.

Mr. MORSE. That was in 1954. Has the Department changed its views?

Mr. LAUSCHE. It has not changed its views.

The Bureau of the Budget sent a letter dated June 7, 1957, before the report was printed. The Bureau of the Budget states:

> The Department of State has now been advised that, for the reasons set out in our report and because of the potential budgetary impact which enactment of this bill (and subsequent legislation which might result from the precedent thus established) could have, the Bureau of the Budget is opposed to the enactment of H. R. 5526.

The State Department is opposed to it. The Bureau of the Budget is opposed to it.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LAUSCHE. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I do not wish to ask the Senator from Ohio a question. I merely wish to make a very simple statement about the bill.

The State Department has always opposed the bill. When our seamen were seized—as they were—off the coast of Ecuador and in other places, the State Department had the responsibility of dealing with the Government which seized our seamen illegally.

The Senator from Ohio and I agree that that is piracy. But the State Department goes along month after month and does nothing about it.

All the bill would do would be to provide that those who are seized illegally shall have the protection of their Government. There is some question as to whether the high seas are beyond the 10-mile limit or the 200-mile limit. I could cite case after case in which seizure was made more than 200 miles off the coast of South America.

In the meantime, these seamen are seized. I know of one man who is in the hospital in Seattle. In the course of one of these seizures he was shot. That is why the bill is made retroactive in its provisions. I suppose I should introduce a private bill for that man. Perhaps I should. I do not know. At any rate, the State Department does very little about these situations. No one acts. All the bill would do would be to provide that when our people are seized illegally, or when their catch or their boats or their gear or their nets are seized illegally, they can make application to the State Department for reimbursement for their losses. The State Department would pass on the applications, and then the State Department would negotiate with the foreign government involved. That is all the bill amounts to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. MAGNUSON. I should like to finish. It may be the wrong procedure to follow. However, the bill has been motivated by the fact that the State Department never does much about it. One of the prominent cases is the Arctic Maid case. A man seized on that boat is in the hospital, crippled for life. The State Department has been negotiating with the Government of Ecuador. I do not know how many months it has been negotiating with that government.

We held hearings in Alaska, and we held hearings in Seattle. The Senator from Kansas was present at the hearings. We looked into this whole matter. The House bill, I understand, limits the liability.

Mr. LAUSCHE. The House has a bill——

Mr. MAGNUSON. It limits liability, does it not?

Mr. LAUSCHE. It limits liability and removes the retroactive feature going back 8 years.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I may be wrong in my figure, but I believe there are only 7 or 8 cases that are retroactive, in which the State Department has done nothing.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Does the Senator from Washington not realize the danger of establishing the principle of the United States Government undertaking to guarantee it will indemnify its citizens for losses sustained either through violation of international law, treaty, or otherwise?

Mr. MAGNUSON. No. We say the State Department defines the limits of the high seas. If the State Department says these people were illegally fishing or in illegal waters, the State Department will not consider the case. If they were legally fishing and were in legal waters and were seized, they are entitled to apply to the State Department. We want to give them an opportunity to file their claims.

Mr. LAUSCHE. It provides that they shall be paid.

Mr. MAGNUSON. The Department is to negotiate with the country involved, to indemnify the United States.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I should like to read a paragraph from the State Department's letter.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, do I have the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Frear in the chair). The Senator from Ohio [Mr. Lausche] has the floor.

Mr. LAUSCHE. I yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator from Washington has not completed his remarks, I shall be glad to wait.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I thank the Senator. The bill deals with people who have been illegally seized on the high seas. What it amounts to, Mr. President, is piracy. The Mexicans have been going out into the Gulf and seizing Americans. They are doing it, apparently, because we passed the tidelands oil bill, in which we said that we own the water out to 150 miles from shore. The Mexicans say, "That is not correct. We do not agree." So they seize the shrimp boats. Several such incidents have occurred. I believe they are mentioned in the committee report. All we say is that the people who are hurt should have the opportunity to apply to the State Department.

Mr. LAUSCHE. They can apply, but if the State Department finds they have been injured, in violation of international law, the United States Government must reimburse them fully for all losses sustained by them.

Mr. MAGNUSON. The bill does not so provide. The State Department passes on each case.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LAUSCHE. I yield.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Why must the State Department pass on the cases?

Mr. MAGNUSON. Because there is no treaty with Mexico dealing with rights in the gulf waters in connection with the fishing for shrimp.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LAUSCHE. I shall be happy to yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I wish to apologize for coming into the Senate and joining in the debate at this time. I was engaged in conference committee on another matter, and I heard that the bill was under consideration, and that is why I came to the floor. I thank the Senator from Ohio for yielding to me.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator from Washington has said the purpose is to protect the American nationals. I wish to read from the State Department letter, which indicates that the bill goes further. It reads:

> The Department would call your attention to the fact that occasionally one or more foreign nationals are included in the crew of an American fishing vessel, particularly in the case of American shrimp boats operating in the Gulf of Mexico where the seizure problem has been greatest. As now written, S. 1483 makes no distinction between American and foreign crewmen. It would seem inappropriate and not in keeping with what is understood to be the basic aim of this proposed legislation to install a reimbursement plan whereunder the United States might be called upon to bear losses sustained by nationals of another country. Moreover, in its present form, S. 1483 could conceivably lead to a situation where the United States would find itself in the position of underwriting the expenses incurred by, or paying a death benefit with respect to, foreign nationals on account of acts of their own government.

I should like to know whether the committee has corrected the bill in that regard, or whether that provision is still in it?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I believe the junior Senator from Texas could answer the question.

Mr. LAUSCHE. I yield to the Senator from Texas. I believe that has not been corrected. The House has corrected it. However, I yield to the Senator from Texas for the purpose of answering that question.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. I call the attention of the distinguished Senator from Delaware to the star print of the Senate bill, at page 2, lines 5 and 6. That language limits the applicability of the bill to United States citizens. That is in the star print. It applies only to United States citizens.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LAUSCHE. Before I yield further, I should like to submit that if the principle is adopted we will have air carriers coming to Congress asking that they be indemnified. I further submit that there will be probably 10,000 American citizens, whose properties were seized behind the Iron Curtain, coming to Congress for relief. They will be asking the Government to indemnify them for all losses sustained through the violation of treaties, and so forth. I now yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I thank the Senator for yielding. I may be wrong, but I believe it would be a mistake to adopt this principle. We complain about the satellites of Russia. All the bill would do would be to make economic satellites of the people who live south of the border. I feel that in my heart. I do not care who knows it. That is what the bill would do. We would not send soldiers there. We would simply make economic satellites of those people, and squeeze them. That is what we would do if we passed the bill. I thank the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. LAUSCHE. If we should pass the bill we would be saying to the State Department: "Fire it out on the high seas. Use your battleships to protect American citizens. Unless you do, we will indemnity fully the American citizens whose rights have been violated." I submit that is a dangerous principle to adopt.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LAUSCHE. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. I did not know that the bill would be discussed this afternoon. I am convinced, from what I have heard, that we should have the State Department representatives appear before us in a formal hearing. This is one of the most troublesome problems with which the Committee on Foreign Relations has had to deal in connection with our neighbors in South America. I believe the Committee on Foreign Relations should have an opportunity to look into the subject. I have no desire to take jurisdiction away from the committee headed by the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON]. I believe the precedents are clear that the committee of original jurisdiction can hold jurisdiction of a bill, but that another committee with an interest in the matter can also be granted by the Senate the right to look into it from the standpoint of the jurisdiction of that committee.

I see on the floor the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER]. He sits on the subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations which deals with South American affairs. I am also a member of that subcommittee. I want him to know that I have suggested that no action be taken on the bill until at least the Committee on Foreign Relations or our subcommittee has an opportunity to call in State Department officials in connection with the problem.

