In maintaining stable supplies through production control—when this course is chosen by two-thirds of the farmers—our tobacco program also appropriately provides for price supports in order to safeguard individual farmers against unnecessary loss. This is not a subsidy. I want to make that clear from the outset. It is not a special benefit or a giveaway. Price support is simply a tool—in the case of tobacco, it is a loan which is repaid—in our production-control kit. In this tobacco production-adjustment program, price support does two things: First, it makes possible the adjustments in the total supply, which are achieved over several crop years, by stabilizing prices during the period in which these adjustments are being made. Second, it extends equal price protection to all farmers contributing to the production-control effort.

While the tobacco price-support and production-control program is in several respects similar to our programs for the other basic commodities, it is in many respects unique, in its design, operation and results. And although the tobacco program has been an outstanding success among all our farm programs, I believe it is neither well understood nor as widely appreciated at least in areas of the United States which do not produce tobacco, as it deserves to be.

For example, it has been said on the floor of the Senate that under this program the growing of tobacco is subsidized by the Government, and by taxpayers. A number of people may be under that mistaken impression, for I have also seen it expressed in newspapers and magazines. On the other hand, I understand that officials of the Department of Agriculture have sometimes been criticized because their other price-support or production-control efforts are not as successful as the tobacco program. That may not be entirely fair either, because each commodity is different and has its own special problems; what works for one may not work at all for another. Even in the Department of Agriculture, however, the merits of the tobacco program occasionally seem to be overlooked, or may not always be fully appreciated.

I hope we can bring about a better understanding of this program, and obtain for it the broader appreciation it deserves—not only among tobaccomen, but among all who are interested in farm problems, programs, and policies. I hope that I can contribute something to that understanding by describing today some of the basic reasons why a separate and distinct program is required for tobacco, and by showing how our present program makes good use of those characteristics which set tobacco apart, in a class by itself.

Although I will discuss the program in the light of the most recent proposal to eliminate fixed 90 percent support for tobacco, the facts I expect to point out may apply with equal force to questions which may arise in the future, as they have in the past.

DISCRETIONARY PRICE SUPPORT HAS BEEN PROPOSED FOR TOBACCO

The Secretary of Agriculture recently recommended to the Congress a new approach to the farm problem. He said that production control is impractical, and that present laws governing acreage allotments and price supports are obsolete. He asked for major changes in the different price-support programs for the six basic farm commodities—corn, wheat, cotton, tobacco, peanuts, and rice.

These price-support programs, of course, play a central role in our efforts to protect, stabilize, and increase farm income so that farmers may share more fully in, and contribute more effectively to, the general prosperity and economic welfare of our country. They deal, however, with a wide variety of complex problems, many of which have proved difficult to solve, and which, therefore, are the subject of continuing attention and effort by the Congress, the executive branch, and by those most concerned—the farmers themselves.

After appearing before both the Senate and the House Committees on Agriculture, Secretary Benson laid his specific legislative recommendation on this subject before the chairman of the House committee on May 28. I am expressing my views at this time on this matter, as it affects tobacco growers, because I am convinced that that proposal would, if adopted, seriously threaten or destroy our tobacco program.

The official departmental proposal is primarily a request for much greater, and discretionary, flexibility—from 0 to 90 percent, or as a second choice, from 60 to 90 percent of parity—in the price-support levels of the basic crops already under flexible support formulas. Now, I have the highest respect for the Secretary of Agriculture, in his integrity in seeking overall solutions which will be fair and helpful to farmers, and which will benefit the country as a whole. I realize that he is faced with serious problems of continuing surplus production in some of the commodities for which strict production controls may not be desirable or practical—a responsibility which Congress, and agriculture itself, shares.

Included also in the Department's request, however, was tobacco—which has a distinct program of its own, for reasons I believe I can show are sound, and which is not a flexible-support crop. As far as tobacco farmers are concerned, the idea of abandoning 90 percent support is a drastic proposal which is not justified by today's needs or by the performance record of that program.

I see no reason to compound the farm problem by opening the door to controversy over abandoning a program which has proved workable, effective, popular, economical, and fair to all segments of the industry and to the nation as a whole.

TOBACCO PROGRAM—AND TOBACCO ITSELF—IS IN A CLASS BY ITSELF

In supporting this view, I will not take time to review the history and development of the tobacco program, although that history is most enlightening and offers us many lessons which we can study with profit today. It is enough to say that our present program rests squarely on that long history—which goes back 50 years to the days of the Night Riders in Kentucky, and over 300 years to the first crop control measures in the New World, taken at a time when severe depression in the tobacco areas already walked hand-in-hand with overproduction. (In 1639 the province of Virginia enacted a tobacco production-adjustment law.)

The tobacco program is distinctive not only in its historical origins, which proved in violence the need for production and marketing controls long before such measures were adopted generally. It is also distinctive in the justifiable confidence which growers have placed in their program, and in the diligence they have exercised to keep that program sound. It is distinctive today as the one program with fixed supports, at 90 percent of parity, and established by law, and which, through effective production controls has made that support level work—to the advantage of growers, the Federal Government, and the taxpayer.

This is not to imply that tobacco has won a favored position to which it is not fully entitled, or at the expense of other commodities. That is not true. On the contrary, while billions have been spent in honest efforts to solve the problems of other commodities, and those of a lagging farm economy in general, the tobacco farmer has held the line and stuck to his program of balancing supply with demand.

Neither do I infer that this program is well suited to other commodities. They have their own characteristics and particular problems. The only question involved here is whether or not a large group of over three-quarters of a million farmers, working together, are entitled to the help and assistance of their Government in carrying out and administering the program of their choice so long as they keep that program on a reasonably sound and equitable basis. My answer to this question is that their performance in good faith entitles tobacco growers to the continuation of their present program.

We have this distinct tobacco program today simply because the production, marketing, and consumption of tobacco itself is in many ways unique. It therefore requires a different price-support and production-control program.

I would like to discuss now those characteristics which make tobacco different—which both require a separate program for it, and make that program workable. This fact has received too little attention: that the unique nature of tobacco not only creates special problems, but has also given us the solution to those problems. This coin has two sides. When we turn over the challenge we find opportunity—an opportunity which tobacco growers seized years ago, and which must not be arbitrarily taken from them.

1. PRODUCTION DIFFERENCES

First, as to its production, tobacco is a high-labor crop. It requires some 410 man-hours of labor to raise an acre of Burley. That compares to approximately 81 man-hours for an acre of cotton, 11 man-hours for corn, and 4 for wheat—where, of course, a man may produce 100 times as many acres.

Most of this labor is hard, back-breaking toil. It takes a full year to produce an acre of Burley tobacco. In fact, because seedbeds are often burned in the fall, before the crop is sold, the tobacco farmer's year is said to be 13 months long.

The seedbed must be prepared in January or February. The young plants, so carefully nurtured under canvas, have to be transplanted when the ground warms up. In the summer months, the tobacco must be cultivated several times, wormed by hand or sprayed, topped, suckered, and perhaps primed. Then it is cut, hung in the barn, cured, stripped, sorted into grades, and tied in hands. Finally it is sold—just about in time for the farmer to go back and start to work on his next crop.

Each of these jobs is a hand operation. Each requires skilled management. Successful tobacco culture, in fact, is an art which can only be acquired through years of experience.

At every step of the way, the tobacco grower is beset by disease, pests, and capricious weather. Having learned at last how to control to some extent the additional vagaries of his markets, the tobacco farmer feels that a reasonably stable price structure is indispensable to his efforts, and is his just due.

In terms of his special need for effective price supports, this high labor requirement means that when the 4 or 5 baskets of burley produced on an acre of our tobacco land are set out for sale on the warehouse floor, a year of the farmer's toil, hope, and fears is sold at auction. Typically, tobacco is this farmer's major cash crop—his primary source of income. Our growers must depend, then, to an unusual degree on their price-support program.

The mutual dependence of growers on their tobacco program has, however, served to encourage and develop that spirit of cooperation and sense of responsibility which contribute so much to the success of this plan. In its practical operation, tobacco growers, and representatives of the trade as well, join together to resolve their problems in a way that is fair to all, and that is in the best interests of their industry and its individual members.

Second, tobacco production is not mechanized. For example, no machine has been developed to harvest the delicate tobacco leaves—which are as perishable as green garden vegetables until they are cured.

Because tobacco culture is unsuited to mechanization, we know that the second acre of tobacco costs the farmer nearly as much to raise as the first. For many crops, it may be true that production per farm worker has doubled in the last 15 years—thus creating a new dimension in farm policy in these areas. Contrary to this general trend, however, and because of increased quality requirements, raising an acre of tobacco requires more labor today than it did 15 years ago.

The belief that the "technological revolution" in agriculture as a whole makes possible, through increased mechanization, sufficiently lower costs on added units of production to more than offset a lower market price does not fit the case of tobacco. Nearly every grower would like to increase his tobacco acreage, of course—but not when he knows that the price he receives would drop, while his hours of labor and cost of production would increase proportionately.

This basic difference in production methods, which sets tobacco apart from the trend in much of agriculture, does, however, simplify the issue as to what is a proper level of price support for this crop. There is little question about the level of prices required to assure tobacco farmers a fair return for their labor. Tobacco farmers, large and small, are generally agreed that 90 percent of parity provides them a decent minimum wage floor (although less than hourly rates for common labor), and that a lower support price would simply mean more work for less pay.

Third, tobacco is an intensive crop. For this reason, it is well-suited to our small family farms, in hilly country and on soils where other crops may do poorly, as well as on superlative soil such as we have in the Bluegrass area of Kentucky.

The average size Burley allotment in my State last year was 1.37 acres. However, that acre-and-a-third produced over a ton of high-quality cigarette tobacco—worth $1,400 to the Kentucky farmer who sold it on last December's market. That typical Kentucky patch of tobacco, in fact, produced Burley for 2 million cigarettes, or 10,000 cartons.

Only 2 percent of all Burley allotments are larger than 5 acres; 90 percent are smaller than 2 acres; and one-fourth are half an acre or less.

Because high value of production is associated with these small plots, however, and because our present program works, hundreds of thousands of modest family-type farms are able to depend on their tobacco allotment as a main source of their income. For example, 300,939 farmers have Burley allotments this year, of which 146,611 are in Kentucky. Including dark-fired and dark air-cured tobacco as well as Burley, there are 174,579 tobacco allotments in Kentucky.

The continued welfare of Kentucky agriculture rests, then, to a large degree, on maintaining our present tobacco price-support program. Most of the rural families in my State own small farms, and have few alternative sources of income. These farms, which must be cultivated intensively wherever possible, do not have the broad fields of level, tillable acreage suited to large-scale crop production with heavy equipment and self-propelled machinery. Tobacco is their main cash crop. In fact, at least 3 out of 4 farms in my State raise tobacco, and some 200,000 rural Kentucky families count on their tobacco crop for a substantial or major portion of their income.

I know many of these families, and have talked to hundred of these farmers. These are the men who know tobacco best—and who produce the world's finest tobacco. I do not believe they will agree that it is worth less than parity, or that their years of experience and months of toil should be sold cheaper.

In terms of workable production controls, however, this intensive land use means that tobacco can well afford the strict measurement and compliance checking we now have, the cost of which is less than one-fourth of 1 percent of the crop's value. Small allotments having a high dollar value of production make accurate measurement practical and economical. So again we find reasons in the nature of tobacco culture itself which justify a distinctive production-control and price-support program.

Fourth, tobacco is a highly specialized regional crop. Burley and flue-cured tobacco—the major cigarette types—accounted for 90 percent of last year's billion-dollar tobacco crop. Kentucky produced two-thirds (66.2 percent) of the Burley, North Carolina two-thirds (67.6 percent) of the flue-cured tobacco.

In my own State, tobacco is a quarter-billion-dollar crop, and produces 43 percent of Kentucky's cash income from farm products sold. In the great bright-leaf State of North Carolina, over half the farm income comes from tobacco. Nine States raise most of our tobacco, and within those States there are highly concentrated areas specializing in the various qualities of tobacco, of which there are 26 distinct domestic types and 1,446 grades.

This regional concentration is a natural historical consequence of tobacco's peculiar dependence on soils and climate. Identical seed planted in adjoining counties may produce two different types of tobacco. Each year's weather may turn out a markedly different tobacco crop in the same area. Under identical weather conditions, variations in soil from farm to neighbor's farm result in noticeably different qualities. Moreover, each stalk of burley tobacco produces several grades from tips (until recently worth least) to trash (customarily worth much more)—and I have not mentioned differences resulting from cultural and curing practices.

The full array of tobacco types and qualities, which the interplay of a great many cultural, climatic, and management influences produces, is highly important to our tobacco trade and to our modern tobacco industry. It marks a difference in product and in production which makes clear, I believe, tobacco's need for a special program of its own. Local specialization makes possible this broad spectrum of products—from heavy "black" tobaccos, which are hickory-smoked like Kentucky hams, to the mild, bright golden, "Virginia" leaf.

This local specialization, moreover, contributes greatly to the effectiveness of our tobacco program. Perhaps in no other crop would rigid allotments based on historical production be more justifiable, nor could historical production patterns be continued more equitably.

I do not say that our tobacco program allows complete freedom of enterprise, but the equity of historically based production patterns is well-established and widely accepted. Tobacco producers do feel that this program, in which they join together in a cooperative effort to comply with the law of supply and demand, provides them essential freedom in the marketplace to sell their product for what it is worth.

2. MARKETING DIFFERENCES

Marketing differences which require a separate and distinct price-support and production-control program for tobacco, and which also make the present program workable, are perhaps even more significant than the production differences.

My fifth point, therefore, is that all our farmers' tobacco is channeled exclusively through central markets. None is kept on farms. Each selling season farmers must take the entire crop of cigarette tobacco to the auction warehouses—scene of the familiar "tobacco chant."

Our system of cooperative marketing for tobacco was developed after years of trial and error and travail. It works well. It seeks to provide uniform sales conditions, to insure that buyers are available for all the tobacco offered, and that farmers are protected from sharp seasonal fluctuations in price—through the option which each may exercise of selling at the price bid or else having his baskets of tobacco delivered to the "pool" under the price-support program.

This auction warehouse system, operating in conjunction with the pools, is the central mechanism around which our successful tobacco program is organized. It offers distinct advantages in the price support operations of that program. For example, it makes possible a firm floor, not only supporting the tobacco crop as a whole, but under each farmer's individual lots of tobacco.

Under this plan, it has not been necessary for the Government to purchase large surpluses, as with some other crops. The plan is also fair to the farmer, in that he is the direct beneficiary of the price-support effort—receiving immediately 90 percent of parity in cash, and a dividend on any amount over that for which the tobacco is later sold. This whole operation is so sensible, in fact, that it is handled without loss by the farmers' marketing cooperatives under contract with the Commodity Credit Corporation.

Our central marketing system also makes practical and workable the realistic production controls required for no-loss operation of 90 percent supports, because it permits accurate identification of the source of all tobacco sold. In addition, it makes conveniently available the data for accurate market reports on the amounts and prices of the various graders sold.

The sixth difference which sets tobacco apart, and requires a separate program for it, is the limited field of buyers for this crop. As I pointed out when I sponsored the amendment first establishing in law 90 percent of parity as a separate provision for tobacco, the major buyers competing for the tobacco offered by three-quarters of a million farmers can be counted on the fingers of both hands. Six companies produce 99 percent of the cigarettes, and three of these account for 73 percent.

This is a situation unique in agricultural marketing as far as I know. Usually less than half a dozen major buyers are represented on any auction floor. These buyers can scarcely fail to be familiar with each other's needs and practices. A farmer who trucked his crop of tobacco 50 miles to the warehouse was at the mercy of buyers before the protection offered by this fixed support floor was inaugurated.

I consider my speech on this subject, made in the Senate on June 17, 1948, still to be a correct statement. That was during the debate on the long-range agricultural program, which required a change from fixed 90 percent supports to flexible supports down to 60 percent of parity on all basic commodities, including tobacco. At that time the Senate adopted my amendment preserving 90 percent support for tobacco, it was written into the law, and this separate provision for tobacco has been retained through every change made in our farm programs since that time. I quote from that speech:

"It is my contention, and one which I believe is supported by the facts, that the unusual conditions under which tobacco is produced and marketed, when coupled with the usually limited field of buyers, operate to give a dominant bargaining position to the buyers and to deprive the producer of tobacco of a free market, in the sense that a market is enjoyed by the producers of other agricultural commodities. In this limited market, the buyer pays a price which is not necessarily or always related to the law of supply and demand, but is fixed by the maximum amount the buyers must pay to get the tobacco, which in reality is the support price. For this reason the support price should remain fixed at 90 percent of parity."

As I pointed out 9 years ago, and I quote: "The tobacco farmer must take his crop to the place where the representatives of the great tobacco manufacturers will come to buy his crop. Unless the representatives are there, the tobacco farmer cannot sell his tobacco. The farmer who has spent a year in back-breaking toil to produce a crop of tobacco, which is his cash crop and his principal source of income, knows that he must sell his tobacco to one of the few buyers, or else lose his year's labor. Can it be doubted that the buyers know that the farmer must sell or lose the work of a year?"

At that time, I offered the opinion, "which is one shared by my constituents, who know every phase of tobacco growing, buying, and selling, that the Federal Government offers through its parity and support-price program the only substantial assurance the tobacco growers have that they will receive a reasonable price for their product."

A seventh distinction, which operates to make our tobacco loan program among the most effective of farm price-support efforts, relates to the excellent storage qualities of tobacco. Cured tobacco, redried and compressed into 1,000-pound hogsheads, is virtually nonperishable, thus reducing the risk of holding loan stocks several years for improved markets. In fact, tobacco increases in value as it is aged. This enhanced value in itself often covers storage and interest charges on loan stocks held for up to 2 to 4 years.

Without a fixed level of support, on the other hand, this very storability would operate to the farmers' disadvantage—as it did for the 100 years when 1 year of good prices was followed by 2 or 3 years of starvation prices. In the absence of a strong support program, tobacco farmers are placed in double jeopardy; first, from lower prices caused by a year of unexpected abundance, and second, from reduced production or lower prices in later years as these hogsheads are moved from storage into trade. Producers of perishable crops, at least, are exposed to economic loss only once, and need make but a single adjustment.

It may be argued that flexible supports are desirable for semiperishable commodities, where old stocks must be moved or spoil, or where adjustments must reflect current consumption at all times. But in tobacco, the very possibility of lowering supports could tend to depress prices. Progressively lowered support prices would, of course, soon destroy the tobacco program, and would result in huge losses in the process.

3. CONSUMPTION DIFFERENCES

An eighth and very important consideration is that there are no alternative uses for our tobacco. Most farm products have a number of uses, and can compete in a wide variety of markets at different price levels; many in fact must take into account these changing relationships. Again it may be argued in the case of some other crops that flexible supports will enable these commodities to seek out alternative uses and markets, or will encourage industrial utilization of farm products. Tobacco has no such opportunity.

This lack of alternative uses for tobacco clearly shows the need for controlling production and supplies in line with the demand for cigarette tobaccos. Burley and flue-cured growers know that they are completely dependent on this single-use market, that at best they can profitably sell only as much tobacco as we smoke.

On the other hand, the limited use for tobacco provides a much clearer picture of the demand-supply situation than most commodities enjoy. The question of how much tobacco is needed can be argued within relatively close limits, and is understood by farmers. They can then support, and do support, a program which meets these realities, and which gives each of them a fair share of the market at a fair price. So once more a special problem in tobacco contributes to the practical workability of our present program.

My ninth point concerns the relatively inelastic consumer demand for tobacco. Agricultural economists have shown, and it is historically true, that the price farmers receive for their leaf bears little or no relation to that consumer demand. The supply of tobacco, of course, almost wholly determines prices farmers receive, and realistic recognition of this fact has led growers to acceptance of progressively more effective production controls.

Burley consumption, in turn, may depend on a number of factors, but the price paid to the farmer is not a major one—because his percentage of the retail sales price is so small. These two facts taken together—that consumer demand plays a minor role in determining the farmer's price, and that his price scarcely affects consumption of tobacco—make an effective, stable price-support program essential if tobacco growers are to share equitably in the fruit of their labor. In addition, they remove from economic controversy the desirability of 90-percent support for this commodity.

I would like to point out here why the price farmers get for their tobacco has little or no effect on domestic sales of cigarettes. In a pound of manufactured tobacco, worth $3.45 at retail last year, Federal and State excise taxes account for $1.37, or 40 percent; manufacturing and distribution margins are $1.53 or 44 percent, and the farmers' end is 55 cents or 16 percent. For the tobacco in a 25-cent pack of cigarettes, the farmer receives about 3½ cents. Therefore, a 10 percent drop in farmers' prices would save only 3 mills on the cost of a pack of cigarettes.

I believe American consumers are willing and able to pay the farmer this very reasonable price for his tobacco. I might add that whereas farmers generally receive 40 percent of the consumer dollar—and we are concerned about such a low share—tobacco farmers receive less than half that.

As I understand the reasoning behind the Secretary's present proposals for all the basic crops, a lower support price is supposed to stimulate increased consumption and sales so that the price drop will be offset, or more than offset, by an increase in farmers' sales, and therefore an increase in their gross income or net income. This may be true in the case of other farm commodities, and I know that in manufacturing, for example, the greatly increased sales volume which may result from small reductions in price has played a very important part in our economic development.

However, because the consumer demand for tobacco is relatively inelastic in the first place, and because prices paid farmers are scarcely reflected in the retail price of cigarettes in the second place, I do not believe that the Secretary's argument would apply in the case of tobacco.

It is true that "production times price equals income," but the experience of tobacco growers is that small increases in production can cause sharp decreases in price, and in their income—and that prices continue to fall far faster than any increase in poundage sold can possibly make up.

HOW THE TOBACCO PROGRAM HAS WORKED FOR THE GOVERNMENT

A 10th difference is that, alone among our different price-support operations for nonperishable commodities, the tobacco program does not result in burdensome Government-owned stocks. As a matter of fact, the Commodity Credit Corporation does not now own a pound of tobacco—and has not had a pound of cigarette tobacco in its inventory since World War II, when it helped supply our allies. CCC neither has to buy tobacco in the open market, nor under purchase agreements—nor has it been necessary for CCC to take title to any loan tobacco in recent years. In other words, tobacco is not subsidized. The tobacco price-support program has, in fact, made several million dollars in interest profits on CCC loans.

This remarkable record must be credited to the farmers who have made the sacrifices necessary to keep their part of the bargain in this program. The Government can do no less than to keep its part of the bargain and maintain 90 percent support prices so long as growers continue to demonstrate their willingness to keep this program sound.

The distinctive machinery for this efficient and economical program is to be found in the operations and responsibilities of the tobacco "pools," or grower cooperatives, which undertake to sell loan stocks of tobacco at a profit to the farmer over the 90 percent rate, and which over the long run have succeeded in doing so. These pools may not be wholly perfect, but they are a very important part of a system which has dealt with difficult problems with outstanding success. Several of them predate our Government programs by a number of years, and their experience and influence are generally recognized.

Our tobacco loan program actually operates just as the name implies it should. It is expected that the tobacco held as the security for those loans will be advantageously merchandised at private sale, and that the money advanced will then be repaid to the Government in full. It has worked this way with conspicuous success. In the 11 years since the war, for example, CCC has loaned $1½ billion to the tobacco pools to cover the amounts advanced to farmers. Nearly a billion dollars of that has been repaid by these pools, with interest, and the remainder is secured by current stocks of tobacco. I submit that this is an outstanding record for any Government loan program, particularly on a farm commodity.

I will not take time to mention here a number of less striking differences in the operation of our tobacco program and the legislation which governs it, except to say that tobacco farmers, their leaders, and their representatives in Congress, have generally resisted a number of special or fringe benefits enjoyed by other commodities. They have done so for the sole reason that they did not want in any way to jeopardize their right and claim to fixed 90 percent supports.

A final difference between tobacco and other farm commodities is that it is the only one on which excise taxes are imposed. While the operation of our price-support program for tobacco has not cost the Government anything, tobacco has brought immense revenues to local, State, and Federal Governments. This fact alone merits the continuation of a tobacco program which insures stable prices and balance supplies.

Each year Federal and State excise-tax receipts from tobacco far exceed farmers' cash receipts for tobacco, as the chart from the cover of the March Tobacco Situation shows. The Federal excise tax on tobacco returned $1,639 million dollars to the Government last year. States received $513 million from their own excise taxes. Municipalities benefited by substantial sums. In addition, import duties on tobacco amounted to $19 million last year. While not levied with a view toward aiding farmers, these considerations ought to at least obtain for tobacco farmers a sympathetic attitude toward their problems and needs.

These annual receipts of over $2 billion in Federal and State revenues from the growers' efforts are about double the return to the growers themselves. That relationship is well illustrated by the blue stamp of a rather glum DeWitt Clinton which seals every pack of cigarettes. The stamp is worth 8 cents to Uncle Sam. The grower gets 3½ cents for the tobacco within.

This high revenue-producing capacity and special contribution sets tobacco apart, in a separate class by itself. As my distinguished colleague, the senior Senator from Florida, stated on this floor 2 years ago: "It is a highly important matter to the Federal Government, therefore, that tobacco growers shall prosper, and that there shall be a sustained abundant level of tobacco production as free as possible from either overproduction or underproduction."

It may be pertinent to point out here that the Federal tax alone produced by tobacco since 1932 ($25 billion) would pay twice over for the entire cost to the United States of the farm price-support and farm-income stabilization programs, broadly interpreted, for all commodities, basic and nonbasic, in the last 25 years. This includes CCC nonrecourse loan, purchase and payment programs; the National Wool Act; the International Wheat Agreement; donations of commodities to other nations; Public Law 480 sales for foreign currencies; school-lunch and other welfare distribution; the Sugar Act; Federal Crop Insurance; acreage allotment payments under the ACP from 1937 to 1944; parity payments under the AA Act of 1938; and the programs under the triple A of 1933.

HOW THE TOBACCO PROGRAM HAS WORKED FOR TAXPAYERS

In commenting for a moment on how the present tobacco program has worked for taxpayers and consumers, I would like to refer to the figures accompanying the Secretary's well-known letter of May 2 to Senator ELLENDER, Chairman of the Senate Committee on Agriculture. It was the substance of this letter which Secretary Benson shortly thereafter embodied in his legislative proposals for tobacco as well as the other basic crops, and which he sent to the House Committee on Agriculture on May 28.

These figures indicate that in the last 25 years, through June 30, 1956, "the net realized cost of programs primarily for the stabilization of farm prices and farm income" was $11.8 billion. Tobacco's share of that amount was $105.3 million, according to the table on page 7—or less than 1 percent of the total, charged to the Nation's fourth largest field crop produced by 11 percent of her farms. It is a modest figure when compared to the others on that page, and in saying this I do not imply that the other commodities and other farmers do not fully deserve the help we have tried to give them.

I would like to point out, moreover, that the great bulk of this money was spent for soil conserving activities in the thirties. Only the figure 3 to the right of the decimal in this $105.3 million amount reflects CCC losses on tobacco price-support operations. That was the cumulative figure, over all the years of the tobacco programs, through June 1956. Since that time the loss has been reduced as of May 31 of this year to only $10,924—or eliminated for all practical purposes. Furthermore, interest income on CCC loans is not shown in this table—possibly because tobacco is the only commodity which produces an interest profit. Since 1948 and before, therefore, the entire tobacco price-support program has operated without loss—winning for it an especially unique place in our farm price-support operations.

I believe this analysis shows how well the tobacco program has served taxpayers as well as farmers, and will continue to serve them in the future. All our people, in cities and towns as well as on farms, may well consider it the most successful of all our farm programs—in their own and their neighbor's interest.

One other point in the Department's May 2 statement calls for comment. That is, that about two-thirds of all producers are at the minimum (allotment for burley) and thus sealed off from any visible relationship between the level of their price support and the size of their allotment. That is not true. As I have shown, in table II, only one-fourth of the burley allotments are at the minimum of 0.5 acre or under.

Finally, I would like to review what our tobacco program has meant to farmers.

HOW THE TOBACCO PROGRAM HAS WORKED FOR FARMERS

Perhaps the most eloquent testimony on what farmers think of their tobacco program is found in the referendum votes. In the elections held since 1948, burley and flue-cured growers have consistently cast ballots approving marketing quotas by between 95 and 98 percent. Their interest in these elections is real, because the tobacco program is vital to their welfare.

In April 1955, for example, 74 percent of the eligible burley voters came out to vote. That was the year our growers were faced with the hard decision to cut their allotments by 25 percent, reduce minimum allotments from 0.7 to 0.5 acre, increase the penalty on excess or red card tobacco from 50 percent to 75 percent, and close the door to establishing allotment history by growing penalty tobacco. The vote was in favor of the program—by 96 percent. That is quite a plurality and quite a turnout at the polls for any election. In all the history of our farm programs, I can think of no more dramatic demonstration than this of the willingness of a group of farmers to make the sacrifices which are sometimes necessary to keep their program sound.

A brief glance at the dollar-and-cent figures on farm prices and income over the years will show what this program has meant to tobacco farmers in pocketbook terms. At the turn of the century Kentucky farmers could sell their tobacco for only 4 cents a pound. Farmers were desperate—literally up in arms—but began then to organize for the long search for a solution to their problems. In 1910–14, a stable period for agriculture generally, Burley was worth 9 cents, and the crop brought farmers barely $20 million. Conditions had not improved a great deal by 1930–34, when representatives of growers began working with the Department of Agriculture on what was to evolve into the present tobacco program. Fifteen years later, 1945–49, burley prices were 3⅓ times higher—and the crop was worth 6 times as much to farmers—a quarter of a billion dollars instead of $40 million. Even in terms of constant-value dollars, burley prices had nearly doubled, and larger but controlled crops tripled farmers' purchasing power from their burley.

These gains have been maintained and improved under peacetime operation of the postwar tobacco program. Last year, the burley crop sold for the highest prices on record—averaging 63.5 cents a pound for a crop which returned $322 million to farmers. Farmers are selling their 1957 flue-cured crop in the Carolinas today, and marketing has been finished in the Georgia-Florida belt. This crop, too, is bringing record prices—a dramatic change from the situation last year when flue-cured supplies threatened to get out of hand, and which must be credited to a realistic cut in allotments, prompt measures to eliminate less desirable varieties, and participation in the soil bank. Burley growers, who cure their crop more slowly by natural air drying and maket it later in the year, are looking forward to another favorable selling season on their 1957 crop, now being housed in their big tobacco barns.

I think this record of increased crop values and better tobacco prices clearly shows what our tobacco program, using the tools of 90 percent support and production control to match, has meant, and can continue to mean, to our farmer families.

CONCLUSION

I do not say tobacco farmers have no problems today. We do have some problems in tobacco—as in all other phases of agriculture with which I am familiar. We need to maintain and increase our export sales—which account for 6 percent of the burley market, and a larger portion of the market for other tobaccos. Increasing yields per acre may make production adjustment through acreage control more difficult as new varieties and cultural methods are adopted. The shift to filter cigarettes is changing consumption patterns, and new manufacturing methods are beginning to be used.

But these are all problems which can be handled, and should be handled, within the framework of our present program—using the successful techniques already developed where these are applicable, and taking full advantage of the hard lessons of the past. In the past we have been able to meet problems at least as serious as these, within this framework. There is no need now to tear down the house built so painstakingly over many years.

I do not say that the tobacco program is perfect. Minor modifications in it have been made from time to time—without disturbing the foundation of 90 percent support on which it is erected—and may need to be made in the future. I do not say that it operates without a certain pulling and hauling at times. This is inevitable where a variety of interests are involved, and wherever earnest efforts are made to realistically limit production so that farmers may obtain fair prices without subsidies. My colleagues and my friends know that I have helped work out these problems on many occasions.

I do say that tobacco farmers have learned how to work with and through the elemental forces of supply and demand, instead of being crushed by these forces. They have shown that by controlling production to match the demand they can achieve stabilized prices at an acceptable level without Government subsidy. They have made 90 percent of parity supports work—without loss to either growers or taxpayers.

In view of the latest proposal to Congress to abandon 90 percent support for tobacco, it seemed to me appropriate and timely to lay the facts in this matter before the Senate. It may well be that the Department of Agriculture, in drawing up a general, or blanket recommendation for all the basic commodities, simply failed to take into account the special nature and particular needs of tobacco—or the specific advantages offered by the present tobacco program. If that is the case, as I believe it to be, I trust the Department will not press its recommendation as applied to tobacco. In any event, I have no fear that the Congress would adopt such a proposal—which would threaten the livelihood of three-quarters of a million farm families.

I oppose lowering supports for tobacco. I am confident that my colleagues from the tobacco States take the same position, and will join me in opposing any move to destroy the present tobacco program. Furthermore, I believe it is plain to anyone who understands the problem that our tobacco program needs to be continued.

My purpose here today was to analyze the specific nature of this problem, to set out the basic reasons which require a distinct and separate price-support and production-control program for tobacco, and to show how the unique character of tobacco production, marketing, and consumption also contributes to making our present program effective and workable. It seemed to me worthwhile to enumerate those characteristics and the consequences which must follow from them, and I hope this appraisal will prove helpful.

Thanks to the joint efforts over many years of a great many conscientious and devoted people, and to the active cooperation of tobacco farmers everywhere, the tobacco program has been conspicuously successful. I believe it is a basically sound, helpful, and essential part of our total farm program today. I believe it can continue to serve faithfully and well the burley growers of my State, the rural economy of the South, and hence the general welfare of our country—and do so without placing an undue burden on the Federal Government or the taxpayer.

In closing, I feel I can do no better than to quote the President's Agricultural Message to the Congress of January 11, 1954. President Eisenhower said at that time that "each farm crop has its own problems, and these problems require specific treatment." And in regard to tobacco, the President stated: "Tobacco farmers have demonstrated their ability to hold production in line with demand at the supported price without loss to the Government. The relatively small acreage of tobacco and the limited areas to which it is adapted have made production control easier than for other crops. The level of support to cooperators is 90 percent of the parity price in any year in which marketing quotas are in effect. It is recommended that the tobacco program be continued in its present form."

I believe those conclusions are still valid, and that that recommendation is as sound today as it was three and a half years ago.

FOOTNOTE ON TITO

Mr. KUCHEL. Mr. President, when the proposal was made early this year that Tito of Yugoslavia be invited to visit America, I expressed the view that such a visit would be a mistake. My feelings were stated in a telegram which I sent to the Monitor of San Francisco. I ask unanimous consent that that telegram be set forth in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JANUARY 26, 1957.

Mr. JOHN O'CONNOR,
Managing Editor, The Monitor,
San Francisco, Calif.:

I respectfully reject the suggestion that Marshal Tito of Yugoslavia be invited to visit the United States. The good intentions of such an invitation would be lost before an avalanche of disapproval which our own people would express, and before a world-wide wondering which such a visit would evoke. The unparalleled exigencies of this era in world affairs may require us to enter into arrangements with countries, some of whose policies we abhor. But that is far, far different from extending an invitation to a dictator to visit us. After all, it was less than a year ago that Tito visited Moscow amid great professions of friendship and "shoulder to shoulder" comradeship in future war.

The people and the Government of the United States are dedicated to the cause of freedom. That is the principle on which we came into being. We oppose slavery. That is the reason we oppose with all our strength the evils of Communism, International Communism, or any other kind. If Yugoslavia is independent of Russia, all well and good. I do not believe a visit here by Tito would materially aid the fight against Communism. To the contrary, in my view, it would be misinterpreted to our detriment, both at home and abroad.

I have heretofore communicated by views to the Department of State.

Kind regards.

THOMAS H. KUCHEL,
United States Senator.

Mr. KUCHEL. Mr. President, I have before me two news articles issued by the Religious News Service, sponsored by the National Conference of Christians and Jews, on this subject. They detail the indefatigable labor of a Catholic priest in a one-man crusade against a Tito visit. The priest is Rev. Father Dr. Joseph F. Thorning, pastor, educator, and writer of distinction. The article pays tribute to Father Thorning, and I ask consent that they be set forth in full.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A PRIEST CONDUCTS ONE-MAN CRUSADE AGAINST TITO VISIT

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 16, 1957.—A Catholic priest has been conducting a tireless, one-man crusade against the proposal that the United States of America invite President Josip Broz-Tito of Yugoslavia to make a State visit to this country.

The Reverend Father Dr. Joseph F. Thorning reported that he personally interviewed all but 2 of the 96 Members of the United States Senate and gave them material documenting the crimes of Mr. Tito and the suppression of religious liberty for all in Tito's Yugoslavia.

Father Thorning, who is also professor of international relations in the Catholic University of Chile, a pontifical institution, is pastor of three churches in Maryland: St. Joseph's on historic Carrollton Manor; St. Ignatius Loyola, Urbana; and St. James, Point of Rocks. Dr. Thorning also serves as an associate editor of the national magazine, World Affairs, a periodical published in Washington, D. C.

The "Padre of the Americas," as he is called in the United States Capitol because of the prayers he offers every year on April 14, Pan American Day, emphasized that he was protesting against the proposed visit by Mr. Tito as "a human being and an individual United States citizen," and not as a representative of any religious or secular organization.

"I think that a large body of American citizens of all religious faiths will be deeply offended, if we extend our national hospitality to an accomplice of the butchers of Budapest," Dr. Thorning declared.

A specialist on inter-American affairs, who has been invited to undertake several special diplomatic missions for the United States Government, the most recent for the inauguration of President Juscelino Kubitschek of Brazil; the "Padre of the Americas" is scheduled to leave soon for South America, where he has been invited to deliver a series of lectures on international relations at the Catholic University of Chile, Santiago de Chile. The last-mentioned invitation was extended to Father Thorning by His Excellency, The Most Reverend Alfredo Silva Santiago, archbishop of Concepcion and rector magnifico of the university.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 4, 1957.—A Catholic foreign affairs specialist said here that indefinite postponement of a proposed visit to the United States by President Josip Broz-Tito of Yugoslavia represents a "glorious religious victory" that will encourage and hearten believers of all faiths who reside behind the Iron Curtain.

The Reverend Father Doctor Joseph F. Thorning, who is also Professor of International Relations in the Catholic University of Chile, a Pontificial Institution, declared that members of all faiths in Tito's Yugoslavia would get a "moral uplift" and "new hope" as a result of the news that a cold reception would have awaited "a tyrant and the murderous persecutor of religion" in the United States Capitol.

The priest is pastor of St. Joseph's historic church Carrollton Manor, Frederick County, Md., and an associate editor of the national magazine, "World Affairs," published in Washington, D. C. Dr. Thorning conducted a one-man crusade against the visit of the Yugoslav president, interviewing every United States Senator and many Congressmen, recommending that they express their opposition to such a visit, publicly, and in the light of the national honor and interests of the United States of America.

Father Thorning pointed out that speeches and many other statements made on the floor of the United States Senate and House of Representatives made it overwhelmingly evident that a huge majority of members of all religious beliefs were expressing open, vigorous opposition to a visit that would place the United States in the position of compromising its moral and ethical principles by extending official hospitality to Mr. Tito. The indefinite postponement of the suggested visit seems to have confirmed Dr. Thorning's judgment and his actions, speeches, articles, book reviews and other public statements on this issue.

THE DOMESTIC MINING INDUSTRY

Mr. BIBLE. Mr. President, I have been waiting with a great deal of apprehension to see what, if anything, might be done by this Congress to assist the domestic mining industry. Up to this closing day very little has been done.

It has always seemed incongruous to me that while we are spending millions for defense, we have neglected to keep our domestic mining industry healthy. Our defense chain is only as strong as its weakest link, and to date the weakest link has been the sad state of our domestic mining industry. With our imports cut off in time of war, as has been done in the past, and a sick mining industry to provide the needed minerals and metals for a war effort, we are defeating our own purpose.

It is high time that not only our industry leaders but our administration and legislative bodies recognize the drastic need of a strong domestic mining industry.

Something must be done to correct a condition that has been allowed to exist too long, the flooding of our markets with cheap foreign-produced minerals and metals to the detriment of our domestic industry.

The question might be asked as to why these mines are closing all over the country. The answer is simple. First let me say it is not because ore reserves have become exhausted or not because there is no need for the minerals and metals produced. These mines were closed primarily and basically because they cannot produce metal in competition with ores produced by cheap labor in foreign mines. Minerals produced in foreign countries, oftentimes under near slave labor conditions, have flooded our domestic markets to such an extent that the accompanying price drop has forced domestic producers out of business.

A recent article in the Wall Street Journal telling of the cutbacks in the production of one of the country's largest zinc producers, the New Jersey Zinc Co., gives as a reason the "uncontrolled flood of foreign imports," and further quotes company officials as saying:

> The excess imports have driven the price down from 13½ to 10 cents a pound within the past 60 days. There can be no improvement in the situation and further production curtailments in the zinc mining and smelting industry are bound to occur unless the United States Government adopts some means of controlling the exploitation of the domestic market by foreign producers.

The article goes on to tell of other closings and cutbacks in the industry.

The situation is serious. When we talk of the mining industry we are not talking of the old prospector and his burro made so popular by western movies and TV classics. We are talking of investments of millions of dollars employing thousands of persons. In May of this year there were 112,200 persons employed by the metal mining industry. This does not include nonmetallic mining which employed 117,800 and is also affected to some degree by competition from foreign sources. Two hundred and thirty thousand persons in this country employed in the mining industry and that does not include those employed in smelters and refineries. The jobs of these people and the welfare of their families and the communities in which they live are in jeopardy. It is time that something was done.

This situation the American mining industry finds itself in at this time is not new. It is one that has been present for the last score of years with the exception of war created years of demand. Since the time the executive branch of our Government adopted a policy of mollifying and even aiding the production of foreign mines and metals and at the same time refusing to give some protective relief to domestic industries the mining industry has been in trouble. This situation worsened when the State Department agreed to the terms of the General Agreement on Tariff and Trade, popularly referred to as GATT, at a conference held in Geneva in 1947. This agreement, though never approved by Congress, has extended the policy allowing excessive importation of cheap foreign minerals to flood our markets, resulting in the undermining and ruination of our domestic industry.

I want to read an excerpt from a speech by the late Senator Pat McCarran. As many of my colleagues well remember, Senator McCarran was one of the greatest advocates the domestic mining industry this country ever had. This speech delivered on this floor July 8, 1949, over 8 years ago, could be given today with very few changes. I read from it:

> The metal-mining industry of the West is today in a state of distress. A great many mines are already shut down and more are going down every day. This is true in Montana, Idaho, Utah, Nevada, California, Colorado, New Mexico, and Arizona, the zinc fields of Missouri, Oklahoma, and Kansas, and the copper country of Michigan. Present high costs of labor, materials, and other operating charges have run into a declining market with copper now at 17 cents, lead 12 cents, zinc 9 cents, and Tungsten ore and concentrates quoted today at $1.15 per pound, with no market.
> Already foreign metals and ores produced by low-paid labor from far richer deposits than we possess are entering the United States. Our domestic industry upon which we must depend is in a desperate condition. Our national defense stockpiles are totally insufficient for the protection of this country. Through unfortunately mistaken policies of the past we have reduced entirely too much the import duties which were designed to meet, in a measure at least, the difference between the wages and productive ability of American workmen and those of peon and coolie labor of foreign lands.

As you see, Mr. President, those words delivered 8 years ago told of a problem that existed then and exists today. The only exception being in the price quoted for copper, the prices mentioned for lead, zinc, and tungsten are remarkably close to those currently being quoted, and at the rate the price of copper is dropping, the price quoted will not be too far off.

What has happened in the intervening time to correct this problem? The statement of Mr. Otto Herres, chairman of the National Lead and Zinc Committee before a subcommittee of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, sets forth in detail the steps taken by industry and Government in an attempt to correct the problem with only temporary success. Let me give a brief résumé of his statement. At the termination of the Korean war the markets of the United States were flooded with excess imports of lead and zinc at prices below the cost of American production. A national committee made up of members of the lead-zinc industry appealed to Congress for assistance in the emergency. The Ways and Means Committee approved provisions for the relief of the industry but the legislative relief was opposed by high officials of the administration who recommended relief through following the escape-clause procedure before the Tariff Commission.

The Tariff Commission investigated and determined that the domestic industry had been seriously injured by the flood of imports of lead and zinc. Recommendations were made to the President that relief be given to the mining industry, but because of State Department opposition the President, instead of following the advice of the experienced Tariff Commission, established instead a stockpile program for the lead-zinc industry. While the stockpile program gave temporary relief it did not solve the basic problem of stopping the excessive imports of cheap-produced foreign metals. I ask unanimous consent that the entire statement of Mr. Otto Herres be printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

Lead and zinc—like steel, petroleum, and building materials—are basic commodities, the ample supply of which contribute to the remarkable growth of the American economy. It is not surprising, therefore, that consumption of these metals has grown.

Prior to World War II, zinc consumption averaged less than 500,000 tons. Consumption in 1956 is estimated by the Bureau of Mines at 988,000 tons. More than 40 percent of zinc consumed is used in galvanizing steel products and a like amount is consumed in die castings which are so important to the automobile and other durable goods industries.

Consumption of lead in the United States has grown in a like manner.

From an annual average of 612,000 tons in the late thirties, the use of lead has increased to 1,250,000 tons. Approximately one-third of lead consumption is accounted for by the manufacture of storage batteries. Fifteen percent is consumed in tetraethyl motor fuels. Substantial tonnages are required by the electrical, pigment, and metal products industries.

American producers have independently tried to maintain the market at a high level and have curtailed production voluntarily in an effort to balance the market. These voluntary curtailments of domestic production have not been successful because foreign producers have loaded the market with more and more low-cost materials.

From 1946 to 1955, the world production of lead increased 45 percent while domestic production increased only 10 percent. At the present time foreign producers are shipping 28 percent more lead into this country than the total production of the United States producers.

During the same period, the world production of zinc has increased 56 percent while United States production has declined 15 percent. At the present time imports of zinc are 43 percent in excess of the total United States production.

Much thought has been given by industry and Government experts as to the best answer to the problem. Many solutions have been advanced, but few have been tried. While the need of some long term or permanent plan is apparent to industry and Government experts, only stopgap measures or measures designed to give temporary relief have been used.

The fact that some long term or permanent plan is necessary to stabilize the industry is fundamental. The mining industry is big business. To make a mine produce successfully and profitably it is necessary to invest large sums of money, oftentimes millions must be spent before 1 dollar's worth of ore is produced. It only makes sense that a company will not invest millions if there is a chance they will not be able to sell their product when produced or the price will be forced so low that they are unable to produce at a profit for their investors. Past experience has shown that direct subsidy programs are unpopular and short lived, that premium-price plans or other forms of bonus plans are not satisfactory and only act as stopgap measures. What the industry wants and needs is security over a long period of time. There must be assurance that there will be adequate protection from foreign producers to insure that a market will be available 5 or 10 years after the start of large-scale operations.

Huge investments necessary to such a project will not be made if they cannot be amortized. Domestic producers will be willing to invest large sums in exploration and development so as to produce the minerals and metals so necessary to our economy, only if such a long-range plan is in effect.

Let me say at this point that domestic producers do not want something for nothing. They are perfectly willing to meet any competition as long as the ground rules of production are the same. They do not want protection or a guaranty so as to protect themselves from other domestic producers. What they do need and want is protection against the flood of competitive metals and minerals produced by low-paid labor under conditions that would not be allowed to exist in this country. Until they get this needed protection the domestic mining industry will continue to be unstable and sick.

Nearly 3 years ago the Department of Interior, with the approval of the President, promised the Congress a remedy for the ills of the mining industry. Two years ago on August 14, 1955, the President said, in a message to Congress:

> I am conscious of the desirability of developing a long-range minerals program for the United States to assure an adequate mobilization base and to preserve a sound mineral economy. The advisory committee on minerals policy so advised and the Office of Minerals Mobilization has been established in the Department of the Interior to determine and recommend such a program.

The President also said in the same document:

> The interest of the domestic minerals industry will be better served by proceeding with the careful development of a long-range minerals program than by approving a stopgap measure extending substantial Government aid to only a segment of the industry.

So, 2 years ago the executive branch of our Government had determined that a long-range plan was not only advisable but necessary to the well-being of the mining industry.

No one expected the long-range plan to come into being overnight, but as time went on and the troubles of the mining industry became more and more severe, there developed a doubt if such a program would ever take place and if it was ever to be put into effect it would come too late.

Finally, on May 24 of this year, the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Seaton, announced the long-range mineral plan had been formulated. When the plan itself was revealed to Congress and explained, it was met with mixed emotions. The plan was not a plan for the entire industry and in no way could it be called a cure-all. It considered only the welfare of the lead-zinc industry and did not take into consideration the protection of the producers of other strategic and critical minerals and metals so necessary to our economy.

The plan did, and this is a point I want to emphasize, take the first step in a long time in the right direction. It has long been agreed by industry and Government experts that the only workable long-range plan must embody some method to protect domestic industry from foreign producers. Whether the method to be used be import quotas, tariffs, or a form of import taxes, was immaterial as long as it provided the needed protection.

The plan as presented by the Department of the Interior, with the consent of the administration, recommended that certain excise taxes be placed on the importation of lead and zinc. At the hearings of the Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committee, at which the plan was presented on June 4 of this year, Secretary Seaton was asked directly by members of the committee whether or not the State Department concurred with the proposed plan. Secretary Seaton replied that the plan had complete administration support.

Since that time the State Department, in a report to the Senate Finance Committee, stated directly that they favored the enactment of the legislation introduced to implement the lead-zinc excise taxes.

Mr. President, I do not have to tell you that this is the first time in many lean years that the State Department has conceded that our domestic mining industry, one of the most important segments of our economy, not only might need but deserves a little consideration over foreign producers. This I feel is a real step forward and one that might prove to be the turning point in curing the ills that have weakened this vital industry for so long.

The Nation cannot afford to swell the ranks of the unemployed with thousands of jobless miners, smeltermen, and other allied workers. Neither can it afford the severe consequences to defense and the economy resulting from the destructive effects of closing down many mines unable to operate within the present price and market structure. A mine is unlike a store. Once production halts and pumps are removed, a mine usually floods. Often it is lost to further production forever. At a minimum, it costs huge sums of money and a considerable length of time, sometimes years, before a mine can be placed back in operation. It certainly is dangerous folly to treat in this manner an industry producing strategic materials.

During the intervening months before we reconvene on January 7, I trust that further concrete headway is made before the Tariff Commission and the executive branch. Failing this, our duty is that when we return in 4 months to take the proper legislative action.

TRANSOCEAN AIRLINES

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there may be printed in the body of the RECORD a statement I have prepared concerning the Transocean Airlines.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR KNOWLAND

I have just finished reading the brief filed by Transocean Airlines on July 31 with the Civil Aeronautics Board in the irregular carrier investigation, in which proceeding Transocean is seeking a limited certificate to permit it to provide supplemental cargo and passenger air services. There is no Government subsidy whatsoever involved in the Transocean supplemental operations.

Transocean maintains its principal offices in my home city of Oakland, Calif. Since its organization in 1946, Transocean and its affiliates have become an integral and most important part of the business, civic and social community in the San Francisco-Oakland Bay area. We in the bay area and California are proud indeed of the public interest achievements of Transocean, and its affiliates, and its more than 5,000 employees throughout the world.

Through the years, I have personally become familiar with the operations and remarkable achievements of the Transocean organization. Orvis Nelson is rightly a legend among pilots and aeronautical people the world over; his leadership of the Transocean family is a truly great saga in this newest, fastest media of transportation which is such a potentially powerful vehicle for peace and the achievement and maintenance of the fellowship of all men everywhere.

I am aware, too, of the contributions which Transocean and its affiliates have made and are making to the national interest of the United States in some of the key areas of the world. These include not only the vital Middle East areas but the Pacific area between California and the Orient which the Civil Aeronautics Board in the recently decided reopened trans-Pacific certificate renewal case characterized as being one of the strongest international routes in the world and stronger than any American flag international route outside the Pan American World Airways system.

My one disappointment in the Transocean situation has been the failure of the Civil Aeronautics Board to grant Transocean a certificate in order to provide the stability needed to formulate and properly carry through long-range operational and financial plans. I am hopeful that the Civil Aeronautics Board in the irregular carrier investigation will grant Transocean an appropriate certificate; a type and form of authorization which, in my opinion, it richly deserves and merits. Certification is a step vital to the airline at this time but it is only the first step. The CAB irregular carrier investigation appears to be limiting its attention to domestic and overseas flying and paying little or no attention to operational authority to foreign countries. It is in this area of the foreign carriage of passengers and cargo that Transocean has made its most significant contributions and toward which authority it has concentrated its efforts.

Transocean first applied to the Civil Aeronautics Board during the summer of 1946 for a certificate that would authorize nonscheduled operations on a worldwide basis. The Board never acted upon this application but finally incorporated it into the large irregular carrier investigation.

After all these years indications are that Transocean will be severely limited in the international authority it may receive, if any, from this investigation. I feel very strongly that in addition to domestic and overseas authority Transocean should be authorized to provide supplemental air service in foreign air transportation if it is to make its full contribution to the national interest.

Perhaps the introduction of appropriate legislation looking toward the legislative certification of Transocean may be necessary. There is ample precedent for such legislative relief. In fact, the domestic trunklines and Pan American World Airways were certificated under the grandfather provisions of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938. The local service carriers were permanently certificated legislatively in 1955 (Public Law 38, H. R. 2225); and the intra-Alaskan and intra-Hawaiian carriers in 1956 (Public Law 741, S. 3163). This present Congress just recently passed and forwarded to the President legislation authorizing permanent certification of the United States-Alaskan carriers (S. 1873). Unlike Transocean, all of these carriers, except the all-cargo carriers, have been the beneficiaries of substantial Government subsidies over the years.

I believe in permitting the various administrative agencies ample leeway to carry out the intent and purposes of Congress in the discharge of their delegated statutory obligations. Therefore, I have refrained up to now from introducing legislation to certificate Transocean for limited-type supplemental air services. Nonetheless I must, in good conscience, say to my colleagues that I am finding it increasingly difficult to continue to refrain from sponsoring such legislation. I hope that the Civil Aeronautics Board will issue an appropriate certificate to Transocean in the pending irregular carrier investigation, which certificate I believe unreservedly that Transocean fully warrants, merits, and deserves.

In order that my colleagues may have some knowledge of the contributions which Transocean and its affiliates have made and are making to the national defense and of the persistent, though as yet unsuccessful efforts, which Transocean has made over the years to be certificated by the Civil Aeronautics Board, I ask unanimous consent to have Appendix A and Appendix B from the brief of July 31, 1957, filed by Transocean Air Lines in the irregular carrier investigation printed immediately following my remarks.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, in connection with my statement, I ask that there be printed in the RECORD also appendix A and appendix B of the brief to the Civil Aeronautics Board on behalf of Transocean Air Lines.

There being no objection, the appendixes were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

APPENDIX A

MAJOR AERONAUTICAL SERVICE ON BEHALF OF THE GOVERNMENT OF THE UNITED STATES

1946

Air Transport Command; California-Hawaii round trips; volume, 2 per day; duration, 11 months.

1947

United States Navy and Civil Aeronautics Administration; operation landing aids experiment station, Arcata, Calif.; duration, 3 years.

LIST AND DESCRIPTION OF CAB APPLICATIONS OF TRANSOCEAN AIR LINES

Docket No. 2379: June 1946 application for special services. No action and application terminated upon institution of proceedings in Large Irregular Investigation, Docket No. 5132.

Docket No. 2537 et al.: Pacific Northwest-Hawaii Case. Application for scheduled services denied.

Docket No. 3041 et al.: Transatlantic Cargo Case. Application for transatlantic cargo service denied.

Docket No. 3041 et al.: Reopened Transatlantic Cargo Case. Application of Seaboard & Western granted, and Transocean's application denied.

Docket No. 5582 et al.: West Coast-Hawaii Case. Transocean's application denied.

Docket No. 5031 et al.: Transpacific Certificate Renewal Case. Examiner recommended temporary certificate to Transocean for carriage of persons and property only in the transpacific area; but the Board by a 3 to 2 vote did not adopt the examiner's recommendation. Thereafter, the Board, by a split of 2 to 2 vote, denied Transocean's reconsideration petition, despite a concession of error in original opinion, and without retransmitting to the President in light of such error, although one member urged that such retransmittal be made.

Docket No. 5132 et al.: Irregular Carrier Investigation. Granted supplemental authority of persons and property in domestic and overseas air transportation but denied supplemental authority for carriage of persons in foreign air transportation on a limited basis. The acquisition of the latter authority has been the 10-year quest of Transocean.

Docket No. 7300: Application for exemption for authority to engage in transportation of persons and property (charter and special services) between points in the United States and between points in the United States and overseas and foreign points. No action by CAB.

In the Transpacific Certificate Renewal Case it should be noted that the adverse decision of the CAB and the President was on the basis of an adverse 3 to 2 vote within the CAB. Two members of the Board filed a vigorous dissenting opinion urging that the Board and the President adopt the examiner's recommendation. It is of further interest that when the decision was affirmed by the President, one of the majority, Hon. Oswald Ryan, had failed of reappointment to the Board. Transocean petitioned for reconsideration of the adverse decision but was turned down by a 2 to 2 vote of the Board and without the Board sending the matter to the President, despite the fact that the two adverse members conceded in the reconsideration order that certain errors had been made in the original majority decision in which the examiner's recommendation for certification of Transocean failed of adoption by one vote.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1791) to further amend the Reorganization Act of 1949, as amended, so that such act will apply to reorganization plans transmitted to the Congress at any time before June 1, 1959.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2377) to amend chapter 223, title 18, United States Code, to provide for the production of statements and reports of witnesses.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9302) making appropriations for mutual security for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1958, and for other purposes, and that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15 to the bill, and concurred therein.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The message also further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 230. An act to require the Secretary of the Army to convey to the county of Los Angeles, Calif., all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to certain portions of a tract of land heretofore conditionally conveyed to such county;

H. R. 2075. An act for the relief of Albert Heinze;

H. R. 2654. An act for the relief of Martin Wunderlich Co.;

H. R. 2904. An act for the relief of the Knox Corporation of Thomson, Ga.;

H. R. 3370. An act to amend section 1871 of title 28, United States Code, to increase the mileage and subsistence allowances of grand and petit jurors;

H. R. 3468. An act for the relief of J. A. Ross & Co.;

H. R. 6127. An act to provide means of further securing and protecting the civil rights of persons within the jurisdiction of the United States;

H. R. 7536. An act to amend the act of January 12, 1951, as amended, to continue in effect the provisions of title II of the First War Powers Act, 1941;

H. R. 8256. An act to amend the District of Columbia Income and Franchise Tax Act of 1947, as amended, to exclude social security benefits and to provide additional exemptions for age and blindness, and to exempt from personal property taxation in the District of Columbia boats used solely for pleasure purposes, and for other purposes;

H. R. 8508. An act to provide that there shall be two county committees elected under the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act for certain counties;

H. R. 8928. An act to amend the act of June 9, 1880, entitled "An Act to grant to the corporate authorities of the city of Council Bluffs, in the State of Iowa, for public uses, a certain lake or bayou situated near said city;

H. R. 8994. An act to amend the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended, to increase the salaries of certain executives of the Atomic Energy Commission, and for other purposes;

H. R. 9406. An act to amend the act of June 23, 1949, as amended, to provide that telephone and telegraph services furnished Members of the House of Representatives shall be computed on a biennial rather than an annual basis; and

H. J. Res. 374. Joint resolution for the relief of certain aliens.

LEASING OF SPACE FOR FEDERAL AGENCIES

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STENNIS in the chair). The hour of 11 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill, S. 2533, to amend the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 to authorize the Administrator of General Services to lease space for Federal agencies for periods not exceeding 15 years, and for other purposes.

CIVIL RIGHTS

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, H. R. 6127, masquerading under the false title of an act to secure and protect civil rights, has now passed the Congress and has been messaged to the President. Its legislative history is written. It will doubtless be signed into law. Any legislation motivated by politics rather than principle is bad. Seldom has any single piece of legislation been the object of so much political bidding in the effort to gain the votes of a minority bloc group. Both political parties, as such, and numerous individual Members of both Houses of Congress worked at the auction. Several aspirants for the Presidency vied for the most conspicuous place in the picture.

I have the conviction that the great mass of the American people are sick and tired of the frauds that are sought to be perpetrated for political purposes in the sacred name of civil rights. The fact that this legislation was able to generate so much support is classic proof of an observation once made by Elihu Root that "a Member of Congress feels that an organized minority will punish where an unorganized majority will not protect." Mr. Root might well have gone further and stated that politicians in the executive branch of the Government, where this measure was conceived, are wholly sensitive to the truth of this maxim.

If it were intended to apply this law equally and fairly to all cases of coercion and intimidation in voting, to ballot stuffing and election rigging in each of the 48 States, one might find some excuse for it even though it is an unconstitutional intrusion of Federal power into matters reserved to the State by a written Constitution. It was so shot through with politics that its sponsors did not even pretend to be concerned about fraudulent elections and coercion in voting throughout the Nation. There was no pretense even that the bill was not aimed solely at the Southern States. It was undoubtedly enacted to curry favor with the National Colored People's Association and kindred groups, and largely in response to their threats of political reprisal.

This law will be administered by a politically minded Attorney General. There can be little doubt that he will be constantly pressed by the Vice President of the United States to apply the great powers of the law in the Southern States, at such places and in such time and manner as the NAACP, of which the Vice President is the most distinguished member, may demand.

The threat of this vicious legislation will be used to intimidate honest officials of State and local governments who are earnestly endeavoring to discharge their duties under their oaths of office and the laws of their respective States.

It is entirely likely that the application of this law will result in forcing the registration of a large number of Negro citizens who, in fact, cannot meet the qualifications prescribed for all electors under the laws of the State in which they live. It is a thoroughly bad bill, and places dangerous powers in the hands of those who are to administer it without much comforting proof of their responsibility and fairness.

Mr. President, several Senators among the little group of 18 who organized early in the year to fight the misnamed civil-rights bill have requested that I make a statement in regard to the criticisms leveled at southern Senators for not undertaking to filibuster H. R. 6127 to death. At the outset, I think it should be said that a number of Senate bills in this field, including one identical with the original H. R. 6127, with 39 of 96 Senators as authors, were introduced in the Senate at the beginning of this session of Congress. Those bills were the subject of extended hearings by the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate. All of them are still in that committee. Not one of them ever reached the floor of the Senate.

H. R. 6127 passed the House of Representatives on June 18, despite the valiant opposition of most of the Representatives from the Southern States, who were aided by a small number of Representatives from other sections who courageously rose above the miasma of politics to defend constitutional government. When the bill was messaged to the Senate from the House, a combination of Senators from both parties joined hands to prevent the bill from being referred to the Judiciary Committee, which was the proper course under the rules. Through a strained and devious application of the rules of the Senate they succeeded in their purpose. Our group of 18 Senators who were opposed on principle to every part of the bill—we were 18 of the entire membership of 96—were confronted with the necessity of making grave decisions in planning our opposition to the measure.

Few, if any, of the 18 were strangers to the filibuster. A majority had been through many bone-wearying legislative struggles on similar proposed legislation. We had not, however, previously been faced with such a vicious and far-reaching bill under such difficult conditions.

There is a mistaken impression, widely held, that a filibuster in the Senate is a comparatively easy method whereby a few determined men can prevent the passage of almost any proposed legislation, if they are willing to talk. Even Senators sometimes refer to the right of unlimited debate in the Senate. Unfortunately for our country, no such right has existed since 1917.

As a matter of fact, Mr. President, the Senate does have a previous-question rule which has been in effect for 40 years. It is a little slower in the process of strangulation than the rule in the House of Representatives, but it can be equally effective in bringing a bill to a vote.

At any time they may wish to do so, 16 Senators may file a petition to end debate in the Senate. Under our rule, a Senator who may have the floor and may be addressing the Senate, can be interrupted in the course of his remarks at any time, so that the petition may be filed. The most notable difference between the gag rule of the House of Representatives and that which obtains in the Senate lies in the fact that the Senate rule requires a two-thirds vote of all of the Senators, in order to gag the Senate, whereas in the House of Representatives a majority of those voting can cut off debate.

Several careful canvasses by our group revealed that we did not have as many as 32 Senators who would stand firmly against the application of cloture or gag rule, so as to enable us to talk the bill to death.

The 18 southern Senators were confronted with a hard choice. From a purely political point of view, it would have been the easy course for the 18 of us to have planted our feet in concrete and to have announced that we would filibuster to the death against the bill. We could have proclaimed that we had died defending the barricades, and thereby undoubtedly have won great plaudits from most of our constituents for our heroic, last-ditch resistance. But, Mr. President, there is little doubt that this course would have resulted in having the Senate pass the vicious bill in the original form in which it came to us from the House. As sensible men experienced in the Senate, we knew that the easy course was sure to lead to defeat for us and to an unparalleled disaster to the States we strive to represent.

We are fully cognizant of the fact that our people have become accustomed to expect filibusters in circumstances such as those in which we found ourselves, and that the adoption of any other course in a desperate effort to strip the bill of its most vicious provisions was likely to be misunderstood by the unthinking. The stakes were great. They involved the preservation of the social order and way of life of several of the Southern States.

We, therefore, Mr. President, pursued a policy of appeal to reason, rather than to launch a futile talkathon. Our speeches on the motion to take up the bill were designed for a maximum of length to appeal to the sense of fair play and justice of our colleagues and, beyond them, to the masses of the fair-minded American people, and to do this without bringing on a gag which would have cut off our exposure of the vicious character of the original House bill.

The bill had been sailing under false colors. In two speeches in June on the majority procedure to bypass the Judiciary Committee, I stressed the fact that supporters of the bill were referring to it as a voting bill, while planning to use it to mix the races in the public schools of the South, even at the point of Federal bayonets. This drastic course was clearly authorized in part III.

Later, on July 2, just before the motion was made to take up the bill, I again addressed the Senate. I attempted to point out the iniquitous powers over our people vested by part III of the bill. I demonstrated—so clearly that it was never refuted—that part III of the bill was cunningly designed to use the whole power of the Federal Government to destroy the separation of the races in the South on which our way of life is based.

In opposing the bill, the members of our devoted little band did not reckon the cost in hours of sweat and toil. We used every means at our command, including television and radio appearances, to enlist public sympathy outside the South.

When it is considered that there were only 18 out of 96 Senators, all of us suspect because we were from the South, who were willing at the outset to wage an all-out fight on this bill, I think that I can, in all modesty, say for myself and my associates that the legislative history of the Senate does not reveal as great a victory by so few Senators as the one we attained.

Of course, Mr. President, it would have been manifestly impossible for our group to have made any progress whatever, in amending the bill, had it not been for the fact that brave and fairminded Senators from other areas, when the facts were presented to them, rallied to the cause of constitutional government. They rose above the political pressures to which they were subjected from day to day as they walked about this Capitol. And the performance of the Senate upon that bill, under the pressures that were being applied on the principal amendments that were adopted by the Senate, is enough to restore the faith of any doubting American anywhere in the vitality of the legislative system and of our American Government.

I will not resort, Mr. President, to the calling of names, but there are men in this body who had nothing to gain and a great deal to lose politically who, when they were convinced of the correctness of our position, took in stride the threats of political reprisal that were hurled, shook them off, and rose to vote their views as to the right course of action in the national interest.

We have heard of acts of great courage that had been displayed in this body in years gone by. We have heard of the dramatic role of Senator Ross, of Kansas, who, undertaking to preserve the division of powers, voted against the impeachment of President Andrew Johnson, when he knew that action would seal his political doom, if it did not in fact endanger his very physical life.

For years I have read the stories of old about men of courage rising in the Senate of the United States, placing the title of an office that they highly prized upon the tables of chance in order that they might do that which their consciences dictated. That spirit is not dead in the Senate. We saw it displayed during the fight on this bill time and time again here on the floor of the Senate. For my part, at the conclusion of the Senate action on this bill I was more proud of the fact that I had been permitted to serve in this body and associate with those courageous Senators than I had been at any other time in my career.

Part III, aimed at striking down the separation of the races in our hospitals, schools, in hotels, at swimming pools, and at all places of public entertainment was stricken from the bill. The Senate then proceeded to write into the bill an amendment guaranteeing the right of a jury trial for any person charged with criminal contempt in the Federal district courts.

There had been much confusion, Mr. President, as to whether or not it were appropriate to provide a jury trial in cases of criminal contempt arising under injunctive process. There were many digressions and excursions, into the realm of fancy, to divert attention from that constitutional principle, which is one of the primary rights upon which all Americans must rely for the preservation of their liberties. When the United States Senate understood that issue, the Senate rose to the occasion and declared for the right of every American to face a jury of his peers when charged with criminal contempt.

Other amendments adopted in the Senate prohibited the use of volunteer workers from the National Colored Peoples' Association and kindred groups by the Commission established under part I, and required Senate confirmation of the Executive Director of that Commission. The Director will, of course, be its principal officer. These amendments were certain to play a great part in its operations and in the making of its report.

When we had arrived at this particular stage of the proceedings in the Senate I happened to learn that a determined effort would be made to revive some of the provisions of part III that had been stricken from the bill. The new amendment appeared harmless on its face, but if it had been adopted it would have placed the stamp of Congressional approval on the erroneous, if not infamous, decision of the Supreme Court requiring the mixing of the children in the public schools without regard to the wishes of the parents of either race. We, therefore, quickly closed the bill to amendment in order to assure that none of the victories that we had gained would be snatched from us.

The bill was then returned to the House for action on the Senate amendments. I shall not indulge in any recriminations in attempting to fix the responsibility for the great weakening of the Senate jury trial amendment in that body. I am not given to criticism or questioning the motives of men who are bound by the same oath that binds me. I shall content myself by saying that if a few leaders from the Southern States in the House of Representatives had been willing to accept the Senate jury trial amendment, applied only to H. R. 6127, they could have had the Senate amendment at any time over a period of about 10 days.

The bill was returned to the Senate from the House of Representatives with two amendments, one of which greatly weakened the jury trial amendment that the Senate had adopted after exhaustive discussion.

The bill has now passed beyond the jurisdiction of the Congress, and I can now say that I and at least 16 of our original 18 lived—every second and every day that these amendments were pending in the Senate—in mortal fear of an attempt to revise some part of part III that would approve the race-mixing decision of the Supreme Court of May 1954.

If we had conducted an all-out filibuster against the House amendments, as many people not familiar with the legislative situation demanded, we would have invited ultimate disaster in the form of amendments reopening in some way part III, that we had stricken from the bill. Under the rules of the Senate, amendments to the two amendments of the House were in order and could have been offered by any Senator at any time. We simply did not have the votes to successfully protect a filibuster. We therefore had nothing to gain and everything to lose by launching one. Under the conditions we faced, if I had undertaken a filibuster for personal political aggrandizement and in response to demands that were made upon me, I would have forever reproached myself for being guilty of a form of treason against the people of the South.

Mr. President, if there is any one subject relating to the Senate and Senate procedure with which I am familiar it is the knowledge I have acquired about filibusters. It was my high privilege to serve as leader of a group of southern Senators who, week after week, fought the effort to change the rules of the Senate in order to gag Senators from sovereign States easily and readily.

I was honored to serve in the same position in opposing several other politically motivated bills aimed directly at the Southern States, including the original FEPC bill. Many other members of our group have been in the Senate for years and participated in these historic struggles.

There was not a man among us who was not willing to speak against this iniquitous bill until he dropped in his tracks. We would have done so, but for the conviction, growing out of our knowledge of the Senate and the experience of many years in this body, that a filibuster was certain to make a bad bill infinitely worse.

We knew that it could cause us to lose all of our hard-gained victories in striking out the provisions of the bill which would have authorized the Attorney General to use every ounce of the vast power of this great Government of ours to destroy the system of the separation of the races in the South.

Our group held numerous meetings and the wisdom of launching a filibuster was often discussed. All members of the group were living with the problem from day to day, defending the things dearest to our hearts while under heavy fire. At no time did any member of our group declare in any of our meetings that it was his belief that a filibuster was advisable, much less that one could be successfully waged. The contrary view was expressed on innumerable occasions.

Part IV, the voting section, as I have said, is likely to be abused in its application. If it is, Mr. President, ways can be finally found, when the heat and political pressure of the moment have passed, to recapture control of our local governments. We will do so, and handle our elections, and we will deal fairly with all men of all races, permitting and guaranteeing the sacred right of suffrage. But, Mr. President, there is no power on earth which can restore a great civilization that has been weakened and destroyed by miscegenation and amalgamation of the blood of two different races of almost equal numbers.

When the decision in the Brown case was handed down by the Supreme Court, I immediately issued a statement denouncing the decision and charged that it could well result in the destruction of public education in several of our States. I repeated that statement on the floor of the Senate at the first opportunity.

If the bill had passed the Senate as it came to us from the House, Georgia and several other Southern States would have been presented with two of the hardest alternatives ever confronting any people. One of two things would have surely happened. Either Federal political officials with every power of the Federal Government behind them would have succeeded in mixing the races in the schools—or the public schools would have been closed. Mr. President, in other lands throughout a long period of history great peoples and great civilizations have tried the first course. Miscegenation has been the inevitable result. Under the original bill, many of our people may have gone to their death resisting Federal bayonets or have wasted away in Federal concentration camps for seeking to keep their children in schools attended only by their own kind.

I pray God that we may never be confronted with this hard choice. If my people are ever confronted with it, I hope that they will have the fortitude to close the public schools of Georgia and tell the Federal minions to do their worst. I say this fully aware of the magnitude of the disaster visited upon a people forced to close their system of public schools to educate their youth. A public school system is the most important of all of the functions of State government and I recognize that fact, but I make this statement with the knowledge gained from history that the eventual amalgamation of the races would be an even greater tragedy. We would find a way eventually to open the schools, but it would never be possible to restore the purity of either race if their blood be ever mixed.

Our southern forebears managed to live through the ordeal of the reconstruction period. Disenfranchised and helpless, they saw cunning politicians acting under color of Federal law abuse all State processes, particularly the elective process, and manipulate the vote of our Negro people. It was indeed the Tragic Era.

Most of the public offices throughout the Southern States were occupied by Negroes. These officials were in turn controlled by thieving carpetbaggers and scallywags.

The courage and genius of our forebears enabled them to survive this trying experience and to emerge from it with our social order intact, though our economy was destroyed.

I would not be honest if I did not tell the southern people that they are in for difficult times. The order of the Reconstruction Period will be completely reversed, for the employees of Mr. Brownell, who will make political forays into the South, will be directed by the political leaders of the NAACP. Instead of white carpetbaggers directing Negro officials, Negro political leaders will direct the carpetbagger attorneys of the Department of Justice.

I can only urge our people to display the same courage, devotion, and patience that enabled our forebears to survive the years of reconstruction. The great extremes of that period finally sickened the people of the United States outside the South. If the politically dictated persecution which may await us is severe it will eventually outrage the sense of decency inherent in the masses of the American people of today. There is no doubt in my mind that we will be able to find allies in the cause of constitutional government which will enable us to shake off the talons of predatory Federal politicians, if the abuses which result from political enforcement of the voting section of the law are too flagrant.

As I have said, the bill is bad, but consider how much worse it would have been if we had not been able to eliminate part III from the bill. If that vast, yea, limitless power had been vested in a political Federal appointee, he could have moved simultaneously against every school board of trustees in every Southern State. At the same time, he could have brought thousands of lawsuits at the expense of the American taxpayer and supported by the full power of the Federal Government to break down every scintilla of separation of the races in every walk of life in every public place.

If the original part III had been applied so as to bring about the social intermingling of the races from the kindergarten to the grave, southern civilization would have been destroyed beyond hope of redemption. This was the supreme tragedy we sought above all else to avert.

If permitted a personal word, Mr. President, I may say that I have been accustomed to hard work all of my life, but never have I put as much effort in any single endeavor as I exerted in seeking to strike the most vicious provisions from H. R. 6127.

There were few nights over a period of 8 or 9 weeks when I had more than 4 hours' sleep. Many midnight hours were spent in legal research and study of the bill, the numerous amendments proposed, and the deceptive statements of our adversaries. I undertook to the limit of my ability to present facts and plead the cause of the South at every opportunity. Whether on the floor of the Senate, or conferring with the President of the United States, or on radio or television, I sought to get our case before the country. The same statement could be made with respect to every other member of our group. Not a member of our group of 18 spared himself in any degree and each and every one of them made a great contribution to the victories we were able to gain.

In years gone by, it has been a source of pride to me that our group was able to defeat bills of this nature when they were forced to the consideration of the Senate. In the case of H. R. 6127, we were from the outset faced with greater odds than ever before.

I do not have the power of expression which would permit me to pay adequate tribute to those who came to our relief when abuse was heaped upon us as we presented the facts and exposed the implications of the issue.

With a few brave exceptions, we were confronted in the beginning with overwhelming numbers of both the Republican and Democratic Parties outside the South and it took courage of the highest order for many of those Senators to change positions publicly taken before they knew the facts.

It has saddened me to lose any part of the victories that we gained on the jury trial amendment, but the fact that we were able to confine the Federal invasion of the South to the field of voting and keep the withering hand of the Federal Government out of our schools and social order is to me, as I look back over the years, the sweetest victory of my 25 years as a Senator from the State of Georgia.

Most of my public life has been dedicated to the preservation of the separate systems for the races on which the life of Georgia and the South is based. If my position is misunderstood or twisted for political purposes, I would consider the loss of my seat in the Senate as a cheap price to pay for the conviction in my heart, mind, and soul that God was kind enough to vouchsafe to me and those associated with me, the strength and the understanding to follow the wisest course in meeting the great danger posed by this legislation.

I have lived a full life and through the generosity of the people of my State have enjoyed every honor they could bestow. I like to think that I would gladly part with what remains of that life if this would guarantee the preservation of a civilization of two races of unmixed blood in the land I love.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I congratulate the Senator from Georgia upon the very fine statement he has made, and inform him publicly that it has been a great honor to serve under his leadership in the fight to preserve the rights not only of the Southern States, but of all the States, and all our people. The Senator's views reflect the almost unanimous views of southern Senators.

The question will be asked of many of us when we return home why we did not engage in a filibuster. I wish to make it clear for the RECORD that so far as the junior Senator from Louisiana is concerned, I personally raised the issue of an organized filibuster by the southern Senators, recognizing that gag rule would undoubtedly be applied to us, and that the bill would pass under a cloture rule.

When I raised the issue, the view was expressed by several Senators, including the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. THURMOND] that an organized filibuster would be a mistake. It was unanimously agreed that such would not be the wiser course. It was left to each Senator to make a speech of such length as he saw fit, but not to engage in an organized filibuster.

I am proud to associate myself with the collective judgment of all southern Senators who made this fight. We shall continue to do our best in the future.

I ask unanimous consent that statements made by various other Senators be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statements were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Senator ROBERTSON of Virginia, August 23, 1957, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD]

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. If a sufficient number of Members of this body see this issue, as I do, as a matter of principle, the bill will not be accepted in its present form.

But, if a sufficient number of Members of the Senate are not willing to block passage now, I frankly doubt our ability to win a majority by forcing the Senate to remain in session for an extended period.

As a realist I recognize also the fact that if we now antagonize those allies who helped us to eliminate some of the worst features of this bill, they may not continue to stand with us against those forces which would destroy the character of the Senate as a deliberative body by limiting debate in order to obtain more prompt action on radical reform measures.

The bill before us, as I said at the outset, is an evil one, and I hope will be rejected. The record is clear that I have never wavered in my opposition to it.

[Senator ELLENDER, August 29, 1957, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD]

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, this morning I was aroused to come to the Senate at 10 o'clock to make the short speech I have to deliver. I have been sitting in my place now for 11 hours and 45 minutes awaiting my opportunity. While I am on my feet I wish to compliment the distinguished junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. THURMOND] for his great feat of endurance. I know what an ordeal he went through. I wish to say that I held title of the longest filibuster for about 2 or 3 years until another idiot, in the person of the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] beat my record. [Laughter.]

But there is one record I hold which I do not believe anyone will ever exceed. It was established about a year after I became a Member of the Senate over 19 years ago, and I was successful in holding the floor for 6 successive days by unanimous consent, and speaking from 6 to 8 hours. So I know the ordeal through which my good friend from South Carolina went in the 24 hours he spoke.

I am going to vote against this so-called compromise, and I urge all my colleagues to do likewise. My only regret is that the pressure for adjournment is so great that those of us who seriously, conscientiously, and for good cause oppose this bill cannot obtain sufficient time to discuss it in detail—to lay its faults bare before the bar of public opinion.

I have on my desk in my office a speech covering over 1,500 pages. I had planned to make it should the necessity arise. I think the occasion for its delivery has arrived, and I am ready and willing to begin delivering it. However, I am a realist, Mr. President. I have discussed this matter with a number of my colleagues and it is obvious that proponents of the bill, as it has been compromised, are so numerous that they are able, and also willing and anxious, to choke off debate by invoking cloture at the earliest moment. Under the circumstances, it would be a futile gesture to attempt to obtain sufficient time to properly present the ugly picture of this bill to the American people.

I warn those who have been hypnotized by the legislative snake charmers who advocate this alleged compromise that they are making a bed of thorns for themselves. I urge all Senators to vote against the bill.

[Senator TALMADGE, August 29, 1957, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD]

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, H. R. 6127 was passed by the House of Representatives and reached the floor of the United States Senate without any significant change from the iniquitous version submitted to Congress by Attorney General Brownell.

As taken up initially by the Senate, it was a force bill of the rankest order. It would have conferred upon the Attorney General of the United States unlimited power to harass, intimidate, and control the thoughts and actions of all Americans in all areas of human conduct. It would have empowered the President of the United States—or the Attorney General acting for him—to use the full armed might of the Nation to force integration of the races in every facet of life, public and private, in the South. It would have repealed the constitutional right of trial by jury.

Seventeen determined southern Senators—with all odds against them—set out to do what their counterparts in the House of Representatives were unable to do: To eliminate the more vicious provisions of this monstrous legislation. The success of their skillful, courageous efforts and the effectiveness of their persuasive, dignified arguments speak for themselves.

The measure as the Senate returned it to the House of Representatives was an emaciated shadow of its former brute self.

The Senate version struck out those provisions which would have restored bayonet rule and authorized the use of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps to force racial integration in the South.

The Senate version eliminated those provisions which would have given the Attorney General dictatorial powers to regiment the thoughts and actions of the American people.

The Senate version contained an ironclad guaranty that the constitutional right of trial by jury would be respected and upheld in all cases of criminal contempt arising under it.

The success of the southern Senators in pyramiding their 17 votes to win these herculean victories for constitutional government and individual liberty was beyond their fondest original expectation. As repugnant as are the remaining provisions to constitutional principle and States rights, it nevertheless had to be admitted, even by advocates of the measure, that southern Senators gained far more than they lost.

It had been hoped that the House of Representatives would sustain the full gains made by the Senate.

Unfortunately, however—through a so-called compromise which compromises at best principle and at worst the Constitution of the United States—the jury-trial guaranty was sacrificed.

After only an hour's delay, the House returned the bill to the Senate.

The problem then confronting southern Senators was how best to protect the interests of their constituents.

Certain Members of the House of Representatives presumed to advocate that we conduct a filibuster against the bill.

I do not know why these men arrogated unto themselves greater wisdom than the combined intellect of 16 southern Senators. It could not possibly be because they were more successful in eliminating the more vicious and iniquitous provisions of the bill.

To be sure, the fact that a grandstand of long-winded speeches would be immediately popular with our constituents—who, like us, are unalterably opposed to this bill in any form—was not lost upon us.

But reason dictated that, in determining our course of action, we should measure the gains we had made against the potential losses.

The facts we had to face were these:

First. It would be impossible for 17 Senators to conduct a filibuster until the convening of the 86th Congress in January 1959. Debate in the Senate can be limited by 64 votes, and with 79 Members of the Senate favoring a civil-rights bill, there exist 15 votes more than the number necessary to impose gag rule at will.

Second. There is pending in a subcommittee of the Rules Committee of which I am chairman seven different resolutions—Senate Resolutions 17, 19, 21, 28, 29, 30, and 32—to liberalize the provisions of Senate rule XXII, under which debate in the Senate can be limited. Those resolutions contain an aggregate of 54 signatures—5 more than necessary to pass any one of them.

As chairman of that subcommittee, I have been successful in my insistence upon full hearings on, and thorough study of, these resolutions before any action is taken on them. Because of the present complexion of the Rules Committee, it is well known that any filibuster attempt would result in the reporting of one or more of these pending resolutions and the imposition of a much stronger cloture rule, which would further limit the ability of individual Senators to protect their constituents.

Third. The majority of the Members of the Senate—by at least 3 to 1—favors a stronger bill than the one presently under consideration. This is evidenced by the fact that, in voting on amendments to parts III and IV of the bill, 12 to 15 Senators voted with the South on one amendment, only to vote against it on the other.

There is considerable sentiment on the part of the President and the majority of the Members of both Houses of Congress to add a new section III to this bill which would empower the Attorney General, without jury trial, to force complete integration of our society. During the course of prolonged debate, such action still could be taken.

Fourth. Next year is a Congressional election year. Both the Democratic and Republican Parties—aided and abetted by the White House and the Vice President—undoubtedly will demand next January that this same Congress pass a much stronger civil-rights bill, probably with FEPC provisions. These efforts will again require determined opposition on the part of southern Senators, and our success will depend in large measure upon the good will of Senators from other areas of our country.

Should we destroy what good will remains among independent Senators of this Congress, the passage of new, radical civil-rights legislation, with FEPC provisions, will be a foregone conclusion.

For these reasons, it was the unanimous opinion of the 16 dedicated southern Senators that no organized filibuster against the Brownell bill be conducted on the floor of the Senate.

Speaking for myself, Mr. President, I have represented, and will continue to represent, my constituents and our beloved State of Georgia to the best of my ability and according to the dictates of my conscience.

I have never compromised principle, and I never will.

But I declare to this Senate, the Nation, and the world, Mr. President, that neither will I allow those who are uninformed as to the facts and circumstances to stampede me into acts which I am convinced would, in the long run, wreak unspeakable havoc upon my people.

And it is to them, Mr. President, that I leave the judgment of my decision and action.

Mr. LONG. Finally, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the statement of the Republican leader of the Senate be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, during the course of this debate, I have differed on numerous occasions with the distinguished junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. TALMADGE]. He has thought that this approach to the pending bill was wrong, and I have thought that it was right. I respect him for his opinions, and I believe he respects me and those who have differed with him for our opinions.

Anyone who knows the Senate of the United States is aware of the fact that the overwhelming majority of the Senate desires to pass a voting rights bill. There can be no question that had the majority desired to do so, cloture could have been invoked to pass the bill in its present form, with votes to spare.

As one who has served in the Senate for over 12 years, I honor the Senate of the United States and its great tradition. One of these traditions is that of free debate.

During the entire debate up until yesterday, the discussion was both germane and helpful. Up until then, the debate had contributed to the working out of amendments and modification of the bill, some very substantial in character.

Because of the high standard of the general debate, the majority properly decided neither to circulate a cloture petition nor to attempt to invoke cloture. Had the Senate been blocked by dilatory tactics and obstructionism in debate, we would have had no other choice. That this condition did not come about is due to the restraint and the statesmanship of the opponents of the proposed legislation and to the reasonableness and the moderation of the proponents.

It has been a hard fight. I hope it leaves no scars that cannot be quickly healed.

We honor and we respect our colleagues from the South who have made an honorable and a determined fight against heavy odds. Their fight resulted in substantial amendments to the bill as it came to the Senate from the House of Representatives. I hope and believe that the Commission that will be appointed by the President of the United States under this bill will be a fair and moderate one in its approach to the great problems involved.

I make this final plea tonight particularly addressed to our colleagues from the South. Let no gulf divide us. Let us close ranks as Americans and try for just solutions to our common problems.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I wish to express my profound thanks, as a fellow Senator and as an American, to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] for his fine, unselfish leadership in the handling of this particular piece of legislation. I pay special tribute to his skill, patience, and foresight. The qualities which he has exemplified constitute highlights among senatorial records of all time.

He discharged his responsibilities with the greatest of distinction. The fine prestige which he enjoys among every one of his colleagues and throughout the Nation lent great weight to the cause for which he spoke. He is an able constitutional lawyer, with a highly trained mind. He is an experienced legislator and parliamentarian. All those qualities added weight to his efforts. He has rendered a great service not only to the South but to the Nation. I am sure we all feel a great debt of gratitude to him, above all, for his devoted selflessness, his magnificent courage, his wise counsel, and his great knowledge. He has been a source of strength to all of us—not merely those of us from the South. He has lent strength to this body and to the Nation. My people are among those who are his grateful and everlasting debtors. It is my privilege and honor to speak for them.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I deeply appreciate the kind words of the Senator from Mississippi. I know better than anyone else that I do not deserve the measure of credit he accords to me. This was a joint effort. I served as chairman of the group, but the leadership was joint. The group was so small that we could all be leaders.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I followed the well chosen words of the Senator from Mississippi very carefully as he uttered them. I do not know that I have ever heard a more accurate or more beautiful tribute paid to any colleague in the Senate. I could spend days and nights attempting to emulate the Senator from Mississippi and yet not be able to do it. Therefore I should like the RECORD to show that the sentiments he has expressed are entertained by the senior Senator from Texas. They are expressive of the very high regard and the very great respect and affection that so many people, including the President of the United States, have expressed for the senior Senator from Georgia. But for him, there would have been passed by the Senate a far-reaching, a vicious, and an unworkable piece of legislation.

Mr. RUSSELL. I may say that I am very much overwhelmed by these expressions. It would be impossible for me to have my affection for the Senator from Texas to be increased. I enjoy our relationship as one of the things that I prize most highly in this life. The Senator from Texas knows better than anyone else that I am not in fact entitled to the statement he has made.

Without the brilliant leadership displayed by the senior Senator from Texas, it would have been impossible to secure adoption of the jury trial amendment.

I am always somewhat uncomfortable when I am being praised for something I do not deserve. I say to the Senator from Texas, in the words, I believe, of Horace: "It is sweet to be praised by those who are themselves praised."

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I wish to express my appreciation to the distinguished senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] for the very able, wise, devoted, and inspiring leadership which he gave to our southern group of Senators. The action of our group was the action that came out of conferences in which members of the group sat around the table together and talked over and weighed the different situations, and exchanged their thoughts and ideas most carefully, and canvassed and surveyed all the different possibilities.

We acted after we had made the most painstaking, careful, and thorough examination of the facts and of the practical polical situation which confronted us.

The people of the South could not have had a leader with greater fidelity to them than the Senator from Georgia.

The Senator from Georgia, with great personal sacrifice, tireless effort, and inexhaustible work, rendered a consecrated service to the cause of the people of the South, and a consecrated service to the cause of the entire Nation.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I wish to say that every word that has been spoken so eloquently by the distinguished Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STENNIS] and by the distinguished Senators from Texas [Mr. JOHNSON] and Alabama [Mr. HILL] strikes a completely responsive chord in my heart.

Not only the South, but the whole Nation is greatly indebted to the distinguished senior Senator from Georgia. I have never been prouder to be numbered among his close friends and associates than I am right now.

In following his leadership, gladly and devotedly, and in cooperating with others who felt the same way about following that leadership in the long debate, we found him, as a leader, brilliant, resourceful, courageous, indefatigable, selfless, and and always inspiring. I shall always be proud to have marched under his leadership.

Mr. President, in addition to that I wish to say two other things. I have never felt in any previous debates which we have had on somewhat similar subjects as this a greater conviction that Senators from other parts of the Nation have an understanding of our peculiar problems, and sympathy for them, and a willingness to go just as far as their great consciences would permit them to go in helping us to meet what are really no small problems in the Southland.

I believe they have shown a clear understanding of the nature of those problems, and a great sympathy and patience with the necessarily slow pace of the solution of some of those problems, and the finest patriotic willingness to join, even to the extent of casting votes which for them were very difficult, in seeing that fairness and justice and kind solutions be employed to meet those problems.

There is one more comment that I believe is due. I believe this is the first time since I have been in the Senate that the press, radio, and the various other channels of communication and information have been so fair and so just, both in depicting what transpired on the floor of the Senate and in seeking to analyze and understand the problems which have heretofore not been understood well in other parts of our Nation.

Mr. President, when such a spirit as that prevails not only on the floor of the Senate but in the press and kindred bodies, and, as my correspondence shows me, generally throughout the Nation in the hearts of good people, I feel that we are getting closer and closer to sane and sound solutions, which are just and which are lawful and which still preserve some of the finest values which I believe prevail in all of America—values in southern life—which not only are held dear by us, but I think are held dear by citizens throughout our great Nation.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I find it very difficult to say more than the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STENNIS] has said about the senior Senator from Georgia. I cannot refrain, however, from saying that while it is true many Senators participated in the conferences, I believe the final decision, in which real wisdom and judgment was involved, was made by the senior Senator from Georgia. I cannot emphasize that statement too strongly.

When I look back, I know that the senior Senator from Georgia has made a decision which will mean a great deal, not only to the South, but to the Nation as a whole. Therefore I cannot endorse too strongly what has been said about him. He has evidenced the highest form of statesmanship through the handling of this troublesome and controversial subject.

I cannot refrain from paying tribute also to the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. TALMADGE] for his statement last evening before the Senate voted on the bill. I was extremely pleased and encouraged by his statement, and I feel that the whole performance bodes well for the future.

I have a feeling that the passage of the legislation, displeasing as it is to me, for many reasons which I will not repeat now, has aroused an understanding in other parts of the country, and it may possibly be the beginning of a new era of understanding, and a lessening of the bitter controversy that has plagued us in the Senate ever since I have been a Member of it.

When I look back and consider how much time Senators, with great talents and energy, such as possessed by the Senator from Georgia and other Senators, have devoted to this matter, and how much could have been accomplished if all of it had been devoted to much more constructive efforts, I feel sad indeed.

However, that is the other side of the coin. While I dislike the bill which has been passed, on the other hand, I believe it may free some of our best minds to follow other lines which may be more profitable and valuable for the Nation as a whole.

I believe that, perhaps, out of this fight on what is in a sense a compromise, a spirit of understanding and cooperation may come, which will be most beneficial to the whole country, and I certainly think both the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Texas deserve the greatest praise and the gratitude of the country.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, I wish to join in the well-deserved tribute to the distinguished Senator from Georgia. He has made a great contribution not only to the South, but to the entire Nation in the handling of the civil-rights legislation. I shudder to think what would have been the result had the Senate passed the civil-rights bill that came to us from the House. It is true that probably under limitation of debate the Senate could have passed on that legislation in 2 days, as the House did. We chose to take 2 months, and we chose to retain the right of unlimited speech here in the Senate. I think the history of the enactment of this legislation has proved that retention of freedom of speech is of overriding importance. We can enact fair and just legislation and still retain freedom of speech. I have always believed in the freedom of speech in the Senate, with no limitation of time, and I shall never vote for cloture. I believe the history of the enactment of this legislation has proved the correctness of that position.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I wish to associate myself with what has been said by my colleagues in the Senate with respect to the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL]. He has served only a few months longer than I have in the United States Senate. I have observed his great contributions during this long period for the good of our country; but in the last few months he has rendered outstanding service to the South and to the entire United States in his leadership by determining what was best to be done with respect to one of the most vexatious problems which has ever confronted the Senate. He has given brilliant and wise leadership.

I wish to express my complete confidence in him as the leader of the southern Senators, and I am in full agreement with all he has done. While the bill which was passed last night does not meet with my approval, I think we could have gotten a far worse bill had it not been for the outstanding leadership which was displayed.

I believe title III would have been destructive of the most fundamental principles of our Government. It would have deprived us of the right of trial by jury. It would have made a modern Ceasar of the Attorney General of the United States, as I said in a speech to the Senate. He could have injected himself into legal matters throughout the country. I wish to express my deep appreciation to both the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] and the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. TALMADGE] for the capacity for leadership they have shown in meeting the problem that confronted us.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, I desire to associate myself with the statements made by my colleague [Mr. STENNIS] and the other southern Senators relative to the distinguished senior Senator from the State of Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL]. I have been honored to serve under his leadership, and I do not believe any group at any time has had an abler, more resourceful, more responsible leadership than the Senator from Georgia has given the southern people.

Mr. President, I do not believe the people of the South and the people of the country for generations will be indebted to any man more than they are indebted to the distinguished senior Senator from Georgia for the outstanding work he has performed in their behalf. All the American people are indebted to him because he has upheld and protected the Constitution of the United States and our system of government. The distinguished Senator from Georgia has my complete confidence, and I certainly wish the RECORD to show that I am in complete agreement with every decision he has made. I know it has been for the best interest of our country and for the best interest of the southern people.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. President, I wish to say a word at this time as one who is in somewhat of an objective position. I do not add my words with respect to the work of the senior Senator from Georgia as one who knew intimately or was concerned directly with the problems which confront our friends from the Southern States. I speak as one who lives at some distance from the South in a section which is without some of the problems which we know face the South. I add my words of tribute to the senior Senator from Georgia as one who believes he made a contribution to the country as a whole in helping us to arrive at legislation which does not carry any vindictiveness and which does not contain any language which would give an opportunity for extreme demonstration. I am sure it was not really the intent of those sponsoring the legislation to enact a statute that would hold opportunities for revenge or vindictiveness.

I believe that by the modification of part III of the bill and by the adoption of an amendment which provides for jury trial in aggravated cases of criminal contempt a real contribution was made to sound legislation. The Senator from Georgia made a distinct contribution in that regard. I voted with him on two occasions, which was an expression of my sentiments.

I feel that the total result is a tribute to the legislative process. As I said last night, without the iron will of the distinguished senior Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND], the Senate never would have considered the bill. Without the restraint exercised by the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], we would perhaps still be debating the bill, and goodness knows for how long. As it is, we have good legislation and I think it is a credit to all who had a part in its enactment.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, I desire to join my colleagues who have expressed appreciation for the leadership of the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL]. I have been privileged to serve in this distinguished body with three grand men from Georgia—Walter George, RICHARD RUSSELL, and HERMAN TALMADGE. The late Senator George has gone to his last reward, leaving his name written high on the famous eternal scroll, and the two present Senators from Georgia are carrying on in the same high tradition.

Last night the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. TALMADGE] made one of the best speeches of the session—short but effective—explaining why the southern Senators had decided not to conduct a filibuster against a bill which was distasteful to them. Those who were present or those who read the RECORD this morning will recall that following the speech, the distinguished minority leader, who is not given to boasting, said that if a filibuster had been undertaken, cloture could have been invoked.

The senior Senator from Georgia, with whom I have been privileged to serve now for more than 10 years, and whom I have had the privilege of knowing for more than 25 years, knows the high esteem in which I hold him and the warm affection I have for him. He knows I campaigned for his nomination for the Presidency in 1952, and would gladly do so again.

At this moment we are particularly grateful for the high type of leadership he gave us on one of the most difficult, one of the most controversial bills which has been before the Senate in modern years.

Many things could be said at this time, but we know the time for adjournment is pressing upon us. Therefore, I desired merely to add my voice to the voices of the other southern Senators, in order that everyone in the United States may know that we have appreciated the leadership of the senior Senator from Georgia and that we were behind him 100 percent in the decisions he made during that period, in which we won some notable victories in changing the bill as to the form in which it came from the House.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, if the possession of friends is the greatest asset that a man can have, and the statements which have been made reveal such friendship, then I must be richer than Croesus. I can only think that my friends look at me through glasses of friendship. It makes me very humble to hear the undeserved words that have been spoken about me. There is no superlative in the English language for saying "Thank you," so, in all humility, all I can say to each and every one of my colleagues is "Thank you."

NOMINATION OF ARNOLD R. JONES

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, on this, the terminal day of this session, there is certain unfinished business in the United States Senate, some of it extremely important. One such matter I want to mention specifically to the Senate at this time.

The Rivers and Harbors Subcommittee of the Public Works Committee has been holding extensive hearings on the nomination of Arnold R. Jones to be a Director of the Tennessee Valley Authority. Yesterday, at the close of the seventh day of the hearings, it was announced that another witness would be heard at 10 o'clock this morning. I am now advised that the acting chairman of the subcommittee has indefinitely postponed the hearing, this without giving the nominee any opportunity to answer the many unsupported charges made against him and without action by the subcommittee or the full committee on the nomination.

It is my understanding that for several days the committee has been ready to vote favorably on this nomination, but that a small group has been prolonging the hearings to avoid a vote. Now this cancellation of hearings without action on this last day of the session leaves the Tennessee Valley without a legally functioning Board of Directors and leaves the record of hearings filled with unsupported and misleading allegations.

Mr. President, no Member of this body more earnestly believes in adequate deliberation on matters of public policy than I do. Nor do I yield to any Senator in insisting more than I on holding adequate and thorough inquiries by the duly constituted committees of the Senate into the fitness of nominations for high governmental positions.

In this instance, however, I submit to the Senate that the processes of the Senate committee system has been used in order to frustrate the will of the majority of a committee, and, I believe, a majority of the Senate. This is playing politically fast and loose with one of the major instrumentalities of the United States Government.

No charge levelled against Mr. Jones has been supported in fact.

Mr. Jones has not failed to answer honestly and forthrightly any question asked of him.

No evidence has been submitted to justify any charge that, if his nomination is confirmed, Mr. Jones would fail to discharge the public trust properly and in keeping with the letter and intent of the law, as a Director of the Tennessee Valley Authority.

There is evidence, on the other hand, that, for reasons which transcend Mr. Jones, and which do not pertain to his fitness for this office in any way, the opportunity to confirm his nomination is being withheld from the Senate.

Mr. President, as one Member of the Senate, speaking personally, and as minority leader of the Senate, speaking officially, I raise my voice in protest and in deep regret that this type of procedure should have been permitted by the majority of the Senate to proceed for as long as it has, and with the unfortunate impact on the public interest which it is bound to have.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. President, as the ranking minority member of the Subcommittee on Rivers and Harbors, of the Committee on Public Works—that subcommitte conducted these hearings—I wish to say that I believe the words of the distinguished minority leader are well justified.

The vacancy in the directorship of the Tennessee Valley Authority Board came on May 17. The President of the United States did not act hastily. The nomination is an important one; and he sent the nomination of Mr. Jones to the Senate on the 1st day of July—within 6 weeks of the development of the vacancy, during which period there had to be investigations of possible appointees.

That nomination rested with the committee from the 1st day of July until a little more than a week ago, when hearings on it were commenced. That is to say, the nomination was before the committee for almost 2 months, before hearings were held.

In the interim, on the 7th of August, a second vacancy occurred on the Board of the Tennessee Valley Authority, by reason of the death of Mr. Paty.

The result was that the Board of Directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority was left with only one member.

The basic Tennessee Valley Authority Act provides that the action of the Board shall not be impaired, provided there are 2 members of the Board; and the act provides that 2 members shall constitute a quorum.

The net result is that today the Board of the Tennessee Valley Authority has only one member; so today there is not a quorum of the Board.

The validity of any contract entered into by the Tennessee Valley Authority while there is only one member of its Board would be subject to question. If the House had acted on the bill the Senate passed—I refer to the bill to give the TVA authority to issue bonds—the validity of the bonds certainly could be questioned if they were issued by the Board when it had only one member.

The tactics which have been followed were, I believe, a disservice to the Tennessee Valley Authority. I believe that the people of the Tennessee Valley have been misled by certain groups who took it upon themselves to try to sandbag the nomination of an outstanding man.

Mr. Arnold R. Jones, who was nominated by the President, is a man of great experience in fiscal analysis and in governmental policy; and, of course, his entire life has been spent in that type of activity. In my judgment, he would make the best qualified man the Tennessee Valley Authority Board has ever had in the field of fiscal management, as applied to a Government activity. His record at Kansas State College and his record in the Bureau of the Budget have been records of competency and honesty.

I do not know what course may now be followed, either by Mr. Jones or by the President, with respect to an interim appointment.

But, Mr. President, in any event, I personally deplore the tactics which were pursued, and which were encouraged, I believe, by groups who have betrayed the people of the Tennessee Valley, who are entitled to have a competent man, such as Mr. Jones, named to the Board, so it may function properly.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield to me?

Mr. ALLOTT. I yield.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, I wish to say that I commend the minority leader and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Case] for their remarks.

It so happens that Mr. Jones is from my State of Kansas. I have had the privilege of serving with Mr. Jones in official positions in my State for a number of years. It has been my good fortune to know him over a period of almost 20 years or more.

I know he is a competent man. I know he is a fair man. I know he is an eminently qualified man for this responsible position.

I regret exceedingly the situation and the position in which we find ourselves at this time, namely, that the committee and the Senate were deprived of the opportunity to vote on the confirmation of his nomination as director of TVA.

I am not a member of the committee, and I respect committee procedures, committee activities, and committee considerations, but I feel that if this nomination had been submitted to the committee a majority of the members would have voted favorably for him.

I have attended practically all the meetings of the committee at which Mr. Jones was called on to testify and at which he was present; and I believe that in fairness to the Tennessee Valley and certainly in fairness to the nominee, Mr. Arnold Jones, who is from my State, he deserved at least the consideration by the committee of passing on his nomination before this session of Congress closed.

But, Mr. President, I wish to say that those who are interested in the Tennessee Valley, those who are interested in governmental procedures in a responsible way, I am sure have misjudged Mr. Arnold Jones; and by this type of procedure they are delaying the carrying out of some very useful lawful procedures which should have been carried out.

Mr. KUCHEL. Mr. President, the administration of the Tennessee Valley Authority is lodged in a three-man Board of Directors. The statute is clear. A majority of two members of the Board of Directors is necessary in order to have the Board of Directors determine the policy to be followed, and to carry out the multitudinous responsibilities of that great American governmental enterprise.

The failure of the Senate to have an opportunity to sit in judgment on the nomination made by the President of the United States effectively frustrates the administration of the Tennessee Valley Authority.

I have been a Member of the Senate Committee on Public Works. I have sat through all the hearings held on the President's nomination of Arnold Jones. What my colleagues have said unquestionably is true: A bipartisan majority of that committee was ready, days ago, to vote to approve and report the nomination of Mr. Jones, so it might be considered by the Senate.

It is regrettable that that was not done; and it is regrettable from the standpoint of the best interests of the TVA.

I have tried to help the Tennessee Valley Authority. I have done it as a United States Senator, as a member of the committee which has had to do with the problems of that agency. I am glad to say to you, Mr. President, that I helped draft, in committee, the proposed legislation which the Senate passed, a few days ago, giving new bond-issuing authority to the agency. So I speak as a Republican who has been interested in the TVA.

I can only repeat what my senior colleague [Mr. Knowland] has said, namely, that it is regrettable that the Senate of the United States has not had an opportunity to have before it what unquestionably would have come before it, if the Committee on Public Works had been given an opportunity to vote on it, namely, a recommendation on the part of the committee that the Senate concur in the nomination made by the President.

I can make other comments. I shall not, in the interest of time. I merely wish to say I associate myself with what the Senator from California has said.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I thank the Senator.

Mr. COTTON. Mr. President, as another member of the Committee on Public Works, I wish to take a moment to add a word to the statements which have been made by my colleagues, senior members of that committee. It became increasingly clear, as the hearings continued in the Public Works Committee, that time was going to be consumed in hearing many witnesses and in long examinations of Mr. Jones until it would be too late in this session for the committee to act. It became increasingly clear that if the committee were permitted to act without hearing witnesses, important witnesses who had a right to appear and deserved the courtesy, the committee would have been definitely in favor of the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Jones as a Director of TVA.

I say this because I have lived with TVA for many years in the other body of Congress as a member of the Appropriations Committee. I have spoken on the floor very recently in connection with amendments limiting TVA geographically. I want to make it specifically clear here, as I did in committee, as one member of the committee, that I listened with the greatest care to the examination of Mr. Jones. Even though I do not live in that area of the country, and sometimes have favored limiting TVA, I would not be a party to moving in a Trojan horse on TVA or voting to confirm the nomination, on the floor of the Senate or in committee, of any man who would not conscientiously work for the welfare of the Tennessee Valley Authority and who could not conscientiously take the oath.

After days of interrogation, Mr. Jones came out of that hearing foursquare, and I think there was no member of the committee who was not honestly convinced of Mr. Jones' complete integrity and of his devotion to public service, as shown through the years of service in his office. He was candid, frank, and truthful. He leaned over backwards to give the members of the committee and other distinguished Members of this body who interrogated him completely frank and fair answers.

I think the Record should show that the majority of the Committee on Public Works, if given an opportunity this minute, would recommend the confirmation of the nomination. I wanted to add that word to what other Senators have said.

THE UNITED STATES PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE VERSUS ASIATIC INFLUENZA

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the Record a statement by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Potter] on a matter dealing with the United States Public Health Service.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Statement by Senator Potter

Before this session of Congress adjourns, I should like to direct the attention of the Senate to efforts of the Public Health Service to protect Americans against an epidemic of influenza. A new lype of flu, sweeping across vast areas of the world, is making its appearance in the United States.

The manner in which the Surgeon General Leroy E. Burney and his staff are coping with a mammoth threat is distinguished by initiative, speed, and imagination. It is a symbol of dynamic leadership in guarding the health of each and every one of our people, as exemplified by the Eisenhower administration.

My own special responsibilities in the fields of health, education, and welfare, as a member of the Senate Appropriations Committee, provide an opportunity to observe closely the record of the Public Health Service since the first inkling of a threatened flu epidemic reached it.

Just 4 months ago the Service learned that a flu outbreak in Hong Kong had spread through Cambodia, Laos, Pakistan, Vietnam, and India, leaping across the Pacific to the Philippines and Indonesia.

With airplanes and ships bringing exposed individuals into United States ports every day, the Public Health Service immediately realized the implications of contagion.

A technical team sped to Hong Kong to isolate and analyze the new strain of influenza virus. It was discovered to be a type against which the American people have no immunity. Worse yet, no protective vaccines had previously been developed.

The story of what could happen in the United States, as projected by the medical staff at Public Health Service, is gloomy: As many as 33 million people in this country could come down with the disease, resulting in approximately 66,000 deaths. While the Asiatic type of flu is not serious, it does produce casualties, and Public Health experts are keenly aware that if the virulence increases, mortalities will zoom.

The effect on groups and communities could be quite serious. Here is what Surgeon General Burney has to say:

"Entire groups could be incapacitated for perhaps a week at a time, with tremendous consequences on health services, on vital channels of transportation and communication, on other necessary local services, and on the local economy. It is important, therefore, that consideration be given to early vaccination of key groups."

By late May—roughly a month after it had received word of the epidemics abroad—the Public Health Service had initiated the development of experimental vaccines at six licensed pharmaceutical houses.

As of today, a scientific miracle is efficiently under way. Hundreds of thousands of cc's of protective vaccine are in production with a goal of 60 million cc's by next February. Distribution plans are being worked out. A vast public-education program is in process.

The Public Health Service, in short, takes the position that while it is impossible at this time to predict the size, extent, or severity of an influenza epidemic, it is their responsibility to develop a program of maximum possible protection.

I was proud, as a member of the Senate Appropriations Committee, to be instrumental in granting $800,000 in supplemental funds for this great work and to approve a contingent transfer of $2 million from the President's disaster-relief funds, to be used only if needed.

We are indeed fortunate that the physical well-being of our citizens—the most precious asset this Nation has—is in the custody of a magnificent team of professionals in the Public Health Service.

FREEDOM SHRINE

Mr. ALLOTT. Mr. President, a few nights ago, on August 28, an editorial appeared in the Washington Star with respect to the freedom shrine, which contained some very inaccurate statements that should be corrected. Inasmuch as the editorial uses the name of the senior Senator from Colorado, I feel compelled to discuss it, to talk about it, and to correct the record before the Congress adjourns. I do not intend to engage in any calumny or anything of that sort, because the concept of the freedom shrine is so great and so magnificent and so inspirational that any words of that sort would only detract from the great dignity and respect to which this whole movement is entitled.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that the editorial may be printed in its entirety at this point in my remarks, in order that the Record may be clear.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Second Look Advisable

> Speaker Rayburn was right in his stand against any last-minute effort to railroad the controversial "freedom wall" bill through the House. And Representative Sheppard of California was right in contending that Congress should know more about the proposed shrine before authorizing its construction near Arlington Cemetery. A careful second look at this legislation should be taken before final action.
>
> The belated move to stampede Congress into approving legislation for the 500-foot-long, 250-foot-wide, 90-foot-high shrine to American freedoms has left the public with little detailed information about the project. The Senate and House Interior Committees reported the bill favorably without holding any public hearings, although the legislation will affect long-time plans for the development of the Washington area. And the Senate, before voting in favor of the bill last week, was misinformed as to actions taken by the National Capital Planning Commission and the Fine Arts Commission on the Freedom Wall design. Senator Allott, a member of the sponsoring group, in urging approval, said: "After lengthy considerations running into 3 years, the Fine Arts Commission formally approved the freedom shrine plan which we have selected. It was also approved by the National Capital Planning Commission, after extensive studies and hearings." Senator Allott was mistaken as to what the two Commissions approved, however. Spokesmen for both agencies say that approval was given only to the general concept of a freedom shrine—not to any particular design, including the wall plan. It was the understanding of both Commissions, officials have advised the Star, that specific designs would be presented later for approval.
>
> The whole history of the freedom monument project has been a curious one. Apparently originated by the Freedoms Foundation of Valley Forge, Pa., the shrine idea was pushed through Congress in 1954 without benefit of advice from either the Planning Commission or the Fine Arts Commission. Neither Commission, we learn, was consulted about the proposal to put the monument on the so-called Nevius tract, acquired by the Federal Government to prevent private development there. Congress, ignoring the basic McMillan plan for keeping that area clear of structures, in deference to the neighboring national cemetery, presented both Commissions with a mandate to abandon that plan in favor of the freedom monument. It is understood that at that time the Fine Arts Commission protested to the Budget Bureau the bypassing of the Commission by Congress—which created the agency to advise it on such matters.
>
> But, favored with the blessing of President Eisenhower, who contributed the first dime toward a $23.9 million private subscription fund to finance the project, and by the cooperation of Gen. Omar Bradley, chairman of the fund-raising committee, the sponsors of the undertaking have had remarkable success in obtaining Congressional and Executive support. However, we do not think that an impressive list of backers, headed by the President, is any justification for approving a proposal of such magnitude without careful study and competent advice. We hope the freedom wall project will be the subject of adequate public hearings at the next session of Congress, at which there will be full disclosure of detailed plans for the shrine and full discussion of its effects, good or bad, on the long-range development of the National Capital.

Mr. ALLOTT. This matter involves the freedom shrine, the National Monument Commission, and the Freedom Foundation of Valley Forge.

The National Monument Commission was created by Public Law 742 of the 83d Congress. Pursuant to that law, the Vice President of the United States appointed the distinguished Senator from Oregon [Mr. Neuberger] and me to serve upon the Commission. We have continued to serve upon the Commission to this date.

One of the provisions of that law, which set aside what is known as the Nevius tract, directly west of the Lincoln Memorial, for the purposes of establishing a freedom shrine, was that the Commission should perfect designs and concepts of such a shrine and submit them for approval to the Department of the Interior, to the National Capital Planning Commission, and to the Commission of Fine Arts.

When that was completed, a bill was offered, in June of this year, to authorize the construction of this great concept of freedom. The concept itself is to have, in one place in America, spelled out in simple statements and simple language, the great ideas of freedom which have been created in this country, so that we will have an edifice which truly represents and would truly be a shrine of freedom.

This idea did not originate in Congress. It did not originate with the Freedom Foundation of Valley Forge, as the editorial says. The idea originated with a group of Georgia people about 7 years ago. Those people raised $275,000 to promote the idea of the creation of a freedom shrine in Georgia. They found that the idea met with such great approval and such great response that it had to be expanded from its original concept.

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. ALLOTT. I am happy to yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. NEUBERGER. I first wish to say that I certainly want to compliment the distinguished senior Senator from Colorado, not only for his specific interest in this project, but for his service on the National Monument Commission, which oversees these various historic shrines that perpetuate the great traditions of our country.

Since the Senator has mentioned the public-spirited attitude of the people in Georgia, I wonder if I can assist in clarifying a point, which perhaps the Senator had in mind bringing out. Is it not true that the people in Georgia have made a great sacrifice, because they recognize that great and historic though their own State is, it perhaps might not be quite as appropriate a place for this great edifice perpetuating our historic legacy of freedom as would be the vicinity of the National Capital of the United States?

Mr. ALLOTT. The Senator is completely correct on that point.

Mr. NEUBERGER. And they also recognized that even though Georgia is on a great many arteries of travel, the National Capital of our country draws still more people from all over the United States and all over the world.

Mr. ALLOTT. That is correct.

Mr. NEUBERGER. Therefore, they felt that they were honoring the area of the District of Columbia by voluntarily agreeing or voluntarily deciding that the great freedom shrine, which they had originated in the form of an idea, should not be placed in Georgia, but should be situated in the area of the National Capital.

To a degree some of the people in the area of the National Capital to say the least have not been too hospitable, when they themselves are honored by having this locality chosen as the site for this great shrine.

Mr. ALLOTT. I think the remarks of the Senator are completely accurate.

Mr. NEUBERGER. I have one further question I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado.

Is it not true that this freedom shrine or this temple of democracy or Parthenon of democracy, however we want to describe it, would be the work of people from all over the United States? The school children would contribute their pennies. Public-spirited citizens of an eleemosynary nature would perhaps leave larger legacies, and so on. The shrine would represent the sum total of the interest and generosity of the people all the way from the Puget Sound to the State of Maine, so far as contributions are concerned.

Mr. ALLOTT. The Senator is correct. I intended to go into that little matter a little later, but that is the concept. This will be a shrine contributed by the schoolchildren and by the people of America, and not built from the appropriations provided by Congress.

Mr. NEUBERGER. In conclusion, I wish to associate myself with the remarks of the Senator from Colorado in answering the misleading editorial of the Washington Star and in defending and upholding this very worthwhile undertaking.

Mr. ALLOTT. I appreciate very much the contribution and help which my good friend, the Senator from Oregon, has given in this matter.

People in Georgia had raised $275,000 and utilized that money to develop the drawings, designs, and concepts for the Monument to Freedom. They found, as the Senator from Oregon has said, that it was simply too large a concept to be located in any single area, and that the logical location was the National Capital. That accounts for their getting together with the Freedom Foundation of Valley Forge and joining forces with them. They contributed all their work, labor, and effort to a joint undertaking which was then carried on under the Freedom Foundation of Valley Forge, and which resulted in Public Law 742 of the 83d Congress, setting out the site and creating the National Monument Commission to develop the monument.

I do not want to quarrel with the writer of this editorial about the words he uses. I think he uses words which are intended to inflame the reader, or to slant the article against the national monument. For instance, not only in this editorial but in the two articles which appear in that same paper the term "freedom wall" has been used. It is not a wall. Whoever used that term did so inadvisedly, and apparently in an attempt to cast some reflection upon the greatness of the design which has been created.

A great many of the most prominent historians in this country have participated in this project, as have some 200 judges of the State supreme courts.

This project grew out of the effort of a great many people. It is not the product of the efforts of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. NEUBERGER] or myself. Our part in it is a very, very minor one.

When the bill was introduced—and I want to make the record particularly clear on this matter—it went to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affair, of which both the Senator from Oregon and I are members. It was put on the calendar of the Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs in the regular way. I wish to make the record completely clear and keep it straight on that point. There was no particular publicity about the matter, but the bill was put on the calendar exactly as hundreds of other bills are put on the calendar for consideration by the committee.

Reports of the Department of Interior were requested and received.

On the day the committee considered it, I requested Dr. Kenneth Wells, of the Freedom Foundation, at Valley Forge, and Mr. Harry Thompson, who is secretary of the Commission, and also an official of the National Capital Parks Service of the Department of the Interior, to appear, and to bring with him the pictures, plans, and plats of the entire concept, for the edification of the committee.

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ALLOTT. I yield.

Mr. NEUBERGER. As I recall, the drawings, plans, maps, and landscape charts to which the Senator from Colorado has referred were placed on the wall and on stands around the meeting room of the Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, so that members of the committee could have a graphic understanding of just what was contemplated.

Mr. ALLOTT. The Senator is correct. They were placed mostly at the north end of the room.

The committee did not choose to hear Dr. Wells or Mr. Thompson. I made a statement that morning, and I believe the Senator from Oregon also made a statement. The committee having received a favorable report from the Department of the Interior, reported the bill favorably to the Senate, where it was unanimously approved.

Now, I should like to return briefly to the editorial, from which I read:

> And the Senate, before voting in favor of the bill last week, was misinformed as to actions taken by the National Capital Planning Commission and the Fine Arts Commission on the freedom wall design. Senator ALLOTT, a member of the sponsoring group, in urging approval, said:
>
> "After lengthy considerations running into 3 years, the Fine Arts Commission formally approved the freedom shrine plan which we have selected."

I can construe this editorial in only one way, and that is that the writer of the editorial intended to convey the idea that I was misleading the Senate and the people of Washington. To this I must take definite exception.

I wish to read, as a denial of the editorial, the official action of the National Capital Planning Commission, taken from its own minutes. I read from the minutes of the National Capital Planning Commission for April 5, 1957:

> The motion unanimously carried approving the concepts, design and location of the Freedoms Shrine Monument as developed by the National Monument Commission in accordance with the provisions of Public Law 742 with the understanding that the site plan, when further developed, shall be referred to the Planning Commission for approval.

In a conversation with Mr. John Nolen, Jr., Director of the National Capital Planning Commission, he said that the action taken was specifically with the intent of giving the required clearance for the National Monument Commission to proceed to obtain Congressional authorization, and that, so far as the Commission was concerned, the project was cleared for construction. He stated that the Planning Commission had approved the general nature and design of the monument.

Yesterday I spoke to Mr. Wilson, of the Fine Arts Commission. I hold in my hand a transcript of that conversation, which was taken down with his knowledge and consent. Let me read it to the Senate:

> Senator ALLOTT. This was brought up by an act of Congress to meet your approval. Does it, or does it not? If not, you should have appeared before the Interior Committee when the bills were introduced and we could have——
>
> Mr. WILSON. That was a long time ago—before I was here.
>
> Senator ALLOTT. I am referring to the meetings held last summer
>
> Mr. WILSON. We did approve the general conception of the design.
>
> Senator ALLOTT. You feel that you gave the approval necessary under the act of Congress?
>
> Mr. WILSON. Yes. We gave all the approval that was necessary for the work to proceed.

Mr. Elliot, of my staff, said:

> Have you seen the statement the Senator made?
>
> Mr. WILSON. I saw what was quoted in the editorial here.
>
> Mr. ELLIOT. Do you feel the Senator misled the committee?
>
> Mr. WILSON. I would say the Senator's statement and the action taken by the Commission on Fine Arts were identical.
>
> Senator ALLOTT. Thank you very much, Mr. Wilson. That takes care of it for us. I just wanted to get the matter cleared up for all of our sakes. It is important for the integrity of the Fine Arts Commission as well as for the National Capital Planning Commission.

Mr. President, I have only a few remarks in closing. This is a great and worthy concept, and a great and worthy movement. I hope that those who, for their own reasons—whatever they may be—oppose this project will realize that this movement has been the joint work of hundreds of people up to this time. I hope they will realize that this has one of the most lofty ideals behind it that the human mind could conceive. The proposal is to place in one spot, near our National Capital, this monument to the essentials of our freedom, together with the instruments in history showing how those freedoms were created in the United States.

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ALLOTT. I yield.

Mr. NEUBERGER. I commend the Senator from Colorado for clarifying the record with respect to this great undertaking. I think we have some example of the unselfish attitude of the people engaged in this movement when we realize that Dr. Kenneth D. Wells, to whom the Senator from Colorado has referred, worked on this project vigorously in the Capitol Building with many of us during the week when he suffered a minor heart attack. He did so against the advice and counsel of his own physician. This is only one example of the type of selfless service which has entered into the undertaking.

The Senator from Colorado quoted from the editorial in the Evening Star, which referred rather slurringly to this project as "The Wall."

It seems to me this is an example of the absurd arguments which have been raised. After all, every great temple of government in our country, whether it be the Lincoln Memorial, the Jefferson Memorial, or any of the great halls of Government, including that of the Treasury Department, the Interior Department, or the Agriculture Department could be called the wall by someone who wished to ridicule one of those buildings.

Mr. ALLOTT. The Senator is entirely correct.

Mr. NEUBERGER. The Senator from Colorado has set the record straight with respect to this undertaking. It is my hope that the House of Representatives will pass the bill authorizing this great patriotic project, and that it will go to the President.

Mr. ALLOTT. I thank the Senator from Oregon for his great contribution.

In conclusion, I invite the attention of Senators to the list of names of a few men who have unselfishly contributed of their time and money for years in furthering this project. The board of governors of the National Freedom Shrine Foundation, under the chairmanship of Spencer T. Olin, includes Vice Chairman Charles F. Palmer of Atlanta, Ga., and Don Belding of Los Angeles, Calif. Dr. Kenneth D. Wells has accepted the presidency of the National Freedom Shrine Foundation. A remarkable staff of distinguished citizens, withdrawn from their usual duties to serve the Nation, are immediately prepared to start this task. The national board of commissioners and governors will be drawn from such people as Gen. Lucius D. Clay, Dr. John Krout, provost of Columbia University; the Very Reverend Theodore Hesburg, president of the University of Notre Dame; Dr. Fred Fagg, president of the University of Southern California; Arthur Hays Sulzberger, Dr. Milton S. Eisenhower, Mr. Y. Frank Freeman, Mr. John L. Lewis, Mr. Fred Maytag II; Mr. Robert V. Fleming, Mr. Sid Richardson, Dr. Horace Mann Bond, Chief Justice Carl V. Weygandt, past chairman of the Association of Chief Justices of State Supreme Courts; Mr. George Meany, Mr. Paul Manship, Mr. Horace Albright, Dr. Raymond Allen, chancellor of U. C. L. A.; our own Senate Chaplain, Frederick Brown Harris, the recently retired chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Adm. Arthur W. Radford, and great numbers of others who have put their interest and time and support behind this great concept.

Therefore, this is not the work of any small group of people. I believe more than anyone else Judge Learned Hand expressed the hopes of all of us when he said:

> We hope by a fitting portrayal of outstanding instances in which those who have gone before us staked all upon the eventual justification of that belief, that we shall fortify our own acceptance of the risks at which they did not flinch. For, make no mistake, the battle is not won, nor will it ever be won. Each generation must decide how far it will seek refuge in eternal and immutable verities rather than grope its way through the tangle of human passions and human credulity. It is our hope that these walls by their beauty and splendor will reaffirm in those who visit them the faith of their predecessors, and inspire them with a resolve not to prove truant to their example.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Public Law 742 of the 83d Congress and the text of S. 2363 may be printed at this point in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, as well as a letter dated August 29, 1957 from Mr. Harry T. Thompson, assistant to the Director of the National Capital Parks Service dealing with this matter.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Public Law 742, 83d Cong., ch. 1160, 2d sess.]

H. R. 6455

An act to create a National Monument Commission, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby created a National Monument Commission. Said Commission shall be composed of four Senators from the Senate of the United States to be appointed by the Vice President of the United States, four Representatives of the House of Representatives of the United States to be appointed by the Speaker of that House, and four eminent citizens of the United States to be appointed by the President of the United States. The Commission shall be bipartisan and the terms of the first Commissioners shall be for one, two, three, and four years and subsequently shall be four years. Vacancies in the Commission shall be filled by the respective designator who appointed the original member. Members shall serve until their respective successors are appointed. The President shall, at the time of appointment, designate one of the members appointed by him to serve as Chairman.

SEC. 2. It shall be the function of said Commission to secure plans and designs for a useful monument to the Nation symbolizing to the United States and the world, the ideals of a democracy as embodied in the five freedoms, speech, religion, press, assembly, and petition, sanctified by the Bill of Rights adopted by Congress in 1789 and later ratified by the States. Such plans shall be approved by the Secretary of the Interior, the National Capital Planning Commission, and the Commission of Fine Arts, and thereafter submitted to Congress for legislative authorization.

SEC. 3. Said monument shall be located on federally owned land within the George Washington Memorial Parkway adjoining the north boundary of Arlington National Cemetery west of Arlington Ridge Road and south of Arlington Boulevard on the heights overlooking the Potomac River. The monument, upon its completion, shall be administered by the Secretary of the Interior through the National Park Service, Department of the Interior.

SEC. 4. Said monument shall serve as an international shrine and a continuing memorial to the principles of the five freedoms and to all peoples and nations who have contributed to the establishment, promotion, and defense of those principles in the preservation of democracy throughout the world. It may include an appropriate structure or structures to house cultural displays and exhibits or symbolic features of national and international significance designed to accomplish the objectives of section 2 of this act.

SEC. 5. (a) Said Commission may establish rules and regulations governing its actions in carrying out the purposes of this act.

(b) The Commission members appointed from the Congress shall serve without additional compensation. Commission members appointed from private life shall receive $50 per diem when engaged in the performance of Commission duties. All Commission members shall receive reimbursement for necessary traveling and subsistence expenses incurred by them in the performance of Commission duties.

(c) The Commission is authorized to accept and utilize services of voluntary and uncompensated personnel and to pay any such personnel necessary traveling and subsistence expenses when engaged in the work of the Commission.

(d) Within the limits of its appropriations, the Commission is authorized to appoint such personnel, without regard to the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, to procure such printing and binding, and to make such expenditures as, in its discretion, it deems necessary.

(e) The Commission is authorized to request and secure the advice or assistance of any Federal agency. Any Federal agency furnishing advice or assistance to the Commission may expend its own funds for this purpose, with or without reimbursement from the Commission as may be agreed upon between the Commission and the agency.

(f) The Commission shall report annually to the President and Congress its progress and recommendations pertaining to such a memorial. Upon the conclusion of its work, the Commission shall promptly submit a final report.

(g) Thirty days after the submission of its final report the Commission shall cease to exist.

SEC. 6. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary for the expenses of the Commission.

A bill to authorize the erection of a national monument symbolizing the ideals of democracy

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to grant authority to the National Freedom Shrine Foundation, a corporation organized under the laws of the District of Columbia, to erect a national monument as contemplated by the act of August 31, 1954 (68 Stat. 1029), in accordance with plans and designs approved by the National Monument Commission, the National Capital Planning Commission, the Secretary of the Interior, and the National Commission of Fine Arts, and in accordance with all the provisions of such act. The United States shall bear no expense with respect to the erection of such monument.

(b) In the event the construction of such monument has not begun within 5 years from the date of the enactment of this act, the authority granted herein shall terminate and be of no further force or effect.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
NATIONAL PARK SERVICE,
Washington, D. C., August 29, 1957.
Senator GORDON ALLOTT,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR ALLOTT: I have just had an opportunity to check a transcript of the hearings held before the Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs on August 22, 1957, at which time consideration was given to S. 2363, a bill to authorize the erection of a national monument symbolizing the ideals of democracy. I have also reviewed an editorial appearing in the Washington Evening Star of Wednesday, August 28, in which an attempt is made to mislead the public into believing that statements which you made before the committee are not entirely factual.

Since I was present at meetings of both the National Commission of Fine Arts and the National Capital Planning Commission earlier this year, I wish you to know that your statement before the committee was entirely correct when you indicated that, "After lengthy considerations running into 3 years, the Fine Arts Commission formally approved the freedom shrine plan which we have selected. It was also approved by the National Capital Planning Commission, after extensive studies and hearings." The following is an exact quotation from the minutes of the National Capital Planning Commission of April 5, 1957, appearing as item 14 on page 12 of the minutes of that meeting:

"Mr. Thompson informed the Commission that since its last meeting the National Monument Commission had met and approved the concept and design of the proposed monument and had made a full presentation to the Commission of the Fine Arts. He presented a preliminary plan for the Arlington Ridge Road site (NCPC plan file No. 1.9-382). After further discussion, the Commission took the following action:

"Motion unanimously carried approving the concept, design, and location of the Freedoms Shrine Monument, as developed by the National Monument Commission in accordance with the provisions of Public Law 742 with the understanding that the site plan, when further developed, shall be referred to the National Capital Planning Commission for approval."

Having served as a member of the Coordinating Committee of the Planning Commission and as an alternate member of the National Capital Planning Commission, there is no question whatsoever in my mind that the plans presented by the National Monument Commission to that agency were approved in the full sense; that the concept, the general design, and the location as indicated by Public Law 742 were approved by the National Capital Planning Commission. Furthermore, I have consulted directly with officials of the National Commission of Fine Arts subsequent to the hearings and the publication of the editorial above referred to. I have been repeatedly assured that your statement before the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee was entirely correct. I have also been repeatedly assured that the National Commission of Fine Arts did approve the concept and design of the national monument which was developed and presented by numerous drawings, elevation sketches, and perspective drawings by the National Monument Commission. I understand that this action will be confirmed to you by the National Commission of Fine Arts.

There can be no doubt that the National Monument Commission, the National Capital Planning Commission, the National Commission of Fine Arts, and the Secretary of the Interior all have approved the concept, the design, and the general location for the proposed national monument referred to in S. 2363.

Sincerely yours,
HARRY T. THOMPSON,
Assistant to the Director.

EXECUTIVE SESSION—CONFIRMATION OF POSTMASTER NOMINATIONS

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I have some nominations from the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service dealing with three postmasters. I ask that those nominations be now considered. I therefore move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the nominations.

The Chief Clerk read the nominations of Victor Wray Irby, Hoyt G. Whitney, and Burl J. Faulkner, to be postmasters.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the nominations be considered en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are considered and agreed to en bloc.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified of the confirmation of the nominations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1582) for the relief of Helen Demouchikous, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the following concurrent resolutions of the Senate:

S. Con. Res. 45. Concurrent resolution authorizing the printing of additional copies of the hearings on the mutual-security program for the fiscal year 1958 for the use of the Committee on Foreign Relations; and

S. Con. Res. 47. Concurrent resolution to print additional copies of part 1 and subsequent parts of hearings entitled "Investigation of the Financial Condition of the United States," held by the Committee on Finance during the 85th Congress, 1st session.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the following concurrent resolutions, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. Con. Res. 229. Concurrent resolution providing that the two Houses of Congress shall adjourn on Friday, August 30, 1957, sine die; and

H. Con. Res. 230. Concurrent resolution authorizing the signatures on enrolled bills notwithstanding the sine die adjournment of the two Houses.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (H. R. 9302) making appropriations for mutual security for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1958, and for other purposes, and it was signed by the Vice President.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of legislative business.

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of legislative business.

CALL OF THE CALENDAR

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I wish to appeal as strongly and persuasively as I can to all Senators to permit the Senate have a call of the measures on the calendar which must be sent to the House in the hope that the House can take some action on them.

With respect to explanations and discussions and conversations, I should like to say that we will be in session for some time today, and we will be able to accommodate every Senator. The first thing that we would like to do is to try to act on the noncontroversial bills on the calendar. If Senators will reserve their discussion until we have completed the call of the calendar, in the interest of orderly procedure, I shall be very grateful to them for their cooperation.

MEASURES PASSED OVER

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BIBLE in the chair). Without objection, the calendar will be called. The clerk will state the first measure of the calendar.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that all calendar numbers prior to calendar No. 415 go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, all calendar numbers prior to No. 415 will be passed over.

RIGHTS OF VESSELS OF THE UNITED STATES IN TERRITORIAL WATERS OF FOREIGN COUNTRIES

The bill (S. 1483) to amend the act of August 27, 1954, relating to the rights of vessels of the United States on the high seas and in the territorial waters of foreign countries was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CLARK. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

TARIFF TREATMENT OF ISTLE OR TAMPICO FIBER

The bill (H. R. 7096) to amend paragraph 1684 of the Tariff Act of 1930 with respect to istle or Tampico fiber was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, over by request.

Mr. BEALL. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection for the moment?

Mr. TALMADGE. I do.

Mr. BEALL. I understood that the objections had been withdrawn.

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, I am now informed by the junior Senator from Texas that he has withdrawn his objection. If so, I have no objection.

Mr. KUCHEL. I wonder whether, in the interest of accommodating the distinguished minority leader it would be agreeable to the Senator from Maryland to let the bill go to the foot of the calendar. I see a note to call my distinguished colleague when the bill is called up.

Mr. BEALL. Mr. President, I am informed that the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND] has withdrawn his objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of Calendar No. 882, H. R. 7096.

Mr. KUCHEL. Mr. President, does the Chair refer to Calendar No. 882?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. BEALL. That is correct.

Mr. KUCHEL. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with an amendment on page 1, after line 8, to insert:

SEC 2. The amendments made by the first section of this act shall apply only in the case of articles entered for consumption, or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption, during the three-year period beginning on the day following the date of the enactment of this act.

SEC. 3. (a) Except as provided in section 4 of this act, no tariff or customs duty shall apply with respect to a beta-ray spectrometer, complete, consisting of a magnet unit, motor-generator set, and control rack, which is entered or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption by Stanford University, Stanford, California, for use at such university in connection with research for the Office of Naval Research and the Alfred P. Sloan Foundation, Inc., New York, N. Y.

(b) Subsection (a) shall apply whether such beta-ray spectrometer is entered, or withdrawn from warehouse, for consumption before, on, or after the date of the enactment of this act. If the liquidation of such entry or withdrawal has become final, such entry or withdrawal may be reliquidated and the appropriate refund of duty may be made.

SEC. 4. Section 3 of this act shall apply only so long as title to the beta-ray spectrometer entered or withdrawn free of duty under such section is vested in Stanford University. In the event that title to such spectrometer becomes vested in any other person after such entry or withdrawal, such spectrometer shall become subject to all duties imposed thereon by the revenue laws in force on the date on which such title becomes so vested. Such duties shall be assessed according to the appraised value on the date on which such title becomes so vested, with due allowance made for depreciation from handling and use.

Mr. BEALL. Mr. President, I offer an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the end of the bill it is proposed to insert the following new section:

SEC. 5. (a) Section 201 of the Tariff Act of 1930 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"Par. 1822. Yarns, wholly or in chief value of wool, dyed and cut into uniform lengths not exceeding 3 inches, in immediate packages or containers not exceeding 6 ounces in weight, including the weight of the immediate package or container."

(b) The amendment made by this section shall apply only in the case of articles entered for consumption, or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption, on and after the day following the date of enactment of this act.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I should like to say that the amendment has been considered by the Committee on Finance, and the committee has approved it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. BEALL] to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act to amend paragraph 1684 of the Tariff Act of 1930 with respect to istle or Tampico fiber, to admit free of duty a beta-ray spectrometer for use at Stanford University, Stanford, Calif., and for other purposes."

APPOINTMENT OF DISTRICT JUDGE, DISTRICT OF NEVADA

The bill (S. 2714) to provide for the appointment of a district judge for the district of Nevada was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, an additional district judge for the district of Nevada. In order that the table contained in section 133 of title 28 of the United States Code will reflect the change made by this act in the number of judgeships for the district of Nevada, such table is amended to read as follows with respect to such district:

"Districts Judges

* * * * *

"Nevada ---------------------- 2

* * * * *".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Before the Senate proceeds to the next measure on the calendar, the Presiding Officer, without objection, will insert at the conclusion of the passage of Calendar No. 1001, S. 2714, a statement concerning the bill.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR BIBLE

I am most gratified at the action of this body in passing the bill which my colleague [Mr. MALONE] and I introduced (S. 2714), to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge for the district of Nevada. I wish at this time to express my appreciation both to the members of the Committee on the Judiciary for their expeditious action and to the Members of this body for their favorable consideration of this legislation to grant to my State this greatly needed district judgeship. I also wish to thank the chairman of the Subcommittee on Improvements in Judiciary Machinery of the Committee on the Judiciary [Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina] for his courteous reception when I testified in behalf of this measure at the hearings on the omnibus judgeship bill. The subcommittee chairman did a masterful job and because of the thorough hearings conducted by him and the careful consideration given this matter, the full committee was able to act promptly on the bill. The able chairman of the committee [Mr. EASTLAND] is to be commended for his splendid work in connection with the consideration of the various judgeship measures as well as other matters reported from that committee.

The merits of this legislation cannot be questioned. Ample justification for this district judgeship appear in previous reports of the Judiciary Committee and in the hearings on S. 420 of the 85th Congress. A brief resume of the legislative history and the pressing need for a second district judgeship for the State of Nevada is as follows:

The district of Nevada has been the subject of hearings during the 84th and 85th Congresses. By Public Law 294 of the 83d Congress, a temporary judgeship was authorized, so that when this temporary judgeship was filled, the district of Nevada had two district judges until the retirement of one of the judges early in 1957. When the Committee on the Judiciary reported favorably on S. 1256 of the 84th Congress, there was included a provision to make permanent the then existing temporary judgeship for the district of Nevada, but since the retirement of one of the judges in that district, this can no longer be accomplished.

In its report on S. 1256 of the 84th Congress, the Judiciary Committee reaffirmed its position as set forth in the report on S. 2910 of the 83d Congress that each State having only one judge should be provided with an additional judge.

The hearings in the 85th Congress indicate the necessity for the restoration of a second judgeship in the district of Nevada. As stated by the committee in its report on this bill, the creation of this judgeship is amply justified.

I intend to press for the passage of this legislation by the House of Representatives, and it is my fervent hope that I will be able to secure for the people of my State a second United States district judge in the next session of the Congress.

APPOINTMENT OF TWO ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGES, EASTERN DISTRICT OF PENNSYLVANIA

The bill (S. 2747) to provide for the appointment of two additional district judges for the eastern district of Pennsylvania was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, two additional district judges for the eastern district of Pennsylvania. In order that the table contained in section 133 of title 28 of the United States Code will reflect the change made by this act in the number of judgeships for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, such table is amended to read as follows with respect to such district:

APPOINTMENT OF DISTRICT JUDGE FOR THE EASTERN AND WESTERN DISTRICTS, SOUTH CAROLINA

The bill (S. 2773) to provide for the appointment of a district judge for the eastern and western districts of South Carolina was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, an additional district judge for the eastern and western districts of South Carolina. In order that the table contained in section 133 of title 28 of the United States Code will reflect the change made by this act in the number of judgeships for the eastern and western districts of South Carolina, such table is amended to read as follows with respect to such districts:

"Districts	Judges

APPOINTMENT OF TEMPORARY CIRCUIT JUDGE AND A DISTRICT JUDGE, NORTHERN AND SOUTHERN DISTRICTS OF IOWA

The bill (S. 2799) to provide for a temporary circuit judgeship for the eighth circuit, and for the appointment of a district judge for the northern and southern districts of Iowa, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one additional circuit judge for the eighth circuit. The first vacancy occurring in the office of circuit judge in said circuit shall not be filled.

SEC. 2. The President shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, an additional district judge for the northern and southern districts of Iowa. In order that the table contained in section 133 of title 28 of the United States Code will reflect the change made by this act in the number of judgeships for the district of Iowa, such table is amended to read as follows with respect to such district:

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 2486) to authorize Commodity Credit Corporation to grant relief with respect to claims arising out of deliveries of eligible surplus feed grains on ineligible dates in connection with purchase orders under its emergency feed program was announced as next in order.

Mr. TALMADGE. Over, by request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 984) conferring jurisdiction on the court of claims to make certain findings with respect to the amount of compensation to which certain independent ore producers are equitably entitled for uranium supplied by them to the United States during the period May 1, 1943, to August 5, 1945, and to provide for payment of the amounts so determined, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TALMADGE. Over by request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

UNMANUFACTURED MICA FILMS AND SPLITTINGS

The bill (H. R. 6894) to amend the Tariff Act of 1930 as it relates to unmanufactured mica films and splittings, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CLARK. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

CONTRIBUTION BY STATE GOVERNMENTS TO COST OF FEED OR SEED FURNISHED FARMERS IN DISASTER AREAS

The bill (S. 304) to provide for a specific contribution by State governments to the cost of feed or seed furnished to farmers, ranchers, or stockmen in disaster areas, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, notwithstanding any other provision of law, no feed for livestock or seed for planting shall be furnished to farmers, ranchers, or stockmen pursuant to Public Law 875, 81st Congress (42 U. S. C. 1955 and the following); Public Law 115, 83d Congress, 1st session; Public Law 357, 83d Congress, 2d session; Public Law 480, 83d Congress, 2d session; or pursuant to any other law as a disaster relief measure, unless, in addition to such administrative costs as may be assumed by the State, the State in which such feed or seed is furnished agrees to contribute such percentage, not less than 25 nor more than 50, as the Secretary of Agriculture shall determine to be equitable of that part of the cost, including transportation, of such feed or seed which is not paid for by the recipients thereof.

CONVEYANCE OF CERTAIN LANDS TO THE CHARLOTTE RUDLAND DANSIE ASSOCIATION

The bill (S. 2230) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to convey certain lands to the Charlotte Rudland Dansie Association was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, over by request.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection for a moment? I understand the objection has been withdrawn.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I withdraw my objection. I thank the Senator from Utah for calling my attention to that fact.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to convey by patent, without monetary consideration therefor, the south half northeast quarter southwest quarter southeast quarter northeast quarter, section 21, township 27 north, range 102 west, sixth principal meridian, Wyoming, to the Charlotte Rudland Dansie Association for maintenance as a memorial grave site.

SEC. 2. The patent issued pursuant to section 1 of this act shall contain a reservation to the United States of all mineral deposits in the lands and of the right to mine and remove the same under applicable laws, regulations to be established by the Secretary, and terms and conditions which shall not be inconsistent with the use of the lands as a memorial grave site.

SEC. 3. If at any time after issuance of patent under section 1 of this act the Charlotte Rudland Dansie Association or its successor attempts to transfer title to or control over the lands to another without the consent of the Secretary or the lands are devoted to a use other than as a grave-site memorial to Charlotte Rudland Dansie or the association or its successor shall after due notice from the Secretary, fail to maintain the site in a manner which the Secretary deems fitting and proper, title to the lands shall revert to the United States.

Mr. WATKINS subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a statement prepared by the staff of the Senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] be printed at the time of the consideration of Calendar No. 1087, S. 2230.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

S. 2230

This bill has an excellent objective—the preservation of the memory of a great pioneer, Charlotte Rudland Dansie, who made one of the early journeys west with the Mormons to settle in the Salt Lake Valley.

This bill would authorize the conveyance of 1¼ acres of land surrounding the grave of this pioneer woman.

When the bill first came up on the call of the calendar, I sought information from the report which would clear up any problem concerning the applicability of the so-called Morse formula. The report did not supply the requisite information.

Since that time, my good friend, the senior Senator from Utah, has supplied me with further information, and I have checked with the Department of the Interior and have ascertained that the property has a value of approximately $20.

The case is one that calls for payment of fair appraised market value, but the difficulty is that the Government would spend more in determining that value through appraisal than would be realized through payment of fair market value.

Under those circumstances and in view of the purpose of the bill, I find no objection under the Morse formula.

INVESTIGATION OF JUVENILE DELINQUENCY IN THE UNITED STATES

The resolution (S. Res. 191) amending Senate Resolution 52, 85th Congress, authorizing an investigation of juvenile delinquency in the United States, was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That section 4 of Senate Resolution 52, 85th Congress, 1st session, authorizing an investigation of juvenile delinquency in the United States, agreed to on January 30, 1957, is amended by striking out "$50,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$60,000."

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 7785) to provide for the appointment of an additional judge for the Juvenile Court of the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. TALMADGE. Over, by request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

COMMISSION TO COMMEMORATE THE 100TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE CIVIL WAR

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 253) to establish a Commission to commemorate the 100th anniversary of the Civil War, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments on page 2, line 7, after the word "of", to strike out "eighteen" and insert "twenty-five"; in line 12, after the numeral "(2)", to strike out "Six" and insert "Four", and on page 3, at the beginning of line 6, to strike out "(a)" and insert "(6)".

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, before action is taken on that joint resolution, I ask that a statement prepared by the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND] be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CIVIL WAR CENTENNIAL COMMISSION TO CELEBRATE THE 100TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE CIVIL WAR—STATEMENT BY SENATOR EASTLAND

Mr. President, at its meeting of August 20, 1957, the Committee on the Judiciary ordered reported House Joint Resolution 253, to establish a Commission to commemorate the 100th anniversary of the Civil War. When the committee took this action, there were pending before the committee two Senate resolutions which would establish similar Civil War centennial commissions—Senate Joint Resolution 46, sponsored by Mr. BRICKER, of Ohio, Mr. ROBERTSON, of Virginia, Mr. MARTIN, of Pennsylvania, and Mr. THURMOND, of South Carolina, and Senate Joint Resolution 83, to establish a Commission to celebrate the 100th anniversary of the Civil War, introduced by Mr. SALTONSTALL, of Massachusetts, Mr. GOLDWATER, of Arizona, and myself.

The committee acted on the House resolution, rather than acting on a similar Senate resolution, due to the fact that the House resolution had just been received from the other body, and, in order to expedite action and to facilitate the establishment of the Commission, the committee deemed it proper to report House Joint Resolution 253. I do want the record to show, however, that the Members of the Senate who sponsored these two Senate resolutions were most actively interested in assuring that there be established a Civil War centennial commission in order that there may be a proper observance of this period of our history. They were completely in accord with the action taken by the committee in reporting the House resolution, in order that the Commission may commence its activities as soon as possible.

The resolution, as amended, provides for a 25-member commission to be known as the Civil War Centennial Commission. The members of the Commission are to serve without compensation but are to be furnished transportation and reimbursement not to exceed $20 per diem while engaged in official duties relating to the Commission. The Commission is authorized and encouraged to cooperate with State, civil, patriotic, hereditary and historic groups, and with institutions of learning in order to make this commemoration of the 100th anniversary of the Civil War as meaningful as possible.

This legislation would authorize the appropriation of funds of not to exceed $100,000 for the expenses of the Commission.

This centennial observance will be the occasion for nationwide commemoration. The establishment of the Commission, which is intended to be national in scope, will encourage and develop public knowledge of and interest in the history of the Civil War.

The committee believes that this is a very meritorious resolution and, accordingly, recommends favorable consideration of House Joint Resolution 253, as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

CONVEYANCE OF CERTAIN LANDS TO MIDDLE TENNESSEE COUNCIL, BOY SCOUTS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2531) to authorize the conveyance of certain lands within Old Hickory lock and dam project, Tennessee, to Middle Tennessee Council, Boy Scouts, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Works with an amendment on page 1, after the enacting clause, to strike out:

"That subject to section 2 and without monetary consideration, the Secretary of the Army is authorized and directed to convey to the Middle Tennessee Council, Inc., Boy Scouts of America, all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to the following lands within the Old Hickory lock and dam project:

And insert:

"That the Secretary of the Army is authorized and directed to convey to the Middle Tennessee Council, Inc., Boy Scouts of America, without monetary consideration therefor, but subject to the conditions of this act, the area or areas he determines to be available for conveyance within the 609.2 acres of land leased to the said Boy Scouts Council at the Old Hickory lock and dam, Cumberland River, Tenn., under lease granted July 12, 1955, numbered DA-40-058-CIVENG-56-8."

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Army is authorized and directed to convey to the Middle Tennessee Council, Inc., Boy Scouts of America, without monetary consideration therefor, but subject to the conditions of this act, the area or areas he determines to be available for conveyance within the 609.2 acres of land leased to the said Boy Scouts Council at the Old Hickory lock and dam, Cumberland River, Tenn., under lease granted July 12, 1955, numbered DA-40-058-CIVENG-56-8.

SEC. 2. Title to property authorized to be conveyed by this act shall revert to the United States, which shall have the right of immediate entry thereon, if the Middle Tennessee Council, Inc., Boy Scouts of America—

(1) has not commenced the development of such property for recreation and camping purposes within the 3-year period beginning on the date of enactment of this act; or

(2) shall ever cease to use such property for recreation and camping purposes.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of the Army is authorized to grant to the Middle Tennessee Council, Inc., Boy Scouts of America, such rights-of-way for public access and utility lines across any property of the United States as may be necessary to facilitate the development and use of the property conveyed under authority of this act for recreation and camping purposes.

SEC. 4. The conveyance of the property herein authorized shall be subject to the right to flood due to the fluctuation of the water level of the Old Hickory lock and dam project and to such other conditions, reservations, and restrictions as the Secretary of the Army may determine to be necessary for the management and operation of said Old Hickory lock and dam project.

SEC. 5. The cost of any surveys necessary as an incident of the conveyance authorized herein shall be borne by the Middle Tennessee Council, Inc., Boy Scouts of America.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

APPOINTMENT OF DISTRICT JUDGE FOR THE DISTRICT OF MASSACHUSETTS

The bill (S. 1224) to provide for the appointment of a district judge for the district of Massachusetts was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, an additional district judge for the district of Massachusetts. In order that the table contained in section 133 of title 28 of the United States Code will reflect the change made by this act in the number of judgeships for the district of Massachusetts, such table is amended to read as follows with respect to such district:

"Districts	Judges
* * *	* *
Massachusetts	6

APPOINTMENT OF ADDITIONAL JUDGES FOR OHIO—BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2832) a bill to provide for the appointment of one additional district judge for the northern district of Ohio and one additional district judge for the southern district of Ohio, was announced as next in order.

Mr. TALMADGE. Over, by request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. LAUSCHE subsequently said: I objected to the consideration of Calendar No. 1120, Senate bill 2832, because it was my understanding it included three judges. I was certain that an additional judge was needed in the northern district of Ohio. I was certain that a new judge was not needed in the southern district, because the calendar is current, the bill as originally introduced contemplated the appointment of three judges. The bill now pending before the Senate has eliminated one, and if passed will authorize the appointment of two. I am therefore withdrawing my objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the RECORD will so show.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I thank the Senator from Ohio very much.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 2832) to provide for the appointment of one additional district judge for the northern district of Ohio, and one additional district judge for the southern district of Ohio was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one additional district judge for the northern district of Ohio and one additional district judge for the southern district of Ohio. In order that the table contained in section 133 of title 28 of the United States Code will reflect the changes made by this act in the number of judgeships for the northern and southern districts of Ohio, such table is amended to read as follows with respect to such districts:

"Districts	Judges
* * * * *
"Ohio:
Northern	6
Southern	4"

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. KUCHEL. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I should like to make a motion, with respect to all the bills dealing with the judgeships. I move that the vote by which they were passed be reconsidered.

Mr. KUCHEL. Mr. President, does that include the judgeship bills we have not yet come to?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. No. We would not reconsider action on bills we have not taken up.

Mr. KUCHEL. I wanted to point out there are a couple more. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. KUCHEL. I move to lay the motion of the Senator from Texas on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from California to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

CONVEYANCE OF CERTAIN LANDS TO BOY SCOUTS—BILL PASSED TO THE FOOT OF THE CALENDAR

The bill (H. R. 8576) to authorize the conveyance of certain lands within the Old Hickory lock and dam project, Cumberland River, Tenn., to Middle Tennessee Council, Inc., Boy Scouts of America, for recreation and camping purposes was announced as next in order.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that that bill go to the foot of the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill will be passed to the foot of the calendar.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to consider order of business 1145, House bill 8576.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8576) to authorize the conveyance of certain lands within the Old Hickory lock and dam project, Cumberland River, Tenn., to Middle Tennessee Council, Inc., Boy Scouts of America, for recreation and camping purposes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I submit an amendment on behalf of my colleague, the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE]. All Members of this body are familiar with the tireless work of the senior Senator from Oregon as watchdog for the Treasury, particularly in connection with land-conveyance matters. The Senator desired to offer this amendment. It was not acceptable to the author of the bill or to the committee. The Senator from Oregon is necessarily away from the Chamber. All Members, I believe, are generally familiar with the views of the Senator from Oregon on the Morse formula. So I send to the desk amendments in his behalf, and ask that the clerk state them, and that the Members give consideration to them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On the first page, lines 5 and 6, strike out "without monetary consideration therefor, but."

On page 2, line 2, after the period insert the following:

Such conveyance shall be conditional upon payment being made for the land conveyed in an amount equal to the fair market value of such land as determined by the Secretary of the Army after appraisal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments offered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. JOHNSON] on behalf of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE].

The amendments were rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill (H. R. 8576) was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the vote by which the bill was passed be reconsidered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I move to lay on the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 2531 will be indefinitely postponed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 7168) to prescribe policy and procedure in connection with construction contracts made by executive agencies, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CLARK. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over, by request.

MICHELE NIRO

The bill (S. 781) for the relief of Michele Niro was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purposes of the Immigration and Nationality Act, Michele Niro shall be held and considered to have been lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence as of the date of the enactment of this act, upon payment of the required visa fee. Upon the granting of permanent residence to such alien as provided for in this act, the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct one number from the appropriate quota for the first year that such quota is available.

MME. HENRIETTE BUAILLON AND STANLEY JAMES CARPENTER

The bill (H. R. 7014) for the relief of Madame Henriette Buaillon and Stanley James Carpenter was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

VIRGINIA RAY POTTS

The bill (H. R. 8374) for the relief of Virginia Ray Potts was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. HANNAH MAE POWELL

The bill (H. R. 1419) for the relief of Mrs. Hannah Mae Powell was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KUCHEL. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, this bill, as amended, would pay to the claimant the sum of $11,197.95 for refund of income taxes and other expenses sustained as a result of the actions of the Collector of Internal Revenue of Philadelphia, Pa., in the years 1937, 1941, and 1942.

The claimant was for a number of years engaged in the business of distributing, under her own label, certain cosmetic preparations—ointment and shampoo. In 1933, a new excise tax was placed on manufacturers of cosmetics.

It appears that the ointment distributed by the claimant was purchased from the manufacturer in 50-pound cans, and that the manufacturer's excise tax was paid by the manufacturer and added to the sales price. The shampoo also was purchased in wholesale lots, but was not subject to the tax.

The claimant's sole function in connection with these products was to transfer the ointment from 50-pound cans to small glass jars, added labels, and assemble the products into lots ready for retail sale. Inasmuch as no ingredient was ever added by her, she took the position that she was not a manufacturer and did not make the information returns required of manufacturers of cosmetics. Four years after the effective date of the act, agents of the Internal Revenue Bureau advised the claimant that she was the manufacturer of this ointment and was subject to the tax. Upon the basis of a return prepared by the agents, which the claimant refused to sign, the tax—plus penalties and interest—was assessed against her. Subsequently, the collector proceeded to impound her bank account, attach her automobile and all her merchandise, including that on consignment in the hands of third parties, and padlock her office and warehouse.

Two separate levies were made, in the amounts of $4,718.44 and $20,240; but, inasmuch as the latter amount had been arrived at without differentiating between sales of soap—not taxable—and without taking into account freight charges, consignees' commissions, and so forth, this assessment was reduced to $3,399.40.

Shortly after the first levy, the claimant was allowed to reenter and resume business in her place of business, but found her supplies and equipment to be unsanitary and unfit for sales purposes and, therefore, a total loss. According to an affidavit executed by the claimant, losses resulting from the return of consigned goods—practically all of which had been damaged to the extent that they were entirely worthless—storage, transfer, rental, and other charges amounted to approximately $25,000. Further, her credit standing, built up over many years, was destroyed.

The claimant subsequently filed suit to contest the manufacturer's excise tax levied against her. The court found that this tax had been improperly levied, and ordered that judgment be entered in her favor in the sum of $5,753.30, together with interest and costs.

The claimant later filed suit for damages against the collector, for damages suffered by her, but was unsuccessful in the prosecution of this suit.

The committee is of the opinion that, although there is no legal basis for the claim, inasmuch as the tax assessed and the levies made pursuant thereto were improper, and in view of the fact that she suffered serious financial losses therefrom, she should, in consideration of the equities involved, receive some recompense for her losses. The bill, as referred to this committee, provided for the payment of $24,932.39, but, after careful consideration of all the evidence before it, the committee has concluded that the sum of $11,197.95 would be a fair and reasonable award, and has amended the bill accordingly.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, as a member of the Judiciary Committee, I was appointed a subcommittee of one to hold the hearing on this matter. I heard the facts at great length and very substantially, as the Senator from Pennsylvania has just pointed out in the course of the statement he has made.

I believe there are sufficient equities in the matter to justify allowance of the claim, and I have recommended that it be allowed in full.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Utah for his consideration of this matter, which involves a resident of Philadelphia.

Mr. KUCHEL. Mr. President, all I wish to state is that if I had a recording which had been recorded at the high speed which has been demonstrated by the acting majority leader, the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLARK], as he has proceeded in connection with this matter, with most commendable zeal—I refer to the speed with which he read the statement regarding it, and if I were to play such a recording on my child's hi-fi set, I would turn down the speed control a little. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 1419) for the relief of Mrs. Hannah Mae Powell, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment on page 1, line 7, after the word "of," to strike out "$24,932.39" and insert "$11,197.95."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

BENEDICT M. KORDUS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 1883) for the relief of Benedict M. Kordus, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment on page 2, line 2, after the word "act", to strike out "in excess of 10 percent thereof."

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a statement in regard to this bill be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BENEDICT M. KORDUS—STATEMENT OF SENATOR TALMADGE

This bill proposes to pay to Benedict M. Kordus, of Milwaukee, Wis., the sum of $6,476.06 in full settlement of all claims against the United States for the payment of the amounts of the disability compensation withheld from Matthew T. Kordus, a veteran of the First World War.

The applicable law pertaining to veterans' disability compensation provides that when a veteran is hospitalized in a veterans' hospital his compensation is to be paid until the first day of the seventh calendar month. After that time, payments shall not exceed $30 a month and the amounts withheld are to be paid to specified individuals in the event of the death of the veteran while a patient. Among the classes of persons who may take are brothers and sisters. The claimant, Benedict M. Kordus, was abandoned by his mother at the home of his uncle when he was 3 days old. The uncle raised the claimant with his other children and in all ways both the uncle and his children treated the claimant as though he were a son and brother. The claimant was raised in the family, which included as one of the brothers the said Matthew T. Kordus, veteran of World War I. When Matthew Kordus became disabled due to his service-connected disability, the claimant took him into his home for a long period of time until it became necessary that Matthew Kordus be hospitalized in a Veterans' Administration hospital. The claimant and his wife cared for Matthew during the period that he was in their home and after he was hospitalized the claimant visited him regularly in the hospital. When Matthew died while still in the hospital, the claimant paid for his funeral expenses. The claimant also paid for the funeral expenses of a sister of Matthew when she predeceased Matthew. Matthew regarded the claimant as his brother and, in fact, on his insurance policy identified the claimant as his brother. After Matthew died, the claimant filed a claim with the Veterans' Administration for amounts withheld from the disability compensation of Matthew Kordus. This claim was denied for the reason that the claimant was not a brother of the whole or the halfblood of the veteran and that he was not adopted by the parents of the veteran and, therefore, did not qualify by law. The records indicate that there are no other claimants to the sums withheld.

The Veterans' Administration is opposed to the enactment of this bill.

The bill has been amended to delete attorney's fees.

The committee feels that in view of the fact that the two cousins were raised as brothers and in view of the close relationship that existed between them after they reached maturity and in view of the services rendered the deceased by the claimant prior to his death, and particularly in view of the fact that the claimant is the only person known who might apply for the amounts withheld, that the claimant should be entitled to recover the amounts withheld, in payment for moneys and services the claimant furnished the decedent prior to his death. Furthermore, the committee feels that in view of the peculiar circumstances in this case, that this bill would not present an undesirable precedent with respect to such payments. Accordingly, the committee recommends that this bill, as amended, be favorably considered.

BENEDICT M. KORDUS—STATEMENT OF SENATOR EASTLAND

This bill proposes to pay to Benedict M. Kordus, of Milwaukee, Wis., the sum of $6,476.06 in full settlement of all claims against the United States for the payment of the amounts of the disability compensation withheld from Matthew T. Kordus, a veteran of the First World War.

Matthew regarded the claimant as his brother and, in fact, on his insurance policy indentified the claimant as his brother. After Matthew died, the claimant filed a claim with the Veterans' Administration for amounts withheld from the disability compensation of Matthew Kordus. This claim was denied for the reason that the claimant was not a brother of the whole or the half blood of the veteran and that he was not adopted by the parents of the veteran and, therefore, did not qualify by law. LEASING OF SPACE FOR FEDERAL AGENCIES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2533) to amend the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949, to authorize the Administrator of General Services to lease space for Federal agencies for periods not exceeding 15 years, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Government Operations, with amendments, on page 2, after line 7, to strike out:

(2) For the purposes of paragraph (1) of this subsection, the Administrator is authorized to acquire real property by purchase, condemnation, lease, donation, or otherwise, to improve (including demolition) federally owned property, and to dispose of such acquired and federally owned property upon such terms as he may determine to be in the best interest of the United States.

In line 15, to change the subsection number from "(3)" to "(2)", and in line 25, to change the subsection number from "(4)" to "(3)", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 210 of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949, as amended (40 U. S. C. 490), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(h) (1) The Administrator is authorized to enter into lease agreements with any person, copartnership, corporation, or other public or private entity, which do not bind the Government for periods in excess of 15 years for each such lease agreement, on such terms as he deems to be in the interest of the United States and necessary for the accommodation of Federal agencies in buildings and improvements which are in existence or to be erected by the lessor for such purposes and to assign and reassign space therein to Federal agencies.

"(2) If the unexpired portion of any lease of space to the Government is determined by the Administrator to be surplus property and the property is thereafter disposed of by sublease by the Administrator, the Administrator is authorized, notwithstanding section 204 (a), to deposit rental received in the buildings management fund (40 U. S. C. 490 (f)) and defray from the fund any costs necessary to provide services to the Government's lessee and to pay the rent not otherwise provided for on the lease of the space to the Government.

"(3) Lease agreements in excess of 5 years entered into under paragraph (1) of this subsection shall not be subject to the 25 percent limitation of section 322 of the act of June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 412, as amended (40 U. S. C. 278a).)

SEC. 2. The following laws are repealed: Act of March 2, 1913 (37 Stat. 718 (paragraph on leasing storage space)), as amended by section 6 of the act of June 14, 1946 (60 Stat. 258; 40 U. S. C. 36); section 407, act of June 16, 1949 (63 Stat. 199, as amended; 40 U. S. C. 37a); and the first sentence of amended section 3 of the act of August 27, 1935 (60 Stat. 257; 40 U. S. C. 304c).

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. An explanation is requested.

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, the bill is designed to expand the existing authority of the Administrator to procure space by lease for the accommodation of Federal agencies by authorizing execution of leases for such purposes in buildings or improvements which are in existence or to be erected by lessors for periods not in excess of 15 years.

Mr. ELLENDER. Are the buildings to be erected for that special purpose?

Mr. TALMADGE. I am sure that would be the intention. In order to get space in cities where space is not now available, a contractor or investor probably would be happy to invest money in a building if he thought he could lease space for 15 years and amortize the cost of the building, but he would not do so if he had to lease the space for a short term.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MR. AND MRS. CHARLES H. PAGE

The bill (H. R. 1315) for the relief of Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Page, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

G. H. LITTS

The bill (H. R. 4351) for the relief of G. H. Litts was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MEASURES PASSED OVER

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 80) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relative to equal rights for men and women was announced as next in order.

Mr. CLARK. Over, by request. This is not calendar business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 1804) for the relief of Robert B. Cooper was announced as next in order.

Mr. TALMADGE. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 148) to prescribe procedures and contents for reports to the Senate by executive agencies with respect to proposed projects for conservation and development of land and water resources was announced as next in order.

Mr. PURTELL. Over, by request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

SALE OF LAND IN OTTAWA COUNTY, MICH.

The bill (H. R. 7900) to permit the Secretary of Agriculture to sell to individuals land in Ottawa County, Mich., which was acquired pursuant to the provisions of title III of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an explanation of the bill.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXPLANATION OF H. R. 7900

This bill will authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to sell certain lands to the highest responsible bidder at not less than the fair market price. The lands concerned are approximately 6,200 acres of land in Ottawa County, Mich., which were acquired under the submarginal land retirement program during the 1930's. They were purchased by the Government for a very nominal amount. The land is now needed for rural residential purposes because of the expansion of population in the nearby cities of Grand Haven, Holland, and Grand Rapids.

There is nothing mandatory about the bill. The Secretary is authorized to sell such land "as he determines is not needed for public purposes and is suitable for private ownership."

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I should like to inform all Members of the Senate that at the conclusion of the calendar call some bills will be taken up by motion. I am anxious to accommodate each Senator, so if there is any particular bill that a Senator is interested in that he thinks we should consider before a sine die adjournment, I hope he will contact me, or Mr. Siegel, or some member of my staff who will be here at the table. We will attempt to arrange an orderly method for considering all the bills. I thank my colleagues.

COMMITTEE SERVICE

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, while I have the floor, if my colleagues will permit me, I send to the desk an order and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I will say, for the benefit of my colleagues and the press, this is an order assigning committees to the newly elected Democratic Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE].

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY] is hereby excused from further duty with the Select Committee on Small Business, and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE] is hereby assigned to service with such committee.

Ordered further, That the Senator from Ohio [Mr. LAUSCHE] is hereby excused from further service with the Committee on Banking and Currency, and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE] is hereby assigned to service on such committee.

Ordered further, That the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLARK] is hereby excused from further service with the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE] is hereby assigned to service with such committee.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, before action is taken on the order, I send to the desk and ask to have read 3 letters from 3 distinguished Senators, all of whom have the confidence and respect of their colleagues, but I should like to observe that I have never known 3 Senators to be more unselfish or more considerate of the problems of their leader.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letters will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

AUGUST 30, 1957.

HON. LYNDON B. JOHNSON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR LYNDON: I have been informed that it will be necessary for existing committee assignments to be given up by Democratic Members of the Senate so that Senator PROXMIRE can receive the standing committee assignments to which he is entitled.

Accordingly, I tender herewith my resignation from the Committee on Banking and Currency so that this assignment may be available to the new Wisconsin Senator.

Sincerely,

FRANK J. LAUSCHE.
United States Senator.

AUGUST 30, 1957.

Hon. LYNDON B. JOHNSON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR LYNDON: I understand that under the rule governing the division of committee seats between the majority and the minority, it becomes necessary for existing Democratic Senators to give up committee posts in order to furnish assignments to the new Senator from Wisconsin, BILL PROXMIRE.

Accordingly, I tender my resignation from the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

Sincerely,

JOSEPH S. CLARK,
United States Senator.

AUGUST 30, 1957.

Hon. LYNDON B. JOHNSON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR LYNDON: In order to provide an assignment for the new Senator from Wisconsin, Mr. PROXMIRE, I herewith tender my resignation from the Select Committee on Small Business.

Sincerely,

A. S. MIKE MONRONEY,
United States Senator.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, before action is taken, I should like to point out to my friends of the majority and the minority a provision of rule XXV, which appears on page 43 of the Standing Rules of the Senate. The Democratic majority in the Senate increased from 49 to 50. The Republican minority decreased from 47 to 46. But, according to this rule, the Democrats lost two committee seats. The rule provides that, if there are 49 in the majority and 47 in the minority, we would have 16 third-committee assignments; but if that number steps up to 50 in the majority, as it did in this case, and 46 in the minority, we would have only 14.

That is a quirk in the rules. I guess a few weeks ago someone would have said, "We won the battle and lost the war." We won the election and lost two committee seats. That is a little unusual. However, because of the unselfishness and because of the consideration demonstrated by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. LAUSCHE], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY], and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLARK], we have been able to assign to our new colleague this morning, as a result of the unanimous action of the Democratic steering committee, of which I have the honor to be the chairman, with each member participating, a seat on three excellent committees.

I had hoped it might be possible to assign the distinguished Senator a place on the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, because of his great interest in agriculture and because he comes from an important agricultural State. There is no vacancy on that committee at the present time. The Senator will be considered for any vacancies that may occur.

In the meantime, I shall ask the distinguished Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] to be constantly aware of the interest of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE] in farm problems. I know the Senator is willing to utilize his constructive efforts in helping us solve the problems relating to agriculture.

Mr. President, may we have the order acted upon?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the order presented by the Senator from Texas? Without objection, the order is entered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I think this is another indication of a sense of responsibility not only on the part of the majority leader but on the part of the Democratic Members of the Senate.

Frankly, I am a little surprised; because, while riding to the Capitol with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE] night before last from the airport, I was under the impression that he might be able, after a great deal of effort, to be seated on two committees. However, I come to the Chamber this afternoon and I find he has been given three excellent committee assignments.

I listened to the majority leader this morning talk about the accomplishments of this session of Congress. I should like to emphasize the fact that we shall be, when we adjourn later in the day, half way through the present Congress. I think the sense of responsibility which has marked the Democratic Party during the past 4 years and 8 months has been carried down to the present day and is in large part responsible for the fact that we have a Senator from Wisconsin for the first time in almost 30 years. I think the activities of this body under the leadership of the outstanding majority leader, the Senator from Texas [Mr. JOHNSON], have had their impact upon the people throughout the country.

For example, because of the policies carried out by all sections of the Democratic Party represented in this Chamber, a victory in Wisconsin occurred, and we hope in the future this trend will continue. This is nothing new. This trend has been in evidence since the beginning of 1953. I think it is a trbute to the majority leader, for the fine leadership he has displayed, for the sagacity he has demonstrated, and for the gift he has for bringing various elements of the Democratic Party together.

Of course we have our differences, but we can and do overcome those differences and alleviate them. Out of that process comes good legislation, as has been indicated in recent weeks.

Mr. President, I would hazard a guess that the number of bills which a Congress passes is not of importance. What is of importance is the quality of the measures which are reported, passed, and sent to the President.

I also point out that, on the basis of what has been said, the majority leader has indicated that at least half of the President's recommendations numbering on the order of 150, have been considered in the 1st session of the 85th Congress. Every recommendation of any merit which the President sends to Congress will receive the most serious consideration of this Democratic-controlled body. That has been the policy during the past 4 years and 8 months, and it will be the policy in the future.

Mr. President, I was surprised to read on the ticker tape this morning a statement by Secretary of Agriculture Benson, who evidently is the Republican's secret weapon, to the effect that his farm policies had no effect on the vote in Wisconsin. I think the Secretary is mistaken, because in my part of the country, to the west of Wisconsin, in the Rocky Mountain-Great Plains area, in the last election the policies of Mr. Benson did help the Democrats and did, in my opinion, hurt the Republicans.

We are extremely glad to have a man of the ability of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE] with us. We know he will work extremely well under the leadership of the senior Senator from Texas. We know he won a victory on the basis of a hard campaign, good issues, and because he had right in his corner. We feel that he likewise will add to the responsibility which this Congress, under Democratic control, has exhibited during the last 4½ years.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I yield the floor so that my friends, the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY] may be recognized.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY] is recognized.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I want to join with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MANSFIELD] in commending our new friend, new colleague, and distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE] for his committee assignments. It is a great privilege to serve on one committee in the Senate, and it is an unusual privilege to serve on three. I am sure I speak what is in the heart of the junior Senator from Wisconsin, when I extend thanks and appreciation to our three colleagues who have so unselfishly stepped aside and given up committee posts in order to permit the Senator from Wisconsin to have important committee assignments. The Senator from Wisconsin will have the opportunity to serve his constituency on one of the greatest committees in the Senate, the Committee on Banking and Currency. It has jurisdiction over so many problems that the Senator discussed, in his campaign, such as the problems of the Eisenhower inflation, the high interest rates, and the tight-money policy, housing, and small business. The Senator from Wisconsin is intimately acquainted with these matters, and apparently the people of his State understand them, because they responded to his appeal.

I have served for 8 years as a member of the Senate Select Committee on Small Business. I can assure the Senator from Wisconsin that the opportunity to serve on the Select Committee on Small Business is a unique privilege. I welcome the Senator to the ranks of the committee. He will find that there is a growing interest on the Main Streets of America in the work of the Senate Committee on Small Business, and he will find also—as he did find, since he is a living demonstration of it—that the independent businessmen of America are beginning to look to the Democratic Party for leadership and protection.

The Senator will also serve on the important Post Office and Civil Service Committee. Other Senators, I am sure, will make comment upon that. I only desire to add the thought that to be a friend of the civil-service employees and the postal workers is an opportunity and a responsibility. The Senator from Wisconsin has proved himself to be that kind of a friend—a friend of the workingman, of the farmer, and of the businessman.

I wish to commend the majority leader for what I like to call the "Johnson doctrine" of assigning new Senators to serve upon at least one major and important committee. I do not want to tell the other side of the aisle how to run its business, because that is a Republican problem, but I will say that on the Democratic side of the aisle since the majority leader, the senior Senator from Texas, has been at the helm we have seen to it that every Senator has been given one or more important committee assignments. Believe me, this means something to the people back home, as well as to the Senator who receives such an assignment.

I desire to conclude, Mr. President, by stating that I could not help but note that my esteemed friend, the Senator from Montana [Mr. MANSFIELD] mentioned the name of Mr. Benson. Mr. Benson is a very well known name in the Halls of Congress. It is a well-known name in the great plains and prairies of the West and Midwest. Mr. Benson may disavow any connection with the Wisconsin election, but I think at some time later on we will hear again from the people of Wisconsin as to how effective Mr. Benson's policies are.

I want the RECORD to note this, if my colleagues will bear with me. I have been trying to get Secretary Ezra Taft Benson to appear before a Senate subcommittee for 3 weeks. I want Senators all to know that we almost succeeded yesterday, because last evening he was in the front row in the family gallery with his delightful and lovable family. He has a wonderful family. He was there. He almost got to the committee.

I am of the opinion that the Secretary of Agriculture thinks he is going to outwait the junior Senator from Minnesota, because he indicated to me that after Labor Day he might be available for a committee hearing. Well, Ezra, I want to tell you something: I am staying in Washington until after Labor Day, because I am so fond of the Secretary of Agriculture that I want to have a chance to visit with him on the matter of how he is reorganizing the Rural Electrification Administration.

If the distinguished junior Senator from Wisconsin plans to remain in the city until after Labor Day, I will say to him that an experience he will never forget is in the offing for him—the opportunity to meet the Secretary of Agriculture, the man who has driven down agricultural prices, who has literally taken money away from the farmers of Wisconsin and Minnesota, particularly our dairy farmers.

I welcome the junior Senator from Wisconsin to this privilege of visiting with the Secretary of Agriculture. That is the word which the Secretary used. He said he wanted to visit with me. I welcome the junior Senator from Wisconsin to that experience.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. President, I wish to pay tribute to the majority leader for the policy he has followed since his inauguration into that office. Senators on this side of the aisle, even though we hold many divergent views, have been inspired by the leadership of our majority leader. He has led us to a championship race which was climaxed in Wisconsin only a day or two ago. Wisconsin has sent to the Senate a man who, I know, will be a worker. If he is not, he should not want three committee assignments. The majority leader took a look at this man and said, "There is a worker"; and he gave him three committee assignments.

He gave him one very good committee assignment, to the Committee on Banking and Currency. The junior Senator from Wisconsin is a worker. He will fit nicely into that committee. I know that he is a bit disappointed that he cannot serve on the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry at this time. That is another fine, hard-working committee.

Service on the Committee on Banking and Currency will be an experience for the junior Senator from Wisconsin that he will always cherish. It is a tribute to the State of Wisconsin that he should be placed on that committee.

The majority leader has been tireless in all his efforts. He has been fearless. As was said a little while ago by the Senator from Minnesota, he is a man who has followed the precepts and principles which he expounded at the beginning of 1953.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, as a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, I wish to congratulate that committee upon the accession to its membership of the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE]. I have served on the committee for 9 years. It is one of the most important committees of this body, dealing with a wide variety of subjects.

We are very sorry to lose the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. LAUSCHE], who has been a tower of strength, and whose integrity and sincerity have impressed us all. We are very happy to have the junior Senator from Wisconsin among us. He is extremely well qualified for membership on the Committee on Banking and Currency. Some years ago he served a period of time in the canyons of Wall Street.

In that connection, I am reminded of a couple of lines from a poem by Rudyard Kipling, written many years ago. It was very widely quoted at the time:

> If you can talk with crowds and keep your virtue,
> Or walk with kings—nor lose the common touch.

The junior Senator from Wisconsin has been talking with crowds in Wisconsin for 6 years, and has retained his virtue. He has never made promises which he did not keep; and he has spoken out when frequently it seemed to be to his political disadvantage.

As I have said, for a brief period of time he walked with the kings of Wall Street, at the lower end of Manhattan Island, but he did not lose the common touch as he walked with them. He obeyed the injunction of the Master, who said that we should be as wise as serpents and as harmless as doves.

The junior Senator from Wisconsin has acquired a knowledge of the financial world, but he will use that knowledge for the benefit of the people.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, as a member of the Democratic steering committee I was very happy to join the majority leader in making these three committee assignments, and I compliment the three distinguished Senators who gave up their assignments in order to enable the junior Senator from Wisconsin to accept three important committee assignments.

I only regret that the distinguished junior Senator from Wisconsin will not be able to serve at this time on the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. As chairman of that committee it is my hope that when January comes the committee will go into detail with respect to one of the important segments of our farming problem, a segment which needs assistance. I refer to the dairy industry.

I take this opportunity of inviting my good friend, the junior Senator from Wisconsin, to study the problem from now until January, and give us the benefit of his views when we meet, in order to attempt to solve the problems facing the farmer.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. Mr. President, yesterday I placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD certain statements with respect to the new Senator from Wisconsin. I should like to repeat a few of them, to show that the confidence of the majority leader was well placed when he chose these three important committee assignments for the junior Senator from Wisconsin.

In the statement which I had printed in the RECORD yesterday I said:

> BILL PROXMIRE is a man seasoned in combat, undismayed by reverses, enlightened by education, blessed by a charming wife, endowed by nature with a keen intellect, vigorous in action, strong in mind and body, and dedicated to the public good. Such a combination in one man carried with it the elements of victory, and were, in my opinion, the biggest single factor in BILL PROXMIRE's victory in Wisconsin.

I think he has shown that he is worthy of the three committee assignments.

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, flattering words come easily on the floor of the Senate, I have found. However, one of the highest tributes which our colleagues could show to the outstanding record of the new Senator from Wisconsin is the fact that three illustrious Democratic Senators in the Senate have voluntarily relinquished their seats on important committees so that the new Senator from Wisconsin could serve in a capacity for which his great experience and ability qualify him.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I am very much aware of the cardinal rule that a freshman Senator, a new Senator, should not address the Senate very soon after he becomes a Member of the Senate. However, I cannot let this moment pass without expressing on behalf of the people of Wisconsin our gratitude for the fine thing the majority leader has done for us. The Johnson doctrine is something for which I believe the people of Wisconsin must be very grateful. I know how unusual it is for a new member of any legislative body to be given this kind of consideration. I think that it is a recognition of the extremely important problems which are facing the people of Wisconsin. I wish to thank our distinguished and great majority leader for having done this. I am sure the people of Wisconsin are very grateful for it.

I also wish to say that the three selfless men who stepped down from important committees in behalf of the people of Wisconsin so that they could be represented on these vitally important committees deserve special thanks. They are the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. LAUSCHE], the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLARK], and the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY]. I am sure the people of Wisconsin are extremely grateful. I might say also to the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] that we are looking forward at some time in the future to representation on his very, very important committee, because the dairy farmers of Wisconsin feel very deeply that their cause must be pleaded as vigorously as possible.

I wish to thank all my colleagues for their very generous and extremely flattering, if undeserved, comments with respect to me personally, and to thank them in behalf of my State.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. PROXMIRE. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I appreciate the Senator's very fine statement.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, I am sure that in the experience of all the Members of the Senate, we have known of no action similar to that taken in the assignment of the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE] to important Senate committees.

Of course, at the beginning of a session of Congress, after there may have been to some extent a turnover in the membership of the Senate, and when a considerable number of vacancies may exist on Senate committees, in the case of the representation on either one side of the aisle or the other, new Members of the Senate may secure assignments to important committees.

However, I am certain that if historians will search the records of the United States Congress, they will not find another instance in which a Senator who has commenced his service during the middle of a Congress—as has the distinguished junior Senator from Wisconsin—has been assigned to committees of the importance of those to which the junior Senator from Wisconsin has been assigned, or any other instance in which such great sacrifices have been made on the part of Senators of one particular party, to enable a new Senator to have such important assignments.

Let me say that I have had the privilege of being in Wisconsin; and I realize the great importance, both to the dairy farmers of Wisconsin and to all the other people of Wisconsin, of having the distinguished junior Senator from Wisconsin serve on the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I join him in expressing the hope that whenever a vacancy occurs in the membership of that committee he will be considered for appointment to it; and I am sure he will be.

In the meantime, in the case of the committees to which the junior Senator from Wisconsin has now been appointed, he is immediately in a position to perform outstanding and most valuable service, as a Member of the Senate and as a member of those committees, for the people of his State. I congratulate him.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I wish to take this opportunity to state that I share most wholeheartedly the sentiments which have been expressed this afternoon by so many of the Members of the Senate about the distinguished junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE].

RECOMMENDATION OF APPOINTMENT OF SENATOR PROXMIRE TO DELEGATION TO VISIT THE GERMAN BUNDESTAG

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I should like to inform the distinguished junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE] that the majority leader has been requested by the German Government to suggest two Members of the United States Senate, from the majority party, to visit the German Bundestag sometime between October 1 and December 1, 1957.

I wish to inform the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin and, through him, the people of his State and the other Members of the Senate, that I shall recommend to the Vice President the appointment of the distinguished junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE] as one of the members of that delegation. I expect to recommend a senior Senator and a junior Senator; and I want the distinguished junior Senator from Wisconsin to know that he will be one of the delegation of four Senators, representing the United States Senate at that German meeting.

FOREIGN OIL IMPORTATIONS

Mr. YARBOROUGH. Mr. President, the increasing flood of foreign oil and the worsening economy of the oil-producing States due to this flood of foreign oil, has resulted in curtailed drilling, decreased oil runs, shut in oil wells, lower income, lower tax collections, increased unemployment in the oil-producing States, increased mortgage foreclosures, loss of properties through foreclosures, loss of sales of oil-well equipment, and a general business and economic recession in the oil-producing areas of the Southwest.

The United States Treasury is not receiving tax money on foreign oil production to replace revenues lost on reduced domestic oil production, because the American oil companies operating in Saudi Arabia are allergic to American income taxes and have devised means of dodging them. And the oil importers register their oil tankers, which bring this foreign oil to American shores, in foreign corporations that pay no income taxes. Those operating the bulk of these oil tankers that bring this foreign oil to this country are building up huge profits in the United States which are convertible into gold and on which no taxes are paid.

So it is easy to see why the President's plan for voluntary restriction of oil imports by voluntary action of the importing companies is not working satisfactorily. Several oil companies have announced that they would not abide by the administration's request for voluntary action.

The time for action has come. The big importing companies have turned their backs on the President of the United States and on our domestic economy. I request that the President of the United States protect the domestic economy of the United States by putting into effect compulsory controls on oil imports. Nothing else will work, simply because the big importers are too greedy to heed the plight of our domestic oil-producing States. Our domestic economy is imperiled by oil imports; the President's special six-man Cabinet Committee has already found that. Now is the time to stop that peril. Act now, Mr. President. Act for the American people.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. PURTELL. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. PURTELL. Am I correct in understanding that the Senate is engaged in the call of the calendar?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. PURTELL. Am I correct in understanding that there are only about six more bills on the calendar, which could be disposed of very quickly?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is approximately correct.

Mr. PURTELL. I thank the Chair.

EXCHANGE OF CERTAIN LAND IN THE STATE OF MISSOURI

The bill (H. R. 580) to authorize the exchange of certain land in the State of Missouri was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have a statement in explanation of H. R. 580 printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR ELLENDER

The State of Missouri owns approximately 5,500 acres of lands within the boundaries of the Clark and Mark Twain National Forests which were granted to the State by the United States pursuant to the provisions of the Morrill Act approved July 2, 1862. These lands, which are held for the benefit of the University of Missouri, are intermingled with national forest lands. The State desires to consolidate its holdings and the Department of Agriculture desires to consolidate the national forest lands. Such consolidations will make each group of lands more useful and easier to administer. Federal and State legislation is necessary to authorize the State to exchange the Morrill Act lands and this bill will constitute the Federal consent to such exchange.

PRINTING OF REPORT OF 38TH BIENNIAL MEETING OF THE CONVENTION OF INSTRUCTORS OF THE DEAF

The resolution (S. Res. 194) to print the report of the proceedings of the 38th biennial meeting of the Convention of the Instructors of the Deaf was considered, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the report of the proceedings of the 38th biennial meeting of the Convention of American Instructors of the Deaf, held at Knoxville, Tenn., June 23-28, 1957, be printed with illustrations, as a Senate document.

PROPOSED INVESTIGATION OF PRODUCTION, DISTRIBUTION, AND SALE OF NEWSPRINT IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, because this is probably the last day of the present session, I wish to make a statement on behalf of myself and the junior Senator from Washington.

I should like to take advantage of the opportunity on the call of the calendar to speak with respect to Calendar No. 131, Senate Concurrent Resolution 20, authorizing the Federal Trade Commission to make an investigation in relation to newsprint, the possibility of price-fixing in newsprint, and the possibility of violation of antitrust and monopoly laws.

Within the next few months there may again be a rise in the price of newsprint. Some months ago—and this is no coincidence—when one company raised its price for newsprint by $5 a ton, all the other producers did likewise.

We are dependent to a great extent for our supplies of newsprint—I think probably 82 percent of it—on foreign countries, mainly Canada. Our publishers have had a difficult time in being able to maintain publishing schedules and meeting costs and estimates. Every time they do, the newsprint producers, mainly those controlled in Canada, raise their prices.

The supply has been short. Fortunately in the last few months it has loosened up a little. The purpose of the resolution was to suggest to the Federal Trade Commission—as has been done by the committee on perhaps six other occasions, and on one of which occasions newsprint producers were indicted for violation of the antitrust laws, and on other occasions were severely reprimanded for price fixing—to look into the situation again. I do not suggest that such practices are now being followed in the United States.

I do suggest that the practices in Canada are such that, if they were carried on in the United States they would be in violation of our antitrust laws. I mean a civilian violation, not a criminal violation.

The only purpose of the resolution is to have the Federal Trade Commission undertake a continuing study of the possibility of such a situation being in existence. It is a very serious problem in relation to newsprint, which is one of the most valuable commodities in the whole Free World.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] on occasions has objected to consideration of such a resolution, on the ground that the Federal Trade Commission can do it anyway. That is true, but sometimes, in order to get the Commission to do things, Congress must give it a slight push. That is the only purpose. I understand the Senator from Louisiana still objects, but I wish to ask him so that the record may be clear, whether, even though he objects, on the ground that the Federal Trade Commission can do this job anyway, he is in sympathy with the purpose of the resolution.

Mr. ELLENDER. As the Senator has said, I have opposed this kind of resolution for the simple reason that the Commission has ample authority to do the jobs without the resolution. I express the hope that the Commission will take action and look into this important situation. There is no reason why the resolution should be adopted, because I consider it absolutely unnecessary.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I thank the Senator.

APPOINTMENT OF ADDITIONAL JUDGES FOR COURT OF APPEALS FOR CERTAIN COURTS IN THE SOUTHERN AND EASTERN DISTRICTS OF NEW YORK

The bill (S. 2864) to provide for the appointment of additional judges for the court of appeals of the second circuit and district courts for the southern and eastern districts of New York was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, an additional circuit judge for the second circuit. In order that the table contained in section 44 (a) of title 28 of the United States Code will reflect the change made by this section in the number of circuit judgeships for the second circuit, such table is amended to read as follows with respect to said circuit:

"Circuits: Number of judges

Second 7

* * * * *".

SEC. 2. The President shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one additional district judge for the southern district of New York and one additional district judge for the eastern district of New York. In order that the table contained in section 133 of title 28 will reflect the changes made by this section in the number of judgeships for the southern and eastern districts of New York, such table is amended to read as follows with respect to said districts:

New York:

* * * * *

Eastern 7

* * * * *".

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, I move that the Senate reconsider the vote by which S. 2864 was passed.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the junior Senator from New York.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the senior Senator from New York and I may be permitted to insert in the RECORD the pertinent portions of the hearings before the Judiciary Committee concerning the need for additional judges in the second circuit and in the southern and eastern districts of New York.

There being no objection, the statements were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE JUDICIAL BUSINESS OF THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SECOND CIRCUIT

As originally enacted, the Judicial Code of 1911 provided for 4 circuit judgeships for the second circuit (36 Stat. 1131). The number was raised to 5 by the act of February 28, 1929 (45 Stat. 1346) and to 6 by the act of May 31, 1938 (52 Stat. 584). The number of judgeships has remained the same since that time. The jurisdictional area of the circuit covers the States of Connecticut, New York, and Vermont which, according to the 1950 census, had a combined population of 17,215,219. Court is held in New York City.

From 1941 to 1950 there was a declining trend in the cases filed in this court. For the next 4 years the number stabilized in the vicinity of 350 cases a year, but during the fiscal year 1955 there was an increase of almost 60 percent over the previous fiscal year, resulting in an increase in pending cases from 154 on June 30, 1954, to 282 on the same date a year later. During the fiscal year 1956 there was some reduction in the number of cases commenced. The number of cases terminated continued to increase however and pending cases were reduced by 18. The figures were: cases commenced 462, cases terminated 480, and cases pending at the end of the fiscal year, 264. In the first half of the fiscal year 1957 covering the period from July 1 to December 31, 1956, the upward trend has been resumed with filings greater than those in the first half of the record fiscal year 1955.

The flow of cases in the first half of the fiscal years 1955, 1956, and 1957 in this court have been as follows:

	Pending at beginning of half-year period	Filed July 1, to Dec. 31	Terminated July 1, to Dec. 31	Pending at end of half-year period
July 1 to Dec. 31, 1954	154	275	142	287
July 1 to Dec. 31, 1956	264	281	183	362

In the first half of the fiscal year, which includes the summer vacation, it is natural for terminations to be less than cases filed, but a warning signal is given when the pending load continually mounts as it is doing in this circuit.

The figures for the past 16½ years are given in table I, attached.

Almost one-half of the cases commenced in the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit are appeals from the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, and the number of these filed annually averaged about 170 cases from 1950 to 1954, but increased to 270 in the fiscal year 1955, and was 251 in 1956. Appeals from the other district courts have also increased. The following table shows the source of appeals for the last 7 years:

Source of appeals and original proceedings commenced in the U. S. Court of Appeals for the 2d circuit during the fiscal years 1950 to 1956

Source of appeal	Fiscal year
	1950	1951	1952	1953	1954	1955	1956

All other boards and commissions	5	12	12	12	7	16	10
Original proceedings	1	9	14	7	10	14	8

From 1950 to 1956 total appeals have increased by 45 percent and appeals from the courts by 42 percent. During the first half of the fiscal year 1957 the trend is again up.

For the last 6 years the number of appeals commenced per judgeship in the second circuit has averaged 69 compared to the national average per judgeship in the same period of 50.

The caseload per judgeship for each circuit since 1941 is shown in table 2, attached. The number of cases filed per judgeship in 1954, 1955, 1956, and the first half of 1957 was as follows:

Cases commenced per judgeship

	Fiscal year
	1954	1955	1956	1st half of 1957
All circuits	51	54	53	27
District of Columbia	52	49	60	24
1st	35	51	42	18
2d	61	97	77	47
3d	36	44	39	20
4th	70	67	70	37
5th	73	75	73	37
6th	51	53	52	28
7th	50	48	49	24
8th	33	37	34	13
10th	42	48	48	23

In the fiscal year 1954, the second circuit caseload per judge of 61 was exceeded only by the fourth and fifth circuits and was 20 percent over the national average of 51. In the fiscal year 1955, the second circuit stood first with an average caseload per judge of 97, almost 80 percent above the national average of 54. Again, in 1956, the second circuit was first with 77 cases filed per judge compared with the national average of 53, and, once again, in the first half of the fiscal year 1957, it had the largest number of cases filed per judge, with a caseload 74 percent above the national average and 10 cases per judge more than in any other circuit.

The median from docketing to disposition for this circuit compared with the median for all circuits since 1942 is shown in table 3, attached.

In spite of the heavy load, including many cases of great importance, the circuit has kept up its excellent record of prompt disposition of appeals. With the recent death of Circuit Judge Jerome Frank, the court now has an added handicap until the vacancy is filled, particularly since Judge Frank was known for the speed and facility with which his able opinions were written.

The following table shows the caseload per judge in other circuits in the fiscal year preceding that in which Congress created additional judgeships. In all but one instance this followed a recommendation by the Judicial Conference of the United States.

Additional circuit judgeships created by Congress since 1939 with the caseload per judge of the circuit in which the judgeship was recommended during the year preceding the action by Congress

Circuit	Number of additional judgeships	Date of act	Caseload per judge of cases filed during preceding fiscal year
6th	1	May 24, 1940	60
8th	2	do	63
5th	1	Dec. 14, 1942	77
2d	1	Dec. 7, 1944	55
District of Columbia	3	Aug. 3, 1949	77
3d	1	do	42
7th	1	do	55
10th	1	do	54
5th	1	Feb. 10, 1954	80
9th	2	do	64

The 1955 caseload of 97 cases commenced per judge in the second circuit is larger than that of any other circuit where the creation of judgeships was recommended, and the 1956 caseload of 77 cases per judge is equal to that of the fifth and District of Columbia circuits, when additional judgeships were created for those circuits.

The Judicial Conference of the United States on March 24, 1955, in response to a request from the judicial council of the second circuit, recommended the creation of one additional circuit judgeship for this court.

At a meeting in January 1957 the circuit council of the circuit voted to recommend 2 additional circuit judges for this court instead of 1. The reason for this is the current increase in the business of the court, which seems to be in line with the long-term trend, the greatly augmented strain under which the court has been working during the last 2 years, and the growing number of trials and, thus, potential appeals in the district courts of the circuit.

The following table compares the cases per judge filed in the circuit in 1956 with the average for all circuits, and then on the basis of 7 judges for the second circuit court, the total for all circuits including the 2 judgeships recommended by the Judicial Conference (1 for the second circuit and 1 for the fourth) and finally on the basis of 8 judges for the second circuit court and for the national average the present number of judgeships plus 2 for the second circuit and 1 for the fourth.

	2d circuit—Number of—		All circuits—Number of—
	Judgeships	Cases	Judgeships	Cases
1956	6	77	68	53
1956: On the basis of the judgeships recommended by the Judicial Conference	7	66	70	51
1956: On the basis of the judgeships recommended by the Judicial Conference plus an additional judgeship for the 2d circuit	8	58	71	51

It will be observed that with 8 judges, based on the 1956 cases filed, the second circuit caseload per judge is well above the national average and, as will be seen from table 2, would be above the caseload in 7 of the other circuits.

The recommendation of the second circuit council for an eighth judge for this court will be considered by the Judicial Conference of the United States when it meets on March 14 and 15, 1957.

Respectfully submitted.

Chief, Division of Procedural Studies and Statistics, Administrative Office of the United States Courts.

THE JUDICIAL BUSINESS OF THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

There are six judgeships provided for the United States District Court for the eastern district of New York, which has headquarters at Brooklyn. The jurisdiction of the court embraces Staten Island and Long Island and, concurrent with the southern district, the waters within Bronx and New York counties. The Judicial Code of 1911 provided 2 judgeships for the district; a third judgeship was authorized as temporary in 1922; 2 more judgeships were provided in 1929, and in 1935 the temporary judgeship created in 1922 was made permanent and a sixth judgeship was added. There has been no increase in judgepower for the district in more than 20 years.

The civil business of the court has not increased materially since the prewar period as shown in table 1, attached, and in the postwar period the number of filings has been remarkably steady. A slight decrease in business during the war years was followed by a sharp rise in civil filings in 1945, 1946, and 1947 as the result of a large volume of price- and rent-control litigation. Since then the 1,383 civil cases filed in 1948 and the 1,384 filed in 1955 have been the years with the peak loads. In the fiscal year 1956 there were 1,185 civil cases commenced, compared with 1,272 in 1941, the last year before World War II.

During the war years, 1 and often 2 judges from this district sat regularly in the southern district of New York, but the docket conditions in Brooklyn have prevented this in recent years. Since 1945, the pending civil cases in the eastern district have increased rapidly. In 1947, the figure was 2,200, where it remained for about 3 years, and, in 1951, increased to 2,400. At the end of the fiscal year 1956 there were 2,588 civil cases pending in the district, including 1,801 private civil cases. The condition of the dockets appears from the following table, showing the number of cases pending on the trial calendars of the court in the last 10 years:

Cases pending on the civil and admiralty trial calendars, eastern district of New York

	Total	admiralty	Civil
			Non-jury	Jury
December 1946	303	240	6	57
June 1947	419	244	114	61
June 1948	712	309	152	251
June 1949	908	432	135	341
June 1950	1,053	503	254	296
June 1951	1,149	518	241	390

June 1953	1,299	454	319	526
June 1954	1,491	405	417	669
June 1955	1,607	366	453	738
June 1956	1,625	286	532	807
January 1957	1,476	254	544	678

A reduction in civil cases pending on the calendars in the first 7 months of the current fiscal year is the result of a successful calendar call which has cleared away some deadwood and has resulted in the settlement of other suits. However, a great deal remains to be done, if the arrearages are to be cleared away within a reasonable period.

For many years the median time intervals for the disposition of civil cases terminated after trial in the southern district were the longest in the country, but in 1956 the southern district was replaced by the eastern district as the court with the longest delays. Many factors including the practices of the bar enter into the delay of litigation, but the median time figures take into account these factors in all districts. The median interval of 41.0 months from filing to disposition of the 160 cases terminated after trial in the eastern district of New York in 1956 was 2⅔ times as long as the national median of 15.4 months and the median time interval of 38.6 months between issue and trial for these same cases in 1956 was 3¾ times as long as the national median of 10.3 months. Eleven years ago the majority of cases were being reached for trial in the eastern district in a little more than 6 months from the joinder of issue and were being disposed of within 15 months of the date of filing. Complete information on the time intervals for the intervening years from 1945 to 1956 is given in table 4, attached.

The accumulation of civil cases in this court at a time when the volume of litigation has not been increasing is unusual and has been caused in part by a significant change in the character of the litigation handled. In the first half of the 1940–50 decade the private civil caseload consisted mostly of admiralty litigation, which on the average is not time consuming, although the cases tend to remain on the dockets for a long time due to the unavailability of witnesses who are at sea. But around 1946 a decline in admiralty litigation set in, while other types of time consuming private litigation began to increase.

In 1947 the Federal Tort Claims Act began to produce litigation against the Government which is significant in any consideration of the workload of this court because of the many Government installations on Long Island including the Brooklyn Navy Yard. The amount of money in controversy in some of these cases is often not large, but where the Government contests the claims, considerable work is required on the part of the court.

A comparison of the number of certain types of cases filed immediately after the war with the number presently being handled is revealing. For example in 1945 there were 45 Employers' Liability Act cases filed in Brooklyn compared with 76 in 1956. Inasmuch as the Tort Claims Act did not exist in 1945, there were no such cases in that year, but there were 63 in 1956. Patent litigation has been and remains very heavy in the district. In 1956 there were 8 such cases commenced per judgeship compared with the national average of 3. The diversity caseload is below average, but the negligent-personal-injury suits under this jurisdiction in 1956 numbered 59 per judgeship compared with the national average of 50 per judge. These large caseloads contrast with the decline in private admiralty litigation from 312 cases filed in 1945 to 78 in 1956.

The effect on the work of the district of the increasing volume of these time-consuming types of cases is evident from the number now pending on the dockets. On June 30, 1956, there were 36 Federal Tort Claims Act cases pending per judge in the eastern district compared with the national average of 8; there were 16 patent suits pending per judge compared with the national average of 5; and finally there were 95 diversity negligent-personal-injury suits, other than those arising out of motor-vehicle accidents, pending per judge compared with a national average of 21. Other details concerning the types and the age of the pending cases may be found in table 7, attached.

The criminal caseload for the district has doubled in the last 5 years (see table 2), but is still somewhat below the average per judge nationally. Criminal cases receive priority and the dockets of the districts are reasonably current, although the number of cases pending at the end of the year has also been increasing for the last 5 fiscal years.

The recommendations of the Judicial Conference of the United States for additional judgeships are designed to provide sufficient judicial manpower to enable the courts to reach a condition where civil cases may be reached for trial within 6 months of filing. In order that this goal may be achieved in the eastern district of New York the conference has recommended that two additional judgeships be created for this district.

A recent drive by the court to clear the deadwood from the civil docket and try to settle some of the cases which have been pending for some time had brought about a reduction of 129 cases in the calendar between June 30, 1956, and January 31, 1957. However, there were still a very large number of cases on the dockets. Complete statistical tables showing the judicial business of the district for the last 16 fiscal years are attached.

Respectfully submitted.

[1] Price and rent control cases are separately listed from 1943 to 1953. In many of these years they constituted a large proportion of all civil cases commenced, although they required on the average a relatively small proportion of court time per case for disposition. They are included in the figure which they follow.

[1] The median time interval in months is computed for the civil cases in which a trial was held, which were terminated during the year, excluding land condemnation, habeas corpus, and forfeiture proceedings. No median interval is shown for the years 1945 through 1952 where less than 25 cases were terminated after trial. For the year 1953 and subsequent years, where there were less than 25 cases terminated after trial, a median is listed with an asterisk (*) on the basis of the number of cases terminated after trial for the last 2 years, provided there were 25 such cases for the 2 years.

THE JUDICIAL BUSINESS OF THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

The United States District Court for the Southern District of New York is the largest trial court in the Federal judicial system in number of judges and of big cases and it is located in the greatest commercial and industrial center in the world. Its 18 judges handle a very great percentage of all antitrust litigation and a large share of the patent, copyright and trademark cases as well as time-consuming criminal prosecutions of national and international importance. New York is the largest port in the Nation and in the last few years about 40 percent of the admiralty and maritime litigation in the Federal courts has been filed in the southern district. The business of the court has multiplied in the last half century and from time to time additional judgeships have been added. The 4 judges provided for the district by the judicial code of 1911 were raised to 6 in 1922, to 9 in 1929, to 11 in 1936, to 12 in 1938, to 16 in 1949, and finally to 18 in 1954. Court is held only in New York City.

The history of this court from the end of World War II to 1955 can be described only in terms of excessive caseloads, large numbers of protracted cases, a continual accumulation of arrearages, and mounting delay. The judicial assistance provided to meet the situation has been neither timely nor adequate to meet the ever-increasing business and until recently the trial dockets have been very congested. In 1941 and through the war years when there were 13 judgeships for the district (including 1 temporary position which expired in 1943), the pending civil cases fluctuated between 3,500 and 4,500, but by the end of 1945 increased to 5,800. Two years later the pending civil cases surged upward by 70 percent to 10,100, which prompted the Judicial Conference of the United States in 1947 to recommend 2 additional judgeships and to ask that the expired temporary position be reestablished. When the pending caseload increased another 800 cases in the ensuing 12 months, the Judicial Conference requested 4 additional judgeships for the district and these positions were provided in the omnibus judgeship bill passed in 1949.

Still the civil backlog piled up and delay increased. On June 30, 1950, the pending civil caseload reached 11,134 and it became clear that the extra judge-power provided was inadequate to overcome the enormous arrearages. The pending civil cases in this district alone were more than one-fifth of the number in all district courts. In September of that year the Judicial Conference of the United States recommended 5 more judgeships for the district, including 2 on a temporary basis. By the end of the fiscal year 1953 the arrearages had reached 11,768 civil cases including 9,385 private civil cases and in addition delays in criminal cases were being felt and the pending criminal caseload topped 1,000 for the first time in almost 10 years.

In 1954, 2 of the 5 judgeships recommended by the Judicial Conference were created. The Conference immediately renewed its request for the other three judges and supplemented this in 1956 by a recommendation for a fourth new judgeship. The purpose of these Conference recommendations is to provide sufficient judicial manpower to enable the courts to eliminate arrearages and reach a point where the average civil case can be reached for trial within 6 months of the date of filing.

Although there has been some improvement in the docket conditions in the southern district of New York recently, additional help is needed if the goal of the Conference is to be achieved within a reasonable time. The backlog of 8,205 civil cases on June 30, 1956, was more than twice the 4,087 civil cases pending on June 30, 1941. But 2 years ago the delays in the district were so bad that many cases being disposed of by trial had been pending on the dockets more than 4 years and had been awaiting trial more than 3 years. The median interval from filing to disposition of cases terminated after trial in 1955 was 45.9 months and the median from issue to trial was 34.8 months. And even with such delays the judges were often without cases to try due to recurring calendar breakdowns. At that time the court appointed a committee of judges to investigate what steps may be taken to improve the condition of the calendars. Drastic changes in the calendaring practices were devised and the court embarked upon a program designed to provide firmness and stability to these calendars. The calendars for the first time were put in the charge of the judges. A year ago last fall a call of the entire civil calendar consisting of 5,700 cases was completed with startling results. By the end of the court year the calendared cases were reduced to 1,800 and the number of cases pending on the dockets decreased from 10,334 to 8,205, a gain of more than 2,000 cases. A continuation of the same practices in the current court year has reduced the size of the calendar to 767 cases as of December 31, 1956, although the total number of civil cases on the dockets on the same date remained at a level of 8,500.

Principal efforts of the court until recently have been to dispose of cases on the calendars and this has greatly reduced the number of cases ready for trial. Now older cases on the dockets which have not yet been calendared have been called and counsel have been asked to report the status of these cases. This will bring some cases to the trial dockets and will also result in settlements and dismissals. The cases which are not calendared all constitute potential trials and if the litigants are to receive prompt attention, the court must exercise some measure of control over them, which is now being done.

The details of the new calendaring system are set forth in an article by Judge Irving Kaufman which appeared in the December 1956 issue of the Journal of the American Judicature Society. A copy of that article is attached to this statement.

The achievements of the court are encouraging. They have been made possible in part through the able assistance of three retired judges of the court and the services of visiting judges from other districts. This has proven to be a very desirable expedient, but it cannot be relied upon as a substitute for permanent judgeships. Retired judges cannot maintain an unslacked pace and visiting judges are often difficult to secure. The four judgeships recommended by the conference are needed and Judge Kaufman views the necessity for them as follows:

"I will not detail the need for additional judicial manpower. Suffice to say, part I has demonstrated that there are a sufficient number of hard-core triable cases well in excess of the number our present quota of judges can handle, and if our calendars are to be maintained in their present current status, the implementation of the Judicial Conference's recommendations for new judgeships is a necessary first step."

Notwithstanding the improved calendar situation the accumulated backlog of civil cases is enormous. As of June 30, 1956, the 8,205 pending civil cases amounted to 456 per judgeship or almost twice the national average of 236 civil cases pending per judgeship. With 8 percent of the judges in all the 86 districts having solely Federal jurisdiction, the backlog of private litigation in the district was 18 percent of the national total. As of June 30, 1956, 44 percent of all pending private admiralty cases, more than one-half of all Jones Act suits involving injury to seamen, one-third of all copyright cases, one-fourth of all Government civil antitrust suits, and about one-fifth of all private antitrust suits were on the dockets in the district. The Government civil antitrust suits were 15 in number and these actions together with the 4 criminal antitrust prosecutions pending on July 15, 1956, are listed in appendix A. The number of time-consuming private antitrust suits pending in the district at that time numbered 100. Further details concerning the age and composition of the pending civil cases are given in table 7.

The court in the southern district of New York serves New York City exclusive of Staten and Long Islands, and to a certain extent serves also the entire New York-northeastern New Jersey area which in 1950 had a population of almost 13 million. New York is the financial capital of the world and the Nation's largest port. Complicated commercial litigation and important criminal cases tend to gravitate to this region and in the last 3 years the southern district has had 22 trials which have required 20 or more actual trial days not including the time spent in the preparation of the case and the writing of opinions.

Long trials in this district which have attracted much public attention in recent years have included the important Smith Act case, U. S. v. Dennis et al., tried by Judge Medina which took 168 trial days; the Investment Bankers antitrust case, U. S. v. Morgan, which required 309 trial days, also tried by Judge Medina (he was occupied with the case for 3 years); U. S. v. Flynn, also a Communist case, tried by Judge Dimock for 154 trial days; Ferguson v. Ford, a multimillion-dollar suit against the Ford Motor Co. tried by Judge Noonan for 120 trial days and finally settled; and U. S. v. Imperial Chemical Industries, tried by Judge Ryan for 56 days.

The trial time in these cases is only a small part of the time they require of the judge and this is particularly true of the antitrust cases. The number of exhibits, depositions, and documents in this type of proceeding is almost unbelievable. For example in the Alcoa case, there were 15,000 pages of record; in the National Lead case, 1,400 exhibits and 5,000 pages of record; in Imperial Chemical Industries, 3,700 exhibits; and in the Investment Bankers case, 10,600 exhibits. Ferguson v. Ford contained 27,000 exhibits and 10,000 pages of record and the trial was never concluded. When the case was settled the plaintiff had not yet completed his direct case.

The Judicial Conference Committee on Procedure in Antitrust and Other Protracted Cases has recommended in its report adopted by the Conference in 1951 that cases of this type should be assigned to a judge from their inception and that the judge to whom such a case is assigned "should be relieved of all other duties from the commencement of the trial until his judgment is pronounced." This has frequently been impossible in this court. There were 5 cases tried in 1956 which required 20 days or more:

Civil cases: Universe Tankships, Inc. v. Bethlehem Steel, 43 trial days, contract action. Banking & Trading Corp. v. R. F. C., 20 trial days, contract action.

Criminal cases: U. S. v. Klein, 77 trial days, tax fraud. U. S. v. Kiame, 33 trial days, tax fraud. U. S. v. Allied Stevedoring Corp., 31 trial days, tax fraud.

Another long Smith Act case, U. S. v. Trachtenberg, tried by Judge Bicks, was commenced during the fiscal year and completed shortly after the close of the year, requiring 59 trial days.

The large backlog of potentially long and complicated cases as well as the number being filed is an important factor in the Judicial Conference recommendation for four additional judgeships. But help is needed also to handle the large caseloads of more or less routine litigation. Four judgeships would increase the judicial staff by 22 percent, but would not reduce the average caseload per judgeship in the district to a point below the national average. On the basis of the 5,033 civil cases filed in the court during the fiscal year 1956 the effect would have been to reduce the average incoming caseload in the district from 280 cases per judge to 229, which is 4 cases more than the average per judgeship nationally of 225 in 1956 and considerably in excess of the caseload of 196 civil cases per judge, if all the judgeships recommended by the Conference had existed. Again on the basis of the 1956 filings the 4 extra judges would have reduced the caseload of incoming private civil cases from 226 to 185 per judge, which is 50 cases more than the average that year of 135 private civil cases commenced per judgeship nationally and 68 cases more than the national average per judgeship on the basis of the 262 judgeships including 34 recommended by the Conference in the 86 districts having purely Federal jurisdiction.

In the first half of the fiscal year 1957 there has been a decided upsurge in civil filings to 2,775, or 500 civil cases more than the number filed during a like period of the preceding fiscal year. All of this increase has occurred in the time-consuming private civil cases. A comparison of the civil cases, private civil cases, and criminal cases commenced and terminated in the district in the first half of the fiscal years 1956 and 1957 (July 1–December 31) appears in the following table:

Cases commenced and terminated

TOTAL CIVIL CASES

Fiscal year	Commenced	Terminated	Pending at end of half-year period
6 months of 1956	2,284	3,379	9,239
6 months of 1957	2,775	2,475	8,505

PRIVATE CIVIL CASES

6 months of 1957	426	511	435

The criminal caseload in the district is not heavy numerically and the dockets are reasonably current because of the priority to which they are entitled and receive. However, criminal cases are a factor to be considered in the workload of the district because of the many protracted trials, which in past years have included celebrated Smith Act and sedition trials, tax-evasion cases, and criminal antitrust suits.

Complete statistical tables showing the judicial business of the district in the last 16 fiscal years are attached.

Respectfully submitted.

Attorney, Division of Procedural Studies and Statistics, Administrative Office of the United States Courts.

CREATION OF NEW JUDICIAL DISTRICT IN CALIFORNIA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2840) to create a new and separate judicial district in California and to create a new division for the northern district of said State which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, with an amendment on page 2, line 15, after the word "Park" to insert the words "Mariposa, except Yosemite National Park," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 84 (a) of title 28 of the United States Code is hereby amended as follows:

(1) By amending the first sentence thereof so as to read: "The northern district comprises three divisions."

(2) By amending the second subparagraph thereof to read as follows:

"(2) The southern division comprises the counties of Marin, Monterey, San Benito, San Francisco, San Mateo, Santa Clara, and Santa Cruz. Court for the southern division shall be held at San Francisco."

(3) By adding at the end thereof a new subparagraph as follows:

"(3) The eastern division comprises the counties of Alameda and Contra Costa. Court for the eastern division shall be held at the county seat of Alameda County."

SEC. 2. That section 84 of title 28 of the United States Code is amended by striking out subsection (b) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"CENTRAL DISTRICT

"(b) The central district comprises two divisions.

"(1) The northern division comprises the counties of Fresno, Inyo, Kern, Kings, Madera, except Yosemite National Park, Mariposa, except Yosemite National Park, Merced, and Tulare.

"Court for the northern division shall be held at Fresno.

"(2) The southern division comprises the counties of Los Angeles, Orange, Riverside, San Bernardino, San Luis Obispo, Santa Barbara, and Ventura.

"Court for the southern division shall be held at Los Angeles.

"SOUTHERN DISTRICT

"(c) The southern district comprises the counties of Imperial and San Diego.

"Court for the southern district shall be held at San Diego."

SEC. 3. Section 133 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by striking out

"California:
"Northern........................ 7
"Southern........................ 11"

and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"California:
"Northern........................ 7
"Central........................ 9
"Southern........................ 2"

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, I move that the Senate reconsider the vote by which S. 2840 was passed.

Mr. KUCHEL. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the junior Senator from California.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

COMMEMORATION OF THE 100TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE ADMISSION OF THE STATE OF OREGON INTO THE UNION

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 131) authorizing the President to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to commemorate with appropriate ceremonies the 100th anniversary of the admission of the State of Oregon into the Union was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is authorized and requested to issue, on or before February 14, 1959 (the 100th anniversary of the date on which the State of Oregon was admitted into the Union), a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to commemorate with appropriate ceremonies the 100th anniversary of the admission of Oregon into the Union.

REMOVAL OF LIMITATON ON USE OF CERTAIN PROPERTY CONVEYED TO THE CITY OF AUSTIN, TEX., BY THE UNITED STATES

The bill (H. R. 7964) to remove the limitation on the use of certain real property heretofore conveyed to the city of Austin, Tex., by the United States was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas subsequently said: I move to reconsider the vote by which House bill 7964, Order of Business No. 1195, was passed.

Mr. McNAMARA. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the call of the calendar.

ROMA H. SELLERS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1714) for the relief of Roma H. Sellers, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$25,000" and insert "$12,500", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Roma H. Sellers, of Preston, Miss., the sum of $12,500. The payment of such sum shall be in full satisfaction of all her claims against the United States for compensation for permanent personal injuries and pain and suffering sustained by her, and for reimbursement of hospital, medical, and other expenses incurred by her, as a result of the improper administering of an anesthetic in the course of an operation performed on her January 7, 1955, by United States Air Force doctors at the Nazareth Hospital, Mineral Wells, Texas: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this Act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STATEHOOD FOR ALASKA

The bill (S. 49) to provide for the admission of Alaska into the Union was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CLARK. With deep regret, I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, before the session closes, I should like to say that the Senator from Washington is fully cognizant that there are many practical, legislative, and other reasons why the bill must go over. I know the Senator from Pennsylvania is not opposed to the bill. I hope, however, that statehood for Hawaii and for Alaska will be one of the first orders of business when Congress reconvenes in January. All of us have been vitally interested in this matter. I think all the hearings have been held that are necessary. All the facts are in. It has been discussed pro and con by the committees, Members of the Senate, and Members of the House. I think it is time the Congress faced up to a decision on the matter. I appreciate the reasons given now for passing the bill over, but I hope that next January the leadership on both sides of the aisle, the two political parties having pledged themselves solemnly at many conventions that they are for statehood for Hawaii and Alaska, will face up to a decision on this issue by a yea-and-nay vote in the United States Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being heard, the bill will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 50) to provide for the admission of the State of Hawaii into the Union, was announced as next in order.

Mr. TALMADGE. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being heard, the bill will be passed over.

That completes the call of the calendar.

THE PRESIDENT'S BUDGET

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, when Congress met in January, the President requested the highest peacetime budget in history. For the current fiscal year he asked for $73,300,000,000 in appropriations—including other new expenditure authorizations—and estimated expenditures at $71,800,000,000.

From the grassroots, the people let their dissatisfaction be known in no uncertain terms. As Congress adjourns, the President's original appropriation budget, exclusive of the postal deficit, according to calculations by the staff of the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures, has been cut $6,500,000,000 to a total of $66,800,000,000.

I ask unanimous consent that the table be inserted in the Record as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

[Rounded to billions of dollars]

Category	President's January budget	Reductions	Enacted to date
National security:
Military functions	38.5	3.1	35.4
Stockpiling and defense production	.1	.1	--------
Atomic energy	2.5	.2	2.3
Subtotal	41.1	3.4	37.7
Foreign aid and international affairs:
Mutual security:
Military assistance	2.4	1.1	1.3
Economic assistance	2.0	.6	1.4
Subtotal, MSA	4.4	1.6	2.8
Other	.5	.1	.4
Subtotal	4.9	1.7	3.2
Domestic-civilian	27.3	1.4	25.9
Total	73.3	6.5	66.8

Mr. BYRD. In my March analysis of the President's budget, I concluded appropriations could and should be reduced by at least $6.5 billion, and expenditures by $5 billion to $7 billion. While the figures above will have to be adjusted because Congress failed to increase postal rates, I am pleased at the proximity of the appropriation reductions, and I believe determined executive control over spending agency activities can result in substantial expenditure reduction.

The President must exercise his authority to hold down expenditures, because reduction in current new appropriations does not affect the availability of balances carried over from prior years. These unexpended balances now total $70 billion. This carryover combined with new appropriations makes approximately $137 billion available in expenditure authorization for Federal agencies.

With expenditures authorized in such an amount, the debt ceiling is the most effective expenditure curb remaining with Congress in the current situation. The terrible Federal debt is now bumping the $275 billion statutory ceiling. To prevent deficit financing, along with other reasons, as chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, I shall oppose any increase in the debt limit short of dire national emergency after the President has exhausted all practicable means of spending control.

The President would be keeping faith with demand by the American public if he would require reduction in expenditures this year equal to the reduction in new spending authority, or more. The people have demonstrated their ability to translate their will into Federal action, and they can render themselves and their country good and patriotic service if, at this time, they will:

First. Communicate with the President and the Bureau of the Budget, demanding (a) further reductions in expenditures in the current fiscal year, and (b) reduction in new appropriations and expenditures in the budget, now in preparation, for delivery to Congress by the President in January; and Second. Demand of their representatives in Congress continuing support of reductions in both expenditures and new appropriations.

The reaction in Washington to public demand last spring for budget reduction was unprecedented, especially in view of the President's opposition in many areas. The Appropriations Committees of Congress, in particular, are to be commended for their constructive work.

The committees achieved even greater reductions in appropriations under their jurisdiction than show in overall figures. Committee cuts were partially offset by increases in authority to spend out of the debt, which bypass appropriation control. The President asked for $1.3 billion in this kind of expenditure authority, and the Congress enacted $2.3 billion. Practically all of this increase was in Federal housing programs, the Federal National Mortgage Association in particular.

I hope the President will avoid a postal deficit and control expenditures in a manner to require the minimum of supplemental appropriations and get the budget to a level where we can begin to consider reduction in debt and taxes.

The people of this Nation are carrying a terrible burden of both debt and taxes. They deserve reduction in both. This requires expenditure reduction first. Appropriations have been cut. Expenditure reduction, under existing fiscal procedures, lies largely with the President.

FACILITATION OF CONDUCT OF FISHING OPERATIONS IN ALASKA

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, on August 20, the Senate passed, and sent to the House of Representatives, a bill relating to the fishery operations in Alaska. That bill was Senate bill 2349.

Two days later—on August 22—the House of Representatives passed an identical measure, House bill 9280; and that bill has been sent to the Senate.

Of course, the House of Representatives usually passes a companion Senate bill, in case it has previously been passed by the Senate. I do not know why that procedure was not followed in this case.

Mr. President, it is most important that this House bill be acted on at this time, in view of the fact that the fishing season is now under way. I am told that the committee action on this measure was unanimous. It may be that an oversight occurred somewhere along the line.

At any rate, House bill 9280 has now been sent to the Senate. Since the Congress is about to adjourn, and inasmuch as the fishing season is under way, and inasmuch as the two bills are identical, I ask that the Chair lay House bill 9280 before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 9280) to facilitate the conduct of fishing operations in the Territory of Alaska, to promote the conservation of fishery resources thereof, and for other purposes, which was read twice by its title.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I ask that the bill be passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill (H. R. 9280) was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF REORGANIZATION ACT OF 1949—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1791) to further amend the Reorganization Act of 1949, as amended, so that such act will apply to reorganization plans transmitted to the Congress at any time before June 1, 1959. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read, for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the report.

(For conference report, see House proceedings of today.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate agree to the report.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I have a brief statement which I should like to have printed in the RECORD, in order to explain the provisions of the conference report. I ask unanimous consent that the statement be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR HUMPHREY

The House of Representatives amended the bill to eliminate a present provision in the Reorganization Act requiring that, before a reorganization plan submitted to the Congress can be disapproved, a resolution of disapproval must be adopted "by the affirmative vote of a majority of the authorized membership of that House." The effect of the amendment is to require that a reorganization plan submitted by the President will take effect within 60 days after its submission, unless, before the expiration of such time, a resolution of disapproval has been passed by a simple majority of those present and voting in either the House or the Senate.

This amendment accords with the position taken by the Committee on Government Operations and by the Senate when the act was originally approved in 1949. At that time all exemptions of agencies from application of the act contained in prior reorganization acts were removed. It was the position of the Senate, in removing these exemptions and granting far wider powers to the President in submitting reorganization plans than previous acts had authorized, that a simple resolution of disapproval by either the House or the Senate would be sufficient to reject or disapprove any reorganization plans submitted by the President. This view was reiterated by the Committee on Government Operations when it reported the pending bill on May 29, 1957 (S. Rept. No. 386).

The provision repealed by the House amendment was originally inserted in the Reorganization Act of 1949 at the insistence of the House conferees, after the Senate conferees had unanimously supported retention of a provision for rejection of a plan by a simple majority vote of either House. The House amendment therefore conforms to the position taken by the Senate when the act was originally approved. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

LEGISLATIVE WORK OF THE SENATE COMMITTEE ON LABOR AND PUBLIC WELFARE, 1ST SESSION, 85TH CONGRESS

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, as the 1st session of this 85th Congress draws to its close, it may be useful to review briefly some of the legislative work undertaken this year by the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman, the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, so that Senators will be informed of the progress being made on several important measures which are likely to come before this body for consideration next year.

During this first session, our committee's members have devoted themselves primarily to essential preparatory research, hearings, and discussions on four major public questions embodied in bills pending before it:

First, how shall the integrity of billions of dollars' worth of employee welfare and pension plans be protected?

Second, should veterans of peacetime military service receive GI benefits, or readjustment assistance; and, if so, of what kind?

Third, should minimum-wage protection be extended to additional millions of employees not now covered under the Fair Labor Standards Act?

Fourth, how can retirement pensions and unemployment insurance for railway workers be improved without overburdening either the employees or the carriers; and, even more important, how can the long-term actuarial stability of the railroad retirement fund be maintained?

Three standing subcommittees and one special subcommittee of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare have conducted lengthy public hearings and held numerous executive discussions on the many problems raised by these major questions. The printed record of the hearings on these four topics will be available during the recess for all who may be interested in examining and evaluating it.

In addition to the many hours and days which have been devoted to studying these four major legislative questions, the committee has also taken action on a number of other measures, including several strongly recommended by the administration, which did not require such extensive deliberation, but which will, when enacted into law, be of great benefit to various groups of our people. Of those reported by the committee and approved by the Senate, I shall enumerate only a few:

We have initiated a new program of research and training of teachers for the million and one-half unfortunate children in this country who are mentally retarded or emotionally disturbed, and who, we believe, can be measurably helped to live more useful and happier lives. This legislation was highly recommended by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare.

We have approved a bill to establish a library of films bearing captions like those of the old-fashioned silent movies. This library will be available to institutions, schools, or associations for deaf persons, for whom the advent of the sound film has meant a great loss in ability to understand and learn from moving pictures.

We reported a bill which, by restricting the application of the wage-hour law in foreign overseas bases, will relieve our Government of a potential liability for claims estimated at one-half a billion dollars. Approval of this measure was strongly urged by the Department of Defense. The bill also will result in raising the minimum wage in the American overseas areas of Guam and the Canal Zone to the $1-an-hour minimum required since 1956 for other American workers by the Fair Labor Standards Act.

The committee reported a resolution, strongly recommended by the Department of Labor, which requires the Secretary of Labor to make available to the public and the press the financial reports of labor unions, which now are merely filed with him under the Taft-Hartley Act.

We approved one additional year's extension of the Federal program to provide financial assistance for school construction in areas of the country suffering a heavy impact from Federal activities, such as defense installations and the like.

The committee has also reported a bill extending the provisions of the Vocational Rehabilitation Act under which private rehabilitation agencies may use for another year previously granted Federal funds, to help carry on their humanitarian work.

Of course, Mr. President, many other minor bills and numerous nominations were reported to the Senate. Among the important nominations ordered reported to the Senate, for confirmation, were those of James T. O'Connell, to be Under Secretary of Labor; Leroy E. Burney, to be Surgeon General; Lawrence G. Derthick, to be Commissioner of Education; Howard W. Habermeyer, to be a member of the Railroad Retirement Board; Joseph A. Jenkins, to be a member of the National Labor Relations Board; Jerome D. Fenton, to be General Counsel of the National Labor Relations Board; Katherine Brownell Oettinger, to be Chief of the Children's Bureau; Dr. Alan T. Waterman, to be Director of the National Science Foundation; Robert O. Boyd, to be a member of the National Mediation Board; James Gilhooley, to be Assistant Secretary of Labor; and 10 eminent persons, to be members of the Board of Regents of the new National Library of Medicine.

Mr. President, the members of the committee take great satisfaction from the fact that the Senate in its wisdom has given its approval to every bill, every resolution, and every nomination reported this session from the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare. The Calendar of the Senate, so far as this committee is concerned, has been cleared.

I wish to compliment all the members of the committee, both Republican and Democratic, for the earnest and faithful service they have performed in this session; and especially do I thank them for the splendid cooperation and unfailing courtesy they have shown me, as their chairman. The ranking majority member and distinguished former chairman of the committee, the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], has been, as always, a stanch friend of the people in whose behalf our committee seeks to legislate, and has been of unflagging assistance to his successor as chairman of the committee. The ranking minority member of the committee, the distinguished Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] has been, as always, a delightful and cooperative associate in our common efforts to guide the committee's business.

It should be pointed out, Mr. President, that four members of the Senate Labor Committee this year have been called upon to serve on another specially created committee dealing with matters affecting the labor movement; I refer to the Select Committee To Investigate Improper Activities in Labor-Management Relations, generally known as the McClellan Committee. These four were Senators KENNEDY, MCNAMARA, IVES, and GOLDWATER. They have carried on their work in that investigation, in addition to the responsibilities they have borne in our committee.

I wish also to pay tribute to the chairman and members of the subcommittees of our committee for the care, diligence, and thoughtful attention they have given the major legislative proposals which were referred to their respective units for appropriate consideration and action.

I should like to mention particularly the work of the four subcommittees which carried the greatest burden this year:

A special seven-man Subcommittee on Welfare and Pension Plans Legislation was established this year, under the able chairmanship of Senator JOHN KENNEDY, to consider proposals designed to protect the millions of working people for whose benefit many billions of dollars have been, and are being, invested in pension and welfare programs. After extensive hearings and careful executive consideration, the special subcommittee on Monday of this week ordered reported to the full committee a bill requiring registration, reporting, and disclosure of these plans. Further consideration awaits the reconvening of Congress in January. Meanwhile, Senators will be able to study the record and reflect on the provisions of this highly important proposal relating to a vast and growing problem. Besides the chairman, the subcommittee is composed of Senators MURRAY, MCNAMARA, MORSE, IVES, PURTELL, and ALLOTT. They are to be congratulated on their accomplishment.

Our Subcommittee on Veterans' Affairs, under the chairmanship of the distinguished Senator from South Carolina, STROM THURMOND, has made a profound study of the problems arising from the fact that, for the first time in American history, our young men are subject to compulsory military service in peacetime. While the subcommittee has carefully assembled almost all the information it will need to enable it to decide what type of readjustment assistance, if any, should be granted peacetime veterans, it has wisely determined to withhold further action until January, so that the Members can appraise the effects of the recent reduction in both our Armed Forces and in the call-ups under the draft. With this later information before it, the subcommittee will be in a position to act forthwith in this important area. Besides the chairman, the subcommittee members are Senators KENNEDY, GOLDWATER, COOPER, and myself.

The Subcommittee on Labor, also under Senator KENNEDY's chairmanship, has completed an exhaustive series of hearings on proposals to extend coverage of the Fair Labor Standards Act to millions of additional employees, and has reported a bill to the full committee. This subcommittee, in addition to its chairman, is composed of Senators NEELY, MCNAMARA, MORSE, IVES, GOLDWATER, and PURTELL. The full committee has discussed the minimum-wage bill during several executive meetings, and essential groundwork has been laid for decisions in this controversial matter next year.

The Subcommittee on Railroad Retirement, under the capable leadership of its chairman, Senator WAYNE MORSE, has compiled an excellent record of hearings on a number of proposals to improve the laws governing pensions and unemployment insurance for railway labor. This record, which will be before the committee next January, will be of great value in clarifying the issues so as to permit early resolution of several complex problems and to assure the financial soundness of the railroad retirement fund. Besides the chairman, the subcommittee is composed of Senators KENNEDY, THURMOND, COOPER, and ALLOTT.

It goes without saying, Mr. President, that the achievements of a Congress are not to be measured until adjournment sine die at the end of its second session. What can be measured at the end of the first session is the progress being made.

A committee which has before it major controversial legislation is following good legislative procedure when it devotes the bulk of its attention during the first session to searching out and assembling all pertinent facts about the problems involved, holding public hearings to obtain the views of all interested parties, and examining in detail the various issues raised and the alternatives posed. Once this essential preparatory work has been done, the committee can then proceed, in the second session, to bring to the Senate floor bills which are the product of mature deliberation and which are grounded on careful, thorough, and, at times, exhaustive study and analysis.

During the first session of the present Congress, the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare has made substantial and noteworthy progress toward the resolution of many difficult problems on which there is deep division of opinion, and on the proper solution of which may depend the security and well-being of many millions of our citizens. When the vital preparatory work has been done in the manner in which subcommittees of our committee have done it this session, the Senate can be assured that important proposed legislation reported to it by the committee at the next session will be sound, reasonable, and workable—proposed legislation which will, I believe, contribute still further to the progress of our Nation.

CONVEYANCE OF CERTAIN LANDS TO CITY OF WARNER ROBINS, GA.—REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, from the Committee on Armed Services, I wish to report favorably without amendment H. R. 7972, and I submit a report (No. 1165) thereon, a small land bill which authorizes the Secretary of the Air Force to convey to the city of Warner Robins, Ga., title to two parcels of land aggregating 5.78 acres with any improvements.

This land has an estimated valuation of approximately $35,000, and the bill provides that the city of Warner Robins will pay the fair market value of the property.

The bill does no violence to the Morse formula, and is in complete accord therewith.

The Department of the Air Force has stated that it has no further use for this property, and the Department of Defense and the Bureau of the Budget have indicated to the committee that they have no objection.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 7972) to provide for the conveyance to the city of Warner Robins, Ga., of certain lands and any improvements located thereon in such city.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DELAY OF DATES FOR SUBMISSION OF PLAN FOR CONTROL OF PROPERTY OF MENOMINEE TRIBE

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the message from the House of Representatives on H. R. 6322, a bill to amend the Menominee Termination Act of 1954.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives, announcing its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6322) to provide that the dates for submission of plan for future control of property and transfer of the property of the Menominee Tribe shall be delayed, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment to H. R. 6322, agree to the conference asked by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Oregon.

The motion was agreed to; and the Chair appointed Mr. NEUBERGER, Mr. CHURCH, and Mr. WATKINS conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, in connection with the action just taken by the Senate in appointing conferees on H. R. 6322, I should like to make a short statement.

On August 28, the House disagreed to the Senate amendments to this bill and requested a conference. Yesterday morning my staff informed the House Members that we would name our conferees early on August 29 and be willing to meet that afternoon at any convenient hour. Shortly thereafter, I was advised that, even though the Senate conferees were named, there would be no meeting to work out our differences on this legislation. I want the RECORD to be very clear that the Senate conferees were ready to meet, and that a definite hour was set, but that the House Members did not desire to confer with us. Therefore, the responsibility for failing to have the bill enacted must lie with our colleagues in the other body. I make this statement for the benefit of the sponsor of the bill and the Menominee Indians of Wisconsin.

Mr. President, in conclusion, I should like to present for printing in the RECORD a very justifiable and a very fair letter, dated today, which I have just received from the distinguished junior Senator from Wisconsin, who has only recently been sworn in as a Member of this body and assigned to this committee, and ask unanimous consent that the letter of the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE] to me be printed in the body of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
August 30, 1957.

Hon. RICHARD L. NEUBERGER,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Indian Affairs, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR NEUBERGER: Within the past few days the Senate has passed and sent back to the House, with amendments, H. R. 6322, a bill to amend the Menominee Termination Act of 1954.

As passed by the Senate, this bill provides that the tribe shall have 1 additional year within which to submit its plan for the future operation of tribal assets, and extends the final termination date to December 31, 1960. The bill further provides that the tribe shall assume one-half of the total costs of preparing for termination.

The House Interior Committee in passing H. R. 6322 recommended an extension to 1959 for the submission of the tribal plan, and that the final termination date be set at June 30, 1961. No reference was made in the House bill with respect to the Indians paying any of the costs of termination.

The House has disagreed to the Senate amendments and requested a conference on the Menominee bill. I would like to take this opportunity to urge that the Senate conferees reconsider the Senate's language with respect to payment by the tribe of half of the termination cost, and the language extending the terminal date to December 31, 1960. The 84th Congress enacted legislation which relieved the tribe of the burden of paying any of the costs of termination. To change that arrangement at this time seems to me to be a clear breach of faith with the Menominee Tribe. The various groups within the State of Wisconsin who have been aiding the Indians in making studies, investigations, and reports with respect to future management of the tribe have suggested that it will be necessary for the State legislature to consider legislation to permit the continued sustained yield operation of the tribal forced lands under favorable economic conditions. This action cannot be taken in less than 4 years, and therefore an extension of the final termination date to June 1961 is mandatory.

The Menominee termination program will mean a drastic transition for these people. The very least that we in the Congress can do, I think, is to afford them sufficient time to make proper plans to permit this transition with the least possible difficulty.

With kindest regards.

Sincerely yours,

WILLIAM PROXMIRE,
United States Senator.

AUTOMOBILE WORKERS' PROPOSAL TO REDUCE PRICE OF NEW CARS

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, some days ago the president of the United Automobile Workers, AFL–CIO, Mr. Walter Reuther, addressed a very able proposal to the presidents of the major automobile companies, in which he urged that they decrease the prices of their new cars by $100 on the coming models, and that in return the United Automobile Workers would be willing to consider the modification of the wage demands they would otherwise make upon those companies. I regret very much the heads of the automobile companies rather summarily dismissed the suggestion of Mr. Reuther, which I think was deserving of careful consideration.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that the telegram which Mr. Reuther addressed to the President of the United States on August 27, 1957, on this matter, be printed in the body of the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

It will be noticed that Mr. Reuther suggested that the Government institute a study and bring that study to an early conclusion by getting the facts on the proposal, to enable both the companies and the public to judge more fully about the merits of the idea.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Honorable DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER,
President of the United States, The White House, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I was encouraged to learn from your press conference of August 21, 1957, that you had assigned to your economic advisers for study, my request that you intervene on behalf of the American people in an attempt to persuade the three major automobile producers to consider favorably the UAW offer to join in a cooperative effort to dampen the fires of inflation.

Dr. Gabriel Hauge of your staff has written me that you regard the sentiments expressed in my letter "as a hopeful augury that a sense of civic responsibility will prevail in the future negotiations between labor and management."

Moreover, Dr. Hauge emphasized your hope "that all parties will enter into and conduct their collective-bargaining negotiations with a keen awareness that the public as well as the parties have an interest in the agreement they reach."

However, over the past few days, as you know, the three firms have arbitrarily rejected our offer. We in the UAW were deeply disturbed by their summary refusal to agree to this economically sound and socially responsible proposal which was made in complete good faith. We are certain that millions of Americans who have been pressed to the wall by constantly rising prices, share with us our disappointment at this rejection.

Despite the rejection by the corporations of our reasonable proposal for a $100 price reduction on 1958 models, we in the UAW are determined to continue our efforts to reverse the inflationary trend. We shall continue to seek ways by which labor and management can voluntarily join together in the discharge of their responsibilities to all of the American people.

Meanwhile, however, we should like to call to your attention the fact that the time for effective action for contributing to the reversal of the inflationary trend in the automotive industry is fast running out.

We are rapidly approaching the time when the automobile manufacturers are expected to announce higher prices on their new models, thus adding another significant upward spin to the inflationary spiral.

It would therefore be highly desirable to expedite the promised study of the UAW proposal. This study could be greatly facilitated and brought to an early conclusion by obtaining the facts from the parties directly concerned in the proposal; namely, our union and the major automobile corporations.

We are convinced that a meeting, called in the very near future by your economic advisers with the heads of these automobile companies and representatives of our union, would provide the basic information on which our proposal should be evaluated and would further show clearly that it is a socially responsible and practical way for free labor and management to exercise the economic statesmanship you have advocated.

While the auto companies have rejected our offer to join in a common fight against inflation, they would be compelled to give very serious consideration to any such recommendation you might make, particularly when that recommendation was made on the basis of a thorough and impartial examination of all the facts by your economic counselors.

You may, of course, count on the full and unqualified support and cooperation of the UAW in obtaining, whether through the means suggested above or by any other means, all of the data required by those to whom you have entrusted the study of this matter.

On behalf of the American consumers, we urge your prompt and sympathetic consideration.

Sincerely yours,

WALTER P. REUTHER,
President, International Union, UAW.

SENATOR NEUBERGER'S FIGHT FOR CIVIL RIGHTS

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, the Oregon papers of yesterday, August 29, 1957, carried the following alleged quotation from our respected Senate colleague, the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], to the following effect:

> DICK NEUBERGER was one of the Democratic liberals sucked in on the civil-rights bill hoax and sham. * * * Dixiecrat Senators are laughing up their sleeves at the strategy they have engineered.

I feel quite confident that this is a misquotation by the press of whatever the Senator from Oregon may have said on his way to his daughter's wedding. I assert this confidently because I know that the statement as printed is incorrect and, from my long acquaintance with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], I know that he would never knowingly make an untrue statement. I have always found the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] to be extremely careful of the truth and most generous in his appreciation of his colleagues.

In these days of instantaneous communication, an incorrectly reported interview can, however, go around the world before the truth has time to put on its boots. In the event that some people may have been taken in by this obviously garbled statement, I should like to set the record straight.

No man in the country is more sincerely devoted to civil rights than the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. NEUBERGER]. He has fought for this cause as a private citizen, then as a member of the Oregon Legislature, and finally, ever since he came to the Senate in 1955, he has been a tower of strength for us in this battle.

He joined with our nonpartisan group in seeing that if H. R. 6127—the civil-rights bill—were referred to the Senate Judiciary Committee, as some desired, it would almost inevitably have been buried there, as a similar bill had been buried last year and as an identical bill had been buried there for 6 months this year. A filibuster inside the committee which would almost certainly have been carried on, would have smothered the bill.

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. NEUBERGER] was a leading member of our nonpartisan coalition which, without regard to party or political fortune, finally forced the civil-rights bill onto the floor of the Senate so that we could act, and made it the order of business. This was done over the opposition of the southern group of Senators. I do not question the right of those Senators to oppose—or their sincerity. The junior Senator from Oregon fought with all his strength to retain part III in the bill and to prevent the voting rights section from being crippled. On every rollcall his vote was in direct opposition to that of the southern bloc.

In view of this record it becomes apparent that the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] was indeed misquoted. Since this is the final day of the session and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] is unavoidably detained in Oregon, I think it is important that a correct statement be made here.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I wish to associate myself fully with every word the Senator from Illinois has stated. I have listened attentively. I, too, was very disturbed when I read the alleged comment concerning our distinguished friend and colleague, the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. NEUBERGER].

I wish to add that I do not consider under any circumstances the civil-rights bill which was adopted is a sham or a hoax. It did not go nearly so far as the Senator from Minnesota would have liked, but in the legislative process we understand that we do not always have our way, and that in a representative body sometimes—and most frequently—compromise is one of the attributes or one of the facts of legislation.

To speak specifically about the junior Senator from Oregon, he has unquestioned integrity in whatever he does. His dedication to the cause of civil liberties and civil rights is excelled by no one. His efforts in trying to obtain an effective civil rights measure are known by the Members of the Senate, by the press, and I believe by the public. The junior Senator from Oregon has conducted himself in the debate on civil rights in a manner which pays tribute to himself and to his State.

I want to say, since this matter has been brought to our attention, that it has been a joy and a pleasure to work with the junior Senator from Oregon. He, as is true of the Senator from Illinois—and I include both in this statement—has been a tower of courage and strength in a very difficult period of our legislative history. The people who are deeply concerned about the fulfillment of the promises and commitments of the Constitution, particularly as they relate to the right to vote, owe a great deal to the junior Senator from Oregon and a great deal to the senior Senator from Illinois. I am happy to have been associated with them in what I believe was a very historic and important development in the Congress of the United States.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I thank the Senator from Minnesota. I, too, regard the bill in its final form as a step forward, although a modest one. I am very glad that the Senator from Minnesota, who has been one of the leaders in this battle for well over a decade, who has played such an important part in this victory, recognizes, as we all do, the sterling contribution of the junior Senator from Oregon.

I personally am confident that the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] never made the statement which is alleged.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I join in that expression.

SGT. DONALD D. COLEMAN

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the message from the House of Representatives amending S. 1007, a bill for the relief of Sgt. Donald D. Coleman.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1007) for the relief of Sgt. Donald D. Coleman, which was, on page 1, line 7, strike out "$15,000" and insert "$8,000."

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to.

DELFINA CINCO DE LOPEZ

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the message from the House of Representatives amending S. 1636, a bill for the relief of Delfina Cinco de Lopez.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1636) for the relief of Delfina Cinco de Lopez, which was, in line 3, after "of" insert "subsection (a) of section 201 and."

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, on August 20, 1957, the Senate passed S. 1636, to enable a native and citizen of Mexico to qualify for a nonquota visa as a native of an independent country of the Western Hemisphere, notwithstanding the fact that he is indigenous to a country within the Asia-Pacific triangle. On August 29, 1957, the House of Representatives passed S. 1636, with an amendment which is technical in nature and does not change the intent of the bill.

I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment to S. 1636.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SYMINGTON in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Montana.

The motion was agreed to.

HIGHWAY TREE BELTS

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, a fine suggestion has been advanced by a Member of the other House, from Minnesota, to which I should like to call the attention of the Senate.

Representative JOHN BLATNIK, of Minnesota, an outstanding legislator from Minnesota's northlands and famous Iron Range area, has suggested a gigantic reforestation program involving the planting of a belt of trees alongside the hundreds of thousands of miles of new highways and roads being built under the Federal Aid to Highways Act of 1956. I am sure the suggestion will appeal to everyone interested in natural scenic beauty. Representative BLATNIK is a member of the House Subcommittee on Public Roads, and he has been developing details for this plan with officials of the United States Forest Service and the Bureau of Public Roads.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a news release from Representative BLATNIK describing this project.

There being no objection, the news release was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

> Congressman JOHN A. BLATNIK, Democrat-Farm-Labor, of Minnesota, urged today that the Nation embark on a "gigantic reforestation program by planting a belt of trees alongside the hundreds of thousands of miles of new highways and roads being built under the Federal Aid Highway Act of 1956."

After a preliminary meeting with officials of the United States Forest Service and Bureau of Public Roads, BLATNIK said he will ask these agencies "to formulate a highway tree-planting program to foster highway beautification, conservation, and youth opportunity." The Minnesota legislator, a member of the House Subcommittee on Public Roads, said that he would prepare a bill for introduction next session and call for hearings on this proposal some time next year.

After his meeting with Federal officials, BLATNIK said that "although there are many complex details yet to be worked out, I think we are on the right track. My proposal calls for a greatly expanded tree-planting program along the Nation's highways. This would increase the scenic value of the actual road structure, act as a windbreak and snow fence, thereby cutting down greatly on maintenance costs, since snow removal is a high cost factor in highway maintenance, contribute to soil conservation, add substantial acreage of new reforested areas and give wholesome part-time employment in the outdoors to hundreds of thousands of young people."

BLATNIK said he could foresee no problem in reforesting land along Federal, State, county, and other such public lands adjacent to highways. "Furthermore, existing Federal laws could be amended to permit planting on private land such as pasture land and marginal farm lands," he added.

"Under this highway tree-planting program," BLATNIK said, "I think we could add at least 100,000 square miles of reforested acreage to the Nation's forestry acreage. That's an area equal to all of Minnesota and the northern one-third of Iowa combined. This could be the largest tree-planting program ever undertaken."

BLATNIK pointed out that in addition to the scenic, economic, and conservation benefits of his proposal, "it would be an excellent means to provide an opportunity for young men to work during summer vacations in the good healthy outdoors. Overhead costs would be low, since these young men could work near their home communities and not need to live in camps as in the old CCC days. They could earn while they learn about conservation and outdoor living which is becoming more and more prevalent as leisure time increases in the United States. Instead of hanging around street corners, our young men will be able to get out during the day in a healthy and productive atmosphere, making a real contribution to the betterment of their community. It will give their vacation period purpose and direction, something that is too often lacking today and which is a direct cause of juvenile delinquency. It will also provide many jobs for otherwise unemployed high-school and college boys on summer vacation."

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, since this announcement by Congressman BLATNIK, one of my Minnesota constituents, Ed Roster, of Northfield, has written adding to the suggestion.

Mr. Roster suggests the possibility of mobilizing Boy Scout tree nurseries on pieces of public land around the country to provide seedlings for such a gigantic reforestation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD some excerpts from Mr. Roster's letter.

There being no objection, the excerpts were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Forepart of July I was at Many Point Lake, Ponsford. My grandson was in scout camp. I went to the campsite in densely wooded area and noticed a giant hard maple. Under and around it, perhaps 80 to 100 feet diameter, hundreds of little maples were growing from seed this spring. Perhaps 1 in 100 of these seedling will have a chance to grow up in the location where they sprouted because of the crowded tree population. Perhaps this same situation may be found in hundreds of other locations.

It occurred to me that if a tree nursing and planting activity could be set up as a scout activity that this sort of a program would be of immense benefit to the generations to follow and it would be making good use of some of the generous gifts of mother nature. And, some of today's Scouts will contribute to industry and recreation for their grand and great grandchildren in that they have nursed along and reared types of trees that are more useful as well as more ornamental than the boxelder, willow, poplar, and the useless brush that flourishes along with weeds on many hundreds of acres throughout the south and west portions of our State.

There are corners and slices along highways, abandoned roads, and railroad right-of-ways, and a lot of river bottom. Perhaps much of this, as well as a lot of privately owned land might be given gratis to an organization like the Scouts.

Then, too, if an activity of this sort were properly directed it would make room for 10 times as many boys to get into Scout activities and maybe there would not be so many young hoodlums and youthful gangsters.

And, the youngsters having learned some of the fundamentals, may upon attaining maturity, want to engage in tree farming as their life work. Undoubtedly, the time will come when pulpwood trees will have to be planted to maintain an adequate supply for the ever-increasing need.

Perhaps the Fedral Government would go along on this, too, with something along the line of the conservation camps that were set up back in F. D. R. times. The Scouts with their organization could easily carry on and encourage a nationwide exchange both on ideas as well as varieties that are adaptable to other areas.

THE FUTURE OF DISARMAMENT

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, another phase in the 12-year attempt to achieve a disarmament agreement appears to be moving rapidly to an unsuccessful conclusion. In the early weeks of the London meeting of the United Nations Disarmament Subcommittee, we held cautious hope that it would produce the agreement by which some beginning toward the control and reduction of armaments would be made. More recently, however, the actions of the Soviet Union in the Disarmament Subcommittee, as well as in other areas of foreign policy, have greatly reduced even this guarded optimism.

It seems clear that for the time being the Soviets have no intention of using the disarmament talks for anything but propaganda. They have immediately and bluntly rejected the entire, carefully formulated, working paper submitted by the Western nations. Any sincerity of purpose would have dictated the most careful study of this document. If the Soviets had any real desire to attain disarmament they would have scrutinized every word, as we do the Soviet proposals, to find any new area of agreement, any slight change of position.

The United States has made concessions in its proposals in an effort to reach an agreement. We have extended our proposal of a 10-month suspension of nuclear weapons tests from a period of 10 months to a period of 2 years, which was the minimum demand of the Soviet Union. The Soviet Union, however, has refused to make similar necessary concessions which would move both parties closer to a common middle ground.

On the matter of aerial inspection, where we insist some kind of beginning be made, even if it is only a small beginning, the Soviets have offered only the obviously unacceptable proposal of inspection of all the United States west of the Mississippi in return for inspection of Soviet territory comprised mainly of Siberia and other relatively unimportant territory. They have continued to call for an immediate unconditional cessation of nuclear weapons tests without giving any consideration to the measures suggested by the West which, coupled with a test suspension, could make a significant beginning toward the control of nuclear weapons.

It is not only the words of Mr. Zorin, the Soviet delegate in the London meetings, which give rise to the belief that Soviet intransigence once again threatens to increase international tension and hinder any progress toward arms control. Equal proof is offered in the boastful Soviet statement on the successful testing of an intercontinental ballistic missile. The tests were made several weeks ago. Announcement of the tests, however, was deferred until this week when, it was believed, the best propaganda mileage could be obtained.

Mr. President, all of us who have studied the disarmament problem carefully have kept in mind the additional complications which would arise once an accurate intercontinental ballistic missile was in production. We have hoped that the disarmament negotiations could move fast enough to be able successfully to control the development of these missiles before enough could be manufactured and hidden for an eventual surprise attack.

Mr. President, I digress to point out that in the hearings in Boston, Mass., about a year ago, scientists from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology warned the Government of the United States that if the Soviet Union got the advantage over us in the development of the intercontinental ballistic missile and was able to produce any number of them, and had time to hide them and to build launching platforms underground, which could be camouflaged, and therefore would not be subject to detection, our country would be in mortal peril.

Any Senator who will look into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for purposes of study will find that the Subcommittee on Disarmament has repeatedly warned the executive branch of this Government, the Congress, and the American people that the race in the field of missiles could well spell the difference between successful disarmament negotiations or none at all.

I think it is quite interesting to note that the Soviet Union became more intransigent than ever during the past few weeks, when the development of the missile, as now revealed, was an evident fact.

The Western proposals have called for the establishment of an international committee to study an inspection system which would make it possible to insure that all objects entering outer space would be used exclusively for peaceful purposes. It appears that Soviet development of missiles is not yet so far advanced that such a system could not be effectively established. However, instead of agreeing to this preliminary step, the Soviets have tried to scare the peoples of the world with boasts about their intercontinental missile.

Apparently the opportunities for constructive achievement in London are rapidly dwindling. Unless sincere negotiation is resumed, the time has come to transfer the case to a larger forum, the United Nations. There the United States should reoffer its proposals and reemphasize the reasoning behind them. We should expose the Soviet position, their refusal to make a beginning on inspection, and their oversimplification of the question of controlling nuclear weapons tests. There we can mobilize world opinion which is already strongly in favor of making a beginning toward the control of armaments. We could make another attempt to convince the Soviet Union of the folly of resuming the cold war and of the mutual advantages of ending the arms race in a safeguarded manner.

Even though the London talks may end in failure to obtain even a small first-step agreement on disarmament, we cannot afford to resign ourselves simply to a renewed arms race at the level of intercontinental missiles and antimissile missiles. Our present apparent failure may seem more discouraging than hitherto, because we recently came nearer to agreement than in any of the previous 12 years of negotiating. We must remember that under the best of conditions the establishment of an arms control system will require many years.

Moreover, Mr. President, we should not forget that there have been several advances made at London which represent distinct steps forward. For example, we have reached agreement with our allies on both the general approach to and on specific proposals for disarmament. We can now move with a greater strength of unity in this field than we have previously enjoyed. I hope we will use that strength to convince the Soviet Union that the entire world will have real security only when there are safe controls over all weapons of terror, including the new weapons of which they are boasting.

Mr. President, in concluding my remarks, I would like to ask unanimous consent for the inclusion at this point in the RECORD of the following material: The text of the Western disarmament proposals made public yesterday as printed in the New York Times this morning; an editorial entitled "Cold War: New Chapter," which appeared in this morning's Washington Post; an article by Stewart Alsop in the same paper entitled "Reds Zoom Ahead in Missile Race"; and an article in the same paper by Chalmers M. Roberts entitled "Reaction to Soviet Arms Stand."

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times of August 30, 1957]

TEXTS OF THE WEST'S DISARMAMENT PROPOSALS AND A STATEMENT ISSUED BY UNITED STATES

(WASHINGTON, August 29.—Following are the texts of the United States-British-French-Canadian disarmament proposals, under the title "Working Paper—Proposals for Partial Measures of Disarmament," and of a statement by the United States Government expressing hope that the Soviet Union will accept the plan, as made public here today.)

WORKING PAPER

I. The limitation and reduction of armed forces and armaments

A. Within 1 year from the entry into force of the convention, the following states will restrict or reduce their armed forces respectively to the maximum limits indicated below: France, 750,000; United Kingdom, 750,000; Soviet Union, 2½ million; United States 2½ million.

The definition of the armed forces will be annexed to the convention.

B. During this same period, these states will place in storage depots, within their own territories, and under the supervision of an international control organization, specific quantities of designated types of armaments to be agreed upon and set forth in lists annexed to the convention.

C. The relation of other states to the convention, including the agreed levels of their armed forces, will be determined later.

D. The states listed in paragraph I–A will be prepared to negotiate on a further limitation of their armed forces and armaments upon condition that:

1. Compliance with the provisions of the convention has been verified to their satisfaction.
2. There has been progress toward the solution of political issues.
3. Other essential states have become parties to the convention and have accepted levels for their armed forces and armaments, fixed in relation to the limits set out in paragraphs A and B above.

E. Upon the conditions cited above, negotiations could be undertaken by France, the Soviet Union, the United Kingdom, and the United States on a further limitation of their armed forces, which would involve agreed reductions for the United States and the Soviet Union to not less than 2,100,000 men each. The levels of other essential states would be specified at the same time through negotiations with them.

F. Thereafter, and subject to the same conditions, negotiations could be undertaken on further limitations to not less than 1,700,000 men each for the United States and the Soviet Union. The levels of other essential states would be specified at the same time through negotiations with them.

G. Upon the conditions cited in paragraph D above, these states will also be prepared to negotiate on further limitations of armaments. The calculation of any such armament limitations will be in agreed relation to the armed forces determined in paragraphs E and F, above, and will be completed prior to the application of the further limitations in armed forces. The parties must be satisfied before such further limitations of armaments are undertaken and at all times thereafter that the armaments at the disposal of any party to the convention do not exceed the quantities thus allowed in each category.

H. No measures for the reduction and limitation of armed forces and armaments beyond those provided for in paragraphs A and B, above, will be put into effect until the system of control is appropriately expanded and is able to verify such measures.

II. Military expenditures

In order to assist in verifying compliance with the provisions of paragraph I, and looking forward to the reductions of military expenditures, France, the Soviet Union, the United Kingdom, and the United States agree to make available to the international control organization information about their military budgets and expenditures for the year preceding entry of the convention into force and for each year thereafter. The categories of information to be supplied will be agreed in advance and annexed to the convention.

III. Nuclear weapons

Each party assumes an obligation not to use nuclear weapons if an armed attack has not placed the party in a situation of individual or collective self-defense.

IV. The control of fissionable material

A. The parties to the convention further undertake:

1. That all future production of fissionable materials will be used at home or abroad, under international supervision, exclusively for nonweapons purposes, including stockpiling, beginning 1 month after the international board of control described in paragraph VIII has certified that the installation of an effective inspection system to verify the commitment has been completed.
2. That they will cooperate in the prompt installation and in the maintenance of such an inspection system.
3. That for the purpose of accomplishing the above undertakings, the five governments represented on the [United Nations Disarmament] subcommittee will appoint a group of technical experts to meet as soon as possible to design the required inspection system, and to submit a progress report for their approval within the first 10 months after the entry into force of the convention.

B. The parties which are producers of fissionable material for weapons purposes at the time of cessation of production for weapons purposes undertake to provide, under international supervision, for equitable transfers, in successive increments, of fissionable material for previous production to nonweapons purposes, at home or abroad, including stockpiling; and, in this connection:

1. To fix the specific rates of quantities of fissionable materials of comparable analysis to be transferred by each of them, and
2. To commence such transfers at agreed dates and in agreed quantities at the fixed ratios following the cutoff date for production of fissionable materials for weapons purposes.

C. From the date of the cessation of production of fissionable material for weapons purposes provided in paragraph IV, A–1:

1. Each party undertakes not to transfer out of its control any nuclear weapons, or to accept transfer to it of such weapons, except where, under arrangements between transferor and transferee, their use will be in conformity with paragraph III.
2. Each party undertakes not otherwise to transfer out of its control any fissionable material or to accept transfer to it of such material, except for nonweapons purposes.

V. Nuclear weapons testing

A. All parties to the convention undertake to refrain from conducting nuclear test explosions for a period of 12 months from the date of entry into force of the convention, provided that agreement has been reached on the installation and maintenance of the necessary controls, including inspection posts with scientific instruments, located within the territories of the Soviet Union, the United Kingdom, the United States, the area of the Pacific Ocean, and at such other places as may be necessary, with the consent of the governments concerned.

B. A group of technical experts appointed by the five governments represented on the subcommittee will meet as soon as possible to design the inspection system to verify the suspension of testing.

C. Upon termination of the 12 months period, the parties will be free to conduct tests unless they have agreed to continue the suspension for a further period under effective international inspection.

D. If the inspection system referred to in paragraph V, A is operating to the satisfaction of each party concerned and if progress satisfactory to each party concerned is being achieved in the preparation of an inspection system for the cessation of the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes agreed to under paragraph IV, A-1 above, all parties to the convention undertake to refrain from conducting nuclear test explosions for a further period of 12 months. Such an extension will be made only with the understanding that testing may, at the discretion of each party, be conducted 24 months after the entry into force of the convention if the inspection system for the cessation of production for weapons purposes has not been installed to the satisfaction of each party concerned before the end of the 24 months and if the cessation of production for weapons purposes has not been put into effect.

E. If tests are resumed, each party undertakes to announce and register in advance the dates of each series and the range of total energy to be released therein; to provide for limited observation of them; and to limit the amount of radioactive material to be released into the atmosphere.

VI. The control of objects entering outer space

All parties to the convention agree that within 3 months after the entry into effect of the convention they will cooperate in the establishment of a technical committee to study the design of an inspection system which would make it possible to assure that the sending of objects through outer space will be exclusively for peaceful and scientific purposes.

VII. Safeguards against the possibility of surprise attack

A. From the entry into force of the convention the parties concerned will cooperate in the establishment and maintenance of systems of inspection to safeguard against the possibility of surprise attack.

B. The establishment of such systems will be subject to agreement on the details of its installation, maintenance and operation. It is proposed as a matter of urgency that a working group of experts appointed by the five governments represented on the subcommittee be set up at once to examine the technical problems and to report their conclusions, which could form the basis for an annex to the agreement.

C. With regard to inspection in the Western Hemisphere and in the Soviet Union, the Governments of Canada, France, the United Kingdom and the United States propose the following:

1. That all the territory of the continental United States, all Alaska including the Aleutian Islands, all the territory of Canada and all the territory of the Soviet Union will be open to inspection.

2. If the Government of the Soviet Union rejects this broad proposal, to which is related the proposal for inspection in Europe, referred to in paragraph D below, the Governments of Canada, France, the United Kingdom and the United States (with the consent of the Governments of Denmark and Norway) propose that:

All the territory north of the Arctic Circle of the Soviet Union, Canada, the United States (Alaska), Denmark (Greenland) and Norway; all the territory of Canada, the United States and the Soviet Union west of 140 degrees west longitude, east of 160 degrees east longitude and north of 50 degrees north latitude; all the remainder of Alaska; all the remainder of the Kamchatka Peninsula, and all of the Aleutian and Kurile Islands will be open to inspection.

D. With regard to inspection in Europe, provided there is commitment on the part of the Soviet Union to one of the two foregoing proposals, the Governments of Canada, France, the United Kingdom and the United States, with the concurrence in principle of their European allies and in continuing consultation with them, subject to the indispensable consent of the countries concerned and to any mutually agreed exceptions, propose that an area including all of Europe, bounded in the south by latitude 40 degrees north and in the west by 10 degrees west longitude and in the east by 60 degrees east longitude will be open to inspection.

E. If the Government of the Soviet Union rejects this broad proposal, then, under the same proviso expressed above, a more limited zone of inspection in Europe could be discussed but only on the understanding that this would include a significant part of the territory of the Soviet Union, as well as the other countries of Eastern Europe.

F. The system of inspection to guard against surprise attack will include in all cases aerial inspection, with ground observation posts at principal ports, railway junctions, main highways and important airfields, etc., as agreed. There would also, as agreed, be mobile ground teams with specifically defined authority.

G. Ground posts may be established by agreement at points in the territories of the states concerned without being restricted to the limits of the zone described in paragraphs C 1 and 2, but the areas open to ground inspection will not be less than the areas of aerial inspection. The mobility of ground inspection would be specifically defined in the agreement with, in all cases, the concurrence of the countries directly concerned. There would also be all necessary means of communication.

H. Within 3 months of the entry into force of the convention, the parties will provide to the board of control inventories of their fixed military installations, and numbers and locations of their military forces and designated armaments, including the means of delivering nuclear weapons armaments, including the means of delivering nuclear weapons located within an agreed inspection zone or zones, and within such additional area or areas as may be agreed.

I. Any initial system of inspection designed to safeguard against the possibility of surprise attack may be extended by agreement of all concerned to the end that ultimately the system will deal with the danger of surprise attack from anywhere.

VIII. The International Control Organization

A. All the obligations contained in the convention will be conditional upon the continued operation of an effective international control and inspection system to verify compliance with its terms by all parties.

B. All the control and inspection services described in the convention and those which may be created in the course of its implementation will be within the framework of an international control organization established under the aegis of the Security Council, which will include, as its executive organ, a board of control in which the affirmative vote of the representatives of the governments represented on the subcommittee and of such other parties as may be agreed will be required for important decisions.

C. All parties to the convention undertake to make available information freely and currently to the board of control to assist it in verifying compliance with the obligations of the convention and in categories which will be set forth in an annex to it.

D. The functions of the international control organization will be expanded by agreement between the parties concerned as the measures provided for in the convention are progressively applied.

E. Other matters relating to the organization will be defined in annexes to the convention. These matters will include the duties which the organization is to carry out, the method by which it shall function, its composition, its relationship to the General Assembly and the Security Council of the United Nations, its voting procedures, its working conditions, jurisdiction, immunities and prerogatives.

IX. Movement of armaments

In addition to other rights and responsibilities, the board of control will have authority to study a system for regulating the export and import of designated armaments.

X. Suspension of the convention

A. Each party will have the right to suspend its obligations, partially or completely, by written notice to the international control organization, in the event of an important violation by another party, or other action by any state which so prejudices the security of the notifying party as to require partial or complete suspension.

B. At its option a party may give advance notice of intention to suspend its obligations, in order to afford opportunity for correction of the violations or prejudicial action.

XI

This working paper is offered for negotiation on the understanding that its provisions are inseparable. Failure to fulfill any of the provisions of the convention would create a situation calling for examination at the request of any party.

UNITED STATES STATEMENT

The proposal which Canada, France, the United Kingdom and the United States laid before the London Disarmament Subcommittee today is a practical, workable plan for a start on world disarmament.

While it was formally advanced by these four nations as members of the subcommittee, it bears also the approval of Italy, Belgium, Luxembourg, Iceland, The Netherlands, West Germany, Norway, Denmark, Greece, and Turkey.

In addition, continuous consultation was carried out with numerous other nations in order that their views might be incorporated in the proposals to the maximum possible extent. And special consideration was given to the proposals submitted by other governments to the United Nations and sent to the subcommittee by the General Assembly.

The proposal now awaits the acceptance of the Soviet Union.

With ratification of the agreement, followed by honest observance, this plan would:

1. Stop all nuclear bomb testing.
2. Bring a halt in production of nuclear bomb materials.
3. Start a reduction in nuclear bomb stockpiles.
4. Reduce the dangers of surprise attack through warning systems.
5. Start reductions in armed forces and armaments.

The Western Allies themselves have accomplished a major task in forging the plan. It involves major concessions by every one of them.

The Western Allies earnestly hope the Soviet Union will give full consideration to this far-reaching proposal. Soviet acceptance will enable a start to be made toward removing the terrible dangers of nuclear war that hang over the whole world.

Cold War: New Chapter

Plainly the Soviet Union has decided upon a speedup of the cold war, and the most sinister aspect is in the attempt to isolate the United States from its Free World friends and allies. The timing of the announcement of the Russian intercontinental missile (which the United States Government had known about for perhaps 2 months), the virtual turndown almost immediately afterward of the Western plan on disarmament, the Russian machinations in Syria, the stiffened attitude against concessions in the satellites—all of these factors point to the same conclusion.

It is a plausible inference that Mr. Khrushchev has been experiencing so much trouble in consolidating his power at home that he must make a show of strength abroad. The harder Soviet line thus can be a combination of diversion from internal difficulties and appeasement of the more rigid factions, notably the army, that hold a mortgage on Mr. Khrushchev. Perhaps the change also stems from a psychological compulsion to assert Soviet equality or superiority. Many visitors to Moscow report that the Russians suffer from an almost morbid fear that they may be considered weak or backward. The Soviet muscle-flexing with the ICBM may in part be a sort of offset to the occasional unfortunate braggadocio by American military men about how Russia could be pulverized by weapons from this country or overseas bases.

The Western position at the arms-control talks in London probably had little or nothing to do with this change. The Soviet delegate, Mr. Zorin, has accused the West and particularly the United States of trying to make propaganda out of the talks—which is precisely what the Soviet Union has been doing. Seemingly the Russians have concluded that there is almost no chance of agreement at London even on suspension of nuclear weapons tests, and hence they are not even listening to Western proposals. Modifications in these proposals have come late, but they have gone a long way toward meeting Soviet objections. The Russians, however, evidently expect at least a temporary breakdown. They may, indeed, have intended their ICBM announcement to improve their bargaining position at future meetings.

None of this is an indication that Russia is bent on war. On the contrary, Mr. Khrushchev and Marshal Zhukov appear to have comprehended the awful possibility of mutual nuclear annihilation. What they seem to have decided is that for the moment there would be no gain in accommodation with the West. They have set out vigorously to take advantage of Western weaknesses and to pursue their objectives through intimidation, indirect aggression, and other means short of all-out war.

This sort of wedge driving always holds a danger for the West, and no doubt Russia hopes that her possession of the ICBM will sap the confidence of other countries in alliances with the United States. On this point there is some ground for satisfaction in the progress of missile defense and the availability of intermediate-range missiles. As Marquis Childs relates today, the United States has learned of not 1 but 6 Soviet long-range missile tests. Whether or not this information should have been made public earlier, the fact that it was obtained is significant. It testifies to the prowess of American intelligence, and it may well indicate further that the United States has perfected long-range radar that can detect the reentry of ballistic missiles into the earth's atmosphere. This, in company with the work on the antimissile missile, is very hopeful.

What must be avoided in the new stage of the cold war is any tendency toward isolationism in the American response. It is, of course, essential to produce an American intercontinental missile as soon as possible as part of the overall military deterrent. But the ICBM is essentially an isolationist weapon, and it ought not to be emphasized to the detriment of other missiles and rounded military capability. One immediate counter to the Soviet ICBM, for example, is the ability to fire intermediate-range missiles from the overseas bases which Russia condemns so loudly. There are two lessons here. One is that this country's alliances have become more, not less important. The other is that the confusion over service prerogatives in intermediate-range missile development and production ought to be ended forthwith.

The new Soviet cold war tactic will succeed only if we and our allies fail to move together. What is imperative is recognition that the Soviet Union is employing a combination of military, political, and economic techniques all over the world to achieve its ends. The West requires no less an integration of its own strategy, and wise use of economic and political power is just as necessary an element as additions to military power.

Reds Zoom Ahead in Missile Race

(By Stewart Alsop)

Is the Soviet model of an intercontinental ballistic missile truly operational? That is, is it a weapon capable of being used in war, rather than a mere prototype? And, if it is operational, is it sufficiently advanced for the Soviets to freeze on the model, as is their invariable custom when they are satisfied with a weapon, and proceed to mass-produce it?

Behind the bland mask of complacency which the Eisenhower administration has assumed for public purposes, these are the key questions which the Government's intelligence experts and policymakers are anxiously asking. They are quite genuinely life-and-death questions. They cannot be answered with assurance. Yet they tell a lot about the real meaning of the latest Soviet ICBM test.

For the first thing to understand about the Soviet test is that it was not something new or unexpected.

The American Government has been aware of Soviet progress throughout, though the administration has chosen to conceal it from the American people. The details of how the Government has known are of course properly secret. But certain obvious facts are public property—that radar is a line-of-sight instrument of theoretically unlimited range; and that ballistic missiles reach an altitude of hundreds of miles at the highest point in their trajectory, and are thus subject to radar detection at great range.

The Soviets' first prototype test of their ICBM was roughly comparable to the Air Force test of the American Atlas ICBM in April, with the difference that the Atlas test failed while the Soviet test succeeded. As this reporter pointed out in reporting the Soviet test: "There is a long, difficult road to travel between the first test firing of a prototype missile and the achievement of an operational weapons system."

How far have the Soviets now traveled along that road? Part of the answer, at least, is suggested by a comparison between the Soviet claims for their ICBM model and the known characteristics of Atlas, which is at the present stage in no sense a weapon for use in war, but a research test vehicle.

The Soviets claim their model is a "multistage ballistic rocket," whereas the Atlas model unsuccessfully fired last spring consisted only of the huge initial-stage rocket. The Soviet model is "intercontinental," and the "results obtained show that it is possible to direct rockets to any part of the world." The Atlas model fired last spring was designed to fly only about 3,000 miles. Finally, "the rocket landed in the target area," whereas the Atlas test prototype was not expected or designed to achieve any degree of accuracy.

The Soviet claims for their model are certainly vague, and designedly so. But in the past, Soviet claims have tended actually to understate Soviet achievements in the air-atomic field. Some experts, noting this fact, believe on the basis of the Soviet claims and other evidence, that the Soviets already have an operational weapon ready for mass production.

Others believe, or hope, that more tests must be made, and more time must elapse, before the Soviets can go into quantity production.

"I had thought they were about a year ahead of us," one expert has remarked, "but now it looks more like 2 years." Despite the official complacency, it is well to understand what it could mean if this estimate is correct. For suppose the Soviets achieve a fully operational ICBM system 2 years before this country achieves a comparable system.

They will then be able to threaten, not only American cities, but the system of Strategic Air Force bases, whose location is well known, with instant destruction. They could thus threaten to weaken decisively, or even eliminate entirely, the American retaliatory power which is the only real shield of the Free World. No one can predict whether in such circumstances the Soviets might actually launch a surprise attack. But it is not hard to predict that the Soviets would take every advantage of the obvious opportunity to blackmail the United States into accepting a super-Munich.

In these circumstances, it is simply incomprehensible that the Eisenhower administration has chosen to tell the American people not to worry, and that everything is going to be all right.

Policy Puzzle—Reaction to Soviet Arms Stand

(By Chalmers M. Roberts)

Official Washington's attitude toward the Kremlin's new turn to a tough line is one of puzzlement. The reaction is to batten the hatches. The local crystal balls are far too fuzzy to predict the outcome.

The simple and generally acknowledged fact is that, for whatever reasons, the Soviet Union has decided to break off what looked like serious negotiations on the limitation of armaments. On top of this the Soviets are indulging in muscle flexing—the claim of the first successful intercontinental ballistic missile test and the use of jet airlines to fly their delegates here for the United Nations meeting next month. The high degree of Soviet involvement in Syria fits the general tough pattern in foreign relations.

How far it will go is just as much a puzzle as why the switch was made. Some American officials are awaiting the Soviet reply to an American offer to sit down in October to discuss exchanges of students, among other matters. If the Soviets cut off the exchanges, things may really get rough, these officials figure.

And yet, try as they will, American officials can figure out no reason for any change in the basic calculation which they believe dominates Soviet policy: That the risk of all-out nuclear war is too dangerous to take and therefore the East-West political temperature must be kept reasonably low.

Some speculate that perhaps the Kremlin sees so much unilateral disarmament in the United States, under budget ceiling pressures, that it reasons it need not sacrifice anything.

But the most plausible thesis heard within the Government runs like this: When Nikita Khruschchev purged his Kremlin rivals at the end of June it was inevitable that he would adopt a stand-still policy, meaning no agreement with the West, no change in any satellite. This meant a breaking off of the London arms talks which is now taking place. The muscle flexing is an added item to show that Khrushchev can be just as tough with the West as any of his purged opponents, but without their risk of war.

The heart of this thesis is that Khrushchev is faced with a mass of domestic problems, some of them impinging on foreign policy. He is granting the demands of Marshal Georgi Zhukov and the military, whose support in the purge was vital if not decisive, that there be no military retreat in the satellites or no arms agreement which would weaken the Soviets in relation to the United States—a sort of Soviet version of the Radford-Strauss line in Washington.

Khrushchev's visits to Czechoslovakia and East Germany trumpeted the line of no changes in the satellites. We know now with reasonable certainty that Zhukov himself opposed Gomulkaism in Poland and long ago urged a show trial of the Poznan rioters, only to be overruled. Presumably, Zhukov recalled this at the time he sent the Red Army into Hungary—and perhaps at the time he struck a bargain with Khrushchev, if so he did, at the time of the Kremlin purge.

Probably, too, the now evident beginnings of a rehabilitation of Red Army officers slaughtered in Stalin's great purge is a payoff to the military, however dangerous it may be on Khrushchev personally to open up the Pandora's box of the crimes of the mid-1930's.

At home, Khrushchev appears far from secure and the Government line often sounds defensive. The purged Malenkov is assailed again and again, smeared with crimes of which he may be guiltless in order to destroy him as a potential rival since Khrushchev fears to kill him. And Khrushchev today is outpromising the relatively popular Malenkov (once the apostle of giving the Soviet consumer a break). And the Khrushchev promises will be hard to make good, American officials are convinced.

Since nobody here knows how far the turn of events will go the only response is to batten the hatches against Soviet propaganda barrages and the accompanying muscle flexing. The United States now assuredly will take a tougher position at the U. N. on the Hungarian issue next month than it might have while there was a chance of an arms agreement. Right now it is sounding out other nations on how many votes can be had for how tough a resolution condemnatory of the Soviet action in Hungary.

On disarmament it hurriedly put forward the long-delayed Western package. And President Eisenhower speaks of a Soviet rejection condemning humanity to an indefinite future of immeasurable danger.

Yet, as far as the eye can see, nothing has yet occurred to alter the basic East-West balance. It may be altered before long, however, by the ICBMs, by Soviet gains in the Middle East, by the encroaching Communist gains in Indonesia or by now unforeseen events in some other place.

The unanswered question today is how long Khrushchev & Co. will play the tougher line in foreign policy and whether they will risk heating up the cold war to a degree where it might explode.

GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, the Senate on Tuesday, August 27, quite properly demonstrated its appreciation for the loyal and faithful civil servants of our Government by overwhelmingly approving a badly needed and long-deserved upward pay adjustment for men and women in the classified service.

It is regrettable to note that this constructive action is already being written off as in vain, because of repeated hints that the President would veto the measure. I sincerely hope that is not so. I hope the President of the United States fully realizes the extent to which effective, efficient Government hinges upon the career people required to carry out its functions.

Before the President acts adversely on this pay raise measure for all Government employees, I hope he pauses to consider, in all fairness, the cooperation the Congress has given him in meeting his requests for additional top level positions in our Government, and increased compensation for such positions at the Presidential appointment level.

I also hope he will take into consideration the reduction in his budget requests by over $5 billion.

Requests of this administration for a greatly expanded number of top level positions, and increased compensation for these posts, have been granted by the Congress in deference to the President's judgment that such higher salaries were needed to attract the kind of people he wanted to serve in our Government.

I just want to comment, Mr. President, that the same reasoning certainly applies right down the line to the lowest-paid worker in our Government. If we want good, conscientious career employees at every level, we must be prepared to pay them decent wages. If we want to avoid the costly waste of excessive turnover and training of new help, we would be far better off to take proper care of the people who have served us faithfully.

Mr. President, at my request the Legislative Reference Service of the Library of Congress has compiled a record of the top level positions established since January 1953, and those whose compensation has been substantially increased since that date.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that this study be printed at this point in the RECORD, and urge its careful review in connection with the decision the White House must soon make on fair play for the rest of our Government employees.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TOP LEVEL POSITIONS ESTABLISHED SINCE JANUARY 1953 AND THOSE WHOSE COMPENSATION HAS BEEN SUBSTANTIALLY INCREASED SINCE THAT DATE

(By Margaret Fennell, American Law Division)

PART I—POSITIONS ESTABLISHED

Department of Agriculture: Assistant Secretaries [1] (2 additional), $20,000,[2] Reorganization Plan No. 2 of 1953 (67 Stat 633, sec. 2).

Department of Agriculture: General Counsel,[1], $19,000, act of July 31, 1956 (70 Stat. 742, sec. 301, 739, sec. 106 (b) (9)).

Department of the Air Force: Assistant Secretaries,[1] (two additional), $20,000, act of August 3, 1954 (68 Stat. 649, sec. 3).

Department of the Army: Assistant Secretaries [1] (two additional), $20,000, act of August 3, 1954 (68 Stat. 649, sec. 1).

Budget Bureau: Assistant Directors, three (two provided for under act of July 31, 1953 (67 Stat. 299), plus 1 under joint resolution of August 1, 1956 (70 Stat. 887); $15,000, act of July 31, 1953 (67 Stat. 299), increased to $20,000, act of July 31, 1956 (70 Stat. 737, sec. 106 (a) (9)).

Central Intelligence Agency (under National Security Council): Deputy Director,[1] $14,000 (under former set-up by act of October 15, 1949, 63 Stat. 881, sec. 6), new position fixed at $20,500, act of July 31, 1956 (70 Stat. 737, sec. 105 (26)).

Department of Commerce: Assistant Secretary,[1] (one additional); $20,000, act of July 2, 1954 (68 Stat. 430, sec. 304).

Department of Commerce: Federal Highway Administrator in Bureau of Public Roads,[1] $20,000, act of August 3, 1956 (70 Stat. 990).

Department of Defense: Assistant Secretaries,[1] (six additional), $20,000, Reorganization Plan No. 6 of 1953 [2] (67 Stat. 638, sec. 3).

Department of Defense: General Counsel,[1] $15,000,[2] Reorganization Plan No. 6 of 1953 (67 Stat. 639, sec. 4), increased to $19,000, act of July 31, 1956 (70 Stat. 739, sec. 106 (a) (9)).

Office of Defense Mobilization: Director,[1] $22,500, Reorganization Plan No. 3 of 1953 [2] (67 Stat. 634, sec. 1 (b)).

Office of Defense Mobilization: Deputy Director,[1] $17,500, Reorganization Plan No. 3 of 1953 [2] (67 Stat. 634, sec. 1 (c)), increased to $20,500, act of July 31, 1956 (70 Stat. 737, sec. 105 (27)).

Export-Import Bank of Washington (as independent agency of United States): President,[1] $17,500, act of August 9, 1954 (68 Stat. 677), increased to $21,000, act of July 31, 1956 (70 Stat. 736, sec. 104 (a) (11)).

Export-Import Bank of Washington: First Vice President,[1] $16,000, act of August 9, 1954 (68 Stat. 677), increased to $20,500, act of July 31, 1956 (70 Stat. 737, sec. 105 (31)).

Foreign Claims Settlement Commission: $15,000, Chairman,[1] $15,000, Members [1] Reorganization Plan No. 1 of 1954 [2] (68 Stat. 1279), increased to $20,500, Chairman,[1] $20,000, Members,[1] act of July 31, 1956 (70 Stat. 737, sec. 105 (10), 738, sec. 106 (a) (45)).

Department of Health, Education, and Welfare: Secretary,[1] $22,500, Reorganization Plan No. 1 of 1953 [2] (67 Stat. 631), increased to $25,000, act of July 31, 1956 (70 Stat. 736, sec. 102 (10)).

Department of Health, Education, and Welfare: Under Secretary,[1] $17,500, Reorganization Plan No. 1 of 1953 [2] (67 Stat. 631), increased to $21,000, act of July 31, 1956 (70 Stat. 737, sec. 104 (a) (20)).

Department of Health, Education, and Welfare: Assistant Secretaries (two),[1] $15,000, Reorganization Plan No. 1 of 1953 [2] (67 Stat. 631), increased to $20,000, act of July 31, 1956 (70 Stat. 738, sec. 106 (a) (14)).

Department of Health, Education, and Welfare: Special Assistant to the Secretary (Health and Medical Affairs),[1] $15,000, Reorganization Plan No. 1 of 1953 [2] (67 Stat. 631), increased to $20,000, act of July 31, 1956 (70 Stat. 138, sec. 106 (a) (41)).

Department of Health, Education, and Welfare: General Counsel,[1] $19,000, act of July 31, 1956 (70 Stat. 742, sec. 301 (a), 739, sec. 106 (b) (9)).

State Department: Deputy Under Secretaries of State (three),[1] $15,000, act of August 5, 1955 (69 Stat. 536), increased to $20,500, act of July 31, 1956 (70 Stat. 737, sec. 105 (29)).

Treasury Department: Under Secretary of the Treasury for Monetary Affairs,[1] $17,500, act of July 22, 1954 (68 Stat. 496), increased to $21,000, act of July 31, 1956 (70 Stat. 736, sec. 104 (a) (13)).

Treasury Department: Assistant Secretary (additional),[1] $15,000, act of July 22, 1954 (68 Stat. 496, sec. 4), increased to $20,000, act of July 31, 1956 (70 Stat. 738, sec. 106 (a) (18)).

United States Information Agency: $17,500, Director,[1] $16,000, Deputy Director,[1] Reorganization Plan No. 8 of 1953 [2] (67 Stat. 642), increased to $21,000, Director,[1] $20,500, Deputy Director,[1] act of July 31, 1956 (70 Stat. 736, sec. 104 (a) (9), 737, sec. 105 (28)).

PART II—POSITIONS WHOSE COMPENSATION HAS BEEN SUBSTANTIALLY INCREASED SINCE JANUARY 1953 (OTHER THAN POSITIONS ESTABLISHED SINCE JANUARY 1953, WHICH APPEAR IN PART I)

Changes have been made in the compensation provided for the following positions:

Vice President of the United States from $30,000 (under 1949 act) to $35,000 (in 1955).

Speaker of the House of Representatives from $30,000 (1949) to $35,000 (1955).

Senators and Representatives from $12,500 (plus $2,500 expense allowance) under 1946 act) to $22,500 (1955).

United States Supreme Court: Chief Justice from $25,500 (1946) to $35,500 (1955), Associate Justices from $25,000 (1946) to $35,000 (1955).

Executive Departments: Heads from $22,500 (1949) to $25,000 (1956), Under Secretaries, Deputy Secretaries, and Assistant Secretaries from salaries ranging from $15,000 to $20,000 (1949) to $20,000 to $22,500 (in 1956).

Department of Agriculture: Rural Electrification Administrator,[1] $15,000, act of October 15, 1949 [1] (63 Stat. 881, sec. 5 (a)), increased to $20,000, act of July 31, 1956 (70 Stat. 737, sec. 106 (a) (4)).

Architect of the Capitol: $15,000, act of October 15, 1949 (63 Stat. 881, sec. 5 (a)), increased to $19,000, act of July 31, 1956 (70 Stat. 739, sec. 106 (b) (1)).

Atomic Energy Commission: Chairman of the Military Liaison Committee,[1] $15,000, act of October 15, 1949 (63 Stat. 881, sec. 5 (a)), increased to $20,000, act of July 31, 1956 (70 Stat. 738, sec. 106 (a) (23)).

Budget Bureau: Director, $17,500, act of October 15, 1949 (63 Stat. 880, sec. 3), increased to $22,500, act of July 31, 1956 (70 Stat. 736, sec. 103 (a) (1)).

Budget Bureau: Deputy Director (formerly Assistant Director), $16,000, act of October 15, 1949 (63 Stat. 880, sec. 4), increased to $20,500, act of July 31, 1956 (70 Stat. 105 (25)).

Central Intelligence Agency: Director,[1] $16,000, act of October 15, 1949 (63 Stat. 880, sec. 4), increased to $21,000, act of July 31, 1956 (70 Stat. 736, sec. 104 (a) (2)).

Civil Aeronautics Administrator [1] (in Department of Commerce), $15,000, act of October 15, 1949 (63 Stat. 881, sec. 5 (a)), increased to $20,000, act of July 31, 1956 (70 Stat. 737, sec. 102 (a) (2)).

Civil Aeronautics Board: $15,000, Chairman; [1] $15,000, members,[1] act of October 15, 1949 (63 Stat. 881, sec. 5 (a)), increased to $20,500, Chairman; [1] $20,000, members,[1] act of July 31, 1956 (70 Stat. 737, sec. 105 (1), 738, sec. 106 (45)).

Civil Service Commission: $16,000, Chairman; [1] $15,000, members,[1] act of October 15, 1949 (63 Stat. 880, sec. 4, 881, sec. 5 (a)), increased to $20,500, Chairman; [1] $20,000, members,[1] act of July 31, 1956 (70 Stat. 737, sec. 105 (2), 738, sec. 106 (a) (45)).

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I should like to have the President of the United States be as generous with the civil-service workers of our Government as he has been with the top Cabinet and executive officers of the Government. Despite all the boasts of the administration as to its business like attitude toward the Government, and the "great savings" it has made for the American people—and I put the words "great savings" in quotation marks—it will be noted that the Library of Congress in a very factual and objective study has brought to our attention that there are literally dozens of assistant secretaries and administrators and bureau chiefs and deputy secretaries and deputy assistant secretaries, and what have you, who have been added to the Federal payroll. In fact, I have in my hand several pages of the report of the number of new executive officials who have been added to the executive branch of the Government.

One of the great accomplishments of the Eisenhower administration has been the increase of the public payroll, particularly in the higher levels of appointment. I hope the President, in reviewing the statement—or a member of his White House staff, perhaps—will exercise the same generosity with respect to the civil servants that has been exercised for the palace guard.

CLAIMS FOR SURPLUS FEED GRAINS AGAINST COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar 1064, H. R. 2486.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLAND in the chair). The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 2486) to authorize Commodity Credit Corporation to grant relief with respect to claims arising out of deliveries of eligible surplus feed grains on ineligible dates in connection with purchase orders under its emergency feed program.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with an amendment on page 2, line 7, after the word "than", to strike out "12 months from the date the purchase order was issued to the farmer" and insert "1 month from the expiration date of the purchase order issued to the farmer."

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, the bill now before the Senate, H. R. 2486, is similar to a bill I introduced in the Senate earlier this year. This legislation is designed to bring relief to ranchers and feed dealers who in carrying out the emergency drought feed program in 1954, 1955, and 1956, found it necessary for deliveries of feed to be made outside of the then legal delivery periods.

In order to prevent hardship on the very people who the emergency drought feed law was intended to benefit, it is necessary that the actual delivery dates, made without any intention of violating the law, be legalized. The House passed the bill extending the time period for 12 months. The Senate Agriculture Committee reported the bill with an amendment restricting the additional period to 1 month from the expiration date of purchase orders.

The Department of Agriculture and the people concerned in the several States have furnished concrete evidence that a 1-month extension period will not take care of all of the cases of delivery outside the proper time periods. I have discussed this matter with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WILLIAMS] and he has indicated a willingness to amend the bill to extend the period to 6 months.

Even this extension may not cover all of the cases. In extending the delivery period for 6 months, it is not our intention to foreclose further legislative action by the Congress.

The very able Senator from Delaware has assured me that if this does not cover the cases, he is willing to sit down and go over the matter in an attempt to evolve a fair and equitable solution. Those of us who know the Senator from Delaware fully understand that that would be done.

The late deliveries involved in this program resulted from a lack of storage facilities on the part of the farmers. The feed dealers accommodated the farmers by keeping their feed until such time as they were able to use it. In some cases, this period of time extended on into many months.

I believe it would be wise for Congress to act now in extending the delivery time period for 6 months, while at the same time making it clear that we do not wish the Department of Agriculture to demand refunds in the delivery cases not covered by this legislation.

I urge the Senate to accept the amendment that I now offer and approve the bill so that the House can act upon it at the earliest possible moment.

I send the amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, line 8, it is proposed to strike out "1 month" and insert in lieu thereof "6 months."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. ALLOTT. I did not object to the amendment. However, I wish to make a short statement with respect to it. The bill before us is the same bill which was introduced by me and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I wish to repeat and emphasize what the majority leader has said. It is a very critical situation with which we are confronted. The period of 6 months is a necessity if we are going to get any action. Only 15 percent of these accounts have been audited, and they must have the same action if the people involved are to get any relief.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendment and third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the junior Senator from California.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

CONTRIBUTIONS BY STATE GOVERNMENTS TO COST OF FEED OR SEED FURNISHED FARMERS, ETC.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar 1077, S. 304.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The Legislative Clerk. A bill (S. 304) to provide for a specific contribution by State governments to the cost of feed or seed furnished to farmers, ranchers, or stockmen in disaster areas, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the bill would condition Federal feed and seed disaster relief in any State upon contribution by the State of between 25 and 50 percent of that part of the cost of the feed and seed not paid for by the recipients. Such State participation should result in more economical operation, better use of funds, and more equitable distribution of assistance. The bill would carry out the President's recommendations of March 5 for keeping administration of these programs close to the local people and for greater State and local participation.

The President in his 1957 message to Congress endorsed this legislation.

The Committee on Appropriations of the House in its report on the urgent deficiency appropriation bill on February 1, 1957, likewise endorsed this proposal.

The Secretary of Agriculture, in a letter dated August 23, 1957, urges the prompt enactment of this bill, not only in the interest of economy, but states that "the Department of Agriculture feels strongly that participation by the States in the cost of drought relief is necessary if sound management of the assistance program is to be obtained."

The American Farm Bureau has likewise endorsed the principal of State participation as embodied in S. 304.

As a part of my remarks, I ask unanimous consent to have incorporated in the Record a letter dated August 23, 1957, signed by Secretary Benson, and a second letter under the same date signed by Mr. Matt Triggs, assistant legislative director of the American Farm Bureau, both urging the enactment of S. 304.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Department of Agriculture,
Washington, D. C., August 23, 1957.
Hon. John J. Williams,
United States Senate.

Dear Senator Williams: This is in reply to your request of August 22 for our comments on S. 304, a bill to provide for a specific contribution by State governments to the cost of feed or seed furnished to farmers, ranchers, or stockmen in disaster areas, and for other purposes.

The bill proposes that no feed for livestock or seed for planting shall be furnished to farmers, ranchers, or stockmen under existing disaster relief legislation unless, in addition to administrative costs that may be assumed by the State, the State agrees to contribute not less than 25 percent or more than 50 percent, as the Secretary of Agriculture shall determine to be equitable, of the cost of such feed or seed which is not paid by the recipient thereof.

On the basis of its experience with the administration of drought-relief programs the Department of Agriculture feels strongly that participation by the States in the cost of drought relief is necessary if sound management of the assistance program is to be obtained. The President, in his message to Congress on March 5, 1957, called to the attention of the Congress two general conclusions:

"The first is that administration of emergency disaster programs must be kept close to the local people;

"The second is that State and local governments should assume a greater part in alleviating human distress and hardships and in meeting other local needs in times of disaster, calling on the Federal Government only to supplement their own resources."

The Committee on Appropriations of the House, in its report on the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, 1957, on February 1, 1957 (Rept. No. 24) stated:

"At the time this emergency program was adopted by Congress, it was intended that the States would participate substantially in a financial way. It appears, however, that amounts advanced by States to date have been very small—hardly enough to cover the cost of handling their contributions. The committee feels that steps should be taken to correct this situation. Accordingly, it recommends that, as soon as present contracts have been honored, the Secretary require that the governor or appropriate authority in each State participating in the program should commit the State to assume at least 25 percent of the cost."

State participation in the operation and management of a feed-assistance program at the State and local level would result in more economical operation, better use of funds, and more equitable distribution of assistance.

The Department endorsed the enactment of such legislation in its letter of March 5 to the President of the Senate and its letter of March 15 to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

We recommend passage of the bill.

The Bureau of the Budget advises that there is no objection to the submission of this report.

Sincerely yours,
E. T. Benson, Secretary.

American Farm Bureau Federation,
Washington D. C., August 23, 1957.
Hon. John J. Williams,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

Dear Senator Williams: S. 304, to provide for a specific contribution by State governments to the costs of feed or seed furnished to farmers in disaster areas, has been reported to the Senate by the Senate Agriculture Committee.

This letter is to urge you to use your influence in getting the principles of this bill passed by the Senate this session if at all possible.

Droughts, floods, and other disasters occur in some areas each year. The national policy that emergency assistance should be provided in extreme cases has been well established.

At our last annual meeting consideration was given to the policy issues raised by this program. The delegates representing the member State farm bureaus were strong in their belief that there was need to improve the administration of this program by the development of permanent, uniform procedures. More specifically, the view was expressed that administration of the program would be improved and abuses minimized if the responsible participation of State governments was obtained by providing for some degree of financial contribution by the States toward the cost of such emergency assistance.

Very sincerely,
Matt Triggs,
Assistant Legislative Director.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate and open to amendment.

If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, notwithstanding any other provision of law, no feed for livestock or seed for planting shall be furnished to farmers, ranchers, or stockmen pursuant to Public Law 875, 81st Congress (42 U. S. C. 1955 and the following); Public Law 115, 83d Congress, 1st session; Public Law 357, 83d Congress, 2d session; Public Law 480, 83d Congress, 2d session; or pursuant to any other law as a disaster relief measure, unless, in addition to such administrative costs as may be assumed by the State, the State in which such feed or seed is furnished agrees to contribute such percentage, not less than 25 nor more than 50, as the Secretary of Agriculture shall determine to be equitable of that part of the cost, including transportation, of such feed or seed which is not paid for by the recipients thereof.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Delaware.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF CIVIL AERONAUTICS ACT OF 1938

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I wish to announce that I shall ask to make a bill the unfinished business, but that I do not propose to take any action on it at this session of Congress.

I have discussed the matter a number of times with the very able and very thorough Senator from Ohio [Mr. Lausche], a distinguished member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Great demand has been made on the leadership to schedule the bill for consideration.

In view of the far-reaching implications involved, and in view of the very logical and persuasive statements made by the Senator from Ohio, I believe the bill will require more discussion than we are able to give to it and also adjourn sine die today.

Therefore, I shall make it the unfinished business, but no action will be taken on it until we come back next January.

Mr. LAUSCHE. I subscribe fully to the suggestion made by the distinguished Senator from Texas. This bill deals with allowing commercial airline companies to retain capital gains without having them credited to their subsidies. The Civil Aeronautics Board is now conducting an investigation pertaining to the very subject about which this bill contemplates action, and the study being made by the Civil Aeronautics Board will provide information for the Senate to be used next January that will make much simpler a disposition of the bill. I am glad to hear that the Senator from Texas is making it the first order of business for January, at which time we shall discuss it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I thank the Senator. I move that the Senate proceed to consider Calendar Order No. 1178, H. R. 5822. I would like the staff to inform the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Douglas] that I shall move to take the bill up, so as to make it the unfinished business, but it will not be considered until January.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the bill by title.

The Legislative Clerk. A bill (H. R. 5822) to amend section 406 (b) of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 with respect to the reinvestment by air carriers of the proceeds from the sale or other disposition of certain operating property and equipment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM G. LIAS

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the Record a brief address I have prepared.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

On October 17, 1951, I called to the attention of the Senate the fact that Mr. William G. Lias, a racketeer in West Virginia, owed the Government over $2 million in taxes, having been delinquent for a number of years and yet as of that date the Treasury Department had not even filed liens against his property.

During the years while his tax obligation was accumulating Mr. Lias had been allowed by the Treasury Department to give away to his family sizable portions of his assets and the Treasury Department had recognized the validity of these gifts by acceptance of his payments of gift tax.

They even went so far as to approve some of these gifts on a retroactive basis by allowing him to file and pay retroactively gift tax on assets which had been transferred to members of his family in prior years, during which years his delinquent taxes were accumulating.

This case of how the Treasury Department had been pussyfooting in the handling of the tax claim against this racketeer is fully documented in the Congressional Record, volume 97, part 10, pages 13325–13330.

It was only after this statement that the Treasury Department filed liens on that portion of his property which had not been given away, and action was started through the courts to recover payment. The first step was to place Mr. Lias' assets under a receivership.

On May 10, 1956, I criticized the situation wherein Mr. Lias was being allowed $35,000 a year by the court-appointed receivers to operate his own receivership, and I called attention to the fact that as an assistant to help Mr. Lias the courts had approved the employment of another notorious tax evader, Mr. George Lewis. (Congressional Record, vol. 102, pt. 6, pp. 7902–7903.) Mr. Lias was removed from this lucrative position.

In view of the fact that this case is at last approaching a conclusion, I requested a report from the Department of Justice as to the amount they had thus far collected from Mr. Lias toward payment of his tax liability, and under date of August 7, 1957, I received their report.

This report will be incorporated in the Record in its entirety; however, I quote from pages 5 and 6 thereof which sums up the results:

"On July 11, 1957, the District Director at Parkersburg. W. Va., received $1,566,073.46 to apply on the judgment against Lias. The District Director also received $5,677.57, representing the entire net assets of Zellers, to apply on the judgment against it. In addition, on the same date, the District Director received additional interest on the tax claims against Automatic which, together with prior payments on account, resulted in payments of principal, assessed interest and accrued interest of $216,388.23. Thus, the Government has thus far collected in back taxes from these sources a total of $1,788,139.26. It is estimated that there is sufficient cash on hand to pay approximately $54,000 more which, together with $18,043.44 collected from Mrs. Lias in satisfaction of deficiencies assessed against her, will make a grand total of back taxes collected of approximately $1,860,182.70."

"In addition to the collection of back taxes as set forth above, current taxes have been paid to the United States from inception of the receiverships up to April 30, 1956, in the amount of $2,878,248.91, and it is estimated that final figures will show that about $150,000 more will have been paid in current taxes for the period subsequent to that date."

In view of the dilatory manner in which the tax claim against this racketeer had been handled in earlier years I think the Department of Justice should be commended upon the progress they have made toward collecting the delinquent account from this individual. Also, I am glad to note in the letter that they are not waiving the unpaid balance but are still able to list several possible steps for future action.