Before the Senator from Iowa came on the floor, I announced that I was waiting for Mr. Rubottom to return from the Buenos Aires conference. We owe it to the Senate and to the Committee on Foreign Relations to make our record before we go along either with passing or rejecting the bill.

I would rather work the matter out on the basis of a gentleman's agreement, instead of making a motion, to postpone action until the Foreign Relations Committee can make an independent investigation. I understand it would be in order to make such a motion, and I shall make it unless we can agree to lay the bill aside until the Committee on Foreign Relations can go into it.

I am not one who is particularly jealous of the jurisdiction of any committee. I insist, however, that I have an obligation to the Senate, particularly when this matter is of such grave importance, and I believe we should look into it before legislation is passed which might be upsetting under the circumstances.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I do not have the floor.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, I yield first to the Senator from Iowa; then I shall yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, I agree with what the Senator from Oregon has said. The bill involves a policy decision and relations between governments. It seems to me it would be essential for the Committee on Foreign Relations to look into the matter. I know nothing of the details of the bill. I have read about it in the newspapers from time to time. I am frank to say that while I cannot pass on the merits or demerits of the situation, I have been shocked that American boats should be seized on the high seas and confiscated. By the same token, I have seen nothing which has convinced me that the American Government should invite our boats to go into a position of danger and then simply indemnify them. There is a very grave question of freedom of the high seas involved. It is a Foreign Relations matter. I shall not vote for the bill this afternoon, although I may eventually vote for it. Not that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce does not have an interest in the bill, either; but I certainly think the Foreign Relations Committee should consider the bill and should hold hearings on it.

Therefore, I could not support passage of the bill this afternoon. I would be opposed to its passage, not because of the principles involved in the bill, but because of the procedural situation existing on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield to me?

Mr. LAUSCHE. I yield.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I thank the Senator from Ohio for yielding to me.

Mr. President, this matter involves the rights of certain American citizens on the high seas. The State Department has not done what it should in protecting their rights. If the State Department is asked to help them, but the State Department says, "No," then such persons are without means of obtaining their legal rights or making claim for damages, if they have been hurt.

I believe there are eight or nine instances of this sort, and the situation is very serious. As a matter of fact, in 1812 the United States fought a war over a similar matter.

In view of the fact that many Senators, including the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. LAUSCHE], who has been very fair about the matter, think action should not be taken on the bill at this time, I am perfectly willing to have the bill go over, in order to see what can be done about it.

Mr. LAUSCHE. I think the bill should go over.

Mr. MAGNUSON. But the situation in the case of the persons who are hurt is every serious, indeed.

As I have said, the United States fought a war over a similar matter in 1812.

All we say is that if a man is fishing on the high seas and is minding his own business—in a part of the world where the State Department says he has a right to be—if he is hurt, he certainly has the right to be indemnified by the United States, if the State Department refuses to take action to have the country which is responsible for the damage to indemnify the person who is hurt or refuse to take action to adjust the matter. For instance, in some of these cases Peru is involved.

Those who have been hurt have been doing what they are entitled to do on the high seas; but the State Department has dragged its feet in connection with having them reimbursed in any way. That is the only reason for the bill.

I agree that the bill involves many questions, some of them international questions. Perhaps the Senator from Texas [Mr. YARBOROUGH]—who has worked very hard on the bill—will tell us about the situation with which he is particularly familiar. For instance, at this very time the situation involves many of the shrimp fishermen in the Gulf of Mexico.

The bill is retroactive. It also involves some tuna fishermen from Puget Sound, who were affected several years ago, while fishing on the high seas off the coast of Ecuador.

One who reads the details of these incidents will find that his hair is almost standing on end. One case involved the confiscation of a ship while it was fishing 250 miles off the coast. The ship was confiscated and the crew of the ship was put in jail.

I understand the concern of other Senators about this matter. Perhaps the bill should be considered by the Foreign Relations Committee; I do not know.

But the Senator from Texas is only trying to protect those who go on the high seas to fish. Is that not correct?

Mr. YARBOROUGH. That is correct.

Mr. MAGNUSON. In 1812, the United States fought a war over a similar situation. We do not want to have the United States have to fight a war over this one.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield to me?

Mr. LAUSCHE. I yield.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. In response to the statements which have been made by the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Washington, let me say that I have no objection to having the bill go over.

However, I should like to point out that in the case of the shrimp fishermen in the Gulf of Mexico, sometimes the entire crew of a shrimpboat is composed of a captain and the mate. They sail their boat a thousand miles into the Gulf of Mexico, to catch shrimp. The sum total of the catch of all those fishermen in 1 year is $100 million. But when a shrimpboat captain, who has a mortgage on his boat, finds that his boat is seized, he has no power to defend himself, for then his boat is gone, and all he owns is invested in the boat.

On the other hand, the collective value of the shrimp catch is $100 million a year. In addition, there is the tuna fishing on the west coast, where the fishermen operate all the way past the hump of South America.

The total claims in connection with this matter, from 1950 to date—all the claims together, as shown in the report on the bill from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce—amount to less than $300,000, for 7 years. But an important principle is involved in this case. The question is whether the United States Government will stand behind two shrimpers who operate their boat in the Gulf of Mexico, with the American flag at the masthead.

I agree that the bill may go over.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield to me?

Mr. LAUSCHE. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I should like to make a point in connection with this matter. This is not the first time that the Government of the United States has been asked to indemnify certain of its citizens who have been involved in international matters. In previous years the Government agreed to forego as much as $500 million owed to this country, on condition that the Government of West Germany would pay with interest, the owners of certain defaulted bonds of pre-World War II German governments and corporations. When the bill in connection with that matter was before the Senate, the Senate voted for it by a majority of approximately four to one.

On various other occasions, citizens of the United States have been indemnified because of the situation existing in connection with certain international matters.

In this case, some of the foreign governments involved have been given warships by the United States, and those ships have had value running into millions of dollars. Those very nations are able to use those warships, which were given to them by the United States, to seize American fishermen and to shoot both their boats and their bodies. Then our Government negotiates with those foreign governments, but the foreign governments do not see fit to do anything about the matter.

Our own State Department makes a fight on behalf of those foreign governments, before the Finance Committee of the Senate, in an effort to have the Congress give to them a considerable part of the sugar market of the United States. The United States also gives economic aid to these countries.

I am not objecting to that. But I say that when the same governments do great injury to American citizens, the United States should at least be willing to make some measure of payment—in this case $300,000—to indemnify the small crew of a shrimpboat or the crew of a tuna-fishing boat or other American citizens who have been injured unlawfully by those countries.

Especially is this just when the countries concerned, which receive enormous assistance from the United States, and this Nation for reasons of foreign policy fails to take strong measures to protect the rights of our citizens.

These countries are the recipients of aid to the extent of hundreds of millions of dollars worth from the United States. In this case, certainly the United States should be willing to devote a few hundred thousand dollars to indemnify some of its own citizens who have been abused illegally. To add insult to injury, we find that our own State Department continues to urge the giving of aid to those countries, but the State Department is not willing to help these injured citizens of the United States.

Mr. President, I am willing to have the bill referred to the Foreign Relations Committee or to any other committee. But I stand 100 percent on the side of these abused citizens; and when our own State Department is not willing to take action to help them obtain the relief to which they are entitled, I certainly shall do everything within my power to see to it that the relief to which they are entitled is made available to them.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield to me?

Mr. LAUSCHE. I yield.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, it is all very nice to talk about manifest destiny and to talk about the power of might. But I want to see to it that the dignity of the smallest country in Latin America is respected.

All of us are proud to be American citizens, and we are equally interested in seeing that the dignity and respect of the little fellow is observed.