In dealing with the average American citizen who, as the result of conditions beyond his control, becomes delinquent in taxes it is expected that the Federal Government should display reasonableness in working out arrangements; however, in dealing with racketeers and members of the underworld there should be no compromise. There is no excuse for the Federal Government's displaying any leniency whatever to this element and certainly they should not be permitted to continue their illegal operations while being carried on the books of the Federal Treasury as tax delinquents.

As one who criticized the laxity of the departments in the early stages of this case I am glad to submit this report along with words of commendation for the results achieved after public attention was focused on this case.

I attach at this point the complete report of the Department of Justice.

United States
Department of Justice,
Office of the Deputy Attorney General,
Washington, D. C., August 7, 1957.

Hon. John J. Williams,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

Dear Senator Williams: This is with reference to your letter of July 15, 1957, to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in which you requested that the Commissioner furnish you with a complete report as to the settlement of the Government's tax claim against William G. Lias. As you have been previously advised, the Commissioner, on July 17, 1957, referred your letter to this Department in view of the fact that this Department has been in charge of the litigation concerning Lias' tax liability.

While your letter requests a report as to the settlement of the Government's tax claim against Lias, it is assumed that what you desire is a report on the progress of the litigation, and on the steps taken to satisfy Lias' tax indebtedness. There has been no settlement or compromise of any part of the liability which the Government has asserted against Lias. The litigation has not been finally concluded as yet but the following is a summary of its more important aspects up to the present time.

You will recall that some years ago William G. Lias was indicted for evading his Federal income taxes for the years 1942 to 1945, inclusive, but a trial held before District Judge Harry E. Watkins, northern district of West Virginia, resulted in a jury verdict of acquittal on July 2, 1949. The Commissioner then asserted additional civil tax liability against Lias for the years 1942 to 1947, inclusive, as well as against Automatic Cigarette Sales Corp. (Automatic) and Zellers Steak House Inc. (Zellers), corporations in which it was believed that Lias had an interest. Lias, Automatic, and Zellers petitioned the Tax Court of the United States for a redetermination of the proposed deficiencies.

On October 18, 1951, the Commissioner made jeopardy assessments against Lias and the two corporations. On December 2, 1951, in order to prevent possible dissipation of the property out of which the asserted deficiencies, if sustained by the courts, would be satisfied, the Government brought a proceeding before Judge Watkins for (a) foreclosure of the tax liens, (b) appointment of receivers for Lias and the two taxpayer corporations, and (c) appointment of receivers for several corporations which owed no taxes but in which it was believed Lias owned an interest. The latter corporations were Laconia, Inc., Wheeling Downs Racing Association, and Wheeling Downs, Inc. In a decision reported (103 F. Supp. 341), Judge Watkins, on February 22, 1952, approved appointment of receivers for Lias and the various corporations. On appeal, the decision was affirmed by the fourth circuit in a per curiam opinion reported (196 F. 2d 90).

It was immediately determined that one of Lias' principal assets was his interest in Wheeling Downs, Inc., a corporation which owned a racetrack located on an island in the Ohio River near Wheeling, W. Va., and leased it to Wheeling Downs Racing Association to conduct horseraces. His other known assets consisted of stock in the various corporations named above. The receiver for Wheeling Downs Racing Association recognized that the litigation would in all probability not be concluded for some time, and if the track were to be prevented from deteriorating to a small fraction of its value and if the valuable racing dates allocated to it by the West Virginia Racing Commission were to be preserved, it would be necessary for him to operate the track. Accordingly, the receiver petitioned Judge Watkins for permission to hold a racing meet in the summer of 1952. Unable to find an experienced manager to operate the track, the receiver petitioned the court for permission to engage Lias as general manager. Among the reasons given to the court by the receiver for the necessity of hiring Lias were (a) he was well qualified to run a track, having done so successfully since 1945; (b) by experience he was particularly qualified to cope with the special problems of this track (the most serious of which is flooding); (c) he had a competent organization which, because employment at a racetrack is of a seasonal nature, is usually difficult to obtain; and (d) it was not believed feasible to hire another competent manager (particularly after the season had commenced) since the necessity of obtaining the court's permission prior to each meet precluded hiring any such person except upon a meet-to-meet basis.

By order dated July 18, 1952, Judge Watkins approved the meet and the hiring of Lias as general manager, his compensation being left entirely to the discretion of the court. Subsequent meets, with Lias as general manager, have been approved from time to time by Judge Watkins who has, at all times, found the continued employment of Lias as general manager to be in the best interests of the receivership.

In 1953, the question of Lias' compensation was presented to the court, and in an opinion reported (113 F. Supp. 502), Judge Watkins approved compensation of $35,000 for the first year, subject, however, to further consideration of a claim by the United States Government that it had a lien upon all compensation paid to Lias. A reading of that opinion will amply demonstrate the reasoning of Judge Watkins in approving operation of the track and in setting Lias' compensation. The following excerpts from that opinion indicate the court's attitude (pp. 502–503):

"The receiver reported to the court that the prior manager of the track, William G. Lias, had refused to serve as manager of the track for the scheduled spring meeting beginning in April 1952, and that without the services of Lias, he did not believe he could profitably operate the track. The April 1952 meet was canceled.

"Later Lias changed his attitude and agreed to serve as manager of the track under the receiver. He asked to be employed at the same yearly compensation which he had received for the year ending April 30, 1951, prior to the receivership when he was paid $60,000 for his services. He was employed as manager of the track with the understanding that he would be allowed such compensation as the court deemed fair and reasonable. * * *

"He has served as general manager of the racetrack since July 18, 1952. Two racing meets were thereafter held in 1952, one in the summer and another in the fall. A total of $16,930,270 was handled during these 2 meets. The races were attended by 288,587 persons. The State of West Virginia received over $700,000 from the 2 meets. Over $500,000 was realized in profits to the receivership before deduction of current Federal income taxes and compensation to the receiver and general manager. The meets were the most successful, both in attendance and in profits, in the history of the track. A third meet was held in May 1953. Although handicapped by rain and competition from a nearby track, profits of $119,000 were realized, before payment of Federal income taxes and compensation to the receiver and general manager."

"There is evidence to the effect that the general manager of another racetrack received $60,000 per year and the manager of another track is paid $75,000 per year. This type of employment is highly skilled and technical.

"The receiver has stated that he is doubtful whether he could have successfully operated the track without the services of Lias and his experienced staff of assistants. * * *

"It is my opinion that the sum of $35,000 should now be allowed to William G. Lias as payment on account for his services, up to and including April 30, 1953."

At a later date the question of a possible lien of the United States upon Lias' salary (left open in the above opinion) was presented to the court, and an order was entered that the $35,000 allowed to him by the court should be distributed as follows: $15,000 to the Director of Internal Revenue to apply on Lias' current taxes; $10,000 to be paid to Lias' personal receiver to apply on the taxes alleged to be due for past years; and the remaining $10,000 to be paid to Lias. This arrangement whereby all but $10,000 of the $35,000 salary is set aside for the benefit of the United States was continued from year to year until 1956 when racing operations were suspended. The receiver has held the stock of the corporation and Lias has not received any dividends during the receivership.

At a hearing before the Tax Court, which consumed nearly a month and the transcript of which covered approximately 7,150 pages, the deficiencies asserted by the Commission against Lias personally were sustained. The decision is reported in volume 24, Tax Court Reports, page 280, and on appeal by Lias the fourth circuit affirmed. (See 235 F. 2d 879 (August 3, 1955).) Lias then petitioned the Supreme Court of the United States for a writ of certiorari which was denied on April 22, 1957. (See 353 U. S. 935.) Zellers' tax liability was determined by stipulation before the Tax Court. The deficiency asserted against Automatic was sustained by the Tax Court in a decision not officially reported (docket No. 26151, decided January 26, 1955), and that decision was affirmed by the fourth circuit in an opinion reported in volume 234, Federal Reporter, second series, at page 825; certiorari was denied by the Supreme Court on December 17, 1956. (See 352 U. S. 951.) As a result of the above-described litigation, deficiencies were determined as follows: Lias, $2,487,543.87; Automatic, $176,466.42; and Zellers, $37,543.53. The deficiency against Lias included tax, penalties (including the 50-percent fraud penalty), and assessed interest; no penalties were assessed against Automatic or Zellers.

After the court of appeals affirmed the Tax Court's decision in Lias' personal tax case, Judge Watkins, by order dated November 30, 1956, ordered the track closed and practically all employees, including Lias, discharged. On December 1, 1956, the track employees, except for an accountant and 4 watchmen, were discharged, and on December 3, 1956, the track was closed. On the receiver's recommendation, Judge Watkins, by order dated December 30, 1956, directed that the 1957 30-day spring meet not be held.

After denial on April 22, 1957, of Lias' petition for certiorari in his personal tax case, the Government on May 1, 1957, petitioned the district court to enforce its liens and for an order of sale of the track. By order dated May 13, 1957, Judge Watkins gave judgment for the Government against Lias in the amount set out above and held that its liens were prior, valid, and subsisting against all of his properties. By order of the same date, the track was directed to be sold at public sale for cash on June 12, 1957, after advertisement as fixed and determined by the court.

The sale was advertised once a week for 4 successive weeks in the Wheeling Intelligencer and the Wheeling News-Register. In addition, advertisements were inserted for 3 successive weeks in the Wall Street Journal, the Morning Telegraph, and the Daily Racing Form, and public notices were posted in accordance with State law.

The conduct of the sale, the events leading up to confirmation of the Hazel Park Racing Association, Inc., as purchaser of the track for $1,780,000, and the reasoning of the court in the premises are fully set forth in the opinion of Judge Watkins of July 9, 1957, a copy of which is annexed.

On July 11, 1957, the district director at Parkersburg, W. Va., received $1,566,073.46 to apply on the judgment against Lias. The district director also received $5,677.57, representing the entire net assets of Zellers, to apply on the judgment against it. In addition, on the same date, the district director received additional interest on the tax claims against Automatic which, together with prior payments on account, resulted in payments of principal, assessed interest and accrued interest of $216,388.23. Thus, the Government has thus far collected in back taxes from these sources a total of $1,788,139.26. It is estimated that there is sufficient cash on hand to pay approximately $54,000 more which, together with $18,043.44 collected from Mrs. Lias in satisfaction of deficiencies assessed against her, will make a grand total of back taxes collected of approximately $1,860,182.70.

The funds applied to the judgment against Lias arose principally from the collection of accounts and notes receivable for which Lias' receiver asserted claims against Wheeling Downs, Inc., and from Lias' stock interest in that corporation and in Wheeling Downs Racing Association and Laconia, Inc. Lias' interest in each of these corporations had been determined by the district court by order dated March 8, 1954, pursuant to stipulation of the parties, to be approximately 60 percent, which is substantially the same basis as that upon which the assessments had originally been made. These corporations, as well as Automatic and Zellers, have all been liquidated.

In addition to the collection of back taxes as set forth above, current taxes have been paid to the United States from inception of the receiverships up to April 30, 1956, in the amount of $2,878,248.91, and it is estimated that final figures will show that about $150,000 more will have been paid in current taxes for the period subsequent to that date. The receiverships have also benefited the State of West Virginia and the city of Wheeling, the former having collected $3,716,874.96 in current taxes and the latter $112,403.59 for the period.

A few matters still remain outstanding before this phase of the Lias tax matters can be finally concluded. The Tananbaum group (described in the annexed opinion of Judge Watkins) has indicated that it will not appeal the court's refusal to entertain an additional upset bid on behalf of Yonkers but there are several minor matters such as a claim for an additional receiver's commission which will be decided next fall.

As appears from the foregoing, even after application of all available assets to Lias' tax liability, there still remains a substantial unsatisfied indebtedness. The Internal Revenue Service has conducted exhaustive investigations in an effort to locate additional assets. Two bank accounts containing about $17,000 have been located in Canada, and there are some indications that they may belong to Lias. Mrs. Lias, however, claims that the accounts belong to her, and it is expected that the question of ownership will be determined by the court next fall. In any event, the uncollected portion of the deficiencies against Lias have now been reduced to judgment and any other assets of his which the Internal Revenue Service may discover during the life of the judgment can be applied against it.

If the foregoing summary is not sufficient for your purposes or if you have any questions on any particular phase of the various receiverships, we shall be glad to furnish more details on request.

Sincerely,

William P. Rogers,
Deputy Attorney General.

POPULATION GROWTH AND RECLAMATION

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, the August 9, 1957, issue of U. S. News & World Report features an article entitled

"Where Will United States Put 60 Million More People?" This is a most provocative article and I commend it to your reading and serious consideration. It focuses attention on many problems associated with our booming population, estimated to total 227 million in 1975.

We think of Munich and the beginning of World War II as only yesterday. May I remind you that this date, so clearly stamped in the memory of each of us, was only 18 years ago. The date 1975 is only 18 years in the future. Many in this illustrious body will be dealing with the problems of 1975 and as they cast shadows on the problems of the year 2000.

Let me give you a few brief highlights as taken from the article in U. S. News & World Report. The farm population which now stands at 22 million will decline to about 15 million. This means that only 7 percent of our population will be providing the food and fiber needs for the other 93 percent. Today approximately 13 percent of our population lives on the farm. The major portion of the population gain will be in the suburban areas surrounding the large cities. In general, the shift of population will be westward. Almost 18 million of the increase will be in the 11 States west of the Rockies; another 15 million will be added to the Southern States; 14 million in the Midwest and 13 million in the East.

Percentagewise Nevada will increase by about 96 percent; Arizona will be second with an increase of almost 94 percent, and California third with a net increase of 91 percent. Numerically California will add the greatest number of inhabitants; its increase will exceed 12 million. New York will increase more than 4½ million; Texas almost 3½ million; Michigan and Ohio will add more than 3 million each; Illinois more than 2½ million and Pennsylvania almost 2½ million. In all, 21 States will increase from about 1 million to 12 million each. The remaining States will increase in varying numbers up to almost 1 million each.

The article points out that direction in the flow of population will be influenced by climate and by the availability of water. While we can do little, if anything, about climate, we should recognize now the tremendous impact of the potential population gains upon water needs. Other problems emphasized in this article are the future needs for schools, streets, sewer, and highway construction. The number of students in elementary and high schools is estimated to increase from 38 million to 56 million, resulting in a need for 600,000 additional classrooms. Residential and industrial construction should develop in proportion to other requirements.

Only a few decades ago we used approximately 95 gallons of water per person per day. Today this rate of use has increased to 145 gallons per day. We may well expect the average use to reach 200 gallons per day when we consider the rate at which we build homes with two or more bathrooms, install air conditioners, garbage disposals, automatic washing machines and other equipment which uses water at greater and greater amounts.

The article concludes with a rather complacent statement that while we can expect 60 million more mouths to feed in 1975 and while we are losing about 1 million acres of farmland each year to housing, industrial development, highways, airports and other uses, that the past record of the American farmers would indicate that future needs can be met relatively easily. The 7 percent of our population which will be residing on farms will need to produce at least one-third more milk, 40 percent more truck garden crops, 50 percent more beef and 40 percent more pork. These future needs should raise the red flag of alarm to each of us, particularly when we know that the land available for crop production has changed but little in the last 4 decades. The amount of new land brought into production is being offset by losses to highways, airports, industrial expansion and urbanization. For reasons of easy construction the highway and other expansions take place in the level areas, the land best suited to agriculture. We cannot long continue this practice if we are to meet our needs in 1975.

I am told that in 1920 we had about 5.6 acres of equivalent cropland for each inhabitant. This measurement assumes a productive value below cropland for grazing areas in open pasture and woodland pasture. Today we have the equivalent of 3.7 acres of cropland available for each person. In 1975 based on the forecast of the Department of Agriculture of the amount of land available for crop and pasture we will have only 2.7 acres. As I view the situation we will be hard pressed by 1975 to meet the needs of our booming population. The figures and conditions which I have recited are related to a population of about 227 million in 1975. As we look back on earlier population forecasts we find they have consistently been conservative. The Bureau of the Census forecast in 1946, for example, based on assumptions of medium mortality, medium fertility and no net immigration between 1945 and 2000 indicated the population in 1955 to be just under 150 million. We passed that mark 5 years earlier. That same forecast showed for 1975 a population of 162.3 million. We have long since passed that mark. This 1946 forecast also showed the population in year 2000 to be 163.3 million. We have already exceeded that estimate by 8 million. The point I wish to make is that the present estimate and the conditions related in U. S. News & World Report, also may be conservative. Assuming that the article gives a fair appraisal of what we may expect in 1975, may I suggest that we focus our attention on the period following 1975. The year 2000 is only 43 years away. Should we plan to meet the conditions of the immediate future or should we look ahead to the days of our children and grandchildren? Our present rate of population gains seems to indicate a total population in the United States in year 2000 of three hundred million or more inhabitants. That figure is approximately double our population of 1950.

Even if we tried we would be unable to visualize the many changes that are inherent in our Nation's growth. However, I believe the article in the U. S. News & World Report is correct in the appraisal that our population growth will be influenced by climate and availability of water. Water, or rather the lack of it, has been a continuing problem in the arid West. The eastern seaboard area is now feeling the effects of drought. Pastures are dry and the farmers must either feed or sell their livestock. Everyone concerned with the production, processing and handling of the products of the farm will be affected. In recent years irrigation, a necessity in the arid West, is being resorted to each year on more and more farms in the eastern humid areas to provide moisture during periods of deficient rainfall in order to stabilize production at a high level. I am reminded of a statement made by Assistant Secretary of Agriculture Ervin L. Peterson about 2 years ago regarding the significance of adequate moisture for crop production in the East.

Mr. Peterson stated:

> As the use of improved seed, as increased amounts of fertilizer are applied, as better growing practices are applied, the need for water goes up. For example, reports indicate that at Blacksburg, Va., rainfall during the past 56 years has been adequate to produce 25 bushels of corn per acre every year except 2. This same rainfall would have been adequate to produce 75 bushels per acre only about half of those years. Yet as a result of application of known methods of farming to growing corn, 75 bushels per acre is a potential production figure at Blacksburg if water is available. This example repeats itself in some form throughout the country. Thus water supply and not fertilizer or lack of knowledge is an important limiting factor to any significant increase in food production which will ultimately be required by a growing nation.

Also, as the eastern population zooms to new heights water will become a greater and greater problem for municipal and industrial needs. Water-resource developments started today in the East, and in the West offer a means of meeting our needs tomorrow.

I was heartened by a statement a few days ago by our distinguished majority leader, Senator JOHNSON of Texas, that he has brought together the Bureau of Reclamation and the Corps of Engineers in a water-resource-development program for the State of Texas. Not only am I pleased that these two great organizations will be working hand in hand in meeting the problems of drought and flood in the great State of Texas, but also that my distinguished colleague has stated so clearly the need for a water-resource program for attaining full economic development of his State. May I add that such is the case in my State, Utah, and in every State of the Union as well. This you have heard me say many times.

Fully recognizing the need for water-resource developments in Texas and elsewhere I cannot refrain from calling attention to an item of paramount importance. With each proposal for a water-resource development that includes irrigation the hue and cry go up that the project will add to our overflowing granaries—that the Congress in approving a project will be spending money to produce crops and more money to buy them. This argument of reclamation and the crop surplus was answered in a straightforward factual analysis by one of the economists of the Bureau of Reclamation in a paper presented at the annual convention of the Western Farm Economics Association, Las Cruces, N. Mex., July 15, 1957.

The paper referred to emphasizes that the production from reclamation projects is largely forage and feed grains and specialty food crops. Four principal commodities—corn, wheat, cotton, and tobacco, which comprise 87 percent of all commodities under loan and inventory by the Commodity Credit Corporation, are analyzed. Tobacco is not grown on reclamation projects; corn and wheat production aggregates less than four-tenths of 1 percent and 2 percent, respectively, of the United States production. It is shown that where dry-land wheat areas are put in irrigation the acreage actually planted to wheat is less, resulting in fewer actual bushels of wheat from each 100 acres. With respect to cotton the paper shows production on reclamation projects to be only about 6 percent of United States production. This crop is moving westward because of high yields and efficiency of production. Altogether about three-fourths of the irrigated acreage in reclamation projects produce forage and grain crops that are fed locally. Another and equally important aspect of the production from irrigated lands of the West, including reclamation projects, is the large contribution to our supply of fruits, vegetables, nuts, and specialty crops. It is shown that the irrigated West produces, for example, virtually all of our apricots, almonds, walnuts, filberts, dates, lemons, figs, prunes, mustard, olives, and garlic and a major portion of a long list of other vegetables and fruits which we enjoy during the winter months when large areas of our country lie dormant. Not only do these water resource projects render a great service to our standard of living and everyday enjoyment but they have essentially no effect on the farm surplus.

May I suggest also that the development or extension of a basic resource creates new opportunities. In the West two or more families are provided with the means of livelihood in the service trades and industries in the nearby towns for each farming opportunity created. Furthermore, the water developed initially for agriculture remains permanently available for future industrial and municipal uses. Thus water resource developments will help to fill the impending void in many segments of our economy. Again I recommend for your thoughtful consideration the feature article in the August 9, 1957, issue of U. S. News & World Report and the paper presented at the Western Farm Economics Association meeting regarding Federal reclamation and the crop surplus problem.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE AIR FORCE

Mrs. SMITH of Maine. Mr. President, I had intended to deliver a full-scale speech on a matter I consider to be of importance to expose misrepresentations compounded by subsequent misrepresentations. The truth is too sacred to be permitted to be dealt with loosely.

Because the adjournment is coming sooner than the heretofore set Saturday date, and apparently will come within a few hours and because I do not wish to delay unduly the adjournment time, instead of taking the time of the Senate to make my speech, I ask unanimous consent that my statement be placed in the body of the Record.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

In the controversy over the Air Force Reserve general nominations, I felt that the matter had been completed and closed when the Committee on Armed Services withheld approval of 2 nominees and reported out favorably 9 nominees. I had no desire to prolong the controversy as there are important matters to be attended in the rush of these closing days.

But a member of the committee who opposed me in this matter took the position that I had an obligation to make my statement to the committee public and have it printed. I complied with his feeling and desire and so inserted my statement in the Congressional Record. Compliance with his feeling apparently has caused embarrassment to Lieutenant General O'Donnell, who issued a statement to the press. He is reported by the press to have stated that he did not seek to change "one iota" of his basic testimony. I now place his statement in the Record:

"STATEMENT BY GENERAL O'DONNELL RELATIVE TO SENATOR MARGARET CHASE SMITH'S STATEMENT IN THE CONGRESSIONAL RECORD

"Senator Smith has made a very serious charge against me—that of giving extensive false testimony and of making repeated misrepresentations before the Senate Armed Forces Committee. The implication is that I deliberately falsified my testimony with the intent to deceive the committee. This allegation and its attendant implications are wrong.

"In my capacity as Deputy Chief of Staff, Personnel, on the Air Staff of the United States Air Force, it is my duty and responsibility to give testimony to the Armed Forces Committee of the Senate in support of nominations of this kind. It is not within my province to select individuals for nomination to general officer rank or to any other rank. This is accomplished by action of a selection board composed of general officers. The Air Force applauded the selections of the board and forwarded them to the President with approval of the Chief of Staff, the Secretary of the Air Force, and the Secretary of Defense. The board at no time was under any pressure or compulsion to either include or exclude any individual by name for promotion, and arrived at its findings completely independently.

"The questioning of the committee covered not only the promotion list under consideration, but also the full gamut of Reserve affairs. When the committee sent me the verbatim transcript of the hearings with instructions to correct it, I did just that. (This, by the way, is customary procedure.)

"I had no prepared statement for the committee, because I could not anticipate the scope of the hearings. I gave opinions and answered questions to the best of my ability and knowledge at that time, with no intention ever of misrepresenting the facts or of giving false testimony. Much of the discussion centered upon opinions as to Air Force policy. I found myself in frequent disagreement with Senator Smith in this area.

"The real issue, it appears to me, is the criteria for promotion to general officer in the Reserve. Senator Smith puts great weight on current participation, longevity, and active-duty training. The Air Force agrees that these are important, but it puts greater weight upon past performance and future potential, with emphasis on the latter. Every officer on the list then under consideration had participated in Reserve activities to the extent required by law in order to be eligible for consideration for promotion. These selections, made upon a best qualified basis, included consideration not only of participation, but also of past performance and of future potential in the event of national emergency.

"Naturally, I do not relish being publicly and wrongly accused of untruthfulness, falsification, and misrepresentation by the distinguished Senator from Maine. I am at a loss to understand her action and am shocked at the harsh language of her assertion."

Mrs. Smith of Maine. Whether this statement of his is true or not I will leave to the judgment of the American people on the basis of the facts I shall subsequently reveal in the following analysis.

Before I deliver that analysis, I shall read portions of his statement and make comments.

STATEMENT BY GENERAL O'DONNELL

"Senator Smith has made a very serious charge against me—that of giving extensive false testimony and of making repeated misrepresentations before the Senate Armed Services Committee. The implication is that I deliberately falsified my testimony with the intent to deceive the committee. This allegation and its attendant implications are wrong."

MY COMMENT

This statement raises two questions. First, whether the testimony itself was false, and second, whether it was deliberately made false with intention to deceive. I merely stated that General O'Donnell gave false testimony with respect to certain nominations. There was no statement with respect to the reasons or intent as to why the testimony was not true.

The last sentence of the above statement may be considered true if both the allegation and the implications are considered, since of course there is no way of knowing the intent of the untrue statements. The last sentence is not true if it is confined only to the question of whether certain of the statements were in fact false.

STATEMENT BY GENERAL O'DONNELL

"The questioning of the committee covered not only the promotion list under consideration, but also the full gamut of Reserve affairs. When the committee sent me the verbatim transcript of the hearings with instructions to correct it, I did just that. (This, by the way, is customary procedure.)"

MY COMMENT

With regard to the question of whether the entire gamut of Reserve affairs was discussed, it could be said that there were no matters covered which should not have been within the knowledge of General O'Donnell. The fact that the overwhelming portion of the questions were based on information already furnished by the Air Force is later pointed out.

The verbatim transcript was furnished informally to the Air Force for correction in the customary manner. The custom of the committee has always been to limit the changes to those of an editorial nature, such as punctuation and improvement of grammar, and also to permit the insertion of additional information. It has never been customary to permit complete changes in answers to be made by the witness in the transcript. Due to the serious changes made by General O'Donnell the hearing was printed verbatim in its original form with an Air Force letter of correction also added at the end of the hearing.

STATEMENT BY GENERAL O'DONNELL

"I had no prepared statement for the commitee, because I could not anticipate the scope of the hearings. I gave opinions and answered questions to the best of my ability and knowledge at that time, with no intention ever of misrepresenting the facts or of giving false testimony. Much of the discussion centered upon opinions as to Air Force policy. I found myself in frequent disagreement with Senator SMITH in this area."

MY COMMENT

The overwhelming portion of the questions was based on information already furnished to the committee by the Air Force prior to the hearing which was held May 2, 1957. On February 25, 1957, the committee received the nomination list together with the records of service on each officer. These records covered the history of all military service by date, location, promotion record, their pilot rating, and awards and decorations. (Contained in printed hearing, pages 1-16.)

On March 20, I requested the chairman to obtain additional detailed information relating to the number of points earned by the nominees. (This information was furnished by the Air Force on April 3, 1957, and is contained in the printed hearing, pages 18-25.)

In addition, the Air Force was given informally 31 questions relating to the entire gamut of Air Force Reserve matters, including details on the nominees. The answers to these questions were prepared by the Air Force and given to the committee and me a number of days prior to the hearing of May 2.

In view of all the advance information it cannot be said that there was any atempt to take General O'Donnell by surprise with respect to the questions raised during the hearing.

STATEMENT BY GENERAL O'DONNELL

"The real issue, it appears to me, is the criteria for promotion to general officer in the Reserve. Senator SMITH puts great weight on current participation, longevity, and active duty training. The Air Force agrees that these are important, but it puts greater weight upon past performance and future potential, with emphasis on the latter. Every officer on the list then under consideration had participated in Reserve activities to the extent required by law in order to be eligible for consideration for promotion. These selections, made upon a best-qualified basis, included consideration not only of participation, but also of past performance and of future potential in the event of national emergency."

MY COMMENT

The points raised in the statement were also discussed only generally in the hearing. It would be true to say that the Air Force has not furnished a precise list of the criteria and the relative weight given to each factor with respect to the basis for promotions to Reserve general. Since the Air Force states that no one attempted to influence the board and since the board gave no reasons for its selections it would be difficult to know just on what basis the board did select the officers who were nominated.

Mr. President, for over a decade I have fought the fight for reservists. No one in Congress has fought more for reservists than I have. No one has introduced more Reserve legislation than I have. And because I have fought for reservists I have incurred the enmity of some of the Regular brass in the Pentagon. I unhesitatingly accept that price of enmity.

In a world that has been, and continues to be, threatened with war, it has been my belief that the only way that Americans can maintain the necessary national defense without ultimately bankrupting the economy of our country, and thus permitting the Communists to take over without firing a shot, is through the maintenance of the largest possible and best trained Reserve.

The average well-trained reservist costs the American taxpayer only one-seventh to one-tenth what a Regular does. Yet, in past wars, over 90 percent of the fighting in defense of our country has been carried by the non-Regular citizen soldiers.

It is only common sense—taxpayers' dollars and cents common sense—to maintain the best possible Reserve for the defense of our country and for discouraging Communist Russia from attacking us. That is the core of the importance of the reservists to all Americans—and that is why I have been constantly fighting for reservists, for better Reserve programs, for more equitable treatment of reservists—to attract the best to the Reserve and to keep the best in the Reserve.

I have been amazed at the "couldn't care less" attitude of some key Regular generals who control such vital policies as those on personnel with respect to the Reserves. I have been shocked at their lack of knowledge about matters with which they have a serious responsibility—a lack of knowledge which clearly results from their "couldn't care less" attitude about the Reserve.

The most recent example of this was forcefully exhibited and displayed in the recent inquiry and hearings of the Senate Armed Services Committee on the nominations of 8 Air Force reservists for brigadier general rank in the Air Force Reserve and 3 Air Force reservists for major general in the Air Force Reserve.

Representatives of the Air Force at the hearings made serious misrepresentations about the Reserve and the nominations to the committee. They displayed a shocking lack of knowledge about the Reserve and the records of the nominees. Even in written answers and material furnished by the Air Force there are glaring inaccuracies and contradictions.

Retention in the Reserve, and promotion in the Reserve, is regulated according to the provisions of the Reserve Officer Personnel Act of 1954 and the 1955 amendments to that act. As the principal Senate sponsor of this legislation, I have a keen desire to see that the intent, as well as the letter, of this law is carried out and that the will of the Congress is not thwarted and nullified.

Inquiry into the Air Force Reserve general nominations and the hearing on those nominations exposed certain facts that raise serious question as to whether the Air Force is complying with the letter of the law. The most lenient observation that can be made of the Air Force record as exposed by the hearing is that the Air Force is skating on the thinnest of ice in the justifications of minimums that it gave in apology and defense of several of the nominations.

I think it is clear from the hearing record that the Air Force has not been complying with the intent of the law—for one of the very purposes of ROPA was to eliminate from the Reserve those reservists who were not active in the Reserve and who did not train to keep themselves proficient and of the best effectiveness if and when our country should be attacked. This is only honest realism—for we want and need a real Reserve instead of merely a paper Reserve in which we merely are kidding ourselves if the reservists on whom we depend are not trained and proficient.

It is sharply surprising to discover the striking inactivity record of several of the nominees since the end of World War II. Yet, instead of being removed from the Reserve because of such inactivity, lack of training and proficiency, several of these nominees of records of inactivity for many years are being rewarded with promotion to the ranks of 1- and 2-star generals. It appears that the ROPA law is being administered by the Air Force in reverse to the objective of the law and the clear intent of Congress.

For as far as these nominees are concerned, participation in the Reserve is minimized instead of emphasized. In fact, it would not be inaccurate to characterize the Air Force policy in this respect as one of deemphasis—with training being held in comparative derogation when matched against success in big business and the movies.

There seems to be an almost contempt for point participation, which is the very foundation of the development and maintenance of the proficiency of the individual reservist. For the best measure we have for knowing whether an officer is trained is his participation in training duty. If there are officers who do not complete the required training or need not do so, then by definition there is no requirement for them in the Active Reserve.

Yet, General O'Donnell, Air Force Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel, told the committee that in his opinion one of the nominees need not put in 1 training period for the next 5 years and would still be best qualified to command a Strategic Air Force. What kind of blind thinking is this in these days when we are quickly shifting from man-piloted strategic bombers to robot-guided missiles? To what extent can an apologetic defense and attempted justification of a nomination be carried? Surely the maintenance of realism in the national air defense of our country is more important than conveniently adjusting the national air defense to justify the inactivity of one of the nominees and to meet his convenience for the acquisition of a star.

This is dangerous thinking that holds active participation in such low regard and derogation. It is bad enough, but it is even more shocking when such thinking goes to such extremes as to cast aspersions on the motives of loyal reservists for keeping up steady training participation—when a reservist is to be condemned for steady training participation to make himself proficient for the defense of his country, for your defense, for my defense, and for the defense of more than 170 million Americans.

But the thinking on the part of some influential, powerful, and responsible people has reached this radical extreme of derogation of loyally participating reservists. Such thinking was openly and vigorously expressed in the committee hearings on these nominations.

I call your attention to page 49 of the committee hearing where it was charged that point-participating reservists participate just to get the money so they can eat—that their primary interest was that they wanted more money. They are characterized in this extreme thinking as constant protesters primarily seeking more money—and they are held in derogation while some who participate relatively few days in a year are praised in highest esteem when compared to the loyal, steady participating reservists.

I shall now turn to specific, individual nominees. First, let me say that some of the nominees have most admirable records—the kind of records of Reserve training that you would expect of any reservist nominated for general rank. Clearly the best nominee record of Reserve participation is that of Brig. Gen. T. B. Herndon, who is nominated for the rank of major general. Ever since the end of World War II, General Herndon has faithfully put in his time in Reserve training. He is the only one of the 11 nominees who has such a Reserve training and participation record.

Col. J. O. Bradshaw has an excellent record that is second only to that of General Herndon on Reserve training and participation.

General Smith and Colonels Larson, De Brier, and Stiles have honorable and admirable war records, but their Reserve training records do not match such records as that of General Herndon.

General Henebry and Colonels Montgomery, Alison, Potts, and Stewart have excellent war records but there are gaps in their Reserve training records—and the gaps in the records of Colonels Montgomery, Stewart, and Alison are striking—no Reserve training or participation by Colonel Montgomery for over 15½ months after he was commissioned in the Reserve—only 9 days for Colonel Stewart in an 11-year period—only 6 days for Colonel Alison in a 9-year period. General Henebry failed to perform in his 1957 retention year required participation in his training category A. General Smith had to make a photofinish to meet the requirements of his training category D in his 1957 retention year.

Without question, a good war record is an excellent criterion for selection for general rank. But there is a limitation as to how controlling it can be as a substitute for nonparticipation in the Reserve. This was acknowledged by General O'Donnell, the Personnel Chief, when he stated at page 63 of the committee hearing:

"No; I wouldn't say not participate, and that is why we have the minimum participation. They can't go resting on their laurels. What they did between 1941 and 1945 becomes less and less significant as time goes on."

COL. JOHN B. MONTGOMERY

Col. John B. Montgomery is 1 of the 8 Reserve colonels nominated for the rank of brigadier general in the Air Force Reserve. For the detailed facts in his case, your attention is invited to pages 33 through 42 of the committee hearing record.

The facts in the case of Colonel Montgomery are disturbing because they raise some question and suspicion as to the use that the Air Force is making of the Air Force Reserve in his instance. Such question and suspicion arise from the circumstances surrounding the resignation of Colonel Montgomery from the Regular Air Force when he was a major general and his obtaining through the Reserve what was refused him on his application for retirement as a Regular officer—and his failure to have any participation or training in the Reserve for over 15½ months after being sworn into the Reserve.

The very uniqueness of the Montgomery case and the inequity that accrues to the special benefit of Colonel Montgomery was admitted by none less than the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel at pages 37 and 39 of the committee hearing record. At page 39, General O'Donnell acknowledged:

"I have been in the personnel business for 4 years over there, and that is the first time an action like this has been taken, and I don't anticipate any in the future because of this."

Briefly, the pertinent facts of the Montgomery case are:

(1) Because he was offered a higher paying position with the American Airlines as vice president in charge of maintenance and found his pay as a major general in the Regular Air Force to be inadequate to meet his financial commitments to his family, Montgomery applied on May 10, 1955, for voluntary retirement as a major general in the Regular Air Force.

(2) The Air Force rejected his application for retirement in his temporary grade of major general and instead offered to retire him in his permanent grade of colonel.

(3) Montgomery then rejected the offer of retirement in his permanent grade of colonel and elected to resign completely from the Air Force thereby losing all of his retirement rights, which included more than 50 percent of the base pay of a colonel.

(4) But the day immediately following his resignation from the Air Force, Montgomery was sworn in the Air Force Reserve as a colonel—and thereupon under the provisions of title II of the Reserve Retirement Act gained (a) back all of the retirement rights he had lost the day before upon resignation—and (b) more than what he would have been permitted in the Regular Air Force, in that he would accrue retirement benefits at the same rate as an officer who remains on active duty in the Regular Air Force. Thus, through the Reserve he got what he couldn't get as a Regular—(a) being able to apply for retirement at any time as a major general instead of just a colonel, (b) getting a full year's retirement credit just as though he were on active duty 365 days a year by putting in as little as 15 days a year in the Reserve—and the opportunity to build his retirement pay up to the very maximum—75 percent of the base pay of a major general, and (c) at the same time hold down a much better paying civilian job.

(5) Having accomplished this, Montgomery did not participate in the Reserve for over 15½ months—did not put in a single period of training in the Reserve.

(6) He will be required as a category D trainee to put in the very minimum of time in the future and no extensive participation in the Reserve will be required of him.

The defense offered in this case reveals some very interesting contradictions. First, the personnel chief flatly stated at the hearing that I was incorrect in stating that after Colonel Montgomery resigned, had he not been appointed in the Reserve component, he would not be eligible for any future retirement benefits of any kind.

General O'Donnell made it a special point to challenge me on this and to accuse me of being incorrect for he interrupted a statement that I was making. I invite your attention to page 34 of the hearing record. Then later the Air Force admitted that my statement was correct and accurate and not incorrect as General O'Donnell had charged. For this retraction I invite your attention to page 79 of the hearing record.

Second, defenders of this matter represented at the committee hearing that Montgomery made a great financial sacrifice in resigning from the Regular Air Force and then being sworn in the Air Force Reserve. On this I invite your attention to pages 36, 41, and 42 of the hearing record. In fact, the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel stated at page 36 about Montgomery: "He is taking a terrific financial sacrifice." Yet, in almost the same breath they say that Montgomery had to leave the Regular Air Force to be better off financially and to be able to meet his financial obligations to his family. On this I invite your attention to pages 36 and 41 of the hearing record.

The defenders make much of the fact that Montgomery did not retire as a Regular colonel and start receiving his retirement pay as a Regular colonel but instead did forego getting that retirement pay by going into the Reserve. In this, they attribute to him a personal financial sacrifice prompted by his desire to be active in the Reserve—even though he went for over 15½ months before doing anything in the Reserve and even though he has been placed in one of the least-active Reserve training categories—category D.

Let us examine this claim of financial sacrifice a little more closely. In the first place, Montgomery left the Regular Air Force to better himself financially—to get a higher paying job with American Airlines and later go with General Electric. I do not know what his salary was with American Airlines or what his salary is with General Electric. I have been told that his salary with American Airlines was much greater than his major general salary and that he is receiving a higher salary than that with General Electric.

Had Montgomery retired as a colonel in the Regular Air Force, he would have received retired pay of $376.74 a month, or $4,520.88 a year. Now just how much of this could he have actually realized after taxes when it is added to his salary with American Airlines or General Electric? Probably as little as half of it.

Instead Montgomery elected to resign, forego retired pay as a Regular Air Force retired colonel, and be placed in the Reserve—under which arrangement he would defer receiving any retired pay until he could get a higher percentage, 75 percent as compared to 55 percent, and on a higher base pay, major general as compared to colonel, and at a time when taxes would not take such a bite out of his retired pay.

Instead Montgomery elected to wait until later when he would be able to receive 30-year-service retired pay for a major general of $807.30 a month or $9,687.60 a year (instead of $376.74 a month or $4,520.88 a year as a retired colonel). If Montgomery fully retires at that time and is not working for General Electric or any other concern and receiving no income from them, at the present tax rates, he would have to pay only a fraction of what he would have on the retired pay of a colonel on top of his salary with American Airlines or General Electric.

Defenders of the Montgomery case interestingly make a vigorous claim that Montgomery went into the Air Force Reserve because of alleged devotion to the service—on this I invite your attention to pages 34, 37, and 39—and that defense was even carried to the point of claiming that Montgomery would rather stay in the service through being in the Reserve than to receive money (see p. 41) and that Montgomery deliberately planned to resign instead of retire so as to avoid taking retirement money from the Government (see p. 42).

In other words, in this attempt to picture Montgomery as being so devoted to the service, claims are made that Montgomery (1) did not want to retire, and (2) that he resigned and went into the Reserve to save the Government money. The ridiculousness and the sophistry of these claims is exposed by the official records and the facts in the Montgomery case.

Make no mistake about it, Montgomery wanted to retire as a major general instead of going into the Air Force Reserve.

Make no mistake about it, Montgomery wanted the retired pay of a major general in 1955—instead of wanting to avoid receiving retired pay from the Government and so desiring to make a financial sacrifice by going into the Reserve.

Make no mistake about it, Montgomery did not originally plan to deliberately resign instead of retire.

That this is the real Montgomery story is officially recorded in the Air Force records. For those records show that Montgomery himself applied on May 10, 1955, for retirement as a major general in the Regular Air Force. The records show that his application was disapproved.

Thus, the official record shows that Montgomery did try to get the retired pay of a major general—that he did not attempt to stay in the service and avoid leaving it by retirement—that he did not deliberately elect to make a financial sacrifice so that he could stay in the service—that he did not deliberately attempt to save the Government money—that he did not originally deliberately resign instead of retire so he could stay in the service and save the Government from paying him retired pay—that he did not do these things for the purposes and reasons claimed by his defenders.

Instead the official records of the Air Force reveal that when Montgomery's application for retirement as a major general in the Regular Air Force was rejected and instead he was offered retirement in his permanent grade of colonel, that then and only then did Montgomery elect to resign instead of retire and go into the Air Force Reserve.

It does not take a mind reader to see that Montgomery's first concern and attempt was to get retired as a major general and not any concern with staying in the service through the Reserve or trying to save his Government any money. Even the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel admits that Montgomery because of pride was not willing to retire as a colonel but wanted to retain his rank as a major general (see p. 34).

It is clear that the only way that he could do this was by being put in the Reserve, for under Title II of the Reserve Retirement Act he was entitled to retire in the rank of major general instead of colonel.

It was clear that he could get through this Reserve clause device as much as 30 years' credit and maximum 75 percent retired pay with very little additional effort in the Reserve instead of the only 20 years retired pay of a mere colonel in the Regular Air Force.

It was clear that he could make a much better tax saving through this device.

Again we have an illustration of the shockingly distorted thinking on the part of some on these nominations. How can the defenders of the Montgomery nomination really have the temerity to make the obviously ridiculous claims that they do?

But how about the Reserve record of Colonel Montgomery? That record shows that Montgomery did not participate in the Reserve until after over 15½ months after he was commissioned in the Reserve. Is that a record of having his heart in the Reserve as the General O'Donnell, the personnel chief, claimed at page 37 of the hearing record?

He finally got around to a 15-day training tour in October 1956—not long before the news that a general promotion board would meet. And he has not done any Reserve training since that time. In other words, he has earned only 15 points in the Reserve in over 2 years.

And what is expected of him in the future? Very little in spite of the fact that his mobilization assignment is that of deputy commander of the 8th Force of the Strategic Air Command. For he has been placed in training category D, one of the least active of Reserve training categories which requires only a 15-day training tour in each year.

In fact, the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel seemed quite emphatic on this, for at page 35 of the hearing record, he stated: "He [Montgomery] could not go to any drill for the next 5 years and still be outstandingly qualified to move into the job for which he has a mobilization assignment out in SAC."

What kind of thinking is this when 5 years from now in the rapid changing character of our Air Force—of the Strategic Air Command—when we are shifting from man-piloted B-52's to mechanically piloted guided missiles—when in 5 years from now it is obvious that the Strategic Air Command will be radically different from what it is now and what it was in 1955 when Montgomery resigned from the Air Force?

One final note about the strange contradictory and distorted defense made by the Air Force of the Montgomery nomination. The Air Force, through its Secretary of the Air Force and its Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel, glaringly contradicted itself in its special defense of the Montgomery nomination.

In written answers submitted to the committee, the Air Force, through the office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel, represented to the committee that all 8 nominees for the rank of brigadier general were considered to be so equally best qualified that it was impossible to select only a 5 best from the 8 and thus unable to comply with the original instructions given to the selection board to select only 5 colonels for promotion to brigadier general—so impossible that the board requested and received amendment of the instructions to permit the selection of 8 instead of 5.

Thus, the Air Force in its written answer at page 69 of the hearing record represented that all 8 nominees were equally best qualified and none of the 8 were superior to the other 7. The Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel when asked about this written answer reaffirmed, at page 66, that answer. He also stated, at page 63: "* * * we permitted them to name 8 instead of 5, because they said they were all so closely alined * * *."

Yet, in making a special defense of the Montgomery nomination, the then Air Force Secretary Quarles wrote me that Montgomery was selected as 1 of the 5 best and that he was not in the additional 3. Secretary Quarles wrote me (see p. 66): "Colonel Montgomery was not 1 of these additional 3, in that he had already been selected in the first 5 as being outstandingly qualified."

When confronted with this contradiction, the Air Force rationalization and attempted explanation was just as illogical and unconvincing as the other strange, contradictory, and distorted defense made in other aspects of the Montgomery nomination, which I have previously outlined. In a written explanation the Air Force said that the discrepancy was caused by the use of the word "selection" and drew a distinction between ballot and selection, saying:

"The apparent discrepancy in Secretary Quarles' letter and General O'Donnell's testimony is caused by the use of the word 'selection' by Secretary Quarles. Selections are technically not completed until the board adjourns. The board voted unanimously on the first ballot that General Montgomery should be one of those officers selected for promotion. Consequently, it is believed that Secretary Quarles meant that if the list was restricted to 5, General Montgomery would have been 1 of these 5." (See p. 67 of the hearing record.)

The Air Force explanation misses the point, unintentionally or otherwise. The point is that on the one hand General O'Donnell, the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel, represented that all 8 nominees were considered so equally best qualified that the selection board could not narrow the selection down to 5 as it had been instructed to and was forced to ask that the instructions be amended to permit the selection of 8—while on the other hand, Air Force Secretary Quarles, in the special defense of the Montgomery nomination, stated clearly that all 8 were not considered equally best qualified but that Montgomery was considered to be in the best 5 and therefore better than the additional 3 selected.

In fact, the O'Donnell rationalization and attempted explanation itself further contradicts the original written answer given by General O'Donnell's office that all 8 were found to be equally best qualified—for in the O'Donnell attempted explanation it is admitted that all eight were not considered to be equally best qualified and that Montgomery was considered better qualified than others of the nominees.

Analysis of the Montgomery case, as presented by the Air Force to the committee, reveals a pattern of disregard for truth, disregard for accuracy, and disregard for encouragement of active participation in the Air Force Reserve—a pattern you will see abundantly and repeatedly displayed as I reveal the true and pertinent facts in the cases of others in this list of nominees.

In addition to the facts of the Montgomery case which I have set forth, there is an equally serious question as to whether the Reserve retirement laws will not be used in the Montgomery case in the manner in which this legislation was never intended. Montgomery will eventually retire as a major general under title II, Public Law 810, and will receive a full year's credit for each year in the Reserve for retirement pay purposes. I would like to emphasize that title II of this statute does not require the completion of any retirement points in order to be credited with the full year's retirement credit.

The provisions which are usually referred to as the Reserve Retirement Act are contained in title III, not title II, of Public Law 810. Under title III, reservists receive an equivalent of about one-seventh of a full year in terms of retirement pay for each year of retirement participation. In order to receive this modest credit, a reservist must be credited with at least 50 points for a year's participation. Montgomery, therefore, is receiving a full year's credit even though he is not required to participate by law even to the extent of the reservists who will receive only one-seventh of a year's credit under title III.

There is also another aspect of the Montgomery case which in my opinion might constitute a breach of trust with the Committee on Armed Services. General O'Donnell indicated that the Air Force refused to permit Montgomery to retire since the Air Force had verbally agreed with the committee that the temporary generals would be required to serve 30 years before retirements would be approved. Since Montgomery preferred a Reserve commission in lieu of being retired as a colonel, and since he will eventually receive the retirement pay of a major general, there is in my mind a serious question as to whether his appointment as a reservist did in this way violate the spirit of the requirement of the 30 years of active service.

COL. JAMES M. STEWART

Col. James M. Stewart is 1 of the 8 Reserve colonels nominated for the rank of brigadier general in the Air Force Reserve. For detailed facts in his case, your attention is invited to pages 42 through 49 of the committee hearing record.

The question in the case of Colonel Stewart is his record of inactivity in the Reserve for so many years—a record of only 9 days of Reserve service in a period of 11 years—no Reserve activity or service in 1946, 1947, 1948, 1949, 1950, 1951, 1953, 1954, and 1955. In fact, Colonel Stewart's record of inactivity became such that as recently as 1955, and apparently less than 2 years ago, he was put in the Inactive Reserve.

From the end of World War II until about a year ago in July 1956, Colonel Stewart did only 9 days of Reserve duty. That was in 1952. The nature of that duty is recorded as with Psychological Warfare Division of the Air Force in Washington. The Air Force has furnished no further information on the nature and character of that duty.

From the end of World War II Colonel Stewart did not perform a 15-day training tour until a year ago in July 1956. Through the fiscal year 1957, Colonel Stewart performed only 4 inactive duty training periods.

Such is the past record of Colonel Stewart. Now what is expected and required of him on participation in the Air Force Reserve in the future? Not much more than his rate of very limited participation in the past. For he has been placed in one of the least active training categories of the Air Force Reserve. He has been placed in a training category "D", which has as its only requirement the performance of a 15-day tour of active duty each year and absolutely nothing else.

This low activity training category for Colonel Stewart is puzzling and disturbing in view of the fact that the mobilization assignment given to him is that of deputy director of operations of the Strategic Air Command. That is a highly important and strategic assignment in the defense of our country—for the backbone of our present defense and our military might is the combination of our Strategic Air Command plus the atomic-hydrogen bombs. And the very heart of the Strategic Air Command is the Operations Division.

In other words, mobilization assignment given to Colonel Stewart is the deputy or that of the No. 2 commander of the very heart of our national defense. Yet, Colonel Stewart is put in one of the least active training categories of only 15 days required a year.

Does that make sense? Does it require, or even permit, Colonel Stewart to develop and maintain a proficiency for him to be able to handle such a tremendously important assignment if war comes? Or can it be the case that the Air Force has no intention of Colonel Stewart holding down the position of Deputy Director of Operations of the Strategic Air Command if war comes?

Honest realism indicates a negative answer to the first of two questions—and a positive answer to the last question.

Now let us take a look at the justification given by the Air Force for the training category it designates as training category D. The justification given by the Air Force at pages 54 and 71 of the hearing record is: "These individuals are considered proficient in their AF specialty by virtue of their recent release from active military service or maintain their proficiency through their normal civilian pursuits."

How do either of these bases apply to Colonel Stewart? He was released from active military service in September 1945. That is not a "recent release" by any stretch of the imagination, however convenient or wishful, unless you consider something that happened 10 or 12 years past to be recent.

Nineteen hundred and forty-five is not recent in terms of the status of the Air Force and its operations. There have been tremendous changes in the Air Force since 1945. In fact, the United States Air Force and the Department of the Air Force did not exist at the time of Colonel Stewart's release from active military service. In fact, the Strategic Air Command was not in existence and did not come into existence until after Colonel Stewart was released from active military service. In fact, since that time the B–29 has been replaced by the B–36 and the B–36 replaced by the B–52. In fact, since that time propeller-driven aircraft have been replaced in the Air Force by jet-powered, propellerless aircraft. In fact, now the next step appears to be the transition from piloted aircraft to ballistic missiles.

No, 1945, the year of Colonel Stewart's release from active military service is not a recent year—either in terms of time or in terms of changes and developments.

But perhaps the other basis for training category D properly applies to Colonel Stewart. What is that other basis? "Maintain their proficiency through their normal civilian pursuits" is the other basis. What is the normal civilian pursuit of Colonel Stewart? In other words, how does he make his living? Is it as an airline pilot or executive? No. Is it in the aircraft industry? No.

Of course, you and I know, so do millions of his fans and admirers, that Col. James Stewart's normal civilian pursuit is that of motion-picture actor. I leave it to your judgment as to whether Colonel Stewart can maintain through the making of motion pictures an adequate proficiency for the position of Deputy Director of Operations of the Strategic Air Command. The inescapable answer is "No."

Inferences were made at the committee hearing that Colonel Stewart should not be barred from being made a general in the Air Force Reserve because he is "a moving-picture star" (see pp. 43 and 49). No one has ever suggested that he should be barred because he is a motion-picture actor. But he should not be made a general merely because he is a motion-picture actor.

In fact, I have not made any derogatory reference to his motion-picture status. I did not suggest that factor as an issue. It was the Air Force defenders of the Stewart nomination who brought that in as an issue at the hearing.

More than that, it was the Air Force itself that officially and inescapably brought that factor into consideration by the very wording of the language on training category D—the training category of Colonel Stewart—by the selection of the criterion of "normal civilian pursuits" as applied to measuring the proficiency of an individual reservist in relation to his specific mobilization assignment.

Yes, the Air Force itself brought this factor into consideration—the application of Colonel Stewart's normal civilian pursuit of motion picture actor to his proficiency and relative need of activity, or inactivity as this case is, on his mobilization assignment of Deputy Director of Operations of the Strategic Air Command.

Do you believe that Colonel Stewart's work as a motion picture actor makes him so proficient for being Deputy Director of Operations of the Strategic Air Command that he does not have to train 48 periods a year or 24 periods a year like other reservists whose normal civilian pursuits are not related to their mobilization assignments? Do you believe that there is real justification for requiring of Colonel Stewart only one-fourth or one-half of training required of other reservists?

With interest I have read publicity evolving from the committee's consideration of the Stewart nomination. Much of that publicity has been misleading in attempting to give the impression that Colonel Stewart has been quite active in the Reserve and that he is outstandingly proficient as a pilot.

There are three pilot ratings for pilots in the Air Force. The highest is command pilot. The second highest is senior pilot. The lowest is pilot.

There are many active Air Force Reserve colonels who have the highest pilot rating of command pilot. Now for as important a mobilization assignment as Deputy Director of Operations of the Strategic Air Command, I would think that the Air Force would assign a reservist with the highest pilot rating of command pilot—and if not that, with the rating of senior pilot.

But it did not. For Colonel Stewart's rating is neither that of command pilot or senior pilot—but instead that of pilot, the lowest of the three pilot ratings.

At the hearing, General O'Donnell, the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel betrayed a shocking lack of knowledge on this very important point. I asked him in connection with Colonel Stewart's mobilization assignment and nomination if it wasn't a fact that the overwhelming number of rated Air Force Reserve general officers were either command pilots or senior pilots. Eagerly and without the slightest hesitancy or qualification, General O'Donnell answered categorically and flatly and with emphasis, "Oh, no. Definitely not."

I then asked him to furnish a list of all rated Air Force Reserve general officers, together with their ratings. When he subsequently furnished such a list, he also sought to have his answer for the printed copy of of the hearing changed from "Oh, no. Definitely not" to an opposite answer of "Yes." I invite your attention to pages 45 and 80 of the hearing record.

General O'Donnell's defense of the Stewart nomination was either so eager that he made a deliberate misrepresentation to the committee on a vital point—or he was so indifferent that he had made no effort to do his homework for the hearing and make it a point to be informed on a personnel matter on which he, as Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel, should be informed and on which he was assigned by the Air Force the responsibility of being the Air Force representative at the hearing for the specific purpose of answering the questions of the committee. For after all, the committee did not ask for him to testify, it was the Air Force who designated him.

It is abundantly clear why General O'Donnell sought to change his false answer—for in the list that I requested, it was revealed that of the 21 rated Air Force Reserve general pilots, 18 are listed as command pilots or senior pilots and only 3 with the lowest pilot rating of pilot like Colonel Stewart. That is a ratio of 6 to 1—which I believe could reasonably be characterized as an overwhelming ratio as I so characterized it in my question to which General O'Donnell gave a false answer. On this I invite your attention to pages 45 and 46 of the hearing record.

Even then in his written answer and list subsequently submitted, General O'Donnell continued to give erroneous and inaccurate information to the committee. For he listed as one of the three pilots, Brig. Gen. Robert J. Smith—and this was in direct contradiction with information which he had earlier submitted to the committee in which he represented General Smith to be a command pilot. For this contradiction and further example of repeated sloppiness and inaccuracy of the Air Force in representations and information that it submits to the committee, I invite your attention to pages 6 and 46 of the hearing record.

It appears that the more accurate of these two representations is the earlier one at page 6 which represents General Smith to be a command pilot. That then makes the division 19 to 2 or a ratio of 9½ to 1, and an even more overwhelming ratio substantiating the observation that I made to which General O'Donnell gave a false answer.

Tone of the misleading information and misrepresentations made by representatives of the Air Force to the newspapers about the Stewart nomination was revealed in an item in the March 23, 1957, issue of the Air Force Times which stated:

"Action by Senator MARGARET CHASE SMITH, Republican, of Maine, in temporarily blocking Reserve general promotions of 11 Air Force officers has stirred up considerable comment here. At question, it seems, is whether the officers have participated enough to warrant stars. Film star Jimmy Stewart, up for one star, is on the list. Insiders, citing his long record of participation and strong support of USAF, are decidedly unhappy over the holdup. The full list of names was published in Air Force Times for March 2."

Now I call your attention to that part of the item which states: "Insiders, citing his long record of participation * * *" and I recall your attention to the fact that in an 11-year period from September 1945 to July last year, Colonel Stewart participated only 9 days in Reserve activity. I ask you if that is a long record of participation or a long record of nonparticipation. It is just another example of the reverse thinking and the strange, contradictory, and distorted defense made by the Air Force on these nominations. Actually it constituted nothing less than a misrepresentation of Colonel Stewart's record on participation in the Reserve.

In keeping with this false publicity given to the newspapers on the Stewart nomination, an article in the Washington Daily News of April 4, 1957, reported that an official of the Air Force Association stated with respect to Colonel Stewart:

"He trains actively with the Reserve every year." When asked about this at the hearing, the Air Force Personnel Chief branded this as a false statement as he said, "That is not a true statement." On this I invite your attention to page 44 of the hearing record.

In the same newspaper article, the unidentified Air Force Association official is further quoted as saying about Colonel Stewart:

"He's had 18 hours as first pilot of a B–52." When asked if this statement was true, the Air Force Personnel Chief said, "I don't know, but my answer would be, 'No.' I don't see how he could be the first pilot of a B–52." On this I invite your attention to page 45 of the hearing record.

In the same newspaper article, the unidentified Air Force Association official was quoted as saying that Colonel Stewart could fly a B–52 anywhere in the world. When asked about this statement, the Air Force Personnel Chief not only admitted that Colonel Stewart could not be in command of a B–52—but what is even more important and significant in relation to Colonel Stewart's mobilization assignment as Deputy Director of Operations of the Strategic Air Command—the Air Force Personnel Chief admitted that Colonel Stewart is not current on any Air Force aircraft and that Colonel Stewart is not fully qualified on any military aircraft. On this I invite your attention to page 45 of the hearing record.

In the same newspaper article, Colonel Stewart himself is quoted as saying with respect to his nomination:

"I didn't even know I was up for brigadier. I read it in the papers."

When asked about this, the Air Force Personnel Chief admitted that Colonel Stewart had received an official telegram from the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel notifying him of his nomination. The Air Force Personnel Chief termed the newspaper item inaccurate and said that worldwide notice was given on December 14, 1956, through various newspapers and other news media that all Air Force reservists who had served 1 year as a colonel would be considered for promotion to brigadier general and that thus Stewart was put on notice. On this I invite your attention to pages 46 and 68 of the hearing record.

Thus, the hearing established that false stories had been carried in the newspapers making misrepresentations that (1) Colonel Stewart had a long record of participation in the Air Force Reserve when just the opposite was the case as he had a long record of nonparticipation; (2) that he trained actively with the Reserve every year when just the opposite was the case as he did not start such training until less than a year before the date of the article and had not performed a 15-day training tour for 11 years from the end of World War II until July 1956; (3) that he was first pilot of a B–52 when just the opposite was the case as he not only was not the first pilot of a B–52 but he was not even current or qualified on any military aircraft; and (4) that Colonel Stewart had had no notice or knowledge that he was being considered for promotion to brigadier general, when as a matter of fact he had been put on notice by the worldwide announcement made 72 days prior to announcement of the nominations and when he had received an official telegram of notification from the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel.

While this pattern and design of misrepresentations is disturbing on the test of truth alone, the significance of it is not limited to the factor of veracity. Perhaps even more significant in the revelation of the misrepresentations is the revelation of the facts that Colonel Stewart did not possess the record and proficiencies that were claimed for him in connection with his qualifications for his mobilization assignment as Deputy Director of Operations of the Strategic Air Command on which was based and justified his nomination to brigadier general.

As in the Montgomery case, again the Air Force pattern of disregard for truth, disregard for accuracy, and disregard for encouragement of active participation in the Air Force Reserve is again abundantly and repeatedly displayed in the Stewart case.

COL. JOHN R. ALISON

Col. John R. Alison is one of the eight Reserve colonels nominated for the rank of brigadier general in the Air Force Reserve. For the detailed facts in his case, your attention is invited to pages 49 through 53 of the committee hearing record.

Like Colonel Stewart, the question in the case of Colonel Alison is the record of inactivity in the Reserve for so many years—a record of only 6 days of Reserve service in a period of 9 years—a record of no Reserve activity in 1947, 1948, 1949, 1950, 1951, and 1952—and with only 3 points earned in 1953 and only 3 points earned in 1954.

Colonel Alison was almost completely inactive until he was given command of a Reserve reconnaissance wing in May of 1955. He did not work up to or earn that wing command through activity and participation in the Reserve. Instead it was the opposite as he demonstrated no willingness to become active in the Reserve until he was given a Reserve assignment that carried the authorization of the rank of brigadier general. This is hardly an example for the Air Force to exhibit to boost the morale of reservists who for years participate and train actively in the hopes of being rewarded with promotion from within the organization.

At page 52 of the hearing record in response to the request of Senator Stennis for a list of all nominees who have served more than the minimum requirements, the Air Force listed Colonel Alison as being one of the "officers who are up for promotion [who] have had more than the minimum 15 days' active duty per year since 1954."

This is a misrepresentation and untruthful for the record on Alison submitted by the Air Force on pages 14 and 24 of the hearing record show that Alison had no 15-day active duty in 1954 and the first half of 1955 and that Alison earned only 3 points in 1954 and no points in the first half of 1955.

Again as in the cases of Colonel Montgomery and Colonel Stewart, here in the case of Colonel Alison we see the Air Force pattern of disregard for truth, disregard for accuracy, and disregard for encouragement of active participation in the Air Force Reserve abundantly and repeatedly displayed.

BRIG. GEN. ROBERT J. SMITH

Brig. Gen. Robert J. Smith is one of the three Reserve brigadier generals nominated for the rank of major general in the Air Force Reserve. For detailed facts in his case, your attention is invited to pages 5, 20, and 27 through 33 of the committee hearing record.

Based on information furnished by the Air Force to the committee, it does not appear that General Smith has had a consistently active participation in the Air Force Reserve since 1950. The information furnished and brought out at the hearing reveals that at the time of the hearing:

(1) He had not performed a 15-day tour of duty since fiscal year 1950 although that is the only requirement of the training category D in which he has been placed;

(2) He earned only 1 point in 1951—did not earn any points in 1952—only 12 points in 1953—only 18 points in 1955—only 23 points in 1956—and only 10 points in the first half of fiscal 1957;

(3) No considerable Reserve activity or participation is expected of him in the future, since he has been assigned a training category D, one of the least-active training categories;

(4) At the time of the hearing he had taken no training at all in any of his three mobilization assignments since 1951—or for over 6 years, which prompts me to make the inquiring observation of what is the purpose of a mobilization assignment if you do not train in it?; and

(5) His last three mobilization assignments have been on positions occupied by colonels while he has been a brigadier general and is now nominated for promotion to major general.

General Smith is in training category D in which reservists participate in no inactive duty training but are required to perform a 15-day tour of active dutv each year. Yet at the time of the hearing (May 2, 1957) he had not performed a 15-day tour of active duty since 1950.

General O'Donnell, personnel chief, in answer to a question put by Senator Stennis stated that a 2 weeks' tour is the minimum requirement (see p. 51 of the hearing record). In answer to questions put to him by Chairman Russell, General O'Donnell stated that those who did not do the 2 weeks' duty would be dropped from the rolls and in answer to Chairman Russell's question of "They are dropped from the rolls?" General O'Donnell said, "Yes." (See pp. 53 and 59 of the hearing record.) Yet, General Smith, in spite of the fact that at the time of the hearing he had not performed a 2 weeks' tour since 1950, had not been dropped from the rolls.

Apparently the committee's investigation and holdup on these Reserve general nominations has had some beneficial effect in this case of General Smith, for the first time since 1950—for the first time in 7 years—General Smith has performed a 15-day tour of active-duty training.

However, the last-minute timing of that Reserve participation on the part of General Smith is most revealing in its implications. He did not comply with this training category D requirement until the very last possible time—he just barely got under the wire in a photofinish on compliance with Reserve training regulations.

He performed that required duty in the period June 16 through June 30 of this year. His deadline for starting such compliance was June 16 and for ending it was June 30. Had he started in 1 day later, he would have been in default and subject to being dropped from the rolls according to testimony given by General O'Donnell.

Yet, had the committee automatically rubber-stamped these nominations when they came up in February and not taken a position that the Air Force comply with the law and enforce its regulations on Reserve training and participation—and had General Smith failed to make his photofinish—we would have had the situation of the committee approving of the promotion of a reservist to major general who shortly thereafter had been dropped from the rolls for failure to participate and comply with the Reserve training regulations.

The Smith promotion nomination for promotion to major general was submitted to the committee on February 25, 1957—the hearing was on May 2, 1957. At neither of these times had General Smith fully complied with the requirements of his low training category D. The holdup on committee action on these nominations has been because of the training deficiencies of the nominees.

If it has served no other purpose, it is clear that the committee's holdup of these nominations until after the end of fiscal year 1957 was apparently convincing to some of the nominees, who finally met the requirements before fiscal year 1957 expired, that the committee meant business and would insist upon the nominees meeting the minimum 15-day active duty tour even if the Air Force didn't so insist.

It will be interesting to see if these nominees with such poor participation and training records and who so tardily begin to meet this requirement, will continue to do so once they have gotten their promotions or if they will lapse back again into their previous deficient and inactive records on training participation.

It is of further interest that only after the challenge was made on the training participation records of the nominees was a record of all 11 nominees doing a 15-day tour achieved—that fiscal 1957 is the first year in which all nominees complied with this requirement.

At page 28 of the hearing record, General O'Donnell made a direct and unequivocal misrepresentation to the committee in stating that General Smith had done a 15-day tour in 1956 and had served from December 10 to December 31, in 1956. When it was called to his attention that the record of information furnished to the committee by General O'Donnell's office on General Smith did not support his assertion, General O'Donnell again repeated his misrepresentation.

The truth is that General Smith did not serve at any time during the period of December 10 to December 31, 1956.

So that there may not be the slightest question about the direct and unequivocal misrepresentation that General O'Donnell not only made, but even repeated, when his attention was called to the fact that the information his office had submitted was at variance with his misrepresentation, I quote the hearing record on this.

"Senator Smith. * * * Since General Smith has had no 15-day tour since 1950, and has earned only a nominal number of points for other years, what is the basis of his promotion to major general?

"General O'Donnell. Senator Smith, he met the minimum requirements for retention, year of 1956, in serving from the 10th to the 31st of December. * * *

"Senator Smith. I do not see that it does, in this record, but of course you know.

"General O'Donnell. To December 31, 1956."

Later General O'Donnell attempted to change his testimony to strike his false answer and misrepresentation on this point. He was not permitted to change his false testimony but instead permitted to have the Air Force file a letter of correction of his false testimony in the appendix of the hearing record at page 79.

And as a final note on the misrepresentations made by the Air Force in the General Smith case, attention is invited to the glaring contradiction in the written information submitted by General O'Donnell to the committee.

At page 45 of the hearing record, when General O'Donnell, in answering my question about the overwhelming number of rated Reserve general officers being command pilots or senior pilots instead of the lowest rating of pilot like Colonel Stewart had, denied that was true with the emphatic statement of "Oh, no. Definitely not" (which incidentally was another direct misrepresentation in itself and which General O'Donnell later sought to have stricken from the printed record). I then asked General O'Donnell to furnish the committee with a list of all rated Reserve general officers by name and by rating. He later did and in that list he submitted, General Smith was listed as one of the small number of three rated Reserve Air Force generals with the lowest pilot rating of pilot. I invite your attention to page 46 of the hearing record.

Yet, on February 25, 1957, when the nominations were sent to the Senate, General O'Donnell sent information on each nominee and in the printed information on General Smith it was stated that General Smith was a command pilot. I call your attention to page 6 of the hearing record.

Now just which pilot rating does General Smith have—the lowest rating of pilot or the highest rating of command pilot? To say the least, this is another example of the shocking carelessness of General O'Donnell and his office with the truth and with accuracy in these cases.

But it is in character and in the Air Force pattern of disregard for truth, disregard for accuracy, and disregard for encouragement of active participation in the Air Force Reserve as previously exhibited in the résumé of the records in the Montgomery case, the Stewart case, and the Alison case.

BRIG. GEN. JOHN P. HENEBRY

Brig. Gen. John P. Henebry is one of the three Reserve generals nominated for the rank of major general in the Air Force Reserve. For detailed facts in his case, your attention is invited to pages 4, 19, 57, and 59 of the committee hearing record.

General Henebry failed to perform a 15-day tour of active duty in fiscal years 1953, 1954, and 1956.

General Henebry has a training category A assignment, which, according to Air Force representations made to the committee at pages 53 and 71 of the hearing record, requires personnel assigned to this category "to perform 48 inactive duty training periods annually and to perform a 15-day tour of active duty."

Of these two training category A requirements, General Henebry complied with only one in fiscal 1957—and that he did very belatedly and, like General Smith, almost too late—and only after these nominations had been held up by the committee because of the training record deficiencies of the nominees.

The nominations have been before the committee since February 25, 1957, and the committee hearing was on May 2, 1957. General Henebry's retention year ended June 30, 1957. He didn't perform his required 15-day tour of active duty until June 9 through June 23, 1957—just a week before the deadline—and 4 months after his nomination had been held up in committee because of his noncompliance with the requirements of training category A—and 7 weeks after the committee's hearing on May 2, 1957.

While General Henebry thus did finally and belatedly comply with one requirement of his training category A, nevertheless he failed to comply with the other requirement of that category—performing 48 inactive duty training periods annually.

He not only failed to perform 48 inactive duty training periods in his retention year 1957 (which is also the fiscal year 1957) but his record on this requirement was actually zero on this training category A requirement as he did not perform any inactive duty training period in his 1957 retention year. In fact, in all of that year he earned only 26 points altogether, all of which was active duty, including 15 points for his belated 15-day active duty tour.

General O'Donnell testified that no waivers had been granted to any of the nominees (see p. 60 of the hearing record) and that all nominees had met the minimum requirements (see p. 59 of the hearing record).

Obviously, General O'Donnell gave false testimony and made serious misrepresentations as to General Henebry's record and participation—for General Henebry obviously failed to meet the minimum rules and yet General O'Donnell says that none of the nominees were granted waivers and all nominees met the minimum rules. He made these answers at points in the hearing record when Senator Symington spoke specifically about General Henebry.

General O'Donnell at the hearing misrepresented that General Henebry had had more than the 15 days' active duty per year since 1954 (see p. 52 of the hearing record) when the truth was that as of the time of this representation to the committee General Henebry had not performed 15 days' active duty in his then current retention year. Again, as in the Montgomery case, Stewart case, the Alison case, and the Smith case, there is repeated the Air Force pattern of disregard for truth, disregard for accuracy, and disregard for encouragement of active participation in the Air Force Reserve.

COLS. DANIEL DE BRIER, RAMSAY D. POTTS, JR., AND KENNETH STILES

Cols. Daniel DeBrier, Ramsay D. Potts, Jr., and Kenneth Stiles are 3 of the 8 Reserve colonels nominated for the rank of brigadier general in the Air Force Reserve. For detailed facts in their cases see pages 9, 12, 15, 22, 23, 25, and 57 through 60 of the committee hearing record.

These reservists have considerably better participation and training records than the nominees I have previously discussed. But Colonel Potts did not perform a 2-week duty tour in 1951, 1953, 1954, and 1955—a total of 4 years. Colonel DeBrier did not perform a 2-week duty tour in 1953, 1954, 1955, and 1956—a total of 4 years. Colonel Stiles did not perform a 2-week duty tour in 1951, 1952, and 1955—a total of 3 years.

But according to an International News Service article dated March 16, 1957:

"The Air Force said none of the officers could have been nominated if they had not served 2 weeks of active duty each year."

According to this statement attributed to the Air Force, these Reserve colonels would not be eligible for nomination.

Not until I confronted General O'Donnell with this newspaper article was there any Air Force refutation of this statement. In other words, the Air Force for 47 days after the publication of this statement permitted it to stand unchallenged and permitted the newspaper reading public to be misled in this respect. And it did not correct it until I confronted General O'Donnell with the statement.

There was another inaccurate impression created in that article about these nominations as the article said at another point:

"However, the Air Force and the Reserve Officers Association said all 11 men nominated for major general and brigadier general are fully qualified and active."

Now in sharp contrast to the Air Force's failure for 47 days (and not until I confronted General O'Donnell with it) to refute the statement in the article that the Air Force had said that none of the officers could have been nominated if they had not served 2 weeks of active duty each year, the very morning that this INS article appeared in the papers the national president of the Reserve Officers Association called my office and repudiated the statement in the article attributed to the Reserve Officers Association.

In sharp contrast to the attitude and policy of the Air Force to permit a false impression to be given to the reading public and failure to refute such a false representation until its hand was called on this matter, the national president of the Reserve Officers Association immediately, and on his own initiative, acted to refute the misrepresentation attributed to the Reserve Officers Association. He followed up with a letter to me officially repudiating the false representation attributed to the Reserve Officers Association. On this I invite your attention to that letter at pages 17 and 18 of the committee hearing record.

Again as in the Montgomery case, the Stewart case, the Alison case, the Smith case, and the Henebry case, there is repeated the Air Force pattern of disregard for truth, disregard for accuracy, and disregard for encouragement of active participation in the Air Force Reserve. The only difference is that the degree in the DeBrier, Potts, and Stiles cases is somewhat less.

COL. JESS LARSON

Col. Jess Larson is one of the eight Reserve colonels nominated for the rank of brigadier general in the Air Force Reserve. For detailed facts in his case see pages 6, 20, and 54 through 57.

Colonel Larson has a good record of Air Force Reserve participation beginning in 1953 up to the present time. However, he did not join the Air Force Reserve until August 1952. In the short space of 4½ years he is nominated for promotion to brigadier general.

The Air Force represented to the committee that Colonel Larson had a training assignment in training category A. On this I invite your attention to page 20 of the hearing record.

Since the Air Force at pages 53 and 71 of the hearing record made the following statement about membership in training category A:

"Training category A: Air Reserve wings rated mobilization assignees, separate units such as AACS squadrons, navigation training squadrons are identified with this training category," and since Colonel Larson had the mobilization assignment of Director of Legislation and Liaison, Office, Secretary of the Air Force, and was not a rated mobilization assignee or in any of the units or groups ascribed to training category A, I asked Air Force representatives at the hearing how Colonel Larson could have a training category A assignment.

I never got a satisfactory answer at the hearing. There was no attempt on the part of the Air Force representatives at the hearing to deny that Colonel Larson had a training category A assignment or to admit that the information given was incorrect.

To the contrary, Air Force representatives left the committee with the impression that Colonel Larson did in fact have a training category A assignment. And what is more the Air Force was perfectly willing to permit that erroneous impression stand and the misrepresentation to remain uncorrected.

For it was not until after I made an issue of getting at the truth on this point by writing a letter to the chairman of the committee on May 17, 1957, asking for the Air Force to clear up the matter, that the Air Force finally did admit that it had submitted incorrect information to the committee and that Colonel Larson did not have a training category A assignment but rather that he had a training category B assignment. And the Air Force did not make this correction until 22 days after the hearing. On this see page 56 of the hearing record.

What training category Colonel Larson had was not of any immense importance in this matter. What is significant is that the Air Force was willing to let the committee remain misled until I called the hand of the Air Force on this point. It illustrates again the disregard of the Air Force for giving the committee the truth and accurate information—an indication of a calloused indifference to the committee's request for accurate information.

The frantic extent to which the Air Force has gone to defend these nominations was sharply illustrated by the observations of an Air Force defender at pages 56 and 57 of the hearing record. The Air Force defender argued that the Air Force is constantly criticized in some quarters for its lack of logistic ability—and that the Larson nomination was justified because Colonel Larson is an expert on logistics.

Well, even granting that these assertions are true, what relevancy do they have to the Larson nomination? Obviously none—for Colonel Larson does not have a mobilization assignment in the field of logistics—and the promotions to brigadier general are keyed to the very mobilization assignments these nominees have.

Instead Colonel Larson has the mobilization assignment of Director of Legislation and Liaison of the Air Force which is not a part of the logistics command and has nothing to do with logistics. How ridiculous can the Air Force defenders of these nominations make themselves in attempting to pull irrelevant smokescreens over the real issues in these nominations? To what extent will they go?

Again as in the Montgomery case, the Stewart case, the Alison case, the Smith case, the Henebry case, the DeBrier case, the Potts case, and the Stiles case, there is repeated the Air Force pattern of disregard for truth, disregard for accuracy, and disregard for encouragement for long active participation in the Air Force Reserve. The degree is somewhat less. But this time something new has been added—and that something new is the disregard for honest logic.

SELECTION BOARDS

Analysis of the representations made by the Air Force through General O'Donnell and his office with respect to the selection boards that selected these nominees for promotion to the ranks of brigadier general and major general reveals a confused, contradictory and disturbing situation.

The Air Force represents at some points in the hearing record that there were 2 separate boards—1 for brigadier general and 1 for major general. On this see pages 64 and 68 of the hearing record. Yet at other points in the hearing record the Air Force definitely gives the impression that only one board sat on all these promotions. On this see pages 62, 63 and 81.

For example at page 63 of the hearing record, General O'Donnell stated:

"After the board was in session, the chairman came to me and said that they were having a great deal of difficulty in breaking down—they got their 3 major generals all right, but they were in real straits for selecting the 5 best out of 8 that they had narrowed the field down to, and they asked for permission to have their quotas changed."

This statement of General O'Donnell speaks in terms of one board making the selections for both major generals and brigadier generals.

More than that, it represents that the 3 major generals were selected prior to the granting of the authority to select 8 instead of 5 brigadier generals. Yet, the Air Force at pages 64 and 68 represented that the major general board did not sit until after the brigadier general board completed its work and that "The boards were not in session concurrently at any time."

Perhaps there were two boards and perhaps they were not in session concurrently, but they had common membership in some instances as admitted by General O'Donnell at page 27 of the hearing record. And the two boards apparently had the same president or chairman as indicated by General O'Donnell's answer on page 63 quoted above.

Common membership on two boards whereby some brigadier generals, who sit in the morning on a brigadier general selection board with major generals, are up for consideration from promotion to major general that afternoon by some of the major generals they sat with that morning—such common membership arrangement in my opinion does not make for a proper selection process. Yet, this was the case in this instance.

In fact the Air Force reports that the brigadier general board was composed of 6 members—3 regulars and 3 reservists and that the major general board was composed of 5 members—4 regulars and 1 reservist. There was a common member composition of the 2 boards in 4 officers, as the 3 regulars that served on the brigadier general board also served on the major general board and 1 of the 3 reserve officers that served on the brigadier general board also served on the major general board. The officer that served as president of the brigadier general board also served as president of the major general board. Two of the Reserve brigadier generals serving on the brigadier general board stepped out when the major general board met and considered them among others for promotion to major general. The major general board was not a 6-man board like the brigadier general board since only 1 officer—a Regular—was added to the 4 officers, who had served on the brigadier general board, to make up the law-required composition of 5 members.

BRIGADIER GENERAL SELECTION BOARD

The official duty of this board was to consider fully the 1,969 Reserve colonels eligible for promotion to brigadier general. Yet, this board was in session only 1½ days—January 22, 1957 and the morning of January 23, 1957. On the basis of an 8-hour working day, the board members then had on the average only 22 seconds to review the record of each one of the eligible 1,969 Reserve colonels—hardly enough time for an objective review and evaluation. Your attention to these facts is invited to page 64 of the hearing record.

In answer to my question about how it was originally decided that only 5 Reserve colonels would be selected for promotion to brigadier general and only 3 Reserve brigadier generals for promotion to major general, General O'Donnell stated that the Air Force Reserve is not up to strength or close to it with the filling of the number of Air Force Reserve general positions authorized by the law because (1) to do so would "stifle and stagnate promotion" and (2) that the promotion policy on the Reserve generals followed the promotion policy on the Regular generals.

"What we try to do is, we try to handle the Reserves the same way we do the Regulars, and we try to make it possible each year—we missed last year—each year we hope to have an increment promoted, and we don't promote everybody all at once because it would stifle and stagnate promotion from then on. For instance, we are entitled by law to have three-hundred-and-thirty-odd Regular generals, and we have only 156. We space them over the years."

Both the logic and the accuracy of this statement of General O'Donnell is subject to serious question and challenge. For the Army Reserve is kept up to authorized Reserve general strength or close to it—and if the Army does it for its reservists why doesn't the Air Force do it for its reservists? Why does the Air Force ask Congress to authorize 157 Air Force Reserve general positions and then proceed to fill only 78 of those authorized positions—to fill less than one-half of what the Air Force itself asked for on authorized Reserve general positions?

Written information furnished to the committee by General O'Donnell on February 25, 1957, on the filling of the authorized Air Force Reserve general positions and on May 29, 1957, on the filling of authorized Air Force Regular general positions contradicts the above-quoted statement of General O'Donnell at the hearing on May 2, 1957.

The written information submitted by General O'Donnell to the committee on May 29, 1957, on Air Force Regular general positions is that there are 446 Air Force Regular general positions authorized by law and that of this the Senate Armed Services Committee has set a limitation of 425; that of this number, 411 of these positions have been filled; in other words, that the Air Force has filled 411 of the 425 Air Force Regular general positions permitted by the Senate committee limitation, thus leaving only 14 vacancies unfilled out of the 425 positions. Ten of the 425 positions are filled by Reserve generals on extended active duty. This is hardly the same record of filling only 156 out of some three-hundred-and-thirty-odd Air Force Regular general positions as represented by General O'Donnell at the hearing. It is glaringly contradictory.

Before you accept the hearing statement of General O'Donnell that the Air Force applies to Reserve general promotions the same policy that it applies to Regular general promotions, just make a statistical comparison of the official, written information submitted to the committee by General O'Donnell on February 25, 1957, and May 29, 1957.

That information shows the following facts and numbers on general officer positions in the Air Force divided between regulars and reservists:

	Number authorized limitation	Number assigned	Number unfilled	Percentage unfilled
Regulars	[1] 415	[2] 401	14	3½
Reserves	157	78	79	51

[2] 411 minus 10 reservists.

In other words, the cold and factual statistics refute General O'Donnell's misrepresentation at the hearing to the committee—for these statistics show that the Air Force fills up practically all of its authorized Regular general spots with a high 96½ percent assignment record and a low vacancy record of only 3½ percent—whereas in sharp contrast, these statistics expose the fact that the Air Force fills up less than one-half of the Reserve general positions authorization and has a vacancy rate of 51 percent. In other words the Reserve general vacancy rate percentagewise to the Regular general vacancy rate is a rate of 15 to 1—15 times as great.

In the face of these undisputed statistics, how can General O'Donnell represent that the Air Force policy on Reserve general selections and assignments follow the same policy set for Regular generals? How can he, or the Air Force, in the face of these statistics deny that the real truth is just the opposite of what General O'Donnell represented at the hearing to the committee? How can he, or the Air Force, in the face of these statistics, deny that there is a double standard applied by the Air Force to regulars and reservists that discriminates against the reservists with the policy being to fill practically all of the Regular general authorized spots and in direct contrast to fill less than half of the Reserve general authorized spots?

This is just another illustration in this Air Force pattern of representing its position with respect to the Reserve of being favorable when the cold facts show that it is not.

Another disturbing facet about the brigadier general selection board is the contradictory statements made by Secretary of the Air Force Quarles and General O'Donnell on just how the board arrived at its selection of the eight Reserve colonel nominees for promotion to brigadier general. I previously outlined this in the discussion of the Montgomery case.

In that résumé, I revealed how on the one hand it was represented to the committee by General O'Donnell and his office that all eight Reserve colonel nominees were considered so "equally best qualified" and "so closely alined" that the board could not select any 5 best of the 8 and had to ask that the instructions be amended to permit the selection of all 8—while on the other hand, in his special defense of the Montgomery nomination, Secretary of the Air Force Quarles wrote that a "first 5" were selected and that Montgomery was in the "first 5" and not in the "additional 3." So that no one less than the then Secretary of the Air Force stated that the board did find a "first 5" best over the "additional 3" and thus that all 8 were not found "equally best qualified" as represented by General O'Donnell.

Again we have another illustration of the Air Force pattern of disregard for accuracy.

MAJOR GENERAL SELECTION BOARD

The Air Force has informed the committee that the composition of the major general selection board was 4 Regular officers and 1 Reserve officer. This composition raises a serious question as to the legality of this board for section 203 (b) of the Reserve Officer Personnel Act states:

"At least 50 percent of the members of any selection board appointed under the provisions of this act shall, to the extent practicable, be Reserve officers."

The major general selection board was 20 percent composed of Reserve officers—1 out of 5. Thus, this selection board would clearly be illegal and its acts voided and without any authority and standing were it not for the escape clause of "to the extent practicable."

And as is to be expected in this continuing Air Force pattern of finding loopholes, of stressing minimum compliance with the law and regulations, and of failure to encourage participation in the Air Force Reserve—in this instance of sitting on a major general selection board—the Air Force falls back on this loophole in the law and on this escape clause.

Actually, in this loophole-strategy-device pattern, the Air Force could have had the major general selection board composed of all Regular officers and no Reserve officers and still have technically squeezed through the loophole in the law. This would certainly violate the spirit of the law and the intent of Congress even though technically complying with the letter of the law through a loophole.

That is, in principle, what did happen in this case for the difference of a selection board composed of five Regulars and no Reserves is only a difference in slight degree from the actual selection board composition of 4 Regulars and 1 Reserve. Neither meets the 50 percent standard which would dictate at least 3 Reserve officers on the board—and the actual composition of the board was nearer a zero percent of Reserve officers than a 50 percent.

As the principal Senate sponsor of the Reserve Officer Personnel Act of 1954, I know what the real intent of this section 203 (b) was. It was to insure that the Reserve officers themselves would have at least one-half of the voice on their own promotions instead of those promotions being completely dominated and controlled by the Regular officers.

And when I say Reserve officers having a voice, I mean an independent voice—the kind of independence of the reservist whose daily peacetime occupation is a civilian occupation or pursuit—and not a Reserve officer who has been on extended active duty for so long that his identity has become more associated with the regulars than with the reservists.

Yet the sole Reserve officer—the only Reserve officer—serving on this major general selection board was a Reserve officer who has been on extended active duty for over 6 years now—and regardless of his fine record—whose daily contacts for these several years has unbrokenly been more constantly with Regular officers and with Regular thinking on Reserve matters than with reservists engaged in civilian occupations.

The Air Force resorted to the loophole clause and assigned only one Reserve officer to the major general selection board since apparently there were no other Reserve major generals available to serve on the board.

Frankly, I am not impressed with this reason. For such a condition—such a paucity and rarity of Reserve major generals—is the fault of no one but the Air Force itself. For the Air Force had filled only 17 of the 77 authorized Reserve major general positions that Congress has given to it. In other words, at the time that this major general selection board met there were 60 unfilled Reserve major general positions as contrasted to only 17 filled Reserve major general positions.

If the Air Force would fill a respectable number of these 60 unfilled Reserve major general positions, it could easily have 3 Reserve major generals serving on major general selection boards. No, the scarcity of Reserve major generals to serve on this board is an Air Force created scarcity—and apparently for its own convenience and for continued dominance of the Reserve selection board by Regular officers, contrary to the letter and intent of the law.

In the attempted explanation of unavailability of Reserve major generals to sit on this board, the Air Force reported that one Reserve major general had informed the Air Force he was unavailable to sit on the board. That, in itself, is disturbing—for the major general selection board sat only one-half of 1 day—only in the afternoon of 1 day.

Just how interested and active in the Air Force Reserve is a Reserve major general who won't sit for one-half day, for one afternoon on a selection board? Just how much is he contributing to the Air Force Reserve by such an attitude of unavailability? Regardless of how much an admirable war record he may have, what is his real value to the Air Force and the Air Force Reserve by such an attitude of unavailability for such a short time? In fact, this raises a question of just how active has this particular service-declining Reserve major general been since the end of World War II in the Reserve?

Another reason why I am not impressed with the Air Force not having the composition of the major general selection board comply with the intent, at least, of the law, is that if there were not enough Reserve major generals available to sit on the board at that time, then why have the board sit at that time? Why not set a time when enough Reserve major generals are available to sit to make the composition of the board comply with both the intent and the letter of the law? Why not set such a time if the Air Force is not going to require from its Reserve major generals such needed and important participation in the Air Force Reserve as sitting on a selection board to enable the Air Force to comply with the law without having to resort to loopholes?

Again as has been illustrated repeatedly and abundantly heretofore in the cases and the examples set forth, we see clearly exhibited and displayed a continuing Air Force pattern of disregard for encouragement for active participation in the Reserve and a disregard for complying with the spirit of the law—but instead an emphasis on squeezing through the loopholes and doing only the bare minimum requirements.

MISREPRESENTATIONS MADE CONCERNING NOMINEES

One of the most disturbing things about these nominations is the heavy preponderance of misrepresentations made in connection with these nominations. In all of the 17 years that I have served in Congress, I have never seen the truth treated so lightly as in the defense of these nominations—I have never seen such a display of disregard for accuracy and the truth.

In the presentation that I have already made I have documented at least 23 instances of false and untruthful representations about these nominees, their records, and the manner in which they were selected.

Five of these misrepresentations were attributed to sources outside the Air Force. The responsibility for the 18 other misrepresentations and false statements is that of the Air Force itself—16 of which are attributable to the Air Force Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel, Lt. Gen. Emmett O'Donnell, Jr.

This is not a matter to be taken lightly. It is a grave matter which raises the very serious question and consideration of whether, in the interest of encouraging and inducing more truthful testimony and accurate answers and information to questions asked by the Senate Armed Services Committee and its members, it will be necessary in the future for the committee to place General O'Donnell under oath before interrogating him.

The printed record clearly documents these misrepresentations and falsehoods. What the printed record does not reveal is the attempt made by General O'Donnell to do a sweeping and extensive rewriting of his public hearing testimony.

That transcript is 104 pages in length. Of those 104 pages, General O'Donnell made statements and gave answers on 83 pages.

Now of the 83 pages on which General O'Donnell gave answers and made statements, he sought to change his answers and statements on 62 pages. In other words, he sought to change his answers and testimony on about three-fourths of the pages on which his answers and statements appear, and in this attempt of his he left unchanged only about one-fourth or 21 pages.

If that is not literally a wholesale rewriting of one's testimony, I don't know what is.

Of the 62 pages on which General O'Donnell sought to change his answers, 43 pages are on answers to questions that I asked him. In contrast, there were only six pages on which he gave answers to me that he did not attempt to change. In other words, he changed his answers to me at the rate of more than 6 of every 7 pages.

On all three of the pages on which Senator Barrett questioned General O'Donnell with respect to the financial aspects of Colonel Montgomery's attempted retirement and later resignation from the Regular Air Force and his appointment in the Reserve, General O'Donnell sought to change his answers.

On 5 of the 6 pages on which he gave answers to questions asked by Senator STENNIS, General O'Donnell sought to change his answers.

In response to the more sympathetic questions of Senator SYMINGTON, General O'Donnell's rate of attempted rewriting of his testimony is not nearly so high as in these previously mentioned instances. For on 12 of the 21 pages on which General O'Donnell gave answers to Senator SYMINGTON's questions, General O'Donnell sought no changes.

I opposed permitting General O'Donnell to make such a sweeping rewriting of his public testimony. I notified the chairman of the committee that I felt that the integrity of the committee would be better served by General O'Donnell submitting a letter of changes and extensions to be placed in the hearing record and to let the original transcript stand in its true, pure and unadulterated form.

General O'Donnell was then notified that his attempted sweeping rewriting of his testimony was not acceptable to the committee, and that instead he should submit such changes and extensions he desired in the form of a letter.

General O'Donnell then drastically scaled down the rate of his requested changes and extensions in his testimony from that on 62 pages that he sought in the official reporter's transcript to only 11 pages as listed in the Air Force letter of correction appearing in the appendix of the committee hearing record at pages 79, 80, and 81. Quite a scaling down to only a fraction of the attempted sweeping rewriting he first sought before being denied by the committee.

There were only two other changes in the Air Force letter of correction with respect to the testimony of the other Air Force witness who had relatively little participation at the hearing and played a comparatively very minor role.

The most charitable characterization that I can ascribe to General O'Donnell's testimony and appearance before the committee is to conclude that he was not very well informed on the matters on which he was interrogated, and that he apparently made no effort to get himself informed and prepared to answer questions and to provide the committee with accurate information.

Since he was selected by the Air Force to be its principal representative at the hearing and its spokesman to answer the questions and was not the selection of the committee, I would suggest to the Air Force that in the future it require its official spokesmen appearing at hearings of the committee to do their homework before coming before the committee. The hearing record makes it abundantly clear that General O'Donnell did not see fit to do the committee the courtesy of doing his homework. In his failure to do so, he not only exhibited lack of respect for the committee but he pointedly let the Air Force down in his role as its representative and spokesman.

EFFECT OF NOMINATIONS ON MORALE OF AIR FORCE RESERVISTS

At the committee hearing, defenders of these nominations contended that the selection of these very nominees was beneficial to the morale of Air Force reservists. See pages 32, 33, and 43 of the committee hearing record. In fact, they characterized these nominations and selections as inspirational (see pp. 49 and 50 of the hearing record) and the type to draw a good many people to the Reserves (see p. 43 of the hearing record).

Perhaps these defenders are right. I do not question the war records and the characters of the nominees. What I do question is their degree of activity in the Reserve—or more accurately put, their inactivity in the Reserve. I do not think that their inactivity has been such as to be an example for all reservists to follow—for if it were we surely would have a woefully inactive Air Force Reserve. Nor do I think that their records of inactivity are inspirational to thousands of Air Force Reservists, or that the selection of them for general rank on the basis of such records has served as an inspiration to all Air Force Reservists, particularly the really active Reservists, or that their selections have boosted the morale of the membership of the Air Force.

Certainly the mail and oral expressions which I have received on these selections has not indicated any real basis for these claims by the defenders of the nominations. To the contrary, the overwhelming expression which I have received has been just the opposite of what the defenders of these nominations claim.

Some past national presidents of the Reserve Officers Association and the Air Reserve Association have criticized these selections very vigorously. They have fully supported the holdup and investigation on the nominations. I shall not name them, because to do so would subject them to the vindictive, retaliatory punitive action that the Air Force would probably take against them.

I have had Regular Air Force generals—both one star and two star—express to me their resentment and criticism of the Montgomery nomination, in view of his leaving the Regular Air Force and then being able to get through the Reserve just as much retirement pay as they who faithfully stay on the job every day in the Regular Air Force for 30 years, while Montgomery leaves the Air Force for a high paying civilian job. I have been told by nongeneral officers who served under Montgomery of the bad effect which his resignation had on the morale and recruiting program of the service. I will not name these men because I know that to do so would destroy their careers in the Air Force simply because they expressed their honest reactions.

To those who claim that these nominations and selections of Air Force reservists with such inactive records is good for the morale of the Air Force Reserve, I quote from a few of the communications I have received on this matter. These communications include letters and telegrams from Maine to California—from all over the continental United States—yes, even a cablegram from outside the continental United States—from Reserve wing commanders, from Reserve squadron commanders, from persons inside the Department of the Air Force, from persons who have served under some of the nominees, and from others.

Here are a few of the expressions:

From the commander of an Air Reserve squadron: "The reason I write is not because I am objective about this. I with most of my officers who have done more than what was required am being dropped from a half decent program when 11 officers some of whom have done a hell of a lot less are being elevated to or in general rank. We would like to know if they are going to be required to meet any criteria after they are promoted and what such requirements will be. It is heartening to know that someone will make an effort to inquire into the ground rules and raise the question as to their observance. Many officers share my feeling so please accept our thanks for what must appear at times as a thankless job."

From the commander of an Air Reserve wing: "Congratulations on your stand blocking promotions of Reserve Air Force generals. It is time someone recognizes the flagrant violations against more deserving officers."

From inside the Department of the Air Force in an official envelope of the Air Force: "The enclosed clipping announcing the public hearing of these promotions has reestablished my faith in the responsibilities of the Senate Armed Services Committee. More important were your personal efforts in writing to Chairman RUSSELL your contentions relative to these promotions. This action by you, in the final analysis, will bestow honorable credit to you in discharging the trust of your high office and prove to be of unestimable service to the primary mission of our Nation's military establishment."

From a California Air Force Reserve colonel: "As I understand the situation, you have been particularly concerned with the promotion of * * * a Reserve colonel, due to lack of active participation. I would venture a guess that several hundred Air Force Reserve colonels have been similarly concerned due to the fact that as actively participating and dedicated Reserve officers we have continuously and conscientiously contributed a goodly portion of our 25 to 30 or more years of military service with at least an occasional thought that a few might ultimately earn a promotion. This then raises a question as to whether the momentary publicity which would result from * * * promotion would offset the effect on morale of several hundred Reserve colonels each of whom in turn could influence hundreds and possibly thousands of other active Reserve officers."

From a retired Air Force Reserve colonel in Maine: "* * * if movie actors, Wall Street brokers and lawyers and others of big business or social prominence are the only officers promoted to brigadier general from the Reserves, the Reserves will not last very long.

"Instead of equable distribution of promotions of Reserve colonels to brigadier general spread over the country, the nominations seem to be of people like * * * and others in like categories, one of their principal qualifications apparently being the publicity and glamour they bring to the particular service. Obviously their eminence in the eyes of the general public is helpful and is a factor to be considered. However, I think you are very right when you ask about the nominees being truly active reservists."

From a Texas Air Force Reserve colonel: "I am a full colonel in the Air Force Reserve. I have no intention of degrading anyone but it does make me sick at my stomach to see how things can be twisted and bent in order that a few friends of some people can be promoted when they have not done what is required of them. Read ROPA and see."

From Chicago: "I wish to commend you on holding up appointments for Reserve generals in the Air Force. The morale of the Regular Air Force is at stake."

From a Tennessee reservist: "* * * Colonel * * * may have been an inspiration for the enlistment of many Reserve recruits, but the proposed promotion and other promotions which have been made on a comparable basis made many Reserve officers resign or request placement on the retired list."

From an Air Force Reserve colonel in New Jersey: "You are to be commended most highly for investigating the sorry records of those who were nominated recently for a general rank in the Reserves. I am sure every conscientious, hard-working colonel joins me in thanking you for your stand. * * * It is a great morale booster, and a great pleasure to all qualified Reserve officers."

From a Massachusetts Air Force reservist: "All of us men and women in the Reserve forces want to congratulate you on your great stand against outright promotions for inactive reservists who, at present, are in the limelight for promotion to general."

From a Pennsylvania reservist: "Read your question. Think it's great. What about Ted Williams. The Marine Corps twice had his most productive years interrupted by the armed services. If they are going to make a general out of * * * why don't they make a major general out of Ted Williams."

From the president of a leading midwestern college: "Speaking as the commanding officer of a Navy electronics unit and also as the president of a State college where several thousand boys have belonged to Reserve units since 1945, I wish to thank you for your courage in opposing such promotions. * * * Many reservists have faced serious hardship, loss of vacation time, and financial difficulty in order to continue in military Reserve units in this country. It will indeed be bad for the morale of these boys to know that men like * * * no matter how attractive or glamorous or capable they may be, who have not spent this training time may be promoted."

I will not disclose the residence of the writer of the next letter I quote for he could be in that manner too easily identified out of a group of 44 for retaliatory and punitive action for expressing agreement with my stand and disagreement with the position of the Air Force. Suffice it to say about this writer's pedigree that the Air Force felt that he was important enough to select him to send him to the Air Force Command and Staff College.

"As a Ready Reserve colonel, I recently completed the 2-week Reserve officers indoctrination course at the Command and Staff College at Maxwell Air Force Base, Ala. In the class were 44 full colonels, so naturally there was much discussion about the recent nominations to brigadier general which you have so ably brought before the Armed Services Committee for investigation. I assure you that all 44 colonels admire your stand on this matter."

CONCLUSIONS

The individuals and personalities involved in these nominations are not at issue here. It is their records of inactivity that are at issue. Rewarding inactivity with promotion to general rank involves a question of principle not of personalities.

Perhaps the Air Force has a better case than its uninformed defenders have presented. That could easily be the case when the principal spokesman of the Air Force displayed such an amazing lack of knowledge about the Air Force Reserve and these nominations which the Air Force sent him up to the Senate committee to defend.

It could easily be the case when another leading defender, at the very outset of his defense of these Reserve nominations revealed his ignorance on Reserve matters by calling the first nominee on the list "a Regular officer" and by referring to this particular reservist as having "a fairly distinguished record as a regular officer" although the reservist had never been a Regular. On this I invite your attention to page 32 of the committee hearing record.

Black cannot be made white. A reservist is not a Regular any more than inactivity in the Reserve can be pictured to be great activity.

Yet, we have the principal spokesman for the Air Force saying at page 29 of the hearing record that no training in one's mobilization assignment is realistic training and then 4 pages later on page 33 of the record saying that the Air Force is enjoined by the law to base its promotions on mobilization requirements.

Black cannot be made white. Yet we have the principal spokesman for the Air Force at page 40 giving contradictory answers to two successive questions by saying first that the Air Force lost when General Montgomery shifted to the Reserve and that "it would be much better to have General Montgomery on active duty than to have him on Reserve status"—and then immediately following that up with the contradictory statement that he would say that General Montgomery's service would be just as great by staying in the Reserve as it would be by staying in the Regular Establishment. How can it be both ways, General O'Donnell? How can it be better for Montgomery to be in the Regular Air Force than in the Reserve—and still be just as great by being in the Reserve?

Black cannot be made white. Yet we have the principal spokesman for the Air Force saying at page 36 of the hearing record that Montgomery took a "terriffic financial sacrifice" by resigning from the Regular Air Force and going into the Reserve—and 6 pages later at page 42 saying that Montgomery "never would have resigned unless he cared nothing about the money at all."

Black cannot be made white. Yet we have the principal spokesman for the Air Force saying at page 40 of the record that Montgomery, who has the least active Reserve record of all 11 nominees, is a great come-on to the Reserves.

Black cannot be made white. Yet in almost the same breath in which the Air Force representatives defend the nominations for general ranks of some reservists with very inactive records, they indicate that 45,000 to 50,000 Reserve officers have been removed from the Air Force Reserve for inactivity in the last 3 or 4 years. I commend the Air Force for initiating a policy that requires participation as a condition for remaining in the Reserve. At the same time, I condemn a double-standard application of this policy whereby some of the nominees have apparently been permitted to remain in the Reserve despite little or no Reserve participation. On this I invite your attention to pages 44 and 51 of the hearing record.

With such contradictory Air Force statements and testimony as I have cited to you—together with the documented misrepresentations made by the Air Force—in these cases, it is extremely difficult to determine just what is the actual policy, position, and attitude of the Air Force on selection of Reserve generals and on required active participation in the Air Force Reserve.

One is forced to guess—and it would appear that the Air Force policy and position is best set forth at page 67 of the hearing record where General O'Donnell described the Air Force position as being one of getting men of national repuation.

Perhaps that is a better criterion than active participation or realistic training in the Reserve. I don't think so. But even assuming that it is, the Air Force should get rid of its double standard on promotions—whereby it kicks out 45,000 to 50,000 Reserve officers from the Air Force Reserve for lack of active training and participation in the Reserve and still promotes to general rank some Reserve officers with woefully inactive records—whereby it requires active participation in the Reserve up to the rank of colonel and, on the other hand, drops that basis on general officer rank and substitutes for it a policy of minimizing participation and emphasizing as primary requirements for promotion to general rank, glamor and big business connection.

Whatever is to be the policy and the basic ground rules, the Air Force should drop this dishonest double standard system. The Air Force should stop fooling reservists who are loyally participating in Reserve training and activity—who are working hard to develop and maintain their proficiency for defending our country, if and when war comes. Prime examples of this are the Air Reserve wing commanders who work hard throughout the year to keep their Reserve wings in shape.

If realism proves training participation and point earning to be outmoded and unrealistic—and dictates that it be replaced by similarity of civilian occupation to mobilization assignment—then the Air Force should be honest enough to make necessary changes and inform all reservists of those changes.

The real point is that all Air Force reservists should be informed fully and should not be misled. If active participation, such as inactive training and annual 15-day active duty training, is not to have a major bearing on promotion but instead is to be overshadowed, if not disregarded, in favor of the business activity record of a reservist, then the Air Force should so inform all reservists instead of misleading them.

For then the really active, hard-working, loyally participating reservists would have an opportunity to stop and drop participation in the Air Force Reserve and instead use that valuable time working in the aviation industry or in motion pictures toward earning promotion in the Air Force Reserve.

If "national reputation" is to be a prerequisite to becoming a general in the Air Force Reserve—if general nominations and selections in the Air Force Reserve are to be for the purpose of attracting publicity to the Air Force—if the Air Force Reserve is to be a "back door" medium through which a Regular Air Force general can leave the Air Force for a high-paying civilian job and still continue to accrue retirement benefits at the same rate as a Regular officer who remains on active duty—then the Air Force should tell not only all Air Force reservists but also all young men who are considering joining the Air Force Reserve. It should be honest enough to tell them so that they will not be misled and have any illusions that some day they might become a general in the Air Force Reserve through constant, loyal training participation in the Reserve.

The hearing and inquiry on this matter does not reflect credit upon the Air Force. I would hope that the Air Force has learned some lessons from it.

I would hope that the Air Force has learned from the hearing and the committee inquiry into this matter that it must start presenting truthful information and honest reports to Congress instead of making misrepresentations, inaccurate statements.

I would hope that the Air Force has learned a lesson to send up informed representatives who will speak the truth—who are well informed and know what they are talking about—or who will get themselves informed instead of treating Congressional inquiries lightly with a brushoff—representatives who will at least do their "home work" before appearing before a Senate committee to defend Air Force actions and to answer questions about those Air Force actions.

I must give General O'Donnell, the principal Air Force spokesman in this matter, credit for truthfulness and accuracy at one point in the hearing. In fact, I think that he was more truthful, accurate, and to the point than he would want to admit—that he brilliantly and succinctly stated the actual Air Force position and dubious record on this matter (which I have documented in detail and at length)—when he said at page 38 of the committee hearing record: "* * * it is a very difficult thing to explain here. I am not very good at explaining."

Truer words were never spoken. More appropriate words were never said. "It is a very difficult thing to explain" because there is no reasonable, honorable, and logical explanation of this matter by the Air Force. And, obviously, General O'Donnell was not very good at explaining.

IMMIGRATION LEGISLATION

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article by Donald R. Larrabee on the immigration bill which appeared in the Quincy Patriot Ledger, as well as several telegrams which I have received on this legislation.

I am very proud to have played a role in the passage of this bill. It marks a major step forward in our attempts to enact more liberal immigration legislation. The bill represents a realistic approach which will have untold and lasting benefits for our country for the some 60,000 to 70,000 who are directly affected by it. We have taken action and moved forward in an area where there has been no major progress since passage of the Immigration Act in 1952.

My heart is glad for the thousands of American citizens who will now be able under the terms of this bill to be reunited with their families from whom they have been separated because of the workings of our immigration law. Among these are some 33,000 Greeks, Italians, and persons of other nationalities. I am likewise pleased that persons chargeable to the quotas of Lithuania, Estonia, Latvia, and other countries, whose quotas had been heavily mortgaged by the Displaced Persons Act and other laws, will now be able to move more freely under the provisions of this bill which lift the mortgages imposed on these quotas. I rejoice with those of our citizens who have adopted alien children who will be permitted, under the terms of this legislation, to join their adoptive parents in the United States—truly the opportunity which we have given to these youngsters who are the victims of war and its aftermath justifies all of our work on this bill. We can also be proud that, by the passage of this legislation, we have opened new vistas and extended that precious element of hope to refugees from communism and other forms of tyranny, including that most worthy group of refugees who have recently fled from the Middle East.

Mr. President, in summary I think that the Congress can close this session with a deep sense of satisfaction that, having enacted this major piece of immigration legislation, it has restored hope to the hopeless, strengthened and supported family life, and ameliorated some of the harsh provisions of our immigration law. Truly, this Congress has made a major step forward in the perfection of our immigration policy. Much remains to be done in this area and I pledge my strength to the attainment of more far-reaching adjustments in our immigration policy in future years.

STORY BEHIND A BILL—SENATOR KENNEDY AND IMMIGRATION

(By Donald R. Larrabee)

WASHINGTON.—Any Congress, in the windup of a session, provides a case study in the ability of its Members to face up to political realities. Most legislation contains an element of compromise, but when time is running out on a Congress, the compromise must be carefully calculated or the result is a big nothing. This is the real story of the emergency immigration bill which will reach the President's desk before adjournment.

POLITICAL REALITY

The immigration measure bears the imprint of Senator JOHN F. KENNEDY (Democrat) of Massachusetts who saw the political reality that a broader and stronger bill would never clear Congress. KENNEDY talked with enough of his colleagues to know what changes in existing law could be passed without controversy or acrimony in the short time left. He drew provisions here and there from pending bills, pieced them together in a proposal that had the blessing of the leadership on both sides of the Capitol.

The final work was a far cry from what KENNEDY himself had proposed earlier in the year. It didn't begin to go to the heart of what many Senators believe are the critical weaknesses in our immigration policies. It ignored many of the major changes requested by President Eisenhower, but it also ignored such controversial proposals as the revision of the 33-year-old national origins quota system. If the latter had been included, KENNEDY would not have had the support of key House and Senate leaders on immigration legislation. What remained, when KENNEDY completed his draft, was a bill to deal with urgent, hardship cases.

Other Senators, with immigration bills of their own, quickly fell in line behind KENNEDY. None of them were happy to forego action on basic liberalizing changes in the law, but they knew this was all they could get passed so late in the session. They remembered that the Senate hastily passed a broader bill at the last session, only to see it die in the House because that body's immigration leader, Representative WALTER (Democrat of Pennsylvania) had not been consulted.

Thus, support for KENNEDY came from Senate floor leaders JOHNSON and KNOWLAND; Senator WATKINS, Republican, of Utah, who was sponsoring the administration's bill; Senator DIRKSEN, Republican, of Illinois, who had a slightly different version; and several Democrats, like Senator PASTORE, Democrat, of Rhode Island, who favor a wholesale alteration of our immigration statutes. PASTORE said the Kennedy bill didn't measure up to his hopes, but it was an affirmative step. Added PASTORE: "It may be termed a compromise; but, indeed, it is not a surrender." The Rhode Islander, another political realist, declared: "We can accept it, as practical people, in the closing hours of this session, as an accomplishment, whereas otherwise we might be left with no advance at all."

The Kennedy bill, on which House action is expected early this week, will let in about 60,000 more persons in various categories. Among these will be 18,000 refugee-escapees from the Middle East and from Communist-dominated countries. It erases "mortgages" carried over from the Displaced Persons Act which have had the effect of holding down quotas.

A little-noticed provision of the Kennedy measure would provide relief in the situation where a foreign diplomat presently in this country cannot or does not choose to return home. The need was brought to the attention of Congress in the case of Wellington Koo, former Chinese Ambassador to the United States, who could not return to his own country and became, in fact, a man without status of any kind.

RELIEF PROVISIONS

President Eisenhower asked for about 20 technical amendments to the basic law—and he will get about 7. He asked for permanent legislation to deal with the orphan problem and the Kennedy bill provides a 2-year program. But, Mr. Eisenhower is going to get the waiver of existing mortgages on quotas and a portion of his request designed to relieve Congress of much of the burden of considering private immigration bills. In addition, he will receive relief provisions for skilled specialists and relatives and the provision for 18,000 refugee-escapees.

A major deficiency in the Kennedy bill—one proposed by the President and advocated by many Senators—would have given permanent status to 27,000 Hungarian "parolees" who came here last winter. When these people arrived, there was widespread public sympathy that they should be given a chance to become candidates for citizenship. This is a major piece of unfinished business on which Congress will surely go to work in January, judging from the Senate debate on the Kennedy bill.

NEW YORK, N. Y., August 29, 1957.

Senator KENNEDY,
The Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Congratulations enactment S. 2792 which I believe represents most important step forward in refugee immigration field in recognition of our foreign policy leadership requirements and the humanitarian need of refugees.

ELEANOR ROOSEVELT.

NEW YORK, N. Y., August 29, 1957.

Senator JOHN KENNEDY,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.:

Please accept our most sincere gratitude and appreciation for your leadership and tireless efforts on behalf of those who have escaped Communist oppression. We know the bill passed yesterday was strongest measure possible at this time, and that its passage could not have been achieved without your initiative and dedication.

ANGIER BIDDLE DUKE,
International Rescue Committee.

BOSTON, MASS., August 29, 1957.

Senator JOHN F. KENNEDY,
Washington, D. C.:

Congratulations on your victory for the immigration bill presented by you. As president of American Committee on Italian Migration of Boston I am very grateful for consideration that you have for our Italian colleagues of Italy. Wishing you further success.

Sincerely yours,

Mrs. Daniel Rufo.

New York, N. Y., August 29, 1957.

Senator John F. Kennedy,

Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

We appreciate that the refugee legislation adopted today was due greatly to your sympathetic efforts. This stopgap measure will give homes and future to many thousands homeless and destitute people. Congratulations.

James P. Rice.

Executive Director, United HIAS Service.

New York, N. Y., August 28, 1957.

Senator John F. Kennedy,

United States Senate,

Washington, D C.:

Sincere congratulations to you on your fine leadership in getting the refugee bill passed. This constitutes a real help to thousands of worthy people of vital concern to our country and to our churches whose aim always is to express Christian brotherhood and to give aid to the oppressed.

Roland Elliott,

Director, Immigration Services, Church World Service.

Washington, D. C., August 28, 1957.

Senator John F. Kennedy,

Senate Office Building,

Washington, D. C.:

Kindly accept our hearty congratulations on passage today in Congress of your well-tempered proposals effecting much-needed changes in current immigration procedures. Most certainly you and your associates in Congress can take justifiable pride in this splendid accomplishment. The happiness that will accrue to the many thousands of beneficiaries, separated spouses and children, orphans, the refugees, and others will justify your fine statesmanship. We of the department of immigration of the National Catholic Welfare Conference are edified and deeply grateful. You have our cordial personal best wishes.

Bruce M. Mohler.

Washington, D. C., August 29, 1957.

Senator John Kennedy,

Senate Office Building,

Washington, D. C.:

Congratulations on the passage of your bill which will give new hope to so many thousands of refugees.

Mission Secretariat.

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS IN MASSACHUSETTS

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I have addressed the Senate on several occasions, calling the attention of this body to what I consider to be a very serious problem, namely, the fact that many communities throughout the Nation do not share in the general prosperity and that unemployment in many of these communities is on the rise. I have suggested that the administration has taken far too sanguine a view of these serious problems and has been notably restrained in acting to ameliorate the serious economic crisis in which many of these communities find themselves.

One of the communities to which I have given attention in my own State is Fall River, Mass. As this session of Congress draws to a close, I should like to summarize the results of my efforts to assist this community in solving some of its economic problems. Frankly, Mr. President, I have been deeply disappointed that despite my very vigorous efforts on behalf of this and many other communities in Massachusetts, the employment situation in these communities has not materially changed since this time last year.

I have made every legitimate effort to acquaint manufacturers and other businessmen in these communities with the procedures for obtaining Government contracts, and by and large these businessmen have responded with enthusiasm and intelligence. However, despite our very best efforts, little Government business has gone into Fall River and the other communities which have been so hard hit economically for reasons quite beyond the control of the local citizenry. To some degree, this lack of success in channeling Government procurement into these areas has been due to the restrictions imposed by law, but I am not entirely convinced that within these restrictions a good deal more could not have been done by administrative action. To the extent that this is true, I believe that the administration has been derelict in its responsibility to many hard-pressed communities throughout our country.

I am happy to say that, through the combined efforts of the local community and my office, we have been able to obtain a planning grant from the Community Facilities Administration to enable Fall River to complete plans for the improvement of its industrial water supply. When this work is finished it should provide a sound and long-term basis for industrialization of this community, and I am extremely hopeful that the provision of adequate quantities of clean water will form an incentive to businesses to locate in this fine community with its large pool of skilled manpower.

I have been disappointed that the Area Redevelopment Act, of which I am a co-sponsor, has not been acted upon during this session of Congress. I believe that if this legislation were on the books we would have a positive program which would be of great assistance to economically depressed areas throughout our country. As far as I am concerned, this is high priority legislation for the next session of Congress.

Finally, Mr. President, I again wish to stress to the Senate the fact that these economically hard-hit communities are subject to the inflationary pressures which beset the whole country. Under these conditions they are in a sense placed in double economic jeopardy. Wages and employment are down and yet the prices of food, rent and other necessities are skyrocketing, with apparently little or no control being placed on them by the Government. The situation is serious and we dare not ignore it much longer.

THE CIVIL-RIGHTS BILL

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, last night the Senate in approving the conference report on H. R. 6127, the civil-rights bill, took a historic step toward showing to all of our citizens their constitutional right of voting. I am very glad that I had the opportunity to vote for this bill and to support it during its stages of development in the Senate of the United States. I hope that it will mark the beginning of a new era in the confirmation of the equal rights of all the peoples of the United States. There were many in this body and in the House of Representatives who played an important part in the development and passage of this important measure, but I do want to pay a tribute to the ability of our distinguished minority leader, Senator William F. Knowland of California and his indomitable will and determination that a civil-rights bill should be enacted. I think it should always be remembered that it was his affirmative and positive determination to secure action that in the end brought about the passage of the civil-rights bill in the Senate.

THE ADMINISTRATION'S FISCAL POLICIES

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, during this session, many of us have expressed deep concern over the effect on our economy of the fiscal policies of this administration, as initiated and implemented by ex-Secretary of the Treasury George Humphrey. We have contended that the Humphrey tight-money policy is throttling business—particularly small business. We have expressed the fear that the administration, in its obsession to stop inflation, could produce an Eisenhower depression.

The very thing we feared has happened in some sections of the country. I would like to insert as a part of my remarks some recent letters I have received from the State of Washington indicating the detrimental effects of high interest rates on two important segments of our economy.

Also, I am including from the Economist, Britain's highly influential financial journal, excerpts from an article entitled, "Mr. Humphrey's Failure." This article appeared in the Economist on August 3.

Warren G. Magnuson,

Senate Office Building,

Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: We here in the heart of the lumbering industry have seen logging operations, sawmills, plywood plants and pulp mills all closing down recently. As each one of these parts of the industry close down, either indefinite or forever, company officials in every operation have blamed it on the "soft lumber market."

I wonder if you could tell me what is the matter with the lumber market, what can be done about it and what you as a Senator from a lumbering State are going to try to do about it?

Hoping to hear from you soon, I remain

Sincerely yours,

Mahlon Chestnut,

Recording secretary, International Woodworkers of America, Local No. 23–2.

Mr. Humphrey's Failure

Mr. George Humphrey left the Treasury last week in blaze of disappointment. He had three objectives when he came to Washington four and one-half years ago and all three are still to be achieved.

His latest borrowing will add $250 million a year to the public debt's cost. This is the final proof of Mr. Humphrey's failure.

PORTLAND, OREG., August 25, 1957.

WARREN MAGNUSON,
United States Senate.

SIR: I have been traveling your State for 15 years. At the present, I am at the Olympic for our showing of late fall and holiday apparel. Never in all these years have so many merchants complained about business conditions.

We read, day in and day out of fantastic corporation profits and read also of the healthy state of the banking industy.

I suspect the high interest rates accounts for the slow business recession.

May I, as one small individual of the traveling fraternity, suggest you and your fellow Senators do something, and quick, for the small merchant and manufacturer.

Thank you.

E. C. MCLACHLAN.

ALOHA, OREG., August 23, 1957.

Senator WARREN MAGNUSON.

SIR: We are here at an Apparel Market Week.

There is no business, and nothing but complaints from the smaller merchant.

Why can't something be done about this "hard money" policy and these 6 percent and 7 percent interest rates?

The only ones making a living are the bankers.

CARL PETERS.

SENATOR MATTHEW M. NEELY

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, we have all been aware of the travail through which the distinguished Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] has been going this year. He has on occasion shown himself to be a Senator of extraordinary attainment.

I have in my hand a letter which was written to our colleague, the senior Senator from West Virginia, by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS]. It is such a good and such a sweet letter that I think it ought to be made a part of the RECORD. I ask unanimous consent that it be incorporated in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., August 26, 1957.

Hon. MATTHEW M. NEELY,
U. S. Senate.

DEAR MATT: Work is slackening up here a bit, and one has a little chance for reflection and thought.

I have been thinking what a marvelous career you have had—State legislator, lawyer, Congressman, Senator, Governor, Congressman again, and Senator again, and all the time a terrific battler for the people. You have been afraid of no one and have pushed in to issues which the timid have shunned. Always your heart has been warm and brave. You have been, and are, a real tribune of the people.

In the history of the United States Senate, there have been all too few of that kind, and so I want to greet you and salute you.

My warmest best wishes.

Faithfully yours,

PAUL H. DOUGLAS.

AUTHORIZATION TO SECRETARY OF THE SENATE TO RECEIVE MESSAGES FROM THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES AFTER SINE DIE ADJOURNMENT

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I submit an order which I ask to have agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The order will be read.

The order was read and agreed to, as follows:

Ordered, That notwithstanding the sine die adjournment of the present session of the Congress, the Secretary be, and he is hereby, authorized to receive messages from the House of Representatives after the sine die adjournment.

AUTHORIZATION TO PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE TO MAKE APPOINTMENTS

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I submit another order which I ask to have agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The order will be read.

The order was read and agreed to, as follows:

Ordered, That notwithstanding the final adjournment of the present session of the Congress, the President of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized to make appointments to commissions or committees authorized by law, by concurrent action of the two Houses, or by order of the Senate.

TENDER OF THANKS OF THE SENATE TO THE VICE PRESIDENT

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I submit a resolution which I send to the desk and ask to have stated; and I request unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLAND in the chair). The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 202) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the thanks of the Senate are hereby tendered to the Honorable RICHARD M. NIXON, Vice President of the United States and President of the Senate, for the courteous, dignified, and impartial manner in which he has presided over its deliberations during the 1st session of the 85th Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

TENDER OF THANKS OF THE SENATE TO THE PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

Mr. KUCHEL. Mr. President, I submit a resolution which I send to the desk and ask to have stated; and I request unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be stated.

The resolution (S. Res. 203) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the thanks of the Senate are hereby tendered to the Honorable CARL HAYDEN, President pro tempore of the Senate, for the courteous, dignified, and impartial manner in which he has presided over its deliberations during the 1st session of the 85th Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

PERSONAL STATEMENT BY SENATOR JOHNSON OF TEXAS

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, very shortly the adjournment bells will signal the end of the first session of the 85th Congress.

It has been a good session, one that was constructive and contributed to the welfare and the unity of the American people.

I have already reviewed the accomplishments of this session. But there is another statement I would like to make, a statement based on a personal note.

Like every Member, I have a deep affection and a reverance for the institution of the United States Senate. That affection and that reverence rest upon many things, and one of the most important is my close personal tie to everyone who is associated with the Senate.

Mr. President, it would be impossible for me to list all of the people to whom a personal acknowledgment should be made. There are 96 who stand on this floor and who vote and who get the headlines, sometimes good and sometimes bad. Sometimes they even are mentioned in newspaper columns.

But behind those 96 are large numbers of faithful employees who work day and night, with neither overtime pay nor glory as compensation. Mr. President, I want every single one of them to know of the deep debt that the Senate owes to them; and I am only sorry that limitations of space prevent my listing them individually by name.

This is a body which in many respects is unusual. It is a place where men can feel deeply on opposite sides of emotional and controversial questions and still be the firmest of friends.

I list among the closest of my friends the minority leader, the distinguished Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND]. We have stood on opposite sides of the political fence on many basic issues. There have been times when we may have been even a little short with each other.

But, Mr. President, I believe our personal friendship is as strong as the friendship between any two men anywhere. And when we agree, we have no hesitancy in marching together, without regard to partisan labels.

He is a man of honor, a man of integrity, and a man of justice; and even though it is difficult for me to concede the need for a Republican Party [laughter], I will unhesitantly say that no party could have a finer man for its leader.

Mr. President, I regret that Senator KNOWLAND cannot be with us as we conclude this session. I am delighted that he has asked our very able and understanding friend, his junior colleague [Mr. KUCHEL] to sit in his seat and to wear his honors. All of us have great respect and affection for Senator KUCHEL.

Mr. President, in this Senate, I have a strong right arm. It rests in the person of the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. MANSFIELD]—a scholar, a statesman, a diplomat, and a man of unflagging courage. His steadying influence makes all of us a little more certain and a little more confident in the things we are doing.

On the other side of the aisle, the minority leader is ably served by the skillful and genial Senator from Illinois EVERETT DIRKSEN. Those of us in my party recognize him as a formidable, but always fair and just, opponent.

The Republican policy committee chairman, STYLES BRIDGES, is a man of tremendous ability and warmth. I have been proud to call him my good friend for many years. We have labored together in this body on many matters, vigorously and harmoniously. All of my colleagues, I am certain, join me in wishing him a restful adjournment period. We have missed him these past weeks, and will eagerly anticipate and look forward to his return in January.

I should like to make particular mention of a colleague on the other side of the aisle with whom I have served through the years. He is the tall, very gentle, very courageous Yankee from Massachusetts—LEVERETT SALTONSTALL.

He is a statesman, and he is my friend, and no man is more understanding and more ready to be cooperative.

We have as President pro tempore a man who spans a vital stage of America's history. That man is the senior Senator from Arizona, CARL HAYDEN, the only Member who entered the Congress as his State entered the Union.

CARL HAYDEN is one of the most skillful, one of the most able, and one of the most loyal legislators of our time. This Congress could not have rolled up its truly amazing record in economy this year without his help.

There are other Members whom I should like to mention. Every one of them, without exception, is close to my heart; and I do not feel that I stand as an enemy to anyone on either side of the aisle.

I am particularly grateful to the great and experienced men who chair out 15 standing Senate committees. To each of them, I—as the majority leader—am deeply indebted, as are we all.

Only those of us who fully understand and appreciate the importance of the committee system in our legislative branch of Government can truly appreciate the monumental work of these fine public officials.

To all of you I say: my thanks for your cooperation; my everlasting gratitude for your generosity and your friendship.

A man in the position I hold must rely on the assistance of many people. None who serves me and my party does a better job than my trusted and beloved friend, Earle Clements. As executive director of our senatorial campaign committee, Earle is a stalwart of good counsel and always good judgment. His value to the Democratic majority in the Senate is simply impossible to overstate.

One of the keys to this Senate rests in the person of our beloved Secretary Felton M. ("Skeeter") Johnston. For 28 years he has been associated with this body, and today he may well be considered our 97th Senator. He is a wise man, a kindly man, and a man who understands the great difficulties under which we labor, and who does much to ease our burdens.

The secretary to the majority is the most tireless and indefatigable man on this floor. Bobby Baker is a young man who already has gone much further in life than many others of far greater years. And, Mr. President, it is my personal opinion that he is just getting started.

There is a very simple formula that explains Bobby's success. He gives of himself unsparingly, and without regard to what he will get in return. He usually gets from me some perhaps intemperate words, for which I am sorry the next morning. But, Mr. President, his first thought is always of those of us he serves. And everyone of us knows that we can call upon him at any hour of the day or the night, and he will not be found wanting. He is a man who truly serves his country, and I consider him one of my most trusted, most loyal, and most competent friends.

Bobby and the Senate are ably assisted on the floor by Jay McDoncll, the assistant to the secretary for the majority; the young men in our cloakroom: Joe Stewart, Dick Darling, and Jim Daniel; and all of our eager and helpful young page boys on both sides of the aisle.

Mr. President, a man who looks after us, who guards us, and who is responsible for a great deal of the Capitol responsibilities, is a very genial, a very able, and a very effective Arizonian. His name is Joseph Duke, and he is our Sergeant at Arms. Joe Duke knows how highly I think of him, and in what high regard he is held by all the Members. He is a "can-do" man, and our country is fortunate to have him serving us during this period.

Mr. President, there are so many other officials who keep the wheels of legislation rolling smoothly. To name them is to call the roll of men who have served their country selflessly and well.

For example, one of Joe Duke's assistants is Charley Jones, the head Doorkeeper, and his tactful staff, including Richard Reidel, who has been the personal friend of hundreds of Senators for many years.

Under the direction of the Secretary of the Senate are: Emery L. Frazier, the Chief Clerk of the Senate, who sits there in front of us all day, and many times into the night.

Charles L. Watkins, the Parliamentarian, who was serving the Senate when I was a very small boy.

Floyd M. Riddick, our Assistant Parliamentarian.

No body has two more able parliamentarians counseling them each day than does the Senate of the United States.

Edward J. Hickey, the journal clerk, who frequently says to me, "Stop, look, and listen. Just a moment, please."

Edward E. Mansur, Jr., the legislative clerk, who can get a quorum or not get one, depending on the needs of the Senate and the country.

Lewis W. Bailey, the executive clerk in charge of nominations; William H. Wannall, our printing clerk and his capable assistant, Thomas N. Gay; J. Fred McClerkin and Harold G. Ast, our bill clerks; Paul McBride, the enrolling clerk and, at this time, I want to say farewell to my good friend Harvey E. Carrell who, for 15 years, has served as technical assistant to the enrolling clerk and is now retiring. We appreciate his devoted service and wish him well. To show you how valuable his services are, just a few minutes ago we had him standing by to get a bill enrolled on a moment's notice.

Harry C. Burke, the clerk of enrolled bills; James L. Johnson, the registration clerk and his fine and capable assistant George F. Thompson who was formerly our financial clerk; and Vernon Talbertt, the Senate's chief messenger.

Robert A. Brenkworth, the financial clerk and his capable assistant, William A. Ridgely, who manage to keep straight our accounting system. Theron W. Marshall, Superintendent of the Senate Document Room and his fine assistant, John T. Waggoner; Andrew J. Kramer, as keeper of the stationery does his best to keep us supplied, while Richard D. Hupman and his capable staff refresh our memories with Library knowledge. To keep us abreast of what we did yesterday and plan to do tomorrow, we rely upon Frederick H. Green and Dwight B. Galt, Jr. of the Daily Digest. John T. Chambers, superintendent of our service department, is another of the many whose presence is indirectly felt in the legislative field. And may I take another moment to say thanks and bless you to each and every one of the telephone operators who render the same type service as every other employee on Capitol Hill.

I do not intend to forget the minority employees. I have found J. Mark Trice, Oliver J. Dompierre, Bill Reed, Bill Brownrigg and their colleagues to be men with whom cooperation is possible in the interests of efficiency and good legislation, and the country, to which they are devoted.

There are a group of men for whom the lights burn late at night after the rest of us have left. They are probably the ablest staff of Official Reporters in the world, headed by James W. Murphy and John D. Rhodes.

The performance of these men is truly amazing. Day after day they put together a verbatim account of our proceedings—a verbatim account upon which the world relies for its knowledge of the workings of the United States Senate. Supreme Court decisions depend upon the accuracy of their work. Reputations can be made or unmade by a slip of their pen.

I wish to call the roll of this highly skilled group:

Francis J. Attig, Herbert N. Budlong, Nicholas J. Cinciotta, Charles J. Drescher, Elmer L. Koons, Joseph A. Koons, R. Thomas Loftus, Gregor MacPherson, Paul J. Plant, Willard W. Pruett, Julian R. Serles, Perry B. Smith, Wilbur T. Smith, Placidino Zagami.

There is another group of men to whom tribute should be paid. They are the police who protect us and who guard the Capitol.

We have our own Chief Robert C. Pearce with his very efficient staff and in addition there is the highly competent detail from the Metropolitan Police Department headed by a warmhearted Irishman, Capt. Michael Dowd.

I wish I could call the roll further. If I have missed anyone it is simply because there are only so many pages in the Record, and only so much time my colleagues will indulge me.

I would like to end by expressing my deep thanks to two of the members of the Senate Democratic policy committee: George E. Reedy, the staff director, and Gerald W. Siegel, the general counsel. These men, who serve me most directly, in truth serve the entire majority membership of, and the entire Senate itself.

George Reedy is not often seen on the Senate floor. But his excellent advice, superior analytical ability and judgment are constantly felt in my work.

Gerry Siegel is often on the floor. He has kept track of the bills and I think every Member of the Senate will agree he has made a contribution to the work of this session.

I know of no more promising young lawyer than Gerry Siegel. I predict he is destined to go far.

To both George and Gerry, and all the extremely able people who work with them on the policy committee staff, such as the very able lawyers, Solis Horwitz and Harry McPherson, who often assist me on the floor, I express my deepest gratitude.

In closing, I can only say that within a few hours, I hope, I will be headed for Texas. I am going to my ranch on the banks of the Pedernales, where I will lie in the sun and enjoy the peace and quiet of the central Texas hill country.

Before I leave I want to express to all the newspapermen and those in the radio and television gallery my thanks for their cooperation and for the understanding and justice they have shown, particularly the wire service people, including Jack Bell, bureau chief of the Associated Press in the Senate, Raymond Lahr, bureau chief of the United Press Associations in the Senate, Bill Theis, head of the INS, and Rose McKee, correspondent for International News Service, one of my favorite ladies.

Mr. President, I am going home, where it will be restful and relaxing, but my thoughts will be with my colleagues and with those who have made it possible for me to carry on, in some fashion, the responsibilities I have attempted to shoulder.

I hope they realize that my thoughts will be with all of them. I hope I can see them—many of them—during the fall recess. I extend to one and all a cordial invitation to visit me in Texas.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I want to say to my beloved friend from Louisiana that, as usual, he has been patient and understanding. His friendship has meant a great deal to me. He always is a tower of strength to me.

Mr. LONG. Of course, the Senator from Texas knows his feelings are completely reciprocated. I have the highest affection and respect for him.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I submit a resolution, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read, for the information of the Senate.

The resolution (S. Res. 201) was read and agreed to, as follows:

> Resolved, That a committee of two Senators be appointed by the Presiding Officer to join a similar committee of the House of Representatives to notify the President of the United States that the two Houses have completed the business of the session and are ready to adjourn unless he has some further communication to make to them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In accordance with the resolution, the Chair appoints the Senator from Texas [Mr. Johnson] and the Senator from California [Mr. Kuchel] the committee to notify the President.

AUTHORIZATION TO SIGN ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is at the desk a concurrent resolution from the House, which the clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read House Concurrent Resolution 230, as follows:

> Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That notwithstanding the sine die adjournment of the two Houses, the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate be, and they are hereby, authorized to sign enrolled bills and joint resolutions duly passed by the two Houses and found truly enrolled.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

COMMENDATION OF MINORITY AND MAJORITY LEADERS

Mr. KUCHEL. Mr. President, all of my colleagues on this side of the aisle, I know, would want me to make a very brief response to the generous words which the majority leader of the Senate has just uttered. My statement will be brief.

The Republicans in the Senate have been most proud to rally around the minority leader, whose friendship I have cherished for very many years. This is the end of the fifth session of the Senate of which I have been a Member, and I can understand the heartfelt respect which Senators have for their colleagues, as years of their service go by in their membership in this House of Congress.

I want to say as we leave on this occasion that the Republicans wish to pay their respects to the majority leader. All of us can testify that even when the debate has been heated and when the lines of cleavage have been drawn, especially lines of cleavage between the two parties, all of us have been most proud of the manner in which the majority leader of the Senate of the United States has conducted the business of this great body.

One further thought occurs to me, and then I shall conclude. This has probably been reiterated many times before. The line which divides the Democrats from the Republicans does not divide a mutuality of respect, patriotism, and dedicated desire to serve our country.

SECRETARY BENSON AND THE FARM POLICY

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, in the light of the comments by the Secretary of Agriculture relating to the election in Wisconsin and his feeling that the farm policies of the Republican administration had no effect on that election, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record a statement of the Wisconsin Farmers Union in connection with the special Wisconsin Senate election.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Statement of Wisconsin Farmers Union in Connection With Special Wisconsin Senate Election

Agricultural Secretary Ezra Benson and the Eisenhower administration farm planners risk all-out farmer rebellion aimed at the Republican Party in 1958 if they continue their downward farm price-support policies. This is shown in results from the farm areas in the Tuesday Wisconsin special Senate election. The election of William Proxmire to the United States Senate should serve notice on Mr. Benson that his farm policy has been completely repudiated in Wisconsin.

The victory of Proxmire over former Gov. Walter Kohler, a Benson supporter, in the special election is clear indication of the lack of faith which farmers place in the Benson-Eisenhower farm program. In rural precinct after rural precinct across Wisconsin, farmers went to the polls to protest the disastrous Benson farm-price policies by voting for Proxmire. Wisconsin's new United States Senator, who has been promised a seat on the key Senate Agricultural Committee, became an anti-Benson symbol to farmers in his State.

Farmers all over the United States can gain new confidence from the results of the Wisconsin special election—new confidence in knowing that Secretary Benson will have to think twice about his intended plans to reduce farm price supports, all the way down to zero, if necessary. And Wisconsin dairy farmers can thank themselves for the Proxmire victory when the time comes next year for Secretary Benson to follow through his predicted support cut in dairy products. Considering the heavy Proxmire vote in the farm area, Benson wouldn't dare put through another reduction in dairy farmer income next spring.

The Farmers Union is confident that, in Bill Proxmire, the dairy farmers of Wisconsin and the Nation will have their most effective Senate spokesman, from his vantage point on the vital Senate Agricultural Committee. By sending a proven friend of agriculture to the United States Senate, where he can serve farmers on this important committee, the Wisconsin farmers have won for themselves a tremendous victory.

William Proxmire's election has thrown a monkey wrench into the calculate Benson steamroller, aimed at the liquidation of America's family farmers.

A sample of the manner in which Proxmire swept through the farm areas of Wisconsin is shown in this township breakdown for strictly rural precincts in Eau Claire County.

	Kohler	Proxmire
Bridge Creek	48	108
Brunswick	57	118
Clear Creek	25	92
Drammen	26	103
Fairchild (T)	17	26
Lincoln	22	108
Ludington	26	101
Otter Creek	24	63
Pl. Valley	54	122
Seymour	103	335
Union	113	306
Washington	180	309
Wilson	13	66
Rural precinct total	772	1,870

(Proxmire carried Eau Claire County, 7,816 to 5,323, winning the city of Eau Claire by a 5,395 to 4,122 margin.)

Proxmire carried every county in the Ninth Congressional District in western Wisconsin. This is the district which sent Representative Lester Johnson to Congress in a special election 4 years ago. Johnson became the first Democrat to win election in this district, and has been reelected in two successive elections on a program based on continued opposition to the farm policies of the Eisenhower administration. Johnson's district contains the strongest activity of Farmers Union membership in Wisconsin.

The breakdown for this district:

County	Kohler	Proxmire
Barron	2,276	2,804
Buffalo	919	1,314
Chippewa	3,136	5,450
Clark	2,228	3,744
Dunn	1,944	2,420
Eau Claire	5,323	7,816
Jackson	1,038	1,883
Pepin	392	548
Pierce	1,621	1,733
St. Croix	2,457	2,768
Trempealeau	1,624	2,426

The new Wisconsin United States Senator's margin of victory was 116,000 votes, out of a total of about 780,000 cast. Approximately one-third of Wisconsin's eligible voters turned out to give victory to Proxmire, the first Democratic Senator from Wisconsin in 25 years.

The victor carried populous Milwaukee County by about 50,000 votes. In all, Proxmire beat out Kohler in 56 of the State's 71 counties. The near-final tally from the State's 3,361 precincts gives Proxmire 435,000 votes; Kohler, 318,000; independent Howard Boyle, 20,000; independent Douglas Wheaton, 2,000; Mrs. Georgia Cozzini, independent, 700.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record a news story from the Washington Star of yesterday which brought to the attention of the people of this area the fact that the Secretary of Agriculture found the time to attend the Fairfax County Fair, in Virginia, although he is unable to find the time to appear before a Senate subcommittee, despite repeated requests by the chairman of that subcommittee.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Benson Surprise Visitor at Fairfax County Fair

Secretary of Agriculture Benson paid an unexpected visit to the Northern Virginia Fair and Industrial Exposition in Fairfax County yesterday.

Mr. Benson, who has been a county-fair fan since his own farming days, toured the dairy, produce, home arts, and commercial exhibits. He spent an hour at the fairgrounds, located on route 50 at Pender, several miles west of the town of Fairfax.

EMBASSY AIDS ATTEND

Other visitors yesterday included representatives from the embassies of Ireland, Burma, Canada, Saudi Arabia, Sweden, and Libya.

In Guernsey classes, 4–H and open, Charles Landis, of Manassas, won grand, junior, senior, and reserve championships. In Holstein classes, open and 4–H, Bill Harrison, of Herndon, showed champion female, senior champion female, grand champion, and reserve champion female.

FAUQUIER COUNTY WINS

Fauquier County beat Prince William County with a county herd of Jerseys. A Fairfax County herd of Holsteins had no competition. In poultry judging, top winners who showed 30 breeds were Delbert O'Meara, Hall O'Meara, and Jack Fogle. Top market birds were shown by Larrie and Karen Blair.

Rosalind Virginia Farrar, 12-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Larston D. Farrar, of route 5, Fairfax, won 4 prizes in the baking department, in the 4–H class. She won second prize for toll-house cookies, third prize for biscuits, and third prize for earrings in the handicraft division.

Last year Rosalind won second prizes for cake and biscuits at the fair. She is a student at the Navy School in Fairfax County.

COMMENDATION OF MAJORITY LEADER

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, I should like to have the attention of the majority leader for 1 minute, which is as long a time as I shall impose upon the Senate.

As the Senate makes ready to adjourn sine die, I happen to be the only Member on the floor who helps represent the Pacific Northwest. I think I speak for all my colleagues of both parties from that region when I thank the majority leader for the unselfish interest and the lack of provincialism which has impelled him to take such a broad and generous approach toward many of the problems of our area. I want him and the constituents he represents to know that we reciprocate by trying to understand the problems of the great State he represents.

In conclusion, I may say to the Senator, he has worked hard—I think too hard. I think he has subjected himself, his constitution, and his nervous system to cruel and inhuman punishment. I hope he will be able to enjoy a complete rest at home and that his health and that of his family will be of the best.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I thank my friends, the Senator from California and the Senator from Oregon, in particular, for their generous statements. I assure the Senator that Monday morning I am going out dove hunting.

REPORT OF NOTIFICATION COMMITTEE

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas and Mr. KUCHEL, the committee appointed on the part of the Senate to wait upon the President of the United States, appeared in the center aisle, and Mr. Johnson of Texas said:

Mr. President, the committee appointed to wait upon the President has notified the President of the United States that the Congress is about to adjourn sine die until January 7, next year, and asked him if he had any messages to communicate to the Senate.

I think it is fair to say, Mr. President, that we are all anxious to return to our homes and to conclude this very arduous session, but I do not think anybody is going to be more pleased that it has come to an end than the President of the United States. He said the only message he desired to communicate to us was that he wished for us the best of health and happiness and hoped that our work between now and the time we reassembled would be fruitful and productive and in the Nation's interest.

Mr. President, I yield to my friend, the acting minority leader [Mr. Kuchel], so that he may make any observations he cares to make, since he was on the committee and talked to the President with me.

Mr. KUCHEL. Mr. President, I must say I felt quite honored to accompany the majority leader as a member of the committee of two to inform the President that the Senate was ready to adjourn sine die, and the implications which the majority leader put into words as to the President's views with respect to that coming event I am in a position to concur with most heartily.

There is nothing from the executive branch by way of messages, except those of good cheer, good luck, and Godspeed.

I thank my friend.

THE TIGHT MONEY POLICY IS ECONOMICALLY UNSOUND AND SOCIALLY UNJUST

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, for more than 2 months the Senate Committee on Finance has been investigating the fiscal and monetary condition of the United States Government and the soundness of the American economy. Close attention is being given to the tight-money policy and rising interest rates, and their effect upon almost every aspect of public finance, business activity, employment, and national well-being. The investigation will continue into the next session.

Although this inquiry is still in its early stages, now is a logical time to review the results thus far accomplished. The two most important agencies of Government concerned with the subject matter of the inquiry have completed their very extensive presentations. The three witnesses thus far heard—the recent Secretary of the Treasury George M. Humphrey, the Under Secretary of the Treasury W. Randolph Burgess, and the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board William M. Martin—have been courteous and cooperative.

The have confirmed what all of us already knew—that they are men of wide experience and exceptional competence. Whether the policies which they have persistently advocated and vigorously pursued are good or bad—and whether the continuance or profound alteration of these policies is essential to our economic safety and progress—will be the subject matter of my remarks today.

MONETARY AND CREDIT POLICIES VITALLY AFFECT EVERYONE

There is an unfortunate tendency in some quarters to regard problems of monetary and credit management as too complex for understanding by the average citizen, or even by Members of the Congress who are not specialists in this subject. This is a most dangerous tendency in a democracy, for the people and the Congress must make the ultimate decisions.

The problems confronting the Federal Reserve Board and the Treasury, their method of dealing with these problems, and the consequences of their actions, can and must be made plain to those of us who are not experts, but who nonetheless are intelligent and responsible.

Monetary and credit policies directly affect every level of Government. At the Federal level, these policies affect our ability to reduce unnecessary expenditures, to balance the Federal budget, to afford vital programs, and to achieve a financial posture where much-needed tax reduction becomes practicable.

At State and local levels of government, these same policies affect the ability to obtain sufficient credit on reasonable terms for essential public services; and this problem is doubly acute, when the Federal Government carries so heavy a national defense burden that it must properly look to the State and local governments to finance and carry additional domestic burdens.

These monetary and credit policies, by their direct effect upon the costs of government at all levels, also affect virtually every taxpayer, and consequently affect the overwhelming majority of all American families.

Indirectly but even more importantly, these monetary and credit policies vitally affect the performance of the whole American economy. They affect the price level, the levels of production and employment, the rate of economic growth, and the standard of living.

They affect the degree of economic opportunity afforded to the small as well as the large, the weak as well as the strong. They affect not only the degree of economic stability and progress, but also the degree of economic justice or injustice.

THE ECONOMIC PHILOSOPHY UNDERLYING THE TIGHT MONEY POLICY

Before getting into the details of all of these effects, I want to stress one point which is to my mind controlling.

There is a deep cleavage between the views of the Treasury and the Federal Reserve Board on one hand, and my views on the other. It reflects a difference of fundamental economic philosophy—a difference which has persisted throughout our history as a Nation, and particularly during the current century.

The difference is between those who believe in an economy of scarcity, and those who believe in an economy of abundance; between those who feel that we must still have occasional recessions or depressions, and those who feel that we have the brains and the tools to move forward without substantial interruption. It is a difference between those who feel that social injustice is the price we must pay for economic progress, and those who feel that social justice and economic progress are one and inseparable.

THE TIGHT MONEY POLICY MUST NOT BE TREATED AS A NARROW PARTISAN ISSUE

Issues of this character should not be treated in a partisan or political way, except in the broad sense that political and party responsibility are an essential part of our American system, particularly in dealing with national policies which must be guided by legislation. We are all politically answerable to the people. Consequently, I do not approach the problem of monetary and credit policies in a narrowly political or partisan spirit.

Certainly, the outstanding magazine Business Week, cannot be regarded as a partisan or ultraliberal political journal. But almost nowhere can be found so consistent and vigorous a challenge to the tight money policy and rising interest rates, as has appeared in this magazine during recent months.

On July 27, 1957, Business Week, on page 168, had this to say:

> Certainly, the evidence to date suggests that, though monetary policy has slowed down economic expansion, it has not impeded the climb of wages and prices. It is also clear that excessive demand, which is regarded as the traditional stimulus of inflation, is not the main cause of the pressure now being felt. * * * There is growing doubt that this unorthodox type of inflation can be successfully defeated by the orthodox weapons of fiscal and monetary policy. * * * A sizable body of opinion, both here and abroad, feels that dependence on orthodox policies, if pressed too far, might halt inflation only by inducing deflation.

Now, let us turn to a more precise examination of the issues before us.

WHAT IS THE TIGHT MONEY POLICY IN A NUTSHELL?

First of all, what is the tight money policy in a nutshell? Here is a concise though oversimplified answer. It is a policy of expanding the supply of money and credit less rapidly than the American economy demands. This policy is founded primarily upon the belief that the current restraints upon the growth of the privately held supply of money and credit are desirable to restrain inflation.

The Federal Reserve Board is the key force in this process of restraint, not because it controls the entire supply of money and credit but rather because it controls enough of the money and credit supply at crucial points to determine within limits the rate at which this supply grows. The Federal Reserve Board exercises this power of restraint through the rediscount rate, through determining the amount of Government securities which may be held by member banks of the Federal Reserve System as a base for the expansion of bank credit, and in a variety of other ways.

The policy of monetary and credit restraint causes interest rates to rise, for precisely the same reason that a restraint upon any supply in relationship to demand exerts an upward pressure upon prices. It is entirely academic and fruitless to examine whether the Federal Reserve Board has wanted interest rates to rise, or has merely taken a course of action which necessarily has permitted interest rates to rise.

It is correct to state, however, that spokesmen for the Federal Reserve Board have not hesitated to defend rising interest rates as desirable under current economic conditions. It is therefore only fair to conclude that the restraint of money and credit availability which has resulted in the upward movement of interest rates has been the purpose of the Federal Reserve Board.

The Treasury is also involved in this whole process, because the extent to which the Federal Reserve System acquires Government securities has a direct bearing upon the limits of the expansion of bank credit, and because the degree to which the Federal Reserve System supports or does not support Government issues, by buying them, affects the whole financing program of the Government and the costs at which such financing is undertaken. It affects the whole management of the national debt.

Technically, the Federal Reserve Board is independent of the Treasury. But it has usually been true, and it should always be true, that the views and the purposes of the Treasury and those of the Federal Reserve Board interact upon each other. It is really not important to determine the extent of interaction at this time.

The views of spokesmen for Treasury and Federal Reserve, as expressed before the finance committee, were for most important purposes, indistinguishable. Each might have presented the testimony of the other.

EXTENT TO WHICH TIGHT MONEY POLICY IS INCREASING THE INTEREST BURDEN

The aspect of rising interests rates which is easiest to examine with exactitude is the effect upon the cost of Government at all levels. So I shall deal with this first. The year 1950 is used as the base, because new monetary and credit policies initiated an upward movement of interest rates in 1951 which has continued until now at an accelerated rate with some undulations.

Compared with 1950, the computed annual interest rate on the national public debt as a whole had risen by more than 24½ percent by July 1957. By June 1957, compared with 1950, the interest rate on United States Government 3 to 5 year issues had risen by more than 151 percent, and on 9 to 12 month issues by more than 181 percent.

Naturally, the interest rate on Federal obligations is the base from which other interest rates are largely determined. Comparing June 1957 with 1950, the interest rates on State and local general obligations advanced more than 88 percent; the interest rate on corporate bonds advanced more than 45 percent; and the bank rates on short-term business loans of all sizes in 19 large cities advanced almost 63 percent.

It is not possible to now provide the Senate with the increased interest rates paid by small business, homeowners, farmers, and consumer purchasers of goods on credit. Although the Treasury has been asked for detailed information on this subject since early April, it has failed thus far to provide the Finance Committee with comprehensive information on these matters. The Treasury has told us that it did not have the information available.

An effort by the Treasury to obtain this information would be very slight, compared with the magnitude and the cost of rising interest rates, and compared with the economic consequences of rising interest rates. I simply fail to comprehend a degree of irresponsibility which insists upon remaining substantially in the dark on this whole matter. It would appear that the architects of the tight-money, high-interest policy wish to keep the public as much in the dark as possible regarding the costs and consequences of their work.

Yet we do know enough, from the facts which I have just cited, to make approximate calculations of the direct cost of rising interest rates.

The Treasury has admitted that higher interest rates have already resulted in an increased annual interest burden upon the Treasury of more than a billion and a quarter dollars each year.

Taking into account State and local governments, and taking into account also private indebtedness, it appears that the increased annual cost of higher interest rates throughout the Nation is by now in the neighborhood of $4 billion.

The accumulated cost of these higher interest rates, over the years since the trend commenced in earnest, is in the neighborhood of $8 billion.

If all debts private and public were now refinanced at current interest rates, the increased annual costs due to higher interest rates would conservatively be in the neighborhood of $15 billion.

This is not an unfair figure to use, because it is based on current interest rates on new financing, while in fact interest rates are still rising, and day by day we have additional examples of refinancing of private and public obligations at higher interest levels.

I shall not indulge in speculation as to what the increased annual interest burdens would be within a very few [illegible] if interest rates continue to rise at their current pace. The figure would be astronomical.

Instead, let us use the conservative $15 billion figure which I have just stated.

This comes to an average of about $300 for every family in the United States and consequently represents enough money to reduce the taxes of every American family at all levels of government by an average of $300. It represents a great deal more than half of our total Federal expenditures for all purposes other than major national security items.

It represents about 1½ times as much money as would be needed annually to double the social security old age insurance payments as well as the public welfare old age assistance payments to every recipient of these benefits in the United States. It represents enough money to replace a million and a half slum homes with decent housing every year.

It is five times more than the funds necessary to finance our ambitious interstate highway program at its peak. Can we tolerate the prospect of such an increased annual interest burden within a few years, when it is claimed that we do not have the resources to meet the great and growing needs of our people for tax reduction, better housing, improved social security, and a multitude of other things?

WHO GETS HELPED AND WHO GETS HURT DIRECTLY BY RISING INTEREST RATES?

I wish to read a truly fantastic statement, with respect to this increasing interest burden, made by the Under Secretary of the Treasury. On page 1447 of volume 15 of the stenographer's transcript of the Finance Committee hearings on Monday, July 29, Mr. Burgess said this:

> The money used to pay the interest is collected from many people in taxes, and the money is paid out again partly to the same people and partly to others. I think it is fair to say that about as many people benefit directly or indirectly from these interest payments as are hurt by them.

The then Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Humphrey, said practically the same thing.

This amounts to saying that, because every loan represents both a borrower and a lender, changes in interest rates make no difference to the people as a whole. This is just as ridiculous as to say that, at a given level of national income, it makes no difference how the income is distributed; or to say that, at a given level of taxation, it makes no difference how the tax burden is distributed.

The statistics of the Federal Reserve Board indicate that in early 1957, 25 percent of all consumer units in the United States had no savings; 55 percent had no savings or had savings below $500; and 77 percent had no savings or had savings below $2,000. Only 10 percent had savings of $5,000 and over. Can the Treasury really believe that the benefits of rising interest rates flow to these 77 percent of our families, even relative to the size of their incomes, in the same way that they benefit wealthy families who obviously have big savings?

In 1955, more than 8¼ million multiple- and single-person families in the United States had incomes below $2,000 and about 22 million had incomes below $4,000. These families are the same families who have practically no savings or very little, and most of them certainly do not engage in money-lending on any substantial scale. Can the Treasury really believe that these more than 22 million families, coming to more than 40 percent of the population of the United States, benefit from rising interest rates, even relative to the size of their incomes, to the same extent as families with incomes of $50,000 or $100,000 a year?

In 1955, 12 percent of all farm-operator families in the United States had incomes under $1,000, 37 percent had incomes under $2,000, and 72 percent had incomes under $4,000. How much do these families benefit by rising interest rates?

In 1955, about 19 percent of all multiple-person families with heads aged 65 and over, and 61½ percent of all unrelated individuals aged 65 and over, had total money incomes below $1,000; 44 percent of these multiple-person families and 86½ percent of these unrelated individuals had money incomes under $2,000. What savings do these people have, and what money-lending activities are they engaged in, and how do they benefit by rising interest rates?

The Treasury tells us that the social-security trust funds benefit from rising interest rates. But if this be so, the expansion of these trust funds adds nothing to the incomes or the benefits being received by our senior citizens. Nobody but a certain type of banker could look at what is happening to the trust funds, instead of looking at what is happening to the families.

I notice also from statistics for 1955 that the percentage of employed men earning less than $2,000 in money income was more than 67 percent for those engaged in personal services; more than 26 percent of those engaged in retail trade; 23 percent of those engaged in professional and retail services. Even in manufacturing, the figure was more than 12.7 percent.

The situation among employed women is very much worse. Does the Treasury really believe that these people benefit by rising interest rates, in the sense that they get their fair share of rising interest payments?

I have roughly calculated that families with more than $15,000 drawing interest on net balance benefit from rising interest rates, but that families below this level are hurt on net balance. Generally speaking, the lower their incomes, the more they are hurt. This is for the very simple reason that all families do not have the same amount of savings relative to their incomes; the higher income people save a larger percentage of their incomes, and the lower-income people save a smaller percentage.

The confusion which exists in these matters is to the advantage of the proponents and beneficiaries of high interest rates. For example, the interest rate on United States Government series E-bonds has recently been increased by one-fourth of 1 percent. Thus, a family with $5,000 in such bonds in the event of their exchange for new bonds, gains $12.50 in interest each year.

Yet, on the other hand, that same family may be living in a $20,000 house and paying 1 percent more interest on the mortgage because of higher interest payments. On a level payment plan, the annual additional interest payment would be about $130 greater on a 20-year mortgage. Thus on net balance, the family might think it was breaking nearly even, when it was in fact losing $117.50 a year.

The meaning of all these statistics is that rising interest rates, looked at without regard to other factors, constitute an unconscionable redistribution of income in a grossly regressive direction.

Rising interest rates do more than rob Peter to pay Paul; they do rob a thousand Peters to enrich one Paul. Rising interest rates also take money away from school districts, and pay it out to coupon clippers.

Rising interest rates take money away from roads and hospitals, and pay it out to those who live in the most luxurious style. They take money away from farmers, and pay it out to investment bankers.

I shall deal later on with the fallacious argument that rising interest rates help all the people by curbing inflation.

At this point, it is well to distinguish between the nature of interest income and the nature of other income, such as wages. Interest income is merely a transfer payment. It does not increase the net income of the Nation in any respect. It is a shift of income from borrowers to lenders, which does not in and of itself increase the wealth of our people as a whole. When interest is increased unreasonably, it has the effect of reducing the net income of the many, while greatly enlarging the net income of the wealthy few.

This operation does not reflect itself directly in the per capita income of the Nation, because the average per capita income remains the same. It is only the final distribution of income that has been changed. This has somewhat the effect of a share-the-wealth program operating in reverse.

THE TIGHT MONEY POLICY RATIONS CREDIT IN THE WRONG DIRECTION

The current tightening of credit, which is the cause of rising interest rates, is having an equally perverse effect. The biggest businesses can still get all the credit they want, and the cost of interest to them is less than 1 percent of their total costs of doing business. Thus, the tight money policy hardly affects them much one way or the other directly.

Also, the biggest corporations can avoid the problem of tight credit and rising interest rates entirely, by financing larger portions of their investment programs out of retained earnings, and by lifting their prices to enlarge these earnings, which they have been doing for some time. They can also shift any rising interest rate costs which they incur to the consumer through price increases. Whichever alternative they select, rising interest rates are in themselves inflationary, just like other rising costs.

A very powerful inflationary factor is the ability of major industries to impose price increases, against which the public is defenseless. A good illustration exists in the recent increases in the price of steel, when all steel companies increased their prices simultaneously, despite the fact that the industry was using its plants at well below 90 percent of capacity. The public had no opportunity to purchase from any company which had not increased its prices.

A few months previously, the major oil companies had advanced the price of crude oil. Now we are told that the automobile manufacturers are preparing to advance the prices of the new models of their cars. These price increases might in some cases be partially justified because of increases in the cost of labor and materials. None of them can be completely justified on that basis, however.

I am not here condemning management or labor. In the main, I believe that increased profits and wages should be related directly to increased production and productivity. In the long run, that is the only way the public as a whole will benefit. If we are looking at the overall picture, any other increase in income is a mere delusion.

It is agreed by all that the increase in investment in new plant and equipment by the big concerns, has contributed more than anything else to the inflation which is occurring at the present time. It is agreed that high interest rates have had little effect on the decisions of these major industries to increase plant expansion. Also, a great many of our major manufacturing corporations collect more interest than they pay out on an annual basis.

On the other hand, depreciation amounts to about 10 percent of industrial expenses, and taxes take more than 50 percent of corporate profits. When the administration recommended and the Congress adopted measures in 1954 to permit a larger amount of depreciation to be taken on expenditures for plant and equipment during the first few years of their life, both the administration and Congress joined hands in contributing mightily to the investment boom, which all witnesses tell us is the largest single factor causing the inflation which exists today.

Now, if the administration or the Congress wishes to retard the excessive investment in plant and equipment, it would be far preferable to repeal the accelerated depreciation provisions which were enacted in 1954, rather than to pursue a high interest rate policy which penalizes the masses of our people, and fails utterly to retard capital expansion. Frankly, I do not believe that either such repeal or rising interest rates are necessary or desirable, but I would prefer the former to the latter if confronted with the necessity of making a decision.

In sharp contrast to big business, the small-business man usually cannot increase his prices. Moreover, he finds that he cannot get the credit he needs to finance his inventories or to undertake the capital improvements which are essential to put him on a basis of competitive efficiency with giant business. Higher cost credit hurts him even if he gets it, because interest is a larger part of his total business costs than in the case of giant industry, and he has less financial resources in any event.

The farmer is tremendously dependent upon credit, and he cannot shift higher costs to anybody.

A 1-percent rise in interest rates, which has no appreciable impact upon giant industry, increases by about 10 percent the total payments of a homeowner during the life of his mortgage. I ask unanimous consent to have inserted at this point in my remarks a table to illustrate this situation.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Effects of the increase of 1 percent (i. e., from 4 percent to 5 percent) on interest payments for mortgages of various principal amounts and maturities

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, new rental housing will also carry this 10 percent increase in cost, which will be passed on to the tenant. This causes inflation, in the form of higher costs for home ownership or rental. Moreover, the tightening of credit, and the rising interest rates, caused investment in residential nonfarm construction to decline by 11.6 percent from 1955 to 1956, measured in uniform 1956 dollars.

The rate of nonfarm housing starts has been moving severely downward since the end of 1954, and in recent months has been averaging an annual rate about 400 thousand below 1955. This low rate of residential construction, related to new family formation, and related to the amount of substandard housing, is obviously another example of the inflationary effect of the tight money policy and rising interest rates.

The unorganized worker cannot shift to anybody else the higher cost of living which results from higher interest rates. In the case of organized workers with cost-of-living contracts, the higher interest rates add to the cost of living, and are therefore inflationary.

They result in immediate pay raises to meet the higher cost of living. These pay raises cause management to raise the price of the product.

The ordinary consumer, who buys an automobile, a lawnmower, a refrigerator, or a television set, must pay for the cost of rising interest rates out of his own pocket.

Because of these higher costs, he must borrow more to make ends meet. The higher interest rates further increase his cost of buying the product, which is another illustration of the inflationary effects of rising interest rates.

In short, the tight credit policy, and the consequent increase in interest rates, is providing relatively more credit and relatively more income for those who already have plenty, and providing relatively less credit and relatively less income for those who already have too little.

THE TIGHT MONEY POLICY RATIONS NATIONAL INCOME IN THE WRONG DIRECTION

The best illustration of these trends is the relative trends in personal income. I shall depict all of these trends in uniform 1956 dollars.

During the 5½ years from the beginning of 1953 to the middle of 1957, personal interest income and dividend income have been growing at average annual rates almost twice as fast as wages and salaries. They have been growing about 8 times as fast as the income of unincorporated small businesses and professional people.

Meanwhile, farm operators' net income has been collapsing at an average annual rate of about 5 percent. During the most recent year and a half, dividends and personal interest income have been growing more than 60 percent faster than wages and salaries, while unincorporated small businesses and professional people have registered no income growth whatsoever.

Farm operators' net income has continued to decline at an average annual rate of almost 3½ percent. This is indeed a process of feeding the fat and starving the lean.

Mr. President, I do not claim that the policy of tight money and rising interest rates is solely responsible for all of these socially unjust and economically dangerous trends. But it bears an important share in this responsibility.

It bears a share which the Federal Reserve Board and the Treasury can do something about, while they alone may be able to do very little about some of the other causes of these highly unfavorable trends. Moreover, the policy of tight money and rising interest rates is but one startling manifestation of an entire economic philosophy which I have already described in general terms.

Other examples of the same philosophy have been embodied in the Government's attitude, until very recently, toward rapid tax amortization; the Government's attitude toward the redistribution of the tax burden in a regressive direction; the Government's attitude toward the awarding of defense contracts; the Government's resistance to fair expansion of social security; and above all the Government's entire farm program from top to bottom.

THE TIGHT MONEY POLICY IS ECONOMICALLY UNSOUND

Thus far, Mr. President, I have been discussing the social iniquities and economic injustice of the tight money policy and rising interest rates. But I said at the outset that economic injustice in a country like the United States is inconsistent with economic soundness or economic progress.

So let us now examine how the maldistributions in income, generated by the tight money policy and similar policies, have already created an unbalanced economic structure in its entirety. We have not yet reached the point where a depression is just around the corner. But we have certainly reached the point where a lot of warning signals are being flashed.

I suppose that there is no proposition more generally accepted by the American people, and by the experts also, than the proposition that the formula for economic stability is to keep production and consumption in fairly good balance. If we try to consume more than we can produce, inflation must result.

If we try to produce more than we can consume, recession or depression must ultimately result. Those who have studied most carefully the history of the great depression, have now concluded that its primary cause was not the stock market crash and the financial crisis.

These events were only the symptoms and the breakthrough. The primary cause was the failure of consumption to keep up with our growing productive capabilities. Consumption did not keep up, because the incomes of the bulk of consumers did not keep up with the incomes available for investment in productive facilities and for speculation.

For a number of years, we deferred the payoff by a rapid expansion of credit and installment buying, and by making loans overseas to enable other countries to buy our products. But while the payoff was delayed, it could not be avoided.

We are once again witnessing, as I have already reviewed, a growth in the incomes of investors and speculators much more rapid than the growth in income of the wage and salary people who are most of our consumers. The incomes and consuming power of the more than 21 million people in our farm population have been forced deliberately and cruelly downward. In consequence, investment in the means of production has been advancing far ahead of consumption.

Comparing the annual rates in the second quarter of 1957 with those in the second quarter of 1956, all measured in uniform 1956 dollars, investment in producers durable equipment has grown by 9.6 percent, while consumer expenditures have grown by only 1.7 percent. It is this trend during the past year, continuing during the first half of this year, which led the distinguished economist Sumner Slichter very recently to send a letter to the New York Times, stating his view that our No. 1 economic problem now is to expand consumption, so that our rate of real economic progress may be elevated to desirable levels.

Perhaps the most amazing thing about the testimony of the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, was his failure to appreciate the nature of this most serious problem. He argued, in fact, that consumers should be induced to spend still less and to save more, in order that these savings might be available to finance the investment boom which is already far out of hand relative to consumption.

The two spokesmen for the Treasury were almost as wrong on this subject as Chairman Martin. Treasury Secretary Humphrey and Under Secretary Burgess admitted that the investment boom is moving too fast, and that consumption is not moving fast enough. But they nonetheless advocated an increase in consumer savings.

Yet it is elementary, under current conditions, that an increase in consumer savings must result in less production and more unemployment unless these savings are absorbed in investment. Why should we have this shift from consumption to investment, when investment is already too high relative to consumption?

None of the three Government witnesses could appreciate the very simple fact that the tight-money policy and rising interest rates are not restraining excessive investment, while they are seriously retarding our already inadequate consumption.

We do not have to rely entirely upon forecasts to determine the consequences of this growing imbalance between investment and consumption. A large amount of the evidence is already here. All of the Government witnesses admitted that our economy needs to expand at a rate of between 3 and 4 percent in a year—and I think still more—in order to absorb a growing labor force, and to absorb improvements in technology and productivity.

This is how the standard of living moves ahead. Even 5 percent is not an overly rapid rate of growth.

Japan is expanding at 15 percent, Russia at 12 percent, West Germany at 6 percent.

But our average annual economic expansion, measuring our total national product in uniform 1956 dollars, has fallen from 4 percent during the period from the beginning of 1949 to date, to 3.1 percent for the period from the beginning of 1953 to date, to 2.7 percent for the period from the beginning of 1956 to date, and to only 2.6 percent when the first half of 1957 is compared on an annual basis with the first half of 1956. Keeping in mind that our population is increasing by 1.5 percent each year, our per capita gain is about 1 percent.

The trends in industrial production make the current situation even clearer. The industrial production index, during the most recent months, has been considerably lower than at the beginning of this year, still further below the levels of the last quarter of 1956, and hardly above the levels of a year ago.

As the economy is being forced into a state of virtual stagnation, excess productive capacities or surpluses of goods are almost everywhere. Most of our basic industries have moved down to within a range of 80 percent of full capacity operations, when they should be around 95 percent or, in any event, above 90 percent.

Unemployment during the first half of 1957, measured as a percent of the civilian labor force, was more than 50 percent higher than in 1952 or 1953. It was about 8 percent higher than in 1956.

Moreover, these figures on unemployment do not take account of temporary layoffs. They do not take account of the inefficient utilization of the labor supply, resulting from insufficient markets to keep plants running efficiently.

Now I want to say just a word about productivity, or output per man-hour worked. In grouping and grasping around for some logical explanation of the current inflation, the Government witnesses tried to tell the Finance Committee that the inflation is occurring because the rate of productivity growth is falling.

They told us that labor costs have been rising faster than productivity, and that this has made it necessary for prices to rise. But the Government spokesman who introduced this fallacious point beat a hasty retreat when I read to him the Government statistics on productivity increases.

These increases have been sufficiently large to result, in the absence of adequate consumer buying, in the vast increases of unused plant capacities and of unemployment which I have just mentioned. The figures do show that the rate of productivity growth has slowed down somewhat.

But the only reasonable explanation of this is the inefficiency of operations which results from inadequate markets to stimulate full operations. There can certainly be no technological reasons for the slowdown in productivity growth, when we have been witnessing this tremendous boom in new machinery and tools, combined with an increase in labor skills.

In short, the tight money policy itself, by holding back economic growth, is holding back productivity gains—and thus contributing to inflation.

THE ABANDONMENT OF A FULL EMPLOYMENT POLICY

In the full face of these economic developments, one might have expected the Government witnesses to question the tight money policy, which even these witnesses conceded has contributed to the slowdown of economic expansion, to the ominous rise in unused productive capacity, and to the serious growth in unemployment. Instead, all three of these witnesses seemed to feel that these unfavorable developments were in fact favorable. None of them would admit categorically that he liked rising unemployment, but they all insisted that unemployment now is not too high, and that in fact we now have full employment.

This viewpoint brought home to me a realization that the Treasury and the Federal Reserve Board define "full employment" in a very different way from my definition—and I believe very different from the purposes of the Employment Act of 1946. I define "full employment" as a maximum opportunity for all of our people to obtain jobs in accord with their capabilities.

I define "full employment" as maximum utilization of our factories and our farms, to turn out an ever-increasing abundance of goods, and to raise the standards of living of all the people accordingly. The Treasury and the Federal Reserve Board apparently define "full employment" as the amount of unused plant and unemployment which they believe to be necessary to maintain a stable price level.

If a good case could be made to the effect that the amount of idle resources we now have were necessary to maintain a stable price level, something might be said on both sides of the question as to whether a stable price level is more desirable than full employment and a high rate of economic growth.

It is unnecessary for me to go into this interesting question. The entire case of the Treasury and the Federal Reserve Board vanishes because of this: The facts reveal clearly that the low rate of economic growth and the rising amount of economic slack, during the past year and a half, has been accompanied by much more price inflation than the higher rate of economic growth, and the much lesser degree of economic slack, during preceding years all the way back to the end of World War II.

Again and again, members of the Finance Committee challenged the Government witnesses to explain why full employment in peacetime has not been inflationary, and why the forced departure from full employment during the past year and a half or longer has been so extraordinarily inflationary.

Chairman Martin made a feeble attempt at explanation. He conceded that we should have a larger volume of economic activity, a faster rate of economic growth, and a larger volume of consumption. But he argued that we should have these things at a lower price level, and that we should not expect to have them until we achieve a lower price level.

This is an indirect way of conceding my point, to the effect that we have plenty of productive capacity now to produce much more goods and services for the benefit of the American people. But since we now have excess productive capacity relative to demand, why are prices still rising?

I could not obtain from any of the Government witnesses even an attempt to answer the question. So I will attempt to supply an answer of my own.

We now have rising prices because of the restrictionist economic philosophy, which the tight money policy represents. We now have rising prices, not because we have full utilization of our plants and manpower, but rather because we do not have full utilization. Full production is the fundamental cure for inflation in peacetime, and it is the best answer to inflation even in wartime.

Some of our administered-price semimonopolistic giant industries, in the absence of an adequate expansion of sales, have been raising their prices in order to obtain the funds which they think they need. I do not believe personally that they have needed so much funds.

If the economy were expanding at a full employment rate, they would obtain these amounts of funds through more sales, without inflating their prices so much or at all.

This is not a theoretical argument; it is supported by the fact that we are now witnessing a price inflation, in a retarded economy, enormously greater than the price increases that we had in a full employment economy.

The source of the error on the part of the Treasury and the Federal Reserve Board is that they are confusing the wartime and reconversion inflation with the current inflation. Those inflations, especially in wartime, were caused by necessary overemployment of our plants and manpower, accompanied by available purchasing power far in excess of our total productive capacities.

Restraints upon the money supply and many inducements to consumers to enlarge their savings, were entirely appropriate under such circumstances. Even then, we did not attempt to cut back on general production and employment. We had the vision to foresee that the expansion of production would do more than any other one thing to reduce the inflationary pressures.

But today, the situation is entirely different. We have underemployment, underconsumption, and underproduction. Yet the Treasury and the Federal Reserve Board are applying their restraints to force all of these factors still lower. This is not a solution; it is a dangerous mistake based upon a dangerous confusion.

Instead of pursuing this dangerous course, we should be stimulating consumption until it catches up with our productive powers. We should be avoiding the current policies which feed the investment boom, until consumption catches up. Once this fundamental balance is reestablished, we can move ahead confidently, with full employment of both plant and manpower. This should always be the prime objective of national economic policy.

THE TIGHT MONEY POLICY IS IN ITSELF INFLATIONARY

In order to accomplish these fundamental purposes, we must recognize that an excess restriction of the money supply is an economic evil, no less than it is a social injustice. This excessive restriction, now in effect, hurts the economy and feeds inflation at one and the same time.

I have already given some specific examples of why it feeds inflation. So let us now look at the overall picture.

The crux of the matter is whether or not increases in interest rates really are a deterrent to inflation. If it cannot be demonstrated clearly that they are, then these increases have no justification whatsoever.

The fact is that the initial effect of increases in interest rates is the same as the initial effect of an increase in other costs. This initial effect is to push prices upward, and higher prices are the very essence of inflation. Since prices are still rising all along the line, this is evidence that the increases in interest rates are still continuing to be inflationary.

It is no answer to say that rising interest rates will no longer be inflationary, when future increases in prices deter purchases at the new price level. To say this is just like saying that inflationary price increases are anti-inflationary because, when the price increases continue for long enough, they produce a reaction which leads to a recession. One of the strongest arguments against rising interest rates is that they are, indeed, contributing to an inflation which could lead to a recession.

The analysis would be different, if we were now suffering from the wartime type of inflation, with consumer purchasing power far in excess of the available supply of goods. In that case, it would be desirable to restrain consumer purchases by desirable means, such as the encouragement of savings. Even so, it would not be desirable to restrain consumer purchases by rising interest costs and rising prices, which take goods away from low-income consumers, without taking goods away from those who have limitless money to spend.

The economic situation today is entirely different. The reason for the great price rises today is not an excess of purchasing power, or a shortage of production of consumer goods. The prices are rising, despite unused productive capabilities and an insufficiently utilized labor supply. The shortage today is a shortage of purchasing power by consumers, and this shortage is intensified by the inflationary price increases, to which rising interest rates contribute.

Furthermore, to let this inflationary process go on, only hurts the Nation's prosperity and retards the desirable growth of the economy, by adding to the deficiency of consumer purchasing power, and by adding to the already existing surpluses in the form of unemployed labor and unused productive capacity.

Thus the shortage which is contributing to inflation today is not a shortage of labor or of plant, but rather a shortage of purchasing power, including money and credit. The tight money policy adds to this shortage, and therefore adds to inflation. The proof of this is to be found in the fact that we now have inflation with a very tight money supply, while we had much less inflation in earlier years with a more adequate money supply.

During those years since World War II, excepting the reconversion and Korean war years, when we had reasonably full employment, a reasonable rate of economic growth, and comparatively little price inflation, the privately held supply of money and credit was expanding at an average annual rate close to 3⅓ percent.

During the year and a half since the beginning of 1956, we have had neither reasonably full employment, nor a reasonable rate of economic growth, but extraordinary price inflation. During this latter period, the privately held money supply has been expanding at an average annual rate of only 2.7 percent, or almost one-third less than the desirable rate.

Let us look at the price side of the picture, and this brings us to the crux of the whole matter.

The tight money policy and rising interest rates are not restraining, but rather are accelerating, price inflation. During the first half of 1957, compared with the first half of 1956, consumer prices have averaged 3.6 percent higher, wholesale prices 3.4 percent higher, and industrial prices 3.5 percent higher.

This might be called the annual rate of price advance which is currently in process. During the whole period from 1953 to date, the average annual expansion of the money supply was much greater than during the past year. The average annual rate of real economic progress was much greater.

We were much closer to full employment of plant and manpower, the average annual increase of consumer prices was only one-fourth as great, the average annual increase in wholesale prices was less than 30 percent as great, and the average annual increases in industrial prices was only about one-third as great, as the price increases during the most recent year from the first half of 1956 to the first half of 1957.

In the absence of explanations which have not been forthcoming, what better demonstration could there be that the tight money policy and rising interest rates are accomplishing at one and the same time the double purpose of endangering the economy and feeding price inflation? The Treasury and the Federal Reserve Board have made no attempt to answer this question. They have not even looked at this problem.

NO CASE HAS BEEN MADE FOR THE TIGHT MONEY POLICY

In summation, just what kind of case have the Treasury and the Federal Reserve Board made? They have failed to explain the current inflation. Their attempts to explain it on grounds of extreme prosperity, excessive overall demand, and other classic explanations, do not fit the plain facts as they are. The current inflation has not been due to an economy suffering from overprosperity, but rather to an economy suffering from underprosperity.

It has not been due to strains upon our productive capacities. It has not been due to an excessive money supply and excessive purchasing power. It has been due, rather, to a bad distribution of an inadequate money supply and inadequate purchasing power, so that some have had too much money and credit and excessive incomes and prices, while others have had far too little of all of these things.

The current inflation has been due to a restrictionist economic philosophy and an unjust social philosophy, of which the tight money policy and rising interest rates are prime examples.

In a final desperate effort to offer some rational explanation, the Treasury and the Federal Reserve Board have sought to fix the blame for inflation upon those who work for wages. They have claimed that excessive wage increases have forced prices upward.

I do not pretend to be enough of an expert to analyze all of the variations in the wage structure. Yet how can wages in general have been too high, when consumption in general has been much too low, and when wage earners are our most numerous consumers? How can wages in general have been too high, when big industry has been earning enough profits to lift their investment and productive facilities far out of line on the high side with the consuming power of the people?

Only a few years ago, many of the people who now claim that wages are too high were claiming that farm income was too high, even though at its peak farm income never yielded to our farm people a per capita income much better than half that of the population as a whole. Many of these same people are still pursuing policies which are driving farm income still lower.

For the good of our whole economy, including farmers, I for one am thankful that this kind of economic philosophy has not yet been more efficiently applied to the wage earners of America. If this kind of economic philosophy persists, I predict that the wage earner in due course will feel its full impact even as he did after 1929.

PLANNING A RECESSION TO CURE INFLATION

If this seems like an overstatement, let us examine the only morsel of hope or comfort proffered by the Treasury and the Federal Reserve Board. They tell us that their current restrictionary policies are only beginning to take hold. They tell us these policies will be successful in containing inflation when we descend from the current level of prosperity, which Secretary Humphrey several times called extreme, to a lower level of prosperity.

Chairman Martin tried to assure us that he was not in favor of an economic recession. But the so-called adjustments which he described as essential to the restoration of price stability would, in fact, be an economic recession. There is a growing body of informed observers, to some of whom I referred earlier in my remarks, who now admit that the tight money policy and rising interest rates provide no answer whatsoever to the problems of inflation, except by bringing on an economic recession.

I reject totally and completely this brand of economic philosophy. An economic recession for the country as a whole would drive our farmers from poverty to destitution.

It would drive our small-business men from a precarious existence to bankruptcy.

It would drive additional millions of workers into unemployment.

It would automatically create huge deficits in the Federal budget, and make us even less able than we now seem to be to meet the needs of our growing population for essential public services.

It would perilously weaken our position in world affairs.

Clearly, we must find some better answer than a planned recession.

Even if the tight money policy and rising interest rates were not driving us toward an economic recession, they are nonetheless depriving us of the blessings of a full economy.

Right now, we are producing goods and services at an annual rate of at least $25 billion less than if we had a full economy. This comes close to $500 on the average, for every American family.

If we continue at the present restricted rate of progress for another few years, we could lose $100 billion or more in the goods and services which a full economy can produce for the benefit of the people.

Today, I shall detail only the first step of the full program required to get us back on the right course.

We should abandon the tight money policy. This policy is playing havoc with the management of the national debt; inflating Government costs; preventing full production and full employment; jeopardizing our economic stability; fanning general inflationary forces; fleecing the taxpayer; preventing the construction of necessary homes, schools, and other public improvements; penalizing farmers, small-business men, and ordinary consumers; and taking billions of dollars out of the pockets of our people, for the unjust enrichment of the few.

No case whatsoever has been made for the continuance of this tight money policy. All of the forces of fact and logic are against it. We must get rid of it before it is too late.

Mr. President, I have prepared some tabulations which support and greatly amplify the facts which I have presented. All these tabulations are based on official Government statistics; but they also include some factual computations of my own—for example, percentage computations of rates of price increases, rates of growth, and so forth. However, these factual computations merely translate the official Government statistics into their equivalents.

I have made the essential features of these computations available to the spokesmen for the Government, during the course of the hearings before the Senate Finance Committee. There has been no challenge of the factual accuracy of these computations. Of course, the interpretations I have placed upon the facts are my own, as must always be the case.

I ask unanimous consent that these tabulations be printed at this point in the RECORD, as the concluding part of my statement.

There being no objection, the tabulations were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

2. Sources of data on distribution of consumer savings and on income distribution:

The data on consumer savings are based upon the 1957 Survey of Consumer Finances by the Federal Reserve Board.

The data on general income distribution and on distribution of income among farm families are based on the statistics of the National Income Section, Office of Business Economics, Department of Commerce.

The data on the incomes of the aged are based on the statistics of the Bureau of the Census.

The data on low pay in various areas are based on a sample survey of the Bureau of the Census.

3. The relative rates of growth in various components of national income are computed by (a) obtaining the absolute figures in current dollars from the Economic Report of the President and Economic Indicators, (b) transforming these to uniform dollars by using the same deflator methods used in the President's Economic Report to deflate consumer expenditures, and (c) calculating the percentage rates of growth accordingly.

The following tabulation results:

	Percent change
	1953–57 [1]		1956–57 [2] Annual rate
	Total change	Annual rate
Wages and salaries	13.0	3.3	2.7
Farm operators' net income	−17.5	−5.0	−3.4
Business and prof. propr. income	2.9	.8	0
Dividends	24.5	6.0	5.1
Personal interest income	26.6	6.5	3.7

[2] Assuming growth (in constant dollars) from 2d half of 1956 to 1st half of 1957 continues through 2d half of 1957.

4. Relative growth rates in consumption, investment in producers' durable equipment, and investment in nonfarm residential construction. This data is derived by (a) obtaining the absolute figures from the Economic Report of the President and Economic Indicators, (b) deflating these to a uniform 1956 price level, and (c) calculating the percentage changes accordingly. This yields the following results:

Annual growth rates in uniform 1956 dollars

	Personal consumption expenditures	Investment in producers' durable equipment	Investment in residential nonfarm construction
	Percent	Percent	Percent
1955–56	3.3	11.1	−11.6

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, at this time, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THURMOND in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a compilation showing the record of Senate activity in the 1st sessions of the 82d, 83d, 84th, and 85th Congresses.

I point out that, as of 3 o'clock today, we have passed more than 1,200 measures during this session of Congress. Two hundred and thirty-four public laws are the result of the bills we have passed. Some 150 or 175 measures are now on the President's desk awaiting his action. I expect that the session will produce in the neighborhood of from 350 to 400 public laws.

The public laws enacted in the 1st session of the 82d Congress numbered 255; in the 1st session of the 83d Congress, 288; and in the 1st session of the 84th Congress, 390.

The Senate has confirmed 43,810 Executive nominations.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SINE DIE ADJOURNMENT

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, if I may, I should like to have the Chair lay before the Senate the sine die resolution. After we act on that, I have a brief statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NEUBERGER in the chair) laid before the Senate the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 229) which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress shall adjourn on Friday, August 30, 1957, and that when they adjourn on said day, they stand adjourned sine die.

ADJOURNMENT SINE DIE

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, before some other Senator comes forward with a speech, while I am still in the good graces of a friend like Bill White, whom I told last night I would guarantee to get away from here by Saturday night, and before Tony Vaccaro, Bob Albright, Warren Duffee, Bill Knighton, Al Spivak, and the other boys looking at us from the Press Gallery, let something drop on us, in accordance with the terms of House Concurrent Resolution 229, I now move that the Senate stand adjourned sine die.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned sine die.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, AUGUST 30, 1957

The House met at 10 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal and ever-blessed God, we thank Thee for the high and holy privilege we have had during this session of the Congress of daily walking and working together in the service of our God, our country, and humanity.

We pray that, as we look back upon the yesterdays, may we feel that we have tried to blend our wills with Thine in the great task of establishing a nobler social order.

May we have joy of knowing that we have sought to affirm and champion courageously whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, and whatsoever things are of good report.

Grant that when the hour of adjournment comes and we leave this Chamber, may we commend and commit one another and all, who are near and dear unto us, to Thy love and care.

May the Lord bless us and keep us; may the Lord make His face to shine upon us and be gracious unto us; may the Lord lift upon us the light of His countenance and give us peace. Amen.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the Journal of the last day's proceedings.

S. 1996. An act to approve the contract negotiated with the Casper-Alcova Irrigation District, to authorize its execution, to provide that the excess-land provisions of the Federal reclamation laws shall not apply to the lands of the Kendrick project, Wyoming, and for other purposes;

S. 2792. An act to amend the Immigration and Nationality Act, and for other purposes;

S. Con. Res. 40. Concurrent resolution favoring the suspension of deportation in the cases of certain aliens; and

S. Con. Res. 41. Concurrent resolution favoring the suspension of deportation in the case of certain aliens.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to Senate amendment No. 1 to the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 172) entitled "Concurrent resolution to establish a joint Congressional committee to investigate matters pertaining to the growth and expansion of the District of Columbia and its metropolitan area."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9302) entitled "An act making appropriations for mutual security for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1958, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate further insists on its amendment No. 15 to the above-entitled bill.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2377) entitled "An act to amend chapter 223, title 18, United States Code, to provide for the production of statements and reports of witnesses."

EXTENSION OF REORGANIZATION ACT OF 1949

Mr. BROOKS of Texas submitted the following conference report and statement on the bill (S. 1791) to further amend the Reorganization Act of 1949, as amended, so that such act will apply to reorganization plans transmitted to the Congress at any time before June 1, 1959:

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. No. 1270)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1791) to further amend the Reorganization Act of 1949, as amended, so that such act will apply to reorganization plans transmitted to the Congress at any time before June 1, 1959, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1791) to further amend the Reorganization Act of 1949, as amended, so that such act will apply to reorganization plans transmitted to the Congress at any time before June 1, 1959, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate bill amends subsection (b) of section 5 of the Reorganization Act of 1949, as amended, by striking out "June 1, 1957", and inserting in lieu thereof "June 1, 1959", thus extending the application of that act to reorganization plans transmitted to Congress before June 1, 1959. The House amendment also extends the application of the Reorganization Act of 1949 to June 1, 1959. In addition the House amendment adds a new section to the bill which would strike out of subsection (a) of section 6 of such act the words: ", by the affirmative vote of a majority of the authorized membership of that House,". This amendment would enable either House to prevent any reorganization plan which it disapproved from becoming effective by adopting, by a simple majority of those present and voting, a resolution stating in substance that that House does not favor the reorganization plan. The Senate recedes.

Mr. BROOKS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill S. 1791, and ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers on the part of the House be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROOKS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I would like to say to the House on the part of the minority that while the minority did not favor certain provisions of this bill, to wit, the arrangement whereby a simple majority could object to a reorganization plan, in order to get legislation through the Congress in this session of the Congress, we agreed to the conference report and to the bill, as amended, and expect to support it.

Mr. BROOKS of Texas. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDING CHAPTER 223, TITLE 18, UNITED STATES CODE

Mr. CELLER submitted the following conference report and statement on the bill (S. 2377) an act to amend chapter 223, title 18, United States Code, to provide for the production of statements and reports of witnesses:

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. No. 1271)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2377) to amend chapter 223, title 18, United States Code, to provide for the production of statements and reports of witnesses, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following: "That chapter 223 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding a new section 3500 which shall read as follows:

" '§ 3500. Demands for production of statements and reports of witnesses.

" '(a) In any criminal prosecution brought by the United States, no statement or report in the possession of the United States which was made by a Government witness or prospective Government witness (other than the defendant) to an agent of the Government shall be the subject of subpena, discovery, or inspection until said witness has testified on direct examination in the trial of the case.

" '(b) After a witness called by the United States has testified on direct examination, the court shall, on motion of the defendant, order the United States to produce any statement (as hereinafter defined) of the witness in the possession of the United States which relates to the subject matter as to which the witness has testified. If the entire contents of any such statement relate to the subject matter of the testimony of the witness, the court shall order it to be delivered directly to the defendant for his examination and use.

" '(c) If the United States claims that any statement ordered to be produced under this section contains matter which does not relate to the subject matter of the testimony of the witness, the court shall order the United States to deliver such statement for the inspection of the court in camera. Upon such delivery the court shall excise the portions of such statement which do not relate to the subject matter of the testimony of the witness. With such material excised, the court shall then direct delivery of such statement to the defendant for his use. If, pursuant to such procedure, any portion of such statement is withheld from the defendant and the defendant objects to such withholding, and the trial is continued to an adjudication of the guilt of the defendant, the entire text of such statement shall be preserved by the United States and, in the event the defendant appeals, shall be made available to the appellate court for the purpose of determining the correctness of the ruling of the trial judge. Whenever any statement is delivered to a defendant pursuant to this section, the court in its discretion, upon application of said defendant, may recess proceedings in the trial for such time as it may determine to be reasonably required for the examination of such statement by said defendant and his preparation for its use in the trial.

" '(d) If the United States elects not to comply with an order of the court under paragraph (b) or (c) hereof to deliver to the defendant any such statement, or such portion thereof as the court may direct, the court shall strike from the record the testimony of the witness, and the trial shall proceed unless the court in its discretion shall determine that the interests of justice require that a mistrial be declared.

"'(e) The term 'statement', as used in subsections (b), (c), and (d) of this section in relation to any witness called by the United States, means—

"'(1) a written statement made by said witness and signed or otherwise adopted or approved by him; or

"'(2) a stenographic, mechanical, electrical, or other recording, or a transcription thereof, which is a substantially verbatim recital of an oral statement made by said witness to an agent of the Government and recorded contemporaneously with the making of such oral statement.'

"The analysis of such chapter is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"'3500. Demands for production of statements and reports of witnesses.'"

And the House agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (S. 2377) to amend chapter 223, title 18, United States Code, to provide for the production of statements and reports of witnesses, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely: The substantive provisions of the bills as passed by the respective Houses of Congress are substantially similar, except in the following respects:

The House bill (H. R. 7915) provided that no statement or report of any prospective witness or person other than a defendant which is in the possession of the United States should be the subject of subpena, discovery or inspection, except as specifically provided in the bill, any rule of court or procedure to the contrary notwithstanding.

The Senate bill (S. 2377) provided that no statement or report of a Government witness or prospective witness other than the defendant, made to an agent of the Government which is in the possession of the United States should be the subject of subpena or inspection, except if provided in the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure or as specifically provided in the bill.

The changes agreed upon by the conferees, (1) eliminate specific reference to the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure; (2) limit the types of statements and reports which come under the provisions of the bill to statements of Government witnesses or prospective witnesses, other than the defendant, made to an agent of the Government; and (3) make it abundantly clear that no such statement need be produced until said witness has testified on direct examination in the trial.

Another difference discussed by the conferees concerned the provisions of the Senate bill, which extended the types of statements covered by the bill to include "transcriptions or records of oral statements" made by the witness to an agent of the Government. To remove any doubt as to the kinds of statements affected by the bill as agreed to by the conferees, a new paragraph "e" was added to the proposed section 3500 of title 18 of the United States Code expressly defining the term "statement."

It is believed that the provisions of the bill as agreed to by the conferees are in line with the standard enunciated by Judge George H. Moore of the eastern district of Missouri in a Finding of Fact and Conclusion of Law filed June 18, 1957 in U. S. v. Anderson et al., which is set forth at page 15940 of the daily Congressional Record of August 26, 1957.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 2377), an act to amend chapter 223, title 18, United States Code, to provide for the production of statements and reports of witnesses, and ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers on the part of the House be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement of the managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, we have arrived at a position on this bill, the so-called FBI files bill (S. 2377), that we hope will do the least violence to the principles of good law enforcement and the rights of the defendants. Not all questions have been answered in the compromise arrived at. We have sought to strike a balance. In the giving and taking of the deliberative processes there has been some advance and some retreat among the conferees. It is a fairly workable bill.

I wish to say—and not in passing—that it is most unfortunate that so much emotion was engendered, obscuring the need for the calmest kind of scrutiny which legislation of this kind should have received, since it touches fundamentally on constitutional protection. However, there has been a meeting of the minds, and while, I repeat, it is not the most perfect solution, it represents a reasonable approach.

I realize, Mr. Speaker, that there may be a constitutional block to this legislation. The Supreme Court in the Jencks case (353 U. S. 657) held that the defense in a criminal prosecution is entitled initially to inspect the Government witness' statements and reports. It further stated that it disapproved the practice of producing Government documents to the trial judge for his determination of relevancy and materiality before giving those documents or portions thereof to the defense for its examination and use. In so holding the court stated that "justice required no less." This, of course, might be construed to mean "due process requires no less."

The proposed legislation is not designed to touch in any way the decision of the Supreme Court insofar as due process is concerned. It seeks only to set up a procedural device for the setting of standards of interpretation for safeguarding the needless disclosure of confidential information in Government files and, at the same time, assuring defendants access to the material in those files pertinent to the testimony of the Government witness. In doing this we are not seeking to nullify or curb the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. We are simply attempting to provide a procedural process. In doing so, this procedure concerns itself with and limits itself to those kinds of statements—to those of Government witnesses or prospective Government witnesses made to agents of the Government and no other kinds of statements, documents, and so forth.

I wish to state that when the bills were introduced I was deeply concerned, for I felt morally certain that they went far beyond the ruling of the Jencks case and would substantially reduce, if they did not entirely cut off, the right of defendants in criminal proceedings to discovery and inspection of reports, statements, and documents in the possession of the Government, as provided for in the Federal rules of criminal procedure.

The Senate bill, before it was approved, was redrawn and redrawn again in an effort to eliminate this serious difficulty. Finally, it was completely rewritten before it was approved by the Senate. When the House bill was debated on the floor, I sought to amend it by substituting the language of the finally approved version of the Senate bill since it no longer contained the controversial provision which, in my opinion, would have abrogated the Federal rules of criminal procedure.

Mr. Speaker, I am happy to state that the amendment which the House now has before it is for all practical purposes the language and substance of the Senate bill—it is substantially the language which I sought when I offered my amendment on the floor of the House on August 28.

I want to say to those Members who voted for the substitute which I offered in Committee of the Whole that this conference report practically embodies that substitute, and they, in good conscience, can vote for this conference report.

I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Keating].

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I think the House should know that I differ markedly and emphatically with the last statement of the chairman of the committee, that this bill represents in any way the position of the 55 Members of the House who voted for the substitution of the weak Senate bill. It rather confirms and fortifies the position of the 161 Members who voted for the stronger House bill.

There were two points of difference between the Senate and House versions. Those who were here and heard the debate will remember there were two points in difference in the bill. The Senate yielded to the House on both points in effect. The first was, will the defendants have the right to inspect statements of witnesses before they go into the courtroom. There was fear that there was language in section (a) of the Senate bill which would imply the right of defendants to get such evidence before they ever got into the courtroom. The wording here not only does not recognize that they might have such a right, but positively and definitely says they shall not have that right. Section (a) of the bill is even stronger than the House bill which we considered and for which an overwhelming majority of this body voted.

The second question was, what shall be produced in court. The House bill had said, "Written statements which were signed or adopted or approved by a witness." The Senate had added these words, "Records of oral statements made by a witness to an agent of the Government," thereby opening up the FBI files almost as wide as all outdoors. The Senate yielded on this issue also. The conferees provided that the only statements a defendant could see, and then only in the courtroom were those actually signed or formally approved by the witness or a stenographic verbatim recital of a statement made by a witness which is recorded contemporaneously with the making of such oral statement. In other words, only those statements need be produced in court by the Government which could be shown in court to impeach the credibility of the witness.

This is an excellent bill. It is a stronger and better bill than passed the House, and it indicates again that firmness pays. If we had accepted the bill as it passed the other body or if we had accepted the substitute offered in this body by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] we would not have done the job we set out to do. We would not have given the protection to the confidential files of the FBI and our other investigative agencies to which they were entitled and which is required for the safety and security of our Nation. By adopting the House position on the two points in issue, we have now afforded the protection advocated by the Attorney General and the dedicated Director of the FBI. The loophole has been closed which might have prevented many criminals and enemies of our country from being brought to book. I enthusiastically commend this conference report for your favorable consideration.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote for this conference report. I voted against H. R. 7915 when it was before the House a few days ago, because it was a bad bill. However, most of its defects have been corrected by the conferees and I shall give it my approval.

I believe the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the Jencks case was correct. The Department of Justice is in accord with this view, as it should be, for our system of justice guarantees that persons faced with deprivation of life or liberty have the right to a fair trial. The right to a fair trial includes the opportunity to show that witnesses are lying, and the decision in the Jencks case goes no further than this.

As United States District Judge Bryan stated a few days ago about the Jencks case:

> The Supreme Court case enunciates a simple, fair, and quite limited rule. It holds that where the prosecution places a witness on the stand the defense is entitled to inspect statements or reports in the Government's possession concerning the subject matter of such witness' testimony, for the purpose of determining whether they can be used to impeach his credibility. This applies whether the witness be a Federal agent, informer, or a member of the general public.

Although the Department of Justice has affirmed that the principle of the Jencks decision is sound, it has requested this legislation because of misconstructions and misinterpretations of the decision made by lower courts, which it says has resulted in the unwarranted dismissal of the defendants on trial. As a result of such action, the decision itself, even though correct, has been made the springboard for the charges that the opinion throws open the FBI files to members of the Communist Party, that the Supreme Court has subverted our national security, that our national police system has been brought to a standstill. This is a gross exaggeration. The decision itself did nothing more than reaffirm one of the bases for fair trial procedure in the system of American justice.

One would think that the ordinary appellate procedure of the courts would correct judicial mistakes, and to clarify the situation, but perhaps the quickest way to do it was through legislation. But certainly, the bill which was presented to the House a few days ago, H. R. 7915, confused rather than clarified the picture. It was far worse than no bill at all. It was hasty and far reaching, distorting the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure without hearings, without the recommendation of the Judicial Conference, without due regard to the possible impact the bill might have on orderly court procedure. It was based on the concurring opinion of two Justices, rather than on the majority opinion, and because of this it might very well have been unconstitutional. The protection of the Nation's security with appropriate respect for the legal rights of defendants is always a delicate problem which can be solved only through careful and painstaking analysis. H. R. 7915 was a poor effort.

This conference report, however, brings many drastic and beneficial changes in that bill. It embodies and clarifies the Jencks decision by giving recognition to the majority opinion, the concurring opinion, and even the protest of the dissenting opinion. It protects the rights of defendants as well as the Nation's security. Reports made to the Government by witnesses called to testify at the trial are made available to the defendant where such reports contain no material which is extraneous to the issues of the trial. Where such reports contain outside material which is irrelevant to the particular issues, such reports must be submitted to the court for deletion of irrelevant material before the report is made available to the defendant. I would assume that the majority in the Jencks decision favored this procedure. I cannot believe that the majority Justices favored turning over reports to the defendant where the reports contained material completely irrelevant and inappropriate to the issues in the particular case, particularly where such irrelevant material might be prejudicial to the national security.

The conference report seeks to correct the aspect of the Jencks decision which requires automatic dismissal of the action in the event the Government refuses to produce the records requested by the defense. In this respect it seems to me the decision goes too far inasmuch as absolute dismissal may be too severe a penalty. The Government should be given the opportunity to prove its case if it can do so by using other evidence than the witness or the report which the defense seeks. Perhaps this alternative was implicit in the Jencks decision. If so, it should have been made more specific. At any rate I am not sure the conference achieved the result they sought in this instance and I believe this portion of the bill will need additional attention.

In view of the excellent changes made by the conference committee, I shall vote for the bill.

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Speaker, when this bill was before the House on August 27, I voted against it on final passage because I believed it to be a very bad bill which ran counter to the fundamental principles of American jurisprudence.

The bill reported to us now by the conferees is a much different bill and certainly a much better one. At the same time, I am convinced that if this bill were called up at a time other than in the last hours of the session and without the hysterical pressures from a press that has been misinformed by our Attorney General, a much different result would obtain.

The bill in its present form contains a provision which still gives the prosecuting attorney the right to withhold a statement made by a witness whose testimony has been offered to court and jury by that same prosecuting officer. There can be no good reason offered in law or in logic for such procedure.

The fact that the court by this bill is given the discretion to strike a witness' testimony in the event his contradictory statement is not produced by the prosecuting attorney is not a sufficient safeguard of defendants' rights and is contrary to fair and honorable court procedure.

This is a good place to call the attention of our colleagues to much of the misinformation that has been spread abroad about recent Supreme Court decisions. In that connection, I am pleased to include in my remarks the following article written by Alan F. Westin, a member of the District of Columbia bar and assistant professor of government at Cornell University. Mr. Westin spent the last year as a visiting faculty member at Yale Law School; and he has written a biography of the first Justice John Marshall Harlan. Mr. Westin's article follows:

THE SUPREME COURT DECISIONS—THE NEW BALANCE ON CIVIL LIBERTIES

(By Alan F. Westin)

The United States Supreme Court Building in Washington stands alongside a gray structure housing the national headquarters of the Methodist Church; together, the two buildings overlook the site of the United States Congress, as though in architectural rendition of Bracton's famous comment that government should be "under God and the law." If Bracton could have attended the Court's recent decision Mondays, strolled across Capitol Plaza to hear the Congressional reactions, and leafed through the flood of articles which have debated the Court's spring fashion, the good Briton would probably have noted that living under "the law" was as ennobling and embroiling an adventure today as in 13th century England.

As every reader knows by now, the cause of this latest controversy over the operations of our system of judicial review was a series of assertive Supreme Court rulings issued during the months of May and June. What the Justices decided was:

In the case of two applicants for admission to the practice of law, held (6 to 3) that bar examiners may not draw an inference of bad moral character from an applicant's refusal, on first amendment grounds, to answer questions about his political affiliations (Konigsberg v. California); and in the second case, held (9 to 0) that it was a denial of due process to bar a qualified applicant because of his pre-1941 membership in the Communist Party, his use of aliases to escape anti-Semitic employer policies, and previous arrests on political charges (Schware v. New Mexico).

In an antitrust prosecution of Du Pont for violating the Clayton Act, held (4 to 2) that Du Pont's purchase of a 23-percent-stock interest in General Motors in 1917–19 and a supplier contract between the two companies was a "vertical" stock acquisition forbidden by section 7 as tending to create a monopoly. This was considered subject to divestiture despite 40 years of inaction toward the transaction by the Federal Trade Commission and the Justice Department (U. S. v. E. I. DuPont de Nemours & Co.).

In the prosecution of a Mine, Mill, and Smelter Union official for falsifying a Taft-Hartley non-Communist oath, held (7 to 1) that the defendant was entitled to see prior statements made about his alleged Communist connections to the FBI by testifying witnesses Harvey Matusow and J. W. Ford (U. S. v. Jencks).

In the contempt prosecution of a UAW official for refusing to give the House Committee on Un-American Activities the names of persons he once knew as Communists but now believed to have left the party, held (6 to 1) that a witness cannot be punished for contempt when the questions put to him were wide-ranging inquiries not pertinent to a properly defined legislative investigation (U. S. v. Watkins).

In the conviction of 14 west coast Communist leaders under the Smith Act, held (6-1) that the conspiracy-to-organize section of the Smith Act could apply only to the act of organizing the party in 1945 and not to organizational maintenance since that date, thereby foreclosing indictments on the organize count after 1948, when the 3-year statute of limitations had run. The Court also ruled that, in failing to instruct the jury as to the difference between advocating the overthrow of the Government as abstract doctrine and advocating this concept [illegible]tion to be taken, the trial judge had ignored a vital distinction between tolerated words and punishable incitement. The Court dismissed the cases against 5 defendants because the Government's evidence could not make out a case of advocacy; for the remaining 9, the Court ordered a new trial under the proper charge to the jury. (United States v. Yates et al.).

In reviewing John Stewart Service's discharge from the State Department in 1951, held (8–0) that Secretary Dean Acheson's overruling of findings in Service's favor by a Department loyalty board and the Deputy Under Secretary for Loyalty Review violated State Department regulations then in force, since those gave Acheson review authority only when a board finding favorable to an employee was overturned by the Deputy (Service v. Dulles).

In the New Hampshire contempt conviction of Marxist Paul Sweezy, held (6–2) that questions put to Sweezy about guest lectures he delivered at the University of New Hampshire and about his knowledge of Progressive Party leaders were invasions of academic freedom and political expression which the Court would not assume the legislature had intended its attorney general to ask under the State Subversive Activities Investigation Act (Sweezy v. New Hampshire).

When one adds to this list of cases which excited public controversy the other important rulings of the 1957 term—opinions dealing with speedy arraignment before a magistrate, injunctions against peaceful labor picketing, arbitration under section 301 of the Taft-Hartley Act, the status of professional football under Federal antitrust laws, State legislative control of obscenity, military trials abroad for civilian dependents of servicemen, the diversity of citizenship needed to bring stockholders' suits in the United States courts, the validity of the all-white clause of the Girard Orphan's School Trust in Philadelphia, and the right of Japan to try Army Specialist William Girard—the past term emerges as one distinguished for the range and number of large problems dealt with and the frequency with which the Court asserted a positive role in their resolution.

This range and number of cases—something not entirely within the Justices' control—helps in part to explain the high volume of criticism leveled at the Court. In most years some group is likely to be offended by a particular ruling; in 1957 a remarkably large number of vocal and powerful groups had their pet oxen gored by the Court's holdings: the business community, the FBI and the Justice Department, the State attorneys general, the American Bar Association, most Congressmen, the patriotic societies, and many anti-Communists. In fact the deep southerners found that they were no longer thundering alone against the usurpations of the Supreme Court; now, they were part of a very large crowd.

Of course, the entire Nation was not disgruntled and there were some voices of support for the Justices—speeches by members of the House Judiciary Committee such as EMANUEL CELLER and KENNETH KEATING, happy articles in the liberal weeklies, and a bit of puzzled but soldierly defense from the President. Yet the dominant reaction was critical, whether in the form of soft clucking from the Time-Life sages, bitter outcries from David Lawrence, or impeachment bills from angry Congressmen.

The first thing to notice about this reaction is that a good bit of the furor stems from newspaper reports which misread the decisions and commentators who compounded the misconceptions. For example, contrary to general impressions:

The Court did not say in the Jencks case that reports of FBI operatives and confidential informants or the entire dossier relating to an accused individual or group had to be disclosed. What the Court said was that reports given to the Government had to be made available to the defense (1) in criminal trials, (2) when the reporting person was now testifying in open court for the Government, and (3) when the report, described specifically by the defense, related to the events which formed the basis of the prosecution. The recent scissoring of an FBI report in the trial of John Kasper in Tennessee illustrates the practical nature of the Jencks rule.

The Court did not hold that suspected Federal employes are immune from dismissal on loyalty or security grounds by the heads of their agencies. In the Service case, as in the previous Peters ruling, the Court based its reversal of dismissal on the failure of executive officials to comply with their own rules, not on any constitutional ground. If Service were a suspected Foreign Service officer today, he could be found to be a security risk by Secretary Dulles and dismissed, without violating any doctrine of the Supreme Court as to the Eisenhower program.

The Court did not declare in the Yates case that we should instruct juries that the Communist party is operating as a debating society or following parliamentary means. Justice John Marshall Harlan's discussion of the advocacy issue was directed at the necessity to apply the same charge today as given in the Dennis case convictions of the Communist national leaders: one which emphasized that advocacy directed "to stirring people to action" was the offense covered by the Smith Act. To the extent that prosecution of second-string leaders and members might be supported only by reading into evidence Marxist revolutionary classics and instructions by Soviet teachers in 1924, plus proof of American party adherence to such doctrine, convictions would not be proper. To the extent that the evidence showed a conspiracy to advocate action, Justice Harlan made it clear that re-convictions of nine of the defendants would be left untouched.

Other misconceptions of the 1957 rulings might be noted, but these should be sufficient to indicate that the Justices have been damned as much for what they did not do as for what they did. This is not to suggest that what the Court has done is to issue a series of mild sermonettes or that the debate has really been about straw men. The announcement by Representative FRANCIS WALTER that the House Un-American Activities Committee is changing its name to the House Internal Security Committee, presumably with a change in the Committee's mandate from concern with propaganda to a focus on security, shows that the Court's rulings have already had concrete effect.

More significantly, anyone comparing the 1957 civil liberty cases with the deferential ratification of Government antisubversive action which was the majority rule in the late 1940's, or the cautious reassertion of citizen rights through insistence on procedural niceties which was the majority's technique in the early 1950's, can see that the present Court has chosen to strike a new balance. To be more precise, the Court has put into legal terms the new balance on the issue of internal security which emerged after the McCarthy censure and has heretofore been registered largely by intangible (though powerful) developments—a bad press for the radical anti-Communists, a distaste for extremist prescriptions on the part of "center" public opinion, a bland unconcern by the administration for new Communist-hunting weapons. (In one sense, the Court's rulings were a welcome event for the radical right, since it gave this group its first opportunity in 3 profitless years to lash out at a solid target.)

To the extent that critical reactions really represent a dissent from the post-McCarthy approach to internal security, I can only disagree with the protest by saying amen to the Court's decisions and expressing my conviction that nothing essential to the ideological battle with communism or effective antisubversive efforts has been taken away by these cases. What this article deals with are the attacks which have taken the form of charges against the Court for specifically judicial misconduct, and it is that to which I will proceed.

First, it has been said that the Court encroached on the rights of Congress, the Executive, and the States in a manner which went beyond the Court's proper role, with the Watkins case as perhaps the prime example. What this argument overlooks is that the Watkins case was not simply a question of Congressional prerogative but also involved the integrity of the judicial process. As Justice Felix Frankfurter's concurring opinion put this idea:

"By [passing the act of 1857] * * * making the Federal judiciary the affirmative agency for enforcing the authority that underlies the Congressional power to punish for contempt, Congress necessarily brings into play the specific provisions of the Constitution relating to the prosecution of offenses and those implied restrictions under which courts function."

In other words, Congress might imprison Watkins under its power as a legislature to punish contempt. But when it provides for court trial of the contempt, as it did, and enacted a standard of pertinency, as it did, Congress cannot define the due process of law in terms of administrative convenience, as has been done in loyalty hearings and organization testing by the Attorney General. What must be satisfied in the courts is that form of fair procedure which has evolved since colonial days and is within the special competence of the judiciary to administer. With differing emphases, this seems to me to be applicable in the Jencks and Yates cases, and in the Mallory decision dealing with speedy arraignment.

Of course, the underlying question of whether the Court went beyond its proper role is a larger issue which will depend on one's conception of the proper place for the judiciary in the American system of government. Those who sincerely believe in pure majority rule and distrust an appointive judiciary have a right to protest against the Court's most recent assertion of its right to a positive role in the shaping of constitutional policy. What deserves notice in the 1957 situation is that the critics who have been charging usurpation and invoking the traditional rhetoric of the Jeffersonians and Progressives are actually the conservative and right-of-center groups, who have traditionally defended the philosophy of judicial review. It is the liberals, fresh from last generation's fight agains the "nine old men," who are voicing the language of "second sober thought" and "constitutional limitation." Of such ideological reverses is the realpolitik of American democracy made.

A second charge is that the 1957 rulings were careless and fuzzy products, opinions which failed to provide the precision of reasoning and adequate rules of conduct which should come from the Nation's High Court. This criticism seems to me quite valid with respect to several of the cases and has been the subject of much head-shaking in law school faculties. In the Sweezy ruling, for example, Chief Justice Earl Warren embarked on a discourse about academic freedom and political expression (in the course of which he plainly misstated what the New Hampshire Supreme Court said on this point), but he pulled up short of placing his decision on such a tangible first amendment ground. Instead, ignoring without comment the fact that the State supreme court found the questions put to Sweezy to be those the legislators wanted put, the Chief Justice declared that he could not find a clear intent on the part of the legislature to compel questions which would infringe first amendment rights. Therefore, he must treat the attorney general as acting without legislative authority and hold the contempt conviction invalid. For single-mindedness of purpose to the exclusion of reality, the Sweezy opinion has a certain superlative ring about it.

In the Jencks case, Justice William J. Brennan's opinion never explains the theory on which defendants are allowed to see prior reports made to the Government. Is this because these are public property? Because they might impeach a witness? Or because defendant makes a charge of inconsistency, although he need not lay a foundation of proof to support this? Nor was it clearly explained whether, once the reports were shown to the defendant, it was up to him or to the judge to determine how much of the report could go into evidence and be considered by the jury.

In the Watkins ruling, so many dicta embroidered Chief Justice Warren's opinion that Justice Frankfurter, concurring, felt compelled to write: "I deem it important to state what I understand to be the Court's holding." Only by restating a precise ground could Frankfurter feel able to vote with the majority.

To be sure, few rulings of the Supreme Court, or any agency of Government, emerge with machine-tooled perfection or provide flawless blueprints of future situations which may arise under a new rule. The special feature of some of the 1957 cases may be that the kind of opinion written in the Sweezy and Watkins cases may become something of a signature of the present Chief Justice. His tendency to write as though he were still issuing veto messages as governor of California rather than composing judicial opinions was noticed by most students of constitutional law as early as the segregation cases of 1954, when citation of social-science evidence was mishandled in the opinion. Three years later, the Chief Justice's faulty execution of essentially sound and politically delicate rulings is still evident and serves to mar Warren's impressive achievements as a unifier of the Court and a symbol of constitutional dignity beyond the capacity of the past chief to represent.

Finally, a third criticism of the Court is that it has been relying on sociology and policy rather than law and precedent. This seems to me to deserve a short evaluation: Nonsense. Those who voice this protest either mistake the scholarly apparatus of citations to nonlegal materials for the legal syllogism which decided the case, or else deny the Court's right to weigh conflicting policy interests left vague under the Constitution, thereby challenging the essential feature of our judicial tradition since the days of that archweigher of interests, John Marshall. To take two illustrations: Who would be playing sociologist and who lawyer in the Jencks case—the Justices, applying Anglo-Saxon rules of trial practice so as to provide a witness with essential documents with which to impeach accusing witnesses, or the Jencks critics, whose contention rests on the bold hypothesis that unless due process is denied the FBI may not be able to round up as many informants, which might have a bad effect on the course of criminal prosecutions? Or, in the Service case, which group is closer to the legal traditions—the Justices, laying the action of Government administrators alongside their own regulations to see whether these have been followed, or critics who desire a different result in this case, which could only rest on a theory that the dictates of cold warfare or some principle of higher justice required the Court to ratify an unauthorized act?

Apart from their rightness or wrongness and the quality of their reasoning, what the 1957 civil liberty cases indicate is the emergence of a new alinement of forces within the Supreme Court. In the nonunanimous cases discussed in this article (with the exception of the Yates case, in which Justice Brennan did not sit), the majority contained a four-man phalanx made up of Warren, Hugo Black, William O. Douglas, and Brennan. To make up a Court, this foursome was able to win to its side Frankfurter and Harold Burton in the Jencks case, Frankfurter and Harlan in Watkins and in Sweezy, Frankfurter, Harlan, and Burton with the three in the Yates case, Burton and Charles Whittaker in Konigsberg, and all four of these concurring Justices in the Service decision. (In all except Service, where he did not participate, Justice Tom Clark was in dissent.) What this suggests is that the kind of internal security case which came before the Court this term—essentially a situation where the outer limits of antisubversive action were involved—produced an agreement upon result between the liberal activist forces of Black and Warren and the constitutional equilibrium position of Frankfurter and Harlan, with the philosophy of the latter retained in several concurrences which stated alternative grounds of decision.

Interestingly enough, not all of the cases were situations where the Frankfurter-Harlan group took a narrow ground of decision and the Black-Warren faction adopted a large substantive interpretation. In the Sweezy case, it was Justices Frankfurter and Harlan who relied on the first amendment and the foursome which chose a technical construction of the intention of the State legislature to avoid a constitutional issue. That Justices Black and Douglas, always the first to insist upon a first amendment analysis, should have held aloof from the Frankfurter concurrence seems particularly ironic. The explanation may be that Black and Douglas have had such amazing success in winning first the Chief Justice and then Justice Brennan to the position they had been maintaining in isolation since 1948 that they felt it would be politic to support the Chief Justice's narrow stand in the Sweezy case. After all, there is still the new Justice, Whittaker, who did not participate in most of the cases, to be won. If the force of Black's argument and Warren's personality can bind the new Justice to the foursome, there will be a standing majority of liberal activists.

Such is the charge and countercharge, the rhetoric, logic and internal politics of which constitutional battle is composed in the United States. If Bracton had been here to observe this latest skirmish, he might note sadly that these great clashes between judge and sovereign are now waged only on this side of the Atlantic.

Mr. CURTIS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, this bill is a stronger bill than either the House or the Senate versions which preceded it.

Its purpose is to protect Government files as a result of the decision of the Supreme Court in the Jencks case and to clarify the situation arising from that decision.

In the Jencks case the Supreme Court ruled that after a Government witness had testified, the defendant had the right to inspect previous statements made by that witness and in the possession of the Government. This decision was based on the rule of evidence that a defendant can impeach the veracity of a witness by questioning him on prior inconsistent statements, and has certain rights to see such statements. It went somewhat further than previous decisions in stressing the rights of the defendant.

Prompt action by the Congress was essential because some of the lower Federal courts were running wild as a result of the Jencks decision. They had permitted accused persons to rummage through Government files, and in one case even to inspect transcripts of grand jury hearings.

The bill just passed by Congress limits the effects of this decision. It makes it clear that the defendant has no right under the Jencks ruling to see a prior statement of a Government witness until such witness has testified, and not under any pretrial procedures. It limits the statements which can be inspected to those which relate to the subject matter of the testimony of the witness, and it further limits them to a written statement made by the witness—or adopted by him—or to an oral statement made by the witness to an agent of the Government and recorded contemporaneously.

If the Government contends that the prior statement does not relate to the subject matter testified to by the witness, the statement is submitted to the trial judge in chambers without being shown to the defendant, and he can excise portions of the statement which do not have such relevancy.

This bill should be helpful in clarifying the situation, but I regret that it was necessary for the Congress to act with some haste. I believe that it would have been extremely helpful to have had available the result of the mature study of the Jencks decision which will undoubtedly be made by law schools, bar associations, and other legal authorities.

I believe that as a result of further study it may be possible to devise even more effective provisions to protect secret Government files. Perhaps more discretion could be allowed to the trial judge. In the Jencks case the Supreme Court was giving its interpretation of the law, and did not base its rulings on constitutional requirements. If so, it is entirely within the province of the Congress to change the existing law, so long as the new procedure which it establishes does not violate due process of law.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the conference report.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken and there were—yeas 315, not voting 117, as follows:

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members be permitted to extend their remarks on the conference report just agreed to and include extraneous matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

MUTUAL SECURITY APPROPRIATION BILL, 1958

Mr. PASSMAN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 9302) making appropriations for mutual security for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1958, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers on the part of the House be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. No. 1268)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9302) making appropriations for mutual security for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1958, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 13, 14, 16, 19, 20, 21, and 22.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 5, 11 and 12, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$1,340,000,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert ", to remain available until December 31, 1958"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert "until December 31, 1958"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 17: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out and inserted by said amendment, insert "within the United States not heretofore authorized by the Congress"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 106. Except for the appropriations entitled 'Special assistance, general authorization' and 'Development loan fund', not more than 20 per centum of any appropriation item made available by this Act shall be obligated and/or reserved during the last month of availability.

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9302) making appropriations for mutual security for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1958, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

MUTUAL SECURITY

Funds appropriated to the President

Military Assistance

Amendment No. 1: Deletes Senate proposal authorizing the purchase of passenger motor vehicles for replacement only.

Amendment No. 2: Appropriates $1,340,000,000 instead of $1,250,000,000 as proposed by the House and $1,475,000,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendments Nos. 3 and 4: Insert language making military assistance appropriations available until December 31, 1958.

Defense Support

Amendment No. 5: Appropriates $689,000,000 as proposed by the Senate instead of $585,000,000 as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 6: Deletes Senate language making the defense support appropriation available until expended.

Amendment No. 7: Provides $40,000,000 for Spain as proposed by the House instead of $35,000,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Development Loan Fund

Amendment No. 8: Appropriates $300,000,000 as proposed by the House instead of $400,000,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Technical Cooperation

Amendment No. 9: Appropriates $113,000,000 for technical cooperation under section 304 as proposed by the House instead of $114,900,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 10: Deletes Senate language making the appropriation for technical cooperation under section 304 available until expended.

Amendment No. 11: Deletes House language restricting the United States contribution to the United Nations technical assistance program for the calendar year 1958 to 33.33 per centum.

Other Programs

Amendment No. 12: Appropriates $225,000,000 for special assistance authorized by section 400 (a) as proposed by the Senate instead of $175,000,000 as proposed by the House. The conferees are agreed that not less than $20,000,000 of this appropriation shall be for Latin America.

Amendment No. 13: Provides not less than $10,000,000 for Guatemala as proposed by the House instead of $7,500,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 14: Deletes Senate language appropriating $20,000,000 for special assistance in Latin America.

Amendment No. 15: Reported in disagreement.

Department of State

Amendment No. 16: Deletes Senate language authorizing transfer of funds to other appropriations of the Department of State.

General Provisions

Amendment No. 17: Restores House language relative to use of appropriations for publicity and propaganda purposes with perfecting language of the Senate.

Amendment No. 18: Restores House language restricting the obligation and reservation of funds with perfecting language.

Amendment No. 19: Restores House language prohibiting the use of funds to carry out the purposes of the first sentence of section 400 (c) of the Mutual Security Act of 1954, as amended.

Amendments Nos. 20, 21 and 22: Restore section numbers as carried in House bill.

Mr. PASSMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may require.

Mr. Speaker, the statements I shall make this morning will have no bearing on the action on the bill before us, but the information might make it less difficult for the membership to more clearly understand the mutual-security bill next year. I trust the membership will not take offense at this statement, but in reality this is a combination bill you are considering this morning—it is the mutual security-civil rights appropriation bill for fiscal year 1958. A great many of you know exactly what I am implying. There is nothing I can do about this, however, so I will rest my case in that respect with this reference to a regrettable situation.

Mr. Speaker, we are all anxious to go home. One of the saddest things for me about adjournment of the House is the parting with members of the Subcommittee on Appropriations which handles this bill. I have never worked with a more loyal, distinguished, and understanding group of men in my life and, of course, that observation applies to the Members on either side of the aisle. We tried to do the very best job possible, and the few times that we disagreed, we did so without being disagreeable. It may not be in order here, Mr. Speaker, but at this point I am going to pay my respects to the very able clerk who helped to handle this bill. I doubt if there is any man in Washington who understands the mutual-security appropriation bills, past, and present, better than the gentleman who is assigned to this committee, Mr. Jay Howe. I am most grateful to him for the help he gave to the committee in trying to arrive at a determination of what the figures actually represent.

I should like to direct to the attention of the committee the fact that even before we have adopted the final conference report on the mutual-security appropriation bill for fiscal year 1958, officials in the administration are already in disagreement as to what the bill should provide next year. I refer to a newspaper report of this morning, stating:

> DISPUTE SEEN OVER FUTURE FOREIGN AID
> A dispute is reported developing within the Eisenhower administration over the size of next year's foreign-aid program.

The Director of the Budget has indicated that there should be a ceiling next year of $3½ billion. I would say that the Director of the Bureau of the Budget is going to be in the administration's guardhouse if he insists on maintaining his point. I know how far they will go to have their way on this bill, whether or not the justifications warrant such a request.

For the benefit of the record on this bill, which is now before you, there was a blind authorization request of $4,400,000,000 at the beginning of the year. This subcommittee brought witnesses down prior to the time that we received a budget request. They were somewhat belligerent, but we wanted to know something about how they arrived at the figure of $4,400,000,000, a figure which they finally admitted—almost in these words—they had obtained out of the air. Now, however, to abbreviate that matter, the bill that you will pass on today is approximately $1 billion below the original authorization.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PASSMAN. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Speaker, I am unalterably opposed to foreign aid and have been throughout my entire tenure in the Congress. I am unalterably opposed to giving money to Tito who, in my humble opinion, is one of the greatest enemies of democracy this world has even known. This atheistic, hypocritical man in some manner has pulled the wool over the eyes of our people and confused them to the point where we are willing to send our taxpayers' hard-earned dollars to him in order, if he so wishes, to join the Russians in a war against the United States and utilize the very money and material to murder our American boys. To me this parallels our action prior to World War II when we sent millions of tons of scrap iron to Japan, only to have it fired back at us at Pearl Harbor.

I am unalterably opposed to the continuation of the program which gives millions of dollars to Communists and enemies of America when right here under the Capitol dome in Washington, D. C., it has been clearly established by one of the investigating committees that there are 50,000 underfed, undernourished, and poorly housed children in our own capital. We find ourselves in the closing days of the Congress voting a giveaway program for almost $3½ billion, which is a quarter of a billion dollars higher than the figure originally passed by the House. In my honest judgment, we certainly would have been better off to use this quarter of a billion dollars which was raised above the original House figure in strengthening our defense program. We are placed in a very ridiculous position in that our defense appropriation was reduced by over $2 billion which has forced the curtailment of the guided-missile program. Several plants have been forced to either close down entirely or to substantially reduce their personnel. For example, the North American Aviation Company of Los Angeles laid off 8,000 employees, due to this defense appropriation cut. It certainly does not help matters for Russia to announce her success in the testing of a 5,000-mile guided missile and over the period of the last 6 months the success of other tests with guided missiles of a 5,000- and 6,000-mile range.

Not only have the tests proven successful in Russia, but in addition there is the announcement that these missiles are being produced on a mass scale. Here in America, we have not had a test of guided missiles of over 1,500 miles range. To illustrate the slowness of the guided-missile program, only a few days ago, there was an announcement of a test on a guided missile of 1,500 miles range called Jupiter. We were testing 1,500-mile guided missiles 2 years ago and have not yet gone into mass production of this comparatively short-range missile known as the Jupiter.

While it may be true that we had no knowledge prior to the recent test in Russia of the 5,000-mile long-range guided missiles, which knowledge reached us after the defense appropriations were passed, we now find ourselves in the ridiculous position of having cut the defense measure to the bone and seriously curtailed our guided-missile program while at the same time we are increasing the foreign-aid giveaway program to our doubtful friends from $3,200,000,000 to $3,450,000,000.

In my opinion our taxpaying citizens would certainly appreciate our actions more if this Congress had taken $2 billion of this foreign-aid money and applied it on our guided-missile program to keep this vital phase of our defense on an up-to-date and effective basis. This would still leave the foreign-aid giveaway program $1,450,000,000, which I feel is exactly that sum too much. The democratic Free World would be in a far better position if we would proceed sensibly in protecting ourselves from our common enemy—the Russians.

We have been living in a dream world by hanging on the concept that living here in America is in the superlative. Most of us have been under false impression that our guided-missile program is far advanced of Russia and now comes the rude awakening and we find ourselves not on an equal basis with Russia, but rather lagging far behind in this highly important phase of defense.

Since Russia has developed the 5,000-mile-long-range missile and established its effectiveness by tests, and at the same time, we have reduced our defense program by $2 billion, it appears to me that it is a question of our being dollarwise and defense foolish.

In my judgment, President Eisenhower and his advisers have fallen far short in their obligation to protect the interest of our American people in our guided-missile interests. I pray to God that with this recent announcement of Russia's success in the guided-missile field, we will go ahead with our defense program in an effective and efficient manner regardless of cost and development of the all important guided-missile program to a point second to none. If it takes supplemental appropriations, then I say let us appropriate the money because we cannot afford to fall behind on our defense. Next year, let us use a little more commonsense, even if we offend lobbies and cut the foreign aid program to the bone, which is exactly what should be done. We have gone far beyond the call of duty and beyond even the remotest obligation in placing these foreign recipient nations on their feet and it is high time to act with sound judgment and take care of our own defense rather than to continue pouring the taxpayers' hard-earned dollars down the drain.

Mr. PASSMAN. May I conclude my statement, and then I shall be pleased to yield.

First, there is an authorization request, which may actually be any figure. Later, after the bill comes down, there is an authorization bill, and then the figure becomes a budget estimate. Subsequent to that the appropriation bill is handled, and we reduce the amount of the authorization bill. Then we receive the revised budget estimate. Next the authorizing bill goes to the Senate and certain adjustments are made before it comes back to the House with a different figure. The same procedure occurs with the appropriation bill. So the situation is really confusing, even to a certified public accountant or mathematician.

I hope you will listen to these figures which I am about to present and will keep the record on your desk so that, when we handle the bill next year, there will be no misunderstanding about the committee having some knowledge of the requirements.

The President's authorization request was for $4.4 billion. The bill before you calls for approximately $3.4 billion, which is $1 billion below the amount the President said would be required for the program of foreign aid.

In the program that you now have for mutual security, beginning with fiscal 1958, $5,602,000,000 is provided in the military phase of the bill. There is a total of $3,361,760,000 in other programs, making an overall aggregate of $8,963,760,000, or, in round figures, $9 billion available for expenditure in the mutual security program for fiscal 1958. This sum does not include funds under Public Law 480 or any other laws whereby there are foreign-aid programs.

In fiscal year 1956, the first year in which it was my privilege to handle this bill, we reduced the appropriation below the budget by $584,666,750.

In fiscal 1957, my second year as chairman of the subcommittee handling the bill, we reduced the appropriation below the budget estimate by $1,004,505,000.

Now, this third year, we have reduced the appropriation bill below the budget estimate by $565,650,000.

During the 3 years it has been my privilege to serve as chairman of the subcommittee, we have reduced the money by an aggregate of $2,214,821,750 below the budget estimates.

After the House worked on this bill, it went to the other side, where a lot of money was added. In several instances we were asked to yield from our stand as a gesture to the prestige of the other body. It is just that simple. In fiscal 1956 we reduced the amount of money put in by the other body by $523,866,750. In fiscal 1957 we reduced the money put in by the other body by $344,350,000. This year we reduced the amount of money put in by the other body by $256,900,000, or a total reduction in conference below what the other body put in of $1,125,116,750 for the 3 years.

This committee is either right or wrong. The fact as to which will be established after the administration works on this year's appropriation for the first 6 months of fiscal 1958.

I am on record, and I have no intention whatsoever of retracting or failing to go through with my commitments, that if there are not unobligated funds from this bill at the time when they request the appropriation for next year, then I am going to submit my resignation as a member of this particular subcommittee to the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON].

Claims to the contrary notwithstanding, there is money in this bill which will not be needed, and it should not be included. But, what are you going to do when the leadership in the other body is stacked so solidly against you? You are either going to recede on certain items or you are not going to have a conference report.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that I have not offended any of my friends on the Appropriations Committee, whether it be this subcommittee or the full committee; and this hope applies likewise with reference to the Members of the House. I try to know something about this bill, and I think that the past record is evidence enough to convince all of you that we have not damaged the foreign-aid program by any of the appropriations reductions.

Those of you who are going home and expect to spend restless nights concerned about the amount of money we have taken out of this program, let me suggest that you not buy any tranquilizer pills, but that you go home, go to bed, and get some rest. There is ample money in this bill to carry out the President's program, whether he knows it or not.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PASSMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I want to take this opportunity to congratulate the distinguished gentleman from Louisiana and the members of his subcommittee for the work he has done in holding down this international giveaway program. I am so thoroughly convinced that the action the gentleman and his committee had taken was the right one that I had prepared and was ready to offer today a motion to recommit this bill to conference with instructions to continue opposition to the Senate amendments. As the gentleman knows, of course, my move apparently was anticipated and the Senate kept the bill, and a motion to recommit is not now in order.

The gentleman made a remarkable introductory statement in his address, that this bill should be referred to as the civil-rights mutual-aid bill.

Mr. PASSMAN. I meant it to be both facetious and thought provoking.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I think perhaps it goes a little deeper than that. I have heard rumors, and certainly the facts would tend to bear this out, the developments of recent days, that the fate of this legislation was tied directly at the fate of the civil-rights bill; that the trade was made by which one Republican Member joined with the Democratic Members in petitioning for a meeting of the Rules Committee which could not otherwise have been had. Will the gentleman elaborate by telling us what he knows about that?

Mr. PASSMAN. I would not say that the gentleman is entirely mistaken. I think, however, the question can be better answered if the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi would consult the Washington newspapers beginning with a date right after the House passed the appropriation bill and continuing up to the time the Senate passed the bill. I think if he does this that the gentleman's questions will be answered.

I thank the gentleman from Mississippi. I now yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GROSS].

Mr. GROSS. This conference report does provide almost a quarter of a million dollars increase over the bill as it was approved by a tremendous majority in this House. Is that not true?

Mr. PASSMAN. May I answer the gentleman this way: That about 2 weeks ago the House and the other body passed authorizing legislation. The bill under consideration here is $565,650,000 below the amount the Congress authorized.

I present here for the RECORD a tabulation which outlines the program in detail:

The bill before the House is $366,900,000 below what the other body appropriated; it is $244 million above what the House passed a few days ago. So, in conference, we protected the prestige of the House by getting better than a 50–50 split.

Mr. GROSS. You protected it, but it cost $244 million or almost a quarter of a billion dollars.

Mr. PASSMAN. At least we authorized that much more money than the House bill called for.

Mr. FORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PASSMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. FORD. Is it not true that this figure is about $400 million less than the original House version of the authorizing legislation?

Mr. PASSMAN. Well, I covered that in the beginning. For the 3 years it is over 2 billion dollars less than the original authorization requests. Of course, every year we reduce this substantially below what the authorizing legislation calls for. It is a billion less than the President requested at the beginning of the year. The figure the gentleman mentioned with respect to being below the authorization request is correct.

Mr. FORD. It should be said also that it is $561 million less than the final authorization bill and $400 million less than the original House version of the authorizing legislation.

Mr. GARY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PASSMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. GARY. The fact is that the figure as presented to the House today is a billion and a half dollars less than the President suggested in his state of the Union message.

Mr. PASSMAN. That is correct. It keeps working down a half billion dollars at a time. If we were to stay in session until October, in all probability there would be another revised estimate.

Mr. HALEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PASSMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. HALEY. I want to say to the gentleman and to his committee that they have done a fine job in a very bad situation. I just hope that the gentleman and the House will take into consideration in another year the proposition of bringing this bill before us, so that the House will have ample opportunity or time to work its will on a bill of this kind. I think it is a terrible situation where you bring a bill in during the closing moments of the session, when everybody is wanting to get home, carrying appropriations of this kind, where the House is practically forced to take this bill.

I am against the bill, I am against foreign aid or foreign giveaway, I have never voted for it and I do not intend to vote for this conference report.

Mr. PASSMAN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PASSMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MAHON. I wish to join in commending the gentleman from Louisiana and the members of his subcommittee for the work that they have done this year on the foreign aid or mutual security bill. I voted against the authorizing legislation when it was presented because I thought it was too high, not because I do not believe in some forms of foreign aid. Foreign aid properly administered has meant a great deal and will mean a great deal, but I feel that the program should be tapered off more decidedly.

As I read the figures, when we have approved this bill, the total reduction in the President's appropriation budget by the Congress for this year will have been $5 048,000,000?

Mr. PASSMAN. That is my understanding. The gentleman is speaking of the overall reduction by the House of the President's budget. The amount we have reduced it exceeds $5 billion, according to the information given to me.

Mr. MAHON. A Member said to me this morning "I have a lot of defense industry in my district and there are some cut-backs in defense work." He said, "I think I did the right thing when I voted to reduce the defense budget, following the leadership of the Appropriations Committee, but I want to be sure I was correct in that vote."

I think it might be well to point out that the Defense Department had last year available for expenditure a total in excess of 74 billion dollars. It spent $38.4 billion. This year, the current year, the Department of Defense has available to it for expenditure $70.8 billion.

It developed during the closing months of the last fiscal year that the Department of Defense which had predicted through a total expenditure last year of $36 billion—was in error to the extent of in excess of $2 billion. And in the closing months of the last fiscal year defense spending was at the rate of $40 billion-plus. It is obvious that if this upward spiral of defense spending continued it would be necessary to raise the debt ceiling and make many other adjustments. So the Defense Department this year, while it has available to it a total of $70 billion-plus, appropriated for this year and in previous years for expenditure, is not spending much of this money available to it by reason of the fiscal situation. The Defense Department this year could keep all the factories humming, all the men employed and all the men in the service and spend $40 billion or $43 billion this year. That much would be available for expenditure by reason of the action of the Congress this year and in previous years.

We have approved these programs. We have given them the money. But the Defense Department, for what it considers good reasons, as well as the administration, have said, "We do not want to spend this money which the Congress has given because we do not want to exceed the speed of spending as estimated by the Bureau of the Budget." There are two sides to that question.

So I should like to assure everyone that the Defense Department cutbacks have not been the result of actions of the Congress on the defense bill but have been the result of the action of the administration to keep defense spending at $38 billion this fiscal year.

Mr. Speaker, I shall present in my extension of remarks a letter from the Comptroller of the Defense Department verifying the statement which I have made; and also in my extension of remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD I shall further pinpoint this problem which may be troubling some people by reason of headlines as to defense cutbacks.

I think we cannot consider defense as merely the Department of Defense appropriations. I think this bill, the mutual-security bill, has a relationship to it. I am voting for this bill. I know it is unpopular but I consider that at least certain parts of it are important elements in the defense picture. I would say that there is much room for improvement of the aid program. I am supporting the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. PASSMAN] in voting for this bill and I thank him for yielding to me at this time.

Mr. GARY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PASSMAN. I am very glad to yield to the distinguished gentleman from Virginia, who trained me; and if I have done a poor job, blame him.

Mr. GARY. Mr. Speaker, I would be delighted to share as trainer some of the credit which the gentleman from Louisiana deserves for his excellent handling of this bill but I fear the pupil has surpassed his instructor. Although there have been substantial cuts in this bill, I am convinced that the amounts in the original House bill were ample to sustain an adequate foreign-aid program for the next year. Therefore, as we lawyers would say, since that was an adequate amount a fortiori, the amount recommended today is more than adequate for the program.

I do not believe the program will suffer because of our cuts. I agree with the gentleman that they will probably come back next year with an unobligated balance, as they did this year. But this is the best the House conferees could do, and I hope it will be the pleasure of the House to accept this report. In my opinion, the time has come when we must begin to cut down on this foreign-aid spending and give some consideration to the high tax burden that our own people are paying in this country.

Mr. PASSMAN. Speaking of the latter amount, the amount the House allowed, the gentleman is referring to what I refer to as a combination bill, mutual security and civil rights.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PASSMAN. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Will the chairman advise the House as to whether or not in his opinion the amount included in this bill now is sufficient to operate the program the coming year? I raise that question for the reason that the press this morning carries a report to the effect that it has been suggested in the other body that it may be necessary to return in January and ask for a supplemental appropriation for foreign aid. I should like to have that matter cleared up.

Mr. PASSMAN. I do not think there will be any special session and I do not think there will be any request for any supplemental appropriation in January. I am sure if the gentleman has observed all the loose talk in the newspapers about how many times we have ruined this program, he can discount that statement 100 percent.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. The gentleman believes there is adequate money in the bill?

Mr. PASSMAN. I think there is more than adequate money, as I stated to the gentleman from Virginia and stated in my remarks earlier.

Mr. Speaker, the following are the figures for military assistance and mutual security:

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PASSMAN. I yield whatever time he may require to the ranking minority member of the committee, the distinguished former chairman of the committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, this bill comes here with no additions to the House figures with three exceptions: $90 million on military assistance, $50 million on special assistance, which is under the control of the President, and has pretty well been worked out, and an item of $104 million for defense support.

The gentleman from Louisiana in his dealing with the Senate conferees, has demonstrated that he is a master horse trader. The House ought to be pretty well satisfied with this conference report. I do not want anybody to get the idea that the Congress has reduced the availability of funds by $5 billion. As a matter of fact, there is deductible from that figure $1,115,000,000 on account of the housing bill that was passed and that was brought in here by the Committee on Banking and Currency, $105 million by the bill that was brought in here from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to provide guaranteed loans to small airlines, and $1.3 billion that was made up of the transfer of funds that had been placed in stock funds in the different military services. So that there is about $2.5 billion that is really what the Congress did save. The appropriation bills show $3.6 billion, but the other bills reduce the savings to about $2.5 billion.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. MAHON. From the standpoint of the appropriation requests which were submitted, the statement has been made, and I believe it is correct, that the appropriations budget was cut in excess of $5 billion.

Mr. TABER. That is correct except for the transfer of funds item which runs about $1,300,000,000. But the $1,300,000,000 cuts it down to about $3,800,000,000 and the other $1,200,000,000 cuts it down to $2,500,000,000.

Mr. MAHON. I do not know how much has been transferred in connection with all appropriation bills approved by this Congress. However, I do know that transfers in connection with the defense bill only amounted to $590 million. Is it not true that the funds through transfers from prior years' appropriations cut down the overall of availability to the Government for expenditure during the fiscal year, and is it not true that in the housing bill, which was not an appropriation request before the Committee on Appropriations, these funds are not in the same category as appropriations and generally the funds authorized will not be spent in total. And is it not true that we cut the budget far in excess of $5 billion because we are not including in that figure the nearly $1 billion reduction in the foreign-aid request from the original estimate which was in the January budget, and we are not including in that the $450 million in funds for the school-construction bill which we defeated, but for which funds were in the January budget. These funds were submitted in the January budget but never came to the Appropriations Committee because the authorizations were reduced or defeated. So it is definitely true that the overall budget was cut far in excess of $5 billion.

Mr. TABER. I doubt it. I do not think it is possible.

Mr. Speaker, I am submitting herewith tables showing the estimates considered by the House for appropriations and the laws which were eventually adopted, and indicating whether or not the appropriations in each case were increased or decreased, and to what extent.

The figures submitted show a reduction of $5,048,378,979 in appropriations and taking nothing but that into consideration. The total appropriations are $59,589,731,631, but in considering that we have failed to show that $7.5 billion of permanent and annual appropriations will raise the total of the availability of funds to the Government to $67,089,731,631, for which the Appropriations Committee has been responsible.

Items exceeding budget estimates in the housing bill are the appropriations made by the Banking and Currency Committee which ran to $1,990,000,000, as against the budget estimate of $875 million, an increase of $1,115,000,000. Also there was added by the Congress without any budget estimate $105 million by the bill to provide for guaranteed loans to small airlines, so that the total availability created by Congress is $61,684,731,631.

Compared with the $65,513,110,618, this is a decrease below the budget estimates of $3,828,378,979, a total for which the Congress can claim credit in reductions.

A part of the $2.3 billion which was set up as a saving on the military appropriations, or $1.3 billion, was the result of transfer of funds which were already in the hands of the armed services, and is an item which will not be effective at all in saving money, but it will reduce the unexpended balances.

If you subtract the $1.3 billion from the $3,828,378,979, you get a net saving of about $2,528,378,979 so that the approximately $2.5 billion item is all that the Congress itself can say it reduced the executive demands.

To the total availability of $61,684,731,631 we must add the $7.5 billion of permanent appropriations, making a total availability of $69,184,731,631.

The cut of $2,528,378,979 in appropriations will not be entirely reflected in the spending in the fiscal year 1958, but I would say that at least $1.2 billion would be about the decrease in spending.

Perhaps the most significant feature of the Congressional action is that it will reduce to a certain extent the unobligated and unexpended balances carried forward by the different agencies of the Government, and the cuts should be reflected probably more in the fiscal year 1959 spending than in the 1958 spending.

There was a difference of approximately $3 billion resulting from items not yet submitted to the Congress by the President, and this probably was due somewhat to the failure of legislation to be adopted and somewhat to the fact that the economy wave brought about the reduction of some of the items.

I can only say that I believe it is absolutely necessary that we keep the appropriations down next year so that we will be able to enforce more savings in the spending.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD and include a table prepared by me in connection with appropriations.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The following table shows the progress of the various bills by item:

[2] Final estimate as considered by Senate.

Mr. PASSMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may require to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH].

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I simply want to state that as far as I am personally concerned, I am supporting this report not because I believe it will be adequate, but because it is the best obtainable settlement from every standpoint under existing circumstances.

As has been pointed out, the original request by the President in terms of new money was for $4.400 billion. Subsequently this was reduced to $3.886 billion in the light of balances estimated to be unobligated at the close of the fiscal year.

Seventy-five percent of the total request was for the purpose of national defense—for military aid to enable our allies to play their part in our defense and the defense of the Free World.

The conference report recommends an appropriation of $2.768 billion plus unobligated balances, or $1 billion less than the revised request of the President.

The request for military assistance for NATO and other allies is reduced from $1.900 billion to $1.340 billion, a reduction of $560 million.

The request for defense support, primarily to enable Turkey, Pakistan, Vietnam, Taiwan, and Korea to maintain existing forces, is reduced from $900 million to $689 million, a reduction of $211 million.

In other words, the total for national defense purposes is reduced by $771 million.

The Congress this year in the name of economy has slashed the request for our own military forces by $2.400 billion on paper, or about $1 billion in terms of real cuts. It is now proposed to slash the requests of our allies' military forces by $771 million.

This means a total reduction in the two bills in the field of national defense of about $1,700 million, with a corresponding reduction in military power.

The reductions have been effected in spite of the opposition of the President of the United States with his vast and successful military experience; they have been effected in spite of the opposition of Admiral Radford, who has just retired as an outstanding Chief of the Joint Chiefs of Staff; they have been effected despite the opposition of the Secretary of State.

In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, we are taking a risk which is unwarranted at this time.

I hope I am wrong.

Under present world conditions, particularly those in the Near East, I do not care to share in the responsibility for such drastic cuts.

Should trouble come tomorrow, next week, or in the months ahead as the result of the action taken, the record will of course show where the responsibility lies.

I have always stood for economy, but I am not for economy at the expense of national defense, and I am not for economy which, in my opinion, plays directly into the hands of the Kremlin.

A powerful America with powerful allies has compelled the Kremlin, for the time being, at least, to abandon its policy of military aggression.

A powerful America with powerful allies is vital to us all in terms of national defense and world peace.

Mr. PASSMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield one-third of a minute to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD].

Mr. FORD. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the conference committee on the mutual security appropriation bill for fiscal year 1958 I wish to point out that this compromise is the very best, from the point of view of the President's program, that could be achieved under the circumstances. Personally I favored increased amounts in two categories. First, there should have been a greater total for military assistance. I would have supported the Senate figure of $1,475,000,000 which is still considerably less than what the President requested for our national security. Second, there should have been an increase in the funds for the development loan fund. I sincerely hope the $300 million will be adequate to initiate the program but if not the administration should not hesitate to request a supplemental in the second session of this Congress.

In closing I trust the ICA officials will make maximum effective use of the funds available. If this is done I feel confident the Congress will be more sympathetic to the program in the future and in addition more results will be achieved with less dollars.

Mr. PASSMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield one-third of a minute to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GROSS].

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, with a quarter of a billion dollars added to this bill, it seems to me that the breakfast at the White House on Monday morning between the President and one of the most publicized Democrats in the country was a very expensive breakfast for the taxpayers of this country.

Mr. PASSMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. Speaker, I yield one-third minute to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. FLYNT].

Mr. FLYNT. Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the gentleman from Louisiana on his fine handling of this bill. He was successful in reducing it when it was first before this body by $862 million from the amount requested by the President. The gentleman from Louisiana successfully resisted many efforts to restore that cut to approximately the figure requested by the President.

The present conference report figure, while it unfortunately is $244 million more than the amount originally passed by the House, is nevertheless $257 million less than the amount by which the other body passed this same bill.

I wish that this House had the opportunity to vote on a motion to recommit this bill to the conference committee because I am confident that an overwhelming number of the House of Representatives would vote to sustain the original position and the original figure by which the House of Representatives passed this bill. I wish it were possible for the House to have another rollcall vote on either a motion to recommit or any other motion which would have the effect of restoring the House figure which is $244 million less than the conference report and $501 million less than the figure passed by the other body and recommended and approved by the other body.

On the adoption of this conference report the gentleman from Georgia proposes to vote "no," and shall so vote.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, before us in this foreign handout bill we have indisputable proof that the breakfast at the White House last Monday morning, apparently enjoyed by the President and one of the country's most publicized Democrats, will be a costly one for the taxpayers of this Nation.

Apparently that breakfast is going to play a major part in a further raid upon the taxpayers of somewhere in the neighborhood of a quarter of a billion dollars. If I understand the situation correctly, that is approximately the increase insisted upon and obtained by the free spenders in the other body over the figure voted by the House only 2 weeks ago.

And remember that it was only 2 weeks ago that members of the Appropriations Committee stated on the floor of the House, and their statements were never successfully challenged, that there is already enough money in the foreign aid pipeline to carry the program at the present rate of spending until at least January 1959.

Where is it proposed to obtain the additional $3 billion that is here scheduled to be shoveled out to an assortment of foreigners, many of whom are skilled in the art of glorified blackmail?

It is almost impossible for me to believe that the Democrat leadership will support legislation to spend more billions on foreigners, then adjourn Congress and get out of town, leaving American postal workers hanging on the limb of a promised veto of their pay increase.

I wonder if the President and his Democrat breakfast guest of last Monday, when they agreed that $600 million should be added to this bill for the foreigners, discussed the possibility of a special session of Congress this fall to raise the Federal debt ceiling above the present $275 billion? Or did the President and his distinguished guest perhaps agree that a substantial part of the increased foreign aid spending could be obtained from repeal of the 27½ percent depletion allowance for the oil barons of this country?

I say to you that if the Federal debt limit must be raised let it be for the purpose of maintaining our own internal economy and welfare. Much too long have the citizens of this Republic carried the burdens of foreign governments and peoples—most of whom are unwilling to assume their responsibilities.

This conference report ought to be rejected; the House ought to stand firm on its previous position, and the tax revenues of this country used in behalf of Americans.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. Speaker, the people of America feel, as I do, that a certain amount of foreign aid is justified. They do not feel that all foreign aid should be terminated at this time, but they are of the opinion that there should be a tapering off. There are certain countries which will stand with us when the chips are down. These are Turkey, Pakistan, Iran, Iraq, Thailand, Formosa, Korea, Israel, Greece, Lebanon, and a few others. I believe that we should continue to give some aid to countries that can be depended upon to stand firm against the Communists. I do not believe, however, that we should continue to have aid programs in approximately 60 countries of the world, and I think that there is no better time than the present to begin cutting the cloth to fit the pattern. The House passed an appropriation bill for foreign aid a few days ago amounting to about $2.5 billion. This was ample, and considering the billions that are in the pipeline, I think that we could very well keep the programs going without appropriating any money this year, but certainly $2.5 billion is enough. Consequently, I am opposed to yielding an additional $244 million as agreed upon in conference.

The summer has already been ruined and we may as well ruin the autumn, so I urge this House to vote down the previous question and insist upon the figure contained in the bill passed by the House recently.

The American people are getting tired of handing out moneys needlessly, and in some cases foolishly, as when we contribute to the economies of countries like India and Yugoslavia, countries which will either be neutral or opposed to us if we should have to go to war with the Soviets or the Red Chinese.

Mr. Speaker, the House of Representatives is closer to the people than the Senate by virtue of its members being elected every 2 years. It, therefore, more accurately reflects the changes of popular opinion and judgment than does the membership in the Senate. The House is more representative of the people than is the Senate, because the House representation is based upon population rather than upon State equality. The House remains more truly the people's branch of the Government. The House should assert itself in competition with the Senate when questions of revenue and appropriations are in dispute, and the House should insist that it be given a greater voice in foreign affairs. Now is the time for the House to insist upon a more reasonable and rational appropriation for foreign aid. With billions of dollars in the pipeline, with inflation in an upward spiral, with the American people groaning under the burden of taxes, I urge the House to reject this report and insist upon a figure more consistent with its earlier position.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, during this debate several Members have emphasized with satisfaction how much has been cut from the President's request for funds for mutual security. I want to speak for the many Members who believe these reductions are too deep and we want to register our dissatisfaction. I only hope that they will not prove to have been exceedingly costly, instead of an economy.

All during these months of discussion, I have remembered a day, Thursday, August 18, 1949, when a bipartisan amendment was proposed jointly by the then Congressman from Connecticut, Hon. John Lodge, and our esteemed colleague, Hon. FRANCIS E. WALTER, of Pennsylvania, to provide authority and funds to give military aid to those resisting Communist aggression in China and in areas around China. The Communists were gaining in China, but there still was a chance their complete victory could be prevented—or at least their advance into surrounding areas.

During the debate, I said:

> We are not trying in this bill to throw money away. We simply recognize that Communist conquest of China is a mortal peril to all Asia; and conquest of Asia constitutes a mortal peril to Europe and to the United States. I cannot accept responsibility for not making every possible effort myself and authorizing the President and the Secretary of State and our Armed Forces to make within reason every possible effort to accomplish this end.

Again:

> I do not know that this program will succeed. But I know that if we do not adopt some such program we cannot succeed. Therefore, I must urge the only course which offers some hope.

Again:

> We have tried to end the war with the Communists, but we have not really tried to win the war. I wish we had learned earlier what the Chinese knew all along—that the only way to end a war with Communists—anywhere—is to win it. Surely we dare not delay longer.

Further:

> Mr. Chairman, this amendment does not compel the administration to do anything if it wants to take the responsibility of doing nothing. But it gives it authority and funds to go ahead in China and southeast Asia if it wants to.

Still further:

> If we let China go down completely, how are we going to hold Korea? How are we going to hold Japan unless we spend endless millions of American dollars to feed and support them? How are we going to hold the Philippines? How are we going to hold Indochina, Siam, and Malaya? If we do not use those forces in China which have proved they can and will fight, a million men still in arms, somewhat demoralized now because they see so little hope, but still in the field—if we do not give them moral support, with enough equipment and supplies to carry on relatively small guerrilla operations, and American sparkplugs to help and encourage and advise, then we assume a responsibility which, before God and my country and my children, I am unwilling to accept.

A majority was willing to accept the responsibility and the amendment was defeated. Those who voted against it explained that they were saving money. But it did not save money. It was a major factor in discouraging our friends in Asia and encouraging our enemies. It helped embolden the Communists to start the wars in Korea and Vietnam—and for every million dollars saved, the ultimate cost to our people was a hundred millions, not to mention the 33,000 lives and 100,000 other casualties. And the cost of that vote in 1949 still piles up today.

Mr. Speaker, I devoutly hope that my friend from Louisiana [Mr. PASSMAN] is right in his predictions that this bill provides plenty of funds—and that I am wrong. But I am not willing to take that chance now, any more than I was in 1949. I observe that some Members today seem anxious to shift to his shoulders responsibility for their votes, just in case things should go against us in the world picture. I want to do all I can to prevent anything going wrong. I think that is the greatest service I can render to my people, and the way to save them most money in the end.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the Russians will not conclude from the actions of the House this year on mutual security that the American people are softening in their willingness to assist as best we can all who are resisting Communist expansion of every form and kind. The increased Communist truculence at the London Disarmament Conference and their boldness in the Middle East make one suspect they have already drawn such a conclusion.

It is also to be hoped that those being assisted under this program do not have their confidence in us shaken by our reductions—although I fear that such a reaction may become apparent in the months ahead. Actually Americans are not softening or weakening in their opposition to communism; it is just that too many have been lulled into a premature sense of security or have become so anxious to cut down governmental expenditures right now that they are running the grave risk of having to spend a great deal more later.

If, for example, these reductions should require substantial demobilization and resulting demoralization in Korea, it would become necessary to send back larger United States forces. Similar reactions might very easily develop elsewhere—and spread like an epidemic. If so, we will wind up by increasing our own defense budget by at least a billion dollars for every $500 million we save in the mutual security appropriations—and get far less national security and economic stability in the process.

Devoutly I hope this estimate is wrong. But the world picture, as I see it, does not permit me to take so reckless a gamble.

Mr. PASSMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Speaker, on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 194, nays 122, answered "present" 1, not voting 115, as follows:

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Speaker, I have a live pair with the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JOHNSON]. If he were present, he would have voted "yea." I voted "nay." I withdraw my vote and vote "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 15: On page 4, line 1, insert "which shall remain available until September 30, 1958."

Mr. PASSMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment, and pending that I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN].

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Speaker, here we are in the closing hours of this session of the Congress and the most urgent business before us is the approval of this measure to appropriate additional billions of dollars for foreign aid. It is bad enough to see these vast sums of American tax dollars going overseas to help other nations with no end apparently in sight, but it is even worse to me personally when I think of the economic needs of our own basic industry—American agriculture—and of our farm people and note that not one significant and constructive farm measure has been enacted at this session.

Who is to blame for this flagrant neglect of our most serious domestic problem? On whose shoulders will 5 million farm families place the responsibility for failure to recognize and meet their most pressing problem? To whom will the business and working people, such as the farm implement manufacturers and dealers, look for the reason for lost sales in rural America?

In my judgment, the failure to act is chargeable both to the Democratic majority of this Congress and to the administration which has kept in office a Secretary of Agriculture who is not in sympathy with price-support programs and whose only solution for farm problems seems to be the lowering of farm commodity prices.

The Democratic leadership in Congress is responsible because it has had a good working majority and could have passed constructive farm legislation any time it was of a mind to do so. It cannot be said that this failure to act was due to the lack of understanding of the problems or a lack of ideas for their solution. Witnesses from the great farm organizations, many farmers themselves, and numerous Members of Congress made appearances before the House Committee on Agriculture to bear witness as to the gravity of the need and to propose constructive legislation. In addition, many able Congressmen saw their bills languish before the committee with no positive action. I personally made two appearance before that great committee to urge action on several critical problems and we are still waiting for answers.

I want to be fair as I always try to be, and that requires me to say that it is my considered judgment that the other major contributing factor to this stalemate in farm programs is the retention in office of a Secretary of Agriculture whose basic philosophy is opposed to the type of agricultural price supports we feel we must have. Again, I say that there has been no need for this as I personally have repeatedly urged his replacement and I know that many others have done likewise. It cannot be said that he is indispensable because there are available men, like our distinguished former colleague, the Honorable Clifford Hope, of Kansas, who could almost overnight reverse this deplorable trend in our farm economy if they were given the office and authority of Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. Speaker, it was not my purpose in rising today to merely criticize others for their failure to act on these basic domestic problems of agriculture. I want to do more than that in these closing hours. It is my hope, Mr. Speaker, that every Member of the House will give this matter some serious thought in the months ahead and come back in January resolved to do something constructive in the way of legislative action.

We have experienced some unfortunate sectional differences during this session. I have not been party to them, but I recognize that they do exist. We have seen partisan politics enter into the farm program, and we all deplore that. We have seen one commodity pitted against the other in the legislative arena, and that must never happen again.

Let us come back next January firm in our determination to set aside partisan, sectional, and any other differences we may have and dedicate ourselves to the enactment of constructive farm legislation. Let us hope that we will at that time have a new Secretary of Agriculture in whom we can place our confidence and who will cooperate with us in our efforts to reach this common objective. Above all else, come what may, let us try to do something worth while early next year for the farmers of America.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I regret I cannot go along with the sponsors of this legislation to provide additional billions for foreign aid, also described as mutual aid. I realize there are some items in this bill that are laudable, but we are required to vote for or against all the items in this legislation in one package. My vote on this bill may be regarded as a protest vote.

Among other things, I hardly see why American people should pay for hydroelectric plants and other manufacturing concerns in other countries. Furthermore billions of American tax dollars are handed to the rulers of the countries we attempt to assist. These funds are used by the heads of these countries, in many instances, as they see fit and not for those who really need it. On this subject I would remind you that between 6 and 7 billion dollars of funds already appropriated are in the pipeline and not yet really used. I am informed in addition to that almost a billion dollars heretofore appropriated and not spent will be reappropriated as a part of this legislation.

We ought to be reminded, too, that defense money in this bill is for war materials for other countries. This Congress has, in addition thereto, appropriated this year about $36 billion for defenses of our country.

I think when funds are permitted to pile up, as they seem to under this and other legislation, there is bound to be a lot of waste. That should not occur.

Mr. Speaker, the debt of our country is $276 billion. It is $20 billion more than the combined debt of 84 countries of the world. It looks now as if there will be little reduction in our debt this year. That means little, if any, relief for the taxpayers of our country next year.

I suggest those in charge of the administration of these funds go slow and withhold their expenditure until funds already on hand are expended, then make sure there is real need of the use of these funds.

It would help a lot if the Appropriations Committee of this House would require a strict account of the expenditures and furnish the House with an itemized statement and account with respect to the use of these funds.

Mr. PELLY. Mr. Speaker, the compromise on the differences between the House and Senate on the mutual security appropriation is not going to satisfy either those who support this program for our national security or those who oppose any or all aid to other friendly nations.

Here, it seems to me, is a clear issue. We necessarily cannot represent the viewpoint of the majority of our constituents. By that I mean, there is plenty of information available to Members of Congress which supports the necessity of adequate funds in the interest of national security, yet these facts are not generally available to the public. Therefore, it seems to me, we have the obligation of voting for restoration of funds even though public opinion at home does not fully support such action. After all, the testimony given at hearings on the mutual security bill was definite. For example, after retiring as Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Admiral Radford at such a hearing returned and restated his unequivocal support of this program as an essential part of our defense. He reiterated as a retired citizen what officially he had said previously, and he knew the facts. Now I know the American people do not see the mutual security program entirely in the light of defense which many of us do, but that is the light in which Admiral Radford testified.

The voting in Congress indicates, I am sure, that the viewpoint of constituents is a strong influence on us. But today we must vote our own consciences and not as it is politically expedient to vote. The security of the Nation is at stake. So I must personally stand up on this issue and be counted with those who support this unpopular but nevertheless what I believe to be essential program. It is one that will deter war and Communist aggression. I accept the position that defense needs have become so expensive, it is economy to build up the means of self-defense of other friendly peoples abroad rather than to try and maintain major mobilization at home to the point of virtual national bankruptcy.

One new aspect, important since the Army leadership in Syria was taken over recently by the Communists, is now linked with this bill. We have, as I understand, 14 allies chiefly in the Middle and Far East whose military strength depends on it. The five countries, Korea, free China, Vietnam, Pakistan, and Turkey, by our assistance have 2,100,000 men under arms. These countries are under Communist pressure from without and from within. By treaties, approved by the Senate, we have said the security of the United States would be in jeopardy if Communist aggression succeeds against any of these. Therefore, we have a vital interest in the ability of each country to stand and defend its own integrity.

As legislators, let us not dodge our responsibility. This is waging peace. This mutual security, if adequate, will prevent war. As such we must provide sufficient funds for the program.

So, Mr. Speaker, I am impelled to support the maximum restoration of funds in the conference report on the mutual security bill.

Mr. PASSMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the votes by which action was taken on the several motions was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS

Mr. PASSMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members be granted permission to extend their remarks in the RECORD on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE TO NOTIFY THE PRESIDENT

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 414

Resolved, That a committee of two Members be appointed by the House to join a similar committee appointed by the Senate, to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that the two Houses have completed their business of the session and are ready to adjourn, unless the President has some other communication to make to them.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as members of the committee on the part of the House the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of House Concurrent Resolution 172, 85th Congress, the Chair appoints as members of the Joint Congressional Committee To Investigate Matters Pertaining to the Growth and Expansion of the District of Columbia and Its Metropolitan Area the following Members on the part of the House: Mr. MCMILLAN, of South Carolina; Mr. SMITH of Virginia; and Mr. HYDE, of Maryland.

VOTING AND ATTENDANCE RECORD, REPRESENTATIVE CHARLES A. BOYLE, 12TH DISTRICT, ILLINOIS, 85TH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION

Mr. BOYLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert my voting record in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

FEDERAL-STATE-LOCAL RELATIONSHIPS: AN APPRAISAL BY THE AMERICAN MUNICIPAL ASSOCIATION

Mr. REUSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the Record.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. REUSS. Mr. Speaker, the Intergovernmental Relations Subcommittee of the House Government Operations Committee has been holding hearings on the difficult problems of relationships among the Federal, State, and local governments. Under the able chairmanship of our colleague, the Honorable L. H. Fountain, the subcommittee has heard a number of excellent witnesses. The statement by one of them, Mr. Patrick Healy, Jr., executive director of the American Municipal Association, on July 30, 1957, seemed to me of such value that I have asked permission to insert it in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as follows:

STATEMENT OF PATRICK HEALY, JR., EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR, AMERICAN MUNICIPAL ASSOCIATION

I am Patrick Healy, Jr., executive director of the American Municipal Association. This is a voluntary association of cities and State leagues of municipalities, representing a total membership of 12,530 incorporated municipal governments in 46 States, Alaska, Puerto Rico, and the District of Columbia. Our headquarters is here in Washington, and we maintain a branch office at 1313 East 60th Street, Chicago, for research and technical service.

I have held this position for slightly more than 3 years. Before that I was chairman of the Utah State Tax Commission for nearly 4½ years and was engaged in private business in the State of Utah following a period of 4 years active duty with the United States Navy during World War II. Before the war, I was executive director of the North Carolina League of Municipalities for 8 years, and before that I was field representative for the League of Virginia Municipalities.

It is appropriate that these hearings should be held about the same time that so-called Federal-State Task Force has been appointed by the President and by the Governors' Conference to examine Federal-State relationships and make recommendations as to proper governmental functions and division of revenue sources.

"Agitation for fiscal readjustment between the components of the Federal system is neither recent nor novel. It recurs with every significant expansion in governmental activity and, in one form or another, has been a continuing problem since the formation of the republic."

That statement appears on page 91 of the report of the Commission on Intergovernmental Relations. An even more significant statement appears on page 102: "Much of the present concern over intergovernmental relations stems from the fiscal difficulties of local, as distinguished from State, governments."

We sincerely hope that your subcommittee as well as the Federal-State Task Force will arrive at the same conclusion, namely, that the real difficulties in intergovernmental relations today are the fiscal difficulties of local governments, as distinguished from State governments.

The reasons for these local government fiscal difficulties are very effectively described by the Commission on Intergovernmental Relations as being due to self-imposed restrictions of States through State constitutions, statutes, and practices which limit their ability to render State aid to local governments and also to the limitations on the actions of local government by State controls.

These self-imposed restrictions at the State level and State controls on local government in my personal opinion will never be removed to permit discontinuance of Federal-aid programs. The two basic reasons for that statement are, first, the interstate and intercommunity competition which limits the taxing freedom of State and local governments and, second, the unwillingness of State legislatures to provide solutions to the problem of urban governments and metropolitan areas. The result will be an increase in demand for direct Federal-local relationships and Federal grants-in-aid.

The big domestic problems of government today are the result of the urbanization of the United States. While the Commission strongly suggests that reapportionment of the State legislatures to reflect fair representation of urban population will largely solve the legislative neglect of urban problems, it is our observation based on actual experience of the State leagues of municipalities that reapportionment is definitely not the cure-all for urban ills at the State level.

In fact, in many States the cities appear to get a more favorable consideration of their problems from legislators residing in small towns and rural areas than they do from some living in larger cities. In other States, however, reapportionment would be a distinct advantage in helping to solve urban problems. In either case, however, reapportionment would provide only a partial solution.

In my personal opinion, a more realistic approach would be to provide for State legislators of equal competence to national legislators, being paid adequate salaries to work full time at the job in annual sessions with adequate personal staffs and adequate committee staffs.

Now to turn to the specific questions presented by your subcommittee:

1. (a) What is your appraisal of the impact to date of the recommendations of the Commission on Intergovernmental Relations (the "Kestnbaum Commission") on: (1) The Congress, (2) the executive branch of the Federal Government, (3) the State legislatures, and (4) the executive branch of State governments.

To date, we do not believe that the recommendations of the Commission on Intergovernmental Relations have had any significant impact on the Congress of the United States.

We have the feeling that the lack of Congressional activity in this area has been due largely to the fact that any substantive action on the report depends on collateral activity on the part of the State governments themselves.

The lack of a broad objective and comprehensive plan for implementation of the Commission's recommendations has, we believe, rightfully deterred the Congress from acting unilaterally to achieve the broad goals set forth by the Commission.

We have the impression that the Commission's recommendations have made a slightly greater impression on the executive branch of the Federal Government. This is evidenced by the fact that the President has seen fit to set up a special assistant in the Executive Office of the President to serve as the President's chief aid and adviser on State and local relationships. The President's recent speech before the governors' conference seems to provide additional evidence that the executive branch is seriously interested in achieving some of the recommendations of the Commission on Intergovernmental Relations.

The failure of the Executive or the Congress to offer even a modest payments-in-lieu-of-taxes program is an example of the lack of impact of the Kestnbaum Commission recommendations.

With regard to the impact on the several State legislatures and the executive branches of the State governments, our general impression is that the recommendations of the Commission on Intergovernmental Relations have not significantly stirred State governments into action along the various lines suggested by the Commission's report.

(b) Do you generally favor implementation of the Commission's recommendations?

The American Municipal Association has endorsed the guiding philosophy of government of the Kestnbaum Commission on Intergovernmental Relations which states that we should: "leave to private initiative all the functions that citizens can perform privately; use the level of government closest to the community for all public functions it can handle; utilize cooperative intergovernmental arrangements where appropriate to attain economical performance and popular approval; reserve national action for residual participation where State and local governments are not fully adequate; and for the continuing responsibilities that only the National Government can undertake."

In favoring the broad implementation of the committee's recommendations, we would, however, like to point out that this stand does not necessarily mean unqualified endorsement of all of the recommendations contained in the Commission's report. Rather, we feel that coordinated efforts on the part of the Federal, State, and local governments to achieve implementation will probably result in some revision of the desirability and effectiveness of the recommendations themselves. Only an attempt at a practical adaptation of the principles of government and federalism contained in the report will disclose the actual value of it as a theoretical framework within which to plan on a continuing basis.

(c) If yes, what approaches can you suggest for achieving better follow-through on Commission recommendations?

In order to achieve better follow-through on Commission recommendations, this association in 1954, recommended that a "permanent National Commission on all phases of Federal, State, and local relationships be created. The Commission should be created pursuant to an act of Congress. The members should be true representatives of each level of Government. The Commission should have the type of membership which will give it the greatest possible national prestige. In a Federal Government the most difficult questions arise between the types of government. Some clarification is necessary. It can be accomplished best by a National Commission on Federal, State, and local government relations. Few activities are more urgent or more important as a means of proving that a democratic Federal Government can work effectively and harmoniously."

You might say that the Kestnbaum Commission was the answer to this recommendation, but what we mean here is a continuing commission.

(d) Are you opposed to any specific recommendations of the Commission?

While we do not oppose any specific recommendations of the Commission, we do feel that entirely too much stress was placed in the report on maintaining a chain of command through the States for all Federal aid or grant programs. We do feel that there is considerable merit to a direct Federal-local, that is city, relationship, and we are, by and large, satisfied with this relationship on the basis of going Federal-aid programs.

Without going into specifics, we do not see the need for the interposing of State governments between existing Federal-local relationships for programs such as airport construction, urban renewal, etc. We should like to point out that nominal State control is established over all of these programs by way of State enabling legislation which permits the city to take advantage of Federal assistance programs.

Without such State enabling legislation, no city may take or receive Federal assistance unless, of course, the State has permitted the community sufficient home rule to accept Federal aid without specific State enabling legislation.

As a second area of mild opposition to the general conclusions of the report, we feel that the Commission, in concentrating on the goal of governmental decentralization, neglected to emphasize the importance of continuing certain vital, Federal programs with vigor until such time as State and local governments are willing, able, and prepared to take them over—specifically airports, urban renewal, and water pollution control.

2. (a) Do you agree or disagree with the view that the growth of Federal programs in fields traditionally considered State responsibilities has been due in large measure to the failure of the States to meet pressing public needs? Please explain?

We must agree in a large part with the view that the growth of Federal programs in fields traditionally considered State responsibilities has been due in large measure to the failure of the States to meet pressing public needs.

As the report itself points out, many of our States have built-in constitutional limitations which by their very nature prevent the State from engaging in extensive aid programs demanded by the public.

The report also makes reference to State neglect of the reapportionment problem and, while we agree that this may be an important reason for its neglect of urban problems in some States, we do not feel that reapportionment per se constitutes one of the major reasons the States have neglected to handle problems developing in our urban areas.

The report also points out the need for more flexibility in legislative matters on the part of State governments, and we would concur in their general conclusions as to the inadequacies of many State constitutions.

Again, we would certainly agree with the Commission's conclusion that few States have an adequate executive branch headed by a governor who can be held generally accountable for executing and administering the laws of the States. We believe it of fundamental importance that responsibility for State functions should be focused on the executive in order to achieve a unity of command and consistency of action within the State administration.

(b) If you agree with this view, what are the barriers to effective and responsive State Government and how can they be removed?

Probably the principal barrier to effective and responsive State government is the State legislature itself. Since State legislators are traditionally stormed by all manner of pressure groups and more frequently than not respond to such pressures, maintenance of the status quo becomes the rule.

Certainly, considerably more needs to be done in selling the voter on the virtues of good, effective, and responsive State government. An educational program of large size and long duration will certainly be needed if we are to ever get the average voter interested enough in his State government to want to do something about improving it.

3. In relation to existing Federal grant-in-aid programs, is the principal of sharing administrative responsibility with State and local governments, sound, or is allocation of complete responsibility for a program to a single level of government preferable?

We take the position that the allocation of complete responsibility for a program to a single level of government is frequently preferable to sharing responsibility with the State and local government. As was pointed out above, local participation in Federal aid programs is contingent upon the State passing the necessary enabling legislation. Through this sort of legislation the State retains all the control it needs to assure itself that the program is being handled properly by the local governments.

The interposition of a State administrative agency, say in the case of the urban renewal program, would serve no useful purpose. This is especially true in those States where only 1 or 2 large metropolitan areas exist and are interested in participating in the program. Adding a State administrative unit would tend to slow the progress of the program down, inasmuch as it would require an additional way station in the processing of the activity and would certainly add unjustified administrative cost to the entire operation.

4. If Federal grants were discontinued with the simultaneous discontinuance of an equal amount of Federal taxation (by vacating certain tax fields or reducing tax rates), would the States be able and willing to raise sufficient revenues to support the existing federally aided programs?

We do not believe that, if Federal grants were discontinued, with the simultaneous discontinuance of an equal amount of Federal taxation, all of the States would be able or willing to raise sufficient revenues to support existing Federal aid programs.

In our opinion, Federal relinquishment of tax fields or reductions in tax rates applied across the board to all States would at best get a very limited response. It seems clear that in areas such as urban renewal, housing, airports, pollution control, etc., the national interest would hardly be served unless the Federal Government were completely assured that a large proportion of States involved would assume these functions and carry them out effectively and vigorously. The Federal Government cannot, under any circumstances, afford to relinquish programs vital to the future of the Nation unless and until it is completely assured that the State governments are ready and willing and completely able to assume the responsibilities for these programs.

5. Which, if any, of the present grant programs would you like to see completely a State (and/or local) responsibility in exchange for enlarged taxing capacity?

We know of no existing present grant program of specific value and interest to municipalities which we would like to see completely a State responsibility in exchange for enlarged taxing capacity.

6. If you favor exclusive State responsibility for some grant programs, which tax areas, or portions thereof, now occupied by the Federal Government should be relinquished to the States?

The answer to No. 5 is "No," and so we have no answer to No. 6.

7. Are there any existing programs that the States might terminate if the Federal Government were to stop making grants and vacate certain tax fields?

Certain existing programs would be terminated in most States if the Federal Government were to stop making grants even though it vacated certain tax fields. It is extremely unlikely, for example, that the acceleration of control of water pollution by the present program of Federal grants to municipalities for construction of sewage disposal plants would be continued. Neither is it likely that States would participate with cities in construction and improvement of airports, and there would be little likelihood of continuing the development of a national airport plan.

The highway program would probably be seriously jeopardized, and it is certainly doubtful that the goal of an Interstate System including urban connections would ever be achieved.

Urban renewal would come to a complete halt. This is true simply because the abandonment of any tax area by the Federal Government cannot be correlated with the initiation or continuance of any specific functional program on the part of the State.

The national interest and the public interest would suffer if the Federal Government were arbitrarily to abandon any program in which it is now engaged, this in spite of the fact that it might at the same time vacate compensatory tax fields.

8. (a) If Federal grants now made directly to local government were terminated (e. g., slum clearance and urban renewal, public housing, airport construction), would State governments be likely to assume any additional responsibility for these activities?

In our opinion there is no question that it would be extremely unlikely for the State governments to assume any additional responsibility for slum clearance and urban renewal, public housing, airport construction, etc., if the Federal grants now made directly to local governments were terminated by the Federal Government.

(b) Could the municipalities finance these programs alone from local revenue sources now available to them? If not, it is likely that cities would be offered either State aid or enlarged taxing powers to continue these activities in the event that Federal grants as well as some Federal taxes are discontinued?

Municipal governments could not finance these programs alone from local revenue sources now available to them. Further, we do not believe that the localities have any untapped sources of income to take up the slack which would be created by Federal abandonment.

We seriously doubt that the cities would be offered either State aid or enlarged taxing powers to continue these activities in the event the Federal Government compensates the discontinuance of the grant program by relinquishing some of its taxing powers.

The pace at which municipal expenditures are rising and the frequency with which the bond market is being resorted to demonstrate that cities are making bold efforts to settle their financial needs without recourse to aid from the States or the Federal Government. Certain city projects are of such a massive nature and so interlocked with national interests that they defy settlement solely by local means.

9. (a) Would you favor some type of tax-sharing arrangement whereby the Federal Government would continue to occupy the major tax fields but turn back to the States some percentage of collections for general governmental purpose?

(b) If such an arrangement were adopted, should the payment to each State be made strictly in accordance wth Federal tax collections within that State or should State fiscal need be taken into account?

(c) As a practical matter, do you believe that all or most Federal tax collections can be equitably allocated to their State of origin? Please explain.

In the absence of specific national municipal policy, we are inclined to go along with the conclusions of the Commission on the matter of tax-sharing arrangements.

We agree with the Commission that if a system of direct subsidies were developed there would be little assurance that the funds would be used to meet all the needs thought necessary in the national interest. Such a program would not preclude other pressures for national programs for specific objectives.

The result would probably be, as the Committee points out, "a piling of conditional grants on top of subsidies * * *, or enlargement of the field of direct national provision of services, or both."

We believe that Federal leadership in these programs is mandatory if States and localities are to take an active role in their accomplishment. We further believe that the focusing of the vast resources and skills of the Federal Government on specific problem areas makes an aid program based strictly on functional lines the most desirable one. It is the responsibility of the Federal Government to stimulate, to set performance standards, to provide financial assistance, and to evaluate, leaving the carrying out of a program to State and local government.

We welcome the kind of analysis and study the Commission has carried out as a timely and necessary reevaluation of the effectiveness of the various levels in our governmental system. However, while we judge the Commission's published report as an exemplary piece of work, we do not fully share its apparent view that existing Federal grant and air programs have in some way tended to vitiate the Nation's democratic processes. Neither do we feel that the existence of such programs poses any threat to those democratic processes, nor do they in our opinion jeopardize the future stability of our Federal system.

As representatives of the Nation's cities—those units of government closest to the people themselves—we share the view expressed in the Federalist Paper No. 46 (attributed to Madison) published in the New York Packet on Tuesday, January 29, 1788, and feel it would be appropriate to close this statement with a quote from that paper:

> "The Federal and State Governments are in fact but different agents and trustees of the people, constituted with different powers, and designed for different purposes. The adversaries of the Constitution seem to have lost sight of the people altogether in their reasonings on this subject; and to have viewed these different establishments, not only as mutual rivals and enemies, but as uncontrolled by any common superior in their efforts to usurp the authorities of each other. These gentlemen must here be reminded of their error. They must be told that the ultimate authority, wherever the derivative may be found, resides in the people alone, and that it will not depend merely on the comparative ambition or address of the different governments, whether either, or which of them, will be able to enlarge its sphere of jurisdiction at the expense of the other. Truth, no less than decency, requires that the event in every case should be supposed to depend on the sentiments and sanction of their common constituents."

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

PERSONAL ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. CARNAHAN. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably absent from the Chamber on rollcall No. 220 on the passage of the mutual security conference report. Had I been present, I would have voted "yea."

REPORT OF COMMITTEE APPOINTED TO NOTIFY THE PRESIDENT

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, your committee appointed to join a committee of the Senate to inform the President that the Congress is ready to adjourn, and to ask him if he has any further communications to make to the Congress, has performed that duty. The President has directed us to say that he has no further communication to make to the Congress.

ADJOURNMENT SINE DIE

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I offer a House concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 229) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress shall adjourn on Friday, August 30, 1957, and that when they adjourn on said day, they stand adjourned sine die.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the Record.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, the House has just approved a bill providing some $3 billion in new money from the United States Treasury for spending for the benefit of people all over the world. Yet we are told the financial situation in this country is such that it is impossible to pay postal workers a salary increase; that the President will veto legislation now on his desk for that purpose for the reason that the money is not available.

The Democrat leadership of the House and Senate supports this foreign spending and it ought now to evidence the same interest in postal workers by holding Congress in session until a veto or approval is forthcoming. If a veto, it should be overridden.

I want the Record to show that I voted against final adjournment of the House for the reason that to quit work now is to shirk a prime responsibility to our own people.

AUTHORIZING THE SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE AND THE PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE TO SIGN ENROLLED BILLS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I offer a House concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 230) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That notwithstanding the sine die adjournment of the two Houses, the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate be, and they are hereby, authorized to sign enrolled bills and joint resolutions duly passed by the two Houses and found truly enrolled.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

PRINTING OF REPORTS OF COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution (H. Res. 415) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Resolved, That, notwithstanding the sine die adjournment of the House, reports of the Comptroller General of the United States made to the Congress pursuant to the Government Corporation Control Act (31 U. S. C. 841 et seq.), shall be printed during such adjournment as House documents of the 2d session of the 85th Congress.

The resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGES FROM THE SENATE

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that notwithstanding the sine die adjournment of the House, the Clerk be authorized to receive messages from the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ACCEPTING RESIGNATIONS AND APPOINTING COMMISSIONS, BOARDS AND COMMITTEES

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that notwithstanding the adjournment of the 1st session of the 85th Congress, the Speaker be authorized to accept resignations and to appoint commissions, boards, and committees authorized by law or by the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

REPORTS FILED BY COMMITTEES

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that reports filed with the Clerk following the sine die adjournment by committees authorized by the House to conduct investigations, may be printed by the Clerk as reports of the 85th Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members of the House shall have the privilege, until the last edition authorized by the Joint Committee on Printing is published, to extend and revise their own remarks in the Congressional Record on more than one subject, if they so desire, and may also include therein such short quotations as may be necessary to explain or complete such extensions of remarks; but this order shall not apply to any subject matter which may have occurred, or to any speech delivered, subsequent to the adjournment of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, when is the last date of publication of the Record?

Mr. McCORMACK. It is usually 10 days. It will be around September 19.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

REPORTS OF CHAIRMEN OF STANDING COMMITTEES

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the chairmen of all the standing committees and subcommittees of the House may extend their remarks up to and including the publication of the last Record and to include a summary of the work of their committees; also that the ranking minority member of such standing committee or any subcommittee may have the same permission to extend their remarks and to include a summary, if they desire, from their angle, separately from that of the chairman.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PAPERS AND DOCUMENTS IN POSSESSION OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution (H. Res. 416) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Whereas, by the privileges of this House no evidence of a documentary character under the control and in the possession of the House of Representatives can, by the mandate of process of the ordinary courts of justice, be taken from such control or possession except by its permission: Therefore be it

Resolved, That when it appears by the order of any court of the United States or a judge thereof, or of any legal officer charged with the administration of the orders of such court or judge, that documentary evidence in the possession and under the control of the House is needful for use in any court of justice or before any judge or such legal officer, for the promotion of justice, this House will take such action thereon as will promote the ends of justice consistently with the privileges and rights of this House; be it further

Resolved, That during any recess or adjournment of the 85th Congress, when a subpena or other order for the production or disclosure of information is by the due process of any court of the United States served upon the Clerk of the House of Representatives, or any officer or employee of the House, directing appearance as a witness before the said court at any time and the production of certain and sundry papers in the possession and under the control of the House of Representatives, that the Clerk of the House, or any such officer or employee of the House, be authorized to appear before said court at the place and time named in any such subpena or order, but no papers or documents in the possession or under the control of the House of Representatives shall be produced in response thereto; and be it further

Resolved, That when any said court determines upon the materiality and the relevancy of the papers or documents called for in the subpena or other order, then said court, through any of its officers or agents shall have full permission to attend with all proper parties to the proceedings before said court and at a place under the orders and control of the House of Representatives and take copies of the said documents or papers and the Clerk of the House is authorized to supply certified copies of such documents that the court has found to be material and relevant, except that under no circumstances shall any minutes or transcripts of executive sessions, or any evidence of witnesses in respect thereto be disclosed or copied, nor shall the possession of said documents and papers by the said Clerk of the House be disturbed or removed from their place of file or custody under said Clerk; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted by the Clerk of the House to any of said courts whenever such writs of subpena or other orders are issued and served as aforesaid.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CORRECTION OF JOURNAL OF JUNE 17, 1957

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Journal of June 17, 1957, which erroneously shows the so-called Whitener amendment as having been adopted as following line 24, page 8, be corrected to properly reflect the action taken by the House and show that such amendment was adopted as subsection (e) of section 131, and inserted immediately following line 13, page 12, of the reported bill (H. R. 6127).

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COOPER). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

STATEMENT OF APPRECIATION

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, the present session has been a long one, but a fruitful one in the legislative history of our country. It has passed legislation of a historic nature. The members of the committees and in the House have worked hard and diligently. We can leave here with a feeling of having done a great job.

When we come back in January for the 2d session of the 85th Congress we are prepared to make and will go forward to making the 85th Congress an outstanding one.

The membership of the House, Republicans and Democrats, have been most considerate and kind to me; they have been most tolerant of my human weaknesses.

I express my thanks to the minority leader, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], who has always been most understanding and cooperative.

As majority leader I express the sentiments of Speaker RAYBURN and congratulate you on the excellent record made in this session. I thank you for your tolerant and understanding appreciation. As we adjourn, Speaker RAYBURN and I extend to you and your loved ones best wishes for a most pleasant vacation, which you richly deserve.

HELEN DEMOUCHIKOUS

Mr. CHELF. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 1582) for the relief of Helen Demouchikous, which was objected to on the Private Calendar by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. AVERY]. I understand the gentleman from Kansas has since withdrawn his objection.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, for the purposes of the Immigration and Nationality Act, Helen Demouchikous shall be held and considered to have been lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence as of September 17, 1948, upon payment of the required visa fee. Upon the granting of permanent residence to such alien as provided for in this act, the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct one number from the appropriate quota for the first year that such quota is available.

With the following committee amendment:

Add the following new section:

"SEC. 2. For the purposes of the Immigration and Nationality Act, Lien-fu Lo, also known as Luke Lo, shall be held and considered to have been lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence as of the date of the enactment of this Act, upon payment of the required visa fee. Upon the granting of permanent residence to such alien as provided for in this act, the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct one number from the appropriate quota for the first year that such quota is available."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title of the bill was amended to read: "An act for the relief of Helen Demouchikous and Lien-fu Lo, also known as Luke Lo."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ADDITIONAL COPIES OF HEARINGS ENTITLED "INVESTIGATION OF THE FINANCIAL CONDITION OF THE UNITED STATES"

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the immediate consideration of Senate Concurrent Resolution 47.

The Clerk read the Senate concurrent resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed for the use of the Committee on Finance 3,000 additional copies of part 1 of the hearings entitled "Investigation of the Financial Condition of the United States," and 5,000 additional copies of part 2 and subsequent parts of said hearings held by that committee during the 85th Congress, 1st session.

The Senate concurrent resolution was concurred in and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ADDITIONAL COPIES OF CERTAIN HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS, UNITED STATES SENATE

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the immediate consideration of Senate Concurrent Resolution 45.

The Clerk read the Senate concurrent resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed for the use of the Committee on Foreign Relations, United States Senate, 1,000 additional copies of parts 1 and 2 of the hearings held by that committee during the current session on the mutual-security program for fiscal year 1958.

The Senate concurrent resolution was concurred in and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONGRESS ACTS AT LAST ON SUPREME COURT DECISIONS

Mr. CRAMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMER. Mr. Speaker, at last Congress has risen to the challenge, has asserted itself within its constitutional field and enacted one bill, the FBI file bill, to overcome a Supreme Court decision that had wreaked havoc with our law-enforcement and investigative processes over the last few months.

Having introduced H. R. 8388, along with many of my colleagues, calling for reasonable and well-considered action in protecting the FBI files, while at the same time guaranteeing unto the defendant all the rights to which he is entitled, I am proud that Congress has answered the challenge with this corrective legislation.

It is significant to me that Congress, through the Judiciary Committee of the House, has appointed a subcommittee to investigate certain other Supreme Court decisions rendered during the October term and, as the ranking minority member of that subcommittee, I believe a sound, constructive job will be done in other instances where legislative relief is needed—as was done in the FBI files case. As a matter of fact, I felt that the work of this subcommittee was of such significance that I asked that hearings be held during the recess—and this has been agreed to—and hearings have been scheduled.

The subcommittee will look into, including but not exclusive to, the following cases: the Yates case that weakened the Smith Antisubversive Act by limiting the definition of "organize" as it relates to the Communist Party, and by condoning so long as that teaching does not "incite to action" the teaching of the overthrow of the Government of the United States; the Mallory case that resulted in the release of a confessed Negro rapist because he was held for 6½ hours between his "apprehension" and his "arraignment" and which places in jeopardy our police enforcement and investigative processes.

The Watkins case that left Congress' investigative authority completely up in the air by giving rise for the first time to a "right of silence" under the first amendment, which is now commonly pleaded, almost as commonly as the fifth amendment, and which is filled with such vague dicta that Congress is left apparently without a yardstick by which it can transact its future investigative function.

The series of cases dealing with State statutes and State law enforcement such as in the Konigsberg, Theard, and Schware cases, cases dealing a blow to the authority of the State to regulate bar admittance requirements and grounds for expulsion because of Communist leanings or activities, as in the Sweezy case, involving the State's authority to investigate through State legislative committees into communism and communistic activities, and as in the Nelson case, dealing with Federal preemption of State statutes and more specifically with antisedition legislation as well as other legislation.

Legislative action in some of these instances in my opinion is essential and I have introduced bills on many of these cases.

I also include the wording of S. 2377 as amended and as passed by the Congress on the FBI files matter, considering it a sound approach and a strong bill:

Be it enacted, etc., That chapter 223 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding a new section 3500 which shall read as follows:

"§ 3500. Demands for production of statements and reports of witnesses

"(a) In any criminal prosecution brought by the United States, no statement or report in the possession of the United States which was made by a Government witness or prospective Government witness (other than the defendant) to an agent of the Government shall be the subject of subpena, discovery, or inspection until said witness has testified on direct examination in the trial of the case.

"(b) After a witness called by the United States has testified on direct examination, the court shall, on motion of the defendant, order the United States to produce any statement (as hereinafter defined) of the witness in the possession of the United States which relates to the subject matter as to which the witness has testified. If the entire contents of any such statement relate to the subject matter of the testimony of the witness, the court shall order it to be delivered directly to the defendant for his examination and use.

"(c) If the United States claims that any statement ordered to be produced under this section contains matter which does not relate to the subject matter of the testimony of the witness, the court shall order the United States to deliver such statement for the inspection of the court in camera. Upon such delivery the court shall excise the portions of said statement which do not relate to the subject matter of the testimony of the witness. With such material excised, the court shall then direct delivery of such statement to the defendant for his use. If pursuant to such procedure, any portion of such statement is withheld from the defendant, and the defendant objects to such withholding, and the trial is continued to an adjudication of the guilt of the defendant, the entire text of such statement shall be preserved by the United States and, in the event the defendant appeals, shall be made available to the appellate court for the purpose of determining the correctness of the ruling of the trial judge. Whenever any statement is delivered to a defendant pursuant to this section, the court in its discretion, upon application of said defendant, may recess proceedings in the trial for such time as it may determine to be reasonably required for the examination of such statement by said defendant and his preparation for its use in the trial.

"(d) If the United States elects not to comply with an order of the court under paragraph (b) or (c) hereof to deliver to the defendant any statement, or such portion thereof as the court may direct, the court shall strike from the record the testimony of the witness, and the trial shall proceed unless the court in its discretion shall determine that the interests of justice require that a mistrial be declared.

"(e) The term 'statement,' as used in subsections (b), (c), and (d) of this section in relation to any witness called by the United States, means—

"(1) a written statement made by the witness and signed or otherwise adopted or approved by him; or

"(2) a stenographic, mechanical, electrical, or other recording, or a transcription thereof, which is a substantially verbatim recital of an oral statement made by said witness to an agent of the Government, and recorded contemporaneously with the making of such oral statement."

The analysis of such chapter is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"3500. Demands for production of statements and reports of witnesses."

For the information of my colleagues I include a statement of the resolution of my subcommittee to indicate its investigative authority:

Resolution to establish a special subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary

Resolved, That a special subcommittee, consisting of five members of the Committee on the Judiciary, be constituted and authorized as a matter of the highest urgency to conduct an inquiry, take evidence, and make findings and recommendations, legislative or otherwise, to this committee at the earliest practicable date, with reference to those questions raised by decisions of the Supreme Court, handed down at the last session of the Court, which affect (1) the power of Congress to investigate, (2) Federal laws relating to subversive activities, and (3) the enforcement of Federal criminal laws.

INTERNATIONAL GEOPHYSICAL YEAR

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to briefly refer to and call to your attention and for the information of the Congress and the people throughout the country, what I believe to be one of the most important and outstanding programs with far-reaching consequences that will mean so much to us in the future years ahead. Whether we like it or not, we live in an age and era marked by the most fantastic phenomena which will undoubtedly determine the future course of human existence.

July 1, this year, marked the formal beginning of an 18-month, worldwide scientific program that is without parallel in history—the International Geophysical Year.

Of fundamental and continuing interest to us all is the problem of our physical environment. The factors which make up this environment control many aspects of our physical life such as our food, our clothing, our domiciles, our travels, our communications systems, and, in some cases, our very lives.

To cope with these perplexing and often violent factors we must know more about them, their basic nature, how they operate, how they affect each other, and, perhaps more importantly, how we can circumvent the unfavorable results and amplify the beneficial ones.

The field of knowledge most directly concerned with these conditions is known as geophysics. As the name implies, it deals with the physics of the earth and its atmosphere and the space in the immediate vicinity of this atmosphere. A very important aspect of the problem is the sun itself. The sun is the principal source of all energy that reaches the earth and, therefore, is an important factor in most, if not all, of the physical phenomena which are included under the broad head of geophysics.

Over 70 years ago a young German lieutenant, named Karl Weyprecht, in considering problems on weather and the earth's magnetic field in the Arctic, recognized the importance of obtaining observations of these physical factors over as large a portion of the Arctic area as possible and within a relatively short time interval. His proposal that a concerted effort be made to measure certain geophysical phenomena was the basis for a period of special observations which has since been referred to as the first polar year. Some 10 nations, including the United States, participated in this undertaking during the period 1882–83. The gains in knowledge in the fields of meteorology and geomagnetism fully justified Lieutenant Weyprecht's judgment.

Fifty years later, 1932–33, a second polar year was instigated and this time the United States and some 30-odd other countries took part in the program. Again the Arctic regions received the principal effort, although there were some stations established in the Southern Hemisphere. Out of this period came a better understanding of the ionosphere and its effect on radio communications, a recognition of the importance of areometeorological observations in weather-prediction processes, and an increased knowledge of characteristics and variations of such things as the earth's magnetic field, cosmic rays, and aurora.

In 1950, a group of American scientists met informally at the home of one of them in Silver Spring, Md., to greet Prof. Sydney Chapman of England, one of the world's leading geophysicists. Out of this very informal evening discussion came a suggestion from Dr. L. V. Berkner that a third polar year be organized during the 1957–58 period in order to take full advantage of the tremendous advances that had been made in scientific instrumentation during the preceding decade. A second impelling reason for such an interval was the realization that further progress in a number of fields of geophysics was becoming more and more dependent on the availability of synoptic data which could only be gotten through such a concerted effort.

Dr. Berkner's proposal to have a third polar year only 25 years after the second was accepted by the International Council of Scientific Unions, a nongovernmental international organization concerned with the basic sciences. His suggestion was expanded to include not only the polar regions but the rest of the world as well, and the undertaking was then renamed the International Geophysical Year.

The International Council of Scientific Unions approached the various national scientific groups which cooperate with the Council, and invited them to set up within their own countries special committee to draw up suitable plans for projects to be undertaken during the International Geophysical Year. In the United States the National Academy of Sciences accepted the invitation and organized in 1953 a special committee for the International Geophysical Year under the chairmanship of Dr. Joseph Kaplan, the well-known physicist from the University of California at Los Angeles. Through the activities of this committee and its various technical panels a comprehensive program of geophysical projects within the United States, its possessions, and those regions in which it has traditionally had an interest was drawn up and made a part of the overall worldwide program for the International Geophysical Year.

In order to provide for the funding of the special stations and observations which would be required by the United States during the International Geophysical Year, the National Academy of Sciences invited the National Science Foundation to seek Government support. The National Science Foundation, with the aid of the United States National Committee for the International Geophysical Year prepared budget proposals and over a period of 2 years obtained Federal appropriations in the amount of $39 million.

The world program is now being actively supported by 64 nations. An impressive array of projects in all fields of geophysics has been agreed to. Thousands of scientists are participating and hundreds of observing stations will be manned. All data acquired will be made available to the world for the common goods.

The International Geophysical Year has intensity, scope, and duration unique in the scientific ventures of mankind. It is intense in the number of closely spaced observations that will be made of many phenomena; its scope embraces most geophysical disciplines and covers the whole globe; and the total period will allow studies to be made of seasonal and other long-period variations of the phenomena. Beyond this, observations of very slowly changing phenomena and events will form a base for comparison with measurements made during future epochs.

All of the major fields of geophysics are covered in the world program and the United States is taking a major and active part in all of these disciplines. Special American stations have been established in the Arctic, the Antarctic, and regions of the equatorial Atlantic and Pacific Oceans. These, of course, are in addition to the regularly established observation points normally operated by such agencies as the Weather Bureau, the National Bureau of Standards, the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and others.

A number of projects and stations of the United States IGY program have been set up on a cooperative basis with the scientific groups of neighboring countries, particularly with Canada and the Latin American countries. This spirit of voluntary cooperation has enhanced regional efforts in the Americas and in the oceanic waters of the Western Hemisphere by insuring higher coordination of the scientists involved and by guaranteeing complete coverage of the regions.

A cooperative effort of the highest importance to the United States program, and therefore also to the world program, is the operation of a chain of stations running from pole to pole along the longitudinal line of 75° to 80° west. This chain is of great importance in making coordinated observations in meteorology and upper atmospheric phenomena which will yield a profile of such events, their relations in the two hemispheres and at the two poles, and their behavior at the equator.

In addition, the United States has taken a leading part in the development and utilization of certain tools which are essential to obtaining physical data in the high atmosphere and ionosphere. I refer to the upper atmosphere sounding rockets and the proposed scientific earth satellite. I emphasize that both of these devices are in the minds of scientists tools of the trade, although the earth satellite has caught the public imagination and fancy to the point where it is sometimes thought of as the principal IGY effort on the part of the United States.

What now are some of the problems that the IGY will examine and what are the possible benefits that one can expect to obtain if they are successfully solved?

In general, any practical application of knowledge depends on the development of certain basic scientific facts and theories which, at the time, may not appear to lead directly to any material benefits. Nevertheless, the information that is developed as the result of such studies may eventually prove of inestimable value in very practical ways. For example, as a result of observations taken during the First Polar Year, the existence of what has been called the auroral zone was verified in the Arctic. This is roughly an annular ring-shaped region, offset from the northern geographical pole, over which the maximum number of aurora are observed during any extended period of time. At first this appeared to be of academic interest only. However, with the subsequent development of radio communication, the auroral zone became of intense practical interest, since the physical phenomena that are associated with auroral displays also cause serious disruption in radio circuits. With increased knowledge of the factors which govern the auroral zone and the formation of aurora itself, methods of circumventing these disadvantages have been developed. Even now we are actively exploring special techniques which will increase the reliability of radio communication circuits in polar and subpolar regions. This example and others which could be cited prove the value of basic information as a first step to the realization of practical gains.