In this particular instance, the persons concerned are those who send their ships perhaps 500 miles, to fish in the waters of some other nation. I think that is extremely unfair.

We talk about how nice the United States is to the countries of Latin America. We also talk about the sorry situation of the satellites of Russia. On the other hand, there seem to be some persons who would have all the countries of the entire Western Hemisphere made satellites.

I believe in maintaining the dignity of this country, and I also believe in maintaining the dignity of all other countries. I want the United States to get along with all her neighbors, and to follow the policy of live and let live.

But this bill would not let the countries south of the border live. So I shall vote against the bill.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President——

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield to me?

Mr. LAUSCHE. I yield.

PROCEDURES FOR THE PRODUCTION OF GOVERNMENT RECORDS IN CRIMINAL CASES

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, in view of the situation which exists in connection with the bill which has been the subject of discussion during the last number of minutes, I believe that the Senate should now proceed to the consideration of Calendar 577, Senate bill 2377; and I so move.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 2377) to amend chapter 223, title 18, United States Code, to provide for the production of statements and reports of witnesses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, with amendments.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION, 1958—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. O'MAHONEY obtained the floor.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator from Arizona always rises when he has a privileged matter to present. I know he wishes to submit a conference report, and I yield for that purpose.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9379) making appropriations for the Atomic Energy Commission for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1958, and for other purposes. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the report.

(For conference report, see House proceedings of today.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I move the adoption of the report.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9379) making appropriations for the Atomic Energy Commission for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1958, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

H. R. 6508. An act to modify the Code of Law for the District of Columbia to provide for a uniform succession of real and personal property in case of intestacy, to abolish dower and curtesy, and to grant unto a surviving spouse a statutory share in the other's real estate owned at time of death, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 9131. An act making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1958, and for other purposes.

PROCEDURES FOR THE PRODUCTION OF GOVERNMENT RECORDS IN CRIMINAL CASES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2377) to amend chapter 223, title 18, United States Code, to provide for the production of statements and reports of witnesses.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, on the 3d of June 1957, the Supreme Court of the United States handed down a decision in the case of Clinton E. Jencks, petitioner against United States of America. This decision was writted by Mr. Justice Brennan. With him were associated Mr. Justice Black, Mr. Justice Douglas, and Chief Justice Mr. Earl Warren, constituting four members of the Court.

Mr. Justice Whittaker did not participate in the opinion or in the preparation of the decision. Mr. Justice Burton submitted a concurring opinion in which Mr. Justice Harlan joined. This opinion was distinctive, in that it pointed out some criticisms of the reasoning of the majority opinion of the four Justices to whom I have referred.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Finally, Mr. Justice Frankfurter joined the concurring opinion.

I read from the opinion:

> Mr. Justice Frankfurter joins the opinion of the court, but deeming that the questions relating to the instructions to the jury should be dealt with, since a new trial has been directed, he agrees with the respects in which, and the reasons for which, Mr. Justice Burton finds them erroneous.

That was an opinion concurring with the majority.

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLARK] I believe had desired to ask a question which was answered by my reference to the participation of Mr. Justice Frankfurter.

Mr. CLARK. I apologize to my friend, the Senator from Wyoming. I merely wished to state there were five judges who joined in the opinion of the Court.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I thank the Senator.

Immediately after the decision was handed down, from coast to coast in this country there were misinterpretations and misconclusions as to the meaning of the decision. But there was language in the decision which caused many judges and many lawyers to believe that the decision had greatly modified the law with respect to the disclosure of Government files. Several instances of this have come to the attention of the committee, to one of which I should like to refer, because it is so recent. This was detailed in a report to the New York Herald Tribune, from Providence, R. I., dated August 19. I desire to read a few paragraphs:

> Judge Edward W. Day in United States district court, on the basis of the Supreme Court decision in the Jencks case, today invalidated five criminal convictions returned in May by juries, and dismissed the indictments on which the convictions were based.
>
> The Government announced that it will repeal the action. The Jencks decision was handed down June 3.
>
> That decision held that a criminal defendant has the right to examine Government reports relating to prosecution testimony against him and that if the Government does not produce the records for defense examination, then it must dismiss the criminal action.

In the Virginian Pilot, published in Norfolk, Va., August 13, 1957, there was an account of the action of Federal Judge Walter E. Hoffman, in a story written by Mr. Frank Blackford, as follows:

> Federal Judge Walter E. Hoffman said yesterday that he intended getting some instructions from the fourth circuit court of appeals on the application of the Supreme Court ruling in the Jencks decision of June 3.
>
> "I am not going to continue to acquit every defendant who comes into court," he told Assistant United States Attorney William F. Davis and Defense Attorney Philip L. Russo during arguments.
>
> The issue as it has been in many Federal court arguments since the June 3 decision, was just what the Supreme Court meant when it reversed lower court decisions regarding the production of records in the Clinton E. Jencks case.

Suffice it to say that the two quotations which I have given are sufficient to indicate the nature of the conflicting interpretations which have been recorded across the country. I have a file of numerous such decisions. Some of them have taken place in the same district, some in the same State, and some in the same circuit. There is a complete record of confusion as to what the meaning of the decision was.

The Committee on the Judiciary was much perturbed by these reports and misunderstandings and misinterpretations. Believing that it was essential to have prompt action, the committee authorized the Subcommittee on Improvements in the Federal Criminal Code, of which I happen to be chairman, to report a bill, which was drafted by the Department of Justice, and in which the subcommittee made some changes before the bill was reported to the Senate. This was done on the 1st of July. The subcommittee was authorized by the full committee to conduct further conferences with Members of the Senate and with the Department of Justice with respect to the exact language which ought to go into the bill.

On the 8th of July, just a week after the bill had been reported, as chairman of the subcommittee I offered a half dozen or more amendments, and had printed in the RECORD a clean copy of the text of the bill which would result from the adoption of those amendments.

Later we had another conference. Members of the committee, other Senators who were not members of the committee but who had indicated a great deal of interest in the measure, and administrative assistants of Members of the Senate who were unable to be present, were invited to attend the conference, as was true with respect to the Assistant Attorney General, Mr. William Rogers. In any event, after studious consideration of all the suggestions which were made, it was finally agreed, on the part of many of these conferees, that the best solution of the problem left to us was set forth in the proposed substitute amendment which I have had printed and which I shall in a few moments call up for consideration. This amendment is designated "8-22-57-D."

To be quite frank, I must say that before having this amendment printed I communicated with the Department of Justice by telephone, and was under the impression that the amendment was agreeable to the Department of Justice. On the following day, however, I was advised by Mr. Rogers that he was not in accord with that opinion.

Today Mr. Rogers has addressed a letter to the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, and, I think, to every member of the Committee on the Judiciary, in which he sets forth his disagreement with the proposed substitute amendment. I shall refer in a moment to the points of disagreement which he mentions.

I may say the amendment contains a reference to the Government agents to whom statements and oral reports by a Government witness may be made. In the text, before this amendment was drafted, the agents were defined as "Federal law officers." That was regarded as being too narrow a definition, and we changed that to "any agent of the Government." The distinguished junior Senator from New York [Mr. JAVITS] at the same time had picked out the same point to suggest an alteration, and he offered an amendment to be included in the first paragraph of the substitute amendment. It was quite acceptable to us, and so on page 2, line 1, of the substitute amendment designated "D" the amendment offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. JAVITS] will be found, referring to an agent of the Government.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. JAVITS. I am very grateful to the Senator from Wyoming for his statement about this amendment. In a few minutes I hope to discuss the substitute proposal, which I favor. I think we are facing a grave constitutional question, which the substitute successfully resolves.

I thank the Senator.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I thank the Senator from New York.