There are in addition certain direct problems which are being explored during the IGY which should benefit our Nation in the immediate future. One of these is again the communications problem. As we learn more about the characteristics and behavior of the ionized regions in the high atmosphere upon which all radio communications depend, we should be able to improve the reliability and usefulness of such communication circuits.

In the field of long-range weather prediction, a clearer understanding of certain processes in the atmosphere, at the air-ocean boundary surface, and in the oceans themselves should assist us in providing more reliable predictions over longer intervals of time. This means that we shall have greater warning, and hence more time to prepare to meet such violent meteorological events as hurricanes, droughts, or tornadoes in order to minimize their effects. The resulting savings of life and property will amply justify the whole effort going into the IGY.

These studies in the polar and subpolar regions leading to greater reliability of radio communication, to better weather information, and to greater knowledge of how to cope with living conditions, all will offer a significant contribution to the development and expansion of intercontinental air transportation via the shorter "great circle" routes over both polar regions. Already one airline has pioneered and is operating a direct Europe-Tokyo route over the North Pole and the time is not far distant when direct flight becomes feasible between Australia and South America and Europe via the south polar regions.

Our studies of processes, currents, and water transport phenomena in the oceans will provide several other direct benefits. The need for having this kind of information in connection with commercial fisheries is self-evident. In addition, the great ocean depths may eventually provide a partial solution to the problem of waste disposal for the atomic powerplants if it can be proved that the water in such depths only comes to the surface after many tens or even hundreds of years. This is a factor which is suspected, but to date has not been confirmed.

Time does not permit a detailed account of many other problems which the IGY observations may help us to solve. Our experience in the first and second polar years convinces us that out of this tremendous international scientific undertaking known as the international geophysical year will eventually come many direct benefits to the human race. The United States is in a particularly favorable position to benefit from this enterprise because of our advanced state of scientific and technological development and the resources and facilities at our disposal.

The immediate product of the IGY will be an immense amount of geophysical data. These data, representing the observations made by the scientists of all participating national groups, will be placed in three world-data centers, one of which will be in the United States. All three centers will have complete sets of all data and will make it available to all scientists and scientific institutions in the world. A decade or more may be required to extract all the value from the IGY observations, and scientists of this generation and the next will be conducting further research made possible by the data of the IGY. From such research will come the contributions to the welfare of mankind.

Aside from gains in scientific knowledge, certainly the very pattern itself established during the IGY of 64 nations working toward a common goal also warrants careful study as a venture in international cooperation. There has never been a coordinated undertaking of this magnitude in the past, but we can perhaps look forward to continuing further efforts based on our experience during this momentous period.

LEADERSHIP OF HON. JOSEPH W. MARTIN, JR., IN THE CIVIL-RIGHTS BILL

Mr. CURTIS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachustts?

There was no objection.

Mr. CURTIS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I desire to pay deserved tribute to the forceful leadership of Congressman JOSEPH W. MARTIN, JR. of Massachusetts, which resulted in the final and successful compromise of the civil-rights bill.

Now that the first civil-rights bill in over 80 years has been passed, it is proper to call attention to the importance of the final stand in the House against the weakening Senate amendments, which resulted at last in a compromise which greatly strengthened the bill.

The adoption of this final compromise was largely due to the courageous and untiring leadership of Congressman MARTIN. He stood firm as a rock in favor of a stronger bill when the odds appeared against him, and finally prevailed—a truely remarkable achievement.

The final compromise not only strengthened the protection of civil rights, but protected the courts from a provision which weakened their power to enforce their own decrees.

Traditionally, the courts had power to enforce their decrees by holding violators in contempt without jury trials. Senate amendments seriously limited that power in contempt cases classed as criminal—not only in civil-rights cases, but in other proceedings for injunctions.

There was strong pressure on the House to accept this Senate amendment, if limited to civil-rights cases. But Congressman MARTIN insisted on a further limitation restoring the traditional power to the courts to enforce their own decrees except in cases where the penalty for violation of the decrees would be major.

Great credit is also due all others responsible for this compromise, and to the House Members who stood firm under the leadership of Congressman MARTIN in favor of it.

DONATION OF FOREIGN EXCESS PROPERTY

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include a memorandum.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachustts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I have noted with pleasure the memorandum of July 8, 1957, from Assistant Secretary of Defense, Supply and Logistics, Perkins McGuire, to the defense agencies on the subject of "Foreign Excess Donations."

This instruction makes it possible for certain meritorious organizations and charitable and nonprofit institutions to receive foreign excess property under specified conditions and circumstances.

It had come to my attention that our executive departments, principally the Army, Navy, and Air Force, often have excess property such as medical and dental supplies in foreign lands which would be of great value to various organizations and charitable institutions.

Existing law permits the donation of such property in certain cases but there had never been adequate implementing instructions to the owning agencies until the recent authorization was issued for the Department of Defense.

The Subcommittee on Donable Property, Committee on Government Operations, of which I am the chairman and Congressmen JOHN E. MOSS, of California, and EDWIN H. MAY, JR., of Connecticut are members, have worked closely with interested agencies and the office of Hon. Perkins McGuire, Assistant Secretary of Defense, with regard to this procedure.

I am positive that this important and far-sighted step will do much to help worthwhile institutions and organizations in foreign lands and to build good relationships between our Government and foreign peoples with no cost to the American taxpayer. The memorandum follows:

MEMORANDUM FOR THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF THE ARMY (LOGISTICS), ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF THE NAVY (MATERIAL), ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF THE AIR FORCE (MATERIEL)—SUBJECT, FOREIGN EXCESS DONATIONS

Section 402 of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 as amended authorizes the donation of certain foreign excess personal property. To assure that this donation authority is uniformly exercised by the military departments it is requested that the current armed service regulations on this subject be reviewed and, if necessary, amended in conformity with the following policy.

Foreign excess personal property which has no commercial value or the estimated cost of care and handling of which would exceed the estimated proceeds from its sale is authorized to be donated to:

1. Any organization, institution, or agency of the United States Government, any State or local government thereof;
2. Any organization, institution, or agency of any friendly foreign government or local subdivision thereof;
3. Any nongovernment charitable and nonprofit organization, institution, or agency of the United States or any friendly foreign country which operates health or educational activities in a foreign country;

Provided, however, That preference shall be given to Government organizations, institutions, and agencies of the United States and to nongovernment organizations, institutions, and agencies whose headquarters are located in the United States or whose operating funds are raised chiefly in the United States.

It is requested that the above policy be placed into effect promptly. Two copies of implementing orders should be sent to this office following issuance.

PERKINS MCGUIRE,
Assistant Secretary of Defense (Supply and Logistics).

THE LATE HONORABLE HERMAN P. KOPPLEMANN

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachustts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, the death of our former colleague, Herman P. Kopplemann, of Connecticut is a sad loss to his many friends. I am deeply grieved at his passing. I numbered him among my valued friends.

The life of Herman Kopplemann is like an Horatio Alger story.

Born in Odessa, Russia, he came to the United States as a child. Throughout his entire life his love of America was manifested on innumerable occasions.

As a young man, in 1904, at the age of 24 years, he was honored by election to the city council of Hartford, Conn., in which body he served in 1911 as its president. He also served in both branches of the Connecticut Legislature.

The people of his congressional district, recognizing his ability and his character, elected him as a Member of the National House of Representatives, serving in the 73d, 74th, and 75th Congresses, and again in the 77th and 79th Congresses.

The Democratic leadership and Committee on Committees recognized his fine qualifications by assigning him to the important Committee on Banking and Currency and later to the important Committee on Appropriations.

In addition to a successful career in elective office, Herman Kopplemann was a successful businessman.

Herman Kopplemann was a sound progressive. He loyally supported the legislative program of the great humanitarian, Franklin D. Roosevelt.

I know from talks I had from time to time when Herman Kopplemann's name came up that President Roosevelt had a very high regard for him.

Herman Kopplemann was also a good man. Possessed of nobility of mind and character he always extended a helping hand to others. There are many thousands of persons who are happier today because of Herman Kopplemann and his consideration of and his kindness to them.

During his years of service in the Congress he was one of the most popular and best-liked Members. He always had a smile on his face—always complimenting others—never criticizing. He always had a good word for others.

Herman Kopplemann was a people's Representative. He not only introduced and had enacted into law important bills in the interest of the people, but he ably supported many other important pieces of legislation.

Herman Kopplemann has left his favorable imprint upon the legislative history of our country.

To Mrs. Kopplemann and the loved ones my close and valued friend, Herman Kopplemann, left behind, I extend my profound sympathy in their bereavement.

THE 1ST SESSION OF THE 85TH CONGRESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I think a good many of us here today would ask that this Congress, trying as it has been, be extended for a time in order to pass certain legislation. I for one realize that probably no good would come of it. The Members are pretty thoroughly exhausted with the terrific strain of this last session of Congress. It is the greatest strain I have ever known in my 33 legislative years and my 44 years in Washington. I think it is greater than ever before even during wartime, because while we are not actually fighting, we are in a cold war, and during a war there is a tremendous urge to work for unity in order to win the war.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the Members of the House that have been so helpful to me, Speaker RAYBURN; the majority leader, Mr. McCORMACK, and our minority leader and great friend and advisor, former Speaker MARTIN, the floor leaders, the whips, and all the others, from my heart for what they have done to help. The help with respect to the Merrimack Valley has been invaluable to us because for years we could get no assistance.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KEATING. I think that the services the gentlewoman has performed for this Nation during the almost a third of a century she has been a Member of this House are deserving of the highest praise and recognition by those who serve with her. She is always pleasant, and it is a great pleasure to work with the gentlewoman and feel that she is working with us. Her great concern for the veterans and those less fortunate is well known to every veteran in the land.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I thank the gentleman very much and congratulate him upon his very great victories in this session of Congress. Able and fearless, he gets results.

Mr. Speaker, may I repeat that I hope the Murphy Army Hospital for service men and women and their families in Massachusetts will be kept open, because we need it. The Asiatic flu is spreading to this country, and many people are coming down with it. We need every bed we can secure.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank everybody here, the personnel, the little pages that are so willing and so fleet of foot, the telephone operators who get our calls through for us and often save lives by so doing, the clerks, the press, the reporters, the doorkeepers, and our courteous and fine police and guards, and everybody connected with the running of the Capitol. I am deeply grateful to them all.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. I join the gentlewoman from Massachusetts in what she has said in relation to the Murphy Army Hospital. I hope it will be kept open. In fact, the entire Massachusetts delegation in the House, Republicans and Democrats, are in favor of its being kept open, and the money for it has been appropriated.

I also join the gentleman from New York in the compliment he gave the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS]. We in Massachusetts do not consider her a Republican, we consider her Mrs. ROGERS.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I thank the gentleman very, very much. So far as the Murphy General Hospital is concerned, I am told the families of the men as well as the men have to go 450 miles away even for a mother to have her baby. You can see how vital it is for the future of the country to have the Murphy hospital kept.

Mr. LAIRD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I gladly yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. LAIRD. I would like to commend my good friend, the gentlewoman from Massachusetts, on her statement in regard to the employees of the House. I think they have been most efficient and most helpful to all of us during this first session of the 85th Congress.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. We appreciate the great telephone center here at the Capitol with its splendid operators who take our impatient and important telephone calls. Also the Clerk of the House, the able Parliamentarian, the timekeeper of speeches and the RECORD clerks, the Doorkeeper, Mr. Miller and our Republican Assistant Doorkeeper: I thank the gentleman for mentioning that. I would like to have inserted in the RECORD the names of everyone who serves us in any capacity here in the Capitol. I realize that this Congress has caused heartaches which I hope will be eased and problems to be solved.

There have been many disappointments with the victories. Things have happened that are hard to take. As the old Quaker said, "Everybody is a little queer but thee and me and even thee sometimes is a little queer." And sometimes when we do not secure our legislation, we think "thee is a little queer."

But we praise the fine character of the men and women Members of this Congress—the greatest legislative body in the world. There is no politics in the friendships of the Congress.

FARM LEGISLATION

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CHRISTOPHER] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. Mr. Speaker, I only want to say to that farmer's friend from Minnesota, Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN, who spoke about the farm situation very recently here, he is one of the men who worked for and fought for and voted for one of the best pieces of farm legislation that has been brought to the floor of this House in a number of years. I am of the opinion that, perhaps, the reason the Democrats are so discouraged about bringing up good farm legislation is that no matter how good it is, if it is administered by a Secretary of Agriculture who does not believe in the legislation and who seeks to sabotage it no matter how good it is, it will not be effective. I just want to remind the Members of the House that the piece of legislation I refer to, which the gentleman from Minnesota and many others of us worked so hard for is H. R. 12. It was vetoed by a member of the Eisenhower-Benson team—President Eisenhower himself. That discouraged me and I think it discouraged a lot of other Members also.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. With all due respect to my friend the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN] and I agree with what the gentleman from Missouri said about the gentleman from Minnesota, but when the gentleman from Minnesota tried to blame both parties, of course, that is not tenable because we put a really effective bill through the House and it was vetoed. Of course, we know and everybody knows that any Democratic legislation which is opposed by Secretary Benson and President Eisenhower is going to be vetoed. They have done it before and we know that he would do it in the future. The responsibility rests clearly upon the Republican administration, President Eisenhower and Secretary Benson for the farm situation that exists.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. That is true but I want to make it very plain that I admire the gentleman from Minnesota for the stand he took because it is so difficult being a Republican.

Mr. McCORMACK. And so do I and I said that, but when it comes to the responsibility of the parties that is where I disagree.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. I agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts wholeheartedly. When the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] voted for H. R. 12 only 20 other Republicans voted with him, so, while he was right, the vast majority of his party were wrong. I invite any Member of the House, who is interested in some figures that I consider startling, to examine the extension of my remarks which I will put in the RECORD today. They deal with income taxes paid by farmers from 1932 to the present time and with the income of farmers.

I have tried to serve on this floor without becoming a nuisance.

Mr. HOSMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. I yield.

Mr. HOSMER. I would not like the RECORD to close without at least indicating that all that the gentleman says in a laudatory fashion respecting H. R. 12 has been subject to considerable debate. I think there is considerable question with respect to how that legislation might have been received.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. I wish I had time to tell the gentleman from California just what that legislation was and how effective it had been from 1933 to 1952, because it is exactly what we had over most of those 20 years.

Mr. HOSMER. I would remind the gentleman that in the nonfarming areas of this country there is considerable explaining that he would have to do in order to convince the consumer portion of our population that they are not in effect subsidizing the agricultural producers of the Nation.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. I suggest to the gentleman that he go into the cities and try to explain to them why it is that food is so much higher now than it was when the farmer was receiving 100 percent of parity instead of 80 percent that he is getting now. If he can do that, he is some explainer.

Mr. GUBSER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. I yield.

Mr. GUBSER. Throughout my entire life until I came to Congress my daily bread came from the farm. I am proud to say that today I am an active farmer. I represent one of the richest farm areas in the United States. I may say to you that almost unanimously the farmers in my area, including myself, are opposed to the give-away piece of legislation for the benefit of farmers alone. We feel we are independent operators. We want to hold up our heads and make our way without the Government doing it for us. We as farmers oppose H. R. 12.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. The Democratic Party has never passed, in all the 20 years, from the inauguration of Franklin D. Roosevelt up to the present Administration, a piece of give-away legislation. Every dollar that the Federal Government has expended on farm programs over the 20 years of Democratic rule from 1932 to 1952 came back into the Treasury of the United States and brought another dollar with it in the form of income taxes paid by agriculture that never could have been paid had the income of farmers remained where it was in 1932. There is no one within the sound of my voice who can deny that.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. I yield.

Mr. MORRIS. I have the impression from talking to people that people are paying more for food today and the farmer is getting less for it.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. That is true.

Mr. MORRIS. In other words, the farmer gets less under this Administration. I understand there was an election the other day in Wisconsin.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. I heard about that.

Now I might just as well give you a few figures, since I have stirred up a hornet's nest. In 1932 the farmers paid only $5 million in income taxes. By 1947 they multiplied that $5 million by 217 and paid $1,085 million income tax. By 1952 they had multiplied that $5 million by 273 and paid $1,365 million in income taxes.

By 1955 after only 2 years of Ike and Ezra that had fallen to a thousand and seventy-five million, $1,075,000,000. Over the last 3 years, from 1952 to 1955, it has gone down by $290 million a year. So the Treasury gets nicked, the farmer gets nicked, the consumer gets nicked; under the Eisenhower-Benson program nobody wins.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. I yield.

Mr. JENSEN. The gentleman knows, of course, that he and I have seen eye to eye on farm legislation, and I think the gentleman is right; so the thinking of the gentleman is right, I must be right. But I am quite astonished when the gentleman stands on the floor of the House and attempts to put the blame on the Republican Party for this great increase in taxes which the farmer and the rest of us must pay.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. I am not blaming the Republican Party for the increase in taxes. I am praising the Democratic farm programs for making it possible for the farmer to have a net income to pay taxes on.

Mr. JENSEN. The gentleman has given that impression.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. The gentleman has misunderstood me entirely.

Mr. JENSEN. The gentleman has given that impression.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. I did not intend to give that impression.

Mr. JENSEN. As news goes out over the country and the gentleman's speech is read, everybody will get that impression.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. I do not believe they would if they understood the situation.

Mr. JENSEN. No, they would not, if they would just stop to realize that because of all these wars they must pay more taxes. Certainly the gentleman is not going to accuse and blame the Republican Party for getting us into those wars.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. Farmers paid only $5 million in income tax in 1932 because the per capita income of farm people from farming at that time was only $91.

I will say to the gentleman from Iowa that he missed my point entirely. Democratic farm programs made the farmer able to pay an income tax, and he paid it as he should have.

But under Republican administrations he pays less and less income tax because his net income gets less and less. It has always been that way and it is so today.

Mr. JENSEN. I think the gentleman will agree with me when I say the farmers of America should be complimented no end. They did a good job during the war; they always have done a good job. Word went out from Washington—it was not just a word, it was a command: Produce. Produce. Produce. They did, and they did that great job of production with 3 million young farmers in the service of the United States all over this world.

Today the American people are spending less than 26 percent of their income for food. The rest of the world at this very minute is spending over 65 percent of their income, on an average, for food. We talk about the high cost of living in America; we had better reflect for a moment how well off we are in America because of this unduly low-cost food we have.

It is true the American farmer gets only 40 cents out of every dollar we spend for food. The reason is that every step between the growing of the food by the farmer and its purchase by the ultimate consumer has increased in cost—transportation, labor, taxes—everything has gone up.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. Do not forget interest, now; let us have that too.

Mr. JENSEN. Interest; that is right, that is right; and let us remind the folks also that nobody in the retail food business is getting rich overnight these days with the terrific cost of doing business. They are holding their prices down as much as they possibly can in competition, and the competition is tough. Let us not be too hard on these folks. They must charge these prices for the food the American people consume, yet it is still the cheapest food in the world.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. But those same people were processing and distributing the food when the farmer was receiving 100 percent of parity, and food was cheaper then than it is now. There is a dead Ethiopian in the woodpile somewhere if we could unearth him.

Mr. JENSEN. The whole blame, of course, should not be placed upon the Republican Party. The gentleman comes from the Middle West.

You know, both committees of Congress, both agricultural committees of Congress, are controlled by the southerners. They have the great majority on those committees and they do not care much about the hog, cattle, or grain farmer. That has been shown in every act that those committees have performed for many, many years.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. Mr. Speaker, I have never taken 10 minutes' or 15 minutes' time on the floor of the House that 1, 4, or 6 Republicans have not come down to the well of the House and attempted to use up every minute of my time. You are still running true to form. I can stand here and yield for an hour to the Republicans. They either do not want to hear me talk or they do not like to hear the truth, because they come down here and take up my time.

Mr. JENSEN. We want to straighten the gentleman out.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. I refuse to yield any further.

Mr. JENSEN. Will the gentleman let me make one further statement?

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. Yes.

Mr. JENSEN. I would not have asked the gentleman to yield, but, when he took the floor, he said, "I have 15 minutes, but I think 1 minute will do."

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. The gentleman from Iowa either does not want to see the point or simply refuses to, I have no way of knowing which, but the facts are that in 1933 the average per capita net income for farmers from farming was an unbelievable $91, but 20 years later, in 1952, because of commodity loans, price supports, and other farm programs, the per capita net farm income had become $675.

Of course, when farm people had a net farm income of only $91 on the average they paid very little income taxes because they had practically nothing to tax, but as Democratic farm programs increased their earning power it was reflected in the taxes paid into the Federal Treasury.

Income taxes are tied directly to net income, and that is the reason farmers paid only $5 million in income taxes in 1932, but $1,365 million in 1952. Between 1952 and the beginning of 1957, the American farmers' net income was $20 billion less than it would have been had their prices remained at 100 percent of parity as prices had been for the 11 years preceding 1952. Under Democratic programs that began in 1933, conceived by farm experts under the able leadership of that great President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, the parity ratio stood at 58 percent. By 1942 that ratio was raised to 105 percent and remained above 100 percent until the Eisenhower-Benson team took over in 1953.

Those were the same Democratic programs that we sought to extend in H. R. 12—the programs that had lifted the farmers out of the depths of the depression, raised their parity ratio from 58 percent to more than 100, and kept prices there for 11 consecutive years at no net cost whatever to the Federal Treasury because as farmers' incomes were raised, so their income taxes came up automatically.

Since the beginning of the Eisenhower-Benson era, farmers have seen their parity ratio sink from 100 to 80 percent. They have lost $12 billion in net income, $3.7 billion in inventory value of livestock on American farms and ranches, and the Treasury has lost $290 million per year in agricultural income taxes as compared to what farmers were paying in 1952.

The period of 1943 to 1947 is considered by the Department of Labor as the base period for establishing the cost-of-living index, and the average of those 3 years equals 100. The cost-of-living index now stands more than 20 percent above the cost of living of the base period. During the base period farm prices were at or above 100 percent of parity.

The average working family in the United States spends 45 percent of the budget for food, and although farmers are receiving only 80 percent of parity, food is costing the consumers more than when farmers received 100 percent of parity.

Now here are a few facts from my home State of Missouri—farm products produced in Missouri were worth $96.9 million less in 1956 than they were in 1947, 1948, and 1949, averaged. There are 114 counties in the State and the $96.9 million loss in farm purchasing power divided by the number of counties in the State reveals that farmers in each county had $850,000 less income in 1956 under Eisenhower and Benson than they had in each of the years 1947, 1948, 1949, under President Truman and Secretary Brannon.

The Department of Commerce reports that farmers spend 70 percent of their income for material and supplies, retail; therefore, it is evident that the merchants, businessmen, and professional people in each Missouri county found their customers who resided on farms with more than one-half million less to spend with them each year than they would have had, had farm prices remained where they were under Truman and Brannan.

We all realize that conditions are bad and getting worse, but the question arises "What are we going to do about it?" I would say that the State of Wisconsin had set a noble example last Tuesday for the people of the United States to follow.

A Democratic administration has always meant reasonable interest rates, adequate credit, parity prices for farm products, and a Government of all the people, by all the people in the interest of all the people.

A Republican administration has always meant high interest rates, tight credit, stock market bursting through the ceiling, disaster farm prices, tax cuts and fast writeoffs for the supremely rich and giant corporations, and it would seem from what happened in Wisconsin that even Republicans in that rock-ribbed Republican State who have not sent a Democratic Senator to Washington since Franklin Roosevelt defeated Herbert Hoover in 1932, are beginning to realize these facts and have voted accordingly. The great Democratic victory in Wisconsin is an indication of other great Democratic victories to come in 1958 and 1960. "Now learn a parable of the fig tree; when his branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is nigh."

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

RECESS

The SPEAKER. The Chair declares the House to be in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 46 minutes p. m.), the House stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker at 3 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.

S. J. Res. 131. Joint resolution authorizing the President to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to commemorate with appropriate ceremonies the 100th anniversary of the admission of the State of Oregon into the Union.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 1007. An act for the relief of Sgt. Donald L. Coleman; and

S. 1636. An act for the relief of Delfina Cinco de Lopez.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 6322) entitled "An act to provide that the dates for submission of plan for future control of property and transfer of the property of the Menominee Tribe shall be delayed," disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. NEUBERGER, Mr. CHURCH, and Mr. WATKINS to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1791) entitled "An act to further amend the Reorganization Act of 1949, as amended, so that such act will apply to reorganization plans transmited to the Congress at any time before June 1, 1959."

COMMODITY CREDIT

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 2486) to authorize the Commodity Credit Corporation to grant relief with respect to claims arising out of deliveries of eligible surplus feed grains on ineligible dates in connection with purchase orders under its emergency feed program, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, and the Senate amendment as follows:

Page 2, lines 7 and 8, strike out "12 months from the date the purchase order was issued to the farmer" and insert "6 months from the expiration date of the purchase order issued to the farmer."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the minority leader indicated to me that there would be no new business brought up in the way of concurrence in Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Chair believes the gentleman is mistaken.

The minority leader told the Chair when he left that he would object to any Senate bill being brought up that had not been acted on by the House committee. That is as far as he went with me.

Mr. KEATING. The Speaker may be entirely correct; I may have misunderstood him. May I ask whether this has been acted upon by the House committee?

Mr. POAGE. Certainly. It was acted on by the House committee by unanimous vote of the House committee and unanimous vote of the House.

Mr. KEATING. Has the amendment made by the Senate received the approval of the House Committee on Agriculture?

Mr. POAGE. No, the amendment has not. The amendment simply reduces the period of the House bill from 1 year down to 6 months.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood that this was cleared with the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. POAGE. I did confer with the gentleman from Iowa less than 30 minutes ago, and he agreed that it was perfectly all right to bring it up.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Unless the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SMITH] takes different action, there is nothing to yield to.

Objection is heard.

TARIFF TREATMENT OF ISTLE OR TAMPICO FIBER

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 7096) to amend paragraph 1684 of the Tariff Act of 1930 with respect to istle or Tampico fiber, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The bill was introduced by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS]. I am simply making this request in his behalf.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments as follows:

After line 8, insert:

"SEC. 2. The amendments made by the first section of this act shall apply only in the case of articles entered for consumption, or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption, during the 3-year period beginning on the day following the date of the enactment of this act."

After line 8, insert:

"SEC. 3. (a) Except as provided in section 4 of this act, no tariff or customs duty shall apply with respect to a beta-ray spectrometer, complete, consisting of a magnet unit, motor-generator set, and control rack, which is entered or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption by Stanford University, Stanford, Calif., for use at such university in connection with research for the Office of Naval Research and the Alfred P. Sloan Foundation, Inc., New York, N. Y.

"(b) Subsecion (a) shall apply whether such beta-ray spectrometer is entered, or withdrawn from warehouse, for consumption before, on, or after the date of the enactment of this act. If the liquidation of such entry or withdrawal has become final, such entry or withdrawal may be reliquidated and the appropriate refund of duty may be made."

After line 8, insert:

"SEC. 4. Section 3 of this act shall apply only so long as title to the beta-ray spectrometer entered or withdrawn free of duty under such section is vested in Standford University. In the event that title to such spectrometer becomes vested in any other person after such entry or withdrawal, such spectrometer shall become subject to all duties imposed thereon by the revenue laws in force on the date on which such title becomes so vested. Such duties shall be assessed according to the appraised value on the date on which such title becomes so vested, with due allowance made for depreciation from handling and use.

"SEC. 5. (a) Section 201 of the Tariff Act of 1930 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"'PAR. 1822. Yarns, wholly or in chief value of wool, dyed and cut into uniform lengths not exceeding 3 inches, in immediate packages or containers not exceeding 6 ounces in weight, including the weight of the immediate package or container.'

"(b) The amendment made by this section shall apply only in the case of articles entered for consumption, or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption, on and after the day following the date of enactment of this act."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to amend paragraph 1684 of the Tariff Act of 1930 with respect to istle or Tampico fiber, to admit free of duty a beta-ray spectrometer for use at Stanford University, Stanford, Calif., and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD and immediately following my remarks that the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] may extend his remarks on this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, in the form in which H. R. 7096 passed the House of Representatives, it would have transferred dressed or manufactured istle or Tampico from the dutiable to the free list of the Tariff Act of 1930.

The Senate has added three substantive amendments to the bill, which I will briefly describe as follows:

First, the Senate adopted an amendment limiting the free importation of istle or Tampico fiber to a period of 3 years rather than transferring it to the duty-free list. The Senate Finance Committee report stated that this amendment was adopted so that there might be a testing period and to provide for future Congressional scrutiny. The report further stated that the 3-year limitation was adopted without prejudice in the event further extensions are deemed advisable.

Second, the bill was amended so as to provide for the free importation of a beta-ray spectrometer for the use of Stanford University in the field of research. The Senate Finance Committee report stated that, inasmuch as the study and research of ultrashort rays is valuable to the health and scientific advancement to the country as a whole, and inasmuch as a part of this research is provided for by grants and contributions, that free importation might be provided for in this case. The Committee on Ways and Means had bills pending before it on this subject.

Third, a Senate amendment would permit duty-free importation of certain dyed wool yarn cut in uniform lengths not to exceed 3 inches and wrapped in individual packages not to exceed 6 ounces in weight. These yarns are specially designed for use in making hand-hooked rugs which are essentially produced by individuals either for personal use or for gifts and it is understood that these yarns are often used by invalids and other shut-ins in the manufacture of such rugs. These yarns are presently classifiable under the catchall provisions of the Tariff Act for "manufactures, wholly or in chief value of wool, not specially provided for." The Senate Finance Committee report stated that no opposition from industry has been made known to this amendment, and that domestic woolgrowers and manufacturers of wool products agree that the purpose of the amendment is good and have no objection to its adoption.

Our distinguished colleague on the Committee on Ways and Means, the Honorable EUGENE J. MCCARTHY, has introduced a bill on this subject on which favorable reports were received from the departments concerned by the Committee on Ways and Means.

It is my understanding that this particular amendment will be of value to handicapped persons and to veterans and others who not only find hand weaving excellent therapy but also because it will provide them with some occupation and recreation which they might not otherwise enjoy.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I have concurred in the request made by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER] that the House agree to the Senate amendments to H. R. 7096. This legislation as it passed the House had as its purpose the transfer of dressed or manufactured istle or Tampico from the dutiable to the free list for tariff purposes. The Senate amendments to this legislation would provide for a 3-year suspension of the duty on istle or Tampico instead of transferring this article to the free list.

In addition, the Senate amended the bill to provide for the free importation of a beta-ray spectrometer for the use by Stanford University.

Another Senate amendment would permit duty-free importation of certain wool yarn used in making hand-hooked rugs.

I have supported the House action in approving this legislation as amended by the Senate.

ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMISSION TO COMMEMORATE HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF CIVIL WAR

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, on behalf of the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCK], to take from the Speaker's table the resolution (H. J. Res. 253) to establish a commission to commemorate the 100th anniversary of the Civil War, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

SOCIAL SECURITY AMENDMENTS OF 1958

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. FORAND] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. FORAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks, and include certain tables.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Rhode Island?

There was no objection.

Mr. FORAND. Mr. Speaker, on August 27, I introduced a bill to increase the benefits payable under the Federal old-age, survivors, and disability insurance program and to provide insurance against the costs of hospital, nursing home, and surgical service for persons eligible for old-age and survivors insurance benefits. My purpose in introducing the measure this week was to permit my colleagues in the Congress and individuals and groups to give the proposals thorough study in the period before the opening of the next session of Congress in January.

To facilitate such thorough study I am now presenting material which further explains the contents of H. R. 9467 and gives some of the reasons for its introduction.

I am gratified that President George Meany of the AFL–CIO has endorsed my proposed amendments as necessary, sound and enlightened. As he points out, the AFL–CIO has long urged many of these proposals.

Other important groups and many individuals have also indicated their interest in higher cash benefits and in insurance provisions to cover hospital costs and other health benefits for OASI beneficiaries. The American Public Welfare Association, for example, in its 1957 Federal legislative objectives states:

> Study should be given to ways of meeting the medical and hospital care costs of old-age, survivors, and disability insurance beneficiaries through the insurance program.

Evidence on the need for higher cash benefits and for better methods of meeting medical costs of the aged is steadily accumulating. Early in the next session I hope to present an analysis of such evidence based on the current situation and the latest available studies.

The proposed amendments relating to health benefits for OASI beneficiaries deserve special attention. I shall welcome information and comments that might make them still more effective. They are based on much recent experience under private and public programs but their present details are not necessarily the best that can be drafted or the final ones that I shall support.

While this bill would bring substantial improvements to many millions of Americans, its provisions are modest. They have been limited deliberately to facilitate enactment of this much-needed measure in 1958. They deal with social insurance only. My proposals for improvements in public assistance are dealt with in a separate bill introduced earlier this session.

Some have asked why H. R. 9467 does not provide broader protection for the aged and others, for example, through paying for more days of hospital care in 1 year. All such proposals for liberalization, some of which appear in bills introduced by other Members, will undoubtedly be considered by the House Ways and Means Committee and can be judged in the light of their merits and with due consideration to their probable cost.

GENERAL SUMMARY

H. R. 9467 would increase cash monthly benefits about 10 percent on the average through a liberalized benefit formula for future beneficiaries and through a table to raise benefits for persons now on the rolls. A single individual or a family unit now receiving benefits would receive at least $5 more each month. In addition, the principle of relating benefits to earnings would be reapplied by increasing the earnings ceiling for contribution and benefit purposes from $4,200 to $6,000 a year. This would partly offset the lag of benefits behind earnings levels and would help to finance other improvements.

For a person with average monthly earnings of $200 the new primary insurance amount would be $85.80 instead of $78.50. With a $6,000 wage base ceiling, the maximum individual benefit would become $151.80 instead of $108.50.

Cellings on family benefits would be adapted to these changes by increasing the lowest family maximum to $55—instead of $50—and the highest to $305—instead of $200. Even at the new maximum, however, family benefits would equal only 61 percent of average monthly earnings.

Through another dropout provision on calculation of benefits, one additional year in which a person had no earnings or low earnings could be omitted for each 7 years in which he worked in covered employment. These dropout years would be in addition to the 5 years that may now be dropped. Thus persons covered from 1937 could by 1958 drop 3 additional years.

This change would result in the new earnings base being reflected in benefits of persons retiring in the near future. Otherwise persons would be paying contributions on earnings up to $6,000 with too little immediate return.

The new program of health benefits would cover the cost of certain hospital, nursing home, and surgical services for persons receiving old-age and survivors insurance benefits and for persons who would be eligible for OASI benefits if they applied. This new type of program would be paid for through contributions to the OASI Trust Fund. It is appropriate that this additional needed protection should be provided within the framework of the national system firmly established as the American way of providing workers and their families with protection against the hazards of income loss due to old age, disability or death.

This health program would be of great assistance to aged persons and to widowed mothers of young children who now have great difficulty obtaining private insurance and are too often overwhelmed by the expense of illness. They would be entitled to 60 days of hospital care and to subsequent skilled nursing home care, up to a combined total of 120 days in a 12-month period. The cost of their surgical care would also be covered, with free choice of qualified doctors. Much suffering would be avoided, and hospitals and public and private assistance agencies would be relieved of a substantial burden.

According to the best available estimates, this bill would add about 1 percent of payrolls to present level premium costs. Contribution rates for employer and employee would therefore be increased by one-half percent each in 1959, and the self-employed would pay three-fourths percent more on their incomes up to $6,000. The increase in contributions now scheduled for 1960 would be postponed to 1961.

These proposals are discussed in more detail in the following sections under three main heads:

First. Health benefits for OASI beneficiaries.

Second. Improved cash benefits.

Third. Financing.

1. HEALTH BENEFITS FOR OASI BENEFICIARIES

The purpose of this new type of program, set forth in section 106 of H. R. 9467, is to provide aged persons and their dependents insured under old-age and survivors insurance and the survivors of deceased persons so insured, with insurance protection against the cost of hospitalization, subsequent skilled nursing home care, and surgical services; to achieve such insurance protection within the framework of the national system of old-age and survivors insurance; and to assure adequate and prompt payments to the physicians, hospitals, and nursing homes for services rendered to these individuals, utilizing the cooperation of voluntary nonprofit health associations when such cooperation will contribute to efficient and economical operation.

The program is proposed because, one, the present old-age and survivors insurance benefits are inadequate to meet the needs of insured aged persons and their dependents, and of the survivors of deceased insured persons, who require hospitalization and skilled nursing home care; two, many of them are not able to obtain, to continue, or to pay for private insurance against the cost of such care which is more expensive for such individuals than employed groups; three, many of them are forced to apply for public assistance to meet hospitalization, surgical, and nursing home costs; four, many hospitals are constantly confronted with serious financial difficulties resulting from unpaid services furnished to these individuals; and five, it is in the interest of the general welfare for financial burdens resulting from the hospital, nursing home, and surgical services required by these individuals to be relieved through old-age and survivors insurance rather than through expenditures financed from general tax revenues.

Through relying on the insurance program, the bill would work in the direction preferred by the Congress.

ELIGIBILITY FOR INSURANCE

The bill provides for the payment of certain hospital, nursing home, and surgical costs for persons receiving old-age or survivors insurance benefits and for persons who would be eligible for such benefits if they applied. Twelve or thirteeen million persons would thus receive the protection of such payments in the first year.

Whether or not they retired, men would be protected at age 65 if they had made sufficient contributions in covered employment or self-employment. Women would similarly be eligible at age 62 without having to take the actuarial reduction in benefits provided in present law. We have deliberately included persons who have not yet retired for several reasons. It is undesirable that aged persons should feel they have to stop working to receive the benefits of this program since their services will still prove constructive and since retirement may bring undesirable consequences. For the self-employed, retirement cannot be properly planned when illness has struck, so that a requirement that they retire before receiving these health benefits would involve great difficulties.

DURATION OF SERVICES COVERED

Up to 120 days of combined hospital and skilled nursing home services could be paid for in a 12-month period, but not more than 60 of these days could be days of hospital service.

HOSPITAL SERVICES

Hospital services which would be paid for include the services, drugs, appliances, and medical care ordinarily furnished by the hospital to its bed patients. The insurance would cover semiprivate accommodations if available unless other accommodations are required for medical reasons—in short, those services ordinarily provided in plans such as the Blue Cross. Such services would be covered when provided by a licensed hospital which had entered into an agreement with the Secretary except that the costs would not be paid for care in: any tuberculosis or mental hospital; any Federal hospital, or any other hospital for hospital services which it is obligated by contract with the United States to furnish at the expense of the United States; or any hospital furnishing services at public expense, except when a person receiving such services must meet a means test.

NURSING HOME SERVICES

Nursing home services which would be paid for include the skilled nursing care, related medical and personal services and accompanying bed and board provided by a licensed nursing home which is operated in connection with a hospital or in which a person licensed to practice medicine or surgery in the State prescribes or directs the nursing care and medical services provided. Services provided by a nursing home would be covered by the insurance provided by the bill only if the individual has been transferred to the nursing home from the hospital on a doctor's certification that the services are necessary for an illness or condition connected with that for which the hospital was treating him.

SURGICAL SERVICES

Surgical services which would be paid for include those provided in a hospital and which are certified as necessary by a licensed physician. Oral surgery would be included when provided in a hospital and certified as necessary by a licensed physician or dentist. Surgical services provided in the outpatient department of a hospital or in a doctor's office would be included in case of an emergency or for minor surgery.

MEDICAL AND HOSPITAL SERVICES UNDER WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION

Payment would not be made under these provisions for services required by reason of any injury, disease, or disability on account of which such services are being received or paid for under a workmen's compensation law or plan of the United States or of any State.

AGREEMENTS WITH HOSPITALS, NURSING HOMES, AND PROVIDERS OF SURGICAL SERVICES

Any hospital—other than a tuberculosis or mental hospital—or qualified nursing home licensed pursuant to the law of the State in which it is located would be eligible to enter into an agreement for payment from the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund for the cost of hospital or nursing home services furnished to qualified individuals in accordance with the provisions of this bill. Each agreement would cover hospital services to be included and the basis for payment. The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare would enter into agreements with qualified providers of surgical services, either individually or with any association or organization authorized by the surgeons, physicians, or dentists to act on their behalf. These agreements would provide that the rate of payment agreed on would constitute full payment for services.

NO CONTROL OVER INSTITUTIONS OR PHYSICIANS

Nothing in the provisions of the bill or in agreements with hospitals, nursing homes, or physicians shall be construed to give the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare supervision or control over, first, the practice of medicine or the manner in which medical services are provided; second, the details of administration or operation of hospitals or nursing homes; or third, the selection, tenure, or compensation of hospital or nursing home personnel.

FREE CHOICE BY PATIENT

A person who qualifies for hospitalization, nursing-home services, or surgical services could select any qualified hospital or nursing home which has entered into an agreement and which admits him, provided he has been referred by a physician licensed by the State in which he resides or in which the hospital or nursing home is located. A person eligible for surgical services could freely select the surgeon of his choice, provided that the surgeon must be certified by the American Board of Surgery or must be a member of the American College of Surgeons (except in cases of emergency where the life of the patient would be endangered by delay or in cases where certification is not feasible for other reasons). This exception would make it possible for surgical services to be covered in rural areas where the types of surgeons mentioned are not available. In cases of oral surgery an eligible person could select a duly licensed dentist.

PAYMENT TO HOSPITALS AND NURSING HOMES

Methods of determining payments to hospitals and nursing homes would be similar to those already developed in connection with many private insurance plans and certain Government programs.

The amount of the payments to any hospital or nursing home would be determined on the basis of the reasonable cost incurred by the hospital or nursing home for all bed patients, or, when use of such a basis is impractical for the hospital or nursing home or inequitable to the institution or to the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund, on a reasonably equivalent basis which takes account of pertinent factors with respect to the services furnished to those persons for whom payment is made in accordance with the provisions of the bill.

PAYMENTS TO PHYSICIANS AND DENTISTS

The rates of payments to physicians and dentists would be set forth in the agreements, and such payments made would constitute full payment for the surgical services provided.

UTILIZATION OF PRIVATE NONPROFIT ORGANIZATIONS

To the extent that satisfactory agreements can be made and to the extent that the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare determines that the effective and economical administration of these provisions will be furthered, the bill provides that the Secretary may utilize the services of private nonprofit organizations which represent qualified providers of hospital, nursing home, or surgical services or which operate voluntary insurance plans under which agreements, similar to those provided by these provisions, are made with hospitals, nursing homes, and physicians for paying for the costs of services. The services of these organizations would be specifically limited.

ADMINISTRATION BY SECRETARY OF HEALTH, EDUCATION, AND WELFARE

The program is to be administered by the Secretary of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. The OASDI system would use its existing recordkeeping system to certify eligibility to issue insurance cards, and the like. The Secretary would prescribe regulations under which the provisions of the program would be carried out.

ADVISORY COUNCIL

The Secretary would consult with a National Advisory Health Council. This Council would consist of the Commissioner of Social Security and eight members appointed by the Secretary. Four of the appointed members would be persons who are outstanding in fields pertaining to hospital and health activities and four would be appointed to represent the consumers of hospital, nursing home, and surgical services and be familiar with the need for such services by eligible groups.

EFFECTIVE DATE

The bill provides that payment for hospital, nursing home, or surgical services, in accordance with these provisions, would be made for such services which are furnished on and after the first day of the 12th calendar month after the month in which this act is enacted.

2. IMPROVED CASH BENEFITS

The nature of the changes in cash benefits has already been outlined in the general summary of the bill. Specific changes that would be received by future beneficiaries are shown on tables 1 and 2.

The increases for future beneficiaries shown in the tables are accompanied by amendments raising benefits for persons now on the rolls and providing for additional years of dropout.

The major changes, with reasons for them, are further described below.

INCREASE IN THE EARNINGS FORMULA

For years after 1958 wages and self-employment income up to $6,000 would be used in calculating benefits and contributions. The limitation in present law for years after 1954 is $4,200.

One of the basic principles of OASI has been to relate benefit amounts to past earnings so as to reward greater output, foster individual incentives, and permit beneficiaries to continue to live at something like the levels to which they were accustomed. The original earnings ceiling of $3,000 was as high as the full earnings of 97 percent of all workers in covered employment when the program was getting started. Now the corresponding figure, even with the ceiling of $4,200, is only 72 percent. For men with earnings in four quarters, the lag is more striking. Only 2 out of 5 will earn less than $4,200 in 1958 and 1 out of 4 will earn $6,000 or more. Thus for a majority of men who are regularly employed, the present ceiling puts a dead stop to further benefit increases no matter how much their earnings rise.

The present maximum benefit of $108.50 is 31 percent of average monthly earnings of $350. The person with $500 average monthly earnings can receive at most 21.7 percent as his primary insurance amount.

[2] Both aged 65 or over; benefits less in cases where wives are aged 62–64.

[3] As limited by the present maximum of 80 percent of average monthly earnings.

NEW BENEFITS FORMULA

The new benefit formula would be 60 percent of the first $110 of average monthly earnings plus 22 percent of the next $390, with provision of a minimum primary insurance amount of $35. The formula now is 55 percent of the first $110 of average monthly earnings plus 20 percent for the next $240.

The proposed change, directed at increasing benefits 10 percent on the average, follows earlier provisions in giving larger percentage increases at the lowest levels. For persons with $100 to $350 of average monthly earnings, benefits would be increased from 9.1 percent to 9.5 percent. At the highest levels, the new earnings ceiling of $6,000, in combination with the formula, would yield larger increases reflecting increased contributions.

MAXIMUM FAMILY BENEFITS

The ceiling on the amount payable to a family would be adapted to the above changes by increasing the lowest family maximum to $55—instead of $50—and the highest to $305—instead of $200.

This change follows existing precedents for putting limits on the benefits that one family can receive on the basis of a single earnings record no matter how many persons in the family are entitled to benefits.

With various exceptions resulting from increases provided in 1954 and earlier for beneficiaries already on the rolls, 4 main limits are imposed at present, becoming progressively less generous in relation to average monthly earnings as such earnings rise:

A. For persons with very low average monthly earnings, family benefits are not reduced below $50 a month.

B. For average monthly earnings up to $110, family benefits are limited to 1½ times the individual's primary insurance amount. Under the present formula, families in this group may receive up to 82½ percent of average monthly earnings—55 percent times 1½ equals 82½ percent.

C. For the next highest group, with earnings up to $250 a month, the applicable limit is 80 percent of average monthly earnings, so that the effective maximum rises from $108 for average monthly earnings of $135 up to $200 for average monthly earnings of $250.

D. Above $250, no further increase in family maximums is permitted—the flat $200 limit applies no matter how high the earnings. As a result, at the present top figure of $350 for average monthly earnings, the maximum for a family is only 57 percent of that amount.

The proposed increase in the earnings ceiling to $6,000 requires a substantial increase in the top maximum of $200 in order that persons with high levels of earnings may have the protection of family benefit totals that are not too low in relation to earnings and contributions. The proposed figure of $305 is equal to 2 times the maximum primary insurance amount, rounded to the nearest $5. This ratio is comparable to actual ratios enacted in the past—1.88 in 1950, 1.99 in 1952, 1.84 in 1954. The new figure of $305 would permit maximum family benefits equal to 61 percent of average monthly earnings at the $500 level.

In view of the objective of increasing benefits 10 percent on the average, with a $5 guaranteed increase, it seems reasonable to raise the ceiling for families at the lowest levels by $5, making it $55 a month.

The bill would not specify any changes in the basic provisions for maximums effective in steps B and C described above. The increase in the primary insurance amount provided under the new formula for persons with earnings up to $110 would automatically raise the family maximum applicable to them—step B.

SPECIAL PROVISIONS FOR PEOPLE NOW ON THE BENEFIT ROLLS

Included in the bill is a table of new benefit values to be used to increase the benefit amounts of people on the benefit rolls when the bill becomes effective. The table guarantees an increase of at least $5 over the primary insurance amount computed under the provisions of the law now in effect.

The increases in the primary insurance amount would range from a minimum of $5 at the lower levels to a maximum of $10.30 for persons receiving the present maximum benefit of $108.50. Other provisions assure that each family unit receives at least a $5 increase in benefits even though they are already affected by the limitation of family benefits to 80 percent of average monthly earnings. A similar provision was enacted in 1954.

DROPPING OUT ADDITIONAL YEARS OF LOW EARNINGS

The present law provides that up to 5 years of low earnings may be omitted in computing the average monthly earnings on which the benefit amount is based if the omission results in a higher benefit. The bill authorizes dropping 1 additional year of low earnings from the benfit computation for each 7 years—28 quarters of coverage—that a person has worked in covered employment or self-employment.

This change would make the $6,000 earnings ceiling fully effective for benefit purposes in the near future. Persons covered from 1937 could by 1959 drop 3 years in addition to the present 5.

Unless the effect of the new $6,000 ceiling were stepped up in this way or by some like device, no person reaching retirement age before 1997 could draw the new maximum primary insurance amount. For persons reaching retirement age in 1963, the actual maximum obtainable would be only 90.6 percent of the theoretical maximum, $151.80.

The dropout proposal follows patterns already enacted by Congress. For persons attaining retirement age in 1955–58, average monthly earnings are computed on the basis of the best 2 years, using the privilege of dropping out 5 years. The proposal of additional years of dropout would continue this 2-year basis through 1961 for persons covered each year after 1936. Such persons could then attain the new maximum in 1961, assuming the $6,000 ceiling becomes effective for 1959. Persons first covered in 1951 or later would have to wait longer but not as long as if no additional dropout were permitted.

It is reasonable to relate dropout to years of coverage since the latter reflect total contributions.

EFFECTIVE DATES

The provisions relating to benefit amounts would generally be effective for the months following the second month after enactment of the bill, and the higher earnings base would be effective for years after 1958.

3. FINANCING

The bill provides for increases in contribution rates to finance the improvements. According to the best available estimates, the improvements averaged over a long period of time, in the usual manner, would equal about 1 percent of payrolls on an intermediate cost assumption. Starting in 1959, contributions would therefore be increased by one-half percent each for employers and employees and three-fourths percent for the self-employed. The increase scheduled for 1960 would be postponed 1 year.

The new schedule would be:

Contribution for employers and employees

Calendar years:	Contribution rate for each (percent)
1959 to 1960, inclusive	2¾
1961 to 1964, inclusive	3¼
1965 to 1969, inclusive	3¾
1970 to 1974, inclusive	4¼
1975 and after	4¾

Contribution rate for self-employed persons

For taxable years beginning after—	Contribution rate (percent)
Dec. 31, 1958, and before Jan. 1, 1961	4⅛
Dec. 31, 1960, and before Jan. 1, 1965	4⅞
Dec. 31, 1964, and before Jan. 1, 1970	5⅝
Dec. 31, 1969, and before Jan. 1, 1975	6⅜
Dec. 31, 1974	7⅛

CONFORMING CHANGES

The bill also includes changes in the Internal Revenue Code to conform the code with the increase in the earnings base to $6,000, and an amendment to the Railroad Retirement Act to update references in that act to the Social Security Act so as to include the amendments that would be made by this bill.

These proposals represent my attempt to meet the areas of greatest need, and I commend the bill for study to my esteemed colleagues in the Congress. I trust that during the period when Congress is not in session, the many groups and individuals who have expressed interest in such improvements will likewise study my proposals and send me their comments.

POSTAL INCREASE AND FEDERAL WORKERS PAY BILLS

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I do not think we of the Congress are being very fair or courageous in sending to the President 2 days before adjournment the postal and other Federal workers pay bills.

In my judgment the need for these measures were well documented before Congressional committees and both the House and Senate passed the bills by preponderating, yes, overwhelming, votes.

Should we not be willing to stand up and be counted if the Chief Executive disagrees?

And it is timely also to insist that we are not exactly playing cricket in saying to the American people we just cannot pass a realistic postal rate bill this year—we are going to compel the Post Office Department to continue to operate on 1932 rates with 1957 costs. This means a loss of more than $6 billion dollars in the last 12 years.

Mr. JOHANSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. JOHANSEN. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service of the House, I would like to commend the statement made by the gentleman from New Jersey, and to associate myself with him.

IS THE HOUSE A RUBBERSTAMP?

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. Speaker, the New York Times of August 11, 1957, contained an article entitled "Is the House a Rubberstamp?" The article was written by Mr. Allen Drury, identified as a member of the Times Capitol Hill staff. Mr. Drury's approach to his topic is somewhat indirect. He does not in the article itself take full responsibility.

"It is said," he writes, "that the House is letting the innumerable demands of its constituents bog it down." Who says so? Members of the House? Members of the press covering the House of Representatives? Senators? Members of the press covering the Senate? "The idea is getting about," says Mr. Drury, "that the House is not carrying its weight in the present era of American Government." Getting about where? In the Senate? In the Press Gallery? In the Press Club? Mr. Drury does not say.

To pick a few random adjectives used by Mr. Drury, or by the "they" who are saying "it" in his report, "the House is sloppy, cursory in debate, buck passing, political, and fearful. Its Members are cantankerous, arbitrary, and supine." The House is characterized as manifesting an air of "conspicuous desuetude," and most of the ideas brought before the House come from a few minds, says Mr. Drury, and some of them are very tired.

The Senate in contrast is described in Mr. Drury's article as "responsible, sober, careful, a shield, and a coverup for the House. Senate proceedings, as distinguished from those in the House, are intelligent, and Senators, as distinguished from House Members, generally have guts." I might suggest that having read the Citadel, a rather visionary picture of the Senate of the United States painted by another Times reporter, Mr. William S. White, Mr. Drury is attempting to set off that picture in bolder relief, and trying to make the vision of Mr. White a reality—as some Senators are said to be trying to be what Mr. White said they are, and trying to make the Senate what Mr. White said it is.

What does the House have to say for itself? Its "stanch and outraged defenders"—Mr. Drury's language—demand "Don't we work expeditiously? Don't we ship legislation through in double time?" and then, says Mr. Drury, "they rattle off the standard figures on so many bills introduced, so many considered, so many passed, with an arch intimation that the gentlemen in what they always refer to as the other body are lagging far behind and are in every way inferior as spokesmen for 'the people.'" What, I ask the Times staffman, are these standard figures? Who has made them standard? What responsible Members of the House seriously use these statistics? And what of the arch intimation?

"House Members," says Mr. Drury, "are easily elected." Has Mr. Drury ever run for the House or participated in a campaign? "The House is made up of persons whose qualifications equip them perhaps," says Mr. Drury, "to be good businessmen or leaders of fraternal organizations, but do not equip them for the more sophisticated and thoughtful business of participating in national government." What is the significance of the "perhaps"? Is it that they may not even be qualified as good businessmen or as leaders of fraternal organizations? Biographies show that the background of Senators is essentially the same as that of House Members, and Mr. Drury should note that over one-third of the Members of the Senate were formerly Members of the House of Representatives. Let him explain the mysterious alchemy which transforms these men, incompetent and inadequate on the average while in the House, into able Senators. Or if there is not transformation, he should indicate the selective process which picks the able Members of the House and gets them elected to the Senate.

Members of the House are, according to Mr. Drury, under pressure from endless demands of an insatiable constituency, and under this pressure their values go "skew-gee"—whenever or whatever that may be. It should be noted that the same persons who are constituents of House Members are also constituents of Members of the Senate, and that the usual practice of a constituent in seeking help from a Member of Congress is to write to both his Representative and his Senator. As a result of this practice, a Senator from a State having 9 Congressional districts is likely to receive 9 demands for every 1 received by Members of the House of Representatives from that State.

"The civil rights bill roared through the House with a whoop and a holler under tight parliamentary restrictions," says Mr. Drury. In fact, House debate on the civil-rights bill lasted nearly 3 weeks, as even a cursory look at the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD would have shown to the Times reporter, and the bill was considered under an open rule allowing any germane amendment.

The foreign aid bill, intelligently trimmed in the Senate, was shredded to ribbons in the House, says Mr. Drury. What were the differences between the two bills? They were such that the conference report involves a compromise about halfway between the "intelligently trimmed" Senate bill and the "shredded to ribbons" House approved bill. This, I suppose, leaves the President with a bill which could properly be described in the language of Mr. Drury as "intelligently shredded," or, as a variation, "trimmed to ribbons," or better, "intelligently shredded to trimmed ribbons."

Mr. Drury speaks of the exaggerated power of the House Rules Committee. This is a great fiction and one which should be known to a Washington correspondent.

Mr. Drury singles out the field of appropriations for special note. "All very well," he says, with reference to the irresponsibility he attributes to the House, but what of appropriations for which the sole initial responsibility rests in the House of Representatives. The implication is clearly that the House of Representatives is irresponsible in this field also. I suggest that Mr. Drury make a careful study of the proceedings of the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives in this session of Congress, or in any other, and contrast its work with that of the Senate Appropriations Committee. Let him report which committee was most thorough, most attentive. Let him produce any Senator who has as much knowledge of what is in an appropriations bill as does the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], or the ranking Republican on the committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]. Let Mr. Drury explain why through the years the Senate votes consistently for more money than is provided in the House bills, especially when the appropriations are for special projects in public works. Why, for example, in the period from 1940 to 1955 has the Senate approved expenditures of over $500 million more than the House recommended for the Department of the Interior, and increases of more than $600 million above the House figures for civil functions projects of the Army engineers?

Let the Times reporter follow the hearings and committee work of the Ways and Means Committee on tax or tariff questions and contrast that work with the work of the Senate Finance Committee, or compare the work of the Armed Services Committee of the House and of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of the House with comparable committees in the Senate, for example.

The effectiveness of the House of Representatives, its organization and procedures, and the power relationship of the House and the Senate, as well as with the executive branch of the Government—all of these are important questions, deserving continuous study, but this study should be more objective and more informed than that given by the New York Times writer.

In the 167 years since the adoption of the Constitution there have been many changes in the Government of the United States, but certainly one of the most significant of these changes has been that of the shift in the power relationship of the House of Representatives and the Senate. While upper or second legislative bodies in other countries have declined in importance, some disappearing altogether, and others surviving as little more than symbols, the Senate of the United States has grown in power and in authority.

The first great impetus to an increase in Senate power arose out of the controversy leading up to the Civil War. After the war the Senate assumed more and more initiative in the introduction of legislation and became bolder in insisting on Senate modifications of legislation.

As governmental activities have expanded, the power of the Senate to confirm appointments both in the judiciary and in the executive offices has become increasingly important.

Similarly in the area of foreign affairs the Senate's power has increased as foreign policy has become more significant in our national life.

Along with the advantages derived from these historical changes, the Senate has had the help of a number of institutional advantages. The 6-year term in the Senate, plus the experience of its Members, and its continuity as a body, give it a stability and strength lacking in the House of Representatives. On a purely arithmetical basis, a Senator's vote on a legislative proposal is worth approximately four times that of the vote of a House Member. Senate rules and practices regarding committee assignments multiply this power. House Members are permitted to serve on only one major committee—Senators may serve on more than one. House committees usually have from 2 to 3 times as many members as do Senate committees. The importance of a single vote in a Senate committee of 15 is really more than twice as important as a single vote in a House committee of 30 members.

The House has undoubtedly limited its effectiveness somewhat by its own rules. Great debates today are the Senate debates. Debate in the House was effectively limited by rules changes brought about under Speaker Tom Reed in the last decade of the 19th century. These changes did prevent obstruction and delay in the general legislative process, but at the same time practically destroyed effective House debate. As a result, public interest, at least as reflected in the press, is generally concentrated not on what is said in House debate, but rather on the outcome of the vote.

The important consideration is not the feelings of House Members, but rather that of the consequences for the country of the predominance of the Senate. The fact that the Senate generally proposes to spend more money than does the House, or that it has gained power while the House has been losing it, need not in itself be disturbing. If the Senate is a truly representative body, and it is operating effectively and responsibly as the dominant body, it should perhaps be allowed to continue in its position of power. If, on the other hand, the Senate is not truly representative, if it is not as effective or fully responsible as it should be, there is reason for concern. If a case can be made for the system of legislative checks and balances, with the Senate acting principally as a check on the House of Representatives, if it is desirable to have some specialization and differentiation of function between the House and the Senate, then the problem of distribution of power is a matter of concern to the citizens of the United States. Mr. William Shannon has stated in an article in Commonweal that under our system the Government drifts whenever the Senate is in the ascendancy, since, he argues, the Senate is composed of State ambassadors who advocate local and regional interests, and is not properly constituted to frame a national program. If this is true, there is genuine cause for alarm.

Obviously the Senate is not as representative as is the House. Although there is need for more even apportionment of Congressional districts, representation in the House of Representatives is still much closer to popular representation than it is in the Senate, where the millions of citizens of the State of New York and the fewer than 200,000 citizens of the State of Nevada are equally represented by 2 Senators. The House remains more truly the people's branch of the Government. Moreover, since all House Members are elected every 2 years, membership in that body more accurately reflects changes in popular opinion and judgment than does membership in the Senate, in which in every term of Congress some two-thirds of the Members have been carried over from previous elections.

The increase in the power of the Senate has disturbed the system of checks and balances, which was reasonably conceived, and has tended to destroy differentiation of function between the House and Senate. There is evidence that the Senate is trying to do too many things to do all effectively—to formulate and review foreign policy, to check on the executive appointments, both before and after they are made, to check on the administration continuously, to cover the whole field of legislation, and to look after the needs of a statewide constituency. These are tasks of such difficulty and complexity that one should not reasonably expect 96 Senators to adequately and thoroughly perform them all.

The consequences of the seniority system can be much more serious in the Senate than in the House, where larger membership makes control by committee chairmen more difficult, and where respect for the office and jurisdiction of the chairmen is not as great as it is in the Senate. Senators are generally responsive to all, or nearly all, local and special interests of their States. House Members are directly responsive only to those in their respective districts.

A strong President, providing leadership to the country and strengthening the House of Representatives, can stand against the Senate. To do so, however, the President usually must have dramatic issues and critical conditions, as in the case of war or domestic disturbance comparable to the great depression. Only under exceptional conditions can the President play this role. Neither a weak President with great issues, nor a strong one without great issues can stand successfully against the irresponsibly exercised strength of the Senate.

The principal defense of the House to the loss of its power in relation to the Senate has been, in recent years, the strength of its leadership. A man like Speaker SAM RAYBURN, backed by committee chairmen and Members of the House, has successfully stood against the Senate, but, as a matter of fact, strong House leadership has consistently been more successful in opposition to executive proposals than it has been to those of the Senate.

The House should assert itself in competition with the Senate in the field of general legislation, but more particularly when questions of revenue and of appropriations are in dispute. The House should insist that it be given more voice in foreign affairs. The Senate should be encouraged to give special attention to Government service and to assume the responsibility for the effective and efficient administration of Government affairs, and for the quality and conduct of both civil service and appointed personnel. Responsibility for service to constituents might also be concentrated in the Senate to avoid competitive efforts in this area and to eliminate the expense of these multiple undertakings.

House rules should be changed in order to allow House Members to sit on more than one major committee and to allow more liberal debate, with the possibility of great debates again in the House of Representatives. House Members, too, should become more active in national party activities and should insist on their greater recognition in national conventions.

There is need for better organization in the House of Representatives, for greater party cohesion and party responsibility and a greater sense of the unity, integrity, and function of the House, and of a greater will on the part of its Members to stand as a body, on a bipartisan basis when necessary, against either the Senate or the executive branch of the Government.

If the House is in fact to decidedly predominate as James Madison stated it should when the Constitution was being drafted, institutional strengthening of the House of Representatives is needed, rather than superficial changes and appeals for greater individual determination, responsibility, and attention to duty as suggested by the Times writer.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I was greatly disturbed also by this article. I think that this body on many occasions has shown its responsibility and in many instances in this very Congress we have cleared up matters which were the result of ill-considered legislation in the other body. If the gentleman is meeting this article by rebuttal, in my opinion he is to be highly commended. It may very well be that some of the things he has said may not be in agreement with what I may say, but in so far as he takes issue with the conclusions in this article, I concur entirely.

Specifically this article referred to the civil rights bill. My distinguished chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER], in the proposal he made after the action taken in the other body greatly improved the situation. The bill that was passed over there with the jury trial amendment covering everything under the sun was ridiculous on its face and produced patently absurd results. While I do not agree with my chairman about giving in at that point and accepting a weak and watered down measure, yet he did at least in his proposal limit the bill to the protection of voting rights only. That represented at least a responsible approach to the legislative problem before us.

The other body has just today passed some bills with reference to judgeships, many of which, and I am sure the chairman will agree with me, were not considered sound by the House Committee on the Judiciary. We consider these bills on their merits in our committee and do not send to this House for action bills which have not received the approval of the Judicial Conference.

Mr. Speaker, so that my position regarding Mr. Drury's article will be unmistakably clear, I append at this point my letter to the editor of the New York Times, dated August 20.

Mr. McCARTHY. I intended my statement to be in the nature of a rebuttal.

AUGUST 20, 1957.

SUNDAY EDITOR (MAGAZINE),
New York Times,
New York, N. Y.

DEAR SIR: Allen Drury's provocative article, Is the House a Rubber Stamp? reflects a real challenge by one of Washington's most able journalists. Perhaps he intended it to raise the hackles of House Members. If so, he has succeeded admirably.

There are, of course, great failings and weaknesses in any legislative body, and we who serve in it would be the first to admit the House is no exception. It is significant, in this connection, to note that in recent years important steps have been taken to strengthen the solid marrow of the House, the committee system, where the real work of this body is performed. As a result of this streamlining process only a very few Members serve on more than one committee.

The result has been that each Member can become an expert in the business of the committee on which he serves, and can personally devote more time and energy to the problems which come before it. In the Senate, on the other hand, the plethora of committees spread among the 96 Senators results in each having to serve on at least two and often more committees. The necessary dilution of the Senator's attention means that a premium is placed on the work of aids and committee staffs, rather than on the personal work of the Senator, and also often leads to committee decisions made solely on the basis of senatorial courtesy rather than on the merits of a particular matter.

What this all means is that House committees, with few exceptions, do the real spadework below the surface which makes possible expeditious handling of measures on the floor of the House. With less fanfare, but greater perceptiveness, House committees in innumerable cases have made the really deep studies necessary to responsible legislation, while the Senate has either given the matter a cursory examination, or merely sat back and waited to see what the House would do.

Because our committee system does function so well, in most cases, House action on the floor can often be effectively carried out with a minimum of debate. In saying this, I am mindful of the fact that some committee chairmen do exercise undue influence on matters under their consideration, and do occasionally stifle the "free flow of opinion," as Mr. Drury puts it. But I would emphasize that such procedures are definitely the exception rather than the rule. Broadly speaking, the committees of the House are carefully carrying out their functions—that of winnowing out ideas and bills and attempting to come up with the best possible measure upon which the entire membership can work its will. It does not appear to me that the Senate committees come close to living up to the standards set by their brethren in the House.

As for debate on the floor of the House, Mr. Drury refers to the cute limitations and gimmicks which subject the membership to the will of the party leaders. Although there is some truth to this allegation, it is equally true that with an unwieldy forum of 435 Members, some curbs must be placed on the discussion. After all, the Senate, for all its famed debates, has far fewer Members—there are roughly $4\frac{1}{2}$ times as many Members of the House—and can thus afford the luxury (which we would surely relish) of talking at great length on the floor on important questions involving legislation.

The important point—which Mr. Drury largely ignores—is that the House committee system, when it operates as it should (and usually it does) smoothes the way for floor discussion and prevents the needless talkathons which have so often become a Senate trademark. If there is less talking in the House on individual bills, it is thus because less legitimate talk is necessary after the thorough work and report of the committee which handled the bill are made public.

It is not completely true, as the article hints, that the House prefers to pass the buck to the Senate on controversial legislation, and thus does a slipshod job of considering individual bills, secure in the knowledge the Senate will correct any shortcomings. A case in point, which has been largely misinterpreted by the press, is the civil rights bill.

The completeness of the House consideration of the civil rights bill is attested to by the fact that a virtually identical bill was subjected to 3 days of hearings by a House Judiciary Subcommittee, 4 days of full Judiciary Committee consideration, 3 days of hearings by the Rules Committee, and finally, 5 days of debate on the floor of the House in the 84th Congress. And this year, there were 9 days of hearings before a House Judiciary Subcommittee, 6 days of full committee consideration, 9 days of hearings by the Rules Committee, and 9 days of floor debate on the measure before it finally went to the Senate.

Even a quick glance at the records of these proceedings would reveal that the great majority of the talking was done by opponents of the measure. They had free and full opportunity to exploit any shortcomings they felt inhered in the bill. Every conceivable argument, pro and con, was brought to light during this full consideration.

As an active participant in all phases of the House debate, I can state unequivocally that every argument which has since been advanced in the Senate, was first debated in the House. The debate in the Senate, though perhaps more fully covered by the press, was no more sober and careful, no more reasoned and cogent and deliberate than that carried on in the House.

The House debate on the jury-trial amendment was far from cursory, as Mr. Drury and others would lead one to believe. It was so complete and emphatic, that the House—with a will—rejected the novel innovation of the jury trial where it has never before existed. But in the Senate, a flood of words and misguided pressures resulted in the passage of a sweeping revision of our general criminal contempt laws, without hearings or proper investigation of any sort.

It puts the Senate in the ridiculous position of wrecking numerous vital Federal laws and hamstringing the operation of a fistful of Government agencies, as well as taking even the baby teeth out of the moderate House right-to-vote protection. It now appears the House—as it has had to do in many other cases—must show the Senate the errors of its impetuous ways and correct this incredible jury-trial bobble.

And as to the House bending to the popular thing to do on the civil rights bill, the statement is true to the extent that the will of the majority of the people seemed to be to pass a meaningful bill to help citizens who are being deprived of their constitutional rights. But it is not true that by keeping the bill strong, the House was waving like a reed in the wind of popular opinion. Rather, it was the Senate, as exemplified by accepting this ridiculous form of jury-trial amendment which was swayed by momentary and misguided outside pressures to stray far from the accepted and traditional concepts of the powers of our courts to enforce their orders.

One final word as to the nature and caliber of the membership of the House. I have never, in my various contacts with adults in all walks of life, encountered a group of men and women more dedicated to their work, more determined to do a good job for their constituents and for their country, than Members of the House of Representatives. I do not think Members of Congress should be criticized simply because the pressures of their responsibilities prevent them from taking an active role in every phase of the Congressional legislative program. They are doing the very best they can, within the limitations of staff allotments and the extent of the time they have available. To criticize their backgrounds or their abilities is indirectly to criticize the districts which they represent. For surely, there is no finer cross section, no finer reflection of the thinking and opinion of each section of our land, than the membership of the House of Representatives.

This accurate mirroring of the tides of public opinion is, after all, a principal role foreseen by our Founding Fathers for this body. I am firmly convinced the House of Representatives today is fully and intelligently carrying out that vital function in the American system of government.

Very sincerely yours,
KENNETH B. KEATING.

CLAIMS ON DELIVERIES OF ELIGIBLE SURPLUS FEED GRAINS

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 2486) to authorize the Commodity Credit Corporation to grant relief with respect to claims arising out of deliveries of eligible surplus feed grains on ineligible dates in connection with purchase orders under its emergency feed program, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

> Page 2, lines 7 and 8, strike out "12 months from the date the purchase order was issued to the farmer" and insert "six months from the expiration date of the purchase order issued to the farmer."

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the reason for recognizing Members from the Committee on Agriculture is that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SMITH] said that he would withdraw his objection.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am not familiar with the provisions of this bill myself. I hesitate to approve it unless there are members of the Committee on Agriculture on this side who are present.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GROSS. I was present on the floor before the session was resumed during the recess. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. POAGE] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. FISHER] came to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HOEVEN], a member of the Committee on Agriculture of the minority party, and secured his approval of the bill.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. KEATING. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I happened to be present at that time and heard the conversation.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from New York desires an explanation of the bill, I am sure that will be made.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I think it would be well to have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. ALBERT. This is a bill which has been voted out of the House Committee on Agriculture unanimously and was approved by the House without a dissenting vote. The only thing that has happened to this bill in the Senate is that the time period for taking advantage of it has been reduced from 1 year to 6 months. It is simply a limiting amendment narrowing down the provisions of the bill. There is no objection that I know of to the bill in the Committee on Agriculture and, as I have stated, it has been cleared. I would suggest to the gentleman that we are getting a more limited bill than the House originally agreed to.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

IS THE SOCIAL SECURITY DISABILITY PROGRAM ADMINISTERED PROPERLY?

Mr. ZABLOCKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. ZABLOCKI. Mr. Speaker, a year has passed since the Congress approved the Social Security Act Amendments of 1956, giving new hope, and new encouragement, to thousands of our disabled wage earners.

This month, around 100,000 disabled workers received their first checks under the new provision of the law. To them, and to their families, these benefits mean protection against hardships and privations.

SPONSORED LEGISLATION

I am very happy to see these developments. For a number of years, I have worked for the passage of legislation to establish this special protection for disabled workers. I was among the first sponsors of this amendment to the Social Security Act in the 84th Congress.

Even though the law approved in 1956 did not go as far as the improvements suggested in my bill, it represented a step in the right direction. I proposed that disability benefits be extended to all totally and permanently disabled workers regardless of age. As approved by Congress, the law stated that the worker has to be at least 50 years of age to qualify for such payments. In that respect, the law is much less liberal than my original proposal.

BENEFITS GIVEN TO A FEW

While I am pleased that our workers are finally receiving some measure of the protection that they well deserve, there is one aspect of this situation which concerns me greatly; namely, that only 100,000 workers have been declared eligible for disability benefits by the Social Security Administration to date.

This number is very small in relation to the number of workers who were engaged in social-security-covered employment, and who became seriously disabled.

Last September, for instance, Commissioner Schottland of the Social Security Administration wrote that "disability insurance payments could be payable for July 1957 to 400,000 individuals." By the time the President's budget message was published in January of this year, that estimate dropped to 380,000 people. And now the Social Security Administration tells us that they expect to have only 275,000 persons on the disability benefit rolls by the end of the first year of the program.

This is a very disconcerting situation. Only 100,000—or one-fourth of the estimated number of persons who should be eligible to receive disability benefits—are actually receiving these payments.

REASONS FOR RESTRICTED BENEFITS

How can we explain this situation? On the basis of my personal experience with numerous disabled workers who applied for disability benefits, I would say that the reason for this state of affairs is this:

In the first place, some disabled workers have either failed to apply for disability benefits, or failed to prove their case. That is, they may not have submitted the required evidence of their disability to the Social Security Administration.

The second reason is more serious—and demands our earnest attention.

I believe that so few disabled workers have actually qualified for disability benefits because the Social Security Administration has been using a yardstick to measure the extent of an applicant's disability which is contrary to the intent of Congress.

"DISABILITY" DEFINED

The law defines the term "disability" as "inability to engage in any substantial gainful activity by reason of any physical or mental impairment."

Our courts have defined and explained similar clauses in other laws and contracts. Court decisions have repeatedly held that a person need not be on his back, bedridden, unable to move, in order to receive total disability benefits.

On the contrary, the courts have ruled that as long as a person was unable to follow "substantial gainful employment," he could be considered for disability benefits.

What exactly do we mean by "substantial gainful employment"?

Here, again, we can look for guidance to past court decisions.

In general, the courts have held that "substantial gainful employment" has to have these elements:

In the first place, it must involve the performance of a substantial amount of work.

Second, that work must assure the person performing it a fair and decent living, related to his station.

And, third, that the employment or self-employment must be fairly regular.

In other words, unless these three elements were present, the worker may not be engaged in "substantial gainful employment."

This is what the courts have held in the past. They held that a person could be totally disabled if he was unable to do a reasonable amount of work, with a reasonable amount of regularity, and thereby earn a decent living.

SOCIAL SECURITY VIEW

Now let us compare the attitude of the Social Security Administration in administering the new disability benefits program with the precedents established by our courts.

In a 29-page pamphlet issued by the agency, entitled, "If You Are Disabled," there is this statement:

> To qualify for disability benefits, you must have a disability which is so severe that it prevents you from doing any kind of work.

This is not what the Congress had in mind when it passed the law. Congress did not say that you must be unable to do any kind of work before you could qualify for disability benefits. It clearly said that you could not be engaged in a substantial gainful activity.

There is a tremendous difference between "substantial gainful activity" and "any kind of work." I have already pointed out how our courts have defined the former. As far as the latter is concerned, the Social Security Administration seems to feel that if a paralyzed worker is able to sell pencils on the corner from an invalid's chair, he is not eligible for disability benefits because, after all, he is doing some kind of work. And the agency's book says that as long as you can do any kind of work you are not disabled.

This is a strange and a harsh interpretation of the law. Congress did not intend disability benefits to be restricted only to the totally helpless, bedridden workers. They were intended for all of the insured workers who lost the capacity to provide adequately for their families and for themselves because of physical or mental disabilities.

AN ENCOURAGING CHANGE

I was happy to note that in a recent press release the Social Security Administration changed its position, and outlined a more accurate interpretation of the law.

In contrast with the official booklet which I mentioned earlier, the press release states that—

> To be found "disabled" under the social security law, a worker must have a disability which, in the words of the law, makes him unable to "engage in any substantial gainful activity." In general, "substantial gainful activity" means the performance of a substantial amount of work with reasonable regularity in employment or self-employment.

The press release further stressed the fact that—

> A person does not have to be completely helpless to qualify under the social security disability provisions. Consideration is given to all of the facts in the individual's situation, both medical and nonmedical.

This is a far cry from the Social Security Administration's original instructions that a person could not become eligible for disability benefits if he was able to do "any kind of work."

GREATER HOPE FOR MANY

I hope that the above press release will mark the beginning of proper interpretation of the law by the Social Security Administration.

The disability benefits program can bring new hope into the lives of many families which have been touched by the tragedy of physical or mental disability. That was the reason why the law was enacted. Let us see that this intent is carried out—that it is not frustrated by improper administration of the law.

A CORRECTION

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Speaker, during the course of the debate on the civil rights bill in this House on June 7, 1957, our distinguished colleague from Mississippi [Mr. ABERNETHY] made reference to one Israel Cohen as "a leading Communist in England" and referred to what purported to be a publication in 1912, authored by said Israel Cohen entitled "A Racial Program for the 20th Century."

I have caused extensive research to be made in the matter. The result of that research shows the following:

First. There was no Communist Party in 1912.

Second. No publication can be found under the title "A Racial Program for the 20th Century" authored by an Israel Cohen or anyone else.

Third. No record of a Communist in England by the name of Israel Cohen has been brought to light.

An Israel Cohen has been located who was born in England in 1879. He is listed in the British Who's Who. He never wrote or published any such treatise under that name or any other name, which said or intimated any of the things quoted as reported on page 8559 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 7, 1957.

The British Museum Catalog of Printed Books contains no reference to any such work nor do any of the catalogs published in Britain during 1911 to 1915, inclusive.

Our own Library of Congress has no record of any such publication.

The very context of the quotation indicates that it could not possibly have been written in 1912. As I have already indicated, there was no Communist Party in 1912 anywhere in the world. The words "Communist Party" did not come into use until after World War I, and the term "guilt complex" used in the quotation is of much more recent vintage.

I am hopeful that if anyone should find fit to quote from page 8559 of the RECORD of June 7, 1957, he will not fail to quote this item side by side with any such quotation.

Permit me, Mr. Speaker, to emphasize that nothing I have said impugns in any way the fairness, good faith, or motives of our distinguished colleague the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ABERNETHY]. Unfortunately, the reference and quotation he used had appeared in print in this country. Investigation since that publication, however, shows them to be a concoction not based on fact.

CONGRESSIONAL ACTION ON APPROPRIATION ESTIMATES, 85TH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION

Mr. BUDGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD by including a tabulation of Congressional action on appropriation estimates, 85th Congress, 1st session, under date of August 29, 1957.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

There was no objection.

BEST WISHES TO DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, as we come to the close of this tremendously difficult session of Congress, I believe in the heart of every man and woman in this Chamber there is a feeling of sympathy for and understanding of our great President, Dwight D. Eisenhower, for the many cares and responsibilities he has had during this last year. He has overcome tremendous illness himself. He has had the great anxiety of a seriously ill wife, his most gallant and beloved soldier, Mamie Eisenhower. We owe him a deep debt because he has kept us out of war but he has had the responsibilities of the cold war, the responsibilities of the welfare of the people of the country.

I hope, Mr. Speaker—and I am sure I am joined by all of the Members on both sides of the aisle, whether they agree with him politically or with his philosophy—that he will get some sort of relaxation and cessation from the terrible strain he has been under during the last year. We know what the strain has meant to us and we can imagine what it has meant to him. Our thoughts and prayers will be with the President and Mrs. Eisenhower.

A WORD OF APPRECIATION TO THE MEMBERS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. WHITENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITENER. Mr. Speaker, as we come to the close of the first session of the 85th Congress I beg leave to express some sentiments of appreciation to the Members of this distinguished legislative body.

As one who is completing the first year of legislative work on the national level I have a sincere sense of gratitude to those who have made this service so pleasant. The constant desire of those in position of leadership to assist new Members of this body is one of the most impressive facets of the Congress.

It is my hope that I have measured up to the responsibilities and opportunities of the high honor which is mine in serving as the representative of the people of the 11th District of North Carolina. It is certain that I have had the full cooperation of my colleagues in my efforts to serve. It is my earnest wish to each of my colleagues that the recess will be of an enjoyable and fruitful nature. I shall look forward to the resumption of our association in January 1958.

May the blessings of Almighty God be with each of you during the months of recess.

LEGISLATION PROVIDING PAY INCREASES FOR POSTAL AND CLASSIFIED EMPLOYEES

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I have today introduced legislation providing a general pay increase in salaries of postal employees and classified employees, the legislation to become effective in January 1958.

I have taken this action because, in my judgment, the pay increase legislation which originated in the House and was approved by the Congress is faced with almost certain veto by the President. In addition, the introduction of these bills at this time will enable the executive branch to study them carefully and furnish the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service with a report promptly next January.

The bills I have submitted provide for a 6-percent increase designed to offset the increased cost of living since the last pay adjustment in 1955.

With respect to postal employees, this also means that nearly 300,000 carriers and clerks will receive an average increase of approximately $250 annually. The Postmaster General is also granted authority to raise the entrance rates by from 2.3 percent to 10 percent in addition to the 6-percent basic increase when it is determined that in any area the Post Office Department is having difficulty recruiting qualified employees.

I believe the proposal is fair. As I have just suggested, our experience during this session has demonstrated that the requests and demands included in the bills that passed the House and the other body will not become law.

Under the legislation I have proposed, no salary will be increased above the present ceiling of $16,000 annually. For all classified Federal employees the bill provides a 6-percent increase which would benefit 960,000 classified employees, as well as employees in other branches of government, including 12,500 in Foreign Service and 24,000 in the medical, surgical, and dental service of the Veterans' Administration.

It seems to me that it is in the best interest of all Federal employees to consider pay legislation that has a chance of being enacted into law. I feel that the bills I have submitted are fair. They will, of course, be subject to amendments by the committee and by Members of the House.

FIRST SESSION OF THE 85TH CONGRESS

The SPEAKER. Members of the House, after a long and arduous session of the Congress, we are coming to a close. I want to thank the Members of the House, all of them, for the uniform kindnesses and courtesies they have extended to me throughout this nearly 8 months. Your cooperation, your good will, and your courtesy to me have made a position that at best is a very arduous and a very onerous one much more tolerable and much more enjoyable.

It is a high privilege for any American citizen to have the opportunity of serving in the popular branch of the greatest legislative body on earth. It has been that from the beginning of our Government.

I want to say this, that all may know. As you know, I have been here, as things go, a long time. I am in my 45th year as a Member of the House of Representatives. People who remember a few of the towering peaks, the giant oaks, that used to serve in this Chamber think only of them and not of the hundreds of others who have served. Many of them say that the ability and the courage of the Members of the House of Representatives have deteriorated. That just is not so, because during my forty-odd years here I know the intelligence, the devotion, and the ability of the Members of this House of Representatives are as high, if not higher, than I have known in all my service here. So it has been a pleasure to work with you, as it always is.

I have been a lucky man all my life. The people down in the heart of Texas took me up half a century ago and elected me to office, and they have been electing me to office ever since. I came here with a high ambition, and the Members of this House of Representatives have also given me everything I have ever asked for, all and more than I could barely hope for. From the depths of a grateful heart I thank you.

You deserve a holiday, and I wish you a peaceful and a happy one.

HOUSE BILLS DISAPPROVED AFTER SINE DIE ADJOURNMENT

The message further announced that the President had disapproved the following bills of the House; his reasons for such actions are as follows:

STATE OF WASHINGTON, HIGHWAY PAYMENT

H. H. 2224: I am withholding approval of H. R. 2224, directing the payment of $581,721.91 to the State of Washington as full satisfaction of a claim against the United States for the cost of replacing and relocating a 28-mile portion of secondary Highway 11-A which was condemned and taken by the United States in 1943 as part of the Hanford atomic energy project.

The claim involved in the bill has been thoroughly litigated and its payment denied by judicial determination. The statements in House Report No. 401, 85th Congress, on H. R. 2224, concerning the basis of the court decisions appear to be in error. Both the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Washington and the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit found that there was in 1943 no necessity for replacing the road since there were adequate substitutes available. They held that the State was therefore not entitled to compensation. Certiorari was denied.

No equitable reason for overruling the decision of the courts has been advanced. This is not an instance in which a strict application of the law of eminent domain renders a claim noncompensable or in which denial of the claim will cause undue hardship and suffering to the condemnee because of peculiar circumstances. The doctrine requiring payment only when a substitute highway is necessary is based on the consideration that there is no money loss when it is unnecessary to replace the road. As a matter of fact, there is a saving of expense to the State in that the burden of maintaining a road has been removed. Enactment of this bill would encourage the reopening of other similar claims which the courts have denied.

The State is now constructing a new road across a portion of the Hanford project. The findings of the courts indicate that any need which this road may serve as a substitute for Highway 11-A must have been created by developments since 1943 and not by the Government's taking of a portion of Highway 11-A. Furthermore, the Atomic Energy Commission has contracted to give the State an easement over Commission-owned lands for such a highway. The Department of the Army has constructed 14 miles of this road to serve its own needs. While the State has reimbursed the Department for the extra expense involved in constructing the road to meet State specifications, the contribution of the Department has resulted in substantial savings to the State. No equitable reason has been established to justify further Federal contributions to the cost of this road.

DIRECT LOANS, VETERANS HOUSING

H. R. 4602: I am withholding approval of H. R. 4602, which would extend and expand the direct-loan program for housing for veterans in rural areas and small cities and towns.

The Veterans' Administration direct-loan program was established for the purpose of granting to veterans for whom guaranteed loans were not readily available an equal opportunity to receive the homeownership benefits of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act. The terms and conditions of these direct loans were intended to conform as closely as possible to the guaranteed loans. Since the direct-loan program was established, in 1950, approximately $700 million in funds have been disbursed.

In recent months a steadily expanding economy with continued strong demand for available investment funds has resulted in a general rise in the interest-rate structure. Because of the higher yields available on other forms of investment, the flow of investment funds into VA-guaranteed mortgages has been drastically reduced. To correct this situation, this administration strongly urged the Congress to increase the maximum interest rate on VA-guaranteed mortgages from 4½ to 5 percent. No action was taken on this recommendation and, as a result, eligible veterans are finding guaranteed mortgages almost impossible to obtain. It is still within the power of Congress, however, to stimulate the flow of private investment funds into VA-guaranteed mortgages by adjustment of the maximum interest rate.

What the proposed legislation seeks to do is to make substantial amounts of additional mortgage funds available by providing for direct Government loans at interest rates well below the current market. These funds are to be made available only to a limited number of veterans—namely, those in rural areas and small cities and towns. I cannot approve a program that has such a potential inflationary effect upon the economy or that is so discriminatory. There is no justifiable reason for making loans at interest rates below the current market available to some veterans and denying them to others.

Help to veterans in the field of housing can be met most effectively with programs available to all our citizens, veterans and nonveterans alike, through the coordinated activities of the Housing and Home Finance Agency. The recent liberalization of loan terms under the FHA mortgage-insurance program should make this program available to a far wider segment of the population, thus stimulating private home-building activity to meet the growing needs.

It is my considered judgment that the above-mentioned deficiencies of H. R. 4602 are of a magnitude and importance which preclude my approval of the bill.

MR. AND MRS. C. H. PAGE

H. R. 1315: I have withheld my approval from H. R. 1315, a bill for the relief of Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Page.

H. R. 1315 would pay the sum of $14,430.88 to Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Page in connection with the wrongful death of their son who was a member of the Armed Forces.

On the night of July 4, 1954, the decedent, Pfc. Charles H. Page, Jr., was a member of a motorized patrol at Killeen Army Base, Killeen, Tex. As the patrol approached a classified area after dark it was properly halted and challenged by a posted walking sentry. The decedent identified the patrol, whereupon the sentry requested that the dome light inside the vehicle be turned on. The patrol had twice passed the same sentry earlier that evening after the fall of darkness and had been allowed to proceed after the sentry had been informed that the light did not work. But, this time, on again being informed that the light did not work, the sentry directed the decedent to dismount and be recognized. The latter refused, calling out to inquire if the sentry did not recognize his voice and, at the same time, directing the driver of the vehicle to proceed. The sentry ordered the vehicle to halt and then fired, fatally wounding the decedent.

The decedent was survived by his parents who are the beneficiaries of this bill. The parents were paid a death gratuity of $569.22 and are currently in receipt of monthly benefits from the decedent's free $10,000 indemnity. In addition, upon a showing of dependency, they could qualify for regular monthly payments under the Social Security Act and under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration. The award proposed in H. R. 1315 is additive to the foregoing benefits.

I cannot see my way clear to approve this bill. The Federal Government has provided a costly, comprehensive, and orderly system of benefits for survivors of members of the Armed Forces who die in service. As long as the death is service connected, these benefits are payable regardless of the cause, whether it be in combat or as the result of a tragic incident like the present one. As I have previously noted, the parents here have already received, and presently are continuing to receive, substantial benefits on account of their son's death. On a showing of dependency they could qualify for additional benefits.

H. R. 1315 would add to the benefits, to which the parents have heretofore or may hereafter become entitled, a further award in the amount of $14,430.88. To make such an award in this case would establish a most undesirable precedent with respect to other cases involving service-connected deaths. If this bill were approved, it would be difficult to deny similar awards to the survivors of other servicemen who die under a wide variety of circumstances. To follow such a course would, in my opinion, jeopardize the entire structure of benefits which has been built up for the protection of servicemen's survivors.

I am constrained, therefore, to withhold my approval from H. R. 1315.

THE WHITE HOUSE, September 7, 1957.

MRS. HANNAH MAE POWELL

H. R. 1419: I have withheld my approval of H. R. 1419 entitled "An act for the relief of Mrs. Hannah Mae Powell."

The bill would authorize and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mrs. Hannah Mae Powell, 1950 East Lehigh Avenue, Philadelphia, Pa., the sum of $11,197.95 in full settlement of all claims of said Mrs. Hannah Mae Powell for refund of excise taxes and other expenses sustained as a result of the actions of the collector of internal revenue of Philadelphia, Pa., in the years 1937, 1941, and 1942.

An examination by the Treasury Department of the facts in this case discloses that Mrs. Hannah Mae Powell has recovered by court action all taxes assessed and collected from her which were in dispute—plus interest—except $464.76 which was barred by the expiration of the statutory period of limitations. These taxes which were in dispute were manufacturers' excise taxes.

After a recovery of the taxes, Mrs. Hannah Mae Powell instituted a damage suit against the former collector, both individually and as collector of internal revenue of Philadelphia, Pa. The district court rendered a judgment in favor of the former collector and denied damages to Mrs. Hannah Mae Powell. This judgment was later upheld by the court of appeals.

The bill, therefore, would give to Mrs. Hannah Mae Powell the sum of $11,197.95 as damages which were denied to her by the Federal district court and the court of appeals. The court of appeals in affirming the decision of the lower court stated (Powell v. Rothensies (C. A. 3d, 1950), 183 F. 2d 774, 775):

> The evidence offered by the plaintiff herself conclusively establishes that at the time of the levy and seizure in question there were outstanding in the hands of the defendant 2 unpaid assessments against the plaintiff for manufacturer's excise taxes and that the warrant for distraint under which the levy and seizure were made was expressly based upon these 2 outstanding assessments, which with interest and penalty then amounted to $4,718.44. Under these circumstances it was within the scope of the defendant's ministerial duty to make the levy and collection here in controversy and he cannot be held answerable in damages for so doing. The trial judge, therefore, rightly directed a verdict for the defendant.

It would thus appear that the damages sustained by Mrs. Powell resulted from her failure to satisfy two unpaid assessments and that, in collecting the unpaid assessments, the former collector of internal revenue was acting within the scope of his ministerial duties.

H. R. 1419 would have a discriminatory effect, as it would afford to Mrs. Powell relief which had been denied her by the Federal Courts and which would be denied all others in similar circumstances who do not have the benefit of special legislation. Furthermore, H. R. 1419 would create an undesirable precedent by allowing damages to be collected from the United States under these circumstances.

Under the circumstances, therefore, I am constrained to withhold my approval of the bill.

PACIFIC CUSTOMS BROKERAGE CO.

H. R. 1591: I am withholding approval of H. R. 1591, a bill for the relief of the Pacific Customs Brokerage Co., of Detroit, Mich.

The proposed legislation would provide for the payment of $29,502.55 to the beneficiary in full settlement of all claims against the United States arising out of an erroneous classification of baler twine which was imported at Detroit, Mich., between May 5, 1950, and February 16, 1951. The collector of customs liquidated these entries at the rate of 15 percent ad valorem, the rate applicable under paragraph 1005 (b) of the Tariff Act of 1930, as modified, in accordance with established and uniform practice for merchandise of this type. The importer failed to protest this ruling within 60 days after liquidation of the entry.

About a year after the entries had been liquidated, the Customs Court, in connection with the importation made by another importer, decided that similar merchandise was entitled to entry free of duty under paragraph 1622 of the Tariff Act. This decision was later affirmed by the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals. This interpretation of the law had no effect on the classification of the merchandise in H. R. 1591, since that duty determination had been made and had become final and binding.

The Congress has established a regular procedure for importers to contest the rate of duty and obtain a judicial determination by the Customs Court of the correct rate. This judicial review is obtained by filing a protest to the collector's decision within 60 days after it is made. No protest was filed by the Pacific Customs Brokerage Co. The Congress, in section 514 of the Tariff Act, has provided that if such a protest is not made within 60 days, the decision of the collector is final and conclusive upon the importer and all other persons, including the United States. This provision, like other statutes of limitations, is desirable to permit the final disposition of cases in an orderly manner.

The importer had a legal means to contest the classification decision but failed to do so within the terms of the statute. To grant relief in this situation would be inequitable and would discriminate against the hundreds of other importers who have paid duty based upon a construction of the law which the courts have subsequently decided would be erroneous.

For these reasons, I return the bill without my approval.

DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER.
THE WHITE HOUSE, September 7, 1957.

PHILIP COOPERMAN, ARON SHRIRO, AND SAMUEL STACKMAN

H. R. 1733: I am withholding my approval of H. R. 1733, for the relief of Philip Cooperman, Aron Shriro, and Samuel Stackman.

The bill would provide that, for the purpose of determining the individual liability for income taxes for the taxable year 1951 of Philip Cooperman, Aron Shriro, and Samuel Stackman, the elections of said Philip Cooperman, Aron Shriro, and Samuel Stackman, sole stockholders of Queens Syndicate, Inc., which was liquidated pursuant to a plan of complete liquidation adopted on the first day of September 1951, to have the benefits of section 112 (b) (7) (A) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1939 would be considered to have been filed within 30 days after the date of adoption of such plan. The bill states that the benefits of section 112 (b) (7) were denied to the stockholders because the mailing of the elections was delayed, without negligence or fault on the part of the stockholders, until after the 30th day following the adoption of the plan of complete liquidation.

Section 112 (b) (7) provides a special rule in the case of certain complete liquidations of domestic corporations occurring within 1 calendar month for the treatment of gain on the shares of stock owned by qualified electing stockholders. The effect of this section is to permit deferral of tax upon unrealized appreciation in the value of the property distributed in liquidation. An election to be governed by section 112 (b) (7) must be filed by the shareholder or by the liquidating corporation with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue on or before midnight of the 30th day after adoption of the plan of liquidation. Essentially, H. R. 1733 would waive this requirement for the named taxpayers.

The records of the Treasury Department disclose that it was not involved in the untimely filing by these taxpayers of the elections. These records show that on September 1, 1951, Queens Syndicate, Inc., adopted a plan of complete liquidation. On November 18, 1951, elections on Form 964, signed by the electing shareholders, were received by the Office of the District Director of Internal Revenue, Brooklyn, N. Y. Accordingly, the filing of the elections was delayed for more than 6 weeks after the 30-day period prescribed by law for the filing of such elections.

The granting of special relief in this case would constitute an unfair discrimination against other taxpayers similarly situated and would create an undesirable precedent which might encourage other taxpayers to seek relief in the same manner.

Under the circumstances, therefore, I am constrained to withhold my approval of the bill.

THE WHITE HOUSE, September 7, 1957.

FEDERAL EMPLOYEE SALARY INCREASES

H. R. 2462 and H. R. 2474: I am withholding approval of H. R. 2462 and H. R. 2474, bills providing increases in salary rates scheduled under the Classification Act of 1949, as amended, and the Postal Field Service Compensation Act of 1955, as amended, and providing salary increases for other Federal employees.

H. R. 2462 would increase salaries, under the Classification Act, by about 11 percent, and would make the increases applicable to all except the most responsible jobs. H. R. 2474 would increase salaries in the Postal Field Service by $546. The increases would range downward from about 19 percent for the less responsible jobs to about 3.5 percent for the most responsible jobs.

I cannot approve these bills because, first, they are not justified by considerations of equity; second, they would materially accentuate existing disparities in the pay scales; third, they would increase total Federal expenditures so as to make large supplemental appropriations necessary; fourth, they would increase the rate of Federal expenditure so as to require in all probability an increase in the statutory debt limit; and fifth, they would contribute unnecessarily to existing and incipient inflationary pressures in our national economy.

First. The claims that the increases provided for in these bills are justified by increases in the cost of living have not been sustained. From July of 1951, the effective date of the 1951 pay increases, to March of 1955, the effective date of the 1955 pay increases, the cost of living increased by slightly more than 3 percent. Yet the 1955 pay increases amounted to an average of about 8 percent for postal employees and about 7.5 percent for classified employees. Since March of 1955 the cost of living has gone up a little over 5½ percent, or a total increase since July of 1951 of about 8.9 percent. Against this increase of 8.9 percent in the cost of living, approval of these bills would result in there having been granted since 1951 to postal employees increases in pay averaging about 20.6 percent and to classified employees increases in pay averaging about 18.5 percent. During this same period, fringe benefits have grown substantially—low-cost life insurance, unemployment compensation, liberalized retirement, and survivor benefits. By no standards do the equities of the situation justify the increases provided for in these bills.

Second. Federal employees have the right to expect fair and equitable wage treatment in relation to each other and in relation to employees in private business. These bills disregard that fundamental principle. Both would widen existing pay discrepancies within the Federal establishment and aggravate existing inequities, and it has not been demonstrated that generally the present conditions of Federal employment are out of line with those of the millions of other citizens working in private industry.

Third, in the absence of any compelling justification on the merits, great weight must be given to the serious fiscal and economic implications of these bills. The bills would increase annual expenditures by about $850 million for increased base pay and increased benefits computed on base pay. To meet these increased costs, either drastic curtailment of postal services and programs covered by the Classification Act, or large supplemental appropriations would be necessary, notwithstanding our firm efforts to operate these Federal programs within existing resources.

Fourth, the bills, by increasing the rate of Federal expenditures in relation to receipts, would press the public debt upward to a point so dangerously close to the statutory debt limit that an increase in the limit would appear unavoidable. The undesirable economic consequences of such action are apparent.

Fifth, these increased expenditures and the threat of increased public debt which they pose would have the effect of adding to the upward pressures on the prices of things Americans buy. I am firmly convinced that our people want orderly economic growth with reasonable price stability. The attainment of this goal lays heavy obligations upon us all. Of the Federal Government it demands fiscal integrity, however hard the choices such a course may impose. There can be no doubt, moreover, that the health of our economy and the defense of the dollar require economic statesmanship of employers and workers, public and private alike, in determining how much we as a nation pay ourselves for the work we do. Government cannot in good conscience ask private business and labor leadership to negotiate wage adjustments with full regard to the whole Nation's interest in price stability while at the same time approving the enactment of these wholesale salary-increase bills.

My decision to withhold approval of these bills is made with firm belief that the Government's salary position must support recruitment and retention of able employees in the thousands of different occupations essential to our Federal operations. An inquiry into the need for adjustments in the structure of executive branch pay systems has been undertaken at my direction. In the event this inquiry demonstrates the need for logical, fair, and discriminating adjustment, recommendations for appropriate action will be made early in the next session of the Congress.

KNOX CORPORATION

H. R. 2904: I have withheld my approval from H. R. 2904, for the relief of the Knox Corp., of Thomson, Ga., for the reason that it provides for a return by the Government of fees to a private corporation which had been properly paid pursuant to a valid contract. In this case, there were fees of $7,809 paid by the Knox Corp. in connection with commitments by the Federal National Mortgage Association to purchase mortgages on housing to be constructed in the future. The housing was not constructed. However, the Government was not responsible in any way for the failure to construct such housing. Accordingly, the commitments were terminated and the commitment fees were retained by the Federal National Mortgage Association. This action was in accordance with the express terms of the contract and with the established procedure. There is no proper basis upon which an exception can be made in this case. Approval of this special relief bill would establish a highly undesirable precedent and result in unwarranted costs to the Government.

HON. LISTER HILL

OF ALABAMA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD an address which I delivered on May 27, 1957, at the dedication of the Alben W. Barkley room in the Mary I. King Library at the University of Kentucky.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ADDRESS BY THE HONORABLE LISTER HILL, UNITED STATES SENATOR FROM ALABAMA, AT THE DEDICATION OF THE ALBEN W. BARKLEY ROOM, MARY I. KING LIBRARY, UNIVERSITY OF KENTUCKY, MAY 27, 1957

How fitting it is that we should dedicate this room in your beautiful library of the University of Kentucky as the Alben W. Barkley room, and place here for our benefit and for the benefit of those who come after us the papers, letters, and memorials of Alben Barkley.

Alben Barkley was my cherished friend, and for 6 years as Democratic whip of the Senate it was my privilege to serve as his assistant when he was majority leader of the Senate.

How well I remember the many times we worked together. I recall the many times we had lunch in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, and planned our strategy, our work to be taken up in the Senate.

Alben Barkley worked hard; he always worked hard. But he knew how to relax. And he could relax those with him. With his stories and his humor, Alben Barkley could relax the mind and refresh the spirit. It was good to be with him.

His fund of stories was inexhaustible. They flowed like the refreshing waters of one of your fine Kentucky springs. Alben Barkley had a story for each situation. And always there was an underlying wisdom in his stories. They were founded in his folklore.

The great thing about Alben Barkley was his love of everything around him. He loved Kentucky, her history, her traditions, and her people. He was proud that he was her son, and his first loyalty was to her people—his people. He was flesh of their flesh and bone of their bone. Their strength was his strength.

In his papers and letters is written so much of the history of our country, of the epic story of America. As I said this morning, Alben Barkley's life overlapped four historic periods in the development of our Nation.

First, America's coming of age with Woodrow Wilson, when a people became conscious of their destiny and their leadership in the family of nations;

Second, the days of the great depression which demonstrated that in time of domestic crisis a vigorous, determined Government can act to protect the people from stagnation and despair and needless suffering;

Third, were the years of World War II and after, when America used her might to beat down the totalitarian enemies of the Free World and then to hold back those who sought world domination by infiltration and subversion and cold war;

And finally, he lived into the age of nuclear energy, of flight faster than sound, of man's first tentative thrust into outer space with the building of the earth satellite.

And, as I said this morning, Alben Barkley was at home in all these times. He retained always the resilience of youth, the zest for new things, the willingness to try uncharted paths. He looked always to the future.

Those who come here will find not only the written words, the revealing facts, the interesting and delightful stories and anecdotes, the discussion of great issues and the events of history, but more than this—they will be challenged and inspired by the shining example of the life and character and services of Alben Barkley.

This great Kentuckian stands today beside the immortal Henry Clay who by his heroic efforts to save our country from fratricidal war sacrificed his bright chances to be President; beside the martyred Lincoln who admonished us to have courage, for only brave men and women can preserve freedom and the blessings of freedom.

Alben Barkley was majority leader of the Senate longer than any man in American history. In his autobiography he tells us that when he was first elected majority leader in the extremely close contest between him and another great American, the late Pat Harrison, of Mississippi, he solicited no votes. Alben Barkley did not solicit votes. Alben Barkley led men by the force of his genius. He led them by the example of his life, by the influence of his character and his courage, by his devotion to principle and his steadfast adherence to his convictions, and by his discerning and masterful presentation of the issues.

He was the militant leader, the captain of teamwork, with rare capacity to persuade and cooperate with men, without abandonment of principle, leading them in the vital service of our country and of humanity.

Alben Barkley was a partisan—a partisan for his friends, a partisan for his party, a partisan for the convictions he held and the things he believed to be right. He was a partisan in the cause of the people. But he bore no malice. There was no vanity in him; there was no retribution in his spirit; there was no littleness in this man.

In the heart and soul of Alben Barkley there were so tempered the elements of tolerance, patience, and sympathy that he drew to him the ungrudging regard and affection of all who came within the radius of his genial influence. Always his life brought home to us the admonition of the Master to His disciples: "That ye love one another, as I have loved you, that ye also love one another."

It was in an hour of joy and zest that Alben Barkley passed out of the company of living men. For nothing pleased him more than to stand before his fellow men, to speak to them, to expound the gospel of the Democratic Party which he loved so well, and to proclaim the faith by which he lived. We know how powerful, how persuasive, how compelling was his logic and his eloquence, how withering his sarcasm, how devastating his wit—all combining to make him the Nation's foremost political orator. Who that heard him can ever forget his memorable speech in the late evening at the 1948 Democratic convention in Philadelphia—the speech that lifted the discouraged and disheartened delegates, moved and inspired them, and sent them forth with fire and resolution to win the victory. After the speech there was no longer any question as to who would be the convention's nominee for Vice President. All eyes and all hearts had turned to Alben Barkley.

Vice Presidents have come and gone, many of them, but we have had only one so outstanding in personality, in leadership, and in service to our country, so strong in the appreciation and affection of the American people as to become "Mr. Veep."

Alben Barkley as a young man attended for a short time Thomas Jefferson's university, the University of Virginia. There he breathed deep the air of Jefferson's philosophy. There he found and nurtured his spiritual kinship with the author of the Declaration of Independence. There he became the disciple and the prophet of Jeffersonian democracy.

Alben Barkley recognized that great forces were at work in America and that great changes were taking place. He knew that when a nation grows rich and powerful it can become careless and forget its ideals. He worked always for the preservation and the perfecting of American democracy. He fought against special privilege, monopoly, the mastery of the many by the few. He fought to keep wide the door of economic opportunity, to redress social wrongs, to correct political abuses. He was on the side of the underprivileged and less fortunate—the little folks. He sought to break down the barriers of bigotry and intolerance and hatred. He taught the brotherhood of man. He was the champion of the people—a mighty warrior for peace for ourselves and for all nations.

As a Member of the House of Representatives and as the majority leader of the Senate, Alben Barkley gave leadership—more than any man in the history of the American Congress—to legislation for the advancement of economic strength and social gains for the American people, for human welfare and equal justice for all.

In the closing words of his autobiography Alben Barkley declares:

"I believe there are certain things which are still crying for accomplishment in this country. I shall continue to raise my voice for them."

And then he concludes:

"I should like to live to see every American family living in a comfortable home, and every American child born and reared in an atmosphere sufficiently wholesome to guarantee an even chance for health and intellectual and moral development consonant with the responsibilities of American citizenship. I should like to live to see the world at peace, where the inventive genius of man would be utilized to improve the conditions of life throughout the world. I should like to live to see the pledge of every nation respected by every other nation because it was made in good faith and observed to the letter."

It is not surprising that the last words to fall from the lips of such a man were the words: "I would rather be a servant in the house of the Lord than sit in the seats of the mighty." Alben Barkley sat in the seats of the mighty, and he served nobly and well in the house of the Lord.

So long as America shall stand, the example of the life and character and services of Alben Barkley will be remembered—will challenge and inspire men and women to carry on, to fight for the ideals and the principles that have made our America great. It can be said of Alben Barkley, as it was said of that other native son of Kentucky, that towering figure, Abraham Lincoln:

"He held his place—
Held the long purpose like a growing tree
Held on through blame and faltered not at praise
And when he fell in whirlwind, he went down
As when a lordly cedar, green with boughs,
Goes down with a great shout upon the hills
And leaves a lonesome place against the sky."

Congressman Moore To Visit Citizens in Each County in First District of West Virginia

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ARCH A. MOORE, JR.

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, it is my belief that a Congressman should be in his district to confer with his constituents and assist with problems whenever official duties do not require his presence in Washington. Accordingly, during the session, I have returned to my district each weekend to consult with my constituents and attend to their needs. In all, I have made over 100 speeches and personal appearances in the district during the past 8 months.

Upon the adjournment of Congress, I plan to return home and be available for conferences with the residents of the First Congressional District either at the courthouse or post office in each county seat. Following is the schedule I have arranged:

Monday, September 16, Hancock County: 9 a. m. to 12, courthouse, New Cumberland; 2 p. m. to 6 p. m., post office building, Weirton.

Tuesday, September 17, Brooke County: 9 a. m. to 6 p. m., courthouse, Wellsburg.

Wednesday, September 18, Ohio County: 9 a. m. to 6 p. m., post office, Wheeling.

Thursday, September 19, Marshall County: 9 a. m. to 6 p. m., courthouse, Moundsville.

Friday, September 20, Wetzel County: 9 a. m. to 12, courthouse, New Martinsville; 2 p. m. to 6 p. m., town hall, Hundred.

Monday, September 23, Marion County: 9 a. m. to 6 p. m., courthouse, Fairmont.

Tuesday, September 24, Taylor County: 9 a. m. to 6 p. m., post office, Grafton.

No appointment will be necessary for anyone who desires to come by on any of these dates and discuss any problem or give me an opinion on governmental matters. In addition to the above schedule, I will maintain a district congressional office throughout the year in the Mercantile Bank Building in Moundsville, and will always welcome visits from the people in the First Congressional District.

Women's Increasingly Important Role in American Life

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ALEXANDER WILEY

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, as we all know, women in the United States are assuming an increasingly important role in the affairs of our Nation.

As I have had occasion to point out several times in the RECORD, women are commendably performing tasks in every walk of American life—in public office, teaching, law, science, the arts, sports, and almost every other field.

This fact might be noted, too, on this the final day of the first session of the 85th Congress: Since the first woman was elected to Congress in 1916, they have made tremendous strides in taking on important roles in municipal, county, State, and Federal Governments.

In our overall economy, the 22 million women in the working force today, also, obviously are a great contribution.

Let no one erroneously assume, however, that women, in becoming members of the Nation's working force, have become automatons—without feeling—in this technological age. To the contrary, the wife and mother is still the center of our homes—the basic foundation of American life and the American family.

However, a great many of the ladies are doing a tremendous job of combining constructive, creative careers outside the home, with homemaking.

I request unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, a further brief statement on the increasingly important role of women in Wisconsin and American public life, including a list of Wisconsin women in State administration.

There being no objection, the statement and list were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR WILEY

Especially noteworthy is the role which women are occupying in public service.

For example, now, there are nearly 576,000 in the Federal service. There are 16 women—a Senator and 15 Congresswomen—in the 1st session of the 85th Congress. In 1957, a total of 321 women are serving in State and Territorial legislatures—an alltime high.

In addition, at least 10,000 women have been elected to municipal office, and 18,000 to county office.

Too, women are coming closer to the 50 percent mark in the number of postmasters. Back in 1786, the first two women were appointed postmistresses. Now there are about 15,600 women postmasters out of a total of 37,400 in the United States.

WOMEN IN JUDICIAL SERVICE

Recognition of women jurists throughout the United States and its territories is increasing steadily. Nineteen hundred and fifty-seven finds as many as 114 women lawyers serving as justices in Federal, State, county, and municipal courts throughout the United States. They are prominent also on the bench of circuit courts, probate, domestic relations, criminal district courts, and in Federal courts of appeal, tax, and customs.

WISCONSIN WOMEN IN PUBLIC SERVICE

In my own State of Wisconsin, women have established an especially fine record of playing important roles in public service.

There follows now a list of some of these prominent women in State administration. Although far from complete, this list illustrates a cross section of the many, many women in public service in Wisconsin.

WISCONSIN WOMEN IN STATE ADMINISTRATION

Lewis E. Hoffman

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. FRANK A. BARRETT

OF WYOMING

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a statement relative to an old friend of mine, Lewis E. Hoffman, who served the United States in an official capacity, first in the Bureau of Land Management, and earlier in the General Land Office, for a period of 44 years.

He is a dedicated public servant, and I am sorry he has reached an age at which it is necessary for him to retire from the Government service.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR BARRETT

On August 1 of this year, the Federal Government lost an extremely able, and extremely dedicated, public servant in the retirement of Lewis E. Hoffman from the Department of the Interior. For nearly 44 years, Lew Hoffman has been associated with the Bureau of Land Management and its predecessor agencies dealing with the public domain of the United States, and at the time of his retirement was its chief minerals staff officer. He will practice law in Washington.

Mr. Hoffman is widely recognized throughout the minerals industry as perhaps the topmost authority in the United States on the oil and gas leasing laws. His book Oil and Gas Leasing on the Public Domain, has been a "bible" of the oil and gas industry since its original publication in 1951, and this year he brought out a revised edition to cover new developments in oil and gas leasing, including the laws and regulations covering submerged lands, among other things.

Lew Hoffman has appeared before the committees of Congress many, many times, and has always proved a most competent, and most cooperative witness. In addition, he was always available to any Member of the Senate or the House for private consultation on legislative and administrative matters affecting the development of the mineral resources of the public domain.

His Federal Government service dates back to 1913 when he was with the old Patent Office, then a bureau in the Department of the Interior and 7 months later he began his life work in public lands and their mineral development. He served in the American Expeditionary Forces in World War I, and then, upon the passage of the Mineral Leasing Act on February 25, 1920, he was designated by the Commissioner of the General Land Office to organize a division to administer the oil and gas provisions of that act. The task was a tremendous one as the change from the right to prospect for oil and gas, from making mining locations under the United States mining laws to the issuance of permits and leases under the Mineral Leasing Act was a revolutionary departure from the then existing practice and procedure.

On September 9, 1943, the Secretary of the Interior awarded Mr. Hoffman a meritorious promotion for "the interest and initiative you have shown in improving work methods within the Minerals Division which have resulted in more efficient management with a noticeable improvement in the morale of the employees under your supervision. I am glad that it is possible to give this evidence of the Department's appreciation of this service."

In 1953 Mr. Hoffman was appointed chairman of a task force of the President's Cabinet Committee for the establishment of a national policy relating to the production and utilization of minerals and metals. The task force was established to effect a comprehensive review of legislation, Executive orders, directives, and other components of the existing Federal mineral policy. The task force report received the highest praise from officials of the Department.

I am certain that all of Mr. Hoffman's host of friends on both sides of the aisle join me in wishing Lew Hoffman good fortune in the years that lie ahead.

Congressional Action on the President's Budget

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GEORGE H. MAHON

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, with respect to the overall budget, which was submitted to Congress by the President in January of this year, I wish to make the following observations.

It must be understood that there are two kinds of budgets—an appropriation budget and an expenditure budget. Also the Treasury may be obligated to spend money through legislative acts of Congress not handled by the Appropriations Committee. Typical examples of this are public and military housing. Another example are funds for the big highway construction program.

We reduced the President's appropriation budget for fiscal year 1958 in the sum of $4,914,355,584. In addition, we reduced deficiency budget requests which were presented to Congress during this session by the sum of $134,023,395. These deficiency requests were for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1957. The total budget reductions during this session of Congress have therefore been $5,048,378,979. A portion of these reductions are accounted for by transfers of funds appropriated in prior years and transferred for obligation or expenditure in fiscal year 1958. In the defense budget such transfers in the sum of $590 million were made. This was the chief transfer but there were one or two others which were relatively minor and which I do not have at hand for inclusion at this point. It must be remembered, however, that in transferring these funds we have reduced the overall authority of the Government to obligate and spend money.

While it is true that the appropriation budget was reduced by $5,048,378,979, larger reductions can be appropriately claimed. The specific requests in such instances did not come before the Appropriations Committee. A good example of this is the school construction bill. The President included in the budget a request of $450 million for the school construction program, but the request never came before the Appropriations Committee officially because the school construction authorization bill was defeated by Congress. Another case in point is the mutual security bill, in the budget of the President submitted in January which included for appropriations the sum of $4.4 billion for the mutual security program. Although the President withdrew a part of this estimate, Congress also failed to authorize the amount officially requested, therefore, the amount which came before the Appropriations Committee was approximately $1 billion less than the January budget estimated. This $1 billion figure could be appropriately claimed as a reduction in the President's January budget. But the President himself was responsible for withdrawing his request for one-half of the latter sum. Another case in point is military construction.

I would now like to make reference to items requested in the budget which would grant authority to agencies to withdraw money from the Treasury without action of the Appropriations Committees, in other words without direct appropriations. For example, Congress exceeded the President's request for obligating authority for the housing program this year to the extent of about $1.1 billion. But the authority to guarantee housing loans, Commodity Credit Corporation loans and programs of that type are vastly different from regular direct appropriations granting authority to expend money which will not be repaid or recovered. Many of these loan programs represent very little ultimate loss to the Treasury, and this sort of obligational authority, and it is obligational authority, should not be considered in the same light as direct appropriations.

Mr. Speaker, these references have been very brief. As I said in the House earlier today the Gentleman from Missouri, Mr. CANNON, the Chairman of the House Appropriations Committee is preparing a very detailed statement in regard to the 1958 budget which appears elsewhere in the RECORD.

Resolution by Members of the Massachusetts Delegation To Continue the Operation of Murphy Army General Hospital in the Best National Security and Economic Interest

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HAROLD D. DONOHUE

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. DONOHUE. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to include a resolution adopted and signed by Members of the Massachusetts delegation in the House, and transmitted to the Secretary of the Army, requesting his reconsideration and recall of a recent order to completely deactivate this Army general hospital by January 1, 1958.

As revealed by the resolution, it is the combined and conscientious conviction of these Members that a proper and reasonable evaluation of all the factors involved clearly demonstrate it would be in the best national security and economic interest to keep this hospital operating, at least at its current level.

The resolution also reminds the Secretary that such was the express intent of the House when the Mililtary Appropriations Act of 1958 was considered by this body on July 24, 1957.

The resolution follows:

RESOLUTION BY MASSACHUSETTS DELEGATION MEMBERS OF THE UNITED STATES HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES PETITIONING DEFENSE DEPARTMENT TO CONTINUE CURRENT OPERATION OF MURPHY ARMY GENERAL HOSPITAL AT WALTHAM, MASS., IN THE NATIONAL AND MILITARY INTEREST

Whereas Murphy General Hospital in origination and intention, for the emergencies of war or national pestilence was designed as a vital unit of the military-hospital network required to adequately fulfill the military obligation; and

Whereas the catastrophes of war and pestilence currently threaten the national security; and

Whereas this general hospital is the only such hospital within the New England area and has been competently serving the whole population of that entire region; and

Whereas incalculable hardship would be inevitably visited upon wide segments of the military personnel and dependents through travel and financial expense, following any deactivation; and

Whereas Murphy General Hospital is ideally accessible by train, plane, and automobile as well as being advantageously located adjacent to one of the greatest and most renowned medical centers of the world; and

Whereas the New England area is among the very highest, if not the highest, potential military recruitment sections of the country; and

Whereas the comparative cost of military hospital care and private hospital care under the so-called Military Dependents Assistance Act demonstrates the economic advantage of treating military dependents at military hospitals; and

Whereas the financial condition and atmosphere of the Nation make it imperative for this Government to exercise the greatest diligence in the expenditure of the American taxpayers' money; and

Whereas the buildings and grounds of Murphy Army General Hospital are in excellent condition; and

Whereas it is conservatively estimated that any planned replacement of Murphy General Hospital would require the expenditure of five times more than the original cost of Murphy General Hospital; and

Whereas one of the highest legal and moral obligations of the Military Establishment is to do everything within reason to maintain and heighten the patriotic morale of military personnel and their dependents and increase the attractiveness of a military career; and

Whereas it is manifestly against the best and wisest national interest to project a dangerous and dubious gamble with military morale and career incentives: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the undersigned members of the Massachusetts delegation in the United States House of Representatives do hereby respectfully petition the Secretary of the Army, and other concerned officials of the Defense Department, to conscientiously reconsider and recall the outstanding directive that Murphy General Hospital be completely deactivated as of January 1, 1958; and be it further

Resolved, That the undersigned do hereby express their most sincere convictions that such rescinding action would be in accord with the expressed intent of the United States House of Representatives as well as the best interest of this Nation.

Signed August 29, 1957.

Passenger Ships for Trans-Pacific Trade

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HERBERT C. BONNER

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, the United States House of Representatives has a long and proud tradition of careful and thoughtful attention to the merchant marine problems of the United States. It has, as my colleagues all know, a committee primarily charged with the responsibility for this phase of our national policy.

Largely as a result of this close attention from this body, it has been possible over the decades to maintain a merchant marine, with all its allied industries and activities, which has provided indispensable strength to the Armed Forces and the commerce of the United States.

As part of its continuing close study of the merchant-marine problems of our country, your committee has, over the years, developed a program of constantly reviewing the effectiveness of our shipbuilding and ship-replacement program with Government departments and private operators. As a result, the House has been able, in past years, to anticipate the needs of the country in times of crisis and to correct abuses and mistakes which may have crept into the merchant-marine program immediately upon their discovery.

A critical problem now appears to exist in one phase of the merchant marine which strongly affects our competitive position with other merchant marines and even more strongly affects our readiness to provide for troop transport needs of the armed services. Your committee will study this problem and will be holding hearings on it as soon as possible.

The problem arises in connection with the ability of private steamship companies to replace their large passenger ships. A large passenger ship is a highly specialized piece of equipment, designed for a particular use and of value only in the particular trade for which it is designed.

To provide a balanced fleet which will include all necessary types of ships for our foreign commerce and national defense, the Federal Maritime Board requires replacement of vessels as they reach a life of 20 years and become, thereby, obsolete for the purposes of commerce and defense.

In accordance with the Merchant Marine Act of 1936, the Federal Maritime Board has required the United States Line to enter into a contract for the replacement of the steamship America, which is reaching its obsolescence point, and has equally required the American President Lines to enter into a contract to build a new large passenger vessel to operate between the Pacific coast and Far Eastern ports. Both of these operators have undertaken, in good faith, to comply with the requirement of the Government and to construct the replacement vessel. They have both found that, under the current high costs and high interest rate economy, construction of replacement vessels under the present Federal Government policy is so prohibitive in expense as to be practically impossible.

On August 19 I introduced legislation which would authorize construction of a new passenger ship for the trans-Atlantic trade. On August 23 I introduced a bill to provide for construction of a new fast passenger ship for the trans-Pacific trade. The bill would authorize a 26-knot ship with a capacity of 1,400 passengers to be built by the United States and sold to the operator with a Government contract to serve on that route, the American President Lines.

The American merchant marine in the Pacific Ocean is in serious need of new passenger-ship construction. The entire American-flag passenger-ship fleet in the Pacific, including service to the Orient, to Hawaii, to New Zealand and Australia and around the world, includes only 10 vessels of an average age of 15 years, a designed speed of 20½ knots or less and a total passenger capacity of less than 5,000.

If we are to hold our place in the face of the growing Japanese merchant fleet in the Pacific and if we are to provide ships which can serve effectively in time of emergency as troop transports, we must proceed with the building of this passenger liner for the trans-Pacific service.

Recently the Secretary of the Navy appeared before our committee and testified that 89 percent of the United States troop-lift potential is in vessels of 15½ to 20 knots speed and is thereby deficient for the requirements which an emergency will place upon it.

The bill which I have introduced does three things:

First. It recognizes that the sound national policy of the United States calls for construction of a large, fast passenger ship for the Pacific trade.

Second. It follows the provisions of the Merchant Marine Act of 1936 which has so successfully dealt with the major merchant marine problems of the country in the last 20 years.

Third. It specifies a method of financing this construction which is sound and economical both for the Government and the operator of the vessel.

Proposal Covering Creation of Governmental Agency for Financing Railroad Equipment

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHARLES A. WOLVERTON

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, the following is a summary of legislation I have introduced at this time so that it may have consideration and study prior to the next session of Congress.

PLAN

First. A new Government agency shall be created, to be known as the Railway Equipment Agency, or with some similar nomenclature, with initial capital of $500 million, with the understanding that more will be advanced by the Government from time to time as may be needed.

Second. The railroads shall have the right to apply to this equipment Agency for long-term net leases for such new equipment as they may desire. The exact length of such leases shall be on the same basis for all companies, but shall be varied in term, taking into consideration the true economic life of the type of equipment in question. For example, diesels probably should be leased for 15 years and freight cars for 20 years, and passenger equipment perhaps on a 10-year basis.

Third. The basic rental shall be determined in accordance with the following principles:

(a) During the term of the lease, the rental shall be sufficient to completely amortize the cost of the equipment, less the estimated scrap value of the equipment at present-day prices.

(b) The interest factor shall be one-fourth of 1 percent above the estimated cost of money to the Agency for the length of period involved.

(c) Interest shall be calculated on the declining balance with respect to that portion of the cost which is amortized, and on a straight line basis with respect to the portion that is not amortized, that is, estimated scrap value.

(d) The rental shall be absolutely net and all repairs of whatsoever nature shall be made by the leasing railroad.

Fourth. The Agency shall have the right to borrow up to four times its capital; in other words, up to 80 percent of the cost of the equipment. At the end of the lease for any equipment, the governmental body having control over the stockpiling of strategic materials for national defense purposes shall have the option of purchasing any equipment it desires from the transportation agency at the fair value of the equipment, to be determined at that time. Any equipment not thus purchased for stockpiling for defense purposes shall be sold for scrap by the transportation agency, with the proceeds recaptured by the transportation agency.

Fifth. Any lessee, subject to the approval of the equipment Agency, may assign its lease to any other railroad in the event it no longer has a demand for the equipment, but in no event shall the new lessee receive a lease other than for the balance of the period remaining to the original lessee. Also, in the event that any lessee defaults under the terms of its lease, the equipment Agency may recapture the equipment and re-lease it to another railroad for the remaining balance of the term, but in no event for a longer period.

Sixth. In the event there are more applications for equipment than can be handled expeditiously—this is particularly likely to be true not only at the outset but in the event of emergencies or in periods of an upsurge in traffic—the principle of allocation shall apply.

ADVANTAGE OF PLAN

A. From the standpoint of the Government:

First. The plan as outlined will not cost the Government anything, as contrasted to the subsidies handed out to other segments of the transportation industry. In addition, it is probable that the one-fourth-of-1-percent-interest differential, plus the differential between the current estimated scrap value and the ultimate scrap value or proceeds realized from sale to the Government stockpiling agency, should be sufficient to pay the costs of administration, give the Government a return on its funds, and ultimately the return of its initial capital.

Second. The Government will be assured that the railroad industry will be maintained in first-class condition, prepared for any emergency, and with adequate capacity.

Third. The Government will have an opportunity to stockpile a substantial amount of equipment against a war emergency at a relatively low cost.

Fourth. The Government will be assured of protection of the capacity of the railway-equipment industry, so vital in the event of an emergency.

Fifth. Maintenance of the physical condition of the railroads at a high level will serve as a stimulant to the peacetime economy and should bring in additional revenues in the form of income.

B. From the standpoint of the railroad industry:

First. It should be possible for the railroad industry to put its entire plant in first-class condition without damaging its credit. This is true not only with respect to rolling stock but road as well, since funds thus released from the equipment budget will be available for modernization of yards, signal control, and the roadway generally.

Second. Such a program should make it possible for the industry to expand its capacity, thus insuring its participation in the expanding economy and stimulating the latter by providing a modern, efficient, low-cost transportation system to serve its needs properly, and also further aiding the economy through its increased purchases, and on a more regularized basis, from the whole railroad-equipment industry.

Third. With a modernized efficient plant, the industry should operate more efficiently, thereby keeping costs of transportation at the lowest practicable level and at the same time earning greater profits.

Fourth. As a result of the Government agency placing the orders for much of the equipment, a far greater degree of standardization of equipment should be possible, thus reducing the overall cost of equipment and thus holding down the cost of transportation.

Fifth. Through the program outlined, the railway equipment industry should be able to put its production on much more of a mass-production basis, expand its capacity and strengthen its position.

Sixth. If the Government finds itself in the position of leasing equipment to the railroads, then obviously, because of its financial stake in the railroad industry, it will naturally have an interest in the railroads' welfare.

Seventh. This plan embodies the principle of the user paying full cost for Government services rendered. Therefore, if it goes through, it should strikingly point up by comparison the fact that certain other segments of the transportation industry are not paying their way.

Eighth. By virtue of the fact that the proposed lease arrangement would be with a Government agency rather than a private corporation, all tax questions are automatically resolved. The lease arrangement would provide what is tantamount to realistic depreciation geared to the actual economic life of the equipment. Of course in this connection we would get the depreciation in the form of tax deductible rental.

Ninth. An additional objection to the present pattern of leasing equipment from a private corporation is that it is costly by reason of the loss of the residual value. Under this plan the railroad at least gets credit for the estimated scrap value of the equipment.

C. From the standpoint of the public:

First. The public in general, both individually and through industries, will thus be assured of the finest in low-cost mass transportation at the lowest possible cost.

Second. This is adopting one hundred percent the Eisenhower administration policy that industry should pay as it goes for services rendered by the Government.

Overall, the simplicity of the plan itself has much to recommend it, together with one other important fact, namely, that it is possible to work it out on a completely voluntary basis. It is not necessary for all railroads in the industry to approve of the plan or to participate in it, but it would be available to all, and over a period of time it would appear almost a certainty that the industry as a whole would utilize it.

One Step Forward

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HERMAN P. EBERHARTER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, two days ago this House took favorable action on one of the most significant pieces of legislation to come before it in many years—the Civil Rights Act of 1957. For the first time since the Reconstruction Era, concrete action has been taken to implement the rights provided for in the 14th and 15th amendments to the Constitution, and to guarantee that they will not be denied to persons because of race, color, or creed.

I am indeed proud to have been able to vote for this legislation, for it represents a great milestone of progress, and it is action which I have always fought to obtain.

The passage of this measure was not an easy task to accomplish. It has been a long and arduous fight and one which has been constantly uphill. It is a source of great satisfaction to finally see the fruition of our labors.

I am sorry to say that the bill as finally passed by the House contained a number of amendments which I personally did not want to see included, and which I had originally opposed when the bill first came before the House for consideration.

Most important of these amendments was the one providing for a trial by jury in contempt cases. I was adamantly opposed to the adoption of such an amendment for I felt that it would unnecessarily weaken the bill, and also that there was no precedent whatsoever for providing for a trial by jury in criminal contempt cases.

Nevertheless the Senate chose to add a jury trial amendment to the bill, and it was even more unfortunate than the original one proposed in the House, for it provided for jury trials in all criminal contempt cases arising under this act or any other act. This was obviously an ill-considered move, for it would have brought about preposterous results. It would have made completely ineffectual the emergency provisions of our labor laws. Furthermore, there is no machinery even set up for trials by jury in the appeals courts and the Supreme Court.

Obviously this was unacceptable. Consequently there was proposed an amendment to limit jury trials to those contempt cases arising under this act.

A jury trial amendment of any type was difficult for me to accept, as it was for many of my colleagues; but a compromise was necessary and this was the least objectionable compromise.

The bill in its final form represented concessions from both sides. Neither side has won—neither side has lost. But from this compromise will come a gain for a segment of our society, which has been far too long denied the rights guaranteed by our Constitution.

The Civil Rights Act of 1957 has made it crystal clear that the restrictions on the right to vote because of color, race, or creed are not to be tolerated. This is a most important step, but it is only a step. We have a long way yet to go in meeting the need for legislation in this field. But we have made a start—for the first time—and we shall now renew with increased vigor our efforts to provide complete equality for all our citizens.

We must not assume either that the passage of this bill will automatically accomplish its objective. It will only be successful if it is vigorously administered by the Department of Justice, and the proposed Civil Rights Commission, and of equal importance, if there is cooperation on the part of all sections of our great country in upholding the principles set forth in this measure. To me it is a shameful thing that there have been threats made by some persons that efforts will be made in the South to frustrate the administration of this new act, and that local enforcement officers will refuse to cooperate with Federal officials relative to this measure. I sincerely trust that this will not be the case.

For this is a measure which every American should stand behind and be proud to support. Although it was enacted substantially for the benefit of a minority group, it will not only benefit the Negroes in our country—it will benefit all Americans because it is a step toward the full enjoyment of the democratic privileges we hold so dear.

Hallmarks of the Opposition

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHARLES O. PORTER

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, misinformation, misunderstanding, and a persistent refusal to debate the issues on the floor of the House continue to be the hallmarks of the opposition offered my view on Latin America by the senior and distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. REECE] and several other Members.

In the RECORD, pages 15711-15712, for August 22, 1957, the gentleman takes me to task for violating the historical secrecy of the grand jury because the New York Times for August 22, 1957, carried a story about my appearance before the grand jury investigating the Murphy-Galindez cases.

If the gentleman had bothered to check with my office or with the Department of Justice, he would have learned that the Department had informed me that I was at liberty to make any statements I desired about my appearance before the grand jury. I consulted them in advance and I disclosed nothing that would in any way interfere with assignment of the grand jury and the duties of the Justice Department lawyers.

The gentleman takes exception to my suggestions that the grand jury indict Trujillo and invite the Dominican Ambassador to appear just as I did. The gentleman's implication that I recommended subpenaing the Ambassador is unwarranted. Just as I was invited to appear so could Ambassador de Moya be invited. His appearance would give the jury an opportunity to hear Trujillo's leading apologist and if the jury chooses to consider indicting Trujillo, this seems only fair.

As for the gentleman's shock over my suggestion that Trujillo be indicted for the murder of Gerry Murphy, I note the gentleman does not discuss Trujillo's guilt or innocence. The point he raises is that of the propriety of a Member of this body suggesting American legal action against the sovereign of an allied country.

Does not the gentleman know that we are talking about the Dominican Republic? That its president is Hector Trujillo and that it has a legislative body that makes its laws? This fellow, Rafael Trujillo, is only the top general but there is no constitutional basis for calling him the sovereign, and we are, right now, talking about the legal situation; are we not?

American grand juries have often issued indictments where we did not at the time have jurisdiction over the person indicted. If Rafael Trujillo wants this matter settled, let him submit himself to our jurisdiction for the kind of fair trial he could never get in a country like his own.

Whether or not he ever does come within the reach of our legal process is beside the point so far as the grand jury is concerned. Their job is to determine whether any crimes have been committed and to bring indictments against the person or persons they believe, on the basis of evidence, to be responsible.

That he is actually the dictator of an "allied" nation gives him no immunity from indictment. Does the gentleman believe the grand jury owes Trujillo some sort of courtesy to the degree that the grand jury should overlook the overwhelming evidence against him? Perhaps the gentleman would have the grand jury consult the State Department for permission to do its sworn duty?

The principles of international law cited by the gentleman from Tennessee are fine—in their place. They do not apply here.

In conclusion, the gentleman should know, as he could have learned very easily, that I was invited by the grand jury to appear before them. I did in no manner solicit the invitation although I was happy to appear. They wanted my opinion and the basis for it. I told them, as I have said publicly for many months, that Rafael Trujillo was criminally responsible for the murder of my constituent, Gerry Murphy, and that the evidence was already largely established by the FBI and has appeared in notes from our State Department to the so-called Dominican Republic.

But the gentleman, I recall, apparently does not care to discuss the evidence. He prefers to say there is none and to confine himself to matters of "propriety" where, I regret to say, his factual premises are false and his legal principles inapplicable.

It is my hope, perhaps a vain one, that the opposition to my views about our Latin American policy will see fit, in the second session of the 85th Congress, to take the trouble to inform itself and to debate these important issues on the floor of the House in keeping with the great tradition of this most eminent of all deliberative assemblies.

Legislation Resulting From the Banking and Currency Committee's Illinois Investigation

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. PAUL H. DOUGLAS

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a transcript of my regular radio-television report of August 24, 1957, with Robert A. Wallace, staff director of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee. The subject of the report was a review of legislation resulting from the Banking Committee's Illinois investigation last fall.

There being no objection, the transcript was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senator DOUGLAS. We have with us Mr. Robert Wallace, the staff director of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee.

Now, Bob, you directed the Senate Banking Committee's Illinois investigation of the Hodge scandal and found out that the Illinois State Auditor, Orville Hodge, had stolen some $2½ million from State funds. As a result of that investigation, we have passed some legislation in the Senate which is now before the House. Before we get into the specifics of handling State and local funds would you summarize briefly what our Senate bill provides and why?

Mr. WALLACE. Well, Paul, as a result of the Hodge investigation the Senate passed the bill you mentioned making some basic technical changes in our banking laws. These changes will make our bank deposits safer, when they are insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, and protect us all from unsound banking practices. They will guard us against abuse of authority by Federal officials. They will make it impossible for anyone to own a large block of a bank's stock secretly, as in the case of Orville Hodge's secret ownership of stock in the Elmwood Park Bank.

Senator DOUGLAS. What about the abuses which occur when public officials such as State and local treasurers shake down banks for contributions because they have money on deposit there? And what about abuses where banks give money to these officials in return for interest-free deposits of State and local government funds?

Mr. WALLACE. I think one of the most important reforms to come from our Hodge investigation is the provision in the Senate bill which would prohibit payoffs by bankers to public officials who have the power to grant or withhold favors to a bank.

Senator DOUGLAS. That formerly was true of national banks, and our bill would apply it not merely to national banks but also to State banks that are in the Federal Reserve System or are insured in the FDIC.

Mr. WALLACE. Yes, but we went beyond that. Our reform would prohibit not only banks from making gifts to these public officials but it would also make it illegal for the bankers themselves to do it.

Senator DOUGLAS. That is very necessary, because we ought to control the left-hand pocket as well as the right-hand pocket.

Mr. WALLACE. Yes. We found that the two banks involved in our investigation were up to their ears in politics. The millions of dollars of State and county money had to be kept somewhere, and these banks found they could get the use of it at bargain interest rates, or even free, when they made contributions for the benefit of State and county treasurers and public administrators.

One public official deposited a million dollars of publicly controlled money in one of the banks in an interest-free account, which means that the bank got free use of the million dollars. The bank could turn around and loan that money out for 6 percent. That meant an extra $60,000 earnings every year for the bank. The main stockholder in the bank, Mr. Leon Marcus, who has since been murdered, gave $4,600 to this public official for his personal or political use. He swore he paid this money in order to get these deposits. That is the type of thing that the Senate bill would outlaw.

Senator DOUGLAS. Let me ask you this—don't you think a much larger proportion of the public funds which are deposited in banks should bear interest?

Mr. WALLACE. They certainly should. We found in our investigation that the State treasurer of Illinois controls over $200 million of State funds deposited in banks over the State. The interest payments amounted to $1,500,000, less than 1 percent. Proper management of this money ought to bring in at least 3 percent at a minimum. That would mean an extra $3 million to Illinois taxpayers on these deposits alone.

Senator DOUGLAS. Now, this is true not merely of State funds, but of county funds, too, is it not?

Mr. WALLACE. Yes, that is true of county funds, too.

It seems that all through the history of the Illinois offices of State treasurer, county treasurer, and public administrator, the handling of taxpayers' money and other publicly controlled funds has been sloppy and slipshod. We can legislate against shakedowns and payoffs, but unless we citizens of Illinois get more interested in how our money is handled, we are going to lose millions of dollars. These millions could help reduce taxes, or build schools, or any number of things. But this money certainly should not be permitted to slip through the fingers of our public officials and go to people who don't need it, especially on the basis of gifts to the public officials who allocate it.

Senator Douglas. And, in some municipalities, though I believe not in Chicago, city funds are also involved.

Mr. Wallace. Yes, city funds. Then there are the other funds such as the proceeds from the sale of toll road bonds, school bonds, and other trust funds. The Illinois State treasurer manages over a billion dollars of our money.

Senator Douglas. I understand on the Illinois toll bond issues, we are paying interest before the money is being used, and that we are losing around $17 million a year.

Mr. Wallace. That was the $400 million issue and they haven't started using all of it yet. Normally such huge bond issues are issued as the money is needed, saving a great deal in interest charges.

This problem of management of our tax money is truly serious. During the Hodge investigation, we found that there were over 500 banks in which State treasurers would deposit money. I went through case after case where State deposits in a particular bank had been increased, saying to different State treasurers who had allocated such funds "Now why did you increase this bank's deposits?" The answer would be, "Well, Joe Smith, this friend of mine, has a hand in that bank, and I wanted to do old Joe a favor." Now that is a bad way to manage the public funds of Illinois taxpayers and it is terribly wasteful.

Senator Douglas. The Senate bill, if passed by the House, will help, but you think what is needed is a greater sense of responsibility by depositing officials and by the general public and by the bankers themselves. Is that correct?

Mr. Wallace. Absolutely. But let me make one point clear in this regard. I talked to a lot of bankers, too. I think most bankers would favor outlawing gifts which smack of payoffs. At the moment, some politician can come around and demand that the bankers give contributions and it amounts to a shakedown. In fact, it smells of bribery. Now if the Senate bill goes through the House and becomes law, it will protect the bankers from these unscrupulous politicians who come around demanding money.

Senator Douglas. Well, Bob, I think you did a fine piece of work in that investigation, and your results bore fruit in the Senate bill. Now I hope that the people of Illinois may become concerned about this matter and move on their end to clean up the situation. Thank you very much, Bob.

New Horizons for Agriculture

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HUBERT H. HUMPHREY
OF MINNESOTA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, because it was necessary for me to remain in Washington, Tuesday, August 27, to vote on important legislation, I was compelled to cancel a scheduled address before the annual convention of the American Soybean Association, meeting jointly with the National Soybean Processors Association.

Because it contains a message I feel needs to be emphasized, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record the text of the address I had prepared for delivery to the Nation's soybean producers.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

New Horizons for American Agriculture

(Address by Senator Hubert H. Humphrey, of Minnesota, before the 37th annual convention of the American Soybean Association, Hotel Leamington, Minneapolis, Minn., August 27, 1957)

It is indeed a pleasure for me to have this opportunity to meet with the American Soybean Association. You represent a dramatic and still unfolding chapter in our country's agricultural history.

We in Minnesota are proud to be hosts to this national convention, because soybean production is now a well-established hundred-million-dollar crop to farmers in our State. In addition, the annual soybean crop in Minnesota is providing hundreds of thousands of man-hours of employment in the marketing, transportation, and processing fields. I am pleased to know that the National Soybean Processors Association is holding its convention simultaneously with the American Soybean Association, as the close working relationships between soybean processors and soybean producers has been one of the healthy factors in successful advancement of your industry. You need to work together. You have much in common. Your destinies are linked together. Too often that fact is overlooked.

Soybeans have become a billion-dollar crop in the United States. This commodity represents a vitally important segment of our agricultural economy.

Perhaps nowhere has the rapid rise in soybean production been more graphically exemplified than right here in Minnesota, where soybean acreage has grown from 2,000 acres in 1934 to 2.8 million acres planted this year. In other words, the acreage devoted to soybeans in Minnesota has increased 1,400 times in 24 years. Minnesota has now risen to be the second most important soybean producing State in the Nation, second only to Illinois. Last year, we produced 12 percent of the total national output. And I want to serve notice on our friends in Illinois: we do not stand still in Minnesota. Our soybean producing area is still growing. Our increase in total soybean acreage has resulted from increases in both the number of producers growing soybeans, and the number of acres planted per farm. In 1934, only 4 percent of the Minnesota farmers planted soybeans. This grew to 10 percent by 1944, 20 percent by 1949, and approximately 40 percent by 1956. It will be higher this year and next. Already, soybeans provide 1 out of every 4 dollars of cash income from the sale of crops in Minnesota.

You cannot look into the dramatic story of soybean production in Minnesota without wanting to pay deserved tribute to such men of vision as R. E. Hodgson, superintendent of the Southeast Experiment Station in Waseca, who began working with soybean crops in the early 1920's, and John Evans of Montevideo, who was a real pioneer in the growing of soybeans in Minnesota, as early as 1917. Of course, there are many, many others who occupied a vital role in development of this great agricultural industry.

This $100 million Minnesota crop represents an outstanding success in the large scale introduction of a new cash crop into the well established cropping systems of our State. It reflects great credit on the coordinated efforts of our farmers, merchandisers, experiment stations, technicians, processors, machinery manufacturers, and many other groups. Minnesota is proud of this contribution to the Nation's well-being, for that is what our expansion of soybean production has been.

Because it relates to a theme I wish to develop later, I think it is fair to say that the greatest spur to this vast expansion of soybean acreage, in Minnesota and elsewhere, was patriotic response of our farmers to Government requests to help meet our own Nation's food and fiber needs.

Soybean acreage in Minnesota and in the Nation was relatively small until the start of World War II. Prior to the war, we were net importers of edible oils. When some offshore sources were shut off, the Government called for an expansion in soybean acreage. You producers met that demand, just as you have historically met every demand for our Nation's needs.

It is well for the public to remember that. It is sometimes too easy for urban residents to forget how dependent they are upon the Nation's farmers—and how well our dwindling farm population has always provided abundantly for the needs of all our people.

The experience gained in producing the crop required to meet the Nation's needs in time of emergency was the basis for the further expansion in the postwar period.

Today, instead of a net importer, we are the world's greatest exporters of edible oils and soybeans.

It took courage, and vision, for you in the soybean producing and processing industry to keep your sights on the future, instead of retreating to standards of the past. You have shown that courage and vision, and it is paying off. You are going to need more of it, in order to prove to some skeptics that agriculture and agricultural thinking does not have to be geared to the past.

At a time when most spokesmen for agriculture were talking about cutting back production, about adjusting backward from wartime peaks, about trimming our sails to prewar standards, you soybean producers proved you could not only hold your wartime gains, but could still move ahead. You did it by working together toward seeking out and capturing new markets. You did it by keeping your eyes on the lookout for new and broader horizons, instead of retreating to the past.

Of course, you had a unique commodity to work with—a commodity combining two of the world's greatest nutritional needs: edible oils, and protein.

In a real sense, therefore, your markets are worldwide and expanding, limited only by your own imagination and enterprise in going after them—and by the living standards of the world.

We are investing huge foreign aid funds in trying to raise living standards in underdeveloped areas of the world—and your potential markets improve as those living standards improve. Meanwhile, it is important that eating habits be cultivated as part of your market development.

For that purpose, I am convinced that even relief feeding operations making use of both oil and protein are important to the future of your industry. The demand for both is virtually unlimited. Every voluntary agency working in this field has appealed for our Government to find ways to make more fats and oils available, and I have seen in my own observations that they are needed for balanced diets.

I am sure many of you are also aware of the wonderful work being done by the Meals for Millions Foundation, seeking to fight starvation in the world by providing high protein diet supplements financed entirely by voluntary donations—a penny-a-meal project that is worthy of your support. I hope your organization will get behind such efforts, as part of your market development work.

Domestically, your markets have been divided between production of a high value protein animal feed, soybean meal, and a versatile human food ingredient, soybean oil.

As producers, it has been to your own self-interest to seek a greater share of your return from the oil ingredient of your beans. It has also been to the best interest of your fellow farmers, as it is farmers themselves who buy the soybean meal in one form or another.

The soybean meal pouring out of our great processing plants is the foundation stone of the mixed feed industry as we know it today. Eighty-eight percent of the farmers in Minnesota buy at least part of their feed. Many of you soybean producers also buy mixed feed for your cattle, hogs, or chickens.

With your soybean production, you are helping to provide yourselves and others with highly desirable feed ingredients. And the more you develop substantial outlets for your oil, the more you can afford to encourage an expanded livestock economy by making a high value protein feed available at reasonable prices for yourself and others.

There are other sound reasons, from the standpoint of balance in the overall picture of American agriculture, to continue encouraging the shift that has been underway to soybean production.

Additional acres going into soybeans mean fewer acres in other commodities with which we face greater problems.

In Minnesota, for example, while soybean acreage increased from 767,000 acres in 1949 to 2.6 million acres in 1956, the acreage of feed grains and wheat was reduced by 1.5 million acres in 1956 compared with the total in 1949.

I know the question that must be arising in the minds of some. If we continue to encourage this shift, are we just setting the stage for transferring the surplus problem of some of these other commodities onto the shoulders of soybean producers?

Let me just say this—it does not have to happen, and I do not think it will. With the vision and enterprise shown by the soybean industry in its research and market development program, with the kind of cooperation that has been maintained between soybean producers and processors, with the vast backlog of need that exists in the world for both the oil and protein ingredients of your product, a bright vista of future opportunity still exists for the soybean industry.

Whether or not you achieve the full potential of that future opportunity, however, will depend upon the sympathetic understanding, and the vision or lack of vision, of your Government. Make no mistake about it: Regardless of what farm legislation is on the statute books, Government attitude and policy—and the attitude and policies of those making vital administrative decisions within Government—have now and will continue to have a profound effect upon your economic opportunity.

To the extent that your Government has the foresight to look deeply into the future, and work hand-in-hand with you and with the private trade toward creating a helpful economic climate for your continued expansion, there is no reason why the future should not be bright for soybean producers.

But to the extent that your Government is timid and blind, afraid to lift its eyes to new horizons, unimaginative in planning ahead, and unwilling to take full advantage of the experience and guidance of the private trade, your path could become a rocky one.

It is not my intention tonight to engage in a controversial discussion of farm legislation, as important as that may be. Time would not permit fully developing the justifiable case for greater economic protection for agriculture as being truly in the public's interest.

But I do express serious concern, without partisanship, over some of the administration attitudes toward whatever legislation exists.

I am convinced that much of the depressed plight of American agriculture today is directly traceable to administrative decisions and policies within the Department of Agriculture, regardless of what laws are on the books. Timid, fumbling, bungling, shortsighted decisions that deprive you of fair income, and at the same time take more out of the pockets of other taxpayers, characterizes the farm policy of the administration.

And, I might add, more and more people are coming to the same conclusion—people with years of valuable experience in the handling of farm commodities, and people to whom this administration would normally look for all-out support.

I am equally convinced that the present Secretary of Agriculture has at his disposal ample authority, in way of legislative and economic tools to bolster or depress farm prices and farm income almost at will.

Let me give you some examples.

While giving lipservice to the free market the Commodity Credit Corporation (the CCC) has made it impossible for any semblance of a free market to operate on many of our commodities. It has dumped corn to undersell the free market, in competition with the growers, driving prices down below the support levels so that in turn more corn must be taken over by the Government. By its own sales policies it has forced more and more of the grain business to go through Government hands, rather than less and less as it should be.

You have been more fortunate in soybeans, but you too are to a great extent at the mercy of Department of Agriculture administrative decisions. Until the recent takeover, CCC had not lost any money in supporting the price of soybeans. As a matter of fact, the Government's operations to bolster soybean prices had resulted in a $4 million profit.

With a little courage and foresight, the Department of Agriculture could have avoided any takeover of beans from producers this year. Just a few more export sales of oil at the right time would have bolstered the free market sufficiently to attract beans out of growers' hands and into the private trade. Producers' prices would have been bolstered and the Government takeover limited.

Timing is of the essence. Too often the CCC has withdrawn from export operations just before harvest season, moving back in to bolster the market only after most of the beans are out of producers' hands and owned by speculators.

This year is no exception. We need export commitments soon, to bolster the market while beans are in the hands of the producers. I hope our friends here from the Department of Agriculture will heed that advice.

Now, don't misunderstand me. The soybean industry has some good friends in the Department of Agriculture. Some of them are here with you, like Gwynn Garnett and Martin Sorkin. Yet, I am sure even they would concede privately that they are often overruled by men of lesser knowledge and understanding in the hierarchy of agricultural bureaucracy. Your task as organized producers is to insist that the interests of growers comes foremost in the highest decision making levels of the Department. Fortunately, you have had the support of the processors as well in urging the Department of Agriculture to give more attention to the proper timing of its export commitments, for maximum beneficial effect on the market before beans are all acquired by speculators.

Perhaps I have talked too much tonight about soybeans—and I know you have plenty of experts meeting with you far more familiar than I could hope to be with your own particular problems. But if I have devoted considerable time to discussing your own commodity, it is primarily because your soybean industry is symbolic of the major points I want to make tonight—points that concern all agriculture, and the entire Nation's attitude toward agriculture.

Your own growth is the result largely of response to the Nation's needs in one period of emergency, and your future is closely interwoven with another emergency—the entire Free World's struggle for survival.

That same thing is true about most of American agriculture.

Your destiny cannot be determined by you alone, in a period when survival of freedom in the world must transcend even the most pressing domestic problems.

That is also true about the rest of American agriculture.

Its destiny is linked inseparably with our struggle against the cunning, imperialistic forces of communism threatening to engulf the world—and with the degree of recognition we receive as to the vital importance of agriculture's role in that struggle.

You have had the vision and enterprise to seek new horizons for your markets rather than be satisfied with the past, and all agriculture needs to raise its sights to the broader concept of meeting the needs of the world in which we live, under conditions that exist in the world today.

But if agriculture needs to broaden its horizons, even more so is that need evident in the highest levels of our Government.

If, in fact, that need is recognized at some levels within the Department of Agriculture today, it is not being adequately reflected in its current policies—nor is it being aggressively pursued and championed beyond the realm of the Department of Agriculture into the State Department, the National Security Council, and the White House.

The greatest hope for American agriculture today rests in building markets abroad, both for the present and for the future.

The greatest hope for strengthening the bonds linking our allies of the Free World in an all-out stand against the onward march of communism is solidifying our economic and cultural ties.

These two objectives are too interlocked for either to be considered alone.

As a result, agriculture's future rests to a great degree upon the extent to which we recognize its vital role in international trade, and make wiser use of our abundance to supply the needs of other people who might otherwise be compelled by necessity or naivete to turn to the Soviet orbit for food and fiber to survive.

We as a nation are blind indeed if we are willing to rest our hopes entirely upon guns, planes, and bombs.

As vital as adequate defense forces remain for our protection, all they can buy us is time. How we use that time is up to us—but our fate hangs in the balance.

Russia is making shrewd use of its time. The cunning rulers in the Kremlin have shifted at least for a time, from military warfare to economic warfare—and are making more progress with trade than they were able to achieve with guns. They have moved their tentacles into country after country, in part or in whole, under the guise of economic agreements and expanded foreign trade operations.

Make no mistake about it: countries becoming more and more dependent upon the Iron Curtain area of the world for food or manufactured goods are enmeshed more and more into the Soviet web, and slowly but surely are being weaned away from the remnants of the Free World.

The greatest weakness that has confronted Russia in this calculated economic penetration of neutral areas has been its own shortage of food and fiber. Yet Russia has been shrewd enough to recognize that fact, and has given top priority to expanding its food output. Not for its own people, but as an economic weapon in a world which above all else must have food.

What have we been doing, in this same period? We have been asking our farm people to lower their sights, to trim their sails, to cut their production to pre-war standards. We have been told downward adjustment is necessary. We have been guided into looking backward, instead of looking ahead.

Regretfully, the highest policymakers in our Government fail to appreciate the greatest weapon for peace in our hands—our abundance of food and fiber, and our potential to produce in still greater abundance.

We are going into a fight for our lives, with one hand tied behind our backs. We are failing to mobilize and fully use our greatest asset.

Timidity and hesitancy still lead our Government officials to look upon our food export programs as merely emergency surplus disposal legislation—a way to get out of a domestic problem, instead of the most effective way at our command of building economic ties for the future.

Remember one thing: the instinct for human survival is stronger than any conviction about ideology. People are going to eat. If we don't fill the food needs of the world, Russia will set out to fill them. She has already chartered her course in that direction.

The country upon which the greater part of the world is dependent for food, fiber, and other trade will eventually wield the balance of power in the world. We are losing, today, on this economic front.

What good is it for us to build bigger H-bombs, if we let the rest of the world become slowly linked to the Iron Curtain countries by economic and trade policies?

Where in this Government today do you see full realization of that fact?

Where do you see any aggressive leadership toward assuming the role we Americans are best equipped to fill in the current ideological struggle—best equipped by productive resources and humanitarian instincts?

We are far from a militaristic people, yet we seem to rest too much of our hope on weapons.

Are we ready to choose the battlefield as our best grounds to meet Soviet Russia? Remember, Russia is outdoing us in the training of scientists and engineers. Remember, Russia has H-bombs, too. Remember, Russia has less respect for human life than we do, and might more readily welcome a military showdown.

The real material advantage we have over Russia today is our abundance of food. All of us would rather see it put to good use, rather than just be piled up in storage. And we Americans are naturally traders and merchandisers; the role of finding ways to feed the world fits us a lot more naturally than the role of warriors.

Why, then, are we hesitant about challenging Russia on the economic front? Why shouldn't we, instead of Russia, be aggressively seeking to become the world's supplier of the material wants of less-developed countries?

I will give you my conclusions.

First, we are blinded by the almighty dollar. It has become almost a fetish for timid Government officials to worry about doing business anywhere in the world for anything but American dollars.

My friends, let me remind you of something: we are in a struggle for international survival of freedom, not just haggling about the price of a cow over the fence with a neighbor on the back 40.

We are spending billions of good, hard American dollars for weapons, dollars you pay for in taxes—and dollars that can never do any constructive good in the world after they have been turned into tanks and H-bombs. If the international situation is serious enough to justify such vast defense expenditures—and our military leaders assure us it is—we are certainly silly to be quibbling over the loss of a few American dollars through the export sale of farm products for foreign currencies.

If we expect to compete with Russia for international trade in the world of today, we must be ready to trade in whatever currencies are available. We cannot hoard all the dollars ourselves, then be willing to sell or trade only for dollars that others do not have.

It is something like being in a poker game, and getting all the chips back in the hands of the dealer. The rest may decide to go on playing with matches or buttons. If we want to stay in the game, we will have to find ways to adapt to matches or buttons too.

We are in the international game to the finish, whether we like it or not. If we insist on sitting on the sidelines as spectators, we have no right to complain about the outcome. But if we want to protect and strengthen our ties with other freedom loving people, we are going to have to trade with them—whether it is for lire, pesos, pounds, francs, or marks.

It is not as though we did not have good uses for foreign currencies. We are engaged in Government operations all over the world. We have defense bases all over the world. We have private American business interests all over the world. We certainly can use constructively the foreign currencies we obtain through sale of our farm products abroad—and official records of our Government prove it.

But there is still a second reason why we are failing to meet the Soviet challenge on the economic front.

It is the timidity of our Government officials, and their lack of vision, imagination, and daring. They fail to understand what a powerful force for fredom our abundance of food and fiber could be, both in economic relationships and as humanitarian evidence of our concern for hungry people everywhere.

To most of the officials in our Government at Washington today, our food abundance is just some kind of a domestic headache they would like to wish away. They simply fail to appreciate what an asset it really is. Perhaps the greatest disservice done to our country—not just to farm people, but to our entire country—has been the propaganda role of the Secretary of Agriculture in creating the impression that there is something bad about having more than enough food to go around. Apparently, to try to win a political argument, Secretary Benson stands guilty of bringing American agriculture in disrepute.

Far more is at stake than any political argument over farm policy. Our country's entire future is involved. Instead of criticizing farmers, the American people should be thanking God for our abundance, and insisting upon its wise use as a weapon of freedom, a potent force for peace.

Instead of quibbling about his personal philosophy on farm legislation Secretary Benson should have the courage to stand up to the President and the rest of the Cabinet and defend our farmers as being one segment of our economy fully prepared to serve our country in this emergency.

We need a Secretary of Agriculture today who can convince the President, the Secretary of State, and the National Security Council of the great asset you farm people have put at the country's disposal—and one who will fight to see that our abundance is fully used internationally to turn the tide for freedom.

We need a Secretary of Agriculture who will stand up and tell the truth to the American people—that every cent invested in protecting our farm producers is an investment in our Nation's security, just as much as the money spent for tanks and guns.

We need a Secretary of Agriculture with the vision to realize that whatever costs are involved in aggressively seeking out and gaining foreign markets for farm products today not only serves the best interest of our international relations, but actually is a sound investment toward building future markets for American farmers in the years of peace we seek ahead.

I have not come to these conclusions lightly. Many of you know that I spent a month overseas this year to see for myself whether real opportunities existed for the kind of food utilization I have long envisioned. I have talked with our military commanders abroad. I have talked with our diplomatic representatives. I have talked with highest officials of other governments. I have talked with American businessmen abroad. I have talked with our churchworkers and representatives of CARE carrying on such a valuable people-to-people relief work abroad.

On every hand the answer was the same. It is a national disgrace that our country fails to realize the potential asset it has in an abundance of food and fiber, in the midst of a world of hunger and need.

Since my return, I have devoted long hours to conducting weeks of hearings before the Senate Committee on Agriculture into operations of Public Law 480, under which our farm export programs are conducted. From witness after witness before our committee, from every agency of our Government and from producers as well as the private trade, the evidence has been conclusively the same.

Yet our Secretary of Agriculture, as late as last week, reiterated his belief that Public Law 480 was just emergency surplus disposal legislation. The same view has been echoed by spokesmen in the White House.

They fail to lift their eyes, to the broader horizons involved. They lack the comprehension that even you farm people have that food can be a greater asset than guns, at a time when peace of the world is at stake.

They lack the vision that your own American Soybean Association has displayed, in gearing your goals to the future.

We can argue forever about farm policy, but we can have little basis for agreement as to what legislation is needed until we first arrive at some appreciation of the role American agriculture can and should play in our international relations.

We cannot solve problems of the present, based on thinking of the past.

We cannot adequately meet challenges of the future, guided only by standards of even the present.

We cannot solve agriculture's problems by thinking of agriculture as just an isolated, minority segment of our economy. We must have a broader view, and realize that we are no longer confronted just with a problem of surpluses and depressed farm income. We must fully realize that our agriculture can and should be an integral part of winning freedom in the world. In that context, we need abundant production as a vital part of our defense arsenal, and we can certainly afford, in the Nation's interests, seeing that our producers are properly and fairly regarded for fulfilling our Nation's needs.

We urgently need to lift our eyes, and raise our sights. We need to broaden our concepts. We need to look for new horizons and we need to be thankful that America's farmers have always been ready to fulfill our Nation's needs, however they may be neglected and abused between national awakenings to our dependence upon them.

We need such a national awakening today.

My personal crusade has been to stir such an awakening, such a realization of the real importance of our abundance of food and fiber. Your help is needed. Between now and the first of the year, every effort should be made to get our country's top policymakers to take a more serious look at the role our food abundance can play in bolstering the Free World and strengthening our economic and trade ties all over the globe.

When Congress reconvenes in January, it is my intention to submit a series of recommendations for improvement and expansion of Public Law 480 along those lines. You can rest assured we are going to ask for more than just a 1-year extension of this authority. We are going to ask that it be recognized as a foreign-trade policy of our Government, not just as a tool for getting rid of surpluses.

Let me leave you with another thought. In time of war, we recognized the importance of food and fiber went far beyond just farm people. We created a War Food Administration, to mobilize our food resources for victory. Perhaps today, in time of a shaky and uncertain peace in the world, it is time to think about a similar role for a special "Peace Food Administrator" to guide more effective use of our food resources for another victory.

It is just as important to mobilize and use our resources for winning on the trade and economic front today, as it was to help win on the battlefront a few years ago. It is even more important to use our food abundance as a constructive force for peace on the humanitarian front, in the ideological struggle now dividing the world.

If we fail to get the leadership we need in that direction from the Department of Agriculture, we must turn to the White House. If we fail to gain the full understanding we need anywhere in the executive branch, Congress itself must intervene and show the way.

I urge your support in that effort. For only then can you and others in agriculture reach the new horizons that beckon from all over the world.

Address by Hon. Lister Hill, of Alabama, Before the Alabama Library Association

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. LISTER HILL

OF ALABAMA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD an address which I delivered on April 12, 1957, before the Alabama Library Association, at Tuscaloosa, Ala.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ADDRESS OF SENATOR LISTER HILL BEFORE THE ALABAMA LIBRARY ASSOCIATION, TUSCALOOSA, ALA., APRIL 12, 1957

Mr. Chairman, librarians, trustees, and friends, I am honored and happy to be with you, who know so much about the past and present, to discuss with you the library of the future. It is altogether fitting that our theme, the library of the future, be considered at this trustees luncheon, for I know that all librarians will agree that without a firm reliance on the interest, the support, the sacrifice and the leadership of the trustees of our libraries, we could not hopefully contemplate the library of the future or have and cherish the blessings that flow from the library of today. We congratulate you and thank you, our library trustees, for your selfless devotion to the cause of enriching the lives of our people by giving of your time and your efforts to bring knowledge and culture to our towns and cities, to our rural communities and to the very hearthstone of our homes throughout the land.

We live in an era so remarkable for its contrasts that we can talk of the library of the future—which is now actually in the making—at the very time when, in many parts of the United States, the library of the present is nonexistent. While I speak about the library of tomorrow I am just as interested in the librarian of today.

Of all the varied impacts on man's progress by the forces that have influenced it—religion, education, politics, war, and man's quest for peace and freedom—the institution that contributed mightily and affirmatively along with the others, and received the minimum of the plaudits of history, is the library. The library seems to have assigned to itself the role of doing its job and saying nothing about it.

Emerson said: "Meek young men grow up in libraries"—but I think Emerson was wrong. We cannot read the library bill of rights adopted by the Council of the American Library Association in Atlantic City in 1948 without being impressed with the courage and forthrightness of the American librarian.

This document is important not only for that which is in it, but more significantly for that which is not in it. We might have anticipated that librarians were demanding their rights; that librarians were raising justifiable protests against the indifference of a society that ignored their services and paid them poorly. Instead they were putting themselves, their reputations, their means of livelihood, at stake for the basic American freedoms: Freedom of speech, freedom from censorship of books, freedom of thought, freedom from cultural suppression, freedom to use libraries for purposes of assembly. The document was in its way like a pronouncement from Mount Sinai or an echo of the Continental Congress.

Some of the figures on library systems in the United States must sound distressing to a proud American presented with the administration's budget for 1958 totalling $71.8 billion. As chairman of the Senate Committee on Labor, Health, Education, and Welfare I cannot begin to tell you of my astonishment at certain data on the public library in America. I found myself obliged to report in connection with my then proposed Library Services Act, that of the 7,500 public-library systems in the Nation, 60 percent have less than $4,000 per year for operating expenses; 15 States have available for library services less than 50 cents per capita annually; 15 States have available for this purpose less than $1; 15 States have available less than $1.50; and only 3 States have available $1.50 or more annually. Recent studies by the American Library Association conclude that $3 in annual per capita expenditure is necessary for minimum library services, and not a single State has thus far even approached this figure.

The people and our democracy suffer from this wholly inadequate support. Librarians suffer, especially those in the lower range of library administration and those in charge of the smaller and inadequate libraries.

We must raise the level of the librarian's salary from its present rank among the lowest in all employed groups in America to a level in keeping with the librarian's professional responsibilities. Counted into the budget scheme in estimating salaries, should be the 5 years of formal education beyond high school called for by your profession. The salary should reflect moreover, the constant necessity in this fast-moving age for keeping informed on library changes and developments. It should reflect also the increasingly difficult task of making the initial salary high enough to attract professional people who meet your progressively higher standards. In 1956 there were 12 jobs for every graduate of a library school.

The hour demands that we give the librarian a salary which will enable him to enjoy a good standard of living, to permit recreation and travel, continued study and educational growth, and provide security in old age. We must recognize the essential worth and dignity of the librarian and assure full opportunity to take part in the life of the community.

How can simple justice be more elementary than this.

Why should a librarian be expected to take anything less?

It is evident that libraries—like our schools—raise the level of democracy by educating, by inspiring democracy's thinking and developing its leadership. History convinces us that the library is not only a highly desirable supplement to the school, but often a substitute for it. The galaxy of the world's great men contains the portraits of many whose formal schooling was extremely meager, but whose scholarship was profound because their education came from books somehow made available to them. Benjamin Franklin, one of the wisest and most versatile of all Americans, had little formal education. John Marshall, who took the skeleton of the Constitution of the United States and clothed it with flesh and blood, had less than a year of formal schooling. Of what university was Shakespeare a graduate? Lincoln's school was mostly a handful of books, and Thomas A. Edison went to school less than 3 months. Could it not then be said that the library, in one form or another, public or private, pathetically small or larger and prouder, made possible the contributions of these giants of history? And how many thousands, how many millions whose collective contribution to life and progress is immense, but who individually were less noted, have in the same way contributed to the fruits of man's progress?

Education such as the library affords constitutes the bread and wine of life for a democracy. It is thus that we were appalled at the spectacle of 27 million Americans in a population of 168 million without public library services and 53 million people with inadequate library services. So much of this cultural deprivation of so many Americans occurs in the rural areas. Here there are either no libraries at all or only the most inadequate library service. In the Congress, therefore, we passed what we are proud to call the Library Services Act.

This act, which I sponsored for 10 years before it was finally passed by the 84th Congress in the spring of 1956 will bring books and learning to the 27 million Americans. Under the terms of the act, Congress authorized $7½ million to be appropriated in each of the next 5 years beginning in 1956–57, on a matching basis, to the States. The administration of the act will conform, as you know, with State and local conditions. Funds are to be granted based on the rural population of the State as compared to the rural population of the United States. And the money is matched by the State on the basis of the per capita income of the State as compared to the national per capita income.

The State, of course, determines its personnel, books, and materials, without interference from the Federal Government. The State plan is administered under the authority of the State library agency, and in my judgment, the autonomy of the States in the matter of library policy is complete.

The act follows a well-established formula in general Federal-State relationships. There is one aspect that is new: The establishment of library facilities where they were formerly lacking so that no American can ever again be said to have been kept out of the reach of books, the culture they bring, and the self-improvement they inspire.

A democracy like ours in its own enlightened self-interest should do no less.

I share your gratification over the fact that the Office of Education approved the Alabama State library plan on March 15 last and the funds for Alabama were made available as of March 1.

Alabama, we learned from the December 1956 Library Journal, proposes to use the funds to be made available under the act (1) to strengthen the State public library service division; (2) to make development grants to already established regional libraries; and (3) to provide establishment grants to new regional libraries, bringing together present smaller units and unserved areas.

Alabama will be a principal beneficiary of the Library Services Act, for in addition to the educational and cultural enrichment that it will bring to our State, the act will provide a powerful and persuasive inducement to new industries, new jobs and, therefore, a higher standard of living for our people. We know that when new industries consider locating in Alabama, they almost invariably inquire of the facilities and services available with respect to schools, churches and libraries—which, as you see, makes you a part of a vital triumvirate. When the 1,131,000 citizens of Alabama, who now have no free public library service, are emancipated from the darkness which the dearth of books imposes, we can then envision the day when Alabama shall no longer be only a part of the Nation's new economic frontier, but rather an economic fountainhead for the Nation.

All that I have discussed with you up to this moment constitutes the public library of today that is the foundation of the public library of the future. Those of us who have examined the fantastically new electronic library equipment see nothing in it, I am sure, that is frightening in any way, or threatening to the future status of the librarian. If anything, these basically mechanical devices, marvelous as they are, represent only the bringing of a type of automation into library service, and in my judgment, they add scope and opportunity to the librarian as well as to the library. Before and after the drudgery is done by the machines there are still the imagination, the memory, the skills and aptitudes of the creative librarian which no machine can ever replace. And as the machines amplify the services of the library they draw within the orbit of the librarian a new set of demands from veteran library users on the one hand, and a whole new library audience on the other. That is the history of the machine since man first conceived the uses of the wheel.

The library of the future will not be an isolated collection of books. It will, on the contrary, be a unit in a great network. Any book in any library anywhere will be available to the most remote reader in the farthermost ends of the country. The system of communicating the book will probably be electronic, so that the microreader will be the instrument by which the student, using a microfilm, will peruse the book, document, or monograph.

The library of the future will make a very special response to the increasing demands of science and technology. New-found knowledge may be quickly disseminated to special activities and assimilated to avoid duplication of the original effort. Many of the electronic devices are in the laboratory stage so far, but their practical use is certainly in the offing. We know it is quite possible to get a full bibliography by IBM. The book ejector by the same process may soon furnish the reader in an instant with a whole armful of the books pertinent to his needs. The revered storehouse of man's knowledge that has made the great libraries of all time so precious since the days of ancient Alexandria is now enormously multiplied. It has been estimated that with modern methods and devices all the 10 million or more volumes in the Library of Congress can now be stored on microfilm in an average-size reading room. The value of our scientific advances for preserving the chronicle of civilization is beyond any price estimate.

We can now envision the day when we have rare manuscripts, for example, projected to the ends of the earth by telegraphic facsimile machines; when the library of today, emerging into the library of the future, is capable of distributing musical and dramatic recordings, as well as books; when the library becomes more and more a community meeting place for cultural pursuits, where recorded performances, on film or tape, are made available for groups, clubs, and societies.

It seems to me almost impossible that we can misread the facts or fail to see the results of our experiments. If they show anything it is that a new horizon is opening up for the librarian in the library of the future. The challenge and the opportunities seem to be almost unlimited. The values for civilization and for man's cultural progress are significant in a sense that has never prevailed before. New dimensions in the diffusion of our convictions, our faith, our literature, our knowledge, are presented us. With these instruments how can democracy fail? In this enrichment of life, in this strengthening of democracy, one of the key figures is inevitably the librarian. The librarian is the mentor, the guide, the custodian, the teacher, in many instances the inspiration, at the heart of the modern public library in the modern community, urban or rural. We may know that this highly skilled, distinctly professional and strategic guardian of our culture will measure up fully to his opportunity in the future as he certainly has in the past. On this cultural front the safety of American democracy is assured the American people and the Free World.

We can look forward with high hopes to the day when ignorance and every form of tyranny over the mind of man shall be supplanted by the knowledge and culture that come with books and the wisdom and understanding that come with knowledge and culture. I salute you, librarians and trustees, as you build the library of the future and render your mighty service to your fellow man and to generations yet unborn—the beneficiaries of the priceless legacy that you will preserve.

Senator Morse's Statement Opposing S. 2377

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. ESTES KEFAUVER

OF TENNESSEE
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, I voted against S. 2377. It was not possible for Senator MORSE to be present. He opposed the bill and wanted the statement of his position in the RECORD. I ask permission to insert this very thoughtful reason as to why Senator MORSE, had he been present, would also have voted in opposition to S. 2377.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT OF SENATOR WAYNE MORSE, DEMOCRAT, OF OREGON, ON S. 2377, THE SO-CALLED JENCKS BILL

I wish the RECORD to show my opposition to the final version of S. 2377 as agreed upon in conference and approved by the Senate.

From the first I have maintained that a measure dealing with basic rights of due process, embodied in a decision of the Supreme Court, required more deliberate consideration in committee and by the bench and bar than S. 2377 received.

The bill as drafted by the Department of Justice and reported to the Senate was a poor bill which undercut the Supreme Court's decision and imperiled other rights heretofore protected by the courts. After many revisions, the bill was greatly improved in the Senate.

The two rollcall votes in the Senate defeated attempts to deprive defendants of rights protected by the Supreme Court's decision and to impair other decisions interpreting the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. The ground gained in the Senate was lost in conference.

I regret the Senate's hasty action in approving the conference version.

Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce Activity Report

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. OREN HARRIS

OF ARKANSAS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to section 136 of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, Public Law 601, 79th Congress, and House Resolution 99, as amended, 85th Congress, I should like to submit a statement of the activity of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce for the 85th Congress, 1st session.

The committee has had an extraordinarily large number of bills referred to it during this session and has held lengthy hearings on various and sundry bills to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, Railroad Retirement, Unemployment Insurance, and Taxing Acts, and amendments to the Natural Gas Act. Following lengthy hearings on these and many other bills, the committee held extensive executive sessions and was able to clear some of these extraordinarily important legislative proposals during this session.

The committee had referred to it 71 bills to amend the Railroad Retirement and Unemployment Insurance and Taxing Acts. Extensive hearings were held by the committee on these bills. The bill, H. R. 4353, which I introduced on February 5, 1957, was sponsored by the Railway Labor Executives' Association, and received the attention of the committee. Many of the bills before the committee contained provisions incorporated in this proposed bill. It is a "package" bill involving consideration of not only further adjustments to the act, but consideration of the amendments passed in the last Congress, as well as the tax-exempt features on contributions by employees for income-tax purposes. Due to the overall "package" approach and involvements, further consideration was postponed until the next session of Congress.

Incorporated in the bill, H. R. 8525, which was approved by the committee and which is now pending on the House Union Calendar, were amendments to the Natural Gas Act to exempt producers of natural gas from regulations under the act as public utilities; and to provide for a new method of regulating the price at which natural gas is sold under producer contracts.

In the field of aviation, a bill to establish an Airways Modernization Board to develop, modify, test, and evaluate systems, procedures, facilities, and devices to meet the needs for safe and efficient navigation and traffic was enacted.

The President also signed a bill to authorize permanent certification for certain air carriers operating between the United States and Alaska.

A bill providing for Government guaranty of private loans to certain air carriers for purchase of aircraft and equipment cleared both Houses of the Congress and is awaiting Presidential action.

Another aviation measure relating to the reinvestment by air carriers of the proceeds from the sale and other disposition of certain operating property and equipment, was approved by the House.

To implement the legislative recommendations contained in the 70th Annual Report of the Interstate Commerce Commission, 24 bills to amend the Interstate Commerce and related acts were introduced and referred to this committee. The following recommendations were enacted into law:

Recommendation No. 2, amending section 4 of the Interstate Commerce Act dealing with the long- and short-haul provision.

Recommendation No. 6, revising the definition of a contract motor carrier under section 203 (a) (15) of the Interstate Commerce Act.

Recommendation No. 7, amending section 20b of the Interstate Commerce Act, relating to stock modification plans.

Recommendation No. 15, amending section 218 (a) of the Interstate Commerce Act, requiring contract motor carriers to file actual rates.

Recommendation No. 19, changing the requirements for obtaining freight forwarder permits.

Recommendation No. 23, increasing penalties for safety violations under the Interstate Commerce Act.

Recommendation No. 26, amending the Medals of Honor Act.

Recommendation No. 3, dealing with shipments of Government property under section 22 of the Interstate Commerce Act, has been approved by both Houses and has been sent to the White House.

Recommendation No. 14, amending section 214 of the Interstate Commerce Act, concerning arbitrary stock par values, passed the House and Senate.

Recommendation No. 24, to authorize the Interstate Commerce Commission to prescribe rules, standards, and instructions for the installation, inspection, maintenance, and repair of power or train brakes, has passed the Senate and a companion measure has been reported from this committee and is now awaiting action by the House.

A bill to amend the Interstate Commerce Act to provide for the preservation of competitive through-routes for rail carriers, has been approved by the House and is presently pending before the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

In the field of public health, bills providing for the construction of sanitary facilities for the Elko Indians in Nevada, and to assist in the construction of community hospitals which will serve Indians and non-Indians, were enacted into law.

Another proposal extending the authority of the Surgeon General to make certain payments to Bernalillo County, N. Mex., for furnishing hospital care to certain Indians, has been approved by both the House and Senate.

After extensive public hearings and executive consideration, a bill to protect producers and consumers against misbranding and false advertising of the fiber content of textile fiber products (Textile Fiber Products Identification Act) was reported from this committee and approved by the House.

An amendment to section 304 (d) of the Federal Food and Drug Act, with respect to the disposition of certain imported articles which have been seized and condemned, was approved by both Houses of the Congress.

A bill to declare a portion of Back Cove at Portland, Maine, to be nonnavigable water of the United States, also passed both Houses and was signed by the President.

The detailed activity report follows:

ACTIVITY REPORT OF THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE, 85TH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION

BILLS REPORTED

The committee has considered and reported favorably the following bills:

H. R. 469. To prohibit misbranding and false advertising of fiber content of textile fiber products. Report No. 986, by Mr. Mack, August 5, 1957. Passed House, August 14, 1957.

NUMBER OF PUBLIC HEARINGS

The committee held public hearings as follows: Entire committee, 75; subcommittees, 74.

Hours of sitting (public hearings): Entire committee, 181½; subcommittees, 152½.

Executive sessions: Entire committee, 32; subcommittees, 14.

Hours of sitting (executive sessions): Entire committee, 58; subcommittees, 14½.

Printed pages of public hearings, 4,214.

Unprinted pages of public hearings, 1,500.

In addition to the above, the committee filed 5 reports and published 2 committee prints, as follows:

House Report No. 314, Petroleum Survey—1957 Outlook—Oil Lift to Europe—Price Increases: The committee early in the first session of this Congress again engaged itself in a comprehensive survey of the Nation's petroleum sources. Accordingly, the committee compiled for the information of the House the results of its study of the recent diversion of petroleum to Europe caused by the closing of the Suez Canal and the shutting down of the Iraq pipelines, and the circumstances attending increases of crude oil prices in the United States. The committee shall continue to keep abreast of the petroleum situation and report its further observations and comments at subsequent dates.

House Report No. 474, A Report on the Organization and Financing and Participation of the United States in International Health Programs: Inasmuch as the committee has legislative jurisdiction in the field of public health, its responsibilities frequently touch upon international health programs in different parts of the world, including the operation of the World Health Organization, as well as health and quarantine problems affecting international air commerce. House Report No. 474 is a summary of the findings developed in hearings held by the committee in the 84th Congress, for the purpose of compiling a résumé of what the United States Government currently is doing in the field of international health.

House Report No. 573, Pulp, Paper, and Board Supply-Demand: Pursuant to the existing authority of the committee, to investigate and study the current and prospective consumption of newsprint and other papers, production and supply of such materials, and possibilities of additional production through use of alternate source materials, the committee last year requested the Department of Commerce to prepare a survey of the competitive demand for these products. The report was submitted by the Department early this year and the committee believed this comprehensive analysis of the subject should be made available for the information and use of the Members of the House. The committee shall continue its close study of the newsprint and paper and pulp supply-demand situation and shall report periodically to the House its findings.

House Report No. 1275, Automobile Seat Belts: The Special Subcommittee on Traffic Safety established in the 84th Congress, to study the increasing number of traffic deaths and injuries and ways of setting up a long-range program to reduce these highway tragedies, undertook in this first session a study of the crashworthiness of automobile seat belts. A vast amount of testimony was taken in public hearings from experts in the field. As a result of these hearings and a study of the testimony presented, the subcommittee concluded that the use of automobile seat belts would lessen the degree of potential injury to those involved in traffic accidents, and the subcommittee's findings and conclusions have been set forth in House Report No. 1275.

House Report No. 1272, Air Transportation Development and Airspace Use Problems: In executing its legislative jurisdiction in the field of civil aviation policy, the committee has given special attention to airspace use problems and the continued orderly development of air transportation. In connection with its study of these aspects of the subject, it made a thorough investigation, in conjunction with the Federal regulatory agencies administering aviation legislation, of two civil aviation accidents—one the crash of a jet fighter plane and a civil passenger transport on January 31, 1957, in the Los Angeles area, and the other the crash of an airliner on February 1, 1957, following takeoff from La Guardia Airport, New York. In the course of the committee's study, attention was drawn to the expansion of the Government's Military Air Transport Service and its effect on the sound development of civil aviation. The committee plans to make a study of this particular aspect of the problem.

Transportation policy (committee print): As a result of a study of transport policy and organization, made by an advisory committee established by the President in 1954, there were introduced in the House and referred to the committee in the 84th Congress two identical legislative proposals embodying the recommendations of the Presidential Advisory Committee on transport policy and organization. Extensive hearings were held on these proposals in the 84th Congress, comprising 1,860 printed pages of testimony. Due to the complex nature of the proposals, and the vast amount of information submitted at the hearings, the committee undertook to digest, analyze, and index the testimony, with the thought that such a synopsis would prove useful to the Members of the House in further consideration of transportation legislation.

Medical school inquiry (committee print): Consistent with its legislative responsibilty in the field of public health, the committee made an extensive study into the problem of the adequacy of schools of medicine, dentistry, osteopathy, and public health to meet the needs of the constantly increasing number of applicants for admission to the country's medical schools. Since the 81st Congress, legislation has been introduced designed to assist medical schools, and at different times some bills have received active consideration by the Congress. Realizing the increasing importance of the need for additional educational facilities in the field of medicine and related sciences, the committee compiled for the convenience and use of the Members of the House the factual data it gathered on existing medical school facilities.

A Message from Hon. John W. McCormack, Member of Congress, Majority Leader, United States House of Representatives

OF

HON. CARL ALBERT

OF OKLAHOMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to extend my remarks by including in the Congressional Record a message from the distinguished majority leader, Honorable John W. McCormack, which appears in the current Newsletter of the nationalities division of the Democratic National Committee:

A Message From Hon. John W. McCormack, Member of Congress, Majority Leader, United States House of Representatives

The enormous role which Americans of many diverse national heritages play in making our country great must be obvious to anyone who sits in Congress. During my 30 years of service in the House, I have known and worked with elected Representatives whose parentage brought to the United States the best from almost every corner of the globe.

Among our Democratic Members of Congress today there are Representatives whose families came within the last generation or two from Italy, Spain, Ireland, Poland, France, Germany, Austria, Belgium, Switzerland, Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia, Norway, Sweden, and India. Among them are the chairmen of several of our most important committees.

The fact that these men have shown such qualities of statesmanship and patriotism as to cause their neighbors to elect them to our highest legislative body is by itself proof of the great contribution which immigrants have made to the United States.

Based on my observations, I wish to praise the work of the nationalities division of the Democratic National Committee. It is both important and necessary. The division helps Americans of recent parentage abroad to take a more active part in affairs of government, and thus to be better citizens. It helps all of us toward better understanding of our neighbors, and a fuller knowledge of each other's heritage. It stands for the Democratic Party's deep interest in the welfare of every man and women in the United States, and it represents the American spirit at its best.

Attempt To Capture and Control TVA by Budget Bureau Threatens Independence of This Great Agency of Our Government

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOE L. EVINS

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. EVINS. Mr. Speaker, in connection with the nomination by the President of Mr. Arnold R. Jones, Deputy Director of the Budget Bureau, to a vacancy on the Board of the TVA, I recently appeared before the Senate Public Works Committee to express the concern of my constituents about this appointment. In my view there is an issue involved in this matter which goes beyond the TVA and should concern every Member of Congress—an issue of attempting to control by the Executive our independent agencies—which are arms of the Congress. To bring this issue to the attention of my colleagues I ask unanimous consent to have reproduced in the Record a portion of the transcript of the hearings before that committee. My statement follows:

Statement of the Honorable Joe L. Evins, United States Congressman, Fourth District, Tennessee

Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and may I say that I am complimented by your generous remarks and those of my own Senator—Senator Gore, of Tennessee. I want to say with regard to Mr. Jones, who is here with us before the committee, that I have had the pleasure of meeting him, and following meeting Mr. Jones some time back, I sent him a copy of a statement which I had made in the Congress on the TVA. I don't think it was any outstanding statement, but at least it expressed my point of view. My statement has been called an answer to some of the charges of misrepresentation made against the TVA, the continuing tirade of misrepresentation.

I said, "If you become our TVA Director, I want you to know of the point of view of the people in the valley."

Mr. Jones very courteously responded to my letter and said, "Thank you for providing me with another point of view on TVA. I am interested in all points of view."

I appreciated his letter, but the fact that he would say "another point of view" would indicate to me that he had certainly a point of view other than that of the TVA. It is well that he should have all points of view. That letter was not intended for any later use, but it does indicate to me he has been indoctrinated with an anti-TVA point of view.

It seems that in the Budget Bureau he has one point of view, and I was able in some limited measure to provide him with another. I hope that if he does become our TVA Chairman down there, he will be guided by this other point of view and some of the things that have been brought out in this hearing before this great committee by the known friends of TVA.

Mr. Chairman, I have always been reluctant to appear before a committee of the Senate concerned with the confirmation of Presidential appointees. I have been through three of these nominations. I am compelled to do so on this occasion because this appointment is of tremendous importance to the people whom I represent. They are not able to come here and express their opinions, and as their Representative I feel dutybound to speak in their behalf.

The Fourth District of Tennessee, as Senator GORE has indicated, is a great district. It consists of 23 of the 95 counties in Tennessee. It was formerly two Congressional Districts. It is entirely dependent upon TVA for its source of power supply. I do not have the actual count, but I believe at least 10 percent of the 150 municipalities and REA co-ops which obtain their power from TVA are within the district I represent, or partially in it—more than 10 percent of the 150.

I cannot overestimate the importance of the TVA to the people I have the honor to represent. You would have to experience with us the difference which nearly 25 years with TVA has made in our lives to really appreciate how we feel about it.

I would say, too, that to us the TVA is not just a utility, it is a symbol of our progress. To us the TVA is not an agency in Knoxville, it is a partnership in which everyone in the valley participates. If we obtain our power from the REA co-ops, we feel that we own a share of it. If we obtain our power from the municipal system, we own the municipal system—the people in the valley.

But this has been a rather peculiar one-sided partnership. Although our investment is more than 25 percent in total investments, and although the people of the district I represent, and the people of the 7-State area are completely dependent upon TVA for its source of power supply, they have no voice in the policies of the TVA. Only through a representative of the people can the voice of the people be heard. Indeed, many of late have come to feel that they have little or no voice at all; they feel that the office of the Budget Bureau has become the policymaker for TVA. And I might add, they feel that it has been a destructive one; that the Budget Bureau and not the TVA or not even the Congress has become the policymaker for our region. That is the feeling of our people.

Gentlemen, we are all aware of the powers of the Budget Bureau, its growing and ever increasing powers. It is a matter, Senator, in which the entire Congress is concerned. This power can be doubly painful and destructure to a people when the power of the Bureau is so great that it can affect the lives and well-being of 5 million people.

Policies of the TVA are supposed to be determined by its Board of Directors, whose members are chosen by the President and confirmed by the Senate. The TVA Act does not require the Board of Directors to consult with the Budget Bureau in making its decisions, but for the past 5 years the Bureau has been attempting to control policy. The past 5 years have been the hardest in the 24-year life of the TVA.

Why do I say this? Mr. Chairman and members of this great committee, I think I can prove that to you. Here are some of the facts of the enmity and hostility of the TVA emanating from the Budget Bureau.

As I indicated earlier I received a letter from Mr. Jones in which he expressed appreciation for another point of view. This indicated that the Budget Bureau is indoctrinated with a different point of view from the TVA philosophy.

The members of the Appropriations Committee of the House on which I serve—and we know that hearsay evidence is not legally acceptable, Mr. Chairman, but it has its probative if not evidentiary value—the clerks who deal with the Corps of Engineers and who deal with the Bureau of Reclamation, and with public works projects, the staff who are in daily contact with them on all of these great public works projects throughout the country—in the Northwest, in California and elsewhere—said to me that Mr. Jones is prejudiced against TVA. I said, "Why do you say that?" They said, "The Budget Bureau is prejudiced against all public power projects." You know that. It has been demonstrated.

I want to point out that I called upon the President, President Eisenhower, in the early part of his administration. This was in connection with the reappointment of Mr. Gordon Clapp. Mr. Gordon Clapp as a young man was an able public official. He was a splendid administrator. He was dedicated and devoted to the TVA. He was a young man interested in the career service, not a politician. He had grown up in the TVA. Some 15 or 20 Members, Senators or Representatives, went to see the President and to urge upon him the reappointment of Mr. Clapp. Although this man was dedicated to the philosophy of the TVA and everyone recognized that he was a fine administrator; he was thrown overboard and another man appointed in his place.

That was the President's privilege, but he did not reappoint a career man dedicated to the TVA.

The last major addition, Mr. Chairman, to the power capacity of TVA came in the latter days of the Truman administration. That was the so-called New Johnsonville addition. It was recommended by the President, former President Truman, and approved.

The next major addition was proposed in the early days of President Eisenhower's administration, and that was the so-called Fulton addition. The Board of the TVA unanimously recommended the Fulton addition, but the Budget Bureau opposed it. That was fought out twice in the Congress and twice defeated. The Congress did not adopt it, but certainly the Budget Bureau was opposed to it, and although the Board recommended, the Budget Bureau refused to recommend the Fulton addition.

So I say that the last major addition to the TVA system was in the latter days of the Truman administration, and there have been no major additions since that time.

This committee is all too familiar with the Dixon-Yates scheme that was hatched in the nest of the Budget Bureau. I believe it was conceived in iniquity to weaken and subvert TVA to the private power interests, to their great financial gain.

You are familiar with the connection of the First Boston Corp. with this plan and that the private utilities would have profited under this scheme. This committee is familiar with what was disclosed about this scheme by committees of the Senate. Both Senator HILL and Senator KEFAUVER had a great part in disclosing the presence in the Budget Bureau of one Adolph Wenzel and his conflict of interest. He was a paid consultant of the First Boston Corp., and he was consulting on TVA. He was brought in by the late Mr. Rowland Hughes, the former Director of the Budget Bureau.

Not only these acts, Mr. Chairman, of the appropriation for the Fulton plant being denied, TVA's growth therefore limited, the Dixon-Yates sabotage plan advanced, but I should cite that in the past 5 years, as I have said, there have been no major starts. Furthermore, the Budget Bureau has cut and reduced TVA's Board of Directors recommendation for appropriations for its other activities.

The Budget Bureau opposed the use of the corporate funds by the TVA. We of the Congress and friends of the TVA in both the House and the Senate have won for the TVA the right to use surplus corporate funds after it has paid its statutory obligations into the Treasury, and as to accumulated funds, the Congress reaffirmed their right to use these funds, but the Budget Bureau opposed the use of these surplus funds.

The Budget Bureau has recommended most stringent self-financing plans. The distinguished chairman of this committee, Senator KERR, knows full well the Budget Bureau's plans for self-financing and opposition to his own work of constructive legislation in this field.

The Budget Bureau has been the agency, I repeat, that has been trying and largely succeeding in setting the policy for the past 5 years for the TVA, writing its ticket, if you please, where it could go. It has gone nowhere. Its progress has been very limited. It has been virtually halted. And what progress has been made has been over opposition and with restrictions.

Gentlemen, the Budget Bureau has been like a coach to the TVA, a coach tying weights and chains around a great youth, shall we say, a track star.

I repeat, in summary, that the Budget Bureau has cut appropriations for the TVA, it has opposed the use of corporate funds, it has hatched the Dixon-Yates scheme, it has tried to impose restrictive self-financing plans, and at every turn and at every step the Budget Bureau has opposed the TVA. This to my mind, Mr. Chairman, is crystal clear; a blind man could see it.

I cite this history of the past 5 years as the hardest years in TVA's history. I express the concern of the people I have the honor to represent against Mr. Jones, who comes as a ranking member, a ranking star of the Budget Bureau, as its deputy director. Their apprehensions and fears are that Mr. Jones will continue the policies of the Budget Bureau for he has been an official of the Bureau.

I should point out one further factor with regard to corporate financing. The TVA Board proposed the plan a few years ago to build plants with accumulated profits, and this is significant: The action of the Board was unanimous in its decision. That was since Chairman Vogel has been a member. But the Budget Bureau vetoed this proposal and substituted its own plan and authorization for one generator to be paid for from the sale of bonds which TVA could obtain after the authority was passed.

In other words, they saw a need, the unanimous Board, for additional capacity. The Budget Bureau rejected that plan and said, "You can have one addition, provided you get self-financing passed through the Congress," knowing the self-financing bill was having difficult sledding in the Congress.

This is an important fact: Although Chairman Vogel, as you may have heard, was for this before the Board, when the Budget Bureau proposed the other plan, he immediately retracted his previous position and voted to go down the line with the Budget Bureau. Fortunately the two other Directors stuck with their determination, and with the approval of the 84th Congress they went ahead with these additional units.

About 3 years ago the President had the opportunity to fill a vacancy on the TVA Board about which you have heard a great deal. He filled it with Mr. Vogel instead of reappointing Mr. Clapp. At that time Mr. Vogel appeared before this committee in this very room and professed his belief in the TVA. I was told that there could not have been a stronger advocate than Mr. Vogel. He not only believed in the TVA Act, he believed in the yardstick, he was enthusiastic about its flood control and navigation function. He assured the committee that he would act independently. He went further. He said that he would more or less consult with the people of the Valley and determine how they felt about things, for the President said he wanted things worked out as the people in the area wanted them that way. He said he would do the best job he could to serve the people and serve them well.

Disillusioned, the people of the Valley have made plain their feelings before this committee.

I have heard Mr. Vogel before the Appropriations Committee of the House, and it is most strange to observe his position of wanting to be for the TVA and still follow the philosophy of the Budget Bureau. Here is a minor example, Mr. Chairman.

There was a little item in their appropriation for some small markers up in the bayous and bays of the lakes. Mr. Vogel said, "Gentlemen, I am opposed to this. My colleagues are for it. I want to cut it out." Someone said, "Mr. Chairman, why are you against it? You know people can get lost on these lakes and lives can be lost. Why are you opposing a little appropriation to put markers up to tell the direction?" He said, "It is an expensive matter and the Corps of Engineers does not have this authority, and I don't see why we shouldn't follow the Corps of Engineers' practice."

That was his reason for opposition to it. It illustrates his difficulty, in doing what the Budget Bureau wants him to do, rather than going along with the philosophy of the TVA.

Here is another experience with the TVA and the Budget Bureau shortly after Mr. Vogel came to the TVA, they submitted its plan for self-financing. Although originally all three members of the Board agreed to it unanimously, the Budget Bureau made certain suggestions for changes, which are well known to this committee. Mr. Vogel didn't go along with his colleagues on the Board. He went along with the Budget Bureau. His position on this, as expressed before this committee, has been somewhat similar to that of Mr. Jones. He said "he thought the TVA could live with the Budget Bureau recommendations." In any event, the committee is aware that as late as April 29, Mr. Jones signed a letter to the Budget Bureau along these same lines. The recommendations in that letter would have given the President and the Budget Bureau and the Secretary of the Treasury more and more control over the TVA.

Mr. Chairman, this grasp for more and and more power, more and more control by the Budget Bureau, is an alarming thing. I am sure that you gentlemen can appreciate, and do appreciate, the apprehensions of the people concerning this new nominee of the Board to the TVA Board, largely because of the fact that he has been an official of the Budget Bureau. Nothing personal against Mr. Jones, but it is the Budget Bureau that the people have great concern about.

The Budget Bureau has from the beginning of this administration led the fight against TVA. They are concerned, naturally, can any good come out of the Budget Bureau? I agree with what the chairman said earlier. We know that someone said, can any good come out of Nazareth, and certainly some good did come out of Nazareth. But people are apprehensive. That good cannot come out of the Budget Bureau for TVA. This is the question which this great committee must decide.

Remember, gentlemen, that the future of 5 million people will be affected by the course that you men determine, and yet these 5 million people are dependent upon you for your decision. This is why, as I say, although I am reluctant to appear before this committee concerned with the confirmation of a Presidential appointee, I feel it would be a dereliction of my duty if I did not.

As I pointed out, there is a statutory requirement concerning the qualifications of the TVA Board Director. In this respect the appointment differs from that of others you consider.

I was certainly astonished to learn that a few days ago Mr. Jones testified that the President had never made any attempt, so far as Mr. Jones was aware, to determine his point of view on the TVA, and thus to determine whether Mr. Jones did in fact meet the statutory requirements.

Senator Kerr. May I ask you a question there? Knowing the attitude of the President about the TVA, would you rather risk the actions of a man appointed by the President that the President didn't know what he would do, than the actions of a man with reference to whom the President had talked to and did know what he would do?

Mr. Evins. Mr. Chairman, I have followed some of the hearings of this committee. There has been a general statement that the President has directed this: The President has advised that this be done. I think the Budget Bureau has been telling the President what to do. I won't put the blame entirely on the President of the United States. I think the Budget Bureau formulates the policy; they go in to the President and say, "Mr. President, this is it," and he says, "All right, boys, take it." The President I don't think has any enmity. How could he when he twice came to our State and carried it, once, and made strong statements for the TVA.

Senator Kerr. Is he making as strong statements for the TVA as he did for 90 percent of parity for the farmers?

Mr. Evins. Mr. Chairman, he came to Memphis and there was a tremendous crowd there. He said that TVA is a great experiment in agricultural development and conservation. He praised it. When he flew over to Knoxville some of our colleagues flew with him, Congressman Howard Baker, I believe—and I do not wish to misquote my Republican colleague—he said, "Mr. President, you made a strong statement. You didn't make it strong enough. Make a strong statement in Knoxville." There he said: "My friends, I pledge to you under my administration TVA will be maintained at maximum efficiency." He didn't just praise it as a conservation bill.

Senator Kerr. He praised the farmers at Brookings, S. Dak. He said, "I guarantee you 90 percent of parity, and we will work for 100 percent of parity."

Mr. Evins. Mr. Chairman, that emphasizes what I said before. The Presidency is a great assignment, the greatest job in the world, and he must have lieutenants and assistants around him. I don't think the President is directing it. I reverse the situation and say the Budget Bureau has been formulating the policy, laying it before the President, and selling him, and the President has been taking it. I don't think the President has really had any enmity, although he did, after being irked one day, refer to TVA as creeping socialism.

Senator Kerr. He referred to the expansion of TVA as creeping socialism.

Mr. Evins. I don't think that is a very endearing term, Mr. Chairman.

Senator Kerr. Do you think he knew what kind of a term it was? In view of your great tolerance that you have professed here for him, after criticizing the situation because he hadn't talked with this man, I would feel that in justice to him you should be fairly certain in your mind that he knew even what was said as to its meaning, before you became too critical of him.

The Senator quoted from his press conference the other day, after he had been in office something over 4 years, and after he had made his second appointment to the Board of Directors, that in view of the requirement that it be a bipartisan Board, that he thought the next one would have to be a Democrat. Do you know of any requirement in the law that there has to be one Republican on that Board?

Mr. Evins. On many of our independent boards——

Senator Kerr. Or one Democrat?

Mr. Evins (continuing). The law provides that they shall be bipartisan, not more than 1, 2, or 3 of the same political party. That does not apply with respect to the TVA.

Senator Kerr. That is my impression. I was telling you that the Senator from Alabama quoted the President at a press conference as indicating that it was his information or opinion that there was such a requirement with reference to TVA, and that he would, therefore, on the next appointment, have to appoint a Democrat.

Mr. Evins. Mr. Chairman, he wouldn't have to appoint a Democrat, and our people would be satisfied with a Republican if he appointed one on the Board who believed in TVA and who would be its champion. That is what we want in the valley. We want an individual who is on the Board who champions the TVA and who believes in it sincerely with heart and conscience, regardless of partisanship or politics.

Senator Gore. Or where he comes from.

Senator Kerr. The point of the remark of the Senator from Oklahoma was calling your attention to the fact that after 4 years in office and making 2 appointments to the Board of Directors, of which the total is 3, that the President still didn't know that it wasn't a requirement that there be a bipartisan board.

Mr. Evins. I think that affirms our statement, Mr. Chairman, that the President is being improperly advised; that he is not being given all the facts.

Senator Kerr. In that situation apparently he was given some that weren't. I mean apparently he had all of them and then some more.

Go ahead.

Mr. Evins. The President is not directing. The Budget Bureau is directing. It is the reverse, in my humble judgment.

Senator Kerr. In other words, you think there is more of the Budget Bureau thinking in what the President does than there is of the President's thinking in what the Budget Bureau does?

Mr. Evins. Yes, Mr. Chairman; but I cannot reconcile how the President can be so strong against TVA and at the same time he recommended the upper Colorado River storage project.

Senator Kerr. You can't understand that?

Mr. Evins. I voted for it.

Senator Kerr. You can't understand it?

Mr. Evins. He wanted the upper Colorado project. He said this is what I believe in, developing the whole river valley.

Senator Kerr. You can't understand that?

Mr. Evins. I can't understand the inconsistency. I can't reconcile his being for that and opposed to TVA.

Senator Kerr. You are assuming, of course, that he recognized the need existed? You are going to get yourself into the same shape as the Senator from Oklahoma got himself into a few days ago when he told the truth about what he thought about what was in the President's mind, if you are not careful. And I hope that you will do as I did, consider it deliberately before you get out onto that platform.

Mr. Evins. Mr. Chairman, if I could be as esteemed and as great as the distinguished chairman and the able Senator from Oklahoma, I would consider it an achievement and an accomplishment.

Senator Kerr. That gives me great comfort, because it overcomes some of the remarks that have been made that were not entirely consistent with it.

Senator Gore. Overcomes or balances?

Senator Kerr. Overcomes.

Go ahead.

Mr. Evins. I placed in the record some time back—to some people—this forum can be a sort of education. They seem to think that TVA is the only public power project in the Nation.

What of the great Columbia River development, the great Missouri River development, and the Pick-Sloan plan which calls for 200 dams, 6 multipurpose dams on the Missouri River—6 of them, 6 major multipurpose dams on the Missouri River and 200 other dams. The Pick-Sloan plan called for an expenditure of $5 billion.

The TVA has been successful. It is most successful in its conservation, in its flood control, in its fertilizer program of bringing reduced fertilizer to the farmers. Its power operation is paying out. I think its main opposition is its success. Yet I can't reconcile the hostility to the TVA.

The great St. Lawrence Seaway development, when that project came to the Appropriations Committee, with which you are all familiar, they said, "There is nothing controversial here; let's approve it." I said, "Let's talk about it a few minutes, Mr. Chairman. What do you propose to do here?"

"Well, we are going to build a 25-foot channel for 200 miles; another, 500 miles."

"How many power units do you have there at present?"

"Well, there are 5—2 on the American side, owned by private industry, 3 on the Canadian side, owned by the Canadian Government. Five existing power units on the St. Lawrence."

"What do you propose to build there?"

"Thirty-two power units in addition, 16 on the American side, 16 on the Canadian side."

To build 32 additional power units on the St. Lawrence Seaway, and the great conservative Chicago Tribune, a paper that opposes everything as socialism, came out with an editorial and said this will be a great development, it will make Chicago the greatest city in the world in 25 years.

One man on the committee from Illinois said no, in less than 10 years. So they voted the St. Lawrence Seaway development. And the upper Colorado project. But TVA is bad, and I cannot reconcile it and our people can't understand it. We want a member of the Board there, Mr. Jones or whoever it may be, who believes in TVA. That is our appeal.

There is one other matter I would like to address myself to, and that is that I feel strongly the need and necessity of so-called independent agencies to be kept independent, free of executive control.

Since our country was adopted, there has been a tremendous trend toward centralizing power and centralizing of power in the Chief Executive and under his direction in the Bureau of the Budget.

The Congress should reverse this trend, the continued increase of power in the Bureau.

I served on the Independent Offices Subcommittee on Appropriations and a few years ago I served as chairman of a subcommittee of the House Small Business Committee, that looked into the problems of the increasing executive power over our independent agencies. These hearings are published and the findings were somewhat startling.

These agencies, as we all know, are supposed to be arms of the Congress. The Constitution gave the Congress the power to regulate commerce. The Congress, in turn, delegated this power to the independent commissions. There has been a shifting of that power over the years, since the establishment of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

We had an illustration a few weeks back—not a few weeks but a few months back—of the chairman testifying that these independent agencies have been quasi-legislative arms of the Congress and quasi-judicial, but he said in his speech, they are shifting, they are now becoming quasi-executive.

That is a situation with which the Congress must be concerned, this constant shifting and centralization of power into the hands of the executive.

May I point out that the President was able to mobilize a combination of some of these independent agencies, AEC, SEC, and FPC, to try to put over the Dixon-Yates deal, to use them all.

In other words, he was able to use them in an attempt to change the TVA without the necessity of going to Congress for legislative action. The process by which Congress granted control of these agencies began with the requirement that these agencies go to the Bureau of the Budget for approval of their budget. That is where it started.

Previous to that they came to the Appropriations Committee of Congress. Furthermore, it gradually developed that these agencies had to obtain the Bureau of the Budget's approval before they could submit proposals for legislation and inquiries for information that they needed. They controlled the type of questionnaire they could send out.

During the war this was necessary in order to cut down on duplication on requests sent out to the industry. Now we know the Bureau of the Budget is using that to control the various agencies.

Finally, by failing to veto one of the Hoover Commission's recommendations, the Congress gave the President the authority to appoint and to remove members of the Commission, to designate the Chairman, and the Chairman the authority to become the administrative officer with right to control the staff, control the appropriated funds, and control the workload. The result is that, at the moment, the Congress now stands in a sort of second- or third-hand role in authority over the independent agencies which were created as arms of Congress. You gentlemen are all too familiar with that.

I want to point out that the House this year has, as you know, passed legislation to set up a special committee on Congressional oversight, to examine more thoroughly the results of the operation of our independent agencies, who are supposed to be deputies of the Congress. This oversight committee is now getting organized.

We witnessed in the past 5 years, I repeat, a similar but thus far unsuccessful attempt by the Executive to capture control of the TVA. I understand, as one of my colleagues has pointed out, that you spent 2 years in writing and passing legislation which gave TVA power to raise bonds, to maintain its independence of the Executive.

They always talk about bureaucracy in Washington; why don't you decentralize? TVA is an example of decentralized government, operating in the field. But now even that is bad to some; if it is not one thing it is another that they work against.

I believe it was pointed out that if the new Board turns out to be willing to submit to the Bureau of the Budget, you will be surrendering the fruits of your labor on the self-financing legislation. Even if we are not concerned about the TVA, I am concerned about the drifting of our independent agencies to Executive control.

We cannot afford to surrender more, Mr. Chairman. Sometime, somewhere, we in the Congress must put a stop to the continued encroachment of the Executive on constitutional and executive duties and responsibilities, and the recognized worst offender of them all is the Bureau of the Budget. They are determining appropriations, they are writing legislation, they are issuing orders and edicts.

I think, when the Congress passes legislation, when the Congress speaks, the Bureau of the Budget should be responsive to it. What good will it have done to legislate on the TVA or any other independent agency if, through appointments, the Executive achieved control of these agencies and directs their policies?

I wish most strongly, Mr. Chairman, that you and members of the committee would weigh these circumstances which I have attempted to point out. The importance of our regulatory and independent agencies remaining as arms of the Congress and their independence is very important.

Secondly, Mr. Chairman, can a man with Budget Bureau service and the indoctrination Mr. Jones has had as Deputy Director of the Bureau of the Budget, truly and in fact, divorce and disassociate himself from the influences of his work and his association over the years with the Bureau of the Budget which, as I pointed out, has been the principal architect of the destruction of the TVA?

I say, gentlemen, that human nature being what it is, that he cannot. I would hope that he could. But old soldiers remember their previous battles. I think they remember the techniques of their warfare.

I make this appeal not against Mr. Jones personally but for and on behalf of and in the interest of the people whom I am honored to represent. To do otherwise would be a dereliction of my duties.

Thank you, gentlemen.

William E. Borah

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HENRY DWORSHAK

OF IDAHO

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. President, the Borah Foundation Committee and the Borah Commission are sponsoring appropriate activities in recognition of the 50th anniversary of the beginning of the late William E. Borah's United States senatorial service.

In order to recall some of the significant achievements of Senator Borah's outstanding service, I requested the Legislative Reference Service of the Library of Congress to prepare a political review of his renowned senatorial career.

I ask unanimous consent to have this statement inserted in the Record.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

WILLIAM E. BORAH

William E. Borah was born on a farm near Fairfield, Ill., on June 29, 1865. He attended the common schools of Wayne County, Ill., and Southern Illinois Academy at Enfield. He was graduated from the University of Kansas at Lawrence in 1889, studied law, was admitted to the bar in 1890, and commenced practice in Lyons, Kans. In the following year he moved to Boise, Idaho, and devoted his time exclusively to the practice of his profession. He was an unsuccessful candidate for election as a silver Republican in 1896 to the 55th Congress and an unsuccessful candidate for election as United States Senator in 1903. Mr. Borah was a member of the Republican National Committee from 1908 to 1912 and a delegate to the Republican National Convention in 1912 which nominated William Howard Taft for the Presidency.

He was first elected as a Republican to the United States Senate in 1907, 50 years ago this year. Senator Borah won reelection in 1913, 1918, 1924, 1930, and 1936, serving from March 4, 1907 until his death on January 19, 1940. He was an unsuccessful candidate for the Republican presidential nomination in 1936.

In 1895, he married Miss Mamie McConnell, daughter of Governor McConnell, whom he served at one time as secretary.

He early attained renown in the practice of law, participating in some of the most sensational criminal trials of the period as a State prosecutor. These included the prosecution in 1899 of a labor leader, Paul Corcoran, for alleged complicity in dynamite outrages and murder in the Coeur d'Alene mining area in northern Idaho, and in 1905 the prosecution of William D. Haywood and other leaders of the Western Federation of Miners for the murder of former Gov. Frank Steinenberg, of Idaho.

He was opposed by Clarence Darrow, attorney for the defense in the Haywood trial. After the Haywood trials, Mr. Darrow described Mr. Borah as the ablest man he had ever contended against.

Following his defeat by a caucus-approved candidate in the Idaho Legislature in 1903 for the senatorship, he stumped the State reiterating that "King Caucus must go." Four years later, he carried his candidacy to the voters with such great effect that a majority of those elected to the legislature were pledged to vote for him for Senator.

To sum up the activities of Senator Borah in Congress, it is said, would have been to write a general summary of the political history of the United States for a third of a century, for no important matter came up in Congress without his having something to do with it.

Mr. Borah played a prominent role in the submission by Congress of the constitutional amendments providing for the popular election of Senators, the income tax, and prohibition. He was a constant advocate of a corrupt practice act to regulate campaign practices. He had a prominent part in the movements to unseat Senators Stephenson, of Wisconsin; Lorimer, of Illinois; and Newberry, of Michigan. He was the author of the resolution directing inquiry into the preconvention campaign expenditures of 1920. He sponsored the bills creating the Department of Labor in 1913 and the Children's Bureau.

Despite his lifelong habit of political independence, Senator Borah never opposed the election of the presidential nominee of his party except on one occasion. This was in 1896, when as a young man of 31 he ran for Representative on the Republican ticket while supporting William Jennings Bryan, the Democratic presidential nominee, on the free silver issue.

Mr. Borah believed strongly in the two-party system and was opposed to attempts to form a third major party. He said on many occasions that he preferred to make his fight within the Republican Party. When Theodore Roosevelt sought the Presidential nomination in 1912, Senator Borah acted as one of his floor managers in the Republican Convention. He declined, however, to follow Roosevelt into the Progressive, or "Bull Moose," Party. In 1924, he supported the candidacy of Calvin Coolidge, although he himself received the endorsement for reelection of the Independents under Senator La Follette. He declined, however, to accept the Republican Vice Presidential nomination in 1924. He vigorously supported the Republican candidacy of Herbert Hoover in 1928.

Criticized as an "isolationist," Senator Borah was strongly for world peace and the reduction of armaments. He opposed with equal vigor anything that smacked of entangling alliances with European powers. His leadership in the fight against the entrance of the United States into the League of Nations and the World Court focused wide attention on him. He was one of those who insisted that European nations should pay their World War I debts to the United States.

He opposed American military occupation of Nicaragua, Haiti, and Santo Domingo, bitterly fought reciprocity with Canada, and urged free tolls for American ships in the Panama Canal.

Senator Borah was perhaps best known for his leadership in the successful fight against the entrance of the United States into the League of Nations and for his part in bringing about the Washington conference for the limitation of armaments in 1922. His speech of November 19, 1919, opposing the Versailles Treaty was widely regarded as ranking in its impact with the greatest forensic efforts ever delivered in the Senate. The Washington Arms Conference of 1921 was brought about to a great degree by the insistence of Senator Borah. Although he did not approve of the four-power treaty that resulted, Senator Borah regarded the naval limitation treaty that grew out of the conference as a promising step toward world peace. He also advocated an economic conference to supplement the work of the armament discussions.

Senator Borah strongly supported economy in Government as a means of lifting the burden of taxation resulting from World War I. He opposed high tariff schedules and the soldiers' bonus. He once refused to accept a rise in salary voted by Congress until he had been reelected, holding that he had not been chosen for a position paying a higher salary.

He opposed President Hoover in 1931 for the administration's failure to provide what he considered adequate drought relief in 21 western States.

Although opposed to most of President Roosevelt's New Deal measures, Senator Borah approved the reduction in the gold content of the dollar, which Congress, on the recommendation of the President, put into effect in June 1933.

Senator Borah opposed the NRA codes, which he charged tended to encourage monopoly, to which he had been opposed for years. He opposed President Roosevelt's attempt to pack the Supreme Court in 1937. He criticized waste in the distribution of relief funds and helped bring about a senatorial investigation of Federal relief.

During 1936, Senator Borah was a candidate for the Republican Presidential nomination. He warned the members of his party that it was doomed to defeat unless it accepted new leadership. He openly began his campaign for the election of favorable delegates in February, selecting as his principal issue the question of economic concentration. He was successful in the Wisconsin and Nebraska primaries, but met defeat in New York and other key States. In the 1936 election, he was reelected to the Senate for his sixth term by his greatest vote, polling 126,000 voted to 54,500 for his Democratic opponent, on the same day that President Roosevelt won the electoral vote of Idaho and 45 other States.

He was one of the supporters of the investigation made into the structure of the American economy by the Temporary National Economic Committee. In 1938 he left his party in voting to increase the WPA appropriation. He was repeatedly criticized for his objection to the Wagner antilynching bill, which he opposed on constitutional grounds. He gave support to the southern Senators who opposed it during the prolonged filibuster that defeated the bill. He was strongly opposed to any attempt at invoking cloture. He felt that free debate had killed many bad pieces of legislation.

Senator Borah opposed the power of the President to negotiate reciprocal-trade agreements and the third term.

He was the leader of a bloc of Senators who bitterly opposed repeal of the Neutrality Act in 1939. He believed that repeal was the opening wedge to American participation in World War II.

Of him it was said, "he represents so many points of view that everybody agrees with him sometimes and nobody agrees with him all the time."

"Pride in the position he attained as both a national and international figure," stated the New York Times at his death in 1940, "caused the voters of Idaho to reelect him successively, even though he frequently was at odds with the leadership of his party both National and State."

Let's Look at the Record

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHARLES O. PORTER

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. REECE] has the audacity to state in the RECORD—pages 16549-16550—August 29, 1957, that I have not given sufficient replies to questions he has asked me July 19 and August 9, 1957.

I invite any Member or other reader of the RECORD to read our respective statements and judge for himself.

I also point out that I have been very willing to debate these matters on the floor of the House, or elsewhere, whereas the intrepid gentleman from Tennessee confines his ill-informed sniping to insertions in the RECORD. I venture to hope he will eventually consent to pose his questions to me personally on the floor of this House, or elsewhere.

For the benefit of those who have not the time or facilities or disposition to read the previous exchanges, let me make these brief comments on the questions the gentleman lists in his August 29, 1957, insertion.

I adhere to my position that dictators should be overthrown and that I, along with most Americans, favor their being toppled by a revolution to bring justice and mercy back into government, peaceful revolution if possible.

As for what the Costa Rican newspapers reported, if the gentleman objects to any story I will be glad to confirm or deny its accuracy. But I see no point in burdening the RECORD with these clippings. However, the gentleman, or any other person, may see these clippings in my office. I never have refused anyone access, contrary to the gentleman's assertion.

The matter of the trip expenses paid by the Colombian newspaper, El Tiempo, and by the Costa Rican Government has been fully explained and justified in these pages. The Library of Congress has approved every aspect. We have a favorable official legal opinion. I have not, it is true, asked the Attorney General. Why does not the gentleman do this? It is time he consulted some lawyer on this question.

As for the military advantages of the dictator-run countries in Latin America, I am most willing to debate this issue with the gentleman. The real issue is what policies are most effective in fighting international communism in Latin America.

I do not intend to embarrass any employees of the State Department by disclosing which of them favor an end to the "be soft to Latin American dictators" policy of Secretary Dulles and President Eisenhower.

As for the enthusiastic reception I received in Costa Rica, I point out to the gentleman that this was prior to my origination and introduction of an amendment to cut off aid to Nicaragua and other Latin American dictatorships.

As for the defeat (171 to 4) of the amendment in the House, I believe it was largely because it had had no committee hearings. I expect a better result next time.

If the gentleman cared to investigate even cursorily, he would find that I have consulted often with members of the House Foreign Affairs Committee and the State Department, and I shall continue to do so.

I have not been silent in the face of these questions, contrary to the gentleman's astounding assertion. It is the gentleman who shuns debate and ignores and neglects the most elementary factfinding.

I repeat my request that the gentleman agree to debate these issues in person, on the floor or elsewhere. Let us have an end to his timid hit-and-run unilateral insertions in the RECORD.

Battle of the Budget in Defense Program

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GEORGE H. MAHON

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, the battle of the budget has been the highlight of this session of Congress. The appropriations budget which was submitted by the President in January has been reduced by $5 billion. The defense budget, a part of the overall total budget, has been reduced by $2.6 billion. The President, himself, scaled down the defense budget as submitted in January in the sum of $558 million. This does not have reference to recent cutbacks.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], chairman of the Appropriations Committee, will insert in the RECORD a statement as to the complete budget reduction. I wish to submit a few facts and observations which relate to the defense budget.

There have been many statements reported in the press in recent weeks about cutbacks, stretchouts, and other modifications by the Defense Department in the military program. I should like to try to put the picture in focus. Generally speaking, the slowdowns and modifications have no relation to the reductions made in the defense budget this year by Congress. In connection with these remarks, I shall insert in the RECORD a letter from the Controller of the Defense Department which confirms this assertion.

First I should like to discuss the situation in very broad terms.

Last year the Department of Defense had available to it for expenditure for all purposes including military public works, $74.7 billion. Of this amount $36.2 billion was appropriated by Congress last year, the remaining funds having been carried over from appropriations of previous years. The carryover funds were for such things as ships, aircraft, ballistic missiles, and other long-lead-time items. It was not anticipated, of course, that the Defense Department would spend last year the total sum of $74.7 billion available to it. Vast sums would remain unexpended for previously financed long-range defense items.

For the current fiscal year the Defense Department has available to it for expenditure about $70.8 billion, of which amount $35.9 billion is in new appropriations. However, in this latter sum is $590 million which is not actually a new appropriation, but represents transfers from unneeded funds from previous years to new categories for obligation or expenditure this year.

Out of a total availability of $74.7 billion last year the Department expended $38.4 billion. Out of a total availability of $70.8 billion this year the Defense Department expects to expend $38 billion.

It will be noted that the available funds were greater last year. The Committee on Appropriations realizes that large carryover sums are required but it feels that these sums have been too large and the committee has been hammering away in an effort to reduce these carryover funds. It has been particularly interested in reducing the amount of unobligated carryover funds though it agrees that substantial unobligated carryover funds are necessary under the financial plan of the Defense Department.

Now Congress cut defense appropriation requests for the current 1958 fiscal year by $2.6 billion, yet the total availability for obligation and expenditure remains very great.

The newspapers have carried many stories in recent days of announcements from the Pentagon of cutbacks in personnel and the slowing down of many programs. What does this mean? Does this mean that reductions in the defense budget by Congress is responsible for these cutbacks? The answer is "No."

Here are the significant facts that relate to the cutbacks in the defense programs. Defense spending last year amounted to $38.4 billion. However, during the latter part of the fiscal year defense spending was at the rate of $40.2 billion annually. The previous estimate of the Department and the Budget Bureau had been that defense spending for last year would be $36 billion.

It became apparent to the Defense Department a few months ago that if defense spending took its natural course during this fiscal year, it would range between $40 billion and $42 billion. Abundant funds are in the hands of the Defense Department to finance a defense program this year in the sum of $42 billion, or much more, out of a total availability of $70.8 billion.

Congress did not fix an annual expenditure figure for the Defense Department. This matter is left to the President, the Bureau of the Budget, and the Defense Department. The rate of defense spending is heavily influenced by the rate that aircraft and other expensive defense equipment is delivered and paid for by the Government. Congress approves programs and provides the funds to finance them to completion over periods which extend in long lead time hardware to 2 or 3 years.

The executive branch of the Government concluded that if it did not curb defense spending from funds available to it, spending would be far in excess of $40 billion this year. This would throw the fiscal plans of the administration out of order and make it necessary to sponsor an increase in the national debt ceiling.

In view of these difficulties, the administration decided to hold in reserve vast sums which might otherwise be spent on the defense program this year in order to hold defense spending for the year at $38 billion, somewhat less than last year.

That, in brief, is the story which needs to be understood. I do not point out the story to be critical but merely to make the facts clear.

The Congress this year took a close look at unexpended and unobligated balances in the Defense Department and concluded that it could wisely and safely make reductions in new money appropriations. It is now crystal clear that Congress did the right thing in cutting the defense budget. To have done otherwise would have just added to unneeded funds available to the Department.

The object of Congressional cuts in the defense budget was twofold. They were made to compel more economy and efficiency, better management of money and manpower in the defense program. They were made to bring down the annual unobligated and unexpended funds to more realistic levels. They were made in many instances to deduct amounts requested in the budget in January which the Department advised in July it would not need.

Had the administration realized in January when the budget was submitted that a big cutback would be necessary in order to hold spending in line with previous plans and estimates, the President would have, no doubt, submitted a much-reduced budget. In January the Defense Department was completely unaware that the spending rate would be $2.4 billion higher in fiscal year 1957 than anticipated.

It is true that if Congress continued indefinitely to appropriate about $36 billion for the Defense Department, as it did for this year, defense spending would have to come down to about that annual average figure, but Congress placed no limitation whatever on necessary defense spending for this year or for future years. We were only dealing with appropriations for the fiscal year 1958, the year which began July 1, 1957.

The administration is undertaking a $38 billion defense spending program this year and has plenty of funds for that program and more. Admittedly, as pointed out, if we should continue a $36 billion appropriation from year to year, the spending rate would eventually have to come down to the $36 billion level. But Congress has made no such demand. Yet I would add that if wisely spent, $36 billion ought to buy a fairly adequate defense program. However, the budget for next year will no doubt be considerably above that level.

Mr. Speaker, I have given, generally, the highlights of defense financing for fiscal year 1958. Having given this broad outline a more detailed statement is submitted for those interested in greater detail.

THE DEFENSE BUDGET FOR 1958

The struggle with the defense budget for fiscal year 1958, particularly since the House acted in May on that budget, has been attended with much confusion. There have been many statements and many changes in program. I think it is important that Members of the House understand what has transpired in connection with this budget that started out last January as a bare minimum requirement for the defense needs of the Nation. On January 30, the Secretary of Defense, a very able and devoted official, told the Subcommittee on the Department of Defense Appropriations:

> I cannot foresee, at this time, any justification for a reduction in the Military Establishment, not in the total annual military expenditures of the Department of Defense below the present level, short of a drastic improvement in the international situation. With prudent management, neither do I foresee the need for any important increases in these forces or their costs short of a war.

The next day, on January 31, the Secretary of Defense said:

> I think the budget is just about right. I am willing to take any of you on and argue, if you want to take a dollar off or put a dollar on. Do not do it. We have worked awfully hard on this budget. We think it is about right.

Now that general feeling in connection with the Department of Defense budget for fiscal year 1958 was reflected throughout the hearings by the top civilian officials of the Department and the respective services. We were assured all along the line that the requested budget was a minimum required for the defense needs of the Nation. No doubt, all of these people were absolutely sincere and expressed their honest convictions in support of what they thought at the time was a minimum requirement.

At this point I wish to insert a brief table showing by service the budget appropriation and expenditure estimates for the Department of Defense as presented in January compared with final appropriations and the latest revised expenditure estimates recently announced.

1958 budget, Department of Defense

[In millions of dollars]

	Appropriations			Expenditure estimate
	Request	Enacted	Change	January estimate	Present estimate	Change
Office of the Secretary of Defense	$705.0	$698.7	−$6.3	$704.0	$750.0	+$46.0
Department of the Army	8,539.0	7,319.6	−1,219.4	9,130.0	8,950.0	−180.0
Department of the Navy	10,517.1	9,866.4	−650.7	10,347.0	10,400.0	+53.0
Department of the Air Force	16,481.0	15,930.2	−550.8	17,472.0	17,900.0	+428.0
Proposed for later transmission	2,257.9	[1] 1,480.5	[2] −777.4	347.0	([3])	−347.0
Total	38,500.0	35,295.4	[2] −3,204.6	38,000.0	38,000.0

[1] Includes $5,500,000 for Office of Secretary of Defense, $365,000,000 for Department of the Army, $265,000,000 for Department of the Navy, and $900,000,000 for Department of the Air Force.

[2] Reflects $558,200,000 not submitted in the final official appropriation request. Actual congressional reduction was $219,200,000 in items not transmitted with the regular budget and $2,646,100,000 in all budget requests.

[3] Distributed to estimates above.

The President's budget indicated that total appropriation requests for the Department of Defense for the fiscal year 1958 would be $38,500,000,000. Within this figure was $2,257,000,000 for military public works and other military programs which were not submitted as a part of the original budget except on the basis of a single line estimate—just the figures were given. The budget submitted in January also included an estimate of $38 billion for expenditures. It will be noted that we are referring to two types of budgets, the appropriation budget and the expenditure budget.

Now, let us see what happened to that budget submitted in January. I omit for the present military public works and refer to the remainder, $36,128,000,000. After nearly 4 months of hearings and analytical review, on May 21, 1957, the Appropriations Committee of the House reported a bill dealing with the President's January defense budget, excluding military public works. On the basis of the committee review of these requests in what is known as the regular Department of Defense budget, the requests for appropriation were reduced by $2,586,775,000 to $33,541,225,000. With one minor addition not specifically a part of the defense budget the House approved the amounts recommended for the Department of Defense as they were proposed by the committee. By way of explaining what the committee had done I think it would be well to review again at this point a statement in the committee report beginning on page 7, as follows:

REDUCTIONS IN BUDGET

The inescapable conclusion is that so long as present world conditions prevail, a defense program calling for high level expenditures, without costly peaks and valleys, will have to be continued.

The total amount of the estimate $36,193,000,000, contained in the President's budget included $65 million for military construction, Army and Navy reserve forces. This amount is deleted from the bill and comparative tabulations for the reason that the amount requested exceeded the still outstanding authority. It is understood that a bill to increase and extend this authority is now under consideration. The committee will subsequently consider this item on the basis of authority made available.

The budget estimate is reduced by $2,586,775,000, and the recommended appropriation of $33,541,225,000 is $1,157,298,000 below the amount appropriated for 1957. Of this total reduction in new obligational and expenditure authority, the amount of $1,996,775,000 represents a direct reduction in the defense budget, and $590 million is a reduction in funds appropriated in prior years, but currently available to the Department for obligation and expenditure under stock and industrial fund operations. This surplus cash is recommended for transfer to items of appropriation contained in the accompanying bill, and, accordingly, is added to the amount of $33,541,225,000, resulting in total obligational authority for items in the bill of $34,131,225,000, or a net reduction of $1,996,775,000 in the budget estimates.

Although the above amount of $590 million is recommended for transfer to the regularly budgeted items which were considered by the committee it should not be regarded as a paper cut. It is a reduction in that amount in total obligational and expenditure authority requested by the Department for fiscal year 1958. In explanation, it should be stated that these funds, differing from directly appropriated funds only as to purpose and methods by which they are administered, are just as much a part of the Department's financial resources as all other funds which, on the books on the Treasury, are credited to the Department of Defense.

With respect to the direct reduction of $1,996,775,000 in the budget request, two specific amounts, which are parts of this total, should be mentioned.

The first is the reduction of $516 million in the Army request for procurement and production. The President, in his recent message to the House of Representatives on possible reductions in the Federal budget, suggested that this amount, which is estimated to remain unobligated as of June 30, 1958, could be considered for deletions. As of March 31, the amount available to the Army for procurement and production during 1957 is $3,421,366,000. Obligations against this amount through March 31 total $884,522,000. Fiscal year 1958 obligations are estimated at $1.5 billion. This would indicate that the Army will not only have adequate financing for this item through fiscal year 1958, but that a sizable unobligated balance will remain even with this large reduction in the budgeted amount of $583 million.

The second item is the amount of $126,741,000 which is deleted from the total request on the assumption that the Federal Republic of Germany will continue to render goods and services in the equivalent amount rendered during 1957. It is understood that negotiations on the extent of German Republic contributions are now in progress. The delay experienced in building up the military forces of the West German Republic necessitates continued heavy burdens in that area by our military.

Certain items of reduction in requested new authority are based on additional recoupments, in both 1957 and 1958, resulting from price redeterminations and announced stretchouts of certain programs. Increased unobligated balances over amounts estimated when the 1957 bill was considered, and on the basis of which certain appropriations > were recommended for 1957; made further reductions possible.

>
> In effecting these reductions, the committee was particularly cautious in seeking not in the slightest to jeopardize the projected increase in military striking power, in particular, or the national security, in general. It is convinced that even when the more or less uncontrollable cost increases of $576 million in 1958 over 1957, subsequently shown, are included, the total of over $45 billion in carryover and new obligational authority is fully adequate for continuation of the planned buildup of our defense establishment.

Note that the excerpts above from the report refer to the regular defense appropriation bill and do not include military public works which are included generally in these remarks as a part of the overall Department of Defense program. Note also that the excerpt from the committee report does not represent the final version of the legislation.

At about the time that the Appropriations Committee was preparing its recommendations on the Department of Defense appropriation bill, the Department had discovered that expenditures by the Department of Defense, particularly the Air Force and Navy, for fiscal year 1957, were running substantially above the estimates contained in the President's budget submitted in January. I will insert a brief tabulation at this point showing the estimated expenditures for fiscal year 1957 as reflected in the President's January budget submission for the fiscal year 1958 and the expenditures as they have recently been reported after the close of that fiscal year.

1957 expenditures—Department of Defense

(1) Distributed to amounts above.

As stated before, in April or May the Department of Defense discovered that expenditures for fiscal year 1957 were running at a much higher rate than had been previously estimated. It was realized at that time that, if expenditures were not reduced and brought under control, the surplus estimated in the President's budget for 1958 may become a deficit. As a result of this the Secretary of Defense issued an order on May 22 freezing $500 million of funds currently available to the three services. This $500 million was made up of $100 million for the Army, $150 million for the Navy, and $250 million for the Air Force. This action came as a considerable surprise because on about the same day the Department of Defense was telling the Senate Appropriations Committee that reductions of the magnitude made by the House in defense appropriations requests would amount to gambling unwisely with the security of the Nation. Clearly, the Defense Department spokesmen were in error, as disclosed by subsequent events.

Now this was, undoubtedly, a period of great confusion and uncertainty, in regard to the true financial needs of the Department of Defense for the fiscal year 1958. Expenditures at that time were running at a rate that indicated that expenditures for fiscal year 1958 would be in excess of $40.2 billion, much higher than the President had estimated in January.

The problem presented to Congress as to what determination should be made with respect to the defense budget was most difficult. For months the Defense Subcommittee of the House Appropriations Committee labored with the problem. The controlling factors with the committee were, first, how can we make reductions that will have the effect of compelling better management and more economy in the operations of the far-flung activities of the Department of Defense. Arbitrary cuts would not get the job done. A painstaking job of pinpointing the soft spots was required. A second consideration which we had was how can we safely reduce the carryover funds to more manageable proportions.

It was testified by departmental witnesses that a carryover of approximately $2 billion less than the carryover from 1956 to 1957 would have no adverse affect on military operations.

Of course, members of the House Appropriations Committee generally were pleased when the House upheld the position of the committee in making the reductions proposed in defense appropriations requests.

Various officials and citizens generally had offered suggestions as to how savings could be accomplished in defense spending. The United States Chamber of Commerce which represents both little business and big business and which has, of course, through many of its individual members a direct stake in defense contracts and defense spending, urged, through its spokesmen, much more drastic cuts in the defense budget than the members of the Appropriations Committee were willing to make. The United States Chamber of Commerce made quite an exhaustive study of the whole problem and made a lengthy presentation to the House and Senate Appropriations Committees.

The suggestions of the United States Chamber of Commerce were most helpful to the committee. Of course, much of the detailed information available to the committee was not available to representatives of the chamber. Consequently, the committee action did not follow the pattern of the chamber's recommendations. A spokesman of the chamber, in appearing before the Senate Appropriations Committee, was kind enough to make the following reference to the work of the House on the defense appropriation bill:

> Now, may I speak for just a moment about the House bill, merely because in our opinion the job done by the House this year, we feel, is one of the most sound and thorough jobs of analysis that has been given the defense budget certainly in this generation. We think the approach was objective and penetrating, and we cannot commend too highly the hours of time spent and the results of that effort which have come out of the House Committee in the bill before you.

The fact that the task of Congress was not easy is evident from a review of what had transpired before. The Committee had been assured that the Defense budget was an austere budget. The Congress had been challenged to find ways to reduce the budget and in March the House of Representatives passed House Resolution 190 requesting the administration to advise the House where substantial reductions could be made in the President's budget request. On April 18 the President responded with a communication to the Speaker which included two items related to the Department of Defense. One stated that by delaying less urgent projects new spending authority for military public works could be reduced by $200 million. The other said that the House may wish to give attention to an additional item of $516 million requested for Army procurement and production. This was not listed as a specific item proposed for reduction but was merely indicated as a possibility, saying that, "such action would of course increase by $516 million the large amount that will have to be authorized for Army procurement and production in fiscal year 1959." We had already pinpointed this $516 million item as unnecessary for inclusion in the 1958 budget.

Now this $716 million didn't give the committee much to work on from a total request indicated in the budget as $38,500,000,000. Nevertheless the committee continued its efforts to find additional items for reduction, items that in no important way seriously affected the defense posture or the security of the nation.

In connection with military construction the administration also went to work and found additional areas where reductions could reasonably be made. As a matter of fact the administration, instead of requesting $2,257,900,000 for military public works and other military programs as proposed in the President's January budget for later transmission, actually submitted a total request of only $1,699,700,000 including $34,200,000 for the United States scientific satellite program. Consequently the administration's request for such items was reduced not $200 million as indicated in the President's communication of April 18 in response to the House Resolution 190, but was rather reduced $558,200,000. This reduced request was finalized, of course, some time after it was determined that defense spending would far exceed what had previously been estimated in the President's budget. It admittedly was an attempt to hold spending in line. This request was subsequently reduced by the Congress by approximately an additional $200 million.

Now I would like to get back to the discussion of Congressional action on the regular Defense appropriation requests contained in the President's budget submitted in January. As pointed out above the House had reduced the President's budget request for these items from $36,128,000,000 by some $2.5 billion to $33,562,725,000. In acting on the bill about the 1st of July the Senate restored a net of $971,504,000 to the amount approved for appropriation by the House. In conference this restoration was reduced to $197,125,000, so that the final appropriation bill approved by the Congress was $2,368,150,000 below the President's budget request.

During the Senate-House conference on the bill, or just prior thereto, the Defense Department advised that there was to be a 100,000 reduction in military manpower which conferees should consider in arriving at the necessary appropriations. This altered the picture quite decidedly.

All told the Congress has reduced the appropriation requests for the Department of Defense for the fiscal year 1958 by approximately $2,600,000,000. The Congress has made this much reduction in appropriation requests and yet the estimate for Defense expenditures for fiscal year 1958 have still remained at $38 billion or the same figure as estimated in the President's budget submitted in January. How is this possible? The natural question is, Were the reductions made by the Congress merely ineffective paper cuts in their effect on the United States Treasury? The answer is, "No." There is considerable complexity, but simply stated it can be said that every reduction made by the Congress reduced the amount of money that was or would be available for expenditure by the Department of Defense either during fiscal year 1958 or in subsequent years. Of course, some of the reductions were effected by transferring old available funds to take care of new obligational requirements and some of the reductions were made in procurement funds where the expenditures would only be made as the items to be procured were produced in subsequent years. Nevertheless the reductions made by the Congress would have had a substantial effect on the rate of expenditure for the fiscal year 1958 and these reductions would have had a substantial effect had the estimates contained in the President's budget been valid in the first place.

As previously pointed out, however, even with the Congressional cuts in the budget, ample funds were available to the Defense Department, more than $70 billion, from which the expenditure rate could soar far above the $38 billion spending estimate in the President's budget for the current fiscal year. The administration determined to hold defense spending for the current fiscal year to the budget figure of $38 billion, and it set to work to do it. On May 22 a first step was taken in this process. A memorandum freezing $500 million of 1957 funds was issued. This action was followed by a series of orders reducing or curtailing defense procurement programs. None of these administrative actions was the direct result of Congressional reductions in the defense appropriations requests. I am sure that I do not have a complete list; however, the major portion of this series of orders to date are as follows:

March 12: Memorandum to Service Secretaries directing a 12 percent reduction in military and civilian personnel in the Washington, D. C., area.

May 22: Memorandum to Service Secretaries freezing $500 million of the 1957 funds available for major procurement and production, research and development, and military construction. This memorandum also directed the military departments to submit a detailed plan by June 12 showing how they propose to stay within the $38 billion 1958 expenditure estimate.

June 19: Department of Defense directive to effect an immediate, continuing, and sharp curtailment in use of overtime in the performance of all kinds and types of Department of Defense procurement contracts, including production, research and development, and construction.

June 26: Announcement by the Department of the Navy curtailing the development and procurement of the W2V–1 long range early warning aircraft and the A4D–3, an improved carrier attack model.

June 28: Classified letter from the Director of the Bureau of the Budget to all Federal agencies, including the Department of Defense, requesting that all agencies in the executive branch keep the rates of commitments, obligations, and expenditures for fiscal year 1958 at or below the level for the fiscal year 1957, to the extent feasible. The letter directed that (1) as a general rule, requests for apportionment and allotments of funds shall be based upon holding obligations to absolute minimum levels; (2) in the case of those appropriations that are for major capital outlay and development—construction, procurement, research, etc.—the requests for apportionment and the allotments should reflect the postponement of a significant part of the obligations planned in the budget for 1958.

June 28: Memorandum from Secretary of Defense to Service Secretaries stating that pending apportionment of funds for fiscal year 1958, obligations may be made for only essential operating expenses on an austere basis and that no obligations or commitments for procurement and construction should be made without specific approval by the Secretary of Defense.

July 11: Announcement by the Air Force that as a result of a review of current projects which might be modified or canceled in the light of present and anticipated budget and expenditure levels, the further development of the Navaho missile was being discontinued.

July 1: Letter from Assistant Secretary of Defense, Properties, and Installations listing military installations and activities which have been programed for deactivation during the period beginning July 1 and ending December 31, 1957.

July 16: Memorandum to Service Secretaries directing a 100,000 reduction in military personnel made up of 50,000 Army, 25,000 Navy and Marine Corps, and 25,000 Air Force.

July 26: Announcement by the Department of the Air Force of planned production stretchouts in Century series fighter aircraft.

August 5: Announcement by the Department of the Navy of plans for inactivation of 60 ships now operating in the Pacific and Atlantic fleets as necessary adjustments within the operating forces to permit the most effective employment of personnel and funds which will be available to the Navy during fiscal year 1958.

August 6: Memorandum from the Secretary of Defense to the three services freezing civilian employment and directing that to accomplish the expenditure objectives for fiscal year 1958 civilian force levels must be reduced.

August 12: Announcement by the Department of the Air Force that it was taking steps to cut back its payroll expenditures for civilian personnel by approximately 5 percent by the end of October, and stating that at the same time it is requesting contractors, except for ballistic missile work, to make corresponding cuts in expenditures.

August 13: Directive issued by the Secretary of Defense reducing established percentages for progress payments for new procurement effected on and after September 1, 1957.

August 14: Announcement by the Department of the Navy that it was taking action to reduce the number of civilian employees by approximately 18,000, the majority by October 31, 1957, and the balance spread over the remainder of the current fiscal year.

August 15: Announcement by the Military Sea Transportation Service of plans to inactivate 15 MSTS tankers made possible by the anticipated decrease in military petroleum shipments resulting from Department of Defense economy measures.

August 16: Announcement by the Department of the Navy stating plans to discontinue male recruit training at the Naval Training Center, Bainbridge, Md., as a necessary adjustment to permit the most effective employment of personnel and funds during fiscal year 1958.

August 20: Announcement by Marine Corps suspending the enlistment of men under the 2-by-6 program as a reduction in the recruiting program necessary to meet the lower strength requirement recently ordered by the Secretary of Defense.

August 21: Announcement by the Department of the Air Force of the cancellation of the development of the XF–103 all-weather interceptor aircraft.

August 21: Announcement by the Department of the Navy that it was making certain changes in the future production rates of a large number of new model aircraft and missiles as a result of increasing costs, technological advances and budgetary limitations.

August 23: Announcement by the Department of the Army regarding reductions in civilian personnel and in Army activities, installations and units consistent with the 50,000 reduction in Army military strengths to be effective January 1, 1958, and the limitation on Army expenditures for fiscal year 1958.

To get a proper perspective on the Defense spending problem, it is important to review what happened in fiscal year 1957. Looking over the monthly expenditure rates it is evident that spending began to build up as early as last November. And while the President's budget estimate submitted in January included an expenditure estimate of $36 billion for the Department of Defense for fiscal year 1957, actual expenditures turned out to be approximately $38,400,000,000 or $2,400,000,000 greater than was estimated in January. At the end of June 1957 the Air Force alone was spending at a rate of $18.9 billion or $19 billion a year compared with the amount estimated for the fiscal year 1958 of approximately $17,600,000,000 in the President's January budget. For all the services the expenditure rate was running over $2.25 billion higher than the $38 billion estimated in the President's January budget. Thus it became necessary for the administration to curtail this expenditure rate substantially or face an actual deficit in the budget expenditures for fiscal year 1958. While the Congress had reduced appropriation requests by nearly $2,600,000,000 these reductions were such that they would largely affect expenditures in subsequent years. The direct effect on expenditures for fiscal year 1958 would probably have been in the area of $400 million to $500 million as a maximum. Therefore the administration was faced with the necessity of further reducing the expenditure rate by approximately $2 billion and has proceeded to do so by administrative action resulting in the series of orders and announcements listed above.

It has been recently stated that the programing efforts of the Department of Defense aimed toward curtailing expenditures in fiscal year 1958 are fairly well complete. I believe that this is so. However, should costs continue to rise and if expenditures in future years are not to exceed a $38 billion ceiling, the outlook is for further reductions in the defense program such as the much discussed additional 200,000 reduction in military personnel ceilings. While Congress has succeeded in holding appropriations approximately $2.6 billion below the President's January estimate or at slightly less than $36 billion, it is to be assumed that if a $38 billion spending level is to continue year after year it will require a higher level of appropriations in 1959, or in years immediately following. Along this line I would like to include as a part of the RECORD a letter from the Assistant Secretary of Defense, Comptroller, dated August 14, 1957, as follows:

> ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF DEFENSE,
>
> Hon. GEORGE H. MAHON,
> Chairman, Department of Defense Subcommittee, House Committee on Appropriations.
>
> DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: This is in response to your inquiry concerning the effect on the defense program of Congressional action on the fiscal year 1958 defense budget request.
>
> The adjustments required in the programs of the Department of Defense for fiscal year 1958 are essentially those necessary to hold expenditures for the current fiscal year to $38 billion, the expenditure estimate contained in the President's budget submitted to the Congress in January.
>
> It is possible that when the final program decisions for the current fiscal year have been made, we may find that Congressional action on the Department's requests for new obligational authority for that year may affect certain programs in a minor way. Conversely, we may later find that in a few instances a small amount of the new obligational authority provided by the Congress for fiscal year 1958 in the annual appropriation accounts cannot be utilized effectively. All the funds provided in the no-year accounts, in my judgment, can be properly and advantageously utilized in reestablishing the long lead time programs on a fully funded basis.
>
> The real problem posed by the action of Congress on the 1958 budget is that the appropriation of slightly less than $36 billion, including transfers, in support of a current program of $38 billion requires the utilization of essentially all of the carry-over obligational authority which might otherwise have been available as a credit against the fiscal year 1959 request. While this action does not materially affect defense programs in 1958—it will require a budget request for 1959 of at least $38 billion to support a continuing program of this magnitude. This will create a psychological problem inasmuch as it will appear to the public as a substantial increase in the defense budget, whereas in fact the level of the program would in that case remain the same.
>
> Sincerely yours,
> W. J. MCNEIL.

The question arises, has the Defense Department done great injury to our defense effort, by arbitrarily withholding funds from expenditure and stretching out and cutting back defense programs in order to hold defense spending this year at $38 billion? Admittedly, this is a very serious action. It is difficult at the moment to evaluate the full effects of the slowdowns and cutbacks. We all hope that important ground will not be lost in the battle to maintain sufficient military strength.

Undoubtedly we are still very strong militarily. On this point I would like to cite a statement recently made by Adm. Arleigh Burke, Chief of Naval Operations, and a member of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. He said:

> We have the military power to destroy the Soviet Union today, not just by one means but by several means, not just by one weapon but by many weapons, not just from one direction but from many directions. The Soviet Union knows this.

The United States, of course, does not want war. Our capacity for destruction of a potential enemy is very great. But there is another side to the coin. The capacity of the potential enemy to hurt us is also very great. As has been said before, there is no real alternative to peace. The chief objective of our defense program is not to fight a war but to prevent war.

A Threat to the Coal Industry

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. W. PAT JENNINGS

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Speaker, last week the Special Subcommittee on Coal Reserves reported on its findings after 15 months of study. The recommendations of this subcommittee were of particular interest to the coal-producing region of Virginia, for it was here that one phase of the study was conducted.

At my request, the Subcommittee on Coal Research held hearings at Abingdon, Va. It was my privilege to testify at this hearing and to arrange for the appearance of representatives of coal management, of the United Mine Workers of America, and of transportation officials as well as executives of large consuming industries.

Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to review the report of the Special Subcommittee on Coal Research at this time, except as it may pertain to the overall fuels situation in this country. With the approach of adjournment, I feel impelled to protest attempts to import natural gas into this country when such vast amounts of bituminous coal, anthracite, and lignite, as well as domestic oil and gas, are available. To this extent I am pleased at the opportunity of quoting the special subcommittee's report and recommendations.

The subcommittee observes that the estimated recoverable coal reserves of the continental United States are of such magnitude that they would last for 1,900 years or more at the present rate of coal consumption. It points out that this enormous quantity would be sufficient to cover an area the size of the Commonwealth of Virginia with a solid layer of unbroken coal approximately 41 feet thick.

Virginia, home of the first commercial mine in the western hemisphere, has produced more than 600 million tons of coal since that first mine went into operation in 1745. Despite this vast output, however, there are still more than 5 billion tons of recoverable coal remaining, or 8 times more than the total amount extracted in the past two centuries.

Coal is an important business in the western portion of the Commonwealth of Virginia. It also has an important bearing on the economy of most of the other areas of our State. The millions of tons of coal that roll each year from the mines of Virginia and West Virginia into the great docks of Hampton Roads find employment for thousands of railroad workers throughout the length of the State. Last year 42,197,191 tons went through Hampton Roads en route to Europe and the rest of the world, with additional tonnages tranferred there for water shipment to New York and New England.

Virginia is also an important consumer of bituminous coal. In addition to that which is used for home heating, more than 3,993,000 tons were consumed in our electric-generating stations in 1956. I should like to mention parenthetically that steam-electric powerplants in Virginia in 1956 had a total installed capacity of 1,587,900 kilowatts. Another 483,000 kilowatts of capacity will be available in plants now under construction that will be completed in 1957. For 1958 another 770,000 kilowatts will be available with 160,000 to be added in 1959 and a like amount in 1960. Thus the capacity of steam-electric generating stations is scheduled to double in less than 5 years, as contrasted with an estimated increase of about 50 percent for the country as a whole in the same period. These figures were compiled under the direction of William L. Kurtz, of the National Coal Association's department of coal economics, and were published this week. Other important customers include the chemical industry, the cement industry, textile mills, and a variety of other industrial and manufacturing plants.

I concur with this appraisal of the coal industry's position as reported by the subcommittee on coal research:

> The development of this great resource and revival of this industry should be a national undertaking of the highest priority.

Mr. Speaker, it is my hope that the major recommendations of the subcommittee will be adopted through legislation by Congress early next year. It is a most important assignment, for it will be a contribution to the welfare of the entire Nation as well as to coal-producing regions. Meanwhile, any program to bring in foreign fuels in direct competition to the coal industry would be a direct contradiction to the program recommended by the subcommittee.

We do not need foreign gas in our Midwestern States any more than we need foreign peanuts in Virginia or anywhere else in America. I have been disturbed at the suggestion that the Federal Power Commission allow Canadian gas to enter the fuel markets of this coal-rich Nation. I know that any time a foreign fuel usurps coal's markets anywhere east of the Mississippi River, the impact will eventually extend right into the homes of my constituents. Whenever there is excess coal production, the entire industry suffers. Even if that were not the case, however, opening domestic fuel markets to an alien product would certainly be unfair to members of the United Mine Workers of America in the affected areas. For that reason I am hoping that my colleagues from all sections of the country will join in denouncing the plan to put Americans out of work. It is a matter now before the Federal Power Commission, and I trust that the decision of that Government agency will dispose of the case to the satisfaction of our workers. Meanwhile it is a matter which requires the close attention of all Members of Congress.

New Jersey Should Be Considered as a Farm Drought Area

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHARLES A. WOLVERTON

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, my attention has been called to the disastrous results that have followed the drought during the past summer in the State of New Jersey. The farmers of New Jersey have suffered great losses which justify the recognition of that fact by the Federal Government. Too frequently the farmers of New Jersey are overlooked in the application of remedial legislation that has been enacted by Congress that would be helpful to farmers. It is time more considerate attention was given to our New Jersey farmers.

As an indication of the need that exists I herewith include as part of my remarks a resolution that was passed by the Senate of the State of New Jersey. It reads as follows:

> Whereas the State of New Jersey has been visited with one of the most disastrous droughts which has occurred in many years; and
>
> Whereas the farmers of the State have suffered and will continue to suffer tremendous losses by reason of damage to their crops occasioned thereby; and
>
> Whereas the President of the United States has been requested to determine that the State is a disaster area, so that Federal aid may be made available to those suffering damage by reason of the drought and said request has been denied: Now, therefore, be it
>
> Resolved by the New Jersey Senate, That:
>
> 1. The President of the United States is hereby respectfully requested to reconsider his determination that the farming areas of this State do not constitute disaster areas and to determine them as such disaster areas in order that Federal aid may be available to those persons who would be entitled thereto as a result of such determination.
>
> 2. The secretary of the senate is hereby directed to forward a copy of this resolution, duly signed by the president and attested by the secretary, to the President of the United States and to each of the United States Senators, and each Member of the House of Representatives, from New Jersey.
>
> ALBERT MCCARY,
> President of the Senate.
>
> Attest:
>
> HENRY H. PATTERSON,
> Secretary of the Senate.

To further emphasize the need that exists I include as part of my remarks a telegram which I have received from Hon. Charles W. Sandman, Jr., State senator of New Jersey representing the county of Cape May. His telegram reads as follows:

> CAPE MAY, N. J., August 13, 1957.
>
> Hon. CHARLES A. WOLVERTON,
> House Office Building,
> Washington, D. C.:
>
> Due to the vacancy in the Third Congressional District caused by the death of the late T. Millet Hand I have been asked by a delegation of farmers of Cape May County, N. J., to urgently request reconsideration of the negative drought-disaster decision as it affects New Jersey and particularly Cape May County. This county is the smallest county, agriculturally, in the State and now shows crop losses estimated in excess of $1 million and increasing daily. Corn and hay crop total losses. Pastures beyond repair. Farmers feeding winter feeds. Irrigation ponds dry. Rivers used for irrigation now salt and unusable. Lack of feed grains forcing liquidation of livestock. General economic conditions endangered by lack of farm income as it affects local businesses. Farmers unable to settle current indebtedness and unable to borrow for the coming crop year. Only extreme severity of condition and desire to obtain relief for the farmers in this county necessitates this direct appeal.
>
> Respectfully,
>
> CHARLES W. SANDMAN, Jr.,
> State Senator, New Jersey.

In answer to this telegram I addressed a reply to Senator Sandman reading as follows:

> WASHINGTON, D. C., August 14, 1957.
>
> Senator CHARLES W. SANDMAN, Jr.,
> Cape May, N. J.:
>
> Telegram received. Regret exceedingly previous action taken by administration in not designating New Jersey as drought area. However, Department of Agriculture advises me Acting Secretary of Agriculture Morse has authorized making production emergency loans pursuant to section 2 (a) of Public Law 38, as amended, to eligible farmers in all counties of New Jersey because of damages and loss to crops and pastures resulting from drought conditions. I am mailing you leaflet outlining requirements for participation. Farmers desiring further information about loan or other types of assistance should get in touch with Farmers Home Administration office serving their county.

The Record and Accomplishments of the Committee on Ways and Means During the 1st Session of the 85th Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JERE COOPER

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, it has been my custom since I have been chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means to place in the RECORD a brief report near the end of each session on the work and accomplishments of the Committee on Ways and Means during the session of Congress for the information of Members of Congress and the interested public.

The survey which I have just completed on the work of the committee this session provides ample evidence of the diligent and conscientious attention to duty of all members of the committee. I wish to take this opportunity to again commend them for their hard work, their devotion of long hours and days and weeks to our committee activity. I would like to express my grateful appreciation to my distinguished colleagues on the committee who have served so ably and so conscientiously on the committee during this session. I should also like to take this opportunity to state that as members of the committee they have initiated and acted upon legislation which is greatly in the public interest and of tremendous assistance to the citizens of our country.

This legislative activity has covered nearly every major field of the committee's broad jurisdiction. While some of the bills receiving favorable action by the committee were what might be termed minor bills, a number of measures properly fall within the category of major legislation. At a later point in this report I shall give a brief summary and description of the action of the committee in each of the areas of its jurisdiction. I shall also, at a later point, indicate the activity of the three subcommittees which the committee reestablished at the beginning of this Congress.

This session of the 85th Congress has been a period of intensive activity by the Committee on Ways and Means. The legislation which has been favorably acted upon by the committee is sound, responsible, and beneficial to the American people. The committee has, with determination and conscientiousness, applied itself to the exceptionally heavy workload before it and has made great progress in the interest of all our citizens. Due to the vital importance of matters falling within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Ways and Means, to the economy and well-being of our Nation, it is particularly necessary that this committee exercise the utmost care and thought to screening the many proposals referred to it so that those measures selected for favorable consideration will be ones which are in the public interest and which benefit all Americans. I can truthfully say that the record of the committee during this session has been an outstanding one. As an individual member of the committee, I voted against some of the matters which were nevertheless ordered reported by a majority of the committee. This is the way our committee system works.

As I shall point out in more detail later in this report, the committee has taken action on a broad front. It has favorably reported, and the House has passed, the first technical revision of our excise tax structure since 1932, when many of our present excise taxes were first adopted. It has favorably reported a major bill the purpose of which is to correct unintended benefits and hardships and thus close many actual and potential loopholes in our income and estate tax laws. It has favorably reported a bill which has now become public law which make it possible for our citizens to receive a higher interest return on their investments in United States Savings bonds. It has protected the fiscal integrity of the Government by extending, on the request of the administration, certain excise and corporate tax rates until June 30, 1958. It has favorably acted on amendments to the Antidumping Act. It has taken favorable action on a variety of social security measures affording further benefits to our citizens. It has acted to empower the Government to further control the manufacture of narcotic drugs. And it has acted on a broad variety of other measures.

But equally important as the matters on which the committee has taken final action are the studies which are underway looking toward major action next session. The three subcommittees of the committee have been hard at work on agendas which they have developed and the groundwork which has been laid through their continuing careful studies will be basic to action to be taken by the full committee in the forthcoming session.

In my past reports of this nature I have taken occasion to point out the constantly increasing workload of the Committee on Ways and Means. In the survey I have just completed, it is obvious to me that this pattern of increasing activity in the areas of jurisdiction of the Committee on Ways and Means has continued on a sharply ascending curve which attests to the importance of the matters which we handle and to the vital relationship of our legislative activities to the welfare of our country. In this report I shall shortly present statistics to show that more public bills have been referred to the Committee on Ways and Means during this session of the Congress than have been introduced and referred to us in any single previous session in the committee's history. At the end of the 84th Congress I pointed out that some 1,324 bills had been introduced and referred to the committee for consideration, which was the largest number ever referred to us up to that time. During the 1st session of the 85th Congress, which is just drawing to a close, a total of 1,538 bills have been referred to us for consideration. Thus, it can be seen that more bills were referred to the committee during the 1st session of the 85th Congress than during both sessions of the 84th Congress. These 1,538 public bills cover every area of our jurisdiction and every facet of our activity. This is between 3 and 4 times the number of bills which were referred to the committee during the 2d session of the 84th Congress, and approximately twice the number of bills which were referred to the committee in the 1st session of the 84th Congress. Of course, it is generally true that more bills are introduced during the first session of the Congress than during the second session. However, to repeat, the total of 1,538 bills which were referred to the committee during this 1st session of the 85th Congress represents more bills than were referred to the Committee during both sessions of the 84th Congress, or for that matter, any previous Congress.

I will set forth below a comparative table which I have had prepared showing the number of bills introduced and referred to the committee for the past decade. It can readily be seen from this table how vastly the work of this committee has grown during that period. For example, 10 years ago, during the 1st session of the 80th Congress—1947—a total of 407 bills were introduced and referred to the committee, which represents only approximately one-fourth of the total of 1,538 bills which were introduced and referred to the committee during this session of the 85th Congress. Six years ago, during the 1st session of the 82d Congress—1951—some 433 bills were referred to the committee, again only about one-fourth the number referred this year.

The following table shows statistics in this regard for the past 10 years:

At the beginning of this session of the Congress, the committee acted to re-establish three subcommittees covering three of the major areas of the committee's jurisdiction. These subcommittees and the membership of each follow: Subcommittee on Internal Revenue Taxation, under the chairmanship of the Honorable Wilbur D. Mills, with the following membership: Noble J. Gregory, Thomas J. O'Brien, Frank Ikard, Richard M. Simpson, Robert W. Kean, and Howard H. Baker; Subcommittee on Excise Taxes, under the chairmanship of the Honorable Aime J. Forand, with the following membership: Herman P. Eberharter, Eugene J. Keogh, Frank M. Karsten, A. S. Herlong, Jr., Thomas A. Jenkins, Noah M. Mason, and Hal Holmes; and the Subcommittee on Foreign Trade Policy, under the chairmanship of the Honorable Hale Boggs, with the following membership: Cecil R. King, Burr P. Harrison, Eugene J. McCarthy, Thaddeus M. Machrowicz, Daniel A. Reed, John W. Byrnes, Antoni N. Sadlak, and Thomas B. Curtis.

I. STATUS OF LEGISLATION 1ST SESSION, 85TH CONGRESS

During the first session of this Congress, the committee has favorably reported to the House of Representatives a total of 48 bills, of which 43 have been passed by the House. Of the 43 which have been passed by the House, a total of 21 has passed the Senate, and a total of 21 has been signed into public law. As may be seen from table I, more bills were reported during this session than in any previous session during the past 10 years, with the exception of the 1st session of the 84th Congress.

The follwing table shows the status of legislation on which the committee has acted favorably during the session just completed, broken down into categories of tax bills, social-security bills, and tariff bills:

TABLE II

	Social security	Tariff	Tax	Total
Bills reported to House	11	13	26	50
Bills passed House	10	11	22	43
Bills reported to Senate	8	10	4	22
Bills passed Senate	8	9	4	21
Bills enacted into law [1]	8	9	4	21

[1] This figure includes 10 bills awaiting the President's signature.

The full committee met 61 times in executive session and in addition conducted public hearings on 5 different subjects for a period of some 8 days, receiving testimony from some 119 different witnesses, plus the statements received from many other individuals and organizations for the record. In this connection, it is important to point out here that groundwork for much of our legislative activity this session was laid in public hearings conducted by our three subcommittees last fall. Those hearings, of course, were not covered in my report at the end of last session and properly should be included here. During these hearings, which lasted a total of 36 days, some 356 witnesses were heard, in addition to many additional statements submitted for the record. Data concerning the public hearings of the full committee and the subcommittees follows:

TABLE III.—Public hearings of Committee on Ways and Means and subcommittees thereof

Subcommittee on Foreign Trade Policy: On administration and operation of customs and tariff laws and the trade agreements program.	Sept. 17-28, 1956 Oct. 2, 1956	96

Overseas conferences: The subcommittee also conducted overseas studies and conferences and received statements and views from a large number of witnesses which have been published as vol. 4 of the hearings containing some 373 pages.

Moreover, the three subcommittees of the committee met in executive session approximately 38 times during the session.

II. BRIEF DESCRIPTION OF LEGISLATIVE ACTIVITY

A. Tax legislation:

During the first session of this Congress the Committee on Ways and Means took favorable action on 26 bills, the purpose of which was to amend the Internal Revenue Code in various respects. Many of these bills made important changes in our tax structure, and three of these bills constituted major legislation. Of these 3, 1 has been signed into public law, 1 has passed the House of Representatives and is presently pending before the Senate Finance Committee, and 1 is pending on the House Calendar. Of the 22 bills which might be labeled minor bills, 2 have been signed into public law, 19 have passed the House, and 3 are pending on the House Calendar.

A brief description of the three major bills in the tax field follows.

A major tax bill, which has been favorably acted upon by the committee and which has passed the House of Representatives and is now before the Senate Committee on Finance, is H. R. 7125 entitled "Excise Tax Technical Changes Act of 1957." While this bill, as indicated by its title, is a technical one and does not make any major changes with regard to excise tax rates, it contains the first overall technical revision of the general excise tax provisions since 1932, the year when a great many of these provisions were first adopted. Its title does not truly indicate the vast amount of time and work which went into the bill's preparation, consideration, and reporting by the Committee on Ways and Means. In order that the true nature of the work involved may be indicated, the bill itself consisted of some 430 pages, and the committee report accompanying the bill consisted of approximately 212 pages. This bill represents the culmination of over 2 years of intensive work both by the full committee and by the Subcommittee on Excise Taxes, formerly the Subcommittee on Excise Tax, Technical, and Administrative Problems.

In addition to numerous changes in virtually all classes of the miscellaneous excise taxes, the provisions of the code relating to the communications and documentary stamp taxes and the important credit and refund provisions have been entirely rewritten by title I of the bill. Title II of the bill is concerned with the provisions of the code relating to the taxes on distilled spirits, wines, beer, tobacco products, and firearms. The bill provides a general technical revision of the distilled spirit provisions and also the occupational tax provisions relating to wholesale and retail dealers in alcoholic beverages. Title I of the bill, as indicated above, contains the first general technical revision of the excise tax provisions which has been attempted since the time when most of those provisions were first incorporated in the Internal Revenue Code. The extensive and intensive work which went into the preparation of final drafting and approval of this bill by the committee can be indicated also by the fact that extended public hearings were held on the subjects covered by the bill for a period of approximately 2 weeks in October 1955 and also again in January and March of 1956, incorporating over 1,000 pages of testimony and statements in three volumes. Several interim reports were prepared and considered by the subcommittee and given careful and complete consideration by the full Committee on Ways and Means prior to final action on provisions of the bill. The bill was reported by the committee on May 24, 1957, and passed the House of Representatives on June 20, 1957. It represents a major revision of the technical excise tax provisions of the code.

A second major tax bill favorably reported by the Committee on Ways and Means was H. R. 8381 entitled "Technical Amendments Act of 1957." This bill represents a major step in the elimination of substantive unintended benefits and hardships in the existing income, estate, and gift tax provisions, and also removes many technical errors and ambiguities in the tax statutes. The bill contains 81 sections. While in terms of the number of changes most of the bill deals with the correction of inadvertent errors in the internal revenue laws, the bill contains considerably more significant provisions which are concerned with "unintended benefits" and "unintended hardships" which relate to problems of revenue significance which have developed over a considerable period of time. This bill represents the culmination of intensive work by the Subcommittee on Internal Revenue Taxation, by the full Committee on Ways and Means and by the staffs. Active work toward the bill was begun in July of 1956 when the Subcommittee on Internal Revenue Taxation was established to review existing income, estate and gift tax provisions and to determine the substantive unintended benefits and hardships and technical problems needing correction. That subcommittee held public hearings in November of 1956 which cover over 500 pages of testimony and statements received from various individuals and organizations interested in these matters. In addition, as indicated, both the subcommittee and the full Committee on Ways and Means spent many days in executive session studying these various problems before reporting H. R. 8381. The bill was reported by the committee on July 9, 1957, and is presently pending on the House Calendar.

A third tax bill which can properly be considered a major bill from the standpoint of the general revenues was H. R. 4090 entitled "Tax Rate Extension Act of 1957." This bill, as reported by the Committee on Ways and Means provided for a one-year extension of the present corporate income tax rate and existing rates of certain excise taxes. In the form in which the bill passed the Senate, a 15-month extension of these tax rates was provided for, and in that form the bill was agreed to by the House of Representatives and signed into law by the President.

The extension of these tax rates concerned was requested by the Secretary of the Treasury in behalf of the administration and was agreed to because of their effect on the Federal budget in the fiscal year 1958. It was estimated that, had the rates not been extended, there would have been a deficit in the fiscal year 1958 of about $500 million. It was estimated that the total full-year effect under the bill as passed by the House would be $2,975 million. The bill was favorably reported by the Committee on Ways and Means on February 7, 1957, passed the House on March 14, 1957, passed the Senate on March 27, 1957, and signed by the President on March 29, 1957.

Two additional tax measures which received favorable action by the Committee on Ways and Means deserve particular mention here. These bills are now pending before the Senate Committee on Finance. The first of these, H. R. 8865, relating to the administration of certain collected taxes, was designed to secure greater compliance with present law on the part of employers and others in paying over to the Government trust fund withheld tax moneys such as income, social security and retailers taxes. It provides, generally speaking, for penalties to insure that employers who withhold income, or social security taxes or who collect excise taxes shall pay such moneys into the Treasury. The committee was advised that, as of December 31, 1956, the delinquent withheld income and social security taxes alone amounted to $279 million. This legislation was designed to prevent this from further occurring.

The second tax bill which also deserves special mention, in addition to the major bills, is H. R. 8216, a bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code to prevent unjust enrichment by precluding refunds of alcohol and tobacco taxes to persons who have not borne the ultimate burden of the tax. This legislation limits refunds to cases where claimants bore the ultimate burden or repaid the amount of the tax to the person who bore the ultimate burden. Claims already filed, including refunds of these taxes, amount to $830 million.

In addition to the above major bills and bills deserving of special mention, the committee also took favorable action on 19 miscellaneous bills of lesser importance relating to taxes. These miscellaneous bills covered a variety of different subjects too lengthy to outline here. Details as to these and all other bills referred to the committee can be found in the legislative calendar of the committee.

B. Fiscal legislation:

In the field of general fiscal legislation, other than taxes, the Committee on Ways and Means took favorable action on one bill, H. R. 5520, which properly can be classified as major legislation. As reported by the committee and in the form in which it passed the House of Representatives, this bill would have increased the maximum permissible interest rate on savings bonds—and savings certificates—held to maturity from 3 percent to 3½ percent a year, compounded semiannually. It would have authorized the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, to increase the yield on savings bonds and savings certificates bearing issue dates of February 1, 1957, or later, and it would also have authorized the Secretary, in his discretion, to increase the maximum interest rate on series E savings bonds, maturing on February 1, 1957, or later which the holder retained for an extension period of not more than 10 years beyond their maturity dates. The Senate amended this bill so as to provide discretionary authority to the Secretary to raise the interest rate on these bonds to 3.26 percent in lieu of the 3½ percent authority contained in the House bill, and the bill in this form was agreed to by the House and approved by the President April 20, 1957.

This legislation is quite important to the millions of individuals who purchase and hold series E savings bonds, since it will permit the Secretary of the Treasury to increase the interest rate payable to these millions of individuals on this important type of savings, if he deems this advisable. This legislation was designed to further encourage investment in these bonds by our individual citizens. The importance of this authority, which can be exercised by the Treasury, in affording our citizens increased interest on this class of investment is underscored by the generally rising interest rates on other comparable forms of investment. This legislation will permit our individual citizens to continue to participate in this vitally important savings program at a rate of interest more commensurate with that which is paid on such other forms of similar investment.

C. Narcotics legislation:

The Committee on Ways and Means also took favorable action during this session of the Congress on a bill, H. R. 9028, covering another important area of the committee's jurisdiction, namely, the field of control of narcotic drugs. While this legislation is technically tax legislation, or constitutes an amendment to the Internal Revenue Code, from a substantive point of view it appropriately can be considered to be an additional different field of jurisdiction. This legislation was designed to give full effect to treaty obligations of the United States to limit exclusively to medical and scientific purposes the manufacture of narcotic drugs and to require that such manufacture be restricted to persons and premises that have been licensed for the purpose. It is also designed to amend the Narcotic Drugs Import and Export Act to bring the regulation of exports in conformity with current treaty obligations, and to permit the importation and exportation of certain narcotic drugs for scientific research purposes. This action of the committee during this session thus further supplements the important action taken by the committee and the Congress during the last session with regard to control of the illicit trafficking in drugs and the prevention of insidious and heinous crimes resulting from the use of such drugs. This legislation is considered therefore to be quite important in protecting the welfare of our citizens and in promoting the general interest. It is now pending before the Senate Committee on Finance.

D. Social-security legislation:

One of the most important major fields of jurisdiction of the Committee on Ways and Means is that relating to our national social security laws. As may be recalled, during the second session of the 84th Congress the Social Security Act amendments of 1956 were finally enacted by Congress and approved by the President. During this first session of the 85th Congress, the committee did not act on a major social security bill comparable to the Social Security Act amendments of 1956 but it did take action on a variety of lesser, but nonetheless important, bills in this area of its jurisdiction. The action which the committee took on these miscellaneous bills in the field of social security will afford benefits to a very large number of our citizens who, because of certain provisions in existing law, would not have been able to receive such benefits. For example, a large number of ministers had not availed themselves, for one reason or another, of the privilege which was extended to them of electing, by April 15, 1957, to come under the act as a self-employed individual. A number of other ministers had been mistakenly enrolled along with lay employees in certain church schools and similar organizations and were faced with the prospect of losing their social security coverage. The committee acted, in H. R. 8892, to afford these ministers a further opportunity to elect coverage and to insure that all those who desire coverage might obtain it. Another bill, H. R. 6191, extended the time in which the disability freeze provisions of the act could be made retroactive, which should be of material benefit to those of our citizens who have been unfortunate enough to become disabled. In this same bill the committee also took favorable action on a provision which eliminated from present law the so-called dual disability provision as it related to disability-insurance benefits insofar as veterans who were receiving service-connected disability compensation from the Veterans' Administration are concerned. This change in the law will permit veterans to draw both social security and veterans' disability benefits.

As indicated above, there were a variety of these miscellaneous bills, a total of 11, too numerous to outline here, which will be of very material benefit to our citizens. All of these social-security bills are now law or are awaiting signature by the President.

E. Customs and tariff legislation:

The Committee on Ways and Means has taken action on a number of bills with respect to customs and tariff matters. One bill of particular interest and which deserves mention here is H. R. 6006, the purpose of which is to amend the Antidumping Act of 1921 so as to provide for greater certainty, speed, and efficiency in the enforcement of that act. This legislation was based upon the report made to the Congress by the Treasury Department in accordance with section 5 of the Customs Simplification Act of 1956. The three principal features of this legislation are as follows:

First, it amends provisions of the act relative to the assessment of dumping duties to correct possible situations which may arise where sales at less than fair value and injury are found but where no duties can be collected; second, it amends certain definitions contained in the act so as to bring them into conformity with new definitions included in the Customs Simplification Act of 1956; and third, it provides for mandatory public notice when there is reason to believe or suspect sales of imported merchandise at dumping prices, and mandatory public notice by the Treasury Department and the Tariff Commission of their decision in dumping cases along with reasons therefor. This legislation embodies all the amendments which the Treasury Department was prepared to recommend to the committee at this time. However, the committee recognizes that many interested individuals and organizations have urged more basic amendments to the Antidumping Act, and the committee is continuing to study this act, along with other matters in this general field, with respect to the desirability and advisability for further legislation. This bill is now pending before the Senate Committee on Finance.

Another bill in the customs and tariff field which deserves some particular mention here is H. R. 6304, the purpose of which, as acted upon by the committee and as it passed the House of Representatives, was to make permanent the existing privilege of free importation of gifts from the members of the Armed Forces of the United States on duty abroad. The Senate amended this bill so as to extend this privilege for an additional 2-year period, and in that form is was agreed to by the House of Representatives and approved by the President. This legislation should be of particular interest to the members of the Armed Forces abroad in that, from a morale standpoint, it is extremely important to a serviceman on such duty to be able to send small gifts and souvenirs from the region in which he is serving to his family and friends in this country.

The Committee on Ways and Means acted favorably on a total of 13 bills in the field of customs and tariff matters and, although the majority of these bills properly could be classified as minor bills, they do provide benefits and helpful assistance to our citizens and our industries.

F. Studies and program for second session:

As I have indicated above, the Committee on Ways and Means and its subcommittees have under way studies and investigations which should be of material assistance in the further consideration of important legislation during the next session of this Congress. Due to the nature of the public bills falling within the jurisdiction of this committee, it is particularly necessary and advisable that the committee act with the utmost thoughtfulness and caution. The relationship of tax legislation, fiscal legislation, social-security legislation, and customs and tariff legislation to the economy of our Nation and the well-being of our citizens is obvious, and the committee has always taken cognizance of this fact. It could not act precipitously on legislation of this kind. I emphasize these matters because it underscores and gives emphasis to the significant studies which are under way particularly by the three subcommittees of the committee.

I have already announced that the Committee on Ways and Means, beginning next January 7, will conduct general revenue revision hearings. During the course of those hearings the committee will receive the views and comments of individuals and organizations with respect to our revenue system. In the meantime, the Subcommittee on Excise Taxes is continuing its work toward further technical and administrative changes, and, even more important, is making a study of our Federal excise tax structure and rates.

Statement Concerning the Activities of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, House of Representatives, 1st Session, 85th Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HERBERT C. BONNER

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following report of activities of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, of which I am chairman, for the 1st session of the 85th Congress. The report is brief, but I expect that, in accordance with past customs, a full and complete account of committee activities will be submitted at the close of the Congress next year.

During the year, a great part of the time of the committee was devoted to basic studies of matters within the jurisdiction of the committee, preliminary to consideration of specific legislation during the second session. Some of the problems under consideration involved safety legislation for small pleasure boats, and late in the session bills were introduced for action next year. As a part of its work in this field and in furtherance of its aim to report a simple and effective means of control for the over 4 million small boats in the country which are presently unregulated, the committee distributed to the governors and attorneys general of the States and Territories copies of the bills with a request for their cooperation in achieving a workable uniform law for State and Federal cooperation in the field of boating safety. In addition, the Council of State Governments has placed this subject on the agenda for its next meeting in Washington on September 5 and 6, 1957.

In a related field, the committee considered 18 bills involving Public Law 519, of the 84th Congress, which extended Coast Guard jurisdiction over boats for hire which carry six or more persons. The law, as originally enacted, would have subjected such boats to regulation on January 1, 1958, but a number of Members of Congress were of the opinion that the date did not provide sufficient time for understanding of and compliance with Coast Guard regulations. After study and hearing, the committee concluded that additional time should be afforded, and accordingly reported a bill extending the deadline to June 1, 1958. That bill is now awaiting action by the President.

In the field of merchant marine activity, the committee placed emphasis on its studies of basic problems, rather than immediate legislation. Probably the most serious problem confronting the merchant marine is the possibility of a diminution in its importance in the field of national defense. New strategic concepts, with their emphasis on air power and missiles and the belief that any future war will be of very short duration, have induced the belief in some quarters that the supply problems of the past, which could only be met by the merchant marine, will not exist. In an effort to determine whether such ideas had any support among those charged with the responsibility for the safety of our Nation, the committee called the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of Commerce to testify regarding the attitude of the administration. Their testimony, together with that of the many other witnesses who appeared, is presently under study by the committee, and will be the subject of a separate report to the House.

Primarily, as a result of the work of the committee in the previous Congress, substantial progress can be reported in the modernization of our merchant marine. As a result of the encouragement of the committee, the Maritime Administration revised its policy on operating subsidy contracts to increase their duration to 20 years. This was necessary to provide assurance of continued subsidy to the operators who were faced with the necessity of replacing their aging fleets with new ships at great cost. One company, Lykes Bros. Steamship Co., has entered into a contract to build 53 ships at a cost of half a billion dollars. Another, States Steamship Co., has undertaken the obligation of building 13 ships at a cost of $150 million. On Wednesday of this week Grace Line launched the Steamship Santa Rosa to replace a 25-year-old combination vessel of the same name. Another similar vessel is presently under construction, and these two constitute the start of a $286 million construction program to include 9 passenger-cargo vessels and 15 freighters. In addition, the Maritime Administration is in the process of soliciting bids and awarding contracts for over 15 ships for operation on essential trade routes.

The encouragement and the work of the committee over the past few years is reflected not only in the future prospect of a completely new and modern merchant marine under the American flag, but in the present activity in our shipyards. Only a short time ago the committee became aware of the dangerously low rate of activity in the shipyards, with the resulting low employment and the loss of shipbuilding skills so necessary to the welfare of our country in wartime. There was evidence of deterioration of our tramp fleet, with no prospect of replacement of its aging ships because of the lack of prospect of continued business and the consequent inability to secure financing of new construction. Ships were being laid up for lack of cargo because of foreign competition by newer ships at lower rates. Extended hearings produced a record in which representatives of Government, labor, ship operators, and investment experts contributed their ideas.

Ultimately, the situation was attacked on two fronts. The first involved assurance of more cargo for American ships. This was accomplished by requiring the shipment of not less than one-half of cargoes in which the United States Government had an interest on American ships—the so-called 50-50 law. While previous separate bills had contained such a provision, there had been no permanent requirement, and thus no assurance of future business. As a result of this law, some degree of stability is guaranteed American-flag ships.

The other goal—that of securing new construction to protect our defense stake in the shipyards and to keep us competitive in the field of ocean trading—was achieved through a combination of administrative action and legislation. As to the former, the Maritime Administration tightened its rules covering transfers of ships to foreign flags by instituting a requirement that for each transfer, equivalent ships must be built in American yards for operation under the American flag. By this action, shipowners were able to secure a part of the capital necessary to build new ships, shipyards received much needed business, and assurance was secured that our fleet would contain new ships designed to meet the needs of our commerce and defense.

The other problem urgently requiring action was the ever recurring need for financing of new construction. In the United States, ocean shipping has never been regarded as a prime investment. With the cost of new ships far above their present ones, shipowners were not in a position to think about securing financing of replacements. After long study, the committee evolved the bills which amended the Merchant Marine Act to provide for Government guaranty of private mortgages on ships, and has continued its activities to amend the basic legislation as experience required. The effect of this approach was, for the first time, to make ships attractive as investments for private capital. The result has been a substantial contribution to present shipbuilding activity, and a prospect of future expansion of our American-flag fleet.

For some time the committee has been concerned over the failure of the United States to keep abreast of other maritime nations in the field of passenger vessels. Such vessels have been vital as troop carriers, and they are essential to maintain American-flag service during peacetime. In an effort to meet the need for such vessels to some degree, bills have been introduced by the chairman and other members of the committee to authorize the construction of a ship similar to the steamship United States, to replace the steamship America, and a new 1,400 passenger vessel for operation in the Pacific. Hearings on both of these will be scheduled early in the next session, and early action by the committee is assured.

The collision of the motor vessel Stockholm and the steamship Andrea Doria off Nantucket Island on the night of July 25, 1956, and the sinking of the latter with a loss of 50 lives, focused the attention of the world on the subject of safety of life at sea. Pursuant to authority granted by the House, the committee undertook a staff investigation by a group of experts of the collision to determine what lessons could be learned and applied to minimize the consequences of such happenings in the future. The result of their study was embodied in House Report No. 2969, 84th Congress, which recommended certain actions by various agencies of the Government. To determine what progress had been made in carrying out the recommendations contained in the report, a hearing was held late in this session to receive progress reports. As a result of this hearing a report—House Report No. 1179—was made by this committee, with recommendations that prompt steps be taken to secure international action to consider the necessity for raising standards of safety.

Another matter that was the subject of extended hearings by the committee was that of utilization of private terminal facilities by the Armed Forces to a greater degree than at present. Although the bill which gave rise to the hearings was not acted on, it is expected that further action will be taken in the course of the next session.

Within the sphere of its jurisdiction over fisheries and wildlife, the activity of the committee ranged from consideration and action upon bills affecting control over the salmon fisheries in the Northwest and Alaska, to protection of commercial fishermen in the Caribbean Sea and Pacific Ocean. The necessity for action in the latter field arose from the fact that there is no international agreement as to the offshore limits of territorial waters, and the distances claimed range from 3 miles by the United States to 200 miles claimed by Peru. United States fishermen conducting their activities in waters claimed by some maritime nations have been subjected to seizure of equipment, detention, fines and, in two cases at least, bodily injury from shots fired in the course of seizure. In 1954, Public Law 680 was enacted, which authorized the State Department to reimburse fishermen for fines illegally collected by foreign nations. However, the losses suffered were considerably greater than the fines, and legislation was introduced to include reimbursement for these items. As a result of hearings, a bill was reported to provide reimbursement for loss of fishing gear and personal injury to citizen crew members.

In the field of migratory wildfowl, there has been criticism for a number of years over the disposition of proceeds of duck stamp sales. At the time of the enactment of the original legislation requiring the purchase of stamps by hunters, it was believed that the proceeds of the sales would be devoted chiefly to the acquisition of badly needed additional wildfowl refuge lands. However, over the course of years, the Department of the Interior has utilized by far the greater portion of money derived from that source for other purposes, and the acquisition program has suffered. In an attempt to correct the situation, a number of bills were introduced and considered by the committee which would earmark the proceeds of the duck stamps for refuge acquisition. During the course of hearings, bills were introduced to meet objections made by those interested in the problem, and at present the committee has before it a bill believed to implement the original purpose of the early legislation which has the endorsement of a large proportion of the sportsmen of the country, and on which final action will be taken early in the next session.

Early in this session the committee received a graphic illustration of the problem of inflation facing the country. During the 84th Congress Public Law 251 was enacted which authorized the construction of two new vessels for the Coast and Geodetic Survey at a cost of $3,700,000 each. When bids for their construction were received, it appeared that an additional $300,000 per vessel would be required, and the necessary authorization bill was reported by the committee and subsequently enacted into law.

In the field of activity touching the Panama Canal, the committee was confronted with the necessity of acting on legislation to implement the new treaty made with the Republic of Panama in 1955, covering the transfer of some $24 million of land and buildings to be transferred to the Republic, and the necessary authorization of expense for replacement of transferred facilities within the Canal Zone. Authorization of the transfer was favorably reported by the committee, but some of the remaining problems of the impact of the treaty upon the Panama Canal Co. remain to be considered during the next session.

Present calculations indicate that the Panama Canal will be utilized to its fullest capacity not later than 12 to 15 years hence. In view of the time required to locate, plan and construct additional facilities, the committee is undertaking to recruit a staff of experts in the engineering and transportation fields to evaluate existing data to determine the proper location, type and extent of additional means for transit between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans in the region of Central America. It is planned that the result of their efforts will be reported to the House for its guidance in considering necessary legislation to augment the present canal facilities.

In addition to the work of the staff, a number of subcommittees plan to engage in studies of matters within their jurisdiction in preparation for action on legislation during the next session of this Congress.

During the 84th Congress, legislation was enacted to effect a reorganization of the Fish and Wildlife Service of the Department of the Interior to establish an assistant secretaryship within the Department and to separate the commercial fisheries jurisdiction from that of sport fisheries and wildlife. During the present session it appeared that the reorganized Service planned very considerable increases in the number of regional offices and personnel theretofore existing. The committee has been studying the situation for the purpose of seeing that the personnel increase was kept at a minimum, consistent with the proper functioning of the Fish and Wildlife Service, and plans to continue its work in this field during the recess. In this connection, the chairman has agreed with the Assistant Secretary of the Interior for Fisheries and Wildlife that there will be no increases in personnel and no vacancies will be filled until the committee has had opportunity at the beginning of the second session to hear from responsible officials as to the need for any increase.

Let's Look at the Record

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN H. RAY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. RAY. Mr. Speaker, in recent weeks we have heard and read many criticisms of certain decisions of the Supreme Court, and even of the Court itself and its members. Some of those criticisms have been careful and thoughtful; others have been hasty and intemperate. Most reflect dissatisfaction and concern over the results of the decisions. Only a few rest upon an analysis of the issues, the law and the facts which were before the Court and upon which its decision in each case was based.

There are 13 decisions subsequent to the school segregation case—1954—about which Members of this House have been especially critical.

Six of those decisions must be attributed to ommissions or defective action on the part of Congress. Another, the Jencks case, involved unwise tactics by the prosecution in a criminal case in a Federal court—and two, Kremen and Zucca, involved improper actions of two bureaus of the Department of Justice.

Among the six are the Stevens case, the Watkins case and the Mallory case. In the Stevens case the Court found that certain laws enacted by Congress established a Congressional intent to occupy the field of prosecution for acts in violation of the Federal antisedition law and, therefore, that violation of that law could not be prosecuted by a State in its courts. Corrective legislation—H. R. 3—has been introduced and is pending before our Judiciary Committee. A similar bill was reported favorably by the Judiciary Committee last year but was not acted upon by the Rules Committee.

The Watkins case merely held that we had not extended to the House Un-American Activities Committee the authority to carry on some of the investigations that committee had undertaken. It is well recognized and has long been established that a delegation of legislative authority must state a clear and definite rule or principle within which the agency can act. Here again the remedy is clear and it is in our hands.

The Mallory case construed one of the rules of procedure in Federal courts. That decision relied upon and followed the Dennison case decided 6 years ago. Congress has had ample time to bring about a change in the rule of procedure.

The Jencks case is quite different from the three just mentioned. Here the Court applied another long-established rule that if a prosecutor relies upon the testimony of a witness who had made an earlier report on the facts about which he testified, that report must be made available to the defense, or in the alternative, the testimony of that witness must be stricken from the record.

The Jencks, Kremen, and Zucca results can be avoided in the future by adequate action in the department concerned.

The other four—Slochower, Schware, Konigsberg, and Sweezy—involve whether or not State and local laws and administration were in conflict with the Constitution of the United States. Remedial action if desired lies with State and local authorities.

I submit that we in Congress should not try to hold the Supreme Court responsible for results due to our own shortcomings in legislating or to the actions of officials in the administration. And it must be kept in mind that as time goes on without our taking remedial action, it is the Congress and not the Court which has the responsibility for continuing in effect the law as found by the Court.

Report to the People of the Eighth Congressional District of Wisconsin—XI

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN W. BYRNES

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I include a report to the people of the Eighth Congressional District of Wisconsin on my voting and attendance record for the first session of the 85th Congress.

No attempt has been made to include votes on all of the numerous bills, motions, and amendments. The report does include all rollcall votes and all quorum calls. The purpose of this report is to collect in one place and in concise form information which is scattered through some 15,000 pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The descriptions of the bills and the amendments or motions as contained in the report are for the purposes of identification only; no attempt is made to describe the legislation completely or to elaborate upon the issues involved. I believe this word of caution is advisable in view of the fact that the descriptions used are, for the most part, taken from the official titles of the bills which unfortunately do not always reflect the nature or true purpose of the legislation. Upon request, I will be pleased to furnish more complete information concerning any particular bill, as well as a summary of the issues involved and the reasons for my vote.

The furnishing of this report continues a service I began in the 1st session of the 80th Congress. This is the 11th report of my voting and attendance record. These 11 reports show how I voted on 1,532 questions in the House of Representatives. Based on quorum calls and the record votes, they also show an attendance record of 95 percent.

Voting and attendance record, Representative JOHN W. BYRNES, 8th District, Wisconsin (85th Cong., 1st sess.)

AN EXPLANATION OF TERMS

Of necessity the report contains parliamentary and legislative terms with which the reader may not be familiar. An explanation of some of these terms may, therefore, be helpful:

A. A quorum call consists of a calling of the roll of Members to determine whether or not a quorum—a majority of Members—is present. No business may be conducted when it is found that a quorum is not present.

B. Recommittal: Generally, on all important bills, a motion to recommit the bill to a committee, with or without instructions, is voted upon by the House before it votes upon passage of the bill. If such a motion is adopted, it means that the bill will be changed, delayed, or even killed. However, when a motion to recommit is accompanied by instructions, the vote generally indicates whether the Member is in favor of or opposed to the change in the legislation proposed by the instructions and does not necessarily indicate his position on the bill as a whole. A motion to recommit with instructions, if adopted, does not kill the bill.

C. The type of bill can be determined by the letters which precede its number. All bills that originate in the House are designated by an H; those that originate in the Senate by an S. There are four main types:

First. H. R. (S.) designates a bill which, when passed by both Houses in identical form and signed by the President, becomes law.

Second. H. J. Res. (S. J. Res.) designates a joint resolution which must pass both Houses and be signed by the President before becoming law. It is generally used for continuing the life of an existing law, or in submitting to the States a constitutional amendment, in which case it does not require the signature of the President but must be passed by a two-thirds majority of both Houses.

Third. H. Con. Res. (S. Con. Res.) designates a concurrent resolution. To become effective it must be passed by both the House and Senate but does not require the President's signature. It is used to take joint action which is purely within the jurisdiction of Congress. Many emergency laws carry the provision that they may be terminated by concurrent resolution, thus eliminating the possibility of a Presidental veto.

Fourth. H. Res. (S. Res.) designates a simple resolution of either body. It does not require approval by the other body nor the signature of the President. It is used to deal with matters that concern one House only, such as changing rules, creating special committees, and so forth.

D. Rule: Important bills, after approval of the committee concerned, go to the House Committee on Rules where a rule, in the form of a House resolution (H. Res.), is granted covering the time allowed for debate, consideration of amendments, and other parliamentary questions.

E. Conference: Representatives from both Houses of Congress meet in conference to work out differences existing in the legislation as passed by the two bodies. Upon conclusion of their conference, a report is submitted to each House setting forth the agreements reached. Each House then must act by way of adopting or rejecting the report in whole or in part.

F. Ordering the previous question: A motion to order the previous question, if adopted, shuts off further debate on the question before the House and prevents further amendments to such proposition.

G. A bill may pass, or be defeated, by one of the following kind of votes:

First. Voice vote: The Speaker first asks all in favor to say "aye" then those opposed to say "nay." If there is no question as to the result, this is sufficient.

Second. Division: If the result of the voice vote is in doubt, the Speaker asks those in favor to stand, then those opposed to stand. He counts in each instance and announces the result. If he is in doubt, or if demand is made by one-fifth of a quorum, then—

Third. Tellers are ordered. A Member on each side of the question is appointed as teller, and they take their places at each side of the center aisle. Those in favor walk through and are counted. Those opposed do likewise. The result settles most questions, but any Member, supported by one-fifth of a quorum, can ask for a rollcall. This privilege is guaranteed by the Constitution.

Fourth. Rollcalls place each Member on record on the particular measure involved. Each Member's name is called and his vote recorded. Rollcalls constitute the official voting record of the House.

The outcome of rollcall votes is indicated in parentheses in the record above, and the actual vote is shown—the yeas first and the nays last.

Report to the People of the Second District of New Hampshire

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. PERKINS BASS

OF NEW HAMPSHIRE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. BASS of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, the first session of the 85th Congress has adjourned and we are now able to appraise its accomplishments and their effect on the Nation and the Second Congressional District in New Hampshire which I am privileged to represent in Congress. This has been an unusual session, for although it followed within weeks the sweeping reelection victory of President Eisenhower, the Congress has been led by the opposing party, and for the first time a President has served under a two-term constitutional limitation.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

The drive of international communism for world domination continues unabated, and with the memory of the brutal Hungarian suppression last fall and the decline of western European influence in the Middle East, international considerations have dominated much of the work and thinking of the Congress. Programs of economic and military foreign aid for our allies, and a continued high level of expenditures for national defense were closely examined and approved under increasing inflationary pressure and world tension. Early in this session, the Congress wisely supported the Eisenhower doctrine—a program of support for our friends in the vital Middle East.

SPENDING

During fiscal year 1957 we again enjoyed a balanced budget, and a resulting small surplus which was applied to debt reduction. Through stringent economies mostly on domestic spending, the Congress, working with the administration, has been able to reduce by more than $4 billion the original budget estimates for 1958. I supported many reductions consistent with national security in the belief that in a period of inflation the Government should make every effort to postpone or cut back on all but the most essential expenses. Reducing appropriations is one of two effective means of decreasing the cost of Government. The second, a more positive approach, is to increase efficiency, and in this respect I introduced five bills which implement the most important recommendations of the Hoover Commission. They speak for themselves. First, Government shall not engage in business-type operations that compete with private enterprise; second, have the budget presented annually on the basis of accrued expenditures so that the Congress will have closer control over actual spending; third, have the military services use each other's vacant storage space to prevent duplicated facilities; fourth, permit a more business-like distribution of Government surpluses; and, fifth, create a civilian-managed agency to administer common supply and service activities for the armed services.

TAXES

I am hopeful that next year we will have a sufficient budget surplus through continued Government economies and reductions in spending to permit substantial tax relief to the income taxpayer and to small business.

SMALL BUSINESS

During the year the important Banking and Currency Committee on which I serve enacted several measures of importance to our economy. Before this committee come matters pertaining to small business which forms the backbone of our New Hampshire economy. This session we enacted legislation to extend the life of the Small Business Administration for 1 year, and have increased the SBA's authorization for loans which will be used to aid smaller businesses. Next year we hope to take action that will establish the SBA as a permanent agency to carry on its work, and soon the people of New Hampshire will see an office of the SBA opened in Concord to deal with their special problems.

Also before this committee come questions in regard to housing. I am happy to say that just recently the FHA announced it is liberalizing downpayment requirements for purchasing a home, thus making the dream of home ownership a reality for many families.

POULTRY CRISIS

As New Hampshire is a rural state, we are naturally interested in agriculture, particularly the poultry farmer who accounts for roughly one-half of our agricultural income. And today the poultry industry is sick. In view of this critical situation, I have worked in close cooperation with the Department of Agriculture to formulate a plan that would help restore the poultry industry to its once healthy State without Government controls or interference. To accomplish this purpose, I introduced a 7-point program calling for increased Government purchasing of eggs and broilers for the armed services and other Government agencies; restriction on Government credit agencies dealing with poultry expansion; increased domestic and foreign consumption of eggs and broilers; and a clear-the-air investigation of integration by the Justice Department's Antitrust Division.

INTERNAL SECURITY

Congress wisely enacted legislation requested by the administration which restricts the use of FBI files by criminals and subversives without violating their constitutional rights. This law was necessary to clear up doubts which had arisen from a recent decision of the Supreme Court on the question of FBI files.

CIVIL RIGHTS

The Congress enacted a moderate civil-rights bill—one which we hope will insure that the Negro will vote in increasing numbers in every part of the country, and that through this power of the ballot, they will enjoy increasing civil rights in other fields. Although this is not a real issue in New Hampshire, it is very controversial in other parts of the country, and has dominated the latter part of this session.

CATHEDRAL OF THE PINES

Senator BRIDGES and I were fortunate and honored to have sponsored and worked for the passage of a resolution of the Congress recognizing the dedication of the famous Altar of the Nation located at the Cathedral of the Pines in Rindge, N. H., as a memorial to all American war dead.

SUMMARY

Except for civil rights, relatively little legislation of importance was passed at this session, other than the necessary routine business of providing funds to run our Government. This was partly, but not entirely due to a divided Republican administration and Democratic Congress. We can hope in the second session of the 85th Congress that sound legislation will be enacted covering many areas of direct concern to us in New Hampshire.

During the recess, I intend to conduct office hours in some 60 cities and larger towns in every county of the Second District. I hope that as many of you as possible will stop by during office hours in your area to see me and discuss your problems.

I Am an American Day

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. EMMET F. BYRNE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. BYRNE of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, as we come to a cessation of activities of the first session of the 85th Congress, I would like to have consent to insert a few remarks about Chicago's observance of I Am an American Day on September 15. Our beloved President Eisenhower has proclaimed Citizenship Day. The two occasions will be observed simultaneously in Chicago.

I was born and raised in Chicago and I know how keenly we feel the responsibility of being an American and I say too, that we are dedicated to preserving America. In becoming a new citizen, it is important to understand fully what it means to be an American and what it took to make America. I have long looked upon American citizenship as a priceless heritage.

Americans are comprised of many creeds and many colors. In this composite there is a very basic ingredient which is the source of our greatness. I refer to the love and recognition of God Almighty. As I have listened to the deliberations on mutual security, I am convinced that the greatest certitude we can have for mutual security among nations is a rededication to the principle of Peace on Earth, Good Will to Men.

In my opinion, we cannot be true Americans without loving God, working for peace and praying that our efforts to safeguard the liberties given us by our Constitution and the Almighty will continue to be blessed.

When Chicagoans gather together on September 15 to give thanks and thought to being Americans, I will be among them. Many will be new citizens and many will be natural-born citizens. Each has a responsibility to the other. I am proud indeed that nearly 250,000 men of the Holy Name Society of the Roman Catholic archdiocese are joining with other civic, patriotic, fraternal, business, and labor organizations in Chicago to observe I Am an American Day. Each of us is an integral part of our beloved country.

United States Steel Increased Cost of Steel $250 Million To Match Wage Increase of $94 Million

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. MELVIN PRICE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, a number of us have watched with interest as the great steel companies have insisted that their recent $6-a-ton price increase was forced upon them by additional wage costs. This was on top of two earlier price jumps within a year. For one, I have also read with interest an editorial in the NAM News, a publication of the National Association of Manufacturers, stating that the question of steel prices has nothing to do with "social responsibility or social irresponsibility."

Let us concede that the manufacturer in America is not supposed to take into account the question of social responsibility. He is supposed to price his products, instead, only in regard to feasibility—that is, in accordance with what he can get away with in the marketplace. This, in any case, is the thesis of the NAM News.

But, if we concede that this is true, two other very important issues are raised.

The first is whether, if steel producers deny any social responsibility for prices and inflation, why do they try to justify the increases by blaming them on wage rises.

The wage increases won by workers last year, in direct wage payments and in fringe benefits, amounted to 20 cents an hour. The increases won this year, under the same contracts, totaled about 15½ cents an hour.

The 1956 wage increase cost United States Steel an estimated $94 million, if it is assumed that no part was matched by increased productivity, which is contrary to experience.

But Big Steel raised its prices last year an average of $8.50 a ton, calculated to produce about $250 million in additional revenue. And this year, to pay for a 15½-cent wage increase, Big Steel has jumped its prices another $10 a ton, in two jumps, calculated to add at least another $300 million in revenue.

Big Steel will make more money, before and after taxes, by raising its prices and blaming wage rates, than it made in 1956 and 1955 and 1954.

The pattern is the same in other giant industries. Ford and General Motors complained in 1955 that they would have to raise prices in 1956 to balance wage increases of 20 cents an hour. But in 1955—before prices were raised but after the wage increase—GM earned $1.41 after taxes for each of its 400,000 employees for each man-hour worked. Ford made $1.47 per man-hour after taxes.

There is some skullduggery going on.