In order clearly to understand the issues before us, it might be well for us first to refer to the decision of the majority in the Jencks case, in the first analysis.

The defendant, Mr. Jencks, in April 1950, filed an affidavit of a non-Communist union officer with respect to his position in local 890 of the International Union of Mine, Mill, and Smelter Workers, and was charged with having falsified that affidavit. He was convicted in the trial court in the State of Texas, before Judge Thomason, and when the defendant filed a petition for a new trial the district court rejected the petition. The defense took the case to the court of appeals for the fifth circuit, where the conviction was affirmed.

It appears that during the trial two witnesses were sent by the Government to testify against the defendant. They were Harvey F. Matusow and J. W. Ford. In the language of the Supreme Court decision, they were Communist Party members, paid by the Federal Bureau of Investigation contemporaneously to make oral or written reports of Communist Party activities in which they participated. The Court goes on to say that they made such reports to the FBI of activities allegedly participated in by the petitioner, about which they testified at the trial. Then the Court said:

> Error is asserted in the denial by the trial judge of the petitioner's motions to direct the Government to produce these reports for inspection and use in cross-examining Matuso and Ford.
>
> Error is also alleged in the instructions given to the jury on membership affiliation and the credibility of informant.

The second error is of no importance in the consideration of the measure before us, but the first alleged error is.

It is known to all attorneys, and to all judges, I am sure, as well as to all members of the Judiciary Committees of the Senate and the House, and to the law officers of the Department of Justice, that a Supreme Court decision, or the decision of any other court, can be read and interpreted only in the light of the facts which were presented in the particular case.

So we are dealing here with the alleged error made by the trial judge and approved by the court of appeals in denying the petitioner's motions to direct the Government to produce the reports for inspection and use in cross-examining Matusow and Ford. It is essential, therefore, to remember that the only issue was with respect to the reports made orally to the agents of the Government by the Government witnesses when they were put on the stand by the Government of the United States to testify. The decision, therefore, does not go beyond the consideration of the procedure to be followed in making the reports of witnesses to a Government agent available to the defendant. But as it happens, the language in the decision is so broad that the misinterpretation to which I referred a little while ago has followed.

Let me make it clear that we are dealing here only with reports which witnesses themselves testified they made with respect to the activities which were alleged to have been participated in by the defendant.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am glad to yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. JAVITS. I wish to point out that the bill, by virtue of the amendment which I proposed, and which the Senator states has been adopted and is contained in the bill, limits the statements and reports which are referred to in the bill to those which have been made to a Government agent. So the bill does not affect existing law and practice in criminal cases, except as respects such statements and reports.

I believe that this answers a great many of the objections which have been made from many quarters to the bill as it formerly stood, without amendment.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I thank the Senator for his comment. I think it is in complete harmony with the point of view of myself and others who have participated in presenting the new amendment D. As a matter of fact, in our amended report, which was filed on August 15, we find this paragraph:

> In other words, it is the specific intent of the bill to provide for the production only of written statements previously made by a Government witness in the possession of the United States which are signed by him or otherwise adopted or approved by him, and any transcriptions or recordings of oral statements made by the witness to a Federal law officer—

That was written before the amendment offered by the Senator from New York was adopted—> relating to the matter as to which the witness has testified. The committee rejects, therefore, any interpretations of the Jencks decision which would provide for the production of entire investigative files, grand jury testimony, or similar materials.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. ERVIN. Does the distinguished Senator from Wyoming agree with me in the observation that perhaps much of the misconception of this decision in the country at large has been due to the fact that Mr. Justice Clark, in the dissenting opinion, stated, in substance, that the Court has opened the files to the criminal and thus afforded him a Roman holiday in rummaging through confidential information, as well as vital national secrets? I am of the opinion that much of the misconception about the decision was due to the statement in the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Clark.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am inclined to believe, with the Senator, that that was one of the factors which lead to this misconception; but I must attribute a part of it to the language of the Court itself.

Mr. ERVIN. I should like to ask the Senator if he agrees with me that when the decision is interpreted aright in its evidential aspect, it lays down the rule requiring the production of the documents by the Government to be applied only where these conditions exist:

First, a witness has taken the stand and testified in behalf of the Government in the prosecution against the defendant; and

Second, that the documents which are to be produced must be made or approved by that particular witness and be relevant to the testimony which that particular witness has given at the trial in the prosecution against the defendant.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I should like to make it clear by this bill that the documents and the reports, transcriptions, and records which are to be made available are only those records and reports made to the Government, in the possession of the Government, which relate to the testimony given by that witness.

Mr. ERVIN. I think the Senator has done a magnificent job in effecting that object by his proposed substitute. I was very much interested in the decision. After reading and studying it, I was in favor of the objective of the decision. The decision, as I construe it, is essential to the proper administration of justice. In my judgment the Senator from Wyoming, who has done a tremendous amount of work on this subject, has brought forth a substitute which preserves, in subtance, all the rights which the decision gave to defendants in respect to the benefit of relevant documents in the Government's possession, and at the same time makes it impossible for any defendant to engage in a fishing expedition among Government files. The substitute which the Senator has brought forth, as the result of a prodigious amount of labor, makes certain that the only documents to be produced constitute statements for which a Government witness is responsible; and that the only contents of such documents which are to be made available are those contents which are relevant to the testimony which the Government witness has given on the trial in the prosecution against the particular defendant.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator is quite correct.

Let me state it this way: There are two objectives of the bill which is now before the Senate. The first is to preserve the right of the defendant to due process of law; second, to guard the files of the Government against a fishing expedition, against the examination in the hope of finding something of an impeachable nature against the revelation of matters dealing with other cases, which are not relevant to the case at issue. The bill guards against the revelation to persons who could possibly use such information.

Mr. ERVIN. I think the Senator's substitute accomplishes the two objectives in an admirable way, and it has my wholehearted support.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I thank the Senator. I am very happy indeed to know that a Senator who has had such an excellent record as a judge joins in support of the proposal.

Mr. McNAMARA. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. McNAMARA. Mr. President, I enter this argument with some fear and trembling, because great legal minds in the Senate are now discussing the bill, and I recognize that fact in getting into the argument.

However, it seems to me that many of the judges of the Federal courts of the United States, since the Supreme Court decision, have taken a very reasonable attitude in interpreting the decision. I should like to quote for my friend, the distinguished Senator from Wyoming, a decision by a Federal judge in the sixth district of Michigan, Judge Frank Picard. I am sure the Senator from Wyoming knows the judge. He is quoted as follows:

> I do not believe that the decision is as broad as some attorneys and some courts think it is. It doesn't change the law a great deal, in my opinion.
>

I wish to point out to the distinguished Senator from Wyoming that another judge in the same court has so ruled within the past few weeks.

That is exactly what the bill would do, is it not?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I wish to call to the attention of the Senator the words which he has just quoted. They are the words of the judge, who said that the Jencks decision does not change the law a great deal.

Mr. McNAMARA. That is correct.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It is not the business of the court to change the law at all.

Mr. McNAMARA. What court?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Any court. The law is made by Congress, not by the court. The court may interpret the law. Therefore when the Michigan judge said the decision does not change the law a great deal, he was implying that it does change it to some degree. I want to clarify the decision, to make sure that there is no changing of the law.

Mr. McNAMARA. I, too, agree that I want to correct it, if it needs to be corrected.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am sure the Senator does.

Mr. McNAMARA. I submit to the Senator from Wyoming that the argument he made up to this point convinces me that there is much confusion.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am glad that I have convinced the Senator on that point.