There was once a Member of the Congress who worshiped Wall Street so fervently that he insisted that his colleagues should listen to the bloodless voice of the markets, to the calculations of businessmen who would have laughed at the idea of social responsibility.

But that was two generations ago. I do not think that the Congress today is willing to surrender its own prerogatives and the interests of the people to the bloodless voice of anybody or to the blatant declaration of irresponsibility proclaimed by the NAM News.

The giant corporations are raising prices far beyond what seems necessary to match wage increases, but they are blaming workers and unions for the price increases.

On the other hand, the spokesman of the NAM contemptuously says that the giant corporations are not supposed to have any sense of social responsibility.

I suggest that this attitude is two-faced and dishonest and—more important—defiant of democracy. If the world of the giant corporations is so irresponsible, then it is the duty of the Congress to impose upon that world some sense of reality.

Ramon Magsaysay, Champion of Liberty

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. OLIN E. TEAGUE

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. TEAGUE. Mr. Speaker, Saturday, August 31, is the anniversary of the late president of the Philippines, Ramon Magsaysay.

Mr. Magsaysay came to Washington shortly after I became a member of this body and it was during his stay here that I became acquainted with him and gained the privilege of having him as a personal friend. Throughout the past 10 years I viewed with interest his leadership of his country and the role he played in world affairs.

Although he is no longer with us, his memory will stand as a living memorial to his people and the rest of the free peoples throughout the world. It is only befitting that our country on the anniversary of his birth honor him as the first to be placed in the "champions of liberty" series of postage stamps.

The Sea War in Korea: A Remarkable Book

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JAMES G. FULTON

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Speaker, as the first session of the 85th Congress draws to a close there is ever greater concern in the minds of the Members of Congress over the American position of leadership in the field of foreign policy. The recent announcement by the Soviet Union of the successful firing of an intercontinental ballistic missile has caused some in this country to make quick and possibly intemperate remarks about Free World security. If there ever was a time for men in posts of leadership to weigh their words with care and maturity—that time is now.

Although this session of the Congress is over, it does not mean that the work of the membership has ended. Before reconvening in January 1958, each and every Member will give considerable of his time and energy to the problems of foreign policy and the military security of this country and the free people of the world.

Despite statements that may be issued from the Kremlin from time to time, Americans can be reassured that this Nation continues as the greatest military power on the globe. In order to exercise moral leadership in international affairs in behalf not only of the 170 million citizens of this country, but also for those millions in the satellite areas who yearn for the eventual day of freedom, it is important that the United States preserve its military strength. And it is equally important that strength be in appropriate balance to meet the variety of tests which may be forced upon us, considering our worldwide United States security bases that must be safeguarded.

Comdr. Frank Manson is now head of plans and policies analysis in the Office of the Chief of Naval Operations, and has been a special assistant to Adm. Robert Carney and Adm. Arleigh Burke. He has played an important part in documenting the story of the Pacific war in the official battle report series.

America has long recognized that, despite the heavy costs, it must continue to maintain a balanced military power in union with its Free World allies. No single-weapon system is sufficient to meet the many types of threats to our United States security. No single weapon is adequate to implement all facets of American international policy. America and its allies must ever be prepared to meet the newly arising threats quickly and effectively—on land, on the sea, and in the air. The cost of a balanced military posture will never be low. There is no bargain basement price tag on security. But, when told the facts, I am confident the American people are willing—yes, eager—to pay the economic price for genuine security. The American people will likewise demand that the President and the Congress provide that kind of military strength which is so necessary to an enlightened and just foreign policy in this troubled world.

It is with this thought in mind that I bring to the attention of the Congress—and to the attention of the American people—this story of The Sea War in Korea, which so graphically portrays the interlacing of foreign policy and balanced military forces. This is the real story of the Korean sea war, and every intelligent United States citizen will find it extremely interesting and informative, as it is based on actual war firsthand documents and official sources. The top military commanders, including General MacArthur, have been consulted on the preparation of this inspiring volume.

Congratulations to the authors, the United States Naval Institute, and the good United States Navy for a job well done.

As a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives it is a real privilege to recommend to my colleagues the recent book documenting and evaluating the application of free world military power in restraint of aggression. This fine volume is entitled "The Sea War in Korea." The book is published by the United States Naval Institute. It is written by Comdr. Malcolm W. Cagle, United States Navy, and Comdr. Frank A. Manson, United States Navy, and is a highly professional and readable translation of that story into language which every citizen can understand. Those of us in the Congress who must make responsible decisions about the defense budget each fiscal year should never forget that the strong justification of our Military Establishment is to implement American foreign policy based on power and justice. Our United States Military Establishment must always be of such nature and balance that it can appropriately support our entire foreign policy and not just a part, through weakness.

The authors of The Sea War in Korea are peculiarly and remarkably qualified to write the story of that conflict. Comdr. Malcolm Cagle, a native of Tennessee, has a distinguished record as a naval flyer in World War II, and holds the Navy Cross for bravery. He has occupied important positions in the Pentagon and is now beginning graduate study at the National War College following duty as special assistant to the Secretaries of the Navy, Charles Thomas, and Thomas Gates. Although primarily a seagoing man, he has found time to write extensively in the past and has received repeated recognition for his literary talents.

Comdr. Frank Manson, served aboard the famous destroyer Laffey that was hit by seven kamikaze planes in the Pacific in World War II, and served in many capacities with distinction in the United States Navy in both the Atlantic and the Pacific theaters.

Why Arkansas Needs Federal Aid for School Construction

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. BROOKS HAYS

OF ARKANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, there has been much discussion about the pros and cons of Federal aid for school construction in Arkansas, and I should like to give my reasons for supporting the legislation proposed to the House this session. The newspapers in my district have taken different positions on this issue and I appreciate the encouragement given me by some of them. I do not mean to disparage the arguments made by those newspapers opposed to Federal aid, however, but rather would like to point out to them why I believe Arkansas would benefit from the kind of program which was defeated in the House by the narrow margin of 203 to 208. And, Mr. Speaker, many other States are confronted by similar conditions. In a recent editorial, John F. Wells, of the Arkansas Recorder, published an open letter asking my colleague Mr. TRIMBLE and myself some pertinent questions about this issue. Under leave to extend my remarks, I include this editorial and my answers, which were also published in the Recorder, as follows:

A LETTER TO TWO CONGRESSMEN

AUGUST 2, 1957.

Hon. JIM TRIMBLE,
Hon. BROOKS HAYS,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: We note that, with resultant applause from the Arkansas Gazette in which the Recorder cannot join, you voted for the amended (to penalize districts with segregated schools) Federal aid for education bill.

It is a foot-in-the-door proposal, as we see it, with the National Government offering school districts money, collected in the first instance from the people and returned to them after great chunks have been carved out for the support of bureaucracy.

Because we are fond of both of you personally, we want to give you ample opportunity to convince us, and others who may share our antipathy for the Federal aid legislation, that you are right and we are wrong.

Would you mind answering these questions?

1. Which school districts—identify them—in all the counties where the taxpayers vote for you biennially are in need of the Federal construction money that the defeated bill would have provided?

2. Who in your respective districts has urged passage of the bill? (We don't ask you to supply names of individuals, but would appreciate your listing organizations.)

3. What organizations in your respective districts are on record as opposed to the legislation?

4. What would be the source of the Federal money? Are current tax revenues adequate to provide it?

5. Would not such an appropriation tend to be inflationary?

It is not our purpose to heckle you. We do not question your sincerity, and we don't want to be in the attitude of criticizing without opening our columns to you for a full and frank discussion from your points of view.

Respectfully,
The ARKANSAS RECORDER.

AUGUST 8, 1957.

Mr. JOHN F. WELLS,
Arkansas Recorder, Little Rock, Ark.

DEAR JOHN: I appreciate your giving me an opportunity to present my reasons for supporting Federal aid for school construction. I am sorry that you cannot agree with me that this is a necessary program to provide for the adequate education of our children. It is designed as a temporary crash program to help the States provide about 170,000 additional classrooms, the present deficit. No Federal controls are involved in this effort to aid the States to meet their primary responsibility for public education. I cannot agree with you that it is a foot-in-the-door proposal to gain Federal domination, because all the necessary safeguards against such a possibility were written into the bill and, in any event, the whole program terminates in 5 years. As for the State of Arkansas paying for this assistance with its own Federal tax money, you might be interested to know that Arkansas would get much more money back than it paid into the Federal Treasury and has everything to gain financially from this assistance—Arkansas would contribute about $1,500,000 of the $300 million spent yearly and get back $5,292,000. This expenditure is also in the national interest because the rest of the country has a vital stake in the education of Arkansas citizens, many of whom will spend their adult lives in other parts of the country.

The vote you criticize was against a motion to strike the enacting clause, a move that would have killed every chance for Federal assistance for school construction. Adoption of that motion denied the House the opportunity of voting on the pending amendment offered by Congressman AYRES to replace the Kelley bill with the administration proposal. The Ayres amendment would have killed the nonsegregation amendment. Thus my vote was designed to enable the House to approve the Ayres substitute.

As for your specific questions, I should like to answer them briefly as follows:

1. Just about every county in my district and most of the counties of the State need money to build additional classrooms. The State is taxing the people to the limit and no further burdens should be imposed until some Federal contribution is made.

2 and 3. While several organizations have contacted me who are either for or against the legislation, the letters I have received from individuals lead me to believe that an overwhelming majority of the people in the district are for Federal aid for school construction.

4. As I have already pointed out, the Federal revenues from taxes that Arkansas would pay for this school aid are much less than the money Arkansas would receive. Current national tax revenues are more than adequate to meet the cost of this program, which was included in the President's budget, a budget that envisages a $3 billion or $4 billion surplus. I have been aware all along of my duty to the taxpayers of other States and have opposed the spray-gun type of distribution of Federal funds. I was one of only nine Democrats who supported the need formula in the last Congress similar to the Ayres amendment mentioned above.

5. This appropriation would be no more inflationary than current Federal expenditures for roads, housing, social security, or any other Federal grant program.

Thanks for your invitation to submit this statement, and I hope you will find the information useful in your continued analysis of this problem.

Sincerely yours,
BROOKS HAYS.

Report of Annual Courthouse Conferences

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. J. HARRY McGREGOR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, following our usual custom, on Monday, August 12, we started our annual courthouse meetings in each of the seven counties of our district. We completed the tour on Saturday, August 24. As you will recall, Mr. Speaker, these dates were set up many months ago after a conference with you and the leaders. We all felt at that time that Congress would have adjourned; however, I recognize that circumstances beyond your control altered these plans. I regret that I did not get to attend all of the meetings in each of the seven counties, but those meetings at which I was unable to be present, were handled by Mrs. McGregor and my secretaries. I felt it my duty to return to Washington when controversial legislation on which I was not recorded, was brought before the Congress for consideration. Even in the face of flying back and forth, I missed several of the courthouse meetings and missed several rollcalls, more than I have missed, I believe, since the first of the year.

During the district tour we personally interviewed about 417 people and during the evening and public meetings, approximately 1,685 were in attendance. I was highly pleased with the results of these meetings since it afforded me an opportunity to become better acquainted with the people and problems of the district. In many instances we could be of service in explaining legislation and to give careful study to the personal problems presented to us. Many of the cases brought to our attention had to do with:

First. Veterans benefits and claims, the coverage of the new laws relative to those who have worn the uniform of our country.

Second. Immigration, the possibility of new laws.

Third. Farm problems, including acreage allotments, and the requirements and benefits of soil bank participation.

Fourth. Highways, many county and township officials and citizens were interested in the highway legislation and how it affected county and township roads.

Fifth. Flood control, one of the problems of our district was the flooding of roads below some of the dams that were constructed for flood control.

Sixth. Social security, many were interviewed relative to their benefits under this law.

Seventh. Mail service, numerous requests for extensions of rural routes were received confirming the reintroduction of my bill this session.

Mr. Speaker, I find that the people of the 17th Ohio District are greatly disturbed by several issues and may I put them in the following categories:

(A) Inflation: They are worried about the decreasing purchasing power of the dollar, living costs and the price of the products they buy are rising. Many savings accounts are being depleted. Even though taxes and unnecessary expenditures have been decreased, many are finding it most difficult to pay their taxes and are asking all of us to do everything within our power to reduce all expenses except where absolutely necessary and essential so that a tax reduction may be made. The philosophy of placing a penalty on initiative and thrift should be discontinued.

(B) Communism: Many question the continuous increase in the cost of our defense program and defense against communism. They feel that those in command of the military are not careful with the taxpayer's money nor efficient in the handling of the problems given to them. There is too much delay, too much redtape, too much jealousy between the branches of military organizations, and it is too costly.

(C) Labor: People are worried relative to the apparent activities of racketeers among various organizations. In this regard some of our national union officials seem to have been squandering the money the rank-and-file laboring man has been paying to them each month. Many are demanding more stringent labor laws, even to the extent of right-to-work laws. People are objecting to having to pay a union fee, then working just a few weeks and being laid off and their place filled by another worker.

(D) Business: Many are worried about various enterprises placing them under the jurisdiction of big business; or, they find themselves in the category that their product cannot be produced in competition with so-called big business with enormous production lines.

(E) Farm program: I honestly believe that the majority of the people of our district want to do away with the alleged farm control program. They recognize the enormous cost and are of the opinion that most of the Federal laws are benefiting the large one-crop farmer and give very little consideration to the rotation farmer. Great dissatisfaction prevails relative to acreage allotments and penalties imposed thereon. Many feel that all farmers should be entitled to vote on the crop referendum. They also feel the farmers should be allowed to raise the necessary crops for feed and seed purposes on their farms.

(F) Social security: Many of our people are confused by the various interpretations of the social-security law, such as eligibility for benefits, et cetera.

(G) Highways: All of our people want good highways and are willing to pay for them. They do want, however, the rights of a property owner to be considered. The property owner should be entitled to a fair value for his property. The road contractor should receive a fair profit for his endeavors. Certainly, the highway user is entitled to a good road for his dollar spent.

(H) Mail delivery: Our people were very appreciative of our introduction of a bill that would grant mail service to all wherever practicable. They were happy to learn that the legislation has been endorsed by the Post Office Department and hope that Congress will take definite action when it reconvenes.

Mr. Speaker, it was a real privilege and honor for me to meet personally and discuss many problems with the people. I am happy to have been afforded the opportunity to have been present and to present my capable office staff who so very efficiently took care of these meetings when it was necessary for me to absent myself and return to Washington to vote on important legislation before the Congress.

Salute to Sam Pryor, America's Goodwill Ambassador

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JAMES T. PATTERSON

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, as the 1st session of the 85th Congress draws to a close, it occurs to me that one of the most valuable and enduring influences toward better understanding and cooperation in this troubled world is the good will engendered through association of individuals in various countries. And I think that it is worthy of mention that one of our most distinguished fellow-citizens, Mr. Samuel F. Pryor, Jr., is one of the finest of these unofficial good will ambassadors for the United States. His wide range of interests, both personal and business, has taken him to many parts of the world on missions of good will. He is one of the few American business executives licensed to pilot his own plane and despite the fact that he is entitled to travel aboard the luxury airliners of Pan American World Airways, he prefers to pilot his own plane on many of his global travels.

As a very young man, Mr. Pryor served in destroyer flotilla duty in the United States Navy from 1917 to 1919. Later he was a second lieutenant in the United States Marine Corps Reserve from 1926 to 1940.

Mr. Pryor graduated from Yale in 1921 with a bachelor of philosophy degree. He also holds an honorary doctor of laws degree from Marietta College. While a student at Yale he was the intercollegiate boxing champion. In the years immediately following graduation, Mr. Pryor conducted big game safaris in various parts of the world.

Now vice president, assistant to the president, member of the executive committee and member of the board of directors of Pan American World Airways, Inc., Samuel F. Pryor, Jr., began his business career in 1922 as district sales manager for Remington Arms. He became assistant to the president of American Brake Shoe Co. and vice president of its subsidiary, Southern Wheel Co., in 1925. He joined Pan American in 1941 and is one of the most versatile and brilliant members of its present outstanding executive staff. Included in his business activities are positions as director and member of the executive and finance committee of Hertz Corp., director of Howe Sound Co., director of the Greenwich, Conn., Trust Co., chairman of the executive committee and director of the Vanadium Corporation of America, and chairman of the board of directors for Philpryor Corp., and for the Middle East American Oil Co.

While Mr. Pryor's business interests are many and varied, they do not constitute his entire field of activity. This father of a family of 5 children, and proud grandpa to 6 grandchildren is keenly interested in community, family, and civic affairs and finds time for active participation in many areas. He is a director of the Boys' Club of America. He is also a captain in the historic Connecticut Governor's Footguard.

Active participation in local and national civic affairs has included serving as Republican national committeeman for Connecticut in 1938, vice chairman of the Republican National Committee, chairman of the arrangements committee, and director of the eastern campaign headquarters for the campaign of Willkie for United States President in 1940. Mr. Pryor resigned as vice chairman and committeeman in 1941.

During World War II, Mr. Pryor directed the airlines' airport development program, locating 50 airfields, seaplane and lighter-than-air bases in South America and Africa. Successful location of these air operations bases made possible the effective air operations which were a most important factor in the successful campaigns of the United States and its allies against the enemy. In recognition of this outstanding contribution to the Nation, President Truman awarded the Medal of Merit to Mr. Pryor on April 15, 1946.

A singular honor, of which he is most proud, came to Mr. Pryor when Pope Pius XII awarded him the medal of a knight commander of the Order of St. Sylvester, at the Vatican on April 22, 1950. Mr. Pryor is one of the few non-Catholics to be thus honored in recognition of his moral excellence and his achievements which encourage others to good works. The award is only made to those who have made outstanding contributions and who are of such stature in the world that they serve as guide and inspiration to others.

Of all these and many other achievements not detailed here, we salute Samuel F. Pryor, Jr., business and civic leader; man of vision and ability, highly esteemed in farflung places; goodwill ambassador without portfolio; and outstanding citizen.

National Grange Headquarters Should Not Be Destroyed

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JAMES G. POLK

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. POLK. Mr. Speaker, before Congress adjourns I want to express my views in opposition to the proposal of the administration to condemn and tear down the National Headquarters Building of the National Grange here in Washington.

This building, which is a modern 8-story office building, was purchased by the National Grange in 1941. It occupies a ground space of 50 feet by 70 feet on Jackson Place and is surrounded on the west and the north by the historic Decatur House.

The money for the purchase of this property was raised through activities carried on by the more than 7,000 local subordinate granges throughout the Nation. Many of these local granges are located in the Sixth District of Ohio and I have received numerous protests from grange members about this proposal by the administration.

It is rumored that if the Grange Building is condemned and torn down the space it now occupies will be used as a lawn between the Decatur House and the proposed new office building to house the swelling White House staff of the President. As was well stated on yesterday by the gentlewoman from Idaho [Mrs. GRACIE PFOST]:

> It is generally estimated that the Federal Government will have to pay $500,000 for the Grange property if it is acquired by the General Services Administration by condemnation. Add to this the cost of clearing the site and putting it in grass, and you will have the most expensive lawn in America.

I have an open mind on the question of the need for additional office space for the President. Likewise, if additional Presidential office space is needed, I have an open mind on the question as to whether it be located on Jackson Place, as now proposed.

However, I am firmly convinced that it is not necessary to destroy the Grange Headquarters Building for this purpose. The land occupied by the Grange Building lies north of the area that would be used for the proposed new executive office building.

I agree that a nice lawn between the proposed new office building and the so-called Decatur House might be desirable, if a vacant space for this lawn was available, but certainly it is not economical or sound business for the Government to condemn and tear down a modern 8-story office building in order to provide a 50-by-70-foot grass plot. To this I am unalterably opposed. I shall use every effort at my command to defeat this proposal.

Mr. Herschel D. Newsom, master of the National Grange, has written me about this problem. His letter to me and my reply are as follows:

NATIONAL GRANGE,
Washington, D. C., August 1, 1957.

Hon. JAMES G. POLK,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN POLK: The Grange needs your help to preserve its national headquarters building.

Early this year the Government instituted eminent domain proceedings and by a declaration of taking filed therein took title to our building. In addition it took all remaining privately owned property in this block—except the Decatur House on one corner. It is proposed to tear down the buildings on the land which has been taken to erect thereon a structure known as Federal office building No. 7.

Actually, the Grange property is only a relatively small rectangle—50 feet by 70 feet—and is surrounded on both the west and the north by the Decatur House. Thus, the two buildings together form but a single rectangle, the larger part of which (Decatur House) will remain intact. Because of its unique juxtaposition with Decatur House, the destruction of our headquarters building is entirely unnecessary to permit the erection of a Federal office building. The attached plat shows the properties involved.

In addition to the offices of the National Grange itself, our building houses the National Council of Farmer Cooperatives, the American Institute of Cooperation, National Agricultural Research, Inc., Farm Roads Foundation, and Washington offices for more than 30 farm publications. Thus there can be no question that the building is presently serving a very important and worthwhile public purpose in the interest of agriculture and the American farmer.

The National Grange purchased this property in 1941 with funds which had been raised for the purpose through activities carried on by the more than 7,000 local subordinate Granges throughout the Nation. These activities included the serving of lunches and dinners, apron sales, penny suppers, amateur plays, and many more. Thus Granges and Grange members across America have their nickels and dollars invested in their national headquarters building.

The location of this building is important to Grange members, and they are proud of the fact that their work and contributions have provided a symbolical national home for farm families within a block of the White House, even as are located the headquarters buildings of the AFL-CIO and the United States Chamber of Commerce. All of us will appreciate your help in preserving our building for us.

If S. 2261 just reported by the Public Works Committee were to be amended as follows this objective would be accomplished:

Page 9, line 17, insert a colon in lieu of the period and add the following:

"Provided, however, That no portion of lot 816, square 167, in the District of Columbia (the headquarters of the National Grange of the Patrons of Husbandry) shall be acquired for or used for any such project, and the Administrator is directed to withdraw the declaration of taking of said lot heretofore filed by him in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia and to take such other action as may be necessary to restore title to said lot to the National Grange of the Patrons of Husbandry."

This proposed amendment is consistent with the action taken by the Congress earlier this session when in an effort to preserve the Grange Building, it approved a provision in the Independent Offices Appropriation Act prohibiting the use of funds during the fiscal year 1958 for Federal office building No. 7.

We shall be very grateful for your support.

Respectfully yours,

HERSCHEL D. NEWSOM, Master.

AUGUST 30, 1957.

Hon. HERSCHEL D. NEWSOM,
Master, the National Grange,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. NEWSOM: You may be assured that I shall use every effort at my command to help preserve the National Grange headquarters building at its present location.

On June 27 when the conference report on the independent offices appropriations bill, H. R. 6070, was considered in the House of Representatives I was glad to vote for Senate amendment No. 11, prohibiting the use of funds during fiscal year 1958 in connection with Federal Office Building No. 7 on square 167 in the District of Columbia.

I am also glad to tell you that I approve and will support your suggested amendment on page 9, line 17, of S. 2261, an act to amend and extend the Public Buildings Purchase Contract Act of 1954.

This bill probably will be considered at the next session of Congress.

You have well stated how unnecessary and uneconomical is the proposal to destroy your headquarters building.

I have talked with many members of Congress about this issue and I believe that in the next session of Congress those of us who are supporting you in your valiant fight to preserve your headquarters building, will be able to squelch, once and for all, this silly proposal.

Most sincerely,

JAMES G. POLK.

James P. Wesberry

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. BROOKS HAYS

OF ARKANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I have read with appreciation the remarks of the gentleman from California [Mr. DOYLE] which appear on pages 14805-14809 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and paying tribute to the chaplains of the Senate and House. Our colleague, the gentleman from California [Mr. DOYLE] has rendered a helpful service in assembling and publishing this information. The list of chaplains of the House from the beginning of the Congress includes only the regularly elected chaplains. Mr. Speaker, I would like to add this footnote with reference to the fine service rendered by one of the acting chaplains during the illness of the beloved chaplain James Shera Montgomery. I refer to the chaplaincy in 1949 of James P. Wesberry, pastor of Morningside Baptist Church, Atlanta, Ga. In his brief service as acting chaplain Dr. Wesberry endeared himself to the Members and formed lasting friendships here.

His inspiring prayers were published as House Document 344 of the 81st Congress.

The Veterans' Education Appeals Board Has Finished Its Job

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. OLIN E. TEAGUE
OF TEXAS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. TEAGUE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the 85th Congress has enacted Public Law 85-200 terminating the Veterans' Education Appeals Board which was created on July 13, 1950, by Public Law 610, 81st Congress. On September 12, 1950, President Truman appointed the three members of the Board, the Honorable C. M. Thompson, Chairman, Hon. E. L. Earpin, member, and Hon. J. Z. Miller III, member.

These gentlemen have now completed the monumental task which confronted them in 1950. They have rendered decisions on 531 cases. The guidelines laid down by these decisions served to improve the administrative procedures of the veterans' education and training program under Public Law 346, 78th Congress. The cases considered by the Veterans' Education Appeals Board involved $200 million in claims. The policies laid down by their decision affected the entire veterans' education and training program for World War II veterans which has involved $17 billion total expenditure, about $5 billion of which was for tuition payments to educational institutions.

A review of the history of this Board brings out an important lesson in governmental operation. The veterans' education and training program for World War II veterans created an unprecedented relationship between the Federal Government and practically all of the public and private educational institutions of the Nation. It became necessary for the Federal Government, through the Veterans' Administration, to enter into contracts for reimbursement for the training of veterans. There were no precedents to follow and a great deal of misunderstanding, dissatisfaction, and abuse grew out of the contractual procedures which were followed.

The controversies had become so intense by 1950 that it became necessary for the Congress of the United States to create a separate and independent Board to consider and settle the controversies which had arisen between educational institutions and the Veterans' Administration. Prior to the creation of the Board, an educational institution finding itself in disagreement with the Veterans' Administration had no clear avenue of appeal. The Veterans' Administration found refuge in an earlier act of the Congress giving the Administrator finality of decision and the educational institutions involved found it impossible to seek review by the Court except under the most limited circumstances. The American tradition of Government is not served when an agency serves as its own prosecutor, jury and judge, and there was continual dissatisfaction since the contending educational institutions had no source of appeal to the Administrator's decision. The Veterans' Education Appeals Board was created to provide such an appeal. It removed contractual controversies from a political atmosphere since it was inevitable that educational institutions feeling that they had not obtained fair consideration would turn to Members of Congress for assistance.

The Veterans' Education Appeals Board has now come to the end of its program and has been discontinued at its own request. The Members of the Board labored long and tirelessly in a field beset with the most exasperating complications. They have done a good job and have rendered an outstanding service to the veterans of the Nation. I worked on the legislation which created the Board and have followed their activities closely throughout their existence. I am pleased to have this opportunity to express my sincere appreciation and admiration for accomplishments of the Veterans' Education Appeals Board.

Congressman Dollinger's Annual Report

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ISIDORE DOLLINGER
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. DOLLINGER. Mr. Speaker, following is my report to the people of the 23d District of New York on the first session of the 85th Congress.

Early in 1957, the President announced his legislative program, which was very impressive. In fact, his recommendations were a continuance of Democratic programs established under Democratic administrations, and therefore had the support of Democratic Members of Congress. Although the Democrats did all in their power to push action on vitally needed legislation, the President's lack of leadership, failure to gain support of his own party, failure to wield his authority and give administration backing to important measures, have wreaked havoc. His record of achievement is a sorry one. Out of 16 major recommendations, only a few have been enacted into law, and the legislation passed only because of support of the Democrats; on many major issues members of his own party refused to stand behind him.

The President's following proposals, all important to the majority of our people, have not been touched upon so far, due to his apathy and indifference: Extend the minimum wage to more workers; special Federal assistance to cut unemployment in distressed areas of the United States; extend and perfect the social-security system; overhaul and improve the Taft-Hartley Act; legislation to control monopolistic mergers; Federal assistance for hospital construction with special reference to low-cost care of chronic cases and needs of older persons; increased Federal aid for medical care of the needy and to help build facilities to train more physicians and scientists; expansion of voluntary health insurance through Federal reinsurance and pooling arrangements; immediate statehood of Hawaii and Alaska; extend and liberalize the Refugee Relief Act. These may be called "sins of omission." Let us examine the record and we shall see that the Republicans have continued to carry out their policy of helping the moneyed interests and disregarding the needs and general welfare of the average citizen.

REPUBLICAN GIVEAWAYS CONTINUE

The natural gas bill, which would cost consumers $800 million annually, is backed by the President and is being pushed by gas and oil interests. I voted against the measure in committee, and my efforts and all those opposed have succeeded in preventing a final vote up to this time. However, strong efforts will be exerted early in the next session to enact this legislation. I shall continue to fight against passage of this vicious bill.

The President used his great influence to help retain the Hells Canyon power site for the Idaho Power Co., another victory for private power interests, which will mean higher prices for consumers.

The administration has been urging passage of a bill providing for the return of seized German war assets to German nationals. In effect, this would mean return of property seized during World War II to the German war lords who were responsible for the atrocities committed against humanity. I am opposed to this giveaway, and will do all in my power to prevent the return of such seized property.

After years of battling private power interests, which wished to grab Niagara power and which had the blessing of the Republicans, we finally succeeded in passing a bill which provides for development by the power authority under New York State law. This will protect consumers.

CIVIL RIGHTS

Passage of the civil-rights bill marked a great day in the legislative history of our country, and I was deeply gratified to have the opportunity, after years of unrelenting work in behalf of civil rights, to cast my vote in favor of the legislation. When we consider that this is the first time in more than 80 years that civil-rights legislation has been passed, its importance cannot be measured.

Admittedly, the Civil Rights Act of 1957 is not the strong bill which passed the House—and even that was not strong enough to right all prevailing evils of discrimination and I was not satisfied with it. It is far from ideal; it does not meet all present needs and provides fewer remedies than the American people as a whole would have wished. However, it was expedient to accept a compromise; it was wise to accept the best that we could get rather than have no bill at all and let even a small victory escape us. Now we have a starting point: now we can continue to build until every last vestige of discrimination is wiped out and true freedom enjoyed by all.

At least, on its face, the Civil Rights Act carries a significant new approach to enforcement of Negro voting rights—rights guaranteed by our Constitution since passage of the 14th and 15th amendments in 1868 and 1870. Such guaranties have meant very little or nothing in the face of threats, obstacles, and numerous cruel and blatantly illegal methods used to prevent Negroes from voting. Action by the Federal Government to enforce these constitutionally guaranteed rights has been a dire necessity for more than half a century.

At last, we are over the first hurdle; we have had a showdown on the issue of civil rights. Those sincerely interested in justice and equality for all have succeeded in getting favorable Congressional action on a civil-rights bill.

IMMIGRATION

The McCarran-Walter Immigration Act with its shocking inequities still remains on our statute books, despite all attempts to rewrite the law to make it conform with our American ideals and principles and our professed desire to help the oppressed peoples of the world, who look to us for shelter.

The immigration bill recently passed is a mere drop in the bucket; it does not touch the most glaring hardships or unfair provisions in existing law. Chief of the inequities is the national origins quota system using the 1920 population census as a basis for setting quotas. This provision was deliberately intended to discriminate among aliens on the basis of race and nationality. Unused visas for northern European countries, where the quotas are large, average 250,000 a year. If 1950 were used as a base year, it would raise the annual admissions total by about 65,000; it would reallocate unused national quotas—of countries like England—to small-quota countries, where the demand for admission to the United States is greater.

The new bill also failed to give resident status to 28,000 Hungarian refugees who now have a stateless status here; it failed to end present discrimination against naturalized citizens. It does admit orphans adopted by Americans overseas; it does help reunite families which were split when one member or more immigrated; it does provide for waiving fingerprint requirements for certain foreign visitors; it does permit more than 60,000 aliens to enter this country on a hardship basis.

I shall not rest until the harsh and antiquated McCarran-Walter Act of 1952 has been repealed or completely rewritten to meet the pressing need for a more humane and sensible immigration policy.

REPUBLICANS SCUTTLE IMPORTANT BILLS

The Republicans again killed the school-construction bill. There is a lamentable lack of adequate schools throughout our country; our children are forced to attend overcrowded schools; schoolhouses in many areas are run down and in dangerous states of disrepair. The future of our country depends upon the education and training we give our youth. Defeat of the bill cheated our children of benefits that are justly theirs and our Nation will suffer as a result of this unwise action on the part of those who voted against the legislation.

Eisenhower said he wanted a Federal school-construction bill; yet he never raised his voice when the measure was being considered. This is another instance of failure on his part to be well-informed and to assert his leadership.

Tax relief was promised us, but the administration has bitterly fought every effort to lower income taxes. At the same time, loopholes in the present law have made it possible for Big Business to profit by tremendous tax writeoffs. The average taxpayer, because of record-breaking high living costs, can barely exist, but the industrialists wax fat on huge profits and tax exemptions.

Wages have not kept pace with increasing living costs. I introduced a bill to increase the minimum wage to $1.25 per hour. Stiff opposition on the part of the Republicans has prevented action on this legislation.

The administration vigorously opposed pay increases for postal workers and classified employees. In spite of the President's threat to veto the measures, the Senate and House passed pay increase bills. I was pleased to have the opportunity to vote in favor of the sorely needed pay increases.

Social security should be liberalized and extended, but Democratic efforts to get action on legislation to increase benefits have failed because of lack of cooperation on the part of the administration.

Housing continues to be a major problem. Legislation passed during this session is helpful to the building industry and to those financially able to own their own homes, but the greatest need is for more federally aided housing projects to house those in low-income and middle-income brackets. The Republicans have cut the number of housing units at every opportunity and, so far, the Democrats have been unable to increase the number to the figure provided in the original Democratic housing program.

The mistrust generated by Secretary Dulles and lack of faith in our President and Secretary of State to wage a successful fight in matters of foreign policy increase daily as we watch the United States losing ground in the Middle East and as the Soviet Union accomplishes one successful coup after the other. There has been no decisive action on the part of the administration to achieve peace and therefore Israel remains vulnerable to attack by her enemies. Until the 9-year Arab-Israeli deadlock is broken there can be no real peace in the world. I, of course, shall continue my efforts in behalf of Israel and try to help her at every opportunity.

MISCELLANEOUS ISSUES

In view of ever-increasing living costs and the fact that wage increases have not kept pace to meet them my efforts to help consumers have continued. I introduced, among others, bills to help veterans and their dependents; for tax relief to annuitants; to increase personal income-tax exemptions; to repeal excise taxes; to end discrimination against older workers.

BRONX CONGRESSIONAL OFFICE

Just a reminder that my Congressional office at 938 Simpson Street, Bronx, is open daily. My constituents are welcome to call there and to take up any problems they may have. I also urge them to write me so that I may have the benefit of their views regarding legislation. I also invite them to call at my office, 1723 House Office Building, when they visit Washington.

The Tobacco Program Must Not Be Disturbed

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILL E. NEAL

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. NEAL. Mr. Speaker, the Agriculture Department's inability to control surpluses of basic farm crops under the high price support program has provoked the Secretary to ask Congressional authority to adopt requisite application of the flexible price principle.

It is apparent that even with limited acreage allotments, basic commodities continue to pile up surpluses when farmers resort to improved methods of cultivation.

As evidence that the Secretary, acting under existing laws, has been unsuccessful in reducing the enormous surpluses bought and stored at Government expense, he told the committees of the Senate and House that a new approach must be found. He said that production control is impractical, and that present laws governing acreage allotments and price supports are obsolete. He asked for major changes in the different price support programs for the six basic farm commodities—corn, wheat, cotton, tobacco, peanuts, and rice.

While it is true that approximately $8 billion are presently tied up in surpluses, I would remind our readers that of all the support programs, tobacco is the only one that has operated without cost to the Government or to the taxpayers.

Tobacco is unique in that growers, sales agencies, and manufacturers have cooperated fully with the Commodity Credit Corporation in their well-regulated program to maintain production in line with demand. In so doing, tobacco growers have consistently been favored with 90 percent parity prices without involving the Government with any part of the losses sustained over the Government price-support programs.

In all fairness, whatever the Secretary of Agriculture or the Congress does to solve the problems with which agriculture is beset, we must not interfere with the successful operation of the 90 percent support of tobacco. As long as growers are willing, as they have been in the past, to conform to reductions of their allotments for the sake of a guaranteed living price for their effort, this program should not be disturbed.

For the most part, tobacco is grown on small family farms. It is a personalized crop requiring 436 man-hours per acre. Technology has no place in its cultivation. It is the only cash crop that can return needed income to small farms in hilly country. Sixty and seven-tenths percent is grown on allotments of one acre and under. It requires 12 months to prepare soil, to seed, transplant, cultivate, harvest, and prepare for market.

There are approximately 4,000 tobacco allotments in my district. To disturb their source of assured annual income would be disastrous. Growers will accept reduced allotments when they are convinced it is necessary for the successful operation of the tobacco program.

I realize the Secretary of Agriculture is hard pressed for a solution of the farm problems. Since nothing short of balancing supplies with demand offers much hope of eliminating the surplus problem, his appeal to Congress for some approach other than supports is understandable.

But tobacco is different from any of the basic commodities. It stores well and improves with age. The average stock in storage is about 3 years—just enough to take care of possible crop failures. The tobacco program guaranteeing 90 percent parity to the farmer has cost the Government nothing. It is a workable program, highly profitable to the grower, and should not be disturbed.

In the President's message to the Congress January 11, 1954, he said:

> Each farm crop has its own problems and these problems require specific treatment.

He said further:

> Tobacco farmers have demonstrated their ability to hold production in line with demand at the supported price without loss to the Government. The relatively small acreage of tobacco and the limited acres to which it is adapted have made production control easier than for any other crops. The level of support to cooperators is 90 percent of the parity price in any year in which marketing quotas are in effect. It is recommended that the tobacco program be continued in present form.

Please, Mr. Secretary, do not disturb the tobacco parity program as long as it is working successfully.

The Civil-Rights Bill

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHARLES A. VANIK

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. VANIK. Mr. Speaker, I join with many of my colleagues in appreciation of the fact that the first civil-rights bill in 82 years now goes to the President's desk for likely approval.

While this legislation is not perfect in many respects, it represents the best law which could be passed at this time. The test of this legislation will not be in the convictions or imprisonment which it may produce. The test will be in the civil-rights violations it may discourage. It is to be hoped that the mandate of this legislation will fix itself clearly in the mind of every citizen to the end that he will not impair or interfere with the voting rights or civil liberties of his fellow men.

If the spirit of this legislation is wholeheartedly accepted by the American people everywhere, no further legislation may be required. Our hope is that true tolerance will become habit and custom throughout the American scene.

Compulsory Inspection of Poultry

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. RICHARD L. NEUBERGER

OF OREGON

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, I ask consent to include in the RECORD my statement telling of the role of leadership played by members and officials of a labor union in bringing to reality a bill for compulsory inspection of poultry which was passed by Congress in the latter days of the session.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COMPULSORY INSPECTION OF POULTRY

(Statement by Senator NEUBERGER)

I believe it is extremely important that the American people know the background of this legislation. They must know that this consumer-protective and health-protective legislation will go on the statute books in large part because of the work of a labor union.

Today, much attention is given the few racketeers who have infiltrated the labor movement or the very labor leaders whose actions have violated the law. That is why, Mr. President, I would bring to your attention the great public service work of the Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen of North America (AFL–CIO) for the enactment of the compulsory poultry inspection legislation.

At a conference in 1946, representatives of poultry processing workers discussed ways of dealing with the double problem of (1) infections and other forms of disease transmitted from poultry to workers, and (2) the filthy and diseased poultry some processors marketed. Some delegates suggested compulsory poultry inspection legislation as the answer. The conference adopted this idea and urged legislation for it.

The idea of a campaign for such legislation slowly developed in the union. The meatcutters union, especially its poultry workers locals, from time to time urged Congress to enact compulsory poultry inspection legislation.

Some public-health experts had similar ideas. They, too, had intimate knowledge of the need for a compulsory poultry inspection law. Some public-health pioneers were among the first to call for this legislation.

About 3 years ago, the meatcutters union stepped up its campaign for compulsory poultry inspection. It publicized startling facts about the need for this type of regulation. It obtained sworn affidavits from poultry workers describing the terrible abuses against health and sanitation practiced by the backward parts of the poultry industry.

It delved into public-health reports to show the extremely high rate of food poisoning cases due to poultry and poultry products. It proved through Bureau of Labor Statistics reports that the industry had an excessively high rate of industrial injury. It painstakingly researched and brought to Congressional attention the psittacosis epidemics and other outbreaks due to diseased poultry which have erupted in areas throughout the country, including Oregon.

The meatcutters union did not do this to hurt the industry. On the contrary, its aim was to secure the quick enactment of legislation, which it knew was as important to the welfare of the industry as to consumers and poultry workers.

The hard work of the meatcutters union for this legislation received the highest praise from a Congressional committee studying the need for compulsory poultry inspection. In June 1956, the Subcommittee on Legislation Affecting the Food and Drug Administration of the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare reported to the Senate:

"We wish to express our appreciation to the Amalgamated Meatcutters and Butcher Workmen of North America (AFL-CIO) for the excellent, definitive, and thoroughly documented exposé of conditions in the poultry processing industry under the department's voluntary inspection program which was given this subcommittee by this trade union's representatives. * * * We are grateful to the union and believe the American people will share that gratitude."

Public health organizations also worked hard to convince Congress of the need to enact compulsory poultry inspection legislation. Such groups as the Association of Food and Drug Officials of the United States, Association of State Public Health Veterinarians, Conference of Public Health Veterinarians, United States Livestock Sanitary Association, Association of State and Territorial Health Officers, American Nurses Association, and the American Veterinary Medical Association have aided Congress with their expert knowledge and support. They deserve the highest praise possible for their public service efforts on behalf of this legislation.

Once the facts concerning the need for poultry inspection became known other great organizations took part in the campaign. These include the General Federation of Women's Clubs, National Farmers Union, American Association of University Women, Young Women's Christian Association, Housewives United, National Consumers League. These organizations continuously fight on the behalf of consumers.

The overwhelming majority of the poultry industry, too, proclaimed the need for compulsory poultry inspection. I have disagreed with most of the industry groups concerning this legislation, for I have felt that the bills they backed were weak and could not do the job. I believe that the industry leaders made a serious error in not backing the strongest bill possible because such legislation, it seems to me, would have been foremost in their interest. But I must congratulate these men because the majority of the poultry industry leaders did not blindly fight this legislation, as did the heads of other industries when regulatory laws were considered. This is to the great credit of the poultry industry.

Mr. President, I believe it is unnecessary to go through the campaign for compulsory poultry inspection in detail. Congress has had legislation concerning poultry inspection before it for 3 years. The first bills, introduced by the distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] and in the other House by the able gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRICE], called for an investigation by Congress of the need for this legislation.

In the beginning of the 1st session of the 85th Congress the distinguished Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] introduced the first actual poultry inspection bill. From that bill developed all the other measures on this subject, some of which were excellent, some extremely weak. I take great pleasure in having been a sponsor and having worked for S. 1128 in this session.

Altogether five Congressional hearings, three in the Senate and two in the House, have been held on this legislation. Few pieces of legislation have been so thoroughly considered in committee. And no fewer than five final votes have been taken in both Houses on poultry inspection bills.

Mr. President, the legislation which we have finally enacted on this subject is a compromise measure. Many of us in the Senate would have liked a stronger bill. But we hope and expect that the bill enacted will adequately protect the consumer and poultry worker and will aid the poultry industry to expand. I consider its enactment an excellent step forward in consumer-protective and health-protective legislation.

The American people should know that always in the forefront, leading the fight for this greatly needed legislation marched the Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen of North America—AFL–CIO. I believe the American people owe this labor union a debt of gratitude.

I want to congratulate the officers of this fine organization, President Earl W. Jimerson, and Secretary-Treasurer Patrick E. Gorman, its other officers and members for their great service to the public. The untiring efforts of this union to protect the consumer and the poultry worker with this legislation is a true example of the work of American labor.

Foreign Monopoly

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. LEE METCALF

OF MONTANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. METCALF. Mr. Speaker, I have just finished reading a special report by the Attorney General outlining results of a study of the competitive problems of the nickel industry in relation to the Defense Production Act.

This is an interesting report. The Attorney General has found out, as some of us have been maintaining all along, that the International Nickel Company of Canada, Ltd.—INCO—is a ruthless monopoly; that it is a foreign concern, and hence not subject to our antitrust laws, and yet this administration has permitted it to assume the job of allocating a material vital to defense and to nondefense industries.

This report raises as many questions as it answers.

Why did the Attorney General not get around to INCO earlier? You will recall that the Senate Preparedness Subcommittee, in Document No. 4, 82d Congress, reported that INCO, which produces over 85 percent of the Free World's nickel, was one of the most formidable monopolies the subcommittee has found.

The report shows that someone must allocate the existing nickel supply. Because the Government is a nickel producer and helps create the shortage, it would seem logical that the Government might allocate the supply. Instead, this administration has allowed a foreign monopoly, which they now denounce, to allocate the supply. This makes me wonder about the legal status of INCO's entitlement system.

I also wonder if it is fair that the production and distribution of INCO competitors be reported, directly or indirectly, to INCO for consideration in making these entitlements.

And, should the Government, which now recognizes INCO's monopoly and previous unfair practices, permit INCO to allocate NICARO nickel?

Mr. Speaker, I started asking questions about nickel last year after I read that the Interior Department was developing a mineral lease with INCO for lands in the Superior National Forest in Minnesota. According to the most recent information I have, that lease has not been executed and there is no plan to approve it at present.

This brings up two more questions:

First. Since INCO is a monopoly according to the Attorney General, would he approve leasing the Minnesota Forest Service property to them?

Second. If not, how long will it be before someone else gets a chance to lease the property and help break the monopoly?

Progress Against Status of Forces

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. FRANK T. BOW

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. BOW. Mr. Speaker, as another session of Congress ends, we can report considerable progress in the fight against the status of forces treaties and important improvement in the situation of servicemen subjected to foreign courts.

The Pentagon was shaken by the extent of official and public indignation when we first brought the status of forces issue to light during debate on the Selective Service Act 2 years ago.

The Pentagon attitude of apathy and indifference has undergone remarkable change. Commanders in the field were alerted to their obligations to protect accused servicemen to the fullest possible extent. Studies of the criminal codes of the foreign nations were expediated so that for the first time the officials of the State and Defense Departments knew what kind of justice our men could expect to receive.

Prison conditions have improved greatly. In Japan, as the result of the publicity we have given the issue, all American prisoners have been transferred to a single prison which is more modern than others though still lacking in many facilities Americans consider essential.

Better interpreters have been employed since we began to fight these treaties, and the Congress has enacted legislation to pay attorney fees for GI's who fall into the hands of foreign courts. Men with legal training are now being assigned as observers, and their reports are being brought into Washington for review.

In some cases appeals are being urged. Some diplomatic interest has been evidenced.

In the Girard case, solely because of the public interest aroused, the assistant judge advocate general has been sent to aid the defense.

One of the American civilians, former national commander of the American Legion, Alvin Owsley, who is in Japan for the Girard case, has inspected Yokosuka prison and reports that conditions are reasonably satisfactory.

All of these developments, alleviating the conditions under which our men are held and helping them to secure better treatment in foreign courts, have come about directly as a result of our demands for modification of the Status of Forces Treaty and related agreements. It is a tremendous change from the attitude of indifference we found 2 years ago.

More important, the public and Congress have been aroused. House Joint Resolution 16 has been reported by Foreign Affairs. The Armed Services Committee has also reported legislation. Though our indignation makes it difficult to be patient, we can count this as real progress toward eventual modification of the treaties themselves. No legislative battle is easy. This one, against such formidable opponents, has been particularly difficult. I think we have come a long way toward eventual success.

Summary of Legislation Considered by the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House of Representatives, 85th Congress, 1st Session

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. BRENT SPENCE

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, legislation considered by the House Committee on Banking and Currency during the 1st session of the 85th Congress may be classified into three categories: Housing, small business, and finance. In the first two fields, the committee acted on emergency legislation early in the session to provide urgently needed assistance to housing and small business. Later the committee considered a comprehensive housing bill which was enacted as the Housing Act of 1957. A complete revision of the Small Business Act was reported by the committee and passed the House. Although this bill was not acted upon by the Senate at this session—instead, a temporary extension of the Small Business Act was enacted—action is expected early in the second session.

In the third category, finance, the committee reported out a bill regulating savings and loan holding companies, which passed the House but had not been acted upon by the Senate when the session closed. Another committee bill extending the Export-Import Bank was enacted into law. As the session ended, the committee was engaged in extensive hearings on a revision of the Federal laws relating to banks, savings and loan associations, and credit unions. These and other bills acted upon by the committee are discussed below under the three headings, "Housing," "Small Business," and "Finance."

HOUSING

INTERIM AUTHORIZATION FOR FEDERAL NATIONAL MORTGAGE ASSOCIATION

PUBLIC LAW 85-10—HOUSE REPORT 51

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 209

As the mortgage market tightened in late 1956, offerings of FHA and VA mortgages for purchase by FNMA under its secondary market operations sharply increased, with the result that FNMA had neared the limit of its funds in early 1957. In response to urgent requests for action to permit FNMA to borrow more funds for its secondary market operations, the committee on February 7 reported out a joint resolution increasing this authority by $500 million. This was a stopgap measure, designed to meet FNMA's immediate needs, pending more deliberate consideration of long-term needs. It passed the House on February 20, and passed the Senate with amendments on March 12. On March 14, the House agreed to the Senate amendments, and the resolution was signed by the President on March 27, as Public Law 85-10.

As enacted, the measure included, in addition to the $500 million increase for secondary market operations, an increase of $50 million for FNMA's special assistance purchases of cooperative housing mortgages and a technical amendment concerning limits on FHA insured mortgages on multifamily projects in urban renewal areas.

Under FNMA's Charter Act, it may borrow up to 10 times its capital and surplus to obtain funds for its secondary market operations; in early 1957, this worked out at about $1.1 billion. The resolution increased FNMA's capital stock held by the Treasury by $50 million; under the 10-to-1 formula this resulted in an increase of $500 million in borrowing authority, raising the limit to $1.6 billion. While most of FNMA's borrowing takes the form of obligations sold to the general public, it also has authority, subject to the overall 10-to-1 limit, to borrow from the Treasury; an increase of $350 million—to $1,350 million—was made in this authority. In return for the stock it received in FNMA, Treasury canceled $50 million of FNMA notes it held. These amounts were raised again later in the session by the Housing Act of 1957, discussed below.

Section 305 (e) of the National Housing Act authorizes FNMA to purchase cooperative housing mortgages insured by FHA under section 213 of that act. Public Law 85-10 raised the maximum amount of these mortgages which FNMA may hold under section 203 (e) by $50 million—from $50 million to $100 million—and correspondingly increased the limit per State from $5 million to $10 million. These amounts were raised again later in the session by the Housing Act of 1957, discussed below.

Section 3 of Public Law 85-10 makes a technical change in the method of computing the maximum amounts for FHA-insured mortgages on multifamily housing projects in urban renewal areas under section 220 of the National Housing Act. Under section 220, FHA may increase the mortgage limit by $1,000 per room in high-cost areas; the technical amendment makes it clear that this increase is allowable for projects which average less than 4 rooms per family unit.

EXTENSION OF VOLUNTARY HOME MORTGAGE CREDIT PROGRAM

PUBLIC LAW 85-66—NO HOUSE REPORT

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 115

The general housing bill (H. R. 6659, discussed below) as reported by the committee contained a provision extending the life of the voluntary home mortgage credit program, which was due to expire June 30, 1957. This program facilitates the flow of private funds for housing credit into remote areas and small communities. Requests for home loans are referred by VHMCP personnel to those lenders considered most able and willing to approve such loans. When it became apparent that action on H. R. 6659 could not be completed by June 30, the Senate and House on June 27 passed Senate Joint Resolution 115, extending the program through August 15, 1957. The measure was signed by the President on June 29.

HOUSING ACT OF 1957

PUBLIC LAW 85-104—HOUSE REPORTS 313 AND 659

H. R. 6659

At the time it acted on the stopgap FNMA resolution, the committee requested its Subcommittee on Housing to begin hearings on longer range solutions to serious problems in the housing field. The committee foresaw that in the prevailing tight money market it would be increasingly difficult for prospective home buyers to obtain financing on terms they could afford. The veterans' home loan program, which financed about 30 percent of housing starts in 1956, was falling off sharply as lenders turned to other investments with yields higher than the 4½ percent limit fixed by statute on GI loans. To meet the needs of the sizable group of home buyers who can afford only modest downpayments, legislation was clearly needed.

After receiving the subcommittee's recommendations, the committee on April 8 reported to the House H. R. 6659, designed to restore a sound home-building industry and to achieve other important objectives in the field of housing. After undergoing considerable modification in the House and Senate and in conference, this bill was approved by the President on July 12, becoming the Housing Act of 1957.

As approved, the Housing Act of 1957 contains six titles modifying housing programs under existing law.

Title I of the new act deals with FHA insurance programs.

Title II relates to the operations of the Federal National Mortgage Association.

Title III concerns the slum clearance and urban renewal programs.

Title IV deals with the low-rent public housing program and provides for the disposition of several federally owned war housing projects.

Title V extends and amends the military housing program and also amends the purchase price formula used in the acquisition of Wherry projects through negotiation.

Title VI continues and expands the college housing program, continues the voluntary home mortgage credit program, establishes a new 2-year program of farm housing research, provides for the exchange of data with foreign nations relating to housing and urban planning and development, directs the FHA Commissioner and the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to set reasonable ceilings on discounts permitted in connection with Government-insured or guaranteed loans, and expands the authority of the Housing and Home Finance Agency to make urban planning grants.

TITLE I. FHA INSURANCE PROGRAMS

The new act increases the permissible maximum loan-to-value ratios on mortgages insured by FHA under its regular sales housing program, thereby permitting lower downpayments for home buyers. As amended, the maximum amount of a mortgage which may be insured by FHA under section 203 may not exceed 97 percent of the first $10,000 of appraised value of property, plus 85 percent of the next $6,000 of appraised value, and 70 percent of such value in excess of $16,000. Existing dollar ceilings—for example, $20,000 in the case of a 1- or 2-family home—were unchanged.

Prior to this amendment the maximum loan-to-value ratios were 95 percent of the first $9,000 of value and 75 percent of the appraised value in excess of $9,000—except that the President could increase the figure of $9,000 to $10,000.

Where the mortgagor is not the occupant of section 203 housing—as in the case of a builder-mortgagor—the mortgage continues to be limited to a maximum of 85 percent of the mortgage amount available for owner-occupants.

The new act also lowers downpayments for section 203 (i), which is designed to encourage low-cost housing in suburban and outlying areas. The minimum downpayment is reduced from 5 to 3 percent.

The law also increases the permissible maximum mortgage under section 203 (i) from $6,650 to $8,000.

The law also lowers the downpayments for urban renewal sales housing under section 220, to conform to the minimum downpayments permitted under the section 203 program.

The section 222 servicemen's mortgage insurance program is also modified so as to permit downpayments lower than 5 percent wherever such lower downpayments would be permitted under the revised downpayment schedule for FHA's section 203 program.

The new law required the FHA Commissioner, before putting the lower downpayments into effect, to make a finding that such action is in the public interest, taking into consideration possible effects on the economy and also the availability or lack of credit for GI loans guaranteed by the Veterans' Administration. On August 6, 1957, the lower downpayments permitted by the new act for the various FHA programs were made effective by regulation.

Other provisions realting to the FHA insurance programs: The act amends the FHA title I home improvement loan program to make payments of loss to the lender incontestable after 2 years from the date the claim was certified for payment, in the absence of fraud or misrepresentation, unless the Government demands repayment within the 2-year period.

The section 207 mental housing program is amended to permit a high cost area allowance of $1,000 per room regardless of the number of rooms per unit.

The program for rental housing for elderly persons under section 207 is amended to permit a maximum mortgage of up to $8,400 per unit for elevator-type projects. The act also makes it clear that units in section 207 projects for the elderly can be designed for and occupied by single elderly persons.

The act also amends the National Housing Act to require that in cases where replacement cost instead of value is used as a basis for mortgage insurance, the FHA shall furnish the applicant with its estimate of replacement cost instead of the estimate of value which it furnishes to the buyer in other cases.

Title I also contains a number of technical provisions relating to debentures, insurance premiums, transfer of moneys among FHA insurance funds, and other phases of FHA operations. It also repeals two obsolete provisions.

TITLE II. FEDERAL NATIONAL MORTGAGE ASSOCIATION

SECONDARY MARKET OPERATIONS

The law amends the provision governing the amount of FNMA stock which a mortgage seller must purchase under FNMA's regular secondary market operations. Under prior law FNMA could increase without limit the amount of the required stock purchase, the only restriction being that it could not be less than 1 percent of the mortgage amount. The new act establishes the maximum stock purchase requirement at 2 percent and retains the minimum of 1 percent.

The new act provides additional funds for FNMA's regular secondary market operation. By increasing FNMA's capitalization by $65 million, FNMA's borrowing authority is increased by $650 million, since under the law FNMA may borrow up to 10 times its capital and surplus. The increased borrowing authority brings FNMA's total mortgage purchase authority to approximately $2.25 billion. A corresponding increase is made in the amount of FNMA obligations which may be purchased by the United States Treasury.

FNMA special assistance functions: Under its special assistance program FNMA provides financing support on favorable terms for especially deserving FHA programs such as military housing, urban renewal housing, and cooperative housing.

The new act requires that until August 8, 1958, FNMA purchases of mortgages under its special assistance functions must be at par. Under prior law FNMA was required to purchase at 99 or more.

With respect to the fees and charges which FNMA may make in connection with special assistance mortgages, the new act places a limit of 1½ percent of the unpaid principal amount. Not more than half of such fees and charges may be collected at the time of commitment. Previous law contained no limit on such fees and charges.

The new act increases the authorization for FNMA purchases of mortgages designated by the President for special assistance. The new authorization of $450 million for the purchase of whole mortgages supplants the previous authorizations of (1) $200 million for the purchase of whole mortgages, and (2) $100 million for the purchase of 20 percent immediate participations in mortgages. The President has designated as eligible for special assistance, mortgages covering disaster housing, housing in Guam and Alaska, Wherry military housing, housing for the elderly, and urban renewal housing.

Additional FNMA support for cooperative housing is provided by an increase from $100 million to $200 million in the authority of FNMA to purchase FHA section 213 cooperative housing mortgages under its special assistance functions. The former $10 million limitation on outstanding purchases per State is increased to $20 million. Under the amendment $50 million of the total authorization is reserved for cooperatives certified by the Federal Housing Commissioner to be consumer cooperatives. Of the commitments in any one State, not more than $15 million may be outstanding at any time for cooperatives which are not consumer cooperatives.

The authorization for FNMA purchases of FHA title VIII military housing mortgages is increased from $200 million to $450 million, of which 7.5 percent is reserved for purchases of mortgages insured under section 809. Section 809 mortgages finance sales housing for essential civilians at military research and development centers.

TITLE III. SLUM CLEARANCE AND URBAN RENEWAL

The authority of the Housing and Home Finance Agency to make capital grants under the title I program for slum clearance and urban renewal is increased by $350 million. Under this program the Federal Government makes grants to local communities up to two-thirds of the cost of slum clearance and urban renewal projects.

The new act also provides an alternative formula for calculating the Federal capital grants, the use of which is optional with the community. In place of the two-thirds Federal to one-third local grant formula for a project, the local public agency can have, if it so elects, the benefit of a three-fourths Federal to one-fourth local grant formula, if the community bears all expenses of planning, surveys, legal services, and administrative costs. In effect, under the alternative formula, the Federal Government pays a higher percentage of a reduced project cost, and it is expected that the Federal share of the total costs will be approximately the same under either formula. The purpose of the alternative formula is to make it possible to eliminate review and discussion at the Federal level of survey and planning costs and project administrative costs.

The new act also increases from 10 percent to 12½ percent the proportion of the capital grant authorization available to any one State.

In order to relieve both the local public agencies and the Federal Government of a considerable burden of paperwork, the new act authorizes the Housing and Home Finance Administrator to permit local public agencies to make relocation payments in fixed amounts (not exceeding the present $100 limit) to individuals and families without the necessity of investigating the actual costs incurred in each case.

The maximum allowance for paying the relocation expenses of individual businesses displaced by slum-clearance operations is raised from $2,000 to $2,500.

The definition of "urban renewal plan" is amended to permit a local community to indicate in a submission separate from the urban renewal plan, the relationship between the urban renewal plan and the overall local planning objectives. The previous definition required that this relationship be indicated in the urban renewal plan itself.

Another amendment extends to slum clearance projects under the 1949 act a provision—previously applicable only to urban renewal projects under the 1954 act—whereby the estimated costs of facilities offered as noncash grants-in-aid can be deemed actual costs for certain purposes. This avoids delay and resulting expense in winding up an urban renewal project where the facilities offered as noncash grants-in-aid are still under construction and the actual costs thereof cannot be known until completion.

The new act also provides that, where the local housing agency is also acting as the local public agency for the purposes of slum clearance and urban renewal, the local housing agency may include in its administration building sufficient facilities for the administration of its slum clearance and urban renewal functions. In such cases an economic rent shall be charged for such facilities as are used for urban renewal functions. The rent shall be paid from funds derived from sources other than low-rent public housing projects administered by the local housing agency.

TITLE IV. PUBLIC HOUSING

Low-rent housing: The new act permits certain exemptions from income for the purpose of determining eligibility for both initial and continued occupancy. The amendment permits families seeking admission to public housing an exemption from their annual income of $100 for each minor—other than the head of the family and his spouse—and each adult dependent member of the family with no income, and up to $600 of the income of each member of the family other than the principal wage earner. For continued occupancy exemptions are permitted of either $100 or all or part of the income of each minor in the family—other than the head of the family and his spouse—and $100 for each adult dependent member having no income, and up to $600 of the income of any other member of the family other than the principal wage earner. Exemptions under prior law were—for admission, $100 for each minor; and for continued occupancy, $100 for each minor or all or any part of the income of each minor.

The permissible cost limits of low-rent public housing are raised from $1,750 to $2,000 per room for regular units, and from $2,250 to $2,500 per room for units for elderly persons.

Another amendment requires that every contract for Federal assistance to low-rent public housing projects shall require that the plans, drawings, and specifications follow the principle of modular measure in every case deemed feasible by the local housing agency.

Disposition of war housing projects: The new act contains the following provisions affecting the disposition of war housing projects: First, it extends until December 1, 1957, the time in which war houing project Conn-6029 may be sold to the Housing Authority of Wethersfield, Conn., pursuant to the provisions of the Housing Act of 1954; second, it directs the Housing and Home Finance Administrator to dispose of housing project Nev-26021, to the Housing Authority of Las Vegas, Nev.; third, it directs the Housing and Home Finance Administrator to convey two Lanham war housing projects, LA-16011 and LA-16012, to the State of Louisiana; fourth, it directs the Administrator to sell to the city of Layton, Utah, a war housing project known as Verdeland Park—Utah-42015.

TITLE V. MILITARY HOUSING

The title VIII military housing program is extended by the new act for 1 additional year, through June 30, 1959.

The new act makes the statutory maximum average of $16,500 per family unit for housing under the title VIII program applicable to each project rather than each mortgage. Since financing for a large project generally requires separate mortgages for the various areas of the project, and the mortgages in some of these areas may range somewhat higher than the $16,500 family-unit average limitation—although the family-unit average of all project mortgages does not exceed that limit—this section permits greater flexibility in project planning and financing.

The new act changes the formula used in determining the purchase price of Wherry Act housing acquired by the military services through negotiation. It substitutes for the allowance for physical depreciation previously included in determining such price, an allowance representing the estimated cost of repairs and replacements necessary to restore the property to sound physical condition.

TITLE VI. MISCELLANEOUS

College housing loan program: The new act increases the college housing loan authorization by $175 million—from $750 million to $925 million.

Eligibility under the program is extended to include: First, any public or nonprofit hospital operating a school of nursing beyond the level of high school, or approved for internships by recognized authority; and second, any agency, public authority, or other instrumentality of any State established to provide or finance housing or other educational facilities for students or faculty of any nonprofit public educational institution offering at least a 2-year program acceptable for full credit toward a baccalaureate degree.

A $25-million ceiling is placed on the amount of loans which may be outstanding to hospitals for housing for nurses and interns.

Voluntary home mortgage credit program: The voluntary home mortgage credit program is extended by the new act until July 31, 1959. Under previous law the program would have expired on August 15, 1957.

Farm housing research: The act authorizes a new program of farm housing research designed to assist in the improvement of farm housing by developing data and information on, first, the adequacy of existing farm housing; second, farm housing needs; third, problems in purchasing, constructing, or improving farm housing; fourth, the interrelation of farm housing problems and problems of urban and suburban housing; and fifth, any other matters bearing upon adequate farm housing.

The research, study, and analysis must be conducted by land-grant colleges financed with grants made to them by the Housing and Home Finance Administrator.

The Administrator's authority to make grants to land-grant colleges expires June 30, 1959, and the total amount of such grants cannot exceed $300,000 during either of the fiscal years ending June 30, 1958, and June 30, 1959. Appropriations are authorized to be made to carry out the program.

Exchange of data: The Housing and Home Finance Administrator is directed to exchange data relating to housing and urban planning and development with other nations where the exchange is deemed by him to be beneficial to the programs of the Housing and Home Finance Agency.

Discount control: Under the new act the Federal Housing Commissioner and the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs are directed to fix reasonable limits on the charges, fees, and discounts imposed upon the builder, seller, or purchaser, in connection with the financing of the construction or sale of housing covered by an FHA or VA mortgage. Such limits may vary in accordance with the terms of the mortgage, the geographical area of the housing, and such other pertinent factors as the Commissioner or Administrator deems advisable. No loan may be insured or guaranteed by the Federal Housing Commissioner or the Veterans' Administrator unless the lender certifies that no charge, fee, or discount has been imposed by it in excess of the limits prescribed by the agency concerned.

Urban planning grants: The new act extends eligibility for section 701 planning grants to, first, official governmental planning agencies for areas threatened with rapid urbanization as a result of the establishment of rapid and substantial expansion of a Federal installation, and, second, State planning agencies, to be used for the provision of planning assistance to such areas.

SALE OF HOUSING PROJECTS IN ALEXANDRIA, LA.

HOUSE REPORT 220

H. R. 5603

This bill, providing for the conveyance of two Lanham Act projects to the State of Louisiana, was reported by the committee on March 25, and passed the House on April 1. The Senate did not act on this bill, but it did include substantially the same provisions as an amendment to the general housing bill, and the proposal was enacted into law as section 402 (c) of the Housing Act of 1957, discused above.

SALE OF HOUSING PROJECTS IN DECATUR, ILL.

PUBLIC LAW 85-234—NO HOUSE REPORT

S. 2460

This act provides for the conveyance of 2 Lanham Act projects in Decatur, Ill., to the city of Decatur or its housing authority, for $260,000, on condition that the projects will be demolished within 5 years. The bill pased the Senate on August 21; passed the House August 23; and was approved by the President.

SMALL BUSINESS

SMALL BUSINESS LOAN AUTHORITY

PUBLIC LAW 85-4—HOUSE REPORT 3

S. 637

The first hearing of the committee during 1957 was held January 23, on legislation to increase the Small Busines Administration's authority to make loans to small businesses. At the close of 1956, SBA's outstanding business loans and commitments had reached $137 million, just $13 million short of the statutory limit of $150 million then in effect. Since applications for such loans were being approved at the rate of about $13 million a month, prompt action was required to prevent a sudden interruption in SBA's lending program. Accordingly, the committee on January 28 reported out H. R. 3109, which provided for an increase of $80 million in the business loan authorization; this was the amount estimated to be sufficient to permit operations through July 31, 1957, the expiration date then provided in the statute. On January 29, the Senate pased S. 637, providing for an increase of $65 million. On January 31, the House passed S. 637, with an amendment substituting the provisions of H. R. 3109. The Senate agreed to the House amendment the following day, and on February 11 the bill became Public Law 85-4. As enacted, it raised SBA's business loan authority by $80 million, from $150 million to $230 million.

REVISION OF SMALL BUSINESS ACT

HOUSE REPORT 555

H. R. 7963

Under the Small Business Act of 1953, as in effect at the beginning of the 85th Congress, the Small Business Administration was scheduled to expire on July 31, 1957. On May 14, 1957, the committee began hearings on legislation to extend this expiration date and revise the Small Business Act, as a result of which the committee on June 13 reported to the House a bill, H. R. 7963, which completely rewrites the Small Business Act, making various changes in the interest of promoting a more vigorous and efficient program of assistance to small business. The bill passed the House on June 25.

The principal changes embodied in H. R. 7963 are: First, to make the Small Business Administration a permanent agency; second, to increase the authorization for loans to small business; third, to provide for a more equitable share of Government procurement for small business by requiring a new definition of small business for procurement purposes; fourth, to reduce the interest rate on direct SBA business loans and on SBA's share of such loans made in participation with private lenders and to eliminate the ceiling on the interest rate on the private lender's share; and fifth, to replace the Loan Policy Board with a National Small Business Advisory Board.

At the close of the 1st session of the 85th Congress, H. R. 7963 was pending before the Committee on Banking and Currency of the Senate, where action is expected early in the second session.

EXTENSION OF SMALL BUSINESS ACT

PUBLIC LAW 85-120—NO HOUSE REPORT

S. 2504

When it became apparent that the Senate could not act on H. R. 7963, discussed above, in the first session, the Senate enacted S. 2504, a bill extending the Small Business Act for 1 year, through July 31, 1958, and increasing its authority to make loans to small business by $75 million, to $305 million. The House passed the bill on August 2, and it became law on August 3, effective retroactively, as of July 31.

FINANCE

EXTENSION OF EXPORT-IMPORT BANK ACT

PUBLIC LAW 85-55—HOUSE REPORT 221

H. R. 4136

Following a precedent established in 1945 and continued in 1951, the committee acted early in the 85th Congress to extend the life of the Export-Import Bank for 5 years, through June 30, 1963. This extension was provided for in H. R. 4136, reported by the committee on March 25. The bill passed the House on April 9 and the Senate on June 5, and became law on June 17.

The Export-Import Bank is an agency of the United States established in 1934 to assist in the financing of exports and imports between the United States and foreign countries. Most credits of the bank finance the export of United States manufactured or agricultural products, or services. To a limited extent imports into the United States are also financed but generally financing from commercial banks and other private sources is available for this purpose. A provision of the charter of the bank expresses the intent of Congress that the bank should encourage and not compete with private capital and throughout the years the relationship between the bank and private lenders has been most harmonious.

All of the $1 billion authorized in outstanding capital stock of the bank is owned by the United States Treasury. The bank is authorized to borrow funds from the Treasury up to a maximum amount of $4 billion outstanding at any 1 time.

Over the 23-year period ending December 31, 1956, the bank had financed sales of United States products and services in 68 countries of the world. Over this period loans disbursed totaled $5,277 million. Of these, $2,641 million had been repaid leaving outstanding $2,636 million of loans. In addition, the bank had undisbursed commitments of $1,553 million. Over this 23-year period gross earnings aggregated $777.5 million while interest and dividends paid to the United States Treasury totaled $328.9 million. After payment of all operating expenses and losses charged off, a reserve of $435.1 million has been accumulated by the bank. The Treasury as owner of all the capital stock of the bank is the beneficial owner of the accumulated undisbursed reserve.

The bank has an outstanding record of successful operation. Total losses charged off approximate only $500,000. As of December 31, 1956, installments of principal past due totaled approximately $9.3 million. These have not been declared in default or charged off against the bank's earned reserves of $435.1 million because of the expectation of eventual repayment. Even if past due principal amounts are added to losses actually charged off, the ratio to aggregate loan disbursements of $5,277 million is less than one-fifth of 1 percent.

Many of the development projects abroad for which the bank assists in the financing of export of American goods and services for these projects, require considerable time for completion. In order that the development of projects of this type may proceed on an even flow basis the committee has deemed it wise to act well in advance of the scheduled expiration date of the bank's lending authority. The 5-year extensions of the agency allow operations to proceed without interruption but at the same time automatically bring the agency up for review by the committee at periodic intervals.

REGULATION OF SAVINGS AND LOAN HOLDING COMPANIES

HOUSE REPORT 178

H. R. 4135

In 1955 the committee reported out a bill, H. R. 6627, designed to regulate holding companies in the field of commercial banking. It was subsequently enacted into law and became the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956. Shortly after the committee had reported that bill a new holding company was formed in the savings and loan field. In view of the potential problems that could develop from a holding company movement in the savings and loan field the committee decided to take action before these problems assumed the complex status that had been encountered in dealing with the holding company problem in the commercial banking field. Accordingly, the committee on March 1, 1957, reported H. R. 4135, to protect against the encroachment of holding companies in the savings and loan field. The bill passed the House on March 21. Although the Senate did not act on this measure during the first session, title VI of the Senate-passed Financial Institutions Act of 1957 contains substantially similar provisions.

Savings and loan associations are community institutions devoted to encouraging thrift and home ownership. Typically they are managed by local people and are mutual institutions. At the end of 1956 there were over 6,000 savings and loan associations in the United States with combined assets of over $43 billion. These institutions held slightly over 34 percent of the mortgaged debt on the nonfarm homes of the country. Although most of the associations are mutual institutions, the laws of 14 States permit the organization of permanent stock associations. The stock associations account for approximately 6.6 percent of the number and 10.5 percent of the assets of all savings and loan associations operating in the United States.

While there are several ways a holding company might gain control of a savings and loan association, the simplest way is by buying a controlling interest in the permanent stock of a stock association. This has been the method used in all instances which have come to the committee's attention.

H. R. 4135 as reported by the committee and passed by the House prohibits any holding company from acquiring control of two or more savings and loan associations if the savings accounts in the associations are insured by the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation. The bill also denies FSLIC insurance to any uninsured savings and loan association if it is controlled by a holding company which also controls an insured savings and loan association. The bill prohibits any insured savings and loan association controlled by a holding company from making any loan to the holding company or any of its subsidiaries. The bill does not have any retroactive effect as it would not require an existing holding company—and there are only a few—to divest itself of an insured association it now controls. However, it does prohibit an existing holding company from acquiring control of any additional insured association after enactment of the act.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS ACT

H. R. 7026 AND S. 1451

On July 15, the committee opened hearings on H. R. 7026 and S. 1451. These bills rewrite the Federal laws relating to banks, savings and loan associations, and credit unions. In addition to eliminating obsolete provisions of law and rearranging other provisions in more logical order, the bills embody numerous substantive changes in these laws. Hearings continued for 5 weeks, and were then suspended due to the impending adjournment of Congress. They are scheduled to reopen early in the second session.

Accomplishments of Present Session of Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILL E. NEAL

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. NEAL. Mr. Speaker, among the accomplishments of the present session of Congress is the fact that the legislative branch has been stubbornly reestablishing its position of equality with the executive arm of the Government. I do not mean to say that this has been a recalcitrant Congress, but it has been one in which party lines have been fairly well ignored in considering requests from the White House.

For instance, we gave the President what he wanted in the way of a Mideast doctrine, and it has apparently paid off. His bold plan for that area of the world was questioned at length, but the fact remains that the interests of the Free World have been immeasurably bolstered in a critical area.

When you consider the recent heat of the civil-rights debate, you can see again that, unlike the New Deal and the Fair Deal, when a President sends his views to Capitol Hill it is not always with the certainty that they will be accepted with alacrity.

The President is an intensely popular man, but he is a man who accepts the idea wholeheartedly that our system of Government is composed of three branches—the legislative, executive, and judicial. They are, as the President has admitted, fundamental and their rights and constitutional duties cannot be tampered with.

The Republican Members of Congress have consistently tried to limit appropriations to last year's expenditures and to date few new programs have been approved involving any large and continuing outlay of money. It is true that even with these economies, the budget involves a great deal of money, but, eventually only time will tell whether we have been wise or foolish.

It must not be forgotten that we live in a turbulent, unsafe, and totally insecure world. And, frankly, it takes insurance payments to live in that kind of a world. In the past we have carried this insurance on the basis of short-term endowment rates, thereby depleting our capital structure. It is time we converted this plan to long-range term rates consistent with the stabilization of our national currency and our monetary standard.

It would not be wise for this country to temper its present hard look at communism as personified by Khrushchev and Bulganin. Communism is still tyranny, no matter how you regard it.

After I served in the 83d Congress, I took occasion to visit Asia. In Afghanistan, India, and other places in the Far East, I saw the fertile soil in which the false Communist seed is sown with such prolific repercussions. It simply boils down to this, the Communist bosses preach an almost religious doctrine of political resignation. The people are exhorted to be apathetic in everything except their devotion to the regime.

Our aim, therefore, should be to fight it with everything we have, provided always we do not overlook the fact that only by remaining solvent and united can we hope to prevent creeping socialism and Communist infiltration. Every public servant entrusted with financial administration should resolve each day that Lenin's prophecy shall not come true.

So, too, must we face head-on the spending inflationary trends. This is a terrific subject, one that is worldwide in scope. People everywhere are demanding more things. Their demand for goods is beyond the capacity of the world's productive machinery. We have decolonialized a great many people and given them an opportunity to demonstrate their political maturity. At the same time, even at a faster rate than their political development, they are rapidly advancing in their economic growth. This can continue only as long as they maintain stable currency.

The old established currencies of the world have skidded down to unbelievable lows of value. The French franc is well below the value, in terms of American currency, of the old American continental dollar. America must set the pattern by stabilizing our dollar; then others may be expected to follow.

As to what to do about this situation, I personally favor a revision of our tax laws so that private investors may have more money in their pockets with which to increase our productive capacity and help alleviate a condition which is not confined to the United States alone, but to the world at large. Here in America labor and industry must cease vying with each other for higher wages and automatic price increases. The consuming public, heretofore the innocent victims, deserves a break which, if not soon forthcoming, will resort to boycott methods in self-defense.

We have balanced our budget and made a sizable reduction in Federal spending. Let us make this program a yearly habit and, as the night follows the day, the purchasing power of the dollar will move toward normal.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. FRANK T. BOW

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. BOW. Mr. Speaker, the members of the Appropriations Committee of this body devote perhaps the largest part of their attention during the Congressional session to an effort to ascertain and insure the economic soundness of the programs of governmental expenditure which are brought to them for action and recommendation.

In the years in which I have been in Congress and the prior years with which I am familiar, going back to 1936, no area of appropriation requested of the Congress has produced a sounder investment of the public funds than the appropriations for merchant ship construction. These appropriations have enabled the Government to carry out the national policy of promoting our foreign and domestic commerce and providing indispensable military and naval auxiliaries in time of war. As part of a sound commercial private enterprise, the moneys appropriated for merchant ships which have been covered by ship mortgages have in every case been paid back by the ship operator in accordance with the repayment schedule of the mortgage.

Thus, when our Nation faces a need for replacement of our existing merchant fleet, members of the Appropriations Committee and Members of the House as a whole can take pride in a program which has brought a return of all of the money lent to the steamship operators.

As the Members of this body know, our merchant vessel fleet will be able to serve the twin purposes of foreign trade and national defense only if it is kept modern by regular replacements of units which grow old and out of date. Today we are facing an important replacement problem in a limited portion of our merchant fleet. I speak of the large passenger vessels which provide essential troop transports in time of national emergency. The American President Lines, which operates the passenger vessels used in the transpacific trade, is required under terms of its contract with the Government to build a replacement passenger ship next year. To be of maximum value for purposes of defense and commerce in the Pacific, it should be of about 26 knots and should carry 1,400 passengers. In order to facilitate this essential vessel construction, I have joined with Congressman SHELLEY in introducing a bill authorizing the United States to construct such a vessel and sell it to the American President Lines in strict accordance and compliance with the terms of the Merchant Marine Act of 1936.

Budget Reform

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GLENARD P. LIPSCOMB

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. LIPSCOMB. Mr. Speaker, it is becoming increasingly clear that there exist serious deficiencies in the Congressional review of the budget and in the methods and procedures of making appropriations in support of the Federal Government. These problems are by no means new. Budget and fiscal processes and procedures of Government have been the subject of continual and controversial discussion during the past decade. However, the increasing high cost of Government, amply demonstrated in the fiscal 1958 budget, has magnified the seriousness of the problems to alarming proportions and has emphasized the pressing need for immediate reform in this area of Government.

The Constitution grants to Congress exclusive power over the public purse. It does this by providing that no money may be drawn from the Treasury except in consequence of appropriations made by law. However, the control over the public purse thus vested by the Constitution has become eroded over the years, until today in many areas only an empty shell still remains in Congress. The power to enact the annual appropriations measures amounts to, in many ways, but an empty remain of the constitutional grant.

The planning of Federal expenditures and the adoption of a Federal budget is highly technical business. Members of Congress can attest to this, for they have the disconcerting experience of receiving the telephone-book-size budget document each year, containing technical budgetary and fiscal terms and hundreds of pages of figures, which successfully challenges practically everyone to become educated as to its meaning and full significance. I believe it is a near-unanimous experience among Members of Congress, in the last analysis, to accept as personally understandable only the barest highlights of the budget, for lack of the means and the time to delve into it any further.

There is much evidence that the procedures and methods employed by Congress to review and authorize the Federal budget in the past are simply not adequate to meet the demands imposed by today's Government. While the executive branch has increased manyfold in size and complexity, Congress has grimly tried to keep pace with the limited means at its disposal.

For example, while the Federal budget is in preparation, revision, and rerevision over a period of 18 months or so, Congress must act on it after having had a chance to study it over a period of only several months. And, at that, in checking money requests, we must rely almost totally on the testimony, data, and so forth, presented by those who made up the budget in the first place. And, needless to say, the size of the machinery Congress possesses to perform its fiscal chores is small indeed when compared with that of the executive branch.

The result is that only a once-overlightly treatment can be given to such items as overall fiscal planning, program evaluation, budget surplus and deficits, Federal spending levels, the problem of carryover balances of appropriations, the need for improvements in agency accounting systems, and a host of related problems. It means that over the years Congressional control over the public purse has been precariously diminished.

I wish to make clear at this point that my remarks are not intended to be critical in any way of the Appropriations Committee, for I believe it does excellent work. The situation in which we find ourselves is in spite of the efforts of the Appropriations Committee.

Various possible solutions to solve our fiscal problems have been tried in the past. Principal among these were the use of the legislative budget as provided for in the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, and the omnibus appropriation bill. The purpose of the legislative budget was to place a legislative ceiling on expenditures as a framework in which to consider the various appropriation bills. This procedure never really got off the ground, and no attempt to use it has been made in the last several Congresses. The omnibus appropriations bill method has also been used. Under that method, the Congress considers the whole Federal spending program at one time and in one bill.

An indication of the mounting alarm and the belief that improvements in our fiscal procedures and policies must be forthcoming is the fact that many bills proposing reforms of one kind or another are before Congress for consideration. I am setting forth a list of various types of proposals that have been made. It is quite evident from a study of these diverse proposals that there are many ideas as to how best to approach the problem. However, they all have one thing in common, and that is that they have been born of the realization that improvements of some sort must be made. Included in bills before Congress are the following types of legislative proposals:

(a) To require that appropriations be determined on an annual accrued expenditure basis.

(b) To amend the Constitution to require Congress to stay in session each year until it has produced a balanced budget.

(c) Proposes that the budget shall include each year a special analysis of certain long-term construction and development projects.

(d) To amend the Constitution to provide that the Federal expenditures shall not exeed Federal revenues, except in time of war or grave national emergency.

(e) To enact a Public Debt Reduction Act to lower gradually and systematically the ceiling of the national debt.

(f) To direct the Comptroller General to make investigations with respect to all agencies in the executive branch and to report the results to the respective Congressional appropriation committees to enable the latter to give adequate consideration to the items relating to such agencies contained in the budget. Upon request, the Comptroller General would be authorized to make a special expenditure analysis of particular agencies.

(g) To provide that in any year a budget surplus occurs, one-half shall be applied as tax credits against individual income taxes.

(h) To create in the legislative branch an office of the United States budget; to prepare for Congress at the beginning of each session the budget, a budget report, summary data, and supporting details.

(i) To provide penalties for violations of the requirement of apportionment of certain appropriations to avoid the necessity for deficiency or supplemental appropriations.

(j) To provide that all appropriations for each fiscal year would be consolidated in one general appropriation bill, and would require that such act contain provisions limiting expenditures.

(k) To direct the President to include in the budget a sum not less than $2 billion to be applied toward reduction of the national debt.

(l) To create a Commission on Budget and Tax Policy authorized to make a thorough and comprehensive study of proposals before Congress, and otherwise the purpose of which is to limit the power of Congress to tax or appropriate or the power of the President to expend moneys or to contract indebtedness.

(m) To amend the Constitution to provide for balancing of the budget when presented to Congress, except in time of war.

(n) To require that bills and resolutions authorizing appropriations reported by committees of Congress be accompanied by an estimate of the probable cost of the legislation.

In addition, the House early in the session saw fit to pass a resolution requesting the President to inform it how cuts in the budget could best be made.

It is not only the Congress that is calling for reforms in our budgeting and appropriations procedures. The President and the heads of our fiscal departments have repeatedly made suggestions for improvements in this area. The Hoover Commission has called for reforms. Newspapers and magazines have shown active interest and concern, as have taxpayers throughout the country.

To alleviate the situation, 32 other Members and myself on July 18 introduced identical House resolutions, House Resolutions 325 through 357, proposing the creation of a select committee to study the whole field of fiscal organization and procedures in Congress. Subsequently two additional identical resolutions, House Resolutions 381 and 396, were introduced. It is the purpose of the resolution to provide a means for the House to conduct a penetrating self-analysis with a view toward arriving at a comprehensive, well-designed program to enable Congress to perform its constitutional responsibilities more effectively.

The resolution would create in the House of Representatives a 10-member Select Committee on Fiscal Organization and Procedures of the Congress who would be appointed by the Speaker. Since the committee is to be strictly a nonpartisan body, the resolution provides for equal representation from both the majority and minority parties, by specifying that no more than five committee members shall be members of the majority party. One of the committee members would be selected by the Speaker to serve as chairman. Because of the nature of the study to be undertaken, it was deemed both advisable and necessary that the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Appropriations be included as committee members, and the bill so provides.

The task of the committee would be to conduct a full and complete study of the fiscal and budgetary organization and operations of Congress with a view toward recommending improvements for the purpose of strengthening Congressional control over the public purse. The resolution does not specifically limit the scope of the study, but directs the committee to give particular attention to the following: First, the existing fiscal machinery and appropriations procedures of Congress; second, present methods of controlling public expenditures; third, alleged defects of present budgetary practices; and, fourth, proposed reforms in budgetary procedures.

The committee would be authorized to sit and act within the United States while Congress is in session, during recesses, and during periods of adjournment. It would have power to hold hearings, would possess subpena power to require the attendance of witnesses and the production of records, papers, and other materials. The committee would be empowered to employ experts, consultants, technicians, clerks, and stenographic help, and also would have authority to recruit on a loan basis, experts, consultants, and technicians from the executive branch of the Government.

The committee would submit to the House a report of its findings and recommendations as soon as practicable during the 85th Congress. No definite date is specified because until the study is actually under way it is difficult to determine the magnitude of the undertaking with sufficient accuracy so as to make it possible to set a realistic reporting date. Then too, what would be a proper reporting time would depend in part on the nature of the recommendations made as a result of the study. I am confident however that the study could be expedited sufficiently so that the Congress would have the benefit of the information and recommendations during the 2d session of the 85th Congress.

Unfortunately, hearings have not been held on the resolution in the Rules Committee, and inasmuch as the 1st session of the 85th Congress will soon come to an end, it is apparent that this most important measure will not be enacted this session.

Mr. Speaker, I believe it is through a basic, all-inclusive approach as proposed in this resolution where all the ills and possible remedies may be explored that effective and worthwhile improvements may be brought about. For that reason, I strongly urge favorable action in the Rules Committee and in the House on this resolution as a first order of business when we reconvene next January so that this important work may be started without delay.

Report on the 1st Session of the 85th Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. LUDWIG TELLER

OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. TELLER. Mr. Speaker, a substantial record of achievement was made by the 1st session of the 85th Congress, but much unfinished business remains for action during the 2d session which will convene January 7, 1958. Here are some of the main issues we faced in the session just concluded, and how we dealt with them:

CIVIL RIGHTS: PROTECTING THE INDIVIDUAL'S CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS

Our 1957 session of Congress will forever be remembered for its accomplishment in enacting a civil-rights law protecting the right to vote of all persons regardless of race, color, or creed—the first such national law to be enacted since Civil War Reconstruction days. Though aimed primarily at the South, its protection is nationwide. It establishes a Federal commission with subpena power to investigate facts as a basis for additional protective legislation; it creates a new civil-rights division in the Office of the Attorney General, and authorizes injunction proceedings to restrain violations of voting rights. I am proud to have voted for this law. Denial of the right to vote cannot be countenanced—and should be punished—if the Bill of Rights in our national Constitution is to be given full meaning.

For the South, civil rights is a passionate issue. The Republican Party embraced it with unaccustomed enthusiasm, believing that the Negro vote would go Republican—a belief which is not shared by most experts in race relations who are aware of the solid economic basis underlying the Negro's affection for the Democratic Party. This politically inspired motive on the part of the Republicans should be borne in mind, for while we are thankful for the votes of the Republicans, we have a right to question their sincerity on a national basis in view of their long-standing opposition to the Democratic Party's program for a national FEPC to outlaw racial and religious discrimination in employment.

The Supreme Court of the United States has played a curiously changing role in the history of our country. In the early days of our Nation that Court cemented the Federal Union and established the Court's right to protect individuals against arbitrary and unconstitutional actions by the executive and legislative branches of Government. The Supreme Court had some bad days, particularly for some time prior to and during the early 1930's, when it declared unconstitutional a good deal of desirable social legislation, such as laws which prescribed minimum wages or maximum hours of employment.

Now, again, the Supreme Court has become the guardian of individual liberties. In the recently decided Watkins case the Court enlarged the rights of individuals when their conduct is inquired into by a roving Congressional investigating body. In the Jencks case, a defendant in a criminal case was guaranteed the right to examine inconsistent statements previously made to the Government by prosecution witnesses. In the Mallory case the Court held that a person charged with a crime has a right to speedy arraignment—he may not be unreasonably detained solely to obtain a confession. These are decisions which underscore the reasons for our national greatness, for they are sinews of protection for individual rights which our Constitution guarantees.

The Eisenhower administration sought during the past session to override these decisions by Congressional enactments, but in the main failed to accomplish its unwise objective. A law to protect FBI files was passed, but it modified—it did not overrule—the right of a defendant to examine relevant Government files for inconsistency.

INFLATION

Combating inflation is a top-drawer Congressional responsibility. Little was done in the Congress during the 1957 session to meet this responsibility. Juggling interest rates and making credit harder to get are not enough, and may be wrong approaches because they hurt small and medium-sized business enterprise. An overall program is necessary, dealing with such things as monopoly price policies, the possibilities of union-management cooperation in wage-setting practices, installment selling, and a searching investigation of banking procedures. The coming 1958 session of Congress should give specific attention to the effects of inflationary forces. The wellsprings of these forces are complicated, to be sure, but their ruinous effects are plain for everyone to see and feel.

PROTECTING SMALL AND MEDIUM-SIZED BUSINESS

We are in the midst of a vast wave of business mergers which, if allowed to go unchecked, will continue to undermine the existence of an independent middle class in this country.

Nothing was done so far in the 85th Congress to stop this merger movement, or even to slow it down. Nor was anything done to limit the size of corporate giants which are normally monopolistic and at all events prevent small- and medium-sized business concerns from entering the particular industry.

Protecting and encouraging the small-business concern requires action on many additional fronts. The Small Business Administration was extended for 1 year during the session just concluded. In the 1958 session it is my hope that this Government body will be made a permanent agency, that its powers will be enlarged, and that the delaying redtape which now hamstrings it will be materially reduced.

It is plain, moreover, that our corporate income tax structure needs overhauling so as to reduce the tax rate for the smaller corporations. And in the field of military procurement, where today big business has a virtual monopoly of Government contracts, a program is needed to increase the small-business man's share. All these things are unfinished business of the 1957 session which requires action in the forthcoming 1958 session of Congress.

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

In pro-Soviet Syria we are now harveting the fruit of the Eisenhower-Dulles so-called Arab policy in the Mideast. By welching on a promise to provide millions of dollars for Egypt to build its Aswan Dam, a promise which Dulles should never have made, Dulles provided Nasser with a pretext for seizing the strategic Suez Canal. Then Dulles humiliated our great allies Great Britain and France when they sought to right Nasser's illegal seizure, and at all events failed to grasp the opportunity at that time to work out an overall settlement of the resulting crisis, including a peace treaty between the Arabs and our only dependable ally in the Middle East—Israel.

No wonder, then, that the Democrats in Congress viewed with suspicion the Eisenhower-Dulles foreign-aid program—a program which has failed to halt the advance of the international gangster conspiracy known as communism.

I have seen, and heard in action on the floor of the House of Representatives, the spokesmen for isolationist Republicanism from Midwestern United States. This—together with the Eisenhower-Dulles unwillingness to take the Democrats into their confidence—is a drag on our national ability to work out an effective bipartisan policy for our international affairs.

The need for such a policy is urgent. International communism is stronger, not weaker, than it was when Mr. Eisenhower took over the executive reins of government. In far-off Indonesia and Afghanistan the Communist cause has recently been gaining additional adherents. Free Europe openly expresses its distrust of Dulles. We need to stand united and respected before the world if our alliances with freedom-loving countries are to have the effect which our dedication and our foreign-aid outlay fully justify.

FEDERAL AID FOR LOCAL SCHOOL CONSTRUCTION

A major shortcoming of the session was the defeat of the Kelley bill, a temporary program for Federal aid to local school construction. The sum of $1.5 billion, or $300 million annually for 5 years, would be provided to aid school construction by the States. Three main things contributed to the defeat of the bill: First, the failure of Mr. Eisenhower to give it more than lukewarm support, of a kind which almost was a signal that he had no objection to its defeat; second, the opposition of Republican stalwarts in Congress, witness the fact that among those who voted against it were Halleck, of Indiana, assistant Republican leader; Arends, of Illinois, Republican whip; Allen, of Illinois, ranking Republican on the Rules Committee; third, failure of leaders in the field of education to explain the need for the bill and the provisions of the bill, and to marshal public opinion in support of it. I received only 4 communications on the subject, 2 of them favoring and 2 opposed to it.

The program of Federal aid for local school construction is not one of largess or Federal charity or random spending. It is a temporary program aimed largely at those States which have no State education agencies and leave school construction to local communities. Its purpose is to compel these States to follow the example of New York, and provide State programs for school construction in those poorer communities which have insufficient real estate to float school bonds. The Northern States have to bear a disproportionate share in providing boys for military service because so many of the boys from Southern States are rejected for illiteracy, and the Armed Forces spend about $300 million annually in an effort to educate the illiterate. Persons who are justifiably concerned about the mounting Federal budget ought to give consideration to these facts. Education is a national problem, a national responsibility.

But more facts need to be known and publicized regarding the extent of the local school shortage, and more effort needs to be exerted to explain these facts to the public and the need for the Federal program. As a member of the House Committee on Education and Labor, I spent long hours during the 1957 session in helping to work out the bill which was favorably reported by our committee to the Congress. I shall do all I can in the 1958 session, believing as I do that the program is urgent, to help in enactment of a Federal program of aid for local school construction.

OUR UNFAIR IMMIGRATION LAWS

The McCarran-Walter immigration law should be repealed. Its quota system is unfair to southern Europeans and refugees from other areas, because the law is based on a 1924 immigration ratio which has long outlived its usefulness. Its infamous national origins feature chains a person to the country where he or she was born, whatever his or her citizenship or circumstances may be at the time immigration to our country is sought. It contains arbitrary provisions which discriminate between native-born and naturalized citizens.

My bill to repeal this evil law, similar to bills introduced by other Democratic Congressmen, died in committee. I must frankly state that a number of otherwise liberal Democrats in Congress are halfhearted in their professed desire to repeal this law.

All we could hope to do under the circumstances was to help as many people as we could by amending the law. I cannot say that even this was adequately done. Why, for example, should not Christian and Jewish refugees from the Middle East and elsewhere be given the same hospitable reception as was accorded the escapees from Hungary? We did, however, amend the law somewhat so as to admit about 60,000 additional persons, particularly for the purpose of reuniting families. Further liberalization of the McCarran-Walter immigration law should be made a priority item for the 1958 session of Congress.

THE BUDGET; GOVERNMENT ECONOMY; TAX REDUCTION

The Democratic-controlled Congress shaved billions of dollars from the budget requests of the Eisenhower administration. Economy was a watchword of the 1st session of the 85th Congress. But economy is a relative thing, and is defined in different ways depending upon one's views regarding the responsibilities of the Federal Government and the items which come under the head of savings. By voting to abolish fast tax writeoffs for industry groups represented by high-powered lobbyists, for example, I helped to save billions of dollars for the Government. Therefore, I believe that my vote favoring long-delayed salary increases for postal employees and other Federal employees, particularly since such increases help efficiency by reducing employment turnover, is not an antieconomy vote.

The time has come, however, to think seriously about our huge and ever-mounting budget, and the burdensome taxes which it imposes upon all people. Part of the budget increase is, of course, due to the mounting population. Most of it is due to defense and foreign aid. These items of the budget must be faced up to if we are to remain strong and free, and help in maintaining peace in the world.

There remains, nevertheless, room for substantial economizing. The Cordiner report on the armed services, for example, shows that several billion dollars can be saved by a recasting of pay scales designed to keep skilled personnel in the Armed Forces, where now they leave for private industry and thereby require the Government to go to the expense of training their replacements. Many of the carefully prepared Hoover Commission reports ought to be adopted, because they show that billions of dollars can be saved by more efficient Government budget and purchasing and operational practices. A study is now being made by the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, designed to prove that the States can take over many of the activities now engaged in by the Federal Government.

These are huge possibilities for economizing, thereby saving money which can provide a basis for a tax cut and at the same time leave funds for protecting and improving the health, welfare, and education of our people.

Meeting the Crisis in Agriculture

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ALEXANDER WILEY

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Congressional Record a statement by me on the agricultural situation and its effect on the American farmer.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR WILEY

MEETING THE CRISIS IN AGRICULTURE

Today, the American farmer is facing a critical income problem.

Our farm folks, by and large, are finding it increasingly difficult to make a fair living for themselves and their families. Too many farmers—especially the small-family type—are finding it necessary to sell out. Why? Because they don't find it worthwhile to work long, hard days for a minimum of return.

In Wisconsin, the picture is similar to the situation across the Nation. Our current total of around 170,000 farms is unfortunately diminishing at a rate of about 3,500 annually. The number of small farmers—who often find that they can hardly survive at today's low prices for his products—is diminishing. The large farmer is getting larger.

YOUNGSTERS LEAVING FARMS

A great number of fine young folks, too, find it necessary to seek off-the-farm jobs—part time or full time. The prospect of making family-size farming a really successful career is growing dimmer and dimmer. For example, consider the present average rate of cash income of only 30 to 50 cents per hour received by Wisconsin dairy operators. That is not much to look forward to, especially for aspiring young Americans.

DAIRY PLANTS CLOSING

We must face the fact, too, that not only farms, but many other businesses closely related to farming and dairying are being forced to the wall. For instance, a regrettable number of creameries have "Out of business" signs in their windows. Far too many of our cheese factories—many of them family operated for years—are closing their doors. In addition, in villages and towns, hardwaremen, lumbermen, implement dealers—and others dependent upon the buying power of these farmers—are finding themselves squeezed along with the farmer.

FARMERS ARE "HARD HIT" BY INFLATION AND HIGH INTEREST RATES

Rising costs due to inflation have hit the farmer tremendously hard. To pay rising costs, he has to produce more milk, vegetables for canning, beef, and other products. As a result, a glut on the market all too often forces prices—now too low—to an even lower level.

The "upping" of interest rates, too, hits the farmer in his "thin" pocketbook. Since almost all farmers are creditors, for short-term production loans, high interest rates cut particularly deep into their incomes. At the same time, they are provided no relief from high costs of labor and of manufactured products and supplies. Thus, the farmer now finds himself caught in a kind of "double squeeze."

NO SIMPLE ANSWER

This is indefinitely a bad situation.

What are we going to do about it? We have got to roll up our sleeves and resolve these problems. The job is tough. There is no "pat" answer. We recognize that because agriculture is so complex, any solution will not be simple. However, we must find a solution—both in the interests of agriculture, and of our whole economy.

PROGRAMS TO ASSIST FARMERS

Currently, a number of farm-related programs have been designed and put into effect to assist individual farmers. While these programs do not make up for loss of income, they do help in a great many ways. For example, the following programs are in action:

The surplus disposal program has made reserves of surplus farm products—including milk, cheese, peas, and other items produced in Wisconsin—available for school lunches, disaster relief, and other noncommercial market uses.

The program attacking brucellosis to cut cattle losses is meeting with success. Happily, my own Badger State has now been certified free of brucellosis.

The Rural Electrification Administration has helped rural electric and telephone systems to meet growing demands for their services by our farm folks.

The expanded extension service program in the Nation—and especially in Wisconsin—is doing a fine job of assisting education programs, farm and marketing adjustment, and just plain know-how and advice.

The rural redevelopment program is expanding in a great many States, including Wisconsin, which has two pilot counties—Sawyer and Price.

An expanded Soil Conservation Service is providing soil and watershed conservation assistance.

These, and a number of other assistance programs, are working to help the farmer.

THE SOIL BANK

According to estimates, American farmers will receive more than $732 million in soil-bank payments this year. This will serve to bolster our farm income, as well as to carry out soil-bank objectives of reducing surpluses and protecting the soil. The 85th Congress clamped a $3,000 cut on the amount a producer could receive in any year. This stops the unfortunate practice of providing the large corporation farmer with hundreds of thousands of Federal dollars. As we know, the smaller, family-type farmer is the one who needs greatest assistance.

In Wisconsin, participation is increasing under the soil bank. According to estimates, payments to Badger farmers will amount to over $10 million this year.

NEED TO MODERNIZE PARITY

There still remains a great deal of controversy over the best level of parity—the fairest price—support levels for farm commodities.

As we know, attempts have been made to change and modernize the parity formula. To my way of thinking, the very definition of "parity" is obsolete and unfair to the dairyman.

But, regardless of the formula, the farmer is basically concerned with the amount of goods that he himself can buy with income from the products he sells. Currently, prices he receives are too low to offset costs and get a reasonable profit—or, in some cases, any profit at all.

For example, in terms of buying power, the present level of parity, as now defined, is $3.25 per hundredweight (a very modest price-support level—for manufacturing milk). This means only about 7 cents per quart. That is much too low. At this price, the farmer simply cannot pay the high costs of operation, equipment, and labor.

For many months, I have pointed this out to the Secretary of Agriculture, and urged that the price-support level be raised at least 25 cents—to $3.50. Permissible under the present law, such an administrative increase would help give milk prices to the farmer a much-needed boost. But even such a parity level is a long way away from an adequate profit for the farmer. A changed definition of parity in the light of modern conditions is also essential.

FARMER-CONSUMER RELATIONSHIP

In planning for a healthy agriculture, of course, the farmer-consumer relationship is important. The farmer must get a good price for products; at the same time, we can't afford to price these products out of reach of the consumer's pocketbook.

Regrettably, the price spread between what the farmer gets for his commodity, and what it sells in the city for, is often too great. This does not necessarily mean that our so-called middleman is making unfair profits. However, it does point out that the farmer is at a disadvantage in bargaining—that is, he must buy his machinery and equipment at a high retail price. At the same time, he must sell his milk, beef, corn, pork, eggs, and other products at low wholesale prices. Then they go through a long chain of distribution, while the price to the ultimate consumer is being raised.

If the farmer is to survive, this farm-to-market spread must be reduced, or at least shared, to a greater degree, by the farmer.

FINE WORK OF CO-OPS

Meanwhile, fortunately, our cooperatives are making a tremendous contribution toward helping the farmer get a larger share of the market price of his products.

These cooperatives carry on work in the important fields including production, marketing, purchasing, financing, insurance, and public service. The cooperatives have been, and continue to be, of invaluable service to our farmers. Wherever possible, co-op programs should be strengthened and expanded.

WILEY DAIRY BILL NEEDED TO STIMULATE RESEARCH

Today, one of the greatest needs of agriculture is more research. That is why, for example, I introduced specific research legislation in the interests of dairying. The enactment of the Wiley bill providing for a dairy research center at Madison would be a tremendous help to our dairy farmers. This would aid to—

Achieve more efficient methods of dairy farm operation;

Promote sales and distribution of dairy products;

Step up consumption;

Explore the possibility of the greater industrial and other uses of milk byproducts; and

Fulfill other needs of this vital industry.

INCREASED CONSUMPTION OF DAIRY PRODUCTS

To best help the Wisconsin dairy farmer, we must, of course, attempt to increase consumption of our healthful dairy products. If we can get millions of folks to drink another glass of milk, eat another slice of cheese, and consume a little more butter and other products—this would get rid of our price-depressing surplus, and result in a better market for the farmer.

Our teen-agers drink too little milk, and so do our old folks. Consumption must be boosted, among these and other groups.

SALES AND PROMOTION

To get increased consumption, of course, we must step up and expand our sales and promotion programs. Since 85 percent of Wisconsin milk is sold outside the State, we must more effectively spread the news of the healthful qualities of dairy foods across the Nation.

SOCIAL SECURITY NECESSARY

In these times when the farmer is suffering from an economic squeeze, the opportunity to retire under social security is, indeed, important. All of our farm folks—whether a tenant, owner, or laborer—are now eligible.

As a matter of fact, thousands of farmers across the country—many of whom would normally continue to operate their farms—are retiring. Why? Because of the tragic fact that retirement benefits—though very modest—often exceed the income now received from farm operation. This is sometimes true in Wisconsin, as in almost every other State in the Nation. It is another bit of evidence of the great need for a better program for agriculture.

Liberalized social security for elderly farmers past 65 and for their widows or wives past 62 is nevertheless essential.

CHALLENGES IN OTHER FIELDS

There are, of course, challenges in a number of other fields. For example, we need improved programs:

To fulfill our labor needs at harvest seasons;

To protect our home industry against unfair competition from imports—especially of commodities in surplus such as butter oil, cheese, and other products; and

To ease Federal tax burdens to the extent that the Nation's budget will permit.

CONCLUSION

Finally, let me point out that Uncle Sam alone cannot do all these things.

As we recognize, it is impossible to legislate prosperity. However, the Government can, and should, continue to help wherever possible, to speed the economic recovery of the farmer.

The job, of course, is to provide our farm folks with a sound and proportionate share of the national income. By so doing, it will benefit, not only the farmer, but strengthen the whole economy.

Lending Policy of the Rural Electrification Administration

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GORDON ALLOTT

OF COLORADO

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. ALLOTT. Mr. President, there has been considerable discussion lately regarding the lending policy of the Rural Electrification Administration. I am sure that a great many of my constituents will be interested in the letter which the Secretary of Agriculture wrote recently to the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY], in his capacity as chairman of the Subcommittee on Reorganization of the Committee on Government Operations.

I ask unanimous consent that the letter and a summary thereof be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter and summary were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, D. C., August 30, 1957.

Hon. HUBERT H. HUMPHREY,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Reorganization, Committee on Government Operations, United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR HUMPHREY: I have carefully considered your further letter of August 22, 1957, about the questions you have raised concerning the rumored changes in the lending policy of the Rural Electrification Administration.

These questions were also discussed in Mr. Morse's letter to you of August 9 and my letter of August 20. Substantially the same questions were raised during my press conference of August 20. A transcript of that portion of the press conference which includes my answers regarding REA was inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of August 21 by Senator MORTON.

In both the letters and the press conference I have pointed out that there has been no reorganization of REA. The request to Mr. Hamil that he consult or discuss with the Director of Agricultural Credit Services applications for loans over $500,000 has not curtailed his authority for final approval on those loans. This action was taken in view of the record volume of applications for REA loans and the many complex problems which have arisen in the administration of that program due to population shifts, increased costs of equipment, machinery and labor, and an increasing demand for more electric current for both farm and nonfarm use.

The changing character of the Nation's countryside is having a marked effect on the territory and electric service requirements of many REA borrowers. City people are moving to the country and building homes. Industry is locating in suburban and rural areas. The REA service territories are losing a good bit of their rural traits. About half of their revenue comes from farm service and the remaining half from nonfarm residences, commercial, and miscellaneous services.

The increasing demand for electric power throughout the country is reflected in constantly increasing demands for REA loans to provide needed facilities. REA loan approvals are keeping pace with this trend as shown by the following table:

Loans approved during year

Fiscal year:
1952	$165,758,731
1953	164,972,662
1954	167,104,100
1955	167,530,430
1956	189,804,800
1957	300,461,514

The request of Mr. Scott to Mr. Hamil that he be given a chance to review the applications for the loans in question was completely compatible with my testimony on Reorganization Plan No. 2. It is in line with the legal authority which exists in the basic law, in the reorganization plan, and in the public notices with respect to that plan which were published in the Federal Register in 1953 and 1954.

In my colloquy with you in the hearings on the reorganization plan held on May 18, 1953, 83d Congress, 1st session, at page 169, you asked whether it was my intention "to leave the REA pretty much as an autonomous organization."

I replied as follows:

"Certainly I do not have in mind weakening the service which REA is rendering. I think it is very essential, and I do feel that we have selected a good man to help it, and he will be given a pretty free hand, I am sure. But if we have in mind any major changes, certainly we would want to consult with the Congress before we took such steps, because I know there is a very wide interest in that agency, probably as much as in almost any other agency in the Department."

The requirement that these applications be reviewed by the Director of Agricultural Credit Services does not weaken the service which the agency was created by Congress to render. It was not a major change either in policy or in organization. It was not a transfer or an abolition of a function. The authority of the Secretary of Agriculture to make that request of an agency head under his supervision and direction, including REA, existed even before the reorganization plan of 1953 was approved.

REA was created as an independent agency of the Government by the Rural Electrification Act of 1936 (7 U. S. C. 901, 914). Section 1 of the act provided that all of the administration's powers would be exercised by an Administrator. However, that section was substantially modified by section 5 of President Roosevelt's Reorganization Plan No. 11 of 1939 (5 U. S. C., p. 125), which transferred REA and its functions and activities to the Department of Agriculture and provided that such functions and activities "shall be administered in that Department by the Administrator of the Rural Electrification Administration under the general direction and supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture."

It appears that in 1944 a question arose about the making of allotments as required by the act. The Department took the position, with the full legal approval of its solicitor, that the Secretary's duty to supervise and direct the activities of REA not only permitted him to approve the allotments but made it his duty to do so if desirable for the proper operation of the program.

This conclusion was based on decisions of the courts, notably Knight v. United States Land Association (142 U. S. 161), and the decision of the Comptroller General, volume 19, Comptroller General Decisions, page 400. In the Knight case the Supreme Court concluded that the words "direction and supervision" are synonymous with the word "control" and impart broad powers including the power to initiate, guide, superintend, manage, rule, review, notify, and overrule.

In that case the Court was construing words directing the Commissioner of the General Land Office to perform certain functions "under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior." The Court said that the words under discussion are an expression of the power of the Secretary to supervise and control the extensive operations of the land department and then quoted with approval the statement of the Secretary of the Interior as follows:

"The statute in placing the whole business of the Department under the supervision of the Secretary invest him with authority to review, reverse, amend, annul, or affirm all proceedings in the Department."

See also Orchard v. Alexander (157 U. S. 372 (1895)); Cameron v. United States (252 U. S. 450, 460 (1920)); and West v. Standard Oil Company (278 U. S. 200, 220 (1929)).

State court decisions also follow this rule. They have held that the term connote a power to superintend generally together with the incidental authority to regulate and control. Vantongeren v. Heffernan et al. (5 Dak. 180, 38 N. W. 52 (1888)); State ex rel. Board of Transportation v. Fremont, E. & M. V. R. Co. (22 Neb. 313, 35 N. W. 118 (1887)).

The courts apparently do not distinguish between phrases using the word "general" with "direction and supervision" from those where the word "general" is not used. See Great Northern Railway Company v. Snohomish County (93 Pac. 924 (Wash. 1908)).

This conclusion with respect to the Secretary's authority over the Rural Electrification Administration Administrator followed the policy determination of the Department reached in early 1940 in connection with the transfer of the Farm Credit Administration to this Department to be "administered in such Department under the general direction and supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture." The Comptroller General in 19 Comptroller General 400 said:

"Consequently the Farm Credit Administration must be regarded as no longer an independent agency but as an agency within the Department of Agriculture and under the general direction and supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture * * * there would appear to be no authority under existing law for the effecting of such a transfer of authority and responsibility as would amount to a restoration of the Farm Credit Administration to its former status 'an autonomous Federal agency.'"

It seems clear therefore that the request that the Rural Electrification Administrator review certain loans with the Director of Agricultural Credit Services is not the exercise of new authority vested in me by Reorganization Plan No. 2 of 1953. Moreover, it is a step which is well within the information given to the Congress and the public at the time Reorganization Plan No. 2 of 1953 was presented, approved, and made effective.

The Administrator of the Farmers Home Administration is not only requested to discuss major loan problems with the Director of Agricultural Credit Services, but the law requires that all special livestock loans over $50,000 must be approved by the Secretary of Agriculture because of the major problems involved.

Soon after I became Secretary of Agriculture, I alined the agencies of the Department into major groups, each group to report to me through designated officials of the Department. During the Senate hearings on Reorganization Plan No. 2, I furnished and there was included in the hearings two charts showing the organization of the Department effective January 21, 1953, and as amended March 10, 1953. The January 21 chart shows the Farm Credit Administration, the Farmers Home Administration, and the Rural Electrification Administration grouped under "Agricultural credit" and that these agencies are to report through the head of that group. The March 10 chart shows substantially the same arrangement (pp. 142 and 144, hearings before the Subcommittee on Reorganization of the Committee on Government Operations, United States Senate, on Reorganization Plan No. 2 of 1953 and S. Res. 100 disapproving Reorganization Plan No. 2, 1953, May 12, 13, and 18, 1953 (other references to hearings contained in this letter are to hearings before this subcommittee)).

By Secretary's memorandum 1320, dated January 21, 1953, all employees of the Department were advised that "agency and office heads within each group will report to their respective group head. * * * The Secretary and the Under Secretary meeting jointly with the major group heads and the Solicitor will consider matters of policy determination and long-range planning. * * * This organizational arrangement will make possible closer coordination of related activities and will centralize responsibility for consideration and determination of operating problems and other matters requiring departmental attention within each group." A copy of this memorandum was furnished the subcommittee and appears in the hearings at pages 140–141.

As you are aware, Reorganization Plan No. 2 of 1953 transferred to the Secretary of Agriculture all of the functions of the heads of the agencies with which it dealt, including REA. However, on August 28, 1953, I issued, and there was published in the Federal Register of that date (18 F. R. 5155), a delegation to each Assistant Secretary and to the Director of Agricultural Credit Services the authority to exercise general direction and supervision over the agencies of the department designated in such delegation. The delegation also provides that nothing therein shall "preclude the Secretary of Agriculture from exercising any of the powers and functions or from performing any of the duties herein conferred."

This was implemented by Secretary's memorandum 1320, supplement 2, dated September 18, 1953, which directed the agencies of the Department to report to designated Assistant Secretaries or, in the case of the agencies grouped under Agriculture Credit Services to report to the director. This was in line with my delegation of August 28, 1953.

On October 13, 1953, my office issued a press release outlining a proposed reorganization of the Department to which was attached an announcement of intention to reorganize and a chart showing the Rural Electrification Administration grouped with other agencies under Agricultural Credit, under an Assistant to the Secretary, under the Secretary. (The Office of Assistant to the Secretary in Charge of Agricultural Credit is now known as the "Director of Agricultural Credit Service.")

The assignment of functions to the agencies under the reorganization plan was published in the Federal Register for January 6, 1954 (19 F. R. 74). Among other things this assignment provides:

"No delegation or authorization prescribed in this document shall preclude the Secretary from exercising any of the powers or functions or from performing any of the duties conferred herein and any such delegation or authorization is subject at all times to withdrawal or amendment by the Secretary. No delegation or authorization prescribed in this document shall preclude the exercise of any delegation or authorization otherwise provided to the Under Secretary, Assistant Secretaries, Administrative Assistant Secretary, or assistant to the Secretary for Agricultural Credit, or to the staff agencies as provided in section 112 hereof. * * * The head of each agency (1) will maintain close working relationships with the officer to whom he reports, (2) will keep him advised with respect to major problems and developments, and (3) will discuss with him proposed action involving major policy questions or other important considerations or questions, including matters involving relationships with other agencies of this Department, other Federal agencies, or other governmental or private organizations or groups."

I hope these comments answer the questions you have raised regarding any reported recent reorganization or major policy change in REA.

In your letter of August 22 you assign as one reason for the proposed hearing the necessity of this Department providing the Congress with its official position on any proposed changes in the policy of the agency which are contrary to the intent of the Congress. We, of course, would not initiate any changes which are contrary to the intent of Congress and we would be the first to suggest, as required by the reorganization plan, that we discuss with the Congress any major changes proposed to take effect in the future.

In these circumstances, there would be no information we could give in the proposed hearing which has not heretofore been given in previous letters, the press conference of which you have a transcript, or in this reply.

I know you will give careful consideration to the additional information about the working arrangements we have with regard to REA and the legal and administrative justification for them that I have pointed out in this letter.

After you have had a chance to study this communication it would be most helpful if you would let me know if there are any procedures or policies being followed by the Department in the REA loan program with which you do not agree.

Sincerely yours,

E. T. Benson,
Secretary.

Summary of Attached Letter

1. Senator Humphrey's questions have been discussed in previous letters of the Secretary and the Under Secretary, and in the Secretary's press conference of August 20. (See excerpts from press conference at pp. 15469–15470, Congressional Record of August 21, 1957.)

2. The request of the Director of Agricultural Credit Services to review loan applications of over $500,000 has not changed the REA Administrator's authority to decide whether the loan will be made.

3. The request for review was made because of the growing complexities of the REA program and the record volume of loans.

4. The request was not a major change in organization, policy, or functions.

(Note.—Major changes in organization or functions require "appropriate advance publice notice." See 5 U. S. C., supp. IV, 511; sec. 4 (b) of plan No. 2 of 1953.)

5. The request is not contrary to the Secretary's testimony on plan No. 2.

6. President Roosevelt's Reorganization Plan No. 2 of 1939 gave the Secretary "general direction and supervision" of REA and the courts have held that these words are synonymous with "control." See also volume 19, Comptroller General Decisions, page 400.

7. In 1944 the Secretary of Agriculture exercised the authority given by the 1939 plan to approve certain allotments under the REA Act.

8. The FHA Administrator discusses major problems with the Director of Agricultural Credit Services; certain loans must by law be approved by the Secretary.

9. Reorganization Plan No. 2 of 1953 transferred all of the authority of the REA Administrator to the Secretary.

10. The notices or reorganization under plan No. 2 published in the Federal Register, and the delegations and redelegations of authority made under it stated that the Administrator of REA would function subject to the "general direction and supervision of the Secretary."

11. The Secretary will give advance notice of any major changes proposed to be made under plan No. 2 required by the plan.

12. The Senator is asked to inform the Secretary of any REA loan policies or procedures with which he disagrees.

Urges Stronger GOP Leadership in 1958

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CLEVELAND M. BAILEY

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the Congressional Record, may I call attention to the leadership on the other side of the aisle that the 2d session of the 85th Congress be prepared to meet the issues facing the Nation and to act promptly on legislation that concerns the general welfare.

I very humbly suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Martin] and his able lieutenants that they have it in their power to enable us to do our job next year and to adjourn by the statutory date.

One of the reasons why it has been necessary for this Congress to remain in session has been, in my opinion, the vacillation on important issues in the White House beginning with the budget and ending with the civil-rights bill. We have seen a series of statements and pleas on the part of the President and his spokesmen that force us to revise the old "off again—on again, Finnegan" metaphor as obsolete and ineffective. Normally here in the Congress we can meet and resolve the great issues on a basis of Democratic and Republican position as the springboard. Normally we look to the President as setting the position for his party.

That has been true for as long as I can remember. There was never any doubt in the minds of any that when Presidents Roosevelt and Truman spoke that was the Democratic position. When President Eisenhower speaks, about all we can conclude is that what he says is the position of the individual who last had his ear before he spoke.

It has gotten so that we may remain confident that if we do not like the Eisenhower position we can just wait 5 minutes, and, like the weather, it will change.

So, my suggestion to the gentleman from Massachusetts and his able lieutenants is that they come here in January prepared in a series of special orders to give us the Republican position on these major problems and that the membership of the Congress consider these as the real Republican position so that we may proceed to the important business of legislation, and debate these matters from that standpoint.

Mr. Speaker, I want to make it perfectly clear that I am not suggesting to my good friends that they seize the leadership of the Republican Party; I am merely suggesting that they step in and fill a void. The President has abdicated this leadership, and since the Republican Party is in charge of the administration, it is to the best interest of the country to have someone within that party fill this void. We shall then know where we are and we will not have to stand by and see our friends across the aisle embarrassed when the White House, in one of its sudden about-faces, pulls the rug from under them. I think they should weave the rug upon which they shall stand.

Statement by Hon. John W. McCormack, of Massachusetts

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN W. McCORMACK

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, under permission to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, I include a statement recently made by me to the press and the radio.

I make the further observation that if President Eisenhower and the present administration become firm and remain consistent in the foreign policy which the President and the administration establish, it will receive stronger support from the Congress and the American people.

The statement follows:

STATEMENT BY CONGRESSMAN JOHN W. McCORMACK, DEMOCRAT, MASSACHUSETTS, MAJORITY LEADER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

I consider it highly inadvisable as the price for letting American newspapermen into Red China that we allow Red Chinese spies, under the guise of being newspapermen, to enter the United States. The situation is embarrassing enough for us without capitulating to the Red Chinese this form of tribute.

As a matter of fact, there are many who felt it unwise to permit American correspondents to enter into Red China. Such action gives them a superior status and a privilege that no other American possesses. As citizens they are not superior to others. But, more important, we remember that not so many years ago, when some American correspondents went into the then Communist part of China, they told the American people that Mao and his kind were not Communists, but were progressives seeking agrarian reforms through democratic means.

At that time, those correspondents certainly "brainwashed" the American people. I shall assume that they did not intend to do so, but they helped the Chinese Reds immeasurably many times more effectively than the Red Chinese could have helped themselves.

For President Eisenhower and the State Department to make this kind of a deal and let a group of Chinese newspapermen, who, we know, are nothing but spies, come into our country is indefensible. It would be a crime against our national interest.

Everyone knows that such Chinese Reds would be spies. They would operate with clever threats and other means upon the loyal American Chinese. They would also have an adverse effect upon anti-Communist Chinese in other lands.

Instead of weak and vacillating actions, President Eisenhower and the present administration had better get firm, and instead of wavering, be consistent.

Our Government should definitely state, and stand by it, that spies from Red China under the guise of newspapermen will not be admitted into the United States.

Statement by Senator Wiley on His Activities During 1st Session of 85th Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ALEXANDER WILEY

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a statement on my activities during the 1st session of the 85th Congress.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

In what fields was our senior Senator, ALEXANDER WILEY, active during the 1st session of the 85th Congress?

What legislation did he introduce?

What happened to this legislation?

On what other general matters has he been striving for the interests of Wisconsin and the Nation?

These are some questions which the people of our State have a right to ask.

And they are questions which I am more than pleased to answer.

DOZENS OF BILLS OFFERED BY SENATOR WILEY

During the 1st session, which began in January and which concluded on August 30, I was pleased to introduce dozens of bills affecting our State and Nation.

Some of these bills, I introduced solely as an individual Senator. Others, I cosponsored with other Senators.

I am glad to say that some of these bills were successfully enacted into public law. Others are still pending in Senate committees.

SENATE RECEIVES THOUSANDS OF BILLS

This is what usually happens considering the mass of Congressional legislation.

All told, some 3,000 bills were introduced in 1957 by the 96 Senators. Naturally, only a fraction of the 3,000 bills were actually acted upon in the first session, and for that matter, will be acted upon even in the second session.

When the Senate reconvenes next year, I will, however, be active in advancing as many as possible of the delayed bills which are still pending in committees.

MANY OTHER ACTIVITIES OF SENATOR WILEY

Of course, a Senator's activities are by no means confined merely to introducing bills.

As my readers know, it is my privilege to serve as senior Republican member on the Senate Foreign Relations and Senate Judiciary Committees.

On those committees, I work on a vast amount of legislation in domestic and foreign affairs.

TWO HUNDRED TO THREE HUNDRED LETTERS PER DAY FROM HOME

In addition, in each day's mail from Wisconsin, comes an average of from 200 to 300 letters, postal cards, and telegrams.

These cover matters affecting individual constituents throughout our State, as well as individual communities.

I am always happy to act upon this correspondence and to fulfill individual and public needs.

It would not be possible to list all of the many subjects about which folks write. But I might say that my Wisconsin correspondence includes everything from the problems of Wisconsin men in the Armed Forces to the pension needs of elderly citizens, veterans' claims, National Guard and reservists' problems, river and habor projects, passports for Wisconsin travelers overseas, loan applications by Wisconsin small companies to the Small Business Administration, problems of State agencies in Madison in connection with Federal agencies, city, and county problems, and a vast variety of other issues.

SENATOR WILEY'S TWOFOLD AIMS

My aim always is twofold:

(a) To seek justice and equity for the individual.

(b) To seek fulfillment of community needs.

Consider item (b). What does serving our States, communities, and areas really mean? Well, take the field of transportation. Serving Badger transportation needs means securing still better roads for Wisconsin, more modern airports and frequent airplane service, adequate railroad service, expanded port development.

HOW ELSE WISCONSIN IS SERVED

Serving Wisconsin, too, means promoting Wisconsin's tourist industry (which brings in $400 million in income per year), advancing the cause of conservation (fish and wildlife), helping to attract new industries to Wisconsin so as to help increase employment and payrolls.

Serving Wisconsin, too, means helping to boost consumption of dairy products—the eating and drinking of 17 billion pounds of milk produced by our State's dairy farmers each year.

YOUR SENATOR FIGHTS BAD BILLS

"Serving our State" means fighting for good legislation and opposing bad legislation.

Thus, during 1957, I battled successfully against such evil bills as:

(a) The natural gas rate increase bill—which would raise the cost of fuel used in your home and office (400,000 Wisconsinites depend on natural gas).

(b) The Chicago water steal bill which would lower Great Lakes shipping capacity.

Both of these dangerous bills still face us. Both must be continually combated.

So, too, I fought to help bring in Canadian natural gas to our State, so as to lower fuel costs and increase fuel supply. I battled against those who are trying to sabotage the import of much-needed Canadian gas.

THE WILEY-SPONSORED BILLS

But, now, let's turn to the Wiley bills as such, bills which I personally sponsored or cosponsored.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

I'm delighted to say that H. R. 5728 was successfully enacted as Public Law 85-108, so as to permit completion of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Seaway.

I had personally cosponsored the companion bill, S. 1174. This legislation eased seaway financial burdens by broadening the borrowing authority of the Seaway Development Corporation and authorizing the deferment of interest payments on borrowing. This particular bill was a natural followup on the Wiley seaway law itself, Public Law 358, 83d Congress, which achieved victory for the seaway after Wisconsin's 30-year battle.

CIVIL RIGHTS

One of the great landmark actions of the 85th Congress, 1st session, was the enactment of a civil-rights bill for the first time in 82 years. Naturally, I was pleased to vote for the final version of this bill, H. R. 6127, even though amendments had unfortunately weakened it.

Early in the session, I had been pleased to cosponsor one version of this bill in the form of S. 83, as offered principally by Senator Dirksen.

ADVANCING WORLD PEACE

World peace—that is our greatest single goal.

I was happy to concentrate, therefore, on this foremost of all goals in this session, just as I have done in previous sessions.

And so, I cosponsored the famous Eisenhower doctrine resolution. It has helped assure peace for the troubled Middle East.

With Senator Green, chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, I specifically cosponsored Senate Joint Resolution 19. It authorized the President to undertake economic and military cooperation with nations in the Middle East in order to assist in the strengthening and defense of their independence against Communist aggression.

Our resolution was overwhelmingly approved by both Houses.

Another crucial bill which I cosponsored with Senator Green, our committee chairman, was S. 2130, the 1958 mutual security bill.

This bill, too, was successfully enacted into public law, thereby continuing worldwide cooperation against the Communist menace.

PROTECTING FBI FILES

Another landmark of the 1st session was enactment of the bill to protect the integrity of FBI files against Communist fishing expeditions.

This bill prevents Red snooping for material, while at the same time assuring defendants the right to necessary relevant information.

With Senator O'Mahoney as sponsor, I had cosponsored an earlier version of this bill, S. 2377. It amended chapter 223, title 18, United States Code, to provide for the production of relevant statements and reports of witnesses.

BYRD ANTARCTIC COMMISSION BILL

One of the bills of which I am deeply proud is the Byrd Antarctic Commission bill, S. 2189. I had introduced this bill, with 22 cosponsors.

I believe that if this bill is enacted, it will become one of the great milestones of the 85th Congress. Its purpose is to help America protect its national interest in that vast region of the globe. Thus far only about 1 percent of the Antarctic has been explored.

It was a pleasure for me recently to be present at a hearing held before the House of Representatives Interior Committee on a companion version to the Wiley bill.

I earnestly hope that this Byrd Antarctic Commission, to be named for the late, great Rear Adm. Richard E. Byrd, will be successfully established next year.

TAX REFORM

One of the most important bills which I introduced was S. 769. Its purpose is to establish a Hoover-style Federal Tax Commission. Such a Commission would make a top-to-bottom review of the whole tax structure of the United States—income taxes, nuisance excise taxes, corporate taxes, etc. Fourteen Senators joined with me in cosponsoring this bill. Only through a comprehensive survey such a Commission could make will we ever get lasting and thorough reform of our hodge-podge tax system.

IMMIGRATION REFORM

At long last, the bottleneck in reform of our immigration laws has begun to be remedied. President Eisenhower's suggestions for changes have been followed—but only in small part so far. Nevertheless a beginning was made.

Earlier this year I was happy to cosponsor with Senator Dirksen the Eisenhower bill for amendment of the McCarran-Walter law, in the form of S. 1006.

MISCELLANEOUS BILLS

For purposes of brevity, let us now just look down an outline list of additional legislation which I sponsored or cosponsored.

FARM BILLS COSPONSORED

S. 2408, milk consumption (Senator Thye sponsor), to authorize a special milk program for veterans and the Armed Forces, and an accelerated brucellosis eradication program.

S. 1680, cranberries (Senator Saltonstall sponsor), to amend the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, to include cranberries for canning or freezing.

S. 2306, research (Senator Curtis sponsor), to provide for the increased use of agricultural products for industrial purposes.

S. 1699, dairy studies, to provide for the establishment of a dairy research laboratory. (This bill, like the three preceding bills, went to the Agriculture Committee.)

This particular Wiley bill is one for which I have been striving for many years, as my readers may recall.

SCHOOL AND TEACHER AID BILLS COSPONSORED

S. 1298, area vocational aid (Senator Hill sponsor), to assist States in providing needed area vocational education programs. (Labor and Public Welfare Committee.)

S. 889, school building (Senator Smith of New Jersey sponsor), to authorize a 4-year emergency program of Federal assistance to States and communities to enable them to increase public elementary and secondary school construction. (Labor and Public Welfare Committee.)

The House, unfortunately, defeated the companion version to this bill.

S. 1640, teachers' tax deductions, to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 so as to allow a teacher to deduct from gross income up to $600 a year of necessary expenses incurred by him to further his or her education. (Finance Committee.)

SMALL BUSINESS

S. 11, equality of opportunity (Senator Kefauver sponsor), to amend the vital Robinson-Patman Act by protecting small business against a current loophole in the antimonopoly laws.

We succeeded in reporting this important bill favorably from the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee, but it became bottled up in the full committee, unfortunately.

S. 150, small business tax relief (Senator Fulbright sponsor), to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 so as to adjust corporate normal tax and surtax rates, thereby giving a much needed break for small business (Finance Committee).

CONSERVATION

S. 555, Hells Canyon (Senator Morse sponsor), to advance conservation and electricity production by authorizing the construction, operation, and maintenance of the Federal Hells Canyon Dam on the Snake River between Idaho and Oregon.

The Senate passed this bill, which I cosponsored, but the House unfortunately killed it.

S. 1176, wilderness system (Senator Humphrey sponsor), to establish a wilderness preservation system so as to protect our outdoor heritage (Interior and Insular Affairs Committee).

AID TO MUNICIPALITIES

S. 967, payments in lieu (Senator Humphrey sponsor), to authorize the payment to local governments of sums in lieu of taxes and special assessments with respect to certain Federal real property (Government Operations Committee).

ANTIJUVENILE DELINQUENCY

S. 1455, juvenile delinquency grants to strengthen and improve State and local programs to combat and control juvenile delinquency. (Labor and Public Welfare Committee).

As a member of the Senate Juvenile Delinquency Subcommittee I am naturally especially interested in cutting down the staggering toll of crime among young people. More than 1 million youngsters are getting in trouble with the law each year, unfortunately.

ELECTION PARTICIPATION

S. 1406, political contribution deductions to encourage mass participation in election financing by allowing individuals to deduct for Federal income-tax purposes $50 of political contributions made each year to candidates for elective Federal offices (Finance Committee).

GREAT LAKES REGION

S. 1416, Lake States compact (Senator McNamara), granting Congress' consent to a Great Lakes Basin compact.

MENOMINEE INDIANS

S. 2131 (Senator Watkins cosponsor), to delay for 2 necessary years the date for submission of plan for future control of property and transfer of the trust property of the Menominee Tribe (Interior and Insular Affairs Committee).

Unfortunately, this bill failed of passage because of a parliamentary tieup in the last hours of the Senate session.

BOOST FOR OLDSTERS

S. 1688, fair break on pensions, to amend section 203 of the Social Security Act to increase the amount of earnings (from $1,200 to $1,800) which elderly individuals are permitted to earn without suffering deductions from their benefits. (Finance Committee.)

MISCELLANEOUS BILLS

Were space to permit, I could list literally dozens of other bills which I have offered.

These include bills to strengthen our patent system, budgetary reform, tariff legislation, foreign policy, and many others.

Before introducing each of these bills, I test them by this standard: "Does the bill serve the public interest?"

Serving you, the people, is always my goal. Some bills may involve only a relative handful of people. Other bills involve all 170 million American people. But always, legislation must definitely serve some worthwhile need or goal on behalf of America.

YOUR REACTIONS INVITED

I hope that my readers have found this report rewarding.

I cordially invite any questions which you may have in mind, after reading through this report.

It is not intended as a complete statement of what I have sought to achieve during the months of January through August 1957. But it does perhaps give you an inkling as to some of my varied activities.

In order to make it complete, I would have had, for example, to list the literally hundreds of issues which I voted upon on the Senate floor. I would have had to list the innumerable official phone calls to Federal agencies and to folks back home on their problems, the many talks with visiting constituents, and with correspondents of press, radio, and television, the committee hearings participated in, as well as other endeavors.

But I think that this report, however limited, does give you an idea of what your senior Senator has been striving for in the direction of prosperity and justice in America and a just and lasting peace in the world.

National Television Week

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ELIZABETH KEE

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mrs. KEE. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following copy of Keenotes:

KEENOTES

(By Representative ELIZABETH KEE)

A letter from Mr. Thad H. Brown, vice president for television, National Association of Radio and Television Broadcasters, invites me to join with the rest of the country in a salute to the American system of television broadcasting as part of National Television Week, which is being observed September 8 through 14, this year.

I am very happy to do so and herewith add my own thanks to the many men and women who daily contribute so much to our enjoyment of the entertainment, and our profit from the wealth of information, which this modern miracle of American engineering and scientific skills has brought into our homes.

A fact sheet thoughtfully provided by the national association gives some truly impressive statistics about the television industry which—it is hard to believe—is only a little more than 10 years old. In this brief span, 40 million families have invested the substantial sum of $17 billion in TV receivers. About 90 percent of the public has been brought within range of at least one of TV's 479 existing stations and some 75 percent have a choice of four or more channels from which to select programs of education, information, and entertainment.

Each year, we are told, an estimated $200 million worth of free time is allocated to public-service programs; and broadcasters, last year, supported more than 115 major national public-service campaigns. Brief mentions on sponsored programs of worthy public-service causes have become a common practice. Through the service of local television stations—which is frequently contributed—effective support has been raised to meet many community needs, such as the construction of a new hospital or library, for example; while other free services warn of bad road conditions, traffic congestion, and other local emergencies.

To this list of noteworthy accomplishments, the national association might well have added another solid achievement of the TV industry in the national interest. Although still in its infancy, this fast-growing industry has created new employment—both direct and indirect—for hundreds of thousands of men and women throughout the country. Directly, there are the jobs connected with the manufacture, sales, and service of TV sets—the planning, production, and televising of TV programs. And then there are all the jobs created by the demand for those byproducts of TV viewing which include everything from TV packaged suppers to snack tables and revolving chairs.

Somewhat disconcerting, however, if not downright alarming, is another statistic furnished by the National Association of Radio and Television Broadcasters. American families, it is declared, "have come to spend more than 5 hours a day viewing the average set—more time than is spent in any other single activity except working and sleeping." At this rate, the potential of this new medium of mass communication to influence the lives and thoughts of the American people is unbounded. In the wrong hands, it could be used as a terrible weapon of propaganda to wreak immeasurable havoc upon the social, political, and economic life of the Nation.

Indeed, one cannot remain entirely unaware of the faint odor of oil and other special interests in some of the programs sponsored by big business which attempt to show the vast benefits which the American people derive from the importation of foreign products—say, crude and residual fuel oil, for instance—in exchange for our own exports. This is true, of course, only to the extent that our domestic industries do not suffer. In such instances, the public should be able to hear both sides of the story and I have long felt that West Virginia's coal, chemicals, glass, and pottery industries could do with a little television promoting on their own account.

Actually, I have been a little amused that the National Association of Radio and Television Broadcasters is not above a little propagandizing on its own part. In the fact sheet, which presumably went to all Members of Congress, it is stated: "Television has grown and thrived under the free American system. With a minimum of Government regulation, it has shown itself to be responsive and responsible to the American people." Even a Member of Congress can take a hint, you know.

On the whole, however, those who control and direct the television networks—from major network to local station—have, I feel, proved themselves fully alert to their great responsibility as a major source of information for the American public. In the televising of such important events the Kefauver committee's investigation of organized crime in 1951, the Army-McCarthy hearings in 1954, the Republican and Democratic National Conventions in 1956, and the present Senate racketeering investigation, the industry has rendered a great public service.

So despite singing commercials—with sincere thanks to our many fine commentators, too numerous to mention here, who accurately report events upon the national and international scenes—and in grateful acknowledgement of the many pleasant hours (but, by no means, five per day) which I have spent before my television set—I am more than pleased to join with the rest of the country in this salute to our American system of television broadcasting and those who make it work, during this National Television Week.

Statement by Senator Thurmond

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. STROM THURMOND

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a statement I have prepared.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR STROM THURMOND

In view of remarks made on the floor of the Senate today, and later amended to appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, by Senator LONG, of Louisiana, I feel that it is necessary for me to issue a statement.

I want to review briefly the course of events which led to my extended speech in the Senate on Wednesday and Thursday.

At the final caucus of the southern Senators on Saturday, August 24, it was generally agreed that an organized extended debate would not be held. However, it was also agreed that each Senator was on his own to oppose the bill as best he could. From the beginning, I made up my mind that it was my duty to oppose the bill strongly. Last weekend I prepared an address from the material I had been assembling for a long time, although I still had not decided how long I would speak.

After further consideration of the so-called civil-rights bill and the compromise proposed by the House, I came to the conclusion that I should make a long speech against the bill. Also, I came to the conclusion that further consideration should be given to the question of whether organized extended debate should be conducted by the southern Senators.

When I arrived at this latter conclusion on Wednesday, I went to Senator RUSSELL's office and told him that I planned to make a long speech and suggested that he call the southern Senators into session again to consider the advisability of an organized effort. Senator RUSSELL stated that if a majority of the southern Senators requested him to do so, he would call them back for another caucus, but, that in lieu of such requests, he would not call another caucus in view of the previous understanding on Saturday that each Senator would follow his own course.

Status of Soil-Conservation and Flood-Prevention Projects

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. W. R. POAGE

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Speaker, the 1st session of the 85th Congress has come to an end with some eight flood-prevention watershed projects which have been approved by the Department of Agriculture and still undelivered to the Speaker. The law places primary responsibility for the consideration of these flood-prevention projects on the Secretary of Agriculture but the delay in handling these projects is not the fault of the Department of Agriculture nor the Secretary. These are projects that have been approved by the Department of Agriculture. They are projects every one of which filed its original application more than 2 years ago. They are projects which should have been submitted to the Congress at the session which is now adjourned.

The law provides that after the Secretary of Agriculture and the interested local organization have agreed on a plan for works of improvement—that is, after the Secretary has approved a work plan—that it shall be transferred for interagency review. In other words, it shall be reviewed by the other agencies of government which may be concerned, depending on its cost, and so forth. Most of these projects are reviewed by the Corps of Army Engineers, many by the Bureau of Reclamation, and so forth. The law does not authorize these related agencies to either approve or disapprove projects but only to review and comment. They are then sent to the Bureau of the Budget which again has only reviewing authority and which is charged with transmitting the projects to the Congress. The law says:

> The views and recommendations of the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of the Army, if received by the Secretary of Agriculture prior to the expiration of the above 30-day period, shall accompany the plan transmitted by the Secretary of Agriculture to the Congress through the President.

This review is merely that there may be an orderly record of all such projects. Surely, it is not necessary for one arm of the executive branch—the Bureau of the Budget—to exercise a veto power over another arm of the same executive—the Department of Agriculture. Under the law, these projects may not be held for review more than 30 days but some of them were referred for such interagency review nearly 6 months ago. A list of the projects and the dates on which they were received and transmitted is included herewith:

Watershed	Application received in Washington	Planning assistance authorized	Work plan received in Washington	Transmitted for interagency review	Transmitted to Bureau of the Budget	Transmitted to Congress
Abbotts Creek, N. C.	Jan. 4, 1955	Mar. 18, 1955	Feb. 20, 1957	Mar. 25, 1957	June 5, 1957	----------
Big Sandy, Colo.	Dec. 27, 1954	Aug. 25, 1955	May 31, 1957	June 6, 1957	Aug. 2, 1957	----------
Deep Creek, N. C.	June 9, 1955	July 18, 1955	May 21, 1957	May 27, 1957	July 31, 1957	----------
Elm River, N. Dak.	Feb. 7, 1955	Apr. 15, 1595	Feb. 25, 1957	Mar. 14, 1957	May 28, 1957	----------
High Pine Creek, Ala.	Apr. 11, 1955	do	Apr. 22, 1957	Apr. 26, 1957	July 3, 1957	----------
Knob Creek, Tex.	Aug. 16, 1955	May 14, 1956	May 28, 1957	May 31, 1957	July 22, 1957	----------
Swan Buffalo Creek, N. Dak.	Feb. 7, 1955	Apr. 15, 1955	Mar. 8, 1957	Apr. 3, 1957	May 28, 1957	----------
York Creek, Tex.	Aug. 16, 1955	Oct. 1, 1956	June 10, 1957	June 14, 1957	Aug. 2, 1957	----------

I do not know why all of these projects have been held in express violation of the intent of Congress. The Agriculture Committee made a formal request of the Bureau of the Budget to give us the detailed reasons for the delay of each of these projects. We have been unable to secure the desired information. The Bureau of the Budget has seen fit to simply tell us that they were retained for further study. We had requested that the projects be transmitted before the adjournment of Congress in order that congressional approval which is required by the law might be forthcoming. Our requests have been ignored.

Since it has been impossible to get a specific statement we have naturally resorted to speculation and to rumor. The reports that reach our committee are to the effect that at least some of these projects are being held up because the Bureau of the Budget feels that there should be substantial local contribution on the cost of the construction of the necessary works of improvement. The law was specifically changed by Congress just last year to eliminate the necessity of farmer contribution to the cost to the needed water detention structures. The Bureau of the Budget may not feel that this congressional action was wise, but it is the law, and I must confess that I am somewhat astonished that it should be thus ignored.

In an effort to justify some assessment of the farmers, it has been suggested that at least some of these projects, including Knob Creek in Texas, are actually drainage projects and that the problem is one of drainage for which there should be local payments. To suggest that it is necessary to drain an area which never has any excess water except immediately after a flood, seems to me to be straining a point beyond reason. I can see absolutely nothing to this whole procedure except a clear-cut determination to write a new set of rules for flood prevention projects. The law confines the rulemaking power of the Executive to rules needed "to carry out the purposes of this act and to assure coordination of the work authorized by the act." I think Congress, not the Bureau of the Budget, has the right to establish the rules of eligibility and of referral. Congress has established these rules, and among such rules it seems to me that Congress established was one which was at least intended to require the Bureau of the Budget to transmit the proposed work plan to the Congress within a period of 30 days. This, in most cases, the Bureau has not done. It is true that there are probably 2 of the projects which were only held 29 days prior to adjournment of Congress.

I realize that this program is new. I realize that the law is not absolutely clear. I realize that the Bureau of the Budget is confronted with many difficult problems. I do not want to be unfair to anyone but I do want the people who are so vitally interested in the development of these projects to understand just why they are being held up. I want them to know that the Agriculture Committee has passed upon every project that has been submitted to it and has done so without delay. I hope that the Bureau of the Budget will see fit to forward these projects to the Congress on the first day of the next session. I know that if it does that the Agriculture Committee will act promptly. If it does not, I know of no course for us to pursue except to attempt new legislation which will remove the existing roadblocks which have been thrown up in the path of the development of these projects.

Discussion of Intergovernmental Relations From the Viewpoint of the Municipality

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HENRY S. REUSS
OF WISCONSIN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. REUSS. Mr. Speaker, recently I inserted in the Record a copy of the statement of Patrick Healy, Jr., executive director of the American Municipal Association, before the Intergovernmental Relations Subcommittee of the House Government Operations Committee on July 30, 1957. Following Mr. Healy's prepared statement, there were some interesting colloquies between Mr. Healy and members of the subcommittee. Under leave to extend my remarks, I include them as follows:

Mr. Fountain. Thank you, Mr. Healy, for an excellent statement.

Mrs. Dwyer.

Mrs. Dwyer. Yes, Mr. Chairman. I was quite interested in what you had to say, sir, on sewage disposal plants and water pollution being a national problem. Why then do municipalities on a State level fight air pollution even on a State level and claim it is a municipal problem when pollution of air knows no boundary lines? Why is their position so different in that field? For instance, the State League of Municipalities in the State of New Jersey opposed a provision or proposal by the State legislature that we have State laws on air pollution.

The League of Municipalities opposed that and said it was a municipal problem. I mean, I can see a similarity between water pollution and air pollution.

Mr. Healy. I am not prepared to answer why the people of New Jersey took that position. I do know that in other States it is considered a State problem, and an interstate problem.

In California, for example, where the problem is particularly acute in some areas, they have asked for expanded Federal research into air pollution control, and they welcome some outside assistance.

Mrs. Dwyer. Would your association then feel that it now was a Federal problem rather than a State problem? I mean, have you taken any position on that as you have on water pollution of streams?

Mr. Healy. Yes, we have. I can't put my finger on it right now, but we have asked for the Federal Government to continue the policies of Federal responsibility for research and technical services, financial assistance to States and municipalities and enforcement of interstate pollution controls.

Mrs. Dwyer. Sir, were you interested at all in the first interstate pact that was made on the study of air pollution beween New York and New Jersey?

Mr. Healy. No; we did not participate in that.

Mrs. Dwyer. Your league was opposed to it actually in both States.

Mr. Healy. I see.

Mrs. Dwyer. That is why I wondered on your water pollution how far you have come along in anything on air pollution as well as water pollution.

Mr. Healy. Our position so far has been mainly to recommend Federal participation in research and technical assistance in air pollution, but in the case of water pollution, we have gone further and recommended and the Congress has seen fit to adopt the principle of Federal aid for construction of sewage-treatment plants.

Mrs. DWYER. In the city of Elizabeth we built our own sewage-disposal plants, and in the city of Plainfield, which is a much wealthier city in my own district they waited until they got a Federal grant, so I am not so sure that that always works on an incentive basis, because sometimes towns that are not as financially able go ahead and do the job that needs to be done for the town without waiting for Federal grants.

There is just one more question I would like to ask. Do you agree with the mayor who was here this morning from Milwaukee, that the Federal Government is in a better position as it concerns collecting taxes; that it is in a financially better position than the States to do the job of civil defense? For instance, he also mentioned school construction.

Would you agree with that when we know that the Federal debt today is almost $274 billion and the money really comes from the States, plus the fact that in school construction it was, I think, brought out that actually there are only seven States that were in real need of moneys for school construction? That is an involved question. Do you follow my reasoning?

Mr. HEALY. I think I see what you are getting at. Our American Municipal Association has taken no stand on the matter of Federal aid for school construction, but I think Mayor Zeidler this morning, in referring to the superior ability of the Federal Government's tax resources was referring to the interstate character of industry today, the fact that a corporation, while it might be located with its home office in a State that has extra-favorable laws, has farflung operations throughout the country or over several States, and that the individual States left to obtain tax revenues from those corporations are not likely to achieve the same success that the Federal Government can.

I think that is more what he was referring to, and as a former State taxman myself, I can agree with that, that it is in that field of taxation that the Federal Government has more resources, is better able to finance government than the States are.

Mrs. DWYER. Do you feel it is because the Federal Government has grabbed those resources from the States where they rightfully belonged?

Mr. HEALY. Well, not entirely. I think, as I pointed out in this testimony, that you have a situation of interstate competition too, and whereas a State may find that it is very desirable to undertake certain governmental services, it may not be willing to finance those services by imposing taxes which they feel might discourage industry from locating in that State, and you have got that continuing process going on to discourage States from assuming their obligations to the public.

Mrs. DWYER. In other words, what you are saying is it is to the benefit of the States to allow the Federal Government to do urban development and slum clearance and sewage disposal plants and civilian defense because on a State level their responsibility is to keep their tax rate down low enough to keep industry within the State and keep the people on the local level happy by thinking their tax rate is not high. Are the States not keeping it low by going to the Federal Government, which is so far away that the people don't realize what the taxes really are?

Mr. HEALY. Well, you can apply that same line of reasoning within the State in State aid for school districts, for example. You could say well, let each school district raise its own money, so the people in that district will know what they are paying for. But they don't do that. Most States now have State aid for schools, and in some cases they have State aid for other activities of local government.

I don't think it is an attempt to try to fool the people into thinking they are getting something for nothing. I think it is an equalization program and recognizing the fact that the State is better able to raise revenue than the local school district is.

Mrs. DWYER. In other words, then your philosophy would be, or would it be—correct me if I am wrong—that the equalization such as we have on the State school aid formula would carry on in the Federal Government for other programs as well that equalize the 48 States on moneys going into the States for urban clearance, and so forth.

Mr. HEALY. I am not advocating it as a means of an equalization program that the Federal Government continue to participate in urban renewal. We advocate that as a means of stimulating urban renewal, as a means of providing Federal leadership which, incidentally, results in about $5 of private capital being spent for every $1 of Government money. It is a terrific program to stimulate private initiative and private action in rebuilding the cities.

For example, in your State of Connecticut, Congressman MAY, New Haven has taken the leadership in this program. This is a stimulating type of action that Federal aid results in.

Also it is a financial participation that we feel would not be there if the cities had to do it alone or if they had to depend on State governments.

We are not suggesting that it is an equalization program. It is just the fiscal facts of life in local government.