Mr. McNAMARA. I think it is confusing to the degree, in such an important matter as this, that the bill should be recommitted to the committee and hearings should be held, so that everyone with an interest in the matter would have an opportunity to be heard. The questions involved are so far-reaching and so confusing, as the Senator has pointed out, that judges of the Federal courts are disagreeing. It is a matter on which public hearings should be held in order that we may consider a bill which has some substance to it. The decision of the Supreme Court affects the individual rights of citizens of the United States. We should not act hastily on such a matter. I am in favor of holding public hearings in order to get a good interpretation, if we are attempting to interpret the decisions of the Supreme Court. I question whether that is the role of our legislative body. What I have said is a layman's questioning of the point.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I say to the Senator from Michigan that the lawmaking power is ours, not that of the Court.

Of course we have the constitutional right, given to us in article III of the Constitution, to authorize the Supreme Court to make rules. So there is no question about our power. The reason I would oppose any attempt to recommit the bill to committee is that, in the first place, the misinterpretation and confusion, to which the Senator has referred, are the result of depriving the FBI of sources of information. I have sat on the Committee on the Judiciary and on other committees of the Senate for a long period of time. I have observed how the files of the FBI are gathered. For example, every person who is nominated to be a judge by the President of the United States, every person who is nominated to be a United States attorney, and every person who is nominated for any important position has his record examined by FBI agents. They go to the persons in the vicinity where the nominee resides and where he is carrying on his business, to find out what his character and reputation are among the people with whom he has been associating.

They always receive information from persons in confidence. It is confidential information. I was telling a newspaper reporter only the other day that it is not unlike a situation which sometimes develops outside in the reception room when a reporter comes to a Senator to obtain some information about pending legislation. The Senator interrogated will say, "Well now, this is what happened. I will tell you off the record, but don't quote me, because I don't want my name used in this connection."

That is the sort of information that is obtained, and it is of the greatest importance. As a result of the Jencks case those sources of information are drying up. The FBI is not getting the information it should have.

In order that the Senator may understand why some of us feel it is very important to act quickly, let me say that in a narcotics case tried in Pittsburgh shortly after the Jencks decision, the defense counsel sought the production and inspection of the entire Narcotics Bureau report after the Government agent had testified. The report covered the entire investigation of the case. The judge ordered the production of the entire report. When the United States attorney declined to produce it, the court summarily dismissed the case.

In such a report there would be evidence or charges or allegations against some other persons, who would not be on trial at all; perhaps there would be allegations against some other person, such as a narcotic agent or peddler of dope, against whom a new case would have to be brought.

Mr. McNAMARA. Will the Senator yield before he goes too far afield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is the sort of information which is revealed. The Government's case is exposed and the prosecution of the vile—I say that advisedly—peddlers of narcotics is brought to a halt. The Senator does not want that to happen.

Mr. McNAMARA. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. McNAMARA. The Senator can be sure that I do not want that. I like the example the Senator used previously to express my point. The Senator mentioned the FBI files and the investigation made of people who are to be appointed to public office. Having once been appointed to public office, and having had a Government agency make an investigation of me, in connection with the public office to which I was appointed—and it was a Federal office, I may say—I know they made a very thorough investigation, as the Senator points out. They went up and down the street on which I was living at the time and asked the neighbors whether I was a good citizen, and whether I beat my wife, and such things as that. I got the appointment.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Does the Senator really mean that? Is not the Senator exaggerating just a little?

Mr. McNAMARA. No; I am not exaggerating.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Where did he get that information?

Mr. McNAMARA. From the neighbors.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. They asked the Senator's neighbors whether the Senator beat his wife?

Mr. McNAMARA. We are getting away from the point.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator brought up that point.

Mr. McNAMARA. Let us discuss the bill, if the Senator wishes to discuss it, but let us not lose sight of the statement the Senator made in connection with the procedure he is discussing. That is what my neighbors told me. I have no proof showing that the agents really asked that question. But the people who were my neighbors for 10 years on the street told me so. I have the greatest confidence in those people, and I believe what they told me. Knowing the type of investigators who have come into my office when I held public office, and who have asked me questions, I can easily believe that an investigator might have asked that question. I do not believe the Senator from Wyoming is astonished by this.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am astonished.

Mr. McNAMARA. Getting back to the——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I have known FBI agents for more than 25 years, and I have every confidence in their character and integrity. There may be some who are not all they should be. Some mistakes may be made by them, but I say——

Mr. McNAMARA. We have no disagreement on that point.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I say of FBI agents what I say of all employees of the Federal Government, that their integrity is very high.

Mr. McNAMARA. I agree.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am here defending them.

Mr. McNAMARA. Very well.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator may attack them if he wishes.

Mr. McNAMARA. The Senator from Wyoming brought on this discussion, not I. I have tried to avoid it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Did not the Senator from Michigan ask me to yield to him?

Mr. McNAMARA. Let us get to the point.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Did not the Senator ask me to yield to him?

Mr. McNAMARA. Yes; I am asking the Senator to yield to me again.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator brought on the discussion.

Mr. McNAMARA. Very well.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McNAMARA. We might also discuss which came first, the egg or the chicken. I do not propose to do that. The Senator mentioned the example of the FBI investigating someone who is to be appointed to public office. I cannot quote exactly or verbatim what the Senator said on that point, but, in effect, he said that I might give the FBI man some confidential information about a man who is to be appointed to a Federal position, and that I do not want the source revealed. That is the very weakness, it seems to me, of the Senator's argument. I do not believe anyone should be convicted on a statement so poorly supported as that. I say we should recommit the bill to committee, and have a bill reported after hearings. We should not act hastily when we are dealing with a decision of the Supreme Court.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I cannot let the matter rest, because what the Senator says, assuming that evidence is based on criminal acts, is utterly wrong. I now yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wyoming yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BIBLE in the chair). Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. ERVIN. A while ago I pointed out that the Senator's substitute preserves a part of the Jencks' case decision which I think is very sound, namely, that the accused is entitled to the benefit of relevant documents in the possession of the Government.

As I understand, the original decision included the drastic ruling that where the Government elects not to produce a document, in response to the order of the court, the court is to dismiss the prosecution, even though there might be be a multitude of evidence from other witnesses, and even though the evidence contained in the document referred to might be relatively trivial.

As I understand the substitute as finally drafted, in the event the Government elects not to produce the document, in obedience to the order of the court, the court has the right to deprive the Government of the benefit of the testimony of the witness, who is the author of the document, by striking out his testimony.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The remedies are provided in subsection (c), which, as I now recall, is the draftsmanship of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLARK]. Let me read it:

> (c) In the event that the United States elects not to comply with an order of the court under paragraph (b) hereof to deliver to the defendant any statement, transcription, or record, or such portion thereof as the court may direct, the court shall take such action, including but not limited to striking from the record the testimony of the witness, declaring a mistrial, or ordering the dismissal of the indictment, as the interests of justice require.

Mr. ERVIN. In other words, the court has alternatives.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes, there will be three possible courses of action.

Mr. ERVIN. If the Government has substantial evidence, from the testimony of other witnesses, to establish the guilt of the defendant on the charge which has been made, the court can permit the Government to proceed on the basis of the testimony of the other witnesses, but the court could deprive the Government of the benefit of the testimony of the witness who is the author of the document which the Government refused to produce; is that correct?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is correct.

Mr. ERVIN. I think the amendment takes care of the Jencks decision in this respect. The Jencks decision went too far in allowing the Government only one course of action, namely, the dismissal of the case, if the Government did not produce the document.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I thank the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wyoming yield to me?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I rise to express my support of the bill, and to commend the able and distinguished Senator from Wyoming for the work he has done in connection with it.

It is my opinion that there should be no delay in the passage of the bill. The interest of the public and the interest of the Nation demand that the bill be passed at this session. I am convinced that we should not postpone action on the bill, but that the Senate should take action forthwith to pass this important bill.

I desire to read an excerpt from a clipping from the Christian Science Monitor of August 14, as follows:

> [From the Christian Science Monitor of August 14, 1957]
>
> NEW FBI FILES TEST COMING
>
> A new court test with respect to FBI files is already underway. Federal Judge Mac Swinford, of Kentucky, hearing a housing-fraud case, has ordered the FBI to produce certain documents in conformity with the Supreme Court decision in the Jencks case, which held that a defendant had a right to see relevant FBI evidence used against him in the prosecution.
>
> Acting on orders from Attorney General Brownell, a Kentucky FBI agent refused to produce the documents asked for by the defense in the case. Thereupon Judge Swinford cited the agent for contempt of court and gave him a suspended fine of $1,000 until October 18. The judge said it was a ruling that he very much hated to make.

Mr. President, unless the Senate acts on the bill at this session, it is my judgment that, in connection with the trial of other cases, it is quite possible, and indeed likely, that similar situations will occur.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. They are occurring every day, and that is one of the reasons why the bill should be passed.

Mr. President, if the bill were to be only 50-percent efficient, it would be 100-percent better than the confusion which has proceeded from the Jencks case decision. Congress will not adjourn forever, when this session comes to an end; Congress will return in January. If the protection provided by this bill, both to due process for the defendant and to preserve the proper secrecy of the Government's files, does not work satisfactorily, it can be reexamined at the next session. But certainly we cannot permit a continuation of the situation which now exists, which breaks down so sadly and so disastrously, in many cases, the ability of the Department of Justice to produce its evidence in an area of criminal action which is steadily growing greater and greater.

Mr. THURMOND. I am in hearty accord with the statement the Senator from Wyoming has made.

In the case to which I have referred, was it not a fact that the Department of Justice considered so important the protection of its files that it even permitted the agent to be fined, rather than to have the files opened up to the defendant in that case?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is correct.

Mr. THURMOND. Furthermore, unless that decision is corrected, is it not true that Communists will take advantage of the situation, to gain from the FBI files information which, in the hands of Communists, would be detrimental to the security of the Nation? Is it not also true that criminals will gain information which they really should not have and do not need and are not entitled to, in order to defend their cases? Is it not also true that narcotics peddlers and other violators of law in serious cases will gain an unjust advantage which will not be in the welfare of the public?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator from South Carolina is quite correct.

Mr. THURMOND. In connection with a bill of this kind, it seems to me we must consider the constitutional protections of the rights of the accused, and must balance them against the welfare and the rights of society. The decision in the Jencks case went entirely too far in one direction, and did not properly protect the rights of society.

As I understand this bill, which the distinguished Senator from Wyoming has brought forward, it will protect the rights of the individual, and at the same time will attempt to protect society. Is that correct?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator from South Carolina is quite correct—just as the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. ERVIN] was correct, also, in saying that we are trying to preserve what was sound in the Jencks case decision.

Mr. THURMOND. I wish to commend the distinguished Senator from Wyoming for sponsoring the bill and for what he has done in connection with it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I appreciate that very much.

Mr. THURMOND. Many Senators feel that the Senator from Wyoming is properly regarded as one of the greatest constitutional lawyers in the Nation.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina is overly generous.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wyoming yield to me?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, all of us are very grateful to the distinguished Senator from Wyoming for the work he has done in bringing into focus the decision which was rendered in the Jencks case.

It is my intention to support the amendment he offers, if I can be sure the amendment means exactly what it says. But my support will be based upon grounds different from some which have been advanced here thus far. In making that statement, let me say that I have very profound regard for the Senator from South Carolina, who has just spoken.

If I shall support his amendment it will be because I believe it is in conformity with the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States, and because it does not in any way interfere with due process accorded a defendant.

At this time I should like to ask a few questions, if I may, for the legislative record.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I shall be glad to have the Senator from Kentucky do so.

Mr. COOPER. First, let me say that I agree with the Senator from Wyoming that the opinion of the Supreme Court in the Jencks case has been misunderstood and misconstrued very widely, by many persons. As does the Senator from Wyoming, I believe that the Jencks case was raised upon a very limited issue. He has described the narrow issue which was before the district court. The subsequent reversal was made upon that narrow issue.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The trial judge denied the motion of the defendants for the production of the oral statements of the witnesses, which they acknowledged on the stand. The court denied the motion, without stating a reason therefor.

Mr. COOPER. I should like to point out what I believe is one of the misunderstandings which seems to me to have been prevalent in connection with the discussion of the Jencks case. I know the Senator from Wyoming will agree—because he has studied the case more than any of the rest of us—that the issue in the case was limited to the question of the production of the records for one purpose, which was for use upon cross-examination, and to test the credibility of witnesses.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is correct.

Mr. COOPER. No demand was made that the Government records be produced in advance of the testimony of an adverse witness, for the purpose of enabling Jencks to help prepare his own case in chief. I think the Senator from Wyoming will agree as to that.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes, I agree completely.

To amplify what the Senator from Kentucky has said, I wish to read from the opinion of the court in that case; and this bears out what the Senator from Kentucky has just said:

> The petitioner moved for an order directing an inspection of the reports of the witness Ford to the Federal Bureau of Investigation dealing with each of the meetings which he said that he attended with the defendant Jencks in the years 1948 and 1949.

It is clear from that statement of the Supreme Court that the petitioner had asked only for that particular kind of statement, and for nothing else.

(At this point Mr. O'MAHONEY yielded to Mr. JOHNSON of Texas for a statement regarding the civil-rights bill and debate ensued, all of which, on request of Mr. O'MAHONEY and by unanimous consent, was ordered to be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of Mr. O'MAHONEY'S speech.)

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, I should now like to return to the pending subject, which is of great importance. I should like to resume my discussion of the issues involved in the Jencks case.

I support the proposed amendment to the bill, to be offered by the Senator from Wyoming, because I believe it is in conformity with the basic holdings of the Jencks case, yet at the same time clarifies some of the misconceptions which have arisen.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It is in conformity with the holding of the majority opinion in the Jencks case.

Mr. COOPER. Yes.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That a defendant, in facts related to the case, when he moves to have the records of the oral statements of a Government witness made available to him, after he has testified, is acting correctly; but the decision is not correct if it assumes the revelation of these papers must be made to the defendant initially, and not to the court. The amendment makes it clear that when the Government claims the papers are not relevant or competent they must be presented to the court in chambers.

Mr. COOPER. I should like to point out again that as I understand the decision of the court and as I understand the amendment, its procedure is in conformity with the decision of the Supreme Court. The question raised was as to the right of the defendant, upon a proper showing and after laying a proper base, to secure certain prior statements of witnesses—I shall describe them a little bit later—and then only for the purpose of testing the credibility of the witnesses who had testified against him.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator is quite correct.

Mr. COOPER. I emphasize the issue because I have received a good many letters regarding the matter, which indicate a belief that the decision had a much larger scope. One was from a very well known organization which contains this language:

> There has been no attempt by the Government to comply with the reasonable implications of the Jencks decision. Under this decision the Government could, when it intends to call a witness, make any evidence that such witness has given against the defendant available to the defendant.

I think the Senator will agree with me that there was no such holding in the Jencks case.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I think that is correct.

Mr. COOPER. In addition, to the limitation of which we have just spoken that records shall be produced only for cross-examination, there is the second limitation that records would be produced only after a witness had testified.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is correct.

Mr. COOPER. The third limitation I see in the bill relates to the content of the statements which must be produced. I quote from the holding by the Court:

> We now hold that the petitioner was entitled to an order directing the Government to produce for inspection all reports of Matusow and Ford in its possession, written and, when orally made, as recorded by the FBI, touching the events and activities as to which they testified at the trial.