Mrs. DWYER. I agree with you on the air program that it has been a very fine thing for the cities of America. I was trying to draw you out what your philosophy was as far as your association is concerned.

Thank you all, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. FOUNTAIN. Mr. MAY.

Mr. MAY. I would like to compliment Mr. Healy on his statement and to perhaps get at the solution to these problems, as I tried to do earlier today.

You say that a lot of your answers to the problem lie in better State legislatures, legislators, more pay, but you have to sell the voters on the virtues of good State government, effectiveness and responsiveness of the State government.

Does your association have any promotional ideas or plans to help do that in the various States as a group?

I know in Connecticut they raised the pay, I think, $100 of the legislators last time. But next door in Massachusetts they work a little longer and they get paid five times as much. There is a great conflict going on in Iowa right now. Perhaps your association is doing something about it throughout the country.

Mr. HEALY. We are not. This is just a personal opinion of mine, as I pointed out here. The association has not undertaken any program to improve, you might say, the caliber of State legislatures.

Mr. MAY. That might be a little difficult. As I look at it, as the two former legislators mentioned this morning, they recognized the problem when they were there. We need everybody in the act.

Mr. FOUNTAIN. You have to put yourself in the position to try to improve your bosses and how they operate.

Mr. HEALY. That is right.

Mr. MAY. Along with the chamber of commerce this morning—maybe they are able to get into more areas than yours—it seems to me we are going to need the support of all kinds of organizations and associations in the country to get some conclusions that will be implemented.

Mr. HEALY. I think our association will give some study to this problem. We discussed it very informally among some of the representatives of the leagues of municipalities this last week and there is quite a bit of interest in this.

When I see both the State legislatures and the Congress in operation, what appeals to me is what a comparison there is. Congress does such a terrific job in the consideration and the passing of legislation that I do not know why the same kind of a job cannot be done at the State level.

Maybe the answer, as I have suggested here, is making it a full-time job. Maybe we should have smaller legislatures and make it full time, like Congress is, professional legislators with adequate staffs and adequate committee staffs and and have a continuing session every year.

City councils do that. They do not have staffs and they are not paid, but they are a continuing body that meets once a week year around. I do not know why the State legislature has to meet only once every 2 years for 60 days.

Mr. MAY. It would seem that the great powers they have over the local governments and with the increased populations and problems and the current discussion of the State programs that ought to be undertaken perhaps by States that they have a long way to go to keep up with the other areas of government.

Mr. HEALY. Yes.

Mr. MAY. Something should be done.

Mr. HEALY. That is right. It is going to take quite an educational program to ever put anything like that over. People's first reaction is "my God, they are in session too long now."

Mrs. DWYER. That is right.

Mr. FOUNTAIN. That is usually the attitudes of the governors.

Mr. HEALY. But actually and seriously the State legislature, I think, is the key to the strengthening of this whole State government process and local governments, therefore.

If the Chamber of Commerce of the United States would take on a project like that to improve the legislative processes, I think they might have a very constructive program. They are the leaders in local businesses and to a large extent have a lot of influence on public opinion. That is the kind of a program they ought to try to get behind instead of arbitrarily wanting to cut out all Federal aid and cut out Federal taxes and leave these things to the State. They do not stop to consider how the States are going to handle them if they have them back again.

Mr. FOUNTAIN. I think we all appreciate the viewpoint of the municipalities as expressed by you, Mr. Healy.

Has your group in any of its meetings ever embarked upon the highly controversial question as to whether or not the Federal Government by virtue of aid in various fields may ultimately get control and as a result of control and continued centralization of power in Washington, because of the inherent dangers in too much centralization might ultimately lead to dictatorship?

Mr. HEALY. We have not considered it from that particular angle.

Mr. FOUNTAIN. I mention that because as we have these discussions, on all of these Federal-aid programs, the significant arguments—and I know I make them myself quite often—are that Federal aid ultimately leads to Federal control and Federal aid will eventually force local governments and people to rely too largely upon that aid and that as a result of Federal control eventually everybody will have to look to Washington and, of course, Washington everyone knows now is a city of bureaucracies. In fact, the other day we were told during the debate on one piece of legislation that the Federal Government has approximately 35,000 advisory committees, allegedly advising somebody in Washington as to how it ought to operate and what it ought to do. That is the reason I asked that question. That seems to be the thing that worries States-righters, so to speak, and there is merit to their position. Then, of course, we in Congress after we have been here a while learn to appreciate the position of those who cannot agree completely with the view of the so-called States-righters because we realize that there are State responsibilities which many times the people in the States are unwilling to accept or simply cannot accept because of fiscal difficulties which you have described.

Mr. HEALY. Well, our association in 1948 and 1949 and 1950-51 adopted various statements on home rule, and one of those statements adopted in 1949 reads as follows:

"The administration of elections, schools, and police must always remain within the control of the States and local governments. Democratic government cannot easily be overthrown by a highly centralized government as long as the elections are local, the educational system under State and local control, and the police are primarily under local jurisdiction. Municipal officials pledge their efforts to retain control in fact as well as in theory under these three important activities."

A lot of thought went into that statement and reflects our position that as long as you retain local control of elections, of education, and of police, we do not fear centralization and too much power in Central Government from Federal-aid programs.

Mr. FOUNTAIN. So long as you do not have Federal control.

Mr. HEALY. That is right.

Mr. FOUNTAIN. With Federal control, it is realistically argued, a few people controlling the reins of Government and the pursestrings could do away with elections, the police forces, and local authorities; is that not right?

Mr. HEALY. That is right, if they have the police.

Mr. FOUNTAIN. That is what happened in Germany and in Japan. That has been the history of dictatorship. There is the continued centralization of power in the hands of a few people, the gradual abolition of rights and privileges of people on the local scene and, eventually, abolition of the right to vote and various other privileges.

Mr. HEALY. That is right.

Mr. FOUNTAIN. No other questions.

Thank you very much.

Mr. Naughton.

Mr. NAUGHTON. Mr. Healy, you made reference to the Federal-State task force that has been appointed by the President and the Governors Conference to examine Federal-State relationships. Is there any representation on that body of the local governments below the State level?

Mr. HEALY. No, sir; there is not at the present time. The task force idea was presented to the governors by the President. The governors accepted it in a resolution and have appointed, I think, 10 of their number to their part of it and the President has made his appointments, but there is no representative of local government on the task force. Our president of the American Municipal Association, who is Mayor Ben West, of Nashville, Tenn., wrote to the president of the Governors Conference on July 11, Gov. William G. Stratton, of Illinois, calling attention to the President's talk at Williamsburg and the task force proposal and if you will permit me, Mr. Chairman, I might read part of that letter.

Mr. FOUNTAIN. You may do so.

Mr. HEALY. "In addition to pointing out that the needs of the Nation's citizens are glaringly evident, the President made it clear that unless action is prompt and effective, urban problems will soon almost defy solution.

"You will recall that in defining the problem and acknowledging the need for prompt and remedial action, the President raised the formidable question as to which level of the government, the city, the county, the State or the Federal Government has the basic responsibility to act. He also pointed out that if all levels must merge their efforts in order to handle the problem effectively, some basis must be established whereby the roles of the specific levels of government can be defined.

"In view of the President's emphasis on urban problems and specific references to current Federal programs effecting the Nation's cities, we assume the work of the task force will be directed largely to an analysis of necessary governmental activities in urban areas. On this basis we feel that participation in the task force by persons directly representing municipal interests would prove of great value to it in conducting the sort of study the President outlined. We are perforce most interested in the task force idea and are anxious to participate in its work actively. We should like to have you know that we stand ready to provide whatever assistance we can in furthering the efforts of the task force to conduct a successful and objective reappraisal of the responsibilities and resources of our local, State, and Federal Government."

By letter dated July 23, Governor Stratton answered our President as follows:

"DEAR MAYOR WEST: This will acknowledge your letter of July 11, informing me of your interest in the President's task-force proposal.

"I have noted your comments with reference to the many pressing urban problems now facing America's cities and I appreciate your thoughtfulness in calling my attention to your desire to actively participate in furthering the work of the task force.

"Sincerely,

"WILLIAM G. STRATTON,
"Governor."

That is typical of the way the cities have been treated. Of course, this may just be an acknowledgement. We hope that the Governor's Conference will call some direct representation of cities into their deliberations.

Mr. FOUNTAIN. I was looking for Mr. MICHEL. I thought he might be able to do something about that.

Mr. NAUGHTON. Mr. Healy, do you know if there is any representation of the legislative branch of State government on this task force?

Mr. HEALY. Well, on the task force itself there is not. They are all governors or Federal officials.

Mr. NAUGHTON. The task force is made up of executive officials from the Federal level and the State level. Since their recommendations, if they are to achieve any great changes or improvements, ultimately must be passed upon by the legislative branch at the State and Federal level, would you have any comment upon whether something might be done to achieve closer coordination with the legislative branch of Government during this study, rather than just presenting the results after its conclusion?

Mr. HEALY. I would hesitate to suggest how that task force should be composed. We have made a suggestion here that urban interests be represented. So far we have not made any impression and I doubt if we would want to suggest anything else in connection with the task force.

Mr. NAUGHTON. I was interested in finding out whether you personally felt there might be value in achieving better coordination and if you had any ideas as to how this might be done?

Mr. HEALY. It would seem that there would be considerable value in having representatives of State legislatures in on the ground floor of the deliberations of that task force, because as you have pointed out, they are the ones that are going to have to pass the laws. My observation has been that many times very well-meaning governors who are men of great stature and broad vision have good ideas which they present to State legislatures that are not adopted, and just as a matter of practical politics it would seem expedient to bring the legislatures into the task force.

Mr. NAUGHTON. Would the last comment apply equally at the Federal level?

Mr. HEALY. I would think so.

Mr. NAUGHTON. Just one other thing.

I think you quoted the philosophy from the Kestnbaum report that the level of government closest to the community should be used in approaching these problems, which need solving. Is it your feeling that the municipality, which I think you characterized as the level of government that is closest to the community, is presently handicapped in solving these problems by restrictions which have either been imposed by or not removed by the States under which the municipalities are organized?

Mr. HEALY. What was the last part of that question?

Mr. NAUGHTON. I wanted to know if it was your feeling that the municipalities, as the level of government closest to the community, have been handicapped in solving these problems because of restrictions that have either been imposed by the States or have not been removed by the States?

Mr. HEALY. Well, actually you mean the Federal programs, Federal aid programs.

Mr. NAUGHTON. Either in connection with Federal aid programs or in solving problems of a general nature.

Mr. HEALY. We feel, as I pointed out, that the present arrangements are quite satisfactory in such programs as Federal aid to airports and urban renewal, where you have a direct Federal-city relationship, and that nothing can be gained by imposing a State channel there, through which Federal aid must pass. Likewise, on all affairs of an urban character, we take the position that the cities are best able to administer local programs without interference from the State. We have quite a strong home-rule statement here that is our guide in this policy and if you care to, I would be glad to read it to you or put it in the record.

Mr. FOUNTAIN. You may leave it with us and we will be glad to include it in the record.

(The document as referred to is as follows:)

"HOME RULE

"1. The rights of home rule should be extended to all American cities. Within the framework of broad constitutional grants and broad statutory grants and limitations, the incorporated municipalities should have the right to adopt and amend their own charters and to pass all other local laws consistent with their powers and not inconsistent with the State constitution and State statutes. The basic right of all people in a democratic society is to govern themselves as long as they can do so without infringing on the rights of others. The extension of home rule would provide a more democratic government in the United States. At the same time, greater responsibility would be fixed on those persons most directly responsible for the conduct of those affairs in government which most directly affect the lives of its citizens. We therefore resolve:

"1-1. The people of an incorporated city should have the right to handle their own affairs under a constitutional grant of power from the State. Home rule would permit cities to amend their own charters by action of the local electors, to choose the activities they wish to perform, and to raise their revenue as they see fit. They should be free to choose their own form of government, not merely to operate a government given them by the State. They should have the right to decide for themselves what services they require, without asking State permission for each new undertaking. They should have authority to raise revenues from any local sources, without being required to beg for funds to pay for the services they need. The municipalities should not be required to support State projects, pay for State services, or carry financial burdens imposed on them by the State (1948).

"1-2. The principle of municipal independence carries with it the obligation of cities to face their own problems, to meet their own responsibilities, to finance their own enterprises within the limits of local resources, and consistent with practical economic and social factors (1948, 1949, 1950, 1951).

"1-3. Local government in the United States should be autonomous so far as practical and consistent with public welfare. While the Federal Government and governments of the several States may invoke their broad powers and greater financial resources to make possible some local government services, still these powers and finances should be delegated for the purpose of administration to the municipal authorities, in a manner consistent with responsible local self-government (1948, 1949, 1950, 1951).

"1-4. The American Municipal Association believes in and will work for effective governmental and administrative organization and practices in municipalities, seeking to preserve the representative character of municipal government, and to assure the people a high standard of municipal service, to the end that the greatest public benefit may result from the use of public funds. While no municipality can have complete autonomy, the cities should have the maximum local authority consistent with their position as constituent elements in a sovereign State (1948, 1949, 1950, 1951).

"1-5. The American Municipal Association maintains that efficient and economical municipal government can best be attained if the citizens of cities have both the power and the duty to require their chosen representatives to constantly seek the best methods of operating municipal activities, without being hamstrung either as to organization or financing by arbitrary restrictions in State constitutions or statutes (1954).

"1-6. The administration of elections, schools, and police must always remain within the control of the State and local governments. Democratic government cannot easily be overthrown by a highly centralized government as long as the elections are local, the educational system under State and local control, and the police are primarily under local jurisdiction. Municipal officials pledge their efforts to retain control in fact as well as in theory under these three important activities (1949).

"1-7. The AMA supports the national franchise and local home rule consistent with the provisions of the United States Constitution for the District of Columbia (1956)."

Mr. Fountain. Mr. Healy, you are familiar with the fact—I refer again to North Carolina—that there we have an Advisory Budget Commission which meets continuously and compiles its report, which the Governor usually signs, and makes its recommendations to the State legislature.

I think both the chairmen of the appropriations committees and of the finance committees of the house and senate are on that commission.

I make that preface to this question. If the subcommittee were to seek the viewpoint of the State legislatures, on the basis of your experience with them and your knowledge of the setups in various States, what particular individuals would be the best point of contact for this subcommittee?

Mr. Healy. I believe most State legislatures have a committee on local government. I would think that the chairman and one or two of that committee should be on.

Mr. Fountain. Are you referring to the local government commission?

Mr. Healy. No, a committee of the legislature.

Mr. Fountain. It is called the Committee on Cities and Towns in any State?

Mr. Healy. They have different names for it. That is what I mean. Another committee would be the appropriations committee chairman. Another one would be the tax-raising committee.

Mr. Fountain. The finance committee.

Mr. Healy. Finance. Finally the chairman of the committee on highways. I think those are committees that most city problems come before and their chairmen should be pretty well familiar with some of the problems.

Mr. Fountain. Of course, the chairmen of the appropriations committee could well serve a useful capacity insofar as the State government is concerned as well as the municipal government.

Mr. Healy. That is right.

Mr. Fountain. Any more questions? Thank you very much.

Mr. Healy. Thank you, sir.

Mr. Fountain. Mr. Bernard Hillenbrand. It looks like we are getting a cross section of the various governments in our country.

Report to the People

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GRACIE PFOST

OF IDAHO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mrs. PFOST. Mr. Speaker, once more at the close of a session, I am making a report to the people of the First Congressional District of Idaho.

In my opinion, the Democratic-controlled 85th Congress has proved itself responsible, temperate, and in tune with the times. By every means of communication at their command, the people let the Congress know they wanted present levels of Government spending cut. That is what the Congress did. The President's budget requests were slashed by more than $5 billion. I hope this forecasts a tax cut for the people next session.

Aside from its economy record, the 1st session of the 85th Congress will be known for two solid achievements—it passed the first civil-rights bill since the Civil War, and it enacted legislation providing for full United States participation in the International Atomic Energy Agency, which will put the atoms-for-peace program into operation.

THE BATTLE OF THE BUDGET

The civil rights and budget battles overshadowed all else. The budget fireworks began when the President submitted the largest peacetime spending program in history. There followed a sensation-packed drama in which the President first embraced, and then denied, again rejected, and then supported the budget which bore his name, only to virtually repudiate it in the end. It was a tragic example of what happens when Executive leadership is lacking.

FOR THE PEOPLE'S BENEFIT

The controversy surrounding civil rights held up legislative action on many other proposals. An important bill that got through will lower downpayments on FHA-insured loans, but because the administration's hard-money policy continues to increase interest rates, little improvement has yet been felt in the ailing housing market, or in the allied western lumber industry.

Immigration restrictions were eased so that many fine Idaho families may now have an opportunity to adopt orphans from abroad and bring them into their homes. Consumers got a break through the passage of a poultry inspection bill which will put fresher and better products on the market.

THE FORGOTTEN FARMER

This year's output of farm legislation was the smallest since the depression. Bills were passed extending the soil bank for 1 year, and allowing farmers to produce up to 30 acres of wheat for feed without penalty. Funds were also increased for swapping surplus commodities for foreign currencies.

Little was done to keep America's family-sized farms in operation. In spite of Secretary Benson's predictions that farmers would make more under this administration's farm policies, net farm income has dropped 27 percent during the past 5 years, and farm mortgage debt is at its highest point since 1921. The administration steeled itself against any attempts to enact a new farm program.

THE MINING INDUSTRY

Accomplishments for the mining industry are also disappointing. The industry did not like the administration's lead-zinc bill, and the administration did not like the industry's bill, and the House Ways and Means Committee did not like either. Then the President pulled the rug out from under the Congress by implying at a press conference that he had been misled in sending the peril-point lead-zinc program to Congress, and suggested that the proper and preferable route was for the lead-zinc industry to file an application with the Tariff Commission for relief under the escape clause. This procedure has been there all of the time. Why did not the administration recommend using it 6 months ago, instead of allowing the lead-zinc situation to deteriorate while the Congress struggled with a bill the White House did not really believe in.

LEGISLATION FOR THE WEST

Several bills of special interest to the West were considered this session. A bill prohibiting the military services from withdrawing more than 5,000 acres of public-domain land without Congressional approval passed both the House and the Senate, and is ready for final approval next session. A measure I sponsored to prohibit futures trading in onions, which has almost unanimous support of the onion industry, is pending on the House Calendar. Hearings were held on bills providing for an overall study by a special commission on how to make best use of the Nation's great outdoor recreation resources.

HELLS CANYON NOT DEAD

The Hells Canyon bill passed the Senate, but White House pressure and private power company lobbying kept it from being reported out of the House Interior and Insular Affairs Committee. There will be further consideration of the Senate-passed bill on February 1, 1958.

Full and proper development of the Middle Snake is now a critical issue. A group of western Congressmen and Senators have asked the Federal Power Commission to withhold granting licenses to the Pacific Northwest Power Co. to build low dams at Pleasant Valley and Mountain Sheep until studies on the proper development of the Middle Snake are completed. If the people of Idaho and the Pacific Northwest are to receive full benefits from the rushing waters of the Snake River, there must be adequate storage in the Middle Snake area.

FOR CIVIL-SERVICE RETIREES

As chairman of the House Retirement Subcommittee, I put in many long hours working on a measure which would require no appropriated funds but would increase pensions for retired civil-service employees. They are having a hard time paying today's prices on yesterday's pensions. This bill passed both my subcommittee and the full Post Office and Civil Service Committee, and is ready for further action as soon as the new session convenes.

The wheels were set in motion to find out why the cost of living has continued to rise each month under this administration. At least three Congressional committees have begun studies of the hard-money policy and other inflationary pressures in our economy. Out of these hearings may come recommendations for legislation which will help the American family stretch its budget.

President Eisenhower has indicated he is disappointed with the performance of the 1st session of the 85th Congress. In reply I can only say—the Democrats in Congress are disappointed that the President did not put up a stronger fight for programs he said he wanted. In many cases, a statement of support from the White House at the right time would have pushed a bill through.

This Congress worked long and hard, and despite the fact that the White House remained aloof on most controversial measures, the record written is a good and substantial one.

Record of 85th Congress, 1st Session

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. MELVIN PRICE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, the 1st session of the 85th Congress has ended with a record that contains many disappointments but out of which I think most Members can feel some sense of achievement.

The 85th Democratic-controlled Congress was an economy-minded Congress. Its principal achievement was the reduction of President Eisenhower's requests and the Bureau of the Budget estimate for appropriations for fiscal year 1958 by $5,048,378,979. I supported this reduction recommended by the Appropriations Committee and adopted by the Congress. I opposed all meat-ax attempts to go beyond committee action in reducing requests for appropriations. Many of the most important programs of the Government would have suffered by such meat-ax approaches.

The House Appropriations Committee gave thorough study to each item in the budget and accomplished a record for economy, seldom equaled in our legislative process. The House committee actually reduced budget requests by $5,515,773,184, but some restorations in the Senate resulted in adjustments in conference, with the House position in the main being preserved, so that the final cut by the Congress in President Eisenhower's funds request was $5,048,378,979. This figure I supported.

This was one of the longest sessions of a peacetime Congress, opening on January 3 and closing its work August 30. There were more rollcalls and quorum calls—220 of them—than in any other Congress since the start of the Korean war. I did not miss a single quorum call or rollcall during the session.

During the session, I secured passage of 5 public bills, including 2 which were regarded as part of the President's legislative program, and 3 private bills.

It has been—for the third straight year—a Democratic Congress serving with President Eisenhower, a Republican. Once again it is fair to point out, I think, that the result has not been the "political cold war" the President once predicted from such a division of party power.

In the House of Representatives, on the contrary, the point can be made that most Democrats cooperated wholeheartedly with the President to advance legislation that he said he wanted. For example, the civil-rights bill we passed was taken, lock, stock, and barrel, from the administration proposals. It fell into trouble in the Senate, but this trouble was not partisan trouble but rather sectional.

In the House again, in an effort to save the Federal-aid-to-schools bill, we Democrats agreed on the floor to abandon our own beliefs and convictions on the proper distribution of Federal school funds and accept the Eisenhower proposals. Our offer failed, and the bill was killed; but 57 percent of Democrats voted to save the program and only 41 percent of the President's own Republicans voted with us.

There is no evidence of "political cold war" in that record.

Neither was there "political cold war" in the scrutiny of foreign policy. I myself sponsored the bill authorizing our country to participate in the "atoms for peace" international plan that President Eisenhower recommended. It was not strange for Democrats to support this type of program, for the late Senator Brien McMahon, Democrat, of Connecticut, and I cosponsored the original resolution many years ago that called on the executive department for leadership in the field. The point is that we did not desert our principles merely because they were adopted and recommended by a Republican President whose party might claim the credit.

When the President presented the Eisenhower doctrine for the Middle East, with what seemed to be a demand for authorization for war in the Mediterranean at his choice at some future time, many of us were disturbed, but we supported the President to present a united front to the world.

Nevertheless, although some changes were made in the resolution, the Democratic Congress gave bipartisan and nonpartisan support to the Eisenhower doctrine.

There were some factors that made responsible action by the Congress this year very difficult. One was the violence and persistence of the so-called economy drive. A second, I think we Democrats may fairly say, was what seemed to be extraordinary vacillation in the White House.

The vacillation was noticeable even in regard to the President's $71.8 billion budget. Before this budget was submitted to the Congress, it had been sharply attacked by Secretary of the Treasury, Humphrey, in a background briefing for reporters.

A tremendous wave of letters poured into the Congress that seemed to reflect some grassroots protests against spending. Many of these letters were inspired by organizations, but they were properly heeded by Members of the House who have a responsibility to their own constituents. And the White House never seemed able to make up its mind. The President demanded restoration of Defense Department and foreign aid money cut by the House, but then dropped his requests after the Senate had fought hard to support him—led, I may say, by Senate Democrats. At a crucial moment the President's own Budget Director undercut work in Congress by seeming to endorse attacks on the President's budget proposals.

My own attitude toward the budget was to support all Appropriations Committee efforts at economy—to trim fat and waste and to postpone projects that could be postponed—but to refuse to adopt the meat-ax approach of simply slashing at random. And I see no virtue in trying to deceive the voters by making cuts that are really spurious—eliminating funds for services already obligated, for example, when everyone in the House knows that next year the money will have to be restored in deficiency and supplemental appropriation bills.

Our country has very large obligations for the defense and preservation of freedom in a dangerous world, and the price tag is not cheap. We have subcommittees on appropriations that very carefully study the requests of the various departments and are experienced and skillful at proposing the elimination of waste. These subcommittees are the ones that suggest wise money cuts, and the reports of the subcommittees I supported. The meat-ax approach is not wise and I could not accept it.

There are other examples of what seemed White House vacillation, entirely apart from the budget, that made it difficult for the first session of the 85th Congress to function effectively. One was on the school-aid bill, mentioned above. So far as I can tell, no Republican leader took the trouble to tell the President at the decisive moment that we Democrats had accepted in toto his bill. At least, he did not himself take the trouble to make a few telephone calls to fellow Republicans and tell them that he wanted action. The bill failed by a mere 3 votes on the first rollcall; a shift of 2 votes would have changed the result, and it is inconceivable that the President could not personally have won 2 votes from among the 59 percent of the Republicans who, in the absence of such an appeal, voted against him.

The civil-rights bill revealed a comparable absence of effective Presidential leadership. In the House we gave him exactly the bill he said he wanted. But when it reached the Senate, President Eisenhower seem to begin debating with himself in public. He said in a news conference he was surprised to find certain things in the bill that he did not understand. The result was that he yielded the initiative on the measure to its enemies, and all the waverers began to jump down on the compromise side. The President's performance very seriously damaged what his administration originally insisted it wanted.

The record of 5 years suggests that the President is never really very effective when he announces that he is for something. He may say he is for it, but he seldom carries through. But when he is against something, such as river-valley development or a program to help our still distressed farmers, then the White House is tremendously effective. It fights as one man, and the Republicans respond. But when Mr. Eisenhower says he is for something, he seldom if ever makes the fight necessary to persuade the Republicans he means it.

My own work this session has been divided, as usual, between the legislation all members must consider for the welfare of the country and the particular interests of the district and people I have the honor to represent.

On January 5, 1957—the opening day of the session—I was elected as chairman of the Democratic caucus for the 85th Congress. In that capacity I nominated the gentleman from Texas, SAM RAYBURN, for his eighth term as Speaker of the House; announced the selection of the gentleman from Massachusetts, Representative JOHN McCORMACK, as majority leader; and I was appointed, along with McCORMACK and the gentleman from Massachusetts, Minority Leader JOSEPH MARTIN, to notify the President that the House was organized and ready to do business.

Most people know that much of the work of the Congress is done through committees. I serve on both the Committee on Armed Services, which has jurisdiction over our defense system, and the Joint Congressional Committee on Atomic Energy, which was created as a Congressional supervisor of the Atomic Energy Commission.

There has not been a day during the session, except for brief recesses, when I have not attended at least one—and sometimes two—meetings of subcommittees or committees working in the atomic energy and armed services fields.

For example, many people became interested in our Status of Forces Agreement regarding trials of our servicemen abroad, and the full Armed Services Committee held extensive hearings which I attended.

From the Atomic Energy Subcommittee on Agreements on Cooperation, of which I am a member, we reported out the bill authorizing American participation in the atoms for peace International Atomic Energy Agency. This bill permits the United States to furnish fissionable material for nuclear power reactors in other countries and was necessary to give effect to Senate ratification of the treaty creating the IAEA.

I am equally interested in fostering the speedy development of nuclear powerplants in our country; indeed, it is vital that the United States shall not be outstripped by other major nations in developing this new source of electric power. Presidential hostility has made it impossible to pass the Gore-Holifield bill, instructing the Atomic Energy Commission to build experimental reactors so that the general public may have the benefit of their enormous $17 billion investment in the atom. But there is a program of private investment, and this can be encouraged by proper Government action. So I sponsored a bill, passed by both Houses, providing that the Government will assume liability over and above private insurance coverage for reactor hazards.

In the absence of such Government assurances, private industry and insurance were reluctant to move swiftly. This bill encourages private industry to go ahead, offers protection to the public financially and also writes in certain reactor safety standards that must be accepted.

I must report frankly that I am still concerned about our slowness in pushing for nuclear power. The pressurized water reactor at Shippingport, Pa., largely financed by the Government and based on development work by a team headed by Adm. Hyman Rickover, will soon be in operation. There will be great publicity next January when nuclear power actually moves into the electricity lines of the Pittsburgh area.

But we need to work on other kinds of reactors—particularly a gas-cooled type that uses natural instead of enriched uranium. Forty percent of all TVA electricity is now being used to enrich uranium, and the development of a gas-cooled natural-uranium reactor would be a great step forward toward production of nuclear power at an economic level.

The Atomic Energy Committee, of course, is also concerned with national defense. The Subcommittee on Research and Development has been given credit—correctly, I think—for saving a program of experimental work toward nuclear propulsion of aircraft.

There were unmistakable signs, many months ago, that the administration was lengthening its target dates in an economy move. I had no objection to a cutback in production plans for an airframe for nuclear craft, but there was serious danger that the whole project would suffer from the reduction of Air Force funds for research and development. The subcommittee's providing produced reassurances from Donald A. Quarles, then Secretary of the Air Force, that every effort would be made to pursue the program vigorously.

The joint committee also created a special subcommittee, of which I was a member, to conduct full-scale hearings on the problems of radioactive fallout from nuclear weapons tests.

We heard scores of experts in the field of fallout, the spread of radioactive particles in the atmosphere and on the earth, and the potential effects on human beings, animals, and vegetation. What we had previously was a welter of uncoordinated information, and the subcommittee report—released just a short time ago—sought to summarize the available facts in a coherent and comprehensive form. We did not get the final answers, of course, but the report should prove very useful to intelligent discussion of the problems by the public.

In another field, one other major public bill was passed in which I have long been interested—the bill establishing Federal inspection and Federal health standards in the marketing of poultry.

I introduced the first resolution in the House calling for an investigation of slaughterhouse and processing plants in the poultry industry after I became aware that very sick chickens were being foisted on the public and that the Government possessed no power to protect the public. Now we have a new system providing for Federal inspection, prohibiting the movement in interstate commerce of poultry or poultry products from diseased, unwholesome or adulterated chickens and turkeys. We have had compulsory meat inspection, for the protection of the public health, for many years. Now we have protection of the public health through inspection of poultry.

I sponsored again, in this session, a bill to grant Federal assistance to areas of chronic and persistent unemployment. Despite the general levels of prosperity, the country is pockmarked with numerous areas where worked-out mines or other troubles have given rise to low incomes, lack of economic opportunity, and genuine depression. There should be Federal aid for these areas, to help them through loans, grants, and counsel, to get back on their feet. I am sorry that administration opposition has made enactment of the bill I sponsored, comparable to the bill sponsored in the Senate by our own Senator PAUL H. DOUGLAS, Democrat, of Illinois, impossible.

Naturally I voted for the pay raise for postal workers—and I helped force the bill to the floor, against administration opposition, by petition discharging the committee that had bottled up the measure. I do not consider it right that Uncle Sam should be a bad employer, that he should deny postal workers and civil-service workers the pay increases needed to keep them from suffering from rising living costs. In its best days, the Government has taken the viewpoint that it has a special example to be a good employer, to set an example to private industry, and that is what it should be today.

I regret the failure of the school-aid bill, regret the troubles surrounding the civil-rights bill in the Senate, and can merely repeat that stronger Presidential leadership would have produced better results.

I opposed the natural-gas bill, which would both raise prices to our users of gas and damage the southern Illinois coal industry by allowing a high-profit group of giant oil companies to charge all the traffic will bear. There was sufficient opposition among House Members to keep this bill from being considered in the first session of the Congress.

I sponsored one other bill that is, I think, of more than strictly local interest. This is a measure to incorporate a new veterans' organization, called Veterans of World War I of the United States of America.

This organization, sought by veterans who served from April 5, 1917, and July 2, 1921, would allow perpetuation of the comradeship of those who fought in a war more than a generation past. They have interests in common because of age and memories, and they have a proper concern for celebrating the splendid battle names that ring in their history.

The Defense Department—it informed me in May—has plans well advanced for the return to this country of unknown servicemen of the Korean war and of World War II. Their remains will be ceremonially interred in Arlington National Cemetery.

This is pursuant to two bills that I sponsored in previous sessions of Congress. The remains will be placed in crypts near the sarcophagus of the Unknown Soldier of World War I, in ground already a place of sanctity for Americans, but there will be no change in the present sarcophagus or in its famous inscription, "Here rests in honored glory an American soldier known but to God."

One of the major interests of southern Illinois and of St. Clair and Madison Counties in particular is the question of flood control.

The House this year approved several projects: $97,000 for planning a flood wall at Alton, $550,000 for work on the Wood River levees, and $800,000 for additional levee work in the East Side Levee and Sanitary District.

The House Public Works Committee authorized $40,000 for a small-boat harbor at Alton.

I am sponsor of three bills or resolutions that, in the long run, I hope, will get Federal flood protection that our people seriously need.

One is the bill, which I have sponsored in other sessions also, to get the basic Mississippi River flood-control program modified so as to allow the Kaskaskia project at New Athens, Ill., to be included.

Another is a bill to modify the existing Mississippi River project so as to allow construction of a dam at Chain of Rocks.

The third is a resolution calling for a thorough review of earlier flood-control projects in regard to southern Illinois.

I do not believe that these earlier projects are adequate to meet the needs of our people. The situation has changed sharply since the 75th Congress, 10 years ago, when the comprehensive plan for the Ohio and lower Mississippi Rivers was published. I have asked for new review and survey from the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, covering both the 75th Congress document and all other applicable reports.

Specifically, I requested the House Committee on Public Works to ask the engineers for a review of all programs with "particular reference to all streams in St. Clair and Madison Counties" that flow into the Kaskaskia and Mississippi "with a view to providing improvements."

The Committee on Public Works promptly sent this resolution to the Army Corps of Engineers for a preliminary report on the feasibility of such a survey and review. The Corps of Engineers has agreed that it is feasible and that the survey should be made, and the committee has approved my resolution. This is the first essential step to getting a better flood-control program worked out along comprehensive lines.

Taking account of the feeling of many of our people that they suffer from remoteness in the processes and availability of Federal court, I also introduced a bill to redefine the area under the jurisdiction of the United States District Court for Southern Illinois. Under my bill the southern district would cover 23 of the southern Illinois counties, including Madison County, and court would be held in Alton, Quincy, and Springfield.

The Record of the 85th Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CLEMENT J. ZABLOCKI

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. ZABLOCKI. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with a policy which I have followed since first elected to the 81st Congress as a Member of the House of Representatives, I submit to the people of the Fourth District a report on the major legislative actions of the 85th Congress.

THE 85TH CONGRESS

The 1st session of the 85th Congress has come to a close. We can now look back and appraise its achievements, as well as its failures.

The 85th Congress met and continued in session during a period of trial and crisis. On the international scene we have witnessed several upheavals in the Communist realm. Still we have made no apparent progress toward a secure and lasting peace. The Communist threat has not vanished. Red penetration into the Middle East, Southeast Asia, and other areas has continued. By crushing the rebellion in Hungary and going unpunished, the Soviets reasserted their supremacy over the captive nations. Further, aided by the bungling and inaction on the part of our administration, they managed to gain an important foothold in the Middle East. In spite of the disarmament talks in London, we seem to be no closer to peace than we were a year ago.

On the legislative front, foreign affairs legislation fared poorly. The first session was marked by, first, a signal lack of new approaches to the solution of world problems; and second, growing discord between the majority in Congress and the Chief Executive. Both can be traced to the lack of Presidential leadership.

Extensive studies conducted during the past year pointed to the need for a new approach to foreign policy problems. Virtually none have been forthcoming from the administration. The $4 billion foreign aid bill proposed by the President did not help the situation; it was padded, arrived late, and was not actively championed by the President until too late. Congress cut into it deeply, appropriating little over $3 billion in new funds. Other bills in this field either failed to clear the committee stage, or ran into stiff opposition on the floor of the House.

With respect to domestic legislation, the picture was more encouraging. Faced with a recordbreaking $72 billion budget proposed by President Eisenhower, Congress spent much of the session trying to trim it to the bone, and made encouraging progress. The budget was cut by $4.9 billion.

A detailed report on legislative actions—and on my votes on the various bills—is tabulated with this report. It outlines all major legislative actions, including the passage of reorganization legislation, the Housing Act, civil rights, and other measures.

There were, however, three important areas which needed—but failed to receive—special attention:

First. Inflation, aided by high Federal spending, continued to spiral. The cost of living is still on the upswing. Ever-increasing interest rates, pushed up by deliberate Government action, are fattening the purses of big investors but place a heavy burden on the average wage earner. The cost of home mortgages, business loans, auto and other consumer borrowing has gone up. Even the cost of servicing our national debt has jumped $1 billion a year. This comes out of our pockets.

Second. The average taxpayer and the small-business man are hard pressed. Federal tax revenues are at an alltime peacetime high. Together with high interest rates resulting from the tight-money policy, they spell trouble for the average taxpayer and the small-business man. While large corporations are reporting record profits, small-business earnings dropped sharply. The number of bankruptcies has increased. On top of high taxes and the tight-money policy, the administration, first, has been bypassing small business in Government procurement; and second, reneged on a tax cut recommended by a special Presidential Commission.

Third. The farm problem has not been solved, even though the cost of running the Agriculture Department has gone up under Mr. Benson from $1 billion in 1952 to $4 billion a year under current rate of spending.

An Economy-Mandated Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. EARL WILSON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. WILSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, with the close of the 1st session of the 85th Congress, we who are Members of this body can agree on one fact, at least—that we were mandated by the American people to reduce Federal spending, balance the budget and otherwise get the Government's financial affairs in order. Everyone knows, or should know, that we are in a life-and-death struggle with Public Enemy No. 1—inflation. People are worried, scared, and they look to Washington for protection and relief.

In analyzing my own record in this and previous Congresses, Mr. Speaker, I am proud that I have consistently sought economy in government. As a member of our Appropriations Committee, I have been strong in demands for drastic cuts in departmental budgets, particularly the multi-billion-dollar Defense Department. I cannot, for the life of me, see why it is necessary for our military forces to spend some $40 billion a year even though the maintenance of defenses, with the consequent easing of war hazards, is very expensive.

My Ninth Congressional District in Indiana is comprised of 14 counties with a population total of some 260,000. It is a typical grassroots section where people are thrifty, realistic, and aware of the fact that money does not grow on trees. Early in this session they let me know of their firm determination against $72 billion Federal budgets and doubtful giveaway programs to foreign powers.

The mandate of Indiana people was so strong that I joined with my Indiana colleagues in late February, 1957, in signing a declaration of economy in Government which stated, in part:

> The Indiana Republican delegation in the House of Representatives, after careful study and evaluation, has unanimously agreed that a reduction of the $72 billion budget will be in the best interests of the people of the United States. It was further agreed that every proposed reduction in the budget, which does not curtail essential services or endanger the security of our country, will be supported.

I know, Mr. Speaker, that I have consistently followed that declaration of policy. In fact, my record of economy votes was noted in the Congressional Quarterly as being the highest in the State of Indiana and among the highest in the entire Nation.

Despite the demands of my committee work, I was present on this floor to cast my vote on virtually all of the 100 rollcalls of the session just closing.

As an example of my economy policies, I would mention the various appropriation bills on which this chamber acted, after these measures had cleared the committee on which I serve. I helped in two places to get these appropriations reduced—in committee and on this floor.

For fiscal 1958 the various appropriation bills sought a total of $64,048,466,290. When they passed the House they had been reduced to $58,515,233,806. After Senate and conference clearance they totaled $59,134,110,706. These totals do not reflect certain other costs which the Nation's taxpayers are called upon to assume. One huge item is the fixed charge of approximately $7,400,000,000, which represents interest on our public debt, now exceeding $270 billion.

I had great misgivings about the amounts requested in these appropriation bills. In every instance where there appeared a possibility of voting for responsible reductions, I did so. In one of the appropriation bills, 14 amendments were voted upon with an aim of effecting reductions. I am proud to have been one of those who voted in favor of each of those 14 amendments.

The Congressional Quarterly tabulations for 26 so-called economy bills through July 28 showed that I had favored 22 of them for a percentage of 81. This is among the most consistent records held by any Member of Congress.

In analyzing the record of this Congressional session, we find that relatively few major bits of legislation were acted upon. Of more than 13,000 measures introduced, only about 250 emerged with House and Senate approval. Much remains to be done next year. Little was done about veterans' legislation, and I am particularly anxious that Congress consider problems of World War I veterans. They truly are the forgotten men of this century's American wars. Giving them some help where it is needed would be sound economy and entirely justified.

It is also noteworthy that taxpayers of America received no relief during the first session. No substantial tax reductions were enacted, and few were given the courtesy of consideration. Yet the tax revenues under existing laws increased from $68,165,000,000 in fiscal 1956 to $70,989,000,000 in fiscal 1957 because of the economic growth of the Nation.

The Mutual Security Act, or foreign aid bill, was reduced to a $3 billion figure from the $4.4 billion sought. I opposed this bill because I know our people, already suffering from oppressive taxation and ruinous inflation, strongly doubt the wisdom or fairness of spreading money abroad with the abandonment so evident in the past. Foreign aid, as we are doing it, should be thoroughly scrutinized and reevaluated. That is the temper of the American public.

It is my determination, Mr. Speaker, to press vigorously for economy in government for as long as I remain in Congress. It is an urgent necessity if we are to stem the rapid drift toward inflation. Ever since we deserted the philosophy of those who framed our Constitution, which limited our powers to tax ourselves, this Nation has known little about the blessings of economy.

I have long advocated a full-scale reform of our national tax structure. Whether the 16th amendment, which provides for the levying of an income tax of unlimited amounts according to the whims of Congress, was a proper step is indeed gravely doubtful.

When we come back to Washington for the second session of this Congress, I hope every Member on this floor will remember that he carries a mandate from his constituency. It is a mandate as strong as any ever declared by the American people. They want a return to commonsense, economical Government. That is our job for 1958.

So-Called Right-to-Work Laws Are Anti-Union-Security Laws

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. MELVIN PRICE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, there are now 17 States which have, under the authority of section 14 (b) of the Taft-Hartley Act, so-called State right-to-work laws. President Eisenhower's Secretary of Labor, Mr. Mitchell, has repeatedly said that these State laws are wrong in principle, but I call your attention to the fact that he has never asked us to repeal the Federal law that tolerates them. Secretary Mitchell talks a good line about what he suggests are the pro-labor policies of this administration. He is never able to deliver the goods; he can not count on support either from his President or the leadership of his party in Congress.

The right-to-work label on these State laws is a complete misnomer. They guarantee to no one the right to work. They guarantee no single human being a job. Accurately described, they are simply anti-union-security laws. They are designed to make union organization more difficult and to jeopardize the security of established unions by saying that no kind of collective bargaining contract can contain a union-shop or maintenance-of-membership clause.

They are, therefore, antiunion laws. They are intended to block and frustrate union operations.

As a member of the Democratic Party, it is a source of satisfaction to me to observe that the only State which in recent years has repealed a mislabeled "right to work" law was the Democratic State of Louisiana. Louisiana repealed its statute this year. But in 1955, Utah, under a Republican State administration, adopted one of these outmoded statutes and the Republican Governor, the Honorable Bracken Lee, signed it. In Kansas in 1955, a Republican legislature passed such a law, and when the Republican Governor vetoed it he was sharply attacked by his party.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that we look at the economic facts of our industrial society. Labor organization has been a positive good to us. The process of collective bargaining may once have been a rather simple one. Today it involves expert studies of productivity—the output per man-hour, the value of new machinery, and the profits to be shared from new technological processes—as well as discussions of equity and simple justice.

The economists who serve the labor unions are as well trained, technically, and as honest—if not so well paid—as those who serve great industry. They know how to talk in terms of the value of purchasing power—mass purchasing power by millions of worker consumers—in undergirding our economy.

Collective bargaining and unions have helped build our mass purchasing power. They furnish the market that lets steel executives plan enormous expansions of capacity. The consumer market is among the most significant factors that Government fiscal agencies must consider in their mysterious manipulations of credit and fiscal policy. Union wages, to a considerable degree, form a bulwark of purchasing power.

The so-called right-to-work laws of the States do not embody any concept of State responsibility for economic prosperity, for the right of hard-working people, in general, to have a decent place in the scheme of things.

The Federal Government has a very specific obligation to maintain what we call prosperity. When here in Congress we adopted the Employment Act of 1946, we said that employment or unemployment were issues for the Federal Government to consider. We said, in fact, that the maintenance of maximum employment was a direct concern of the Federal Government.

The 17 States that continue right-to-work laws, so-called, have made no comparable acknowledgement of their own. They have not said they will use Government processes to see that willing workers have decently paying jobs. They have not said they recognize a responsibility for prosperity in their own Commonwealths.

The States could not say such things, of course. Our economic system is interstate and national, and only the National Government can really do anything about trying to promote conditions under which people have a right to work—that is, prosperity and jobs.

What the 17 States have done, in their mislabeled right-to-work laws, is to pretend they were interested in jobs, but to adopt, in fact, an antiunion attitude.

It is significant, Mr. Speaker, that here in Congress we have never passed any law saying that unions could not negotiate, through the normal processes of collective bargaining, a union-shop clause in contracts.

Why have we not done so? The simple fact is that it would be contrary to our consciences, to what we know of practical industrial relations and the value of free, strong unions. It was a shabby thing that we did in 1947—to say that we would not pass an anti-union-security law ourselves, but that we would, through section 14 (b) of the Taft-Hartley Act, give the more antiunion States a Federal license to pass such laws on their own.

I consider it significant that no State in which industrial relations between management and strong unions has an established tradition has ever considered seriously a so-called right-to-work law.

The States which have passed these laws are those in which industry and industrialized society are relatively new.

My suggestion is that they would benefit greatly—that they would avoid many of the mistakes made decades ago by others of us—if they would heed the voices of experience.

In an industrialized society—a capitalism that is also democratic—strong, free trade unions are inevitable and an affirmative good.

Pass a law to restrict unions and you achieve nothing except an intensified drive on the part of unions to overturn the law. Give the unions respect and good standing, and the American citizens who are members will take care of their own self-discipline. Never in American history has an antiunion law, or an antiunion decision of the Supreme Court, stood the test of time. But in times of genuine crisis the leaders of unions have shown that they recognize their responsibility as citizens of our whole democracy.

The best way to cure the evil of the so-called right-to-work laws in the remaining 17 States is for us to repeal section 14 (b) of the Taft-Hartley Act that makes them legally tolerable.

Mr. Speaker, Secretary Mitchell has not asked us to repeal this section. President Eisenhower has not asked us to repeal the section. President Eisenhower, in fact, has refused to back up his subordinate, Mitchell, in saying that the States should repeal the laws on their own.

The record shows that the laws are wrong, that they go contrary to American experience. The record also shows we in the Congress have had no help—not little help, but no help—either from the President or his Labor Secretary in moving toward overriding the State laws as apparently they need to be overridden.

Legislative Record of the 1st Session of the 85th Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN W. McCORMACK

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, the 1st session of the 85th Congress has been a successful one, and in the legislative history of our country it has been a historic one.

For the passage of the civil-rights bill—right to vote—is an event that will forever mark this Congress as one of historic significance. The importance of this event, the first time in over 80 years, is further emphasized by the fact that this bill was passed by a Democratic controlled Congress. And yet, only a few years ago, when the Republicans controlled the 83d Congress, with President Eisenhower then, as now, in the White House, such legislation was not even reported out of the Republican-controlled committees of either branch. In the language of the legislator, in the 83d Congress, civil-rights legislation was killed in committee.

In making my statement as majority leader on the accomplishments of the first session of this Congress, I could rest my case on the statement that I have made that the past session has been a successful one, and in the legislative history of our country, a historic one in the passage alone of this bill.

Another history-making event was the passage of the Middle East resolution. It is rare in our history that an entire Congress, never mind one of its sessions, is faced with two such historic events and handles them in a successful manner.

The importance of these two events from the angle of legislative history cannot be denied or minimized.

After his election last January, and on the opening day of the Congress, Speaker RAYBURN delivered to the Members of the House of Representatives a brief but expressive address in acknowledgment of his election as Speaker of the 85th Congress.

I quote a part of Speaker RAYBURN's remarks because they are worth our reconsideration today—months later—as a standard for evaluating the work accomplished during those long months. The Speaker said, referring to Congress:

> This is the highest theater that anyone plays in upon this earth today. I must refer again to the tremenedous and at times appalling responsibility that falls upon the shoulders of each and every one of us. We must so act in the days to come that we will merit the confidence and the faith not only of our own people but of the people of the whole world, because your country and mine has been challenged to take the leadership of the Free World. If we do not with courage and judgment accept that leadership, then the world will be a place in which good men and women will be unhappy.

He concluded:

> This is no time for acrimony. This is a time of dedication for every human being that lives within the confines of the United States of America. Therefore, I look forward to a session that will be fruitful, that will be serviceable not only to us but to the other people of the earth.

The Speaker's simple but practical statement of his test of the success of the newly assembled House of Representatives by implication makes of less importance many other tests which are being applied today as the session closes. The President, majority and minority Members of the Senate and House, authors of newspaper editorials and special columns, TV and radio commentators, and the representatives of numerous special interest groups and geographical areas, are expressing widely different views, largely because they have set up as basis for their judgments so many different criteria of successful Congressional achievement. Some persons measure our work in terms of the number of Presidential recommendations we enacted into law or defeated. President Eisenhower himself during the closing days of the session expressed disappointment that more of his proposals had not been adopted, but others have judged that in the light of all surrounding circumstances Congress did rather well by the administration's program. The record shows that President Eisenhower received generous treatment, particularly with a large segment in a number of cases, a majority of his own party voting against him.

To try to summarize all these evaluations of the record of the 1st session of the 85th Congress presents a difficult task. During the past few days I have been reading a large sample of these analyses, ranging from the strongly partisan to the more objective, and I quote a part of an editorial in the New York Times which stated, in part:

> The first session of the Democratic 85th Congress has left a record sure to frustrate all those analysts who demand verdicts of precision. No such clear-cut summation is possible on the facts. This session has rejected some of the President's proposals; but some presidential defeats, as, for example, in the death of the school-aid bill, were caused largely by members of his own party, and were compounded by his own occasional lack of enthusiastic leadership. The session has adopted some Presidential proposals intact; others it has adopted and then basically redesigned to suit Democratic purposes. * * * The political climate in general, indeed, has been good. There has been a total absence of irresponsible and merely punitive Congressional investigatory action. The President and the Congress have moved together, each in decent regard for the rights and privileges of the great separate constitutional house which the other occupies.

On the last day of the session Senate Majority Leader JOHNSON said:

> Mr. President, this session acted responsibly. This session acted courageously. This session acted constructively. We can leave it to the historians to determine the rank of this Congress in history. For the present I think it is sufficient to say it was a job well done. Individuals may have been disappointed. But the country was not disappointed, as was demonstrated in Wisconsin earlier this week. And when the adjournment bells ring, the record of this Democratic session I think will compare with any.

It is apparent that Speaker RAYBURN and Senate Majority Leader JOHNSON have, in substance, said the same thing. Speaker RAYBURN's emphasis on the responsibility of the Congress for "a session that will be fruitful, that will be serviceable not only to us but to the other people of the earth," is matched by Senator JOHNSON's emphatic statement that "This session acted responsibly—courageously—constructively." This is not merely a partisan defense of a record, but the statements of these two leaders represent the consensus of the views of objective-minded persons, in and out of Congress.

For myself, I subscribe wholeheartedly both to Speaker RAYBURN's test of successful Congressional action and to Senator JOHNSON's conclusion that Congress has met this test in the session which has just ended.

President Eisenhower's expressed disappointment in the record of Congress is difficult to understand. It seems to be a personal and hasty reaction rather than a conclusion justified by the facts. Every President in modern times has had a list of measures which constituted the legislative program of his administration, and it is right and proper in our system of government that he should work to get every item enacted into law. But no President has ever achieved that aim—not even Presidents supported by large majorities of their own parties in both Houses of Congress. Probably their disappointment has been just as great as President Eisenhower's. But in most cases they have worked harder, more skillfully, and more consistently than he has done to get his program enacted, and their disappointment may have been tempered by the realization that at least they had not failed by default. President Eisenhower, furthermore, appears to be rather naive in his belief that he could get immediate action on all of the recommendations he submitted during the first session of the present Congress, some of them highly controversial, and many minor in nature. Normally, the first session of a Congress starts out with a large program of its own and administration measures, and it takes about 3 months to organize and get started. Some of these receive final action during the first session, but always a very large number—many of which may have been passed by only one House or given hearings before committees—remain on the calendar for disposition in the second session. True to form, a very considerable number of administration measures was enacted in the past session, a few were defeated, and many remain to be acted on next year. If the President understood this, or were reasonably patient, he would direct his attention to getting Congressional action on the remainder of his program, rather than complaining against Congress for not having disposed of his entire program during the first half of its normal working period. He might work to have more of the members of his own party support his recommendations. Furthermore, the President should realize that there is no particular reason to believe that his program of legislation is so perfectly prepared that agreement with it is inevitable. Most legislative proposals in their original form are extremely complex and their impact cannot be fully appreciated. Such matters as foreign aid, for example, require the joint consideration of the administration and the Congress, and the final legislative measure may be—and frequently is—a combination of the original views of these elements, plus modifications which develop during the process of consideration. A few of President Eisenhower's recommendations, after submission to such joint consideration, were defeated during the past session; some were enacted in almost their original form; others were amended before passage; others have yet to be given that thorough consideration which Congress is obliged to accord them if it is to be responsible to its obligations. President Eisenhower must realize and expect that his proposals to Congress—proposals of major importance because of their source—need thorough consideration and that the Congress is working with him, and not against him, in the effort to enact legislation which is in the best interests of all our people. If the Congress were to be merely a machine for processing into the form of statutes every recommendation from the President, we would not be the Congress of the United States as our duties are prescribed by the Constitution and as they are accepted to be under our form of government.

Particular interest has been attracted to the record of the present Congress because of the divided control in our Government. The record of the past session shows that instead of a stalemate resulting, that the Democratic-controlled Congress has cooperated with President Eisenhower in the most understanding and effective manner. An examination of rollcall votes shows that on many of his recommendations and budget estimates President Eisenhower received more support from the Democratic Members than from Republican Members.

This record of action for the national interests of our country, and for the best interests of our people will continue in the second session of this Congress, for the Democratic Party is not a party of blind opposition.

The policy of the Democratic Party is to constructively support, constructively propose, and when in opposition to a measure, to constructively oppose.

The Democratic Party, even at times when the opposition was playing partisan politics, has steadfastly adhered to bipartisan action.

In the world of today it is important that bipartisan action continue, and that understanding relationships between the two great political parties and the leaders thereof exist. For of paramount importance to all Americans is the United States of America and its national interest.

And in establishing bipartisanship and national unity so necessary to meet the problems of the present emergency, President Eisenhower must play his part. In attaining this important and necessary objective the President is a leading figure. The making of unwise or emotional statements by the President, particularly when they vary from the facts, such as his statement of being "keenly disappointed" with the record of the first session of this Congress, is not consistent with such leadership.

The reply of Speaker RAYBURN to that statement is not only pertinent, but expressive and justified. I quote the Speaker, "When I operate with a man I always like to know where he stands today and where he stands tomorrow."

In the best interests of our country, and for a future world of peace, bipartisan policy and action is as necessary today as any time in the history of our country.

There is a strong feeling among our people, which feeling I have, as well as many other Members of Congress, that our position internationally is not as secure as it was 2 or more years ago. It is not too late for this situation to change, but it calls for firm and consistent leadership on the part of President Eisenhower.

The quicker we get back to the basic policy of peace through strength the better it will be for our country and for the Free World.

In addition to the civil-rights bill and the Middle East resolution which I have already referred to, I call attention to some of the important measures enacted during the past session.

Another bill of great importance that required months of hearings and consideration is the International Atomic Energy Agency Participation Act. The President considered this to be a recommendation of great importance in carrying out of foreign policy and in making progress toward ultimate peace.

As Chairman DURHAM, Democrat, of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, well said on this measure:

> By participating in this Agency, the United States has an opportunity to demonstrate to all nations of the world our leadership and interest in the field of atomic energy, our technical accomplishments, and our willingness to help other countries to apply the best use of the atom. The Agency also provides a real means and method of developing an effective international control system to divert fissionable materials from weapons to peaceful purposes, and to emphasize the best use of atomic energy.

Another important bill passed is the Atomic Energy Indemnity Act, designed to encourage private industry to develop atomic energy in this country.

One of the significant results of the past session was the action taken on President Eisenhower's budget message, the largest peacetime budget in the history of our country.

While different opinions have been expressed as to reductions made by the Congress, it is generally recognized and understood that the reductions are in excess of $5 billion. In itself, this is a remarkable achievement.

In addition to the passage of the various appropriation bills, among which were many controversial items, and the foreign assistance—mutual aid—authorization bill, and later the foreign assistance appropriation bill, many other bills of importance were passed, such as:

Extension of the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954.

Amendment of the Small Business Act of 1953, improving that act in the interests of small and independent businesses and particularly the establishing of the Small Business Administration on a permanent basis.

Extension of the Reorganization Act of 1949.

Amendment of the Airways Modification Act of 1953, and the establishment of the Airways Modification Board.

Amendment of the Immigration and Naturalization Act. While this particular bill does not go as far as some would like, it represents a marked step forward, and will bring humane and beneficial results to about 60,000 persons and orphans each year.

Establishment of a deferred grazing program. The rolcall vote of the passage of this bill is an interesting one, for 192 Democrats voted for its passage, with 9 against. On the other hand, 78 Republicans voted for its passage, but 100 Republicans voted against it.

The House resolution requesting the President to furnish information on the results of the survey conducted by him and the executive agencies as to where the President's original budget estimates could be reduced. The passage of this resolution was a matter of great concern to the American people. If complied with by the President, it represented cooperative action with the Congress as intended by the Constitution.

On this rollcall 210 Democrats voted for the resolution, with only 3 Democrats against it. On the other hand, only 10 Republicans voted for the resolution, and 175 Republicans voted against it.

Amendment of the Anglo-American Agreement. This was a major recommendation of President Eisenhower. If it failed to pass it could have had serious adverse results in the field of foreign affairs. President Eisenhower was very much concerned about this bill and its passage. The rollcall vote is very interesting. On this measure, strongly urged by President Eisenhower, 133 Democrats voted for it with 68 Democrats against its passage. On the other hand, only 85 Republicans voted for its passage and 99 Republicans against it.

This clearly illustrates the division within the Republican Party, and which has shown itself on a number of other votes during the past session. And with this division, the record of the past session under Democratic control is all the more remarkable.

Appropriation of adequate funds for the Tennessee Valley Authority. On the rollcall vote to reduce the apropriation, 219 Democrats voted against this amendment, and 2 for the reduction. On the other hand, 156 Republicans voted for the reduction and only 25 against it. A vote for the reduction of funds for the TVA was not in the best interests of the people of the area of the country served by this great activity.

The bill authorizing the Federal Power Commission to issue a license to New York Power Authority for the construction of a power project at Niagara Falls.

A bill to restrict the use of the Federal Bureau of Investigation files by defendents in criminal cases. The passage of this bill was a matter of vital importance.

Extension of the excise and corporate taxes.

The Housing Act, more liberal than the one recommended by President Eisenhower.

Adequate appropriations for medical research. This action on the part of the Congress is a matter of paramount importance to all the people of he United States. The amount appropriated was larger than that requested by President Eisenhower. While all Members are entitled to credit, a special commendation is due in the progress made by the Federal Government in the field of medical research to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. FOGARTY] and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL].

The pay raise bill for postal employees, which, unfortunately has been pocket-vetoed by the President.

The pay raise bill for other classified employees, which, unfortunately has also been pocket-vetoed by the President.

In connection with these two bills, it is my firm opinion that pay raise legislation for the postal and other classified employees will go into effect next year. One thing is certain, the Democratic-controlled Congress which passed these bills in the last session will make every effort to do so in the coming session. The pay raises carried in the bills were justified. The action of President Eisenhower in vetoing these bills is most difficult to understand, and is justifiably subject to criticism.

There are some measures and appropriations which failed to pass, which deserve comment.

Much has been said and written about the school-construction bill. The bill reported out of the House committee represented a reasonable compromise between Democratic and Republican views on such legislation. The President stated that he would sign the bill as reported out of committee. While under debate in the Committee of the Whole, a motion was made by a Republican Member which, if adopted, would have made the bill conform to the President's original recommendations. The Democratic Members in charge of the bill stated they would support this amendment. However, before this vote could be taken in the Committee of the Whole, the motion to "strike out enacting clause" was made, and it carried.

The bill then came before the House of Representatives for consideration on whether or not the enacting clause would be stricken out. To strike out the enacting clause meant to kill the bill.

The rollcall vote on this question is very interesting. It shows that 97 Democrats voted in favor of striking out the enacting clause, but 126 Democrats voted against such action. On the Republican side, the vote was 111 Republicans to strike out the enacting clause—which meant to kill the bill—and only 77 Republicans voted against it. The enacting clause was stricken out by a vote of 208 to 203.

This is another illustration of what I have said in the House of Representatives that the President goes one way, and the majority of his party in the House goes the other way.

The House resolution for a Subcommittee on Banking and Currency to study national and credit policy came up for action in the House. This was a very important resolution in the interests of the average American. It was defeated. The vote of this resolution is also very interesting, for 172 Democrats voted for it, 38 Democrats against it; and on the Republican side, only 2 Republicans voted for it, with 187 Republicans voting against this important resolution.

An appropriation for $14 million to start the Federal insurance program, which Congress had voted in 1956, and which was the minimum amount necessary to keep this necessary program alive. This appropriation was defeated by a vote of 218 to 186. It was a part of a larger amount recommended by President Eisenhower. On this vote 127 Democrats voted to keep the program alive, and 89 Democrats voted against it. On the Republican side only 59 Republicans voted for this appropriation and 129 Republicans voted against it.

There are measures that will be acted upon in the second session of this Congress, such as statehood for Alaska, which has been reported out of committee, and I am confident that statehood for Hawaii will also be reported out of committee and acted upon.

If the President and Republican leadership can persuade 50 percent of the Republican Members of the House to vote for these bills, they will pass during the next session.

There are other measures such as wider minimum wage coverage that can be enacted into law during the next session if some Republicans, both in committee and the House of Representatives, will support such legislation.

The Hells Canyon bill has been vigorously opposed by President Eisenhower and his administration. This is most unfortunate and contrary to the best interests of the people of the area affected. It is also an advisable project for our country to develop. On the vote in committee, not a Republican voted in favor of this bill. In committee it was defeated by a few votes. Every member in committee who voted for this bill was a Democrat, and all Republican members on this committee voted against it. The Republican Party and each Republican member have their responsibility for this and for votes on other measures.

Continuing until July 1, 1959, suspension of 2,000,500 statutory limitation on personnel strength of Armed Forces.

Extending until July 30, 1958, the President's authority to expedite defense contracts under title II of the first War Powers Act of 1941.

Authorizing $1.2 billion program of construction at installations and bases of Armed Forces here and abroad, which includes $51 million for new housing facilities.

Assuring adequate medical treatment for those in the Armed Forces by legislation inducting doctors, dentists, and allied specialist categories into the Armed Forces, as needed, with Reserve commissions; and ending special doctor-dentist draft.

Increasing by $150 million authorization for acquisition of housing and nursing facilities for Reserve components of the Armed Forces.

Authorizing $44.7 million construction and equipment program for research facilities of National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics.

House resolution condemning Communist China's failure to account for 450 American prisoners of war taken in Korea.

House concurrent resolution declaring the sense of Congress that Spain should be admitted to membership in NATO.

House concurrent resolution expressing the sense of the Congress that the President and United States delegates to the U. N. General Assembly seek adoption of report of its Committee on the Hungarian Revolution and work for measures to bring about freedom of captive nations.

Extending operating authority of Export-Import Bank for 5 years to June 30, 1963.

Authorizing agreements for construction of atomic reactors in Berlin, West Germany.

Establishing Airways Modernization Board to assure safe, efficient navigation system for all civilian and military planes.

Requiring the Atomic Energy Commission to obtain specific authorization of Congress for civilian power project appropriations.

Limiting issuance of tax-amortization certificates for fast writeoff of new defense plants; ends program December 31, 1959.

Increasing borrowing power of FNMA by $0.5 billion to $1.6 billion to help ease mortgage—money market.

Permitting Great Lakes shipyards to compete for construction or reconditioning of United States merchant ships.

Providing for Government guaranty of private loans to certain air carriers for equipment purchase.

Increasing the rates of compensation for service-connected disabilities and for dependency allowances.

Extending home-loan and loan-guaranty programs for World War II veterans to July 25, 1959.

Increasing maximum of loans; and otherwise encourages new construction in rural and smalltown areas.

Providing career incentives for nurses and medical specialists of the armed services.

Consolidating into a single act and simplifying the laws governing compensation, pensions, burial benefits, hospitalization, and administration by Veterans' Administration.

Extension to June 30, 1958, the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act.

Providing for deferred grazing and protein feed program in drought areas.

Providing for compulsory inspection of poultry and poultry products.

Promoting of development of phosphate production under public domain.

Providing for construction of San Angelo reclamation project, Texas.

Extending to June 30, 1959, aid to school districts affected by Federal activities.

Extending to July 1, 1958, time for disabled persons to file applications to preserve their rights to old-age, survivors and disability insurance; permitting veterans with service-connected disability to receive both social-security and VA benefits.

Providing for Federal indemnity against atomic-reactor hazards for protection of public.

Increasing penalties for violations of Interstate Commerce Commission safety laws and regulations.

Facilitating coverage under Social Security Act of employees of various States and local governments.

There are many other bills I could mention that have passed or will pass in the second session of this Congress, but I have mentioned enough to evaluate the past session in terms of constructive and successful service to our country and to our people.

But those that I have mentioned will place the 1st session of the 85th Congress in the legislative annals of our country as not only a successful one but as a historical one. For certainly in the passage of the civil-rights bill—right to vote—and the Middle East resolution alone, the first session of this Congress has made history.

The success of a Congress, or a session thereof, is judged by what it has done affirmatively, but also by preventing the passage of legislation that is not in the best interests of our people.

It will be remembered that the 83d Republican-controlled Congress is remembered for what has properly been termed its giveaways to certain special interests.

In the 84th Democratic-controlled Congress this was stopped. There was no more giveaway legislation passed by this Congress.

Among the achievements, little noted, of the 1st session of the 85th Congress, is, like during the 84th Congress, there has been no giveaway legislation passed. There will be none passed in the coming second session of this Congress.

The life and action of a Congress, or one of its sessions, are a part of the life and action of our Government during the same period. Many of the important actions or inactions are nonlegislative, but are made administratively by the administration in control of the executive branch of Government, at present the Republican Party, under the administration and leadership of President Eisenhower.

There are matters of important concern to our people, such as inflation; high cost of living; high interest rates; the plight of the farmer, with the consumer paying more and the farmer receiving less for farm products; the plight of small and independent businesses, the increasing bankruptcies among them that are all traceable to and which are the responsibility of the President and the executive branch and not of the Congress.

It is a well-known fact, for example, that our Government is paying the highest interest that has been paid in years, and this means higher interest in all fields of activity in the borrowing of money.

It is a well-known fact that President Eisenhower and Secretary of Agriculture Ezra Benson are bitterly opposed to Democratic measures to lighten the load of the farmer and to enable our farming community to obtain its fair and proper share of the national income. For a depressed agriculture is not healthy for our national economy.

And in connection with these situations, the responsibility rests on President Eisenhower and not on the Congress. There are millions of Americans—and this feeling is growing—who are "keenly disappointed" with the record of President Eisenhower and his administration.

I express my thanks for the many courtesies and considerations the Members have given to me personally and as majority leader during the past session.

I wish for each of my colleagues and your loved ones every happiness, as well as a most restful adjournment.

You can meet your constituents with the knowledge that the first session of the 85th Congress was not only fruitful but, above all, historical.

I am looking forward to seeing and meeting with you next January and in serving with you during the second session of this Congress. I am looking forward to our carrying out the bipartisan relationship, particularly in the field of foreign affairs, as in the past session, which is so necessary in meeting the problems that might confront our country in the days that lie ahead.

Summary of Veterans' Legislation Reported, 85th Congress, 1st Session

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. OLIN E. TEAGUE

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. TEAGUE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following summary of veterans' legislation reported during the 1st session of the 85th Congress:

LAWS ENACTED

Public Law 85-24: Provides that pension under public or private laws administered by the Veterans' Administration shall not be paid to an individual who has been imprisoned in a Federal, State, or local penal institution as a result of conviction for a felony or misdemeanor for any part of the period beginning on the 61st day after his imprisonment and ending when the imprisonment ends. Apportionment of pension may be made to dependents under certain conditions.

Public Law 85–56: Incorporates into a single act the subject matter of the extensive body of existing legislation authorizing and governing the payment of compensation for service-connected disability or death to persons who served in the Armed Forces of the United States during a period of war, armed conflict, or peacetime service, and to their widows, children, and dependent parents. Provides the same sort of consolidation of the laws relating to pension, hospitalization, medical and domiciliary care, and burial benefits. Consolidates into one act all the administrative provisions relating to these benefits, as well as those common to all benefits administered by the Veterans' Administration. Also incorporates the provisions of existing law relating to the ancillary benefits of financial assistance for specially adapted housing and automobiles for certain disabled veterans. Repeals those provisions of law relating to such benefits which are obsolete, executed, or restated in substance in the bill.

Public Law 85–168: Effective October 1, 1957, increases rates of compensation for service-connected disabilities as indicated on the following table of wartime rates:

	Prior Law [1]	Public Law 85–168
(a) 10 percent disability	$17	$19
(b) 20 percent disability	33	36
(c) 30 percent disability	50	55
(d) 40 percent disability	66	73
(e) 50 percent disability	91	100
(f) 60 percent disability	109	120
(g) 70 percent disability	127	140
(h) 80 percent disability	145	160
(i) 90 percent disability	163	179
(j) Total disability	181	225
(k) Anatomical loss, or loss of use of a creative organ, or 1 foot, or 1 hand, or blindness of 1 eye, having only light perception, rates (a) to (f) increased monthly by	47	47
Anatomical loss, or loss of use of a creative organ, or 1 foot, or 1 hand, or blindness of 1 eye, having only light perception, in addition to requirement for any of rates in (l) to (n), rate increased monthly for each loss or loss of use by	47	[2] 47
(l) Anatomical loss, or loss of use of both hands, or both feet, or 1 hand and 1 foot, or blind both eyes with 5/200 visual acuity or less, or is permanently bedridden or so helpless as to be in need of regular aid and attendance, monthly compensation	279	309
(m) Anatomical loss, or loss of use of 2 extremities at a level, or with complications, preventing natural elbow or knee action with prosthesis in place, or suffered blindness in both eyes, rendering him so helpless as to be in need of regular aid and attendance, monthly compensation	$329	$359
(n) Anatomical loss of 2 extremities so near shoulder or hip as to prevent use of prosthetic appliance, or suffered anatomical loss of both eyes, monthly compensation	371	401
(o) Suffered disability under conditions which would entitle him to 2 or more rates in (l) to (n), no condition being considered twice, or suffered total deafness in combinations with total blindness with 5/200 visual acuity or less, monthly compensation	420	450
(p) In event disabled person's service-incurred disabilities exceed requirements for any of rates prescribed, Administrator, in his discretion, may allow next higher rate, or intermediate rate, but in no event in excess of	420	450
(q) Minimum rate for arrested tuberculosis	67	67

[1] Peacetime rates are 80 percent of wartime rates.

[2] But in no event to exceed $450.

Additional disability compensation because of dependents [1]

	Wife, no child	Wife, 1 child	Wife, 2 children	Wife, 3 or more children	No wife, 1 child	No wife, 2 children	No wife, 3 or more children	Dependent parent or parents
Service on or after June 27, 1950	$21.00 23.00	$35.00 39.00	$45.50 50.00	$56.00 62.00	$14.00 15.00	$24.50 27.00	$35.00 39.00	$17.50(1) 19.00 35.00(2) 38.00
World War II
World War I
Spanish-American War, Philippine Insurrection, Boxer Rebellion
Civil War
Indian wars
Peacetime service (under combat or extrahazardous conditions)
Regular peacetime service	16.80 18.00	28.00 31.00	36.40 40.00	44.80 50.00	11.20 12.00	19.60 22.00	28.00 31.00	14.00(1) 15.00 28.00(2) 30.00

[1] Above rates are for 100-percent disability. If and while rated partially disabled, but not less than 50 percent, additional compensation is authorized in an amount having the same ratio to the amount specified in the applicable table, above, as the degree of disability bears to the total disability; e. g., war service-connected disability of 50 percent, compensation rate, $100. If veteran has a wife, his compensation is increased as follows: $100+$11.50=$111.50.

NOTE.—Rates in italics as in Public Law 85–168.

Public Law 85–171: Permits forwarding of all types of Veterans' Administration benefit checks where the person has moved and left a forwarding address instead of the prior requirement of returning the check to the Veterans' Administration.

Public Law 85–194: Increases from $10 to $25 the maximum amount that may be paid by VA for shipping charges on personal property of deceased veterans who die on VA property.

Public Law 85–200: Terminates, 60 days after enactment, the operation of the Veterans' Education Appeals Board and transfers its records to Archives.

Public Law 85–209: Section 1 provides a uniform alternative marriage date requirement for widows applying for pension or compensation. It provides that a widow who does not otherwise meet the applicable delimiting marriage dates as presently existing in the law be eligible for pension or for compensation if she was married to the veteran for 5 or more years or for any period of time if children were born as a result of the marriage. Section 2 permits women to receive pension, compensation, or other gratuitous benefits based on the service of a veteran even though there was a legal impediment to her marriage to the veteran which she entered into without any knowledge of such legal impediment, if other requirements are satisfied.

Public Law 85–311: This law excludes from computation as annual income in determining eligibility for non-service-connected disability or death pension as well as service-connected death compensation or dependency or indemnity compensation for parents, any payment of veterans' bonus by a State, Territory, possession of the United States, the District of Columbia, or the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, based on service in the Armed Forces of the United States and their widows and children.

BILLS PASSED BY THE HOUSE AND PENDING IN SENATE COMMITTEES

Finance Committee

H. R. 76: Provides that the statutory award rate of $47 for service-connected disability shall be awarded in the case of each loss—for example, the loss or loss of use of the hand, foot, or an eye, or creative organ. The present law provides for only one such award of $47 in addition to the award under the basic compensation structure.

H. R. 358: Increases to $75 monthly the rate of pension payable to widows of Spanish-American War veterans—present rates are $54.18 and $67.73, the latter rate applying if the widow was the wife of the veteran during his service.

H. R. 1264: Provides that when the veteran is in the hospital for tuberculosis he shall be eligible for payment of a non-service-connected disability pension based on the presumption that he is totally disabled. The present regulation permits payment only after 6 months has elapsed. For most other diseases for which the veteran may be hospitalized, pension is payable immediately upon a finding of total disability without the elapsing of any particular period of time.

House Joint Resolution 73: The purpose of this resolution is to provide service pension under the conditions and at the rate prescribed by the laws reenacted by Public No. 269, 74th Congress, August 13, 1935, as now or hereafter amended, for any person who served in the Armed Forces of the United States in the Moro Province, including Mindanao, or in the islands of Leyte and Samar, after July 4, 1902, and prior to the first day following the last armed engagement between such armed forces and inhabitants of the Philippine Islands in the province or island in which he served, and who was honorably discharged from the enlistment in which such service occurred, and to the surviving unremarried widow, child, or children of such person. No pension would be paid for service after December 31, 1913. The pension rates currently payable to veterans and their dependents under the mentioned laws are as indicated in the following table:

Type of benefit	90 days' or more service; or less if discharged for disability incurred in service in line of duty	70 to 89 days' service
A. Veterans' benefits:
Age 62 or more, or 10 percent or more disabled	$101.59	$67.73
Helpless or blind or so nearly helpless or blind as to require regular aid and attendance	135.45	88.04
B. Dependents' benefits:
Widows	54.18	(1)
Wife during service	67.73	(1)
Additional for each child	8.13	(1)
Children, no widow:
1 child	62.31	(1)
Each additional child	8.13	(1)

[1] No provision.

Labor and Public Welfare

H. R. 7251: This bill amends the definition of the term "State" as set forth in the Veterans Readjustment Assistance Act of 1952, Public Law 550, 82d Congress (GI bill of rights for Korean veterans), and the War Orphans' Educational Assistance Act of 1956, Public Law 634, 84th Congress, in order to make clear that the benefits of those acts may be given to persons pursuing a course of education and training in the Panama Canal Zone. It also authorizes training under Public Law 634 in the Republic of the Philippines.

H. R. 6908: Authorizes modification and extension of the program of grants-in-aid to the Republic of the Philippines for hospitalization of certain veterans, to restore eligibility for hospital and medical care to certain veterans of the Armed Forces of the United States residing in the Philippines. The bill would—

1. Permit use of Veterans' Memorial Hospital for cases other than those involving service-connected disabilities.

2. Permit treatment of service-connected veterans on out-patient basis.

3. Extend period of assistance from December 31, 1959 to June 30, 1963.

4. Place overall ceiling of $2 million on expenditures for this purpose in any 1 year.

5. Grants hospitalization to American veterans residing in the Philippines on a permanent or temporary basis and outpatient care to service-connected American veterans.

BILLS PASSED BY THE SENATE AND PENDING IN HOUSE COMMITTEE ON VETERANS' AFFAIRS

S. 166: Extends for a period of 2 years the laws granting educational and training benefits to veterans of World War II who were prevented from entering or completing such training within the prescribed time because such person had not met the nature of discharge requirements of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act prior to a change, correction, or modification of a discharge or dismissal, or the correction of a military or naval record.

S. 1698: Extends the time for filing claims for mustering-out payments under the Veterans' Readjustment Assistance Act of 1952 to July 16, 1958 (now July 16, 1956).

REPORTED AND PENDING ON HOUSE CALENDARS

Union Calendar

H. R. 5930: Amends the War Orphans' Educational Assistance Act of 1956 to provide educational assistance thereunder to the children of veterans who are permanently and totally disabled from wartime service-connected disabilities. Grants educational assistance on the same basis as provided by the War Orphans' Educational Assistance Act of 1956, Public Law 634, 84th Congress. That law is limited to the children of individuals who died from an injury incurred in, or aggravated by, service in the Armed Forces during World War I, World War II or Korea. Funds for operation of program to be obtained from assets accruing to Government from Trading With the Enemy Act.

H. R. 6719: Provides adjustments in organization and salary structure of the Department of Medicine and Surgery in the Veterans' Administration, as indicated in the table below:

Also places optometrists on the professional level in the Department of Medicine and Surgery.

VETOED

H. R. 4602:

1. Extended direct and World War II guaranteed loan programs to July 25, 1959.

2. Repealed section 512 of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act, the present direct loan program, and substitutes a new section, establishing a new policy.

3. Congressional intent as to declaration of direct loan areas was expressed to include small cities, towns, and rural areas. Thirty thousand population was used as a guideline where the town is not part of the metropolitan area of a big city. VA could declare larger towns as eligible areas on the basis of a historical shortage of mortgage funds.

4. Authorized an additional $150 million for the period July 1, 1957, to June 30, 1958; and provided that the Administrator may recover, until July 25, 1958, the $60 million he failed to draw prior to June 30, 1956.

5. Increased the maximum amount of direct loans from $10,000 to $13,500.

6. Provided for an advance commitment to a builder for a reservation of direct loan funds upon the payment of a commitment fee of 2 percent of the amount of the funds reserved. The commitment to be valid for not over 3 months and subject to extension if the builder is active and has contracted with an eligible veteran. This provision would have provided a means under which builders could obtain financing for new construction in small cities, towns, and rural areas.

7. Provided that the Administrator should commence processing the direct-loan application of the veteran without delay, submitting the information to the voluntary home mortgage credit program and giving that agency 20 days to find a lender. Also gave the Administrator the authority to transfer the commitment fee paid by the builder to the private lender who purchases the loan from the VA.

8. Provided that the Administrator could make construction advances to the veteran and builder during construction, thereby eliminating the necessity of the builder obtaining a construction loan.

9. Provided discretionary authority to the Administrator to exempt new construction under this section from the subdivision and land-planning requirements. Permitted the building of homes in keeping with the area in which they are located, thereby eliminating the Veterans' Administration's present demands that a builder, building in a country town, must pave the streets, install curbs and gutters in front of the house, that being the only place in the town in which that type of improvement is done. The bill did not permit any deviations from the Veterans' Administration minimum construction requirements.

10. Included a technical correction requested by Veterans' Administration with reference to the guaranteeing of automatic loans.

NOTE.—The Committee on Veterans' Affairs has reported 5 bills (4 enacted into law) which convey land either to the Veterans' Administration or from the Veterans' Administration to certain municipalities, etc.

VETERANS IN AMERICA

Population of veterans

America's population of living veterans is more than 22,600,000.

Seventy percent, or more than 15,300,000, served in World War II. They average 38 years of age.

More than 5 million—average age 28—served during the Korean conflict period. Approximately 900,000 of them are "double duty" veterans, serving both in World War II and the Korean conflict.

Less than 3 million—average age 63—served in World War I.

Spanish-American War veterans, average age 80, number 55,000. Another hundred or so oldtimers, in their 80's and 90's, served in the Indian wars.

The Nation's veterans, together with their families, make up more than 40 percent of the total population of the United States.

MEDICINE

VA operates 173 hospitals for the care of ill and disabled veterans. On any average day, VA's patient load approaches 115,000. During an average year, VA admits nearly half a million veterans to its hospitals.

Admissions are under a priority system.

First call goes to veterans with service-connected conditions. Generally, the service-connected can get admitted immediately.

And next, if beds are available, come veterans with non-service-connected ailments who are unable to pay for private hospitalization. In addition to signing a statement of inability to pay, they also must submit a statement of their assets and liabilities.

INSURANCE

Nearly 6 million veterans today hold GI insurance policies valued at nearly $44 billion. The breakdown:

Nearly 5 million World War II veterans hold $35.7 billion of national service life insurance; 640,000 Korea veterans hold $6.6 billion of special nonconvertible, nonparticipating GI term insurance; 24,000 disabled Korea veterans have $239 million of term and permanent insurance available just to them; 300,000 World War I veterans hold $1.6 billion of United States Government life insurance.

GI LOANS

Eligibility: Any person who served in the armed services at any time on or after September 16, 1940, and prior to July 26, 1947, or on or after June 27, 1950, and prior to February 1, 1955, discharged under conditions other than dishonorable after active service of 90 days or more or because of disability incurred in line of duty is eligible. Generally loans must be made prior to July 26, 1958, for World War II veterans; veterans of Korea have until January 31, 1965. Widows of deceased veterans whose death was due to service may also qualify.

Amounts: Non-real-estate loans up to $2,000 and real-estate loans in certain cases up to $7,500, or a prorated portion thereof, or loans of both types or combinations thereof, may be guaranteed with interest at not more than 4½ percent per annum, repayable in not more than 30 years, except in the case of farm realty, which may run for 40 years. (Maturity on non-real-estate loan may not exceed 10 years.) If the proceeds of the loan are to be used for the acquisition of residential property, the amount guaranteed may be 60 percent of the loan but not over $7,500. Banks or other lending institutions make the loans, with the Government guaranteeing 50 or 60 percent of the loan, but in no case to exceed the above amounts. Under certain conditions, Veterans' Administration is authorized to lend, until June 30, 1958, up to $10,000 directly to the veteran when private sources are not available.

EDUCATION

More than 10 million veterans so far have trained under these 4 programs. That's four times the total enrollments in every college and university in the United States of America.

Of the 10 million total—

More than 7,800,000—one-half of all World War II veterans—trained under the World War II GI bill. Of them, nearly 50 percent went to schools below the college level (such as trade and technical schools); more than 25 percent studied in college, and the rest trained on the job and on the farm.

Another 1,800,000—2 out of every 5 Korea veterans—trained under the Korean GI bill. Their numbers will grow (the program doesn't end until 1965).

A new trend has developed under the Korean GI bill. Fewer veterans have attended schools below the college level (less than 40 percent), and more have gone to college (more than 50 percent). Enrollments in on-the-job and on-the-farm courses account for the balance.

Another 612,000 disabled World War II veterans and 48,000 disabled Korea veterans have received vocational rehabilitation training. Some 40 percent have trained for top-level jobs in professional and managerial fields.

It has helped raise the educational level of veterans to better than 4 years of high school, whereas the level of nonveteran males, same age group, is but 2 years of high school. "Your every voter, as surely as your chief magistrate, exercises a public trust," said Grover Cleveland. Through more education, veterans have become better prepared to exercise this public trust.

It has helped build up America's reservoirs of trained manpower, so urgently needed for our Nation's strength and well-being. This country has gained immeasurably from the 500,000 engineers, 250,000 school teachers, 170,000 doctors, dentists, and nurses, and 115,000 scientists who learned their skills under the GI bill.

Work of the Committee on Foreign Affairs

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. THOMAS S. GORDON

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, during the 1st session of the 85th Congress, the Committee on Foreign Affairs made significant contributions to the international relations of the United States. As a result of the critical political situation which exists in the world, the committee devoted much time to a searching review and examination of the foreign-policy problems which face this Nation today. Constant attention and a thorough consideration was given to all matters which have come before us in this session.

The security of our country has been enhanced by the coordination of defense measures, which has contributed materially toward the defense of the American Continent by the promotion of close collaboration with the military forces of the American Republics. In other areas of the Free World, our mutual allies have acted affirmatively in deterring the progress of international communism.

As chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, I wish to express my sincere appreciation to all members on the committee for their wholehearted cooperation and assistance. The committee, operating on a bipartisan basis, has contributed to the strength and unity which represents the United States to the governments of the world.

Measures of international and national importance were given thorough consideration and were enacted in this session. The committee acted responsibly, courageously, and constructively on all matters pertaining to our foreign-policy problems.

It is very gratifying that our Nation is making such a sincere effort to help solve the economic and political problems which confront the peoples of Spain, Poland, and Latin America. Strong democratic governments will emerge with the improvement in the economic standards in these countries.

Our extension of aid to Poland during these trying days under a new regime is a step in the right direction for the Polish Government to pursue its own independent course. The $48 million worth of goods that we will ship to Polish ports, plus the $46 million more in surplus agricultural commodities, may loosen the Kremlin's hold on Poland to such a degree that the Communist empire will be seriously weakened. The renewal of trade with Poland will certainly give us a clearer understanding of Poland's unfortunate current position and the hope of her eventual freedom with our reasonable assistance.

Spain today is an important link in our mutual-defense system. Spain's present defense agreements with the United States provide assurance for continued military and naval operations in Western Europe and the Mediterranean area. Consequently, the adequate defense of Spain assures the protection of our vital bases located there which are of importance to United States security interests. We are fortunate in having Spain a mutual partner in the fight against international communism. It is conceivable that Spain has much to offer to the international organizations that are dedicated to the free people of the world. Every effort should be made to invite Spain for membership in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

Our Nation applauds the efforts that are being made in the American Republics to deal with the menace of communism. The peoples of Latin America have recognized the dangers of communism and have successfully combated this scourge by preserving democratic governments. In the uncertain and troubled world of today the future security of the United States may well depend upon maintaining a solid front in the defense of the American Continent. It is, therefore, important that we should continue to exert every effort in the direction of our foreign policy toward Latin America to promote cordial relations with the Republics of this hemisphere, not only by military leadership in our fight against international communism but in economic and cultural activities as well.

(By way of comparison, the money involved in public bills before the committee during the 73d Cong. was $102,000.)

MEASURES ENACTED INTO LAW

MUTUAL SECURITY ACT OF 1957

This act extended the mutual security program for another year, authorizing a total of $3,367,083,000 as a result of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses. The above figure represents a reduction of $250,250,000 from the Senate figure of $3,617,333,000 and an increase of $250,250,000 above the House authorization of $3,116,833,000. In reporting this bill the committee was aware that the United States is confronted with serious problems in the field of foreign affairs and that satisfactory solutions to many of these problems have not yet been found; approved August 14, 1957, Public Law 85-141.

MIDDLE EAST DOCTRINE

The purpose of the resolution is to authorize the President to undertake economic and military cooperation with nations in the general area of the Middle East in order to assist in the strengthening and defense of their independence.

Three primary objectives are accomplished by the resolution:

First, it puts the Soviet Union on notice that the United States intends to use its Armed Forces if necessary to secure and protect any nation or group of nations of the Middle East requesting such aid against overt armed aggression from any nation controlled by international communism.

Second, the resolution by its scope and spirit, as well as by its language, is intended to make clear to the governments and the people of the Middle East the attitude and the policy of the United States toward them. The policy of the United States toward the area and its readiness to provide assistance contemplates no infringement of the sovereignty of any nation.

Third, the resolution removes certain restrictions on the use of mutual security funds by the President which are contained in existing law. A sum not to exceed $200 million may be used for the purpose of furnishing economic and military assistance pursuant to the provisions of section 401 (a) of the Mutual Security Act of 1954, as amended, and without regard to section 105 of the Mutual Security Appropriation Act, 1957.

The maintenance of international peace and security, insofar as the foreign policy of the United States is concerned, has involved all three objectives. To utilize one is not to exclude the others. This is the impulse behind the language contained in section 2 of the resolution respecting employment by the President of the United States of the Armed Forces of the United States in the general area of the Middle East consonant with the treaty obligations of the United States and with the Constitution of the United States; approved March 9, 1957, Public Law 85-7.

AMENDMENT OF ANGLO-AMERICAN FINANCIAL AGREEMENT

The bill amends the Anglo-American Financial Agreement and provides that the United Kingdom will give up all rights to claim a waiver of interest under the original agreement. In return the United States agrees that the United Kingdom may postpone a maximum of seven payments of interest and principal beginning with the interest payment due on December 31, 1956.

This resolution does not involve a determination by the Congress as to whether or not the United States should waive or postpone its collection of any current or future interest payments on the British loan of 1946. The decision of the Congress on this basic issue was made in 1946 when it ratified the Anglo-American financial agreement of December 6, 1945.

This resolution is necessitated by the fact that the complex formula for determining whether or not the borrower is entitled to a waiver of interest does not work satisfactorily because of changes which have occurred during the last 12 years. It would defeat the purpose of the waiver clause if long negotiations accompanied by a certain amount of controversy became necessary whenever the United Kingdom is confronted by a financial crisis; approved May 31, 1957, Public Law 85-21.

CONVEYANCE OF CERTAIN LAND IN TEXAS

The bill authorizes the Secretary of State to take the necessary action to make possible an exchange of land now held by two school districts in Texas for other land more suitable for school purposes; approved May 31, 1957, Public Law 85-42.

SURRENDER TREE SITE, SANTIAGO, CUBA

This bill provides for the transfer of responsibility for the care and maintenance of the Surrender Tree site in Santiago, Cuba, from the Department of the Army to the American Battle Monuments Commission. This memorial marks the spot at which the preliminary surrender of the Spaniards occurred on July 17, 1898; approved August 13, 1957, Public Law 85-125.

CORREGIDOR-BATAAN MEMORIAL COMMISSION

The bill enables the Corregidor-Bataan Memorial Commission to waive certain legislative restrictions so as to permit the employment of an individual, retired military person, to serve as an Executive Director of the Commission. Similarly, it will permit the employment of a small number of clerical workers without regard to the provisions of the Classification Act of 1949; approved August 28, 1957, Public Law 85-179.

DISPOSAL OF CERTAIN LANDS TO ALIENS

The bill amends the act of August 27, 1935, as amended, by deleting the present restriction that the Secretary of State may only lease or dispose of certain lands to citizens of the United States. The bill permits the disposal of lands and interests in lands by the Secretary of State to aliens; approved August 28, 1957, Public Law 85-201.

BUFFALO AND FORT ERIE PUBLIC BRIDGE AUTHORITY

The resolution provides for the continuation of the Buffalo and Fort Erie Public Bridge Authority with power to maintain and operate the highway bridge over the Niagara River between Buffalo, N. Y., and Fort Erie, Ontario, Canada. Similarly, this resolution repeals the resolution approved July 27, 1956 (Public Law 824, 84th Cong.), which granted the State of New York authority to negotiate and enter into an agreement or compact with the Government of Canada for the establishment of the Niagara Frontier Port Authority to take over the operation, control, and maintenance of the bridge and provided for the termination of the corporate existence of the Buffalo and Fort Erie Public Bridge Authority; approved August 14, 1957, Public Law 85-145.

SECOND WORLD METALLURGICAL CONGRESS

The resolution provides for an official welcome by the Congress to the overseas metal scientists who will attend the World Metallurgical Congress sponsored by the American Society for Metals to be held in Chicago, Ill., on November 2 to 8, 1957; approved August 31, 1957, Public Law 85-247.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY CELEBRATION

The resolution authorizes the President to invite the States of the Union and foreign countries to participate in the St. Lawrence Seaway celebration to be held in Chicago, Ill., from January 1, 1959, to December 31, 1959.

The year 1959 will mark the opening of the St. Lawrence Seaway to deep-draft vessels, thereby permitting the uninterrupted shipment of goods from all ports in the world to all ports along the Great Lakes; approved August 30, 1957, Public Law 85-228.

CONCURRENT AND HOUSE RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED

MEMBERSHIP OF SPAIN IN NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION, HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 115

The resolution expresses the sense of Congress that the President take all proper and necessary steps to bring about an invitation to Spain to become a party to the North Atlantic Treaty and a member of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

Passed House March 20, 1957, unanimous-consent proceedings; passed Senate April 12, 1957.

URGING AFFIRMATIVE ACTION BY THE UNITED NATIONS ON THE PROBLEM OF HUNGARY, HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 204

The purpose of this resolution is to request the immediate reconvening of the General Assembly of the United Nations to consider the report of the United Nations Special Committee on the Problem of Hungary on the brutal action of the Soviet Union in Hungary. The text of the resolution is expanded to deal with other captive nations in Eastern Europe so that the Hungarian tragedy shall not be repeated elsewhere in the world.

Passed House, June 26, 1957, unanimous-consent proceedings; passed Senate, amended, June 26, 1957; conference report adopted in Senate and in House, August 6, 1957.

EXTENDING GREETINGS TO GHANA, HOUSE RESOLUTION 185

The resolution conveys the greetings of Congress to the Legislative Assembly of Ghana on the occasion of the independence of that state, March 6, 1957. Further, it reaffirms the friendship of the United States for the people of Ghana.

Passed House March 6, 1957, unanimous-consent proceedings, without reference to committee.

CONDOLENCES ON THE DEATH OF PRESIDENT RAMÓN MAGSAYSAY, OF THE REPUBLIC OF THE PHILIPPINES, HOUSE RESOLUTION 201

The resolution expresses the condolences of Congress to the people of the Republic of the Philippines in the loss of their beloved President, His Excellency Ramón Magsaysay.

Passed House March 18, 1957, unanimous-consent proceedings, without reference to committee.

PAN-AMERICAN DAY CELEBRATION, HOUSE RESOLUTION 203

The resolution designates Monday, April 15, 1957, for the celebration of Pan-American Day, at which time it is the custom of the legislative bodies of the various Republics to exchange greetings and expressions of cordial friendship.

Passed House March 18, 1957, unanimous-consent proceedings, without reference to committee.

UNACCOUNTED AMERICAN PRISONERS OF WAR TAKEN BY THE COMMUNISTS, HOUSE RESOLUTION 292

The resolution urges the President to continue his efforts for the return of, or a satisfactory accounting for, the 450 American prisoners of war taken by the Communists during the Korean conflict.

Passed House July 9, 1957, unanimous-consent proceedings.

CONDOLENCES ON THE DEATH OF PRESIDENT CARLOS CASTILLO ARMAS OF THE REPUBLIC OF GUATEMALA, HOUSE RESOLUTION 379

The resolution expresses the condolences of Congress to the Government of the Republic of Guatemala in the loss of their President, Carlos Castillo Armas.

Passed House July 29, 1957, unanimous-consent proceedings, without reference to committee.

MEASURES PASSED BY HOUSE BUT NOT FINALLY ACTED UPON IN SENATE

AUTHORIZING AMBASSADOR HENRY CABOT LODGE AND CERTAIN MEMBERS OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES TO ACCEPT AWARD TENDERED BY THE GOVERNMENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF ITALY, H. R. 8582

This bill authorizes Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge, Hon. William A. Barrett, Representative from the State of Pennsylvania, and Hon. James G. Fulton, Representative from the State of Pennsylvania, to accept and wear the award of the Order Al Merito della Repubblica Italiana, tendered by the Government of the Republic of Italy.

Passed House, July 12, 1957, unanimous-consent proceedings, without committee action.

AUTHORIZING HON. VICTOR L. ANFUSO, MEMBER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, TO ACCEPT AWARDS TENDERED BY THE REPUBLICS OF ITALY AND CUBA, H. R. 8734

This bill authorizes Hon. VICTOR L. ANFUSO, Representative from the State of New York, to accept and wear the awards of commander of the Order of Merit of the Italian Republic, and commander of the National Order of Merit "Carlos Manuel de Cespedes," Cuba, tendered by the Republics of Italy and Cuba.

Passed House, July 16, 1957, unanimous-consent proceedings, without reference to committee.

MEASURES REPORTED BUT NOT FAVORABLY ACTED UPON IN THE HOUSE

PAYMENT TO THE GOVERNMENT OF DENMARK, S. 2448

This bill authorizes an appropriation of $5,296,302 to the $35,432,350 already paid to the Danish shipowners for the 40 Danish ships that were requisitioned by the United States in 1941.

The additional payment is necessitated by the fact that the procedures followed when the ships were first requisitioned established a legal situation under which the owners of the vessels could not receive full compensation in the terms of the original understanding between the Danish Ambassador and the Department of State.

Reported to House, July 30, 1957.

STATUS OF FORCES AGREEMENTS, HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 16

This resolution provides for the revision of the Status of Forces Agreement and certain other treaties and international agreements, or the withdrawal of the United States from such treaties and agreements, so that foreign countries will not have criminal jurisdiction over American Armed Forces personnel stationed within their boundaries.

Reported to House, July 1, 1957; hearing by Rules Committee on request for rule, July 2 and 10, 1957.

The Van Zandt Bill, H. R. 6975, Is a Compromise Measure Which Will Provide Aid to Labor Surplus Areas in a Reasonable and Realistic Manner, Thus Solving a Vexing Problem That Has Been Permitted To Become a Political Football at the Expense of the Misery and Heartaches of the Unemployed

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. JAMES E. VAN ZANDT

OF PENNSYLVANIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, on the eve of the adjournment of the 1st session of the 85th Congress, it is regretted that during the 8-month session no progress has been made in having distressed area legislation enacted.

This inactivity on the part of Congress is inexcusable since both major political parties are on record in giving recognition in their 1956 party platforms to the urgent need for Federal aid to areas having persistent and substantial unemployment.

Although the need for Federal aid to labor surplus areas is readily apparent, it is impossible to understand the action of the democratically controlled 85th Congress in pigeonholing distressed area legislation.

A subcommittee of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee held hearings on distressed area legislation last March, at which time I testified to the urgent need for Federal aid to labor surplus areas. To date, the subcommittee has not submitted its recommendations to the Senate Banking and Currency Committee.

As far as the House of Representatives is concerned, I am informed that there are over 40 bills pending before the committee, including the 2 bills I introduced on the subject—one of which is H. R. 6975, which is designed as a realistic approach to the solving of the perplexing problem. Despite the interest manifested, no action was taken nor scheduled by the committee on distressed area legislation during this session of Congress. Meanwhile, unemployment conditions in distressed areas have become gradually worse each month since the convening of Congress on January 3, 1957. It is a serious indictment of the 85th Congress that this important legislation has been sidetracked and virtually ignored during this session.

Can it be true that the failure to enact distressed area legislation is deliberate since this is not an election year? If so, the Democratic leadership is guilty of playing politics with the misery of the unemployed by withholding action on such vital legislation until 1958. It is recalled that in 1956 Democrats made distressed area legislation a major campaign issue. One would expect, therefore, that since the Democrats are in control of both branches of Congress—and likewise, all Congressional committees—they would redeem their oft-repeated pledge to get action on distressed area legislation as soon as the 85th Congress convened.

Since it is an accepted fact that actions speak louder than words, the wailing and beating of breasts by Democrats in the 1956 campaign with respect to providing aid for distressed areas is, in the face of the facts, nothing more than campaign oratory at its worst. This being true, we can expect another torrent of tear-jerking statements from Democratic candidates next year, in the hope of affecting the outcome of the Congressional elections in 1958.

Mr. Speaker, since the 83d Congress, when I first introduced legislation to aid distressed areas, I have witnessed the clumsy and ineffective manner in which the subject has been handled. This is to be regretted sincerely because, as President Eisenhower pointed out in his state of the Union message, and in other public utterances, we have pockets of unemployment throughout the Nation despite the general prosperity of the country as a whole.

As a result of President Eisenhower's pronouncement, the administration version of a bill was introduced in the 84th Congress. In addition to reintroducing my own bill from the 83d Congress, I also introduced a bill incorporating the views of the Eisenhower administration.

Meanwhile, the Democrats sponsored bills in the Senate and House of Representatives known respectively as the Douglas and Spence bills. It was evident from the action taken on the Senate bill in the 84th Congress, when it was approved in the Senate by a 2-to-1 vote, that there is intense interest and a compelling need for distressed area legislation. Unfortunately, the conflicting versions of the bill approved by the House Committee on Banking and Currency and the Senate-approved bill resulted in no action on the legislation in the House before the adjournment of the 84th Congress. The conflict developed over a difference of opinion regarding some administrative details and a few substantive matters with regard to the execution of the program.

This year, with the history of the fate of the Senate bill fresh in the memories of all interested Members of Congress, it was expected that a new start would be made in finding a practical solution to the legislative stalemate encountered in the 84th Congress.

Recalling the rosy promises of the Democrats during the 1956 campaign, it was regarded as a certainty that the democratically controlled 85th Congress would lose no time in making good its avowed promise to enact the legislation speedily. As previously stated, the record of the House of Representatives during the 1st session of the 85th Congress, which shows no action taken or scheduled on distressed area legislation, is a sorrowful reminder of how soon glib campaign statements are forgotten. In view of the lack of action on distressed area legislation, they can only be interpreted in their true light—as purely "window dressing" and mere campaign oratory.

Regardless of the attempt to find a readymade excuse for delaying action during this session on distressed-area legislation, the grim fact is that unemployment conditions in these affected areas are steadily growing more acute. This is confirmed by the July 1957 Summary of Labor Market Developments in Major Areas, issued by the United States Department of Labor.

The summary discloses that 11 States and Puerto Rico have several areas of "substantial labor surplus." They are plagued with unemployment to such an extent that they are classified as major areas with unemployment ranging from 9 to 11.9 percent. In addition to the 11 States with major areas of substantial labor surplus, there are 20 other States, classified as smaller areas, in which unemployment is equally acute. In other words, there are 31 States that are adversely affected by the gaunt specter of unemployment.

In discussing unemployment I know whereof I speak, because a major portion of my Congressional District in Pennsylvania has been classified since 1949, save for a short period during the Korean war, as an area having a substantial labor surplus. At various times during the period from 1949 to the present unemployment was over 18 percent in the Altoona, Pa., area, which is one of the major labor-surplus areas in the Nation. At the present time unemployment in the Altoona area is over 9 percent. For years unemployment in the DuBois-Clearfield area in my Congressional District has exceeded 6 percent.

As a matter of fact, in Pennsylvania we have the following areas that have been classified for years as having a "substantial labor surplus": Altoona, Erie, Johnstown, Berwick, Bloomsburg, Clearfield, DuBois, Lewistown, Lock Haven, Pottsville, Sunbury, Shamokin, Mount Carmel, Uniontown, and Connellsville. These labor-surplus areas in the great Keystone State are joined by scores of areas in the other 30 States where unemployment is a persistent and chronic economic malady.

Mr. Speaker, it is time to face the grim fact that a compromise bill—as exemplified by my bill, H. R. 6975—is the only practical solution to the legislative deadlock facing distressed-area legislation.

It is abundantly clear that, due to the failure of the 84th Congress to resolve its differences in the Senate and House versions of distressed-area legislation and to the listless attitude of the 1st session of the 85th Congress in trying to effect a compromise, we face 1958 without enactment of this important legislation. In good conscience we simply cannot continue to ignore this distressing situation any longer.

We owe it to the distressed areas in 31 States and Puerto Rico to stop squabbling over details and to unite our efforts in approving a reasonable, yet realistic, program to ease the pangs of unemployment that are a blight on the economy of an otherwise prosperous Nation.

I am not interested in who gets the credit, nor do I have pride of authorship in recommending a careful study of my compromise bill, H. R. 6975. I think it is an accepted fact that the differences in the administration bill, the Douglas bill, and the Spence bill appear insurmountable. Meanwhile, Congress is stymied in its efforts to carry out the desire expressed by President Eisenhower that "we must deal with the pockets of chronic unemployment that here and there mar the Nation's general industrial prosperity." To achieve this goal, my compromise bill, H. R. 6975—which is a revised version of similar bills on the subject introduced by me in Congress since 1953—incorporates the best provisions of the proposals of the administration bill as well as the best that can be found in the bills introduced by Senator DOUGLAS and Representative SPENCE.

In arriving at a fair and reasonable compromise, I found that in some instances the administration bill fell short of providing adequately to meet the needs of chronically distressed areas. On the other hand, the Douglas and Spence bills provide too liberal assistance to areas whose economic decline is of recent duration. I took into consideration the fact that normally such communities have sufficient resources and are not in need of the variety of programs offered in these bills. In other words, I came to the conclusion that a fair compromise can be effected by providing different types of aid to labor surplus areas based upon the duration and levels of unemployment.

Therefore, my compromise bill, H. R. 6975, would reduce the cost of the program and yet leave sufficient funds for communities which meet the most rigid tests of chronic unemployment and economic distress. In short, my bill would assure that the neediest communities would get aid. At the same time, by establishing limits on some of the aid provided in the Douglas and Spence bills, it would be possible to reduce the overall cost of these programs. Although my bill would greatly decrease the cost of the Douglas bill, and liberalize the provisions of the administration bill, it would still provide essentially the same benefits—such as grants for technical assistance, loans and participations, grants for public facilities, vocational training, and retraining subsistence payments.

My bill, H. R. 6975, would also amend section 207 (a) of the Small Business Act of 1953 by empowering the Small Business Administration to make loans to local private nonprofit organizations—including industrial foundations, development corporations, and similar groups—formed to assist, develop, and expand the economy of areas of substantial and persistent unemployment, but only where the purpose of the loan was to enable such organizations to provide supplementary assistance to one or more small-business concerns in such area—and only after such concerns had qualified for loans from the Small Business Administration.

I am convinced that a thoughtful study of my bill, H. R. 6975, will reveal it as a practical and reasonable approach in ending the legislative bickering which has nullified all efforts to enact distressed area legislation. This is especially true when you consider the cost of the various bills.

The administration bill, S. 1433, is considered as a conservative approach and will cost about $55 million. The Douglas bill, S. 964, represents an ultraliberal approach to the subject and would cost in excess of $325 million. By comparison, my compromise bill, H. R. 6975, would cost in the neighborhood of $200 million and would extend Federal aid to labor surplus areas in a reasonable, yet realistic, manner.

Mr. Speaker, I have been zealous in my efforts since 1953 in sponsoring distressed area legislation in Congress, and I know I am joined by my colleagues in my reluctance to see the misery of unemployment become a political football. We are about to adjourn this session of Congress with little or no success in attaining the common objective of enacting a program to aid areas certified by the United States Department of Labor as areas of substantial labor surplus. It is my sincere hope that we recognize the futility of endless bickering and legislative stalemates which have hovered over distressed area legislation for the past 5 years.

As previously stated, I have no pride of authorship in urging consideration of H. R. 6975 as an acceptable compromise in the field of distressed area legislation.

Therefore, I earnestly beseech that we unite in support of the compromise bill, H. R. 6975, because I honestly feel it provides the means of leading us out of the legislative wilderness of delay and despair in which distressed area legislation has needlessly floundered the past 5 years.

Capitol Cloakroom

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN W. McCORMACK

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following broadcast:

CAPITOL CLOAKROOM, AS BROADCAST OVER THE CBS RADIO NETWORK

Mr. BANCROFT. Congressman McCORMACK, why is President Eisenhower disappointed in Congress?

Mr. CHURCH. Is legislation needed to help labor clean house, sir?

Mr. DOWNS. Representative McCORMACK, does the Wisconsin election mean a Democrat in the White House in 1960?

Mr. BANCROFT. Well, Congressman McCORMACK, welcome to Capitol Cloakroom. A veteran of 29 years in the House, you are the Democratic leader on the floor and therefore in a good position to appraise the session of Congress which has just ended.

Now, President Eisenhower told us at a news conference that he was disappointed in the record of Congress.

Why do you think he was?

Mr. McCORMACK. Well, when President Eisenhower made that statement he was talking, in my opinion, as a Republican politician and not as the President, or one objectively evaluating what this session of Congress has done.

I think the President was—is somewhat peeved at the fact that his own party in Congress has deserted him. On many of the rollcalls on bills that the President recommended, we find from 50 to 70 percent of his own party in the House of Representatives voting against him. And, of course, some of the President's close advisers who pretty much keep themselves on the job to advise the President, probably realize that they had to have some diversionary statement because the record of this Congress clearly contradicts what the President said.

Mr. BANCROFT. Well, you think this has been a good, productive Congress?

Mr. McCORMACK. It has been an outstanding Congress, a most fruitful Congress; and, furthermore, since President Eisenhower made that statement, there has been a large number of important bills which have passed both branches of Congress.

Mr. CHURCH. Pinpoint a couple of the reasons why you think this was an extraordinarily successful session.

Mr. McCORMACK. Well, the volume of work done by the Congress is far greater than was done in the 83d Congress, which is a fair comparison, because the 83d Congress was a Republican-controlled Congress.

The importance of the legislation that we have passed through this Congress during this session: For example, we started out with the Mideast doctrine of President Eisenhower's which would have been unnecessary if he had given the right kind of leadership at the time of the Suez trouble when it first started, but, nevertheless, due to his uncertain and confused leadership, we had to step in and fill the vacuum in the Middle East to create an influence that had been destroyed when Britain and France influence in that wide area and that important area of the world was destroyed, mainly, in part, by actions on the part of President Eisenhower and the present administration. And we had to step in to assert an influence there of the Western World. We are the only country who could do it; and if the right kind of leadership was given to the country and to the free world at the outset of the Suez Canal problem and controversy and difficulty, there would have been no necessity for that; but the Democratic Congress rose to the heights and recognized that water had gone over the dam that was unnecessary; we passed the resolution.

Mr. BANCROFT. Well, Senator——

Mr. McCORMACK. Now, only a few days ago we passed another historic bill known as the civil-rights bill, which is really the right-to-vote bill, and might be termed the right to register, because you can't vote until you register, and this is to remove difficulties and obstacles, unnecessary obstacles, against all Americans, without regard to race, color, or creed, registering, but with particular emphasis at that time upon our Americans of the colored race.

Mr. BANCROFT. I wanted to ask before we left foreign aid—I mean foreign policy: You say that Democratic-controlled Congress did approve the Mid-East doctrine, but were you supporting the President's Congress when you knocked a billion dollars off his foreign-aid request?

Mr. McCORMACK. Oh, when you talk about knocking a billion dollars, as a matter of fact, it is more than a billion dollars, Mr. Bancroft.

He recommended about $4.9 billion and what went through is about three-billion-seven-hundred-and-some-odd-million dollars, but there is about $600 million more which was reappropriated from previous years' appropriations.

Mr. BANCROFT. Well, my question still stands. Is that supporting his foreign policy?

Mr. McCORMACK. Certainly it—we gave him plenty of money in which to carry on.

Mr. BANCROFT. Well, let me put it another way——

Mr. McCORMACK. Last year when he made a recommendation, you will remember, there was a billion-dollar cut and the President complained, and yet when the fiscal year was over, there was still $500 million that was not used, so we appropriated $500 million more than was necessary.

Mr. Downs. Well, McCormack, it seems to me that what is involved here in the—in these postpolitical sessions and assessment is that the Democratic Congress and the administration are both going to be contesting who did what for whom.

Now, you say that the Eisenhower doctrine, which was unnecessary because of, or arose because of lack of leadership, yet it is called the Eisenhower doctrine and was passed by the Democratic Congress which then takes or is attempting to take credit for it.

That is paradox, isn't it?

Mr. McCormack. Well, Mr. Downs, I think that my statement is clearly consistent.

If, when the Suez Canal trouble started, when Nasser stepped in there and took it over in violation of an international agreement, this administration had devised the sound and affirmative policies that it was capable of, and if when the British and French moved in, in Suez, we had not pulled the rug out from under them and cooperated with the Soviet Union and the United Nations in doing so, thereby destroying the influence of Britain and France in the Middle East, and it was a great influence, there would have been no necessity for the Eisenhower doctrine, which took place, which we passed 4 months later, but the influence being destroyed, we had to step in there.

Mr. Church. Even so, even so, what happened to the unanimity? There was unanimity in the House when you voted on the doctrine, and that unanimity seems to have gone out the window. It went out the window very shortly thereafter, as witness the cuts in the foreign-aid structure.

Mr. McCormack. Well, no, the cuts——

Mr. Church. What happened?

Mr. McCormack. The cuts in the foreign aid have absolutely nothing to do with the—with the Eisenhower Mid-East doctrine. The reductions in the foreign aid are the best judgment of Congressional committees as to what amount of money would be—we would be justified in appropriating during the present fiscal year, in connection with foreign aid or mutual assistance. It amounts, in direct appropriations and indirect appropriations, to about $3,400,000,000. It is the feeling of Congress that that is adequate, and if it is not adequate the President can meet that situation next January by submitting to Congress a supplemental budget.

Now what we Democrats, and I am speaking for myself, would like to see the President do, is to be more consistent in his leadership, to be more firm in his leadership, not to be vascillating.

I don't like to pick up the paper, and I am sure other Americans do not, and see Zorayin browbeating us, the United States, using scornful language toward us and then the President of the United States making a conciliatory statement.

Mr. Church. What would you do about it, sir?

Mr. McCormack. I would use firm language. I would let them know that the United States is a powerful nation. I would let them know that the United States is not—is not going to permit country after country to be internally subverted and taken over by Communist forces and become subject to the Communist satellite. I would have, in the case of Hungary, taken affirmative action at the right time.

Mr. Church. Action, did you say, or words?

Mr. McCormack. Exactly. We could have taken plenty of action there before the Nagy regime was overthrown by the Kremlin stepping in and putting Kadar and his gang again in control of Hungary.

Mr. Bancroft. Well, Congressman McCormack, do you think that just words, no matter how sharp, would have stopped all that; or would you be in favor of sending troops in to do it? How far would you go in order to stop this thing?

Mr. McCormack. We don't have to send troops there. There are plenty of things we can do in order to—because the only language that the Communists appreciate and understand is the language of strength. Above all, we should keep our Armed Forces maintained at the highest level necessary, consistent with world conditions.

We have seen a hundred thousand reduction in manpower in the Army, already; we see another hundred thousand going, being underway. We see the reductions in our Air Force. We see the reductions in our Navy. The world sees that.

We are having disarmament talks in London, and we have had for months, and we are trying to have the Soviet Union agree to reduce their armed forces and—why should they, because we are reducing ours unilaterally? We are eliminating the, what you might call the negotiable fat, by reducing our own Armed Forces, instead of trying to use that as a trading point for the purpose of having the Soviet Union reduce its armed forces.

Mr. Downs. But, Mr. McCormack, the Democratic Party, to get back to the whole outlook on foreign aid, and which is part of our mutual-security system, the Democratic Party in the past has been the one that has been for the large appropriations to beef up the armed forces of our allies. Now comes a Republican administration, the Democrats are on the other side of the fence talking about reducing it, and you did reduce the foreign-aid bills, which is part of the mutual-defense system.

Mr. McCormack. No; I don't think—I don't think the evidence justifies that statement.

Take the vote today on the passage, on the agreeing to the conference report on the mutual-assistance appropriation bill. The vote was 107 Democrats for, 70 against; 87 Republicans for, 52 against.

That means there were 52 Republicans who voted among those who voted today against one penny being appropriated for foreign aid.

Mr. Bancroft. And 70 Democrats.

Mr. McCormack. Exactly. But there were 107 Democrats, still, who voted for the passage of the bill, and there were only 87 members of the President's own party, and he is in control, he is in the White House.

So I think—now when, back several years ago, the necessity for larger appropriations were greater than they are today because most of the countries of Europe, from an economic angle, were in very bad condition and it was necessary to help rebuild them economically in order to rebuild them from—from the angle of moral, from the moral angle—and from the angle of defense.

Now, that has been pretty well taken care of so that so far as Europe is concerned, there is no necessity of appropriations for economic aid. The economic aid now goes in certain countries of Southeast Asia, the Philippines, South Korea, and Formosa, the principal amount being military aid.

Mr. Bancroft. Well, Congressman McCormack, I wonder if we can get back to Congress here, and the day-to-day problems.

You are a leader of the majority party in the House. You have just completed a session, the first session in our history in which the President in the White House is forbidden by law to run for reelection. Do you think that has had any effect and if so, what effect, on the workings between——

Mr. McCormack. No question——

Mr. Bancroft. Between the White House and the Congress?

Mr. McCormack. No question about it in my mind, Mr. Bancroft. It is commonsense that when a man is starting his second term, and it is known that he cannot succeed himself because of the constitutional restriction, that immediately within his own party processes get under way in connection with controlling the next convention, within the Democratic Party and within the Republican Party there are different groupings, some affiliated with one another, some who are not, and there is the fight for control and power.

I opposed that amendment and one of the main reasons I opposed it was, it is the first, it is the only provision in the Constitution which is a limitation on the right of the individual American citizen.

Every other prohibition in the Constitution is against Government to protect the individual.

Furthermore, I opposed it because I felt it would be dangerous to put a 2-year—two-term restriction into our Constitution because, suppose 3 years, suppose sometime in the future our country is at war, and the President of the United States is finishing his second term. Is there anyone who thinks that a campaign would be for the best interests of our country, if we are fighting for our very preservation, and we had a man in the White House who was probably doing a wonderful job?

Mr. Bancroft. Are you going to try to repeal it now?

Mr. McCormack. I shall vote for its repeal, if it comes up.

I regret the day that the amendment was put on, and it was a slap at Franklin D. Roosevelt while he was buried at Hyde Park—that is what put all that over.

Mr. Downs. Well, Mr. McCormack, you talked about the achievements of this Congress; what about the things that——

Mr. McCormack. And might I say they didn't dare do it while he was alive.

Mr. Downs. Well, what——

Mr. Bancroft. Well, the Republicans weren't in control while he was alive, were they?

Mr. McCormack. Well, it wasn't purely or wholly Republican votes that did it, Mr. Bancroft. There were quite a few Democratic votes, too.

Mr. Downs. What about the things that Congress did not do, such as school aid and the rest of it, and what political effect is that going to have?

Mr. McCormack. Well, the school aid, Mr. Downs, as you know, the Republicans overwhelmingly voted against the bill, to strike out the enacting clause which killed the bill. The Democratic vote was overwhelmingly in favor of keeping the bill alive.

The vote was 208 to 203. Two of the Republican leaders in the House voted to kill the bill. If only three, a shift of only three votes, the bill would have been saved and we would have gone back to the Committee of the Whole.

The President was not even kept informed as to what the legislative situation was at the time, even if they could have gotten in touch with the President. I don't know whether they could or not. I don't know where he was at the time, whether in the White House or elsewhere.

But the Republican leadership had plenty of time to call the President. They didn't do it, and if they did and went back among their Members, they could have easily shifted three or four more votes and saved the bill.

So, while both Democrats and Republicans voted to kill the bill, the Republicans overwhelmingly voted to kill it; the Democrats overwhelmingly voted to save the bill, but unfortunately the combination of the large Republican vote to kill the bill, and the Democratic vote that voted that way, was enough to kill the bill by five votes.

Mr. Bancroft. Well, Mr. McCormack, are you not—the Democrats are in control of this Congress. Are you not trying to take the credit for the Democrats for the good things in that Congress and yet blame it on the Republicans who don't control Congress for what you regard as the bad things about this Congress?

Mr. McCormack. No, Mr. Bancroft. Each and every individual Member of Congress, elected by the people of his district, whether Republican or Democrat, and they've got to take their own responsibility for their own vote, and there are two political parties and both parties must take their responsibility, but when the President of the United States makes a recommendation, or says he is satisfied with the bill, as he did in the case of school construction, and a majority, a clear majority of his own party votes against him, I think it's fair to comment upon it, particularly when a clear majority of the Democrats vote for the bill.

Mr. Church. Well just for the record, was there anything, Mr. McCormack, that was wrong in this 1st session of the 85th Congress that was the fault of the Democratic Party?

Mr. McCormack. Well, we had a lot of difficulties.

A few weeks ago they didn't think we were going to get a bill to meet the Jencks decision; well, we knew we were.

A few weeks ago they didn't think we would get an immigration bill through, it's not as far I would like to see it go, but it's going to do an awful lot of good. We got it through.

A few weeks ago they didn't think we were going to get through the right-to-vote bill, known as the civil-rights bill, but it's through, and it will be law.

There are some things that we haven't done that I would like to see done, but there's another session of this Congress, Mr. Church, and you and I know, from your experience in Washington, and my experience, that the President's recommendations are not put through, all put through the first session of a Congress, it's a Congress.

Furthermore, every recommendation made by the President is not correct. We have done a lot in stopping some of his recommendations going through that would be harmful, to the best interests of the people of our country.

Mr. Bancroft. Well, Mr. McCormack, this is Labor Day as you know, and I believe the platform of your party, for quite a few years now, has promised some changes in the Taft-Hartley Act.

When is that, what could you tell us on this Labor Day about the chances of that?

Mr. McCormack. I would think that in the next session of Congress, that there is an excellent chance of some amendments being put through that will remove several of the inequitable provisions of the existing law.

Mr. Church. What about—what about the business of, as you hear today, labor cleaning house? Do you think there is any legislation necessary there, Mr. McCormack? I know that's a subject pretty close to your heart.

Mr. McCormack. The great majority of labor, and I'm talking about the leaders of labor, are just like the great majority of businessmen, the great majority of bankers, financiers, or any other field of activity—good, honorable men.

But, unfortunately, there is a small percentage of them, like there in past years, and there are probably today in other walks of activity who are unscrupulous. I think, directly addressing myself to it, that the McClellan committee has done a very fine job in exposing the violations of trust that have taken place by some, but we should not indict all leaders of labor for that small percentage.

However, the evidence clearly shows that something must be done to protect those trust funds and I favor legislation that will do that. But I do not, I will not favor legislation that will be punitive in nature and repressive against labor, because as you know there are certain forces in this country who are antilabor and they will try to capitalize the present situation to put through, not legislation to meet the problem of—of the—proper protection of these trust funds, but who would try to put through legislation that would be detrimental to labor, in other words, antilabor.

Mr. Bancroft. So this is——

Mr. McCormack. So, answering your question first, something should be done in connection with the trust funds. I can confine my answer to that. I don't think anyone, any honorable person wants directly antilabor legislation.

Mr. Bancroft. Well, you think this will be done in the session starting in January——

Mr. McCormack. I have every confidence that proper legislation will be passed. The one thing we have got to watch is that certain powerful elements in this country do not use the hysteria to put through antilabor legislation.

Mr. Bancroft. Well, you have quite a few things here left for the session starting in January——

Mr. McCormack. Oh, yes.

Mr. Bancroft. And that will be an election year, as you know.

Mr. McCormack. Yes.

Mr. Bancroft. Do you think Congress will be able to deal with things in an election year——

Mr. McCormack. Oh, yes——

Mr. Bancroft. Which it was unable to deal with in this nonelection year?

Mr. McCormack. Oh, yes, we Democrats have a habit of doing things.

Mr. Bancroft. You think you can legislate better when you are under the voters' guns than when you are not?

Mr. McCormack. No, no. I wouldn't say that, Mr. Bancroft, although, as you know, this is big league politics down here.

Mr. Bancroft. Well, you have been in it a long time.

Mr. Downs. Well, speaking of elections, there was an election out in Wisconsin the other day they made you Democrats very happy. What do you think this portends toward 1960 in the presidential election?

Mr. McCormack. I would say, Mr. Downs, that if anyone was to say that that was not an important election and the results very important, would be far reaching, would be one who has closed his eyes to the facts.

It was an amazing election, the first, for the Democrat to win is amazing; second, to win by the votes he did. It's fair to assume that Wisconsin, geographically located where it is, that that feeling of the people of Wisconsin as evidenced by the election results, must exist in adjoining States to Wisconsin.

To me it's a clear indication of repudiation of the leadership of President Eisenhower. I think foreign affairs entered into it, his uncertain, vascillating leadership. The feeling of fear in the minds of the American people that we are on the defensive throughout the world, and that it's due to lack of affirmative policy and consistent policy and action on the part of President Eisenhower and the present Republican administration.

And we must remember that under our Constitution the President is the sole repository in the field of foreign affairs.

Mr. Church. Well, Mr. McCormack, how do you——

Mr. McCormack. Second, might I say, not to talk longer, Mr. Church, I think the domestic questions, the farm questions, I think inflation, I think related to inflation, the economic aspect was the high interest rate, all of those played an important part, also.

Mr. Church. I just wondered how you accounted for the fact that Mr. Proxmire was defeated three times in a gubernatorial race in Wisconsin by the same man that lost to him in this senatorial race.

Wouldn't it seem to you that it was because of a completely split-up Republican Party in the State, rather than what you suggest?

Mr. McCormack. No, I don't—in a State like Wisconsin, it would be impossible for it to be for that cause alone. There must have been—what were the factors that caused the split party? What were the factors that caused people who ordinarily voted Republican and who did in the past, not on this year, on this occasion? I don't think it was any intraparty split that could account for that. It might account for some votes, and that exists in every election where there are—some disgruntled Republicans against a Republican candidate and some disgruntled Democrats against a Democratic candidate.

Mr. Bancroft. Well, Mr.——

Mr. McCormack. But they are usually not enough to affect an election, and certainly in Wisconsin that wouldn't bring about that tremendous result.

Mr. Bancroft. Well, Mr. McCormack, let's see if we can project this Wisconsin thing a little bit.

Now, there is an election coming up in New Jersey this fall, and if Governor Meyner wins there, do you think this is all adding up to a big Democratic trend that will be reflected in the Congressional elections in 1958?

Mr. McCormack. Mr. Bancroft, I have seen a big Democratic trend for the last 2 years.

To begin with, in 1956 the Democratic trend was there. It was true that President Eisenhower won by over 9,500,000 votes, but was a personal victory, because when we got to the political level between the two political parties, the Democrats—Democratic candidates for Congress—got more votes than the Republicans.

If the people, in voting for President Eisenhower for reelection, had meant that that was a manifestation against the Democratic Party, we wouldn't have had more than 160 Democrats in the House of Representatives. Instead, there was 234, I think, elected to the House, and a Democratic Senate.

So that in 1956 it was there, the trend was there. Mr. Eisenhower's personal popularity was able to save the situation for himself.

Furthermore——

Mr. Bancroft. And yet you would be in favor of repealing the law that forbids him from running again?

Mr. McCormack. I would vote for it, it isn't a question of forbidding Mr. Eisenhower, I was against, and I am still against the two-term prohibition for the reasons which I previously stated.

Mr. Bancroft. Yes; I know.

Mr. McCormack. First, it's an invasion on the right of the American citizen. The only limitation in the Constitution against the right of an American, an individual American; and second, the potential danger to our country that it could constitute.

Mr. Bancroft. Well, Mr. McCormack——

Mr. Downs. Mr. McCormack, speaking of individual rights and the rest of it and splits in the Republican Party, what has happened since the Thurmond filibuster, the civil-rights passage of this right-to-vote bill, what has happened to the split in the Democratic Party?

Mr. McCormack. Mr. Downs, despite the split in the Democratic Party, it's the first time in the history of the country that a bill was reported out of a committee, was last year, it was a Democratic-controlled committee and it passed the House but it didn't get through the Senate.

The second time legislation of this kind ever came out of a committee was in the 85th Congress, this Congress, a Democratic-controlled committee. It was passed by Democratic-controlled Congresses.

Now, I think as a result of the passage of the bill, the tensions within the Democratic Party will subside. You mark my words, gentlemen, I have been chairman of the platform committee on three out of the last four occasions. I think I know something about it. I have lived it, preserving unity in the Democratic Party in the different conventions when each time, in 1944, 1952, and 1956 when I was chairman, there were threatened walkouts. I think I know from actual experience what the situation is, and we are not—the tension is not going to be there, there will be no more threatened walkouts in Democratic conventions.

Mr. Bancroft. Well, I wonder if I could——

Mr. McCormack. And as the result of the tension subsiding, Mr. Bancroft, and Mr. Downs, and Mr. Church, unity becomes stronger and in the House we are not going to have this constant threat of a small group from the South compelled to make coalition with the great majority of the Republicans.

Mr. Bancroft. I would like to ask just one very simple question: Do you think a Democrat is going to win the Presidency in 1960, and if so which one?

Mr. McCormack. First, my first answer is "Yes"; the second one, there are, we have a dozen good candidates.

Mr. Bancroft. Well, I guess that's the best way——

Mr. McCormack. Might I say John Kennedy, of Massachusetts is one of the outstanding ones.

Mr. Bancroft. Thanks, thank you very, very much, Congressman McCormack.

The Archbishop Speaks Forth to the Critics of His Country

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GARDNER R. WITHROW

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. WITHROW. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the Record, I include herewith correspondence with the Archbishop of the Dominican Republic.

The churches of the world have always given people those things which even democracy does not always produce—truth, peace, faith, and hope.

When free people finally win the war against a Godless communism, the victory will belong to those religious faiths which defied communism to the end in the name of Christianity and humanity.

During the inflammatory criticism of the Dominican Republic in this first session, it was charged General Trujillo had encouraged communism at one time. It was inconceivable to me that a country estimated at more than 98 percent Roman Catholic could be guilty of this.

I wrote a letter to His Excellency, the Archbishop of the Dominican Republic, and I have had an answer which I am submitting for the information of the House. There is not one word of truth in the charge. Since I have never known an archbishop who feared either the truth or any layman of any type, I am satisfied His Excellency speaks without restraint, independently, and in absolute truth as only he would know it from a long and intimate association which would not be possible for any of us to experience.

The matter-of-fact tone and reporting of His Excellency is proof enough for me that the charges against the Dominican Republic are not supportable, but most certainly prejudicial and made without regard to the governmental concepts of the Latin Americas. I think His Excellency puts it well when he says the propaganda going on in the United States stems from those who are in disagreement with the Dominican regime on law and order.

I have long felt we cannot make the world over in the image of America and Americans. We have expended over $60 billion in American taxes on our efforts something along this line, and we are worse off in the world today for it.

The fault lies not only in our money, but perhaps more in ourselves. We expect praise for our generosity, but we give none; we want credit, but we will not pay credit to those who aline themselves with us; we expect homage and eternal alliance, but we will not stand firm and long.

Some of these days we are going to have to pay tribute to the Catholic churches and the stronger governments for our victory over communism. Conditions today are such that it is more profitable, more safe, and decidedly more expedient and easy to be a neutral power than to be an open and avowed enemy of communism. Those rulers and nations who played the appeasement and neutral roles with Hitler are dead and dying. I cannot repeat too often my own strong conviction that we should credit and encourage those strong chiefs of state who risk their lives, their fortunes, their family futures, and their own place in history, on the side of Christianity and democracy.

The Congress can get more headlines, more mail, and more admiring glances out of the mirror, with investigation of labor racketeers and others than we can get in a solid piece of positive legislation such as social security and a humanitarian viewpoint for the older people or the workingman. There are no headlines in the cost of living rises, or in high taxes. It is the prosecutions which get the headlines. It has remained for the defense to preserve and assure a sense of balance regardless of the pressures at the time.

Therefore, if I have come to the defense of a friend of the United States without qualification, perhaps in the end the jury of people will find I have contributed a small part to our stronger union against communism. The exchange of correspondence follows:

August 20, 1957.

Your Excellency the Archbishop Ricardo Pittini,
Ciudad Trujillo, Dominican Republic.

Your Excellency: I am requesting your opinion and comment on a matter which is of considerable consequence here in the United States and which pertains to a subject on which you would be most qualified to speak.

In your opinion:

1. Is the Government and those in authority in the Dominican Republic anti-Communist and has it ever encouraged communism?

2. Would you classify the Government as different from that of other Latin American countries? It has been charged that the Government is a dictatorship.

3. Are the people oppressed by the Government? Would your opinion be that the peoples of the Dominican Republic enjoy substantially the same freedoms which are had by people in other Latin American countries?

The Dominican Republic is under severe criticism in the United States by political exiles, and by one Member of Congress, along with some segments of the press. I have serious doubts about these charges and therefore seek Your Excellency's opinion. I am sure it will be very helpful to us.

Would it be asking too much to have a reply at your very earliest convenience?

Sincerely,

Gardner R. Withrow,
Member of Congress, United States of America.

[Translation (Spanish)]

Ciudad Trujillo Dominican Republic,
August 30, 1957.

Hon. Gardner R. Withrow,
Member of the House of Representatives of the United States of America, Washington.

Dear Mr. Withrow: It gives me pleasure to reply to your kind letter of this August 20, in which you ask my opinion about the stand of this country's Government on communism and about the differences which possibly exist between the Dominican Government and those of the other countries of Latin America in matters concerning the exercise of individual liberties.

Because of my duties as head of the Catholic Church in the Dominican Republic, I can tell you in regard to the first question that the Government and authorities of this country are absolutely anti-Communist, and they enforce, in the strictest possible manner, the stipulations of the law of the National Congress of October 20, 1936, which authorizes a prison term of 3 months to 2 years and a fine of $50 (Dominican currency) to $500 for every Communist or anarchist activity and every doctrine contrary to public morality, such as is practiced traditionally in all civilized nations.

The anti-Communist activity of the Dominican Government is very sincere and definite, manifested not only by the repressing of activities of that nature on Dominican territory, but also by giving wide and definite protection to whatever tends to strengthen the population of this country, the traditional norms of life and the principles of Christian morality. With this goal, Dominican authorities have given to the Catholic Church resolute protection without, of course, diminishing the constitutional principles of religious liberty which constitutes one of the essential norms of Dominican life.

In matters concerning the democratic or dictatorial character of the Dominican Government, compared with the other governments of Latin America, I can tell you with absolute frankness that the Dominican Republic is one country where the citizen enjoys complete liberty with the sole obligation of obeying laws scrupulously and of abstaining from all activity illegally directed against the security of the state. All legal activities can be exercised with as much freedom as in the United States, the citizen develops his spirit of initiative without fear of the slightest coercion on the part of the authorities. The Government is based upon the firm belief in authority, and order is jealously kept, a fact which has permitted the country to progress enormously without the menace of civil disturbances and without the typical disquiet of any kind of social anarchy.

I do not believe that any difference exists between the Dominican Government, from the point of view of the exercise of the principle of authority and the more liberal governments of Latin America, except that laws in the Dominican Republic are strictly obeyed and public order reaches a higher level of solidarity than in any other Latin American country in the hemisphere.

The propaganda being directed against the Dominican Republic abroad evidently is biased and emanates from elements disaffected with the regime of order, peace, and strict enforcement of the laws which exist in this country and which can be justly judged as one of the most disciplined and progressive in the world.

My best regards to you.

Ricardo Pittini,
Archbishop of Santo Domingo.

"After Living 16 Weeks in Cleveland as a Visitor From Vienna to the International Youth Leaders Exchange Program, I See the United States in Another Way: America Now Has a Face for Me and I Must Say I Like This Face"

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. FRANCES P. BOLTON

OF OHIO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 30, 1957

Mrs. BOLTON. Mr. Speaker, the citizens of my hometown, Cleveland, Ohio, have just completed another unique contribution toward good will among nations. They are just not satisfied with merely studying or talking about foreign affairs; they believe the most effective diplomacy between nations must be carried on by the people themselves.

Thus, they sponsored last year, and have repeated this year, the evergrowing international youth leaders exchange program.

In 1956 this program involved 25 leaders of youth groups and youth organizations from Western Germany. This experiment was so successful that it was not only repeated, but extended this year to include 52 youth leaders from 8 European countries. Austria was represented by 3 youth leaders; Belgium by 1; Finland sent 4, and France 6. Two came from Italy; 26 from Germany; 7 visited with us from the Netherlands, and 3 came from faraway Norway.

What impressed me most about this program was the fact that it was not just operated by our Government, but was initiated and sponsored by a group of Cleveland citizens who voluntarily got together to make this program possible. This group, headed by Kenyon C. Bolton, president of the Cleveland Council on World Affairs, included educators, businessmen, religious leaders—men and women from all walks of life and representing all religious, political, and racial groups.

The administration of the program was in the hands of one of Cleveland's most prominent Red Feather agencies, the Neighborhood Settlement Association of Cleveland. Henry B. Ollendorff, its executive director, acted as the coordinator of the program and was ably assisted by Miss Elizabeth H. Brown, the executive secretary of the project.

Although initiated and sponsored by Clevelanders, the project was a truly cooperative one. Our own Government through the International Educational Exchange Service of our State Department, contributed overseas travel grants for 38 participants, as well as a small cash grant and a great deal of help and advice. The foreign governments made possible the overseas travel of 14 of the visitors and contributed a total of $7,700 directly. Even the foreign visitors contributed directly to the program through 10 weeks of summer work in Cleveland social agencies and children's camps, without receiving any salary. The Cleveland foundation pioneered, as usual, with a grant of $3,200. The social agencies of Cleveland in which the visitors worked during the summer, made available to the program the amount of salaries which they would otherwise have paid for this summer work, totaling $10,500. The Cleveland citizens themselves responded to an appeal by Mr. Walter K. Bailey, president of the Warner & Swasey Co., and voluntarily gave to the program a total of $12,500 in hundreds of individual contributions ranging from $2 to the Cleveland Rotary Club's $1,000.

Thus, it can truly be said that this was a cooperative enterprise of citizens, governments, and foreign visitors.

The other unique feature of this program was its combination of study and work, of giving and receiving, of learning and teaching.

The foreign youth leaders arrived in Cleveland on May 1. During the first 6 weeks they stayed in private homes as the guests of Cleveland families. Each one stayed in a home for 2 weeks, and this made it possible for them to see American family life as members of families in three different settings. One hundred and fifty-six Cleveland families volunteered eagerly to serve as host families, and they included all social, religious, and racial groups in this metropolitan city.

Many of my constituents have told me how much their visitors have contributed to the broadening of their families' and their children's horizons; how they went to school with their children and told about their countries; how eager they were to learn about everything that comprises the American way of life; and how heartbreaking it was to let them go to another family after 2 weeks.

These first 6 weeks were filled with many hours of study. This period included a course on American group-work methods in the School of Applied Social Sciences of Western Reserve University, taught by Prof. Margaret Hartford. The course was followed by visits to dozens of social agencies, settlement houses, children's institutions, the juvenile court, factories, but also theaters and musical events. On 12 different occasions they met for discussions with leading Cleveland citizens on specific phases of American life, labor, industry, religion, voluntary citizen participation, and welfare work. There was never enough time for social engagements.

During the following 10 weeks, each one of our visitors worked in one of the institutions he had before visited, as a camp counselor, or a social worker, in a settlement house, a children's camp, a Scout organization, or a children's institution. They led groups of American children, working, playing, and living with them and their American fellow counselors.

When the group left Cleveland, 400 of their new friends gathered at Hiram House Camp to bid them farewell. Many of the visitors tried to say what they felt, but nobody could really express it. The leader of the Finnish group put it this way:

> We are sure that, as the years go by, our sense of the past will have one fixed dividing point: "before or after I was in America."

A young social worker from Vienna put it movingly in these words:

> After 16 weeks' experience, I see the United States in another way: America now has a face for me * * * and I must say, I like this face.

Before leaving for their home countries, I had the pleasure of welcoming the group in Washington. They visited the White House and the Capitol, and I can well understand why Clevelanders insist that this program be continued and extended for many years. Not only are these young people ambassadors of good will, but they are representatives of Europe's youth who have to come to know this country of ours as it is, and as it wants to be. At the same time they have enriched the philosophy and the work of Cleveland's agencies by working with our own young people.

This has been an exchange program in every sense of the term.

The West German Government has already responded to last year's program by inviting eight Cleveland youth leaders to come to Germany during the summer of 1958. Other such invitations will follow. Cleveland can certainly be proud of the leadership they are assuming in diplomacy—people-to-people diplomacy.

The 85th Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILL E. NEAL
OF WEST VIRGINIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. NEAL. Mr. Speaker, the observation has been made by one of my distinguished colleagues that in the ensuing second session of the 85th Congress the Eisenhower administration should adopt a policy, hold fast to it, and hew to the line.

This, I submit, is specious reasoning. In all logic there is no foundation for such a position by the opposition.

There is, in the English parliamentary system, a label styled "His Majesty's loyal opposition." Suffice to say, we cannot, in conscience, apply such a term to the gentlemen and gentlewomen who sit across the aisle.

It is my thought that much of the confusion of the first session of this Congress was deliberately engineered, promoted, and fostered by that opposition.

When the Eisenhower administration came before the session with reasonable and productive proposals, we witnessed, day after day, the process of obstruction at work.

A mismated political marriage between northern Democrats and the southern wing of the party, held together only through necessity born of mutual dependence, saw to it that a debate on civil rights, prolonged and unbearably lengthy, effectively blocked the passage of vital measures.

While the Congress devoted thousands of words on hundreds of pages in this RECORD, and spawned innumerable headlines on civil rights, nothing was done. The Members of this House recall well the month we spent while a handful of Democrat Senators monotonously ground out manifold hours in underlining the basic fact that the opposition party is a hybrid agglomeration of organizations whose basic philosophies are as far apart as the Tropic of Cancer and the Tropic of Capricorn.

For instance, in the North there is the Americans for Democratic Action. This is a liberal group whose aim it is to equalize all of our citizens to a general standard of mediocrity. In essence, the ADA is the counterpart of the British Socialist Party which brought proud Albion from the rank of first-rate world power to a present position well below the top.

In the South, the antithesis of the ADA exists. There we have a conservative group, well exemplified by some of my warmest friends in this House, men and women for whom I hold the deepest respect and affection. They, I submit, Mr. Speaker, are in strange company when they consort and accompany the darlings of the ADA when legislation is under consideration here.

In every administration, there are some things, inevitably, which are indefensible to Members of the House and Senate.

I would recall, for the benefit of my colleague who asked that the next session see a definite set of Republican standards adopted, that it was his own beloved Franklin D. Roosevelt who, in 1937, attempted to stultify the Supreme Court and reduce it to an atrophied branch of government through his packing plan.

At that time, the members of his own party left him, and defeated that plan by a great majority, the fires of the struggle blazing so hotly that his own majority leader, the late, and I may add without partisanship, great Alben Barkley threatening to resign in the face of Mr. Roosevelt's capricious, audacious, and dangerous demand.

Members of the opposition control this Congress. Because of that inescapable fact, the fact that a majority of 233 Democrats has faced a 200-member Republican delegation, the administration has had, from time to time, to improvise and cut its cloth on a moment's notice.

If there has been any vacillation, any confusion, any inability upon the part of this Congress to be about the public's business, the fault becomes the fault of the Democratic Party.

On the score of economy, I would like to say, Mr. Speaker, that this Democrat controlled Congress attempted to compel more than $2.7 billion in present and future expenses not provided for in the original budget.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that there has been no lack of a policy downtown. They have been in the position of men with their backs to the wall, taking calculated risks, absorbing political punishment daily, trying to do a constructive job in the face of opposition devoted solely to the ideal of obstructionism.

And for what gain do members of the opposition pursue this course?

The answer returns clearly and unmistakably—control of the White House in 1960.

Report to My Constituents in the 14th Congressional District of New Jersey on My First Session in Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. VINCENT J. DELLAY

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1957

Mr. DELLAY. Mr. Speaker, at the close of the 1st session of the 85th Congress I am making a report to the people I represented in this Congress of its activity and achievements. This was one of the longest sessions of a peacetime Congress, opening on January 3 and closing its work August 30. There were more rollcalls and quorum calls—220 of them—than in any other Congress since the start of the Korean war.

CONGRESSIONAL ACTION ON THE BUDGET

We who are Members of this body agree on one fact—we were mandated by the American people to reduce Federal spending, balance the budget, and otherwise get the Government's financial affairs in order. By every means of communication at their command, the people let the Congress know they wanted present levels of Government spending cut. That is what Congress did. It must be understood that there are two kinds of budgets—an appropriation budget and an expenditure budget. We reduced the President's appropriation budget for fiscal year 1958 in the sum of $4,914,355,584. In addition, we reduced deficiency budget requests which were presented to Congress during this session by the sum of $134,023,395. These deficiency requests were for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1957. The total budget reductions during this session of Congress have therefore been $5,048,378,979. I supported this reduction recommended by the Appropriations Committee and adopted by the Congress. My attitude toward the budget was to support all Appropriations Committee efforts at economy—to trim fat and waste and to postpone projects that could be postponed—but to refuse to adopt the meat-ax approach of simply slashing at random.

SALARY INCREASES FOR POSTAL AND OTHER FEDERAL EMPLOYEES JUSTIFIED

Because of these substantial savings in the budget I feel that my votes and efforts to bring about long-delayed salary increases for postal and other Federal employees are justified and not antieconomical, especially since such increases would help efficiency by reducing employment turnover.

CIVIL RIGHTS: PROTECTING THE CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS OF INDIVIDUALS

The 1957 session of Congress will forever be remembered for its accomplishment in enacting a civil-rights law protecting the right to vote of all persons, regardless of race, color, or creed—the first such national law to be enacted since Civil War Reconstruction days. It establishes a Federal commission with subpena power to investigate facts as a basis for additional protective legislation; it creates a new Civil Rights Division in the Office of the Attorney General, and authorizes injunction proceedings to restrain violations of voting rights. Denial of the right to vote cannot be countenanced—and should be punished—if the Bill of Rights in our National Constitution is to be given full meaning. I am very proud that this was one of the achievements of my first Congress.

FBI FILES

I voted for and am glad to report that the legislation was enacted to safeguard and protect the files of the FBI.

FURTHER ECONOMY POSSIBLE THROUGH CORDINER REPORT, HOOVER COMMISSION REPORTS, AND SEPARATION OF FEDERAL AND STATE TAXATION PROVIDING BASIS TAX CUT

On June 7, 1957, I introduced H. R. 7990, a bill embracing the provisions of the Cordiner Report on the Armed Services. This bill would result in several billion dollars being saved by a recasting of pay scales designed to keep skilled personnel in the Armed Forces, where now they leave for private industry and thereby require the Government to go to the expense of training their replacements. Many of the carefully prepared Hoover Commission reports ought to be adopted, because they show that billions of dollars can be saved by more efficient Government budget and purchasing and operational practices. I was delighted at President Eisenhower's proposal to the governors at their Williamsburg conference in June that there be set up a Federal-State task force to reallocate the functions and revenues of the two levels of government. As many of you will recall, I made repeated mention of this necessity as an economy measured during my campaign for election to the Congress. In fact, a study is now being made by the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce designed to prove that the States can take over many of the activities now engaged in by the Federal Government. These are huge possibilities for economizing, and I am hopeful that many will be put into effect during the next session of Congress, thus providing a basis for a tax cut and, at the same time, leave funds for protecting and improving the health, welfare, and education of our people.

SOME IMMIGRATION LIBERALIZATION ENACTED

On June 25, 1957, I introduced H. R. 8358, to facilitate the entry into the United States of certain adopted children and relatives of citizens and legally registered aliens. A bill identical to this one was adopted by Congress and is now a public law. State Department officials estimated the revision will open the door to 62,556 additional immigrants. These are expected to include 4,000 orphans adopted by American citizens, 14,556 refugees from Iron Curtain countries and 36,000 persons who will be granted special nonquota status. This will result in reuniting many fine families in my district, but will not give as much relief as I had anticipated would be coming out of this Congress. I have also introduced H. R. 7991 and other immigration bills which are much broader in scope. I am confident that these will be favorably considered in the next session of the 85th Congress.

PROTECTING SMALL- AND MEDIUM-SIZED BUSINESS

The Small Business Administration was extended for 1 year during the session just concluded. In the 1958 session it is my hope that this Government body will be made a permanent agency, that its powers will be enlarged, and that the delaying redtape which now hamstrings it will be materially reduced. Protecting and encouraging the small-business concern requires action on many fronts. Our corporate income tax structure needs overhauling so as to reduce the tax rate for the smaller corporations. And in the field of military procurement, where today big business has a virtual monopoly of Government contracts, a program is needed to increase the small-business man's share. All of these things require action in the forthcoming 1958 session of Congress.

LEGISLATIVE ASSISTANCE TO OUR SENIOR CITIZENS AND SOCIAL SECURITY AMENDMENTS

I have long felt the need for better care of our senior citizens. They are having a hard time paying today's prices on yesterday's pensions. I have introduced H. R. 3963, a bill to increase civil-service retirement annuities and H. R. 6793, to prohibit discrimination in employment against individuals on account of their age, and worked hard for their enactment. I also introduced H. R. 9203, to broaden the coverage and extend certain benefits under the Social Security Act. Among other things this bill would increase ultimate benefits for those who continue to work after age 65 by 1 percent a year delayed retirement benefit. It would also increase maximum monthly payments to a retired individual from $108.50 to $118.50 and for a married couple from $162.80 to $177.25, without increasing contributory tax rates.

MEDICAL EXPENSES DEDUCTION FROM INCOME TAX

On May 8, 1957, I introduced H. R. 7347, to eliminate the provision which presently restricts the deduction for medical expenses to those exceeding 3 percent of gross income. If this bill were enacted it would be possible to deduct the total amount of medical expenses from gross income. It is my feeling that this would give tax relief where it is sorely needed among lower income families. I will continue to press for action on this vital measure.

BAD CONDUCT DISCHARGES REVIEW

On June 27, 1957, I introduced H. R. 8412, which would authorize the appropriate military review boards to consider and take into account the good conduct, habits, character, activities, and rehabilitation of an individual in civilian life who has been discharged or dismissed from any of the Armed Forces not less than 3 years previous, or any of the discharges other than honorable—except by sentence of a general court martial. The military authorities maintain that existing statutes do not now authorize such consideration and such rehabilitation in civilian life is not now recognized as legal or appropriate grounds by the military boards for correction of discharge or dismissals. If enacted, it would erase the stigma and employment handicap in many worthy cases. Many of these discharges are given to teen-agers when under great stress or strain and without due consideration of results.

FEDERAL AID FOR LOCAL SCHOOL CONSTRUCTION

A temporary program for Federal aid to local school construction was considered by the House but was defeated when several Members attempted to add a crippling amendment regarding integration to this worthwhile legislation. Federal aid for local school construction is not one of Federal charity or random spending. It is a temporary program aimed largely at those States which have no State education agencies and leaves school construction to local communities. Its purpose is to compel these States to provide State programs for school construction in those poorer communities which have insufficient real estate to float school bonds. The northern States have to bear a disproportionate share in providing boys for military service because so many of the boys from southern States are rejected for illiteracy, and the Armed Forces spend about $30 million in an effort to educate the illiterate. Education is a national problem, a national responsibility. I shall do all I can in the 1958 session, believing as I do that the program is urgent, to help in enactment of a Federal program of aid for local school construction.

FHA-INSURED LOANS

An important bill that was enacted will lower downpayments on FHA-insured loans, but because the hard-money policy continues to increase interest rates, little improvement has yet been felt in the ailing housing market.

PROTECTION OF PUBLIC THROUGH POULTRY INSPECTION AND OPPOSITION TO NATURAL GAS BILL