So, as to the nature of the reports which must be produced when demanded properly and the proper base shown, it would be those reports which touch and relate to the testimony of the witnesses adverse to the defendant.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. "The events and the activities as to which the witness testified at the trial." That is precisely what the court held. It is precisely what we make clear in this bill. No other matters—matters not dealing with the testimony of the witnesses—are included.

Mr. COOPER. I should like to read for the information of Senators rule 26 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure:

> In all trials the testimony of witnesses shall be taken orally in open court, unless otherwise provided by an act of Congress or by these rules. The admissibility of evidence and the competency and privileges of witnesses shall be governed, except when an act of Congress or these rules otherwise provide, by the principles of the common law as they may be interpreted by the courts of the United States in the light of reason and experience.

A few minutes ago the distinguished Senator said that the Congress must make the rules. My interpretation of rule 26 is that if the Congress has not made a rule relating to a specific issue, such as we are now discussing, then, the court, following rule 26, would make its rulings, following the principles of the common law, as the court would interpret such in the light of reason and experience.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. And the courts would make the rule.

Mr. COOPER. Yes.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It is probably proper to invite attention to the fact that Congress authorized the court to make the rules in the first place. As rule 26 says, it is the court which is trying the case, which decides what evidence will be admissible and what evidence will not be admissible.

Mr. COOPER. I wish now to state to the Senator the problems which have troubled me about the Senator's amendment. I ask his opinion as to these problems. They are three in number.

As I interpret the opinion, when a witness has testified adversely to the defendant, and the defendant desires to test his credibility, and therefore asks for an order directing the production of statements which the witness had made to the FBI or to any other Federal agency prior to the trial, then it is the duty of the United States Government to produce those statements.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is my understanding.

Mr. COOPER. Within the limitations we have just discussed.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. Within those limitations, does the Senator's bill provide that all of the statements which have been made by the witness prior to his testimony at the trial, if they are in the custody of the Government, shall be produced? That is the first question which concerns me.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. All the statements that have anything to do with the activities concerning which the witness has testified.

Mr. COOPER. We have agreed in our discussion, and it is my belief that the court so stated—that there are limitations upon the statements which must be produced. Recognizing those limitations, does the Senator say that his amendment provides that within those limitations all the prior statements of the witness will be produced?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I do.

Mr. COOPER. That is my understanding of scope of the Senators amendment.

The second problem which has concerned me is this: If statements are to be produced for the inspection and use of the defendant—which is the holding of the court—within the limitations which we have discussed—I say that such inspection and use must be effective. One trouble about the interpretation of the Jencks case has been that many think it applies only to FBI documents, or only to Communist cases. It applies to any document which the United States Government might hold and to any criminal case. It might be a case in which the defendant was charged with moonshining, and thus depriving the Federal Government of the tax, or a case of transporting stolen goods from one State to another, as well as a case involving the Communist conspiracy.

I repeat that one of the difficulties is that nearly everyone thinks the case deals only with Communists and the FBI files. It is a rule—a holding—which is uniform with respect to every agency of the United States Government.

As the Supreme Court has held, under the limitations we have discussed, a defendant is entitled to inspect prior statements of adverse witnesses for purposes of cross-examination—and that is all—I make the point that if the rule is to be effective, the defendant must have adequate opportunity to inspect them.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator has had printed an amendment which lies at the desk, which would authorize a court to take a recess in order to allow time for the defense to examine the papers. I am perfectly willing to accept that amendment, because I think the Senator is quite right.

Mr. COOPER. That is the reason I submitted the amendment. In one case the paper sought might be 8 or 10 lines long. On the other hand, in a case such as we have been discussing, the Jencks case, where Matusow and Ford had made statements to the FBI over a period of 2 years, there might be very lengthy and bulky records which would require a reasonable time for inspection. So I believe my amendment should be adopted and it should be made clear in the legislative history, that the court would allow a reasonable time, after a witness has testified, for inspection of the documents.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I thank the Senator for the questions he has raised. I think they have materially helped to make the legislative history with respect to the amendment which I propose to offer as a substitute, after this discussion has proceeded a little further.

Mr. COOPER. I thank the Senator for his generosity.

I should like to ask a further question. Another problem which has troubled me is the problem of excision of the record by the court.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, before the Senator goes to a new point, I ask if the Senator from Wyoming will yield to me in order that I may ask a question about the matter of the recess of the court.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK. I hope the Senator from Kentucky will press his amendment. I had the same concern which he did regarding that part of the bill, which amendment I submitted some days ago. I wanted to change the word "after" to "before," at the beginning of paragraph (b) in order to offer the same opportunity to the defense to prepare for cross-examination which amendment of the Senator from Kentucky, in my judgment, does better than my proposed amendment, which the Senator from Wyoming was unwilling to accept.

I yielded to the views of the Senator from Wyoming. Inasmuch as the Senator from Wyoming says he will accept the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky, I hope the Senator from Kentucky will press it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The amendment of the Senator from Kentucky does not restore the word "before."

Mr. CLARK. That is correct, but it has the same effect.

Mr. COOPER. I will press the amendment. Mr. President, there is one further point, and that is the question of the excision of the record. The language in the bill is in accord with the decision of the court, when it speaks of relevant records being delivered to the defendant.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Let us use the word "amendment", so that it will be clear that we are talking about the substitute amendment "D."

Mr. COOPER. The amendment of the Senator from Wyoming provides there shall be delivered to the defendant the entire statements of witnesses when they are entirely relevant to the matters about which the witness has testified, that is within the limitations we have discussed. The document shall be given to the defendant in its entirety. But in the event that the United States claims that portions of prior statements of the witness are not relevant, the court can excise those portions before delivering them to the defendant.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is precisely what the amendment provides.

Mr. COOPER. The thought which occurs to me is this: A defendant might say, "From my knowledge of my case, I know more about what is relevant than does the court, I should have an opportunity to look at the excised portion, so I may present and argue the question of relevancy before the court, and make my record."

Perhaps that is too nice a distinction when the Senator's amendment states, as I understand, that everything relevant, shall be delivered to the defendant, and the distinguished Senator in charge of the bill agrees with me that the judge can excise only parts of statements which are not relevant in any sense—that is they have no probative value in the trial of the issues of the case.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I would rather state it in the positive form than in the negative. The positive statement is that a judge shall excise from the papers which are submitted those portions which are irrelevant, which are incompetent, and which are within a valid exclusionary rule, so that what is left is relevant, competent, and proper, and deals with the case.

Mr. COOPER. The portions excised would have no probative value in the trial of the issues of the case.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is correct.

Mr. COOPER. Let me ask one further question. As I understand the decision, the court, when it inspects the record, does not pass upon the admissibility of the evidence in the trial. He would simply turn everything that is relevant over to the defendant, and the defendant can then argue, as can the United States, its admissibility. The court will determine the question of admissibility.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That, I think, would be the ordinary procedure.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point? This point is vital to our discussion.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. JAVITS. I think this is the key to why the Senator's amendment is sound. In the Jencks case we find the following, quoting from the majority opinion:

> The practice of producing Government documents to the trial judge for his determination of relevancy or materiality, without hearing the accused, is disapproved. Relevancy and materiality, for the purposes of production and inspection, with a view to > use on cross-examination, are established when the reports are shown to relate to the testimony of the witness.

It seems to me that the precise answer to the question of the Senator from Kentucky must be this: The proposal of the Senator from Wyoming is that the judge shall determine relationship, within the words of the decision. After he has determined that the documents relate to the testimony of the witness sought to be impeached, then, and then only, does he cause the papers, or other records, to be delivered to the defendant. Then, when the defendant endeavors to use them to impeach a witness, all the objections based upon relevancy, materiality, and competency may be raised before the judge, and the judge will rule upon such objections.

I think it is important to be precise, because if the judge may, in camera, rule upon relevancy and materiality, it is my opinion that the bill proposed by the Senator from Wyoming would be unconstitutional, as denying due process. But I believe it to be constitutional, because in effect, it applies a rule of court, that the judge may determine relationship, within the terms of the decision, and that the normal due-process objections may be made when the material is offered. This is the crux of our problem. We are dealing with an important constitutional question. That is why I am in favor of the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I thank the Senator. I think the amendment deals with the exact issue we have before us.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. COOPER. I have satisfied myself that, in terms of language, the bill meets the opinion of the Supreme Court. I want to be assured that it is the intention of the committee which wrote the bill, and those who are managing the bill that everything relevant, within the limitation we have previously discussed, shall be made available to the defendant; simply that the defendant shall have the right to all relevant statements.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Again I say to the Senator from Kentucky that he is talking about amendment "D," the substitute. This is important.

I think the Senator is contributing a very valuable legislative history to govern the interpretation of this amendment when it becomes law, as I am confident it will.

Mr. COOPER. There is a final but essential requirement. There is a constitutional principle that the Executive has the right of privilege. In the Jencks case the Court has said that it must be relinquished in a limited field as the decision requires the relinquishment of the constitutional privilege of the Executive. In my view, it is because of the constitutional right of due process of the defendent. The Senator's amendment must meet this holding. It must fall within due process.

I am satisfied with the Senator's explanation that it is the amendment's purpose, and I intend to support his amendment.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am satisfied that if the Senator from Kentucky had been the judge in all the cases which have come to my attention since the Jencks decision was handed down, there would have been no confusion. He has explained the amendment very clearly.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I wish to say that the Senator from Wyoming has worked very hard on this proposal ever since the handing down of the Jencks case. I say that as a member of the Committee on the Judiciary. All of us in the Committee on the Judiciary felt that something should be done in this field, and done immediately. If something is not done, we fear a great deal of harm will result throughout the United States. At the same time that we protect the defendant we must also protect the files of the FBI.

Therefore, we must watch both sides of the street, so to speak. What we are up against, if something is not done, and if the pending bill is not enacted into law, is that Red spies, like Abel, will not be brought to trial at all, because the Department of Justice will not risk giving up its files to the Communist defendant's lawyers. If the amendment, in the nature of a substitute, which the Senator has prepared is passed, it will protect the Government's files and permit the Government to go ahead with the trial of the case. The Abel case is only one case. There are many similar cases pending. These are not only cases dealing with Communists, but all kinds of cases which may be brought into the Federal courts. We must bear that in mind.

For that reason, I am supporting the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming, because it is the only thing to do at this time. If we find it is not strong enough and does not protect the files sufficiently, when we come back in session next year we can act as we see fit, after we have tried what the Senator proposes. We will find, however, that the amendment in the nature of a substitute will take care of the situation in a suitable way.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator from South Carolina is very kind.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. ERVIN. I merely wish to observe that I thought the interpretation placed on the Senator's amendment in the nature of a substitute by the distinguished Senator from Kentucky was as clear and as accurate as any interpretation could be, and I was very much gratified that the Senator from Wyoming agreed that it was a correct interpretation of the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I thank the Senator. It may be desirable, in the light of this discussion, to read into the RECORD the full text of the amendment as it is proposed. It reads as follows:

> That chapter 223 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding a new section 3500, which shall read as follows:
>
> "SEC. 3500. Demands for production of statements and reports of witnesses.
>
> "(a) In any criminal prosecution brought by the United States, no statement or report of a Government witness or prospective Government witness (other than the defendant) made to an agent of the Government which is in the possession of the United States, shall be the subject of subpena, or inspection, except, if provided in the Federal rules of criminal procedure, or as provided in paragraph (b) of this section."

That provision was drafted with the intent and purpose of protecting the statements of witnesses in the hands of the Government from subpena or inspection unless the circumstances are such that there is some provision in the Federal rules of criminal procedure which make them subject to subpena or except as is provided in paragraph (b), which I am about to read.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Do I correctly state the intention of the amendment prepared by the distinguished Senator from Wyoming, when I say it is not intended to make any change whatever in the Federal rules of criminal procedure, but, rather, to leave those rules where we found them before the controversy arose, and to confine ourselves solely and alone to clarify the meaning of the Jencks case opinion in which those rules were not in issue?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The amendment is designed to clarify the meaning of the decision of the Supreme Court in the Jencks case. It is not an amendment designed to amend the rules which the Supreme Court has already laid down and to which there has been no objection.

Mr. CLARK. I thank the Senator.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Subsection (b) reads:

> (b) After a witness, called by the United States, has testified on direct examination, the court shall, on motion of the defendant, order the United States to produce any written statements previously made by the witness in the possession of the United States which are signed by the witness or otherwise adopted or approved by him, and any transcriptions or records of oral statements made by the witness to an agent of the Government, relating to the subject matter as to which the witness has testified.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. First I should like to make this point. The phrase "relating to the subject matter as to which the witness has testified" defines the very nature of the statement which can be subject to production.

I now yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. LAUSCHE. The language that there shall be submitted to the defendant statements signed by the witness or otherwise adopted or approved by him——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator has used the words "there shall be submitted."

Mr. LAUSCHE. I interpolated those words.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. They do not belong in the amendment.

Mr. LAUSCHE. No. My inquiry is whether the language "relating to the subject matter as to which the witness has testified" means that there would be made available to him all statements whether signed or not signed?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The next phrase would govern the statement "not signed."

Mr. LAUSCHE. The language does not confine the right solely to those statements which are signed, but also to other statements which had been adopted or approved by him in his narration to the FBI agent. Is that correct?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I read from page 2, at line 11 after we have referred to the statement in the possession of the Government signed by the witness or otherwise adopted or approved by him, the amendment reads:

> And any transcriptions or records of oral statements made by the witness to an agent of the Government, relating to the subject matter as to which the witness has testified.

Mr. LAUSCHE. That answers my question.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Then I wish to refer to the next sentence. I wish to make it as lucid as possible that the records and transcriptions and statements to which we are referring are only those which relate to the subject matter as to which the witness has testified; nothing else is included.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Does not the declaration of that principle conform to the rule of evidence existing in many States, which confine the right to cross-examination strictly to those subjects upon which the witness has testified on direct examination?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator is absolutely correct. He was a teacher of law and a judge, and I am glad to put him on the stand as my witness in support of the amendment.

Mr. LAUSCHE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator is getting a great deal of credit. I am thinking particularly of the statement of the majority leader with respect to the civil rights bill. He is entitled to it.

We now proceed to line 14 on page 2.

> If the entire contents of any such statements, transcription, or records relate to the subject matter of the testimony of the witness, the court shall order them delivered directly to the defendant for his examination and use.

The Department of Justice has agreed to the sentences which I have just read, with the exception of expressing some doubt as to the meaning of the word "records," to which I will come in a moment.

However, I wish to make it clear that there is no controversy between the committee and the chairman of the subcommittee with the Department of Justice with respect to the substance of those two sentences.

Now we are on page 2, line 18:

> In the event that the United States claims that any statement, transcription, or record ordered to be produced contains matter which does not relate to the subject matter of the testimony of the witness, the court shall order the United States to deliver such statement, transcription, or record for the inspection of the court in camera. Upon such delivery the court shall excise the portions of said statement, transcription, or record which do not relate to the subject matter of the testimony of the witness.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Is it not the thought of the Senator from Wyoming that examination in camera will be without the presence of counsel for the defendant?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes.

Mr. CLARK. Then, as the Senator continues to read the rest of that part of the bill, he will consider, I hope, how he would anticipate protecting the rights of a defendant on appeal with respect to arguing that some of the testimony is relevant, when neither he nor his counsel had an opportunity to see it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The section goes on:
